Andro nodded his head. "Arzoal... let's just say that Elynth and I are now privy to a part of the Elder Mother's history that no one has ever known. And it confirms some things that elven historians have been saying for decades. The elven people as a species have not been around as long as everyone thinks." He looked at them. "Throughout elven history this instinct has always been the case, and this is why so many species have taken elven females prisoner during the many millennia they have existed as a species. They knew they would never destroy a life that was also part of them. The elves that Walter created on Earth would not have this inbred instinct because it was something they never experienced and Walter only used the gene sequences and DNA that the Coven had which was completely pure, with no emotional connection."

Jomann's face grew dark as realization of what Eliani and Andro were saying came to him and he looked at Andro. "Your uncle is a Lycavorian!" He growled. "He would resort to this... this vile action?" He asked with savage anger in his voice.

Andro met Jomann's eyes. "My uncle stopped being Lycavorian the moment he betrayed his people. His own blood. Athani and Jalersi have already said he is willing to do anything to achieve his goals. Their father as well. Eli is right... as depraved as it is... I can not... I can't put it past him. It all makes sense as horrible as it sounds. It is why he would take Medwaw For'mya and not any other. He could combined the royal bloodlines of two founding members of the Union."

"But Arrarn and Byron... they already have done that. They are the sons of your father and For'mya. They have already sealed that bond of blood." Sadi spoke.

Andro nodded. "Which means my uncle may have found a way to use this and bypass whatever laws regarding ascension are in place already." He said.

"Trying to kill Andro..." Eliani said shaking her head slowly from side to side. "The oldest and next in line if father ever was killed. Trying to kill all of us... it would only make it easier to do what he wants to accomplish. That is the list we saw in Tenna's hospital room Andro."

Andro nodded. "Yes." He hissed softly. "I... I can't believe I didn't see this before now!" Andro rasped louder.

"There is no way you could have imagined this Saradasaar." Said spoke grabbing his arm. "You don't think that way... in such despicable manner."

"Sadi is right Andro." Eliani said softly.

"Jomann... initiate a SecureCom to Earth! I have to speak with Tenna Deia or the Feravomir!" Andro said.

"Andro... the transmission disc is in the passenger area." Jomann spoke. "Everyone will be able to see it."

Andro looked at him. "It doesn't matter now! I need to speak with one of them quickly! They must know this! They have to find out what it is my uncle is going to do! It is the only way to..."

"Andro... we don't even know for sure that this is true." Eliani stated.

Andro looked at her with wide eyes. "It is true arande! It has to be! Why else would she act in the manner as this Poysha says? Like she is without hope! Like she is lost! He must have done something to her... drugged her or something to get her to go along with this!"

"Regardless... what he did it is still rape! Your father still lives!" Jomann hissed quite viciously. "It would never stand up or be recognized!"

Andro looked at him. "Not if she believes all of us are dead!" He stated. "He can control everything she sees and hears!" Andro's eyes grew wide all of a sudden. "That's it! That is why he had the Immortals take Medwaw Dysea! He didn't want to give her to Laustinos as a prize... he was using her as leverage against Medwaw For'mya! A reason to submit to him if she thought father and all of us were dead! If she did it thinking she was saving medwaw Dysea... if she did it willingly... then it is not rape!"

Eliani's hand came up to cover her mouth as she gasped. "Andro no!" She stammered as she realized exactly what he was saying now. "If she... if she thought we were all dead. If she thought father was dead. She would do anything to keep mother from becoming a slave to Immortals! To protect those she loves! She held this dearest to her heart!"

"And he knew that!" Andro snarled savagely, his fangs bursting from his gums in barely controlled rage as he spun around and slammed a large fist into the unyielding bulkhead of the ship. "He knew that... and he must have discovered about the elven morality of never taking a life growing within you! He used it against her!" He turned to Jomann. "I need that uplink now!" He snapped.

Jomann nodded without hesitation and moved into the passenger area of the MENKLA as everyone's eyes began to turn towards where they had been standing, Lu'ria and Carisia sensing the emotions from both Eliani and Andro rising. Denali turned from where he was talking with Bren and looked at his brother and sister as Jomann began to stab his fingers down on the control panel for the communications array. He turned and began moving towards them quickly knowing that something was wrong.

Something was very wrong.

EARTH SPARTA ROYAL ESTATE VILLA

"...can not be serious Androcles!" Deia exclaimed.

Colonel Fache had woken her and Helen in an urgent haste and ushered them half dressed to the secure communications room in the King's office.

"I am deadly serious Tenna." Andro replied. "The more I run it through my head, the more it makes perfect sense. It fits exactly with everything they have done." He shook his head in the transmission, Deia and Helen both able to see nearly everyone in the background of the transmission, all of them watching intently. “Take out the Drow outposts so they can not warn us what is coming or discover the connections he had made with the Immortal scum acting as his mercenaries. With the contacts many of the Drow leaders had made, they would never have been able to get so many ships close to Kranek without us knowing about it. Laustinos told them to remove our eyes and ears first to make things easier. With the Drow eliminated, if it had gone as they must have planned, they could have killed us all and no one would have been the wiser for several days at least. Then there is Laustinos helping their agents there on Earth. Setting the explosives in the Senate Building. How did they know mother was with you in your office Tenna? They have had people watching her since they came up with this twisted plan! It is the only plausible explanation. They knew exactly where she was when they began their attack on father. Killing father was only part of their plan. Taking mother and killing you was the other!”

“They have contacted us about where the meeting is to take place Andro!” Deia said suddenly unable to truly believe what her nephew was saying.

“It’s on Hadaria isn’t it?” Andro asked her seeing her eyes grow wide.

“Yes. How did... how did you know that?” Deia asked.

“Because that is also part of their plan and Resumar’s contact informed him. He told me the last time we spoke.” Andro spoke. “Usurping mother from her rightful place and installing a government favorable to them was always their intention. A government that would give them a foothold within Union space. Their actions on Hadaria have been well thought out for some time. They were patient and they provided only peripheral support to that bitch Buonau until the time to act was upon them. I do not know how long the plan with mother has been in place. Several months at least.”

“We have been going through the Ascension laws already Androcles.” Helen spoke now. “We have found nothing that could help him so far. Nothing. Even if he has done what you think.”

“He has done this! I can feel it within me Feravomir!” He looked at her. “There has to be something Feravomir! A simple word or sentence... a single paragraph buried in the mundane.” Andro told her. “There are seventeen Chronicles of Lycavorian Law! Each of them is nearly a thousand pages! There must be something!”

Deia rose slowly to her feet, steadying herself with the arm of the couch and Fache moving closer to assist if she needed him to. “Mandri... you are alive.” She spoke. “After you there is Eli and then Resumar. Then Denali. All of you are still alive. That is the order of Ascension should anything happen to your father and mothers. That is written in the Chronicles. There is no way he could accomplish this with all of you still alive.”

“And that is why he has tried to kill us Tenna.” Eliani spoke now. “Andro twice now! But even though he has failed in that he is still pressing forward so there must be something he is going to use!”

Helen stepped closer to the transmission. “Have you told Arrarn?” She asked.

“Feravomir... I will keep nothing from my brothers and sisters!” Andro stated. “This is not something I could keep from him even if I wanted too. And I don’t want too. He would see it... he would see it in my eyes. You know this.”

“Arrarn Leonidas!” Helen spoke louder.

There was a long pause before Arrarn’s voice came into the transmission from the Mark II STRIKER he and Toria were flying shrouded right next to the MENKLA. “I am... I am here Feravomir.” The rage in his voice was nearly a palpable thing and everyone could feel it. You didn’t need to be Lycavorian to sense that.

“Arrarn... I can hear the hate in your voice.” Helen spoke gently. “The rage and the need for vengeance.”

“What... what am I supposed to feel Feravomir?” He asked. “She is... she is my mother! Our mother! I will carve a path of death across the Kavalian Empire if this is true Feravomir. I will not stop until he is dead. Until everyone behind this is as dead as dead gets!”

“I will be beside him Feravomir. Without pause or question.” Andro spoke.

“As will I.” Denali spoke coming up next to him.

“Me as well.” Eliani chimed in. “All of us Feravomir! You know this!”

“This is not what your mother would want!” Deia snapped moving closer as well. “Your father will be bad enough... if it is true, once he discovers this he will be uncontrollable! We can not have the entire Leonidas family seeking blood retribution! We have a entire Union to think of and...”

Deia stopped talking on her own as her words echoed in her head. What she was saying clashed with everything that was burning in her own Lycavorian blood. Her mind filled with the images she had seen while she faded in and out of consciousness buried beneath that building. She had shared them with no one... not even her beloved mate... they were images and voices that were so very near and dear to her heart. Faces and voices she had not seen in millennia and that she had missed terribly for so long. She turned and looked at the much younger Helen, a woman not even close to her in age, but a woman that held the hopes and values of thousands upon thousands of years within her because of the memories and values of Canth. The two words she heard most prominently were two words that a man had spoken to her and others nearly four thousand years ago. Two words that had reverberated throughout all of them at the time and two words that now filled her mind. Spoken by a man who she had come to adore and respect as not only King, but the beloved mate of her beautiful sister.

"No more." Deia whispered looking at Helen.

"Tenna?" Andro questioned from within the transmission.

Helen moved closer to her. "I remember them as well Deia. He remembers them." She spoke softly.

"No more." Deia spoke more firmly as she looked to her Mandri's oldest and strongest child. Fate had taken so much from her, from all of them throughout the many years, but fate had returned what it had taken ten fold with the young man standing in that transmission, his brothers and sisters and their father and mothers. "No more!" She hissed out the words now. "No more!"

"Tenna?" Andro asked again.

"We will react no more!" Deia barked. "It is not our way! It is not the Spartan way! We are done reacting!"

Helen nodded her head in agreement and turned to look at Andro in the transmission. "It begins now Androcles." She stated. "It begins now!"

"Feravomir we can not... father must..." Andro began to speak but stopped when she shook her head.

"Listen to me young Androcles Leonidas! Pain and fear comprise the forge in which the finest living weapons are created. This holds true for both wolves and dragons. You and Elynth have survived this crucible Androcles Leonidas. Alba Tau was where you were truly born and forged. And it is where your father almost lost himself. He has left you to carry on in his stead for now, for he knows this will not be the war the decides the fate of us all."

"Feravomir..." Andro began.

"Now it is the time to turn the weapon you and your bonded sister have become loose. And woe unto those who stand in your way." Helen said.

"Feravomir... what you and Tenna are saying. It..."

"No more!" Helen spoke firmly. "Two words spoken by your grandfather when he made the decision we would no longer suffer under the oppression of the High Coven. No more!" She moved closer to the transmission now, almost touching it. "Do you truly believe that you and your father could hide what you have learned and taught yourselves from Arzoal and I young Androcles? What you have learned and then taught your siblings and your Bonded brothers and sisters? What you have taught all those with the purest of blood that surround you? Your father has rediscovered himself once more Androcles... rediscovered the man he was and he burns brighter within Mindvoice than he ever did. Just as you now do. You and your father, Elynth, Torma, all of you have obtained a level of power and ability that Arzoal and I could never hope to match or achieve. You have done so in secret, teaching each other. Learning from each other. And you have passed this knowledge on to your family. This is not something you could hide from us for very long Androcles."

"Feravomir we..."

"You must hide it no longer! You, your father, your siblings! Now you must unleash it!" Helen snapped. "No More Androcles! It begins now! It begins with the actions you are about to take part in! And the actions your father will begin in a matter of days! This is what your grandfather Resumar deemed necessary and it is what is necessary now. The Kavalians... the Icalro scum... everyone in the galaxy must now be made to know we will not stand by any longer! No more Androcles! No more!"

"Do what your blood calls for Androcles!" Deia spoke again. "Be as ruthless as death itself and make them see! No mercy! No retreat! Helen and I will do what we must here! We will find what it is your uncle is going to use. And if what you believe has happened is indeed true... if it is true... then I expect... your father and grandfather will expect... our people will expect you to unleash the Sirogus rie Jorbhe itself! And burn the vileness clean!”

Andro stood there for a long moment in silence staring at them in the transmission. His head canted slightly to the side and he was undoubtedly speaking with Elynth in the STRIKER. His azure eyes grew a little brighter and then he turned those orbs back on them.

“So be it.” He said simply.

The transmission ended abruptly and Helen gripped Deia’s arm as she turned to Fache. “Colonel... call everyone here now! Everyone! We must discover what Pusintin is going to do before Andro goes to Hadaria!”

Fache nodded his head without question and sprinted from the room as Helen turned back to Deia.

“Will he do it Helen?” Deia asked her.

“Deia... we have just removed the chains of bondage from the two most powerful forces of nature to ever exist in our combined lifetimes.” Helen said softly. “It is no longer a matter of if Androcles or Martin will do it. Now it is a matter of what will remain when they are finally finished.” She moved closer and took much of Deia’s weight from her still very weak legs onto her side. “Come... we must find what it is Andro believes Pusintin has found that he is going to use when they arrive on Hadaria.”

“Martin will... Martin will go into a berserker rage Helen. If it is true he...” Deia said as they began moving across the room. “She is his Kinsoaurgai.”

Helen shook her head. “No. Martin has transcended that now Deia. I know you have seen it. If this is true... if it is true you will see a different Martin I believe. You will see... you will see the cold, calculating and savagely lethal warrior that his father could become. The man I saw on so many occasions. That is what we will see Deia. And nothing will stand between him, nothing will stand between Aricia, Anja, Dysea and Isabella until For'mya is once more back within their arms. Androcles is the anvil... his father the hammer. Nothing between them will survive when the hammer falls and strikes the anvil. Nothing.”

“...so be it.”

The transmission ended and left Androcles Leonidas standing there in silence. Not one set of eyes on the MENKLA removed themselves from where he stood. Even Devra, who had only truly just come into her own when she had come to this place and discovered all that she had, was riveted in place and unable to move. The emotions wafting from Androcles were so very easy to detect. The only one brave enough to move was Sadi. She stepped right up to him, pressing her body tightly to his front, Lu'ria and Carisia quickly following suit and pressing against his sides. They all watched as their heads touched together, only Ne'Veha missing because she was still flying the ship, but with them in that moment nonetheless via Mindvoice. It was easy enough for them to hear Elynth’s voice as it filled Andro’s mind lie musical chimes in the wind.

[The Feravomir is right my beautiful Bonded Brother. Events are happening so fast... and we can no longer hide what we have become. None of us can.]

[We knew this day would come didn't we sister?] Andro spoke as his arms curled around Lu'ria and Carisia bringing them closer against him as his lips brushed against Sadi’s cheek.

[Yes we did.] Elynth spoke. [We can no longer deny it Andro. Alba Tau is where we were truly born! Just as the Feravomir has said. We can not let what happened to our fathers happen to us. We have never tried to deny what we are and it has always made us stronger. Our fathers Andro... they are once more themselves my Bonded Brother... and they are stronger for it. As strong as we are now. Our brothers and sisters are stronger. The Feravomir and Deia are right Androcles. No more.]

Andro stared into Sadi’s jungle green eyes more deeply than he had ever looked into them before. He could see into his SirsanGai’s eyes even as she flew the ship. He turned his head slightly to stare into amber and maya blue eyes for brief seconds. Those sets of eyes, so utterly beautiful to him, they filled him with purpose and love. And soon the final set of eyes would be with them, part of them, honeydew green and full of life and love.

Andro took a deep breath and stepped back from the women he loved slowly. They nodded their heads and immediately Sadi moved back for the cockpit. Andro looked at Jomann and nodded his head. Jomann turned quickly and grabbed Anicetus’s arm. “Come Anicetus... you are going to get your wish.” He stammered.

Andro wanted everyone to hear what he was about to say and he tapped the implant on his jaw to activate his COM. On two ships ear implants came alive and got everyone's attention.

"Arrarn. Am'uur. Dutkne." He spoke clearly and without a hint of hesitation. "Be advised we are moving to Plan B. We are moving to Plan B. Adjust load out and time table and inform me when you are ready. Am'uur... let your contacts on Ontahe know and have them arrest the traitor and hold him in a secure location outside the LZ."

"Understood." Am'uur's voice echoed.

"Andro..." Dutkne's voice broke in. "Rules?"

Andro paused for a moment remembering that Dutkne had not been among them for very long even though he was now one of his closest and most trusted friends. "Spartan rules Dutkne my friend." He answered. "We fight and we succeed. Period."

Andro heard him chuckle. "Ahh... I am going to have to do some serious history review about these Spartans and your grandfather. I'm beginning to like their mentality more and more."

Andro moved to the small window on the side of the MENKLA and even though he could not see the STRIKER flying next to them five hundred meters away, he could almost sense it there. "Arrarn... switch to secure Three."

"Switching." Arrarn's voice answered.

Andro tapped his jaw once and the chatter from the background was gone as the two brothers linked into a single secure channel. "Arrarn?"

"I'm here."

"Arrarn I..." Andro paused for a moment looking at the stars outside. "You are not alone Arrarn. We may not be completely blood brothers... but she is my... our mother too. We have never viewed her in any other way fervon. Not even for an instant. You are not alone."

"I know Andro." Arrarn spoke softly in reply.

"No matter what has happened... whether it be true or not... we will not forsake her Arrarn. She is part of me... part of all of us." Andro spoke. "Our father will... he will retrieve her Arrarn. She is part of him as well. Part of all our mothers."

"I have never doubted this Andro." Arrarn said.

"But you do now." Androcles said. "I can hear it in your voice fervon."

"I... I hurt Andro." Arrarn spoke.

"You think we do not?" Androcles said quickly. "That is not how our family survives Arrarn. You know this as well as I. We are all one. Whether we have different mothers or the same. We all feel it just as you do. It is why we are so strong." Andro heard him sigh over the COM. "Is Toria there?"

"I sent her back to check on the turrets." Arrarn answered.

"Have I ever broken a promise to you Arrarn?" Andro asked him. "Have I ever broken a promise to any of you?"

"No." Arrarn answered instantly.

"Then hear me now Arrarn... no matter what happens fervon... no matter what it takes... I give you my solemn word as your brother that whoever has taken part in this action, if it turns out to be true, they will die by our hands. Yours and mine. Father will rescue her... he will find her and bring her home to us... but I swear to you as your brother and a Spartan... not one of them will escape our justice Arrarn. A son's justice. Not a single one will live a moment longer than necessary for what they have done to our mother." Andro looked across the stars and placed his hand on the glass in front of him almost as if he could see Arrarn gazing out of the window of the STRIKER at him. "That is my oath to you."

"Then let's hit these midaeus where it truly hurts, get your mate, and then leave." Arrarn said. "I want to go to Curila 6 and see father before he leaves."

Andro nodded. "You can remain with him if you wish fervon. I would understand if you did."

"No." Arrarn spoke. "Narice has told me what you spoke of with her Andro."

"I know. I told her to share it with you." He said.

"She will need me. I am her husband. Her mate. And we both love and need Toria with us as well."

Arrarn spoke. "No... you will need me more fervon."

"Then let's get this done so when can return that much sooner." Andro spoke.

“Androcles...” Arrarn actually was looking out of the window of his STRIKER though he knew Andro could not see him. He placed his hand against the glass of his pilot’s window and nodded his head, just barely able to see his brother’s outline across the distance. “Thank you fervon.” He said in a whisper. “Your words mean more to me than you will ever know because I know they come from your heart.”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes they do.” He spoke. “Break formation now and proceed to your first DZ. I will meet you on the inside of this mercenary hanger in thirty-seven minutes.”

“I’ll be there.” Arrarn said.

Andro watched for a moment longer imagining the STRIKER peeling off and diving for the planet that was rapidly become larger and larger below them.

Devra watched from her seat as Androcles moved away from the window and made his way forward into the cockpit. She had heard nearly all of his side of the conversation and she realized he did not know this. His words had made her shudder inside at the heartfelt emotions in them, but they also made her cringe thinking of the men who had pulled these words from this young man. Devra knew at that moment, more than anything else that had happened up until now, she knew her daughter Caliria would never be safer than when she was with him and those who loved her. He would move worlds for her, for any of them she knew, just as he was prepared to bring down a government to take Caliria back. She turned quickly once he was out of sight and looked at Bren as he was making adjustments to their weapons and equipment. “Bren?” She spoke softly causing him to pause and look up at her with his gorgeous eyes.

“My wife and mate?” He answered with just a touch of pride in his voice. He could not remember the last time he felt this type of happiness in him and he knew it was because of what he felt for this breathtaking blue skinned woman who was now forever his.

“Bren... forgive me... but what is this Plan B?” Devra asked. “Will it... will it effect getting Caliria back?”

Bren stopped what he was doing and inched closer to her on the deck. He held up the K12 KM she would be carrying as well as the new Pulse Lance that all of them now carried in holsters on their thighs. The first of many new ‘toys’ that Admiral O’Connor had begun covertly shipping to them from the wizards at Dreamland. The N71 Nehtes II was its official designation Bren had discovered, but most of those Spartans of the Durcunusaan who had been using them for the last week in secret training facilities had nicknamed them *Stiletto*s because they were so thin and exceedingly lethal.

“No.” He answered her. “There will be little change to what our part of the plan is.”

Devra looked at him. “I saw what they told him Bren.” She spoke lifting her hand and placing it on his handsome face. “I am your mate and wife now Bren... you do not need to keep anything from me because you think it will horrify me in some way. I have no intention of ever leaving you. Not after what you have made me feel and what I know we can have together. What is Plan B?”

Bren took a deep breath. “As I said... there will be little change to what our part of the plan is.” He told her. “We will follow Androcles and the others and hold position in the landing bay while one team moves to the second location of where they are holding Vanari females and Andro retrieves Caliria.”

“Now tell me the difference Bren.” Devra said.

Bren met her eyes now. “Before we would have tried to remain unnoticed for as long as possible. Now however... now we will be the diversion while Am’uur and Dutkne’s team enters the base and moves to the main location. We will pull as much of their security force as we are able to us allowing the others to move more freely and with less resistance.”

“How?” Devra asked.

Bren smiled despite himself. “Though it goes against everything I have been trained for as a Durcunusaan officer, it’s really quite simple. We exit the transport... Andro walks up to whoever greets us, reveals who he is, and then kills him.” He saw her eyes go a little wider at this news. “It should set off a sufficient chain reaction of events that Dutkne and Am’uur can sneak right in while we push towards the second location which is much closer to the landing bay.”

“But... won’t they... won’t they kill their prisoners?” Devra asked.

Bren shook his head. “They will not know why we are here Devra my love.” He said. “They will believe Andro is there to continue his rampage from many years ago. They will be trying their level best to kill him... not kill their means of income.”

“Bren... that sounds so suicidal.” Devra said finally.
He smiled. “That’s why it will work.” He stated.

His name was Cyngi.

The only surviving Overseer of The Wilds. The only one of six Overseers that had escaped the wrath of King Leonidas over twenty years ago. Part of that was his skill at disappearing and manipulating people and events, but the larger part he knew was completely luck. He had been in the right place at the right time when King Leonidas attacked his personal estate, and that had been nowhere near his home. He had been on business in Icalro Alliance space when he received word that the Union King was rampaging through The Wilds searching for the six men who had condemned his Hadarian mate’s sister to death. They had agreed in part that they would leave her alone after she was finally taken by Union forces, but one of them had gotten greedy and given the High Coven knowledge of where she was and then facilitated the members of the assassination team that had gone after her. They had failed in their mission and it had sent the Union King into a rage. One of them had brought their entire operation in The Wilds down with his greed. Luckily... he had been the first Leonidas killed.

Cyngi had escaped here. He had escaped and rebuilt his holdings in the following twenty years. Rebuilt them better and stronger than they had been back then. At least he thought they were. Safely within the Icalro Alliance he had been able to secure this deserted base, expand it and then turn it into one of the largest slaver and smuggling centers in the galaxy, and he did not have to worry about Union interference in the least. The Icalro Alliance made sure of that, giving him protection and support for a very modest monthly credit transfer. Credits that he made up within three days of paying them. His profits had only grown with his expansion into the Beta Quadrant using these Orionis Syndicate people and the blue skinned females they brought to him. Vanari they were called, trained in the arts of pleasure and able to make any man or woman talk just by excreting a simple oil from the pores of their skin. He had twenty-nine of these females in his stables, and he charged hideously high amounts for their services. Services that were very well received and very much in demand. In the year since he had begun using them in his harem he had been able to secure mounds of information and favors that he never would have gotten without them. Most of this information he kept in a hidden vault so that he could use it in the future, some he had used already to garner protection and profit from many different individuals within the many different governments across the Alpha Quadrant. Species of all types came to him to indulge in their twisted sexual fantasies, their errant attempts at Black Marketing and dozens of different reasons. He even had contacts within the Lycavorian Union itself, though he used them very sparingly. He had witnessed the wrath of the Lycavorian King once, and he was no fool. He did not want to see it again.

He stood just behind the four Lycavorians now as their eyes were on the two Vanari females who danced slowly and quite erotically on the small stage in his private office and quarters. The Lycavorian male paying the most attention to the females and sporting a sexual excitement that even the Unsaar could detect it was his main contact. The other three were AEC executives that he had thoroughly checked out before allowing onto his base. With these three men and one woman he would secure himself some of the most advanced hand weaponry that was available in the known Universe and take it right from the people who made it for the Union. That would be a victory in itself since Cyngi still harbored a deep and abiding hatred for the Lycavorian King and what he had done. For hundreds of years The Wilds had worked one way, assassination, the lucrative slavery of elven females, all of it regulated and endorsed or ignored by the governments that existed at the time. Even the Union did nothing as long as it remained outside their borders. Then this upstart Lycavorian King arrives and takes power and gets upset over a simple business decision to conduct an assassination of one of his Queen’s sister, and he goes on a rampage of revenge destroying a foundation that had been in place for centuries. Destroying Cyngi’s base of power and influence. It was not something he would soon forget, and using these fools who worked for AEC to get back at him was almost poetic in a way.

Cyngi turned his head from the show when his Kochab Lieutenant moved quietly into the room and stepped up to him. “The Lycavorian MENKLA transport is landing.” He reported.

Cyngi nodded. “The men are in position?” He asked.

“Yes. I have two dozen in various positions throughout the landing bay. Are we really going to take the prototype weapons by force Cyngi?” The Kochab asked.

“Only if the Lycavorians don’t keep their bargain.” Cyngi answered quickly. He turned back to see his contact enraptured by the Vanari females even still, the others seemingly intent on their actions as well. “He could not lie under the influence of their oil... so there should be no issues. It never hurts to be prepared though.”

“No sir it doesn’t.” The man spoke.

“Have Captain Kre’al greet our guests and insure they follow the rules we have in place.” Cyngi spoke. “I don’t want a dozen or more Lycavorians running around my base unmonitored and unchecked.”

“As you order.”

Cyngi watched his lieutenant depart and he turned back to the four Lycavorians in front of him. He stepped forward, towering over them at over seven foot in height. “Your ship has arrived.” He spoke. “May I suggest that we complete our transaction and then you may return here to finish the show?”

They all looked at him and he saw the looks of amazement on their faces at what they were witnessing. The woman was the one who spoke first. “Of... of course” She stammered obviously excited by what she had seen.

Cyngi smiled a false smile, making his reptilian features even more imposing. If he could get additional information or leverage over these other three AEC executives, he could rapidly build himself the most powerful non-government army in the galaxy. It was an enticing thought as he motioned with his hand towards the door.

Kre’al was a Kochab warrior through and through and had been a mercenary for the better part of his four hundred and nineteen years of life. The scars he bore on his face from a plasma grenade fighting Bo'yak scum, the four times he had been shot by Lycavorian soldiers on raids within Union space, all these attested to his experience and skill. No one challenged him anymore for he was as devious as he was skilled. Since taking this job two decades ago he had lived a good life, all the credits and females of any species he wanted. A secure place to live and not keep running from one patrol or the other... this is what he had worked for all of his life and now finally achieved.

As the ramp to the MENKLA transport began to lower and he saw the combat boots of the individuals waiting to walk down he knew something was wrong. His hardened instincts had not deserted him as they had done to so many of his fellow mercenaries. His dark slit eyes narrowed even more when he realized all of them wore dark cloaks over their Union issue Mark IV ArmorPly body armor. It was without a doubt the finest body armor made anywhere in the galaxy and a rare find indeed outside Union borders. He counted six figures in front, all of them with the cowls of their cloaks drawn up around their heads hiding their faces. They wanted to remain anonymous no doubt, this he understood for traitors to the Lycavorian Union were treated no better than rodents in the streets, if they were not killed outright. He could see five additional figures behind the first six, all of them dressed in a similar fashion as well and standing beside one of four large metal containers he saw on the deck of the transport. They were being careful he figured; wanting no one to know who they were or that they were selling Union weapons technology to known mercenaries and criminals. Two of those in the front rank he determined to be females based on their height and their slighter dimensions. This was also not surprising since the females in the Union military were equally as lethal as the men. He took a step back as the ramp touched the floor of the landing bay and they began coming down the incline. The second rank followed and the first of the four crates with them on hover bars and gliding between their figures.

As Kre’al watched them, his sense of foreboding grew by leaps and bounds. Whoever these Lycavorians were, they were not acting as they should have been. He expected them to be looking in all directions for threats of any kind or those who could turn them in to Union authorities. What he saw were men and women not concerned with who saw them and this did nothing to settle his concern. He caught glimpses of the jaws of the two lead men, seeing the facial hair of one. Each step brought them closer and the alarms in his head began to grow louder. His experience told him this was natural and they had been cleared by Cyngi himself. His instincts were telling him something was very wrong and his life was in severe danger. He watched as they reached the bottom of the ramp and began to spread out, not like they were looking for threats, but as if they were getting ready to attack. That could not be... no one would be foolish enough to enter their base and start something. With nearly three hundred and fifty security personnel alone all over the base, any attack would be suicidal from within the base itself. He watched as one of the figures broke away from the others and crossed the ten steps to where he stood. He was slightly taller than Kre'al and this did not give him good feelings. Every nerve in his body was actually screaming for him to attack, but whether he would admit it or not, this life had dulled his finely tuned survival instincts just enough to hold himself in check.

He would never know that it would not have mattered either way.

Kre'al looked at the hooded figure. "You... you brought the crates I see. Excellent." He stated. "I have been instructed to tell you that we will take possession of the weapons now and that you will be restricted to one section of the entertainment rotunda. You..."

"Where is our contact?" The voice asked firmly interrupting his prepared statement.

Kre'al blinked several times in surprise. "The Overseer Cyngi is bringing them down from his personal quarters." He answered.

"So the Unsaar Cyngi is the man behind this operation?" The voice asked.

Kre'al nodded as the others directed the four crates to the side of the ship and parked them alongside one another. "Yes. He escaped the purge by the dog of a Lycavorian King and came here to rebuild."

"And the Icalro Alliance knows he is the one in charge here?" The voice asked.

"Of course they do." Kre'al snapped. "Why..." He stopped talking and lowered his hand to where he wore his sidearm. "Remove your hoods... all of you!"

"Is there a problem Kochab?" The voice snarled.

Kre'al pulled his weapon from the holster, his men suddenly on edge as they watched their commander bring his weapon out of its place and hold it at the deck. "I told you to remove your hoods! Do it now! All of you! You will not be allowed to proceed further if you do not!"

"If that is your wish." The voice answered.

Kre'al watched him turn slightly and motion with his hand. Kre'al watched as the red haired female lowered her hood followed by several other men and women, among them a female Drow elf and a vampire female with raven black hair. In a moment only two stood without their hoods down and Kre'al turned back to the obvious leader who was one of them.

"I said all of you!" Kre'al spat. "Do it now!"

"Devra?" The voice spoke the name turning slightly.

Kre'al's eyes cut to the figure in the back and grew even wider when he saw the silver blond hair and incredible blue skin revealed as the Vanari female lowered her hood and stood there unafraid. He glanced back to the leader once more.

"You have... you have a Vanari! How is that... how is that possible? I thought..." He exclaimed in shock his eyes going even wider as Androcles lifted his hands and tossed back his cowl revealing his face. "Soul Slayer!" He hissed in revulsion.

"That dog of a Lycavorian King is my father!" Andro snarled viciously as his fangs burst forth and his eyes changed. "And I have a message for Cyngi from him little man!" Andro's right hand dropped in the blink of an eye and a Stiletto appeared in his fist. He jammed the end of the pulse lance into the Kochab's midsection with little regard and less finesse. The air left Kre'al's lungs in a single rush and his wide eyes looked up at Andro's face. "My father never forgets!" Androcles hissed before his thumb depressed the button.

Kre'al never saw or felt the lance of energy for it sliced right through his abdomen sending a bloody spray out the middle of his back, along with large bits of flesh and most of his spine, before launching his body into the air and sending it sailing through the air from the force of the concentrated blast of energy. Andro looked at the pulse lance in his hand with wide azure eyes as Denali and the others began to move.

"Saoi sibfla!" Andro hissed in shock looking at the lance. "I like this weapon!"

"Andro!" Jomann's screaming voice shook him out of his stance and he turned just as dozens of Kochab, Bo'yak and Evolli mercenaries began to bring their weapons up.

Andro dove behind the closest crate they had brought out of the MENKLA landing next to Jomann and his brother just as weapons fire began to erupt towards them, as well as screaming voices. He put his back to the crate and looked into the rear of the MENKLA. Now SirsanGai! Now!

In the cockpit of the MENKLA Ne'Veha stabbed her finger down on the control panel to her right and from the nose of the MENKLA dropped an ominous looking gray single barreled cannon. It swiveled on the turret it was attached to and sent one extremely large kinetically charged slug the size of a man's fist whistling off into the distance. Ne'Veha had targeted the cannon perfectly of course, and that single slug punched into the control panel on the opposite side of the landing bay after passing through a fuel container and two very unlucky landing bay security guards blowing their bodies into small pieces in the process. The control panel that operated the oversized landing bay doors facing the east side of the mountain. The single round succeeded in obliterating the entire control panel as well as punch through the exterior of the steel wall behind it. The cannon was meant to target warships and the side of the mountain base was really no match for it. Her action also served its major purpose and the huge doors began to open.

The four crates were large enough to provide cover for them as weapons fire slammed into the reinforced containers not really doing any damage in the least. Andro sat on his butt, his back to the container and holding the pulse lance, Denali and Jomann looking at him as he counted off something in his head.

"Now?" Deni screamed.

Andro shook his head quickly. "Not yet!"

"We can nubous kiss them as it is!" Deni screamed again.

"He has a point Andro!" Jomann barked.

"Not yet!" Andro snapped.

Eliani turned her head from where she cowered on the opposite side of Jomann. "Hey... lug head! They are moving closer!" She shouted. "I don't want to swap spit with these scum!"

Andro turned his head and looked at his sister. "Perish the thought arande!"

"Now... now would be a very good time for you to do whatever it is you are going to do Androcles!" Bren shouted from where he crouched behind another crate only meters away.

"A few seconds more!" Andro shouted.

"Saradasaar... this is insanity!" Lu'ria barked from where she sat on the opposite side of Eliani.

All of them heard the roar of engines then and they turned to see the STRIKER DT Mark II rise into view. Andro grinned. "Now!" He screamed as he rose up and lifted his left arm, launching his Shi Viska in a single blink while bringing the pulse lance to bear. The others followed suit without hesitation just as the STRIKER drifted expertly into the massive landing bay, the heavy chain gun under its nose beginning to spew out death.

"Toria! Port thrusters!"

Arrarn barked out the command as he yanked the DT into a hairpin one hundred and eighty degree turn, his finger still mashed down on the firing button of the chain cannon. Toria had already read his mind in that regard and before the order had left his lips completely, she was stabbing her control panel and engaging the port docking thrusters. The added power caused the STRIKER to turn that much quicker and Arrarn reached over, taking his hand off the cannon control and slapped the controls for the DT's main ramp. Arrarn didn't turn his head from his instruments but he took a deep breath and shouted out what six fully grown dragons had been waiting to hear.

"Elynth! Ramp coming down!"

We are ready Arrarn! Her voice responded in his head and Arrarn Leonidas grinned a cruel grin.

"Time to open the hurt locker you nubous ronnus!" He spat out loud.

Toria Leonidas smiled from her co-pilot's seat and could only shake her head. No doubt about it, life with Narice and their new half elf half Lycavorian husband was going to be so very interesting and fulfilling.

Elynth and Anthar hit the steel floor first, before Arrarn had even dropped the STRIKER completely to the deck. With roars of rage and glee, both of them cut loose with dual streams of death as they snapped their wings to the side with bone shattering claps of thunder like noise and moved to the side. A stream of three thousand degree, flame tinged super heated breath and pure scorching flame caught a full squad of Kochab and Evulli mercenaries just as half of them were reloading their weapons. None of them survived the skin melting heat or charring flame. Deneth and Aradace were the next off the STRIKER and with a flick of her huge head Aradace snatched up two Bo'yak scum and sent them hurtling back towards where Deneth was just unfolding his wings. He snapped his right wing forward with bone crunching power and speed and the two Bo'yak mercenaries collided with that rigid front, steel like cartilage, the sound of their bones shattering audible even over the din of weapons fire and the screaming that was echoing around the landing bay. Majeir and Tharua were last off the DT and they broke to the left just as they were instructed. Majeir's green scales and Tharua's copper color skin was brilliant in the light of the landing bay, and the two dragon sisters stood side by side like the majestic creatures of numerous legend and unleashed twin streams of searing flame directly into the control room of the landing bay. The combined streams melted the glass that separated the control room from the bay itself and within seconds, the five mercenaries inside the control room were screaming in agony as they ran back and forth within the confines of the small room, their bodies pyres of flaming death.

Elynth snapped her head around to where Andro and the others waited.

Go my Bonded Brother! Go now Andro! We will hold them!

Do it sister! Andro's voice echoed.

As beautifully choreographed as any dance move in a grand ballet, six dragons reached out to their bonded ones, snatched them up in the embrace of their powerful psychic power and proceeded to throw them through the air directly at the catwalk running along the side of the landing bay that led to the upper levels. None of the mercenaries were prepared for this maneuver and fully half could only stand there and gawk as three men and four women were launched into the air over their heads, one of the men with a look of utter horror on his face.

"Here we go!" Andro screamed out to the others.

Denali, Carisia, Lu'ria, Eliani, Narice and Andro relaxed their bodies and were lifted into the air instantly. Jomann's eyes grew wide when he rose with them, and he flailed somewhat as he had not been prepared for this. His eyes were wide as he suddenly found himself rocketing across the top of the mercenaries below him, following closely behind Andro and the others. Given Carisia's diminutive size, it was a simple enough exercise for Elynth and Anthar her dragon mate to combined their skills together and throw all three of them through the air just as Androcles had planned. Andro detected their surprise at how easily they had done this and he smiled as he guided his body right where he wanted to go, feeling Jomann's anxiety and shock filling him clearly. His Durcunusaan Captain adjusted almost immediately as he knew Jomann would and as Andro saw the five mercenaries look at them from the catwalk below with stunned expressions he rotated and drove his booted feet down into the face of the Evulli scum beneath him with all two hundred and twenty plus pounds of muscle and bone. His wolf ears detected the snapping of bone as Denali landed next to him in much the same way, driving the Kochab beneath him and killing him instantly as his head was smashed into the floor.

Andro turned immediately even as he dropped into a combat squat, just in time to see Jomann land somewhat awkwardly next to him, his armored knee fracturing the skull of the Kochab mercenary and sending him sprawling heavily into the wall. Carisia and Lu'ria made short work of another mercenary, their lithe frames working in tandem as Drow Mistress and Slave as they landed cat like, both of their blades flashing in the light of the landing bay. A single shot rang out from a K14 KM and Andro saw the last mercenary's head practically implode from the near point blank shot of Eliani's hand weapon as she nimbly landed on the opposite side of Jomann, Narice beside her, fighting knives already out and preparing for battle.

Jomann got to his feet instantly and whirled on Andro with wide changed eyes and his fangs exposed. "Nubous warn me next time mideaus!" He screamed at his Prince in shock and feigned anger. It had been a thrilling experience to say the least and not something that Andro had taught him in their training sessions over the last few days.

"No time!" Andro shouted back his eyes and fangs also changed now. He spun around lifting his arm as his Shi Viska came whizzing back from the distance to become reseated on his arm and looked at Denali, who was already moving to the door on that level that would take them into the interior of the base and to the Unsaur's personal quarters. "Deni!"

"Clear! Let's move!" He barked back lifting the Stiletto pulse lance and ducking into the corridor.

Andro followed his younger brother immediately, Lu'ria and Carisia right behind him with smiles on their faces and blood dripping from their blades. Narice moved next with Eliani pushing past Jomann and making it a point to bump her firm ass cheek against his broad shoulder.

“If you keep up I’ll let you have your way with me when this is over!” She barked at him pausing to lean over quickly and nibble his ear with her wolf fangs as she moved past.

Jomann couldn’t help but smile and growl at her obvious invitation and willingness to make it known she desired him so much and he didn’t hesitate in following her. Deia had told him serving as Andro’s Captain would be the most interesting and taxing time of his life. He shook his head at what he had just done and now her words echoed so truthfully in his head.

Damned if he wouldn’t have it any other way though.

Cyngi stopped walking at the first sounds of gunfire and then the screaming began. His head whipped around instantly and he opened his mouth to order his guards to kill the four Lycavorians but he stopped when he saw three of them holding weapons on him and his men. Instantly one of the men and the female fired at almost point blank range, their rounds impacting the Kochab lieutenant and the second Kochab who had joined them as they walked. The third man was dragging their contact back down the corridor unceremoniously, his opposite hand filled with a large hand weapon.

“You have betrayed me!” Cyngi hissed savagely.

The man and woman leveled their weapons at him as more explosions shook the base. “I’d say you have a problem Unsaar.” The man snarled... wolf fangs exposed and his eyes changed.

“We’ll take the traitor thank you very much.” The woman echoed.

Cyngi took a step towards them but froze once more when they both drew down on him. He was an Unsaar yes, but even he could not defeat two fully grown Lycavorians in a stand up fight.

“His son is here Unsaar!” The woman snapped. “And I think he’s here to collect on a debt you owe his father from twenty years ago.”

Cyngi’s eyes grew wide. “The son?” He hissed.

“If I was you... I be making my way to my emergency ship.” The male spoke as they began to move back down the corridor. “If you want to live of course.”

“You think you will escape here?” Cyngi growled.

“Oh... we’ll escape. The question is... will you be alive to see it.” He answered.

Cyngi’s wrist communications band began to crackle with the shouting voices of dozens of his security forces. He turned away from them without hesitation and lifted his wrist. He looked at his two dead security men and then began walking towards the landing bay. “This is Cyngi... all security personnel head for the landing bay!” He barked. “Overwhelm them!”

“They have dragons in the base!” A voice screamed. “They’re burning us down!”

“Use heavy weapons damn it!” Cyngi screamed. “Where is Kre’al?”

“He’s dead!” The voice responded. “Soul Slayer killed him first!”

Cyngi stopped and turned back around to see an empty corridor. “Soul Slayer is here?” He stammered.

“Upper levels!”

“Have half a dozen men meet me by the armory!” Cyngi barked. “Now! Move! And get the heavy cannons set up on the upper catwalks to fire down into the bay! Do it now!”

The entrance to the refuse room was never guarded even though it had a main junction of tunnels that led out to the icy mountain and plains within it. Cyngi wrongly determined that no one in their right mind would slug through half a kilometer of bodily feces and week old garbage to reach inside the base. The tunnel exit was on a plateau that you could only reach by air, and he never expected the Union to use a Shrouded ship to drop troops there. He was an excellent criminal mind, but a very poor military planner. The control room for the refuse center was now filled with Dutkne, Am'uur and the others, stripped out of their hazard suits to survive the walk through the tunnels and protect their senses.

Tastia was a fully trained Cadre Commando with several missions under her belt, but never had she seen such precision and training than she was witnessing now. She stood very close to Am'uur now, as his amber eyes searched the corridor outside the main door down one direction and Dutkne stood on the opposite side of the doorway looking in the other direction. This Drow elf male had not released her hand as they moved through the mangle of refuse and garbage, twice keeping her from falling headfirst into the sludge and vile liquid. She found herself staring at his chest now as they stood by the door waiting for the signal to exit and move to the main chambers where they were keeping the Vanari females hostage. The body armor she wore was identical to what the others wore and quite a marvel of construction in her opinion. The Vanari had nothing like these combat suits and even their heavy troops were not so well protected. Standing close to him as she was, she could see the rhythmic rise and fall of his chest under the body armor, as he was a good seven inches taller than her own five foot five frame. His long white hair was pulled into a tight pony tail, and draped over one shoulder, similar in fashion to the other two Drow who had accompanied them. Tastia looked up at his face and took in the contours of his jaw and cheek and how his elven ears curved elegantly inward. He had spoken up for her when Coren tried to shout her down, and since first meeting him only ours ago, Tastia found herself captured by his eyes. She looked away quickly when he turned his head to glance at Dutkne, but didn't back up from her position of almost touching him with her body as she too looked out the glass partition.

"Get ready." Dutkne said softly. His eyes were seemingly off in some far away land, but there was a distinct smile on his face. "He does not believe in being subtle."

Am'uur snorted with a smile of his own. "Subtle to Prince Androcles is asking what you want written on your tomb. Before he sends you to the gods."

Dutkne turned and looked at Nirilo Re Mydala. "Nirilo?" He asked.

Nirilo looked at the portable sensor console he wore on his right forearm. "Once we exit this room... sixty meters down the corridor to the right and take a left. Another twenty meters and we'll be at main chamber where the Vanari are held."

Dutkne looked at the first few members of the RD team that waited patiently. "Once we get the signal... four of you break first. If it is not wearing one of our uniforms then kill it." He ordered. "Be watchful for other Lycavorians. They are working for this AEC and will be in civilian clothes. They are friendly."

"As you order Val'istar." The lead RD officer replied without question. Word had spread quickly among the Durcunusaan that this Dutkne now held a position to Prince Andro similar to that of the Feravomir for his father. A spiritual and political advisor with little equal. It also was moving among their ranks from those who participated in the mission to free Lady Janae that he seemed very interested in Princess Zarah and Princess Lucia, and that no matter what she had said to him, the interest from them for him was there as well.

"What is the signal?" Tastia asked looking at Dutkne. "Will we know it?"

Dutkne was about to answer when a massive explosion shook the base and the floor vibrated beneath their feet. He couldn't help but grin. "Ah... I think that is our cue." He stated. "Go! Go!"

Four of the RD team rushed forward and exited the room, Dutkne and Nirilo right on their heels. Am'uur looked at Tastia. "Remain attached to my hip Tastia Dal Vesch... I am sworn to protect you and I will." He stated. "Move with me and do not hesitate. Hesitation is death right now."

Regardless of their situation, his words to her were sincere and heartfelt and Tastia found herself looking at him in a whole other light as he reached down and took her hand in his before following Dutkne and Nirilo. The remainder of the RD team fell in right behind them without hesitation.

The main chamber where the Vanari females were kept was actually very large, though not very well kept. It was the Vanari females themselves who managed to keep it as clean as they were able and in some manner of neatness. Their different cots were spread out in the room, which served as not only their living area but also an auction like area. Cyngi had brought potential customers walking through the room to gaze at them and allow them to choose which Vanari they wanted to entertain them. There was a self feeding water fountain in the center of the room and several layers of thin material that hung from the ceilings and walls to provide at least some manner of privacy when they slept. At the moment, all of them were pressed close together in a small group around the two females who were nearly gone. Though the chemical that broke them also made them docile, they still retained their senses enough to know that something was happening outside of their chamber. Caliria and Yssyla had been taken two hours before, and while they missed her encouraging words and inner strength, they still were in this together.

Four Kochab and two Bo'yak mercenaries were in the room with them, all of them standing nervously by the main double doors into their chambers as another much softer explosion echoed and made the floor shudder. They were chattering to themselves about what was happening and trying to determine what it was from the frantic transmission on their COM units. Their attention was focused solely on that and for several seconds none of them even realized that the double doors had someone been bypassed and slid open. Five Vanari females were closer than the others and trying to listen to what the mercenaries were saying as well as pick up what was coming over their wrist COM units.

“Dragons?” One of them spoke softly looking at her fellow prisoners, all of whom had begun referring to each other as sister. “Such beasts do not exist! They can not exist.”

“They sound as if they are terrified.” Another spoke.

“Why would Lycavorians be attacking them?” Yet another asked causing the others to look at her. “They have never shown favor to the Vanari... the Protectorate would not come all this way to attack them.”

“She’s right... it doesn’t make any sense.” Another spoke. “What...”

All of them grew silent as the main double doors sparked and sizzled from an electrical power override of some sort. The Kochab and Bo'yak mercenaries began turning far too late as the door slid open. They could only watch in unmitigated awe as four figures burst into the room with wicked looking weapons and dressed all in black. The two Bo'yak died first as two members of the RD team shifted direction instantly upon clearing the doorway and brought their P190A5s up as extensions of their bodies. The integrated silencers built into the shorter model of the main assault weapon of Union forces coughed out death in quiet snorts. The Bo'yak mercenaries both died in a hail of fire that pulverized both their chest cavities into a mess of mangled flesh and blood. Even as the Kochab were turning and reacting, Am'uur and two other RD members fell upon them with lethal results. Like his younger sister Lu'ria, Am'uur preferred bladed weapons to bulky firearms, but his time in the Drow Queen's Elite Guardforce had taught him the value of being proficient with firearms as well. His right hand filled with a new K14 KM that had been fitted with a silencer as well. The kinetic rounds flew from the barrel of his weapon punching into the throat and chest of the nearest Kochab and physically tossing his body back from the powerful force of the weapon at such close range. In that single instant Am'uur also brought the wicked looking Drow fighting knife up in a vicious cross body slash. The seven-inch blade bit into the unarmored chest of the Kochab mercenary and sliced open his chest and abdomen from groin to sternum. His suddenly numb fingers could not even pull the trigger on his weapon as it dropped from his grasp and the horrific pain reach his brain and he began to scream as he fell. His hands tried futilely to hold his internal organs inside his chest cavity, but it was a losing battle as he fell backwards and dropped to the floor.

The three RD troops took things a little easier and dispatched the remaining two Kochab with fatal bursts of fire from their weapons until both joined their comrades on the floor. Tastia burst into the room right behind Am'uur, Nirilo right on her heels as was the plan, all of the Vanari females being held prisoner seeing them immediately and coming to their feet in stunned shock. Tastia moved forward to the small group that was closest without hesitation.

“I am Tastia Dal Vesch. This is Nirilo Re Mydala!” She hissed. “We are friends and we have come to get you out of here and take you home.”

Many of the females turned to look at Nirilo in shock. “Re Mydala?” One of them stammered. “You are... you are Caliria’s older brother?”

Nirilo nodded as he dropped the small pack he was carrying to the floor. “Yes. Another team is going to secure her.”

“They... they are Lycavorians!” One of the females gasped softly as Dutkne and more of the RD team began to secure the entrance.

Dutkne came up to them and smiled. “Ladies... I’m very happy we have found you.”

“General Director Dutkne!” One of them gasped. “You... the Protectorate has... you are working with the Vanari?”

“It’s a very long story I assure you.” Dutkne said as Nirilo handed him and Tastia several injector guns and three small clips apiece. “At the moment so you are not surprised.... we are not in Protectorate or Vanari space.”

“We... we assumed as much.” One of them said. “We do not know these species.” She motioned with her hand to the now dead Kochab and Bo'yak.

“As I said... it is a long story. One which you will discover I'm sure... but right now we need to inject you with a cure for the OSG chemical and then get you out of here.” Dutkne told them. “Tastia... tell them.”

Tastia nodded and held up the injector gun. “We have enough for all of you.” She stated confidently. “It will counteract any symptoms or side effects of the Syndicate control drug and begin working instantly. It will also begin to restore your body's Alkay and return your basic hormonal levels and balance to normal. Which of you has been here the longest? We need to treat you in that order and quickly.”

“Sama and Norena!” One of them gasped. “They have been here over a year and both are too weak to even rise from their beds! Over here!”

Nirilo held up his injector. “Dutkne and I will begin injecting the rest of you. We must move quickly, so once we have done that gather only what you can carry. If you have anything at all. We need to make our way to the main landing bay where you hear the explosions coming from. That is our ride out of here.”

Am'uur stepped up to Tastia as she finished injecting the comatose dark haired female and turned to inject the other. She looked at him and despite the situation felt her body react to the way his eyes gazed upon her. The sensations were exceptionally pleasant to her.

“Tastia we must be quick and silent.” He told her quickly. “The less attention we draw to ourselves as we depart the better. I fear many of them look at me in fear because of my ears and my eyes. Tell them they must remain as silent as possible. At least until we get close enough to landing bay that my sister and their bonded ones can cover us.”

“I will tell them.” Tastia spoke quickly. She reached out and took his arm. “I never... I never thanked you for defending me in the transmission before.” She stammered.

“You are very welcome... but now is not the time.” Am'uur answered.

Tastia then did something she had done only once before in her life. She took a leap of faith. Fortunately for her... this time the leap of faith would pay blissful dividends to her for centuries to come. “Am'uur... I find your ears delicious.” She stated quite plainly. “And I would very much like to explore them more intimately.”

Am'uur's amber eyes glimmered in the light of the room, almost as if they were alive and Tastia saw his lips curl into a smile. “I believe I would like that as well Tastia Dal Vesch. As long as I am able to return the favor.” He leaned over next to her and dropped his nose to her cheek. “Let us work on that when we return.”

Tastia shivered in delight at the way his words danced across her flesh and she nodded. “I look forward to that.” She stated.

“Good. Let me know when you think they are ready to move.” Am'uur spoke. “We should begin to head to the landing bay as soon as possible.”

Caliria and Yssyla huddled on the floor behind the large stage as another explosion shook the room they were in. The first, much larger explosion had caused many of the more expensive items in the room to teeter and fall over shattering into hundreds of pieces. Caliria knew how cruel this Cyngi could be and it was something he would hold against them when he returned.

“Caliria... I am frightened.” Yssyla stammered softly gripping her arm as they huddled on the floor.

“As am I.” Caliria told her with real fear on her lips.

“What is happening?” Yssyla exclaimed.

“I don't know... I think someone is attacking the base and...”

They both turned when they heard the door open and three Bo'yak mercenaries came rushing into the room. These foul creatures had always been the ones who were most demented with her and the others, forcing them to bed with them on several occasions. They were vile beasts and smelled horribly, and while their equipment was below average in size, they made up for this lack of manliness by being violent and brutal with many of the girls. They did not go so far as to mark them in any way, for their leader would have flayed them alive for that, but they managed to hurt many of the girls and not leave any signs physically.

“Find them!” The first Bo'yak into the room snarled. “They have to be in here!”

“Cyngi will skin us alive if he finds out!” Another snapped.

“The dark haired bitch almost bit my cock off!” The leader growled. “I want to make her pay! Fuck Cyngi!”

Caliria’s honeydew green eyes grew wide at this. The Bo’yak all looked similar to her, but she did remember this one. He had been particularly harsh with her and she had lost control of her anger as he abused her and had almost cleaved his tiny cock from his body with her teeth. He had spent three days in the infirmary and then Cyngi had docked his pay for mistreating her to begin with. Apparently he was going to use this time now to take his revenge. She pulled Yssyla closer, trying to make themselves smaller against the back of the stage and shaking her head slightly. They watched the three Bo’yak split up and begin to move around the room, leaving the door open in the process. Caliria’s eyes grew wide at this and she gripped Yssyla’s arm tighter.

“The door!” She whispered to her. “We must run for the door!”

Yssyla nodded without question. “Yes.”

“Now! Go!” Caliria hissed pushing her to her feet and following her.

They had made it halfway across the expanse of the main room before the Bo’yak reacted. In normal times, they could never have compared to the reflexes and speed of a Vanari Cadre Commando, but these were not normal times. The OSG chemicals dulled not only their senses but their physical reactions as well.

“There!” A male voice rang out.

A shot thundered in the room and Caliria heard Yssyla cry out and then tumble over as a single round punched through her thigh. Vermillion colored blood splashed on the floor as Yssyla dragged her down unwilling to release her hand. Caliria turned and saw her blood covering the floor, Yssyla’s tears filling her eyes as she clutched at her leg. She didn’t hesitate and dropped to her knees, trying to help staunch the flow of blood.

“Leave me!” Yssyla screamed. “Caliria go!”

“No!” Caliria snapped.

“Damn you go!” Yssyla barked. “He will kill you! Please... go!”

“Never!” She barked right back.

“I got you now bitch!” The Bo’yak voice broke into their minds and they looked up and saw the mercenary Caliria had injured leaping over the stage and moving towards them with rage and hate in his eyes.

It was a futile gesture she knew but Caliria curled her arms under Yssyla’s armpits and began to try and drag her into the corridor. At least in the corridor they might be seen and other security people would stop what she knew this Bo’yak would do to her. Yssyla screamed in pain and Caliria was only able to take two staggering steps before she slammed into something quite unyielding and dropped to her bottom off balance. Her head whipped around and her eyes grew wide in stunned shock when she saw the huge form of the black clad figure behind her. There was a strange sound then, almost like a heavy box hitting the ground and sending clouds of dust and dirt into the air, and something that looked almost like blue flame burst from this figure’s entire body. She barely noticed others dressed in a similar manner as they were darting into the room, captivated by the dominantly powerful male in front of her. She watched him reach out with one hand and instantly a bluish orb of some kind of energy formed and launched from his hand in that split second.

Their ordeal on Alba Tau had opened a doorway for Androcles and Elynth. A doorway to a power and skill that only their fathers knew about for it happened to them as well. Their bond was so deep and their very thoughts and minds so intertwined as one that it provided them the launching point for what they had been teaching each other and learning by experimenting for the last three years. They had deemed if Andro could form psychic knives from his fists, and he could toss psychic diamonds from his hands while Elynth could toss things about with just her mind, then there was much more for them to learn and be able to do. All they had to do was concentrate enough to delve past the barriers that only their minds put in their way. Alba Tau had opened that doorway, and their constant training and belief in each other is what finally broke down the barriers completely, just as it had with their fathers.

It could no longer be called Mindvoicing and still be accurate in any sense of the word. They had evolved far beyond simple communications with their minds. Martin had coined the phrase Psychokinesis as a humorous explanation, calling themselves psycho, but it actually went very well with the term some of them already used in the PK or TK power. At it’s peak, they could wrap themselves in a shimmering blue field of PK power not unlike the psychic shield that surrounded them when they flew and draw from the powerful bonds with their dragons to do so many new and wonderful things. It was no longer just being able to toss about psychic diamonds anymore; they had far outgrown that. Now they could manipulate their PK power in such a way as to use it as a weapon in every meaning and definition of the word. It was not something they had intended, but it was how the discovery had finally been brought to fruition. It was not something they would let slip them by. After a solid two years of learning and teaching themselves what they could do, Martin and Andro turned and began to school all those who meant more to them than anything in the universe. Though many of them were half breeds, they all still bore the blood of a Leonidas in their veins and it was dominant above all else. The purer the blood, the more powerful they were, and the entire Leonidas family took to these new skills like fish to water. To all of them it was a unique blessing and a gift that they would not let go to waste.

That orb of energy engulfed the Bo'yak mercenary completely and lifted him into the air as if he was a rag doll, his eyes wide in shock. As Caliria's wide eyes watched in utter awe and amazement, another ball of the bluish energy formed almost before the first one was gone, and then it too went sailing forth from his opposite hand with lightning like speed and reflexes. Her head whipped around and she saw the Bo'yak mercenary now suspended upside down in the air, encased in that first ball of energy when the second struck him center mass of his chest. His body was propelled with bone crushing speed across the room to impact the far wall of the room hard enough for her to hear his bones splinter and crack from across the twenty-meter distance. As the Bo'yak's body dropped limply to the floor Caliria's head turned back around and she looked up into the wonderfully handsome face of this overwhelming man and saw the stunning azure blue orbs from her dreams staring back at her.

It was at that single moment when Caliria Re Mydala's heart found its center and her purpose in this life was revealed to her in one tidal wave of feeling and emotions she could not deny and only embrace. Something she did without question or pause.

Caliria was so focused on those eyes that she did not see the second Lycavorian male, so similar in looks to the first, his body also encased in that bluish flame as he sent a shuddering tremor of blue energy skipping across the floor like a relentless landslide towards the second and third Bo'yak mercenaries. They were both frozen in place, horrified as that all-powerful shockwave reached them, lifting their bodies into the air like porcelain dolls and shattering bone and cartilage with the concussive force. Two single, thunderous shots rang out then and Jomann lowered his P190A3 from its firing position, two neat holes through the backs of the two Bo'yak scum, both rounds shattering whatever remained of their spinal columns and killing them both instantly. She didn't see the burgundy red haired female dart around her to kneel next to Yssyla, nor did she notice the other three females take up defensive positions around the small group. All she could focus on were those incredible azure blue orbs, the most divinely handsome face she had ever seen and the ferocious looking dual fangs that protruded from beneath his lips. She shivered in blessed anticipation as Andro lowered himself to one knee in front of her waiting for the word she had heard so many times in her dreams.

"I told you we would come for you Inamarno." Andro said with a smile.

Caliria reached up with her hands then, which were shaking horribly to say the least, her honeydew green eyes wide in disbelief at his magical words to her. She was holding her breath, unable to believe what he had said; still believing this was all some kind of horrible joke on her. Tears were beginning to roll down her cheeks as she gazed at him wanting desperately to touch his face but afraid it would disappear as it always had.

"You... you are in my dreams." She stammered out the single sentence. "You... you can not be... you can not be real."

Andro lifted his hands and covered hers, bringing her palms to his cheeks and covering the backs of her hands with his. He heard her gasp in shock once more and he smiled. "Does this feel like a dream to you Inamarno?" He asked. "Can a dream do this?"

Caliria didn't resist in the least when he pulled her tightly to him and covered her soft light violet lips with his own. Her eyes grew wide for a single instant and then the truth of the reality hit her and what she was feeling became so very genuine. His hands dropped to her waist and he deepened the kiss, Caliria practically melting into his arms as her eyes closed in utter bliss and every nerve ending in her body sang out its unabashed delight. Her eyes sprang open when she felt other hands and arms grip her and she tore her lips unwillingly from his and turned her head quickly to see the amber and maya colored eyes from her dreams as well as the long white hair and the raven blacks locks.

Carisia leaned closed and brushed her lips against Caliria's cheek first. "We have waited a long time for you to join us Inamarno." She spoke softly.

"Far too long." Lu'ria agreed leaning close as well.

Caliria could not keep the brilliant smile from her face or the outpouring of emotion from her heart. She glanced back to Andro whose eyes were still focused on her. “By the grace of the Prophets... you are real! It is... what I feel is real!”

“It certainly is.” Andro told her. “And now we must get you out of here. KertaGai and SirsanGai wait for us in the landing bay.”

Caliria felt warmth fill her as those names sounded in her head. “Sadi. Ne'Veha.” She spoke softly. She looked at Carisia and Lu'ria tears streaming down her cheeks unchecked. “Carisia. Lu'ria. Our... our Drow Mistress. I have seen all of you... been with all of you in my dreams! You are real!” Caliria didn't hesitate and laid a blistering kiss on first Carisia and then Lu'ria as if not believing anything until she felt it physically. Each searing kiss was filled with newfound passion and incredible desire and Carisia and Lu'ria responded just as ardently as they did with each other as well as Sadi and Ne'Veha.

Caliria's heart was ready to burst as she pulled away from Lu'ria's delicious soft pink lips and she felt the fervent need pulsing through all of them. A simple strand of salvia connected their lips for a split second before Androcles took her face in his hands and kissed her again, causing her to whimper in shameless enchantment.

He pulled away once more, long before she wanted him too; her breath coming in short delighted gasps and saw him turn his head. “Eli?”

Eliani turned from where she was holding Yssyla's upper thigh in between both her hands, the blond haired Vanari staring at her in shocked silence as she felt her leg healing and knitting itself back together right there in front of her.

“Thirty seconds.” Eliani told him. “I'm still adjusting to the slight adjustments in their metabolisms and it takes a little longer.”

“Carisia... give it to her.” Andro spoke. “We must be ready to move.”

Carisia lifted the injector she held and showed Caliria. “This is a serum developed by Eliani's mother and aunts Inamarno.” She spoke. “It will counteract the effects of the OSG chemicals in your body and return your hormonal balance back to normal. You will begin regenerating your Alkay at a normal pace and you will be yourself within moments.”

“A cure?” Caliria gasped.

Lu'ria nodded. “Based in part on your research Inamarno.” She answered squeezing her arm.

“My... but how?” Caliria asked as Carisia lifted the injector, pressed it to her slim neck and depressed the trigger. The pinprick sting caused her face to grimace but as she brought her hand up she looked at Andro who hadn't stopped looking at her. “How?”

“It's a rather long story to be honest.” He replied. “But one I will let your mother relate to you.”

“My... my mother?” Caliria gasped. “She is... Androcles... she is here?” Caliria blinked several times as she realized she had just said his name without the slightest hesitation and she grabbed his arm in response to this knowledge. She had always known his name. All of their names. Caliria realized now what she had experienced were not dreams... they were visions of the future she had so desired for so long. She knew each of them intimately though she had never seen them before this day.

Andro nodded his head with a smile. “She is waiting on our ship in the landing bay as we speak. Nirilo is helping to secure the other Vanari and move them to the bay. Arduri and Naesta are helping other members of my family at odd things, but you will see them all soon Inamarno. I promise you.”

Eliani lowered the injector from Yssyla's neck and returned her gaze to her leg. The wound had healed itself quite nicely and Eliani felt a sense of pride sweep through her. She had only been studying the Vanari medical databases for two days. “Damn... do I do good work or what?” She muttered to no one in particular.

Yssyla looked at her leg in awe. “It... it is like I was never shot.” She gasped.

Eliani looked at her. “Pretty cool huh?”

“How... how did you do this?” She asked.

Jomann leaned over and grabbed Eliani's arm before she began to reply and pulled her to her feet. “Perhaps another, much more secure location can be obtained before you have this conversation. Preferably somewhere in Union space.” He told Eliani.

Eliani looked at him with those fern green eyes and felt his gaze on her as well as his aura sweep around her lovingly and she soaked up the attention and love and returned it to him just as intently as he was projecting it to her. “You don’t like a little danger Jomann?” She asked him sweetly.

Jomann finished helping Yssyla to her feet and turned to look at Eliani with those eyes that made her quiver in need. “I don’t mind danger in the least Eliani. I do have somewhat of an issue with reckless stupidity however. Something that we are beginning to display by remaining here longer than we had planned.” He answered towering over her. “Andro we need to go!” He spat.

Eliani stepped close to him and inhaled deeply of his jasmine coffee scent feeling it filter through her senses deliciously. “Spoilsport.” She whispered playfully.

Jomann looked down at her and grinned. “I will remember you said that in a few hours when you are screaming my name to the many moons that we pass as we return home.” He said seeing her fern green eyes light up in delight.

“Ohhhhh... I’ll hold you to that.” She said with a sultry voice.

Andro pulled Caliria to her feet, drawing her close as Lu'ria and Carisia stepped closer to her. She felt a little lightheaded and dizzy, but otherwise she could feel her body returning to normal even as she stood there.

“How... how did you get in?” She asked looking at Andro and refusing to release his arm for fear that this wonderful dream would come to a bitter end.

Andro grinned. “Getting in was the easy part.” He stated.

Denali turned from the doorway where he and Narice were watching for any mercenary scum. “We have perfected getting in.” He stated laconically. “That’s our specialty. We never have problems getting in... getting out... well that’s another story. We never have got that part down very good.”

“Something we will no doubt have to change if we want to live for very long.” Narice spat from her position next to him. “I have not spent enough time with my husband and Toria to die just yet.”

Caliria turned back from looking at him and stared into Andro’s eyes. “What... what do they mean?”

“He’s my brother.” Andro replied. “And he likes to talk too much. We are leaving now Inamarno. I need you to stay close to Lu'ria and Carisia as we make our way back to the landing bay.”

“I... I can fight.” Caliria said more forcefully than normal. “I need... I need to fight.” She said.

Andro held out his K14. “Then don’t hesitate to shoot if you have a shot.” He stated with a smile. “Time to go. Then we will have a proper introduction.”

EDOLUS

Richard Faith held in wife close to him, their twin daughters just in front of them as they watched the Lycavorian, vampire and Vanari moving about their small home with precision he had only seen from superbly trained Eridiani Strike Teams. These men and women made them look like school children in comparison. The sun had not even broke the horizon before they were yanked from their beds by these men and women. They were ushered downstairs quickly in silence, but they were not harmed in any way. Richard could sense right away they were not going to be harmed, at least initially, but then again he had never seen Lycavorian Commandos in action before. Nor had he witnessed before this day vampires as they unwrapped the shadows from around their bodies, the two females appearing as if out of the mist. He knew now why they were considered so dangerous; you would not know they were upon you until it was too late. The diminutive Lycavorian and Vanari females seemed to be the ones in charge, even the much larger men taking their whispered orders without question. They were moved into the living room in their nightclothes still, and made to sit all on the same couch. They watched as the dark haired woman nodded to the Vanari female and then they turned back to face them, covering the few steps until they reached the edge of the couch.

It was then Richard Faith spoke up. “My wife and daughters have done nothing.” He stammered. “Whatever you must do... do it too me!”

“Richard no!” His wife exclaimed.

“Father be quiet!” One of the twins spat her face angry. Lisisa had to admit they were identical twins and they looked incredibly similar to their sister Brendi.

“We are not here to harm you in any way Mister Faith.” Lisisa began setting the small holo disc on the table. “Just the opposite in fact.”

“We are supposed to believe you?” The twin who had spoken snarled at her. “You are a Lycavorian. And you travel with a Vanari Cadre Commando. There is no love lost between our peoples.”

“Actually I’m only half Lycavorian.” Lisisa told her calmly not put out by her defensive attitude in the least. “I’m also half vampire.” Lisisa saw the expression of recognition on their faces and she moved closer.

“We have done nothing wrong.” Elenor Faith spoke quickly. “We are not even within the Union borders.”

“I know. However... several days ago your daughter took part in a mission to kill my brother and his wives.” Lisisa said.

“Brendi!” The second twin exclaimed.

Lisisa nodded. “Yes.”

“You... you killed her didn’t you!” Elenor snapped as tears began to form in her eyes. “You killed my child!”

Lisisa shook her head quickly and knelt in front of her. “Forgive me... no!” She spoke quickly. “No! Brendi is very much alive... she is the reason we are here.”

“What... what do you mean?” Richard asked.

“Your OSG has some...” Lisisa began.

“They are not our OSG.” The first of the twins spat venomously. “They are murderers and...”

“Tasha!” Richard hissed. “Mind your tongue!”

Lisisa nodded her head to the young woman. “I stand corrected.” She stated. “The OSG then... they have become involved with a rather unsavory group of mercenary and privateer scum here in the Alpha Quadrant who deal in slavery and drugs among other things.”

Richard looked at Arduri then and she nodded her head and came forward to stand beside Lisisa. “Yes... it concerns the practice of kidnapping Vanari females sir.” She told him.

“Our daughter is in Intelligence.” Elenor snapped. “She would not take part in something like that! She...”

Lisisa nodded once more. “Yes... that is something she made very clear to us.” She told them. “However your son does.”

“Corbin?” Richard asked now. “We have not spoken to him in nearly eight years. He won’t even acknowledge us as his parents anymore. All he does is keep trying to recruit Tasha and Nicolle into the OSG ranks.”

“They are genetically modified as well?” Arduri asked.

“Almost... almost all Eridiani children are modified in some manner.” Richard answered. “What is this all about? Why are you here? Where is Brendi?”

“Currently she is on my brother’s ship the SCIMITAR.” Lisisa answered. “She is quite safe... but her actions have put you at risk and Androcles gave her his word he would see to it that you were removed from harm’s way.”

“Androcles?” Elenor spoke softly fear in her eyes now. “Androcles Leonidas? He is your brother?”

Lisisa nodded. “Yes.”

“Then your father is...”

Lisisa nodded again. “King Leonidas. Yes.”

“He is dead!” Tasha spoke quickly. “We saw it on the Netnews! He was killed several weeks ago!”

“That is what most people think yes.” Lisisa answered. “However that is not entirely accurate.” She held up her hand before they could ask her anymore questions. “We are working within a time frame I’m afraid. I would be more than happy to answer questions... but right now just listen to this. After you have seen this message from your daughter we need to depart with considerable haste.”

Lisisa turned to the small holoimager and activated it before stepping to the side. The small image of Brendi Faith appeared and Lisisa saw her mother gasp in surprise.

“Papa... mother... if you are viewing this then Prince Androcles has kept his word to me.” Brendi’s image began. “The men and women there... they are not there to hurt you in any way. They are there to take you off Edolus. The OSG... the OSG took part in an operation to kill Prince Androcles Papa. I did not know what it was they were going to do until it was too late. I thought I was only to provide background information, not actual Tactical Intelligence. Well... the mission failed from the outset. All of the OSG assassination squad was killed. All of them but me. Prince Androcles was not happy as you can no doubt understand... and they had intelligence of their own that the OSG had kidnapped a Vanari female. A Vanari female that was meant to be his wife and mate. They know where she is and they are going to rescue her as we speak. They will leave nothing alive Papa and the moment the OSG assets at this place they are going are destroyed, Corbin will assume I am still alive because only I know they are there, if he has not already figured it out with other intelligence assets on Earth. I'm done with the OSG Papa... I have a chance to break away. Prince Androcles... I told him I would help him with any information that I have if only he would get you, mother and the twins out of there and protect you. I know how Corbin will react and so do you. He will be savagely angry and he will take it out on all of you. Do not be angry with me Papa but I can't work for these people anymore. The more I discover, the dirtier I feel and become. I don't like it and I want to stop. Go with them... they will get you off Edolus safely and we can talk more if you are not angry with me for deserting the OSG. They are there to help you... please Papa... go with them. I love you. I love you all."

The transmission ended and Lisisa looked at them as they sat there silently for a long moment. Richard Faith was the one to speak first and Lisisa smiled at his words.

"It's about fucking time!" He spat rising to his feet. "Tasha... Nicolle... go and change into traveling clothes. You as well Elenor. We are leaving."

"Richard... we..." Elenor looked at him.

"If we do not leave with these people you know as well as I that Brendi is right." Faith told his wife. "Corbin will have us killed and he will get what he has always wanted and that is Tasha and Nicolle in the OSG."

"He is our son." Elenor said softly.

"He has not been our son for many years Elenor and you know that." Richard answered. "Our daughter has given us the opportunity we have secretly desired for decades. I for one will not let her risks be for naught."

Elenor stared at him for a few seconds and then nodded. "You are right. He will... he will try to find her. Kill her." She said turning to look at Lisisa. "Can you... can you protect her if we leave?"

Lisisa moved closer. "I'm thinking she will remain on Andro's ship for quite a while for exactly that purpose. The SCIMITAR is my brother's ship... and there is not one crewmen on that ship that would not die for him. She will be safe."

Richard stood up and pulled his wife to her feet. "How long do we have?" He asked.

"The sooner the better." Lisisa answered. "Our ship is not far... but we need to be gone before your city here fully wakes up."

Richard Faith nodded. "Give us five minutes." He stated.

Lisisa turned and looked at Arduri as he ushered his wife off. Zarah and Lucia moved closer as well.

"That went better than I expected." Lisisa said softly.

"A little too smooth if you ask me." Zarah said.

Arduri shook her head. "Vanari Intelligence has gotten many reports through the years about this very thing. The common citizen is not happy with how their children are taken or chosen to serve the OSG. I believe their desire to leave is very genuine."

Lisisa nodded. "So do I... but just to be safe... Zarah, Lucia do your magic and make sure we are not being set up."

Zarah and Lucia nodded and once more wrapped the shadows around their bodies and disappeared.

Lisisa turned to Arduri once more but staggered slightly, reaching out to grab Arduri's shoulders.

"Lisisa?" Arduri asked with a worried tone in her voice. "What is it?"

"Deni." Lisisa said softly.

"What? Is something wrong?" Arduri asked with far more anxiousness in her voice than she intended.

Lisisa shook her head. "No... but he has opened the floodgates." She said softly.

"The floodgates... what do you mean?" Arduri asked.

Lisisa looked at her. “The floodgates to the power he can command but has shied away from for so long. He has thrown them open completely. I can feel it surging through him Arduri Re Mydala, through me. And it feels wonderful.”

“Is that good?” Arduri asked.

Lisisa looked at her with a smile. “It depends on who is on the receiving end of that power.” She stated.

CONDARL CAPITAL PLANET OF ICALRO ALLIANCE

Roughly the same size as Earth with a similar atmosphere, Condarl was no where near as advanced as other planets. There was a massive space facility in orbit of the planet which served as their shipyards and the primary base of operations. Slowly but surely with the money they were making they were building themselves an empire. Or so they thought. The vast majority of power lay within the framework of ten criminal leaders that called the Icalro Alliance home, and they were not willing to share that power. Most of the civilian settlements were spread out and did not associate with one another since most of them were criminals of one nature or another. There was really not even a capital city, only a sprawling ten story structure and estate that was five kilometers square and housed all of the criminal leaders. It was also situated in one of the most lush sections of the planet, denying those on Condarl the rich mineral deposits and other trade items. It was here within the main meeting room of the ten story building where the ten men who called themselves leaders sat around the table and were going over the reports that were coming in of the attack on Ontahe.

“Are we sure it’s Union forces?” One man asked.

“Cyngi’s man seemed certain.” Another spoke. “He specifically mentioned Lycavorians and dragons. The union is the only entity that has dragons fighting on their side.”

“Why would they attack Ontahe?” Another man asked. “What would be the purpose of targeting Cyngi?”

“I don’t know... but his people are calling for whatever support we can give them.” Another spoke. “It appears all they have attacked with is a MENKLA transport and a STRIKER DT that is nearly twice the size of their normal ones.”

“A surgical attack?” Another asked. “Is he involved in illicit activities that we are not aware of? Something that would anger the Union in particular?”

“Have they discovered somehow that we are shielding Laustinos?” another spoke from the side.

“Impossible!” The first one announced. “The Kavalian Federation guaranteed that no one would discover it was they who were paying for his safety.”

“Laustinos is on Ontahe.” Another said. “That is where we told him to go. As well as our partners from the OSG. It will not appear good if they are injured or killed.”

“So we are in agreement then?” One of them stood up from his chair. “We will send our destroyers and frigates to assist Cyngi in defending Ontahe?”

“What choice do we have?” a second man said. “They are intentionally violating our sovereign territory with this attack.”

The thin man entered from a side door and walked up to one of the senior leaders, handing him a data pad. He was very mousy in appearance and looked as if he hadn’t eaten well in decades.

The man read the data pad quickly and looked up. “We are receiving an active COM transmission from a Union warship.” He spoke. “The Captain... the Captain wants to speak with us.” He said hesitantly.

“Speak with us? For what purpose?”

“Does it matter? We can file an official complaint with this captain for their attack on one of our worlds.” Another spoke.

The man with the data pad turned to the aide and nodded. “Establish the link.” He said.

They watched the aide move to the far wall where their massive communications monitor was. He pressed several buttons on the control panel and built in holoimagers came to life with the full-bodied image of the Asian human. She was sitting on the bridge of a ship that was easy enough to see, though the transmission was focused entirely on her body and they could barely make out anything around her.

“Ah... gentlemen.” She began as she rose to her feet. “It was good of you to take my transmission. I didn’t want to have to do what I’m about to do without seeing the looks on your faces.”

“We wish to file an official complaint with the Galactic Court in regards to an obvious violation of our sovereign territory. Lycavorian Union forces are at this moment attacking our planet of Ontahe!” The man who was usually the spokesmen for them began.

“My name is Admiral Miranda Lorian.” She spoke calmly. “And we are attacking the mercenary base you have allowed to exist on Ontahe. Blowing the shit out of it if the reports are accurate.”

“You admit this!” The man declared.

“Of course.” Miranda said. “Why wouldn’t we? We are removing a blight upon the galaxy by destroying that slavers hub. Something I am about to do myself.” Miranda lifted the data pad she held in her hand so that they could all see it. “Gentlemen... and I do use that term loosely mind you... you made an official agreement with King Martin Leonidas several years ago that you would not traffic slaves through Union space. Because of that stipulation, he agreed to not interfere in your affairs and did not blow your sorry asses into oblivion then. It usually is not a very healthy thing to cross a Leonidas after making a deal as you are about to find out.”

“We have done no such thing?” The spokesmen snapped. “What are you talking about?”

“I’m talking about the Vanari females that you or your cronies have been trafficking in for the last two years at least.” Miranda told him. “Did you think bringing them into the Alpha Quadrant by way of Bontawillian space somehow made it ok?”

“We have... we have done no such thing!” The man growled.

“Your face and your voice tell me you are a lying sack of sibfla... but we already knew that didn’t we?” Miranda growled right back. “See... you made the mistake of taking one of Androcles Leonidas’s wives and mates gentlemen. Yes... she is a Vanari... and when he found this out he wasn't in the least bit happy. He’s pretty much tearing the asshole from your friends on Ontahe while he gets his woman back and then I have this.” She spoke holding up the data pad.

“What... what is that?” The man snapped. “We protest this false action!”

“This?” Miranda grinned widely. “This gentlemen is an order signed by King Leonidas himself not two days ago giving me directives and permission to send all of you straight to hell. Which I plan to do right now.” Miranda turned in the transmission. “E’dira... batteries three through seven! Full ecliptic depth on the guns! Full yield on plasma generators! You may commence firing when ready.” Miranda turned back to the wide-eyed men who were now all standing and looking at her image. “Make peace with whatever gods you believe in gentlemen, for you are about to join them. Have a nice day.”

“Sir!” The aide barked. “Sir... our officers on the station and the ships in orbit are reporting ships de-shrouding all around them. Union military ships like they have never seen before. They are...”

The aide never finished the sentence as five Type One Plasma beam shots from orbit impacted with unerring accuracy dead center of the ten-story structure and obliterated it along with the ranking members of the Icalro Alliance and its fledging government. A second volley followed only five seconds later, further adding to the maelstrom that had become a burial pit for those self proclaimed leaders of a mercenary and outlaw government. None of them would survive.

As men and women who lived in the surrounding settlements began running from their homes following the sounds of thunder and earthquakes they turned towards the direction of the Icalro Alliance Headquarters and saw nothing but a rising black cloud and flames that rose hundreds of feet into the air. As they looked further up in to the morning sky, they could see bright streaks of light in crisscrossing patterns filling the twilight. Most of them knew what it meant and they darted back into their makeshift homes and huts to begin packing their meager belongings to flee in whatever way they could.

The Icalro Alliance as they knew it was about to become a thing of the past.

ULU ARIZONA

“Sensors indicate target has been destroyed Miranda!” E’dira called from her tactical station as Miranda settled back into her command chair.

“Excellent!” She spoke. “Weapons free all batteries! Stick to the target list and do not stop firing until there is nothing left! Have Janon and the HORNET break to a polar orbit and begin systematic bombardment of the northern continent. That is where the reports say their weapons research is going on. Glass the entire continent! Don’t leave anything standing!”

“Alliance ships are beginning to maneuver!” E'dira called out. “Sensors are picking up twenty-six frigates and seven medium cruisers!”

“Have the Second and Third Wolfpacks engage the Alliance ships!” Miranda ordered. “Launch Colonel Randall and the Ready Squadrons for fighter support runs! Helm come to course 3456.89! Bring the main batteries to bear on the station!”

“Admiral... there could be civilians on the station.” Zaala called out from her engineering station.

Miranda glanced at her quickly slightly annoyed. That emotion swiftly passed as Miranda knew Zaala was acting just as Janon would have acted as her executive officer. It was their duty to inform her of these things even though Miranda knew exactly how Zaala Randall felt in regards to anyone associated with the Icalro Alliance. Since Miranda had not appointed anyone to take Janon’s place, Zaala took it upon herself to act in his stead. Being the elven wife of the most famous fighter pilot in the Union probably had something to do with her knowing how things worked.

Miranda nodded her head as she turned back to look at the main view windows as the ARIZONA was turning. “If they are working on that station then they are not innocent.” She stated plainly. “Androcles said to vaporize everything and leave nothing in our wake. I intend to do just that.”

“Targeting solutions complete and weapons ready!” The ARIZONA’s Weapons Officer barked.

Miranda nodded. “Payback is a bitch!” She muttered. “Commence firing!”

ONTAHE

Am'uur held up his hand stopping everyone behind him as they came to a length of corridor that was little used according to the schematics. There was a chest high barrier to guard against engine blow back and as he moved to the end of this barrier, everyone put their backs to it along with him. Tastia had remained very close by his side during the entire dash from the Vanari chambers, the RD team mixed in and helping Vanari females along or covering their retreat towards the landing bay. Dutkne settled with his back to the wall on the opposite side of Tastia and his eyes counted off the number of Vanari with them, making sure they had not lost anyone. The level of weapons fire from within the landing bay itself was deafening when combined with the angry trumpets from the six dragons who were laying down searing blast after searing blast of flame in order to keep the heads of the mercenaries down. Am'uur could also make out the deep boom of the kinetic cannon in the nose of the MENKLA as if fired at targets of opportunity. He lifted his head slightly until just his eyes were peering over the top of the barrier and they grew wide at what he saw.

Several of the civilian transports that had already been in the cavernous landing bay were now laying on the deck completely and burning intensely. Those must have been the large explosions they had heard and felt throughout the entire mountain base. He could just barely make out Bren and Devra near the ramp of the MENKLA, alternating between slipping out for an extended burst from their weapons and hiding behind the thick crates they had positioned around the rear of the ramp as cover. The three members of Jomann’s personal team were also doing the same thing with exceedingly lethal results. The six dragons had taken up positions between the two ships, and Am'uur’s eyes grew wider when he saw all of them engulfed in a ghostly bluish like flame that encompassed their entire bodies. Whatever small arms fire that was directed at them impacted that bluish flame and the normal psychic shields they all had and did no damage in the least. Between the dragons, they were easily covering the rear of the Mark II STRIKER DT, it’s ramp down and Am'uur seeing two Vanari alternating between cover and ducking out to fire their weapons. Arrarn Leonidas was obviously still within the cockpit and directing the lone sniper turret on the top of the DT which was equipped with a heavy single fire cannon. Every time this cannon fired, Am'uur saw a body or crate explode. Whoever was in the turret and operating that main gun was extremely skilled in its use.

They were behind the mercenaries, all of whom had taken up defensive positions facing the DT and the MENKLA. Am'uur stopped counting their number at a hundred and seventy and he dropped back down and looked at Tastia.

“What now?” She hissed at him over the din of weapons fire.

“We wait.” Dutkne answered for Am'uur causing both of them to look at him.

“Wait for what?” Tastia snapped turning to look at his face which caused her to become even more desperate because it was so damn calm. “We are behind them! We can not wait here for long! How do we get to the ship with over a hundred of these scum between us?”

“Have faith Tastia Dal Vesch.” Am'uur spoke causing her green eyes to turn back around and focus on him.

“We can't have come this far just to be stopped!” She snapped. “I refuse to believe that Am'uur!”

“Who said anything about being stopped?” Am'uur told her. “We are simply waiting for the signal.”

“Signal?” Tastia demanded. “What signal? Androcles said nothing about a signal.”

“Not to you perhaps.” Dutkne spoke loud enough so that his voice carried over the sound of the weapons fire. “You saw the same transmission from the Feravomir, the Lycavorian First Oracle as we did. You heard what she told him.”

“Yes. So?”

Dutkne nodded. “Then we wait for the signal.”

Elynth!

Andro barked out her name within Mindvoice as they piled onto the catwalk where they had entered only minutes before, staying beneath the solid metal shield that wrapped around the entire elevated walkway.

These little men and their big guns are beginning to irritate me my bonded brother! Elynth snarled back. We can not fully concentrate unless they are removed from the same catwalk above us that you are on!

Where?

Across the bay from your location! Three teams of two!

Give me an explosion or something to distract them sister! Andro barked turning to look at Jomann. “Jomann! Three and two! Opposite side of the bay! Take them out!”

Jomann nodded without hesitation and adjusted his P190A3 slightly. Eliani had turned when she heard Andro call out his name and as her fern green eyes fell upon Jomann they went wide as she saw the bluish flame burst from around his body and he rose to his feet almost as if he was in slow motion.

“Jomann no!” She screamed out beginning to reach for him.

Elynth snapped her head around to her handsome carmine scaled dragon mate. My husband! A distraction is needed! She shouted to him.

Anthar's huge head turned to her instantly, his magenta colored eyes wide and clear. A big distraction my beautiful mate?

The bigger the better! Elynth laughed back at him before turning and cutting loose with another stream of flame tinged super heated breath. Anthar didn't dither and whipped his head back around to eye the huge fuel bladder he had spotted moments ago. Yes that would do nicely he thought. He snatched up a screaming Kochab mercenary within his TK power and turned loose a wicked stream of flame, engulfing the screaming man in brilliant fire. While still in the grips of that TK power Anthar flung him across the bay like a blazing arrow, his screams rapidly dying out as his lungs cooked from the inside. His burning and flailing body smashed into the large fuel bladder with stunning strength. Enough to crack the tank and allow hissing white gas to pour out, gas that tasted the flame of the burning body and quickly became a small inferno. The ensuing explosion shattered the landing bay once more and sent all those not prepared staggering back and forth. This is when Jomann acted.

Eliani was frozen in her spot, more correctly Jomann was moving far faster than anyone she had ever seen before in her life. Seeing the bluish flame burst from around his body stunned her for she did not think Andro could have taught him anything in such a short time. She would later learn that Androcles and Jomann simply advanced the skills that were already there, and teaching Jomann to utilize the dormant power within his blood to simply speed himself up so that others appeared slow to him was a simple matter.

Six shots rang out, and just as it had happened in the room where they had discovered Caliria, six targets went down. None of them had anything that even resembled a head when Jomann ducked back beneath the barrier. His eyes fell on her as he squatted back down and Eliani nearly wet her panties right there as she tasted his aura once more.

[I will make you mine Eliani Leonidas!] His voice echoed in her mind like a trumpet. So completely confident and powerful. [I will make you mine and you will never desire the touch or smell of another for I will always be in your blood.]

Eliani Leonidas shuddered at his words, but reveled in the truth of them as they echoed within her mind.

Andro dropped next to where Caliria huddled between Carisia and Lu'ria. "Go with Enylarcopri and Ilythiiri Tessai now Caliria!" He spoke. "They will take you to the ship and you will be with your mother. Your brother will join you shortly."

"I don't want... I don't want to leave you!" Caliria complained.

"You are not leaving me Inamarno." Andro answered her with a smile. "You are simply moving locations. Sadi and Ne'Veha wait for you as well. I must do something first. Before we can finally be free of this place and put it behind us."

"What?" Caliria exclaimed.

Andro smiled and kissed the knuckles of her hands. "I must keep a promise I made to your mother." He stated proudly before standing up completely.

The fuel bladder that Anthar had destroyed had brought all firing to an end as over a hundred mercenaries scrambled for cover somewhere. The explosion also caught Cyngi in its concussive shock as he was coming out into the lower bay carrying a large assault rifle. It was silent except for the echoing of flames licking outward and then the single voice broke that silence and all heads turned towards the sound.

"Niob aur fervon mornar arandes!" Androcles Leonidas screamed just before that flame like Psychokinesis power flared around his body even brighter than it had up until now and he leaped from the catwalk, followed a single heartbeat away by Denali and Jomann.

Straight into hell's inferno.

CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT

RITAAH

Resumar stood silently in what could be construed as the main engineering room of VORTEX Cruiser 341 staring at one of the four dormant Quantum Fusion Drive Cores. It was an enormous circular machine, the globe in the center much wider in circumference, and then slimming on the top and bottom as it fit into the many conduits and connections leading out of the core. It extended nearly fifty meters up and down in height, as well as an additional two hundred and fifty meters back from where he was standing in front of the three-panel control console. The cores themselves, when combined together, were larger than the main engineering room of a LEONIDAS II-Class Striker Cruiser and Resumar could not begin to imagine the power they could generate if ever they were activated. As he let his dark eyes drift up and down gazing at just this one core, Resumar decided that what he and Andro were doing was certainly the correct thing to do. It needed to be done to insure the technology of this ship never fell into the wrong hands, and that it wasn't lost to them.

Resumar turned when Avi and 341 entered the empty engineering room and walked directly up to him. Had he not grown up with Avi a constant presence in his life, Res would have been just a little intimidated by the two seven foot tall Avatars in front of him. Though they were almost identical in how they looked, even without the different clothing they wore, Resumar could easily pick out Avi. Avi had been an integral part of their education as they were growing up. It was Avi who had schooled him and Andro and all of their siblings in regards to the Pralors and the knowledge on City Ship 41. Their father and mothers wanted them to know about their history and how their blood came to be. It was not information that was available to everyone for his father did not want their enemies to know just how much knowledge and technology inhabited CS41. If the entire Lycavorian Union knew the real origins of CS41 then every criminal and aggressive species in and out of the Union who had a grudge against them would find their way to earth in vain attempts to take it, as well as put many lives in danger for those who knew that the information and knowledge existed.

“Ok...” Respoke his arms crossed over his chest. “Why did you want to see me Avi?”

-We have finished running the simulations that you and Androcles devised- Avi answered him.

“And?”

Avatar 341 tilted his head slightly and looked at him. -If I may ask Resumar Leonidas, what would be the purpose of this simulation be if it was to actually take place?-

Resumar met his red eyes. “It would send a message 341. A message my father, my brother and I want to be heard loud and clear.” He answered flatly. “I know it was thrown together quickly and we don’t have accurate and up to date Intel, but is it possible? That is what we want to know.”

-The variables are too numerous to list in a final report...- Avi answered him evenly. -However... the overall scope of the plan is rather ingenious- He looked at Resumar. -With the proper deployments yes Resumar, it is very possible. Androcles created the base plan from what I can ascertain?-

Resumar nodded. “He sent it to me once we originally talked about what I wanted to do. I added the additional elements to the base plan he sent to better accommodate the priority of the objectives.”

-I can deduce that since we are the only ones here discussing this, that this operation is not common knowledge- 341 spoke.

“The only ones who know about it right now are Andro, Athani and the three of us.” Res answered him. “Until we finalize the details and discover what it is my Uncle and the Kavalian leadership is trying to accomplish, that is the way it will stay.”

-Shiria has inquired of me what it is you have us working on outside of the normal information upload and download- 341 said.

Resumar looked at him. “I assume you have not told her anything?”

-My programming does not allow me to violate the internal security protocols in place in my neural network Resumar Leonidas. A descendant of Chief Elder Pralor, any descendant, is whom I answer too. I tried to explain this to her- He replied without pause. -She found this very frustrating Resumar Leonidas-

Resumar grinned. “I’m sure she did.” He said. “The emergency protocols for her are active correct?”

Avi nodded now. -I have installed a bypass into her ship’s main computer core. If our position here is compromised in any way or there is a significant risk to her life either 341 or myself will initiate this bypass. She will be removed, forcibly if necessary, and her ship will immediately obtain orbit and conduct a maximum FDC jump into Union space. From there she will be taken to Earth or Apo Prime depending on current security concerns and put into protective custody. I have already dispatched an encrypted Crimson Storm Security Level Nine message to General Vengal on Earth to be prepared should this need to happen-

Resumar nodded. “Good. Uncle Vengal will be ready in any case.” He said. “How much longer before everything is operational?”

-Downloading everything into the Data Cores you brought was far easier than uploading Resumar Leonidas- 341 stated. -Captain Fang and her engineers have been invaluable, but incorporating unaltered Pralor technology into your ships is not easily done-

“I realize this 341.” Resumar said with some anxiousness in his voice as he turned away from them. “I was just asking.”

-You are worried for your mother For'mya aren't you Resumar? - Avi stated moving forward slightly.

“Worried. And a whole lot of pissed off.” Resumar answered turning back to look at him. “And knowing that I can not do anything about it makes me insane! I keep hearing in my head what she told me on MJOLNIR HAND Avi. How she would do anything to protect those she loves. I truly fear what she would submit too if she thought she was protecting one or more of us.”

-She is willing to do this because of her emotions for her family- Avi spoke. -That is not something to doubt Resumar-

“That’s just it!” Resumar hissed. “I don’t doubt it! I don’t doubt it in the least! And I fear what she would submit herself too in order to save one of us. Thinking that the Kavalians... my Uncle... believing that they killed father. She can’t know he is still alive! We’ve told only those in our family and we cannot feel her within Mindvoice to tell her this. My uncle could be telling her anything he wants and her emotional state will cause her to believe him because she cannot sense any of us! Any of us!” Resumar shook her head. “My mother is very smart... and the only reason she would be able to come up with for this is because we are dead. She doesn’t know about the implants or what they do Avi.”

-So you are saying she is helping them because she believes one or more of you is alive? And she is trying to keep it this way- 341 asked. -This would make the most logical sense-

Resumar nodded. “If she thought we were all dead she would never help him! She would die before lifting a finger to help him in any way.” He shook his head. “No. My uncle... he has to be manipulating her somehow in order to obtain her assistance. Whatever that assistance may be.”

-Can the Kavalian female Poysha determine what this assistance is? - 341 asked him. -It may help to know this and better formulate a plan to return her to our fold-

Resumar looked at him now. “341... did you just say our fold?”

-That statement is accurate- 341 answered. -Avatar 41... Avi... his neural patterns and microprogramming networks are now part of me as well. My personality programs have shifted considerably since linking our Neural Processors. I am taking those patterns and sub routines and forming them into my own database-

“So you are becoming like Avi?” Resumar asked.

-No. My neural network patterns are still my own, but I am forming my own unique suppositions to many of the events and the information I have processed in the last ten days. Technically I believe the term brother would be more accurate- 341 answered evenly. -Avi does not view reactivation as a prudent measure where as I do. For many reasons that he does not support. I believe that is because of the influence of your father on him, where as my primary influence since reactivating has been yourself primarily and your brother Androcles from afar-

“It’s not a competition 341.” Resumar spoke.

-Nor do I regard it as such- 341 answered. -It is simply how we were designed to be Resumar. As the Avatars of our respective ships we were designed to take on personality traits from those ship commanders. It is programmed into our neural networks for it allows us to grow. Chief Elder Pralor Sumar for Avatar 41 initially, and then your father. VORTEX Cruiser 341 never had a commander and thus my interaction has not been as cognizant and complete as it should have been. At least until you arrived and now I have interacted with you and your brother on a regular basis-

“Your thoughts on my plan?” Resumar asked.

-Unlike Avi... I am fully cognizant of what VORTEX Cruiser 341 is capable of- 341 told him. -I am this ship Resumar. When you call on me... on us... we will be ready. And despite the logical odds that Avi has stated numerous times, he is, or was the Avatar of a City Ship. The most very advanced of our seed ships yes, but a City Ship nonetheless. VORTEX Cruiser 341 is a warship. It has been since its inception. I am the avatar of a warship, and as such, I will think differently in regards to odds and what I and this ship are capable of-

“So you think and process more like my brother and I?” Resumar asked.

-You are Spartans. And warriors. Based on the information I have obtained and processed from Avi in regards to the Spartan history and the history of your father and grandfather I believe fate as you call it and believe in... I believe fate put VORTEX here for you to find and to use- 341 answered.

Resumar stepped closer to him. “That sounds like a very human belief 341.” He said.

341 shook his head. -It is logical considering the events that led to you discovering this ship and what has occurred since you found us- He answered. -Perhaps the remaining Pralor leaders who dispatched us here knew this... perhaps they did not. Calculations of the odds and all variables suggest they knew exactly what they were doing by sending us to this sector of space. They knew it would be Sumar’s descendants who found it. They would be the only ones who truly knew how to discover it outside of Xaxon’s descendants. And because of that... they did not fear how it would be used-

“It was Xaxon’s descendants who discovered it.” Resumar said. “Aikiro and the Coven found it.”

341 turned slowly and looked at Avi. He turned back to Resumar who had witnessed the almost human exchange of facial expressions and waited for one of them to say something. It was 341 who finally spoke. - That is not entirely true Resumar Leonidas-

“What do you mean?” Res asked. He looked at Avi. “Avi?”

-Your father and I discovered that VORTEX Cruiser 341 existed twelve point three years ago Resumar Leonidas- Avi answered him. -He has known of its existence this entire time-

“What?” Resumar gasped. “But... why didn’t he... why did he act like this was all new to him then? Like it was a new discovery?”

-Once Aikiro revealed to him that they had detected something, he acted in the manner he did to keep them from realizing exactly what it was they had discovered- Avi answered. –Aikiro may have been many thousands of years older than your father, and considerably more refined in her Mindvoice skills, but she was not a blood descendant of Xaxon. Elder Pralor Xaxon bestowed upon her father a large portion of his mind and abilities when CS19 was discovered because his essence is what existed on CS19 while his body was on CS41. In turn she passed on this skill to her children, but it was never as strong as the bloodlines that descend from Sumar. You know as well as I that the purity coefficient of one’s blood is what measures the strength of Mindvoice and psychic ability. Xaxon descendants would never be as powerful as Sumar’s because they lacked the one thing that carried the core of that power within it Resumar. The blood flowing in their veins. Aikiro knew this and that is why she acted as she did. She was well aware that no amount of training or control would allow her to defeat your father-

“What else does my father know that he hasn’t shared with the rest of us?” Resumar asked.

Avi shook his head. -I will only say that he is unlike the persona that many have of him. Your mother Anja once stated that those who choose to label your father as just another ignorant soldier without truly knowing him were ‘Some dumb motherfuckers’ I believe her exact words were- Avi looked at him. –This pronouncement... while crude... is very accurate. Your mother Anja enjoys her colorful metaphors-

-A request if I may Resumar Leonidas- 341 asked now.

Res looked at him. “Yes?”

-I would like your permission to alter the registry of VORTEX Cruiser 341- He said.

“What do you mean?” Resumar asked.

-VORTEX Cruiser 341 is the name given to this ship when it was launched because it was the 341st ship of its class- 341 answered him. –I have studied your history, that of Sparta, the Lycavorian people and many customs. I would like your permission to alter the registry to reflect a sense of purpose and remembrance that is customary of your people-

-He wishes the name of this ship to strike fear into your enemies when you go into battle- Avi said with an almost disgusted look on his Avatar face.

-It is customary- 341 protested looking back to Resumar. –And it would allow your father to see that your course of action. Your brother’s course of action. That this is the right thing to do-

“If I didn’t know any better 341 I would say there is some emotional reason in your voice for wanting to do this.” Resumar said.

-While it may appear or sound that way to your ears Resumar... it is not possible- 341 answered. – Your decision; Androcles’s decision to not destroy this ship... it is only fitting that it receive a name worthy of its rebirth so to speak-

“What name did you have in mind?” Resumar asked.

-SPARTA’S WRATH- 341 answered.

Resumar stared at him for a long moment. “You’ve given this a lot of thought huh?”

-Sixteen point two seconds- 341 answered. –And that is an eternity for my neural processor-

Resumar chuckled. “Very well. SPARTA’S WRATH. I like it. I think Andro will too.” He said. “And you believe the plan is solid?”

-For lack of a more descriptive or technical description- 341 spoke. –We will go through them like goose through shit-

Resumar broke out into a genuine laughter, the first in several days and he shook his head. “That’s shit through a goose 341! But I get what you are trying to say. Good... good... Andro and I want to make sure it’s heard loud and clear too.”

ONTAHE

The bellow of Andro’s voice in the ancient Lycavorian language served two purposes really. One was intended; the other unexpected. The unexpected portion was that every single mercenary under Cyngi’s command stopped firing and turned at the same time to see him leap from the metal catwalk above with two other Lycavorians close behind. They were a mixture of Kochab, Bo'yak and Evolli scum, most of them never having seen sustained combat of any kind with the exception of several of the Evolli. Many of them were no more than harsh bullies and murderers. For years many of them had oppressed and killed and maimed their way through life and the galaxy without ever once crossing paths with a Lycavorian. Cyngi had brought the scum and villainy of the universe here to this frozen rock. Though they had no idea or thoughts of it at the time, for they were witnessing what appeared to be Androcles’s suicidal leap to the main deck, the vast majority of them would be very dead within the next hour for what they had taken part in.

The second purpose had been planned, and it was the one that Dutkne had been waiting for. He had known all along what Androcles planned, for since he had arrived in Union space, truly since he had met Androcles, everything his grandfather had told him through the years was coming true. There were now only seven men and women who were as close to Androcles as his father and siblings. He would keep no secrets from them no matter what it cost. Just being around him, watching him, and seeing how he thought Dutkne realized that his grandfather had known all along that this is how things would play out. Within days they had become as close as any friends could be. Dutkne was accepted without question among the Durcunusaan as one of the very few who could get close to him and not be watched every moment. He had even accepted them referring to him as Vali’star now, almost as if he had fallen in to the role without even realizing it. He also could not keep his thoughts from the dark hair of Zarah Leonidas and Lucia Moran, their sultry eyes, or the lush figures they both had. He had never been attracted to any female as he was to them, both of them, and it was only another sign that this is where fate had decreed he belonged. He knew what Zarah had been through, knew what role Lucia now played in her life, but he also knew nothing was ever without challenge.

The moment they heard Andro’s voice rise above the sporadic weapons fire Dutkne began a silent count in his head as the others strained to see what was happening. He lowered his Mindvoice shields just enough to detect her as was the plan and moments after he did he heard her voice loud, clear and strong.

Dutkne we are in position! Tharua’s voice barked out. Bring them now! Now!

Dutkne surged to his feet then without pause. “Am'uur! Break for the STRIKER! Go now!”

Am'uur looked at him with wide eyes but was well trained enough to not hesitate. “We must go!” He barked as he too sprang to his feet.

“Am'uur the mercenaries!” Tastia screamed at him. “They are blocking our way!”

Seconds after the words left her mouth the huge emerald scaled head of Majeir snapped around the corner and glared at them.

Dutkne! Now! We will not be able to cover you for very long once they regain their senses! She barked out in Mindvoice.

Dutkne grabbed Tastia's hand, shoved it into Am'uur's grasp and pushed them toward the corner. "Go damn it!" He snarled. He turned back to the RD soldiers. "Bring them to the ship! Go! Go!"

All of them surged off the floor at his orders and Am'uur gripped Tastia's hand tightly as they broke from cover and came to screeching halts. Thaura, Majeir, Anthar and Deneth had imposed their massive bodies at twenty meters intervals and what could only be described as a shimmering light blue barrier connected them all, effectively cutting off the mercenaries from firing at them and giving them a straight shot to the back of the STRIKER DT Mark II where the Vanari Ardan and Devra were waving at them frantically.

"By the grace of the prophets!" Tastia gasped when she saw the barrier.

She let out a small scream of shock and fear when six bodies landed in front of her and she was staring at two of Androcles's mates and his sister as well as his brother's wife Narice. Between them they were supporting two Vanari females, one of whom was Devra's daughter Caliria. Her head whipped around and up and she gazed at the catwalk above them that they had leaped from. Am'uur pulled on Tastia's arm as they began running for the ship in front of them.

"Time to move your asses!" Eliani barked back at him as she and Narice supported Yssyla between them and began sprinting towards the DT as quickly as they could helping the young woman between them.

"Tastia... perhaps we should follow them!" He barked yanking on her arm this time and beginning to drag her forward as Dutkne led the RD soldiers and other Vanari females from around the wall barricade in a mad dash for the ramp of the STRIKER.

Caliria Re Mydala had watched him leap from the catwalk above with wide eyes. She felt Carisia and Lu'ria's hands tighten on her as they pressed close and then they too were leaping from the catwalk in another direction. Seeing the huge beasts below her gave her pause for only a second since she had seen them in her dreams as well. As silly as it was at a time like this she chastised herself for referring to them as beasts as they landed on the landing bay floor twenty meters beneath the catwalk. They were so beautiful and graceful and utterly ferocious when they wanted to be. Caliria didn't hesitate in allowing Carisia and Lu'ria to lead her, clinging tightly to their hands as they began to run the hundred and twenty meters between the catwalk and where the rear of the STRIKER was open. Her eyes detected another Vanari female in front of them and she gasped when she realized it was her mother. Her lean, beautiful frame and luscious silver blond hair were unmistakable to Caliria. Her mother was gripping a large hand weapon and standing without fear beside the tall and powerfully built Lycavorian soldier as they took up positions on the ramp. Her wide eyes also saw Regent Ardan standing on that ramp and a strange looking rifle in his hands, something that she never in her life thought she would see.

Caliria was amazed at the time it took them to close the distance from where they landed to the ship and then she remembered that Carisia was a vampire and Lu'ria a Drow elf female. Both of them were naturally far faster than a Vanari in every sense of the word and with Eliani and Narice pressing them from behind it was not surprising they covered the distance in a what seemed like only a few heartbeats.

Devra had spied them from the minute they landed on the landing bay floor and her heart was racing as she watched Carisia and Lu'ria practically carry her between them. Devra's heart soared as suddenly she was embracing her daughter once more and even with the heavy sound of weapons fire all around them, the tears began to flow as they hugged each other tightly while Devra pulled her further into the ship.

"Caliria my daughter!" Devra sobbed as she crushed her in her arms with all of her strength. The fears of never seeing her again, of the agony she had had to endure, all these things faded as she held her daughter once more.

"Mother!" Caliria basked in the feeling of her mother's arms around her even as she could feel the other Vanari being ushered onto the ship and up the ramp. She felt stronger arms embrace both her and her mother and she turned her head to see Nirilo pulling both of them to him.

"Nirilo!" She cried as his arms embraced them both and the warmth of her older brother's body filled her as well.

Nirilo squeezed her tightly, including his mother in his embrace and he held his cheek to her soft black hair for a long moment before pulling back and looking into her tear filled honeydew green eyes.

"We never lost faith sister!" He gasped softly. "Mother never lost faith that we would find you!"

"I never... how... how did you...?" Caliria stammered unable to find the words.

“He did.” Devra spoke immediately. “Androcles found you. He found you far quicker than I ever thought possible.”

“Andro?” Caliria gasped as she turned her body and looked back down the ramp. Devra wasn’t the only one who noticed the familiarity with which she spoke his name and she glanced at Nirilo quickly. A small part of them still did not believe what Androcles told them about Caliria. “He jumped from...”

“Devra my wife!” Bren’s voice pulled her back to the present and she turned to look at him. “We are not out of this yet! Get your females secured in seats! The Mark II is not made to carry six dragons and it will be a tight fit once Elynth and Aradace return!”

“Androcles is still out there Bren!” Devra shouted back at him. “Sadi and Ne’Veha haven’t come over from the MENKLA!”

“Things will come together very quickly and we must be prepared!” Bren barked back.

“What is he doing Bren?” Devra screamed now wanting to get her daughter off this planet more than anything else in the universe.

Caliria took her hand quickly shocked at the words the Lycavorian had spoken. He had called her his wife and she looked at her mother with wide eyes. “Mother... he said... Andro said he was fulfilling a promise.” She spoke softly as Devra turned to look at her and Ardan watched from behind her.

“What do you mean?” Devra asked her.

“He said he was going to fulfill a promise he made to you.” Caliria told her.

Devra’s eyes grew wide when Caliria told her this and she turned to stare out the back of the STRIKER. All of them did in fact, for almost all firing had stopped completely as Tharua, Majeir, Anthar and Deneth took up positions at the bottom of the ramp now. Dutkne, Am'uur, Tastia, all of them stood at the bottom or mid way up actual ramp itself as they witnessed something none of them had ever expected or imagined. Carisia and Lu'ria clung to each other for they could feel it surging though them more powerful than anything they had felt before and it was divine. Carisia turned when she felt the hand grip her arm and she saw Eliani step up to her, her fern green eyes wide and her body flush with a shimmering bluish light.

“Carisia!” She gasped.

“We feel it!” Carisia exclaimed. “Eli... Eli what is it?”

What swept through Eliani was a tidal wave of emotion, from different sources yes, but primarily from Androcles in his brotherly fashion and the unambiguous and distinct emotion of resolute love and yearning from Jomann for her. She glanced at Carisia then. “Something... something wonderful.” She said softly.

“By the grace of the four prophets!” All of them heard Devra exclaim in a voice of astonishment and they turned to see what she and everyone else was watching.

He embraced it now.

Denali Leonidas had never been one to truly reach for the power his blood could give him. He had listened intently and learned everything his father and brother had taught to him. What they had taught him and Aradace. Denali knew he would never be as powerful or utterly as commanding as Androcles but he felt no jealousy towards him. His older brother made it a point to include him in nearly everything he did, he insured that Denali and others got the credit that was theirs to have, and Androcles avoided the spotlight as if it was the plague. He was the only reason that Lisisa and him had the time to discover what they now shared. By keeping them together to explore and nurture their blossoming love, Denali and Lisisa had found what many never do, and Andro had forever sealed the loyalty of his younger brother no matter the odds. This was part of the plan Deni knew and if what he sensed was happening all around them was indeed taking place, it was working to perfection. He landed beside Andro on the floor of the landing bay, Jomann only three steps behind them, and two seconds after that they had dropped into crouches as Elynth and Aradace were upon them in a blink, wrapping their massive wingspans around them like some protective cocoon, their heads and necks twisting and turning, their long tails curling up along their talon equipped feet and effectively creating a bubble. Their position within the center of the mercenary lines had the desired effect of drawing the attention of all of the pirate scum to them. The two dragon sisters, combined with their bonded brothers and Jomann’s powerful and growing presence within Mindvoice merged their power together and created a shimmering light blue bubble of psychic power around them.

The shock wore off for Cyngi almost immediately and he turned the huge assault rifle he carried toward the blue bubble. "The sons!" He screamed. "It is the sons! Kill the sons!" His finger drew back on the trigger and he sent a burst of withering sustained fire at the cocoon of dragon scales that encircled the Lycavorian King's two pureblooded sons.

At the sound of his command, nearly one hundred and twenty rifles or hand weapons shifted direction and began to unleash a maelstrom of kinetic propelled death at the huge cocoon that now resided on the deck of the cargo bay.

Andro knelt on one knee within that cocoon, Deni and Jomann facing him a similar position, their arms intertwined on each others shoulders and Elynth and Aradace's huge muzzles staring at them from either direction. All of them could feel the sensations of the kinetic rounds hammering their psychic shields; they could just barely make out the screaming voices of the mercenaries as they tried their level best to kill them.

They were the Bonded Sisters of the only two pureblood sons King Martin Leonidas had of fighting age, and in a number of years Deion Leonidas would count himself among them, and their younger dragon brother Jeru would be beside them as a warrior as well. They were silent staring at the three young Lycavorian males, the three of them with perhaps some of the purest Lycavorian blood to exist in the Union today. Elynth and Aradace knew well the history of the Lycavorian people as well as the Pralors and the immense role they had played. They knew that the purity of a Lycavorian's blood was the measure of the power they could wield. There were perhaps less than a hundred thousand Lycavorians who could count themselves as direct pure descendants of the original Ruling Packs on Lycavore. While every Lycavorian could trace their bloodlines back to those on Lycavore in some way, very few remained alive that could trace it uninterrupted back to one of the five Ruling Packs, untainted by mixture with other packs or families. Androcles knew the significance of the role Jomann played now; and he also knew the history of his bloodline thanks to his tenna Deia and what she had told him. At the time it had been only a matter of simple numbers that kept his ancestors from being among the ruling packs during the days of his grandfather Resumar. If his blood was measured by using the Purity Coefficient Content system, which was the normal means in this time to measure the purity of ones blood, Jomann's blood and that of his parents and siblings and family would be only several fractions less pure than Andro and Denali. It was something that many would never know for most did not delve into the true history of the Lycavorian people anymore, but it allowed Jomann to stand here now, unafraid and in a position that destiny had meant for him to have. A place among those Lycavorians with the purest of blood and the most advanced skills and ready to do battle.

Jomann stared at Androcles and the enormity of what he had experienced in just the few short weeks he had been his Durcunusaan Captain began to finally ring within him. All that Andro had allowed him to see and the training that Androcles had given him within Mindvoice. Skills and training he would never have received anywhere else. Jomann knew well the history of his bloodline and he was immensely proud of it, as were all of his siblings and his parents most of all. He had never expected to be in such a position, never in a lifetime, yet here he was. He was fulfilling a role that even Deia had told him should have been done many thousands of years ago. Jomann was bringing his bloodline into the forefront, their size now qualifying them as a ruling family if they had still followed the old ways. What his blood and fate also brought to him was Eliani Leonidas, and Jomann knew without question she was the goddess he had always wanted to find. Soon his bloodline would join with the Leonidas bloodline in a way that only members of the ruling family had done and forever secure their place in history. None of this mattered to Jomann however, his wolf blood burned for Eliani like no other and he did not care how pure their blood was, he only wanted to pleasure her until she could scream his name no more. He only wanted to be beside Androcles, who in a few short weeks knew more about him than those who had know him for years.

He would serve his prince and he would love his prince's sister Eliani until it stole her breath away. That is all that mattered now.

Sister? Andro's voice filled their minds.

Tharua and Majeir have dropped the last of their barrier! They wait at the end of the ramp! Elynth answered him. All the Vanari are aboard the STRIKER! It is time we ended this place Andro! Ended it forever!

Andro looked at Deni, his azure eyes meeting his brother's dark orbs. Denali nodded his head as he squeezed Andro's shoulder. He would follow his brother anywhere Denali knew, not only because he was his brother, but because Androcles inspired others to greatness just like their father. He had protected all of his siblings through the years, helped them to grow and face obstacles with a positive attitude. To never give up, never surrender. It is what their father always taught them, and Andro continued it easily. He had known about him and Lisisa for two years and his only actions were to insure they would not be separated so they could discover their love for each other and allow it to grow. In the last weeks Denali had begun to embrace his abilities a little more each day. He had seen far more than he would have cared too, even fought beside Immortals, and seen his sister mated to a half vampire Immortal. Denali absorbed it all and still tried to maintain the humor he was known and loved for. It wasn't always easy, but it was his way of facing and dealing with issues and it usually resulted in making others laugh as well.

And so we shall sister! Androcles spoke bringing his arm up and poising his finger over the small, one by one control panel near the bridle of his Shi Viska. KertaGai? He reached out within Mindvoice in a connection that included many others.

We are here my love! Sadi's voice was calm with just a touch of anxiousness.

You and SirsanGai activate the detonator and move back to the STRIKER now. Andro spoke. Anthar and the others will cover you but use the new PSGs that Ben sent to us. Set the timer for ten minutes.

Moving to the side now! Anthar's voice echoed within the open connection.

Timer is set Saradasaar! Ne'Veha's voice rang out.

Then activate it and go. Andro told them.

Andro... ten minutes is not much time! Sadi protested.

It is enough for what we have planned KertaGai. Now go! Inamarno waits for you both on the STRIKER and Arrarn is becoming restless! Andro told her.

Nubous regovar! Arrarn's voice sounded now. Scum sucking rensibfla ronnu shooting at my ship tend to do that to me! Kinetic Shields are holding easily but it's becoming boorish brother! Finish these midaeus and let's go home!

Bren... a wall if you will please. Andro spoke calmly. To protect against any stray or dangerous material.

Sibfla Andro! Bren's voice echoed. I'm on it!

Ten minutes my family and friends. Ten minutes and we will have done the universe a favor. Andro stated. Excuse us while we go to work.

Andro severed the connection with everyone else except for Denali and Jomann. He watched as they brought up their arms and nodded. "Let's nubous do this!" Jomann snarled stabbing down on the small identical panel. Andro saw Deni nod and do the same thing and he followed suit.

Devra and the others watched as members of the RD team pushed past them quickly and Devra's eyes grew wide as she began to see Shi Viskas appear on their arms from Flatspace. Ardan moved up next to her quickly his eyes equally as wide as he witnessed their use of Flatspace technology for the first time.

"The Prophets bless me Devra!" He gasped. "They use Flatspace effortlessly!"

Devra watched as two ranks of RD troops extended their Shi Viskas along the width of the ramp effectively making a shoulder high barrier of shields that nothing would penetrate. Her eyes dropped to Bren who was the center of this immovable wall now. Her eyes grew wider, and she could hear the gasps of shock from Ardan and many of the Vanari prisoners they had captured as suddenly gleaming bronze colored armor began to extend from hidden locations on the Mark IV ArmorPly. They could only watch as this glimmering armor extended down arms and around heads and down waists and legs until what stood before them was a wall of men and women in Dragon Armor and in position to repel any attack.

"Bren!" She screamed down the ramp at him.

His head turned back to her as her words echoed and Devra gasped when she saw his changed eyes and his fangs between the open slots on his helmet. The Dragon Armor covered nearly every exposed portion of his body and caused him to look almost mythical in nature.

“Remain there my beautiful mate!” He barked at her while smiling beneath the helmet spaces that she could see. “We will be gone soon.”

“Bren what is going on?” Devra snapped.

“Justice.” Bren answered. “Spartan justice.”

And with that pronouncement two deafening trumpets drowned out everything else in the landing bay and hundreds of pairs of eyes could only gaze on in awe as two huge dragons reared their massive heads back, their giant wings snapping out to the side fully as gleaming Dragon Armor began to extend across their broad backs and around their necks and heads. It only took a matter of seconds and then it was done and nearly one hundred and twenty of Cyngi’s men were then staring at two armored behemoths and three men before them, also now wearing that strange armor. Devra felt Caliria’s hands on her arm tighten and she turned to look at her daughter thinking she was frightened. Instead she saw Caliria’s face was bright and relaxed and so serene.

“Mother... mother it’s wonderful!” Caliria spoke softly. “It’s... I can feel him mother! I can feel him and the others so strongly!”

Devra saw Carisia and Lu’ria come up beside Caliria now, their hands reaching for her but not pulling her away as they pressed close to her instead. Seeing them pressed so close to her daughter looked so very natural to Devra and that reaction surprised her somewhat. Eliani moved up on Devra’s opposite side between her and Ardan.

“There are two things some people just never seem to learn when it comes to our people.” Eliani spoke excitedly as Devra and Ardan turned to look at her.

“Eli?” Devra asked quickly seeing the radiance, the almost flame like blue light radiating from her body. “What do you mean?”

“What... dare I ask what they are?” Ardan spoke now tearing his eyes from her to gaze out the back of the ramp.

Eliani looked at him with a grin, her wolf fangs and eyes fully changed and prominent to all who saw as he looked back. “We almost never go seek out conflict. We will go out of our way to avoid a fight but that does not mean we can’t fight. We are Spartans and we’re actually pretty damn good at it. Better than most really.”

“And... and the second?” Ardan asked.

“Never... and I do mean never... never fuck with the wife and mate of a Spartan.” Eliani said calmly turning her gaze to Caliria who was also now looking at her with Carisia and Lu’ria beside her. “Especially not those of my father and brothers. It’s the surest, quickest and most excruciatingly painful way to insure you never see another sunrise in this lifetime.”

There were perhaps three-dozen Evolli among the ranks of Cyngi’s mercenary army of guards. All of them had seen combat in the Evolli war and all of them had faced exactly what they saw before them right now. They had watched hundreds, perhaps thousands of their fellow Evolli cut down by the might of a Bonded Pair, and while they had early successes against them with the T-19 missile, once the armor they now wore was developed, those success became almost non-existent. None of them ever thought they would see it again, and of the hundred plus security force under Cyngi’s command, they would be the only ones who survived. They were the only ones who did the right thing, and though they would survive this battle they would not survive the ensuing storm that was fast approaching.

They turned and ran as fast as their amphibian legs would carry them.

Elynth was the first to act as she cut loose with a horrible, angry trumpet and spit a stream of flame tinged super heated breath along one side of the bay. It set everything aflame, along with the half dozen mercenaries caught in its blast as Aradace responded in kind. Metal crates and even several heavy loaders began to burn out of control. Unlike her sister’s flame tinged breath; Aradace’s breath was like her father and brother Jeth’s. It was simply put, nothing but three thousand five hundred degree heat that left her maw in an almost grayish stream and melted anything in its path. She extended the width of her spread to several meters and this blackened everything that was within that arc and caused several containers and one loader to explode. It also served to effectively cut the mercenaries off from moving to the left or right and flanking them.

NO MERCY! Elynth screamed out.

NO SURRENDER! Aradace echoed her sister’s cry within Mindvoice.

Now our brothers! Do it! Elynth barked.

As the last of Elynth's words echoed within Mindvoice, Androcles brought the blunt end of his traditional Nehtes down with a thundering clap on the metal floor of the landing bay. The ripple of devastating Mindvoice PK power that exploded outward was not as powerful as the one he had unleashed on Iraruzu, but it served to give them the advantage right away. The first two dozen or so mercenaries caught within that ripple were hit with a shuddering force that easily lifted them up from the deck and dropped them all quite unceremoniously on their collective asses. Denali broke to the right of his brother and extended his hand, a pulse of blue like flame bursting from his palm and then that shockwave of PK power swelled outward like a relentless hurricane. The screams of dozens of mercenaries filled the air as their bodies were literally lifted off the deck, the shattering power of the PK shockwave crushing bones and tossing them about like rag dolls.

Andro's left hand flared and he sent a pulsing blue field whisking across the distance to three mercenaries who were crouched beside a broken loader. Their eyes grew wide as that blue field lifted them into the air as if they were children, suspending them ten meters up where they saw the third Lycavorian level his rifle. Three shots rang out, adding to the screams and the weapons that were already firing. Three perfect holes appeared in the heads of the two Kochab and one Bo'yak mercenaries, each one's head exploding and their bodies flipping over to fall to the deck one by one. Andro's right hand secured the Nehtes and came up with the Stiletto, three accurate and efficient pulses of yellow energy and three more Kochab fell to the deck their chests now smoking as each of them had their hearts blown out the backs of their bodies right through the simple body armor they wore.

Jomann broke to Andro's left, unwilling to move very far from his Prince, but enough to give him room to use his own ability to its fullest extent. The light bluish flame engulfed him completely now and he felt a surge of incredible power as everything around him slowed to almost a crawl. It wasn't that he was slowing time; it was that he was moving far faster than everything around him and they appeared to be moving in slow motion. With unmatched clarity Jomann took in everything around him and began picking his shots with lethal accuracy. He used short, controlled bursts or single shots, and in the space of ten seconds nearly twenty Kochab and Bo'yak scum fell dead. Androcles told him they were going to be pushing their abilities and endurance to the very edge and he needed to measure himself as best as he was able for he could not tap into the bond of a dragon for added strength as Andro and Deni could. Even so, Jomann felt a huge surge of power within him still, infusing him with strength and confidence and fueling his own abilities. Once he felt this, he began to pick his shots more carefully, ducking behind a large burned crate for cover, and then using his ability in short three-second spans. Even in that three seconds he was able to find and lock and then kill at minimum four targets for each span, always ducking back down before anyone was able to lock on him and shoot back.

Denali used his PK power to sweep aside half a dozen mercenaries, knocking them sprawling with a psychic wave, before plucking two of them off the floor and tossing them into the air towards Aradace. With a trumpet of glee she brought her right wing whistling forward, catching both the Bo'yak scum with the armored edge of her wing and hearing the satisfying crunch of bone and sinew tearing as their bodies were sent rocketing through the air to impact high up on the wall of the landing bay before falling back to the deck, landing with sickening thuds.

Andro brought his left arm up once more and with barely a conscious thought his Shi Viska flared from Flatspace and leaped from his arm. A pair of Kochab were too slow to get out of its way and they lost their heads to the shield as its razor edges were extended and locked in place. The shield decapitated both of them with barely a pause as it sped off into the fray. There were only two known Lycavorians that had the Mindvoice ability to launch their Shi Viskas and then control them via Mindvoice almost as an afterthought. Andro was one of them, his father the second. The Shi Viska provided a wonderful distraction as he sent it hurtling at several groups of mercenaries and watched as almost all of them were ducking down and screaming and not paying attention to him as they tried to avoid getting hit by the deadly shield. This allowed Androcles to dash forward, while drawing Halize Rie Aellseleum from behind his back, and landing in the middle of a group of seven mercenaries. It was simply a devastating move as Halize Rie Aellseleum impaled a Kochab clean through his upper body, the first eight inches of the sword erupting from his lower back in a spray of blood and bits of flesh. Andro's left hand came up, filled with his Stiletto and he fired twice, the thin yellow beam of searing energy piercing the head and throat of two more Bo'yak scum as he was wrenching Halize Rie Aellseleum free from the Kochab's body. He spun in the opposite direction, twisting away while Halize Rie Aellseleum whistled through the air of the landing bay and cleanly removed the head of a Bo'yak who was bringing his weapon up to fire. As he completed his turn he was facing the other three and saw two of their heads erupt into bloody mist from Jomann's weapon off to the left before he had fully stopped moving. The last one fired his hand weapon point blank into Andro's chest and watched in horror as his kinetic rounds impacted that light blue barrier and went no further. He looked at Andro in horror, expecting him to stab him or shoot him. He never saw Andro's Shi Viska come in from the side at a blistering speed. He never felt the shield's razors slice through his thick neck muscles, and he never saw the Shi Viska whisk off to the right once more. He never saw these things because his head was on the deck and his brain was no longer receiving impulses from the body.

Andro looked up from where he was squatting and saw him then. He saw the Unsaar that has escaped his father's retribution. The man who had put a contract on his beloved Hadarian Tenna Sivana so long ago. The man who would not escape this day. With a snarl not unlike a rabid animal Androcles Leonidas leaped into the air directly at where the seven foot tall Unsaar was bringing his weapon to bear on Denali. As he leaped from the floor, his body shifted, there was a flash of white/blue light and the three hundred pound raven colored wolf was leaping through the air, it's coiled muscles intent on the kill.

Sadi and Ne'Veha were unseen as they scampered down the ramp of the MENKLA and activated the controls, watching as the ramp began to rise with the firing in the background. The PSGs that Admiral O'Connor had sent to them; the equipment that Andro had been referring to, were active and doing exactly what they were designed to do. Anyone watching the scene from afar would have only viewed the ramp of the MENKLA beginning to rise. They would not have seen the two females at the base of the ship watching as the ramp rose, for they were wrapped in a Personal Shroud Generator that was attached to each of their arms. The PSGs as they were built were not designed for extended use in full combat, but rather brief stints that allowed the user to be invisible. Ne'Veha gripped the K14 KM in her right hand as Sadi finished inputting her command code. Weapons fire and screams all around them, the occasional explosion, these are things Ne'Veha Leonidas never thought she would experience first hand as the pilot of a Union Fighter/Bomber. That had changed the moment she became a Leonidas and wife and mate to Androcles.

Ne'Veha wouldn't have it any other way.

Ne'Veha had spoken to her mother back on Elear in regards to what she had discovered since becoming part of Andro's life. Even though she had promised to come to Earth right away, Ne'Veha didn't know if she remained blissfully ignorant of her father's actions or truly did not know of them completely. What Ne'Veha did know however was that her grandmother had opened her eyes to so many things that Ne'Veha had embraced, not because she influenced her, but because they felt so very right. She shared a bed with Sadi, Carisia, and Lu'ria and would soon share that bed with Caliria as well. Their times together up until now had been exquisite and Ne'Veha knew this is where she belonged. Now that Androcles had changed her completely, it meant even more to her. She could feel the same power surging through her that Sadi felt, albeit not on as large a scale because she was not fully Lycavorian, but she was still wolf now and feeling her beautiful mate's male aura pulsing through her was a sensation that was simply divine. Having him stroking into her body while Carisia or Lu'ria or Sadi nuzzled her elven ears was beyond glorious and as the years past Ne'Veha knew it would only grow more passionate and exciting. Sadi had told her and Lu'ria that once the change had fully taken effect right down to the molecular level, once that was complete, they would feel every tiny nuance that any pure Lycavorian female would feel. And the bond they all shared would only grow deeper as the years went by. Yes... they all shared one man... but there was never a competition between any of them for his attentions and given his stamina and his exceptional size, Ne'Veha knew he would neglect none of them. Of course, they also had each other if Andro was occupied she thought devilishly to herself, and now that she was wolf she could taste the differences in her lovers and it was fabulous.

These were not the things that filled her head now as she waited just behind Sadi and covered her. Now she was all wolf, and helping to protect one of her lovers and mates as they put the final touches on the plan they had devised together. It had been Ne'Veha who suggested they use the MENKLA transport as the trigger for a much larger and devastating role in their assault, and it had been Sadi who devised where to put the charges on the ship to deliver the maximum effect inside the mountain base. Though she could not see her blond haired lover, her wolf sense of smell could detect her easily and determine how close she was and almost exactly where she stood. Ne'Veha's dark eyes caught movement to the left and she saw three Kochab mercenaries trying to flank Denali and getting far too close to where they were.

Sadi! She barked within Mindvoice. We need to go now!

Timer is set SirsanGai! Sadi declared.

Then let us leave before more of these scum get too close and discover us! Ne'Veha snapped.

Anthar! Sadi called out.

Come to me! The carmine red scaled dragon echoed within their minds and they saw his massive bulk heading towards them at a measured pace, his head turned towards where the fighting was happening and ripping out streams of lethal flame.

Anthar was a pure Firespitter, capable of releasing searing flame from his maw that could stretch out from his body nearly a hundred meters. Since coming to Earth and discovering all he could be with his bonded sister, since discovering his beautiful dragon mate Elynth, Anthar had become somewhat of a celebrity with the High Coven dragons as well as others. Many of the Union dragons knew Elynth, in truth there were very few who did not know who she was or who she was bonded too. That he had secured her love and was now her dragon mate made him something special for all of them knew how introvert she was with dragons and others she did not know.

On our way! Sadi declared as she turned and began to sprint for where he was, sensing Ne'Veha almost right beside her.

The majority of the attention was focused on where Andro, Denali and Jomann were tearing into the ranks of the mercenaries, and almost no one paid attention to the single dragon who was working his way back to the STRIKER slowly, his streams of flame lethal and carefully directed as to protect two females none of them could see. Sadi and Ne'Veha made the eighty-meter dash unopposed and were touching the STRIKER ramp before they deactivated their PSGs. The row of RD soldiers parted instantly to let them by and then they were staring at Caliria and she at them.

"Inamarno!" Sadi declared rushing up to where she stood.

Devra could only watch in fascination as her oldest daughter didn't hesitate in the least and enveloped Sadi in an embrace that should have been reserved for lovers. They shared a very quick but no less sizzling kiss before Caliria repeated the action with Ne'Veha and Devra turned her head and looked at Ardan.

"Never would I have believed it without seeing it myself Devra!" Ardan spoke stepping closer to her. "We have... we have held our people apart for too long it seems and that needs to change now."

"I will not be returning Ardan." Devra told him firmly. "My husband... my mate... my future is here now."

Ardan shook his head. "I know. We will work on that when we have finished our task here."

Devra met his eyes and nodded her head. "I will do what I must but I will not leave my future behind me. I will not let it go."

Ardan nodded. "And I do not expect you too." He stated. "We will worry about it later. We still need to get off this planet. We will talk of these things later. We..."

"By the grace of the prophets!" Caliria cried causing Devra and Ardan to turn just in time to witness the white/blue flash of light among the many mercenaries and then they saw the massive black wolf leaping through the air.

Bren saw this and turned his head screaming back towards the cockpit ninety meters to his front.

"Arrarn!!! The end game is coming!!! Get ready!!!" Bren screamed.

SCIMITAR

"Small transports fleeing the surface Captain!" The sensor chief called out. "Five of them!"

Sa'sur nodded her head in acknowledgement and continued to read the data pad she held in her hand. "We expected them to begin bugging out once Andro went ballistic on them. Let them go... we do not care who they are. They will never return here."

"The AEC transport is aboard and secure." Another voice spoke.

"The traitor?" Sa'sur asked looking up.

“The AEC agents have secured him in the brig. And none to gently I’m guessing. They have called for a medic.”

“Get one down there to treat his mida before Eliani returns.” Sa'sur ordered. “She’ll kill the ronnus! Or vent him out an airlock!”

“Captain new signature!” The sensor chief barked. “Unknown power readings! No ID from the computer!”

Sa'sur came to her feet. “Cross reference the files we got from this Brendi woman and Devra Re Mydala!” She snapped quickly. “This may be the ship that brought them here!”

“Stand by! Sixty-seven meters in length... seven lifesigns on board!”

“Species?” Sa'sur asked.

“Human by the looks of it.”

“It has to be them!” Sa'sur exclaimed.

“References match Captain!” The sensor chief barked. “Power readings and drive core emissions match those given to us by the Vanari! Fusion drive plant within point three variable of established Vanari Intelligence. It’s an Eridiani transport! Their heading is 35678.9! Gaining speed as they depart!”

“They’re running Captain!”

“They aren’t going to run far! Androcles wanted a word with them!” Sa'sur snarled out the statement “Drop the Shroud! Hard to starboard! Full power to the tractor emitters! Get me that ship!”

“Helm answers hard to starboard!” A voice shouted.

“Weapons officer... can you target their power core without destroying the ship?” Sa'sur barked out the question as they all felt the SCIMITAR begin to turn very sharply for a ship of its enormous size.

“Low yield Type Two turret shot should do it captain.” The answer came instantly. “Their hull does not appear to be reinforced over their drive core or LSD coils.”

“Do it!” Sa'sur barked. “I don’t want them to escape! They made their bed and now I intend to see they lay in it!”

Cyngi had always prided himself on being prepared.

In over four hundred years of life he had never once been caught with his guard down as the saying went. He alone had escaped the Leonidas purge of the Overseers those many years ago because he had been prepared. He had survived up until now because he had been prepared. This base and these men were his crowning jewel. He had made more credits in the last decade alone running his operations here than he had over a century as an Overseer. He purchased the best and he expected the best. Those mercenaries and pirates who worked for him were the very best credits could buy.

The Lycavorian Spartans that were slaughtering his men were far better.

Cyngi had seen the blue skinned Vanari females as a boon to his profits and how they would allow him to branch out into the information business. The oil they secreted from their skin was a powerful influencer and he had seen it work first hand. His partnership with these Orionis Syndicate people had been quite prosperous. Their obvious distaste for alien species did not keep them from working with him or taking his credits. Though the thought flashed through his mind that he should have taken more time in discovering what exactly they were trying to accomplish. The Lycavorians had come here for the Vanari females that much was obvious. He had seen them extracting those he kept within his personal harem through the fire and smoke of the landing bay and they were all now on the STRIKER that resided in his base’s landing bay. A large STRIKER DT with four dragons and a host of Durcunusaan soldiers now protecting it from behind that damnable armor they always wore. Those men were content to watch the three Lycavorians and two dragons tear into his mercenary army without mercy.

Cyngi had seen a few vid reports from the Evolli war and other places about Androcles Leonidas. None of them had ever showed the Crown Prince of the Union in such a fury. None had ever showed him wrapped in that shimmering blue flame that did not burn him, but granted him abilities that even Cyngi had never seen before. Abilities that apparently even his younger brother and the towering Lycavorian with them shared. Even kinetic rounds strikes against their shields and armor served only to stagger them somewhat, and did even less against the psychic shields of the two dragons that were burning and thrashing their way through his men with surgical precision. Cyngi made his decision instantly, as he always had after reviewing the facts, and he sprang to his feet to make a sprint for the remaining unblocked corridor and his escape ship. His reptilian eyes grew wide as he came to his feet and his full seven-foot height. He hadn't survived this long by being slow, and his rifle began snapping up the moment his eyes detected what was coming at him. The immense black wolf was in mid air, dropping towards him with bared fangs and extended claws of black steel. He managed to chop out four rounds before he felt the searing agony of those black, razor like claws slicing through his hard skin as if it was butter. His eyes grew even wider as he felt the weight strike his chest, three more sets of claws slashing into his flesh, as the three hundred pound weight of muscle, black fur, razor like teeth and bone drove him downward. His large skull cracked against the metal floor hard and more pain joined that already firing off in his brain. His head snapping back actually saved his life as Andro's jaws slammed together millimeters from where his throat had been only microseconds before. It only prolonged his life a few seconds however.

Cyngi was no stranger to combat however and as he fought the pain searing his mind, he brought his hands up to throw off the huge beast, except that beast was no longer there as it used his body to propel itself off him painfully to land several meters away. Cyngi rolled over and came to his feet swiftly, belaying his near five hundred pounds. There was a white/blue flash and then Androcles Leonidas stood in front of him, his azure blue eyes nearly glowing behind that helmet, his dual wolf fangs exposed for all to see behind curled back, almost feral lips.

"I'll kill you!" Cyngi screamed now as his blood soaked the front of his shirt and pants. "I am Cyngi! I am Unsaar!"

"You are a pig!" Androcles hissed back at him. "You peddle in the flesh of others! You enslave those who are weaker than you!"

"You... you have violated the treaty with the Icalro Alliance by coming here!" Cyngi screamed at him reaching for anything to give him time to escape. "They will not look kindly on this attack! They will send warships!"

"As of three minutes ago the Icalro Alliance ceased to exist!" Andro snarled as he circled the huge Unsaar, every combat sense fully alert, for while Unsaars were large and formidable, they were far faster and stronger than most gave them credit for. "I have removed their blight from the face of the universe for what they turned their backs too and allowed to happen! Just as I intend to remove your vile stain!"

Cyngi moved closer to the circling Lycavorian Prince, his rage building. "Why have you done this?" He screamed. "Over... over some blue skinned females! If you so desired them I would have given you one or two for nothing!"

"You know nothing!" Androcles shouted at him. "You escaped my father Cyngi! You will not escape me!"

"Arrggghh!" Cyngi released the bellow and charged, all reason gone from his mind now in his anger. He lifted his rifle, forgetting its design and prepared to smash the young prince of the Lycavorians to death with it.

Andro had no intention of slugging it out with the much larger and stronger Unsaar. It was a battle he would not win and he didn't have the time. He lifted his hand in a blink and sent a baseball sized burst of PK power ripping outward. The ball of bluish energy struck Cyngi over the joint of his right leg like the force of a sledgehammer blow. The leg buckled inward and snapped in two, the lower bones tearing through Cyngi's hard reptilian skin. The Unsaar screamed in agony as he went down, his hands releasing the rifle to try and break his fall. He never saw the Shi Viska come speeding out of the distance and shoot by his falling body. His mind could not register this fact because he was smashing into the hard deck with no arms to stop his fall. The Shi Viska had removed both his limbs from just above the elbow down and went speeding off once more. His cheekbone shattered as it hit the deck, his full weight behind the fall and pain became Cyngi's constant companion then. Andro moved quickly as his Shi Viska returned to his arm and vanished into Flatspace. He got behind him as Cyngi tried to use the stumps of his arms to lift himself off the deck, pain the only thing throbbing in his mind now. Andro bent over and grasped his large head in his hands and leaned over close to the Unsaar's small ear.

"My father pronounced sentence on you over twenty years ago Unsaar scum!" Andro growled savagely. "For what you did to my tenna Sivana! The life you forced her to live! I will fulfill my father's orders now Cyngi, for Spartan Justice does not know the boundaries of time! Taste that justice now and be an example of what happens when individuals fuck with my family! My father will be pleased when I tell him you have finally passed to the dregs of jorbhe. And my Aunt will finally and forever know peace from your betrayal and attempted murder of her!”

Cyngi’s eyes were glazing over now as his blood was spilling onto the deck in copious amounts, but those eyes grew a little wider when he heard Andro’s words through the fog of pain. They registered a small flash and then he saw a glowing psychic knife explode from the right clenched fist in front of his eyes. The glimmering armored hand confused him for a moment, the psychic knife appearing unreal. And then all thought process died as Andro plunged that psychic knife into Cyngi’s skull just in front of his right ear. His azure eyes flared even brighter and he severed every nerve ending that connected Cyngi’s brain with his body instantly. Just before he twisted his fist and solidified the psychic knife within the confines of the Unsaar’s head. Cyngi’s one good leg twitched madly for several seconds and then was still. Andro wrapped his arm tighter around the head and twisted viciously with all of his enormous wolf strength just as hard and savagely as he could. The killing movement snapped every single bone in the Unsaar’s neck and spine and twisted his head nearly ninety degrees to the side before Andro slammed his face down into the deck and stood up. He turned quickly, his eyes glowing ever brighter and he lifted his hands calling upon the PK power within his body.

Elynth and Sadi were the first to feel it and her obsidian scaled head turned from where she was spraying a group of mercenaries and Sadi’s jungle green eyes grew wider from inside the STRIKER, Caliria held tightly to her body as they witnessed the event.

Denali and Jomann had worked their way to the side until they were fighting next to each other when they felt it. Denali turned his head quickly seeing his brother rise to his feet and those azure eyes blazing even from thirty meters away.

“Fuck! Time to go!” He screamed out, shifting instantly to his wolf form and sprinting for the STRIKER in a split second.

Jomann was following a heartbeat later, shifting instantly to the dark blond wolf who almost rivaled Denali in size.

Aradace! To the STRIKER! Now! Elynth screamed out to her sister in Mindvoice.

There was no hesitation in either of their actions and within a second two enormous dragons were chasing the two large wolves as they sprinted for the STRIKER, swatting aside any mercenary or piece of broken equipment that was in their way.

Unleash the Sirogus rie Jorbhe! And burn the vileness clean!

That is what his Tenna Deia had told him to do, and that is exactly what he was going to do. Here and now. And into the future if need be.

With a howl unlike anything anyone had heard before Andro thrust out his arms and unleashed a wave of PK power that hurtled outward in overwhelming form. Mercenaries who still lived were tossed carelessly into the air like stuffed animals as the domination in that wave shattered bones and crushed organs. To many of the mercenaries it was as they had been hit by the concussive force of a fusion explosion going off next to them. Small pieces of burning equipment were tossed through the air adding to the maelstrom that was occurring, and when the wave of bluish power finally swept over the smoking battleground in the landing bay, no living thing was still standing. Andro gazed upon the devastation they had wrought for only a second before shifting back into wolf form and sprinting for the STRIKER.

It was time to leave this place before it joined its owner in jorbhe and the vileness was burned clean.

Devra and Ardan were speechless at what they had just witnessed; all of the Vanari were actually, though the Lycavorians hesitated for only a few seconds before beginning to act once more. The ranks of the armored Durcunusaan soldiers parted quickly as first Deneth, and then Majeir and Thaura and finally Anthar rushed past them and moved for the four harnesses built especially for dragons on either side of the ship. Half a dozen of the RD team broke from the wall they had formed and began to help them secure themselves in the harnesses. They could feel the engines in the ship gaining power as Arrarn’s voice filled the internal ship COM.

“Time to leave people! Get everyone secure!” Arrarn ordered.

Sadi took command effortlessly. “Bren!” She waited until his armored head turned to look at her. “Have the Durcunusaan insure the Vanari females are secure and calm in their seats! We are leaving!” She barked clinging tightly to Caliria’s hand.

Bren didn't hesitate and patted the Durcunusaan troop close to him as they began to peel back from the ramp and move into the ship. Denali and Jomann skidded to halts, their clawed talons clicking on the steel deck just before they shifted back and turned to watch as the black wolf deftly maneuvered through the bodies and wreckage at amazing speed, moving back towards them and dancing among the rubble and the bodies.

"Aradace! Elynth! Get on the STRIKER!" Denali barked as the two dragons rumbled up next.

Andro? Elynth questioned.

Right behind you sister! His voice answered causing her to turn her head and see his imposing wolf body only thirty meters away as he sprang over the shattered remains of several loading cranes.

Elynth nodded her head without pause and maneuvered her bulk up the ramp as Sadi and Eliani came closer to the bottom. The STRIKER Mark II was designed to carry only four dragons, and while the engines could easily accommodate for the additional metric tons that Elynth and Aradace added, there was no place to secure them. Elynth moved immediately off to the side and settled to the deck in front of Anthar. His front talons draped over the saddle she wore, adding some of his own weight to keep her stationary and he dipped his head next to hers, using his snout to caress the back of her head and neck. Tharua used her own talons to help add additional weight to Elynth while Deneth and Majeir did the same for Aradace on the opposite side of the ship.

Denali and Jomann were the last ones not yet on the ramp as Eliani and Sadi moved closer while Ne'Veha and the others guided Caliria toward seats. Jomann saw him first and was the one to react with reflexes enhanced by his new powers. The Kochab mercenary, bloodied and missing his weapon made one last desperate attempt to kill the Lycavorian Prince before he died. He leaped from the side just as Andro skidded to a halt at the rear of the STRIKER. He did not come even close. The metal club he was intending to smash into Andro's head skittered from his grip as he was coming down from his leap for he had come to an abrupt halt only inches from the ground. The shock of the instant cessation of his forward movement was only overridden by the feel of the large hand that was now clamped around his throat and held him suspended a good half a meter off the deck. Jomann's armored hand tighten as the bluish PK power swirled around his body and Eliani looked on from the ramp with something akin to total adoration in her eyes.

"Going somewhere Kochab scum!" Jomann snarled.

He exerted only slightly more strength and then rammed the Kochab mercenary to the deck with all of his power. The sound was not pleasant but was quickly dismissed as Andro shifted back to human form and looked at his captain while Sadi moved up to him and wrapped her arms around his waist.

"If you are finished toying with them Jomann..." Andro spoke with a smile. "We need to leave."

Jomann returned to his feet and looked at Andro with a lopsided grin. "I am done now." He stated moving back and stepping onto the ramp with Denali and Sadi.

"Three minutes twenty-two seconds my love." Sadi told him.

Andro nodded. "We will be long gone by then KertaGai." He stated. "And we will have burned the vileness clean. Or at least gotten a good start at it."

Sadi punched the panel near the ramp, not releasing his hand. "Arrarn! We are all aboard! Take us out of here!"

"Jeez! It's about time!" Arrarn snapped. "Toria... thrusters! We have a bomb to beat!"

Andro turned as the ship began to rise and the ramp began to come up. As they cleared the landing bay doors the bluish energy that had surrounded Andro's body began to fade away slowly and his emotions began to subside.

"Forgive me grandfather." He whispered softly so that he thought no one would hear him. "Forgive me for the innocents that may still be here and whose blood will forever be on my hands."

"Our hands fervon." Denali spoke in a similar whisper moving up next to his brother. "You do not stand alone."

"Never alone." Jomann followed suit as he stepped up next to him.

"We must insure that those who are innocent... that those we left behind... we must insure that their memory is served properly." Andro spoke.

"And we will." Jomann spoke. "And we will."

ULU ARIZONA

Miranda sat silently in her command chair as the last of the Icalro Alliance Command station broke apart into thousands of pieces under the continuous battering of superior weapons and missiles. The wreckage in this system would drift for months, making it hazardous to any ship not a cruiser or larger to pass through it.

“Admiral... Commander Janon reports all Icalro Alliance ships destroyed.” The elven female spoke from her COM station. “He reports that several corvettes escaped, but per your orders they did not pursue.”

Miranda nodded her head slowly. “The station?”

“Nothing larger than a sleep chamber remains.” E'dira spoke up now, her amber eyes never leaving her tactical screens.

“Status of the facilities on the surface E'dira?” Miranda followed up that question with another.

“Colonel Randall made three passes with his fighter wing Admiral.” E'dira answered her formally. “He reports that nothing remains. The first volley from the Type One Batteries obliterated the headquarters and surrounding estate. The follow on shots only reinforced the destruction.”

“Collateral damage?” Miranda asked turning to look at her.

“It appears the leaders of the Icalro Alliance did not believe in living among the people they governed Miranda.” E'dira replied less formally this time. “Their ruling estate was large and well defended, but they allowed nothing of a civilian nature within ten kilometers of their territory it seems. Unless there were civilians within the estate grounds itself, the attack would have removed their entire command and governmental institution in one fell swoop. Based on over flights and sensor scans, nothing remains.”

Miranda nodded. “As was the purpose.” She stated as she got to her feet slowly. “Ground team status?”

“Enroute back as we speak.” E'dira replied quickly. “All data and intelligence from their encrypted computer cores has been collected. They suffered no casualties.”

“Very well! Excellent work people.” She called out. “Give me an active sensor sweep of the system, and then let's pull our teeth in. Once all craft are recovered inform the Attack Wing to reengage their Shrouds and form on the ARIZONA. It's time to go home. We have bigger issues coming in the future that we need to prepare for.”

E'dira nodded. “Yes we do.”

“COM officer... initiate Crimson Storm Security Protocols and get me Androcles on the COM.” Miranda declared. “Patch it to my Ready Room when it comes through. They should be just about done on Ontahe and we need to find out if he wants us to continue to Hadaria with him.”

“You don't actually think he will go there do you Miranda?” E'dira asked as Zaala moved over from her engineering station.

“They have over a thousand ships in the Hadarian system.” Zaala spoke now. “It's no wonder they requested the meeting there. They will undoubtedly try to kill him again. He can not possibly think they are trustworthy.”

Miranda nodded. “I don't doubt they would try something like that.” She said looking at E'dira.

“Trusting anything that they tell us now would be stupid.” E'dira spat.

Miranda grinned slightly and looked at her. “Do I detect a slight prejudice against them Mistress?” She asked softly. It was really pointless to try and keep their relationship secret. The entire ship pretty much had already figured it out. If that was the case Miranda was not going to be coy about how she felt for her Drow Mistress.

“They have butchered countless Drow in the last weeks Miranda.” E'dira answered her. “The numbers are still coming in from the different outposts. Some of them... most of the female Drow were brutally raped before they were massacred. Yes... I find myself being prejudice.”

Miranda and Zaala nodded their heads in agreement. “They are elves and members of the Union.” Zaala spoke. “I care not that they were Drow E'dira... they were our people! Our Union citizens!”

E'dira moved closer to the two women, leaving her station for a short time. It appeared Zaala's sister's relationship and love with Queen Aihola had erased any and all prejudice that many elves had for the Drow. E'dira noticed it more and more as she opened up and became part of what they were building on Earth. Old hatreds often died slow and hard, but it seemed that the old prejudices and hate of the Drow were disappearing much faster because of the trust and love that so many Drow had built and continue to build. It would go a long way to ending prejudice against them forever now that Androcles Leonidas had taken a pure born Drow female as his wife and mate and made her wolf. The future was what you made of it and E'dira and many others intended for it to be very bright.

“We’ll discuss all that later.” Miranda spoke. “Senior Officers in the Port Lounge in one hour. I need to contact Andro first and give him a report.”

ONTAHE

They thought it was over.

The Lycavorians were gone. Cyngi was dead. They thought they could take over and rule the mountain base as they saw fit. They even had a Lycavorian MENKLA transport to use as their personal shuttle. The Union MENKLA's were known for speed and comfort as well as being very well armed and shielded. So as the Evolli who had fled the battle began to return, most of them headed right for where the MENKLA rested. They could not imagine their good fortune. The Lycavorians were more concerned with saving the blue skinned females that they left one of their military transports. As they began to wander back in and gaze at the ship, none of them really understood that death was going to reach out and touch them so soon.

Inside the MENKLA's cockpit the counter reached zero and sent out its message of death to the four large crates they had brought with them. Inside each of those crates was the heart of a half-kiloton fusion reactor core. The most explosive part of one of the older drive cores in the Union fleet. As that timer reached zero and the signal went out, each of those cores detonated. Those closest to the blast were instantly vaporized. They felt nothing; saw nothing and heard nothing. They were simply gone.

As Androcles watched from the internal monitor on the STRIKER as they obtained orbit, the entire northern face of the mountain heaved outward and erupted very much like a volcano. Several million metric tons of rock and metal and stone were blown outward from the mountain face leaving an enormous gap in the side of the mountain that could not defy gravity for long. As he reached up and turned the monitor off, the upper three thousand five hundred feet of mountain collapsed downward onto what had once been a very advanced mercenary base. Nothing even remotely living would survive the crushing force of a mountain that once stood nearly twenty thousand feet tall. Future scans would show that it had dropped a total of six thousand meters once it settled, and buried within that rubble and stone mountain were the remains of nearly six hundred mercenary scum and their cohorts.

It was quiet in the STRIKER as Andro turned from the station along the side of the ship and the monitor went dark. Almost every set of eyes were on him as he still had a bluish flame encompassing his body, though it was virtually gone now. His azure eyes quickly found where Caliria was standing with Devra and Sadi and the others and he crossed over to them in four long strides. Devra watched as he stopped in front of her and Caliria turned to look at him. She dropped Sadi's hand and Devra's arm fell from around her waist as she gazed up into his eyes. Such beautiful eyes Caliria thought. Eyes that looked upon her not with shame or horror at what she had been forced to endure... but eyes that gazed upon her with a desire and happiness that made her skin tingle in delight. As Sadi and the others watched with joy and desire in their own eyes Andro reached out and took Caliria's hands in his.

“Allow me to... allow me to introduce myself Inamarno.” He spoke softly. “I am... I am Androcles and I... we... we have been waiting a very long time for you to join us.” He looked at her as he stepped closer. “It is our hope that you...”

Devra gasped in both surprise and outright happiness when Caliria simply jumped into Andro's arms and covered his stammering lips with her own. She couldn't help but laugh at this display from her usually reserved daughter, nor could she deny the heat that kiss was generating between the two of them. Andro's arms closed around her waist, her legs curled up along his side and Caliria surrendered all that she was to this man. Everything she had endured through the years, the ridicule and disdain, even from her own father, all of it had been driving her to this one point in her life. The dreams she had been experiencing these last weeks, getting stronger as the days moved forward, these were the final catalyst to her realizing all she had ever wanted was now hers. As her body pressed and melded to this Lycavorian Prince who held in her his arms Caliria knew this is where her future lay. As she felt Sadi, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and Carisia press close around them Caliria knew she had found her place in this universe.

Ardan stepped up next to Coren who was watching from the small four-step catwalk into the cockpit and engineering station. He turned back to watch as Androcles broke the kiss he was sharing with Caliria and his wives and mates pressed even closer, drawing Devra and Nirilo with them as a family was reunited and then united with another. He turned back to Coren Re Mydala whose face remained impassive throughout it all.

“It is for the best Coren.” Ardan spoke. “You know this. We would never have been able to accomplish this without them. We would never have been able to bring Devra and the others back let alone rescue this many of our females. We did not even know the OSG had extended out this far from Eridiani space.”

“Is it for the best Ardan?” Coren asked softly but without a hint of anger or malice in his voice as he looked at his friend.

“You are not happy even a little that your daughter is free once more?” Ardan asked him. “That we saved so many of our young females and because of what these Lycavorians have done... because of what they have done they will now be able to lead normal and happy lives? Coren... they have given us the means to end the hold the Orionis Syndicate has had over our people!”

Coren met his eyes. “Have they?” He asked softly so that only he could hear him. “Do not get me wrong Ardan... whether you choose to believe it or not I thank the prophets that my daughter is free once more.” He said softly. “She may hate me... but I am happy she is free again.”

“Then what?” Ardan asked him.

“I question what this venture will cost us in the end Ardan.” Coren spoke.

“What do you mean?” Ardan asked him.

“I question what they will demand for this cure of theirs. I question if we have just open the floodgates to so many of our females choosing to find happiness outside of their own race. I question Ardan Vu Lamurrion... I question if we have just traded one form of slavery for another. That is what I question.”

“You didn’t tell me.” Eliani’s voice filled his ears and he turned quickly from securing the ramp’s hydraulic compensators.

Jomann turned and looked at her as she walked up to him. “Tell you what?” He asked.

“You did not tell me what you were capable of!” Eliani spat. She was trying to act angry at him, but it was failing miserably because she desired him so intensely. Watching him as he was in action, the confidence, the power and skill, this had inflamed her desire and passion to heights she had never felt before.

“I didn’t know until today.” Jomann told her, moving closer to her, her willow and peach scent swarming all around him.

“You... you should have told me!” She spat once more barely able to contain the urge to wrap her arms around his shoulders and have him take her right there.

Jomann didn’t hesitate however and leaned over to lift her into his arms. As her face came level with his, Eliani tossed her arms around his broad shoulders and leaned forward to firmly nuzzle his neck and behind his ear with her nose and lips, basking in the feel of his warm skin against hers and burning his delicious jasmine coffee scent into her brain.

“Son vada carians Jomann!” She gasped into his ear. “You... you have to stop this! My blood burns so! I don’t know how much more I can resist!” Eliani felt his aura and power beginning to mingle with hers and the bluish flame that she had seen surrounding him inside the mountain reappeared, though very muted in nature and wrapped her within its embrace just as his aura did.

Eliani had been around many men in her young life, quite a few of whom had hit on her or tried to entice her to choose them. Yet none of them had ever come close to making her feel what she did now, and that was without even sleeping with him. He was so very confident, in himself, in his abilities, but not to the point of arrogance. He was a typical true Alpha Wolf, proud and very intelligent and so dominating in his aura but also reserved and calm. This is what Eliani had balked at throughout her life. Whoever she had chosen to spend time with had always been needy in a way. They had needed her help, or been intimidated by her ability and who she was. Jomann however... he was neither needy nor intimidated by her or her status and that all by itself was nearly enough. Yet it was his dominance that so appealed to her, the true Alpha in him. He could snap his wolf fangs together and put her in her place as he had done in the landing bay of the SCIMITAR when she had stepped over that imaginary line or he could love her until she could take it no more. Eliani had searched for so long to find it and now that she had, she could barely contain her desires.

She had finally found an equal.

Jomann stared into her beautiful eyes as her hands came up to take his face in their grasp. “You... you must tell me something Eliani Leonidas.” He spoke softly looking into her eyes so very deeply. “You must tell me something from within your heart. I do not question what I feel coursing through my blood for you. I need to know... I need to know if I am... if I am what you truly want. Not just the part of you that is wolf but also the part of you that is Hadarian Eliani, because there is not one part of you without the other. And... and I do not want only one part of you. I want all of you.”

His words almost caused her to break into tears. No man that had ever shown interest in her had ever made the distinction of the two different sides to her persona. Even Malic, who Eliani had thought she loved, even Malic had never asked this question. She was two different people, and even though the wolf blood within her was far more dominant, she was still Hadarian as well. A single tear rolled down her cheek as she nodded her head without any hesitation in the least.

“As sure as every breath that I take.” Eliani answered in a whisper.

Jomann’s eyes glittered in the light and he kissed her then. It wasn’t a possessive kiss, but more one of longing and respect and love. It was a kiss that Eliani returned with all that she was for it meant that to her just as deeply. She pulled back and looked at him once more, a small smile turning the corners of her mouth up.

“When I am... when I am done feasting on you... you will not have the strength to look at another female.” She said with a sultry twinkle in her eyes.

Jomann chuckled softly and pulled her tighter. “Why would I need to look at another female when I have perfection in my arms already?” He said. “Though I am curious as to how you will accomplish this task.”

Eliani laughed now as well, wrapping her arms around his shoulders once more and simply basking in the feelings and emotions that swarmed through her because of it. Yes... she was going to feast on him. She was going to feast on him for many millennia to come if she had her way.

And Eliani Leonidas always got her way.

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT

INQUISITOR

HIGH COVEN SECURE SPACE

COREWARD OF SCUTUM-CENTAURUS ARM

“...Sketchy at best.” The High Coven Colonel spoke to Robert Moran’s back. “Our loyal people on Uzu Ozeib 7 say that everything is about to break open completely. There are several power plays within the senior politicians and even some military officers have chosen to come down on sides. Aikiro’s death sent everyone into a tizzy and they are scrambling to keep their hold on what power they have.”

“Yuri is in charge!” Moran spat turning away from the view window. “You make sure those shit sorry fuckers know that! I’ll cut the balls from anyone who attempts to make a play against her!”

“She has been in and out of consciousness for going on three weeks Admiral Moran.” The Colonel spoke. “Even... even some of our own crew are...”

Moran took a deep breath and stepped closer to the table. The Colonel had been with him since he had taken over as Supreme Commander and he had been a trusted and valued aide. “What are they saying Asant Voneri?” He asked. “Speak your mind. We have known each other too long and fought the Kavalians side by side too many times for you to hold back from me now.”

The Colonel looked up and down the table at the other senior officers. Many of them had come to this meeting in secret, their ships arriving over the last three days to this very secret and secure area of High Coven space. They were perhaps the most senior and most loyal of the High Coven officers that supported Aikiro and by default would now support Yuri as her successor.

“Her injuries were severe Robert.” Asant spoke softly. “Aikiro is dead... Admiral Tesand as well. You own son too! People are beginning to wonder why we provoked the Lycavorians as we did. Many... many of them are thoroughly disgusted and horrified with how the daughter of Leonidas was treated. Raped and beaten by your two sons and their friends Robert? Some of them are even beginning to question you for allowing this to happen.” He questioned looking at the man. “Yes... we are enemies... but even we do not treat helpless prisoners like that.”

Moran shook his head and moved to his chair. “That was Aikiro’s decision. Even Yuri did not agree with it at first. It was done because it was the only way to get the information we needed from her head. Breaking down her Mindvoice shields in this way was the only choice. She would never have given us the information otherwise.”

“Many of us... many of us think it was the wrong way to go about it.” Asant said. “It only makes us no better than the Kavalian fuckers we are fighting now.”

“What you think does not matter! It worked didn’t it?” Dante Moran snarled from the chair he sat in. “And it was a decision my grandmother made. She was Empress!”

Moran looked at his son. Since escaping Earth Dante seemed more on edge, more prone to getting angry. Perhaps it was because he had witnessed his own sister kill their brother in a particularly vile way, but whatever the reason, his son had changed.

“Yes it worked.” Asant growled back. “And now your brother and the Empress are dead! And we have tossed away twenty plus years of relative peace with the Lycavorians because of it!”

“So what?” Dante barked. “They are nothing more than animals!”

Asant nodded his head. “Perhaps to you Prince Dante... but while they may be animals to you... we have never been able to conquer them in all the years we have fought them. And now we have given them reason to hate us even more than many of them already did. And make no mistake... they do hate us. You and your brother Javier violated one of the laws they hold most sacrosanct. The crime you committed will now reflect on everything we do in the future!”

“We have the information that grandmother wanted!” Dante snapped loudly. “The overall mission was a success! And that is how she would have seen it! You should mind your place Colonel!”

Asant flipped a data pad across the table at him watching as it slide to a stop in front of Dante. “She is dead because she chose to conduct the mission in a non-military fashion Prince Dante! She let her emotions decide her course of action. Her hatred for the Lycavorians and Leonidas was her downfall.” Asant growled angrily. “And you do not frighten me young man! I was fighting these Lycavorians before your father was even conceived and I will swat you down like an insect if need be! You are too young to understand why what you and your brother did is the worse possible thing that we could have done! The very manner in which the mission was executed was foul beyond description and many of us agree with that! And none of the most senior officers were consulted before this decision was made I might add! Men and women who have supported the Empress for millennia and sit here now!”

“My grandmother did not have to consult you for anything Colonel!” Dante snarled back. “You would do best to remember that! We succeeded or did you forget that. Both parts of the mission succeeded!”

“And she is now dead as I said because she didn’t consult us and get our advice!” Asant snarled right back. “And according to that pad there... you will not be far behind if Androcles Leonidas has his way!”

Moran leaned forward now at his words. “Asant? What are you talking about?”

Asant turned back to look at him. “We still have two or three assets on Earth and perhaps a dozen more across the entire Union. The mixed results of this foul mission and the Kavalian attacks against the Leonidas family... the killing of Martin Leonidas... then the attempts made against his children and his wives being targeted and kidnapped... it has made many of those who may have helped us in the future... it has caused them to turn their backs on us in a heartbeat.” He answered.

“Perhaps they are not as invulnerable as you believe colonel.” Dante spoke quickly. “A bunch of Kavalian animals did this. They killed the Leonidas swine... the one who raped my mother. And they did it with relative ease!”

“Martin Leonidas did not rape your mother Dante Moran...” Asant spoke to him in a cold and calculating voice. “It was his brother Pleistarchus. If you would actually read reports that are given to you perhaps you would not still cling to falsehoods and these perceived wrong doings. And every Kavalian that took part in that mission is now dead! Dead! The general populous helped to kill them! Civilians helped to kill them! Fighting in the streets alongside the Durcunusaan! I would say that is not so successful as you might believe!”

Dante turned to his father. “We secured the data from the Mindvoice ship father!” Dante spoke. “Even now our scientists are beginning to work so that we can use that technology against our enemies!”

“We did not retrieve all of the data Dante.” Moran spoke correcting his son. Moran was very quickly growing upset with his son’s continued disrespect to men and women who were his superiors and his betters. This is not how he had raised Dante to act and he was beginning to worry if perhaps Dante was suffering from some sort of mental and emotional trauma that had occurred on Earth after witnessing what he had. “The team escaped with barely a third of the technology that we were seeking from the ship. And they also failed to return with one of the Avatars to facilitate helping to implement this technology.”

“But it was the important parts they retrieved!” Dante protested his father’s statement. “They got weapons and propulsion systems technology! Surely that means something.”

Moran looked at his son. “Yes they did and in the process we lost one of our most senior Deep Strike Covert Teams Dante. They were decimated and only two survived. Two out of twenty! We have had better odds fighting the Kavalians.”

“All of their Internal Security Apparatus has gone to its highest level.” Asant spoke once more. “Androcles Leonidas has instituted many security changes that his father would never have considered.”

“Like what?” Moran asked.

“Personal scanners at all spaceports. A thorough review of all current high-level officers within the military and their Krypteria. They have gone to Biometric security measures now as well. No one gets near the private villa of Androcles, his father’s villa in Sparta or any sensitive military installation without matching a biometric scan from several different locations. Some of which are hidden.” Asant answered. “The people are accepting it... hell... they are clamoring for more to be done. We have miscalculated the loyalty and respect the family has among the many people of the Union again. You know that sir.”

Robert nodded. “Yes.”

“That report came in two days ago.” Asant spoke. “It lists some of the measures taken and some of the orders he has instituted since stepping in for his father. This is not Martin Leonidas we are talking about.” Asant said turning to look at Dante. “This is not a man who had to discover who and what he was nearly three thousand years after he was born. The son has been indoctrinated in the Lycavorian Spartan way of life since he was born. He has embraced it, lived it wholeheartedly if all the Netnews intercepts are accurate. And on top of that comes the enormous power being bonded to a dragon brings to him. None of us ever saw that coming once the original Leonidas was killed over three thousand years ago.” He mumbled shaking his head. “And to prove that he is serious...” Asant came to his feet. “For your actions and what you took part in with his sister, there is now a standing bounty on your head Dante Moran. A bounty of one billion Lycavorian Riyal!”

Moran’s eyes grew wide. “A billion riyal!” He gasped.

Asant nodded turning back to him. “Apparently the young Prince will cash in his entire inheritance and whatever else of personal value he has to the person that brings him you. And brings you to him alive. If he does not find you first that is. If you leave High Coven space from this day forward there is no guarantee you will ever return. Hell... given the circumstances now happening... that many credits does not guarantee your safety within High Coven space.”

This news seemed to quiet Dante, as he said nothing now.

“There is also a substantial reward for any information leading to the capture of Princess Yuri.” Asant spoke looking at Moran.

“How substantial?” Moran asked.

“Half of what is being offered for your son.” Asant replied.

“Fuck!” Moran gasped.

“Robert... many of us are beginning to believe that we should have approached this differently.” Asant said. “Our war with the Kavalians has changed us. We are beginning to resort to the same methods that the damn Kavalians use against us. The Empress and even Princess Yuri were becoming far more ruthless than they ever were before. Over twenty years and the Lycavorians went out of their way to avoid conflict with us. It is confirmed through some of our different sources that many of them actually hoped the Peace Accords to be a true thing. Then we go and do this.” Asant shook his head. “With the Lycavorian Union on our side there are some of us in the military who believe that with them fighting with us we could have ended this Kavalian threat many years ago.”

“What you speak is treason!” Dante barked jumping to his feet.

“What he speaks is logical boy! Now sit back now and be silent!” Another officer spoke now. He was an older man, and he wore the uniform of a High Coven senior Admiral and spoke with the tone in his voice of one not to be trifled with. “The Empress has known for some time that there are many of us who feel this way.”

Moran looked at the man. “Admiral Nelul?”

The man turned and looked at him. “According to the information we have the Kavalians are pushing hard at the Union. Intercepted Union Netnews broadcasts say they are holding one of the elven Queens prisoner for some purpose. The last one... For'mya I believe her name to be. There is much speculation as to why they are holding her but the fact is no one knows what they are doing. Leonidas is dead yes... his child Queen as well... but there is no word on the Hadarian Queen, and only bits and pieces on the first elven Queen Dysea and then Isabella. We know most of their children survived but his mother and the younger ones have not been seen in weeks. Our people are reasonably sure they have left Earth. There are also reports, rumors really, of a large-scale battle in The Wilds. Two of them actually... one that we are only just now getting information on.”

Asant held out the pad to Moran now. “Two hours ago we received word from several of our assets in The Wilds. The rumors are rampant and no one seems to know exactly what has happened, but the Icalro Alliance no longer exists.”

Moran took the pad. “What do you mean?”

“I mean they are gone. Someone has destroyed their entire command structure and their fledging political system.” Asant answered him. “If we are to believe the rumors, their entire government, if you wish to call it that, it is gone. Eliminated. With the defection of General Esavorna and many of his top people the Venorik Elghinn has been severely hampered. They are scrambling to find their way and cannot be counted on right now for accurate intelligence. What Intel we are receiving is from broadcasts from civilian sources... but they are all saying the same thing.”

“The Lycavorians?” Moran asked surprised.

Asant nodded. “Many of the reports are saying it was the Lycavorians but there is no way to be sure. The attack was devastating according to these broadcasts.” He replied.

“What does the Icalro alliance have to do with us?” Dante snapped. “Why do we care what happen to them?”

“We care Prince Dante... we care because these same reports speak of phantom ships and immensely powerful weapons.” Nelul spoke again. “This would indicate... if true... this would indicate that the Lycavorians have already fielded ships and weapons based on the technology they have obtained from their Mindvoice ship. The one taken from Lycavore.”

“You think an attack is coming?” Moran asked.

“Androcles Leonidas would never attack us!” Dante snapped. “He is nothing!”

Nelul looked at him. “He killed your brother; very nearly killed you and your dragon, and he severely injured your mother Dante Moran. And he did this alone. I would not exactly call that nothing. He is the Crown Prince and the natural order of succession for the Lycavorians means he will become King. This does not bode well for us no matter how you boil it down, particularly so considering that three of his wives and mates have reason to hate us as well.”

Moran nodded as he got to his feet. “Especially the Drow.” He said softly. “We did not treat them well at all when Yuri ruled on Earth.”

“Our actions are beginning to fracture our people as more and more discover why and how Aikiro was killed.” Nelul spoke evenly as he ventured into territory that no military officer would have ever gone if Aikiro was alive. “We have enough problems fighting the Kavalians and many of our people believed the trip to Earth, the false Peace Accord... many believed that was signaling a new day. That it is now coming out it was nothing more than a ruse to cover our real intentions is not sitting well with some.”

Moran turned quickly and glared at him. “You are suggesting we become allies with them!” He barked.

Nelul shook his head. “I despise them just as much as many my age Admiral Moran.” He answered. “We have seen the horrors they have inflicted on our people through the millennia. Granted... we brought it upon ourselves in many ways... but we have seen it. The younger, more liberal if you will generations of our people, they see how the Union accepts vampires into their ranks. They are a trusted and respected branch of the Union. Many of them hold high positions within their military and government. A pureblood is even Queen.

That is what the younger generation sees. I doubt the Lycavorians would entertain any sort of peace treaty now... but this is what is happening.”

“Can our people on the homeworld hold power?” Moran asked.

Nelul nodded. “We are fairly certain they can yes. But we will need to do something soon to insure it remains this way.” He said. “And our doctors need to find out what is wrong with the Princess. She is the key. Aikiro’s bloodline. You may be her husband sir... but your are not pureblood... and only she will be able to rally those older and more established purebloods to strengthen our support.”

Moran nodded. “I figured as much which is why we will be heading back by the end of tomorrow.” He stated. “I’ve already ordered that work begin on developing this new technology and incorporating it into our current ships and systems. The main facility near Pelatus has begun work and I’ve ordered three other secret shipyards and research facilities involved as well. They tell me they can have something within six months.”

Nelul nodded. “Just before the Kavalians finish their clones.” He said. “We will need it then for surely they will come in the hopes of finishing us off.”

Moran returned to his chair and looked at the men at the table. “All of you are the senior officers loyal to Aikiro and Yuri.” He stated. “You all know me... what I stand for. I suggest we begin to formulate plans in case we need to act sooner than we expected. Whatever has taken place in the past... we need to move quickly into the future now.”

They all turned when the door to the conference room opened and the junior Lieutenant rushed in.

“Supreme Commander Moran!” He stammered. “Sir... you will... you will want to see this! It’s being broadcast across all of High Coven space. We are unable to jam the transmission using any means we have!”

Moran nodded. “Let’s see it!”

“... The same as she was yesterday.” The deep older voice spoke, causing Pa'cour to turn from where he stood at the foot of the bed. His arms were folded across his broad chest and his face was unreadable as it always was.

The INQUISITOR’s medical bay was one of the finest of any shipboard medical clinics in the fleet and this doctor, while not military, had been treating Princess Yuri since she was only thirteen years year old. Nalavi Vicele was very well respected and very well known for his outspoken views and his mannerisms; some of which rubbed his fellow purebloods the wrong way no matter what he did. He was given quite a bit of latitude in how he did things because he was such a skilled doctor and surgeon.

“Yes... I can see that doctor.” Pa'cour answered. “Her scars... they have not faded as you said they might.”

Nalavi moved up next to the bed and looked at the cruel scars that dotted the smooth skin on Yuri’s otherwise flawless neck and throat. Four jagged looking tears where Androcles’s fangs had sunk into her neck and began to rip outward. Her shoulder and chest also bore the scars of his wickedly powerful paw and where he had raked that paw down her front as he bit into her throat. There were also three lesser scars that streaked her right cheek and were three inches long. They started just below her eyes and down past her jaw. They were the result of another swipe of his paws that nearly cleaved her head from her shoulders.

“They will fade more in time but I fear only a Hadarian could remove them completely now.” Nalavi spoke softly. “She was foolish to face off against a Leonidas by herself. She knew that a pureblood Lycavorian is too powerful, even for her. Especially those of the Leonidas family.”

“She was trying to protect her children.” Pa'cour spoke softly. “It was... it was foolish yes... but it was also very admirable of her.”

Nalavi looked at him his dark eyes filled with questions. “You know Colonel... I have been treating vampires for the better part of ten thousand years now. Yuri’s injuries were some of the most severe I’ve ever seen one survive. Most vampires would have died without a massive infusion of blood within seconds of these injuries occurring.”

“What are you saying?” Pa'cour asked him.

“Do not play coy with me Immortal.” Nalavi spoke sternly. “No vampire or Immortal carries enough blood with them on missions to repair the damage that was done to her before returning to this ship.”

“She obviously did.” Pa'cour spoke. “She is remarkably strong willed and...”

“Why does she whisper your name in the middle of the night Pa'cour?” Nalavi asked as he moved from the side of the bed to stand next to him.

“What?” Pa'cour gasped.

Nalavi nodded his head. “Four times that I have heard myself.” He told him. “Half a dozen other times that my staff has told me about. Not her mother’s name... not the Admiral’s name... but yours. Why is that?”

Pa'cour turned back to look at her sleeping on the bed. “I do not know.” He stated softly.

“I think you do.” Nalavi said. “The medic who treated you when you returned with her. He said your injury looked as if someone had bitten you but didn’t seal the wound properly. Now I saw you briefly when you first returned and I know what I saw. No Lycavorian bit you Pa'cour. Your whole shoulder would have been shredded if that was the case.”

Pa'cour turned back to him. “What are you getting at doctor?”

“There is only one way she could have lasted long enough for you to get her to the ship.” Nalavi spoke. “Somehow you got her to feed on you Pa'cour... and not only feed on you... but take enough of your blood to heal her wounds, at least the major internal ones, and damn near kill you in the process.” Nalavi spoke. “Only she forgot to seal the wound in her dazed state and you were still bleeding when you got her back here.”

Pa'cour forced a smile and chuckle. “Doctor... that is... that is insane.” He said.

“Is it now?” Nalavi said.

“Princess Yuri would never have taken the blood of an Immortal.” Pa'cour spoke. “Even if it meant it would save her life. It is a crime for purebloods to do this.”

Nalavi snorted. “I’ve been her doctor since she was thirteen years old Pa'cour. I know her almost better than she knows herself. Over three millennia and I think I know something of her mindset Colonel.” He said. “I know she would have if you offered. Now how did you get her to do it? You are the only Immortal that she trusts enough to violate that law Pa'cour. How did you get her to do it?”

“Trusts?” Pa'cour said. “She trusts no one.”

“Contrary to what you may believe Colonel.” Nalavi spoke. “She trusts you implicitly. To be honest... I think you are the only one she truly does trust.”

“You... you jest doctor. She trusts Admiral Moran completely for he is her Blessed Husband.” Pa'cour said. “I am not foolish enough to admit to such a thing knowing it goes against the law of the purebloods. I will never betray her!”

Nalavi stared at him for a long moment. “Moran?” He finally said. “Ah... Yuri no more trusts him than she does her own mother!”

“What?” Pa'cour gasped.

“She learned one thing from her father Pa'cour. One thing more than anything else. Trust very few with who you really are... and then only those who risk everything to safeguard you. You saved her life what... twice on Lycavore and then once more while she carried Javier. Where was her precious husband then?” Nalavi shook his head. “You have been here every day since you brought her back Pa'cour.” He stated. “You saved her life and you have been here every day since then until my staff runs you off at night. Then you return during the day and remain with her. Why is that?”

“I am her Immortal Guard.” He stated quickly. Too quickly. “It is my... it is my duty.”

“Your duties as her Immortal Guard do not extend to reading to her when you think no one is watching or monitoring her presence.” Nalavi said. “Your duties do not include giving her updated intelligence reports every day when you think no one is watching even though she may or may not hear you. And your duties do not extend to making her as comfortable as possible when you think no one is watching Colonel, or holding her hand when she has one of her thrashing incidents.”

“You do not know of what you speak.” Pa'cour snarled at him.

“Do not bark at me boy!” Nalavi snarled back at him without fear. “You may have close to seven thousand years of life but I am over twelve thousand years old and I do not fear you! I am not your enemy Colonel... and I can see quite plainly that your feelings for Yuri extend well beyond the realm of her Immortal Guard Captain.”

“You... you are mistaken.” Pa'cour stated.

“Am I?” Nalavi asked. “Do you know how many times Moran has been down to see her Colonel? Twice. Do you know how many times her own son has been here to see her? Once.” He moved back up to the side of the bed. "I have never liked Moran to be honest. What she ever saw in him is beyond me. He isn't a pureblood... hell... he isn't even a naturally born human. He is a genetic creation. And no matter what she thinks... he has used her to gain what he has now."

"The Admiral is a skilled warrior doctor." Pa'cour said.

"Oh... I'm not saying he isn't skilled. I'm saying if not for Yuri he would never have had the chance to prove that. He would be dead." Nalavi said. "Veldruk would have killed him the moment he returned if not for Cha'talla. And Yuri's obvious feelings for him."

"Why has he not come down to see her more?" Pa'cour stated. "She is his Blessed Wife."

Nalavi met his eyes. "Moran is more concerned with holding onto his power." Nalavi said. "The first thing he asked me when he saw her... will I be able to heal the scars? He grunted something in response when I told him she would need more than I am able to give in regards to that and then he left moments later. He came down two days ago, watched her for several minutes and then left once more. He is nothing if not a creature of material wants. He wanted Yuri's beauty to be his... and in his eyes she is no longer beautiful. I saw it in his face and in his eyes. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if he is already lining up some young officer to fuck on the side."

"That is not true!" Pa'cour snapped unable to hold back his anger at such treatment. "She is..." He stopped talking and looked at Nalavi with wide eyes.

Nalavi shook his head slowly. "Physically she is fully recovered and should be awake. Something else is keeping her from regaining consciousness except for the few times she has been lucid and then slipped back under."

Pa'cour looked at him. "What could do this?"

Nalavi shrugged his shoulders. "I'm sure you've noticed she has become darker over the last decade or so. Harsher... more prone to fits of anger?"

Pa'cour nodded. "Yes. I thought it was due to the stresses of the war with the Kavalians." He said.

Nalavi shook his head. "I don't think so." He stated. "I think it is something else but I don't know what." He looked at Pa'cour. "Taking as much blood as she did from you will create a subconscious connection within Mindvoice Pa'cour. You know this."

Pa'cour nodded. "Yes... but I have sensed nothing like this. Would I not know if this was the case?"

Nalavi shook his head. "Possibly but I doubt it. You have had no Mindvoice training and the natural Mindvoice shielding of your people has never been fully understood." He looked at him. "How much did she take Pa'cour?"

Pa'cour met his eyes and was quiet for a long moment on whether he could trust this man. "I had to take nearly two liters when I returned to the ship." He said finally. "Given how my body regenerates, I estimate she took nearly two and a half liters before she was sated enough that I could pull her off me. She did not forget to seal the wound doctor; I removed her before she could. I... taking my blood is one thing, but having her seal the wound after she is done is not something I could allow her to do. It would imply something that is not there."

"Xsa!" Nalavi gasped. "She took nearly half your blood? Pa'cour... you know what that will do don't you?"

Pa'cour nodded. "I will deal with the consequences when she wakes. I fully expect her to have me executed."

"How did you...?" Nalavi asked.

"Does it matter?" Pa'cour asked.

Nalavi shook his head quickly. "No... not really. But you... you know what her skills are Pa'cour. You know she will be able to see all your memories. All of them. Including how you feel for her."

"What do you know of how I feel for her?" Pa'cour asked. "You are a pureblood and you will report me regardless of what I tell you."

"I may be a pureblood Pa'cour but I do not come from that same arrogant mold as many purebloods." Nalavi answered. "Hell... the non-purebloods are very close to making up the majority of our citizens now! All I care about is Yuri. The medic who treated you brought this to me. He said we should let Moran know and he kept pressing me on this until I arranged his death seven days ago because he was going to tell him regardless of what I told him."

"Why?" Pa'cour looked at him as he asked. "Why would you do this?"

“I’ve watched her grow Pa'cour. I’ve watched her grow from a small child into what she is now and I am not happy with how things have gone for the last decade and a half. She is a changed person now.” He stated. “Changed from the young, idealistic Yuri that went to the Academy and then on to Earth to try and fix all Xerxes had fucked up! If you ask me, Moran is the worse possible thing that she needs in her life. The man is power hungry and always has been. I’m sure he loves her in his own twisted way... but that is not what she needs.”

“What do you believe she needs doctor?” Pa'cour asked.

“She needs someone to be there for her.” Nalavi answered him. “Someone who does not want something from her. Don’t get me wrong Colonel... she can be a bitch when she wants to be... and very violent if need be... but she used to believe in something greater than what she has now. Until she discovered her father had Xerxes rape her on his orders. He was using her... trying to shape her into something she was not. Having her own brother abuse her was part of how he did it. Veldruk was no better than Aikiro in my opinion... they both used Yuri for their own purposes. Everyone but you.” He said watching, as Pa'cour’s eyes grew a little wider at this pronouncement. “You never wanted anything from her and she told me that a few times through these last years. That is why I can tell you she trusted you more than anyone in her life. You never wanted anything from her.”

Pa'cour turned back to look at her on the bed. “That... that is not entirely true Doctor but it will not matter now.” He stated softly. “As I said... she will have me executed when she wakes for what I have done, but I am willing to accept this as long as she lives on. That is all that matters now.”

“You...”

“Doctor Vicele!” The young assistant barked from the nearby terminal. “Doctor you need to see this!”

“What is so important Lieutenant?” Nalavi asked frustrated at the interruption.

“Sir... there is an announcement happening across all of High Coven space.” The man spoke. “You need to see this. You too Colonel!”

“I have no desire to leave the side of Princess Yuri.” Pa'cour spoke.

“You’ll want to see this sir!” The man retorted. “It’s from Cha’talla!”

“... Much I would like to say but because of time constraints I can not. Look upon me my fellow Immortals! My fellow AkruXian! My appearance is not a mistake or some trick of the light and transmission. This is who we are... who we were before the High Lord Veldruk took it upon himself to conquer our world. This skin you see on me... on my sons... this is our true skin.” Cha'talla's face was animate in the transmission, his dark eyes bright and alert. “The High Coven has misled us, betrayed us for millennia while we did their bidding. How I looked before, how many of you look now, it is not some disease or deformity. It is the result of genetic tampering by the High Lord and the Empress Aikiro! This is our true appearance!”

“They used us my AkruXian brothers and sisters! They have used us for millennia all the while knowing that they did this to us! I know this to be true and I have the proof!” Moran was watching with Asant and the other officers in the huge conference room, the transmission up on the entire wall section behind the table. “Twenty-seven years ago I was saved! Twenty-seven years ago I was given a second chance. I will tell you now what many of you do not know. I was trying to make things better for our people and the High Lord became aware of this. He killed me that day... or he thought he did. He ordered my entire family butchered. My AkruXian Immortal woman... all but one of my children. My brothers and sisters and nieces and nephews. All but one of them died because of me. Because of my desire to make our people better. I was saved that day... saved by the very pureblood vampire you see next to me. I made her my Du'used 'ranndi not long after that and I have not looked back since.” Those watching saw the dark haired pureblood female stretch up on her tip toes and whisper something into Cha'talla's ear before dropping back to the balls of her feet and placing her hand on his abdomen as she pressed closer to him.

Cha'talla was smiling they could all see as he spoke again. “Esther has reminded me that it was she who had to beat me to get me to see this.” He glanced at his wife and kissed her head quickly. “She is right. Esther Suira is now my Blessed Wife and she has bore me four strong and proud sons to raise along with my surviving son Fash'ka. We will have daughters one day too! She is now Matriarch to our tribe! Look at them..." Cha'talla motioned with his hand to the side where Tir'ut and Lynom stood. "My two oldest sons behind Fash'ka... they have half elf and half Lycavorian Blessed Wives. All of you must know Normya Leonidas... daughter to King Leonidas and sister to Androcles and she is now Tir'ut's wife with the blessings of her family and their First Oracle! Our families are now joined for all time. My son Lynom and his beautiful and proud wife As'hia!" Cha'talla bent over and lifted his younger sons into his arms. "My youngest! Look at them! They look different because we are different!"

Cha'talla set his sons down carefully. "Our people were proud once! We held honor and respect and family above all else! Just as the Lycavorians do! Veldruk knew this... and changing us and turning our people into his personal army was part of his hideous plan to keep us from joining our Lycavorian brothers in their struggles. Instead they used us to quell instead of help! They used us to conquer instead of establish peace. And we followed blindly because we thought they had saved our people." Cha'talla shook his head slowly. "How wrong our elders were back then my fellow Akruvians. How wrong."

They watched as the others in the transmission moved closer, as if to provide him support and strength as he spoke. They watched Normya Leonidas reach out and squeeze his arm, her face brilliant and her platinum blond hair so much like her mother. Cha'talla looked up once more at the recording device.

"We no longer have to suffer under the boots of the Coven!" Cha'talla spoke as his rose and gained power and emotion. "The hideous events against the daughter of Leonidas has shown how low the Coven has fallen. A mere child in terms of years and Aikiro and Yuri and Moran sanctioned that she be savagely raped and beaten to obtain information that was not theirs to have! They could have turned their backs on us then... but they embraced us. Only days ago we stood here on Kranek... we stood side-by-side with our Lycavorian and Elven brothers and sisters and we fought a glorious battle! Lycavorian warriors died without hesitation defending Immortal children! Akruvian Immortals fought beside many of the Leonidas children and alongside many purebloods. Princess Narice and Princess Carisia among them! Wives now to Leonidas brothers! We have begun a new chapter in the history of the Akruvian people! A chapter we will write, as we see fit, not others! Join with us! Leave the Coven behind and join with us! Let us return to the ways of our people from millennia ago. The path of honor and values! Give up your lives there and come here to begin anew! Esther and so many others have worked long and hard and we can give you back what the Coven took from us. You can be what our people were always suppose to be! How we were suppose to look! Leave it all behind... and come here with an open mind and hope! The tribe of Cha'talla... my tribe... we have aligned ourselves with our brothers and sisters in the Union. Just as it was meant to be. The sins of our past have been forgiven if we act now! It will take time and hard work but we have already begun this... and with each day we earn back the trust and respect of the galaxy again. Non-Akruvian Immortals walk the roads and streets of our settlement here on Kranek unafraid of our people! This is what I offer to you! Join with us and you can begin again. A new life where the decisions are yours to make! The path you wish to follow is yours to make! The battles we choose to fight are because we choose to fight them!" They watched Cha'talla step away from Esther and move closer to the source of the transmission.

"But hear me closely now!" Cha'talla spoke. "If these are things you do to want... if this offer is not good enough for you... then remain where you are. Continue to serve the High Coven, and when the day comes that Androcles Leonidas brings the mighty High Coven down because of what they did to his sister, you will fall with them. We will not hold back. We will show no mercy to those who stand against us. Against justice. The time is short my fellow Akruvian brothers and sisters. You need to decide and do so quickly. Aikiro's vile actions have unshackled a storm unlike any I have ever seen and I do not wish for my people to be swept aside by that storm for choosing the wrong side. Come now! They will not stop you! They can't stop you! They are splintered and fractured! This is our time after millennia under them! You must choose quickly as I said my brothers and sisters! And if you choose to remain... if you choose to continue life as you know it now... then that storm will crush you just as assuredly as it will crush the Coven. We... we can start again! We can live again! We can leave the past behind us and come together again! Brother... if you are out there... hear me now! We can..."

"Shut it off!" Moran snarled as he came to his feet. "Fuck! Shut it off!"

The aide stabbed down on the control panel ending the transmission. "Transmission terminated sir."

“How is that getting through all of our filters?” Asant demanded. “Why can’t we jam it?”

“Kranek is in The Wilds sir. The signal is being bounced off several different repeater locations and it is being broadcast on a frequency we have never seen before.” The aide answered quickly.

“He’s using communications technology the Lycavorians got from their Mindvoice ship.” Moran spat. “It’s the only explanation.” He turned around and looked at the gathered men. “Which means that everything he is saying is true isn’t it?”

“Sir?” Asant asked.

“Is what he said true?” Moran snapped. “The way he looks? How the Immortals in our ranks look? Did Veldruk do that? Did he tamper with their genetic code like Cha’talla says?”

“Yes.” Nelul answered softly as he looked down at the table. “There is no sense in trying to hide it now. Not if he knows.” He looked up at Moran. “I don’t know all of the details but yes... it’s true.”

“Fuck!” Moran practically screamed.

“Can’t we say it’s all propaganda? Cha’talla is supposed to be dead!” Another Admiral asked quickly.

Moran shook his head now. “We discovered he was alive during the lead up to the fake Peace Accords.” He told them. “Aikiro had her suspicions for years but when she saw a secure transmission at Leonidas’s home in regards to his daughter Normya, Esther Suira was in that transmission as well as their son. Dysea left Earth hours later to meet with them. Presumably that is where she has been all this time.”

Asant shook his head as well. “Cha’talla has taken on sort of an iconic figure status among the Immortals. Especially many of the younger ones. There have been rumors about what he was trying to do for years circulating among the Immortals. Some of them very wrong, some embellished quite a bit, but quite a few of them very true. They were never able to confirm any of it however.”

“Until now.” Moran said softly.

“How many Immortals in the active ranks?” The same Admiral asked excitedly.

“If you include the ones serving onboard warships... including this one... nearly two million.” Asant answered. “And that does not include those who are either just finishing their training, or just starting it. Another hundred thousand just at the training bases on Uzu Ozeib 7 alone. Roughly the same amount at the six mother main bases.”

“Three million Immortals.” Nelul spoke softly looking at Moran. “They could decimate our ranks before we ever had a chance to quell any uprising. It would be no different than what Leonidas did on Earth Admiral Moran, only our casualties would be far more severe than what you suffered there.”

Moran nodded. “One Immortal could kill an entire squad before they were able to bring him down.” He agreed. “What a fucking lash up!”

“Release them from their service to us.” Nelul quickly followed up his statement.

“What?” Another admiral cried. “That is insanity! We all have Immortals stationed at our personal estates! They guard what belongs to us! They are our Shock Troopers!”

Nelul nodded. “If we do not release them... and do so quickly... our personal estates will no longer be ours.” He said. “You must step in now Admiral Moran... before this transmission sparks a riot we will not be able to control.”

“I agree.” Asant spoke. “Allow those who want to leave to go. Hell... give them stripped down ships to go! Those that want to stay can stay.”

“Why would any chose to remain?” The first Admiral asked.

“Because there are many who have grown to like the power they wield within our ranks.” Nelul said. “They are trusted and respected by many Pureblood and non-pureblood vampires alike.” He looked around the table. “What Cha’talla suggests... he would have more trouble organizing that than we would trying to quell uprisings from within the Immortal ranks.”

“You are suggesting that we just release some of our finest troops from our service!” The second man to protest spoke again. “Just let them go!”

“The alternative is civil war.” Nelul spoke. “And that we will not survive. Whether you choose to admit it or not, there are many among our people who view the Immortals as friends. Many of our officers and troops have fought beside them against the Kavalians and formed solid friendships in the midst of war. To ask them to turn around and fight them, it will split the ranks of our troops and plunge us into chaos.”

“This is... this is madness!” Another spat.

Moran looked at Nelul. "How many will leave?" He asked.

"There is no way to answer that question sir." He answered.

"Your best guess then." Moran told him.

"Given how Cha'talla is viewed among many of the younger Immortals... now that they know for certain he is alive... I would estimate over half depart." Nelul answered.

"That will include their families and tribes." Asant said. "If the Tribe Elder leaves... the entire tribe goes with them. It is the basis for their society Admiral. We also have to consider that if we move against the Immortals, we will need to move against their tribes as well. Just as Veldruk did against Cha'talla's tribe."

"Veldruk failed in that." Moran said.

"Yes sir... but only because Cha'talla had planned for that eventuality." Asant replied. "If we move against the Immortals, we need to move against their tribes. If we move against their tribes we will lose all support from even those who do not want to leave."

Moran got to his feet and moved to the view window. He stared at the stars for a few seconds before turning back around. "Fuck it." He spoke. "If the technology that we have taken turns out to be useful we won't need them. Put out an announcement. Any Immortal soldier who wishes to leave will be given free will to depart. If they don't want to be here... I don't want them here."

Asant nodded and rose to his feet. "I'll make it happen sir."

"Get it out quickly Asant. I don't want them to think we are holding them back and they start to do stupid shit." Moran spoke.

"I'll have the order drawn up and issued within the hour." Asant answered as he turned and headed for the door.

Moran looked at Nelul and the others. "Gentlemen I suggest we put our heads together and start working on how to keep the Coven from fracturing. I want facts and figures. I want the names of those who want to think they can take charge and push Yuri out. I want the loyal politicians to know we stand with them and the disloyal fuckers to know I'll skin them alive if they try anything." He moved back to the table. "Once that is complete... we can start to head home."

"We can leave the past behind us and come together again! Brother... if you are out there... hear me now! We can forgive! We have forgiven! And we can be as father meant us to be! Join us now! Help us to build our future!"

Nalavi shook his head slowly as the transmission began to repeat itself. "I would have never imagined it." He spoke. "Cha'talla is alive. That is unbelievable!"

Pa'cour nodded his head slowly. "Indeed." He stated softly.

Nalavi looked at him. "And he has..."

"Changed how we look?" Pa'cour said. "It would seem so. Is what he says possible doctor?"

Nalavi nodded his head quickly. "Oh... very much so. A virus that mutates only certain genes to alter outward appearance. That's basic genetic coding."

Pa'cour looked at him. "And it can be changed back even on older Immortals?"

Nalavi nodded. "I'm no geneticist... but apparently so since it has worked on Cha'talla. He is even older than you isn't he?"

Pa'cour tilted his head to the side. "By several years yes. You seem to know quite a bit about Cha'talla doctor." He said.

Nalavi nodded. "I met him on many occasions." He answered meeting Pa'cour's eyes. "I was suitably impressed with him. I never did believe he betrayed your people and it seems I was right."

"So... so it would appear." Pa'cour said softly.

Nalavi looked at him intently for a long moment. "Why is it you are not reacting as I think you should be reacting to this news Colonel?" He asked. "I understand many of your younger Immortals consider Cha'talla as somewhat of an icon. This information... this is not going to sit well with them."

"No it will not." Pa'cour spoke. "If it turns out to be true."

"You don't believe it?" Nalavi asked. "What possible reason could he have for lying now?" Nalavi said.

“I believe many things doctor... but without proof that is all they are. Beliefs.” Pa'cour answered.

“Then perhaps you need to evaluate what those beliefs are Colonel.” Nalavi spoke. “And then decide if you wish to pursue them.”

“A wise bit of advice sir.” Pa'cour spoke. “We...”

“Noooooooooo!”

They both whirled around to see Yuri sitting straight up in the bed, her face a mask of horror. The thin sheet covering her while she laid there had dropped away to reveal her naked body, a fact that caused Pa'cour to drink in her beauty even as he moved amazingly fast to grab the edges of the sheet to cover her.

“Princess!” Pa'cour hissed softly. “Princess... you are safe!”

Nalavi moved well for a vampire of his advanced years and he immediately began to take readings with his medical instruments.

The dreams were not hers, but they were so very vivid.

The high black rock walls, the screams of the dying and the injured. The flash of crimson and bronze, steel glimmering in the light of the midday sun.

You are weak! You failed me!

No!

They shifted again to a planet with a purple hue about it. Towering massive trees and still the screams of the dying and injured persisted.

You failed me! Your mother failed me! You are weak!

No! It was wrong!

I say what is wrong! The voice bellowed. I am superior!

I know what you are now!

You know nothing! You are a fool woman! No better than your mother! She was a fool for she allowed her feelings for him to made her weak!

You lie! She was not weak!

You are no different! Too weak to admit what is within your inner self! The fool uses you and you are too stupid to know this!

You lie!

Too stupid and foolish to accept what you want! To take what you truly want! You cling to feeble emotions when I could have given you everything!

The scene shifted to a lush green timber. Three crumpled Immortals, two younger than the third, as their blood soaked into the ground around them. The flash of explosions, the castle like estate, the images of wolves and immense dragons. The pull of the hand that saved her. The face and eyes of the Immortal that would become her Captain.

I meant to punish you by having you feed on him! I meant for you to kill him and be forever cursed by your own people for tainting yourself! The voice snarled. Only to discover you are even weaker than your mother! Your desires buried deeper than hers! I should have known this would be the case!

You will not control me! She screamed. No more!

Bah! Fool woman! I have already left you! You failed me... I do not accept failure! I have already moved on and taken the last vestige of your former life!

No!

You will be cursed now! You have tasted his blood and now you will not be able to deny what your pathetic emotions tell you! You are useless to me! What you discover in the future will break you! And I will laugh as you destroy yourself in your woeful mourning!

I... I will fight you!

The voice laughed. A cruel sinister laugh that sent shudders of fear through her. I have found someone stronger than you! Darker. Crueler. He is like this because of you and now I will use him as I used you. Where you have failed... he will succeed!

You are a monster! I see what you want to do! You will destroy us all!

My body is no more! I have nothing else! And I will have my revenge!

Nooooooooo!

SCIMITAR

ENROUTE TO HADARIAN SPACE

ELIANI'S QUARTERS

It had been perhaps the most utterly exquisite three hours of her young life and what made it even more superb was that Eliani Leonidas knew that this is what she would experience for the rest of her years.

Eliani's lithe body was currently stretched atop Jomann's powerful form, their sweaty, naked skin and flesh touching in every possible way as the last of their mutually orgasmic explosion shuddered through them both. His incredibly thick cock was buried fully inside her still clenching pussy and she used her inner muscles to squeeze him even tighter, wanting everything he had to offer her. Her head rested on his chest, for she looked ridiculously small splayed across his body as she was, her burgundy colored red hair sticking to his shoulders and chest in many places because of their combined sweat. His hands stroked the outsides of her satiny thighs, his fingers dancing deliciously along her tanned skin, sending shivers through her continuously. Eliani could not begin to describe how this moment had come to be for there were no words. They could barely contain themselves through the two hour debrief once they were back aboard the SCIMITAR. Once outside of the conference room Eliani had grabbed his hand and practically dragged him down three decks to her quarters. She had every intention of having him in every way she could think of, but as soon as the door closed to her quarters, Jomann showed her the nature of a true Alpha Wolf.

With a growl of need and barely contained desire, he had pinned her to the bulkhead in her quarters and virtually tore her uniform from her body. This was unlike anything Eliani had experienced before, even with Malic, and by the time his strong hands had torn away her thong panties, his aura had made her so wet that she was trembling in need. He kissed her deeply as he stripped out of his own clothes, Eliani helping whenever she could with trembling hands, and then he was lifting her into his arms and her cries of blissful enchantment began as he speared her in one heart stealing, breath robbing plunge. His cock was not as long as Malic's her dazed mind told her, but it was so much thicker, divinely so, and as his full ten inches sank into her tight depths and his large balls came to rest against her upturned ass Eliani Leonidas began coming. He had taken her there against the bulkhead urgently, driving into her with power and need, as she sang out her delight the entire time. His explosion came quickly, exactly as her second orgasm rocked her senses, and Eliani accepted all that he had to give her with gleeful abandon. This was the man she wanted, the man she had waited so long for, and she accepted and allowed him to scent her right there against the bulkhead. Instinctively she commanded her body to absorb all he was, to let his very essence fill and merge with hers.

As she trembled in his arms, he held her impaled upon his still steel hard cock and carried her to the bed in her sleeping chambers. He lowered her to the soft sheets and Eliani descended into a world of rapture as he proceeded to explore every crevice of her lush body with his lips and tongue, leaving no area unexplored or untouched. He even found places that Nyla had never discovered and this only confirmed to her that he was indeed the one. Twice more in very quick succession he had caused her tremendous, muscle stretching orgasms and she could only clutch his head and shoulders and cry out her glorious wonder as he drank her passion down. He was holding nothing back from her, his full unshielded aura wrapped around her and keeping her senses alive and singing out in joy. She could barely think about what was happening, before he turned her onto her stomach and plunged into her depths once more like an eager child. It was here that Eliani Leonidas had truly discovered what it would be like in his bed. He held nothing back... giving her all that he was... as he whispered words of devotion and love into her ears. His nuzzles along her neck and the backs of her ears were like electric shocks that sent jolts of luscious pleasure surging through her veins. She could hardly move with his weight above her, so Eliani did the only thing she could think of, and she began to fuck him back as hard as she could while he stroked into her from behind. It became too much for him and he flipped her over once more, never leaving the prison of her warmth and tucked his head into the crook of her shoulder and began to dominate her. Eliani could only scream in heavenly pleasure as one climax followed another like waves crashing onto a beach. She had locked her ankles together on his tight powerful ass and wrapped her arms tightly around his broad back as much as she could and she simply held on. Her fern green eyes were changed completely, her wolf fangs fully extended in joyous rapture and his powerful aura wrapped around her like a blanket.

It happened without warning, without even thinking, and the moment his fangs pierced the skin of her shoulder Eliani sank her own fangs into his shoulder. Her blood boiled over as the virus in his saliva and the eruption of his essence into her smashed aside all she had ever known and reshaped her. She had long ago healed the scars of where Malic had bitten her on her breast, something that she hadn't even thought about, but Jomann's bite would remain with her forever. She would wear the scars proudly now, for it signified something to Eliani that she had always craved. Something she had always hoped to discover even as a little girl.

Eliani Leonidas had finally found the Soulmate that she knew had been out there looking for her. She had discovered the Anome that would forever hold her heart in his hands. And just as Jomann's searing come filled her, the tears of happiness spilled from her eyes as she shook in the most powerful orgasm of her life.

The next two hours had been nothing more than exploring each other's bodies, something that they did with unrestrained relish. Eliani swelled with happiness and love as Jomann's scent permeated her blood more deeply than anything ever had. The virus that had transferred from him to her was powerful and potent, not as potent as a pureblood Leonidas, but close to it and the female wolf inside her basked in the glorious sensations. When he had finally allowed her to take control, Eliani had given back to him every bit the pleasure and love he had given to her. Using all of her imagination and skills, she had feasted on him, just as she had promised she would and she was absolutely giddy to do it. He tasted sweeter than he smelled and this caused Eliani to coo out her delight as she snuggled between his thighs and drank down what he gave to her with joy.

When she climbed onto his powerful body and lowered herself onto his dominating cock, feeling his thickness stretch her and make her feel things she never had before, all pretense of doubt was forever washed away. He let her dominate him now, taking control of their love making, rotating her hips in hard tight circles on his throbbing cock. She wanted her prize and as an Alpha female she was going to get it from her chosen mate. Just before his fourth eruption he lifted himself off the bed, sitting up and making her sink even deeper onto his throbbing cock and he covered her lips with his. His hands grabbed her ass and pressed her down tightly onto his cock and for the next ninety seconds Eliani howled out his name over and over as he pulsed within her velvety depths like an erupting volcano. They had collapsed into this very position several minutes ago, and reveled in the sensations and emotions as their minds mingled and came together and they saw all there was to know about each other and truly became anomes. He hid nothing from her as she swam within his thoughts, and Eliani reciprocated this, sharing all she was with him.

He had finally grown soft inside her, but he still filled her quite deliciously and Eliani had no intention of moving from her spot for just feeling him anchored within her as he was sent tiny slivers of pleasure coursing through her body. As she regained control of her breathing and her heart rate she lifted her head from his chest, using her four inch long tongue to drag across his skin tasting the salty flavor of his sweat and teasing his right nipple. She felt one strong hand tighten on her firm ass and he chuckled softly as he brought the other up and took the side of her face in his palm. His fingers entwined in the hair that dangled over that side of her face and she lifted her eyes to his.

"If your intent is to excite me... you are succeeding." He said with a soft smile and bright twinkle in his ocean blue eyes.

Eliani scooted upwards on his chest and body, groaning in disappointment as he slipped somewhat from inside her and she placed her hands on either side of his handsome face and stared into his eyes.

"Do you... do you realize how utterly happy you have made me?" She whispered to him, using her thumbs to stroke his cheeks.

"I believe I should be asking you that question." Jomann told her gazing into her fern green eyes.

"Ever since I was small... I have seen how my father... how my father loved my mothers so completely." Eliani said. "It did not matter to him... he loved them all equally... until it took their breath away." Eliani lowered her head and used her nose to nuzzle his throat. "You... you have given that to me Jomann. All I have ever desired or hoped for in a man, you have given it to me and so much more."

"Eliani Leonidas you are my anome now." He spoke softly. "Even amidst all we are now dealing with, I will give to you anything your heart desires."

Eliani smiled as she gazed at him. "I'm actually very easy." She told him.

Jomann laughed now and shook his head. “You are anything but easy Eliani. You are my Iannalocara. My delicious flower. And you only blossom when you have found what you desire most of all. Thankfully... that is me.”

Eliani grinned as she looked at him. “Damn straight it is.” She hissed before kissing him hard on the lips and squeezing his face.

Jomann surprised her as he sat up quickly and pulled her even closer as he looked up into her eyes. She had no choice but to wrap her arms around his broad shoulders and stare back at him. “On my blood as a Lycavorian and a Spartan Eliani Leonidas, I will honor you always. I will never hurt you, never betray you, and never forsake you. You are my anome, and I will love you breathless until I pass into the next life. However long that may be. I swear this to you Iannalocara, as your anome and your mate.”

Eliani blinked back tears and moved her hands back to his face. “Are you done professing your love for me?” She asked.

Jomann smiled shyly. “At the moment yes. I have... I have run out of original things to say.”

Eliani laughed happily and kissed him once more pulling back after a moment. “You forget my beautiful Jomann... I have seen into your mind and I know how you feel. I see it every time you gaze at me with your eyes.”

“That is only because I wish to throw you to the ground and take you where you are because you smell so damn good.” He said.

Eliani laughed again and pressed her forehead to his. “That sounds like fun.” She stated playfully.

“Eli...”

She dropped a finger to his lips and shook her head. “Enough.” She said. “You do not need to convince me anymore than you already have my love. And I swear the same to you Jomann, with every waking breath I take.”

Jomann’s face showed his happiness and he leaned forward and nuzzled her throat, drawing a sigh of excitement and delight from her. “If we return to Earth in time... my family is giving a celebration for his graduation from the Academy. I would... I would like to introduce you to my family Eliani.”

“My father will want to speak with you.” Eliani said. “He is still protective of us even though we have Come of Age. And I will tell my mothers what you have done to me and made me feel.”

Jomann’s face scrunched together in surprise. “Everything?” He asked shocked.

Eliani nodded. “Everything.” She answered him with a beaming smile.

“Then perhaps I should continue to work on my technique so that they are suitably impressed that I have tamed their daughter.” Jomann spoke.

“Tamed?” Eliani gasped. “I will show you tame!” She announced before dropping her hand between their bodies, grasping the thickening part of his cock that was not inside her and pushing him back onto the bed. “You have a long way to go before you tame me mister! We still have fourteen hours before we arrive in Hadarian space. You just try and tame me by then.” She ordered before lowering her lips to his and kissing away his retort.

CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE

SCIMITAR

“... started almost six months ago.” Caliria spoke as she rested on the end of the huge bed within Andro’s quarters. She had taken a long, steaming hot shower and now was wrapped only in one of Sadi’s light terrycloth robes. She had come out of the bathroom with the robe wrapped tightly around her body not really knowing how they would react to her having been a pleasure slave and having to endure what she did. Her fears were quickly brushed aside as first Sadi and then Ne’Veha had come up to her, drawing her to the bed while nuzzling her very affectionately. When Carisia and Lu’ria came into the bedroom portion of the huge quarters they immediately came over and did the same and Caliria knew that whatever had happened did not factor into how they felt for her.

Devra sat behind her on the bed now, brushing out her lustrous black hair, while Sadi sat to her right side on the bed and Ne'Veha to her left. Lu'ria sat on the two person couch they had pushed closer to the bed and she and Carisia were alternating between listening to Caliria speak and fussing with one of the pieces of clothing they had obtained for her to wear. Caliria quickly noticed that Carisia and Lu'ria seemed rather possessive of each other while Sadi and Ne'Veha were drawn more to each other and to her. While she found this interesting, Caliria took note that it certainly did not stop them from showing affection for all of them together as a whole.

“What started Inamarno?” Sadi asked.

“The dreams.” Caliria answered.

“What dreams Cali?” Devra asked her looking over her shoulder and using the childhood nickname she had coined for her oldest daughter.

“The dreams of all of you.” Caliria answered looking first at Sadi and then Ne'Veha. “All of you.”

“You have been dreaming of us for six months?” Lu'ria asked softly as she looked up from the couch from where she was working on the black outfit they had gotten for her.

“Yes Mistress. I have...” Caliria stopped and couldn't help but smile at her as the others grinned knowingly. “You see... I have known... I know what to call all of you. I thought they were just dreams... very erotic dreams to be honest, but just dreams. I was seeing that human Eridiani man from the University and...”

“Wait!” Devra exclaimed. “You were seeing an Eridiani?” She asked somewhat taken aback. “Cali how could...”

“He was nice to me mother.” She replied. “He showed me attention and he listened to me when I spoke. Perhaps not for the reasons I would have liked, I know that now, but at least he didn't treat me like I have the plague simply because of my hair color.”

“But you knew the Eridiani target females such as yourself because no other with normal hair will even acknowledge them.” Devra said.

Caliria nodded slowly. “I knew... but I didn't care at the time. Franklin was nice to me mother, he treated me like I was someone important. He gave to me what I knew I would never have with a Vanari man. He was... he was sufficiently tolerable in bed as well. Not really very imaginative or particularly gifted... but adequate.”

“You stopped seeing him I take it?” Sadi asked her.

Caliria nodded her head quickly. “Shortly after I began to have the dreams. I didn't know what it was... I still don't understand it all to some degree... but he no longer interested me. In some way I felt like... like I was betraying something. I now know that it was all of you I felt and that is why I felt as if I was betraying someone. He wasn't happy about it.”

“Never think that Inamarno.” Ne'Veha said quickly reaching out to take her hand. “You could not betray us... just as we could never betray you.”

“SirsanGai is right.” Carisia spoke. “We all were... we all were leading different lives before we came together. None of us knew what the dreams and feelings intended until we came together and were able to see what it all preordained for us.”

“Six months ago?” Sadi said softly. “That is shortly after Carisia came into our lives and then we began to have dreams and visions of Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. The more we came together the stronger it became. Once the four of us came together with Andro the dreams and visions of you became almost overpowering.”

“It was him wasn't it?” Caliria asked. “It was Androcles. The dreams became so much more vivid and real when we arrived in this quadrant. At first it was just images and such that were flashing through my mind and in my dreams, but then after I arrived here in this quadrant of space I thought I could actually hear his voice in my head. Talking to me. It was so soothing and caring and warm.”

Sadi nodded taking her hand and squeezing it. “Yes... it was him. The moment he met your mother and sisters on his ship after they arrived in the Alpha Quadrant he was able to focus enough to reach out with Elynth's help. I'm guessing it is because he was able to actually pinpoint your Mindvoice imprint on your family.”

“Mindvoice imprint? I don't understand Sadi; I can not Mindvoice as your people do.” Caliria said.

Can't you? Sadi reached out quickly in Mindvoice. Or is it that you simply have never used the skill before.

Caliria reacted as if she had been shocked with a stun rod and Devra instantly became worried. "Cali... Cali what is it?" She gasped gripping her shoulders.

"I... I heard you!" Caliria gasped in stunned surprise.

Try it Inamarno. Ne'Veha reached out now.

Caliria's eyes darted to where she sat with a smile on her face. But I can not! I... Caliria brought her hands to her face in amazement as Sadi and the others smiled upon hearing her soft voice in their heads.

You see. Sadi spoke. You have just never used this skill before... but it has always been inside you.

"But how?" Caliria asked looking at her. "How can I do this?"

Devra finally understood what was happening and she lowered the brush to the top of the bed. "I understand what is happening now." She said softly. "She has just discovered she can Mindvoice hasn't she?" Devra saw Caliria turn to look at her.

Sadi nodded looking at Devra. "Yes."

"I think... I think it may be my fault Cali. Actually I am pretty sure it is because of me." Devra stated.

Caliria twisted around on the bed now and looked at her mother even more. "What do you mean mother?"

"You did nothing wrong Devra Re Mydala." Lu'ria spoke from the couch. "And what has happened is not a crime."

Devra nodded her head with a smile. "I know Lu'ria. The prophets bless me, I know that now. Bren has shown me so much in such a short time." She said with an almost wistful voice of her own.

"Mother... what are you saying?" Caliria asked again.

"When I carried you in my womb." Devra said softly looking at her. "I was visiting your brother on the Protectorate homeworld and I visited with Wayonn while I was there. The one we know as a Pralor?"

Caliria nodded. "I have heard of this Wayonn." She said.

"I asked him if he could show me the history of his people. The Pralors and Lycavorians. I had hoped to be able to understand them better. He had given us scrolls of information over the years to help us understand them, but it seems only I really took the time to study them. He took my request seriously and touched me with his mind. I saw images and flashes of history that stole my breath away Caliria. Apparently when he did this however, it also extended to you while you were in my womb and it imprinted the inherent ability to Mindvoice within your developing genetic code." Devra looked at Sadi. "At least that is how Eliani has explained it to me."

Sadi smiled in reply. "She is almost as smart as her mother and they know what they are talking about." She said. "You did nothing wrong Devra, just as Lu'ria said."

"Oh... I don't think I did." Devra answered. "Since... since Bren took me that first night, I have discovered I have this ability as well. He has been slowly developing it with me so that I'm not overwhelmed. Being able to see within the mind of your... of your husband and mate is such an overwhelming thing. I have only know him for a few weeks, but now that I am his wife and mate, I can see within his mind all that he has ever experienced. He holds nothing back from me. It is almost... I know Bren better than I ever knew your father Cali... and it is such a wondrous feeling."

Caliria reached out and took her mother's hand. "Thank you mother." She said softly. "If you... if this had not happened I would not be here."

"You would not have endured what you have had to endure either." Devra spoke harshly of herself looking down at the bed.

Caliria smiled. "Me being born with dark hair is not your fault mother. It is a gene passed down from the father. I have told you this... and all our medical data proves it. You could not have known this would happen." She said.

"If I had done more when you were small... if I had done more than you would never have been taken and forced to..." Devra stopped unable to continue.

"You are not to blame mother!" Caliria stated forcefully. "You will not hold blame for this. I won't let you! The Prophets meant for this to happen and they meant for you to be that instrument of initiation. I did not... I did not have to endure as much as some of the others. The men... they preferred to pay to see Yssyla and I together. The others... they had it worse than I mother." Caliria looked at her mother with a smile.

"Bren... he is that man who called you his wife on the ship?"

Devra nodded with a smile and looked at her again. "He is the one who has taken me as his wife and mate yes. He has claimed me as many Lycavorians call it. It is... it is wondrous Cali. What he makes me feel is so; it is amazing."

"Inamarno... did this Eridiani male... you said he didn't take it well when you ended it?" Sadi asked.

Caliria turned back to her and shook her head. "He wasn't happy about it no. He was very interested in my work... always asking questions about what I was doing. I was flattered at first, thinking he really was interested in me for who I was. I didn't put it all together until after I was taken but now I believe he was the one who set me up."

"Did you care for him Inamarno?" Carisia asked.

Caliria nodded her head slowly, almost embarrassed to admit it. "In some way I believe I did. Very much in fact. I don't know if you would call it love... but there was something there." She answered honestly. "I don't know for sure if he is the one who set me up or if others were watching him and they used him to get to me and my work." She looked up at Sadi. "It doesn't matter now." She spoke firmly looking at Sadi. "I know where I belong. The dreams were... they were telling me where I belonged and now you are all here and I can touch you and... and feel you." She glanced at Ne'Veha and then to Carisia and Lu'ria on the couch before turning to Sadi with a warm smile of happiness. "What is he like?" She asked.

"Andro?" Sadi asked.

Caliria nodded eagerly. "Yes."

Sadi chuckled. "Well... now you are asking us a question that we will all be bias about Inamarno." She said.

"But I am bias as well Sadi." Caliria told her quickly. "My dreams... he has filled my dreams for the last months. Him and all of you. I feel love and passion and desire for all of you pulling at me with such strength and I have never met you before now. If that does not tell me where I belong... nothing ever will. I feel... I can feel all of you within me. I feel so... so warm and at peace with all of you so close. With him so close. These things... I have never felt these things and yet they pull at me all of the time now. They are telling me I have found my place in this life. When I first saw him... touched him on that planet... it was as if a veil covering my eyes suddenly came off and my future was right there for the taking."

"Why does that sound so familiar?" Carisia asked softly.

Caliria looked at her. "What do you mean Carisia?"

"It's how all of us felt when we came together Caliria." Ne'Veha answered her question. "We know exactly how you feel."

"What is Andro like?" Sadi asked rhetorically with a small smile repeating Caliria's question. "Well... to us he is the most beautiful man in the universe. He's proud and strong. His body is; it is as if he was sculpted from the gods of ancient times on Earth. He tastes very good too I might add." Sadi said with a brilliant smile. "He is exceptionally smart and not just book smart either. He has two different advanced degrees and he can talk Astrophysics in one single sentence and then switch to adolescent history classes in the next. And he is so incredibly gifted in our bed Inamarno, in size and talent equally." She said unashamedly.

"That is the truth. By the gods that is the truth." Ne'Veha spoke rolling her eyes in a sexy and provocative manner.

Caliria looked at her, smiling at her words and the swoon she saw from all of them. She may not have known him for more than a few hours but she so wanted to experience that. "And you are his Anome? His soulmate." She said.

Sadi met her gaze. "Yes... but he does not love me anymore than he loves Carisia or Lu'ria or Ne'Veha. Or you Inamarno."

"I think the proof of that is in his actions." Devra spoke now. "I certainly did not expect him to do what he has done in order to retrieve you. Nor do what he has done in the last weeks in the search for you. He never faltered, never questioned that he would find you Caliria. And when he did find out where you were, he would have left everything behind in order to come to you if that is what it required. All of you would have." She said. "At a time when your people need you the most."

Caliria looked at her for a long moment. "Left everything behind? What do you mean mother?"

"Devra it is not important right now." Sadi said softly. "She will discover it in time and we don't want to overwhelm her right now."

“But it is important Sadi, for it shows his commitment and love to her. To all of you. It was something I questioned at first... but no longer.” Devra said passionately. “To be willing to toss it all away as he was... I can not think of a more boisterous announcement of his feelings towards Caliria and all of you.”

Caliria looked back and forth between her mother and Sadi. “Ok... would you tell me what exactly you are talking about now?” She said.

Devra took her hand and squeezed it tighter. “You are now considered a wife and mate to a Lycavorian Caliria. Just as I now am and quite happily I might add. But the difference is... your husband is recognized as the Royal Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union. The first born son of the King and next in line for the throne of the Union.” Devra smiled at her with green eyes. “You are a Princess now daughter.”

Caliria stared at her for a long moment with those honeydew green eyes, unable to truly believe what she had just heard. Sadi, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria detected a slight spike in her scent. Honeydew melon scented and so very enticing, just like her eyes. Caliria blinked several times and then turned to Sadi. “KertaGai... Sadi... is this... is this true?” She gasped.

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

“But why... why did I never see this in my dreams?” She asked softly.

“Does it matter?” Sadi asked her with a smile. “Does it matter that he is a Prince of our people? It does not change how he feels for you Inamarno... for any of us. And there are times when he absolutely hates being Prince. There is much going on that you do not yet know about. You will learn what is happening as the days pass, but coming to get you was never a question Inamarno. It was only a matter of how much he would leave standing. He is very possessive of us as you no doubt have seen... as we are of him.”

“But to risk...?” Caliria asked softly.

“There is much more involved than just what those men allowed to happen with regards to you Caliria.” Devra spoke quickly.

Sadi nodded. “Your mother is right. There is also the matter of agreements and treaties between governments. And the consequences should those be broken. They facilitated in your abduction, they allowed it to happen within their borders. That is a violation of the agreement they had with Andro's father. The Union tolerates no slavery! None! For any purpose!” Sadi spoke forcefully with real anger in her voice. “They went back on an agreement with his father knowing what the consequences could be if they were caught. They have since paid the price for their folly. The Union... Lycavorians within the Union are unlike those you know from Dutkne's Protectorate Inamarno. We have known slavery at its worse under the High Coven, for so long. So many generations. The Union and all those who reside within its borders... most of them were touched by this slavery in some manner and they despise it Inamarno. They will squash it wherever it may reside if it is within their power. Andro, he would have done it alone if needed... but it just so happens that wasn't necessary. You have... you have captured part of the heart of a man who is so very complex Inamarno. Just as we have. He has so many sides to him, so many responsibilities. We are his strength... just as he is ours. I have been in love with him since he was eight months old Inamarno. That is when I first met him. When he first spoke to me. I have had other relationships in the time before we discovered each other again, as he grew into a man. None that were ever very serious and until I saw him once more as a man, well I never thought or believed I would find what it was I was seeking.” Sadi's eyes were bright as she remembered that day. “When I saw him again... well... it all fell into place. Just as it has for you.”

“I am... I am over three hundred years old Sadi. Older than him... older than all of you put together.” Caliria said.

Lu'ria laughed softly and leaned forward on the couch as Caliria looked at her. “You must understand something about Lycavorians Inamarno. Those ones who are truly powerful within Mindvoice... Andro, his father, any member of his family really, as well as a few hundred thousand across the Union. They have the unique ability to imprint their children with memories and images and even knowledge.” She said. “Andro's father Martin is over three thousand years old but he did not truly know who he was until only three decades ago. He could not understand the many images that were passed to him from his father within his thoughts and dreams. Planets. Worlds. Battles. So many images that were passed to his father, the first King Leonidas, by his father before him, King Resumar. He is even today still learning to understand much of it. In essence... Androcles is far older than any of us simply because of the memories and the vast knowledge that has been passed to him within his blood. Knowledge that even Martin Leonidas still is trying to understand as King.”

“You are saying he carries the memories of his father and grandfathers within him?” Caliria asked in disbelief.

Sadi nodded. “In a manner of speaking yes. They are not active memories... but more like data storage cores. If he needed to... he could meditate and possibly bring those memories up. It is not a skill all our people have... just those of us who are truly gifted within Mindvoice. Those who are above what we call a Tier Four Mindvoicer. It is how we measure ones skill in Mindvoice really, by tiers.”

Devra nodded. “He certainly does not act as someone who is only twenty-six years old.” She said. “I noticed that when I first met him on his ship. His eyes hold wisdom that he should not have for one so young.”

It is a lot to take in Inamarno I know. Sadi reached for her within Mindvoice. Is what you feel wrong? Do you think it is wrong? Do you question what your heart tells you?

Caliria looked at her with wide honeydew green eyes. No... never! Never! She exclaimed easily this time, stunned at how casual it seemed to her to speak with her mind now. She shook her head slowly. I just... I don't want these feelings to go away Sadi. I want to... I want to bask in them. I want to wrap myself within his arms and have him take me as many times as he wants to. As many times as I can stand it! I want all of you to do the same. I want to feel you all... taste you. I want these things too and I...

[And we will have these things Inamarno.] Andro's deep voice filtered to her suddenly causing her eyes to go wide. The same voice she had heard in her dreams and then in his arms. So deep and soothing and filled with passion and love. It was slightly different somehow though and she didn't understand right away. [First however... we must insure you know how to shield your thoughts. KertaGai... if you would please... Denali started gagging when Caliria began to describe the more intimate of her desires. Help her with her shields or none of us will be able to show our faces on our own ship.]

Sadi looked horrified that she hadn't thought of it while Ne'Veha and the others couldn't help but smile as well. [Oh my!] She said finally, her voice sounding like Andro's just had Caliria noticed. Almost like an soft echo. [How much did...]

[Enough KertaGai.] Andro answered with a chuckle. [I will need several months at least to live it down now.]

[What did I do?] Caliria asked in shock now. She was smart enough to take notice that her words seemed to be more focused and channeled than before even with that soft echo and she realized that somehow they had erected some sort of barrier around their minds to shield what it was they were speaking of.

[You did nothing wrong.] Sadi told her. [I forgot... we are so happy to have you with us we forgot to shield what we have been speaking of. It is so others do not pick up our surface thoughts even by accident. We forgot to do this and those who can Mindvoice on our level and were paying attention heard every word. We will teach you so that it is second nature.]

[Who heard us?] Caliria asked shocked.

[The dragons and Andro's brothers and sisters if they were paying attention. Bren as well perhaps and maybe some of the RD soldiers if they were keen enough to detect the new presence your imprint makes.] Sadi told her. [We are shielding now... that is why our voices and words are more focused and directed, and why it seems there is a very soft echo.]

[I will be able to do this?] Caliria asked.

Sadi nodded. [We will make sure of it.]

[Inamarno... your... your father has asked me to pass a message to you.] Andro spoke again.

“Father?” Caliria gasped looking at her mother. “Father is with you? He came with you mother! I did not see him on the ship we left on!” All of them could detect the slight elevation in her heart at the prospect that he had come to help rescue her. Devra could not bear to tell her daughter the truth, that her father had been against her rescue from the outset. She would find out about it soon enough on her own.

“Yes he is here.” Devra finally answered after she glanced at Sadi quickly.

[He would like to meet with you Inamarno. I have reserved the private officer's lounge on deck three KertaGai. He will meet you there in thirty minutes.] Andro told her though he was not unwilling to explain it to her even further. [Caliria... I do not want you to hope for more than is there. I know... your mother has told me about this foolish ideal that your people have because of the color of one's hair. Just do not expect... just be prepared.]

Caliria's face took on a more serious look and she met her mother's eyes. "He didn't come with you to get me did he mother?" She asked finally.

Devra would not lie to her daughter and she shook her head slowly as she realized Andro must have told her. "No... no he did not." She finally said.

"Then I do not want to see him." Caliria hissed softly.

"He is still your father Caliria." Devra spoke softly. "You can not change that no matter what you do."

"He has never done anything to acknowledge or make my life easier. He has never had one word of praise or love for me in over three hundred years mother! It is as if I don't even exist! Why should I care what he wants?" Caliria said. "He was with someone else within two years of you and him parting ways mother! As if what you had with him meant nothing at all! He does nothing unless it suits his advancement within the SBR! You know this!"

"He is your father Inamarno." Sadi said. "Enylarcopri and SirsanGai have issues as well with their fathers, but you must put it to rest as they have. If you do not it will stay with you for years."

[Meet with him Inamarno. If only for a few moments to let him know what you feel inside you. Then I will meet all of you for dinner.] Andro spoke.

Caliria took a deep breath and nodded. "Will all of you be there with me?" She asked. "I do not wish to be alone with him."

"If that is what you wish Inamarno." Sadi said. "You are part of us now... our mate as well as Andro's. We will always be with you."

"Very well." Caliria said softly.

[Good. After dinner... my sister Lisisa and your sister Arduri will be returning and we can greet them.] Andro spoke. [Your mother has the details to their arrival and she can fill you in on what Naesta is doing with my mothers. I'm sure my sister Eliani will want your time as well considering you are the one who did the majority of the work on the counter agent to the OSG chemicals.]

[I will... I will see you soon?] Caliria asked anxiously.

[Very soon. I need to address an issue before I meet you but it should not take me very long.] Androcles told her. [One hour Inamarno. And then we can talk of the future we can have together. All of us.]

Caliria smiled. [One hour then.] She said.

Andro turned away from the wall he had been staring at and looked at Denali. "Don't say another word fervon!" He barked.

Deni laughed and shook his head. "See... now I get to hold this over your head." He said. "And in Sadi's own words! Wow... you are finished."

"Bah!" Andro spat dismissing his brother with a wave as Sa'sur and Ardan walked up. They turned to face the two. "How are our guests settling in?" He asked sarcastically causing Sa'sur to grin widely.

Sa'sur held out the data pad as she smiled at him. "We're lucky I decided to gas the ship before we attempted to board it. All of them had poison capsules situated in a false tooth in their mouths. One bite and they would be dead just like that idiot on Cranae Island."

Ardan nodded and looked at Andro. "We had heard this through rumors and such..." He spoke. "I guess this confirms it."

"Ardan... do you possibly recognize any of them? From around the capital area perhaps. I understand that there are quite a few Eridiani that go to schools on Austrova." Andro asked him. "That has to be how they are obtaining some of their intelligence and keeping track of your people."

"Surprisingly that is why I wanted to see them." Ardan said. "I do not recognize any of them individually... but I do recognize this." He held out the strip of cloth to Andro and waited for him to take it.

"What's this?" Andro asked taking it.

"Andro... I need to coordinate with Admiral Lorian before we get to Hadarian space." Sa'sur spoke. "And your grandfather is screaming epitaphs that you are even considering going there."

Andro looked at her. "It is the only way to be sure Sa'sur." He spoke.

Sa'sur nodded her head. "I know. We should be hearing back soon on our condition that all Kavalian ships pull back to the edge of the system. They are only allowed to have a number equal to our Strike Wing. Do you think they will agree?"

Andro nodded. "Oh they'll agree." He stated. "They hold all the cards right now because they have my mother. They know that or at least they think that. They'll agree. But that is why Manda will be there as well. Just in case."

Sa'sur nodded. "Good." She said. "I'll let you know when we receive word back."

Andro nodded and watched her turn and head down the corridor before he turned back to Ardan. "You were saying Regent Vu Lamurrion?"

Ardan looked at him. "I think after everything that has happened I would prefer if you called me by my name young man. You have earned it."

Andro bowed his head slightly. "You honor me sir. I insist upon the same then."

Ardan had figured as much and nodded in response. He pointed to the cloth Andro held. "It is a Vanari fabric... similar to what your people call silk." Ardan answered. "It is only used in the clothes of the very wealthiest of Vanari. There are several different fabrics that look and feel similar, but this is the real thing."

Andro looked at him. "I'm not following." He said.

"This fabric is only available in one part of Austrova." Ardan told him. "Because the different materials needed to make it are very rare, only three manufacturers are licensed to make this. All of them in Mydala our capital city... all of them near the Central Government Building and all of them with contacts within the Vanari government."

Andro tilted his head to the side. "That would mean..."

Ardan nodded his head and crossed his arms over his chest. "Yes... this confirms, at least in part, that the OSG has spies within our government or they are at the very least working with those in our government."

"That would mean whoever it is they are working with or for... that they know all about the OSG and their kidnapping of Vanari females." Denali said.

Ardan nodded his head. "Yes. It also implies that they are giving them information as well. Whoever it may be. Perhaps even giving them detailed Intelligence on what ships or what locations to target and initiate their vile kidnappings." Andro saw the much older Vanari's face scrunch up in anger, his blue skin unable to hide the flush that spread across his cheeks. "I... I never wanted to believe this!" He snarled. "I never wanted to believe Vanari would sell out their own people for profit but this is too much of a coincidence and can not be ignored!"

Andro looked at Deni before turning back to him and answering. "We do know how that feels sir." He said softly. "And we can sympathize with you in that regard."

"No argument here." Deni said.

"This is going to be very difficult for others to accept Androcles." Ardan said honestly. "I would have a hard time believing it if I did not see it for myself." He looked at Andro. "I would like your permission to question the female OSG agent. Brendi Faith I believe her name is. Just myself and no one else in the room. You can monitor from outside the room if you wish... but I..."

"You're going to try and get names aren't you?" Andro said.

Ardan met his gaze. "Without names I can not begin covert surveillance." He answered. "As a member of the SBR I do have some leniency and access to various skilled assets. But in order to use them I need names. I can not use them if the very people I must target are the ones who I must request their use from. Anything I do would be defeated before it even began. I must be careful in what I do."

Andro nodded his head. "I don't have a problem with that." He replied immediately. "I do however recommend waiting until after Lisisa and Arduri return with her family. She will be more open to speaking with you then I think."

Ardan nodded. "Yes... I see your point." He said. "Your sister did not have to... they did not...?"

Androcles shook his head. "Lisisa and Zarah can be very discrete when they want to be." He said. "In situations like that it pays to be half vampire as my mother says. They tend to have more patience than what Deni or I would have."

“What will you do now that you have these men and they have violated your laws? They obviously entered this quadrant through Union space regardless of where they ended up. You have already proven that.” Ardan asked.

“Actually I was coming to see you to inquire if you would like to be present for a secure transmission I am going to initiate.” Andro said. “You would need to remain out of sight during the communication, I don’t want anyone to figure out how closely connected we are with the Vanari now, at least not until we want them too. And it will give you time to return to Vanari space and implement plans to disperse the compound Caliria and my mothers perfected to all of your people. Especially your females.”

Ardan met his eyes. “You are just going to give it to us?” He asked taken aback.

“Ardan... why would I keep this knowledge?” Andro asked him. “What possible reason would there be for that?”

“My people as a whole do not have the best track record of dealing with your species Androcles.” He said. “You know this.”

Andro nodded. “That may well be the case yes... but I would never hold back anything that would hamper another species or government if they were not outright enemies of my people. The Vanari are not enemies of my people as Dutkne has tried to tell you for so many years. This medical data is vital to your people Ardan; vital to your future. If however, your government still does not wish to change their views, if they choose to continue to live in the past and believe lies and falsehoods about my people, then I will simply do what I said I would do in the very beginning. I already have what I desire Ardan... and even her father will not be able to keep Caliria from me or change her mind about what she feels. We can do many things to alter the future and the path in front of us, but no matter what we try, you can not change destiny. It is part of my destiny to call Caliria wife and mate. Part of her destiny. I accepted this long ago and Caliria does as well. Now that we are finally together... it would be better if no one tried to change that.”

Ardan nodded his head, understanding the implied threat and surprisingly he could not be upset about it. He would make it a point to let the SBR know that to try and take Caliria Re Mydala from this young man would not be among the wisest decisions they have ever made. In fact, it would be downright suicidal.

“If the Vanari persist in their ways, they will simply have to find other trading partners. I will not allow my people or the Union to trade or conduct business with those who regard us as nothing more than animals.” Andro finished his statement. “But this... I would never demand concessions for something like this.”

Ardan looked at him quizzically as his words sank in. Ardan had been around many different people and he considered himself an excellent judge of character. Nothing that Andro had just told him was a lie of that he was certain. And he was right... the loss of the Lycavorian Protectorate as a trading partner would be devastating in terms of financial means. And if the Protectorate moved to merge with the Lycavorian Union as Dutkne had already said... then it would be this young man who would make that decision. And Ardan did not doubt for a second that he would do as he said.

“Just who do you plan to contact?” He finally asked.

Andro grinned. “I’m going to go right to the source.” He said. “Come.”

CONSORTIUM SPACE

VAMSHI

OSG REGIONAL COMMANDER HQ, ALPHA QUADRANT

Corbin looked up from his desk as Wendall came in with a frown on his face that could only mean one thing.

“What?” Corbin asked.

Wendall dropped the pad onto his desk. “Our people were too late.” He stated. “They got to Edolus too late. Your parent’s house was empty... both your parents and your sisters were gone. It appears as if they left rather quickly too. There were clothes and other items tossed about their rooms like they were packing very light and only taking what they needed.”

Corbin took the pad and rose to his feet his anger boiling over. “Fuck!” He swore using his arm to sweep all the items off his desk in one stroke. As the pads and light and two plaques smashed against the wall he turned to face the opposite wall and gain control of his anger. "Shit! Shit! Shit! These bastards move fast!" He snarled. "This is Brendi's doing! She's helping them! She has to be!"

"How can you be so sure?" Wendall asked.

"There is no way they could have got to my parents first unless she told them where to go." Corbin stated turning to face him. "You found nothing?"

Wendall shook his head. "Whoever came and got them were like ghosts. We found the pressed site of four landing struts in a small field about four clicks outside the city. Bunch of really big prints of some sort... like claws or something."

"Dragons." Corbin spoke turning back to the wall and moving to the counter. "Jesus... they move fast." He said to no one in particular. "Either their Drow scouts or possibly their Durcunusaan themselves. No one else has the skill to pull this off without getting noticed by our people on Edolus."

"If it was their Durcunusaan... then that would mean one or more of their Royal family was involved in the snatch." Wendall spoke. "They wouldn't get involved otherwise... and we don't know of any Drow who are paired with dragons except his new wife and the Drow Queen Aihola."

"Which means it had to one or more of them." Corbin said turning back to face him. "We need to negate the damage she could do with what she tells them Wendall. I want our people to go through all of her access and change whatever needs to be changed. Command Codes, any and all Access Nodes and Codes. Everything."

"I'll see to it." He said. "What do we tell the Home Council?"

"I'll inform them of what has happened." He said in reply. "My sister is not the first OSG agent to defect. We have procedures in place."

Wendall nodded. "Liquidation at any cost of all family members." He said. "This isn't going to put you in a very good light my friend."

Corbin shook his head. "I have no reason to be afraid Wendall. The Home Council trusts me for a reason. They know where my loyalties lie. I will need to contact them..."

They both turned towards the door as it slid open and an OSG officer walked in. He faced Corbin smartly. "Colonel... we are receiving a transmission on an encoded channel reserved for your sister. You might want to see this sir."

"Brendi is contacting me?" Corbin asked stunned.

"No sir." The aide spoke. "The Lycavorian Crown Prince."

Corbin's eyes grew even wider. "Jesus... put it up." He stated.

The aide moved to his desk and keyed in several sequences of numbers to allow the holo disc in the floor to flare to life. It shimmered briefly before locking in on the image of the tall and very powerfully built young Lycavorian man. He turned to face them in the transmission. It was obviously a narrow band transmission as all they could see was him and nothing in the background. They must have been somewhere he did not want them to see, or his sister was watching from the side.

"You are Colonel Corbin Faith I presume? Colonel Corbin Faith of the Orionis Syndicate Group. A known criminal organization within the Beta Quadrant of galactic space. Is that not correct?" The young man asked his azure eyes bright and focused.

"Who the hell are you and how did you get this secure channel?" Corbin snapped rather forcefully.

"I have no doubts that you already know the answer to that question but if you wish to play that game... my name is Androcles Leonidas, Crown Prince and soon to be King of the Lycavorian Union." Andro answered.

"Where is my sister and how did you get her COM channel?" Corbin barked continuing to play dumb. "What is this all about?"

Andro shook his head slowly. "You are not much older than me Colonel Faith so please do not presume to play stupid with me. You will find I do not respond well to individuals who play games with me."

"Ok... I'll go along with you!" Corbin spoke in reply. "Yes I'm Colonel Corbin Faith... and the Orionis Syndicate is a legitimate Intergalactic Commerce Consortium. Now where is my sister?"

"I am treating you as an intelligent person Colonel Faith so I ask that you do the same in return. Let's be honest shall we... your organization is nothing more than a large, well funded and well trained group of petty criminals." Andro spoke. "As to the whereabouts of your sister, if I am not mistaken, the transport that I sent to collect your family is arriving and she is no doubt greeting them as they disembark even now.” Andro answered. “She was quite insistent about that.”

“What exactly is the purpose of this communication again?” Corbin asked him.

“This communication has two purposes really. The first is a greeting.” Andro told him. “Just a short communication to advise you that I know exactly what you and the OSG are and to let you know that I am aware of what you are doing within the Alpha Quadrant.”

“Is that a fact?” Corbin spoke.

“Yes it is.” Andro said. “The Icalro Alliance no longer exists Colonel Faith.” Andro told him. “Their government died just over five hours ago.”

“The Icalro alliance?” Corbin spoke. “I don’t believe I have ever heard of them.” He said with a smile. “As you said... we are kind of new to this quadrant of space.”

Andro chuckled. “Yes... so very new.” He said sarcastically. “Since you will not take me serious I will come right to the point of my second reason for contacting you Colonel Faith of the OSG. That is to give you a warning.”

“A warning?” Corbin asked.

“I know exactly what you are... what your people are.” Andro said. “Those five men and three women operating your transport that were on Ontahe are now in my custody. They have been arrested and detained for trafficking in slavery within Union territory. They will be tried under these charges and be executed if that is their case.”

“You can’t be serious!” Corbin barked. “They... they did not come anywhere near Union space!”

Andro grinned at him. “And you just admitted to the crime as well.” He said. “Thank you Colonel Faith... now I will not have to work to get you to admit it. I will not feel so bad when I have your men executed either.”

“Slavery is not against the law in The Wilds!” Corbin snapped.

“It is however against several laws within Union space... which is where your ship ended its FDC jump from the Beta Quadrant before continuing into The Wilds.” Andro told him. “If you were as smart as you are arrogant you would have known that the Bontawillian Republic became part of the Lycavorian Union a little over fourteen months ago. Your ship jumped into BFR space carrying sixteen Vanari females, I believed they are called that. At least that is what Dutkne told me when he arrived in Union space shortly after your ship. Blue skinned Vanari females which were then sold to the Unsaar slaver Cyngi on Ontahe. Sold to him because of some powerful oil that they can supposedly secrete through their pores when aroused naturally or forced with chemicals such as you produce and inject them with. That oil makes whoever they touch when aroused compliant to them in some way, willing to do almost anything for their attention. Including divulging secrets of every form. The Unsaar Cyngi also happens to be very dead now by the way.”

“Dutkne?” Corbin asked his eyes going a little wider.

“Ah... you know Director General Dutkne of the Lycavorian Protectorate?” Andro said. “Then you should also know that in a few short weeks the Protectorate will be folded into the Lycavorian Union and our law will extend to Protectorate space as well. Into the Beta Quadrant of space.” Androcles told him. “I bet that just puts a crook in your ass doesn’t it. If your spies on Earth have told you anything it is that we do not tolerate slavery of any kind within Union territory. What you have done in the past by skirting Protectorate space or hiding in remote areas within their space will no longer be an option for you.”

“You assume an awful lot Prince Androcles.” Corbin snapped.

“Perhaps in your eyes but not in mine. Dutkne and those with him informed us of this ship and we did a little investigating and discovered that the Vanari females are quite popular among the OSG in order to make a profit. Oh... we of course rescued those Vanari females that Cyngi was holding and using against their will. And then we found your ship and crew trying to escape the area as we lay waste to that little haven of scum. It was quite a catch.” Corbin turned to look at Wendall quickly his eyes filled with questions as his senior aide and friend was typing furiously at another terminal trying to get information. “And no... the crew of this slaver ship was not able to commit mass suicide as was their plan no doubt. We discovered the poison capsules in their teeth and removed them before they were able to use them. They are all in cells right now... they will be interrogated quite thoroughly and then executed for their actions as I said.”

“You can’t be serious!” Corbin snarled. “Those are my people!”

“Yes... I know.” Andro spoke in response. “You should also be aware that we destroyed the OSG assassination team that you sanctioned and sent against my mates and I, but you probably already knew that given your spies here on Earth. The assassination team that you paid for and funded with resources given to you by the Kavalian Federation in order to kill me I might add. Getting them to Earth and then supporting them? That must have cost a pretty penny as my mother says.”

“I have no idea what in the hell you are talking about!” Corbin snapped as his temper continued to rise.

Andro smiled once more and shook his head. “Colonel Faith you have taken sides against the Lycavorian Union, without really knowing what you were doing. You should never have taken that contract Corbin Faith. I don’t know why you have done this... for profit perhaps. It is the only thing I can think of other than to perhaps cause unrest or confusion within a sovereign government because you have allied yourselves with our enemy. It does not matter now though, and because you have taken it upon yourself to do that, it makes your organization move from the realm of simple criminals and murderers to the role of terrorists. We know how to deal with terrorists Colonel Faith.”

“You have no proof of anything!” Corbin barked.

“Actually I have all the proof I need. I have your sister Brendi. She was and is a valuable piece of information Colonel Faith, and she does not care for you in the least it seems. Thank you for her. It was not a wise tactical move to send her on the mission to kill me but thank you for her services nonetheless.” Andro said. “I will utilize them well... and perhaps she will find happiness here in the Union.”

“Where is she?” Corbin snarled. “You tell her I will see her dead! I’ll hunt her as long as I have too for betraying me!”

“She said as much... and that is why we removed your family from Edolus as well. It appears you have a rather nasty habit of using them as leverage against her and making her do things she does not want to do.” Andro stated. “She has asked for asylum within the Lycavorian Union and I have granted it. Your parents and sisters as well. If my sister is accurate in her brief report to me, your father said some rather unsavory things about you as well.”

“You are fucking with the wrong person boy!” Corbin growled at him. “She’ll betray you just like she has betrayed me! And I’ll find her!”

“Actually Colonel... it is you who are fucking with the wrong people!” Andro told him calmly. “Your willingness to side with the Kavalian Federation without all of the facts is a case in point. Your decision to transport slaves through Union space is another. This is what I will offer to you and your cohorts... unless of course you wish to be declared an enemy right now. In which case I will order the Protectorate to begin targeting any OSG base they know of in the Beta Quadrant and begin destroying them.”

“You’re threatening me?” Corbin snarled.

“You may call it a threat if you so choose.” Androcles said. “I call it a choice. Do you wish to hear what I have to say or can I just declare you and your friends enemies and go back to my dinner?”

“I’m listening aren’t I?” Corbin snapped.

“Then listen very good Colonel Faith.” Andro spoke. “Your sisters and parents are now under the protection of my family. Any attempt to come after them will result in consequences you cannot begin to comprehend. I also know the OSG has agents on Earth. I know how many and what their names are thanks to your sister Brendi. I will give you three days to contact each of these agents directly and have them deliver themselves to the Durcunusaan Command Base outside Sparta. If and only if they do this... they will be treated as guests of the Union... they will not be interrogated or incarcerated and they will be returned to Eridiani space unharmed within a week. If not... they will be arrested, interrogated and then they will be executed in the most efficient manner that we can come up with.”

“The Eridiani are...”

Andro held up his hand before Corbin could finish speaking. “Do not attempt to distance yourself from the Eridiani government Colonel Faith. I know from what Dutkne has told me that their current administration wholly supports your organization in practically all that you do. I also know that many of the senior members in their Parliament, such as it is; those men and women also answer to the OSG.”

“The Eridiani Republic is a autonomous government and entity!” Corbin snapped. “They are recognized by every working government within the Beta Quadrant!”

“Yes they are. And their regime supports a terrorist organization such as yours, which in my own opinion makes them no better than you.” Androcles answered. “I have more to say if you don’t mind... and my food is getting cold.”

“You’re an arrogant prick aren’t you?” Corbin snapped.

“Some people have referred to me in that fashion.” Andro said. “I have never been one to care what others who don’t know me think of me however. Anyway... Dutkne has informed me that the Protectorate has a Mutual Non-Aggression Pact with the Vanari Empire. Buried in that treaty, there is a simple clause in Paragraph Twelve I believe... that clause relates to commerce between the Vanari and the Protectorate. Since the Union will be absorbing the Protectorate we will also be absorbing any contracts and treaties they have with other governments and species. All of these treaties will be reviewed and altered to the needs of the Lycavorian Union as a whole by our Senate, but that clause in regards to commerce will remain in place for the time being. Your kidnapping of innocent Vanari females for your sick perversions forces the Vanari to alter their usual shipping traffic and scheduling in order to avoid places you strike at their ships and therefore it then impacts the free commerce between our two peoples. This will cease immediately Colonel Faith, and all Vanari females that you have recently taken will be returned to them immediately or the locations where they are handed over. If this is not done it will force me to respond to protect Union interests in a manner you will not like.”

Corbin’s eyes grew wide and he stepped closer to the transmission. “Listen to me you snot nosed punk dog!” He snarled viciously. “You can’t threaten me! You can’t threaten us! Fuck you Lycavorian pig!”

Androcles nodded his head slowly. “Very well Colonel Faith.” He said. “Then as of this moment a state of war exists between the Eridiani Republic and the Lycavorian Union. I will order Protectorate ships to begin targeting their military facilities and command and control centers.”

Corbin’s eyes grew even wider. “What? You can’t do that? The Eridiani Republic has nothing to do with the OSG!”

“They support you Colonel Faith. They shield you and what your organization does to the Vanari and any non-Eridiani species from what I understand.” Andro spoke evenly. “In essence the OSG is the Eridiani government and you have a decidedly anti-alien policy at the forefront of your interaction with other species. Therefore I will act accordingly. Within eighteen hours we will be at war and full-scale operations will begin. I will crush the Eridiani Republic and in doing so... I will destroy your putrid organization. I will be killing two birds with one stone so to speak. You have been within the Alpha Quadrant long enough to know that we will do exactly as I say we will.”

“You’re fucking crazy!” Corbin shouted.

“So I have been labeled before.” Andro said calmly. “And since you also attempted to assassinate my wives and mates and myself by accepting a working contract with the Kavalian Federation, now an avowed enemy of my people after what they have done, I will make it a point to put a bounty on your nubous head so large that every piece of sibfla bounty hunter in ten sectors will try to collect on it!” He finished that statement with a snarl. “The Consortium will have no choice but to kick you out of their space and I will make sure you are taken alive so that I can kill you myself. In the most painful way I can devise.” Andro’s eyes had changed now and his vicious dual looking fangs were fully extended. “Do not make the mistake of thinking I will not do this Colonel Faith. That would make you even more fucking stupid than you already appear!”

“The Eridiani won’t sit still for this!” Corbin barked. “They’ll fight!”

Andro nodded. “Yes they will. And they will lose.” He stated simply. “The Vanari people may not be willing to fight you because of something you hold over their heads, but I am not so limited. I will move to protect Lycavorian Union interests and if that means in the process that I have to protect whom Dutkne refers to as pompous and self-righteous Vanari to do it I will! I suggest you make a decision and do so quickly.”

“I can’t make that type of decision!” Corbin snarled at him. “I’m only one... one arm of the OSG!”

Andro stared at him for a long moment and then nodded his head. “Very well. I will give you twelve hours to contact whoever it is you need to contact. In that time the Protectorate will be mobilizing ships to fulfill my orders. Twelve hours Colonel Faith. Not one minute longer. After that all bets are off and I will see to it you, the OSG and the Eridiani cease to exist just as quickly as the Icalro Alliance.” Andro’s eyes and fangs retracted quickly and he forced a smile. “It has been a pleasure... and I expect to hear from you within the next twelve hours. Goodbye Colonel.”

Corbin opened his mouth to speak but the transmission was cut off from Androcles's end. He spun around quickly, rage etched into his face now. "Fuck!" He swore as Wendall moved closer to him.

"What... what do we do?" He asked.

"I need to talk to the Home Council." Corbin spoke as numerous scenarios were playing out in his head. "Have an emergency meeting called. Get all the Council members in attendance Wendall!"

"Man they are going to be pissed." Wendall spoke.

Corbin looked at him. "That may be putting it mildly." He stated.

SCIMITAR

"Pompous and self righteous?" Ardan asked as Andro turned to face him.

Andro shook his head with a small smile. "The longer that we keep them in the dark of our interactions sir, the better it will be. It buys us time to move assets into place. As my father says... "What our enemy doesn't know will only hurt them.""

Ardan grinned. "I would like to meet your father one day young Androcles. I truly would. Now what assets were you referring too?" Ardan spoke.

"Assets to protect outlying Vanari colonies along your borders in case they decide not to take my offer." Andro spoke. "Dutkne already has ships moving to do this right now, but it will be several days before they get into position to cover your remote colonies in case the OSG decides to act and use their chemical weapons. They can't really do this however because right now they do not know that any Vanari know what is going on, and such an attack would cause the Vanari to respond with full scale war as well."

"Androcles there is no such clause in the trade agreements or the MNAP that we have with the Lycavorian Protectorate." Ardan continued. "Is there?"

"Not in the normal interpretation of the agreement sir but the OSG doesn't know that. It is a matter of context." Andro said. "And I doubt they will want to sift through the thousands of pages of different agreements you have with the Protectorate to discover it before they give me my answer."

Ardan tilted his head slightly. "You have thought this through young man." He said.

"Somewhat... yes sir." He answered.

"All because of Caliria?" He asked softly.

"She is a big part of it sir... but I also believe that we could be powerful allies and friends to each other." Andro answered him. "All that is required is that your people come to see we are not animals and inferior to them."

"You speak of changing thousands of years of mistrust and questionable motives Andro." Ardan said softly.

"Have I succeeded with you sir?" Andro asked.

Ardan didn't even hesitate in his response. "Yes."

"Then there is always hope." He spoke. "I will allow you access to our computers sir. Download from them whatever it is you think will help you make your case to the Board of Regents. Once you have done that I will have a ship return you to CITADEL ONE before we enter Hadarian space. You will need to return quickly."

"I will... I will do my best." Ardan said.

Andro nodded. "I know. If you will excuse me... right now I have a date with five very beautiful women and I do not wish to keep them waiting."

Ardan nodded as Andro smiled and then turned to begin walking down the corridor with Denali right beside him. Deni resisted the urge to look at his brother as they walked but reached out within Mindvoice instead.

[Do you trust him enough to give him access to our computers Andro?] Deni asked.

[He won't have complete access Deni; I think you know me better than that.] Andro said in reply.

[So you don't trust him?] Deni said.

[Right now fervon... the only people I trust are my family and blood.] Androcles told him. [Inamarno and her mother and siblings and the other females we have rescued aside... the Vanari have done nothing to make me want to trust them. Ardan is right... they have people within their own government who are working closely with the OSG and probably making a tidy profit in selling their own people. Whether Ardan or Coren are involved in that in some way is still up in the air in my opinion. Call me a pessimist if you will but Dutkne feels the same way and outside of our family, I trust him the most.]

[Sibfla... I'd call that good instincts.] Denali answered.

[We are treading within waters that I am unsure of fervon.] Andro admitted. [I don't know what is going to happen in the future. And even though father tried to prepare us to deal with the unknown... it truly frightens me.]

Denali nodded. [Me as well.] He stated. [So what do we do?]

[Right now... all we can do is react to what is happening around us.] Andro answered. [We are not controlling the events for the moment. Others are. Once everyone shows their hand then we can begin to formulate our own plans.]

Denali looked at him as they turned the corner in the corridor and left the sight of Ardan. He stopped then and looked at his older brother as Andro came to a halt and faced him. "We're talking about war aren't we Andro?"

"Given what we think is happening Deni... I don't think there is a way for us to avoid it." He replied softly. "No matter what they have done to our mother... what he has forced her to do I fear... I will not allow our uncle to keep her. Nor will father. That would be a total betrayal of her as our mother. She may not have been the one to birth us... but she is still our mother in every sense of the word. All of them are and always have been."

Deni nodded his head. "I have never questioned that. None of us have Andro... you know that."

"Then I fear I will need to do what needs to be done. What father would do but can't because he must maintain the façade that he is dead. They have killed hundreds if not thousands of our people Deni. Many of them in our very own city! Father's city! The place we call home! I will do what I must brother... but they will not get what it is they want and that is not going to make them very happy." Andro said shaking his head. "No matter how much I try Deni... all that I do... everything that is happening, it is pushing me towards that decision Deni. I can't see any other alternative no matter what direction I look in. And it is not a decision I wish to make but it is a decision I will make."

"Have you talked to father?" Deni asked.

Andro shook his head. "Not until tonight before we enter Hadarian space. All of us need to be there Deni. Let Lisisa and the others know when she returns. I will inform Eliani and Jomann as soon as I am able to pull them from each other's arms."

Deni nodded. "I'll take care of it." He said.

"We must be strong as a family in the coming weeks Deni." Andro said. "That is when our faith will be tested the most."

CURILA 6

Martin Leonidas extracted himself from Dysea's embrace slowly so as not to wake her and lifted his upper body off the bed. He watched her immediately roll over and fold herself into Anja's arms, her face tucking neatly into the crook of Anja's neck and shoulder. Their scents filtered to him, passing through him and invigorating him but he fought down the urge to take one of his Queens. Bella slept between Anja and Cirith, her head resting gently on Cirith's slim shoulder.

Cirith.

She had joined them in their bed at his Queen's insistence, and when they all ganged up on him he knew there was no winning the discussion. He had to admit though; Cirith was a very striking woman. Her lithe body was firm and muscular in one sense, but also had lush curves. She smelled of light cherry vanilla and even in the few days she had been here he was finding it harder and harder to ignore her. The single area within his mind that Anja had seen that day, the one that rippled softly and was unlike the others in their calmness, that area was now calm and smooth just as those that represented Aricia, Dysea, Anja and For'mya. The one that he thought represented Isabella no longer rippled and was as serene as the others and he did not know why that was. It had only changed after Cirith had arrived and he was reluctant to go there very often now for he did not want to see that it was Cirith who that window represented and not Isabella. Her firm and inviting breasts were exposed for his eyes to see while the sheet covered her lower body but he frightened her Martin knew. He could smell that from her. Yet he could still also smell the desire wafting from her, and that was stronger. It was quite obvious from the way their scents mingled together that she had already shared sexual pleasure with Dysea, Anja and Aricia when he had been training away from their home. Her cherry vanilla scent was mixed quite provocatively with the scents of his other wives and their combined scents filtered from Cirith easily. He shook his head slowly. They were so much better than him at seeing past walls and barriers of emotion and reaching right for the core of an issue. They had fully accepted that Cirith belonged with them, and they were making it a point to insure she knew it as well.

Dysea he knew, she needed the attention and love after what she had endured, and he had made extra time for them to be alone, though it was hardly enough in his eyes. Even being dead did not relieve him of the duties he had to perform. At times he loved his Melda Min until she was crying out his name, other times he simply held her tightly in his arms as they watched the sky and stars like they used to in Eden City, the others curled up with them, their skin touching in some manner. Her natural psyche was very nearly back to her old self and the sharpness and confidence of her mind was returning more and more each day. A large part of that, the larger part was him he knew, but the second part was the love she received without question from Cirith and the others. He had thought perhaps Bella would be jealous of her but he had been very mistaken. It was Bella who encouraged Cirith to be among them more than the others, and it was Bella who finally tipped the scales when it came to her staying with them in their bed. It was as if she knew what role Cirith would play in their future, and it had been her who had told him that Cirith had never been meant for his father and Gorgo, but for him and the rest of them. Martin still harbored some doubts and questions in that regard, but he could not deny the growing attraction to her, or the love she had already shared with his other Queens.

Looking at them as he knelt between their bodies on the bed, Martin Leonidas wondered how he had ever come to love so many different women in the same way and with such emotion and power. Aricia was his anome yes, and she would always have that extra part of him that the others did not, but his love for each of them knew no bounds. Every day that his Kinsoaurgai was away from them, every single moment that she endured whatever horrors his brother was submitting her too, Martin Leonidas died inside. With a soft but heavy sigh, Martin slipped from the bed and reached for his pants. They had long ago stopped sleeping with clothes on for they craved the touch of each other's skin against one another and the warmth of their naked flesh. As he turned to move into the main room he didn't see Aricia's azure blue eyes open and follow his movements.

Martin maneuvered his six foot two; two hundred and thirty-eight pound frame as nimbly as someone half his size. It was amazing to many people the physical power he held within his sculpted body, as well as the known Mindvoice power. There were very few who could really stand in his presence without being uncomfortable in some way, and that bothered him to the extreme. He had no idea of the swoons of thousands of Lycavorian females who would throw themselves at his feet if he so wanted as desirable as he was to them. His Queens made certain that no female wolf would ever attempt that. All of them were extremely possessive of him and on more than one occasion had slapped down the advances of other females without him even knowing it.

Martin needed no light to navigate to the kitchen area of their Master Quarters easily and he turned on only a soft sidelight in order to pull a mug of coffee from the large pot that had finished brewing only moments before. He sugared his coffee lightly and left the small light on as he moved around the massive kitchen table and through a set of double doors into a large spacious room with several couches and chairs. The room had bookshelves lining the rear walls to either side of the double doors and the entire west facing wall was empty. He crossed to a huge desk that occupied one corner of the room and typed quickly on the desk console. A soft whirring sound alerted him to the fact that the overhead Dragon Armor shields were retreating along with the layered glass partitions and exposing the entire west wall to the rising dawn and cool morning breeze.

Curila 6 was a temperate planet, always remaining in the low to mid seventies during the night and never reaching higher than the low nineties during the day. There was never humidity and they were still two months from the rainy season which would last four months. It would rain for several hours nearly every day before the sun broke through the clouds and chased the dreariness away and it would remain sunny and warm for the rest of the day and well into the evening where the cycle would start again.

Martin moved to stand in the center of the window, the Dragon Armor shield and glass full retracting and he stared out into the darkness as the first fingers of the rising sun began to stretch across the horizon. The coolness of the morning breeze danced across his skin and allowed him to smell her before he saw or heard her. He didn't turn as she padded up behind him confidently and completely naked, her delicious lavender and coco scent filling his nose. The somewhat shy and inexperienced woman he had met over twenty-five years ago was long gone, to be replaced by the confident and powerful woman that was his anome.

"What is troubling you Beloved?" Aricia asked as she slid her arms around his waist and maneuvered her supple, five foot seven frame to his front, pressing close against him. "It is something to do with our Kinsoaurgai isn't it?"

Martin looked down into her face and her beautiful eyes. Aricia Leonidas had an uncanny knack for sensing his many different moods and recognizing them for what they were and then informing her fellow Queens so they could address it. No one followed her out of their bedroom and Martin knew she had deduced this was a pureblood issue and only the two of them would truly understand. He reached up and stroked her cheek watching her eyes close in delight at his touch. Aricia was the youngest of his Queens in actual age yes, but since the events on Enurrua, she had changed. She was so much tougher now, both physically and mentally, and Anja and Dysea and the others instinctively looked to her when it concerned him. She had a way of knowing what he was all about, sometimes even before he did. Her lavender and coco scent could and did always excite him; perhaps more than any of them, and his other queens knew Aricia had touched a part of him that only she would ever see.

"I... I can't help but feel that every day she is their prisoner, every day she has to endure my brother she... I am losing her Saaurano." Martin said softly.

"Then you believe..." Aricia began to ask the question but stopped herself because of the vileness it made her feel.

Martin nodded. "Yes. I believe what Eli and Andro believe but will not tell their brothers and sisters fully. It is the only thing that makes sense Saaurano, the only thing that would give him reason to think he can reclaim the throne." He lowered his forehead to hers. "And it is my fault."

Aricia's azure eyes grew wide and she pulled back and looked at him. "How can you say it is your fault?" She exclaimed louder than she had intended. "You are not doing these things Beloved! You could never do these things!"

"I struck you and her both Aricia." He stated softly.

"Don't you dare hold that action against yourself, I forbid it!" Aricia spat. "That was not you Martin Leonidas. That was never you!"

"It was part of me." He said. "They were brothers Saaurano, and their blood is also in my blood."

"No!" She snapped. "No matter the blood that flows in your veins Beloved... your mind is your own. He was controlling you before... the blood you share allowed him to do this without you knowing. Once you recognized this... you took actions to stop it! That is who you are!"

"It was still me." Martin said.

Aricia shook her head. "Martin Leonidas you are the most simparrayr matha con man I have ever known!" She spoke pulling on his hand and drawing him to the couch. She pushed him down into a sitting position and then lowered her body onto his lap.

"He is my brother Saaurano." Martin said. "He is my brother and if I had killed him when my instincts told me too, we would not have to deal with this now. For'mya would not have to endure what she is enduring. She can't feel us within Mindvoice... we can't feel her! She thinks I am dead... he would have told her Andro took your life to save you the pain of living without your anome. That is what she believes! Who knows what else he has told her? Lied to her about? He is using her for his own foul purposes and goals Aricia! Manipulating her to do what he wants! There is only one way he could possibly make an attempt at the throne and if she has had to do this she must be lost!"

"You are no murderer Beloved! You could no more take the life of your brother in full view of your mother's eyes than any man could!" Aricia exclaimed. "We have always taught our children to never draw blood from family! That is what gives us our strength my love! We may argue and fight and be prideful for a time, but never have our children drawn blood from each other. It is a sin to all of them."

Martin nodded his head. "I know that Saaurano." He said softly.

“And no matter what our Kinsoargai has had to endure... no matter what she has been forced to do... this does not make us love her any less!” Aricia said.

“I know this Saaurano... but because of my failure so long ago, our son has now had to take the life of his cousin! His blood! Because of my failure For'mya has...” Martin shook his head unable to say it. “I know what burden he carries for that Aricia! I see it in his eyes every time I talk to him! Yes... he was rescuing Lu'ria and she was to be his wife and mate... but he still feels shame for doing what he did! And it is because of what I have taught them. What I could not do myself!”

“Martin you must stop this self flaying.” Aricia said. “It is not you Beloved. It has never been you.”

“All of my skill... all of my power and abilities... and I have never felt so utterly helpless Saaurano.” He spoke. “I should have seen all this coming!”

“Are you a god my love?” She asked.

Martin looked at her with wide dark eyes. “What?”

“Are you a god?” She asked again.

“What kind of question is that? No... I'm not a god! Jeez!” Martin exclaimed. “There are enough of our people who think I'm something more than I am... I don't need you to start believing that too.”

Aricia took the mug of coffee from his hand and used her PK power to move it to the knee high table on the side of the couch. Once it was lowered completely she brought her hands up and took his face between them. “This is what I believe Beloved.” She told him, tossing her head back and her long raven black hair flipping to one side of her face. “I believe that you are something more. I...”

“Aricia...” Martin began to speak.

“Shut up and let me speak!” She snapped playfully leaning forward to nibble on his lips and keep him from talking. “There are... there are men and women throughout history my love, Spartan history, Earth history, Lycavorian history. Men and women who have risen above the norm. They have been scholars and leaders. Your father, your grandfather. Canth. Sumar. So many in our history alone. You are not just a man my love... you are a symbol. A burning light for so many others to see and to follow. You are a god Martin Leonidas... to me... to Anja... to Melda Min, all of us. You are a god because no one in the universe could make us feel what you do. You are our god.”

Martin looked at her. “Well I'm glad you feel that way Saaurano but...”

“Son vada carians Martin... will you just shut up and let me finish!” Aricia's soft voice echoed in his ears. Aricia smiled as she caressed his face. “Have you never wondered why we love you so?” Aricia continued.

Martin turned his smiling eyes back to her. “I had hoped it was because of my charming personality.”

Aricia smiled. “There is much to love about you Beloved. Aside from the fact that you are incredibly handsome, so very powerful and so uniquely gifted in a way most females will never experience...”

“Aricia...”

“You are an inspiration Martin my love.” She continued cutting off his reply. “You have an indomitable will to succeed in all that you do... but you will not sacrifice your values and morals to accomplish this goal. This is why so many follow you, look up to you. In many ways they may view you as a god because you can do things that most can not, but they see in you the best and brightest hope for their future more than anything.” She said. “Just as people believed these things about your father and your grandfather. You exude hope to so many Beloved, and compassion and reason. And the power and strength to reach out and grab onto that and keep it safe.”

“Yet I can not keep a woman that I love safe from the horrors she is enduring now. How do I know she will not hate me for letting her go through these things because I am here and I am alive when she thinks me dead.” Martin said.

Aricia shook her head. “You give our Kinsoargai far too little credit my love.” Aricia spoke softly. “You are her center, the core of her being, just as you are with all of us. She will not be angry with you Martin, she will be ashamed for what she has been forced to do if what you think has happened is true.”

Martin nodded his head. “And because she feels this way about me it causes her pain. Because she loves me... it causes her pain Saaurano. Because I failed to eliminate my brother when I had the perfect opportunity, she is now experiencing pain by what he is forcing her to do. What I fear he has forced her to do.”

“Do you think for a moment she would do things differently even if she knew you were alive, if it protected you? Protected our family? Those that she loves?” Aricia asked. “She would endure any pain, any hardship if ultimately it protected you and us. Any one of us would do the same thing... just as you would. You know this Martin!”

“She is my mate! Our mate! And while she endures agony I am hiding here!” Martin hissed angrily. “I should be out there! I should be out there finding her and bringing her back to us!”

“And if they knew you were alive... she would be dead Martin.” Aricia said. “You know this as well as I. Your brother would not hesitate to kill her if he knew you were alive. You are not forsaking her Beloved... you are protecting her from certain death with your actions. Will you love her any less if what you believe has happened?”

“NO! Saaurano no!” He exclaimed. “She is a part of me! A part of us!”

Aricia nodded. “You must trust in our son Martin. If she is on Hadaria at this meeting... then Andro will find a way to tell her that you are alive.”

“And what if her grief over having to do what my brother has forced her to do is too much when she discovers that I am still alive?” Martin asked softly. “Then her love for me will have killed her as surely as if I pulled the trigger myself.”

“She is stronger than you know Beloved.” Aricia said. “You did not choose weak minded females to share your life and your bed Martin Leonidas. And if she knows that your love for her, that our love for her still burns just as brightly as it always has, do you honestly believe she would throw it all away in grief?”

Martin was silent for a long moment before finally shaking his head “No.” He said softly. “No... that is not her.”

Aricia smiled. “You know us better than you think you do my love.” She said. “But you must leave this pity and these feelings of hopelessness behind you. They are not who you are Martin. They have never been who you are. You are an Alpha my love. A man of action and power but also intelligence and patience. When the time comes we know you will act. We will all act Beloved. We did not choose a weak man to share our bed either you know, despite how easily you turn us to putty in your arms.”

Martin looked into her azure eyes for a long heartfelt moment before speaking. He then reached up and caressed her cheek. “Saaurano I...”

Aricia placed a finger on his lips and shook her head. “No.” She said. “I already know how you feel of me Beloved. Now... enough of this... take me in your arms and let us return to our bed. Our son’s heartbeat within Bella’s womb will calm you and return the focus to you. And we want you to begin to show more of yourself to Cirith as well.”

“Aricia...” He spoke as he wrapped his arms around her and stood up easily, feeling her ankles lock behind his ass cheeks.

“She belongs with us Martin. And that is part of why you are feeling these things. You are questioning your growing feelings for her. I can smell it deeply within you my love, the others can not because they are not pure as we are, but I know it is there.” Aricia said leaning forward and nuzzling his neck. “She belongs with us Martin Leonidas... among us... sharing our lives and there is no doubt about that and I know you can feel it. All of us do. That is why you feel what you feel. Part of it does not sit well with you. You must get past this. If you fear Bella will think badly of you than you can dismiss that as well. This woman was meant for us by a power beyond our ability to understand and Isabella knows that. She embraces that because she knows you love her. As do we all.”

“You know... I really hate it when they send you to talk to me.” Martin spoke with a grin as he walked towards their bedroom. “It’s not fair you know. Ganging up on me like that. I never win any arguments when you do that.”

“You don’t seem to mind too much when we lavish you with attention though.” Aricia said with a twinkle in her eye.

“Well... that’s different.” He said.

Aricia chuckled as they entered the bedroom. Martin looked over and saw all of them awake on the bed, Dysea and Anja with their heads on Isabella’s swollen abdomen and listening to the heartbeat of the child growing within. Isabella’s face beamed, her hands resting on both Anja’s and Dysea’s shoulders. Dysea looked up and held out her arm for them.

“Come Nauta Melme.” She said softly. “Listen to our son’s heartbeat and let us plan how we will retrieve our Kinsoaurgai.”

Martin looked at Aricia and then let his eyes go to Anja. Her Persian red hair spilled over Cirith’s shoulder for Cirith was spooned against her from behind. Her jade green eyes met his and she lifted her head. “What... did you think we don’t have plans to bring her back to us just like you do?” Anja said with a predatory smile. “Get over here so we can talk about how we are going to skin some cats!”

Martin Leonidas carried his Anome to the bed and into the embrace of the women that he loved so much. As he released Aricia and lowered his head gently to Isabella’s abdomen to listen for his unborn son’s heartbeat he didn’t see the look that Isabella gave to Cirith as she drew her closer. Bella’s face was beaming as Cirith scooted closer to her and they shared the look of two women who knew.

As he listened to the strong heartbeat within her womb Martin knew that between them they would devise a plan to return their Kinsoaurgai to them.

Of that Martin Leonidas had little doubt.

CONSORTIUM SPACE

VAMSHI

OSG REGIONAL COMMANDER HQ, ALPHA QUADRANT

“How bad is it Colonel Faith?” The man in the center chair asked.

“I will not lie to you Chief Executor Wynn. It’s not good.” Corbin answered slowly and with great care.

“Colonel Faith you may dispense with the hesitation on your part.” The older woman spoke from her chair. “Your loyalties are not now and have never been in question. You long ago proved that. You are our most experienced Regional Commander and we value your insight in everything. You were only following orders Corbin.”

“Executor Rall is correct Corbin.” Wynn spoke again. “It appears we made a mistake in associating ourselves with these Kavalian dogs. The consequences of our actions were not fully revealed to us by the Kavalians and are only now becoming apparent.”

“No sir they were not.” Corbin agreed as he breathed easier knowing he wasn't going to be blamed for what had occurred.

“These Lycavorians... they are vastly different than those we are familiar with here in the Protectorate.” Wynn spoke. “They are far more militant in many ways.”

Corbin nodded his head. “Yes sir.” He answered. “I believe it stems more from human history than anything else. Spartans to be exact. When they came to Earth that is where they resided. They are the reason the Spartans had such a reputation in Earth’s history. And since King Leonidas returned to the Union, that Spartan tradition and heritage has spilled outward across the Lycavorian Union in hundreds of different ways. It makes them... it makes them far more dangerous sir.”

“Indeed it does. We are certain the Union has your sister?” Rall asked.

Corbin nodded. “Yes ma’am.” He replied. “Prince Androcles admitted it openly in his communication with me. He is also holding one of our transport ships and the crew. His overall intention with them is unclear but he has said he will interrogate them and then execute them for slave trading and transporting slaves through Union space.”

“And your sister?” Rall prodded.

Corbin shook his head. “I do not know what his intentions are ma’am.” He answered honestly. “If he had simply planned to kill her after interrogating her he would not have gone to the trouble of evacuating my parents and my twin sisters from Edolus.”

“And there is no way we can strike back at her for this?” Rall asked.

Corbin shook his head slowly. “She had no real friends... no one she cared about with the exception of our parents and sisters ma’am. She has betrayed us, there is no question about that, but aside from sending Kill Teams after her within Union space I see no way we can hurt her. And if we do that... we risk him retaliating regardless of what we do.”

“How did we miss that these Bontawillian fools became part of the Union so long ago?” Another man asked from his chair.

“I have my own people working on that Executor Timmons, but it appears they kept it out of the main stream of their Netnews reporting and we do not have people high enough within their military and government to advise us of these types of things.” Corbin answered.

“Will this Androcles Leonidas do as he says he will do Corbin?” Rall asked.

Corbin met her eyes and nodded slowly. “I believe he will ma’am.”

“Do we know anything more about him than the standard Intel Profile?” Wynn asked. “There is not much information in the file.”

Corbin shook his head. “Getting information on any member of the Leonidas family is a tricky proposition sir. If you delve too deeply into information that is not public, their Krypteria will immediately take notice of you. They are not an organization that we want after our agents Executors. Our agents on Earth have lasted this long because they are careful not to invite any undue attention to themselves and their questions about the Royal family fall within normal public speaking or news announcements. Any kind of information on Prince Androcles and his wives is at a premium right now because of what has happened and that is why we were able to obtain the plans to the tunnels beneath his estate even with the close watch on them since his father was assassinated.”

“I find it interesting that he picked this one clause from their Mutual Non-Aggression Pact to use.” Wynn spoke evenly. “The Protectorate has twenty-six Trade Agreements with the Vanari and yet only this one paragraph in the MNAP mentions this language. Using military means to secure Cross Border Commerce? Which Vanari SBR member helped to forge this agreement?”

“Regent Re Mydala.” Corbin answered. “It is one of the first things I looked up before contacting you. Coren Re Mydala, not his former wife.”

“Truly?” Wynn said thoughtfully. “I was under the impression he was a vanguard of the anti-Lycavorian movement among the SBR and the regular Board of Regents.”

“Re Mydala... didn’t we just give approval for an operation which involved someone of that name?” Timmons asked.

Corbin nodded his head. “Yes sir. Regent Re Mydala’s oldest daughter. She is a very gifted researcher and was conducting secret experiments outside the realm of the Vanari SBR to find a counter to our chemical weapon.”

The woman Rall nodded. “Ah... yes I remember now. We’ve had her under surveillance by several different assets and when we felt she was getting too close to actually discovering a way to counter our Chemical Enhancement Serum we acted. She was taken in a monthly raid as she was returning from a University trip.”

Corbin nodded again. “Unfortunately she was among those transferred here to the Alpha Quadrant and sold to this Unsaury Cyngi. If she is still alive, she will be one of those rescued by the Lycavorians.” He said. “Though I doubt they will discover who she is right away, there is always that possibility. Director General Dutkne of the Protectorate seems to have garnered a position of high importance within the Union and this is allowing them to facilitate a quicker transition of power.”

“If he orders this, can the Protectorate respond?” Wynn asked.

Corbin nodded. “Easily Chief Executor.” He answered. “Their military fleet is more than a match for the Eridiani even with their Dreadnoughts. And we all know how they fight on the ground. Even our genetically enhanced soldiers would be hard pressed to stand against a full assault of Lycavorian troops Chief Executor. The chances would drop to nothing if any Union troops were deployed to the Beta Quadrant to help them enforce this action. Lycavorian Union ground troops are, for lack of a better term sir, they are game changers. Even a single company of Lycavorian Spartans could wreak havoc among the Eridiani.”

“And the Vanari are not involved in this?” Timmons asked.

Corbin shrugged his broad shoulders. “I don’t have enough information to determine that sir.”

Wynn sat slowly back in his chair. “No... if the Vanari were involved in this in any way we would know about it.” He said. “I checked before coming to this meeting. All of the Senior Regents are accounted for. Coren Re Mydala and Ardan Vu Lamurrion departed aboard Vu Lamurrion’s ship roughly two weeks ago. Our contacts within the SBR say he is grieving the loss of his daughter and Vu Lamurrion is his closest friend and ally. Regular checks on their position have turned up nothing abnormal. They are still out along the border region.”

“None of the older members of the SBR or the normal Board of Regents really trusts the Protectorate or Lycavorians.” Rall spoke as she sipped a large glass of wine. “Quite a few of their younger Board members are beginning to think otherwise, but we have done much to keep this at a status quo. None of them will vote against the older and senior members of the Board and any veto of the SBR’s directives needs to be by two thirds of the Normal Board of Regents. They would never go to the Lycavorians in order to ask for their assistance.”

Wynn nodded. “And every year we gain more slots in their schools and soon we will be able to move against their government as a whole and take them all down. Once we control those senior people... we’ll control how many females we can take and when. And we will not have to limit ourselves to the dark haired ones either.”

“It will also give us access to their abundant supply of Lanthium Ore.” Rall said.

“It is troubling that the Protectorate was able to design and manufacture advanced fusion engines without us discovering it however.” Wynn said. He looked at Corbin. “Are our reports on Union technology accurate Corbin? Do they have access to some sort of advanced alien ship that their core discoveries are derived from?”

“That is what our intelligence believes Executor Wynn?” He said.

“I asked if there is any proof of this?” Wynn spoke.

Corbin nodded his head slowly and carefully. “There are some indications Executor Wynn... however nothing that can be firmly proven beyond a doubt.”

“So let’s find out.” Timmons snapped. “Get someone inside their military in a position to discover this. Or within their scientific community perhaps.”

“That would be infinitely harder than you suggest sir.” Corbin spoke.

“Why?”

“There are very few humans that are within the Durcunusaan ranks Executor Timmons.” Corbin told him. “The physical demands to provide inclusion into their ranks are very nearly impossible for a human to achieve as they stand right now. There are perhaps a dozen or so who have achieved this goal and that is only because they have either been trained from a young age or raised by Lycavorians or vampires to be able to perform at optimal levels for a human.”

“Can we recruit them?” Rall asked.

Corbin shook his head quickly. “Attempting that would be a mistake Executor Rall.” He told her. “Members of the Durcunusaan are ruthlessly vetted. Those humans who have been accepted into their ranks would be impossible to turn because of what they went through to obtain that status. Any new influx of human candidates that were able to complete the training would invite interest and then their genetic improvements would be found.”

“So?” Timmons snapped.

“Genetic improvements such as we use are strictly forbidden within Lycavorian Union space Executor Timmons.” Corbin said. “They have no issues with using genetic altering or means to advance their many medical abilities, but to use them to actually improve physical and mental endurance, strength and such, no. That is not something they practice or allow. There are humans here who were among those who broke away from the original Eridiani during the time of The Schism, and they hold relatively high positions in many fields. One is even President of Earth, but they would neither support nor protect us in any way should we go to them.”

“They are humans!” Timmons protested.

Corbin nodded. “They are humans who have endured centuries of slavery and oppression under the Vampire High Coven. They are humans who watched Leonidas come to power and then gave back to them what the High Coven took away. Importance. There may be some who collaborated with the Coven who would accept our offer, but they are becoming fewer and fewer in number through the years. Leonidas choosing to have Sparta be the unofficial seat of power within the Union showed them that humans are equals to him and the other non-human species. They embraced that. I think you will find that behind the Lycavorian people themselves and then the elves, humans have become the most tenacious when defending the Union and what it does.”

“Traitors!” Wynn snarled. “They are all traitors to their kind. They were traitors then and they are still traitors. We do not need them. We will find other ways to gather this Information. We always do.”

“What about Leonidas’s demands?” Rall asked.

“Corbin... what do you propose?” Wynn asked.

“You are asking me sir?” He responded very surprised.

“You have been within the Alpha Quadrant for nearly three years. You have a better understanding of events and people there. And you need to begin to take more responsibility since one day you will sit on this Council with us.” Wynn said. “What is your assessment? Will he follow through with his threats?”

Corbin thought quickly, looking down at the floor and then back up to the faces in the transmission. “All the intelligence we have suggests that it would not be conducive for us to oppose what he is demanding. There have been very few in the last years that have survived for very long when they have gone against his father if he considers you criminal in nature. All of the intelligence we have now, as little as it is, this suggests that Androcles Leonidas is even harsher when it comes to those he considers criminals. In order to stop the influx of troops and ships moving to the planet Hadaria he ordered that the Jump Gates there be destroyed. Nearly three million civilians who were fleeing the planet at the time were killed by the resulting detonation. Yes... I believe he will do exactly as he says he will as much as I hate to admit it Executor Wynn.”

“So you believe we should placate him?” Wynn asked.

“He is demanding only that we give up the agents and assets that my sister Brendi knew about sir.” Corbin spoke. “There are several she has no knowledge of. I took the initiative and placed them myself.”

“And the Vanari?” Rall asked. “His request does not seem odd to you in any way Corbin? That he would do this?”

“As you said ma’am... there is nothing to suggest he is involved with or working with the Vanari. In fact... given his tone of voice when he spoke to me in regards to them, and the way Director General Dutkne described them to him, I do not think he cares for them in the least. The Leonidas family is quite famous for not tolerating any kind of arrogance and the Vanari are nothing if not arrogant. The Vanari do alter their shipping traffic because of our activity in any given sector. In my opinion it is simply a means for him to target us if we refuse. Disruption of commerce.” Corbin answered. “And it is only a few dozen prisoners that we will be giving up isn’t that correct?”

Rall nodded her head. “Yes... three or four at most. But we will have to make reparations to those we take them from.”

“Then to buy ourselves time I believe we should heed his demands.” Corbin told them. “If not... we must be prepared to face the fact that he will do exactly as he says he will and war will be upon us.”

“Even though they are on the verge of facing down this Kavalian Empire as we speak?” Wynn asked.

“The Protectorate is more than large enough to sustain a war against the Eridiani sir. A war against us. Especially if they receive aide and supplies from the Union.” Corbin answered. “Is that what we really want?”

“No... of course not.” Wynn answered him quickly. “Very well Corbin. We will forward the information on those Vanari most recently taken and you may direct your agents on Earth to do what he has instructed. Do however tell those your sister does not know about to remain ready should we need them.”

Corbin nodded. “Of course sir.” He replied. “Chief Executor... what about my sister?”

“What about her?” Wynn asked. “She is now a traitor to the OSG and the Eridiani. As are your parents and twin sisters. A standing order for their execution will be put in place and acted upon should the opportunity arise.”

“May I also attempt to conduct this liquidation if the opportunity presents itself here in the Alpha Quadrant?” Corbin asked.

Wynn nodded. “If there is no risk to OSG assets and it does not expose the Eridiani to this loose cannon of a Prince.”

Corbin nodded. “Thank you sir. I will advise you as soon as contact has been made and the details worked out.”

“Do that.” Wynn spoke. “And Corbin?”

“Sir?”

“I want all the information you can gather on this Lycavorian Prince.” Wynn spoke. “No matter how trivial it may seem. His interests. The interests of those he has taken as wives. His friends and family. Everything.”

Corbin nodded. “May I ask why sir?” He spoke.

“If his father was so easily assassinated by those Kavalian idiots, perhaps he is not as invulnerable as you suggest.” Wynn answered. “I want others to look at the information who have not been in your position and see if any ideas come up that you may think would work to rid ourselves of this young fool.”

Corbin grinned a very savage grin. “I will send it to you myself sir.”

“Good. Keep us informed. That is all.” Wynn reached out and touched something on his chair and the transmission ended.

Corbin turned slowly to look at Wendall who had been present for the entire exchange. “Start sending out the signals to our people on Earth. I’m going to contact that arrogant fuck and let him know we agree to his terms.”

Wendall nodded. “I’ll take care of it.” He said.

“And Wendall?”

“Corbin?”

“Send for Tomas.” Corbin spoke. “I want my backstabbing sister dead and I want her to die painfully. While my parents and sister’s watch. Then I want them dead. Tomas is the best we have. If anyone can come up with a plan it’s him.”

Wendall nodded. “Consider it done.”

SCIMITAR

Caliria looked at her father in front of her, no emotion on her face in the least. Her void expression matched his as he watched Devra and the others move into the room behind her and take up positions almost as if they were protecting her. Coren stared at his daughter, dressed in the exotic looking jumpsuit that was matte black in color and hugged her many curves in every possible way. Several slits that were along the outside of each leg allowed easy viewing of her cornflower blue skin; her slim shoulders were bare, the top made of the same material and very tight, and conforming to her high, proud breasts. The top had a choker like collar but then an almost transparent satin like material that encased her arms and was tied lightly at her wrists. Coren couldn’t help but admit she was a stunning young woman, and for several moments he forgot that her hair was as black as night. He stepped closer to her slowly.

“I am... I am very happy you are safe Caliria.” He stated watching her honeydew green eyes follow him.

Caliria’s eyes held no mirth in them and her head canted to the side slightly. “Why did you want to see me father?” She asked. “Androcles told me that you were against any attempt to rescue me from the slavers, yet now you wish to see me? Why?”

“Androcles told you? Caliria... I was not against it!” He hissed softly, his eyes flaring in anger. “I was against... I was worried for the impact that it would have for our people if we attempted such a thing.”

“You mean the impact it would have on you.” Caliria told him. “What political fallout would affect you?”

“That’s not... that’s not true!” He snapped. His eyes went to where Devra stood behind her and leaning against the edge of the table and then back to Caliria. “Is that what your mother told you?”

“Mother didn’t have to tell me anything!” Caliria snapped back at him. “She tried to stay away from having to tell me my own father did not wish to see me rescued. That he cared more for his political career than his own daughter. But the man who loves me has no qualms about telling me... he would keep nothing from me! You can not blame her for anything father, not this time. I knew... I have known you hold no love for me father... but to not even want to see me rescued? That is too much.”

“That is not the truth!” Coren barked. “There are... there are bigger issues at stake here Caliria! Our people could not be connected to this type of action in any way! The ramifications if the OSG discovered this would be horrible!”

“Yet you knew that the Lycavorians, that Androcles’s people would be the ones actually conducting any mission.” Caliria said. “That the Vanari would not have any ties to this in the least and still you resisted! Why father?”

“Caliria you must understand that...”

“No!” Caliria said. “What I understand is this; you care more for your political career than you do for me! That has always been the case! Over three hundred years father... not once in all that time have you ever shown me the slightest bit of love! The same love and nurturing that you show Arduri and Naesta! Not once! All because my hair is a different color! A stigma that is your fault to begin with, since the gene for black or dark hair comes from the father! I have accepted that father... and I have lived with it my entire life! Now if there is nothing of importance that you have to say to me I wish to go and see Androcles!”

Coren stepped forward. “No!” He spoke. “I don’t want you to do that!”

Caliria looked at him. “You are joking of course.” She said. “He risked all that he was to come and retrieve me!” She snapped. “All of them did! And they did it because they love me! Just as I love them!”

“You don’t know what it is you are talking about!” Coren snarled. “You have never even met them before! How can you love them? How can you say that?”

“Unlike you father... I believe in fate and destiny.” Caliria spoke. “Just as many of our people do... a fact that you and the SBR, and many of the Board of Regents refuse to accept. I began seeing them in my dreams six months ago father. Six months ago!” She hissed softly. “That was long before I was ever taken by the OSG! I knew their names... what they looked like! I will not allow you to keep me from them when you have never cared enough to even recognize me as your daughter or come to my graduations!”

“It is a political ploy Caliria... can’t you see that?” Coren snapped. “A move by them to insinuate themselves into our society and our government!”

Sadi snorted quite unladylike and shook her head. “Please...” She spat. “Is that what you truly believe?”

“Coren... you are so out of line now it is pathetic to even hear you speak.” Devra rasped at him.

“None of you see it!” Coren barked. “None of you!”

“Because we don’t see everything in your view does not mean we are less intelligent or aware father.” Caliria spoke.

Coren looked at her. “You were illegally researching a Counter Agent to the OSG Serum Caliria!” He almost yelled.

“I was trying to help our people!” Caliria barked right back at him. “The SBR and Board of Regents is content to let the status quo continue! To let the OSG continue to take our females for their slaves and to sell us as pieces of meat! Many of us are not! I am one of them!”

“Do you have any idea what they will do to you when we return?” Coren asked.

Caliria met his eyes. “What gives you the impression I will even be returning with you to Austrova father?” She snapped at him. “And even if I do choose to return, it will be to finish my schooling and they will do nothing! They will be unable to do anything!”

Coren blinked several times and shook his head. “They will arrest you Caliria!” He told her. “They will try you for treason!”

“They will arrest a Princess of the Lycavorian Union?” Carisia spoke from where she leaned against the wall next to Lu’ria. “Wow... now that would be a singularly stupid thing to do.”

Lu’ria smiled and looked at her. “Yes... it would.” She echoed.

Coren looked at them for a long moment and then back to Caliria. “What... what do they mean?” He asked.

“I am Androcles’s mate and wife now father.” Caliria stated and the touch of pride in her voice was very unmistakable.

“What?” He snapped. “I forbid this!”

“You have no authority to forbid it Coren!” Devra growled at him now. “Just as you have no authority to forbid me from being Bren’s wife and mate! We are an open people Coren, but even we do not intrude and make demands of our people’s free will when we do not have the right! You will not start!”

“I will not allow this to happen Caliria!” Coren snarled.

“You have not been a father to me since the day I was born.” Caliria stated. “Do not presume to think you will tell me what to do now! I will do as I wish father! It is my life and I will live it as I choose! And this is how I choose to live it!”

Coren watched with wide eyes as she stepped up to where Sadi stood and crushed her within an embrace of their lips that simply blistered with passion. Sadi molded her body against Caliria’s, drawing her tightly against her as their tongues danced a sweet tango of discovery and love. Ne’Veha could barely contain her laughter at the look on Coren’s face, while Carisia and Lu’ria openly snickered and Devra could only shake her head slightly. It was several moments before Caliria and Sadi parted, both of their faces flush with excitement and desire. Sadi simply stared at her with scorching jungle green eyes. Caliria tasted just as she smelled... just as her eyes were the color of honeydew green melons... her scent was like sweet honeydew on the wind and this is what her lips tasted of.

Caliria turned and looked at her father now, not releasing Sadi from her grasp and reaching out with the opposite hand to draw Ne’Veha to her, something Ne’Veha did without a single hesitation.

“I will live my life how I choose father.” Caliria stated confidently. “And you will have no say in what I do. Goodbye father. I have more important things to do.”

Coren could only watch as Caliria turned and marched for the door with Sadi and Ne’Veha clinging to her hands. He saw Carisia and Lu’ria fall in behind them quickly and then he was alone with Devra in the large conference room. His eyes darkened and he looked at her.

“This is your fault!” He hissed.

Devra couldn’t help herself and she laughed. “My fault?” She spoke. “I believe you were the one who provided the seed in order for me to give birth to her. Now... because she told you to stick it in your duplicitous ass... now it’s my fault?” Devra moved to the door. “Coren... you grow more hypocritical with each passing day. It is no wonder you can not keep a woman happy. Or did you not happen to notice that the way you have treated Tastia has driven her right into the arms of that very handsome young Drow elf Am’uur. And she seems quite please about that if I do say so myself.”

“What?” Coren snapped his eyes wide.

Devra touched the panel and the door opened. “One day you will need to wake up and see that everyone you supposedly care about no longer cares about you Coren. What will you do then Coren Re Mydala? You will be so very alone.”

Devra exited the conference room before Coren could retort, leaving him staring at the door and not really understanding what had just happened.

SCIMITAR

EIGHT HOURS FROM HADARIAN SPACE

“...forgive me Chief Magistrate Sel’ke, if after what has occurred I do not take anything the Kavalians say at face value.” Andro spat venomously. “They have killed my father... tried to kill me twice, kidnapped my mother and hired a mercenary band to kidnap another! They have helped an illegal government come to power on Hadaria, usurping my mother the rightful ruler, and you expect me to believe they will not attempt to kill me again the moment they get the chance?”

“Of that I have little doubt Milord.” Sel’ke answered. “However, I was selected by your father twenty years ago to fill this seat. His words to me were clear that day. He expected me to do what was right no matter what world I came from. I will do what I must in order to defuse a potentially explosive situation.”

“I understand that Chief Magistrate.” Andro spoke. His eyes narrowed and he got to his feet slowly. “What has happened?”

“The Kavalians are balking at the conditions you set for the meeting. We have only been here twelve hours and already they have moved against you after a fashion.” Sel’ke spoke.

“I only set one condition!” Andro snapped. “Remove their warships to the outlying star clusters of the system. They can keep the same amount of ships as my Strike Wing has in and around Hadaria. Twenty-two ships total.”

“They point out that Union ships can Shroud and therefore they would not be able to tell how many ships are really in the planetary corridors of Hadaria.” Sel’ke spoke. “It is a valid point Milord. As Chief Magistrate I cannot simply dismiss it. Also... shortly after we arrived they moved almost immediately to have Magistrate Galia removed from the bench because she does not represent the Hadaria interests as they are now. At least that is what they told me.”

“We saw that coming after the debacle with my sister.” Andro spoke.

Sel’ke nodded. “I told them that she was a member of the court and could not be removed without a unanimous vote by the other judges. Her status as a Hadarian citizen has since been revoked by the new Hadarian government. They have lodged a formal complaint but Galia will remain on the court.”

“Fuck them!” Andro snapped.

“No Milord... because somehow they forced the Bontawillian Magistrate as well as the Folcani Magistrate to step aside and recuse themselves from the proceedings.” Sel’ke answered him. “According to our Union Charter, that allows the world that we are hearing the case on to replace those two Magistrates from a pool of alternates which are chosen before we arrive. They have been replaced with a local Hadarian Religious Judge and a member of the Senior Limian Judiciary Council.”

“The Limian Judiciary Council?” Andro barked. “What the hell is a member of the LJC doing there?”

“Apparently he has been a citizen of Hadaria for some time now and is a member of the Hadarian Sixth Circuit Trade Court.” Sel’ke answered.

“Sixth Circuit Trade Court?” Andro gasped. “Is that a fucking joke?”

“I’m afraid not Milord.” Sel’ke answered. “These are the guidelines by which we are bound to follow.”

“Why did they recuse themselves?” Andro asked.

Sel’ke shook his head. “I have no idea.” He answered. “It happened within two hours of us arriving here. They both came to me and said personal reasons were driving their decisions. I was left with no choice but to choose the two alternates from the local pool.”

“Do you suspect something?” Andro asked.

“That is not for me to say.” Sel’ke answered. “Milord... I must have your assurance that no matter what evidence is presented or how we rule on whatever this information is, you will abide by our decisions.”

“Excuse me?” Andro said.

“Your father gave me his word that he would not interfere or try to overrule our decisions unless they directly impact Union security.” Sel’ke asked.

“This fucking meeting doesn’t meet your criteria for Union security?” Andro snarled. “You have no problems with me coming into an area saturated with Kavalian ships after what they have done in the last six to seven weeks? That doesn’t meet your criteria for Union security Chief Magistrate?”

“Not in the same sense as they way you are viewing it Milord.” Sel’ke spoke. “We are trying to prevent anymore bloodshed from happening and see the reasoning for the Kavalian’s actions. I fear that is not your intent.”

“So you are reading my mind now Chief Magistrate?” Andro asked.

“I am simply making an observation based on your most recent interaction with this court and previous ones in years past.” Sel’ke spoke. “You must allow us to do our jobs Milord. We may be servants of the galaxy, but we are citizens of the Union after all.”

Andro nodded his head slowly. “Very well Chief Magistrate.” He spoke. “I will honor my father’s commitment to the Galactic Court. But my condition for this meeting will not be removed. The Kavalians must withdraw all but an equal number of ships to outlying Hadarian star clusters or this little get together will not take place and I will return to Sparta and declare open war between our peoples. You can pass that information onto the Kavalian and Hadarian watchdogs who are no doubt monitoring your transmission right now. I will arrive in the Hadarian system in eight hours and stop at the border where I will wait for ten hours. I will not proceed until I have seen the Kavalian ships retreat to the outlying star clusters. Good day Chief Magistrate.”

Andro stabbed down on the control panel before the man could answer, ending the one-sided conversation and transmission. He turned slightly to his right and looked at the two holographic images that stood to the side between Sa’sur and Dutkne who leaned against the counter. One image held two women, the second a single woman in uniform.

His first comment went to the dark haired woman on the far right. “Manda?” He asked.

“It’s about as obvious a trap as one can set.” She crossed her arms under her ample chest as she spoke from the bridge of the ARIZONA. “They must think we are completely ignorant.”

“Or they want us to think that they think that.” Marci spoke from Earth where she stood next to Deia in the second transmission.

“Come Marci... no twists or puzzles in your verbiage.” Dutkne spoke shaking his finger at her. “We are far too stressed to try and decipher them.”

Marci grinned and nodded after glancing at Deia who stood beside her. “Sorry.” She said. “Andro... they don’t want war. They want your father’s throne.”

“That’s doesn’t give me warm and fuzzy feelings Marci.” Andro spoke.

“It is fact though Mandri.” Deia spoke.

“I get that part Tenna.” Andro spoke.

“I know what Marci is trying to say.” Sa’sur spoke now. “They are poised for war against the Coven Andro. They do not want war with us because it would open a second front. No force has ever won a war on two separate Galactic fronts. Never in anyone’s history. There have been battles in Earth’s past where this has been accomplished, but never on a Galactic scale as Marci is trying to say.”

Andro shook his head as he came up next to Dutkne. “The High Coven is in disarray.” He spoke evenly. “With Cha’talla’s message going out across their space, they will have even more problems. The Kavalians will know this. They can concentrate nearly all their forces on us. The Coven will... they will pose no threat to the Kavalian Federation soon anyway. They will have their own problems to contend with.”

Deia’s head tilted slightly at this news. “What do you mean Andro?” She asked.

Andro shook his head. “It’s not important right now Tenna.” He stated.

Marci shook her head as well. “You are missing their goal Andro.” She said. “We’ve been going through many of Laustinos’s personal logs. Nesa broke the encryption two days ago. The last seven to eight months of entries have been devoted to assisting the Kavalians in a way where they could just waltz right in and assume power under Pusintin.” She explained to him. “There is no mention of war anywhere Andro. Taking your mother Dysea... trying to kill you and your brothers and sisters... it was all part of the plan. None of it included open war. The attacks against the Drow yes, but never open war. But the ultimate prize and goal never altered and that was your mother For’mya.”

Andro turned to look at her fully. “Her elven royal blood.” He said nodding his head.

Marci nodded slowly. “Yes.”

“Mandri... we believe we have found the reason that he is doing this.” Deia said quickly. “It is a simple phrase buried within the Chronicles of Lycavorian Law. The Twenty-Third Law Scroll to be exact.”

Andro’s eyes narrowed. “Tenna... the Twenty-Third Scroll does not deal with the Law of Ascension. The Fourth Scroll does. The Twenty-Third Scroll references only bloodlines and the line of...” Andro’s eyes went a little wider. “The line of grandfather.”

Deia nodded. “Yes... the line of Leonidas and his father Resumar.” She said softly. “And that is why we did not find it until now. We were trying to find something within the Ascension laws themselves when we should have been looking in the Laws of Bloodlines. Something your father only affirmed even more when he returned to power and told Autolyucus what he did. That only someone of the Leonidas bloodline would ever rule Sparta again.” She spoke softly. “We also believe... the Feravomir and I believe that what you and Eliani initially feared is probably very correct as much as it pains me to say.”

Andro closed his eyes as fresh anger surged through him. “What does it say Tenna?” He asked. “It has to be clear enough in interpretation for them to even attempt this.”

Deia nodded. “Taken in the context it was written... no Lycavorian would misinterpret it. The Kavalians and your uncle however, well I fear they are going to use it in their own twisted context. And if I know the Galactic Court... they may very well get their way as long as your father maintains the façade that he is dead.”

“How is that possible Deia?” Dutkne asked now.

Deia lifted the scroll. “Just listen.” She spoke. “Where as it be known and made to order this day that only the line of Resumar will bear fruit to the Union. No divergence will be drawn within the bloodline wherein the senior, most pure son is of Resumar and of royal blood; it is he who shall rule without question.” Deia looked up from the scroll and settled her eyes on her nephew. “Do you follow?”

Andro nodded slowly meeting her gaze. “Yes... I believe so... but this could not apply to him Tenna.”

“Your father pardoned him Androcles.” Deia spoke. “He returned all rights and privileges as a Spartiates to him.”

“Yes... I understand that... but it still could not apply to him.” Androcles said. “Father already fulfilled that portion of the Scroll by taking my mother as his mate. She is of one of the original Ruling Lycavorian Bloodlines. Royalty in anyone’s definition. And also of the purest of blood. My uncle... he could not assume power once they have a heir. Me.”

Deia nodded. “Unless he challenges this.” She said.

“How? He can not make a claim to the throne... he gave up that right when he became a Kavalian citizen by his own admission.” Andro said.

“He can not... but a son of two royal bloodlines can.” Deia said. “He needs your mother for this. If... son vada carians I can’t believe I am even going to say this... if he forces For’mya to give him a son... that son could challenge you for the throne for it would fit exactly into the last sentence of this law. Joined with the elven royal bloodline... elven royal blood such as For’mya has running in her veins, his son could challenge you not only for rule of the Union but also the elves.”

“It’s why he wanted you dead Andro.” Marci broke in now. “Why he wanted all of you dead. His claim would go unchallenged if you were dead.”

Andro shook his head. “It still doesn’t make sense!” He said quickly. “He had to take into account that I would survive his attempts. If not me then Denali or Arrarn or Resumar. Any of us would be senior to any heir he produced now. And he has to assume that many of our people will consider what he has done as rape of a sitting Queen! They will never allow him to get away with this!”

“No Mandri... he could get away with this because he is the older brother and if he somehow forced For’mya into agreeing to do this of her own free will, then no one could say it was rape.” Deia said softly.

“She would not do this willingly!” Andro snapped. “No... I refuse to believe she would submit to him willingly and...” Andro stopped talking as his eyes grew wide. “That would... that would mean what Eli and I believed is true. That he had the Immortals take medwaw Dysea for a purpose. A sinister purpose!”

Dutkne looked at him. “Submit to him or he insures your mother becomes a slave to Immortals.” He said softly.

Andro nodded his head. “And with the Static Inhibitor implanted in her head she would be unable to feel everything he is telling her is a lie.”

Deia nodded. “Any heir of his and For’mya’s would take full and final precedence within a certain context of the wording of this Chronicle of Law. And if this son was of two recognized royal bloodlines within the Union, then it makes his case all the more stronger in that very same context. We as Lycavorians recognize the royalty of Aricia in a pure blood sense if you will, but it could still be argued that the law meant two completely separate royal bloodlines. If this was the case then his son could challenge for the throne.”

“A certain context?” Andro gasped. “What kind of sibfla is that?”

“Do not raise your voice to me young man!” Deia snapped. “I am just as angry and even more distraught than you!”

Andro lowered his head quickly. “Forgive me Tenna.”

“For’mya is a citizen of the Union.” Marci spoke quickly now. “Therefore any child she has is automatically a citizen. Which would clear the way for a son of your uncle and her to make a claim on not only the throne of Resumar and the Union, but the elven King’s as well. They could conceivably usurp your mother Dysea in this way.”

Deia nodded. “And should this challenge be successful... Pusintin would rule for his child until he came of age. He would then kill your mother and his son eventually and retain authority over the Union as Steward.”

Dutkne looked at Andro and then back to Deia. “That is quite a stretch Deia.” He said. “But like Andro has said... what if he did not succeed in killing Andro. With him and his brothers gone I can see how the context of the wording could be used by him... but not with them living.”

“Janae.” Deia said.

Andro turned his head quickly and met her eyes. “Of course!” He exclaimed.

Dutkne looked back and forth between the two of them. “Care to fill me in?” He asked.

Andro looked at him. “Janae... she is the direct blood descendant of grandfather Resumar and the elven King. Even more direct than medwaw For'mya. Janae's father is... he is the son to grandfather Resumar and his elf concubine. My mother is two generations behind Janae's own bloodline.”

Deia nodded her head. “That is why she was taken.” Deia spoke. “You went after her because she is family to us... but in doing so you unknowingly kept from them what they would have needed to make Pusintin's claim irrefutable. If he had somehow forced her to marry this hypothetical son with For'mya then it would have brought the two surviving bloodlines of the elven King back together as one with Resumar's bloodline. Pusintin is not just thinking of the immediate future here Andro... he is thinking many years down the road as well.”

“Janae is still in danger then.” Andro spoke urgently. “She must be blanketed at all times Tenna. Her father as well!”

“I've already taken care of it.” Marci told him. “She wasn't happy about... she said some very descriptive things about what she would do with anyone who tried to force her to have a child. It made me shudder.” She explained. “I put them both on a ship to Curila 6 an hour ago. I also coordinated with Riall and had him dispatch another Shrouded Fleet Group into the system as support. They will not reveal themselves to anyone unless it is necessary.”

“Tenna... did Laustinos know about our family retreat on Curila?” Andro asked.

Deia shook her head. “Not that I ever told him.” She answered. “That is not to say he did not discover it at some point. He was able to obtain far more information than we ever thought just by patience and putting things together logically. He was not on Ontahe I take it?”

Andro shook his head. “If he was... he escaped moments after he discovered it was me attacking. Sa'sur detected perhaps a dozen ships escaping Ontahe that were of Union design, but I left no orders for her in regards to them.”

“If he was even there to begin with.” Deia said nodding her head. “He will run back to the Kavalians Androcles. They are the only ones who can protect him now, and he is still useful to them in many ways. Do you believe Pusintin will reveal all this with your mother to you on Hadaria?”

Andro nodded his head. “Why else request a hearing with the Galactic Court?” He said. “First Minister Alocgeid has already publicly announced that the Elven Parliament and people as a whole will not abide by anything decided by the Galactic Court until such time as mother is released and returned to her rightful place as queen of the Union. They have already said they do not regard her as such anymore since they believe father to be dead. What other reason is there to make such a statement and to do it on Hadaria, the world that has tossed aside my mother and broken from the Union.”

Deia nodded. “I saw that announcement. Alocgeid will still have to contend with those in the Elven Parliament who have never cared for Lycavorians. Though they are few in number, they can still cause trouble, especially if they begin giving interviews with the Netnews. It is something they have already started doing in regards to you and your action in destroying the Hadarian Jump Gates and the loss of civilian lives.” She said.

Andro nodded. “I saw that coming already Tenna.” He spoke.

“When do we speak to your father?”

“In four hours.” Andro replied. “We will hold at the border until I have confirmation that the Kavalians have withdrawn their ships.”

“And you think they will?” Deia asked.

“What choice do they have?” He answered her. “They can not risk killing me in public Tenna. Now that I think about it... if everything we have talked about is true, killing me in public would be a huge mistake. It would destroy any chance they have of convincing those members of the Union Senate and our people who have never liked father to side with them and their ridiculous ideas. If they kill me publicly now... even those who don't like father will rally behind us. Besides... I don't intend to be here long.”

“Who is going with you?” Deia asked.

“Just Sadi, Eliani and Jomann.” Andro answered. “I will not risk anyone else.”

“Buonau could still make an attempt to take Eliani.” Deia said.

Andro grinned savagely. “Then I hope she does. Jomann will gut her and leave her in the street.”

“Jomann...?” Deia looked at him. “Then...”

Andro nodded. “Yes... just as you had hoped.”

Deia smiled and nodded her head. "Good. I knew I smelled something in that blood of his." She stated. "He is a superior young man and he will worship Eliani. He is cut from the same mold as those who followed your grandfather when he broke from our more barbaric ways so long ago."

Andro nodded. "Yes he will." He took a deep breath. "You will be ready when I initiate the transmission?"

Deia nodded her head. "Helen and I both will be there... as well as Marci and Riall. We will take the transmission from within Dragon Mountain since it is the most secure place and has the most powerful transmitters."

Andro nodded. "Resumar will join us from VORTEX Cruiser 341 with Shiria and the others there."

Deia nodded her head. "You have a few hours Mandri. Try to enjoy your new wife and mate's company before all of this begins."

Andro nodded his head. "We will talk again soon Tenna." Andro said just before ending the transmission. He turned slowly to Dutkne. "Dutkne my friend... you and the Protectorate may have come at a bad time. Darkness is approaching... and nothing I do seems to be able to stem the tide. I do not wish to involve our people in the Protectorate in this."

Dutkne moved closer to him. "Perhaps there is no way to stem the tide Androcles." He said. "And it is like this for a reason."

"What do you mean?" Andro asked.

"Perhaps everything is happening just as it has been preordained." Dutkne spoke. "As much as it burns my mida to say that."

"For what purpose though?" Andro asked.

Dutkne shook his head. "That I don't know." He spoke. "To be honest... I think only one person really knows what is coming. Or has an idea anyway, and that is grandfather Wayonn. Though for some reason he is just not talking. At least not yet."

It had been the most magnificent few hours yet in her life and Caliria Re Mydala never wanted it to end. The most wonderful thing about it was that there had been no sexual contact involved in any way. Not even a hint of it. Whether by design or simply because of who he was, Androcles Leonidas was making her see that her dreams of the last few months had been so very correct. All of them were reserved in some fashion, Caliria knew it was because of what was happening around them, but they relaxed almost completely when it was just them in the bedroom of the large quarters. And what did they do?

They talked. And they listened.

Androcles wore only a pair of soft white pants with crimson trim, and none of them had anything on besides undergarments that left little to the imagination, but all of them were very content just to be in the same room with each other. They shifted positions many times as they talked and ate, each of them always remaining in physical contact somehow. They thought nothing of resting a head on Andro's chest or the firm breasts of a fellow wife and mate. They would drape legs and arms over the most intimate parts of another's body and simply bask in the warmth of the contact. They would feed each other, giggling at times because of some grimace or face that Andro would make. Caliria noticed one thing right away; Carisia and Lu'ria gravitated heavily to each other, while Ne'Veha and Sadi did the same as well as to her. They didn't hesitate to touch each other, but it always seemed that Carisia and Lu'ria somehow remained in constant contact. As did Sadi with Ne'Veha and both of them with her. There was no jealous jockeying for position next to Andro no matter what position he sat in, and he did not show any sign of preferring one over the other. She did notice that he and Sadi shared several looks that only they understood and Caliria realized that this was because they were anomes.

They listened intently as Caliria told them about herself while opening her mind to them. She had to concentrate at first, but it became easier as each minute passed, and within an hour she was speaking within Mindvoice and sharing memories as if it was second nature to her. Unlike her mother, who was proceeding slowly with Bren and this new found gift, Caliria had five exceptionally powerful minds that were aiding her in learning and teaching. Their nuzzling of the back of her neck or her cheek, and Carisia's tiny nibbles on her shoulders were their way of expressing to her what she meant to them and within the second hour she was returning these displays of emotion to them without question. Lu'ria had been so right when she explained to her about Androcles. His beautiful azure eyes held wisdom in them that you would not see in a Vanari that was a hundred times his age and any lingering doubts about their differences in age were quickly tossed to the wind.

Caliria listened with rapt attention both vocally and with her mind as she learned how each of them came to be with Andro. They held nothing back from her, allowing her to see even the most intimate of details. She trembled in his arms as he told her very briefly of Alba Tau and she saw the stark images within his mind of that foul place he would always remember as a nightmare. She saw his father, Sadi's father, Lu'ria and Ne'Veha's family at different points in their lives. And she shared this back with them without hesitation.

Caliria could feel their burning desire for her within their minds. That was something she did not question after the first hour. Yet they knew she was still weak and her Alkay was slowly rebuilding itself after her ordeal and no matter how much they desired her, they would not do anything to put her at risk or spoil what they would soon enough share. It was simply enough to be with them Caliria thought. She was aroused yes, and her Alkay sometimes seeped through her pores, but it did not last long on her skin as one of them would quickly kiss her on that spot or delicately lick her skin. It had a definite effect on all of them, but Caliria realized that unlike many different species to include most Lycavorians, they were able to easily control the desire and extreme want it could inflame in a person.

Now they sat entangled on the bed wonderfully content. Andro had his back to the large headboard; Caliria pressed tightly to one side and Sadi the other. Ne'Veha spooned her from behind, her soft, satiny dark brown hair spilling over one of Caliria's shoulders. Lu'ria rested on her back with her head using Sadi's hip as a cushion and her shimmering white hair splayed out over her deeply tanned leg. Her long legs were tossed over one of Andro's and Carisia was nestled quite snugly between Lu'ria's legs with her head on her well defined abdomen. Lu'ria's long fingers absently stroked Carisia's shoulder and the outside of her breast in an almost possessive manner.

Caliria lifted her eyes to Andro's face, taking in the chiseled features and neatly trimmed goatee, as well as the most relaxed expression she had yet seen from him. She drew her leg up ever so slightly and used her fingers to trace the Talon Guardian brand over his heart. Sadi watched her with bright jungle green eyes and finally spoke.

"What are you thinking Inamarno?" She asked.

Caliria smiled. "I am thinking of how so very wrong my people have been for so long." She answered. "About Lycavorians and other species. We are such a reticent species and we trust no one who is not like us."

"Do you think it will change Inamarno?" Lu'ria asked from her spot turning to gaze at her with bright amber colored eyes. "You... your mother... your brother and sisters..."

"My sisters?" Caliria asked.

Carisia giggled. "Even I can see it..." She said. "And I am not wolf and can't smell it."

"Smell what?" Caliria prodded more.

"Arduri... she desires my brother and Lisisa." Andro spoke opening his eyes and stroking her shoulder and Sadi's back.

"You can smell that in her?" Caliria asked.

Andro nodded his head. "Quite prominently too. And it is not something that is just a passing interest either."

"Your sense of smell is that acute?" Caliria asked.

Andro laughed softly and looked down into her honeydew green eyes. "My father once tracked my mothers across two thousand kilometers of barren planet. They were angry with him for something and he thought he had lost them. He went after them, they led him on quite the chase across the Union, but he finally found them on a planet in The Wilds. As with all of you, I have burned your scents into my brain. I could track you across a planet easily, no matter how populated it is. And your Mindvoice imprint is easy enough to follow even through the stars of the galaxy. At least to me."

"I never understood why she agreed to marry Cruor Ahn Vernalo." Caliria spoke softly. "He is such a pompous ass. No different than his father." She looked at Andro. "Are you sure Androcles?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"Do your brother and sister know?" Caliria asked.

"I spoke with Lisisa briefly when they returned." Andro said. "I think she has an idea of this. At least that is what her scent tells me. Deni is oblivious right now but Lisisa will fill him in. I don't think it is something that is just random. I have a feeling your family and ours is meant to be bound together in many ways Inamarno. Everything happens for a reason.”

“Why can’t we go to the surface of Hadaria with you and Sadi Andro?” Lu'ria asked the question that had been eating at all of them.

“It is not because I don’t want you there Ilythiiri Tessai.” He answered quickly. “It is more for security reasons than anything else.”

“What security reasons?” Lu'ria kept at him.

“They will know by now that my cousin is dead.” Andro told her. “They will know I am the one who killed him and they will know why. Bringing you to the surface and allowing them to see you, the reason my cousin died, that could very possibly cause them to do something in anger that they had not planned on and ultimately hurt my mother.”

“Nindyn l'puul fuer'yonii! Nind zhahen galla ulu elgg uns'aa!” Lu'ria hissed. (Those foul beasts! They were trying to kill me!)

Andro nodded. “I know this Ilythiiri Tessai. They will not see it that way.” He told her reaching out and placing the back of his hand to her cheek. “Carisia is not going because she is a vampire and again that would only inflame tensions. Inamarno is not going because we do not want our ties to the Vanari to become known just yet and SirsanGai is not going because she will be flying the Mark II that will be orbiting just outside the city and fully Shrouded. Carrying all of you.”

All of them looked at him with wide eyes. “What?” Lu'ria and Carisia gasped turning slightly and looking at him.

“You didn’t honestly think I was going to go to the surface of a hostile planet and not have someone ready to come pull our asses out of the fire did you?” Andro told her with a smile. “Majeir and Anthar will be with you and should the need arise, I will expect you to come tearing across the skies to get us.”

“That is something you need never question!” Lu'ria exclaimed. “We...”

The COM unit on the table beside their bed chimed loudly, cutting off her words. Andro rolled his eyes and reach over to stab the panel.

“Yes?”

“Milord... Duty Officer here. Captain Sa'sur told me to inform you when we received confirmation that all Kavalian ships have pulled out of the planetary sector.” The male voice spoke. “The Kavalian bastards screamed about for sure, but the only remaining ships in range of Hadaria are equal in number to our Strike Wing.”

“Very well.” Andro spoke. “Is everything ready for our secure COM?”

“Standing by sire. We will initiate the transmission in forty-three minutes and link all signals together then.” The voice answered.

“Thank you Lieutenant Commander.” Andro spoke.

“Sire.”

The COM went silent and Andro looked first at Sadi and then each of them. “As much as I hate it my beautiful and delicious mates, it is time to go to work. For all of us.”

“Wait!” Caliria exclaimed. “What... what do I do?”

“Eliani asked for you to join her in the Med Bay.” Andro said. “She would like for you to take command of the Med Bay while she is on the surface with me.”

“Me?” Caliria gasped.

Andro nodded. “Eliani’s words were very simple and to the point as my sister usually is.” He stated with a small smile. “Next to me she is the smartest tool on this ship when it comes to medical treatment. Hell... she cured her people. Not withstanding her decision to fall in love with you that is. Damn straight she should be in charge when I’m gone. Now stop bothering me... Jomann and I are having too much fun!” Andro grinned. “I did not press her on what she and Jomann were doing that was fun... but yes.” He leaned over and kissed her softly. “My family will grow on you Inamarno. Most of them are deficient in some way and they will think you utterly insane for falling in love with me. Especially my father.”

Sadi chuckled. “You should have heard what he told me at our joining.” She said. “It was hysterically funny and I was laughing for a full hour.” She reached for Caliria’s hand as they began to rise. “Welcome to our world Inamarno. You’ll fit right in. Don’t worry.”

EARTH
DRAGON MOUNTAIN
MINDVOICE HOLOGRAPHIC PROJECTION ROOM

“... sure know how to piss people off don't you boy?” Martin spoke gruffly to the crystal clear holographic image of his oldest son.

This unique and specialized form of communication was developed by Avi and Admiral O'Connor. It combined the powerful transmitters built into capital ships and certain ground installations, all linking back to the massive Mindvoice Neural Boosters built into City Ship 41. When linked together and operating at full power, the huge storage room within CS 41 acted as a colossal Mindvoice receiver and holographic generator. Avi then programmed the emitters to link with historical databases and design a scenario that combined ancient Spartan design and modern architectural creations. It was here that the Leonidas family, and others with sufficient Mindvoice ability had met through the years to discuss matters. The last time they had used this was during the Evolli War to formulate the last parts of the battles that ended that war. Each individual would simply sit in certain rooms either on the ships or in the ground installations and the neural boosters did the rest.

It was an incredible means of communications and one of the most strictly guarded pieces of technology that the Union possessed. The room they were in was a massive gathering hall with walls and ceiling, holographic in nature of course, but the walls were partially made of glass and you could look out on the Gulf of Laconia. Couches and chairs were also part of the room and the holographic projections of everyone could be seen occupying these pieces of furniture or just standing around the huge room. Even the bonded dragons of everyone in the family were present, all of them sitting along the walls of the huge meeting hall. Caliria was still trying to get used to the incredible fact that she was sitting in a chair on the SCIMITAR but her Mindvoice projection was here in this room with so many different people. She knew the others were helping her, but it appeared that only Sadi was unfazed by what was happening. She had apparently used something of this nature before. Her mother sat in a chair with an equally stunned expression on her face, Bren standing to her left.

It was, simply put, the most amazing thing she had ever experienced.

Andro smiled at the projection of his father and shrugged his broad shoulders. “I learned from the best.” He stated.

Martin stared at his son's image from the room on Curila 6 and couldn't help but feel the pride swell within his chest. He finally chuckled and nodded his head. “Yeah... I do have that ability don't I?” He spoke.

“One of your less endearing traits my son.” Gorgo spoke from where she sat in the chair next to a smiling Aricia.

“Introductions first father, so you know who it is you are speaking too and their grasp of the situation.” Andro stated turning and motioning to where Devra sat. Her green eyes grew much wider when she saw this. “Allow me to introduce Regent Devra Re Mydala of the Vanari Empire. This is Inamarno's mother. Naesta, Arduri and Nirilo as well.”

Martin bowed his head to her without hesitation. “It is an honor Regent Re Mydala.” He spoke.

Devra rose to her feet quickly. “It is... oh my... it is my honor Milord King Leonidas.”

Martin turned quickly to Andro. “You didn't tell her?” He asked.

Andro shook his head. “There really hasn't been a whole lot of time for small talk father. I haven't had the chance.”

Devra looked horrified. “Tell me what? Oh... what have I done Bren?” She exclaimed turning to look at Bren and her image shimmering in and out of view.

Bren smiled and moved up next to her. “You have done nothing Devra my mate.” He said.

Devra looked down at her hands which were fading in and out of sight. “What is wrong?”

“Avi designed the program for all us to be sitting. The more relaxed our physical bodies are, the easier it is for the emitters to compensate.” Martin said with a smile. “I'm guessing you just stood up because you think you have done something wrong?”

“Put your mind at ease Devra Re Mydala and please sit back down.” Wayonn spoke from near one of the massive windows. “Martin is not one to stand on formality, especially from those who are now part of his family.”

Devra’s image stopped fading in and out and once more became clear and seamless as she looked at where Caliria sat. “Forgive me.” She said quickly. “This is... this technique of communication is so very... it is utterly amazing.”

“The Vanari don’t have this?” Martin asked surprised.

Devra shook her head. “Holographic communications yes... but nothing of this advanced technology and utter clarity.”

Martin smiled. “Pretty cool huh?”

“It is astounding.” Devra exclaimed.

“You’ll get used to it.” Martin said with a grin. “You can make your projection do just about anything you want from where you are as you get stronger in Mindvoice. I’m sure Bren will make sure he works with his new mate every day.”

Bren nodded. “Without question sire.” He replied.

Andro moved in front of Caliria and his image reached out to pull her to her feet and he held her hand. “Father... mothers... this is Inamarno. Caliria Re Mydala.”

Caliria looked up into the eyes of Andro's father. Even his holographic image was imposing she decided. She watched as he reached out and took her holographic hand in his and his dark eyes almost twinkled.

“This is not exactly how we like to meet new additions to our family.” Martin told her with warmth in his voice. “I must apologize that we can not meet you and Lu'ria and Ne'Veha and Carisia in person.” His eyes drifted to each of them, finally coming to rest on Carisia. “And I want you to know that we will make up for it. Especially to those who I have caused pain with my words.”

Carisia choked back a reply and ended up only smiling at him for an apology she never thought she needed. “I look forward to that day.” She finally said.

Martin bowed his head to her with a smile and released Caliria’s hands. He looked at Andro. “Maybe someday you’ll fill me in on how you got all of them to fall in love with you. Doesn’t seem natural.”

“Certainly father... as soon as you tell us how you tricked our mothers into falling in love with you.” Andro stated with a smile.

That brought laughter from most everyone in the room and caused Martin to blush red under his tanned skin. “He’s got a point father.” Lisisa spoke from where she sat.

Martin looked at his oldest son. “Wise ass.” He muttered. The movement to their right caused them to turn and watch as Anja rose from her spot next to Cirith and Gorgo and she crossed the room to stand in front of where Eliani and Jomann stood by the huge window. Anja gazed at her daughter, took in the glowing face and eyes, not to mention the smallish bruises and the two puncture marks in the crook of her shoulder.

“Eli?” Anja asked softly. “Is this...?”

Eliani nodded quickly and her image stepped closer to Jomann, taking his thick arm in her hands. “This is Jomann momma.” She said.

Anja looked up at the tall Spartan. “He is... he is very tall Eli.” Anja finally muttered.

“Everyone is tall to you Red.” Martin spoke as he stepped over in front of Jomann who seemed to take a deep breath.

Anja turned her head and looked at him. “Watch yourself lover.” She warned using her hand to slap him hard in the abdomen. “You just might wake up one morning shorter than you are now if you get me drift.”

Martin winced. “Ouch! Check fire! Check fire!”

Anja smiled brilliantly and turned back to Jomann. “My first bit of advice Jomann... we can be a devious bunch. Careful.”

Jomann’s eyes darted back and forth between Anja and martin and he nodded. “Thank you my... my Queen.”

Martin looked down into his daughter’s beautiful beaming face and reached out with his hands. Jomann watched as she placed her palms in his and looked at him. “Did he steal your breath away Eli?” Martin asked her with a soft smile.

Eliani smiled and nodded her head quickly. “Yes poppa!” She answered. “And so much more. He...”

“I don’t need details!” Martin barked quickly. He looked at Jomann. “Not from you! I’ll get them from your brothers when I see them.”

“You sure will!” Denali chimed in.

“And all the complaints as well for keeping us awake for ten hours straight!” Arrarn offered up.

“Or never letting us get to sleep to begin with.” Normya Leonidas added her two cents from the couch where she sat with Tir’ut.

Tir’ut leaned closer to his beautiful half elf Blessed Wife. “Il kal'daka darthirii... we were not sleeping.” He whispered.

Normya poked him in the ribs with her elbow, looking ridiculously small sitting next to him. “They don’t need to know that.” Normya hissed drawing smiles from everyone.

Anja’s eyes grew a little wider now. “Ten hours straight?” She said. “Wow... I’m very suitably impressed.”

“Momma stop!” Eliani exclaimed as Jomann’s face flushed and became red. She turned to where Arrarn sat between Narice and Toria. “And it was eleven hours you riad aulved! You can’t even tell time!”

“Oh... pardon me!” Arrarn snapped right back.

All of them heard the snort of mirth and turned to see Devra barely holding the laughter in. Deia leaned forward from her seat next to Helen with a smile on her face. “You should see them when they are actually together.” She stated.

“Every minute I spend among your people... it alters everything the Vanari have been led and brought up to believe.” Devra told her. She looked at Wayonn. “You told me this all those years ago and I just never believed.”

Wayonn nodded. “It just took a little longer than I had anticipated for you to discover it yourself.” He stated. “No harm done. Though... this action is not precisely what I meant for you to understand.”

“I do not understand this!” The female voice erupted causing all of them to turn and look at Shiria. She sat on the couch with Athani and her face showed her confusion and even some anger. “How can you act this way with everything that is going on? We should be making plans! Discussing tactics! Not having this ridiculous sexual banter back and forth between all of you!”

Martin and Andro turned and looked at Resumar now who simply shrugged his shoulders in helplessness. “I tried to explain it to her father, but I obviously didn’t do a very good job.” He said.

“Then perhaps I can.” Arzoal’s voice spoke. It was not surprising to those who had experienced it before, but to those who saw it for the first time it was truly a wonder. Arzoal’s muzzle actually moved with the words she spoke and Shiria looked stunned. “You forget that there are almost no restrictions within this type of communication my sister Pralor. When Avi first developed this I told him I wanted it so that our muzzles and lips could move like we were actually talking. It is less shocking for those when they come here for the first time.”

“Arzoal... we have so much to...” Shiria began to speak.

“Yes we do... however... much of the strength and power behind the Lycavorian people as a whole and the Leonidas family in particular is their ability to adapt.” Arzoal spoke. “No matter how dark it may appear... they use laconic humor to keep their grasp on reality. When they lose that ability Shiria... then it will be time for us to worry. They have a missing mate and mother... but to not acknowledge the love and sense of family that has got them this far would be betraying For'mya and all they stand for. All that she helped raise them to acknowledge.”

Shiria looked at Resumar briefly and then back to Arzoal. “Forgive me.” She said softly.

“You have done nothing wrong so forgiveness is not needed.” Helen spoke now rising to move next to the projection of her Bonded Sister. “We are very different from what you have experienced with most of the Kavalian people Shiria. You have been away from those who are like you as well... for far too long. It is time for you to see what your actions through the millennia have wrought. And then perhaps you can teach those Kavalians who are actually on our side and want nothing more than to live in peace and prosper.”

Shiria looked at her and smiled. “I was very happy when I felt Canth pass his memories and knowledge to you Helen.” She spoke. “He made a superior choice.”

Helen laughed softly. “Some would debate that with you.” She said. “I will not.”

Martin turned and moved to the center of the room. “Alright... let’s get started.” He spoke.

“Father... where is Uncle Daniel?” Andro asked.

Martin met his eyes. “He’s filling out the last of our gear and loading Yuriko’s OMEN.” He said.

“Why?” Andro pressed his father further.

Martin’s eyes hardened into small points. “Because I’m done waiting. Once your meeting is over I’m going hunting. I may not be able to kill my brother but...”

“STOP IT!” Gorgo screamed as she came to her feet startling everyone.

They all turned to look at her with looks of astonishment and Martin took a step towards her with a worried expression on his face. “Mother what...”

Gorgo looked at him, her still beautiful face twisted into what appeared to be a mask of pain. Riall stepped towards her reaching for him with one hand.

“Gorgo my love... now is not...” He began to speak.

“No my mate!” Gorgo spat turning to look at him. “I can not let this continue anymore! I won’t let this continue anymore! I cannot!”

Martin looked from his mother to Riall and then back again. “Mother... mother what is going on?”

Gorgo turned back to face him. “Do you think I don’t know my son?” She rasped. “Did you think I would never discover it?”

“Discover what?” Martin asked his face a mask of confusion.

Gorgo moved closer to him, looking up into his face. “Your Queens and I speak of so much when you are not around Martin Leonidas.”

Martin turned and looked to where Aricia and the others were sitting. He watched his anome slowly get to her feet and move closer, her azure blue eyes focused on Gorgo. “Gorgo... we do not have to discuss this now.” She said softly. “Truly... it...”

“When will we discuss it Aricia?” Gorgo spoke looking at her. Her eyes drifted over Anja, Dysea, Isabella and even Cirith. “I can not allow this to go on any longer. Not after what has happened.”

“Allow what to go on?” Martin asked quickly. “What’s going on?”

Gorgo moved closer to him and inhaled deeply of her son’s minty scent. The same scent he had when he was only three months old. She could remember vividly that day she lost him on that ship and what she felt as she saw it explode. She could remember exactly what emotions tore through her when she thought her last connection to her beloved Leonidas was lost forever. She could remember with utter clarity the day he came into that cell on Lycavore and wrapped her within his arms because he knew who she was. She had thought it all some sort of twisted dream meant to torture her mind while a prisoner. On that day Gorgo had been reborn. The baby she had thought gone forever returned to her fully grown, a proud and intimidating Spartan. The image of his father and it took her breath away. Through these past years she had seen the man he had grown into with the initial guidance of Dymas the Guardian of the Line and then later with the gentle hand of William Wallace watching over him. There was some truth to the rumor among the citizens of the Union that if you wanted something from King Leonidas you needed to go to his mother and she would get it for you. He never refused his mother and Gorgo knew this was right. The day he had brought her home to Sparta had been the happiest day of her life and to know that he was allowing suffering to those he loved because of her was not something she could live with anymore.

“It must end Martin.” Gorgo spoke reaching up to place her palm to his cheek. “It must end now.”

“That would be good... I’ll end it... if I knew what in the hell you were talking about.” Martin told her.

“Do you think I don’t know why you can not kill him?” Gorgo asked. “Do you think I don’t know why you did not kill him that day so long ago? Why you have let him cling to a life that is not his all of these years?”

Martin’s face softened somewhat as he realized what his mother was talking about now. “Mother you...”

“Have you never wondered why I did not support your action in reinstating his Spartiates status so you could rise a statue to him on King’s row?” Gorgo spoke. “You did this out of love for a brother you never knew and even then I knew it was wrong.”

“Your reasons were your own mother.” Martin spoke. “I will never...”

“Why didn’t you kill him Martin?” Gorgo asked him suddenly cutting off his words.

“What?” He gasped.

“You had him between your jaws!” Gorgo continued. “You had beaten him because you fought for more than power and wealth! You fought for love and honor and...”

“Mother this...”

“Why didn’t you kill him that day damn you?” Gorgo screamed out causing his eyes to grow wide.

Riall took another step towards her, reaching out once more but stopped in his tracks when Andro lifted his arm and pointed at him. “No grandfather Riall.” He said sternly shaking his head as he held out his other arm, keeping his brothers and sisters from moving forward as well.

Martin stared at his mother not even hearing his son’s words. “How... how can you ask me that mother?” He stammered.

“Answer my question!” Gorgo snarled at him.

“Mother...”

“Answer me anse forn!”

Martin’s eyes flared angrily. “He is your son!” He barked out. “My brother! I would not take his life before your eyes! I would not...!”

The slap was resounding and even in the holographic generated scenario, because of the Mindvoice power of both Gorgo and Martin, it connected as if it was a real blow. Martin Leonidas staggered back slightly, his hand going to his face where her hand had struck him his eyes wide in disbelief. He glanced at her again, only to have another slap connect to the side of his face; Gorgo’s face a masquerade of pain and anguish.

“Your brother Pleistarchus is dead!” Gorgo screamed out. “He is dead! He died the day he betrayed his people and his blood! All these years I have lived with the knowledge that you did not kill him because of me! Because I was there witnessing it! Because in your mind I had suffered enough in my life! No more Martin! No more do you hear me!”

“It... I would be dishonoring you to do such a thing! Dishonoring our father!” Martin hissed softly. “To take his life before the eyes of our mother! No! I will...”

“He is dead!” Gorgo barked angrily. “Do you hear me? He is dead! Daniel Simpson is your brother! He has always been your brother! If not by blood then by all the two of you have experienced and lived through together!” Gorgo moved closer to him and reached out to take his face in her hands. He shrunk back initially fearing she would hit him again but Gorgo was too fast and her hands took his face in their grasp. “Ritaro and Clelon and Ciuss are your half brothers and they love you knowing no distinction! Just as you have raised your own sons!”

“Mother I can’t...”

“You will not do this anymore!” Gorgo spat at him. “You will let go of this false emotion you have! I will not let you allow harm to come to those who you love because of some silly vow you made to me.”

“It is not silly!” Martin growled.

“This man has taken your mate! Your Kinsoargai! A woman who is part of who you are my son!” Gorgo hissed at him.

“You don’t think I know that?” Martin barked angrily. “I see her face every time I close my eyes!”

Gorgo gripped his face tighter pulling him down slightly until their faces were only inches apart. “For years since that day I have gone to your father’s place. Do you know why I go there Martin? I go there because I carry a burden that only he and I can carry and I carry it for both of us!”

“Mother you...”

“Be silent!” Gorgo snapped. “For years I have gone there in the hopes that one day he would appear to me as he appeared to you. To give me guidance and tell me what to do with this burden I carry for both of us! I have not asked that question of him in over a decade Martin, because it was not needed and we have gone on with our lives and lived happy and free.” She shook her head. “I had hoped perhaps... I had hoped that it would never need to be spoken of again. I am not so lucky it seems.”

“Mother this is not your fault!” Martin told her pulling her close to him.

Gorgo met his eyes. “But it is Martin.” She said softly. “It is my fault because your vow to me has kept you from following your Spartan and Lycavorian instincts. Had you done what your blood told you to do that day, your Kinsoargai would not be suffering as she is now. Believing you are dead! Believing all she loves is dead!”

“I don’t... we don’t know that.” Martin said softly.

“Don’t we?” Gorgo told him. “It ends now Martin my son!”

“Mother I can...”

“Your father came to me Martin my son.” Gorgo said her face animate and bright and she watched Martin’s eyes grow wide. “Your father came to me in my dreams in this very place where we are not two days ago!”

Martin looked up at Riall quickly and he nodded. “She would not let me tell anyone.” He stated. “I was... I was beside myself. She levitated off the bed and...”

Gorgo smiled brilliantly. “We walked along the Evrotas river Martin, just as we used too so many thousands of years ago. He felt my anguish and pain and the gods of time and mystery allowed him to come and see me one last time. Just as he appeared to you. He finally was able to tell me himself what he did not that day he left. What he told you to tell me.”

Martin’s eyes were wide and his face bright as he listened to her. “What did he... what did he tell you mother?”

“He lives in you Martin. He lives in me. In all of us. Just as you showed me... he sees everything we see.” Gorgo spoke softly enrapturing everyone in the room. “We talked of many things my son... the pride he feels for you. For how you and your wives and mates have raised your children. All of them, especially your sons. He gave me his blessing to do what I am going to do now Martin.”

“His blessing?” Martin gasped.

Gorgo nodded her head. “His blessing to tell you to let go!” She spoke. “Your brother died over three thousand years ago Martin Leonidas. Your father and I will no longer have you allow him to cause harm to others because of us.”

“What?” Martin gasped.

“Hear me Martin Leonidas.” Gorgo spoke. “I speak with the words of your father as well as my own now. We release you from this false vow you feel you must carry. This man... this Pusintin... he has taken your mate. Your Kinsoaurgai. He has hurt her... caused her pain. It is your duty as a Spartan and King to stop this.”

“I will mother.” Martin said. “I will and I...”

Gorgo shook her head. “You are not hearing me!” She snapped loudly. “We release you Martin! If this man has... if he has defiled your mate... if he has forced himself upon her then there is only one thing we want of you my son.”

Gorgo stepped back from him and straightened the jumpsuit she wore before taking a deep breath. Martin stepped towards her but she held up her hand. She lifted her head and met his eyes.

“If this man has done these things you fear... if he has gone against the very blood that runs in his veins then it proves he died long ago.” Gorgo spoke. “If he has done these things Martin... then you have only one mission. You do what it takes... no matter the risk or the consequences... and you return your Kinsoaurgai to her place here with her family. Where she belongs. You remove the chains that bind you my son and you do what must be done. As a Spartan and a Lycavorian.”

“I will mother.” Martin said. “I swear to you I will.”

“And this man who has done these things.” Gorgo spoke softly looking up into his face. “This man... you bring your father and I his vile head on your shield!” Gorgo spoke those last words with more vitriol than anyone had ever heard from her in their lifetimes. Her words drew gasps of stunned shocked from many people in the room with them as she glared at her son.

“You bring us his head on your shield Martin Leonidas... for only then will it be truly over. Only then will he atone for the crimes he has committed.” Gorgo spoke harshly. Her image took a deep breath and she stood up to her full height. “I have said my peace and now I am going to go and play with my grandchildren. Remember Martin my son, He watches over everything we see. In your reflection he lives in you.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY

STRIKER DT MARK II STRIKER 11 ARRIVING HADARIA CENTRAL SPACEPORT

It was quiet in the rear of the Mark II STRIKER DT as Arrarn Leonidas easily guided the ship down through the atmosphere, the three Hadarian Defense Forces Interceptors trying to keep pace with the much larger ship with a pilot who could fly circles around them in his sleep. Toria Leonidas kept looking over at her half elf husband, none of the Leonidas children having spoken a whole lot after what had taken place during their communication. Lady Gorgo's words and emotional display had taken everyone by complete surprise and even several minutes after she had departed the linked communication it still came as quite a shock. Toria gazed at Arrarn and his beautiful handsome face from the side, her large, clear blue eyes never tiring of looking at him. Just as they never tired of looking at Narice. Toria Leonidas blessed the day she was chosen to go on the mission to Earth, for it had brought her first to Narice and then it gave them both the chance to discover the man they worshiped in Arrarn Leonidas. He was without a doubt the most handsome of the Leonidas sons, and both Toria and Narice knew that there were many young Lycavorian and elf females who were now disappointed that he was no longer available. He belonged to her and Narice body and mind and he made no bones about that in the least. They had spent three more hours within the transmission, different parts of what they would do being discussed, but it was very obvious to even the casual observer that everyone's minds were now elsewhere. Especially that of the King himself.

She and Narice had discovered early on that there was a special connection between all of the Leonidas children, a connection that no one else could understand. A place where they could talk amongst themselves whenever they wanted within Mindvoice. A special place that wasn't accessible even to those they loved and called wife or husband. They would share whatever was spoken of with those that they loved Toria knew, but this particular instance had rattled all of them and it was going to take some time before they began to share what they had spoken of she knew.

"Arrarn?" She spoke softly.

Arrarn's dark eyes turned to look at her. "Ummm?"

"Are you..." Toria began to ask.

Arrarn reached over knowing instantly what she was trying to do and took her hand from the control panel. He leaned over and brought it to his lips where he kissed her soft knuckles and then nodded his head. "I am fine." He told her.

"She is your mother Arrarn." Toria said softly. "I don't think anyone would expect you to not be savagely angry at what has happened. What the Kavalians have done. What we may have to see."

Arrarn nodded his head. "And in order to help her... in order to help her Toria my wife, I need to maintain my calm so we can do what we came here to do."

"Androcles and your father did not say much after your grandmother's display." Toria spoke. "He has not said much since the end of the transmission to be honest. Many of us were... we were wondering if he was ok?"

Arrarn turned his head back and adjusted their course as they broke through the clouds and the landscape of Hadaria filled their cockpit windows. "Yes... he has spoken." Arrarn told her. "He just hasn't spoken with words Toria. He is the most private of all of us Toria, far too much like our father when it comes to holding in his feelings. He speaks with Elynth and his mates in Mindvoice when he becomes contemplative like he has been. Andro is... he is the rock we all lean on. Next to my father and my Uncle Danny, I don't think I know of a man who has more willpower and utter determination than my brother."

"Is this why he refused to let Narice come with us?" Toria asked.

Arrarn looked at her again. "He didn't let Narice come with us because of who she is Toria, you know that." He answered her. "The Kavalians are still at war with the High Coven and the moment they saw her exit the ship she would have become a prime target no matter what else was happening. They know who she is and they would have come after her. Andro is not about to let that happen and neither will I. Besides... she does not have your analytical skills and that is why Andro wanted you here." He told her. "Because not only can you help me to fly the STRIKER, but your other skills are invaluable my beautiful wife and mate. Primarily your skills of observation because of your training."

Toria nodded. "I know... take note of everything I see and file it away."

"He trusts you Toria." Arrarn told her. "You are my mate and wife. Never doubt he does not trust you completely. You would not be here if he did not."

“There are just times when your brother frightens me Du'ased m'ranndii.” Toria said as she adjusted their thruster power. “I know that it is silly after all he has done to save us but I can’t help it. Many of us can’t.”

Arrarn smiled warmly at her. “There are times when he frightens all of us Toria.” He stated. “Just remember that you are a Leonidas now. Part of our family. Andro more than any of us takes that very seriously.”

“Hadarian Flight Leader to Union STRIKER. Respond.” The male voice broke in over the COM.

Arrarn turned and looked out his cockpit window at the fighter that was flying off to their side. “STRIKER 11. Go ahead.”

“You are directed to land at the Western Continent Elder Militia Compound.” The voice told them.

“Negative Flight Leader.” Arrarn replied tersely. “The stipulation as stated in our earlier communications to us was to land at the former palace of my mother on the East Field. That was the plan.”

“Your routing has been changed STRIKER 11.” The pilot of the fighter answered with a large amount of sarcasm in his voice. “You are now directed to land at the Western Continent Elder Militia Compound where your ship and anyone on board will undergo a thorough search for weapons or elicited material.”

Arrarn turned as Andro came into the cockpit. “By whose order?” He snapped.

“By order of Elder Healer and Prime Minister Buonau.” The pilot answered in a tone that seemed to ask if Arrarn was stupid.

“That is not the procedure we agreed too.” Arrarn spoke again.

“The Prime Minister is changing the procedure, or did you not understand me the first time?” The pilot snickered.

“She’s pressing... trying to see what we will let her get away with. She knows how badly we want this meeting... if only to see mother.” Andro spoke.

“So?” Arrarn asked.

Andro nodded. “We will play their game for now fervon.” He said. “How soon until we get there?”

Arrarn’s hands were moving over his control console. “Twenty minutes. As soon as I dust these idiots.”

Andro grinned. “By all means.” He said leaning over to kiss Toria softly on the cheek and watching as her eyes turned to him in surprise.

“You have no reason to fear me Toria Leonidas.” He said softly reaching up to place his hand on her shoulder and squeezing gently. “Always remember that.”

“STRIKER 11 acknowledges your transmission Flight Leader.” Arrarn spoke as he smiled at his brother’s words to his wife.

“Fall into formation behind me.” The pilot ordered. “We will escort you...”

“We know the way Flight Leader.” Arrarn interrupted him. “And we certainly don’t need you to escort us!”

“I have my orders STRIKER 11!”

“Nubou your orders!” Arrarn barked out stabbing down on his console. “And have a nice day!”

The Mark II STRIKER DT executed a near ninety-degree turn and its powerful engines lit the sky brightly as it accelerated away from the chasing Hadarian fighters with little trouble. The STRIKER DTs were all designed for speed and maneuverability first, combat second, and the Hadarian fighters could not match either. Andro pounded Arrarn on the shoulder with a smile before turning and moving back into the rear section of the STRIKER DT Mark II. The interior layout was almost identical to the old STRIKER DTs, but now four slightly smaller dragon pens occupied the rear of the ship instead of two. The center of the ship had a somewhat larger star chart table and an additional couch, while all the quarters were now set in the back of the ship. Since these ships had been designed specifically for different members of the Royal Family, much of what they had done to their old STRIKER DTs showed in the color and design of the interior on the Mark IIs. There were only two quarters on Andro’s STRIKER, one for the pilots and then one for Andro and his mates. The pilot’s quarters were far smaller than usual because Ben knew Sadi and Ne’Veha would now be doing most of the flying and they would have no need for a third pilot.

At the moment... only Elynth and Tharua occupied the dragon pens, while Sadi, Eliani and Jomann sat on the couches in the gathering area of the STRIKER. Andro moved back to where they were sitting as they looked up at him.

“The Western Continent Elder Militia Compound.” He told them.

Eliani snorted derisively. "Right smack in the middle of the area of the planet that most supports her." She snarled. "Why doesn't that surprise me? Carians... she is so nubous obvious it is pathetic!"

Andro smiled and settled onto the couch next to Sadi. "I concur." He spoke. "I wouldn't doubt if she was getting her directives from the Kavalians though. Any word on what ships are in orbit or the immediate system?" He asked looking at Jomann.

Jomann nodded quickly. "Pusintin's command ship is here. PRIDE OF PUMAS it is called. Sa'sur was able to pass that on just after we left the SCIMITAR." He answered. "Holding its station five million kilometers from the planet itself. I didn't want to scan too deeply even though they most likely can not pick up our passive array."

Andro nodded and looked at Eliani. "Eli... are you sure you can detect where this Static Inhibitor is positioned in mother if you get close enough?"

Eliani nodded. "General Esavorna was quite specific." She replied. "He explained to me exactly what I would feel when I felt it. He tested it with Duewa on Earth before passing the information on. It radiates a very low frequency humming that can only be picked up by the sensors from CS41 and I know we don't want to reveal that. I have already practiced with the inhibitor we have on board and to my abilities it will appear as a shadow of sorts. Just as Duewa explained. A void where something should be but is not. The General said it should not be very far beneath her skin, but still deep enough where it will not appear as if something is there outwardly. More than likely that is why she doesn't even know it is inside her."

"And there is no way to block it?" Andro asked.

Eliani shook her head. "He has been working with the team trying to discover a way since he arrived on Earth Andro. Doctor Olemi says he has been working twenty hour days to try and discover something we can use, contacting Avi when he needs help." Eliani shrugged her shoulders. "They are close... but nothing that we can use right now."

Sadi looked at him. "If she thinks we are all dead and they have not told her who will be here at this meeting... she is going to be an emotional wreck when she sees us Saradasaar. She may not even believe it because she can not feel us within Mindvoice."

Andro nodded his head. "I know." He said softly looking at her. "Thirty seconds. That's all I need. Thirty nubous seconds." He looked at them. "Whether she can feel us or not... thirty seconds is all I need to let her know everything she needs to know."

"And she will not try to harm herself?" Sadi asked gently looking at him. "Knowing that your father lives and what she has no doubt been forced to do? She will not attempt to harm herself?"

Eliani shook her head slowly. "Not if what we fear is true." She said softly. "Her elven blood... the very basic instinct ingrained in all elves back to the time that the Elder Mother told Andro about will not allow her to. It is only a matter of if she will believe what Andro will tell her. To grasp onto that and believe."

"You fought with her all those years ago on Apo Prime KertaGai." Andro said. "On the island there. Did she strike you as weak minded?"

Sadi shook her head quickly. "No! Never!"

"Our mother has endured much that many people outside of our family do not know the details to KertaGai." Androcles said. "You have seen some of it within my thoughts... but I have seen what my father saw. I have seen his memories of what she has endured and how strong she truly is. I keep them hidden away because they are his memories... but she..." Andro shook his head. "I don't know what she will do KertaGai. Our second elven mother is strong... and she has endured almost as much as my mother did on Enurrua but Eliani is right. It will be up to her to believe."

"Can't we just not tell her some things until the time is better?" Sadi asked. "Until we learn how to disable this inhibitor?"

Andro shook his head. "No... I will pass to her what my father and mothers told me to tell her and she will know what do to. She has to know everything in order for her to keep hope. Then all I can do is pray she does not hate me for doing it."

Even Eliani looked at him when he said that. "Andro... why would she hate you?" She asked.

Andro shook his head quickly. "It is a figure of speech." He said dismissing it. "Let's worry about what Tenna Deia and the Feravomir gave to us so we can be prepared when we meet with the High Court this afternoon. We will need to fill Grandfather L'tian in when he arrives later."

“Androcles... why can't we just reveal what these inhibitors are?” Jomann asked now. “They are High Coven made... why can't we demand the Kavalians prove she is not being affected by one?”

Eliani looked up at him and smiled brightly as she reached out and took his hand. “If we reveal what they are Jomann my love, we reveal information that we are not supposed to have.” She spoke.

“I don't... I don't understand.” He spoke.

“There are many who still don't believe our abilities are natural Jomann.” Andro told him. “Even Aikiro thought we were somehow training our Bonded Pairs with some sort of machine from CS41 that increases Mindvoice power and she should have known better. Many Hadarians accept that my mother can do things that others can not... but if you press them on the issue they will begin to revert to their scientific nature and dismiss most of what we know to be true.”

Eliani nodded as she drew him down onto the couch with her, leaning into his body with no hesitation. “Especially Buonau and many of the Elder Healers.” She said. “Add to that the fact that they have hated my mother and father ever since she returned because they could not control her.”

“Most people believe the Bonded Pairs can do what we can do because of our dragons.” Andro spoke. “They don't take into account that Mindvoicing is a natural progression for our species as we grow. And since most do not advance this skill past a Tier Three level... most can not to be honest... they do not see what we can do.”

“They saw you obliterate the Western Clinic in Sparta in living color on the Netnews.” Jomann said. “I saw that! How do they explain two psychic balls of power coming from your hands and destroying the building! Even after that they don't believe?”

Andro smiled and shook his head. “They will believe what makes them comfortable.” He said. “The inhibitors are based on Pralor technology that Empress Aikiro recovered from CS19. Technology that the Kavalians got their hands on when certain High Coven officers defected. I sincerely doubt Aikiro meant for them to acquire this technology. It was meant... designed to be used against us. To be honest... I doubt the Coven officers who helped to steal it even knew where it came from... only what it could do. General Esavorna is relatively certain that no one outside of the actual control group of who built these inhibitors knew where they came from. Aikiro kept the knowledge she gained from CS19 among only a few people. Those who General Esavorna had questions about...” Andro shrugged his shoulders. “He eliminated them over the last few years.”

Sadi nodded. “To reveal what we know about the inhibitors Jomann, that would mean we have to reveal how we know about them.” She said. “In order to do that we would then have to reveal that they are based on an advanced alien technology that the Union has complete access too. A fact that would not please many people in the galaxy to be sure. It will only balloon from there.”

Andro nodded his head in agreement with Sadi. “Our technological advances right now are carefully crafted to appear as if our scientists have developed them on their own. While the practical applications we did set up, the technology was already there on CS41. We didn't need to discover it... just how to use it. And we have had Avi to help us do that. If we revealed this, it would lead to the Kavalians and every other scum out there wanting to discover it themselves. And then it could very well lead the Kavalians to discover Resumar and Athani and Tenna Tarifa and what they are doing.”

“But Laustinos knows all this doesn't he?” Jomann asked. “He would have told your uncle and the Kavalians this already.”

Andro shook his head. “The data files concerning how CS41 arrived on Earth and where it is now are kept on a completely different and wholly secure network tied into Dreamland. When my father first brought CS41 to Earth, Avi brought the ship in very quickly. Father had already chosen where the ship was going to go. Those men and women who still lived in the area were sworn to secrecy and offered positions either within the military helping to secure CS41, or actually living on the ship. That is why you will see many hundreds of men and women the next time you go there. They live and work beside the dragons helping to care for the eggs and to keep the systems at peak operating efficiency. When you come right down to it, they are perhaps the most loyal of Union citizens. In order to access the systems you would need to go to Dragon Mountain itself and enter the main computer core there.” He answered him. “Laustinos never had access to that, only eleven of us do, and any attempt by him to discover this information even if he did get wind of it somehow, would have been detected and dealt with in a matter of minutes. You have never met our Uncle Ben... and a more vicious and security oriented human turned vampire you will never meet. He and the Elder Mother devised all the security systems within Dragon Mountain and most of those at Dreamland. She is just as protective of the technology as we are. She is a Pralor after all.”

“This puts us at a tactical disadvantage immediately.” Jomann said.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes it does... but the alternative is too terrible to contemplate.” He spoke. “It is why our father ordered that VORTEX Cruiser 341 be destroyed.”

Eliani nodded now as well not seeing the look that Sadi gave Andro out of the corner of her eye. “To keep the technology out of the Kavalian’s hands.” She said in agreement. “Though mother and I would have really enjoyed getting in there and seeing the medical bay.”

Andro nodded his head. “We will have to make due.” He said. “Eli... you do realize that once Buonau discovers you are with me, she is going to be incensed. She may even attempt some fool thing regardless of the Kavalians being here.”

“Let them nubous try.” Jomann growled menacingly. “I will bury them.”

Eliani beamed brilliantly and leaned even further into Jomann’s body, quite intimately in fact, and her skin and blood flushed excitement at the possessive words of her new mate. This is what she had not felt from Malic. The desire and possessive tone of his voice when he spoke of her in any way and it only confirmed for her that Jomann had always been the one she had been meant for. Just as Andro had told her. “Wow, we are so very possessive of me my love.” She said looking at him with adoring fern green eyes and smiling.

“Just keep your sharp tongue and your temper in check and don’t do anything stupid Eli.” Andro said. “I would prefer your new mate and I did not have to kill anyone in order to pull your ass out of the fire.”

Eliani looked at him and nodded. “I won’t.” She said. “But I am also not going to be bullied by Buonau’s Elder Militia Guard assholes either.”

Andro smiled. “Fair enough.” He said. He looked at Jomann. “I told you she had a sharp tongue.”

Jomann chuckled. “I like her tongue Andro, sharp though it may be.” He stated proudly.

Eliani grinned like a Cheshire cat and stuck her tongue out at her brother. All four inches of it.

CURILA 6

Martin stood on the edge of the thousand foot cliff looking out over the blue/green ocean water in front of him. The sun was shining brightly in the cloudless sky and he watched as the waves splashed onto the beach far below. Torma rested on the ground behind him, his massive wings folded along his obsidian back, and his talons drawn up under his seven metric tons of muscle and bone so that he was prepared to launch himself into the air or an attack if needed. He had lost a few hundred pounds over the last weeks training nearly every day with his bonded brother and he felt better now than he had ever felt in his seven hundred plus years of life. Martin wore the standard Mark IV ArmorPly bodyarmor, with the indicative sections on the backs of his shoulders and legs where the Dragon Armor would extend from if he called upon it. He wore a shoulder holster with a new K14 KM secured in it, his combat harness worn tight and secure. The thin holster on his right leg carried his Stiletto, the new version of the Nehtes, and with its added dimension it was even deadlier than it was before. His original Nehtes he carried in a similar holster on his left thigh for he would never part with that. His helmet rested on the saddle Torma wore on his back, the five different shades of horse hair blowing gently in the ocean breeze. Raven black, Persian Red, Platinum Blond, Golden Blond, Midnight black. The hair color of all his Queens. And now he would need to add another shade of black to his helmet for his Queens were not going to let him dismiss what Cirith now meant to all of them, him included. He had just not come to accept it completely yet.

Martin smelled him before he saw him and he didn’t turn as Danny moved up alongside Torma and let his fingers draw along Torma’s muscular side. Torma turned his huge head and blinked his golden eyes at him, reaching out with his snout and brushing Danny in the shoulder. Danny patted Torma’s scales firmly and nodded at the massive dragon that had been his brother’s constant companion for over two decades now.

Martin didn’t turn to look at him. “We ready brother?” He asked his eyes still looking at the ocean before him as far as the eye could see.

Danny walked up next to him, dressed almost identically and nodded his head. “Waiting on go.” He answered quickly. “Jules has got everyone up to speed on the COMS, and she even installed some nice new toys Ben sent us. It's... man it's really good to have her back Marty. Even if she is a vampire now, it's definitely the Jules we all knew. Right down to her snide one liners."

Martin nodded his head with a smile. "Yes it is. She was never meant to be taken away from us in the first place Danny. I truly believe that now... and this is how she was brought back to us."

Danny nodded. "Avoi." He whispered softly. "The Master Chief and T'lolt have been inseparable since he got here. Discussing which heavy weapons to bring in which scenario. I think Tony is thrilled to have someone who can actually carry the heavy shit as easy as he can. We're ready Skipper."

Martin turned to look at the ebony skin and dark eyes of the only man he had ever really called brother. The man who had been there beside him through the mud and the blood, the fires and the shrapnel. The laughter and the tears. "I don't deserve to call you my brother you know." Martin said softly.

Dan grinned broadly. "No you don't." He said. "You're too pale you know. And you fucking snore too loud!" Martin laughed as Danny stepped closer to him and put his hand on his shoulder. "Listen... about what your mother said Marty." He shook his head not used to being serious in anything that did not concern Anuk and Nayeca but knowing this was something he had to do. "He is your brother and..."

Martin shook his head now and reached up to grip Dan's arm. "No." He said. "My mother is right Danny. Until she... until she hit me and made me see, I just never wanted to admit it. I always thought there could be hope."

"That's not a bad thing Marty." Danny spoke.

"Hope is not bad no... what I was hoping for was." Martin said. "Mother is right... my brother Pleistarchus died a long time ago. The man who occupies his body is my enemy and he has taken someone that belongs to me. Now I'm going to get her back and I will have the only brother I have ever known beside me."

"Behind you being the key phrase there!" Danny piped in quickly. "You stop bullets much better than I do."

Martin laughed and squeezed his arm. "I will do as my mother asks of me. I will take his head Danny... and I will end the dishonor he has brought to my family."

Danny nodded. "Sounds good to me. I never liked his sorry ass anyway."

Martin looked at him. "We can't seem to get away from conflict can we? You and I? We will always be fighting one battle or another."

"Without something to fight, Anuk and Nayeca would have carved me up and spit me out a long time ago." Danny spoke with a grin flashing his perfect white teeth. "I would have driven them insane until they got rid of me. Same goes for Anja and the others with you, cepting Anja and your mates are much more devious about it. It's in our blood brother. Ain't nothing ever gonna change that."

Martin nodded. "I know... I just didn't want this for our children as well."

Danny moved closer to him. "You know... Andro, Moneus, Anton, all of them... did you ever stop to consider that what they are doing is because they want too. Not because they feel they have too." Danny looked out over the ocean with his dark eyes. "Moneus said something to me that nightmare night on Alba Tau Marty. Something I have held close to my heart since that night and it's the reason I don't question what they decide anymore. Not that they would listen to me anyway..." He muttered.

Martin chuckled. "Yes... I know that feeling well." He said.

Dan turned back to face him with a serious expression. "When we were pinned down six hundred meters from Andro and you and all of us were hit, I was snarling mad because we had been stopped so close to reaching you and that if you died it would be my fault for failing. For allowing you and Andro to die, for allowing Moneus and the others to die. Moneus leaned over and looked me right in the eye, just like his mother does when she is about to drop a bomb on me." Danny smiled. "He told me... "This is the life we have chosen father. This is the life we wish to lead. The life of a Spartan and a Lycavorian. Do not question our decision because we do not. If we die here this night... we will die proud and happy to have lived as we have. As our fathers have lived."" Danny looked at Martin and squeezed his shoulder. "I about shit my pants that this was my son saying this. That this was the boy I had a part in bringing into this world. I haven't questioned anything any of them have wanted since then."

Martin turned his head and looked out over the horizon now as well. "In the fury of this darkest hour we will be your light! A lifetime lived... we are meant for this destiny! For we are Spartan born! And in this moment... we will not run! It is our place to stand! We few shall carry hope within our bloodied hands! And in our Dying, we're more alive than we have ever been! We've lived for these few seconds! For we are Spartan born!" He spoke the words softly, almost reverently.

"You come up with that?" Danny asked.

Martin nodded and looked at him. "Me and Andro. That same night." He said.

Danny stared at him for a long moment. "That night... it was a turning point for a lot of us Marty. You included."

"I know." Martin said.

"You gave him the order didn't you?" He said.

Martin nodded once more. "He would have done it anyway... but technically since I'm still alive... I'm still King."

"Sucks doesn't it?" Danny spoke with a large smile.

"You have no idea brother." Martin spoke shaking his head.

"So... did he give this plan of his a name?" Danny asked. "It's gotta have a name or it ain't for shit."

Martin chuckled. "Actually... it was Sadi and Carisia who came up with the name." He said. "Simple but catchy."

Dan shrugged. "Well at least we know he takes after his old man and picks mates who are smarter than him." He quipped. "Hit me with it."

"Tsunami of Retribution." Martin said.

Danny's brow furrowed just a little. "Wow... remind me not to piss them off. They just may be worse than Anja and Aricia." He said. "I like it though."

"We have our first target?" Martin asked.

Danny nodded. "Kavalian listening post in the Erebus Expanse of The Wilds." Dan told him. "One of their forward LPs according to Yuriko. It will give us the access to their defense network that we need but not set any major alarms off within Kavalian space. At least not initially anyway. It only reports in every month and we are going to hit it three hours after their call in time."

Martin nodded. "I'm not going to stop this time Danny. I'm not going to stop until I am dead or For'mya is back in my arms. Our arms. If they aren't part of my son's Kavalian rebels then they are dead."

"Works for me. No paperwork that way." Danny said with a grin.

No fuss no muss. Torma's voice echoed in both their heads and they turned to look at him as he moved his massive body closer.

Danny grinned and shook his head. Man... Torma you've been hanging around this joker far too much. You are starting to sound like him too.

Martin reached up as Torma's snout came within reach and his hand looked ridiculously small against those obsidian scales. You ready? He asked.

Torma's huge head bobbed up and down. Always.

Martin nodded and moved around to his side, vaulting himself into the saddle. He looked at Danny. "Time to get this party started fervon." He said holding out his hand.

Dan shook his head and took the offered hand. "Just so I don't have to ride him or Isheeni too often ok." Dan spoke as he settled into the saddle behind Martin. "You know I get air sick."

Martin turned in the saddle and laughed. "Yes I know. Torma... go!" He barked.

"Asssholleeeeee! Danny's voice echoed across the cliff for several moments after Torma launched them into the air.

"... Don't understand why I can't come with you?" Anja spoke as she looked up into Martin's dark brown eyes.

"You know why Red." He spoke pulling her closer to him as Torma was making his way into the Mark II STRIKER behind them. "You are the only one that can feasibly return to Sparta without too many questions being asked."

"That doesn't make me feel any better Martin." Anja said. "I should be with you."

"I have Aricia and Melda Min with me." Martin said. "You need to remain with Bella. She's about ready to pop and..."

“She’s got two more months before she gives birth you ass!” Anja declared looking up into his face.

Martin reached up and took her beautiful face in his hands bringing his forehead down to touch hers.

[Right now Anja... right now you are the one who will have the most influence over Andro. I have told you what he feels for having to destroy the Jump Gates?]

Anja nodded slowly. [He did the only thing he could have Marty. He is our son and I would have done the same thing in his position! Any of us would have! It was the only option! I love him more for making the decision no one else would have.]

Martin nodded. [I know that. I know you know that. We all would have... but he still feels like he has shamed himself in your eyes in some way for having to order the deaths of so many Hadarians. They are your people and until he sees that you would have done the same thing... it will eat away at him every day. Especially now, because you know that bitch Buonau will make sure to construct his actions as central part of this phony meeting.]

[You know... sometimes his sense of honor is almost as irritating as yours.] Anja told him.

Martin smiled and kissed her softly. [I also know that if I call... you will move heaven and Earth to get to us. And that is the other reason I want you back here.]

[Damn straight I will!] She snapped. [You just make sure I am there when we get her back!] Anja demanded.

Martin nodded. [That is a promise.]

They both turned as Aricia, Isabella and Dysea moved up beside them and pressed close. Martin closed his eyes and let both his aura and his Mindvoice shields envelope the women he loved. He opened them quickly when he realized Cirith was not among them, something that his wives and mates noticed with knowing smiles.

“Where is Cirith?” He asked.

Aricia smiled. “She is stowing her gear in our quarters.” She answered. “Bella believes she will be more valuable helping us than watching over her.”

Martin turned to look at Isabella. “Bella...”

She moved closer, as much as her pregnant abdomen would allow anyway, and put her hand on his face. “I do not need her to protect me Du'ased m'ranndii.” She said. “I already have Melyanna and I have put a request in to General Vengal to have him assign me two scouts from Colonel Norris’s Elite Sanguine pureblood unit. They are the finest trained purebloods from across the Union. Not to mention that Carina and Moneus will not let me out of their sight thanks to our son. I will be fine.”

“Why...” Martin began to speak.

Isabella shook her head. “She is part of our lives now Martin my husband. And I believe she will play a large part in our future. She has already shared all of herself with us... your wives and mates... and we have welcomed her most pleausurably I might add.” She said with a seductive smile. “Right now however... right now she needs to be with you.”

Martin let his eyes move to each of the women who had claimed a piece of his heart and finally he shook his head. “Ok... I see I am not going to win this fight.” He said.

“It is not a fight you should be having.” Anja told him. “Bella is right lover... and the sooner you come to realize that the better. We know you feel it too Marty... so deal with it will ya.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Yes... I feel it too.”

Isabella smiled and squeezed his hand. “Then claim her soon Du'ased m'ranndii and keep your focus on returning our Kinsoargai to us.” She said.

Martin crushed her to him as much as possible and laid a sizzling kiss of love on her lips that Isabella returned with all that she was. A similar kiss was bestowed on Anja and he nodded his head to them before Aricia and Dysea stepped forward to say their goodbyes and Martin moved to the ramp of the STRIKER. His eyes grew a little wider when he saw Wayonn moved down the ramp dressed in full Mark IV ArmorPly and his hands running up and down the new body armor that encased his form.

“Wayonn?” He questioned as he moved up to him. “What are you doing?”

Wayonn grinned at him. “What I’ve been doing for far more millennia than I care to remember.” He stated quickly. “I’m stepping off into the unfamiliar... to hopefully guide those who blunder aimlessly to and fro in the darkness of the unknown.” He pantomimed the last part of his sentence sarcastically.

Martin smiled as he looked at him. “I take it Sumar was like this.” He said.

Wayonn rolled his eyes. “Please... the man had no fear. He would do anything no matter how dangerous or idiotic it seemed in one second and then could be logical and reflective in the next. You are almost as confusing as he was. A trait that he has passed down to those with his blood I now see. And a trait those in my blood are rapidly picking up because of the time we spend with you.”

“I assume you have spoken with Dutkne then?” Martin asked him with a twinkle in his eyes.

“Did you know that he went with Androcles when they attacked that mercenary base?” Wayonn told him. “He didn’t question the insanity of the attack or what they were going to do. He just went with him. I have spent the better part of three hundred years schooling that boy to look before he leaps. A few weeks in the company of your son and all I ever taught him is tossed to the wind. Your son is just as bad an influence over Dutkne as you are of me. As Sumar was of me.”

Martin chuckled softly. “Sorry.” He said.

Wayonn smiled brightly. “Son vada carians! Don’t be sorry! I wouldn’t have it any other way!” He exclaimed. “Like you, I have grown tired of hiding who we are as a people. And if my guidance can help us to end this more quickly... then so be it.” Wayonn touched his right arm with his fingers. “This body armor your brother gave to me is utterly amazing. It actually conforms to us when we shift?”

Martin nodded. “Neat huh?” He said. “It’s the latest series... Mark IV C ArmorPly. You can activate the dragon armor extensions with a simple Mindvoice nudge on the inner control panel of your wrist.”

Wayonn nodded. “I see now why the Coven was never able to fully conquer our people.” He said. “Lycavorian scientists designed this?”

Martin nodded. “Yep. A lot of our newer stuff is based in some way on technology from CS41 that Avi helped us to understand. We didn’t go in the direction Aikiro did obviously but...”

“Do not compare yourself to her Martin Leonidas, for there is no comparison.” Wayonn said softly looking at him with bright and excited eyes. “You inspire others... guide others... and so many listen to you because they know you don’t want the job that you have. They find it refreshing.”

Martin chuckled. “They’re right about not wanting the job.” He said. “Man they are so right about that.”

“You are the leader we need moving into the future Martin my boy.” Wayonn said. “Do not doubt that.”

Martin stepped closer to him. “You are still having those feelings aren’t you?” He asked softly.

Wayonn nodded. “Not as strong or as frequently since coming here but yes.” He said. “I do not know how to explain it... but I feel as if we have gained time for some reason. How I do not know... but my perceptions have altered somewhat and I do not feel the urgency I did just before arriving here. It is still there... but I think something has happened that at least is buying us more time to deal with everything.”

Martin nodded. “Good. So we deal with it and then go from there.” He said. “Just like we always do.”

Wayonn looked at him. “Do you never take anything serious Martin Leonidas?” He asked him.

Martin shook his head. “Hell no! Taking things serious gives me a headache.” He retorted before moving up into the back of the STRIKER.

Wayonn shook his head with a smile before turning to follow him.

HADARIA

HADARIAN ELDER MILITIA COMPOUND

Andro gripped Sadi’s hand tightly as the ramp in front of them began to lower. Bright sunlight burst through the crack but their eyes quickly adjusted and they began to walk down the ramp as it lowered. Andro couldn’t help but smile when he saw nearly fifty of the Hadarian Elder Militia standing around the rear of the ramp. Though none of their weapons were pointed in their direction, all of them looked very nervous as the ramp finally lowered all of the way and they stepped off the edge onto the tarmac. That is when Andro saw the Kavalian officer making his way towards them from the terminal entrance, the Elder Militia Colonel beside him.

[What... do they think six of us are going to ravage the planet?] Arrarn snapped within Mindvoice.

[What a bunch of cowards.]

[They’re treating us like criminals.] Sadi commented.

Eliani shook her head. [No. They are treating us like the enemy.]

Andro didn't say anything as he watched the two men move closer and finally stop in front of them. The Kavalian officer looked to be a Colonel of some sort, his light layer of fur a dark sienna color. [Interesting.] Andro said.

Eliani glanced at her brother. [What?]

[Eli... what do you notice that is out of place from the last time we were here?] Andro asked her.

Eliani scanned the area all around them slowly, letting her eyes take everything in. At different points she could see Kavalian officers standing among groups of Elder Militia and a few Kavalian troops.

[An Awful lot of Kavalian troops.] She finally stated. [And all the defenses we had in place are gone.]

Andro nodded. [It would seem that Buonau's government is not wholly hers. There are far too many Kavalian officers just standing around, and they have removed the defenses put in place to actually guard this facility. This tells us quite a bit.]

The Elder Militia Colonel finally stepped forward close enough to speak and stared right at Androcles, the Kavalian colonel beside him, his eyes filled with total contempt and outright hatred. "I am Colonel Tydan of the Hadarian Elder Militia." He spoke. "You broke formation with our fighters and came here without an escort!"

"We were never in formation with your fighters Colonel." Andro stated calmly before Arrarn could retort. "And we followed their directives. Because they cannot keep up with our ship is not our fault. Now if you could explain to me why we were directed here when we were supposed to go to my mother's palace?"

"The Hadarian Royal Palace is now the residence of Elder Healer and Prime Minister Buonau." Tydan spoke.

"She calls herself Prime Minister now does she?" Eliani snapped. "What a joke!"

Tydan looked at her before turning back to Andro. "We have been ordered to search you and your ship for illegal weapons that you may have brought with you." He stated formally. "Once that is complete you will be escorted to the old Lycavorian Embassy. The Elf Minister L'tian is already there."

"No." Andro told him.

Tydan looked at him surprised. "Excuse me?"

Andro met his gaze. "I said no." He spoke again.

The Kavalian officer stepped forward now his face angry. "You will submit to a search or you will be arrested!" He snarled. "If you resist... then you will be shot where you stand!" He reached out and motioned with his hand and directed half a dozen Hadarian and Kavalian troops forward. "Search them thoroughly!" He barked. "The rest of you search their ship!"

"I said no." Androcles spoke again causing the Hadarian troops to waver in indecision while the Kavalian troops moved forward more slowly. He looked at the Kavalian. "Did the Kavalian delegation have to undergo a search of their persons and ships?"

"Certainly not!" The Colonel exclaimed.

"Then nor will we." Andro stated. "We are representatives of a sovereign government and I will not allow you to treat us as common thugs!"

"You will not allow?" The Kavalian hissed at him. "I am Colonel Qussa'Siat and I have my orders! You do not have a choice! You will submit to a search! All of you! Including your females! Especially the vampire whore in front of me!"

Toria gripped Arrarn's arm tighter, keeping him from doing anything stupid. His eyes turned to her in shock and she grinned. "I have been called much worse my husband." She whispered to him.

Sadi looked at the Kavalian who had stepped up to her, his dark eyes filled with gleeful lust as he reached out. Sadi batted his hands away easily. "Touch me and I will give you your hands back gnawed off at the elbow fool!" She snarled now her eyes changing and her fangs extending in a heartbeat.

"Seize her!" The Kavalian officer snapped.

"Elynth!" Andro barked out as his hand dropped to his Stiletto.

Two trumpets of anger followed causing all of the Kavalian and Hadarian troops to come up short as Elynth and Tharua came barreling down the ramp to the bottom and flared their wings menacingly. Many Kavalian troops were unmoving in their tracks by the sight, while the Hadarian troops were looking for any kind of cover they could find.

“NO!” Tydan barked out the order freezing all of them in their places. He glared at Andro angrily and pointed at Elynth and Tharua. “You were instructed not to bring your dragons!” He screamed.

“That directive must have slipped my mind.” Androcles spoke. “Especially since it came after this meeting and its terms were already agreed too. By both your governments and mine.” He took two steps closer to Tydan. “I will not allow you and your Kavalian handlers to treat us in this manner. No civilized government would subject visiting dignitaries to this type of action regardless of what was happening or has already happened. And I certainly have no intention of letting these Kavalian pigs search my wife and mate, nor my sister or brother’s wife!”

“You refuse to allow us to conduct our search?” The Kavalian Colonel growled turning to look at him though one eye he kept on the dragons.

Andro looked at him now. “I’m trying very hard not to say fuck you Colonel.” Andro spoke evenly. “So basically... yes.”

“But you are criminals boy!” Qussa snarled at him. “You are wanted for the deaths of nearly three million Hadarian citizens and for assaulting a recognized Ambassador of the new Kavalian Federation! Your sister Eliani is wanted for sedition against the newly formed and recognized Hadarian government, just as your whore mother is! And now you bring a vampire bitch here as well!”

“The only ones who recognize this illegal government are you and your kind!” Eliani growled from where she stood. “And my mother could hand you your furry ass without even breaking a sweat you walking Kavalian carpet bag!”

“Eli!” Andro snapped looking at her.

“You had better tell your sister that Kavalian males do not tolerate females who treat their male superiors in such a manner boy. Our females are taught to respect our men.” Qussa snarled. “It would not be a pleasant punishment I assure you.”

“Well La Dee Da!” Eliani spat sarcastically. “And you can kiss my Hadarian and wolf ass too!”

“You will pay for such comments!” Qussa snarled at her.

“Your stupid threats mean nothing to us Kavalian.” Sadi spat as she stepped up next to Eliani. “And we know well how you treat your females! Like they are beneath you in some manner.” She spoke.

“This is not what the Prime Minister directed Qussa! Nor Admiral Menot!” Tydan shouted finally. “If they refuse to be searched then they will remain on their ship until I have contacted them and they decide what to do!”

“I have my orders as well.” Qussa snapped. “I was instructed to search them thoroughly and seize their ship and their weapons!”

“Look behind you Qussa!” Tydan hissed quietly taking the Kavalian’s arm and pulling him further away from where Andro and the others stood. “Look at the Netnews crews that are watching us. They are watching to see what we do! Do you honestly think that treating the new Lycavorian King-elect like a common criminal is going to fly real well for support? What will you do? Strike down the new King of the Union in full view of everyone and spark a war that your leaders are working to avoid? And far more of yours and my people will die here today if you persist in this action. Unless you have some way to defeat two dragons before they burned most of those in the open to death! Think man!”

“Do not patronize me Hadarian!” Qussa snarled.

Andro shook his head. “I can see this little visit was a mistake.” He said looking at Qussa. “We’ll be leaving now.”

The Kavalian’s eyes grew wide. “You will not!” He exclaimed.

“How are you going to stop me Colonel?” Andro asked him. “You will not get our weapons and you certainly will not gain access to our ship. Not before it self-destructs. And I guarantee you... far more of you will die here this day.” Andro glared at him with wolf eyes now. “You being the very first!”

“You think much of your skills boy.” The Qussa growled at him.

Andro smiled baring his wolf fangs. “They are more than adequate to send you straight to whatever hell it is you worship.” He snapped.

“Enough!” The voice bellowed.

They turned as the tall Kavalian came striding through the others that were standing at the ready to act. His dark brown hair was well groomed and his uniform marked him as an Admiral.

“Admiral Menot!” Qussa hissed in surprise.

“Yes Colonel.” Menot angrily barked right back as he came up to the group. “What do you think you are doing?”

“Sir... I’m... I was following my orders!” Qussa spoke quickly sensing the Admiral’s real anger from within his voice.

“What you are doing is not what I instructed you to do Colonel!” Menot snapped.

“Sir... the Marshall’s... Marshall Pusintin’s son... Senior Colonel Kalis gave me my orders!” Qussa spoke.

“Kalis?” Menot questioned. “Since when does a senior Colonel outrank me?”

“He is... he is the Marshall’s son sir!” Qussa answered. “A Puma Bane Commando!”

“He is a fool!” Menot barked. “I will deal with you later!” Menot turned to look at Andro and the others. “I am Admiral Menot’Kasi... senior Kavalian Officer and Liaison to the new Hadarian Free Republic.”

Andro glanced at Sadi quickly and then back to Menot. “The Hadarian Free Republic?” He asked. “Is that what they are calling themselves now?”

“That is the name the Prime Minister and the Arch Ministry have decided on yes.” Menot answered with a false smile. “I’m sure it will pass the full Parliament soon.”

“I’m sure.” Eliani snickered.

Menot glanced at her quickly with cold eyes but he said nothing and turned back to face Androcles.

“Our request that you surrender your weapons is only a precaution Prince Leonidas. We are simply attempting to keep everyone safe and insure no incidents take place while you are here.”

“Incidents?” Andro asked. “What incidents do you think will take place with us being here Admiral?”

“It is merely a measure to insure the safety of everyone as I said.” Menot told him. “You must see this as well?”

“I will ask you the same question I asked your Colonel here.” Andro said. “Was the Kavalian delegation asked to surrender their weapons?”

Menot shook his head. “No of course not.” He answered. “Hadaria is an ally of the KFI and there would be no need for this. We do not bring illicit weapons onto an ally’s home planet sir.”

“Then I will not surrender my weapons Admiral Menot.” Androcles said. “That’s my policy. And I will not submit to a search of my person, or anyone with me. I will not subject my mate, my brother’s mate or my sister to a search by any Kavalian considering how your people view females in general. It would not be appropriate in any way as far as I am concerned. And no one boards my ship unless they belong on that ship. My Bonded Sister will see to that.” Andro stepped closer to him. “Now... do we dispense with the bullshit Admiral Menot and go forward with this farce of a meeting, or do we get back on our ship and let the chips fall where they may.”

Menot stared at Andro for a long moment before answering him. “You do not believe this meeting will accomplish anything do you Prince Leonidas?” He asked finally.

“Do you?” Andro asked.

“Your father left us little choice in what we could do to protect ourselves and our people Prince Leonidas.” Menot spoke. “Surely you see that.”

“What I see Admiral... what I see are the faces of my mother and father who are now dead because of your actions.” Andro spoke slowly. “Kavalian actions that were nothing more than terrorist acts in my opinion. I see the broken spirit of another of my mothers because of what Marshall Pusintin ordered Immortal scum to perpetrate upon her. I see another mother ousted from her rightful place by religious zealots that you supported in any number of ways. I see six dozen Drow elves dead by the hands of your Puma Bane Commandos, along with three dozen non-Drow who were either family to them or friends. I see over a thousand dead civilians Admiral... among them nearly two hundred children. Lycavorian civilians whose only crime was showing up for work in the Senate Office Building in Sparta that day. I see my aunt who is now crippled because of your actions. And I see another mother who has been kidnapped by your Marshall Pusintin for reasons which only he knows. Taken from her family even after her mate and dearest friend were killed before her eyes. That is what I see Admiral Menot. If you expect me to come here happily and with open arms than you are either a nubous fool or a hated politician.” Andro saw Menot’s eyes grow a little wider. “You strike me as neither.”

Menot stared into those azure colored wolf eyes in silence. “No.” He said finally. “I am neither.”

“Then where does that leave us Admiral?” Andro asked. “Because I for one grow tired of having your men openly leering at my mate and my sister. I won’t even begin to speak of what they undoubtedly have going through their feral minds looking at my brother’s wife. Do we go forward with this... do I turn around and depart and leave the future to the gods... or do we all die here right now?”

“You are not afraid to die Prince Leonidas?” Menot asked.

“I am a Lycavorian and a Spartan!” Andro hissed. “Death is a part of life Admiral Menot. It is just a matter of how many of your men I kill before you finally are able to bring me down. But you will be the first to fall... and then the idiot Colonel behind you.”

Qussa opened his mouth to retort but Menot held up his hand stopping him. “Do not speak Qussa!” He growled at him. He didn’t break eye contact with Androcles and folded his hands behind his back. “Colonel Tydan... bring the Lifters forward. Insure Prince Leonidas and those with him are escorted without delay to the Embassy.”

“Admiral...” Tydan began to speak. “The Prime Minister...”

Menot whirled on him. “Buonau will not question me!” He barked. “Now do as I order you! And establish a perimeter around the Prince’s ship with your Elder Militia. No one is to attempt to enter his ship for any reason. Not unless they wish to be eaten or burned alive by the dragons which will remain inside.” He spoke looking back to Andro.

Andro nodded. “I’ll let my Bonded Sister know.” He said.

Menot nodded to Andro. “I welcome you to Hadaria Prince Androcles.” He said with a small grin. “I hope your stay is productive.”

“So do I.” Androcles answered. “So do I.”

HADARIAN CAPITAL LYCAVORIAN EMBASSY

L’tian squeezed Eliani in his embrace and looked at Andro, Jomann and Arrarn.

“Grandfather.” Eliani spoke warmly as she hugged him tightly and stepped back. “It has been a long time.”

L’tian nodded with a half smile. “Yes it has Eliani. You look radiant child.” He told her holding one of her hands as he took in the way the tall Spartan tensed slightly at his familiarity with Eliani. L’tian had been among Lycavorians long enough to know the signs and he looked at her. “I take it this young man is the reason?”

Eliani smiled brightly and stepped back to press close to Jomann as he stepped forward. “Grandfather... this is Jomann.” Eliani said looking up into his face. “He is my... he is my anome.”

L’tian’s eyes grew a little wider as he looked at Jomann and the possessive way his arm curled around Eliani’s waist but a smile split his face and he nodded as he took Jomann’s hand and held it firmly. “The gods bless your union Jomann. Very few among your people find their anomes and I wish more did.”

Jomann looked surprised at L’tian’s familiarity with Lycavorian customs but he knew that he was Queen For’mya’s father and therefore it made sense. “Thank you sir.” He said.

L’tian turned and took Sadi’s hand drawing her close to kiss her cheek. “Sadi... you look stunning as always.”

“I wish we were seeing each again under better circumstances Minister L’tian.” Sadi spoke softly.

L’tian nodded and looked at Toria. “And you must be Toria?” He spoke moving up to her and taking her hand. He lowered his head and kissed the back of her hand. “I welcome you to our family Toria Leonidas. It is a distinct pleasure to see that Arrarn actually was able to snare the love of not one but two beautiful women. I thought him a lost cause. I wish Narice could have come with you given what the two of you mean to each other as well as my grandson, but better that she is not here.”

Toria couldn’t help but smile as Arrarn shook his head. “Thank you Minister L’tian.” She said.

“And thank you so much for the vote of confidence grandfather.” He said just before he embraced him.

L’tian released Arrarn and turned to Andro then and embraced him tightly. “We saw what happen at the compound on the Netnews.”

Andro drew back with a surprised expression. “You saw?” He asked.

L'tian nodded as he took Andro's arm in one hand and Arrarn's in the other and began to guide them through the huge archway into the main greeting chamber of the Lycavorian's main embassy on Hadaria.

“Yes... surprisingly that upae Buonau has allowed unfettered Netnews access to the Hadarian capital. Our sessions this afternoon and tomorrow she plans to broadcast to the entire Union. They are crawling across everything like insects and have demanded I give them right of entry to within the embassy here as well.”

“Grandfather... you are not one to use such language.” Eliani stated with surprise in her eyes.

“Given what is happening... I am holding my true feelings in.” L'tian told her.

Andro stopped for a moment when they entered the massive meeting room that had a large bar and numerous tables and couches. He saw several elves on the other side of the room setting two large tables and a Lycavorian behind the bar muttering to himself and opening boxes looking for something.

L'tian smiled and prodded him forward. “Don't worry... I have already had my people sweep the entire Embassy.” He said. “Having the Chief of EI as one of your friends comes in handy.”

“Your staff?” Andro asked.

L'tian nodded. “All EI operatives.” He answered. “Electronics experts. Analysis experts. The EI Chief made sure I had all the areas covered. He owes For'mya and Dysea quite a bit for not bringing charges against him and they have earned his loyalty. And there is always Vitmin as well.” He said motioning to the Durcunusaan soldier that had been his constant shadow now for the last two decades.

“What did you find Minister L'tian?” Jomann asked.

“A veritable windfall of monitoring devices.” L'tian answered as he pulled them into the room. “We have deactivated most of them... jammed the rest. We can speak freely. My people have installed micro pulse jammers in all the rooms to scramble our voices but I suggest we stay away from the windows so they can not read our lips.”

“So they've been busy.” Andro spoke.

“Indeed.” L'tian answered. He met the azure eyes of the oldest of his grandchildren. Since For'mya had become part of Martin's life L'tian had taken on a view of things that was different from many elves. It had been L'tian who had basically forced Martin's hand when For'mya had been taken, not realizing that he would have gone after her anyway. He had been the one to push her to take on the role she had been groomed for most of her life as elf concubine to the Lycavorian King even though this is not something she had wanted. To this day he still did not know what had transpired between the two of them during those weeks and months after he had rescued her, but he was sure that destiny had stepped in at some point and shown his daughter what life could be like. When Aricia and the others had pressed for her to be named a queen and then succeeded, L'tian had been ecstatic. Seeing the love and devotion that Martin had for her as well as his other wives was hard to believe at first, but as the months passed it became quite obvious to him. He knew how much his daughter loved Martin and her fellow queens, and he knew what she would do for them in any situation. In actuality... her love for them and her rise to queen had brought them so much closer together than they had ever been as father and daughter. He did not regard Andro or Eliani any different than he did Arrarn and Byron. They were all his grandchildren and he and his wife took great pleasure in doting over all of them as they grew. “Androcles... I... is what you and Eliani believe? What Deia filled me in on? Is it true?”

Andro squeezed his arm in return. “As much as we find it revolting grandfather... it is the only reason we can think of that our uncle would continue in this manner once he believed he killed our father.” He said. “There is no question now that he wants my father's throne... and this is the way he has chosen to go about it.”

“Your father has left Curila 6 you know.” L'tian spoke softly. “I spoke to him just before he departed. I have seen his love for my daughter, for all of them in his eyes and his actions through the last twenty plus years and I have never seen the look in his eyes that I saw when I spoke with him Androcles.”

“Medwaw For'mya is just as much a part of him as my own mother grandfather. You can not deny that.” Andro said softly. “No matter what has happened... his love for her will never die. I think you have seen this love yourself grandfather.”

L'tian nodded his head. “I know... and I have seen it Androcles. That is what gives me strength. I just need to focus my own emotions over what you believe has happened. What we may see.”

“All of us do grandfather.” Arrarn spoke moving up beside him. “All of us do.” He looked at Andro. “And the day of reckoning will come.” He said finally causing L'tian to look at him oddly and then to Androcles.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes it will.” He spoke. “What time is the first session?” Andro asked turning to L'tian.

L'tian took a deep breath. “Fourteen hundred hours.” He said. “I have full authority from the First Elf Minister Alocgeid to act on behalf of Elven Parliamentary authority and Deia has blessed me to be the one to defend the Union in these accusations. She and Panos have sent two of their senior historical aides and lawyers to assist me. They are upstairs now conferring on how best to address whatever charges they may bring against the Union. They have been fully vetted by Marci and the Krypteria and you may wish to confer with them before we go to the first session. They have been given a huge amount of information and having you help them to sort it out in regards to the Coven dragons and such might be useful.”

Andro nodded. “Whatever it takes grandfather.” He said. “However I don't think it will alter the outcome of our visit here.”

L'tian nodded. “Nor do I. Before you do that however... have a glass of juice and a late breakfast with me? All of you. I work much better on a full stomach and when my mind is clear. And we have much intelligence to go over from those teams who dispersed to the wilder countryside when the Kavalians arrived and your mother left here.”

“They have been able to get information off world?” Eliani asked.

L'tian nodded. “Using covert repeater stations that are still active in orbit yes.” He replied to her question. “Needless to say... quite a bit of the information is not very good.”

Eliani snorted in disgust. “Why should that come as a surprise to anyone?” She hissed. “Buonau and Wiktor are devious wenches and they will do anything they can to take and hold whatever power they can accumulate.”

“Crudely put...” L'tian spoke smiling at her. “But essentially very correct. Come.”

Andro and Arrarn nodded and he began to draw them towards the tables that had been set up.

HADARIAN ARCH MINISTRY ANTE CHAMBERS

Kalis staggered back from the force of the blow to his face but he didn't back down from his father.

“... The fuck were you thinking!” Pusintin snarled.

“He killed my brother!” Kalis hissed back at him.

“I know damn well what he did boy!” Pusintin growled viciously. “You don't need to remind me! And you will have your vengeance against him when the time comes! But never countermand my orders again Kalis! You are my son but I will treat you as any other officer who does this! There is too much at stake!”

“Your father is right Kalis.” Keleru's voice filtered to him from the transmission image in the corner of the room. “Having Qussa attempt to search them and their ship was nothing more than a blatant attempt to invoke a reaction from them. They will be hostile enough once they see what has become of their precious mother and we do not need you to make more problems for us in the long run. We need to look at the larger scope of things now Kalis my boy.”

“I want to be the one to kill him father!” Kalis hissed. “I want to take each of his women in front of him and I want him to watch as I fuck them silly before killing them. Then I want to see his eyes go dark as I bury a blade through his heart and he knows he has failed at everything he has ever done! And know he could not even protect his women!”

“And you will Kalis. You will.” Pusintin spoke. “But you need to stick with the original plan when it concerns your actions right now! We are at a pivotal time now and we need to do this very carefully.”

“We failed to kill him when we had the opportunity.” Keleru spoke slowly. “Those that we contracted with in this OSG organization to kill him, they also failed and now the Icalro Alliance no longer exists because of it. This makes our task harder but not infinitely so if the information from Laustinos is accurate. That information has been very accurate up until now, so there is no viable reason to think it is wrong going forward from this point. That may change in the future but right now we will proceed as we have planned.” They watched him get up and move around his office on the Kavalian homeworld. “Now we must do things differently. We must gain the support of those who were against his father and his family to begin with. We must use their own Netnews against them and most certainly not allow them to see us acting as the instigators of confrontations with them. We have maintained from the outset that we did the only thing we could do in our actions to protect our sovereignty and now we must appear as if that is all we wanted to do. It is also why we have not shifted the balance of our forces from the upcoming invasion of the High Coven. We are trying to avoid a full blown conflict with the Union.”

Pusintin turned to face the transmission completely now. “Have we been able to garner support among any of the elven delegates who have consistently voted against his policies through the years?”

Keleru shrugged his shoulders. “It is hard to gauge.” He answered. “Elves are very good at concealing what they are thinking and we have only reached out quietly to a handful since we began this. I believe they will wait and see how things develop there on Hadaria before moving to any actual signs of support. It helps us greatly that we have coerced the elf Queen For'mya's cooperation in petitioning to have Dysea removed from her standing as the elven Queen.”

“Forgive me for asking Marshall Pusintin...” Menot had been standing quietly in the room listening to the men talk but now he moved forward further into the room. “She has believed that we hold her youngest son with Leonidas captive... that we were going to give her to Immortals... that was the driving force behind her agreeing to our demands.”

“Yes.” Pusintin asked.

“What happens when she discovers that we do not have her youngest son and the elf queen Dysea is no longer among the Immortals that she thought held her?” Menot asked. “I do not want it to seem that I question the plan sir... but what is to keep her from refusing to help us once she discovers this information.”

“The contracts she signed are legally binding even within the Union. We made sure of that before taking her.” Keleru spoke from within the transmission. “If our petition to have Dysea removed from power succeeds, and more than likely it will, then we will have half a dozen trade agreements already signed that will be presented for confirmation whether the elven parliament agrees or not.”

“You believe they will agree to this Prefect?” Menot asked. “Go along with it?”

“If they choose not to then we can legally exercise our right to make them.” Keleru answered. “As for the rest... Pusintin?”

Pusintin turned to look at Menot. “She will help us because she is bound to me now.” He stated confidently. “With my brother dead... I have claimed her as my mate in the ancient Lycavorian fashion. It is why we timed this operation as we did. She was in Phase, the most fertile time for a wolf female and I was the most powerful Alpha that reached her first after the death of her mate. She is wolf after all... and with the static inhibitor stopping her ability to Mindvoice and fight my advances; the wolf blood in her took over when I hit her with my full aura. She didn't have much of a choice after that. I know what my brother saw in her... her body is quite succulent and exceptionally tight.”

Menot looked at Pusintin and nodded. “I understand that sir, but none of what we have told her is true and she will discover this at the hearings will she not?” He stated.

“It will not matter Admiral.” Pusintin spoke. “They changed the Ascension Laws within the Chronicles of Lycavorian Law and First Oracle's Declaration after the fiasco with Chetek, but they did not change the laws regarding bloodlines and claims to the throne. Why would they think they need too?” Pusintin said shaking his head. “The elf blood in her has not allowed her to act how she undoubtedly wants to act. Laustinos's information in regards to that is turning out to be very true.”

“What information?” Kalis asked now.

“In all of recorded elven history, no female elf has ever terminated a pregnancy for any reason.” Keleru spoke now. “No matter the how that they became pregnant, only that they have never terminated a pregnancy. They are incapable of such an action dating back to long before we ever came up with this plan. Laustinos confirmed this with several elven historians and over a dozen doctors through the years.”

“I also have power over her even more with my aura since I have claimed her as my mate and she will respond to it almost immediately now.” Pusintin picked it back up. “The old practice of using a male aura to influence a female wolf has not been used since before my grandfather became King millennia ago... my species stopped doing this because they thought it to be vile and disdainful. That only helps us because she is wolf now and she can not fight it anymore than a pureblood female would be able to fight it. It is a little known fact among the Lycavorians because they have pulled away from their instincts so much, but her body began to change almost immediately after my brother died. She was already in phase and since she believed her wolf mate dead her body began to prepare for her to take another whether she wanted to or not. We kept her Mindvoice powers in check with the static inhibitor so that she knows nothing else and we coerced her in other ways to submit to me in order to save those she loves. She knows it is wrong, she hates me for it, but she cannot help herself physically and that is even more agony and shame that I can throw at them. She knows she is my mate physically and she will be utterly humiliated that she can not manage how she reacts to me, and not being able to feel them within Mindvoice will make her think they have dismissed her because of what she has done.”

Menot shook his head. “I don’t understand sir... what has she done?”

Pusintin grinned and looked at Keleru in the transmission. He turned back to Menot with an even larger smile of triumph. “She has given us the one way to defeat the Lycavorian Union without firing a shot.”

“How is that possible Marshall?” Menot asked surprised.

“In two short weeks, thanks to the accelerated growth hormones we use on our clones, she will give birth to the rightful heir to the throne of the United Lycavorian Union and Sparta.” Pusintin said with an arrogant smile and swelling of his chest. “A son. My son.”

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
INQUISITOR
HIGH COVEN SECURE SPACE
3.4 LYs FROM UZU OZEIB 7

“...leaving in droves Admiral.” Asant told him as he handed over the data pad.

“How many have chosen to depart Asant?” Moran asked sitting at the large table in the conference lounge.

“Colonel Pa'cour was correct in his first assessment.” Asant spoke calmly. “Nearly three quarters of the 1st, 7th and 11th Immortal Divisions have packed up and begun leaving from their bases. They are securing whatever means of transport they can and leaving just as fast as they can.” He answered. “Fully one third of all the training divisions have already abandoned their posts and are trying to secure passage.”

“Total numbers?” Moran asked.

“If the reports are accurate... upwards of nearly two million.” Asant answered.

“That is more than we first thought!” Dante Moran hissed.

Asant nodded. “Yes, but the vast majority of them are young and inexperienced. Many of the older Immortals are choosing to remain Admiral. They are maintaining low profiles because they do not wish to be seen as assisting those others. Also... none of the ship board Immortals anywhere in the fleet have expressed any desire to leave.”

Moran looked at him. “Really?”

Asant nodded. “Again... most of those assigned to fleet ships are older and much more experienced. This may not turn out to be as bad as we thought. Cha'talla’s plea might hamper him more than help him.”

“Do not count on it.” The voice spoke and Asant turned to watch Yuri unwrap from the shadows of the conference room view window. She wore a standard High Coven pilot’s work jumpsuit which fastened high up on her neck. Her black hair was shiny and silky looking as it always was, but the three thin scars that traveled down her right cheek were still visible and ones she would not be able to hide. Asant had only heard other crewmen talking about the extent of her injuries and had not seen them, but from what he heard the scars were ghastly to look at.

“Princess?” Asant asked softly.

“Yuri... we should stop anymore from leaving.” Moran spoke.

“They may be young and inexperienced now... but in a year’s time they will be seasoned and superbly trained.” Yuri spoke as she unwrapped the remainder of the shadows from around her body and stepped fully up to the table. “Do not forget who we are discussing here. There is a reason Cha'talla is thought of as he is. If his message is true, if he has aligned with the Union and his son is married to Normya Leonidas, he will have all the support that he needs to finish their training and turn them in to superior shock troops. He is a masterful tactician by himself and apparently a very good speaker when he wants to be considering his speech.”

“Father is right mother!” Dante exclaimed. “We should stop anymore from leaving!”

Yuri shook her head. “No.” She told them staring across the table at her son with dark eyes. “Once this initial surge is over, those that remain will be loyal. I have no desire to fight or kill thousands upon thousands of Immortal civilians as my father did. The resulting civil war would tear us apart and force Cha’talla to intercede.” She told them. “Then all of them would turn against us as Asant said in your earlier meeting.”

“How did you know that is what we discussed?” Moran asked.

“Pa’cour recounted the minutes of the meeting for me.” Yuri answered nonchalantly.

“Pa’cour? How did...”

“It is a bad idea!” Dante spoke interrupting his father. “We are letting valuable troops leave when we will need them in our battles ahead!”

Yuri didn’t take her eyes from him. “That is my decision Dante.” Yuri spoke with the tone of her voice indicating she would not tolerate any more discussion. “And you will abide by that decision.”

Dante didn’t look away from her after she said that but merely nodded his head. “As you wish mother.” He spoke.

Yuri looked at Moran. “Our scientists have begun work on the material gathered from the Mindvoice ship yes?” She asked.

Moran nodded still confused how she knew of what they spoke of in the earlier meeting. “All the data has been transferred to the primary research facility orbiting the fourth moon of Uzu Ozeib 7.” He answered.

“Have Doctor Okeeren copy everything and set up a second facility at his discretion.” Yuri spoke. “And have him do so quickly Robert.”

Moran looked at her. “What? Yuri why?”

“Because Martin Leonidas is not dead.” Yuri told him as she settled into the chair at the table and rested her hands on the surface. “And sooner or later... either he or Androcles will be coming here to get their vengeance for what we allowed to happen to his daughter.”

Moran and Dante looked at her. “Yuri... you agreed with that course of action!” Moran snapped.

Yuri met his eyes calmly. “Yes I did Robert.” She stated evenly.

“So you let me and Javier do this and now you think it was wrong?” Dante barked at his mother. “My brother is dead! Your son is dead!”

Yuri turned to face him now. “I know what happened Dante. I don’t need you to remind me of that. And I will bear the blame for the consequences of those actions. For allowing you to do what you did. One day will come my son...” She spoke softly, almost thoughtfully. “One day either Martin, Androcles or a member of the Leonidas family will catch up to me and my life will be over for what I ordered and allowed you and your brother to do. What we allowed you to do. I can only hope it is not Martin or Androcles because my death will be neither quick nor painless if it is.”

“What the fuck?” Moran snarled. “What is going on? This is not the Yuri I remember. This is not the High Coven Princess that is my wife!”

Yuri looked at him. “No it is not.” She stated. “Having your throat torn out and being left to bleed my life from my body is a life altering event Robert. I have had much time to reflect on my actions.”

Moran came to his feet. “This is bullshit!” He barked. “This is not you!”

“Oh I haven’t changed if that is what you are referring too.” Yuri spoke quickly. “But that does not mean I can not regret what I have done in the past. I do not want our research or our scientific team destroyed because we were shortsighted and kept everything in one place. One of them will come... and what we took from that Mindvoice ship will be their primary target.”

“Yuri...” Moran returned to the chair and leaned forward in his seat. “Yuri... several different Netnews Channels caught his death live and in color. He was blown in half! There is no possible way he could be alive! And Androcles Leonidas is dealing with the Kavalians and he will not come after us!”

A small smile curled the corners of her lips and she looked at him. “Yes... I’m sure that is what they wanted everyone to believe.” She said as she got back up and moved to the large window once more. “And for the most part he was very successful Robert. It seems he has convinced quite a few of this fact to include you... but he is not dead Robert. He is out there somewhere.” She turned back to him. “Please let Doctor Okeeren know of my orders regardless, and have him split his team of researchers as well. Now what do you mean Androcles is dealing with the Kavalians?"

"They are holding the elf Queen For'mya prisoner." Moran replied after a moment. "It looks as if he is going to try and use her to some way regain the throne of the Union now that Leonidas is dead. At least that is the speculation among their Netnews channels."

"You don't believe me Robert?" Yuri asked him.

"I believe what I saw with my own eyes Yuri. There is no way he survived... I'm sorry! None!" Moran answered her.

"You have never questioned me before Robert." She said.

"No I haven't... and with good reason!" He stated quickly. "You have never ranted about crazy things like this before! The Union does not have the resources or the legs to reach this far into Coven space and attack us!"

"They have had their Mindvoice ship for over two decades Robert." Yuri told him.

"Leonidas was a pussy!" Moran snapped vehemently. "He always was! Even on Earth! None of the gains they made in technology were related to any military hardware except their communications and improving their Shrouds. Our people would have detected this. I knew him Yuri... and he was always a defensive minded soldier. Even as a SEAL! And they were as bad ass as you can get! There is no possible way he would have or even could have developed serious offensive weapons without our people knowing about it! We still have deep cover operatives in some pretty high parts of their military Yuri! You just can't hide something like that! You can't! And I sincerely doubt the Union Senate would have approved something like that either."

Yuri moved back closer to the table. "You are the senior military officer within the High Coven Robert." She stated finally. "If that is what your experience and knowledge tells you then you are right."

"I think it is still just trauma from your injuries Yuri." He said in a softer tone. "You still need time to recover."

Yuri nodded. "Perhaps." She said returning to her chair. "The Kavalians have not moved their forces from their staging areas?"

Asant shook his head now. "No Princess." He answered. "As with their prior pre-invasion practices... troops and ships continue to arrive weekly at their staging areas. All signs indicate this will be the largest we have faced."

Yuri nodded. "Then that is what we must prepare for." She stated evenly rising her eyes to look at her son. Dante stared back at her with dark eyes that were void of any emotion in them. "Insure Doctor Okeeren does as I order however." She spoke looking at Moran now. "I do not want everything we got from the Mindvoice ship concentrated into one research platform alone. Have him direct his people to concentrate first on weapons and then propulsion. Our capital and medium ships are already better powered than their Kavalians counterparts, but too many are outgunned."

Moran nodded as he detected a small sliver of the old Yuri in her words. "I agree." He said.

Yuri stood up now. "You may be right Robert my husband." She said. "Perhaps I just need more time to absorb everything that has happened. How soon before we reach home? I need to sleep in my own bed after so long."

"We're taking it slow on our return, giving time for those Immortals who want to leave to leave." Moran answered. "We want to avoid any conflicts that may happen to occur. We should be back home in three days."

Yuri nodded. "Good." She turned and began to walk out but stopped and rotated her body back half way to look at him. "Robert... how many of the purebloods on the Governing Council are wavering over my authority?"

He met her eyes. "Most are still solidly in our corner. Two or three have raised concerns about events on Earth and the direction we are going." He answered her. "I'm having them and their families watched."

Yuri nodded. "Execute them immediately." She ordered. "Just them. Do nothing to their families except put them on a ship and send them into The Wilds into exile. If what you say is happening then I need to squash it before it becomes something that we can not handle without bloodshed."

Moran's smile was sinister as she turned back and continued out of the conference room. He watched for a moment longer before looking at his oldest child. "Now that is my Yuri." He said softly looking at Dante.

"That is your mother!"

Dante nodded his head slowly. "Perhaps it is father. Perhaps it is."

Moran nodded. "She'll be fine." He stated.

Nalavi Vicele grunted as he rose from the couch in his quarters and moved to the door of his personal quarters. He marched up to the door and stabbed the control panel next to it. He opened his mouth to bark at the person outside the door before stopping in a heartbeat at who he saw.

"Princess?" He gasped.

Yuri looked at him appearing tired. "Nalavi... Nalavi I must talk to you." She said.

Vicele had never heard this tone of voice from Yuri and he quickly looked out into the corridor and seeing no one he motioned her inside. "Come in. Quickly." He said taking her arm and drawing her into his quarters.

Yuri watched him look down the corridor both ways once more before closing his door and turning to look at her. "Are you concerned about who sees me enter your quarters Nalavi? You are my doctor."

Nalavi nodded his head quickly. "Yes I am... but crew members will be crew members." He told her. "They will talk and your visit here will get back to Robert. He will want to know why you could not see me in the Medical Bay. Which is the question I have." He said looking at her.

"You have never... you have never cared for Robert Moran Nalavi." Yuri spoke. "Why is that?"

Nalavi took her arm gently and drew her into his quarters. "Some Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos? It is only two weeks old."

Yuri smiled and nodded her head. "Yes please." She answered. "And do not change the subject."

Nalavi walked to the medium sized wet bar counter along the bulkhead and began to pour two glasses of the clone blood designed and improved by Anja Leonidas and Union scientists for the millions of vampires that called the Union home. It was a very expensive and hard to come by item even in The Wilds, and also very illegal within Coven borders.

"He does not now... and in my opinion... has never deserved you Yuri." Nalavi stated as he poured the bright red cloned blood into the second glass. He lifted both glasses and crossed the room to stand in front of her holding one out. "I truly do not see what you ever saw in this man. But who am I to question?" Yuri took the glass and settled onto the large couch after he motioned for her to sit. Nalavi lowered his frame onto the couch next to her as he sipped his Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos. He looked at her as she drank from the glass. "Now tell me... why is it that you have come to my quarters Yuri. It certainly isn't for good conversation."

"Nalavi... Nalavi what is wrong with me?" Yuri asked him.

"I don't think I am following the question." He said.

"I don't feel like me." Yuri said.

"Yuri... you were severely injured." Nalavi told her as he sat back. "We are Immortal girl but we are not indestructible. Your body suffered severe physical wounds and you are still recovering from them."

"How did I survive Nalavi?" Yuri asked. "I have... I have seen the scars and I know enough of battlefield wounds to know that I should be dead right now! Androcles Leonidas killed me! How did you save me?"

Nalavi stared at her for a long moment in silence. "Do you remember none of it?" He asked softly.

Yuri shook her head. "Bits and pieces. Flashes of great pain. Pa'cour's face and him shouting at me. I have been seeing images Nalavi... visions really. In my dreams. Places I have never been... I have never been to Nausicaa Nalavi. The planet was glassed eight hundred years before I was even born, yet I have had visions of it. The battles that took place there. I am seeing battles I have never fought or been involved in. Terrible battles. I feel... I feel so much weaker now. Like my Mindvoice abilities are no longer there or they are being... they are being hampered in some fashion."

"Yuri I am a medical doctor... not a psychologist." Nalavi spoke. "The physical trauma you suffered coupled with the mental anguish knowing your son had been killed; knowing that your daughters and your sister betrayed you. Knowing that your mother had been killed. It will take its toll on anyone Yuri, even someone as strong willed as you.”

“Is that why when I look at my husband I see a stranger?” Yuri asked him. “When I look at him I see the distaste in his eyes when he gazes at me? When I look at my only remaining child I see not my son... but something different. Something changed.”

Nalavi shook his head. “I do not know Yuri.” He said gently. “These last years have been hard on all of us. The almost constant battles with the Kavalians. Fighting for our future. It has taken a great toll.” He stopped talking and got to his feet to return to the wet bar.

Yuri inched forward on the couch. “Say it Nalavi.” She spoke softly. “You have known me since I was born. Tell me what you are thinking... I am not going to have you executed for speaking the truth to me for vithin zai'th!” (Fucks sake)

Nalavi turned back to face her. “That is the problem Yuri. These last years... ever since you returned with Moran and your mother took power. You have become darker. One year ago you would have had me executed for even beginning to say these things to you. No matter that I have known you since you were hours old and taken care of you all of this time.” He moved back to the couch and sat down beside her. “You were always driven Yuri. Always. Willing to do nearly anything to achieve your goals. You would not hesitate to have someone executed if you truly thought that person or persons was hampering your completing of a mission or a goal. But you would only do this if it was absolutely necessary. I accept that these actions are natural for our people. But when you returned with Moran, when your mother regained her role as Empress... these actions became much more prominent. They were subtle at first but I could see them. You became darker in many ways. Discovering what your father perpetrated upon you explained some of it... Moran being the power hungry fool that he is was more... but not all of it. You seemed to relish the power and control you wielded and you would crush any who did not conform to your thinking. You changed Yuri... you changed from the driven Princess who was methodic in all she did to one who crushed any dissent. No matter for what purpose.”

He met her eyes which were focused on him as he continued. “The Yuri I knew, the one I watched grow and depart for Earth intent on fixing her brother’s idiotic actions, that Yuri would never have sanctioned the rape of Zarah Leonidas after what she herself had experienced. Yes they are our enemies and I do not particularly care for them a great deal, but our actions on Earth, what we sanctioned Yuri? Not even your father would have allowed this and he was the biggest fool I had ever met. The Yuri I knew... she would have found another way... a way to get the information we wanted... but she would not have approved of what we did on Earth. What we allowed to happen! You know how Lycavorians view this type of action Yuri... it is one of the three vilest crimes that anyone can commit upon Lycavorians. It was perpetrated upon you Yuri! Twice!” He shook his head slowly.

“There were other ways to get what we wanted, ways that would have involved killing yes... but ways the Union would have accepted as normal. Now... now hope for peace between our peoples is all but lost. A peace many of our younger generations had hope would become reality. With his father dead now, Androcles Leonidas will become King and many within the High Coven halls of political and military power fear him Yuri! They fear him far more than they ever feared his father. And his father terrified them Yuri... you know this!”

“Martin Leonidas is not dead Nalavi.” Yuri spoke softly.

Nalavi looked at her with wide eyes. “What? We all saw it! The Kavalians Yuri... they assassinated him right in the streets of his own city! Lycavorians have a robust healing system Yuri... much more than even we do, but they blew his body in half. There is no way he could have survived.”

“He lives Nalavi.” Yuri repeated. “I know he does. I can feel it.”

“How?”

Yuri shook her head. “I do not know. Perhaps because I shared his bed for two years and a connection of some sort was made. I feel tremors of him within Mindvoice... barely there... like faint echoes... but they are there. I do know that he is not dead Nalavi.”

“You... you are sure of this?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri nodded. “Yes. Robert and Dante do not believe me. They still think I am recovering from my injuries. That I do not have all my wits about me. I know I’m right though Nalavi. He is not dead.”

Nalavi sat back on the couch. “Why would they keep this hidden?” Nalavi asked to no one in particular.

“To protect the elf Queen For'mya.” Yuri said. “Why else?”

Nalavi looked at her. “What do you mean?”

“Robert said the Kavalians... Pusintin was attempting to use her in some way to regain the throne of Sparta and the Union.” Yuri said. “If he is holding her prisoner and he discovers that Martin Leonidas is alive, all leverage he may have now disappears. He will kill her within hours of discovering that Martin is still alive.”

“That could set off a war between the Union and the KFI.” Nalavi said.

“Given the attacks they conducted against the Drow Intelligence Outposts and in Sparta itself, there is more than enough reason for the Union to go to war now.” Yuri said as Nalavi looked at her oddly.

“Androcles’s new wife and mate is a Drow elf and no doubt she will be pushing for this exact thing.”

“Yuri... how do you know that?” Nalavi asked.

“Know what?” Yuri spoke as she sipped her Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos.

“That Androcles Leonidas has taken a Drow elf as his wife and mate?” Nalavi asked her. “That has not been made widely known. Nor the attacks on the Drow outposts.”

“I don’t know.” Yuri answered. “It must have been in one or more of the Intelligence reports that Robert read to me while I was unconscious in the medical bay. I remember someone reading the reports to me almost everyday. I faded in and out too quickly to see their faces but I know someone was there.” Yuri smiled. “I remember them reading several ridiculous novels as well.”

Nalavi got to his feet and moved back to the wet bar with an anxious expression on his face that Yuri could not help but detect. She leaned forward now. “Nalavi... what is it?”

Nalavi Vicele turned back around and took a deep breath. He would not lie to her... he never had in all the years he had served her... and he would not lie to her now.

“Yuri... there is something you must know.” He stated softly.

“I’m listening.” She told him as she got to her feet slowly. “Why do I get the feeling you are frightened about telling me whatever it is you are going to tell me.”

Nalavi met her gaze. “I’m not frightened about what I am going to tell you.” He told her honestly. “I’m frightened by what you may do with the information I am going to tell you.”

Yuri moved closer to him. “Nalavi... what is wrong?”

“Yuri you were in my medical bay for close to three weeks recovering from your injuries. You have only been up and about for the past three days.” Nalavi told her.

“Yes I know that.” Yuri commented.

“Yuri... in all that time you were in the medical bay, Moran only came to see you twice.” Nalavi told her. “And both times he stayed no more than five or ten minutes. He would not even touch you.”

Yuri blinked at this information as she stared at him. “That can’t... that can’t be possible Nalavi.” She said shaking his her head. “I remember my husband’s voice... a voice reading to me. The reports... the novels of space adventurers. I am not crazy Nalavi... I heard it!” She spat looking at him.

Nalavi shook his head. “No you are not crazy Yuri.” He answered. “The voice you heard however was not Moran’s. As I said... he only came to see you twice. Dante only came once. There has only been one man who has been at your side since you were brought back. He was there every day... nearly all day until my staff tossed him from your room. Then he would be back the very next morning. He is also... he is also the one who saved your life.”

Yuri looked at him. “What do you mean?” She asked.

“Exactly what I am telling you.” Nalavi spoke. “His actions saved your life on the surface of Earth. You would have bled out within another minute or two had he not done what he did. He is the one who has been sitting with you everyday, reading you those reports, reading you those ridiculous novels. He held your hand through almost all your convulsions.”

Yuri’s eyes were wide as her mind flashed back. The pain... the blood. Every strike of those huge black paws upon her body and the feel of those savage fangs as they sank into the throat of her neck. She shuddered almost violently until she heard the voice.

“...will not allow you to die! Do you hear me Yuri! I will not allow you to die! You are what matters to me! You are all that matters to me! Do it! Take my blood! Feed on me! Do it now woman... for I will not lose you!”

Yuri remembered strong hands pulling her head forward and then the flashes of so many memories as her fangs sank into flesh and she fed. She fed on the most spicy and delectable blood she had ever tasted in her life, while powerful arms crushed her to a potent body of hard muscle. And more words exploded into her mind. Words that seemed to resonate within her mind, echoing along every nerve and every memory strand. Words that quickly chased away the agony she was feeling and replaced it with a warmth that Yuri Moran had never in her life felt coursing through her.

“I give myself to you Yuri.” The voice whispered into her ear. “I give myself to you so that you may live. Without doubt. Without hesitation. I give myself to you because I... because I love you. I have loved you from that first day on Lycavore, and it has only grown stronger through the years. ”

Yuri stepped back from Nalavi her eyes wide as realization flooded her. “Pa'cour!” She gasped loudly. Nalavi nodded his head slowly noticing that her words did not carry hate or anger in them in any way. At least none that he could detect. What her words carried were bewilderment and questions. “Yes.” Nalavi told her.

Yuri stood there as more images flashed through her head now. Images she had seen in her dreams. Lush worlds, raging battles, terrible horrors. Her hands came to her head as new images pushed aside her Mindvoice shields. She saw herself wrapped within the embrace of a huge man and his face was Pa'cour's. She saw herself holding a small child her in arms, cradled between his legs in the middle of a small grassy field while an older child with long black hair played in the distance. She saw herself laughing and her eyes closing in happiness when he leaned over and brushed her neck with his lips.

“Pa'cour!” She gasped again.

Nalavi stepped closer to her now. “He is the one that saved you Yuri.” He told her. “You took nearly half his blood to heal yourself, and even that only provided him enough time to get you here to the ship. He has been the one who has remained at your side through all of this. The dreams you have been having are not dreams Yuri... they are his memories. He knew what would happen if it was discovered but he didn't care. His first and only thoughts were of you. To save you no matter the cost.”

“Where... where is he?” Yuri gasped.

“Yuri... you...”

“Where?” She snarled this time.

Nalavi sighed heavily. “I would imagine he is down on the Immortal deck. Where he has been since you first woke up. He said he would go there and wait.”

“Wait? Wait for what?” Yuri snapped.

“For his execution.” Nalavi answered.

Yuri glared at him. “Nalavi the law...”

“The Coven as we know it is dying Yuri.” Nalavi spoke softly looking at her. “Your mother is gone and the laws we have lived by these past millennia are outdated and extremely oppressive. The ruling Pureblood families are fractured and even many in the military are now questioning what you do. And no doubt what you will do in the future. You have an opportunity right now to alter the course that your mother laid for us. There is something different about you since you woke up. You are still you... but the darkest anger and vehement hatred that has permeated your person for the last two plus decades is gone Yuri. You are different now! More in control. Don't let the chances that our misguided and wholly stupid actions have given birth to slip away Yuri. This is your chance to make it all right! This is your chance to be happy for once in your life!”

“Happy?” Yuri asked looking at him. “I was... I was happy Nalavi.”

“Since the day you departed for Earth over three thousand years ago you have been living a lie and you have known it.” Nalavi told her bluntly. “You were twenty-nine years old when your father sent you there to help your brother fix what he had foolishly broken Yuri. You know what happened after that. What he did to you. What your father ordered him to do to you. It does not matter who it has been, your mother, your father, Moran... all of them have used you and manipulated you in some fashion for their own goals for your entire life. Your mother and Robert Moran have been the worse. This is the chance for you to be different! To live your life the way you want too!”

“What you speak of is treason!” Yuri rasped.

“And what will you do Yuri?” He asked her calmly. “Will you have me arrested and executed for what I tell you?”

Yuri looked at him with wide eyes. “Nalavi no! Never!”

“Your daughters Yuri... they have seen and then grasped something they wanted. Look at them now. Your sister Narice?” Nalavi said.

“Traitors!” Yuri snapped though her tone was not as vehement as Nalavi expected and that told him what he needed to know.

“Are they traitors? Or are they doing what so many of our people want to do? What you used to talk about as a young woman? Before going to that cursed planet that destroys vampire lives as surely as the sun rises. They wanted more Yuri. They wanted more and they have found more.” Nalavi spoke. “All that is left now is for you to find what you want more than anything Yuri and then reach for and grab it. When you do that the cycle that your mother has continued for millennia will be broken and the High Coven can be reborn.”

“And then what Nalavi?” Yuri asked him. “I will never... I will never be able to escape my past! What I have done!”

Nalavi shook his head. “No. But there are advantages to being who we are Yuri. We are Immortal child. If no one is trying to kill you Yuri, you can live far longer than even your own mother did. You have plenty of time to atone for the mistakes you have made. If you are truly willing.”

“It is not possible Nalavi.” Yuri said.

“No? Or are you just too afraid to think about it and act?” Nalavi told her. “I think Martin Leonidas said it best Yuri...” He smiled when her eyes lifted to look at him. “Isn’t he the one who coined the phrase Never fear the unknown, for you don’t know what treasures it could bring you?”

“Nalavi... you want me... you want me to betray all I have ever been raised to believe.” Yuri said softly.

Nalavi shook his head. “No. What I want you to do is look past all you have ever been raised to believe Yuri. I want you to look past that and finally, once and for all, to finally do what you want to do in your heart!”

“He is an Immortal Nalavi!” Yuri exclaimed. “I only have... I only am seeing these things because I took so much of his blood!”

“You taking his blood had nothing to do with you calling out for him in the middle of the night Yuri.” Nalavi told her seeing her eyes go wide. “Nearly a dozen times by all accounts. Not Moran’s name... not your mother or father... but Pa’cour.”

Yuri turned away from him. “I have... I have lost my mother.” She stammered. “I have lost my mother and one of my sons. My... my daughters.” She reached up and gripped her arms tightly as if she was cold. “So much pain... so much betrayal.”

Nalavi moved up behind her and placed his hands on her shoulders. “And yet now you have a decision to make once again.” He told her. “A decision to continue the path you have been on with Robert Moran. A man whose love for you only comes from the amount of power you can give to him. Or a decision to break free of everything you know and surrender to what your heart wants. A man who loves you Yuri. A man who has never wanted anything from you by your very own words and a man who has willingly save your life, knowing that his would be forfeit after. All things you can see and feel now because he saved your life. Because you tasted his blood.” Nalavi squeezed her shoulders and turned her to face him waiting until she looked up into his face. “The High Coven is dying Yuri.” He said softly. “Nothing can stop that now. Whether it be under the boot heel of the Kavalian dogs, or the vengeful and absolute retribution of the Leonidas family for what we have done, the High Coven will die. You can change that... but in only one way. And only you can make that decision.”

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBERS

“...Knew there was a reason I always avoided coming here when visiting with mother.” Eliani whispered to Andro as they entered the massive hall. “The smell of arrogance hurts my nose.”

The Arch Ministry Chamber was filled with hundreds upon hundreds of men, women and even some small children. Netnews video drones were spinning around the sides of the massive chamber in all directions, the reporters themselves talking into their implants as they turned to watch the Lycavorian delegation enter the chamber. L'tian walked in front of Andro and the others by two meters with his two aides and the Durcunusaan troop Vitman who had been at his side for nearly two decades. Twice the man had refused promotion so that he could remain as L'tian's Chief Guard Andro had discovered before coming here. Vitman's elven mate worked as L'tian's senior aide and assistant when on Elear and she had prepared all his materials for this meeting before he had left the elven homeworld. The man was beyond loyal to L'tian and Andro saw his eyes discretely casing the entire chamber as they moved forward.

Elder Guard Militia lined the path they walked towards the two rows of tables and chairs set up to the far left of the Galactic Court members who were seated on a elevated platform normally occupied by the members of the Arch Ministry. The chamber was oval in shape, and the court members were sitting with their backs to the western wall and looking out over the chamber. The slight incline allowed everyone who had a place in the surrounding bleacher like seating could see the events happening. As the single Elder Guard Militia officer directed them to the table, Andro noticed that the two other groups of tables were spaced quite far apart from theirs, and that there was a waist high wall between their group and the other two. He cut his eyes to where the Galactic Court members were watching and he saw Chief Magistrate Sel'ke watching as they moved towards the table. None of the other Magistrate's would meet his eyes and the two that had been chosen from the local pool showed blatant hostility in their plain expressions as they watched.

[Power dampeners set up all around the ceiling and along the walls.] Jomann's voice broke into Andro's thoughts. [Six Elder Militia Guards at every entrance. The loft area where Commander Joci was during your mother's gathering here now has four men on it. It almost appears as if they are planning for something to happen.]

[They divide us like we are the ones on trial.] L'tian spoke for they had included him in the connection.

[I expected something like this. You see the way they look at us? Even Sel'ke looks at us with disdain.] Andro spoke. [They want us to appear to be the ones on trial here; to look as if we are wrong for what we have done.]

[I counseled your father against instituting this Galactic Court.] L'tian spoke. [He gave them too much power without enough oversight and regulation. He tried to make them like the body of men and women he knew from ancient Earth.]

Eliani nodded. [The Supreme Court of the United States.]

[Yes. I told him that it would not be the same as the lawmakers for a simple country as it was with this Supreme Court.] L'tian said. [He needed to set it up differently because he was leaving them with too much power and too many ways to have them be influenced by outside sources.]

[Perhaps coming here was not such a good idea after all my love.] Sadi commented as she gripped Andro's hand.

[I'm beginning to get that same feeling.] Arrarn spoke up now. [Andro have you smelled mother in the building?] Arrarn asked as they moved to the table and began to sit down.

Andro nodded his head slightly, looking at Eliani briefly and knowing she caught his glance. [Yes... but her scent is altered somehow. Almost as if they are trying to block it or confuse us in some manner.]

Eliani turned to look at him as she sat down. [Andro you know damn well what...]

The booming musical tone cut off her words and a deep voiced sounded within the huge chamber. "Magistrates of the Galactic Court... I present Prime Minister Buonau of the Hadarian Free Republic and Chief of the Arch Ministry Wiktor!"

L'tian was the only one of them to stand up, though they did turn their heads to watch as Buonau and Wiktor arrogantly walked down the long aisle towards the table that was set up for them. On either side of them walked three Elder Guard Militia dressed in flowing uniforms and expensive clothes. Buonau and Wiktor both were also dressed in outrageously expensive robes that swallowed their bodies and fell to the floor as they walked. They appeared to be made of some velvet like material that shone with brilliance in the light of the chamber.

[Wow!] Eliani exclaimed. [Those are about twenty thousand Riyal clothes apiece.]

Andro looked at her. [Your kidding?]

Eliani shook her head. [They've been trying to get mother and Tenna Sivana to purchase and wear those things for years. Mother said they were hideous looking and far too expensive.]

[She was right.] Sadi spoke.

L'tian turned his head quickly when he realized they had not stood up. "Androcles. Eliani. Stand up."

Andro looked at him. "For what purpose grandfather?"

"Protocol!" L'tian hissed.

"Protocol states we stand for recognized heads of government." Andro answered. "We do not recognize this illegal state."

"Indulge me boy!" L'tian snapped softly. "We do not want to make this any harder than it already is and I have taught you better through the years. All of you!"

Andro hesitated for only a moment, but then his ingrained respect and love for a man he called grandfather took over and he got to his feet slowly. L'tian was right as well. He and their mothers had taught them diligently on their many furlongs to Elear in protocol and diplomatic matters. L'tian especially had made it almost a game for them as children as they learned what he taught them without even realizing it. Eliani and the others followed suit and they turned back just in time to see Buonau glance at them with hate in her eyes. Eliani smirked at her, trying to maintain her composure.

Buonau stepped up to the table finally and turned back to the members of the Court with a huge smile. "Allow me to welcome you to the Hadarian Free Republic Magistrates!" She spoke confidently. "If there is anything I can do to make your stay more comfortable please do not hesitate to ask."

Andro saw the Lycavorian Magistrate roll his eyes in disgust and sit back in his chair slowly as Sel'ke nodded to Buonau.

"Thank you Prime Minister... so far everything has been wonderful." Sel'ke answered.

"Excellent." Buonau said sweetly. "I would like to take this time to address the Hadarian concerns for this gathering before the Kavalian delegation enters if that is appropriate."

Sel'ke looked at her oddly. "We were informed of your intent to do this Prime Minister but I believe we should stick to mainly why we are here. This hearing is to address the issues between the Kavalian Federation and the Lycavorian Union Prime Minister."

"Yes I understand that Chief Magistrate... however some actions taken against the Hadarian people by the Union relate directly to the current situation between the Kavalian Federation, an ally of the Hadarian Free Republic and the Lycavorian Union. You can not hear one without the other." Buonau stated.

Sel'ke nodded with a sigh. "Very well."

L'tian looked at Sel'ke now. "Chief Magistrate we are not here to discuss issues that the Hadarian Free Republic may or may not have at this time. They offered to sponsor this meeting to keep a bad situation from getting worse, not turn it into a combined vendetta against the Lycavorian Union."

"We are only trying to establish what our intent is going to be your honor." Buonau spoke again.

"Your intent?" L'tian snapped looking at her. "Your intent for what?"

Buonau met his gaze with an arrogant twinkle in her eye. "Our intent to bring our own charges against the Union and our demand for action and reparations, as well as justice for the lives lost. This is a joint Kavalian and Hadarian complaint hearing mind you."

"Joint complaint?" L'tian exclaimed turning to look at Sel'ke. "We were not informed of this Chief Magistrate! Since when did this become a complaint?"

Sel'ke looked at him evenly. "We were informed of it several hours ago Minister L'tian." He spoke consistently, his voice dull and toneless. "The KFI and Hadarian Free Republic made the decision to combine this hearing. We dispatched communiqués to all parties involved as well. Are you saying you did not receive it?"

"We never received anything!" L'tian barked.

"That is interesting Minister..." The Limian magistrate spoke now as he leaned forward. "I was the one who sent those communiqués and I am certain I relayed one to the Lycavorian Embassy."

"If you did sir... it never arrived." L'tian spoke sternly.

"Are you calling me a liar Minister?" The Limian asked now.

"I'm not calling you anything young man." L'tian snapped at him, even his natural elven calm being taxed at the moment. "I'm stating we did not receive any transmission or message from your office!"

“Be that as it may... I did send it.” The Limian answered calmly. “I will be more than happy to resend the message when I return to my office but that should not stop us from moving forward. We are only presenting information at this session anyway.”

“We have not had an opportunity to look over whatever it is the Hadarian Free Republic submitted to you.” L'tian spoke. “This is highly unusual and not wholly fair.”

“We will announce these issues here today and you can go over them this evening before addressing them in tomorrow’s final session.” The Limian answered.

L'tian opened his mouth to answer but felt Androcles reach for him in Mindvoice. He turned his head slightly but kept his eyes on the magistrates. [You know what they are doing Andro?] He stated.

[Let them do what they will grandfather.] Andro answered. [It will not matter. Look at the Magistrates. This was a set up from day one. The only one who shows even remote disgust at what is happening is the Lycavorian.]

[Your father put these men and women in power.] L'tian hissed.

[Yes... and it appears they are positioning themselves to better suit their own personal needs than actually do any justice.] Andro told him. [They will side with whomever gives them the best means to remain and keep the power they have. That is not me and they know it.]

“Minister L'tian... do you have any objection to moving forward today?” The Limian asked with an almost condescending tone.

L'tian met the man’s eyes and finally shook his head. “No Magistrate.” He answered in a stern voice. “I will however file a Writ of Dismissal because of the way this has been presented here today.”

The Limian nodded. “As is your right.” He stated. “Very well... Prime Minister Buonau you and Minister Wiktor have the floor. And please insure that you keep to the facts and not partake of conjecture.”

Buonau nodded. “Certainly Magistrate.” She said before turning to look at Wiktor.

Chief of the Arch Ministry Wiktor stepped forward with two data scrolls in her hands and she moved up to the small table in front of where the magistrates sat. It held a powerful portable computer that was linked to several monitors around the room. “The first of three charges that we wish to bring forth is the charge of War Crimes of the highest magnitude against Androcles Leonidas himself. The King-elect of the Lycavorian Union ordered the remote destruction of the four Jump Gates within sovereign Hadarian territory. This action caused the deaths of three million, four hundred and nineteen thousand Hadarians who were caught in the explosive radius of those Gates. These were Hadarian civilians, men, women and children whose only crime was deciding to travel to different parts of the Union using established, safe travel corridors. The Hadarian Free Republic demands reparations for each and every death that occurred due to this action and we also demand that Androcles Leonidas be detained and stand trial here on Hadaria for this heinous action that he ordered. It is nothing more than intentional murder in reprisal for Anja being removed from power.” Wiktor pressed the console on the portable computer. “The second charge is theft of property. When the Union military departed Hadaria they took with them equipment and ships and computers that was the property of the Hadarian people. We demand that this or the equivalent in equipment and or ships be awarded to us by the Galactic Court. The third charge is the refusal of the Lycavorian military to allow Hadarian Healers to return to their rightful planet when we so issued this order. They are holding over three million Hadarian citizens against their will. The fourth and final charge is the kidnapping of the heirs to the Hadarian Royal Throne. Pursuant to that we also therefore demand that Retta and Calyb be extradited immediately to Hadaria or that our Elder Guard Militia be allowed to travel to Earth and return them without fear of reprisal. We also demand the immediate and unconditional dismantling of the blockade that now encircles the Hadarian system. It is illegal and does not allow us to conduct trade with anyone. Three instances to bypass this blockade have resulted in the near destruction of the civilian ships loaded with trade goods!”

Wiktor typed on the computer console and then set the two data scrolls on the table. “All of the information and evidence that we have gathered in regards to these charges is here on these two data scrolls for review by the Galactic Court and whoever else they deem necessary.” She turned to face Sel'ke. “It is our hope that in the name of diplomacy and justice, as well as future relations with the Hadarian Free Republic, that the Galactic Court will decide in our favor.”

“You do realize Minister Wiktor that even should the Court decide in your favor, we have no authority to implement or act on whatever decisions are made? Nor do we have the personal needed to enforce any decisions we come too. We are a diplomatic body and nothing more.” Sel’ke spoke.

Wiktor nodded. “Yes... I understand that Chief Magistrate. That is why, with the Prime Minister’s blessing, as well as that of Prefect Keleru of the KFI, we have assigned a complete company of Elder Guard Militia and a company of Kavalian Puma Bane soldiers to act in your stead should you feel the need to use them. They will be under your control if you decide to enforce your rulings.” She explained hearing the murmurs sweep through the crowd of civilians as well as the Netnews men and women who were present.

Sel’ke looked taken aback somewhat but he recovered quickly and bowed his head to her. “Thank... thank you Minister Wiktor, however that is not a recourse we will take.”

Wiktor nodded. “They are there for your use sir.” She stated again. “I have presented our charges and it is my hope we can move forward on them. It is also my hope that the leadership of the Lycavorian Union sees the need to respond to the demands of the Galactic Community that they proclaim to represent.”

Sel’ke turned slowly to L’tian. “Minister L’tian... as representative of the Lycavorian Union... do you have anything you wish to say?”

L’tian looked at Andro quickly and then got to his feet, his eyes wide and his anger barely held in check. “I will say that the government of the Hadarian Free Republic is playing very loose with the facts as they were presented.” L’tian stated. “They fail to mention how they took power in an ill-advised coup that has not only split their own population but that went against the very foundations that the Union was founded on over three thousand years ago. They put forth lies and rumors against Queen Anja, the rightful monarch, which were later proven to be completely false right in this very chamber. When that did not work to get her removed from power, they violated their own constitution and ousted her, installing a theocratic government that is both repressive and completely illegitimate. That does not include the failed kidnapping attempt of Retta and Calyb by their Elder Militia from the children’s school in Sparta. An event that resulted in the deaths of those men and the serious injuring of the Prime Minister’s own daughter.”

“My daughter Duewa has expressed her desire to return here to Hadaria with her own words to me!” Buonau exclaimed from her chair.

L’tian chuckled with contempt directed solely at her. “Your daughter Duewa is now, quite happily I might add, the wife and mate to Durcunusaan Colonel Thoti Prime Minister Buonau. The same man who saved her life. She is thoroughly enjoying her new life as a wolf and she is actively involved in assisting Colonel Anuk in treating all those injured in the KFI bombing of the Senate Office Building. Duewa has no desire to return here to Hadaria for any reason after what you forced her to do and if I am not mistaken her words to you when you demanded this were a simple and firm ‘Fuck you mother!’” L’tian saw her jaw tighten. “And please do not try and deny it Buonau, I happened to be in the same room with Duewa when she told you this. We can contact her right now if you like.” Buonau’s mouth clamped shut instantly when he said that. “Yes... I didn’t think so.” L’tian turned back to the members of the court.

“As for these so called charges... nothing that the Lycavorian Union military took from Hadaria belonged to anyone except the Union military. This ridiculous claim that the ships that have guarded this planet for centuries somehow belonged to Hadaria is preposterous to say the least. They were and are an active part of the Union military. When ordered to leave... they did so. The Union stripped their bases and nothing more. They did not take one piece of equipment that did not belong to them and I can provide an exact and complete list of every piece of equipment that was removed.”

“Excuse me, does that also include a list of the Union ships, their classes and the specific equipment that was loaded onto or assigned to those particular ships Minister L’tian? Some of us on this court are not so well versed in this area as to know what they are able to hold.” The Limian magistrate asked.

L’tian met his eyes. “And for what purpose would you need such a list?” He asked.

“It is my understanding many of those Union ships, as with many throughout your fleets, have been upgraded through the years with equipment and facilities designed here on Hadaria. Is that not true?” The Limian asked.

L’tian nodded. “Designed jointly with the many Hadarian Healers and scientists within the Union military, yes.”

“Do you not think it appropriate that we should know exactly what these ships had on them so when we determine what reparations, if any, are made that we are accurate in our decision.” He spoke.

L'tian looked at Andro who shook his head and then he turned back. “We will provide an accurate list of everything that was removed from the planet. We will not however submit a list of ships or equipment on these ships.”

“Would you allow us to inspect one?” Sel'ke asked now.

“No.” Andro replied before L'tian had a chance to answer.

“And what of the Hadarian Healers within the ranks of the Union military?” The second of two Hadarians on the court asked now. He was from the local branch of the Hadarian Arch Ministry and an ardent supporter of Buonau and the old ways.

“What of them?” L'tian asked.

“Can you provide evidence that you are not forcing them to remain away from their home planet?” The man asked.

“I do not know your name sir.” L'tian spoke.

“Magistrate Kagan!” The man answered rather arrogantly. “And you will address me as Magistrate Kagan Minister. Not sir.”

“I will do so moving forward... however since I did not know your name what I said was quite appropriate.” L'tian answered. “As to the charge that we are in some way keeping any Hadarian Healers from returning to Hadaria is completely false.”

“Can you provide evidence to support this?” Kagan asked.

“And what evidence would you like Magistrate Kagan?” L'tian asked.

“Allow those Healers who are on your ships in orbit to come here and tell us themselves Minister.” Kagan told him.

“Will you guarantee their safety Magistrate Kagan?” L'tian asked. “Will you guarantee that the Elder Guard Militia will not try to arrest them for some ridiculous reason in order to keep them on the surface?”

“Why would we do this?” Kagan demanded. “We will certainly not conduct ourselves in such a way!”

“Will you guarantee it?” L'tian pressed him. “Will this court guarantee their safety?”

“Your honors... this is preposterous!” Wiktor snapped loudly. “Why should we have to guarantee something like this? They are Hadarian!”

L'tian shook his head slowly. “They are Hadarians who have no desire to be a part of the theocratic state you and Buonau have instituted.”

“You will address her as Prime Minister!” Wiktor barked.

L'tian bowed his head with a sarcastic smirk. “Forgive me... Prime Minister Buonau.” He spoke smugly. “However, without a guarantee from this Galactic body that no harm will come to them and they will not be arrested for some trumped up charges, King Elect Androcles can not allow them to come to the surface. They would be more than willingly to be interviewed on an open VidLink should that be necessary.”

“So you will not allow them to come here and voice their opinions themselves?” Kagan asked once more.

“Since you can not... or will not guarantee their safety... no Magistrate Kagan.” L'tian answered.

“Is it safe to assume you will not extradite Retta and Calyb here to Hadaria as well?” The Limian Magistrate spoke up again.

“You do not honestly believe I will just turn over my brother and sister to Buonau and her cronies do you?” Andro blurted out now.

“Andro!” L'tian snapped turning to look at him sternly.

“No grandfather... I will not allow these people to speak of my brother and sister as if they are possessions of some sort!” Androcles snapped. “They carry the name Leonidas and they are first heirs to the throne of the Union before anything else! I won't begin to address the laws that were broken in your failed attempt to kidnap them when your pathetic government took power! What did you tell the wives and children of the men who were killed attempting this? That they died heroically in an attempt to save the Hadarian Royal bloodline? Or did you tell them the truth... that they died as common criminals attempting to kidnap small children from their school!”

“How dare you!” Wiktor barked. “You!! The butcher of over three million Hadarian civilians! You dare stand there and call our honored dead criminals!”

“Your honored dead?” Andro snapped his anger almost beginning to get the better of him. “You wouldn’t know honor if it jumped up and bit you in the ass! There is nothing at all honorable about trying to kidnap small children! It is a heinous and vile tactic reserved for the weak and dishonorable! Namely you and your precious Prime...”

Sadi stood up quickly and placed her hands on his arm. “Androcles... my love.” She whispered softly.

Andro’s reaction was immediate and very telling to say the least. He turned and looked into her jungle green eyes with his own changed wolf eyes and his fangs showing beneath his upper lip and suddenly the anger and hate that was etched on his face dissolved instantly. This influential reaction was viewed by billions across the breadth of the Lycavorian Union and nowhere was it more telling than within the city limits of Sparta itself. Those who had lived all those years ago, those who had seen similar displays from their beloved King and Gorgo, and how the simple touch of his Queen could calm him instantly. Sadi Leonidas would never know it, but this action here on this planet would raise her status among the billions of Lycavorian people, especially those who called Sparta home, to new heights.

Andro bent his head forward and touched his forehead to Sadi’s before turning back and looking at the Magistrates. “Retta and Calyb are my sister and brother. As is Eliani... but you have no desire to force her to do anything for she has already told you to go fuck yourselves on more than one occasion!” This brought murmurs from within the gathered crowd and some small laughter. “All of them bear the name of our father and our grandfather and that name is Leonidas. There will be no discussion on them ever returning to this planet while the current government remains in power. My mother Anja would never allow it to begin with. And any attempt, by anyone, to take Retta and Calyb forcibly will be met with extreme prejudice and force. That is all that will be said on that.”

“Is that a threat Androcles Leonidas?” Sel’ke asked surprised.

“Take it anyway you wish Chief Magistrate.” Andro answered him.

Andro returned to his seat without another word and Sadi squeezed his arm in her hands. L’tian waited for a moment before turning back to the magistrates with a small smile and pride in his eyes. L’tian could detect much of his father in Androcles, but he also could detect and sense that much of all his mothers and the way he was raised within him, and that included his own daughter For’mya.

“I believe that will bring the end of the discussion in regards to Retta and Calyb to an end.” He stated. “As for the last charge... the alleged intentional murder of so many Hadarian men, women and children... the Jump Gates in question are part of the interconnecting layers of safe travel corridors within the Union. They fall under the direction of the government and the military. The Prime Minister would have us believe that this action was undertaken as some means of retaliation for Anja being usurped from power. This is not the case in the least. The Kavalian government had appropriated control of those four Gates and were pouring thousands of men and hundreds of ships through them, bypassing light years of Union space in order to support the takeover here. They were violating Union territory knowingly with warships and troops, not to mention their actions in the death of King Leonidas and the destruction of several Drow elf outposts in The Wilds. Androcles did the only thing he could to stem the tide of illegal Kavalian forces being directed here, seeing that we could no longer control those Gates. He ordered their destruction.”

“At a cost of millions of innocent lives.” Sel’ke stated.

L’tian nodded. “Something that Androcles will live with for the rest of his life.” He said. “It was a governmental decision, not a personal decision, and done to keep Kavalian forces from establishing a foothold within Lycavorian Union territory. Or have any of you missed the near thousand ships that now occupy this system alone, or the hundreds upon hundreds of well trained Kavalian troops here on the surface. They did not just magically appear.”

“They were invited here by the Prime Minister!” Kagan snapped.

“Perhaps... but given the Kavalian actions of late... were we just to assume that they were coming here to be friends?” L’tian asked flippantly. “They assassinated the King of the Union, kidnapped one of the Queens, attempted to kill most of the King’s children and they are responsible for murdering nearly a thousand Union citizens in their bombing of the Senate Office building. Among them nearly two hundred children. They have not once denied these actions in the buildup to this gathering, so let’s not kid each other.” L’tian looked at him.

“What are we to assume by these actions Magistrate Kagan? Those are not the actions of friends. Even now they still hold a Queen of the Union prisoner for some reason which only they seem to know.”

“I believe we will discover this soon enough.” Kagan spoke. “As well as their reasoning behind their actions.”

“What possible reasoning can be used in such circumstances?” L'tian asked him. “I have been authorized by Prime Minister Deia and her new Deputy Prime Minister, former Governor of Sparta Panos, as well as the entirety of the Elven Ruling Parliament and our First Minister, the Ruling Folcani and Algolian Central Governmental Registrars, the Nodan Imperial Senate, the Bontawillian Monarchy and seven other bodies of governmental control from different members of the Lycavorian Union to tell Prime Minister Buonau and her illegal government that we and they will not heed anything that comes from her person or her outlaw government. The blockade we have in place around the Hadarian system will remain in place to keep further reinforcements of Kavalian personnel and equipment from arriving and until the return of the rightful Queen of Hadaria. There will be no further discussion on that either. Prime Minister Buonau and Chief of the Arch Ministry Wiktor brought this upon themselves and while I will apologize to the Hadarian people for the suffering they might endure, the stance of the near majority of the Lycavorian Union is plain and clear. They wanted power so badly that they participated in a coup against the rightful Queen of Hadaria. Now they can reap the rewards of their actions. So in essence... Buonau and her government can go suck an egg!”

Eliani couldn't help herself and burst out in a short but loud laugh before clamping her hand over her mouth. Even Andro and Sadi were looking at L'tian with surprise in their eyes at his response, Arrarn's mouth open in total shock.

L'tian looked at the magistrates, the personification of the calm, cool elven leader and man many knew him to be. “Now... I suggest that we proceed to the real reason why we are all here Magistrates... and that is the negotiations between the Kavalian Federation Imperium and the Lycavorian Union to obtain the release of our Queen and to stop a war from happening.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY-ONE

RITAAH

SPARTA'S WRATH (VORTEX CRUISER 341)

Shiria was no fool.

She had not lived over ten thousand years and not learned many different things. Wayonn had been of the mind that she needed to be protected, guarded in some silly fashion. He failed to remember that she had lived among perhaps the most violent race of beings in this part of the universe and done very well all by herself. She knew Resumar Leonidas was keeping something from her. She could see it in his eyes, and it was only confirmed when more and more men and women began to appear on Vortex Cruiser 341 over the last three days from the hidden ships in orbit above Ritaah. They were not here to secure data storage units or oversee the transfer of any information of that she had no doubt. She recognized this Captain Fang easily after being introduced to her the first time. The human female had an air of confidence about her that Shiria did not think human men or women were capable of. Shiria had never met a pure or unaltered human before, yet this woman impressed her immensely. She was amazingly intelligent and while just barely thirty years old, she had knowledge and expertise that many people four times her age did not have. She saw how Resumar himself acted towards her, treating her as an equal and questioning her when he didn't understand something; which was often when it came to ship combat Shiria saw. This should have been her first clue.

Captain Fang had been to the ship half a dozen times in the last day and a half alone, and this is what finally made Shiria realize that something else was going on. She was not about to let Resumar keep her out of the loop because he thought he was protecting her. She knew that he would be on what would normally be the bridge of the ship. This is where Avatar 341 and Avi had been spending most of their time these last days as they uploaded the core systems of VORTEX Cruiser 341 to the Lycavorian ships in orbit.

The doors on the cruiser were keyed for her Pralor bioscans and the double doors to the bridge opened without pause as she approached. Three steps onto the massive bridge and Shiria came to an abrupt halt with wide eyes as her mouth opened in shock. She had not been here in several days, not since the last communication with Androcles, and then there had been data storage units scattered all over as well as techs working at several different stations. There had been nothing but minimal power to the bridge and only three terminals active. What she saw before her now was simply amazing.

It was readily apparent to her that full power to the bridge had been restored, as every one of the thirty-nine station consoles was active. Over half of those stations were now staffed by men or women who were working diligently while others moved between them with data pads or scrolls adjusting one thing or another. The data storage containers were gone, though the cables remained and now connected the working stations to the central hub processing core of the bridge as it fed information and received information from the active stations. The men and women were sitting comfortably in seats that had never been occupied by crewmembers before since Cruiser 341 had never received its allotment of crew before leaving the home planet with her on board. Shiria's wide eyes scanned the immense bridge area, so large that she was hard pressed to see the crewmembers at the far end, until her eyes fell on where Resumar stood with 341, Avi and Athani near what would be called the Command Station. She recognized Mican and the woman elf who Resumar called aunt with them and taking a deep breath she marched towards them. Several men and women simply got out of the way of her decidedly angry gait as she made her way over to them and came to a halt behind Resumar's tall form.

"Just what is going on here?" Shiria demanded loudly. "I will no longer be kept out of the loop! You will tell me exactly what it is you are doing Resumar Leonidas! And you will do so right now!" She watched as Resumar turned to look at her with a very sheepish and very guilty expression on his handsome face.

"Good morning to you too Val'istar." Resumar spoke to her.

Shiria stumbled for a moment with what to say and she saw Ckaoa enter the bridge from another side door obviously worried that she had not found her in her quarters. She turned back to Resumar. "Do not change the subject!" She snapped finally. "I wish to know what is going on and you are going to tell me!" She waved her hand behind and to the side. "Why are your people sitting at stations that have lay dormant for centuries? Why has full power been restored to the bridge when it is not needed to transfer data to storage cells?" She stepped closer to him. "And why are the worker drones adjusting and synchronizing the reverse flow of power through conduits in parts of this ship that should be lifeless?"

"You noticed that did you?" Resumar asked softly.

"Of course I noticed it!" Shiria barked loudly. "I traveled on this ship for two years until we arrived in this quadrant! I explored every deck, every room! There is now main power to living sections that have never housed crew before! Why do this if we are going to destroy the ship? There have never been any crewmembers so there is nothing to find on those decks!" She snapped. "Why would...?" Shiria stopped talking as her dark eyes grew wide and she stared at him. "You... you..." She shook her head gently as she stammered once more. "You are not going to destroy the ship are you?"

Resumar met her gaze evenly and shook his head. "No." He stated flatly. "No we are not Vali'star."

"Why?" She demanded. "This is what your father sent you here for Resumar! He knows the danger involved with keeping this ship intact! He sent you here to destroy it and that is what you must do!"

Resumar shook his head once more. "No." He stated once more.

"No?" She gasped. "I demand that you destroy this ship!" She exclaimed. "I demand that you follow through with your father's orders!"

"My father is not in charge Val'istar." Resumar said simply. "At least not at the moment."

Shiria's eyes grew wider still. "Androcles?" She hissed at him. "He knows what you are doing here?"

Resumar nodded his head. "I forwarded the idea to him several days after we arrived here on Ritaah Val'istar. After seeing this ship. Seeing 341." He said.

"Avatar 341 tried to kill you!" Shiria exclaimed.

-That is not an accurate statement Elder Pralor Shiria. I...- 341 began to answer her sentence as he stepped forward.

"Shut up!" Shiria barked at him cutting off his words. She glared at Resumar and saw that her look was bouncing off of him quite easily. "You can not do this Resumar." She stated.

“We are doing it.” Resumar answered. “It was my idea... and Androcles agreed with me completely.” He said. “We are not going to throw away what this ship is capable of. Taking the data cores is not enough. The Coven made off with several cores of information that they will not use in a peaceful manner. We cannot allow them to do this without a counter of our own. We have several advantages already... advantages from the tech we got from CS41, but they aren’t enough. SPARTA’S WRATH gives us that defensive counter fully intact.”

“SPARTA’S WRATH?” Shiria gasped in disbelief. “You named it?”

Resumar smiled. “It was 341’s idea. It’s a fitting name don’t you think?”

“This is insane!” Shiria rasped. “All of you have gone insane! Athani... tell him please. Tell him what your father will do with this ship and its technology if it is captured intact. Tell him please!”

Athani batted her blue/green eyes a few times in surprise. “But I agree with what we are doing Val’istar.” She replied softly.

“What?” Shiria gasped. “You are Kavalian! How can you agree! You know...”

“It is because I am Kavalian that I agree with all of it Val’istar.” Athani stated. She had discarded the name she had called Shiria growing up in favor of the name everyone now called her, and that was Val’istar. “You said it yourself... if even one small piece of this ship falls into my father’s hands they will eventually figure out ways to use the technology to further oppress my kind. Mican, Jalersi and I are all in agreement Val’istar. Taking this ship is the far better option to anything else we have.”

Shiria looked at Mican. The tall and powerfully built son of Keleru nodded his head. “My sisters are right Val’istar.” He stated.

“Where is Jalersi?” Shiria demanded. “She has more sense than the both of you combined you know! She would never agree to this!”

“But I have.” Jalersi’s voice echoed from behind Shiria causing her to spin around and see Jalersi walking up behind the group, Nikkei, Ardis and Karun on one side and Pian on the other holding her hand.

“Jalersi you can’t possibly...” Shiria couldn’t believe this was happening. “I don’t... I don’t believe this is happening.” She stated. “I won’t allow it! I won’t!”

“You can’t stop it Val’istar.” Resumar spoke softly.

Shiria turned back to him. “My command codes still work!” She snarled. “I can damn well stop it if I choose!”

Resumar shook his head slowly. “You know as well as I do that 341 and this entire ship will only answer to someone of my bloodline now. Your Command Codes became inactive and frozen the moment I came on board. Nothing will work now without a biometric scan and authorization from me or someone in my family.” He stated softly.

Shiria glared at him. “The risk... the risk involved is too great Resumar.” She said. “You and Androcles understand this don’t you?”

Resumar moved closer to her staring down into her dark eyes. “I believe we understand it far better than you realize Shiria.” He said. “You know what has happened. What my family has been through. What we are still going through even now?”

Shiria nodded slowly. “Yes.” She said softly.

“Then you know even with our Pralor blood we are still Lycavorian.” Resumar said. “We still listen to our instincts.”

“I know this Resumar.” Shiria said.

“Then you must know by now that Andro and our father are in constant communication within Mindvoice Val’istar.” Resumar said seeing her eyes go a little wider.

“But... how... the distance involved.” Shiria gasped. “Resumar how is that...”

“Was our ancestor Sumar not the most powerful Pralor among your people by your very own words?” Resumar asked.

“Well yes but...”

“My father and brother are different Val’istar.” Resumar spoke. “You know this as well as I do. My mother Aricia as well. They are connected in a way that is truly beyond amazing because of when he was conceived. I think the only ones who really understand, though I doubt they realize it, are Eliani and Zarah. My sister Zarah for obvious reasons and Eliani because she was conceived while my father and mother Anja were still new to everything that was taking place all around them. Still emotionally affected by the events that took place on Enurrua. You have to remember... my mothers Anja and Aricia were so very close... and it was she who first went to her on Enurrua.”

“Yes... I know this.” Shiria snapped. “I have seen your thoughts... those you chose to share with me.”

“Zarah will always be stronger now because she took so much of Andro’s blood to live and Eliani is stronger because of the time she was conceived as I said.” Resumar spoke. “Did you not think that my father and brother would be able to communicate easily within Mindvoice because of the bond they share? My mother Aricia as well? And even if the distance is too great for them, they have other means available to them thanks to Avi.”

“Does your father know what you and your brother intend?” Shiria hissed.

Resumar shrugged. “I believe he has an idea.” He answered. “He is not as stupid as most people like to think he is. Even if he does and he did not agree with what we were doing... he can do nothing.”

“He is King!” Shiria barked.

“Who, at the moment, is very dead... correct?” Resumar said. “Making Andro the King elect. At least for the moment while the Kavalians hold our mother For'mya.”

“Resumar... you are letting your emotions guide you into rash decisions.” Shiria told him. “Keeping this ship intact is a mistake! If it leaves this planet it...” Shiria stopped speaking for a moment looking unsure of her words.

“What?” Resumar asked her.

Shiria blinked and stammered once more. “It will... it will become a target! Everyone will know you have this technology and they will want it! They will try to take it!” She finally got the words out.

Resumar tilted his head slightly while he looked at her and was silent for a moment, his mind wondering what it was that she had wanted to say. He finally nodded his head. “That is a possibility.” He said finally. “341... what are the odds that a Kavalian task force could in some way capture this ship once it is fully operational and staffed with a full crew?”

-The Kavalian Federation would need to assign a minimum of four complete Fleet groups as well as the operational equivalent of a Lycavorian Union Combined Forces Fleet Group in order to properly stage any sort of attack against this ship that may prove remotely successful- 341 answered quickly. –Even with such a task force, the odds that such an action would succeed once SPARTA’S WRATH has a full crew are miniscule. Every Lycavorian member of the fleet is trained first as a ground soldier. The Kavalians would need to place at least a full battalion of troops onto this ship to conduct an operation of what you speak. An operation such as you refer to would succeed only 4.3 percent of the time-

Resumar looked at her. “So you see... the odds are in our favor by a substantial margin.”

“The odds?” Shiria gasped loudly. “The odds! Does Wayonn know you are doing this? He would side with me! He would not allow this!”

“Perhaps... but he is with father and again... Androcles is the one in charge.” Resumar answered.

“Then I wish to speak with Androcles!” Shiria exclaimed. “I wish to speak with him right now! Before you proceed further!”

“I believe they are in the middle of that ridiculous hearing on Hadaria.” Resumar replied. “If that is what you would like however, certainly Val’istar. I will arrange that but I will not cease our preparations.” He turned and looked at Athani, leaning over to kiss her softly. “I will be back shortly Aryschanne. Make sure everyone proceeds as we discussed.”

Athani nodded. “Yes.” She spoke.

Resumar turned back to Shiria and motioned with his hand. “We’ll use the starboard COM room Val’istar. That is the one with the direct link to Andro’s STRIKER on Hadaria.”

Shiria huffed and began walking in that direction, Resumar looking at her oddly as he began to follow.

“...can not begin to offer my apologies Aihola.” Armetus spoke from the bed. “I...”

Aihola stepped forward and shook her head as she took his hand. She looked at his tan and weathered face and her amber eyes filled with warmth and emotion. “Do not even start with that Armetus.” She told him softly. “You are almost as revered among my people as Martin. You and he gave us the opportunity to become what we have become as a people and we have embraced it. You and Martin. You allowed us to do what we do best.”

“It... it cost too much.” Armetus spoke softly shaking his head.

“No.” Aihola replied gently. “I have spoken with every Drow Matriarch or Patriarch that lost their family members in the attacks. Not one of them expressed regret or remorse at their decision to take part in the operations Armetus. All of them however, all of them were only concerned for you.”

Armetus looked at her with his one good eye. “They were... they were my people! Every one of them!” He looked at her as the fire returned to his face and his remaining eye. “We will have vengeance Aihola!” He hissed softly. “I swear to you... we will have vengeance!”

Aihola nodded. “I know that. They know that. Right now... right now however we have many other concerns. I came here today with Deia, Marci and Panos because I’m taking a more personal role in what we will do and to show you that the Drow still believe. That we still have faith. And that we worry for you.”

Armetus nodded from the bed. He was sitting up now and he was gaining strength every day but he was a long way from being recovered. It helped that Marci had daily reports being delivered to him every morning for the last week and he was almost thoroughly caught up on what had happened. It was difficult getting used to having only one eye, but at least they had been able to save his limbs. It would take many months, but he would walk again and he would still be able to shift. Eleven thousand plus years of life and he had survived yet again. Perhaps the gods were not done with him just yet.

“I would like... I would like to meet with them one at a time.” Armetus told her. “As their schedules permit.”

Aihola nodded. “I will arrange it.” She answered. “You are looked at in a new light as well because of Lu'ria. Many of our people think you acted knowingly, sending her to Iraruzu to be found by Andro. They believe you knew she would fulfill the prophecy. That she would one day be the next Drow Queen.”

Armetus met her gaze. “Aihola... I had no idea.” He stated.

Aihola chuckled and squeezed his hand. “I know. Do not worry, I have no intention of stepping down anytime soon and Lu'ria has no desire to be Queen as she has told me herself. Besides... she is newly turned and Androcles and Sadi will need to school her in the many nuances of being a wolf now. As well as being a Drow Mistress to four beautiful women I might add.”

“Four?” Armetus asked.

Panos chuckled from where he stood against the wall. “That boy is turning into a stud Alpha just as his father is!” He snorted with some male pride in his voice. “He claimed his fifth mate and wife only a few days ago. A blue skinned Vanari female. A stunning young woman if I do say so myself, with light blue skin, violet lips and lush black hair. She fits in very well with his other wives and mates.”

Armetus looked at Marci. “Vanari. As in the ones from the Beta Quadrant like those new Lycavorians from the Protectorate?”

Marci nodded and handed over two data scrolls. “I’ve been compiling a dossier on them and just incorporated Andro’s sense of those he has met besides Caliria.”

“Caliria is this mate I take it?” Armetus asked taking the scrolls.

Marci nodded. “Yes.” She answered. “Bren has taken her mother as his mate as well and Andro seems to think that there might be something going on between Caliria’s sister Arduri, Denali and Lisisa but he is not completely sure.”

Armetus met her gaze. “Almost as if...”

Deia nodded now. “Yes. As if it has somehow been foretold that the Vanari would come to be with us in this way. Planned by something greater than we can see.”

“Well... it’s definitely no coincidence.” Armetus spoke as his mind returned to business. “Those who come in contact with the Leonidas family tend to do so for a reason I have learned through the years. And it started with you Panos.” He spoke looking at him. “The day Martin swore to take his place as the son you had lost.”

“Yes it did.” Deia spoke.

Panos nodded. “A day my mate and I have blessed every moment since.” He stated pushing off the wall. “We will need to let Andro know you are awake and ready to get back to work soon. He is under tremendous pressure having to maintain this façade that his father and mother are dead. It is driving him insane to not be able to lash out at those who have hurt us. He and Marci have been flying by the seat of their pants I believe the expression is.”

Marci chuckled. “That is putting it rather mildly.” She said with a shrug.

“And doing an excellent job.” Deia added. “Make no mistake about that in the least.”

Armetus nodded as he looked at her. “That she has.” He said. “I have read the reports and first thing is first. Marci are we sure that Nessa and her team have rooted out all of Laustinos’s network?”

Marci nodded her head. “Nearly one hundred percent.” She answered. “Anything they are not sure of they have laid traps for. All of his command codes and any clearances he might have had have been revoked and deleted. All Military networks, as well as government databanks have been recoded. Our people have been working twenty-hour days for weeks now. They are just about finished adding the new layer of security that Avi was working on before he left with Resumar. Zaala Randall finished it shortly after the Battle of Kranek and it is being installed now.”

Armetus nodded his head. “Good. We were going to shift to the new network anyway... now is as good a time as any.” He spoke. “Andro did the right thing with the Gates around Hadaria.”

Deia nodded her head slowly. “We know. The loss of life was massive, but there was no other way to stem the flow of Kavalian personnel and equipment. He’s the only one who could have made that decision.”

“How much misery has he caught from the Netnews because of it?” Armetus asked.

“Not as much as you might think.” Marci answered. “This former Netnews Anchor that he made his spokesperson put the cap on that quickly with several press releases and the reasons behind his thinking. She answered the questions before they were asked really. How it plays out with this Hadarian hearing is another story, but Dilaen will stay on top of it I’m sure.”

Armetus looked at Deia. “He saw this coming you know.” He told her.

“Saw what coming?” Deia asked.

“Martin... he saw this coming. He knew his brother would one day get around to making a play for the throne of Sparta and the Union. It simply made sense to him. It’s what he would have done he told me, had he been in Pusintin’s shoes.” Armetus told her. “Martin didn’t think he would go after For'mya however. He thought Pusintin would go after Aricia because of her bloodline and try to do what Andro and Eliani believe has happened with For'mya. Martin never suspected this backdoor type play at the throne would be used though. This grab at the throne by using birthright and not bloodline.” Armetus straightened up further on the bed. “Deia... can he succeed?”

Deia sat back in her chair slowly shaking her head several times. “Pusintin would never have succeeded going after Aricia and he knew it. She is far too powerful a woman now, within Mindvoice as well as physically with her skills to allow it. Hell...no one in the Durcunusaan will even challenge her to spare anymore because she is too skilled. And as my Mandri’s anome she would have forced them to kill her before allowing another man besides Martin to take her. Even against her will. She has the vicious survival instincts of a pureblood Lycavorian female wolf, Anja and Dysea as well simply because of their natures before they were turned. For'mya unfortunately does not. In many ways For'mya is still ruled by her calm elven sensibilities even though she is wolf and this is why they love her so. Which Pusintin and Laustinos obviously knew about and used against her.” Deia looked at them. “That and her love for Martin and the others as well. She was the last of Martin’s Queens, but all of them love her more fiercely because of whom she is inside. She is their focus and center. Their calm. If you have ever seen them all together in a room when they are relaxing, where is For'mya almost always situated?”

This caused everyone to stop and think about the times they had seen Martin and his Queens together relaxing at their home. It was Aihola who answered for all of them. “She is always at the center, closest to Aricia and Martin.” She said softly looking at Deia.

Deia nodded. “She is Martin’s Kinsoaurgai yes... but she is also the voice of all of them in a sense.”

“So you believe the move with Dysea was a ploy by Pusintin like Andro and Eliani now believe?” Armetus asked.

Deia nodded. “It is the only thing that makes sense. A type of control over For'mya that they would not have otherwise.” She stated evenly. “And implanting the same type of inhibitor in her as they did within Dysea only makes it much worse. For'mya cannot feel us Armetus; she cannot sense us at all within Mindvoice. This simple fact alone, after seeing what we did on the Netnews in my office that day, this fact alone would make her body start to change. She was three days from the peak of her Phase cycle, just as all of them were. Pusintin knew this... he knew what he was going to do and he took advantage of the biological nature of Lycavorian females.”

“How would he even know this?” Marci asked now. “It is not something that is common talk at cafés and such Prime Minister. At least not in a manner that would be understood by someone who is not Lycavorian.”

“Do not forget who is he Marci.” Panos spoke now. “He was born here on this planet among the Lycavorians here. We remained much closer to our instincts than those off world simply because we did not know any better. Those Lycavorian females within Spartan society, they would have reacted in the same way For'mya has reacted. If it's true. Many of them did when their mates fell in battle. It is part of why we were able to keep our presence here secret for so long. The unmated males would smell this on the females and they would get to them before any non-Lycavorian could show an interest no matter if they were Spartan or not. They did not force themselves upon any female, as we believe Pusintin has done, but it gave the female a much larger choice of who to turn to for a prospective mate. We did not start taking mates outside our people until after World War Two when many Spartans of Lycavorian blood fell in battle against Hitler and his vampire cronies. Then we had no choice. No one that we turned was ever forced however, and that is when we began the code by which we lived. Never without their consent or only in order to save their lives.”

“And Walter passed this to Martin and the others.” Marci said softly. “That is why they changed the men and women who travel with them now?”

Panos nodded. “My son was of the original three hundred Spartans who fought with Martin's father those days at Thermopylae. One of only two who survived. He may not have known who Martin was when he was brought to him, but he knew enough to teach him our ways.”

Aihola turned to him now. “I have always wondered Panos... how is it that Walter could not smell the Leonidas bloodline in him when he was first brought to him by Helen and the others?”

“I asked Anja this many years ago and she said it is most likely because he was placed in a sleep chamber so soon after being born. His true scent did not have an opportunity to fully mature until years after he returned to Earth because it had been suppressed for over twenty-five hundred years using chemicals while in the chamber.” Panos answered. “It was faint enough that Walter was able to sense a connection within his blood, but not how deeply that connection went. That did not happen until Martin finally went to Thermopylae and was touched by his father's essence.”

“He has with him men and women who will die at his command more readily than any others.” Armetus spoke softly. “And men and women who will know exactly what he and Daniel will do in almost any given situation. The most experienced and lethal fighting unit that exists today. Andro knew exactly what he was doing when he gathered them and sent them to be with his father.”

“A unit that now includes three of his mates and an Immortal.” Deia spoke. “I shudder to think of what trouble they will conduct.”

“You can be assured the gloves have come off.” Panos spoke. “I have spoken with my son at length about these men and women and what they did before the Great Fire. Dymas is preparing his personal command for battle and as Polemarch of the entire Union ground forces he will begin preparing them. After speaking with him it is my belief that we will begin to see a new era of warfare. An era of warfare that will change the face of the universe, as we know it anyway. An era that Martin and Androcles are going to bring shattering to the forefront and the Kavalians will bear the brunt of it. I pity them in a way... for their leaders do not yet understand the force of what they have unleashed. And after what Gorgo did, whatever restraint Martin and his son may have exercised... that is now gone.”

Armetus looked quickly at Marci. “Project Arizona?” He gasped.

Marci nodded slowly. "Fully operational and already in the field. Andro uncorked them at the Battle of Kranek and Admiral Lorian put a serious hurting on superior Kav numbers." She answered. "And that is just with two ships."

"Admiral?" Armetus questioned.

Marci nodded. "Andro promoted her with Ben's blessing and put her in command of the entire Block One series. The last three from the Block One batch will be finished by the end of this week according to Ben. They will be commissioned immediately for Andro already has a mission for them."

"What is this Block One? This Project Arizona?" Deia asked. "I have never heard of these things?"

Armetus looked at her. "Martin wanted you to have complete and utter deniability Deia." He answered. "Only six of us knew they were being built. It was better that way."

"What is this Project Arizona Armetus?" Deia asked once more. "What has he been building?"

Armetus took a deep breath. "A completely new class of ship based solely on technology we took from CS41. Avi helped with the blueprint and engineering and Zaala Randall designed and oversaw the building of their propulsion plants. Essentially... essentially they are twenty of the most devastating warships we have ever built as a government and they are meant for only one purpose."

"War." Deia spoke softly.

Armetus nodded slowly. "Martin did not want you involved because of the ramifications that could arise." He said. "He didn't want your reputation as a mediator tainted."

"And look where that has gotten me?" Deia hissed softly in anger. "The near destruction of everything in my family... a second time! The family I never thought I would have again!" She shook her head. "Never again. You will fill me in on these ships when we are done here. I want to know everything, so that when I have to confront a politician with too much arrogance or a Netnews reporter with too much curiosity, I can tell them where to go and how to get there in the most eloquent of terms."

Armetus nodded. "Marci?"

Marci nodded as well. "I can arrange a full briefing. I will need to let Admiral O'Connor and Andro know but I doubt they will disagree. Not now."

"Back to Pusintin." Armetus said. "Deia... can he do it?"

Deia met his eyes. "He will put forth evidence of birthright and such no doubt. As well as the combination of royal blood. He is the oldest son of Leonidas and Martin did clear the path for him to do this by reinstating him into the ranks of the Spartans."

"That's not what I asked Deia." Armetus spoke. "Can he take the throne legally without Andro starting a war to stop him because you know as well as I do that is exactly what Andro will do."

"It will depend on what the Galactic Court rules." She said. "And what the consensus of our allies in the senate will be."

"Deia... our allies in the Senate will never allow it and you know it. And the Galactic Court appears to have been bought... hook, line and sinker as Anja says! Especially from these reports Marci has given me not to mention what I have seen so far this morning on the Netnews channels." Armetus growled. "My question is, does he have a legitimate claim to the throne! Can he give those in the Senate who have never cared for Martin; can he give them ammunition to use to rise to the position of King?"

Deia met his eyes. "Yes he does have a claim. Or I should say a child of his would have a claim. And he will be successful if what we think has happened has indeed happen... yes." She said looking at him and then allowing her dark eyes to wander to everyone in the room one at a time. "We changed the Ascension Laws in regards to bloodline after what happened to Aricia on Enurrua. That is not what they will use however. They will use the few Ascension Laws in regards to birthright and those of have never been altered and they have remained buried in the wording of the Twenty-Third Scroll of Lycavorian Law. They only reference bloodline vaguely and deal mostly with actual birth lines. Many scholars did not even know they ever existed. At least not until Laustinos found them and then gave them to the Kavalians. They will take the context of these few words and twist them to suit what they want to accomplish Armetus, even though that was not the intent when it was written. I should know, I helped Canth and Resumar to write them. We can do nothing at the moment until we hear what it is they want fully. Using For'mya... well it is my belief they will attempt to usurp not only the Union throne, but that of the elves as well."

“And there are more elven members of their parliament who have never cared for Martin than there are elven Senators within the Union Senate.” Panos spoke. “So it could potentially be a large problem?”

Deia nodded her head. “If this is what they have done, then it was done within days, more than likely hours after they took her. Pusintin would have moved very quickly.” She said softly. “We were still reeling from the attacks as they knew we would be. It is why Matuarr told Andro any attempt to retrieve For'mya and they would kill her. The Kavalians have been planning this for some time Armetus and Laustinos was the one who helped them.” Deia shook her head. “There is no way to know what lies they told her immediately after they took her, knowing what she would have seen on the Netnews. With the Inhibitor in place she would not have been able to sense any of us within Mindvoice as I said. She would think we were all dead. It gave them the time they needed for her body to begin to change and to force her to agree to their terms. If she carries his child she will be bound to him now, no matter that she hates him with every fiber of her being. Her wolf instincts will drive her to protect their children no matter the enemy and when combined with her elven instincts that run along the same gambit, well you can not be more protective a mother than when you are wolf and elf. Pusintin is counting on that I tell you.”

“What a nubous lash up!” Armetus hissed. “Do we know how many of our own people will support this?”

Marci shook her head quickly. “Not very many Armetus. Lycavorians or elves anyway. I’ve spoken to the head of EI and just about every counterpart that I have among the other Union members. The mass consensus they are seeing as more and more information comes out is that the vast majority of all their people are incensed. Even the King’s normally vocal opponents are making rumblings about this. They may have fought him on everything he and the Queens did, but they respected and honored him.” Marci said. “There is the local Utopian Movement here on Earth and their branches across the Union, but they have no real power. And while they may support this openly, they will remain silent for the most part. Too many of our people adore the King and Queens and they will not risk confrontation. They do however have a new voice.”

“What do you mean?” Armetus asked.

Marci handed him another scroll. “The young woman Andro dated for a brief time before Sadi came back into his life, Ulana is her name. She was elected to take her father’s position within the Senate after he was killed in the bombing. She is a closet supporter of the Utopian Movement. No doubt they will attempt to have her use her new position to try and advance their agenda. Perhaps even try and renew her relationship with Andro.”

Armetus looked at her. “Andro knew this when he was seeing her?”

Marci shrugged her shoulders. “I don’t know. Probably. I can’t believe that would have escaped his notice.”

“He knew.” Deia said with a small smile. “And he took perverse pleasure in it as well. He is far too much like his father. Let Ulana attempt what she will, Sadi and the others will quickly put her in her place.”

“Androcles will not let this stand Deia.” Armetus said turning back to her. “You have to know that.”

Deia nodded. “I do. And neither will I.” She answered. “However... I am unwilling to put For'mya in any kind of situation where her life is threatened. If it were to come out before we are ready that Martin is still alive, their plan will fall apart and Pusintin will kill her outright and possibly invade.”

“Their actions so far require we declare war!” Armetus spoke. “We would be well within our rights to do so!”

“And all but the most liberal Senators would agree and vote for war.” Panos spoke.

Armetus looked back at Marci. “Marci?”

“They haven’t pulled any of their forces away from the High Coven borders based on our most recent Intel reports and scans. Probably as a way to win support from the masses.” She told him immediately and with much confidence. “They could still field a massive army with their biogenic clones and those could pour across the borders in any number of locations. Our Border Defense Network would not stand for long against a concentrated attack. Their fleets outnumber us for the most part, but we don’t know how experienced they are and there is some question as to the durability of their ships and equipment. It’s one of the reasons they supported Buonau in her bid to oust Queen Anja. It gives them access to what they didn’t have before. Hadarian Healers.”

“Yes... but it is my understanding none of those who are active duty heeded her order to return.” Armetus said.

Marci nodded. “No... for the most part they all told her to get screwed.” She answered. “And there are millions who made it off planet before the Kavalians clamped down and we put the blockade in place. Perhaps another ten to fifteen percent of them were trained Healers as well. Most of them went to Apo Prime, some came here to Earth and immediately began helping within the hospitals and clinics across the planet. Those that were treating injuries from the bombings.”

“She still has a substantial number of Healers she can use.” Armetus said.

“The question remains... how well will they be trained?” Marci said. “Certainly not on the same caliber as the Union Healers or those who escaped.”

“It is still an advantage for them however. At least initially.” Armetus said. “They will have something they didn’t have before.”

“I question what Buonau gave up in order to secure their assistance.” Deia spoke. “That woman is power hungry and has always hated Anja because she could never control her as she did Yelu.”

“We do have some assets left on Hadaria...” Marci said. “But they will only report in if it is important enough. Getting transmissions off world is a tricky prospect and they do not want to attempt it more than they need to.”

Deia shook her head. “We must avoid that Armetus.” She stated. “I do not want to put those people at risk and there are other things that Andro says he has working. There are things he will not tell me, but I know he will not risk his mother for any reason until certain pivotal things happen or don’t happen.”

“What things?” Armetus asked.

Deia shook her head. “I don’t know.” She answered. “But whatever they are you can be assured of one thing.”

“And that is?” Armetus asked.

“Pusintin will be successful for now. He will be successful right up until the time that it is discovered Martin is still alive and Pusintin is guilty of raping a sitting Queen of the Lycavorian Union.” Her eyes became hard points of darkness. “Then his life will be for sibfla, for not only will Martin be after his blood, but every member of the Leonidas family as well. Of that you can be assured.”

CURILA 6

I think we wore her out. Ceuma spoke within Mindvoice as she lifted her head from Joci’s broad chest, her Persian red hair damp with sweat. Her jade green eyes turned with her face and she looked at the ebony skinned face and dark eyes of her husband and mate. Joci’s chest rose and fell evenly with deep breaths as his racing heart began to slow to a more sedate rhythm. Ceuma couldn’t help but grin when she saw the look in his eyes and how wide they were at the actions that had taken place over the last three hours since he had walked into their quarters and found her and Naesta naked and locked in a torrid embrace of mutual pleasure.

Joci’s eyes dropped to the mass of white blond hair and soft blue skin that rested on his abdomen totally spent and sleeping the sleep of the much contented. Naesta’s face was a mask of blissful pleasure for that is how she had fallen asleep. Her naked body, so very enticing and firm and blue, was pressed against his side. Her breasts, though not as large as Ceuma’s, were stabbing into his naked side deliciously. Her arm was draped over his lower abdomen and her hand rested intimately on Ceuma’s hip. His eyes turned back to Ceuma.

What have we done? He asked her.

I thought we experienced buckets of pleasure as Anja and Sivana are so fond of saying. Ceuma answered him. I know you smelled it Joci... if I could smell it upon her then you must have.

I... I’m not saying I didn’t... but you... you are my mate and wife. He answered.

Yes I am. And I thank whatever gods are up there for that every day. But I also could smell the desire wafting from Naesta. For me. For you. I could not... I did not want to fight it anymore Joci. Ceuma answered. She told me that the more Alkay they produce during sex is a large indicator of their emotional state and how much they desire a person.

You talked of this? Joci gasped.

Joci... I have been working with her for weeks now. The medical background and tests we did were instrumental in discovering the cure for her people. Ceuma answered. We have talked of many things since then. She is amazingly intelligent and grasps the concepts of problems incredibly fast. And she tastes wonderful. Don't you agree? She asked him with a smile as her fingers traced his chin and his bottom lip.

Ceuma we...

Are you going to tell me you don't find it overwhelmingly exciting to have two women worshipping you as we did? Ceuma asked him with a seductive twinkle in her eye. Kissing you? Tasting you? And you do taste wonderful my husband and mate.

Ceuma that is not what I was going to say. Joci spoke lifting his hand and pressing it to her cheek. He watched her eyes close in happiness and she leaned into his touch, his alpha aura drifting almost lazily around her body and tickling her senses.

I know what you were going to say. She spoke opening her eyes and looking at him. You feel shame for enjoying when Naesta was atop you and whimpering your name as you filled her and she clutched at your arms. You feel shame because you felt pleasure with her.

It is not the same. Joci said quickly. She is not you.

I know that my love. Ceuma spoke. And while you took pleasure with her, watching you with her, knowing what we could have together. It made me so very happy. And I know what I mean to you because you took me immediately after with more passion and intensity than you ever have. My senses were alive as your aura caressed me Joci. We...

"Ceuma?" Anja's voice broke into her thoughts and Ceuma turned her head quickly breaking out of her daydreaming trance.

"Hmmm? What?" She stammered.

Anja looked at the clone of herself who she now considered another sister. Ceuma had developed into a person all her own that was for sure, but she still had a small bit of Anja and Sivana within her. A rebellious side that came out every so often and also any angry streak that she had only ever seen when Ceuma had run her Nehtes through Rinard on Hadaria. Anja had seen it coming for several weeks now, the relationship between Naesta and Ceuma developing very quickly. The attraction was easily noticeable by any Lycavorian simply by her scent which spiked whenever either Ceuma or Joci was nearby. Now Anja could smell Naesta's sweet scent all over her sister and no doubt when she saw Naesta it would be the same. And Anja knew it was not something that Ceuma would have done without including Joci she knew and she also knew it had probably taken the charcoal skinned Spartan completely by surprise.

Anja settled into the chair next to Ceuma's medical work station with a smile. "I'm guessing from your distracted look and the smile in your eyes that it happened last night and it was everything you hoped it would be?"

Ceuma looked at her with wide eyes. "What... what do you mean?"

Anja chuckled. "Sister... do you think that Sivana and I haven't seen it. Smelled it these last weeks. You and Naesta."

Ceuma looked down somewhat embarrassed. "It is that obvious?" She asked softly.

"To me it is." Anja told her. "Vana will catch on eventually... but I can see it in your eyes and on your face because it is how I feel with Aricia. With Bella. With Dysea and For'mya. And now Cirith."

"Is it normal?" Ceuma asked her.

"Normal? No." Anja answered. "What you have to understand is you are wolf now sister. Just like me. Turned by a man with very pure blood, no matter the asshole that he was. You are also the mate and wife to another man with even purer blood and no doubt by now Joci has bitten you simply to make his claim on you?"

Ceuma nodded. "Yes."

"Then his blood is within you as well. And if I'm right, his blood is more than likely more pure than Rinard." Anja said. "The purer the blood the stronger you will be sister. It will allow you to feel and think of things differently than others. You and Naesta were together last night?"

Ceuma nodded again. “Anja... I have... I never desired something like this. I never even imagined myself doing something like this. But seeing her... smelling her... it became so clear and focused and the desire and want so powerful.”

Anja nodded in understanding. “It is no different than what I feel for any of the others.” She answered. “Martin may rock our world sister, he continues to make us feel things that we have never felt before, but that does not mean we, as his wives and mates, can not make each other cry out in passion without him.”

“It is very confusing for Joci.” Ceuma said. “He does not understand how... how he can feel what he does with her and not be betraying me. I tried to explain it to him but I don’t know if he truly understood.”

Anja leaned back with a knowing smile. “Given how the two of you met that doesn’t really surprise me. He is a very honorable man and it would be something that he would feel. What you need to do is make him understand that the two of you need him just as badly as you do each other.” She took Ceuma’s hands. “Does Naesta feel the same for Joci that she does for you? It can’t work if she does not.”

“That’s just it!” Ceuma exclaimed. “She does! She is taken by him! His skin, his hair, she feels exactly the same as I do for him. It is so... so surreal.”

“You have found something that very few people ever do sister.” Anja said. “Don’t let it slip away. Do you want me to talk to Joci?”

“Carians no!” Ceuma gasped. “He would be mortified that you know!” Ceuma squeezed her hands. “No... I will make him understand. Naesta and I will make him understand. We want each other... but we both want him more.”

Anja smiled. “It will work itself out don’t worry.” She stated. “You are very...” The terminal Ceuma sat next to began chiming furiously and both of them turned to look at the screen. Anja’s face changed then. “Ceuma... what... what are you running?” She asked finally.

Ceuma began typing furiously on the console. “I was bored and trying to think when I woke this morning so I programmed the computer to run all current samples of blood through a Phased Passive Ionic Inducer. To look for any abnormalities.” She stabbed down on the control panel. “I never thought it would find anything. Everyone is so healthy. What... Anja what is this?”

Anja moved closer to the screen and looked at the genetic strands. “Do a Spatial Analysis on the gene.”

Ceuma adjusted the controls once more and then looked up at the screen with her sister as the massive medical computer worked. The results came only five and a half seconds later. “The core strand for Darpia Syndrome? And it’s active.” Ceuma spoke softly. “What is Darpia Syndrome?”

“Who has this sister?” Anja asked her face now holding a very concerned expression. “Who has this core strand?”

Ceuma typed once more and the small gasp escaped her throat as she turned to look at Anja quickly. “Isabella!” She rasped out. “It’s Bella’s blood sample. Given only four days ago Anja!”

Anja sprang to her feet and rushed to the COM panel on the adjoining console, furiously stabbing her finger down on the panel. “Eurin! Eurin I need you in the medical center! Hurry!”

“Anja... what’s wrong?” Eurin’s voice echoed.

“Quickly Divine One.” Anja said. “And bring Vana with you! No one else!”

Anja tapped the console again and took a deep breath calming herself before reaching out within Mindvoice. Bella... where are you?

I woke famished and I’m just leaving the private dining area. The two Sanguine members arrived last night and I was showing them around now ... why? Isabella answered immediately.

Would you join me in the medical center Bella my love? Anja asked keeping her voice neutral. It didn’t work with Isabella for they have been lovers and friends for far too long.

Anja... what is wrong? Bella asked.

Bella... we... we need to talk and I need you to come to the medical center. Anja told her. Now. I’ll be there in six minutes.

“...me again bitch and I will make you regret your life as it is!” Pusintin snarled viciously into For'mya's face as his large hand squeezed tighter around her slim throat and he pressed her against the wall of the room.

“You... you lied to me you nubous ronnus!” For'mya snarled back at him undeterred, her hands gripping his wrists. “They are not dead! They are here!”

Pusintin rolled his eyes. “Of course I lied to you bitch!” He growled. “You wouldn't have done what I wanted otherwise!”

“Bryon?” For'mya gasped. “My son! You don't have him do you?”

Pusintin grinned evilly. “If I did... he would already be dead.” He hissed at her.

“You putrid excuse for a man!” For'mya almost screamed at him as she began to struggle anew. “You fucking contemptible bastard! You...”

Pusintin squeezed harder, cutting off her words as he leaned closer, pressing her body against the wall firmly as she fought to pull his hand away from her neck. “Do not press me woman!” He rasped at her. “What is done is done! My brother is dead and you are my mate now! I have claimed you in the old ways of the Lycavorian people. You are my mate and I will teach you to be a good woman and learn your place!”

For'mya hissed as her wolf fangs extended and her eyes changed. “Never!” She snarled at him.

Pusintin chuckled. “My dead brother and I are the strongest alphas in the entire Union For'mya. Now that he is dead and I have claimed you... who will sate the burning of your wolf blood when the phase comes For'mya? Only I can do that!”

“I did not want you!” For'mya snarled. “I did not choose you! You murdered my mate! You murdered my Martin!”

“Your mind may not have chose me... but your blood and your body did.” Pusintin hissed at her. “That is all that matters! Your choice is irrelevant. And now you are bound to me! Bound to me in such a way that your instincts override your mind's desire to slit my throat at the first chance you get! It's beautiful isn't it? You want to kill me so bad that you can taste it, yet your instincts won't allow you too. Your instincts tell you to protect me...” Pusintin's other hand came up now and settled almost gently on For'mya's swollen abdomen. “And to protect the child you carry for me! My child! My son!”

Tears clouded her eyes as she struggled even more, shame washing over her at his words. Shame at what she had done... what she had agreed to do to protect those she loved because she believed them all she had left. She believed Dysea and Bryon the only remaining family she had and she would do anything to protect them. For'mya slapped his hand away from her abdomen.

“Don't... don't touch me!” She screamed.

Pusintin smiled wickedly. “You didn't seem to mind me touching your body when I was pounding your tight pussy into the bed.” He growled at her. “You were fucking me back pretty good if I recall.”

“Liar! You lie!” She almost screamed out. “You... you are a sick perversion of a man! I never wanted you! Never!”

“Maybe.” He told her. “But you still need me. If not your mind... then the blood in your veins.” Pusintin grinned. “I plan on keeping you around For'mya. You are a class act... and you have got the tightest snatch I have ever had! I plan on keeping you around for a long time. You are too good a lay to kill you... even though you want me to. Don't worry when we get back to Cabelir, I'll hit you with my aura again and let you snuggle up between my legs and suck me off as long as you want. If you suck cock as good as you fuck then I'll know why my brother kept you around even with your smallish tits. Tell me... are the rest of your whore lovers as good in bed as you? I just might order my men to take them alive so I can try them out too!”

“Monster!” For'mya hissed at him.

“You just remember that you agreed to all of this willingly.” Pusintin snarled back at her. “It doesn't matter why you did... but you did. And you signed all the orders and documents that we need right now.”

“Do not... do not make me face them.” For'mya whimpered now. “If you... if you have any decency in you... do not make me face them like this.”

Pusintin chuckled cruelly and squeezed her arm. “Androcles killed my youngest son! He butchered him like an animal. Having him and the others see you in your condition is something I can't wait for.”

“Bastard!” For'mya rasped as he released her throat and she settled back to the floor reaching up to rub the area on her neck where his hand had been.

“Why do you think you can’t feel them in Mindvoice For'mya?” Pusintin asked with a grin. “They already suspect what you have done and they are blocking you. You are dead to them because of it. They feel you have betrayed them. Betrayed my dead brother. It’s poetic really. Now pull yourself together... we are going out there in a few minutes. I warn you though For'mya, do not do anything stupid. I have enough ships and troops in this system to make sure they all die before they even get off world. Don’t make me kill them. Nothing you do can stop what is coming, and as long as you do as your told, no one has to die needlessly. You just do what you are supposed to do and everything will be fine. You speak when I tell you and don’t say a fucking thing to them.”

“They are my children!” For'mya screamed.

“Not anymore they aren’t!” Pusintin growled. “Don’t fuck with me on this For'mya. It will be bad if you do.”

“They will speak to me! I can’t just ignore them!” For'mya wailed.

“You can... and you will.” Pusintin snapped.

For'mya glared at him with her dark brown wolf eyes. “I... I will kill you one day.” She hissed at him. “I will watch you die I swear.”

Pusintin smiled. “Yeah... better people than you have said that.” He stated. “I’m still here. Just shut up and get ready.”

“...And that is the negotiations between the Kavalian Federation Imperium and the Lycavorian Union to obtain the release of our Queen and to stop a war from happening.” L'tian didn't even bother looking at Buonau and Wiktor.

“You do realize that we will review the Hadarian evidence and then render a decision on their charges Ambassador.” Kagan spoke.

L'tian nodded. “If you wish to waste your time that is certainly within your rights.” He replied.

“Very well...” Sel'ke spoke. “I believe the Kavalian delegation has arrived and is ready to enter.” His eyes moved to the entrance across the room directly facing the Union table as the double doors opened. It was the entrance furthest from them, but it also allowed them to see everyone who came out, as they had to walk across in front of them to get to their table.

Andro rose to his feet with Eliani next to him, Arrarn moving up beside her as three large Kavalian soldiers came out, their weapons visible in their hands but pointing at the floor. Andro saw the Kavalian Admiral he had spoken with on the airfield walk out next, followed by a young man who appeared to be around his age and looked very similar to his cousin who he had killed on Iraruzu. They watched as another half dozen Kavalians exited the doorway, bunched tightly around who could only be his uncle. Andro had never seen Pusintin before, only in still images really and those were very old, but it was undoubtedly him. Beside him walked another tall Kavalian who was dressed in regal looking dark blue clothes and then he saw the flash of golden blond hair. She was walking on the far side of Pusintin, and Andro could detect her scent easily now. The same wild orchid scent that had brought all of them such comfort as children. The sweet scents of their mothers was all that was needed most often to sooth them as children as they grew. Andro heard Eliani gasp and grip his arm tightly when she too caught her scent, and Arrarn pressed closer, his mother’s smell filling his nostrils.

“Mother!” His whisper came out hoarsely but Andro and Eliani understood it without question.

Andro could see his grandfather stiffen slightly next to him as he saw his daughter and then as if it was staged for their benefit, the Kavalians stopped walking in front of the large Magistrate’s table and the Kavalian guards bunched tightly around Pusintin and the others moved out of the way. Eliani’s green eyes grew wide and then burst into tears as her hands came to her mouth in stunned shock.

“Mother no! Son vada carians no!” She gasped loudly.

“NO! NO!” Arrarn screamed as he started forward only to have Jomann and Andro seize his arms. “MOTHER!”

Andro held his brother’s arm even as his azure eyes changed and his fangs burst forth in anger. He had been preparing himself for this moment, steeling his emotions against what he dreaded he would see. It didn’t seem to be helping as he felt his blood beginning to boil in rage and not even Sadi grabbing his own arm could calm them. The emotion was mirrored by L'tian whose eyes were wide, but his face a mask of terrible rage as they fell upon his daughter. She walked with her head down unable to look up at them though the tears could be seen easily that were rolling down her cheeks. Pusintin was gripping her arm tightly, but there was no denying the swelling of her pregnant abdomen. There was no mistaking the flush of her soft tanned skin as he had seen it twice before in the last twenty years. It shone with beauty and radiance as it did when she was pregnant with first Arrarn and then Bryon. There was definitely no mistaking that For'mya was very pregnant. It appeared as if she was only days away from giving birth and this made it all the more painful for them to witness.

The Kavalian politician ignored their outbursts and bowed his head slightly to the twelve Magistrates, Sel'ke and several others with wide eyes as they gazed at For'mya. They knew who she was of course, and her condition was not lost on them. Nor was the fact that she was not restrained in any way considering the claims that she was a prisoner. The reactions Androcles Leonidas and his siblings was expected as well considering what they saw. They could hear the loud murmurs of shock coming from nearly everyone in the audience, most especially among the many Netnews crews who were present and reporting back live to their respective stations. What Sel'ke and the others could not hear, what no one but those on the single ship far from Hadaria could hear, was the pure and uncontaminated roar of fury that came from one man. Had anyone in the massive meeting room heard this cry, had they heard the promise of cruel, hideous and chilling demise in the echoes of that cry, had they heard any of it, they would have immediately fled from the planet and renounced all of their sins and become priests of some sort.

“Magistrates of the Galactic Court... Chief Magistrate Sel'ke, my name is Ambassador Rutork'Toren.” The Kavalian who stood next to Pusintin spoke. “I am the appointed Kavalian Ambassador to Hadaria and I have been assigned as counselor for these proceedings and I will represent Marshall Pusintin and Prefect Keleru on behalf of the Kavalian people.”

Sel'ke tore his eyes away from where For'mya stood next to Pusintin and looked at the man. He nodded quickly. “Am... Ambassador.” He stammered still in somewhat of a shock.

Rutork motioned elegantly to Pusintin with his hand. “Please... allow me to present Grand Marshall Pusintin of the Kavalian Federation and overall Commander of the Kavalian Federation Imperium Military. Beside him is Senior Admiral Menot who is also the Kavalian military liaison to Hadaria and then we have the Marshall's oldest son Colonel Kalis of the Puma Bane Regiment. I believe you are already acquainted with the elf female For'mya as the former Queen of the Lycavorian Union and current Queen of the Elven people.”

“What is the meaning of this?” L'tian barked from behind them unable to contain himself any longer. “You abduct a sitting Queen of the Union from Earth, killing hundreds of innocent civilians in the process and then you parade her around in front of the Galactic Court and the eyes of the entire known universe as some sort of prize?” L'tian screamed. “I demand she be released instantly! This very minute! To allow this is beyond acceptable!”

Rutork looked at him from where he stood. “The elf female is not a prisoner Ambassador L'tian.” He stated.

“She is a Queen of the Union and you will refer to her as such!” Arrarn snarled from his spot.

Rutork chuckled defiantly. “The elf female For'mya is no longer a Queen of the your silly Union young man. She willingly relinquished this title upon the death of your tyrant King and became the bound mate to Grand Marshall Pusintin.”

No one's eyes were wider than L'tian's and he moved closer to the group, the Kavalian guards not attempting to stop him. “What nonsense is this?” He shouted. “That is a lie! For'mya would never do that! I demand that she be released immediately before we hold any sort of discussions!”

Rutork was still smiling as he looked at Sel'ke and the other Magistrates. “I assure you Magistrates... everything I have just said is quite true. The elf female For'mya was changed many years ago and...”

“Stop calling her that!” Eliani shouted the tears streaking her cheeks. “She is Queen! And she is our mother! You kidnapped her! Took her from Earth against her will!”

“Magistrates... do you see any restraints upon the female?” Rutork asked motioning to where For'mya stood. “She is no prisoner. And I will speak about her as Kavalians refer to all of their females. In our culture they are not recognized publicly. The elf female For'mya willingly relinquished her title as Queen of the Union upon the death of the Lycavorian tyrant King. Due to her Lycavorian blood she was in the midst of what Lycavorian and females turned by them call their Phase. When female wolves are most fertile and their scent and blood calls out for a mate. When she lost her former mate, her body began to change and upon meeting Marshall Pusintin, the need to mate with him was overwhelming to her. She accepted his advances, for he too is Lycavorian, and then Marshall Pusintin claimed the elf female in the ancient ways of the Lycavorian people. The elf female did not resist and as you can see she now carries his child. She is now bound to him, his mate and wife, also in the ancient ways of the Lycavorian people.”

“Ambassador... we are not fools on this court!” The Lycavorian Magistrate snarled as he leaned forward. “The Lycavorian people have not used this method of taking a mate in nearly twenty millennia! It is considered barbaric among our people! And you wish us to believe that Queen For'mya is this far along in a pregnancy, as her obvious physical condition dictates, in only the few weeks since you took her from Earth?”

“The Lycavorian people may not use this method any longer Magistrate... however it is not unheard of... am I correct? Did not Jorak, the son of Chetak, use this very means to claim the now dead Queen Aricia as his mate?” Rutork spoke calmly.

“That ronnus used drugs!” The Lycavorian growled. “He used drugs that were unnatural Ambassador!”

Rutork nodded. “Yes... I understand that. We certainly do not condone that. However that is not what has happened now. You may ask her yourself Magistrates. The elf female For'mya will tell you that she agreed to this willingly when she mated with Marshall Pusintin. You may test her all you wish as well. You will find no drugs or foreign bodies influencing her. They have one of the most powerful Healers standing among them in former Queen Anja's daughter... surely she could determine this with a cursory examine. And all she will find in her blood, as with any Kavalian child born in the last thousand years, is a mild growth accelerator that is used on the fetus to shorten the gestation period by many months. It was a way we used to replenish our numbers after the High Coven and Lycavorian Union nearly wiped us out. It has never been changed. The Marshall's other children were treated in a similar fashion.”

“This is preposterous! We came here to Hadaria to enter into discussions to have my daughter released!” L'tian screamed now. “You expect us to see her like this, after she has been obviously raped and impregnated, you expect us to simply tolerate this! This is your idea of discussions!”

“We came here to discuss the status of your daughter as Queen of the Elves Ambassador L'tian.” Rutork corrected him. “Nothing was ever said in regards to what you are saying. She is not being held against her will, so why would we need to discuss her release.”

“Magistrates we protest this in the...” L'tian began to speak but Sel'ke held up his hand.

“Hold your protest!” He barked out, his eyes staring at For'mya. “Lady For'mya... is what the Ambassador says true? Have you done this willingly? Have you allowed Marshall Pusintin to take you as his mate and is the child you carry his?”

For'mya lifted her head slowly; unable to even look at her children because of the shame she had washing through her. Her Martin was gone. Aricia was gone. Those she called children were blocking her within Mindvoice for she could not sense them in the least even though she was trying to reach out to them now. Pusintin had been right... they knew what she had done and were incensed by her actions. Betrayed by what she had done. She had been tricked to submit to Pusintin and his vile rutting, thinking she was saving Dysea and her son from certain death, and this was the result she thought to herself as she lifted her hands and placed them on her swollen abdomen. She could sense the life growing within her, but the growth hormones they had injected her with made it fuzzy and nearly indiscernible. If she did not speak up Pusintin would invade the Union and millions upon millions of the people she had sworn to protect as their Queen, would die. He swore to her that if she went against him now the first planet they would crush would be Elear. Billions of Elves and Lycavorians and Algolians and Hadarians, her people, they would die needless deaths.

For'mya knew her father and the First Minister well enough to know what they would have done the moment they realized she was taken. It was something that both her and Dysea had agreed on many years ago and they had filed documents and Vid declarations in secret all those years ago. The only man she had ever loved and worshiped in her entire thousand plus years of life was dead now, as was the woman who was not only her truest and best friend, but also her dearest female lover among them all. All of it was gone now. The only thing she could do was try and save as many lives as possible before the storm arrived. They would hate her, she had no doubt of that, but if in her actions she could save them from death as she failed to save Martin and Aricia than it would be worth the disgrace and shame and pain that she would endure. She would be with the two she loved most in this life soon enough.

“Yes... yes.” For'mya stated softly, her voice almost a whisper. She turned her head to look at Pusintin and saw the cruelty in his eyes as he pulled her closer to him. “Yes...” she continued turning back as tears began to stream from her eyes. “Yes... I accepted the Marshall willingly. And yes... the child I... the child I carry is his.”

“ARRGHHH!” The roar was something none of them expected and all eyes turned to see Eliani step back from her older brother, her hand dropping from his shoulder as he bent over and gripped the edges of the huge table. Arram, Toria and L'tian were looking at him in stunned shock as his face was changed and contorted in unabashed rage. For'mya's eyes were wide in surprise as she gazed at him.

“Order!” Sel'ke barked out. “There will be order in this chamber!”

“You upae!” Androcles screamed at her. “Our father's body is not even cold and you do this! He knew you would be the one to betray him if that day came! He knew!”

“Andro I...” For'mya moved to step forward but Pusintin held her arm.

Pusintin couldn't help but laugh at Androcles's reaction and as he pulled For'mya back he sneered. “I guess we shouldn't tell you how she was whimpering my name as I was fucking her silly and making her mine then huh?” He stated loudly.

“DIE!!” Androcles roared once more and heaved upward on the table.

The eight foot long, hardwood and steel table weighed nearly three hundred pounds, but it left the floor of the chamber as if shot out of a gun. Directly at the tightly bunched group of Kavalian soldiers as Andro charged forward taking everyone by total surprise with the speed in which he moved. As the huge table smashed into the group of Kavalian troops and sent them sprawling painfully in awkward directions, Rutork and two other Puma Bane troops did what they were trained to do. Pusintin shoved For'mya away from him unceremoniously to protect himself when he found his body being yanked to the side and buried by the furry bodies of his security detail in order to protect him. That left only Kalis standing in front of a moving Andro and as he started to bring his weapon up Androcles lashed out with his left arm, slapping away the barrel of the weapon and bringing his right hand forward in a heel strike that hit Kalis dead center of his chest and lifted him into the air. As the air in his lungs painfully left those same lungs Kalis felt himself smash back against the table that held the Magistrates and he flipped over the top dragging two judges with him with his flailing.

Then there was nothing between For'mya and Andro and he glared at her with more savage anger than she had ever seen from one she called son. Anger that was directed at her. His beautiful eyes were changed and his vicious dual fangs were fully extended as he grabbed her arms and yanked her to her feet.

“You!” He snarled at her.

The tears poured from her eyes as she looked at him and they were not tears of fear or anger, they were tears of relief. “Kill... kill me my son!” She hissed at him her own eyes and fangs changed now as she stared at the young man who she had held and bounced on her knees as a baby. “Kill me Androcles... kill me please... so that I can join those that I love more than my life.”

Andro's hands came up quickly and seized her head as he stared at her with those azure orbs. “Forgive me mother.” He rasped out in a whisper. “Forgive me for what I must do!”

For'mya closed her eyes in release as she saw his jaws part and then Androcles Leonidas struck deep with those vicious and flesh shredding fangs.

CURILA 6

“...Darpia Syndrome?” Isabella gasped looking at Anja with wide hazel eyes. “Anja... Anja please tell me you are joking.”

Anja moved closer to her lover and fellow Queen, taking her hands and pressing tightly to her taller frame. Eurin and Sivana stood with Ceuma looking at the large monitor and adjusting different factors.

“Stay calm Bella.” Anja spoke calmly. “You must stay calm... but no... I'm not joking.”

Isabella's eyes blinked rapidly and became moist. “No.” Isabella said. “No... this can't be happening. Not now! It is our son I carry! This can't be happening now!”

Anja reached up and took her face in her hands quickly, holding her firmly and causing her wide eyes to stare at her. “Bella!” Anja snapped. “We will figure something out! You must trust in me! I love you! We love you!”

“Anja I...” Bella shook her head back and forth.

“Isabella Leonidas do you trust me?” Anja barked.

Isabella blinked her eyes and stared at her Persian haired fellow Queen. Her hands came up and she gripped Anja’s arms tightly. Anja’s blood tasted the sweetest when she was in phase and Isabella could not get enough of her long and talented tongue. Behind only Martin and her ussta she-elf Dysea, Bella took the most pleasure and joy from spending intimate moments with Anja. Moments that had started so long ago on CS41 as they were returning to Apo Prime and Martin was very busy quenching the burning need that Dysea had at that moment in time. Anja was the most intelligent woman Isabella had ever known and she the most gifted doctor and surgeon she had ever seen practice any sort of medicine. She nodded her head quickly, bringing her forehead to Anja’s and holding her tightly.

“Yes!” She gasped. “You... you know this!”

“Then trust me now Bella.” Anja stated. “I know how much you want this son. How much we all want you to have this son. And you will! Have faith in me!”

Isabella took a deep breath and nodded her head. “I... I can’t lose this child Anja.” She whispered. “I have wanted to give him a son for so long. I just can’t...”

“You won’t.” Anja declared kissing her hard on the lips. “You won’t! Stop thinking like that! We’ll will figure something out! I swear to you!”

Ceuma turned back to Sivana and Eurin as Anja and Isabella embraced tightly. “Vana... I am still... I am still learning so much. When Anja saw this she panicked and I did not want to begin questioning her. What is Darpia Syndrome?”

Sivana looked at her cloned sister and rested her hand on her shoulder lovingly. “It is not surprising you haven’t read about it in your studies yet sister. It is an extraordinarily rare and solely hereditary condition found only in pureblood vampires.”

“There have only been two dozen known cases in the three millennia since the Union was founded.” Eurin continued. “And the only reason we know of those is because of the vampires that began to defect several hundred years after the Union was officially brought into existence. I don’t know how many before that within the High Coven itself.”

“I’m assuming it has something to do with child bearing since Bella is in such a frenzy.” Ceuma asked.

Sivana nodded. “Darpia Syndrome is hereditary as I said but essentially it is a defective gene strand that can lie dormant within a vampire for as long as they live. We don’t really know what triggers it to become active when a female is pregnant. When it does however, it will begin to break down the consistency and protective nature of her womb until such time as it can no longer support a child. It happens rather quickly, within a month of the onset of the disease, and right now there is no known treatment.”

“But this did not happen with Zarah and Carina?” Ceuma asked.

“It’s completely random.” Eurin answered moving around to adjust the screen in front of Ceuma. “Bella could give birth to three, four, even five children before this gene became active. Once it runs its course, she could have another three or four children and it would never become active again. We don’t know why it chooses to become active or if there is some sort of series of events or requirements for it to rear its head. It is so very rare that we have never spent much time studying it.”

“Can we not reverse the process with Isotomner injections?” Ceuma asked.

Eurin shook her head. “Darpia Syndrome doesn’t respond to any known treatment.” She told her. “Even Isotomner injections would fail. The deterioration happens too quickly. Even now her womb is beginning to degrade and provide less and less nutrition to the baby.”

“We can’t remove him Eurin.” Sivana said. “He hasn’t fully developed yet. His wolf and vampire genes haven’t completely merged together.”

“How much longer before the Osmosis process is complete?” Eurin asked.

Sivana leaned over and typed quickly on the control panel. She stood back up shaking her head. “The same as with Zarah and Carina. It wasn’t complete until three weeks before she gave birth.”

Eurin shook her head. “The one pairing that makes it so difficult to monitor pregnancies.” She said. “Wolf and vampire pairings are so complex when it comes to children. The merging of the gene codes and chromosome strands is beyond multifaceted and can cause one to go insane trying to figure it all out.”

“What about trying to reinforce the womb?” Ceuma asked.

Sivana shook her head. “With what?” She stated. “Darpia Syndrome happens so quickly that whatever we do would need to be nearly instantaneous. And it doesn’t respond effectively to any known medications.”

“Can’t we use our power to reinforce the walls of her womb?” Ceuma asked.

Eurin shook her head. “That would require a Healer to remain at her side twenty-four hours a day until the baby was born, constantly in physical contact with her and infusing her with metaphysical radiation. Not only is that not reliable or feasible, it is no guarantee it will work. Even with our abilities, the metaphysical radiation in our bodies would begin to break down and require constant replenishment. And while we could provide the nutrients and such needed for the infant on a temporary basis, we could not do it for an extended period. Not for a hybrid pregnancy such as Isabella’s.”

“What about a manufactured womb?” Sivana asked looking at Eurin.

Anja stepped back up next to them now, Isabella holding tightly to her hand. Her face was drawn and worried but she was a strong woman they all knew, and she trusted Anja without question. Anja shook her head slowly. “A manufactured womb could not provide the precise nutrients that a hybrid baby needs.” She answered. “Each hybrid pregnancy is different. Each embryo needs different nutrients that only the mother can provide because it’s in her body.”

Ceuma looked at her. “So let’s examine Isabella for a twenty-four hour period, categorize the nutrients that the baby pulls from her and then assemble a manufactured womb hooked up to the same nutrients stream.”

Now it was Isabella who shook her head. “It was different for both Zarah and Carina.” She stated calmly as she began to regain control of her emotions. “With each of them I would react differently at different times Ceuma. It drove Martin insane because he did not know what I would ask for next.” She showed a small smile with that last statement attesting to the inner strength she had.

Anja nodded and squeezed her hand. “There were times with Carina where she would feel weak one day because Carina would pull from her iron levels and then the next day she would pull from her estrogen reserves. It was even more random with Zarah. There is no way to predict what Dorian will require from one moment to the next. His requirements have been all over during just this last stage of the pregnancy alone.”

“Dorian?” Ceuma asked softly. “Then you already... you already have a name picked out.”

Isabella brought her hands up to her abdomen. “He has had a name for many years now.” She said softly.

“Vana... at the current rate of breakdown how long do we have?” Anja asked.

Sivana turned to the screen and adjusted the console. She sighed heavily and turned back. Isabella moved closer to them allowing them to see the trust she had in not only Anja but them as well. “Do not be afraid Vana.” She spoke. “Just tell us.”

“It appears... it appears as if the Darpia Syndrome asserted itself four days ago.” She stated. “If Ceuma hadn’t run the scan she did...”

“Vana... please.” Anja said.

“A month before the womb deteriorates to the point where it will no longer sustain Dorian.” Sivana answered.

“A month before I am to give birth.” Isabella said softly. “It is... it is not enough time.”

“There has to be something we can do!” Ceuma exclaimed.

“We can’t force Dorian to finish growing and be born sooner Ceuma.” Sivana spoke taking her arm.

Eurin’s eyes grew a little wider. “Yes... yes we can.” She said softly causing them to look at her.

“Eurin?” Anja asked.

“I was watching the events on Hadaria on Netnews when you called Anja.” Eurin said moving up to the computer console and beginning to type.

“What does that have to do with this Eurin?” Anja asked harshly. What Buonau and the others had done was a subject that everyone stayed away from when around Anja.

Eurin stepped back and allowed them to see the monitor. “This.” She stated pointing to the screen.

Anja's eyes grew wide as she moved closer. "Eurin... you can't be serious?" She gasped. "This is genetic manipulation!"

Eurin shook her head. "No it isn't." She stated. "I thought it was when I first heard of it, but I have studied it extensively through the years and it's not. It's a simple process by which growth is accelerated by a certain factor. I was surprised that the Kavalians were even able to come up with this kind of process until I discovered..."

"They stole it from the Coven." Isabella stated softly.

Eurin nodded. "Yes."

Isabella nodded her head. "It was one of the early procedures my father sanctioned to speed up the cloning process. Long before I defected."

"Eurin... we don't have the refinements that the Kavalians have made to perfect it." Sivana said as Anja stepped closer to the monitor and began adjusting several things while Ceuma watched.

Eurin shook her head. "No... we don't." She answered. "But I'm willing to bet that Resumar's young wife Athani or those with her do."

Ceuma reached up. "No... this strand here and then..."

Anja nodded as she felt her pulse begin to race with excitement. "Core strand here." She finished. "Yes! This will work!" She spoke.

"The core multiplier equation is locked though." Ceuma spoke touching the screen. "We can't adjust it without altering the process completely."

"Anja... what does that mean?" Isabella asked moving closer.

Anja turned to look at her. "If we do this... if we do this Bella... Dorian will survive." She said.

"I feel... I feel a 'but' coming on." Bella said.

"We can't adjust the CME which dictates acceleration." Anja answered.

"And that means what exactly?" Isabella asked.

"That means if we do this... once initiated... Dorian will grow into adulthood within the space of several months." Anja answered. "Ceuma?"

"If the factors are right... when the CME reaches final output he will be just past twenty-three years of age." Ceuma answered.

Isabella's eyes grew wide at this and her hands came to her mouth. "Twenty-three?" She gasped. "He will... he will be a man."

Anja nodded slowly. "Yes."

"But... but his mind?" Isabella asked. "His personality? He will... he will never be a child? He will... he will not be normal."

"The Kavalian procedure requires that they school their children for the next three to four years just to make them productive." Eurin said. "They leave out so much in their schooling and I believe that is why many of the pureblood Kavalians are so violent. They do not experience all that they should."

Anja my sister? Miath's voice filled Anja's mind then.

Anja blinked almost forgetting that she almost never blocked her bonded brother from her thoughts and he was listening to everything they were saying even as they spoke and he flew high above the compound hunting. "Miath... now is not the time." Anja said softly.

The Elder Mother my sister. Miath told her. She has the ability to ease this burden. She did essentially the same thing to us as we were born and grew, keeping us from realizing our natural abilities in order to protect us. Could she not do the same thing in reverse?

Anja's eyes grew wider as she looked at Isabella. "Son vada carians Miath. You're right!" She exclaimed.

"What?" Isabella gasped.

"Anja?" Eurin asked.

"Ceuma... have Joci prep my STRIKER." Anja said. "He can fly correct?"

Ceuma nodded quickly as she stood. "Yes."

"Good... Belen can second him." Anja stated. "We're going back to Earth." She looked at Isabella. "We'll get Gorgo and Dasha and the children and return to Earth. It's time anyway."

"But why?" Isabella asked.

“Arzoal.” Anja told her. “Miath is right. She was able to inhibit the growth of the dragons in their eggs. Keep them from realizing their full potential in order to protect them. And she did it using Mindvoice.”

Eurin moved closer. “She can do that?” Eurin asked.

Anja nodded. “Yes. It wasn’t until Martin and Aricia convinced her what we could be together as Bonded Pairs that she stopped doing this. If she can do that... than she can help us.”

“How?” Sivana asked. “Dorian is not a dragon sister.”

“No... but Arzoal can protect his mind during the accelerated growth period.” Anja said. “She can help him to adjust better.”

“That... that does not change the fact that he will miss so much Melyanna.” Isabella said.

Anja looked at her. “No... but at least we can ease this burden for him. And perhaps make it so that he adjusts far more easily than he normally would. What choice do we have Bella? It’s this or we lose our son and that will devastate all of us.”

Isabella gripped her arms. “You can do this Anja? You can save him? You can save our son?”

Anja kissed her once more. “Damn straight I can.” She spoke. “Come... there is much we need to do and all of us will need to be there. And I need to speak with Duewa.”

“Duewa?” Eurin asked more sternly than she intended. She still did not trust Buonau’s oldest child even though she was now wolf and Thoti’s wife and mate. “Why?”

“Because she will have the most knowledge of her mother’s library.” Anja said. “Buonau forced her to read every scroll and data pad in it. And Duewa has a memory like a computer.”

“Do you trust her Anja?” Eurin asked.

Anja met her eyes. “I trust Thoti.” She answered. “And if Thoti chose her for his wife and mate than he saw within her Eurin. He saw within her and what was clamoring to get out. The real Duewa. Yes... I trust her.”

Eurin nodded. “Then let’s not waste any time.” She stated. “We need to prepare and make sure everything is just as it needs to be. The sooner we do this... the better it will be for Bella and Dorian.”

OMEN THREE SOMEWHERE IN THE WILDS

Aricia, Dysea and Cirith turned as Danny came up to them quickly in the corridor. They were standing outside the small gym on OMEN THREE, Aricia with dried tears in her eyes and Dysea and Cirith both looking as if they had been crying recently.

“Danny...” Aricia gasped taking his arm as he came up to them. “The ship?”

Danny nodded his head. “Yuriko reinforced the interior shields just before. I think she saw it coming.” He told them.

“He is blocking us Daniel.” Dysea said. “He’s blocking us but we can feel...”

Danny nodded. “I know. I feel it too.” The sound he had heard come from three decks below had chilled him to the bone even as he was watching the same thing that Martin no doubt had been watching on the Netnews. He had been moving before that echo had dissipated away through the corridors of the ship. As he moved closer to where Martin was he could see crew members of OMEN THREE moving rapidly away from where their King was. Danny leaned over and kissed Dysea’s cheek softly. “Wait here.”

“Danny you...” Aricia began.

“Don’t worry about me.” Danny said. “Wait here until I call for you.”

Danny didn’t hesitate and moved past them through the short corridor and up to the door of the gym. He took a deep breath and opened it, stepping into the large gym and feeling instantly the surging through Mindvoice. The power was nearly staggering and as he looked around with wide eyes he could see several pieces of equipment drifting in the air as if held by some unseen hand. Several large pieces of workout equipment that had been torn from their places on the floor or along the wall.

Danny saw him then, kneeling in the center of the room on the mat on one knee, his head bowed low and one fist pressed into the mat with great force. Danny strode across the mat without hesitation for he had learned through the long years together that he had a calming influence on his adopted brother. He moved right up to where Martin knelt and let his eyes gaze at the smashed equipment that lay all around him for a moment before he knelt across from him.

“Marty?” He asked softly reaching out to place his hand on Martin’s shoulder. He felt his body tense for a single instant and then relax just as quickly. “Martin... you back with me?”

Martin looked up and for a single split second Daniel Simpson saw the Grim Reaper in those near glowing brown tinted yellowish eyes. That shadow and hand of death that always reached out the instant before life left your body and blackness claimed you. Danny saw it in his brother’s eyes, and then it was gone. Yet for that single heart stopping moment, Daniel Simpson had felt the chill of the Grim Reaper all around him. Danny had heard the phrase ‘Death rode a Pale Horse’ several times in his younger years. Now however, Daniel Simpson could say that death didn’t ride a pale horse, death was the hand of this man before him.

“I was... I was going to make it quick Danny.” Martin whispered to him as he reached up and grasped Danny’s forearm. “When the time came I was going to make it quick. For our mother... for our father. Not any longer brother.” Danny waited silently, staring into Martin’s eyes as they shifted between the near glowing brown tinted yellowish eyes and a more solid golden color. “I am going to make him pay for what he has done Danny. I am going to make him pay for everything he has done. I am going to open him like a science project and force him to eat his own entrails. I’m going to cut his cock from his body while he lies there screaming and then I’m going to shove it in his mouth and listen to him choke. I’m going to inflict pain on him for every touch upon her body... I’m going to rip his eyeballs from his head and feed them to the crows bit by bit for every lustful gaze upon her elven beauty. And before I finally send him to the Sirogus rie Jorbhe he will know the agony she has endured a thousand fold. He will join Jorak in the soulless dark that inhabits that realm of pestilence, cursed to never see the light again! As my son has sworn a Oath of Blood Vengeance on Dante Moran, so I do the same against my own brother. This I swear before you today... my true brother! This I swear to you this day.”

“And a more warranted act will not ever exist.” Danny said gripping the back of Martin’s head and lowering his forehead to touch his. “A more righteous act will not ever exist brother.” Danny gripped his head tighter. “But now you need to reign in that rage brother. Pull it back within you Marty and bury it deep. I know it... I understand it... but don’t show it to your mates. They will not comprehend it. Harness it Marty... harness it and when we begin this trek, we go all out. No holding back. No prisoners. No hesitation. No... no mercy. Just as our fathers would do without question.”

“Tell... tell them Danny.” Martin said.

Daniel Simpson nodded. “I intend too. And take comfort and strength in the love you know she has for you and Aricia and the others. Hold on to that... hold it tight... because that is what will lead us to her.”

Martin nodded. “I will.”

“Good.” Danny said. “Now... you have three mates outside who are pissing their pants in worry for you. We have nineteen hours before we reach our target. You take them Marty... you take each and every one of them and show them how you feel for all of them. You make them scream your name until they are hoarse. You know that is what For’mya would want you to do. If you neglect them now, when we do get her back she will torture you for doing that. That is your power Marty... the love you have for each other. That is your power and your strength and we need that now. We all do.”

Martin looked at him. “When did you become such the accomplished shrink?” Martin asked him.

Danny laughed. “Same time you did brother. I just hide it better.”

Martin turned quickly when he smelled them and he watched as Aricia, Dysea and Cirith moved slowly across the mat towards them holding hands. He nodded his head and rose to his feet. “You’re right.” He said looking at him.

“I’ll keep everyone away.” Danny said gripping his neck. “You do what you need to do.”

“Tell them Danny.” Martin said.

Danny nodded and he stepped back as the three women came up to them. “I will.” He said. “I will.” He turned quickly and headed for the door of the gym.

Martin looked at them in front of him, dried tears in their eyes. His Saaurano, his Melda Min and now his equally ravishing hybrid wife and mate. Their scents filtered around his head and Martin did exactly what his blood told him to do. He unleashed his full, unshielded aura and saw all their eyes instantly change. The effect on Cirith was most telling as she had never been with any man, let alone a wolf as powerful as Martin.

Her body instantly ignited into many different fires, her nipples becoming painfully hard, and her center beginning to drool sweet nectar. She exploded in the first of many orgasms in the next few hours when Martin lifted her off the deck and covered her trembling lips with his own.

Danny caught the first wafts of what was coming just as the door closed and he breathed a sigh of relief as Yuriko, Julie and T'lolt walked up to him. He stepped away from the door and looked at them.

“Yuriko... you have Mindvoice dampeners on this deck?” He asked.

Yuriko nodded quickly. “Yes... all the decks Uncle Danny.” She answered.

“Activate them on this deck and pass the word this entire section is off limits for at least the next twelve hours.” Danny said.

“Father...” Yuriko began.

“He will be fine.” Danny said. “Right now he needs to do what he needs to do.”

Yuriko understood completely and nodded without question. Danny looked at Julie and T'lolt. “Pass the word to the team... Centaur Protocols Julie.”

Julie’s eyes grew a little wider. “You’re kidding?” She gasped.

Danny shook his head. “Not now. Not after what has happened.”

T'lolt looked back and forth between them. “What is this Centaur Protocols Daniel?” He asked.

Danny met his dark eyes. “It means we kill everything.” Danny said. “No prisoners... no mercy and no hesitation.”

T'lolt’s gaze was unwavering and he finally nodded. “As it should be.” He said.

“Uncle Danny... what is going on?” Yuriko asked.

“What do you mean?” Danny met her eyes.

“You didn’t see the rest of the transmission?” Yuriko asked.

Danny shook his head. “I bolted the moment I saw For'mya why? What happened?”

Yuriko blinked several times. “Uncle Danny... Andro... he...”

“Andro what?” Danny asked sternly.

Yuriko took a deep breath. “Andro attacked mother.” She gasped. “He went crazy and... he attacked mother. The transmission ended just as he was... just as he was beginning to tear at her with his fangs.”

Danny’s eyes were wide and he gripped her arms. “What?”

Julie nodded. “We saw it too Danny. It was... it was chilling. He was in a rage.” She spoke.

“I’ve never seen him like that before Uncle Danny!” Yuriko gasped.

“Fuck me! Show me Yuriko! Quick!” Danny gasped.

HADARIAN SPACE

PRIDE OF PUMAS

“... rather nasty wound.” The Kavalian physician spoke as he lifted the dressing and looked at the jagged teeth marks at the juncture of her shoulder and neck. It had already begun to heal, but there was no telling that it had been deep and had to have been painful. “I must clean it before it heals anymore.” He told her looking into For'mya’s face. There were droplets of blood dotting her cheeks and her eyes looked shallow and void of any emotion in the least and she was staring off into nothing as he lifted the portable scanner. “Please take into account that I am not as skilled as the Hadarian physicians you are used too, but I will be quick and efficient.” He said as he lifted the scanner and began to pass it over her wound. “Ummm... one more inch to the right and he would have severed your artery. Those teeth of his are vicious on exposed flesh. He needs to learn to bite in the right spot for the kill if that is what he is going for. Sloppy.”

For'mya turned her head and looked at him. He was an older Kavalian with large amounts of gray seeping into his naturally dark fur. She remembered him from before on this ship, but she hadn’t seen him since. On Cabelir the Kavalian doctor who was monitoring her condition was a gruff brute who cared not for her modesty. Thankfully he had not had to deal with him in over two weeks after she threatened to poison herself if he so much as touched her again. Pusintin was taking no chances and granted her demand. For'mya only saw him now for the scheduled visits on her condition and then as briefly as possible.

“Andro is... Andro is many things... but sloppy is not one of them.” For'mya said softly.

The doctor looked at her with wide blue eyes. "So you do speak." He said with what passed for a smile on his face. "Interesting." He began to move the scanner to the left and right almost casually. "Perhaps he needs more lessons in where to bite then. He was trying to kill you wasn't he?"

For'mya lowered her head shamefully. "As... as he should have for what I have done." She whispered.

"Excellent." He said as if not hearing her. "Your body is responding just as it normally would. The Growth Accelerator didn't affect your own systems." He pulled the scanner down over her abdomen. "Now let us check the child, for that is all Pusintin will care for, and we don't..."

"No!" For'mya barked suddenly, reaching up to grab the hand which held the scanner, her eyes wide.

She was too addled by what had happen to stop him, and didn't have the strength to move faster. She was unable to budge his hand holding the scanner over her abdomen no matter how she tried and she saw the look of shock spread across his face as he looked up at her slowly and met her eyes. "You are carrying..."

"...execute each and every one of those men who were guarding us!" Pusintin's voice snarled from behind them and For'mya watched as he spun around quickly, gently prying her hands from his wrist and tucking the scanner nonchalantly behind his back with its control pad towards For'mya as he blocked her figure from view. "He was one man and he almost was able to succeed. His own fucking brother stopped him, not any of my men!" Pusintin roared.

"I'll see to it Marshall!" The worried aide spoke.

"Motun?" Pusintin spoke as he came up to the Kavalian doctor.

The Kavalian physician smiled even wider. "It has been a long time Marshall." He spoke bowing his head. "I'm glad it is not you I am treating."

Pusintin smiled. "So am I." He stated. "Well?"

Motun turned to look at For'mya. "I can repair it easily Marshall. It will leave somewhat of a scar on the elf wench's skin however."

Pusintin chuckled. "The skin on her shoulder I don't care about." He said. "My son?"

Motun nodded and lifted the scanner tapping on the control pad a few times before handing it to him even as For'mya tried to snatch it back. Motun reached out and grabbed her wrist tightly. "He is quite healthy and unaffected by the ordeal. I do recommend we do not send her to the surface anymore. The bite seems to have damaged some nerve endings in her arm and it wouldn't appear in our best interests to have her twitching on the Netnews now would it?"

Pusintin nodded moving closer to For'mya as she glared at him. "I guess your precious family didn't care for you anymore." He snarled at her. "I think it's hysterical that my nephew tried to kill you For'mya. Maybe you weren't as popular as you thought."

"Bastard!" For'mya hissed vehemently.

Pusintin laughed. "Motun... insure she goes back to her quarters under guard." He spoke handing the scanner back. "I need to at least monitor the transmission going on right now. From now on, you are the only one who treats her until we return to Cabelir."

Motun nodded. "Of course Marshall. A request if I may?"

Pusintin looked at him. "Speak."

"With your permission, I'd like to run some additional tests on her." Motun asked. "The physician you have on the homeworld does not seem to be monitoring her eating habits very well and as you know, those turned by Lycavorians have special needs in the way of minerals and such."

Pusintin glared at For'mya for a moment before looking at him. "Anything I should know about Motun?" He asked.

Motun shook his head quickly. "Not at all Marshall. It's just a precaution."

Pusintin nodded after a few moments. "Your precautions through the years have saved my ass more than once."

Motun nodded. "Indeed they have." He said.

"Do what you must. My son needs to be healthy when he is born." Pusintin said.

"And he will be Marshall. He will be." Motun told him.

Pusintin turned without another look and began marching out of the room. When the door closed behind him Motun turned slowly and looked at For'mya, holding the portable scanner out to her. For'mya watched him with questions in her eyes and then she reached up and snatched the portable scanner from his hands. He didn't lift his hand to strike her as she would have expected a full Kavalian male to do given their treatment of their own women and she glanced down at the scanner. He watched as she looked at the small console and her eyes darkened somewhat before lifting to stare at him once more.

“What... what fool trickery is this?” She snarled.

“That fool trickery just saved your life For'mya Leonidas.” Motun spoke seeing her eyes grow wide when he used her name. “You carry twins woman!” He hissed at her. “Do you know what would be done if this was known?”

“You... you used my name.” For'mya stammered.

Motun took the scanner back from her unresisting hand and nodded. “Of course I used your name.” He spoke tapping on the scanner several times. “I thought Lycavorians could detect their children once they impregnate a female?” He asked as he lifted it again and passed it slowly over her abdomen. “Pusintin doesn't know does he?”

“He is a fool! He is no more a Lycavorian than you!” For'mya snarled viciously. “He is a monster! A vile monster! All of you are!” She spat expecting this Kavalian to reach up and slap her.

For'mya sat there stunned when he nodded his head slowly. “Yes he is.” Motun echoed her statement. “Though I would appreciate if you did not lump all of us into that category. It would not be entirely fair.”

“Who are you?” For'mya demanded. “This is a deception isn't it? Some cruel test from Pusintin in order to play with my mind!”

Motun looked at her. “My name is Motun'Canterus from Pride Canterus. And this is no deception so please keep your voice down. There are still guards in the corridor and while we do not have as sensitive hearing skills as Lycavorians, Kavalian hearing is still superior to many species. I do not wish to die before my time.”

For'mya stared at him. “Who are you?” She demanded.

“I will answer your questions For'mya... but first I need to know why a young man you have called son for over twenty years tried to kill you.” Motun asked her. “Why would he act in such a manner when they are here under the auspice of trying to get you released? Not that it will do any good. Why did Androcles attack you?”

For'mya dropped her head quickly. “Why do... why do you think?” For'mya's voice came out in barely a whisper. “I... I have betrayed them. Betrayed all of them by allowing this to happen. I... I should have been stronger. I... he lied to me! He told me he had my son, that he would give Dysea to the Immortals if I did not do as he said. He told me all of them were dead and if I wanted to save my son and Dysea I... I needed to do as he said.” The tears came now and she shook her head. “But they are not dead! And now they hate me for what I have done. I am a traitor to them... nothing more important than an insect. They will... they will kill me the first chance they get for what I have done. I...” For'mya looked up. “I asked him to kill me. When he held me... I ask my son to kill me.”

Motun turned from her and took something from a tray behind him. He turned back and held out the hypoinjector. “Take this.” He said. For'mya looked at him and then the injector. “Take it!” He said again.

For'mya reached up and took the injector looking at it briefly and then back up to his face. “What is this?”

“End it.” He spoke calmly. “End it right here. There is your means. It's Concentrated Green Death Root from our homeworld. It will stop the hearts of your babies in ten seconds and then your heart in twenty seconds and this will all be over.”

For'mya looked at him. “You lie!” She gasped.

Motun snatched the injector back from her and walked across the med bay to another room. For'mya heard some soft crashing noise and then he was rolling a large rodent in an open container towards her. The rodent was remarkably similar to the large rats she has seen on Earth that frequented the more desolate areas of the planet that had not yet been restored. She watched as he rolled the container right up to her and then lifted the injector to stab the rodent in the back of its dark brown neck. The creature let out several hideous squeals, its large body twitching almost uncontrollably and then it was still. Motun looked back to her as he pushed the container away. He held the injector back out to her. “Now... am I lying to you?” He moved closer. “I will do it for you if you wish.” He said, beginning to lift the injector to stab into her arm.

For'mya hissed viciously and sprang from the table, wrapping one arm protectively around her swollen abdomen. Motun stood there calmly as her fangs burst forth and her eyes changed and she hiss at him from across the table she had been on. He lowered the injector and dropped it onto the small table that held the container with the now dead rodent and pushed it away.

“So it is true.” He spoke softly turning back to look at her.

“What is true?” For'mya snarled. “Stay away from me!”

“The instinct to protect.” Motun spoke softly to her. “The ingrained Lycavorian instinct to protect their children combined with the inherited trait of all living elves to defend their children, born or unborn, from harm.”

For'mya's fangs didn't retract and her eyes didn't change, but her posture lessened from the defensive one just seconds ago. “What... what do you know of this?” She hissed.

“It is why he chose you For'mya, don't you see?” Motun spoke. “I do not know all the details but I know it is why he chose you. This would not have worked with any of his brother's other Queens. None of them possess the hereditary elven sense of protection of children that you do. Pusintin knew this. The traitor Laustinos told him.”

“Dysea is an elf!” For'mya declared.

Motun nodded his head. “Dysea is an elf, but she is not a pureborn elf like yourself. She came from cloned parents.”

For'mya's eyes grew wider. “How do you know that?” She barked.

“Listen to me For'mya Leonidas.” Motun spoke stepping closer and noticing that she did not back away. “You carry twins. From what I can tell with just the brief scan I saw, a boy and a girl. The moment Pusintin discovers this he will order the girl child aborted. Kavalians... we do not... twins among our people are extremely rare and in most cases they are signs of some sort of genetic defect. One or both of the fetuses are almost always destroyed and the mother is usually sterilized.” He saw her eyes widen in horror. “You could no more kill your unborn children than I could, even if you wanted too. The instincts within you forbid you taking such an action. No matter if you want to or not. I know this For'mya.”

“How do you know this?” She demanded. “This... this curse inside us... it is not known to any but the elven scholars! It is no longer taught in our schools and hasn't been for nearly ten thousand years! How do you know of it?”

“It is not a curse.” Motun spoke.

“I carry his vile children inside me!” For'mya screamed. “They... they are the product of him forcing himself on me! Violence not love! I love only one man and he is dead now because of you and your people!”

“They are part of you For'mya. Inside you now.” Motun spoke. “You know what he plans don't you? He intends to use the boy child to regain control of the Union throne using bloodline not birthright. A son with his royal blood of Resumar, your royal blood as the last of the Elven King's heirs, he will have a claim to the Union throne because of this.”

For'mya shook her head vigorously. “No! Impossible!” She snapped.

“It is not impossible.” Motun said. “Resumar's elven concubine gave him two sons did she not? That concubine was the daughter to the elven King that was slain by the High Coven wasn't she? A Princess in her own right.”

“How... how do you know this?” For'mya gasped.

“One of those sons did not survive the High Coven assassinations when the Lycavorians began their rebellion over three thousand years ago. One however did, and he had three children during the long years of the initial rebellion. One of those children gave birth to four children through the next generations. Only one of whom still lives. Her name is Janae.”

For'mya's eyes were huge now as she forgot everything around her and moved closer to him. “How... how could you possibly know this?” She gasped. “Janae... Janae's secret has never been publicly announced. No one but our family knows this.”

Motun nodded. “Yes I know, however Laustinos figured it out and he told Pusintin and others. They tried to take Janae during the attacks but they failed thankfully. Your son Andro stopped them without really knowing why. They will not stop trying to take her however, because if a son of Pusintin and your blood joins with Janae and her bloodline then it will seal the divide and give Pusintin absolute power. He will rule through his son don't you see? Your son because of the bloodlines."

For'mya shook her head. "He can not!" She stated with supreme confidence. "Martin... Martin and Andro... they brought all the ruling bloodlines of the Lycavorian people back together."

Motun looked at her oddly. "What do you mean?"

"Martin is the grandson of Resumar. He has two ruling bloodlines within him. Aricia is a third bloodline. Androcles and Denali are their sons and have three bloodlines within them. Andro's mate Sadi... she is of the fourth and any child they have will have four of the original bloodlines within them. Pure Lycavorian bloodlines. The purest to ever exist!" For'mya told him. "The Lycavorian people will never allow that bloodline to be broken! Not after what happen on Earth and the merging of those that were lost during the occupation!"

"Are you sure of this?" Motun asked. "We did not know this?"

"Who are you?" For'mya snarled.

Motun looked at her and held out his hand. "Suffice to say we are not enemies For'mya Leonidas." He said. "Sit back on the table and I will explain."

For'mya stared at him without moving. "I do not trust you!" She barked. "I do not trust any of you!"

Motun nodded his head. "Then let me give you cause to trust me." He spoke. "I think I have already shown that I am not your enemy. If it was discovered that you are carrying twins For'mya, Pusintin would order the girl child to be aborted and the boy child would be removed from your womb and placed in a chamber. They would still find a way to use the boy child but you would then be killed or sterilized or worse. Pusintin will not go against the laws of the Kavalian elders and senior Prides. They are deeply entrenched and even Keleru himself would not dare act in opposition to them."

"Why... why should I believe anything that you are saying to me?" For'mya demanded.

Motun looked at her. "Because I know Arzoal, the Dragon Elder Mother. Because I know she is, or rather was a Pralor, hell she still is really. Because I know of the ship your second oldest son Resumar and Athani were sent to destroy." He spoke seeing her eyes grow huge. "I also know that Keleru and Pusintin are stupidly unaware of what your son is doing on that ship or that it even exists. They have also dismissed the astounding facts that Androcles has taken one of Yuri's children as his wife and mate, that your own blood son Arrarn has taken that bitch Aikiro's daughter Narice as his wife, and they have absolutely no clue of the brothers Sumar and Xaxon or the role they both played." Motun looked at her and smiled at the expression on her face. "Now shall we sit and talk For'mya Leonidas, for while I may look and act Kavalian, I am nearly twelve thousand years old and I remain on my feet too many hours during the day for my age."

"You... you are a Pralor?" For'mya gasped.

Motun shook his head. "A Pralor... well that is debatable now." He answered. "You do not know of how the Kavalians and the elves came into being I take it? And the part Arzoal played in that?"

For'mya shook her head quickly. "No... no."

Motun nodded. "We have the time thankfully." He said taking her hand gently. "You must get off your feet as well and unless I miss my guess, if your son Androcles was not trying to kill you, then there is only one other reason why he would attacked you in such a blatant manner and that... you will need to be sitting down for."

"What... what do you mean?" For'mya asked as she allowed him to lead her around the table and towards where his desk was in the corner of the room.

Motun smiled as he led her to the desk, tapping on the control panel to insure the doors into the med bay were secure so no one could enter. "While I will truly miss the opportunity to meet with and speak with Martin Leonidas, his son Androcles, your son by nature of the connection you all have within Mindvoice."

"I can not... I can not sense them within Mindvoice." For'mya spoke as she sat down. "They are blocking me. It is nothing... like a black void where they would normally be."

Motun looked at her. "Truly?" He said. "I have never heard of such a thing. We will have to discuss that further." He settled into the chair after she was comfortable. "First however, let me regale you with why I am not your enemy and I will do everything within my power to see you kept safe and returned to your family."

For'mya shook her head. "They... they will not... they will want nothing to do with me now." She said softly. "Not after what I have done."

“For'mya Leonidas you do not really believe that do you?” Motun asked her seeing her eyes lift to look at him. “You told me not so long ago that Androcles is not sloppy. What did he say to you just before sinking his teeth into you? I saw the transmission as well. He spoke something to you... what was it?”

For'mya looked at him tears beginning to appear in her eyes. “He said... he said forgive me mother... for what I must do.”

Motun nodded. “Then your son Androcles is far smarter than Pusintin and Keleru give him credit for. He did something in biting you, of that I am sure. What it was I do not know, but he accomplished two things if you think about it. Whatever his true intentions were, and he also managed to make Pusintin and his idiots believe that you are now a pariah to them. Very devious young man that Androcles. Very intelligent.” Motun waved his hand. “We'll discuss it later... for now... allow me to fill in some parts of history that you are probably not aware of, and it will also explain to you who I am.”

SCIMITAR MED BAY

“...sure Andro?” Eliani asked as she slowly drew her hand across his cheek and neck, the soft pulsing of the white light in her palm clearly visible.

He sat on the examining table, Caliria standing beside Eliani and holding his hand tightly. Sadi sat next to him on the table, Carisia and Lu'ria next to her while Ne'Veha stood beside Caliria.

“I'm sure Eli.” Andro answered almost wistfully. “I... I touched them sister! She carries twins and they...”

Eliani lowered her hand and looked at him. “What?”

Andro smiled. “They... they told me ‘Hello our brother.’” He said.

Eliani gasped softly and small tears formed in her eyes. “Then... then it worked?”

Andro nodded his head. “I believe so. I was stunned when I sensed them so easily. They were strong to begin with and I didn't expect... I didn't expect there would be two of them.”

“Son vada carians!” Sadi gasped gripping his arm. “Can they help us to communicate with her Andro?”

Andro nodded. “I believe so yes. I... I passed quite a bit of information to them in so short a time. It... it was easier than I thought with Elynth helping me. They... they were strong to begin with. I wish I had a few seconds longer.”

“Then they...” Eliani asked.

Andro met her eyes. “Yes... they are fully aware now.” He answered.

“Carians Andro... father, the Feravomir... you know it is forbidden to do this.” Eliani said softly. “I hope... I hope they understand.”

“It was the only way Eli... you know this.” Andro said. “It's why I told only you, Zarah and my mates. I found the inhibitor as well, just like you told me to look for. It's on the back of her neck under her hair. About half an inch under the skin near her collarbone. I told our brother and sister this.”

Eliani sighed heavily and squeezed his hands. “I didn't know if it would work. Thank the gods. They will tell her?”

Andro nodded. “Yes. Who hit me?” He asked reaching up to rub the back of his head.

Eliani glanced at Sadi and then back to him. “Arrarn got to you first.” She told him. “He was crazy Andro... he thought you were killing her. I told you we should have let him in on the plan. Our uncle's son joined in moments later. They hit you... gods... it had to be eight times in the head before Arrarn finally changed and reared up, slashing you across the neck and shoulder blade. It was horrible. Grandfather was in shock! So many people were screaming.”

Sadi gripped his hands. “They hit you so many times my love.” She asked. “When you finally released your mother after Arrarn attacked you just fell to the floor unconscious. Kalis shoved her back without regard and then kicked you several times before Jomann got to you and tossed him back.”

Andro looked at Eli and shook his head. “Arrarn can not control his emotions enough when it comes to mother Eli. We would be no different if it was the mother who gave birth to us. I couldn't trust him enough to maintain calm until I acted. I...”

“Nubous ronnus!” The voice screamed out.

Whether it was the sluggishness from being hit so many times in the head or just simple fatigue, Andro wasn't able to move before Arrarn got to him. Using all of his combined elven and wolf strength Arrarn Leonidas struck his older brother square in the side of the head, propelling Andro's body back over the table, knocking Sadi and Ne'Veha aside and causing Caliria to stumble back reaching for Lu'ria and Carisia to keep from falling.

“Arrarn stop!” Eliani screamed frozen in place.

The medical bay was rapidly filling with Leonidas children, Denali and Jomann making directly for where Arrarn was atop a still dazed Androcles and beginning to pummel his brother with his fists.

“Get him off him!” Normya screamed.

“Arrarn no!” Zarah shouted as she and Lisisa moved directly for where the two brothers were.

“You fucker!” Arrarn screamed driving his fist down once more. “You tried to kill her! My mother! You tried to kill her!”

“Stop it Arrarn!” Denali roared grabbing his brother's arm before he could punch downward again.

“Get off me!” Arrarn screamed shoving Denali away and turning back to continue punching an unresisting Andro in the face. His cheek was badly cut now, blood covering the side of his neck and face. “Is this what you planned?” Arrarn barked dragging Andro's upper body off the floor in his rage and smashing his forehead down into his face. “You planned to kill my mother! You sonofabitch! You...”

Andro suddenly came alive and snatched the front of Arrarn's uniform in rage. His azure orbs flared wide, changed to the wolf within him, his dual fangs fully exposed and he brought his head up as he pulled Arrarn's upper body down.

“Get the fuck off me!” Andro growled savagely just before his forehead collided with Arrarn's cheek.

Arrarn Leonidas was not full wolf and while he had the speed and strength of a wolf elf combination, he did not have the much denser bone structure as a pureblood Lycavorian like Andro or Denali. The blow from Andro's forehead was like a sledgehammer and stars erupted into his eyes as Andro heaved off the floor. Arrarn had also made the mistake of attacking his brother while all of his mates were with him, tossing aside the knowledge that they would also instinctively defend him to their last breath. As Andro heaved off the floor holding Arrarn's clothes, Sadi righted herself from where she had sprawled, her jungle green eyes aflame with anger, and her wolf fangs viciously exposed. The much smaller dual fangs that had grown in since Andro took her as his mate were now very prominent however and she lifted her hand towards Arrarn and unleashed a Mindvoice fueled blast of angry power. Arrarn was torn from Andro's grasp and hurtled backward to slam into the medical table he had knocked Andro from. As he began to fall forward he met a cruel chop from Lu'ria on his shoulder and a brutal knee in the face from Carisia, snapping his head back and sending him up and over the table to crash to the floor beside Jomann and Denali who quickly buried him under their combined bulk.

“Enough!” Jomann bellowed as he wrapped his arms around Arrarn's chest.

“Let me alone!” Arrarn screamed, spitting blood from his mouth where Carisia's knee had split both his lips.

“Arrarn stop!” Denali shouted grabbing his brother's arms. “This does not help any of us!”

“You weren't there!” Arrarn screamed. “He called her names! He grabbed her and tried to tear out her throat!”

“That's not true!” Sadi snarled.

“Shut up upae!” Arrarn screamed. “I saw it! Of course you would protect him! We all saw it! All of you were watching! Tell me you didn't see it!”

“We saw it Arrarn!” Lisisa barked. “But this helps nothing! There... there has to be a reason!” She turned to look at Andro and saw him getting fully to his feet, wiping blood from his mouth and cheek. He pushed away Eliani's attempt to quick heal him and shook his head slightly before looking at where Jomann and Denali held Arrarn back. “Andro!”

“Andro what is going on?” Normya barked now, pulling away from Tir'ut's grasp as Narice and Toria moved up to where Arrarn was. “Why have you attacked mother? Why?”

Andro met her emerald eyes and then rose to his full height looking at all six of his sisters and brothers as they stared at him. Eliani had moved to Arrarn now to try and heal him, Zarah standing beside Sadi while

Lucia moved up next to her, all of her senses on alert. Nearly half a dozen Durcunusaan troops had poured into the med bay now, along with Bren, Devra and Arduri, all of them looking on with wide eyes.

“This... this is what you believe?” Andro growled at them. “You believe I would try to kill my mother!”

“She is not your mother!” Arrarn screamed. “She was never your mother! She is my mother!”

“Arrarn Leonidas! How dare you!” Lisisa gasped in horror as she looked at him now. Never in all their years had any of them ever suggested such a thing. It was so taboo within their family that none of them even thought such a thing casually. It was forbidden, for since the day they were old enough to understand, they were raised and drilled and schooled that there was no distinction between their mothers. None of them was held above the other, all of them spoke with a single voice and all of them were loved and respected just as equally as the next. Even Denali was shocked, so much so that he removed his hands from Arrarn as if he had been scalded with boiling water. “How dare you say that?”

“I dare it because it’s true!” Arrarn screamed yanking his arms from Jomann’s grasp now but remaining where he was. “All of you saw it! He tried to kill her!”

Lisisa turned her head slowly and looked back to Andro now. “Andro... we... we all saw it. You... you attacked mother... why? What is going on?”

“All of you believe this?” Andro asked moving forward now. “After all... after all we have done together... you believe I would kill my own mother!”

“She isn’t your mother!” Arrarn shouted again. “You proved that today by trying to kill her! You can’t deny it! The entire Union saw it!”

Andro glared at Arrarn for a long moment. “Even... even after the promise I made to you Arrarn... you... you think this?”

“Fuck your promise!” Arrarn barked. “You lied to me! That is what I see! And you tried to kill my mother! You can’t deny it Andro... not when we all saw it!”

“Arrarn you don’t...” Eliani began to speak.

“Eli no!” Andro barked out looking at her and seeing her head turn to him. “It doesn’t... it doesn’t matter now.”

“So you aren’t going to deny it?” Arrarn snarled. “Not even in front of your own blood? You aren’t going to at least try and deny it!”

“The only reason you are even still breathing is because you are my blood!” Andro growled savagely as he stepped closer to him. “After all we have done as family, all we have been through as brothers and sisters, that any of you would think I would try to kill mother is...” Andro shook his head slowly. “That you... that you believe I am capable of something so vile... it breaks... it breaks my heart Arrarn.”

“The truth hurts doesn’t it Andro!” Arrarn growled back at him.

Andro met his eyes and they all saw his azure orbs return to normal and his fangs slowly fade away. “Yes... the truth does hurt brother. More than you will ever begin to know.”

“I am not your brother!” Arrarn screamed. “My brother would not do what you have done!”

“Arrarn stop!” Eliani shouted. “You don’t know what is going on!”

“Then tell me Eli!” Arrarn barked at her. “Tell me! Make us understand why our brother attacked my mother and tried to kill her! Make us understand that!”

Andro shook his head slowly. “No.” He said. “You will believe what you will believe. I do not answer to you Arrarn. I answer only to our father, our grandfather and the gods who watch over us. What I have done... what I do... it is my burden to carry. And I will continue to do so.” Andro moved closer to him. “You have one hour to collect your things from my ship and then you are to return to Earth.”

“You can’t order me to...” Arrarn began.

“This is my ship!” Androcles screamed shocking even Sadi with the tone of his voice. “I am first born! I am acting in our father’s stead! You will do what I command you or so help me I will have the Durcunusaan place you under arrest and escort you back to Earth in chains!”

“Andro father would...” Normya started to speak.

“Father knows exactly what I am doing!” Andro screamed out. “He knows exactly what I am doing because I speak with him every fucking day!”

“What?” Lisisa gasped. “Father knew?”

Andro ignored her and glared at Arrarn. “One hour Arrarn. Do not make me resort to actions that I do not wish to use... but make no mistake... I will use them! One hour!”

Androcles Leonidas spun around and strode quickly from the medical bay leaving his siblings there with stunned expressions. Sadi only glared at Arrarn for a few seconds more before following him, Lu'ria, Ne'Veha, Carisia and Caliria following immediately, though Caliria had a very confused look on her face.

As the doors to the med bay closed behind them the female voice echoed out as Zarah Leonidas could no longer hold it in.

“Arrarn you fucking fool!” She screamed moving up in front of her brother. “Have you utterly lost your mind?”

“You saw it Zarah!” Arrarn shouted back. “You saw what he did! He tried to kill her! And now we discover that father knew about it! We...”

Zarah Leonidas then did something that she had never, in all her young life, begun to contemplate. With every ounce of her combined wolf and vampire strength she reared back her hand and slapped her brother. The blow reverberated throughout the medical bay like a gunshot, snapping Arrarn’s head around and sending him sprawling across the floor from the force of the blow. Narice made to move and block her from following his body but she felt the whip like grip of something surround her waist and hold her in place. She whirled around and saw Lucia holding her with her Mindvoice whips.

“Lucia... release me!” She snarled.

Lucia shook her head as she came up beside her. “No Aunt Narice. This does not involve us. We must let it run its course!” She said softly.

“Lucia... he could hurt her in his rage.” Narice said.

Lucia smiled gently. “Hurt Zarah?” She said. “I doubt that very much Aunt Narice. Zarah is much more than she appears.”

Arrarn looked up from the floor as Zarah appeared over the top of him. “Don’t make me hit you back Zarah.” He said holding his face as he got to his feet.

Zarah laughed and faster than even Arrarn could follow she hit him again, spinning him around and watching him slam into the bulkhead with a resounding thud. “You are a fool!” She screamed at him. “If you would pull your ego inflated head out of your ass for once in your life and actually think about something other than yourself, you would see that Andro was trying to save our mother!” She screamed at him.

Arrarn’s dark eyes were full of surprise at the power Zarah had hit him with and he held his face glaring at her. “You saw it yourself Zarah!” He screamed. “How can you defend him?”

“AARRGGHHH!” Zarah screamed before lashing out again and hitting him in the face once more, the light blue psychic shield appearing and encompassing her entire body now, the blow driving Arrarn to his knees. “You fucking idiot!” She shouted at him. “The same way he has defended each and every one of us without hesitation! The same way he has saved all of us without question! Just as he was trying to save our mother!”

Arrarn surged off the floor now. “He tried to kill her!” He screamed with rage. “Right there in front of me! In front of everyone!”

“She’s right Arrarn!” Eliani snapped moving across the room to stand beside Zarah.

Arrarn looked at her with wide eyes. “You believe him too!”

“If not for Androcles... you would not have Narice and Toria!” Zarah screamed at him.

“That has nothing to do with what is happening right now!” Arrarn barked.

“Doesn’t it?” Zarah demanded. “Who was it that told you to follow your heart and your feelings Arrarn? Who was it that told you to go after what you wanted no matter that Narice is the daughter of the woman who ordered me to be raped like some animal in the gutter?”

“Zarah that...” Normya stepped forward now.

“NO!” Zarah snapped at her sister. “Never... never did I imagine that it would come to this! Never! Never did I imagine we would fall so far as to forsake our own blood! Androcles was the first one to accept your feelings for Tir’ut Normya! He did so without question because he trusted you! Because he loved you!” Normya became silent as Zarah then whirled around and faced Lisisa and Denali. “He protected you both! He knew of your love for each other and he protected your secret! He kept you together on the SCIMITAR so that love could blossom into what it is now! Because he loved and trusted you both! He protected Resumar and Athani! He was the first to know about them and he protected and shielded them because he loved his brother and he trusted him!” Zarah whirled back to face Arrarn. “I would be dead if not for him! Do you hear me Arrarn! Dead! The Fever would have killed me! And if the fever had not, then the unwritten laws among our people would have demanded it! He saved my life... kept my secret from even our mothers and father without hesitation! Without pause... because he loved me! And now you forsake him... accuse him of something so vile... because you do not know what is going on?”

Zarah looked at all of them now. “What do you want to do? All of you? Do you wish to walk in our brother’s shoes Arrarn? Do any of you?” She screamed at them. “Do you truly wish to see what he sees when he lays down his head to sleep? Do you truly wish to see how he lives every minute of every day? I will tell you what he sees! He sees the faces of nearly four million Hadarians! Men, women and children that he had to sacrifice in order to protect us! He sees our mother Anja hating him for having to do that, though she would have done the same thing! He sees the day looming closer when he will have to plunge our people into a war we don’t want! He questions everything he has done; not knowing if what he has done might have caused all of this to happen! He wakes every day not knowing what will happen or who will hate him for his actions but he wakes and he does what he does because he must! Because father is out there looking for mother and planning to take her back! He does it because none of us can!” Zarah glared at Arrarn once more. “As you so prominently have proven this day dear brother! All he has done for us! Everything he has ever done for us... and you just toss him to the side because you don’t know what he is doing?”

“Do any of you... can any of you honestly believe he would ever cause us harm? Any of us? Do you truly believe he would try to kill one of our mothers? He was trying to save her Arrarn Leonidas you insufferable midaeus! The Kavalian dogs implanted her with one of those inhibitors, just like they did with our mother Dysea. She can not feel us, she can not sense us! She is lost! Cirith’s father works day and night trying to find a way to negate this effect and still he falls short! Andro did the only thing he could think of to try and make contact with her. The one thing that would insure she knows we have not forsaken her as readily as you have forsaken our brother! A way to let her know that father still lives and still loves her, even after what she has been forced to do! A way to let her know we love her! A way that is forbidden to all of us that can Mindvoice! Something so taboo it is not even spoken of because of what it means! And of us all... only he knows what that means the most, because he is the only one of us who has ever experienced it!”

Lisisa gasped as she was the first to understand what Zarah was saying. “Son vada carians!”

Zarah looked at her. “Yes Lisi.” She said. “Our mother carries life within her. And in order to insure that she did not give up all hope, Andro touched that life within her, awakening them to all that was around them. Giving that life the burden that he has carried alone since he became aware while in our mother’s womb.”

“Two lives.” Eliani spoke now as she stepped up next to Zarah. “Mother carries twins. He touched them both. And now we have a way to communicate with mother. To let her know that we have not forgotten her!”

Zarah stared at Arrarn for a long moment. “You wish to know who our brother is Arrarn? The brother you so callously tossed aside after everything he has done? I will show you our brother! I will let you hear it in his own fucking words!”

Zarah stormed to the control panel on Eliani’s desk and began stabbing down on the console. The medical bay suddenly became dark as the holo emitters on the floor kicked in and the disc in the corner came alive. It faded in and out for a moment and then became perfectly clear. It was a room of some sort and all of them could see the Evrotas river outside the massive double doors. They could see the men and women walking the streets of Sparta below and then a man they had never seen stepped into view.

“How are you doing Milord?” He asked.

“Is this really necessary?” Andro’s voice filled the room. “I am very busy you know.”

They watched as Andro came into view. He was wearing his formal Union Dress uniform of black pants and jacket with crimson trim all around. Four rows of vertical ribbons dotted the left side of his chest and his field rank of Admiral rested on his shoulder boards.

“It has only been a month since Alba Tau Milord.” The man spoke. “Your father, mothers and the Feravomir felt it was necessary. The King goes through it himself. As do the others who survived that night.”

“Oh very well.” Androcles answered.

"I can trust in your honesty Milord? It is the only way this will help you going forward." The man said.

Andro nodded. "If I must."

"You are trying to forget what happen I take it?"

"Wouldn't you?" Andro said. "It was not the most pleasant of evenings for Elynth and I. For my father and Torma. Any of us."

"I don't imagine it was." The man replied. "I've seen the after action reports. I've talked to your father and uncle. To Moneus Simpson."

"And now it is my turn?" Andro said with a smile.

The man smiled. "If that is the way you wish to view it. Your mothers have told me you are having nightmares. That you and Elynth both thrash about at night. That most of the time you sleep on the patio of your villa in Gytheio."

Andro turned and stepped up to the balcony clasping his hands behind his back. "My... my room is claustrophobic." He said. "And my KertaGai is not with me."

"KertaGai?" The man asked.

"The woman who will be my life. My love. My center." Andro answered. "One of them anyway. As my mother Aricia is to my father. As she is to all my mothers."

"And how many will there be if I may be so bold?" The man asked.

"Women?" Andro said.

"Yes."

Andro chuckled softly. "Five."

"You sound so sure."

"I have seen it." Andro said confidently turning back to look at him. "Just as my father saw my mothers. In his dreams."

"Tell me of them." The man said.

"Is that really necessary?" Andro asked.

"It will allow you to become more comfortable with me Milord." The man said.

"There is Sadi... my KertaGai. She will be my anome. My soulmate. Carisia... with maya blue eyes like gems. A vampire and daughter to an enemy. Ne'Veha... my SirsanGai... she does not know or understand her path just yet but then again, who among us does. Lu'ria... my Drow Mistress and with the brightest amber eyes. And then there is Caliria. With skin like a blue sky and hair as black as the night." He looked up. "I will find them all one day."

"That is incredible Milord. They are in your dreams you said." The man said.

Andro nodded. "One of the many curses of being born fully aware of everything around you. A curse Elynth and I would not wish on anyone given its nature." Andro said softly. "It allows us to have abilities that others do not. Some of which are not exactly the easiest to accept mind you. We have come to accept them however."

"Does it allow you to see the future?" The man asked.

Andro chuckled turning to look out the large balcony doors again. "Thankfully no. Even we would not want that ability. Mostly it allows us to see and understand some things differently than others. If it allowed us to see the future we certainly would not have done what we did that night knowing the horrors we would see."

"So tell me of that night Milord." The man asked.

"What do you wish to know?" Andro said.

"Why did you do it?"

Andro turned back to look at him. "Why did I do it?"

The man nodded. "Yes."

"I did it to protect them." Andro said without hesitation.

"I don't understand Milord. Protect who? The dragons?" The man asked.

"My brothers and sisters." Andro answered just as quickly. "My mothers. I did it to protect them. So that they would not have to do it. Just as my father did."

"So you endured the anguish and pain of that night so they would not have to?" The man spoke.

“Wouldn’t you?”

“Milord... what you experienced that night? The horror. The death. The blood. I would not wish that on my worst enemy.” The man said.

Andro chuckled softly one last time. “I would happily endure a thousand nights like that if it meant my brothers and sisters did not have to experience it. If it meant my mothers and they were safe and secure.” He said laconically. “That is my calling and my duty as the oldest. As my father’s first born son.”

“But you are... you are the Crown Prince of the Union Milord. Surely that is a burden you need not carry.” The man said.

Androcles shook his head. “A burden? By all that I hold holy... that is no burden to me sir. No burden in the least. First and foremost I am their brother and their son. I must protect them as best as I am able. That is what my grandfather Leonidas would wish of me. What my great-grandfather Resumar would wish of me. That is part of my destiny. I would die for any of them without a single moment’s hesitation.”

“That is who I am. Are we done here?”

The holo image faded just as quickly as it had appeared leaving all of them standing in silence. When it did they saw Sadi standing with the others a look of astonishment on her face. She and the others must have come back into the Med Bay while the holo recording had been playing and now like the others they were silent. It was Devra Re Mydala who broke the silence in the Med Bay, tears streaming down her face.

“By the Grace of the Prophets Bren.” She gasped gripping the arms of her new husband and mate tightly. “I... I am humbled.”

Bren pulled her close, just as deeply affected by what he had seen as she was. Even as long as he had served with Androcles... he had never known what drove him to do the things he did. Now he knew... and he too was humbled.

Zarah turned back slowly to look at her brothers and sisters. Normya was openly weeping into Tir’ut’s chest, Lisisa clinging to Denali with tears streaming down her cheeks. She looked at Arrarn, who had a trembling Narice and Toria clinging to his waist. His face showed the utter horror at what he had said and done.

“There is our brother Arrarn Leonidas.” Zarah spoke softly. “You should be shamed to even walk in his shadow after what you have done here today. Never have we even thought the words you spoke today. That you... any of you... would question his honor or his love for us... for our mothers... next time why don’t you just take a blade and carve out his heart. That would have been less painful for him after what you have done.”

“Zarah...” Normya spoke. “Zarah... will we be able to talk with mother?”

Zarah turned to looked at Eliani. “Eli... you and Andro knew what you would do.” She said. “What does it mean?”

Eliani pulled away from Jomann slightly, and wiped away the tears in her eyes. “He told me he was able to touch them. We are hoping because only mother has this inhibitor implanted within her that he will be able to communicate with them. They will then be able to talk with her since they are within her.”

“What did... what did he tell them?” Lisisa asked. “What are their names?”

Eliani shook her head. “I don’t know. I know he passed to them information that father wanted him to pass. And he told them of their family.” Eliani looked at Arrarn. “He told them of their brothers and sisters.”

Arrarn started for the door. “I must go to him.” He stated.

“You can’t.” Sadi declared stepping in front of him. “He has left with L’tian to return to the surface and take part in the farce that these meetings are about. There was a chance... there was a chance that we could have gotten your mother free Arrarn. A slim one... but a chance nonetheless. Because of what you did on the surface that chance is lost to us. Now we don’t know what will happen.” Sadi stepped up to him. “And mark my words to you Arrarn Leonidas, if what you have done this day causes him to act in a way that will place him in harm’s way, that will cause him pain, brother or no brother I will revisit that pain to you ten fold! I swear this to you as his Anome!”

None of them could do anything as Sadi spun around and marched back out of the Med Bay without another word.

HADARIA LYCAVORIAN EMBASSY

“...should have told me Androcles.” L'tian spoke from behind Andro as he walked into the large room.

Andro turned away from the window and looked at the man he called grandfather. “It was too risky grandfather.”

“Andro... I barely got them to allow you back on the planet!” L'tian hissed softly as he came up with the large mug of Aricia's coffee and glass of Spartan Wine. He held out the mug to Andro knowing that he hardly ever drank alcoholic beverages. He glanced quickly to the shadows where Jomann stood silently.

Andro smiled as he took the mug. “Do not kid yourself grandfather. They allowed me back on the planet because tomorrow is when my uncle and Buonau will make their grand play before the Galactic Court. Once he discovers what capturing mother means, once he discovers that, he won't be happy. He will still want me there so that he can gloat over how he will soon be in command of the Union. He will preach to the Netnews that we are a law driven society and we need to follow our own laws. Buonau wants me there because she thinks she will arrest me, furthering strengthening my uncle's position.”

“I sincerely hope you do not intend to allow that.” L'tian said.

“I will not allow that.” Jomann spoke from the side of the room.

“No grandfather.” Andro answered with a smile. “Eli made sure to tell Jomann I am to do nothing stupid.”

“You do realize that they will not allow her back into any meetings now? They will keep her sequestered from us no matter what.” L'tian said.

Andro nodded his head. “I know. The chance Sadi and I thought we may have had was very slim to begin with. Once we saw the arrangements outside the Arch Ministry Building, combined with the number they brought to the meeting, we decided against it. The risk to mother was too great. Arran's actions only made it impossible.”

“You know... the comparisons between Sadi and your grandmother Gorgo continue to grow by leaps and bounds.” L'tian said as he sipped his wine. “If not for the color of her hair, I dare say most of the Lycavorians born and raised in Sparta would consider her the second coming of Gorgo.”

Andro smiled. “Yes I know. She hates that.”

“To be compared to your grandmother in so many ways is an honor Androcles. I hope she knows that.” L'tian said.

“Oh... don't mistake my statement for something it is not grandfather. Sadi... she does not feel she measures up to grandmother Gorgo in any way. Either by intelligence or deed.” Andro told him. “That is what my statement means.”

L'tian smiled in understanding. “Well... if she continues to act and do the things she does, the comparisons will only grow and she gives herself far less credit than she deserves. Did you know she sprang upon Pusintin's son with the fervor of a rabid female wolf protecting her mate?”

Andro looked at him confused, his eyes going to where Jomann stood. He quickly made sure his eyes were anywhere but looking at his Prince and fast growing friend. “What? No... I... she told me Jomann was the one who finally tossed Kalis aside.”

L'tian chuckled. “And that is what I mean. You should have seen it. She pounced on him, clawing at his eyes, fangs out and spitting death and she finally hit him with a Mindvoice blast that nearly sent him flying across the room. Jomann was the one who kept him from getting to his feet and continuing the fight. A fight which I sincerely doubt he would have won given how she was reacting. Your KertaGai is becoming more and more refined at using her abilities it seems. And they are skills I think she is passing to the rest of your mates.”

Andro shook his head. “I will need to have a talk with her it seems.” He said with an almost embarrassed grin.

“Did it work Andro?” L'tian asked after a long moment.

“I believe so... yes.” Andro answered knowing what he meant. “They said ‘Hello our brother’ grandfather. They spoke as one voice and it sounded somewhat strange, but it was definitely them.”

L'tian sipped his wine. "Part of me... part of me is enraged at what she has had to endure Androcles. I want to squeeze the life from that foul man for what he has done to my baby. But part of me..." L'tian shook his head. "She carries new life within her! Innocent life. You know what that means to elves don't you?"

Andro nodded his head as he moved closer to him. "Yes. I know that part of elven history grandfather." He answered. "The Elder Mother told me."

L'tian looked at him surprised. "Arzoal? How... how would she know?" L'tian stared at his grandson for a long moment in silence because Andro would not answer him and then shook his head. "On second thought perhaps it is better if I do not know. At least right now. Suffice to say... if you were able to do this then it will at least allow her some small measure of peace knowing that we have not forsaken her. That we are doing everything within our power to get her back."

"I gave my brother and sister knowledge that father is still alive." Andro told him. "With that knowledge, I told them to reveal it when they needed, but only to keep mother from doing anything stupid. I didn't have the full thirty seconds I needed to pass to them all I wanted, but enough to start with. They... they will not be fully aware because I was interrupted... but enough to know and understand much of what is going on around them. Mother will discover it soon enough and she will be the one they need to draw from. Perhaps it is better that I did not establish so deep a connection as to give them the complete knowledge that I carry. That is a burden I wish upon no one."

L'tian looked at him keenly. "You did... you did what you felt was necessary given the circumstances." L'tian said reassuringly. "You do not have to refer to them as your siblings Andro." He said. "I don't think anyone would expect you too."

Andro met his eyes. "They are part of one of my mothers." He stated firmly. "She did not birth me grandfather, but she has played just as important a role in my childhood and my life as my blood mother. As any of my mothers did. To be honest... as I grew I think I learned more from her and my blood mother than any of them. Now... they are part of her, and that makes them part of me as well."

"And how much trouble is doing what you have done going to get you in?" L'tian asked him. "I have to believe that Helen and Arzoal will not be happy about it. I doubt the School of the Mages is going to be pleased either once they discover what you have done. You are the only one to have ever been fully aware while still within the womb Androcles. The only one born fully aware. That is no small burden to carry. In some ways I think they fear what you could be capable of. Now there will be two more."

"The Elder Mother and the Feravomir will not question what I have done." He said. "They may not like it... but they will understand why, just as father does. It will be easier to accept when they realize they are not fully aware, but they will be upset that I did what I did regardless. What the School of the Mages thinks I do not care. The Feravomir can handle them and she knows to keep them away from me. Stuffy old fuckers is what they are."

L'tian laughed warmly. "Yes... I don't doubt that, but they have always raised a stink because you never went to them to be 'properly trained' as they say." L'tian said. "All of your brothers and sisters... but you most of all because of your unique situation."

Andro nodded. "They will need to get over it." He said with a grin. "Has Tenna Deia given any indication of the reaction back home?"

L'tian shook his head. "I spoke with her within an hour of the incident. I believe most people are still in shock. Just as I was. You should have told Arrarn though."

Andro took a deep breath and shook his head. "No." He said softly. "I love my brother grandfather... I love him deeply... but he does not have the emotional control that Eliani does. He is not good at hiding his feelings. He wears his heart on his sleeve most of the time. If I had told him what we planned, his love for mother would have driven him to push for it to happen sooner. Perhaps do something that would have given us away. My uncle is not stupid... he would have known something was amiss." Andro shook his head again. "No... I did the right thing. I needed Eliani to pinpoint the Inhibitor within her, and she is like my mother Anja. She has the best damn Tarchan face of anyone I know. It is why no one will play Tarchan with her anymore grandfather." He said speaking of the popular card game with the Union.

"What now?" L'tian asked.

"I'm going to return to the SCIMITAR for the evening." Andro said. "I need... I need to feel my mates around me and I wish to try and contact them as well. I doubt they even have her on the surface anymore and it will be easier to maintain a connection with them if all of us are in orbit. I do not wish to overload their newfound abilities.”

“And Arrarn?” L'tian asked looking at him. He saw Andro's eyes grow a little wider. “Yes... I know what happened. Normya told me within Mindvoice as you were sitting in the back on our way down.”

“I... I don't know.” Andro said softly.

“Androcles... he is... terrified that you will hate him.” L'tian said. “What he said... he spoke in anger and concern and...”

“Hate him?” Andro gasped. “He is my brother grandfather... I could... I could never hate him. I love him too much!”

“Then why send him away?” L'tian asked.

Andro sighed heavily. “I do not wish to grandfather... I have to.” He answered. “For three reasons.”

“And they are?” L'tian asked. “And do not think I am trying to get you to change your mind Androcles. I agree with you. I only wish to understand.”

Andro met his eyes evenly. “He has already proven he can not control his anger at what has taken place. In his shoes, I do not doubt I would be the same. That is reason number one. Also... Narice and Toria are his strength and they are in danger every minute we remain here. The Kavalians would like nothing better than to capture or kill Narice. That weighs heavily on him always. He acted... he acted without fully thinking and you know as well as I, that is always something that will get you killed. If we are to save mother we can't afford that. Having them here is a distraction for him. That is reason number two. The last reason... he... he needs to be with... he needs to be with Narice when she leaves.”

“What do you mean when she leaves? Where is she going?” L'tian asked.

Andro looked at him. “I am not infallible grandfather... as much as everyone likes to place father and I on pedestals, we do make mistakes. Many of them.”

L'tian nodded. “We all do Androcles. Most of us fully understand that. What does that have to do with Arrarn?”

Andro took a deep breath. “Narice is returning to High Coven space grandfather. She is returning to make a claim to leadership there.” Andro saw L'tian's eyes grow wide in disbelief. “We can not fight the Kavalians and the High Coven at the same time. Narice and I have spoken at length since all of this began, and we agree it is in both our best interests to have her make a claim to leadership now that Aikiro is dead. The time is right. If she can wrest control of the Coven government from Yuri... then she can put them on a new path. The path that they should have been on before Aikiro came back to power. Narice is a Leonidas now, vampire blood or no. She has taken enough of my brother's blood to know everything there is to know about our family and she has embraced it. Her love for Arrarn knows no bounds, and neither does Toria's. We have avoided it up till now, but with the information that is coming out of Coven space, now is the time.”

“That... that is a bold move Androcles.” L'tian said. “Does... does your father know?”

Andro shook his head. “Not about this... no.” He replied. “I fear his anger and hatred of the Coven and Yuri runs too deep for him to make a substantial decision that does not include destroying them completely.”

“After what they have done, do you not agree with him?” L'tian asked.

“Make no mistake grandfather... Dante Moran will die a painful death.” Andro told him meeting his gaze. “For what he did to Zarah I will track him to the ends of the universe and he will die a death fitting his vile deeds. He will rue the day he ever set his eyes on my sister of that you can be assured. That... that does not mean that the people within the High Coven agree with what Aikiro and Yuri did. Narice... she has told me the younger generations are making themselves more known within High Coven society. Pureblood and turned vampires alike. They are joining together and becoming more vocal in what they want. And they want peace between our people. They see what we have and they want that as well. Narice is part of that generation grandfather, Toria as well. If she can rally enough power, enough people to her cause with our support, she would be a strong ruler.”

“Where does Arrarn come into play?” L'tian asked.

“Arrarn loves her grandfather.” Andro said. “He loves her and Toria more than anything else in his life. Perhaps it is their vampire blood and the coolness with which they have been raised, but they are good for him. A calming influence. And... and because I am not infallible... I trust in Arrarn's love for them and his ability of precognition to make sure that if I have made a mistake, it does not cost us everything.”

“What mistake?” L'tian asked.

“Trusting the Immortals.” Andro said bluntly.

L'tian's eyes grew wider. “You don't trust them?” He gasped. “Even after all they have done?”

Andro shook his head. “I am not talking of Cha'talla, or Tir'ut or anyone connected with their tribe and clan. Them I trust implicitly, just as mother and Normya do. I am speaking of the millions of Immortals that are leaving the High Coven in droves and have been for the last week.”

“What?” L'tian gasped in shock.

Andro nodded his head. “It is part of the intelligence we're getting from our deep agent. Millions of them. All responding to Cha'talla's call for a new life. A call that I asked him to make. I have no doubts that a good portion of them will not be coming for that life Cha'talla has said they could have.”

“Deep agent?” L'tian said. “I was under the impression your father recalled all of our agents many years ago.”

Andro shook his head. “You don't honestly believe that do you grandfather?” He said.

“Who is this agent then?” L'tian asked.

Andro shook his head quickly. “I'm sorry grandfather... I can not tell you. Suffice to say the agent is very high up within the Coven ranks. Seven of us know his identity and that is the way it will stay.”

L'tian nodded. “Fair enough.” He said. “And Arrarn?”

“Arrarn knows how I feel about the Immortals. He knows that... Cha'talla knows that. That is why Narice must be surrounded by those who love and trust her. Those that she loves and trusts. I am sending my brother into harm's way grandfather. Into a situation that may very well get him and them killed. And I will not be there with him to guide him or make the many decisions he will need to make for himself. I need him to be focused and alert in order for this to work. And if it doesn't... I need to know that he will have his wits about him so that he can get them out of there if the need arises. His skills will be the only thing that can.”

L'tian was silent for a long moment. He set the glass of wine down on the table and nodded. “He can do it Andro.” He said finally.

Andro nodded in agreement. “My faith in him is not in question grandfather. That is why I need to send him away. He needs to focus on something just as important as getting mother back or else he will drive himself to do something utterly stupid in regards to our mother and possibly get both of them killed. That is a risk I am not willing to take. And ultimately I don't believe he is willing to take that risk either.”

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN

Arzoal and Helen watched as the ramp of the STRIKER came down and locked into position. Arzoal rested comfortably with her four legs beneath her, while Helen leaned against her side.

Have you spoken with Androcles sister? Arzoal asked turning her massive head to look at her bonded sister.

Helen shook her head. No... not yet. She answered. Deia and I have been trying to maintain calm with the Senate for most of the day. I had to let Dilios and Arete know and they will discretely pass the word along to the more senior Senators.

You know what he has done then?

Helen nodded now. I felt them for the briefest of moments yes. And then they threw up shields that blocked everyone. Helen met her eyes. You know why he did it Arzoal?

Arzoal nodded her huge head. Yes. I thought perhaps the Elder Council would be angry that he used his natural abilities and the added power we gave to him as a Talon Guardian to accomplish this but I was so wrong. I inquired of all of them as soon as I saw it and realized what he was doing and they support him without hesitation. Daurgo and several others would have gone even further.

They trust him and Martin implicitly Arzoal. Helen spoke. And as much as I snarl and growl at them... so do I.

Arzoal nodded in agreement. Yes. I as well. The First Mage must have contacted you by now. Even if they were not watching the events I'm quite sure that they felt them for that brief instant.

Oh... he contacted me. Helen answered as she rolled her eyes in disgust. And once more he professed to me the dire consequences of not having Andro or his siblings attend the School of the Mages and learn how to properly manage their powers.

Arzoal chuckled softly. He forgets that it was you who trained him. Trained them.

Helen smiled. Perhaps. I placed him in charge when I stepped down because he knows the danger of doing what the Aikiro and the Coven did. Not giving those who are more gifted within Mindvoice than most... a means to grow and learn. They limit themselves. I think he and the senior instructors simply resent to a large degree that Andro and his siblings are far more powerful than he and they are. I may have to have a talk with him on a more personal level. I do not need him questioning our motives and what we do.

Why do you think Anja wanted to meet with us? Arzoal asked.

Helen shook her head. I don't know. She wouldn't go into details because she had to contact Resumar and Athani for something. It has something to do with Isabella and it's urgent I know that.

The baby? Arzoal gasped. There is something wrong with Dorian?

Helen looked at her. That's what I thought as well. What else could it be? If it had to do with Andro or Martin she would have contacted them directly.

They turned as first Anja and Isabella exited the STRIKER, holding hands and walking together, though Bella was taking shorter steps because of her taller frame. They both looked radiant as always. Close behind them were Gorgo, Dasha and the young Leonidas children Nara, Deion, Bryon, Retta and Calyb. Sivana and Belen exited next followed closely by Ceuma and Joci with the stunning blue skinned Vanari female between them. Helen's eyes narrowed slightly when she saw that this Vanari female was clinging tightly to both Ceuma's hand as well as Joci and her face was beaming in happiness.

Interesting. You see them? She said.

Indeed. Arzoal answered. It seems that the Vanari are going to play a much larger role in the future than anyone expected.

Yes it certainly does. Helen said as her eyes fell on the half dozen Durcunusaan troops that exited next and the two female vampires that moved quickly to flanking positions of Anja and Isabella.

Colonel Norris's people no doubt. Arzoal spoke. I had heard that Isabella and Dysea requested he send additional security for Bella.

Helen nodded. Yes... it would appear so. She stated as she looked at the blond haired female to Isabella's right. Her hair was cut and styled in such a way that it folded mainly to one side of her face, the ends reaching to her jaw line. The Mark IV ArmorPly hugged her form tightly, accenting long, muscle packed legs for a woman who looked no more than five foot two inches tall. Her confident walk and the way her eyes shifted constantly told Helen she was exceptionally skilled. No doubt a result of Colonel Norris and his training regime. The man had fought with Martin during the Battle for Earth, the commander of a cloned vampire division that had defected to the Union side almost immediately. Men and women who had chosen their paths in life long before Yuri had sent them on their mission. Colonel Norris was known to frequent the many stores and shops within Eden City with War Master Tareif for the men had become close friends indeed. Helen tilted her head somewhat as she watched the young woman walk towards them, her eyes coming to rest on Arzoal. The young woman on the right has not been around dragons very much sister. She is very nervous.

Surprising. Arzoal spoke. But not unexpected sister. Many of Colonel Norris's people come here to train and learn, but many do not.

Their shielded conversation stopped as Anja and Isabella came up to them. Helen stepped forward and embraced both of them as they hugged her back tightly.

"Feravomir." Anja spoke nuzzling her cheek in affection. "It has been too long."

Helen smiled and nodded her head, giddy at seeing the fiery Persian haired Anja once more. Though she would never admit it openly to any of them, she favored Anja for her quick wit and her endless one liners intended to accent her outgoing and blunt nature. It was a trait she had apparently inherited from the human father she had been placed with after being sent to Earth. Helen kissed their cheeks, lingering a second longer on Anja's skin because of her sweet honey scent and she had not seen her in several months. Even after everything that had happen on Hadaria, Helen still saw the bright glint of her mischievous nature in her jade green eyes. The events on Hadaria had not broken her confidence or her will in any way it seemed and that pleased Helen. She stepped back squeezing their hands as they both reached up to touch Arzoal. The Elder Mother closed her eyes and like her bonded sister relished in the touches of such dear friends.

Arzoal... it has been too long. Anja said.

Yes it has. Bella echoed.

Arzoal opened her flame colored eyes and lowered her snout to Isabella's shoulder nudging her gently. It is always delightful to see any of you. She spoke. Will you be staying on Earth?

Anja nodded after glancing at Bella. It is time for us to return home. She said. It will give Helen and Deia a small reprieve from the Netnews crews who hound them. And I need to speak with Androcles when he returns.

"Then you saw the transmission?" Helen asked softly.

Anja nodded. "We saw it." She said.

And you no doubt knew what Andro intended? Arzoal asked.

Isabella nodded now. "Yes... we knew." She replied. "Do not be angry with him. It was an idea he brought to us and we all agreed. Cirith's father is working on trying to interrupt the Inhibitor but we could not let For'mya go a moment longer without knowing we love her and are looking for her."

Helen shook her head. "We are not angry." She said. "We were just speaking of it before you arrived. Arzoal and I agree with what he did. We may not like it... but we agree with it. We only wish he would have consulted us first. It does not matter now and we will deal with the consequences as they come our way. Andro mostly since he is the one tied to them now. At least until they are grown."

Anja looked at Bella quickly and then back to Helen. "That is what we need to discuss. Or at least something like that."

Helen glanced at Arzoal and then back to Anja. "I don't understand."

"We are relatively sure Pusintin will have used the Kavalian accelerated growth hormone on the children KinosaurGai carries. She carries twins." Anja said.

"Yes... we felt them for a brief moment before their brother taught them to throw up very powerful shields." Helen said. "What exactly did Andro pass to them Anja?"

"That... that I don't know." Anja said. "He would not tell us and only Marty gave him a message to pass to them. We don't know what that was either. Knowing our son... I'm quite sure it was enough to allow them to help For'mya stick it to the raping bastard Pusintin in as many ways as possible!" She finished with hatred in her voice.

"Well... if this hormone was used on them... and I have no reason to not believe you... then he will need to communicate with them at least until they are fully grown." Helen spoke. "He will need to instruct them as much as he is able within Mindvoice and For'mya can augment and go into greater detail what he teaches them."

Anja nodded. "Yes... he knew that. As did Martin. We are hoping that he can use them as a conduit directly to For'mya since they are tied to her anyway and even with the inhibitor in her head it should not block her from communicating with them while she still carries them." She said. "The inhibitor blocks incoming and outgoing Mindvoice abilities... not ones that are internal."

Helen's eyes grew a little wider. "Son vada carians... I never... I never thought of that." She gasped. "That would work! This was Andro's idea?"

Anja nodded with a smile. "Yes."

What does this Kavalian hormone have to do with why you are here now Anja? Arzoal asked now.

Anja met her flame colored eyes evenly as Arzoal lowered her head almost even with Anja's five foot three height. "Arzoal we know how you used your abilities within Mindvoice to basically inhibit the growth of dragons before they hatched. So that they would not realized their full abilities and escalate your conflict with Chetek and his people."

Arzoal nodded. Yes.

"We need you to do the same thing for Dorian Arzoal. Only in reverse." Anja said. She took a deep breath. "Isabella has Darpia Syndrome... and her womb will break down before Dorian is ready to be born and it will no longer be able to sustain him. We are going to inject him with the growth hormone the Kavalians developed. That is why I needed to speak with Athani and Jalersi before coming here."

Arzoal's eyes were wide now, even for a dragon. I... oh my. She gasped. I... perhaps we should go inside to one of the meditation chambers and speak. I... I need to hear this plan you have in its entirety.

He lifted his head from the delicious bone he had been gnawing on when he felt the tingle in his head. His Sinopia colored scales gleamed with health and power, his emerald green eyes clear and bright. He was only three years old, but already he was just a tad under fifteen meters long, and nearly three and a half tons of lean muscle and bone, his talons long, strong and wickedly sharp. He was taking after his father his mother had always told him, but with her eyes. He was a hybrid dragon, born from a Firespitter father and Heavy Horn mother, both of whom were members of the Dragon Council Guardians. The protectors of not only the Elder Council, but also this wondrous ship that was their home. It was a position that was sacred to a dragon and brought back into existence less than a decade ago. A Council Guardian was second in importance to only a Bonded Pair in their culture now. He was the youngest dragon of his parents fourth clutch of eggs together, and only their third son. The His other nine siblings were all sisters. His parents were deeply committed to each other and their Guardian duties in Dragon Mountain, and this was something they expected from all of their offspring. His oldest two sisters had been chosen as bond mates to members of Mjolnir's Hand and his two older brothers were just finishing their combined training to become Council Guardians. He had the size and musculature and power to become a member of the Council Guardians, but his carefree and often reckless attitude had gotten him into trouble several times as he was growing and this was weighing heavily on the decision of the Guardian Officers on whether to push for his inclusion into their ranks. The only reason he was still being considered was his father and even several disciplinary beatings by his father had so far not changed his nature. He had lived his entire life here in Dragon Mountain and the surrounding island; and he had been among the nearly seven hundred dragons who had been in the main chamber when the Elder Mother and the Feravomir had faced down the vampire witch Aikiro.

His name was Ryner and he spent his many days now continuing to train as a Council Guardian but knowing deep down he would never be chosen for their elite ranks. His only desire now was to go to Elear and find a young female dragon like himself and begin his own family.

Ryner bent his head back to his bone once more and continued to gnaw on it with his massive fangs. He felt it again and looked up once more. It was similar to what he felt within Mindvoice when his father was reaching out to him in order to scold him for something. He had not been reprimanded for anything in the last week so he did not understand why his father would be reaching for him in such a way now.

Brother.

Ryner dropped the bone from his talons and rose to his feet as that single word echoed within the corridors of his sharp mind. His wings fluttered for a moment nervously as he looked out across the dozens of other dragons who were sitting on the same ground and gnawing on their own bones. Standing up during this time was against the disciplinary rules for those being trained and his size caught the attention of two senior dragon instructors.

Initiate Ryner return to your position! The order was barked and Ryner's head snapped around to look at him. He quickly dropped back to his belly on the cool stone and reached for the bone.

Feel... feel me brother. The voice once more echoed within his head, louder this time and Ryner lifted his head but remained on the ground. The tingling in his head was growing more pronounced and Ryner shook his head and snorted softly to try and clear it.

Who... who are you? Ryner finally asked.

I... I am you. I... I do not know. I feel you. Do you not... do you not feel me? The voice asked.

My head... my head tingles. It... Ryner spoke.

Yes! You are so close. Closer than you have ever been. Where... where are you?

Ryner felt the unique tingling growing more powerful now and he glanced over to the other dragons for they had played tricks on him before. None of them even acknowledged him, as they were too busy on their own bones. He gasped inwardly as a sharp pain suddenly shot through his temple, more surprising than it was intense and he saw several images flash through his mind. Grand images of a young man dressed in golden armor and sitting atop a dragon that looked so much like himself. And then golden armor sprang forth to encompass that dragon as well and the young man lifted what could only be a Nehtes into the air and howled as the dragon leaped into the sky. Ryner shook his head harder this time but the images were not going away and the tingling had now become that steady sharp pain thudding in his head.

What... my head! What is happening?

We... I am you. You are... you are me! I am... I am near. So... so close. Find me... find me my brother. Find me. It... it is time!

Wait! Who are you? What is your name? Ryner gasped.

Name? Ah... I hear my father's voice through the walls. Those who are my... who are my mothers.

Dorian. My name... my name is Dorian. Find me... I am... I am so close brother. Find me. It is time.

You... you are here? In Dragon Mountain?

A mountain... yes! Beautiful liquid all around. Walls of stone that are not. It... feel me brother.

Ryner came to his feet once more his long tail twitching madly and his wings snapping out to the sides drawing the attention of everyone in the chamber as his head darted back and forth.

Initiate Ryner I will not tell you again! The instructor barked out. You are disrupting this resting time! Return to your position or I will call for your father to remove you!

Ryner's head snapped around and looked at the instructor with his blazing emerald eyes. Vith dos! He snarled out angrily and bolted for the entrance to the chamber.

The Senior Instructor's muzzle snarled openly in fierce anger and he reached out with his mind. This is Senior Instructor Cormarn. Initiate Ryner is to be detained and held for severe disciplinary action! Council Guardians respond and subdue him! Senior Guardian Mafera respond to training room three.

All of the rooms on CS41 were immense, carefully altered and crafted by Avi using the bio-mechanical nature of the bulkheads and hull to make it appear like the inside of a mountain. Though they would not pass close scrutiny, the walls and corridors appeared to be nothing more than rock and granite. The many rooms, with very few exceptions, all looked the same. Since dragons did not need chairs and such, there were several rooms near the top of the ship on the upper deck that had been made into meeting places for the many Lycavorians, elves and others who frequented Dragon Mountain. The entire upper deck of CS41 had long been changed into furnished quarters and places of meeting that were large enough for the dragons to come into and associate with their Bonded Ones or others. It was not uncommon to see dragons and humanoids conversing within Mindvoice in these rooms as if it was the most natural thing in the world. The only thing that was different from when they had discovered the ship on Lycavore was the massive open air chamber in the center of the ship that extended from the bottom most deck all the way up to the very top. It could open and close depending on the weather outside and was now open halfway allowing bright sunlight to shine down within the main hall and glitter off the walls.

Naesta stood along the waist high wall that ran the length of the room and could see the many hundreds of younglings in whatever stage of learning to fly they were in. Her eyes were open in amazement at what she was seeing and she barely felt Ceuma and Joci come up on either side of her as she stood there transfixed.

"Amazing isn't it Naesta?" Joci spoke softly. He watched Ceuma step close to Naesta and entwine their fingers together and unlike only a few hours ago this no longer bothered him. He, Naesta and Ceuma had spent nearly the entire trip here to Earth speaking of what they had discovered and their feelings. Part of him reacted as any male would with two such stunning females who craved his touch and attentions, but Joci also knew that he had joined very elite company and importance. Not only because he now had two mates, but because one was the sister to the Queen, a Princess in her own right, and the other was from a new species that looked as if they would become strong and faithful allies to the Union. Naesta came from a powerful family within her species, and now he had to live up to not only the Lycavorian standards but also theirs.

"By the Grace of the Prophets Joci." Naesta gasped. "It is breathtaking."

Joci smiled at her words and shifted his spot so that he stood behind both of them. He lowered his head between theirs and nuzzled both their cheeks. "I have only been here once and it was many years ago." He told them. "Their numbers have increased substantially in that time."

"The King... Martin did this Joci?" Ceuma asked as she watched several younglings swoop by the open area in front of them.

Joci nodded. "He asked the Elder Mother what she needed and knowing that Avi could shift the internal structure of the ship because of its bio-mechanical nature, once he brought this ship to Earth this became their new home." He said. "They are originally from Elear and that is where the bulk of their population resides, but their numbers here increase every year. Many of the dragons who are born here on Earth choose to remain here for they consider it their home. The human President, Charles Taylor, he has designated the entire south west hemisphere as dragon land. They can hunt and breed and live as they wish, just like they do on Elear. They all bring their younglings here to learn to fly and be schooled however."

Ceuma looked at him. "I saw many humans as we were coming in Joci. They don't seem to be frightened of them." She said.

Joci nodded. "Those who had lived in the area when the King first brought the ship here. Those that did not remain moved to the south with those dragons and they live together in harmony. The humans and others protect the dragon lands, and the dragons in turn protect them from harm."

"There are no incidents?" The new voice asked from the side and they turned to see the young female vampire listening to them. She saw the look in Joci's eyes and quickly stepped forward. "Senior Lieutenant Sheva Juconi. My fellow Sanguine officer and I have been newly assigned to Queen Isabella's protection to supplement the Durcunusaan sir."

"You have never been here Lieutenant?" Joci asked.

"No... no sir." She answered. "My rotation... my rotation here was cancelled because of the Evolli War and it has not been rescheduled yet."

"You are uncomfortable around dragons Lieutenant?" Joci asked.

"I... I have not been around them enough to get comfortable sir." She answered honestly.

"What do you mean by incidents?" Joci spoke.

"They... they do not argue?" Sheva asked. "The humans... they do not... they do not demand more than what they are entitled too?"

Joci chuckled softly. "Are you familiar with Earth at all Lieutenant?"

Sheva Juconi shook her head. "I have only been assigned to Earth for the last three years sir. Since the end of the war. I was with the 19th Spartan Recon Division based on Apo Prime before that."

"Ah... General Garnak's Division." Joci spoke.

"Yes sir."

"The Great Fire as it is now called depopulated the Earth by nearly half Lieutenant." Joci told her seeing Ceuma and Naesta both turn to look at him as he spoke. "When the fires in the atmosphere finally ceased there was little left except a scorched wasteland. Those humans that remained were influenced or oppressed heavily by the High Coven forces that had survived. It became even worse when the elves created by Senior Polemarch Dymas came into being. The Battle of Earth changed all that. The King's adopted sisters Tarifa and Aihola changed it. President Taylor changed it. Even your Colonel Norris had a hand in it. Suffice to say... in the end... all differences were readily tossed into the abyss and they decided it was time to start over. Those that did not adhere to the rebuilding were quickly shown the error of their ways. It is how Earth prospered so quickly after the war. Elves, humans, Spartans and even the vampires that remained worked side by side to build new lives. What they have now is what they have built from nothing and you will find that anyone who calls Earth home is fiercely loyal to their home planet. The population grows each year, but many changes have been made since the time before the Great Fire, and no one, human, elf, Lycavorian or vampire feels the need to expand into areas they do not need simply for the space. So to answer your question... no... there are no incidents."

"They are... they are so different from the Eridiani Joci... yet they are the same." Naesta said softly.

"They look the same... yet the few I have seen from before Curila 6 and since... they have not looked at me in the same way. As a piece of fodder. They are intrigued... but they are so much more pleasant and respectful."

Joci nodded turning back to her. "I think you will find the humans on Earth and within the Union are far different from the Eridiani Naesta my mate."

"Excuse me sir?" Sheva asked. "Do you know why we are here? We left in such a hurry that I don't fully understand what coming here does to help the Queen's condition."

Joci turned his head back to where he saw Anja and the others sitting with Arzoal near the center of the huge meeting room. "You do not know much of the Leonidas family do you Lieutenant?" He said finally.

“No sir. Only official reports and such.” Sheva answered. “Watching them in Netnews reports and specials.”

“And what was your impression of them before being assigned to Queen Isabella?” Joci asked.

“To be honest sir... I didn’t have one.” Sheva said. “I never expected to be placed in service to the Queen so it is not something I ever thought about.”

Joci grinned. “Well... I have not been among them long myself... but I will tell you what I have learned in that time.”

And there is nothing you can do to halt this? Arzoal asked looking at Anja.

Anja shook her head as she lowered her mug of coffee. “No. Darpia Syndrome is so very rare that we have not studied it enough to truly learn what the triggers for it could be.” She answered. “We know it is hereditary... and that’s about all.”

So Veldruk had this within him? Arzoal asked.

Anja nodded. “The male is usually the one to pass the gene yes. That much we do know.” She answered.

Isabella snorted softly. “Another way for him to torture me from the grave.” She spat.

“Does Martin know?” Helen asked.

“Not yet.” Anja replied softly. “We... given everything that has happened in the last few hours we don’t want to saddle him with this knowledge just yet.”

“You have to tell him Bella.” Helen spoke. “Anja. You have to tell them.”

“And we will.” Anja stated. “We know our husband and mate Helen. If there is anything we can do to save Dorian, he would agree to it.”

“I don’t doubt that.” Helen answered. “All I’m saying is that you need to tell him before you attempt this procedure.”

“That is not something we would keep from him.” Bella spoke. “From any of them. Anja and Sivana both say this will work. As does Eurin. If I can not trust the three most gifted medical minds within known space who can I trust Feravomir?”

Helen looked at Eurin. “Eurin... not that I do not trust Anja and Bella but...”

Eurin nodded her head. “It will work.” She stated. “The Kavalians have been doing this for centuries Helen. They’ve refined the core process over the generations and after speaking with Jalersi and having her transmit to us the fractal equations I am more sure now. We will adjust the procedure somewhat since it is still crude... but it will work.”

How will it work? Arzoal asked. And what must I do?

Anja looked at her. “Arzoal we didn’t...”

Say not another word Anja Leonidas. Arzoal spoke. Look around you. This. All of this is because of what Martin has done. What Androcles has continued and added too. I can... we as dragons can never repay this. Whatever you need me to do... I will do.

“Well... Bella will remain here at Dragon Mountain.” Anja said. “Once we inject the growth hormone... it will be a matter of perhaps two weeks before Dorian is born. We are calculating the dose to provide a grace period in case the Darpia Syndrome is further along than we thought. Once he is born, then we’ll need you to shield his mind and bring him along slowly as his body grows. Within two months he will reach full maturity. We estimate he’ll stop growing between twenty and twenty-three years old.”

“Why so much?” Helen asked.

“We do not have the time to fully break down the compounds within the main Kavalian formula.” Eurin answered her. “That would take us at least one to two months of dedicated research. With that much time we could merely adjust the dosage so that we simply accelerated his birth until just before the womb collapses completely. Bella’s womb will stop being able to sustain him within three to four weeks. We...”

“Ohhh!” Isabella gasped as her hands went to her womb and she shifted quickly in the chair.

Anja was instantly alert. “Bella?”

“He... he just kicked something fierce!” Isabella panted with a smile. “More so than when we were landing.”

Arzoal looked at her now. He has been active since you landed? She asked.

Isabella nodded with another smile. “Very. Kicking like a little fighter almost nonstop.”

“And this started when you landed?” Helen asked casually.

Isabella nodded. “As we were coming down from orbit.” She answered as she adjusted the way she was sitting.

Helen watched her carefully as Anja began helping her and she saw the tiny beads of sweat rolling down her flawless skin. She glanced up at Arzoal. [Sister?]

[They are the same signs Helen.] Arzoal answered quickly. [Almost exactly the same. It is uncanny.]

[But it happened when he was only six months along. Dorian is well past that.] Helen said. [And Bella has been among dragons for almost that entire time.]

Arzoal nodded. [But not here.] Arzoal gasped. [She has not been here among so many who are not bonded. She...]

There was a soft screech from Naesta and she stumbled back from the edge of the wall when the yellow tinted dragon trumpeted and began landing. Arzoal looked at one of her senior Council Guardians, her usually unflappable temper flaring at this interruption. She rose to her talons and glared at the dragon, everyone now watching her.

Gazokh! What is the meaning of this? She snapped.

The Heavy Horn folded his wings along his back and bowed his head to her, his front forelegs lowering to the floor. Forgive me Elder Mother. One of the Guardian Initiates is... he has lost his mind Elder Mother!

What are you saying Gazokh! Arzoal snapped. What do you mean lost his mind?

He abandoned the rest cycle during his training and bolted from the chamber. He has been scrambling up from the lower decks since telling the Senior Instructor something in a language I do not understand.

A language you don't understand? Helen asked moving closer.

Yes Feravomir. It... it sounded like what I have heard the Talon Guardian Androcles speaking to his beloved sister Zarah. Gazokh spoke.

The ancient Lycavorian language? Helen asked him.

No... the other language they use. Gazokh answered.

Arzoal moved closer. Who is it?

Ryner... Elder Mother. Gazokh replied. Senior Guardian Mafera's youngest son. He attacked the Guardians sent to retrieve him Elder Mother. He injured one with his talons and...

Attacked! Arzoal gasped.

“Owwwww!” Isabella grunted as she leaned way back on the chair, both her hands going to her swollen abdomen. “Oh... Anja... something is wrong! That... that one hurt!”

We have subdued him Elder Mother, below in the main chamber! He was attempting to take to the sky and escape through the upper chamber hatch! Gazokh hissed. Mafera is trying to calm him but it isn't working! He keeps shouting something about his brother!

Arzoal moved with amazing speed for a dragon so large and went right to the ledge, extending her head and neck out so that she could see far below. She could see several dragons laying atop another thrashing one some thousand meters below with her incredible vision and as she opened her mind further she heard what Ryner was screeching.

...go to him! Get... get off me! My... my brother needs me!

Arzoal's head snapped back around and she looked at Isabella on the chair, her beautiful face grimacing once more in pain. [Sister?] She gasped at Helen.

[Order them to release him Arzoal!] Helen barked moving up next to Isabella. [It has to be! It is the only explanation! Release him!]

Arzoal didn't hesitate and looked at Gazokh. Release him Gazokh! Now!

But Elder Mother... he is mad! Gazokh gasped.

Release him now! Arzoal nearly screamed scaring Gazokh terribly.

The older dragon had never seen the Elder Mother so passionate about anything and he immediately leaped from the ledge and dove for the bottom of the chamber.

Helen grabbed Isabella's arm. “Bella... prepare yourself!” She snapped.

Isabella looked at her. “Helen... what... now is not really the time! Something... Dorian is... something is wrong!”

“Prepare yourself Bella!” Helen spoke.

“Helen what...?”

The trumpet was deafening and all heads turned to see the huge Sinopia scaled dragon come barreling over the ledge to land with a wild flapping of his massive wings. Joci pulled Ceuma and Naesta back quickly, instinctively protecting them while Sheva and several other Durcunusaan staggered back in wide eyed shock as the click of talons screeching on the deck sounded.

Ryner’s wide emerald eyes searched the open meeting area seeing two of their Queens, the Elder Mother and her Bonded Sister as well as several Durcunusaan troops. He ignored them all as his emerald eyes focused on Queen Isabella’s pregnant abdomen. He took two large steps towards her when the rust colored scales of his father appeared from below and Mafera landed within the area as well.

Ryner no! Mafera screamed out moving to block his son from getting any closer to the Queen.

Leave him! Arzoal barked out, imposing her body between Mafera and Isabella. Do not touch him!

Elder Mother he is... he is mad! Mafera barked.

Isabella squeezed Anja’s hand as they watched the dragon move closer, but her face was still grimacing in pain. Dorian was kicking madly within her womb and it was now bringing tears to her eyes at the intense pain. Two things happened in the next five seconds. Ryner wasted no time and immediately lowered his snout to Isabella’s womb, pressing his oversized muzzle just under her belly button and Isabella’s face changed from one of pain to one of utter enchantment.

Helen rose to her feet quickly. “Don’t touch them!” She barked. “No one touch them!”

“Helen?” Anja snapped stumbling to her feet and reaching for her. “What...”

“Son vada carians!” Helen gasped as she watched the dragon’s body relax instantly, his wings fluttering madly as they folded back in place. His tail was madly flapping around behind him as he settled to the floor in front of the chair keeping his snout pressed tightly to Isabella’s abdomen. “It’s happening again! Just like...”

Anja looked at her. “Like what?” Anja barked.

“Anja... this is... you were not there when Elynth bonded with Androcles!” Helen gasped holding her arm tightly. “Arzoal and I witnessed it! It was... it was almost a surreal event! It’s happening again... just as it did then! Almost exactly the same! He’s... he’s bonding with Dorian!”

“What?” Anja gasped.

Isabella’s eyes were wide and she had that peaceful expression on her face as she lowered her hands to Ryner’s snout and placed her palms against his cool scales. The tears of pain had changed to tears of happiness and her hazel/green eyes were looking upon the head of Ryner with immense affection. Isabella could almost feel them communicating through her womb, Ryner’s talons clicking madly on the floor as their minds merged and became one. “Anja!” Bella gasped reaching for her hand.

Ignoring Helen’s earlier warning to them Anja didn’t hesitate and she grasped Isabella’s outstretched hand tightly. Her jade green eyes flew open as they experienced the merging just as Dorian and Ryner were experiencing it. While they could not see or feel what was being passed between the two, the utter seamlessness of the bond and the exquisite nature of the feelings that trembled through them provided Anja and Isabella with a sense of profoundness. They suddenly were able to understand just how Andro and Elynth were to each other. How they were able to do what they did.

“By... by the gods Bella.” Anja gasped as she dropped to her knees next to Bella in the chair and they both stared at the almost dreamy expression in Ryner’s large emerald eyes. One of his front talons rose up and gently, almost reverently it came to rest on Bella’s legs where both she and Anja covered it with their hands without question. This contact only caused both of them to tear up as they could feel and sense even more of what was happening.

Mafera’s eyes were wide with worry for his son and for his Queens as he moved up next to the Elder Mother. Elder Mother? He gasped. Elder Mother... what is happening to my son?

Arzoal’s large flame colored eyes turned to gaze at him as Helen moved towards Anja and Isabella. You son Mafera... your son has... he has entered into a whole new world now.

I don’t understand Elder Mother. Mafera exclaimed.

You know the bond Elynth and Talon Guardian Androcles share? Arzoal asked him.

We all do Elder Mother! An act of the gods it was. Bonding our two species together for all time. Mafera answered. His eyes grew wide and he turned back to see his son's large head still in direct contact with Isabella's abdomen. My... my son...

Arzoal nodded her head. The same gift granted to Androcles and Elynth has been given to your son Mafera. She told him. Dorian Leonidas is becoming fully aware and Ryner will be his conduit. His voice. His Bonded Brother.

Mafera looked at her with wide eyes. His Bonded Brother? But he... he has no training for such a task. He...

Arzoal smiled and lowered her snout to touch his. He will be in good hands Mafera. Who better to learn from than the two most powerful Bonded Pairs within the galaxy? Androcles and Elynth will show them the way. The King and Torma will guide them. You and your kin have just been thrust into a role that none of us ever imagined Mafera. Go. Go and bring your mate Inidra. Family is the most important thing that is needed now. Go quickly and return with her and all of Ryner's siblings that are here in the mountain. I do not care what they are doing, tell whoever asks it is my directive.

SCIMITAR

Caliria's soft green eyes fluttered open slowly and she found herself staring at the tanned, delicious mounds of Ne'Veha's cone shaped and incredibly firm breasts. Her nipples were no longer as hard as they were a short time ago, but they stood proudly nonetheless.

Hello Inamarno. Ne'Veha's soft sexy voice echoed in her mind and she lifted her eyes to see her dark brown orbs staring back at her.

Caliria Re Mydala had imagined what it would be like the first time. Well... she had tried to imagine it anyway, but nothing she had imagined over the last few days had come even remotely close to what she had experienced over the course of the last few hours and what she was experiencing now. Caliria was no stranger to men, or to women for that matter. Yet this was beyond anything she could have ever desired. Her Alkay seeped from her pores non-stop it seemed, and not from some chemical introduced into her system, but because Caliria was more aroused than at any time in her three hundred years of life and her body and her mind was willingly responding to every touch upon her. Five different sets of lips and hands had sent her blissfully over the edge more times than she could remember now. They had adorned her with attention and pleasure the likes of which she could not conceive. And they did so without neglecting each other, which was completely amazing. The Vanari men she had bedded, even the Eridiani man Franklin, none of them had shown the stamina and utter devotion to her that Androcles had given her these last hours. He was by far the largest equipped male she had ever seen, never mind allowed to make love to her. She had cried out in fantastic enchantment that first time, cried out and gripped his broad shoulders as every wonderfully thick inch had impaled her with delicious sloth like slowness. Once he was fully within her he had simply stared into her beautiful face as she grew accustomed to such a magnificent piece of manhood. He had dotted her face and lips with soft kisses, nuzzled her cheeks and neck, her Alkay seeming to affect him differently than others. It was almost as if he had a natural immunity to the oil seeping from her skin, and only later would she come to discover that it wasn't an immunity so much as it was a dominant will that kept him from surrendering to the effects her Alkay could produce in a sexual partner. None of them were. She had tasted each of them throughout the past hours, hungrily drinking down whatever they offered her, even while they let her partake of the wondrous pleasure Andro was giving her solely for herself. Their lips were so soft, so tasty, their kisses with her toe curling in every way. They suckled her breasts, her neck, any portion of her exposed skin that was not wrapped around Androcles's and his god like body. Whether it was long, powerful and sundering strokes into her tightness or languorous and inevitable thrusts into her depths, Caliria howled out her delight with each heart stopping plunge. Once they had shifted and she found herself happily feasting upon Ne'Veha and Carisia much the way she feasted upon Yssyla not so long ago, while Androcles caused Sadi's and Lu'ria's cries of enchantment to fill their room. And still they always came back to her.

Now her senses were in complete overload as she rested atop Andro, her back pressed tightly against his exquisitely chiseled chest and his will breaking cock fully buried within her. She was rapidly losing all conscious thought as Sadi's incredible tongue was battering her painfully hard clit, Ne'Veha and Carisia were attacking her eraser hard nipples and her Drow Mistress had her locked in a kiss that was stealing her breath away by the second. She could feel their minds and hers mingling, whispering to her like voices on the wind of how they loved her and how she was part of them now. Caliria felt the volcanic orgasm begin deep down in her belly. Andro was using short, loving strokes to drive her mad while Sadi's tongue was relentless in its task. The sensations of their touch upon her was maddening, once more pushing her up to the edge of the abyss. And then Caliria tore her lips from Lu'ria and screamed. One hand dropped to Andro's hip as the other gripped Sadi's golden blond hair holding her lips in place and her body convulsed almost painfully as the orgasm erupted from her. Her pussy clamped down on Andro's deeply buried organ and she took great pleasure in the groan of his own release that he expelled into her ear with his face buried in her neck and her long black hair covering his shoulder. As she felt him swell within her once more, the floodgates blew open and Caliria screamed long and loud as she too detonated with the most powerful orgasm of her entire life. She leaped into the abyss of divine pleasure never wanting to return as she felt Andro's scorching hot seed erupt and rocket into her depths, driven along by Sadi's wildly licking tongue driving them both to heights unknown before now for Caliria.

The last thing that raced through her clouded mind before she had succumb to the shattering orgasm was that she had found herself. She had finally discovered what she had been seeking for so long. And then the wonderful, pleasure induced blackness claimed her.

Caliria couldn't help but smile in blissful contentment as she gazed at Ne'Veha. Hello yourself. She answered once more stunned at how easily Mindvoicing had become and knowing that as each day passed she was growing stronger.

Caliria detected the mass of shimmering white hair behind Ne'Veha and she lifted her head slightly to see Lu'ria and Carisia sleeping soundly, Carisia's petite and incredibly powerful body tucked quite deliciously against Lu'ria's taller and equally potent body, the contrast in the color of their skin exotic and alluring to look at. Lu'ria's arms were wrapped around her slave almost possessively and Caliria knew that only one of them could get her to release Carisia from her embrace if they so choose. She looked back to Ne'Veha's breathtakingly beautiful elven face and she allowed her head to rest back on the pillow.

How long have I been asleep? She asked finally.

Only a few hours. Ne'Veha answered with a smile. It is nearly morning. How do you feel Inamarno?

Caliria met her eyes and her smile grew even larger. Blissful. She answered immediately. So blissful and... and worn out.

Caliria could hear Ne'Veha laugh softly within her mind and she relished in the sensation of being able to touch one so intimately. It was no different for me. He took me three times in the night before he changed me. I thought my limbs were never going to move again so tired as I was. So tired and so...

Willing. Caliria asked.

Ne'Veha nodded. Very willing.

Caliria reached out and touched the very faint scars from where Andro's dual fangs had sank into her that night. She caressed them softly for a lingering moment. Will they never go away?

Ne'Veha shook her head. I wouldn't want them too. She replied. Even Sadi, who is pureblood like Andro wears the scars from where he bit her proudly. It is a status thing among Lycavorians I think. I am still learning many things as I go. Lu'ria too. You have seen what he did with our Drow Mistress haven't you? Within our minds?

Caliria nodded slowly. I... I can not be changed Ne'Veha. She said. That is something that was determined long ago by our doctors.

And neither can Carisia. Do you think that matters to him? To any of us? He has marked Carisia Inamarno. Her scars are much fainter than mine for they are older but he has marked her as well. Ne'Veha said.

Then... they why did he not bite me? Mark me? Caliria asked.

He will Inamarno. Ne'Veha answered. Perhaps he did not want to do such a thing because you are so new to Lycavorians and their ways.

Where is he? Caliria asked her eyes darting around the room.

He and Sadi are in the living area. They are purebloods and their systems rejuvenate ten times faster than ours at the moment. They do not need as much sleep as others. I think he is trying to contact his brother and sister within Mindvoice. Ne'Veha answered.

Will... will you and Lu'ria become like them? Caliria asked.

As my grandmother has told me... she is also wolf and elf... it takes nearly two years for the changes to fully take affect right down to our molecular structure. We will grow stronger as time passes, able to do more things, but we will not have the resilience that purebloods do. Ne'Veha smiled. After a night like last night we will be up and moving in much less time, but nowhere near what Andro and Sadi can do.

Caliria looked at her. Ne'Veha... what we saw yesterday. That recording. How did... how did he know our names before he met us. Especially... especially me. Until my mother came for me, no one within this quadrant even knew we existed.

Ne'Veha shook her head. Fate perhaps. Destiny. I don't know and I don't care. Seeing that recording... it only confirms what I already knew in some way. I was meant for him and he for me. I was meant for Sadi and Lu'ria and Carisia. And you Inamarno. We were meant for each other by some greater power.

My people teach us the Prophets always have a plan for us. Caliria said softly. That no matter how much we may try to avoid it, our destiny will always find a way.

Ne'Veha nodded. We believe much the same thing Inamarno. You felt different before. Before Andro and...

You mean before he waltzed into that room like some waking god and saved me. Before last night and making me feel what I did? She asked with a grin.

Ne'Veha nodded. Yes.

Caliria nodded as well. I felt I was different yes. And not just because I was born with black hair. What I feel with him... with all of you... I think I have found what I have long been seeking. It is very... it is odd that he can feel for each of us what he does though.

Ne'Veha nodded now as well. I thought that too. All you need do is ask him Inamarno and you can swim within his thoughts and discover how for yourself. He will keep nothing from you. From any of us.

Caliria scooted closer to her on the bed and pulled her closer relishing the feel of her firm elven body against her own. Perhaps soon I will. For now I wish to sleep.

Ne'Veha smiled and closed her arms around her Vanari lover and fellow Princess. Well... we still have a few hours before we must rise. And sleeping with you in my arms is perfect.

Caliria smiled and closed her own arms around Ne'Veha. Her mind was awash with questions and ideas, but for now she was content and happy. The answers would come she knew. She just needed to be patient.

Andro sat on the couch in the living area of his quarters wearing only his white pants. Sadi rested in his lap comfortably, the near see through robe draped around her body and their heads were touching. She had an animated look on her face, one of wonder and happiness as the voices of Andro's new brother and sister filled her mind as well as his. It had taken them nearly an hour to sift through the strands of Mindvoice and find the right connection, but as soon as they did their voices were clear and strong.

[...are you?] The soft female voice asked. [Are you... are you nearby? Who is with you?]

[We want to know more brother.] The male voice echoed.

Andro smiled warmly upon hearing their voices. [Be calm... I... I don't know what to call you yet. Mother... she has not named you.]

[Who is with you brother?] The female voice asked again.

[You feel KertaGai. Sadi... my anome.] Andro answered.

[Hello to both of you!] Sadi said happily. [It is so wonderful to hear your voices.]

[Tell us more brother!] The male voice told him again. [We want to know more.]

[Patience brother.] Andro said. [You are still very new to all of this. I was not... I was not able to impart to you everything I wanted. You will not be as strong as you should be and you will tire easily. Trust me... I know. What you are experiencing right now I have already experienced.]

[You... you were like this?] The female asked.

[Yes sister. Unlike you however... I was fully aware while still within my mother's womb. I was attempting to do that for you but was not able to complete the process because of outside circumstances.] He told them.

[Because of our brother Arrarn?]

[Yes... but he did not know what I was doing. He was concerned for our mother and acted impulsively. Do not be angry with him for I am not.] Andro answered. [Do you... do you understand what is happening around you. What is going on now?]

[We understand that we are... we are here because... because of something bad. Are we... are we bad?] The female said.

[NO!] Andro exclaimed. [That is not true! No matter why you have come to be you are not bad sister. You have been given life and... and because of me now you have awareness before you should. You have knowledge of things before you should. It was wrong what I did... my people consider such a thing very taboo but I did this... I did this so that...]

[So that you could talk to mother, yes we know.] The male spoke. [We could see that in your mind's eye brother. How did you know she... she is in such pain. Her... her heart aches Andro.]

[I know because she is my mother as well. Perhaps not as my birth mother... but you have seen how we all view each other. How we view those we call mother. They speak with one voice... they all have had a hand in raising us as we grew.] Andro said softly, Sadi feeling his arms tighten around her hips. [What is happening... to the both of you... to all of us... it is...]

[It is horrific.] Sadi picked it up. [It is the result of men who have no concern for others and all they wish is more power. They do not care whose lives they destroy or harm in the process. The man... the man who is your father... he...]

[NO!] Both their voices together was powerful and both Sadi and Andro's eyes grew wide at the strength.

[That... that foul man... he is not our father!] The female exclaimed. [We have seen in our mother's mind what he forced her to do. We see what she endured! She can not... she can not put it out of her mind. There was no love from him when we were created Andro! He could not even sense that we both were here! No!]

[We have no father.] The male said now. [We...]

[Do not say that!] Andro barked out. [You have a father! He may not... he may not be your blood... but he will love you without question! That is what we are as a family! He loves our mother, he loves all our mothers beyond any life he has, and anything that is part of them he will love! Do not doubt that for an instant! The images I passed to you... he did not know there would be two of you... but they still apply. He... he tells you he will love you as his own. No doubts! No hesitation! My father... our father now... he means what he says.]

[Why?] The male asked.

[Because that is our strength as a family. And you are part of that family now. Both of you.] Andro answered.

[What can we do?] The male asked. [We are...]

[Mother... she has something within her. See the image in my mind.] Andro spoke projecting an image of the exact spot on For'mya's neck where he had felt the void that Eliani said she had sensed. [There is something under her skin that prevents us from communicating with her directly as you and I do now. If you can sense her emotions and see what she sees in her mind then it is as we hoped. The Inhibitor that blocks us from communicating with her does not interfere with you.]

[Inhibitor?]

Andro shook his head. [Forgive me? It is a device that blocks her from Mindvoicing. It doesn't allow her to do what we are doing. That is what we call it.] He explained. [It does not block either of you and that makes us so happy.]

[Because we can talk to her!] The female voice echoed as realization filled her voice.

[Yes!] Andro said. [I do not know how much longer we will be this close. After events today they will take her away from us and the distance between us will be too great to speak with you like this. At least not until you are stronger. You must tell mother everything I have passed to you. As soon as you are able. We... we do not want her to go another moment longer than necessary believing father is dead or that we do not love her. That we are not coming to get her. To get you both! You must tell her these things.]

[She was calm last night.] The male spoke. [A man... a Kavalian who is much nicer than the rest was talking to her. He hid our... he hid our existence from that... that man. They spoke for hours. Mo... mu...]

[Muton. That was his name.] The female chimed in.

[Yes... that was it! Thank you sister.]

Andro's head tilted. [He was nice to mother? He spoke to her?]

[About many things we do not... we do not understand.]

[Do not strain yourselves!] Andro told them. [It will come in time. Probably more quickly than you realize. Be careful when you exert yourselves.]

Sadi squeezed his cheeks indicating she wanted to say something and he nodded. [Listen to me both of you.] She spoke in as soft and inviting a voice as she was able. [When she discovers her love is alive... when she realizes what she has been forced to do... she will be... she will be devastated. You must tell her... make her understand and know that your father is coming for all of you. Tell her... tell her Martin Leonidas says she can not die. No matter what else you tell her... tell her that.]

[Why that?]

Sadi smiled. [You will see little ones. You will see.]

[You will be born soon.] Andro picked it back up. [And you will grow so much faster than you are supposed to. Take what I have given you... learn from it. When it is time our mother will guide you even more. You must be strong for all of you until our mother knows that she is not forsaken. As you grow quickly, your minds will... they will evolve quickly too. Our sister Eliani says if you take what I have given you and slowly absorb it over the days and weeks then it will be as if you grew normally. Don't ask me how... I am not a doctor as she is.]

[Our sister is a doctor?] The male asked.

Andro nodded with a smile. [Yes... the finest behind only our Hadarian mother. Our brother Arrarn is one of the finest pilots, another of our sisters as well. We are so many and so different yet we love equally.]

[Will we meet them?] The female asked.

[We are your brothers and sisters!] Andro announced. [And you will meet them. I swear to you.]

[We... we are tired Andro.] The female said.

[I know. I can feel that within you.] He replied. [Remember what I have told you today. Remember what you must do. It will be far easier to talk with mother. Never... never forget we will come for all of you. No matter how long that takes! I promise you. Our father promises you!]

[We will.]

[This connection between us will always be open just for you. I will maintain it always.] Andro told them. [When you feel you are strong enough together, perhaps if mother is able to remove the device in the future and help you, then contact me. Remember this if nothing else my brother and sister. You carry the name Leonidas! And you are family. We do not forsake our family for anything!]

[We will... we will remember brother.] The male voice spoke.

[Goodbye Andro.] The female said. [We will talk again soon. This is fun. Goodbye!]

Andro and Sadi blinked several times and then the connection was lost to them. Andro sat back on the couch and sighed heavily. He blinked rapidly as Sadi's hands dropped to his chest and caressed the skin around his Talon Guardian Brand as she always did.

"Have faith in them my love." She said.

Andro met her jungle green eyes. "I do. I just do not want them to try and do too much given all that I passed to them. They will grow stronger by the hour now, but they are still very weak."

"Then trust in your mother and the strength of her will." Sadi said.

Andro sat up and kissed Sadi hard, drawing her tighter against him. After a moment he pulled away. "My faith in mother has never wavered." He hissed softly. "She has... she has survived so much in her life. She will survive this. And she will give my father the daughter she so wants to give him. Then she will be complete."

Sadi gripped his face in her hands. "I felt something else my love. Something faint and not unlike what I feel when I am around you and Elynth together."

Andro nodded. "Yes... it was like an echo reaching outward."

"What was it?" Sadi asked.

"I don't know. It felt familiar in a way but I don't know." He answered. "Why did you tell me it was Jomann who threw Kalis off when it was you?"

Sadi's jungle green eyes glittered. "I was protecting my mate and husband. My center, my life. It is not that big of a deal and your mothers have done similar things through the years."

"You should have told me." Andro said with almost a pout on his face.

"Then will you tell me now?" She asked.

Andro blinked several times looking at her. "Tell you what?"

"Why you did not tell me you saw all of us in your dreams Androcles. So long ago." Sadi said.

"What was I supposed to tell you KertaGai?" He said with a smile. "Was I suppose to tell you so soon after having you come back into my life that I would have five wives and mates? That you would love them, they would love you, and I would love all of you? Even I myself did not want to believe that for I felt it made me too much like my father. You would have either cut off my nor quite painfully or thought I was completely and utterly insane and demanded that I be committed."

Sadi couldn't help but laugh at the expression on his face. "Perhaps." She said finally. "But only after I got my fill of you and your divinely masculine gifts! To include you nor."

Andro shook his head. "What was with the... you know KertaGai... when I..."

Sadi grinned even wider and kissed him. "We have power over you in our bed my love." She told him huskily. "I have shown all of our loves just where to nibble and bite to make you last all the more longer. We will never get enough of you Andro... you should know that now. No one can fill us as you do. Make us feel the things you do."

"That's... that's not exactly fair you know." Andro said.

Sadi shrugged. "Then take it as added incentive to learn all of our special spots and make us howl more than you do now my love." Sadi gasped when he snapped his head forward and suddenly his nose and lips were firmly nuzzling her neck and cheek. She cooed out her delight softly as delicious sensations surged through her body at his touch. By the gods he could incite flaming passion within her with barely any effort.

"I love you KertaGai." He whispered in her ear as the tip of his nose crushed against the scent gland behind her ear and he inhaled deeply. "I love all of you more than any breath I might take."

Sadi's eyes closed in blissful happiness for she knew it was so very true. And while he did have five mates and wives, women that she adored and loved herself, Sadi knew she would always be first in his heart. She felt him pull away slowly and look at her.

"I must contact my father before they go completely dark." Andro told her staring into her beautiful eyes. "Will you wake the others and join me for breakfast before I go to the surface and meet grandfather to finish this farce."

Sadi nodded and kissed him softly. "Go." She said. "We will be there."

"... Twins?" Martin gasped as he looked at his oldest son in the secure transmission.

Andro nodded his head. "Yes. I was able to pass much of what we wanted to both of them but not all. I was interrupted."

Martin's eyes narrowed. "Interrupted?"

Andro nodded. "I didn't have the full thirty seconds father." He said. "My cousin got to me quicker than I thought and gave me a rather promising welt on the back of my head."

"Arrarn and Jomann did nothing?" Martin hissed.

"Aside from saving me from a Kavalian shooting or stabbing me in the back?" Andro said. "Father... I touched them! Sadi and I spoke with them less than an hour ago! They know what they need to do but they are also not as strong as they would be had I been able to fully complete the transfer. They will adapt."

Martin nodded his head and turned to the side as Aricia, Dysea and Cirith moved into the transmission with him. "Andro were you able to... could they tell you anything about her now?" Aricia asked.

Andro nodded his head slowly. "She is distraught mother." Androcles replied. "Just as any of you would be. She believes father dead. She believes she has betrayed his memory by what my uncle has forced her to do."

She believed all of us dead until she saw us on Hadaria. And then she can not feel us within Mindvoice and I supposedly attack her. What would you think?"

"Androcles Leonidas you..." Dysea stepped forward speaking in a stern voice but Aricia took her arm.

"No Melda Min." Aricia said. "It was a stupid question to ask." Aricia looked at her first born son in the transmission. "Forgive me my son. We... we are asking so much of you in these times. It is not fair to you."

"I will not shirk from what I need to do mother." Andro spoke. "I love her as I love you. As I love any of those I call mother... which now includes Cirith." He saw Cirith's eyes grow a little wider in the transmission. "I will do what must be done."

"Andro... L'tian has the scrolls?" Martin asked moving up next to Aricia again.

Andro nodded. "No matter what they attempt today concerning mother, it will not even be recognized by the Union Senate."

Dysea gasped. "The Writ of Annulment?" She spoke.

Andro nodded. "The documents both you and mother signed many years ago medwaw." He answered. "We will use them if we need to... but based on their attitudes and arrogant actions yesterday, grandfather is quite sure they think they will drop some fantastic bomb on us today."

"What... Dysea... Martin... what is this Writ of Annulment?" Cirith asked.

"Two years after KinosaurGai was christened as the fifth Queen, she and I signed and dated documents stating what would happen if one or both of us was killed, incapacitated or taken prisoner." Dysea explained looking at her. "We did it in secret, with only the First Minister and chosen members of the Elven Parliament present. For'mya's father among them. We later had it ratified by the Security and Defense Councils of the Union Senate and only Deia and select Senators know,"

"Which I did not like!" Martin snapped.

Dysea looked at him. "We know Nauta Melme. But it needed to be done. For'mya and I talked much about it before going forward."

"What does it do?" Cirith asked.

"In a situation such as it is now... all of For'mya's authority and power was taken from her the moment she was taken prisoner." Dysea said. "It now rests with Arrarn and Bryon. Whatever they may have forced her to sign or agree to under duress will not be valid. No one will acknowledge it."

"That... that is a good thing isn't it?" Cirith asked.

"In one sense it is good yes." Martin spoke now. "Anything they may have coerced her to agree is null and void and will not be recognized by either the Elven Parliament or the Union Senate."

"So?" Cirith prodded him.

"The Kavalians will argue that she was not coerced." Aricia spoke. "Foul creatures that they are."

"They will argue that she agreed to these things willingly Cirith." Andro said. "They will argue that after recognizing that her mate had died, she allowed my uncle to claim her while her blood was burning for a mate."

Aricia nodded. "It is what happens to a Lycavorian female after their mate has died. Their body changes so that they will accept the advances of other alpha males and be able to mate again. She was not able to sense us within Mindvoice which only added to her belief that Martin was dead. Given the growth hormones they are obviously using on her for the children she carries, no doubt this also served to increase the potency and speed of her shift."

"What... what does that mean?" Cirith asked still not used to being around so many wolves after over three thousand years among only vampires and her father. Her wolf instincts were suppressed as she was only a third wolf, and she was only just beginning to feel them and use them. Martin's aura and its impact on her being the most telling up until now.

Aricia glanced at Martin who stood silently with his arms crossed across his broad chest. He nodded his head slowly knowing everything his saoursanno was saying was very true and this knowledge only caused his blood to boil in anger more. Aricia turned back to Cirith. "It means her body will have responded to Pusintin's alpha aura even though her mind would not. If he hit her with his full aura, she would not be able to resist him no matter how much her mind screamed for her too." Aricia shrugged her shoulders. "It is considered a curse among Lycavorian females that this is how our bodies react, but this manner in claiming a Lycavorian female has not been used since the before the time of Martin's grandfather. It is vile and goes against all we believe in. Pusintin would know that."

“It is partly my fault.” Martin spoke now unwilling to allow anyone to take the blame for something his instincts told him was his fault. “I should have... I should have pulsed her with my full aura long ago. I should have pulsed all of you long ago.”

Dysea took his arm in her hands. “Do not blame yourself for this Nauta Melme.” She said softly.

“If I had pulsed her fully when my instincts told me too Melda Min this would not be happening.” Martin said.

“Yes it would. She would still believe you are dead.” Dysea told him. “They would still be using the inhibitor on her. It would not matter.”

“They will claim she was only following the instincts of a Lycavorian by doing this medwaw Cirith.” Andro spoke once more seeing her look back to him in the transmission. “They do not know of the Writ of Annulment because it is not something Laustinos would know about.”

“We can not stop them from making a claim to the throne... but we can certainly stop them from whatever else they may have thought to use For'mya for.” Aricia said strongly. “And the Union Senate would never abide Pusintin... even as a regent until his son came of age. Hell... half of them remember when he was King and they would devise a way to kill him if they had to.”

“I have more enemies back home than you think I do Aricia.” Martin spoke once more looking at her.

Aricia met his eyes. “Perhaps... but they would not dare move against you so soon after you have been declared dead.”

Dysea nodded. “And they will run like the roaches they are when it is discovered you are not dead!” She spoke passionately. “We must ride the... we must ride the wave of what is coming until it is time for us to act. We have been caught unaware and unprepared for what we never saw coming. We are not infallible and we must stop blaming ourselves for what has happened! This does not help Kinsoargai and it is not how she would council us to act. You all know this. We need to begin to act to counter what our enemies do!”

Andro nodded. “Mother is right.” He said. “We will be departing quickly after today and what grandfather tells them. They will not be happy in the least but they will be unable to do anything to counter it. And nor will the Galactic Court. You realize of course that the court is not on our side?”

Martin nodded. “They have been bought!” He answered. “I should have listened to the advice I got when I formed them.”

“Not all of them are in the Kavalian or Hadarian pockets father. But not enough of them to alter the outcome I fear.” Andro said.

“Fuck them! I will deal with those traitorous bastards after I get your mother back!” Martin snarled.

“Once we are finished here I will return to Earth and begin making preparations.” Andro said. “Uncle Ben has informed me that the remainder of the Block Ones are leaving today for Earth so we should arrive about the same time.”

Martin moved closer to the transmission. “Your plan is sound son?” He asked.

Andro nodded his head. “As sound as any plan can be I suppose.” He answered. “I have... I have a few surprises also. Some of them... some of them you will not like father but they are necessary and could very well benefit us in the long run.”

“Like what?” Martin asked. “I don't like surprises son.”

Andro nodded his head once more. “I know... and I can't discuss them even within this secure of a transmission father. You are the one who taught me about OPSEC.”

“Now you are going to use that against me?” Martin snapped but his voice held no anger in it for him.

Andro shrugged his shoulders. “It will either work or it won't.” He stated plainly. “Arrarn will be on site with Cha'talla to evaluate and make the final decision.”

“Cha'talla?” Martin said. “Why do I get the feeling that if Cha'talla is involved I won't like your plan? You wouldn't use Cha'talla unless it was some hair brained scheme you cooked up in your noggin!”

Andro smiled. “Sort of like the many schemes you have cooked up in your saltwater corroded head as mother says. Have faith father.” He said. “You can scream at me afterwards whether it works or not. And my head is just fine thank you for asking by the way.”

Martin's face became serious. “Be strong my son. Be strong for your mates, your siblings and for our people.”

Andro nodded. “I will.” He said.

“If you are able to contact the twins again advise me immediately.” Martin told him. “I wish... I wish to discover as much about them as I can.”

Andro nodded. “You are going dark father?” He asked.

Martin acknowledged this with a small nod. “I will forward any relevant intelligence we get from the LP.” He spoke. “Unless necessary... we won’t speak again for a week.”

Andro nodded. “Understood.”

“Good luck my son.” Martin spoke warmly. “And be safe.”

“You as well father. Mothers.” Andro said seeing them nod their heads in his direction. He waited for a few seconds and then the transmission faded into nothing.

“Transmission clear Andro.” Sa’sur’s voice came over the intercom.

“Very well Sa’sur.” He answered. “Secure and lock the array. I’m going to have a short breakfast with Sadi and the others and then head down to the surface to meet grandfather.”

“I don’t like it Andro.” Sa’sur told him from the bridge of the SCIMITAR. “A dozen of their ships moved closer during the night. DIEROYS too. Extreme weapons range for their Hellbringer Gauss Cannons but still troublesome. They must think we wouldn’t notice. Carians they are stupid.”

“How many does that make?” Andro asked.

“Including the ones shadowing Pusintin’s flagship... fifteen.” Sa’sur answered. “A smattering of other ships but those DIEROY are the biggest risk. Let me target some Mark 22s just in case. I can take them out before they get real close.”

Andro paused for a moment thinking about that action. “Very well.” He told her. “Do what you think is best. We may have to leave quickly and I will not be in a position to question what you do.”

“Don’t worry... we’ll be ready.” Sa’sur answered. “Your surprise is standing by right?”

Andro nodded. “It will be, in about two hours. She wasn’t pleased.”

“She’ll get over it.” Sa’sur said. “She’s a Pralor and it’s too valuable an asset to lose. She just doesn’t understand.”

“Alright Sa’sur. I’ll advise you before I leave but I’m going to meet Sadi and the others.” Andro said.

“Will do.” Her voice spoke.

Andro turned and took his mug of coffee from the table before heading for the door. He heard the locks release and began to walk out the opening doors, lifting the mug to his lips. He came to an abrupt halt in the corridor, his mug frozen to his lips as his eyes fell upon his brothers and sisters in the corridor. Zarah and Normya climbed back to their feet as the others pushed away from the bulkheads when they saw him. He saw Jomann standing beside Eliani and he lowered his mug as Arrarn moved around from behind Denali.

“What’s... what’s this all about?” He asked.

As was usually the norm, Lisisa stepped forward. She had always been a spokesperson for her siblings simply because of her age and now it was no different. “Androcles...” She began and this caused his azure eyes to grow a little wider. None of his brothers and sisters ever used his formal name unless they thought it was important. “About yesterday... we... all of us, we wanted to say we were sorry for... we’re sorry for not believing in you. For not trusting you. We... we should have known better.” Lisisa rolled her eyes. “If anyone should have known better it should have been us.”

Andro lowered his mug as his eyes went back and forth between his brothers and sisters. “Ok... what is this all about?” He asked finally.

“It’s about us not trusting in you when we should have.” Lisisa told him. “Especially after all you have done for us without question. How you feel about us. All of us.”

Andro’s right eyebrow lifted slightly. “Ok... I am very confused.” Andro spoke. “Exactly what are we referring to Lisi?”

Zarah stepped forward and took the arm that did not hold his coffee mug. “I... I wanted to make a point.” Zarah said softly and with her dark brown eyes looking up at him innocently. “I sort of... I sort of used Eli’s security code to access some files that were classified.”

Eliani’s eyes grew wide. “My code?” She exclaimed. “How... how did you get my code? Why would you need my code? How...?”

Zarah looked at her and grinned. “Eli... of all of us you are the worst at keeping your code secret. I needed access to medical files. Files that only you and mother have access too.”

“Zarah... you didn’t?” Andro asked her.

She turned back to him. “No not all of them!” She exclaimed. “Just one that... just one that I knew would make everyone step back and actually think!”

“You had no right Zarah.” Andro told her.

“You are our brother!” Zarah snapped. “I had every right. When we begin to question each other, to doubt each other... just like yesterday... then I have the right to step in and set everyone straight on the facts! That’s what I did.”

“You should have told us Andro.” Lisi spoke once again. “You should have told us how you feel.”

Andro met her eyes. “I didn’t think I needed too.”

Lisi moved closer. “That’s not what I mean and you know it you dope!” She snapped.

Andro bowed his head slightly and looked at the floor. “Lisi... you know I am not very good at expressing...”

“It is done!” Eliani barked now. “No more. It is in the past! We... we know how you feel Andro. We know how you feel and we can not say we are sorry enough.” She stepped up next to Zarah. “We may question your sanity from time to time brother... but we will never question your love for us or anyone in our family. Not ever again.”

Andro grinned now. “Are you sure you want to give me that much rope? You never know what I could do with it.”

“Asshole!” Zarah exclaimed punching him in his opposite arm as he leaned over and nuzzled the top of her head.

Arrarn stepped forward quickly, unwilling to allow his sisters and brothers to cover for him. He looked at Andro whose azure eyes focused on him. “Andro... Andro I... I can not begin...”

Andro reached up with his empty hand and gripped Arrarn behind his head. “It’s done Arrarn.” He stated. “I know you meant none of it within your heart. You were speaking with emotion and worry. You do not have to explain it to me.”

“I was wrong Andro.” Arrarn spoke softly, his dark eyes almost beginning to tear up as he gripped his brother’s arm.

“And you think you are alone Arrarn?” Andro spoke shaking his head. “You are not.” He squeezed the back of Arrarn’s neck. “Forget what has happened and let’s move forward from here brother. I need you and Narice to be at your best now.”

This caused Arrarn to perk up and he looked at him. “You’ve decided?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “I’m going to set things in motion yes.”

Arrarn blinked several times, glanced at his sisters on either side of him and Andro and then turned back to his brother. He took a deep breath and then nodded his head. “I understand.” He said. “I can do it Andro.” He said.

Andro nodded. “I know that.” He said. “I will keep my promise to you Arrarn. You know I will.”

Arrarn nodded as he squeezed his brother’s arm even more. “I know.”

“Then all of you walk with me to the mess lounge and we can discuss some things as we go. I think it may be time I let all of you in more on what is going through my head.” Andro said.

“Sibfla!” Denali declared. “I don’t know if I want part of that. You are certifiable brother. You do know this right?”

Andro chuckled as Lisisa punched Denali in his abdomen. “Yes well... what is the expression mother uses?”

“Shit happens!” Eliani spoke proudly as they began to walk down the corridor.

PUMA’S PRIDE

Mother wake up!

For'mya bolted upright on the small bed in the quarters she occupied. Kavalian ships were not meant for comfort and the bed was not only small, but exceedingly uncomfortable given her very pregnant condition. She groaned softly knowing full well what it felt like to be pregnant and waking up before she was ready. For'mya had spoken to Muton, or listened to him speak actually, for nearly three full hours before he finally chased her to bed. After ordering the two Kavalian guards to escort her back to her quarters in a particularly harsh voice and tone, For'mya had wondered if perhaps everything he had told to her was nothing more than a lie. She should have known better, but something inside her told her she could trust this man. No matter that his entire body was covered in fur and he was part of those who had imprisoned her and then condoned her being raped and...

For'mya slowly threw her legs over the side of the bed and tried to straighten her hair as best as she was able. She shook her head slowly wondering why the voices woke her. No... she had not been raped. She had willingly agreed to endure Pusintin rutting above her in order to save those she loved; all that she had been led to believe that remained of her beloved family. She knew how the hormones within her body changed, she had known for years, ever since becoming wolf. Never had she imagined that she could desire another man, and even as her mind screamed in sorrow and shame, her body responded to Pusintin and his pathetic aura. Responded in such a way that she had to fight each and every time he took her to keep from screaming out in pleasure. He had held nothing back from his aura, and even at its full radiance, it didn't not compare to her Martin. Yet because she had seen him die, because she could no longer feel him within Mindvoice, her body immediately began to change and prepare her to take another mate. No matter how much she did not want to submit to him, her body gave her away. And now, discovering that they all still lived. All those who she had called son and daughter and watched be born and grow into the adults they were. She saw them yesterday and she could not feel them within Mindvoice. It was unlike anything she had ever experienced. They had conducted exercises to block each other within Mindvoice as a means to protect one another, but yet they could always sense their resonance within the many strands of their minds. She felt nothing now, and that could only mean they considered her dead to them. A traitor who dishonored the memory of their father by her actions in allowing Pusintin to take her and make her with child so soon after their father's death. That was the ultimate betrayal she knew. Something that they would never forgive no matter how many years passed.

Androcles's attack against her only gave proof to her convictions that she was hated now. She had denied Muton and his claim that Andro had been sloppy in his attempt to kill her. She would go to her grave never believing those she consider children to be anything but perfect and she had never seen or heard of Androcles being sloppy.

Her conversation with Muton had been the distraction she needed. His actions and then the three hour long conversation they had went against everything For'mya knew about the Kavalian people. He treated her with respect and spoke to her in such a way as to recognize that she had once been a Queen of the Union and he thought was still a Queen of the elves. For'mya was well aware of what would happen when Pusintin returned to the surface today. He would discover many things that she had no doubts would send him into a rage. A rage so intense that she could only hope that he took her life after she gave birth to the son he wished to claim the throne with. A son that would never see the throne of the Union or Sparta, not even for a single split second. The things Muton had told her were nearly unbelievable. He knew things that he should not have known. He knew of Arzoal and he confirmed to her what Martin had always believed. Arzoal was a Pralor. He knew of the ship Resumar and Athani had gone after in Kavalian space. The story he had told her was almost too impossible to believe, but it seemed right in line with what Martin and her fellow Queens had always thought.

No! She was no longer a Queen! She was no one! She had betrayed the memory of the man who she loved and adored far more than her own life! Betrayed the love and adoration for her fellow Queens and lovers! She was nothing now! And soon she hoped she would no longer be made to suffer the indignity of life without the ones she loved.

NO! The voices were so loud in her head and she whirled around in the small room, her dark brown eyes wide with disbelief. There were two voices of that she was sure, one male one female.

"Do not hide from me!" For'mya snarled her eyes continuing to dart around the room. "Show yourselves you bastards!"

We can not. The female voice echoed. The voice sounded calm and confident, like a teenage girl who was beautiful and smart. Like Eliani and all her sisters had sounded at that age.

For'mya spun around again. "Where are you? Watching from another room? Will you give me no peace?" She snapped.

We are within you mother. The male voice spoke. Very similar in demeanor to the female voice yet distinctly male and filled with warmth.

You carry us within you mother. The female voice echoed.

For'mya looked down at her swollen abdomen her hands coming up to lay flat across the front. "What... what trickery is this?" She snarled removing her hands quickly and looking up around the room trying to find a camera of some sort.

This is no trick mother. The male voice said.

"Don't... don't call me that!" For'mya barked.

Do not call you mother? The one who carries us within her womb? The one who gave us life and nurtures us even now? The female spoke in that soft voice. My brother and I will not do that.

Return your hands mother and we will show you. The male spoke. We will show you that it is us.

For'mya reacted instinctively and placed her hands back on her abdomen. She gasped loudly when she felt the two solid, but painless kicks against the wall of her womb. She staggered back somewhat, banging into the small bunk and easing herself back down onto the rough mattress her heart and mind racing out of control. "This... this can not be!" She gasped.

But it is mother. It is so because of our brother. The female spoke once more.

"Your... your brother?" For'mya questioned. "I... I don't understand."

You said it yourself mother... Androcles is not sloppy. The male voice said.

For'mya's eyes grew wide and instantly her hand reached for where Andro had bitten deeply into her shoulder and neck while pulling her tightly to him. His words to her just before sinking his fangs into her skin came slamming back into her mind like a thunderbolt.

"Forgive me mother. Forgive me for what I must do."

You see mother... our brother would never harm you. Andro... he did what he did to reach my brother and I within you. The female voice explained. He touched us mother. He touched us and showed us so many things.

"His blood... he... he granted you awareness!" For'mya gasped.

He did mother. He spoke.

"He had no right!" For'mya snarled. "He should not have done this!"

Why? You are his mother as well. A mother to all of our siblings. They... they did not want you to go a moment longer and know they did not love you. That they were not working on returning you to them. The male continued.

"I betrayed them!" For'mya stammered. "I betrayed them all by what I have done! By..."

By giving life to us? The female said. Do you think that we do not feel what you feel mother? Do you think we do not know that you question your actions every moment? You thought only to protect those you love in your actions. Those that you thought remained. The one... the one who forced himself upon you... he tricked you mother. He violated you in the most heinous of ways.

And now... to know that they still live pierces your heart every waking moment. The male voice continued. You feel you have betrayed them and now they shun you because you can not feel them. Because they don't answer within Mindvoice no matter how hard you try. They did not know for sure you had even been taken until after you had given us life mother... but not a day has gone by where you were not in their thoughts.

"How... how can you know this?" For'mya rasped out.

We are part of you mother. We know... we know you have struggled with the idea of... of ending our lives by ending yours. The female voice said again. But this is so very hard for you because of who you are and we are so grateful for that.

"You speak with... you speak with such knowledge of things." For'mya gasped. "How can..."

We speak with the knowledge our brother gave to us. The male said proudly. The love he gave to us without even knowing who we were. No matter what has happened. He said he was not able to fully complete what he wanted to do because of what occurred, but we have talked to him since and...

"Wait!" For'mya gasped coming to her feet. "You have... you have spoken with him? With Androcles?"

Early this morning. The female answered. He was with Sadi his... an... anome he called her.

“His soulmate.” For'mya said as her lips trembled in disbelief.

She is very beautiful. And very nice. The female said. He told us to rest and learn and study what we could. To gain our strength so that we could help you. We decided we have rested enough and now we wanted to talk with our mother.

“What... what did he say?” For'mya pleaded. “What...?”

We will tell you mother. Be at peace. The female said.

First you must know some things mother. Things my sister and I have decided. The male spoke.

“That you have decided?” For'mya gasped with a tearful smile as she moved to the bare metal chair in the quarters and sat down.

Yes. The... the substance used to make us grow faster is also making our minds grow faster mother. Andro knew this and that is part of the reason he did what he did. So we would know who and what we are.

For'mya gripped her abdomen tighter and shook her head. “You are... you are tools my poor babies.” She sobbed. “Tools... tools that I helped to create thinking that I was saving my Bryon and Dysea. I... I am ashamed. I should have... I should have taken my life when I knew what he wanted. I should have...”

That would have made father so very sad mother. The male said. Our mothers equally as much.

For'mya blinked several times. “He is not... he is no father! He is a vile creature who deserves the most painful of deaths for what he has...” For'mya stopped taking and looked at her abdomen with wide dark brown eyes now. “You... you said mothers.”

Yes. Our mothers. Andro's mothers. Arrarn and all of our sibling's mothers. The male spoke once more. Our family.

Making father sad would not be the best thing to do. The female said with a hint of giddiness in her voice. At least that is what Andro says.

“I don't care if he is sad!” For'mya snapped. “I hate him! I hate him with every fiber of my existence for what he has forced upon me. I... he intends to use you my son. Use you to further his sick plans for power. He will kill you my daughter... the moment he discovers your existence he will order your death. He is no father that...”

We do not speak of him! The female spoke urgently. He is not our father!

For'mya stopped speaking and rubbed her abdomen gently, lovingly. “But he is... he is the reason I carry you.” She said softly.

He may be the father of our blood... but he is not the father of our hearts! The female hissed out.

“What... what do you mean?” For'mya asked.

There are two things we must tell you now mother. The male said. Two things that will surprise you and make you sad. But you must know them so that you never give up hope.

For'mya shook her head. “I don't understand.”

We have chosen what we wish to be called when we enter your world mother. The female said softly. We have picked... picker our names yes?

For'mya couldn't hold in the small laugh that escaped her lips. “You have chosen your own names?” She rasped.

We have. The male said evenly. Names that we will always carry to honor and love you, who gave us life and provides for us now. I wish to be called... I wish to be called Fedor. It means...

“It means lion in ancient Greek.” For'mya whispered aloud.

Yes. A lion. A lion to protect my mother.

And I wish to be called Eirene. The female said.

“Eirene.” For'mya said softly. “It means... it means peace.”

So that I may bring peace to my mother in bad times. She answered.

The tears came freely now and For'mya curled up on the bed. “Why has this happened?” She sobbed softly. “Why must I endure this agony? Why must I bring into this world two hearts that are so beautiful... only... only to see them taken from me just as everything else has been taken from me.”

It will be yours again mother. Fedor said. It will be yours again.

For'mya shook her head slowly against the pillow. “Martin is gone. The man... the man who I ache for every waking moment. The shining point of light in my universe. He is gone. I will never feel his touch upon me again. Never feel his lips caress my ears. Aricia is gone. Dead beside her anome. My... my dearest friend and my love. They are all...

No! Eirene and Fedor barked at once. NO!

For'mya blinked several more times clearing her eyes of the tears. "Now... now you see my beautiful Fedor and Eirene. Now you see what I have lost."

But you have not lost them! Fedor exclaimed. The father of our heart lives mother! Our... our mother Aricia lives! Andro told us this! They live and even now they are coming for us! There is something... something in your head that blocks you from feeling them as you feel us. As we feel you. That is why Andro did what he did. To make it so we could tell you that all is not lost! That your family lives and they are coming for you! For us! Sadi... she told us to pass you a message. She said you would... you would know what it means. She said to tell you our father says... Do not die For'mya Leonidas. She made us swear to say exactly that.

For'mya sat up on the bed her eyes wide and her mouth open in shock at what she heard. She could feel the truth of what they were telling her without question. No deception. Just clear and untarnished truth. She knew that statement. She knew it so well burned into her memory as deeply as anything she had ever heard. That simple phrase meant so much to her. It meant the beginning of what she had. It meant the eternal nature of what she felt. Words spoken so long ago that drove her forward and made her see that this was where her life was going to be. This was where her life needed to be.

This more than anything drove the howl that followed. A howl louder than any other that had escaped her lips since becoming wolf that day so long ago. A howl filled with rage, with sadness, with shame and above all else...

A howl filled with hatred. Hatred for one man.

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

"... Be certain there will be no incidents like yesterday?" Sel'ke asked from his chair. "I can assure you Prince Leonidas... if there is, I will use the tools provided to this body by the Hadarian government and I will have you arrested and held in contempt!"

Androcles met Sel'ke's eyes from the chair next to L'tian. His grandfather closed his fingers around his forearm and rose to his feet. "We apologize for what took place yesterday Chief Minister... emotions flared and were acted on. I can assure you nothing of the sort will come from us this day."

"Good!" Kalis snarled from the table where he sat beside Pusintin and the Kavalian Ambassador. "This occasion he has only his pitiful guard here to protect him and I will kill him this time!"

Sel'ke eyed Andro carefully, his tanned face completely void of any emotion, and a stark contrast to the savage anger Sel'ke saw there yesterday when he attacked his elven mother. Even the comment by Marshall Pusintin's son did nothing to faze his expression and that more than anything made him uneasy. He turned and looked at Pusintin.

"Marshall Pusintin... Ambassador... we are trying to avoid anymore incidents." Sel'ke spoke. "There is no reason to provoke one."

"We are only stating our concerns Chief Minister. Need I remind you that we are the victims here?" The Kavalian ambassador Rutork'Toren spoke.

"Yes... we are well aware of your concerns Ambassador." Sel'ke answered. "We have spent the better part of the night reviewing the information you have given to us." He looked at L'tian. "Given the events of yesterday Minister L'tian, we had no recourse but to forward official data pads to the Lycavorian Embassy on the information given to us by Ambassador Toren provided to us."

L'tian nodded his head. "Yes... I reviewed them last night as well. Thank you for that Chief Minister."

Sel'ke nodded. "Very well. To mitigate any confrontations that may or may not appear based on these accusations I will read them quickly. Ambassador Toren and the Kavalian delegation have already agreed to forgo any argument on their behalf as they feel they have provided more than enough information and evidence in their favor. Since you, as the chosen representative of the Lycavorian Union has not had the opportunity to address these issues in a public forum before us, you will be allowed to address each of the Kavalian points in turn.”

L'tian nodded. “I believe that is fair Chief Magistrate. My answers will be framed as replies to these issues and or charges; however you wish to refer to them. Late last evening and early this morning I conferred with Prime Minister Deia, President Charles Taylor of Earth and necessary members of the Union Senate.”

Sel'ke looked taken aback at this but nodded his head. “As you wish.” He stated.

“There is one thing Chief Magistrate... given the rulings issued by this very body several months ago on Earth in regards to the status of Marshall Pusintin and Princess Lisisa Leonidas, is this court going to use the standard they established then... or will it be changing?”

“What standards are those Minister L'tian?” Magistrate Kagan asked. “My Limian colleague and I were not part of the court back then.”

“The standard of citizenship Union and Kavalian citizens Magistrate Kagan.” L'tian told him. “I have copies of those rulings for you if you were unable to acquire them yourself.”

The Hadarian's jaw line twitched slightly but he nodded his head. “I thank you.” He stated firmly.

Toren came to his feet now. “Magistrates... we do not believe those rulings were made in all fairness to the KFI given where the proceedings took place. I submit to this body that those rulings be voided and not used within these proceedings.”

Sel'ke shook his head. “That we can not do. It goes against the very rule of law within the Lycavorian Union and the governments that encompass the Union.”

“Chief Magistrate Sel'ke... we are not in the Lycavorian Union.” Toren spoke. “This is Hadarian Free Republic space.”

“I know very well where we are Ambassador.” Sel'ke spoke. “I will not however, reverse a ruling this body has made in the past based on that alone. Unless you have extremely gripping additional information that was not provided at the time of the ruling we made, nothing will be changed.”

Toren looked at Pusintin quickly L'tian saw and he shook his head. He turned back to Sel'ke. “Very well Chief Magistrate... we will abide by your earlier decision.”

Sel'ke nodded. “Very well... I believe Limian Magistrate Sonla has offered to read the Kavalian portion of the dual complaint before us so that it may be part of public record.”

L'tian returned to his chair as the Limian Magistrate leaned forward. “If it is agreed by both parties I will skip through the majority of the legalese and wording and only read the parts pertinent to what we will be ruling on.”

Toren nodded. “Of course.”

“Minister L'tian?” Sonla asked.

L'tian shook his head. “As you wish Magistrate Sonla.” He answered.

The Limian nodded. “There are four Items of Ruling Contention brought against the Lycavorian Union and two Action Items submitted by the KFI. Please refrain from responding to them until I am fully done with each area Minister L'tian, but it is my understanding you wish to split the different areas and that is acceptable to us. You will respond to the four Items of Contention and then we will move to the Action Items.” He spoke lifting the data pad. “Item One. The covert assistance of the United Lycavorian Union towards the Vampire High Coven in a time and state of war. The Lycavorian Union knowingly and willingly trained and supplied a number of dragons brought to them secretly by the High Coven. These dragons were to be used against Kavalian forces in combat and consequently the Union is guilty of subversive action against the KFI. The KFI therefore acted properly and lawfully in responding to these subversive actions with targeted assaults against Union forces in several different areas meant to keep these actions from occurring and happening in the future.”

“Item Two. The direct establishment and support of ongoing intelligence gathering on the KFI by members of the Drow species. The Drow species of elf within the Lycavorian Union are widely known to be used as spies. They were used in these instances against the Kavalian Federation at several strategic points within The Wilds.”

“Item Three. The direct intervention by Queen Dysea in two, very large trading contracts between the Kavalian Federation and the Folcani Registrar. In each instance she directed the Union Trade Advocate to intentionally provide false information in regards to the ability of the Kavalian Federation to supply the Folcani people with Tazli Extract. This is a key ingredient in Lyanerium Oil, which is an essential part of the Folcani society in many ways, and their actions resulted in the loss of substantial and essential revenue.”

“Item Four. The support and aide given to the defection of Athani’Puat, when Kavalian law dictated she be returned to Kavalian hands. Also the support and aide given to Jalersi’Puat and Pian’Nruarani in their defection as well as the continued support in hiding them from legal Kavalian authorities.”

Sonla looked up as he set the pad down on the massive table. “Minister L’tian... you may now respond to these Items of Contention but keep in mind we are only concerned with fact.”

L’tian got to his feet. “Oh... I intend to only deal with facts Magistrate Sonla.” L’tian said. “The facts... the Lycavorian Union has had dragons among us for more than two decades now. They have their own hierarchy or government if you wish to call it that. They are without question, extremely intelligent and independent. They have integrated deeply within Union society because of their inherent ability to bond with distinct individuals both mentally and in most cases emotionally. These duos are known as Bonded Pairs. They are not the beasts of burden that the Kavalian Federation seems to think they are. They are dear friends and family to many within the Union and we consider them to be almost sacrosanct.” L’tian moved around the front of the table. “The Vampire High Coven, in what would be the last operation they took part in against the Union nearly twenty-four years ago, stole several dozen dragon eggs and early dragonlings from a crashed Union transport. When those dragonlings and eggs began to come of age, the Coven did not have the experience or the capability to properly school these dragons. Given that it had been nearly a quarter century since any confrontation between our government and theirs they requested a meeting to perhaps discuss a Cease Fire and the schooling of these lost dragons.”

“You meaning training don’t you Minister?” Toren spoke from his seat. “Military training in how to kill my people.”

L’tian looked at him. “I mean schooling Ambassador. You have the young man who oversaw that schooling sitting right here. They were taught how to fly with a rider... how to blend with each other. They were taught things that the High Coven could not... or would not teach these young dragons. The ultimate goal of this schooling was to open their eyes to what it was they were missing. To make them see what they could be if they left the High Coven and returned to the mothers and fathers that waited for them. All of them chose to sever their ties to the High Coven, as did all of their riders. In essence they defected.”

“Minister... do you deny that the Bonded Pairs as you refer to them... do you deny that they receive intensive military training?” Kagan asked.

“I don’t deny anything.” L’tian said turning to face him. “Once a Bonded Pair has been together long enough they receive advanced skills in working together as a pair. If you wish to call this military training, that is your right.”

“So you do not deny that these High Coven dragons received military training within the Union, similar training in fact to that which Union dragons receive that would allow them to go into battle against the Kavalian Federation?” Kagan pressed.

“How can they deny it?” Kalis burst out from next to his father. “He has taken a vampire wench as one of his whores! The daughter of the outlaw Princess Yuri rides one of these beasts! His brother, the same one who attacked him yesterday for his actions, took the whore Aikiro’s daughter as his wife! She rides one of these dragons! The same vampire whores they allow into their beds! It is disgusting if you ask me!”

Andro turned his head and looked at Kalis with a lopsided grin noticing that his uncle sat there looking rather proud of his son for his outburst. “Don’t knock it until you try it cousin! Enylarcopri is a five foot two dynamo in and out of our bed! But then again... I don’t need to force myself upon any woman.”

This comment brought soft laughter from several of the Netnews reporters but almost no one within the gallery since they were all supporters of Buonau and Wiktor. Pusintin reached out and held Kalis’s arm before he could rise to his feet and retort.

“Again... if that is how you wish to categorize the training they received that is your choice.” L’tian told Kagan with a smile of his own after another moment.

“So they are a military asset?” Sonla expressed.

L’tian met his eyes. “As I said Magistrate Sonla... they receive schooling.” He spoke. “If you choose to define it as military training I can not change your mind, but it is not considered as such by anyone within the Union.”

“That is not the way it is described by the witness statement submitted by former Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos.” Sonla said. “I quote... “The training is intense and carefully laid out in a manner that would allow each Bonded Pair to conduct devastating attacks in multiple ways. Bonded Pairs accounted for nearly a third of all inflicted casualties during the Evolli War years. It is simply fact.” Sonla looked at L'tian. “Is the former Deputy Prime Minister lying sir?”

“The former Deputy Prime Minister is a liar and a traitor!” L'tian hissed. “If you wish to accept his word over mine... then why are we here?” L'tian faced the Magistrates completely. “The KFI did not approach us about their concerns! They had a trade delegation in Sparta at the same time as when the High Coven arrived on earth. They could have brought their concerns to our attention at any point after discovering this information and we would have told them what we were doing! They chose instead to assassinate the King of the Lycavorian Union and one of his Queens! They chose instead to conduct a vile terrorist act and destroyed the Union Senate Office building in Sparta in an effort to cover their act of kidnapping my daughter! This cost the lives of eight hundred and seventy-nine Union citizens, among them two hundred and forty-one children whose only crime was coming to visit their mother or father on a day set aside just for that! They chose instead to try and assassinate every member of the Leonidas family! That is fact!”

“Tell me Magistrates... how does attacking seventeen Drow outposts within The Wilds protect them? How is raping and butchering nearly three hundred Drow elves and many of those they consider family and friends protecting themselves? They can deny it all they want but we have the medical evidence to prove this!” L'tian barked.

“Evidence from your doctors I'm sure.” Toren spoke smugly from his seat.

“How does having a vicious mercenary Immortal organization capture and then attempt to break the will of another of our Queens, using more heinous means, protect them from us?” L'tian continued. “These are all facts! I'll tell you why they did not come to us! They did not come to us because they had no idea the Coven dragons were even on Earth! None! This very knowledge is something that Laustinos did not know for sure! He was not involved in this decision and could only guess! So the Kavalians acted in such a manner on a guess!”

“So you admit they were there?” Kagan spoke up now.

“We have never denied it! No one has ever come right out and asked us!” L'tian barked out. “The Kavalian government did not know this until after they conducted a malicious and violent attack against the Immortal settlement where Queen Dysea and her daughter Normya were! They had no idea where the Coven dragons were until they landed troops on Kranek and those very same dragons helped to defend against their brutal attempt to destroy a peaceful settlement!”

Andro sat and watched as his elven grandfather was beginning to get wound up. L'tian turned around to face the Kavalians at the table. “Or will the Kavalian representative deny this event ever took place?”

Toren shrugged his shoulders. “Our operations on Kranek were part of the overall plan to defend ourselves from the covert and subversive activities of the Lycavorian Union. Nothing more.”

“Of course it was.” L'tian spoke. “Nearly three thousand Akruvian people and almost a thousand Lycavorians died in that operation. They died defending themselves from a surprise attack perpetrated by Kavalian military forces!” He turned quickly to face the Magistrates once again. “Why don't you ask them what happen to the forces they sent against Kranek? Ask them why don't you? You will discover that they were destroyed by a combined force of Lycavorian, Akruvian Immortal and High Coven forces in the process of defecting! A little fact that the KFI forgot to mention!” L'tian waved his hand dismissively.

“To Item Three shall we. There were no lies used by Queen Dysea Leonidas in the matter of the trade contracts with the Folcani people. No misinformation. The simple fact... the Tazli Extract that the Kavalian Federation Imperium was attempting to sell to the Folcani was a base extract of Tazli Root. A commonly known and highly addictive substance within the Kavalian Federation. A substance also very widely used within Kavalian space. While Tazli Extract is indeed an ingredient in Lyanerium Oil, it is first processed to remove the addicting properties from it's stems. This process is done through humidifiers and vacuum sealing of the extract while it is purged of the addictive chemicals. The Folcani mass produce Lyanerium Oil and they do not have the equipment or manpower to inspect every single root. Just one root that retained its base properties would have infected entire batches of Lyanerium Oil, making the oil highly addictive to all of the Folcani people since all of them need this oil. The delicate balance of their bodies would have been irrevocably changed in such a way that they would then need this substance all of the time after prolonged use. It would have become a repulsively addictive drug to them. A detoxification program would have been hideously expensive and costly to the Folcani people in more ways than one. It would also therefore insure the Kavalian Federation was able to destabilize a wholly sovereign government within the Lycavorian Union.”

“Magistrates...” Toren snapped coming to his feet. “These are all lies!”

“Are they?” L'tian asked turning to face him. “We still have the samples provided to the Folcani people by the Kavalian Federation for that trade agreement. Would you like me to send for them so that they can be examined?”

“As if we should believe anything you put forth here today after your actions yesterday!” Toren barked. “You have already shone your willingness to impair our rightful place! You attacked an elf female you claim to still be a mother and a Queen! You attempt to take her life when she has, in her own words, declared she willingly acts of her own accord now that she is free of you and the vile influence of the Leonidas family.”

“Ambassador Toren you will return to your chair and remain silent!” Sel'ke barked out. “I will not have these proceedings dissolve into a shouting match!”

Toren kept his tongue and took a deep breath. “As... as you wish Magistrates. We will... the Kavalian people will trust to your keen judgment.”

L'tian turned quickly. “As to the last point of contention brought forth... Athani Leonidas asked for and received asylum within the Lycavorian Union. There was much discussion in regards to this as King Leonidas did not want to grant this at first. After speaking with her and seeing her love for Prince Resumar he relented. Athani is now a recognized princess of the Union and the Kavalian Federation may scream about it all they want. As to her sister Jalersi... we have no knowledge of her. We were told by the Kavalian Ambassador Matuarr that she died in the High Coven attack on the Kavalian embassy. We later saw her and several Kavalian officers attempting to defend our King and Queen during the Kavalian assassination attempts. They disappeared after these events and we have no knowledge of where they are. We are investigating however.”

“You expect us to believe that?” Pusintin snarled. “They are wanted criminals! Traitors! We want them back so that they can face justice!”

“What you want or believe Marshall Pusintin is of no concern to me.” L'tian spoke. “It is my understanding that your former mate left you for this Commander Nruarani. Earth is a very large planet and still largely unpopulated. They could be anywhere by now, if they even remain on Earth.”

Pusintin kept his mouth shut while he glared at L'tian. He turned to the Magistrates. “Let us continue!” He barked.

L'tian looked at Sel'ke. “I have no need to present further evidence Chief Magistrate.” He said. “We have done nothing wrong nor have we undermined the Kavalian Federation in any way by our actions.”

Sel'ke nodded his head. “Very well Minister... we will absorb what you have told us and accept any evidence you can present to support your claims before we rule on these points. We will move on to the Action Items now.”

L'tian returned to his chair and looked at Andro. [This is where it is going to get nasty.] He told him as he sat down.

[Yes I expect as much.] Andro answered.

[You do realize that what happens will send Buonau into a tizzy?] L'tian said.

[Good. Maybe her heart will explode. Eliani would love to see that.] Andro spoke.

[Given what has happened so far I would say our chances of a decision in our favor are very slim.]

L'tian said.

[I knew that coming in grandfather.] Andro answered. [These proceedings are a farce. It is all theater for the public. The gallery is strictly Buonau supporters, and even many of the Netnews fools waver. They are discovering more about my family from sources outside our own government and they are enthralled by it.]

[They may attempt to stop us from leaving Andro.] L'tian said.

[Let them try.] Andro said with finality.

Sonla lifted the second data pad in front of him. “We shall move on to the Action Points as they have been presented to us and they will become part of public record.” Sonla spoke. “The first Action Point concerns the child that Queen For'mya of the Elven people carries. This child is of the blood of two separate but recognized royal bloodlines and will be the son of Marshall Pusintin, formerly King Pleistarchus of Sparta, and Queen For'mya, last descent of the first Elven King. Therefore... on this child's behalf... his father and mother have petitioned this body to require that the Lycavorian Union Senate and government recognize that this child, by birthright, has a legitimate claim to the throne of the Lycavorian Union and Sparta. Marshall Pusintin is the first born son of King Leonidas and with his brother Martin now dead, Marshall Pusintin believes it is his unborn son that should be the sole recognized ruler of the Union as determined by the Union's own Laws of Ascension concerning birthright, as this son does have the blood of two royal bloodlines within him." Andro looked over at his uncle as Sonla read and saw him cross his arms smugly over his chest. Kalis met his eyes and his snarl of satisfaction was almost too much.

L'tian didn't look at Andro but spoke out to him in Mindvoice. [It is as Deia thought.] He spoke. [They are using birthright.]

Andro turned back and slowly nodded his head. [Yes.]

"Minister L'tian... does the Union wish to answer this Action Point? I can read the more tedious legal wording of Scroll Twenty-Three of your Chronicle of Lycavorian Law if you wish it." Sonla asked looking up from the pad.

"No Magistrate Sonla." L'tian spoke sending a wave of murmurs throughout the room.

"Then you recognize this claim by birthright of law?" Sonla asked shocked.

"Such as it is yes." L'tian replied. "We are a government of laws and we hold ourselves to the same standards as others. I have been authorized by Prime Minister Deia to inform this body that the Union Senate has already been notified and will be convening in four days to review this claim and decide what to do. A decision is expected within two days after they have convened."

"Six days?" Toren barked coming to his feet. "That is not acceptable to the Kavalian Federation! We demand action here! Today!"

L'tian looked at him. "Do you expect the Union government to simply accept what you have put forth without first reviewing it themselves? Would you expect the Kavalian Federation to do such a thing? I think not. The Union has over three thousand Senators and it will take four days for all of them to be able to take part in such a decision."

Toren looked at Pusintin who nodded his head with that smug smile. He turned back to Sonla. "Very well. The KFI accepts this... as long as it is publicly monitored by this body and the Netnews so that all may see and witness."

L'tian nodded and shrugged his shoulders. "That is acceptable to us."

Sonla nodded and looked at Sel'ke. "Chief Magistrate?"

Sel'ke nodded as well. "So this Galactic Body rules." He spoke. "The Lycavorian Union is directed to review the evidence and then respond to the claim six days hence adhering to their written law in this regard. Of which this body has a copy of."

"There is only one way they can rule if they value the so called laws they follow!" Toren snapped.

Sonla looked at L'tian. "May I continue on to the second Action Point?"

L'tian nodded. "Magistrate."

Sonla lifted the pad. "The Kavalian Federation Imperium submits to this Galactic Body the evidence of birthright and blood in regards to the elf female For'mya. As the sole recognized heir to elven royalty, she submits the following orders as sole Queen of the elven people. The immediate termination of any and all claim to the elven throne shown by the elf female Dysea. She has no legal status to the Elf throne and is hereby removed from her position as co-Queen effective immediately. The elf Queen For'mya subsequently orders all diplomatic ties to the Lycavorian Union henceforth severed. All trade agreements currently in place are hereby cancelled until review is possible by her Kavalian husband and mate Marshall Pusintin and the KFI Commerce Directorate. All elven citizens of Elear are ordered to return to Elear forthwith, all military ships to remove themselves from Union fleets and return forthwith to elven space, and all elven delegates to the Union are ordered to return to Elear from their respective postings on the member planets. The compliance with these orders is required and any resistance will be viewed as a subversive attempt by any and all involved. Any attempt to coerce or force elven citizens or military ships and personnel to remain within Union space by Union delegates will be viewed as a hostile act and acted upon accordingly... up to and including military action and force. This order goes into effect immediately and has been signed, sealed and authenticated by Queen For'mya herself." Sonla lowered the pad slowly and looked at L'tian.

L'tian was silent for a long moment. "I will... I will submit this directive to the Elven Parliament immediately Magistrate Sonla. A decision will be made before you return to make your ruling. Let it be known however, that the elven people will follow our Queen without any hesitation. We always have and we always will."

Sonla looked at Toren and Pusintin. "Is this acceptable to the Kavalian Federation?"

Toren nodded. "In the auspice of peace and understanding yes." He answered.

"Very well." Sonla spoke.

Sel'ke nodded. "We will adjure for two hours to review all evidence and then return to make our rulings." He spoke coming to his feet. "We are in recess."

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN

"What a nubous joke." Deia spat as the holotransmission ceased and she turned to look at the others in the room.

"Deia... they can't possibly believe such a declaration will work can they?" Anja asked as she sat in the oversized leather chair, holding the large mug of Aricia's coffee and sipping it gingerly.

She had been up most of the night with Isabella as they came to grips with the fact that Ryner was now a very intricate part of their family as well as their plans. Isabella had been far too excited to sleep as she discovered all there was to know of Ryner and his family while being able to speak with the child she carried in her womb. Dorian for the moment was speaking with a halting and childish voice in their heads, but he would soon have his own distinct voice given that he would join this world very soon. He and Ryner most wanted to know of his brother Androcles and Elynth which didn't really surprise Isabella and Anja in the least. It had been only two hours earlier when Isabella had finally been unable to remain awake and drifted in to an exhausted sleep. Ryner and Dorian were still chattering away when Anja rose and left her fellow Queen and lover to sleep while she went to shower and get something to eat. Dragon Mountain had a small but well stocked dining area for those that were permanently assigned here, and the human woman who ran it was nearing ninety years of age and spry as someone half her age. All of the food that she turned out was delicious in every way and the menu was quite extensive. She knew exactly what every member of the Leonidas family liked to eat the most and before Anja had even finished drawing herself a mug of ever present coffee; a plate of steaming pancakes and five thick slices of honey cured ham was waiting for her. Anja was always hungrier during her Phase, as most Lycavorian women were, and the ham curbed her appetite and her wolf desire for meat. Deia had joined her just after she sat down and they ate together before coming to this COM room to view the proceedings on the Netnews.

"There is no telling what they will believe." Deia answered as she went to the small table and poured herself a mug of coffee. "I've never met such arrogant or obnoxious individuals in all my life!"

"Well... that is not entirely their fault." Anja spoke up.

"Anja... you are defending them?" Deia gasped.

"Oh no... I'm just saying... because of the way they use accelerated growth on all of their children, they must indoctrinate them quickly to insure their minds expand to the full extent of their bodies within several months after reaching maturity." Anja said. "They teach them what they need and want them to know and nothing else. Among the things they teach is that Kavalians are superior to all other species. That is where their arrogance comes from."

"I don't care where it comes from... it is annoying and very telling on a sane person's patience to the extreme." Deia snapped and Anja chuckled at her reaction.

"Do you think they will wait until the Union Senate convenes before doing anything?" Anja asked. "They are going to flip when L'tian tells them of the Writ of Annulment... but will they hold off until after the Senate meets?"

Deia nodded. "Yes... for two reasons. The first one is they are trying to wage a public relations war against us. They are trying to project themselves as the victims here. If they react in an overtly negative way to what L'tian tells them about For'mya then it will be seen for what it is. A grab at power within the Union through superfluous means. Even the dullest individual will see right through their façade and then begin to question what we already know as fact. That they took For'mya against her will and forced or coerced her into something she would never have accepted to begin with.”

“And the second?” Anja asked softly.

“They fear Androcles.” Deia stated. “They fear him Anja. He is not Martin and they do not know what he will do. What he is capable of.”

Anja snorted. “Deia... we don't know what he is capable of most times and we are his family.”

Deia nodded. “Exactly. Martin... is predictable after a fashion. While we know this to not be true, in the public eyes he is politically inept. That view of him will disappear once he returns but right now that is how everyone views him. With Andro... they do not know. His record alone would give even the toughest and most experienced military man pause. He is utterly unpredictable. That is our advantage.”

“Deia... you aren't actually going to have the Union Senate vote on this fool claim are you?” Anja asked.

“I most certainly am.” She replied. “I know for a fact that it will never pass. It does not stand even a remote chance of passing. Even though every Senator, except those close to us, believe Martin to be dead they adore him Anja. They adore all of you. Not just for what you have done through the years but because of what you represent. Helen has to have told you this before. You are normal. You are just like them. People... men and women... they respond to that. They embrace that. It is the same confidence and endearment that Resumar inspired in all of us.” Deia sat down across from her. “It will also be a way for me to discover who our enemies are. If they vote for this fool notion that Pusintin could somehow claim the throne through a child knowing what they know about the bloodlines then they are fools and they are enemies.”

Anja looked at her evenly. “This... this has changed you Deia.” She said.

Deia nodded. “Yes... I know. It has opened my eyes Anja. Opened my eyes to how foolish I have been at times through the years. No longer. Everything I do going forward will be for the good of our people and what we represent.”

“Deia... you have always stood for that.” Anja said.

“Perhaps... but I have wavered at times... and that has caused pain for others I care about.” Deia said. “No more. Now tell me of what you and Bella are planning?”

“Eurin, Vana and Ceuma are putting the finishing touches on the growth hormone we will use. Martin and the others have gone dark so we sent a message via secure sub space. He should get it today when they stop to get messages and then he will contact us. I don't believe he will not trust us to do this Deia.”

“Nor do I.” Deia said.

“Once we talk with him then we'll proceed. Bella and I will be here for a few weeks but I will make appearances if you need me too.” Anja said.

“No... what I need you to do is talk to Andro when he returns.” Deia said. “He carries a great deal of anguish for what he had to do Anja and...”

“I already intend to Deia.” She spoke. “He did nothing that I would not have done. I would have cried my eyes out while I gave the order... but I would have done it.”

Deia nodded. “Good.”

“What is this I hear that Ulana was elected to take her father's seat?” Anja asked sipping her tea.

“You know her then?” Deia asked.

Anja nodded. “We know her. Pompous little upaee if you ask me. When it comes to her I think Andro was driven only by his hormones. She doesn't hold a candle to Sadi.”

Deia nodded. “I agree.”

Anja met her eyes. “You think she is a threat?”

“Then you know of her affiliations as well?” Deia asked.

“We all did.” Anja said. “That's why I say she was simply a stress reliever for Andro. She never stayed at the island estate for more than a few hours if it required spending any time with our family. Andro treated her well enough... but you know as well as I do that Sadi is and always has been the one to hold his essence.”

Deia nodded. “Yes. As for Ulana... I have a meeting with her and several other Senators who we know sympathize with her and her ideals this afternoon in regards to the committees her father was Chair of. She wants to know why she can not simply assume those roles as well. She's driven... I'll give her that.”

“We never saw her as a threat Deia.” Anja said.

“I don’t believe she is either.” Deia answered. “But I like to make sure I know all of the potential troublemakers.”

Anja nodded. “Let me know if you need any help with that.” She said with a grin.

“I wish to be here when you go forward with your plan.” Deia told her. “I have been present for the birth of every Leonidas since Androcles and I don’t intend to miss this one for anything.”

RITAAH

Resumar walked into the small observation room off of the massive bridge and saw Shiria standing near what would have been an observation window. The biomechanical nature of the bulkhead however made it appear as if she was staring at a blank wall. He stopped behind her, watching as she lifted a mug to her lips and sipped a strong herbal smelling tea.

“Val’istar?” He spoke softly.

“Your brother is far more headstrong than I had realized.” Shiria said. She turned and looked at him over the rim of the mug. “As are you young Resumar. He does not like when others question his orders or motives does he?”

Resumar shrugged. “None of us do.” He spoke. “You may say what you want about my brother Val’istar, but Androcles motives have always been laid in dragon armor. Protect his family, protect his Union, protect his Bonded Sister and protect himself. In that order.”

“I’m guessing it is a trait that you both have inherited from your father?” Shiria asked.

Resumar grinned sheepishly and shrugged his broad shoulders. “No one has ever accused my father of being weak minded and no one has ever questioned his motives.”

“I don’t imagine they have.” Shiria said.

“Perhaps now that it is just the two of us Val’istar you will tell me why you are so dead set against us taking this ship.” Resumar asked her as he moved to the empty chair and settled into it.

“I don’t... I don’t know what you mean.” Shiria said. “And enough of this Val’istar silliness when we are alone. It is ridiculous and annoying coming from you.”

“My father and mothers did not raise stupid children either Val’istar... Shiria.” He told her calmly, crossing his arms over his chest. “There is something you are not telling me.”

Shiria met his eyes and lowered her mug somewhat. “I was thirty-one years old when our leaders put me on this ship and sent me away. I knew what they were doing Resumar. It was their last ditch effort to try and save a small portion of our species. I have spent the better part of ten thousand years among those who are not like me. Not in any way, shape or form. I have had to hide who I really am all of this time. Oh... I sensed your father or someone like your father would come eventually but I have been alone. Ckooa and Poysa are so very dear to me but they are not like me and they never will be. The abilities they have I gave to them. Their ability to Mindvoice... that is something I gave to them and schooled them in. When you arrived... when I felt you and then Athani. When I felt your father and brother within you, it was as if I had recovered some small piece of my past. I do not wish to lose that again Resumar.”

“Then you must know and understand why we need to take this ship and not destroy it.” Resumar said.

“I know that whatever data the High Coven was able to take from this ship they have already begun working on to advance their own agenda.” Shiria said.

“I would not disagree with that assessment.” Resumar answered. “Which makes your anger even more confusing. You can sense me... and my father within me. You must know that no matter what he does, he would never use this ship or any part of this ship as a means to take something that did not belong to him. He would never try to subvert a people, to conquer them? You must feel this.”

Shiria nodded her head. “I do.” She said.

“Then why?” Resumar asked.

Shiria took a deep breath and moved closer to him. She reached up and place her palm on his cheek. “I would imagine that Wayonn has given your father some idea about what I fear. He would hold the same knowledge and fears that I do. Wayonn is much older than me as well... and I will admit better able to control and hide his feelings. The fear I have is not as strong as it once was... not since talking to your brother and seeing within you the mettle of your father. It is still there... but it has become more of a distant echo. No doubt Wayonn has felt the same thing, I am just more passionate it seems.”

“Passionate about what?” Resumar asked her. “A threat to us? To the Union?”

“In a manner of speaking yes.” Shiria told him.

“From who?” Resumar asked. “The Kavalians?”

Shiria chuckled. “The Kavalians? No my dear boy... the Kavalians do not hold a candle to what I am speaking of.”

“Then tell me!” Resumar demanded.

“I will.” She told him softly. “When the time is right. I do feel better since talking to your brother. I see what he is doing. What your father is doing. For whatever reason... the sense of dread inside me has eased. I do not know why... and if I talk to Wayonn I will imagine he will say the same thing. We have more important issues to deal with now. I wish to meet Helen and see Arzoal again. I wish to see your family and all those who descend from my people. And I wish... I wish...”

Resumar tilted his head to the side. “What?”

Shiria met his eyes. “I wish to discover love Resumar.” She said softly.

Resumar’s eyes grew a little wider and he rose to his feet slowly. “Shiria I... I don’t know what... I mean you are...”

Shiria laughed heartily and slapped his chest. “Not with you!” She exclaimed. “You are far too young for me and your heart belongs solely to Athani. That is so obvious even to the densest of individuals. I have seen how you look at Athani... how Dario looks at Channa. The complete devotion and love. I have never had the opportunity to experience that but I am quite sure when we do finally return to Earth and the Union I will discover a wolf such as you and your brother and father, one who has a few more years of experience though.”

Resumar grinned. “Considering your beauty Shiria I would say they will be busting down your door.”

Shiria chuckled. “We will see.” She said. She reached out and took his hand. “I find you so very easy to talk to Resumar. Athani as well. I always felt like that with her and now I know why. And you have no idea how good it feels not to have to maintain this façade of being older than I actually am.”

“Does this mean you will no longer frighten the crew?” Resumar asked with a grin.

Shiria took his arm. “Yes it does. In fact... it also means that I intend to lend whatever assistance I can in this endeavor. How soon before we leave?”

“Avi and 341 have returned power to the entire ship including weapons. We stripped the ships in orbit of every spare generator we could without compromising them for their return trip. Captain Fang and RAGE OF ACHILLES will be the only ship that remains. When the time comes it will be taken into the bay of the ship.” Resumar told her. “Pian, Jalersi, my uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa are putting the final touches on their operation to free Ckhoa’s sister and the others within the main compound. Then we will move to Rizon Four and finish helping Pride Nruarani establish the defenses there on your fortress. When that is complete we will return to Union space to insure SPARTA’S WRATH has a full crew and supplies and then we will return to begin our war.”

“You sound so certain that war will come.” Shiria said.

Resumar nodded his head slowly. “My father will never allow mother to remain with them. He will not allow her to endure any more indignities and for every one she has endured he will return that to them a hundred fold. There will be a war Shiria... and it will be unlike anything the Kavalians have ever fought. We can not stop it now. They set us on this path the moment they took our mother from us. My father knows many things he does not share with anyone Shiria. He knows what my brother and he are capable of.”

“I don’t understand.” Shiria said softly though she could feel the dread building within her.

“You will. You will. If they think they saw us at our finest during the Evolli War then they are so limited and wrong in what they think and believe.” Resumar said.

“When... when do we leave?” She asked finally.

“When my brother sends word we will launch.”

“And until then?” Shiria asked.

Resumar shrugged. “We wait.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY-THREE

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

Andro and L'tian watched as the members of the Galactic Court filed back into the room and took their seats behind the massive table. Andro leaned close to him as he noticed that the Lycavorian Magistrate and the second elven Magistrate were no longer among the group and the Folcani representative did not look happy in the least.

“Do you see who is missing grandfather?” Andro whispered.

L'tian nodded his head. “You did not expect them to rule in our favor did you Andro?” He whispered back.

“No... but I thought they might be a little more subtle in how they went about it.” Andro answered. “They haven’t been gone for the full two hours either.”

“Because their decisions have already been made.” L'tian said. “I knew that before they even left and I don’t think subtly is in the Kavalian language. I would like to know what they used to get Sel’ke on board however. Up until all this began I had always considered him an excellent Chief Magistrate.”

“People change grandfather.” Andro said.

“So it would seem.” L'tian answered. “Maintain your anger boy. At least as much as you are able. They will undoubtedly fly into a rage when we tell them about the Writ... but they will only press so far because they are trying to maintain their supposed sympathy as the victims here.”

“I know what I must do grandfather.” Andro said. “Just be prepared to leave quickly if they attempt to stop us when they are clear of the Netnews cameras. And do not be surprised if they suddenly believe themselves to be the final authority on everything. I have the feeling that Tenna Deia’s fears about them are about to come true.”

“The First Minister said as much too.” L'tian told him. “Do you honestly believe Buonau will actually attempt something?” L'tian asked.

“I would not put it past her.” Andro said. “She seems to be under the mistaken impression that the Kavalians are looking out for her best interests as well.”

L'tian nodded. “Then you noticed it as well. The way she has been consorting with the Kavalian Admiral. This Menot person?”

Andro nodded. “Eli pointed it out to me.” He spoke.

“What do you think it means?” L'tian asked.

“I think it means she has taken to doing whatever it requires for her to remain in power grandfather.” Andro answered. “Including compromising her integrity. What little of it there was to begin with?”

“Andro... Pusintin... he will not hurt her will he?” L'tian asked.

Andro shook his head. “I don’t believe so... no.” He answered softly. “If... if my brother and sister were able to do what I sensed they wished too, then mother will be at least partially aware of what is going on. With any luck grandfather, if they were able to touch her and talk with her... at least some portion of who she is... what she is inside... will come out and she will handle him.”

“That is a big question.” L'tian said.

“She is your daughter and my mother.” Andro told him. “She is a Leonidas. That alone is enough.”

“You do realize that we are not exactly in the best position if they do attempt something against us.” L'tian said now. “I do hope you have retained a bit of your devious nature and have someone waiting to assist us if we need it. I do not mind fighting, but Jomann, yourself and I will not be able to hold all of them long enough to get to your STRIKER.”

Andro looked at him with mock horror on his face. “Grandfather... you injure me with your accusations.” He said. “Eliani has corrupted you.”

L'tian couldn’t help but smile slightly. “So long as they are true.” He stated. “So long as they are true.”

They both turned back to the magistrates when Sel'ke lifted the small gavel and tapped it on the chime. The massive chamber became silent as the Netnews video drones whirled around above everyone and the reporters directed their full attention to him, as well as everyone in the gallery.

"I will now call this hearing back into order." Sel'ke spoke loudly. "We have reviewed the relevant information given to us by Minister L'tian and based on our previous evening of reviewing what Ambassador Toren and Marshall Pusintin presented to us, we have made our decisions as to what we believe should happen. Our decisions are not binding in any way... but they reflect what we all strongly feel to be our purpose since our inception. That is to decide fairly on matters of law between two or more different governments in the best interests of all involved."

"The Hadarian Free Republic has offered to give you the means of enforcing what your decisions will be Chief Magistrate." Buonau spoke up from her seat beside Menot.

Sel'ke nodded. "Yes... and it is the majority opinion of this body that in the future we will take you up on your offer Prime Minister."

L'tian looked at Andro quickly and then back to Sel'ke. "Just what does that mean exactly Chief Magistrate Sel'ke?" He asked.

"Exactly what it implies." Sel'ke said in reply. "We will accept the use of the Hadarian Elder Militia as offered by Prime Minister Buonau. They will act in our stead when it comes to decisions that we have levied forth. To insure our dictates are followed to the letter of the law. There are many recognized governments outside the Lycavorian Union and all of them have expressed an interest in our body taking a more active role in things. We have decided we will do just that."

"Forgive me Chief Magistrate... but who exactly granted you such wide ranging power?" L'tian asked him. "The Galactic Court was formed by King Leonidas as a neutral platform to hear arguments between governments and be an arbiter over disagreements. No one has granted you power to enforce any decisions you might make."

"The Kavalian Federation, The Hadarian Free Republic, The Limian Central Council and several other governments outside of the Lycavorian Union have given us this ability as I said. To better help to stabilize the Galactic civilizations." Sonla spoke now leaning forward in his chair. "With their full authority and their assurance our word and decisions will be adhered to. We will be operating as outside observers and litigators Minister L'tian and it is our hope that the entire and complete body of the Lycavorian Union government will also take part in this freely."

"And you believe them?" L'tian asked aghast.

"Your lack of faith in our abilities is most disturbing Minister L'tian." Kagan spoke up. "We will be appointing representatives to this Galactic body from every recognized government Minister."

"If that is so Magistrate Kagan where are the Lycavorian and Elven Magistrates then?" L'tian demanded.

"They chose to not participate in the reshuffling and expanding of our duties and were excused by majority vote." Kagan answered.

"You expect the Lycavorian Union to turn over the interpretation of our laws and cultures to this body?" L'tian asked in shock.

"All internal governments will maintain local control over their own laws within their borders. We will simply be the hand of justice outside established borders and we will remain the arbiter of disputes between recognized bodies of governments. It is our hope that the Union will abide by this as well... as I stated earlier." Kagan spoke smugly. "But we are not here to discuss the expansion and new duties of this Galactic body. Those will be announced in a future Netnews broadcast. We are here to render our decisions on the complaints brought forth by both the Kavalian government and the Hadarian government."

"I have already stated that we do not recognize the new Hadarian government and will not entertain any sort of communication with them in regards to their perceived wrong doing." L'tian spoke firmly. "Not until Queen Anja is restored to power as the rightful ruler, which she is."

"And this body understands that Minister." Kagan continued. "However we felt it prudent to render decisions on those complaints as well, no matter the current state of relations between you. We are simply trying to mediate a solution to conflicts that are present between your two governments. Do you wish us to continue?"

L'tian glanced at Andro quickly and then back to Kagan. [Andro... this is a surprise.] He spoke within Mindvoice.

[Yes... but not unexpected grandfather. It is just as you and Tenna Deia thought.] Andro answered keeping his face impassive for he knew he was being watched. [Only the timing is of question here. It appears that they have been acting on doing this for far longer than even we realized; before any of this even began it appears. I should have seen it with their supposed ruling concerning Lisisa. Father should have seen it.]

[This is not going to go well boy.] L'tian announced. [We did not think they would go this far or have the backing that they do.]

[I know. We must play along for now however. At least in part.] Andro said.

“Minister L'tian?” Kagan asked again.

L'tian met his eyes and nodded. “Very well Magistrate Kagan.” He spoke. “Please... you may continue.”

“Excellent.” Kagan answered. “I will address the Hadarian complaints... Minister Sonla will address the Kavalian complaints.” He lifted the data pad. “After much review of the reams of material presented and on the basis of continued peaceful coexistence between the Union and the Hadarian Free Republic it is our ruling and recommendation that appropriate compensation must be paid to the Hadarian people for the loss of life when the Jump Gates were destroyed by order of King Elect Androcles Leonidas. It is also our ruling and recommendation that the four Jump Gates be rebuilt at the expense of the Lycavorian Union using Hadarian engineers as a means to stimulate joint cooperation. A public apology from Androcles Leonidas expressing his regret at his actions and his support of the new government would also be equally appropriate.” Kagan looked up. “As for the continued matter of Retta and Calyb Leonidas our decision and equally appropriate recommendation is as follows. They are the sole heirs to the Royal Hadarian throne and given that the deceased King Leonidas has seven children in line for the Union throne before them, it is determined and recommended that they be returned to the custody of their Aunt here on Hadaria in order to be schooled and prepared to take over their duties when they come of age. Queen Anja Leonidas of the Union will of course be granted supervised visitation, as will their brothers and sisters, but they will reside here on Hadaria. We have also determined that it would be inappropriate for the Lycavorian Union to return any equipment or ships that were taken as no real proof can be presented that any of the previously mentioned material is in fact property of the Hadarian Free Republic. Currently there are three million four hundred and nineteen thousand Hadarian Healers serving within the Union military. We are ruling and recommending that all of these Healers be allowed to return here to Hadaria over the next year and make their intentions known to their families without peer pressure or influence of Union officers.” Kagan looked up at L'tian with a look of smug arrogance that L'tian wanted to rip from his face. “All other complaints from the Hadarian Free Republic have been dropped, including the still active charges of murder and sedition against the former Queen Anja. These are the rulings and the recommendations that this Galactic Body makes Minister L'tian. We do this to promote good will and continued peaceful coexistence. In order to follow through with this we have instructed our newly commissioned Elder Guards to seize all Union assets within Hadarian space as well as known assets within The Wilds. They will be held in trust until such time as the Lycavorian Union government wishes to proceed.”

L'tian stared at him for a long moment. “You do understand that I cannot respond to these decisions without first consulting the Union government and relevant individuals Magistrate Kagan? And the threat of seizure of Union property within The Wilds will not be looked upon kindly. Most of those assets are privately owned. The Union will act to protect them should the owners request it.” He spoke finally.

“Of course... but the new ruler of the Union sits beside you. Surely he can give us some idea as to what he will do. Our rulings are only in the best interests of all parties involved.” He answered.

“I have not been officially crowned yet.” Andro spoke sternly. “And I will need to speak with my advisors before making such decisions, but seizing Union property outside our borders will not be tolerated. That I can assure you.”

“So you will contest this portion?” Kagan asked.

“Militarily if need be.” Andro replied.

“This body also has a question in regards to your assuming your role as King.” Kagan asked him smoothly moving away from that topic. “Why have you not been crowned just yet sir? It has been several weeks now since the death of your father.”

“You mean the murder of my father don’t you Magistrate?” Andro snarled. “Do not try and lump the assassination and murder of my father into a general category sir. It insults me and my brothers and sisters and our people.”

“My apologies.” Kagan spoke. “Minister L'tian?”

“I will certainly address these recommendations with Queen Anja and Prime Minister Deia immediately upon our return. The Lycavorian Union does not wish any sort of conflict to happen between ourselves and the Hadarian Free Republic.” L'tian said bowing his head.

“Very well... I will release the floor to Magistrate Sonla then.” Kagan spoke.

L'tian turned and looked at Andro briefly. [I am an elf yes... but even I have limits to my patience Androcles.] He stated calmly though it was very forced. [How much longer do you intend to let these fools dictate to us?]

[We are ready grandfather.] Andro said. [I suggest we let them speak their folly for the Kavalians and then play our card. It will undoubtedly send them into turmoil and in order to maintain their ridiculous façade they will have no choice but to let it play out.]

Sonla got to his feet. “To move events along I will only cover what has not already been decided.” He spoke loudly. “The Union Senate will still convene to hear the birthright claim of Marshall Pusintin and his mate Queen of the Elves For'mya and their child?”

L'tian tried to hide the cringe when he heard that and he knew the Limian only did it to get just that reaction. He glared at the man for a few seconds but nodded his head. “That is my understanding Magistrate.” He spoke.

“Very well... then this body rules and recommends that a member of this court and of the Kavalian Federation be present within the Union Senate halls for these proceedings as they happen.” Sonla spoke. “Does the Union protest this ruling?”

L'tian looked at Andro who shook his head quickly. “No we do not Magistrate Sonla.” He answered turning back. “As long as your representatives adhere to all Lycavorian laws while they are within the limits of Sparta and the Union. And that they will have no say within the Senate proceedings.”

Sonla looked at him. “And why would we not?” He demanded.

L'tian met his eyes. “Your are no longer members of the Union by your own admission here today.” He said. “You don’t expect to retain a right to a voice within the Senate do you?”

Sonla glared at him. “Very well Minister. The Kavalians have already offered their newly established embassy for our comfort while we are there. We do ask however that the troops that currently surround the Kavalian embassy be withdrawn in a show of good faith and cooperation.”

Andro shook his head. “No.” He stated. “While there are Kavalians within those walls they will be restricted to the embassy compound.”

“And will our representatives be so restricted?” Sonla asked.

“I’m sure a limited policy can be arranged.” Andro said. “But whoever you send will not have free reign no.”

“May I ask why?” Sonla spoke.

“To be perfectly frank Magistrate... I don’t fucking trust any of you!” Andro answered bluntly. “The only reason we are still here is to show that we abide by the rule of law.” Andro snapped. “Take it or leave it.”

“As you wish sir.” Sonla stated.

“Your majesty!” Andro snarled.

“I beg your pardon?” Sonla asked.

“I will refer to you, such as you are, with your proper name and title Magistrate Sonla.” Andro told him sternly. “I expect the same in return sir. I am Crown Prince and soon to be King of the Lycavorian Union... you will refer to me as Majesty or Milord.”

“You will not...” Sonla began to retort angrily.

“Magistrate Sonla!” Sel'ke exclaimed. “We are not above our own rulings or respect. We will show the proper respect as is deemed a ruler of his people!”

Sonla blinked and nodded quickly. “Of course. Forgive me.” He stated. “May I continue now?”

L'tian nodded. “Very well.”

“In regards to the actions of the Lycavorian Union that prompted the retaliatory events of the Kavalian Federation, we hereby find that the Lycavorian Union did in fact agree to train and equipped the High Coven dragons knowing that they could and probably would be used against Kavalian forces in the future.” Sonla began. “Regardless of how the Lycavorian Union wishes to portray it, training the High Coven dragons in any way is a clear violation of the Galactic Non-Interference Act that they signed with twenty-three other recognized governments, to include the Kavalian Federation eighteen years ago.”

“Excuse me Magistrate Sonla... the KFI was not present at this event, nor did they agree to sign this treaty.” L'tian stated.

Sonla held up another data pad. “I have here the signed document with the seal of the Kavalian Prefect sir. It is my understanding that when the Kavalian government agreed to assist the Hadarian Free Republic; one of the stipulations by Prime Minister Buonau was that they agree to this treaty. They did so... and were added to the Hadarian Registry’s portion of the treaty two years and three months ago.”

“That is utter nonsense!” L'tian barked. “Adding them to the Hadarian Registry portion of the treaty after the fact does nothing! It was not made public knowledge and no one would even know unless they pressed the issue. They did not meet with the other government leaders face to face and sign this treaty!”

“That does not change the facts Minister L'tian.” Sonla spoke. “Perhaps you should have reviewed all of your treaties before agreeing to train the High Coven dragons.”

“Are you suggesting that this somehow gives the Kavalian Federation the right to do what they have done?” L'tian gasped in shock.

“It does give them precedence yes.” Sonla answered. “They were acting in self defense with their actions.”

“Forgive me... perhaps you could explain to me how it is self defense to arrange, plan and then execute an assassination of the Union King and similar attempts on every member of his family!” L'tian barked out. “Perhaps you could explain to me how it is self defense to arrange, plan, and then blow up the Senate Office Building killing nearly a thousand innocent civilians and kidnapping one of our Queens! Perhaps you...”

Sonla held up his hand. “Minister L'tian please... we do not need a reiteration of the events that transpired. The Kavalian Federation was acting in such a way as what they thought was in their best interests, nothing more. They took Queen For'mya prisoner, not realizing her condition or what would come of it upon discovering her mate had been killed. Truly... this is not a condition that any of us were aware Lycavorian females experienced. You have heard in her own words that she did this of her own free will.”

“It is not something that is openly discussed!” L'tian snarled. “It is private and...”

Andro stood up and took his grandfather’s arm. He shook his head. “It is not worth it grandfather.” He stated softly.

“We have ruled in your favor on this point Minister L'tian.” He spoke. “We recommend that the Kavalian Federation pay reparations to the Lycavorian Union for every life that was lost in their misguided actions, to include those Drow that lost their lives in The Wilds.”

“Reparations?” L'tian asked. “They committed an open act of war! They assassinated our King and you sit there treating them as if they belong here! They murdered our people! They kidnapped my daughter! As if reparations will somehow make up for that!”

“Control your emotions Minister L'tian.” Sel'ke broke in. “We all understand how very unpleasant this is for you especially. You do not approve of your daughter’s actions. I think we can all agree that this is something we understand. However... she is wolf now and has been since King Leonidas turned her. She understands her actions and obviously has accepted them if she chose Marshall Pusintin.”

L'tian met Sel'ke’s eyes. “You understand nothing!” He barked. “And my daughter did not choose that man!”

Pusintin chuckled from his chair across the room. “So I’m guessing that her purring like a kitten and begging me to fuck her harder was all an act?” He laughed.

L'tian maintained his position only by the grace of Andro’s hand on his arm and his own considerable willpower. He took a deep breath and slowly exhaled while gripping the side of the table.

OMEN THREE
THE WILDS
TWO HOURS FROM TARGET

“...So I’m guessing that her purring like a kitten and begging me to fuck her harder was all an act?”
He laughed.

“If ever I have the opportunity I will remove that putrid man’s balls and slow cook them over a fire while he watches... before I feed them back to him in tiny pieces.” Aricia growled viciously as they watched the transmission from Hadaria on the small portable holo disc.

“Only if I am the one to cut his balls off!” Dysea snarled just as angrily.

Cirith sat between them on the large couch in the lounge as they were conducting the final check of the weapons they would be taking with them. Hearing their words and for the first time in her life being able and skilled enough to sense the aura of another wolf, Cirith felt warmth cascade through her. Astonishingly, though she had never met For'mya before, she felt the same emotions surging through her for the golden haired elf Queen, she was just far better at concealing them because of her long years deep in High Coven space. Perhaps it was because she was now tied more deeply to the man and the women she had been destined for from the moment she entered this life. Tied to them in a way that made her blissfully happy and unable to really put into words the utter happiness she felt.

They were only two hours from their target, but the last seventeen hours had been the most divine of her entire life. Not only had she finally discovered what it felt like to be with a man, but a man larger than any she had ever imagined or dreamed of. A man whose powerful embrace could and did swallow her up in a cocoon of pleasure and love. She now knew why none of them could ever desire another man no matter what took place. Martin’s simple caress of her body had ignited fires that still smoldered within her. Fires that would forever burn only for him now. Yes... she was half wolf... really only one third wolf, but the last hours had brought that wolf within her surging forward with a vengeance. Now she fully understood why none of them did not question their love for For'mya or each other. The way his aura swirled around all of them was addicting. The moment he had nuzzled her behind her ear, all her attempts at trying to maintain her composure collapsed into oblivion. He had taken her with such ferocity and devotion that it stole her breath away. And even as he made her feel things she never imagined, she could feel Aricia and Dysea, equally as affected by his all consuming aura, covering any portion of her exposed body with soft butterfly kisses and nibbles of contentment. Cirith had been the center of attention for hours and even in the huge public gym, all of her inhibitions had dissolved into nothing during that first sizzling kiss. And what made it all so very enthralling is that Cirith knew it would only get better. Once they had For'mya back, once all of them were together once more, her new wolf instincts told her Martin would unleash his complete self to them. He would hold nothing back and that time together would be gloriously memorable. She knew Aricia and Dysea felt it just as well within him, and even as they too trembled at his touch, she knew they saw what would take place when For'mya was back within their embrace. And both of them quivered in anticipation.

Dysea came to her feet first, her hairstyle and attitude both changed. She had cut her hair short, barely touching her shoulders, and now it curled around her beautiful elven face in a deciding and deliciously enticing manner. Martin had been distraught when he first saw it for he loved the long hair of his mates and wives, but after the last few hours of running his hands through all their hair, Cirith doubted he would complain anymore. Dysea’s shorter hair gave him much easier access to the sensitive area behind her elven ears and this caused Dysea to be incredibly attentive in her actions with all of them.

“Come... Nauta Melme is meeting with the others.” She stated reaching first for Aricia and then her. “Let us help him put the finishing touches on our plans so that we can bring our Kinsoaurgai home to us.”

Cirith looked at them as they rose. “Is it... is it always like that?” She asked softly. “So intense and passionate and so...”

“Animalistic?” Aricia asked with a knowing smile.

Cirith appeared embarrassed. “I did not... I have never been with a man before Martin and I have nothing to compare it too.”

“Cirith... you don’t wish to...?” Dysea began to ask.

“Phraktos no Dysea!” Cirith exclaimed. “It’s just... I... I want to feel that all the time. What he did to me. To us. It was the most glorious feeling I have ever experienced and I want it to continue.”

Aricia and Dysea stepped closer to her. “Yes... it is always like that. Especially when all of us are together and we are in Phase. And we will experience it all of the time.” She said. “He is so befuddled by our auras when we are together that he does not know who to grab first. It is most amusing.”

Cirith laughed at that picture in her head as they took her hands. “You have come home Cirith Leonidas.” Dysea said softly. “You have come home to where you were always meant to be.”

Cirith nodded her head slowly. “Yes... I believe I have.”

“Martin is waiting.” Aricia said.

The three women didn’t hesitate and with several of OMEN THREE’S crew watching they made their way to the door of the lounge. A fast three minute walk and one elevator ride and they appeared in the ship’s cargo bay. Though designed for stealth and recon missions, all of the OMEN ships had room in their bays for two STRIKERS. Martin stood around the large table set up on the bay floor with Danny, T’lolt, Wayonn, Yuriko and several members of his Team. Torma, Isheeni and Iriral rested lightly on the deck taking part in the briefing as well. Martin turned when he caught their scents as the doors opened and he waited while they made their way across the bay to where he stood. The old Martin Leonidas would have simply smiled at their approach, nuzzling each of them quickly to acknowledge their presence. The new Martin would act nothing like that. He pulled all three of them to him in one large embrace and kissed each of them hard, his aura wrapping around them completely. Martin had already decided that from this day and moving forward he would no longer hold back. As he knew his son did, he would hold none of his aura back from his wives and mates, and he would love them every waking moment. The others watched as Aricia, Dysea and Cirith responded to his touch on them, soaking up the strength of his aura as their eyes closed in bliss.

As was usually the case and had been many years ago, it was Endith who broke into the moment with her humor. “Ah... excuse me... Skipper. We were talking about how to best kill these furry Kavalian bastards! Can we get back to that please?” She popped.

Martin turned back and smiled at the female elf who had flown his STRIKER for more than two decades. Endith was loyal to three things above all else. Martin, the Union and Ben and Tina in reverse order. She stood next to Tina, her long time lover and dearest friend, both of them now wives to Ben O’Connor for the least twenty-three years. Each of them had given him children, several whom were already full grown and serving in the fleet, the youngest two remaining with Ben at Dreamland.

“So we were.” He stated with a grin. He looked at his adopted daughter of over fifty decades and nodded. “Continue Yuriko.” He said.

There was always some confusion as to how Yuriko bore the name Leonidas and what her history was. Suffice to say, no one ever questioned her status, especially not since Andro, Denali and Resumar had practically destroyed a larger group of boys while they were growing up. Boys who had taken it upon themselves to berate and make fun of the “vampire whore” who was considered a sister to them. It had taken six adults to part the two groups, but not before seven of the dozen boys who had sided against the three brothers required several days in the infirmary recovering from various broken bones and other injuries. The brothers looked as if they had gone through a meat grinder as well, but they had come out victorious nonetheless. Since that day, no one had ever made the mistake of questioning how or why Yuriko was a member of the Leonidas family. They knew only that she was. Her history was wrapped in the shadows and only her family and husband knew all of it, and that is the way Yuriko wanted it.

“To catch my mothers up...” Yuriko said pointing to the images and maps spread across the large table and the holographic model of the Kavalian base. “We were talking of how we are going to breach the perimeter fence surrounding the entire base.”

Aricia, Dysea and Cirith moved closer to the table but staying within physical contact of each other and Martin. Aricia looked at the holo model of the base. “It is not a fence... it is a wall.” She stated.

Yuriko nodded. “Yes mother. A wall made up of simple granite and then reinforced with Duetronium steel braces.” She stated. “It is all that they could find on the planet and one of the purposes was to keep the base as low key as possible.”

“What’s it got inside Yuriko?” Danny asked.

They had worked together for several months all those years ago to rescue Sivana, and had joined forces several times over the course of the last years. Danny knew her Intel would be solid and as accurate as possible.

“Thermal and motion sensors from different probes have put the personnel of the base at just under two hundred.” She answered. “They...”

“Two hundred?” Wayonn asked with some shock in his voice. “We only have... we only have perhaps thirty that we can use Yuriko.” He looked at Martin. “Is this wise Martin?”

T'lolt nodded his head. “They are isolated and no doubt lax in their security measures. The base has been here for over a decade. They will not expect an attack to come.”

It was Kenny who broke the last layer of ice. “Damn straight... we got them outgunned and out manned. We is going to have so much fun! Just like the old days!”

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

“Marshall Pusintin!” Sel'ke snapped. “We do not need to have conduct such as that! It does not help the situation!”

Pusintin held his tongue and nodded slowly. “My apologies Chief Magistrate... but the elf is my mate now! There is nothing they can do about it. She chose this willingly and she has stated that very thing right here in this room. They need to get over it and let's move on.” He stated.

“I agree.” Sonla spoke. “We are only prolonging this when we argue. None of us disagree that the Kavalian actions were a bit over the top Minister L'tian... however the content of the treaty is sound and clear and therefore our ruling and recommendation remains the same.” He tapped the data pad bringing up the next item on the list he held. “It is my understanding that the Kavalian Federation has agreed to drop the second and third Points of Contention in the auspice of peace. Point Four however they will not drop. Athani'Puut, Jalersi'Puut, Karun'Puut and Pian'Nruarani are all recognized war criminals and wanted for high treason. The Kavalian Federation Imperium has put the highest priority on finding them and bringing them to justice. Therefore our ruling and recommendation is that a Kavalian detachment of Puma Bane soldiers, Prefect Keleru's personal bodyguards, be allowed to land on Earth and conduct an unhindered investigation of their whereabouts.” Sonla spoke. “They will be granted access to all of the Leonidas's homes and places of residence on Earth, as well as all but the most sensitive military bases to conduct their search. There is enough evidence to support the fact that the Union is at the very least helping these individuals in some way and to further the cause of peace, this needs to end.” Sonla looked at L'tian and Andro. “Also... to facilitate the transfer of Retta and Calyb to the custody of their Aunt, a detachment of the Galactic Court Militia will accompany the Puma Bane detachment and make the arrangements for the children.”

L'tian's eyes were wide at this. “That is an outrage!” He almost shouted. “You expect us to actually allow...”

Androcles squeezed his arm further and shook his head. He turned to look at Sonla. “In order to show that we, as a people, follow our own laws I will allow this.” He spoke. “They will however be escorted wherever they go. No matter where it is.”

Toren came to his feet. “That is not acceptable to us your honors!” He barked. “We want full and unfettered access! We are looking for criminals and we do not need an escort to do that no matter where we go.”

Andro looked at the man. “The escort is to keep your men alive moron.” Andro snarled. “Or do you think they will be completely and utterly safe walking the streets of the city where you butchered my father and not have the citizens of the Union give them no trouble.”

“Our men are capable of taking care of themselves!” Toren continued.

Andro chuckled. “Against an entire planet? All by themselves? They must be supermen then. You will do it my way or you can go kiss my ass!”

“Will you order your brother to hand over Athani'Puut?” Toren asked harshly.

“My brother will do what he will to protect his wife and mate.” Andro said in reply. “I have no intention of ordering him to hand over Athani Leonidas to you or to anyone. If they attempt to take his mate from him then they will undoubtedly die. I'm not going to help you in anyway outside of what this Court recommends.”

Andro turned to look at Sonla the inflection in his voice obvious. “Even though that is a gross misuse and completely unethical order to begin with.”

“Then why agree to it Prince Androcles?” Kagan asked.

“Because I care about my people and the Union and I will not risk war over something so trivial.” Andro said. “Enough of my people have died at the hands of these fools... I will risk no more.”

Sonla looked at Toren and Pusintin. “Will the Kavalian Federation agree to these adjusted terms?” He asked.

Toren looked at Pusintin who only nodded his head slowly while staring at Andro. “We will agree under protest.” He announced.

Sonla nodded. “Very well... now... as to the Second Action Point brought forth by the Kavalian Federation. Minister L'tian... have you had an opportunity to speak with the Elven First Minister and the ranking members of the Elven Parliament?”

L'tian nodded his head. “I have.”

“Will the elven government and its people then conform to their Queen’s orders?” Sel'ke asked.

“We are conforming to our Queen’s orders Chief Magistrate.” L'tian answered. He lifted the data pad. “Queen Dysea’s orders were very explicit.”

Sel'ke blinked several times. “Excuse me Minister L'tian... we are referring to Queen For'mya.”

L'tian walked forward and placed the data pad on the table in front of him. “You should probably review this Chief Magistrate.” He spoke. “All of you should as a matter of fact.” He turned back to look at Toren and Pusintin who was now leaning forward in his chair. “By Royal Order and Seal, signed and witnessed by the Lycavorian Union Security and Defense Council and the Elven Parliamentary Security Committee twenty-three years, three months and nineteen days ago, Queen For'mya Leonidas no longer has the authority to issue orders or directives. The moment it was realized that she had been taken prisoner, all of her authority and power reverted to her sons Arrarn and Bryon Leonidas by virtue of this very Writ of Annulment.” L'tian smiled a devious smile as he stared at the two men. “Laustinos should have dug deeper.” He snarled.

Toren came to his feet as if shot out of a gun. “The Kavalian Federation Protests this!” He screamed as L'tian returned to his chair and sat down next to Androcles as an uproar began in the gallery with the Netnews crews among those shouting questions, while the Hadarians in the gallery, mainly Buonau supporters were hurling epitaphs at the backs of Andro and L'tian.

Toren moved from the table while Pusintin remained seated, the look of anger on his face priceless to L'tian. “Magistrates... this is clearly an attempt to subvert the authority of Queen For'mya and Marshall Pusintin! This can not be allowed to stand!”

Sel'ke looked up from the pad and met L'tian’s eyes. “Minister L'tian... do you expect us to accept this document a legitimate?” He asked sternly.

L'tian stood back up. “You have no choice in the matter Chief Magistrate Sel'ke.” He spoke. “It is legitimate and I can produce each and every Elven Minister and Union Senator who signed and witnessed that document. Unless you care to declare that this Galactic Court can now overrule the dictates of individual governments then all of my daughter’s power and authority now rests with her two sons. And I can assure you, neither Arrarn or Bryon will be relinquishing that authority anytime soon.”

“She is not a prisoner by her own words in front of this body!” Toren screamed looking at him. “You heard her yourself! All of you did!”

L'tian nodded. “Yes we did. However before your Marshall Pusintin took advantage of the condition my daughter was in... she was a prisoner. She was taken from Sparta and Earth as a prisoner. It is only after you took her that you discovered what was happening within her and then took advantage of that. This order went into effect the moment your people seized her against her will, or will you now try and tell us she left her family and those she loves because of some secret affair she was having with King Leonidas’s brother? Do not take me for a fool boy...” L'tian growled at Toren. “I have been around the universe and back more times than you have years in your life!”

“Minister L'tian... you...” Sonla began to speak.

“This order was put in place shortly after my daughter became a recognized Queen of the Lycavorian Union and the Elven people. And if I am not mistaken, the Lycavorian people as a whole rejoiced on this day! Seven trillion elves across the Union rejoiced as a whole. Not even King Leonidas knew immediately of this order; he found out after it was done. It is something that For'mya and Dysea did themselves to secure the safety and future of the elven people as a whole.” L'tian snapped. “The elven people will not abide anything else! None of them will return as you say my daughter ordered! None of them will leave the Union fleet and we will certainly not throw our Lycavorian brothers and sisters to the hounds because you use this court body as your lackeys and seem to think you can acquire whatever you wish from them.”

Toren turned back to Sel'ke. “Chief Magistrate! Magistrates! You are not going to allow this to stand are you?” He gasped.

Sel'ke handed the data pad to Sonla. “What choice do we have?” He asked sternly as he glared at L'tian. “The Galactic Court, by our very Charter, can not interfere in the internal workings of any government.”

“You can overrule this order!” Toren exclaimed loudly. “Declare it null and void! This is nothing more than an attempt to block the legal orders of the elf For'mya!”

“We can not.” Sel'ke spoke turning his eyes to him. “We do not have the authority to void any internal government decision. This... this document; it is signed by over a hundred ranking members of both the Elven Parliament and the Union Senate. We do not have the authority to override their decisions.”

Toren whirled to face L'tian and Andro. “How do we know you will even adhere to what you have told us this day?” He screamed. “How do we know you will not go back on your word to this court? Will you use trickery to brush aside the claim by Marshall Pusintin and the elf For'mya in regards to the child she carries?” Toren turned back to Sel'ke. “That child has a legitimate claim to the Union throne based on his bloodline Chief Magistrate! How do we know they will honor their agreements?”

Sel'ke looked at Andro. “The Ambassador has a point Prince Androcles.” Sel'ke spoke. “Based on what you have done here... how does this body know you will honor your spoken word and our rulings?”

Andro stood up. “I will honor the claim of my uncle and the Union Senate will hear his petition in regards to the child my mother carries and...”

“She is no longer your mother!” Kalis screamed coming to his feet. “She was never your mother! You have no blood of hers within you!”

Andro turned his head to look at Kalis. “She has always been my mother and she will always remain my mother. Just as all of my mothers will. Blood is not the only thing that makes a family! Blood is not the only thing that forges a bond of parent to child.” Andro growled at him. “Unlike you cousin... I will never abandon my mother, any of my mothers, for actions she or they may or may not have committed! Willingly or otherwise. That is something you have already done with your own mother and you disgust me for that action!”

Kalis let out a roar of feral anger and flung himself across the distance at Andro. Three things happened in that instant. Andro's left arm came up and in silver/white burst of light his Shi Viska announced its presence to the entire chamber and launched from his arm. One entire wall of the Arch Ministry Chamber caved inward, granite and metal cascading down to crash to the floor, scattering Kavalian and Hadarian security forces left and right even though no piece of the falling rubble came anywhere close to them. It almost appeared as if the rubble was being directed safely to the floor by some unseen hand. As the dust spiraled outward from the wall, the distinct trumpet of three armored dragons sounded and Elynth, Anthar and Majeir smashed their way into the chamber. Screams of frightened Hadarians filled the chamber as well now as suddenly, and in impressive fashion to say the least, nearly two hundred Durcunusaan and Elite Drow soldiers under the command of Am'uur and Bren began appearing all over the chamber with their weapons out, their PSGs deactivating all at the same time. All of them wore the glimmering Dragon Armor and with the exception of the now massive hole in the side of the chamber, they began securing the doorways in to the Ministry Chamber and subduing the few Hadarian and Kavalian security troops that had been inside.

Kalis had frozen in his spot, the extended blades from the Shi Viska only millimeters from his eyes. Pusintin had moved to try and save his son, and now was equally frozen in his spot as he stared at the Shi Viska humming unnaturally in the air. There was no way with the power dampeners in place that he should have been able to call his Shi Viska Pusintin thought to himself. Andro stepped up to them quickly, his azure eyes fully changed and his fangs fully extended as Carisia and Lu'ria appeared as if out of nowhere in full armor and holding weapons next to him. Lu'ria's eyes and fangs had also changed and were brilliantly noticeable even under the near full faced helmet she wore. Carisia's cobalt blue vampire eyes were wide and her vampiric fangs were ready to rip out the throat of anyone who dared challenge her as another three trumpets from the armored dragons echoed through the chamber.

Andro leaned close to Kalis's face, his Shi Viska humming away next to his shoulder. "You and I cousin... one day we will have a reckoning. For pulsing my beloved anome with your pitiful aura, for the lewd looks you gave to her, for calling my Enylarcopri a whore and for everything else you have done to facilitate what has happened. We will have a reckoning... and I will place your head on my Nehtes and leave it for all to see. At least your brother died with honor and went down fighting. You are nothing but scum!" He hissed savagely.

"You'll die boy!" Pusintin growled at him. "You'll die for my son! You'll die for this!"

"Then we are even, for you have taken my father and countless others." Andro said. "But no one will die this day." Andro spoke turning to look at him.

"I have a thousand ships that can be here before you get off this planet!" Pusintin snapped at him. "I have hundreds of thousands men on this planet that..."

"You will call them off." Andro told him calmly.

"What? Are you crazy?" Pusintin gasped. "After what you have done?"

"I have done nothing." Andro spoke. "Not yet." He looked at his Shi Viska next to his shoulder. "Did you honestly believe your power dampeners could keep me from calling my Shi Viska Uncle? That may work with the majority of Lycavorians... but not with me. I am my father's son and you know nothing of me or what I am capable of. You will call off your men and ships now."

"Why should I?" Pusintin snapped.

"If you do not... you will die here. Your son will die here. Everyone in this chamber will die here. I am not afraid to die uncle. I will gladly die for my mother. For my people, from the common and honored citizen who operate their shops daily to the men and women who help to shape our laws and future. Unlike you Uncle, you who deserted your people when they needed you most, I will never abandon my people." Andro spoke. "But nothing you hope to gain will bear fruit and only war will follow if you do not call off your ships and men." Though Pusintin and Kalis didn't take notice, Andro certainly did. The Netnews team with far more courage than brains was only six meters away filming everything and sending it out live over the Netnews.

"We could squash you boy!" Pusintin barked at him.

Andro smiled... a vicious smile considering his dual fangs were fully extended and not at all pleasant to look at. "Perhaps you could... but you will not be alive to witness it." Androcles moved closer. "I do not wish war... but if you do not call off your forces moving here then that is what we will have and your dreams of ruling the Union will fade into the memory of your foul life. Or do you wish the entire universe to know that you do not truly wish for peace... only domination. Only control of all of them." Andro's eyes darted to the left and back again and he saw Pusintin finally take notice of the Netnews crew recording it all.

"How do... how do I know you will keep your word?" Pusintin stammered.

"Unlike you Uncle... my father taught his sons honor." Andro answered. "I will be more than happy to allow the people of the Union to make the decision on whether you should rule. And do not think me and them so stupid as to not know who will rule in place of any child you have with my mother. It is you who will rule Uncle. I know that. Any common person will know that. It will be up to them to decide on what they want. You can send your advisors or lackeys; as many as you like. They can witness the rule of law as it should be. By the will of the people." Andro leaned closer. "Make your decision quickly Uncle, for I grow tired of your foul smell and the stink of your son and my Shi Viska yearns for blood."

"Menot!" Pusintin barked, turning his head slowly to see Menot standing three meters away, his weapon in his hand and surrounded by three Drow warriors looking ever ready to end his life. "Stand them down!"

"Marshall... the call has gone out!" Menot shouted. "Our men will be here in moments!"

"Stand them down damn it!" Pusintin snarled. "There will... there will be no battle here today! We must show the universe that... that we are followers of laws as well!"

Andro smiled knowing that the Netnews crew recorded that. He was also smart enough to know that no one would believe him in the least. Andro turned his head and saw Menot reach for the COM unit on his belt, the three Drow moving even closer and shoving their weapons into his face. He nodded to Lu'ria. "Ori'gato ukta belbau l'quarth ussta ilythiiri tessai." He told her in the ancient vampire and Drow language. (Let him give the order my Drow Blossom.)

"Ori'gato ukta lar." Lu'ria ordered the Drow instantly. (Let him make the call.)

Andro turned back to his uncle and lifted his left arm until it was just underneath the Shi Viska. Almost immediately it lowered to reattach itself to the bridle on his arm and then it simply vanished into Flatspace. Andro stepped back from Pusintin and Kalis, suddenly noticing that the chamber had become quiet and almost everyone was looking in their direction. No one moved as Elynth maneuvered her armored body up behind her Bonded Brother and lowered her snout to touch his shoulder. Andro reached up with that left hand and pressed it flat to the armor on her muzzle.

Andro? She spoke softly.

“We will be leaving now sister.” He spoke looking up at her golden eyes. He turned his head and watched Sel’ke and the other Magistrates climb to their feet as the Durcunusaan and the Drow stepped back from them slightly, prepared for any trickery. “The Lycavorian Union will honor the agreement we have made here today Chief Magistrate. Send your people and you will see. But never think that your fool dictates will begin to govern my people. You are not what my father meant for you to be when he formed your body and your actions this day only prove to all that you wish for more than what is due you. The people of the Union will decide any expectations my uncle or any child of his will have in determining the path they will follow into the future. Not you and the others on your fraudulent body and most certainly NOT the Kavalian Federation.”

Sel’ke managed to move forward and glare at him from five meters away. “This action will not be forgotten Prince Androcles!” He growled. “You will not embarrass this body by doing this! It is an affront to all we represent! You will pay for this action today!”

“You represent nothing as far as I am concerned.” Andro snarled back. “And remember this Chief Magistrate... I am not my father and I did not endorse the Galactic Court once you came into being. You have already shown that you can be influenced by outside forces by dismissing the evidence presented by my grandfather. Know this now... no one will take Retta and Calyb from their family! Our family! No one! The ones who try will die as they did before! You hold no sway over me Chief Magistrate... and I will allow the other things spoken of today for that is for our people to decide... but my siblings are not pieces of meat to be bartered for by others.” He glanced at Buonau before turning back to Sel’ke. “Any attempt to take them by the Hadarians or your ridiculous Galactic Court Militia as you call them now... and I will come for you and every member of your body as well as that sick perverted upae Buonau! And you will die by my hand! You should remember that as you go forward today.”

“Is that a threat?” Sel’ke almost shouted.

Androcles smiled. “That is a promise.” He answered. “And I always keep my promises Chief Magistrate. Ask the Icalro Alliance if you have any question as to that.” He lifted his right wrist. “KertaGai?” He spoke into the COM.

“We are here Saradasaar.” Sadi’s voice replied and it was easy enough to tell she was within a ship of some sort.

“Combat landing outside the new entrance to this building if you would KertaGai.” He told her. “Our business here is done and we will be going home.”

“Thirty seconds.” Sadi replied.

Andro looked back at his uncle. “Our people have left the Lycavorian Embassy. I will not leave them to suffer upon this planet.” He dropped the data pad to the floor at his uncle’s feet. “That is the channel for my grandfather Panos. He is Deputy Prime Minister now and he knows you well Uncle. Contact his office when you are ready to send your people. Just don’t wait until too long. My mother may be your mate now Uncle, it is a pity I failed in my task of killing her, but she will never love you! And knowing what she does now... she will never submit to you again.”

“Then she will die!” Pusintin snarled.

“She will die with honor and pride then... her betrayal forgotten and forgiven as if it never existed. Yours will never be forgotten or forgiven Uncle.” Andro answered. He looked at Sel’ke. “As I said... we will honor the agreements made today.” He turned back to Pusintin and Kalis.

It happened without warning and Kalis’s legs buckled underneath him when Andro’s forehead smashed into his face, crushing his nose and sending blood showering across his face. He cried out in savage pain and dropped to his knees holding his hands over his misshapen nose as Andro drew back, several drops of blood on his cheeks.

“That is for pulsing my anome and calling my Enylarcopri a whore dear cousin Kalis!” Andro snarled at him. “Both of them are superior to you and always will be. In every way. Our day will come cousin... our day will come.” Andro stepped back. “Grandfather... follow Majeir and Anthar out with the Durcunusaan!”

“Andro...” L'tian began.

“No... we are leaving and you will go first. I don't trust the fools in this room to not attempt something stupid.” He replied. “Just in case.” They heard the roar and throaty whine of the STRIKER Mark II landing outside and Anthar moved up close to L'tian as he began to make his way to the opening in the wall. Majeir followed close behind, her eyes sweeping the crowd for any threats that she could burn.

“Andro... let's go!” Carisia prodded as she took his arm.

“This isn't over boy!” Pusintin hissed.

Andro nodded. “Of that I have no doubt.” He answered. “I do have one question though Uncle. There is an old Earth expression Uncle... Death rides a pale horse. How does it feel to be a walking around dead man?”

Pusintin chuckled. “Do I look dead to you boy?” He laughed.

Andro grinned. “Oh... you are a dead man Uncle.” Andro spoke. “The only difference I see is that you are a walking around dead man, for death's pale horse has not come for you just yet. He will Uncle. He has marked you and he will come for you, so you are already a dead man. It just hasn't caught up with your body and your brain yet.”

“We'll see boy!” Pusintin snarled. “We'll see.”

“No... I won't see it.” Androcles answered him. “I am not the mechanism of your death Uncle. No... the instrument of your death is something far more devastating and pitiless. And that death was decided and set in motion the moment you laid your polluted hands upon my mother and took her dignity from her by making her your mate against her will.” Andro allowed Carisia and Lu'ria to begin to pull him away. “Enjoy the life you have left to you Uncle, for your death will be far more horrific than anything you could possibly imagine.”

Pusintin was silent as he watched Andro turn and follow the others out of the gaping hole in the side of the building, including the Netnews crew that had recorded everything. The two human men moved quickly to keep up with the soldiers and dragons, following them the short hundred meters to where the STRIKER Mark II was idling at full power, its ramp down. As they moved to climb the ramp, Bren's hand forcefully thumped into the chest of the reporter.

“Where do you think you are going?” He growled. “Back up away from us!”

“Wait!” The Netnews reporter pleaded. “We got it all! We recorded all of it! If you leave us here they'll kill us or throw us in prison! You have to take us!”

“We don't have to do anything Netnews scum!” Bren growled. “Be gone from here or be incinerated by our engines... I don't care which!”

“NO!” The man shouted. “Please! Prince Androcles! Prince Androcles!” He saw Andro turn from where he was moving up the ramp between Carisia and Lu'ria and lay those eyes upon him. “Please Milord... we... they will kill us!”

Andro whispered something to Carisia and Lu'ria and they continued up the ramp. He moved down to stand next to Bren. “What is it you wish?” He asked.

“You saw us Milord.” The man pleaded. “If you leave us here the Kavalians will kill us for what we recorded.”

“Why do you care what the Kavalians are doing?” Andro asked him. “You are Netnews scum. Why did you come here... you would be happy to see my family fall, just as you were my father!”

The man stepped closer to Andro his own eyes ablaze with anger. “My mother worked in the Senate Building!” He screamed at the Prince of the Union. “My wife's brother worked in that building! I volunteered to come here because I want them to pay for what they have done!”

Andro stared at him for a long few seconds and then held out his hand for the man. “Then come quickly. We need to leave fast before the Kavalians change their minds. There is no telling what they may decide to do.”

Bren reached out and helped the camera drone operator onto the ramp just as it began to rise to close. Whatever else would happen in the future, this day in history would mark the unheralded arrival of Androcles Leonidas onto the Galactic scene in a way that would never be repeated again.

Which would be a good thing in most historians remarks in the future.

KAVALIAN FLAGSHIP
PRIDE OF PUMAS

“...as if it never existed.” Andro’s voice filled her being and For'mya reached out to touch the monitor.

“Androcles.” For'mya whispered softly, easily catching the inflection of his deep voice in those words because she was no longer sunken in despair and hopelessness. That had ceased the moment her beautiful children had spoken to her from within. “My beautiful son.”

You see mother! Eirene broke into her thoughts. Do you see?

For'mya nodded her head slowly as the tears fell and her hands dropped to her swollen abdomen. “Yes.” She whispered again.

Our brother will never forsake you! Fedor called out. Forsake us! Our family would never do such a thing mother! We must... we must remain strong. We have to endure this to stay alive and be with them.

Yes. Strong. They will come for us. Eirene said. The father of our hearts will come for us. For you mother. For you. Now we need to make sure that this man... this Kavalian is actually a friend to us.

“Yes.” For'mya spoke softly.

For'mya turned when she smelled Muton come back into the main infirmary from the side room. He was fumbling with some sort of instrument and he looked up at her as he began to talk. “I think this should do what you ask but I don’t know what it is I’m supposed to be looking for. It...” He stopped when he saw her tears and moved closer. “What is wrong?” He asked.

For'mya knew she could not defeat a fully grown Kavalian in her condition. Had she not been pregnant and had this inhibitor not been blocking her Mindvoice abilities somehow, Muton would not have stood a real chance against her. Times were different now and For'mya had to act differently to compensate in other ways for her deficiencies at the moment.

“Muton... I need... I need to know something.” For'mya asked him.

He stepped right up to her. “What is wrong?” He asked with a touch of worry in his voice. “The children?”

“I need you to prove to me that I can trust you.” For'mya said. “That you are who you say you are.”

“For'mya... I have already told you.” Muton said quickly. “There is no way I can help you to escape without jeopardizing all I am trying to protect. If I help you they will begin to investigate my past and sooner or later they will discover that I am not who I say I am. That I protect others who they consider a threat. I’m sorry but...”

“I need you to answer a question.” For'mya interrupted him.

“A question?” Muton asked her. “What question?”

“A question that only you will know the answer to.” For'mya told him softly. “A question that would have been passed down to you through your memories if what you have told me is true.”

“Saving your life and the life of your children isn’t enough proof?” Muton asked her. “I told you what Pusintin will do if he discovers you are carrying twins.”

For'mya stepped closer to him. “Yes... you did.” She stated. “And given his tactics in the past concerning me... it is also very likely he would place you in a position to help me just as you have. To gain my confidence and trust.”

Muton stepped back from her and placed the instrument he had been holding on the bed next to him. He crossed his arms over his broad chest, the fur on his face hiding any real display or expression of emotion that For'mya could read. He nodded his head slowly. “I suppose I owe you that.” He stated. “And I understand it. You could just have easily asked me yesterday while we were talking.”

For'mya shook her head. “Things have... things have changed since yesterday.” She stated.

“Changed how?” Muton asked.

“I will tell you... but first my question to you.” For'mya spoke.

Muton exhaled heavily. “Very well.” He said with some exasperation.

For'mya took a deep breath then. "If you are who you say you are... and you have the memories of all those that came before you... I need you to tell me how Arzoal died. I need you to tell me how she died."

"Why do you need to know this For'mya?" Muton asked. "I could tell you anything and you would not know the truth."

For'mya shook her head. "But I would Muton." She told him. "I would know the truth."

"How?" Muton demanded.

"Answer my question and I will tell you everything." For'mya answered.

Muton turned away from her and sighed heavily. "This information... it is one of the darkest moments of time in my ancestors history For'mya." He said. "There are only seven of us left who have this knowledge... not including Arzoal. It is guarded and taboo to even speak of it. How could you possibly know what I tell you will be the truth?" He asked again turning back to face her.

"I have this knowledge now." For'mya said. "And I will share with you how if you will only answer the question."

"A blade was thrust into her chest and it nicked her heart." Muton answered slowly. "She was killed by another Pralor... a man whose name was stricken from our history because of what he had done. His name was..."

"Artre." For'mya said softly.

Muton perked up immediately and he stepped closer to her. "How do you know that?" He almost shouted. "How..."

"Finish answering my question." For'mya told him calmly. "How do you know what Arzoal did?"

"Because my great grandmother is the one who found her body!" Muton snarled. "She was the one who discovered her body and realized what Arzoal had done by transferring her consciousness into the egg of a dragon! No one even knows if she still lives!" He reached out and gripped her arms as For'mya's eyes closed and relief washed through her. "Now tell me... how do you know this?" He demanded.

For'mya's dark eyes opened again and she reached up to take his fur covered hands in hers. Gently she lowered them and laid them flat on her abdomen. "They told me." She said softly.

Muton almost drew his hands away as if shocked with electricity. To touch her in such a way was not something he would do. He needed For'mya's help and her ordeal had torn at his heart. He needed her to trust him. "For'mya what...?"

For'mya held his wrists with surprising strength, keeping his large palms on her abdomen. "Fedor... Eirene... say hello to Muton."

Muton's eyes grew wide in disbelief when he felt the two very prominent kicks from within her womb and then he did draw his hands away like he had been burned. He looked up at her face and saw a brightness in her eyes that had not been there yesterday. A brightness that was allowing her intelligence and determination to shine through. "What...?"

For'mya smiled at him. "My... my children Muton." She said. "I... I am speaking with them even now. I can hear their voices in my head and I can speak with them."

Muton stared at her wide eyed. "For'mya I am Kavalian." He told her. "I do not have the ability to Mindvoice! I..."

"You are the blood descendant of Pralors Muton." For'mya told him. "Only a Pralor with intimate knowledge of their ways and their past could tell me what you have told me these last hours."

"How do you know I am telling you the truth?" Muton asked her.

"My children told me." For'mya said.

"For'mya, it's not that I don't believe you think this, but how exactly would your children be able to tell you this?" Muton spoke. "They have not even been born yet. How..." He stopped talking and stared at her his eyes growing wider by the second.

For'mya nodded slowly as she saw the light of recognition flood his features. "Yes... yes Muton. You... you said it yourself. You did not think Androcles could be sloppy. He wasn't Muton. He isn't. He did exactly what he wanted to do. He touched my children when he bit me. He granted them awareness."

"For'mya... that is not possible." Muton spoke. "That... how? Androcles...!"

"Androcles was born fully aware Muton." For'mya explained. "It is not something that many outside our family know, but he bonded with Elynth while still within Aricia's womb. We have never been able to understand why this happened; only that it had something to do with the emotional state of Martin and Aricia when he was conceived. He was only six months along then and he became fully aware of all around him. His parents memories, his Bonded sister's memories and her... her grandmother's memories. At least to some extent." She told him.

Muton gazed at her. "Are you saying... are you saying that the dragon beast Androcles is bound to is Arzoal's granddaughter?"

For'mya nodded her head quickly. "Arzoal lives Muton. You have held to the belief that she lives by the tenor of your words and how you choose to speak them. You know this within you. Almost all of our children are bonded to her grandchildren. Muton... I am bound to one of her grandchildren. Aurith is my Bonded sister! How do you not know these things?"

Muton shook his head and turned from her. "The last memories my great-grandmother had of her were when they left Elear and set out across the stars with many dragons to find a new world. She had been made the Dragon Elder Mother by then but she never saw her again after that." Muton turned back to her. "The surviving Pralors all thought she had died in the ensuing years, especially after we heard of the war on the planet she took the remaining dragons too. I only... I only assumed she still lived because of the tenacity of dragons and her own indomitable will to survive. You know of the Kavalian fear of dragons, aside from Pusintin's fool attempt to gain control of Lisisa Leonidas's dragon, no one among the Kavalians studies them. All we know is that they have some sort of caste system and that they are intelligent. Not the mindless beasts Keleru and Pusintin believe them to be. Arzoal... she does still live then?" He gasped.

For'mya nodded her head. "Yes. She is the Dragon Elder Mother still. The senior and most powerful of the dragons."

"For'mya... how do your unborn children know what I have told you is the truth?" Muton asked her.

"I do not know all of it... even they do not." For'mya said. "When Andro touched them... he passed memories to them. He awakened their minds. Among these memories was a time recently when he spoke with Arzoal and she told him these things. Andro was not able to fully complete the process because of Arrarn's reaction but he gave them enough to wake them. He has spoken to them Muton."

Muton's eyes grew wide. "Spoken to them? How?"

"Within Mindvoice. Very early this morning." For'mya answered. "They in turn touched me from within. I can... I can hear them in my mind but I can't speak with them with my mind because of something Pusintin has implanted into me. An inhibitor of some sort. It is why I can not feel any of them and it is why I thought they had... why I thought they had forsaken me." For'mya reached out and took his hands. "Help me Muton." She said. "Help me and I will help you."

"Helping you to escape would be a death sentence for both of us and all I am trying to protect For'mya. I have told you this!" Muton exclaimed. "I must find a way to fulfill my word to them because I am running out of time!"

"And what are you protecting Muton?" She asked. "You may be Kavalian but you are not like the others. You are nothing like them or you would never have helped me to begin with. Why are you running out of time? What do you protect? Please... speak to me Muton!"

"For'mya... I have Pralor blood within me." He told her urgently. "Unlike the elves and Lycavorians and vampires, Kavalians can live for many thousands of years but they are not immortal. I am over eleven thousand years old For'mya! I have nearly reached the end of the life expectancy of a Kavalian. Hell... I have gone beyond it! Many think me a wonder because I have lived this long! And they do not know I will live for far longer! Soon that wonder will turn to suspicion and then everything will fall apart. You know as well as I how Kavalians deal with suspicion."

"What aren't you telling me Muton?" For'mya asked.

He met her eyes evenly. "There are thirteen like me For'mya." He told her. "We are Kavalians with Pralor blood, with Pralor memories and skills... minus the ability to Mindvoice of course because that is not something that Kavalians can naturally do. Pralor Warriors if you will. We are spread across the Kavalian empire and we have only two goals. To protect those like us and to find a way to help our people."

"Kavalians?" For'mya asked.

Muton shook his head. "We may be Kavalian... but they are not our people." He told her turning away to look out the view window. "It is complicated For'mya, but it is one of the main reasons I have gently prodded Pusintin to try and obtain Hadarian assistance through the years. Of all of us, I have obtained the most senior position within the Kavalian system and the others defer to me.”

“Why... why would you need Hadarian help?” For'mya asked. “You know very well what would happen if Hadarian Healers came into Kavalian space. The majority of them are female. They would be brutalized, possibly raped and beaten! Melyanna was right in always refusing them.” For'mya stared at his broad back for only a moment before reaching for his arm and taking it. “Muton look at me!” For'mya gasped waiting until his gaze turned to her. “I have been taken from my family! The man I loved has been... he was killed before my eyes! We who rely so much on Mindvoice... not being able to feel them... it is like an emptiness that can not be filled! You see what Pusintin has done to me... forced himself upon me! But the life he has created within me... I will not allow him to use that life as a tool! They are my children! Help me! Help me and I will help you! Tell me who you are protecting!”

Muton turned slowly and looked at her. “I am protecting two thousand men, women and children For'mya. Descendants of Pralors just like me. We are Kavalian yes, but we follow the call of our Pralor blood. Keleru thought us some religious cult millennia ago and he tried to wipe us out. We survived however, and our numbers have grown through the years. My great-grandmother was among those pure Pralors who discovered a new world for themselves and the dragons when they left Elear as I told you. I don't know how it happened, but hundreds of other Pralors ended up there as well. Her memories are vague as to why, but I believe they were refugees of some sort. They planet they were on is well hidden within a binary star cluster and they were safe from whatever caused the others to flee. I don't know what that was for she did not know. Years after these other Pralors arrived they made the decision to send a hand picked group of volunteers back here into the Alpha Quadrant. Part of their mission was to discover what had become of Arzoal and the other dragons, as well as try and make contact with the descendants of Sumar but the other part was to be placed among the Kavalian people. My grandmother and others felt guilt for what they had done, abandoning them on Cabelir so long ago and they wanted to try and make amends. She was among those who was on the mission. When they arrived on Cabelir they saw how it was, the violence and treatment of others that the Kavalian people had acquired. Those who came with her remained in hiding and made the decision to become part of the Kavalian people just as they realized Sumar had done with the Lycavorian people. They thought they could do the same. Only my grandmother and others did not bestow all of their abilities to their children. They refused to allow them to learn to Mindvoice and that is why none of us have this ability. My grandmother and others considered it too risky given their violent nature.” Muton moved away from her to the view window.

“My grandmother was among those that Keleru had executed millennia ago.” He spoke softly. “My mother and father among them. I alone escaped. I was twenty-seven years old then For'mya. In my last conversation with her I told her that our interference, Pralor interference, in the natural evolution of nature and events was the cause for many of the woes in our history, no matter that we tried to do what was best and good for everyone.” He turned back around to face her. “She only nodded her head and told me it was up to me and others to try and change that. I have spent the last ten thousand years trying to do just that by my actions. Small at first... then as I rose within the ranks of the Kavalians more. I had to act as they do, talk as they do, even though it wounds my heart to do so. I had to wait nearly seven thousand years before I found a wife who would not think me suspicious or odd and turn me into Keleru's Puma Bane thugs. She was one of the first that Keleru and his sick scientists tried to alter with biogenic treatments, and while it worked, she was considered an outcast by her Pride. Tossed aside like so much garbage. I took her as my wife and now she and my three sons are what I live for. Those like me are what we all live for. To do anything that would put them at risk...” He shook his head. “I'm sorry... I can not. The one hope we had was to find the ship your son now controls and use it to return to our true people.”

“You... you knew its location?” She gasped.

Muton shook his head slowly. “No. We suspected it existed... just as we suspected the old woman Demahra was not what she wanted everyone to believe. Now that opportunity is lost to us. I must find another way now and quickly... before they realized I am not what they think I am.”

For'mya stepped closer to him. “Muton... Resumar is not going to destroy the ship.” She said.

Muton looked at her with wide eyes. “What? Why else would he go there? Your... your true mate would never have allowed the High Coven or the Kavalian Empire to discover that ship! Why...”

“As you no doubt know from experience... our children do not always do what we ask of them.” For'mya said. “Trust me when I say, Androcles, Resumar and his brother Denali are the worse offenders in that regard. Some of the images Andro passed to Eirene and Fedor were from Resumar and this ship. He is not going to destroy it. I... I do not know what he intends... but he will not destroy it as his father wants.”

Muton's eyes grew even larger and he reached up and gripped her arms. “As his father wants?” He hissed.

For'mya stammered for a moment. “I... I misspoke... I... I just miss him and...”

“You did not misspeak!” Muton exclaimed. “I have seen you on the Netnews giving words to others. You do not misspeak! You are too intelligent... too refined for that! None of your fellow Queens and lovers ever misspeak! Are you telling me; of course! It has to be! That is why the brightness has returned to your eyes! Part of it may be your children as you say, but he lives doesn't he? He lives!” For'mya remained silent and Muton squeezed her arms. “Tell me For'mya. If you are to ever trust me... as I have trusted you with my past... if we are ever to truly trust one another you must tell me! Does Martin Leonidas still live?”

One word would seal her fate she knew. One word would either condemn her or give her hope for herself and for her unborn children.

Never fear the unknown mother. Eirene and Fedor's voices echoed in unison within the corridors of her mind.

You may not be able to Mindvoice yet again mother... but your skills remain. Eirene spoke. Use them now. It is why our brothers and sisters, the mothers of our hearts, it is why the father of our hearts has such love and faith in you.

You are still you mother. Fedor spoke now. You are still you.

Of course she is Fedor. Eirene exclaimed. That is so silly to say!

It is not silly!

For'mya couldn't help but chuckle at their exchange for they sounded so much like Andro and Eliani and the others as they grew and she saw the befuddled look on Muton's face. She placed her hands on his arms gently and nodded.

“Yes Muton.” She said in a whisper. “He still lives.”

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN

“... Hasn't left her side since it happened.” Anja spoke softly as she sat next to Helen at the table. Deia had arrived from Sparta and now sat with them along with Gorgo, Panos and Eurin. Anja grinned at something she remembered. “I tripped over Ryner's tail when I woke to leave this morning. Our bedroom was not made for a dragon to be sleeping beside the bed I tell you.”

“How is she holding up?” Helen asked. “The melding can be taxing for her. I know it was for Aricia. At least until it was nearly complete.”

Anja nodded. “Exhaustion claimed her finally.” She said. “I don't think she lost contact with Ryner in any way since it started. She just couldn't keep her eyes open any longer. She was sharing everything with them wasn't she Helen?”

Helen nodded. “To some extent.” She answered. “Though as with Aricia... I believe there will be some things they do not share with her. Just as Andro and Elynth did not share all that they were with her.” She turned to look at Deia. “Androcles is headed home?” She asked.

Deia nodded slowly. “Yes. The SCIMITAR and her escorts should be passing the Union blockade within the next few minutes and they will be clear of Hadarian space. Every Netnews channel in existence is playing what happened over and over.” She stated.

Anja looked at her. “What happen Deia?”

Deia smiled brightly. “It would be easier for you to watch it.” She explained. “Let's just say that Androcles, whether he knows it or not, has just endeared himself to a vast majority of the citizens of the Union.”

Helen nodded. "Yes... but he also has made many enemies as well with his actions." She looked at Deia. "Was it also within Resumar's blood to anger so many at one time?" She asked in an exasperated tone.

Deia chuckled. "I'm afraid so... yes." She answered.

"Well then he should be proud of his grandsons... for they follow his footsteps exactly." Helen barked sarcastically.

"He didn't kill anyone did he?" Anja asked.

"Worse!" Helen exclaimed. "He made them all look the fool! I swear... there are times when he and his father make more enemies with their words than they do with their actions! They do not know when to shut up!"

Deia nodded. "That was Resumar." She said.

Helen shook her head again. "Andro will sense Dorian and Ryner the moment he gets within Earth's system." She stated. "It is from Andro and Elynth that they will learn the most for they are the only ones to ever experience it fully."

Panos leaned forward. "Helen... is he stretching himself too thin?" He asked. "Taking on too much?"

Helen met his eyes. "He is his father's son and as long as I have known Martin he does nothing different. He will hold his family together no matter the costs to him... if even by force of his will alone." Helen looked at each of them. "He is a leader my friends... and like his father he does not even begin to grasp the loyalty he commands. We must let him lead now... guide him when we can... but we must let him lead just as we do for Martin. He will come here first when he returns... the draw to Dorian and Ryner will be too strong to deny."

Gorgo nodded. "Then we shall remain here for the time being. Retta has been begging to see him for days and she witnessed what he said this morning Anja. Calyb, Nara, Deion and Bryon want to see him as well."

"They will ask about For'mya." Anja said.

Gorgo nodded. "Yes... and I think we should let Androcles tell them what they wish to know."

"Gorgo that..."

"Do you doubt Martin will retrieve her? That his love for her will diminish in any way because of what has happened? Will your love for her diminish? Aricia's? Dysea's?" Gorgo asked.

Anja shook her head. "Never."

"She carries twins now Anja. Life that was forced upon her yes, but life that she will now die to protect. Will you or the others treat them any different?" Gorgo asked.

"No!" Anja hissed without hesitation her jade green eyes flaring wide. "Martin... Marty already considers them his children. As do we."

"Then allow Androcles to tell their brothers and sisters of them." Gorgo spoke. "He has touched them. Spoken with them. He is the best conduit for them now and if we are to pull any happiness from this hideous event let it begin with them."

Eurin decided it was time to change the subject and she lowered her mug of tea. "We have the room all set for the procedure." She spoke now. "Sivana and Ceuma are going over the last bits of information as well as the scan they were able to obtain of Isabella just before she retired to your quarters."

"For political purposes I suggest we leave out that this procedure is almost the exact same one that the Kavalians use." Deia said.

"Actually... it is more like the original procedure that High Coven scientists invented to speed up their clone growth Deia." Eurin answered. "We have taken the best from both clone processes and that is what we will use. It is more High Coven in its origin however."

Deia shrugged. "That is at least more palatable than the alternative." She said. "And it will not raise many eyebrows because of the vampires that call the Union home."

"You can explain that it is a process that AEC has developed and refined to increase the survival rate of this disease." Eurin said. "The only side effect is the accelerated growth process that takes place."

Deia nodded. "Interesting idea. Thank you Eurin. Panos and I will handle the Netnews releases for that... but only after it has taken place and Dorian is at least somewhat grown. I will not allow this to turn into a circus and affect our family. We have too much happening as it is." She turned to Anja. "Martin knows?"

Anja nodded. “Bella and I spoke with him just before they left OMEN THREE to go to their target.” She answered. “They should be hitting the Kavalian compound in about an hour. Bella could barely speak through her tears but he took it very well considering.”

“What did he say Anja?” Gorgo asked softly.

Anja met her eyes and smiled warmly. “He said... ‘Our lives are not just a job Bella, they are a fucking adventure. And I wouldn’t have it any other way. Tell Dorian I love him and I will see him soon no matter how big he is.’... End quote.”

Deia shook her head. “Nothing fazes that man.” She said. “Nothing. It’s utterly amazing.”

“This operation they are conducting Anja?” Helen asked. “It will be successful?”

“Martin and Danny believe so yes.” Anja said. “It is a remote Kavalian hub. It’s tied into their entire defense network so Yuriko’s intelligence tells her. If we can tap into it and then we download what we need, we can at least be better prepared and have some idea how they will act. It will also provide Martin with possible locations that Pusintin could hide For'mya and the children once they are born. At least initially.”

“If they believe For'mya’s life is in danger from us... from Union forces... they will put her somewhere they feel is impregnable. But also a place where it will be easy to cover their tracks and disappear. Given what we know of the Kavalian people, it is very possible many of their military and political officers do not know the extent of what Pusintin and Keleru are doing. I can’t believe having a golden haired elven female with two small children running around Kavalian space is common by any stretch of the imagination. If she is seen there will be questions. And they may be questions Pusintin and Keleru are not prepared to answer.” Panos spoke.

“You think they will keep her out of Kavalian space Panos?” Deia asked interested in what Panos was saying. Deia had berated herself countless times over the last few days in not realizing sooner what she had discovered in Panos. The man was a veritable ancient text of knowledge that she could call on at a whim. His knowledge of ancient Sparta and her nephew Leonidas had enthralled her for hours that first time they had sat and talked. His mind was as sharp and alert as Armetus’s ever was, and he always thought in a three dimensional manner, seeing options that she did not.

Panos nodded slowly. “If I had to guess... yes. I would say they send her to Nefoa once they leave Hadarian space. It’s close enough to Kavalian territory to reinforce, but it is also a major base in its own right and heavily fortified. Armetus believes it to be the main staging base for the Kavalians within The Wilds. They have launched three major attacks from Nefoa into High Coven space in the past so it fits.”

“Pusintin can’t possibly believe the Union Senate will accept any claim to the throne by a son of his and For'mya.” Gorgo said.

“He has backed us into a corner so to speak though.” Deia said. “We did keep secret that we were training the High Coven dragons. Technically no matter how we word that, it still goes against the Non-Interference Treaty, more so if what they say about the KFI signing onto it through the Hadarian Registry is true.”

“As long as Buonau and Wiktor plotted and schemed against me to execute the coup, I have no doubts they covered all their bases.” Anja said.

Deia nodded. “I agree with that assessment.” She stated. “The Writ of Annulment will have undoubtedly put a crimp in their plans. I’m quite sure there are many elven members of parliament that did not care for Martin in the least. Or Dysea for that matter. Her openness on many issues rubbed scores of politicians the wrong way.”

“But For'mya and L'tian agreed with her!” Anja said. “Hell... they helped her to write many of the changes into law!”

Deia nodded. “Which only makes it worse for they have no reason to be loyal to For'mya or our family. They were slighted and many will see this as a chance to get back at us no matter how it comes about.”

“Do they have any clue what giving Pusintin power would mean?” Panos asked.

Deia shook her head. “I don’t think they particularly care Panos.” She replied. “In many ways it is no different than this Utopian Movement within our own people. They feel the only way to have a perfect society is for the government to dictate everything to the people. As long as certain individuals have all the power and prestige that is.”

“What is your sense of the Senate Deia?” Gorgo asked.

“I think the debate will be lively... but I don’t believe the older Senators, especially those from Sparta, will abide Pusintin taking control through his son.” Deia said thoughtfully. “None of them agreed with what Martin did to begin with in restoring his name and rank to Sparta. They tolerated it because it was a show of his love for his lost brother... but they will not allow Pusintin to return in any way or in any form. The younger generation I am not so sure of. Many look up to Martin and they relate to Androcles very well, but they are so fickle at times it is hard to predict what they will do.”

“So they can be influenced?” Gorgo said softly.

Deia nodded. “Yes. I am not truly worried about an overall vote... but I am concerned about the attacks against our family that may stem from this debate.” She said. “There are many things Martin and even Andro have done that the people have no knowledge of. This will be the time that those who have this knowledge will come forth.”

“Nothing they have done, no matter how secret it was, nothing has ever been for anything but the benefit of our people!” Gorgo hissed.

Deia nodded. “I know that... and that is what we need to use.” She said.

“What do you mean Deia?” Anja asked.

Panos smiled. “Reverse information.” He said. “Excellent Deia!”

“Reverse what?” Anja asked.

Deia smiled and nodded. “No matter what they may bring forth we counter it with the reasons for what we did and why.”

“Ohhh... that will send Armetus and Marci into a tizzy.” Anja stated.

Deia looked at her. “It was Armetus and Marci who first brought the idea to me.” She said. “You know as well as I that any operation Armetus and Marci consider sacred will be covered a hundred different ways. Nothing will ever come out because nothing has ever been revealed. There are many operations that will see the light however. Operations that we may have considered secondary but that others will consider large. This is what they will use and this is what we will counter. Nesa and her people are already on it. It pays that Armetus can’t travel very far right now. He is more a help to me here in Sparta at the moment. We can put our heads together when Andro returns; right now we have to support Bella.”

“How soon before you will do the procedure Anja?” Panos asked.

Anja opened her mouth to answer but Sivana’s voice interjected. “We have to do it within the next thirty-three hours.” She spoke.

Anja turned her head as she came to her feet her eyes wide. “Vana... what do you mean? Why?”

Ceuma was beside her sister and she held out the data pad to Anja and handed one to Eurin. “It appears that whatever Dorian and Ryner have experienced... they have accelerated the destabilization of Bella’s womb on purpose.”

“What?” Anja gasped.

Sivana nodded. “This melding as the Feravomir called it. The energy to the brain cells within Dorian and even Ryner have accelerated the compounds related to the disease in Bella. We compared it to the scans taken before and after Andro and Elynth melded. It is very similar though not as accelerated with Andro and Elynth because of their calm natures. Essentially... for lack of a better way of putting it... Dorian has decided he wants out now, before her womb breaks down anymore. And Ryner agrees with him. Estimates show her womb will collapse entirely in thirty-three hours at the present rate of degradation. We have to do the procedure very soon.”

Ceuma nodded. “Preferably within the next twelve hours in case our estimates are off.” She said. “Now... we have no choice.”

“Can you do that?” Gorgo asked. “Can you make him grow enough in twelve hours that he is ready to be born?”

Anja looked at her as she got to her feet. “Well... it appears we are going to have too.” She stated. “Vana... get Anuk and Duewa here from Sparta ASAP. The more Healers we have the easier it will be and I want Anuk and Ceuma to assist me with the actual procedure.”

“Not me?” Sivana asked.

Anja shook her head. “I want you, Eurin and Duewa to be generating a continuous field of metaphysical healing energy that we will be filtering through Bella the entire time. It is the safest way to go. We need to keep her other bodily functions normal. Her vampire genes are going to protest the accelerated growing and we need to keep her vitals normal and almost as if it isn't happening.”

Sivana nodded. “I'll go make the call.” She said.

“Have Normya come with them.” Helen spoke up. “Bella and Dysea's mother have developed a very powerful connection through the years. The additional support will make her more relaxed. She returned from Kranek with the others two days ago.”

Sivana nodded. “I'll let her know.”

Anja looked at them. “Ok... let's get this thing moving.”

STRIKER DT MARK II

VL 31

ENROUTE TO KRANEK

“...staging now and we will be ready when you arrive Princess.” Cha'talla told Narice from within the transmission.

The ship was shrouded and on auto-pilot allowing Arrarn to be sitting with Narice and Toria in the rear of the ship. This particular STRIKER Mark II was one that Arrarn had designed when he was younger and then forgotten all about. His designs had ended up in Ben's hands somehow and now he had a ship that was perfectly suited for him and his two vampire wives as well as Deneth, who was happily gnawing a large bone in the comfortable pen. The ship had the main deck and then a slight incline to an small upper deck just behind the cockpit that held a table and four chairs bolted into the floor. This table was next to the secure COM array and holo disc that they were currently viewing Cha'talla on.

“Cha'talla... why are you doing this?” Narice asked softly. “You more than anyone have more reason to hate me. Hate my people.”

“You are the instrument of change Narice Leonidas.” Cha'talla said confidently. “I no more hate you than I hate vampires as a whole. My Blessed wife is a pureblood... just like you. In her arms I have found more peace and happiness than the seven plus millennia of my life before I met her. I do this because it is best for my people and for yours.”

“My sister will fight us.” Narice said. “She and those with her will not allow us to just waltz in and take control of the government.”

Cha'talla nodded. “Perhaps... but she has not returned to Uzu Ozeib 7 since leaving Earth and that could be for any number of reasons. I will not speculate as to why but part of it is, I believe, they are waiting to see who is loyal to them and who is not.”

“Why do you believe this Cha'talla?” Toria asked.

“This.” Cha'talla said holding up the small holoimager in his hand and activating it. The tall and lean body of the older man appeared, his High Coven uniform meticulously kept and his mustache and beard trimmed to perfection.

“I am admiral Pontal of the High Coven Fifth Expeditionary Fleet. I have given this message to one of the young Immortals who works on my staff, a fine and brave warrior by the name of Tu'kor. I have asked him to accompany his fellow Immortals as they answer the call given by General Cha'talla, and then give him this message.” The man fidgeted from within the transmission obviously not used to speaking in such a way. “We are... we are at a crossroads within High Coven history and I find myself in a difficult position. I am a member of the High Coven, loyal to my people and our ideals, but I have become... disenchanted with the current leadership and their goals. After discovering what we took part in against the Leonidas family, what we endorsed by those we follow, I can no longer in good conscious follow them. It would lead to the death of my men and destruction of all I have fought my entire life to defend. General Cha'talla... if you are somehow able to get this message to Princess Narice... tell her... tell her we will stand with her. There are others like me... and should she see fit to return... in honesty we ask for her to return and take control of the government. The leadership is in turmoil right now; Princess Yuri has not returned to the homeworld and many of us are in limbo waiting to see what happens. I can not abide this. We can not abide this while the Kavaliens prepare to attack us again. Princess Narice has shown intelligence and the ability to lead in the past and now we ask that she return and take her mother's place. We are willing to meet in secret to discuss this but it needs to be soon for I do not know how long it will be before Yuri returns or begins to exert her control once more. The time is now if we are to act and keep the High Coven from fading into history. I will have someone monitoring this channel all hours of the day and night. Respond as soon as possible please."

"Pontal?" Narice whispered.

Arrarn looked at her. "You know him Narice?" He asked.

Narice shook her head. "I know of him but I have never met him. He is the most senior of the High Coven admirals. The only one to remain away from the homeworld and command ships even though he was offered a seat on my mother's council many times. He was one of the few she respected. He is over... gods he must be over ten or twelve thousand years old now and has fought from one side of the galaxy to the other."

Cha'talla nodded. "I met him once when I was with Moran and he did a training mission among his fleet. The young warrior who brought this to me thinks very highly of him and wishes to return. It would seem he has treated his Immortal crewmen with much more respect and honor than most Fleet Admirals."

"He mentions others Cha'talla." Toria said. "Do we know how many?"

Cha'talla shook his head. "Tu'kor did not know this information. He did tell me that of the nine hundred and twelve Immortals that serve in Pontal's command, only sixteen chose to leave when the order was received from Moran. That says quite a bit right there."

Narice nodded. "Yes it does." She said. "Does Andro know of this?"

"I forwarded a copy to him only a few hours ago. I suspect he will contact me at a later time to discuss it." Cha'talla spoke. "I thought it best to speak with you first however. This Pontal did mention you by name."

"Could it be a trap?" Arrarn asked.

Cha'talla nodded. "It could be." He replied honestly. "Or it could be sincere."

Narice looked at him. "Your instinct?"

Cha'talla paused for only a moment. "I believe it is sincere Princess." He answered. "I am hearing much from those who are arriving here and none of it is good. The entire military is in far worse shape than we were led to believe. More so than I think even you know. Only those loyal to Aikiro, Moran, Tesand and other politicians got the tools and means to maintain their ships and men in top shape. Others have had to scrounge and scavenge."

"How will something like this impact Andro's plan?" Narice asked.

Arrarn looked at her. "Andro's plan?" He asked. "What plan?"

Cha'talla blinked. "He does not know?" He asked.

Narice smiled and only her deep tan stopping the blush to her cheeks. "We only left a few hours ago and we were... preoccupied... with other things. I have not had a chance to tell him." She answered.

Toria Leonidas on the other hand did blush as she remembered the last few hours with her Princess lover and Prince Husband. She may have been almost three hundred years older than Narice and slightly more than that on Arrarn, but she had never had a man curl her toes in such a way that her handsome half elf and half wolf husband did. Arrarn had both Narice and her howling out their delight for the first few hours of their flight. While technically, as far as the Lycavorians and Union citizens were concerned, she too was a princess but she just found it harder to accept because of her history.

Cha'talla however was not dense or stupid and he nodded his head with a grin. "I will allow Narice to fill you in before you arrive Arrarn... but to answer your question Narice... an opportunity like this can only help our cause. It will not impact Andro's plan unless you intend to let it."

Narice shook her head immediately. "No." She stated emphatically. "No. I would not be doing this if I did not agree one hundred percent with the entire plan Cha'talla. That Andro came to me with this before says volumes about him and how he thinks. This is a surgical strike and it is designed for only one purpose. We intend to use that purpose to advance what we feel is the best action. I happen to agree with him. I didn't before... I only wanted to be Arrarn's wife and Toria's lover. I have come to realize that there are bigger goals however, and if I ever want to see my people succeed this is the only way to do it."

Cha'talla nodded. "Good. So do I. Can these ships do as he says they can do?"

Arrarn looked at him. "You saw what they did around Kranek Cha'talla." He answered. "What do you think?"

"I think if we do this right... there need not be a whole lot of bloodshed." Cha'talla spoke. "I have seen far more blood than I needed too in my many years... and if this plan prevents me from having to see more than necessary, so be it."

"Set up the meeting Cha'talla." Narice told him. "Same location as where we will meet the others."

Cha'talla met her gaze. "Is that wise? Giving them a glimpse of what they face?"

"If it terrifies them even a portion of how it terrified me... then it will be well worth it." Narice answered.

"Very well." Cha'talla said. "I will contact this Admiral."

"What about Andro's worries for your people Cha'talla?" Arrarn asked. "Have you any sense on that?"

"Oh... I have no misconceptions that some will be coming here not to make a new life for themselves, but to engage in nefarious activities." Cha'talla said plainly. "However, As'hia's mother has taken command of all forces here on Kranek with Andro's blessing and along with some of my more restless men..." He said with a smile. "She and they will have no trouble rooting out any troublemakers or assassins. Danarla has made quite the impression on those she led against Phy'iad, and her respect only grows. My people and those elves and others who have lived with us have become quite good at seeing beyond an Immortal's outer demeanor as well. As'hia's father is rapidly putting together not only a atmospheric defense force of gunships but also a well skilled and trained group of picket ships made up of your older AUTUMN MOON frigates. We are being very careful about who comes to the surface, but as we grow that will speed up. Esther is making massive amounts of the serum and my people are flocking to get it. It is a wondrous thing and this alone will spur my people to begin anew."

"My riders?" Narice asked.

"They have already transferred to a TYPE II transport and joined with the fleet. A very unique TYPE II, quite unlike the one Tir'ut and Esther rescued your sister from Arrarn." He told them. "Viera would not let Vollenth go without her, so she has agreed to be your dragon Arrarn Leonidas, for as long as necessary. They have sent their sons Cinol and Caydren back to Dragon Mountain on Earth to stay with their grandparents. A trip neither of them is unhappy about in the least since they will have other hatchlings to entertain them."

"Our Command Team?" Narice asked.

"Aside from yourself, Arrarn, Toria and me... I have asked Lynom and As'hia to join us. Their union together will help us to show that things can indeed change. My son Fash'ka and two of his Tactical Unit and I have requested a Hadarian Healer as well. She will land on the ship that will return Cinol and Caydren to Earth. It will be here tomorrow shortly before you arrive."

Narice nodded her head. "Excellent." She said. "Your... your Blessed Wife will not be joining us?"

Cha'talla shook his head. "Esther insists her skills are needed here in helping our people, but I fear she may still harbor a small amount of distrust and anger towards anyone who..."

Narice held up her hand. "I understand." She said softly.

"Do not think badly of her Narice." Cha'talla spoke. "Your mother had her whipped and raped repeatedly when it was discovered she loved me. Esther has..."

"I will show her I am not my mother Cha'talla." Narice said. "Perhaps one day she will be able to look at me and not see her."

Cha'talla nodded clearly uncomfortable talking about it. "We have recently received a new shipment of weapons and armor from your Admiral O'Conner Arrarn Leonidas. Some very matchless items to say the least." Cha'talla said. "Allow me to praise his ingenuity to you so that you may pass it on to him."

"I'll do that." Arrarn said.

"Then I will see all of you tomorrow and we will finalize our objectives and mission goals." Cha'talla said. "Until then."

They waited until the transmission had faded before Arrarn sat back in his chair. "Ok... my beautiful mates and wives... perhaps you could fill me in on just what Andro's plan is. I know some of it... but there is obviously more to it than even I realized. Why didn't you tell me before now?"

Narice turned her dark eyes on Toria before meeting Arrarn's gaze. "I was going to tell both of you just after we got underway from the SCIMITAR." She stated. "However... shortly after we took off I was diverted by a somewhat handsome man sticking his tongue down my throat and a delightfully delicious red haired companion of mine who decided then would be a good time to rediscover what I tasted like.”

“Oh... so it’s our fault?” Arrarn declared.

Toria chuckled. “You are also very confused Narice my love.” She said. “It was my tongue down your throat and Arrarn’s tongue doing the rediscovering. At least initially.”

Narice’s right eyebrow lifted a little. “Oh.” She said.

“Somewhat handsome man?” Arrarn said with a false indignant grin. “I seem to recall a stunning vampire female who couldn’t decide whether to pull my elven ears off my head or try to suffocate me between her thighs. She was muttering something about me being the most delicious man in the universe if I recall.”

“I said that?” Narice asked with a smile.

Toria leaned forward. “Yes you did.”

“Ah... I must have been delirious or something.” Narice stated.

“Ten seconds after that you told our beautiful husband to fuck you silly my love.” Toria said with a wider smile. “Something he does so very well I might add, as evidenced by your howls of enchantment two minutes later.”

“You were timing me?” Narice gasped.

Toria batted her stunning blue eyes at Narice. “Of course not my love. I would not do that and I was too busy suckling your absurdly stiff nipples. I am only making an estimate of the time of course.”

Narice shook her head at the two of them as they grinned at her. “You two are so bad.” She stated. “Taking such advantage of me. We will need to do it often so that I learn to control myself more.”

“I’m game!” Arrarn declared.

Narice gripped his hand and brought it to her lips, kissing his hard knuckles. His hands could work magic on her body as well as Toria’s and both of them knew it. “A mug of your mother’s coffee would be much better right now and then I can fill you in on Androcles’s plan.”

“Coming right up.” Arrarn said rising to his feet. “But I will hold you to that statement.”

“It is probably something you will not have to fight me to admit openly to anyone who asks.” She answered him.

Andro had told her to try and keep his mind off of For'mya and what was happening there and Narice and Toria agreed that being intimate together so soon after leaving was the way to do it. Arrarn Leonidas could make them feel things neither of them thought possible and they garnered just as much pleasure, if not more, from being together than Arrarn did. It helped as well, that his attention was focused entirely on them and it took his mind off things that troubled him to the extreme. Their love for him had overtaken them both quickly, but it was something both she and Toria found they could not live without now. Yes... they would have another tryst before undertaking their mission, perhaps two if Narice and Toria had their way, but then the mission would harvest all of their attention and wits.

Narice had no doubts they would need every bit of both to pull it off.

DEKUNNA
EREBUS EXPANSE
0408 LOCAL TIME
SOUTHERN EQUATORIAL CONTINENT

The small Recon Patrol of Kavalian scouts never saw what caused their deaths. They never sensed them, never saw them and never heard them. They had been stationed here for four years and nothing ever changed. They did their patrols and returned to the base to rest and wait for their next patrol. It was a tedious position, but at least the base was well stocked with food and entertainment. The only thing that they lacked was females, though they could skip to Nefoa if they choose one or twice a month in groups of ten or less. Each of their patrols was made up of seven Puma Bane Troops, each one exceptionally well trained, however lacking in any experience and sense of perception. Not that it would have mattered. They cross the same terrain nearly every day and nothing looked out of the ordinary to them. They would never admit that complacency had set in long ago.

The scout at the rear of the patrol did not see the loop of fine wire that dropped from the overhanging limb he walked under. The dawn was still pushing away the night and the sun had yet to breach the horizon. His weapon was in his hands but not prepared to fire and he certainly was not paying attention. At least until the wire was savagely drawn tight around his neck and his two hundred and fifty pound body was hauled off the ground with incredible strength. The air to his lungs was immediately cut off as the wire cut deeply into his neck, so tightly that it even was slicing through the layers of fur on his skin. He tried to grab for the wire with clawed hands, dropping his weapon to the ground beneath him, as his fingers attempted to pry the wire from his neck. It only tightened even more as he was yanked even higher into the tree above him. As his eyes began to glaze over, he could feel warm blood beginning to pour down his neck and chest as the wire finally bit through enough of his skin to sever his jugular vein. He struggled to look up and discover what was killing him and his brain was unable to process the fact that a vicious looking Immortal with deeply tanned skin and cruel dark eyes was exerting tremendous pressure on the ends of the wire, pulling it tighter and tighter. He would never know why he died, or why the Immortal had such an evil grin on his face. T'lolt hauled up mightily one last time, pulling the ends of the garrote even tighter and watching as the Kavalian's legs twitched madly several times fighting death, but ultimately becoming still as two sets of hands on either side of T'lolt quickly helped him to haul the body up into the thick foliage of the two hundred and fifty year old tree they were in. The only evidence that the Kavalian had even been there seconds before was the rifle laying among the dirt and grass of the worn path.

The sixth Kavalian in the familiar file of men turned to speak with his fellow warrior and discovered he was no longer there. He uttered a crisp word and the group of Kavalians stopped to turn as the now alert Puma Bane troop lifted his weapon and moved back down the trail. There were many different kinds of dangerous predators on Dekunna, but none that would openly attack a column of Kavalian troops. The other five men waited and watched as their comrade moved back down the trail slowly, his eyes searching the thick jungle like terrain around them. One of them said something under his breath and the five began to laugh softly.

At least until the large black wolf sprang from the side almost magically on their comrade's right, coming from the thick foliage and its jaws sank deeply into his right forearm. The crunch of bone was surprisingly audible in the thick air and the Kavalian lost the ability to pull the trigger on his weapon. As his eyes grew wide and he screamed in pain lifting his opposite arm and reaching for the secondary weapon he carried on his back, a platinum colored wolf again magically appeared beside him from within the foliage in the middle of a leap. It was a leap that saw its wide-open jaws snap shut on their comrade's throat and drive him to the ground with a horrific snarl and the sound of rushing air. This prodded the five remaining Puma Bane Recon men into action.

Far too slowly to save their lives.

Stepping from the dense foliage on either side of the trail, four figures appeared. All of them were dressed in strange uniforms that sported different jungle patterns, all of them were easily recognized as Lycavorian by the Kavalians, and all of them lifted wicked looking and quite silent weapons. Six seconds later, nine rounds had perforated the bodies of four of the Puma Bane soldiers and the fifth turned to run, his eyes wide in horror. He came face to face with the large Lycavorian with vicious dual fangs and yellow/golden eyes. He felt a momentary sharp pain in his abdomen and his eyes dropped to see the shaft of the ornately engraved Nehtes buried fully in his guts. Fiery pain then registered in his mind as the spearhead had erupted out his lower back taking with it bits of flesh and several pieces of his spinal column. As his mouth opened to allow a hellish scream of agony, the Lycavorian lifted his hand. A silvery diamond shaped object formed instantly in that armored hand and then exploded from his open palm. The psychic diamond entered the Kavalian's open mouth and blew open the back of his large skull, spraying bone, fur and gray matter on the grass behind him.

Martin tore his Nehtes free with little effort and less acknowledgement that he had just killed the man violently and watched his body slump silently to the ground. No one in his team said a word as their PSGs deactivated and they began to appear all around him. Even Wayonn remained silent as he reappeared standing behind Aricia and Dysea as they moved forward, wiping blood from their mouths and using a canteen of water he had given to them to wash out the foul taste of Kavalian blood from their mouths. T'lolt, Julie and Kenny dropped nimbly from the massive tree above them, landing without a whisper of sound and moving up with the others.

Danny was the one to speak first. "That's the last of them Marty." He stated. They had spent the last two hours eliminating four Kavalian patrols that Torma and Isheeni had directed them to from high above.

Martin nodded and turned his head upward. Anything brother? He asked Torma.

Isheeni and Iriral have made two low passes over the base and detect nothing. Torma answered. There is a risk that I could be noticed if I drop lower because of my size. There is no indication that they are aware we have killed their patrols. That will probably change as the sun rises higher however Martin.

Martin nodded. No doubt. Ok... we're moving to our assault positions. The three of you hold what you have until we insure that no T19s can or will be launched and then you drop in and take out the barracks.

We will be waiting. Torma answered.

Martin looked at everyone as they crowded around. "Ok... Torma, Isheeni and Iriral have said they detect no recognition inside the base to our actions. We move ahead with phase two. Danny... take half the team and move to your assault position. Make sure their COMs are the first thing you take or we are royally fucked. Julie and Cirith will take out the two towers since they are the only ones who can blur and get to them fast enough. Once you have the COM room silenced destroy any T19s they have locked in this center and then Torma, Isheeni and Iriral will take out the barracks. Aricia, Dysea and I will hit the officer's barracks with the other half and if our timing is on, we can kill most of them before they even wake up."

"Yuriko is in position?" Danny asked.

Martin nodded. "You'll have your long gun cover. Two of her Commandos won the Long Range Shooting competition two years ago. They've set up on the west ridge, just above where you will go in."

"And where will I be while all this is happening Martin?" Wayonn asked.

"Watching from a safe perch." Martin said.

Wayonn met his eyes for a long moment. He had witnessed the murderous precision of these men and women in the last two hours and it was nothing short of terrifying. He had heard the whispers of the Durcunusaan on Curila 6 when these men and women were spoken of. It was said that they could actually predict what each other was going to do in any given situation. After seeing them in action, Wayonn did not doubt it in the least. Having the huge Immortal fit in with their team so seamlessly spoke volumes about them. He and Deia were the only ones that he knew of who had been alive to see the savagery the Lycavorian people could call on if needed. It was a terrifying thing yes, but it was also what allowed them to survive for as long as they did. Wayonn had been concerned at first that this might turn into a vendetta of sorts by Martin, signaling to him that perhaps the darkness of Xaxon that had infected him was not completely gone. It was a concern he now knew was never needed. Martin Leonidas was angry yes, angry beyond any describable words, but he was also a consummate professional. He knew that in order to get his For'mya back that he needed to be at his best. He wasn't about to let emotion rule his actions or his decisions Wayonn saw, and this more than anything made Wayonn feel more secure in the knowledge that Xaxon held no sway over Martin any longer.

Wayonn had also come to the conclusion that having Martin Leonidas or his son out for your blood was the single most ignorantly stupid thing to incur. He had seen a little of Andro's wrath, and was now viewing Martin's first hand. That they both reminded him far too much of Sumar and Resumar was not lost on him.

Wayonn shook his head. "I am a Lycavorian and this is my fight now as well." He stated. "Sumar did not push me to the side and nor will you."

Martin met his eyes and nodded after a moment. "Then stick close to Andreus." Martin said. "You'll be covering our asses."

Wayonn nodded. "Something he has done very well through the years I see, since you are entirely too reckless for a King and you should be dead by now given your propensity for leaping into impossible situations."

Martin saw Andreus chuckle softly from his spot next to his sister Aricia. "You have no idea Val'istar." He said.

Martin grinned, his long dual wolf fangs giving off a less than reassuring look. "I have never gotten into a situation that I couldn't get out of." He stated.

"Ah... Skipper..." Pablo spoke up from the side. "Columbia was..."

"Columbia doesn't count!" Martin hissed quickly. "That wasn't my fault! And we got out!"

"Kenny told you not to use so much explosive Skipper." Julie said from her spot beside Danny.

“I didn’t know that the damn bridge was going to fall into the fucking river!” Martin spat. “The support spans looked sturdier!”

“They were made out of bamboo boss.” Kenny spoke now. “Bamboo doesn’t survive fourteen pounds of C-7 Semtex going off above it. Even on it’s best day.”

“We got out didn’t we?” Martin snapped.

“Yeah... we got out.” Danny nodded. “Only we had to walk twenty miles to get to the secondary extraction point because your little display brought every Comcharro asshole within twenty clicks down on us.” He said. “Come to think of it... you still owe all of us a case of beer for that one.”

“Yeah! Each of us!” Julie exclaimed.

Martin dismissed them with a wave of his hand. “No sense of humor!” He snapped softly.

“Sense of humor?” Danny gasped. “The Secondary PZ was a nubous garbage dump Marty! I had crotch rot for a week because we had to wade through that rancid water just to get to it!”

“I didn’t pick the damn PZ!” Martin growled.

“No... but you’re the reason we had to go to it.” Julie said sweetly. She glanced up at Danny. “Have your ever told Anuk or Nayeca what was growing on...”

“Hell no!” Danny gasped in horror. “You think I’m crazy? They’d never let me into bed with them again!”

Julie chuckled. “Wow! I got something I can use against you in the future you mean?”

“C’mon Jules... you wouldn’t do that would you?” Colin asked from next to Kenny. “That was downright nasty.”

Julie chuckled. “Ok... maybe not.” She spoke batting her dark eyes at Danny’s worried expression.

Martin knelt there and looked at Aricia and Dysea. They could see the happiness in his eyes that he was once more in his element with men and women that he loved and trusted. That small group now included them and Cirith as well.

“I would like to hear this story Julie Collins.” T'lolt spoke moving closer. “It sounds most fascinating.”

This brought chuckles from all of them and the fever pitch of combat bled off just enough for them to gather strength and will from each other. Martin nodded his head towards them after a long moment.

“Ok... let’s do this people.” He said firmly.

They all nodded in agreement.

SCIMITAR

SIX HOURS FROM EARTH’S SYSTEM

Devra Re Mydala knew exactly what she had in the powerful Lycavorian Spartan Bren. It was what she had hoped to discover when she first became Coren’s wife. She had hoped to find a confident and intelligent man who was comfortable with himself. Instead she had discovered a man who was confident and intelligent, but who more often than not treated her as a trophy of some sort. Coren was never comfortable with himself, at least not around her. It did not help in the least that his political career had been thriving so. Devra knew after the first hundred years with him that nothing would ever rate higher on his list than his career. Not even her. Still she remained with him because she loved him still, and because of the children he was giving her. That love had finally died a long death thirty some years ago, and in those three decades, no matter how many men approached her none made her blink twice. None except Bren. He was older than her by a few hundred years, but unlike the difference in age with Coren, this never entered her mind with Bren.

Bren was every bit as confident as Coren, equally as intelligent if one included the kind of life Bren had led, as well as his own advanced degrees. He was so unlike Coren in so many ways. She knew their relationship was still very young, but no matter how many times he touched her, that touch never ceased to make her shiver in delight. She knew this would never end for it was part of Lycavorian instinct, the need to touch and have physical contact. While she and Coren never held hands, Devra and Bren went nowhere jointly without her holding his arm or their hands clasped together. When he looked at her with those eyes she saw a devotion to her within them that would never fade with time. When he made love to her, not only did he have the willpower to resist her Alkay until the point he was driving her insane with pleasure, but he never granted release to himself until she was shuddering in his arms and cooing like a school girl into his ear how much she loved him. It may have been male bravado and his wolf nature, but if he made her feel that every time they made love, Devra would coo into his ear for centuries to come and never tire of it. To him she was an equal in every way, and while she knew he was jealous to some extent, he was also relaxed enough with himself to know that she was his mate and wife. He could almost sense the devotion to him that filled Devra whenever she gazed at his face, or even watched him from across a room. He trusted her beyond reproach and this ultimate fact only made Devra worship him all the more.

Devra knew all these things, and was learning more each day she woke in his arms, so she knew immediately that something was not right when she entered the large mess lounge on the SCIMITAR and saw Caliria sitting alone at the table in the far corner. Her oldest daughter looked deep in thought and Devra could detect the simple motions of her head that told her Caliria was troubled about something. She drew a mug of the delicious coffee that Bren had gotten her hooked on and dismissing the sweet smelling food that filled the long line, she moved to the table when Caliria sat.

“Caliria?” Devra asked softly as she sat down.

“Mother?” Caliria gasped in surprise and she looked around for the man who her mother now called husband.

Devra smiled. “Bren is in a meeting.” She stated. “He left early this morning. Why are you here alone daughter? What is wrong?”

“Nothing!” Caliria answered far too quickly she realized too late.

Devra smiled and sipped the coffee before reaching out and placing her hand over Caliria’s. “This is your mother you are speaking to Caliria Leonidas.” She said. “Do not try and fool me. Something is bothering you and this is how you have always dealt with such things. You retreat into yourself and try to come to terms with whatever it is in your head. Now... tell me what is wrong.”

Caliria met her eyes finally and shrugged her slim shoulders. She had never held anything back from her mother before and starting now was something she couldn’t do. “That is... that is just it mother.” She exclaimed. “I... I don’t know!”

Devra’s eyes narrowed. “I... I don’t think I follow. Does it have to do with Androcles or the others? With what happened when...”

Caliria shook her head. “Yes... No... I don’t know.” She answered.

Devra set her mug down. “Perhaps you should take a deep breath and start from the very beginning Caliria.”

“It is all so... it is so overwhelming mother.” Caliria said finally. “Everything is taking place so quickly. Andro is... he is so...”

“Established. Confident. Wise beyond his years. Powerful... and not just physically. He is hard to understand, but because of your ability to Mindvoice, you understand him almost perfectly. He overwhelms you but doesn’t suffocate you. You...” Devra began.

Caliria looked at her with wide eyes. “How...?”

Devra smiled. “It is no different than what I feel for Bren, or what I have been feeling and experiencing since coming here. It’s these people, the air about them. How they view things. If anyone would have told me six months ago that I would see Lycavorians in such a radically different way then what I did then I would have laughed at them. If someone would have told me I would tremble for the touch of the Lycavorian man who I now love so completely I would have made sure they were committed.” Devra looked at her. “Have you...”

Caliria felt her skin flush and her heart race at her mother’s question. “Yes. And I can not begin to describe what I feel. What he makes me feel. My... my Alkay affects him... it affects all of them... but they fight it and control it and make me feel things I have never imagined. It is almost as if Andro consumes me mother. It is the most exquisite feeling to feel him within me so completely. Sadi and Ne’Veha and the others too. I can see within his thoughts and how he feels for each of us, the non-questioning devotion and love. It is... it is almost overwhelming but it never reaches the point where it is overbearing. They are not... they are not possessive or jealous... and I feel the same for them! For each of them! It is frightening mother! It terrifies me!”

“Caliria... so much has happened in the past weeks.” Devra said.

“That is just it!” Caliria exclaimed. “I was taken mother, used by... used by so many, forced to do things I did not want to do! Never once have they questioned me about it! Almost as if it never happened!”

“It is not their way to reflect or dwell on past events Caliria.” Devra said taking her hand across the table. “They care about what happen to you... but they will not dwell on it. Their way is to show you that they love you regardless and that they are here for you no matter what takes place.”

“Mother... do you know how many lives he took to save me?” Caliria asked her quite suddenly.

Devra shook her head surprised by the question. “No... and I do not think he cares. Nor do I. You were taken against your will by criminals and scum Caliria! Are we supposed to just forget that? Are we supposed to just let that stand as your father was so willing too do? As so many Regents are willing to do?”

“What about the over three million men and women this Hadarian woman Buonau says he is responsible for killing by ordering that these Jump Gates be destroyed?” Caliria asked. “Did you know about that?”

“I found out shortly after we arrived here.” Devra answered. “It is not something he did lightly Caliria. He was saving millions more, billions more by doing what he did. You have seen yourself how these Kavalian people treat others!”

“You know how I feel about violence mother.” Caliria spoke. “You... you can not fight violence with violence. It only leads to more violence. And pain and injury. The Prophets say we should live in harmony with everyone.”

“The Prophets do say that yes.” Devra said calmly. “They say harmony is preferable to chaos. They do not however, say we need to give up who we are to anyone in order to have harmony. They do not frown upon defending one self and others if need be. And they most certainly do not advocate oppression to placate the need for harmony.” Devra looked at her daughter intently. “What is bothering you Caliria? What is truly bothering you?” She asked.

Caliria exhaled heavily. “I don’t... I don’t know who I am anymore mother.” She said softly and urgently. “Just this morning on the way here, three different people referred to me as Princess.”

“Well... officially you are a Princess in the eyes of the Lycavorian people Caliria.” Devra answered. “Androcles is Crown Prince of the Union.”

“That’s just it!” Caliria hissed. “He is Crown Prince... but no one has asked me if I want to be a Princess! No one has asked me what I want!”

Devra’s eyes narrowed. “Caliria... are you saying he...?”

“What?” Caliria exclaimed. “No... by the grace of the Prophets mother no! I wanted to be with him as much as he wanted me. More even! No... I’m talking about everything else! Everyone just assumes that I... that I want to be a Princess. That I want to be his... his mate. I am three hundred years older than him and no one asks me what I want!” She spoke the word mate with a tinge of distaste that Devra detected easily.

“Are you saying that you don’t?” Devra asked softly. “And the term mate is sacred to them Caliria. Just as wife is. It is one of the ways they maintain their connection to their past, to who they are inside.”

“I don’t know what I want mother!” Caliria hissed. “Everything is happening so fast and no one is asking me what I want! And mate is... it is such a demeaning term! It does not speak of who they are inside and their nature in stellar means! It is... it is primitive and... degrading and...”

Devra sat back slowly. “Why do I hear your father’s words and teachings in your voice and tone now?” She said softly. “I came to them willing to give them anything they wanted to help me find you. Androcles took nothing. He would take nothing from me. He almost sent me and your sisters away for the very reasons you are speaking now. You have not been among them for as long as I have Caliria but even you must see that everything we teach and learn about these people is false! It has been false for so many centuries. Many of us knew it and did nothing. Why?”

“I don’t know.” Caliria said softly.

“I will tell you why.” Devra stated. “Because we think of ourselves as above everyone. That we are somehow superior to everyone when we are not! How we treat those born with hair such as you is the perfect example!”

Caliria looked at her. “They discarded those they thought weak mother.” She spoke. “I have seen that. Not only in their history, which I have been studying, but also within Andro’s mind as well.”

Devra nodded. “Yes I know. But who among our two species has moved on from such ways and who clings to it Caliria?” Devra asked. “They grew out of that stage in their history, yet we maintain it. Eliani’s mother took all the research and work that you have done all these years and made a counteragent to the OSG chemical control of us. Her first thoughts were not to take credit for that... but to give it to you! Who it rightfully belongs too! You are the one who saved our people Caliria! Your work! How many times have you told me in the past that your only wish is to find a man who will look beyond the exterior and worship you for who you are? You have found that now! Just as I have!”

Caliria looked at her across the table. “And what if that is not what I want mother?” She snarled. “What if he is not what I want? No one is asking me mother!” She shouted as she came to her feet. “No one is asking me!”

Caliria saw the shocked look on her mother’s face and where her eyes were directed and she turned her head quickly. Her own green eyes grew wide when she saw Androcles standing just inside the door of the mess lounge, Dutkne beside him. His expression was void of emotion but she had stared into those eyes enough times the last few days to see the confusion and hurt in them. She took a step towards him but he turned quickly and whispered to Dutkne who only nodded. Then he stepped back into the corridor and was gone. Just before the tears came rolling forth Devra embraced her daughter tightly, effectively shielding her from all around her as she began to draw her out of the mess lounge.

DEKUNNA
EREBUS EXPANSE
0502 LOCAL TIME
SOUTHERN EQUATORIAL CONTINENT

The Kavalian in the tower felt the light breeze and turned his head away from the banned holo/novel he was reading. He felt a slight sting on either side of his neck and his hands came up to slap away the insect from his fur. When he pulled his palms back, the fur on his hands was thickly coated with blood. His eyes grew wide at this and then he saw the twin fountains of red arching away from his thick neck. As he opened his mouth to scream out a warning to his fellow soldiers the shadows in front of him rippled and shifted oddly and then the raven haired vampire female materialized in front of him with a vicious and cruel expression on her surreal and amazingly beautiful face. He saw the flash of metal this time and felt the blades of the twin knives burying themselves within his chest. He watched her beautiful face as she exerted her vampire strength and ripped the blades sideways away from each other between his ribs. The last thing he saw was the terrible glint in her cobalt blue eyes before her blades, traveling along the inside edge of his ribs, neatly carved his lungs in two and severed three major arteries to his heart. Blood bubbled forth as he tried to scream once more, the only sound leaving his lips was the rush of air as he pitched forward and her hands caught him, lowering him to the floor and then tearing her blades from his flesh. It would take him several minutes to die, but he would die silently and painfully, which is exactly what Cirith wanted, for what his kind had done not only to Dysea but to For'mya and the family that she now had. A beautiful, strong family centered around him. She squatted out of sight behind the waist high walls of the tower and touched the implant on her jaw.

“Tower one eliminated.” She whispered.

“Copy.” The reply came in Wayonn’s voice.

[Cirith?] Martin’s voice filled her mind and she shuddered in happiness and the blissful memories of only hours ago.

[I am fine husband.] She answered him quickly, so comfortable in referring to him that way now, and so utterly enchanted that he returned those emotions and feelings towards her ten fold.

[Stay there until we begin our assault and then you and Julie join us.] He ordered her.

[Understood.] Cirith answered as she peeked up over the side of the wall and directed her eyes towards the second tower. Her vampire eyes detected the motion, almost like a shift in the wind really, and she knew Julie was about to strike.

The Kavalian in the second tower did not even have the opportunity or slight warning that his partner did.

Julie Collins may have been a clone of the former woman, but she held all of her most special memories within her mind. In essence she was Julie Collins reborn. But she was now a vampire, and she had fought the Kavalians for the better part of fifteen years now using her new vampire skills. The knowledge that she had finally found the one place that those memories had drawn her too and that she had for all intents and purposes found the family she had been taken away from so long ago; that fueled her now. And it made her all the more determined to stay alive this time and finally experience what her memories had driven her to seek. Julie Collins unwrapped the shadows from around her body while in motion. She appeared not three meters from the Kavalian guard who was still completely unaware of her.

Perhaps it was an innate sense of danger that alerted him, but it was far too late. He lifted his head from the pad he had been reading just as Julie struck. Her open palm blow connected with the full force of her vampire strength, snapping his head to the side and effectively stunning him. While she was still in motion, she grasped his long fur at the base of his neck, reached around and grasped his wide jaw and she twisted just as hard and quickly as she could. The pop of his snapping neck sounded like a gunshot to her, but carried no more than a meter. His legs twitched madly for several seconds and then were still. She lowered the body to the floor silently, and then squatted over the inert form and touched her jaw.

“Tower Two eliminated.” She whispered.

“Copy.” Wayonn answered. “Team Two you are clear. Execute.”

“Executing.” Daniel’s voice sounded.

Wayonn peered down from his perch on the wall at the entrance to the COM bunker.

The Kavalian Watch Officer waited for the large double doors to fully open before he stepped into the morning air and took a deep breath. His eyes lifted immediately to the second tower as they always did, just as he raised the Tazli Root laced tobacco pipe. He should have seen the head of his guard there and did not. He turned a full one hundred and eighty degrees to look up to his first tower and once more could not see the guard sitting in the chair. He was an experienced soldier, though his time here had dulled the same instincts that had kept him alive through fourteen clashes with High Coven and Immortal troops. As those instincts began to shout out in alarm he felt a powerful force crash into his chest and he staggered back, the pipe falling from his fingers. He looked down quickly and couldn’t understand why there was now a fist sized hole in the center of his chest. He also didn’t comprehend the sight of nine heavily armed and very large Lycavorians rushing toward him with weapons out. As he turned his head to shout a warning, his legs gave out and the signals to his brain finally caught up to him that told him he was dead.

One point seven kilometers away, laying on the damp rocks and dirt, Yuriko lowered her macrobinos. “Nice shooting Robert.” She said matter-of-factly.

The human soldier snorted. “Pulled that to the right by six millimeters.” He stated as he jacked another round into the huge 20mm silenced Aeger Sniper Rifle.

Yuriko grinned and tapped her jaw. “Father... Watch Officer has been eliminated and Uncle Daniel is entering the COM building. The Base Commander should be in one of the side quarters away from the barracks. Sniper Teams Two and Three... weapons free. I say again... weapons free.”

“Got a sleeper Yuriko. Two o’clock. Catwalk above the COM building. 1.7 range. 3.2 deflection.” Robert spoke from behind the scope.

Yuriko lifted her binos. “Take the shot.”

“Shooting!” Robert spoke softly as he pulled the trigger smoothly.

Yuriko watched with some pride as the Kavalian that had been sitting in the chair on the catwalk that extended around the COM building was blown back against the wall, only the lower half of his jaw still attached to his body.

“Show off.” Yuriko growled under her breath.

“Honey! We’re home!” The deep voice caused all thirteen of the Kavalian Puma Bane troops in the COM room to turn at the same time as the soundproof doors closed behind Danny and his team.

Danny’s right arm came whistling forward as his words finished echoing from his lips and his Nehtes left his grip with devastating speed and power. The extended nine foot spear impaled the senior Kavalian operator who stood closest to the Transmission array through his thorax. The air could be heard exiting his lungs as the force of the throw lifted him off his feet and then pinned him against the wall of the bunker with the Nehtes sinking nearly half its length into the soft bedrock wall. This served to draw the attention of all the other Kavalians if only for a second or two. Which was all the time they needed. The COM center was relatively small with perhaps eight stations spread out in a semi circle around the main transmission holo/disc. To the left was a small alcove that held computer banks and two chairs.

What followed was by no means fair and balanced. It was never meant to be, and no one among them would lose any sleep over it. Nine cut down P190A5s, the standard Union assault rifles specifically designed for clandestine work, began spitting out 10mm caseless rounds of mortal death. Twelve Kavalian bodies began to do a ghoulish dance of death as the kinetic rounds slammed into soft tissue, shattering bone and internal organs with little regard. The only sound in the room was the impacts on flesh and the near silent working of the weapons. These men and women did not miss, and from this range their first shots were usually lethal. Danny shifted targets four times panning left, sending five round bursts into four different Kavalians, and easily overlapping his field of fire with Kenny, Pablo and Colin Walsh who flanked him on the left. The five members of their team on their right had formed a comparable wall of death and were spraying with surgical precision the right side of the COM room. Equipment was peppered with the deadly kinetic rounds, much of it being turned into useless junk by the sheer amount of firepower that they were using. It was probably overkill, and far more force than they usually would have applied on an operation like this, but at the moment they did not care.

Payback was a bitch.

As Danny ejected his half spent hundred round magazine, his dark eyes swept the room with great care and clarity. Three single silenced shots echoed out and Danny turned to see Colin pumping killing shots into two Kavalians.

“Colin?” He hissed softly.

Colin met his eyes. “Sorry...” He spoke quickly. “Just some personal payback I guess.”

“You get it out of your system?” Danny asked.

Colin nodded as he too began to change magazines. “Yeah.”

“Good. Check the equipment room and secure the T19s! Make sure we can still use the computers too!” Danny ordered. “Kenny... see what they have on tap at the landing zone. Make sure we got no incoming surprises.”

“On it.” Kenny declared leaping over the control station.

Danny tapped his jaw. “Marty... COM Center is ours. T19s are down! T19s are down! Turn Torma loose!” He hissed.

“Understood.” Martin’s businesslike voice spoke.

Danny smiled to himself. Marty had his business face and voice on and he would not tolerate mistakes now. It was good to have his old brother back, but they would still collect their pound of flesh for the reasons behind that welcome transformation. He did not see or hear Martin look into the rapidly brightening sky and speak.

Torma! The barracks! Now!

There were exactly one hundred and twenty-seven Puma Bane troops sleeping in the barracks. That did not include the five officers who were housed in a separate barracks two hundred meters away, two of whom were currently partaking of the feminine wiles of the less than willing biogenic females that had arrived in the last supply shipment only two days before.

None of these men saw the near six and a half ton dragon drop from the brightening sky, his massive wingspan blotting all the slivers of sunlight that were advancing over the horizon and directing all of his muscle and weight onto the very center of the barracks ceiling. Torma had slimmed down much over the course of the last years, dropping to his current weight of six and a half metric tons from the nearly eight metric tons he was. He was stronger and faster now than he had ever been, and this new body had led to the last clutch of eggs that Isheeni had laid, not to mention many more nights of rapture with his beautiful dragon mate. Through the years he had also taken on much of Martin’s more reckless nature and made it his own. This was one of those times and as Isheeni and Iriral watched with wide eyes as they followed him in closely, Torma activated his psychic shield just before impact and then sent his near twenty-two meter body plunging through the ceiling of the barracks with hardly any resistance.

The desire to remain as inconspicuous as possible had caused the Kavalians to build the majority of the base with materials found on this planet. Standard construction material would have been easily picked up on sensors even before ships reached orbit. They had used the large and sturdy trees from this world, combining them with the softer granite material so prevalent all over. Dropping at nearly sixty meters per second and weighing what he did Torma tore through the roof of the barracks with barely a pause. The crashing sound that followed would have woken the dead. His talons and lower body, encased in shimmering dragon armor, crushed the life from nine Kavalian troops before they even had the opportunity to wake up. His massive and armored Heavy Horn tail lashed out to the side with incredible force and crushed another dozen Kavalians even as they were beginning to wake up and scramble from their beds. This is when Isheeni and Iriral struck.

The windows on either end of the barracks imploded inward, along with the frames and pieces of the granite construction. Isheeni and Iriral's armored bodies pushed into the barracks up to their shoulders and both of them let loose with trumpets of all encompassing anger. What followed next was a massacre as both Isheeni and Iriral cut loose with the most intense streams of flame they could generate inside the barracks. Dozens of Kavalians were instantaneously and without regard incinerated. Torma heaved his massive body up out of the conflagration just as the two streams of flame met in the center and then as landed on the outside of the buildings side he added his own stream of superheated lava like breath directly into the hole he had just created.

Martin, Aricia, Dysea and three Durcunusaan troops had moved inside the wall of the compound the moment Yuriko's sniper had taken out the Watch Officer. Using all of their wolf speed, without actually changing forms, they sprinted from shadow to shadow until they were beside their targets. The barracks building they leaned against was broken into four apartment like domiciles inside with short stairs into each apartment. This building housed the Kavalian Base Commander and his three senior officers. The moment Torma smashed into the ceiling of the normal barracks two hundred meters away Martin, Aricia and Dysea and the others moved.

The doors were simple structures and Cody and Master Chief they all called Tony used brute force to smash the door aside. The Master Chief was the larger of the two and he put his shoulder directly into the center of the door frame, snapping it in two with his strength and his forward momentum. As Tony dashed into the apartment, Cody broke to the right sweeping his weapon in front of him. He saw the Kavalian officer just scrambling out of his bed and with unerring accuracy Cody pumped nine rounds into his chest area and one 10mm round directly between his eyes. The officer's body flipped unceremoniously over his bed and collided with the wall behind him before slumping to the floor dead.

"One down!" Cody barked into his implant.

Aricia followed close behind the Durcunusaan troop who bull rushed the door in front of them. His large size and weight splintered the door into dozens of smaller pieces, all of them propelled into the apartment as Aricia followed him in. The officer in this room was climbing off the biogenic Kavalian female on the bed as Aricia entered. He turned with a surprised look on his face seeing the two armored figures in his room, but he recognized them instantly for what they were. The female screamed and rolled off the bed as the officer reached for his gun, his still slick cock dangling in the open. Aricia didn't hesitate and fired three times. Her aim was dead on as well and the Kavalian's cock suddenly evaporated in a fine mist of red and stopped him cold in his movement as savage pain gripped him. He screamed in utter agony as he fell to the floor writhing in pain. Aricia took seven steps up next to his body, her right hand flared briefly and she sent the psychic diamond hurtling into the center of his forehead. His cries of pain ceased as did all but the twitching of his legs. Her azure eyes spun to glare from behind her helmet at the Kavalian female.

"Don't... don't hurt me!" The female cried. "I am not with them! I..."

Aricia flicked out her wrist and using her PK power of Mindvoice she sent the woman smashing hard into the wall with a resounding thud, knocking her unconscious and silencing her protests.

"Two down!" She snapped into her implant and turning to the Durcunusaan troop. "Tie her up!" She snapped. "Then bring her outside!"

"As you order my Queen!" The man echoed stepping over the body of the Kavalian and grabbing the female none too gently.

Aricia touched the small console on her forearm and activated her PSG, her lithe body shimmering from view until it was all but indiscernible from the surrounding background and then she headed outside.

Dysea and her troop acted as efficiently as her elven nature. He simply bulled his way through the door and covered his elven Queen as she sent the third Kavalian officer into hell with a sustained burst from her P190A3. His body was pinned against the far wall as thirteen rounds perforated his flesh and he finally slumped to the floor, dead long before his movement stopped.

“Three!” Dysea snapped into her implant.

The Kavalian Base Commander had literally thrown the biogenic female off him when Torma had smashed into the barracks across his base. He was scrambling for his weapon when the door to his apartment shattered inward. He saw a flash of a body as it continued out of his line of sight and his hands clamped around his assault rifle. He lifted his rifle and proceeded to move out of his small bedroom area, the rifle tracking in front of him. He leveled the weapon at the Durcunusaan soldier that was slowly getting to his feet seemingly unconcerned and waited until the man turned to face him, his dark eyes burning brightly behind the dragon armor helmet and face shield. The Kavalian’s eyes grew large as he saw the man even smile under the cheeks shields that guarded his face.

The Commander hissed savagely and pulled the trigger on his rifle only to see some invisible force grab the barrel and rip it upwards so that the rounds impacted the ceiling above him. The Base Commander’s eyes grew wide when he saw the shifting of light texture directly beside him. Light texture that was in the shape of a man.

“Is that how you greet guests?” The deep voice asked causing the man’s eyes to grow even wider as the cloaked figure took on more of a solid feature. He couldn’t see, let alone stop the blow from the armored fist encased in a light blue mist like field as it crushed against his jaw and sent him flying backwards across the room. His naked body smashed into several very expensive pieces of fine art that the Commander had obtained through the years before abruptly stopping in a rush of air as he impacted the rear wall of the apartment. The air left his lungs in a violent exhale and he knelt there momentarily stunned.

He looked up in time to see the huge figure, still shrouded in that light bending field step up to him and grab the long fur on his head with no regard. He glimpsed another blue mist like fist hurtling at him but was still too dazed to try and avoid it before it pummeled into his face like a hammer. The force of the blow lifted him off his feet and sent him crashing down upon the floor three meters away, the simple chair under him splintering into many pieces, blood now flowing freely from his mangled lips and shattered nose.

“It’s a bit different when you aren’t attacking women and children isn’t it asshole!” That voice seared his mind again.

He looked up and saw the figure moving towards him with a measured gait. He saw one hand reach up and touch the other and then that light bending shield that made him nearly invisible vanished from view. That is when the Kavalian Base Commander saw those burning yellow/golden eyes and knew without question he was dead.

“YOU!” He screeched. “It... no! You are dead! We... we saw it! You are dead!”

“Being dead is overrated!” Martin snarled. “I didn’t much care for it!”

Martin wasted no time and reached down to grab the Kavalian by his throat, wrenching him up to his feet and using his incredible wolf strength, fueled by his PK power to hurl him across the room once more. This time it was directly at the remaining window and his body flailed wildly as it smashed through the thick glass. Martin leaped forward, following the officer through the window and landing beside him on the ground outside. The Kavalian’s naked body was now cut deeply in several places, his blood rapidly soaking his fur as he staggered on the ground, lifting his head at the horrible sound of a dragon trumpeting. Terrible fear gripped him as he whirled around and saw Torma, dragon armor encasing his huge muscular body and glittering in the rising sun, striding toward him with two others directly behind him. The main barracks that housed his men was aflame and completely destroyed, one whole side caved into the structure. As he looked at it he knew none of his men would have escaped that inferno.

The man’s blood was dripping profusely onto the ground and he was frozen in place as Torma settled to the ground only four meters from him and shook his huge front talon to the side. The Kavalian’s eyes grew wide as he saw the upper torso of one of his soldiers flip off that long talon and fly through the air landing with a sickening thud some ten meters away. Those eyes were so similar to the Lycavorian King and as that thought hit him he spun around once more to glare at Martin.

“You... you will start a war with this action!” He screamed at Martin, his spittle flying from his bloody lips. “Marshall Pusintin and Prefect Keleru will... they will not let this stand!”

“War?” Martin growled at him. “What do you know of war fool?” He screamed as Aricia and Dysea and the others began to move closer to him. “You attack innocent men, women and children! My people! You kidnap my elven wife and mate and rape her!” Martin raged as he lashed out with a PK fueled punch that smashed into the man’s chest. The Kavalian officer gagged as nearly all of his ribs splintered because of that one blow, slamming him back into the ground.

Walter appeared beside Aricia and Dysea with Andreus, his eyes wide. He moved to step forward but Aricia reached out and took his arm. “No Val'istar.” She said softly.

“Aricia... child... he must not let his anger fuel his actions!” Wayonn spoke urgently.

“Anger?” Dysea asked him. “Nauta Melme is not angry right now Val'istar.” She spoke with what could only be described as a small chuckle of amusement.

“What... what do you call that?” Wayonn asked.

“Justice.” Cirith’s voice echoed softly as she came up next to Dysea.

“War!” Martin roared again as he lifted his Nehtes and extended the spear to its full nine foot length. “I will show you the true face of war little man!”

Martin drove his Nehtes down with all of his strength, impaling the Kavalian officer clean through his abdomen with at least a meter of the Nehtes sinking deeply into the Earth under him. Martin twisted the Nehtes savagely and leaned over to stare into the agony filled eyes of the Kavalian officer, his hands gripping the now bloody shaft.

“I have released the wolves and the dragons of war fool Kavalian!” Martin hissed at him. “For what Keleru and my brother have done I will show you the true definition of war! It has a face you know! My face! My son’s face! No mercy! No remorse! No surrender! And with their vile actions, it is your own leaders who have unlocked the shackles that bound us! Remember that as your life bleeds away into the earth of this planet! You will die now; you will die with the knowledge that many more of your despicable race will follow you into Jorbhe and beyond!”

Martin ripped his Nehtes free of the man’s abdomen and ignored his cry of agony as pieces of his internal organs went with the spear head. Martin’s right boot snapped forward and crunched into the head of the Kavalian, sending him spinning away, his skull fractured in two places. Martin collapsed his Nehtes and stepped back slightly, turning to look at Aricia and the others. Wayonn saw his face split into an enormous grin under the helmet.

“Ok... I think I have worked the kinks out.” He stated. “This new armor is the shit!”

Aricia and the others could not help but burst into laughter as the rush of combat began to subside. Martin turned when he saw the two Kavalian biogenic females being led out of the apartments, their hands secured in front of them. Both of them were terrified, that much was obvious, but that fear did not detract from their beauty. One had long dark hair and the other had white blond hair and both had very healthy figures. The two Durcunusaan troops ushered them over to where he was and pushed them to their knees.

“Please...!” The one who had been in the Commander’s apartment. Her white blond hair whipped from side to side as she looked around with wide green eyes. “We... we do not want to die! We were sent here to entertain these beasts! We did not...”

“Silence!” Wayonn barked loudly as he stepped up to Martin. His voice had the desired affect and both women fell silent. Martin Leonidas... you can not... He began speaking within Mindvoice.

Wayonn... do you honestly believe I would harm innocents? Martin asked him.

Well... no. You just...

Martin reached up and placed his hand on Wayonn’s shoulder. “That is something you never have to be concerned about.” He said. “Danny?”

“Yo!” Dan called out on the implant.

“Status?”

“Colin is already tapping into their system.” Danny replied from the COM bunker. “He needs four hours to get what we need. Kenny says nothing is inbound or scheduled to be inbound for at least a week. We won’t be calling home though. We kind of shot up the COM array.” He said sheepishly.

“I thought I taught you better than that?” Martin asked with a smile.

“So nubous sue me!” Danny came back. “I get the job done.”

T'lolt stepped forward now and looked at Martin. “Send them to Kranek Martin Leonidas. They will be safe there.”

Aricia nodded. “OMEN THREE has a small four person transport Beloved. Yuriko says they hardly use it. And it will free up more room in the cargo bay so Endith does not have to curse so much when she takes off and lands.”

Martin looked at the two women. “I take it you do not wish to go back to your people.” He said.

“So they can torture us for days and then kill us for what you have done here?” The woman who had spoken earlier snapped. She seemed to be the less meek of the two and if the bruises on her neck and shoulders were any indication she was anything but submissive. “We are already outcasts from our Prides because of the biogenic treatments we submitted too! We can never go back!”

“So Kranek is it.” Dysea said.

“No! I want nothing to do with Immortals!” The second woman snarled.

Aricia looked at her. “You do not have much choice in the matter.” She said.

“The Immortals have a reputation... many of them have been known to torture and rape those Kavalian females they capture. Take us with you!” The first woman offered. “We know of how you treat your females. At least among you we will not be submitted to degrading actions and...”

“We have no use for what you were made to do!” Dysea snapped. “We do not allow this among our people!”

Martin looked at them as he stepped up to the talkative female. “Do you know who I am?” He asked her.

“You... you are the Lycavorian King Leonidas.” She answered in a soft voice. “Back... back from the dead.”

Martin grinned. “In a manner of speaking I guess.” He said. “What is your name?” He asked her.

“Iama’Juturi.” She replied. “My father gave me to Biogenic Program ten years ago. I have been... I have been outcast ever since.”

Dysea stepped closer now, Cirith beside her. “You have endured... you have endured this life for ten years?” She asked softly.

Iama looked at her. “It is... it is better than being dead Queen Dysea.” She quipped.

“You know me?” Dysea asked.

Iama nodded. “It is not hard to get banned reading material out here among the outposts.” She answered. “There are several novels written about you and the King. About the other Queens as well.”

Martin looked at Dysea. “Wow... I might just have to check one of them out Melda Min. They sound sexy.” He said.

“You will do no such thing!” Cirith exclaimed.

“No you will not.” Aricia echoed.

Dysea drew one of the dual knives given to her by Cha'talla when she had first arrived on Kranek. He had named them her Vharc after her rescue from Phy'iad and his ilk and she had not parted with them for any reason since. She stepped up to the young woman, looking down into her face. “You realize what is coming?” She asked softly.

Iama glanced at Martin and then back to her. “Yes.” She answered. “I have nothing. I have no home now. No people. My Pride discarded me like a piece of meat. I... we are nothing. I have no loyalty to them!”

“Iama... they are our people!” The second woman hissed at her.

“They discarded us Rulaia!” Iama hissed back. “They lied to us and turned us into whores for the men!”

“It is our way!” Rulaia exclaimed.

“It is not my way any longer!” Iama screeched.

Dysea shook her head slowly. “You are something Iama’Juturi.” She said with a warmth in her voice that everyone could hear. “You are free now. Come with us. Come with us and build a new life. One where you will be respected and honored and treated as you should be treated.”

Iama rose to her feet, the flimsy garment wrapped around her barely covering her lush body. “I... I can cook.” She stammered. “My mother taught me well. I can...”

“Sibfla... it’s decided then!” Julie spoke from where she stood. “Let’s give her a job Marty. Anything has to be better than what Yuriko’s mess sergeant is feeding us.”

Dysea nodded and slashed downward, severing the plastic bindings on her hands. “Then I welcome you to a new life Iama’ Juturi.”

It happened very quickly and she moved incredibly fast for a Kavalian female. Iama snatched Vharc from Dysea’s hand and whirled on the second female. She lifted the knife and buried it into her chest as deeply as her natural Kavalian strength would allow even as Aricia and others brought up their weapons and leveled them on her.

“Hold!” Martin bellowed as he stepped forward in front of Dysea and they watched Iama pull the knife from Rulaia’s chest.

Iama hissed into the dying woman’s face. “You may have enjoyed being a plaything for these monsters Rulaia... but I did not! Now you can rot with their remains!” Iama watched her body slump to the ground and she turned slowly seeing the weapons on her. She slowly held out Vharc to Dysea, careful not to make any sudden moves. “She... she would have betrayed you the first chance she got.” Iama said. “I have saved you the trouble.”

Dysea took Vharc from her and nodded. “Thank you Iama.” She said.

It was Aricia and Cirith who caught her before she fainted completely away and one of the Durcunusaan who had assaulted the building held up the sheet he had brought with him. Cirith grasped it quickly and wrapped it around Iama as they held her between them.

“We will take care of her.” Aricia said. “Let us do what we came to do and get out of here Beloved. The bodies are beginning to stink already.”

Martin nodded. “No argument from me.” He said tapping his jaw. “Endy... bring her down. Once we have the Intel we need we are out of here!”

“Copy that. We’ll be down in four minutes.”

Martin nodded. “Secure a perimeter around the COM building just in case we missed any of these assholes out in the jungle!” He barked out the order. He looked at Wayonn and Dysea. “Let’s go see what is still working.” He said.

Dysea returned Vharc to its place on her hip and nodded. Wayonn looked at her. “You took a great chance freeing her Dysea.” He spoke.

Dysea smiled. “No I didn’t Val’istar.” She replied. “I took a leap of faith. And we will need to make many more in the coming days.”

HADARIAN SPACE KAVALIAN FLAGSHIP PRIDE OF PUMAS

“...lied to me bitch!” Pusintin snarled as he gripped For'mya by her throat and tried very hard not to squeeze the life from her.

For'mya glared at him with dark brown eyes. “I didn’t lie to you!” She exclaimed as she tried to pry his hand from around her neck.

“You didn’t tell me about this fucking Writ thing!” Pusintin screamed.

“I will not sell out my people!” For'mya shouted. “Not to you! Not to anyone!”

“You are my mate now For'mya!” Pusintin growled. “Mine! It is my touch that you need to sate the burning in your blood now! You keep playing these games and I will insure you spend the rest of your days getting gang banged by my men as often as they want!”

“Fuck you!” For'mya snarled. “You... you may have my body... but you will never have my mind! Never!”

“I don’t need your mind bitch!” Pusintin barked. “All you elf females are nothing more than fuck toys! You’re too stupid to think for yourselves! That is why so many of you take Lycavorians as mates!”

“Bastard!” For'mya spat.

Pusintin squeezed her neck a little harder. “Don’t push me woman!” He snapped. “You are already close to that line!”

“Then kill me!” For'mya snarled at him. “Kill me and watch as your dreams of ruling the Union die with me!”

“I’ll just have Muton cut my son from your womb!” Pusintin barked.

“Not anymore!” For'mya snarled back just as vehemently. “If... if you kill me... you kill your son!” She almost laughed at him when she spoke the words.

“You think I’m stupid?” Pusintin growled.

“You should have thought about what you were doing more!” For'mya snapped at him. “When you injected me with your drugs... and then you raped me... you bound the life of your son with mine! Go ahead! Kill me! Do it!”

Pusintin turned to Muton who was standing to the side in the infirmary. “What is this bitch babbling about?” He barked.

Muton stepped forward cautiously. “She is right Marshall.” He said. “The combination of drugs that were used on her to accelerate the growth and keep her docile reacted differently with her elven genes than they do with our females. They have acted as a bridge of sorts. Any kind of attempt to remove the fetus from her womb now will kill them both. And if she dies, the fetus will die before I have an opportunity to remove it from her womb.”

“Muton... you are serious?” Pusintin gasped.

Muton nodded. “It is why I have had her stinking up my medical bay for the last hours.” He replied distastefully. “I discovered it shortly after your nephew tried to kill her. All the tests and blood samples I have taken since confirm it. She has not been the most cooperative and I have had to forcibly sedate her twice.”

Pusintin snarled loudly and released For'mya watching as she dropped to the deck holding her throat and taking deep breaths. “Fuck!” He shouted. “How long before she spits my son out Muton!” He barked.

“At the present rate of growth... I estimate six days Marshall. Give or take a few hours.” Muton answered. “As long as I monitor her on a continuous basis I might be able to speed that along but there is no guarantee. I suggest you kill her when we have the child... it will save us future problems.”

Pusintin turned back and looked at For'mya. “No! I’m not going to kill her. I’m going to fuck her every day and night for the rest of her life! In all of her holes and listen to her howl for more! You are mine now bitch!” He roared. “Mine!”

“Nubous ronnus!” For'mya hissed from the floor.

Pusintin turned back to Muton then. “Take a detachment and a transport and take her to Nefoa.” He ordered. “Stay with her at all times! They still may try to rescue her tight ass and I want to make sure I get to fuck it before they do. Nefoa is the best place right now. I have already arranged for a secure Wing to hold her. When she is ready to give birth you contact me and I’ll be there.”

Muton nodded his head. “As you order Marshall. May I take them from your personal guard?” He asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “No... I need them for other missions right now. Take them from the on call forces within the ship.”

Muton nodded. “I can’t convince you to allow me to kill her after we have the child?”

Pusintin grinned. “She annoys you that much my friend?”

Muton snorted. “I would cut her throat now if she did not mean so much to you.” He replied.

Pusintin laughed softly now as he became more relaxed. “Maybe I’ll let you fuck her once or twice. She is better than any of the biogenic females we have and if you rub her ears once or twice she’ll be begging you to fuck her harder. Just like she did with me.”

Muton shook his head. “I will stick with our own kind Marshall.” He said.

Pusintin nodded. “We’re leaving the system in an hour. Once we break into The Wilds take the ship and head to Nefoa.”

“They will not follow us?” Muton asked.

“Have the pilots cut through Kavalian space along the border. My nephew isn’t stupid enough to come after her then. No matter how much he wants to kill her.”

Muton nodded. “It will be done.”

“I need to speak with Keleru and decide who we are going to send to Earth.” He stated. “Contact me just before you are ready to depart.”

“Of course.”

Pusintin turned to leave but stopped and looked at him. “You have my permission to beat her as much as you want as long as it does not hurt my son.” He said. “Once this is all over I intend to break her properly.”

“I don’t think so you bastard!” For’mya snarled from the floor.

Pusintin laughed at her. “We’ll see bitch! We’ll see! I’ll have you begging me to fuck you mindless before I’m done.”

Pusintin turned quickly and left the medical bay. As soon as the doors shut and Muton secured them he rushed to For’mya’s side and helped her to her feet.

“By whatever gods you worship For’mya...” He gasped. “I thought he was going to kill you! What were you doing child?”

For’mya held his arm as he guided her to the chair. “I needed to be convincing Muton.” She said.

“Convincing yes... not suicidal.” Muton spoke.

For’mya looked at him. “You were very convincing yourself you know. Do you think he will buy what we told him?”

Muton held out the small scanner and began running it slowly over her skin. “He is clueless when it comes to medical matters that go beyond battlefield wounds.” He answered her quickly. “I have treated him for the better part of three centuries now and he trusts me. He trusts what I say. As long as he questions no one else about what we said we will be fine for the time being.”

“Will he?” For’mya asked.

Muton shook his head. “Doubtful.” He replied. “He is not the most approachable man within the KFI. Anyone who comes to him and begins to make accusations against those he trusts will be hard pressed to prove them before he kills them outright. Fedor and Eirene?”

For’mya dropped her hand to her abdomen. “They are not happy with me.” She said with a small loving smile. “But it needed to be done.”

“Perhaps... but I tend to agree with them that it was almost too risky.” Muton spoke. “It seems your time spent with Martin Leonidas rubbed off on you. I understand he has a penchant for taking unnecessary risks as well.”

For’mya felt warmth flow through her at Martin’s name and she nodded. “Yes... he does.” She stated.

“Well... let’s not take too many before we got off this ship.” He said.

For’mya looked at him. “Nefoa is in The Wilds Muton.” She asked.

Muton nodded. “Yes... and it is also the most heavily fortified base we have outside KFI space. Any attack against Nefoa will bring the might of the Ninth Kavalian Legion down on whoever attacks. Five hundred ships For’mya and that does not include the three million troops. All within a day’s travel to Nefoa. No... we will need to think of something else.”

For’mya dropped her other hand to her swollen abdomen. “Muton... they will be among us in four days not six.” She said confidently.

Muton looked at her. “You are sure?”

For’mya nodded. “Yes. I know my body... and I know what it felt like just days before Arram and Bryon were born. That same feeling is beginning to touch me again.”

Muton nodded. “Then we will need to work quickly once we arrive on Nefoa. Once we are clear of this ship and on our way I will send a message to the others and they will meet us on Nefoa. We will need to arrange a rescue of some sort in a very short time and it will be easier to contact your Martin Leonidas from The Wilds than from within Kavalian space.” He looked at her. “But no more risks!” He scolded her.

For’mya nodded. “No more risks.” She echoed him.

“Why do I not believe you when you say that?” Muton asked.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-FOUR

SCIMITAR

ONE HOUR FROM EARTH'S SYSTEM

Jomann leaned close to Eliani where she sat next to him at the massive table in the large conference room on deck three just beneath the large bubble observation lounge. Eliani's fern green eyes closed in bliss as he gently nuzzled her behind her left ear.

"I have spoken with my mother." He said softly. "They have postponed my brother's party until I return. Even though all that is happening with your mother has your attention, I was hoping you would come with me."

Eliani looked at him slightly surprised. "Jomann... that is not a question you have to ask me my love." She said.

"I didn't know if you would want to spend time with your family considering all that is happening." Jomann told her.

Eliani gripped his hand within hers and pulled it tightly to her chest and feeling the warmth of his knuckles against her large breasts. She leaned over and kissed him deeply in a very passionate and sensuous way but not overtly sexual, using her four-inch long tongue to tease the insides of his mouth as she had discovered he liked so much. The shivers of delight that coursed through her as his aura swept around her could never be matched by anyone else and Eliani blessed the day he came into her life. "You are my mate Jomann, my husband and my Anome." She told him softly. "I will always want to spend time with my family, but I will never deny you or your family Jomann. I... I am part of them now as well."

Jomann smiled at her, his ocean blue eyes causing tiny jolts of delight to ripple through her. "Indeed you are." He stated confidently. "My mother will truly enjoy your company. She was born and raised in Sparta and she is just as fiery now as she was when my father met her. You two will get along spectacularly."

Eliani smiled and leaned into him as more people filed into the huge conference room. Androcles had called this meeting only a short time ago and most of them knew it had to do with events on Hadaria and elsewhere. Eliani glanced over to where Andro sat whispering with Dutkne at the end of the table. She had not seen much of him since he had returned from the surface of Hadaria, though that made sense since she and Jomann had spent the last hours exploring each other's bodies and minds intimately. Sadi and the others sat to either side of him, watching in silence, Devra and Bren next to Caliria. Andro's Vanari mate and wife seemed very distracted for some reason, always looking at her brother quickly and then turning away. Denali and Lisisa sat across from her and Jomann, Arduri Re Mydala next to Lisisa as she had been for the last few days. If Eliani was any judge of character and intent, she would have to say that the Vanari was smitten with both Lisisa and Denali, though her brother was completely ignorant of the fact. Lisisa however was not, and she seemed to genuinely enjoy Arduri's company, more so than any other female had Lisisa had hung out with in the past years outside her family. Not to mention that her detecting the cautious desire for Arduri in Lisisa's scent was rather easy for her. Her sense of smell was probably the strongest among the non-pureblood Leonidas children, mainly because Andro and her father had spent years teaching her the nuances of tracking and sorting scents and their meaning.

Eliani was surprised to see Coren Re Mydala enter the conference room with the single Durcunusaan troop who had become his shadow whenever he left his quarters. He had refused to leave when Regent Ardan had departed and Andro did not have the heart to send him away. It would not help matters in the least Eliani knew, that his daughter Naesta was involved with the clone of her mother Ceuma and her Spartan mate Joci, nor would he be pleased to know that the young Vanari woman who had come here as his betrothed was now quite happily involved with Lu'ria's brother Am'uur if the sounds coming from his guest quarters were any indication.

Eliani's eyes grew a little wider when she saw Tastia walk in shortly after Coren clinging quite possessively to Am'uur's hand and making no attempt to hide it. She watched Coren's eyes grow a little wider at this and he started towards her, but she quickly took a chair at the table ignoring him completely. Am'uur simply stood behind her and folded his arms across his chest. Normya, Tir'ut, Zarah and Lucia rounded out those members of her family that were present on the SCIMITAR which made Eliani believe this definitely had something to do their mother For'mya.

She turned her head as Andro got to his feet and motioned to the Durcunusaan officer at the door. The man nodded and stepped out into the corridor, sealing the door behind him. Andro moved to the credenza that held coffee and Danishes and poured himself a steaming mug of his mother's coffee. "Thank you all for coming." He stated as he turned back around. "Please... feel free to get coffee or tea or a snack as the meeting progresses. This is to be very informal. Resumar, Athani and Shiria are joining us in a few moments via secure COM so...

The holodiscs along the bulkhead wall flared to life and suddenly they were all looking at images of Resumar, Athani and Shiria. The images flickered and cleared as the advanced Pralor communications array kicked in and focused and then it appeared as if they were in the room with them.

Andro chuckled. "Right on time brother." He said.

"Punctual." Resumar echoed. "That's me."

"Hah! Calling you punctual is like calling me neat." Denali exclaimed. "It doesn't go together."

"Oh... how true." Lisisa agreed with a grin as she leaned into his side.

"Andro... Arrarn and Narice aren't going to join us?" Normya asked.

Andro shook his head. "What I'm about to say does not leave this room. Is that clear to everyone?"

Andro saw the nods and then the heads turn to look at Coren Re Mydala who was not a fan of the Lycavorian people in the least. "Regent Re Mydala will be returning to the Beta Quadrant as soon as we get back to Earth." Andro continued seeing Coren's eyes grow wide as he looked at him. "He is not a threat unless he has friends within the High Coven and Kavalian government that he can contact from there. He may not like us very much, but I do not consider him an enemy. And there is another reason that I asked him to be here which I will get too later on." Andro sipped his coffee. "Arrarn and Narice are currently arriving on Kranek and within two hours will be moving to a rendezvous with a senior High Coven Admiral to discuss terms for his support of Narice in her bid to take control of the High Coven. All of our intelligence reports indicate that now would be a perfect time for her to make an attempt to take power and I have made the decision to support her as best as we are able. Cha'talla will be providing most of the manpower, while we will provide most of the logistical support."

"Saoi sibfla Andro!" Denali gasped leaning forward in his chair. "Does father know this fervon?"

Andro shook his head. "No. This is something I decided after several long conversations with Narice and Cha'talla over the past few weeks. We were going ahead with the plan we came up with over the course of the last weeks, which I will fill you in on today, but if we can now somehow pull the support of High Coven military forces that are in a position to help us... it is worth the risk."

Zarah looked at her brother and leaned forward in her chair now. She could sense the anger coming from Lucia over this information and she squeezed her hand silently. "Andro what..."

Andro turned his azure eyes on his sister and shook his head. "There will be no reprieve for Dante Zarah my sister." He spoke quickly. "Lucia... you can put your mind at ease because I can feel your anger. He will pay for what he has done, to both of you, I promise you that; no matter how long it takes or where he may hide." Andro waited until Lucia turned and met his eyes and nodded her head. He felt her anger begin to bleed off.

"Promise me Androcles." Lucia said softly. "Promise me and Zarah."

Andro nodded his head. "That is a promise I have already made to you and it is one I will keep." He stated.

Lucia looked at Zarah and then back to him. "Then we will do whatever you ask of us in order to help."

Andro nodded. "To begin with... we have had a deep agent within High Coven territory for many years now. Only seven of us know his identity and I won't reveal it now but you should know he has risen quite high within Aikiro's former inner circle and his last report to us was that now would be the perfect time to make this happen. The High Coven is in turmoil. The military is divided over not only the war with the Kavalians but also Aikiro's actions on Earth. Our asset is of the mind that the population is split... well. Many of the younger vampires are beginning to openly question the current state of affairs. It appears many of them were of the mind that the Cease Fire we all knew to be a cover so that we could train their dragons was actually real. They are tired of war with us. Narice and I are going to try and bring that to a close. There are far too many loyal vampires living within the Union for us to remain enemies when all it could take is a gentle nudge and the entire High Coven apparatus comes crumbling down. It is a risk that I am willing to take."

"Androcles... father is going to have a fit!" Lisisa said stating the obvious.

Andro nodded his head. "Probably... but I will deal with father. I have not told him Lisi because of his views of the High Coven and all of you know this. Our mother has mitigated his distrust and hatred for vampires through the years with their love for each other but after what they did to Zarah and the fact that they are responsible for grandfather's death... I don't believe he could make an honest tactical decision in regards to them."

"How big a risk is this Andro?" Resumar asked from the transmission.

"I won't lie to any of you." Andro said returning to his seat. "The risks are extreme, but Narice is willing to take the chance. And so am I. Arrarn is with her because the escape plan will require his skills as a pilot if they need to use it. Cha'talla is with her because of the recent decision by Moran to release all Immortals from their service to the High Coven."

"Release them?" Tir'ut gasped from where he stood behind Normya's chair at the table. "Androcles... you are serious?"

Andro nodded. "It is being kept very low key by everyone within the High Coven, but something happened that made Moran give the order. We believe it was in large part because of the transmission that your family did. I had Dilaen beam it across the entire High Coven on fundamentally pirated channels so that it could not be jammed. The exodus began within hours of this transmission happening."

"And my mother does nothing?" Lucia asked surprised.

"We know she is alive... aside from that we know nothing." Andro told her. "She has not returned to your homeworld and her position is being kept from even those within the High Coven government."

"She is waiting to see who is loyal to her and who is not." Lucia said confidently. "When she discovers this then she will strike."

Andro nodded in agreement. "That is what Narice and I believe as well, which is why now is the perfect time to make this happen. My decision on this is final and I did not tell any of you because I will bear the results of failure alone if we can't make it happen. And father's wrath will be mine alone to endure." The room fell silent for a long moment and then Andro began again.

"Now that aside... as I said earlier... Regent Re Mydala will be returning to Austrova when we return to Earth. Since Regent Lamurrion has already departed on CITADEL ONE, he will be traveling on board the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser ARCH DEMON. She will have with her a full Strike Wing in support. Deni... you and Lisisa will be in command."

Denali and Lisisa looked at him with shock on their faces. "WHAT?" Denali almost shouted.

"You are ready for your own command brother." Andro said. "Kranek proved that. With Lisisa as your support you will do fine."

"Andro... you're sending us away?" Lisisa exclaimed. "Why? Now is when you need us the most! We are strongest when our family is together! You know that!"

Andro nodded his head holding up his hand. "Yes I do... and you are correct. You will not be there long so don't start complaining. Dutkne is returning to facilitate the merger of the Protectorate into the Union and hopefully by the time you arrive Regent Lamurrion will have been able to lay the groundwork for a real treaty between the Vanari and our people." Andro got to his feet. "If so then I will need a member of our family to represent us. That is where you and Deni come in. If not... you will insure that Inamarno and mother's work on the counteragent for the OSG chemical is then distributed to who it needs to go to and you will return. I do not trust this Corbin Faith person of the OSG anymore than I trust our uncle and I will not go tit-for-tat with the Vanari Board of Regents over issues that no longer apply to our people." Andro looked at Coren. "And you may relay that message when you return Regent Re Mydala. What I told you and Ardan before still applies. If the Vanari do not wish to let the past remain where it belongs and move into the future then all trade between our people will stop effective immediately. There will be no discussion on that whatsoever. Dutkne will be acting with my full authority as well as that of my father."

"So you will threaten and cajole us into doing what you want?" Coren asked with a touch of sarcasm.

Andro shook his head. "Not at all sir, but I will not associate with a group or species that does not wish to associate with us. I will not allow the status quo to continue. Your people, those that actually travel to Protectorate space, have free reign no matter where they go. They are not hounded, harassed, watched or limited to certain areas of different planets as you do with my people within Vanari space. If you wish to discriminate against us... that is your right. It is our right to refuse to trade with you and refuse access into our territory. Which is what will happen."

"The Board of Regents will not be forced into anything!" Coren snarled.

“I’m not forcing them to do anything.” Andro said. “I’m simply explaining how it will be going into the future.”

“Tastia and my children?” Coren asked. “Will they be returning with me or will you hold them hostage here?”

“I’m holding no one hostage Coren Re Mydala.” Andro said. “And that comment is part of the reason why I will not tolerate you or your Board of Regents. I do not know why you hate us so... or why you seem to consider us beneath you. It is obvious there are others among your people who do not view us in the same light. To be frank... with everything that is happening I no longer have the patience to discover why you feel the way you do. I have already spoken with Naesta. She is on Earth as we speak and you can ask her yourself if you wish when you arrive... but she has chosen to remain here. She does not want to leave what she has discovered. Nirilo is returning for the sole purpose of bringing the Lycavorian woman who he loves back here. Caliria is returning as well to continue her studies.” This announcement caused Caliria’s head to whip around and look at him with wide green eyes as well as the members of his own family, including Sadi and the others. “As for Arduri, Devra and Tastia... they can make their own decisions.”

“I have already said I will not be returning.” Devra told him from her seat. She held Bren’s left hand in both of hers. “For the very same reasons that Naesta is remaining. I have discovered my future here and I will not let it go so easily.”

“Nor I.” Tastia spoke from her chair.

Coren looked at her in shock. “Tastia... you are to be my... my wife!” He gasped.

Tastia shook her head. “You never intended for me to be your wife Coren.” She said. “I would be nothing more than a trophy for you to have on your arm. I will not live my life like that.” She looked up at where Am’uur stood behind her and took his large hand in hers. “I have discovered something I want to explore far more than I want to be your trophy.” She looked back to him. “I will be staying as well Coren!”

“That is not acceptable to me!” Coren snapped.

“At this stage in my life I don’t particularly care what is acceptable to you or not.” Tastia told him. “I have made my decision.”

Arduri jumped right in after her. “I will return father.” She stated simply. “But only to insure that this arrangement with Cruor Ahn Vernalo does not take place.”

Coren’s eyes were wide now. “Arduri... you have agreed to become his wife! A contract has been drawn up! You were compatible during the Celebration of the Hundreds! You can not back out now! Your hand has been promised to him! You agreed to this!”

Arduri met his eyes. “I have changed my mind. And I have every intention of backing out. You know as well as I that even if we are compatible, that is not the full measure of what forms our unions.” She stated evenly. “I’m sorry if that disappoints you father but that is what I want.”

Coren glared at Devra then. “This is your fault!” He snapped at her. “You have done this Devra!”

Devra met his eyes evenly. “I gave birth to them Coren... but I have never tried to rule what they think unlike you.” She stated. “Does it bother you so much that they do not adhere to your fool ideals?”

“It is the way of our people!” Coren shouted.

“And our ways need to change.” Devra stated simply.

“So you will consort with animals instead of your own species!” Coren snarled.

“Regent Re Mydala, have you ever considering listening to your children for once instead of dictating what you believe they should do?” Andro stated.

“Do not lecture me boy!” Coren roared. “You... you who have killed millions!”

Andro nodded. “And I will live with that fact every day for the rest of my natural life.” He said solemnly. “I believe the portion of this meeting that you needed to hear is over. The Durcunusaan will escort you back to your quarters sir.”

Coren knew he could do nothing, not while he was here. He allowed the Durcunusaan troop to lightly grasp his arm and urge him toward the now open door. “This way sir.” He said.

“This ploy of yours will not work Androcles Leonidas!” Coren snarled as he moved into the corridor through the door. “I see right through what you are trying to do!”

Andro nodded as the doors closed. “No doubt.” He said softly. He paused for a moment and then looked up. “Ok... now I will inform all of you what is going to take place over the course of the next few days.”

“Jeez fervon... you mean there is more?” Resumar exclaimed.

“Unfortunately... yes.” Andro said.

“It’s about mother isn’t it?” Eliani asked. “About our brother and sister that she carries?”

Andro nodded. “In a manner of speaking yes.” He answered. “I do not know why she has chosen to not remove the inhibitor from within her body. I gave the location to our siblings just as you told me Eli. It would be so much easier if I could talk with her... but I can’t. We are too far out of range for me to touch our brother and sister now either; not without a Max power Neural Booster and at least the Elder Mother within the connection with Elynth and I, so my options are limited and there is more going on that we did not know before leaving Earth.”

“What options?” Deni asked.

Androcles looked at them. “The Union Senate will convene to hear our uncle’s ridiculous claim to the throne. I have spoken with tenna Deia and the Feravomir since leaving Hadaria and they are in agreement that the Senate will never allow him to fulfill this birthright claim. Father and our mothers have succeeded in their mission and will be returning to Kranek to further plan ongoing missions. We will not reveal that father is alive just yet. That must remain secret until such time as we discover mother has somehow made contact with us or we know she is free of our uncle’s control.”

“Andro... how will we know that?” Lisisa asked. “If you can’t touch them... surely father will not be able to. You are the one who gave them awareness.”

Andro nodded his head. “Yes I know. When I spoke to them they told me of someone... a Kavalian doctor who they thought was attempting to help mother. They told me he was strange in some way. Different. Not like the Kavalians that they had seen so far in mother’s memories. I didn’t have time to press them further because they were still too weak but if that is indeed true then we may have more allies than even Mican and your rebels fervon.” He said looking at Resumar. “Has Mican ever mentioned someone else? Someone not within his group that could feel as they do?”

Resumar shook his head. “No.”

Shiria shook her head as well. “I am not aware of anything either.” She told him.

“Could there be others that you are not aware of Val’istar?” Andro asked her.

“If there are then they have a level of security that I have not seen.” Shiria answered. “You must understand Androcles... Keleru is paranoid to the extreme. If he had even a hint that someone was disloyal or acting against his rule he would not hesitate to crush them completely. He would destroy them utterly.”

“He has done this in the past I take it?” Andro said.

Shiria nodded. “Many hundreds of years ago yes. He...” Shiria stopped talking and her face turned reflective.

“What?” Andro asked.

“It was six... no seven thousand years ago.” Shiria said. “A small group of individuals thought to protest some of his edicts. They wanted more freedoms. He branded them religious fanatics and butchered thousands of them.”

“Why does this make you pause?” Andro asked.

“They were an odd bunch if I remember correctly.” Shiria answered. “And their numbers were far greater than some simple group that formed in a matter of months. It was almost as if they were spread out among the populous naturally.”

“Naturally?” Andro said softly.

“Yes.”

“Interesting.” He continued. “Does the name Muton mean anything to you?”

Shiria shook her head. “No... why?”

“It is the name they gave me.” Andro said.

“No... I’m sorry.” She said.

“Fervon... are you ready?” Andro asked.

Resumar nodded in reply. “As soon as the order goes out.” He replied. “Power was not an issue with SPARTA’S WRATH and her Phased Quantum Fusion Core. It was only a matter of stripping as many generators as we could without endangering those who went back. Avi and 341 have integrated them into the ship’s systems now. It’s a patch job but it will work until something more permanent can be devised. Uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa are confident in their plan to extract Ckhoa's sister and the other females as well. Mican and six of his team will be accompanying them while Na'lia and Dario escort the remainder to Shiria's fortress."

Androcles nodded. "Very well. We..."

"Andro... will you dispense with the rensibfla and just tell us what is going on?" Eliani exclaimed.

Andro looked at her and a small smile tugged at his lips. "As you wish." He stated. "The Union Senate will convene and hear our uncle's claim to birthright as I said."

"And?" Denali asked.

"Tenna Deia and the Feravomir believe they will then vote to condemn his claim and reveal that father and I have already brought the ruling bloodlines back into order and that it is bloodline that is primary in determining who rules." He said.

"Yes... we already had that figured out." Deni spoke quickly. "What aren't you telling us?"

"When the Senate does this our uncle will fly into a frenzy." Andro said. "All of you know this."

"And hopefully his heart explodes, but we can't get that lucky!" Eliani snapped. "What is going on Andro?"

Andro returned to his chair and looked at them. "When the Kavalians discover that their plan to have our uncle take the throne will not bear fruit they will undoubtedly fly into a rage as well and come at us from every direction."

"And... so?" Deni asked.

"Once the Union Senate makes its announcement I am going to strike first." Andro said seeing their eyes go wide. "I am going to launch a premeditated and concerted attack within Kavalian space that I hope will sow enough confusion and destruction within their ranks to buy father enough time to find and rescue mother and our siblings before they can fully bring their forces to bear on us. War is unavoidable now... no matter what road or path we choose to take and no matter how we try to avoid it... war is going to happen. I'm just going to make sure we have the advantage. At least initially."

"Andro... Andro the Union has never... we have never struck first." Resumar spoke from within the transmission with stunned eyes. "It is against everything we believe. Everything we covet."

Andro nodded. "I know fervon... and that is why I have not told anyone what I have been planning until now. I think the Feravomir and Tenna Deia may have some inkling that I am planning something, grandfather Riall as well, but they don't know what exactly. It is already in motion and as with the plans for a coup in the High Coven; I will bear the success or failure of this plan on my own. We will either succeed or we will not. The odds are slightly against us to be honest, but father always taught us to ignore the odds and that is what I'm doing now."

"And if it fails?" Lisisa asked.

Andro met her eyes without doubt. "Then I will have wasted lives and our most advanced ships and equipment in a futile effort and the blame will be mine Lisi." He told her softly. "And we will be at war regardless."

The conference room was silent for a long moment as everyone absorbed what he had just told them.

"What can we do?" Zarah was the first to speak. "Tell us Andro... tell us what you need us to do. You have stood alone, carried these burdens alone in order to protect us... protect all of us, and you have done it for far too long. I will not allow you to do it any longer! Tell us what you need us to do? We are a family... and we do nothing alone! Our parents taught us that! Now we need to start acting like it."

"Zarah's right." Resumar's voice came from within transmission. "As much as it pains me to say that... she's right!"

"Nubous forn!" Zarah snapped at him but her eyes held nothing but love in them.

"Out with it Andro." Eliani spoke now. "Tell us all of it. This is our decision now as well." Her eyes touched each of her siblings and they all nodded without hesitation.

Androcles Leonidas nodded his head. "Very well." He stated. "Together then."

Caliria waited until the conference room had emptied before rising to her feet and moving up to where Andro was pouring himself another mug of coffee. Sadi and Ne'Veha moved on either side of her while Carisia and Lu'ria remained where they were in their chairs equally puzzled but unwilling to rush to conclusions.

“You... you are sending me away Androcles?” Caliria asked softly.

“Andro... what is going on?” Sadi asked. “What are you doing? Inamarno belongs with us.”

“Yes!” Ne'Veha exclaimed. “You did not talk to us about this! You can't just order her away like this!” Andro's eyes never left Caliria's face as he turned around and gazed at her. “I am not sending you away Inamarno.” He told her softly.

“What do you call it then?” Caliria asked.

“Giving you the opportunity to discover what it is you truly want. The opportunity to truly discover who you are.” Andro replied.

“I want you!” Caliria snapped. “I want all of you! And I know who I am!”

“Do you?” Androcles asked.

“Andro?” Sadi declared almost angrily.

“This is about this morning isn't it?” Caliria asked. “About what you heard me say to my mother.”

Sadi and Ne'Veha both glanced at her. “What happen this morning?” Sadi demanded to know.

“Do you honestly believe I want to do this?” Andro asked her. “Do you think I want to have you away from me? From us?”

“Then why?” Caliria stammered.

“Because Inamarno, what you have endured is beyond anything anyone should have to endure.” Andro told her gently. “What you have experienced is more than most people will ever imagine... let alone experience. You need to find your center again... and you can not do that here feeling as you do. I do not want you here if you are not completely sure.”

“Andro!” Carisia exclaimed coming to her feet now.

Andro ignored her and moved closer to Caliria, taking her beautiful face within his hands. He used his thumbs to caress the smooth cornflower blue skin of her cheeks. “Remaining here with us Inamarno... when you do not know who you are or what you truly want is not only unhealthy... it is a crime by us if we make you stay.”

“Do you... do you hate me?” She stuttered the words.

“Hate you?” Andro gasped. “Inamarno I love you. We all love you. With all that we are. And that is why we need to let you find your way. You question everything around you... I can sense it within you. You question my love for you. You question how I can feel as I do for you. For all of you. You question everything you have been raised to believe all of these years about many different things. These are the items you need to work out within yourself. Only when you have come to terms with that can you be with us and be happy.”

“I... I didn't mean what I said this morning Androcles.” Caliria said.

Andro smiled gently and leaned over to kiss her soft violet lips. “Yes you did Inamarno.” He said softly with a smile. “I care less about what you said than I do about you and your well being. Perhaps... perhaps I have rushed everything in order to insure you are with us. That is my mistake and I apologize to you for that Inamarno. My world... our world is foreign to you, I know that now. And it was my selfish actions that reasoned you would accept it without any question to be with us. You obviously have doubts. Doubts about me... about what you feel. Our difference in ages. So much of it.”

“But it... it does feel so normal Androcles. So right... when I am with you and...” Caliria stated gripping his arms tightly.

“And what you need to do is reconcile that with the conflicts that still reside within your mind and heart.” He told her. “Our feelings will never change Inamarno. You belong to us and we to you... and only when you are ready to accept that completely can you truly be happy with us.”

“I'm... I'm sorry.” Caliria sobbed looking up at his face.

“There is nothing to be sorry for.” Androcles answered pulling her tightly to him and feeling her arms wrap around his waist as Sadi and the others crowded around, pressing their own bodies close to theirs. “You have done nothing wrong. You will still be a Princess of the Union Inamarno. At least to us.”

Eliani smelled her the instant she walked into the medical bay and she felt her hormones cry out excitedly as the scent of wild strawberries filtered across her senses. She moved quickly from her private entrance into the main portion of the medical bay and saw the Durcunusaan soldier standing near the crew entrance to the bay. Her eyes shifted and she saw Brandi standing beside the medical bed, with Elenor Faith sitting on the bed looking pale and weak and the older man standing to her other side. Eliani crossed the distance to them immediately.

“What is wrong?” She asked looking at Elenor, real concern in her voice.

“I know how... I know how you must feel about us...” Brendi began. “But my mother is sick and...”

Eliani looked at her. “You don’t know half of what you think you do Brendi Faith and the sooner you realize that the better it will be.” Eliani told her as she moved closer to the bed and lifted her hands.

“Coming here was a mistake Brendi.” Elenor Faith spoke looking up. “Let us return to the room we...”

“You will sit right there.” Richard Faith declared to his wife before turning to Eliani. “My wife... she has not been feeling well for several days. Even before your people took us from Edolus. Brendi said you... she said you could help her because you are Hadarian. She said you could discover what is wrong.”

Eliani glanced at Brendi quickly. “Did she?” She said softly. She turned back to Elenor and rested her hands on the woman’s shoulders, her hands flaring a soft white in color Brendi noticed, though her mother did not. “You stay right there.” She stated firmly. “And tell me what is wrong...?”

“Elenor. Elenor Faith.”

“A pleasure to meet you Lady Faith. I am Eliani Leonidas.” She answered.

“The Princess?” Elenor asked. “Like... like your sister?”

Eliani smiled warmly. “Yes... like Lisisa my sister.” She answered. “Your body temp is four degrees higher than normal and you are extremely dehydrated.”

“How... how do you know that without...?”

Eliani pulled her hand back slightly and let Elenor see the soft white glow radiating from her palm. “I’m Hadarian.” She answered. “Well... half Hadarian. I’m the Chief Medical Officer on my brother’s ship.”

“We have... we have heard of your people.” Richard said. “You are said to be gifted doctors.”

“She collapsed as we were retuning from breakfast.” Brendi told Eliani. “She won’t tell me what is wrong with her. The Durcunusaan soldier there carried her here.”

“I don’t know what is wrong.” Elenor spoke softly. “I... have not felt right for several weeks to be honest. I feel weak and faint at times.”

“We have always been healthy.” Richard Faith continued. “Nothing like this has ever happened before.”

“Lady Faith... may I examine you?” Eliani asked.

Elenor looked at her husband quickly. Brendi shook her head at this. “Mother... they already know of the genetic enhancements the Eridiani go through. That is not secret! Just let her examine you!”

Richard Faith nodded. “We have come this far.” He said.

Elenor nodded her head then. “Please.” She said.

Eliani nodded and quickly removed the waist length jacket she wore over her jumpsuit. Her dark gray t-shirt like material of the upper portion of the jumpsuit strained against her large breasts and Richard Faith shifted on his feet in discomfort. Brendi shook her head in amusement at her father. “Papa stop!” She exclaimed.

Eliani looked at her and then to her father. “What?” She asked turning back to Brendi.

“The Eridiani are... we are more modest in how we dress.” Brendi said. “We are not shy... but we do not...”

Eliani smiled and nodded her head. “I guess you are in for a surprise when we get to Sparta then.” She said. She turned back to Elenor and lifted her hands once more. Both of her palms flared softly and she began to slowly draw them over Elenor Faith’s body. Most of the Hadarian Healers relied on instruments to find or discover an issue in the men or women they were treating and then they applied their healing power. Eliani, her mother, her aunt Sivana and Eurin were among perhaps five or six dozen Healers who preferred to locate whatever the problem was using their unique healing abilities to detect oddities within a person’s body. They believed it allowed them to treat the ailment more effectively if they were able to detect it right down to the genetic level.

Eliani’s hands dropped past Elenor’s shoulders and stopped directly over her chest. Her face creased somewhat and she rotated her hands into a different position and then slowly around the side of her chest and under her armpit. “Have you eaten anything unusual in the last few weeks? Gone anywhere off Edolus perhaps... on vacation?”

Elenor shook her head. “No.”

“We are not encouraged to take vacations.” Richard Faith told her.

Eliani reached up with her left hand and used her PK power to draw down the metallic medical arm from the ceiling above them. Elenor saw this and drew back quickly with a gasp of alarm. Elaini’s eyes grew wide and she gripped Elenor’s hand with her right hand. “Forgive me! I didn’t mean to frighten you!” She spoke quickly.

“Mother I told you that many Lycavorians have this ability.” Brendi said.

“Well seeing it is quite different!” Elenor exclaimed.

Eliani smiled. “It’s my fault.” She said. “I tend to concentrate when I’m treating someone and I forgot you are not used to our species. Or what many of us can do.”

“We have... we have seen them before on Edolus.” Elenor said. “But none that ever used this skill.”

Eliani tilted her head slightly. “On Edolus... really?”

Richard Faith nodded. “Traders mostly I think.” He answered.

“Interesting.” Eliani said glancing at Brendi quickly before drawing the medical arm over in front of her. “My species is able to use our minds to talk among each other. Not all of us mind you, but many. The skill in this is measured by the pureness of our blood and is measured in Tiers. There are six tiers currently. Many do not advance this skill past the third tier, but some of us, some of us were born Tier sixes because of our blood. This allows us to utilize this skill, what we call Mindvoicing, in other ways.”

“You are... you are among this group?” Elenor asked her. “These Tier Sixes you called them?”

Eliani nodded. “Me... all of my brothers and sisters. Yes.”

“Your brother as well?” Richard asked.

“If you are referring to Androcles... then I would have to say no. Andro and our father, for lack of a better explanation, they are in a league of their own.” Eliani looked at Elenor then. “Lady Faith this will take a drop of your blood and run some standard scans that will appear on the small screen behind me. You won’t feel a thing I promise.”

Elenor nodded and Eliani directed the arm to her right shoulder. The narrow tip touched her skin for only a split second and then drew back with a mechanical whirring noise. Elenor looked at it with wonder and smiled at her husband. Eliani turned and drew the portable medical console to her side using her PK power once more. She tapped the console several times and looked at Brendi who moved up beside her. “You should have told me your mother was sick.” She said softly.

Brendi looked at her. “I didn’t know until she was back here.” She answered somewhat defensively. “You’ve had me prisoner for the last two weeks so I could not contact her like I normally do.” Eliani grunted in reply.

“You are not a prisoner.” Eliani spoke.

“Oh... what do you call it?” Brendi asked.

Eliani looked at her, admiring her exceptional beauty. “Would you prefer to be out there on your own Brendi Faith?” Eliani asked finally. “I’m quite sure with your unique skills at thinking you know everything you would survive with no problems.”

Brendi lowered her eyes slightly embarrassed. “Point taken.” She said softly. She looked back up at Eliani. “You know... you seem less agitated the last couple of days.”

“Do I?” Eliani asked.

Brendi smiled. “Yes. I wonder... does it have anything to do with the rumors flying around the ship?”

“What rumors?” Eliani demanded.

“That your boyfriend finally clipped your wings and tamed you.” Brendi asked with a smile.

“Stop calling him that!” Eliani hissed softly. “Jomann did not tame me! He made me his mate!”

“So the rumors are true!” Brendi said. “I thought you hated him from the way you were talking before.”

Richard and Elenor Faith looked at each other as they heard their daughter and Eliani talking back and forth. Richard Faith shrugged his shoulders at his wife.

“I didn’t hate him.” Eliani said. “My blood was...”

The console chimed and drew Eliani’s attention back to the screen as several different smaller screens popped up. Brendi could not make anything of the information that was being displayed on the screen but it was obvious Eliani Leonidas did. She stabbed down on the console several times urgently.

“What is it?” Brendi asked with worry in her voice now.

Eliani turned to the Durcunusaan troop by the door. “Seal the Medical Bay!” She barked. “Activate Containment Protocol Three One from outside! And get my brother down here! And have him bring Devra!” The soldier nodded immediately and was backing through the door calmly. “At once Princess!”

“And find the other two Eridiani and bring them here!” Eliani barked. “Quickly!”

“As you order!” The Durcunusaan snapped as the doors to the medical bay shut and were sealed.

Eliani turned to Brendi. “What is going on?” Brendi demanded.

“Brendi?” Elenor stammered. “What...”

Eliani held up her hands. “It is only a precautionary tactic.” She stated keeping her voice as calm as possible.

“Precautionary tactic for what?” Richard Faith demanded. “What... what did you find in my wife?”

“I need you to trust me.” Eliani said turning to Brendi. “I need all of you to trust me.”

“What? Why? What is going on?” Brendi demanded.

Eliani turned back to Elenor. “Lady Faith... you have been infected by a very virulent form of a Vanari disease. It is called the Facara Virus. If left untreated it is one hundred percent fatal.”

“Oh my god!” Elenor gasped. “But... but how?”

“Have you come in contact with any Vanari besides those on this ship?” Eliani asked. “Over the last six months?”

Elenor shook her head quickly. “No! Never!”

“This is not a naturally occurring disease Lady Faith. The Vanari have all but eradicated it from their society according to their medical journals.” Eliani told her quickly. “It had to be introduced into your body in some form.”

“We have seen no Vanari except those on your ship!” Richard Faith raged. “Our people do not tend to get along! The OSG enslaves them and that carries over to their feelings towards us!”

“Eliani...” Brendi’s voice carried genuine fear in it as Eliani met her eyes. “Tell me... tell me you can fix this!” She almost cried. “Tell me that you can save my mother!”

“I need... I need all of you to calm down.” Eliani told them looking at Brendi. “I need you to strip down to your undergarments jochath Duhiraared. Your father as well. I need to examine all of you.”

Brendi did not understand the Lycavorian words, but she understood the urgency in Eliani’s words and she began to immediately strip out of the uniform she wore. She looked at her father who was unmoving.

“Papa! Enough of your modesty! Now is not the time! Eliani is a doctor! Do it!”

His daughter’s words shocked him out of his trance and Richard Faith began to disrobe as well.

“A Vanari disease?” Andro asked.

Eliani nodded her head and touched the screen she, Andro and Devra were looking at. “See these amino strands. They are unique to the Facara Virus. They are present in Elenor and the twins Tasha and Nicolle, but not Richard or Brendi.”

Devra shook her head. “I don’t understand Eliani.” She spoke. “The Facara Virus has been eradicated on all but the most remote Vanari colonies. It has been for six hundred years. It was a disease exclusive to my people. How is it that they have the active strands within them?”

“It’s been modified.” Eliani replied touching the screen once more and watching as the two separate views merged into one. “Someone has altered the molecular design of the disease at its base level and changed its protein sequence. The alleles are in different sequences. In this form it can be used against other species with equally lethal results.”

“So this was made?” Andro asked.

Eliani nodded. “Yes.”

“Eli... who has the skill to do this?” Andro asked.

“Well... modifying the disease itself is relatively easy. Weaponizing it as they have is another story. The better question fervon is who would want to weaponize this disease?” Eliani answered. “It’s not contagious and that is why I canceled the quarantine... but it’s kill ratio is nearly perfect. It infects the respiratory system rapidly after its incubation period of four to six weeks from the time of infection. Symptoms appear as flu like but since most people dismiss flu symptoms now, they just take prescribed meds, it is not properly treated. Once the disease embeds itself in the tissue of the lungs it is lethal one hundred percent of the time. It would take very specific equipment and facilities that are not uncommon... but the type of equipment I'm thinking of is regulated heavily within Union space. If I had a sample of the actual infecting agent I could probably narrow it down with mother's help... but right now no."

"We were never able to determine a person had it until they were diagnosed and by then it was too late." Devra said. "Once a cure was created we began immediate inoculations for all Vanari. How did you determine Elenor Faith had it?"

Eliani looked at her. "Lycavorians require far more protein in our diets than most species. I'm sure you noticed this in Bren's diet?"

Devra nodded thinking back on what she had seen her husband consume since they had been together. "Yes."

"We need the additional amino acids and Polyploidy elements found within protein. Lady Faith has been enjoying our food profoundly the last few days according to her own words. The polyploidy source elements in our food are what accelerated the rate at which the disease was metastasizing within her system and she began to show signs of the disease in its very early stages without actually suffering all of the effects."

"So someone turned this disease into a Bio-Weapon." Andro said.

Eliani looked at him. "Looks that way." She said.

"Androcles..." Devra gasped. "This is not something we would do. We do not have any kind of Bio-Weapons! They are forbidden among the Vanari."

Andro nodded his head. "As they are in the Union." He stated. "Eli... since it's just Brendi's mother and sisters it must be something that they all use. Something feminine perhaps, that they brought with them?"

"You... Eliani you treated them? Please tell me you were able to treat them." Devra asked.

Eliani nodded. "Yes. Lady Faith will feel fine in a few hours and Tasha and Nicolle had not yet reached a point where the disease would affect them. It's gone now except for the samples I took from their blood."

Devra breathed a sigh of relief and nodded. "We must find out how this happen." She stammered. "This... this could be very bad if my people are accused of having made any type of Bio-Weapon."

"I was just going to start questioning them when you got here." Eliani said motioning them over to where Brendi stood with her family.

Richard Faith had dressed already, while his wife and daughters sat on the single bed side-by-side in the long hospital gowns, Elenor between her two youngest children. Richard Faith stood a little straighter as he watched the tall and exceptionally built young Lycavorian step up with the Vanari Regent and Eliani Leonidas. The young woman had impressed him with her knowledge and skill, and her ability to put all of them at ease. Her concern had been very genuine and she had gone out of her way to try and make them comfortable as she treated them. Richard Faith considered himself an excellent judge of character, and though he had never met a Hadarian or a Lycavorian for that matter before coming to this ship, he found himself duly impressed more and more each day. They were not treated as prisoners as he had expected they would be. They had guards yes, but the men were polite and very accommodating in answering whatever questions they had no matter how off the wall. They suggested places to go and visit when they arrived on Earth, foods to eat, places to shop. Even though he knew what Brendi had been part of, there was obviously no harsh feelings towards her judging by her interaction with this Eliani and others. He watched the young man approach and knew right away this was not someone to be trifled with. The young man carried himself with a confident grace and had an aura about him that said he would brook no obstacle. He watched Eliani and them stop in front of the bed and how Brendi fidgeted on her feet so close to the man, who she had almost had a hand in killing, though he did not yet know who the man was.

"Mister and Mrs. Faith, Tasha, Nicolle, this is my brother Androcles." Eliani told them. "I think you already know of Regent Re Mydala."

Andro held out his hand to Richard. "Mister Faith." He spoke. "A pleasure to meet you."

Richard looked surprised and he reached out slowly to take the hand, feeling the power within his grasp. "You... you shake hands with the father of the woman who attempted to kill you and your wives." He said in disbelief.

"Papa!" Brendi exclaimed. "You don't have to remind him!"

Andro glanced at Brendi with a smile and then back to Richard Faith. “They did not succeed and your daughter was not aware of the ultimate goal of the man who led the team.” Andro said. “I don’t hold grudges sir. And it was not your daughter’s intent to do me or my mates harm. She would not be here if that was the case.”

“I’d be rotting in some hole somewhere. Probably in little pieces.” Brendi muttered under her breath, though only Eliani heard her and looked at her with smiling fern green eyes.

“I... I wish to thank you for what you have done.” Richard said. “I... I did not expect such action from...”

Andro smiled and when he did the severe look he could project disappeared. This served to put all of them more at ease. “You did not expect Lycavorians to be this way?”

Faith shook his head. “The few Lycavorians we have seen on Edolus were... they were very...”

“Dangerous looking.” Tasha Faith finished the statement for her father.

Andro looked at Eliani quickly and then back to Richard. “You have seen my people on Edolus?” He asked.

“I meant to tell you that.” Eliani said. “Mercenaries probably.”

Andro looked at Eliani again sharing a silent thought with his sister and then he nodded his head.

“Yes... more than likely... but the majority of my people are not like them. We need to ask you a few questions if we could. We are trying to determine how exactly you caught this disease being the main one.”

Elenor looked at him and shook her head. “I do not know.” She said honestly. “We do not travel off world, it is strongly discouraged.”

“Discouraged?” Andro asked looking at Brendi.

Brendi nodded. “Forbidden is the more appropriate word.” She said. “At least it is for those who are not members of the OSG or the Eridiani military complex. I told you... they use family members as sources of control and they aren’t just going to let them go where they want because then they have no control.”

“Have you received any gifts from off world then?” Andro asked. “Perhaps purchased some different food or something from off world. Maybe...” He stopped talking when he saw the look on her face. “Lady Faith?”

Richard looked at his wife. “Elenor?” He asked.

“I received a package three weeks ago from Corbin.” She answered finally.

“What?” Brendi gasped.

“Why did you not tell me?” Richard demanded of his wife. “We agreed to take nothing from him!”

“He is our son Richard.” Elenor said.

“He has not been our son for almost two decades!” Richard Faith spat. “Not since the OSG took him and twisted him into what he is now! You should have told me Elenor!”

“What was in the package Lady Faith?” Andro pressed her.

“Nothing spectacular.” Elenor answered quickly. “Just some new clothes and some new perfume that Corbin’s note said I might like.”

“Perfume?” Eliani asked, her eyes lifting and jarring her from the very pleasant scent of Brendi next to her.

“What sort of perfume?” Andro asked causing Elenor’s face to look at him oddly.

Eliani chuckled and moved closer to her. “Lycavorians don’t use perfume Lady Faith.” She said. “It tends to hurt our sense of smell and we prefer the natural scent of a person. That is like a perfume to us.”

“Truly?” Elenor asked.

Eliani nodded. “Everyone has their own distinct scent... and to us it is like perfume.” She replied. “This perfume your son sent you was in liquid form I take it?”

Elenor nodded. “Yes... a small spray bottle. It was unmarked but his note told me he had purchased it special for me on the Eridiani Homeworld of Casbin. It smelled very nice and I let Tasha and Nicolle use it. They are... they like to be matching.”

“Mother!” Nicolle spoke demurely as she and Tasha looked at the floor embarrassed.

“I don’t suppose you still have it?” Andro asked.

Elenor Faith nodded. “I... I brought it with us when your sister took us off Edolus.” She said. “Why?”

“Lady Faith... you were intentionally infected with this disease.” Eliani explained to her. “Your husband and Brendi did not have traces of it in their system so it is not contagious. Only you and the twins were infected which means the three of you have shared something or done something together where you all got infected.”

“Corbin... Corbin would not... he would not try and kill me.” Elenor stated but her voice did not hold real conviction in it. “I am... I am his mother!”

“This perfume is in the quarters you are using?” Andro asked.

Tasha was the one to answer and she nodded her head. “Yes.” She answered. “A small blue bottle on top of the credenza.”

Andro turned to the Durcunusaan troop who was standing just inside the door. “Take one of Eliani’s medics and bring that here. Now!” He ordered.

The troop bowed his head. “Milord!” He barked before turning and exiting the Med Bay.

Andro turned back to Richard Faith. “My sister has made sure your wife and daughters will be fine sir.” Andro said respectfully.

“You... you believe my son has done this?” Faith asked him.

“I would prefer to wait until my sister and Regent Re Mydala have had the time they need to examine this perfume before making any clear assumptions. However the evidence is looking as if that is the most likely scenario.” Andro answered.

“My daughter... Brendi told us what you said to him.” Richard Faith looked at Andro. “You would do this?”

Androcles nodded without hesitation. “Yes sir I would.” He answered. “It is part of my duty to protect my people and our allies.”

“But the Vanari do not like your people.” Nicolle spoke now looking at him. “They do not like anyone who is not Vanari.”

Devra nodded her head now. “Some of your statement may well be true child.” Devra said. “But there are those of us who believe differently.”

The doors to the Med Bay opened and Jomann strode through quickly, his eyes searching for Eliani. He stopped when he saw they all by the table and turned to the side when he realized the state of dress of the three females. Eliani smiled. “Excuse me for a moment.” She stated before breaking from the group and moving over beside him. All of them watched as Eliani stepped in front of him and he lowered his head to nuzzle her cheek and neck firmly, causing Eliani to reach up and grasp his powerful arms in delight.

Andro turned back to see the Faith family watching them intently. Richard Faith looked at Andro after a moment longer. “Her husband?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “That is one word we use yes.” He answered.

“Why does she act like that?” Tasha inquired innocently. “She looks...”

“Aroused.” Nicolle finished.

“Tasha... Nicolle... enough!” Elenor spoke firmly.

“Ah...” Andro stammered slightly.

Devra saved him from sticking his foot in his mouth. “Among the Lycavorian people, as Eliani explained, their scents are like perfume. When they become husband and wife, mates, no other scent will elicit from them what their mate’s scent will. To Eliani... Jomann’s scent is the sweetest perfume and to him... her scent is the only thing he desires to smell. They can also communicate emotionally in some fashion with their scents. Their love and affection and desire for each other being the most prominent emotion that their scents can manipulate, and this does have an outward visual affect in some respects.”

“But they do not wear anything to signify that they are married.” Nicolle spoke. “How does everyone know this?”

“Yes... would not other men attempt to interest her? She is young and very beautiful.” Tasha finished.

Devra shook her head. “No other Lycavorian male will come near her or attempt such a thing.” She said in reply. “They will detect Jomann’s scent within Eliani’s blood. Lycavorian females have the ability to absorb their mate’s scent deeply within them. It stays with them and other Lycavorians can detect this easily. As for other species within the Union...”

Andro smiled at Devra as he listened to her explain. “They tend to let how our men react to females to be their barometer.” He said looking at Devra. “You have been quizzing Bren I see.”

Devra smiled shyly. "I pester him every moment of the day with questions." She replied with a nod. "He has to kiss me to shut me up."

Andro chuckled. "And I am sure he just hates doing that." He said.

Richard Faith nodded in understanding then. "Ah... if your men do not attempt to strike up a conversation with a woman or are reserved around a woman... then other species recognize this and know not to press too hard because there is a reason?"

Andro nodded. "Essentially yes. There are other factors involved but that is the largest one. Hadarian and elven females, if they are not turned but are involved in a serious relationship with a Lycavorian will begin to exhibit small changes to their bodies and their scents. Vampire females or males involved with Lycavorians, or any species for that matter, tend to be much more reticent around others of the opposite sex."

"There are no casual relationships among your people?" Tasha asked boldly.

"Tasha!" Elenor scolded her.

Andro chuckled. "It's quite alright." He answered. "To answer your question... yes... there are many uncommitted relationships. It is not frowned upon within the Union. More often than not they are younger men and women who are still discovering who they are and what they want."

"Can your people detect this in us? In other species?" Richard asked.

Andro nodded his head. "From the intensity of Lady Faith's scent combined with yours sir... I estimate you have been together for nearly forty years, give or take a year or so, and I can smell that your daughters and Brendi are from your lineage."

Elenor's eyes grew wide at this information. "Forty-one years and three months." She said. "That is amazing!"

Brendi had not heard any of what they were saying because she was watching Eliani and Jomann with each other. Eliani looked so tiny compared to his powerful six foot three frame, but there was no mistaking that as a couple they looked utterly perfect together. Though he was the one who had shot her, Brendi could not deny the sexual appeal he exuded. The way he held her tightly and looked at her, the confidence with which he had entered the Med Bay. She had already concluded that Eliani Leonidas was one of the most attractive women she had ever met and that was something Brendi never thought about when it came to other females. The way they gazed at each other was also a reminder to Brendi that she was very much single and had no prospects at all in her future. She tore her eyes away finally and turned her head back to her family only to see Androcles staring at her intently. Brendi blushed a deep red and only her tanned skin kept her family from noticing her sudden discomfort at being discovered watching the couple so keenly.

Eliani patted Jomann's chest as the doors opened once more and the Durcunusaan soldier and medic returned. They shared a soft and passionate kiss before Jomann turned to Andro. Brendi noticed Andro motioned with his head after a few seconds and Jomann nodded towards him and left the Med Bay. They had communicated within Mindvoice about something Brendi knew. The medic brought the small blue bottle, now in a sealed container, over to Eliani who took it and placed it inside an oval shaped machine on the far wall. She made some adjustments and then walked back over to where her portable console was. She tapped the console there and the screen came alive with flashing symbols and colors. Brendi stepped up beside her now, taller than Eliani by a good four inches at five foot eight, the color of their hair almost identical. The flashing screen stopped with a beep and Eliani tapped several more times on the console before turning her head to look at her evenly.

"It's a match." She said softly.

Brendi's dark brown eyes narrowed in righteous fury and her face became a mask of anger. "That sonofabitch!" She nearly screamed as Eliani turned to look at Richard and Elenor Faith.

"I'm sorry Lady Faith... but the sample of the virus I took from your blood and the twin's blood matches what is in this bottle." Eliani told her seeing her eyes go wide, but her face remaining almost impassive.

Richard Faith was not so silent. "He tried... he tried to kill his own mother?" He gasped.

"Of course he did papa!" Brendi spat. "He wants Tasha and Nicolle in the OSG and you and mother are in his way! He is the oldest and if you and mother are dead, custody of them reverts to him by Eridiani law!"

Tasha and Nicolle were leaning into their mother for comfort and Elenor lowered her head to Tasha's shoulder as small tears began to roll down her cheeks. "I... I did not want to believe that he would stoop to such actions." Elenor said softly.

Andro looked at Brendi. "Custody?" He asked confused. "Exactly how old are your sisters? They... they appear to be in their mid twenties. Even their scent puts them at around that age."

Richard Faith shook his head. "That is part of the genetic enhancement that all Eridiani go through." He stated evenly. "Tasha and Nicolle are only eighteen despite how old they may look. Custody of Eridiani children does not end until the age of nineteen."

Andro met his eyes. "Interesting." He said as his mind raced with different options. He turned to Brendi. "Will the OSG agents on Earth know what your parents and sisters look like?" He asked finally.

Brendi met his gaze. "Some of them may." She answered with a nod. "Not all of us have photographic memories like me, but I don't know what all of their latent abilities are."

Andro nodded. "Then your family will remain on Crane Island until we determine what to do." He stated.

"A prison?" Richard asked somewhat angrily.

Andro met his gaze. "No sir... my home."

"You... you own an island?" Nicolle gasped as she looked up.

"Yes... and while we have been gone, Durcunusaan Engineers have been finishing new facilities on the opposite side of the island from my villa. Apartments and such. You will have free reign of the island and if you wish to go into Gytheio, which is the nearby port city, we can arrange that." Andro told them.

"What about the Netnews crews surrounding the island?" Eliani asked him. "Won't they eventually discover them somehow? Brendi says many of the OSG deep agents like her are Netnews members."

Andro nodded. "Probably... but I can not limit them Eli... you know that. Besides..." He looked at Richard. "After what I told your son... do you think he will attempt something?"

Richard shook his head. "Not unless he was certain he could get away with it and not be discovered."

"He's a bastard!" Brendi agreed. "But he isn't stupid. The Home Council would have his ass if he goes against their orders."

Andro nodded. "Then it is settled." He said. "Eli... have Jomann arrange for the Faith's to have their own apartments and give them the proper access to the island. It is the best way to keep all of you safe... at least for the short term. There is... there is much going on that does not concern you or your family sir, and I would rather you are as safe as I can make you then have to worry about whether I will receive word one morning that Brendi and your family are dead."

"You're... you're just going to trust us?" Brendi asked him. "Just like that?"

"Would you prefer I let them stay with you in Sparta and make it easier for your brother to reach all of you?" Androcles asked. "I can arrange that too."

"No!" Richard Faith proclaimed.

Brendi shook her head, a sheepish expression on her face. "No." She muttered.

Andro nodded his head. "As much as you may think otherwise Brendi Faith... you are now an asset to me. The knowledge you have in your head is invaluable and I will not throw that away. If protecting you means protecting your family as well... so be it."

Brendi glanced at Eliani and then nodded her head. "Thank you." She said softly.

Andro smiled. "Your thanks may be premature... but you are welcome. I will make the..." Andro stopped talking and looked up at the ceiling oddly as if hearing some silent voice that none of them could detect. Eliani moved closer to him as the internal ship intercom chimed and the voice of the OOD sounded through all the compartments and decks.

Attention all hands! Attention all hands! We have entered Earth Sector One! Three hours until we are home! Three hours until we are home! Department Heads and Section Chiefs please submit initial shore leave requests to the Duty Officer! We are maintaining a standing Level Two alert until further notice so shore leave with be limited to twelve-hour increments! That is all!

Eliani reached out and placed her hand on Andro's arm. "Andro... what is it?"

Andro's head snapped around and he looked at her with the biggest smile she had seen from him in months. "Dorian!" He gasped.

Eliani moved closer to him worry on her face now. "What about Dorian? What's wrong Andro?"

"He has joined us Eli! He... he is fully aware and he has joined us!" Andro said with a shocked face. "We can sense him! We can hear him and his Bonded Brother. Elynth and I can hear them! We can feel them!" Andro said.

Eliani looked at him confused. "How... how is that possible?" She gasped. "Mother... mother wasn't due to give birth for at least two more months!"

Andro shook his head. "I don't know... but he..." His eyes grew a little wider and he suddenly laughed out loud, something Eliani rarely saw him do among non-family members. His azure eyes were bright and he met Eliani's gaze with true happiness in those eyes. "Hah!! Dorian... he told me to tell you not to worry about the schematics of things! He is among us and he wants a sister, not another doctor! He has enough of those dotting over him with our mother and aunts!" Eliani gasped in shock, her hand coming to her mouth as she nearly burst out laughing as well now and she watched as Andro moved to the wall and stab down on the control panel.

"Officer of the Deck?" Andro barked.

"Milord!" The voice answered calmly.

"Commander... inform the Strike Wing they are to continue on as normal, but I want a Targeted Pinpoint LSD jump to Earth in ten minutes!" Andro informed him quickly. "Have PROMETHUS Station clear the space around our standing orbital location and prepare to receive us."

"Something I should know Andro?" Sa'sur's voice came onto the channel as she always monitored internal channel to the bridge.

"A bit of good news Sa'sur. My brother Dorian has joined us two months early." Andro said.

"Outstanding! Andro that is... that is wonderful news!" Sa'sur's genuine exclamation of happiness was easily discernible in her voice. "OOD, you heard him! TP LSD jump! Make it happen now!"

"TP LSD to our holding orbit! Aye Milord!" The OOD answered.

"Andro... I'll meet you on the bridge!" Sa'sur exclaimed. "This calls for a steaming hot mug of your mother's coffee and I'm buying!"

"On my way!" Andro said turning to Eliani and taking her hands. "Have everyone in the landing bay and ready to leave the moment the jump is over. We'll take the Mark IIs. Sadi and Normya can fly them and drop us before moving to meet us at the Dragon Mountain landing pads."

"Dragon Mountain?" Eliani asked. "Andro... why are they at Dragon Mountain. I... I thought they were still on Curila 6."

"So did I... but that is where they are!" He stammered. "Go Eli! Hurry!"

Eliani nodded her head quickly, unable to contain her excitement. Finally... finally a glimmer of happiness and joy among everything bad that had happened over the last few months. If Eliani knew her family, they were going to grab onto that and use it to drive them forward to become even stronger.

KAVALIAN LEUGERS-CLASS MILITARY TRANSPORT 0.8 LY INSIDE KAVALIAN BORDER TO THE WILDS ENROUTE TO NEFOA

"... Must examine the elf bitch!" Muton snapped to the dozen Puma Bane troops who occupied the seats on either side of the transport. "If you hear any screaming... don't feel the need to come running."

The Puma Bane troops all laughed at Muton's words as he walked among them. He had been the Marshall's physician for centuries, and while his bedside manner left something to be desired, he was a competent doctor. They also knew he hated elves and Lycavorians both.

"Don't mark her too badly Muton!" The senior officer spoke from his spot.

"I will leave that to you and your men Captain." He answered. "I can't stand the stench of the bitch. I understand Marshall Pusintin just may be giving her to some of our men after she spits out the boy child. I'm sure you will have fun with her."

The captain grinned. "Indeed." He said as Muton moved through the bulkhead door out of the main cargo area. He shut it smoothly and then secured the hatchway as For'mya rose to her feet looking at him from the chair. He shook his head quickly and moved to the small control panel on the bulkhead where he deactivated the security cameras and the audio sensors. He didn't see the three pilots in the cockpit frown at this action. They had hoped for a show as the old doctor took the elf female.

Muton finally turned to her. "It is safe to talk now For'mya." He said. "I have deactivated the security monitors and audio sensors."

"Won't that draw suspicion?" She asked.

Muton shook his head as he dropped the medical bag he was carrying to the table. "They think I will abuse you in some way because I have nurtured the idea that I can not stand other species. I've done it quite well actually." He said with a grin impressed with his acting skill.

"Muton you haven't..." He looked at her with a disgusted look and For'mya shook her head. "Forgive me... that was stupid on my part."

Muton lifted the hand held scanner from the bag. "Now let's find this thing that they have inside you. Where did Fedor and Eirene say it was?"

For'mya reached around and touched the back of her neck where it met her shoulders. "Andro told them it was here... but I can not feel anything out of place." She said placing her fingers underneath her hair just above her left shoulder blade.

Muton lifted the scanner and as she held her hair out of the way he activated the scanner and ran it slowly over that portion of her body. It only took a few seconds before he found it. "I see it." He said softly. "Two point five four centimeters in length; just over half a centimeter thick; and exactly one point seven four centimeters deep." He pulled the scanner away and ran two of his clawed fingers over that spot. "Very close to the spinal column but not close enough to do any damage and deep enough where you won't feel it outwardly if you probed the area."

For'mya turned to look at him. "Can you remove it?" She asked.

Muton nodded. "Easily when we reach Nefoa. I would attempt it now if I had the tools and these ships were not so rickety. They bounce at any subspace shift in our path." He met her eyes. "Do we want to remove it For'mya? That is the other question we should be asking?"

For'mya met his gaze. "What do you mean?"

"I have never seen anything like this before For'mya." He told her honestly. "It seems to be self contained... but how do we know there is not some sort of trigger device that will signal Pusintin that it has been removed?"

For'mya was silent as she looked at him. "I... I don't know." She said finally.

Muton nodded his head. "Then may I suggest we leave it where it is for the moment." He held up her hand when he saw her about to protest. "Only until I know that the others are on Nefoa and ready to act. They should arrive about the same time that you are giving birth and will be ready to move within a hour of arriving. I can take it out as soon as Fedor and Eirene have joined us. Your body will recover quickly and it is prudent to do everything at once. The more recovered you are when its time to act the better off we are."

For'mya dropped her hands to her abdomen and slowly caressed the skin there. Eirene? Fedor? She questioned reaching out with her thoughts.

Muton waited patiently as he watched her. The best hopes for his people rested with this woman, her children and the full power of the family that would undoubtedly be coming to rescue her. Over the past hours since discovering she could talk with the twins she carried in her womb, Muton had seen more and more of the woman who he had witnessed on the Netnews channels coming back. Confident and decisive in her actions. Her dark brown eyes lifted to meet his once more and she nodded.

"Very well." She spoke.

Muton nodded and reached into his bag removing the sheath and blade. For'mya watched him as he removed it from the sheath and showed it to her. "A Kavalian Assassin's knife." He spoke. He turned it to the side and his finger moved over the small button near the middle of the hilt. "Concentrated Rock Spider venom." He told her. "Each dose enough to kill a fully grown Kavalian in perhaps four to five seconds. The hilt holds six doses so if you need to use them, do it sparingly and for fuck's sake, stab into something vital. You are in no condition physically to tangle with a fully grown Kavalian male. Use your elf speed and reflexes to counter his brute strength.”

For'mya's lips curled into a thin smile. “I'm not exactly at my best right now am I?” She said as her hands rubbed her abdomen.

Muton chuckled. “Hah! Even as pregnant as you are... I'd still wager on you.” He said returning the blade to its sheath and holding it out to her. “Keep it well hidden.”

For'mya nodded as she took the blade. “I will.”

“When we arrive on Nefoa simply keep your head down and avoid eye contact with any Kavalians until we reach the medical bay.” Muton spoke. “They know me... and they will not question me. I may need to speak some disparaging things yet again, but I hope by now you know enough to ignore them.”

For'mya nodded. “Yes.”

“Good... I had to make sure.” He told her with a smile on his fur covered face. “This base has the largest Puma Bane detachment outside Kavalian space and the team leader is a foul mannered beast. Thankfully Pusintin has given me ultimate authority when it concerns you and he will not challenge me more than once.”

“I get the feeling I will not like this man?” For'mya said.

“Let me put it to you this way... given any other circumstance you would gladly sever his balls from his body and carve him into small pieces.” Muton said.

“That bad?”

Muton nodded. “Yes. I outrank him, and I have Pusintin's authority so if he is smart he will stay away. If not... let me handle him.”

“With pleasure.” For'mya said.

Muton reached out and pressed his clawed, furry hand to her abdomen. The trust between them was still building he knew, but it grew stronger by the hour and that For'mya allowed him to do this now without hesitation told him much about her. It was a trust he would not fail. “How long?” He asked softly.

For'mya rested her hand over the top of his. “It is moving along quickly. I believe I can accurately say they will arrive when I said earlier. The accelerated growth hormones Pusintin used have altered my perception somewhat, and what I felt take place over a period of weeks and months with Arram and Bryon I now have to tolerate over hours, but I believe I am being reasonably accurate. Give or take an hour or so.”

“Good.” Muton said as he drew his hand back and ushered her back to the chair at the small table.

For'mya looked at him as she sat down. “Tell... tell me of your family Muton.” She asked him.

Muton settled into the other chair and relaxed. “Lubina and my sons.” He said with a smile. “She is beautiful, with long dark blond hair. The initial biogenic treatments removed the hair from her body, but her tail is still intact. And her claws.” He said with a smile. “I have been away from them for too long now.”

“How old are your sons?” For'mya asked.

“Kaleen is the oldest at two hundred and sixty-four. Olin is ninety-three and Miseo is the youngest at a mere twenty-nine.” Muton answered. “We have wanted to have more, but as you can see, our time together is limited.”

“Why... why did you wait so long to have children to begin with?” For'mya asked.

Muton looked at her. “Up until a thousand years ago, we always had to move in order to keep clear of Keleru's agents and Puma Bane assassins.” He said. “It wasn't until we discovered the abandoned ruins on Wentania that we felt safe enough to start a family. The ruins are very well hidden, even from active sensor scans from orbit. And they are large enough to hold everyone as well. Over these years we have been bringing everyone from across the KFI to Wentania.”

“And you do not use the growth hormones?” For'mya asked.

Muton shook his head. “No... all of our children are naturally birthed and raised. They grow just as any other child grows. The growth hormones are an abomination to many of my people.”

“If there are only thirteen of this Warrior Class that you belong to, who defends your people while you are gone?” For'mya asked.

“Oh... we are capable.” Muton replied. “Pirates have stumbled across our hiding place two... no three times in the last five hundred years. They didn't survive.” He told her. “Lubina acts as my voice when I am gone. Since I am the oldest... I am considered the leader. Miseo my youngest enrolled in the same training regimen that our Caste goes through. Only thirteen of us are active within the KFI, but there are upwards of three hundred of us on Wentania. Miseso should have completed his training five years ago and is probably among those who guard the ruins. Kaleen and Olin work primarily within the small Astrophysics Research lab we have created. They have been trying to determine ways to find the ship that Resumar now has. They will be most pleased when I tell them it has been found.” Muton shook his head. “Enough about me... I have always wondered something?”

For'mya looked at him. “Yes.”

“The stories of how you and Martin Leonidas first met are varied and more than likely not true to begin with.” He said. “How did you meet each other and then...”

“Fall in love?” For'mya asked.

Muton nodded. “Yes.”

“It is a long story.” She answered.

Muton chuckled and looked at his time piece. “Well... we have just over fourteen hours.” He said.

“I was captured by cloned vampire troops during the Battle for Earth.” For'mya began. “It was not...”

EARTH ORBIT STRIKER FLIGHT LAUNCHING FROM SCIMITAR

“...too tight?” Lu'ria asked Caliria as they stood near the rear of the STRIKER.

Caliria shook her head as she looked at the tight fitting but equally comfortable Mark IV ArmorPly that she was encased in. It was matte black in color and allowed for amazing ease of movement. “No.” She answered softly looking at Lu'ria's beautiful ebony face and her long shimmering white hair. “Why am... why am I part of this Lu'ria?” She asked. “I... I did not think any of you would want to be around me.”

Lu'ria stopped adjusting the bodyarmor and lifted her wide amber eyes to gaze at Caliria. “Why would you think such a thing Inamarno?” She gasped.

“You do not hate me?” Caliria asked.

“Hate you because, like all of us, you wish to discover yourself and who you are? That will never happen.” Andro's voice came from behind her. Caliria turned quickly and saw him there holding two helmets in his hands. He looked so imposing and so devastatingly handsome standing there in the body armor. He held one helmet up to her and she slowly took the matte black helmet with raven locks flowing down from the top. “If I must show you before you leave that this is where you belong, with me, with us, then I will do so Inamarno. We will do so without question. Then it will be up to you to decide when the time is right.”

“You said... you said I would be leaving as soon as we arrived here on Earth.” Caliria spoke softly.

Andro stepped closer, looking down into her eyes. “I said that for your father's benefit.” He told her reaching out and taking her hand in hers. “First I will show you what your life with us will be like. At least a little part of it.”

“Part of that is dressing like this?” Caliria asked.

Andro grinned. “No... not all of the time.”

“What is going to happen Androcles?” Caliria asked again. “Why am I dressed like this?”

Are you afraid of heights Inamarno? Sadi's voice filled her mind from the cockpit, all of them hearing the question.

“No.” Caliria answered. “Why?”

Then like all of us you will enjoy the ride. Sadi told her.

“The ride? What ride?” Caliria asked looking at Andro.

Andro put his helmet between his knees and took her helmet in his hands lifting it above her head and slowly lowering it down. The cheek guards and nose guard fit perfectly and Andro smiled. The uniform actually gave her a rather fierce looking appearance. “I am going to show you something that will take your breath away.” Andro said. “You just have to trust me. Trust us.” Andro took his helmet and pulled it on. He held out his hand. “Think you can handle that?” He asked.

Caliria looked quickly at Lu'ria, Carisia now having joined them and standing beside her Drow Mistress. She turned back to Andro and slipped her hand into his. “I think that will be rather easy.”

“Then let’s go!” He said pulling her towards where Elynth waited anxiously by the ramp, Anthar beside her on one side and Majeir on the other.

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN

Anja could feel the tremors easily as she walked into the lounge they had been in just the day before and she saw Helen standing on the balcony that opened into the main chamber of the mountain. She sipped her coffee as she came up beside her, still tired but exceptionally pleased with herself.

The procedure had gone like clockwork, all of them working in perfect harmony. Deia had commented that she had not seen so many powerful Hadarian healers in one single room in centuries and the level of their work showed in every way. With Sivana, Duewa and Eurin providing a constant stream of healing metaphysical radiation pouring through Isabella; Anja, Ceuma and Anuk had worked efficiently and expertly to introduce the growth accelerator into Isabella’s womb. Then they watched as before their eyes, not forty minutes later Dorian Leonidas entered this world howling louder than any of their children before, his arms and legs kicking furiously until the arms of his Hadarian mother encircled him. Anja had tears in her jade colored eyes as he calmed immediately and then she moved to give him to Isabella while Ryner’s massive head remained in the room through the specially designed sterile bubble they had hastily built for him.

Isabella couldn’t hold back her tears as she held her son in her arms. The son she had wanted to give Martin for so long was now here and he was beautiful. He sported a full head of black hair and mildly tanned skin. His eyes made her catch her breath as she realized that the left was a deep, dark brown just like his father and the right a dazzling cobalt blue. Isabella immediately lifted her hand as she cradled Dorian in her opposite arm and reached out to stroke Ryner’s cool scales as he lowered his huge head to gaze upon his Bonded Brother. Isabella could only laugh as Dorian’s small hands reached up to clutch Ryner’s muzzle tightly, his fingers clenching and unclenching as they finally were able to touch physically. Once Anja and Anuk had finished and Ceuma disconnected the many monitors, those who were in the room sat back and watched as another strong Leonidas child cooed in his mother’s arms, pulling on Bella’s hair and then switching to Anja’s long locks over and over.

Though Anja had only gotten four hours of sleep, she was rested enough and decided to see what the commotion was all about. She moved up next to Helen and looked down to see hundreds of dragons gathered on the floor of the main chamber.

“Helen... what is happening?” She asked calmly knowing it could not have to do with danger or an emergency since no alarms had been risen.

Helen smiled and looked at her as she lowered her own mug. “He has come home and they sense him.” She answered. “He has entered the atmosphere and they can feel him Anja. They can feel him reaching out to his brother and Ryner. I can feel it.”

“Andro?” Anja asked.

Helen nodded her head. “Until Arzoal and I bonded I did not understand it.” She said. “He is a Talon Guardian yes... just as Martin is... but what they feel for the dragons is beyond any emotion I have ever felt. It is almost as if they are dragons themselves. And that emotion and feeling is returned just as strongly from every living dragon without question.”

Anja sipped her coffee as her jade green eyes gazed at the dragons below. “Perhaps in some way they are.” She said softly.

Helen looked at her. “Maybe you are right.” She said as Ceuma and Naesta entered the lounge now. They both appeared as if they had recently woken and were carrying mugs of tea and coffee themselves.

“Anja... what is happening?” Ceuma asked as they came up to them. “The dragons... they are rushing through the corridors of the ship making all sorts of noises. They all appeared to be heading in the same direction as well.”

Anja motioned over the edge of the balcony. “Take a look.” She said.

Ceuma and Naesta moved closer and peered over the railing only to have their eyes widen as they could both see hundreds of dragons in every color and of every species far below. Ceuma drew back quickly and looked at her sister with wide eyes.

“What is going on?” She gasped. “I’ve never seen so many in one place! What...”

The deafening trumpet so close easily drowned out her question and they all turned to see the dark, blood red scales of a Heavy Horn dragon as he clung to the side of the main chamber only a few meters from their position on the balcony. They heard the soft humming of hydraulic motors and the huge top of the main chamber began to open, admitting the bright sunshine of the early morning.

GO! Arzoal’s voice bellowed out in Mindvoice from far below. Go my brothers and sisters! Go and greet him as a Talon Guardian should be greeted! Go now! And bring him here!

The trumpets that followed would echo for minutes as every dragon in the main chamber erupted in agreement with their Elder Mother. Helen stepped back from the balcony just a little and looked at Ceuma and Naesta. “Ceuma... Naesta... now would be a good time to move back a little.” She said.

“What?” Naesta asked turning to look at her just as two dragons blew past her going up. Their wings were flapping smoothly and the concussive force of the air in the main chamber almost swept Naesta over the side.

Ceuma and Anja grabbed her and drew her back as Naesta’s eyes grew wide at what she saw. Hundreds of dragons all taking to the sky and shooting for the opening in the main flying chamber above them. Even standing back a good meter from the edge they were buffeted by the winds of so many dragons racing out of the opening to greet their Talon Guardian.

“By... by the grace of the prophets!” Naesta was able to manage before more dragons began to rocket by their position.

STRIKER FLIGHT

FOUR MINUTES FROM DRAGON MOUNTAIN

The ramps on the two STRIKER Mark IIs were still down, and the observation bubbles were exposed, allowing the bright sunlight to enter the ships as they held perfect formation five hundred feet behind the six dragons in front of them. Sadi and Normya were using just their station keeping thrusters to follow Andro and the others as they approached Dragon Mountain at five thousand feet. There were others crowded into the back of Andro’s STRIKER, to include Bren and Devra as well as Coren, though crowded would have been the wrong word to use. Devra watched with much respect from behind them as Sadi and Ne’Veha made their STRIKER do things she had never seen a ship do, especially as they left the SCIMITAR and passed into and through the atmosphere. The STRIKERS were amazing ships to begin with as far as Devra was concerned, able to do things that ships their size should not have been able to do. Tastia, Arduri and Am’uur were standing near the ramp secured with thick nylon life lines so that they would not be sucked out of the rear while Coren sat by himself across from the man who had stolen the heart of his former wife.

Bren sat on the opposite couch in the rear of the STRIKER going over a data pad and well aware that Coren Re Mydala was alternating between staring at him and looking at Tastia and his daughter Arduri at the rear of the ship. Every time he saw Tastia grip the Drow Am’uur’s hand Coren felt his anger seethe forth. He turned back to Bren finally.

“You do realize that no child you have with Devra will be like you!” Coren spoke loudly. “They will not be able to turn as you do! They will have blue skin coloring like Devra! They will be nothing like you!”

Bren lowered his data pad and lifted his eyes to look at Coren. “You seem to think that this in some way bothers me Coren Re Mydala.” He spoke.

“They will not be Lycavorian!” Coren snapped at him. “I was under the impression all Lycavorians wanted their children to be like them!”

Bren stood up and slowly crossed the deck plating to squat in front of Coren who sat back in the seat, suddenly very aware he was in a dangerous position. Bren smiled at him however and shook his head. “There is fault in your logic Coren Re Mydala... because they will be like me.” He stated confidently. “They will look like Devra yes and I bless the gods that is so, but they will still be like me. They will carry my blood in their veins. They will carry my history and lineage in their minds and hearts just as they do their mother's. And though they will have blue skin as my new mate and wife does, they will be part of me always. A part I will never forsake or dismiss."

"Why are we moving so slow?" Arduri called out to Am'uur from the rear of the ramp causing both Coren and Bren to look that way.

"They are coming." Am'uur stated with a smile.

Tastia looked at him. "Who is coming my Am'uur?" She asked.

"Wait and you will see my beautiful Tastia." He told her, leaning over to kiss her hard on the lips. A kiss she accepted easily, melting against his hard body.

"Who is coming?" Arduri snapped excitedly.

"Their family." Bren answered coming up behind her.

Arduri turned and looked at them. "Bren... their family is scattered across the stars! They could not have all arrived here at the same time. Could they?"

Bren smiled. "Not that family Arduri." He answered. He pointed out the rear of the STRIKER. "That family."

Arduri turned just as Tastia released a stunned yelp loud enough to draw all of their attention. "By the holy grace of the prophets! Look!" She exclaimed.

Arduri's stunning green eyes grew exceptionally wide as she watched dragons rise from below them, their powerful wings propelling them along effortlessly. Dragons of every color and shape and size. They kept rising too, until the entire cloudless sky behind them was filled with dragons as far as they could see. Arduri's eyes grew wider if that was possible and at that moment she swore to herself that nothing living or dead would remove her from the path she was now on. She wanted Lisisa and Denali in a way that made her whole body ache in desire. She wanted to know them, to love them, to have them love her, but most of all she wanted to be part of their life forever. This life. A life that held more wonder in it than she had ever seen in her short lifetime.

"Breaking for Dragon Mountain." Sadi's voice announced over the internal COM.

"On your six. Three point seven." Normya's voice echoed.

Arduri felt them begin to turn slowly and leave the dragon filled skies behind.

Arduri's sister Caliria had wide green eyes as well; however they were more from the fantastic view she was experiencing as well as the incredible sensations of flying so openly and free among the clouds. Her raven black hair that protruded from under the helmet she wore was pulled over one shoulder now, Andro's head next to hers on the opposite side, his arms curled tightly around her waist and their legs securely held by the Dragon Armor Bracers on the saddle. Caliria had seen and almost felt through their Mindvoice connection what all of them had felt on their first ride upon a dragon, and now she was experiencing it for the first time herself and it was breathtaking. The rush of air and adrenalin through her as they left the STRIKER and the short plummet through the sky until they leveled off at their height now had given her a new perspective on these marvelous creations known as dragons. She felt an enormous thrill feeling Andro's powerful arms wrapped around her waist as they dove for the earth, a sensation of power and confidence she had never felt before.

[You see Inamarno.] Andro's voice filled her mind causing her to close her eyes in joy. [My life is not all war and violence and pain. This is what I live for. What we live for. The freedom of open skies around you and not a care in the world. This is what brings Elynth and I such happiness. All of us really. This is what I want for you as well.]

[It is... it is amazing Andro.] Caliria spoke softly.

[My people can be barbaric at times.] Andro told her, feeling her head shift slightly against his so that she could see his eyes under his helmet. [It is our instinct. Our nature. But we have conquered that part of us and it no longer commands what we do Inamarno. Not in the way your father and so many Vanari believe. If we could live out our days without every having to fight another battle, well, believe me when I tell you we would much rather nuzzle and caress our mates and wives than we would fight.]

[Andro... Andro what if I don't want to go.] Caliria asked gently.

He turned his head slightly and those azure eyes almost made her whimper in delight as they focused on her. [You want to go Caliria. You want to discover the answers you seek. And you can not do that here with us because then you will never know Inamarno.] He said. [You will always question and doubt your decision. I don't want that. We don't want that. Your happiness is our happiness and ours is yours. Will you ever truly know that happiness if you do not discover the answers to what you seek?]

[You are the last piece of the puzzle for them Inamarno. For yourself.] Elynth's voice filled her head. She turned slightly as Elynth's wings propelled them forward and she saw Elynth's head turned slightly back towards them. [They will wait forever if need be, but when you decide what it is you want, decide with what your heart tells you. Not what others tell you?]

[Let me show you Dragon Mountain. Meet my mothers and now my new brother. Naesta is here as well. Then we will return to Cranae Island and we can sit on the beach and watch the sunset with the others.] Andro said.

[And then...] Caliria asked almost wistfully, a large part of her wanting him to take her again and make her feel what she had felt on his ship.

Andro's arms tightened slightly on her waist. [My desire for you Inamarno... our desire for you will never wane now. But if you are to be clear headed and make your decisions with your heart then that would not be wise before you left. And it would only make it harder for us to let you go.]

[You... you seem so certain I will choose to... to come back to you.] Caliria said. [Can you... can you see the future?]

Andro chuckled softly. [If I could see the future Inamarno... much of what has happened would not have taken place. No... I can not see the future, but I have faith in my instincts and what they tell me. I have faith that you will return, because I have faith in you.] He shook his head as she was about to speak. [No more talk of you leaving. Let us enjoy the time now and I will show you more wonders. Elynth my sister... go!]

Anja released Eliani from her embrace as happiness surged through her. She looked at her daughter and something caught her eye. Eliani's face beamed her fern green eyes brighter than she had ever seen them. Anja could easily detect the strong scent of sweet jasmine coffee wafting from her daughter and mixed deeply with her own maple and wheat scent and the almost surreal glow in Eliani's skin color. She looked at her daughter with wide eyes.

"Eli?" She gasped.

Eliani nodded her head, small tears forming in her eyes. "I found him mother." She whispered. "I found him." She turned quickly behind her and pulled the tall Durcunusaan who had been waiting silently forward. Anja recognized him instantly from the transmission but her eyes grew a little wider as she realized just how tall and imposing this young man was as he stepped up next to her. "Mother... this is Jomann. My mate, my husband and my anome."

Anja's eyes showed their stunned happiness as she looked at Eliani and then to Jomann. He moved closer confidently and bowed his head to her deeply. "It... it is a true honor my Queen." He spoke softly. "I... I hope to present myself to you and to the King in the traditional manner some day soon in the future. All I can offer now is my eternal thanks for bringing Eliani into this world so that I could find her."

Anja almost burst into tears herself as she grasped his face in her hands, having to truly reach up to do this because of his height. She looked into his ocean blue eyes and he met her gaze unwavering. "Will you... will you adore her Jomann? Will you love her with everything you are?"

Jomann smiled. "With every waking moment." He answered her without hesitation.

"Then what you offer I accept on behalf of Martin and all of her mothers." Anja said. "She is stubborn you know. And she has a sharp tongue."

"Mother!" Eliani gasped.

Jomann nodded his head. "And that is why I love her so." He told Anja.

Anja surprised him by leaning up and kissing his cheek softly. "She is not as tough as she likes to think Jomann." Anja whispered so that only he could hear her. "Love her with all that you are."

Jomann pulled back slightly and met his Queen's eyes. "As the god's are my witness and my guide I will Milady." He whispered back.

Anja nodded and kissed his cheek again just as the happy squeal reached her ears and Zarah came tearing up to where she stood with Lucia in tow and wrapped her arms around her mother. Jomann stepped back next to Eliani and she took his arm looking up into his face. "What did she say Jomann?" Eli asked him.

Jomann looked at his fiery wife and anome with a glint in his eyes. "She told me to be mindful of your willfulness and to put you in your place in I felt the need."

Eliani laughed and leaned close to him. "Well... as long as that entails being wrapped around your body... you can put me in my place anytime you wish."

Jomann leaned over and kissed her softly as Anja greeted the hesitant Lucia with an embrace that soon had her smiling in happiness. Anja greeted Denali and Lisisa in much the same manner as they all crowded around and Helen joined her with Deia.

Bren and Devra stood back and watched with Arduri and Devra shook her head slightly. "They... they do this all the time Bren?" She asked. "Greet each other in this way? As if they haven't seen each other in months and years?"

Bren nodded. "They haven't seen Anja for many months actually, but yes. It is part of their power and appeal. Their loyalty and sense of devotion to their family."

Anja released Denali from her embrace and looked at him. "Where is your brother?" she asked.

"He was right..." Denali began to answer looking around.

Anja turned and looked behind Denali and saw him standing there. It became very quiet suddenly as Anja moved around Denali and Andro stepped up to her bravely. In all his years of growing up, Androcles had witnessed the wrath of all his mothers in some manner. Usually it was directed at some ridiculous politician who had more arrogance than brains, but of them all, his Persian red haired mother's wrath was the most frightening to behold. Everyone's eyes fell on mother and son at that moment and Andro opened his mouth to speak.

"Mother... I had no... if I had not done what I did I..." Andro stammered to her.

Anja reached up and put a finger to his lips silencing his words. "You will never need to apologize to me for doing what needs to be done Androcles Leonidas. No matter what it may be."

"They... they were your people." Andro said.

Anja nodded her head slowly. "And they were your people as well. You had a choice to make my son. There was no good side to this choice Andro and you know it. Everyone does. Both options were bad. You chose to protect the many over the few, picking the lesser of two evils. It is a choice any of us would have made Androcles..." She reached up and took his face in her hands. "Including me. I would have cried my eyes out as I gave that order... but make no mistake... I would have given the order my son. Just as you did." Anja pulled him down close to her, Andro having to bend over in order to accomplish this because of her five foot three height. "Now you need to let it go, do you hear me?" She hissed at him softly but with true force behind her words. "Now you need to let it go Androcles."

Androcles Leonidas inhaled deeply of his Hadarian mother's honey scent as he lifted her into his arms and embraced her tightly. Anja smiled in happiness, small tears rolling down her cheeks as he crushed her to him and she held his broad shoulders tightly. She felt him relax, the tension in his body slowly leaving as she enveloped him with her motherly aura and let him know it was alright. After a long moment he lowered her to the ground and she gripped his arms tightly.

"Come on." Anja spoke. "Bella is waiting... and so is your brother."

"Mother... why has Dorian joined us early?" Andro asked quickly. "Is something... is something wrong?"

"Let's just say you will be surprised ok." Anja said. "You felt them I take it?"

Andro nodded his head. "The moment I entered the system. He is as aware as I was when I was born and I felt his Bonded Brother as well."

Anja nodded as she held his hand and reached out to take Zarah's as well. "It is probably better if you see for yourselves, and then I can explain everything." Anja said. "Come."

To say it was a shock would have been the understatement of the century. They had all crowded into the room, Anja now sandwiched between all of her children and happily trying to talk and listen at the same time.

They were all filled with concern for their Hadarian mother after what had transpired over the last months and Anja spent most of that time trying to reassure them she was fine. All conversation stopped when they entered the large lounge like room and all of them came to abrupt halts.

Isabella stood waiting for them, her hand resting on the soldier of the young boy who looked to be about six years old. He had short black hair, tanned skin and his eyes a piercing dark brown in one and cobalt blue in the other. Isabella beamed, looking just as beautiful to them as she always did, though her face was slightly drawn. Standing behind the small boy as if offering moral support were the rest of the younger Leonidas children, Retta and Nara closet to their new brother. Behind them was the huge Sinopia colored dragon with emerald green eyes. Isabella stood there her heart racing, not knowing what to expect, as if she had anything to really worry about. The room was silent for a full two minutes, and then it was Androcles who stepped away from Anja and moved up to them. His first act was to lean over and kiss his vampire mother's cheek, reaching out to grasp her arm and feeling her shaking hand grip his forearm. Isabella had single tears falling down her cheeks as she looked at him and then his azure eyes focused on Dorian who was looking at him intently.

Andro knelt in front of his brother, feeling his aura sweep outward, feeling his mind reach for him. Andro accepted without question and suddenly he could see all that had taken place, he could see all that Dorian's Bonded Brother Ryner had experienced and witnessed. A smile began to part his lips as he looked at him. Andro reached up and ran his knuckles over Dorian's jaw.

"We... we have a lot to talk about brother." He said with that smile. "So much to talk about."

Dorian didn't give him the chance and leaped into his arms knocking him over onto his back as he hugged Androcles.

"Tag!" Bryon shouted.

"Get them now!" Nara echoed.

And the room descended into loud shrieks of joy as Retta and Nara led the charge to their siblings and the laughter echoed as the Leonidas children reunited in a tangle of bodies. Anja drew Isabella back to her as Denali and Andro were buried by their brothers in a mass of bodies, and Eliani, Zarah and Normya were squatting with their sisters next to this tangle of bodies as Retta and Nara chattered away in between hugs and kisses of greeting. It didn't take long before Sadi, Lucia, Carisia, Lu'ria, Ne'Veha and Caliria were drawn into the group of girls with Nara stroking Lu'ria's shimmering white hair in fascination and Retta gripping both Eliani and Sadi tightly with one hand as she used a finger to caress Caliria's cheek. That was until Bryon tackled Zarah from behind, knocking her into Lucia and then you could not tell the two groups apart as they tumbled together.

"This is what we needed." Gorgo spoke softly looking at Anja and Isabella.

They stood beside the waist high divider, looking out onto a small section of the main flying chamber of Dragon Mountain. It was that spot that all of the Leonidas children had finally gravitated too, along with dozens and dozens of dragons. They were sitting in a large circle, Dorian sitting in Andro's lap and staring intently at his brother's face as he spoke to them, alternating between spoken words and Mindvoice. Retta rested in Eliani's lap as she leaned back against Jomann; Nara between Lisisa and the blue skinned Vanari Arduri and teasing the hair on the back of Denali's head. The reunion between sisters had also been quite a sight as Caliria and Arduri greeted Naesta and seeing the three of them together hugging to each other tightly as well as a teary Devra had nearly given everyone blue spots in their eyes. Naesta's greeting of her father had been much less so, but he quickly got the message when Naesta pulled the smiling Ceuma over to their group and introduced her to her sisters and mother. Introducing them to Joci was better suited for a more private gathering and Joci had agreed completely. Naesta sat between her sisters now, Caliria on the opposite side of Andro and Arduri next to Lisisa.

Bryon sat between Sadi's legs next to Andro, while Calyb sat between Normya and the giant Tir'ut and he kept reaching up to touch the bone spurs on Tir'ut's jaw while Tir'ut made horrible faces at him causing him to laugh. Tir'ut had always had a way with children Normya knew, and it apparently carried over here as well. Carina and Moneus had arrived from Sparta only a short time ago to join them. The circle of Leonidas children and those they loved was enclosed by a circle of dragons, Ryner resting between Elynth and Anthar. He felt the strongest draw to her because he was like her now, and because Anthar was her beloved mate, Ryner felt a kinship to him. A brotherhood connection that would only grow in the years to come. Jeth, Tharua, Aradace and Majeir all rested comfortably as their dragon siblings adjusted their spots on the floor. Those dragons bound to Retta and Calyb, Nara and Deion and finally Bryon were just as excited to see their own brothers and sisters and it showed in their affection, especially towards Jeth who, even though he dwarfed them in size, had always been the most playful with them. Aurith had even joined them, since she had been alternating between here and the Dragon Cave on the Royal Estate. Since For'mya's capture she had been so very hard to console and only Arzoal's influence had kept her sane. Now as her brothers and sisters were here and reaching out to her, Aurith had sped to Dragon Mountain to try and draw support and love from them, something which she received in droves when she arrived.

Anja and Bella turned to look at her and Helen as they came up to them. "Yes it is." Anja said in agreement.

"Arzoal and I can even sense a great deal of Aurith's despair drifting away." Helen said. "And it is not very often a Talon Guardian comes to Dragon Mountain."

"He's telling them of For'mya. And their brother and sister that she carries." Bella spoke.

Helen nodded her head. "As if we would have been able to stop him anyway." She said. "You know he will keep nothing from them. It is not his way."

They turned as Deia came up slowly. "Well... the Netnews has discovered he is back." She said. "And they are all screaming for interviews."

Anja looked back to where Andro sat and shook her head. "They are going to have to wait. He'll be here for most of the day and evening. He's not going to be rushed."

Deia nodded. "That's what I told them." She answered her eyes falling on Dorian in Andro's lap. "He's growing quickly."

Anja nodded her head. "The combination of proteins that we used is acting more quickly than we thought." She said. "It's not harmful in any way, but the potency is taking longer to wear off. He will begin to slow his growth by tomorrow and fall into the schedule that we had originally thought."

"Have you heard from Martin?" Deia asked.

Isabella shook her head. Whatever fears or doubts she may have had were long gone now and she positively glowed in happiness. "They will return to Kranek in four hours and I'm sure we'll hear from them then."

Deia looked at Anja. "Was it necessary for them to do what they did Anja?" She asked. "I mean... posing the bodies in a such a way? Leaving their heads on..."

"If you are looking for me to agree with you Deia... I can't." Anja said. "They were the most feared military unit back then and something tells me that they will be again. They are masters at warfare in every form, including psychological. No matter what they did, it was done for that purpose and not some sense of petty revenge. Marty is not like that and you know it."

"I just think it will only anger the Kavalians." Deia said.

Anja nodded. "Probably... but only those who don't have to face them." She said. "For everyone else it will always be a fear now." Anja shrugged. "Besides... angry people make angry mistakes."

Deia nodded. "The Kavalian delegation is on its way from Hadaria under heavy escort. They screamed about not being able to bring their own ships so Riall granted them permission for a short group. Ten ships, but only one GREAT SOUL."

Helen reached for Bella's hand. "Come... we have other guests who we should be paying attention too. And plans of our own to form. Let Androcles handle his siblings."

"... They doing this Andro?" Retta asked the question. "Why hurt our mothers? Why try and hurt you. All of us. We have never done anything to them."

Andro looked at her stunning green eyes and even at eleven years old it was easy to see Retta was going to be just as devastatingly beautiful as her mother and sister. "I do not know Retta." He answered shaking his head. "Some people... some people just crave what others have because they do not."

"Or do not want to work to achieve themselves." Lu'ria spoke up.

“I have never lied to you.” Andro said. “Our mothers and father may not like what I tell you... allow you to know... but one day it will fall to all of us. We may fight and disagree but we are family. We are all blood.”

“Blood before all else.” Dorian Leonidas spoke softly. The voice did not belong to a boy who looked only six years of age, but the Leonidas children had quickly dismissed that oddity. They all knew what was happening and why it was happening and they accepted it and adapted without hesitation as was the way of any Lycavorian. Indeed... it was a strength of their species and their family.

Andro nodded. “Blood before all else.” He said. “Our uncle thinks to use the siblings our mother carries within her for his own gain. That is why I did what I did. It is not something I would have considered had the situation been different. It is not...” Andro looked at Dorian and their eyes met and understood. Having someone, even six year old Dorian, who would grow into a man very quickly, that knew and understood what Andro was saying in a way his other siblings did not, even this had given Andro a peace that Sadi had never seen in him and it made her supremely happy. “It is not as easy as many people believe. It is... it is difficult having father’s memories... grandfather’s memories... knowing so many things and...”

“Andro stop.” Normya spoke softly. “You do not need to explain anything to us. You don’t think we can imagine what it is like for you? How it will be for Dorian now? For our brother and sister that mother carries?”

“You did what you needed to do to keep our family from shattering Andro.” Denali said thoughtfully. “You are the only one who could have. We all know that. Even Arram in his own pig headed way.”

Lisisa hit Denali’s shoulder lightly. “Look who is talking about pig headed.” She said with a smile.

Andro smiled as well and looked at Caliria. At Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. At Arduri and Naesta. “We have discovered... we have discovered so much in so short a time.” He said. “Those who were... who were meant to be with us and those we had no idea would be with us. And there is probably much more we will discover before our journey ends.”

“If it ever does.” Sadi spoke softly.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “If it ever does.” He agreed. “No matter what... no matter what happens... we are family. All of us. We are Wolves and Dragons of the Blood.” He looked at Caliria and then her sisters. “And now Vanari of the Blood. That is what our mother has grasped onto. What our siblings she carries have grasped onto. You all know father will never relent, never retreat and never surrender until she is back within his arms. Back among us where she belongs.” Andro looked at Bryon and saw his brother set his jaw and nod. “And we must not either. There are those who would hurt us... try to hurt us... speak bad things about us. Never believe them. These people do not know that we share everything as brothers and sisters. They do not know we already know the truth of things.”

“Kick'em in the nor!” Deion barked out causing all of them to laugh now.

Elynth stretched out her head on her neck until she was looking at Deion with golden eyes. And what if they are not male Deion Leonidas?

Deion hesitated for only a moment. “Kick'em in the goldur then!”

This brought a snort of laughter from Jeth, Jomann and Anthar as well as all of them and Elynth lowered her snout close to Deion her eyes smiling as she butt him gently in the shoulder and Nara reached up to slap him lightly in the back of the head.

Andro shook his head and looked at them once more. “We are different.” He said. “All of us. We bear the name Leonidas... and that makes us different. We will discover many things as the years pass but what has father always taught us?”

“Never fear the unknown.” Retta said.

Andro nodded his head. “Yes... and I believe that is part of our strength. As a family. As a species. As a people no matter who we are. When we look at the unknown we see promise and hope and what could be. We fear it yes... but that fear does not keep us from moving forward into that unknown. That is what we face now. The unknown. I... we do not know what is going to happen... but no matter what it is... we will face it head on. And we will always face it together, for a Leonidas is never alone, are we?”

Andro began and they all began to speak together.

“Wait”.

“There’s no mountain too great.”

“Hear these words and have faith.”

“Have faith.”

“He lives in you. He lives in me.”

“He watches over everything we see.”

“Into the future. Into the truth.”

“In your reflection he lives in you.”

“Aovi.” Eliani spoke in a whisper when they had finished reciting those words. Words they had learned and memorized before they could even walk.

Andro looked at Dorian and lifted his hand under his brother’s palm. Dorian spread his fingers out on top of Andro’s hand. “Welcome our brother.” He said. “Welcome Ryner.” He glanced up behind his shoulder to see Elynth and Anthar rub their snouts against Ryner’s cool scales. “Welcome to our family. Welcome to all of you who sit with us now.”

Eliani gripped Jomann’s hand tightly in hers. Caliria felt the warmth and love embrace her as Andro took her hand and then Naesta her other. Arduri felt Lisisa’s soft touch and then her fingers were entwining with hers.

She looked at her beautiful face and saw in her dazzling green eyes a desire and want that matched Arduri’s own. She glanced at Denali, only to see his dark eyes gazing at her intently, so intently it made her shiver.

“Let us make a vow right now. All of us. We will not rest... we will not hesitate. We will fight everyday until our mother and the brother and sister of ours that she carries is among us.” Andro spoke. “Only on that day will we take the path into the future. Only on that day will we move forward once more. And see what the unknown holds for all of us.”

“Saan bruard hote sali.” They spoke together. “Saan bruard hote sali.”

CRANAE ISLAND

She moved up behind him slowly, knowing that he already could smell her. She was torn between wanting to remain and needing to return and try to figure out her life. What she had seen at Dragon Mountain, what she had felt, it made Caliria want to weep. She was so very confused as she stood there looking at his broad back. They had returned only two hours ago, and Sadi and the others had given her the grand tour of the villa while her mother and sisters had settled into the rooms they normally occupied. She had learned much more about him just letting her eyes wander over much of how the villa was decorated. By Sadi’s own admission, Andro had done most of the decorating before she had even arrived back in his life. In some ways it gave her a window into his mind and heart, and she could see the real him. He loved her without question, they all did, and Caliria felt that love and devotion to her always, yet she could not bring herself to just let go and love them back as completely. Putting aside that the lovemaking between them, between all of them really, was torrid and oh so delicious. They had feasted on her and she on them so willingly yet for three hundred years she had been taught and raised to believe something completely different about Lycavorians. Though all of the Vanari females that had been rescued with her were safely on their way back to their families with nothing but words of praise and compliments on their rescue and how they had been treated by the Lycavorian people, Caliria was the only one who questioned what had happened; why it had happened and how.

Caliria saw his head turn towards her in the darkness, though the moon was nearly full and flooding the beach and the surface of the ocean around them with its glow. His azure eyes once more made her shudder and she saw him reach out his hand to her.

“Come sit with me Inamarno.” He said softly to her. “I promise... no nuzzles or anything intimate.” His smile was devastating to her, hammering against her will.

Caliria didn’t hesitate though and she doubted she would have even if he hadn’t said what he did. Being intimate with him, feeling him possess her as he had with his size and gentleness and experience, it had been the most electrifying sexual occurrence of her life. The most rapturous time she had ever imagined really. Having not only Andro, but Sadi and Lu’ria and Carisia and Ne’Veha pleasuring her in every way, it had nearly made her lose her mind in glorious abandon. She took his hand without doubt and lowered herself between his long legs, snuggling her back against his bare chest.

Andro let her get situated and then he brought his head around over the top of her slim shoulder. She thought he was going to nuzzle her and she would have thoroughly melted if he had, but he kept his word and simply looked out over the surface of the water. You have all of your things ready? He asked her.

Caliria nodded her head. Yes.

She was still amazed at how easily Mindvoicing came to her now. Sadi and the others had instructed her as they laid intimately pressed against one another and Andro on the bed, their passions cooling and they led her on a dreamlike trip through Andro's mind. As that event had unfolded, the Mindvoicing had become so much easier and she felt stronger and focused. Those feelings remained even after they had woken and she continued to practice by simply skipping along other's shields, picking up their surface thoughts but never intruding. However it had occurred, she found her abilities had grown a hundred fold in just the hours she had spent with them. Even the Lycavorian First Oracle had commented that she was far stronger now, and with continued practice she would soon be on the same level as the Leonidas family in the upper echelon of those who were considered Tier Six Mindvoicers.

Good. He said simply.

Androcles... why are you letting me go? She asked him suddenly.

I can not keep you against your will Inamarno. He told her.

You know what I mean! She snapped softly. I know enough about your people to know that if you considered me your... your wife... that you would not let me go.

Andro turned his head and leaned back slightly so he could focus on her eyes. What you just said should be all the answer you need.

What? She gasped. What I just said? How does what... Caliria stopped when she realized what he meant and her green eyes grew wide.

Andro smiled as he saw realization flood her face. You see. He told her. Inamarno... if I thought it would ultimately lead to acceptance by you, I would not let you leave. I would beg you to stay; we would beg you to stay. We would love you until you could not stand it anymore, until you had not the strength to leave us. He shook his head. That is not what I want. You have so many questions. You have doubts and concerns. About me, about us, about my people. About everything. After what you have been through, I can not and will not fault you for this.

Androcles I...

Andro shook his head. Let me speak for a moment Inamarno. He said with a grin as he looked at her and put a finger to her violet lips. You are confused yes? And be honest with me Inamarno. Truly honest.

Caliria nodded her head slowly. Yes.

You do not understand how you can feel for me what you do. How you can feel for KertaGai and SirsanGai what you do. For Enylarcopri and Ilythiiri Tessai. And you certainly do not understand how we can all feel for you what we do. How I... as a male... can love all of you equally. He said.

But it's not equally. Caliria said quickly. Sadi...

Sadi is my anome. Andro said. And yes... part of me will always be drawn more to her because she is a pureblood like me. My blood mother Aricia is anome to my father, but after what you have seen of my mothers who you have met, do you see any jealousy among them. Do you detect any malcontent... and I know you could feel this Inamarno because you are stronger than you have let others see. And you have become this way in a very short time.

Caliria shook her head slowly. No... if anything... if anything Sadi is the one to draw us closer together. Closer to you.

Andro nodded his head. Yes.

Androcles... you know you can't change me. Caliria said. I can't become like you. Like Sadi and Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. Vanari physiology is not able to do this. Any children we might... any children we might have... they will look like me. Not you.

Andro chuckled. And you think this matters to me?

It matters to all Lycavorian men. Caliria said quickly. We have seen it... She stopped once more when he tilted his head and his azure orbs glinted in the moonlight and she realized what she was going to say.

You have spent the majority of your three hundred plus years believing one thing about my people Inamarno. He told her. Having it drummed into your head. Now you are beginning to discover that all might not be as you have believed and it is causing a rift within your heart and mind. Until you bring that back into balance, you will never be happy here with us.

You are... you are so much younger than me and... Caliria began.

I could recite to you the speech my great grandfather Resumar gave on the day he was crowned King from memory. Andro said. A speech that does not exist anywhere in our written history because it was from before records were kept. I have the memories and experiences of my father, my grandfather and my great grandfather within me Inamarno. I recall them in my dreams at times but they are within me. In my father as well. In essence... I am far older than you... by many thousands of years so that argument is not one you can use. At least not in a logical sense. He finished with a smile looking at her.

“Andro...” Caliria said switching back to words now.

Androcles shook his head. “No. You have seen a part of me that only reinforces what you have been told of my people. You are aware of things that I have done. My actions in rescuing you, the orders I gave near Hadaria. Yet you have also seen a part of me that does not fit with all you have been taught. A part of my people that, according to what you have been schooled does not exist. These two things are causing a conflict within you that you can not make sense of. I do understand this you know.”

“Andro it is not just you.” Caliria said softly.

“I know this too.” He said.

Caliria leaned back now looking at him. “And how could you know these things without probing my thoughts?” She asked more sternly than she intended.

Andro smiled. “You forget Inamarno... when you swim within my thoughts I can swim within yours as well. Our minds are open to each other completely. I have a good idea of how analytical your mind works.”

Caliria dropped her eyes from his almost embarrassed. “I am so sorry that...”

“That you believe these things?” Andro questioned. “Do not be sorry Inamarno, because I believe them as well.”

Caliria’s head snapped back up and she looked at him. “What?”

Andro chuckled as he pulled the small data pad from the loose pocket on the leg of his pants. “You and your father are not so different Inamarno.” He said as he held it up. “And regardless of what he thinks... I have a great deal of respect for him. A great deal of respect.”

Caliria looked at him wide eyed. “After what he has accused you of Androcles?” She gasped. “What he has called your people? Even you?”

Andro nodded his head. “He is doing everything within his power to protect the Vanari people. To keep their faith and maintain their connections to the past. Just as I do with my people. His only fault is not seeing that the Vanari will need his even hand of leadership and dedication through this change and it would be better if he guides them rather than try to fight it. Your father... his foresight is incredible Inamarno... it is where you get it. Arduri and Naesta and Nirilo too. His only fault is trying to direct what is happening as opposed to guiding it.”

Caliria looked at the data pad in his hand. “What is that?” She asked.

Andro looked at her for the briefest of moments and then held it out to her. “This is proof to what your father believes.” He said softly. “The equipment used to design and shape the bio-weapon that Eliani discovered infected the Faith family is of Lycavorian Union origin. She confirmed it with my mother only a short time ago... and to be specific it is Hadarian made and engineered. Needless to say my mother is quite furious. More angry than I have seen her in quite some time aside from the Kavalians taking my mother For'mya from us.”

Caliria took the pad with wide eyes. “But that... that would mean...”

Andro nodded. “Yes. That someone within the Union gave the equipment to the OSG to produce this weapon. Which also means that someone in the Union is more than likely working with others in the Protectorate to assist the OSG in taking and moving Vanari slaves that are captured.” Andro shook his head slowly and looked out over the calm ocean water. “Seventeen thousand years of slavery and oppression before we truly threw off the yoke of the High Coven and still there are some among my people who walk this path. Inflicting it on others.” Caliria Re Mydala watched his face and the sadness in his eyes actually caused her pain.

“Androcles this... why... why would you give me this?” She gasped. “This... this only implicates your people.”

Andro looked at her. “Yes it does. And it will also free my people.” He said. “And yours Inamarno. Dutkne is the only other person outside of Eliani, Sadi, my mother and your mother that knows of this. That is why he is returning with you. He is going to end this and those who have taken part in it will meet Spartan justice. Our justice.”

“You... you trust him still... after knowing this?” She asked. “He is the leader of the Protectorate Andro.”

Andro nodded and met her eyes. “I trust him as I trust you. We have a deep connection Inamarno. Within Mindvoice. It is not unlike the connection Wayonn had with Sumar, Canth with my grandfather Resumar and that Helen had with my grandfather and now my father. You know the history of Wayonn and Sumar?”

Caliria nodded. “Some of it yes.” She answered. “Unlike others I discovered these things because of Nirilo’s position among Dutkne’s court. And my mother’s insistence that we read of their history. They were... they were like brothers almost. Knowing what the other knew and being able to speak for them.”

Andro nodded. “Just as Dutkne now is with me. He knows me better than anyone except my father, Sadi and now you.” He answered. “I will share with Lu'ria, Ne'Veha and Carisia what you now know when the time is right.”

Caliria looked at the pad. “But why... why give this to me? To my father?” She asked.

Andro smiled. “Because at this moment in time... you are the only one who your father will listen to.” He said.

“Me?” Caliria gasped. “He won’t... he won’t even acknowledge I am his daughter!” She said angrily. “After what I told him... after being together with you and Sadi and the others, why would he listen to me?”

“He will listen to you because you and he are the only ones among your family who still have doubts and questions.” Andro said. “He will listen to you Inamarno... because no matter what he says or does... he loves you with every breath he takes. And it kills him each time he has to do or say anything against you.”

Caliria looked at him with wide eyes. “How... how do you know this?”

Andro touched his nose. “The nose knows.” He said with a small laugh. “And he is the only one who can help you find your center and open your mind. He is the only one who can help you decide if being with us is truly what you want.”

“But he... he hates your people.” Caliria said.

Andro nodded and used a finger to brush the flawless and smooth blue skin of her cheek and jaw. “Yes he does...” Andro said. He crushed her lips to his and kissed her then, pulling her tightly against him. Caliria didn’t resist... she didn’t want to resist and she whimpered as her own desire and need came rushing to the surface. She met Andro’s kiss with everything she was, firmly pressing her body against his and hoping that he would take her right here on the beach.

It wasn’t to be however, and Caliria tried to capture his lips once more even as he drew away from her slowly. She opened her eyes dreamily and looked into his simmering azure orbs and saw the desire and passion for her burning in them.

“Yes... he does hate my people Inamarno.” Andro drew back and she watched him with confused eyes as he got to his feet and looked down on her. “He hates my people... just as his daughter does.” He spoke softly. “Just as you do Inamarno.”

GYTHEIO

Jomann walked the last two hundred meters towards Eliani’s mountaintop villa in a very good mood. He was going to finally spend time with his new mate and anome in a bed that was not designed to injure someone. They would be able to worship each other on fine, soft sheets and listen to the wind as it whispered through the mountains around them. His mother was ecstatic about him finding a mate and equally ecstatic about meeting her tomorrow. She was somewhat upset that Jomann would not tell her the name of his new mate and wife and his father was positively livid with him for not revealing this information so that he could properly invite her family to the celebration for Jomann’s brother’s graduation. As he closed within a hundred meters of the large villa he looked up and saw two dragons swoop low over the horizon and suddenly land just outside the main door of the villa. Jomann stopped walking as he saw the tall, muscular Spartan and the stunning blond haired female quickly dismount the dragons and move to the main door of the villa. It opened almost before they got there and he saw Eliani. She stepped out of the doorway slightly, wearing only a loose fitting sundress that did little to hide her luscious body and as Jomann tilted his head slightly he caught her enticing maple and wheat scent on the wind.

He watched as words were exchanged, Eliani shook her head several times and then her face dropped and she surrendered to an embrace from the woman and a far too familiar embrace from the Spartan. Jomann felt his blood surge in anger just a little as Eliani directed them into her home and then glanced around outside the entrance to her villa before moving into the villa after them. He stood there for a moment, his heart hanging on the precipice, and then he took a deep breath.

No.

Eliani was his mate and his anome now. Her scent and her blood burned only for him and no other would make her betray that. She was a Leonidas and it was something she would never do. This man and woman, who he now recognized from her thoughts, this was Malic and Nyla. The man and woman who she had been with before discovering him. The man and woman she thought she had loved. No... Jomann knew she would never betray him. Whatever they were here for, Eliani would not allow them to convince her otherwise. Jomann raised his Mindvoice shields to the highest level so that his thoughts did not interfere in whatever she was doing and he turned to go back down the mountain. He got three steps before the massive body of Tharua settled to the ground only four meters away from him.

Jomann? Her voice touched him.

Tharua? He answered moving up to stand beside her. Why are you here? I thought you would be with Jeth hunting over the island.

I came to see if Eliani needed anything before we left. Tharua answered. I saw Vincix and Arydun outside as I circled to land. And then I saw you standing here. Eliani is your mate and anome now Jomann... you should go up there.

Jomann shook his head confidently. If she had wanted me there she would have called for me. He said. Jomann you don't think that...

What? No! Jomann answered quickly. No! This is something she must deal with on her own. No one can make her feel as I do Tharua... I know that. Just as no one can make me feel as she does. We are anomes. I do not question her or what she does. I knew this day would come sooner or later. I knew she would have to face them. And she is strong enough to face them alone. She needs to face them alone.

You were suppose to be with her tonight. Tharua said.

Jomann nodded with a smile. Yes... but I will have eternity with her Tharua. One night without her will not kill me. Two maybe... one no. He answered with a smile.

Tharua chuckled within Mindvoice and nodded her large head. You... you are a very remarkable man Jomann of the Lycavorians.

I like to think so. Jomann answered.

Come... jump onto my saddle and let me at least return you to the island before Jeth and I depart to hunt. I will make sure she is on time tomorrow. Tharua said as Jomann used her thick foreleg to climb into the saddle easily. She has a tendency to get sidetracked at times.

Jomann smiled. Yes... so I have noticed.

Tharua laughed as she propelled them into the night sky.

PROMETHUS STATION

“...Have all the gear and equipment that Ben sent to you Hene?” Andro asked.

The stern looking Durcunusaan Spartan nodded his head. “Yes Milord.” He replied. “I have already transferred it to the ARCH DEMON.”

“How many in your team?” Andro asked.

“Three of my people not including myself and three half vampire Drow scouts.” Hene answered. “My plan now is for one of them to be shadowing Regent Re Mydala at all times while remaining wrapped in the shadows. The rest of us will maintain distance surveillance, but close enough to react within two minutes. Lady Devra has already given us a very detailed blueprint of his offices and the surrounding area in the capital city.”

Hene looked at Devra who stood next to Sadi.

“I bought four offices within the building across from the Board of Regent Headquarters so that I could maintain a public place.” Devra explained. “It is an older building, a landmark you would call it, so it is not full and the entrances are not readily available on the main public promenade that is nearby.”

“As it stands right now access and egress is subtle and out of the way as Lady Devra has said.” Hene spoke.

“My Drow will have no problem moving back and forth, and if need be we can use the sewer tunnels below. They connect with the Regent headquarters and will allow us to be mobile quickly.”

“Androcles... you truly believe Coren will be in danger?” Devra asked.

Andro met her eyes. “Men and women do not change their colors so quickly Devra.” He told her. “Your former husband clings to what he has thought for centuries about my people even after we rescued Inamarno and the others. Ardan Lamurrion turned so fast I thought his face would separate from his head. He is a traitor to your people and he has his hands very deep in whatever deal there is between the OSG and whoever among your people and mine that are capturing and enslaving Vanari. And if I am correct he will accommodate us as much as possible so that we believe this façade he has built and do not question him. He does not know what we have discovered in regards to the disease Corbin Faith tried to inflict on his mother however.”

Devra looked at him. “But you trust Coren... a man who hates you and your people with every fiber of his being?” She said.

Andro chuckled. “Ironic isn’t it?” He said. “I trust in Coren’s dedication to your people and in his ultimate love for Inamarno. He will stop at nothing to discover who is behind this when she gives him the data pad, especially since the evidence proves that Lycavorians from the Protectorate are involved.”

“But you and Dutkne will be incriminating your own people.” Devra said.

Andro shook his head. “No... we will be discovering a cancer among our people.” He replied with cold anger in his voice. “A cancer that Dutkne will remove permanently and with extreme prejudice.”

“Who will be watching Inamarno?” Sadi asked from beside Andro.

“That would be me Princess.” The young female spoke stepping forward smartly. “Junior Commander Paga.”

“And you know your task?” Sadi asked.

“Yes Milady... go where she goes... become her friend. Watch out for and protect her. Report to you everything she does.” Paga announced.

“No!” Sadi declared. “Her decisions must be her own Paga. I forbid you to report to me or to anyone what she does unless it endangers her life. I will not have her believe we are watching her.”

Paga glanced at Andro quickly and then back to Sadi. “If that is what you wish Milady.” She spoke. “I don’t know if she will believe me though.”

Sadi smiled warmly. “She will believe you.” She said. “I have left something in the quarters she will use for the trip that will convince her.”

“Commander Hene... as for Coren Re Mydala... you are to let him do what he will. I do not doubt he will uncover what we want and you will only interfere if his life becomes exposed to harm in any manner. Denali and Lisisa know of you and your team and if you feel the need to get authorization for something contact them on their personal channels.” Andro spoke calmly. “I expect that Coren will move quickly when he returns. He will want to expose us to everyone as quickly as possible considering what my directives to Denali are.”

Hene nodded. “Understood Milord.” He said. “And if his life does become threatened sire?”

Andro looked at Devra quickly and her nod was without hesitation or doubt. He turned back to Hene. “Eliminate the threat Commander.”

Hene nodded. Consider it done sire.” He answered.

Andro nodded. “You are dismissed.” He said waiting for Hene and his team to exit the room before looking at Devra and pulling Sadi close to him. “I have done everything I can do.” He told her. “Anymore and I will expose our hand in all this.”

Devra nodded her head. “I can’t believe Ardan is involved.” She said. “And you let him go.”

“It was the only way to insure that we did not lose control of the situation.” Andro told her.

“When did you know he was involved Andro?” Sadi asked.

“Just after the OSG tried to kill us.” He answered. “He made such a big deal out of what I said in my anger and then suddenly his caution about me was tossed aside. My father once told me that a person can always change their spots; and they can be true about what they believe if it is over a matter of time and they have been given good reason to do so. Like being confronted by the truth. We killed a couple of OSG men and women and suddenly Ardan is on my side? I am not a fool, and I saw right through that. Then when I was speaking with Brendi’s brother, he tried to hide the recognition on his face. He knew this Corbin Faith person. It was there only for a moment but I saw it. That only confirmed my initial belief.”

“If Ardan is involved in selling our people to the OSG then there is no telling how many other members of the SBR are involved as well. Or members of the General Board for that matter.” Devra said.

“If things go as I have planned them we will have our answers.” Andro stated. “And then we can act. Why do you think I am sending Denali and Lisisa there?”

Devra looked at him. “What... what do you mean?”

“They have grown close to Arduri.” Sadi said. “And she wants to be closer. As do they.”

Andro nodded. “My brother is a lot more dense than Lisisa... but she has told me the attraction is there. It will probably take both Lisisa and Arduri jumping his bones before he gets it...” Andro said with a smile. “But they will not let anything happen to Arduri. No matter how long they have to stay. Unfortunately... what we are doing will put all of your family in danger I believe, but there is no other way.”

Devra was silent for a time and then nodded her head. “I guess I should not be surprised about Arduri. She has always been the more adventurous of my daughters... and the most tenacious. If your brother and sister are what she truly wants then that is why she is refusing to advance her relationship with Cruor. Not that I mind that. It will make Coren even more livid however. Especially if they discover why she is doing it.” Devra said with a hiss.

Andro nodded. “Probably... but if we are going to have a future among our people it needs to begin now. No more of this back and forth and playing games. My father will not let the status quo continue, and better that I be the one to do this. He will be far more blunt and unforgiving than me.”

Devra nodded and looked at them. “Will you see Caliria off?” She asked finally.

Andro looked at Sadi and then shook his head slowly. “No. That will only succeed in confusing her more than she already is.”

“She loves you Androcles.” Devra said sincerely. “All of you Sadi. I know my daughter well enough to see that.”

Andro nodded. “She also has some deep issues that she needs to come to terms with and they involve us. Me mainly... but they are things she can only work out away from us.” He said. “Believe me... I do not want her to go Devra. None of us do... but if she does not go then over time she will come to hate us. That I could not bear.”

Devra nodded. “I understand.” She said softly. “Just don’t stop loving her.”

“That will never happen Devra.” Sadi spoke firmly. “There is nothing she could do that would make us stop loving her. Ever.”

Devra looked at them and smiled. “I should probably go and say goodbye then. I will see you back on the Island.”

Andro and Sadi watched her leave and then they were alone. Sadi looked at him for a long moment and then wrapped her arms around his waist. “What are you thinking?” She asked.

Andro pulled her close to him and buried his face into her long blond hair. “I am thinking that we just may lose her KertaGai.” He said softly.

“I won’t believe that.” Sadi said. “No matter what happens... her heart of hearts belongs with us and she knows that.”

“I hope you are right.” Andro said. “I hope you are right.”

GYTHEIO

Oh Tharua... he must be so angry with me. Eliani gasped as Tharua raced over the tops of the mountain villas heading for the homes closer to the gulf. I can’t believe I let them do this to me!

Tharua turned her head as she dipped lower in the cloudless sky. He is not angry sister. I have told you this. They are more than friends to you Eliani... and you cannot just dismiss them now. Especially now. Jomann knows this. Nyla is pregnant and that is why they came to you.

I should have reached for him. Eliani berated herself. I should have had him there with me. It is so inappropriate for me to be with a man I had a relationship with and not have Jomann be there. It was supposed to be our first real night together. I had wine and rose peddles for the bath and...

Enough! Tharua hissed at her. Do you think your anome would have so little faith in you? You are bound with Jomann in a way sacred to your people sister. And this would not have happened if there was any question about how you feel for each other.

I just... I don't... I can't lose him Tharua. I can't. Eliani said.

Lose him? Ahh... Eliani my sister, now you think too little of yourself. You will never lose Jomann sister. You are soulmates! Meant for each other by a higher power. Tharua told her. We are almost there... and be yourself. That is what your mate would expect.

Yes it is. The male voice spoke now intruding on their conversation. And it is what I expect of my sister as well.

Eliani turned her head and admonished herself once more, for flying in almost perfect formation with Tharua was Elynth, Majeir and Anthar. Sadi rode just in front of Andro while Ne'Veha sat behind Lu'ria on Majeir.

Andro! Eliani gasped.

Her brother smirked from perhaps ten meters away. Jomann invited us as well. Given what is happening all around us, a little time away from it enjoying some happiness will be good for all of us. Andro shook his head. And our mothers demanded we go too. Dorian too. They threatened to turn me over their knee if I did not.

Eliani couldn't help the laugh that escaped her lips at her brother's face and the fear she had felt only moment's before vanished instantly. She gripped the saddle's edges just a little less tightly as Tharua dove for the ground.

The home was comfortable and very well kept. Herolia was a traditional Spartan woman and while Josoric's position within the Union military granted them the ability to have several employees, she refused to allow anyone to tend to her flower gardens that surrounded her home. The Union Captain from Apo Prime had swept her off her feet the moment she saw him all those years ago and to this day, their desire for each other had not dimmed one bit. All four of their children were proud and strong and their upbringing showed the pillar of their love for each other.

Josoric had so impressed her own mother and father that they urged her to accept his courtship sooner than normal even though he was nearly eight hundred years senior to her two hundred and six years of age. Their youngest son had just graduated from the Union Flight Academy and their home was now filled with family and friends to celebrate that. Herolia and her mother stood outside the front of their large villa sharing company with four other females, among them two elven females who were wives and mates to Herolia's brothers. Soft Greek music played in the background throughout the house, a lavish display of food and drink laid out in the center of the villa. Four of the members of her husband's Union military Command stood sharply outside the entrance of their villa to direct others to the correct home and assist in parking any Lifters that were brought.

"...You said we would meet Jomann's new mate?" Her mother Rohebi asked her.

"Yes Herolia... all of us are waiting with baited breath you know. We all want to see who has claimed the heart of your son." Ye'nai spoke. "He is the only one of your sons that has not shown an interest in any females. His uncle and I had all but given up hope."

Herolia smiled and laughed. "He has not told me anything Ye'nai. Only that we will meet her today. She is suppose to be arriving soon I think."

"You have not caught a scent at least?" Her mother asked.

Herolia nodded her head. "Oh yes... maple and wheat. Very sweet and soft. Embedded deeply in his blood. Whoever she is... she is very powerful if her scent is any indication. He is being so obstinate in not telling us. Josoric is furious with him."

“Why hide who she is?” Rohebi asked. “Do you know if she was born here in Sparta?”

Herolia nodded. “I know that much at least. All he would tell us is that she was born here in Sparta and she comes from a very traditional family.”

The shadows that flashed overhead caused Herolia to stop in the middle of her sentence and look up. It caused all of them to look up as low as the shadows were and they witnessed the ochre colored dragon flare its huge wings and land easily on the ground outside the entrance, followed quickly by a single dragon that all of them knew well enough from the Netnews reports.

“The Prince!” Rohebi declared getting to her feet. “Here?”

Herolia relaxed slightly and held her mother’s arm. “Jomann is his Captain mother. He told me he invited Prince Androcles and his mates.” She stated. “Though I must admit... I did not think he would come.”

“Bah!” Rohebi spat. “A more traditional family does not exist than the Leonidas Royal family. It would be dishonorable for him not to come if Jomann invited him. It is why they are so loved. They truly act like normal people.”

Herolia held her mother’s arm as she saw the four guards snap to attention when Andro and the others approached slowly. Herolia recognized all of his mates and even his sister Eliani, the half Hadarian. The four soldiers parted smartly and Androcles smiled at one and patted his shoulder as the four dragons settled gracefully to the ground to rest some twenty meters outside the wall of the villa’s property. No Lifter would try to come down this road now she knew. Herolia turned quickly as Josoric came rushing from inside the villa. One of their guests must have rushed inside to where he was and told him who was here. He tried to smooth out his clothes as he took a place on Rohebi’s opposite side, gently helping to hold his mother-in-law steady. She was not a frail or very old woman, but she had just gone through a lengthy sickness common to older wolves and as per her history, she endured it without medical treatment as her ancestors did. She would recover fully in a few weeks and it would never occur again, but stubborn woman that she was, she would not let it keep her down.

“Now... do not try and impress yourself upon Prince Androcles Josoric my boy.” Rohebi told him.

“Your record and history speak plainly enough for themselves. They are beyond stellar. Be yourself.”

Josoric glanced at his mate and wife and smiled as Rohebi gripped his hand while she spoke. Josoric had lost his own parents centuries ago to the High Coven and Rohebi and her mate had quickly filled this role for him. “With you here medwaw... I could not be anything but myself.” He answered.

Rohebi nodded. “And that is why you are mated with my daughter.” She said with a smile of her own as Andro stepped up to them holding what looked like a large bottle of Spartan wine and each of his mates carrying small packages as well.

Andro bowed his head to them, stunning all of them with his action. Josoric stepped forward quickly. “Milord please...” He stammered. “You need not...”

Andro looked up. “General Josoric... we are guests in your home. I hope Jomann told you we were coming.” He said.

Herolia’s keen female wolf nose caught the sweet scent on the slight breeze. The same sweet maple and wheat scent she had detected on her oldest son and her dark eyes grew a little wider.

“He did Milord.” Josoric answered. “You honor our home with your presence, especially with everything that is happening now.”

“Please General... what better way is there to try and put my problems on hold for a time then coming to a Spartan home and partaking in some of that delicious Greek food my nose tells me has been prepared.” Andro spoke with a genuine smile. “Is that Pasticcio I smell? And Arni Me Patates?”

Sadi gave him a gentle elbow in his gut. “Andro... your manners over your nose.” She stated drawing a smile from both Herolia and her mother. She stepped up and held out the package in her hands. “Dolmathes... for your table Lady Herolia. My father taught me to make them.” She said with an embarrassed smile. “They are the only thing I can make to be honest. I hope you like them.”

Herolia took the package which turned out to be a large platter in a thin box and it smelled of fine herbs and rice filled grape leaves. A delicacy to many of the older Spartans and it would no doubt be a big hit with her family. “Thank you Princess... you honor...”

Sadi shook her head. “Today... and always forward it is only Sadi.” She said.

Herolia's eyes narrowed. "I could not Princess... it would not be appropriate for me to refer to you in such an informal way."

Sadi blinked. "Isn't that what family does?" She asked.

Herolia looked at her, eyes growing wide. "Family?" She gasped.

Andro grimaced. "Oops!" He said sheepishly. "I think the cat is out of the bag."

Herolia glanced at her mother and husband and then back to Andro. "Milord... I don't know what you mean? We..."

"Eli!" Jomann's voice boomed from behind them causing them to turn and watch as their oldest son approached with his younger brother Donal beside him.

A small squeal emanated from behind Androcles and suddenly they watched his younger sister Eliani dart from behind him and practically launch herself into Jomann's arms. As Eliani passed her Herolia once more caught the sweet scent of maple and wheat and her eyes exploded in disbelief.

Jomann caught her easily and their lips came crashing together in a positively possessive kiss. His arms crushed her petite frame to his suspended in the air, while her arms flew around his broad shoulders and her hands gripped the back of his head.

[Jomann my love!] Eliani exclaimed with her thoughts even as she deepened their kiss. [I am so sorry! Tharua told me and...]

Jomann pulled his head back and looked into her stunning fern green eyes while her hands stroked his cheeks. [You are mine Eliani Leonidas! Just as I am yours! I know this and you know this. They... they are important to you. And it was something you needed to do.]

[I should have reached for you! Told you what...] Eliani began but his kiss staggered her thoughts and her legs curled up sensuously along his hips.

[We are anomes and our trust is as powerful as our love.] His words flooded her mind and Eliani felt all the doubts and fears she had been holding inside her all morning lift away into the wind. [Besides... I will enjoy you that much more this night.]

Eliani cooed in his arms, a sound that reached everyone nearby and caused Andro to shake his head. [Ahem!] He cleared his throat while sounding the word into their connection even though it was partially shielded.

Jomann and Eliani parted quickly and saw everyone's eyes upon them. Her tanned face grew instantly flush with embarrassment and she tugged on his arms to lower her to the ground which he did quickly. He did not release her however, and Eliani made no move to take her hands from his arms. Jomann coughed softly and looked at his wide eyed parents.

"Ah... mother... grandmother... father... I would like to present Eliani Leonidas." He said. "My... my mate. My wife. My anome."

Herolia gasped and almost dropped the package from Sadi before Josoric caught it and quickly set it on one of the chairs to the side. He turned back to his son, who stood there looking rather out of place and stupefied.

"Anome? Jomann... Jomann why did you not..." Herolia began to stammer.

"Hmmm..."

Eliani squeezed his hands and stepped forward in front of him almost defensively. "It is my fault Lady Herolia." She said. "This is Donal's day and I did not want to... I did not want to overshadow that. It would not be..."

"Show me!" Herolia snapped almost angrily.

Eliani knew immediately what she meant and she stepped closer to her and pulled back the collar of the loose fitting pink pullover shirt she wore with the dark leather pants and boots. Herolia stepped closer to her and her eyes saw the teeth marks on Eliani's shoulder that indicated where Jomann had bitten her. She moved even closer and leaned close to Eliani's cheek, inhaling deeply of her maple and wheat scent as well as the pungent jasmine scent of her first born son deeply embedded within Eliani's blood and scent. Rohebi stepped forward now as well and both of them looked at her.

"I thought... Jomann told us..." Herolia stuttered softly.

"I know what you are going to say Lady Herolia... but that was not... that was not..." Eliani tried to find the words and cursed under her breath. It was Herolia who reached out and took her hands drawing her fern green eyes back up to her face. "I'm sorry... I can not find the words to express what I want to say. I am not... I am not usually without words."

Rohebi chuckled. "If you are anything like your mother child I would not think so." She said with a glint in her eyes.

"Does your blood burn for my son Eliani Leonidas?" Herolia asked softly. "Does it truly burn for him?"

Eliani's face lit up and she smiled a rapturous smile. "Oh... Milady... if only I could describe how my blood burns for him. Every single moment since I first smelled him. Since I first touched him. It hasn't stopped burning. I tremble at his touch upon me, I smell him everywhere I go. I dream of him and..."

Herolia grinned at her. "Hush child." She said softly. "Before you make even my mother wish for male companionship."

Eliani blushed as she smiled. "Forgive me for not letting him tell you sooner." She said. "We... I was afraid you would think badly of me because of..."

Herolia drew her into an embrace and inhaled deeply of her scent, her arms tightening and enjoying the feel of her. She felt Eliani's arms do the same and Herolia knew. She knew by her actions and by her scent. If you have taken the heart of my son Eliani... smitten him as you have done... then you have done something many have tried and not succeeded at. And now I know why.

I will love him forever and an eternity Milady. We will have strong children and... Eliani told her as Herolia drew back.

Herolia laughed and embraced her once more. "Oh child... I like how you think!" She exclaimed. She looked at Jomann as she held Eliani's hands and her face became stern. "You... young Spartan! You on the other hand... you had best devise a way to make up to your father and I this breach of protocol."

"Mother I..." Jomann began.

"Not now!" Herolia snapped. "After I have gotten to know your anome better. She is obviously more well mannered than you."

Herolia grabbed her mother's hand and still holding Eliani's hand began to draw them into the villa. Eliani glanced back at him quickly, her face beaming and Jomann grinned at her. Until his father stepped up in front of him.

"You and I will talk boy!" Josoric scolded him before turning to Andro who stood there sheepishly. "Milord... allow me to welcome you and show you and the Princesses into my home. I hope all of you are hungry for we have an overabundance of food."

This time it was Ne'Veha who stepped forward, the scent of the food clashing with her new wolf blood and setting her mouth to watering. "We are famished." She stated. "Our mate did not allow us to eat before we left."

"No he did not." Sadi agreed stepping up beside her.

Josoric smiled. "For shame!" Josoric announced. "Then please Princesses... follow me and I will sate your hunger."

Andro stood there for a moment watching as Jomann's father led Sadi and the others into the villa. He looked at Jomann then.

"Explain to me how you and my sister took a sibfla and you and I end up holding it Jomann." Andro said moving up to stand beside him and his brother.

"I am asking myself that same question Andro." Jomann said. "My brother Donal."

"Milord!" Donal almost shouted.

Andro nodded. "Since I am here... why don't we secure a nice small corner... eat until we burst and stay out of the line of fire of your parents."

Jomann nodded. "At this point I would say that is a sound tactical move." He stated.

Donal laughed. "It won't work. Mother is like a heat seeking missile when she wants to find you." He said.

"Let's give it a try anyway shall we?" Andro said. "I'm starving."

"Left flank." Jomann spoke. "Donal... you have point."

"Why me?" His brother asked.

Jomann laughed. "Mother will not shoot you." He said pushing his younger brother ahead of him.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-FIVE

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND VILLA

... I told you it wasn't as easy as it looked. Andro spoke within Mindvoice smiling as the mental image from Dorian came to his head. Now get back up and try again. It will get easier as you and Ryner grow more comfortable together.

Will we be like you and Elynth Andro? Dorian had asked. His body was now that of an eight or nine year old boy and beginning to slow in its growth, but his voice was that of a teenager already in Andro's mind.

We are all different fervon. Andro told him. We can do different things. You do not have to be like Elynth and I.

Will we be as strong? Ryner's voice broke in.

You will become as strong as you wish to be, the more you fly together. It will be different for you Dorian because you have the best of both mother and father within you. You will be able to blur, to wrap the shadows around you. You will find that you can do things Elynth and I cannot, while you can't do things that we can. This awareness that we have... it is not easy to control. Do not become frustrated by this. Never become angry and always remember that you are different. Even Elynth and I sometimes do not understand it. Andro answered him. It is sometimes boring and tedious... but the training and practice will only make you and Dorian better Ryner. I promise you.

Then we will continue to practice. Dorian announced confidently.

Andro smiled. Complete the skill sets I have passed to you. Master them and then I will show you more. And do not be afraid to approach Miath or the Elder Mother for advice on anything. Miath and our mother Anja have been together for nearly thirty years and the Elder Mother can answer any question you may have.

Where will you be? Dorian asked.

I have nothing but meetings and plans to make today. Andro answered.

War is coming isn't it fervon? Because of what they have done to our mother. Dorian questioned.

As much as I don't wish it... yes. War is never the answer fervon; understand that more than anything, for father will tell it to you as well. It is a failure of all other things. Spartans we may be... but we hate war more than most because we have seen what it can wrought. Death. Destruction. Horrors beyond what you can imagine now. Andro told them.

Like Alba Tau? Dorian asked softly.

Yes... like Alba Tau. Androcles answered just as softly. We hate war fervon... but we train every day to fight war so that we can protect what we have from those who want to take it from us. The more we sweat in training, the less we will bleed in war. Father has said this on more than one occasion, and you will hear it as well. Our grandfather Leonidas began the legacy of our Spartan blood and it has continued to this day. We are feared because we are fearless in battle. We do not surrender, we do not offer mercy and we do not lose very often. It is something to be proud of yes, but not something to brag about.

We wish to fight with you Andro. Beside you, beside father and our siblings. We wish to see the stars and other planets. Ryner has told me of those he saw when he was coming here. We want to see more. Dorian spoke.

And you will. Andro told him. You will.

Our brother and sister will be like us won't they? Dorian questioned after a pause.

In many ways yes... but never as strong as we are. It is not something I wanted to do... but our family is precious to us. To me. I needed to do something. We will need to teach them when we are finally together. Things our mother can't teach them. But we will save them and our mother. Andro told him.

Will you return to Dragon Mountain today fervon? Dorian asked. You and Elynth? I want to show you someone?

Someone? Andro asked with a smile.

She is different than the others I have seen. She holds much inside. Hidden deep. Fear, doubt, questions. Dorian spoke. But she is beautiful.

You can sense this from her? Andro asked.

Yes... she hides it well... but yes.

Interesting. Andro said. This may be something that is developing within you fervon. But do not forget the rules that our father has put forth for us. Never intrude deeper than their surface thoughts. It is wrong and invasive and we do not do that. For any reason. Besides... you do not need to be thinking of that now fervon. Andro scolded playfully. There will be plenty of time for that.

We want to see you. When are you returning? Dorian asked.

As soon as I am able... but this connection is for us alone fervon. The four of us. We do not need to shield it because no one else is like us. It is like a completely separate channel all our own. Andro told him. Reach for Elynth or me within this connection and we will answer. We will come to see you tonight fervon, I promise.

Tonight then. Dorian whispered.

Androcles gazed out at the calm ocean surface from the repaired double doors onto the white sands of his villa's beach as he felt Dorian and Ryner fade from the connection and return to their studies.

He had reluctantly agreed for the additional security measures to be placed in and around Cranae Island, including supplementary motion and body sensors and remote turrets. He did not however, realize just how skilled the Durcunusaan and the Union elf engineers had become at concealing these added defensive measures, for his keen eyes could detect nothing of them. His beach did not look altered in any way, nor did any of the nearby terrain. It was a credit to their skill and the engineering expertise of the Union elven engineers.

Androcles wore nothing but his customary white pants with crimson trim, his feet and upper body bare. They had remained at Jomann's parents home for longer than he had intended, but even now Andro had to admit it was a very welcome diversion, and Jomann's parents seemed to sense that is exactly what all of them needed. He had taken part in only one meeting after that and after speaking with his father, his aunt had told him to spend the night with his mates and try to regain some semblance of order within their lives.

This advise Androcles had taken to heart for it was the same thing his father had told him long ago.

He was still somewhat worn from the previous evening, but he would recover quickly. He had spent the entire night rediscovering his mates and their howls of bliss had filled the villa's halls as he devoted all of his attention to them and their pleasure. He had begun with Sadi and ended with Sadi, but in between he could not begin to recall the combinations they had created, some of them very unique. The only thing that any of them lacked was their Vanari lover and mate. They felt her absence but took solace in each other's company and hoped she would return quickly. He had slowly extracted himself from their bed, having to undrape Lu'ria's arm from around his waist and Sadi's legs from his. It had taken him several minutes to accomplish this without waking them, but he had finally done so. Now he stood watching as the sun began to crest the horizon and spread across the Laconia Gulf. In several hours Arrarn and Narice would be meeting with the High Coven admiral who had contacted them and then moving to their departure area. Resumar and Athani were fully ready to act on their end, and he would speak to Miranda later today. The last section of her command would be leaving Earth today to join with her after he revealed them to the Elder Mother and the Feravomir. The Kavalians were moving quickly, hoping to press forward and get things done while everyone was still reeling from the decisions of the Galactic Court. Their delegation would arrive from Hadaria early this evening, which meant that his uncle had no doubt left Hadaria already and taken his mother and unborn siblings with him. Resumar's contact in the Kavalian Command Compound was waiting for his return to possibly confirm For'mya's location.

Andro smelled her sugarplum and spice scent before he felt her slim, but strong arms slip around his waist, warm against his skin. Then she moved around under his arm as he lifted it and pressed her near naked front to his side. Sadi wore only her usual near transparent robe, her supple body naked beneath the robe, the front untied and exposing her lush frame to his azure eyes. He took in her magnificent beauty, once more silently thanking the gods that this lovely beauty was his, even as she pressed her large and very firm breasts against his rib cage and leaned her face up to bury it in his throat and breathe in deeply.

"Hmmm... you were very sweet and attentive to us last night Saradasaar." She cooed to him softly. "Where did you ever learn to use your tongue in such a manner? You have not done that before. It was especially exquisite!"

Andro leaned over and kissed her hard, plunging his tongue between her willing lips and pulling her tightly to him with his free arm. Sadi groaned as the fires his aura sparked in her rekindled and she squeezed him harder, meeting his tongue with her own, the nipples of her breasts becoming hard once more. She tried to keep his tongue trapped in her mouth when she felt him begin to pull away but his lips came off hers and then he lowered his lips and nose to nuzzle her throat firmly, eliciting a gasp of even further delight. "I must be inventive so that my mates do not lose interest in me." He told her with a sly smile.

"As if that will ever happen." Carisia's voice sounded now.

Androcles looked up as his pureblood vampire mate moved around in front of him and pressed her petite and quite scrumptiously naked form against his body, looking up into his face with those remarkable maya blue eyes. Lu'ria was just behind her and she pressed her lush, dark caramel colored and near naked body against Carisia's back, nuzzling the back of her neck as Ne'Veha move up on his opposite side and took very much the same stance as Sadi. Androcles smiled at the look of carnal lust on Carisia's face as she felt her Drow Mistress press against her back. He knew his mates gravitated to one another in different ways, and Carisia simply adored being submissive to her Drow Mistress Lu'ria in every way, though she could have easily cowed Lu'ria in a matter of moments with her superior vampire speed and strength.

Sadi and Ne'Veha were also drawn more to one another and it was these diverse pairings that Andro noticed most when they were all together. The soft sounds of pleasure at its extreme were more pronounced when it was like that in their bed. When Caliria had been with them, the sounds and scents had never dimmed as all of them seemed to be drawn to her powerfully and none of them could get enough of her or she of them. Her presence seemed to only increase their own want and need for each other. Now the scents of sweet amaretto, rose blossoms and honey melon combined with Sadi's pungent scent to nearly overwhelm him and Andro quickly dropped his head to nuzzle all of them, drawing gasps of sincere delight from each of them just as he had from Sadi. Carisia could not feel the aura he projected outward because she was not wolf, but he could and did make her tremble for he did it within Mindvoice.

"KertaGai is right." Ne'Veha husked softly against his chest, her warm breath on his skin like a soothing balm. "In the time we have been together you have never taken us as you did last night. So forcefully and so passionately."

Lu'ria chuckled softly. "I rather enjoyed it. Immensely." She stated.

Sadi laughed gently. "We all did Mistress..." She said. "The question is... will it always be like this now?"

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. "I don't know. Perhaps." He answered.

Carisia bit down on his pectoral muscle just enough to make him hiss and then she licked his skin with her tongue. "Don't tease us!" She snarled softly. "We'll make you regret it."

Andro smiled at them. "It will be like that always." He stated confidently. "I think... I think Inamarno's Alkay may have affected all of us to some extent. Even without her here with us, all of you... it is like you taste and smell so much sweeter now. Just as you did when she was with us."

"Do you think it is because of her?" Sadi asked. "Maybe her Alkay changed us in some manner."

Andro met her jungle green eyes. "I think it proves to me that she is meant to be part of our lives and that is all I care about." He answered her. "I don't want any of you to be angry with me for doing what I did. It needed to be done in order for her to be happy with us. She needs to fight through what she is feeling and come to terms with it on her own."

"We know that Saradasaar." Lu'ria spoke softly. "I just think none of us wanted her to leave."

"No... we did not." Carisia agreed.

Andro nodded his head. "Nor did I." He spoke. He looked at Sadi. "What did you leave her KertaGai?"

Sadi smiled sweetly. "A few messages of sorts." She replied. "Just to let her know what she means to us."

"Andro... what do... what do we do now?" Ne'Veha asked him.

Andro turned and looked into her dark brown eyes. "We wait and we plan." He answered. "I'm meeting with grandfather Riall, Tareif, Lynwe and Vengal today, as well as President Taylor and Tenna Aihola. I will fill them in on my plans and the security measures I want to implement once the Senate makes its decision."

"And you are certain that the senate will vote in our favor?" Carisia asked him.

Andro nodded his head as he sipped his mug of coffee. "There are probably a few more Senators who either do not like my father or never agreed with his and my mother's policies than Deia realizes, but I am relatively sure their voices will not outweigh those Senators who do think like my father. When the Spartan Senate was folded into the Union Senate as a whole, many of them became fast friends with others from within the Union who were not born here in Sparta. Their influence has only continued to grow since then.”

“SirsanGai and I are going to use this time to become more familiar with the Mark II’s new systems. We’ll be here all day in and out of the Command Center.” Sadi said. “We’re also trying to determine if it’s possible to perhaps use some sort of local docking collar so that we can attach a TEMPEST fighter to the belly of our Mark II when we travel long distances.”

Andro looked at her. “Why would we need to do that?” He asked.

Sadi rolled her eyes. “Because Saradasaar... in the last few weeks you have managed to piss off every major bad guy organization in existence. Taking you out would be a major coup for anyone fool enough to try. It’s up to us to make sure that doesn’t happen. Not only would we lose the delicious mate that our blood burns for so intensely, it would make us very angry and unpredictable.”

Andro grinned. “Delicious huh?”

Sadi leaned back with a twinkle in her eye. “Did I say delicious? It must have been a slip of the tongue.” She slapped his chest playfully as she felt his aura begin to reach for her. “Save it for tonight my love.” She told him with a smile.

“We will expect the same attention.” Ne’Veha said with a smile as she released him and took Sadi’s hand.

Andro turned quickly and lightly slapped Ne’Veha’s exquisitely formed and wonderfully firm ass. She yelped in surprise as Sadi pulled her away quickly. “We’ll make breakfast!” She called as she dragged Ne’Veha towards the kitchen.

Andro smiled and turned back to look at Lu’ria and Carisia. “Is Am’uur still in Sparta Ilythiiri Tessai?”

Lu’ria nodded with a smile. “I don’t believe he and this Tastia have left his apartment since they arrived.”

Andro nodded. “I want you and Enylarcopri to go see him. I have something special I want him to take a look at and possibly plan for me. And I want your father and family involved with him as well.”

Carisia and Lu’ria looked up at him with renewed interest. “What is that my love?” Lu’ria asked keenly aware something was spinning through his head.

Andro’s azure orbs looked down at them for a long moment and they met his gaze without question. His Drow and pureblood vampire mates were supremely skilled and both came from a species or culture that demanded action and reprisal when needed. Lu’ria’s family, at least according to Am’uur, had accepted that their daughter was now Princess of the Union and wolf. This bound them to the Leonidas family in a way they had never imagined. While they knew Sadi and Ne’Veha regarded Lu’ria as their Drow Mistress, they were keenly aware that Carisia was the one who treated this almost reverently, and without question they had accepted Carisia in this role. They would understand what he wanted and they would even encourage it in many cases. Andro believed that is part of the reason why they were so drawn to each other. The killer instinct that was inbred in both of them called for the other strongly.

“An assassination.” Andro answered plainly.

Ulana sat quietly in the Lifter, looking out the window as it glided over the tops of the buildings on the outskirts of Gytheio. She had never been to Gytheio before; indeed she had only been to Earth and Sparta three times in her life. She did not care for the slow pace or the almost common nature of the people here and nor had her father. She had also never been to Androcles villa on Cranae Island in the six months they had dated. He had refused to bring her here on all three of the different occasions she had either traveled her or had been with him on Earth, opting instead for his apartment on the Royal Estate outside Sparta. Ulana had always been slighted by that fact, though she never mentioned it openly to him. He always avoided the topic when she brought it up and quickly changed the subject as if he was trying to hide some secret from her. Now as the personal Lifter began a slow descent towards the pier end of the causeway that would take her and her fellow Senators to the island, her dark eyes gazed at the size and splendor of the island.

It was much larger than she had expected, with the elegant circular shape of Androcles’s very expansive villa visible on the far side of the island even from the air. She would learn later that the villa had been expanded greatly since he and Sadi had become mates, but the newly added guest quarters in the center of the island and the main Durcunusaan barracks near the causeway end took away only slightly from the beauty of the white sandy beaches all along the perimeter of the island. The thick timber that stood tall and proud in the center and thinning as it reached the edges of the island was lush and very green. The history of Cranae Island had long been a topic among the Netnews special reports. It was said that Androcles Leonidas had over the past years gathered and displayed a wealth of treasure and history within its walls. Much of the main interior design work he had done himself she knew from the reports, which Ulana had found surprising at first. Androcles Leonidas was almost as wealthy as his father due to several timely and very shrewd personal investments that had paid off handsomely for him through the years. The Netnews socialite reporters put his estimated value at nearly seventy billion riyal, behind only the ninety-two billion of his father and then four men and three women, all heads of major engineering corporations within the Union. Androcles's business deals, especially the apartment building in Palno City, were superior in revenue and how they were accomplished and he could afford to have all the work on Cranae Island done by outside help if he wanted, yet he choose not too. Thinking about that building brought a scowl to her beautiful face for not only had he made nearly fifty-seven million riyal on that deal over a period of roughly six years, it was also the apartment building that all too common female wolf Sadi had lived in. And he had just given it away to her father as a joining present.

That common and traitorous female wolf who now held the title that should have been hers.

Ulana's father had been a very popular man, at least in their district of Tuya, and his work as a senior Professor at the main university had earned him accolades from many people. Their family had been among the first to help settle Apo Prime, and their wealth had been built by generations before her. This had also earned him a seat within the Union Senate, a perk that had been passed down through the years just like their wealth. It was now her seat, the seat that others had urged her and supported her to take over when he had been killed in the destruction of the Spartan Senate Building. Ulana was equally well known, and while no one would ever admit it publicly, they knew her to be very devious. Her father had spoiled her terribly as his only child, and she had the best education that could be offered within the Lycavorian Union, not to mention unlimited funds to do with what she wished. She was arrogant to the extreme, seeing herself as better than most of the men and women around her because of her education and her upbringing. Her father had taught her to be strong however, and to go after what she wanted no matter who or what stood in her way. Ulana believed, as her father did, that Andro's father had been nothing more than a militaristic King who could not advance the Union towards peace and prosperity. Ulana believed, as her father raised her to believe, that the only way to achieve this goal was a caste system where a few powerful men and women controlled the lives of everyone else and decided for them what was in their best interests. He completely dismissed the fact that Martin Leonidas had increased the size of the Union's surplus to nearly ten trillion riyal annually because of new technologies derived from the Mindvoice ship and the inclusion of many different member species of the Union. All of whom had large trade contracts locked in for decades to come. He also dismissed the fact that Martin and his Queens were the real reason that poverty and hopelessness had all but been eradicated within the Union. They donated generously of their wealth and time helping others to reach for the goals they had, and this was why the Union grew in size nearly every year.

While it was not well known or reported by the Netnews, there was a large contingent of men and women who thought themselves better than everyone else, and believed the same way her father believed. The way she believed. The caste system was their best hope for prosperity and war and violence had no place in this system. Peace was the only option. The Netnews avoided them for the most part knowing it was something that ultimately happened within every society no matter how hard it was avoided. What this group believed and how they thought was generally frowned upon by the majority, but they did have some pull because of the wealth they had when pooled together. The few dozen who had risen into the ranks of Senators and senior politicians within the Union treaded lightly nonetheless? The vast majority of Senators still held to the ideals that had been instilled millennia ago by a long dead King and only reinforced by his grandson and it was not wise to get on their bad side. The Leonidas name carried strength and power and weight even without the monetary support it could ultimately provide. These were the things that blond bitch had taken from her. The things that should have been hers. These were the things she had vowed to get back, no matter what she had to do.

Ulana was learning still, had been learning since she had won the emergency election on Apo Prime to take her father's place. She didn't have much of a chore doing that since no one ran against her, and once more she had been handed something that she had not earned. The men and women who had surrounded her father now surrounded her and she was learning very quickly indeed.

“Ulana?” The female voice said.

“Hmmm?” She answered turning back to look at the older Lycavorian female and long-time friend of her father. “Excuse me what?”

“Were you listening to what we were talking about child?” The woman asked.

“Yes Silele.” She answered quickly as she brought her attention fully back to her and the two men in the Lifter with them.

“Then you know what we are trying to accomplish with this visit?” Silele asked.

Ulana nodded. “Yes of course.”

“Silele... do you think it is wise to arrive unannounced as we have?” The younger of the two men asked. He was a very junior Senator and an mida kissing igord as far as Ulana was concerned. He was a Beta wolf and had been fawning over her since she had arrived far more blatantly than Nolar ever had.

Nolar.

A boy who thought he was a man. He could not match Androcles in intelligence, power or sexual prowess. Ulana was a very strong alpha female and she was not afraid to get what she wanted by using her feminine charms, and she had done so before, but no man she had ever been with had compared to Androcles Leonidas in either size or skill. She had discarded Nolar shortly after Andro had dismissed her and then left Apo Prime.

“He can not keep refusing to hear us Nomean.” The older man spoke now. “The Prime Minister has delayed enough times and we have had to take matters into our own hands. He needs to hear what we have to say before he is crowned as the next King.”

“Icho is correct.” Silele spoke.

“I’m just saying... he was never very personable to outsiders. Even before everything that has happened.” Nomean continued.

“That will have to change as well.” Silele said. “With his beastly father no longer in the picture... we may be able to swing more support our way. Especially with Ulana’s help. Her past relationship with Androcles Leonidas could pay large dividends. It should be her who is Crown Princess anyway... not this blond female who they keep comparing to Queen Gorgo. This young woman has a history of betraying our people.”

Icho looked at Silele. “While I agree with you Silele, we also need to walk lightly around this topic for that very reason. They have already confronted that topic head on and beat it down in the Netnews. Whatever we do concerning her will need to be done very cautiously as we discussed. Most of it will fall to you Ulana.”

Ulana nodded. “I know Icho.” She said. “This Sadi comes from a common family, no real history or wealth. I don’t know what she did to entice Andro so much but I intend to show him he made a mistake.”

“And you will Ulana. The people I have working on this are being very discrete Icho so don’t worry. The information we want is there, it’s just very well hidden. We need to find it that’s all. And as Ulana has said... she is of much better stock than this Sadi female.” Silele answered.

“Have we discovered what her PCC is compared to Ulana’s?” Icho asked.

Silele shook her head. “Not yet. Medical files on the Royal family are next to impossible to review. The PCC of the King and Androcles are listed in their military files which were easy enough to look at. The King’s was two hundred ninety three and Androcles is two hundred seventy-four. I have contacts within King Yelu Hospital trying to obtain Queen Aricia’s, Prince Denali and other purebloods that may be listed, but no luck so far.”

“They were not listed?” Icho asked.

Nomean shook his head. “Apparently the Royal family did not feel they needed to list them after the King and Prince Androcles. Medically speaking we can determined roughly what Queen Aricia’s is as well as Prince Denali based on the King and Androcles. The others, which include this Sadi, we can only guess at.”

“My PCC is one hundred and ninety-six.” Ulana said. “My father’s was over two hundred Icho. She could not possibly be higher, therefore I would be stronger.” Ulana told him. “I can control my aura and direct it quite well.”

“But we will also let it be known that Ulana herself has shared a relationship with the young Prince Androcles. And part of our plan is to make it seem that she would make a far better Princess and Queen than this Sadi person.” Silele said.

Icho nodded his head. “I do not disagree but let’s just stick to our plans as we have laid them out with the others.” He spoke. “We are closer than we have ever been to being able to see our goals come to life and now would not be the time to veer from our path. We proceed slowly and carefully.”

Silele nodded her head. “You are right of course Icho.” She replied as the Lifter bumped briefly and then settled to the ground near the pier side entrance to the causeway that led to Cranae Island.

Icho looked out the window and saw where they were before turning in his seat. “Dalkin why have we not landed on the island itself? We are Senators of the Union and have clearance to go anywhere we wish!”

“New security measures put in place by the Durcunusaan Senator.” The driver answered turning his head slightly. “The air space above and for a kilometer around Cranae Island is fully restricted now. No one is allowed access unless they are family or have been approved prior to arriving. This is where the Durcunusaan ordered me to land. We are outside the restricted zone by a hundred meters... near the pier entrance to the causeway.”

“Sibfla!” Silele swore. “I truly hate these overbearing Durcunusaan soldiers.” She hissed softly.

“Very well. Wait here until we return Dalkin.” Icho spoke as he activated the canopy and the bright warm air of the Laconia Gulf hit them all.

The smell of fresh Danishes reached them from Gytheio and they gathered themselves together as they crossed the fifty meters to where the trio of Durcunusaan troops were standing beside the small row of four person hover cars. The Cranae Island causeway was nearly a full kilometer long before reaching the island itself and here on this end were the troops and two very large and menacing looking dragons which they quickly took note of. The pair of dragons watched them approach and Ulana felt as if they were sizing her up and deciding whether to eat her or not. She didn’t care for dragons and certainly had never cared for Androcles’s dragon Elynth, or the time he spent with her. They were beasts and were treated as if they were real people. Having the Dragon Elder Mother actually on the Union Senate was an insult to Ulana and many others. The dragons were resting on the ground on either side of the causeway, their eyes alert and ever mindful of everything going on around them. Ulana also saw six of them circling the island in the distance and wondered if Elynth was among them.

She turned her attention back to Icho, who had taken the lead in their group, as he moved up in front of the Durcunusaan soldiers. Two of them were conferring in whispers to each other Ulana saw, and they made no attempt to acknowledge Icho.

“Excuse me!” Icho finally barked out. “We are here for a meeting with Prince Androcles! Why did you divert my driver away from the island?”

The Durcunusaan soldier on the right finally turned to look at him and the second moved back to the small metal shack beside the greenish-scaled dragon. “You are not cleared to enter the airspace around Cranae Island sir.” He replied respectfully. “All non-cleared personnel must land outside the restricted zone and wait for authorization.”

“We are Union Senators soldier!” Icho stated.

“That is Lieutenant Sir... and I saw the markings on your Lifter as you landed.” He stated calmly in reply. “Being Senators does not automatically grant you authorization sir. You are not on the list with the other visitors to Cranae Island today and you need to be cleared.”

“And just who thinks they have the authority to grant me clearance Lieutenant?” Icho hissed.

The Lieutenant met his eyes. “We protect the Royal family Senator... so that means just about anyone in the Durcunusaan outranks you when it comes to the Royal Family, regardless of what you may think.”

Ulana stepped up beside Icho now. “The King and one of our Queens is dead Lieutenant. It seems to me that this indicates you do not take your duties as seriously as you should, or is it not your job to prevent such a thing from happening.” She threw the dig out there.

“In your opinion Senator.” He answered looking at her sternly even as his jaw twitched at her obvious insult. “However, your opinion does not matter and you don’t know as much as you think you do Senator.” He jabbed back at her unfazed by her words. His head turned when the second Durcunusaan exited the small guard shack and walked back up to him.

“The request came in late last night and clearance was granted by the Watch Officer early this morning.” He told his Lieutenant holding out the data pad to him. “Just before he went off duty.”

The Lieutenant turned back to Icho and the others, his eyes reading the data pad silently. He looked up finally. “Are any of you armed?” He asked finally.

“Armed?” Silele asked with wide eyes.

“Yes Senator. Weapons. Do any of you have any weapons?” The lieutenant asked.

“Certainly not!” Silele exclaimed.

The lieutenant turned to the third Durcunusaan who had so far remained silent behind the podium like structure his head down and looking at the small screen. The man shook his head without a word and the Lieutenant turned back to them. “You may take the first Lifter in the line Senators.” He directed them with his hand. “Remain on the main causeway and do not veer from the established path once you reach the island.”

“Why?” Nomean asked.

The Lieutenant met his eyes. “I do not wish to do the paperwork explaining why four Senators decided to disobey directives from the Durcunusaan and consequently had to be scraped off several meters of Prince Androcles’s island.”

“Are you saying the island is mined?” Icho asked with wide eyes.

“I’m saying remain on the main path until you reach the Princes’s villa.” The Lieutenant told him. “That is simple enough for you isn’t it?”

“Why not have one of your men drive us?” Ulana spoke up. “Isn’t that what you are here for?”

“We are not your chauffeurs Senator.” He told her. “And you have two arms and legs that work just fine.”

“What is your name lieutenant?” Icho demanded.

“My name is not your concern Senator.” He answered Icho coldly. “Only my directives where it concerns the Princes and Princesses. Or any member of the Royal Family for that matter. You follow them or you don’t get your visit.”

Icho looked at Silele quickly and then hissed a curse word under his breath as he moved around the man and they headed for the Lifters. The Lieutenant turned to his man next to him. “Contact Captain Jomann.” He spoke softly. “He will be either at his parent’s home or the new villa he purchased for him and Princess Eliani along the west pier. Try his parent’s home first, he may not have told the Princess about the villa yet. Let him know what is happening and that we require his guidance. I don’t like that these four got authorization to see the Prince through channels other than what has been established.”

“Should I have them watched?” The man asked.

The lieutenant shook his head. “Inform Island Command to keep them on the monitors until they arrive at the villa but that is all. These idiots don’t pose a threat to Prince Androcles and his mates, or any of his guests; they think to use their influence in another way.”

“That could be painful.” The man said.

The Lieutenant smiled. “I’m counting on it. The Feravomir and Elder Mother landed while we were entertaining them.”

The man’s grin widened. “Oh that will be fun. Wish we could see it.”

It felt wonderful to them and they were savoring every moment of the time they had. The villa smelled of fresh cooked meat and eggs now, with the aroma of Aricia’s coffee thrown in. It had succeeded in waking Bren and Devra from the guest wing of the villa where Androcles had insisted they remain until it was safe for them to reveal the Vanari on a Union wide scale. Devra knew that time was not far off and surprisingly she actually looked forward to it. She had joined Sadi and the others in the kitchen briefly and watched as they made several different types of food, all of which smelled delicious and then she quickly took two plates and headed back to their guest quarters. She thoroughly enjoyed her new husband and wanted to spend as much time with him as possible, and she knew Andro and his mates needed their time as well.

They had lounged on the couches in the main room feeding each other different types of food and simply enjoying the presence of each other. Lu’ria and Ne’Veha had not eaten as much meat before being turned and now that they were wolf, the need for meat filled them, especially when they smelled it cooking. Both of them were eager to try as many different kinds as they could. Carisia also ate meat sparingly, but she had found that the way Sadi and Andro cooked it was the best she had ever tasted and she ate more than she usually did with her breakfast fruits and her Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos. Now Androcles and his mates sat in the main room of the villa leisurely eating and going over what they would do for the day. He still wore his crimson pants and no shirt, while Sadi and the others had at least changed into less revealing clothing. If you considered the terry cloth like robes less revealing when they were tied so loosely around lush figures with only undergarments beneath them. The greeting with Helen had been warm and she now joined them in the main room occupying the oversized chair with her legs curled under her. She sipped her large mug of coffee, looking at Andro on the couch with his mates and thinking how much he looked like his father with his mates on either side of him.

Andro lowered the data pad she had given him when she arrived and looked up at her. "Why did you bring this Feravomir?" He asked.

"Because you have sent Dutkne away for reasons which only you know and he is to be your Oracle. Eliani is too busy enjoying her new mate, as she should, and I have no idea where Zarah and Lucia have gotten too. I think they returned to the SCIMITAR last night." Helen replied with a smile. "Because of this I am the only one with enough courage besides Jomann to bring this to you here at this hour of the morning."

"Why do you call Dutkne that?" Andro asked her slightly annoyed. "He is my friend first and foremost. The differences in our age aside, we have quite a bit in common Feravomir, more than even we realize."

Helen nodded. "I'm quite sure you do given who he is. No matter how you break it down Androcles, he is descended from Wayonn's blood. My blood. Our entire family have been the Oracles to your bloodline. Wayonn to Sumar, Canth to Resumar and me to your grandfather and now your father. Everyone sees that and they accept it. I accept it. Even the Durcunusaan have begun calling him Val'istar."

Andro nodded. "Yes I know. He hates it."

"He'll have to accept it. It may not have been meant to come together as it has, but the gods will always find a way." Helen spoke meeting his eyes with a knowing glint. "How long will he be gone Andro? How long will Deni and Lisisa and the others be gone for that matter? I assume they are returning to Vanari space as well?"

Andro nodded. "I would prefer to keep the details of what Dutkne is doing to myself for now Feravomir. Deni and Lisi are going to insure that the counteragent that Caliria and mother fabricated is distributed to the proper individuals."

"You won't tell me what Dutkne is doing because I would not approve, and neither would Wayonn no doubt. I have spent enough time around your father to know that when he is vague on something it usually means explosions and many bodies tossed about most improperly and violently." She said with a grin. "And why would Denali and Lisi need to insure that the counteragent went to the proper people? I thought the Vanari would be overjoyed to receive it." Helen asked.

Andro grinned sheepishly. "Something like that with Dutkne and you might be surprised at how the Vanari receive what we will give to them." He answered.

"Uh-huh. Sounds rather ominous." Helen quipped. "Well... if you won't share that then perhaps you could tell me what is so important that Arzoal and I both need to see it? We are bonded... what one of us sees... the other will as well."

Andro nodded. "You'll have to trust me on that as well."

"You know... for someone who has worked so hard to come out from under his father's shadow... you are becoming increasingly and most annoyingly I might add, just as frustrating and secretive as he is." Helen said with a smile.

Sadi snickered softly from beside him as she and Ne'Veha read from the schematics on the new Mark II STRIKER but were listening to everything. Andro turned his head and looked at her, leaning over to quickly take a nibble out of her smooth neck which caused her to squeal in surprise and delight as Helen watched from her chair and smiled.

All of them looked up when the Durcunusaan officer walked in leading Icho and the other Senators. The Durcunusaan officer didn't blink when he saw them and what they wore for he had seen it many times before when serving the King and Queens on the estate in Sparta. He bowed his head slightly to them and then to Helen.

“My apologies for the interruption Androcles.” He spoke evenly using Andro’s full name. None of the Durcunusaan who now served Andro had anything to fear from their Prince and when he ordered them to call him Andro when not in public the Durcunusaan would only go as far as to use his full name. He had grudgingly accepted this as a compromise because he trusted them implicitly and they trusted him and he insisted on as little formality between them as possible.

“Good morning Kronele. How is the newborn son?” Andro said his eyes narrowing slightly when he saw Ulana.

The two thousand year old Spartan grinned and nodded. “Growing faster than we can keep up Milord.” He answered with a smile. He glanced at Icho and the others with something akin to disdain. “The Senators here have somehow secured authorization for a meeting with you Milord. They arrived a short time ago.”

“So I see.” Andro stated his azure eyes falling on Ulana as she moved fully into the room beside Silele and Icho.

Helen began to rise. “This was not cleared with Deia first for I would know about it!” She demanded. “This is highly inappropriate for...”

“I will see them Feravomir.” Andro spoke before she tore into them fully. “They got the authorization, however they accomplished that, and they are here now. No sense in making them go back.”

Helen looked back to him and saw his body language and sank slowly back into her chair and nodded. “Very well.”

Ne’Veha, Lu’ria and Carisia saw Sadi stiffen ever so slightly and they turned to look at her quickly. Lu’ria and Ne’Veha could not feel it being so recently turned, but Sadi could feel it easily and a slow burning anger began in her belly as she gazed at the young woman in front of them. Ulana was blatantly radiating her full female aura ever so softly as she entered the room; her openness and availability and her willingness to submit to a powerful Alpha such as Andro. And she was directing it solely on Androcles in a very subtle way regardless of the fact that his mates sat in front of her.

“Should I have them wait until you are finished Milord?” Kronele asked taking notice of Sadi’s reaction and knowing something was up.

Andro shook his head. “No. They can say what they came to say.” He spoke as he waved them to the couch across from where he and the others sat. “I’m too busy once the day begins to fit another meeting in.”

Kronele nodded and bowed his head. “Should I remain Androcles?”

“That won’t be necessary soldier.” Icho spoke as he moved into the main room. “We can take it from here.”

“I don’t recall asking you what you thought Senator.” Kronele snarled gently seeing Icho’s face darken in anger.

Andro chuckled and shook his head. “That’s fine Kronele. We’ll be fine.”

“Milord.” Kronele nodded and then turned to leave.

Icho turned back to Andro. “The Durcunusaan who you have surrounding you seem to be lacking a certain respect of their superiors Milord Prince. And calling you by your given name is highly inappropriate.” He spoke.

“Not that I have noticed. And what may be inappropriate to you Senator may not be to Andro or anyone else. The Durcunusaan are not servants and vassals as it was in the old times here on Earth.” Helen spoke as Andro motioned them to the couch. She glared at all of them. “They are just intelligent enough to know when someone has scammed them. And you are not their superior in any way, shape or form Senator Icho. It would behoove you to remember that in the future.”

“Scammed them?” Silele asked as she settled to the couch her eyes slightly wide at the state of dress of Androcles and the others.

“They are smart enough to know when someone has cut corners and pulled strings to get something they want when they are not supposed to have it.” Andro told her as he set the data pad on the table and deactivated it. “Sort of like how you got the authorization to be here right now.”

“Milord it is important that we...” Icho began. “That we meet with you and discuss some things.”

“Things you felt you couldn’t share with the Prime Minister?” Andro asked as Helen sat back and allowed Andro to take the lead on this now.

Sadi glared at Ulana with evil, jungle green eyes as she remained quiet and continued to radiate her female aura in that subtle way as she sat down on the couch. This was the Ulana that Sadi had seen in Andro's mind, the young woman who he had dated for several months. Andro had kept no secrets from her and Sadi knew exactly how many times he had seen her, what he thought of her and even how many times they had slept together. She also knew that Androcles had never given her any indication whatsoever that they would be more than what they had been. As she had seen so many times within his thoughts as she rested next to him, her face was always the one that filled his mind's eye, even when he was taking pleasure with Ulana. It was a source of trust and devotion that Sadi could not put into words and she would never question his love for her in any way once she had seen those memories. Memories that she had shared with Carisia, Ne'Veha, Caliria and Lu'ria as well. What Sadi could not believe was that Ulana had the impudence, arrogance and disrespect to actually sit there and do what she was doing while Sadi, Androcles recognized mate and anome sat across from her. It was very obvious to Sadi this had nothing to do with Lu'ria, Ne'Veha and Carisia for Ulana ignored them completely. Ulana was here to challenge her and no one else.

If that was how it was going to be then so be it Sadi thought evilly as she uncoiled her smooth and powerful leg from beneath her in an almost casual way and draped it seductively over Andro's thigh. The robe dropped a little to reveal the satiny skin of her tanned thigh when she did this and Sadi made no attempt to cover it. Much to Sadi's delight Andro didn't hesitate and lifted his hand and rested it on her leg, his fingers beginning to stroke the flesh on her calf and thigh almost absentmindedly, and Sadi seeing not only Ulana's eyes grow narrow with anger but those of Silele as well.

If it was war she wanted, then Sadi Leonidas was more than willing to play Ulana's fool game. She would show the pompous upaee who Andro's heart and soul belonged to.

Andro didn't know exactly why Sadi had extended her long leg over his thigh, probably a female thing with Ulana in the room her thought to himself, but it was a very pleasant and very welcome distraction. He stroked her soft skin as he lifted his mug and took a long sip of his mother's coffee.

"The Prime Minister is shielding you as best she is able Milord." Icho spoke. "It is next to impossible to get a meeting of any kind with you."

"I am rather busy with other things Senator Icho, in case you haven't noticed what is happening all around us." Andro told him. "My Aunt is only protecting me and insuring my time is well used."

Icho looked taken aback. "You know me sire?" He asked.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. "I know all of you." He answered him. "Senator Icho from the Tonlay District on Apo Prime. Senator Silele from the Carletanga District on Apo Prime and Senator Ulana from the Tuya District." Andro spoke.

"It's been a long time Androcles." Ulna said smiling sweetly and looking at him with sultry eyes.

Andro nodded his head, the look bouncing off him completely. "Not long enough Ulana." He said meeting her gaze. "How is Nolar?"

Ulana looked flustered for a moment but quickly regained her composure. "Nolar and I have not seen each other since you were last on Apo Prime." She answered. "We are... were only friends."

"Oh... sorry to hear that." Andro said returning his gaze to Icho. "Why are all of you here Senator? I don't know the young Senator beside you, but I do know all of you and what you stand for and what you advocate. You never supported or agreed with my father and mothers on any of their policies... and neither did Ulana's father... so that begs the question, why are you here now?"

Silele was looking around for a servant to come and offer them Danishes or coffee and tea as was protocol when receiving guests. Her eyes fell on Helen who was grinning over the top of her mug as she looked at her.

"If your are looking for someone to serve you Senator Silele... you will not find one." Helen spoke. "Androcles does not entertain servants or employees to cater to his whim. No one in the Royal family does. Since you were uninvited, you may help yourself however."

Andro grinned at Helen for her words and waved his hand towards the kitchen counter. "Be my guest." He added.

"We've come on behalf of the Senators and representatives who do advocate the same things we do Milord." Silele spoke now.

[Sadi?] Ne'Veha asked. [Sadi... what is wrong?]

Sadi didn't break eye contact with Ulana. [This is the upaee who Andro dated before we came back together.] Sadi answered her. [She's pulsing him with her aura... the meddlesome sraap!]

[What?] Lu'ria gasped. [I don't feel anything Sadi!]

[The changes to your body are not fully complete yet Mistress. You would not feel it yet for she is being very subtle about it. Ulana knew that only I could feel it. She doesn't feel threatened by you or SirsanGai or Enylarcopri.] Sadi answered. [She thinks she should be the pureblood with Saradasaar, even after he told her he was not interested. How nubous arrogant can a person be?]

[Not threatened?] Lu'ria snarled. [I will show her not threatened.]

[No Mistress...] Sadi said quickly. [This is between her and I. You and SirsanGai are not yet able to do battle in this way, and she opened this clash the moment she stepped into the room. I will explain it more after they are gone and we are alone, but I will handle Ulana. I will show her that Andro is ours and ours alone.]

With that Sadi leaned forward and brought her face close to Andro's, gently nuzzling the back of his ear and the side of his neck in a very intimate fashion and pulsing him with a large portion of her extraordinarily powerful female aura, most of which she kept shielded from those who did not know her. The effect was easily discernible even in him and he closed his eyes and smiled as small shivers of love and devotion coursed through him. He quickly squeezed her leg and leaned into her nuzzle just as they did with him, letting her know he felt her love and Sadi smiled brilliantly as she saw the look on Ulana's face.

Andro turned back to them as Sadi glared at Ulana like the female alpha wolf that she was, leg tightening over Andro's thigh and her aura swirling around him ever so enticingly. "And what exactly are you here for?" He finally asked.

"I would think that is obvious Milord." Icho spoke. "We are here to offer our support and guidance to you. Senator Ulana has spoken very highly of your determination and willingness to work with others Milord."

Andro glanced at Ulana. "Has she?"

"We represent a block of Senators who could be very vocal in support of you Milord." Silele said.

"Like you supported my father and my mothers?" Andro asked.

"Your father and mothers... it is well known that we did not see eye to eye with them on many things, that is true." Icho said. "However... we believe that with you working closely with Senator Ulana and others, we could show you that we have the best interests of the Union at the heart of our ideals."

"The best interests of the Union huh?" Andro said placing his mug back on the table and looking intently at them.

"Yes Milord." Icho echoed.

"Interesting." Andro said just before turning around. He leaned over in a blink and Sadi gasped at this action so intent on Ulana that she was. Andro's lips came down on hers as his overwhelming aura wrapped around her at its full power. She groaned softly against his kiss as her body ignited, her nipples becoming instantly harder and the sensations of exquisite pleasure smashing through her. Her fingers dug into his thick arms as his kiss stole her breath away and her body sang out her happiness as he very strongly told her with his actions that he knew what Ulana was doing and that she did not hold a candle to her. Icho's eyes were angry and Silele looked on in shock as finally Andro drew back from the kiss and left Sadi gasping for more, her body flush and responsive to her beautiful anome and mate, her hands holding his face and her lips trying to catch his once more. Lu'ria and Ne'Veha felt his aura touch them now as well and they too had become incredibly aroused as he turned back slowly, shaking himself like a large wolf and trying to bring his raging hormones back under control from the way her jungle green eyes drew him in and her aura pulsed through him. He turned quickly before he tossed common sense to the side and took her right there in front of everyone regardless of who was in the room with them. Helen only smiled to herself. She had seen this in Martin many times through the years and no matter how much he tried to deny it, Androcles was his father's son. At least when it came to his mates. His changed azure eyes turned back to Icho who leaned back involuntarily at the almost wild look in those orbs.

"Excuse me Senator Icho... I just had to let my anome know how I feel about her." He stated calmly.

Sadi glared at Ulana with glowing green eyes and a possessive smile at Andro's words.

Take that forn piegn sraap upaee! She snarled in Mindvoice not really knowing if Ulana would hear her. She gave no indication that she had except for a small twitch in her jaw, but Helen did hear it as she had to keep from spitting her mouthful of coffee across the room. Sadi had blurted out the statement at a much lower level of Mindvoice than she normally talked, and even the Durcunusaan standing outside had to have heard her statement.

“Senator... why don't we cut right through the rensibfla shall we.” Andro growled at them even as he tried to keep from laughing at Sadi's words. “You came here hoping to curry favor from me with false promises of support. Promises of support if I agreed to back one or more of your ridiculous policies.”

Icho came to his feet. “Crudely put Milord... but essentially accurate.” He answered with more honesty than Andro thought he would. “And our policies are not ridiculous to those who support us Milord. And we have many who support us; many who would support you as well. In the Senate, with their votes.”

“You mean those who would have this absurd idea that words will solve every problem in the galaxy.” Andro asked him. “That violence is so insidious to them that they are willing to roll over and offer their asses for fucking to the first bully that comes along with threats of violence!”

“Milord!” Silele declared rising to her feet. “Your words are repulsive to me!”

“Repulsive...” Andro said. “But truthful. You and those like you are so willing to toss aside all that we have earned as a people just to avoid conflict, so drunk with the notion you know better than everyone else around you, so utterly stupefied by reality that you grasp at fantasy!” Andro glared at them. “You come to my home... you blatantly offer a bribe to me... and you bring Ulana to try and smooth things over. Do you take me for a fool Ichō? Do you Ulana?”

“Androcles you...” Ulana began to speak.

Andro held up his hand for silence. “Don't go there Ulana. You will only confirm what I have always thought about you.” He said to her, meeting her eyes. “I think all of you should leave now. My Durcunusaan Captain is returning and he will not be in the least bit happy that you have managed to circumvent the system and come here. I have too much on my plate to go back and forth with your kind right now.”

Icho came to his feet. “Our kind?” He asked angrily.

Andro met his eyes. “Yes. Your kind. Politicians who wish for little else but to increase their own standing and power at the expense of others who they feel beneath them.”

“We can not provide any support to anything you might want until such time as you sit down with us again and hear us out.” Ichō said keeping his voice as civil as possible. “I'm sorry Milord... but that is how it must be.”

Andro looked at the man, grudging respect mixing with distaste in his eyes. “You have guts Senator Ichō... I'll give you that. Fine... I'll sit down with you Senator. After the vote in the Senate in regards to my uncle's claim.”

“Promise us!” Ulana snapped coming to her feet. “You do not go back on your word... so give it to us now Androcles!”

“How dare...” Helen began to rise.

“I'll meet with you.” He answered holding up his hand to stop Helen and looking at Ulana. “You have my word.”

“I can not guarantee you will have our support on that issue Milord.” Ichō said quickly. “There are some among us who believe a new way of doing things is needed and they will use this as a means of trying to show their feelings. They will vote what they believe without some assurance from you.”

Andro smiled at him. “I don't need your support in this matter Senator. Any of you. The will of our people will be done. Not mine or anyone else's. I'll meet with you after the vote, not before.”

“Very well Milord.” Ichō said. “If that is how you wish to leave it. We will take our leave of you then. I'm sorry we could not come to a more agreeable commitment. It did not have to be this way you know.”

“Yes it did.” Andro told him meeting his gaze.

“Andro...” Ulana began to step towards him but got two paces before Helen cut Sadi off and stopped in front of her.

“I would leave with your friends if I were you Ulana.” Helen snarled at her.

Ulana glared at her, anger bubbling forth and her eyes changed as her fangs extended. “Get out of my way Feravomir!” She hissed back at her seeing Andro turn and begin walking towards the large double doors pulling Sadi and Lu'ria by their hands, Ne'Veha and Carisia clinging to their lover's arms and looking back with grins on their faces.

“Ulana... you have not only dishonored yourself with your actions today, but you have forced your way into a world of which you have no knowledge! Or did you think I would not sense what you are doing?” Helen told her as her own eyes and fangs altered. “It is a world where you truly are but a child among giants! You are barely even a Tier Three Mindvoice user Ulana... and yet you wish to butt heads with a female who is beyond even a Tier Six now?” She growled viciously.

“That should be me!” Ulana barked tossing her arm at Sadi’s back as they exited the doors onto the patio. “She stole him from me!”

“Son vada carians child... she did not steal him from you... you never had him to begin with.” Helen told her. “Their hearts have belonged to each other since he was eight months old Ulana; before you were ever born. They are anomes! Destined for one another by the gods themselves!”

“Stop calling me a child!” Ulana snapped. “I am no child. And anomes only exist in myth and legend now! They are not real!”

“Your actions say otherwise about being a child.” Helen spoke calmly. “And if you believe that which you speak young lady, and you continue on this path you have started down, it will only bring you pain. Sadi’s aura was shielded Ulana.” She said seeing Ulana’s dark eyes go a little wider. “Yes... shielded. Not even a third of her aura did she use just now. She has gone beyond the level of which we can even measure a person’s Mindvoice power Ulana, just as Andro has. You would have lasted perhaps ten seconds in the old time before she peeled the skin from your bones for your disrespect of her as Androcles’s mate and as Crown Princess.”

“We are not in the old time woman and I am not frightened of her!” Ulana snapped at her not caring she was speaking to the First Oracle of the Lycavorian people. “My blood is purer than hers and I should be with him! She is nothing more than a common street person who used to be a High Coven whore!”

“Your words make you more of an arrogant fool than you have already acted young lady. That much is readily apparent.” Helen snapped at her, beginning to lose her patience with Ulana’s ignorance and disrespect. “Leave now Ulana, before Jomann arrives and I have him arrest you for circumventing established Durcunusaan procedure. Andro is right. Jomann will not be happy about what you have done here and given his nature, events could rapidly spin out of control.”

Silele took Ulana’s arms. “Ulana... let us leave.” She said. “We have his agreement that he will meet with our group after the vote. He will see that our votes do matter.”

“He can not ignore us Feravomir!” Icho spoke.

“Oh... he won’t ignore you. Not anymore, I assure you.” Helen said. “You have his word Senator... now you need to leave before Jomann arrives. You have perhaps three minutes before he lands. I truly hope you understand what you have begun this day and that you are ready to see it through to the very end. Androcles Leonidas will.”

Helen turned and began to follow Andro and the others without another word.

KRANEK

Martin stood between T'lolt and Danny in the Command Center watching as one of Yuriko’s senior techs worked at the newly installed console against the far wall. The Command Center had been repaired, enlarged and reinforced by the elven engineers that had swarmed to Kranek after the battle. Even now they worked feverishly during the day expanding the borders of the settlement, AkruXian engineers working side by side with their elven counterparts and learning all they could. Immortals and Lycavorian bodies performed the majority of the heavy work with countless humans, elves and many other species assisting in any way their skills and abilities would work. Nodon engineers were fine tuning a layered defensive grid that tied into several new and massive underground power plants they had brought from their homeworld. Two dozen Hadarian Healers had set up three different clinics within the settlement that could treat any injury and speeded the process for the AkruXian Immortals to receive the treatments that would return them to their true selves. It was not unusual to see AkruXians standing in the streets looking in wonder at their new skin and hair as the effects of Veldruk’s centuries long toxic disease and oppression was purged from their bodies. An entire Combined Fleet Group was now in orbit of Kranek and rapidly putting together a defense network that would cost anyone who tried to take this world far more than it was worth to them. A large command and control space station was just beginning to be built, the lower frame having been brought in only three days before. Fully half the 1st Elven Engineer Division had volunteered to come here and be part of history at the behest of their Queen. Less than four weeks into the Akruxian future and already it was a common sight to see elven men and women sitting and talking and laughing with Akruxian Immortals.

“...coming online now Milord.” The vampire spoke.

“How is this thing gonna work now?” Martin asked. “I thought Yuriko said they would download the information we needed.”

“Yes Milord.” He answered. “And we did. We downloaded their entire core.”

“So?” Danny asked. “You’ll have to forgive us technically challenged people Lieutenant. We’re only good at killing people and blowing things up.”

T'lolt chuckled. “So true.” He said.

The vampire officer smiled. “What we have done is to recreate the exact same system they had at the Kavalian base. Ours is a little better of course. When it comes fully online we will begin to receive all the Kavalian encrypted messages to their military here.”

“No shit!” Danny exclaimed.

“Won’t the Kavalians detect this?” Martin asked.

“They may eventually Milord.” The man answered. “The Kavalians send their encrypted transmissions out on a phased singularity carrier wave. They are buried within millions of open data streams floating through space that can be picked up by anyone. You have to have this equipment to detect, decipher and decode them though. It’s almost as good as being in their planning meetings.”

“You said they will detect it eventually.” Martin asked.

The man nodded. “Eventually they will determine that an outside source is detecting and intercepting their transmissions.” He said. “Even when they do... it will take a algorithm source code review to find and localize which station is doing it. Then they will have to alter their main encryption algorithms to exclude that source.”

“How often do they do these reviews?” T'lolt asked.

“The Union does them every month General.” The vampire replied. “But we have people especially trained for that. Based on some of the messages we have already downloaded, some of them are four months old, not as often as we do. If I had to guess, every six months perhaps. It would be stupid to go longer than that.”

“So we have a link into their military control system for several months at least.” Martin said.

“We have the link now Milord... but the Kavalians aren’t stupid. I don’t want to guess at how long it will take them to figure out what we have done. Especially after they discover what we did on their outpost.” The man answered.

“Can you discover where they have taken For'mya?” Martin asked.

“I can establish a passive search to detect any references to her, yes Milord.” He replied. “Give me four hours to write the program and get it running.”

“How long after that?” Martin asked.

The man shrugged. “This is not an exact science my King... I...”

“Your best guess Lieutenant?” Martin asked him.

“If I use enough key words and phrases... perhaps another two or three hours to be able to determine anything actionable.”

Martin nodded. “Good enough. Get to work.” He said. “T'lolt... you got some tech savvy people right?”

T'lolt nodded. “A few yes. Not as good as your people of course.”

Martin nodded. “Pick two and have them work with the Lieutenant here. After that... the only ones who are even cleared to fart around this station are those three.”

T'lolt nodded. “I’ll see to it.” He said.

“T'lolt... you got a mess hall or something in this settlement?” Danny asked.

“That we do.” He replied with a grin. “Did you not just eat Daniel?”

“Hey... I’m a growing boy.” Danny said.

“I’m hungry too.” Martin spoke looking at his time piece. “I got four hours before I talk to Andro and I still want to meet as many of your people as I can T’lolt. Especially those who took part in the rescue of Melda Min.”

T’lolt waved his hand. “Right this way.”

“... never expected this many.” Esther spoke as she walked between Dysea and Aricia down the hard packed dirt of the main laneway through the settlement. Cirith walked beside Dysea, her eyes taking in all the improvements that had been made she was here last. She didn’t remember many of the things because her stay was so brief, but it was amazing nonetheless. She looked at Dysea with a smile. “We never hoped that his speech would spur so much optimism in so many. He will be the first one to admit he is not a good speaker.”

Aricia chuckled. “I’d say he can now add inspired speaker to his list of accomplishments if what we have seen is any indication.”

Dysea nodded. “I agree.” She said.

“Esther... have you ferreted out any who were here for more than hope?” Cirith asked keeping to her plain and realistic way of thinking.

Esther nodded her head. “We are quietly arrested nearly two dozen. Another nine are under constant surveillance. Isabella sent for some of your uniquely trained scouts and even now they are shadowing them wherever they go.”

“The ones you arrested?” Dysea asked.

Esther met her eyes as they walked. “I am the Blessed Wife to an Akruian Immortal Dysea.” She said with a smile. “When it comes to our people, nothing is taken for granted. My husband taught me that. They were interrogated vigorously and then executed.”

“What do you need?” Dysea asked. “Anything?”

Esther nodded. “A few more skilled medics. They don’t necessarily have to be Hadarian, just able to treat any kind of injury. The clinics are finished and fully stocked but we do not have a surplus of medicines with the exception of the serum.”

Aricia squeezed her arm. “I’ll take care of that. I’ll contact Melyanna right now. I wanted to talk to her about something anyway. What do you need?”

Esther chuckled. “Everything.”

Aricia nodded with a smile. “We have tens of hundreds of warehouses throughout the Union and on Earth stocked to the ceiling with almost anything imaginable. Martin throws nothing away. I’ll have Anja assigned a medical ship here and have it loaded with months of supplies before departing. I will join you later for lunch.” She shared a soft kiss with both Dysea and Cirith before heading off across the settlement.

Esther looked at Dysea. “So that is Aricia.” She said. “Martin Leonidas’s Anome?”

Dysea smiled. “Yes.”

“She’s very confident.” Esther said. “Sure of herself.”

Dysea nodded. “She is our strength.” She told her. “No matter what has happened in the last twenty-six years Aricia has been our rock. She is a Spartan woman and strength is part of their nature. She is also the one we all... defer to I guess you could say.”

“What do you mean?” Esther asked.

“If we do not know what Martin might think or do in a given situation we ask or defer to Aricia. She is his anome and she has a connection with him that we do not. She knows him in a way we do not.”

“This does not make you... jealous?” Esther asked.

Dysea laughed and squeezed her arm tighter. “If you experienced the emotion and skill she puts into loving us as well as Martin...” She shook her head. “No... jealousy has never entered our hearts or mind.”

Cirith nodded. “It is almost as if she is the glue that holds all of us together.” She said softly. “I am still learning many things, but in my mind, in the memories shared with me, it has always been Aricia to insure that we never lose the love and devotion that makes us so strong. I thought it would trouble me at first...” Cirith shook her head. “That sense of doubt disappeared in the first few minutes.”

Dysea smiled. "We are an odd family no doubt." She said. "But we are strong and love each other without question. Not that much different from how you and Cha'talla have raised your sons. And I think that is part of why our friendship only grows stronger."

Esther smiled brilliantly. "Our sons and in eleven months our daughter as well." She spoke resting her hand on her abdomen.

Dysea's eyes lit up and she stopped hugging Esther tightly. "Esther that is wonderful!" She exclaimed. "When did you find out?"

"The test results came back two hours after Cha'talla left." Esther answered somewhat saddened. "I wanted to tell him before he left... now I have to wait until he returns. I won't tell him over a transmission. We have both wanted a daughter and Tir'ut, Lynom and Fash'ka have been badgering us to give them a sister for years. Now we will."

"This calls for a toast!" Dysea spoke. "A small glass of wine perhaps?"

Esther nodded. "I'd like that."

"We must do it before Melyanna finds out." Dysea said holding her hands. "She will put you on a diet and exercise routine unlike anything you have ever seen. It is sometimes so very painful."

Esther laughed. "You are joking." She said.

Dysea shook her head. "Not at all. How do you think she has kept the muscular figure that she has? She is almost draconian in her actions and she makes sure we all adhere to her routine when pregnant."

Esther laughed. "Well... I'd say it has worked." She said.

Dysea grinned. "Nauta Melme thinks so." She said with a twinkle in her eye. "Come... I have some wine stashed in my equipment. We will share a small glass and then meet the others for lunch."

EARTH BARRINGER CRATER FORMER STATE OF ARIZONA

"...don't understand why you have brought us here like this Androcles." Helen stated as the ramp of the STRIKER DT Mark II began to lower. "Could this trip not have been delayed? There is too much going on for us to be out of Sparta for very long."

Andro turned from the control console and looked at her just as Arzoal unsecured herself from the straps. Elynth had done so already and she moved up beside Androcles and watched as her grandmother finished and then moved behind Helen.

I agree. Arzoal spoke. And why just the four of us?

Andro looked at Elynth quickly and her golden eyes blinked several times. It is meant for only your eyes. She answered tuning back to them.

Why do I get the sudden feeling that what you are going to show us is not something we will approve of? Arzoal spoke.

Whether... whether you approve or not... it has been done. Androcles told them. I...

We. Elynth corrected him.

Andro nodded. We... we have done this under our authority as Talon Guardians. This is not something that we decided on a whim Elder Mother. Feravomir. It took us two years of contemplation before we made the decision to go through with this.

If it took you this long to contemplate your decision... then you weighed all the adverse affects of this conclusion and found this idea worthy. Arzoal spoke.

Andro and Elynth nodded. We did. She answered.

Then why keep it with such tenacious secrecy? Helen asked. I take it this is one of the things that your father does not know about?

Neither of our fathers do. Andro answered. They would not have seen it through our eyes and minds. They are too much like you Elder Mother. Outside of the two of us there is only Uncle Isra and Aelnala who know. That is how it has been since we began.

Too much like me? Isra and Aelnala? Arzoal asked. They are involved in this? You are being very confusing Androcles.

Yes I know. He answered.

Why? Helen demanded. No more of this half talk and code. You have brought us halfway around the world for a reason. Now tell us.

Andro looked at Elynth and she nodded her head. It would be better if we showed you. She spoke.

She and Andro turned and proceeded down the ramp of the STRIKER. Helen glanced at Arzoal and then they followed. The first thing they noticed was the rows of immense buildings that occupied their left side as they exited. There had to be at least a hundred of them lined up neatly in rows of ten. They stretched as far as the end could see. The ground beneath their feet and talons was similar to the tarmac of the Durcunusaan base outside Sparta, but then it just abruptly ended and became hard, rocky terrain mixed with sand and dirt. There were other smaller buildings scatter among the rows that appeared to be huge wash areas of some kind. Then there were two more buildings that were, incredibly, even more massive and set off one on either side of the rows of buildings. Their eyes took in much smaller buildings along the outskirts and both of them could see what looked to be Durcunusaan soldiers, but their armor wasn't the normal color. It was almost a light gray and blue color. There was what appeared to be a command and control building with several antenna rising from the top, and a half dozen Heavy Lifters that they could see. Arzoal turned her head and stopped as she saw the towering shape of the immense satellite dish in the distance. Her keen dragon eyes could detect a large bundle in the center of the dish. A bundle that held a minimum of six of the seven year old Level Ten Mindvoice Dampeners. Dampeners that had yet to be actively used because of their incredible size. As she turned her head she could see three more of the colossal dishes off in the distance at all four points of the compass. The dishes were pointing away from the buildings and she could just make out the soft shimmer telling her they were very active.

[Helen!] She gasped turning back to her Bonded Sister.

[Yes I know.] Helen said. [I noticed it the moment we left the STRIKER. We are cut off from the outside.]

[The four dishes have center bundles made up of Level Ten Dampeners.] Arzoal hissed. [Even you and I would not be able to penetrate the bubble around this facility from the outside! Not even Martin!]

[Which is why I think they are there.] Helen spoke turning to look at her as they walked towards the building that looked like a command center of some kind. [They have been hiding something here. Hiding it from all of us.]

[But why?] Arzoal gasped.

[I believe we are going to find out.] Helen said. [If I am not mistaken this is the Barringer Crater site in what was once the southwest part of the old United States.] Helen said. [You did notice that their words hold trepidation but no regret. They do not question what they have done here. Only our reaction to it.]

[The question remains... what have they done?] Arzoal asked. [What have they done that they felt the need to hide from us and their fathers?]

Helen and Arzoal turned as the Durcunusaan troop walked out to meet them. He was definitely Lycavorian and the armor he wore was Dragon Armor, it was just colored in a light gray and blue unlike the silver and gold sets that were the norm. His exposed skin was deeply tanned like he had spent the better part of the last years in full sunlight almost all the time. He did not appear very old for a Lycavorian but Arzoal and Helen saw the rank of Star Colonel imprinted on his armor. They came up behind Andro and Elynth as the Colonel bowed his head to Andro.

"Adrieuas Milord!" The Colonel spoke. (Greetings)

"Colonel Jovern." Andro answered with a smile as he gripped the man's offered forearm in greeting. "You are looking sunbaked."

The man laughed. "I just may move out here when we are done Milord. The weather suits me." He answered.

"Are we ready?" Andro asked.

Jovern nodded. "As ready as we will ever be." He replied.

[Are they nervous Colonel?] Elynth asked.

Jovern met her gaze. [Surprisingly no Elynth. They are dedicated and chomping at the bit to go.]

Andro nodded. [Prepare one of the Mess Hangers for the presentation when we return. All we have... everything we have done. Now that they will know I want them to know how much we have put into this and why.]

[I'll see to it Milord.] He spoke.

Andro turned and looked at Helen and Arzoal. “Feravomir... Elder Mother... this is Star Colonel Jovern. He is the officer in charge of Durcunusaan support for this project.”

Jovern bowed his head. “An honor Feravomir. Elder Mother.” He stated formally. “It is my wish that you will be as pleased as we all are.”

“Pleased about what?” Helen asked him. “Androcles Leonidas... enough of these games. Why have you dragged us out here to the middle of nowhere?”

Andro waved his hand for them to follow. “This way.” He said. “The edge of the crater and the answer to your questions is a hundred meters this way.” He and Elynth began walking towards the inclined dirt ramp that led up to the edge of the crater. “It took us six months to decide whom to take because so many volunteered. All of it was done in the utmost secrecy Elder Mother and I’m sorry for that. Elynth and I, and then Uncle Isra and Aelnala, we tried to plan for everything. Every outcome. Every contingency. It hasn’t been easy mind you, as we have never done this on so large a scale. They will only be used in certain circumstances; the power they could bring to bear is enormous. They will be assigned to Manda’s Command exclusively. I even had Admiral O’Connor design and build special ships for them.” Andro turned back to them as he reached the pinnacle of the incline and the edge of the crater was just behind him.

“For who?” Helen asked.

“Feravomir... Elder Mother... I give you the 1st Dragon Brigade.” Andro stated as he swept his arm around to extend outward over the crater.

Arzoal and Helen stepped up the edge between Andro and Elynth and their eyes grew double in size. As Arzoal’s flame red scales came into view on the edge of the crater, a deep bellow of countless dragon trumpets rippled across the air on the wind. So powerful was it, that it was almost as if they shook the ground and the walls of the immense crater all around them. Far below them, swathed exclusively in the same gray and light blue colored Dragon Armor as the Durcunusaan Colonel were thousands of dragons.

Three thousand to be exact.

The trumpet was a continuous wave as each rank of dragons picked up the bellow before the last one died away. They stood in perfect formation, three hundred across and ten rows deep. Their armor glimmered in the sunlight and blue skies, not a single dragon more than two paces out of rank. Firespitter. Heavy Horn. Spike Tail. Every species of dragon that existed on Elear now; every species that Martin Leonidas’s actions on Enurrua had saved so long ago; they were all represented here. And more than anything else Arzoal and Helen could easily detect the swell of pride coming from far below as these dragons saw their Elder Mother appear above them. The one reason that many were even still alive today. Arzoal was the Elder Mother yes, but what she didn’t know or realize was that she commanded a respect rarely bestowed on any individual. She may have thought her actions had been the cause of the deaths of so many, but every living and breathing dragon knew that without her actions and her decisions none of them would have survived the millennia on Enurrua. This was very evident in the intensity and length of their trumpeting bellow to her.

And then... on a silent command from the single large dragon standing in front of all the ranks, his armor splashed with a crimson red slash across the broad chest plating, the first rank of dragons snapped their wings to their full extension in perfect unison. The ‘crack’ that ensued was like rolling thunder, deafening in its power and commitment, as each rank in succession did this. Ten shattering echoes reverberated among the crater walls and cascaded outward into the air.

IN WAR! Andro’s voice ripped out within Mindvoice when the last echo faded.

WE WILL BRING VICTORY FOR ALL! Three thousands minds and voices answered in a single thundering word.

IN PEACE! Elynth screamed next.

WE WILL BE VIGILANT FOR ALL! Three thousand minds and voices answered.

IN DEATH! Andro and Elynth cried out.

WE WILL SACRIFICE FOR ALL!

Andro didn't hesitate and with a five step movement forward he propelled himself up and out and dove over the edge of the crater. Elynth followed a second later, both of them plunging from view.

"Andro!" Helen screamed.

There was only a second's pause and then Elynth shot up from below them with Andro securely in the saddle and three thousand dragons singing out in joy as they watched.

Now! Now my brothers and sisters! Fly! Spread your wings and fly! Show the Elder Mother what you can do! Andro's voice echoed loudly within Mindvoice followed a moment later by Elynth's deafening trumpet. With matching trumpets, the ranks of dragons below them began to leap into the sky with perfect timing and rocketed upward to fall in behind Andro and Elynth.

"Son vada carians!" Helen gasped completely in shock as her hand went up to touch her bonded sister's thick foreleg.

Arzoal could only watch in utter awe as for a full three minutes the ranks of her dragons leaped into the sky and began to form into smaller sections. Immediately they began to fly into a uniquely choreographed flight that saw them twist and turn back and forth among each other with a single minded precision Arzoal had never witnessed before. This dizzying flight went on for several minutes until a silent command saw them begin to form in the air above them behind the single dragon with the crimson red slash on his chest. And then three thousand dragons dove for the earth and ripped over the top of the one dragon that had held their species together for so many millennia. As each wave passed over her and called out to her with respect and admiration and love, Arzoal could feel nothing but a swell of pleasure as they called out to her. She could hear the immense pride in their voices within her mind, feel the dedication to what they had all volunteered to do and if a dragon had tear ducts Arzoal's tears would be forming a river beneath her talons. Helen was very nearly overcome as well as Arzoal's emotion coursed through her.

By... by all that I hold holy my sister! Arzoal gasped. They... they are so...

Beautiful. Helen spoke as tears flooded her eyes now.

Oh... I wish Daurgo was here to see this. He would be so proud. Arzoal commented and Helen looked up at her with a smile.

Tell them sister! Tell them! Tell them for him and you both. Helen said.

And tell them she did.

Arzoal reached deep within her, deeper than she had reached in many hundreds of years and the trumpet that exploded from her maw nearly matched that of those above them. Hearing their Elder Mother's trumpet of approval sent the Dragon Brigade into delirium and even more insane and impossible maneuvers as they showed her what they could do. As Arzoal trumpeted out her continued approval, Elynth banked over the crater high above the others. She felt Andro reach forward and lay his hand flat against the scales of her power neck and shoulders a sigh of relief passing through him.

Do you feel her pride Andro my brother? Elynth asked excitedly. Her love for all of them and what they are doing?

Andro nodded. Yes I do. He replied.

Your fathers will not be so easily convinced. The deep male voice spoke. They turned and saw the large dragon flying just off their right flank. The crimson slash was very evident on his broad armored chest.

Your actions will convince them Daurgo. Andro said.

And we will not fail. Daurgo spoke confidently.

With the gods and a little bit of luck on our side none of us will fail. And now you need to do what you have wanted to do for centuries Daurgo. Andro said.

The deep yellow/green eyes under the armored helmet gazed at them from ten meters away. Perhaps it is not...

You have waited long enough Elder Daurgo! Elynth spoke. You have held it inside long enough! Now... now you need to tell her! Do not let this chance slip away now.

I do not know if she even feels anything for me. He spoke. And it would not be in the least bit appropriate for me to remain on the Elder Council if I am her mate. She is the Elder Mother of our kind!

And she is a female! Elynth spoke. Who has been without love for too long! Do you think my mother and I have not seen how she looks at you? Admires your scales? Always waits for your council? My grandmother may be the Elder Mother of our kind yes, but she is also full of emotions as any female dragon is. And those emotions are for you! Even Syrilth has noticed and she has known her for less than any of us.

Perhaps you are right Elynth.

Andro turned his head and looked at him. Then make your feelings known Daurgo! Tell her in the ways of your kind. You have a new job now anyway.

Daurgo nodded. Yes. Yes I do.

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PROGENITOR

THE WILDS

3.4 LYs FROM HIGH COVEN BORDER HOLDING POSITION NEAR JUNTHOR

Pontal simply sat in his command chair staring out the empty view window into the void of space around his ship. Just barely two hundred years past twelve thousand years of life and probably the most experience combat officer within the entire High Coven. He has taken part in every major battle the High Coven has waged since he became an officer, slowly working his way up the ranks to the position he now held. He had turned down countless promotions to the High Lord's Military Council because all he wanted to do; all he was good at was leading men into battle. Pontal actually cared for the men and women under his command, unlike so many other officers now. He bore the scars of several close calls and numerous destroyed ships all over his body, but he had always tried to win. He did not sacrifice men to accomplish the goal, he found an alternative method to succeeding at that mission. This alone endeared him to the nearly four hundred thousand men and women under his command.

He commanded the High Coven equivalent to a Lycavorian Union Combined Fleet Force Group. Upwards of six hundred warships and their support craft as well as three divisions of elite cloned vampire troops. He had instilled a sense of purpose and pride in those cloned troops and all the men and women who served on any ship in his command. His discipline was harsh at times, but every man and women in his command would swear by him, including the three hundred Akruxian Immortals who loyally served him. When the order went out releasing the Immortals from their service, only sixteen choose to leave Pontal's command. The rape and subjugation of female elves by Immortals was forbidden within his command. Rape overall had been long forbidden, and it carried a death sentence within the 69th VHCCFF. He was guilty of it but something had changed his mind and Pontal did not abide it any longer, for it broke down unit cohesion and trust, and ultimately would get them all killed in the end. Pontal was also one of only six or seven senior fleet commanders who had women commanding warships, a practice looked down upon by the High Coven Military Tribunal, but not something they would confront him on since those women accounted for perhaps ten percent of ship to ship victories against the KFI. Pontal was a realist to the extreme. If it did not help him or his men, he wanted nothing to do with it. He remained on the borders of the High Coven, fighting the Kavalians when they came and training his ships and men while they waited. He was among a small number who wanted to mount an offensive campaign against the Kavalians, for he knew this defensive war they were fighting would only lead to their ultimate defeat. They needed to act boldly and with charisma. They needed to make the Kavalians fear them. Pontal had thought Admiral Moran would be the one to do this when he was chosen by that Empress as Supreme Commander. After a few initial battles using these very tactics, Moran suddenly became more of a politician than he did a commander of men. Since that first year Pontal had become increasingly disenchanted with the High Coven and its actions. It was almost as if they did not want to win this war and restore peace once more.

Aikiro's actions on Earth only confirmed that to him and so many in a most horrible of ways.

Many of the senior officers were hopeful that a Cease Fire with the Union would bring them allies. They had hoped that over time they could become if not allies, then friends with the Union. When the Cease Fire was announced many of them were extremely happy, thinking that Aikiro had finally pushed aside her open hatred of the Lycavorians and was reaching out to them for the future. Pontal and the others should have known better. As word of the gang rape and near beating death of Zarah Leonidas reached them far out on the borders; as word of Androcles Leonidas's response and his actions in killing Javier Moran and nearly Yuri herself in his rage at this brutal assault against his sister, Pontal saw their hopes being crushed. Pontal had never feared any one man in his entire life, but he and so many others like him feared Martin Leonidas and his son Androcles. They were far too much like the King Leonidas that had nearly killed that fool Xerxes on Earth so long ago, after slaughtering many of his finest troops.

Aikiro's vile and repugnant actions were the thing that broke through the barriers and made it all so clear for him and others. They were not unhappy she was dead. Nor did they lose any sleep over Admiral Tesand's death. Within two days of discovering that Yuri clung to life and Moran still lived and they had escaped Earth Pontal was meeting with his equals from six different fleets such as his. They were all of like mind and their only concern was how to let those within the Union know. Cha'talla's speech had given them their opportunity. That the former High Lord Captain was still alive came as quite the shock to him and to others. That he looked so unlike the Immortals within his own command was even more shocking. Discovering what Veldruk had done to the Akruxian people millennia ago to make them appear as they did now was the final nail in the coffin of their loyalty to the High Coven. Pontal felt the warmth on the back of his hand and his eyes cut to the lightly tanned smooth skin of the hand that covered his.

And here was the biggest reason he was now fighting for the future instead of the past.

Barely fifty years old now and a vampire for less than half that time. Long dark brown hair fell well below her once human shoulders, outlining a flawlessly beautiful face with soft, full lips and pale blue eyes that to this day made Pontal shudder inside. She had been a slave to him once, a human captured from Earth that he would use at his will. He did not treat her badly, just the opposite in fact, and it was this young woman who had managed to worm her way into his heart and being. She had the sweetest tasting blood he had ever fed on, she was incredibly intelligent, and above all else she was the bravest woman he had ever met in his life. She had proved that to him the day several Kavalians had boarded his ship in the middle of a battle in an assassination attempt against him. It was this woman who had saved his life without wavering. Two Kavalian soldiers she had dispatched with nothing more than a dropped Immortal sword and her still human strength, crazed over the attempt to take from her what she had unwittingly come to love more than her own life.

That was Pontal.

Pontal had turned her willing mind and body the next day and made her his Blessed Wife a week after that. One month later rape or forced sexual contact among anyone within the 69th was forever banned and outlawed. He still tried at times to determine what she saw in him. He was over ten thousand years her senior, she was breathtakingly beautiful, and yet she had eyes only for him as she had proven for so many years now. The ultimate gift and show of love had been the three children she had bore him and who she now doted over. In the closer systems to the High Coven capital, what Pontal had done with her would have been a crime and he would have been stripped of his rank and command. Out here along the borders no one questioned him or what he did. Indeed... his crew would die for her just as easily as they would die for him and any new officers were severely vetted before being allowed to join Pontal's command.

"You have that deep concerned look on your face my Du'ased M'ranndii." She told him reaching up to stroke his cheek. She was a frequent visitor to the bridge and often times she would bring Pontal food or drink and even more for those who were working. "Are you having doubts?"

Pontal placed his hand over the top of hers as her palm flattened against his weathered skin. "No ussta Victoria." He replied with a small smile. "The time for doubts is long gone."

"Then what vexes you my love?" She asked moving closer to his chair and leaning closer to him. It had been odd at first to see them beside each other considering she was so much younger than him, but her actions had long ago proved that Pontal was the only man who stirred her in any way.

Victoria Tanner had been a slave once, taken from her home on Earth by creatures she thought only existed in fairy tales. She had been raped and fed on for months before ending up here with this man. A man she had hated just as intensely in the beginning as she loved him now. He never struck her, never raised his voice to her, and gave her as much freedom as he could. Victoria soon began to realize that ending up her was not so bad a thing. He allowed her to read and cook and learn about this new world she had entered, even going so far as to give her access to forbidden material. When Pontal did take her, Victoria soon discovered he was an extremely skilled lover who could make her explode in bliss under him with ease. When he fed on her blood, he took only very small portions, usually at the peak of their sexual encounters, and Victoria Tanner would scream out her ecstasy and clutch at his broad shoulders as her world exploded in white lights and stars. She was intelligent enough to know that she did not want to return to the horrible months before this man, the rapes and beatings, and she set about pleasing him in every way she could so that he did not dismiss her. She did not know that Pontal had already made that very decision concerning her. In the process of ongoing years, his warm and gentle touch, the moments when he would hold her in his arms and tell her of his day, all this had Victoria falling deeply in love with him. It was she who told him to turn her after that battle. He refused at first but she did not want to be apart from him, she wanted to be like him and remain with him forever. He relented finally and her life altered dramatically after that. It was an event that she embraced completely, along with her love for him.

“I question and wonder if the Lycavorians have enough fortitude to forgive.” He spoke softly. “Trusting us... after what Aikiro ordered done...” Pontal shook his head. “I do not know if I would be able to do it.”

“They agreed to this meeting.” Victoria said.

“No... Cha'talla and Narice agreed to this meeting.” He told her. “Androcles Leonidas has put a bounty of one billion Riyal on Dante Moran’s head because of what he did. Half that for Yuri. He is as unforgiving as his father, perhaps more so, and it is why officers like myself have counseled caution in dealing with the Lycavorians ever since his father returned to take the throne.”

“Princess Narice is now married to his brother husband.” Victoria said softly. “You don’t believe he would allow her to come here without his knowledge do you?”

Pontal shook his head. “No. But that brings into question what his motives are then.”

Victoria smiled softly and dropped her hand from his face to take his fingers in her grip. “Now you are acting like the officers near the homeworld.” She said. “Always distrusting one another to the extent that can’t trust themselves. Why does he need to have a motive husband? Perhaps he wants what we want.”

Pontal met her eyes and smiled. “Always the optimist.” He said warmly.

Victoria smiled. “You taught me that.” She said.

Pontal nodded. “I wish I could be so optimistic. We have been here for nearly three hours now and nothing.” He said.

Victoria turned to the view window and looked out at the surrounding stars. “Do you think they are even here?” She asked.

Pontal nodded. “Oh... they are here.” He answered. “Our instruments may not be able to pick them up... but they are here. I can feel it in my gut. That we can not pick them up is a matter of some concern considering our Shrouds are similar. Whether they will communicate with us or attack us in the question.”

Victoria turned back to him. “Have faith Pontal.” She said. “We need to have...”

A soft chime began to sound over the bridge intercom and Pontal turned his head towards his COM officer knowing immediately what it was. The man was now very alert as he adjusted his console. “Incoming secure communication Admiral!” He announced.

“Is it the agreed upon frequency and repeater codes?” Pontal asked coming to his feet.

“Yes sir!”

“Activate the holodisc!” Pontal hissed softly. “Quickly!”

Pontal turned slightly to the side of the bridge and saw this disc in the floor near his command chair glimmer and then burst into existence. In that clear transmission he saw Narice standing beside Cha'talla on one side, with the tall and muscular half elf male on her opposite side holding her hand. No doubt this was the half elf son of Leonidas who it was rumored had stolen her attention. Narice looked slightly different from when he had last seen her on the High Coven vidnews. Her hair was longer and her face appeared much more relaxed and at peace. Her dark eyes were brighter than he remembered and from the way she held the hand of the son of Leonidas, it was plainly obvious this was not the Narice he was used too.

“Admiral Pontal.” Narice stated calmly.

“Princess!” Pontal bowed his head.

“Admiral... board one of your G9s and leave your ship. You may bring who you wish, but you will adhere to the coordinates I am sending you now.” Narice turned her head and nodded to someone out of view.

“Princess... this is not... this is not what we agreed too.” Pontal spoke.

Narice nodded her head. “I understand that Admiral... but you will forgive me if I am slightly apprehensive about this meeting. I would be considered a traitor by many within my mother and sister’s inner circles. Capturing and returning me to my sister would be a large plus for any career officer.”

Pontal took the pad from his XO and his eyes dropped quickly to the information. He looked back up quickly. "The planet?" He asked.

Narice nodded her head. "We have established a neutral meeting place on the third moon. A simple structure with simple adornments. As I said... you may bring who you wish within reason. Cha'talla, my husband Arrarn and half a dozen others will be joining with me."

"Why here?" Pontal asked.

"Because it is in the middle of a dry lake bed Admiral and we can see anyone coming for many kilometers." Cha'talla answered. "We want this as well as you... but you must know we will take precautions."

Pontal's eyes shifted to Arrarn. "And do you speak for your husband as well Narice?" He asked her. "He is a Leonidas... brother to the young woman who your mother ordered ravaged and nearly killed. I do not wish to bear the brunt of a decision I had no part in. Certainly one I would never have sanctioned."

Narice glanced at Arrarn quickly and then back to Pontal. "Androcles is the reason we are here now Admiral." She said finally. "He trusts me and he trusts his brother. We can help each other if you are sincere Admiral Pontal."

"And if I am not?" Pontal asked.

"Then you will die." Cha'talla answered with cold finality in his voice. "We did not come to play word games. Do you wish to meet or not?"

Pontal nodded. "I will greet you in one hour." He stated.

JUNTHOR

Pontal stared at Narice from only a meter away. He was right of course. Her five foot one frame was somehow much fuller and more muscular and her hair was longer. She looked healthier than he had seen on any of the previous vidnews channels or their reports of her. The Lycavorian ArmorPly was a lighter version of the Mark IV, and it hugged her lush figure like a second skin while giving her extra protection for her joints. Seven Durcunusaan stood behind her along with three immense dragons, one who he knew was her dragon, and all of whom rested alertly on their haunches. The huge structure was basically a portable building Pontal saw as they landed just outside the entrance beside the STRIKER DT. Inside there was a small area that now held several couches with a large knee high table between the couches. Standing in front of her as he was, Pontal's doubts about all of this simply vanished. Looking at her now, he knew what he was about to do was the only way to secure their future and the future of the High Coven.

Pontal bowed his head. "Princess." He spoke softly.

"I am not a Princess of the High Coven Admiral." Narice said.

"There are those who would debate that with you, but you are also the Blessed Wife to a Leonidas. You are a Princess of the Union?" Pontal asked.

Narice glanced at Arrarn quickly with a sheepish grin. "Yes... I suppose I am." She answered turning back to him. She looked at the dark haired woman next to Pontal. "Your aide?" She asked.

Pontal shook his head quickly. "Victoria... my Blessed Wife and mother to my three children." He answered pulling her closer.

Arrarn saw both Narice and Cha'talla make odd facial gestures and he squeezed Narice's hand. "What am I missing?" He asked.

"Admiral Pontal is a pureblood Arrarn." Cha'talla answered. "It is heavily frowned upon for a pureblood to take a turned vampire as his wife, especially one that is... or was human. At least it used to be."

Pontal chuckled. "It still is. I'm hoping part of what we accomplish here will change that." He said.

Narice watched the body language of this Victoria and knew within the first moments that she was here very much of her own free will. This spoke volumes about Pontal and his sincerity, at least to Narice. She motioned to the couch to her left. "Please Admiral... take a seat." She spoke.

Pontal remained where he was standing, his eyes darting back and forth from her to the Durcunusaan. He had come with Victoria and only three guards, one of whom was an Immortal that could not stop staring at Cha'talla. "I can assume then that I am not to be attacked." Pontal spoke.

Narice looked at Arrarn and brought his knuckles to her lips for a soft kiss before she moved to the couch and sat down. Pontal breathed somewhat of a sigh of relief and he directed Victoria to the couch as Arrarn took up a spot behind Narice.

“I would first like to say that what Aikiro did... what she ordered... when we found out about it we were appalled.” Pontal spoke as he settled next to his wife. “It was a vile action that has no excuse.”

“We?” Narice asked.

Pontal took a deep breath and leaped off the proverbial cliff. “There are six others like me.” He said. “Six others who believe as I do and command similar forces. We have remained away from the trappings of our homeworld and the politics it breeds Princess. We have long advocated a stronger and more progressive war against the Kavalians instead of this defensive war that Moran and your mother were fighting. It has cost us the lives of many good men and women. When we first heard through different channels that a Cease Fire had been signed, many of us believed that our future was at hand. We thought she had finally decided to put the past behind us and begin working with the Lycavorians. We didn’t know how wrong we were. I suppose you could say that I have become the unofficial spokesperson for the others as well as myself.”

“Why now?” Narice asked.

“When we determined that Moran and your sister had yet to return to Uzu Ozeib 7 we concluded the only reason for this was that Yuri barely clung to life. If this was the case then Moran would know the many backstabbing politicians would not openly support him.” Pontal answered.

“Yuri is alive.” Narice said confidently.

Pontal nodded. “Yes... I assumed as much. She is not an easy woman to kill your sister, and her Immortal Captain is somewhat of a fanatic when it comes to her protection. We can only conclude that she and Moran are waiting to see how the senior politicians and military officers act before moving.”

“How they act?” Arrarn asked.

Cha'talla nodded his head in understanding of what Pontal was saying. “It is as we talked of Arrarn.” Cha'talla said looking at him. “What they will attempt to do to advance their own power base in the absence of Yuri or Aikiro. Her refusal to return to the Coven homeworld is being seen as a weakness isn’t it?”

Pontal nodded. “Yes. These men and women feared Aikiro to the extreme. Tesand and Moran were nothing more than her lap dogs and they feared them as well. She made Moran Supreme Commander because he won a few battles and was married to her daughter whom she wanted to control.”

“Using Moran in this way was how she did it.” Narice said nodding. “I always thought there was something odd about her decision to do this as I grew. It didn’t seem like something she would do... like keeping Yuri on Nuwaroa for such long periods of time.”

Pontal nodded his head once more. “I do not know what was happening on Nuwaroa Princess. I do know Moran was doing Aikiro’s during these times. With Aikiro and Tesand now dead and Yuri not returning we felt now would be the perfect time to try and wrest control of the government and the military from those in already power. The chaos and mistrust between the senior members of the Ruling Council would be a much needed distraction while we moved against them and tried to save our people.” He met Narice’s eyes. “Something it appears you determined as well.”

Narice nodded slowly. “Androcles actually.” She said.

Pontal’s eyes grew a little wider. “Androcles?”

“He came to me with some intelligence information similar to what you are saying now.” Narice said evenly. “It was from a different source but one he and his father have trusted for some time. He...”

“Narice!” Cha'talla cut off her words.

Narice looked at him. “He has come this far Cha'talla. You know as well as I if this was a trap to get to me they would have sprung it already. We must be forthright going forward or none of this will matter.”

“The... the Lycavorians have an agent inside Aikiro’s inner circle?” Pontal gasped looking at her.

Narice turned back to him and nodded. “I do not know who it is.” She stated right away. “Androcles is unwilling to share that with me or anyone right now. What this man or women sent in his last report mirrors what you are saying now. That is why he came to me even though he knew the wrath he would incur by doing so. I was very content Admiral. Content to be wife to Arrarn and lover to Toria Dellion. Content to begin a new life in the Union.”

“What... what changed?” Victoria asked.

“The High Coven could be so much more.” Narice said. “Androcles told me if I thought it was not worth it then I should not undertake it. I do not wish to see my people fail and die. I certainly don’t wish to see the Kavalians destroy us because of my sister’s lust for power. She became almost as bad as my mother at the end there.”

“If you don’t mind me asking... why would Androcles Leonidas care what happens to us after what Aikiro perpetrated upon his sister? Why would you care Arrarn Leonidas?” Pontal asked. “His bounty on Dante Moran speaks towards what he feels I think.”

Narice shook her head. “Never think you know Andro or his father Admiral. That would be your first oversight.” She said. “Make no mistake... my nephew will be caught... and he will die a death that even I would not wish upon any vampire for what he did to Zarah. That is as certain as the sun rising over the horizon, and Androcles has been very clear on that. But Andro has also taken my niece Carisia as his wife and mate. A pureblood like you and I Pontal and I have seen how he loves her without any hesitation or doubt. I can not begin to describe to you the love my own husband has shown to me as well as our wife Toria. Dante’s actions condemn only him... not our people and that is where Androcles is different from his father. He will not cast all of us aside for the actions of one raging lunatic. Not when together we could be greater than we are separately.”

Victoria’s hands took Pontal’s arm before he could speak and she leaned forward. “King Leonidas is not dead is he Princess Narice?” She asked softly. “The Kavalians failed in their attempt to kill him as your Netnews has been reporting for so long didn’t they?”

Narice looked at her. “Why would you say that?”

“Every time you have mentioned King Leonidas, either directly or indirectly, it has been in the present tense. In none of those times did you refer to him in the past tense.” Victoria stated as Pontal looked at her with wide eyes. “If he... if he was dead you would be referring to him in the past tense and not the present tense. He’s alive isn’t he?”

Pontal’s eyes shifted to Narice then and his eyes grew wider when he realized she was not going to deny this. “Princess?” He finally gasped.

Narice looked at him evenly. “It seems your wife is very intuitive Admiral.” She said. “And she is also very correct.”

Pontal came to his feet now. “King Leonidas lives!” He gasped. “Why... but why has he not revealed this publicly? Why...” Pontal met her gaze as realization hit him. “The Kavalians have Queen For’mya! He is remaining dead so as not to endanger her life. If the Kavalians knew he lived they would kill her instantly for their plans would be for naught!” Pontal paced back and forth in front of the couch. “I knew there had to be a reason Androcles was allowing them to do what they are doing. He is too much his father’s son to be cowed by those animals and...” He stopped and looked at Narice and Arrarn. “They have... they have raped your mother Arrarn Leonidas. Pusintin... he... he has forced her to endure what no woman should have to endure. You... you have my most sincere and heartfelt sympathy that this vile act has taken place.”

Cha’talla stood there impressed with Pontal’s keen tactical mind. The man had lost none of the edge he had from many years ago when Cha’talla had seen him in action. “This too will not go unpunished.” He said softly.

Pontal glanced at him and then back to Narice. “The King? He does not know that this is what Androcles plans?” He asked.

Narice shook her head quickly. “Do you think we would be having this discussion if King Leonidas was in command?” She said simply. “It is why we need to move now. Before Arrarn’s father resumes his duties. Andro believes we can be more, even after what Dante has done, and so do I.”

Pontal looked at her intently as he returned to his seat. “If he believes this then he must have a plan. If he sent you here to meet with me then you must have a plan that would have worked without my help.” He said.

Narice met his eyes. “We do.” She said evenly.

Pontal looked at his beautiful Victoria for a long moment. He turned back to Narice. “Then tell me what we can do.” He told her. “Tell me how we can support this plan of yours. I pledge myself to you Princess Narice. I pledge myself to you and to our people. I am a military officer and I have no desire for power or gain.” He looked at Victoria again quickly and then back to her. “I have all I could ever want right now. Everyone who follows me pledges this as well Princess. Command me... command us... for we do not want to see our people fade into obscurity and death.”

EARTH
BARRINGER CRATER
DRAGON BRIGADE HEADQUARTERS

Arzoal and Helen finished watching the lengthy holovid of the training and planning they had undergone, Elynth and Andro watching their reaction carefully. It was easy enough to feel the immense pride Arzoal felt within her at what she had seen, and this transferred to Helen. They had remained silent while viewing the hour long holovid. It had broken down and then chronicled the exact steps Andro and Isra and Daurgo had taken to choose those members of the Dragon Brigade. In actuality they had refused far more candidates than they had accepted for it seemed every dragon on Earth had wanted to be part of it. Those who were too young or had not yet been off world in any way were dismissed. Wind patterns were different on every world and unless you had the experience of being able to alter your flying technique because of these changes Andro felt it was too dangerous to risk. Many of the names Arzoal recognized from their warring time on Enurrua and it warmed her heart to know that they had learned from these experiences and were willing to lead and share them with younger dragons.

And quite possibly lose their lives in the process.

As the lights grew brighter Arzoal turned her massive head to look at Androcles who stood with his arms crossed over his broad chest and gazing at her intently. Elynth rested on the floor beside him, her head close to his shoulder and her golden eyes holding just as many questions and trepidation as her Bonded Brother. She gazed at them for a moment, seeing how their actions mirrored each others and they didn't even realize it. Just as Torma's and Martin's actions mirrored one another. It was something none of them noticed and that was part of the power the four of them could wield. They were so deeply connected that they could draw on each other's reserves of energy and willpower, and in doing so, bonded as they were they acted and thought as a single entity. She shifted her huge body until she was facing them completely and then she too settled to the floor.

Androcles. Elynth. What you have done here is...

Elder Mother I did not make this decision overnight. As Talon Guardians we agonized over this for months! Andro interrupted her. We questioned others... we...

Be silent. Arzoal spoke.

Grandmother! Elynth exclaimed coming to what she thought was the defense of her Bonded Brother.

Be silent both of you! Arzoal barked. There were perhaps three or four individuals who could actually get away with talking to either Andro or Elynth in such a way. Arzoal happened to be one of them. She extended her massive head out on her neck until she was more or less touching Andro's forehead with her snout. I was going to say... what you have done here... all of you... it is remarkable. You have... you have shaped them. Given them purpose.

Andro shook his head quickly. You shaped them gave and them purpose Elder Mother. Just as you have with all of your kind. You have brought dragons forward to this day by force of your will alone. He told her. Elynth and I, Uncle Isra and Aelnala, their trainers and their... their leader... we only refined it.

Arzoal chuckled within Mindvoice and then she did butt him gently in his shoulder. Will you never cease giving credit to others when it is due you young Androcles?

And risk the wrath of the Feravomir for not being humble? Never. He answered.

Arzoal laughed once more and looked around the large room. I need to send for Daurgo and the other Elders. They need to see this... what you have done here... before you send them away into battle. She turned back to him. That is what you are planning is it not.

It is not what I wish Elder Mother. Andro said.

I know that Androcles. It is never the wish of a Talon Guardian to put others at risk. But it is beyond our ability to control now. I know that. Arzoal answered. I wish to meet their leader Andro. The one who will act as your will in guiding these dragons.

Andro nodded. Of course. I want you to know he volunteered for this. We did not ask him to undertake his position.

Arzoal cocked her head slightly. As you say. She told him. But why would this matter? Is he not here?
No. The voice echoed in all of their minds and Arzoal's head snapped around as if on a swivel when that voice touched her. He is here.

Daurgo walked into the huge room still encased in the light gray and blue Dragon Armor. As Arzoal's eyes fell upon him he flicked one of his right talons and the Dragon Armor began to quickly recede into the deployment container that he wore on his back in much the same fashion as a saddle. Arzoal's eyes grew wider as his light green scales came into view from under the armor and very suddenly fear gripped her heart.

Daurgo! Arzoal gasped. You!

Daurgo moved up in front of her. He was the second oldest of the Dragon Elders at nearly twenty-three thousand years of age. His thick, muscular eighteen and a half meters in length was surpassed in size by only Torma, Jeth and Arzoal, though his neck and midsection were built very similar to Torma's muscular definition and thickness. He had been chosen to the Elder Council at seven thousand years old, and had loved Arzoal for more than ten millennia.

I will lead them Elder Mother. I officially relinquish my seat on the Elder Council. I have another calling now. I will lead them with all that I am and I will guide them and we will make you proud Elder Mother. Daurgo spoke softly.

Relinquish your seat on the Council! Arzoal gasped. But you... damn you Daurgo... this is what has occupied so much of your time? This is what you have kept hidden from me? Why you could not attend so many meetings of the Council? I do not need you throwing yourself into battle to impress me Daurgo. I have come to... I... I rely on your counsel to me.

Daurgo nodded. You will still have that Elder Mother.

Do not call me that Daurgo! Arzoal barked. I have asked you to call me by my name when we are...

No one else on the Council is old enough or experienced enough to do this. Daurgo said. It has to be me Arzoal... you know this. Daurgo moved even closer to her and touched his snout to hers. I have loved you for over ten millennia Arzoal. I... I have watched you do many great things for our kind; lead us through our darkest hours, show us the path of right and wrong, and even watch as almost every egg to hatch in the last ten thousand years came into this life. You deny yourself even the smallest of comforts and you deny yourself the right to feel.

That is not true! Arzoal protested.

Isn't it? Daurgo asked. I may live another thirty thousand years or I may die tomorrow. No matter what happens... I will go into the Beyond loving you just as intensely as I do now. I have never had a mate and I will never take one if I can not have you.

Daurgo you... Arzoal looked at him with astonishment.

No. You loved your mate Arzoal... I know this. And I will never take his place in your heart. Daurgo spoke. I do not wish to. I will do this... I will lead them, into battle if necessary, but this is my calling now. And if I can not have your heart then your blessing in our actions will have to suffice.

This was it.

This would happen now.

His constant presence and soothing counsel had always been a strength to her. His light green scales and the way his shimmering eyes gazed upon her. Twelve thousand years she had seen this and felt this. Three thousand years after he joined the Council she found herself admiring the lines of his back and shoulders as he walked. She had watched his dedication in the war on Enurrua, always the first to leave the safety of his cave to come and see her at her request. Many times risking his life in the process she later came to discover. Three thousand years ago Daurgo began to replace her long dead mate in her dreams and that is when Arzoal knew she had fallen deeply in love with him. For all this time she has pushed it aside, held her feelings in check for the betterment of her kind and their continued existence and not knowing if he felt the same. Now she had to make a decision for herself. Now she had to decide if she wanted to lose only the second male dragon she had ever loved because she was not brave enough to face the future.

[Do not deny yourself any longer sister.] Helen's voice filled her mind causing her to turn and look at the woman who had become her closest and most important friend. A friend she had not had in over forty thousand years of life. [Dragons are strong once more and they grow stronger and more numerous every year thanks to what you have done. Let go the reins you have on yourself and allow yourself to feel and love once more.] Helen reached up and placed her hand on Arzoal's thick foreleg. [Think of yourself this time sister.]

Helen turned and looked at Elynth and Andro who had been standing there during the exchange. "Why don't you two come with me?" She stated. "I'm sure there is much you can show me."

"Feravomir I wanted..." Andro began.

Elynth opened her jaws and clamped them down on Andro's shoulder lifting him off the floor easily. Come Androcles. She growled. Let us go with the Feravomir.

"Jeez! Ok! Ok!" Andro exclaimed as he gripped Elynth's snout and they left the massive building to the two dragons.

LEONIDAS IIA-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER ARCH DEMON COMMAND SHIP DENALI AND LISISA LEONIDAS ENROUTE TO BETA QUADRANT

This was certainly not anything Lisisa had expected so soon she thought to herself as she stepped from the large shower. Of course she had not expected much of what had happened in these last months either. Discovering her true bloodline and dismissing it for the man who her heart told her was her father. The love that she and Denali shared being made public finally and receiving nothing but encouragement and support in return from not only her family but from people across the entire Union that she and Deni did not even know. After she wrapped her petite but powerful frame in the towel and stuck her head into the dryer, she hit the switch and let the warm air blow her lush black hair almost dry. As she took another towel and began to rub the ends of her hair her mind wandered more.

Whether by design or intention and knowing Andro it was probably the latter, it seemed this ship had been recently built, and it almost appeared as if it had been built with her and Deni in mind. Lisisa realized it when entering their quarters. Andro knew both of them liked to read and study history and the walls had been decorated with half a dozen historic hand oil paintings that were exceptionally rare. The wall refrigeration unit had been stocked with large amounts of the high protein grape drinks that Deni liked so much and enough Nau'shindcal d'Vlos to last her several months at least. It also had different snacks that they both enjoyed. While they had brought pretty much all of their uniforms and different civilian clothes, they discovered that a delivery of extra uniforms and even more styles of civilian clothes had been dropped off in three travel crates inside the door. The quarters were also quite large, but their actual bedroom was smaller than normal. This is what sold Lisisa that Andro had been planning to give this ship to Deni for some time. Their bedroom on the ARCH DEMON, while not small by any means, wasn't as large as Andro's on the SCIMITAR. Deni had told Andro several years ago about how the bedroom in the villa he had bought was cozy and he hoped whoever shared his life in the future liked being close to him. Lisisa couldn't picture her Denali using the word cozy and she had laughed at his expression when he told her about it. The walls within the bedroom had been arranged in such a way as to make the room appear smaller and different styles of furniture had been made to fill the vacant spots. Lisisa did enjoy being close to Deni. Much like Andro and Eliani, if she could have remained in constant physical contact with her beautiful mate and husband Denali, it would have been heaven for her.

Lisisa was nearly five hundred years his senior, but in his arms he made her feel like a child. A giddy love struck child. The wolf blood within her was as pure as it got, though she would have preferred it came from the man she called father and not his fool brother. No matter the source, her wolf blood was dominant in every regard and Deni's aura could set her to singing in an instant. Combined with the fact that her vampire genes simply adored the taste of his blood, Lisisa Leonidas was in heaven when anywhere near her handsome husband and mate. Lately however, something else had begun to peek her interest in a way it never had before. While she would not think of pursuing this without Deni's knowledge, she also smelled it within him. An interest in the Vanari female Arduri. It seemed just being around her was very intoxicating to both of them and Lisisa did not know if it was because they both were attracted to her or if she was using her Alkay to entice them. It did not seem to have the effect on Deni that it did on her and she reasoned it was because his willpower and Mindvoice ability was ultimately far superior to hers because of the pureness of his blood.

Lisisa continued to dry the ends of her hair as she moved out of the shower room and into the main room of their quarters which was very spacious and comfortably furnished. She came to a halt when she saw him sitting on the velour like couch completely naked. They hardly ever wore clothes when it was just the two of them for they liked to look at each other, Lisisa being the one to look the most. She could not get over the incredibly sculpted body that Denali had, the deep tan or the fact that he was all hers. Of course, what he had between his legs was also a very important part of her interest as well.

A most distracting and delicious part.

Denali was by no means the largest male equipment she had within her, the Immortals who had raped her on Lycavore for so many years would always hold that distinction, yet his impressive size would forever be what she craved most of all. Deni fit within her as if he had been especially made, just for her use and enjoyment. He stretched her, reached inside her to the point of pain, but never crossed that threshold even in the midst of their most ardent and active lovemaking. And there had been many times when they had wanted each other so badly the only thing that mattered was slamming their bodies together as hard and as fast as they could to obtain their mutual peak. Just being within his arms, having him stroking her skin, never failed to send shivers of love surging through her. Lisisa Leonidas would want no other man she knew, however there was a certain blue skinned beauty that both of them would have to address their growing feelings for. Before it became a distraction to what their mission and purpose was for coming on this trip. As was her nature, Lisisa decided to tackle the issue head on. She tossed aside the towel she was using on her hair and walked up to the side of the couch where Deni sat. He was reading from one of a dozen data pads that surrounded him on the couch, most of them pertaining to his new ship, but several also given to him by Devra in the hopes he would come to understand Vanari culture as much as possible during their three day journey.

Deni didn't look up when she came from behind him for her scent always filled his nose now. He tapped the button on the pad and started talking however. "Lisi... did you know that the Vanari have this ritual that they celebrate every three years? It's like one mass orgy where they..." Deni looked up and his words died in his throat as he saw her slide seductively over the arm of the couch. He knew Lisisa's maple and wheat scent intimately and Deni would never tire of smelling her. How could he tire of such a beauty? If need be he could and would track her over hundreds of kilometers in order to find her. Deni grinned as she stalked across the couch on her hands and knees. "You smell tasty." He spoke huskily.

Lisisa smiled that seductive smile. "You smell better." She told him as she reached his body and slowly slid into his lap, pinning his arms to the back of the couch and then dragging her tongue up his chest and throat. She felt him stiffen slightly in her grasp and Lisisa reveled in the power she had over him. She brought her face up to his and saw his dark brown eyes wide and nearly feverish staring back at her. "Deni... we need to talk." She spoke softly as she placed butterfly kisses along his jaw and the edges of his lips.

"Just talk?" He asked with a grin.

Lisisa smiled at him and then kissed him hard, quickly and wantonly, stabbing her tongue between his lips to increase his passion and then taking his handsome face in her hands. "Talk first... then you can have me in whatever way you desire." She spoke huskily into his lips.

Denali smiled. "I don't know... I desire you in a lot of ways." He quipped.

Lisisa smiled at his words and settled herself more comfortably on his lap. She could feel his slightly thickening cock between her thighs but her desire to talk made him quickly grab onto his passion and hold it in. He knew her well Lisisa thought and his actions only continued to show her that he loved her mind as well as her body.

"Well... when we finish you can start acting on those desires." Lisisa told him.

"And I will." Deni answered. He dropped the data pad he had in his hand onto the pile next to him and then proceeded to push all of them onto the floor. His arms went around her back, his hands gripped her tight ass and he pulled her closer to him. His eyes lifted and met her gaze. "Now... what is it that you want to talk about. You have my undivided attention."

Lisisa bit her bottom lip and rotated her hips atop him, feeling his beautiful cock press against her bare pussy. "Undivided?" She asked.

"Not if you keep doing that!" He announced.

Lisisa grinned. "Just checking." She said.

Deni reached up and brushed some of her damp hair from her cheek. "What troubles you Lisi?" He asked.

"Arduri." Lisisa blurted out.

"Oh boy." Denali spoke shaking his head and then resting his forehead to her large jutting breasts. "I was... I was so hoping to avoid this conversation."

"I know you smell it Deni." Lisisa said. "If I can smell it than I know you can."

Denali nodded. "Yes I smell it." He told her lifting his head to look at her. "What do you want me to say Lisi?"

"What is in here and here would be a good place to start." She said touching his chest over his heart and then his temple.

"Is this a trick question?" He asked suddenly with a grin.

Lisisa snarled at him and pinched his arm hard. "Deni!" She exclaimed. "I want to know what you feel?"

"What I feel is this..." He stated pulling her even closer. "Arduri is... she is beautiful and unique and she smells very good. But Arduri is not you... and you are the one who holds my heart Lisisa."

"Deni I know that." Lisisa spoke softly. "And you hold mine so very tightly. You are my love and nothing will ever change that and no one will ever come between us."

"So what are we talking about then?" He asked.

"I find her intriguing Deni." Lisisa spoke. "I find her intriguing and so very attractive. I find myself wondering what she tastes like and I have never done that before with any woman. I find her attractive Deni. Do not tell me you don't think the same because I know you."

"I won't tell you anything different." Deni said. "But simply because she smells good and is attractive does not mean anything."

"No? Then why do we both feel the same thing?" Lisisa asked. "Why do we both find her so tantalizing? She desires both of us you know... that much is so very obvious. The way she looks at you and me both. How her scent spikes whenever she is near us."

"Are you telling me you wish to pursue her?" Deni asked.

"All the women that we have seen since we have been together." Lisisa said. "And many of them have had an interest in you and I Deni... all those women and Arduri is the only one who invokes the same reaction in both of us. The same feelings."

"Yes." He said.

Lisisa took his handsome face in her hands. "Have we not always believed that the gods brought us together Deni?"

Denali nodded. "Yes."

"Could it be a sign that they mean for Arduri to be part of our lives, because we are both so strongly drawn in by her?" Lisisa asked.

"I suppose." Deni answered softly. "But I don't..."

"Andro and father have always told you that you would one day break out of the shell you had around you Deni." Lisisa spoke. "You have broken out of that shell now. Since you have discovered the power that was within you your aura is so much stronger and your scent sweeter to me. It has made me stronger and more focused as well."

"And what if it's just me and you are feeding off me Lisi?" Deni asked. "Yes... she is beautiful... not as beautiful as you in my eyes but still beautiful. I would be lying if I said I have not thought about what being with her would be like. Could that be affecting you?"

Lisisa shook her head. "No... because I have felt this way from the moment we met her." She said. "And apparently Vanari have no qualms about letting someone know how they feel with their body language." Lisisa smiled shyly. "I have thought about wrapping my body around hers far more than you I'd wager."

"So you are saying you do want to pursue her." Deni said.

"I'm saying I think we should allow events to occur as they happen and not try to fight them." Lisisa answered. "If that means we end up with Arduri in our lives then fine. If not... that is fine too. At least we will not have fought what we feel and allowed someone to escape that would have made all three of us blissfully happy."

Denali stared at her for a long minute. “I guess when you put it that way.” He stated. “I don’t want us to chase her. If this is meant to be then she will come to us eventually. Fate will bring her to us.”

“As fate brought me to you.” Lisisa said leaning close to his face and brushing her lips over his. “Take me Denali Leonidas.” She whispered to him. “Fuck your wife and mate until she screams out your name.”

Denali growled hungrily at her words and covered her lips with his and he rolled her over under him on the couch.

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT INQUISITOR

HIGH COVEN SECURE SPACE

4.2 LYs FROM UZU OZEIB 7

Yuri was in no position to deny him anything he wanted. In truth she didn’t want to.

The rapturous pleasure that was sizzling through her veins was beyond anything she had ever experienced in nearly three thousand four hundred years of life. She had been so hesitant at first, the centuries old dogma beaten into her head bubbling to the forefront. His kiss was like a cleansing tidal wave that swept everything away and left her standing there open and bare to him. It took perhaps thirty seconds before Yuri Moran surrendered completely to the fervor that was rapidly building within her.

This was a man. This was a man who had risked death itself for her on more than one occasion. This was a man who wanted nothing from her except her love. No position of power, no riches or titles. Only her love. After more than twelve hours of doing nothing but talking with him the last few days, Yuri knew him far better than she ever knew him before. She learned things she had never known or would have imagined. Yet through it all was one simple and undeniable fact. He loved her more than his own life. Yuri did not believe she could be swept up so easily, but after only thirty seconds of his kiss she realized that she had never been loved as this man loved her. Even with the scars that now dotted her face and body, faded but there, he loved her.

Without hesitation, without doubt.

Without an iota of fear.

And the light that exploded within her mind told her one thing. She loved him as well. Loved him more than she had ever loved anything in her often times miserable and darkness filled life.

Yuri Moran had surrendered to his kiss then and within moments she was kissing him back with a zeal beyond anything she had known. She didn’t hesitate when he began to strip her, even helping him frantically to remove her clothes until she was before him naked as the day she entered this world. He soon joined her and she could do nothing but marvel at the total perfection before her as she saw it. Rippling muscles that defined his species and him. Then he was on his knees before her and his lips and tongue went directly for her center where he found her waiting and oh so very willing. Yuri had screamed then; screamed because he was not simply enjoying her, he was devouring her. She shuddered under his lips and tongue as they explored every tiny portion of her quivering body. Two mind shattering orgasms later he poised himself above her sweaty body and in one soul robbing, mind numbing plunge, Yuri Moran was filled with fifteen inches of steel hard Immortal cock and she leaped from the precipice of darkness and into the light of a new dawn.

He took her... gods did he take her.

With dominating thrusts and power, with breath stealing kisses, with feather like strokes on her shuddering body he took her. Three riveting orgasms into their lovemaking and his first eruption into her began her reshaping. Yuri’s dark eyes rolled into the back of her head and she howled out her blissful enthusiasm and passion as his searing hot Immortal come rocketed into her womb, purifying her body and mind and forever sealing her on this new path. A path she welcomed with open arms. It didn’t stop there and a gasping Yuri could only laugh in joy at his eagerness as he began anew, quickly driving her over the top once more as she covered his dark gray skin with loving kisses and whispered new found words into his ears. Within moments he was once more filling her with his passion and she was well beyond pleasure.

Yuri retained enough presence of mind to push him off her and quickly roll over on the bed. Her hand found his still willing and very hard cock and she gasped as her fingers barely fit around the immense length. She knew what she wanted. What she needed. She needed him in every position anyone had ever taken her. She needed him to completely make her his. He looked at her with wide eyes as she positioned him and then cooed out her need. To Yuri's enchantment he didn't hesitate. She screamed out her ecstasy as he filled her bowels with his Immortal manhood in a single stroke of pain and pleasure. When he struck bottom and she felt his enormous and crazy hot balls rest against her asscheeks Yuri Moran lost it in orgasmic bliss. As she squirmed and squealed beneath him, exploding continuously in orgasmic delight, a part of her hazy mind recalled what had brought this life altering moment into existence.

"...be gone for about thirty-six hours." Moran spoke as they walked down the corridor together. "We're meeting in the next sector but everyone will not be there until late tonight. When I get back we should have a clearer picture on who is on our side and who is not and then we can draw up a plan to deal with them."

Yuri nodded her head. "I will be fine Robert." She said softly. "Insure the secondary research base has been activated and all project materials copied and transferred there."

Moran stopped as they came to the landing bay entrance. He turned and looked at her. "You are looking much better these last two days." He said.

Yuri nodded her head. "And I am feeling better. I've been working out in our private gym and Doctor Nalavi has prescribed a special diet to return my strength to me."

Moran nodded. "Good." He said. "We need you at your best Yuri."

"And I will be." She said. "You... you are taking Dante?"

Moran nodded. "He wanted to come. He wants to be more involved in the day to day activities and I agreed."

"Is that wise?" Yuri asked. "He is different since we returned."

Moran nodded. "I know. I'm hoping this trip helps him to break out of the darkness that surrounds him."

"Be careful of what you share with him." Yuri said.

Moran looked at her. "Why?"

Yuri shook her head. "Something inside me tells me to be careful that is all."

"Yuri he is our son." Moran spoke. "He is no danger to us."

Yuri gazed at him for a long while. "You are right of course." She said. "I'm going to review the intelligence reports received from the homeworld and see if I can piece together whatever plans those fools may have."

Moran nodded. "We'll have to take them out." He said.

Yuri nodded. "I have no problems killing traitors." She answered. "None at all."

Moran smiled. "You are becoming your old self again." He said.

Yuri smiled. "Yes I am. And it feels good. When will... when will you return to our quarters Robert?"

Moran hesitated for a long moment and looked at the floor. "I think it's better if I stay away for a while longer." He answered. "I don't want to rush your recovery as much as I would like too. You need to be back to your full strength Yuri. Then I intend to ravage you."

Yuri smiled seductively. "I look forward to that." She said.

Moran smiled and nodded. "Then I will see you in thirty-six hours." He said.

He made no attempt to kiss her and turned quickly to enter the landing bay. Yuri moved to the small view window as the doors closed and she watched him as he moved across the landing bay to the G9 Runner. Halfway across the distance she saw the blond pureblood fall in beside him and his face lit up happily. Yuri's dark eyes narrowed as she watched and what she feared became more and more obvious to her as the hours passed. Everything Nalavi had been telling her for the last few days was coming true. She reached into the side pocket of her dark blue uniform jumpsuit and removed the data disc, holding it in her fingers.

"Ravage me you say." Yuri whispered softly. "We shall see. We shall see."

"...a success." Aikiro spoke as she lifted the glass of fresh blood to her lips.

"So it worked?" Robert Moran asked.

Aikiro nodded. "I watched it from a secure containment room. The chamber unsealed when she entered the code and the full essence of Xaxon was released. It was like a dark cloud, oily yet dry. It quickly engulfed her."

"What now?" Tesand asked.

"Now we wait." Aikiro spoke. "He communicated with me that he needed a vassal. I have been preparing her for years. Yuri is perfect for him... at least until we are able to recover his own body. We had to wait until after she had given birth to Lucia and her body returned to normal. Twelve years I have schooled her and taught her what he told me to teach her."

"What happens to Yuri when we find his body?" Moran asked.

Aikiro looked at him. "I'm sorry Robert... there will be nothing of Yuri left when he departs her physical body. He will need many years to become accustomed to her body for it has been so long since he has occupied one. When we do accomplish that goal she will be nothing more than a vegetable. I will honor my word to you. You will remain Supreme Commander and you will have your choice of females. As many as you wish." Aikiro stood up in the holovid and walked across the room they were in stopping in front of the window before continuing.

"Yuri was the only one who was compatible for him. The only one outside of Martin Leonidas's son Androcles. He would have preferred that body, but the boy's blood is too pure and he proved to be too strong willed and that damnable dragon of his and the bond they share only made it more impossible." Aikiro spoke. "When the time comes he will choose a young body and then his power will be infinite. And then we can achieve what we have always wanted and he will have his revenge on his brother and his brother's descendants."

"Will she figure it out?" Moran asked. "She's not stupid Aikiro."

Aikiro shook her head. "She will find herself becoming increasingly darker in her thoughts and actions. Crueler really. Xerxes's rape of her opened the door into her inner psyche and exposed what Xaxon needed. She is strong enough to hold him, contain him, but slowly her mind will no longer be her own."

"And there is no way to reverse it?" Moran asked.

Aikiro shook her head. "Not while she lives... no." She answered.

So she had died on Earth Yuri now knew. Androcles Leonidas had killed her in his rage. She should have known facing him was quite possibly the stupidest thing she had ever done. He was every bit as powerful as his father, who Yuri didn't doubt would grow even more powerful. Between his teeth and his claws she had died and only Pa'cour's love and quick action had brought her back. She had seen it all now. Seen it in his mind as if was happening all over again. This time however, Yuri didn't shy from the visions, and she learned what she had so craved to know. How he had held her head to his neck, her body limp in his powerful arms. How he had directed her extended fangs to his flesh and then pushed her head forward stabbing those fangs into his own skin. He had given of himself to her without question or doubt. As clearly as the orgasms that he caused to rip through her now, he had truly brought her back by force of his love for her alone.

Yuri hissed in blissful joy when he stopped his will crushing strokes into her and with exquisite slowness he turned her body to face him. They never became disconnected as he rolled her over onto her back and then slowly lowered his body atop hers, crushing his powerful chest against her breasts as he sank fully into her tight ass once more. Yuri's cobalt blue eyes matched his own in devoted passion and she saw in them what he wanted to do so badly. She grabbed his face in her hands, so beautiful to her now, feeling the bone spurs along his jaw and she nodded to him with glassy, tear filled eyes. It took only six more strokes before he lost it completely and Yuri Moran howled out her surreal bliss as his vampiric fangs sank deeply into her neck and their simultaneous eruption overtook them. Her slim ankles were securely locked across his jerking asscheeks, her hands spread across his powerful back, and her body quivering almost violently in exploding ecstasy. It was then that Yuri Moran sank her own vampiric fangs into Pa'cour's thick neck and she fed on the most delicious nectar she had ever tasted in all of her twisted life.

All while Pa'cour continue to erupt inside her and mold her into something new.

Yuri cooed most deliciously as his warm lips left a trail of soft kisses down her spine. She felt the cool air of the room across her skin as he pushed the sheet that covered her shapely ass down and gently used his nose to caress the firmness of her upper ass cheeks. He replaced the sheet once more and began his travels up her back again, his large hands coming to rest on either side of her body as he pressed his powerful frame against hers almost reverently. He moved her thick raven black hair away from the side of her neck and nuzzled her there insuring the marks from his fangs had disappeared completely and then he settled to the bed beside her. She whimpered in happiness when those same powerful arms pulled her back tightly against his broad chest and her arms dropped to wrap just as tightly over his, pulling them hard against her bare breasts and feeling her nipples press into his forearms.

“How much longer?” Pa'cour asked her softly.

“Six hours.” She answered.

“Yuri... I... I will not be able to tolerate him violating you.” Pa'cour told her. “I will tear him in half before he touches you again.”

Yuri rolled over quickly in his arms, and without a second's pause she pressed her body to his as she pushed him fully onto his back. She draped one of her long legs over the top of his, feeling the huge Immortal cock that had given her pleasure she didn't believe existed. It was soft now, but just as impressive as it had been hard. She let his right arm draw her close, her large breasts flattening against the side of his ribcage and she let her fingers reach for his face. She traced the dark gray skin, running her fingers over the tips of the bone spurs, and feeling his body react. It was an erogenous zone for Immortals, the tips of their bone spurs, and knowing she had this affect on him sent tingles through her.

“He will never have me again Pa'cour! Never! Only you my Immortal love. Only you.” Yuri spoke meeting the gaze of his incredible dark eyes.

“What do you wish beautiful Yuri?” He asked her lifting his own hand to stroke her smooth cheek. The scars on her face were faded to almost nothing yes, but to Pa'cour they did not mar the beauty of this woman in his arms in any way. Robert Moran was a fool to have let them do to her what they did. Such beauty and intelligence and strength nearly wasted because of their mad hunger for power. If at all possible... Moran would fall under his hand. With as much violence and hate as Pa'cour could muster.

“I feel... I feel different Pa'cour.” Yuri spoke softly lowering her head to his massive chest. Her hair spread across his skin as her fingers danced over his abdomen. “I am me... but I am not.” Pa'cour used his fingers to trace her shoulder and waited patiently for her to continue. “I still have... I still have a darkness within me, I think I always have, but I am free of all the hate and anger. You have freed me.”

“Me?” He asked.

Yuri looked up and turned her head to face him. “I died Pa'cour.” She said. “I died. It is the only way Xaxon's essence would have left me. I died and you brought me back. Your love for me brought me back.”

“Having his... having him out of you took all the hate and anger?” Pa'cour asked still not able to comprehend the intricacies of Mindvoicing and what it entailed.

Yuri shook her head slowly. “Having him out of me took away the darkness, but your love for me took away the hate and anger. You... you gave of yourself even knowing what could happen. Your love for me is what saved me. No one... no one has ever done for me without wanting something in return Pa'cour.”

“I want only you Yuri.” Pa'cour spoke softly. “Nothing else matters to me now. Only you and your love. That is all I have ever wanted.”

Yuri smiled warmly as she looked at him. “I know.” She said softly. “And I want you my love. More than I have ever wanted anything in my terrible life.”

“What of Dante? You believe this Xaxon has infested him now?” Pa'cour spoke.

Yuri nodded. “That is why he spoke to me in my dreams. Just before I woke up in the Med Bay. He was torturing me because he leaped to Dante prematurely when he thought I was dead. Dante is twisting quickly. His own lust for power and strength is accelerating what took years for him to do with me.”

“Then he will not easily allow you to assume your mother's seat of power. He will want it for himself and he will do everything in his power to make sure you never take her place.” Pa'cour said thoughtfully. “He will fight you every step of the way. He has already managed to turn Moran fully against you.”

Yuri's eyes darkened even more than they normally were. “There is more to Robert's deception than just Dante.” She snarled softly. “Something I will take care of very soon.”

“The High Coven will fall Yuri.” Pa'cour spoke. “If not by Martin Leonidas’s hands than by his son. They will never forget what was done to their blood. They will never forget and they will never forgive.”

Yuri dropped her forehead to his chest. “I can not believe my mother would stoop so low.” She said. “I can’t believe I would stoop so low as to allow that.”

“It was not you Yuri.” Pa'cour said.

“Yes it was.” She answered quickly. “I have always been driven Pa'cour. My father and mother drove me to be the very best. To remove anyone in my way. My mother knew about Xerxes raping me. She knew all along and acted as if she did not find out until later. She was using me even then. They let Xerxes rape me. Told him to rape me. To make me weak and vulnerable. To make me hate and carry so much anger in me.

Phraktos... a large part of me rejoices that she is dead.”

“She betrayed you Yuri.” Pa'cour said. “Betrayed you and used you when she should have been a mother to you. What you feel is not wrong.”

“And she turned me into her in the process!” Yuri said. “I am hated by my own people! I have a price on my head so large that even my own people would surrender me to the Union if they were given the chance.”

“That will never happen.” He stated. “I would never allow it.”

“For the first time in my life I have no idea what to do Pa'cour.” Yuri said. “I don’t know what to do and I fear what the future holds. For me. For us.” She spoke looking at him. “I can’t lose you now! I can’t!”

“You are not going to lose me Yuri.” He said.

“Then what do we do?” Yuri asked him. “They will move against those in power on Uzu Ozeib 7 within the week. I will be expected to lead that charge.”

“We will run.” He told her. “We will take a G9 and we will run. I will find how it is the Immortals have changed... you can alter your appearance enough to fool the causal observer. We will find a planet and build a home in the mountains somewhere. In time they will come to forget us.”

“Pa'cour my love... I have a half billion riyal bounty on my head.” Yuri spoke. “We will not be able to hide forever. I am just too well known too go unnoticed for very long. We would be running forever.” She lowered her head to his chest again and wrapped her arm across his powerfully defined abdomen.

“I would run forever if it meant I was with you and you were safe.” Pa'cour told her.

“We can not start a new life if the old one continues to hound us Pa'cour my love.” Yuri spoke almost smiling with the ease that those three words fell from her lips. Pa'cour took a deep breath. Much deeper than normal and this caused Yuri to lift her head and turn back to face him. “What is it?” She asked.

Pa'cour took her beautiful face in his hands and smiled. “What if I told you there was a way.” He said.

“A way to do what?” Yuri asked.

“A way to leave High Coven space. To start over and not worry of this bounty. To be free and to begin our life together if that is what you wish.” Pa'cour said.

“If only it were that easy.” She said.

“I did not say it would be easy... I said there is a way.” Pa'cour told her.

“What way?” She asked. “What do you mean?”

“A way for us to just disappear. No bounty. No mercenaries. Just you and me. I only need to hear you tell me that this would make you happy. That this would be what you want.” Pa'cour said.

“How?” Yuri asked him.

“Tell me.” He spoke softly.

“Tell you that I love you?” Yuri said. “Tell you that I want to feel you within me for all of eternity. That I would go anywhere with you. Is that what you want to hear?”

Pa'cour smiled gently. “That will do for now.” He said leaning up to kiss her. A kiss Yuri did not hesitate to return. He pushed himself up on the bed as she sat up and held the sheet over her breasts. He pressed his back to the headboard and looked at her. “I can insure that we will get all the supplies and credits we will need. At least enough to find a place and get settled in. I can also insure that the bounty on your head will cease to exist. The one on your son however... that one I can do nothing about.”

Yuri scooted closer to him. “He is no longer my son Pa'cour. The moment Xaxon seized him, he stopped being my son. I have lost all of my children because of what they did to me. I will never get them back Pa'cour. I am dead to them. And they would never believe me if I told them all that we now know. Now do not make me wait any longer my Immortal...” Yuri didn’t finish her sentence and her eyes grew a little wider when she realized what she was going to say and how naturally it was going to come out. "My Immortal husband." She finally finished the words, speaking them with a soft reverence in her voice. She looked up and saw Pa'cour staring at her. "My Immortal husband." She said again with an almost wistful smile.

Pa'cour reached out, took her face in his hands and kissed her hard. Yuri whimpered in joy and returned the kiss with equal passion. It was the first thing she had ever done in her life that felt so very right. He pulled away after a moment and used his thumbs to stroke her cheeks. He sat back slowly never breaking her gaze and began to speak.

"I will... I will do something I have not done in six thousand years." He said softly. "I will... I will ask my brothers to help me."

Yuri's eyes grew wider. "Your brothers?" She gasped. "Pa'cour... I thought your tribe and family were dead? How could you have brothers?"

"Six thousand years ago I had a tribe, a family and a wife." He spoke meeting her gaze. "I was following in the footsteps of my older brothers and being a good Immortal soldier. Until the Trebin Uprising."

Yuri moved even closer. "I thought the Trebin Uprising was between warring Immortal tribes over territory on your home planet." Yuri said.

"It was." He answered. "It spilled over onto the moon of Trebin when the other tribe attacked the colony there that our family had established. They slaughtered nearly four thousand of our tribe over that three day period. Among them my Immortal wife. It has been an arranged marriage as they all were back then, but she was strong and happy. They broke every bone in her body before they slit her throat and left her to rot in a ditch. I found her a week later among the bodies. I swore a Blood Oath for revenge but my oldest brother, the leader of our tribe refused. He had just gotten the two factions to sit down and try to settle things peacefully. Over twenty thousand had been killed among our two tribes during the uprising and if not stopped it would have killed far more. My brother knew this... I only wanted revenge." Pa'cour took a deep breath and leaned back against the headboard.

"I ignored my brother's edict and in my rage I found and killed the two oldest sons of the Tribe Elder. I killed them in the same fashion they had killed my wife." Pa'cour explain. "I did not try to hide this fact and I was proud of what I did. The only way to keep the uprising from continuing and growing larger because of my actions was to do what my brother did. I was stripped of my tribe name, stripped of my family and all that I owned and I was exiled. Never to be seen again. Never to set foot on our homeworld again. I hated my brothers for that. I hated them terribly for not understanding how I felt. For not getting revenge with me. Six thousand years I carried that hate... until the day I ordered my men to kill one of my brothers and his two sons because of an order I received while I was stationed on Lycavore. Just before you arrived. I tried to rescind it almost immediately but the men had already left. It was an order from your father."

Yuri's gasp filled the bedroom and her eyes grew huge in disbelief. "Pa'cour!" She stammered. "You are..."

Pa'cour nodded his head slowly. "Cha'talla is my brother Yuri. T'lolt is my brother."

"But how did... no one ever knew. No one ever discovered this!" She gasped.

Pa'cour shook his head slowly. "I altered my facial appearance somewhat and took a new identity. Pa'cour is a common enough name... I just had to give this person a history. Which I did. Cha'talla's brother Pa'cour was listed as killed in the Trebin Uprising and removed from the rolls of the Immortals. When T'lolt came to Lycavore he knew immediately who I was but he said nothing. He protected me and in my centuries old hate I took his sons from him and nearly killed him as well."

"Does he know... does he know you gave the order?" Yuri asked.

Pa'cour nodded. "I'm sure he does." He said.

"But if you... if you ordered his sons killed... why would they help you now. After all this time and what happen on Lycavore." Yuri asked.

"Akruxians. Immortals. We followed a very strict code of honor even after your father changed our world. A code we lived by and would never violate. No matter what." Pa'cour said. "Part of that code of honor is to grant one request to an exile before he must leave. Only one. I... I never requested anything. I spit on Cha'talla when he offered me this and I walked away from him. I never looked back."

"Why are you so sure he will... after all this time... after all that has happened." Yuri gasped. "Why are you so sure he will honor it now?"

“Nalavi.” Pa'cour said. “He showed you Cha'talla’s speech.”

“Yes.”

Pa'cour nodded. “I was the brother he was speaking of Yuri. That last part of his message was meant for me.”

Yuri shook her head. “A l'Ze'zhuanth Sanguine!” She gasped. (By the ancient vampire lords.)

Pa'cour chuckled. “Yes... I find myself saying that as well.”

Yuri looked up at him. “Ok... that issue aside for the moment... how do you propose to have Androcles Leonidas remove the bounty on my head my Du'ased M'ranndii? No matter how you calculate it... I am still responsible for what Dante and Javier did to his sister Zarah.”

Pa'cour nodded his head. “Yes... but I have something that they will want far more than your death.” He said as he began getting out of bed.

Yuri’s face twisted into a confused expression and she watched him pad naked across her room. Her eyes admired the way his back muscles moved and how his immense cock dangled between his thighs giving her an incredible view of his tight, powerful ass as well. She shook her head quickly to clear her thoughts as he bent down to pick up his personal data pad. “While hearing you say that gives me more confidence than ten seconds ago, just what do you have that they could want more than me?”

Pa'cour moved back to the bed and sat on the edge as he was typing on the pad. Yuri moved across the bed and pressed her front to his back as she rested her jaw on his shoulder. He held up the pad finally and looked at her. “This.” He said.

Yuri’s eyes nearly fell out of her skull as she snatched the pad from his hand. “By all that is holy Pa'cour!” She almost shouted. “How?”

“Your father tasked my Immortal squad with retrieving them and destroying what remained.” He said. “We would not allow them to remain the way they were or follow those orders. They were honored enemies who fought with courage and honor. We took them aboard our ship, cleaned their wounds and them wrapped them in satin silks before sealing their bodies within three vacuum chambers. I choose the spot to seal them away and we conducted a simple Akruvian ceremony. They have been there ever since and I am the only one still alive who knows the location. The moon is a day’s trip from here.”

“But why...”

Pa'cour took the pad from her again. “Because no matter how you view them my beautiful Yuri... they are just as bound by honor as we are. It is in our blood. Our very beings.” Pa'cour got to his feet. “When I tell Androcles Leonidas that I will return to the Lycavorian people the perfectly preserved bodies of their King Resumar, his Queen and concubine, he will not hesitate for a moment to do what I ask.”

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SIX

EARTH

DROW CITY OF ABBIL

SEVENTEEN KILOMETERS WEST OF EDEN CITY

The second of three newly established Drow cities was a flourishing center for commerce and rest. A dozen of the largest Drow Families had agreed to pool their resources and effort to form this city and with the blessing of their Queen, Abbil had been born. Eight years after it had been formed the population was now well over seventy thousand. A mixture of Drow elves, Wood elves and High elves combined with human and Lycavorian citizens made up the vast majority of permanent citizens. The City Council was made up of representatives from the twelve Drow families and six other elves and humans. Abbil was a Drow city and as with any of the three Drow cities it had very strict laws. Many of the laws were the same or very similar to Earth and Union laws as a whole, but like Sparta, the Drow cities were very harsh on those who were not there to enjoy themselves and preferred to violate established laws. While crime was not a large problem at all, it was still a small issue. Shops and stores were very active and the Riyal flowed abundantly within the city from contracts and commerce. Abbil was home to four very large resorts that catered to the person who wished for peace and quiet within the beautiful and mountainous terrain that the city was built within. Foodstuffs from every culture within the Union had come here and were bought and sold. Several Amarian taverns had been opened, one Limian trader, a Folcani trinket store and half a dozen other alien species had come here and opened shops or different restaurants. Abbil was rapidly making a name for itself across the entire Union as the place to come for solitude, security and peace at a very reasonable cost.

Which is exactly the reason Panos had chosen this location. Abbil was also home to the secondary command center for all of Earth. Looking at it from the outside you would never know that the facilities above ground and those below had anything to do with the military. The Drow were masters of hiding things and they had outdone themselves here. It appeared like any resort to those who didn't know any better. Pools, games, restaurants and large entertainment areas on the surface. Yet walk through a plain looking door that you weren't supposed to and suddenly you would find yourself staring at several stern face Drow who were not guests at all. Of course, you had to find these doors first.

They had arrived secretly over the last three hours and now sat in the main conference room beneath the largest of the three pools. The room was furnished with a massive oval table and several couches and chairs along the walls, able to seat fully sixty men and women if it was needed. An entire counter held food and drinks which could serve those same people, though now it held only coffee, fruit and Danishes for it was still early in the morning. Panos looked around the table as the others talked softly with each other. Aihola sat to the left of Charles Taylor, who sat next to Selene and Lynwe on his right. Tareif sat on Aihola's left with the Drow Senator Daba beside him. Dilios and Arete sat nearest to him, Thr'won, Helen's second in command if you will, beside Arete. Thr'won had risen to a position of some power within the Union for her actions during the Battle for Earth and afterwards. She was the senior mage for Sparta and acted in Helen's stead when she was off Earth. Aihola would speak for Tarifa as the Governor of Sparta Panos knew. Her word would be considered Tarifa's for they were very much mates with each other as well as to Isra, and when one spoke they both spoke. Daba had been somewhat surprised when Panos contacted her, but he quickly explained that her family was now tied to the Leonidas family for all time because of Lu'ria, and the Drow were held in very high regard by both Martin and Andro even before Lu'ria became a Princess of the Union. The other nine occupants of the room, five men and four women, four humans, three elves and two Hadarians, were all members of Earth's senior political leadership. The two Hadarians had come to Earth within a year of Earth becoming a member of the Union. They had remained to help in whatever manner they could and had soon come to love the open spaces and clean air. They were now well respected members of Earth's leadership and citizens of their adopted planet.

Panos got to his feet. "We should probably begin." He spoke drawing all their attention to him.

"Panos... where is Deia?" Charles asked. "Shouldn't she be here as well?"

"The Kavalians arrived very early this morning and it would look odd if both Deia and I were gone from Sparta." Panos answered. "She knows why we have gathered and she approves of whatever decisions we come too."

"In regards to what Panos?" Selene asked.

"Pusintin." Panos told her bluntly.

Charles snorted loudly. "Well then let's cut right to it!" He snapped. Eighty-three years old and still as spry as a man forty years his junior, Charles Taylor had been elected President of Earth with the second highest vote count behind only Selene and her second term. He was a man who was adored by humans and elves alike. "I have spoken to all four Senators from Earth who hold a Union seat and not one of them has any intention of voting in favor of that retched man and his dubious goals! As the elf Senator Co'moro told me... Pusintin can go suck a comet's tail!"

This brought a round of laughter from everyone in the room and Aihola and Selene both leaned into Charles.

"You have such a way with words Charles." Selene told him.

"I do try." He said with a grin. "The fact of the matter is... not one person on this planet would support Pusintin. We have come too far as a group of people, as a planet to let that foul man set things back. Everyone knows his only intent is to use this child with Queen For'mya to gain control of the Union. We all know who would give the orders. No one is willing to allow him to destroy three decades of work. Not after what we have been through together."

“That is the one of the other reasons we are here.” Panos spoke. “All of you know what has taken place with For'mya. She has been used and manipulated in the cruelest of ways for a female who is wolf. They have used her natural instincts against her. What are you hearing from the people in regards to this?”

“Before or after you listen to them curse this traitor Pusintin in two or three languages Panos?” Daba spoke now. “I know I can speak for the Drow...” Daba looked at Aihola. “My Queen?”

Aihola nodded. “Please Daba... we are all equals here.”

Daba turned back to Panos. “There is not a single Drow, or any we call family and friend, that believes for an instant that Queen For'mya betrayed her family and the King willingly. There have been whispers from many Drow within our militia ranks who speak of Am'uur and Lu'ria leading some daring raid to retrieve her. No one among the Drow will support Pusintin or any puppet government he may install if the Union Senate votes in his favor; which I can't see happening unless they all leave their common sense on the toilet somewhere the day of the vote.”

Panos smiled and nodded his head as the others laughed softly. “Indeed.” He said. “I can tell you that will not be necessary. Androcles has given me permission to inform all of you what is happening now and what will happen over the course of the next few days. Some of us in this room know a little of it, but what many of you do not know is that Martin is very much alive and right now in The Wilds searching for where the Kavalians have taken For'mya so that he can get her back.” Panos smiled at the expressions of wonder and shock from those who were not privy to this information before now and just before they all began to throw questions at him in a barrage he held up his hand. “Allow me to continue...” He waited for them to settle back into their chairs, their faces alone showing the happiness many felt. “This information has been kept very secret for the sole purpose of keeping For'mya alive. Pusintin would not hesitate to kill For'mya if he knew Martin was alive, and in order to do everything he could to keep his elven mother alive, Andro ordered that this information remain within their immediate family. It was Andro's decision since Martin has not been on Earth since the attacks. Now Martin was actually injured and out of it for a time but he is fully recovered now. It is also why we have not gone through with a coronation for Androcles.”

“By the gods Panos... this is unbelievable!” One of the elves spoke from his chair.

Panos nodded his head. “Yes... it has been a very hard month since their initial attack.” He spoke.

“Androcles has dealt with far too much for a young man his age to tolerate.” Charles spoke softly. “Being born aware... having to follow in his father's footsteps and shadow.” He looked at Panos. “How is he holding up?”

Panos nodded. “Surprisingly well.” He answered. “He has an extensive support network and he commands almost as much loyalty from the Durcunusaan and the people as Martin. His words on Hadaria saw his popularity soar throughout the entire Union according to those silly polls that Deia's staff conducts.”

Charles shook his head with a grin. “I hate polls.” He muttered.

Panos chuckled as he settled into his chair. “Yes... so do I. When all else fails Andro turns to Sadi and his mates.” He told them looking directly at Daba. “They will always be able to sooth him.”

Daba nodded. “As it should be.” She said.

Tareif leaned forward at the table. “Now why don't you tell us why we are really here Panos?” He spoke. “We could have told everyone that Martin was alive by vid conference. This meeting is about something else isn't it?”

Panos nodded his head. “Indeed it is Tareif my friend.” He said. He picked up the data pad that rested by his arm and plugged it into the slot on the elevated section of the table in front of him. “The Union Senate will meet and vote in four days time. The Kavalians asked for an extension on the vote, no doubt in order to try and garner support for their cause as well as conduct their searches, and both Deia and Andro agreed.”

“Why?” Charles asked.

Panos touched the pad activating a large holo display on the monitor wall. “Because the extra four days will benefit us more than the Kavalians Charles. Regardless of what the Union Senate votes... Andro has no intention of reacting to what the Kavalians may do anymore. The instant the vote is completed, regardless of the outcome, Androcles is going to launch a surprise attack into Kavalian space against targets he has already selected. He is essentially going to beat the Kavalians to the punch and try to cripple their ability to come at us from more than one location.”

Tareif snorted approvingly and that was followed by a nod from Aihola and Lynwe both. "It's about time." Tareif growled.

Panos thought he was going to have to sell this plan of Andro's to the men and women in this room, but he should have known better. He watched as knowing glances were passed between Charles and Selene, as well as Charles and Aihola, and finally Charles and Tareif, who nodded at his human President.

Finally Charles turned to look at Panos. "It comes in very handy when, as President of Earth, I have access to so many different people who think along the same lines as I do." He said. "Tell Androcles... tell Andro that all he needs to do is say the word and all of Earth stands behind him. Right to the very end, whatever it may be."

Panos nodded his head. "You don't know how glad I am to hear you say that." He spoke. "Because Andro wanted you to stand beside the Senator who will deliver the speech explaining why Androcles is going to plunge us into a war we don't want."

Dilios sat beside Panos and shook his head. "I would not want to be that person." He said glibly.

Panos looked at him and his smile grew larger. "I'm sorry you feel that way Dilios... because you are the one Andro choose to deliver that speech to the entire Union."

Dilios's eyes grew as wide as anyone had ever seen. "Me?" He gasped loudly. "Panos... I... there are many who are far better qualified than me to give such a speech. I hate to stand before the Spartan Senate and speak! I can't do this!"

"Andro disagrees and so does Deia." Panos spoke.

"Why?" Dilios asked astounded.

"You are a Lycavorian Spartan and the only surviving member of the Spartan Senate from when Martin's father ruled. There are many of us still alive from that time but only you had the distinction of serving King Leonidas first hand." Panos said in reply. "Regardless of what you may think my friend, that fact alone carries great weight within the Union. Among many circles."

Dilios stared at him for a long moment, the quiet in the room almost unnerving. Finally he looked at Arete and then back to Panos. "I would be honored." He spoke.

Panos nodded. "Good." He motioned to the large monitor. "I have brought the parts of Andro's plan that concern us and he wanted me to go over them carefully with everyone. When this meeting is over you will return and begin letting your subordinates know what will happen. Charles... since the vast majority of Union Senators will be here on Earth and you are Earth's President, Andro has asked that you be the one to acknowledge the vote count and announce the findings."

Charles nodded. "Consider it done." He stated.

Panos smiled. "Then I suggest we get to work for there is much to be done and little time to do it."

"Panos..." Charles asked. "Where exactly will Androcles be when we are making all these announcements?"

Panos met his gaze and smiled. "He is a Leonidas... and he leads from the front." Panos said simply.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

"Feravomir, are we... my father and I... our family... are we cursed?" Androcles asked.

Helen looked up at him as they walked along the edge of the water, the scent of the blue/green Laconia Gulf on the breeze and filling their nostrils. They had returned to Cranae Island, leaving Arzoal and Dargoo with each other for they had much to discuss and Helen had no intention of spoiling what she knew deep down her bonded sister needed and desired. She enjoyed these times, whether it be with Martin walking along the Evrotas River or the few times she had done this very thing with Andro on Cranae Island. It was during these times where she discovered the deepest thoughts of the two men she loved most in the universe. It was during these times when all humor and playfulness vanished and they shared with her things that they only shared with their mates. Items that occupied the deepest regions of their minds and their emotions.

"Cursed?" Helen asked softly. "What would make you say that Androcles?"

“It just seems sometimes that our name is synonymous with trouble. With discord.” He answered her. “Grandfather Leonidas fought his entire life did he not? My father for the better part of the life he knew when he came out of the sleep chamber. And it seems now that I will be forced to begin a war now as well.”

“You think you are the only Leonidas to have these very same thoughts?” Helen asked him gently. “Do you think you are the only Leonidas to doubt themselves and their decisions; their actions and preparations before they are to commit our people to war?”

Andro smiled gently. “Somehow I just don’t see grandfather Leonidas or my own father doubting themselves.”

“Then you would be wrong.” Helen told him. “I will share with you something I told your father on the eve of The Battle for Earth. Something I told your grandfather as well... do not be afraid to lose Andro, for the moment you become afraid to lose something or someone, you will become afraid to act. And when you become afraid to act... all will be lost.”

“And it falls to me because father is not here.” Andro said.

“Yes.” Helen said.

“I just never expected... I never expected to have so many lives riding on my decisions so soon in my life Feravomir.” Andro told her.

Helen nodded. “Frightening isn’t it?”

“Downright terrifying.” He told her.

Helen took his hand and stopped walking, turning to look up into his face. “Androcles... you have a gift. Elynth has a gift. The gifts are each other. Your father and Torma are bonded so very deeply, but you and Elynth... the two of you are special. What happened between you... it is not something that can be explained. Dorian and Ryner will experience it to some extent, but you and Elynth... it is like you are she and she is you.” She smiled. “Am I making any sense to you?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “Far more than you realize Feravomir.” He said.

“It is different than your father and Torma. Both of you are different. The name Leonidas is not cursed Androcles... it is blessed. You... your father, your mothers, your siblings, all of you represent all that is good and beautiful to so many people and so many species. They view you not as their Crown Prince or their Royal family; they view you just as they view themselves and so many others. You care.”

“Will they still care when men and women begin to die because I have begun a war of choice?” Andro asked.

Helen’s eyes darkened. “This is not a war of choice Andro!” She spat out. “This is a war of necessity! One not of our choosing! If we do nothing the outcome will be far more terrible to contemplate. If you do not do this then the Kavalians will invade us! You know that just as well as I do! You are simply doing what you must to keep them from destroying all that we have built. That our people have built. Your uncle would tear it all down just for his vanity and quest for power.”

“And the future? What about that?” Andro asked.

“I can tell you that a tough-minded optimism is best.” Helen said reaching up to take his face in her hands. “The future is not shaped by people who don’t really believe in the future. Men and women of vitality and courage have always been prepared to bet their futures, even their lives, on ventures of unknown outcome Androcles. If they had all looked before they leaped, we would still be crouched in caves sketching animal pictures on the wall. That was always your father’s way, and though you do not wish to admit it, it is your way as well my boy. The decision is now yours Androcles Leonidas. I suspect no matter what, you will do your father proud.”

“I am still so much like him no matter how I try to not be, aren’t I Feravomir?” Andro said.

Helen smiled and nodded. “Yes... and both of you are far more like your grandfather Leonidas than even you realize. I suspect more like Resumar as well. At least that is what Deia tells me.” She told him.

Andro took a deep breath. “I will do what I must.” He said.

Helen nodded. “Yes you will.” She said. “Now walk me back to the villa and tell me what it is your brother Resumar is going to do. Shiria is very important to us now and she must be protected at all costs.”

Andro nodded as they began walking again. “And she will be.” He said as Helen took his arm and they headed back towards the villa.

Sadi was watching from the patio doors and she smiled when she felt Andro's emotions become calmer. Helen had started to fix his wildly doubtful thoughts and tonight Sadi and the rest of them would finish what she started. She turned when she smelled Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and Carisia enter the main room and approach her.

If someone told her a year ago where she would be right now, Sadi Leonidas would have laughed at him or her without a doubt. Finding Andro again had brought everything into utter clarity. That she could love him so powerfully and with such absolute devotion was something she had accepted and embraced the moment his fangs sank into her flesh and hers into his and they became anomes. That their lives would now include four other such beautiful women did not make her bat an eye in the least. This was their destiny, their fate, and Sadi had surrendered herself to destiny the moment she draped that pendant Elynth had given her around her neck twenty-five years ago. Andro was her anome, but these three women here and Caliria so far away, they were part of who Sadi was. Who Andro was. The love that they shared now and would well into the future was unquestioning in every way, for Andro as well as each other.

Sadi took the mug of coffee Ne'Veha offered as they came up to pressed close to her. Lu'ria looked over past Sadi's shoulder and saw Andro and the Feravomir walking towards the villa still deep in conversation.

"His spirits have lifted." Lu'ria said softly turning back to Sadi.

Sadi nodded as she sipped the coffee. "Some things even our attentions will not make go away." She told them.

"Our attentions?" Carisia said. "Last night he gave us the attention. Not the other way around. I don't think my legs stopped quivering until mid morning."

"Nor mine." Ne'Veha said with a smile before turning to Sadi. "Maybe now you should tell us what all that was about with this Ulana woman this morning KertaGai."

Sadi nodded and glanced back over her shoulder one last time at Andro before taking Ne'Veha's hand in hers and leading them into the villa. "Ulana was the one who Andro was seeing before we discovered each other again on Apo Prime. He had been seeing her on and off for several months before he ended it the morning we saw one another again. As you all know we have not been apart since."

"Was she a Senator then as well?" Carisia asked.

Sadi shook her head. "No. She only became a Senator when she was elected to fill her father's role. He was killed in the Senate Office Building when it was destroyed. Ulana won the emergency election. So easy to do when no ones runs against you."

"So why is she here now?" Lu'ria asked.

"The obvious political portions aside... Ulana is an Alpha female." Sadi told them as they ended up in the main room and settled to the couch. "Just like all of us... but she is also a pureblood like me. Her upbringing was... unique."

"You mean she is a spoiled upaee who had everything handed to her on a silver platter." Ne'Veha spoke.

Sadi smiled and nodded her head. "Essentially yes." She answered. "She considers herself better than me."

"But what she did..." Lu'ria asked. "I thought that was... I thought it was an insult to do that to a male who is already mated."

Sadi nodded. "And it is. Ulana however... she comes from a certain class of pureblood who believe they are better than everyone else. Most of them claim some of the highest Purity Concentration Coefficients within the Union. Or so they say."

"This is not true?" Carisia asked.

"Oh... it's true in some cases." Sadi said. "It's easy enough to test as well. This group however, they use their PCC number and their supposed ancestral lineage back to the original Lycavorian bloodlines as a way to show their pre-eminence. It's utterly ridiculous considering any Lycavorian can tie their family background to Lycavore in some fashion at least." Sadi sipped the coffee once more before handing the mug back to Ne'Veha. "They try and use this as the reason why they are better than everyone. Ulana thinks she is a stronger Alpha female than me when it comes to our PCC, and therefore she believes she should be with Andro and not me."

"Is she?" Lu'ria asked.

Sadi shrugged. "I don't know. I had the PCC test done when I was a small child, but I never knew the results. I don't really care either." She said. "The results are never conclusive and can vary at different times in a Lycavorian's life. Ulana targeted just me because she knows you and our Drow mistress are recently turned and your PCC will not stop changing until the transformation is fully complete within you. She doesn't consider Carisia a threat because she is a pureblood vampire. She only considers me the threat and therefore she is targeting me. She knew I would be the only one who could feel her aura as she shamelessly pulsed Andro."

"Why now?" Ne'Veha asked. She was more analytical being a female elf from Elear. "Did Saradasaar nubous her so good that she finally realizes what she is missing?"

Sadi laughed with the others and looked at her. "Well... you must admit SirsanGai... he definitely knows how to curl our toes and make us scream. It is so very rare to discover a man so gifted in length and girth and who knows exactly how to use it." She said.

"How true." Carisia spoke.

Lu'ria shrugged her slim shoulders. "I have known only Andro so I can not make that determination." She said with a smile.

"I think it is probably some sort of a political move." Sadi said finally. "Especially now considering they think Andro will become King."

"She thinks to insinuate herself into a position of some power and recognition?" Lu'ria said nodding. "She is in for a surprise I imagine."

Sadi nodded with a chuckle. "Yes she is. She can think about it all she likes." She said. "Andro loathes her now after what she did... more than he ever has."

"He felt her doing this?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi nodded. "Why do you think he acted as he did?" Sadi answered remembering their kiss and how her blood burned in her veins at that moment. He could cause any of them to melt with just a simple kiss. "Our Saradasaar will always defend us... against all enemies, no matter what it takes."

Carisia grinned. "The look on her face when Andro was kissing you was priceless." She said.

"I will deal with Ulana and her games." Sadi spoke confidently. "I'm the only one who can face her evenly in that regard. I fully expect that she will pull some silly stunt in order to try and make others see that she should be with Andro while making me look bad. She will learn very quickly that her pathetic attempts to entice him have only succeeded in pissing me off. When she makes the mistake of going public with her fool game then I will respond."

"What will you do?" Ne'Veha asked eagerly. "Can we watch?"

Sadi looked at her and laughed at her eagerness. "Oh SirsanGai, all of you are going to help me show that fat cow that she can not compete against any of us. Oh yes... Ulana will learn very quickly that she is in way over her head. She will learn this very quickly." She said. "How much embarrassment she wants to face before she actually realizes it is going to be up to her?"

EARTH

SPARTA

WESTERN FACE OF TAYGETE MOUNTAIN RANGE

HOME OF SENATOR ICHO

Icho looked up from what he was reading when his senior aide walked into his office and then turned to lock and secure the door. Icho immediately turned and rose to his feet, moving to the large bay type window that overlooked the western part of Sparta far below his mountain villa. The view was magnificent and he thoroughly enjoyed the nights when he would stand on his balcony and overlook the city he would have a hand in ruling one day. Now however he touched the control pad on the side of the bay window and the clear glass suddenly became very opaque in color, effectively hiding whoever was in his office.

He turned back to see his aide move to the large wet bar and pour two glasses of Spartan wine before turning to him and moving up to the desk where he held out one glass to Icho.

"They are beginning to arrive." The aide spoke.

Icho nodded as he sipped the sixty year old wine and moved back to his desk and settled into the chair. "What have you found Aleus?" He asked finally lifting his eyes to look at the man who had been with him for nearly five hundred years now.

Aleus leaned forward and held out the data pad. "I pressed a little harder on a contact of mine within King Yelu Hospital after something you said Ulana spoke of. Her PCC number is indeed one hundred and ninety-six give or take five points with the usual variance thrown in."

Icho looked up. "So? Given their history I'm not surprised. Maraud was from the original bloodlines on Lycavore. He turned traitor to our people and became a mercenary. You know well the history of Maraud and the King's punishment of him. It was the reason I chose Ulana's father once I discovered his relation to him. He was so concerned that the knowledge would get out and ruin his legacy it was easy enough to turn him. What does her PCC have to do with anything?"

"We know that the Prince's PCC is two hundred and seventy-three with the five point variance." Aleus spoke. "Senator... Sadi Leonidas's PCC is two hundred and forty-nine give or take the variance of five."

Icho's eyes grew a little wider. "Two hundred forty-nine?" He stammered. "Aleus... that would mean...?"

Aleus nodded his head. "That she descends from one of the original five ruling bloodlines for only those in the original five ruling bloodlines had PCCs over two hundred and twenty-five. That was determined by Queen Anja and Eurin the Hadarian Divine One nearly twenty-five years ago after thousands of tests and their facts are indisputable." Aleus sipped his wine. "What you said the Feravomir told Ulana is very correct. Ulana is about to enter into a world she does not belong in if she intends to try and challenge this Sadi for the Prince. She will end up embarrassing herself to the extreme."

"Your information is certain?" Ichō asked.

Aleus nodded. "The data is all there on that pad." He answered. "Ulana thinks this Sadi is somehow beneath her. While she may come from a family that has chosen the lifestyle that they have, their bloodline is essentially royalty. Ulana does not have a chance at luring the Prince to her, even if he was willing, which I understand from what you have told me he is not. Sadi Leonidas's blood is far too powerful, and combine that with the fact they are Anomes..." Aleus shook his head. "Ulana only end up embarrassing herself at best, getting her ass handed to her at worst."

Icho looked at him. "So you believe in the ancient myth of Anomes? I never knew that Aleus." He asked.

Aleus nodded. "To a large extent yes. It has never come up in any of our conversations so it is not something I volunteered. I may believe in it... but I support what we are doing and have been doing Senator."

Icho sat back. "No worries my friend... you have proven your loyalty to me far more times than I care to recall." He paused for a moment. "I've never really delved into that myth Aleus. Legends and myths never really interested me. Tell me about it."

"The mystical side of it or the scientific side of it?" Aleus asked.

"Both."

"The mystical side is easy enough. It is believed that when a male claims a female under the Centennial of the Moon and they share blood at the peak of their pleasure, a powerful bond within Mindvoice is formed within their minds. It allows them to do things others cannot. They can then pass this down through their children." Aleus told him. "The scientific side is a little more detailed but the data is better explained. The sharing of blood between Lycavorians with PCCs as high as the five original bloodlines does in fact make a bond. At the molecular level. According to the Hadarian scientists who conducted the tests on King Leonidas and Queen Aricia after he reclaimed his father's throne, when their blood merged it actually became purer in many respects. It is very possible that the King and Queen Aricia's PCCs may have gone even higher than what they were when they were tested. As we all know, the purer the blood the more powerful a Mindvoicer you will be. Gorgo's PCC was two hundred and eighty-three when she was tested. She and the King refused to allow a test on the remains of King Leonidas the First, so the scientists had to extrapolate his PCC. They estimate it was within two points of three hundred which is the highest our instruments can measure, considering that the Prince's father's PCC was two hundred and ninety-three when tested for this research. And this test was done within a year of them sharing blood if the dates are correct, so it is very possible that their PCCs could be much higher."

"That would put Androcles's father over three hundred." Ichō said. "I thought you said our instruments couldn't calculate over three hundred."

Aleus nodded. “They can’t. Now you see why Ulana will get her mida handed to her? It’s very possible that Androcles’s PCC is even higher than when it was tested shortly after he was born. Given that possibility and considering it has been just about a year since they became anomes, it’s very likely Sadi’s PCC is much higher as well. We only test once and that is within a year of a child’s birth. If they are of the five original bloodlines their PCC will be over two hundred and twenty-five when they are first tested. Ulana’s was not. We’re setting her up to take a very big fall Senator.”

Icho nodded. “Better her than me.” He said coldly. “There is no way to boast her PCC so as to have a chance?”

Aleus shook his head. “Not to my knowledge and the Hadarian research didn’t even go in that direction.”

Icho nodded as he placed the pad on his desk. “Then we will need to work around her.” He said thoughtfully. “If Ulana keeps the attention on her... it is better for us. Especially if they discover where her bloodline leads. I have no connections to Maraud, and nothing her father did for me can be tied back to me. I was very careful to insure that Laustinos and Ulana’s father were the ones out in front on this. My contacts to them have already been eliminated.”

“Ulana’s father was no fool and he covered his tracks very well, but the Krypteria will eventually discover the part he played in helping Laustinos. The few rumors my contacts have heard coming out of the Krypteria speak of someone working with Laustinos, so they already suspect he had an accomplice.” Aleus said. “The vampire witch that the Prince put in command of the Krypteria until Armetus recovers was trained by Armetus himself. And she is just as ruthless as him if the reports are accurate.”

Icho nodded. “And then they will have discovered their traitors and we will be safely unknown.” He stated smugly. “And then I will be in a position to help Pusintin even more in bringing down the Union.”

Aleus looked at him. “How so?”

Icho smiled. “Ulana’s father had a seat on the Defense Committee Aleus.” He spoke. “I helped him to obtain it. It was granted to him by Deia as a gift in a way. To keep him better under her thumb. Or so she thought.”

“Then he would have had intimate knowledge of military workings and such.” Aleus spoke.

Icho shook his head. “He was on the Committee... but the King was smarter than that. Anything truly important he kept to those he trusted implicitly. Senator Dilios and Arete among them. When Ulana falls and everything is brought out into the open then I will be in a position to gracefully offer my knowledge and service on the Committee.”

“So we are going to let Ulana be the fool and then you will fill the spot she now holds?” Aleus said.

Icho smiled. “Yes... that is exactly what we will do. And when I move up... you will move into my position, with my glowing recommendation of course, and increase our power even more.”

“Does Pusintin know why we are helping him?” Aleus asked.

Icho shook his head. “No. Only you and I have that knowledge.” He answered.

“And what about Senator Silele?” Aleus asked.

“Fuck her! I never liked the bitch that peace loving upae to begin with. She can go down with Ulana.”
Icho snapped with a smile.

ULU HORNET

ULU BISMARCK

THE WILDS

2nd and 3rd ARIZONA ASSAULT WINGS DETACHED

TDY COMMANDERS PRINCE ARRARN LEONIDAS; PRINCESS NARICE LEONIDAS; GENERAL CHA'TALLA

UNION LIAISON COMMANDER JANON

Janon turned his head when the doors to the bridge opened and he saw Prince Arrarn and Princess Narice enter with Princess Toria, General Cha'talla and Cha'talla's sons Lynom and Fash'ka. Narice and Toria walked on either side of Arrarn, clinging tightly to his hands while Cha'talla was talking softly to Lynom and Fash'ka. Janon had to shake his head at the irony of everything that had happened in the past year. Miranda putting him in command of this ship as opposed to the captain who had been slated for her. He would get a later ship from the Block II Group which the man seemed genuinely happy about. Discovering the Immortals on Kranek and what they had built. The history behind the way they looked and then the magical serum that had returned them to how their people had looked before that monster Veldruk had twisted their race. Cha'talla was bonded to a dragon, one of his sons was married to Normya Leonidas and the other had a half elf wife who he had rescued and from what he had seen was every bit as tough as her Akruvian Immortal husband. It was all quite overwhelming and yet everyone was acting as if it was the most natural thing in the universe. He grinned to himself as he recalled a Folcani diplomat saying that Lycavorians were the most adaptable species he had ever seen. That nothing seemed to faze them. If only that ambassador knew how right he was.

Janon rose as they approached his command chair. He held out the data pad to Narice; for she was truly the one in command here. This was her mission and Prince Andro and Miranda had made it very clear that her orders came as if they were from him and Manda. He was happy to see that she let him do everything she was unfamiliar with and her stock had risen quite a bit in the last three days since she had come aboard.

“Admiral Pontal sent the signal.” Janon told her. “He has returned to his command ship and his fleet and he is issuing his orders now.”

Narice looked at the pad and nodded her head. “Are we able to verify this Commander?” She asked.

Janon motioned them over to a holo star chart and he typed on the wide control panel once next to it. “We were able to tap into the two sensor relays that you suggested.” He said. “Security wasn't as tight as I would have thought.”

“They are secondary sensor relays.” Narice explained. “The High Coven does not put as much effort into securing secondary sensor platforms within High Coven space unless they consider it necessary.”

Janon nodded. “Apparently not.” He said. “He must have begun issuing orders as soon as he returned to his ship. It appears most of his fleet was in the exact location he told us. One of the three transmissions he sent was to this BLOOD REVERENCE here.” Janon touched the star chart. “Six minutes later all of their DARK BROOD Frigates and BLOODRUNNER Heavy Frigates engaged their Shrouds.”

Cha'talla nodded. “Standard practice in preparing for combat operations.” He spoke. “They will take up picket locations to cover for the main fleet.”

Janon nodded. “That’s what I figured. The other two transmissions were both sent to BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnoughts in two of the adjoining systems.”

“More of his combined fleet.” Narice said softly. “Or other officers he says follow him.”

Janon nodded. “The remaining ships within this sector formed into three distinct action groups.” He stated as his finger twirled around three different spots on the star chart. “The HORNET's sensors are good... but not that good. Without an active scan we can't be sure but using the older systems on this array we estimate at least forty-three BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts, an equal number of REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts and between three and four hundred ORIC-Class Heavy Cruisers and BLOODLETTER-Class medium Cruisers. We weren't able to get an accurate number of the frigates but we'll assume a similar number.” Janon looked at her. “Quite the force this Admiral Pontal commands.” He said.

Narice nodded. “He is one of the oldest and most experienced officers in the fleet.” She said. “When he made a suggestion... it was usually heeded.”

“And he said he has six others who feel and think as he does?” Arrarn said.

“Many of the High Coven officers tended to associate with those of like mind.” Narice explained. “It was always like that and it became even more prevalent when Robert Moran became Supreme Commander.”

“Class warfare.” Cha'talla said. “Pit the officers against one another and they will never be strong enough to usurp you.”

Narice nodded. “Exactly.”

Toria stepped forward now. “I recognized two of the other six names he mentioned.” She spoke. “They were two officers who the Venorik Elghinn investigated but never found anything solid to follow up on.”

“Why were they investigated?” Narice asked.

“Speaking out against your mother and the conduct of the war.” Toria answered her calmly. “Nothing was proven and no witnesses to their comments were ever found.”

Arrarn looked at her. “Coincidence?” He asked.

Toria shrugged. "If General Esavorna was as active as I suspect, no doubt he covered their tracks for them. He was co-commander of the Venorik Elghinn at the time."

"The more time that passes the more I believe we can trust him." Cha'talla spoke.

Narice nodded. "I agree. Having a turned female as his wife and the one who had his children is a huge decision." She said. "And I detected no signs that she was being forced to do or say anything against her will."

This time it was Cha'talla who nodded. "Nor I. Toria?" He asked her knowing her skills from the Venorik Elghinn would have given her the perception needed to pick this up.

Toria shook her head as well. "No. Pontal didn't flinch when she spoke openly. And did you notice how she kept clinging to his arm and whenever he looked at her his face softened?" She shook her head again. "Their relationship was true and honest."

"Why didn't you tell him what we are planning Princess?" Janon asked.

Narice met his gaze. "Let's just say I don't trust him completely as yet." She answered. "There is no reason for him to know all our plans. When we act, if his forces act with us then we will know where his loyalties lie. If not... we will still accomplish our mission and be ready to react if he moves against us."

Janon grinned at her now. "You are beginning to think more and more like a Leonidas everyday Princess." He said.

Narice looked at Arrarn. "It must be the company I'm keeping." She said with a smile.

Arrarn shrugged. "What can I say...? I'm addicting."

Narice smiled and looked at Janon. "I believe it's time Commander." She said.

"You do realize that no Union ship has ever gone where we are about to go." Janon said. "Let alone with an entire Task Force."

"There's a first time for everything." Narice said.

Janon chuckled. "Indeed there is." He spoke. "Indeed there is." He turned slightly to face across the bridge. "COM officer... burst the Task Force to prepare for sustained QRR operation! All ships to verify and confirm their coordinates and prepare to jump! We will be at Combat Stations the moment the jump is initiated!"

"Tactical Officer... two squadrons on Rapid Deployment Force 1! In the tubes ready for launch! Swap squadrons every hour until we secure from QRR operation!" Janon continued to issue orders. "Weapons! All missile tubes and batteries to priority standby! Give me M22A *SKIPPER*s in all even missile tubes! Standard Concussive Warheads in odd tubes! And spool up the PDTs as well!"

The COM officer turned. "Commander... Task Force signals ready sir!"

Janon turned back to Narice. "Princess?"

Narice nodded. "Let's do it."

Janon nodded. "Helm! Begin QRR targeted jumps! Take us to Uzu Ozeib 7!"

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN SEVENTY-EIGHT HOURS UNTIL H-HOUR

It had been unexpected for everyone, but as the Leonidas family stood and watched as father and oldest son embraced tightly, it came at the perfect time. Isabella and Anja had long suspected that Martin would not be able to stay away for very long once Dorian had been born, they knew their husband and mate too well, and they had not been disappointed. Yuriko had pushed OMEN THREE right to the edge in getting them back here to Earth in only eleven hours. As they had greeted their fellow Queens and lovers with embraces and passionate kisses, Martin was rolling on the floor of the lounge buried under the bodies of his smaller children including Dorian. The screams of happiness and joy had brought tears to their eyes as they watched. He clung tightest to Dorian and Bryon and all of them knew why as they welcomed Yuriko and Filrian into their fold once again. Their adopted daughter had been out from under their wing for too long on her own and no more would she lack the comfort and warmth of those she called family.

Word went out quickly via Mindvoice, even at the early hour, and within a few moments all of the Leonidas children were making their way to Dragon Mountain under the cover of darkness. The reunion was just what they needed as a family and amidst all of the tears and words, the love they all felt for one another swept throughout mountain and affected even the hundreds of dragons present. It wasn't until father and oldest son were face to face that the laughter and happiness stopped for a moment. Then Martin was crushing Androcles to him, and small tears filled both their eyes as Andro didn't hesitate and returned the rib cracking hug. With the final tension broken, the Leonidas family was almost entirely back together, and it was only that single fact that tempered their reunion.

It was two hours before their mothers shooed the smaller children back to bed within the comforting walls of Dragon Mountain, with a promise from their father that he would see them in the morning before he left once more to retrieve their mother For'mya and their new brother and sister. It was two hours more before Eliani began the procession of the older children out of Dragon Mountain, Aricia and the Queens drawing Sadi and Andro's wives and mates into another lounge leaving just father and son, father and daughter and Bonded sisters present in the room.

Martin handed his oldest son a large mug of steaming coffee and then sat down next to Helen and across from him. "This job really sucks doesn't it?" He said as he sipped his own mug.

Andro looked at him. "I am beginning to see why you pounded into my head those things you did when I was younger." He answered him quickly. "As soon as you retrieve mother, you are more than welcome to it back father."

Helen grinned. "And believe me, he means it." She said looking at Martin.

Martin chuckled. "No doubt. Who is to say I just won't take your mothers and go?" He said.

"Martin you have been saying that for years." Helen said. "No one believes you now."

Martin snorted. "You wait... one of these days I will. I'm going to slip out during the night and leave it in your hands. I'm going to retire and enjoy the good life with six beautiful women."

"Give it another ten thousand years father." Andro said with a smirk. "Maybe by then I will have your temperament in dealing with all this."

Martin smiled and took a deep breath. "You want to tell me where your brother Arrarn is?" Martin asked him as he sat back on the couch.

Andro looked at him. "Do you trust me father?" He asked.

"I think you know the answer to that son." Martin said.

"Then trust me now and just know it is not something I did on a whim." Androcles answered him.

"I wouldn't approve of it would I?" Martin asked.

"Probably not... no." Andro told him honestly.

"Well if Narice and Cha'talla are involved I have a pretty good idea of what it is." Martin said. "And you're right... I don't approve."

Andro met his father's dark eyes. "Whether you approve or not is irrelevant at this time father because you are still dead. I am in charge for the moment."

Martin looked at Helen. "Was I this cocky when I first became King?" He asked.

Helen shook her head. "Worse." She said.

Martin sat forward. "Alright Andro... I won't pry anymore. No matter what it entails you would not have risked your brother without him having a surefire way out with Narice and Cha'talla. You realize this could all backfire on you?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"And it could cost us quite a bit?" Martin said.

"Not as much as you might think... but yes." Andro said.

"And you think it is still worth the risk?" Martin asked.

Andro nodded again. "Yes."

Martin sat back. "Ok... it's your ball... your game and your rules." He stated. "Now tell me about this Kavalian bastard that is supposedly helping your mother."

Andro sipped his coffee and shook his head. "They were not able to tell me much." He said. "As I told you earlier... he was nice to her. He hid their existence from others. They said he and mother spoke for hours about things they did not understand."

Why would he do this Andro? Torma asked from beside Elynth. She was leaning up against her father's thick muscular midsection with affection. He had not stopped stroking her wings or the back of her neck as a father would and it had been many months and many terrible words since she had last felt his love for her so close.

Andro looked at him. "I asked Athani when I spoke to Resumar as we returned to Earth. She said it is because the Kavalians do not view a pregnancy such as mother's as healthy or normal. A male and female child. When this is discovered, the female child is usually killed while still within the womb so that the male child gets all of the nutrients and such from the mother and does not have to share."

It only affirms their views on females in general. Elynth spoke.

"Carians... the more we learn of them the more brutal they become." Helen spoke softly.

We need only look back to their origins. Arzoal spoke softly.

Martin turned his head quickly and pointed at her. "Don't you go and start blaming yourself again." He snapped. "You are not responsible for what Artre cooked up in his sick mind."

Arzoal laughed softly within Mindvoice. I have finally let go of that part of my life Martin. She spoke. Thanks to your son and Elynth. No... I am only using it as a comparison. This is part of their genes... who they are.

Martin looked at her and smiled. "I understand that congratulations are in order as well." He said. "I always wondered how long it was going to take Daurgo to finally make his feelings known."

Arzoal's flame colored eyes grew a little wider. Why is it that everyone knew of Daurgo and his feelings for me... except me?

Martin smiled again. "Because the only thing that mattered to you all of these years is keeping your kind safe and insuring their continued future." He said. "So... did he claim you?"

"Martin Leonidas that is so not your business!" Helen exclaimed.

I would like to know as well. Torma interjected.

Father! Elynth shouted.

We will need to tell our kind sooner or later. Torma spoke. The joy that will sweep through our kind will be felt even on Elear.

Arzoal shook her massive head and if a dragon could smile, the thin split of her muzzle that exposed her razor like teeth would have been it. Yes. She answered softly. Yes he did. And to say it was glorious would be the understatement of the century. At least to me.

"Good." Martin said. "Good." He turned back to Andro. "Now... about this Kavalian that is supposedly helping your mother?"

Andro nodded. "The only thing they were sure about was his name." He said. "Muton."

Arzoal's massive head snapped around to gaze at Androcles intently. It was a movement that did not go unnoticed. Muton? She questioned.

Helen leaned forward. "Does this name mean something to you sister?" She asked.

Andro are you sure that is what they said? Arzoal asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes. They were positive."

Arzoal turned her head away and blinked several times in quick succession. That is... it is very strange.

"Why?" Martin spoke.

Arzoal blinked one last time and looked at him. Androcles has shown you what we talked of a few weeks ago? She asked him.

Martin nodded. "Yes. Some of it I had already figured out." He told her. "The details you told him only filled in what I had put together overall. At least in some fashion. The Kavalians were a surprise, but you being a Pralor was not."

The Pralor who found me after I transferred by conscious mind to an egg... Arzoal spoke. Her father was a member of our crew. The Senior Science Engineer. His name... his name was Muton.

So it's a Pralor name grandmother? Elynth asked.

Arzoal nodded. And not a common one. One of the first things we learned of as a child in our schools was about our first generation leaders. One of the three Pralors who founded the Science Agency was named Muton. Every few thousand generations that passed within his own descendants and they would name another after him. As I said... it was not a common name.

Martin looked at her. "Arzoal... just for reflection purposes here... how long had the Pralors been around before all the bad stuff went down."

Our recorded history went back over three million years. Some scholars suspected our actual history went back as far as ten million years. She answered.

Martin nodded. "Ten million years." He said. "Wow... ok... that's a lot of years."

Andro looked at his father. "Now you know why we can't destroy it. Why we have to keep it. It has too much history father. The technological aspects aside... it has too much history to simply let it go. And part of it is our history for we carry Pralor blood within us." He said.

He looked at Andro. "I already came to the conclusion my first reaction was kneejerk. I just wanted to make sure Aikiro didn't get any of it." Martin said.

"Well... we failed in some regard with that." Andro spoke.

Martin shook his head. "What you and Resumar are doing is the right way to go. Yes... they got some data cores... but they wanted one of the avatars and they didn't succeed in that or getting the history cores as you say. No... you did the right thing Andro." He turned to look at Arzoal. "My biggest question right now is why would a Kavalian have a Pralor name? The inhibitor would affect her Mindvoice abilities but not her wolf senses. Kavalians can't fully hide when their scent changes and they lie. Kinsoaurgai is more than proficient enough to detect that."

Arzoal shook her head. I do not know. If Shiria has not mentioned it then it can only be a coincidence. Perhaps the children got it wrong.

"They were pretty adamant Elder Mother." Andro said. "Maybe they just mispronounced it?"

"It's possible." Helen said. "So soon after being granted awareness they may have either mispronounced or taken it out of context."

Martin looked at Andro. "Could you touch them again with a Mark II Andro?"

Andro shrugged. "With Elynth, Sadi in the connection with me probably... yes. It would be far easier with you and mother of course. The four of us could focus more and direct our search."

Martin shook his head. "If both of us are in the same connection anyone even remotely skilled in Mindvoice could detect us. Add if your mother and Sadi and it's a given."

Your father is correct Androcles. Arzoal spoke. It is a risk just with you and Sadi within the same connection because she now burns almost as brightly as you within Mindvoice. With your shielding skills it tempers it a great deal... but your father and you... your mother and Sadi... even shielded, it would be like turning on a million lights in a dark room.

Andro looked at his father. "Then the only question is where to direct our search. We don't know where they have taken her. She has not returned to Cabelir as I thought. Res burst that information to me late yesterday. Pusintin has returned but without mother." Andro rose to his feet and sipped his coffee. No one spoke as they watched him pace back and forth for a short time. All of them had seen him like this before and they knew his mind was running scenarios and options like a computer. He turned back to his father. "Nefoa." He said finally. "Nefoa?" Martin asked.

Andro nodded. "Grandfather Riall mentioned this before and I did not think anything of it. Nefoa is their most forward base and their most heavily fortified. It is where they have launched several invasions into High Coven space from."

Martin nodded. "So?"

"If you knew there was an active resistance within the Union father and you wanted to hold a very high level prisoner that the resistance could possibly try and rescue, would you put that prisoner on Earth? On Apo Prime?"

"No!" Martin answered instantly. "Too high profile. Too risky. I'd stick them in the most secure location as far out of the way as possible."

Andro nodded. "Yes... a forward base that has not only ships and ground troops but is also protected by numerous ODTs?"

Martin sat back in his chair. "The officer in charge of monitoring the equipment we tapped into at the Kavalian OP said there was increased traffic between Nefoa and Cabelir but he couldn't determine about what."

Andro nodded once more. "Grandfather was right." He said softly. "I'd bet good credits that is where they have taken her."

Martin thought for a long moment. "Pusintin wouldn't have direct control over her though." He said after a minute shaking his head. "He wouldn't let her out of his sight."

“You are thinking like a Spartan father.” Andro told him. “You know how Kavalians treat their females. They are like second class... third class citizens! No Kavalian male is afraid of a female. Any female.”

Martin met his eyes. “Your mother is not just any female Andro.” He said softly. “She is certainly capable of taking out a Kavalian or two. Or three. I’ve seen her pissed remember, it ain’t a pretty sight.”

“She also is very pregnant Martin.” Helen spoke. “And with the Mindvoice inhibitor... she will not be able to draw on her reserves or her connection to you, Aricia or any of her fellow Queens.” Helen leaned forward now. “Andro is right. They don’t fear her. To them she is just another elf female. Pusintin has been among them for so long now he thinks like they do. He believes you are dead and he believes For'mya will do nothing because she craves his aura and his touch upon her, whether willingly or not.”

Martin looked at her with dark eyes. “Helen...” He growled at her.

Helen waved her hand at him. “Oh do not get your dander up Martin Leonidas. No one believes what they say but you can not deny the blood within her. Or what it would do if you were truly dead. Her mind would scream out no while her blood would say yes. That is a curse and a blessing to our females and not something you can just wish away. You know this.” She spoke to him. “Besides... we are conjecturing here. Andro is right... this is how your brother will think.”

Andro nodded. “So he would have no problem sending her somewhere until the children are born. Especially someplace as heavily fortified as Nefoa.”

“I can’t hit Nefoa with just the thirty people I my team.” Martin said getting to his feet. “And any large scale attack and they will order her killed instantly. I won’t risk that! I won’t! She is my mate and wife and the children she carries are now my children! I won’t risk them! I won’t! Not for anything!”

Helen breathed a large sigh of relief and her face softened somewhat causing both of them to look at her. Andro’s eyebrow lifted slightly. “Feravomir?” He asked.

“You don’t know how wonderful it makes me feel to hear you say that Martin.” She said finally getting to her feet and looking at him. “A part of me feared that perhaps you might... that you might view them differently because of how they came to be.”

Martin met her eyes not taking offense at what she said. “Never.” He said softly. “She is... For'mya is part of me, just as Aricia, Anja, Dysea, Bella and now Cirith are. Each of them hold a part of me that makes me who I am. Anything that comes from within them is part of me. I will never forsake that! Never!”

“The father of their hearts.” Andro said softly moving closer to his father. “That is what they said you know. They called you the father of their hearts. I could see it in their thoughts.”

Martin looked at him now his face becoming harder. “Do it son. Find them Andro. I’ll figure something out if they are there. Have Carisia, Ne’Veha and Lu’ria join you as well. They are part of your strength now and the added power, even as unfocused as it is right now will be useful.” He ordered. “Arzoal?”

I will send for a booster immediately and have it brought to the meditation chamber on deck five. She spoke instantly. You and the others will need to remain outside the chamber Martin. Andro and Sadi will be able to direct their shielding, but if you...

Martin nodded. “I know.”

Andro put his hand on his father’s shoulder. “We’ll succeed father.” He said. “We’ll find out for sure. And then you can go and retrieve our mother.”

“Damn straight I will.” Martin growled.

NEFOA MUTON’S QUARTERS

“You should have told me Miseo! Your mother should have told me! The Monitors should have told me!” Muton snapped angrily staring at the monitor.

The handsome face of the young Kavalian stared back at him from the monitor. The dark hair was cut very short, the blue eyes of his mother staring back at him. Gone was the black fur that had covered his son’s body the last time he had seen him, in its place smooth tanned skin like his mother.

“We tried to reach you via the usual sources but you did not respond.” Miseo spoke calmly.

“Things have been... they have been busy.” Muton answered.

“So busy that you can not make contact with us father? With mother at least? We have been worried. And then you call for all active Monitors to form on Nefoa with no reason or consulting with the Monitor Officers.” Miseo asked softly. “I volunteered to do this in case it was needed in the future. I still have my tail father. I’ve become quite good at hiding it if need be. This allows us to move about more freely among the cloned soldiers and gather information. I have already been on three different missions and all of them were successful. It was a good decision. Now tell me... what is going on that you would call all the active Monitors father? To Nefoa of all places.”

“I will tell you... but first... is the ship finished?” Muton asked.

Miseo nodded. “Kaleen and Olin finished the navigation array two months ago. The propulsion systems have been tested as much as we are able without revealing where we are to the KFI. Things are becoming very tense within KFI space. Reports are sketchy but war with the Lycavorian Union is looming in the future from everything we have heard. The Prefect and Marshall Pusintin have assassinated the Lycavorian King and taken the elven Queen prisoner. Pusintin raped and impregnated her and now they are using the children she carries as a means to take power within the Union.”

Muton nodded slowly. “Yes... that is true Miseo. How have you discovered that much? This information is not common knowledge.”

“The Fifth Monitor was able to make contact in the last year with a biogenically altered female within the Command Compound. He suspected she may have been connected to the Pralor Shiria in some way.” Miseo answered. “He has been posing as a high ranking officer within the Sixth Infantry Division as you know. The cloned troops who guard the compound. The senior officers are allowed access to the compound and use of these females. He believes she is privy to intelligence she should not have. Where she is getting the information we don’t know, but he sees her on a regular basis and this is the information that he is discovering when he sees her. How... I don’t know.”

“Well it’s true.” Muton spoke plainly. “I am with For’mya here on Nefoa. I have been caring for her and her children. That is why I have called the Monitors. We are going to take her and her children from the Kavalians and escape. You will need to inform the remaining Monitor Elders and start moving our people onto the ship today.”

“Today?” Miseo gasped. “Why?”

“Listen to me Miseo! Everything we have ever believed is true. Everything! Arzoal lives! She lives my son! For’mya herself is Bonded to one of her grandchildren!” Muton explained. “What we have always thought about Shiria is true! The Mindvoice ship exists and is now in the hands of Resumar Leonidas and his wife and mate Athani!”

“The Prefect’s youngest!” Miseo exclaimed.

Muton nodded. “The one who defected yes.” He answered. “Listen to me Miseo. The family... the entire Leonidas family are descended from Pralors. Just as we are! But they have not been limited in their abilities as we have. If what For’mya tells me is true, Martin Leonidas is not dead!”

Miseo’s eyes grew even wider. “Not dead?” He stammered. “Then... that would mean he...”

Muton nodded. “Yes. He will be coming for his wife and mate and he will utterly destroy everything in his path until he gets her back. A war with the Lycavorian Union would put our people at great risk while they are within Kavalian space. You know how Lycavorians value their families and especially their females. We must use the ship we have built and leave. Now. Before we are caught up in a war that could very well expose all of us.”

“But where will we go father?” Miseo asked. “Kaleen and Olin had hoped to discover the Mindvoice ship and find out where our people are. They...”

Muton shook his head. “The Mindvoice ship would not have had that information. If what For’mya tells me is accurate... information she learned from before she was taken by Pusintin... the ship is only ten thousand years old. It would not have what we want.”

“Then we... all we have done is for nothing.” Miseo said.

Muton shook his head. “No! Arzoal lives Miseo. The Elder Mother lives!”

“So?” Miseo stated. “She is a dragon now; she has been for almost forty thousand years father. How...” Miseo stopped talking and his blue eyes grew wider. “By the gods!”

Muton nodded feeling pride swell within him. All of his sons were supremely intelligent but Miseo was not only intelligent... he was unusually perceptive. "Yes Miseo. She may be a dragon but she was a Pralor before and she would know where the ship is that brought them from Elear. That ship would have the coordinates we need. That ship would have all we need."

"But... but how do we get that knowledge?" Miseo asked.

"Leave that to me my son." He said. "Just get our people onto the ship and prepare to launch and meet us wherever I tell you."

"Father... we won't be able to mask the output of the engines." Miseo spoke.

"We won't need to. Just be prepared to come when I call for you." Muton spoke. "And no matter what you do... ignore the maelstrom that will be taking place on Nefoa when you arrive Miseo."

"What maelstrom? What are you talking about?" Miseo asked.

"Do you truly believe Martin Leonidas will not discover she is here?" Muton asked. "After all we have studied of the Lycavorians and their culture and their people? That man... if he is as powerful as I believe... he will be like a heat seeking missile in his trek to find one of his mates. And he will sweep aside any in his way. His entire family is no different. He's alive! He is letting his oldest son... his hammer if you will... he is letting Androcles control the wave of war that is coming, while he sneaks in and recaptures what is his. I have spent many hours speaking with For'mya my son... she is wise beyond belief and patient and what she tells me I believe. The time is not far off and you need to be ready."

Miseo nodded. "I will inform the others and see to it father."

Muton nodded. "I must go and see For'mya... but tell your mother I will see her soon and I look forward to holding her in my arms once more. And tell your brothers I have many surprises for them as well. Be safe my son. I will see you in a few days."

"And you father." Miseo said in reply.

Muton waited until the image of his son vanished from the highly secure and totally illegal COM array's monitor. He quickly collapsed the small array, built with technologies that the KFI did not even know about, and soon he placed the data pad sized device into his vest. He got up and adjusted his desk before turning and moving to his door. He glanced back as the door opened and then turned to see the stern looking Kavalian officer take four more strides and stop in front of him.

"Senior Colonel Muton!" The large Kavalian spoke. "How good to see you again!"

Muton calmed himself easily and he forced a natural smile to his face as the door to his quarters closed. "Senior Colonel Dinxi of the famed Puma Bane Defense Forces. It has been a long time has it not?"

"Thirteen years." Dinxi answered. "And you have not changed your appearance in all that time."

Muton chuckled. "Clean living my friend. You should try it." He stated.

"Yes..." Dinxi stated. "You have secured two entire wings of the medical center for your purposes and I wish to know why. I also want two of my men in the same room as that Elf bitch you brought with you at all times."

Muton crossed his arms over his chest. "For what purpose?" He asked.

"I don't trust her!" Dinxi snapped.

"She is four days from giving birth to the Marshall's son." Muton spoke. "She is no security risk to you or to your men. Marshall Pusintin has given me full authority in regards to her. I don't particularly care to be around her myself, but it is my duty."

"This base is under my command." Dinxi snapped. "I will decide what will be done and why!"

"Nefoa is under your command yes... but my authority supersedes yours Dinxi." Muton said. "Marshall Pusintin tasked me with insuring his son is born healthy and with no difficulties. Non-Kavalian females are notorious for being modest in this time. Anything that causes her stress will cause the child stress. Would you care to contact Marshall Pusintin and explain to him that his son suffered mental damage because you did not get your way?"

Dinxi blinked several times before his hostile posture dissipated and he stood there. Even as well respected as he was, he had no desire to bring the wrath of Pusintin down on him. "No." He said quickly. "No I would not."

Muton nodded. "I didn't think so." He said. "Listen Dinxi... we have not seen eye to eye on many things through the years, but on this we agree. Neither of us can stand these elf scum and we both consider their women no more than glorified whores."

Dinxi nodded. "On that we agree." He stated becoming even less hostile now.

"If Pusintin goes through with things as he has impressed to me, once I deliver his son, he will dispense with the elf bitch." Muton spoke. "Now..." Muton moved closer to him. "If you like, I can insure that she is left here with you as your toy. Pusintin was going to give her to the brothels, but take it from me... she is too good for the brothels."

Dinxi met his eyes. "Ahhh... I had heard that you..."

Muton held up his hand. "Please... I would tear her to pieces in my frustration. I have heard the Marshall speaking though and he says she is almost as good as Jalersi. Now... how many of us have not fantasized about having Jalersi's Puat in our bed? Dinxi... wouldn't it be better for you to gain something from this inconvenience?"

Dinxi met his eyes. "You can assure this to me?"

Muton met his eyes. "Give me the space and time I need to deliver this child and I will give her to you myself."

Dinxi nodded. "Then you will have it." He said. "But I wish to inspect her once the child is born."

Muton nodded. "I believe that is fair." He said. "I will give you daily reports but she must not be disturbed."

Dinxi nodded. "Done." He spoke.

Muton grasped his hand. "Then let this be the first day of a new beginning between us. We will both achieve something from this dull duty."

"When can I expect your first report?" He asked.

"I am heading to the lab now. I will do a full medical scan with intimate details and images for you and send them right off." Muton spoke. "I have most of these things already. Images from before she began to show."

Dinxi nodded. "Very well." He stated. "I will expect them within the hour?"

Muton nodded. "Done." Dinxi grunted and headed off down the corridor. Muton watched him go with a cruel smile on his face. "Enjoy them while you can Colonel Dinxi..." He whispered. "For when you come to collect For'mya I can guarantee you will get far more than you bargained for."

NEFOA MEDICAL CENTER

Androcles! Fedor and Eirene's voices exploded into the powerful connection.

Hello my brother and sister. Androcles's voice echoed in their minds within For'mya's womb. It was deeper than before but very clear.

Where are you? Eirene asked. You sound so close.

I am using a device that boosts the clarity of our connection. Andro answered. And Sadi has returned with me as well as my other wives and mates. You feel Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria within our connection as well now.

Hello little ones! Sadi's musical voice echoed.

Sadi! They both declared. We have names now! We asked mother to allow us to name ourselves and we have. Eirene and Fedor! Those are our names! Eirene affirmed happily.

Ah... Eirene for Peace. Andro said. And Fedor means Lion. Your names fit my brother and sister. Where is mother? Where are you?

The time when we will be entering your world is coming and mother grows more tired easily now. The drugs they used to... Eirene stopped almost as if she was distraught and could not continue. Fedor picked it up for his sister.

The drugs they gave to mother to make us grow faster... now that it is so close they make her tired. She just fell to sleep for she was talking with Muton for some time. He came to check on her and then he left. Fedor answered.

Is he there now? Andro asked.

No. He will return with lunch for mother. Eirene replied once more. He is a nice man Andro. He even gave mother a weapon to protect herself if he is not here.

A weapon? Andro said. Why has he not removed the inhibitor from mother Eirene? You and Fedor told her about it yes?

We did. Muton and mother decided to do it at the same time as Fedor and I enter the world. She answered. She will heal faster if she does not have to undergo a second operation to have it removed.

Do you trust this man Eirene? Fedor? Does mother trust him? Andro asked.

Yes. He is funny looking with all that hair, but he has been very kind to mother. Eirene answered. He laughs when he touches her stomach and we kick for him. Mother does too now a little. She has a beautiful laugh Andro. We want to hear her laugh more.

Yes... yes she does. And you will... I promise you. He answered. Do you have any idea where you are? Have you seen anything that may give you a clue?

We are on a planet. Fedor replied. It is a large orange like planet with many of the hairy men. We saw lots of ships among the stars. Muton called it... Ne... Na... Eirene?

He called it Ne... fo... a. Eirene answered. Yes... Ne... fo... a. We are still learning different words and we study everything you showed us.

Do not do so much as to tire yourselves out. Andro told him with some worry in his voice. That would not be a good thing. What has this Muton been talking with mother about? Do you recall?

Funny things. Eirene said. He speaks of dragons like mother's Bonded sister Aurith. We want to meet her so badly. Mother has told us of her and how much she loves her. And today he talked of strange people with strange names. A place he does not know how to get too. He wants mother's help in finding it.

What do you mean? Andro asked.

He talked with her until she fell asleep today. I don't think mother told him that we hear everything he says. Or that we understand so much. Fedor said. He asked mother to have us ask you if we spoke to you again. Mother said she did not think we would but she would make sure.

Ask me what fervon?

Where a ship is. A space ship I think. He said the mother of all dragons would know and to ask her where it is. Fedor continued. Do you know what he means Andro?

I think so yes. Andro answered. Eirene, Fedor, KertaGai is going to leave our connection for a time. She will be back soon but while she is gone I want to pass more things to you as long as you are able to digest them. The father of your hearts is here with me, our father, and you must hear what he has said. Mother must hear so share it with her when she wakes. Then I wish to pass you more skills.

We are ready. Eirene spoke.

EARTH DRAGON MOUNTAIN

Martin and the others turned quickly when the door to the meditation chamber opened and Sadi exited quickly. She re-sealed the door and moved to where they were standing in the large corridor. Arzoal was settled on the floor of the corridor beside Isheeni and Torma. Aurith on her opposite side.

“Sadi... what is wrong?” Aricia gasped taking her hands with concerned eyes.

“Nothing. Nothing truly. We have made contact.” She said a little out of breath.

Helen moved forward and placed her hand on Sadi's arm seeing the signs first. “Breath Sadi... you are still swirling from the intensity and power of the connection. Calm your heart as Andro showed you.”

Sadi took a deep breath and closed her eyes allowing the breath to leave her lungs slowly. She opened her jungle green eyes again and looked at Martin who was watching her intently. “I'm sorry Martin... this is the first time I have used a Mark II and it makes... it makes Andro so powerful and so focused.”

Martin placed his large hand on her shoulder gently and smiled warmly. “You do not need to apologize Sadi.” He said softly. “The first time is always strange... but it will become easier. Hope it doesn't make you regret becoming his anome?”

Sadi smiled and shook her head as she felt his aura swirl around her in a fatherly fashion just as her own father's did. She took another deep breath and let it out and then nodded her head. "Nothing will make me regret that." She said. "We have made contact and they are on Nefoa... just as Andro and Admiral Riall thought." She looked around and noticed Cirith was missing. "Everyone is not here?" She said.

"Cirith is with Dorian and Ryner." Isabella answered. "They could not sleep and she is instructing him in how to use his skills. She uses the shadows very well if I do say so myself."

Sadi nodded. "Well... we have contact with them as I said."

"They are sure they are on Nefoa?" Martin asked.

Sadi nodded. "Andro passed quite a bit of knowledge to them the first time. More than I had thought. They match almost Dorian in what they know and how they speak. Fedor said the planet was..."

"Fedor?" Anja gasped with a smile.

Sadi nodded as Anja, Dysea, Isabella and Cirith crowded closer. "Yes... forgive me. Their names are Fedor and Eirene."

"Peace and Lion." Helen whispered as she grasped Martin's hand and squeezed it with a smile. "For'mya named them well."

"They chose their names." Sadi said surprising them all. "They chose their names in order to provide comfort and protection for their mother. Until the father of their hearts comes for them." She finished looking at Martin.

Carians alinn jar hote. Isheeni's voice broke in filled with awe. (Gods bless us all)

Helen looked at her and nodded. "Yes indeed Isheeni. Yes indeed."

"Go on Sadi." Martin said his own face softening somewhat and his voice very nearly breaking.

"He said the planet looked orange and there were a lot of hairy men as he called them. Many ships in stars above." Sadi said.

"The light particles in the oceans make the planet appear orange from orbit." Martin said with a nod regaining some of his exposure. "It's Nefoa."

"Is For'mya alright?" Aricia asked. "Is she hurt?"

Sadi shook her head quickly. "No. This Kavalian... and his name is Muton... it appears he is a doctor. He has been taking care of her and insuring that she is safe. He even gave her a weapon to protect herself when he is not in the room with her."

"A weapon?" Dysea asked shocked.

This man is a Kavalian? Arzoal asked now. He does not act as any Kavalian we have ever heard of.

"No he doesn't." Martin said. "What else Sadi?"

"The time of their arrival is coming soon." Sadi told them. "They told us that For'mya is sleeping more and she gets tired very quickly."

Anja nodded as she pressed close to Aricia. "The same way she got just before Arrarn and Bryon were born, do you remember?" She said.

Aricia nodded. "Yes."

"If she's doing this and sleeping more then it is only hours before they arrive." Anja said.

"Hours?" Sadi gasped.

Anja nodded. "Based on the design of the Kavalian growth hormone and how it worked on Dorian, and removing our modifications to it, if she is acting like this now... then I estimate she'll give birth within the next twelve hours." She told them. "This is exactly how she acted before Arrarn and Bryon were born as I said."

"Sadi... anything else?" Helen pressed her.

"The Kavalian... Muton... he wants to know the location of a ship. He asked For'mya to have Eirene and Fedor question Andro if he contacted them again. I think it's something recent for they mentioned none of this before." Sadi said. She turned to look at Arzoal. "Eirene told Andro it was a ship that Muton said only you would know the location of Elder Mother. It was your ship."

Arzoal's eyes grew wide at this. Me? My ship? I do not... no... Arzoal stopped talking as her wings fully extended out to the sides. It can't be!

Martin looked at her, watching as her eyes batted several times in confusion. "Can't be what? Arzoal... you know what this man is talking about? What ship? Why would he want to know where your TYPE I was Arzoal?"

No Martin... not my ship now. Arzoal answered meeting his eyes and extending her head out on her neck to within inches of his face. They had trusted each other implicitly for over two decades, many times Arzoal sharing with Martin things that only Helen knew. Martin... do you remember what I told you and Torma all those years ago. About the eggs.

Eggs? Isheeni asked looking at her mother. What eggs?

I swore you to secrecy that day Martin Leonidas. Arzoal spoke softly. You and Torma both.

“I remember.” He said. “What does that have to do with what we are discussing right now?”

Those eggs were stored on the ship I brought the dragons from Elear on. Arzoal said. Buried in a mountain much as CS41 was.

Martin’s eyes grew wide. “The egg chamber was your ship?” He gasped.

Arzoal nodded. Yes.

“How the hell would a Kavalian know about that ship?” Martin snapped.

Helen looked at Arzoal. “Perhaps now is the time to share this knowledge with everyone sister.” She said.

Arzoal looked at her Bonded sister and drew her head back. Yes. She settled back to the deck and drew a deep breath. The ship I used to bring the remainder of the dragons from Elear to Enurrua was the same ship used to transport those who left Elear to find another world for us to prosper on. It was a Pralor Scout ship. About the size of one of our LEONIDAS-Class ships now. It made two trips and was suppose to return within four years to take the remainder of us off. It did not return for nine thousand years. We never discovered why, but it returned in working order with all of its systems operational. It’s data cores had been wiped except for the automated order to return to Elear. By this time I could not bring myself to leave this quadrant of space and we did not know where the others had gone. I chose Enurrua so that we could remain reasonably close to the elves as they grew and prospered. When we made the move to Enurrua, the ship was used as our main egg chamber for nearly ten millennia. Only when Chetak and the others were getting too close did I reach out to Shiria. I had felt her presence for some time but now I needed her help. She brought VORTEX Cruiser 341 to Enurrua and I sent four thousand of my kind off Enurrua. She brought them here to Earth. Just as I told you and Torma Martin. Once that was done... the only part of the scout ship that remained operational was the egg chamber. Arzoal lowered her head now. When Chetak was about to breach the egg chamber I ordered it destroyed. Nearly ten thousand eggs and almost three thousand of Chetak’s forces died in the explosion and the resulting collapse of the tunnels around it.

Oh mother. Isheeni gasped pressing her body close to her mother to give her support. You have carried this burden all of these years?

I gave the order. Arzoal spoke softly. It was the only way to keep Chetak from taking so many of our children and brutalizing them for his own gain. She looked at Isheeni. I did the right thing Isheeni.

“Yes you did.” Martin spoke moving up to her and placing his hand on her thick foreleg. “We have already discussed this Arzoal and it will remain where it belongs. In the past.”

I agree. Torma spoke. We have bigger problems.

Martin nodded. “Like how this Kavalian even knew your ship existed. And how he knows about you.”

Arzoal turned to look at him and nodded her massive head lowering her snout to butt Martin gently. Yes. She spoke.

“Chetak never knew that the egg chamber was actually a ship right?” Martin asked.

Arzoal shook her head. No. Impossible. None of them ever made it inside the chamber. Only into the tunnels. And they were carved from the mountain. The ship was made from the same bio-mechanical materials as CS41. It would appear as organic rock and such unless you had the proper instruments. Just as Dragon Mountain does.

Dysea looked at Martin with wide emerald green eyes. “Nauta Melme... you knew of this ship in Kavalian space? And Shiria?” She asked stunned.

Martin nodded slowly. “Of its existence Melda Min... yes. Of where it was... no.” He answered her. “Arzoal and I tried to use Avi to find it but we never could. Shiria must have powered it down to the bare minimum.”

“That is why you acted so calmly when Aikiro brought it to us?” Anja said. “You didn’t bat an eye because you already knew about it.”

Martin nodded again. "Yes."

"And you never went after her?" The new voice spoke and they turned to see Wayonn walking towards them. He moved up between Anja and Helen. "You knew Shiria lived and you never went after her Martin? Why?"

"I knew... I knew she would contact me if her situation became untenable." Martin answered.

"How did you know this?" Wayonn asked.

Martin shrugged. "A feeling? A little voice in my head? Does it matter?"

"Even I did not know Arzoal was a Pralor until I came here." Wayonn spoke. "I always knew Shiria was protecting something or someone and that is why she remained among the Kavalians. That is why she went against my advice and did what she did here on Earth. The technology... the ships. She knew you were alive! And she knew you would return!" Wayonn moved closer to Martin. "What else do you have in that head of yours Martin Leonidas? Things you are not telling anyone?"

Martin's dark brown eyes focused on Wayonn for a long moment and when he spoke his words were clear and tinged with a wisdom that none of them had ever heard before. "What I know... what Andro and I know... it is not by choice. And it would terrify you Wayonn." He said softly, his words causing both Aricia and Sadi to look at him oddly.

"Perhaps not so much as you might think my boy." Wayonn said softly. "There is a very unique thing that sets you and your son Androcles apart from all of us Martin. You know things that others do not. You sense things that others do not. This is a skill I have known in only one other person... and that was Sumar."

"I can't... we can't see the future Wayonn." Martin said.

Wayonn shook his head. "No... but this prescience you share with your son... it is part of the reason you are so powerful. And I suspect it is why your father was so powerful as King of Sparta and Resumar so enigmatic as King of your people and the others who choose to follow him. This could also be why the Spartans were so devastating and feared in combat. And this skill you pass to those around you in different ways. Surely you have noticed it."

"This is all very interesting grandfather" Helen spoke. "And we will need to explore it in the future but we have other issues right now. Andro can not maintain the connection to the twins forever... even with the Mark II helping him. We won't know anything for sure until we ask Shiria what she knows. If anything at all." Helen spoke. "She needs to return now Martin. She needs to return here so that we can have her knowledge behind us. So we can use it. And we need to decide what to do!"

I agree. Arzoal spoke.

Wayonn nodded staring at Martin for a moment longer. "As do I." He said.

Martin nodded his head. "I'll let Res know... but now we need to determine what or who this Muton is and why he wants the location of your old ship."

"You are sure the ship was destroyed Arzoal?" Isabella asked now.

The entire upper half of the mountain collapsed into the tunnels and on the egg chamber. Arzoal answered. Nothing could have survived.

"I have found that nature does not always make the perfect killing machine." Isabella said.

Arzoal shook her head. I do not know who he is! We never had contact with the Kavalian people after we sent their ancestors to Cabelir. And if Shiria knew of him she would have told us by now.

Wayonn nodded. "I concur. This man... he obviously has some knowledge of Pralors. How else would he know of you Arzoal? Shiria would not tell even me that you existed, so why would she share it with a Kavalian?"

She wouldn't. Arzoal spoke.

"Exactly." Wayonn said. "There is only one other logical explanation. He is descended from Pralors."

"What?" Martin gasped.

Impossible! Arzoal exclaimed. A Kavalian! Never! We banished them!

Wayonn looked at her. "Was that decision unanimous among the remaining Pralors on Elear after you defeated Artre?"

Arzoal nodded. Yes. There was some discontent but all of us ultimately agreed.

Wayonn turned back to Martin. "Leaving out Xaxon for the moment... none of the original Pralors on Lycavore left the planet until Sumar sent me to try and determine what happened on our homeworld. Arzoal is the only Pralor that had contact with the Kavalians. Therefore it is only logical to assume, somehow at least, that those who left Elear in the first two waves as you said returned and assimilated themselves somewhat into Kavalian society as it was.”

But why? Arzoal gasped. They are no less savage and brutal now than they were then Wayonn.

“Perhaps to try and do what we did on Lycavore.” Wayonn answered. “As Pralors that was our sole purpose Arzoal. You know this... you are older than me by nearly ten thousand years. That is what we did.”

I know that Wayonn! Arzoal huffed.

“When all that is left is the logical and the impossible and logic no longer applies... then the impossible is the answer.” Wayonn said. “Or something to that effect.”

“Nubous!” Martin swore spinning around. “This cerebral sibfla is beginning to give me a headache! Just point me in the right direction and tell me who I have to kill and how many so that I can get For'mya and my children back damn it!” He finished the sentence almost shouting the words.

Aricia and Dysea reached for him at the same time and as their hands touched him, the rapidly building anger seemed to flow out of him instantly. Wayonn and the others noticed this as Anja and Isabella moved closer to him as well.

“If the ship is destroyed then tell him.” Wayonn spoke. “He obviously already knows it exists and if he is protecting For'mya as the twins say, then he is not an enemy.”

“Part of the problem is we don't know what he is Wayonn.” Aricia stated.

Wayonn nodded. “Then let's find out child.” He spoke. “Tell him where the ship is and then we take our team and go to Enurrua and find it before he does and then we meet him there. It's obvious by his actions so far that he has no intention of turning For'mya over to Pusintin or the Kavalians. What he has done so far would get him executed immediately if what we know of the Kavalians is true, so it is logical to assume she and the children will be with him. And if he does what he says he's going to do, we'll confirm this as soon as he removes the inhibitor from her body and Andro can talk to her directly.”

“Andro?” Martin said. “Why not me?”

“Because you are still dead my boy, at least as far as the Kavalians are concerned. If this is some sort of elaborate trap, it would not do for them to actually succeed where they failed before. And to be honest... right now Androcles is far more focused and attuned to the twins and by virtue of that For'mya herself.”

Martin paused and then nodded. “I really fucking hate it when you are right.” He said.

Wayonn smiled. “Yes... so Dutkne has told me on many occasions.”

“I will remain here.” Isabella said. “Dorian is still too young for me to leave him Martin.”

Martin nodded. “I know.” He stated. “Red... you have to stay here too. With Andro and you together, it shows a united front even after Hadaria.”

Anja nodded. “I figured as much. But take Duewa at least. And Thoti. He is her strength. As much as it burns my ass to admit... she is the strongest Healer we have right now behind Eurin and Eliani. I need Sivana and Ceuma to remain here with me. You may need Duewa and I think... I'm beginning to trust her.”

Martin nodded. “Aricia you...”

“I am dead as well remember Beloved.” She said with a grin. “And I do not fear going back to that place. I have long put it far behind me.”

Martin looked at Arzoal. “Arzoal... get with your aide and have her draw up as accurate a map as you can. You are not going... before you ask.”

Martin I must. Arzoal spoke.

It will be much faster if the Elder Mother is with us Martin my brother. Torma spoke.

“Shit!” Martin swore again. “Alright... have a new TYPE II prepped. No sense in risking OMEN THREE if it is a trap.”

“I agree.” Wayonn said. “I will contact Shiria and tell her the choice is no longer hers. She needs to take her ship and return now. Bella... you and Anja will be able to get whatever knowledge she may have to us as soon as you have it?”

“Count on it.” Anja said.

“If we have to carry it ourselves.” Isabella answered.

Martin nodded. “Ok... Sadi you...” He turned and realized Sadi was no longer next to him. “Sadi?”

I needed to get back Martin. Sadi's voice filled their heads. I could not wait any longer. I will tell Andro and the twins.

Wayonn chuckled. "And here you thought your mates were the only stubborn, action oriented females you knew." He said.

"Stubborn?" Dysea snapped. "You think we are stubborn?"

"Thanks Wayonn." Martin said.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SEVEN

NEFOA

THREE HOURS AFTER THE BIRTH OF EIRENE AND FEDOR

For'mya looked up when the inner door to the medical room opened and Muton's bulk walked in. The door closed quickly behind him and he checked the pad to make sure the audio and security Vid monitors were off out of habit. He had disabled them manually when they first arrived and so far no one had questioned him. He looked at For'mya standing beside the bed where both Eirene and Fedor were laying beside one another, For'mya having just bathed both of them. They looked nothing like newborn babies and anyone who saw them would swear they were six or seven months old at least. For'mya's face was much more animated than he had seen it in the time he had known her and he no doubt knew why. He held the object in his hand as he moved casually to the bed, the object that had been blocking what For'mya and so many other Lycavorians and those turned by them had come to rely on so much. In the first hour after he removed the inhibitor she had been talking non-stop with Eirene and Fedor within Mindvoice, and only Muton's demand that she not overdo it and shield herself heavily made her stop. He did not suspect any Kavalian or vampire would be able to hear her given the level of her skill, but better safe than sorry and For'mya agreed.

As For'mya looked up at him she smiled brightly, her sense of equilibrium having been returned now as she could feel within Mindvoice once more. She kept her thoughts and voice tightly shielded so as not to raise suspicion if the base here had dampeners or anyone who could Mindvoice just as Muton had told her, but she longed to feel her family and above all else she ached for Martin's Mindvoice presence to swirl around her and engulf her.

"Muton." She said softly.

He mobbed up to the side of the bed and smiled at her, his appearance almost frightening if you did not know Kavalians. For'mya had spent enough time around him now to see it for what it was and this man would never frighten her again. He had done more to earn her trust than Muton would ever really know.

"I told you to rest." He stated.

"They were hungry and I needed to bath them." For'mya answered. "I can't refuse them Muton."

Muton nodded as his hand went out to rub Eirene's smooth cheek and she cooed happily at the touch of his clawed hand on her skin. For'mya chuckled slightly and he looked at her. "What?"

"She says your claw tickles her skin." For'mya told him with a smile. "And thank you for bringing her into this world."

Muton pulled his hand back quickly. "Oh... sorry." He said swiftly looking at Eirene and her dark brown eyes. Eyes so much like her mother. If Muton didn't know any better he would say that both of them looked far more like For'mya than they did Pusintin. "My apologies and you are very welcome."

"Thank you Muton." For'mya said looking at him. "They... they are beautiful. Thank you so much... for everything. For making me, us, for giving us hope."

Muton smiled in return. "I should be the one thanking you. What has happened to you aside For'mya, your presence here is what is allowing me to fulfill my duties to my people. It was vile and wrong and horrible what you experienced but..."

For'mya reached out and gripped his hand. "You do not need to explain. I know what you are trying to say."

Muton met her eyes and nodded. He held up the Inhibitor in his hand. "I thought you might want this." He said.

For'mya reached up and he placed the inhibitor in her palm. "This is it?" She asked softly.

Muton nodded his head. "This object is not of Kavalian construction." He told her. "It appears to be some sort of High Coven manufacture. I'm not entirely sure, but if I had to guess, it was made with components from the Mindvoice ship that Aikiro had. The same class vessel as the one your Martin Leonidas discovered on Lycavore."

For'mya looked at him. "You know of that?" She asked.

Muton nodded. "The vampire officers who defected to the KFI at the beginning of the war talked of it in whispers. We had always suspected such a ship existed, just as the one on Ritaah. They said it was something that Aikiro was very interested in obtaining. Her actions proved that... but they also killed her in the end. Keleru decided against trying to obtain this information because he did not believe it."

For'mya nodded. "Yes... her actions did condemn her." She spoke. "Are there more of these?"

Muton shrugged. "I do not know for sure but I am going to say yes." He replied. "The scientists who work in the military's Science Division are bright and intelligent but they would never be able to construct something like this For'mya. Keleru and Pusintin keep them focused on building newer and better weapons and engines." Muton took it from her palm. "No... this device is not something they could build. I suspect the vampire officers who defected brought this with them, and that there are probably more somewhere."

"Destroy it." For'mya spoke with a shudder. "It was designed to use against those who can Mindvoice Muton and believe me... what it does is far more insidious than you think. When it was within me I..."

Muton gazed at her for a long moment before dropping it to the floor. "You do not need to explain it to me. I can imagine some of it for I saw how you acted." He stood up and brought his boot down on the Inhibitor with all of his two hundred and forty pound weight, smashing it into dozens of small pieces.

"Avoi." For'mya said softly.

Muton turned his attention back to Eirene and Fedor on the bed. "They are growing very rapidly. Faster than I had thought."

For'mya looked at him. "That's not bad is it?" She asked with some concern in her voice.

"What? No! Not at all!" He answered quickly his hand moving to touch her shoulder and reassure her. "They are perfectly healthy For'mya. Better than healthy actually. I think I must have misdiagnosed the potency of the serum they injected you with." For'mya looked down at the jumpsuit she wore, hesitated a moment and then looked back at him. Muton detected this and his head tilted slightly. "What is it?"

"I am... this is very hard to discuss with..." For'mya stammered.

"For'mya I am a doctor first and while I'm quite sure I do not have the bedside manner of your Anja... I am very professional in that regard." Muton said. "Tell me."

"My breasts have grown larger Muton. A full cup size almost. This was normal when Arrarn and Bryon were born but they always returned to ordinary after I stopped feeding them. They have not this time." For'mya told him, knowing that he was right. He had delivered her children and in all of his examines of her he had gone out of his way to be almost coldly professional.

Muton nodded. "And they probably will not." He answered her just as professionally. "When used in our females, this is a side effect of the growth hormone that never goes away." He told her. "I'm sorry."

For'mya couldn't help but chuckle. "Don't be... Martin will not be sorry. I've always wanted slightly larger breasts. I guess now I have them."

It took him a moment but he laughed softly when he realized the connotation of her statement. He shook his head. "I am very happy that you have not lost your true self For'mya. A large part of it is Eirene and Fedor I know."

For'mya nodded and looked at them. "Yes."

"At this rate... at this rate they will be walking and running by the time the remainder of my team arrives." Muton said. "Which will be very good since we will need to leave as soon as they are all here."

For'mya met his gaze. "What has happened?" She asked detecting the seriousness in his voice.

"The base commander... Dinx." He said softly, and For'mya could detect the shame in his voice easily. "In order to keep him away from you and out of my hair until another time, I told him I would arrange for him to inspect you after they were born. I told him Pusintin had planned to give you to the brothels but I would see to it that you were given to him instead if he let me deliver the children without interference from him."

"And he will be coming to collect his prize soon no doubt?" For'mya asked calmly.

"For'mya it was the only way to keep him out of our business until..." Muton began to speak.

For'mya shook her head and her hand squeezed strongly on his arm once more. "No Muton... you did what you needed to do to keep me and my children safe. To keep you and your people safe. I will not hold that against you. How could I?"

Muton breathed a sigh of relief and nodded. "Then my next question is one you can help me with." He said. "Dinxi is supremely well trained... and he will be very close to you when he comes here. He..."

For'mya met his eyes with those dark brown orbs and Muton suppressed a shudder at the look in them. "I will deal with our Kavalian Commander." She hissed softly. "Gladly."

"We will need his code card." Muton continued. "Once we have that we will take the children to the base's ship bay. I have already instructed my people to secure the fastest ship there. Probably a LEUGERS-Class transport. Can you fly that?"

For'mya looked at him. "Yes. Why would you need me to fly it though?"

Muton grinned. "You are the finest pilot in all of the Union For'mya... at least that is what many say. The more odds we have in our favor the better."

For'mya nodded. "True."

"Once we are away from Nefoa we will need to move quickly so they can not follow us." Muton said. "My people will be waiting for us at a designated set of coordinates and..."

"Enurrua." For'mya told him.

"What?"

"Have them meet us at Enurrua." She answered him calmly. "That is where the ship you seek is."

Muton's eyes grew wide as he realized what she was saying. "They... they talked with him?" He gasped loudly. "How? When?"

For'mya nodded her head. "A few hours before they arrived into this world. Andro must have somehow deduced this is where we were and he used a Mark II Neural Booster to reach them here." She answered. "They did not tell me until an hour ago because I was sleeping at the time he made contact."

"He is... he is that powerful For'mya?" Muton asked.

For'mya nodded. "The Mark II Neural Boosters only provide a clear signal and help you to focus your Mindvoice potential more efficiently, but if you are speaking of raw power, then yes he is strong enough. I have seen him and Martin talk to people on the other side of planets and even different sectors of space with almost no strain. Distance plays a great role in actually talking with another, but not so much in being able to sense emotions and feelings."

"Enurrua?" Muton asked with an animated face. "You are sure?"

For'mya nodded her head. "Yes. Muton... tell me... what does this ship have that you need so badly?"

He met her eyes and didn't hesitate. "The way for us to return to our home. Our true home." He answered.

For'mya looked at him shocked. "You mean where your ancestors came from?" She asked.

Muton nodded. "That has been our goal for some time now. To return to where our ancestors came from." He inched closer on the bed. "Each of our ancestors left imprints within us For'mya."

"A path home?" She asked.

Muton shook his head. "No. How to build a ship that could take us home." He replied. "That is what we have been doing for the better part of three centuries now. Using these partial imprints to piece together a larger picture or schematic if you will. Once we had all the pieces... we began gathering the materials needed to build the ship. This ship would have allowed us to find the ship your son Resumar now has in his hands, which would in turn allow us to find the ship that took our ancestors off Elear all those millennia ago. That was our hope at least."

"Why would you need to find that particular ship?" For'mya asked. "Muton... the Elder Mother used it as an egg chamber when they arrived on Enurrua. This is what Andro told Eirene and Fedor. It was destroyed during the war with Chetak and his followers. She says that all of the data cores were wiped clean when it returned to Elear for her and the others. That the only information within the data banks was how to return to Elear. How could this tell you the way home?"

Muton nodded. "The data banks were wiped clean. My great grandmother did not leave me the knowledge as to why they did this though. However... she did imprint within me the means to extract the information we need to chart our path home from the bio-mechanical compounds of the ship itself. If even one small part of that ship remains then we can get our path home. I can get it.”

For'mya's eyes grew wider. “That... then you would know where Arzoal sent the dragons and the remaining Pralors who survived what happened on Elear!” She gasped. “Muton that is wonderful!”

Muton nodded. “The planet they eventually settled on yes. Or the sector the planet is in at least. That is where our ancestors came from and that is where we want to return to. That is the only place we can truly call home For'mya.”

“Muton... that... that is amazing! Do you know what that will mean to the dragons still living here?” She almost shouted.

“It was always my intention of transmitting this data back to your Martin Leonidas when we discovered the world.” Muton told her. “The Lycavorians have become bound tightly with the dragons here, knowing what I know now makes it much easier to see why, and it would not be right for me to keep that information from them unless those where we are going do not wish it.”

“They would... they would have to agree to it!” For'mya exclaimed. “Why would they not?”

Muton nodded. “That is what I foresee as well.” He told her. “Now... now you know everything For'mya. This is the only secret I have been keeping from you during these last days. Now you know why I have guarded it so viciously. It is all my people have ever wanted. All any of us have ever wanted.”

“Carians yes!” For'mya declared.

“When we find the ship then I will give you the LEUGERS transport and you can return home to those you love. With you will be the COM device I will contact you on.” Muton told her. “I have seen enough of your Martin Leonidas on the Netnews and read enough about him that I know he will guard this information with his very life. As will your son Androcles and all of your children and family.”

“That goes without saying Muton.” For'mya told him. “Martin and Andro especially for they are Talon Guardians. Protectors of the dragons species.”

Muton nodded and squeezed the hand she had still resting on his arm. “Our fates are now intertwined For'mya Leonidas.” He said softly to her. “I will not forsake you or these children you have brought into this world and I know you will not forsake me or those I protect. What happens to one of us happens to all of us now. The Kavalians can not declare war on the Union if it is a group of Kavalians that helps you to escape and then returns you to your people and your rightful family. Everything Keleru and Pusintin have worked for up until now would be shattered if they did such a thing. The entire universe would see them for what they truly are For'mya.”

“Are you so sure?” For'mya asked.

Muton was silent for a moment. “I can hope.” He said finally.

EARTH SPARTA HOME OF DUEWA AND THOTI

Duewa moved quickly across the room of their home, completely beside herself in excitement and a flood of emotions she had never felt before. Thoti walked in from the kitchen area sipping from a mug of coffee and saw her. He couldn't help but grin as she rushed past him carrying several bags in her hands.

“Duewa my mate... we will not be gone that long.” He told her.

Duewa turned to look at him. “Thoti... I don't know what to bring. I... I need for this to go well. I want to show Anja I am different. I can't believe she requested I go. I can't let her down now. I can't!”

Thoti moved up to her and took her arm causing her to stop what she was doing and turn to look at him as he let his aura wash over her. Duewa reveled in the emotions that swept over her as his male aura curled around her and put her at ease. She gazed into his handsome face and pressed closer to him, loving the feel of his powerful body against hers. The days had crowded together lately as he and his family accepted her and helped to her to adjust to the changes within her. The first time she had shifted it had terrified her to no end and if not for Thoti's mother clamping her paws on Duewa's hindquarters she would have stumbled about like a new born pup for hours. Thoti's mother schooled her within Mindvoice with an ever soothing voice, easing her into the transition quickly. Once Duewa had gotten the hang of moving on four legs and using her thick bushy tail she had fallen in love with running. Each morning since that first day, if they could, Thoti and she went for a run through the mountains usually stopping by some creek or stream to consummate their union even more. Duewa could not get enough of him and he was equally enthralled with her. Their lovemaking was often times gentle and slow, but there had been times when he had her screaming out in unabashed delight as he took her.

“Duewa... she would not have asked you if she did not trust you.” Thoti said. “You need to accept that you are different now, Anja knows that. Everyone knows that. We have two hours before we leave and you have already packed and unpacked four times. Leave it my wife and mate. Have some coffee and then we will go to my mother’s home and say goodbye to our sons before we go to the base.”

Duewa took a deep breath and brought her hands up to place them on his broad chest so she could feel his powerful heart beating. As it always did, that steady drumming quickly put her at ease. “You are right.” She said softly.

Thoti held out the mug. “Drink and I will take the bags we need.”

Duewa nodded and took the mug as the chime on their door sounded. She looked at him as she took a sip of the coffee. “I will get it.” She spoke.

“It’s probably children from the school looking for sponsors for their upcoming games.” Thoti answered.

Duewa nodded as she moved across the large room to the front door and passed her hand over the security panel. Her green eyes exploded open and she nearly choked on her mouthful of coffee when she saw her mother standing in the doorway with a handful of Elder Guard Militia behind her.

“Mother!” She gasped.

Buonau looked at her sternly for a long moment. She wore her elaborate and expensive Prime Minister robes, and several rather gaudy pieces of jewelry. Duewa’s sensitive wolf nose twitched as she detected the scent of heavy perfume and it made her want to gag. She had discovered that her nose was very sensitive now and she much preferred the natural scent of a person as opposed to what she herself used to wear. Perfume such as her mother was wearing made her nauseous.

“Hello Duewa.” Buonau spoke coolly.

“Mother... I didn’t know you were here.” Duewa stammered.

“I arrived with the Kavalian delegation that is searching for the defectors.” Buonau told her. “You are surprised to see me I take it.”

“Yes.” Duewa answered honestly. “I did not think you would have the courage to show your face on Earth after what you have done.”

“What I have done?” Buonau gasped. “You have disrespected me Duewa! After all I have done for you?”

Duewa’s green eyes narrowed. “What you have done for me?” She snarled. “What have you done for me mother? Tell me! You used me for your own purposes! You used me as a tool mother! You used me, forced me to do things I did not want, all to further your thirst for power and your hatred of Anja! Please mother... tell me what you have done for me!”

“You dare to speak to me in such a way Duewa!” Buonau snapped.

“I have chosen my path mother, I told you that.” Duewa spoke. “Now if you will excuse me... I am rather busy.” She began to turn to go back into her home.

“I came here today to give you a second chance Duewa.” Buonau said. She looked at Duewa as she turned back around. “A second chance to make amends for your failures.”

“My failures?” Duewa hissed. “My failures! What about your failures mother?”

“You can return with me now Duewa. We are going to try one last time to get Androcles Leonidas to see reason and turn Retta and Calyb over to their Aunt. You can come with me and help me to convince him that all we want is to give them a good home and life.” Buonau told her. “We can also begin research into removing this vile curse from within you and return you to who you were. You can raise your sons in the environment they should be raised in.”

Duewa stepped closer to her mother, trying very hard to contain her anger. “My sons are happier than they have ever been in their lives.” She spoke coldly. “Happy and healthy and they have an older brother who helps them and protects them, or did you forget that I am now the mate and wife to a Lycavorian.”

“I did not forget this girl!” Buonau spoke.

Duewa smiled as Thoti’s scent filled her nostrils and she turned to reach for his hand as he stepped onto the small path up to their door. She pulled him up to her and relished in the look on her mother’s face as his arm curled around her waist and he bent to nuzzle the side of her neck and behind her ear causing her to gasp slightly at the delicious sensations it caused. She looked back at her mother.

“This is Thoti mother.” She spoke with supreme confidence in her voice. “My husband and my mate. The man who turned me. The man who saved my life after your fool soldiers shot me. And the man who has given me far more than you will ever know or comprehend.”

Thoti looked at Buonau and nodded his head slightly. “Buonau.” He said.

“That is Prime Minister to you!” Buonau hissed.

Thoti smiled at her. “To you perhaps, but not to those of us who know the truth behind your actions Buonau.” He told her.

Buonau glared daggers at him but the infuriating smile never left his face. “Duewa... you can still return with me. I demand you return with me! I already have our researchers working on discovering a way to remove this Lycavorian virus from your blood. From the blood of every Hadarian who has ever been infected! Given time we can find a way to return you to normal just as we can them. You can help me build our people into what they should be as my daughter.”

“You mean what you and Wiktor want to make them.” Duewa said. “With you as the final power and say on everything.” Duewa shook her head. “I have no desire to be part of your religious rule mother. It sickens me. Your actions have thrown our people back hundreds of years! Hundreds! And you only seek to use Retta and Calyb as tools to insure you never lose your power. You are not as smart as you think you are mother, for everyone with even a modicum of common sense sees right through your words and lies. And you will never get Retta and Calyb mother.”

“I can save you!” Buonau almost shouted.

Duewa laughed at her now. “Save me? I have been saved mother.” Duewa spoke turning to look at Thoti. She looked back to her mother. “Do you know how much I love to run as a wolf mother? The freedom and expression that it brings me. It is wondrous to finally see what they see when they take their alternate forms. I will wait until my sons are old enough and then I will give them the choice. Something you would deny them in every way.”

“I will not make this offer again Duewa.” Buonau barked.

Duewa looked at Buonau, her beautiful face at peace and happy. She moved closer to her mother, allowing the change to come over her. Her dark green eyes shrank in size and the black ring surrounded the pupil as her canine teeth lengthened to nearly an inch and a half long and became thicker and able to tear flesh with ease. Smaller fangs protruded from the bottom but nothing like her main wolf fangs.

“You are not welcome here mother.” She growled menacingly. “Look around you mother and you will see what these men and women think of you.” Buonau did so and her own eyes grew wide as she saw men and women had come out of their homes all up and down the peaceful street. All of them were watching the events taking place and none of them looked in the least bit happy to see her. “I have embraced what I have become mother. There is nothing like it in the universe. You can take your offer and shove it up your ass!”

Buonau’s head snapped back around and she glared at her daughter. “How dare you!” She hissed. “How dare you speak to me like that Duewa!”

“Leave mother.” Duewa hissed just as vehemently. “Leave now and never return.”

“I will not let this go!” Buonau barked. “You are my daughter and I will not allow you to do this!”

“You no longer control my life or what I do mother.” Duewa snarled. “You will never do so again. Goodbye mother... I have a life to lead.”

Buonau watched as Duewa simply turned on her heels and walked back into their home. Thoti stood there as the men and women that were closest and heard the entire exchange began to clap and cheer Duewa for her actions. Thoti turned back to Buonau and grinned.

“You should probably know... I intend to love her until she is breathless.” He stated with some confidence. “She smells so good and she tastes even better. I intend to love her and have many children with her. And every time she screams my name in our bed, you will know she is no longer your tool. And you will never know her again. Good day Buonau.”

Buonau watched as he turned and walked into his home. As the door closed she looked around quickly, seeing the smug looks of those Lycavorians standing all around. She looked at her Elder Guard Militia officer. "Let us leave this foul place." She snarled. "She is lost to us now."

DRAGON MOUNTAIN

"Seems too easy father." Andro spoke as they walked the outer edges of the massive main chamber, Elynth and Torma moving along behind them.

The many dragons training to fly within the chamber respectfully got out of the way of the four Talon Guardians, many of them bowing their heads in reverence. One of the first things a newborn dragon learned upon hatching and as they grew were the exploits of the four Talon Guardians now slowly circling the massive chamber. How they would not leave their fallen comrades, Lycavorian and dragon alike, to become trophies to the Evolli soldiers that they fought. They guarded the bodies of their honored dead, suffering horrors and injuries that left their marks on all of them.

Martin looked at his oldest son. "Say it all Andro." He said.

"Is Pusintin so confident of his position that he would send mother to Nefoa to give birth? Trusting her to one Kavalian doctor? A man who is turning out to be something none of us ever suspected." Andro looked at his father.

Martin shook his head quickly. "No... I had no idea about that." He said.

"He is trusting that we would not try and find her and even rescue her with an attack on Nefoa. He can't possibly believe the Union Senate will vote in his favor can he father?" Andro continued.

"I think he and Keleru believe they can." Martin said. "Laustinos has undoubtedly told them that there are many who do not like me or agree with the way your mothers and I ruled. He's right too. There are a lot more than we think."

Andro nodded. "I don't doubt that... but I fail to believe that they dislike you enough to actually side with Pusintin knowing his history. Or the history of the Kavalians for that matter. The Kavalians can not fool the majority into believing that they have suddenly become peace loving individuals can they? Not after what they did to come to this point."

"The majority no..." Martin said. "But then again I have never been very good at being a politician. Or thinking like one."

"It would be a debacle to try and take Nefoa without a full scale orbital and ground assault." Andro said. "And I would not do that without first landing Infiltration Teams by the dozen on that planet to wreak havoc."

Martin nodded. "And they would have weeks or months to prepare for it." He said. "In that they believe Nefoa to be nearly impregnable. At least right now. So sending her there to have the babies makes sense if you are Pusintin. He does not have to deal with her while he makes or finishes his other plans. His true plans."

Andro stopped and looked at his father. "His true plans?" He gasped.

"Pusintin is a two dimensional thinker Andro." Martin said. "Keleru and most of the KFI High Command as well. If they look at a triangle they see only the two sides they can view, not the whole triangle."

"I know the concepts father." Andro replied.

"Then see the issue from their eyes." Martin said. "Two sides... two paths. If one doesn't work than the other must. They never take into account the third side. The three dimensional part of it. They can't grasp the concept... not because they are unable or stupid... but because it does not fit into their narrow view of the world or how it should be. Pian, Jalersi, Mican and the others with them... they are able to reach outside that realm and now they see what they are missing and realize that they want it."

"So he is planning something else as his backup?" Andro said.

Martin nodded. "Or his primary depending on how you want to view it." He answered. "He's not stupid like I said... and you can bet that whatever his plan is, it is intended to inflict consequences that will get him the same result as the plan using For'mya would. Your mothers and I... Helen... everything you and your siblings have been taught by us... it forces you to think three dimensionally Andro. To see everything. That is how you are dealing with the Vanari. What you need to do now is think like your enemy."

Andro's eyes grew wider now. "The Drow outposts!" He gasped.

Martin nodded. “The outposts. They know we used the Drow as intelligence outposts, and by taking so many of them out when they didn’t need this action to accomplish their mission, they have blinded us to a certain extent. Not in an analytical sense, but a physical sense because they know we won’t reestablish those outposts right away.”

“And we haven’t.” Andro said.

Martin nodded once more. “And all of our attention has been focused on other things that are more important to us in a logical sense.”

“Nubous!” Andro swore. “How did I not think of that?”

Torma chuckled within Mindvoice. You have been preoccupied by other things Androcles.

We should have seen it though. Elynth complained.

“You can not think of everything Elynth.” Martin spoke looking at her. “There are times when you have to roll with what happens. In that you and Andro have acted superbly. Now though... now that we have a better grasp on things we have to return to our normal methods.”

Andro looked at him. “You can not go to Enurrua with just a TYPE II and OMEN THREE father.” He said quickly. “Not if you think it is a trap and I know you do.”

“Oh... it’s a trap.” Martin said with a nod. “The question is how big of a trap and is this Muton part of it? When it comes to being devious my brother is a putz. If I had to guess, I’d say any trap would be of Keleru’s making. Pusintin may not even know about it.”

“All the more reason to not go with just the force you have planned.” Andro said.

“I also can’t waltz in there with an entire Fleet Group son.” Martin said.

“Then take the ARC ROYAL.” Andro told him quickly. “She’s the first of the Block II ARIZONA-Class to be completed. Ben is pushing his people hard. She has three quarters of her crew, but all stations are manned. Her engines and all vital systems are complete... she just lacks an air crew.”

Martin stared at him for a long moment. “Interesting.” He said. “We won’t need an air crew anyway. I don’t plan on being on the ground long enough to need one.”

“Without her fighters she can easily fit the TYPE II in her bay and OMEN THREE can do a hard lock on her beam.” Andro said. “That still leaves plenty of room for three or four more transport type ships depending on their size.”

Martin looked at him. “Why the big concern?” He asked. “The best way to defeat a trap is knowing about it first.”

Andro nodded. “I know... but something tells me that you will... that you will need the help.” He answered softly.

“What do you feel son?” Martin asked.

Andro turned and looked at Elynth then back to his father. Martin did the same and then let his eyes settle on Elynth. “Elynth?”

It is only a feeling Martin. She answered thoughtfully. We can not explain it... only that it is there.

What feeling daughter? Torma asked.

A feeling of life. Many lives. Elynth answered. The echoes were so very faint and the only reason we detected them was because we were connected to the Mark II for so long talking with Eirene and Fedor.

“Could you have been feeling Eirene and Fedor?” Martin asked.

Andro shook his head quickly. “No. It was definitely something else father. Far away but yet close by too. There were dozens of echoes within Mindvoice... sort of reverberating back and forth. Without purpose really. I don’t think KertaGai or the others felt it for they are not as attuned to using a Mark II... but Elynth and I did. Does that make sense father?”

Martin looked at Torma for a moment and he only nodded his massive head. “To anyone else... probably not. To us... yes. Ok Andro... we’ll do it your way son.” He said. “The ARC ROYAL, OMEN THREE in a hard lock on her beam and the TYPE II in her bay. Add three of the new KADEN-Class transports too. Let Ben know we’ll rendezvous with them at the ninth marker inside Bontawillian space. Would you care to let your old man in on what you are planning for SPARTA’S WRATH now Andro?” Martin said. “Considering I wanted you to blow the ship into tiny pieces and you and your brother decided to go against my orders, now would be a good time to make me understand that.”

“Are you sure you want to hear it?” Andro asked him. “After our discussion now I am going to change part of their mission.”

“Spill it boy.” Martin said. “Then we need to get moving.”

Aricia stepped up beside Sadi where she leaned against the railing of the balcony lounge one deck above the floor of the main chamber. Her eyes were following Martin and Andro as they walked around the floor, moving in and out between the hundreds of dragons below as if they were barely paying attention to the activity around them. The large mug of coffee was gripped between her hands as it usually was in the mornings and she sipped it slowly, warming herself. It was easily ten degrees cooler within Dragon Mountain and in the early morning when the ceiling opening was fully extended the morning breeze would sweep and swirl within the main chamber.

“You look deep in thought Sadi.” Aricia said as she came to a halt and followed where her eyes were.

Sadi turned and looked at her. “I just like watching him.” She said with a smile.

Aricia grinned at her. “And knowing he belongs to you?” She offered with a perceptive smile.

Sadi matched her smile and nodded. “I didn’t want to say that.” She spoke.

“Why not?” Aricia said with a smile as she looked at her. “We do it all of the time.” She sipped her own mug of coffee as her azure eyes fell on Martin. “There are many people who can not understand it. They can not understand how Martin and I can be anomes and yet share each other with Anja and Dysea and For'mya and Isabella and now Cirith with equal intensity and love.”

Sadi nodded. “A few of my friends have asked that same question of me.” She said.

Aricia looked at her. “And what answer did you give them?”

“I told them that while Andro and I are anomes... Ne'Veha, Carisia, Caliria and Lu'ria are part of who we are. Part of what we are.” Sadi answered. “Without them... we are not complete. And nor are they.”

“Did they understand?” Aricia asked.

Sadi shook her head. “No.”

Aricia chuckled. “Nor has anyone who has asked me that same question. I have given them almost the same answer.” She said.

“May I ask you a question Aricia?” Sadi spoke now.

“Sadi... you are my son’s anome.” Aricia said. “And we are not that far apart in age. Of course.”

“Do you... do you find yourself drawn more to...” Sadi blushed slightly and found she couldn’t finish her question.

Aricia however knew what she meant and she nodded. “Yes.” She answered. “I think part of it may be because of how Resumar and Eliani loved their elf concubine as they did and this was somehow passed down to Martin and then to me... but in the midst of passion I will always reach for For'mya first.” She looked at Sadi. “It is similar for you?”

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

“Ne'Veha?” Aricia asked.

Sadi nodded again. “Yes. We are both pilots and we have so much in common but ever since Andro turned her, her scent is just a tiny bit sweeter to me than the others. Lu'ria and Carisia seem to be more drawn to each other as well but it never effects us when we are all together with Andro. Caliria... Inamarno... she can affect all of us but I sense that she is more drawn to SirsanGai and myself and we to her.”

“It is no different for us. Anja has that effect on all of us but it is more telling on For'mya and I. We believe it has something to do with the metaphysical radiation within her body that makes her scent and taste that much sweeter to us, but there is no denying that Anja is the one who can have all of us craving each other. She just has that knack.” Aricia answered with a small smile. “Many people have put forth their ideas on who Martin prefers after me through the years. We usually get a good laugh out of it because we know the truth... but it is funny sometimes to see what others think.”

“He doesn’t does he?” Sadi asked.

Aricia shook her head. “As long as we have been together Martin Leonidas has found just the unique way to make each of us howl to the moon longer and louder than any male could ever hope to achieve. He knows just what causes each of us to melt in his arms, and he is simply a beast when we are all in Phase and we hit him at the same time. Once Ne'Veha and Lu'ria are fully changed you will see the change in Andro when you all come into Phase and you draw Carisia and Caliria along for the ride as we do Bella.” She commented with a smile. She looked at Sadi. “Do you have any regrets Sadi?”

“Regrets?” Sadi gasped. “Helen asked me that same question not so long ago. Do I regret finding a man who leaves me utterly trembling in the way his aura envelopes me and loves me? Do I regret finding and experiencing the love and pleasure of the women who share our lives? No... I will never regret these things. They are part of who I am. Who I have become.”

“Helen told us that Ulana has tried to insinuate herself back into Andro’s life.” Aricia said.

Sadi smiled. “She tried.” She answered. “And she will continue to try until she pisses me off enough that I rip her face to shreds.”

Aricia couldn’t help but laugh. “A woman after my own heart.” She quipped. She looked down and watched Martin and Andro. “They are plotting.” She said. “I can tell from their body language.”

“Plotting?” Sadi asked her.

Aricia nodded her head. “Androcles has begun to make a name for himself now with Martin having to play at being dead. He has come out from under his father’s shadow as he has wanted too for so long. But he is so very much like him that sometimes it is scary.”

“What do you mean?” Sadi asked moving closer to her.

Aricia motioned with her head. “You see how their hands are crossed behind their backs. They both do it and they don’t even realize it. Their gait as they walk... the slight tilt of their shoulders. They are discussing military matters. Devising new and improved ways to kill our enemies no doubt.”

Sadi looked at them and saw what Aricia was mentioning. “That... that is so surreal.” She said softly.

“The power within Mindvoice that the four of them command is terrifying?” Aricia said softly. “I would truly not want to be on the same battlefield if either of them ever cut loose. You can feel it as his anome yes?”

Sadi nodded. “At times yes. He shields it well, but sometimes just before he wakes his shields are low enough for me to sense a little of it. It is... it is like a river of molten lava. It races along just waiting for the moment that it will finally breach the banks and spill over.”

Aricia nodded. “Much like Martin.” She said. “We are a large part of the shield that holds that power in check Sadi.” She told her softly. “Martin’s love for me, for our Kinsoaurgai and the others. Andro’s love for you and the others. Our love for them. It makes us special I guess.” Aricia looked at her. “Come Sadi... let us get something to eat before the others wake. I want to hear of your mother. Or what you remember of her anyway. She sounds very much like my own mother.”

Sadi smiled brightly. “I would like that.” She said.

MAINLAND ENTRANCE TO CRANAE ISLAND CAUSEWAY TWO HOURS LATER

“... orders of the Galactic Court here in my hand!” The Kavalian Colonel demanded. “You must allow us access to the island and home of your boy Prince!”

The Durcunusaan Lieutenant stood there stoically, half a dozen Durcunusaan soldiers standing alertly behind him. There were a dozen Puma Bane Commandos and six Hadarian Elder Guard Militia among their group and none of them looked happy, least of all the bitch Buonau.

“That order does not apply to the island of Prince Androcles. Only the Royal Villa within Sparta sir.” The Durcunusaan Lieutenant spoke calmly. “Whoever you are looking for is not here on Cranae Island I’m sorry.”

“We do not know that!” The Colonel barked. “This is the order your Prince agreed to and you must adhere to what it sets forth! Now stand aside!”

The Lieutenant shook his head. “I don’t think so.” He spoke. “Our duty is to our Prince and the Royal Family, not to your puppet Galactic Court. Cranae Island is off limits to anyone who is not a Leonidas family member. Or did you actually believe we would allow you access to his home? You and your cohorts are not family members or friends for that matter so I will refuse you entrance.”

The senior Hadarian Elder Guard stepped up. “You are causing a situation that does not need to be.” He snapped. “The Galactic Court order, an order your Prince agreed too, authorizes us to enter any facility on this planet in search of the defectors.”

“Any facility that is not a sensitive military facility. The Prince’s home is. Whoever you are looking for... they aren’t here.” The Lieutenant spoke. “You can move along to your next stop.”

“Are we simply supposed to believe you?” The Hadarian hissed.

“I don’t give a sibfla what you believe Hadarian traitor!” The Lieutenant snarled. “Cranae Island you will not visit! Not while I am in command of this detail! File a formal complaint or a grievance or whatever else you care to file but be gone now.”

Buonau stepped forward; already angry over what had happened earlier with Duewa and rapidly losing all pretense of the cool, confident persona she had been hoping to emulate. “I grow tired of these games.” Buonau snapped. “The Galactic Court order is binding and you will step aside now or I will...”

“You will do what?” The voice barked from behind them.

Buonau and the Puma Bane troops whirled around and saw Androcles drop from the saddle on Elynth’s back, Eliani next to him and doing the same from Tharua. Tharua and Elynth were glaring at the Kavalian and Hadarian troops and making them very nervous. The two smaller dragons landed with ease beside the larger ones and Buonau’s eyes grew wide when she recognized Nara and Deion as Andro and Eliani helped them to jump to the ground from the saddles along with their brother Bryon. They watched as two more dragons came roaring in, Anthar and Majeir landing with graceful sweeps of their wings and Sadi, Ne’Veha, Lu’ria and Carisia quickly dismounting. Miath was next, Anja perched in his saddle with Retta and Calyb both sitting behind her and clutching her waist.

Buonau pushed her way through the Militia and Puma Bane soldiers to confront him as Anja settled to the ground and three more smaller dragons came swooping in to land. “You agreed to these searches!” Buonau snarled.

“I agreed to searches of non-sensitive military facilities.” Andro spoke. “My home does not fall within that category. Thanks to your Kavalian friends it has become a sensitive military facility now.”

“You expect us to believe that?” Buonau hissed.

“What you believe is not my concern Prime Minister.” Andro spoke as Anja moved up next to him holding Retta and Calyb’s hands and looking none too happy to see her. “It never has been my concern and it never will be.”

“You should just leave Buonau.” Anja spoke harshly. “Before things become less than pretty.”

“And your presence here with this butcher of our people is what?” Buonau snapped. “He killed nearly four million Hadarian civilians and you associate with him? You allow the heirs to the Hadarian throne to associate with him.”

Retta stepped forward and grabbed Andro’s free hand which was by his side. “He is our brother forn upae!” She snarled at the woman. “And you are stupid!” Buonau’s eyes nearly exploded from her head at this outburst.

“Retta!” Anja gasped but not without a small smile. “Your language!”

“This?” Buonau shouted. “This is how you raise your children? You are worse than even I thought! You should never have been made Queen! We were right in removing you! You are nothing but a whore now! You...”

Anja began to open her mouth as Miath’s wings snapped out to the sides with a loud, angry popping sound but Andro beat her to it. He stepped right up to Buonau, his fangs also extending to their full length and his eyes changing as he towered over the much shorter woman.

“Speak one more word of disrespect towards my mother Buonau and you will find yourself floating upside down in the Laconia Gulf as the creatures of the ocean use your body for a food source!” Andro snarled at her viciously. “Or do you think your simple elder Guard Militia will help you? Or your thug Kavalian troops? You are no longer on Hadarian Buonau. You are on our planet, among our people!”

“I demand that you surrender Retta and Calyb to me as the Galactic Court has ordered! Surrender them right now so that they may learn proper manners and how to act!” Buonau growled as fear raced through her chest.

“Nubous forn!” Calyb growled at her as his eyes changed and his fangs burst forth and he clutched Anja’s hand. “I will not let you take us anywhere! I won’t. I will protect my sister!” He barked out the words.

Andro smiled at his younger brother’s words. “Yes indeed Calyb.” He said. “Yes indeed fervon.” Andro turned and looked at Anja. “Mother... I will not have you listen to the ranting of this fool woman and her cohorts anymore. It is beneath you. Would you take everyone to the villa and then we can have breakfast as planned?”

Anja smiled sweetly and stepped up to Andro, leaning up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek with loving tenderness. “Thank you my son... I will do just that. I’m starving to all hell!” She spoke. “The air out here was beginning to smell a bit like rensibfla anyway.”

Anja lifted Calyb into her arms and looked at the Kavalians and Hadarian troops stilling blocking the entrance to the causeway, her jade green eyes narrowing. She turned her head. “Miath!”

Miath didn’t hesitate and folded his wings with another pop and then began marching right for the group of soldiers. They scrambled and stumbled to get out of his way or be crushed by his three and a half metric tons of muscle for he had no intention of stopping. They moved back even more as Tharua and Eliani followed Anja with Nara, Deion and Bryon. Sadi grasped Ne’Veha and Lu’ria’s hands and Carisia took her Drow Mistress’s hand and they too walked past the Kavalian troops with Anthar and Majeir right behind them. Soon it was just Andro and Elynth as Buonau turned back to face him and began to speak.

Andro cut her off.

“Be very careful about what you say next woman!” Andro snarled at her angrily. “You have already disrespected my mother far too much, and were you Lycavorian I would be well within my rights to pummel you into the dirt beneath your feet. You have courage Buonau, I’ll give you that. Not a whole lot of intelligence based on your actions... but you do have courage in one sense. The courage of those who consider themselves superior to others.” Andro stepped closer to her, causing her to back up slightly. “Do not make the mistake of thinking that I am like my father woman, for I am not. Utter another discordant word about my mother in my presence and I will tear your tongue from your mouth and you will never speak again. You and your... allies... are already defacing the homes of my family across all of Earth. They have allowed this by their decisions Buonau not me. You will not deface my home by leaving your foul stench and the stench of these Kavalians within its walls so that my mates have to tolerate it. I have bent all I am going to bend Buonau. You will never get Retta and Calyb. Ever. The sooner you realize that... the sooner you will come to see that you are not as safe as you believe yourself to be. You are here on Earth by my will alone... no one else’s. Every step you take upon the planet of my father and grandfather is a gift from me. Remember that. I suggest you take your daughter’s advice and finish what you came to do and then leave quickly.” Andro saw the look on her face. “Oh... did you think Duewa would not warn me that you were coming here?” He grinned. “Duewa has embraced her life here now. Nothing you do or say will change her mind. Nor will it change mine after what you have done. Be gone woman... be gone before I am no longer able to control my own anger and hatred of you and I close my fangs around your throat and tear out your windpipe while you look on. Then I will rip your heart from your chest and eat it in front of you as you die.” Andro’s nose twitched as the smell of a relaxed bladder wafted to him and he looked down to see the small wet spot under Buonau. He looked back up at her face. “Interesting.” He said. “I thought you were made of sterner stuff.”

Buonau watched him whirl around and in two leaps was upon Elynth’s back and settling into the saddle. “Heed my words this day Buonau. What you want and hope for will never bear fruit. I suggest you return to the Kavalian embassy and change into clothes more suited for the weather here in Greece. That stain can be seen for several dozen meters and someone might mistake it for you pissing in your pants.”

ULU ARCH DEMON

SIXTEEN HOURS FROM LAST JUMP INTO BETA QUADRANT

By the Prophets she missed them so.

She missed their touch, their laughter, and their smiles. She missed everything about them. And she missed his presence most of all. He was so powerful, so dominating, and yet he treated her as a precious flower. He treated all of them as precious flowers. She was not wolf and she could not feel what Sadi, Ne’Veha and Lu'ria could feel from his aura, but bless the prophets he could make her feel so loved within Mindvoice. The way his presence wrapped around her mind, sheltered her, stimulated her. Just as his hands and lips had done in so many ways. Caliria had known perhaps a dozen lovers in her three hundred years of life, and not one of them even came close to Androcles in size, skill and what he could make her feel. And he did it so effortlessly. Her Alkay did not affect him as it did other men. Yes... it could entice him and arouse him... but he was always in control. When his skin had been saturated with her Alkay, it only served to drive him to please her and the others further. Sadi told her that her Alkay must have acted as their scents did to him and to know that she affected him in this way and not make him willing to do whatever she wanted was thrilling to say the least. Even Sadi and the others had been affected and they had swarmed her with pleasure willingly and most delightfully. Pleasure she had returned to them with an almost uncontrollable need and desire that she had never felt before, even with Yssyla.

And then there were the messages from Sadi and the two small gifts she had discovered in her quarters.

Inamarno... I will be brief because I don't want to make this harder for you than it needs to be. We love you Caliria. He loves you. You are part of us and always will be from now on. I understand the clash that goes on within you Inamarno. How could you feel this way about us so quickly? So completely? I do not have that answer for you Inamarno... all I can say is that it is meant to be by whatever gods we both believe in. We can only hope that this time away from us will make you realize that we are what you need. Just as we need you. We miss you already and you have only just left Inamarno. We will wait however long it takes for you to balance within your heart and mind what you feel. Never doubt that. I only hope that it is quick.

Paga is there not to watch you or report to us anything. I have forbidden her from doing this Inamarno. Her only purpose is to protect you and if you wish it, try and be your friend. I have left some things for you. When Andro was still a child his parents gave to him a pendant. It is a Dragon's Heart pendant, shaped and molded from the heart of a dragon who went to the gods long ago. When I first came into his life he had this pendant split in two and gave me half. As we have found Carisia and Ne'Veha and Lu'ria and now you, Elynth has reformed, reshaped and separated this pendant so that each of us carries a single piece of it. It signifies our love and devotion to you Inamarno. To each other. Our eternal commitment to you and each other. If we fit all the pieces together it would once again form a complete heart. Wear it Inamarno... and perhaps it will help you to see what we already know. The other things are just some simple clothes and a single transmitter. No matter where you are, if there is a Lycavorian ship within the same sector and you press this... well just know you are a Princess of the Union and it will be acted upon. We love you Inamarno. Come back to us soon.

The 'simple' clothes had been several beautiful outfits that Caliria had already tried on. Two jumpsuits where the color and cut of the fabric hugged her lush body like a second skin and made the green in her eyes truly stand out. There was an elegant dress of casual nature and then a single white oversized shirt that could only be one of Andro's formal uniform shirts similar to what she had worn on Cranae Island. Caliria reached up and wrapped her fingers around the glittering blood red pendant that hung from the simple necklace of tightly woven Drow lace. It felt warm to the touch when she held it so tightly and Caliria thought she could feel an almost unnatural tingling through her fingers as she held it. She lifted her head and looked around the huge mess lounge of the ARCH DEMON seeing dozens of Lycavorians and elves and several different species she had not seen before coming onto this ship. All of them conversed easily with each other, intermingled as they were. There was laughter among them as they ate their breakfast and prepared for their duties. She had been treated as a Princess ever since she came on board and even the single female Durcunusaan soldier that was now her constant shadow remained inconspicuous and sat two tables over. She had not wanted this, but the young woman explained that she was not there to report back to Andro or keep an eye on her activities. He had forbidden her to do this just as Sadi had. Her single duty was to protect Caliria no matter what she did or decided. The way Paga had said it made it so Caliria could not help but believe her and her actions up until now had done nothing but reinforce that. Caliria had seen little of her sister Arduri, for she was spending nearly all of her time with Lisisa and Denali Leonidas. Arduri was smitten by them completely, and Caliria had never seen her sister so determined to have something she wanted. And she wanted them. It appeared they felt a similar emotion for Arduri, because whenever she saw them together they were laughing and holding hands with her.

“Caliria?” The soft voice spoke and Caliria looked up to see her father standing by her table holding a tray in his hands.

“Father.” Caliria responded.

“You sent word that you wanted to see me.” He said.

Caliria motioned with her hand to the chair across from her. “Yes.”

“Arduri wants nothing to do with me...” Coren spoke as he sat down. “And I can’t even open an internal COM channel to speak with you.”

Caliria met his eyes. “I asked that all COM channels to my quarters be blocked until I authorized them. Especially those from you.”

“Why?” Coren asked. “I thought we could talk and...”

“You thought you could convince me that the reasons I left were indeed right? That you could finally make me see that these men and women are the vilest enemy we have ever known? Yes I know father.” She rubbed her temple. “I needed time father. Time to think and put things in perspective. To reconcile what I think and feel about Androcles and the others.” Caliria said. “A simple perspective that I have never been allowed before because of you.”

Coren’s eyes narrowed. “I don’t understand.”

Caliria nodded. “Yes... at times neither do I.” She said. “I want to be around them father. I want to be with them. I want Andro’s arms wrapped around me. What I felt in his arms... in their arms is beyond anything I have ever known or will ever know.”

“So you have slept with him?” Coren asked. “With them?”

Caliria nodded. “And it was beyond glorious.” She replied. “But even then... even after that I still have questions and doubts because of what you raised us to believe for so long.”

Coren was silent for a long moment and then met her eyes. “I’m sorry Caliria.” He said softly. His words were delivered with heartfelt sincerity and this surprised her.

“What have you been doing father?” She asked him finally.

Coren looked taken aback by the question and he hesitated for a moment. “I... why?” He asked finally.

“You are not confined to your quarters father... I know this.” Caliria said. “Have you been out of your quarters before now? I know that you have spent a great deal of time using the Computer database.”

Coren’s eyes grew wider. “You are spying on me?” He asked almost angrily.

“No... not at all.” Caliria said. “It seems because I am considered a Princess of the Union by these men and women that I receive a copy of the same reports that Denali and Lisisa receive each morning. These reports have monitored your access to the ship’s central database just as they do with everyone on board. What have you been reading father?”

“Does it matter?” Coren asked.

“It does to me... if you tell me the truth.” Caliria told him.

“History.” Coren spoke finally.

“History?” Caliria pressed him.

Coren met her eyes and let out a long deep breath. It was almost a sigh of defeat Caliria noticed. “The databanks of this ship hold the entire history of the Lycavorian Union.” He said finally. “Aside from several files about this ship that are classified I was able to read quite a bit. Even some events that we did not know.”

“You sound different when you say that.” Caliria said. “The vitriol and hate for them is not as strong. Why is that father?”

“What does it matter?” Coren asked softly.

“It matters because these are things you drummed into my head as I grew father.” Caliria spoke. “These are things that you have espoused for centuries and so many believe what you say. These are things that have confused me to the point that I can not even make a decision to be with the man and the women who I ache for every minute of the day!”

“What?” Coren asked.

“Do you know what Andro told me before I left father?” Caliria asked him. “He told me that you hate his people. He can smell it on you. And he can smell it on me as well. I hate his people too father... and I don’t know why. Yet I love him and Sadi and the others with all that I am. That is why he sent me away... he said I needed to find the balance between what my heart is telling me and what my mind is telling me.”

“Caliria why are you...?” Coren began to speak. He stopped when Caliria took his hand.

“Papa, I know you are ashamed of me.” Caliria said. “I know that you having a daughter with black hair makes other Vanari look at you differently. It makes it harder for you among the SBR. I know all this Papa, but now I need you to answer a question for me. If you ever loved me... if you ever cared for me... I need you to answer my question truthfully and from your heart father.” She touched her temple once more. “And I will know if you are lying to me papa. It seems that my new abilities within Mindvoice grant me that knowledge. Answer my question papa... please.”

Coren met his daughter’s eyes and he nodded. “Very well.” He said softly.

“What caused you to hate them so?” Caliria asked. “What happened that made you not trust them and think of them as inferior? How did this ever take root within your mind? You are so open and understanding with others, yet with the Lycavorians you change completely. You become filled with hate and anger and distrust. Why? Tell me why papa? Help me to understand why this is.”

“I... I went to a Vanari Truthseer.” Coren spoke softly. “It was shortly before you were born.”

“A Vanari Truthseer?” Caliria gasped as she leaned back. “I thought... papa I thought you hated Vanari Truthseers. You have always called them mindless gypsy idiots who play on the emotions of others and The Prophets.”

Coren nodded. “Now I do yes. Back then... back then I did not.” He said. “She was an old woman... in the Eastern Markets of Mydala. Your mother had me down there shopping and she was among the more well known Truthseers. I don’t know why I did it... I saw her sitting there and the next thing I remember I was sitting in front of her.”

“What... what could she have said that caused you to feel as you do?” Caliria asked.

Coren looked at her. “She told me that you would be born with black hair. She told me that it would be many years before another child came. She told me I would lose your mother to a Lycavorian. She told me I would lose all my children to Lycavorians. To death. A father should not outlive their children!” Coren snapped softly before he looked at the table they were sitting at. “She told me that I would hate them so intensely it would blind me to the future and paths that our two peoples would share. And she told me that I would be the one to bring about that future or see it destroyed forever.” Coren looked up at her. “When I left her shop I was terrified Caliria. And when you were born...” He reached out and stroked her long black hair seeing her eyes go a little wider at his action. “When you were born with your beautiful black hair I became even more terrified. It’s happening right before my eyes! First Nirilo, then your mother and Naesta and now Arduri. She is never apart from them you know. And now you. Now I will lose you as well.” Coren lifted her hand between his then and lowered his lips to her skin to kiss her knuckles.

“I have... I have never been ashamed of you my beautiful Caliria. I have loved you from the moment you entered this life. I have let my fear of losing you... all of you... I have let that fear drive my actions and how I acted towards you. And all it has done is to drive you further away from me. The only way to keep this from happening I thought was to renounce it and to hate those who would be the perpetrators of such a heinous crime. But in hating them... in hating them and who they are, it caused me to hate all that I loved as well. In order to keep all of you from dying... I pushed you away with my actions. Ironic isn’t it? I call everyone fools who believe as Ardan and your mother do and I am the biggest fool of all for allowing this to happen as it has.”

Caliria looked at him in stunned silence as he held her hand. “You... you never told anyone this?” She gasped finally.

Coren chortled softly and lowered his hands, keeping her fingers intertwined with his for as long as she would allow him. “What would I tell them my daughter Caliria? That Coren Re Mydala, Regent and descendant of the founders of our capital city and those who helped to shape our people in the beginning... that I let the ranting of a gypsy woman guide all I have done for the last three hundred plus years? That her words so terrified me they changed me? They would think me utterly insane Caliria. Just as your mother and all of you now do.”

Caliria knew simply from looking at his face that he was telling her the truth. She shook her head slowly. “Why... why tell me all of this now?”

“Because you asked... and I am going to try and save you.” Coren answered.

“Save me?” Caliria asked.

Coren nodded. “Do you love him Caliria? Do you love them?”

Caliria met his eyes. “Yes! I... I think... I don’t know! Why do you care? You hate them papa. You always have.”

Coren looked around and then back to her. “Would you allow me to show you something I have discovered in my quarters?”

“What?” Caliria asked.

“It is better if I show you.” Coren spoke.

“What have you done papa?” Caliria asked.

“I have done nothing wrong. I told you I have been reading. It is what I have discovered that you will find interesting.” Coren said.

Caliria glanced quickly over to where Paga sat and saw the young woman watching her from her table. [Paga?] She spoke.

[He is your father Princess.] The female Durcunusaan officer spoke. [Perhaps now is the time to try and begin to heal the wounds of the past. It can only help you move into the future. Besides... he can not take you prisoner on the ship.]

[You would let me go?] Caliria asked.

[I have told you before... more than anything I am here to protect you and try to be your friend. Not tell you what to do or report to anyone. This is a decision you must make.] Paga answered.

Caliria turned back to her father. “Show me.” She stated.

“... old flight plans and logs?” Paga asked the Operations officer.

The man nodded. “Mostly transport ships. Equipment transactions as well. Declassified stuff. He seems pretty computer savvy but he has not tried to break any encryption. Not that he could even if he tried.”

“What kind of transactions?” Paga asked.

“Hadarian medical equipment mostly.” The officer answered.

“How far back?” Paga asked.

“He’s stayed within the past decade. Aside from several history cubes... this is what he has been accessing ever since he came aboard.” The man replied.

“Which history cubes?” Paga asked.

“The Black Day. Anything related to our time as slaves to the Coven. The beginning of the Rebellion and King Resumar. He also reviewed the standard data file on Prince Androcles. He asked for several restricted files but was refused obviously.” The man told her.

“Which ones?”

“Mostly about Prince Androcles’s actions in The Evolli War. Alba Tau. And the Battle of Gemora there at the end of the war. Several inquiries into the HMR data bases.”

Paga stepped back from the man’s console and smiled softly. “He’s putting it together.” She said softly.

“What? He’s putting what together?” The officer asked.

Paga looked at him. “The truth.” She said. “Or what he believes is the truth. He’s in for a surprise I think.”

“...have been going through hundreds of old transport logs and equipment transactions.” Coren spoke as he sat at the console and began typing on the control pad. The screen came alive quickly at his touch. “All of it is declassified. Some military data logs as well. I began this on Earth to pass the time.”

Caliria looked at him. “This is what you have been doing father? Why?”

“Wait!” Coren spoke. “Look here... five years ago a Hadarian transport was lost in what was reported as a sub space anomaly. It was lost on the border of the Bontawillian species, who are now members of the Union after hundreds of years of being allies but non-members.”

“So?” Caliria said.

“The ship was loaded with medical equipment that was destined for a military facility along the coreward border. A forward base I would guess.” Coren spoke. “Sixty thousand metric tons of equipment.

Among the equipment that was lost were three Hadarian Medical Research computers and two Molecular Synthesis Converters.”

“Ok.”

“Molecular Synthesis Converters are used in disease research by the Hadarian Healers.” He told her. “And their Research Computers are the most advanced medical databases I have ever seen. I wasn’t able to access all of their files but what I did see was amazing. Just the unrestricted data files hold more knowledge than our entire medical library.”

“Father... what are you driving at?” Caliria asked him.

“At the exact same time, two Lycavorian civilian frigates on a registered flight plan to Apo Prime encountered another sub space anomaly four light years away. They vanished for exactly twelve hours.” Coren told her. “They reappeared on the exact same course for Apo Prime, but three minutes after reappearing on Union sensors they reported varying damage and altered course for the planet Beklan Two. A planet that had been attacked by Kavalians nearly fifteen years before and was still undergoing heavy construction as they rebuilt.”

“I don’t understand what this all means father.” Caliria asked.

“Those two ships never arrived on Beklan Two and they were never reported as missing.” Coren told her. “I have found three other instances with similar circumstances over the past five years Caliria.”

“What are you getting at?” She asked him.

“I know about the disease that the Eridiani woman’s family was infected with.” Coren spoke. “You can not keep something like that secret on a ship Caliria. No matter how large. I also know enough from listening to you talk of your research on other projects that twisting a Vanari disease to be used against other species takes specialized equipment. Scientific and medical equipment we, as a people, do not have. The same type of equipment needed to find a counter agent to the chemical compound the OSG uses against our people. When your sister and mother gave your research into the OSG compound to Androcles’s Hadarian mother she found a counter agent within hours using her equipment and computers.”

“Yes... so?” Caliria asked.

“That is the Lycavorian connection Caliria.” Coren spoke. “It has taken me hours to put all of this together. It is all I have done since I have been on this ship.”

“Papa you have spent the better part of two days trying to find a connection between the Lycavorian people and a Vanari disease that was twisted by the OSG into a weapon?” Caliria asked harshly. “All this to prove that your theories about them are correct?”

Coren looked at her and stood up. “What? No!” He declared. “That’s not it at all!” He turned back to the computer and typed quickly. “I have done this to try and save you! To save my family!”

Caliria watched him for a moment, seeing how he typed furiously on the pad. This was not about trying to prove guilt; this was truly about him trying to save what he thought lost to him. She stepped forward and placed her hand on his arm. “Papa... stop.” She said.

“There is more.” He stated quickly. “I don’t care about the Lycavorians. I only want to... I only want to save those I love! It’s all I have left!”

Caliria squeezed his arm tighter. “Papa!” She spoke finally drawing his attention to her and away from the console.

Coren looked at her and she saw moistness in those eyes. She saw tears in those eyes. It was something she had never seen from her father in all of her life. “I have failed you Caliria! I should have embraced you when you were born and not scorned you! Look what my vanity has done to me? It drove your mother away and ultimately into the arms of a Lycavorian! A man she loves far more than she ever loved me. I spent so much time and effort in trying to keep all of you away from them and it drove all of you right to them! And I hate them for it more and more each day! That damn gypsy was right! She was right!”

Caliria reached into the thigh pocket on her jumpsuit and pulled out the holodisc and data pad. “Papa... let me show you something.” She said.

“I will not view a list of letters from my children telling me they never wish to see me again.” Coren hissed softly as he wiped his eyes. “I won’t!”

“You need to see this Papa.” Caliria spoke as she stepped around him with the data pad and inserted the holodisc into the computer on his desk.

The holodisc on the floor flared to life and in seconds Coren was looking at the crystal clear image of a frozen Androcles Leonidas. He appeared to be standing in an office of some sort. He looked quickly at Caliria. "Caliria what..."

"Just watch papa." She said before tapping the computer once more. "I have not watched all of it, only the first minute or so. Andro wanted us to view it together but until now I had not found the right time to bring it to you. Now is the time I suppose." She activated the holodisc and Andro's image began to speak.

"Where to begin Coren Re Mydala." Andro spoke as his image unfroze and he began to speak. "I find myself admiring your resolve sir."

Coren's eyes grew wide at the very respectful tone that Androcles was speaking with. It was something he had not been accustomed to.

"Your contentions about my people are for the most part false, but you hold to them without hesitation and as my father has taught me, that is the sign of a strong willed man with strong beliefs."

Coren watched as Andro settled onto the top of the desk, the data pad in his hand.

"I do not begin to understand where the source of your hatred for me and my people begins sir, and as I have told you before, I don't really care. I do not mean that to be disrespectful in any way, only that I will not go into a litany of who we are and what we have experienced in our long history just to try and impress you. Perhaps one day you will find the time to read our history and come to understand us better. I also do not pretend to know or understand all of the Vanari traditions, but I can not help to see the similarities between our people. Perhaps not so much in what we believe, but in how we believe it sir. Does that make sense?" Andro shook his head within the recording. "To be honest I find myself far out of my depth in any sort of philosophical discussion. They always give me a head ache. I believe what I believe. Yet now... now I find myself in the position of trying to convince you of what I just said I wasn't going to try to convince you of. That what you have come to believe to be true about my people is in fact not true. Ironic isn't it? Unfortunately what Inamarno has undoubtedly given to you if you are viewing this does not lend a whole lot of support to what I am trying to say and accomplish. It puts me behind the power curve so to speak."

Coren watched him set the data pad he held on his desk and then move to the counter where he poured himself a mug of the coffee he liked so much. He sipped it for a long moment and then moved back to settle once more on the desk top.

"I am about to make you a convert Coren Re Mydala, or perhaps make you one of the strongest enemies that I have, because as a politician I would put you in the same category and breath as I do my Aunt Deia and my mother Dysea. I am so far out of my depth when it comes to politics it isn't even funny." Andro continued with a grin. "You have one of the keenest minds I have ever known sir and I can only hope that you respond with this intellect and not your emotions to what I'm going to tell you. You may not believe me when I say I hold you in the highest of regard sir, but it is the truth. I know you could not have risen to your position without garnering respect from others for your actions and my father and mothers have always taught my siblings and I to acknowledge that respect no matter what."

Coren watched him take a deep breath.

"My people have betrayed yours Coren Re Mydala. We have betrayed you in a manner which those within the Union, most especially my people and the elves, consider monstrous. The data pad that Inamarno has given you contains certain information. Information which links the Protectorate and even some here in the Union with the design and manufacture of the Vanari Facara Virus into a bioweapon. A bioweapon that was used recently by the OSG on the Faith family. Whether it was done intentionally or not is of little concern me. What does concern me is that the equipment used to manufacture this weapon is of Hadarian make. Which means contact between the Alpha and Beta quadrant has been going on for longer than either of us knew. It also means that Lycavorians from the Protectorate have been collaborating with Lycavorians from the Union in the taking of Vanari females to be sold into slavery.”

Coren glanced at the data pad with wide eyes and quickly looked at Caliria. His eyes cut back to Andro when he began speaking again.

“You would think that nearly eighteen thousand years as slaves to the High Coven... that this would somehow make all of us hate slavery in any form.” Andro continued. “But this kind of slavery... it is an atrocity because it forces Vanari females into the same form of sexual slavery that we fought for so long to rid ourselves of while oppressed by the High Coven. Our females were taken at random, elven females as well, raped and beaten by the Coven soldiers for years, and when their use to them was finished they became food for them. Butchered like a dog in the street. When my grandfather died at Thermopylae here on Earth, that is when we truly began to throw the High Coven off our backs. One of the first actions my Aunt Deia and the newly elected Senate did was to outlaw slavery in any shape or form. Rape became more depraved a crime than even murder, among my people and the elves especially, but among all the species and races that called the Union home. It has been obliterated from existence whenever it has been found and those involved either executed or sentenced to life imprisonment at hard labor. I know this may sound rather malicious and barbaric to you, but it shows you how the majority view this act even now after so many millennia have passed. I will not stand here and make excuses for my people sir; for those who have perpetrated this upon the Vanari, and the only thing I can offer is my sincere apology for every Vanari female taken from their families and friends while Lycavorians have been part of this.”

Coren watched as he set the coffee mug on the desk and stood up.

“I will also tell you... this will not go unpunished sir.” Andro spoke. “That is the reason why Dutkne is returning with you. Now you will ask the same question Inamarno asked of me and I will tell you what I told her. Dutkne and I are connected within Mindvoice in a similar manner to how I am connected to my mates. It has been this way for many thousands of years among my people, beginning with Wayonn and my great grandfather Sumar. Dutkne and I are able to sense things from each other, and if he was involved in this in any way I would have been able to detect it. To be honest he was even more aghast than I was for the simple reason that he has not lived through the oppression of the High Coven as so many men and women that I know have. He asked to return under the guise of speeding the merger of the Protectorate into the Union, so that he could track down and find those responsible for this act and so many like it. When he does he will contact me with the names of every individual within Union borders who has had a hand in this. Those he finds from the Protectorate, he will deliver to the justice of the Vanari people. Those from the Union will be lined up against a wall and treated as the rabid animals they are and executed without any exception.” Andro lifted the pad from the desk and held it up. “This pad... which you should now have in your hands... it also lays down a path of facts that bring me to the conclusion that there are those within your very own government who are also involved. Perhaps more than a handful as we suspect. Individuals who are very high up sir. One of whom I believe to be Regent Ardan.”

“Ardan!” Coren wheezed out the name.

“I know you will find this very hard to believe sir and in your position I would probably feel the same.” Andro continued. “But know this... I love your daughter sir. We love her. She is part of me, part of us within here, and here.” Coren watched him touch his chest and his head. “I do not try to understand anymore how I am like I am sir, only that I am. Trust me... there are times when I wish for none of what I know and I wish only to be normal. That is not meant to be it seems. As I have told others recently, being born fully aware with the life experiences and memories going back some ten thousand years is not exactly conducive with having a normal life. If you believe nothing I have told you, please believe that I would never endanger one who I consider to be my wife and mate regardless of what she may feel towards me in return. I would be doing this even if I already knew that Inamarno would never come back to us.”

Coren glanced at Caliria as her hands went to cover her mouth and tears began to stream down her cheeks.

Andro tossed the pad onto the desk once more. “So there you have it sir.” He spoke. “In your hand you hold the information that could confirm everything you have always believed about my people. And in having this information you have the means to insure there will never be any sort of meaningful relations between our two peoples. This data would confirm for everyone what you have been saying for years and you would be a hero among your people. It would not change what I have told my brother and sister to insure even should you decide to follow the beliefs you have always held about my people.

“No matter what you decide Coren Re Mydala, and firmly I believe and I trust that you will act in the manner that you feel you need to and in the interests of what is best for the Vanari people... but no matter what you decide the OSG will cease to be a problem for the Vanari people.

“The ship you are on now sir, it is one of seventy-three ships that have accompanied you under Shroud. A reinforced Union Strike Wing under my brother Denali’s command. His orders from me are very specific, as are Dutkne’s instructions. No matter your actions sir, when you make your decision in regards to the path you must follow, my brother Denali will turn those ships with him and all of the Protectorate’s forces against the Eridiani and the OSG. We will do this as allies to the Vanari people or in retribution for them because of what the Eridiani and the OSG have done. When Denali is finished there will be precious little remaining of the Eridiani military such as it is, or the OSG. I will make them pay for what they have made your people suffer for so long. I will make them pay for staining the honor of my grandfather and my great-grandfather for their insidious actions by involving my people in this. And I will insure that Inamarno and every Vanari female will never have to suffer the fear of being removed from those that she and they love so much. Namely you and her mother and every other Vanari parent out there.”

Andro turned fully to face the holodisc. “That is it sir. As my mother Anja says quite often, the ball is in your stadium now.”

“Court.”

The female voice Coren recognized as Eliani Leonidas came from out of view of the transmission.

“The ball is in your court.”

Andro nodded. “Yes... that too.” He stated. “We love you Inamarno. And we will always love you for as long as we have years in this life. Goodbye.”

“By the grace of all the Prophets of our people!” Coren Re Mydala stammered the phrase he had not spoken in nearly four hundred years as he looked at his daughter, shaken to his very core. Caliria’s cheeks were stained with tears and she met his eyes. “Where... how... where are such people forged Caliria?”

“In legends Papa.” She answer through her tears. “Only in legends.”

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
INQUISITOR
HIGH COVEN SECURE SPACE
5.3 LYs FROM UZU OZEIB 7

It was helping her skills return at a much faster pace Yuri thought as she used the shadows to move down the corridor of the ship, avoiding crewmembers and at times listening to them talk amongst themselves. The High Coven Weapons Master had been demanding and harsh on her, retuning her hand-to-hand skills as well as those with a blade. She had requested this days ago, but not until she had discovered Pa'cour had she put much effort into it. Once she had been considered one of the premier combatants with a blade and in using the shadows. Now she was getting that back in preparation for her future. She had become refocused in her life, determined and resolute. She had an opportunity of a lifetime, a second chance that so many never received, and Yuri wasn't about to let it slip away as she had so many times in the past. Aikiro and Veldruk had been ruthless in raising her she now saw as she looked back. No matter what they had done, or how often they had used her for their own grabs at power, they had hardened her. Sending her to Earth, having her own brother rape her, the tasks they had given her, all of it was designed to make her as unfeeling and as ruthless as they were. All of it done to better control her.

Well they had succeeded in that endeavor, but they had also failed miserably as well.

They had failed because their arrogance and the mentality that they were perfect had allowed one small thing to slip through the cracks. Something that neither of them had ever expected or imagined. Yuri grinned to herself as she realized her mother must have been rolling over in whatever grave she resided in, wherever that was. They had allowed the one thing that could save her to remain in her life. Hidden and silent and waiting until the day it was needed. As she unwrapped the shadows from around her body, startling several crewmembers who were in the corridor as well, Yuri could think of nothing else. She passed her hand over the control panel of the separate quarters she had been using since leaving the Blood Vat and the door slid open soundlessly. She knew that rumors were floating about all over the ship in regards to why she did not stay with her husband Admiral Moran in their much larger stateroom, but now Yuri did not care about them; or him for that matter. She had become almost paranoid in her actions, insuring that everything she did was as perfect in each way as she could make it. She sat very dutifully in the meetings with Robert and the other officers on the ship as they discussed their strategy and how they would return to Uzu Ozeib 7 in victory. She commented when she felt the need, usually with a harsh comment or command and she watched as they all sat there and realized that their Princess was almost back to her ruthless self. They were letting the petty politicians on the Coven homeworld basically sign their own death warrants as the struggles for power continued. The military was somewhat worrisome, as many senior Coven commanders were beginning to question what Robert and his advisors were doing and why. They still had an incredible force behind them, but with events within the Union beginning to become more and more known, the military officers were advocating using this distraction by the Union to launch a full scale assault against the Kavalians before they were ready.

And more and more Robert was taking Dante's advice.

Yuri could sense Xaxon within her oldest son, struggling in trying to maintain control of a mind that had not been shaped to hold his essence. Dante's own thirst for power and glory only fueled Xaxon's control of him; but it did not help Xaxon to establish dominance over him just yet. Dante was lost to her Yuri knew. Even if Xaxon released him for some reason, Dante was sadly beyond help. He had allowed the fingers of Xaxon's control to become deeply set within his own psyche, and as time passed, Xaxon would take more and more from him until nothing remained but the physical shell under Xaxon's control. This is what they had planned for her Yuri knew, and in that respect Yuri found herself thanking Androcles Leonidas for killing her. If not for him, what was happening to her son would be happening to her. It pained Yuri to know that she could not help her son, but these last hours and days had shown her that there was nothing she could do. Javier was dead because of orders she had given, Lucia and Carisia now members of the Leonidas family along with her sister Narice, because they had found there was more to life than domination and power. They had found what they had been secretly seeking and none of them would ever return. Yuri felt a momentary pang of regret for how she had treated her children, especially Carisia, but she pushed it down. This was not the time to linger on past sins she knew. Yuri had a chance now, and she was going to take it and make it work.

Her head came up when she caught the delectable scent of his warm blood and then two powerful arms were sweeping her up into their embrace. An embrace she had ached for now for hours. This is what her mother and father had failed to see, the beacon of love and hope. Yuri responded eagerly as Pa'cour's soft, thin lips came down on hers and he crushed her lithe body to his. His kisses were professions of his feelings for her, a healing balm that swept over her as she wrapped her arms around his wide shoulders and returned his kiss with equal fervor as he pressed her back gently against the bulkhead. Her legs went around his waist, her booted feet pressing inward against his powerful hips and ass and drawing him closer to her as her breasts pressed firmly against his maddeningly broad chest. One of his large hands came up behind her head, his fingers sinking into her rich black hair, pulling her head closer with gentle pressure. Their time together since Robert's return had been fleeting, but they had certainly made the most of it. He had taken her in a darkened work conduit in the fleeting hours of the morning just yesterday while she kept them hidden within the shadows. Yuri's blood still sang at the power and pleasure that had swept through her until he had exploded, buried within her body and they had shared blood at the peak. His spicy blood was like an addiction for her now, and she also knew it was giving her the added resolve and strength to fully accept what was going on around her. She had gone ahead with his permission and established a single powerful Mindvoice connection with him, opening her mind to his and surrendering the last bit of her old self to the void. He knew all there was to know about her now, and this only seemed to make him love her more.

Yuri cooed against his lips as she felt his abdomen press against her groin causing her desire to flare. There was something utterly divine about being utterly filled with fifteen thick inches of glorious Immortal cock that Yuri would now never be able to explain or live without. Now that she had grown accustomed to his immense size, there was nothing left but cataclysmic pleasure, no matter what position he took her in. Pa'cour didn't just fuck her silly, he feasted on her. He didn't just make love to her, he possessed her completely. And when his fangs sank into her neck at the moment of their release it was rapturous every time. They didn't have time right now she knew, but Yuri fully intended to devour this man equally, and see how much of his beautiful cock she could take within her throat for starters.

Their lips slowly came away and she nibbled his upper lip like a young, giddy schoolgirl relishing in the fact that she could act this way now. She brought her hands up and stroked his cheek, the gray color of his semi wrinkled skin not even registering in her mind anymore. Only the intensity of the love for her in those devastating dark eyes. Robert had never looked at her the way Pa'cour did. She had never seen the complete and absolute devotion to her that she saw in Pa'cour's eyes. Phraktos... he could make her wet just by gazing at her as he did now.

"I missed you." She whispered to him. "Phraktos I have missed you."

Pa'cour smiled as he gazed at her surreal beauty. "No more than I have missed you." He replied. "Speaking within this connection we now have is awkward to me."

Yuri smiled as she stroked his cheek and the skin of his neck. "It will become easier with time my Immortal love." She said.

"And no one can hear us?" Pa'cour asked her.

Yuri shook her head. "Not unless we allow them in. Xaxon is too focused on trying to establish full control of Dante to take notice. He is struggling with it because Dante was not schooled as I was for so long. No one else on this ship has a strong enough ability within Mindvoice to detect it. And I grow stronger every day."

"We are not normally able to do this Yuri. My people." Pa'cour told her. "How is it that I can now? And so easily it seems."

"Your people... Akruvians... you have always had a powerful resistance to Mindvoice abilities. Your natural shields would take decades for vampires to be able to use and control, yet you do it naturally. Once we... once we shared blood it was a simple matter because then I could trace your shields and reinforce them and be part of them." Yuri leaned forward fast as a whip and let her now extended fangs nick the skin of his neck just enough to draw a single drop of blood. She quickly licked that drop up and savored it before she swallowed. "Your blood is... it is like a drug to me now Pa'cour. I've never tasted anything sweeter or so spicy." She said with a smile.

Pa'cour chuckled as he lowered her to the deck. "Well... you may have as much as you wish as long as you don't kill me. I rather like your blood as well."

Yuri smiled as she put her feet on the deck once more and she wrapped her arms around his waist and buried her face in his chest inhaling deeply of his manly smell and the faint smell of his blood. She smiled as his arms held her still and she took a deep breath before pushing away, reluctant to let go of the true emotions and sensations she had never felt before. She looked up into his face. "You took a risk coming here my love." She said realizing how easily those two words came to her now.

Pa'cour nodded. "Perhaps... but I have information that you should know and I wanted to see you. I may not be able to wrap the shadows around myself as you, but I have learned how to get around undetected in my many years of life. It is a necessity at times." He finished with a proud look.

Yuri laughed softly at his expression and turned to go further into the quarters, pulling him with her hand. "I have information as well." She said moving to the couch while he did release her hand and move to the bar to pour them glasses of Nau'shindcal d'I'Vlos. She waited for him to return to the couch and she took the glass from his hand. "Their paranoia is still paralyzing them." She said as she took a sip. "They can not make up their minds on when to return."

Pa'cour looked at her intently as he sat down. "Moran is not usually so indecisive." He said. "Why does he wait to return?"

"I don't know for sure... but I think it has to do with how much time he is spending with Dante. The residual echoes within Mindvoice are confusing for him and he can not focus as long as Xaxon struggles to control Dante." Yuri answered. "They will be too late when they do decide I think."

Pa'cour looked at her. "What do you mean?"

"Narice has returned to High Coven space Pa'cour." Yuri told him. "I sensed her only fleetingly, like an echo in a large room, but it was her. And she is far stronger than when she left too."

"What? How?" He asked.

Yuri shook her head. "I don't know. Ever since... ever since our first night together my mind has been so clear and focused. It is like you removed all the obstacles that were clouding my judgment. Some of it may be residual effects from having that bastard Xaxon within me for so long but I'm more focused than I have ever been Pa'cour. I feel stronger and more in control of my actions and my mind."

"Why... why would she return Yuri?" Pa'cour gasped. "Why now? A sneak attack?"

Yuri shook her head. "No... that is not her style." She said rising to her feet and pacing to the counter before turning back around and looking at him. "If she has returned then we do not have much time my love."

"Time for what?" Pa'cour asked.

"Narice is the wife of Arrarn Leonidas Pa'cour and there is no possible way Androcles would let her return." Yuri said thoughtfully. "Unless he was making his move against the Coven for what happen to his sister."

Pa'cour rose up and walked over to stand in front of her. "How would he know what was happening Yuri? How would he know this is the time to...?" Pa'cour stopped talking and her eyes lifted to his. "A traitor. A traitor within the inner circle!"

Yuri nodded. "Or someone on Uzu Ozeib 7." She spoke. "Someone high enough to know what is going on with us... and the power play that is beginning to happen. Someone who has been in place for a very long time if they have this kind of access. Someone my mother never suspected or discovered."

"What could she hope to accomplish?" Pa'cour asked. "The Union has neither the will nor the ability to project their power so far from their own borders."

"Are you so sure my love?" Yuri asked him. "If I learned nothing in my time with Martin Leonidas... it was that he was master at hiding secrets. Secrets that he could use against his enemies in any number of ways. His son Androcles is almost a perfect mirror of him, albeit one who is far crueller than his father in dealing with his enemies and those who threaten whom he loves and cares for. And Martin Leonidas is a monster when it comes to that."

Pa'cour's eyes narrowed somewhat as his mind raced with scenarios and he shook his head. "It couldn't be." He said finally.

"What couldn't be?" Yuri asked.

"A report that we received yesterday from High Coven command." Pa'cour told her. "The command ship of Admiral Pontal went off the grid for nearly a dozen hours. When his Fleet's Second Officer was questioned about this, he answered that Pontal had taken down the power to his ship to run emergency drills."

"Is that so unusual?" Yuri asked. "Given his history and training regime... this does not strike me as odd."

"It is unusual if it's Pontal." Pa'cour answered. "Yuri this man is a masterful tactician and part of the reason the Coven still survives. He would not need to power down his entire ship to conduct emergency drills. And most certainly not his communications array. The vast majority of his crew could do their individual jobs in their sleep and half crippled. They are the finest crew anywhere within the Coven. His entire combined fleet command is superbly trained. And why just his ship?"

"You think... you think he met with Narice?" Yuri asked.

"Does the time coincide with when you felt her?" Pa'cour asked.

"More or less yes." Yuri answered as her eyes grew wider. "Pa'cour... do you know what this means?"

Pa'cour nodded. "Nothing good I can tell you that." He said. "Pontal has the unfettered respect and support of five additional Combined Fleet Commanders. He trained most of them. Nearly twelve hundred warships, perhaps three thousand fighters, and over two million well seasoned ground forces just in his command alone. A varied combination of clone and mixed pureblood and turned vampires. Perhaps an equal number in the other commands as well. They have held the Coven borders in their sectors almost by themselves. Pontal has never been the stereotype pureblood Yuri. He avoids your homeworld like it is full of the plague and it is said he once told your father he was a fool when it came to tactics."

Yuri's eyes grew wide. "You jest!" She exclaimed.

"That is what is said." Pa'cour spoke. "He is very outspoken that we are prosecuting the war with the Kavalians in the wrong way. He has been for some years. Your mother and Moran never did anything to him because of his proven combat and leadership abilities. It is also rumored that he first turned a young human female who had caught his eye and then he made her his wife."

"His wife? Really?" Yuri asked.

Pa'cour nodded. "That is what is said."

Yuri stared at him for a long moment. "Pa'cour... if what you say is true then Narice has not returned to attack the High Coven." Yuri stammered. "She means to attempt to take control of the Coven with the support of the Lycavorians and possibly Pontal and those who follow him as their commander."

Pa'cour looked at her with wide dark eyes. "Androcles Leonidas would do this Yuri?" He asked in shock. "He would support this? I thought you said he hated vampires."

"He hates me." Yuri said quickly. "He doesn't hate all vampires. He took my daughter as his wife Pa'cour... that ought to tell you something. Carisia is a pureblood that has my blood in her veins and he took her as his wife. Some intelligence data has reported she has fought beside him on more than one occasion and she is often seen in public with him. Lycavorians do not hate vampires as a whole, only those who try to kill them or hurt those they care for. Only... only vampires like me."

"Yuri that was not..." Pa'cour began.

Yuri shook her head quickly. "I know... but I don't think that distinction will matter to him." Yuri turned and moved to the window in her quarters. "It makes perfect sense Pa'cour. He supports Narice's bid for power... and with Pontal backing her as well... he would need to supply only a few dozen ships in order to show his support for her. Ships that they could spare easily. It would most certainly mean civil war, but the majority of the younger generations of vampires would throw their lot behind Narice without question. They loved her before all of this happened Pa'cour. She was the face of those who wanted to change things. To make living conditions and centuries old laws go away." She turned back to face him.

"What is your role in all this Yuri?" Pa'cour asked.

Yuri met his eyes calmly and confidently. "My desire to rule anything died the moment Androcles Leonidas killed me Pa'cour. The only thing I desire now... the only thing I want is to get away from all this. To escape with you and try to regain some of what I once was before my father and mother made me a monster with their actions. Your love for me has made me see that Pa'cour. And my... my love for you is screaming at me to do this before this life ends up killing me as it has killed my father, mother and brother."

"I will not let that happen Yuri." Pa'cour told her. "Never."

Yuri smiled at him. "Robert has more support yes... but that will matter not if they can not utilize the many shipyards and bases to supply and plan. These are things that Pontal would seize immediately and..." Yuri stopped. "Vith!" She swore. Pa'cour watched as she moved to the secure COM array and began stabbing commands onto the console.

"Yuri what is it?" Pa'cour spoke.

"All of our collected research from the Mindvoice ship in Kavalian space." Yuri snapped. "I ordered it copied and moved to a secondary research facility away from the main shipyard my mother had built for that purpose."

"So?" Pa'cour asked.

"Narice knows of the main shipyard and the secondary facility Pa'cour!" Yuri declared. "If Narice knows then Androcles knows. They will target that shipyard first to keep the research data out of our hands!"

“Yuri that shipyard is twenty kilometers long and eight kilometers wide.” Pa'cour said. “It would take an entire Fleet Group to even think of destroying it. The Lycavorians could never get one of their Fleet Groups that deep into Coven space without being detected.”

“I'm not ready to take that risk.” Yuri said quickly. “And I will not let that research fall into Robert's hands. He cannot be allowed to have it. There's no telling what Xaxon would have Dante build with it!”

The small monitor on the desk came alive with the face of a young pureblood as she finished speaking. “Princess Yuri!” The man spoke clearly surprised. “This is... this is a surprise.”

“Professor Lidene.” Yuri said calmly.

“Princess... Princess I am sorry we have not completed the move.” The man stammered. “The ships are loaded but I have been...”

“Lidene listen to me.” Yuri cut the man off remaining calm. Before all that had happened to her, before Pa'cour, she would have been tearing the scientist a new asshole for not following her orders to the letter. “I want you to execute the move now and all of the copied data and your research team have downloaded to the station delete. Once that is done I need you to move to the planetary facility in the Holmar system.”

“The Holmar system?” He asked. “Princess... that research facility has not been used in nearly two hundred years!”

Yuri nodded. “I know... and only four people know it exists. Two of whom are now dead Lidene.” She said. “This may seem like a strange request coming from me Lidene, especially after the way I have treated you and many of your staff through the years, but I am doing this to try and save them. Hell take as many as you think you can... their families as well but I need you to be leaving the station you are on now within six hours.”

“Six hours?” Lidene gasped.

Yuri nodded. “A storm is coming Lidene. A storm is coming and the data and materials you have cannot fall into the wrong hands. And my husband Admiral Moran is the wrong hands believe me. I'm trying to save what I can before that happens.”

“Forgive me Princess... this is a highly unusual request.” He spoke. “Admiral Moran has contacted me personally and told me to report to him should anyone question what we are doing or give any orders not approved by him or try to access our files. He... he mentioned you specifically Princess.”

Yuri glanced at Pa'cour and shook her head before turning back to the monitor. “Lidene, who is Princess of the High Coven?” She asked sternly.

“You... you are Milady.” He answered.

“I have treated you and your staff harshly Lidene.” Yuri spoke. “To be honest... I have been a complete bitch to all of you! I am trying... I am trying to make amends for that now Lidene.”

“Admiral Moran told me he would see to it I was drained of blood and thrown into a radiation tank if I did not do as he asked.” Lidene said.

“Lidene... only you and I now know of that facility in the Holmar System.” Yuri spoke calmly. “With my mother and Tesand now dead there has been a division of those that remain loyal to her in how to move forward. My hus...” Yuri caught herself before finishing that word. It left a bad taste in her mouth and her face grimaced in hatred just by speaking that partial word. “Admiral Moran is leading the part that wants to continue with how things have been Lidene.” She continued. “I have come to the realization that things need to be different. Do you wish to be incinerated by the shock wave and blast when that station you are on is destroyed?” Yuri asked him.

“Certainly not!” Lidene replied.

“Then do as I ask you Professor.” Yuri spoke. “Things will be different Lidene... for I am different now. You must do this and not tell Admiral Moran. If you do... he will order you and everyone on your staff executed. Your families as well. I don't want to see that happen. Do as I ask and do it within the next six hours.”

It was an easy decision and Lidene nodded his head. “I will make it so Princess.” He spoke firmly.

“Contact me on my personal channel when you have reached the station.” She told him. “I will not be on this ship when you arrive.”

“Not be on the ship?” Lidene asked. “Where will you be?”

Yuri nodded her head. “It's a long story. Suffice it to say that I will be disappearing for a time Lidene. For my own safety. Once you have left the station, have your research ships strip their transponders and go dark. Engage your Shrouds and then use a meandering path to take you to the Holmar System. Take what you need from the stores on the station but do so quietly. When you are on your way, contact me and I will send you data that will unlock a dozen buried bunkers within the facility and there you will find enough supplies and equipment to last a year. Do not leave the Holmar System for anything Lidene; it will be far too dangerous for you. I want you to continue your work however. Especially on the many weapons systems you told me you could devise.” She said. “Are we clear Lidene?”

Lidene nodded quickly. “I’ll begin making the preparations right now Princess. We will be gone in six hours... I promise you.”

“Very well.” Yuri said softly. “I wish to be clear to you Lidene... I will protect you and those with you to the best of my ability but you must do what I say. Be mindful of everything Lidene and above all else be careful.”

Lidene nodded. “Yes Milady.”

Yuri terminated the transmission and looked at Pa'cour as he moved up closer to her. “Will he do it?” He asked.

Yuri nodded. “If there is one thing I have learned about scientists... it is that they think too much of themselves to do anything that might risk their lives.” She answered. “He will do as I say.”

“I have been transferring supplies to your personal G9 Runner for the last three days.” Pa'cour said. “Tweaking the systems as well. I will deliver more to it tonight. We can be ready to leave in six hours if that is what you wish.”

Yuri met his eyes and then folded herself into his arms. “I don’t think we have much choice now.” She said as she pressed her face against his uniform shirt. “We still must be careful Pa'cour my love. I would not be able to stand losing you now. Not so soon after finding you.”

“You will not lose me Yuri.” Pa'cour spoke softly. “Not now.”

Yuri nodded. “I need to see Nalavi and then remove a blight against me. I will access the ship’s systems and try to do as much as I am able to disrupt them just before we leave. I will meet you within the landing bay in exactly six hours my love.” She pulled her face back until she was looking at him. “Promise me.”

Pa'cour smiled and nodded. “That is a promise I will keep.” He said.

EARTH

SPARTA

HALL OF THE AGIADS MEMORIAL EDIFICE

TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATION BUREAU FOR SENATE MEMBERS AND SENIOR MILITARY OFFICERS

“... Got everything set up here on the sixth floor.” Riall spoke as they walked down the corridor of the huge seven story rectangular building that ran parallel to the Evrotas River. “The first five floors are for the senators and their aides. We’ve managed to cram all of them into common offices and I have kept these last two floors for use by the departments heads of the military and other commands.”

Andro admired the many statues that lined the gold encrusted floors on the corridor as they walked. “I have only been in this building once.” He stated softly. “It is truly grand.”

Riall nodded his head. “Every Spartan King of the Agiad line has a statue and memorial to his reign. A chronicle of their deeds and misdeeds. Gorgo has brought me here at least once a year just to walk around. It is part museum as well, though they have ceased the tours since all of this began.” He said with a smile.

Andro looked at him. “My uncle’s is...”

Riall shook his head quickly. “No. It has been destroyed. Apparently someone with the access to enter the building made their way in here some time within the last twenty-four hours. Every written scroll... every piece of documentation... it has all been ripped to shreds or burned. The two statues brought down and smashed into hundreds of pieces.”

“You don’t say?” Andro spoke as he continued to walk.

“You wouldn’t know anything about that would you boy?” Riall asked.

Andro shook his head. “Nothing at all grandfather.” He answered.

Riall nodded. "Yes... I thought as much." He said knowingly. He held out the two data pads. "The intelligence you asked for." He said. "Though I don't know why."

"I'll make it clear very soon grandfather." He said.

"Martin has left I take it?" Riall asked.

Andro nodded his head. "About nine hours ago. He should be rendezvousing with the ARC ROYAL shortly. They will proceed from there."

"Admiral Lorian made contact." Riall spoke holding out another pad to him. "All assets have arrived in good order and she will burst us when she has reached her LOD."

Andro looked at the man he called grandfather and smiled. "I see some of father's old military lingo has rubbed off on you as well."

Riall nodded with a smile. "It has rubbed off on many of us old wolves. It just takes longer for it to set in with us than it does for you young pups. It does make explaining some things much easier."

"Yes it does." Andro said. "I want to make sure that..."

"Androcles!" The female voice called causing both of them to turn towards the sound. Andro's eyes narrowed when he saw Ulana making her way towards him.

Nubou! Andro swore within Mindvoice causing Riall to look at him.

Trouble? He asked.

Andro shook his head. A pain in my ass is more like it. Did you ever have any female you might have courted keep hounding you after you and grandmother Gorgo became mates?

Riall smiled. One... but it only took about a week before Gorgo showed her the error of her ways. Sadi is much more patient I think.

She's also a lot more lethal when she is angry. Andro said.

Riall nodded. True enough. I will leave you to your problem and meet you in the conference room.

Oh thank you grandfather for abandoning me. Andro growled.

Riall chuckled. Next time... don't nubou them so well. He said before he turned and kept moving down the corridor.

Andro turned back just as Ulana walked up all smiles. She was radiating her female aura once again, but at least this time it was far more muted than it was on Cranae Island. She wore a form fitting dark green floor length skirt and a ruffled white blouse that barely constrained her large breasts.

"Andro!" Ulana spoke brightly. "No one told us you were within the building."

Androcles looked at her as she moved closer to him. Far closer than Sadi would have cared for and he stepped back slightly. "I don't broadcast my presence for all to hear Ulana. I have a meeting to go to and you should not be on this floor. It is restricted to military personnel only."

Ulana smiled. "Nonsense... this whole building is staffed by civilian workers. And as a Senator I do have military clearance. Or did you forget that?"

Andro was hard pressed to keep from rolling his eyes. "You have military clearance to be in a non-restricted area. Something this floor is not. Ulana... I am very busy. Is there something you need? If not I have a meeting to attend to and you need to go back to your offices."

"I... Andro I wanted to apologize." Ulana said. "For what took place at your home. Icho withholding his support because..."

"We should not be having this discussion Ulana." Andro said quickly. "I told Icho I would meet with him and his supporters after the vote tomorrow. Not before. You will not change my mind."

"I'm not trying to change your mind Andro." Ulana spoke. "This is more of a personal visit." She said lifting her hand and reaching up to touch his cheek with her fingers.

Andro quickly but gently removed her fingers from his flesh and lightly pushed her hand back. "We have nothing of a personal basis to discuss Ulana. Regardless of what you might think to the contrary."

"Does our time together mean nothing to you?" Ulana questioned. "You dismissed me like so much garbage Andro. I had to find out why from your sisters as I was leaving. I had to find out from them that you prefer this... this common tart Sadi to me. My blood and upbringing is so much more than hers."

Andro's eyes narrowed slightly. "I did not dismiss you Ulana... we were never an item and therefore I could not dismiss you as you say. Never once did I lead you to believe that we were anything more than friends who enjoyed each other's company Ulana. You did not seem to mind it this way."

“Just because I said nothing does not mean I did not wish for more.” Ulana spoke.

“Ulana... do not take me for a fool.” Andro spoke. “Our times together were pleasant and fun... but do not try and claim they were more than what they were. You had far more interest in my title as Prince than anything else. Or did you parade me around in front of your friends for other reasons when I attended those events with you?”

“Events which you left both times after only a hour or so.” Ulana told him sternly and with just a little anger.

Andro nodded. “Because they were your type of people Ulana... not mine.” Andro moved closer to her. “We are nothing alike Ulana. We will never be anything alike. You do not believe in the same things I believe.”

“I happen to think what you believe is important.” Ulana stated.

Andro chuckled. “Do you expect me to think that?” He asked. “I met Sadi when I was eight months old Ulana. I have loved her and no other since that day. The gods brought her to me that first time and then destiny and fate reunited us once more. She is my anome... my soulmate. She knows me in a way you can not possibly comprehend Ulana. In a way that you do not even believe exists. Why don't you go back to Nolar Ulana? At least with him you will be in control of the situation.”

“Nolar is not you!” Ulana snapped. “She may be a pureblood Andro but she is beneath you!” Ulana continued. “Her bloodline could not be purer than mine! She... she was... she was an agent for the High Coven Andro! God knows what she has done... or who she has had to sleep with in order to accomplish her tasks. She...”

“Enough woman!” Andro barked loudly drawing the attention of the male and female Durcunusaan officer only a short distance away. “You are not her! You will never be her Ulana! And you will never be able to entice me away from Sadi or any of my mates... no matter how strongly you pulse me with your aura! Sadi is not just in my blood Ulana... she is part of my blood and part of my mind now. As are Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria and Caliria! You could not begin to understand what we have and share together. These are things you do not even believe in! I smell only her! Only them! I taste only her! Only them! You are not even in the same class as Sadi or any of my wives and mates Ulana! You never were... nor will you ever be!”

Andro expected it and he wasn't disappointed when Ulana reared back and slapped him with all of her strength. The blow stung a little, but for the most part, the strength behind it was not there.

“You bastard!” Ulana snarled at him. “How dare you! I am a hundred times better than that... that bitch! You used me Androcles Leonidas! You used me for your own pleasures when it suited you! Or do you think me a fool?” She almost screamed.

“Milord?” The female voice spoke from the side and Andro turned to see the two officers now standing beside them. “Is everything alright?”

Andro nodded his head resisting the urge to rub his cheek. “Everything is fine.” Andro said to them before looking back to Ulana. “Believe and espouse whatever you like if it makes you feel better Ulana. It will not change a thing. This conversation is over.”

“You can not just dismiss me Androcles!” Ulana snarled at him once more.

“I can... and I will.” Andro stated coldly. “Escort the Senator off the restricted floor and make sure she does not return.” Andro told the two Durcunusaan officers. “Then insure her security clearance is adjusted to reflect what she is allowed access too, based on her status as a junior Senator of the Union.”

“Understood Milord.” The woman said.

Andro looked back at Ulana. “If you wish to butt heads with Sadi... you do so at your own risk Ulana. You have no idea what you are getting into.” He told her. “And you will end up getting hurt.”

“I'm not afraid of that... that woman!” Ulana snapped at him.

“Then you are a bigger fool than I first thought.” Androcles told her. “I have a meeting to attend. These Durcunusaan officers will escort you off this restricted floor Ulana. I wish you a very pleasant day.”

“...everything worked out?” Riall asked with a crooked grin as Andro moved up to the large star chart table with a dozen senior officers crowded around it.

“Probably not.” Andro replied stepping up to him.

“She is in over her head Andro.” Riall spoke. “Your grandmother has told me how Sadi is viewed among our people. Especially those here in Sparta. When it comes to such things I have found Gorgo has the pulse of the people. If Ulana wants to enter into a conflict with Sadi over her misconceived ideas of what you and she shared at one time... Sadi will undoubtedly set her straight. Painfully if need be.”

Andro nodded. “That’s what I’m afraid of.” He said with a grin. He turned and looked at the gathered officers and the holimage of Ben from Dreamland. He stood there with his arms across his chest looking at Andro sternly. “What?” Andro snapped.

“You know... some of us have to work for a living.” Ben growled playfully. “You think you could keep your dick in your pants enough so we can accomplish that work?”

“It’s not my fault!” Andro declared.

One of the men at the table turned and looked at Ben in the transmission. “You should not speak to the Prince in such a manner Admiral.” He spoke rather stiffly. “It is not at all appropriate.”

Ben looked at the young man. “I’ll speak to him however I choose Admiral! I was there when he was born and I’ve watched him grow up. I served side-by-side with his father more years than you have been an Admiral... so I have that right.”

Andro looked at the young Admiral who appeared to be not much older than him and then to Riall. He smiled and motioned to the officer. “Admiral Susero.” Riall spoke to the unasked question. “He just took command of the Ninth Expeditionary Combined Fleet Forces along the High Coven Coreward border. He’s been cleared with the information about Martin.”

The man bowed his head sharply. “Milord Prince.” He spoke.

“Susero’s father is Joint Commander of the Folcani Sector Defense Fleet.” Riall told him. “Susero displayed his skill and tactical sense at the Battle of Julcan Seven in the last year of the Evolli War.”

“Ah... I heard about that.” Andro answered him. “Very nicely done. Using the planet’s atmospheric gravity well to propel you into a flanking position. Nice.”

“It was a matter of luck Milord.” Susero said. “And an excellent crew.”

Andro nodded. “Luck is always good to have on your side.” He answered. He looked at Riall once more. “Where is Ceneu?”

“He returned to Apo Prime to recalibrate the PDP grids for all sectors.” Riall answered. “I’ll brief him when we’re done so he can make the appropriate adjustments to the training fleets.”

Andro nodded and looked at the chart table. “Very well.” He said. “Ben... the ARC ROYAL has picked up my father?” He asked.

Ben nodded. “Captain Katsumi sent the signal forty-two minutes ago.” He replied. “They’re on their way. Don’t know how much I like sending her out without fighters and only three quarters of a crew... but Marty needed the support I agree. The ESSEX and INTREPID will be next out of the docks in two weeks. Their captains have been busy the last few weeks and they’ll have full air crews by the time they deploy. The second batch of Block IIs will start getting their powerplants next month. Katsumi will brief Marty and Manda has already informed you. We’re really humping it here.”

Susero cringed at Ben’s use of the King’s name in such familiar terms but he kept his mouth shut and looked back to Andro. “Admiral Riall said you had some information for us Milord?” He finally spoke.

Andro nodded and plugged the data pad into the slot on the star chart. “My father was here briefly on Earth and we spoke of something that both of us were thinking. The Kavalians are giving too much.”

Riall looked at him oddly for he did not know exactly what Andro was going to put to them. “Giving too much?” He asked. “I don’t understand.”

“They appear to be supporting this Galactic Court foolishness wholeheartedly.” Andro said. “Given my uncle’s past history in dealing with the High Coven during their war, he is not known for being someone who just sits back. These rulings by the Galactic Court are in their favor for the most part yes, but both my father and I felt they were being too accommodating.”

Riall nodded his head. “Ok... I’ll accept that.” He spoke. “They have to know that the Union Senate will more than likely never allow Pusintin to take power in any way. Which is exactly what he is trying to do through the children your mother just gave birth to. At least the boy child anyway.”

“He has raped a sitting Queen of the Union! The one many of our people regard as the most patient and mage like of our Queens!” One of the older Admiral’s spat angrily. “Forced himself upon her in the vilest of fashions! There can be no forgiveness of that! None that our people would accept!”

“There won’t be Admiral Zesico.” Andro told him. “At least not while my father lives. My new brother and sister joined us in this world just recently and my father already refers to them as his children.”

Andro saw the nods of approval from many of the men present. Nearly half of them were much older than him, closer to Riall’s age if not older and they were truly set in their honorable ways when it came to many of the older customs of the Lycavorian people. Most had been mated for centuries, if not millennia, to the same women and they viewed their wives and mates as precious items to be revered and protected at all costs. Most of these men had cut their teeth in the very beginning of the rebellion against the High Coven, just before and just after his great grandfather Resumar had been assassinated, and they held to the convictions and morals he had instilled in their people almost fanatically.

“Avoi.” Another of the older Admirals whispered.

“Why have you had Riall bring us here Milord?” Zesico asked now. “You are considered a tactician of renown...spoken of within the same breath as your father and a few others. What is this meeting about?”

Andro nodded his head respectfully to him. “I appreciate the praise Admiral... but my father taught me humility among many things. I tend to think outside the box as my grandfather calls it, however, now I need the advice and wisdom of men with experience I do not have. The experience of battles I have not fought. Tactics I have never used.” Andro typed quickly on the control panel. “My father and I agree that my uncle’s actions to this date do not fit with his personality.”

“Which means he has something else entirely planned.” Zesico spoke. “Because he knows the Union Senate will not grant what he wishes.”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“Then why take your mother?” Riall asked. “Why take her and go through all of this if he knows it will not work.”

“Oh... I think he had a hope it would work. At least when he first got this plan in his head he hoped it would work.” Andro said. “After what happen on Hadaria however... if he thinks it will still work he’s either very stupid or very egotistical. Take your pick. Regardless... father and I think he always had another plan. And it centered around taking out the Drow outposts in The Wilds.”

“The Drow outposts?” Susero asked. “How so?”

Andro finished typing and stabbed the control button. The star chart on the huge table shifted and flashed as charts were rearranged and suddenly they were looking at a full sized version of one entire sector within The Wilds. “I’ve highlighted the thirteen Drow outposts that were destroyed by the Kavalians. To date there have only been five survivors of these attacks, one of them being Lu'ria, my Drow mate. Another is a human female that was with her. All told, the final tally of dead is upwards of three hundred and seventy. Many of them were Drow females, and with very few exceptions, all of them showed the signs of sexual abuse and rape inflicted before they were executed. Sexual abuse that I will not detail here because it makes me sick.” Andro said softly. “What can you see from the outposts as they are positioned on the chart?”

“That is simple.” Another man spoke as he pointed. “Each sits along a portion of the Farnuri Expanse... ending with these three outposts which cradle the trailing edges of it.” He answered tracing his finger along a stretch of several dozen light years.

Andro nodded. “And where does the Farnuri Expanse originate?”

“Within point two light years of the Kavalian border here.” Zesico replied stabbing his finger at the single point. “Where it meets the Gellen Asteroid belt.”

“I did not see this until my father told me to stop and think about the outposts and what their purpose was.” Andro said. “I went back and reviewed what I am showing all of you. The Farnuri Expanse is filled with gaseous fields and radioactive nebulas and travel through it is extremely hazardous without heavy shielding. The type of shielding not normally found on civilian ships.”

“But found on every warship of any kind.” Susero spoke softly. “It is also exceptionally hard to track anything moving through the Expanse.”

Andro nodded and touched another few buttons. The screen in the corners began to scroll quickly. “As you can see from the equipment lists... each Drow outpost along the expanse was equipped with a single, hidden NorthAm Mk X Aegis FCS Sensor array. This was not known by many for obvious reasons, but the Drow were very skilled in using them. It was specifically calibrated to scan into the Expanse to detect ships. The Kavalians must have discovered this when Laustinos betrayed us and then they used that information to essentially take down our first line of defense. When they destroyed each Drow settlement, they took down the power source for each array until there were none left scanning the Expanse.”

Zesico was the first to put it together. “An open corridor into Union space.” He gasped. “With the destruction of the Drow outposts they could have moved hundreds of ships into the Expanse and we would not detect them. And if they are all near the Bontawillian border, they are only six light years from Union space! They could blow right through Bontawillian space because we don’t maintain the same defensive alignment along our border with them that we do the rest of the border.”

Andro nodded. “The Bontawillians have been adding to their defensive systems along their border with The Wilds ever since they became official members of the Union. However... you don’t just throw up two hundred PDP platforms and sensors. They have only been able to complete about forty percent of the new border perimeter.”

Riall nodded and adjusted the screen. “As you all know we have been replacing or refitting all of their own ships and even allowing them to purchase and use some of our newer and more advanced ships. Namely our new refitted MOONLANCER-Class Cruiser. Even with the upgrades and such, the Kavalians would be able to swat them aside easily with simple numbers.”

Andro once more typed on the control panel. “The Kavalians outnumber us nearly five to one in ships alone. They throw nothing away... which means they are still using ships that are several hundred years old. Their cloning operations give them a three to one superiority in forces on the ground, perhaps four to one depending on the situation. I already have a plan in place and moving that will hopefully knock that number down some what. We are used to fighting when outnumbered... but the better the odds the better the success.”

“What plan?” Susero asked.

Andro shook his head. “For security purposes that information is limited to those who are actually involved.”

Zesico looked at him. “You are going to attack aren’t you Milord?” He asked softly. The faces of many of the men present showed their surprise as they looked first at Zesico and then to Andro.

Andro nodded finally. “Yes.” He stated plainly. “The Union is not a militaristic society as is the Kavalian Federation. It will take time for us to transfer and ramp up our production for war and combat operations. I am going to try and buy us that time. War is coming... regardless of whether we want it or not. I see no other alternative and neither does my father, as much as we wish it wasn't so.” Andro looked at the men. “The moment the Union Senate finishes their vote and announces the results, I am going to launch a premeditated attack into Kavalian space to try and buy us the time we need.”

The room was silent for a few long moments and the warriors present contemplated that reality. None of them had ever started a war with another species, but all of them had fought viciously once engaged. They were true Lycavorians molded by Resumar himself. They would not start a conflict, but they would damn sure fight and finish one. Zesico was the first to speak as he was the oldest man in the room and perhaps the most respected by the others.

“Nubou them!” He snarled. “They started this when they took our Queen and killed so many of our people!” He looked at Andro. “Command us Prince Androcles! What do you need us to do?”

Andro nodded his head. “I want each of you to break away an entire Strike Wing from your commands. Admiral Zesico... I want you to take command of this force and move into the Farnuri Expanse under full Shroud. Once you have located the Kavalian force I want you to report back to me or to Admiral Riall. Once the vote is done, you will ambush this Kavalian force.”

“Milord... given the time they have had, the KFI could have moved hundreds of ships into this area. Even my combined force will only have slightly more than two hundred warships in it.” Zesico spoke.

Andro nodded. “That is all you will need.”

“Another surprise sire?” Susero asked.

Andro grinned. “You could say that. We have access to a new ship under my brother’s command. It is called SPARTA’S WRATH. It is a Pralor ship gentlemen.” Andro typed on the control panel once more. “These are the specifications of the ship. These do not leave this room and you will speak of it with no one until the time it is revealed. I will personally execute anyone who even mistakenly releases this information.”

Andro watched the men look at the small screens by each of their locations and smiled as their eyes grew bigger.

“Son vada carians!” Susero finally exclaimed. “We... we have this ship?” He gasped.

Andro nodded. “Fully operational. When you send word... I will contact my brother... and one, perhaps two jumps later... you will have all the reinforcements you need.”

Zesico looked at Andro. “And then?” He asked with a predatory snarl.

“Then Admiral... if it is in the Farnuri Expanse and it is Kavalian... you will kill it with extreme prejudice.” Andro answered. “And you will spare no one.”

ARIZONA-CLASS STRIKE CARRIER ARC ROYAL TWELVE HOURS FROM ENURRUA

Akemi Katsumi sat in her command chair reading from the latest readiness reports and nodding every few seconds. She had to admit she wasn't in the least bit happy about having to deploy without any fighters whatsoever, but she was a consummate professional and she would deal with it. That she now carried the King Leonidas, whom she thought, was very dead only a few hours ago; Queen Aricia who was also supposed to be dead, as well as Queen Dysea and a stunning vampire female who Akemi swore was part Lycavorian only made things confusing at first. That the dragon Elder Mother had accompanied them and they were now heading for a planet that had been taboo to any Union citizen since King Leonidas had laid waste to it only made it more confusing. That was until she discovered why she now carried a good portion of the Royal family and what they were heading to do.

Akemi had received her briefing from the King himself, and she had to admit that he was just as physically imposing as she had heard Admiral Lorian tell them, not to mention just as deliciously handsome as well. She now understood why the Queens were never without smile son their faces when with him in public. He had been very blunt and to the point.

“Captain Katsumi... the Kavalians have taken something of mine that I intend to get back one way or the other. I'd like your help in accomplishing that.”

That he was speaking of Queen For'mya was obvious in his manner and tone. Akemi had no problem with that. As with the other Queens, For'mya was loved and respected by the vast majority of the Union citizens, and no one that Akemi associated with believed for a second that she would do what was being said willingly. Akemi had just never expected to be taking the ARC ROYAL out so soon. The first of the Block II ARIZONA-Class Strike Carriers, the ARC ROYAL was to be the center piece of the second ARIZONA-Class Assault Groups and instead she was leading a trip into the unknown after a sitting Union Queen who had been kidnapped. She was fully operational with the exception that she did not have her surgical teeth so to speak. Akemi wouldn't hesitate to put her up against any Kavalian ship one on one. The ARC ROYAL could blow the shit out of even a GREAT SOUL all be her lonesome if need be and not even break a sweat in doing so. Akemi just wished they had their fighter complement. They were her hammer and she was the anvil. She would have to live without them for a few more weeks it seemed. At least until they returned to Union space and she got her full load out.

Akemi turned as her elven First Officer came up to her chair. The elf's short brown hair was styled elegantly, her blue eyes bright and alert. Her uniform was meticulously cared for with every decoration in perfect order. Akemi should know, No'rarh had scolded her enough times for tearing her buttons or ribbons off just before they had fallen together in their bed.

“No'rarh?” Akemi asked softly.

“All systems operating at optimal.” No'rarh told her. “Do you think the Kavalians will keep their word Akemi?”

“I don’t think they gave their word.” Akemi told her. “I’m pretty sure after listening to the King that these men may look like Kavalians but they are really descended from Pralor blood.”

“Can we trust them though?” No'rarh asked.

“That remains to be seen. Just in case... since we have three KADEN-Class Transports on board now, configure one for medical triage and the other two to carry wounded or cargo.” Akemi said.

“Expecting trouble?” No'rarh asked her lover.

“We are going to a planet that has been taboo for any Union citizen or ship for over two decades No'rarh.” Akemi said. “Ordered that way by this very King for what happen there. Forgive me for being superstitious, but that can’t be a good thing.”

No'rarh met her eyes. “I see your point.” She said. “I’ll see to it.” She spoke. “What shall we have for dinner tonight?”

Akemi looked at her. “I was thinking about just having desert.” She said with a smile.

No'rarh rolled her eyes. “You know... for a human... you are certainly oversexed.”

Akemi grinned at her and batted her dark eyes. “You are complaining now? After two years?”

No'rarh chuckled softly. “Hardly.” She reached out and squeezed Akemi’s hand. “I’ll see you this evening.”

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT INQUISITOR HIGH COVEN SECURE SPACE

“You seem much more relaxed these past few days.” Nalavi told her as he slowly moved the portable sensor over her body.

Yuri looked at him and smiled. “I’ve made a few decisions that give me great comfort and relief Nalavi.” She said.

Nalavi met her eyes. “I take it one of those decisions concerns Pa'cour.” He said.

Yuri tilted her head slightly. “What makes you say that?”

Nalavi grinned. “I’m a doctor Yuri... and I have been taking care of you for over three millennia. I don’t need my scanner to tell me that you have been feeding on Pa'cour’s blood. Your blood is saturated with high protein enzymes found only in Immortal blood.”

Yuri stared at him for a long moment. She did not fear Nalavi reporting her to anyone. He was the sort of man to always buck the system and work outside the rules. That she had fallen in love with Pa'cour seemed to please him. “He has... he has given me a new lease on life Nalavi.” Yuri told him. “He... he asks nothing from me. He asks nothing and gives so much more. I am not used to this. I... for the first time in my life... when he holds me in his arms... I feel safe Nalavi.”

Nalavi looked at the medical sensor as it beeped. His face remained impassive and he looked back up at her. “He worships you Yuri.” He spoke. “Don’t let go of that.”

“I can not be redeemed Nalavi. Not for what I have done. No matter how much you think so.” Yuri said with a smile. “I have accepted that.”

“I’m not saying your past deeds can be redeemed Yuri.” He spoke looking at her. “What I’m saying is you can choose which direction to take your life in now.”

You knew didn’t you?” Yuri asked him.

“Knew what?” Nalavi asked.

“About Xaxon? About what my mother and Robert were doing?” Yuri said.

Nalavi met her gaze. “I began to suspect after Javier was born.” He replied honestly. “I didn’t know for sure until I found those recordings I gave to you. You discovered more of them when you gained access to your mother’s files. I began looking for a way to counter what they were doing to you as soon as I realized what was happening. I came close... but was never able to implement anything.”

“When did you know he was no longer within me?” Yuri asked.

“Within a few moments of Pa'cour bringing you into the bay.” He replied.

“Then you know the only way he would have left me was if he thought I was dead.” Yuri said. “He panicked too quickly... leaving before Pa'cour saved me.”

Nalavi nodded. "Perhaps. Or maybe Pa'cour also knew what was happening and he just waited until he was sure that Xaxon was gone and he could still save you. He had to force you to bite him you know. He actually positioned your fangs and then forced you to bite him Yuri." Nalavi shook his head slowly. "Don't let this man go child. With him Yuri you can atone for everything that you were forced to do by your mother and Moran. With him... you will find everything you desire."

Yuri smiled at him, an expression that reminded him of Yuri long ago as a young woman. "It has already started Nalavi. I have you to thank for that." She paused for a long moment and then looked at him. "I'm leaving Nalavi." She said softly. "I'm leaving with Pa'cour."

Nalavi nodded. "I suspected as much. When?"

"Three hours." Yuri answered without pause. "I have some loose ends to tie up and he is loading the last supplies we will need on my G9. Come with us."

"Come with you?" Nalavi gasped.

Yuri nodded her head. "You don't belong here anymore than I now do Nalavi. And you know Robert will be incensed when he discovers you helped me. Or at the very least that you knew about us. He will have you killed in his rage if Dante does not." Yuri reached out and took his hand. "You know I speak the truth."

"Yuri I can not come with you." He said. "I have... I have too much to do here."

"Narice has returned Nalavi." Yuri blurted out.

"Narice?" He exclaimed. "How... are you sure? Why?"

"Why do you think? And yes... I am very sure. I sensed her within Mindvoice. It was very faint, but she has grown in power since she left and I would know my sister's resonance anywhere. Calm and reserved tinged with a wildness she rarely shows." Yuri told him calmly. "Somehow... someone... they have passed the information to her that the Coven leadership is in disarray. A traitor within my mother's inner circle no doubt. Probably on Uzu Ozeib 7... but perhaps right on this ship. She is moving to fill that void with others of like mind. And you can be assured that as Arrarn Leonidas's wife she has the full support of Androcles and the Union."

Nalavi met her gaze. "You are positive Yuri?" He asked.

Yuri nodded. "The High Coven is about to be plunged into a civil war Nalavi. Robert will not let her just take over... you know that."

"How much support does she have?" Nalavi asked.

Yuri shrugged. "I'm not entirely sure... but it must be enough to do what she intends or Androcles would never risk her. She is his brother's wife now... and if he is anything like his father he will not risk her on a futile mission. Pa'cour and I believe that at the very least she has Admiral Pontal and at minimum a few other senior Coven officers on her side. I do not know how many of the Ruling Coven Council will support her. If any." Yuri looked at him. "So you see... there is no reason for you to remain. Unless you wish to be plunged into another war on the wrong side."

Nalavi looked at her. "Yuri... you can not leave the intelligence we got from that ship with him!" He hissed. "You..."

Yuri shook her head and held up her hand. "It is already taken care of." She said. "I will not leave that data for him and Dante to use. No one in this universe will be safe if I do. Our own people included."

"And what will you do with it Yuri?" Nalavi asked.

"I still intend to use it Nalavi. I won't lie to you. But I do not intend to use it to conquer others." Yuri replied. "We have tried to do that too many times through the millennia and look where it has gotten us. On the verge of extinction. No... I will not use it for that. And there is something else... I can't..." Yuri shook her head. "I can't really place it... describe it... but it is darkness Nalavi. Pure darkness and evil. I think it may be remnants of Xaxon's presence within me. Memories maybe. I don't know."

"Do not dwell on it." Nalavi spoke. He took her hand and squeezed. "I will come with you." He said. "You will need me soon."

Yuri looked at him. "Need you soon? What do you mean?"

"You do not know much of Immortal physiology do you?" He asked.

Yuri rose to her feet slowly. "Nalavi... what are you saying?"

Nalavi grinned at her. "I'm saying that you are pregnant Yuri. My scan detected it just now. The embryo has just formed. It is perhaps a few hours old at most."

“Pregnant!” Yuri gasped her eyes wide. “Pregnant!”

“Akruxian Immortals are notoriously fertile.” Nalavi spoke. “And with all the vitamins and the influx of healing medicines purging your system the past few weeks it contributed to make you just as fertile.”

Redemption was the word that first popped into Yuri’s head.

Her hands went to her abdomen as she turned away from Nalavi and moved a few feet away from where he stood. She was still herself. She was still Yuri. Yet she was also very different now. She was still ruthless and sometimes cruel, but she hadn’t felt so free since she had gone to Earth that first time. Since Lucia was born she had never considered having more children and now she knew that was Xaxon’s presence within her. Driving her thoughts and her actions in many ways. Yuri had found the purest form of love in the arms of an Immortal. It was something that her people considered to be among the worst crimes you could commit, to consort with an Immortal. They would call hers and Pa'cour’s child an abomination.

Yuri called it her redemption. Or at least the very beginning of it.

Nalavi was watching her as she turned back around and faced him. “Do not tell Pa'cour.” She spoke.

“Yuri you can’t keep...” Nalavi began.

“I have no intention of keeping it from him Nalavi.” She spoke quickly. “Never. If he knew now he would want to protect me at all costs. He needs to be at his best until we leave. I will not put him in danger by telling him I carry his child. Not until we are off this ship and away from here.”

Nalavi nodded his head in understanding. “You are right.” He stated.

“Gather your things and meet us in Bay five in three hours Nalavi.” Yuri told him. “Don’t be late my friend. There is too much at stake and we will leave you if you are late.”

Nalavi nodded. “I’ll be there.” He said.

The female vampire entered her quarters completely unaware of any danger that might be lurking about. She was a young vampire who worked the many sensors on the INQUISITOR with consummate grace. She was also having a rather torrid affair with the Supreme Commander of the High Coven Fleet. Robert Moran certainly knew how to curl her toes in bed, and Melina looked forward to each and every one of their encounters.

“He will betray you, you know.” The female voice echoed.

Melina spun around suddenly on alert and looked into the darkness of her room. Her right hand reached for the light panel just as her left dropped to the hidden blade Robert had given her not so long ago. She saw the shadows unwrap far too late and then she was flying across the quarters as some unseen hand lifted her off the deck and tossed her through the air. She slammed into the unyielding bulkhead with a grunt of pain before dropping to the deck trying to catch her breath.

“He will betray you as he has betrayed me.” The voice said again.

Melina recognized that voice then and her eyes grew wide. “Princess Yuri!”

“I made a mistake turning him.” Yuri’s voice continued as Melina’s eyes darted back and forth trying to find her. She knew Yuri Moran was a master of using the shadows, and her only hope was to try to trigger an alarm. “I should have drained him dry that day.”

Melina took a deep breath and launched herself at the COM panel. She never made it even half way. She saw the shadows unwrap completely and she couldn’t alter her movement before Yuri’s lithe form fully materialized and her left arm came rocketing forward. Melina felt the crushing blow impact her chest and several of her ribs broke as her forward momentum ceased instantly and she was once more sent flying back into the steel bulkhead.

“Princess! Princess I’m sorry!” Melina pleaded. “I did not... I did not intend for this to happen!” She staggered to her knees, holding one arm over her chest as blood trickled from between her lips and pain lanced through her from her broken ribs. She looked up as Yuri approached. “I did not...”

Yuri’s fingers curled around the girl’s slim neck, and using her incredible strength she hauled her up and pinned her to the bulkhead. Her normally dark eyes had changed to vampire cobalt blue and her fangs were fully extended giving her a terrifying visage. “Do not worry child...” Yuri spoke menacingly. “I’m not going to kill you. None of this is your fault.” Yuri leaned close to the young vampire’s face. “He will betray you. He will leave you for the next pretty little thing that comes along when he tires of you. If he doesn't give you to our son and let the monster he has become have you."

"Princess... Princess I..." Melina stammered as she tried to breathe as well. The strength holding her was beyond anything she had ever encountered as a vampire. It was unnatural for her to have such physical strength.

"You can have him child." Yuri snarled. "For I have found something far more wondrous to move into the future with. Just mark my words. And be wary of him. You are a piece of meat to him, nothing more. Remember that."

Yuri pulled her away from the bulkhead and then sent her smashing back into the bulkhead with a resounding thud. Melina's head impacted the steel wall and blackness washed over her instantly from the impact. She went limp in Yuri's grasp as she dropped into blissful unconsciousness. Yuri caught her before she fell completely and moved to the couch where she gently set her body on the cushions. She looked down on her and shook her head.

"I pity you child." She whispered softly. "You will not listen to me and only pain is in your future if you do not. What future you have that is."

Yuri looked around her quarters once more before wrapping the shadows around her body once more and taking the first true steps into her own future. A future that held promise and hope. A future with a man, Immortal or not, a man who loved her without question or regret. A man that made Yuri's blood churn in happiness and desire like no other ever had.

Redemption.

That word sounded good to her as she moved into the corridor of the ship.

Perhaps not for all her sins, for they were many. But redemption for the things she done and had no control over.

If not... vith everyone. She was going to make her own redemption at Pa'cour's side. She was going to reach out and take what had been denied her for so long.

CHAPTER SEVENTY-EIGHT

NEFOA

For'mya looked at Eirene and Fedor as the pounding on the medical center door grew more intense. Eirene and Fedor both now looked to be children of almost five years of age, with Eirene's long golden blond hair so similar to her mother's and Fedor's short cropped blond hair just a shade darker. Muton had grudgingly cut Fedor's rapidly growing blond hair from some sort of leftover Kavalian sense of male pride but Fedor had actually enjoyed it immensely. He had also brought them clothes that would fit them for their age, sewing the items together himself For'mya discovered a short time later. That they were her children was obvious to even the casual observer. They both had her angular face and cheekbones and both of them had her dark brown eyes. Muton had already commented to her that they looked nothing like Pusintin and how it was just another sign that she belonged to Martin Leonidas body and soul. Muton had tried to explain as best that he could that because Martin had been the one to turn her, her wolf genes were that much more dominant and had his essence flowing through them and through her. His genes were certainly more dominant than Pusintin's Muton declared and this showed easily because both Fedor and Eirene had no distinguishing elements of Pusintin in their outward appearance. Since Pusintin's genes were lesser than Martin's Muton deduced with more than a little satisfaction For'mya noticed, Fedor and Eirene looked more like their mother and in some ways like Martin. For'mya had liked this explanation immensely.

For'mya held her finger to her lips now as she looked at her children.

You must be silent now. You know what Muton and I must do, so no matter what, remain silent and do not come out. If this man sees you Eirene he will stop being unsuspecting and become a potential problem we don't need right now. For'mya told them.

Eirene tilted her head and looked at her mother while placing her hands on her hips and narrowing her eyes. Mother... I am not a complete fool. She declared with far more wisdom and control than a five year old child should have.

He would not hurt my sister. Fedor growled.

For'mya chuckled and leaned forward to kiss her head and then Fedor's. The gods truly blessed me when I thought that they had cursed me. They gave me the both of you and in doing so they gave me hope and happiness back. She said silently as she squeezed their hands.

We will succeed mother. Fedor said now with that same wisdom and tone. And we will see the father our of hearts soon.

And the mothers of our hearts and all of our brothers and sisters. Eirene chimed in quite happily.

For'mya nodded. Yes we will.

Muton appeared in the anteroom doorway. "For'mya... it must be now." He spoke softly.

For'mya nodded and rose to her feet. Eirene and Fedor looked at him as he held out his hand for her.

"Remember children... quiet."

Fedor and Eirene both nodded and Fedor took his sister's hand, leading her to a corner where they squatted together out of immediate sight. "We understand Muton." Fedor spoke as he pulled his sister close protectively.

Muton looked at For'mya. "Are you ready?" He asked.

For'mya nodded. "The others?" She asked.

"Waiting for me to send them word that it is done." He answered. "For'mya if there were any other way I..."

For'mya shook her head. "No. This is the only way that grants us the time we need. I do know this. Don't worry Muton, I am prepared."

Muton nodded and took her hand. "Then let's get this distasteful business done." He led her back into the main medical bay where she released his hand and moved to a spot near one of the examining tables. Muton moved to the door and looked back at her. For'mya nodded.

"I am ready." She spoke.

Muton nodded and punched in the code to unlock the door. The Nefoa base commander was about to begin pounding on the door once more when it slid open easily. "Dinxi!" Muton exclaimed.

"Muton... what is going on?" Dinxi growled. "It is well past the time the child should have been born. I know you have reported this to Marshall Pusintin for I checked the logs. I am here to collect my..."

Muton held up his hand with a smile. "Calm yourself Colonel." He said calmly. "I have prepared her for you. That is why it took me so long to unlock the door. Please... come in." he motioned with his hand into the medical bay.

Dinxi paused for a moment surprised. He had expected some trickery from Muton. "You have prepared her for me?" He asked.

"Pusintin told me to insure that she was completely recovered from giving birth to his son before I handed her over to you. He wanted one of his loyal officers to be pleased with his gift to him." Muton said.

"You..."

Muton nodded. "I told you I would make the arrangements with the Marshall. And so I have." He motioned into the medical center once more. "She is awaiting you inside."

"Willingly?" Dinxi asked astonished.

Muton chuckled. "Even I can not work miracles Dinxi. She isn't physically restrained but she knows well the punishment for physical resistance. That does not remove her sharp tongue however."

Dinxi finally let the smile play across his face. "My cock in her mouth can take care of that." He snarled as he moved past Muton into the medical center.

Muton glanced down the corridor quickly then and saw the cloaked figure move around the corner of the empty corridor. The figure nodded and Muton nodded as well before shutting the door and sealing it behind him. He turned to follow Dinxi into the medical center. For'mya stood by the bed quite passively as Dinxi marched right up to her.

"So this is the elf wench that has caused so many problems." He spoke as he gazed at her. "Very nice. I will enjoy locking groins with this one." He growled as he let his fingers fill with her hair.

“I’d think twice about that!” For’mya snapped.

“I told you.” Muton spoke from behind him.

Dinxi laughed and pulled on her hair forcefully. Not enough to be painful, but enough that For’mya had to move her head to keep from losing her hair. “Trust me elf wench, when I lock groins with you and you are howling out in pleasure as I empty my seed into your belly you will sing a different tune. It is my understanding that elf females live for big cocks. That is why so many of you mate with Lycavorians.” He snarled at her.

For’mya glared at him. “That day will never come.” She hissed at him. “I guarantee it.”

Dinxi chuckled again and released her hair to turn back around and look at Muton with a smile. “You were right.” He said. “She does have a sharp tongue. She will learn her place I think however.”

“I’m sure.” Muton spoke.

“Where is the boy child?” Dinxi asked looking around. “I wish to see the object that will bring down the Lycavorian Union.”

“I’m afraid... I’m afraid I can not allow you to see him.” Muton said.

Dinxi looked at him. “Nonsense. It is a male child... and I wish to see him.”

Muton shook his head. “No... I’m sorry... I can’t.”

Dinxi stepped further away from For’mya towards Muton. “And why not?” He demanded of Muton.

“For the simple reason that you are dead.” Muton answered. “Allowing him to see a dead man at such a young age may injure his psyche.”

Dinxi looked at him. “What?” He gasped. “What drivel is this? Let me see...”

Dinxi’s eyes nearly exploded from his head as he felt the horrible piercing pain in his lower back. His chest arched out as he felt the coldness of the blade as it slid smoothly between his third and fourth rib perfectly and with driving strength, moving right for his heart. His eyes grew even wider when that blade sliced cleanly through his body and pierced the bottom of his heart with equal strength and rage. He felt the weight on his back suddenly and the face of the beautiful elven female appeared next to his from over his shoulder. That face was embossed with an image of striking savagery beyond anything his eyes had witnessed. For’mya’s eyes had fully changed now, the black ring around her dark brown corneas filled with menacing hatred and her wolf fangs were fully extended as she climbed higher onto his back and drove her assassin’s blade home even deeper with her right hand as she reached around and gripped his jaw tightly with the left.

“You are right in a sense scum!” For’mya scowled horrifyingly into his ear in a voice tinged with cold cruelty, her soft lips next to his fur covered ear. “Elven females are drawn to men with big cocks! We love the feel of them inside us and how they can make us cry out in wanton pleasure! You will never feel my tightness and heat however, you sick fool. You will never spill anything into my belly. Only my handsome mate will ever do such a thing again and it is certainly not you or that foul creature Pusintin! Muton was right. You are dead! And dead men can’t feel pleasure. Only pain!”

Dinxi could only stagger forward from her weight on his back now, right towards Muton who simply reached out and grasped the small linked chain necklace he wore. “We’ll need this Dinxi. I appreciate your contribution to our escape.” Muton declared ripping the necklace away with the small coded card key. “You can die now.”

For’mya shifted her weight forward with a snarl and drove Dinxi to the floor of the medical bay, keeping the long bladed knife buried within his flesh. As he dropped to his knees he tried to reach around and grab her to remove the terrible pain from his back and that is when For’mya triggered the switch on the pommel of the knife. That sent a single, concentrated and most lethal dose of rock spider venom directly into Dinxi’s now mortally injured heart. He gasped suddenly as the poison was injected by compressed air with great force into his organ and instantly began to flow through his veins as his destroyed heart continued to pump trying to keep him alive. He went rigid as he lost the use of his arms and legs, the poison acting even more quickly with his struggling and For’mya then rode his larger body to the deck, his face impacting with the floor with a heavy thud, his cheekbone cracking from the impact. His legs twitched madly for several seconds and then they were still. His eyes were frozen open in death, the rock spider venom quickly doing its fatal work, and a glaze like film quickly spread over the pupils. The venom from a Rock Spider was among the top three most potent poisons within the known universe, able to kill adults from nearly any species with a single bite. They were native only to Uzu Ozeib 7, the rock spider having claimed many vampires throughout the millennia, and in modern medical journals only a single Immortal and a Lycavorian were known to have survived the bites from this ten legged monstrosity of a spider. That was only because they had been fast enough to knock the palm sized body of the spider off their physical person before the creature had fully seated its fangs.

Muton moved forward quickly and reached out hesitatingly to place his large hand on For'mya's shoulder. He almost staggered back when her head whipped around and those wolf eyes and fangs were staring at him. For a single split second Muton thought for sure she was going to pounce on him and attack. He had given her the very means to defend herself and her children, and it was quite obvious to him that while she may have been a pilot by trade, she could very easily kill even a highly trained Kavalian with little effort and less remorse, as she had just proven. He felt a wash of relief flood through him when her eyes focused and the feral expression disappeared instantly as her eyes fell on him. For'mya pushed back up until she was straddling Dinxi's body and she yanked the knife from his back, wiping it clean on his shirt.

"For'mya?" Muton asked with gentle warmth.

For'mya looked at him again and nodded her head, releasing the breath that she had been holding. "I'm fine Muton." She said. "I'm ok."

They both turned to the locked door when the chime sounded twice in quick succession. Muton held up his hand at her alarmed expression. "It is my people. I saw them just as I closed the door after Dinxi entered. Get the children For'mya... we will be leaving this place post haste."

Eirene! Fedor! Come to me! For'mya barked out within Mindvoice as she replaced the knife in the armored sheath she pulled from under the examining bed, and then secured it to her right thigh.

Muton moved to the door as he heard two sets of feet come running from the anteroom and both Eirene and Fedor threw themselves into For'mya's arm. He typed on the entry pad quickly and the doors slid open to reveal six cloaked figures standing in the corridor. The weather on Nefoa at this time of the year was chilly and wet and nearly all the Kavalians wore these cloaks when they went outside. Muton didn't hesitate and he ushered the figures into the medical bay, checking down the corridor one last time before resealing the doors and locking them. He turned and saw them staring at where For'mya knelt on the floor of the medical bay beside the body of the dead Kavalian and hugging the two small children.

Muton moved around them quickly. "We must move with haste now... we..." He stopped talking when the first figure threw back his hood to reveal the handsome face and the smooth tanned skin of a Kavalian male who had undergone biogenic treatments to remove the hair from his body. His eyes grew wide in shock. "Miseo!" He almost cried out as he grabbed the arms of his youngest son.

The dark haired Kavalian with pale blue eyes smiled broadly as the others began to pull back their hoods. "It has been a long time father." He said warmly. "Too long!"

"How? I told you to ready our people!" Muton exclaimed.

"And I did. Kaleen and Olin had me leave with the Second Monitor to come here and get you father. They and mother wanted to leave nothing to chance." Miseo answered. "The ship has already left and should be moving to the rendezvous as we speak."

Muton pulled his youngest son into a rib cracking embrace as the other men looked on with smiles. It had been nearly a decade since he had seen his sons, any of them, and having him here now was almost overwhelming. "We are so close my son. So close!" He turned to the others. "Kapurr, Makoo..." He greeted each of them by grabbing their arms. "You don't know how good it is to see you my friends. All of you. The others?"

"They have secured the LEUGERS transport Muton." The one he had called Kapurr told him. "She is fast but she does not have great range. Why this ship?"

"We won't need great range." Muton spoke turning to face where For'mya had stood up by now and was holding the hands of her children. He watched as Miseo moved over to where she stood, staring at the beautiful elven female with great interest. Muton thought his son was going to comment on her beauty and began to move up to him to stop him. It would not be a good thing for any of his people to try and approach For'mya with any interest aside from a professional one. Muton knew Miseo had many Kavalian females who were very attracted to him, and that was before he had the treatments. Now Muton had to admit the treatments had allowed Miseo's natural handsomeness to come out. It was a great asset for him when moving within Kavalian space for pureborn Kavalians that underwent biogenic treatments were prized for their ability to move unchecked among Lycavorian and human society. Muton needn't have bothered however, as he saw Miseo's pale blue eyes move from For'mya to the body on the floor and he squatted beside the dead Kavalian Commander. He reached out and let his fingers expertly inspect the wound in his back, careful to insure he did not touch the exposed portions of skin and possibly get any remnant of the poison on his fingers and then he took in the look of Dinxi's eyes.

"Very nice." He spoke finally. "A single, clean entry right into the bottom of his heart. Rock Spider venom injected into his heart judging from the glaze in his eyes." He glanced up at For'mya. "Your work I take it?"

For'mya nodded her head without speaking unsure of what to make of this Kavalian male. Eirene was clinging to her hand until she saw the long tail unfurl and extend from beneath the cloak Miseo wore almost as an afterthought. Muton smiled when he saw this for his son had a habit of allowing his tail to extend when he was deep in thought. Eirene's dark brown eyes lit up and she reached for it. "Medwaw... he has a tail!" Eirene declared happily as she grabbed for it. "Look!"

Miseo's head turned quickly as Eirene grabbed the end of his tail and he grinned widely when he began to lift her completely off the ground with it while she clung to the end laughing. For'mya reached out quickly and snatched Eirene back to her possessively as Miseo rose to his full height. He was almost taller than his father For'mya saw, probably six foot four if not a little more and judging from his bulk under the long floor length dark cloak, he was easily over two hundred and thirty pounds if she was any judge. As she held Eirene to her, she met his blue eyes which now looked at her with even more intense interest, but there was nothing in those eyes except professionalism and respect.

"Miseo... this is For'mya Leonidas." Muton spoke as he came up beside his son. "And this is Eirene and Fedor Leonidas." He spoke as his large hand ruffled Fedor's dark blond hair and the boy smiled up at him.

For'mya watched as the professional respect and interest that was there in Miseo's eyes vanished instantly and then those eyes were instead filled with even more respect with an almost reverent nature in his gaze. For'mya watched him bow his head deeply to her. "Queen For'mya Leonidas." He spoke softly. "My father has told me much about you and your bravery and intelligence. It is truly an honor to finally meet you."

Muton looked at For'mya. "For'mya... this is my youngest Miseo. I told you of him." He explained. "He was not supposed to join us yet but as is usually the case he ignored what I told him to do."

"I did not ignore you father." Miseo spoke turning to look at him. "I just fear mother's temper more than yours if I disobey her. Once she determined we had our people well on the way to boarding the ship she sent me with the Second Monitor as I said. She did not give me much of a choice."

This time For'mya could not help but chuckle at his words. "Thank you... thank you for coming." She said.

Eirene stepped away from For'mya and looked at the giant of a man in front of her. "Can I see your tail again?" She asked.

"Eirene... no!" For'mya declared reaching for her.

Miseo laughed and looked at Eirene with smiling pale blue eyes this time. He pulled aside the heavy cloak and fully revealed his two meter long tail. It was a darker color than his skin, only a very light fur covering the entire length with the exception of the last ten inches which appeared to be all smooth skin. It was much thicker than Athani's tail For'mya noticed and appeared much more muscular. It was perhaps three and a half inches in diameter at the base where it entered his tailbone, and tapered down to perhaps an inch and a half at the tip. Eirene laughed as the tip came up and softly rubbed against her cheek.

"Medwaw... it's so soft and smooth!" Eirene declared as she looked at For'mya.

Muton smiled as well. "You will see more of my people with their tails Eirene... but first we need to leave this place."

Eirene immediately looked at him and her face became a little harder in its expression. "Yes we do." She stated once more with far more wisdom than a five year old child should have.

Miseo noticed this immediate change in demeanor right away and looked at his father with questions in his eyes. Muton nodded. "I will explain later... but now we need to go." He said moving to the table and slinging the medical bag over his shoulder. "Everyone knows who I am and they will not question me as we move to the hanger bay. Just act like normal Kavalian soldiers and no matter what happens protect For'mya and the children." He turned back around and looked at the men. "Is that clear?" They met his eyes but gave no indication and he gave them more of an explanation. "For'mya knows where the ship is my friends." Muton continued. “The ship with the map to take us all home. She must be protected at all costs and her children as well. Unless you wish to risk the wrath of King Leonidas if harm comes to her.”

“King Leonidas?” Miseo asked suddenly very alert. “Father... the Lycavorian King is dead. All the available intelligence reports say his eldest son is now in command of the Union forces.”

“And giving the Kavalian senior leadership fits with his actions for they make no sense.” Kapurr stated.

“Yes... which they take as him being in disarray still and unable to fully control the Union military.” Miseo spoke.

“A consensus that is not shared among the Monitors.” Makoo said. “Regardless of his age, someone with his military record does not go around in disarray.”

For'mya smiled more now and she moved forward. “Rest assured... while they make no sense to those who don't associate with him, Androcles knows exactly what he is doing.” She stated confidently. “It may seem like he is in disarray... but he is not I guarantee you that. He is just a methodical as his father.”

Muton nodded his head in agreement. “Indeed he is. No Miseo my son... no the King is not dead. He is very much alive. Pusintin and Keleru and their cronies failed to kill him, which doesn't surprise me in the least. And he will be coming to get his elven mate. She is in our hands now and I suggest we do our best to keep her and his new children alive to make sure that happens.”

“His children?” Miseo asked even more confused. “I thought...”

Muton held up his hand. “I will explain everything as I said... but right now we need to go.”

That information spurred them to action and all of them drew out Kavalian assault rifles from under their cloaks. Muton looked at For'mya as she gripped the hands of Fedor and Eirene tightly. “Are you ready?” He asked.

For'mya nodded with a determined set in her jaw. “I have been ready for quite some time Muton my friend.” She answered warmly.

Muton smiled at her words and nodded his head. “Then let us leave this place behind. The smell is beginning to clog my nose.”

EARTH

CRANAE ISLAND

SECONDARY UNION COMMAND CENTER

Marci looked up from her desk when she heard the soft whirring of the hover chair as it glided smoothly into her office. Her face lit up and she rose from her chair to greet Armetus. He had gotten most of his color back and he looked much stronger than he had only a few short weeks ago.

“Armetus!” She exclaimed coming around her desk and moving up beside his chair. She didn't hesitate and leaned over to affectionately kiss his weathered cheek. “What... what are you doing here?”

Armetus smiled at her, his remaining eye filled with happiness to be alive and up and around. “A little bird told me that my protégé was feeling a bit overwhelmed.” He told her. “And I needed to get out of that damn hospital.”

“Nesa talked to you didn't she? I can't believe Anuk authorized you to leave!” Marci told him as she took his good hand in hers and squatted beside the hover chair looking at him with affection in her eyes.

Armetus shrugged. “We made a deal.” He said. “She lets me out and I don't tell Daniel what she got him for his upcoming birthday.”

Marci laughed feeling a weight lifting from her shoulders even then. “You blackmailed the second highest ranking medical officer in the entire Union? I'm impressed Armetus... Anuk is not known for bending too much.” She spoke. “Coffee?”

Armetus nodded quickly. “Of course! I was waiting for you to ask! I don't know what they were giving to me in that place but they wouldn't let me have a mug of Aricia's coffee and it was becoming very irritating to say the least.” He glided the chair forward into her office and then tapped the control arm of the chair watching as the door to her office closed and sealed with an audible click.

Marci saw this but said nothing as she poured him coffee and added cream just as he liked. She turned back around and held it out to him. “I'm... I'm so happy you are here.” She said.

Armetus took a sip of the coffee and his good eyes closed in culinary bliss as he savored the strong and smooth taste. "I swear to the gods... if Aricia wasn't our Queen she would have the most popular restaurant in the whole of the Union just for her coffee." He said with a satisfied smile.

Marci nodded and moved to the comfortable couch and sat down. "Your mate?"

Armetus nodded. "She knows I am here and she knows I need to work. We have been mated for over four thousand years Marci... she knows me well."

"I can have room made for her here at the Island apartments if you like." Marci spoke quickly. "The compound is finished fully now and the Durcunusaan spared no expense or security measure. To be honest I think they came up with a few that have not yet been invented yet."

Armetus shook his head with a smile. "No need. Andro is allowing us to use Resumar's villa for the moment. And if I get anymore Durcunusaan protection I'll scream. The boy has me blanketed now."

Marci chuckled again, loving that he was in such good spirits. This man was her mentor and her second father. She loved him dearly, even more because he had sat with her real father on more than one occasion and gotten stinking drunk. Her parents were pureblood vampires and among those who were fanatically loyal to the Union. Armetus had met them far more times than she probably knew about, and she knew her parents were covered every moment of the day by Armetus's order. With her parents Armetus could and did relax and enjoy the closeness of friends. Even her Lycavorian husband, an officer within the Fleet, had unseen security because of the job Marci now held.

Armetus looked at her as he scooted the hover chair closer to the couch. "So... how bad is it child? And don't you dare hold back from me." He asked.

Marci nodded her head. "Dumo l'phraktos Armetus... not as bad as I first thought." She told him. "Nesa and the others are one hundred percent sure they have found all of Laustinos's little traps. He was not as creative as we thought."

Armetus nodded his head in agreement. "He was an excellent analyst, not a computer genius." He said.

"The Defense Network Grid is fully clean, and Barla added several additional security elements across the spectrum. I had them cleared with Andro before doing it. Anyone who tries to access the grid now without authorization and a special code will set off alarms in every major headquarters across the Union and shut the entire network out except for those with Level Ten Clearance. Even those who have the right codes must also use an Authenticate Cipher that is coded directly to them."

"What was the final tally on the Drow Marci?" Armetus asked but not really wanting to know.

"Three hundred sixty-nine." Marci answered softly. "Five survivors including Lu'ria. The attacks also caused us to be effectively blind along the entire Farnuri Expanse. I had ordered an OMEN ship into the area but Andro changed that this morning. He has something else planned and I'm meeting with him tonight so he can fill me in."

"What about the attacks here on Earth?" Armetus asked.

"You were right." Marci said. "They came in legal enough. Limian paperwork. Every single one of them. All of them through PROMETHUS Station's port. I'm also not convinced we have seen the last of them either."

"Why?" Armetus asked.

"We have forty-three bodies from the attack against Martin, seven from your villa and another eleven from the operation against Janae." Marci answered. "Sixty one total. The only problem with that is that seventy-five individuals came in over the last eighteen months with the same type of paperwork."

"So fourteen are unaccounted for and still out there?" Armetus said.

Marci nodded. "I have people out looking for them but..."

Armetus shook his head quickly. "Contact Aihola and give it to her. Give her full control. Let the Drow do it. They can get around a lot easier than most here on Earth and they will be relentless in their search. They can also tap more resources among the humans and elves and the vampire divisions and not raise suspicion. And trust me when I tell you Charles and Aihola are scary when they are together. Between them, Selene and Lynwe, the assassins will only be able to hide for so long when Aihola enters the fray."

Marci nodded and got to her feet moving to the desk. "I also contacted the head of the Limian Intelligence service and told him that if I discover his people had anything to do with helping those Kavalians get onto Earth I would personally come and find him and then feed him his little rat fuck tail." Marci snarled.

“And I told him that effective immediately, all assistance Limian Intelligence receives from the Union ceases. He was screaming something about the loss of thirty billion annually in training funds when I cut him off.”

Armetus roared out his laughter. “Oh that’s beautiful! I always wanted to do that!”

She took several pads from the surface and moved back to him holding them out. “These are the latest reports from the assets we still have in The Wilds as well as Riall’s overall fleet operational report. He sends me a copy every two days and...”

“Ignore it.” Armetus spoke.

“What?” She asked returning to her spot on the couch.

“Ignore it.” Armetus told her again. He leaned forward in his hover chair and looked at her. “Shortly after Martin allowed me to form the Kryperia we sat down at the palace on Apo Prime. It was just him and I... well Andro and Elynth were there playing with Torma... they were still very young... but the Queens were gone. He looked me dead in the eyes and gave me one task Marci. I remember his words perfectly... and they are what I have lived by ever since.” Armetus sipped his coffee. “He said... Armetus, you are my eyes and my ears. I don’t know shit about intelligence gathering aside from the physical operations themselves. This is what I want. I want men and women who can go the places no one else can go, do the things no one else can do, and have the intelligence to put it all together. You tell me who the bad guys are and what I will face if you can... and then I’ll go blow the sibfla out of them. You leave that part to me. Take care of our people out there risking their asses everyday. Give them what they need, what they want, hell give them what they don’t know we have! But when they call for help, you make damn sure we get them out. Anyone who does that kind of work has more balls than I do and they deserved to know their bosses are watching out for their asses and not playing politics. You tell them to do whatever they need to do, however they need to do it, and as long as it does not violate the principles of our people and what this Union is founded on, then I will back them one thousand percent. Right to the fucking wall.”

Marci stared at him for a long moment. “You... you never told me that Armetus.” She said softly.

Armetus shook his head. “No... and now I see I made a mistake in not telling you.” He spoke. “I made a mistake in not telling you that Martin has given us all the latitude we need to do our job. Right now however, you are trying to do too much Marci. And in trying to do too much you are not doing enough things well.”

“I’m sorry Armetus.” Marci said softly dropping her head.

“Son vada carians... don’t be sorry child.” He spoke quickly and reaching out for her hand. “And do not take this as a criticism for it is not. I have been guilty of doing exactly what you are trying to do Marci. On more than one occasion. Our first business is Intelligence girl. Gathering it, analyzing it, acting on it. We stay out of politics and anything and anyone having to do with it unless we absolutely need too. Martin and Andro would not want you doing what you are doing in trying to protect Andro.”

“Nesa told you about our investigation into Ulana didn’t she?” Marci said. “I asked her not to say anything.”

Armetus shook his head. “Vengal came to see me yesterday. It is an admirable goal but one that Andro does not need you to undertake.” He said. “That is the Durcunusaan’s job and believe me; Vengal is no doubt doing exactly what you are doing. In fact he let it slip to me that our people and his have crossed paths twice now. That is why he and General Vistr formed the Durcunusaan and it’s how they have led them for twenty-six years. Don’t sell those war horses short child... they are a lot smarter than you think. If they need something you can give them, something they can not do... they will come to you and ask. There is no competition within our ranks Marci... not like Martin told me there was here on Earth so long ago. We all work toward one goal, the continued existence of our Union and the survival of the Leonidas family. That is what we do and that is what we need to stick to.”

“I’m stretching us too thin aren’t I?” Marci said.

“We’ve been hurt. It’s natural to try and do too much after you have been hurt. Ulana is a fool if she thinks she can match Sadi in any way. You know that. We know everything there is to know about Sadi and her past. I have told you all there is to know. That girl was a veritable fountain of information back then, once she realized that she had been used and we would help her. That she wasn’t alone. We gave her the spark that turned her life around. Let Ulana dig for her information and make false assumptions. Let her make a fool of herself Marci. You know how the people, in Sparta especially, how they feel about Sadi.”

Marci nodded. “They consider her the second coming of Gorgo.” She said.

Armetus nodded his head. “Eventually Ulana will go too far and if it gets her killed... and considering Sadi’s unique temperament, that is a possibility if she pushes too far... it’s her ass.” Armetus said with a smile. “Now, as Martin has a habit of saying, let us circle our wagons and do what we do best people. Intelligence is what we do best. That is what we need to stick too. You have our people get out there and find out who, what, where, when and why and then you put it all into order and let Andro go kill it! And believe me... that boy is just like his father as much as he hates the comparison. They are the most efficient killing machines that I have seen in all my many millennia of life. And we... you and I... and those who work for us... we are the best at what we do. Hell... we’re better than the Venorik Elghinn, and they used to be the best way back when.”

“What do I do?” Marci said.

“You tell me. You are in charge until Anuk says otherwise. I’m just an observer right now.” Armetus told her. He watched her rise to her feet and move across the office deep in thought. There was a reason he had chosen her to be his second in command and that reason was reemerging right in front of his eyes.

Marci turned back to face him her eyes bright now. “Reallocate our remaining assets to concentrate on the Kavalians.” Marci said. “Start training new Drow to replace those that we lost. I’ve already got a list of volunteers longer than my arm. I’ll contact this Pian and see if we can’t work out some sort of underground for the Kavalian rebels there. Resumar is going to get those Kavalian females out of their military command compound and we can use whatever they might know.”

Armetus nodded. “Let’s talk to all of them. Get with Resumar and get them back here. Make that a priority. Make friends... make promises and then find out what they know. Tell our people in The Wilds to push as hard as they can... if they have to remove some limbs in the process the King and Andro aren’t going to care.”

“I’ll send a liaison to Ben at Dreamland... see if he and his people have any new toys that will help us.” Marci spoke excitedly.

Armetus nodded once more. “Now that’s my girl.” He stated with a grin. “Technology is a upae... especially when we have it and they don’t. Start putting dossiers together on all the Kavalian leaders we know about. If Pian can help us... get it. I’ve seen both Tarifa’s report and Resumar’s own recommendations. This Kavalian is our best shot at really stoking a rebellion within Kavalian space. He’s charismatic, a powerful leader and a tactical wizard. He has pulled his entire Pride out of the violence of their past and is dragging them into the future. Let’s talk with him and find out how these furry cat bastards fight and who will push harder than the rest. Let’s get him things he can use. Resumar says he is a friend to us. Let’s treat him like that then. Intelligence... equipment. Let’s do what we do best.”

Marci met his eyes. “The Zero Squads Armetus? Do we activate them?” She asked him. “The Kavalians tried to kill Martin... and they almost succeeded. And they have tried to kill Andro twice since. Though one of those attempts was through intermediaries. That’s about as dire as it gets, and Martin said don’t use them unless things were dire.”

Armetus looked at her and was silent for a moment. “Has Andro said anything to you about them?”

Marci shook her head quickly. “Not in regards to them no. But you know as well as I do, with the exception of Athani and this fellow Pian, no Kavalian is at the top of his friend’s party invitation list.”

Armetus nodded. “True.” He said for a long thoughtful moment. “Activate them and turn them loose.” Armetus ordered without hesitation. “It’s time we took the gloves off in every aspect. Androcles is going to give them a very large wake up call in about thirty hours and there’s no reason why we can’t do the same. The more confusion and destruction we sow in the first few hours, the more time we buy to ramp up our own production and training for war. The Kavalians will still have us outnumbered heavily even if Andro’s plan succeeds. The more time we can buy the better.”

Marci nodded. “I’ll send the order.”

“Good.” He told her. “Now... before we get into the really good stuff... why don’t you tell me what we know about these Eridiani fuckers? I don’t like that they have stuck their nose where it doesn’t belong and I have some ideas on how to hand it back to them in chunks for their misdeeds.”

5.3 LYs FROM UZU OZEIB 7

Pa'cour finished securing the last crate in the small hold of the G9 and tapped the control panel sealing the hold tightly. By his calculations they had enough supplies to last at least six months initially. After that they would need to turn to what he would ask Cha'talla for. Pa'cour did not have any doubts Cha'talla would honor their people's code, his older brother was just too honorable not too. He hadn't seen him in more years than he could remember, but he did remember the surge of anger and hate at Veldruk when he heard that he had thought he killed Cha'talla. Pa'cour knew there could be no forgiveness from T'lolt for his actions on Enurrua, no matter that he tried to stop it after he had given the order. No... Yuri was not going to dwell in the past and neither would he. They would move into the future together, perhaps have children one day. He knew that was possible because Cha'talla's wife was a pureblood vampire and she had bore him four sons. Perhaps one day Yuri would give him a child, perhaps more than one. He would not pressure her; he would be content to live out the remainder of his years just with her beside him. What she made him feel was something he never thought he could feel again, not after the death of his first bride so long ago.

Pa'cour prided himself on always being prepared and alert. Thousands of years working with or beside vampires had given him an almost unnatural sense of when they were near and wrapped in the shadows. That sense was screaming now. His rifle was too far to reach so he casually reached up like he was going to scratch the back of his head. He began spinning around instantly, his fingers closing around the pommel of his Immortal sword and as he completed that turn, the blade of the sword was whipping around intending to decapitate whoever was sneaking up on him.

"Pa'cour no!" The male voice hissed as the shadows began to unravel in front of him.

Only Pa'cour's immense strength and battlefield reflexes stopped that sword in its tracks. His dark eyes watched as Nalavi materialized in front of him, the edge of that sword only two inches from his neck, his eyes as wide as saucers. He clutched two bags in his arms and stood there unmoving.

"Nalavi!" Pa'cour gasped instantly pulling his sword back and watching the doctor breath a huge sigh of relief. "Nalavi what are you doing here?"

Nalavi reached up involuntarily with his hand and rubbed his neck where the blade of the sword would have removed his head. "Forgive me... I didn't think to..." He looked at Pa'cour. "I forgot that many of your people have developed an uncanny sense as to where we are when wrapped in the shadows."

"Nalavi what are you doing here?" Pa'cour asked again as he turned back to the exterior of the G9.

"I'm coming with you." Nalavi said. "Yuri insisted... and based on what is going to happen... it's the wisest move I can make."

Pa'cour looked at him. "We are running Nalavi." He said. "We will be traitors and enemies. Are you sure that is what you want?"

"The alternative is far worse. I have no desire to be left to Moran's twisted actions, more so now that Dante is infected with Xaxon." Nalavi said.

Pa'cour looked at him keenly. "You... you know of that?" He asked.

Nalavi nodded. "Yes."

Pa'cour motioned with his head into the G9. "Stow your bags in the starboard cargo bin quickly. Yuri will be here soon and we need to leave."

Nalavi began to move forward but stopped. "For someone in your position you are quite trusting Pa'cour." He said. "You know what Moran would do if he discovered you were sleeping with Yuri."

Pa'cour met his eyes. "I trust Yuri." He answered. "If she sent you here and didn't kill you then that is good enough for me."

Nalavi thought about that for a second and nodded. "A very good point." He said with a grin. "I'll stow my gear." He said tossing his bags up into the G9 and beginning to climb the short stairs.

"I would hold off on that action for a time." The voice spoke.

Pa'cour spun around just as quickly his sword coming up as half a dozen vampires troops unwrapped the shadows from around them, their weapons out and trained on Pa'cour. Moran followed suit a second later. Pa'cour caught the movement out of the corner of his eye and shifted his weight instantly, his sword slashing downward. The blade bit into flesh and there was a muted cry of pain that was cut off as the head of the vampire soldier hit the deck with a thud and rolled away, his body following a second later. Pa'cour snapped out with a wicked back hand slash that sent his sword cleanly through the rifle of the next trooper who unwrapped the shadows from around him. He stepped forward quickly and snatched the surprised vampire by the front of his uniform fatigues with his left hand while plunging his sword forward with his right. The blade buried itself into his guts and blood exploded from between the man's lips as Pa'cour then flung him away with a heave of his Immortal strength.

"Vith!" Moran screamed. "Take him down damn it!"

Pa'cour spun at his words seeing five more troops appear to his side. He swept his sword wildly forward in a two handed grip and chopped the legs from the closest vampire out from under him like a hot knife through butter. As the wailing man fell to the deck the other four vampires pounced upon him. A sharp and painful chop to his wrist and his sword skittered from his grip. With an enraged roar Pa'cour lifted one vampire fully off the deck and sent him smashing back down in to the deck. His head was crushed instantly from the force of the blow, the sounds of his skull fracturing almost deafening. As Pa'cour began to turn he was hit with three savage blows. Driven with vampire strength the three remaining vampires began to beat him down with the small clubs they carried. Each strike was devastating even to him, his head ringing from the repeated blows, the skin on his face splitting open in two spots and spraying blood everywhere.

As Pa'cour was beat to his knees he glanced up and saw two others with their weapons leveled at Nalavi, the barrels of their weapons jammed into his chest. White light began to explode behind his eyes from the repeated blows now, and his only thoughts were of Yuri. He would never be with her again. He would never smell her delicious blood or feel her smooth skin beneath his fingertips. He would never again hear her whispering softly her professions of love in his ear or feel her body wrapped around his.

"Did you actually think you could get away with this?" Moran snarled at him. "Are you really that foolish? Thank you Nalavi."

Nalavi glared at him. "I did not bring you here!" He screamed.

Moran chuckled. "I was coming to see you when I saw Yuri leave the medical bay. That didn't strike me as strange, but when you came darting out not two minutes later carrying your bags and moving like the hounds of hell were after you, I knew something was up." He walked slowly up to a beaten down Pa'cour until he stood over him. "Did you actually think you could take my wife from me? You are a monster! A fucking monster!"

Moran lashed out with a vicious right cross that impacted Pa'cour's jaw with unerring precision. His head rocked back violently, and he was slammed to the deck by the force of the blow. "You know what the punishment is for consorting with a pureblood!" Moran screamed. "I'll peel your skin off your pathetic body personally for touching my wife!"

"I LOVE HER!" Pa'cour bellowed as he heaved himself from the floor.

Moran stepped back as the three vampires troops began to smash their clubs down on him again and again, blood splattering the deck and surrounding area. One blow smashed across his cheek and sent him nearly into unconsciousness. His body spun around and fell back to the deck and he was still.

"Stop it Robert!" Nalavi shouted.

"You shut the fuck up! I'll deal with your traitorous ass later!" Moran screamed as he moved back forward and savagely kicked Pa'cour in the side twice. "I should have killed all your kind! I should have killed all of them instead of letting them go! Fuck my wife will you! My Yuri!"

"I am not your Yuri!" The female voice shouted echoing in the small landing bay. "And if you strike him one more time Robert Moran, I will carve your eyeballs from your skull and crush them under my boots!"

Moran whirled around then his eyes going wide when he saw Yuri standing just behind the six members of his personal guard. They too had spun around at her words and were now wavering as their weapons dropped from the ready position. "Yuri!" Moran gasped. "Yuri what are you doing?"

Yuri felt a swell of power and confidence within her as she stood there staring at the last living source of her betrayal and sadistic torture these last years. She stood there with a clear mind and renewed strength at what she had found. She was not about to let this petty man take from her all she had discovered.

It was a display unlike Moran or any of the others had seen before. Yuri's body trembled as she breathed deeply, trembled in anger and hate. Anger and hate not at the Lycavorians or the Kavalians, but at the man who was hurting her Pa'cour. The man who was causing her future pain. They saw the soft flare of light blue light suddenly encase her entire body and then her hands filled with a dual pair of vicious looking blades that Moran recognized instantly. The blades had somehow been imbued with the blue color, forged in that very fashion.

They were slightly curved to do maximum damage and each pommel had a curved razor sharp end. They had been a gift from Vonis three years after he had defected. Yuri had nearly thrown them away when she received them, thinking he was mocking her by sending them to her. Moran hadn't seen them in decades, but now they filled her hands and they looked positively lethal.

Yuri held them up so that he could see them better. "Do you remember these Robert?" She asked. "The Tears of Heaven Vonis called them when he sent them to me. Forged in the blue fires of Paravin. Unbreakable. Eternally sharp. My gift of redemption he told me in the transmission."

"You threw them away!" Moran barked.

"No... something stopped me from doing that." Yuri said softly. She lifted her cobalt colored eyes and stared at him with pure hatred and anger. "Perhaps Vonis knew something then that no one else did. They will be the beginning of my redemption now! At least as much as I am able to have!"

"Yuri what are you doing?" Moran screamed.

"I'm protecting my future!" Yuri snarled. "I'm protecting the father of the child I carry in my womb! And you will not take him from me Robert Moran! No one will take him from me! Ever!"

Pa'cour's head lifted from the floor as Yuri's voice echoed in the bay, his dark eyes wide in stunned shock.

Moran took a step towards Yuri. "What?" He screamed. "You let... you let this animal have you? You let him spill his seed into you and make a child? Yuri... have you lost your mind? The law! The Coven law forbids..."

"Fuck the law!" Yuri screamed. "And fuck you! I should have drained you dry that first night! I should have turned you into a shriveled pile of genetically enhanced flesh! I plan to rectify that mistake right now!"

With that Yuri moved.

She moved far faster than anyone had ever seen her move. Driven by the knowledge of what she had found, what she could have more of in the future. Driven by the need to protect the man she loved more than her own life now and the child she now carried that he had given to her.

Yuri blurred directly at the six unsuspecting vampire troops. The fight was decidedly short and completely one sided. Yuri felt the power flow through her like never before. Such clarity and peace. Such focus and harmony. It was almost surreal to her. Her body was encased in the soft blue psychic power and it rushed through every millimeter of her veins and her limbs empowering her. The first blade attack opened the closest vampire's throat to the stale air in the hanger bay. Blood erupted nearly a meter into the air as Yuri spun and blurred in motion. Both blades impaled another vampire in his chest and she slashed outward with both blades, carving his heart and lungs into confetti within his chest. She blurred once more, spinning around and her right boot leaving the deck and striking the third vampire with crushing force. The sound of his jaw popping and his neck snapping was like a weapons shot in the confined area and the force of the kick lifted him off the deck and sent him flying ten meters back. As she completed her spin, both of those blue blades snapped out and cleanly sliced through both sides of another vampire's neck. His head lolled to the side, only small portions of skin and his spinal column holding it onto his shoulders as blood arcs began to fountain from his body.

Another blurring motion and Yuri was snapping the neck of vampire troop number five and moving before his body began to fall. The sixth and final vampire could only watch in horror as his Princess spun around and slashed both of her blades in front of her body. He didn't feel the blades connect, didn't feel them slice through the fabric of his shirt or the skin of his abdomen. He didn't even feel it when his internal organs began to spill onto the deck beneath him. He didn't feel any of these things for he was already dead and paralyzed with fear.

Moran turned at the inhuman howl from behind him and he watched Pa'cour erupting upward to his feet like some monstrous animal and snatching one of his three men in his hands by his booted feet. The bloody and beaten Pa'cour simply began to use that vampire troop as a battering ram. He whipped the man around in a display of rage and strength and Moran watched as his upper body collided violently with the other two men and sent them sprawling. He watched as Pa'cour spun that man around until his head impacted the underside of the G9 and splattered blood and bone matter on the hull of the ship with a sickening crunch. Pa'cour then dropped his body instantly and turned to grab another. As he heaved the shouting vampire off the deck, Yuri's words filled his head and he completely lost it. Screaming his savage and feral battle cry, Pa'cour proceeded to dismember the vampire soldier one limb at a time. Using his incredible Immortal strength, a strength that was fueled by the protectiveness within him for his Yuri and the knowledge that his future truly was within his reach, Pa'cour began to tear the man limb from limb with ridiculous ease.

The two vampires holding their weapons on Nalavi turned to bring their weapons to bear on Pa'cour. Neither of them had the opportunity to even caress their triggers as Nalavi drew the small handgun from behind his back. Two head shots apiece and both of them fell dead. “Vithin fools!” Nalavi hissed. “Point a weapon at a doctor will you!”

The last vampire watched with terrified eyes as Pa'cour threw the pieces of his comrade to the deck. He did the only thing he could think of then. He turned and ran, blurring out of the hanger bay just as fast as his skills could carry him. Pa'cour whirled around, his once dark eyes now the cobalt blue of his vampiric nature and he bellowed a roar of righteous anger and began stomping directly at where Moran stood.

Moran snatched his sidearm out and leveled it at Pa'cour. “C’mon you Immortal fuck!” He screamed. “I won’t be so easy!”

Moran didn’t see the long, slim leg rocket out of nowhere until it hit his arm and sent his weapon sailing through the air. He didn’t see Yuri as she blurred in front of him and buried one of her blades into his chest with a look of savage glee on her beautiful face. He felt the lancing pain and looked down as Yuri yanked the blade free and spat on him, the spittle striking his face as he slumped to his knees.

“Too easy!” She snarled at him.

“Yu... Yuri!” Moran gasped as blood began to soak the deck beneath him.

“Oh... you won’t die from that wound Robert.” Yuri rasped at him as she felt Pa'cour come up behind her. “You won’t die just yet. I won’t take that honor from the person who truly deserves it. I want you to live with the knowledge that I will be crying out Pa'cour’s name in our bed. I will be begging him to take me in every possible way he or I can think of! More than he has already had me! And trust me Robert Moran, his Immortal cock is far larger and more pleasing than yours ever was.” Yuri stuck the dig at his manhood in there. “And I want you to live with the knowledge that I will have this child! His child! And many more if that is what he wants! And I will try to make amends for all I have done! What you and my mother have forced me to do!”

“Yuri...”

“You think I don’t know what you have done?” Yuri screamed at him. “I should skin you alive for all you have done to me!”

“You’ll... you’ll never get off the ship!” Moran hissed.

Yuri laughed at him. She held up the control pad and tossed it onto his chest. “I’ll not only get off this ship Robert... I’ll stop you from trying to prevent what is about to happen. Our time is done now Robert Moran. You can remain and be swept aside with the others of the past... but I choose to live and go on.” Yuri walked up to him and kicked him savagely in the head, dropping him into blackness.

She turned as she saw Pa'cour stagger forward. “Pa'cour!” She gasped blurring to him and catching him just before he began to fall. She grunted under his weight but using her strength she got him stable and held him up. “Oh Pa'cour... oh look at what they did to you my love!” Yuri almost cried.

“Yuri... you... you are pregnant?” Pa'cour stammered as Nalavi rushed up and stabbed a needle of healing proteins into his arm.

Yuri nodded her head proudly, completely accepting of that fact and what it meant to her. “Nalavi told me only a few hours ago.” She said reaching up to take his face in her hands. “Our child Pa'cour. Our gift!”

Pa'cour pulled her to him and crushed his lips down on hers. Yuri groaned most happily and kissed him right back, ignoring the blood and death that surrounded them and the stains his blood left on her skin. His arms pulled her close to him, holding her with such strength, yet such gentleness.

“Ahem!” Nalavi spat. “While this is all very pleasant... we really should be leaving don’t you think.” Nalavi hissed.

Yuri reluctantly pulled away and shifted her weight under Pa'cour even more. “We have two minutes before the charges I set disable the entire gravitational grid on the ship and shut down the sensors and hanger bay locks.” She said as Nalavi got under Pa'cour’s opposite arm and they began moving to the G9.

“That will... that will only stop them from coming after us for a few minutes Yuri!” Pa'cour said.

Yuri smiled up at him. A smile brighter than Nalavi had ever seen from her. “The engine core will eject at the same time my love. I attached three EMP missile warheads to the engine core shell. When they detonate they will disable every ship within a million kilometers of the INQUISITOR. Every ship but ours that is. They’ll need to retrieve the engine core, purge the residual EMP signature and then reinstall it before getting main power back. They won't be able to scan or communicate with anyone until they do. Twelve hours tops. Plenty of time for us to escape and keep them from interfering with my sister as she takes back the High Coven from those who would drive it into oblivion."

"You are helping her?" Nalavi gasped.

Yuri looked at the G9 as they reached it. "She is the only hope for the High Coven to survive now Nalavi." Yuri said softly. "I've done a few other things but that is all I can do to help her now. It is time for Narice to step forward and do what she was meant to do."

"What is that?" Nalavi asked.

"Lead our people into the future." Yuri said. "She is the only one who can now. If they do not wish to move forward Nalavi... if they do not want to move forward, then Narice will be the vanguard for their destruction by the Union. She is a Leonidas now Nalavi... above all else. And the total destruction of the High Coven will bear the face of Androcles Leonidas and everything that he commands if Narice can not wrench leadership from those pitiless fools and save them."

NEFOA

KAVALIAN BASE

Everything had been going so well Muton thought as weapons fire slammed into the solid steel blast wall he and the others huddled behind. Fifty meters was all that separated them from freedom and someone had to get sick and go to the medical bay and find the body of that fool Dinxi. He turned his head and saw For'mya holding Eirene and Fedor tightly to her while Miseo was putting out a copious amount of well placed rounds from his rifle. He turned his head in the other direction and saw the remaining Monitors on the ramp of the LEUGERS transport laying down a good deal of fire. It would not be long however before the Kavalian guards that were no doubt on their way here simply destroyed the transport. Muton was effectively out of ideas and his eyes fell to his son.

"Miseo!" Muton shouted above the din of weapons fire.

"They are too fortified!" Miseo barked back.

"Reinforcements will be here in moments Miseo!" Muton yelled.

It was the smallest of them that saved them.

Fedor tugged on his mother's arm and waited for her to look at him.

"Oh... Fedor... I'm sorry." She gasped.

Fedor pointed upwards with his finger. "Shoot them mother." He said.

"Fedor I can't! Not without exposing you and your sister. You..." For'mya rasped at him.

"Not them mother..." Fedor declared. He pointed up again. "Shoot them!"

For'mya lifted her eyes and she took in the large moving crates above them. They were obviously working on some sort of automated conveyor, each crate attached to a single cable, with five meters between each crate. Her eyes grew wider as she realized what Fedor was talking about. Her left hand reached out and she pounded Miseo on the side.

"Miseo!" She screamed. "The crates! The crates above us! Shoot them!"

Miseo turned to look at her, catching the last part of her statement and seeing her point skyward. He looked up and he too saw the crates moving along as if nothing was happening beneath them. His eyes grew a bit wider as he followed them, realizing that the crates were passing right over the position of the Kavalian troops pinning them down. Well trained that he was; Miseo didn't hesitate. He leaned back, lifted his rifle and held back the trigger.

In the space of four seconds he sent thirty-nine high velocity kinetic projectiles directly at the bolted joint holding the crate to the thick cable. His aim was true and that metal joint first splintered and then snapped completely under the weight of the fully loaded crate. That crate fell nearly fifty meters, its forward momentum intact, and smashed into the deck of the hanger bay three meters from the closest Kavalian position. The huge crate shattered into several large pieces which proceeded to careen at high velocity directly into the Kavalian position causing many of them to stand up and attempt to get out of the way. When they did, Muton and the others simply mowed them down. Miseo shifted his fire to another crate and once more cut loose with a concentrated burst of accurate fire. This time, the cable snapped instantly and the crate plummeted into the auxiliary fuel cells lining the wall of the hanger bay. One spark was all it took, and four Tri-Cobalt fuel cells designed for the fighters exploded. The hot wave of fire expanded outward quickly like a wave, causing Miseo to duck behind the blast wall with wide eyes. For'mya clutched Eirene and Fedor to her tightly as the wave of heat sizzled over the top of their position.

“Kill them Miseo” Kapurr screamed. “Not us!”

Miseo lifted his head for a split second to see the damage he had wrought and his eyes grew large. Dozens of smoking bodies lay sprawled in grotesque caricatures of death, many of them still burning. The weapons fire that had been pinning them down was gone and now even For'mya looked up.

“Saoi sibfla!” For'mya muttered.

“Hah!” Miseo shouted. “Do I do good work or what?” He scrambled to his feet. “Go! Go!” He screamed reaching for For'mya’s hand.

For'mya didn’t hesitate either and scrambled to her feet. “Get to the ship!” She barked out nearly dragging Fedor and Eirene.

Miseo saw this and dropped his weapon, allowing it to dangle on the shoulder strap he wore. He darted after her and swept both Eirene and Fedor up in his much stronger arms. They didn’t hesitate an instant and quickly clung to his shoulders as For'mya gripped his arm and all of them made a mad dash to the LEUGERS Transport. The half dozen Monitors on the ramp were waving frantically as they rushed up, urging them inside.

“Go!” Muton screamed at For'mya as he came up beside Miseo and took Fedor from his arms. “I will secure the children! Go!”

For'mya raced forward into the cockpit of the ship, quickly taking stock of what she had. The LEUGERS was the newest Kavalian transport, but still far behind a Union STRIKER AT or even a High Coven G9. She scrambled forward into the pilot’s seat, which was on the right in the LEUGERS, and began powering up engines and shields just from memory alone. As the systems began to come alive she looked out the view window and saw more Kavalian shock troops pouring from two different entrances into the hanger bay. For'mya’s hands flew across the controls and as they did, engineering panels behind her began lighting up, the engines beginning to rise in noise pitch as they powered quickly. Her head whipped around when Kapurr practically threw himself into the co-pilot’s seat.

“Shields!” For'mya screamed. “Get the shields up!”

Kapurr didn’t question her orders for even an eye blink and his hands began to fly across the two control consoles in front of him. There was a soft humming sound that snapped on all around them and then suddenly For'mya was watching with satisfaction as the shields on the ship flickered and extended. It happened just in time too for the Kavalians had uncorked two heavy weapons and now the heavy kinetic rounds were pounding the shields hard on the port side.

“Time to go!” Kapurr screamed.

“Ramp! Is the ramp up?” For'mya yelled.

“Almost!” He snapped back.

“A little faster would be nice!” For'mya quipped as her hands worked the controls.

“Kavalian ships don’t power as fast as Union vessels!” Kapurr barked at her. “Shit!” He pointed across in front of her and out the view window. “A missile crew! Shit!”

“Ah... nubou allon!” For'mya snarled. “Hold on everyone!”

For'mya slid her fingers up the engine dial, bringing the LEUGERS’s engines to full military power and she slashed her hand across the second control panel activating the ship’s thrusters and lifting it off the deck. The ship jerked around wildly for two or three seconds and then she spun it on its main axis, far faster than the LEUGERS was designed to move. She heard Eirene scream out in joy at the stomach tossing maneuver and then For'mya stabbed her finger down on the main drive output.

“Cook this fuckers!” She snarled viciously as the LEUGERS’s main engines ignited right there in the hanger bay and sent a fifty meter tail of flame shooting across the hanger deck. A tail of flame which instantly incinerated the Kavalian missile crew and detonated their spare missiles as the LEUGERS leaped forward into the open sky of Nefoa.

“Does this tub have defensive measures?” She barked at Kapurr.

Kapurr was already acting and his fingers were touching the control consoles in two different locations and the transport began to spew bright flares and microfiber chafe bails out the sides of the ship in copious amounts. “Spilling the entire load!”

The engines were rapidly spooling to full power and For'mya began punching in the coordinates for Enurrua before they had even cleared the cloudless sky and reached into the upper atmosphere. “Prepare for atmospheric jump!” She snapped. “Can you plot the variables?”

Kapurr nodded quickly. “Give me the coordinates!”

For'mya complied as Muton moved into the cockpit behind them and watched. “Adjust for the reversion coefficient point three two.” For'mya ordered. “The space around Enurrua is still cluttered with leftover debris and we don't want to hit anything!”

“Point three two!” Kapurr barked. “Got it!” He glanced up and looked at her. “You are jumping us to within five hundred kilometers of the planet's gravity well!”

“The closer the better!” For'mya snapped. “LSD drive spooling to max!”

Kapurr looked quickly at Muton. “You were not lying my friend!” He barked out.

Muton smiled. “I told you she was the best!”

The beeping from the panel behind them pulled Muton's attention away from Kapurr and he quickly settled into the chair behind them. “Fighters!” He announced. “Closing fast!”

“Let them close!” For'mya shouted. “In six seconds we won't be here!” She adjusted the controls in front of her once more and then looked at Kapurr. “Ready?”

“Do it!” He barked out.

“Engaging LSD drive!” For'mya yelled as her finger touched the engine panel.

Two squadrons of Jaguar Mark II fighters could only watch helplessly as the LEUGERS transport leaped from the space around Nefoa and was gone. None of the fighter pilots looked forward to returning to their burning base and taking responsibility for this major screw up.

PUSINTIN'S GREAT SOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUMA'S PRIDE 2.4 LYS FROM TUPACIA PRIME

“...explain to me how this happen!” Pusintin roared at the holo image of the Duty Officer on Nefoa. “Where is Dinxi?”

“He is dead Marshall.” The man answered quickly. “A single knife thrust to his mid back that penetrated his heart. Rock Spider venom was then injected into his heart killing him in seconds.”

Pusintin rose to his feet. “A knife?” He asked. “Muton killed him?”

The Duty Officer shook his head. “No Marshall... it appears based on medical evidence gathered by our medics that he was killed by the elf female. The angle of the entry wound is upward, which would mean someone shorter than him. Muton and Dinxi were the same height.”

“Fuck!” Pusintin snarled in disbelief. “Muton is a fucking traitor? He betrayed me! He's been my doctor for all of these years!”

“Security footage from the hanger bay clearly shows him helping in the escape with eleven other unknown Kavalians.” The Duty Officer spoke. “It also shows the elf female For'mya leading and protecting two children Marshall.”

Pusintin's head snapped up. “Two?” He gasped.

The man nodded. “Yes sir. A male and a female.” He answered. “They looked to be about five or six years of age from the security footage.”

Pusintin's eyes grew even wider. “A girl?” He stammered. “And they were that old?”

“We have several angles from the hanger bay that were not destroyed when she ignited the engines inside the facility and destroyed a missile team and their missile stores.” The man answered. “They clearly show the children.”

“Send them to me!” Pusintin snapped. “Now!”

“Of course Marshall.” He stated. “I have squadrons beginning to deploy in a standard search pattern sir. The LEUGERS is only a medium range transport and they will not have gotten far.”

Pusintin looked at him. “Are you stupid man?” He snapped. “For'mya would have ripped out the transponder on that ship the moment they made their LSD jump out of the system!” He shook his head. “Twins.” He hissed softly. “The bitch was carrying twins this whole time! And Muton was protecting her.”

“Do you wish to... do you still wish me to deploy the squadrons Marshall Pusintin?” The Duty Officer asked from Nefoa.

“Yes!” Pusintin snapped. “Standard sweep Captain.”

“If we find them sir?”

“Contact me immediately and do nothing!” Pusintin barked. “Is that clear? I want her alive Captain! I want the children alive!”

“Understood Marshall.” The Captain spoke just before Pusintin stabbed his hand down on the COM panel and ended the transmission. “Fucking incompetent asshole.” He snarled as he turned to his First Officer. “Popal?”

The dark haired Kavalian was in front of him instantly. “Marshall!” He snapped out as he stopped.

“Tune the lateral forward sensor array to detect an Borellum Acoustic Pulse.” Pusintin ordered.

The man looked at him oddly. “Marshall... a Borellum Acoustic Pulse?” He asked. “The signal from a BAP is notoriously spotty sir. It’s why we don’t use them anymore. They are not used by anyone for communication anymore.”

Pusintin nodded. “And it’s why I put a BAP tracker in For'mya’s middle toe.” He said with a grin. “No one uses them as communications tools... so when we detect it... it will be her.”

“We won’t discover anything until they discontinue LSD operations sir.” Popal said. “The signal is blocked by light speed travel.”

Pusintin nodded. “But the LEUGERS doesn’t have the range of other transports they could have picked which means they are going somewhere reasonably close to Nefoa.” He said. “When they stop we’ll find her.”

Popal nodded. “I’ll align the forward array myself sir.” He stated.

“Hold position here.” Pusintin ordered. “I can almost guarantee they will remain within The Wilds as they move closer to the Union border. You can bet that is where they are going. I need to report this to Keleru but don’t hesitate to interrupt me if we detect her ship. They’ll be making their way to the border anyway they can.”

“Of course Marshall.” Popal spoke.

Pusintin turned on his heels and began walking off the bridge of his ship. “Twins.” He said softly. “Sonofabitch.”

CALIBER KELERU’S HOME

“... certain Pusintin?” Keleru asked.

“I reviewed the security footage myself Keleru.” He answered from within the secure transmission. “A boy and a girl. Both look to be about five to six years old.”

“Did we overestimate the dose of the serum for her elven body to make them grow so fast?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin nodded. “We adjusted for her Lycavorian healing system, but we may have overdone it.”

“This may complicate things. And it may help us.” Keleru spoke softly. “Having a twin will not allow us to completely control him. Especially a female twin. However, if they are growing as fast as you say, it will look far better if he is at the forefront of our ruse and you are in the shadows.”

“We may have to do what we normally would not do.” Pusintin said as he nodded. “Keep the female safe and use her as a tool against him, but what you say is correct. Can we delay the vote of the Union Senate until I have him?”

Keleru got up from his chair and moved around his desk. “It’s possible. They have asked for one delay already to insure all the Senators are physically present on Earth. How long?”

Pusintin shrugged. “The LEUGERS doesn’t have great range Keleru, so they will need to go somewhere soon. Once they stop using their LSD drive I’ll be able to detect wherever she is within five sectors. A Borellum Acoustic Pulse device is like a trail I can follow. Once I have that I can be there within hours. A day... perhaps two.”

“Are we certain the Lycavorians are not part of this escape?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “Everyone who helped them was Kavalian.” Pusintin answered. “All of the security footage confirms that.”

“Who are they?” Keleru asked.

“Muton aside... the others appeared to be minor officers in different positions around the KFI. At least those that we got clear images of their faces. Nothing out of the ordinary really.” He answered. “Except that none of those we identified have family that we can locate. Which is odd, considering how old some of them looked.”

“Interesting.” Keleru said softly. “Exactly like them.”

“What’s that?” Pusintin asked.

“Before you were welcomed among us as a Kavalian Pusintin there was a time when a group of Kavalians was preaching ridiculous notions of peaceful intent.” Keleru said. “They were a religious order of some sort. Once I grew tired of their ranting I had them destroyed. Or at least I thought I did. Finding family members of the leaders was especially hard. We did manage to execute several thousand finally but the rest...” Keleru shook his head. “There have been rumors through the years that they were still active, but I had no real proof.”

“You think this is the same group?” Pusintin asked. “Muton has been my doctor for going on four centuries Keleru. How could this have escaped our notice?”

“Perhaps they learned from their mistakes.” Keleru said. “I will need to institute a purge of our people it seems. If there are more of these fools they could cause problems we don’t need.”

“I’ll get you a couple prisoners if that will help.” Pusintin said.

“Yes indeed. Do that.” Keleru said. “Once you have the children kill For'mya. We do not need the problems she will cause.”

“I can control her with my aura Keleru.” Pusintin said. “Our mistake was sending her to Nefoa to have the children. I should have kept her with me. She won’t be able to resist me, no matter how much she wants.”

Keleru looked at him in the transmission. “And you are sure about this?”

Pusintin nodded. “I’ve done my homework.” He stated. “I’ve read all of the information that Laustinos gave to me about how it was in the old times on Lycavore. My brother turned her yes, but in doing so it made her wolf blood that much more powerful. Now that he is dead and I have claimed her, that blood will follow it’s instincts. It’s why she reacted as she did when I was fucking her silly. She can’t help it.”

Keleru nodded after a moment. “Very well. If you can manage her it will give us some measure of control over the Elven people I believe. I will contact Matuarr and have him request two days delay.”

“Will they go for it?” Pusintin asked.

Keleru nodded. “I don’t see why not. According to Matuarr, their debate has been lively and no clear consensus has been made. He has attended and viewed their forum from a sealed room. He has also spoken to several of the Union Senators outside their hall. Many of their more liberal Senators are voicing a large disapproval of the way your brother ruled. That could work heavily to our advantage.”

“So my nephew kept his word?” Pusintin asked.

Keleru nodded. “He is politically inept.” Keleru spoke. “He is so intent on proving that the Lycavorian people adhere to their own laws that he is crippling himself by his very actions in allowing this debate.”

“This just may work Keleru.” Pusintin said.

Keleru nodded. “You are right... but we still have our secondary plans in place. They finished arriving four days ago just as you planned. I must say I was confused by your actions in taking out the Drow, but now I see the whole picture. A brilliant move really, and they are so worried about you and your claim that they have not moved to replace their assets.”

Pusintin nodded. “I’ll contact you as soon as I have them.”

Keleru nodded. “Very well. Good luck my friend.” He touched the COM panel and the fuzzy image vanished.

Keleru turned to his nephew and senior aide. “Kattu... begin a systematic search for any events out of the ordinary that have occurred in the last six months and may have somehow slipped our notice in intelligence reports. Pull as many people as you need too and get it done.”

Kattu nodded. “It would be easier if I had access to the main computers within the compound Uncle. And the females there to help with the search.”

Keleru nodded. “Whatever you need.” He said. “Execute the females when you are finished with your search. We can always get new ones and I do not want to expose them to such sensitive information and let them live afterwards.”

Kattu nodded. “As you order.” He said. “And Marshall Pusintin?”

Keleru looked at him. “You don’t like him do you Kattu?”

“Forgive me Uncle.”

Keleru shook his head. “Do not apologize boy.” He hissed. “I understand your distrust but you must remember Pusintin is Kavalian in his heart. He has proved this time and again.”

“But do you trust him Uncle?” Kattu asked.

Keleru nodded his head. “He is brash and reckless. Arrogant and implacable at times, but he is loyal to us. Yes... I trust him Kattu. I trust his motives and his ultimate goals. It is his actions that I sometimes call into question. But I do that with everyone.”

Kattu bowed his head. “I will begin my search immediately.”

KRANEK IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

Esther looked around the inside of her medical clinic and couldn’t help but feel a swell of immense pride. Ja’narie was helping the three Hadarian medics to inject the ten Immortals that were within the main clinic. Another two Hadarians and four elven medics were doing the same thing at the recently opened second clinic on the far side of the settlement. They were being careful and safe as they continued to inoculate the Immortals that had begun arriving in droves. Only several hundred were allowed down to Kranek at one time to receive the serum and to view what they could have in the future. Many of them Esther discovered, revered Cha’talla in a way he would not have predicted, and his words carried more weight than even she realized. His legend had grown since he had left the Coven, the whispers of his death never really taking hold among the younger generations of Immortals. His actions had kept the rumors that he lived alive and circulating for years. Now everyone knew it to be true. Those Akruvians who came down to Kranek saw a very different world than they were used to.

There had been only two confrontations between the newly arriving Immortals and those members of Cha’talla’s tribe and their Lycavorian allies and brothers. One of the newly arriving Immortals had made the mistake of attempting to assault an elven female he saw walking the streets of the settlement. She was one of the elven engineers that had come to Kranek without hesitation. Esther knew that the commander of that engineering detachment and Cha’talla had grown quite close over the weeks and months since she had arrived and they trusted each other implicitly. That commander had waited for the justice she knew would come if Cha’talla had been here, and she did not have to wait long. The Immortal had been caught before he was able to complete his vile action, and the trial was amazingly short. The senior members of the Kranek settlement were unanimous in their verdict. That Immortal had been put up against a wall and executed as an example. This had caused much unrest among those arriving, until only three short days later when an older Lycavorian drunk on Spartan wine had shot and killed an Immortal who was only searching for a medical tech to help him. The Lycavorian had been excessively brutal in his execution style killing and within hours this same man had been put up against the same wall as the Immortal only days before and then he was executed by the Senior Union officer for murder.

These two incidents had shown the newly arriving Immortals that they would tolerate none of these actions by anyone. Yes... it was going against everything they had been taught, and trained and brought up to believe, but they only had to look at the settlement on Kranek to see that it was working.

Esther knew they had also found perhaps two dozen Immortals that had come here for only one reason. Half of them were nothing more than Immortal mercenaries who had come to Kranek to steal whatever they could. The other half had come in search of intelligence that they could bring back to the High Coven. Both groups of these men were now buried in a deep hole somewhere in the mountains, and put there by Esther and several others themselves. Her position among Cha'talla's tribe as their Matriarch had elevated Esther to nearly cult status herself. Being a pureblood vampire and enduring the births of four Immortal sons was no small feat in the eyes of many Akruvians, especially after one saw how petite she truly was. This had earned her respect and rank immediately and Esther was using it well.

Esther turned to begin the process of mixing another batch of serum when she saw the stern faced Akruvian from the Command Center walk in, look around and then settle his eyes on her. He started across the large clinic immediately and Esther lowered the data pad she had in her hand as he came up.

"Im'wor?" She asked as he stopped in front of her. "What is wrong?"

The Akruvian, one of the first to undergo the treatments, bowed his head to her. His dark brown hair was beginning to grow rapidly and his Blessed Wife had to now tie it in a long pony tail for her refused to cut it. "Matriarch... there is something you should see in the CIC." He spoke in a low voice. "Lieutenant Lersamo sent me to retrieve you."

Esther cocked her head slightly. Lersamo was the Lycavorian communications officer now assigned most happily to Kranek with his elven wife and three children. He had been among the first Lycavorians that had asked for and were granted the right to live and work here. He and his wife were among those who loved to be part of new and great things and to them this was the place to be for both.

"What is wrong?" Esther asked softly, moving closer to Im'wor.

"We copied a transmission." Im'wor told her. "It came in only a few moments ago and he felt you should see it."

"Why?" Esther asked.

"It is from Cha'talla's brother Matriarch." Im'wor said.

"T'lolt?" Esther gasped. "Why would he send...?"

Im'wor shook his head. "No Matriarch. Not T'lolt."

"If not T'lolt then..." Esther's eyes grew wide in disbelief. "A l'phraktos Im'wor! It was Pa'cour!"

Im'wor nodded his head slightly surprised that she knew the name. "You know of him then?" He asked.

Esther nodded. "Cha'talla told me many years ago." She answered. "That is the name he chose to use after what happen between them. Cha'talla said he became Yuri's Immortal Captain. Why... why would he contact us?"

"You should probably view the transmission Matriarch." Im'wor spoke. "He is standing by as we speak."

"Wait... he is waiting for me?" Esther gasped.

"He said he would only speak to you since Cha'talla was not here. He also said he had a good idea where Cha'talla was and what he was doing." Im'wor said. "He said he would wait for me to retrieve you. He was... he was quite..."

"What?" Esther asked.

"He was very polite about it Matriarch." Im'wor spoke.

Esther reached up and took his arm. "Take me to the CIC." She said urgently.

"...am invoking the exile's Right of Last Appeal." Pa'cour spoke to Esther in the secure and clear holo transmission.

His face looked bruised and Esther's keen eyes could detect the rapidly healing cuts on his cheeks. He was broadcasting on a narrow beam transmitter and all she could see was him in the chair on board some sort of transport type ship.

"This is granted to..." Pa'cour continued but Esther held up her hand stopping him.

"I know what it is." She spoke evenly seeing his dark eyes fill with surprise.

"You know what..." Pa'cour bowed his head ever so slightly. "Forgive me... I should have known my brother's Blessed Wife would learn these things through the years. You know what I am guilty of then?"

“I know that Cha'talla reached out to you in the hopes you would join us.” Esther said. “He does not care about the past.”

“And what of T'lolt?” Pa'cour asked. “Surely my brother does not forgive me for what I did? No one could do that.”

“T'lolt is different now.” Esther said. “Cha'talla is different. So much has happened that has changed things Pa'cour. Come here... speak with them when they return. You will be safe here.”

Pa'cour was silent for a moment but then shook his head. “I might be safe yes... but not the others I travel with.” He said.

Esther's eyes narrowed. “What do you mean?”

“It does not matter now. I can not return no matter... no matter how much I wish to.” Pa'cour said. “I ask only that I be granted my Right of Last Appeal.”

Esther didn't hesitate. “It will be done.” She told him. “What do you need and I will see to it that it is taken care of.”

“Just like that?” Pa'cour asked.

“Do you think your brother would refuse you?” Esther asked. “He would not. Neither of them would refuse you Pa'cour, regardless of what you may think and believe. Tell me what you need and I will take care of it in my Blessed Husband's name.”

“Six months worth of supplies. Enough for three people. Hadarian Medical equipment to include the serum that you are using to return our people to their natural appearance. Clothes... preferably civilian in nature. Weapons that can be easily concealed and are of high quality. Preferably two or three elven forged Immortal blades crafted by the Union's Weapon Master Nehtes. And if possible Union P190A3s. And whatever credits you can spare in whatever denomination or currency you have.” Pa'cour said.

“The serum, clothes, rations and credits I can give you. As much as you can carry with you.” Esther answered instantly. “The Union weapons and Hadarian Medical equipment is another story however.”

“You are allies with them now are you not?” Pa'cour asked.

“That does not mean I will test that friendship by giving away weapons and equipment that is tightly controlled.” Esther replied gently. “Especially the Hadarian Medical equipment.”

“I have no desire to use these things against the Union Esther. I am not that large a fool.” Pa'cour said.

“We have it here on Kranek Pa'cour. Whatever you need you are welcome to use. Your brothers want you to return home.” She told him.

Pa'cour shook his head. “I must think of my future now.” He said. “Whatever weapons and medical equipment you can spare then.”

Esther nodded after a moment. “Done.” She answered.

Pa'cour met her eyes in the transmission. “Just like that?”

“You are Cha'talla's brother.” Esther said. “I do not care what took place thousands of years ago and neither does he. Not any longer. We are forging a new path into the future and it has no place for old grudges or conflicts that happened before many of us were born. I know he would want you to return and be with your family. And so does T'lolt... no matter what you may think.”

“Your words ring true.” Pa'cour said with a nod. “But I cannot.”

“Where is Yuri?” Esther asked. “You were her Immortal Captain?”

“I do not know.” Pa'cour answered far too quickly.

“Do not mistake me for a fool Pa'cour.” Esther said keeping her voice neutral. “She isn't dead. We know that much.”

Pa'cour met her eyes. “How do you know this?”

“That doesn't matter.” Esther said. “You are still protecting her aren't you?”

“She has left the High Coven behind.” Pa'cour stated quickly. “We escaped from Moran's ship and are running. I know Princess Narice is within High Coven space and about to launch an attack to claim control of the government. Yuri felt her enter Coven space. And I am pretty sure that is where my brothers are. Helping her.” He watched Esther's face remain almost impassive but he caught the split second of surprise before it vanished. “We disabled Moran's ability to intercede against Narice... at least for the first few hours.”

“And Yuri is just going to allow this?” Esther asked calmly. “This seems to be very out of character for her and hard to believe. Especially after what she is responsible for.”

“The essence of the Pralor Xaxon no longer controls her.” Pa'cour snapped. “Androcles Leonidas killed her on Earth. She died on that foul planet and he left her body. I saved her! I saved her because I love her! She is not the same person anymore no matter what you and anyone else believes. I want the bounty and Kill Order on her lifted as well. You may do what you wish with Dante Moran, but I want these orders on Yuri rescinded.”

“You ask much Pa'cour.” Esther spoke. “I... I am not unwilling to believe this. I have spoken with Dysea Leonidas at length about this Pralor Xaxon and what he was capable of and responsible for. At least what she knew of him. I can not however speak for Andro or any of the Leonidas family. Not after what happen to Zarah. You know this.”

Pa'cour nodded his head. “And I do not condone what was done to the Leonidas child. I would demand blood as well. That is why I am willing to offer them something in return for her freedom and peace of mind. Something I believe they will want more than seeing Yuri dead. That is my price.”

“What exactly could you possibly offer to Androcles that will make him pull back the Kill Order he has put on Yuri?” Esther said. “I don't think you truly know or understand how he views his siblings. Especially Zarah.”

“He will do this for I have the perfectly preserved bodies of King Resumar, his Queen Eliani and their elf concubine. Sadly... I do not know her name. I understand she killed five Immortals before falling beside the Lycavorian King and his Queen.” Pa'cour answered with a small amount of awe in his voice. He immediately saw Esther's eyes widen considerably. “Yes Esther Suira, I was there that day. I was the one that the High Lord Veldruk ordered to first desecrate and then dispose of the bodies after that battle. If you are my brother's Blessed Wife than you know Akruxians would never defile the bodies of our honored dead, enemy or not. I still hold to my honor in many things and I would not do this. They fought valiantly and they deserved far more than I was allowed to give them. Their bodies were reverently cleaned and dressed and then sealed in vacuum chambers so that the ravages of time did not destroy them. I have since collected the chambers from where I hid them and I have them on my ship now. I will return them to Androcles Leonidas in exchange for Yuri's life and her freedom. That is what I offer.”

Esther moved closer to the holo transmission. “You... you speak the truth!” She gasped.

Pa'cour nodded. “They deserved to be returned to their people and all I ask is a future for Yuri in return.”

“Why?” Esther demanded then.

Pa'cour took a deep breath and looked at her. “Because I have taken her as my Blessed Wife and she carries my child. My future. Our future. I will give you twelve hours to decide. After that you will never see or hear from us again.”

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

Deia was quickly ushered into the main room of the family wing of Andro's villa. She was sandwiched between the two burly Durcunusaan officers as she had been for the last thirty-seven minutes. They had pulled her out of a meeting with a dozen senators and were not at all polite about it. All they would tell her is that Andro needed her at Cranae Island immediately and he would not wait. Deia was about to tear into her nephew for his complete lack of manners and protocol when she saw who was with him and the look on their faces. Sitting on the large couches were Isabella and Anja with Dorian between them. Dorian now looked to be in his early teens and was turning out to be the image of his father, though his growth was slowing rapidly now. Eliani sat beside Carisia on the second couch with Jomann standing behind her his hand on her shoulder, Lu'ria and Ne'Veha next to them, Zarah and Lucia sat opposite Bella on the first couch. Normya was standing in front of the large bay window leaning against Tir'ut's bulk with Carina and Moneus just to their right. Gorgo stood beside Riall near the double doors onto the patio.

Deia was still recovering and she grasped the arms of one Durcunusaan officer as he guided her closer to Andro. Sadi stood beside him, as he stared at one of the metope on the wall. It depicted a battle from ancient Greece that many believed King Leonidas himself took part in. Andro had found it on a building within Gytheio and had it moved to his home.

“Andro?” Deia whispered. “Mandri... what is wrong? What’s going on here?” She asked with dread in her heart as the Durcunusaan officer released her arm and he drifted back several paces.

Andro looked at her. “I need... I need your guidance Tenna.” He said softly.

Deia nodded. “Always... you know this.” She answered. “What... what is going on Mandri? Why do all of you look so... so shocked? Your father is... he...”

“He is fine.” Andro said turning to face her. “This has nothing to do with father.” He held out the data pad. “You should probably read this.”

Deia took it without question. “What is it?”

“A message from Esther... Cha'talla’s wife on Kranek.” Andro replied. “She just recently finished a conversation with Cha'talla’s brother. Yuri’s Immortal Captain. His name is Pa'cour. The one who shot me while Yuri and I were fighting. The one who brought her back to life.”

Deia looked at him. “Back to life?” She gasped. “What do you mean?”

“Read Tenna.” Andro said. He turned to Sadi as Deia began to read and kissed her softly. He motioned with his head for her to sit down and she nodded. Sadi moved to the couch and settled between Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. He turned back when he heard Deia whimper softly and then gasp.

“Son vada carians Androcles!” She exclaimed reaching for Andro’s arm. Andro caught her easily and guided her to the open chair and helped her to settle into it as she continued to read and her eyes filled with tears. She looked up at him finally. “Please... please tell me this is no joke.”

Andro shook his head. “This is not something I would ever joke about Tenna. You know that.”

“How?” Deia gasped.

“I was going to ask you that question.” Andro said. “You... you were there that day. You and grandfather Riall.”

“Andro I was just a Captain then.” Riall spoke.

“You were there!” Andro insisted.

“I was fighting with a regiment of our people and elves on the outside of the compound.” Riall spoke. “When we... when we heard that Resumar had fallen... when we heard that he had fallen our only thoughts were to extract and try to keep his dream alive.”

“I was... I was on the far side of the compound.” Deia spoke now. “I had just seen the last Hadarian transport offworld when they attacked.” She looked up at him. “I never made it back to them. The fighting was so intense... bodies everywhere. I tried to reach them but... she told me to escape.”

“Grandmother?” Andro asked softly.

Deia nodded as she wiped tears from her eyes. “She told me to escape and save as many as I could.”

“So the bodies were never recovered?” Andro asked.

Deia shook her head. “No one saw them after the attack began. They drew the majority of the Coven assassins to the upper floors so that we could evacuate the remaining children. He, Eliani and Na'rien were the primary targets. The Coven were ignoring anything not in their way of getting to them.”

“Na'rien... this was... this was her name?” Ne'Veha asked softly leaning forward.

Deia nodded. “For'mya bears a strong resemblance to her... because of her bloodlines. She carries the blood of Na'rien’s brother in her veins... as do you Ne'Veha.”

“Me!” Ne'Veha gasped.

Deia nodded. “You are related to her by virtue of your father’s blood. Not closely... but you are still related to her. If I am not mistaken... your grandmother’s grandmother was wife to Na'rien’s brother’s grandson. Your blood is one generation back from For'mya’s blood.”

Ne'Veha’s eyes grew a little wider. “I... I did not know this.” She gasped.

Deia shook her head. “I don’t think anyone does.” She said. “Based on how your father views Lycavorians I didn’t think it appropriate that he know this. Your grandmother does not even know. At least I don’t think so. It was all kept very secret... the bloodlines of the elven royalty... after the King was assassinated. There were so few of them left. After the promise we made to Janae’s father I was sworn to secrecy never to tell anyone.”

“Saradasaar?” Sadi asked. “Would you and your father not have these memories? Would they not be part of what was imprinted upon your grandfather Leonidas and then passed to your father and then you? His last moments?”

Andro turned and looked at her. "It's possible KertaGai." Andro said softly. "I have just never experienced them. I do not know if father has or not."

"If he has..." Anja spoke up. "He has never mentioned them to us."

Deia shook her head. "And he would not." She said. "These are memories he would not share with anyone Anja. Not even his wives and mates who he loves more than his own life." She looked at Andro. "Would this Pa'cour even do such a thing?"

Andro turned and looked at Tir'ut for a moment, Normya's emerald eyes looking between them in puzzlement. "Yes." Andro finally said.

"How can you be so sure?" Bella asked.

Tir'ut squeezed Normya's hand. "It is not well known among Lycavorians." He spoke moving forward. "It is not well known among Akruxians for that matter. When the body... when the body of King Leonidas was returned to the Spartan people... it was Immortals who delivered his remains to the Guardian of the Line Dymas and those with him." Tir'ut spoke. "My father was the one who ordered his men see to the remains and insure they were treated as a warrior of renown. This was not Xerxes's doing. They were enemies yes... but none of what Xerxes did made my father or those who fought the Spartans those days happy. He defiled the remains of a King who had fought valiantly and with honor. That was something the High Lord could not remove from our people. That sense of honor. It was... it was a point of contention then and it has remained so for as long as they have served the High Coven."

"Andro... Androcles do you know what this could mean to our people?" Deia asked him. "If this is true... if... I never... I never had the chance to say goodbye Mandri." She said softly.

"Do it fervon." Zarah's voice spoke now and Andro turned to look at her.

"Zarah... it isn't that simple. I cannot..." Andro began.

"Yes you can." Zarah spoke as she got to her feet and moved over in front of him. "I know what vow you have made to me Andro. But this... this has nothing to do with Dante. You will not be breaking that promise to me. And even if it did... this... these are our ancestors we are speaking of. Our grandparents. Our blood! We need to bring them home Andro. We need to bring them home and give them the honor they have earned and deserve. They are why we are all here fervon. Without them... none of us would exist. I am unchaining you fervon. Now... now you must do what you must."

"If what this Immortal says is true Andro..." Lucia spoke now. "She has broken one of the most sacred laws of the High Coven. Laying with an Immortal is like sacrilege to many of the older vampires. That is not... that is not something my mother... that is not something she would have done before. If she is different now... if..."

"She is your mother Lucia." Anja said gently. "You do not have to hide the feelings you have for her among us. You are part of our family now. She is your mother and no matter what happens that will never change."

Lucia met her eyes and smiled. "I know. Yes... she is my mother. But she is not. I find myself torn between wanting her to pay for what she allowed Dante and Javier to do to my love Zarah and yet also wanting and hoping that perhaps it was not her at all. That it was the essence of Xaxon that made her do these things... just as this Pa'cour says. Does that make sense?"

"Far more than you realize child." Bella told her warmly. "Far more than you realize."

"The Kavalians have granted an additional two days time for the Senate to debate." Deia said quickly. "I discovered that just before the Durcunusaan came and collected me. They are no doubt using the time for other things and think the debate will be even more lively than it has been. I watched that Kavalian dog Matuarr and he actually thinks he is going to win."

Andro looked at her. "They will be using that two days to search for mother." He said with a snort. "Let them search for her. In nine hours she will be back among us and in father's arms. As will our new brother and sister."

"Then she made it off Nefoa?" Deia asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes. If all goes according to plan father should already be on Enurrua and mother should arrive very shortly. That is... if Eirene and Fedor were correct in their interpretation of the plan this Muton person had."

"We have the time Andro." Deia said. "We..."

Andro held up his hand calling for silence as he squeezed Zarah's hand and leaned close to her cheek, rubbing her cheek with his in brotherly fashion. Zarah smiled and nodded her head at him. "We must do this." She said softly into his ear so that only he could hear her words. "I need for you to do this."

Andro stood back up and nodded to her, his azure eyes filled with love for her inner strength. He lifted his head up before speaking then. "Esther Saira have you been listening?"

"I'm here Androcles." Esther's voice came over the internal COM of the main room.

Andro moved to the credenza and touched the small control panel. The Holodisc in the floor of the room came alive with her image and he turned to face her. "Esther... contact him and tell him he will have what he wants. I'll give him everything he wants but Yuri needs to be at the meeting."

"Andro... you do realize that he may be lying to us." Esther said.

"He is not lying mother." Tir'ut spoke now.

Andro shook his head. "Tir'ut is right... he's not lying."

"Then why do you insist that Yuri be there?" Esther asked. "And why does he insist the exchange be done along the border where he has said?"

"Because if he is trying to trick us and the bodies are not who he says they are, I intend to kill them both right there." Andro spoke coldly. "For his part... the location of the border he has designated gives him several options to go once the exchange is made. It also gives me some idea of just where they came from."

Esther nodded her head. "I'll let him know. How long?"

"Tenna and I will leave for the rendezvous within the hour." He replied. "His G9 will be taken onboard the SCIMITAR when we reach the border and we'll conduct the exchange in the landing bay. With the SCIMITAR's engines it should only take us four hours to reach the border in the location he specified. If that is not acceptable to him then that will be proof he is lying and he can go straight to hell."

Esther bowed her head slightly. "I'll make it happen." She stated. "I'll meet you at the coordinates with everything we can spare."

Andro shook his head. "No Esther. You can meet us if you choose, but this will come from me. From us. I will not ask you to tax your stores with all of the Akruvians arriving as they are."

"Very well. I'll see you in nine hours." Esther said.

Andro turned to look at everyone in the room when the transmission faded to nothing. He looked at Anja. "Mother if you..."

"Eli and I will prepare genetic test kits." Anja answered him before he even finished his statement. "We'll conduct the tests."

"We tell no one outside this room until we know for sure." Andro told them. He looked at Isabella. "I would like to take Dorian mother."

"Yeah!" Dorian quipped happily and the others chuckled at his enthusiasm.

Bella nodded. "We will all go." She stated confidently. "And you will continue your studies young man!" She spoke sternly to Dorian.

Dorian hung his head in mock disappointment. Physically he was the image of a fifteen year old boy, but mentally he was far older. He had been spending every waking hour with Ryner learning all he could and finishing the drills Andro and Elynth gave to them. He was close to six foot tall already and beginning to fill out with a lean muscular form. His growth had slowed considerably and he would slowly stop within two or three weeks in the body of a young man in his early twenties.

"Yes mother." He spoke softly.

"We should remain here Andro." Sadi spoke. "If all of us leave it will draw suspicion from the Netnews and whoever may be watching us."

Andro nodded and turned to Deia. "Tenna... inform your staff you will be gone for a period of twenty-four hours and they should not try to contact you. Tell them you are beginning to make arrangements to have father laid to rest. They will understand that. Grandfather Panos can handle anything that comes up. I'll meet you all onboard the SCIMITAR in one hour."

ORBITING ENURRUA

Wayonn stepped onto the upper deck of the Nodon Engineering TYPE II ALPHA Dragon Transport through the side hatch leading from the small set of dual quarters and immediately was assaulted with a noise unlike any he had heard before. His head quickly turned to gaze into the lower deck of the ship and he could very clearly see Martin and the other members of his team walking amongst themselves and the five dragons that occupied the lower deck, Arzoal among them. They were moving with a purpose, looks of concentration and determination on their faces with none of the humorous banter that they had before the previous mission. He spied Aricia and Dysea standing with Cirith near the railing looking down into the lower deck and he moved right over to them. Dysea was the one who looked up at him as he approached.

“Val’istar.” She said with a warm smile but having to speak a little louder than normal because of the music.

“What is that terrible noise?” Wayonn exclaimed.

Aricia lifted her head now with a smile. “Metallica.” She answered.

“Metalla... who?” Wayonn gasped.

“Daniel and the Master Chief are collectors of music from the early twenty first century.” Dysea explained. “This is music that they listened too prior to missions they went on so long ago. This song they only used for certain missions. It suits them don’t you think?”

“This is music?” Wayonn questioned.

“New blood joins this earth, and quickly he's subdued. Through constant pained disgrace the young boy learns their rules. With time the child draws in, this whipping boy done wrong. Deprived of all his thoughts, the young man struggles on and on. He's known a vow unto his own, that never from this day his will they'll take away.” Aricia spoke the words in an almost reverent tone. “What I've felt, what I've known, never shined through in what I've shown? Never be, never see, won't see what might have been. What I've felt, what I've known, never shined through in what I've shown? Never free, never me. So I dub thee UNFORGIVEN.”

Wayonn looked at her. “What do the words mean?” He asked.

Aricia shrugged. “I have no idea. I think... I think the only ones who understand are down there.” She motioned into the lower deck area. “You must admit... it is rather inspiring music and the tone is so deep and moving.”

Wayonn looked at her. “If you don’t mind that your brain is about to explode.” He stated.

Dysea laughed and took his arm. “Come... we’ll go into the cockpit Val’istar. It will be quiet in there.”

Dysea leaned over and quickly kissed Cirith before she led Wayonn away. Cirith then stepped closer to Aricia, pressing against her from behind and lowering her chin to her slim shoulder. Aricia leaned into her movement and their heads touched as they watched them move below.

The cockpit on the TYPE II Alpha was far removed from that on the original class of Type II DTs. It was nearly twice as big, with one entire engineering station to monitor its new engines and power consumption. The TYPE II Alpha was now equipped with two powerful Shroud generators and a power core that was built from the design schematics developed by Zaala Randall and based on Pralor technology. Unlike her predecessor, the TYPE II Alpha was now equipped with a Class Nine Hyper Matter Fusion Reactor, the newest and most powerful engine of its class and only one step down from the engine designs of the ARIZONA-Class itself. They had been built for the purpose of keeping up with the new Arizona Assault Wings which would feature the TYPE II Alpha Dragon transports as well as the larger TYPE I Alpha Dragon Transports. The engineering station was empty right now as no engineer had been assigned because of the newness of the ship. Endith and Tina were sitting in the pilot and co-pilot’s seats respectively however, and Endith appeared as if she had a wondrous new toy, though she was very businesslike knowing they were heading into a possible combat situation.

The large cockpit view window was at the moment filled with the dull white clouds and upper atmosphere of Enurrua as Endith and Tina guided the ship smoothly down into the planet’s lower atmosphere. Tina was the one who looked up and saw them as she adjusted a knob on the control console between her and Endith.

“How soon Endy?” Dysea asked.

Endith turned her head, she bright red hair cut short. There were very few who called her by her nickname and Dysea was among that small group. “Seventeen minutes until release.” She answered instantly.

“Winds are nominal.” Tina chimed in. “Seven knots out of the east over the target site.”

“Ground Penetrating Radar scans of the target site?” Dysea asked.

Endith nodded. “There’s definitely something there Dysea, regardless of what Arzoal believes.” She answered. “Several interconnecting tunnels and one large chamber. Not as big as what she said this chamber was but big enough. And the preliminary scans indicate it is made of the same sort of material as CS41.”

“Entrance?” Dysea asked.

“The only one we can detect comes out right under this waterfall. At least the scans say it does.” Tina answered pointing above her head to where a radar map showing the mountain was displayed. “This mountain used to be a whole lot bigger.”

“Arzoal said the explosion from the engine core reduced it in size by about half.” Dysea spoke.

Tina nodded. “That sounds about right. What I don’t understand is why?”

Dysea looked at her. “What do you mean Tina?”

Tina traced a line along the current view of the mountain. “Computer estimates put the mountain like this before Arzoal ordered the engine core detonated. At least another three to five thousand feet higher.”

“Yes.” Dysea said watching her intently.

“Based on the ship size and the engine core type that Arzoal gave us... when that core detonated it should have sheared off three quarters of the mountain and vaporized everything within three kilometers.” Tina said. “It didn’t. Passive scans show no scorching of the earth and Reflecting Sensor Waves indicate multiply tunnels remain. Many are buried of course, but recent seismic activity have allowed sections to open up again.”

“I’m not following you Tina.” Dysea said. “Seismic activity?”

Tina nodded. “At least three recent earthquakes within the last twenty years. Probably caused by the orbital bombardment that the Skipper ordered to destroy the cities. I estimate the largest one at nine point two. Natural erosion could account for some of the clearing, but these earthquakes have opened up major sections of the tunnels that connected this ship and the rest of the mountain.”

“And now?” Dysea asked. “We don’t need to be walking into unstable terrain.”

Tina shook her head. “The last quake must have shifted the fault plates enough where they have become stable again.” She said. “It’s all very firm right now.”

“Then we stick to the original plan.” Dysea said. “Aricia, Helen and I go in with Arzoal, Isheeni and Iriral. Kenny and Cody will accompany us on Isheeni and Iriral and Walter on Arzoal and we find the ship this Kavalian Muton says he needs to find. Martin and the others proceed to the coordinates For'mya gave to them and insure that it is not a trap.”

“I’m not going with Martin?” Wayonn asked her.

Dysea looked at him. “No Val'istar.” She said. “We do not know what... we do not know what we will face down there and Nauta Melme is unwilling to risk you recklessly. You will remain with Endith and Tina here on the TYPE II.”

“And what was our operation at the Kavalian Observation Post?” Wayonn demanded. “That wasn't reckless?”

“That little thing?” Tina asked with a grin. “Shit... that was tame for Marty and the crew. They could do an Op like that in their sleep and half drunk.”

“Tame?” Wayonn looked at her with wide eyes.

“We knew what we were facing and how many enemies there were.” Dysea told him as she smiled at Tina’s words. “This time we are going in blind. For all we know this could be a very elaborate trap and hundreds of Kavalians will fall upon Martin and the others. Many of them... all of them could be killed. He will not risk you or us in that circumstance. Not when there is no need.”

“So he is keeping me safe?” Wayonn spoke with some disgust in his voice.

“He is protecting our future.” Dysea said. “And insuring if something does happen, that Andro is not left without your wisdom and counsel for what may come in the future.”

Wayonn’s eyes narrowed. “He has told you?”

Dysea shook her head. “We can feel it within him Val'istar.” She said. “In Andro and you as well. You will tell us when the time is right.”

“And you and Aricia and Cirith will just let him die?” Wayonn hissed.

Dysea couldn't meet his eyes and dropped her head. “No. We would die with him.” She stated softly.

“Even if this is not his wish?” Wayonn spoke.

Dysea lifted her emerald eyes and met his once more. “We cannot... we cannot lose him again Val'istar. You saw what it did to Aricia. To all of us.” She said softly meeting his gaze with determination and pride. “If Martin Leonidas is to fall in battle then we will die fighting beside the man we love.”

“I suppose I don't have much choice in this matter do I?” Wayonn asked.

“I'm afraid not.” She said sheepishly. “That is why Kenny and Cody are coming with us. Endith and Tina will insure that if anything happens they will get you off this planet and away from here.”

Walter snorted in disgust. “This is worse than when Dutkne insisted on protecting me.” He snarled softly.

Dysea chuckled softly. “There are times when Nauta Melme backs you into a corner and you have no say in anything.” She said.

The soft chime sounded and Endith looked up. “Outer marker.” She announced. “Twelve minutes out.”

Dysea nodded. “Time to get ready.”

Martin looked at the faces of the men and women around him. All of them were now dressed in the heaviest set of Mark IV ArmorPly that provided them the most freedom of movement. Anything heavier and they would become tanks in battle. Each set of ArmorPly had its Dragon Armor skin ready to deploy once they reached the ground and their new PSGs. They held or leaned on their helmets and stared back at him. Men and women he had known and fought with for nearly three decades. Helen stood back between Arzoal and Aurith watching with pride in her eyes.

“This is the last chance.” Martin spoke. “I won't ask anyone to go forward from here. For'mya is my mate, my wife. I need to do this. None of you do.”

“Shit Skipper... are you going to hit us with that crap again?” Pablo spoke from the rear of the group.

“You don't get it do you Boss?” The Master Chief spoke. “You saved us. You, Danny and Jules. At least when she was wolf woman.”

Julie reached out and slugged him in the arm as arm as she could. “Asshole.” She muttered with a large smile and they all laughed.

“If not for the three of you none of us would have survived the Purge of the Genomes. You made us what we are and that is why we are all here today.” The Master Chief said. “Stop asking us if we want to be here. None of us would be here without you and it's time we returned the fucking favor.”

“Fucking A!” Kenny snarled loudly.

Julie looked around at the faces of the men she had called family, lost once and then found again. She vowed that would never happen again. She stuck her armored fist into the open area in the circle they formed. “To those of us who have gone before...”

Nearly two dozen fists joined hers in the center.

“They are forgiven their worldly sins!” All of them spoke in unison.

“To those of us that remain...” Martin echoed.

“We shall be known as the Unforgiven! Until we join with them!” They all spoke.

“And woe unto the motherfuckers that stand in our way!” Danny barked.

“Hooyah!!!” The shout carried even above the music.

Martin got to his feet and looked at the upper deck when Dysea came into view with Wayonn. It's time Nauta Melme. She spoke.

Martin nodded. Then let's get our Kinsoargai back! He turned away from her. “Master Chief!”

“Yo!”

“Crack the hatch on this bitch and let's go flying!” Martin shouted.

“Now that's what I'm talking about!” Tony bellowed as he slammed his hand down on the ramp control. “Time to bring some whup ass!”

Wayonn looked at her. “What is this whup ass Dysea?” He asked as Torma let out a trumpet that ended almost all conversation in the lower portion of the ship, Isheeni, Aurith and Arzoal adding their own voices as well.

Dysea smiled. “I’ll explain sometime Val’istar.”

Wayonn turned back and looked at Martin. “He reminds me too much of Sumar. Matha con ronnus lon tor.”

Dysea looked at him and laughed. “He is that Val’istar. He is that.”

LEUGERS-CLASS KAVALIAN TRANSPORT ENURRUA

For'mya’s eyes glided over her instruments for the fourth time since their reversion only twenty seconds earlier. She didn’t hesitate and turned to Kapurr. “Anything on the sensors?” She asked.

Kapurr shook his head. “Nothing.” He spoke.

For'mya looked out the view window at the planet in front of them. A planet that had been the cause of so much pain, but had also been the source of so much discovery. She felt the hand on her arm and turned to see Eirene and Fedor beside her. She scooped Eirene into her lap as Fedor moved closer to her.

“Is your ship nearby?” For'mya asked turning to Muton and Miseo as they crowded into the cockpit.

Miseo nodded. “My brothers were going to park it next to the third moon of the planet Supya. On the edge of the system.” He said pointing to the sensor chart on the screen between the two pilot seats. “The moon’s upper atmosphere is laced with Tri-Cobalt ore in its unrefined state. It should effectively hide them from most sensor scans.”

“How big did you say this ship was Muton?” For'mya asked.

“Roughly the size of one of your LEONIDAS-Class ships.” Muton answered. “Though without the heavy armor and weapons I would imagine.”

“Propulsion and shields work fine.” Miseo continued. “We have some weapons online but we did not finish all of them. Sensors are operational but they have a limited range because we were not able to finish obtaining power cores and generators from Kavalian stores.”

“How limited?” For'mya asked.

“Half a light year.” Miseo answered. “Perhaps a bit more if we channel additional power to the arrays.”

“So they won’t know we have arrived?” For'mya spoke turning back to look out the view window.

“Not if they are within the ore fields... no.” Miseo answered. “We need to send a coded signal to them.”

“Don’t send it yet.” For'mya spoke quickly putting her hand on his arm.

“For'mya why?” Muton asked leaning forward.

She looked at him. “You don’t have what you need yet and I am not willing to risk your people if Pusintin somehow was able to track this ship.” Miseo looked at his father quickly as For'mya turned to look out the view window again.

“Impossible!” Kapurr spoke. “We made nine different jumps within one hour. No way they could track us.”

“Nothing is impossible.” For'mya said softly. “Pusintin may be a sadistic monster, but he is not stupid.”

“She is right father.” Miseo spoke.

Eirene pointed to a small collection of stars. “It’s beautiful mother.” She said softly. “It looks like a flower.”

“Yes it does.” For'mya answered her eyes going back to Enurrua in the distance. “He is here.” She said softly.

“Pusintin?” Muton exclaimed.

For'mya shook her head quickly. “Martin.” She said as an expression of dreamlike peace came over her face. “He is here Muton.”

“For'mya are you sure?” Muton asked. “He is...” He stopped himself and shook his head. “That is a stupid question. Of course you are sure. On the planet?”

For'mya nodded slowly. "Yes. He's heavily shielded... I can barely sense him but he left enough of a resonance trace for me to detect."

Kapurr adjusted his equipment. "No ships showing on the sensors no matter how I scan. They..."

"Stop scanning Kapurr!" For'mya hissed softly.

"Why?" Kapurr asked looking at her.

"If we were tracked then they will see us scanning for other ships." For'mya declared. "They'll know we are suppose to meet someone."

"Shit!" Kapurr exclaimed shutting down his sensors except for navigation. He acted quickly and then looked at her. "Done."

"He wasn't suppose to be here." Makoo said from the entrance of the cockpit.

Muton turned and looked at him. "We are unknown to him and after what Pusintin has done he will trust no Kavalian."

"He won't expose himself until he sees me." For'mya said as she slid Eirene out of her lap. "They gave us the coordinates to land near where the ship is." She turned and looked at Muton. "Let's get down on the surface. When he sees me he will not even think of harming you or any of your people Muton." She leaned forward and looked at Makoo. "I promise you this Makoo. After what you have done for me and my children... I will make sure you are safe. All of you and your people. It is the least I could do."

Muton nodded. "I know you will." He said. "Take us in For'mya. I will inform the others and we can prepare to move to the crash sight. Makoo tell them to consolidate all the equipment we brought into individual packs. We will need to move quickly."

Makoo nodded and turned to go back into the rear of the transport. For'mya looked at Kapurr. "Give me fifty percent power to the sublights Kapurr. If he is here then there is a ship in orbit somewhere and you can damn well bet they are watching us. Let's move slow and calm."

Kapurr nodded. "Fifty percent power."

PUSINTIN'S GREAT SOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUMA'S PRIDE 2.4 LYS FROM TUPACIA PRIME

Pusintin looked up from the data pad he was reading when Popal entered unannounced.

"Marshall!" He exclaimed. "We have detected the BAP signal!" He spoke as Pusintin rose to his feet.

"Where?" Pusintin snapped.

"Inside the borders of what used to be the Lycavorian People's Republic. Near the capital planet of Enurrua!"

Pusintin came around the edge of his desk. "Why would they go there?" He asked softly.

"There is very little travel through this area of space Marshall." Popal told him. "Nearly everyone avoids it. Even many of the mercenary organizations. When the Union left this area of space after glassing many of the planets, they left much floating debris from destroyed ships of the People's Republic. They never made any attempt to clean up the system or reestablish any sort of presence. This caused many to believe they left it heavily mined or somehow trapped. No one is willing to take the chance."

Pusintin nodded. "And no one would expect her to go there. It wouldn't even cross their minds."

"Perfect place to hide." Popal spoke. "And close enough to the Union border to make a sprint there once they are rested."

"How long to get there?" Pusintin asked him.

"We can make the leap to The Wilds Jump Gate in twenty minutes." Popal answered. "We can use the Gate to Jump directly into the system. From there perhaps an hour to Enurrua."

Pusintin nodded. "Do it Popal." He ordered. "Our Assault Group as arrived?"

Popal nodded. "Yes Marshall. Seventeen ships."

Pusintin looked at his First Officer. "Hold half of them just inside the Gate once we make the jump into the system. Just in case."

Popal nodded. "As you order Marshall."

"Stupid bitch is making it easy for us." Pusintin spoke. "I thought she was smarter than that."

“No female can be as tactically proficient as a male Marshall.” Popal spoke.

Pusintin nodded. “That is the fucking truth. Get us underway Popal. I’ll burst Keleru what we are doing and I’ll join you on the bridge.”

ULU ARC ROYAL ORBITING ENURRUA

Akemi Katsumi strode onto her bridge from her Ready Room carrying the data pad in her hand. “Talk to me!” She barked.

“Kavalian LEUGERS-Class transport entered the system four minutes ago!” Her main sensor operator called out instantly. “They jumped almost into the gravity well of Enurrua.” His voice sounded impressed.

“That would be Queen For'mya.” Akemi spoke. “Advanced tactical maneuver to keep from being detected. Nice.” She spoke moving to her command chair. “Status of the second Kavalian ship?”

“Intermittent contact! Still holding within the upper atmosphere of the third moon of Supya.” The man answered. “Definitely not a warship. The Tri-Cobalt ore is making sensor readings sporadic, but I’m not picking up any weapons signatures.”

“Uh huh. Keep six Mark 22s locked on that ship.” Akemi said. “They so much as twitch, blow them to hell.”

“Weapons aye!”

“Captain Katsumi! That small Kavalian assault force we detected near Tupacia Prime. The one that was holding station? Long range sensors have them as now moving!” Another voice called out.

Akemi turned her head. “Moving where?”

“Unknown... but protracted course takes them towards the old High Coven Jump Gate Fifteen.” The voice answered.

“You still have them?” Akemi asked.

“Yes ma'am.”

“Shit... them being there isn't coincidence anymore.” Akemi spat. “If they use the Gate how close will they get?”

“No way to really project Captain.” The man answered. “At least within the system itself. One corridor takes them away, towards Nefoa and the other takes them within thirty minutes of Enurrua itself.”

“Fuck! Is there any way to detect which corridor they use?” Akemi asked.

“Not until they enter the Gate.” The man answered. “I’m bringing up the command codes for the Gate now.” Union intelligence had long ago planted monitoring devices within the old High Coven Jump Gates within The Wilds. When the Kavalians conquered most of the Coven border stations it was a decision Martin made that would tell them which way a ship was going and what corridor they were using. The system was archaic by all modern means, but at least it was accurate, and early undetectable. “I’ll be able to tell you in seventeen minutes.”

“COM officer! Burst a message to the King! Low beam and secure so the LEUGERS doesn't detect it! We have their locators?”

“Aye Captain. Both teams! All individuals! Both teams are down and safe and Queen Aricia, Queen Dysea and the Feravomir are moving for primary target location as we speak. We're monitoring all eight of them. Their signals are clean.”

“Tell the King we may have company and he'll need to work fast. And tell him about the ship near Supya.” Akemi barked.

“Aye Captain.”

“Wish we had some fighters out there providing cover.” A voice echoed.

“We don't...” Akemi responded. “But we got lots of teeth left. Weapons officer. Spool up all defensive systems and bring the main batteries online. Missile tubes loaded with Mark 22s and standard concussive warheads! Full yield on Photonic torpedoes! Stand by for combat maneuvering! Things may get dicey!”

ENURRUA

I never thought I would return to this vile planet. Arzoal's voice filled their minds as skimmed low over the tree tops.

They had exited the TYPE II Alpha with no issues in the least, all of them having done so many times in the past. Now they sped across the terrain, Arzoal in the lead, Isheeni and Iriral on each of her wings. Torma and Aurith had remained with Martin and Cirith at the coordinates they had given to Fedor and Eirene to land.

Nor did I. Aricia's voice echoed softly.

There is much pain here for all of you. Helen broke in. But you have put it behind you now. Do not let our presence here dredge memories from the deep. Let them remain where they belong.

You are right sister. Arzoal spoke.

Aricia? Isheeni's voice spoke softly.

I am fine. Aricia answered her. Her hands stretched out and she placed them along Isheeni's neck, feeling the muscular movements of her shoulders as her wing carried her along. I am thinking of when we first flew together. I rubbed the insides of my knees and thighs raw because I was so terrified and so thrilled at the same time.

And what we did then we did without a saddle sister! Isheeni chimed in happily.

Yes we did. Aricia spoke a small smile forming under her helmet.

This place brought all of us together. Iriral's voice filled their minds. No matter what took place all those years ago, this place is what brought all of us together. Yet we are so much more now because of the darkness this planet brought to all of us. We defeated the darkness that this place represented and now look at us. Nothing living or dead will ever separate us from our Bonded Brothers and Sisters. Our futures are now intertwined as fate meant for it to be.

Avoi! Aricia spoke as her emotions and happiness at finding Isheeni coursed through her and into Isheeni.

There! Arzoal called out. The edge of the mountain range. That is where the ship is.

Aricia looked through the slits on her helmet intently scanning the terrain all around the ridgeline. Dysea? She called out.

Breaking now. Stand by! Dysea called out. She had remained out of the conversation they had been having because this planet had not affected her as it had the others. Now however, now they would need to be fully focused. Her own wolf eyes scanned the terrain far below as Iriral broke for a higher altitude. At five thousand feet Dysea could see the entire face of the mountain. Her eyes quickly found the sunken portion of the mountain that could only be where the ship had been hidden. She followed the ridge with her eyes for at least two kilometers until she found the river at the far end where Tina said the only entrance into the tunnels beneath the mountain was. I have it! She called out. Alter direction by three degrees Arzoal. Isheeni. It will take us right to the entrance. Six kilometers away now.

What will we find mother? Isheeni asked as they altered their course slightly as Dysea had directed them.

The bones of too many of our dead. Arzoal spoke softly. And I imagine the bones of many of Chetak's men as well. I do not know how many made it into the tunnels, but several thousand at least. It has been nearly five thousand years since I have been here. Only the gods know what remains.

UNION BORDER

3.6 LIGHT YEARS FROM APRIAN TWO

“Perhaps this is not the wisest course of action.” Nalavi spoke as his eyes looked through the view window of the G9 and took in the massive size of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser that was holding station only five thousand meters away. He sat in the engineer's seat behind Pa'cour who occupied the pilot's seat.

“This is the only way we can truly be free Nalavi.” Pa'cour told him.

“Yes I understand that part.” Nalavi said evenly. “However... I would like to add that we, meaning us, are about to board the command ship of perhaps the one Leonidas who does not have the most meaningful reputation when it comes to bartering with his enemies. He tends to eliminate them rather than talk with them. And much more efficiently than his father I might add as well.”

Yuri turned her head from her spot in the co-pilot’s seat. “He is also the only one who has the compassion to do this.”

“Compassion?” Nalavi said. “Compassion is not a word I would associate with Androcles Leonidas. Not when it concerns you. He’s already killed you once Yuri. What makes you think he will not gladly do so again?”

“Because like his father he is perhaps the most honorable Lycavorian living right now.” Yuri answered. “And surprisingly... unlike his father... he is far more attuned to the currents and resonance of life itself.”

“Because he was born fully aware?” Nalavi asked.

Yuri looked at him oddly for a second and then nodded. “Yes.”

Nalavi shrugged his shoulders. “The Lycavorians will kill us far quicker than Moran would have... but I would like to point out that the pain of dying will not be any less Yuri.” He said.

Yuri grinned now. “Have faith Nalavi.” She said surprising herself with her choice of words.

“Faith doesn’t help against projectiles and blades I’m afraid.” Nalavi told her. “I hope the two of you know what you are doing. If we all die... I will spend the rest of my years haunting every facet of your lives. Spirits though we may be.”

Pa'cour looked out the view window and shook his head. “I have... I have never been this close to one of their new ships.” He said.

“I’m glad you find it interesting.” Nalavi said. “I’m having quite the time keeping my bladder contained from fear.”

Yuri chuckled. “And where is all that optimism Nalavi?” She asked him.

“I left that in the hanger bay of the INQUISITOR.” He replied.

Yuri was about to respond when the soft chime cut off her words. She quickly adjusted the console in front of her. “There is the signal.” She said softly.

“No audio?” Pa'cour asked.

Yuri shook her head looking at him. “No sense in announcing to the entire sector who they might be communicating with.” She said.

Pa'cour nodded. “True enough.” He spoke as his hands glided over the controls. “Plotting the course.”

Yuri reached out and placed her hand on his arm and squeezed. “No matter what happens Pa'cour... know that I love you.” She said with more sincerity than she had ever felt before.

“We will be fine.” Pa'cour said. “Honor means much to Lycavorians. This is something that your father and mother never realized and it contributed to their downfall. He will not go back on his word.”

Yuri nodded her head. “I hope seeing me doesn’t change that.” She said softly.

SCIMITAR

The landing bay of the SCIMITAR had been cleared of all flight crew personnel and those who were not directly involved in the exchange. This began rumors almost instantly and many waited to see why their Prince had cleared them out.

Thirty Durcunusaan troops flanked Andro on either side with Deia, Anja and Eliani directly behind him, Isabella, Esther and Dorian standing just behind them. Ryner rested on the deck just behind his Bonded Brother with his head positioned between Dorian and Isabella’s inner shoulders. The Durcunusaan were not too concerned for the G9 could only hold twelve crew total, but they were taking no chances regardless. They knew who they were dealing with. All of them were dressed in the newest sets of Mark IV ArmorPly body armor and all but Andro and his mothers and brother and sister wore their helmets. Elynth, Miath and Tharua rested on the deck in three different locations, their legs drawn up tightly beneath them waiting to spring into action just as Ryner was.

As the ramp in the rear of the G9 fully touched the deck revealing the tall Immortal the Durcunusaan became very alert, many of them having to physically restrain their instincts of shooting first and asking questions later. Jomann stood just to Andro's right and he leaned closer. "Scans show only three lifesigns." He whispered. "And three low power vacuum sealed sleep chambers."

Andro nodded slowly as he watched the Immortal walked hesitantly down the ramp, two more figures moving much slower behind him but following. [If anything happens you protect my mother Anja and Eli.] Andro told him within Mindvoice. [Dorian and Ryner will cover my mother Isabella and Deia. No questions Jomann.]

Jomann nodded. [Understood.]

The two figures behind the Immortal stopped halfway down the ramp when the Immortal reached the deck and held up his hand. All of them wore long cloaks and cowls but only the Immortal Pa'cour had his head and face showing. His eyes searched for and found Androcles standing at the front of the unit of Durcunusaan.

"We have done what you asked Androcles Leonidas!" Pa'cour spoke looking at the heavily armed Durcunusaan before turning his eyes back on Andro. "Will you keep your word or not?"

Andro stepped forward more. "Show yourself Yuri Moran!" He barked. "Both of you show yourselves!"

Andro waited as there was some hesitation, but then both figures lifted their hands and gripped their cowls. When Yuri tossed back her cowl the reaction was instinctive and every Durcunusaan soldier began lifting their weapons.

"No!" Pa'cour shouted moving to shield her.

Andro stepped forward quickly. "HOLD!" He shouted holding up his hands. "HOLD!"

The Durcunusaan froze at the shouted order, their weapons in mid-motion. They stared at their Prince in shock, none of them really knowing why they were here and why their Prince was not ordering them to slaughter the vampire bitch that had been the cause of such horrible acts against their people and his sister.

Andro's azure eyes remained on where Yuri stood and he saw the protective way the Immortal shielded her body with his own and the way she grasped tightly to his arms, her eyes filled with uncertain fear. "Lower your weapons now!" Andro barked once more never taking his eyes from Yuri or the older vampire behind her.

"Do it!" Jomann snapped.

The Durcunusaan complied instantly at the dual order and their weapons once more went back to pointing at the floor, but hands were ready to bring them up in a heartbeat. Yuri gripped Pa'cour's arm tightly, her eyes darting back and forth. This reaction did not go unnoticed by either Isabella or Esther.

"This was a bad idea." Nalavi muttered as he watched Androcles move closer to the ramp.

"Come fully off the ramp!" Andro told them. "Now."

"This was definitely a bad idea." Nalavi repeated his words.

Yuri nodded silently to Pa'cour and they moved down the ramp to the deck of the hanger bay slowly and expecting to be attacked at any moment. Andro's eyes remained on Nalavi for a long moment and then he looked at Pa'cour.

"Where are they?" Andro asked.

"Just inside the inner airlock." Pa'cour answered as he held up the small control device. "But they will not be yours until I have proof you will keep your word! I will blow them and all of us to hell first." He let his thumb poise over the small red button as he looked at Andro.

Andro looked at him. "You are very much like your brother you know." He said. "You have the same... the same determination in your eyes. Deactivate the explosives Pa'cour." He spoke holding out his hand for the device.

"I want proof!" Pa'cour snarled again.

"Your proof... your proof is that all of you are still alive." Andro growled at him.

It was Yuri who reached forward and placed her hand on Pa'cour's. He looked at her as she took the detonator from his fingers and deactivated it. Then she held it out to Andro, her dark eyes never leaving his face as she did. She moved from partially hiding herself behind Pa'cour to standing beside him as she did. This allowed Andro to stare at her for a long moment, his azure eyes gazing at her as if she was some sort of meal to be eaten. He took in the faint scars from where his claws and fangs had torn into her flesh. They would always be there, but they were almost hard to see. She had healed well it seemed, but there was also something very different about her. He stepped closer to her and Pa'cour moved to interject his body between them. Andro simply lifted his hand and with a small Mindvoice surge he sent Pa'cour sprawling across the deck to the side of the ramp some four meters away.

“Don’t touch her!” Pa'cour screamed as he scrambled to his feet and found himself with four P190A3s stuck in his chest. “Don’t touch her!”

Yuri didn’t pull her eyes away from those azure orbs of death staring at her. “Kill... kill me if you must.” She spoke after taking a deep breath. Her voice was filled with the firmness of her decision just then. “But allow Pa'cour and Nalavi to go.”

“Yuri... no!” Pa'cour roared.

Andro lifted his hand and let his fingertips graze her cheek. Pa'cour rose to his feet but found three more weapons rammed into his body. Andro traced the scars on her cheek and no matter how hard he probed he could find no trace of the dark essence that was Xaxon. The essence that had pulsed from her so powerfully and so completely that day was gone. He met her eyes. “You are not the same. Xaxon... his foul essence no longer infects you.” He said softly. “How is... how is that possible?”

Yuri looked at him and drew on her inner strength. He was not going to kill her she knew. She could feel it within him, the hesitation and the confusion. She lifted her hand to Pa'cour, turning to look at him with loving eyes, to keep him calm. She waited until he did in fact become still and just look at her. She turned back to Andro. “You made it possible.” Yuri said softly. “You killed me Androcles Leonidas. And in killing me... in killing me you chased Xaxon’s essence out of my body. You forced him to abandon me.”

“Forced him to abandon you?” Andro asked.

Yuri nodded her head. “I will make no excuses. My father may have known what my mother planned, I don’t know. But my mother and Robert; they knew what eventually would happen to me. Some of my actions were my own over this time; some of them were not. It has been like that since your father freed Earth and I returned to Uzu Ozeib 7. Your fangs and your claws... you killed me that day Androcles Leonidas. You killed me and Xaxon left my body just as quickly as he could. It was then that Pa'cour saved me.”

“And where did Xaxon go?” Andro asked.

Yuri met his gaze. “The only place he could.” She answered. “Dante.”

“Dante!” Andro gasped. “Are you nubous kidding me?”

Yuri shook her head. “He needed someone of my blood. Someone nearby. He could not take Lucia because she was too much in love with your sister. I made Dante what he became and in doing so, when you killed me, I provided Xaxon with a vassal for him to dominate. He is having trouble controlling Dante... stabilizing his control of him... but eventually he will. Just as he almost did with me.”

“Why should I believe you?” Andro hissed softly at her, his eyes changing and his fangs suddenly bursting forth. “Why should I believe anything you nubous say? For what you did to my sister I should gut you where you stand! For everything you have done through the years to my people I should let you lie on the deck of this ship and watch as your blood drains from your body and you die in agony!”

Yuri slowly nodded her head in agreement. [Yes... you should.] She said softly so that only he could hear her within Mindvoice as she threw up very powerful shields around their conversation. Andro’s changed eyes grew a little wider when she did that and his eyes betrayed their shock when she went even further and battered his shields until he lowered them enough so that he could hear her. [I do not deserve a second chance, and in your position I’m not sure I would be able to do what you are doing.] Yuri met his eyes, allowing her vampiric side to come forth as her eyes changed to cobalt blue and her vampiric fangs extended. [I know something that so many others have yet to fully grasp Androcles... you are not your father! You can feel... you can sense things he and Torma cannot. You can sense that I am different now! I do not deny I am cruel and by my very nature I would not do what you are doing. But I know you can feel that even I would not have allowed what they did to your sister.]

[What you allowed!] Andro snarled at her.

[That was Xaxon’s doing... not mine!] Yuri spoke. [There were times when I could not fight the compulsions he forced upon me! I... I have been raped! First by my own brother... and then by your uncle! As cruel as I am... as I know I can be... do you honestly believe I would allow that? That I would support that? I’m not... I’m not asking for your forgiveness Androcles. I have no right to ask for that. I’m asking that you recognize I am not the same person you killed those weeks ago. I’m asking for a second chance Androcles. A chance to live a life that I was denied for so many years. A chance your father would never give to me. I carry

Pa'cour's child Androcles. I carry his future and mine. That future rests with you. You are more attuned to the currents of Mindvoice than your father because of how you were conceived. I ask you... do you sense any of what you felt within me the day we fought? Do you feel it within me now?]

Andro stared at her for a long moment. He shook his head slightly. [No.]

Yuri nodded. [I have you to thank for that.] She told him. [I have you to thank for this new life that I have found. It is a life I want to explore. A life I want to live.]

[I killed Javier!] Andro spoke harshly. [And I will find Dante and end his miserable existence as well.]

Yuri's eyes held a wisdom that only loss and pain could give to her Andro noticed. [He is no longer my son. I cannot make things right with Carisia and Lucia. I wish it were not so... but it is. I do not know how to be honest with you. They have found love with you and your family and that... that gives me peace. As for Dante... should I ever cross paths with him in the future I will kill him myself after insuring Xaxon has no where to run. Killing him will at least begin the redemption I must provide. To myself most of all.] Yuri looked at him then. [Take them Androcles. Take the bodies of your family. I have no right to ask for anything in exchange for them. If I must begin to atone for past deeds then let me do so by giving you and your family peace for my father's greatest sin. Just allow us to leave so that I can try. That is all I ask now.]

Andro stepped back from her then. He stared at her for a long moment and then looked at Jomann.

"Take them to the pilot's briefing room." He said. "Provide them refreshment and insure they do not leave."

Jomann nodded his head slowly, and like everyone else, he was wondering what Andro and Yuri had just been discussing.

ENURRUA

Martin settled to the soft earth just inside the treeline where the LEUGERS transport had started its descent to land, Cirith beside him. Danny moved ghost like beside him, with Julie, Colin and Kenny on his opposite side. The rest of their team was spread out around the clearing, their PSGs engaged and all of their senses alert. The roar of the LEUGERS's engines was beginning to fill the clearing now as the ship came down lower. Martin looked up and could not help but smile to himself. For'mya certainly could make a ship do what she wanted. He could feel her now, and while he kept himself shielded heavily, he could feel her resonance seeping out. Reaching for him. And in feeling her, he could also feel Eirene and Fedor. They had not yet learned how to fully shield themselves and it was easy for him to detect them. Their resonance was strong and clear and above all else...excited.

"Marty?" Danny asked him softly.

Martin looked at him and realized Danny had seen him smiling. He turned to Cirith. "I can feel them Fervon." He said seeing Cirith's beautiful face smile happily. "I can feel them Cirith. Man... you don't know how good it feels to say that."

Danny smiled. "I can bet and come pretty close." He said. He looked at Cirith. "Everyone is in position." He told her.

Martin and Cirith both nodded their heads and he became all business again. He looked skyward into the brightening horizon. Torma? Aurith?

We are circling above the ship as it descends. Torma answered.

I saw her Martin! Aurith's voice erupted joyously. I saw her through the window!

Remember what I told you Aurith. Martin spoke. I know you want nothing more than to swoop down and pick her up. I need you to maintain your poise in case what comes out of that ship is something we don't expect.

I remember Martin. Aurith answered. But I will not allow them to take her from me ever again! I will burn them all first!

Nor will I. Martin said. Nor will I. We stick to the plan though.

I understand. Aurith spoke.

Torma?

We'll be ready. Torma answered.

Martin looked at Cirith. "Time to take back what belongs to us." He said.

Cirith nodded. "A moment I have waited for." She answered.

LEUGERS TRANSPORT

For'mya quickly shut down the engines of the transport and was rising to her feet before Muton was even halfway through the entrance into the cockpit.

“For'mya?” He questioned as she pushed past him.

He was so close.

She could feel his Mindvoice resonance pulsing wildly for her and it was setting her blood on fire. He had come for her. He had come for her just as he had sworn to all of them on that day so long ago. No matter the odds, no matter where, he would come for each of them and nothing would stand in his way. The familiar and oh so welcome burning of her wolf blood was driving her now. Yet she could sense his rage as well. His rage that she had been taken from him and abused in such a manner. She needed to see him; she needed him to see her in order to push this rage back. She pushed past several Monitors as they moved towards the rear of the ramp, Muton scrambling to follow her. He caught up with her near the controls and reached for her arm.

“For'mya?” He questioned again.

For'mya turned as Eirene and Fedor rushed up to her. “Lower the ramp Muton.” She said.

“For'mya we...”

“Listen to me Muton!” For'mya spoke quickly. “I must go out alone!”

“What? It's not safe! We have never been here! We...” Muton began to complain.

“You don't understand Muton. He's here already! He can feel me! Within Mindvoice! I can feel him! It's been getting stronger ever since we left Nefoa!” For'mya declared. “I did not know he would be here until we actually entered the system. He is out there right now... and he is watching. If I don't leave this ship alone... if I don't go to him now... he will think it is a trap and he will kill all of you without so much as a blink.”

“We are capable of defending ourselves!” Makoo spoke proudly.

For'mya shook her head. “Not this time Makoo my friend. You don't actually think he came alone do you? All of you would be dead in seconds and I do not want that to happen. Not after what all of you have done for me.”

“She is right!” Muton spoke looking at her. “Miseo... the ramp! Lower it!”

Miseo didn't hesitate and moved to the ramp controls. For'mya took Muton's hand in hers and brought his knuckles to her cheek. “Trust in me.” She whispered.

Muton nodded. “That I do.”

For'mya nodded and turned to Eirene and Fedor. “Remain here. Do not come out until I call you.”

Fedor nodded his head holding tightly to his sister's arm. “We can wait mother.” He spoke.

For'mya nodded and kissed their heads quickly before turning to watch as the ramp lowered the last few meters and she was staring out into the thick timber around the small clearing. Fear gripped her now as she moved quickly down the ramp, stopping at the bottom to turn back and hold her hand up to insure no one followed her. As she turned back to face the clearing she could hear the birds and small animals beginning to sing their songs once more. She could smell a myriad of different scents, almost all of them she recognized from long ago. The scents of the men and women who followed him when she first met him. Some of the most lethal killers For'mya had ever encountered in all her years. She could smell them now... all around... hidden within the timber.

Ten meters she moved from the ramp.

His mint scent was devastating now. So close and it surrounded her, swirled around her in the morning air, causing her to whimper softly in need. She caught something else on the wind and she stopped walking at twenty meters. She smelled... no... she smelled Pusintin on her still. Her eyes grew wide as she realized this and panicked gripped her heart. He would smell his foul brother on her. In her blood. He would...

Do you think this matters to me Kinsoargai? The deep voice filled her head, brushing aside her Mindvoice shields as if they weren't there.

For'mya spun around in a circle. Please... please Martin Leonidas... let me see you! Let me know this is not some horrible dream that has been inflicted on me for my sins.

I am here Kinsoargai.

For'mya spun around instantly only to see the shimmering of the PSG in the morning air and then he was standing in front of her like some reborn god, his hand gripping his Nehtes which was stuck in the dew covered grass.

Miseo pressed close to his father where they stood. "Gods preserve us father! He just... he just materialized out of thin air! Did you see that? Did you see?"

Muton nodded. "I saw." Muton spoke as his experienced eyes began to scour the treeline all around him.

Eirene looked up at Muton and Miseo. "He is the father of our hearts!" She exclaimed with a happy voice.

For'mya gasped and moaned in need at the same time as the PSG disappeared from view entirely and he was there. So tall and overwhelming. So powerful and fierce looking in his Dragon Armor outer shell. Tears came to her eyes then and she reached for him, but stopped upon seeing his nose twitch slightly. Once more that fear gripped her heart. He could smell his foul brother upon her and she knew that he had been told what Pusintin had told Andro. He must have seen it on the Netnews even.

"Mar... Martin!" She rasped out the words. "Son vada carians Martin! Forgive... forgive me! You should not... you should have let me go! You..."

"Let you go?" Martin said softly.

The tears were pouring from her dark eyes nonstop now. All her fears coming forth. How he would react to her. What he would say. "I have... I have betrayed you! Betrayed your love! I... I..."

"What in the holy hell are you talking about woman?" Martin asked her moving closer to her. So close that her sweet orchid scent was very nearly as pure and powerful as Aricia's lavender and coca scent.

"I betrayed you! I should have fought him! I should have... You need to find another!" For'mya was shaking her head back and forth now completely lost to the emotions coursing through her. "You need to let me... you need to leave me! You will not want me now! His scent permeates my blood! I can see it on your face! I did not think about this and now I have dishonored you by..."

Martin Leonidas could no longer control himself and he released his Nehtes and took four steps towards her. His hands took her face in his grip and he leaned over quickly, bringing his nose and lips to the skin of her neck and firmly nuzzling her skin and the outer ridge of her long elven ear. For'mya hissed loudly as delightful sensations coursed through her body and her hands gripped his arms. "You... you could never dishonor me Kinsoaurgai." He whispered into her ear. "It is I who has dishonored you for allowing this to..."

"I let him have me Martin. I let him rut above me like some pig! He..." For'mya was babbling now, really unable to form coherent thoughts because she thought she had lost him.

Martin didn't hesitate, he didn't question, and there was never any doubt about what he would do. He lifted For'mya into his arms. "Damn you woman... will you just shut up! He didn't wear you out completely did he?" He growled just before his lips came down on hers and he kissed her.

For'mya screamed and laughed in the joyous and happy delight that crashed through her mind and body as his powerful arms surrounded her and crushed her to him. She screamed against his kiss, her arms wrapping around his broad shoulders and then his voice filled her mind, wrapped around her core and he let her have what she had secretly always wanted.

You are mine For'mya Leonidas! You have always been mine! You will always be mine! And now I'm going to do what I should have done so long ago and I am going to make you mine in body and soul. Just as I have done with the others who hold the pieces of my heart. You will not smell of my fool brother for long my Kinsoaurgai, and I don't give a rat shit who sees! Martin snarled out the words.

Martin Leonidas then dropped all pretense of shielding his intense male aura and hit For'mya with every bit of his being. Just as he had done with Aricia, with Dysea, with Anja and now Cirith. Now For'mya would experience that and know that she was part of his very life. Part of who he was. The effect on For'mya was devastating to say the least. Every nerve ending in her body ignited in the same instant, nearly overwhelming her conscious mind. She tore his lips from his and threw back her head to howl, her wolf eyes wide in bliss and her fangs fully extended as his aura set her body on fire. Every pleasure center, every receptor, every minute cell that could feel delight screamed at the same time, even as his powerful mind surrounded hers, embraced hers and she maintain control so that she could experience it to the very sweet end. The nipples on her now much larger breasts instantaneously became burning nubs. Her thighs quivered madly as she was gripped by an orgasm so utterly overwhelming that she could do nothing but ride the tidal waves of orgasmic agony. And then his hand pulled her head back up and he kissed her. He kissed her with every ounce of passion, desire and want he could generate within his body. He pulled her roughly over to the side and they tumbled to the soft grass still locked in that scorching kiss. For'mya's legs wrapped around his hips, her booted feet digging into the cheeks of his ass as she was deliciously swallowed by the soul claiming kiss and she tried desperately to meld their bodies together as one.

I am so sorry Kinsoargai. His voice rasped with sorrow within her mind. I failed you! I failed everyone! You have endured this... because of me! This is me Kinsoargai! This is who I am! This is who I have always been frightened to show you! You are mine For'mya! And I will wash the sins of my brother from you with my love until the next life claims me!

And For'mya's mind was flooded with so many emotions and images and sensations. Even as her body reveled in the physical pleasure she was experiencing just from his kiss and the feel of his aura wrapped around her, her mind now became flooded with the essence of the man who had stolen her heart and soul the moment she had seen him on that station. An essence of purity and power. An essence of violence and death. Of happiness and love. An essence of sadness and adoration that transcended everything she had known. A love for her, for Aricia, for all of them. A love more powerful than any gravity well she had ever experienced. A love that would never die.

“What is happening father?” Miseo chattered very confused. “What... what is he doing to her? Is he hurting her?”

Muton shook his head. “I don't know!” He snapped. “I am not a Lycavorian! I...”

“No.” Eirene's voice spoke with a warmth and happiness that was obvious to all of them. “He is not hurting her. The father of our hearts... our father... he would never hurt her.”

With that Eirene squeezed Fedor's hand and they bolted from the ship. Muton and Miseo reached for them, following them down the ramp far too slow.

“Eirene! Fedor! Wait!” Muton gasped as he reached the bottom of the ramp and ran into something that was extremely solid. So solid in fact that he stumbled back and knocked Miseo off balance, throwing both of them to the ramp in surprise.

They saw the shimmering light all around them then, just as they had when Martin appeared. “Oh shit!” Miseo barked as the two towering Lycavorians appeared in front of them. And then all around them. The Dragon Armor receded quickly and they could see the ebony skin of Danny and the Master Chief Tony looking down on them from under the matte black helmets. Muton saw Eirene and Fedor running away as if they had just squirted through the wall of flesh in front of them, like they had known it was there all along.

“Let's not interrupt the family reunion shall we.” Colin spoke from the side of the ramp. “That would be exceptionally rude. Danny and the Master Chief here... they don't like rude people.”

“Nor do I.” Cirith spoke and Miseo watched as she unwrapped the shadows from around her body directly in front of Danny and Tony.

“Oh... did I forget to mention that Cirith here is their wife and mate too.” Colin spoke with a smile. “Probably not someone you'd want to piss off at the moment.”

Miseo glanced back up the ramp to see the other Monitors lifting their hands in to the air wisely as they saw the eyes of certain death looking up at them with itchy trigger fingers.

Take me my love! For'mya gasped as she tore her lips from his and grasped his beautiful face in her hands, staring into those beautiful yellow gold orbs and looking at his fully extended dual fangs. Take me right now! I burn for you Martin. Oh how I burn for you! I burn for all of you! Rid me of the shame I feel my love. I...

You have no shame to bear! Martin snapped. None. Let it go Kinsoargai. Let it leave your mind. It is my shame! My shame for not doing this so much sooner! His hand came up and he caressed the outer ridge of her elven ear and saw her eyes close in blissful sensations. I will do as you ask me Kinsoargai. I will do this and so much more. First we need to leave this place and I want to meet my new children. Our children!

For'mya's eyes grew wide. Eirene! Fedor! Carians... I...

That is when they heard the giggling from next to them and they looked up to see Fedor and Eirene beside them holding hands and both of them with huge smiles on their faces. Years of having small children in their home had taught them to expect moments like this and all of them had this type of action down to a science. Martin quickly reigned in his powerful aura and though For'mya groaned softly in reluctance, she drew in several deep breaths to calm herself and her enflamed passions. Passions which had literally soaked the fatigue type pants she was wearing. Martin made no attempt to rise from atop For'mya quickly, for that would have looked silly. Instead he slowly extracted himself from her arms and legs and rose to his knees with grace and pride, doing his best to cover For'mya so that she could regain her composure. Unlike other times in the past, at least they were still clothed at the moment. Though given another few moments he would have begun fulfilling her desire to take her right there, for his blood burned just as brightly for her.

“Hello there.” He spoke to them. “I was just... I was just reacquainting myself with your mother.”

“Your Kinsoaurgai.” Fedor spoke with a smile.

Martin nodded with a warm smile. “My Kinsoaurgai.” He said. “You are Fedor. And you must be Eirene.” Martin said looking at them and wondering how in the world they looked more like For'mya and him than his brother. “I am...”

“You are the father of our hearts!” Eirene exclaimed. “You are our father!” And then Martin was tumbling backwards as both Eirene and Fedor leaped into his arms, catching him off balance and sending all four of them rolling to the side as he had not yet untangled his and For'mya's legs.

And the laughter of discovery and renewal filled the small clearing as the sun began to rise over the treetops.

ARC ROYAL

“Talk to me!” Akemi barked out.

“They have entered the corridor that brings them here!” The Sensor operator shouted out. “ETA is thirty-seven minutes! They'll exit the system on the far side of Supya and pass right next to that ship hiding there!”

“Fuck me!” Akemi cursed as she came to her feet. “Get me the King! Now! Secure Alpha One! Battle Stations! Battle Stations! Go to Condition One! This is not a drill!”

“Condition One aye!”

“Ready the KADEN-Class Transports! They'll be cutting it close since they have split from the TYPE II Alpha! We might need them to execute an emergency pick up! Where is that link to the King damn it!”

“Activating now! Channel two one!”

“Captain Katsumi to King Leonidas! ARC ROYAL actual to King Leonidas!”

ENURRUA

Aricia clutched her Stiletto tightly as she moved around the corner of the cavern, Dysea, Kenny and Cody moving just behind her with equal alertness. Helen moved just in front of Arzoal who was behind Isheeni and Iriral. It had been planned this way, for while Arzoal and Helen were Bonded Sisters, neither of them had any combat experience together. They had not fought in the Evolli War by Martin's order because he would not risk either of them against T19 missiles. They also did not undergo the same training as the other Bonded Pairs within the Union simply because of who they were. As Feravomir and Dragon Elder Mother, they were more used to meetings and gatherings discussing the use of Mindvoice powers and different abilities, not how to most effectively kill your enemy. They left those skills to the much more nimble and younger dragons and riders now.

The entrance under the waterfall had proven to be accurate in its location and very huge. The waterfall itself covered nearly all of the open mouth of the cavern at more than a hundred and fifty feet wide and unless you knew it was there, it could be easily missed just walking by or viewing the waterfall from across the huge lake it was emptying into. They had waded through waist deep water for a few hundred feet after passing under the waterfall, and then the cavern had opened up into a huge tunnel. Tina had been right and the recent earthquakes had opened up entrances that branched off to tunnels that had long since been buried.

It was Cody who reached up finally and ran his fingers along the interior of the tunnel. The smoothness of the wall looked almost normal, but the moment he touched it he could tell the difference.

“The texture has changed.” He spoke softly everyone halting and turning to look at him. He rubbed his fingertips together and turned to look at Arzoal. “Elder Mother... you said your ship was made with the same materials as CS41?” He asked.

Arzoal nodded her massive head and projected her thoughts into Cody’s mind. Yes.

“I’ve been inside CS41 enough times to know this feels the same Aricia.” Cody told her and Dysea. “It’s oily and warm.”

Warm? Arzoal spoke moving closer to him. The actual boundaries of the ship did not reach out this far. When I choose this mountain I had the ship enter from the north valley and engaged its short range fusion drills. It heated the hull but only in the sections that contacted the interior of the rock itself. Once the rock cooled the only warmth came from the bio-mechanical hull of the ship. When I destroyed the core, that should have ceased operation of any remaining power nodes that we had not stripped.

Helen moved up next to Cody and pressed her palm against the wall. She gasped quickly and drew her hand back.

“Helen!” Dysea exclaimed stepping towards her.

“Cody is right!” Helen declared looking at Arzoal. “Sister... it is warm to the touch and slightly oily. And there is...”

What? Arzoal asked.

Helen looked at her. “As with CS41... there is life to this ship!”

Impossible! Arzoal exclaimed. Without the core...

“Are you certain the core was destroyed Arzoal?” Dysea asked.

Of course Melda Min. Arzoal answered. If not in the initial explosion itself... then the mountain crushing what remained.

“Tina says the damage should have been more.” Dysea spoke again. “She says with a core how you described to her, when it exploded, it should have sheared off the upper two thirds of this mountain and devastated everything around it for three kilometers. Flattened it. None of that happened.”

Helen had placed her hand back against the wall and now she gasped once more. “By all that is holy!”

“Helen!” Aricia hissed moving towards her.

“I can feel it!” Helen announced. “What Andro and Elynth felt on Earth...? I can feel it now. Echoes! So very faint but... but they are there! Life! Carians how were they able to feel this from so far away?”

Life? Arzoal gasped. Within the ship? How... that can not be. The only life within the ship itself was the egg chamber. It was crushed completely.

“Elder Mother... is it possible for two minds as powerful as Andro and Elynth... being connected to the Neural Booster for so long as they were. Could they have detected this? The echoes of past life that may still linger here perhaps.” Aricia asked.

You reach into a realm I am not qualified to speak on Aricia child. Arzoal answered. You are speaking of faith now. There were... there were some among the Pralors who were able to still communicate with those that submitted themselves to The Rift of Time. Could this be similar to what you mean?

Aricia nodded. “Yes... very much so.”

Arzoal looked at her. Aricia... to even begin to feel this kind of connection... the Pralor Squire would have to be twenty to thirty thousand years old and given of themselves entirely to this task. Only the finest students were allowed to study the complexities of the Rift of Time. It is energy in its purest form.

“You have stated yourself that Andro and Martin, Torma and Elynth, that they are more attuned to the eddies and currents and resonance of Mindvoice.” Aricia said. “Just as Sumar was said to be long ago.”

Yes. Arzoal answered.

“You also stated the pureness of my own blood. Of Sadi’s blood. You said this did not diminish them in any way. You said only a few months ago, just after Sadi and Andro were mated, that it may have even increased their ability to sense things even you could not.” Aricia continued. “You admitted to me that Martin was already like this.”

Arzoal nodded her massive head. I did say that.

“They sensed this Arzoal. When they were connected to the Neural Booster and Fedor and Eirene they sensed this.” Aricia said.

“Nefoa is not so far from here.” Dysea chimed in now. “As attuned as they are to each other... they channel their power more effectively. Just as Nauta Melme and Torma do.”

“They are right sister.” Helen spoke up.

But to detect the remnants of what life was within the chamber? Arzoal said. That would imply that their potential, Martin and Torma’s potential is... limitless. Arzoal finished the words as her flame colored eyes grew wider. The Talon Guardian amulets!

“What?” Helen asked.

Each Talon Guardian amulet is imbued with a small portion of each Elder’s power and abilities. Arzoal told them. That is why it is made part of them. Branded to them and never able to be removed. No Talon Guardian in the entire history of dragons has ever had an amulet imbued with more than five Dragon Elder’s powers. Martin, Andro, Torma and Elynth have amulets imbued with nine! In our time before, it was never needed to have more than five Elders. Only when we came here to Enurrua and began fighting Chetak did I change that and make it so there were nine of us.

“So there have never been Talon Guardians with the level of power as Martin and Andro?” Aricia asked.

No! Never! I should have seen it when Andro and Elynth so effortlessly severed the connection between Vollenth and Yuri. And then when they destroyed Naruth and Javier with such ease. Arzoal looked at them. It just never occurred to me.

“And that should tell you that for too long you have carried this burden of trying to be perfect when you did not need too.” Dysea spoke softly. “Like the rest of us you will make mistakes Arzoal.”

“If we can now sense what Andro and Elynth sensed then, we must be close to the actual chamber itself.” Helen spoke. “I suggest we find it... inform Martin so that he can bring this Kavalian Muton here... and then be gone from this place once and for all.”

“Shit! I’m all for that!” Kenny piped in breaking the intensity of their conversation. “Caves always give me the willies.”

Arzoal nodded her massive head. We can discuss the ramifications of what we are saying at a later time when Martin is present. Kenneth is right. I have lived outside of caves for too long now and being back in them makes me nervous.

“Do you recognize anything sister?” Helen asked her.

My sense of direction is slightly off within the tunnels here, but if we continue further northward we will eventually come to the egg chamber or what remains of it. Arzoal answered. If it is even there anymore.

Cirith had her back turned to For'mya as she changed quickly into a Union uniform and then Mark IV ArmorPly in the back of the LEUGERS transport. Everyone else had moved to the side of the ship and Aurith now sat on the ramp refusing any entry to anyone. The reunion between her and For'mya had been tearful and joyous and included a very nearly overwhelmed Aurith scooping For'mya into her curved talons and lifting off into the clear sky above where she shifted For'mya to the saddle on her back and then they proceeded to tear happily across the landscape for several minutes, twice dive bombing those in the small clearing while Eirene and Fedor squealed in delight at the laughter in their mother’s voice. A laughter that they had not heard until now.

“Thank you for the uniform Cirith.” For'mya spoke as she secured the four layer upper torso armor on her body.

Cirith turned slowly as For'mya stepped up to her. “We knew what Martin was planning.” She explained. “Aricia said it would be unbecoming to leave you in such a state that his aura would. She was right.”

For'mya had replaced her clothes with the fleet uniform, but her undergarments were soaked with her passion and if she replaced them, Martin would not be able to function properly or be around her without constantly sniffing her. No doubt this would affect Aricia and Dysea as well, for it seemed to be having a small effect on Cirith. For'mya simply secured them in a bag and sealed them so that their scent did not drive everyone insane.

For'mya leaned over and kissed her squarely on the lips. A kiss that Cirith did not draw away from, but accepted and returned. After a moment they drew apart and For'mya took her hand. "It is so very good to finally meet you." She stated.

Cirith nodded with a smile. "And you." She stated confidently. "The images and visions I have shared with Martin and the others do not do you justice."

"From what little Eirene and Fedor were able to pass to me however briefly I will say the same for you." For'mya stated as she took both her hands. "Welcome to our family."

Cirith's face beamed. "We should get outside." She stated. "Martin did not want to stay here longer than necessary because of what this planet represents."

For'mya nodded and allowed her to lead her down the ramp into the bright sunlight again. For'mya felt the beginnings of tears as she spied both Eirene and Fedor sitting on Martin's lap, Fedor looking at him with awe in his dark eyes and Eirene stroking the neatly trimmed beard and his long hair with her fingers. This was something For'mya had no power over and when she felt the utter and complete acceptance and clarity between the three of them it made her want to weep. His aura swept around them as tightly as it had any of his children, his actions the same as they had been for all of them. He loved all of his children deeply For'mya knew and there would be no difference with Eirene and Fedor. No difference in any way. She could also feel from Eirene and Fedor the total and complete acceptance of the knowledge that this was their father. This was the man they would forever now call their father. Pusintin would never haunt them, never make them blink and never have any hold over them. They knew just as their blood told them instinctively where the love and knowledge and wisdom of a father would come from.

Muton, Miseo and the other Kavalian Monitors were sitting in a mixed fashion among the members of Martin's team. That none of them expected to be sitting with the Lycavorian King, a man they had thought was long dead, that was obvious from their expressions. For'mya knew that Martin must have sensed the Pralor blood within them and he was conversing with them in such a way. To Martin they were not Kavalian For'mya saw... to him they were kindred souls because of the Pralor blood that flowed in their veins. Muton was explaining to Martin what had taken place since For'mya had been kidnapped, his honesty sometimes brutal, but necessary. Cirith didn't hesitate and she directed For'mya to a position on the ground beside Martin. She smiled as his arm went around her and he buried his face in her golden blond hair and inhaled deeply of her sweet orchid scent. The Monitors could do nothing but smile at this obvious display of love and emotion and Muton smiled the widest. Cirith settled onto the ground on Martin's opposite side and Eirene quickly scooted over into her lap without question. Keeping his head touching For'mya's, Martin looked at Muton once more.

"So the map to where they went is within the actual bio-mechanical coding of the ship?" Martin asked.

Muton nodded. "My grandmother never left us the knowledge of why they did this before they arrived. Perhaps so that no one who was not at least partially a Pralor could withdraw the information from the ship's data banks." He explained. "The many pieces of knowledge were spread out among us and came to us in visions and dreams."

"But why did it take so long for the ship to reach Elear on the second return?" Martin asked. "Dropping off those who were going to Cabelir I can understand adding a few months, maybe a few years to the trip. But nearly nine millennia?"

Muton shook his head. "I do not know what transpired in that time period, or what made the ship return to Elear in its battered condition." He stated. "My grandmother and those who went to Cabelir with her never heard from the ship again."

"Do you think when you get this information it might be there?" Martin asked.

"It is possible. I do not know." Muton said. "I know it sounds very mystic and far fetched but it is the truth."

Martin grinned at him. "Hell... mystic and far fetched is the norm for us I'm beginning to notice."

"Your other mates? For'mya's fellow Queens? They are at the ship now?" Muton asked.

"The ship was used as an egg chamber while they were here on Elear." Martin told him.

Muton nodded. "Yes... For'mya told me."

"You realize there might not be anything left of it?" Martin asked.

“I would need only a fraction of the ship itself.” Muton explained. “At least... at least that is what I feel.”

Martin kissed For'mya warmly, and then ruffled Fedor's short hair. “Then let's find out where they are. They were heading for where the ship was and I haven't heard from them yet.” He released For'mya and then lifted Fedor to his feet before climbing to his own feet and turning to help both For'mya and Cirith.

“Is it far from here?” Miseso asked as he rose.

Martin shook his head. “Two kilometers.” He pointed to the horizon. “You can see the edge of the ridgeline from here. I'll...” Martin stopped talking when he saw Julie moving towards him rapidly and chattering away into the secure COM set she wore to enhance their implants. She didn't hesitate and came right up to him. “Jules?” He asked.

“We got company boss.” Julie said.

“Company?” Muton spoke now moving forward.

Julie nodded. “A Kavalian Task Force just entered the system.” She told them. “It's led by your brother's ship. Captain Katsumi says nine ships of the seventeen ships are moving for our location here, another eight are remaining by the old High Coven Jump Gate as a reserve force. They'll be here in twenty-seven minutes.”

“Fuck!” Martin swore. “They tracked you here!”

“How?” Kapurr asked now. “For'mya jumped us nine times. There is no way they could have tracked us through nine jumps to get here!”

“And I ripped out the transponder before we clear Nefoa's system Martin.” For'mya spoke.

“They must have some sort of tracking device on the ship itself.” Martin said. “Shit... this is not good.”

“Our people?” Muton exclaimed. “If they are coming from the Gate they will be seen! Even as near to Supya as they are, there will be no way to hide their signature from ships moving so close to the planet!”

Martin looked at Julie. “Channel?”

“Fourteen.” She answered.

Martin tapped the implant in his jaw and barked the number fourteen. He heard the implant in his ear alter the channel and then he could hear the voices of the ARC ROYAL's crew in the background. “Captain?”

Akemi's voice replied instantly and it was actually quite calm. “Milord?”

“What do we have?” Martin asked.

“One GREAT SOUL, which happens to be your brother's ship.” Akemi answered evenly. “Three DIEROYs and five DIATAGAs. Not good odds Milord. They are moving slowly from the Jump Gate in a standard Kavalian Attack position. They know someone is on the planet. I figured they tracked the Queen's ship there somehow.”

“How soon before they pass by the ship near Supya?” Martin asked.

“You... you know about that ship Milord?” Akemi asked. “We have been monitoring it but it hasn't moved.”

“It's got about three thousand men, women and children on it Akemi. Kavalians with Pralor blood.” Martin told her.

“Fuck me!” Akemi cursed softly.

“Spit the KADENs at me and then move to their location and take them within your Shroud field.” Martin ordered. “You have enough time?”

“Yes Milord.” Her voice replied. “But... but we'll be leaving you undefended. Milord... I am not comfortable with that.”

“I'm not real comfortable with it either.” Martin told her. “But I'm not going to let three thousand civilians die for no reason. We'll blow the LEUGERS here on the surface and then all of us will move to the coordinates of the egg chamber. Once we have what we need we'll launch in the transport, engage our Shrouds and meet you there.”

“We'll need a channel to talk to them.” Akemi announced. “They see us drop within a hundred meters of them they'll panic and the game will be up.”

Muton had heard the entire conversation coming from Julie's small pack and he stepped closer to Martin. “Alpha Nine One Beta Four Three Gamma.” He spoke immediately. “Use the code phrase Home is Heaven's Gift.”

“Got it!” Akemi barked. “Launching KADENs now. ETA to you eight minutes. I’ll leave our command channel open Milord.”

“Jules is operator.” Martin snapped. “Whatever she says take it as coming from me.”

“Affirmative. ARC ROYAL moving.” Akemi ended their conversation.

Martin dropped his hand and looked around. “Ok... nothing like pulling shit out of our asses to liven things up! Tony... Pablo... I don’t want that ship here six minutes from now!” He ordered.

Pablo nodded his head. “Consider it ashes.” He answered before turning and breaking into a run.

“Muton... send two of your people to help him. Take whatever you brought with you, leave everything else. Anything could be bugged if it was already on that ship.” Martin spoke.

Muton didn’t need to speak as Kapurr and another Monitor broke from their group and followed the two Lycavorians. Martin tapped his implant and called out another channel before speaking.

“Endy... get your ass up and here! We got Kavalian inbound and they ain’t going to be looking for dates!” Martin snapped.

“Shit! They just couldn’t let us have our own party could they?” Endith’s voice filled his ear. “Spooling now! Three minutes to your location!”

Martin turned back to Muton and was about to speak when his face grimaced, and he, For’mya, Cirith and even Fedor and Eirene visibly bent over and reached for their heads.

BELOVED! Aricia’s voice echoed within Mindvoice with enough power to make all of them cringe. Beloved we need you!

DRAGON EGG CHAMBER

This is it! Arzoal’s voice exclaimed. Her massive body moved around the huge slab of granite that now blocked their path in the widened tunnel. Aricia child... Dysea... this is it! I remember the indentations along the walls here. These are conduits that the drones used. The chamber’s south entrance was here!

Sister are you sure? Helen asked.

Arzoal was examining the slab of granite with keen eyes. Yes. She replied. Absolutely. There were three entrances into the chamber. The south, the north and an alternate entrance that exited to the deck below the chamber.

“Wow!” Kenny commented as his hands ran along the surface of the slab. “This is one big piece of rock.”

Cody was moving along the opposite wall near the slab that blocked their path and he moved right up to where the rock had imbedded itself into the bio-mechanical bulkhead of the ship. He pulled a small light from his combat harness and shown it on the crevice. His eyes grew a little wider. “Dy? Look at this.” Cody called out turning to where Dysea stood next to Iriral. It was the nickname they had given her many years ago when they were building Eden City and it had stuck for many of them.

Dysea moved over next to Cody, Iriral just behind her. “Cody?”

“Look at the way the bulkhead conforms around the rock.” He stated. “There are no tears in the seams. No crushed wall.”

“Yes... so.” Dysea said.

Cody drew his hand back from where it had been touching the bulkhead. “Put your hand there.” He said.

Dysea moved closer and did as he said. She emerald eyes grew wide. “There is... there is a small vibration.” She exclaimed.

Cody nodded. “There is still power to this ship.” He stated.

How can that be? Arzoal asked as she moved up.

Cody looked at her. “I don’t know Elder Mother. But that is not a normal vibration. There is still power to this ship and it is being generated from somewhere else.”

“Hey... check this out!” Kenny called. The floor plating is loose here.”

They all turned to see him on his stomach at the base of where the slab of rock met the floor. It appeared as if half his body was under the slab now.

“Kenny no!” Aricia called. “The rock could shift and crush you!”

They watched as his body twisted and turned and then he was on his back. “Shit... this slab of rock ain’t going nowhere.” He spoke as Aricia and Cody squatted next to his legs. “There are weird looking support lines of some sort running under the rock. I can see about twenty meters in front of me and they extend in almost every direction.”

“Natural supports like in a cave in Kenny?” Cody asked.

“Not unless each of these things came down in their exact position.” Kenny answered as he shifted and held his hand down his body. “Give me your light Cody. I think there is another opening in the deck in front of me. There is a faint light coming from it.”

Cody extended his arm up the side of Kenny’s leg until he felt his hand and then he placed the small light into the palm. “How far in front of you?” Cody asked.

“Just past where I can make out these support beams.” Kenny answered as he drew his arm forward and shined the light in front of him, his head leaning back enough so that he could see. “Man... the whole bottom of this rock is covered in them. They extend into the bulkhead on either side. It’s like they form a seat for this puppy of a boulder.”

“A seat?” Aricia asked.

“Yeah! I can see where the edges of the bulkhead breached and are bent inward or jagged from impact.” Kenny echoed. “These lines running along the bottom of this rock are different. They aren’t the same color or composition. It’s almost as if they... hey what’s this?”

“Kenny?” Aricia snapped. “What is what?”

They saw his body shift further forward. “There’s definitely a light coming from beneath this rock. There appears to be a giant hole in the deck up ahead of me. These bio-mechanical supports are keeping the slab from dropping anymore. Some of them appear to be anchored into the bulkhead on the sides. I can’t move forward anymore but...”

They heard the sound of shifting rock and rendered steel and then Kenny’s body dropped away and vanished into fully under the slab of rock. “Holy shiitt!” Kenny’s voice echoed softly in the corridor.

“Kenny!” Aricia screamed diving into the opening without thought. She began to slip and slid down the deck, as it appeared whatever part of the floor he had been resting on was gone. Cody and Dysea grabbed for her legs as she moved and they caught her before she too fell out of sight. “Kenny!” Aricia’s wolf eyes shifted her scope of vision and she tried to search using different spectrums of light to penetrate the darkness in front of her.

“I’m ok!” Kenny’s voice called from what sounded like a good thirty meters away. “Shit that hurt!”

“Are you hurt?” Aricia barked.

“No! I landed on my ass and it hurt!” Kenny shouted back. “The floor is... the floor is warm and it’s fucking sticky!”

Sticky? Arzoal commented as she moved closer.

“Yeah. Shit... like some kind of goo or something. And it’s warm to the touch!” Kenny snapped. “Let me get my own light out now. I lost Cody’s. Hold on. There’s fresh air down here Aricia! It’s cooler too.”

Aricia saw a flash of bright light and she smiled. “I can see your light!” She exclaimed.

“Yeah I just flashed in front of the hole I fell through.” Kenny said. “Looks like the edges closer to the big hole are weaker.” Kenny shifted his light upwards and he could make out the bottom of that slab of rock above him about twenty to thirty meters. “I can see the slab above me and I can see your shadows when I flash the light up. Man this is weird.”

“What?” Dysea called from beside Aricia now while still holding tightly to her leg.

Kenny looked at the wall closest to him intently. “This section of wall I’m looking at matches the same section up where you are.” He stated thoughtfully. “Arzoal... where was the core in relation to the egg chamber?”

The engine core would have been two decks above the chamber and another five to six hundred meters further towards the rear of the ship. Arzoal answered.

“Saoi nubous!” Kenny gasped. “Holy fucking shit!”

“Kenny!” Aricia screamed. “Kenny what’s wrong?”

“Aricia... the Skipper said Andro felt something. Like echoes. Dozens of them right?” Kenny questioned.

“Yes! So!” Aricia snapped.

“And he’s a Talon Guardian right. Protector of the dragon species and all. Him and the Skipper both?” Kenny spoke.

“Kenny... what are you fucking saying?” Aricia screamed now.

“Ahh... well... I don’t know for sure... but I think I might have found what the Skipper’s boy and his dragon were feeling.” Kenny said as he panned his light down onto the floor of the room he was in.

“Kenny damn you!” Dysea shouted. “Speak plain!”

“Eggs!” Kenny barked. “Dragon eggs! And lots of them!”

Aricia did the only thing that came to her mind at that moment. BELOVED! She bellowed out within Mindvoice with all of her power. Beloved we need you!

CHAPTER SEVENTY-NINE

SCIMITAR

Whatever doubts might have plagued him, they were shattered when he set foot inside the G9 Runner and saw the steel gray sarcophaguses and heard his Aunt’s wail of anguish and joy combined together as one. The sarcophaguses were secured to the deck by heavy bolts and he saw Deia drape her upper body over the one on the right as tears flooded her eyes and fell upon the clear window. Androcles trembled as he moved closer to the center one, perhaps dreading what he would see or embracing it, he didn’t know. His hand went to the surface of the metal sarcophagus as he moved closer to the front of it and through the cold steel he felt it. Reaching past the internal computer keeping the chamber sealed and at optimal power levels to preserve the figure inside, Androcles found what he was searching for. It was the same thing he always felt and experienced when within the tomb of his grandfather at Thermopylae. A unique power that transcended anything he had ever felt. Like the warm pulsing of a great star. Not aware or conscious in any manner, but there nonetheless. Andro got close enough now to look through the small window and he staggered somewhat at what he saw, for it shook him down to his core. Anja and Isabella had hurried up the ramp with Eliani and Dorian and they too saw Andro stagger forward into the sarcophagus.

“Andro!” Anja gasped as she rushed forward. She skidded to a halt, her eyes wide when the soft flare of psychic blue light engulfed Andro and the sarcophagus itself. Deia’s head came up quickly at Anja’s voice with wide, tear filled eyes and she turned to see what was happening.

“Andro!” Eli screamed as she started forward. Anja and Isabella both grabbed her as Dorian stepped around her with wide eyes.

“Don’t touch him!” Anja hissed.

“Mother... it could be a trap! Something that...” Eliani rasped out.

“It’s no trap sister.” Dorian spoke softly as he stopped several feet from his brother, just outside the psychic shield that now engulfed Andro and his dark eyes were wide as if seeing something they could not.

NO! It is... it is a message! Elynth’s voice exploded into their heads and they turned to see her and Ryner both crammed onto the ramp side-by-side.

“Message?” Anja barked turning to look at her. “A message to who?”

“A message to us mother.” Dorian said softly just before stepping forward and reaching out to grasp his brother’s shoulder, the psychic field allowing him to pass through easily, and then closing instantly behind him.

“Dorian no!” Isabella cried too late.

Andro stood beside the sarcophagus now, both hands upon the smooth surface, making room for Dorian on his left. Dorian placed one hand upon Andro and the other on the surface of the sarcophagus. Their eyes were closed as the images and thoughts and memories rushed through them. Emotions, places, people, events. Anja stepped forward and tried to touch them, but her hand was stopped by some unseen force field and she could not push through it. Eliani stepped up to her.

“Mother?” She asked.

Anja looked at her hand and shook her head. “It won’t... it won’t let me through.”

Deia stood up now and reached out to try and touch the sarcophagus with one hand while wiping away tears with the other. The invisible field kept her from moving forward for only a second, as if trying to determine who she was and then her hand pushed through and Deia was able to move up next to Dorian, reaching out to touch him as well as place her hand on the sarcophagus.

“What is it?” Anja gasped.

“Some sort of... some sort of Mindvoice generated shield. But different from what we have seen before.” Isabella spoke as her hand came up and touched the near invisible shield. “So powerful... I’ve... only Martin has ever generated something like this. It’s not allowing us through though.”

“Fuck this!” Eliani growled.

“Eli no!” Anja screamed reaching for her too late as Eliani stepped forward... and right through the shield.

Eliani’s eyes were wide as she moved right up to her brothers. Almost as an afterthought, both Andro and Dorian moved slightly to either side to allow her to move closer between them, which Eliani did without the least bit of hesitation. She pressed her body up against her two brothers, unashamed of this action for Eliani knew that she and Andro and now Dorian were different. Just as Fedor and Eirene would be different. Different in many ways than their brothers and sisters, yet still so very much alike. She reached out to place a hand on the smooth surface and Eliani gasped softly as those same images and events and places flooded through her as well. She must have come into the message late for when she was fully drawn into the psychic connection the deep voice was already speaking and she gasped as the voice of her great-grandfather filled her being.

“...Given our lives freely. Do not mourn for us, as it falls now to my blood. Our blood. And to Deia, she who tolerated me for so many years and yet learned all Canth and I could teach her no matter that she thought we were an odd pair. She will be the heart of whatever is to come and whenever there is doubt, turn to her my blood. And it falls to all the others who remain behind. Do not bear hate or rage in your hearts for those who have done this. No matter what they have done, they will be part of our future. Our destiny. Though they see it not. My father Sumar told me this one day as a boy and now in death I understand what he meant. The Immortal whose actions have allowed me to make this message and imbue it within this tomb before my essence was lost forever; he should be honored if he still lives. He did this of his own free accord against the wishes of that vile creature Veldruk. He had not a hand in our deaths, but he will have a hand in the future to come because of his honor this day.

“Someone will have to kill the High Lord, and that fool woman he calls wife, before they bring ruin to us all in the future by their actions and what they do not care nor want to understand.

“To the son I will never see, the last of my line, I have passed all I know to him. He will know what to pass to those of his blood so that our legacy never dies. Those of our family, of our blood, only you will be able to see this message and to those of you who witness this, know that we did all we could to prepare. In the time of your greatest fears, turn to them; for they will have the answers you seek within them, though they may not know how. Seek the answers within those who bear my image and my voice. Never bow to anyone my family and my blood! Never stop seeking the answers, for without answers there can be no questions! And always remember where we came from, for that is the essence of who we are. Cuia fas vada carians aur nathos. Aur falyne. Cuia fas vada carians.”

The psychic shield dissipated instantly after that and all of them gasped with that last surge of power. It was Andro who lifted his head first and allowed his tear filled eyes to gaze at the face in the window of the sarcophagus. The face of his grandfather. The face of his father. His own face. The skin was tanned and weathered, but there was no mistaking the resemblance between them, though the trimmed beard and mustache was thick with gray hair and gave him a distinguished look. As Anja and Isabella moved forward quickly, the last vestiges of that powerful message swept through them as well, their senses and nerves feeling as if they had been fully charged with limitless energy. Deia moved around the front of the sarcophagus that held Resumar and as her hand drew across the smooth surface she was swept closer by Dorian’s strong arm. His eyes were wet with tears, yet there was a peace on his young face, on Andro’s face that she had never seen before. Andro’s arm drew Anja tightly into the small group, holding her against the back of her daughter’s body, his eyes moist as well. It was also Andro who then reached for and pulled his vampire mother close to him, holding her tight as his azure eyes, now fully changed to his wolf persona, opened and he stared at the sarcophagus they all now touched in some manner.

“Androcles?” Isabella asked softly. “Andro what was that?”

Andro turned to look at her beautiful face and he smiled. “That was our past speaking to our future.” He said softly in reply.

“What... what did they say?” Anja asked.

“You do not need to do your tests mother.” Andro spoke shifting his eyes to her. “There is no question about that any longer.” Andro turned and looked at Deia who was staring at him with wide eyes. “Our past has come home Tenna. Our past has come home.”

Deia released herself from Dorian’s arms and folded herself into Andro’s arms as she sobbed openly. “Our... our soul has been restored Androcles. The very heart and soul of our people.” She wept.

The tears rolled down Androcles’s cheeks as he held his aunt and rested one hand on the smooth surface. “And we will honor them in death as they honored us with their lives and their deeds.” He whispered.

ENURRUA

“Nubous lae!” Martin gasped as he skidded to a halt after sliding down the opening in the floor and landing inside the now brightly lit room.

This caused Aricia and Dysea to turn towards him from where they stood among what appeared to be dozens of dragon eggs. Eggs that still pulsed with vibrant life. They watched Martin turn and catch For'mya as she slide gracefully down the incline after him and both Aricia and Dysea squealed softly in happiness and bolted to her. Their reunion was intense as first she shared a blistering kiss with Aricia and then quickly shifted to Dysea, all three of them pressed very intimately together. Kenny ignored them for he had seen it many times in the past and he moved up next to Martin, as he caught first Eirene who was in Cirith’s lap and then Fedor as they all came down the incline. Aricia and Dysea let out more squeals of delight and they pulled away from For'mya as they greeted Fedor and Eirene. For'mya could only smile in glorious joy and she glanced at Martin who was also watching. There was no hesitation on either Aricia or Dysea’s part, just as there had never been any hesitation among them, and they were quickly embracing Fedor and Eirene as if they were their children as well. Eirene and Fedor were not without their own happiness and Eirene’s eyes were teary while she squeezed her second elven mother tightly.

“How many?” Martin asked as he turned to look at Kenny.

“Near as we can tell skipper, close to a hundred.” Kenny answered. “And that is just in this room. There’s another similar chamber through that door across the room. It’s sealed but I can see them through the glass. And that other room opens into what appears to be some sort of corridor that moves north and south.”

“Where’s Helen and Arzoal?” Martin asked.

“They moved back down the tunnel we came in to find a way to that other room Nauta Melme. We passed a connecting tunnel coming here and Cody went with them.” Dysea’s voice spoke and Martin turned to see her lifting Fedor into her arms and hugging him now.

Martin lifted his eyes and followed several conduits and power nodes along the ceiling and walls. “There’s still power down here.” He stated.

Kenny nodded his head. “It appears to be coming from the other room and then out into the corridor.”

“There shouldn’t be power here Kenny.” Martin said.

“You’re telling me boss.” Kenny spoke with a nod. “When I said eggs, Arzoal just about went ballistic. She tried tearing up the floor before I told them about the other room. Then she went off down the corridor after Cody when he said he could find another way in.”

“Helen, Isheeni and Iriral followed them.” Dysea spoke once more. “Nauta Melme... these eggs... these eggs are over five thousand years old.”

“Man this isn’t good!” Martin said. “We got a Kavalian Task Force bearing down on us and you go and find a cave with five thousand year old dragon eggs in it!” He told Kenny.

“Hey!” Kenny declared defensively. “Aren’t you the one who always told us to be thorough?”

“Shit! Where is Arzoal and Helen damn it!” Martin snarled. “And how the hell is there power in a ship that is supposed to be dead and destroyed.”

They all heard the hissing sound and whirled around to see the large door opening and then Cody and Helen were standing there.

“We are right here.” Helen snapped.

“This should answer your question Skipper!” Cody spoke as he stepped out of the way and one of the gray spider drones appeared from around the corner softly chirping away. They were the same type drones that occupied CS41, only with slightly more beat up outer shells.

Martin and the others moved closer to them. “Drones?” He gasped.

“You better see this Skipper.” Cody said motioning them into the next room.

They quickly followed him into the next room which was much larger and they saw Arzoal on the deck, her head twisting back and forth as she tried to follow the wildly chirping drone that was dancing across her back and around her neck. It even slid across her snout several times, careful not to let its metal legs stab her in her eyes.

Martin! Arzoal exclaimed.

“Arzoal?” Martin asked looking at her bewildered. “Would you... would you care to fill me in?”

Martin it is wonderful! Arzoal spoke. This is... this is Lead Drone 937. He... he survived! He survived and has kept these eggs alive all of these years!

“Yeah... I knew the Drones were tough... but how did he and these eggs survive when you detonated the core?” Martin said. “And how has he got power to the ship after all this time?”

A loud series of multiply chirping noises came from the drone who was still moving around Arzoal’s back as if he had found a new friend. Arzoal watched him for a moment and then he stopped on her back and his legs bobbed him up and down on her scales in place several times.

He detected the core overloading and he established a shield around these two chambers. Arzoal explained. They were connected to the main egg chamber above us but the eggs here needed different climate control to nurture and then hatch for they are pure Firespitter eggs. They were housed in different chambers below the main egg chamber. Drone 937 erected a force field powered by portable quantum generators within the rooms. When the core went critical they were able to withstand the explosion.

“Arzoal... one of your Quantum Fusion Cores going critical should have vaporized this mountain and everything within three or four kilometers around it.” Martin spoke. “None of this should be here!”

Except the entire core didn’t go critical! She explained. Once the drones detected the overload warnings they went into repair mode automatically. They were able to undo my sabotage of three of the four core Quantum Fusion Chambers before the remaining chamber exploded. Most of the drones were lost, but 937 and thirty three others survived! They have been using the three remaining cores to power what remains of the ship. Including these egg chambers!

“How many eggs total?” Martin asked quickly.

“Ninety-seven in this room and it looks like close to two hundred total.” Cody replied before Arzoal answered. “I’m guessing Kenny was right then Skipper. This is what Andro said he felt?”

Martin looked at him. “That makes sense.” He said. “Now the question is why? Why now and why have we never felt them before?”

For'mya looked around quickly from where she stood clutching Aricia and Dysea’s hands. “Where are Fedor and Eirene?” She gasped. “Fedor! Eirene!” She barked turning to go back into the first chamber.

“Mothers! Mothers!” Eirene’s voice echoed and she came around the corner carrying the large greenish yellow egg wrapped in her arms. “The eggs spoke to us mothers! The eggs spoke to us!”

“Eirene!” For'mya exclaimed moving to her instantly and dropping to her knees. “Eirene give me the egg child. You might drop it!”

“We won’t drop them mother!” Fedor spoke as he came up behind his sister carrying an egg with similar coloring as looking just as large in his arms. “We could never drop them.”

For'mya looked at him as he stopped next to his sister. “What... what do you mean the eggs spoke to you?” For'mya asked.

“In our heads. Just like we do mother.” Eirene answered.

For'mya held her arms tightly as Martin settled to the deck next to her. Arzoal scooted closer across the floor as she listened with wide eyes. "What... what did they say Eirene?" He asked softly.

"They said they could feel her." Fedor said softly. "They said we were the ones and they could feel her here among them."

"Feel who Fedor?" Aricia asked gently as she settled to the deck on For'mya's opposite side.

Fedor met her azure colored eyes. "They could feel their grandmother."

Helen gasped loudly and her hands went to her mouth as she felt the massive surge of emotion through Arzoal. "Sister?" She gasped.

It... it can not be! Arzoal gasped pressing closer.

Martin turned to face her now. "Arzoal... a little history might be useful? You know what they are saying?"

Martin... my third daughter from my second clutch. Arzoal spoke ever so softly. Her... her eggs were within the chamber when we destroyed it. Three of them. She was so... she was so livid with rage that we destroyed the chamber that she... she went insane. She would not listen to me or her mate. She left the mountain and attacked Chetak's forces alone in a fury. They... they killed her but not before she took several dozen of those foul beasts with her.

Mother... mother you never told me this. Isheeni spoke now moving closer.

I could not bring myself to admit that it was my order that killed my grandchildren, and in essence my own daughter. Arzoal spoke in reply looking at her only remaining child. I did not want to burden you with this knowledge Isheeni.

Torma moved into the main chamber now. That is how Androcles sensed them. He said.

Arzoal's head snapped around to look at him. Of course! She gasped turning back to Martin. We have known for many years that those of my blood would only bond with those of your bloodline Martin.

Martin nodded. "Because of our Pralor blood and our connection within Mindvoice. Yes I know that." He said.

"We thought Andro and Elynth had tapped some sort of potential that we had not seen yet by sensing the life here from so far away." Dysea continued excitedly. "We were talking about it only a short time ago.

"They didn't discover some new power; they only tapped what is already within them. Within all of us!" Aricia said. "Andro and Elynth have always been able to sense their family, in some ways even more deeply than many of us because of their awareness. When they were connected to the Neural Booster for so long talking to Eirene and Fedor they must have sensed it then."

Sensed what? Arzoal asked.

Aricia turned to Eirene and Fedor as they stood there holding the eggs. "That Eirene and Fedor were to be bonded to the eggs they hold now. To your blood Arzoal. And in sensing this it led us here. They must have felt the connection on a level most of us would not sense."

Arzoal moved even closer to Eirene and Fedor and lowered her massive head closer to the eggs they held in their arms. But I cannot feel them. She said softly. How...

Arzoal... your shields sister. Helen spoke now. Drop them completely. The eggs within these chambers would not have learned to use shields yet. They are probably calling out for you and you just can't hear them. Martin you should as well. You are a Talon Guardian and...

Martin and Arzoal did so first and both of them were very nearly overwhelmed with the cry of nearly two hundred voices within their heads. Voices and echoes that resounded with joy and happiness at sensing others of their own kind. They could hear words filtering among the many voices, words they understood.

Elder Mother.

Talon Guardian.

Free.

Come for us.

If dragons had tear ducts, Arzoal's eyes would have been flooding with tears at this moment as the voices of so many she thought dead sang their songs within her mind. The voices of so many she thought she had killed. The first sounds of cracking shells began and soon it was like a cacophony of cracks and pecking noises and all around them the tips of wings, snouts, talon equipped feet, all of these began to burst through the shells as every egg began to hatch at once. They could do nothing but watch in awe over the course of the next few minutes as every egg within the two chambers began to hatch.

“Son vada carians!” Helen gasped as she turned in her spot and watched.

Martin looked up at Arzoal. “I thought Firespitter eggs couldn’t hatch without optimal conditions!” He barked out.

Drone 937 was bouncing upon Arzoal’s back and chirping madly. Arzoal turned her eyes on Martin. Drone 937 adjusted the environmental controls when we landed on the planet. He made optimal conditions within the two chambers.

“He can do that?” Kenny gasped with wide eyes as shells began to burst fully open and the shapes and forms of so many newborn dragons began to come into view. Green, red, brown, tan, newborn dragons of all colors.

Arzoal’s eyes were focused on two however as she watched two greenish/yellow scaled hatchlings finally shed their shells and roll fully open. One of the hatchlings rolled to the side onto its back as its legs kicked madly. Laughing in pure joy, Eirene bent over and without so much as an ounce of fear reached out and grasped the hatchlings flopping wings. She helped the hatchling flip over and then flame/orange eyes were staring at her intently. Arzoal continued to watch as the darker scaled green dragon was staring up at Fedor who was squatting in front of him without a modicum of fear or hesitation. It was much more subtle bonding than they had ever witnessed, and simple light blue psychic shields burst into existence to engulf both the two dragon hatchlings and Eirene and Fedor, and then they were gone as the two dragons rubbed up against them repeatedly, the green scaled hatchling actually rising up with his forelegs and placing his talons on Fedor’s legs so that he could extend his snout out to touch Fedor’s face.

Where... where is our grandmother Fedor my brother? The soft male voice reached all of them.

Fedor glanced at his sister and a silent message passed between them. They simply assisted their new Bonded Brothers to turn their bodies on unstable legs and then they were facing the massive head that had pushed to within inches of them.

What... what are your names? Arzoal’s words were choked with emotion. Please... tell me your names.

I... I am Kdan. The hatchling in front of Fedor spoke first in a hesitant but clear voice.

I... I am Dnom. The hatchling in front of Eirene echoed.

Oh... oh by everything I have ever believed holy to me. Arzoal gasped.

Isheeni came up beside her mother and extended her head out on her long neck sniffing the two hatchlings. I am... I am Isheeni. I am your mother’s sister.

Have you come for us as our mother told us you would? Dnom asked.

She told you I would? Arzoal gasped.

We felt her die. Kdan spoke. She said she did not realize that we had survived until it was too late. She said you would come for us and that we would be safe and strong one day. She said to be patient, that you would return. We have waited for so long.

Arzoal released a whimper that no one had ever heard from her before and she lowered her head to touch their snouts. Yes. Yes my handsome grandsons. I have come for you. We have come for all of you.

The echo of one hundred and ninety-three new voices within Mindvoice was nearly deafening but Martin heard his implant beep and he touched his finger to his ear. “Go Danny!” He barked out.

“Ah... you might want to hurry up whatever it is you’re doing down there fervon.” Danny spoke. “We’re going to have company real soon. And I don’t think they are coming here for dancing lessons.”

“Shit!” Martin swore. “Are the KADEN transports down?” Martin asked.

“Landing now!” Danny answered. “Sixty, ninety and one twenty of Endy. A hundred and fifty meters out! Jules reports that Captain Katsumi is now covering the Kavalian ship. The GREAT SOUL launched four PROTOSS-Class troop transports nine minutes out from the planet. They’ll be touching down in about six minutes from now. Kind of hard to believe they don’t know we are here.”

Martin’s mind worked at light speed and he looked around at all the hatchlings, knowing there was no possible way he would leave them behind. “Danny... we’ll be topside in under ten minutes. Whatever you do... don’t let those Kavalian bastards get close to this ship. Our numbers just increased by two hundred.”

“Oh sure... two hundred! What the nubous are you talking about?” Danny snapped.

“You’ll see shortly fervon.” Martin told him.

“Jeez! I get all the shit details! Shit! We’ll make it happen Marty! Grab that Muton character on your way out. The Master Chief took him and his son into the ship to get what they needed. He should be just above you according to Tony’s locator.”

“We’ll be topside in four minutes.” Martin snapped. He turned and saw the hatchlings crowding around Arzoal, Torma, Isheeni, Aurith and Iriral in fascination. Everyone seemed to be chattering away at the same time and Martin did the only thing he could think of.

ENOUGH! He barked out in his command voice within Mindvoice.

The reaction was nearly instantaneous as every voice fell silent and nearly two hundred dragon hatchlings turned to look at him along with everyone else. They instinctively knew he was a Talon Guardian and one did not ignore a Talon Guardian, no matter how odd he looked standing among so many hatchlings.

This is a joyous time I understand. But there is danger fast approaching and we need to leave this place. I am Talon Guardian Martin... and that rather large and foreboding black dragon is my Bonded Brother Torma, who is also a Talon Guardian. Martin saw many hatchlings look at Torma in abject awe now. You will need to do exactly as we say. Some of those you see around you are bonded to dragons and I know you all feel the Elder Mother. We need to leave and we need to leave right now. We did not expect to find all of you here, but damned if I’m going to leave you here now.

Martin... how close are they? Arzoal asked. She had already known his role as Talon Guardian would never allow him to leave the hatchlings here. It was not a question that had ever entered her mind, for it had never entered his. None of them would leave them.

Too close. Martin answered her. We’re going to have to fight our way off for sure. The KADEN transports are landing now. Start the hatchlings moving topside. Get as many as you can into the TYPE II Alpha and then the KADENs. Fill them to overflowing if you have too.

For’mya stepped closer to him. “What are you going to do Martin Leonidas?” She asked.

Martin lifted his 190. “Buy us as much time as I can. Get moving... all of you.” Martin snapped. He turned to Kenny and Cody. “You two just became nursery guards. Torma... you’re with me.”

The hatchlings started chattering again as Martin and Torma made their way out of the chamber and into the corridor that Cody had led Arzoal and the others down.

Hatchlings! Arzoal barked. They are Talon Guardians and they will die to protect you! I know it is so soon after your hatching, but you must get your legs under you now and follow us. We will not leave any of you, but now you must follow us. As quickly as your talons can carry you.

ARC ROYAL

“No sign they detected us?” Akemi asked quickly.

“Negative Captain. They’re focusing all their arrays on Enurrua!”

“Talk about catching a break.” Akemi spoke as she got to her feet and looked at the holo image of the Kavalian female just to her right. “Lubina is it?”

“Yes.” Muton’s wife answered.

“Thank you for your trust.” Akemi spoke.

“You... you just saved my people with your actions Captain.” Lubina gasped. “All of us. I cannot... I cannot repay you this debt.”

“We aren’t out of trouble just yet.” Akemi spoke. “We can’t stay here Lubina.”

“I agree.”

“Let me slave your ship to mine with tractor beams.” Akemi spoke. “We have enough power to maneuver even if connected, but you need to drop your engines into standby mode and go with us.”

“I can not say your actions have not earned my trust Captain Katsumi.” Lubina said with a great deal of respect. “You are moving into a better position to defend your King and Queens I take it?”

Akemi nodded her head. “That includes your husband and your people as well.” She stated.

“Indeed. I will make it so.” Lubina said. “Give me two minutes.”

Akemi turned away from the active transmission. “Stand by to lock on with port and starboard ventral tractor beams! Adjust weight and mass variables to compensate! Once solid lock is obtained come about to course three seven nine three point one and prepare to open fire!”

“Captain! The GREAT SOUL is launching four PROTOSS-Class troop ships!” Akemi’s sensor operator called out. “Estimate ETA to atmospheric entry onto Enurrua is nine minutes ten seconds!”

“Shit! Let the King know!” Akemi barked out. “Starboard batteries to full! All starboard missiles tubes loaded with high explosive concussive missiles! We’ll be too close for Mark22s and I ain’t going to waste them!”

“All batteries online and responding!” The voice echoed.

“Prep a full saturation barrage into the GREAT SOUL! Everything we have! Take her out of the equation and we can deal with the others on our own terms! And jam whatever second class communications they got working! No sense in letting them know we are about to kick them square in the balls.” Akemi barked.

ENURRUA

Miseo turned at the strange sound and his eyes grew incredibly wide when he saw four huge dragons, one of whom filled the entire corridor completely, come barreling around the corner of the downward spiraled incline that he had seen Martin Leonidas and his dragon come up only moments before. The sounds were what drew his attention and suddenly he knew why.

The blue scaled dragon he now knew was bonded with For'mya was first in line, Eirene perched in the saddle on her back and holding tightly to a squirming greenish/yellow baby dragon that was perhaps two feet long and two feet high. Half a dozen other dragon hatchlings were clinging to the saddle on Aurith’s back, just behind Eirene. The picture was the same for the other three dragons that followed Aurith. Fedor was upon the azure scaled dragon, a green scaled hatchling perched in his lap and trumpeting out a horrific noise that the six behind Fedor were echoing. At least seven or eight resided on the backs of the second two dragons, and then he saw For'mya with three other women and two men herding what could only be several hundred dragon hatchlings along the floor, all of the hatchlings letting loose with that terrible trumpeting noise. Mixed in with those dragon hatchlings were dozens of spider like metal drones that looked as if they had seen better times.

For'mya saw him and without thinking she scooped up a hatchling in front of her and made her way to him. “Miseo? What are you doing?”

“Father!” Miseo answered as the red scaled dragon stared at him intently. “He is using his skills to get the map! He’s using different sections to get as clear a map as he can.”

“There’s no more time Miseo!” For'mya exclaimed. “We have to leave now!”

“I know but he...” Miseo stopped talking when Muton came dashing down the corridor to them. “Father!”

“One more Miseo!” Muton declared. “I need one more piece and the map will be as complete as we can make it!”

“Muton... Pusintin is landing troops!” For'mya shouted. “We have to go!”

“One piece For'mya!” Muton barked. “Each section I go to reveals a different piece of the map. I have one more to go to! I have too... or the map is useless!”

“It is useless if you are dead!” For'mya screamed at him. “I will not lose you Muton! Not after what you have done for me!”

“Then help me complete this map!” He snapped.

“Father you can’t...”

“Without the map we are lost Miseo! Without the map we can never go home!” Muton declared. “We have come so far! We can’t just give up now!”

For'mya didn’t hesitate. She turned and lowered the hatchling to the deck ushering it along with the others and her eyes found Kenny and Cody. “Kenny! Your 190!” She barked out holding out her hands.

Kenny didn’t question her orders and easily flipped his 190 to her but the questions in his eyes were evident. “What are you doing?” He asked.

“Keep going!” For'mya barked. “We have one section to go and then we will follow you! Go!” She turned back to Muton. “Where Muton and we must hurry!”

“This way!” Muton hissed as he began to head down the corridor once more.

Danny lowered the macrobinos from his eyes and looked at Martin beside him. “Bring back memories?” He asked softly.

Martin lowered his own glasses and met his gaze. “Yes... too many. And none of them particularly painless.”

“Two ships and roughly three hundred Puma Bane Shock Troops.” Danny said. “The pride of the KFI. Of course that doesn't include your asshole brother. We just might have a chance here. Why they didn't land a full load I have no idea. And no fighter escort in the skies either.”

“He's not my brother Dan.” Martin hissed. “He's a walking around dead man.”

“Ok... that works too.” Danny said. He brought his glasses back to his eyes. “Looks like a standard sweep pattern. They're moving quick though, not checking their rears.”

“They don't think anyone else is here.” Martin said softly. “That is why no fighters and so few troops. He thinks he's only after my Kinsoaurgai and Muton's people. Fucking idiot!”

“Ok... so you got all the brains. Brag, brag, brag.” Danny quipped. Danny pressed his finger to his ear. “Master Chief you got the same thing?”

Martin's eyes were focused however on his brother who was moving far back of the front line of Puma Bane Troops like the coward that he was. A ring of Puma Bane soldiers covered him like a blanket.

“Fucking coward.” Martin hissed once more as Tony's voice came over their implants.

“Same... same Danny.” Tony answered. “Trying to catch us between two forces.”

Martin reacted to this report like the consummate professional he was. He pushed all his emotion to the back. “Master Chief have they broken anyone to go for the LEUGERS?”

“Right out of the shoot Skipper.” Tony answered. “Looked to be about sixty. The rest seem to be heading right for where our people are loading.”

“Then they're tracking For'mya and the Kavalians in some other fashion.” Martin decided quickly. “Bugs on their clothes or something.”

“Seems like it.” Danny said. “They...”

The massive explosion to their east announced the death of the LEUGERS transport, the pillar of flame shooting above the trees from two kilometers away. They didn't know that the destruction of the ship killed nearly twenty Puma Bane troops outright.

“Uh-oh!” Danny commented. “That woke them up! They just slowed down and Puss nuts is pissed.”

“Anyone see T19s?” Martin threw out the question.

“Nothing visible.”

“Negative.”

“If they got them, they didn't bring them.”

Martin looked skyward. Torma?

I am ready.

Say hello to our unwanted guests brother. Martin told him.

Indeed!

There is a single word for a twenty-one meter long, six metric ton dragon encased in shimmering gold Dragon Armor.

That word is devastating.

Torma dove out of the sky from where he had been circling above the terrain below at five thousand feet with the PSG designed for dragons activated. He thought it hysterical that the little strap around his right foreleg could hide his large body, and he kept flipping it on and off during the trip here driving Isheeni crazy. He was the largest dragon living behind only Arzoal's twenty-one and a half meters, yet he had amazing grace and maneuvering skills thanks in no small part to his constant training regime with both Martin and his beloved dragon mate. Isheeni was widely known as the fastest living dragon in a straightaway and she could turn on a dime. Torma was not so proud as to not take pointers from his azure scaled dragon mate, and all of these skills had translated into making him perhaps the most lethal of all living dragons. This is what he unleashed upon the unsuspecting Kavalians beneath him.

With demoralizing results.

His wings folded back along the sides, he rocketed downward to five hundred feet where he then snapped his massive wings to the side and sent a crack of soft thunder rolling across the landscape beneath him as he deactivated the PSG and became a hurtling six ton missile with only one intent.

“...find out what the fuck that was!” Pusintin snarled as his eyes took in the pillar of flame and smoke in the distance.

“Marshall... we’ve lost contact with the team moving to the LEUGERS transport!” The Puma Bane troop beside him reported as he listened to a bevy of shouting voices on the COM set he wore over his head. “The Commander of the Second Cadre has sent a scout team to investigate but he fears from the size of the explosion that the LEUGERS has been destroyed!”

“They booby trapped their own ship?” Pusintin gasped. “Why the hell would they do that?”

“He also reports the sounds of ships in the target area.” The officer spoke. “Something passed over his position only thirty seconds ago but he could see nothing.”

Pusintin looked at him. “Shrouded ships!” He exclaimed. “The fucking Union must be here! Order Popal to go active and launch fighters. There has to be Shrouded ships in the area. It’s the only reason they would have destroyed their only way off this planet! We...”

The soft, rolling thunder made Pusintin turn as the sound cascaded over him. He looked to his west and his eyes grew wide when he saw the massive dragon barreling towards them at impossible speed and encased in shimmering gold armor.

“Dragon!” He screamed too late. “Dragon!”

As Pusintin threw his body behind an overturned log, concerned only with protecting his own life, Torma rocketed over the top of his position. He let out a deafening trumpet and then cut loose with a stream of super heated breath from only a hundred feet in the air as he came in for a landing with his huge wings flared to the sides. Puma Bane Troops were the finest trained KFI soldiers, each of them undergoing rigorous lessons to control the inbred fear of dragons that all of the Kavalian species held. As the golden monstrosity landed among them, his super heated breath burning a swath of trees and plants and Kavalian troops, that training failed the Puma Bane troops utterly and they turned and ran. Torma had learned long ago how to direct his stream of super heated breath, and even how to make it last as long as he could possibly sustain it. As he swept his head over the area in front of him slowly, that three thousand five hundred degree breath scorched everything in its path. Kavalians unfortunate enough to be in the path of that breath were instantly incinerated. Fur and skin melted and was burnt to a crisp, as the screams of dozens began to fill the area. As he completed his sweep with his breath, Torma looked back to see several burning Kavalians screaming out their pain and staggering to his left. He snapped his left wing forward with crushing power and snarled with satisfaction as the strip of dragon armor that protected his wing bone snapped and crunched into the bodies of the howling Kavalians, sending their now broken and burning bodies sailing into the air in several different directions.

Several Kavalians who had survived the concentrated blast of heated air popped up from behind the fallen trees and few boulders they had hidden behind and began to fire their weapons wildly at the behemoth that had swooped in silently and devastated their number so effectively. They could only stare wide eyed as their projectile rounds bounced harmlessly off the combined psychic shield and Dragon Armor encased horror in front of them. With a trumpet of contempt, Torma sent his Heavy Horn tail smashing out to apply justice. The one meter wide slab on the end of his muscular tail was also encased in Dragon Armor and combined with the vicious speed it was traveling at, of the six Kavalians who had rose up to fire at him, only one survived the impact. Five of his comrades were killed instantly as that tail shattered nearly every bone in their upper bodies and sent them hurtling through the trees with shocking speed. The lone survivor was saved only because he had been protected from the full force of the blow by his two comrades in front of him. He did not come away unscathed however, as his body was propelled with overwhelming force through the air from the impact and didn’t stop until he slammed helplessly into the base of the six meter wide tree, both of his legs shattered and nearly all of his ribs broken like so many twigs.

As quickly as it had begun, it was over. Torma reached for the sky with a final bellow of anger and quickly engaged his PSG as his massive wings propelled him upward with amazing speed.

Pusintin leaped up from behind the now smoking log he had taken cover behind, his eyes wide in terror. He had never been under fire from a dragon before and to say that it was totally unsettling would be an understatement. He got his wits about him quickly however and grabbed for his junior aide. "Push forward!" He screamed. "Stay in the timber! The dragon can't attack if you are in the timber! Leave the wounded! Have Kalis meet me at the target location with his team! Do it!" He screamed before turning and looking at the half dozen Puma Bane troops who staggered to their feet behind him. "All of you with me!" He barked out the order.

Pusintin took one last look at the devastation the dragon had wrought and then snatching his rifle off the ground he began a sprint into the deep timber followed by six of his men. The further his legs carried him away from the scene of death and destruction, the more his anger grew. And the more he was able to push the growing fear in his belly down.

Martin lowered his macrobinos when he saw his brother break for the timber leaving behind his battered men.

"He's going for For'mya!" He barked out. "He can probably smell her by now!"

Danny looked at him. "Go fervon!" He snapped. "We're going to pull back! We don't need you here! Go!"

Martin didn't hesitate and with a flash of silver white light he was racing away from Danny in wolf form. All three and a half plus feet at the shoulder and nearly four hundred pounds of raven black fur and teeth. Danny watched him for a second and then touched his implant.

"Torma laid them flat!" Danny barked. "Those of you with long eyes, four rounds apiece and then pull back! The rest of you pull back towards the TYPE II now! The Skipper is on the move! No fucking heroics from any of you! We're getting off this rock together!"

"Fucking A!" A voice echoed.

"And here I was just beginning to enjoy the weather!"

"We're rolling Danny!" Julie's voice was next.

Danny was getting to his feet and beginning to move back. "Jules... damn you... if you die again I swear Marty and I will fucking haunt your dreams for eternity!"

Julie's voice held soft laughter and warmth. "Not this time Danny boy! Not this time!"

"Endith?" Dan barked.

"All the KADENs are away!" Endith's voice responded. "We got about fifty shrieking little dragons onboard along with everyone but For'mya and Muton."

"What?" Danny hissed as he broke into a run.

"She was with Muton helping him get his map!" Endith answered. "She hasn't come back yet."

"Pusintin is moving for the ship!" Danny exclaimed. "Fuck! Marty is going to be outnumbered like ten to one!"

And then Daniel Simpson shifted to his wolf form in a silver white flash of light and he was racing through the timber around him.

ARC ROYAL

"Captain Katsumi!" The voice bellowed. "Detecting increased power readings from the GREAT SOUL's landing bays! They are getting ready to launch fighters!"

Akemi came to her feet in an instant now. "We're out of time!" She barked loudly. "Range to target?"

"Fifteen thousand four hundred! Within the envelope of all weapons!"

"Fuck it! Drop the Shroud! Full saturation barrage on the GREAT SOUL to port and launch the Mark 22s on the DIATAGAs to starboard! All batteries free! All batteries free!"

The ARIZONA-Class had been created to be the premier Strike Carrier in the Union Fleet, but in her design, Ben O'Connor had thrown in the power of a Strike Cruiser as well. He had wanted the ship to be able to kick ass no matter what it had to do, and in many ways even he had been surprised at what the engineers had built. Even without her complement of fighters and fighter bombers, the ARIZONA-Class ARC ROYAL was still a deadly and extremely capable weapons platform. As the Shroud dropped, the ARC ROYAL was fully exposed. Even though the Kavalian built ship, slightly longer and wider, was slaved to her belly by almost a dozen tractor beams, it did not deter her from unleashing her full firepower. And while the two ships looked embarrassingly odd connected together as they were, looks counted for nothing in this battle.

The moment her Shroud came fully down, both sides of the ARC ROYAL lit up in a light show that shamed many of the firework celebrations that they had on Earth. It appeared as if they could reach out and touch the PRIDE OF PUMAS, while in reality there were still fifteen thousand meters between the two ships. Ten Type I Terra Series turrets, fifteen Type II Terra Series turrets, two full port side missile batteries, 30 Quad Pulse Cannon Point Defense turrets and six Photonic Torpedo Launchers erupted simultaneously, the devastating force of the saturation barrage slamming into the GREAT SOUL just as their Jaguar Mark II fighters began to pour out of their launch tubes.

Those fighters were shredded into little bits as great swaths of the GREAT SOUL's hull began to blast apart from the sheer magnitude of the firepower being poured into. A full three thousand meters of the starboard side of the PRIDE OF PUMAS rocked with the intensive and unforgiving saturation barrage being slammed into its right side. Of the forty fighters that had tried to launch, none on the starboard side survived the barrage, while only nine from the port side launch tubes escaped being clipped by their own launch tubes as they exited. The crushing force of the barrage actually caused the PRIDE OF PUMAS to angle downward, sending many of the fighters launching from the port side into unrecoverable spins before they were clear of the launch tubes. Those nine fighters lasted perhaps twenty seconds more as the Quad Pulse Cannon turrets on the ARC ROYAL shifted their primary fire to the fighters automatically. Each of those nine fighters were consequently blasted into small pieces as well.

In total, twenty M22A ZMF missiles had been launched from the ARC ROYAL's starboard missile batteries. Twenty missile bays, ten per battery, and twenty of the most lethal and advanced ship killing missile within the Union inventory were airborne. Each of the eight DIATAGAs that had accompanied the PRIDE OF PUMAS had two missiles targeted on it, with four drawing an extra missile. Akemi watched with some satisfaction as each of these ships began to maneuver wildly in order to try and evade the missiles. Apparently, these ship captains were experienced enough to know that Union anti-ship missiles were especially powerful and you could not stand there and let the missile hit you. It wouldn't matter with the Zero Matter Fusion warhead, but the Kavalians didn't know that. The slowest of the DIATAGAs to react was the first to die as the two M22A "Skipper" missiles locked on her scorched right through their shields and past point defense turrets that could not track the nearly invisible missiles. The DIATAGAs were the long range missile ships for the Kavalian Fleets and used as orbital bombardment platforms as well. They were never designed to be the sole defensive ship that was assigned to a GREAT SOUL. Both M22A missiles plowed into the exposed missile battery platform under the DIATAGA and detonated. The resulting explosion literally blew upwards into the main decks of the ship and severed the DIATAGA completely in half. Before the last flames had been sucked dry by the vacuum of space on that ship, the "Skipper" missiles were reaching their other targets and seven more DIATAGAs became victims of the small, yet totally overpowered Zero Matter Fusion missiles.

Akemi gripped her chair arms tightly as her eyes took all of this in. She had never in a thousand years expected to get such a devastating first shot and it showed on her face. "Report!" She screamed.

"Two DIATAGAs destroyed outright! Three more have lost main power and are drifting! The other three are heavily damaged. No shields and no weapons!" Her First Officer barked back.

"The GREAT SOUL is maneuvering away!" Another voice chimed in. "Main power is fluctuating, I'm reading seven different hull breaches, and numerous internal explosions! Her shields and engines are down! No emissions from her weapons!"

"Enough! We have a King and three Queens to protect!" Akemi declared quickly. "Back to base course and reengage the Shroud!"

"Captain! KADEN transports are inbound!" Another voice shouted.

Akemi nodded. “Burst them our position and have them activate SDAPs” She snapped. “The tractors on our guests?”

“Holding firm Captain!”

“Remind me to kiss the engineers who built this ship!” She barked out.

“Not without my approval!” Her First Officer and lover called across the bridge with a brilliant smile.

Akemi smiled as well as she looked at the arm of her chair and began typing. “Once we have recovered the KADENs, move to three seven nine two point six. Holding stations. All weapons are still free! Let’s get the rest of our people and get the hell out of here before their buddies show up from near the Jump Gate! They have to know what is going on by now and we can’t fight them all with our guest attached to our belly!”

ENURRUA

“Muton... we’ve got to go now!” For'mya declared as she looked at him.

Muton’s hands were pressed tightly to the bio-mechanical wall of the ship, his eyes tightly shut.

“Almost... almost there!” He gasped between clenched teeth.

“Muton... we can’t wait!”

For'mya turned rapidly at the sound of running feet, bringing the P190A3 around quickly until she saw it was Miseo running down the corridor. She lowered the weapon. “Miseo!” She almost shouted.

“We must go now!” Miseo exclaimed. “The last of your transports has left the surface! Your other ship For'mya? The TYPE II? Where is it?”

“Not far. Perhaps three hundred meters east from the entrance once we exit. But we need to leave now!” For'mya snapped.

“Father... father she is right!” Miseo barked. “We have to go!”

Muton’s hands dropped and he whirled towards them. “I have it! I have all the pieces!” He shouted as he typed furiously on the data pad.

“Can we leave now?” Miseo asked his father.

Muton finished typing and jammed the data pad into his small belt pouch. “Of course!” He stated. “I can put the pieces together when we are away from this place and under better circumstances!”

“This way!” For'mya snapped. “I can track the others with my nose better. We need to move!”

Miseo and Muton did not question her this time and they fell in behind her quickly as they made their way back to the entrance of the ship.

Pusintin stared at the waterfall in front of him, his hand holding the small homing device. His Puma Bane troops were set of in a defensive position around him as Kalis and his fourteen soldiers sprinted up to them from the west. Kalis didn’t pause and moved up beside his father quickly.

“Father?” He asked.

Pusintin looked at him. “This doesn’t make any sense.” He spoke. “The receiver says she is within a hundred meters of where I am! There is nothing!” He hissed sweeping his hand in front of him. “And her scent is intermittent.”

“Is something distorting the signal?” Kalis asked.

“No. It’s clear.”

“Father... why do we need this female?” Kalis asked rapidly. “The Union has forces on the planet who are here to get her. We should just leave now before we suffer more losses!”

“No!” Pusintin snarled. “I need her! She is mine now and I need her as leverage against the boy! If I have her, I can make him do whatever I want!”

Kalis looked at his father oddly. “Father... you... you don’t actually care for this elf bitch do you?” He gasped.

Pusintin looked at his son, anger surging through him for a moment. He quickly got hold of those emotions however. "She is... she is wolf Kalis." Pusintin told his son. "And she is much stronger than the wolf mate I had before I became Kavalian."

"She is also an elf!" Kalis snapped. "An elf female who hates you for tricking her and an elf who resists even our most basic of laws for females!"

"I don't care!" Pusintin snarled. "She..."

"Marshall..." One of the Puma Bane troops hissed softly motioning with his hand.

Pusintin looked at him quickly and then followed his motion. His eyes grew wider and darker as he saw movement behind the edge of the massive waterfall a hundred meters away. He saw her golden blond hair first as she came out from under the crashing water leading two Kavalians. "Six of you move around and head them off from the front! Kalis... the rest of you with me!"

"Father... this is not wise!" Kalis hissed.

"Shut up and follow me or go back to the ship!" Pusintin snarled at his son. "I intend to get her back! She is mine now!"

Martin Leonidas ran.

He ran as if the Hounds of Hades themselves were after him.

Four inch wide paws with black steel talons were barely touching the ground as he propelled his body at speeds that were nearly unbelievable for a wolf his size. His shoulders were slung low, his chest rumbling in exertion, as he drove his near four hundred pounds of muscled wolf body across the landscape with only one purpose. Three inches shy of four feet tall at the shoulders; this raven colored wolf was the largest Lycavorian to have lived since the time of Resumar. And Martin knew well how to play at his size.

Three times his enemies had harmed his mates. Three times he had failed them because he had been soft. First his beloved Aricia, the youngest, most adventurous and most intense of his Queens. The one who he would always instinctively reach for first because of the pureness of her own Lycavorian blood, the sweetness of her lavender and coca scent and her status as his sacred Anome. The woman who knew him better than anyone who lived. Then his enemies took his beautiful Melda Min from him and attempted to harm and rape her. The first he had turned and the one who had loved him without question since the first day their eyes met. His platinum haired Melda Min, who was his calm and sensibility among the storm in nearly any given situation.

Then they took his Kinsoargai from him.

The Voice of his Heart. The woman, who had been with him, carried him through that most horrible time after Joric had taken Aricia. She had been the one thing that kept him from throwing all thought and caution to the wind and fighting until the High Coven had killed him. She had been his reason for continuing on. His For'mya had been forced to submit to his foul brother, forced to bear his children, all while thinking he was dead. He would carry that shame for the remainder of his years Martin knew. The shame that had he been tougher and smarter, none of them would have had to suffer as they did because of him. It was a shame he would gladly try to make up for by loving each of them until they could stand it no more. He would make up for it by never allowing harm to come to any of them ever again. By never holding anything of himself back from them again. He would bathe each of them in the full force of his aura, letting them know how much he loved each of them, even as he wrapped his mind within theirs so they could feel every last bit of his love.

He would never fail them again. And no would ever succeed in taking any of his mates again as long as he had breath left in his lungs and blood pumping in his body.

This purpose is what carried Martin Leonidas through the timber faster than he had ever run before. Every muscle, every sinew, every cartilage and bone moving in perfect harmony as his engine, his heart, drove his body. Clouds of dirt and leaves lifted into the air as he turned and cut, dodging low hanging branches, and scattering the small wildlife that remained here on Enurrua. They were very abundant now that there was no one here to hunt them. However, none of them wanted anything to do with that black wolf monstrosity moving through the timber like a dark wrath intent on inflicting terrible death upon those it finally discovered.

And death is exactly what Martin Leonidas carried with him.

A death he would unleash with no hesitation and no regret upon those who would try to take his Kinsoargai from him again. Upon those who would try to take any of his Queens from him in the future. This would be the message he would send now to any and all who thought to do what his brother and the Kavalians had done.

A message of death incarnate.

For'mya led them quickly down the slight outcropping of rock when they reached the bottom of the small valley. They had slid more than walked down the hundred and fifty meters to the bottom of the valley beside the waterfall and For'mya immediately turned them east where she knew Endith had set the TYPE II Alpha down in a clearing barely large enough to fit the ship. She gripped her 190 tightly, all of her senses on high alert. She caught many scents on the wind, all of them strange, but none that she could tell were Lycavorian. She could feel the brilliant presence of Martin within Mindvoice as he grew closer to her and her heart sang in blissful happiness. To discover that he still lived after she thought she had watched him die was very nearly too much. Then to experience the shame she felt for responding to Pusintin in such a manner while he raped her and impregnated her and then gave birth to his children. Yes it had been forced upon her and she had been a pawn that was used by Pusintin, knowing how her body would react while she was in Phase to the 'death' of her mate. She had not known what to expect when she first saw him there. Would he hate her? Dismiss her? Knowing that he still lived caused the feelings of betrayal to come crashing down upon her when she finally stood in front of him.

Until his all consuming aura had wrapped around her and made her feel what she had desired to feel for over two decades.

There was no betrayal in his mind. He felt only shame for what he had allowed to happen to her, and an unquenchable craving for her and all of his Queens. His love for her, for all of them, it was like being wrapped within a heated blanket that took away all of your fears and doubts. And standing there in front of her it had radiated like the beam of a brilliant light on a dark night. His aura, an aura that no Lycavorian would ever be able to match, and now the only aura that would ever elicit any reaction from her ever again For'mya knew. She had felt the force of his full aura and it had very nearly overwhelmed her, until his mind wrapped around her and acted as a filter allowing her to feel everything to its fullest extent and remain totally in control of her senses. Senses that were screaming out for him in every way. His total love and the acceptance for Eirene and Fedor, unquestioning and complete, just as it was for all of his children no matter that they were his foul brother's blood children. Now they were Martin Leonidas's children, and he would raise them and love them as if they had come from his loins. And they would know the adoration and devotion of a father.

And Martin would fulfill his promise to her just as his aura told For'mya he would and soon they would have the girl she so wanted to give him. These were the things that filled her mind as they moved. She wanted him; she wanted him to have her in every way possible. She wanted Aricia and Dysea and Cirith. She wanted to feel herself wrapped within their loving arms and be experiencing the pleasure and happiness she had once thought lost to her. These were the things that...

For'mya came to an abrupt halt, causing Muton and Miseo to almost crash into her from behind. Her hands tightened on the 190 as her dark brown eyes instantly changed to her wolf persona and her fangs burst forth. For'mya didn't move as the breeze washed across her face and she detected the scents.

Kavalians.

"For'mya?" Muton asked softly as Miseo saw her body language and began to search the area around them with his eyes.

"Go back. Hurry!" For'mya whispered softly. "Move quickly and without sound. Kavalians."

Muton looked past her as his eyes grew wide and he immediately began to inch away from her back down the trail as Miseo guided him with one hand and held his weapon with the other. For'mya began to follow, inching her body back slowly as she followed Muton and Miseo back the way they had come.

Danny's paws kicked up gouts of dirt and leaves as he skidded to a halt, his wolf eyes watching as Martin's body disappeared through some trees roughly half a mile in front of him. His chest was heaving in exertion, his dark brown fur standing up on end all along his powerful back. His wolf eyes cut right when he saw a flash of movement through the trees and they grew wider when he saw Julie unwrap the shadows from around her body and stop blurring, her face and eyes looking where Martin had disappeared into the timber.

Jules! Danny screamed out within Mindvoice and he saw her head snap around, her keen vampire eyes searching for and finding where he stood almost immediately.

Danny!

I ordered you and the others back to the ship! Danny growled.

Fuck you Simpson! Julie snapped back at him. I love him too Danny and I'm not losing him! Not to some Kavalian puke faced faggots!

Shit! Danny exclaimed.

Danny... Danny I've never seen him move so fast! Julie declared. How... I can feel his rage Danny. It's... I've never felt anything like it from him before!

I have! Danny announced. On Ukwav! After they took Aricia from him!

How... how did he get so powerful Danny? Julie barked.

I don't know! But I know he's about to unleash a living hell on whoever is chasing For'mya! Danny spoke.

Not alone he isn't! Julie snarled. I lost the two of you once! I refuse to let it happen again!

Then let's go back our brother up Jules! Danny barked.

His paws twisted and Daniel Simpson exploded forward once more, propelling his two hundred and eighty pound wolf body forward like a gunshot. Out of the corner of his wolf eyes he saw Julie blur in motion once more and the shadows consumed her body. Whatever was going to happen, Danny had a feeling that they were going to see a part of Martin Leonidas that his brother had yet to reveal to anyone.

And it wasn't going to be pretty.

The two sharp reports had brought them up short as two kinetic rounds punched into Muton's chest and flung his body back against them, knocking both For'mya and Miseo off balance.

"FATHER!" Miseo screamed as his father slumped into his arms, his chest a mass of quickly spreading red.

"Muton! No!" For'mya's voice followed as she scrambled to the side and helped Miseo lower him to the floor of the forest.

They had made it almost back to the wide river where they could cut north and move around the Kavalians in front of them when Pusintin appeared with nearly two dozen Puma Bane troops and holding a large automatic in his hand. For'mya could only watch helplessly as she saw two separate tongues of flame reach out from the weapon, Pusintin's face a mask of self satisfaction as he pulled the trigger.

For'mya gripped Muton's hand as the Puma Bane troops closed in around them. "Muton! Oh Muton I am so sorry!"

Muton spit up blood and shook his head painfully. "Not... not your fault!" He spat in great pain, Miseo holding his father's body in his arms.

"That's for betraying me you fuck!" Pusintin's voice carried to them as he walked up with Kalis beside him.

Two Puma Bane troops moved up behind Miseo and jammed their weapons into his back as he tried to rise. He froze as For'mya spun around and got in front of Pusintin blocking his aim.

"You monster!" She snarled viciously, her eyes and fangs still fully changed and very exposed.

"You shut up bitch!" Pusintin screamed at her. "I'll teach you to be a proper mate soon enough!"

For'mya's fangs snapped together as she hissed at him. "Not nubous likely!" She spat at him.

"Where are my children?" Pusintin roared as he stepped forward and slapped her hard across the face. The bow knocked her to the ground hard, her soft golden hair flying in all directions. "Where is my son?"

For'mya lifted her head from the ground and let fly with a glob of spit mixed with blood which struck Pusintin's boot. "He is not your son! They are not your children! They will never be your children!" She howled at him. "They are my mate's children!"

"I am your fucking mate bitch!" Pusintin screamed at her. "I am your mate now! And you will do as I say!"

For'mya wiped the blood from her lips where his blow had cut her bottom lip and looked at him. "You... you are nothing!" She hissed vehemently. "You... you are nothing compared to him!"

"I'm nothing?" Pusintin shouted. "He's fucking dead! Dead do you hear me! I had him killed and now you are mine you stupid bitch! I'm going to have you begging me to fuck you with my big cock in every hole for what you have done! I'll have you whimpering for more just like before!"

For'mya laughed out loud now as she pushed herself up on her knees glaring at him and positioning her body in front of Muton. "Your big cock?" She spat at him feeling Martin so close to her now. So very close. "You call that little thing between your legs big? I may have been whimpering for more Pusintin... but that's only because I couldn't feel your pathetic meat inside me!"

Pusintin's eyes nearly bugged completely out of his head at her dig against his manhood. He reached down and grabbed her long hair painfully. "You disrespectful elf bitch!" He roared. "I treated you good! I never hurt you! You are mine For'mya! You can't help it anymore! You will only cry out for my blood! My cock! And there is nothing you can do about it! It's part of your nature now!"

For'mya met his eyes unwavering. "Better check your facts on that." She snarled bravely, Martin's presence infusing her with love and strength and confidence in her place. "You are miniscule when compared to Martin Leonidas!"

"Don't speak his name again damn you!" Pusintin roared into her face as he yanked on her hair once more. "He is dead! Dead do you..."

The wolf howl that followed echoed magnificently across the terrain, seeming to come from all directions. The nearby timber reverberated with the sound, deep and resonant in its tone. Pusintin released For'mya's head and looked up as Kalis and his Puma Bane troops began to look all around them at the timber. Pusintin looked down at her again. There was something familiar about that howl. Something he hadn't heard in thousands of years. Not since he was a small boy and...

Pusintin's eyes grew wide then and instinctively he unleashed his full male wolf aura on For'mya. It should have turned her into a babbling female begging to be taken by her mate no matter where she was. For'mya just knelt there staring back at him with cold death in her dark brown eyes, completely unaffected by what should be overwhelming her senses and her mind to the point of uncontrollable sexual need.

For'mya's blood stained lips broke into a huge smile, her fangs protruding viciously from her upper jaw and her eyes holding nothing but hate in them.

"He's here!" She snarled those two words at him with vitriol and pride all mixed together in her tone.

"Father!" Kalis screamed grabbing his arm and pointing up.

Pusintin looked up to see the silver flash of white light above them as the wolf shifted back to human form just after leaping from the ledge two hundred meters above them. It left in its place a man in glimmering Dragon Armor and Pusintin's eyes grew even wider as that behemoth of a black dragon suddenly appeared out of nowhere just above that figure of a man, his massive wings flared wide as he glided over that falling man and cut loose with a stream of super heated breath. Only that stream of superheated breath was not directed at those on the ground, it was concentrated on the figure in the golden armor. And then Torma let loose with a trumpet of power and tipped his wings before reaching for the sky once more. That figure of a man, now encased in a glowing, superheated psychic shield of power executed a flip in mid air, the Nehtes appearing and extending in his hand and then he landed a hundred meters away, driving that Nehtes into the ground in front of him with staggering power.

Pusintin and the Puma Bane troops could only stare in horror as the ground in front of him buckled and heaved upward and then was racing at them with incredible speed like a tidal wave on the water. Pusintin and the others could not get out of the way in time and that wave of earth buckled underneath their feet, and then proceeded to flip them into the air and toss them about like rag dolls while oppressive heat surrounded them, singeing their hair and burning their exposed skin. The most amazing thing that struck Pusintin as he was tossed through the air, that wave of earth did not strike For'mya and Muton. It swept around them like it was being guided by some unseen hand, leaving them completely unharmed. He grunted with pain as he slammed back to the earth some hundred meters from where he had been standing, no Kavalian left near For'mya and the traitors. Ignoring the pain in his body he scrambled to his feet, seeing Kalis and the other Puma Bane troops staggering about as they rose. They heard the trumpets in the background and could see four other dragons join the obsidian scaled beast circling the small clearing and unleashing roars every few seconds. He watched them as they all landed on the ridge above, the one the man had leaped from and they just stared down. Pusintin snapped his head around and glared at the figure, now only fifty meters away, his back to them. The golden Dragon Armor encased every portion of his body, the joints of his elbows and knees sectioned to allow freedom of movement.

The figure rose to his full height, the Nehtes going into the ground beside him as he held it and turned to face Pusintin and his troops. Pusintin held in the intake of breath as he saw those burning yellowish eyes through the eye slits in the armor. He could just barely make out the long wolf fangs that were partially hidden behind the full cheek shields over the top of the Mark IV ArmorPly helmet. Pusintin knew how the Dragon Armor worked, how it was extended from special slots on the Union's ArmorPly body armor. The air around the figure rippled with psychic power and heat from where the dragon had sprayed the figure as it fell. Somehow the person was still alive and not only containing that burning heat, but making it swirl around his body which was encased by the light blue psychic shield.

The yellow/golden eyes blinked once and Pusintin heard the voice. A voice from the abyss of the grave. The voice of a dead man.

"Hello Pleistarchus... my brother!" Martin growled. "Remember me."

Pusintin's eyes could not grow any wider than they were and every alarm bell in his head began to sound loudly and insistently. All of them telling him to turn and run just as fast as he possibly could.

"No!" Pusintin screamed. "No! You are dead! I... I watched you die!"

Martin's laugh sent shivers down the spine of all those watching, which now included Danny and Julie who had appeared beside For'mya and Miseo almost magically. It was a cruel laugh, a laugh of a man who had had too much taken from him. The laugh of a man who was done allowing others to hurt those he loved and cared for. The laugh of a man who had finally reached the end of his tolerance and would allow no more. Julie had some medical training and she immediately began to try and treat the critically injured Muton, while Danny settled to the ground beside For'mya ready to die to protect his brother's mate. All of them could now smell Aricia, Dysea, Cirith and Helen leading the rest of Martin's team through the timber just up the trail, their scents now filtering down to them in a rush. Duewa clung to Thoti's arm as they rushed forward and she didn't hesitate as she dropped to her knees beside Muton. For'mya looked at her wide eyed.

"Duewa?" She gasped. "Help him please! Don't let him die!"

Duewa was not the same woman she was only a few short months ago and she glanced at For'mya. She was now wolf, and now free of everything that had held her back. She was also much more confident in her abilities. "He will not die!" She hissed. "Not if I have anything to say about it."

Kenny, Pablo and Cody led the rest of the team forward of where For'mya sat on the ground, taking up defensive positions. Kenny's Shi Viska was the first to flash into existence, followed by seventeen others and soon For'mya, Muton and Miseo were behind a wall of golden shields. Aricia skidded to a halt beside For'mya, engulfing her in her arms as Dysea nearly collided with her on the opposite side.

"For'mya!" Aricia gasped as she pulled her lover and fellow Queen close to her.

"I'm ok!" She insisted. "I'm... I'm fine!"

"You are not fine!" Dysea barked as she reached out with her hand and wiped away the small blotches of blood on For'mya's lips. "He hit you!"

For'mya smiled warmly. "This?" She asked wiping her hand across her lips with a smile. "I barely felt this."

Helen stopped behind Aricia placing her hand on For'mya's shoulder though her eyes never left where Martin stood. "We must go now Aricia!" She spoke urgently. "We must go now!"

"Feravomir?" Aricia looked up at her with concern in her voice. "What is wrong?"

"We... we do not want to witness what is going to happen here." Helen warned them. "Can you not feel it child? He has... he has reached within himself and drawn out the essence of his full power. We..."

"Death and I didn't agree on a lot of things!" They heard Martin speak the words. "We decided it was better if I left."

“Too late!” Danny hissed knowing what Helen meant.

Helen lifted her hands and without so much as a second glance, Arzoal’s power adding to hers from above, she erected a soft white psychic shield around their entire group. It was a power none of them had ever seen her use before and they all looked at her. Helen shrugged her slim shoulders. “No one said Arzoal and I do not train.” She snapped. “Prepare yourselves my family and friends, the deaths you are about to witness will be quite frightening to say the least.”

“Death and I didn’t agree on a lot of things!” Martin spoke as he glared at his older brother with murder in his yellow/gold eyes. “We decided it was better if I left.”

“No!” Pusintin shouted. “This is not possible!”

“I’ve come to collect on debts that you owe brother. Debts to our people for your actions through the centuries! Debts to me for laying your vile hands upon what is mine and for what you have done to my beloved Kinsoaurgai!” Martin snarled with coldness. “I’ve come to take your head brother and return it to our mother as she has asked me too. I will not break a promise to our mother.”

“No!” Pusintin roared again. “No!”

Martin laughed again but it held no mirth in it. “What’s the matter brother?” He spoke sarcastically. “You don’t believe that you failed in killing me? You think very highly of yourself you know. Big Marshall Pusintin dick head brother of mine. No mercy. No surrender. You subvert the words of our father with your very breath! You spit upon everything he stood for with every breath you take!”

“You know nothing!” Pusintin growled at Martin. “You did not even know him! You have never spoken to him! You have never seen him!”

“That is where you are wrong brother.” Martin said. “I have seen him. I have spoken to him. Every time I lay my head down to sleep and call to him he comes to me and we talk and he tells me so many things. I know him better in death than you ever knew him in life!” Martin barked. “Let me give you a gift brother. The gift of mercy that he showed to me. Albeit only for a time, for you cannot delay the inevitable I’m afraid.”

Pusintin hissed at him loudly. “You know nothing!” He screamed again. His attention and the attention of all the Kavalians was on Martin. “You...”

Martin lifted his hand with his palm towards Pusintin and you could clearly see the pulsing of the psychic power radiating from his palm. Without any warning Kalis was yanked from his feet and rocketed through the air towards Martin. He covered the sixty meters in four heartbeats and then he was gasping for air in Martin’s armored fist as his fingers closed around Kalis’s throat. Not enough to crush his windpipe or larynx but enough to make it very difficult to breath and cause Kalis to claw at his hand with strong fingers. Kalis could feel the intense heat radiating from the psychic shield around his uncle, only the part of his arm from the elbow up to the hand squeezing his throat now free of that shield.

Pusintin took three steps towards them but stopped.

“So nephew...” Martin spoke softly gazing at Kalis’s dark blue eyes. “Your father stands there. He will not come for you Kalis. He will not try to protect you from me. In truth... he does not care what happens to you!”

“I do... I do not believe you! You... you do... not frighten me!” Kalis gagged on the words even as he continued to claw at the armored fist that held him suspended two feet off the ground. The grip was far too powerful for him to even get the tips of his fingers under the armored grasp.

Martin drew him closer, Kalis’s blue eyes growing wide the closer he came to the searing psychic shield and he stopped struggling with both hands wrapped around his uncle’s wrist. “I see within you Kalis.” Martin growled softly loosening his iron clad grip on Kalis’s throat ever so slightly. “Like I saw within your brother Karun. You have never seen the things Karun has discovered Kalis. Never experienced them.”

“Karun is a traitor!” Kalis hissed. “He betrayed us! His people!”

“Did he?” Martin asked him, his voice softer now. “Or did he just embrace the things your father has never spoken of with you? That he has never showed you? The things that it was his duty to show you! The things you could be still.”

“You lie!” Kalis spat once more.

“Do I?” Martin asked calmly. “Your brother Leruk was a lost cause Kalis. He spent too much time around your father. It twisted him beyond help. I saw this in my son’s mind after what happened. That is why you have tried so hard to gain his favor. He always regarded Leruk as his favorite. You have a chance Kalis... you have a chance he did not. You have a choice.”

“I will never betray my father!” Kalis hissed. “I will never betray my people! I am... I am not afraid of you!”

Martin smiled up at him, but there was no joy in that smile. His wolf fangs prevented it from being anything but a smile of death. “I am not the one you should be afraid of Kalis. It is not my mate that you disrespected by doing what you did. You would be dead already if it was. It is only another crime that your father bears the shame for. Not teaching you what you should know as a wolf.” Martin told him.

“He... he killed my brother!” Kalis snarled.

Martin shook his head. “Androcles killed a cancer. Not your brother.” He spoke softly still. “I see that cancer growing within you as well... but you can stop it Kalis. You can choose to stop it. You can open your eyes and make a choice.”

“Never!” Kalis growled.

“You are on a collision course with fate Kalis.” Martin spoke softly and he drew a thin data pad from a small pouch on his belt, keeping his movements hidden from all those around him. “Open your eyes nephew... open your eyes to what you could be. It will be your only chance. You will survive this day Kalis... and I will leave you with a gift. Do with it as you wish.” Martin pushed his other hand through the psychic shield and shoved the data pad into the folds of Kalis’s loose fitting clothing and partial body armor. “And remember my words to you now... Androcles Leonidas is my son... and there is not a merciful bone in his body nephew. For what you have done he will carve you up and spit you out. Your only chance is to read what I just gave you. Read it! And then make your choice. My son will not give you a second chance nephew.”

“I do not fear him!” Kalis growled.

Martin smiled. “You should boy. He is the instrument of your death or your salvation.” He spoke. “Now... no more words. I have other things to attend to. Think for yourself for once Kalis! Think for yourself and become a Leonidas! It is the choice your grandfather wants you to have. Try to land without breaking too many bones.”

“Wha...” There were no more words from his uncle as Kalis felt himself lifted higher and then dropped abruptly. He could only watch as he saw Martin spin around instantly and his right fist crashed into his chest with painful force. Enough force that the pain caused him to black out instantly. This fact probably saved his life for his body went completely limp.

Kalis would remember nothing of the next few seconds and would awaken a few moments later some five hundred meters distance from where he was. He would not remember smashing against and through smaller trees as his body was flung with the force of being fired from an old style cannon. Surviving Puma Bane troops would stumble across him as they advanced towards the battle sight. He would never know it, but those troops stopping to try and helped him gave his uncle the time he needed to escape.

After he finished what he had come to do of course.

Pusintin could only watch his son hurtle through the timber until he was lost to sight and then he turned to look back at his brother.

“You’ll die for that!” Pusintin screamed.

Martin turned his eyes on his brother. “He will live for now... unlike you!”

“You going to fight us all brother!” Pusintin snarled out. “You going to fight us with your puny spear! I have hundreds of men closing on this position right now! I’ll win! And I’ll have that elf bitch howling beneath me just like I did before!” He shouted. “You should have heard her begging me to fuck her harder! It was hysterical!”

Martin hefted his Nehtes. “I’m not going to fight you with this brother.” He said calmly. “And the one thing you never understood from all of father’s lessons to you, the one thing that you never grasped... Spartans never fight alone!”

Pusintin whirled around now, his eyes going to where For'mya and Muton had been. Many of the Kavalians who had been focusing their attention on Martin did so as well, and what they saw shocked them right to their booted feet. The wall of Shi Viskas that now protected the elf Queen and the others they had come to this world to retrieve was impossible to miss. And quite impossible to breach from the way it was formed around the small group. That was without the soft blue psychic shield that now encompassed the entire group.

Pusintin whirled back to face Martin. "You think they will stop me?" He screamed out. "I'll butcher every one of them! And I'll take your other bitch Queens and let my men have them as I am crowned King!"

Martin shook his head slowly as he began moving towards him. "No... your life will end here! Today! And you will know nothing but the blackness of the abyss."

"Kill him!" Pusintin screamed at the Puma Bane troops. "Kill him in front of his precious Queens!"

Twenty Kavalians brought up their assault rifles and secure in the knowledge that their reinforcements would be here before any Lycavorian help, they held back the triggers of their weapons intent on finally killing the King of the Lycavorian Union.

"NO!" For'mya, Aricia, Dysea and Cirith screamed at the same time. All of them began to move, but Danny and Helen grabbed two of them apiece.

"Helen he needs us!" Aricia snarled struggling within her grasp. She held her arm with a strength belaying her age and frail looking appearance.

Helen shook her head. "No... he does not! Stay within the shield I have created or you may be hurt as well!"

With hands still holding them back, they turned to watch the only man any of them had ever loved simply lift his free hand as the barrage of kinetic projectiles from twenty different weapons all reached him at the same time. Hundreds of rounds impacted the psychic shield and they began to see hundreds of orange white flares all along that psychic shield. Martin's forward movement stopped as his psychic shield began to almost glow with power. Sitting on the ledge far above, Isheeni and Arzoal had to move away from Torma as his active shield began to glow even brighter around him, his golden eyes focused on where his Bonded brother stood below.

Mother? Isheeni gasped. What... what is happening?

Arzoal's eyes were wide as she gazed at Torma and how that psychic shield wrapped around him in swirling motions. It looked as if it was almost alive with power, and Torma's wings were twitching every few seconds with the intensity of it.

They have become like Androcles and Elynth! Only stronger! Arzoal gasped. They are... they are no longer a Bonded Pair Isheeni. They are one!

Martin stood his ground against the barrage of kinetic projectiles, his face showing no strain whatsoever as those rounds impacted his shields. He could feel each one, sense it as it smashed into his shields and then was evaporated by the intense three thousand degree heat that still swirled around him. He could feel the steady drum of Torma's heartbeat within him, the calm dedication and love.

They had studied long and hard together. Delving into the mysteries of the many Tomes that Avi had discovered in his data banks and on CS41. Mysteries of Mindvoice and Etheric power that Sumar had mastered and begun to put into training regimes for his son Resumar. They had shared these Tomes with no one but Andro and Elynth after the first five years, the four of them often times leaving Earth to find a deserted area of another planet to train and practice. They had to develop an entirely new type of fighting that combined the use of bladed weapons and even firearms into Etheric use of powers. It had been frustrating at times, for they had to absorb so much information and learn to understand all there was to know about Etheric abilities before they could actually use them as Sumar had intended them to be used. Martin knew why Sumar had left such Tomes... he wanted his son and their people to be prepared for what was coming. Even all those years ago Sumar knew that the day would come when they would be needed to fight an evil so horrific it could shake the foundation of everything they had ever believed.

Andro had opened himself already and revealed what others had never seen before, and Martin knew he had passed this information to Denali at the very least, for he had heard what Denali had shown and was now capable of. Androcles probably had been instructing all of his brothers and sisters in some way with the new abilities and meditation techniques that they had long ago discovered and only mastered in the last few years. Androcles lived for the protection of his brothers and sisters and those he loved. It was one of the driving forces behind his very nature and Marin had no doubts that he would insure his brothers and sisters knew more than anyone else thought they did. There was a cruel streak in his son Martin knew. A dark filament of his being that even Martin himself did not possess. This cruelty had come from Martin's own father, a dark filament of his nature that offered no mercy or remorse to those who were sworn enemies. Andro had this within him as well, his actions during the Evolli war and after allowing Martin to see it completely. This filament of his being was tempered and controlled however by his son's sense of honor and the love of his family and his mates. Martin knew Andro craved to be out from under his father's shadow, desiring to blaze a path of his own into the future. That desire had already been fulfilled, though Androcles would not discover that for some months yet. It had been fulfilled the day he took Sadi as his mate. The female wolf who so many back home regarded as the second coming of his mother Gorgo. Martin could not agree more with that assessment and he had seen it that night on the island. Standing among the half destroyed palace, Sadi had radiated a strength and connection that Martin knew would be the last piece of the puzzle for his son when the time came. Sadi would be like Aricia and his own mother combined. Fierce in her devotion and love to his son and their people. Martin Leonidas knew this was the power behind their family. This was the strength that drove them forward. It was that power and strength that had driven him and Torma to begin training with the Tomes that Sumar had left. And now all of that training and hard work would come to fruition this day.

It was these new abilities that Martin Leonidas now called upon.

Abilities that he would now use to remove the largest cancer of all that remained as a blight upon the honor and love of the Spartan and his father's name. Martin sensed when the fire slackened and the Kavalians began to change their kinetic magazines. Many of them reloaded and looked up to see him still standing and not perforated by hundreds of holes, their eyes wide in disbelief. All of this time he had slowly been moving forward, filling Torma's power and will combining with his own to drive him forward step by step. He stopped when he was only ten meters from where Pusintin and his men stood gawking at him in disbelief. As if by some unspoken order, their constant firing from the last minute had ceased and they all stared at him within that burning psychic shield. When the last kinetic projectile burst against that shield Martin stood there unharmed in any way. He twirled the Nehtes within the shield in one hand and looked at his brother.

"Is that the best you got brother?" He asked finally.

"Lower that shield around you brother!" Pusintin snarled. "Or do you not believe in a fair fight?"

Martin laughed at him then and shook his head. "Ah... Pleistarchus. You learned nothing of what father taught you all those years ago." He said almost sadly. "There is no such thing as a fair fight!"

With that Martin stopped twirling the Nehtes and launched it out of the shield with a grunt of supreme power. The nine foot long spear sizzled through the air and covered the distance between Martin and two Puma Bane troops who were standing perfectly in line together. The spearhead impaled the first Puma Bane troop through his chest, the rush of air exiting his body through the hole in his chest drowned out by the grunt and thud of bodies as the forward motion of the spear carried it through the first troop's body to impale the second Puma Bane soldier through his head as he was bending down to reload. The momentum of the throw tossed both of them back five meters until they were still on the hard ground. The first Kavalian had his hands wrapped around the shaft of the spear as his eyes glared at it and his blood poured from the gaping wound.

Pusintin whirled back on his brother, his eyes full of rage and he saw Martin withdraw a smaller tube like object from a holster on his leg. His eyes went wide when he saw that Martin's shield had come down now.

Martin spun the tubular object in his hand expertly. "I'm going to kill you with this my dear brother." Martin snarled viciously. "A new toy that our elven weapons master made just for me."

Martin depressed the recessed button on the shaft of the Stiletto. It was carved with ancient symbols that Nehtes had worked for hours to engraved by hand. It could not be called a Stiletto really, for Nehtes had made only twenty weapons like the one Martin now held, each with its own varied and intricate carvings on the dark gray pommel that appeared to be some sort of metal and weighted specifically for an individual. He had taken the improved power cells and schematics from Ben O'Connor and while his assistants went about forging the new *Stiletto*s, Nehtes himself spent an entire week fashioning twenty very unique blades that then combined the best of two worlds into one. Pusintin watched as the thin, three foot long blade, forged from pure Dragon Armor metal extended. He could just make out the intricate carvings on the blade but was no where near close enough to read them. The butt end of the pommel looked nothing like any sword pommel he had seen. It was shaped with a circular set of six rings that wrapped around what appeared to be a glowing blue orb of some kind and was shaped in angled fashion

“Time to die brother!” Martin snarled.

“Kill him!” Pusintin screamed. “His shields are down! Kill him!”

As the Puma Bane soldiers began to react Martin Leonidas simply vanished.

Pusintin and the others began looking all around, their eyes wide. “What the fuck is this?” Pusintin screamed.

THIS BROTHER...! The words in Mindvoice rang out so loudly and with such force that even Pusintin staggered under the power behind the words. This is destiny correcting a mistake made long ago!

Pusintin didn't see Martin reappear behind him about to end the leap he had made. The PSG came down and Martin's boot impacted Pusintin directly between the shoulder blades sending him hurtling forward at impossible velocity. As Martin finished landing he brought his left hand, now encased in shimmering light blue psychic power, down into the earth beneath him. Like bolts of electricity, the Mindvoice power instantly zipped through the ground to touch the legs of the nearest Puma Bane troops. Three of them were flung into the air screaming out their surprise and incredible pain as the Etheric bolts of power rippled through their fur covered bodies. Unlike electricity however, the Etheric attack did not electrocute them. Instead it was twisting and warping their very cellular structure, causing agonizing pain as well as permanent damage. As the rest of the Puma Bane troops watched with horror filled wide eyes, Martin Leonidas attacked.

There was no hesitation on his part as he drove the blade of the Stiletto sword clean through the neck of one Kavalian, blood splashing across his armor as he tore the sword free and spun a hundred and eighty degrees to decapitate two more Puma Bane troops who were looking at their comrades stupidly as they hung in the air above them, their bodies flipping and dancing in gruesome tune to the Etheric energy slashing through their bodies unrestrained. Martin spun once more, swinging the sword with both hands as he bent low and removed the legs of two more Puma Bane troops. As more chilling screams filled the air and the Puma Bane troops began to react to the whirlwind of death in their midst, Martin vanished once more. The three Kavalians that had been suspended above the ground now fell with loud, wet thuds. The eyes of their comrades fell upon their broken and ravaged bodies, many of them gripped in fear by an enemy that did not fight conventionally and used powers beyond their comprehension. The veins in their skin appeared to have burst inside their bodies, their faces and necks streaked by harsh red and purple stains under the skin, their eyes open in death, the veins in their pupils broken and nearly blotting out the white portion. Blood leaked from every orifice on their bodies, running the gambit from their ears to their noses and mouths, to their eyes. It almost looked as if their blood itself had boiled within their veins and cooked them alive from the inside.

As they looked stupidly at their dead comrades on the ground the PSG deactivated once more and Martin was among them another time. The Stiletto Sword claimed another victim as it snapped out with blistering speed and removed both of the arms of a Puma Bane soldier who was actually trying to turn and draw down on Martin. The rifle clattered uselessly to the earth beneath him, his eyes wide as he looked at the stumps of where his arms used to be and the twin fountains of blood that were now arcing into the air. Martin quickly folded the sword along his forearm, the blunt end pointing at a Puma Bane soldier, and the bright pulse of light blue energy erupted from the end of the weapon. That pulse of energy struck the soldier in the center of his chest, punching a fist sized hole in this thick upper body and flinging him back as if he had been hit by a Lifter in flight. As he did this, Martin lifted his left hand and let fly with two psychic diamond projectiles. Those two psychic bullets blasted through the head and chest of two more Puma Bane soldiers before they had finished reacting to their comrade being taken down by the strange energy weapon.

Martin reengaged his PSG and was gone yet again.

“Together! Around the Marshall!” A more experienced Puma Bane troop yelled the order to the survivors. “Together!”

The eight remaining Puma Bane troops formed a tight circle around Pusintin as he came to his feet, staggered slightly and then whirled around with his rifle at the ready.

“Fucker!” Pusintin screamed. “I'll strip the skin from your body and...”

Martin shimmered back into existence only ten meters away, his left arm extended out. The Shi Viska burst into this realm from Flatspace and immediately launched from his arm. It extended razors all around the edges as it scorched through the air to slice cleanly through the upper bodies of two soldiers, the blood splashing Pusintin and another soldier next to him as the shield sped off into the distance leaving death in its wake. Then Martin was gone!

“You were King!” The voice screamed out.

Martin reappeared to the side and they could only watch in horror as he snatched up two more Puma Bane soldiers within the grasp of his Etheric power and lifted them ten meters into the air. He squeezed his fists together; his eyes and fangs they could see under his helmet were a mask of pure unadulterated hate and rage and Martin brought his arms slashing down forcefully to his sides. The sounds of their bones shattering in mid air and then their bodies smashing to the unyielding ground with more snapping sounds was grotesque in nature. Both men lay still, nearly every bone in their bodies crushed or broken. They would die in seconds. In the same eye blink Martin’s Stiletto Sword flashed out and he opened an inch deep, five inch long gash in Pusintin’s abdomen. As Pusintin grabbed for the wound in agony, Martin engaged the PSG once more and vanished from sight.

“Our people would have followed you anywhere! I would have followed you anywhere! You could have led them into the future!” His voice screamed once more. The emotion that the words carried was a palpable thing in the air, affecting everyone who heard them. “You betrayed them instead! You betrayed our father’s memory!”

Pusintin staggered to his feet holding his bloody abdomen. “He left us alone!” Pusintin screamed. “He went and died for millions of people we did not even know! He left us alone! And then mother left me!”

“You were a Spartan!” Martin’s voice screamed. “You were never alone! A Spartan is never alone! And mother would have returned for you!”

“You know nothing!” Pusintin shouted. “Nothing!”

“Don’t I?” Martin’s voice echoed, more in control now it seemed, but filled with a trembling hate and rage that caused everyone to hear shiver. “Do you think Panos would not show me what you did while you were King? What you attempted?” He barked. “You were power mad! Nothing was ever good enough for you! More! You always wanted more!”

“As is my right!” Pusintin roared.

Martin shimmered into existence directly in front of Pusintin. “And was it your right to try and kill me and then take my elven mate! To try and take the throne of our people in one of the vilest ways a Lycavorian can act?” Martin snarled viciously before he snapped his head forward into Pusintin’s face, crushing his nose with the Dragon Armor helmet and digging a jagged gouge into his cheek as Pusintin fell.

Martin instantly faced the remaining four Puma Bane Soldiers. Once more he punched the ground beneath him and the earth reared up, tossing all of the men into the air and hurtling them with unimaginable velocity directly at the outcropping of rock and granite that was the end of the ridge that ran away from them and along the mediocre sized river that moved to the north. One of the four men impacted at an odd angle and had his head crushed the moment he struck the unmoving stone wall, while the other three men flailed wildly as they impacted the outcropping of rock with unforgiving speed.

Martin ignored them now and looked down at his brother before reaching up to yank his helmet from his head and tossing it to the ground. “Now I will show you what Joric learned all those years ago brother!” Martin screamed out. His fangs were fully extended and his wolf eyes were very nearly glowing with that yellow gold color. “I will show you the price for bringing the shame and pain to my Kinsoaurgai that you have.”

The first trip hammer like right cross landed directly where Martin had aimed it, and his eyes showed their savage retribution as the other blows followed in quick succession.

When the first blow fell, it was Danny who started to move to intervene. Helen’s voice stopped him cold in his tracks.

“Remain where you are Daniel Simpson.” Helen spoke with authority and wisdom.

“Helen he will... it is his brother!” Danny began to protest.

Helen shook her head slowly. “No Daniel. You are the only brother Martin Leonidas has ever known or acknowledged. The love one brother shows to another he has reserved only for you. The love one shows to a sister Julie Collins, he has reserved for you.” Helen saw Julie’s wide eyes cut to where she stood. “He wept for four days when he thought you were lost Julie. As one only weeps for a sister. He considers himself blessed by the gods that you were returned to him, no matter how that came to be. He has half brothers and sisters yes, but the two of you are his blood! This group of men and women who remain..." She looked at them as their heads turned to her. "You are his family, those dearest to him outside of his wives and mates. This man has inflicted horrible acts upon those he loves more than his own life. Directly and indirectly. This anger and hate must be purged now."

"He'll kill him Helen!" Julie said. "As sure as shit he will kill him."

Helen shrugged her shoulders. "We have witnessed the true Martin Leonidas today." She said softly. "And I feel we will see even more of his power. This is the man fate has decreed he become." Helen's eyes turned to Dysea. For'mya was weeping openly crushed between Aricia and her. "You asked me long ago Dysea... you asked me what he was like as a child. A baby." Helen smiled and swept her hand to where Martin was. "He is being born again sweet Dysea... and you can witness it for yourself."

Martin's armored fist smashed into Pusintin's face once more. He straddled his brother's chest, holding the front of his shirt and simple body armor in his left hand and pummeling him with that Etheric encased fist of his right hand.

"...rolls in his grave at what you have done!" Martin screamed as spittle showered his brother's bloody face. "You tried to kill our mother! You are no son of our father!" Martin stopped with the last blow and looked down at him, one eye already swollen shut, his lips cracked and bleeding, his left cheek sunken inward where it had succumb to the devastating force of the blows being reigned upon him.

Martin rose to his feet, standing over Pusintin. "I would have gladly given the throne to you! I never wanted it to begin with!" He shouted. "All you had to do was return and be among your people! Those who loved you! I would have followed you without question if the good of our people was your only concern! You could have been King you fool! King! Instead you choose to remain among those who have killed our people! You have killed our people you fucking coward! All for power! Power! You wished power Pleistarchus? Let me show you power brother! The power we could have wielded to secure our people's future for millennia to come! The power that comes from the Pralor blood within our line! Let me show you what you will never have brother!"

Martin reached down and yanked him to a sitting position as Pusintin cried out in agony from the pain of nearly every rib in his chest cavity being broken. Martin then turned to where the three remaining Puma Bane troops were rising to their feet in front of the outcropping of rock. Martin's hands began to glow and he reached within himself to his core. The core of his love for his mates, his children, his brothers and sisters, his people. He reached within him just as the Tomes of his grandfather had instructed, and feeling Torma add his own considerable Etheric essence within their bond, Martin formed two iridescent globes of power within his hands. Two light blue globes that practically sizzled and cackled and popped in the air all around them. Pusintin could only watch with his one good eye in painful amazement as with a howl that came from deep within him Martin shoved his hands forward and released those two globes of Etheric power.

Directly at the three stunned Puma Bane troops.

What followed was something that no one who witnessed it that day would ever forget. The first globe of Etheric power struck the three Puma Bane soldiers and rammed them back into the outcropping of rock so hard their bodies left imprints within the rock face itself of nearly half a meter. They died instantly from the impact thankfully for them, for not half a second later that second globe of Etheric power struck them and the entire outcropping of the mountain ridge blew into tiny splinters of rock and dirt as if explosives had been set within the ridge itself. Mixed in with those shards of rock and granite were the pulverized remains of the Puma Bane soldiers, the entire cloud rising up and tossing smaller sized rocks and chunks of granite to all sides, some of them bouncing off the shield Helen had erected around the group. The entire ten meter long four meter thick outcropping that had once been part of the ridgeline simply disappeared as if some sweeping blow from god had reached down and knocked it into oblivion.

Martin whirled on his brother, his chest heaving in exertion and burning rage. "You have betrayed your blood Pleistarchus! Betrayed it in the most heinous of ways! You took my mate! My elven wife! My Kinsoargai! You took her against her will, against her heart in your quest for power! And it has brought you to ruin!”

Pusintin looked up at him with that good eye and spat blood as he tried to laugh. “She... she gave me children! Good... good fuck... too!”

“She gave you nothing!” Martin roared as he smashed his fist down into Pusintin’s face once more. “She gave me children! My children! They are my children now! And I will love them as I have loved all my children! As our father and mother once loved you! They will know nothing of you! They do not even look like you!” Martin laughed at him. “You do not even know how your own people make babies you fucking fool! You were so intent on making her bear you children you forgot to pass on the essence of yourself to them within Mindvoice! The essence that would have made them your children in mind and appearance! They reached for the essence that was within my Kinsoargai’s blood! My essence! I will raise them and love them and teach them all they need to know! They are my children! They were always my children from the moment they were conceived within her womb!” Martin lashed out and pounded Pusintin once more as he lay on the ground.

Martin lifted his Stiletto Sword pommel and depressed the trigger, the shimmering sword extending to its full length as he spun it expertly in his hand.

“We will be at war after this day Pusintin!” Martin snarled. “And while your Kavalian friends, those you chose over your own people, while they may have victories, they will not win. Spartans never fight alone!” Martin moved around the inert Pusintin as he spoke now. “You are charged with high treason brother. Rape of a sitting Queen. Murder of thousands of our people! Your name will be stricken from the roles of Spartiates! It will be as if you never existed!” Martin stopped and looked down at his brother. “Now brother, now I will show you what happens to those foul creatures who bring harm and shame to my wives and mates! And I will fulfill the promise I made to our mother. I will bring her back your head!”

Martin lifted the Stiletto Sword and prepared to bring it down to sever the last tie to a part of his past that no longer held him. No longer would control him.

And as was always the case with Martin Leonidas, fate and destiny stepped in laughing hysterically.

“VAMPIRE! VAMPIRE!” Endith’s voice screamed out within his implant louder than he had ever heard her voice carry! “Kavalian fighters got through the ARC ROYAL’S defense! We’re radiating like a fucking sun here Marty! We need to go now! I mean right fucking now or we are all dead!”

The decision was simple. Without doubt. Without question. Without hesitation.

Martin turned to his wives and mates and friends. “GO! NOW! GO!”

Martin turned back to his battered and beaten brother and pointed the Stiletto Sword at him, the severe tip of that sword pressing against his neck.

“Blood before all else brother!” Martin hissed at him. “That is the lesson our father taught me in my dreams! Blood before all else!” Martin leaned over and spit on him, the glob of spit landing right on his blood soaked cheek. “Follow me if you have the balls. Follow me if you think you have a chance. If not... return to your Kavalian friends and be beaten into the dust of memory by my son!”

With that Martin Leonidas turned and ran.

SCIMITAR

“...told you this was a bad idea.” Nalavi said. “He isn’t going to let us go.”

Yuri stood by the clear view window gazing down into the landing bay of the ship. She could see them working around their G9, the sarcophagus having been removed nearly two hours before. As Yuri’s eyes scanned the landing bay she took in the ships and the men and women as they went about their work. There was a determination in their gait and their actions that she never saw from High Coven ground crew members. She saw pilots speaking with these ground crew personnel, trading information or ideas she did not know, but it was a scene you would not see on a High Coven ship. Yuri also noticed that not a single crew member she had seen or passed wore any kind of rank insignia on their uniforms.

“Yuri?” The soft male voice drifted to her and she turned her head to see Pa’cour come up beside her. She gazed at his face intently, long past seeing just the outward appearance of his dark gray and matted skin. She could also sense the trepidation within him. A small part of him was worried that she would leave him now that they were free of Moran and the Coven. That she would not want to be with him. Yuri could see within his mind that he wanted the serum badly. Anything that could help him to keep from losing her is all that mattered to him now. Yuri didn't hesitate in the least and she surprised him in her actions. Pa'cour was the only decision Yuri had made in her entire life based on what she wanted. A decision untainted by either her mother or Moran and certainly the first since Xaxon's essence was gone from her. That decision was turning out to be the best thing she had ever done in her lifetime.

Pa'cour staggered for a second as Yuri stepped up to him and wrapped her arms around his waist, burying her face into his chest and drawing him tighter to her with her vampire strength. Pa'cour didn't hesitate either and he wrapped his arms around her lithe frame. He looked down to gaze into her eyes and instead was met by her soft lips as she kissed him. Pa'cour pulled her closer as she deepened the kiss.

I am your Blessed Wife! Yuri's words filled his mind. There is no place I would rather be than right here. With you. Yuri deepened their kiss more, plunging her tongue between his lips to do battle with his own. Amazingly... Pa'cour was the most accomplished kisser that she had ever kissed, and it made her giddy to know he would be there for her forever. Let go of these doubts you have Pa'cour. I wish my Blessed Husband to be strong and to never question what I feel for him. It is the same as what he feels for me.

His answer was to crush her body to him even more and Yuri whimpered in happiness. Nalavi looked at them and shook his head. "We are about to die and you two wish to chew each other's tongues. Outstanding." Nalavi muttered. "We should..."

His words were cut off by the sound of the double doors opening and Nalavi came to his feet as Androcles led Deia, Dorian, Eliani and Jomann into the large briefing room. Yuri and Pa'cour quickly parted but she kept her hands on his arms as she composed herself and looked at Andro. He was unarmed, which surprised her, and she met the gaze of his azure blue eyes with no fear. They were in uncharted waters here and Yuri had no idea what to expect from him or if they would even live out these next minutes. She would not allow him kill her again so easily without a fight however. Yuri could sense the burning of his resonance within Mindvoice and it almost staggered her at the power this boy wielded so easily.

"The Durcumusaan are finishing up loading what you asked for." Andro spoke as he approached them.

"I told you to take them." Yuri spoke softly with no hostility in her voice. "We need nothing from you."

Andro stopped a meter away from her, his eyes never leaving her face. "You have no idea what you have done do you?" He asked her.

Yuri looked quickly at Pa'cour before turning back to him. "I... I know what I have done. I remember almost all of it completely. I can not... I can not take those things back Androcles. I will freely admit to being a cruel person in many cases. That is simply... it is part of who I am because of what I am. But even you must admit you can sense that it was not entirely me."

"So you wish forgiveness for your sins with this action?" Deia asked now. Her words were neither hostile or friendly.

Yuri shook her head. "No." She answered instantly. "I will... I will live with what I have done for the remainder of my days. Some of those things I would have done without Xaxon's foul influence, some of them I would not. I... I truly do not know where he ended and I began." Yuri looked at Pa'cour once more. "All I know is that right now I have been given a second chance. I need to discover myself, what I lost so long ago and then try to make amends for what I have done. If that is possible. All I can do now is try. Returning to you their bodies is the first step. My father... my father took them from you and I am returning them. I want nothing in return for correcting one of his many mistakes. I can not bring them back... but I can insure they are returned to your people so that they can be honored in the manner they should be."

Deia met her eyes and slowly nodded her head. "I can... I can not hold you responsible for what your father and mother did long before you were even born. My wolf blood... it calls for me to strike you down where you stand because of who you are... but after this... I... I see a glimmer of hope."

"It is that hope that I am clinging to right now." Yuri said confidently. "With every step I take." She looked at Andro. "I told you that you are not your father Androcles and that is true. You see... you see things differently than most. Including him. He would never give me this chance. He would kill me without hesitation. You have come out from under his shadow as many people will see in the future, just as I see it now. You are darker than him in many ways, yet your compassion has no limits either, unlike your father. It is that compassion I seek now. A chance and an opportunity that your father would never give to me.” Yuri’s hand dropped to her abdomen. “A chance to try again and do things right.”

“What about Moran? Dante?” Andro asked.

Yuri met his eyes. “Robert Moran is a fool who craved only the power I could give him. He has it now... yet along with that power comes all the problems. Some of which were my doing.” Yuri moved closer to him. “I am powerful within Mindvoice... stronger than I was before because now I am clear and focused. I will never be as strong as you or your father Androcles but I know you can feel what is inside me. You... you and Carisia are part of each other, just as you are with all of your mates and wives. Through her I know you can see within me. I know you can sense what I feel for Pa'cour... the depth that those feelings go.”

Andro glanced at Pa'cour for a moment and then back to Yuri. “Your love for him is absolute.” He said softly. “You see him as the single strand of light that guided you out of the darkness.”

Yuri nodded her head. “I have always been brutally practical.” Yuri said. “Even as a small girl from what Nalavi tells me. That will not change. But neither am I unintelligent. Whether it is because I took so much of his blood to survive or not... every fiber of my being tells me this is the life I should have had. With Pa'cour. The life I was denied. I have never begged for anything in my life before... I beg you now... don't take that from me when I have only just discovered it.”

“Narice?” Andro asked.

“Narice is the only one who can save the Coven now.” Yuri said. “She is the only one who was never tainted. It was almost as if she was protected somehow.” Yuri looked at him. “Protected by destiny's hand because she was always meant for your brother. Isn't that what you believe?”

Andro nodded. “Indeed. Just as Carisia was meant for me and Lucia for Zarah.”

“Perhaps one day in the future I will be able to stand before them and not see hate in their eyes for me.” Yuri said. “Perhaps one day I will be able to make amends to them for everything I have done. I do know that after what I was subjected to by my own father, Xerxes raping me, and then your uncle, I know that is not something I would have sanctioned upon my worst enemy ever. The more... the more I look back and see how things have occurred... the more I am beginning to believe that our two bloodlines should never have been enemies. We were... we were meant to bring the bloodlines of the brothers back together. All I can do now is try and make you see that I now believe that is the key to whatever future we have. If you are going to let us go that is.”

“And Dante?” Andro asked her.

Yuri stepped back and pressed against Pa'cour, feeling his arm curl around her waist. “Dante is no longer my son. Without my mother to teach him, Xaxon will eventually gain full control of him. It may take weeks or months or even years. But Xaxon will act out his will through Dante. Death is the only release for him now. And his death will be at your hand... that much I do know. I do not care what happens to him now. To try and persuade you differently would not work and it would go against everything I feel within me. If he does not fall by your hand, then I will kill him myself and insure Xaxon's essence is destroyed as well.”

Andro looked at Deia then and saw her nod her head. He blinked several times and took the data pad that Jomann held out to him. “I have had my engineers enhance the properties of your Shroud generators and your engine capacitors. They have increased the range and terawatt capability of your weapons array. Everything that Esther brought with her to honor the Exile's last request has been stored on your ship. I have added an additional six months worth of rations and medicines from the SCIMITAR's stores and Eliani had tuned one of our portable Hadarian medical computers for optimum use within the G9.” Andro held out the pad to Pa'cour. “I added one crate of P190A3s and several of the newer versions of our K14.” Andro met Pa'cour's wide eyes. “There was a message imbued within my grandfather's sarcophagus.”

Pa'cour's head came up. “Message?” He asked. “How... how is that possible? They were... they were dead when we laid them within the chambers.”

“It was a message within Mindvoice.” Andro told him. “A message that he left for us. In that message he said to honor you Pa'cour. Honor you for what you did and that you would play a role in our future.”

“Me?” Pa'cour gasped.

Andro nodded his head. “It seems that no matter from which direction it comes, the lives of your people and mine will be tied together Pa'cour of the Akruxian Immortals.” He spoke. “There was not time for me to have weapons forged by Nehtes for you.” Andro turned and took the crimson cloth wrapped bundle from Jomann and then turned back to Pa'cour. "I decided this would be better. For what you have done, all those millennia ago and what you did by returning them to us, I offer you Iphan and Halize rie Aellseleum. The Hammer and Anvil of Justice. Forged from pure Dragon Armor by our elven Weapons Master Nehtes."

Andro unwrapped one end of the bundle and Pa'cour saw the pommels of the matching swords that were the signature of Androcles Leonidas. Pa'cour reached out reverently and took the bundle slowly, his fingers tracing the line of the sword pommels. Pa'cour looked at him. "But these... these are your weapons." He gasped.

"They are now yours." Andro said. "And if you are anything like your brother Cha'talla, which I believe you are, they will serve you well."

Pa'cour bowed his head deeply to the Lycavorian Prince. "I will insure they are never used outside of the names they carry." He stated softly.

Andro nodded. "Thank you."

Pa'cour met Andro's eyes. "The... the bounty on Yuri's head?"

Andro looked at Yuri standing beside him. "It has been lifted." Andro told him.

"Thank you Androcles." Yuri spoke softly.

"Don't thank me Yuri." Andro told her. "Don't make me regret what I am doing. I find myself... I can not forgive you for what happened to Zarah, regardless of whether Xaxon was in control of you or not. It would be a betrayal of my sister and I will not do that. I can't do that."

Yuri nodded. "I understand." She spoke.

"In time... in time perhaps I can explain it to her." Andro said looking at Yuri intensely. "And perhaps forgiveness will come... but it needs to be from her and from Lucia. They are one now, bound together more tightly than you could possibly imagine."

"I thought as much." Yuri said softly. "I can't... I can't say that does not make me happy because surprisingly it does. I can not judge any longer, not when I found what true love is in the most unlikely of places."

Andro held out the data pad to her this time. One he had taken from his own belt. "I want to thank you." He said.

Yuri looked taken aback and she blinked several times. "Thank me. I have... I have brought nothing but pain and death to your family. Why would you want to thank me?"

"You brought Carisia into this world so that I could find her. You brought Lucia into this world so that Zarah could discover her." Andro said softly. "They are beautiful and precious and to me it shows that you are not without hope." He held out the pad to her. "This... this is a list of places. I'm not telling you this is where you need to go... but they would afford you the opportunity to discover the things you say you want to discover. They are out of the way and mostly uninhabited and the facilities are modern and spacious and easily well defensible. It will also protect you from those idiot bounty hunters who still wish to test themselves against you even though I have removed the contract."

Yuri reached up and took the pad slowly. Her eyes read several entries and she lifted her head stunned. "Some of these... some of these are within Coven space" She gasped.

Andro nodded. "Yes they are. Take them Yuri... for what you and Pa'cour have done here this day I will do this. The second chance you wish is yours now. Take it... take it and try to discover who you are. But do not make me regret what I am doing, for I will come for you then. For both of you... and nothing will deter me."

Yuri drew the pad back to her chest and took Pa'cour's hand within hers. "I won't." She said. "I give you my word, for whatever it may be worth."

Eliani stepped up to Nalavi then and held out the pad she carried. "My mother wanted you to have this. She said you will need it in the coming weeks and months." She told him. "It also has the technical schematics for the Medical Computer and some additional information that you will need."

Nalavi looked at her. "What information?" He asked.

"Read it and you will find out." Eliani told him with a smile.

Deia stepped up to Pa'cour and held out the small case. His dark eyes watched as she opened it and showed him the two syringes. "In the... in Resumar message he said to honor you for what you did." Deia spoke as she shook her head. "I never thought I would be standing here in front of an Immortal saying this... but thank you." She said. "Take this... the serum for your people. Take back what was taken from you and begin anew Pa'cour of the Immortals. As your brothers have done, leave what is in the past to the past. Move forward with grace, confidence and honor. And remember where you came from.”

Pa'cour took the case from her and bowed his head to Deia. “I will. You have my oath I will.”

Andro motioned to Jomann. “My Captain Jomann will take you back to your G9. May the gods speed you on your way and help you to find your true self Yuri. Regardless of what my father may think of you... we will need each other in the future.”

Yuri blinked several times again. “What?” She gasped.

Andro stepped to the side. “It will come to you one day.” He said. “For now... we part not as enemies or friends, but of something in between.”

Yuri stared at him even as Pa'cour took her arm and led her and Nalavi out of the briefing room. When they were gone Eliani stepped up to Andro and slipped her arm around his waist. “Well... that went... ok.” She said with a grin.

Andro looked at her and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek in a brotherly fashion. “That sister... is an understatement.” He said. “What did mother give to them?”

Eliani looked up into his face. “The specs for the serum they used on Dorian. To defeat the Darpia Syndrome that is currently very active within Yuri and the child she carries.”

“Darpia Syndrome... are you sure?” Andro gasped.

“Mother is.” Eliani answered.

Deia stepped up to them and also placed her arm around Andro’s waist. “We have either just helped to create powerful allies in the future... or even more powerful enemies.” Deia looked at him. “What do you think Mandri?”

Andro turned and looked out the view window. His eyes easily detected the large form of Pa'cour as they moved across the landing bay. He also saw Yuri reach for and take Pa'cour’s hand within hers, moving closer to the Immortal in a fashion that could not be anything but intimate and hopeful.

“I think we need to return to Earth with our ancestors Tenna.” He spoke finally. “Then I need to talk to father.”

“And then?” Eliani asked.

“Then I have a feeling we will be at war.” Andro said solemnly.

CHAPTER EIGHTY

UZU OZEIB 7

NEW CAPITAL CITY OF YDARE

POPULATION OF 26 MILLION

BASEMENT LEVEL OF THE RULING COVEN ASSEMBLY BUILDING

The High Coven Ruling Assembly building was a hundred story structure that reached into the reddish color sky of the new capital Ydare along with dozens of other equally as tall or taller buildings. The city of Ydare had been named the capital after Aikiro had killed Veldruk and reasserted her dominance over two decades ago. Ydare was a much more bustling and modern city than was the norm across Uzu Ozeib 7, with a much younger generation of men and women who called it home. It was the new center of commerce and manufacturing with hundreds of schools and High Coven owned companies. Ydare sat on the western edge of their northern continent along the shores of the largest ocean on Uzu Ozeib 7. The atmosphere close to the coastal plains was slightly thinner and clearer and therefore these cities received far more sunlight than most of the cities inland. A fact that drew the younger generations to the city. The sun was out this morning and the streets were bustling with those moving to and from their jobs or out enjoying the sun. Many of the younger generations of vampires were much more tolerant of the sun, and while they enjoyed the warmth and light of the sun on their skin they did not go out of their way to stay within the sun’s embrace. Many vampires were no longer afraid to walk in the sections of the streets that were well lit by the sun and shining through in several places on the streets of the capital city of Ydare. Aikiro had moved the capital here to try and appeal to the younger generation of vampire. In some ways she was successful; in others she only made the younger generation dislike her more for her obvious political ploy. She was catering to them openly, but keeping her ties to the older Purebloods behind the scenes. No real change had taken place even though this was one of the things she said she would insure. Ydare was a much more liberal city; many of the more oppressive laws and rules that were hundreds and hundreds of years old were not even followed or recognized here. Non-pureblood vampires walked the streets here without the stigma they did in other cities. Here they were not considered turned or half breed vampires, here they were treated equally. Ydare grew in size yearly as more and more of the younger generations of purebloods and non-purebloods flocked to the city to insure their voices were heard.

The Ruling Assembly Building had once been a prison before Aikiro had ordered it reopened and turned into the gathering place for politicians and governmental operations. The entire interior of the building had been remade into a much more aesthetically pleasing façade. It was well lit by elegant globe lights in all the corners of every room and in some places even the sun where it shone through the intricately carved glass windows. This is where the Ruling Assembly, the Ventash'ma as they were called, had been staying since the word of Aikiro's death had first arrived on Uzu Ozeib 7. The moment her death had been confirmed, the wide ranging wrangling for power and position had begun. Yuri's failure to return to the capital had many of the senior purebloods wondering just what her intentions were. Of the thirty-six members of the Ventash'ma, the equivalent of Union Senators and ultimately the executors of Aikiro's will, sixteen were fully backing Yuri as the new Empress, thirteen were on the side of naming a new leader, and seven were keeping their loyalties to themselves while they bargained and coerced for additional power than what they already had. These Ventash'ma had ruled the High Coven for Veldruk or Aikiro for the last eight thousand years and none of them were in any way prepared to lose their status. They were the voice and hand of Veldruk and Aikiro and their decisions are what they enforced. These members of the Ventash'ma rarely ever changed unless one died from old age and some of these men and women were well past thirty thousand years of age while the youngest was a spry seventeen thousand years old. Their meeting room was a colossal chamber on the ninety-seventh floor of the building with windows on three sides that overlooked the city of Ydare, and made them feel as if they were more important than they really were. An even dozen Immortals, older and far more experienced Immortals that had chosen to remain part of the Coven, stood guard in the chamber along the walls. These senior Immortals were the Ventash'ma Guard, and their sole purpose was to keep order within the chamber and insure that the Ventash'ma was protected.

While the first eighty-seven levels were used for offices and smaller meeting rooms as well as military operations command centers, the top thirteen levels were used solely by the Ventash'ma. Many had extravagant apartments within the building, the more loyal to Aikiro they were, the more elegant their living areas. The top three levels, to include the Gathering Chamber as they called it, were used for important meetings and were surrounded by intricately carved window frames and large tinted windows.

The four basement and sub-basement levels however, they were hardly ever visited by anyone. This is where most of the torture and interrogations of prisoners took place so long ago and no one wanted to be associated with that now.

Yet these two Immortals moved through the damp and dark corridors of the subbasement without such thoughts on their minds.

"...understand why you have brought me down here Ki'nuq." The stern faced Immortal spoke. "No one has been down here into the bowels of this building in centuries."

"Yes Colonel Co'kal... I know this." The younger Immortal replied.

"Then why are we here!" Co'kal demanded.

"You are the Commander of the Ventash'ma Guard Colonel." The younger officer spoke. "I have heard even you criticize the men and women of the Ventash'ma lately. You have even spoken of the need to change things or the High Coven would be lost. And you have secretly spoken of your admiration of Cha'talla."

Co'kal stopped walking and looked at the young officer. "So you have brought me down here to kill me for my beliefs, is that it?" He demanded once more.

Ki'nuq stopped as well and turned to face Co'kal. "Kill you?" He gasped. "No Colonel... that is not why I have led you down here." He spoke quickly. "Your views... there are many who agree with you Colonel."

"Agree with me or not... we are Immortals and we have no say in governmental doings." Co'kal spoke. "We have a duty... and it is our duty we must follow."

“Is it our duty to watch the world we now call home be destroyed from within Colonel?” Ki'nuq asked. “Should not our voices be heard as well? Should we not continue what Cha'talla started so long ago?”

Co'kal looked at him and relaxed somewhat. He could detect no danger or threat around him and at eleven thousand years old, he had become quite adept at detecting danger when it came around him.

“Why have you brought me here Ki'nuq?” He asked the young officer.

“The Ventash'ma squabble and fight over power since Princess Yuri has not returned. They have lost contact with Admiral Moran. Many of our most senior officers are not bowing to their will.” Ki'nuq spoke. “They worry for themselves only Colonel.”

“Not all of them are like that Ki'nuq and you know this.” Co'kal spoke. “There are many on the Ventash'ma who embrace change and have since they were young.”

“Yet they do nothing now!” Ki'nuq hissed. “The war with the KFI will destroy us unless we act differently Colonel. You know this as well as I. This defensive mode we have been in for decades drains our people, our troops and our equipment. The laws that the Ventash'ma cling to are so far out of date that they no longer apply to today! Or tomorrow! Over half our own people answered Cha'talla's call Colonel. And many vampires went with them.”

“What?” Co'kal gasped.

Ki'nuq nodded his head. “It is not being reported openly, but thousands upon thousands of vampires departed the Coven with the Immortals. With our people! We are not beneath them! We are equals and many...”

“What?” Co'kal asked.

“Many Immortals have taken pureblood wives Colonel.” Ki'nuq stated. “Their wives have looked beyond what our outward appearance is and seen what we are at our core. Times are changing Colonel... and we must change with them.”

“Pureblood wives?” Co'kal spoke shocked. “Are they insane Ki'nuq? They know... they know the penalty for this action if it is discovered.”

“None of them care anymore Colonel. They want to be free.” Ki'nuq spoke softly. “I do not care anymore.”

Co'kal's eyes grew wide. “You?” He almost shouted.

Ki'nuq nodded his head. “We have been Blessed Wife and Husband for nearly six years now.” He said.

“Who?” Co'kal demanded.

Ki'nuq stood a little taller. “Ventash'ma Nedoli's youngest daughter Felisa.” He answered him confidently.

Co'kal moved closer to him. “Nedoli!” He hissed. “Felisa is seven hundred years your junior! She is his favorite! He is among the worst of...”

“That is not something you need to remind us of Colonel Co'kal.” The female voice filled the area around them.

Co'kal whirled around to the side and saw the lithe body of the pureblood female unwrap the shadows from around her frame. Co'kal watched her step up to Ki'nuq and press her very lush body against Ki'nuq's taller and much thicker body quite intimately. Felisa's long raven black hair fell to the middle of her back, her high cheekbones and full lips giving her an almost dreamlike beauty. Co'kal had to shake his head several times to come to terms with the fact that this breathtaking pureblood female, one who could and no doubt had garnered many advances from the pureblood vampire males, was pressed against Ki'nuq in a manner that was reserved for those who were and had been lovers for some time. Felisa was the youngest and most beautiful of Nedoli's three daughters, barely a hundred and twenty-nine years of age, and quite obviously there was far more to her than the Coven Media News knew. She was often seen with her father at events across the planet, smiling and laughing, but this was a part of her that no one even suspected.

He watched as Felisa leaned up on her tip toes and sensuously kissed Ki'nuq's cheek, while slipping her arm around the front of his waist. “I doubled back three times my husband.” She said softly. “We were not followed.”

Ki'nuq nodded and drew her closer to him. “You have met Felisa before Colonel.” Ki'nuq said.

Co'kal stared at them for a long moment still trying to grasp the situation. “How... how long?” He gasped.

“Six years as Ki'nuq has said.” Felisa asked. “Six of the most glorious years of my life Colonel.”

“You have... you have hid this for that long?” Co'kal asked with some disbelief.

Felisa smiled and glanced at Ki'nuq before turning back to him. “You will find that we have become quite good at hiding ourselves. As so many others have become as well.”

“So I see.” Co'kal spoke. “Your father has... he has no inkling?”

“My father is a power hungry fool who clings to the past like a disease.” Felisa spoke. “My mother knows... my sisters as well. They are the ones who have helped us be together through the years. My mother thinks a great deal of Ki'nuq.”

“Together?” Co'kal almost shouted.

Felisa laughed at his expression. “We have been Blessed husband and wife for almost six years Colonel. Do you think we have not consummated our love before now? We have... on many occasions and each time is more glorious than the last.”

“He does not need the details Felisa.” Ki'nuq spoke with an embarrassed smile.

“I will gladly share each and every detail if that makes the Colonel realize that I love my husband.”

Felisa spoke proudly. “I do not see an Immortal Co'kal... I see a man. A man who treats me as a precious jewel and not some trophy. A man who stole my heart the first moment I looked into his eyes.”

“How... how many others?” Co'kal asked.

“There are several hundred remain here within Ydare's city limits.” Felisa replied. “Many more left Uzu Ozeib 7 when Moran released the Immortals from their oppression.”

“Oppression?” Co'kal spoke looking at her. “You...” He stopped talking as things began to take shape in his head. “I suppose... I suppose oppression would be an adequate word to use. But why... why reveal this to me now?”

Ki'nuq looked at him. “It has become time to act Colonel.” Ki'nuq said. “It is time to act to save ourselves and the Coven.”

Co'kal shook his head. “The Coven is lost Ki'nuq.” He said softly. “Yuri is worst than her mother and when she returns...”

“Yuri is not returning.” Felisa told him now. “Not now. Not ever.”

Co'kal looked at her. “While I admire your confidence in that statement... it is not true.” He said. “She will return and with her will be Moran. He has never trusted our kind to begin with and...”

“It is true Colonel.” Ki'nuq spoke. “We know things that you do not. Things that have come to light in the last eighteen hours.”

“What things?” Co'kal demanded.

“Things that will ultimately change the face of the High Coven.” The new voice spoke. A deep voice brimming with confidence and command. Co'kal whirled around once more only to see the shadows unwrap from around two individuals. Two towering individuals that he knew instantly could only be Immortals. They were different somehow though, their skin a deep bronze color and both of them with short cropped hair. The bone spikes were prominent on the younger one and just beginning to return to their full length on the other. Co'kal's eyes flew open wide when he realized just who was standing in front of him.

“Cha'talla!” He gasped.

Cha'talla stepped away from Lynom and moved up in front of Co'kal. “It has been a very long time Co'kal my friend. A very long time indeed.”

YDARE

ABANDONED FACTORY 5.6 KILOMETERS OUTSIDE THE CITY PROPER

“...must be careful Toria my love.” Narice said softly as she leaned against Arrarn's chest sitting between his legs as she was. Toria was nestled between her legs as Narice used this down time to brush out her long red hair.

They had arrived here six hours before, sneaking in easily aboard their STRIKER while Cha'talla and the others crammed into the rear of the ship. Deneth, Vollenth and Viera rested on the far side of the massive empty factory sharing a large bone. Twenty-three Immortals and fourteen Lycavorian Shock troops from Androcles's personal Division of Spartans. All of them were scattered about, mingling easily with each other and talking in soft whispers. Every two hours they would switch out their security so that no one became over tired. The HORNET and BISMARCK waited for the signal hidden not far from Uzu Ozeib 7. Closer to the High Coven homeworld than any Union warship had ever been.

"Narice... I will have ten of Cha'talla's men and five Lycavorian Shock Troopers with me." Toria spoke as she turned her head slightly. "I will be fine."

Narice leaned forward and nibbled on her lover and fellow wife's smooth neck. Toria cooed softly in delight and leaned into her attentions. To say this was something Narice never imagined she would discover would be an understatement. She had never been attracted to other women, partly because of the harsh Coven laws preventing such relationships, and partly because she did not really know herself. Meeting Toria on the way to Earth had been the start of finding all she had now. The red haired pureblood was nearly as delicious as Arrarn, and Narice knew she could not live without her now. Neither of them could. She was as much a part of her and Arrarn's life as was the task of breathing. The pleasure they found in each other's arms was blissful, and when they were together with Arrarn it went from blissful to idyllic.

Arrarn Leonidas was younger than both of them, younger than Toria by a much wider margin as she was almost three hundred years old. Narice was six years her husband's senior, yet no matter their differences in age, Arrarn could and did make them both feel like giddy schoolgirls in their bed. His endurance was far beyond what they possessed, his blood tasted like sweet wine and his attentions to them never wavered. He could drive both of them insane with just his fingers and tongue, and had done so on numerous occasions. While Toria was not as proficient within Mindvoice, she and Arrarn had been working with her nearly every day. They wanted her to feel the love they had for her and each other. They wanted her to be part of everything. For her part, Narice could not see herself without both Toria and Arrarn in her life now. Her half Elf, half Lycavorian husband worshiped her and Toria. He had since their first night together. Their wedding ceremony was very small considering when it had taken place, but Arrarn had promised both of them a ceremony in the future that would shame the gods, and they believed him when he said it. They were part of the Leonidas family now, and for Narice and Toria it seemed so very natural. They were accepted without question, called Princess by everyone except family, and looked up to by so many for leaving behind the hateful lives they had come from to embrace their new future.

"No plan, no matter how perfect, survives contact with the enemy." Arrarn said now.

Toria chuckled softly. Arrarn liked to quote his father when he was worried about certain things. "Well... our plan does not require contact with the enemy my husband and wife." Toria quipped at them playfully. "We will be using General Esavorna's intelligence and accessing the computer core's from a remote location. There are no Coven troops nearby."

"That could change quickly Toria." Narice told her.

"Will you two stop worrying about me?" Toria exclaimed. "You are the ones going into the heart of the lion's den. The Ruling Assembly Building? That is far more dangerous than a simple intelligence mission."

Arrarn's powerful arms closed around both of them and he pulled them closer. He leaned forward and buried his face in Narice's black hair and nuzzled the back of her neck. "If we stay on our toes, all of us will be alright." He said softly.

Narice nodded. "Yes we will." She said.

Toria turned slightly so that she could look at Narice. "What do you think of the Intel we received from Andro? About your sister?"

Narice met her eyes. "I don't know. It's hard to picture her with an Immortal. I noticed Pa'cour's over protectiveness through the years but I never gave it much thought. I thought he was just trying to impress my mother. I guess I was wrong."

"And the Command Codes?" Toria asked.

"We'll know soon enough I think." Narice replied. "Will Andro be back in time?" She asked squeezing Arrarn's arm.

"If he hasn't reach Earth he will transmit from the SCIMITAR." Arrarn spoke. "His last burst was..."

"It was amazing." Narice said. "Amazing and wonderful."

Toria nodded. "Yes it was." She stated.

Narice's eyes went to the double doors that they had been using. "Cha'talla is back." She said softly sensing the now powerful Mindvoice resonance of the Immortal General. "He has the Commander of the Ventash'ma with him."

Arrarn nodded. "Let's stick with the plan we have." He said. "This Colonel needs to see that things are different."

Narice chuckled as she leaned back against Arrarn. "Well... we could always just let you turn Toria and I into screaming piles of orgasmic flesh like you usually do. That should work quite well."

Toria nodded with a smile. "Hmmm... yes it would."

Arrarn shook his head. "I've created sex fiends out of both of you." He said.

"Well... if you weren't so extremely well gifted and talented husband... that would not be a problem." Narice spoke boldly.

Arrarn was about to answer when those doors opened and Cha'talla was the first to enter, followed by two Immortals, a pureblood female and finally Lynom. "Time to go to work." He said finally.

Co'kal's eyes could not get any wider as he followed Cha'talla into the long abandoned factory's main production floor. He froze in his spot when he saw the nearly three dozen Immortals and stern faced Lycavorians, not to mention the three very large dragons that rested off to the side. Instinctively his combat senses came alive when he saw the Lycavorians, at least until he realized that many of them sat with Immortals, using each other's bodies as props to lean against and sleep as soldiers in every army did. All of the Immortals present had obviously taken this magical serum he had heard so much about, for their skin was no longer wrinkled and gray colored. Many of them had hair, with beards and mustaches beginning to come in on their faces. Their bone spikes were easily seen, and they had lost none of the size and musculature of the Akruxian people. Co'kal watched as the female elf moved right up to the younger Immortal he now knew as Cha'talla's son and embrace him. Co'kal's eyes were wide as he watched them share a sizzling kiss of love and he realized that she was a half breed female. Half elf and half Lycavorian. And obviously the object of Cha'talla's son's attention.

Cha'talla smiled and remained in front of Co'kal seeing where his eyes were. "They are recently married, my son and As'hia. Their affection for each other is contagious."

Co'kal turned and met Cha'talla's eyes. "What? Cha'talla... what is...?"

"You are three thousand years my senior Co'kal." Cha'talla spoke with some pride in his voice. "You helped to train me when I first joined the ranks of the Ventash'ma Guard. You helped to shape me Co'kal. When I heard you still commanded the Ventash'ma Guard I know I needed to come to you."

"Cha'talla... how did... how did you get back within Coven space without being detected by our planetary defensive system?" Co'kal gasped. "How did... you travel with Lycavorians! No Lycavorian has ever set foot on our homeworld."

Cha'talla shook his head. "This is not our true homeworld." He spoke. "This is the world our people were forced to call home when Veldruk destroyed our original homeworld and turned us into his servants. Many of us have adopted this planet as our home and they will fight to protect it, yet they are treated as second class and sometimes third class citizens. The High Coven is crumbling from within Co'kal. It is destroying itself. We have come to keep that from happening and to place the Coven back on the path to redemption."

"We?" Co'kal asked his eyes widening as he saw the greenish yellow dragon move up behind Cha'talla and settle to the floor of the factory.

Cha'talla nodded and reached up with his hand to stroke the underside of Vollenth's massive snout. "Yes. Veldruk, Aikiro, Moran... they would have been the downfall of the High Coven. We can not allow that to happen." He glanced up at Vollenth. "Meet my Bonded Dragon Brother Vollenth Co'kal."

Co'kal stepped back as that massive head moved closer to him. "You... you are bonded to a dragon!" He gasped. "Like those within the Union?"

Cha'talla nodded his head. "I will not bore you with the details of how that came to be... only that it is." He said. "Recent events have changed our original plans somewhat... and Narice decided to take a different tact. One that I agree with... and one that could potentially save thousands of lives."

“Narice?” Co'kal snorted. “Princess Narice?”

Cha'talla nodded and motioned with his hand. “Come with me old friend. See for yourself.”

Cha'talla led him across the factory floor, Co'kal aware that the huge dragon moved nimbly with them and with confident grace for a creature so large. Co'kal saw her then, sitting between the legs of the powerfully built half elf half Lycavorian male, the stunning red head between her legs. That they sat in such an intimate way, pressed against one another as they were, it made Co'kal uncomfortable. He stopped beside Cha'talla only a meter away from them as Narice and the others rose to their feet. Co'kal recognized the half elf pilot Arrarn Leonidas then and his eyes grew even wider. The rumors were true.

Co'kal dropped to one knee instantly and bowed his head as his training over the last millennia had pounded into him. “Princess Narice!” He hissed softly.

Narice stepped forward to stand in front of him. “Get up Colonel Co'kal.” Narice spoke. “You do not bow to me or to anyone.”

Co'kal lifted his eyes and face as he stood slowly, towering over the daughter of Aikiro. She wore a version of the matte black Mark Four ArmorPly that was the mainstay of the Union forces, with a crimson colored cape dangling from her shoulders that was trimmed in gold. He saw that Arrarn Leonidas and the red haired female also wore similar body armor, and all of them were armed to the teeth. “Princess... I... I have no words. I...”

“You never expected to see me again did you Co'kal?” Narice asked. “Not after Moran and the Ventash'ma declared me a traitor to the Coven.”

“No Princess.” He answered honestly. “No I did not.” He looked at her. “Is it true what they say Princess? That you are now his wife and mate? That you went against your mother and sister?”

Narice nodded. “Yes it's true.” She stated. She turned and looked at Arrarn and Toria for a moment. “When I discovered Toria and then Arrarn... I discovered a different path from the one my mother had us on. A path of my own choosing. I took it. As did my niece Carisia.”

“Then why... why return?” Co'kal asked.

“I am still a vampire Co'kal. I am still a member of the High Coven.” Narice told him. “I do not wish to see the Coven fall.”

“But the... the boy King Androcles... he hates us!” Co'kal protested. “He... after what Aikiro did to his sister... what she ordered. It has the Ventash'ma in an uproar. They fear him more than they fear his father. He is unforgiving!”

Narice nodded. “Yes he is.” She stated.

Arrarn stepped up to Narice now and she took his hand quickly to provide herself with much needed support. “My brother is also not stupid Colonel.” Arrarn spoke. “And he believes strongly in fate and destiny.”

“Destiny?” Co'kal asked.

Arrarn nodded. “Yes.”

“What my Du'ased m'ranndii is saying Co'kal... Androcles believes that the Coven and the Union can coexist. Must coexist.” Narice said. “He believes our futures are intertwined. As do I. That is why we have returned. To take back the Coven.”

“Take back!” Co'kal gasped. “But your sister and Moran... they will...”

Narice held out the data pad to him. “My sister Yuri has renounced all claim to the High Coven seat of power.” She said. “She has decided to follow another path in her life with her Immortal husband.”

“Immortal...” Co'kal nearly shouted as he took the pad and read. His dark eyes grew wide in disbelief. “Pa'cour?” He exclaimed.

“There are many details that I can fill you in on.” Narice said. “I have only one question for you now. We are ready to begin our attack in a few hours... we have the backing of Admiral Pontal and many of his fellow officers. We have the backing of many of the younger generation of my people. We can do this with limited bloodshed as I said... but we are prepared to do it the hard way if needed. You can help us Co'kal. You can help us change history and put the High Coven on a path of good for once in our existence. Freedom for the High Coven means freedom for all Akruian Immortals. Freedom to choose their own paths as Ki'nuq and Felisa have. I do not wish to put it to you this way Co'kal... but you are either with us or against us.”

Co'kal looked at her. “I have... I have known nothing but service to the High Coven.” He spoke softly.

Narice nodded. "And you can still serve the High Coven. Yet you would be free to make your own choices Co'kal. Free to live how you want to live... just as so many of your kind already have decided."

Co'kal looked at Cha'talla. "Then all of it is true?" He asked.

"Look at me Co'kal." Cha'talla said. "Look at my men. We are no longer what Veldruk intended for us. We have recovered our past and how we looked before Veldruk twisted us and our appearance. See for yourself my friend. We are here because we want to be. We are here because Narice and Androcles believe we can change the future of the High Coven. I have no wish to kill you Co'kal... but I will." Cha'talla said. "Join us and grasp onto freedom and the change that freedom can bring."

Co'kal turned back to Narice. His eyes went between her and Arrarn and Toria and then looked all around him at the Immortals and Lycavorians that were intently watching him. He turned back to Narice finally and bowed his head. "Command me Princess." He said with pride bubbling over into his tone and body language. "Command me and we will be victorious."

Narice reached out and touched his arm. He looked up at her quickly. "I will not command you Co'kal. I will ask you." She said. "The future is around the corner... all we have to do is reach out and grab hold."

Co'kal nodded his head without hesitation. "Then let us grab hold and never look back!" He snapped.

ULU ARCHDEMON
BETA QUADRANT VANARI SPACE
ORBITING AUSTROVA

Arduri Re Mydala's faced was frozen in an expression of exquisite bliss, her soft green eyes wide and her full lips quivering in unquenchable pleasure. Her glistening body, a mix of her Alkay and her sweat, sat astride Denali and trembled in breath stealing, near uncontrollable orgasms as they cascaded upon her one after the other while Denali exploded forcefully into her depths. Her hands were braced on his broad chest, her nails digging into his skin as Lisisa's equally naked flesh was pressed against her back and her hands tightly gripping her large, firm breasts while she showered her neck and shoulders with soft, fluttering kisses and sensuous licks of her tongue. Whatever Arduri had been hoping for, whatever she had expected, what had occurred over the last two days had surpassed her expectations a hundred fold.

Her petite blue body had practically drooled her Alkay for the last two days, most of those two days spent in bed with the man and women she now, quite happily called her husband and wife. Their tryst had been everything she had envisioned, Lisisa tasting like a sweet wine as she drank down her passion, and Lisisa equally engulfed in devouring Arduri's many curves in every possible way. This had only become ten times as pleasurable, for her and Lisisa both, when Denali had returned to their quarters and discovered them together. Pleasure that had not stopped for what seemed like hours. Arduri had finally discovered what her mother and sisters had discovered. A passion so intense it made their bodies shiver in endless delight. Denali was the largest man she had ever taken inside her without question, and while it had taken him several minutes to fully bury his enormous cock within her, Arduri had cried out in mindless joy when he finally achieved this goal. His lips had come down on hers, Lisisa's sweet juices already coating her lips and chin, and his kiss had caused her to shudder almost violently in another will breaking orgasm. His kiss alone caused her to feel things that she had never felt before in her life. Arduri was not shy about her sexuality and she thoroughly enjoyed the three Celebrations of the Hundreds that she had attended, but nothing she had experienced during those times had prepared her for the overwhelming ecstasy that had rocked her body for the last thirty-six plus hours.

Arduri knew that her Alkay would have some effect on Deni and Lisisa, but she never imagined it would increase their desire for each other as well as her. Denali was a machine, taking both Lisisa and her to heights of pleasure that had them screaming his name almost continuously. They had experimented with positions that Arduri had never even thought of, and no matter whether he was thrusting into Arduri or Lisisa, the other was never forgotten or left out. Whether she exploded upon Lisisa's talented tongue, or she drank from Lisisa's passion, it didn't matter. They had lavished Denali with attention, smiling at each other as he twisted and squirmed under their ministrations until he was exploding and they both shared his essence greedily. Arduri also experienced the sensation of their feelings and desire for her within her mind. They had established a Mindvoice connection with her, igniting the dormant power within her just as Andro had done with Caliria. Feeling the love and want and need for her had almost brought Arduri to tears, and when they felt her emotions pour out to them, this all but sealed their union together. Like Lisisa, Arduri would never desire another man in her lifetime she knew. She had found the perfect man... and the perfect woman as far as she was concerned. Their union together felt so right and guided by the Prophets, and this is what Arduri grasped onto and squeezed with all that she was. Any thoughts of Cruor were washed away within the first hours, until all that remained was her desire and need for Deni and Lisisa.

Arduri collapsed upon Deni's chest finally, her breathing coming in ragged gasps as her racing heart began to try and find some normal beating. Her silver blond hair splayed across his chest and shoulders and mixed with Lisisa's raven locks as she settled to the bed beside them chuckling softly.

Lisisa had feared what Denali might do when he discovered them together. He had not seemed to be as interested in Arduri as she was. Lisisa should have know better she told herself. Deni wanted Arduri just as badly as she did, he was just better at hiding these desires. Until he had discovered them locked in a blistering position of mutual pleasure on their bed, their bodies already saturated with sweat and Arduri's Alkay, and their tongues working furiously. Then Denali's Alpha Wolf presence took over. Their scents, mixed together as they were now, they had driven him into a frenzy almost. He had been out of his clothes and upon them before they knew what was happening. It was Lisisa's scream of divine penetration that had told them the male they both wanted so badly had arrived. As Deni drove into her with dominating strokes, Arduri's talented tongue had whipped them both into glorious release so very quickly. And without softening even a little, Deni had taken Arduri next. Only Lisisa's glistening mound and stiff clit descending on her lips had ceased Arduri's screams of bliss as Deni took her that first time.

As Arduri shifted her hips on Deni's lap, his immense cock beginning to soften within the confines of her warmth and tightness, Arduri joined in Lisisa's chuckling. Followed quickly by Deni as one arm wrapped around Arduri's waist to grip her firm ass and the other dropped to Lisisa's naked hip.

"By... by the Prophets!" Arduri gasped as she lifted her head to look at them. "They should never have given us the additional twelve hours."

Lisisa laughed heartily now and leaned forward to kiss her, Arduri willing accepting her delicious lips and tasting herself on Lisisa's tongue. "If only they knew what we have been doing with that extra time!" Lisisa gasped as she pulled away.

"I can't... I can't get in trouble for this can I?" Deni asked.

"In trouble for what Denali? Making us quiver in your arms." Arduri asked him playfully as she extended her tongue and lick the moistness from his chin and neck.

"Your... your father is not going to be happy." Deni said. "He's not going to be happy that I have made you my wife and mate. Our wife and mate."

Arduri's soft green eyes shown in brilliance at his words and she kissed him hard, her large breasts crushed against his chest. Lisisa leaned forward and soon there were three tongues dancing with each other in a most intimate way.

"I do not care what he or anyone says!" Arduri finally said. "I am... I am so blissfully happy with both of you. Knowing that both of you will be in my life for the rest of eternity."

Lisisa pressed her forehead to Arduri's. "No less than we are happy." She said. "Happy that we have found you and what we can share together."

Arduri looked at Deni and he smiled. "Should I show you again how happy we are?" He asked.

Arduri groaned in delight when he flexed his soft but still huge cock within her. "No! No more!" She gasped. "I... I have no more Alkay to secrete! I am spent."

Denali rolled over bringing Arduri with him until she was positioned between him and Lisisa. He caught Lisisa's lips in a sizzling kiss before he slowly withdrew himself from Arduri and heard her gasp in disappointment. They dropped to the bed on either side of her and their arms reached around her blue body to squeeze her tight between them.

"Then we will rest." Deni said. "We still have five hours until we have to meet Ardan."

"Sleep would be good." Lisisa said.

"Hmmm... sleep." Arduri cooed. "Yes... sleep."

A silent message of love and commitment passed between Denali and Lisisa before they laid their heads on either side of Arduri's and let sleep take them into its soothing embrace.

"...look tired Arduri." Coren spoke as he stepped up next to her where she sat beside Lisisa on the STRIKER as they flew through the atmosphere towards the landing pad Ardan had told them he would meet them at.

Arduri looked up at her father and smiled. "I am fine father... really." She stated with a neutral voice. She glanced quickly over to Caliria who was also watching her with knowing eyes. Caliria didn't smile however and simply went back to reading her data pad. Arduri looked back to her father. "I'm fine." She stated again.

"Arduri... Cruor will be at the pad." Coren spoke. "Apparently... apparently Ardan took it upon himself to inform Eyon Ahn Vernalo that all marriage contracts will be put on hold until such time as we have greeted the Lycavorian representatives and established a dialogue."

"Good for him." Arduri said.

"I do not wish a confrontation in front of the Regents who will be waiting with Ardan." Coren spoke. "Ardan should have let me explain to Eyon what is going on and not spoken with him about this."

"Cruor knows?" Arduri asked.

"I imagine so... yes." Coren answered.

"Then he should not approach me." Arduri said. "I am... I am not going to change my mind father. Not now. Not ever. And there is nothing anyone can do about it."

"I know you are not." Coren spoke softly causing Arduri to look up at him from her seat with surprise in her eyes.

"You... you are not going to try and convince me otherwise?" Arduri asked.

Coren shook his head. "I have found that my children have little use for what I say lately and much of it is my own fault." He told her. "All I ask is that you use tact in dealing with him in front of the other Regents."

"Will he attempt to make a scene?" Lisisa asked softly looking at Coren.

Coren could tell just from the flush of his daughter's skin and how close she sat to Lisisa Leonidas that they had been together. And if they had been together, then Coren had no doubts that Denali Leonidas had been with them. He was not a fool, and while on Earth he had done much research on the Lycavorian people as a whole as well as their customs. If Denali Leonidas had claimed his daughter as Coren thought, he would not hesitate to strike down any man who tried to force their hand with Arduri. That would not go over well considering what they were going to try and discover. He and Caliria had been working non-stop for the last day and a half, most of it with Dutkne, to determine what their path would be. Over the course of the last thirty-six hours he had discovered much about the Lycavorian people from Dutkne. Much he had never taken the time to learn because of how he felt about them. There was no mistaking the violent anger in Dutkne's eyes when they spoke of those members of the Protectorate who had to be working with the OSG in kidnapping and enslaving Vanari females.

He also noticed how Dutkne treated Caliria as well, almost as if she was royalty, and Coren knew well why. His oldest daughter was torn. Torn between what her heart told her and torn between what her mind told her. Her soul was troubled and filled with disquiet. And it was Coren's fault he knew. He had found her absently stroking the glittering blood red pendant around her neck all of the time now, her eyes far away as if she was remembering things and her face relaxed and almost at peace. However whenever she stopped stroking that pendant and turned to do something, her face became drawn and empty. Coren knew what the significance of the pendant she wore meant for he had questioned Dutkne about it. This only served to strip away another layer of the distrust and hate he felt for the Lycavorian people as a whole. What Androcles had given him; it was the means to insure there would never be peace and helpful cooperation between their peoples. It was also the means to insure that the Lycavorians and the Vanari people became irrefutable allies. Androcles had left it up to him.

Coren turned to Lisisa Leonidas and shook his head slowly. "I do not know." He told her honestly. "He is brash and arrogant and has been known to publicly demean others, but his father is important and holds much sway over others. It could be embarrassing for him to try something now."

“There is a way to make sure nothing happens.” Lisisa said. “Aside from talking that is.”

Coren looked at her. “Yes.”

“Your people have designated a place for Jeth and Aradace to stay?” Lisisa asked.

Coren nodded. “It is the same estate we use for visiting dignitaries yes. There is a large storage facility next to the main compound where you will be staying and that has been made ready for them.”

“Let them go with Arduri and she can be the one to show them where it is.” Lisisa said.

Coren looked at her for a moment. The Vanari were still largely unaware of the existence of dragons, and seeing the two dragons that would exit the ship with Denali and Lisisa would be a first. It would also serve as quite the dampener on anything Cruor might attempt and was a very discrete action as well. He nodded his head at her. “That would certainly do the trick.” He said.

“I do not want to leave you or Denali.” Arduri said forcefully.

Coren watched as Lisisa reached out and took her hand, bringing it to her lips and kissing her knuckles. “And you won’t.” She stated affectionately. “Deni would never allow that... and nor will I. I assume though that we will be needed to speak with Ardan and the others alone?” She asked looking at Coren.

Coren nodded. “After the initial greeting takes place yes.”

“And no one else will be allowed?” Lisisa said.

“Just you and your security and members of the SBR.” Coren replied.

Lisisa nodded. “Then you can go with Jeth and Aradace.” She spoke looking at Arduri. “When we return... you can show us around your city. If I know Deni he will be anxious to sample all of your food.” She finished with a smile.

Arduri nodded and smiled. “I know of two very good places I will take you.” She said.

Coren saw the brightness in his daughter’s face when she spoke to Lisisa and he felt another of those multiply layers being stripped away once more. “Then it is settled.” He said.

Arduri turned back to him. “Yes.”

Coren hid his sigh of relief for he knew how stubborn his daughters were turning out to be. They were taking after their mother in almost every way. Naesta did not even want to talk with him before he left and in many ways that showed him how far he had fallen in their eyes. He nodded his head too Lisisa in silent thanks and then turned to move back to his seat beside Caliria.

“There!” Dutkne pointed to the massive windowed building that was stretched out over the river three thousand feet below them. “That is the Vanari Regents Building.” He told Denali who stood next to him in the cockpit.

Deni whistled softly. “Impressive.” He said.

Dutkne nodded his head. “Say what you will... but when it comes to modern architecture, the Vanari are the best.” He looked at Deni with a smile. “Though from what I saw of Eden City... the elves and humans of Earth are not far off.”

“You’ve spent a lot of time with Coren Re Mydala these last hours.” Deni spoke looking at him.

Dutkne nodded. “You and Lisisa got the better looking Re Mydala though.” He said with a smile. “Is that as serious as it appears?”

Deni didn’t hesitate. “Yes.” He answered him confidently. “It’s not something I had ever envisioned. Lisisa saw it before me... she usually does... but it’s serious now. Very serious.”

Dutkne nodded. “Good.” He said.

“And Coren?” Deni asked.

Dutkne shrugged his broad shoulders. “Hard to tell right now.” He replied. “You saw the message Andro left for him?”

Deni nodded. “Andro doesn’t hide things from me. From any of us. You should know that as his Val’istar.”

Dutkne rolled his eyes at that. “Please... let’s not go there.” He stated with a grin. “Coren doesn’t know what to make of it. He sees that his ex-wife and all of his children have taken up with members of a species he has despised for centuries, but Andro's message to him... putting the future of our relations in his hands... that threw him for a very large loop."

Denali nodded his head. "I'm sure." He said. "Was it wise to do that though Dutkne?"

Dutkne looked at him. "I didn't think so at first... Andro insisted. He has a sense for people that staggers my ability to comprehend. I've heard your father is similar."

Deni nodded. "True."

Dutkne nodded. "Coren Re Mydala is a politician through and through." He said. "But he is one of the best. He didn't make it to the SBR because of his good looks I'll tell you. His family has something to do with his rise to power, but he is very good at what he does or they would never have appointed him to the Senior Board of Regents. He's shrewd and when he is thinking straight... he's downright devious."

"You think we have something to worry about with him?" Denali asked. "He can raise the Vanari against Lycavorians and all this could come crashing down around us you know."

Dutkne nodded. "He could... but I don't think he will. He and Caliria have been working for the last thirty-six hours to try and determine whom and how many of the Vanari may be involved in this little slave trade thing they got going. If it infects the top tier of the Vanari, it could be a reason why we have not become better allies before now."

"We are not allies just yet." Deni said.

"No... that will be up to you and Lisisa." Dutkne said. "I'm only along on this ride to find the traitors within my our people and make them pay. And help Coren and Caliria find what they need too to bring this slavery thing to an end."

"If the OSG are as insinuated into the Vanari government as deeply as Andro suspects, we could find ourselves in a bit of a bind." Deni spoke.

Dutkne nodded. "We'll know shortly after our private meeting with the Regents how deeply the OSG are involved." He said. "What you will tell them at that meeting will determine how quickly they try to come after us or discredit us." Dutkne looked at him. "Coren's security is in place?"

Deni nodded. "They went down when we first arrived. The additional twelve hours that Ardan asked to prepare was a blessing."

Dutkne nodded. "It could also be a curse." He said. "Ardan's family and the Re Mydala family have been intertwined deeply for hundreds, if not thousands of years. I don't know how Coren feels about Ardan possibly being the biggest traitor of them all."

"I guess we are going to find out rather soon." Denali asked.

Dutkne nodded. "Yes we are."

VANARI BOARD OF REGENTS ASSEMBLY BUILDING CITY OF MYDALA NORTHEAST LANDING PAD

To say that the six Vanari Regents and three other political figures that stood with Ardan on the landing pad were intimidated would have been an understatement.

When Denali and Lisisa exited the STRIKER DT down the ramp with Jeth and Aradace behind them and Arduri between them, all six men and three women took large steps backwards with huge eyes. Ardan had warned them. He had warned them of how this new branch of the Lycavorian people were and of the huge dragons that they fought with. Even in their ancient lore, nothing in Vanari history came close to the two massive beasts that exited the STRIKER DT. The female Regent closest to Ardan reached for his arm.

"Ardan?" She gasped.

Ardan looked at her. "I did tell you Ella." He spoke quickly.

"They... they are so large!" Ella Ra Shaiel stammered her dark green eyes wide in both fear and disbelief.

Ardan nodded. "Yes they are... and they understand everything we say." He spoke.

“These... these beasts are that intelligent?” The tall and well dressed man asked. He was not a Vanari but the leader and delegate to a species that were very similar to the Lycavorians in both appearance and genetic history.

“Yes.” Ardan spoke. “I have seen it myself. They fight beside the men and women who ride them. It is frightening to say the least.”

The Rothryn people were actually an offshoot of the Lycavorian people that were known to the Protectorate. They were a Caste based society that had the same basic genetic structure as Lycavorians but were unable to shift their forms. They had the heightened senses and healing systems, the same endurance and reflexes, almost the exact same makeup as the Lycavorian people. For all intents and purposes they were Lycavorians who could not transform into the wolves that they were meant to be. They were not so much an insular society as they were an introverted one. Their technology was very modern, yet they chose to remain reclusive in their dealings with other species. They traded with the Vanari people on a regular basis and even had an embassy on Austrova, and relations between them were very open and friendly.

Dutkne had never been able to figure out what exactly the Vanari saw in the Rothryn people that they did not see in the Lycavorian people and his eyes narrowed as he came down the ramp of the STRIKER and saw them standing among the Vanari Regents. He recognized two of the additional regents right away, both of them men who were close friends with Ardan and Coren. He didn't recognize the third man or the female Regent. He didn't hasten to catch up with Denali who was whispering to Lisisa and Arduri as they walked towards the group, but he reached out to Denali within Mindvoice. He knew Denali must have scented the Rothryn people right away and he was asking her about them.

[They are called Rothryn.] Dutkne spoke calmly.

Deni didn't look back but did slow his gait somewhat as he included both Lisisa and Arduri within the connection Dutkne had established. [They are Lycavorians!] Deni exclaimed. [I can smell them from here Dutkne!]

[They are an offshoot of our people yes.] Dutkne answered. [They occupy a rather large caste like society on the Vanari border.]

[You didn't tell us this Dutkne.] Lisisa spoke.

[I did not think they would be here.] He answered. [As I said... they are a caste society and do not often associate with other species. They keep to themselves for the most part.]

[What are they like?] Deni asked.

[Their people are proud and capable. I believe they are broken into three different castes or cultures. Nobles, warriors and then workers. The workers are the lowest caste but if our intelligence is accurate the Rothryn have no poverty or unskilled men or women. The castes do not usually associate between each other. It's almost as if all of them know what their status in life is and they accept it. They have trading agreements with the Vanari and other governments within the quadrant, but you do not often see them outside their own space. Their military is very well trained and equipped though not large in comparison to the Union or even the Vanari for that matter. They have an embassy here... but since they have never shown an interest in dealing with the Protectorate I never saw the reason to reach out to them. They don't seem to like us very much and even though I have offered to open communications they have rebuked them.]

[Why?] Deni asked.

[They are nearly a perfect genetic match to our people... but they can not shift their forms as we can.] Dutkne answered. [I have always been of the mind that they resent us for this fact because in all reality they are Lycavorians as you said Deni. I am surprised that they are here to be honest. They have never shown much of an interest in the Protectorate. I don't understand why Ardan would invite them.]

[Smoke screen.] Deni answered.

[What do you mean?] Dutkne asked.

[To keep our attention focused somewhere else.] Deni explained.

[He reveals to these Rothryn that we are Lycavorians in the hopes that it will divert our attention from what our real goal is in coming here.] Lisisa said.

[You think he has involved them in what he is doing?] Dutkne asked.

[Possibly... but more than likely it is simply to keep us occupied.] Deni spoke.

[Well... the man to Ardan's left is the leader of the Rothryn. His name is Praetor Dyack. The two others beside him are his sons Kelelm and Anroth. Once again if our Intel is accurate, Dyack has been in power for the last seven hundred and fifty years. Elections are held every hundred years for Praetor, and he has won all seven with very clear majorities.] Dutkne spoke. [Aside from that we know very little.]

[I guess we will be finding out then.] Denali spoke.

Their conversation ended as Deni stepped up to Ardan who held out his arms for him.

“Ah... welcome to Austrova Denali Leonidas.” Ardan exclaimed taking his arms.

“It is truly an honor to be here Regent Vu Lamurrion.” Deni spoke bowing his head slightly in respect. It was an action that everyone present saw. Denali quickly stepped to the side and drew Lisisa closer with his hand. “My mate and wife Lisisa.” He spoke.

Ardan knew of her of course and he took her arms as well. “It is my distinct hope that we are able to forge a friendship in the next days and weeks Princess.”

Lisisa smiled and also bowed her head slightly. “That is ours as well.”

Ardan smiled and turned to the others behind him. “Please... allow me to introduce you.” He spoke motioning to the other Regents. “I present Regent Litra Vhn Dastle our Regent of Finance.”

Deni and Lisisa both bowed their head slightly and greeted the man with handshakes. Ardan introduced them to all of the Vanari Regents present, the Regent of Defense, the Regent of State Matters and the Regent of Law among them. When he turned to introduce them to the Rothryn representatives Denali got a good look at this Dyack person. He appeared to be several thousand years old at least, with wavy dark brown hair touched by gray. His face appeared very relaxed but his eyes held wisdom and calculating knowledge in them.

“Allow me to introduce Praetor Dyack of the Rothryn Republic.” Ardan said. “And his two sons Anroth and Kelelm”

Denali looked at the man as he held out his hand. “An honor sir.” He spoke cautiously.

Dyack took the offered hand and nodded. “For us as well.” He answered.

“You are Lycavorian!” Deni said quickly. He saw the look of irritation on Dyack's face very briefly before it was gone. A look of irritation that remained on the face of the youngest son Anroth but did not make it to the oldest son Kelelm. Ardan's face had also taken on a worried expression but it quickly passed when Dyack shook his head and he smiled a warm smile.

“From a medical standpoint we are genetically the same as Lycavorians.” Dyack explained to him. “However we do not have the wondrous ability to shift our forms as you do. We have called ourselves Rothryn as long as our history books go back. We are proud of that name.”

Denali caught the tension and shifted tact quickly. “As well you should be sir.” He spoke seeing Dyack relax even more at his words. He squeezed Lisisa's hand. “My wife and mate Lisisa.” He spoke.

It was the youngest son who stepped forward. “Your scent is not fully Lycavorian.” He spoke in an almost accusatory tone.

“Anroth!” Dyack hissed softly.

Lisisa smiled. “It is alright.” She said. “And you are correct. I'm half vampire.” Lisisa told them. “However my Lycavorian blood is more dominant.”

“We... we were under the impression your branch of Lycavorians hated vampires.” The oldest son Kelelm spoke now. “Your own Val'istar gave us history books that relate the history of this High Coven. This vampire empire and how you were enslaved by them for millennia. We were under the impression this war was still going on.”

Denali nodded his head. “It has not been much of a war for the last thousand years.” He stated. “And there are millions of vampires who call the Union home and have for centuries. They are honored and welcome members of the Union.”

Kelelm's face squinted a bit and he nodded. “This is interesting.” He spoke softly.

“You are the oldest of your father's sons then? The Crown Prince.” Dyack asked. “We express our sincere condolences for the loss of your father. Regent Vu Lamurrion has told us he was considered a great leader of men.”

Deni glanced quickly at Lisisa before nodding his head. Ardan had not revealed that their father still lived. This was interesting. “Thank you for your words sir. But I am not the oldest son and thankfully I'm not the Crown Prince either! I wouldn't want that job for anything.” He spoke trying to be humorous.

Dyack and his sons looked semi confused and Ardan stepped in. “Androcles is the oldest of the Union King’s sons. The Crown Prince. Denali is the second pureblood son of the King and his Lycavorian wife.”

“So you are a vanguard Prince Denali Leonidas?” Dyack asked with a smile. “Your brother’s eyes?”

Denali shrugged. “I prefer my own eyes sir.” He spoke. “I have come because Androcles is busy with matters concerning our people. He plans right now to come here in seven or eight weeks. It is at that time we will formally dissolve the Protectorate and merge them into the Union.”

Dyack looked genuinely surprised at this and he glanced at his sons quickly. “We were not aware of this.” He said finally turning back to Deni.

Denali shook his head. “Most people outside of the Protectorate aren’t aware of it. Not yet anyway. That is why I am here in a sense.” He said. “It is also the main reason Dutkne has returned with us now. As my brother’s Val’istar... he will insure the transition goes smoothly.”

“So you are expanding into the Beta Quadrant?” Anroth asked in a low voice. A voice filled with open distrust now.

Denali looked at him. They were of the same height and basic build, but Denali’s frame was much more muscular while Anroth’s build was leaner and spoke of great speed. “We are rejoining with our people.” Denali answered. “People that were separated from us after the Black Day.”

Kelelm nodded. “Yes... the day these vampires conquered your people.” He said. “Your history books say billions lost their lives during this time. Yet you persevered. An honorable trait.”

“The Rothryn have never been conquered!” Anroth spoke arrogantly and it was Lisisa who looked at him now.

“Perhaps the right force of people have just not come along yet.” She stated plainly.

All of them looked surprised at her statement and Anroth glared at her. Dyack quickly moved closer to Denali. “Prince Leonidas... I officially ask for you to attend a dinner at our embassy. Perhaps when you have a free moment from your dealings with the Vanari.” His invitation sounded very sincere.

Denali nodded his head. “I would like that sir.” He said. “We...”

Denali! Aradace’s voice echoed within his mind unshielded.

Dyack and the his sons easily heard the word within Mindvoice and they watched as Deni and Lisisa both turned to look behind them at the bluish scaled beast and the even larger dark purple scaled monster.

It is alright sister. Deni spoke. Calnamarno will go with you and Jeth. Lisi and I will join you later.

Be mindful Deni. Jeth’s deeper voice spoke now as they saw Arduri scrambling up into the saddle on his back fearlessly. It... it smells funny here.

We will be brother. Lisisa spoke. Speak shielded from now on as well.

Dyack looked at the back of her head when she said that and then suddenly the words vanished from his mind, though the Mindvoice tremors remained quite strongly. They were blocking his ability to listen to their conversation.

[You suspect something?] Aradace asked.

[These Lycavorians... or Rothryn. They can Mindvoice and there is no reason to let them hear what we are saying.] Denali spoke. [We will join you in a few hours. And make sure that fool does not bother Calnamarno.]

[Ah... I will handle Cruor.] Arduri echoed playfully.

Denali and Lisisa both smiled as they watched Arduri point in an easterly direction and then both Jeth and Aradace exploded into the skies above Mydala. The first dragons to ever do so. They turned back to see Dyack and his sons watching them intently.

Dyack looked at Deni. “You call... you call them... dragons.” He said. “They are... they are beasts but you refer to them as brother and sister. Why?”

It was Lisisa who responded and her sharp tongue stunned all of the Rothryn. “Where we come from sir... it is considered exceptionally rude to invade on the surface thoughts of another person.”

Anroth stepped forward and opened his mouth to speak harshly but Dyack held up his hand. “No!” He hissed softly. “The Princess is correct.” He stated. “Our apologies to both of you. Our abilities within Mindvoice are a natural thing to us and we sometimes can not control it.”

Lisisa stared at him for a long moment knowing that the lie was buried within rhetoric. She glanced at Deni and shook her head minutely. She saw him slowly unclench his right fist and the soft bluish light vanished quickly. Denali turned to look at Dyack. “They are not beasts sir!” He spoke firmly. “They are sentient lifeforms who are far more intelligent than many others we have met in the past. They speak only within Mindvoice and we call them brother and sister because we are bonded to them within Mindvoice.”

Dyack looked at him oddly. “Bonded?” He asked. “What do you mean?”

Ardan had been standing there watching the exchange and now he took the time to step forward and intervene. “Perhaps that conversation is best left for when the Prince and Princess meet with you for dinner Praetor Dyack. We have much to do.”

Dyack looked at Ardan and nodded. “Of course Regent... forgive me.” He turned back to Denali. “Say three nights from now. The Rothryn embassy? Or would you prefer on your ship perhaps? I understand she is beautiful.”

“Your embassy is fine sir.” Denali replied. “The ARCH DEMON is... she is not prepared to meet visitors.”

Dyack nodded his head and bowed slightly. “An honor it is to meet you then and I look forward to three days from now.”

Deni nodded as Ardan took his and Lisisa’s arms and began to lead them away. Anroth and Kelelm moved closer to their father as they watched them leave the landing pad.

“They blocked me father.” Kelelm spoke softly. “They shut me out of their conversation with the... those dragons.”

Dyack nodded. “Me as well.” He stated.

“You?” Anroth asked with surprise.

Dyack nodded his head slowly. “It appears their Mindvoice capabilities are far in excess of what we first thought. Even more so than those within the Protectorate. Those Lycavorians within the Protectorate can shield their thoughts from us when they speak but not with such devastating efficiency as these members of the Union it seems.”

“What did they mean they are Bonded to those dragons?” Kelelm asked.

“I do not know... but it will be very interesting to try and discover this.” Dyack said.

“She needs to show more respect to her betters!” Anroth hissed softly.

“She is a Princess Anroth.” Dyack answered him calmly. “While we treasure our wives and mates, I am beginning to think that perhaps those within this Lycavorian Union allow their women to partake of many more things than we do. They have many more options in their lives it appears.”

“Our wives and mates are our strength father.” Kelelm said. “Why would we risk them in other endeavors?”

“We do not... but I believe this Lycavorian Union does. And I don’t believe it is a risk to them.” He stated. He turned to Anroth. “Do not ever again attempt to raise your voice harshly to a female Anroth! Especially one that is obviously mated to another! I have told you about this before! You cling to ideas and history that you learned in school that is no longer accepted among our people! It needs to end! And you assume too much by saying you are her better!”

Anroth dropped his eyes. “I am used to our females being more respectful father.” He said. “And there are many who still honor the old ways.”

“They are respectful because we treat them with respect and we honor them. They are our future Anroth!” Dyack said. “I have not spent the last two hundred and fifty years trying to garner support in our Parliament for more rights for our females only to see you resort to the type of action that many of our older males cling to. This is not how things will be! You will act as I expect you to act or you will no longer take part in political matters!”

“I do not share your sentiment father.” Anroth spoke firmly. “We are stronger than the other packs because of you and what you have done, but you push us too fast towards a future many do not want.”

“I know you do not agree with me... but while I am Praetor you will act in a civilized manner! And if we do not push for change in our future we will become stagnant and never advanced past what we have achieved. I will drag the other packs into the future snarling and biting if I have too! I will not allow them to send us cascading backwards!” Dyack snapped at him harshly. “These Lycavorians are obviously very different in some ways from those within the Protectorate Anroth. And it appears that some of them at least are far more advanced in Mindvoice skills than we were led to believe.”

“Physical manifestation of Mindvoice power.” Kelelm said softly.

Dyack looked at his oldest son quickly. “You saw it as well?”

Kelelm nodded. “He kept it well hidden but I caught the fingers of it as he released it.” He answered. “Soft blue color around his hand. And his mate kept him from unleashing it. Did you see her nod?”

Dyack nodded as well. “Yes. She has a great influence over him. Just as your mother does with me. A sign of a strong and powerful connection and union.”

“Saw what?” Anroth asked. “What did you see?”

Dyack turned back to look at Denali and Lisisa as they walked with the Vanari Regents. “Something I have sought to obtain for many generations. It is the reason why I have pushed our people to expand their MV abilities and truly work on them.” He said softly. “The physical manifestation of Mindvoice power. The ability to use it as a tool or a weapon.”

Kelelm nodded. “He was about to hit you brother.” Kelelm spoke. “Hit you with this very thing had you uttered a sound of disrespect towards his mate. I could see it in his eyes.”

“It appears this branch of our people have this ability.” Dyack spoke. “To what extent we will need to find out.”

“That won’t be easy father. And it may well be dangerous and backfire on us.” Kelelm said.

Dyack shook his head. “No it won’t be easy. But it may be the only way to insure the survival of our people and keep them from falling back into the barbaric dredges of our past.” Dyack said. Dyack turned to his oldest son. “Discover what you are able about this brother Androcles through our Vanari contacts Kelelm. Be discrete. He is obviously the power of their throne now and it is he who we will need to deal with. The better impression we make on this Denali when he comes for dinner, the better our chances of succeeding, for he will surely pass this information on to this Androcles.”

Kelelm nodded. “Very well.”

“And contact your sisters as well. Have them join us here.” Dyack said.

“Why?” Anroth asked quickly. “We should just take one of them and discover what we want by interrogation and experimentation.”

“Your sisters have never left our homeworld and now would be a good time to make that happen.” Dyack said looking at him. “And both of them are far stronger within Mindvoice than you my son. And far more subtle as you have just proven. We have only just met them and you wish to take prisoners and resort to methods that are brutal and unnecessary.”

“They are methods that work father.” Anroth spoke. “We have done it with those fools from the Protectorate.”

“I did not authorize that!” Dyack hissed savagely as he whirled on his son. “That was Barnak’s doing! And what did he achieve? Nothing!”

“He uses proven methods father.” Anroth spoke. “The subjects were injured and he pushed them too far before allowing them to heal. He won’t make the same mistake again.”

“I will not let him!” Dyack snarled. “His methods are not methods I will tolerate! There are always better ways!” Dyack turned away from Anroth before his anger truly built. “I will talk with Regent Ra Shaiel and get her permission for your mother to show your sisters around the city with an escort of course. I want them present for the dinner also. Their latent abilities in Mindvoice may serve us better in discovering what we need. We will do this my way while I am Praetor. We need allies... not enemies. We have enough of those within our own people.”

VANARI BOARD OF REGENTS ASSEMBLY BUILDING SENIOR BOARD OF REGENTS PRIVATE CHAMBERS

Denali was much like his brothers and father. He did not have much use for the meetings and squabbling of life long politicians. It was only Lisisa’s soothing aura that kept him from fidgeting frequently in his chair and looking bored and uninterested. Her slim hand rested on the top of his on the table, her long fingers stroking his knuckles and allowing her female aura and MV resonance to filter through their physical contact. It had been her mother Aricia who had shown her how to manipulate her aura in this way after she and Deni had announced their love and union to everyone. It was something she was teaching Arduri to do within Mindvoice since she did not have the same female aura as a wolf. Some people would have called it a form of control... but to Lycavorians it was a sign of the commitment and love between mates.

The half dozen Regents at the table with Ardan and Coren were going over the large amount of Intelligence and information that Denali had given them. It was not all there Deni and Lisisa both knew... as did Coren Re Mydala... but it was enough to get a general reaction from the Vanari people as a whole. After a full thirty-seven minutes by Denali's estimate one of them men looked up at where he sat between Lisisa and Dutkne.

"This... this information is astounding to say the least Prince Denali." He stated in a neutral tone of voice.

Deni nodded. "Yes I imagine it is Regent Nejesh." He spoke.

"Astounding is not the word I would use Yithal Ashr Nejesh." The second man spoke. "May we ask how you obtained it?" Alrerin Sha Harael asked from his chair at the head of the table.

Denali looked at him. Dutkne had informed him that this was the senior Vanari Regent on the entire planet and the head of the SBR. His influence was wide ranging and powerful among the Vanari people. He was considered an icon in their history and was one of the oldest Vanari alive in their empire.

"Some of it was obtained through the OSG agent that we captured and some of it came from data banks within the base my brother destroyed." Denali answered. "The rest came from different sources that our Krypteria Intelligence discovered."

"So this came from an OSG agent who was desperate to save her life. A mercenary base within your quadrant of space that was selling our females and an Intelligence Agency that we know nothing about." Alrerin spoke.

Deni was about to reply when Dutkne leaned forward. "The Intelligence is very accurate Regent Sha Harael." He spoke.

"So you say Director General Dutkne." Alrerin spoke. "Vanari Intelligence has never presented any of this information to us."

"Perhaps Vanari Intelligence was told not too." Dutkne said.

"You sit there and accuse us?" Nejesh hissed at him. "You, who kidnapped and then facilitated one of our Regents and three of our Cadre Commandos in disobeying our laws!"

"I accuse no one Regent Nejesh." Dutkne answered. "The data is there in front of you. As for kidnapping Regent Re Mydala and her daughters... that is not true regardless of what you have been told or believe. They would have gone to the Alpha Quadrant regardless and I think Regent Vu Lamurion and Regent Re Mydala will both concur based on what they saw that our actions kept them safe."

"They were breaking our laws." Alrerin spoke more calmly. "They were doing so with full knowledge of their actions. Coren and Ardan were acting to bring them back and keep our people safe!"

"What they were doing was not my concern." Dutkne told him. "I took them aboard the TALON OF JUSTICE because I knew what they were going into and I did not want to see them come to harm. Or is that so hard to believe? That a Lycavorian did not want harm to come to a Vanari?"

Alrerin stood up. "And yet only one of them returned to face punishment for their actions in this matter." He spoke.

Denali folded his arms across his broad chest and his words left Lisisa brimming with pride and happiness. "Arduri Re Mydala returned for only one reason and that was to void out the contract of marriage that she entered into with Cruor Ahn Vernalo per your own laws. She is my wife and mate now and she will not be punished for anything."

"And now you dictate to us what we will do?" Nejesh snapped.

"If need be... I will send her back to my ship and that is where she will remain." Denali told him. "Unless free choice for your females is not something that you allow anymore!"

"Your own reports here indicate that Devra Re Mydala allowed herself to become wife to one of your Durcunusaan soldiers." Ella Ra Shaiel spoke now. "And Naesta Re Mydala refused to return for similar reasons because of a Lycavorian and one of your mother's sisters! This board was already aware of Nirilo Re Mydala and his relationship with a Lycavorian woman from the Protectorate. Are we suppose to believe the Lycavorians had nothing to do with this?"

Deni nodded. "Staying behind was their choice. No one forced them." He said sitting back in his chair. "I guess they found something that they wanted more than returning here."

"How do we know that?" Yithal barked.

"Are you accusing us of keeping them against their will sir?" Deni asked.

Ardan held up his hands. "Please... everyone. This is not productive!"

"I came here as a representative of my brother and the Lycavorian Union." Denali spoke more calmly than Lisisa realized he could. "I did not come here to be accused of acts with which we had no involvement in."

"We thank you for rescuing our females." Alrerin spoke. "And allowing Ardan to return them to their families... but this does not excuse what has happened."

Deni looked at him. "What exactly has happened?" He asked.

"The very information you gave to us implicates your people in the kidnapping and trafficking of Vanari females." Nejesh snapped.

Deni turned his head and looked at Dutkne wide eyed. "This is a joke right?" He asked.

Dutkne shrugged. "I did warn you and Androcles both." He said.

Denali turned back to Regent Nejesh. "That intelligence implicates the Vanari as well!" He snapped.

"None of what you have presented to us is proves complicity by those within the Vanari Empire." Nejesh spoke. "Vanari Intelligence has never brought this type of information to us nor have they even raised the remote possibility it could be true. This information has however confirmed what our Intelligence has suspected in the past... and that is Lycavorian assistance of the OSG."

"Elements within the Protectorate yes..." Dutkne hissed. "Not our people as a whole."

"You are all Lycavorians are you not?" Ella asked calmly. "All the information we have indicates that the branch of your people that Prince Leonidas comes from is even more violent than your own General Director Dutkne. Is that not true?"

"So we bring you proof that elements of your own people are involved with the slavery and selling of your females and you just dismiss it?" Lisisa asked. "Does your arrogance extend that far?"

"It is not arrogance to say that the Vanari are far more civilized than your people." Ella spoke haughtily.

Lisisa's dark green eyes narrowed. "Is that a fact?" She snarled softly.

"Lisi?" Deni spoke.

She met his gaze. "She just called us savages Deni!" Lisisa hissed. She reached down and took the pad beside her hand and practically tossed it across the table at the woman. "And I suppose you not being able to find a counter agent to the OSG chemical compound after so many years and just accepting what they do to you makes you better huh?"

"You know nothing of what you speak Princess Leonidas." Ella stated.

"No?" Lisisa snapped right back. "Then tell me how Caliria Re Mydala was months away from finding a counter agent to the OSG chemical and she did it all within the last decade! Tell me that!"

"What fool hardy notion is this?" Ella said picking up the data pad and beginning to read. Her eyes grew wider as she did and finally she looked up and directly at Coren. "Coren were... were you aware of this?" She gasped.

Coren shook his head. "Only after we discovered she had been taken." He replied.

"She was willingly violating one of our longest standing laws!" Ella snapped. "There is no counter agent for the OSG chemical."

"You better check your facts on that!" Lisisa snapped. "When my mother combined the data that Caliria had worked on and put together, she was able to fashion the last components to a counter agent within days!" She leaned forward across the table. "The cure is on the last page of that pad. All you need to do is begin mass producing it and within two months you can inoculate all of your females. The OSG will have no hold on you any longer!"

"This is nonsense!" Nejesh declared. "In the thousands of years before we outlawed this research our people were never able to fashion a counter agent! You expect us to believe that your people did this is only a few days."

"Our mother is Hadarian." Denali spoke. "And she's damn good at her work."

“Hadarian?” Alrerin spoke now looking at Ardan. “The Healers?”

Ardan nodded his head. “Yes.”

“I saw it work myself.” Coren spoke up for the first time. “There were two females who had been prisoner longer than Caliria and the others. You know how long term exposure to the OSG agent affects our females Ella. I saw two of them at this stage and when they were given this counter agent, their condition improved within hours. Within days they were completely recovered. Physically that is.”

“And where are they?” Ella snapped. “These two young women?”

“Both of them chose to remain behind on Earth.” Ardan replied.

“For what purpose?” Alrerin asked sharply. “They should have been brought back here so that we could have studied their ordeal and how they were healed.”

Ardan looked at him. “They chose not to return for precisely that reason.” He answered. “Neither of them wanted to be subjugated to further testing by our own people.”

“You should have forced them to return Ardan!” Ella snapped. “They do not... they do not belong among those people.”

“I explained this to them... but I was not allowed to physically have them removed.” He answered.

“With good reason obviously!” Lisisa snapped.

“How do we know that they are not somehow responsible for making this chemical and then giving it to the OSG?” Ella snapped. “If their mother can supposedly find a counter agent to it so quickly then it is more likely she helped to design it in the first place!”

Deni rose to his feet no longer able to keep his anger in check. “Yeah... we’re done here.” He spoke.

Nejesh glared at him. “We are not done! We have more questions you need to answer!”

Deni looked at him. “Nubou you!” He growled. “We came here hoping to find friends and allies. I certainly don’t intend to sit here and let you interrogate us like we are common criminals or accuse one of my mothers of doing something heinous when this is supposed to be a diplomatic mission.”

“We want to know more about this intelligence you give to us!” Nejesh snapped.

Denali held up the data pad in his hand. “No Regent Nejesh... this is what you need to know.” He spoke harshly. “This is an order signed by my brother. Seven weeks from now when the Protectorate officially becomes part of the Lycavorian Union, all trade contracts and with the Protectorate and the Vanari Empire will be suspended immediately. All trade... and I do mean all trade sir; it will cease immediately. The Protectorate will become a member of the Lycavorian Union and subject to our laws and guidelines. Vanari trade ships will no longer be allowed to cross through Protectorate space for any reason. The Protectorate embassy here in Austrova will be closed and all Lycavorian citizens asked to return home. The Non-Aggression Treaty signed by Dutkne’s father will remain in place unless the Vanari which to dissolve this as well.”

All of the Regents present with the exception of Coren and Ardan stared at Denali as if he was mad.

“You can’t... you can’t possibly be serious?” Alrerin gasped.

“I’m very serious.” Denali answered.

Alrerin looked at Dutkne. “Director General Dutkne... you can’t be in support of this?” He stammered.

Dutkne shrugged his shoulders. “Regent Alrerin... I have been disgusted with the Vanari people and their treatment of mine for many decades. Now that we have discovered our brothers and sisters within the Union I will revert to the role I was meant to play. A role that I have come to accept. I will act as Androcles’s Senior Advisor and friend. Denali Leonidas is being very patient with all of you considering how you have treated and accused both him and his mate... but I can guarantee that patience does not extend to Androcles. He is much more... blunt would be an accurate if not lesser term. He will have nothing to do with men and women who have no use for him or our people. He will not talk or trade with a species that considers the Lycavorian people savages. The Vanari are well known for their contributions to galactic society as a whole in the Beta Quadrant, but they are also known for their arrogance as well. Androcles Leonidas doesn’t deal well with arrogance.” Dutkne got to his feet.

“So you do threaten us?” Nejesh barked.

“Telling you that we will no longer trade goods or items with the Vanari is not a threat Regent Nejesh.” Dutkne spoke calmly. “It is simply a statement of fact. That you can not see the difference is not my problem.”

Ardan came to his feet now as well. “Please everyone... we must not rush to judgment!” He pleaded. “Denali... Dutkne... allow us to review this information you have provided in greater detail. You have had a long journey and you should be allowed to experience what we have to offer as a people. Perhaps we can meet again... say in a few days after you are fully rested?"

Denali shrugged. "If that is what you wish sir." He stated respectfully. "If not... we will continue on to the Protectorate and prepare for the merger."

"No... please stay and enjoy yourselves for a few days." Ardan spoke. "Alrerin... do you agree?"

Alrerin nodded his head slowly. "Yes. I would like more time to go over the details of everything you have given us."

Deni nodded. "Three days then." He said.

"Arduri Re Mydala will need to be detained." Ella spoke. "She has broken or violated in some way five of our laws. She must answer for her actions."

Denali looked at the woman. "Arduri Re Mydala became my mate and wife two days ago." He stated coldly. "In the fashion of our people. She is now a Princess of the Lycavorian Union. Unlike your people we look beyond what the outer shell of a person holds. Unless you wish to arrest a Princess of the Lycavorian Union and cause an incident... I suggest you forget about any action against Arduri." Lisisa beamed at Denali's answer for it was not something they had even discussed. "The response you received from such an action would not be very... pleasant."

"More threats!" Ella barked. "You only confirm what is thought of your people by your actions young man."

"And you only confirm just how pompous an asshole you are by yours." Denali answered her. "Do us savages need an escort... or can we find our own way to where we will be staying?"

Coren rose to his feet. "I will escort them to the estate and then return." He said quickly. "We have much to discuss. I suggest we all get something to eat and then return here."

"Agreed." Alrerin said. "One hour."

FARNURI EXPANSE

ADMIRAL ZESICO'S FLAGSHIP

LEONIDAS IIA-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER ULU DAWNSTAR

Zesico entered the bridge of the DAWNSTAR holding his mug of morning tea and the batch of reports from the previous evening. He was not a man who required much to be happy. He had been mated to the same woman for nearly seven thousand years and he had eleven fine children with her. He had simple tastes and did not need luxury items. He was also one of the most senior officers within the Union fleet and one of the top five in terms of operational experience. He had done it all, from commanding a small frigate to an entire Fleet Group in the Evolli War and before that against the High Coven. Zesico had met with the King shortly after he had returned to their people and was immediately impressed by him. Through the years since that respect had grown to even higher levels. He had not seen Androcles during the Evolli War, but he had talked to those who fought with him, or under him. Zesico was convinced that he was his father's son and this operation was only proving that premise.

Zesico commanded this new Task Force which had been nicknamed Rogue Spear by Admiral Riall, and he couldn't haven't been happier. It was much smaller than his Fleet Group, and consisted of warships only. Two hundred and nine warships total, with a total of twenty-nine LEONIDAS IIA-Strike Cruisers. Task Force Rogue Spear was designed for destruction and death. A Task Force capable of putting an enormous amount of firepower onto a target and not have to deal with protecting support ships. Rogue Spear was designed to be mobile, deadly and above all else free to operate. Androcles Leonidas had told him before he left... he didn't care how Zesico commanded or what he did... just advise him or Riall in what he was going to do.

Task Force Rogue Spear had entered the Farnuri Expanse searching for the Kavalian task force that Androcles believed was here waiting to spring their ambush and invade the Union. They had entered the expanse halfway between Kavalian space and the Union border, but so far they had discovered nothing. The Expanse caused sensors to operate at a reduced level due to all the natural metallic ore emanating from the Expanse clouds themselves, and sensors would detect nothing unless they were within half a million kilometers.

The sweep had been slow and tedious but Zesico had woken this morning expecting to find something to support Androcles's feeling.

Or he would find nothing.

"Status?" He asked calmly as he moved to his command chair.

"Task Force reports are all normal." His XO answered as he moved up beside Zesico's chair. "First Echelon has completed rotation with Second Echelon and resumed lead. All ships report nominal."

Zesico nodded as he settled into the chair. "Excellent. Status of sweeps?"

"We're just beginning passive sweeps on all frequencies." His XO answered. "Returns should be coming in within a few minutes. We had to adjust for the level of Rhomium Gas Particles in this portion of the Expanse, but we're good now."

"The Quantum Communications Array?" Zesico asked.

"Operational and in standby mode." His XO answered.

The QCA was something newly installed on most of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers, but hardly ever used. Normal communications sufficed for most COM traffic and the QCA was a relatively new and untested system fleet wide. Zesico knew that the Royal family had been using this system for over a year on a regular basis, but it had not been fully endorsed until just recently. It allowed instantaneous holo communication between ships and people over pretty much any given distance. Obviously the closer the target, the clearer the holo image would be, but it was new technology derived from City Ship 41 and still being integrated into the fleet.

"Admiral..." His XO spoke softly. "If you don't mind me asking sir... is this wise?"

Zesico looked at the man who had been with him for nearly a decade now. "Speak your mind Tagren." He said.

"Searching the Farnuri Expanse for Kavalian ships that may or may not be here seems to be a little extreme." Tagren said. "If war is coming... and I do not question what our course of action should be after what the Kavalians have done... but shouldn't we be preparing for Fleet engagements and not out looking for ghost ships?"

"You don't trust the Prince's instincts Tagren?" Zesico asked evenly.

"That's not it at all sir." Tagren spoke. "I..."

"Tagren... out with it man." Zesico spoke. "We've known each other too long for you to hold back now."

"I think he may have too much on his plate so to speak sir." Tagren spoke. "There are... there are rumors floating around that he may be affected by what he did near Hadaria. That his heart might not be in it."

Zesico looked at him. "Do these rumors question the orders he gave?" He asked. "To destroy the Jump Gates?"

Tagren shrugged his shoulders. "Some believe that there may have been an alternative." He said softly. "They don't believe King Leonidas would have made that same decision."

Zesico nodded his head. "Understandable." He spoke. "However... we were not there and we did not have the intelligence that he did at the time."

"Yes sir I know that... but..."

"Tagren... have you ever read the history of the King Leonidas who ruled Sparta. Our King's father?" Zesico asked.

"No sir."

"I recommend it Tagren." Zesico said. "It gives a surprising insight into the mind of the Spartan people and their ways. The King's father was a Spartan... our King is a Spartan. And so is his son."

"I don't follow sir." Tagren said.

"It was written by the Feravomir with much input from Lady Gorgo." Zesico said. "In a way it gives us a window into a different perspective of things. A view... a manner of thinking that is outside the box as it is called. While many of our younger troops are now embracing this... mentality if you will... there are still many of us old hounds that cling to the way we have done things for millennia. Long before King Leonidas returned to us."

Tagren nodded. "It has worked this long Admiral." He stated.

Zesico nodded. "Yes it has. But will it continue to work as we go forward. I stood in that meeting with him Tagren. I saw the look in his eyes. "He will do whatever it takes to secure the future of our people and our way of life. The determination I saw was without question. He is not perfect... none of us are... but as old as I am... after seeing that I would follow our young Prince through the Letha rie Jorbhe if need be."

Tagren thought about this for a moment and looked at his Admiral. "You wouldn't happen to have a copy of this book would you sir?"

Zesico nodded. "In my quarters. Stop by when your shift is over and I will let you borrow it. It is... enlightening Tagren."

"Thank you sir. I will..."

"Contact!" The voice called out from across the bridge.

Zesico and Tagren both looked up and turned, their faces becoming serious. "Report!" Tagren barked as he moved quickly across the bridge to the officer who had called out the contact.

"Unknown contact bearing 297.6!" The officer barked. "Power emissions paint it as a PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigate!" The man adjusted his console. "Second contact! Now a third! I have three PURUSIAN Heavy Frigates bearing 298.3! Range is nine million kilometers to bow!"

Tagren glanced briefly at the man's monitor and then turned to Zesico. "Confirmed!" He barked. "Deployed in a standard picket formation!"

Zesico nodded his head. "Their outer protective ring." He said as he came to his feet. "Order the Task Force to close on our position! Helm... come to course 3452 mark one! Keep the frigates off our bow and let's move closer! One I would dismiss... but not three! They must be keeping watch for something and now we'll find out what!"

Twenty-three minutes later they had their answer.

Zesico and Tagren stood around the plot board looking at the array of red dots that covered the sector.

"...sweep marks six hundred and nineteen ships." Tagren spoke. "Low power emissions and minimal shields."

Zesico nodded. "To make it harder to spot them." He said thoughtfully.

"Admiral... I would officially like to retract my earlier wavering of faith in Prince Leonidas." Tagren said.

Zesico looked at him and smiled. "Wavering of faith is normal Tagren." He spoke. "And it will always be renewed."

Tagren lifted his hand. "They are massed together in such a way that it would allow them to jump across the border and be within Union space before any of us knew it. Given the class of ships we are looking at, they could possibly reach all the way to Earth in two, perhaps three jumps and we would have little warning."

Zesico shook his head. "Earth is too heavily defended for a frontal attack with a force this size. Her PDPs would shred half this fleet before it got within bombardment range." He spoke. "If this was me I would target the colonies between Apo Prime and Earth. Only the BIPs would be able to respond initially and they could establish a firm foothold within Union space within several days. About the time it would take for us to bring to bear entire Fleet Groups to repel them."

"It gives them a way to supply their forces as well. They can come in from The Wilds and not worry about Union patrols." Tagren said.

Zesico nodded his head. "Clever." He said. "Tagren... activate the QCA and find where Prince Androcles is." His voice was determined now. "It is time we showed these Kavalian dogs that we are not the High Coven."

Tagren nodded his head. "Aye sir."

“... For'mya is fine and so are your brother and sister.” Aricia spoke to Andro, Anja and Isabella in the QCA transmission. “We are making our way slowly for we have a rather large ship attached to our hull with tractor beams. Martin seems to think our presence here threw the Kavalians for a loop. They did not expect us to be here.”

“My foul Uncle?” Andro growled.

Aricia lowered her eyes briefly before looking back at him again. “I have... I have never seen anything like what your father did Androcles.”

“Little Wolf...” Anja moved up beside him. “What... what do you mean?”

Aricia met her eyes. “His Mindvoice powers have grown beyond anything any of us have ever seen. Even the Feravomir was stunned. He refuses to leave For'mya's side; Dysea and Cirith are with them. Andro... we... we discovered eggs! Dragon eggs. Almost two hundred! And they all began to hatch when we found their chamber.”

“Eggs?” Andro gasped.

Aricia nodded. “Eggs that have been waiting for Arzoal to return for almost five thousand years. You should see them! Two hundred hatchlings screeching and trumpeting all over the hanger deck!” She said with a smile. “The Kavalian that Fedor and Eirene told you about... he is... he has Pralor blood within him Andro. All of those who follow him do. Nearly three thousand of them. We could not leave them.”

“Your father is incapable of leaving them because of the Pralor blood that runs within his veins.” The new voice spoke and they turned to see Shiria enter the QCA transmission.

“Val'istar!” Andro gasped. “I asked that you return to Earth.” He said somewhat miffed.

“And I did. Until I found out that you were out here.” Shiria answered. “I came here instead. We landed only moments ago. Deia told me where you were.”

“Why does no one listen to me?” Andro asked with some exasperation.

Shiria smiled and came up beside him and Anja within the transmission though she sat at the table with the rest of them in reality. “But we do listen to you young Androcles.” She said. “This is what your resonance calls for.”

“Mother...” Andro spoke. “Tell father he will need to return to Union space through the edges of High Coven territory. There is a sizeable Kavalian Task Force within the Farnuri Expanse waiting to attack. He needs to avoid this...”

Aricia shook her head. “We're not coming back.” She stated. “Not just yet.”

“What?” Anja and Isabella declared almost at the same time.

“We have been speaking with Muton.” Aricia continued. “We have... we have the means to discover where the dragons and Pralors that Arzoal sent away have gone to. This is where Muton's ancestors came from. We have a map... we can find them Androcles!”

“That is crazy!” Androcles declared. “You have only one ship! No fighters! You have no idea what you will encounter and...”

“We have already decided.” Aricia stated. “Your father, Wayonn, the Feravomir, Arzoal; we all agree it is what we need to do. What we do... what we do now my son... it could have huge implications on our future. You know this! Your father said you would know this.”

“That does not mean I agree with it!” Andro snapped. “We are on the verge... mother I am... I am going to throw our people into war! There is no way to avoid it now!”

“We know.” Aricia said. “The lessons of our lives aren't always happy ones my son, but they keep coming. We learn from our tasks in life. We learn from our friends and families. We learn by accepting the commitments of our lives as both wolves and Spartans, and then by playing the roles that life hands us. And they are not necessarily the roles we would have chosen mind you. We learn by growing older, by suffering much, by loving more, by bearing with the things we can't change. And we learn by taking risks.”

“Arrgghhh!” Androcles growled loudly. “Now you sound like the Feravomir and Dutkne mother!” He snarled. “And what if we fail mother?”

“This is not what your father wanted for you Androcles. Not this way.” Aricia said softly. “You know this. He trusts you without hesitation Androcles, only you... never doubt that. But now the decisions and the risks fall to you, for you must now lead us. We... we must do this Andro my son. We must risk this for the sake of us all. Have you not already failed if you don't take the risks?”

Andro was silent for a long moment as he contemplated his mother's words. "At least... at least let me send some additional support. I can send it to you within a day. The edge of the Gellen Belt."

Aricia nodded. "We will begin moving there when this transmission is over." She said. "Food. Supplies. Spare parts. Whatever you can cram into another TYPE II."

"Little Wolf you can't just..." Anja began.

Shiria knew what she was going to say and she took Anja's hand within hers. "I will send Anja and Isabella to you as well. On my ship." She spoke as Andro looked at her. "Your father is no different than you Androcles... his strength is his mates and wives. Now is not the time to separate them. And my ship is of Pralor origin completely. It will serve you well outside this area of space." She looked at Aricia. "Aricia Leonidas... inform Wayonn and the Feravomir that I will remain here and act in their stead. I see now where my place in all this is going to be."

"Thank you Val'istar." Aricia said.

Andro looked at his mother. "What about my uncle?" He asked.

"Your father... he came so close to destroying him." Aricia said. "Kavalian ships broke through to the planet before he finished his task. We had to leave."

"So Pusintin lives?" Andro asked.

Aricia nodded. "We believe so."

"This is insane mother." Andro spoke. "What if... what if none of you return? What will I tell my brothers and sisters?"

"That we lived gloriously and that we died together." Aricia told him. "As is the Spartan way."

"Sibfla!" Andro swore under his breath.

Shiria reached out within the transmission and though they could not actually feel her touch his shoulder, the MV resonance was easy enough to detect. His eyes came up and he looked at her. "You and your father are descended from Sumar himself young Androcles." She spoke. "I see now that all I ever read about him lives on in both of you. Have faith!"

"Our faith has led us to this point Val'istar." Andro barked softly. "Now I will watch my father and mothers travel into the unknown and we may never see them again."

"With my ship going with them... we will always have a link to them." Shiria said with a smile and Andro met her eyes suddenly, realizing what she was saying.

"Your ship?" He asked.

Shiria nodded. "SPARTA'S WRATH is a Pralor ship Androcles. And it is here with us. It was built into our systems that we would always be able to at least communicate with other Pralor ships with the right codes. Codes that we have."

"Anse! I did not think of that!" Andro exclaimed with wide eyes.

Shiria smiled. "Because you are not perfect. Something you and your father freely admit on a regular basis." She said. "Keleru and the Kavalians do not truly comprehend what their actions have initiated and what they have begun." Shiria told him softly. "It is too late to stop what is coming. Now we need to move forward and do battle quickly. The time for hiding is over."

Andro looked at her oddly for a long moment before turning to Aricia. "I will inform Ben of what to send to you mother. Give me your word you will wait for it."

Aricia nodded. "You have my word my son. And we will return." She said with a smile. "If there is one thing my love for your father has shown me through the years, it is that he makes impossible missions seem mundane."

"Mother... mother I..."

Aricia nodded her head. "We love you as well. All of you. I must go. We will make contact with you when we have the supplies and Anja and Bella have joined us."

"Mother... it will have already begun by then." Andro said softly. "In three hours... in three hours I will have no choice but to plunge us into war."

"Then so shall it be." Aricia said softly.

CHAPTER EIGHTY-ONE

NEW CAPITAL CITY OF YDARE RULING COVEN ASSEMBLY BUILDING GRAND MEETING CHAMBER

They were the most powerful members of the High Coven behind only Aikiro herself. The Ventash'ma. The most loyal families who supported her and Veldruk throughout the years. All of them were purebloods and all of them were over twenty thousand years old. Since the news of Aikiro's death had come, there had been much backroom dealing and pressuring for power. All of them knew Yuri to be quick to anger and much more emotionally unstable and none of them wanted to get on her bad side. Now however, rumors were beginning to circulate. Rumors that she was dead herself, rumors that she would not be returning and rumors that she would be returning, only to assassinate the entire Ruling Coven. These rumors, along with many other factors, had brought them all together for this meeting. It was a simple matter since many resided here in the building anyway. Sixteen of the Ventash'ma were in favor of Yuri returning simply because with her in power, their majority would provide them more power. Thirteen were for naming a new ruler before Yuri was able to return and consolidate her power, while seven were waiting to see which side proved stronger before throwing their support behind them. It made for a lively setting within the room as the men and women gathered once more to discuss what was happening across the planet... and in some cases across the entire High Coven on many different planets.

"...happening on all our major colony worlds and it is spilling over here now." The man spoke. "Massive demonstrations demanding changes! One began here in Ydare not an hour ago. Thousands of our people are filling the streets! Young and old!"

"It is the younger generations." Another spoke. "They are driving this."

"No." The woman said now. "Not anymore. Now it is of all ages. Have you looked in the streets today? They are demanding accountability from us! They are demanding to know why the Empress acted as she did with the Lycavorian Union and they were told otherwise publicly! They are incensed that any hope for peace is lost! All of you know as well as I that there are millions across the Coven who no longer consider the Lycavorians our enemies. They want to make amends for our actions in the past! Peace and friendship with them..."

"There can be no peace between us now." One of the older men spoke softly from near the head of the table many of them turning to look at him. His name was Datarik and he was one of the most ardent supporters of change on the Ventash'ma. His family was one of the largest and most respected among the Purebloods and his words carried much weight, even with Aikiro when she was alive, for she could not risk killing him or any in his family. "The Kavalian dogs butchered Martin Leonidas! He was the only true check on his son. He was the only one who could possibly control him. With him now dead... Androcles Leonidas will come for us sooner or later because of what Aikiro sanctioned and allowed to happen to his sister. How many reports have we read about him and his role within their family?"

"And we will defeat him just as we have the Kavalians these last years!" Ventash'ma Nedoli snarled.

Datarik looked at him with obvious disgust in his eyes. "Defeat him Nedoli?" He spoke in anger. "Have you read the unedited intelligence reports on him? Not the ones we make public... but the ones only our senior people see? We will never see him coming Nedoli! And he is nothing like the Kavalian fools we have fought these last years! He will come from... he will come from everywhere, from anywhere, and we will not know he is here until we lie dying in pools of our own blood!" Datarik snapped back. "He is not his father! Martin Leonidas was, at least in some ways, predictable in his actions! He did not raise his son in this way however. Nor any of his children. Androcles Leonidas is as predictable as the wind! You have seen the reports about what Aikiro allowed! What they did to his sister! He will come for us I tell you! And he will have blood in his eyes!"

Nedoli shook his head. "You think too highly of the Union animals Datarik. You always have." He spoke.

"The question before us now is how long do we wait?" Ventash'ma Anebal spoke from her chair. She was also one of the more moderate Ventash'ma, and was in support of calling for a new leader of the High Coven. "We have heard nothing from Yuri or Moran. How long do we wait until we act?"

“Our troops can put down these demonstrations with ease.” Nedoli spoke.

“We are not dictators Nedoli! And we can not use violence on our own people! Veldruk did this is the past once and look where it got us? Four million dead! Even he would no longer send troops against our people after that time.” Datarik snapped at him. “Our people are making their voices heard! Purebloods and turned alike! We need to heed what they want or no matter what we do, it will crumble around us! We can no longer cling to the old ways of doing things. The outside influence is too great now.”

“We are the High Coven!” Nedoli ranted. “We are the Ruling assembly! The people must listen to us!”

“They seem to be doing such a wonderful job listening to us now.” Anebal said. “These demonstrations are happening everywhere! The people are enraged, as Riara and Datarik have told us. How many of us knew Aikiro would do what she did? How many of you would have counseled her against such an approach? How would any of you react if this had taken place to a child of yours?” Anebal shook her head. “I would be... I would be filled with savage anger had the Union done this to my child. We cannot fight the Union and the Kavalians at the same time. Uoi'nota... we can barely hold our own against the Kavalians!” (Hell)

“That is not true!” Nedoli barked. “We have survived this long!”

“We have fought a defensive war only!” Datarik spoke quickly. “We have done nothing but respond to Kavalian attacks and try to hold on to what we have.”

“Is that not a victory?” Nedoli asked.

“Until the Kavalians overwhelm us with pure numbers.” Riara spoke once more. “We can not match the speed in which they make their clones. Our process is more thorough... much more refined. We want our cloned soldiers to be able to think and act on their own. The Kavalians have no such desire.”

“We can not continue on this path.” Anebal said. “We must act before Yuri returns.”

“What you speak of is treason!” Nedoli shouted.

“Do you see what is happening around us?” Anebal nearly screamed as she rose to her feet and motioned with her arm to the massive window. “Our people are revolting before us!” She moved to the window while looking at Nedoli. “We do not know if we can trust our very own military, for many believe we have gone too far Nedoli! That we did nothing while Aikiro pursued only more power. Do we even know half of what she has done since assuming power? Her actions have unleashed our doom Nedoli! Datarik is correct in his assessment of that! Androcles Leonidas will offer no mercy and he will come for all of us eventually. His reach is more than his father's was because he is not shackled by his father any longer. And he is far crueler than Martin Leonidas ever was.”

“He can not even get the support of his own people.” Nedoli snapped. “They are weak within the Union. Allowing Keleru and Pusintin to pursue their agenda because of a child that Pusintin produced when he raped the elven Queen? They are actually voting on that? Their military is unfocused with the loss of Leonidas, their politicians divided. They are no threat to us.”

“And that is what we thought with his grandfather Resumar.” Datarik spoke softly. “And look where that led us.”

Anebal looked out the huge window as Nedoli started into another rant and she tuned his voice out. Her dark eyes took in the mass of people far below that filled the streets. They were no more than specks from this height, but they filled every crevice and street below as they surrounded the Assembly Building. Her eyes caught the shadows of movement further up and they cut to the area between several tall skyscrapers. She had seen movement there she was sure, but all lifter traffic this close to the Assembly Building was forbidden. There should not be any traffic this high up, or so close to the building. She glanced at the face of the Immortal who stood a meter away and saw nothing but an impassive wall. His eyes met hers, but the natural MV shielding ability of the Akruxian people prevented her from detecting any of his surface thoughts. She turned back to look out the window once more but saw nothing between the buildings and she turned back to the table.

She did not see the Immortal turned his head ever so slightly and look at his comrade standing ten meter away by the massive double doors. That Immortal nodded slowly, his hand dropping to his side and pressing a button on the portable command panel he wore on his belt. The small red light that signified the locked position of the entrance faded quickly to be replaced by the green light.

Entrance into the inner chamber was now allowed from the outside.

The Immortal Duty Officer turned when he saw his Colonel exit the large elevator with six additional Immortals of the Ventash'ma Guard and another half dozen cloaked figures. His duty was to prevent entrance into the Meeting Chamber while the Ventash'ma was present and he turned to face Co'kal as he approached rapidly.

“Colonel!” He spoke crisply. “The Ventash'ma is in session.”

Co'kal stopped in front of the man. “You must unseal the doors Va'gek.” He said.

“Colonel... I cannot. You know this. The Ventash'ma do not allow entry while they are in session.” Va'gek's eyes darted behind his Colonel at the other figures, their faces partially hidden by the cowls they wore.

“The interior doors have already been released Va'gek.” Co'kal spoke to him. “Check for yourself.”

Va'gek turned and looked at the panel on the wall beside the door. His eyes grew a little wider when he realized that the interior security doors had indeed been unsealed. There had been no alarm however, and that meant that the alarm had been disabled. Va'gek turned quickly back to his Colonel.

“Is this another drill Colonel?” He asked hesitantly. “The interior security doors are never unlocked while the Ventash'ma are in session.”

“This is no drill Va'gek.” Co'kal spoke. “Events are... events are changing my friend. We need to act in order to save what we have. What we desire.”

Va'gek looked at him nervously as his hand moved lower to his weapon. “What... what do you mean sir?”

Co'kal stepped closer to him. “It is time to change the path we are on Va'gek.” He spoke. “Or we will be lost forever. Open the doors.”

Va'gek instantly drew his sidearm and stepped back from Co'kal. “I... I cannot do that Colonel!” He hissed.

Co'kal simply stared at his officer. “You are the Duty Watch Officer Va'gek. Only you have the code to open the outer doors. The others will not follow you.”

Va'gek glanced to his left and right and saw that the other three Immortals stationed with him had not budged from their positions or drawn their weapons. He turned back to Co'kal. “What is going on here?” He demanded. “Who are these hidden individuals with you? Reveal yourselves or I will activate the alarms and alert the entire building!”

Co'kal began to step forward but the largest cloaked figure reached out and held him back. Va'gek watched as the hands rose and threw back the cowl to reveal a face Va'gek never imagined he would see in person. A face that was so very different than what he had seen in old vids, but a face that could not be mistaken.

“Cha'talla!” He almost shouted.

Cha'talla moved forward two steps as the gun came to rest pointed at his chest. “I know it is your duty to keep everyone from within this room Va'gek.” He spoke. “I too once stood in your shoes long ago. Now however... now it is time to free our people and those who think as we do. We can only do that if you allow us entry.”

“You... you are a traitor! A traitor to our people!” Va'gek stammered.

“A traitor in whose eyes Va'gek?” Cha'talla asked calmly. “In your eyes or the eyes of the men and women within the room you guard?”

“My duty...”

Va'gek shifted his weapon to the much smaller figure as it moved up next to Cha'talla and his eyes grew even larger when Narice drew back her cowl and looked at him. “Your duty is to the High Coven Va'gek.” She spoke.

“Princess... Princess Narice!” He gasped.

“Your duty is to the High Coven Va'gek.” Narice spoke. “That is the oath you swore when you became part of the Ventash'ma Guard. I know this. Does your oath extend to the High Coven as a whole, or just the men and women within that room?”

“Princess... you... you have been declared a...” Va'gek was confused beyond anything he had ever experienced.

“A traitor... yes I know.” Narice spoke. “Why then am I here attempting to save the Coven Va'gek? Why am I trying to save my people and yours from continuing down a path that will lead to their destruction?”

“The... the Ventash'ma... they...”

“They are part of the problem Va'gek.” Narice told him softly as she stepped closer to him without fear. “Many of them supported my mother in her destruction path towards this end. Not all of them are bad I know... but right now they impede the survival of my people. And yours as well.”

“Va'gek... in seventeen minutes Androcles Leonidas will unleash his fury upon the High Coven for what Aikiro allowed to happen. For what she did to his sister.” Cha'talla spoke. “The first of his acts we cannot stop... but it will be the first of many such events unless we act.”

“You lie!” Va'gek snarled. “He could not have gone undetected by our defenses! He would not dare!”

“Oh... he would dare Va'gek.” Narice spoke calmly. “I am the proud, Blessed Wife to his brother Arrarn Va'gek. I have lived among them for months now, experiencing all the things we could have. But I am also vampire and part of the Coven. I do not wish to see them fade into obscurity.” Va'gek's eyes grew wider still when he saw the third individual throw back the cowl on his cloak and Arrarn stepped up beside Narice. She took his large hand within hers without hesitation. “I guarantee you that Androcles would dare. How is it that we are here now Va'gek?” Narice asked him calmly. “No one has detected us. Even now... our dragons and their riders come closer to this building and they have not been detected. We do not wish to destroy Va'gek... we want to save the Coven. Save all of us!”

Co'kal came up beside her. “Unlock the door Va'gek.” He said softly. He motioned to where Ki'nuq stood to the side and it was that moment when Felisa dropped her cowl and stood beside her Immortal husband proudly. Co'kal smiled at this action as he looked back to Va'gek. “Unlock the doors and help us to take back our future Immortal.”

All of the Ventash'ma turned when the large double doors opened into their meeting chamber and another dozen Immortals moved into the massive room with speed and precision. They began taking up stations around the room with their weapons out, even as the dozen Immortals who had already been in the room did the same. Nedoli was the one who came to his feet.

“What is the meaning of this?” He demanded. “What is going on? You are not allowed in here!”

“There are many things we are not allowed.” Co'kal's voice echoed as he strode into the room.

It was happening quickly, and Co'kal had been willingly swept up in the storm. Cha'talla had returned to save his people. The most famous Immortal in their people's history, one whose exploits and sacrifice could never be obscured, and he had not forsaken them. This fact alone had caused Co'kal's chest to swell with hope and pride. And then seeing the pureblood Felisa as she absently stroked Ki'nuq's head in a manner that could only be construed as a Blessed Wife to her husband while they had planned for this action. The way Princess Narice held herself, how she pressed close to her Lycavorian and elf husband. The future was right in front of them for the taking and Co'kal, as old and grizzled as he was; as many deaths he had committed and seen, he was not going to let this pass by. “That will begin to change this day.”

Datarik rose slowly to his feet beside Nedoli and placed his hand on Nedoli's arm to quiet him. There was something going on here. The Immortals had never burst into this chamber in all the millennia he had been a member of the Ventash'ma. Datarik also had a healthy respect for the Akruvian Immortals who guarded them. “Colonel Co'kal... explain yourself.” He spoke calmly and evenly. “Your actions are... they are not normal.”

Co'kal stopped at the edge of the table and looked at Datarik. The pureblood Datarik had always treated him and his men with respect. Perhaps not as an equal... but he had never gone out of his way to demean them in any fashion. Datarik had also insured that many of his men were well educated and he had done this of his own accord.

“These are not... they are not normal times now Ventash'ma Datarik.” Co'kal spoke slowly but with respect for the man. “I ask your forgiveness in advance for what I am going to do.”

“Co'kal what...”

“Secure their weapons now!” Co'kal barked to his men. “Search all of them for hidden blades and transmitters! If they refuse... subdue them! Va'gek... secure the COM array and lock out all users except yourself! Go!”

The Immortals present fell upon the members of the Ventash'ma with unerring speed. These Immortals were among the few within the High Coven who had been trained to combat vampires when they blurred. While most of the Ventash'ma remained frozen in their spots unable to comprehend what was going on, several of them blurred in motion to try and escape. Nedoli was among them and he wrapped the shadows around himself and blurred directly for the double doors which he saw were oddly unguarded. It was a mistake he would painfully regret. Appearing from either side of the double doors as he reached the entrance were more Immortals, but Immortals that looked different. It was Ki'nuq's arm however that smashed across his chest and brought him to a crunching halt as the shadows unwrapped from around his body and he was lifted into the air and dropped to the hard floor with jarring impact. Nedoli began to try and rise but froze when he felt the barrel of the weapon jammed into his chest and the cold words spoken with a voice he knew well.

“Do not move!”

“Felisa!” He gasped.

“Don't make me shoot you father.” Felisa spoke as she pressed the K12 she had been given harder into his chest. “No one needs to die... but I will shoot you to protect what I have come to love.”

“What... what are you doing?” Nedoli stammered.

Felisa glanced at Ki'nuq. “Get him back with the others my husband. But try not to hurt him.” She spoke as Ki'nuq bent over and yanked Nedoli to his feet.

“This way Ventash'ma Nedoli.” Ki'nuq snarled.

“Husband!” Nedoli nearly shouted as Ki'nuq dragged him back into the larger room.

Felisa nodded her head and smiled. “Yes father. My Blessed husband.” She answered as she followed.

Felisa held her K12 tightly as she saw the Ventash'ma she knew as Morar standing by the massive window overlooking the city and holding the gun on several Immortals in front of him. She stopped next to Ki'nuq where he held her father.

“Enough!” Morar screamed. “Stop this now! No one move!”

Co'kal held up his hand from his spot near the table and froze his men from action. “We are not here for bloodshed!” He barked.

“You will release them!” Morar demanded as his eyes darted back and forth. “You will release them and submit to punishment for violating your oaths!”

“Ventash'ma Morar... we can not do that.” Co'kal spoke calmly.

Datarik looked at him from where he stood, an Immortal on either side of him. “Co'kal... what is going on? Why are you doing this?” He exclaimed with wide eyes. “Moran will have all your remaining people executed for these actions! Is this what you want?”

Co'kal looked at him. “Admiral Moran will do nothing.” He spoke. “He is a non-factor in what we do here today!”

“Release them Co'kal!” Morar shouted. “I will... I will kill you and as many of your vile kind as I can before I fall!”

“You will kill no more of my people scum!” The harsh voice rose above the turmoil in the room and they all turned to see Cha'talla enter the chamber his face a mask of anger and long suppressed hate.

“A l'phraktos!” Anebal nearly shouted. “Cha'talla!” (By the gods)

“I remember you Ventash'ma Morar!” Cha'talla snarled as he stopped only a few meters away from the man. “You who ordered the deaths of hundreds of Immortals through the centuries! You who supported Veldruk in the conquering and subjugation of my people and so many others! I know you well scum!”

“Stay back dog!” Morar screamed. “I will shoot you like the animal you are!”

Cha'talla's face took on a look of feral anger and the smile that split his thin lips was anything but pleasant. “I think not.” He growled. “You will be the first of the old leaders that will die this day.” He stood up straight. “Lynom!”

All eyes in the room darted to where Morar stood as they saw the shadows unwrap just behind him to reveal the very large Immortal with skin similar to Cha'talla's. That an Immortal had been able to so skillfully use the shadows and they not detect him was amazing. Beside him was a stunning half elven female with strangely colored blond and black hair and they all watched as Lynom drove the blade of his Immortal sword clean through Morar's chest as As'hia grabbed his wrist, twisted the weapon towards the ceiling and snapped the bones in his arm with her combined elf and wolf strength.

"Vollenth!" Cha'talla roared.

The Ventash'ma in the room could only watch in sheer terror as a greenish yellow scaled monster rose into view outside the massive window and sank his talons into the frame of the building. Dragon talons were designed to be able to allow the dragon to attach itself to almost any surface. They were thick and razor sharp and very nearly unbreakable. It was a simple matter for Vollenth to sink his talons into the metal of the building and then he closed his eyes before smashing his huge head through the thick glass, the large sections of glass bouncing off his armored scales. Lynom withdrew his sword just as Vollenth's massive jaws opened and snapped shut on Morar's body and hauled him screaming out of the main chamber. He whipped his head out and all of them saw his body flailing madly until Vollenth released him in a shower of blood. Even Co'kal and the Immortals in the room were shocked as first Deneth and then Viera impacted the side of the building and attached themselves to it smashing aside the thick glass and allowing the wind to begin whipping through the chamber. Then they could see dozens of dragons filling the sky near the top of the building, all of them with riders as they circled lazily in the sky.

"No more Cha'talla." Narice's voice caused all of them to turn as she entered the chamber now. Gusts of wind filled the chamber from the shattered window and buffeted their clothing as she walked confidently up to the table. Her dark eyes moved to where Deneth watched her carefully through the opening in the glass he had smashed, his head now halfway into the chamber ready to burn any who threatened his Bonded Sister.

"Princess Narice!" Datarik exclaimed in shock.

Narice ignored him as she walked to where Deneth's head extended into the building. She reached up and placed her hand flat on his snout to the awestruck gasps of the Ventash'ma in the room. "We will handle it from here my brother." Narice said looking at Deneth and pressing her upper body against his muzzle.

Let us burn them Narice! Vollenth exclaimed as Cha'talla moved up to where his head also extended into the main chamber. They deserve no less!

Narice looked at Vollenth. No. We will need some of them as much as I wish to do exactly what you say. Not all of them are bad. We must do this as we planned. She turned back to Deneth. Go now and do as we discussed.

Deneth blinked his eyes and nodded his huge head slightly. Call if you need me my sister. He spoke.

Narice smiled. Always.

This is for the best Vollenth my brother. Cha'talla spoke reaching up to touch his muzzle. Vollenth looked at his Bonded Brother and slowly calmed down, the anger that had been flowing through both of them slowly bleeding away and he nodded his head as well. Stand ready though... just in case.

With a trumpet of acknowledgement Vollenth nodded and then released his talons from the building and fell away with Deneth and Viera just seconds after him. Narice turned back to face the Ventash'ma... all of whom now looked stunned, and very frightened.

"Ventash'ma Morar's body hitting the streets below will not be pretty... but it will be a sign to our people that change has arrived." Narice said softly.

"How did you... how did you get here?" Nedoli barked looking at her. "You... you are a traitor to the Coven! You... arrest her!"

"Shut up father!" Felisa snapped from her spot beside Ki'nuq. "Before someone cuts your tongue from your mouth!"

Narice moved away from the huge window and looked at Co'kal as the wind whipped around her. "Colonel... the kinetic barriers please." She asked.

Co'kal nodded and moved around the table, pushing one of the Ventash'ma aside and entering a command on the console. Instantly clear shimmering kinetic barrier shields erected around the windows and silenced the howling of the gusting wind. Narice smiled as she moved towards the head of the table. She looked at Datarik.

"Ventash'ma Datarik." She spoke politely. Her eyes moved to Anebal. "Ventash'ma Anebal. It is good to see you again. Where is Ventash'ma Riara? He..." Her eyes moved to where the older man was sitting on his butt on the other side of the table. "Ventash'ma Riara... why are you down there?"

Riara turned as he felt the arms and hands begin to help him to his feet and his eyes grew wide when he realized they were the hands and arms of the half elf half Lycavorian Arrarn Leonidas. All of them know who Martin Leonidas's children were... though they did not fear all of them as they feared Androcles. Riara held Arrarn's arm as he got to his feet, meeting Arrarn's dark eyes when he was finally on his feet.

"Thank... thank you." He stated.

Arrarn nodded. "Sir." He said respectfully.

"You are a traitor!" Nedoli snarled. "A traitor to your people! When your sister returns she will watch you bleed out for your crimes!"

Narice looked at him. "What crimes would those be Ventash'ma Nedoli?" Narice asked. "The crime of wanting more than what this life brought me? The crime of wanting to discover what life was like outside the restraints of the High Coven?"

"You betrayed your mother!" Nedoli snapped. "You betrayed your sister! Your people! You... you lay with this half breed animal! With another female! You spit on your father by these actions!"

Narice glanced at Arrarn as he came up beside her with a grin. She smiled lovingly at him and looked back to Nedoli. "I won't begin to describe to you what happens when I lay with my Blessed Husband and our Du'ased mrandd'ssinss lu'rannidi. It would boggle your mind the things we do to each other. And I would gladly spit on my father if he were here for he was just as blind as you are now!" (Blessed lover and wife)

Nedoli glared at Felisa as she chuckled openly at Narice's response. He turned back to Narice. "Coven Security forces will come here!" He shouted. "They will know these Immortal scum have betrayed us and they will come! As will your sister!"

Narice met his eyes and smiled at him. "And just how do you think they will penetrate this building when I have forty dragons and riders waiting to greet them Ventash'ma Nedoli?" Narice asked calmly. "Do you think I came here alone with Cha'talla and my husband to accomplish our task?"

"You will accomplish nothing but your own deaths!" Nedoli barked.

"I don't know..." Arrarn said with a grin. "We've done pretty well so far. We're here aren't we?"

"You will not live out this day!" Another Ventash'ma snapped now.

"Yeah... I've heard that before too." Arrarn chortled.

"Have you come here to kill us Princess?" Datarik asked. His voice was neutral... but there was an undercurrent of fear and distaste in them. "To take vengeance on your people for what you perceived we failed at?"

Narice looked at him. "Ventash'ma Datarik... there are very few among the Ventash'ma that hold my respect... you and Ventash'ma's Anebal and Riara are among the few." She told him. "I am not here to kill anyone. Ventash'ma Morar chose his path and he paid the price. As you no doubt noticed... our dragons are very protective of us."

Datarik's eyes grew wide and he looked at Cha'talla quickly. He looked back to Narice. "He was... he is Bonded to the dragon?" He gasped.

Narice nodded. "There are many things that we never sought to discover about those who have been our guardians through the millennia." Narice told him. "I am still discovering these things because of Cha'talla and those who follow him. Those who see things differently." She looked at him. "Felisa is only one of many who have taken Immortals as their Blessed husbands Ventash'ma Datarik. I only discovered just how many had chosen to go against the laws of the Coven when I myself chose to follow my heart."

Nedoli stared at his daughter. His youngest daughter and the thoughts of her consorting with the monster beside her disgusted him like nothing else. "How could you?" He almost shouted. "You betrayed me! Betrayed your kind! You are a Pureblood!"

"I betrayed no one!" Felisa snarled at her father. "I followed my heart! Ki'nuq treats me like I am a precious jewel... not a trophy! I fought my feelings because of you father. I fought them until I was so torn inside it made me sick. Until finally I decided that my happiness was more important to me than your reputation. I have been Ki'nuq's Blessed Wife for six years father! The happiest six years of my life! And there are far more unions like ours than any of you could possibly imagine! Because all of you are too blind to see where the future leads us!"

"We direct and decide the future of our people!" Nedoli screamed. "Not the... not the influence of these Immortal scum and those outside our species!"

“Then you will be given a choice today Ventash'ma Nedoli.” Narice spoke once more drawing his attention back to her. “A choice on which path the High Coven will follow into the future.”

“Princess...” Anebal began.

“Do not call her that!” Nedoli barked. “She is no Princess of the Coven! She has been tainted by these... by these Lycavorian animals! By him!” He pointed at Arrarn.

Arrarn leaned close to Narice, his lips beside her neck and he nuzzled her skin. “I have tainted you oh mighty Princess.” He spoke in a seductive voice mocking Nedoli.

Narice’s eyes closed for the briefest of moments and she reveled in Arrarn’s physical touch and his MV resonance as it filtered through her. A smile split her lips and she opened her eyes once more, playfully slapping his leg to get him to stop. She looked at Nedoli, stunned herself at Arrarn’s actions in the face of the danger that surrounded them. Once more she found herself in awe of the spirit and will of the man who had swept her up within his arms so easily and stolen all she was. All Toria was. A spirit and will that Narice knew was matched by every Lycavorian within his family and outside his family. Across the entire Union. A spirit she now wished for her people to see and experience for themselves.

“If what you call a taint allows me to experience and feel what I have felt these last months Ventash'ma Nedoli... then I gladly will allow that taint to run within my veins forever.” Narice spoke. She took a deep breath then and moved around to the head of the table. “Now however we have other, more pressing concerns.” She looked at Cha'talla.

“Four minutes.” He spoke.

Narice nodded. “Ventash'ma Datarik, Anebal... all of you. Please... return to your seats.” Narice told them. “In four minutes you will need to make a decision. A choice that will decide whether the High Coven lives or dies. One choice will provide a future for the Coven... the other will see me leave just as I arrived... and your fates will be sealed forever. I will no longer be willing or able to stop the tempest that is about to descend upon you for what my mother allowed to happen. In four minutes you will decide whether you live or die.”

ARIZONA-CLASS STRIKE CARRIERS HORNET, BISMARCK

Janon sat in his command chair on the bridge of the HORNET silently contemplating his next actions. No Union ship had ever been so deep within High Coven space, let alone sitting not so far away from their homeworld. Stretched before them on their main monitor was the massive research space station in orbit of Uzu Ozeib 7, as well as what amounted to an entire Strike Force of unsuspecting High Coven warships ranging from the two BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnoughts to countless frigates. The crews of both the HORNET and the BISMARCK were on edge, waiting to be discovered. They were professionals however, and Janon had no doubts that they would do their jobs and do them well.

Janon looked at the man who had once been captain of this ship and now was his XO as he came up to him. “Two minutes forty-five seconds.” He said as he stopped beside Janon’s chair and met his eyes.

“We have to make the first strike count.” Janon spoke as he rose to his feet. “No misses and no duds.”

His XO nodded. “The crews have checked and rechecked the loads. We’re ready.” He looked at the monitor. “I never thought in all my years I would see the vampire homeworld. It is not... it is not what I expected.”

Janon nodded. “Nor did I.” He said.

“Think this will work?” His XO asked turning back to him.

“If it doesn’t do what Androcles wants then it will at least make them pause before responding. If they do at all.” Janon said. “The intelligence reports state the Coven is in a state of flux when it comes to their government. Their military is in similar disarray though not on as large a scale.”

“Let’s hope that gives us another advantage.” His XO spoke. He held out the data pad. “We received confirmation from Admiral Pontal. He is standing by and will seize the outer rim shipyards the moment we begin our attack. Princess Narice and General Cha'talla are also ready and standing by.”

Janon nodded as he took the pad and looked around the bridge. "Very well." He said softly. "All flight crews to their stations! I want us emptied of fighters in less than a minute. Squadron Commanders will assume their attack plans and roll in. The BISMARCK will target the BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnoughts. All port batteries to target the station. All starboard batteries to free targeting. Let's make this happen!"

"We'll be early Janon." The man said.

"Early bird gets the worm." Janon spoke with a smile. "A phrase I learned from Miranda Lorian."

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT HELLBOUND

The Duty Officer was bored.

Most of the crew was bored. They had finished with their science refit and were now awaiting orders to return to their fleet. They had been waiting for nearly two weeks now, and it was beginning to tax the patience of the officers and crew. In activity normally did that. Half the crew had been released to go to the surface, the other half going through the motions of doing their jobs. The bridge of the HELLBOUND was only half staffed even though it was just past 1300 hours. Even the captain was on the surface trying to figure out when they could leave. The HELLBOUND was still attached to the shipyard docking arms of the research station. The young lieutenant had never seen the area around Uzu Ozeib 7 so bare of ships. Normally there was an entire Fleet Group assigned to protect the planet, but since the Kavalians had invaded twenty-seven years ago, that practice had long since stopped. The ships and crews were needed elsewhere.

He had just put his feet up on the control panel and lifted the mug of fresh blood to his lips when several alarms began sounding at once. He groaned as the skeleton bridge crew reacted slowly and the female sensor operator turned to her station from where she was chatting with another female. She shook her head and moved back to her station and the Duty Officer saw her body go rigid.

"Vith uns'aa !" She cried out as she practically threw herself into her chair. "Contacts! Contacts! Vith... dozens of them! Appearing all over!"

The Duty Officer sprang to his feet. "Kavalian!" He screamed as he rushed across the bridge to her station.

"Negative! Negative! Union contacts! LEONIDAS IIAs! NOVA-Class! Shu! Two contacts bearing 2368.9! Unknown at this time but emanating Union power signatures! The power signatures are..."

"What? What?" The DO screamed.

"I've never seen anything like them before!" She barked.

"General Quarters! Battle Stations!"

"We only have a skeleton crew!" Another officer screamed. "The Captain is on the surface!"

"We're sitting ducks!" The DO shouted. "Launch fighters! Starboard batteries to..."

"The fucking gun crews are on leave!" The second officer shouted.

"Vith! Vith! Vith!" The sensor operator screamed. "They're locking us up! Missiles! Missiles! Unknown designation!"

The High Coven Duty Officer did the only thing he could think of. It was more an act of cowardice, but it was an act that would earn him praise in the future and a new position.

"Blow the docking clamps!" He screamed. "Blow the clamps and engage the engines!"

No one on the bridge questioned his orders and the few men and women present began responding to his shouted commands. It would cripple their ship... but it would save their lives in the long run.

It was a sight that many who survived that day would never forget.

One second the space and stars around the main science and research base within the High Coven was free of ships. At Janon's order, all Shroud Shields were dropped, and the Lycavorian Union Strike Force appeared. Eighty-three ships appeared within the span of half a second, and suddenly that once peaceful sight was turned into a maelstrom of retribution and death. Men and women sitting in the many lounges along the bulkheads came to their feet unsure of what was happening. They were unsure until they saw the two massive ships begin spitting fighters out either side like faster than their eyes could follow. They were unsure until they saw the two LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers turning radically and also emptying their complements of TEMPEST fighters. One of the massive, arrowhead shaped ships was turning away as fighters spewed from launch tubes too numerable to count on either side. Turning toward the two BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnoughts that were docked at the shipyards only five hundred kilometers away.

It was then that the massacre began.

Screams sounded within the research station's lounges as they witness the entire side of the unknown ship erupt in a fury that was unmatched. The BISMARCK's entire starboard array of weapons, from the small Point Defense Batteries to the huge Type One Plasma batteries lit up the darkness of space with a saturation barrage directed at the closest dreadnought that was docked. There was no mercy shown to the docked and helpless ship as the enormous display of firepower impacted the stationary ship along its right flank. Even with full shields, the range of the barrage and the amount of firepower placed on the target would have overwhelmed the dreadnought's defensive systems instantly. Huge chunks of the ship were sheared completely off, one entire engine wing and much of the connecting material tore away in the series of immense explosions. The force of the blasts threw the dreadnought out of its locking clamps, slamming it into the frame of the docking shipyard with tremendous force. This caused the entire docking platform to shift location and crumbled against the bow of the second BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought that had amazingly begun to back out of its berth.

The men and women on the station could only watch in unmitigated horror as they saw a dozen flashes from near the top of the unknown predatory ship. The Captain of the BISMARCK had ordered the launch of his M22A ZMF missiles. Twelve of the stealthy and lethal ship killers responded with unerring accuracy and destruction. All twelve of the missiles impacted precisely where they were targeted, six ripping into the burning and crippled BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought and exploding. The flash that followed nearly blinded those watching from the station and many raised their arms to shield their eyes. The other six missiles had been targeted at the nearest ships to the BISMARCK, which included two BLOODLETTER Medium Cruisers and one older ORIC-Class Heavy Cruiser. Two Zero Matter Fusion missiles were targeted at each ship and the resulting detonation so close together decimated all three ships, completely incinerating one medium cruiser and sending the other smashing into the ORIC-Class, tearing through the ship's superstructure and eventually blowing into three different pieces while the ORIC-Class separated into two and began to drift apart slowly as internal explosions rocked the ship.

The men and women on the station, some of them just as evil as Aikiro because of the experiments they conducted, some who were not, could only stare in horror as that second arrow head shaped ship turned sideways to the station and the many gun turrets dotting its immense side turned towards them as well. The Research Station had a crew of nearly twenty thousand men and women assigned to it. Most of them were scientists and workers. Many of them were innocent of any harmful acts, their research not dangerous and not militarily related. Of those twenty thousand men and women, only one thousand three hundred and fourteen would survive this day. It was not a decision Androcles and Narice had come to lightly. They had spent hours agonizing over the fact that so many innocents would die. In the end however, they agreed that this station could not survive. This station was a symbol of everything that was wrong with the High Coven. A place of horror and death. A place where guiltless men and women were taken to be part of one horrendous experiment or another. It was not a decision that Androcles would have made alone, without Narice's input, though he had every right to do just that. It was another reason why Narice Leonidas loved him as one loves a brother or dear friend. Androcles was the first to have accepted her and Toria into their family without hesitation, the one who had encouraged Arrarn to pursue both of them, even knowing who her mother was. Narice blessed the day that Arrarn Leonidas came into her life, and the biggest part of why her life had taken such a turn for the better was Androcles. He knew things others did not; he saw things others did not. And he saw his brother's love for her and Toria immediately and encouraged him to pursue it. Narice Leonidas would honor her new name in everything she did.

Many of the men and women in the station lounges began to run from where they stood watching this epic moment in Coven history as the HORNET finished her slow turn and came broadside of the station. They knew what was about to happen, and as with any living being, survival became their foremost thought. None made it very far as the entire left side of the HORNET erupted in a blinding display of terrible power. Ten Type I Plasma turrets, fifteen Type II turrets, eight torpedo bays, nearly thirty Quad PD turrets and four Point Defense missile batteries all fired at the same moment. It was a ghastly display of Andro Leonidas's wrath, for ultimately that is what it was. The HORNET was merely the platform by which Androcles took vengeance for what they had done to his sister. What his beloved half vampire sister had had to suffer. This was Androcles retribution for what had occurred. Many called him crueler than his father and in some aspects that was correct. Of those that survived this day however, they would never know that had it been Martin Leonidas conducting this operation, Uzu Ozeib 7 would have been left nothing but a smoking hunk of barren rock in space.

The first barrage from the HORNET rendered the space station's massive kinetic barrier shields useless. Janon was firing his ship's main weapons from nearly point blank range, only ten thousand meters from the station's colossal frame. The station dwarfed the HORNET by twenty times in size, but it would not matter. The first deadly barrage smashed aside the shields protecting the station's own shield generators and blew great chunks of metal and material into atoms. The station's massive shield generators were all situated into one location on the lower end of the bottom deck. It was a design flaw in the station that no one cared to fix since it was so deep within High Coven space. This entire section received the full force of the HORNET's first barrage. It appeared as if the massive stationed shuddered and rippled violently as a one kilometer long section of its superstructure was blown into junk. All along the length of the research station, electricity barriers cackled and cracked, sparkling in the darkness of space as the kinetic barrier shields came down one section at a time. When the last section of shields fell, six squadrons of Union M5 DEVASTATOR Fighter/Bombers swooped in from where they had been holding station. And thus began the systematic death of the High Coven's largest and most renown Research Platform in history. For six thousand years this station had stood as the utmost epitome of High Coven dominance.

It would take only six minutes for the Lycavorian Union to turn it into slag.

HORNET

"...squadrons are rolling in!" Janon's XO screamed.

"Follow on saturation barrage when the fighters are clear! Target orbital compensators and the main plasma conduits!" Janon barked loudly. "All starboard batteries again! Port batteries to maintain suppression on Coven ships!"

"BISMARCK reports one BLOOD REVERENCE totally destroyed!" His XO snapped. "The second one is heavily damaged and adrift. It was blown into the shipyard frame when the first one died!"

"Status?" Janon asked.

"No engines! Weapons and shields are offline! Multiple hull breaches! Main power is wasted and she's not radiating any sensor power at all! Life support is intermittent within the ship itself!" The XO answered as he turned to look at Janon. "Should they kill it?"

Janon thought swiftly for one split second and then shook his head. "Negative!" It was the only act of mercy shown by Union forces that day. "They are out of the fight! Order the BISMARCK to engage remaining Coven ships! Have her Assault Wing form on her and go to Action Plan Gamma! Our Assault wing will cover us! We must do as much damage as we are able! Four minutes until recall!"

His XO nodded. "Start it now?"

Janon nodded his head. "Have the LEONIDAS IIAs MYSTIC QUEEN and DRAGON'S BREATH commence their bombardment of the dorsal sections of the station! Ignore any escape pods and target the stabilizers and reactor plants! Message all Squadron Commanders they have four minutes and they are to return to their ships! Empty their payloads and then return! No heroics my friend!"

His XO nodded. "Understood!"

"We caught them with their pants down!" Janon barked. "We must destroy this station before they can call for reinforcements!"

There were thousands of them now.

Word had gone out through the underground that this was the day they all needed to gather. They were young and old vampires, pureblood and turned, filling the streets side-by-side united in a single purpose. For centuries they had witnessed the actions of their leaders, of first Aikiro's father, then Veldruk and finally Aikiro herself, they had watched as millions of their people had died in conflicts that the average vampires had no desire to be in. Nearly twenty-five thousand years they had watched and shaken their heads. Now they could hold it in no longer. Coven Security officers stood along the sides of the streets unsure of what to do, hundreds of them had been deployed to keep the gathering in check, but they found there was nothing for them to do but watch. These men and women and children were simply filling the streets and parks around the Assembly Building and declaring what they wanted. In many cases the Coven Security Officers wanted the same thing. So all they did is guide the masses of people to certain points and even help them to circumvent steel and granite walls that impeded their progress by opening massive gates along the way. There was no way to stop the mass of bodies that filled the streets. The Coven Security Officers had never seen such a unified display by their people. One senior CSO would later comment that there had to be millions filling the streets all over.

When the body of Ventash'ma Morar hit the ground amidst hundreds and thousands of men and women with a horrifying crunching and deep splat sound screams quickly followed as men and women scrambled back. Those closest could see the condition of his body and the savage marks on his chest and back. Marks that looked remarkably like large teeth.

This is what caused the heads to begin lifting to the top of the Assembly Building where they knew the meeting chamber was. The screams and shouts then were not of fear or panic, but of wonder as they could see dozens of dragons circling the top of the building. Shouts went out and more eyes lifted skyward as the dragons swooped and dived, circling the building almost casually.

As thousands of pairs of eyes witnessed this, they all saw the death of the BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought in orbit without knowing what it really was.

A bright blossoming of light like a small sun announced that something major was indeed happening. More shouting and reaching for the sky occurred as streaks of bright light began to crisscross the sky above them. Something was happening in orbit around their planet and as they all watched, huge monitors spread out on the different buildings came alive with the Coven version of the Netnews. Faces of men and women they all knew, government reporters most of them, began speaking rapidly. This quieted the crowds down as many turned to watch the huge screens up and down the streets surrounding the Assembly Building. This was a main hub of commerce and the screens were normally filled by advertisements for one thing or another and these same government reporters who were detailing information given to them by the Ruling Assembly to report. This time however they were receiving no information from the Ruling Assembly, the many urgent requests to discover what was happening in orbit ignored by the Ventash'ma aides they usually got their information from. The offices within the Assembly Building were not answering their calls and within minutes the leaders of these Coven news organizations made decisions that would forever alter how the High Coven worked. The men and women in charge of these organizations began to report freely what was happening just from what they were receiving on their own. No Ventash'ma censors and no interference by government overseers.

This day marked the birth of the High Coven free press.

Those closest to the Assembly Building watched as the screens and monitors came alive with hurried reports.

“... Unconfirmed reports that a massive battle is underway in orbit! Eyewitness reports are indicating that a large Lycavorian Union task force and not Kavalian suddenly appeared in orbit of Uzu Ozeib 7 and immediately began firing on Coven warships and Research Station One.”

The speaker was a wide eyed pureblood vampire who had been reporting government controlled tidbits for decades. Now he looked harried and unsure, reading as he was from unedited reports they were receiving. His face was the most recognizable however, and soon nearly every monitor and screen began to shift to his image and he stammered his reports out.

“Are trying to connect with orbital satellites to confirm this but...” He turned as someone to his left handed him something. His eyes grew wide. “Phraktos!” He gasped looking up to the monitor. “We have just received a report from one of our station personnel who was on Research Station One! He was departing the station when the attack began! He is now drifting in a transport ship and has direct visual reference! He is confirming that a sizeable Lycavorian Union Task Force has appeared in orbit of Uzu Ozeib 7 and they commenced an attack immediately after lowering their Shrouds. They have already managed to destroy two thirds of the Coven ships in orbit, to include the newest BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought VLOS ELEMIIRE. He reports that the Union ships are now pulverizing Research Station One and it seems they are intent on destroying it. Union fighters are swarming the skies above us and swatting Coven ships down the moment they are launched.” He shook his head. “This is... this is... is this a prelude to a Union attack on the High Coven? The Union has never come this far into Coven space... we...”

Those gathered in the streets now began to look to the skies as they listened to him talk from whatever screen or COM system he was using. It appeared as if the entire High Coven controlled media had just collapsed and now they were winging it without guidance or direction from the government.

“Wait! Our personnel is reporting that the station is coming apart! The transport pilot is directing them away... but he says the station is coming apart!”

HORNET

“Captain... long range sensors are detecting Coven warships entering the system!” The HORNET’S sensor operator screamed out. “Fleet Group size!”

“Pontal?” Janon barked the question.

“Negative! They are not radiating friendly code!”

Janon got to his feet. “Time to finish this!” Janon shouted. “Twelve M22As! Full lateral spread! Zero Fusion maximum! Impact point at all critical areas!”

His XO was also issuing orders as well. “Begin All Fighter Recall! Get them aboard! We have incoming enemy forces! All Fighter Recall! Combat landings! I repeat combat landings!”

“Weapons?” Janon hissed.

“Targeting critical structural points!” The man answered. “Full Zero Matter Fusion yield! Missiles are locking!” He whipped his head around. “Missiles are locked!”

Janon looked at his XO. “XO?” He snapped out.

“Almost! Most had already recovered to rearm!” The man answered staring at the tactical screen.

“XO! We need to...” Janon began.

“That’s it! All fighters aboard! All fighters aboard!” He barked turning to look at Janon. “Do it!”

“Weapons?” Janon snapped.

“Ready!”

“Fire!”

RESEARCH STATION ONE

It was not a dramatic as one might have thought. The M22As were not designed to be flashy. Each missile did exactly what it was designed and programmed to. As the ZMF reaction absorbed more than its small field could hold, it ruptured outward. In this case, right back at the hull of the space station which was already rocking from internal explosions. It was like twelve massive shotgun blasts at point blank range. Along the entire length of the station gaping holes appeared from the initial ZMF explosive force, followed quickly by huge chunks of the station simply falling away and exploding or disintegrating in secondary blasts. Millions upon millions of small pieces scattered outward just from the force of the explosions caused by the M22As. As the energy was sucked into the vacuum created by the ZMF warhead and then released when it could no longer hold it, great swaths of the station simply vanished into the maelstrom of destruction. The HORNET was silhouetted for several seconds as she turned away from the dying station, the BISMARCK mimicking her maneuver with ease.

Those who viewed from the many life pods and transport ships that had escaped the station could only witness as the two arrow shaped behemoths, their deadly escorts forming up around them, disappeared once more into the void from which they had come to enact their retribution.

Research Station One commenced its final death throes, and its massive power core overloaded. The resulting explosion buffeted the pods and transports that managed to reach a safe distance from the station, and engulfed those that had not, as a bright sun formed in a single eye blink and then the station blew apart like it was a glass chandelier dropped to the floor from a hundred feet above. The concussive force tossed the remains of the shipyard and the inert BLOOD REVERENCE Dreadnought aside as if they were toys, though the ship was able to survive because of its remaining kinetic shield barriers.

All that remained was the darkness of space, filled with hundreds of survivors who would bear the scars of what they had witnessed this day.

RULING ASSEMBLY BUILDING

None of the Ventash'ma were able to speak. The death of Research Station One could be seen in the skies above easily from where they sat in their chairs. The Immortals stood stoically, their eyes focused on the men and women before them.

Arrarn stepped up to Narice who was standing in front of one of the remaining panes of glass and looking at the sky where pieces of the station were already starting to enter the atmosphere and make it appear as if a large fireworks display was underway. He didn't hesitate and slipped his arms around her waist and pulled her back against his chest. Narice closed her eyes and relished in the comfort and feeling of his strong arms around her as she leaned back against him.

"I'm sorry Narice." He whispered into her ear, leaning over further to nuzzle her cheek and the side of her neck.

Narice reached up with her hand and held his head to her cheek. "It was the only way." She whispered back. "Androcles and I agreed it was the only way Arrarn. It is not something we wanted to do my beautiful Arrarn... but it could not be avoided."

Arrarn nodded. "I know." He said softly.

"Narice!" Cha'talla called to her from across the room.

Narice turned slowly and looked at him. "Cha'talla?"

"Captain Janon reports all ships accounted for. We lost... we lost sixteen fighters... but..." Cha'talla shook his head.

"It is far less than we anticipated." Narice spoke.

Cha'talla nodded. "Yes."

"What have you done?" Nedoli screamed in shock and anger.

Narice ignored him, took a deep breath and squeezed Arrarn's arms before once more becoming the Princess she now needed to be. "Has Toria reported in?"

Cha'talla nodded. "They have control of the entire network." He said. "She is ready to initiate the Quantum Communications Relay."

"Quantum Communications Relay?" Datarik gasped as he looked at Narice.

Narice ignored him as well and stepped up to the table, activating one of the consoles there. The image fluttered for several seconds and then Toria's face appeared. "Ol zhah xunor Udossta ssinsrigg ?" She asked. (It is done our love?)

Toria nodded. "We have tapped into the entire network." She answered. "All channels, military and civilian. I have initiated the QCR connection and Androcles is waiting. He returned to Earth only a few hours ago."

"Resistance at your location?" Narice asked.

Toria shook her head. "None. To be honest, many of the engineers here jumped at the chance to help us once they realized what was going on mrand'ssinss. We are completely secure and will hold this location until you say otherwise." (Lover)

Narice nodded her head. "Activate the link Toria. It's time this eternal war came to an end."

Toria nodded her head and they could see her hands moving. "Link activating. All the connections are clean. It should be coming through now!"

There were gasps in the room from both the Ventash'ma and the Immortals as the holoimaging disc in the floor to the right of the table came alive with a solitary figure. That figure was wearing Union Mark IV ArmorPly Body Armor with a crimson cloak that dangled to the floor. The matte black helmet was unmistakable with the high multicolored plume and the ever noticeable image of the dragon mounted in the front. The glaring azure blue eyes were also very prominent and they nearly glowed under the helmet. The Ventash'ma had no idea that this very transmission they were witnessing was being broadcast to the entire High Coven. On every carrier wave and channel. Toria and her team had infiltrated the largest communications center on Uzu Ozeib 7 and taken control of it with no resistance in the least. Every monitor and screen in every city across Uzu Ozeib 7 came alive with the face and upper body of the young Prince many knew only by reputation and picture. The streets below the Ruling Assembly Building fell silent as men, women and children turned to witness history. Across the breadth of the High Coven, in warships and on small listening posts, reaching from border to border, everything stopped.

"When will it end?" Andro's words echoed across space as he reached out. It was a risk that he needed to take. A risk that could pay huge dividends or fail miserably. And all of it stemmed from what he said right now. His eyes blinked as everyone watched. "When will it be enough?"

Andro looked at the floor where he stood. "I doubt there are many left alive who even know why it all began." He spoke looking back up. "I do not." They watched him take a deep breath. "No doubt by now most of the citizens of the High Coven know what has taken place. I speak now to all of you, young and old alike. It ends here! It ends today! It ends with me!" Andro shook his head and paced in the room he was in.

"I have taken what... I have taken what vengeance I require for the vile actions that Empress Aikiro perpetrated upon my sister Zarah. For the death of two dragons and several of my people in what was supposed to be a joint mission of cooperation. She betrayed us... betrayed us even as she offered the hand of friendship to my father. What she allowed to happen.. To take place. They raped my sister Zarah for those of you who don't know. Dante and Javier Moran and others raped her repeatedly and brutally beat her within centimeters of her life. As if she was some sort of animal. She has never fought against the High Coven, never taken the life of a vampire, and yet they targeted her because of her youth. Because she is half vampire! They took my sister's innocence from her!"

Andro hissed vehemently, his eyes changing and his fangs bursting forth and very visible as he spoke from under the helmet. Millions upon millions watched as Andro reached up and removed his helmet from his head with an angry jerk.

"I ask how many High Coven fathers, how many High Coven brothers would allow this to happen?" He barked out. "How many of you would not call for the blood of those who did this to your daughter, to your sister? Aikiro made a mistake... and that mistake cost her everything. She thought... she thought she could step upon my family, my people, just as Veldruk did for so many centuries. She failed... and she was struck down like the psychotic upae she was by the Feravomir of our people. The First Oracle. The ones Veldruk tried for centuries to wipe out. He failed too. Javier Moran lies dead, as does his dragon Naruth. Aikiro is ashes, Admiral Tesand with her. My vengeance is now directed at only two people. Dante Moran and his father will pay for what they did to my sister. They will pay for their actions... for I have sworn that to my sister and I keep my promises. My vengeance no longer includes the High Coven or her people." Andro looked up once more.

"My people."

Datarik and Anebal gasped at this comment and suddenly found themselves leaning closer to the image of Androcles as he continued. Narice and Arrarn noticed this and then Cha'talla. What was spoken now would be critical and all of them hoped what Androcles said would hit the nerve. No one had been able to pry from him what he would say before they left and even leading up to this transmission. He would tell no one except his wives and mates, and everyone knew getting information out of them was almost as hard. Narice could only hope it struck the nerve that needed to be struck. So far... so far it seemed to be doing just that.

"I speak your language like it is part of me. All of my brothers and sisters do. Taught to us by our pureblood vampire mother Isabella. Two of my sisters are half vampire. One of my brothers. I have Aunts, Uncles, friends... all of whom are vampires. Over ten million vampires call the Union home. Trusted, honored members of the Union. They take part in our military, our government, and our lives! I have five mates and wives, one of whom is Carisia Leonidas. Yuri's daughter.

Andro held out his hand as the scene behind him grew larger. They watched as Carisia's petite body filled the transmission now, and Andro pulled her tightly against him, lowering his lips to capture hers as Carisia returned the kiss passionately. When they drew apart her cobalt blue eyes were alive with love, the tips of her fangs showing easily as she faced the monitor.

"Aikiro's actions were meant to kill my sister... instead they brought her together with Lucia Moran, and now nothing in this life could tear them from each other so strong is their love. Aikiro's own daughter Narice! She is there among you now, helping to bring about change. To reshape the High Coven and return them to a path that will take them into the future. And she does this as the Blessed Wife of my brother Arrarn. Even my father, a man who had more reason than anyone to cling to his hate of vampires, he loved my mother Isabella. Loved her with every waking step he took, just as he loved all his mates. How is it that we are such enemies when we have so much in common? How is it that we can cling to hate when doing so makes us hate part of what we are?"

"I... I ordered Research Station One destroyed because of the vile things held within it. Aikiro stole from us data that would allow her to craft weapons that would make it easier for her to continue the High Coven down a path of destruction and death. I... I cannot bring back the innocents that may have died today, I alone will carry that burden. But nor can the High Coven bring back the innocents killed during the Black Day. Six hundred billion of my people died that day! Six hundred billion men, women and children who did not know why they died! You cannot bring back those innocents lost to the High Coven Rape and Death Squads that my people had to suffer daily for fourteen millennia! The cycle of death and distrust and hatred that began with Veldruk and others needs to end. And it ends now with me. With my generation."

Andro motioned with his hands and suddenly Sadi appeared, pressing close to him, then Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. Zarah and Lucia came into view behind him with Eliani and Jomann. Carina and Moneus, Dorian, Normya and Tir'ut. And finally Gorgo and Deia holding the smaller Leonidas children.

"It ends with all of us." Andro spoke softly. "We were raised to believe strongly in fate and destiny. That everything happens for a reason. That ultimately if something is supposed to be; no matter how hard you try to stop it, no matter how much you fight it, it will come to be. The High Coven and the Lycavorian Union were never meant to be enemies. That is not what fate and destiny wanted. I believe we were always meant to be allies, friends, and in many cases family. The individuals who altered that path for the High Coven are now gone. All of them. Yuri Moran lives, and because of her we now have a piece of our history back. Because of her... the bodies of my great grandfather and great grandmother reside now with our people. I could not... I could not bring myself to kill her because of circumstances that many would not understand. So she lives... and she will attempt to find peace in her future life with her new Immortal husband. It is not something my father would have done... but it is what I have done because all of this has to stop. The death. The war. It needs to stop or it will destroy both our peoples in the end."

ARC ROYAL
UNION SPACE
.09 LY FROM JUMP GATE 35

Martin Leonidas stood silently watching the transmission, his arms crossed over his broad chest, his dark brown eyes moist. Aricia's hands covered her mouth in shock at what Androcles had just said, For'mya pressed between Anja and Isabella, Dysea and Cirith standing to Martin's right, all of them watching the monitor. Helen and Wayonn stood beside one another off to the side, Danny, Julie and most of Martin's team in the background. No one spoke; no one dared utter a breath, for all of them knew that Martin's son had just altered the course of their future with his words.

“We... we could be so much more.” Andro’s voice continued. “And I will do everything within my power to make this so. I ask... I ask the Ruling Ventash'ma and the people of the High Coven... I ask that you join with me. I ask that you take a leap of faith and let us see what the future could hold for us, not as enemies, but as friends and partners! The way I believe it was always meant to be! It has already begun here, with me, with my family, with those who call the Union home. Now all we need do is take that last step and make it happen all over! Narice is among you now with my brother Arrarn. She has returned as your Princess... but she is also a Princess of the Lycavorian Union. She believes as I do... as so many of us do. I ask that you allow her to do what her mother and father should have done! I ask that you support her and allow her to lead you into the future. A future that could be brighter than any you have ever known. And I will prove this to you... Narice?”

Martin’s eyes narrowed slightly as he heard Narice answer. “I am here Andro.” Narice’s voice replied.

“You and Cha'talla have gained control?” Andro asked, his face remaining impassive.

“We have. They are with us now.” Narice said.

“Execute those traitorous scum now!” Andro spat.

UZU OZEIB 7

RULING ASSEMBLY CHAMBER

Narice looked at the men and women who sat at the table, all of them turning to her at Androcles’s words in confusion.

“There are six of you who have collaborated with the Kavalian Federation in their war against the High Coven.” Narice stated with grim determination in her voice. “You have given them vital information that has allowed them to murder and bring harm to my people. I will no longer allow you to do this. I will not allow you to impede the future of the High Coven as my mother and father did. Cha'talla.”

The Immortals in the room had shifted and moved their positions during Andro’s words. Co'kal, Ki'nuq, Cha'talla and three other Immortals had inconspicuously moved up behind these four men and two women without notice. Their lack of attention was their doom. At Narice’s word all of them struck with brutal efficiency. Heads were jerked back and wicked looking blades were slashed across throats. Screams and shouts followed as the other members of the Ventash'ma pushed away from the table but were stopped by the remaining Immortals. Felisa stepped up to where her father, Ventash'ma Nedoli, now leaned back in his chair his hands trying to stem the flow of blood gushing from his neck. His eyes turned to gaze at her, the light leaving his eyes rapidly.

“You betrayed us father.” She gasped. “You betrayed us all! This... this is your payment. Now we will make our own future.” Felisa lashed out with tears in her eyes and her clenched fist slammed into her father’s jaw with crushing power. His head snapped around and he was knocked from the chair he sat in, sprawling on the floor, his fingers clawing at the cold marble as death came for him.

Narice turned back to the image of Androcles in the transmission as the remaining Ventash'ma were pushed back into their chairs. “It is done Androcles. They are dead.” She said coldly. “I will place their bodies on display for three days to allow all those who now help the Kavalian Federation know what the penalty is for betraying our people.”

Androcles’s head nodded. “So be it my sister.” He said. “Cha'talla?”

Cha'talla looked at Andro’s image. “The Akruvian Immortals are tied to the life of the High Coven Androcles. We have served them for too long to desert them now. My... my people have fought and died with them. Now... now we will help them to return to the path they were meant for. If Narice will have us.”

Narice looked at him. “You no longer serve the High Coven, Cha'talla of the Immortals. None of your people do. But I will accept your help as allies and friends.”

Cha'talla nodded. “Then so it shall be.”

“Then to the people of the High Coven I say this...” Androcles continued.

ARC ROYAL
UNION SPACE
.09 LY FROM JUMP GATE 35

“...fuck me.” Julie gasped softly as she stood next to Danny. “Did he do what I just think he did?”
Danny nodded as he crossed his arms over his chest. “Like father like son.” He stated with a grin.
“Pissing them off isn’t healthy.”

Narice’s voice broke into their banter. “You no longer serve the High Coven, Cha’talla of the Immortals. None of your people do. But I will accept your help as allies and friends.”

Cha’talla nodded. “Then so it shall be.”

“Then to the people of the High Coven I say this...” Androcles continued and Martin Leonidas saw his son’s face change then as he moved away from Sadi and the others. “Stand with Narice Leonidas. She will guide you to the future the High Coven was meant to have. She is my brother Arrarn’s Du’ased ‘ranndi yes, and this insures that she will always have the support of my family and I. Let her guide you to all you could be and the Lycavorian Union will stand with you to the end. You will have our support no matter what that entails! I will not attempt to impose my will upon my friends! On that you have my solemn promise! My Vlos Hithern!”

Andro bared his fangs and his azure eyes grew wider when he spoke the next words.

“To those members of the Ventash’ma who remain I say this. You have seen what we have done this day. Rest assured... we can do so much more. Narice Leonidas is there to claim her rightful place as leader of the High Coven. With her she carries the Lycavorian Union’s pledge of mutual defense. Of trade and assistance. Our unflinching vow that we will never desert our brothers and sisters in their time of need. Sign these documents and you can help Narice change the path of the High Coven and make the future so much brighter. For all of us. Dismiss them and I will unleash the full fury of the Lycavorian Union upon you. I will... I will shed tears as I give the orders... but I will bring this war and hate to an end. I will strike at the very heart of your military and when I am done, nothing will remain. I do not want that... a l’phraktos... that is not what I want. But I will do it.

“You will find no greater or loyal an ally than the Lycavorian Union, but you will also find no greater an enemy. Dismiss me... and I will be unforgiving and relentless and I will bring about the death of the High Coven as assuredly as I stand before you now. And from the ashes... from the ashes that remain, the future can be born. The decision is yours now. It is the people’s decision. Listen to them. Honor them. Trust them. Do all of these things... do these things and you will earn their respect and their trust without question.” (By the gods)

Martin turned when he felt the hand on his chest and he looked into Isabella’s beautiful hazel/green eyes. She reached up and stroked his cheek, running her fingers through his neatly trimmed beard, tears streaming down her cheeks.

“He is... he is doing exactly what you raised him to do Martin Leonidas. What you trained him to do. You shaped him.” She whispered. “He is... he is becoming his own man!”

Martin choked up then, his own eyes becoming moist again. “He’s doing a damn fine job of it too isn’t he?” He stammered.

The rest of Martin’s mates crowded around him and he pulled Aricia close to him, her azure eyes clouded with tears. Martin swept his arms wide and practically engulfed them all in his embrace as he leaned his head over and nuzzled Isabella’s neck.

Wayonn stepped closer and looked at Martin. “And through the millennia it all comes back to the beginning.” He said softly.

Helen looked at him. “Wayonn?” She asked softly.

Wayonn looked at her. “It was... it was something Sumar said to me before we left to try and discover what happened to our world. He said we can not stop the change. We can not stop the horror that is coming. But through the millennia it will always come back to the beginning.” Wayonn turned back to Martin. “I never understood what he meant. Not until this very minute. He has done it Martin. Your son has done it and he doesn’t even know it.”

“Done what?” Martin asked.

“Androcles... he has brought us back to the beginning.” Wayonn spoke softly. “To the exact point that should have happened so long ago and didn’t because of Xaxon’s influence over Aikiro and Veldruk. This... what he is doing... this is what should have taken place nearly twenty thousand years ago. It is happening now! Your son is changing the events set in motion by Aikiro and Veldruk. By the Black Day. He is altering the future as we stand here. Twisting it to something different. That is why I have not felt the sense of urgency that I did before coming here. Androcles has altered events and his actions have bought us more time.”

Helen looked at him and took his arm. “Grandfather... are you sure?” She asked.

Wayonn nodded his head at her. “Yes... it could be nothing else.” He turned and looked at Martin. “Do you and your son not know how to remain passive? How not to shatter events and create impossible and illogical solutions to these events?”

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “I guess not.” He said sheepishly.

Wayonn waved his hand. “Bah... Panos was wrong when he called the two of you forces of nature. More like forces of chaos! We will need to sit down once we are underway. With what your son has done, it is now time to tell you everything.”

“Why exactly don’t I like the way you say that?” Martin asked him.

“This is not what I expected of your son Martin.” Wayonn said. “I... I expected him to go after the High Coven with ruthless vengeance because of what they did to Zarah. This... this I never foresaw. Sibfla! When will the two of you learn to be more predictable?”

“Predictable is boring.” Martin said. “I don’t like boring.”

Wayonn shook his head. “With Androcles’s actions... I must confer with Shiria and perhaps Avatar 341... but I feel... I sense we have gained time. A year... perhaps two. Three at the most.”

Anja looked at Martin and then back to Wayonn. “What... what happens after that?” She asked.

Wayonn met Martin’s eyes. “Then we will have no more time and The Scourge will be upon us.” He said softly. “And the real war will begin.”

UZU OZEIB 7

RULING ASSEMBLY CHAMBER

It was Ventash’ma Datarik who slowly got to his feet and looked at Narice.

“Princess... Princess... can he hear us?” He asked. “See us?”

Narice tapped her jaw. “Toria... accommodate cross communications.” She ordered. “They want to speak with Andro.”

“Syncing cross COMS.” Toria’s voice filled the room. “Receiving acceptance from Cranæ Island. It’s up!”

Narice turned her head to look at Andro’s image. “Andro... can you see us?”

EARTH

CRANÆ ISLAND

Andro's azure eyes narrowed in interest as the faces of the men and women in the room suddenly became visible to him. He could also see the bodies of several of the dead Ventash'ma as well beside the huge table. "I can see you Narice my sister." He answered her. "All of you. Fervon." He spoke looking directly at Arrarn.

Arrarn nodded to him. "Andro." He said. "Taine tis jar." (Trust in us.)

Andro nodded to him. "Innyne fervon. Innyne." (Always brother. Always.)

Narice motioned to Datarik, not telling him that the transmission was still being broadcast all across the Coven. "Andro... this is Ventash'ma Datarik." Narice said. "He is one of the most senior Ventash'ma."

Datarik watched as Androcles bowed his head slightly in a show of respect to the much older man. "It is an honor sir." He spoke. "It is an honor to see all of you for the first time. I hope it is not the last."

"Prince... Prince Leonidas... what you have done this day. What you have said." Datarik spoke slowly, measuring his words. "What you ask of us... what you demand. It is difficult to grasp what this could mean. It is..."

"My father told me something when I was a boy." Androcles said releasing his grasp on Sadi's hand and removing his arm from Carisia's waist as he stepped forward. "I was twelve and I was leaving my home on Apo Prime for my Agoge here on Earth. I was frightened and did not want to leave. My father nodded and spoke these words to me Ventash'ma Datarik. He said... Nothing worth achieving is ever easy or without pain. The question before us is how much do we want it. How badly do we wish to conquer our goals? The reward to what we achieve is far sweeter than the pain we endure reaching it."

Datarik blinked several times as he looked at Androcles. He turned and looked at the other men and women at the table before turning back to the transmission. "Your father... your father was a wise man."

Andro nodded his head. "Yes." He said with a smile knowing that Martin was probably watching from the ARC ROYAL. "He had his moments."

Andro watched Datarik turn and look at the men and women at the table once more. He watched as each of them nodded almost without hesitation. Datarik turned back to the image of Andro that they all saw from Uzu Ozeib 7.

"Prince Androcles Leonidas... on behalf of the Ventash'ma of the Ruling High Coven... on behalf of the will of our people... we... we wish to turn the page on history that should be left to the past. We wish... we wish to forge a new future."

UZU OZEIB 7 RULING ASSEMBLY CHAMBER

Every head in the room turned at the deafening roar that filled the chamber even from a hundred stories below them. In the streets of the city surrounding the Assembly Building, the citizens of the High Coven roared their approval to the words they were all watching on the many screens. Had Datarik and the others been able to see other planets, within ships across the empire, they would have seen the same reaction. Narice moved to the remaining glass pane that was still standing and looked far below to see the dots that were thousands of men, women and children cheering and clapping in approval. She turned back, and looked at Datarik and the others.

"It appears our people approve of our choice Ventash'ma Datarik." Narice said.

"Narice... honored Ventash'ma of the High Coven... I must take my leave of you now." Andro's voice told them. "You don't know how this knowledge makes me feel. How it makes my people feel. Ask us... ask us and you shall have it."

Datarik bowed his head deeply. "To know that you are willing to do this... that the people of the Lycavorian Union are willing to do this even with the history between us... it gives us hope. Thank you."

Andro nodded his head. "Narice... execute Phase Two and inform the Ventash'ma of what this entails."

Narice nodded. "I will." She said.

Andro looked at her in the transmission. "You are Empress now Narice Leonidas." He said. "You lead your people now. Make them proud."

Narice nodded her head as her eyes became moist. "I will do my very best." She told him as Arrarn came up to her and she wrapped her arms around his waist. "Thank you Androcles. Thank you for believing this could be."

"To the future sister. To the future of us all." Andro said softly.

Narice blinked several times and then the transmission ended. She looked at Arrarn and accepted blissfully the kiss he laid on her. After a long moment she pulled away from him and wiped the tears from her eyes. The cheering and roaring of the thousands in the streets below still filtered to them easily. She took a deep breath and moved to the table, activating another communication.

"Admiral Pontal... have you been monitoring?" She asked surprising the Ventash'ma in the room.

"I... I have indeed Empress Narice Leonidas." Pontal's voice echoed in the chamber. "And the pride that swells within me knows no bounds."

"Admiral... we will need to act quickly." Narice said. "The Kavalian Federation is volatile and Andro's prediction may come to pass. You have secured the outer rim shipyards?"

"We have Empress." Pontal answered. "Though I dare say we needn't have bothered."

"Move your entire command to the designated coordinates and stand by." Narice ordered. "I will have General Cha'talla coordinate with the remaining Fleets and disperse them where needed."

"Admiral Moran's force is still out there Empress." Pontal spoke. "He will have many who were diehard supporters with him. Do not dismiss him or the harm he could do."

"I don't intend too." Narice spoke calmly. "At the moment however, the KFI is the most immediate threat to what we have done."

"Agreed." Pontal said. "I will begin moving my units and contact you when we are in position."

"Alu xuil l'phraktos Admiral." Narice spoke. (Go with the gods)

"Lu'dos nei." Pontal answered. (And you Empress)

Narice looked at Datarik and the others, all of whom had confused looks on their faces. She ignored them for the moment and looked at Cha'talla. "Begin contacting all commanders Cha'talla. Colonel Co'kal can assist you with coordinating their status and positions. We need to move quickly."

Cha'talla nodded. "Consider it done."

Narice looked at Felisa then. "Felisa... I am appointing you as my personal aide and liaison to the Ventash'ma." She said surprising Felisa with her announcement. "Please secure an office for me to work out of. Preferably one close to the roof so that my Bonded Brother is nearby."

Felisa nodded her head slowly. "Of... of course Empress." She stammered.

Narice looked at the Ventash'ma then. "We have many decisions to make and I will be the first one to admit I lack experience. Ventash'ma Datarik I am appointing you as my Chief Advisor, with Ventash'ma Anebal and Ventash'ma Riara as senior Directors."

"What is happening Empress?" Datarik asked her. "Where is Admiral Pontal being sent?"

Narice looked at him. "The KFI have staged nearly twelve Fleet groups near the planet Faront... five light years from Ukwav. Androcles believed this was to be one invasion corridor that they would use when they declared war against the Union. He isn't going to give them the chance."

All of the men and women were stunned into silence for a long moment. Anebal was the one to speak first. "Why would the KFI declare war on the Union?" She gasped.

"What they thought to accomplish by kidnapping For'mya Leonidas will not bear fruit." Narice said. "You all know of what they have done I'm sure."

Datarik nodded. "It has been all over your Netnews, all over The Wilds." He said. "They think to use the child she has given Pusintin in order to see him ascend to the throne of the Union."

Narice nodded. "When they realize this has failed, and it has failed, they just don't know it yet, Androcles believes they will attack. This is one of the corridors he believes they would have used to attack Union space."

"They will discover... they will discover what has happened this day." Datarik said. "The KFI has agents all across the Coven. They must know what has taken place here."

Narice nodded her head. "We figure that will happen within a matter of hours yes." She said.

"They will attack immediately!" Riara snapped.

“We will not be able to counter such an attack!” Another of the Ventash'ma spoke. “Our forces are in disarray! Especially now after...” He looked at Arrarn. “Your brother knew this would happen!” He barked. “He knew the KFI would attack us the moment we agreed to his demands! He has led us to ruin!” The man spat as he came out of his chair. “He has condemned us all!”

“Deck your ass back in that chair old man!” Arrarn snarled. “My brother ain’t as stupid as you think he is! And he always keeps his promises!”

Datarik looked at Narice and saw the small smile on her face. “Empress?” He asked softly.

Narice met his eyes. “When the KFI turns these forces across our border, which all of us believe they will do for they have no choice, when they do this... they will be met by Admiral Pontal, his entire command and ten full Fleet groups of Lycavorian Union ships ready to fight beside us.” She told them. “Androcles Leonidas does not go back on his word. Ever.”

EARTH

SPARTA

KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

The sarcophaguses had been brought to the hospital and placed within the medium sized chapel under heavy Durcunusaan Guard. Hundreds of people had gathered outside the hospital as word spread among the citizens of Sparta of who actually occupied those sarcophaguses. Andro’s conversation with the High Coven Ventash'ma had been broadcast across the entire Lycavorian Union and the knowledge that the remains of King Resumar, Queen Eliani and the Royal Elf Concubine Na’rien now resided within King Yelu Memorial Hospital was quickly spreading across the entire planet. Being the consummate politician that she was, Deia quickly had her staff do a sounding of the consensus of Andro’s actions. Even Deia had been stunned at the results. From all walks of culture and society within the Lycavorian Union, the vast majority of opinions on what Androcles Leonidas had done was overwhelming positive. An ongoing war and conflict that had claimed hundreds of billions of lives, most of them Lycavorian, over the course of nearly eighteen thousand years had finally been brought to an end. This showed Deia just how far the Union had come even from just four thousand years ago, and how much they embraced the Leonidas family.

Deia sat in her hover chair now in the back of the chapel, her dark eyes gazing upon the broad back of her nephew as he sat between the sarcophaguses of his great grandfather and great grandmother. Her head turned slightly when she smelled and felt the presence of another enter the chapel and she saw the young woman Shiria quietly close the door behind her. Well, perhaps not so young considering she was over ten thousand years old herself, but far younger than Deia in any event. Deia’s eyes watched as the only living Pralor made her way silently up to where Deia sat and settled into the bench beside her. They had talked only briefly since she had arrived, and her identity was being withheld for the moment by Andro’s order. Shiria’s dark eyes glanced at Andro’s back and then looked at Deia.

“He is... he is very spiritual.” Shiria said softly.

Deia nodded turning back to look at Andro. “Yes... he is.” She replied softly. “Martin is no different, but Androcles is more like his mother in that he is not afraid to show this side of himself.”

“My time with Resumar showed me he was the same way.” Shiria spoke. “It is a strength of your people.”

Deia smiled and nodded her head. “Yes it is.”

“He is praying?” Shiria asked.

Deia shook her head. “Yes... no... I think in his own way he is asking for guidance.” She replied. “Contemplating what he must now do.”

“He questions himself?” Shiria asked somewhat surprised. “He has ended a war that has persisted for sixteen millennia by all accounts. And done it with one sweeping action. How can he question himself?”

“He and his father are no different than any great leaders throughout history.” Deia said. “They all questioned if their decisions were correct. Yet once they made up their minds, they pursued their goals with an indomitable will. I have watched Martin stand under the stars for hours and question his decisions. In the end, he was proven correct, but that does not mean he didn't question them at the beginning."

"Do you know what he is planning?" Shiria asked.

Deia shook her head. "No." She answered. "I do know that whatever he does, it will be driven by the love he has for his family and his people. The Kavalians... his uncle... they made a mistake by taking For'mya. How big a mistake they will discover in the future."

Shiria shook her head. "As much time as I spent among them, no matter what I did, I could not move them from their path of violence and destruction. It is ultimately what drove me into hiding."

Deia looked at her. "Are you happy to be away from them?" She asked.

"I am happy to be among those with Pralor blood in their veins." Shiria answered as her voice took on a note of wistfulness. "I am so happy that I no longer need to hide what I am. Arriving here... moving through the city and seeing all the people... feeling the Pralor blood within them, even if it was just a little, I haven't felt that in so long." Shiria looked at her. "It is wondrous."

"Will you go back?" Deia asked.

Shiria shook her head immediately. "Resumar, Isra, Tarifa, they will rescue those who I care the most about. I have little doubt there. There is nothing for me there now. Here... here I can be among those who descend from the greatest of the Pralors. Sumar. Wayonn. So many others that went with them on that ill-fated mission. They live on here... all over. I imagine I will be overwhelmed when I am finally able to go to Apo Prime. That is where most of your people have settled isn't it?"

Deia nodded. "It was in the beginning yes. Now... there are many who are moving to Earth and other places. Spreading their wings. When Martin decided that they would stay here six months out of every year I think everyone knew that Earth would eventually become the center of it all. This is where Sparta is... this is now where our Kings and Queens are laid. The Spartan way of life took hold many years before Martin ever returned to us, and when he did return, well... Lycavorian Spartan isn't just a term anymore. It is a way of life to our people."

"Queens?" Shiria asked.

"Na'rien will always be a Queen in the hearts and minds of our people no matter that she was concubine." Deia answered. "Resumar and Eliani made sure of that and our people will honor her in that way."

Shiria took her hand. "I wish to learn all I can." She said. "I was able to read and learn a little when I was with Resumar, but we had so much to do. I want to learn everything. How it all came to be. Wayonn would never tell me the entire story... I think it was too painful for him. I wish to fulfill the role that I believe fate has laid before me."

Deia looked at her. "What is that?"

"Teacher." Shiria said softly. "Helen is the Feravomir as all of you call her. She has the memories and knowledge of Canth. Wayonn's son. I can not replace that for I do not have that. But I can teach others what I know. And I can provide knowledge to all who will listen."

Deia smiled gently. "We will need your knowledge in the future I think." She said. She looked at Andro's back. "He will need your knowledge."

"Resumar has told me things about him." Shiria said. "Shown me things within his mind. Sumar's blood burns brightly within him and his father. Within their family. It has passed down through the generations losing none of its potency. I don't need to be near them to feel that. To see it." Shiria stopped talking for a long moment and Deia nudged her.

"What is it?" She asked softly.

Shiria looked at her. "I was just thinking that perhaps... perhaps the essence of my people is not lost. Perhaps Sumar did what he did because he knew we would be lost to the memories. And in doing so he passed the essence of our people to yours. The power. The knowledge. The compassion. The drive. I have already seen flashes of this within Androcles and his father. It has manifested within them."

"What has?" Deia asked.

"It is what Sumar and Xaxon were known for." Shiria said. "I studied them when I was in school. Wayonn has not told you?"

Deia shook her head. "I have not had much chance to speak with him. He has been beside Martin ever since arriving within the Union."

Shiria nodded her head in a knowing manner. “Yes of course. Helen is Martin’s seer... and Wayonn’s granddaughter... and he is insuring she has the skills and knowledge to guide Martin. That is why he left Dutkne with Androcles.”

“I don’t follow.” Deia said.

Shiria looked at her. “Sumar and Xaxon... they were part of a Warrior Sect of the Pralor people. This sect was a very small portion of Pralors whose Etheric abilities evolved to a point where they were able to physically manifest their Etheric power... their Mindvoice power as you call it. They were supremely powerful. Able to do things that no one else could. There were barely a thousand of them at their peak, men and women, among the trillions of our people. No one knows exactly why it occurred in so few Pralors, perhaps some sort of genetic disposition that no one ever discovered. They were revered among our people, and any Pralor would know them no matter where they went.”

“Has Wayonn told Martin this?” Deia asked.

“If he hasn’t yet, he will soon.” Shiria answered. “It can’t be hidden any longer because these powers are manifesting in Martin and Andro. And perhaps in others as well. The closest reference to them that I can recall from any history comes from ancient Earth history actually. They would have been called Paladins. Holy warriors. Sumar and Xaxon were part of only a handful of this sect, these Paladins, that survived our first war with the species that wiped out my people and all we had built. The Scourge they are called. A vile and evil species, void of emotion or reason. Sumar and the other Paladins were the ones who ended the first war as I said, but at great cost. Their number was reduced to barely a hundred by the war’s end. A war that Xaxon started because of his greed for more power.”

“That is why he was punished in the fashion he was?” Deia asked. “Separated from his body.”

Shiria nodded. “His mind was separated from his physical body and placed in a Psionic chamber yes. I don’t know all of what happen... I’m only telling you what I read in our history books. Wayonn was with Sumar... he knows everything. Each of these warrior sect, these Paladins, had another Pralor that provided a balance to them. A guide if you will. Wherever they went... their guide went with them. They were from a different sect of our people that was much more common. A Mage Sect if you will. Each warrior was paired with a Mage and they remained together for the duration of their lives. They became pairs if you will. Bound by their power and an unbreakable friendship that would grow through the years. The Mage’s provided calming balances to the Paladins. They could channel their powers through each other which allowed both of them to focus more. It is my understanding that Martin did not begin to actually manifest these abilities until after he met Helen?”

Deia nodded. “Yes... about a year after he returned to us. But it was during the events when Aricia was taken from him and after that they truly began.”

Shiria nodded. “And when Canth passed his knowledge and memories to her, it triggered the dormant blood within Helen. Wayonn and Canth’s blood, since both of them were from this Mage Sect of our people.”

“But Androcles has always been able to do these things Shiria.” Deia said. “Even as a small boy.”

Shiria nodded. “I am not completely sure... but I believe it is because of his dragon. She provided the balance to him, just as Martin’s did for him. At least until Helen became Bonded to Arzoal. Arzoal was a Pralor before her mind and essence was transferred to her dragon form. She would have known and seen what Martin and his son would become. When that happened, then Helen may have realized what she was meant for because Arzoal told her I imagine. No doubt Arzoal also told Elynth as well when she was very young. That is why Wayonn’s grandson Dutkne and Androcles came together so easily when they finally met. Dutkne is of Wayonn’s blood... just as Helen is... and he is Andro’s Mage.”

Deia shook her head. “This is all... this is all quite a bit to take in.” She said. “Why are you telling me this now Shiria?”

“You are the leader of the Lycavorian Union Deia.” Shiria said. “The political arm of your Union. There is a reason you have survived this long. To see Martin take power. To be able to witness everything that has happened. Martin and Andro are just the first Deia. Others will begin to manifest this ability. Sumar’s blood was the strongest, but there are others that were with City Ship 41 who had the potential or Sumar would not have assigned them to his ship. Perhaps even City Ship 19 as well. Sumar was Captain of CS41 and a Paladin and he would have found them and had them assigned to his ship. He was going to spend the decades it would take for the seeding mission to run its course to train them. He and Wayonn. Obviously when they crashed on Lycavore things changed. The records of the crew must be in CS41. Those Sumar had singled out. Avatar 41 would have this knowledge. He had to have recognized Martin as Sumar's descendant and a Paladin the moment he came in contact with him. I imagine Martin's other children will begin to show signs of this manifestation. At least those who are not of mixed blood."

"Denali?" Deia asked. "Nara? Deion?"

Shiria nodded her head. "Those who are of pure Lycavorian blood yes. Though it is also my understanding that Martin's other children have developed gifts as well. Your niece Zarah, because of what happened when she was a child, the others who are bonded to dragons. These bonds seem to increase their abilities to some extent. Without actually speaking to Arzoal, I do not know for sure how far their abilities will grow. They will never be Paladins as Martin and Andro, but they could be powerful nonetheless. When SPARTA'S WRATH returns to Earth I can ask Androcles to release databanks that were previously locked to me because of my status as a junior scientist. They would have this knowledge and we can begin to find them."

"Why Andro?" Deia asked. "Why not Resumar?"

"The blocks can only be released by a Paladin." Shiria said with sort of an impish grin. "I am not as reserved as Wayonn in many ways. It is why I left the technology for the Spartans here on Earth. He was not happy about that... but I knew it needed to be done. The archives will need to be released and only a Paladin or a Mage can do that. Then we can access these archives and perhaps even Sumar's notes and discover these descendants."

Deia's eyes grew wide. "Jomann! Denali!" She gasped.

Shiria met her gaze. "You know of someone already?"

"Androcles's Captain." Deia said with a nod. "I saw the reports from when Androcles rescued Caliria. Jomann showed flashes of what you speak. Not on the scale of Andro... but something similar. Denali as well."

"You know this Jomann?" Shiria asked.

Deia nodded. "I knew his ancestors. And his Lycavorian blood is exceptionally pure." She answered. "He and Martin's daughter Eliani have become mated. Anomes. And that is no small affair with our people considering she is half Hadarian."

Shiria nodded her head slowly. "Then it is beginning." She said.

"And why does this concern me?" Deia asked again. "This would fall into an area that Helen and Wayonn would know more about."

Shiria nodded. "Yes... but they are gone for the moment. Months at least. Perhaps longer. I don't believe Androcles would agree to such a thing without his father's guidance. I sense he fears his abilities and what he is capable of to some extent. We will need to discover these men and women within the Union. They will become invaluable to the Union in the future that is coming. Whatever Martin discovered on CS41, whatever scrolls or archives that Sumar left that enabled him to learn what he has; to pass this knowledge to his son; this knowledge will need to be shared with those who are found. They will need to be trained and schooled."

"Then... then it's true?" Deia said softly. "These... these Scourge... they are going to come here?"

Shiria nodded her head solemnly. "Yes. I believe as Wayonn does... we have gained more time with recent events that have taken place. But they will come. If they are not already on their way."

"Why?" Deia asked.

"They exist now for one purpose." Shiria said. "That is to eradicate anyone with Pralor blood. No matter how small the amount may be. This is their purpose. Their goal. It is what drives them."

"And I ask again..." Deia spoke. "Why?"

Shiria met her eyes. "Because my people are responsible for what they became." She answered. "The Scourge exist because of us."

Deia blinked in shock several times and almost didn't recognize Andro's voice when it carried to her.

"Tenna... it's time." Andro said standing in front of her. "Since you are here Shiria you may as well know what is going to happen."

"Yes..." Deia stammered. "Yes... I am ready." She spoke looking back to Shiria. "We... we will talk more Shiria. And soon."

Shiria nodded. "I believe that would be best."

SECONDARY UNION COMMAND CENTER CRANAE ISLAND

The briefing room was completely full. The twenty odd chairs around the huge table filled as well as the three dozen chairs along the walls. The single plate glass window ran the length of the room on the south side, the beach and water of the Laconia Gulf the backdrop. Part of Andro's villa was visible as well. These men and women had arrived over the last few days from every part of the Lycavorian Union. They were the Commanders of Combined Fleet Groups or Lycavorian Sector Defense forces. The senior most leadership within the entire Union. On the wall opposite the glass, two large monitors held the faces of two dozen more men and women. They were Elves, Algolians, Lycavorians, and Vampires. The leaders of the large and potent Union military.

Androcles stood with Riall and Ben O'Conner near the immense star chart. Deia occupied the head of the table, Sadi beside her, with Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria on either side of her. Shiria sat on Deia's opposite side, the rest of the table filled with many Andro knew well. Lynwe, Selene, his Aunt Aihola... so many others. He let his eyes wander across the many faces silently, his arms across his chest. They had fought beside his father decades ago, fought to free Earth, free Sparta. They had fought beside his father during the ill-fated Kavalian Excursion and the Evolli War. Now he would ask them to fight beside him. And they would without question or hesitation because they were of like mind. And they would never desert the morals and values that got them to this point.

Ben turned back to face Andro from the massive star chart and his hand dropped from his ear after he acknowledged the message he had just received. "That was Manda." He spoke. "Task Force Arizona is in position and standing by."

Andro nodded. "Thank you Uncle Ben." He said softly.

Riall put his hand on Andro's shoulder. "It is to you now Andro." He said. "Do not doubt what these men and women feel for you. It is the same that they feel for your father." He said in a whisper. "You lead us in his stead... and that is something none of us question."

Andro looked at him. "I hope so grandfather."

Riall nodded. "Let's begin." He said. "We have much to do."

Andro nodded and took a deep breath before stepping up behind Deia and catching everyone's attention. The room became silent as they watched him put his hands on his Aunt's shoulders. "I want to thank all of you for coming. Some of you came from across the Union... and some of you join us from your commands." He spoke motioning to the faces of the men and women on the monitors. "It is now time for you to know everything." They watched as Andro moved around next to Sadi and she held out the small holotransmitter. Andro took it from her and placed it flat on the table. Resumar's face and body shimmered into view with Athani beside him and the two hulking Avatars in the background. "Fervon." Andro greeted Resumar.

Resumar nodded. "Andro."

"Everyone is here now Res." Andro said. "Time to let everyone know."

"Bout time." Resumar stated. "We're chomping at the bit here."

Andro smiled and took a position between Sadi and Ne'Veha who always managed to somehow sit next to each other, just as Carisia and Lu'ria did.

"By now all of you have heard about what has taken place with the High Coven." Andro said. "Our conflict with them is now a thing of the past and that is where I want it to remain. It is time to move forward."

"Avoi." The female voice spoke and they all saw the female Lycavorian on the monitor bow her head.

"What I am about to tell you will become public knowledge in just under three hours when the Senate finishes their vote." Androcles said. "Once you depart and return to your commands you may let your officers and crew know." Andro took another deep breath and then continued. "As you all know... the Union Senate is voting on whether to acknowledge that the child my uncle fathered with my mother has a legitimate claim to the Union throne. I stand here now and tell you that will never take place. The Union Senate will vote this down, and in the same process they will issue an Edict of War against the Kavalian Federation." Andro saw their eyes grow wider in some cases because not all of these men and women knew his father was still alive. That would change in a matter of seconds.

“The Kavalian Federation has committed more acts of war against our people in the last weeks than I can begin to list.” Andro said. “You will ask now if the grievances they had in regards to me training High Coven dragons is true. The answer is yes.” Andro began pacing along the large plate glass window. “I was training the High Coven dragons to fight as Bonded Pairs. I knew they would be used against the High Coven. As did my father and Prime Minister Deia as well as the Dragon Elder Council. Right now Admiral Riall is sending those of you not present here a coded burst detailing everything that was discussed and covered when that decision was made. As well as what happened in the following weeks. I will hold nothing back from you... we just do not have the time to cover it all right now.” Andro turned and began to pace back in the other direction.

“The Kavalian Federation’s actions were not because of me training the High Coven dragons. Intelligence was revealed to us that they were doing this as part of an elaborate ploy to put Marshall Pusintin, my father’s brother, on the throne of the Union without actually going to war with us. They thought they could use some obscure wording within the Lycavorian Chronicles of Law that was taken out of the context they were meant when written to do this. They usurped my mother Anja from her position as Queen of Hadaria to further this goal. They destroyed eleven of our Drow outposts in a way so barbaric it makes me shudder. They did this to position warships within the Farnuri Expanse. To hide them from us so they could attack directly into the heart of Union space when the time came. And then they destroyed the Senate Office Building killing nearly a thousand of our people in the process. They took my mother from us. We... we could have forgiven everything in order to stop a war... but the moment they took my mother they altered everything. They knew my mother was in Phase because of the traitor Laustinos. My Uncle took her against her will. He raped her. And using Kavalian medicines and chemicals he forced her body to give him children far sooner than she normally would. I have spoken to them. Fedor and Eirene. My brother and sister. Our brother and sister. They are with their true father now. Their true father and my mothers.”

This statement caused gasps and wide eyes to turn to him. Andro nodded his head. “No... my father is not dead.” He stated calmly. “He is very much alive. The circumstances behind this are detailed in the packets and transmissions you are all receiving or already have. I am the bearer of his apology to you and all of your soldiers and airmen for not revealing this to you sooner. If we had, the Kavalians would have killed my mother immediately and that we could not allow.”

Andro stopped walking now and stood against the backdrop of the huge window and the Laconia Gulf.

“I am about to do something that the Lycavorian Union has never done before.” Andro stated firmly. Sadi looked at him with loving jungle green eyes for she knew he was now set on his path and had no more doubts about what he was going to do. “This is a decision I have made without my Tenna’s knowledge as Prime Minister.” Andro looked at her. “I can only hope she finds it within herself to forgive me.” Deia looked confused as she met his eyes and she shook her head.

“Andro I don’t know what...” Deia began but Andro’s words quieted her.

“I will not stand by and watch my uncle and the Kavalian Empire invade our Union and take more lives while we do nothing. The intelligence we have received indicates this is exactly what they were going to do should their ploy fail.” Andro continued. “Well, it has failed, though I doubt they know it just yet. I will be there when the Senate informs them of their vote, and I will tell them in terms they seemed to understand. Right now however, right now I am going to do something the Union has never done. I am going to attack first and with complete surprise. My brother Resumar is now in command of a Pralor Heavy Cruiser Class warship that they have named SPARTA’S WRATH. A ship far more advanced than anything we have in our current inventory. That will change soon I hope, but right now I am going to use that ship to let the Kavalians know we will not allow these crimes to go unpunished. At this moment Admiral Miranda Lorian is currently holding position with three Block I ARIZONA-Class Strike Cruisers and all of their escorts as well as three TYPE I Alpha Dragon Transports with a thousand specially trained dragons that I have been training in secret for the last years. They are two point three light years from the six largest Kavalian cloning centers within their space. Admiral Zesico is at this moment monitoring over six hundred Kavalian warships in the Farnuri Expanse that were preparing to invade across our borders.” Andro could see the faces of all of them and the shock that was there. But he could also see the determination and pleasure that they would finally be able to hit back against those who had done this. “Fervon?” Andro asked.

“I’m here Andro.” Resumar answered.

“How long do Avi and 341 estimate?” Andro asked.

“One point seven hours.” Resumar answered immediately. “We’ll drop Uncle Isra and the RAGE OF ACHILLES to conduct the snatch mission and continue on. 341 confirms two jumps to cover the distance to Admiral Zesico. Uncle Isra and Aunt Tarifa will exfil on the ACHILLES.”

“Manda?” Andro spoke.

Miranda Lorian’s voice filled the room now. “We’ll move into position and wait until you have given the signal from the Senate meeting. We’ll hit them thirty seconds after that Andro. Preliminary sensor sweeps indicate only one Fleet Group and a smattering of other ships in the area and nothing close enough to pose a serious threat of reinforcing once our attack begins.”

“Please tell Daurgo that they are to spare nothing of those facilities. Not even insects!” Andro snarled. “I want nothing to remain except scorched ground and death.”

There was a pause and then Miranda’s voice answered. “He says he will make it happen.” Miranda answered. “What about us up here?”

Andro blinked. “No prisoners Manda.” Andro spoke. “As with the Dragon Brigade, leave nothing living. Nothing. I want them to know what they have unleashed with their actions! I want them to feel the pain they have caused our people. Our Union. And I want them to know that this is the pain that we will exact upon them everywhere they turn and think they are safe.”

“Avoi Andro.” Miranda answered. “We’ll get it done.”

Andro let his eyes sweep the room and the monitors. “I have ended one war and I will start another in the space of a few hours.” Androcles spoke. “I have not... I have not come to this decision lightly and I alone will bear the responsibilities of my decisions. I can not...”

“Milord Prince?” The voice interrupted Andro and he turned to see General Vistr step forward.

“General?” Andro asked.

Vistr had been a legend long before his notorious split from Deia’s orders to remain with Martin on Ukwav more than two decades ago. He was more than a legend now, having formed the famous Durcunusaan with General Vengal in the time since then. He was an inspiration to nearly every Union soldier.

“Many of us fought with your father on Ukwav Milord.” Vistr spoke confidently. “We did not follow him because of his name, nor did we follow him because he was King. We followed him because of who he was inside! Because of what he represented to us! The future of our people! You are more like him than many of us care to admit to you openly Androcles Leonidas. And like him you represent our future. A future these nubous Kavalian dogs think they can take from us. Enough of these speeches of responsibility and who will hold the blame. Your father tried to give them as well. I will tell you the same thing I told him all those years ago on Ukwav. This belongs to all of us. And all of us will defend it and fight for it to our last dying breath. We have never started a war no... but damned if we haven’t finished quite a nubous few of them. I say enough talk and let’s kick these Kavalian pigs right in the nor so hard they sibfla out their gutter mouths! We will show them that we will finish what their fool actions have started!” Vistr took a deep breath and looked at Sadi and Deia. “And forgive my language Princesses. Prime Minister.”

Deia couldn’t help but smile at Vistr, her eyes moist. “I thought you were malda that day Vistr.” She exclaimed. “I am so very happy to see you are still just as mad.” Vistr gave her a grin as she looked at Andro. “What more can I say Mandri?” She asked. “Kicking them in the nor so they sibfla out their gutter mouths does sound deliciously delightful.”

Andro smiled as well as soft laughter filtered through the men and women in the room and watching from the monitors. His smile quickly faded and he looked up once more. “Resumar?”

“Fervon?”

Andro turned to look at his brother in the transmission. “Inform Avi and 341 to begin powering up SPARTA’S WRATH. By my order, acting as Crown Prince in our father’s stead, I am instructing you to initiate CRIMSON RETRIBUTION.” Andro turned to look at the others. “In just under three more hours the Lycavorian Union will be fully engaged my friends. May the gods and the spirits of my grandparents shine their blessings upon us and watch over all we do.”

“Avoi!” Every person present bowed their heads and uttered that single word.
The Lycavorian Union was going to war.

CHAPTER EIGHTY-TWO

ARC ROYAL

UNION SPACE

.09 LY FROM JUMP GATE 35

Wayonn moved down the corridor of deck nine on the ARC ROYAL. He was becoming much more familiar with this new ship, familiar and comfortable. He hadn't felt so alive in centuries. The feelings he had sweeping through him he hadn't felt since the last days he stood beside Sumar and the others of his people. The original bloodlines of Lycavorians who coursed with pure Pralor blood. He felt younger, charged with energy and passion, exactly like he felt when he and Sumar were only six thousand years old. Exactly as he felt after being turned by his Lycavorian mate and wife. He missed her terribly, but their children's children lived on and once more they would have a hand in shaping destiny. Helen, Dutkne, and the family he now called his own. Martin reminded Wayonn of Sumar so much it was frightening. Not only did he look remarkably like his great grandfather, his mannerisms and demeanor were also so similar. And the love he held for his wives and mates and his children was his strength. He could inspire rocks to fight beside him, and this trait had carried over to Androcles, and more than likely to all of his children. Perhaps... perhaps the hope that his people could not find would bestow itself upon his new people. His new blood.

Wayonn turned the corner and saw the two Durcunusaan soldiers standing guard outside the secure COM room. They bowed their heads to him as he approached.

“Val'istar Wayonn.” The senior man spoke as he reached back behind him and his hand touched the panel on the wall.

Wayonn nodded to the men and moved quickly into the secure communications center. The part of the ARC ROYAL that held their Quantum Communications Array. An advanced communications array based on technology derived from CS41. It allowed for instantaneous communications nearly anywhere. Right now it was active and as he entered the darkened outer control center he saw Helen, Aricia and all of Martin's mates standing near the three men and two women who operated the system. Through the clear floor to ceiling glass he could see Martin standing between two sarcophaguses, Androcles in the transmission with him. Wayonn came up beside Aricia, For'mya pressed tightly against her side, Anja just behind her. Dysea stood between Isabella and Cirith as they watched father and son gaze upon the remains of their blood. The holographic images were nearly perfect in their operation, Androcles looking as if he was on the ship with them, only a slight flicker every few seconds proving this was not the case.

“What is...?” Wayonn began to speak softly but Aricia and Helen held up their fingers to their lips silencing him. Wayonn then heard Andro speaking and he turned to watch.

“... Remain in Sparta's main church until you return. Our people need to see them, it is their right as much as ours.” Androcles said as he watched his father walk slowly around the sarcophaguses. “We can intern them with grandfather Leonidas when you return. You should be the one to do this father.”

Martin looked at and gazed at the image of his oldest son. “You should have told me what you were going to do boy.” He growled softly.

Andro nodded. “I know. But what would you have said father?” He asked. “You love our mother Isabella, that is without question or doubt, we all know that father. You also have a deep respect for all vampires who call the Union home. Aunt Selene and Aunt Aihola among just a few who are the perfect example. But you would not have done what I did. It needed to end father, before it destroyed us all. Because of... because of the way Xerxes treated grandfather Leonidas you would never have been able to forgive that. I did what you knew needed to be done but could not do yourself. The hatred and distrust you have... you did not pass this to me or my brothers and sisters father. You and our mothers allowed us to live our lives as you taught us. Why?”

Martin glanced at the floor quickly and then looked back up. "Because it was my hate." He said softly.

Andro nodded his head. "If Carisia and Narice and Lucia are any example father, the vast majority of the people of the High Coven are not like Aikiro and Veldruk and the others like them. They want the same things we do! It had to be done and I have made both of our peoples stronger father. In the end... that is what matters. You taught me that."

Martin grinned sheepishly. "I did didn't I?" He said. His smile went away. "What about Moran?"

Andro shrugged. "No one has heard of him since Yuri left his ship. He is out there, but at the moment he is a non-factor. He has not the strength or influence that he used too. I will find him and his son. I will find them eventually and when I do, Dante Moran, I will bleed him like a pig father and then I will watch as he bakes on the fields of Ukwav until the flesh peels from his skin in the sun and at the right moment I will drive my sword through his skull and Xaxon's essence will have no where to go except into the nubous abyss. His father I will leave for you."

"That's... that's pretty severe boy." Martin said looking at him.

"For what he did to Zarah, he will be getting off easy." Andro snarled.

"And Yuri?" Martin asked.

Andro shook his head. "I could not kill her father. You did not see her as I did. I will make no excuses for her... but I looked within her and saw someone different than we have known all these years. This Immortal who has claimed her... Pa'cour... she carries his child and she does so with pride and grace. She knows what she has done can never be forgotten, but someday maybe we will forgive her. I think maybe she hopes for this. Only fate knows the answer to that. The child she carries could be the beginning of her redemption. We will see. My mothers and the supplies I sent arrived I take it."

Martin nodded. "The weapons and armor was a little much." He said.

"If what I felt from Fedor and Eirene was accurate then there will be many among Muton's people who will gladly take up arms." Andro said. "Kavalian and Pralor blood..." Andro said shaking his head. "Who would have thought?"

Martin smiled. "Tell me about it."

"Do you think you will find them father?" Androcles asked.

Martin shook his head. "The map Muton has put together is pretty accurate." He said in reply. "But it's been there for thousands of years. I don't know what we will find; there were only a handful of Pralors who left Elear with the first group of dragons. And then the ship didn't return for nine thousand years after it deliver the second group. We may find nothing but ruins and bones but it is worth the risks." Martin looked at him.

"Considering what is coming... it is worth the risks."

Andro nodded. "I agree." He said. "As do Shiria and Tenna Deia."

"No one must know what we know son." Martin said. "Not yet. Keep it within our family right now. If it got out... there would be panic and..."

"I know father. Only Tenna Deia and Shiria know for the moment." Andro answered. "And you know Sadi and the others will say nothing."

Martin nodded. "I know." He said. "They are getting along I take it?"

Andro nodded. "Surprisingly... they have not been apart for the last few hours. They are in discussions about something I have not paid much attention to. Paladins or something like that from the pieces of their conversations I have heard. Shiria and I will sit down after the Senate vote is over I'm sure."

"You're sure about your plans?" Martin asked.

Andro nodded now with confidence. "Yes. We will have complete surprise and superior firepower on target. Just as you taught me. I have sent Carina back to Apo Prime to go through an accelerated Tactical School. She helped to plan our initial operations and with the schooling she will get, when she returns she will be invaluable. My actions will buy us the time we need to transform our industry. She estimates at least three months... possibly four. It will be enough. What about my uncle?"

Martin looked at him. "He's alive." He said. "We had to leave before I could kill his sorry ass. The lives of the dragon hatchlings were too important. I... I may have goaded him into doing something that helps you."

Andro shook his head. "I don't understand."

"He's the best tactical leader they have." Martin spoke calmly. "He found your mother For'mya somehow, even after the scans we ran. Now that Anja is here, we'll figure out how. We agree that getting him to follow us is better for you. If I can't be there with you... then I can damn well insure you have every advantage. Taking your uncle out of the equation will only help you."

Andro nodded. "True." He said. "Will he do it?"

Martin shrugged. "He's an arrogant mida. And..."

"What?"

Martin looked at him. "I think he's in love with your mother."

Andro's eyes grew wide. "You are joking." He gasped.

Martin shook his head. "No... I wish I was." He said. "As I was... as I was beating his ass I saw it within his surface thoughts." Martin shrugged again. "It's no matter. Hopefully between this and what I think I saw he'll follow us."

"And what does mother think of this?" Andro asked.

Martin chuckled. "When I told her she said I better find him first because she will cut his nor off and feed them to him."

Andro grimaced and shook himself in the transmission. "That is painful just thinking about it." He said. "Father... Fedor and Eirene... they...?"

Martin smiled. "Right now they are in the landing bay getting to know their Bonded Ones." He said. "You... you felt that within them? You and Elynth?"

"Faintly yes. We didn't know they would find their Bonded Brother or sister where they did though." Andro answered.

"I will make sure they are here next time we talk." He said. "We'll remain in contact, but let's keep transmissions to every two weeks."

Andro nodded his head. "That will give the engineers time to install a newer QCR on the SCIMITAR." He said. "Uncle Ben sent me an updated status on all projects at Dreamland. All of the Block II ARIZONA Class will be finished by the end of next year. He has expanded the shipyards by a factor of four to accommodate this. He has also drafted several new engineers and ship builders and brought them into the fold."

Martin nodded. "No more Andro. Dreamland is our ace in the hole. The more people who know about what goes on there the better the chances it will be discovered. We can't let that happen."

Andro nodded. "Uncle Ben knows the risks. Don't worry."

"Watch over your brothers and sisters boy." Martin said.

"I always do father." Andro answered with a smile.

Martin moved closer to the image of his oldest son. "Androcles... you... you continue to make me the proudest father in the galaxy. I don't tell you... I don't tell you enough but I love you son."

"I love you as well father." Andro told him. "Pass on the love of my brothers and sisters to our mothers. And tell them I will watch over them."

"I will. Two weeks from today." Martin said. "We'll talk again two weeks from today."

"I'll have my people on Cranae Island ready."

"Androcles..." Martin spoke. "Have Armetus and Marcie activate the Nexus Grid."

Andro's eyes narrowed slightly. "That will not make us any friends father." He said.

"Fuck'em!" Martin hissed. "The Kavalians outnumber us five to one in many cases. The Nexus Grid will help us to level the playing field."

Andro nodded his head. "I'll see to it. I must go father. We will speak again in two weeks and I will have more for you."

Martin nodded. "Go with the gods son. Go with the gods."

"And you father. All of you." Andro answered just before his image disappeared and Martin was left in the large empty circular room alone.

Martin stood for a moment alone, his hands clasped behind his back, contemplating all that was happening. He looked up when he felt Aricia lead everyone into the communications room. His dark brown eyes took in each of his exquisitely beautiful mates and wives, and felt their strength course through him. His eyes fell on For'mya as she came up to him alongside Aricia and Anja and he pulled her close to him, lowering his head to her golden blond hair and inhaling deeply of her sweet orchid scent. All their scents filtered to him and filled him with peace.

Wayonn waited for a moment and then broke into the silence. “The crews are nearly finished transferring all of the equipment Androcles sent.” He spoke. “Daniel is waiting with Muton and his son on the bridge. The first jumps are already calculated and Captain Fang says we are ready.” Martin looked at him and nodded. “Then let’s get this party going.” He said.

KAVALIAN SPACE CABELIR

Isra held up his hand signaling those behind him to stop and move to the sides of the file they were traveling in. His wolf blood was surging through him at the exertion and being so deep inside enemy space. It had been a long time since he felt this alive, and he could feel Aelnala’s own excitement sweeping through him as she circled the dark skies above with Roluth, Sorran and Mirra in close formation with her. She was senior to the four dragons, not only the oldest but also the one with the most combat experience. They would react off of what she did during the operation.

Isra’s deep violet eyes studied the six meter high steel and concrete wall fifty meters to his front. They had moved quickly and efficiently to this point from where the two STRIKER DTs had landed a kilometer back. It had been a wild ride up until now so far as Isra was concerned. Watching as SPARTA’S WRATH shuddered and shook off the twenty meters of ten thousand year old rock and trees and dirt to rise majestically into the sky was a sight he would not soon forget. He could feel the pulsing supremacy of the ship as it rose through the clouds into orbit of Ritaah, fully seven and a half kilometers of devastating power that was once more free. As Resumar directed Avi and 341 in guiding the massive ship back into the stars, Isra and the others could only watch in awe. They could almost feel the rumbling influence as the ship’s pure Phased Quantum Fusion Drive came to life once more, throbbing with unrestrained power and authority. The first jump had brought them to within three million kilometers of Cabelir, well past the vaunted planetary defenses the Kavalian homeworld was known for. It took exactly four point seven seconds for the RAGE OF ACHILLES to be released from the cavernous landing bay of the Pralor Cruiser, and then SPARTA’S WRATH was gone as it engaged its PQF drive once more.

As the RAGE OF ACHILLES closed on Cabelir, Isra and his strike force made ready. The two STRIKERS were launched as the RAGE, her Shroud making her invisible to anyone who might be watching, skimmed the upper atmosphere on the very edge of her ability to come close to a planet. It was no simple feat for a fifteen hundred meter long ship to skim the atmosphere of a planet. Their Shroud shields and the noise reducing retro-engines on every STRIKER allowed them to land without incident. From the field they had broken into their assault teams and headed out.

Isra felt Tarifa come up beside him as silently as a ghost and he smiled inwardly as he looked at his sapphire eyed elven wife and mate. Twenty-six years they had been together along with their Drow Mistress Aihola. Isra could not imagine being without either of them, for they each held a part of him. Looking at the new Governor of Sparta in daylight and wearing casual clothes you would never mistake the surreal beauty Tarifa projected for a seasoned and lethal warrior. Yet she was every bit as deadly as a Pit Viper. Longs hours constantly training with her Drow lover had honed her abilities to perfection, and even longer hours running great distances with her Lycavorian husband had given her a figure that would cause the tongues of most male wolves to drag on the ground. Tarifa and Aihola however, they belonged to him completely.

Isra commanded this Assault Team of fifteen. Dario, Channa and Ckhoa were assigned to him along with ten of Mican’s best trained commandos. They would move directly to where the female workers in the compound would be gathered by Ckhoa’s sister Poysha. Colonel Vonis commanded the second team which included Mican, Karun and Ardis, Isra and Tarifa’s oldest and most skilled daughter. They would move for the secondary Command and Control Building in order to confuse the Kavalian troops that were assigned as security within the massive compound. It was a very risky operation, but what information female Kavalians assigned to the compound knew and had access too was well worth the risk. Isra, Vonis, Ckhoa and Mican had spent hours planning this mission right down to every detail they could possibly generate. None of the thirty-seven Kavalian females who worked inside the compound had any qualms about leaving. They had lived lives of harsh treatment and being sexual objects for far too long. Ckhoa carried the device that would deactivate the explosive capsules in their skulls thereby freeing them of their captivity. Poysha had worked diligently to insure all of them wanted to leave, for once they escaped into Union territory they would never be able to return home. It did not come as a surprise to her that none of them cared about that. Their daily exposure to Union Netnews channels and countless bits of information and intelligence showed all of them what it was they were missing. They had been abandoned by their Prides in order to gain favor, implanted with deadly explosive capsules, forced to undergo Biogenic treatments to alter their appearance and then used as sex objects and expendable personnel. None of them cared that they would never see their homes or families again. All of them hoped for futures within the Lycavorian Union where they would be treated as females should be treated. As precious objects that were to be nurtured and loved.

“Seventy-four minutes my love.” Tarifa told him.

Isra nodded. They had seventy-four minutes to act until the sun began to come up and their dragons could no longer provide them unhindered support. Then they would be out of time and they would need to leave regardless of their success. Isra lifted his hand and touched his ear.

“Snatch Team ready.” He spoke.

“Strike Team ready.” Vonis’s voice answered instantly. “Rendezvous at established coordinates in forty-three minutes. Good hunting Isra.”

“And you Vonis.” Isra answered.

Isra turned immediately and pointed to Dario. He clenched his fist, extended one finger and then stabbed it at the wall in front of them. Dario didn’t hesitate and dashed forward, his six foot three body propelled with incredible speed. His silenced, cut down P190A3 was secured to his back and his long legs carried him over the reasonably level terrain quickly. Dario planted one foot at the base of the wall and leaped upwards, his bond with Sorran fully active now. That bond and the TK power they shared allowed Dario to plant his hands and feet in different spots on the flat wall and continue to leap frog up the smooth surface until his hands caught the edge and he hung there for a moment.

“Go!” His voice hissed in the implants of all the members of their team and Channa burst forward next.

The five foot nine Channa, her long black hair tied into a pony tail and her meter and a half long tail whipping behind her followed in the footsteps of her newfound and beloved husband. Channa didn’t know how she came to love him so quickly and she didn’t care. The moment she had seen Dario she knew her life would be forever changed for the better. The six foot three Lycavorian didn’t care that she had a tail, he didn’t care that she had been used more times than she could recall. As he had told her so many times since first meeting him, she filled his essence now and he showed her just how much every time he caused her to scream his name in bliss. Channa covered the distance to the wall even faster than Dario had and using the same skills she duplicated his movements, coming to rest on his back as he hung there. She drew her long legs up and then propelled herself the last meter up the wall, leaping into the air and surprising the two Kavalian troops who had been standing just to the right of where Dario hung. As Channa twisted in mid-air, both her right boot and her tail whipped around with savage speed and power. The tip of her combat boot caught one Kavalian directly under his chin, snapping his head back so hard that the vertebra in his neck all broke at once. As he fell to the top of the wall dead, Channa’s tail came lashing out to slap the second Kavalian in the face so hard he staggered back holding his cheek. This allowed Dario, who had pulled himself up the moment Channa leaped from his back, to grab the Kavalian’s head in his powerful arms. He yanked savagely to the left and then back to the right, snapping every bone in the soldier’s neck with ease. Then he turned and launched his body over the wall.

Channa didn’t hesitate and was pulling the sectioned cable from her back and tossing it over the edge of the wall. Dario did the same and waited until he saw Isra and the others dashing for the base of the wall before unlimbering his P190 and taking up a cover position. Channa pressed her back to him and did the same in the opposite direction.

“Forgive me if I hurt you Dario my love.” Channa hissed softly over her shoulder.

Dario grinned without taking his eyes off his area of cover. He tilted his head slightly. “I’ll let you jump my bones whenever you want baby.” He answered softly.

Channa smiled and turned to see first Tarifa and then Isra come over the edge of the wall from either cable they had tossed down. Isra looked at her. “Channa?”

She nodded. "This way." She spoke and then started moving along the top as the other Kavalian troops began to pull themselves up over the edge of the wall while Dario covered them.

Vonis withdrew the blade of his elven fighting knife from the neck of the Kavalian soldier and turned his head in time to see Mican and Karun doing the same. Ardis assisted Karun in dumping the body to the side of the top wall and then more of Mican's men began to pour over the edge from the four cables they had tossed down. Mican grabbed Vonis's arm and motioned with his head.

"This way." He hissed softly. "We are not far." Vonis nodded and fell in behind them as they began to move.

A hundred meters along the wall and they came to the elevator. Mican turned as they all crouched nearby.

"The Secondary Hub is at the bottom of this elevator." Mican spoke. "Usually seven to ten personnel inside. Colonel Vonis, we will charge into the center, the others breaking left and right as we discussed."

Vonis nodded. "Try not to damage too much equipment but take down your targets at any cost." Mican lifted his hand and touched the panel calling the elevator. "Short, controlled bursts. Let's do this right." Vonis saw the nods from everyone and then turned to Mican. "Let's do this. We're on a timetable and I wouldn't want us to be late."

Mican nodded as the elevator doors opened. He stood up to the side as the others piled into the elevator in assault formation. He and Vonis were the last ones to board. He looked at Vonis as the doors began to slide shut. "It is an honor to fight beside you Colonel Vonis." He spoke.

"The feeling is mutual Mican." Vonis answered him as the doors closed fully.

There were nine Kavalians in the Secondary Command Hub this night. All of them bored. They were secure in the knowledge that they were safe from attack. No High Coven assault had ever crossed the borders into Kavalian territory. They were not brave enough or stupid enough to attack this deep into Kavalian space. This post was the assignment of high honor among the Prides, guarding the Command Compound for all of the Kavalian Federation. And the perks were even better with all of the females that were there for their use. They were far from any battles, and very secure within the knowledge that nothing could penetrate their security. When the hum of the large elevator came to them, only one Kavalian turned to greet the troops that would be coming from the wall posts.

It only made the assault that much easier.

The Kavalian officer watched as the doors opened and his eyes went wide when he saw the towering vampire and biogenically altered male in front of the group of hard looking troops. None of whom were Kavalian. The Kavalian officer died instantly as Vonis lifted his silenced K14 Kinetic Magnum and fired twice into the man's head from point blank range. His entire body lifted off the floor from the force of the rounds and he was blown back as bodies rushed to either side behind Vonis. The soft coughing sounds of the silenced P190s rippled outward now as Vonis's team broke to either side of the room tracking targets as they went. Some of the Kavalians were targeted by more than one person, their bodies perforated by upwards of twenty rounds as they began to react far too late. Mican didn't hesitate and curled around Vonis to grasp the nearest KFI troop to him in his powerful hands. The soldier had barely made it out of his chair when Mican fell upon him. Anger at all that had been done to him; anger at having been tossed aside like trash by his father, and hope at what the future held for him and Na'lia and their daughter. All these things rushed through Mican as he snatched the troop's head in his hands and wrenched savagely with all of his considerable strength. The man's neck snapped instantly and Mican continued to twist as his legs twitched madly and then were still. Mican dropped him to the floor without a second glance and lifted his own silenced K14.

It was not needed as the room fell silent.

Vonis glanced around quickly and a wry grin of approval split his lips. Leading a small unit like this appealed to him, and in all his years he had never seen a group work so seamlessly together. Even though they were vampire and wolf and Kavalian, they blended together like no team he had ever seen.

“Ardis... Karun... get on the equipment!” Vonis hissed.

Mican followed suit. “Loget... Fabor... the entrance! The rest of you plant the explosives quickly!”

Ardis and Karun fell into seats that were next to each other as the others sprang into action. “Disabling all ground sensors.” Ardis called out. “Shutting down all internal alarms and locks!”

“Re-routing all Command functions to these two consoles.” Karun stated. He looked at Ardis’s console. “There Ardis. Top corner.”

Ardis nodded and quickly adjusted her console.

“How soon before they realize they’ve lost control?” Vonis asked.

Karun looked at Mican. “Eighteen minutes perhaps?” He offered.

Mican nodded. “About right.” He answered. “The equipment cycles every fifteen minutes within the main Command Center to keep cool. Once it cycles, they will realize they have no control. It will take them perhaps another two to realize that all controls have been routed here. The Command Officer will contact this facility and confirm this, and then he move here until control has been returned to the main Hub.”

“Procedure?” Vonis asked.

“They’ll think it’s a test.” Karun added. “I have been here with my father when they have conducted them in the past.”

Mican nodded in agreement. “They will attempt to reboot the system.” Mican continued. “Kavalian computers are not as advanced as Union systems and given how much these computers control it will take four minutes to reboot and another three to realize they still do not have control. Then they will begin to panic.”

Vonis looked around. “Security seems kind of lax Mican.” He said.

Mican nodded. “My father uses fear and pain to keep order most of the time Colonel.” He answered. “He also thinks himself untouchable. Neither him nor any of the senior officers believe anyone is capable or brave enough to initiate an attack here. You must try to think like they do.”

Karun nodded. “Mican is right.” He added. “Remember... Kavalian troops... even the cloned ones... have been conditioned to think they are the finest anywhere. That everyone fears them. And there has not been an attack on Kavalian soil in nearly a thousand years.”

Vonis chortled. “Yeah... well that will change with Androcles Leonidas giving the orders.”

“No doubt.” Mican said with a grin. “It will be pleasant to see them realize they are not as vaunted as they believe.”

Vonis nodded. “Ok... twenty-five minutes.” He said. “More than enough time if Isra humps it. Ardis... let him know we are good.”

Isra and his team squatted on the top of the wall looking down into the compounds interior. They could see the lights from many different buildings and even a few Kavalian troops moving among them.

Tarifa looked up after pressing her ear implant and nodded. “Isra... Ardis says they have secured the Secondary Hub. No casualties.”

Isra nodded. “First step down.” He said. “Nice.” He turned and his violet eyes took in Ckhoa. “It’s to you Ckhoa.”

Ckhoa nodded and lifted her arm. “That building. Exactly a hundred and fifty meters from the wall here. My sister will have them there, gathered on the first floor.”

Isra’s eyes fell on the large building Ckhoa pointed too, his wolf eyes easily picking up detail and shape. “So we come in from the east side and exfil the same way.” He stated. He looked skyward. Aelnala... do any of you see any unusual activity?

None near the building I see with your eyes Isra my brother. Aelnala replied.

A few guards it appears walking between different buildings five hundred meters to the north. Roluth answered. Nothing else.

They do not expect anything such as what we are about to do. Sorran chimed in. Poor fools.

Indeed. Mirra finished the report from the four dragons.

Isra nodded his head. “Ok. We do this quick and clean just like Vonis and Mican did.” He turned to the Kavalian troops behind him. “Angar... you and Unsla set the charges in place and standby.”

The face of the large Kavalian nodded. "We will make a very large hole in this wall." He said with a grin.

Isra nodded. "The rest of us make for the building. Two windows on the bottom floor and one door. Split into our teams and acknowledge when you are ready. We all go in together." Isra saw the nods of acknowledgement and he looked at Ckhoa. "Lead us out Ckhoa."

With a confident nod of her head Ckhoa leaped from the top of the wall followed by the others.

FEMALE HOLDING BARRACKS

Poysha stepped back from the window, her keen eyes trying to discern anything out of the ordinary in the darkness outside. She could see nothing unusual, nothing she didn't see on a normal basis. She felt the hand on her arm and she turned to look at the long blond hair of one of the youngest females in their group.

"Poysha... are you... are you certain they will come?" She asked.

Poysha took her hands. "My sister will not lie to me Cvea'Ortel. I promise you this." She answered.

Cvea had only joined them eight months ago, and she was among the most popular of the females for her devastating beauty. Her blond hair was incredibly long and shiny, her body firm and lush. Her tail had been the reason she had been sent here by her Pride. It had failed to react to the biogenic treatments and this obviously disqualified her from being able to go outside the KFI as an agent. She had been taken against her will probably more times than half the other females here and it had strained her ability to work during the day. She was strong willed, but Poysha knew it was beginning to take its toll on her mentally. She had become even more withdrawn and not willing to speak to the others. Now all Cvea spoke of since Poysha told them what they were going to do was her desire to find a Lycavorian who would adore her and accept her for what she was. She wanted nothing more to do with her own people or men for she had seen them at their ugliest.

"It's getting so close though." Cvea answered.

"Trust in me." Poysha spoke. "Ckhoa is not going to abandon us. She will come for..." Poysha saw the flash of a shadow outside the window and she yanked Cvea out of the way as the huge body came sailing through the open window followed immediately by another. With gasps of frightened shock, Poysha and the others backed up rapidly as the lower floor began to fill up with heavily armed and armored men and women. Poysha saw the flash of long black hair and then a long tail as the two figures rolled on the floor and three more leaped in through the second window. The door burst open and half a dozen more men and women poured in, her eyes growing wide when she saw her twin sister leading them.

"Ckhoa!" She almost screamed in unabashed joy and rushed forward.

Ckhoa could not contain the tears as she lowered her P190 and embraced her sister tightly in her arms as Dario took up a position by the window he and Channa had entered. He watched his beautiful mate turn towards the females, her own delightful tail flicking in the open which caused the females to calm almost immediately.

"Be calm! We are friends!" Channa exclaimed. "You are safe now!"

Ckhoa pushed her sister to arms length and stared at her. "Bless the stars you are safe!" She gasped. "I have missed you so much!"

Poysha wiped her tears away and nodded. "Oh and I have missed you." She said before crushing her sister to her once more and sharing a hard kiss on the lips. Ckhoa didn't shy away and returned the sisterly kiss as Isra and Tarifa came up just behind her. Ckhoa sensed them and turned quickly.

"Sister... this is Colonel Isra of the Durcunusaan and his wife and mate Tarifa." Ckhoa stated. Ckhoa turned to motion to Dario. "Commander Dario of the Durcunusaan and his wife and mate Channa."

That word brought gasps from the females and Isra cut his eyes to them before looking back to Ckhoa. It was Poysha who answered. "The Lycavorian Durcunusaan are... they are feared for their skill and bravery Colonel. Even among the Puma Bane soldiers." She looked back at where Dario stood and then to Channa as she moved among the females. "She is a... she is Kavalian like us."

Isra nodded to her. "Yes she is."

"She is his wife?" Poysha asked in surprise.

"It's a long story that we can relate at another time." He said. "Ckhoa... we must move quickly."

Ckaoa nodded her head and began pulling the bag from her back. “Poysha... we have the devices. We must attached them to the heads of all the females. They are small and will activate a tiny pulse of Reverse Fractal Energy. It will render the explosive devices completely inert. It will sting for several seconds, but it will work. We can have them removed when we get to Union space.”

“Reverse Fractal Energy?” Poysha asked. “How did... Reverse Fractal Energy is only in a theoretical stage. How did you...”

Ckaoa smiled. “Our lady devised the pulse with some additional help. I will tell you all of it but the Colonel is right.” She said. “Shiria has already gone on ahead to the Union with others because she is needed there but she sends you her love and can’t wait to see all of you.”

“Poysha... these men are part of Mican’Puat’s resistance.” He said seeing her eyes go wide. “They are like you in many ways. Tossed aside by your leaders and they are not like those you are used too.” Isra explained. “Tarifa is my wife and mate. Let them help you to get the devices ready.”

Poysha nodded quickly. “Yes! The shift change for the nearby guard post happens in ten minutes. The three men usually stop here first to... they...”

Ckaoa gripped her arm. “Not this time sister.” She said forcefully. “Not this time.”

Poysha nodded her head. “No.”

Tarifa moved forward now and took their arms. “Quickly. Let us complete our task and leave this place behind.”

Isra glanced at Dario. “Dario... the door. Tegan... Galan... with him. Anything that comes through that door... kill it.”

Dario nodded. “Done.”

Isra lifted his hand to his jaw and tapped his implant. “Snatch Leader to Strike Leader. We have made contact and are dispersing the devices. Give us nine minutes and we will be moving.”

Vonis looked at Mican who held the Kavalian Colonel in his powerful arms, the wicked looking knife tightly against his throat. He heard Isra’s report and nodded his head.

“I can give you eight Isra.” Vonis answered. “By then they’ll know something is up.”

There was a pause and Isra answered. “Eight it is.” He answered.

Vonis nodded and looked at Mican who had heard the exchange in his implant. “Kill this fucker and let’s get ready to beat feet.” Vonis ordered.

Mican didn’t hesitate and drove his knife into the thick neck of the Kavalian Colonel twisting savagely as he did. He ripped the blade forward as he pulled it out, opening up half of the man’s neck and tossing him to the ground.

Vonis turned to Karun and Ardis. “Make sure all the defenses are down and then fry the systems here. Were you able to get the other information?”

Ardis smiled and held up the two data discs she had brought. “Everything Androcles said he wanted.” She said. “And they’ll never know we took it. At least not initially.”

Vonis grinned back at her. “Watch her Karun... she’s slicker than she looks.”

Karun looked at Ardis with devotion in his eyes. “I always enjoy watching her Colonel.” He said. “It stirs my blood.”

Ardis reached out and slugged her husband in his shoulder. “Pervert!” She snapped playfully.

“Ok people...” Vonis spoke. “The easy part is almost done. The hard part is almost upon us. Getting out is always the hard part. Prepare yourself and your gear. All of us are leaving and I don’t want to lose anyone.”

Vonis’s words were felt by all of them, even Mican and the Kavalian Commandos. It was good to have a leader who cared about them.

Poysha and the other females watched as Dario lowered the body of the Kavalian to the floor and yanked his long bladed combat knife from the soldier’s neck. Blood splashed wetly on the floor and began to pool quickly as the Kavalian’s throat had been sliced open to the bone. The light left his eyes quickly and he died with no sound as the Tegan and Galan also allowed the bodies of the two Kavalians to drop to the floor, both of them already dead. The female that Channa had been attaching the Pulse device to tore her eyes from the scene and looked at her.

“He is... he is your mate?” She gasped.

Channa glanced back with adoring eyes and nodded her head as they fell on Dario. He wiped the blade of the knife clean on the Kavalian’s uniform and returned it to the sheath on his thigh before looking up and his blue eyes caught Channa’s. “He is beautiful isn’t he?” She said softly. She turned back to the female. “And he’s all mine.”

“I did not... I...” The female stammered.

Channa shook her head. “Do not worry sister.” She spoke softly and with a smile. Calling her sister seemed appropriate because Channa had once been in her place. “When we return to the Union you will find there will be many Lycavorian men who will pursue you for your affections. And they will treat you just as Dario treats me. Like something precious. And they will love you until you can not stand it anymore.”

“I... I have my tail.” She stated gripping the end of her tail.

Channa flicked her own long tail out from behind her and smiled. “He finds my tail fascinating.” She said with a grin. “And he pays much attention to it.”

The girl looked at her. “Truly?”

Channa nodded as she finished. “Yes indeed.” She turned her head as she drew her hands back. “Poysha... she is the last one.”

Poysha was touching her own head where the device resided on her temple and turned to Ckhoa. “We are ready.” She said.

Ckhoa nodded and removed the small electronic device from one of the pouches on her belt. She held it up so they all could see it. “When I press this you will hear a humming in your ear and then a small pulse of energy will course through your head. It will sting terribly for perhaps two or three seconds. Do not remove the device during this time. You must endure it. The energy pulse will short out the explosive device imbedded in your heads. It will no longer work at all. Then we can all leave this place.”

Ckhoa looked at their faces, not seeing one bit of indecision. She turned to Poysha and her sister nodded. “We have endured far worse sister. You know this. We can handle a little stinging.”

Ckhoa nodded and took a deep breath. There was no more time to waste and she jammed her finger down on the small button. There were dozens of soft gasps and most of the females reached for their heads in pain, but not one tried to remove the device. Poysha was right... they were strong and had endured far worse. A chance at freedom was worth any pain. It seemed like an eternity but in five seconds Ckhoa released her finger from the device and Tarifa stepped forward immediately, lifting a portable medical scanner specifically tuned to detect the carrier wave of the explosive devices. She raised it to Poysha’s head, adjusted the scanner and smiled brightly.

“It’s dead!” She exclaimed turning to the room of Kavalian females and lifting the scanner passing it over all of the females. The small device’s detector remained completely silent. “They are... they are all dead!”

Poysha burst into tears and embraced her sister tightly. The females were crying and hugging each other as well as Tarifa moved among them carefully scanning each of them. She had had doubts in the beginning that they could pull this off. Both her and Jalersi, yet they had worked tirelessly with Ckhoa, Avi and 341 to get the exact carrier signal of the explosives and then adjust the wave of Reverse Fractal Energy in order to short out the receivers. Isra had left them to their work, for while she was a politician by duty, Tarifa also had two different degrees and was almost as smart as her younger sister Zaala who was a genius as far as Tarifa was concerned. Jalersi and Ckhoa did not have the same education level as Tarifa but their knowledge of Kavalian machinery was precise and extensive.

Tarifa turned to Isra by the door and nodded. “It worked Isra! They are all deactivated!”

Isra nodded and turned to Dario. “Time to go.” He stated immediately. He lifted his hand to his jaw. “Snatch Leader to Strike Leader. We are moving now!”

Vonis’s voice answered instantly. “Two minutes ahead of schedule. Impressive Isra my friend. We’ll wait a full sixty count and then begin withdrawing as well. Move swiftly... the sun is coming up faster than we anticipated.”

“Understood.” Isra spoke turning to Ckhoa and Poysa. “Gather them quickly. They need nothing. They will have all they desire when we are safely back in Union space. Quickly now!” Ckhoa and Poysa nodded and began to reach out for the females, grabbing hands and arms and pulling them to their feet. Isra turned to the window that faced the wall they had come over. “Angar! Unsla! Blow the wall now! Blow it now!”

Isra’s violet eyes grew wide when before he had finished giving the order, a massive wall of fire lit the dawn sky. He could just detect a huge cloud of dust rising into the air and Isra would later swear he saw huge pieces of the wall landing nearby. He shook his head and looked at where Ckhoa, Channa, Tarifa and Poysa were helping the Kavalian females out of the two windows.

“Durcunusaan Strike Leader... we are moving now. Prepare to cover us!”

“We are ready Colonel.” The stern voice echoed. “Come to us and do not spare the speed Colonel. The faster we are gone, the better.”

“Sadormacah!” Isra hissed watching as Tarifa turned to him instantly. “Have them run Sadormacah! Just as fast as they can! Two point eight kilometers! Slow down for nothing!”

Tarifa nodded her head without question.

KELERU’S HOME

2.7 KILOMETERS FROM THE COMMAND COMPOUND

Keleru was an early riser and he was sitting in his high back chair reading reports from the previous day when the flash of light to his west snapped his head up, causing him to spill his rich morning tea. Then the roar of an explosion reached his ears and finally the windows in his home vibrated madly as he came to his feet, the data pads scattering all around his feet. He rushed across his main room to look out the expansive window that faced west and he saw flames reaching into the sky from the Command Compound his eyes wide in disbelief. He heard the door to his home open and he turned as half a dozen Puma Bane troops poured into his home. The senior officer on duty rushed across the room towards him.

“What the fuck is happening?” Keleru barked out.

The Puma Bane Troop was skittish and very anxious. They had trained for this of course, but never in all his years did he ever think they would actually need to use the escape route.

“Prefect we must get you to the Command shelter!” He almost shouted.

“That was at the Command Compound!” Keleru snarled.

“We have lost COMS with the Command Center Prefect! I can not raise them! The explosion came from within the compound along the north facing wall from what I can tell!” The Puma Bane Major barked. “Prefect let me get you to safety!”

“Within the compound?” Keleru gasped. “An accident?”

“We don’t know Prefect! It could be an accident! It could be some sort of attack! We must go!” The major snapped.

“An attack by who?” Keleru demanded a small stab of fear tugging at his stomach. “The Union would never be able to reach this far into Kavalian space! And neither would the Coven! They are not fools!”

“I do not know Prefect! My duty is to protect you!” The major snarled. “We must move to the Command Shelter until we discover what is happening.”

Keleru paused for only a second. “Leave the others!” He barked moving to grab some of the pads he had dropped.

The major nodded without hesitation hoping that this act did not come back to bit him in the ass. The others Keleru’ Puat was referring to were his long time wife and his loyal staff, all of whom stayed in the opposite wing of Keleru’s home.

The major gripped his Prefect’s arm tightly. “This way Prefect.” He spoke as he began leading the man out.

This action would not become known right away but in the coming months it would be discovered and it would prove, without doubt, one of Androcles Leonidas’s statements to his grandfather Riall.

That statement.

Keleru'Puat was a coward at heart, for only cowards ruled by fear.

Poysha waited until the last female had exited the building. It happened to be Cvea and she took her hand quickly. "Do not let go of my hand Cvea!" She barked. "Freedom is almost upon us!"

Then with Poysha gripping her sister's hand the three of them ran.

They had come this far and would be killed regardless if they turned back. In a display of trust, faith and hope, not one of the Kavalian females even slowed when they reached the wall. With Angar and Unsla waving them through, they ran in groups of two or three, always keeping the large Lycavorian Dario and his Kavalian wife in their eye sight. Even with the biogenic treatments, they all retained their feline genes, and this served them well this day. Running was actually a pastime among the Kavalian people, and now these Kavalian females ran just as fast as their legs would carry them. They easily kept pace with the much larger Lycavorian leading them, and the Kavalian rebels who ran alongside their flanks. They rapidly left the still smoking wall behind them, not seeing Vonis blurring among the surrounding trees, racing ahead and then stopping several times to insure everyone was keeping the pace. His keen vampire eyes would wait until he saw Isra's large form bringing up the rear and then he would blur once more. Vonis had never run from a fight before in his life, but the fight now was to escape with these females who had been suffering and abused under the Kavalian dogs. Vonis had also never failed in a mission given to him and he had no intention of failing now.

It seemed like they ran for hours but in reality it was only a little less than four minutes and then Ckhoa could see the STRIKERS in the clearing five hundred meters ahead. She pulled on Poysha's hand frantically. "There! There!" She screamed.

The unintentional yank by Ckhoa threw Poysha off balance just enough to jar Cvea to the side. Their fingers released as Cvea stumbled and then fell crashing to the ground painfully.

"Cvea!" Poysha screamed even as Ckhoa pulled her harder.

Cvea rolled over several times through the loose dirt and rocks that dotted the ground. She screamed out in pain when her knees collided with a large rock and sliced them open. Blood splashed the ground as she slammed into a stump and her wide eyes saw Poysha pulling away from her. "Poysha! Poysha don't leave me!" Cvea screamed at the top of her lungs.

Cvea heard the crashing sound and her head whipped around to see the golden brown blond color of the hair on the huge wolf that skidded to a halt in front of her. Stunned, she watched as there was a flash of silvery white light and then she was staring at the very large Lycavorian Spartan with blazing ice blue eyes. He stood well over six feet tall and Cvea had seen enough Kavalians in armor to know that he was exceptionally well built. His face betrayed his youth, but his eyes held wisdom and confidence within them. And they held warmth and a kind of desire she had never seen before.

"We will not leave you Little One." He spoke in a warm voice that caused Cvea to shiver, but not in fear as she saw the tips of his flesh shredding fangs from under his upper lip. "To lose beauty such as yours would be a great crime. That I can not allow."

Cvea watched as he bent down in front of her and she attempted to scramble back away from him. He looked so formidable in his armor and the weapons dotting his body frightened her even more. He held up his hands in front of him. "I will not hurt you Little One." He said.

"My name... my name is Cvea'Ortel!" She hissed at him.

"Well Cvea'Ortel... my name is Ridor Lethon. Ridor after my father's father, and Lethon after my mother's father. They wanted me to have two names, though I know not why. I am a son of Sparta and a Durcunusaan. I will not leave you here."

Cvea heard the warmth of his voice and felt it quiver across her skin. Feelings she had never experienced in her twenty-three years of life rippled through her and they made her feel wonderful. If not for the pain of her knees. She winced suddenly as her injuries once more occupied her attention and she leaned forward to look at them. The rock had slice open her right knee to the top of her kneecap, and put a good one inch deep laceration in the side of her left knee that came close to severing her ligaments. She tried to stem the flow of bleeding with the rags from her pants until she saw his hands hold out a small tube of ointment. She looked up at him.

“The others are leaving us behind Little One... we must go.” He stated. “Spread this on our wounds and I will carry you.”

Cvea didn't hesitate and uncapped the tube quickly, spreading the cool salve on the open wounds. She watched in amazement as the wounds stopped bleeding almost immediately.

“We do not have an Hadarian to heal you so we will have to make do until we reach our ship.” Ridor told her as he pushed his P190 further back over his shoulders. “I do not wish to be too forward, but I need to pick you up. Unless you would rather we remain here and be captured by the Kavalians who will no doubt follow.”

Cvea looked at him. “You talk funny! Are you crazy?” She spat at him in shock. “No I don't want to remain!”

Ridor smiled. “My brothers remind me all the time that I am odd.” He said as he slowly slid his arms under her legs and around her slim waist. Cvea watched his face as she slid her arms around his shoulders, taking in the most incredible blue eyes she had seen in her young life. They were ice blue eyes with a thick black ring around them, and they gazed at her with a piercing glow that made her tremble in his arms. “I like to think of myself as unique. If you would somehow secure your fascinating tail, I do not wish to trip and have you injure yourself further.”

Fascinating. He had called her tail fascinating. Cvea quickly curled it around his waist and let the tip settle into her lap. Ridor looked at what she had done and then met her eyes again. “Interesting.” He said. “Hold on tightly now. I run very fast.”

Cvea gasped as dug his booted feet into the soil and exploded forward towards the ship.

Poysha turned to face the rear of the ship as soon as Ckhoa released her arm. She watched several more females run up the ramp followed by a handful of the Kavalian Rebels. Her eyes could not find Cvea and her heart filled her throat.

“Ckhoa we have to go back!” Poysha screamed. “I can not leave her! Cvea! I can't leave her! She must have fallen!”

Ckhoa shook her head adamantly. “No!” She declared forcefully. “We can not! We would lose our chance to escape! I'm sorry sister!”

“She is the youngest of us Ckhoa!” Poysha pleaded. “They almost broke her! I promised her I would not leave her behind for anything!”

Ckhoa held her arms. “No!” She ordered. “I will not lose you!” She barked as Isra appeared at the bottom of the ramp now. They both turned to look at him.

“Vonis?” He barked out looking at the other STRIKER.

“We are all aboard!” Vonis answered from across the field.

Isra looked skyward. Aelnala! All of you return now!

In we come. Aelnala answered instantly.

Isra's eyes quickly picked them up in the brightening sky and they were coming in fast. She and Roluth flared their wings barely fifty meters off the ground as Mirra and Sorran did the same behind the other STRIKER. All four dragons folded their wings and to the fearful gasps from the Kavalian females they began moving up the ramp into the STRIKERS to secure themselves in their harnesses. Aelnala bumped her massive head against Isra's shoulder as she climbed the ramp.

We have done a great thing this day my brother. She spoke as she moved past him.

Isra nodded. We're not completely clear just yet sister.

I know. But I have faith in you. She answered.

Isra turned and saw the last Spartan slow from a dead sprint to a half jog, carrying the Kavalian female in his arms. Isra's eyes grew a little wider as he recognized the young Durcunusaan sergeant. “Medic!” He shouted into the rear of the STRIKER before turning to look at Ridor as he trotted up. “Are you insane boy?” Isra screamed. “I told you to remain on the STRIKER! Your father will have my ass if you get hurt!”

Ridor smiled as he came up to Isra. “My father would expect me to act like this Colonel. No son of a General of the Union shirks his duties.”

Isra shook his head as the medic came up. “I need to have a talk with Vistr about you.” He stated. “You’re too damn good.”

“I’ll take her sergeant.” The medic spoke reaching for Cvea.

“No!” Cvea barked clutching Ridor tighter, her tail squeezing him powerfully around his waist. This did not go unnoticed by Isra but he remained silent. “No! Don’t touch me!”

Isra motioned with his head. “Get her settled. It’s time to go.”

Ridor nodded as Poysha pushed the medic aside and grabbed for Cvea’s hand. Ridor carried Cvea into the rear of the STRIKER as she and Poysha chattered away. He stopped and turned his head, all of them watching as the ramp began to come up. Ridor Lethon, son of General Vistr, looked down at the stunning Kavalian female in his arms. He was having quite the time keeping his wolf instincts from overwhelming him while he held this beauty tight against his body. He was only twenty-five years old himself, Vistr’s youngest and most daring son from his mate of seven millennia. They had decided to have another child after he had returned from Ukwav and the wave of pride was sweeping the entire Union. Ridor was that child, and so far he had surpassed all of his older brothers in skill, though he would never his six older brothers openly admitted it to everyone they knew. His brothers were almost as proud of him as his father was. Ridor had already begun to make a name for himself and Vistr could think of no one better suited to further his son’s skills and watch over him than Isra.

Cvea’s sweet cherry scent was driving him crazy, and the feel of her lush, warm body against his was almost more than he could bare. As the ramp locked into place he looked down into her face and discovered her staring up at him. He smiled at her beautiful pale sky blue eyes.

“You are free now Anocahs.” He spoke softly as he moved to the bench and very gently lowered her to the seat. “Let them treat your legs. You will need them to walk the paths of Sparta and see her beauty. It matches your own.”

Cvea unfurled her tail from around his waist and released her arms from his shoulders. She watched him stand back up and continue to gaze at her. “Thank... thank you.” She spoke softly.

Ridor bowed his head to her, every single Lycavorian on the STRIKER able to sense his interest in Cvea. His aura burned brightly as he looked at her and the word would pass among the others that the young Kavalian was very much off limits now. Especially when they reached the RAGE OF ACHILLES. He may have been the youngest Durcunusaan among them, but he was one of them, and they looked out for each other.

Cvea looked at Poysha and Ckhoa with wide eyes. “What... what did he call me?” She asked quickly.

“Soul eyes.” Tarifa’s voice answered as she came up to them with a medical kit and settled on the bench next to Cvea. “He called you Soul eyes.”

Cvea turned to watch Ridor’s back as he was greeting his fellow Durcunusaan with hugs and handshakes after a successful mission. “Soul eyes.” Cvea said softly.

Tarifa smiled as she began to treat Cvea’s knee injuries. “You have acquired an admirer Cvea’Ortel. Word will spread quickly that he has called you this. You will have no fears going into your new life Cvea’Ortel, for a Durcunusaan, a member of the Wolves of the Blood now watches over you.” Tarifa looked at her. “That is no small feat I will tell you. Well done young one. Well done.”

RAGE OF ACHILLES

TWELVE MINUTES LATER

“... Me full power to sublights! Spool up the main drive core and let’s get the hell out of here while the getting is good!” Fang declared as she rose from her chair. “Pursuit?”

“Negative Captain!” The sensor operator declared. He turned in his chair. “I don’t think they ever thought someone would get close enough to do something like we just did. None of the ships in orbit are even charging weapons.”

“Well let’s not wait around and give them a chance.” She replied. “And send the signal to Prince Androcles on Earth, Prince Resumar and Captain Pian that we are clear and headed home. No casualties and a lot of happy Kavalian females.”

“Aye Captain.”

KAVALIAN GREAT SOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PUMA’S PRIDE PUSINTIN’S COMMAND SHIP

Popal made his way into the Kavalian medical bay. Though very large and stocked with some of the best Kavalian medical technology that existed, it did not even come close to Union medical equipment which was all based on Hadarian tech. With them now controlling Hadaria Popal had no doubts that would begin to change, but it would be a long process. As he entered the medical bay, his eyes took in the damage done by the unknown Union warship. Even though scans told him PUMA’S PRIDE was larger than the ship that had attacked them, it had caught them unaware. It’s weapon systems had pounded PUMA’S PRIDE mercilessly, killing hundreds and effectively nearly every system. They had only just been able to get their sensors and long range communications back, but their engines were still severely damaged. They had lost half of their Task Force to the unknown ship and Popal truly had no desire to meet this ship in combat again. When it vanished, taking the odd civilian ship with it, Popal concentrated on getting things back under control.

And saving his Marshall’s life.

His eyes fell on where Pusintin laid on the medical table while the doctor and an assistant tended to him. Popal was quite certain he had never seen his Marshall in such a condition. It looked as if someone had used him for punching bag, though Popal would never know how correct he was in that assessment. There were bruises and cuts all over his body, and a large, very deep laceration across his abdomen. They had not found the remains of three Puma Bane troops who had accompanied him, while Kalis they discovered some six hundred meters away from his father severely wounded but not in as bad a shape as his father. Popal’s eyes detected Kalis on a bed further down the row while another medical tech treated him. The doctor or senior medic really, since Muton had been the ship’s doctor for so long, saw him enter and he broke away from the bed to approach him.

“Report.” Popal ordered.

“His injuries are severe.” The Kavalian officer answered. “Nearly every rib is broken. His collarbone is fractured in two places. His cheekbone and jaw are broken, his nose and left shoulder are crushed. His right orbital socket is fractured.” The medic shook his head. “Those are just the broken bones. I have stabilized him but the wound in his abdomen concerns me. It is very deep and the blade nicked the lining of his stomach. With the damage to the Medical Bay, only half of our equipment even works. How soon before we get main engines back?”

Popal shook his head. “Not for another day at least.” He replied.

“He will not survive the return trip to Cabelir for treatment Senior Commander.” The medic replied. “What... what kind of ship could hurt us so bad so quickly?”

“I don’t know. I’ve never seen anything like it before.” He replied. “And it doesn’t match anything in our database for Union ships. It must be something new.”

“Po... Popal!” The voice croaked out.

His eyes wide in disbelief Popal and the senior medic dashed to the bedside and saw Pusintin’s uninjured eye turn to look at him. “Marshall!” Popal gasped.

“Dam... damage?” Pusintin hissed.

“It is bad Marshall.” Popal answered. “The ship came out of Shroud almost within our Shield envelope. The weapons it used... it decimated us before we could act. Half of our Task Force is gone. The remaining ships have varying damage. PUMA’S PRIDE is hurt but we are repairing systems as fast as we are able.”

“Con... contact Keleru!” Pusintin croaked. “Warn... him. Trap. Others. Will not bow.” Pusintin closed his eye and a raspy breath escaped his lungs.

“I will Marshall.” Popal spoke.

“Tal... Talbor Seven.” Pusintin gasped. “Hadarian... Hadarian clinic there.”

Popal’s eyes grew wide. “Yes! I remember!”

“Must... must go after her... must save...” Pusintin’s voice drifted off and his good eye closed as he drifted back in unconsciousness.

The senior medic looked at him. “Talbor Seven?” He asked.

Popal nodded. “There is a free Hadarian clinic there. Two Hadarians run it. A husband and wife.”

The medic nodded. “An Hadarian could heal him in hours.” The man said. “What did he mean by trap?”

Popal shook his head. “I don’t know. Right now I need to contact the Prefect and let him know what has happened. At the very least the Union now has ships that we were not aware of.” He looked at the medic. “I will set course for Talbor Seven. It should take us perhaps sixteen hours without our LSD coils. Will he make it?”

The medic nodded. “I will keep him alive Senior Commander.” The man said.

Popal nodded. “Do that.” He ordered before turning and exiting the medical bay.

No one saw Kalis’s head turn to look at his father from six beds down. He had heard every word that had been spoken. There was no question about him, no inquiry from his father as to his condition. Kalis looked back at the lights of the medical bay as his head pounded with that single statement.

“So nephew...” Martin spoke softly gazing at Kalis’s dark blue eyes. “Your father stands there. He will not come for you Kalis. He will not try to protect you from me. In truth... he does not care what happens to you!”

ADMIRAL ZESICO’S COMMAND SHIP LEONIDAS IIA-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER

“... Remind the fighter crews that they are to adhere to standard Union attack profiles. We do not need them going off and trying to do something stupid.” Zesico told his XO.

“Understood sir.”

“Tactical!” Zesico called out.

“Systems are synced with SPARTA’S WRATH sir!” The woman answered. “We’re sending updated position profiles and will coordinate with Prince Resumar!”

“What is their ETA?” Zesico barked turning to look at her. “We’re cutting it close!” When she didn’t answer right away his eyes narrowed. “Lieutenant! What is their ETA?” He barked again.

He watched as her eyes turned to face him and he saw how wide they were. “I think... I think they are here Admiral!”

Zesico came to his feet. “What!”

“Admiral... sensors are detecting a massive Quantum Fusion Reversion field off to port! Distance one million! It’s... it’s fucking huge sir!” The man gasped aloud unable to contain his obvious disbelief.

“View Window!” Zesico barked. “Now!”

The large view window towards the front of the bridge was normally covered with armor during combat, but now that armor retracted slightly and exposed the large, clear view window to their front.

And turned every man and woman on the bridge of Zesico’s flagship into true believers.

The seven kilometer long shape of SPARTA’S WRATH exited its light speed jump and announced its existence to the Kavalian fleet by shattering two Kavalian PURUSIAN-Class frigates against its armored hull, blotting them from existence before they even knew they were dead. The ship was unlike anything they had ever seen before. Dark gray in color, with a thick rear portion that sloped gracefully and became narrow in the front. There were jagged lines along the hull, so unlike the smooth, symmetrical design of Union ships. Yet the thing that stood out the most were the hundreds of slots that opened along the sides of the ship and extended sharp, spear like turrets from just about every centimeter of the ship it seemed. And then those turrets lit the sky around them as they all fired at once.

“Son vada carians!” Zesico muttered to no one in particular.

-Eleven seconds until reversion. Brace for deceleration- 341's calm, synthetic male voice echoed across the bridge.

Resumar Leonidas would swear until the day he died that when SPARTA'S WRATH shattered the mountain it had lain under for ten thousand years and reached for the stars once more, that he heard happiness in Avatar 341's synthesized voice.

All Resumar had to do was give the orders and the two Avatars and three hundred crew that had been secretly sent from Dreamland did the rest. Avi had been pleased to see the engineers and techs from Dreamland arrive two weeks ago. He explained to 341, though the Avatar already knew from working so closely with Avi, that these men and women were the closest to a trained crew he could possibly want. Thanks to Avi himself and Zaala Randall, they were the men and women with the most knowledge on Pralor technology and how it worked. 341 saw this as a much added advantage. He was a warship, and with even a partial crew on board monitoring systems and conducting other tasks, he could devote most of his computations and calculations to killing the enemy. Like Avi, 341 was programmed to follow the most senior Pralor fanatically. While Shiria was a pure Pralor, the traces of Sumar's blood that ran within Resumar Leonidas were even purer. He knew immediately who Resumar was when he came on board this ship, and there was no hesitation or doubt in the Avatar's cognitive programming that Resumar was who he would follow.

-Receiving updated targeting profiles from Admiral Zesico- Avi spoke from in front of the three console podium he stood in front of beside 341. -Adjusting protocols to compensate-

It was obvious the two were working in concert with one another, though it appeared Avi had made the decision to allow 341 to control all weapons and defensive systems.

-Updated profiles locked- 341 answered. -Defensive systems fully online. All batteries beginning to power-

"All Fighter Drones powering up!" The elven female called from across the bridge. "All systems nominal!"

-Understood elven female La'taian. Release Fighter Drone control to me on my mark- 341 answered. -I will initiate a Class One Barrage with all batteries immediately upon reversion into normal space. This will target all ships designated GREAT SOUL or larger. Nine point two seconds after the death of the last GREAT SOUL Class ships I will call for the APOC Drones. Target list as given by Resumar Leonidas will commence at that time-

"Standing by!"

-Achieving target coordinates and lock from all active X2 Guided Phased Fusion missiles- 341 continued.

-Disengaging Quantum Drives- Avi spoke. -Reverting to normal space-

-I have control- 341 chimed in. The slightest movement of the deck beneath their feet told them they had just come out of their jump. Resumar looked up when they felt a slight shudder run throughout the ship.

-Impact- Avi called. -Two PURUSIAN-Class Frigates have impacted the hull in sections thirty-seven and fifty-nine. Minor damage to hull plating and armor. Repair drones nineteen through thirty are responding. Ships have been destroyed-

Resumar stepped forward. "Are you saying we just hit two ships?" He nearly screamed.

-SPARTA'S WRATH is designed to withstand impact of substantially larger solid objects against its Quantum Kinetic Shielding and hull Resumar Leonidas- 341 told him turning to look at him. -The two ships happened to be in the way and I did not see the need to alter our flight plan to save them when we will kill them in four minutes regardless of what they do-

Resumar held up his hands. "Don't let me interrupt you 341." He stated before turning to look at Athani with wide eyes.

-You are not- 341 assured him. He turned back to look forward. -All batteries signal ready. SPARTA'S WRATH is now engaging-
-Acknowledge- Avi spoke.

KAVALIAN GREAT SOUL-DREADNOUGHT INVASION TASK FORCE COMMAND SHIP

The alarms that were chirping all across the bridge were loud and confusing as he came to his feet and heard his crew barking at him.

"...sort of Quantum field!" His sensor operator shouted. "It's massive!"

"Where?" The Kavalian Admiral screamed. "Where?"

"Off our Starboard quarter!" The operator shouted. "It's some... it's some sort of ship I think! Readings are fuzzy!"

"What the fuck does fuzzy mean?" The Admiral screamed. "No one is suppose to know we are here!"

"Admiral! It's a ship! A huge fucking ship!" The sensor operator screamed. "Massive power readings! Quantum signatures like I have never seen before! It's..."

"What?" The Admiral snarled.

The sensor operator turned to look at his Admiral for the last time just before a sustained volley of nineteen Quantum Reactive Matter Pulse Guns impacted the proud hull of the GREAT SOUL Dreadnought and ripped it open like a paper bag.

"It's firing Admiral! At us!"

Avatar 341 had been built and designed to be the heart and brains of SPARTA'S WRATH, and along with his five identical Avatar brothers, they could have operated the ship completely by themselves. That was not what they were designed for however and he knew that. They were designed to integrate seamlessly with the crew of each warship and give the large Pralor crew advantages others did not. 341 knew that his computation skills and general knowledge were far superior to any Pralor, but he was also programmed to know that he could not react with any emotion to given situations. His Neural Processor allowed for him to learn and grow from these experiences, but he knew that the emotional portion was just not there. In the weeks leading up to this moment, 341 had begun to learn what Avi already knew after his many long years among them. He was not treated as an object or piece of machinery. He was considered a member of this crew. An important member of this crew. In many ways he was SPARTA'S WRATH. He was the heart and in many cases the brain, just as he had been programmed to think, but these Spartans and Elves and Kavalians. They were his arms and legs and lungs and veins. They were what made him strong. Resumar Leonidas had the blood of the Master Pralor Sumar flowing through him, a man who had treated Avi as a dear friend. That is how Resumar Leonidas treated 341, and ultimately that is what made it's way into the core processing unit of 341's Neural Network.

Now 341 unleashed the full, shattering power of the ship he was built to be. And he did it in protection of his charges.

Three hundred and twenty batteries, a mix of Category One and Category Six Quantum Reactive Matter Pulse Guns, opened up at the exact same moment along the entire length of both sides of SPARTA'S WRATH. Instead of the normal Plasma beam weapons aboard most Union ships, the QRMPGs released only a thin beam of concentrated power that was more off white in color. Though they were simply called Quantum Matter Pulse Guns, the Reactive portion left out, this was what made the turrets so powerful. Concentrated, tightly bound beams of intense Reactive Quantum energy that caused an instantaneous effect upon contact with other matter and power sources. That effect was the detonation of tiny particles of Quantum energy within the focus of the beam, that destabilized a ship's hull and acted in a ripple event. As the naked eye would see an explosion, the real effect was the near instant melting of the ship's hull and implosion of quantum particles that became too large to be contained within their individual energy spheres and thus expanded. Explosively.

The Kavalian command ship disintegrated in a blinding white flash of quantum power, great swaths of the ship fragmenting away in explosive reaction.

Given that SPARTA'S WRATH used a Pralor engineered Seventh Tier Phased Quantum Fusion Resonance Reactor, the pinnacle of engineering design by the Pralor species, the range of her weapons was nearly triple that of a LEONIDAS IIA-Strike Cruiser and almost double that of an ARIZONA-Class Strike Carrier. As 341 indicated, his first Class One Barrage targeted every GREAT SOUL within his firing envelope. This amounted to thirty-six GREAT SOUL-Class Dreadnoughts. Because the composition of the Farnuri Expanse, the Kavalian Admiral had decided against the use of shields to keep their power signature to the barest of minimums. This decision only hastened their destruction as 341's initial barrage obliterated all thirty-six unshielded dreadnoughts in seven seconds. Their shields, had they been active, may have given them precious seconds to begin to maneuver, but in the end it would not have mattered. The surprise was complete, and they were facing a ship with more firepower than over half their task force combined.

And Avatar 341 was fighting for his crew.

-Initial barrage complete. Thirty-six targets destroyed. Follow on barrage to initiate in four point two seconds- 341 droned on. -Avi... please adjust course five degrees port-

-Signaling Admiral Zesico to begin his portion of the attack on Kavalian Task Force in forty-two seconds- Avi broke in. -Power levels steady. Weapons cycling within point two of recommended perimeters. Adjusting course five degrees to port-

"Minor fluctuation of Kinetic Shield Grid in Section twenty-two!" One of the six vampire crewmen on the bridge called out. "Compensating with increased generator output from Section Twenty-One and dispatching Repair Drones to investigate!"

-Excellent work Crewman Voostan! - 341 declared not turning away from his combat podium. -My internal schematics did not show this-

"Hah! I love my job!" Voostan exclaimed. "Kick some more Kavalian ass 341!"

-Commencing secondary barrage- 341 spoke in answer to his shouted request.

Resumar stepped up to where Athani sat at one of the unused sensor stations. "Athani?" He asked. Athani shook her head, her golden blond hair flowing around her face. "It's... it's... I can't keep track of how many ships are dying Resumar."

He placed his hand on her shoulder. "I know this must be hard for you my love." He told her softly.

Athani looked up at him. "Resumar this is amazing!" She exclaimed with wide eyes. "I am your wife and mate now! These people may be the same species as me, but they are our enemies! Every one we kill now means we grow closer to the end!"

"Athani... this is only the beginning." Resumar said.

She nodded her head. "The beginning of our fight to free my people from my father's twisted ideals." She stated with pride. "And I help end it as a Princess of the Lycavorian Union! As your wife!"

-Powering Quantum torpedo launchers nine through twenty-one- 341 continued. -Firing torpedoes-

-DIEROY-Class Kavalian Heavy Cruiser turning to starboard one million kilometers distance. Attempting to bring Spinal Mount Mass Drivers to bear- Avi reported.

-Acknowledged. Shifting fire cone of turrets forty-nine through fifty-seven- 341 chimed in. -Ship destroyed-

“Kavalian ships attempting to initiate COMs out of system!” A Lycavorian officer shouted. “Activating jamming pods and frequency overlapping! Now try and talk to your people fools!”

Resumar couldn't help but smile at the obvious enthusiasm the crew was showing but he also knew the tide of battle could turn instantly against them. He stepped up beside 341 without pause. “341... we can't play with these idiots any longer. We need to wipe them out so that they can't invade. None of them can escape.”

341 glanced at Resumar and nodded. -Understood Resumar Leonidas- He turned back to his podium. -Initiating launch sequence of APOC drones-

“All drones signal ready!” La'taian shouted from her station.

-Activate launch protocols and release control to me La'taian- 341 ordered.

“APOC Fighter Drone Launch Protocols initiated! Control is released to 341! Let them have it!” She barked.

-Acknowledged. Launching APOC drones. Initiating launch of X2 Guided Fusion Binary missiles! Programming for impact detonation! Targeting coordinates for all ships locked. I am Firing-

ADMIRAL ZESICO'S FLAGSHIP

“... three... two... one!” His Xo called out. “Mark!”

Zesico came to his feet. “All ships drop shrouds! Lock and fire all Mark 22s! All batteries weapons free! Hit them! Hit them! Hit them!”

Zesico's entire two hundred ship task force had closed to within weapons range of the much larger Kavalian Strike force. Zesico and the others were not prepared for the sheer size of SPARTA'S WRATH when she appeared, but now his Task Force was in perfect position to hit the Kavalian ships as many of them not caught in 341's initial barrage began to turn and face the enormous ship. Shooting an enemy in the ass was always fun and that is exactly what the smaller Lycavorian Task Force did. With stellar results.

Mark 22A ZMF missiles rippled away from nearly every ship in Zesico's Task Force, Type I and Type II plasma batteries began to pound the typically weaker rear shields of any ship, and every ship capable of carrying TEMPEST fighters and fighter/bombers was spilling them into the stars just as fast as they could kick them out of their launch tubes. It wasn't pretty by any means, but it was certainly effective. The ZMF missiles added to the carnage and confusion and mixed in with the X2 Guided Fusion Binary missiles. The Kavalian Task Force commander, a man who was already dead, had made the fatal mistake of bunching his ships too close together. Maneuvering space was at a premium and the much large Kavalian ships did not have the space they needed to make turns. And they died because of this.

The frigates and medium cruisers fared better because of tighter turn radiuses, but the ultimate outcome could not be changed now. APOC Fighter Drones and TEMPEST squadrons would dart around and between and over and under the smaller cruisers and frigates and simply whittle them down until they were destroyed. The few DIEROY-Class Heavy Cruisers who managed to get off shots at SPARTA'S WRATH or other Union ships usually were killed before they fired more than two rounds from their Spinal Mount Mass Driver cannons. They did score kills however, as five NOVA-Class cruisers, one MOONBEAM-Class cruiser and one LEONIDAS IIA fell prey to those devastating weapons. Another sixteen Union ships fell to assorted Kavalian warships, but the rout was clearly on only a hundred and eighty seconds after it began.

When the Task Force Commander died, every Kavalian ship was left to fend for itself. Large scale Kavalian operations were always directed by senior officers far behind the main forces. The Kavalian way of thinking and warfare. They did not allow a whole lot of freedom to single ship commanders when it came to such operations, and they paid the price today. The attack was a complete surprise, the Kavalians having no warning whatsoever. The crews had become slack and unprepared. They had been waiting; many of them for weeks, to either launch an invasion into Union space or be greeted as allies and friends when Marshall Pusintin took the throne. Neither of those things would happen this day.

Now all they would do was die.

SPARTA'S WRATH

SIX MINUTES INTO THE BATTLE OF THE FARNURI EXPANSE

It would officially be called the Battle of the Farnuri Expanse by the Lycavorian Union and the Farnuri Expanse Massacre by the Kavalian Federation. By either name, the battle was one of the quickest in the history of either species. And one that carried a staggering loss of life.

Nearly two and a half million souls and fully one fourth of the KFI's most advanced and battle ready ships were annihilated in just six savage minutes. It would stand as their worst defeat in history.

At least for eight days.

It would not earn, Androcles Leonidas for ordering it or his brother Resumar Leonidas for leading it, any popularity points among the Kavalian people at first. However, it would earn both of them a reputation as Union officers and Spartan Princes who would do anything it took to win a battle and protect what they believed in. And it would cause many Kavalian military officers to take pause in the future, out of both fear and respect, before engaging one of the brothers in battle ever again.

Of the six hundred and nineteen Kavalian warships that had been hidden in the Farnuri Expanse, only twenty-three made it out alive. All of them were PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigates that had been on the far reaching edges of the Task Force when SPARTA'S WRATH had appeared and unleashed hell upon them all.

All twenty-three ship captains would be executed for cowardice when they returned to Kavalian space.

“... Debris field is so thick you could walk across it!” One of the engineers on the sensor stations commented as Resumar moved up between 341 and Avi.

“Report 341? Avi?” Resumar asked.

-Sensors indicate no targets remain Resumar Leonidas- 341 answered.

-We are only picking up intermittent power readings among the debris- Avi reported as the silence on the bridge was telling. The events that they had just wrought were beginning to sink into the heads of the men and women on the bridge.

“Survivors?” Resumar asked softly.

-The debris field is too cluttered with power emissions to determine if there are survivors Resumar- Avi answered. -Should I direct Admiral Zesico to begin rescue operations?-

Resumar Leonidas suddenly knew what Andro felt when he gave the order to destroy the Jump Gates around Hadaria and condemn million to death. His orders did the same thing here today. Enemy or not, he would have those deaths on his shoulders for the rest of his natural life. He turned his head and looked into the blue/green eyes of Athani when he felt her touch his arm. She was so beautiful to him, so precious. And she represented all the future could hold for him.

-Resumar... Admiral Zesico is now requesting if we should search for survivors- Avi spoke.

Resumar turned back to him. "Let's see him Avi." Res answered.

-Initiating COM channel- Avi spoke. The image of the older Admiral appeared just to the side of 341 who turned to look at him. -Channel open and secure-

"Milord Prince!" Zesico declared. "This is a great victory! An Amazing victory!"

Resumar nodded his head. "Yes it is." He said. "It is also a crime. Another crime to add to the list that has been committed by Prefect Keleru and his cronies."

Zesico sobered immediately and slowly nodded his head. "Milord... we should begin the search for survivors. We..."

"No." Resumar spoke the word firmly causing heads to turn to look at him from across the bridge.

"Milord we have won!" Zesico said. "It is the honorably thing to do now."

"Was it honorable to try and kill my father?" Resumar snarled softly. "Was it honorable to rape one of my mothers? To beat and attempt to rape another? Was it honorable to kill nearly two hundred of our children? Innocent children? Was that honorable?"

"Milord... we are not like them." Zesico said gently.

"You're right Admiral... we aren't." Resumar said. "Would my... would my brother look for survivors?"

"Prince Resumar... you are not your brother." Zesico said.

"I asked you a question Admiral." Resumar told him. "Would Andro search for survivors among the wreckage?"

"Given... given what I know of your brother Milord... no, I don't believe he would." Zesico answered. "I just thought..."

Resumar moved closer to the transmission. "I know what you meant Admiral Zesico." He said. "I am only half Lycavorian and most elven officers would do what you suggest... but I am my father's son first and foremost. I am a Spartan and a husband before I am an elf. Before I am anything else. Leave them to the cold of space! The Kavalian Federation began this... not us. And like my father and my brother I will not show one ounce of mercy or pity for them! Not one ounce! Not after what they have done. Nubou them! Let the vacuum have them!"

Admiral Zesico stood up straighter and a small smile split his lips. He bowed his head with just a little more pride and respect this time. "It will be as you order Prince Resumar of Sparta! And a son of our King you are! A son of our King you are!"

"Your casualties Admiral?" Resumar asked after a moment and Athani stepping up beside him to press her firm body against his side and grip his arm with loving eyes.

Zesico paused himself and lowered his head slightly. "Twenty-seven of my warships lost Milord. No survivors." He answered. "Seventy-six fighters as well."

Resumar paused for another moment before nodding. "We have spent enough Spartan blood here this day Admiral." He said looking at him.

Zesico nodded. "I agree Milord."

"Let us go home Admiral." Resumar spoke. "I wish to see my brothers and sisters after so long a time. Let us go home... for the war is only just beginning."

EARTH
THERMOPYLAE
KING LEONIDAS MEMORIAL

Sheva Juconi watched with keen dark eyes as the thirty-five Durcunusaan kept the many Netnews reporters away from the bleachers where Sadi and the others sat with Gorgo and Dasha and the smaller Leonidas children. The not so small anymore dragon hatchlings of Retta, Calyb, Deion and Nara rested on the smooth marble surface with their older sister Elynth, Majeir, Tharua, Anthar and Ryner. They were much calmer than they were six months ago, partly because they were growing and partly because of the sacred ground they rested on. Sheva took several steps to come up beside Jomann, his left leg bent with his foot on the lowest bleacher. His right hand rested on the holster that held the K14 KM, his P190 secured to his back. His eyes were also scanning the crowd that had gathered once they discovered almost the entire Leonidas family had come to Thermopylae.

“Is it always like this?” She finally asked looking at Jomann.

Jomann turned to meet her gaze. “Yes.” He answered. “He hates it.”

Sheva looked back to where Androcles was standing in front of the Leonidas Memorial, Dorian beside his brother. She turned back to Jomann. “You speak like you have known him for years Captain... but you have only been his Captain for weeks.”

Jomann nodded his head. “A lot has happened in that time. Before you joined us and Queen Isabella appointed you the protector of Prince Dorian. Much of which even Andro does not understand. And it’s far too confusing to try and explain. You will see what I’m talking about as time passes.”

“War is coming.” Sheva said softly.

Jomann looked at her. “War is upon us Commander. It has already begun.”

“Already begun?” Sheva exclaimed.

“You will see when we arrive at the Senate vote.” Jomann said.

“Why did we come here?” Sheva asked.

Jomann straightened up to his full six foot three height and he towered over her. “There is always time to seek the blessings of the honored dead.” He said softly.

Sheva watched as he turned and walked across the bleachers to where Eliani sat next to Gorgo on the bench, Normya and Tir’ut making room for him. Eliani greeted him and pulled him close to her as Gorgo rested her hand on his shoulder. Sheva swore they were all talking within Mindvoice... the tremors were there... but she could never break the combined shields of so many powerful MV users. She turned back to watch the crowd then, making a note of this fact.

“Our father came here the night before he declared war on the Evolli.” Andro spoke softly as he stood beside Dorian.

Dorian had now finished growing, much quicker than anyone had expected to be sure. He appeared as any other twenty-three year old male would appear, but he carried his father’s black hair and incredible good looks like all his brothers. His hazel/green eyes were a gift from his mother and just as expressive. He stood one inch shy of Andro’s six foot one, but his body was two hundred and ten pounds of impressive muscle and bone. He sported the same ripped definition of all the Leonidas men, as well as the dual fangs unique to the Leonidas bloodline. Though he was half vampire, like his sisters Zarah and Carina, his fangs were longer and thicker than normal vampire fangs and the smaller, inner fangs were more ferocious looking on the men in the family by far. When he wasn’t with Andro now, he was training with his Bonded Brother Ryner. Each lesson Andro and Elynth gave to them they conducted until they could do it perfectly and without thinking. Their bond was nearly as strong as Andro and Elynth’s, shaped this way because Dorian was still within Isabella’s womb when he and Ryner bonded together. Now they shared the memories of their fathers and mothers and all they had experienced in their lives. Just as Andro and Elynth.

The only two men and dragons who had bonded in such a way in all the history of the Union and dragons.

“I can... I can feel and see all grandfather passed to him Andro.” Dorian said. “The images and sensations. All they did and have done.”

Andro nodded his head and turned back to the monument, looking up at the statue of his grandfather. “In time Dorian... you will begin to see what grandfather Resumar saw and did. I have caught fleeting glances of this at times. Father sees them more and more now. With age and the use of our abilities, these images and sensations will become more clear. And the bond between us will become stronger. Just as it has between Zarah and I. Just for different reasons.”

“I did not see him enough.” Dorian said with a sad tone of voice. “I miss him. And our mothers.”

Andro nodded. “So do I.” He agreed. “What they do now however, it could have untold repercussion on our future fervon. Our father would not do this if he didn’t think it was needed. If it wasn’t important.”

“He trusts you.” Dorian said.

“He trusts us.” Andro corrected him. “This is... it is not how he wanted you to grow and learn Dorian. Nor is it what I wanted.”

“I do not regret what has happened Androcles.” Dorian told him. “If my mothers had not done what they did I would have died. I’m very glad that did not happen.”

Andro chuckled. “So are we.”

Dorian turned and looked intently at his brothers and sisters in the bleachers with his grandmothers. “Will it always be like this Andro?”

“Being able to feel them you mean?” Andro asked looking at him.

Dorian turned back to him and nodded. “Yes.”

Andro nodded his own head again. “Elynth and I will teach you and Ryner to block most of it as the Feravomir taught me and Elynth... but yes.” He replied with a small smile. “Being born fully aware as you and I were is not the great thing people believe it to be sometimes. We are more sensitive to the emotions and feelings of others, especially those in our family. It will be the same for you and Ryner. It is a gift... but it can also be a curse.”

Dorian turned his eyes back and watched them for a few moments before moving his to settle on Sheva Juconi. His wolf blood surged at the sight of her, taking in her petite but tightly packed body, and his loins stirred. She had enticed him from the first moment. A few hours into his awareness and of all the females he had felt around his mother, Sheva Juconi stood out like a beacon. Her less than shoulder length blond hair was cut and angled in a way that had her hair almost falling over her right eye. Dorian didn’t care for it because it hid her eyes, which were a delicious reddish brown. The body armor conformed to her figure which was perfect as far as Dorian was concerned. Even from this distance he could smell her scent, faint as it was with most pureblood vampires, but her butterscotch and walnut scent was like...

[A drug?] Andro’s voice in his head offered.

Dorian turned back and looked at his brother with a grin. [I was thinking too loud huh?] He spoke.

Andro chuckled once more. [Don’t worry... I don’t think anyone heard.] He said. [So this is the girl you were talking about?]

Dorian nodded. [She smells so damn good!] He exclaimed. [When she is close by... and the wind shifts... I want to lose myself within her.]

[I do know the feeling brother. I have that same problem. Only four times worse than you.] He answered.

[May I ask you a question Fervon?] He asked.

[Always Dorian... you know that.]

[I know Sadi is your Anome. That she will always be the one to stir your blood the most. But do you prefer one of your other mates the most after Sadi?] Dorian asked. [Does one stir your blood even remotely like she does?]

[They all stir my blood Fervon.] He said. [In their own way... with their own scent.]

[So you aren’t going to answer my question?] Dorian asked.

Andro turned and put his arm over Dorian’s shoulders. [Come Fervon... we have a task ahead of us at the Senate meeting.]

Dorian grinned and shook his head. [I told them you wouldn’t admit to anything.] He said as he put his arm around his brother’s back.

[Ah... so our siblings put you up to this? It had to be Eli.] Andro said.

[Cannon fodder Eli called me.] Dorian spoke with an infectious grin.

[Don’t worry... we’ll get back at her.] Andro told him. He looked at Dorian. [If you must know... and I will only tell you... I could not choose because I want them all.] He spoke. [Now if the question is who will I reach for first after I have exhausted Sadi...] He said with a smile. [The answer to that is Ne'Veha. Her elven ears are delightfully tasty and she is... let's just say she is considerably more adventurous than I thought a female elf raised on Elear would be. She and Sadi... when they work in unison...] Andro shook his head. [Wow!]

Dorian couldn't help but laugh at Andro's expression. [That good?]

Andro nodded. [Oh yes. That good.]

[It... it is good to see you smile fervor. You have done so little of it these last weeks.] Dorian told him seriously.

Andro met his eyes. [And that is the strength of our family Dorian.] He said. [No matter what takes place... we will always find laughter and love with our family. Never forget that. These are who we surround ourselves with and Sparta is where we come to heal all wounds. No matter if they are physical or emotional. This is what Sparta means to us.]

Dorian nodded as they stopped in front of the bleachers. [I won't forget Andro. I will never forget.]

Andro nodded and turned his eyes on the rest of his family. He glanced at Gorgo and Dasha his grandmothers, the Matriarchs of the Leonidas family. His brothers and sisters. Their bonded ones who were tied more tightly to their lives than any dragons across the Union.

"It's time family." He said softly. "And forgive me for what all of us will see."

Gorgo stood up slowly and looked at him holding Nara and Retta's hands. "We are the Leonidas family." Gorgo spoke with pride and conviction in her voice. "We will always stand together."

"Avoi." Dasha spoke as she rose.

Eliani, Sadi, all of them followed suit. "Let's get this done Andro." Eliani spoke finally.

BETA QUADRANT ROTHRYN EMBASSY AUSTROVA

"... Heard about what was happening with the Board of Regents and made the decision to have you visit us sooner." Dyack was explaining as Denali, Lisisa and Arduri followed him down the gigantic main hallway of the Rothryn Embassy. "I'm am pleased that you accepted."

"And what did you hear?" Denali asked as they walked down the corridor.

The ceilings had to be twenty feet high with what appeared to be expensive artwork on both sides of the main corridor, spaced evenly on the walls. The embassy appeared immaculate as Deni glanced into a room that had a roaring fireplace against the wall and several couches from what he could see.

Dyack turned to look at Deni. "We have had diplomatic relations with the Vanari for many centuries. I'm surprised Director General Dutkne did not tell you about us."

"In his defense... we've been dealing with quite a bit back home and there hasn't been time to really sit down and discuss things in that manner." Denali answered honestly.

"I see." Dyack spoke. "Well... we have many trade pacts with the Vanari and either I or our ambassador meets with the Board of Regents once a week. We maintain a very open relationship with them."

"Dutkne told us the Rothryn were a reclusive species." Lisisa asked now.

Dyack smiled and looked at her now. "It may seem that way to some. We have relations with every species within the Beta Quadrant for the most part. Those we choose not to associate with are few."

"Do you do business with the Eridiani and the OSG?" Deni asked.

Dyack stopped and looked at him. "The Eridiani are an insular species. They choose not to associate with us for whatever the reason and we do not lose any sleep over it, for lack of a better term." He said. "We are aware however, of the relationship between the Vanari and the Eridiani. And now the involvement of the Protectorate and the Union it seems in assisting them. Slavery is a nasty business."

"The Lycavorian Union despises slavery of any kind. We have many laws against it in any form." Lisisa snapped gently. "The scum who helped the OSG from the Union will be found. And they'll be executed. The Protectorate is no different."

Dyack nodded. "Good." He said. "The Vanari will not be so easily convinced I'm afraid." He looked at Arduri. "Forgive me for saying so Arduri Re Mydala."

Arduri nodded her head to him. "You would be correct in that assessment Praetor Dyack. But I do not share the same reasoning as the SBR or my father."

Dyack nodded. "So it would appear." He said. "You are Prince Denali's mate then?"

Lisisa grasped her hand. "Our mate." She stated. "And we could not be happier."

Dyack's eyes narrowed for just a instant when Lisisa and Arduri smiled at one another and pressed their bodies close. He quickly dismissed what he felt while he was looking at them and then he turned to Denali.

"Taking more than one mate and wife is accepted in the Union?" He asked.

"It's by no means normal or common... no." Deni replied. "But it is accepted." He answered as Lisisa and Arduri moved to stand on either side of him. "For my father and then for my brother it was a little different... but our people are very open and understanding. As are many of the species who live in the Union."

"Interesting." Dyack said. "The rest of your family?"

"I have six mothers..." Deni answered. "All of whom I regard as my mother. My brothers and sisters do not draw a distinction between our mothers. We never have. They all speak with one voice. My brother Arram has two wives and mates, my brother Resumar one. Andro... Andro has five."

Dyack's eyes grew wide. "Five! And your father had six mates and wives?" He spoke stunned. "That is incredible. How many children did your mothers bear for your father?"

"There are eighteen of us at the moment." Denali answered. "Five of my siblings are too young to take part fully in the military or government."

"And all of you are bonded to these cre..." Dyack stopped himself. "Forgive me... to dragons?"

Lisisa nodded. "Almost all of us yes." She said.

"And you are not fully Lycavorian?" Dyack asked her. "You are half vampire."

Lisisa nodded again. "Yes... but my wolf genes are dominant to a great extent. I can shift and I have the senses of both, though not as powerful as Deni's since he is a pureblood."

"We have never seen such magnificent animals as your dragons." Dyack said with a touch of excitement. "Ardan has told me they are benevolent for the most part? And that within your family is only one line of these dragons."

"That's not entirely true." Denali spoke. "Most of us are bonded to dragons that are the children of one pair. My father and mother's dragons. My sister and two of my mothers have dragons that are not within that cycle of life, but are considered members of our family."

"I must... I must extend my condolences to you on the loss of your father and mother." Dyack said somberly. "I was older than you when I lost my father and mother... but it hurts nonetheless."

Denali nodded his head towards him. "Yes it does."

Dyack began walking again. "I understand the Vanari are not very receptive towards the information you have brought them." He said. "That their own people may be involved with the OSG and taken part in selling their females."

"You are well informed Praetor." Arduri spoke now.

Dyack nodded. "I have made good friends within the SBR and the full Board of Regents. And as a trading partner, they do not keep information from me that may impact out future contracts or negotiations. As I said... we are very open with each other."

Arduri looked at Deni before answering. "Some would say too open considering what you know." She said.

Dyack did not take offense and he smiled. "Perhaps." He answered as he led them into the huge room now.

There was a massive table that was elaborately set with fine china and candles and tall wine glasses. The room had two levels to it, a balcony extending around the upper floor, the walls filled with scrolls and books like the libraries in Sparta Deni noted. The windows had flowing curtains that appeared to be made satin, the setting sun outside casting a stunning silhouette as it pierced the glass of the windows. The room was very well lit, nearly a dozen intricate light globes station all around the room.

Dyack moved forward. "Please... allow me to introduce everyone." He said moving to the side of the stunning dark blond haired woman. She appeared older but her skin was flawless and her body still very enticing. "My wife and mate Aleatia." He spoke.

Aleatia appeared to be very refined and her scent put her between seven and eight hundred years old. She wore a violet colored dress that hugged her lush body and her dark blond hair flowed elegantly around her face and blue eyes. She was comfortable and all smiles as she came up to Denali first and held out her hand. "It is a pleasure to meet you Prince Leonidas." She said.

Denali took her offered hand and smiled. "And you ma'am." He answered.

Aleatia turned next to Lisisa and Arduri. "Princess Leonidas... a pleasure."

Lisisa smiled and took her hand. She seemed genuinely warm and open and this was refreshing for Lisisa. "Ma'am... I don't know... should we call you by a title?"

Aleatia laughed softly, a humorous laugh that was sincere. "No... no. I prefer Aleatia. I have no title. I leave that to my husband." She said playfully looking back at Dyack who smiled at her.

Dyack held his hands out for the two younger females and they moved up next to him. "These are my daughters... Ibani and Osbela." He said as he urged them forward.

Denali smiled and nodded to both of them but did not extend his hand to greet them. "Ladies... it is an honor." He said.

Osabela was the blond one and Ibani the dark haired female. Both of them were equally as stunning as their mother in beauty. Both had her long, shiny hair but Ibani must have gotten her father's dark hair coloring. Their eyes were bright and intelligent and their scents were clean and pure.

Dyack turned. "You know my sons Anroth and Kelelm. The beautiful young woman beside Anroth is his wife and mate Tynitia."

Denali nodded to them. He already didn't care for Anroth in the least. The man had almost gotten himself beaten down. His father had stopped him before he had said anything stupid.

Dyack motioned to the table. "Please... dinner is almost ready. Why don't we sit and begin to discover what we have in common. I'm sure we all have questions for each other. And if possible... I would like to hear about the history of the Union after the Black Day as those among the Protectorate and yourselves call it."

Dinner was superb.

Thick, juicy slabs of what would be steak within the Union and seasoned with a slight cinnamon flavor to add sweetness and cooked to perfection. Large loaves of warm bread slices, with large, round vegetables that resembled Greek Yemista. The large stuffed Yemista, basically peppers, were something that Denali loved and these vegetables were filled with a thick sauce and what appeared to be the Rothryn version of rice. The diagonally sliced chunks turned out to be very similar to potatoes and they were cooked to a crispy outer skin and very soft inside. The wine was a three hundred year old bottle, aged in the many wineries on the Rothryn homeworld since this was a major export of their people. It was sweet with a tangy touch to it and went down very easily. The conversation was light in the beginning, mainly about life within the Union and how it compared to Rothryn society. Denali and Lisisa paid close attention to the body language of everyone at the table, but based on their earlier meeting with them on the landing pad, they kept their MV shields very high and even helped Arduri to reinforce her own developing MV shields.

Aleatia was genuinely open and talkative, often times Dyack allowing her to ask the questions as he listened. Of his two daughters, Osabela was the most chatty, asking of what entertainment and exciting things there were to do in the Union. Ibani was reserved but friendly, interested more in the Leonidas family as a whole, and their history. Ibani was the oldest of Dyack's daughters it appeared.

Kelelm asked pointed but thoughtful questions and both Deni and Lisisa liked him from the outset. He was more easy going and did not seem to regard them as a threat. It was obvious from the outset that Lisisa answering many of the questions surprised them and though it appeared as if Aleatia asked whatever she wanted, it was Arduri who pointed out to them in Mindvoice that her questions seemed directed and pre-planned. Anroth simply stared at them for the most part, his beautiful wife and mate beside him doing the same.

Neither spoke much until Anroth finally could no longer contain himself and opened his mouth, asking the questions that they had been avoiding.

“The ship you arrived on is quite impressive?” Anroth asked. “Do you have many of them in your fleet?”

Denali lowered his fork and finished chewing the meat in his mouth before wiping his lips with his napkin. “The ARCHDEMON?” He spoke. “She is a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser. It is our standard command ship. The ARCHDEMON is four months out of dry dock.”

“Does your brother have his own ship?” Ibani asked quickly.

“Androcles’s ship is the SCIMITAR.” Lisisa answered her question. “He co-commands it with Captain Sa'sur. A female elf. She’s a bit bigger than the ARCHDEMON, two hundred meters or so, but that is because she often carries more dragons than normal.”

“The SCIMITAR?” Ibani said softly. “That sounds very intimidating.”

Kelelm leaned forward. “A female elf?” He asked.

Lisisa nodded. “We have many ships commanded by female elves. Their reflexes and ability to adapt make them some of the finest fighter pilots in the Union.” She told him.

“Your women... your women fight?” Aleatia asked surprised.

Denali chuckled. “They fight. Hell... some of them are downright mean.”

Lisisa slapped his arm. “Deni... your language.” She hissed.

“My apologies.” Deni said quickly.

Dyack smiled at this action and though he wanted to scold Anroth for beginning this, it seemed like a comfortable enough topic to his guests at the time and he would allow Anroth to pursue it. “I slip up all the time.” He said to Deni.

“That doesn’t answer my question.” Anroth continued when his father did not stop him. “Do you have many of them within your fleet? How large is your fleet by the way? Will your ships be coming here? What can you tell us of your ability to manipulate Flatspace? What are your brother’s intentions and what...?”

“That is enough Anroth!” Dyack spoke quickly.

“No... it is ok.” Denali told him looking at Lisisa quickly before turning to Dyack. “They are legitimate questions sir. I am not as politically adept as my brother but I will answer what I can.” He looked at Anroth. “The LEONIDAS IIA is our standard command cruiser as I said. As to exact numbers... I can’t comment on that. The overall Union fleet is in excess of fifteen thousand ships. Some of them older and less used... but we try to upgrade or refit them often.”

“Fifteen thousand?” Kelelm gasped in shock. “How... how large is the Lycavorian Union?” He asked.

“At the moment... there are nine hundred and seventy-three different species that call the Union home.” Lisisa answered. What she was going to tell them was easily accessible anywhere within the Union and used all of the time in public forums. “Our father was able to get twenty-seven of these to join the Union after he became King. They previously did not want to be part of the Union before he sat down and spoke with them and showed them his visions of the future. Of those different species, there are four hundred and nineteen governments ranging in size from a handful to several thousand as is the case with the Elves and Lycavorians. Each species has five permanent seats within the Union Senate regardless of the size of their civilian population, the larger governments like the Elves and Algolians and Lycavorians have between two and five additional seats. There are a total of three thousand two hundred and twenty-three Union Senators in the government as it stand right now.”

“They all have a say in the government and what you do?” Dyack asked.

“There has to be a very clear majority for anything to get passed within the Senate. At least seventy percent of the Senators have to agree to it.” Lisisa answered. “We won’t impose something upon our people if the majority of them do not want it. A fifty-one to forty-nine percent majority doesn’t happen within the Union.”

“Doesn’t this cause things to take excessive time?” Aleatia asked.

Lisisa shook her head. “Not really. The majority of the species within the Union were part of the oppression of the High Coven right alongside our people. It’s amazing how fourteen thousand plus years of slavery can make people think and act toward a single goal. The Senators within the Union have differing ideals and such, but for the most part they believe in the same things.”

“And the government controls the military?” Kelelm asked.

“In a manner of speaking.” Lisisa replied. “The military falls under the King’s purview. That is our brother Andro now... but neither he nor our father have ever or will ever go against the majority of the civilian government.”

“The technology of the Union took the Vanari by surprise.” Dyack said. “Your engine technology, your ability to manipulate Flatspace. How did this come to you? Is it true?”

“How it came to us is probably something that Andro would not want us to share.” Denali said as he shifted his body and got to his feet beside his chair. “As to if it is true?” He lifted his arm and summoned his Shi Viska. The shield burst into existence causing the Rothryn at the table to lean or push back from the table in shock as the shield hummed softly on his arm. Just as quickly Deni dismissed the Shi Viska and the shield vanished into Flatspace once more and he returned to his chair. “Sorry... it was just easier to show you.”

Dyack leaned forward quickly. “Do all of your people have this ability?”

Deni nodded. “Lycavorians who choose to enter service... yes.” He answered. “We seem to be the only species who are able to survive the use of Flatspace technology. The Shi Viska... my shield... it is awarded after the individual completes his Agoge. His training Ritual and Rite.”

“Awarded?” Anroth asked.

Deni nodded since this too was public knowledge. “When you complete your Agoge... Lycavorians are awarded your Bridle if you intend to enter service in the Union.” He lifted his left arm and pulled the sleeve up just a little to reveal the thin, flesh colored leather looking wrap that curled around his wrist and his upper forearm and was connected by a similar piece of leather looking material. “The Bridle is branded to your arm and allows you to call your shield.”

“Branded?” Aleatia asked in horror.

“It is not as the word sounds really.” Deni said quickly in response to her reaction. “In the old days of my grandfather in Sparta that is what they did. Now however, your Bridle is gene encoded to you. It will only work for the individual it is encoded to. And then you have to have the ability to call it. That can only be done by someone within Mindvoice. We have refined the technology some in the last twenty-five years.”

“Refined how?” Anroth asked him. “Since you discovered the Pralor ship on your old homeworld?”

Denali looked at him as he lifted the glass of wine, his face not betraying his surprise that Anroth knew of that. It made sense though since Wayonn was a member of the Protectorate and the Vanari undoubtedly discovered over the last centuries what he really was. If the Rothryn were as well connected as they allowed, there was no reason to believe they didn’t know about his father finding CS41 and taking it to Earth. Wayonn obviously knew about it and passed this information to the Vanari at some point.

“You’ll understand if I choose not to answer that question.” Deni said pleasantly.

“We’ll find out!” Anroth said.

Denali smiled and lifted his glass to him. “Good luck with that.” He said.

Lisisa decided to change the subject before Anroth provoked Denali. He was becoming more and more like Andro and their father in his distaste for arrogant people and his reaction to them. “You are Lycavorian.” She spoke quickly. “How is it that you came to be here in the Beta Quadrant?”

“We are not Lycavorian!” Anroth spoke with heat in his voice. “We can not shift our forms as you can!”

Dyack leaned forward once more. “Aleatia... you can explain it better than I.” He spoke to his wife and mate. “Our scientists have determined the how... but not the why it happened.”

Lisisa turned to her. “I’d like to hear it.” She said.

Aleatia smiled at her. “It has to do with genetics.” She said. “Yes... essentially we are genetically no different from Lycavorians, except that the gene code that allows you to shift your physical forms is not present within our people. The Rothryn. We have all the same skills, the enhanced senses, speed and strength, as well as the longevity. It seems that somewhere down the evolutionary ladder however, that particular gene was bred out of our people. At least that is what the common consensus among our scientists is.”

“You are a scientist?” Lisisa asked.

Aleatia nodded. “I have a degree in Biological Engineering and Genetic Mechanics.” She answered.

Denali smiled. “Wow! You and our mother Anja would get along great.” He said.

Aleatia laughed softly. “Your Hadarian mother? I would very much like to meet her. Dyack has told me what we have been able to discover about the Hadarian people from the Vanari.” She said. “We are advanced medically, as are the Vanari and others, but we apparently do not come close to the Hadarian people. Is it true that their bodies are infused with a healing form of radiation?"

Lisisa nodded. "Yes."

Aleatia shook her head. "That is fascinating." She said.

"I'm sure our sister Eliani would love to talk with you." Lisisa said. "Andro never goes anywhere without her and she'll be with him when he arrives in seven weeks. Eliani is almost as knowledgeable as our mother."

"I would like that." Aleatia said.

"What is the purpose of dissolving the Protectorate if the Union does not plan on moving in and taking their place?" Anroth spoke once more. "You still have not told us what your purpose for doing this is."

"They are our people." Denali said. "We were separated by the events of The Black Day and now we have been reunited. We have no other purpose besides that."

"We are supposed to believe that?" Anroth asked.

Deni looked at him. "What you believe is not a concern of mine." He answered. "The truth is the truth."

"The truth is one person's view." Anroth snapped.

"Perhaps in your limited view of things." Denali told him bluntly. "Not in ours."

"Are you always so rude and disrespectful to your hosts?" Anroth's wife Tynitia blurted out.

"Tynitia!" Aleatia demanded.

"I am only expressing an observation." Tynitia snapped.

Denali didn't back down and looked at the beautiful young woman across the table who had arrogance pouring from her pores. She obviously thought she was far more important than she actually was because she was Anroth's wife. "Respect is not something given because of one's position Lady Tynitia. It needs to be earned and given in order to be received back. My brothers and sisters and I were raised to give respect where it is due, not cater to those who believe it is owed to them. As you and your husband believe."

Anroth snarled and sat forward. "I am the son of the Rothryn Praetor and Tynitia is my mate!" He snapped. "You would do well to remember that!"

"And I am a Prince of the Lycavorian Union." Denali spoke not taking his eyes from Anroth and not appearing flustered in any way. "That does not make me better than anyone else. It is simply a title."

Dyack held up his hand. "Please... we..."

The soft chirping sound caused all of them to look at Deni who lifted his right hand to his lips.

"ArchDemon actual." He spoke softly. "I left instructions not to disturb us unless absolutely necessary."

"Milord... it is Captain Chelios!" The urgent voice spoke. "Sire... it is happening."

"What?" Deni gasped as Lisisa's head whipped around to look at him. "Now? They weren't supposed to finish until tomorrow!"

"I know... but I initiated a Quantum Relay Data Connection to download daily reports and it came over on a secure channel. It's happening right now! Which means that it has already begun! The Senate vote is being broadcast all over the Union." Chelios reported. "You have to return to the ship! I will send a shuttle for you!"

All of them had heard his voice from the small receiver Deni wore and Dyack came to his feet. "You... you have Quantum Communications ability?" He gasped unaware of this fact. It was a new technology still, barely fifty years old in the Beta Quadrant. "You... we have our own relay here. You are more than welcome to use our relay Prince Leonidas."

Deni glanced at Lisisa and Arduri quickly. Lisisa shrugged after a moment. "The QCC was never meant to be secret my love and they will find out sooner or later." She said.

Arduri nodded. "Andro gave my father a direct link to him. He is probably watching even now." She said.

"Chelios... can you sync with the Rothryn QC relay here in their embassy?" Deni asked.

"I just need their transmit and receive code." Chelios's voice answered.

Dyack nodded quickly. "Come." He said.

"Father... that is secure communications equipment!" Anroth protested.

Dyack took Denali's arm. "Come! All of you come!"

EARTH SPARTA UNION SENATE CONVOCATION MEMORIAL

Construction had begun on this facility some six years earlier on the site of the old Spartan Senate Rotunda. It was a project approved by the Spartan Senate after being presented by Panos and Dilios. Given that Martin and the royal family would call Sparta home for six months of every year, Panos wanted to make sure that everyone knew that Sparta was their city as well. The Convocation Memorial included trappings from every known species within the Union. The huge domed structure took up nearly the entire skyline to the north of the city, able to accommodate all three thousand two hundred and twenty three senators when needed and equipped with holo projectors for those who could attend only via Holo Image. The structure would eventually house offices of all those who wished to have an office here in Sparta, as well as several libraries and food courts featuring food from across the Union.

The main Senate Chamber was shaped like the ancient Spartan Senate chamber. It was a massive oval shape room, with an elevated shell that rose up at an easy ten degree angle. Each level held comfortable box suites with knee high walls and either chairs or couches to sit upon. Each box suite could hold every individual Senator and their two closest aides. The suite boxes were arranged so that all of the species within the Union were featured, and all of the Senators would be heard and seen if they chose to speak to the other members. All of the box suites faced the row of Chairmen Suites which held the Senator who floored the Senate as well as the Deputy Prime Minister and his aides. As dragons were now a permanent fixture within the lives of so many in the Union, a large suite box was on the bottom floor nearest the grand hallways to provide easy access to the Suite Box from the outside. At the moment it was filled with Elynth and the remainder of the dragons who were part of the Leonidas family. A large Box suite diagonally to the left of the Chairman's suite held Gorgo and all the others from the Leonidas family who were present on Earth. Ambassadorial Suites lined the second floor of the Chamber and all of these were full at the moment. A dozen Netnews suites along the second floor were also full with every channel within the Union.

Panos sat in the Deputy Prime Minister's box speaking with several aides while Deia sat between Gorgo and Dasha. She was a member of this family and she would no longer try to hide that fact or the pride it made her feel. Androcles sat in the first row with Sadi on one side of him and Dorian on the other. Ne'Veha sat beside Sadi with Carisia and Lu'ria to her left. Andro was pointing to different men and women and whispering to his brother while Eliani sat on Dorian's right and commented occasionally. Zarah and Lucia sat with Retta and Calyb between them, Nara and Deion sitting between Normya and Tir'ut.

Ambassador Matuur and Qurot sat in the small temporary suite down on the ground level and away from the other ambassadorial suites. Matuur had a severe scowl on his face and was fidgeting in his seat, holding a data pad in his hand. Dilios made some final adjustments to the data pads and scroll on his desk and then took the final scroll from his aide when he came up. He glanced at it quickly, typed a small note on the computer console on the desk top and then looked at Panos and nodded.

Panos rose to his feet and let his eyes sweep across the two thousand six hundred and fourteen men and women from hundreds of species across the Union who were physically present. Six hundred and nine holo images occupied the remaining suite boxes, men and women who could not attend this meeting physically, and were present from their offices in different locations across the Union. The importance of these votes was too much for them to just dismiss them and they all knew it. The members who were present were very impressed with how the Convocation Memorial had been built and the stock of the billions of humans across the Union went up immeasurably in their eyes for this building had been built almost entirely by the human citizens of Sparta.

Panos lifted the polished oak gavel and brought it down on the old fashion bell. The sound resounded throughout the entire chamber and immediately all talking between Senators stopped.

"I call the 1st Session of the Lycavorian Union Senate in our new Convocation Memorial to order." Panos began. "On behalf of President Charles Taylor and Prime Minister Selene of Earth, I welcome those of you who have never visited our fair planet. It is a distinct honor to all citizens of Earth to be able to hold this First Session in the very place where King Leonidas and the Spartan Senate met over three thousand years ago.

It is my hope that those of you unable to attend physically and who join us now via holo emitters from your offices can soon come to Earth and enjoy what we offer.” Panos saw many hundreds of nodding heads among the rows of Senators and it pleased him to see the acceptance of those members present. “I will now turn the proceedings over to the Senate Chairman for Earth. He sat with Sparta’s King Leonidas on many occasions all those years ago, and he had an important role in guiding our Crown Prince as he grew. Senator Dilios of Sparta and Earth.”

There was a loud round of applause from the gathered men and women as Dilios stood and bowed his head respectfully. He waited a moment and then reached up to tap his narrow jaw activating the COM implant there.

“I am... I am humbled by your welcome fellow Senators of the Lycavorian Union.” Dilios took a deep breath and moved around in front of his desk handing his aide a pad. “I had... I had planned to give a speech about what we must do this day, but I have never been a very good speaker. I was shocked when the Crown Prince and Prime Minister chose me to be the Chair of the Senate today. I spent many hours trying to write a speech that would come close to the importance of what this day means. I could not.” Dilios stopped and looked at the thousands of faces arrayed before him. “I will only say this... King Leonidas was a man of many faces. The history books speak of his accomplishments and the battles he won in combat. Rarely do they mention the other battles he won. I was there to witness them. Every single one of them and I can tell you... like all of us... his only purpose was to the betterment of his people. That is what he lived for...” Dilios looked at Gorgo. “And of course his beautiful Queen Gorgo.”

Gorgo smiled and nodded her head to him as her eyes flooded with tears. He looks over you always Dilios. Gorgo reached out to him.

Dilios smiled in return and bowed his head to her. He watches even now. And I feel he approves of what we will do.

He will. He will. Gorgo answered as she squeezed Deia’s hand within hers.

Dilios looked back up his eyes bright and fearless. “If what the senate took up was not to the advancement and prosperity of the Spartan people... he wanted nothing to do with it. As his father before him, King Resumar, as he asked many of you to act in the same way long ago out among the stars, I ask you to do so again today. As Lycavorians. As Elves. As Algolians. As vampires who now call the Union home without question. All of you present today. We have debated and spoken for four days now. Almost five. Now it is time we make our decisions.” Dilios turned to where Matuarr sat. “The Kavalian Ambassador asked me this morning that he be allowed a brief statement and to allow Prefect Keleru to view our proceedings from the Kavalian homeworld of Cabelir. I have agreed.” Dilios motioned to the holo image of Keleru’Puat as his figure appeared next to the Kavalian suite. “Welcome Prefect.”

Keleru’Puat nodded but said nothing at first. He looked a bit flustered which was unusual and he appeared to be inside a steel room and not his home. “I thank you for allowing this.” Keleru finally spoke. “It is in all our best interests.”

Dilios nodded. “I will delegate the floor to Ambassador Matuarr at this time.”

Matuarr nearly popped to his feet. “Senators of the Union... I come to you today to ask that you consider carefully what you will decide and to protest vehemently the course of events concerning the High Coven. We have proven that the son of Marshall Pusintin does indeed have a right and claim to the throne of the Union. It is his throne by your own law... not this boy King who will succeed his hated father.” Matuarr extended his arm and pointed at Androcles across the floor from him. “The future of the Union is at stake here and yet even with this vote looming on the horizon, this imposter has placed the Union precariously close to the edge of a great abyss. He has aligned the Union with your traditional and hated enemies. He has chosen to embrace the foul vampires of the High Coven and has gone so far as to declare you allies!” He looked around at the many faces and could only watch as Andro leaned over purposefully and laid a lip locker on a beaming Carisia to show what he thought of Matuarr and his speech. “This action can not be allowed to stand. I ask... no the Kavalian Federation demands that you do what is obviously the lawful course of action here! The Galactic Court that this Union proposes to follow has already voted for this very thing. We demand you do the same!”

The door to the side of the chamber reopened and two Durcunusaan led three individuals into the massive chamber. Many in the chamber gasped in surprised and Dilios turned to look at Zaniai and Eurin standing with another female Hadarian that all of them knew.

Sivana.

Dilios looked at them surprised. “Prefect Zaniai? Divine One Eurin? Princess Sivana? What is this about?” He asked.

Zaniai stepped forward and held out the data pad. “I have been appointed by the over one million Hadarian citizens who live and work here on Earth to speak for them. We do not accept the outlaw government of Buonau and her Kavalian Masters! We have named our own Council here on Earth as the representatives for the true Hadarian government! The one ruled and guided by Anja Leonidas our Queen and her sister Sivana for the last quarter century. Princess Sivana stands with the Divine One and myself as defacto ruler in her sister’s stead. We petition the Union Senate to officially recognize us so that we may take our place with our friends and brothers. The Hadarian people have NOT abandoned the Union! No Hadarian Healer heeded Buonau’s false call of leadership. They remain among our fleet and hospitals and continue to this day to do their duty for the Union that we helped to form. We...”

A single figure rose among those who were physically present and all of them recognized him as L'tian. Father of Queen For'mya and grandfather to all of her children. “The Delegation from Elear recognizes this petition and Motions to accept Prefect Zaniai’s Petition.”

Another figure stood now. “The Delegation from the Algolian Republic seconds this motion.”

Then another figure. “The Folcani Delegation thirds this motion.”

One of the holographic figures spoke now. “The Nodon Imperium moves that this motion be passed immediately.”

“Aye.”

“Aye”

The word continued to float outward until it became a low rumble within the chamber. One aye cascaded upon another for several minutes until the echo had died away, leaving Sivana standing there in tears and Eurin holding her arms.

Dilios turned back to Zaniai with a smile. “The Union Senate has spoken Prefect Zaniai. We welcome our Hadarian brothers and sisters back.”

Zaniai was almost in tears himself and his chest swelled as he stood there. “Chairman... may we take our place?” He spoke with a breaking voice.

Dilios motioned to the lone suite that had been empty with no holographic projections. “It would honor this chamber Prefect.”

“The Kavalian Federation protests this action!” Matuarr barked out returning to his feet. “The new Hadarian government has been sanctioned and recognized by the Galactic Court and the Kavalian Federation.”

Dilios looked at him as Zaniai and the others moved to the suite box quickly, greeting the Algolian Senators with smiles and handshakes for they were the closest to them. More would come later Dilios knew.

“The Lycavorian Union does not.” He spoke the simple words. He turned back to the chamber. “We have debated and argued long enough!” He barked out and his voice carrying throughout the huge hall. “We have four matters of law to vote on now my fellow Senators. All of us know what they are. Now is the time to tell our people what we have decided on their behalf. Your votes please. You have fifteen minutes for each decision you have to make.” Dilios looked up towards the upper level. “I will remind the Union Netnews crews that your presence here is a gift ordered by Prince Androcles. Do not abuse this gift and refrain from any comments or questions to individual Senators until this session is over.”

Dilios returned slowly to his own seat and began typing on his console, similar to all the computer consoles in every suite and wherever those who could not attend were. He had known his votes from the very beginning and he deftly made his choices and then sat back to wait. The debating was over; the harsh words in most cases would be forgotten. This is how they did things now and it was so much more effective and efficient than how it was done before. He took the pad his aide offered to him and was just beginning to read when a single loud chime echoed within the chamber indicating one vote had been completed by all the Senators. Three minutes after that another chime sounded with the third and fourth only seconds behind that. Dilios looked over at Deia quickly and saw a similar stunned expression as his. The Union Senate had never voted so quickly on one Bill or Law, let alone four. Dilios quickly gathered his thoughts together and came to his feet as his aide swiftly transferred the results to his main data pad.

“I have heard four beats of the drum.” Dilios spoke loudly now. “Does this mean the Union Senate has completed its voting?”

Matuarr looked at Keleru’s image from Cabelir. “A speedy vote favors us Prefect.” He spoke confidently. “Are you alright?”

Keleru looked at him. “Let’s get this over with quickly.” He stated. “I have other matters to attend to.”

Dilios took the pad from his aide when no voice of descent came forward and his eyes grew a little wider. He looked at Andro, who was leaning forward his hands spread out across the knee high polished oak railing. Dilios turned back to the chamber. “This is the decision of the Union Senate? There are no dissensions!”

The silence was all the answer he needed.

Dilios turned to face Matuarr. “At this time I will read the decisions of the Union Senate for all to hear. These are the representations of the people of the Lycavorian Union” He lifted the pad.

“With a vote of three thousand one hundred and sixteen to one hundred and seven, the Lycavorian Union has voted to deny the Kavalian Petition that Marshall Pusintin’s son with Queen For'mya has a claim to the Lycavorian Union throne.”

There was a soft rush of murmurs among the ambassadors in the upper level but almost no reaction from the gathered Senators as Matuarr came to his feet. “You can not be serious!” He screamed. “This is an outrage! The proof is before you! We provided it to you!”

There was a loud thud that echoed in the chamber as one of the Senators activated the COM unit in his jaw and tapped into the chamber system. “How can one such as yourself profess to understand the context of the written laws we follow when you do not know the men who wrote them. When you have no concept of the divine will of our people.” The male voice spoke. “Do not stand there and demand from this body when you do not understand what drives every species who suffered then! Every species who sacrificed! King Resumar knew... Val'istar Canth knew... and that is the context we have followed for generations. And will continue to follow into the future.”

“We do not accept this!” Matuarr screamed. “You flaunt your laws to all around you but you do not follow them yourselves! We will not sit here and be insulted by...”

“Oh... I believe you will.” Dilios spoke motioning to the Durcunusaan soldiers who stood along the wall.

The six men instantly moved to surround Matuarr and Qurot before they could begin to move away from their suite.

“What is the meaning of this?” Matuarr screamed.

“You are so quick to quote the rulings of the Galactic Court Ambassador.” Dilios told him. “I am only insuring you remain to hear the will of the Lycavorian people.” He lifted the pad once more. “With a vote of three thousand two hundred and sixteen for and seven against, the Lycavorian Union has stripped Marshall Pusintin, known to us as Pleistarchus, of every right and privilege bestowed to a citizen of Sparta and Earth. He will be stripped of his name, his history and all accomplishments. His name will be stricken from ever history scroll and book, never to have existed. His name now will reside only within the void with names such as Chetak, Joric and Maraud. Never to know honor again.”

“Do you think this means anything to us?” Keleru barked as his famous temper began to boil to the surface. “This means nothing!”

Dilios nodded. “Then perhaps what I am about to tell you will.” He stated. “With a vote of three thousand ninety-six for and one hundred and twenty seven against, the implementation of Spartan Law will commence immediately. With a vote of three thousand two hundred and one for and twenty-two against...” Dilios looked at Keleru in the image. “The Lycavorian Union issues a Declaration of War against the Kavalian Federation for their actions against the people of the Union and Queen For'mya Leonidas.”

“This is preposterous!” Matuarr shouted. “She is no longer a Queen! She...”

“Our mother will always be Queen!” The voice roared cutting off Matuarr’s rant. All heads in the chamber turned to see Androcles Leonidas leap over the small, knee high wall, his changed azure wolf eyes bright and his dual fangs protruding from beneath his upper lip. “She will be Queen as long as my father sits on the throne of the Lycavorian Union *forn sorgur geld rie sibfla!” (You sorry piece of shit!)

Keleru's eyes grew wide but Matuarr slogged on without even realizing what Androcles just said. The gasps and shouts within the chamber began then and lasted for several short moments before Androcles turned to face them.

"Yes!" Andro shouted out, his voice carrying throughout the entire chamber even without the implanted COM microphone. "My father lives!" Andro turned back to a wide eyed Matuarr and stunned Keleru now. "You failed in your pathetic attempt to kill him! You failed! And when you took my mother, when you killed our people you committed two of the most heinous crimes imaginable to us! You took the lives of children!" Andro screamed. "Children! Our children! Innocents who will now never have the chance to see what wonders await them! All because of your desire for power!"

Qurot reached for Matuarr and was beginning to shove him out of the way when everyone present saw the blurring of a body. Qurot bellowed in agony when Dorian appeared next to him at the end of his blurring motion, unwrapping the shadows from around his body and snapping a savage kick into the back of Qurot's knee. The snapping of his kneecap was very audible in the chamber to those nearby and many men and women grimaced in spite of themselves. Qurot went to the floor in searing pain but did not have the chance to do anything else as Dorian's fingers grabbed his long blond hair and yanked back savagely, the long bladed Shakur fighting knife pressed to this throat.

"You will go nowhere Kavalian scum!" He snarled at a teary eyed Qurot.

"You dare attack..." Matuarr began to shout.

Andro reached out with his Etheric power and grasped Matuarr within the light blue cone, lifting him several meters off the floor. He clenched his fist slightly and Matuarr's eyes grew wide at the pain that suddenly filled his entire body. A searing stinging sensation that stole his breath away. Andro moved closer to him, his eyes blazing and his face a mask of rage unlike anyone had ever seen. "I told you there would be a reckoning Ambassador!" He shouted. "I told you I would end you for what you have done! To my family! To my people!" Andro squeezed even tighter now, his fist flaring brighter with Etheric power. Power unlike anything anyone had ever seen him use. "You helped him to rape our mother! Our mother! ARRGGHHH!"

Androcles Leonidas squeezed his hand as hard as he could and Matuarr's body twisted and bent in grotesque positions, his bones popping and snapping in horrible echoes. His ligaments tearing and shredding as they separated from muscles. His screaming stopped a few seconds later when his brain could no longer keep him conscious from the horrific pain searing his every nerve. Mercifully he expired long before Andro reduced his body to one third of its original mass and then with a roar of vicious anger brought his fist smashing down. What remained of Matuarr impacted the marble floor with a sickening crunch and plop. Andro lifted his head and looked at Keleru within the transmission, his eyes wide in terror and anger.

"You did not kill my father you simpering fool!" Andro screamed. "He lives! And he has taken my mother back! She is back within his arms with all our mothers! Where she belongs! Where she has always belonged! As are my new brother and sister! Or have you not talked to my ever so special Uncle lately? I will make you pay for forcing me to attack my elven mother Keleru'Puat! To hurt her as I did!"

"You... you will die for this boy!" Keleru snarled.

"For this?" Andro bellowed. "This is nothing Keleru'Puat! Nothing! Your fleet in the Farnuri Expanse is dead! Dead! Retribution for the Drow your animals killed! My brother has taken the females you enslaved and turned into prostitutes for your sick officers! They will be brought here and pampered and treated as they should be! You will inflict no more pain on them!" Andro saw his eyes go wide and he smiled. "Did you think yourself so superior that we would not reach you?" Andro moved closer to the transmission and Keleru even backed up involuntarily. "You wanted a war Keleru'Puat..."

Andro reached down and touched his wrist COM unit. "Manda?"

"I am here Androcles." Miranda Lorian's voice filled the chamber.

Andro turned back to Keleru. "We will strike from everywhere! From anywhere! Even from your dreams! You made a mistake Keleru'Puat! You forgot to kill me! You wanted a war old man... now I am going to give you one! A war your feeble mind can't possibly comprehend old man! A Spartan's War! Miranda... by my order..."

"Release the Wolves and Dragons of the Blood!" Andro shouted.

"Payback is a fucking bitch!" Miranda's voice echoed.

"Dorian!" Andro shouted.

Dorian leaned close to Qurot's ear. "For my brother Resumar! For his wife Athani! And for my mother For'mya you sick fuck!"

Dorian drew the razor like blade across Qurot's exposed neck with overwhelming strength and shoved him forward to the floor as blood began to erupt from his nearly decapitated head. The gurgling lasted only a few seconds, the twitching a little longer and then his body was still and his blood began to spread out around him.

Keleru's eyes, now alive with unabashed hatred turned back to glare at Keleru. "You will die!" He screamed. "You will die!"

"I am coming for you Keleru'Puat!" Andro snarled. "I am coming for you and every one of the officers and other fools who dared supported you in this. As far as I am concerned you are all guilty of raping my mother! And I will bring justice to you as I vowed to my brother Arrarn." Andro felt the hands on his arms and he turned his head quickly to see Sadi and his wives and mates surrounding him, followed by all of his family. The moment her hands touched him, the nearly uncontrollable rage began leaving him. As Carisia, Ne'Veha and Lu'ria placed their hand son him, that anger vanished completely, to be replaced by a firm resolve. He watched as Zarah and Lucia drew Dorian away from Qurot's cooling body, pulling him close to them. His eyes went back to where Keleru glared at him.

Andro stepped even closer to the transmission. "You wanted a war Keleru'Puat. Let me show you how my father taught me to wage war. How our people wage war against your kind. Your lesson begins now."

Keleru was about to speak when Andro abruptly stabbed down on his wrist and cut the transmission.

"Time to go to school... old man." Andro whispered to the spirits of his grandfathers and all the Spartans who had come before him. He closed his eyes slowly, imagining them in the heavens above and hoping they would approve of his actions.

It was the Spartan way.

CHAPTER EIGHTY-THREE

BETA QUADRANT ROTHRYN EMBASSY AUSTROVA

Dyack wiped his face with the towel as he stared into the mirror. What he had seen in the transmission from Sparta was beyond anything he had ever expected. It was no wonder Denali Leonidas had exited their embassy post haste after witnessing what he had. It had shocked all of them into silence to be honest.

The Union Senate Chamber on Earth was immense to say the least, far surpassing the Rothryn equivalent and then the number of different species he had seen as their news crews had panned the crowd was unbelievable. Listening to the men who had spoke and then watching the vote itself was inspiring to him. Dyack had no idea the Lycavorian Union was on the verge of a war, and to see the overwhelming majority of their sitting senators vote in favor of this; it told him just how much these Lycavorians honored their laws and their culture. A culture that appeared to have spread to dozens upon dozens of different species and taken root. Aside from their inability to shift into wolf form Dyack knew that the Rothryn people were essentially Lycavorian. Whatever had happened thousands of years in the past according to their scientists that took this ability away from them did not matter to him now. Deep down he felt that these Lycavorians were the key to the Rothryn evolving even more than they already had. To expand their limited horizons and see things so much differently.

Dyack turned when he heard the door to their bedchambers open and then close and he stepped from the bathroom and watched as Aleatia came in, pulling the robe from her beautiful shoulders and moving to the bed. He watched her for a moment and felt the familiar stirring in his groin whenever he gazed at her too long. Her beauty now, even after over four thousand years together, was still something that took his breath away. He tossed the towel onto the counter and moved into the bedroom.

“Can you believe it Aleatia?” He gasped moving into the master bedroom towards the center of the room as he watched her lithe frame settle on top of their large bed and her dazzling eyes look at him. “What we... what we witnessed tonight was incredible!”

Aleatia had been his wife and mate for the better part of four millennia. To Dyack she was the epitome of elegance and grace and beauty. He adored his mate and never in all his years had he even thought about straying or hurting her in any way. She was completely unreserved in their bed, sometimes playful and adventurous and sometimes demanding. Their times together were always passionate and intense and she had given him six strong children. Their middle son served within the Rothryn military fleet as a ship Captain and was well regarded by everyone who knew or worked with him. Their youngest daughter Sehri they kept out of the public eye as much as possible. She had only just turned twenty-one years old and she was devastatingly beautiful, more so than even her older sisters, with her pale blond hair and her breathtaking Glaucon blue eyes. There were dozens of younger men, and even some older ones, who were desperately trying to garner his favor for the hand of Sehri. Not only because of her surreal beauty but because she was also one of the most skilled and powerful of Mindvoice users, even more so than her mother, and this was a rare trait that Rothryn men wanted. Many older Rothryn men liked to use their mates to probe rivals and discover things that would give them an advantage against the other, even though it was considered taboo and Dyack had tried to steer his people away from actions like this. Actions that caused distrust and could lead to war between families.

Aleatia was also one of the most gifted Mindvoicers among the Rothryn people, much like himself, and this ability they had passed to all their children it seemed. Ibani and Osbela were among the strongest in terms of actual ability and while not matching their younger sister in sheer potential, the Rothryn Mindvoice Academy kept close watch on them as they did all the powerful Mindvoice users within Rothryn territory. A large group of appointed Mindvoice users whose job was to keep control of this skill so that no one abused it too much. As far as Dyack was concerned they were a bunch of self-indulgent fools who thought themselves better than everyone else. He could do nothing against them for they had been around from the outset of the Rothryn people. He and Aleatia had become quite good at getting around them however.

Aleatia met his eyes. “It was astonishing.” She said honestly. “Though I did not expect to witness such a Declaration of War. Or discover that they have been hiding the fact his father lives. We must discover what led them to this Dyack. We need to ask Denali Leonidas or his mate Lisisa.”

Dyack nodded. “I know.” He told her. “Did you notice that they both referred to this Martin Leonidas as father?”

Aleatia nodded her head. “I asked Arduri early into dinner about them. They are cousins. Lisisa is the daughter of Denali’s Uncle and a member of this Vampire High Coven it seems. This type of relationship is apparently not frowned upon within their culture. It was a common occurrence in the time of Denali’s grandfather in this city of Sparta.”

“Arduri Re Mydala seems to know quite a bit about them.” Dyack said. “I wonder if... I wonder if, since she is considered Denali’s mate, he shares everything with her. If she has the ability to swim within his thoughts as you do with me.”

Aleatia nodded. “I thought about this as well. It seems to me that is very much the case considering how much she knew in only so short a time as his mate.”

Dyack settled to the bed, sitting on the edge as he looked at her. “Were Ibani or Osbela able to pick anything up from their surface thoughts? Sehri perhaps, though she remained out of sight?” He asked. “Anything at all?”

Aleatia shook her head. “Unfortunately no.” She stated. “It appears the incident at the landing pad may have caused them to become overly cautious around us. Both Denali and Lisisa Leonidas had MV shields in place that were among the strongest I have ever felt. Ibani tried to filter into Arduri Re Mydala’s MV abilities with Sehri’s help since they appear new, but they withdrew very quickly. Both Denali and Lisisa were augmenting her own shields. Any attempt to breach these shields would have been detected and I doubt the reaction would have been pleasant.”

“Do they think they were detected?” Dyack asked.

Aleatia shrugged her slim shoulders. “It would not surprise me Dyack.” She said. “It seems to me that their use of Mindvoice abilities has not been monitored and curtailed as the Rothryn Academy does to our people. And this bond they seem to share with these... dragons... well it adds to their power significantly. Sehri said she thought she could detect a second consciousness just on the fringe. We should be very careful about probing them Dyack. Sehri and the others agree. You said that they consider it to be disrespectful and a sign of hostility? If we approached this right my husband and mate, we may be able to just ask the questions we want and receive the answers.”

Dyack nodded. “Yes. They did say this to me on the landing pad. And you are right my love. We should do nothing to provoke them or cause them to look at us with suspicion. That is not how I want to begin our relationship with them.”

“Do you think we can have one?” Aleatia asked.

Dyack nodded. “Denali seemed genuine in his questions about our past. He can smell the curiosity on all of us, just as we smell it on them. We are after all no different from them except that we can not shift our forms.”

“Given what we saw... it is obvious they have many friends of different species.” Aleatia said. “His brother, this Androcles, he... the power he wielded was unlike anything I have ever seen Dyack.”

“Did you see him crush that man... that Kavalian?” Dyack asked softly. “Never have I seen such a thing. The physical manifestation of Etheric Mindvoice power. And to discover his father is alive as well?” Dyack shook his head. “This changes things.”

“How so?” Aleatia asked looking at him. “Dyack... you aren’t actually considering what Anroth suggested are you?”

Dyack met her stunning blue eyes. “What? Aleatia no!” He exclaimed. “Never!”

Aleatia breathed a sigh of relief. Her husband and mate was a fine man who loved her without question. He treated her as his equal in every way, and often relied on her council for many things. Their marriage had been arranged, as most were among the Rothryn, but it only took a year or so for Aleatia to see the man behind the face and fall madly in love with him. He was kind and gentle and an absolutely incredible lover who was very well equipped. She doubted she could feel for anyone what she now felt for this man. Dyack was also a man who had begun to pull the Rothryn people into the future. Expanding their territory. Treaties with other races and even very lucrative trade deals. They were a much richer society than they were a thousand years ago and much of it was due to his work. There was infighting at times, many of the older nobles not wanting to change things so quickly, if at all. Many of them were still cemented in the past and how they had done things for so long. They resented Dyack in many ways but were not powerful enough to move against him openly for he had too much support among the others families who thought as he did.

“What are you thinking husband?” She asked moving closer to him.

“The Vanari were not forthright with us. Ardan should have been more honest with me.” Dyack spoke slowly. “Their inbred distrust of the Lycavorian people has spread too far within the SBR. And I believe they know they have people taking part in the kidnapping and enslaving of their females, just as the evidence Denali Leonidas has presented shows. I believe they are just too arrogant to admit it.”

“You think they are allowing it to happen?” Aleatia asked surprised.

Dyack nodded. “At least a small portion of them yes. The Alkay that the Vanari secrete is a powerful tool against other species and it could well be bringing them untold millions if the Eridiani and the OSG have reached as far as the Alpha Quadrant. We will need to be mindful of our dealings with the Eridiani. I am going to have Kelelm insure that what trade we do with them is not tied to this OSG in any way.”

Aleatia shook her head. “To sell your own people into sexual slavery.” She gasped. “It is barbaric in every way.”

Dyack nodded his head. “Yes it is.” He stated evenly. “The Vanari problems are not ours however. Barnak will undoubtedly discover what we saw tonight. His influence over our son troubles me.” Dyack said.

“He challenges you through Anroth.” Aleatia spoke. “He is not as devious as he thinks though.”

“We must keep a close eye on both of them Aleatia.” Dyack said. “If he were to some way take one of these Lycavorians from the Union to conduct his foul experiments... it could well mean the end of us given what we saw tonight.”

“Do you think there are many like this Prince Androcles?” Aleatia asked.

“I don’t know.” Dyack replied. “It appears to run in their family at least, though I dare say this Androcles was considerably more powerful in what he did then what we saw from his brother. Of course we have not seen Denali unleash this power fully either. We have not seen the father or any others... we have not seen enough to make a judgment. I have to believe there are more of them however.”

“Well... given his looks I doubt our daughters Ibani and Osbela would have much angst against trying to get close to him.” Aleatia spoke with a sultry voice as she moved closer to him. “He was incredibly handsome... and he is very young too.”

Dyack looked at her with a sly grin. “Does he stir your blood my wife?” He asked playfully.

Aleatia laughed and pressed her body against his side, dropping her hand to his chest and abdomen. Her large breasts pressed hard against his skin and caused his eyes to darken in desire for her. “Hah! The only man who could hope to stir my blood is you! It has always been this way and it will always be this way. I prefer men to boys.”

Dyack smiled and stroked her arm as he leaned into her embrace. “We will need to proceed carefully and cultivate a relationship with this brother Denali. He is powerful in his own right and not so naïve as I first thought. His scent showed no interest in Ibani or Osbela but if we were able to have his brother, this Androcles, if he were to take one of our daughters as a mate. Imagine the possibilities.”

“We promised our daughters we would not force them into an arranged marriage.” Aleatia told him.

“And I would never do that.” Dyack assured her. “But Ibani and Osbela seem to think this Androcles is handsome no?”

Aleatia nodded. “Very much so.”

“So there is an opportunity there.” Dyack said.

“Ah... put them together and see what happens?” Aleatia said.

Dyack nodded. “I am getting ahead of myself now. And there is more to Denali than we see if his brother sent him here alone. If this Androcles does come here in seven weeks as he tells us... then it would be better to have his brother tell them we are friends.”

“Yes... I get the sense he is not very forgiving to his enemies.” Aleatia spoke softly.

Dyack nodded. “This could be what we have waited for my love.” Dyack said. “This could be what we need to break our people free from the old ways and move into the future.”

“Then let us pursue it husband.” Aleatia spoke.

She moved deftly along the corridor towards the bedroom on the Rothryn Embassy’s bottom floor, her mind trying to categorize all she had seen this evening. Her five foot seven, hundred and twenty pound body was toned to muscular and feminine perfection from long hours of physical activity and training that very few knew she had mastered. Long supple legs, firm and perfectly shaped ass cheeks below a slim waist and flat abdomen. Her breasts were of medium size, but very firm and proud and topped with pert nipples that pressed against the fabric of her floor length plum colored dress and light wrap. Her long, pale blond hair spilled past her slim shoulders in waves to curl just above the small of her back. Her Glauous blue eyes were bright and alert.

Sehri was the youngest child of her parents, and the most gifted. She had only just turned twenty-one, spending the last six years training her mind and body to perfection. Sehri had no worries about men approaching her for her hand in marriage. Whatever was finally worked out, her father and brothers would insure that she was not given to a man she did not have any feelings for. They had done this with none of their children, preferring that they choose their own path. It was not a gift most were given among the Rothryn and she knew that was one of the things her father and mother were trying to change. Sehri was her father’s ace in the hole, he called her. Because both he and her mother were so strong within Mindvoice all of their children were exceptionally capable, however Sehri appeared to have gotten the bulk of whatever genes they had passed to her. Her Mindvoice abilities far exceeded any of her family and even many of the instructors at the Rothryn Academy. Her parents kept this knowledge hidden and had Sehri trained since she was fifteen by others outside the Rothryn Academy. Sehri had grown extremely skilled at hiding what she was truly able to do and unlike other parents, Dyack and Aleatia trusted in her use of this skill.

Sehri paused in the hallway, using her keen nose and her other senses to try and detect her brother. Her brother Anroth had a nasty habit of coming into the worker’s quarters and trying to entice one of the young females into his bed with his wife. Tynitia was known to have sexual tendencies towards other females, and Anroth often liked to take part in her activities. It was a practice Sehri found abhorrent not because of what it entailed, for while she had never bedded with a man let alone another woman, the thought had crossed her mind on different occasions when she had seen an especially attractive female among the many markets on their homeworld. She found it abhorrent because Anroth was not known for his gentleness and usually after sharing their bed, the young female was then transferred back to the Rothryn homeworld for other duties. There were rumors that Anroth had fathered several children this way because he refused to remove himself from the female before emptying his seed into her however many times he did in an evening. Apparently Tynitia did not seem to mind this, so she had no doubts that either bribery or threats were used to keep the young females and their families quiet and to face the shame of having a child without a father alone. Sehri did not know if her father knew of Anroth's extra activities, and she doubted very much they would continue if he did. Her father worshiped their mother in every way, and never once had he treated her less than an equal to him. It was not something that many Rothryn liked, but they accepted it because times were changing and most of them were smart enough to know they had to change with them.

When Sehri caught no whiff of her brother's musky scent she went immediately to the bedroom she used while they were here at the embassy. They way the embassy had been built there were not enough rooms on the second and third floor for her to maintain a bedroom with the rest of her family. Her parents were ready to turn one of the quest rooms on the third floor into her bedroom but she instead convinced them to let her make this large storage room her bedroom. It had been remodeled extensively to suit her tastes and having it down here meant she could associate with the many workers who she considered friends. Unlike her brothers and sisters she mingled without pretence among the Worker's Caste, often times seen with the daughters of workers at the Embassy and their palace out shopping and joking. This did not go unnoticed by the many adults who saw, and while the Worker's Caste saw Sehri as hat could happen in the future, the Warrior Caste did not appreciate her associating with those they felt beneath her. Sehri punched in her code for the door, heard it click and slipped in swiftly before closing it behind her. She turned from her door and went immediately the small chest at the foot of her bed and knelt before it and lifted her left arm. She watched as the holographic control board appeared across her forearm as she called her Holotool from Flatspace just as she had seen Denali Leonidas call his shield. She typed a coded nine digit password into the Holotool and the chest unlock with a soft click. She opened the chest and extracted the small shoebox size transmitter and receiver. She set it atop the chest and activated the device with a secure connection and another set of passwords and codes. There was a flickering on the small monitor and then the face of the older woman appeared. She was lifting her head from a pillow and Sehri could see her shake off the dregdes of sleep from her eyes.

"Sehri?" The woman spoke as she sat up. "Sehri... what is wrong?"

"Cleric Mother... I have a report." Sehri spoke quickly.

"A report? At this hour? In regards to what child?" The woman asked. "Could this not wait until tomorrow at your usual time?"

"No Cleric Mother it couldn't. Forgive me but..." Sehri began.

The woman waved her hand in a dismissive way. "Do not apologize child. If you have contacted me outside your normal schedule then it most be important." Sehri watched as she rose from the bed into a sitting position. "What is it Sehri?"

"Cleric Mother... I have... I have seen the Bearer of the Prophecy." She stated softly.

The woman smiled and laughed softly as she shook her head. "Sehri my child... you are one of the finest young Shamans of the Table... but the Bearer of the Prophecy will only appear to a senior Shaman Master. What makes you say this child?"

"I have seen him Cleric Mother!" Sehri insisted. "This very night! In my mind! I was not even in the same room as where the others were viewing it but I witnessed the power within him! I swear it!"

"Very well child... tell me." The woman said.

"It is just as the Ancient Tomes say Cleric Mother. He will come and he will wield the power of those who created the Rothryn!" Sehri said wistfully as she remembered those azure blue eyes. "I saw him... I saw him kill a man this night. He held him within the grip of this power and crushed the life from him without even touching him. It was brutal and his actions were hateful, but it was... it was beautiful to watch Cleric Mother. His body was encased in a blue aura and..."

The woman sat forward her own eyes wide now. “A blue aura you say?” The woman hissed softly. “Where did you see this child?” She demanded. “Where?”

“A transmission from the Alpha Quadrant.” Sehri answered. “You know of the discovery of our kindred kind, these Lycavorians?”

“Yes... it has been reported for the last three days.” She answered. “The reporters are beginning to repeat themselves for they have no real information to give. Only that many of them are on Austrova and there is a very advanced warship in orbit now that comes from this Union.”

“Mother and father had them to the Embassy for dinner tonight Cleric Mother.” Sehri said. “While during dinner something was occurring on their home planet and father allowed the brother, Denali Leonidas, to use our communications relay here in the embassy. It showed these events. I did not accompany them because father and mother did not want to expose me to them but I saw it in my mind! I must have somehow detected it within the tendrils of his brother and sister!”

“Sehri... are you absolutely certain?” The Cleric Mother asked.

“It was just as the Ancient Tomes said Cleric Mother.” Sehri spoke confidently. “I have recorded the transmission and I can send it to you. It is said he is coming here in seven weeks Cleric Mother! The Protectorate is being dissolved and merged into this Union and he is coming here to finalize this. From what little we were able to discover tonight it appears the Protectorate Director General is now his Val'istar.”

The old woman moved closer to her end of the transmission. “Be very careful when you speak the old language child. The Rothryn Academy could have eyes and ears everywhere.” The woman told her. “The Protectorate dissolved?” The old woman spoke with wide eyes. “We did not hear this! Are you sure?”

Sehri nodded. “Yes Cleric Mother.”

“Do not send it via the normal channels child!” The woman spoke. “Use alternate means and forward it immediately! I will present it to the other Elders and we will let you know what we decide! Have you told your parents?”

Sehri shook her head. “Father has always told me I was different. He has always told me not to hesitate to contact you if I do not understand something and he and mother would not be able to understand or help me. They have not read the Tomes as you and my fellow Shamans have Cleric mother. I contacted you first.”

“Your father is blessed with the wisdom and strength beyond normal men.” The Cleric Mother spoke softly. “As is your mother. That they know of us and they sent you to us for training tells me they have faith in what we believe.”

“They always have Cleric Mother.” Sehri spoke. “I will use common embassy messaging Cleric Mother. It is not secure but I will encode the transmission within a normal data pad.” Sehri spoke. “You will have it by midday.”

“Very well. We will review your information and I will advise you what we decide and then you may tell your parents what we know. Share this with no one else Sehri! No one! If I know your father he is probably going over his political options now and we do not need to distract him from that until we know for certain.”

“I understand Cleric Mother.” Sehri said.

The older woman canted her head slightly. “You seem distracted yourself child.” She said. “What is it?”

“The one... the one I saw Cleric Mother... his eyes were so very blue.” Sehri answered. “Even over so vast a distance I felt like...”

“What?”

“I felt like I was there Cleric Mother. I could almost feel him and his emotions. He has... he has five mates Cleric Mother and for a split second I was there among them! They are... they are so beautiful and so very strong. I could almost feel them within me.” Sehri answered. “It was disconcerting.”

The old woman stared at her for a long moment and then nodded. “Be strong Sehri. I will contact you tomorrow evening.”

“As you wish Cleric Mother.”

12.9 LYS FROM CABELIR

Miranda Lorian had never imagined herself in the position she now held.

A few short years ago she thought she would never rid herself of the horrible dreams that haunted her. The lives she had witnessed snuffed out all around her. Men and women she had called family. Fate worked in mysterious ways she now knew. Fate had given her Ben and Tina in her life. Fate had made them friends with the Leonidas family. And fate had twice given her the opportunity to be among that family, to heal her emotional wounds and build a relationship with the man she could almost call brother.

Now Miranda Lorian had a new life. A new command. A new family. And a love she had found in the most unlikely of places with a female Drow elf. The memories would never go away she knew, and she would always remember them in her dreams, but ultimately it was their voices in her dreams telling her to move forward, to watch over and protect others as she had them, and to finally allow herself to love once more that changed her. With E'dira of the Drow, Miranda had discovered the very best of both worlds. A lover who worshiped her in every way, a lover who could drive her mad with her tongue, or fuck her silly with her 'gift'. A gift that happen to be nine of the thickest male inches Miranda had ever had inside her. Miranda loved everything about E'dira, from her shimmering white hair to the flawlessness of her ebony skin to the taste of her passion no matter which way they decided to make love. E'dira treated her as a precious jewel she had found, never hesitating to kiss her or take her hand. Miranda had given E'dira back her life as well, and the Drow warrior would worship her 'slave' as long as she had years left in this lifetime. She had never expected to find it with a human female to be sure, but as Lynwe had once told her, the unexpected gift was usually the sweetest gift. General Lynwe's continued love of Selene was the perfect example of that.

Miranda had gathered around herself men and women with a passion for life and friends and family and duty and once they had all come together Miranda had found that "place" in her soul once more filled to overflowing.

As far as Miranda was concerned, she had everything she had ever wanted. And she was not going to let anyone or anything take that from her. Androcles had given her a mission. The young Prince was the most intense and intimidating man she had ever met outside of his father, but he led from the front just like his father. He was reckless and bold, and when combined with the ability of Carina Leonidas to devise plans such as this, he was probably the most dangerous tactical mind of their generation. He had given her this mission, this ship and this opportunity along with his father. They had never lost faith in her. This was without a doubt the single most important mission she had yet undertaken in her career. If she pulled this off, she could return to Union space with not a single loss of life. She knew that was unlikely, but damned if she wasn't going to try.

The events leading up to this moment had every crewmember on the ARIZONA and within their Assault Wing seething with anger and the need for retribution. The loss of life, the deaths of so many innocents, the rape of their Queen. These were things that they could not have prevented, but they could certainly get vengeance for these acts. Androcles Leonidas was giving their leader Miranda and all of them the chance to do just that. They were not about to let him down.

And it began with five simple words.

"Payback is a fucking bitch."

The moment those words left her lips Miranda came to her feet. She moved to the plot table and picked up the old style phone attached to it. Her fingers caressed the worn plastic before pressing the speak key.

"This is Admiral Lorian! 1st Arizona Strike Group! In thirty seconds... Climb Mount Niitaka! Climb Mount Niitaka! Execute! Execute! Execute!" Miranda spat. "All ships assume Attack Pattern Delta, war plan as follows. Victor Echo November Three nine one! Omega! Omega! Omega!" It had been E'dira's idea to have their code word be the one that the Japanese had used against the fleet at a place called Pearl Harbor in ancient Earth history. The attack had been a complete and utter surprise for the American Fleet, which is exactly what they were hoping for here. The Omega code was one not often used in the Union and Miranda knew it. It called for total war. No prisoners or mercy. It was literally raising the black flag before battle. The last time an Omega code was added to a war plan was during the Mercenary Uprising a thousand years ago.

The large fleet, larger still than she had commanded at Kranek, deployed into its combat formation quickly while still under Shroud. The LEONIDAS IIA Strike Cruisers moved to the front of the fleet to form the main wall of battle, followed by the MOONLANCER Bs. They would serve as bombardment ships against the enemy formations while the Strike Cruisers served as the first wave. The ARIZONA-Class ships moved into the third line, first to launch their fighters into the fray, and then move up to assume command and control. The NOVA-Class Attack Cruisers would serve as first picket to engage the lighter Kavalian ships, with the ADMIRAL CENEU Fast Attack Destroyers and AUTUMN MOON Attack Frigates moving to protect the entire fleet. The TAUR'OHTARS would break into wolf packs while maintaining their Shrouds for hit and run attacks against any and all targets of opportunity. The TYPE I Alpha Dragon Transports began to drift away from the main force still under Shroud, shadowed and protected by the three VANGUARD MARK III-Class Interdiction Cruisers which would remain in low atmospheric orbit over the cloning facilities and kill anything that came close to the dragons that would decimate the facilities from the ground.

Already the MOONLANCERS were preparing their 'specials' for the coming battle. A mixture of M22 ZMF missiles and ECM Decoys, followed up with a second barrage of MIRV and Ground Penetrating warheads for the planet. By the time Daurgo led the Dragon Brigade into battle, the cloning facilities on the surface would be cracked open and waiting for them.

E'dira looked up from her tactical station. "Colonel Randall signals all Squadrons ready for launch!"

"Do it!" Manda snapped as she returned to her chair. "Give me all forward batteries! Weapons Officer! Eight M22As at the GREAT SOULS! Forward Type Ones to target the DIATAGAs and forward Type IIs to provide follow on barrage! All Photonic torpedoes into the DIEROYs!"

"Weapons aye!"

Miranda stabbed her finger down on the arm of her chair. "Steven! Roll in right after we hit them with the first barrage. Drop your loads and clear out while we realign and we'll hit them again! Then they'll be all yours and we'll go after the remaining GREAT SOULS!"

"Understood Manda! RAPTOR Air Control is launching now! They'll jam them so tight they won't be able to shit or piss without us detecting it!" Steven Randall's voice answered excitedly.

Miranda's eyes narrowed slightly and she turned to look at Zaala who returned her gaze with an almost embarrassed stare. "He seems riled up." She said to Zaala.

"I may... I may have offered to allow him to... to ravage me more than he usually does if he returned unharmed." Zaala answered sheepishly but with a delightful gleam in her dark eyes. "He can be quite inventive in our bed."

Miranda shook her head with a smile as many of the bridge crew chuckled at Zaala's words. There were many females on the Bridge Crew and all of them could not deny that Steven Randall was one step down from smoking hot male. He may have been wolf now, but his human self was by far more dominant. Many of them envied Zaala, for she always walked around the ship with a huge smile on her beautiful elven face, and the females knew why that was.

"I may have done the same thing." Miranda said turning to look at a smiling E'dira.

"Yes you did." She spoke her amber eyes glittering in delight from her tactical station.

"Whatever works right?" Miranda spoke with a smile.

The relationship between Miranda and E'dira was a well known fact on the ARIZONA now. As time passed, both of them were becoming more and more relaxed at allowing small things slip in public or in front of the crew that confirmed this. In reality, many of the crew had worked with Miranda for the last few years on the ARIZONA project, and seeing how she had changed once E'dira came into her life had been the last piece of the puzzle. Now they saw the real Miranda Lorian, and none of them had any doubts about her whatsoever.

"Nine seconds!" A voice called out.

Miranda nodded becoming all business now. "Let's do this! Mark! Mark! Mark! Initiate attack now!"

His name was Puram'Kell.

Fleet Admiral of the Kavalian Federation. Two thousand seven hundred years old and loyal to his people and their advancement, but perhaps much more vocal than the Prefect and his advisors liked. Especially when it came to such ludicrous ideas as to attack the Lycavorian Union when they should have been reaching out to them in friendship.

Puram was not your typical Kavalian by any stretch of the imagination. He was viciously loyal to his people, would do anything to see them grow and prosper, but was not keen on doing things that would only set them back as far as he was concerned. He had never stepped outside his union with his Kavalian wife in all the two thousand two hundred years that they had been together. He had chosen carefully who he would pursue for a wife and mate when he was a young warrior, and his skills and accomplishments had earned him his choice. Siondi'Kell was perfection in his eyes. Her luxurious coat of light brown fur, her lush female figure to include her delightful tail and her stunning blue eyes. She had given him four strong and proud boys and two daughters that equaled their mother in beauty.

That is where all similarity to other Kavalian Prides ended.

Puram had assumed leadership of their small Pride with the death of his father over six hundred years ago; however he continued and advanced his father's farsighted views. The Kell Pride was considered a progressive Pride. They did not agree with the mainstream Kavalian Prides who were bent only on advancing their status in Keleru's court. Puram knew that there were few Pride Leaders that thought as he did and the majority of them, including himself, kept their council to themselves. He had met Pian'Nruarani several times and found him to be an exceptional leader and a man who believed in the future of the Kavalian people. Yet he was also a man who held ideas that did not sit well with mainstream Pride Leaders just like himself. Puram had played the good Kavalian for many years. He allowed his sons and daughters to have their growth accelerated to advance the procreation purposes of the Kavalian people. He also drilled into their heads the same values he had been given by his own father. Loyalty to their people... not a single leader. All of his sons were now mated to females from other Prides, and like him, they treated their mates almost completely opposite of what was considered acceptable. They loved their mates, respected them as the bearers of their future, and never once had a Kell son ever lifted his hand in anger to his mate. Siondi and he were also extremely careful and wary of any male who showed interest in their daughters. While both of them had undergone the biogenic process to remove the fine coat of hair from their bodies making them even more desirable to Kavalian males, they also knew that their parents were making sure the men who wanted them would treat them as they should be treated.

Puram had commanded the 47th Kavalian Tactical Fleet Group for nearly eighty-six years now. Their ships were old and worn, but Puram had changed all that when he took command. In the span of two years, he had replaced thirty of the oldest ships with newer ones, and he had gotten upgrades or refits for twice that. The 47th was still among the oldest Fleet Groups in terms of ship age, but at least now they were combat ready and unless going against front line ships, they would perform as well as their training allowed. His actions also served to earn him the almost fanatical loyalty of nearly everyone in the 47th Fleet Group. All of them had been disappointed, Puram included, when they had been left out of the initial invasion forces into the High Coven. Vampires held a unique hate in Puram's heart for their actions against the Kavalian people so long ago. He had been upset when Marshall Pusintin assigned his Fleet Group to protecting the cloning facilities here on Dalean, instead of letting them take part in the invasion.

Puram was also no fool.

He began to see what the High Coven commanders were doing even before Pusintin had. They were giving up planets and territory to consolidate their forces. When the final battle of the initial invasion took place, he could only listen and view the reports as the Kavalian forces were routed by superior High Coven tactics and more advanced ships and weapons. Puram knew then that Pusintin was part of the problem and not the solution. He did what any good commander would do. He drilled his crews mercilessly for the day they would be needed. He turned them into the finest group he had ever commanded. He also knew their skills were wasted on these older and less capable ships. Pusintin and Keleru and the majority of the senior Pride leaders believed that no one would ever be able to make it this far into Kavalian space to attack the cloning facilities. Puram did not take that path. For years he had been requesting new ships and fighters, while hammering home the training on what they did have. Always he had been refused; further frustrating him and turning him against Keleru and Pusintin. When he had first heard of the plans to try and act against the Union, he thought the two men insane. He had told them and fellow officers that you do not kick a nest of fever wasps when they care nothing for you. This action would only incur the full attention and wrath of that nest. As more and more rumors began to float out of Kavalian Central, the central part of the Federation where most of the major planets were, Puram knew that the actions of Keleru and Pusintin would not go unpunished. He also found his loyalties beginning to waver. The Lycavorian Union was not the High Coven. Their soldiers and ships would never retreat in battle. They would fight to the very last man and take as many of the enemy with them as they could. They would take risks. They would conduct battles everywhere. Given the history of their King and his son, and Puram had read every Evolli and Kavalian report from the Evolli war, they were as predictable as the wind. And completely unforgiving. They...

“Admiral!” The voice jarred him from his thoughts and he looked up to his Executive Officer. A young Kavalian who was just like him and epitomized the future. Of course... he was his son as well.

“Joram’Kell?” He questioned.

“Admiral... our sensors have detected a spike in the Hyper Matter particles you requested we monitor for. They have just increased within the system.” The younger Kell told him.

Puram straightened in his command chair. “Location?”

“Twelve million kilometers off our port bow sir.” Joram answered. “For lack of a more technical description... a massive increase Admiral. Nearly five hundred percent. What is this father? Why have us monitor for Hyper Matter particles?”

Puram came to his feet. “The Kavalian Strike Force at Kranek. Before they went off the air... a single report from a DIATAGA indicated that Hyper Matter particles in the system had increased by a similar amount.” He spoke.

Joram looked at his father. “A footprint?” He gasped. “Father that... there is no way a Union Strike Group could get this far into Kavalian space. How would they even know where our cloning facilities were?”

“How indeed?” Puram offered looking at his son. “If my memory serves me correctly, General Pian’Nruarani knows exactly where these facilities are because he helped to protect them for over a decade.”

“General Nruarani has been declared a traitor father. He forced himself upon Marshall Pusintin’s wife Jalersi.” Joram spoke. “His Pride has vanished and he...” Joram stopped talking as he stared at his father. His eyes slowly began to widen. “He knows where these facilities are?” He gasped as his father’s words finally sunk in.

Puram nodded. “Yes he does.”

“The Union wouldn’t dare risk an incursion this far into our space!” Joram exclaimed. “Would they?”

“They are masters of hit and run tactics Joram. You have read the intelligence reports from the Evolli War. Nineteen separate times they struck deep behind Evolli lines. In places the Evolli didn’t believe they could reach. They targeted shipyards and factories and countless military installations. Not once did they fail or get caught.” Puram spoke.

“We are not the Evolli father.” Joram stated.

“No we are not.” Puram stated. “Yet here we sit with one of the oldest group of ships in the entire Kavalian Federation, guarding six of the most important installations we have.”

“Installations that create those foul clones!” Joram spat.

Puram nodded. “Whether we agree with it or not my son... that is what they do.” He moved closer to him. “If you had this ability son... this unique and fearsome ability to strike where your enemy least expects it... to obliterate whole shipyards... would you not use it?”

“Of course... but to strike here?” Joram said. “They would need the coordinates of our Jump Gate network father! They would need...”

“If we can tap into the Union Gate network to send troops and ships to Hadaria in that misbegotten mission... do you not think the union could do the same to us? Especially if Pian is working with them? Their Gate technology is far more advanced than our own in these terms.”

“We don’t know that he is.” Joram interjected.

“Don’t we?” Puram answered. “And for a people who have Hyper Matter Fusion engines and Shroud generators better than the ones they stole from the Coven, they would not need the Gates if they had the coordinates.”

“Hyper Matter Fusion engines are only theoretical father.” Joram said.

“To us maybe.” Puram answered. “Think Joram my son! Do not be like those fools on the Advisor Council to the Prefect! Think as the Lycavorians do! Their society is not war like. They would need time to transfer their production over to war materials! What buys them this time?”

Joram looked at his father. “Coordinated strikes against targets that will hurt us in the short run and...”

Puram nodded. “And benefit them in the long run. There is a reason the High Coven never conquered them son. The Union leaders are used to fighting when outnumbered and they think outside the box!”

The sensor operator who had brought up the discovery to Joram now turned from his station his face a mask of horror. “Admiral! Union warships de-shrouding! Hundreds of them! They are firing Admiral!”

Puram calmly looked at his son. “It appears that day has come Joram my son! And we have been caught unaware!”

Unaware or not, Puram would not have been able to keep it from happening no matter what he did. In the time it took to blink, two hundred and sixty Union warships appeared and unleashed their version of payback on the three hundred and thirty Kavalian warships. The Union Fleet was compromised of the Assault Wings of all three ARIZONA-Class ships with an additional eighty ships attached.

A spread of M22A ZMF missiles led the opening of the battle and were streaking across the stars before the last ship had even de-shrouded. They had worked to perfection at Kranek and the Battle of The Farnuri Expanse against first tier Kavalian warships. They would work even better here against second and third tier Kavalian warships. The six LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers had formed the point of the spear Miranda would thrust through the heart of the Kavalian Fleet Group, the MOONLANCER B-Battle Cruisers slightly above and behind the Strike Cruisers.

With the ARIZONA at the tip, the YAMATO and MISSOURI on either flank and traveling above the rest of their fleet, the Lycavorian Union delivered their message to the Kavalian fleet about what they thought of their leader’s actions. As fighters began to endlessly spill from the close to ventral launch tubes, all three massive Strike Carriers cut loose with every weapon at their disposal, just as their escorts did the same. The TAUR’OHTAR-Class Destroyers fired off their first volley and then began to disappear as they formed into their Wolfpacks and engaged their Shrouds once more to go hunting.

The first wave of M22A ZMF missiles struck six of the thirteen Kavalian GREATSOUL dreadnoughts in Puram’s fleet as well as seven of the old but still dangerous DIATAGA Heavy cruisers. The missiles obliterated five of the GREATSOULs in the same instant. The sixth GREATSOUL began to list heavily and drift as one of its forward wing arms was blasted completely off. It would live for another two minutes and only seven escape pods would depart the ship before its Tri-Cobalt engine core overloaded and reduced the ship to space ash. None of the older DIATAGAs survived the first wave of missiles.

Unbeknownst to the Kavalian ships, the deadliest threat to what they protected was already making its way down to the surface of Dalean. Adjusting their shrouds for atmospheric entry was easy enough, and with consummate skill, four TYPE I Alpha Dragon transports and three VANGUARD MARK III-Class Interdiction Cruisers pierced the relatively light gravity of Dalean ten kilometers west of the Kavalian cloning facilities. As they sped across the lush green plains to their holding point, their comrades in the MOONLANCER B ships above prepared to open the door for them. Only a few Kavalian settlers heard the enormous sonic booms that shattered the peaceful scenery around them and as they looked up into the bright blue skies, many of them would later say they saw these enormous shimmering objects in the sky as they passed overhead.

In just under a minute, those objects would no longer be shimmering.

The Kavalian cloning facilities were primarily built underground across the ten kilometer square flat plains on the northern continent of Dalean. They were surrounded by mountains on three sides and an enormous ocean that took up nearly a quarter of the planet’s surface. The Kavalian ground forces were extensive, fully three complete divisions of Kavalian cloned troops led by three hundred pure Kavalian officers. There were nearly twenty batteries of heavy anti-aircraft guns and countless bunkers that provided protection to the facilities. The six facilities here on Dalean were the largest of those spread across the Kavalian Federation and combined they produced nearly sixty-five percent of the cloned troops. The bases and the base's defenses were set up to be nearly impregnable from any sort of ground assault imaginable. The Kavalian engineers and officers had discounted any type of assault from orbit however. They deemed it next to impossible to breach Kavalian space so deeply and remain intact.

Of course they were only using information and intelligence on the Vampire High Coven when the facilities were built. Everything they had determined was that no High Coven officer would have the skill or determination to strike this deep into Kavalian space. They had been hit by such overwhelming superiority in the first waves that all they could do was defend what they had and hope for the best.

Fighting the Lycavorian Union had never been considered in the construction of these facilities. Their mistake would cost them dearly.

Many of the cloned troops and pure Kavalian officers had begun looking skyward as bright streaks began to crisscross the backdrop of blue sky. All of them knew something was happening in orbit, but it appeared all of their COM channels were being jammed. Their senior officers were in a panic as they were cut off from their superiors in orbit and had to make decisions on their own. Something they had never had to do before. They began to issue orders to take up defensive positions thinking that perhaps a drill was underway.

In a sense... a drill was exactly what was coming.

MOONLANCER B CRUISER MINOTAUR

“Come on! Come on!” The Captain of the MINOTAUR barked. “Give me something people!”

“Initial volley away!” A voice called out. “Twenty seconds until MIRV reload!”

“Yes!” The Lycavorian barked. “Mark all ground targets! Sync locations with all other MOONLANCER cruisers! We need to blast them a hole and that's what we're going to do!”

“Ten seconds on the MIRVs!” The voice echoed. “All other MOONLANCERs signal ready!”

“Ground targets locked in!” Another voice erupted.

It seemed like an eternity, but nine seconds later it was done.

“Lock on! Lock on! All MIRVs ready!”

“Fire! Fire! Fire!” The captain of the MINOTAUR roared.

Two seconds later, twenty-four nine meter tall missiles launched from the belly of the MOONLANCER B Cruiser MINOTAUR followed by one hundred and forty-four MIRVs from the other five MOONLANCER B ships in rapid succession.

Payback was so sweet.

TYPE I ALPHA DRAGON TRANSPORT DRAGON'S BREATH

Daugo moved down the main aisle of the new TYPE I Alpha and felt the swell of pride in his chest. It surpassed anything he had ever felt in his over twelve thousand years of life with one exception.

The howls of blissful delight as he had claimed Arzoal in the skies above their base. Her talons digging into his scales as his huge organ had penetrated her to her core and his wings folded around her massive body while they plummeted towards the ground rutting like two young dragons was the most divine experience he would ever know. The knowledge that he would continue to experience this had only driven him to supreme heights as he plunged on her four more times in those hours they had before they parted. He could feel her joy and happiness as her womanhood tightened around him while they dropped and she nipped at the armored scales of his throat and neck. Had he known how desperately she had longed for that moment, to feel him buried within her, Daugo probably would have been driven to take her even more. It was enough however, as they lay alongside the cool mountain lake hours later and stroked each others scales, and he heard Arzoal cooing out contented and delighted dragon noises. Had he not loved her so much, it would have seemed odd that those noises could come from the Dragon Elder Mother, but at that moment she was the most divinely beautiful female dragon he had ever set his eyes upon.

And she was now his.

Word had spread quickly among the Dragon Brigade that their leader and former Elder was now mated to their Dragon Mother. In their eyes this had elevated Daurgo to legendary status even more than his position as an Elder. And they listened even more intently to his experienced words as he sauntered down the main aisle.

...take nothing for granted. No matter the damage done by our missiles, remain alert and spare nothing! Talon Guardian Androcles has given us our orders, and his faith and love for us flows through all of you! Through me!

Daurgo saw many of the six hundred heads lining both sides of the ship nodded. The TYPE I Alpha had been designed and implemented specifically for this purpose. These ships would serve as their chariots into battle. Faster, more heavily armed and equipped with the most advanced sensors and weapons known, the TYPE I Alphas were their homes now. Two hundred and fifty meters longer than the original TYPE I Transports, fitted with extensive plates of the marvelous Dragon Armor, the TYPE I Alphas could carry six hundred of the Dragon Brigade into battle if need be.

You have heard his orders my brothers and sisters. These are orders he gives with a heavy heart for he knows this is not normally our way. Events have dictated what he must do. How we must act. At least now. We are part of the Union. Part of families. Now we must take it upon ourselves to defend what we have come to love and cherish. We must show no mercy! We will take no prisoners! And we will show these Kavalians that there is a reason why they fear us!

The trumpets that followed would have drowned out any sound whatsoever. Daurgo turned his massive head when he felt the elven female reach for him within Mindvoice. Each TYPE I Alpha was crewed by elves. Female elves that were among the finest pilots in the Union. The support crew was a mixture of Lycavorian, Elves, Vampires and two Hadarian Healers per ship. They had trained and worked together for the better part of three years now, and all of their skills would now come into play.

Daurgo... missiles inbound! Twenty seconds to impact!

We hold at the established markers until the missiles have done their work Erliei. Daurgo answered the brown haired pilot. Then take us in over the base.

Stand by. Erliei answered. I'm going to punch it the moment the last missile hits. They'll still be confused when you begin to exit.

Daurgo smiled at the brazenness of the female elf. He had chosen well when he picked her from a list of potential candidates to fly these TYPE I Alphas. We will be ready.

DALEAN

The first MIRV descended to three hundred meters above the Kavalian cloning facility and burst open. One second later another one hundred and forty-three MIRVs did the exact same thing even as Kavalian clone troops and their officers began to look skyward in confusion at the white and black puffs of smoke. They were unaware they were watching their deaths. There were two types of MIRVs in the wave of missiles. The MIRV 1 and the MIRV 2. No one ever said those who designed the missiles were any good at naming things.

The small white puffs of smoke were designated MIRV 1s breaking open and then over four hundred anti-personnel, self propelled darts with the equivalent power to one pound of concentrated JB-19 explosives compound deploying. As was programmed into their small computer brains, the instant the darts cleared the empty shell of the MIRV missile containers, they activated their own tiny engines to adjust their trajectory and choose a target close enough to be accurate. In this case close enough to be accurate was pretty much straight down.

The Kavalian defenses were spread out between the six domed facilities in a layered pattern extending from the center of the massive compound to outside the eight meter high wall that surrounded the ten square kilometer compound. The domed facilities themselves contained the initial creation labs and containment modules. The air defenses were useless against the missiles because their flight profile was very stealthy like the ZMF missiles and they moved incredibly fast. By the time the missiles arrived from the ships above, the Kavalian gun crews were frantically trying to target them, long sustained and inaccurate fire erupting into the sky above. At least until they started to break open above the battlefield.

The anti-personnel MIRV 1 was affectionately nicknamed the “Bitch slap” by Union ground forces. The Kavalians began to understand why as soon as those small darts began to impact the ground and detonate. It was as if a thousand firecrackers began to go off in huge waves at the same time. The one pound of JB-19 explosive in each dart created a huge cloud as it exploded and sent two hundred small slivers of metal whizzing outward at five thousand feet per second. The effect was horrific even against troops in body armor. Flesh was shredded instantly and without care. The screaming began almost immediately as two meter high tufts of dirt and smoke began to rise from the ground as the MIRV 1 darts landed. Anything within six meters of an exploding dart was immediately perforated with killing metal shards. The blasts would remove arms, legs and even heads as the rumbling continued across the entire expanse of the compound. The only saving grace for the Kavalian troops was the size of the base itself. The MIRV 1s were concentrated over the interior portions of the base and those Kavalian troops watching from outside could only look on in horror as their comrades were blown and shredded into tiny pieces. Anti-aircraft batteries were peppered by metal slivers when the darts landed nearby, ripping gun crews apart and in the case with many of the thirty odd turrets, were destroyed or rendered inoperable when darts landed right on top of the gun turret itself. They saw their comrades stagger from the smoke of explosions missing limbs and sometimes spurting blood from appalling wounds to their bodies.

And then the MIRV 2s began to announce their presence.

Unlike their smaller brothers, the MIRV 2s were the true impact weapon among the flight of missiles that had arrived over the Kavalian cloning facilities. The dark puffs announced the separation of the Ground Penetration warhead from its MIRV vehicle. These warheads were affectionately nicknamed the “Ballbuster” during the Evolli War. Used to go after deep Evolli bunkers, the “Ballbuster” never ceased to reach its target. The two hundred kilograms of JB-19 explosives variant was packed tightly into the dragon armor encased cone like head. Once separation from the MIRV had been achieved, powerful inner rockets ignited and the missiles drove straight down. Admiral Puram had been very accurate in saying that Pian’Nruarani had protected this very site for over a decade. It was Pian’s knowledge that had now guided the missiles to exactly where they would do the most damage. Pian had given this intelligence willingly, knowing that his future with Jalersi and the future of his people now lay with the Lycavorian Union.

The MIRV 2s dove straight into the ground, the rocket engines propelling them at nearly five times the speed of sound, tiny sonic drills built into the tips of the JB-19 warheads clearing the way as the missiles drove down into the earth, some of them reaching a hundred meters deep before detonating. To the Kavalian troops outside the base it appeared as if the ground on the interior of the base suddenly heaved up in dozens of locations and deafening explosive booms shattered the air. Rock, dirt and hundreds of bodies were literally thrown into the air as massive craters began to appear all over the interior of the base perimeter. Massive craters that now exposed the portions of the base that were underground. Connecting tunnels and even the sides of advanced lab facilities were exposed and in most cases ripped open like tin can. Almost always the huge explosions knocked out power to that section or tore open massive entrances to the facilities. Flames and smoked lifted into the air, the stench of charred bodies and blood beginning to saturate the entire area.

More importantly, the openings that had been blasted open were large enough to fit a dragon. A very dangerous breed of dragon that Daurgo had chosen to be part of the Dragon Brigade for one simple reason. They could go places other dragons could not despite their size. Dragons with ruby red scales and long, muscular tails ending in very savage twelve inch spikes. Not only did they have these tails, but the Spiketailed Longwing dragon breed had the unique ability to toss liquid fire from their maws and not normal fire. Liquid fire that stuck to whatever it was launched at and burned it.

Information flowed and COMs were activated, and ten seconds after the last MIRV 2 detonated, Daurgo and the Dragon Brigade were given the green light.

Green light! Green light! Erliei shouted within Mindvoice.

Take us in Erliei! Spare no speed! Daurgo barked. We must strike swiftly while they are stunned.

With a war cry that might have matched any Lycavorian Daurgo knew the TYPE I Alpha DRAGON'S BREATH accelerated forward with power and determination under Erliei's expert guidance.

Erliei had them over the top of the Kavalian facility in just under a minute and Daurgo moved into the center of the ship as the massive top mounted doors began to retract and fill the interior of the ship with sunlight.

Go now! Form into your sections and do what you have been trained to do! No mercy! No prisoners! Into battle we fly my brothers and sisters!

Whatever the Kavalian troops outside the wall of the main base expected when they saw the four massive eight hundred meter long ships appear overhead, it was not the three thousand dragons that rose into view. As if rising from a floating tomb they came and began plummeting to the earth below with trumpets of rage. The Kavalian Cloning facility was protected by three divisions of cloned Kavalian troops and hundreds of them had already begun pouring from their underground barracks when Daurgo and the other dragons began to land.

The Kavalians ran right into their deaths.

Daurgo was the first to land, and as he alighted upon the torn open section of tunnel, nearly forty Kavalian troops were pouring out with their weapons at the ready. Daurgo didn't hesitate for a second and unleashed the most powerful stream of flame he could generate. The fifty foot long stream of over three thousand degree heat incinerated virtually all of the Kavalian troops within seconds. All that remained were their charred corpses and smoking heaps. With a trumpet of triumph Daurgo bellowed into the open air a challenge to the Kavalians that they would never understand just as his Dragon Brigade fell upon them with trumpets of savage glee all their own.

One lone Kavalian officer outside the perimeter and looking on from a gun turret began screaming at his crews to realign their weapons to fire upon the dragons even as his blood was turning cold in fear of the monsters before them. He was screaming into his radio unit for his other crews to respond and turned his head to the nearest turret to his west. His eyes grew wide when he saw two massive dragons clinging to the ten meter tall gun tower and ripping its crew to pieces. A flash of movement caused his head to whip around and then his blood did freeze as the muzzle of the green tinted monstrosity appeared in front of him and he felt the thud as the dragon latched onto the tower with his talons. The Kavalian officer risked a glance at his other towers and for as far as his keen eyes could see; dragons were falling upon his gun towers up and down the line. The guns were ineffective against the powerful physic shields of the dragons and quickly the guns fell silent as the dragons either tore them to ribbons or simply burned them out of existence. His head turned back in that split second and he began screaming as that green scaled beast unleashed a violent trumpet and opened its tooth filled maw. The Kavalian officer would scream for several seconds until those teeth smashed down on his body and bit him completely in half as the dragon ripped his body from the interior of the turret and sent the two pieces of his body flying in different directions before turning to burn the gun crew and the turret into ash.

All across the expanse of the base dragons were landing and engaging Kavalian troops who exited in ever increasing numbers, to be struck down just as quickly. The members of the Dragon Brigade all had physic shields that were among the strongest of all living dragons, and the small arms the Kavalians carried really did no damage aside from being irritating. With every bellow of rage, Kavalians died in droves under powerful streams of flame or superheated breath. Bodies were shattered by Dragon Armor encased wings and Heavyhorn tails. Whole groups of Kavalians were ripped to pieces by talons better suited to carving metal and stone. The river of blood quickly began to rise as Daurgo landed amidst a small group of three and crushed one into the earth before lifting one into his maw and using his body to smash the life from the other before he tossed the Kavalian into the air and sent him hurtling some hundred meters away, his lifeless body landing with a sickening crunch and splat. Daurgo lifted his armored head skyward to where he saw two hundred dragons still circling above.

Ordin! Now my brother! Lead them in now!

The commander of the Spiketail Longwing dragon contingent trumpeted his answer and the smaller, but no less dangerous dragons plunged for the earth and the openings they had spotted from the air. The Spiketail dragons were thinner than their Heavyhorn and Firespitter brothers and sisters, their bodies lean and muscular and allowing them to squeeze into crevices and cracks the others could not. This also allowed them to be able to move within the many tunnels of the underground base they had been sent here to assault. With a cry of outrage and glee the two hundred Spiketails swooped down out of the sky and began disappearing into the once impregnable Kavalian base now torn open like paper machete by the MIRV 2 missiles.

Ordin, the leader of this contingent of the Dragon Brigade, was fifty meters inside the first tunnel when he came upon two dozen terrified troops and scientists. He had been soon to be named to the Elder Council to represent the growing number of Spiketail dragons that were making a comeback. When Daurgo first came to him about what they were doing Ordin did not hesitate. This is how his breed of dragon would make a name for themselves and be welcomed back into the fold of so many. When Ordin opened his maw and cut loose with liquid flame the screams started.

Then the true slaughter began.

47TH KAVALIAN TACTICAL FLEET GROUP COMMAND SHIP GREATSOUL DREADNOUGHT FANGS OF STEEL

“...lost a hundred and nineteen ships destroyed!” Joram screamed to his father as the FANGS OF STEEL shuddered under another barrage from what appeared to be a group of powerful smaller ships that were coordinating their attacks by dropping in and out of Shroud.

“Another fifty-nine too heavily damaged to fight! Half our force gone in the first sixty seconds!”

“Admiral!” His COM officer barked from across the bridge. “We have lost contact with the ground teams! They reported a massive missile barrage and then...”

“Speak man!” Puram barked angrily.

“Then the man said thousands of dragons were pouring from huge ships above the facilities!” The COM officer answered.

Puram’s eyes grew wide. “Dragons!” He gasped in revulsion. “Sensors! Sensors!”

“Confirming four ships in stationary position above the facility!” The man answered. “Some sort of transport! Almost seven hundred meters in length and radiating power sources unlike anything I have ever seen!”

Joram turned to look at his father. “They have Shrouded ships that can carry dragons this far?” He screamed.

“That fool Keleru has done it this time!” Puram screamed. “He has waken the wrath of the one force in the galaxy we have no hope against!”

“Admiral... that group of attack ships has de-shrouded off our stern!” Another voice barked. “They are preparing to fire!”

Admiral Puram’Kell had come to the turning point in his life.

The single moment in the life of all beings where their path laid before them in multiple directions and they had a choice to make. Puram had only two choices before him. Remain here and be obliterated by a smaller but obviously much more well armed and trained and motivated Lycavorian Task Force bent solely on revenge. His son, himself, all the men he had trained for years to operate as a single unit and as part of a greater whole. They would be blown out of the stars in a hopeless attempt at defending something Puram and many of them thought of as foul anyway. They would die under the onslaught of a force who would not be deterred in their goal of destruction. Puram had cautioned for years about provoking the Lycavorian Union, for war with them meant taking a leap in to the unknown annals of modern war. No one knew how they would fight. No one knew how they would act. The Evolli War was only a small portion of the window into the Lycavorian mindset. And that war started because the Evolli got greedy and made the mistake of conquering a helpless colony planet. An event that saw the end of their government and nearly their people because of their leader’s greed. It was no different here. Keleru and Pusintin wanted more. More power. More control. They would destroy all of what the Kavalian people had gained in the last millennia by their actions. The Lycavorian Union was not the High Coven. They would fight and kill, never surrender and never retreat. Every victory would be at the cost of more blood than they could afford to lose. Every defeat would set back their gains by decades. Puram could die here. He could let his men die here.

Which brought him to his second option.

Run.

Run and find Pian'Nruarani. The man had obviously made his choice and he had the support of the Lycavorian Union. His priorities were towards his people and their advancement. This fact only shone through in how he had obviously won the affection of Jalersi'Puat. The oldest daughter of Keleru'Puat was known to be very intelligent and forward thinking. Save himself and his men and ships for the battle that Pian was going to wage. The battle for the future of his people. Their people. And the Lycavorian Union was obviously helping him in that goal, which meant they would consider a friend of Pian's a friend of theirs.

"Father!" Joram screamed at him, shocking him from his thoughts.

Puram'Kell made his decision. Quite easily in fact.

"All ships! Directive Seven! Directive Seven! Execute now and rendezvous at pre-plotted coordinates!" Puram shouted looking at his son. "We die here protecting those who have brought ruin to us all or we escape and join with Pian'Nruarani and fight for the future of our people!"

Joram didn't hesitate. "Directive Seven! Issue the order! Directive Seven! Helm... full about! Engage emergency LSD operation! All ships emergency LSD operation. We are jumping in ten seconds!"

ARIZONA

"Miranda! Kavalian ships are engaging their LSD drives! They're preparing to jump away!" E'dira barked from her station.

Miranda came to her feet. "What? Confirm!"

"Confirmed! Command ship is engaging LSD Drive core! All ships not engaged are turning away and activating their Drive cores!" E'dira announced.

"They're running?" Miranda gasped. "Fucking cowards!"

"Fleet units asking if they are to pursue!" The COM officer exclaimed.

"Negative!" Miranda barked. "It could be a trap! No pursuit! No pursuit!" Miranda moved over beside E'dira and Zaala joined her there. The three females had become sort of a bridge click and Miranda approved since she got one set of ideas from E'dira and one from Zaala. "Thoughts?" She asked.

As was usual, E'dira spoke first. "A trick to draw us away from the planet so they can slip back in and hit our ground teams. Our numbers do not bode well to splitting our forces and any sort of ground bombardment on the dragons will kill many of them."

"Or they could have just realized it is stupid to die here for the Kavalian leader." Zaala stated. "Their ships are much older than the ones at Kranek Miranda. We are essentially shooting ducks in a pond. They can not match us!"

E'dira nodded her head. "Correct as well." She stated. "Zaala is accurate when she says we are pounding them into oblivion."

"I thought Kavalians fought to the death." Miranda said.

"We have seen discontent within their ranks." E'dira spoke before Zaala answered.

Zaala nodded. "Pian'Nruarani. This Mican and his rebels that Resumar found." She spoke. "Perhaps this Kavalian commander did not want to die for Keleru and Pusintin either."

"Recommendations?" Miranda asked.

"Let them go!" Zaala said. "Let them go and let's finish what Andro sent us here to do."

E'dira surprisingly nodded her head. "I concur. Why risk ourselves. If they do not wish to fight then let us focus on supporting Daurgo and the Dragon Brigade and destroy those foul cloning facilities."

"And what will Andro say?" Miranda asked softly.

“He did not put you in command in order to second guess your decisions.” E'dira spoke quickly. “You of all of us should know that. And I do not believe Androcles Leonidas is as cruel and unforgiving as many believe. Harsh yes... very much so. But genocidal... no.”

Zaala nodded. “E'dira is correct.” She spoke.

Miranda nodded her head and made her decision. She turned back to her bridge crew. “Order all ships to disengage and reform on the ARIZONA, YAMATO and MISSOURI. All fighters to remain airborne. Return and rearm as necessary. Have Steven get his squadron on the deck and give us an eyeball on the ground. Commander Usaro’s squadron to provide high cover.”

The skilled vampire pilot from General Esavorna’s command had volunteered to be assigned to the ARIZONA to further relations and show her loyalty to the cause. She had quickly become an excellent asset and fit in easily with the ARIZONA crew.

“And get me a line to Androcles!” Miranda said.

DALEAN

Ordin drew his huge head from the entrance to the massive chamber of sleeping clones. None of the hundreds of chambers had power to them anymore and the life giving liquid had already turned a sick orange color as the clones inside who had not yet been birthed began to die by the thousands. He had seen where some of his other Spiketails had reached the lower portion of the breeding center and either burned or tore the equipment to pieces, leaving nothing untouched. All of them had intently studied the many images provided by Pian that he had either drawn or provided from memories via Mindvoice. Images that had been passed from him to Cemath and then copied to a hard disc by 341 on SPARTA'S WRATH.

The corridors of the underground facilities were now littered with hundreds of dead bodies. Burn marks dotted many of the walls, mixed in with the indentations from heavy weapons fire. He was close to the entrance and he looked back to the second Spiketail that had joined him.

This section is demolished. He spoke.

Talon Guardian Androcles did tell us to be thorough General. The young dragon answered flippantly.

Ordin’s muzzle parted in what was a smile for a dragon. Indeed he did Horath. Come... we must join with Elder Daurgo on the surface and report.

Both of them heard the faint scrapping on the floor and Ordin nodded his head as they passed the single door. The badly wounded Kavalian soldier, burns covering roughly fifty percent of his body leaped into the corridor between them and leveled his weapon at Ordin’s rear. His burned and ravaged face prevented him from seeing Ordin’s Second. Just as he was about to pull the trigger of his rifle he gasped in agony as the two long spikes erupted from his chest and he was driven forward with stunning power. His one good eye looked down and saw the protruding gray spikes from his chest as more blood began to pool beneath his feet as he was lifted from the floor. His head lifted and he turned to see the second dragon behind him. Horath stared at him for a moment with gleaming red eyes and then smashed his tail against the metal wall of the corridor, crushing the Kavalian instantly as the two spikes punched holes in the wall. Horath drew his tail back and let the body fall to the floor and he followed his commander.

Ordin appeared in the bright sunlight once more, smoke filtering across the horizon from the many fires that burned. His keen eyes spotted the large body of Daurgo in the center of the facility just as his talons impaled two Kavalians who were inert on the ground. With a quick and powerful flip of his wings he lifted into the air and crossed the five hundred meters to his leader in three heartbeats.

Daurgo turned as he landed and faced him. Ordin?

The eastern section is completely destroyed. Ordin reported. I checked the breeding center before leaving. There is no power to the chambers and the clones inside are all dead. It appears they could not last very long without the liquid in their chambers.

Daurgo and Ordin lifted their heads as nine TEMPEST fighters roared overhead very close to the ground.

Steven Randall? Daurgo reached out sensing the man easily. His Mindvoice skills were not as well refined as others, but he was a bright spot among the tendrils in the sky just above them.

Miranda wanted me to give her an eyeball General. Steven's voice filled both Daurgo and Ordin's minds.

The eastern and southern complex sections are no more. I am waiting for reports on the western and northern complexes. I expect the same. Daurgo answered.

Lot of bodies General. Steven spoke softly.

Too many my friend. Daurgo answered. This Keleru has much blood to answer for.

Yes he does. Steven answered. I have Arдона's and my squadron above you General. We'll remain as long as our fuel holds out or until you are finished.

Daurgo saw two Spiketails take flight from the western and northern entrances and nodded. My reports are coming now. We will not be here much longer.

In his M7 TEMPEST Steven Randall nodded and keyed his COM unit. "Arдона... we'll remain in orbit until they are clear."

"Vith me Steven Randall. They... they decimated this facility." Arдона gasped over the intercom. "I have... I have never seen so many bodies. This is what... this is what we would have fought if my people continued down the path we were on."

"Not anymore... so put it out of your mind." Steven spoke. "You and General Esavorna are part of the Union now. All of you."

"Yes. Yes we are." She answered.

"Scar Actual to ARIZONA Actual. Situation appears well in hand. General Daurgo says they will be departing soonest."

"Understood Scar Actual. Continue to orbit and advise the general the faster he can get things done the better." Miranda's voice echoed.

"Acknowledged." Steven spoke.

Daurgo watched as the two Spiketails from Ordin's section landed beside him.

The northern complex is in ruin General.

The western one as well. We left the bodies where they fell.

Daurgo looked at him. Survivors?

We left no one General. As ordered.

Daurgo nodded and looked at Ordin. It is time we left this place my friend. Have your sections take flight first. I will follow with the others just after you.

Ordin nodded. It needed to be done Daurgo. We all saw the reports Androcles showed us. We needed to do this in order to buy the time we need for the future of our Union.

Daurgo nodded. I know. This is a victory... but as Androcles knows... it is also a crime what we had to do here today. A crime he will make Keleru pay for in spades.

Ordin nodded his huge head and looked at his section leaders. Gather your sections and return to your ships! Quickly now! We can not afford to be here if the Kavalians return.

Daurgo took that time to gaze slowly around at the devastation the Dragon Brigade and the missiles had wrought. He had no doubts that there were still survivors that they had not discovered. They would be left to tell the tale and pass on the horror of what happened here this day. As much as it may have bothered him to conduct this mission, as Ordin said, it needed to be done. The first mission of the Dragon Brigade had been a success across the board. Daurgo was not fool enough to think that would last. He would lose dragons in battle, it was inevitable. All he could do was make sure he led them to the best of his ability.

Daurgo inhaled deeply and released a deafening trumpet that carried across the landscape far and wide. Dragons began to return his call and then they began to rise into the sky like the majestic creatures they were to return to their ships.

They left behind ten million dead Kavalian clones that had not yet reached maturity and been birthed and over seventy thousand dead Kavalian soldiers. The largest and most active Kavalian cloning center was now nothing but a memory as parts of it still burned in the distance across the base. Even combined, the remaining cloning facilities would not be able to produce so many clones in less than six months. The price in terms of Kavalian life had been high, but the mission was complete.

Androcles would have his time.

And the Kavalian Federation would take pause and think about what they had gotten themselves into.

CABELIR COMMAND BUNKER

“How!” Keleru screamed. “One of you tell me how this has happened!”

The ranking Pride leaders and members of the military council remained silent as Keleru raged.

“Our homeworld!” Keleru shouted. “They strike on our homeworld and at the heart of our Military Command Compound! Just to free a few dozens whores! And we let them!” Keleru threw the data pads in his hand across the large room watching as they shattered against the far wall. “I want every officer and soldier on duty when they took the females executed! Do you hear me? I want them dead! Dead! They failed in their duties and we must show them the price for failure!”

“I will see to it Prefect.” Admiral Caruma’Pameni spoke softly.

“How did this happen?” Keleru asked a second time and more in control of his emotions. “How did they strike on our homeworld? How did we not know his father still lives? How did we not see they would side with the High Coven? Have the reports come in from the Farnuri Expanse yet? Do we know if what he said is true?”

The rapid fire questions caused most of the men present to be silent. Pride Leader and Admiral Diseno got to his feet however.

“I dispatched a scout ship immediately after the boy boasted of this Prefect.” He spoke. “We will not know anything for another few hours. We must assume the worse however. I don’t believe he would have boasted of it if it was not true in some way. We have received no answer to our Communications calls either.”

Keleru shook his head and picked up another data pad from the table. “I received this just before beginning that transmission. It is from Pusintin’s Second Officer. Pusintin was severely injured in a battle with his brother. Half of his task force was destroyed by an unknown ship of Union make, and he lost two thirds of his Puma Bane detachment on the ground. Popal is currently making his way to Talbor Seven where there is a Hadarian Medical Clinic.”

“The Marshall’s injuries were that severe Prefect?” Pride Leader Liatthi asked.

Keleru nodded. “Apparently so. Popal’s transmission stated that Pusintin was trying to warn us of a trap. I did not know what he meant until now.”

“Is the Marshall returning Prefect?” Liatthi asked.

Keleru nodded his head. “Popal will have him contact me after he has been treated by the Hadarian. I want all out front lone units brought to full readiness. What of our Fleet Groups waiting to invade the Coven? I want them ready to turn and hit the Union.”

“They are standing by Prefect.” Caruma stated. “However... given what has happened Prefect, I believe we should hit the Coven now.”

“Now?” Liatthi gasped. “Are you mad?”

“Now is the perfect time!” Caruma snapped. “Their military is divided! Spread out! A concentrated invasion striking right for their heart will break them!”

“And what if the Union intervenes?” Liatthi barked right back. “Their boy leader has already told them they will have whatever support he can spare!”

“What can he spare?” Liatthi hissed. “A few Fleet Groups? We have fifteen ready to strike right now! Against what? Four or five Coven Fleet Groups? We could sweep them aside and be to the High Coven homeworld in three days! We can end the war with them so that we can fully concentrate on the Union!”

“We have never gotten close to their homeworld in all these years.” Keleru spoke. “What makes you so certain we can achieve this now?”

“They have never been in disarray as they are now Prefect.” Liatthi spoke. “The vile Empress is dead! The bitch daughter has run off to fuck her Immortal puppet. That leaves the daughter Narice in charge... just where the Spartan Prince put her. She has little support and no military to back her except the Union’s.”

“We don’t know that for sure.” Caruma spoke.

“My spies within the Coven tell me otherwise.” Liatthi spoke. “They tell me the Coven is divided and suspect. The military turns against each other! Soon they will turn against this Narice. A sword strike right to their heart and we win the war with the Coven in days, not years!”

“We have lost contact with a fleet comprising one fourth of our most advanced warships and you want to take half of what remains and strike the High Coven?” Caruma looked at him. “That is madness even for you Liatthi.”

“What do you suggest we do?” Liatthi growled. “Sit by and do nothing? The Union has declared war on us! Us! That impudent boy Spartan thinks he is brave and wise! I say we show him his place in the galaxy!”

Keleru turned when his nephew came into the room. Kattu walked up to him with a look of severe discomfort on his face. “Kattu?” Keleru asked. “What is wrong?”

“Uncle I...” Kattu began.

“Spit it out Kattu!” Keleru snapped.

“A PURUSIAN-Class frigate from our force in the Farnuri Expanse has just sent a COM signal to us Uncle.” He spoke looking at Keleru. “The Captain of the ship... he says they were ambushed by a ship. He says this ship was over seven kilometers long and wielded weapons unlike anything we have seen before. The moment it appeared it began decimating our forces there! And then a Union Task Force de-shrouded and joined in the attack.” Kattu looked at his Uncle. “This Captain says only twenty-three ships survived Uncle.”

Liatthi and Caruma came to their feet in disbelief, as well as several others. “Twenty-three?” Caruma gasped. “That fleet had over six hundred ships in it! How is that even possible Kattu?”

“I do not know Admiral.” Kattu spoke in reply. “It seems... it seems unlikely but that is what the Captain says. He seemed quite shaken to be honest. We can review his ships logs when he returns but... if anything, this confirms that our fleet in the Farnuri Expanse is no more Uncle. Just as Androcles Leonidas stated.”

Keleru looked at his nephew. “You have more?” He asked. “Tell us Kattu?”

Kattu blinked several times and then simply blurted it out. “The cloning facilities on Dalean have been obliterated Uncle.” He spoke. “We received word from a surviving officer only minutes ago. The Union attacked with missiles from orbit and then Dragons.”

“Dragons?” Keleru nearly shouted.

Kattu nodded. “All of our scientists are dead, perhaps ten percent of the ground forces survive and none of the clones. They targeted the facilities on purpose Uncle. They destroyed everything. All of the clones ready to be birthed are dead. None remain.”

“The facility on Dalean had nearly ten million clones ready to deliver!” Keleru gasped. “All of them are gone?”

Kattu nodded. “The facility is completely destroyed. Somehow... somehow they got dragons into the underground tunnels and they systematically destroyed everything. The officer was still trying to discover the extent of the damage, but he was very clear that the cloning facilities themselves were annihilated.”

Keleru turned from the others and moved across the room his famous temper once more coming to the forefront. “How?” He asked.

“The officer was not aware of the composition of their fleet; he only saw the dragons and the ships they arrived in. Four massive ships that dropped to within two hundred meters of the ground and released the dragons. He estimates several thousand at least. The ships match the description of the Union Type I Dragon Transports but they were much larger and were equipped with Shrouds and small turrets. The dragons wore armor like those within the Union and they tore into the base defenders before the missile barrage was barely over.” Kattu told him.

“And the fleet guarding the planet?” Keleru asked.

Kattu shook his head. “No word Uncle. Given what happen on the ground I suspect they too were destroyed by whatever force the Union sent to Dalean. There are... there are ships headed there now but we will not know anything solid for several hours.”

Keleru felt the cold hand of fear in his gut but his anger at being made to look the fool overrode his caution. He turned to Liatthi. “You will take command of the forces detailed to the High Coven! Strike them hard Liatthi! Show them no mercy and crush them.”

Liatthi nodded. “I will Prefect.” He boasted.

Keleru turned to his nephew. "Kattu... issue the activation orders for our forces near Uirmeik. I want them pouring across the Union border by the end of tomorrow! They are to drive right for Elear. Nothing is to deter them! Nothing! This boy Prince thinks he can outwit me... let us see how he responds to that?"

Kattu nodded his head. "As you order Uncle."

"We outnumber the Union five to one!" Keleru snapped. "I will use this advantage and destroy them! I will crush them and rape their women! I will destroy their cities and their precious Sparta! And when I capture this boy Prince I will insure I remove his internal organs with a dull blade!"

"Prefect... may I suggest we wait!" Caruma spoke now. "We need more information about what we face and..."

"NO!" Keleru snarled. "I will not wait! I want his head do you hear me! I want his head on a plate so I can show the Union fools they are nothing compared to us! I will accept nothing less! You are my military leaders! That is what I want! I expect you to achieve it!"

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND SECONDARY COMMAND CENTER

"...did the right thing Manda." Andro spoke looking at Miranda in the holotransmission.

"We're enroute back to Earth now." Miranda told him. "We should be back in Union space within four hours."

"Move to your holding area on the far side of the moon and remain shrouded." Andro told her.

"Resumar arrives with SPARTA'S WRATH in less than an hour. I do not want the Netnews to get too much information on our new ships in a single day."

Miranda nodded. "Will do."

"Thank you Manda." Andro said. "I'll see you when you arrive."

The transmission ended and Androcles looked at his grandfather. "Two for two so far grandfather." He said.

Riall nodded. "But will he react as we hope he will?" Riall asked moving to the plot board and pointing to the star chart.

Andro came up next to him. "I would imagine right now he is screaming for my head." He said. "He has little options. I made him look the fool grandfather with the victories we have had he will want blood."

Riall nodded. "No doubt." He answered. "But it should not be yours he wants. Provoking him as you have done has now painted a very large target on your back Andro. Many of us are not comfortable with that."

Andro nodded. "Perhaps... but it needed to be done." He said. "If my Uncle does what father believes he will then Keleru will be calling the shots. At least initially. And a military officer he is not."

Riall shook his head. "It is... it is hard to believe that your father thinks Pusintin actually has fallen in love with your mother."

"He saw him... we did not." Andro spoke. "I can speak from experience however, when I say that an elven mate is... for lack of a better description... addicting."

Riall looked at him with a sly smile. "Better not let Sadi hear you say that." He said.

Andro chuckled. "It was Sadi who said it first." He said. "Besides... no elven female will ever come close to Sadi in my eyes."

Riall grinned. "The benefits of having an Anome." He said. "Nothing can match their scent or the taste of their bodies."

Andro nodded. "No they can't."

Riall looked over the plot board. "Do we continue with the original plan?"

Andro nodded. "We determined a long time ago that this was the only way to stop them should an attack come from Uirmeik. It was father's idea grandfather."

"Yes... thirteen years ago." Riall said. "We did not have the technology we have now Andro."

“We cannot risk SPARTA'S WRATH against what he will undoubtedly throw through this lone corridor.” Andro said. “And with you leaving for High Coven space within the hour we do not have the time to establish or plan out a defense of that nature.”

Riall nodded. “I know... but we will be rendering all travel through this sector a Class Six hazard for at least a decade Andro. The gravitational forces will be in a state of flux for at least that long according to the models by Avi.”

“I'm open to options?” Andro said.

Riall looked at the chart. “There are none. I know that.”

“It is not widely traveled as it is grandfather.” Andro spoke. “It may bleed over a little, but nothing that an experienced ship captain could not avoid. I do not want to do it either... by we must neutralize the Kavalian advantage in numbers as well as force them to come from where we will be better prepared.”

“They could just bypass Consortium space and attack from Limian space.” Riall spoke motioning with his finger on the chart. “A direct line to Elear and then Folcan and Semtola and then on to Apo Prime.

Andro nodded. “They could... but tactically speaking they won't and you know it.” He replied. “They do not have Shrouds and to come that far through not only Consortium space but also Limian? It would take too much time. Their window is now.”

Riall nodded. “Are you sure?”

Andro looked at his adopted grandfather. A man who had more tactical experience than he could possibly have without jumping three thousand years into the future. A man who had taught him almost all he knew about ship combat and moving mass fleets through space. “You taught me everything I know grandfather.” Andro said. “Is there any other option?”

Riall shook his head after a long moment. “No. We do not have the numbers to match them head on even with SPARTA'S WRATH.” He stood to his full height. “The Netnews people will crucify you for this. Or shout your name to the moon in praise.”

“What they think is unimportant to me.” Andro stated. “I must act as my father would act to safeguard our people. We need time to build up our forces. To implement them. This buys us that time at minimal loss of life. I have already taken more lives in my lifetime than I ever imagined. If I am to be damned for doing so... then I will do so insuring my people have a fighting chance.”

Riall nodded. “Then do it.” He spoke. “And within the next two days or it will not matter.” Riall said. “Once the order is given they will need perhaps thirty hours before they pour across our border in droves.”

Andro nodded his head. “I will.” He said softly. “I will.”

Riall nodded. “GORGOS HONOR awaits.” He said. “I must leave.”

“Fight well grandfather.” Andro said.

“Be mindful of your grandmother.” Riall spoke with a slight smile. “She has a tendency to be a bit testy when I leave for battle.”

Andro smiled. “I will.”

Riall pulled Andro into a rib cracking hug that Androcles returned. “You are not alone boy.” He said softly. “You are never alone. Your father believes in you. As do we all.”

Androcles laughed softly. “Somehow I think my father may have gotten the better end of this deal.” He said. “If I know him, he is most likely indisposed as he rediscovers all of my mothers and no doubt one or more of them will be carrying a child when they return.”

Riall laughed. “He is a randy wolf isn't he?” He said.

Andro nodded. “Go with the gods grandfather. May our ancestors watch over and guide us.”

“Avoi.” Riall spoke.

ARC ROYAL COREWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM

Androcles was semi correct in his assumption.

Martin Leonidas did have plans to rediscover all of his mates and show them how much he loved them all, but at the moment only one occupied his full and undivided attention. And that was more her decision than anything else. For'mya Leonidas had waited long enough and the female Alpha wolf that resided in her decided that it was time to get what she wanted. What she had hungered after for so many years. What she desperately needed to feel and experience once more to truly be whole again. Her Alpha male husband and mate was not disappointing her in any way. In fact, he was driving her blissfully insane with exquisite resolve.

For'mya's supple body was slick with a fine sheen of sweat that had not been able to cool or dry in the last ten hours. She released yet another deep guttural moan of decadent bliss as she dropped herself fully onto Martin's huge organ once again. She ground and twisted her slim hips upon him reaching for the pinnacle of pleasure, even as he touched places within her she didn't think she had. For'mya knew it was his heated aura that caused her to think these things, for he had touched and reached these places many times before, but never with such devastating and unrestrained gratification. His unshielded aura had set her lush elven and wolf body ablaze with desire unlike anything she had experienced before with her beautiful mate. The man who had claimed all that she was so long ago. What she had craved for so long was now hers and For'mya Leonidas was unwilling to let the overwhelming sensations abate without fully basking in their breath stealing wonder. Every dominating stroke he made into her supple frame claimed her over and over again. Every breath stealing plunge into her depths and she whimpered in heavenly delight. He was holding nothing back from her, taking her with such power and force and overwhelming love.

For'mya had lost count of her orgasmic explosions within the first hour, Martin taking her to places neither of them had been together. His hands and fingers were a never ending source of movement and exploration and pleasure inducing devices, so large and gentle across her body that it was hard to believe he could kill so easily with them. His lips and tongue paid special attention to her breasts as she knew they would. The accelerated serum had increased the size of her firm globes by nearly a full cup, and made them even more sensitive. Martin discovered this in the first few moments and had since tortured them non-stop, keeping her gasping and jumping with glee. Martin was the largest man she had ever been with, only the third man in her entire thousand plus years of life, yet the moment she had felt him fully bury himself within her that first night all those years ago, For'mya knew no other could compare. He stretched her, filled her to the point of superb enchantment. No matter how many times they had made love in the last twenty-five plus years it had always left her shivering in blissful satisfaction and wanting more. He could go on for hours, and with the wolf blood surging through her veins she could too.

Now though, it was so very different. Now she could feel the full power of his unshielded aura, his mind wrapped around hers in a protective cocoon so she would experience the full influence of his essence and not become a babbling female. Every jolt of pleasure, every simple movement sent waves of colossal delight crashing through her. She could feel every thick beautiful inch of his manhood as he impaled her over and over, the lava like heat and pulsing of his twelve inch cock against the walls of her soaked pussy. The tingling his skin caused against hers. This night she was experiencing all of him. The parts of him that only Aricia or Dysea could endure until now. The tendrils of their minds were connected so completely and she could see deep within his thoughts, feel how Anja had felt when he had done the same with her a few weeks before. The burning of her Hadarian blood. The sizzling of Dysea's blood and Aricia's blood as he took them. The rapturous force of Bella's cries and Cirith's moans as he made them his, just as he was doing to her now. It was so absolutely divine.

The times his brother had forced himself upon her, made her feel things physically while her mind screamed in protest, those were quickly washed away. His brother could not even come close to the power of Martin's aura when he unleashed it upon her. His first eruption into her had purged all of his brother's foul essence from her, and the next three had cleansed her soul and finally and forever made For'mya his and only his. The love she had for this man was inexplicable as she clutched at his broad shoulders over and over while he powered into her, whispering into his ears, urging him on, gasping in uncontrollable pleasure. For'mya pushed him down with surprising strength this time. Her hands braced on his broad, powerful chest, his yellow gold eyes staring at her lost in the pleasure she was giving him. She could feel every single vein of his cock within her, every throbbing of life and pleasure as she rotated her hips hard on his. She wanted him to erupt within her once more. To finally and without question make her completely his. Her head tilted back to stare at the ceiling as the crushing waves of pleasure began to smoothly vibrate through her. She was so close. They were so close.

For'mya's dark brown eyes flew open when she felt velvet heat engulf both her painfully erect nipples and electric pleasure screamed in her mind. Her head came forward quickly and she could do nothing but whimper in unabashed love as she saw the reason. Dysea, her long platinum hair spilling all over had trapped one of her nipples within her luscious lips. Their newest and breathtakingly beautiful mate Cirith held the other hard bud in the grasp of her sweet lips and they were torturing her nipples. Both of them were fully naked and driving her further up to the edge. She saw Bella's beautiful face beside Martin's, her lips and tongue dancing across his throat and neck, her stunning cobalt blue eyes gazing at her in hunger and want. Then she felt Aricia and Anja press against her on either side, their naked flesh sending powerful tremors of love pounding through her. Their large, firm breasts pressed tightly against her shoulders and their hands holding Dysea and Cirith's heads in place as they suckled her nipples.

It was appropriate that it was Aricia and Anja beside her, nuzzling her throat and neck, dragging their soft lips across her skin and nibbling on her four inch high elven ears. The three of them had groan so much closer through their many years together since Seanna's death. She and Aricia had showed Anja that she was never alone and never without companionship. Anja could do such magnificent things with her beautiful tongue and just the feel of Aricia's female aura could set For'mya off. Now they were doing it too her.

We have missed you so Kinsoaurgai. Aricia's sweet voice filled her pleasure hazed mind.

It's time Kinsoaurgai. Anja spoke now as her sizzling hot lips drew every closer to For'mya's quivering ones.

It's time for you to join us. Dysea's voice echoed. Time for you to experience what it feels like.

For'mya's mind was swirling as continued jolts of pleasure shot through her from both her breasts and from her grinding atop Martin's dominating cock. What... Wha... She could barely form words as the crushing pleasure was growing. Growing larger than anything she had felt yet.

Within our bodies... Cirith spoke.

And our minds. Isabella finished.

For'mya's eyes grew wide as she felt Martin swell impossibly large inside her. As he swelled, the heat of her body grew and grew, the pleasure riding the same wave and increasing. It smashed against her mind, her whole body aflame like never before.

Welcome home to us Kinsoaurgai. Anja's sweet words filtered to her dazed mind just before she plunged her four inch long tongue between For'mya's gasping lips in a soul robbing kiss of love.

For'mya screamed against Anja's kiss and didn't see Bella open her mouth, extend her vampiric fangs and plunge them into Martin's thick neck. She felt a moment of delicious pain as Cirith sent her own fangs into her flesh just above her rigid nipple and then the entire world exploded into a kaleidoscope of beauty and pleasure. She felt Martin tense beneath her and then erupt within her depths like an exploding volcano. As the heat of his essence filled her, For'mya exploded seconds later in the most crushing orgasm of her entire life. Her whole body vibrated as Anja deepened their kiss and Aricia began nibbling on the outer ridge of her elven ear. As Cirith fed on her blood while Dysea suckled her other breast like an infant. While Martin's hands gripped her hips almost painfully and Isabella's eyes nearly rolled into her head as she fed on Martin's blood. Orgasmic blood that caused Bella to shudder in her own orgasm.

There was no reason to fight it and For'mya knew this. She surrendered all she was to her beautiful mate and fellow Queens. This is what she had wanted for so long and as the tidal waves of passion and lust and desire and pleasure rocketed through her, For'mya let go and embraced it all.

It would be several minutes before any of them finally came down from their orgasmic high to do anything coherently. For'mya collapsed upon Martin's chest, his still throbbing cock so deep within her and still leaking his essence. Her eyelids were heavy as she saw Anja beside her and then Aricia moving close against Anja's back. Within moments it was hard to tell where one of them started and the others ended so entangled were their limbs. For'mya lifted her head slowly until she was looking into the yellow/gold orbs she adored. His hands came up and took her beautiful elven face in their grasp and he kissed her ever so softly.

Now. Now you are truly mine For'mya Leonidas. His mind whispered to her. All of you are truly mine. For eternity.

His words caused her strength to surge and a smile split her face as she stroked his bearded cheek. Her black ringed wolf eyes smiled at him as the tips of her smaller dual wolf fangs extended just under her upper lip. I do not think we are done my handsome mate. She spoke in a sultry and desire filled voice.

Martin grinned as well now, exposing the fearsome dual set of incisor fangs only found in the Leonidas bloodline. No... I don't think we are. He spoke.

With a groan of disappointment, but knowing what pleasures were still to come, For'mya lifted herself from Martin's still exceptionally hard cock. Using her inbred elven and wolf speed For'mya turned her head and rolled off Martin's body to capture Cirith within her embrace. Cirith's cry of surprise was lost against For'mya's lips as Martin rolled over just as quickly, pulling both Anja and Aricia with him onto the floor. Soon there were more cries of unmatched pleasure filling the interior of the room. Cries of pleasure from seven different voices that would continue for a dozen more hours before ceasing.

BETA QUADRANT AUSTROVA CALIRIA'S APARTMENT

Caliria rose from her bed, wrapping the sheets around her body as the sun filtered into her bedroom from the large bay window and balcony. There had been a point ever so recently that Caliria never thought she would see her apartment here again. It was larger than most of the apartments in the building she knew, an advantage no doubt because of her name. She was one floor down from the roof of the two hundred and ten story apartment building just on the outskirts of the campus of Mydala University. In the distance from her window she could see the Board of Regents center stretching across the river that cut the capital city in half. She had been here infrequently in the weeks leading up to her kidnapping but upon returning with Paga the night before the comfort she got from being here came back quickly. The apartment was completely her, and reflected her tastes and personality, from the exotic wall art to her choice of furniture. Her bed was huge, with a canopied top and thick pillars on all four corners. The floor length curtains were a rich violet color and there were plants everywhere. Caliria was thrilled that all of them had survived and her first chore was to through her entire apartment and water and refresh each plant while Paga scoured the apartment for security purposes.

Paga had been a constant shadow for her and while at first she thought she would take offense at this, she found the Lycavorian female to be genuinely honest and warm and friendly. She had begun to open up to Paga slowly over the last two days staying at Arduri's apartment as they had. She had dropped her personal bags in the smaller guest room that Caliria had used for an office and proceeded to sweep the entire apartment for any listening devices.

Sleeping in her own bed had felt so very good... but Caliria could not deny there was a loneliness within her as she clutched her pillows to her chest the night before. As she stood in the balcony doorway looking out over the city, the smell of food came to her. She knew it had to be Paga, and tossing her wild black hair over her shoulder she crossed her room and moved into the main area of the apartment. The kitchen was off to the left and she saw Paga standing in the center of the kitchen sipping a glass of berry juice while watching the food that sizzled on the standard cooking stove. Paga wore just a simple t-shirt that stretched past her tight ass and down to her thighs, her short brown hair hanging free around her shoulders. Her eyes cut to Caliria as she exited her bedroom and she lowered the glass.

"I hope... I hope you don't mind." She spoke quickly.

Caliria smiled as she moved to the counter that separated the kitchen and main area. She perched her bottom on one chair easily. "No." She spoke quickly. "I did not think there was anything in there. I rarely ate here. I usually ate on campus or within the Food Court off campus grounds."

Paga smiled. "I managed to whip some things together." She said. "It's a beautiful apartment Caliria." She said.

Caliria nodded. "One of the few indulgences I allowed myself to obtain because of my name." She said. "It was the last one like it available."

Paga lowered her glass to the counter and looked at her. "Listen... I think I have an idea of hard this is for you. I can find other accommodations nearby I'm sure. I don't... I don't want you to think I am spying for the Prince or Princesses. I'm not. They forbid me to. They wanted me to be someone who could answer questions you might have and someone that would look out for you. The danger to you is not entirely gone... if it ever went away Caliria. Especially now that you have come back."

Caliria nodded her head. "I know." She said softly. "And I don't think of you as a spy Paga." Caliria looked at her for a long moment and realized that since speaking with her father on the ship it had become easier to express what she felt. At least in some manner. "I'm very confused." She said finally. "I don't know what I feel. I have questions that need answers and I don't know who to turn for them."

"What questions?" Paga asked her.

"Everything... everything I have been raised to believe is... it's like it is turning out to be a lie." Caliria spoke.

"Is it turning out to be a lie, or is it because your perceptions of everything you believed are changing?" Paga asked.

"What do you mean?" Caliria asked.

Paga leaned against the counter. "You have seen things that very few of your people have seen. You have experienced things that few of your people have. You are not a stupid woman Caliria... you could not be and done what you have."

"I've done nothing." Caliria said.

"Haven't you?" Paga asked her. "I heard Eliani talking to her mother Queen Anja before we left Sparta; about the counteragent you developed." She said. "The Queen believed that given another two weeks time you would have figured out the last pieces of the puzzle without any help. That is why she was able to fashion the counteragent so quickly. You had already done the majority of the work on it. Doing that... discovering that... it tells me you are driven and independent and confident. Despite your people looking down on you because of the color of your hair. Which is incredibly short sighted on their part in my humble opinion."

"Then why... why am I so confused about everything? About my family, my feelings about your people, my feelings about... about Androcles." Caliria asked her.

"Are you truly confused... or are you frightened?" Paga asked.

"Frightened?" Caliria asked.

Paga nodded. "Frightened to let your true self come through after what happen to you." She said. "Caliria... you were kidnapped. Taken from everything you know. You were drugged and forced to submit to men who only wanted to use you."

Caliria shook her head. "My people have a much less reverent look at our sexuality. What happened to me does not bother me as much as you think."

"Doesn't it?" Paga asked her gently. "Then you were rescued and suddenly you have Androcles and the others telling you that you belong with them. That you have always belonged with them and they have seen this in their minds and their dreams. Mindvoice is a funny thing to those of us who are Tier Six users and even stranger to those like Androcles and his father who cannot even be measured. We see things. We feel things. Sometimes we don't understand them right away... but eventually it all makes sense."

"I'm not like you and them though." Caliria said.

"Yes... you are." Paga answered. "You may not realize it yet, but if you sensed Andro when he was talking to you within Mindvoice over such a great distance then you are more like us than you think. And that frightens you. Especially considering all you have been raised to believe about my people. Lycavorians. It terrifies you. I see it in your eyes Caliria... what they made you feel... what he made you feel. It goes against everything you were ever taught doesn't it?"

"Being with them... with him... it was the most divine experience of my life." Caliria told her softly. "I saw him... I saw him kill with the same hands he stroked my body with. I quivered in bliss when he was inside me... I..."

Paga nodded. "And all these things come into direct conflict with how your mind tells you it should be." She said. "How you have been raised and schooled to believe. Do you think you could feel what he made you feel with another?"

Caliria looked at her. "I don't know." She answered. "Why not?"

Paga shrugged her shoulders. “Why not indeed?” She asked. “Perhaps you could. But would it be the same? Caliria... did you lay with Androcles and Sadi and the others because you wanted too, or because you felt obligated for some reason?”

“Obligated?” Caliria asked. “No!”

“Then you laid with them because deep down you were looking beyond what you have been taught to believe and seeing things how they truly were for the first time? And what you were seeing is that you did belong to them... just as they told you and that frightened you terribly.” Paga said.

“Why would that frighten me?” Caliria asked.

“Because for all of your life you have done things on your own. Alone. Perhaps seeing what you might have with them terrified you because it showed you that you would never be alone. That you don’t have to be alone.” Paga said. “And that shook you right down to your toes.”

“Then how... how do I fix this?” Caliria asked. “How do I get past the part he is so much younger than me? How do I get past the part that he can kill without blinking. Without remorse or regret? That is part of your people’s history. His history. And how do I get past the part that I would have to share him with four other women that I hardly know?”

Paga leaned over the counter slowly. “You don’t believe that and I know you don’t. You have seen inside his mind Caliria. He holds the memories and experiences of his father and of his grandfather. In many respects he is far older than you.”

Caliria lowered her head. “I know.” She said softly.

“Do you think that Androcles Leonidas is simply a killer?” Paga asked gently. “Is that what you consider him? A killer? Do you consider me a killer?”

“I don’t know.” Caliria said softly.

Paga drained her juice. “During the Evolli War I was assigned to a Scout Unit.” She told her. “A Scout Sniper Unit. This was before I became a member of the Durcunusaan. I was the sniper. One hundred and fifty-nine kills. Nine of them senior Evolli Generals. I remember each and every one of them. Do I regret them? No. We were at war and the Evolli were trying to kill my friends and my people. Do I feel remorse? Of course I do. But that will not keep me from defending what I know and feel to be right.” Paga said. “If you question whether he feels regret and remorse, I suggest you ask him Caliria. He considers you his wife and mate. He would never lie to you.”

“All men lie.” Caliria said.

Paga shook her head. “No Lycavorian would lie to one who he considers his wife and mate. It is not the nature of the men among our people to do such a thing. To them it is a breach of the honor they feel for having their wives and mates. Especially those males who were born and raised in Sparta as Androcles was.”

“Paga I...”

“You want to know him Caliria?” Paga asked. “Go to Denali. Ask Denali to tell you of Alba Tau. If you truly want to learn what drives Androcles... what type of man he is... and how he can love you as he does... ask Denali about Alba Tau.”

Caliria shook her head. “What is that?” She asked.

“A time.” Paga answered. “A place. A forging ground and a nightmare. It will not give you all the answers you seek, but it will put quite a bit in perspective. The rest... the rest is a conflict that you must resolve yourself. It is a conflict inside you and no one can help you with that.”

Caliria stared at her for a long moment. “Thank you Paga.” She said finally.

Paga nodded and smiled. “Your father is expecting us at 1000 hours in his office. He seems very eager to discover what is going on. I also saw that you have several messages on your COM unit. I think you are more popular than you think.”

Caliria chuckled and shook her head. “I doubt that.” She said.

“Shall I make additional for you?” She asked pointing to the pan of enticingly ripe and sweet strips of meat.

Caliria nodded her head as she got up. “Yes. I find myself famished all of a sudden.” She said. “I will go and check these messages.”

Caliria moved across the main room to the far wall where her COM panel was and sat in the comfortable high backed chair. She keyed in her ID and looked at the screen as the list of seven messages came up with different subjects. Five of the seven were from different staff members at the university welcoming her back. One was from Yssyla requesting they get together as soon as possible and the seventh didn't have a subject. Intrigued, Caliria tapped that one and watched as it opened to reveal the handsome face she knew well. Her green eyes grew wide and she felt her heart slam into her chest as she saw that face. The last face she had seen before she had been taken.

Franklin Adams.

The Eridiani man she had been dating before she was taken.

Caliria typed on the console quickly and then his voice filtered to her softly.

"Caliria... if you get this please don't hang up!" He hurried. "I know what you must think... but it wasn't me! I swear to you! Why would I try to hurt you? I love you. I still love you. Please Caliria ... meet with me. Let me tell you in person that I love you. And that you are in danger."

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

Resumar groaned as Andro gave him a rib cracking embrace, but he gladly returned it as the happiness to be home was just beginning to hit him.

Andro looked around the guest bedroom turned office. "Where is Athani?" He asked.

Resumar chuckled. "Sadi and the others grabbed her before we got halfway in the door." He answered. "Andro... where is Dorian?"

Andro smiled and began to guide him out of the office. "He's on the patio with Ryner and Elynth."

"We saw it all Fervon." Resumar spoke as they walked. "It was... it was masterful."

Andro nodded. "I spoke with Manda about two hours ago. She'll be back within Union space shortly. Between what you and she were able to accomplish, and what we will do soon, it will buy us the time we need."

"Mother is back with father then?" Resumar asked. "Eirene and Fedor too?"

Andro nodded. "Yes. I'll fill you in on what he has planned later but..." Andro stopped when he saw Athani speaking with Sadi and holding her hands. Her blue/green eyes fell on him and she moved quickly to him.

Androcles embraced her tightly, feeling her tail twitch ever so slightly as it wrapped around his waist. "It is good to have you back home." He said pushing her to arms length and kissing her cheek affectionately. "Very good."

Athani's face beamed as she held his arms. "Home." Athani said. "It is so very good to be home."

"Pian? Jalersi?"

Athani nodded quickly. "Pian and Jalersi remained on the RAGE OF ACHILLES to monitor the extraction. Isra convinced them it could ruin they plan if either of them were spotted. They will return in a few more hours." Athani squeezed his arms tighter. "They will want to return Andro. Mican as well."

Andro nodded. "I know. There is a bunch of stuff we need to..."

"Andro... I don't understand how you..." Dorian's voice interrupted them as he walked into the villa holding the data pad. He stopped when he saw his brother Resumar and the others. Dorian had become comfortable around everyone in the family so far, Resumar being the only one he had not met. He glanced back and forth between Andro and him nervously, but it was Resumar who chased away any nervousness.

Resumar stepped right up to him and crushed him in an embrace that had Dorian beaming as he returned it. Resumar leaned back and grasped his face tightly, looking into his one dark brown eye and his one cobalt blue eye. It appeared the odd matching of his eye color was going to remain for a time. At least until the remains of the accelerated growth serum had been fully purged from his body.

Resumar was smiling as he held Dorian's head. "Welcome brother." He said. "It is so very good to finally meet you."

Dorian smiled but was really caught off guard for lack of words. He watched as Athani stepped up to him and took his hands while Resumar watched. She had a single tear rolling down her cheek as she squeezed his hands and leaned up to kiss his cheek.

“We... we saw what you did.” She stammered. “I don’t... you have cut the last tie to my old life Dorian Leonidas. I will... I will always be in your debt for that.”

“We don’t have debts in this family.” Dorian said with a smile. “You are my brother’s wife and mate. You owe me nothing.”

Andro stood beside Sadi and Ne’Veha with a smile. Resumar laughed and grabbed his brother’s shoulder. “Hah! How did you get so humble?” He demanded. “You didn’t learn that from him.” He chortled tossing a thumb pointing at Andro. Dorian laughed now as well as Resumar teased him and stepped close to put his arm over his brother’s shoulder. “You know... I got some really good...”

“Save it Res!” Andro exclaimed. “We all know about your special tricks. None of them work. All they did was get us in trouble as we grew up.”

“Hey... I tried!” Resumar declared. “Where’s Eli? Zarah?”

Andro moved closer. “I sent Carina back to Apo Prime for an accelerated Tactics Class. Zarah and Lucia are working with Thr’won at the moment. Knowing Eli, she’s probably still in bed with Jomann.”

Resumar’s eyes narrowed. “Jomann? Who’s Jomann? What happened to Malic?”

“You’ve been gone a long time fervon.” Andro said.

“Joa sibfla! I guess so!”

“Let’s get you two fed.” Sadi spoke moving forward to take Athani’s hands. “Everyone will be here in a few hours for a meeting.”

Andro turned when the Durcunusaan officer signaled him and he squeezed his brother’s arm. “I’ll join you shortly.” He said.

Resumar nodded as Sadi, Ne’Veha and Carisia began to pull them towards the kitchen area and Lu’ria snatched Dorian’s hand. Andro watched as the officer crossed through the main area of the villa and stopped.

“Milord... the Prime Minister and Val’istar Shiria are waiting in your office.” He said.

Andro looked at him. “Why?”

“The Prime Minister said it was important.” The officer spoke.

Andro nodded. “Very well.” He said with a sigh. “Tell KertaGai I will join them when I am done.”

The officer nodded and turned to move to the kitchen while Andro watched. He wondered if this happened to his father often. There was always something that needed his attention. Andro shook his head again.

“Being in charge really sucks.” He muttered under his breath as he headed for his makeshift office.

“What is this?” Androcles asked as he looked at the pad Deia had given him.

Deia and Shiria sat on the couch across from the large desk he walked around. The bay window offered a spectacular view of the Laconia Gulf and it’s blue green waters which always seemed to put him at ease.

“Shiria and I have been working on this for two days.” Deia said. “It is a preliminary plan which we will finalize and implement by the end of the week. We’ll need access to SPARTA’S WRATH and either Avi or the new Avatar 341. And one of the long range transports that she carries.”

“We? What plan?” Andro asked as he moved to his chair and sat down. “What is this all about Tenna?”

“It’s about the future Androcles.” Shiria spoke now.

“Why do the hairs on the back of my neck stand up when you say that Val’istar?” He asked.

“No doubt Wayonn is filling your father in, if he hasn’t already.” Shiria said. “You know what I’m talking about... I know your father has shared it with you and only you. I can see it in your face and sometimes in your actions. What he has felt. What Wayonn and I have felt.”

Andro leaned forward in the chair now. “I’m listening.” He said.

“Androcles... there is another reason Sumar did what he did.” Shiria spoke. “Integrating those Pralors who survived the crash of his ship with the Lycavorian people.”

“So the Pralor people would continue on in us.” Andro said. “I know Wayonn returned to Pralor space trying to determine why they could not make contact. He took twenty thousand people with him. He returned because the Scourge had already decimated three quarters of the Pralor Empire. When he returned the Coven had already conquered our planet. That is why he settled in the Beta Quadrant.”

Shiria and Deia both looked stunned at what Andro had just told them. “How... how do you know that?” Shiria gasped.

“My father had already begun deciphering several flashes of memory that belonged to my grandfather Sumar with Avi’s help.” Andro spoke. “When Wayonn arrived the flashes became more frequent and easier to decipher. There is very little my father keeps from me Val’istar.”

“What has he told you?” Shiria asked softly.

“That the Scourge as the Pralors called them were the ones that wiped out your empire.” Andro said. “It took thousands of years because you did not go down easily, but they succeeded in doing this.”

Shiria nodded her head solemnly. “I was the last to escape. The remaining Elder Pralors chose me to take VORTEX CRUISER 341 and escape. The Scourge were on the edge of our home system then. The last three planets we had. I escaped just days before their attack began with 341, the ship and every bit of information and history they could cram into the ship’s data cores. I tried to maintain contact after I left and I was successful for several weeks, then everything went silent and I knew they were lost.”

“You are the one who left the technology here on Earth.” Andro said. “You were the one who helped Arzoal when she needed it.”

Shiria nodded. “Wayonn discovered me some thousand years after I arrived in the Alpha Quadrant. He actually saved me from a Coven tracking team that was hunting me. After that I went into hiding among the Kavalian people.”

“And if Wayonn felt you... no doubt Xaxon did as well.” Andro spoke.

Shiria nodded. “That is what Wayonn believes and it’s also why the High Coven has fought two wars before this one with the Kavalians. They were looking for me.”

“Why?” Andro asked.

“Androcles... there were two wars with the Scourge.” Shiria said. “The first one is the reason Xaxon was punished in the manner he was. I will go into the details for you later, but what you need to know now, is that we beat them the first time because of a small group of Pralors who had a special gene within their bodies. A gene that allowed them to physically manifest their Etheric abilities as weapons. Just as you and your father and now Denali have done. They were the ones who stopped the Scourge the first time. They did stop them, but the war decimated the ranks of these people in the process. The crew on Sumar’s ship, among them were several hundred men and women who had this gene. It took Sumar decades to discover all of them, and then get them assigned to his ship.”

“Grandfather Sumar was one of these people I take it.” Andro asked. “With these special abilities?”

Shiria nodded. “Yes. He was... he was the first to be honest. He and Xaxon. The first and the most powerful. The closest term to describe them as I have told Deia is Paladins.”

Andro looked at her. “Holy Warriors? From Earth’s ancient past?”

Shiria nodded. Yes.”

“Val’istar... all of our people can Mindvoice.” Andro said.

Shiria nodded. “Yes you can. As can all vampires. There are several other known species with the galaxy that can as well, but the Lycavorians are the most numerous. Being able to Mindvoice however does not grant these special talents. It is why they will not become active in your brothers and sisters who are not pure like you and Denali. Like your father and mother. They will be extremely capable; don’t get me wrong, especially if they are schooled properly. Even stronger than they are now. But none of them will be able to do what you can. What your father and Denali can now do. I felt the spike in Etheric resonance when you attacked that place to rescue your Vanari mate. I felt the spike when your father rescued your mother. Sumar chose the men and women of his crew for a reason Androcles. He was going to take them and begin their training. He thought we had more time before the Scourge struck again. He was wrong. We did not expect to be betrayed either.”

“Betrayed?” Andro asked. “By Xaxon?”

Shiria shook her head. “There is one thing very few people know. It is the reason why Xaxon wanted to capture me. I have told Deia some of it... but not all.” She looked at him. “Now you need to know all of it.”

“I get the feeling that you are about to drop a very large fusion bomb on my head.” Andro said.

“My people... Pralors. We are seeders of life Androcles. Nothing pleased us more than seeing life we transplanted to dead worlds take hold and begin to grow and thrive. In order to do this we took life from other worlds.”

“And?” Andro asked.

“The vast majority of our people were scientists. Geneticists. Mathematicians. We altered genetics and bio-mechanics among other things to allow for species to live on worlds that they were not from originally.” Shiria said. “The Rothryn people that Denali has recently come in contact with... they are... they were a small part of our work. Life on their planet was not conducive to a four legged animal. We took samples from Lycavore and transplanted them, removing their ability to shift into wolf form.”

“So you played god.” Andro spoke though his words were not harsh or angry as Shiria expected them to be.

“Our intentions were never evil or corrupt Androcles.” Shiria said.

Andro nodded. “And that is the only reason I am still sitting here.” He spoke. “Forget the Rothryn for a moment. I’ll deal with that when the time comes. What about these people among grandfather’s crew?”

Shiria looked at him. “Obviously when Sumar chose them he was going to train them to replace what we had lost. I don’t know how far he got before the ship crashed on Lycavore. They had only been gone four years when that happened. The Elder Pralors knew what he was doing and that is why they sent Arzoal’s scout ship among several others looking for them. When Sumar’s crew began to infuse themselves within the Lycavorian people, this gene would have been passed down to their descendants. Even through many generations it would loss none of it potency. It is extremely rare... only one out of every trillion Pralors had it.”

“So you are saying this gene is out there now. Among the Lycavorian people?” Andro asked.

Shiria nodded. “Any descendant from the original group who merged with your people on Lycavore has the potential to carry this gene. Your father, you, now Denali, it is beginning to manifest itself now. Now that your use of this advanced Etheric power has begun, it will stir the resonance across the board. Others with this gene will feel it and begin to manifest powers as well.” She looked at him calmly. “Anyone who can Mindvoice has certain latent abilities to use telekinesis or minor abilities. Those bonded to dragons increases this ability far in excess of normal users. This gene however, once activated, it allows you to form true physical manifestations of Etheric power Androcles. The diamonds you throw from your hands, the physic knives you use? These are only the beginning as you have already discovered. As your father has discovered.”

Andro got to his feet and moved to the window staring out across the water. “He found Tomes on CS41. Avi helped him to decipher and understand them.” He said softly. “When he felt Elynth and I were ready he allowed me to use them as well.”

“These must be the tools that Sumar was going to use to train those he chose.” She said. “Where are they now?”

Andro turned back to face her. “They are hidden on a planet my father chose to take me to train.” He replied. “He had an entire facility built. I didn’t know why then.”

Shiria nodded. “Because he determined what the Tomes were for. He must have. Your father... he is... he is deciphering Sumar’s memories faster than I thought he would. He doesn’t act as I would have expected him to act knowing these things.” She looked at Deia. “It has to be the Spartan within him. The way of life his father led and that he has returned too. Plan. Evade. Destroy.”

Deia nodded. “With Andro being the exception, I believe there are many things even his wives and mates don’t know.”

Shiria looked at Andro. “Is this true?” She asked.

Andro turned to look at her. “In some respects yes.” He answered. “He figured out some of it on his own from the Tomes I’m sure. He’s not as stupid as people make him seem.”

Shiria shook her head. “No... he is far more intelligent and deadly than most see from his outward actions. I knew that immediately after meeting your brother.”

Andro moved back to his desk. “Why?” He asked. “My father has felt them clearly on three different occasions. I have sensed them fleetingly and never clearly. Why are they coming here?”

Shiria met his eyes. “Their only purpose is to eradicate anything or anyone with Pralor blood.”

“Why?” Andro asked more forcefully. “There has to be a reason!”

Shiria took a deep breath. “There is.” She said.

“Then share it with me now.” Andro said. “I have initiated a war with the Kavalian people because of what they have done to my family and my people. Now tell me why I must commit resources to this and take them away from the war we fight now.”

“This war with the Kavalians?” Shiria said softly. “It is nothing. A footnote in history that will fade from memory very quickly. What you have done with the High Coven however, that will resonate for much longer.”

“This war with the Kavalians has already led me to kill millions! It is not a footnote! Not to me! Now tell me why Val’istar?” Andro snapped. “No more riddles and words meant to make me think! Tell me why!”

Shiria looked at him. “The Scourge are an insectoid like race. They were common to a system on the edge of Pralor space that was void of any real life other than bacteria when we first discovered it. Xaxon and his crew discovered the planets first. He disregarded all protocols we had established for First Contact and went to the surface of their main planet. He tried to make contact without really knowing what he was doing and the Scourge massacred his First Contact team because they had stumbled into an egg cache. To get revenge Xaxon began the first war by wiping out nearly a billion of their eggs in an orbital bombardment. The fool didn’t know that the Scourge had space faring vessels until they attacked.”

“That explains why he got the treatment he did.” Andro spoke. “Why do the Scourge hate anything having to do with the Pralors?”

“Xaxon wasn’t punished for that.” Shiria spoke. “He was punished for using our genetic technology to perform brutal experiments on a several dozen Scourge that he had captured some years later. These experiments included Pralor subjects that had no idea what he planned.”

“Oh... I don’t like where this is going.” Deia said softly.

“He fused the minds of three dozen Pralor subjects into the bodies of Scourge warriors.” Shiria spoke. “The process was supposed to help them to understand the Scourge and perhaps find a way to defeat them quickly. The only problem was he did not tell Pralor subjects the process was irreversible. It drove them mad. Insane. When they escaped containment is when we found out what he had done. Don’t you see? He discovered that the Scourge are sensitive to Etheric power. Specifically the power this gene could generate. It took five hundred years, but we used that knowledge to train Sumar and the others. They defeated the Scourge but at the cost of nearly their entire contingent of Paladins. The problem was not that we had won, it was the fact that these experiments were able to make their way back to Scourge space and rejoin with the colonies there. Their minds were intact Androcles. Filled with horrible hate and rage at what had been done to them. Hate and rage towards Xaxon and anything Pralor. They spent the next several millennia turning the Scourge into something they were not. They swore to purge the galaxy of anything Pralor. Any kind of technology, any living being with Pralor blood. They swore the most terrible kind of vengeance. Genocide.”

Andro returned to his chair and sat down slowly. “And when father fired up CS41’s engines twenty-seven years ago?”

Shiria nodded. “They undoubtedly detected it. Wayonn and I can feel them because they were once Pralors. Like whispers in our dreams. We knew they were coming... but after what you did by bringing the High Coven together they just stopped.”

“Why?” Andro asked.

“I don’t know.” Shiria spoke. “What matters is this. There is no reasoning with them. There is no talking to them. They have stopped now... but they will come. We created them Androcles. My people created the beings that destroyed us. And now... now we are threatened once more because of the nature of evolution and the Lycavorians having Pralor blood within them.”

“And if we do nothing...” Andro began.

Shiria nodded. “Then this war with the Kavalians, all your father has done, all your people have done? None of it will matter. When the Scourge arrived they will come here intending to kill everyone and everything with even an iota of Pralor blood. When they are finished, as they left our species, they will leave nothing of Lycavorians. Barely anything to show you existed at all.”

Andro was silent for a long moment and then he looked at Deia. The decision was simple for him.

“Tenna... you will have what you need. All of it.” He told her.

CHAPTER EIGHTY-FOUR

CABELIR FOUR DAYS POST DECLARATION OF WAR

The Center within the Command Compound was once more filled with Kavalian officers, having been declared safe the day before after a thorough search of every possible hiding place for enemies and bombs of any kind. Many of the gathered men were still in a state of shock at what had transpired over the last three days and all of them knew their leader was not in any way happy. Keleru stood in front of the large window staring out over the compound itself. Smoke still trickled into the air from where the wall had been destroyed and the Secondary Command Center reduced to burnt rubble. Kattu stood to the side once more with a handful of data pads waiting to answer whatever questions his uncle may have had. Caruma'Pameni and Diseno'Sessi sat beside one another, since they were now senior, the other Admirals and Pride Leaders not daring to speak.

With a heavy sigh Keleru turned back to his military and Pride leaders and looked at them. He had acted rashly he now knew. He had thought them untouchable here on Cabelir. The High Coven had never staged so bold an attack even with their Shroud capable ships, and it was now painfully obvious that the Union Shrouds were far better than the ones employed on Coven ships. The Lycavorian Union also had officers and leaders who were far more daring and capable it seemed. Keleru'Puat did not reach his position by being foolish. His anger had cost them dearly. Admiral Liatthi and his force were now licking their wounds and hiding outside Coven space. They had poured across the High Coven border expecting to be met by a handful of High Coven Fleet Groups as their intelligence had told them. Keleru should have known the son would have laid a trap for them. They had witnessed Liatthi fighting a losing battle almost from the start. Ten Lycavorian Union Fleet Groups had joined with the five Coven Fleet Groups to pulverize the invading Kavalian force badly, led by that vampire Admiral Pontal who had been a thorn in their sides for over a decade. If all their reports were accurate, it would also seem that the Union Admiral of the Fleet Riall had been in joint command with Pontal. The name Riall was well known among the Kavalian officers, and their combined experience and leadership had decimated the Kavalian Task Force.

Liatthi had led bravely and well, but in the end the surprising coordination and power of the front line Union ships began to simply wear down the Kavalian forces. Keleru had never expected the Lycavorian Union and High Coven to blend so easily together. Fighter squadrons from both sides had swept in against Kavalian forces using flanking tactics and in some cases brute force. They fought side-by-side as if they had been fighting like this for centuries. The Union ships maneuvered and fought with High Coven ships within their ranks, and vice versa. The hated vampire Admiral Pontal himself had led a daring strike into the heart of the Kavalian Task Force with a hundred ships, half of them Union. They had jumped directly into the center of the rear of the Task Force and decimated the follow on Fleet Groups with missiles and long range batteries, jumping away before the superior numbers of the Kavalian Task Force could respond and destroy them. It was almost as if they knew what the Kavalians would do.

Keleru knew that was not possible. Androcles Leonidas had outsmarted him, and while that fact burned Keleru's pride he knew that Androcles had others around him that simply reeked with experience fighting against superior odds. The Union leaders were well versed in such tactics and the High Coven Commanders appeared to be learning very quickly. After sixteen hours of battle Liatthi had done the only thing he could do and he retreated back across the border with barely half his Task Force intact. The man had actually asked to be allowed to kill himself for his failure, but Keleru had long before that regained his emotions. He refused Liatthi's ridiculous request and ordered the man to return to the space they controlled and to reform his forces. Keleru was not about to throw away experienced men because they had failed at something he had ordered gripped in his savage anger.

He looked at his leaders, men who had been with him for years. Loyal to him and his goals. He stepped back up to the table slowly.

"I allowed my anger at events to override my good sense." He finally spoke. "Many of you in this very room have cautioned through the years that attacking the Union would not be the same as fighting the High Coven. They are a different breed you told me. I didn't listen and now we have paid for my foolishness. We will pay no more.” Keleru returned to his chair and looked at the men. “It has been nearly two thousand years since I have picked up a weapon and fought. It is you in this room who have done that. I should have listened to you. I will take the blame for everything that has happened and now we must decide what to do.”

Keleru’s admission was a surprising relief for the men in the room, but something all of them had expected. Their leader was not a fool, and they were loyal to him because of this. Unfortunately... the last few days had not been kind to the Kavalian Federation. They had won many more battles than they had lost against the High Coven, and all of them had become drunk with the victories. They all thought of themselves as unbeatable. That was not the case as they all now knew. Their losses just in the last three days had surpassed their combined losses in the last ten years of war with the High Coven.

Keleru turned to Kattu. “Nephew... tell us what has happened?”

Kattu stepped forward. “Uncle... Admirals.” He spoke. “As we all know, Admiral Liatthi is now holding position 1.2 Light Years Spaceward of Ukwav. The combined High Coven and Union forces have retaken some territory, but they stopped after reclaiming ten light years. As best we are able to discern right now, they are beginning to send out ground forces to the few colonies that we conquered. Our forces there are cut off and there is no way to help them. We must consider them lost.”

“How many colonies Kattu?” Keleru asked.

“Six major colony worlds Uncle. Four minor resource worlds.” Kattu answered. “To include the populations of those worlds and colonies. We have lost perhaps two thirds of the gains we made in and around Ukwav. The garrison forces there will fight, but they will be eliminated as superior firepower and numbers are brought to bear on them.”

“Coven and Union losses?” Caruma asked.

“No where near as severe as our own.” Kattu spoke. “As you all know... Union ships are built from day one to take enormous damage and still be able to function. Their technology has increased this trait. Many of the Union ships shielded Coven warships as the Coven pummeled Admiral Liatthi’s ships with long range missiles before he was able to close within weapons range. The Union ships, especially their LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers, proved superior in many ways that we were not aware. Their tactics were quick and brutally efficient strikes against the flanks of our Task Force, followed up with major engagements right into the hearts of our formations. All of their ships are far more maneuverable than anything we had thought. Their coordination was the tipping point. No matter what we tried we could not breach their defensive line. The Union has extensively upgraded their ships and fighters it appears. More so than anything our intelligence detected.”

Keleru looked at him. “What of the ships that struck our force in the Farnuri Expanse?” He asked.

“The logs of all twenty-three frigates that returned show the same thing Uncle.” Kattu answered. “A massive seven kilometer long ship the likes of which we have never seen before. Its weapons and missiles were far superior to anything we have. From logs and what sensor data the frigates were able to obtain, the weapons seem to be some sort of Quantum Fusion based power source. Even fully shielded ships were torn asunder.”

“And the ships that struck at Dalean and Kranek?” Caruma asked.

“They appear to be based, at least in some way, off this single large ship involved with the Farnuri Massacre. Power signatures were similar in many instances.” Kattu answered. “It just suddenly appeared within the field of battle and began firing. It’s technology is far more than anything we have.”

“It’s obvious the Union has developed new ships and technology that we did not know they have. It is only one ship though.” Diseno spoke. “Prefect... can this traitor Laustinos tell us anything?”

Keleru looked at him. “I have already sent for him.” He answered. “He has been hiding at Gellen Station since the destruction of the Icalro Alliance. I offered him anything he wanted to provide us as much information as he could. As much as I hate him as the traitor he is, now we need to use what he can tell us.”

“Can he be trusted?” Caruma asked.

Kattu stepped closer. “Androcles Leonidas has issued a bounty on his head of nearly fifty million credits. His only chance at surviving is within Kavalian space and he knows it. He will help us. He still may have connections that we can use as well.”

“I misjudged this boy Prince.” Keleru spoke. “I expected him to be like his father. I was wrong. His father never would have destroyed the Dregir Moon to stop our invasion from Uirmeik.” Keleru sat back. “No. I do not know that either. They are like rabid animals and we can not predict what they will do.”

Kattu placed the data pad on the table next to him. "Destroying the moon as he did has rendered all LSD travel through that sector of space impossible. The adjoining sectors are less affected, but the gravitational fluxes created by the destruction of the moon will be random and unable to detect. They could suddenly appear and swallow an entire Fleet. The risks involved in traversing this area now have become unacceptable."

"Do not think he didn't know this." Caruma spoke. "Now... if we invade the Union from anywhere along this border they will see us coming long before we could strike. The fools in the Consortium and Limian governments will warn the Union as soon as any of our ships are detected crossing through their space. And the Union can reinforce any part of their side of this border in hours. That does not include the Defense Network they have installed along these sectors."

"Pull them back Prefect." Diseno spoke softly. "Pull them back out of the Union's Border Network Sensor Array's range."

"We should keep them there." Caruma spoke in disagreement. "Have the Union keep forces aligned against them so we can attack in other places."

Diseno shook his head. "No Caruma. That is what they want us to do." He stated. "Then they know where a good portion of our forces are. Pull them back so that we can regroup. There are far too many unknowns to deal with right now."

Kattu nodded. "I agree with Admiral Diseno Uncle." He spoke quickly. He bowed his head. "Forgive me... if I may speak among the Pride Leaders."

Keleru looked at the men around the table. "He can do no worse than those of us here is that not true my friends? Perhaps a younger, fresher perspective is warranted now." The officers nodded amongst themselves and Keleru looked at Kattu. "Continue nephew."

Kattu nodded and moved to the large star chart that occupied the wall. "The Lycavorian Union is not a military state as we are. The actions Androcles Leonidas has taken are those of someone who wants time." He said. "And for all intents and purposes he has achieved that. By destroying the moon and effectively sealing this portion of their border and then destroying a large portion of our front line warships, as well as our main cloning facilities on Dalean, he has effectively bought them six months."

"Six months!" Caruma declared.

"That is how long it will take our other cloning facilities to produce the ones lost on Dalean." Kattu spoke evenly. "And our shipyards to replace the losses we have already suffered at their hands."

"So we allow them six months to build their forces?" Caruma asked with less hostility.

"It also gives us six months to replace what we have lost Admiral. And time to try and discover if they have more of these seven kilometer long ships." Kattu spoke. "Where did they get this technology? It is obvious that at least some of their ships are using technology derived from this unknown ship. Where did this ship come from? It is obviously alien in origin. How else do you explain the ability of their forces to drive so deep into Kavalian space undetected? We have underestimated them Admiral... and it has cost us dearly. This also may be connected in some way to the Empress Aikiro's actions. Now is not the time to continue to underestimate them."

"Kattu is right." Diseno spoke. "Think Caruma my friend. One ship and a small Union task force obliterated six hundred of our front line ships in minutes! Minutes! What if they have more of these ships?"

"Why would that witch have anything to do with what is happening now?" Another Admiral asked.

"What the Coven did on Earth was out of character for them sir." Kattu spoke. "She risked her life and those of her daughter and her lover for a reason. They went to Earth for a reason."

"To have the Union train their damnable beasts!" Another spoke.

"That was only part of it Admiral Werra." Kattu said. "If all they wanted was the Union to train their dragons they could have sent an envoy. The Empress went herself. Why? She obviously was not prepared for what would happen. And she underestimated not only King Leonidas and his son, but the intentions of her own family."

"If the King still lives where is he?" Caruma asked.

"He does still live." Keleru stated. "Commander Popal contacted me again as they arrived at Talbor Seven. Leonidas is confirmed through Kalis to be the one who rescued the elf Queen For'mya. He is alive. Though his location now is suspect."

“There is another reason we must use this time just as the Union is going to use it Uncle.” Kattu spoke. “Rape is among the most heinous of crimes you can commit within the Union. The rape of a sitting Queen as they have accused Marshall Pusintin... this will incite their people beyond anything else. We have seen that with the acceptance of Androcles Leonidas’s actions in their very Senate chamber.”

“Another question?” Diseno asked. “What did he do to Matuarr? This power he used to crush him like that? I have never seen anything like it.”

“And they gutted Qurot like an animal!” Another Admiral spoke harshly.

“We are not fighting the High Coven now.” Kattu spoke. “The Lycavorian Spartans will not retreat. They will fight to the death and take as many of our soldiers with them as they can before they fall. This drive... this spirit has infected all of their military. We will face it from the front line soldier and even from the lowliest technician. We must move with care Uncle. We must plan our assaults with care and guile. And we must have the forces to do so. We hold a nearly a four to one advantage now, but we need at least five to one if we are to invade the Union and gain any ground.”

Keleru sat back in his chair. “Then we will use the time just as they will.” He stated. “Caruma... redeploy the forces around Uirmeik into staging areas outside the Union’s Border Sensor Network. Put them back into a training mode and drill them mercilessly.” Keleru looked at Diseno. “I want you to reinforce Liatthi. Send him everything that we can spare right now. We can not afford to lose the space he occupies.”

Diseno nodded. “As you order Prefect.” He spoke.

“When Pusintin returns to full health he will undoubtedly have more for us to do.” Keleru spoke. “Order our other cloning facilities to increase their production and our shipyards into full war time mode. I want our losses replaced in six months.”

“Do we try to communicate with them diplomatically?” Another Admiral asked.

Kattu looked at his uncle. “This could be a good tool to try and confuse them Uncle.” He stated.

Keleru shook his head. “The son will not be fooled, but it may just work in taking away support from within their Senate.”

“We have Lycavorians that we have reached out to before Prefect.” Caruma spoke. “Maybe we could use them now as well.”

Keleru nodded. “Indeed. I want full reports from all of your Prides and the Prides you command. We will meet every week from here on out. Any new information I receive I will insure reaches you as soon as it comes across my desk.” He got to his feet. “One week from now we will return here and begin to plan the downfall of the Lycavorian Union.”

“What of the High Coven Prefect?” Diseno asked. “Do we continue operations against them?”

“That could incite reprisals from the Union.” Caruma spoke. “They obviously have made it clear they are willing to fight beside one another.”

“The majority of our forces intended for use against the Coven are not factored into our overall fleet forces intended for use against the Union. We can still use them to keep the Union and the Coven guessing by conducting small raids and attacks within High Coven space.” Diseno continued. “It will incite reprisals yes... but it would also look odd if we did nothing at all.”

Keleru nodded. “I agree Diseno. Make it happen but do not waste these forces. When the time comes... we will turn everything against the Union and we will wipe both of them from existence.”

EARTH GYTHEIO ELIANI’S VILLA

Even with all that was happening around them, Eliani was still amazed at the peace and comfort she found in Jomann’s arms. They were sitting on the patio of her spacious villa as the sun was just beginning to break the horizon over the Laconia Gulf. They were both naked, as they usually were within her villa, Eliani sitting between his long legs and her bare back pressed against his chest with one of his legs bent at the knee. She was feeding them from a platter of leftover food they had gotten from dinner with his parents the previous night. Eliani was half Hadarian yes, but her father's blood was dominant within her veins and it allowed her to feel things that many Hadarian's who had been turned could not, simply because of the purity of that blood.

That she and Jomann were truly Anomes was something Eliani would never forsake. Could never forsake. It was an incredibly rare occurrence in history when males or females not of pure Lycavorian blood became anomes. When they did however, it showed a connection and calling that their blood could not deny. The way Jomann could make her blood churn with desire and passion with just with a simple nuzzle upon her neck made Eliani realize that what Andro had told her so many times through the years was true. She was different. Half wolf, half Hadarian and very different indeed because of her blood and to a lesser degree of when she was conceived.

As Jomann's lips grazed the back of her neck ever so softly, pushing aside her long Burgundy red hair, she smiled in wistful delight as tiny shivers coursed through her. She picked up one of the large Yiouvarlakia, ancient style Greek meatballs, within her fingers and lifted it over her shoulder. With a growl Jomann bit it in half and then she tossed the other half into her mouth and they both chewed as his powerful arms encircled her and pulled her closer against his bare chest. She loved it when his powerful arms crushed her to him, the skin of their bodies pressing close and touching in all the right spots. His aura, so powerful and dominant, swirled around her always now. Jomann was not the largest man Eliani had ever slept with, but Jomann's cock was certainly the thickest and had impressive length nonetheless. His skill was that he knew just how to use it, which was not the case with most well equipped men. Every time he was inside her, Eliani found herself quivering in delight the entire time.

Eliani tilted her head upward a little and looked at his handsome face. A face she would see for eternity now. "When are you going to move the rest of your things in?" She asked him finally.

"Soon." He said in reply.

Eliani sensed something in his voice and reached up with her hand to turn his face towards hers until his blue eyes were gazing at her intently. "What is wrong?" She asked him softly.

"Nothing." He answered.

"Jomann... you can't lie to me." Eliani said. "It's because of Malic isn't it?"

Jomann looked at her. "Malic?" He gasped. Jomann chuckled. "No... Eliani my love. It is not because of Malic. You think I feel threatened by Malic?"

"I would hope not." Eliani said with a grin. "He was never able to do to me what you do."

Jomann chuckled again and lowered his face to hers, slowly drawing his lips across hers. Eliani's four inch long Hadarian tongue snaked out to lick at his lips as he did. Jomann caught her tongue within his teeth for a brief second as he knew she loved and then he reached up and drew a finger over her lips and cheeks. "I did... I did not want to move all of my things here because I wanted us to purchase the home we will share into the future."

"Here in Gytheio?" She asked.

Jomann nodded. "There are some newer homes on the bluffs." He told her. "I have saved enough to buy one."

"Jomann... you don't have to do it all alone." Eliani said.

"I won't be." He said with a smile. "I will have you with me. I wish to honor what I told your mother I would do Eli. Material possessions like in the past mean nothing to your father as a way of a gift for allowing me to claim you. What I can do is show them that I will care for you and love you with all that I am. Part of that is providing a home for you that suits you and the family we will have one day."

Eliani stared at him with fern green eyes and felt the love wash through her. "Family huh?" She quipped. Jomann nodded. "Of course."

"I want four children at least." Eliani told him. "Possibly six."

Jomann chuckled as he pulled her closer. "I see you have been thinking about this as well?"

Eliani squeezed his arms around her. "I'm a woman. Of course I've thought about this." She stated.

"You know... we should..." The chime on the door interrupted him and they both looked towards the door as the chime sounded again.

"Were we too noisy last night?" Jomann asked playfully.

Eliani laughed as she got to her feet. "You did have me howling quite loudly." She said. "Stay right there. I will be right back after I ditch whoever is there."

Jomann watched with passion filled blue eyes as her naked form crossed into the living room and she grabbed for the thin, nearly transparent robe on the arm of the couch. She pulled it around her as she moved down the short corridor to her main door. She passed her hand over the console and waited while the door slid open. Her fern green eyes grew wide when she saw the tall figure of Brendi Faith standing at the door. The rich auburn colored hair and stunning brown eyes made Eliani shudder involuntarily as she quickly closed the robe around her naked body.

“Brendi?” Eliani stammered.

Brendi for her part stared at Eliani Leonidas with stunned shock at how she had answered her door and what she was wearing. Her eyes caught a glimpse of Eliani’s breasts and Brendi glanced down for some reason, seeing a small tattoo on her hip and then her completely bald womanhood before Eliani closed the robe. Brendi brought her eyes up quickly, her mind confused as to why she suddenly felt flush and her skin tingled. Eliani’s burgundy colored hair looked wild and unkempt, her fern green eyes so very delightful and inviting. She shook her head quickly, remembering why she was here.

“Eliani Leonidas I need your help.” Brendi gasped finally.

Eliani didn’t hesitate and reached out for her hand drawing her into the villa. “Brendi! How... how did you get off Cranae Island without an escort?” She asked quickly. “How did you find our villa?”

“Eliani... my sister... my sister Nicolle is missing.” Brendi blurted ignoring her rapid fire questions.

“Missing?” Eliani stated. “What do you mean missing?”

“She is... she is gone from her room!” Brendi hissed softly. “She must have snuck out after Tasha went to sleep! She’s gone!”

“Are you sure? How did she get off the island?” Eliani asked as she pulled her further into the villa.

“I don’t know!” Brendi exclaimed. “You must help me find her! You must...”

Brendi looked up when she saw Jomann move quickly from the patio and back into the villa. Her eyes grew even wider when she saw he was completely naked and exposed for her gaze. Brendi’s eyes dropped and grew even wider when she saw his flaccid but still incredibly large cock. At least it was the largest she had ever seen in her life.

“Eli... what...?” Jomann skidded to a halt as he entered and saw Brendi beside Eliani. Her emotions had spiked and he had rushed back into the villa to discover what was wrong. “Sibfla!” He exclaimed finally as he yanked the small blanket from the couch and wrapped it around his waist.

Eliani immediately darted over in front of him to help him cover himself before looking into his face. “Nicolle got off the island somehow.” She said. “She’s missing!”

“What?” Jomann gasped looking at Brendi. “How? How did you get off the island?”

“I told... I told the Durcunusaan at the bridge that you had sent for me.” Brendi Faith explained quickly. “He just let me go!”

“He just let you go?” Jomann snarled. “I will have his...”

Jomann no! Eliani exclaimed within Mindvoice. I... I might have left word with the guards to let her come here if she... if she requested it.

Jomann met her eyes. Might have?

Ok... ok. I did. There is something about her Jomann. I... I want to be her friend. I want her to know she can talk to me. To us. Eliani urged.

Jomann looked at her beautiful fern green eyes and saw something within them that matched what he felt when looking at Brendi Faith. We will discuss this later. He spoke quickly to her. He looked up at Brendi. “Where did you see her last?”

“Her room on the island!” Brendi answered. “I need to find her. If my parents discover she is gone they will...”

Jomann shook his head. “Wait here. We will find her.” He stated before turning and heading for the bedroom.

Eliani looked at her. “Don’t leave Brendi!” She spoke. “We’ll find her... but we need to keep you with us too! Two minutes!”

Brendi nodded her head knowing she wouldn’t leave. She could not find Nicolle alone and she knew it. Brendi didn’t know why, but her first thought had been to come here. To find Eliani and Jomann. Something within her said they would help her without question. She didn’t understand it, she only acted.

“I’m not going anywhere.” She stated.
Eliani turned and followed Jomann.

Jomann looked out over the gulf from where he squatted on the beach. He had tracked Nicolle by her scent to the edge of the ocean here. Eliani and Brendi stood to his side as he rose to his feet slowly.

“She came to this beach and her prints and scent stop here.” He stated. “Can Nicole swim?”

Brendi nodded. “Yes. She’s an excellent swimmer but...”

“But from here it’s nearly a mile across the gulf to the shore in Gytheio.” Eliani said.

Jomann looked at them. “She wasn’t alone.” He said. He motioned to the sand. “Wolf prints. Good size. About two hundred pounds. Given the depression I’d saw late teens early twenties.”

Eliani looked at him. “A Lycavorian?” She asked with surprise.

Jomann nodded his head. “A Durcunusaan. One I know well.” He answered. “Only a Durcunusaan could move along the shores without raising suspicion.”

“One of your people took my sister?” Brendi gasped.

Jomann looked at her. “No one took your sister Brendi.” He stated. “She meets the wolf’s prints here. Then there are a male’s prints and hers walking in circles. Several rotations at least. They were deciding what to do.” He pointed towards the water. “They enter the water together, side-by-side.”

Brendi moved closer to him. “She wasn’t forced?”

Jomann shook his head. “No.”

“Oh I am so going to skewer her when we find her!” Brendi snapped.

“Brendi... what do you mean?” Eliani asked.

Brendi looked at her. “Nicolle is the more adventurous of my sisters! She mentioned to me a week ago how she had seen this Durcunusaan walking the perimeter of our building and she talked to him. She said he was very polite and very handsome but he seemed sad.”

Jomann lifted his arm. “Durcunusaan Control from Captain Jomann.” He spoke.

“Go for Control First!” The voice answered.

“Who was on duty last night at the guest villas?” Jomann asked.

“Enomotarch Carna and Phylearch Mento. I relieved them myself with Phylearch Harda at 2400 hours.” The voice answered.

Jomann looked at Eliani and Brendi with a slight nod. “Mento.” He spoke softly. “I knew it was him I smelled. A fast riser within the Durcunusaan. Come... your sister is in no danger.” He spoke.

“Where are we going?” Brendi asked.

“Mento lives with his parents in Gytheio. They are very wealthy and have built several stores in Sparta and on Apo Prime for their fine crafts. Their villa is one of the largest here in Gytheio where they are less well known.” He answered. “He will have taken her there.”

“To his parent’s home?” Brendi gasped. “Does he plan on forcing himself upon her in his parent’s home? My sister has only just turned nineteen!”

Jomann stepped in front of her quickly his fangs bared in anger now. Eliani stepped closer and placed her hand on his arm as Brendi backed up in surprise. “And Mento is only twenty-four!” He hissed. “Do not speak of what you do not know Brendi Faith! He has been in my team since he became a Phylearch. A Sergeant of Spartans! He is one of the finest soldiers I have ever led! He would never do such as you think! Never!”

“Jomann... my love.” Eliani spoke softly.

“Mento returned to our unit just after the attacks on the Senate Building.” Jomann spoke as his anger bled off quickly with Eliani’s touch on his arm. “He has been... he has been dealing with injuries he suffered.”

Eliani looked at him. “What injuries?”

Jomann met her gaze. “Injuries he sustained at Alba Tau.” Jomann lifted his arm and traced a line down his side starting at his neck and ending at his waist. “Mento stepped in front of an Evolli blade intended to kill Anicetus. The blade opened him from his neck to his waist! He saved Anicetus that night. He saved us all.”

Jomann looked at her. “You said your sister told you she spoke with him?”

Brendi nodded. “Yes.” She looked at Jomann. “What is Alba Tau?”

Jomann shook his head. "That is not possible. The Evolli blade cut so deeply into his neck that it paralyzed his vocal cords. He has not spoken a single word since that day."

"Nicolle wouldn't lie to me!" Brendi snapped.

"And one of my men would not force himself upon any woman!" Jomann barked. "Come and see for yourself!"

Eliani took her hand as Jomann began to walk across the sand. "She is safe." Eliani said softly.

"What did I say?" Brendi asked.

"Alba Tau is... it was a battle." Eliani said. "Well... more like a slaughterhouse really. The men and women that fought there saw terrible things. Horrible things. It was eighteen hours of the most monstrous hell you could imagine. Those who lived through it... well... they are different. Jomann. Andro. My father. It was a place that crushed those who were not ready. And those that survived left a piece of themselves there. They do not talk of it lightly, if at all."

"Eliani... I didn't mean to hurt his feelings." Brendi spoke honestly.

Eliani nodded. "I know. Come... if Jomann says we will find Nicolle there... then that is where we will find them."

GYTHEIO MENTO FAMILY VILLA

The older Lycavorian woman opened the door slowly, as if peeking out to see who was there first, and when she saw Jomann her eyes grew bright and the door was thrown open.

"Jomann!" She exclaimed with bright eyes as she threw her arms around his shoulders surprising him.

Jomann forced a smile as he embraced her. "Lady Lema." He spoke confused.

The large door opened further and the stern faced Lycavorian man appeared. His tanned and weathered face immediately softened when he saw Jomann and he stepped outside the door as well. "Captain!" He exclaimed grasping Jomann's forearm tightly by way of greeting.

"Colonel Zeteu." Jomann greeted.

"No more. You know that. I am retired." He answered as he stepped back and looked behind Jomann, his eyes growing wide. "Princess Eliani!" He gasped bowing his head deeply. "It is... it is a great honor!"

Eliani stepped up beside Jomann with a smile... her arms slipping around his waist to their startled expressions. "It is my pleasure to meet such Spartans." She spoke with proper respect and honor.

Lema looked at Jomann with wide eyes as she detected the scent of the young Captain buried deep within Eliani's blood. And her scent within his. "Jomann, you and the Princess...?"

Jomann nodded. "Yes." He answered. "It has not become public knowledge just yet, but we are not hiding it." He looked at Eliani with a smile. "I'm sure that will change however."

Eliani chuckled and pressed against him. "Probably lover." She quipped.

"Then may the blessings of the gods be with you Captain. Princess Eliani." Zeteu spoke bowing his head even more. "You have managed to capture one of the finest men alive Milady Eliani."

"Yes... I'm beginning to realize that." She said.

"He brought my boy home." Zeteu spoke proudly. "He carried him across a hundred and fifty kilometers of Evolli hell and brought my boy home. He would not leave him behind. Any of them! And now you are Captain to our Crown Prince! A deserved position Jomann."

Eliani looked at Jomann with intrigued eyes for she had not seen this within his thoughts as she swam within his mind. "Yes... it is." She said softly.

Lema reached out and took his hand. "Tell us Jomann... why are you here? It is Mento isn't it? You have heard?"

Jomann looked at her. "I don't understand. Yes... we came to see Mento... but what has happened?"

Lema looked at her husband and mate and the tears came once more. "A miracle Jomann. A miracle." Lema's dark eyes fell on Brendi now and she looked at her oddly. "You... you are Nicolle's sister. She told us you might come with others."

Brendi sputtered for several seconds. “She is here then?” She stammered finally.

Lema nodded. “Oh yes.”

“And she told you I would be coming?” Brendi asked.

“She knew leaving the Prince’s Island would garner attention.” Lema said shyly. “We... we thought you were the Durcunusaan come to arrest our boy for helping her leave. Jomann... please tell me... you have to see him Jomann! Almost five years he has been tormented and silent. He...”

Jomann’s eyes grew wider. “Wait!” He gasped. “Are you saying Mento is...?”

Zeteu nodded his head with a beaming face. His eyes were moist when he spoke. “He... his voice fills our ears once more Jomann. The pain is gone from his face... the shame wiped from his shoulders. My boy has finally come home!”

Brendi felt Lema grab her hands. “Your sister... she is a blessed angel sent from the gods themselves.” She stammered softly. “This way... they are on the balcony overlooking the bluffs of the Gulf.”

Lema pulled Brendi along, Jomann and Eliani following and Zeteu bringing up the rear. It took several minutes to move around the outskirts of the massive villa until they came to the patio balcony overlooking the cliffs below and the gulf in the distance.

There was a thick bear skinned rug spread out on the patio and the tall form of the young Lycavorian was sitting with his back against an outdoor lounge chair. Sitting between his long legs, her back pressed intimately up against his bare chest was Nicolle Faith, her medium length copper colored red hair pulled over one shoulder as she sat there, her body canted slightly so she was looking into his face and holding the data pad in one hand so he could read. Her other hand rested on Mento’s thigh while her fingers stroked his leg lightly. His large hand behind her shoulders extended down and rested on her hip while the other stroked the arm she was using to hold up the data pad. She was wearing a simple pink sundress, the front unbuttoned down to the fourth button and exposing the valley of her medium sized breasts.

“They have been there all night.” Lema stated softly. “She slept in his arms even as he read to her well past the moment she slipped away. He uttered a few words after first meeting her nearly a week ago, and now look! He is reading once more as if he never lost the ability to speak!”

“She sees past his disfigurement.” Zeteu spoke softly. “She looked within my son and gave him a reason to speak once more! Just as you gave him a reason to live Jomann! The nightmares have faded... he no longer wakes in a sweat! He is whole once more because of her.”

Jomann’s eyes were wide and he started forward onto the patio followed by Eliani and Brendi. Lema tried to reach for him but Zeteu stopped her. “No Lema.” He said softly. “It is time. Who better to see it first than the man who gave us our son back?”

Nicolle faith saw him first so engrossed in reading that Mento was, he didn’t even smell them until she tapped his chest softly. “Mento?” Nicolle spoke gently motioning with her head.

Mento turned and his eyes went wide when he saw his Captain approaching. “Sibfla!” He exclaimed, causing Jomann’s eyes to grow even wider when he heard the word and he watched Mento gently push Nicolle off him and rise to his feet. He helped Nicolle up first before turning to look at his Commander. “Captain Jomann!” He barked, the words coming out strong and proud as Jomann remembered them from so long ago.

Jomann stopped in front of him, his eyes wide and a smile he couldn’t contain splitting his face. “Mento... Mento?”

The young Durcunusaan officer beamed, the jagged scar that ran from just above his jaw and down the side of his neck changing to a white color when he did.

“It... it is me Captain.” Mento answered. “I know I should have told you sir but... I didn’t want to... I know it was wrong to...”

Jomann let out a loud whoop of joy and embraced the younger man tightly, pulling his head against his shoulder even as Mento returned the embrace. Jomann quickly pushed him back and looked at him.

“Mento... how?” He gasped.

Mento looked at Nicolle Faith. “It was Nicolle sir.” He spoke pulling her close to him. “I... I saw her on the island and I... I wanted to talk to her so bad. When she greeted me... the words... they just came spilling out again.”

“And he gets better every day.” Nicolle said with a brilliant smile. Her smile faded when she saw her sister step up beside Jomann and her grip on Mento’s waist tightened. “I’m not leaving Brendi!” She exclaimed.

“Nicolle you...” Brendi began to speak.

“No! We are not under Eridiani control anymore! I’m nineteen and I want to see all of this place you brought us too! I want to experience it! I won’t stay on the island anymore! I want to be with Mento!”

Mento looked at Jomann. “I wish to claim her Captain.” He said softly. “I want her with me always! I know this is not... this is not the way it is usually done. I... I have never wanted anything more than Nicolle.”

“This is what I want as well.” Nicolle stated.

“Nicolle... you hardly... you hardly know him.” Brendi said trying to keep her voice neutral.

“I know more about Mento than I have ever known about anyone!” Nicolle snapped. “He doesn’t treat me like an object either. He’s told me everything about himself! And we learn more about each other every day! I don’t want that to change! I never want that to change!”

Mento looked at Jomann. “I will do as every Spartan should do Captain! I will court her and give gifts to her father so he knows my intentions are noble. I will... I need help sir. Mister Faith... he is very old fashion Nicolle says. I... I want to do this right. I want to honor her parents for bringing her into this world. I want to...”

Brendi listened to him speak and couldn’t believe what she was hearing. There was no mistaking that his tone of voice was as sincere as anything she had ever heard and suddenly Brendi realized something. Nicolle was right. Her sister was right that they were no longer constrained by Eridiani rules and culture. They were free and had been given a new life here on this world. Her father was a skilled machinist and her mother was a gifted artist. Mento’s mother stepped forward then.

“Nearly five years Mento has not been able to speak Jomann.” She spoke softly. “You know this for yourself. The gods brought Nicolle to him and now he speaks like he did before Alba Tau. Zeteu and I know who Nicolle is, who her family is. She has told us everything. I will petition the Crown Prince if I have too...”

Jomann looked at her. “No!” He hissed. “We...” Jomann stopped talking and his head tilted a little towards the sky as he felt his Prince and now one of his closest friends reach for him. Andro even blocked his sister.

[He fought with us in that stinking place Jomann.] Andro’s voice told him. [He bled with us in that stinking place. He almost died defending his brother Spartans.]

Jomann nodded. [Yes he did.]

[We left behind too many of our fellow Spartans on that planet Jomann. Spartans and dragons on that world.] Androcles spoke. [We can not allow him to face this alone after all this time. This is a piece of happiness that we can all pull from the dredges of the darkness that we all lived through. In helping Mento, we help ourselves push back the memories even more.]

[I agree with you Androcles.] Jomann spoke softly. [But protecting Brendi... her sisters and family...]

[Do you think that I do not know what you and my sister both feel for Brendi Faith Jomann?] Andro told him. [How closely tied together are we? You, me, Dutkne. You and my sister will discover her soon enough, enjoy the time you have with Eliani until Ms. Faith sees that her life is leading her right to the both of you. She falters even now doesn’t she?]

Jomann turned his head to look at Brendi as Eliani stepped closer to him, feeling the tremors of the heavily shielded conversation between him and Androcles. She would know her brother’s Mindvoice resonance anywhere. Brendi looked back at him with confused brown eyes, wondering just what was going on.

[Yes she does.] Jomann said.

[She loves her family for she was willing to risk me killing her if I did not get them out.] Andro told him. [I approve whatever arrangements you need to make. Let’s not let this opportunity pass us by Jomann. I for one would not mind if the nightmares went away a little more.]

Jomann nodded. [Neither would I.] He stated softly.

[Then let’s make this happen.]

Jomann nodded as Andro’s resonance faded and he looked at Brendi. “Do you love your sister Brendi?” He asked.

“Of course I do.” She stuttered.

“Then let us help your sister to be happy.” Jomann told her. “Androcles has given me permission to advise Mento’s parents about Nicolle, you and your family. The Colonel is a fine Spartan and they will be safe. I can not do that however, unless you agree to help me.”

“Help us.” Eliani stated squeezing his arm.

Nicolle stepped up to her older sister. “Please Brendi.” She said taking her hands. “I... I love Mento. I know this is all very sudden, I wish I could explain how he makes me feel to you. I don’t want to lose him and I don’t want to have to choose.”

Brendi Faith made the second largest decision of her life up until this point and she pulled Nicolle into her arms. “You won’t.” She said. “We’ll get mother and father to understand and know.”

Jomann smiled and looked at Zeteu and Lema. “To further this along Colonel... I now officially call you back to active duty to oversee this operation with the Prince’s blessing. There will be security arrangements that need to be attended too. Are you up to the task of this sir? The Faith family is under the protection of the Crown Prince.”

Zeteu’s chest swelled with pride and he nodded his head. “I am always up to the task Captain!” He announced.

“You... you talked to him didn’t you?” Lema gasped looking at Jomann.

“There is much you need to be made aware of if this is going to work.” Jomann said with a nod to her. “Androcles is not one to abandon those who have been through the same hell as him. The first task is arranging a meeting between you and the Faith family.”

Eliani turned and looked at Mento. “The second will be to give you a full medical exam Phylearch Mento. You up for that?”

Mento nodded with a smile. “I am Princess.” He exclaimed.

Brendi looked at Nicolle and smiled. “Then we need to figure how to tell mother and father just what is happening between you and Mento.” She said.

“Thank you Brendi.” Nicolle spoke softly. “Thank you so much.”

“Does Tasha know?” Brendi asked.

Nicolle nodded. “She is my twin Brendi... of course she would know.”

Brendi smiled at her as her brown eyes lifted to look at first Eliani and then Jomann. She didn’t understand why she felt a surge of desire and passion when she looked at them, but she could not deny how good it made her feel. Before she turned back to Nicolle, Brendi wondered if perhaps they felt the same thing about her. And for a brief instant, Brendi Faith discarded all she had ever known and an image of her and Eliani flashed through her mind. Both of them pressed close to one another and completely naked. Their arms were wrapped around each other as their naked flesh touched in far more an intimate way than Brendi had ever imagined and they began kissing softly just as a set of powerful arms encircled both of them and Jomann pulled them close to him.

It was an image that would invade her thoughts for many weeks to come until she finally understood what it meant.

And then Brendi Faith would have a decision to make.

HIGH COVEN G9 LONG RANGE TRANSPORT THE WILDS NEAR NEBONESE

“Nalavi... Nalavi that can’t be right.” Yuri spoke as she sat across from him. “I can’t have Darpia Syndrome.”

Nalavi shook his head. “It is right. I have checked the figures seven different times. We’ve been going over this for three hours now. You do have Darpia Syndrome Yuri and with the chemical blueprints that Anja Leonidas gave to us, I can fashion a serum that will save the child.”

“By using Kavalian technology?” Yuri hissed angrily.

Nalavi shook his head. “Kavalian based technology that the foremost Hadarian Healer in the Galaxy altered in such a way that for all intents and purposes it is now a Union medical find.” He held up the pad. “I’ve read the entire medical report she gave to me on this Yuri. It was unbelievably accurate and detailed. She even included the first failures as a baseline for the serum. It worked on Isabella's child Yuri. You saw him beside Androcles in the landing bay of his ship."

Yuri instinctively dropped her hands to her abdomen. "Nalavi... I can't lose this child." She gasped. "I can't."

"And you won't!" Nalavi declared. "Yuri... this serum she developed works! They used it on Isabella's child. They would not do this if it did not work."

"And the child would be fully grown in a matter of days!" Yuri snapped.

Nalavi shook his head. "No. Among the work she gave me was a calculated timetable based on how far along you are now. You can carry this child for four months Yuri... that is how long your womb will sustain the child. After that it will begin to break down and then we will need to induce the birth with the serum. She calculates a lesser dose so your baby does not grow as fast as Dorian Leonidas. What took him hours to grow will take your child months."

"You trust her?" Yuri spoke.

Nalavi shook his head. "It is not a matter of trust Yuri!" He told her. "They could have done nothing! They could have executed all of us and you know that. They did not have to tell us... and when I did discover it, it would have been too late!"

"Nalavi will this...?" Yuri began to ask.

He shook his head quickly knowing her question. "Darpia Syndrome is hereditary yes, but it only happens once and then it runs its course. You have already given birth to four healthy children Yuri! You will have more! The thing we have to concern ourselves with now is this child. And we have been given the means to defeat the Darpia Syndrome." He shook his head. "Pa'cour... help me to make her understand!" He barked looking up.

Pa'cour had gone forward to check their instruments and had not returned yet. Yuri got to her feet. "Pa'cour?" She called.

They both heard the loud thump like someone had fallen and they rushed forward. They stopped by the small bathroom when they heard wheezing and soft groans. Yuri knocked on the door. "Pa'cour?"

"Not... not now!" His voice echoed from behind the door and it was obvious that he was in pain.

Yuri's eyes opened wide. "Pa'cour... you open this door right now!" She barked. "Do you hear me? You open..."

The door slid aside and only Yuri's vampire reflexes allowed her to catch his much larger body as he slumped into her arms. His weight drove her to the floor however and she cradled his shuddering body with great worry rushing through her.

"Pa'cour my love!" She gasped as his body convulsed several times.

Nalavi gawked at him. "You took it!" He barked. "I told you to wait fool Immortal! Your injuries were not fully healed!"

"Nalavi" Yuri gasped.

"He took the serum." He hissed as he ripped a large container from the nearby wall and tossed it to the floor, tearing it open.

Pa'cour gripped Yuri's arms tightly. "I... I will not..." He spoke through clenched teeth. "I will not have my child enter this world and see... see a monster!" He snarled.

"I told you to wait!" Nalavi exclaimed as he pulled out the portable medical scanner. He turned back to Pa'cour and froze, his eyes wide. "Phraktos!" He gasped looking at him.

Yuri too looked down and her eyes grew wide. "Pa'cour!" She cried.

"For... for you Yuri!" He gasped through his pain. "My... my Blessed Wife!" Pa'cour lifted his hand so that he could see and through the grimace of intense pain and stinging that was shooting through his body he watched the transformation take place. Yuri took that hand in hers without hesitation, wrapping her fingers around his as she watched with wide eyes.

It began slowly, right around the injection point of the serum, the dark gray mottled skin began to lighten and smooth out. His eyes watched as it began to move up his arm, slowly but surely expunging his past life and purifying him. He groaned in pain, his body tensing until the veins in his neck and arms bulged outward and Yuri cried out in horror. Pa'cour could feel it though. He could feel the cleansing of his veins, his organs, feel it as the toxin was irrevocably purged and killed by the serum Esther Saira had made. The pureblood

Blessed Wife of his brother Cha'talla and she had saved them all. Yuri's hands tightened on him as he twitched several times, her wide eyes watching with tears rolling down her cheeks as the true Akruian Immortal that Pa'cour was began to take shape. The folded dark gray skin was slowly being replaced by deeply tanned bronze skin. Smooth and vibrant with life. His strong jaw, his full lips that had given her such pleasure as they explored her body in ways Robert had never imagined. The bone spurs along his jaw becoming more white and healthy looking. As it spread across his head, dark hair began to sprout from his skin to cover his bald head. His thick neck strained as the toxin infected skin began to change and extend lower, changing as it moved. Yuri could only watch as the transformation continued while he lay on the deck, his upper body supported by her lap. She could only watch as the most handsome man she had ever laid her eyes upon began to take shape right in front of her. This man. This Immortal that had stolen her heart and soul. She had learned to look past his outer shell and into his soul the first night she had given herself to him. He had made love to her with such passion and intensity that it had stolen her breath away. To be filled by him was the most divine sensation she had ever felt. To feel his huge organ pulsing with her depths as she was wrapped in his arms. She had seen his love, his courage and his determination. Now... now the man she had seen within was coming out.

The process took nearly ten minutes, and Yuri held him tightly through it all, unwilling to let him go. Finally... his face became less tense and his body began to relax and his dark eyes opened slowly to look up into her face.

Nalavi had also watched with stunned eyes. He lifted the scanner once more and could only shake his head. "Xal l'phraktos preserve uns'aa?" He spoke. "It... it worked." (May the gods preserve me?)

Yuri could only stare in astonishment as her hand dropped and she began to tentatively stroke the skin of his cheek. Her fingers traced the edges of his bone spurs and she saw him smile as it sent tingles through him. He reached up and took her hand.

"Do I... meet... do I meet your approval my Blessed Wife?" He asked softly.

All her emotions came out then and with a sob of relief and love she crushed his lips with hers. Pa'cour reached around and held her head to his with one hand, kissing her with every ounce of who he was. Yuri whimpered in unabashed delight but quickly drew her head back and beat hi on his chest.

"You fool!" She gasped. "Don't you ever... ever frighten me like that again Pa'cour! I will hurt you if you do such a thing again! Do you hear me fool?"

Pa'cour smiled and a small laugh escaped his lips before he pulled her head down once more and kissed her again.

Yuri found herself unable to take her eyes or her hands off him as they sat in the small lounge area fifteen minutes later. The dark hair had become more than just stubble, filling out quite a bit into short cropped black hair that she had run her fingers through many times. The bone spurs were much more prominent in their healthy white color, and they appeared to be slightly longer, but against the deeply tanned skin they looked so natural and fearsome. His skin was now a deeply tanned almost raw umber color. He didn't wear a shirt as Nalavi examined him, and the muscular definition in his body was mouth watering to Yuri. She would need to spend many hours rediscovering his body the way it was and that caused blissful warmth to surge through her loins.

"We will go here." Pa'cour spoke handing her the data pad as he leaned over to retie his combat boots.

Yuri looked at the data pad, saw what he was referencing and then looked back to him. "Veyerai?" She asked. "Pa'cour... this is one of the planets that Androcles Leonidas gave to us."

Pa'cour nodded. "Yes."

"Is that... is that wise?" Yuri asked. "They will know where we are eventually."

"Yes they will." He replied. "Do you honestly believe he could not find us if he so chose my Blessed Wife?"

Yuri gazed at him for a few seconds. "No. He'd find us."

Pa'cour nodded. "This way... we have the added security that this facility provides to us. It is also only two jumps to where you ordered Lidene to move in the Holmar System." He looked at her. "I assume that you have a reason for that?"

Yuri nodded her head. "Yes. He will continue his research just as I told him. Whatever he develops we will have control of. If Dante or Robert ever got their hands on it, it would be disastrous."

"What is Lidene researching Yuri?" Nalavi asked.

"Weapons mostly." She answered immediately. She was among the two people she trusted most in this life now and she would keep nothing from them. "Ship based and perhaps small arms."

"Why?" Nalavi asked.

Yuri looked at him. "Something... something inside me tells me to go forward with this Nalavi. Not for the purposes of conquering or oppression, but for survival."

"Survival against what?" Nalavi asked.

Yuri shook her head. "I don't know." She answered softly.

Pa'cour took the pad from her hands finally. "The facility on Veyerai is fortified and has everything we need. Nalavi... it will allow you to establish a complete research lab and medical facility as you have always desired. Over time we can bring more to us. The facility can hold over five thousand."

"Who would we bring to us?" Yuri asked.

"Those who believe they would not be accepted by Narice and what she has begun, but who are loyal to the Coven." Pa'cour answered. "Those who believe as we do."

"And what do we believe?" Nalavi said.

"You heard what Androcles Leonidas said Nalavi." Pa'cour spoke. "The time has come for us to leave the past where it is. The future is what must hold our attention. There are many who have done questionable things to insure that future in their own way. They do not hate or kill and have no interest in oppression or conquering. Those are who we need to draw to us."

"Build our own army?" Yuri said.

Pa'cour shook his head. "Not an army my Blessed Wife. A force for good. I... we both have much to atone for Yuri... and in this way we can do that."

Yuri squeezed his hand. "Yes we can."

"We will do the things that Narice can not." Pa'cour said looking at her. "You wish to support your sister in what she does, I can feel this within you Yuri."

Yuri nodded her head slowly. "She's the only one who can." She said finally. "And yes I do."

Nalavi lifted his hand. "What makes either of you think Androcles Leonidas will allow this?" He said. "I don't know about you two, but I have no desire to incur the wrath of that young man, not after what we saw him do to the Kavalian ambassador."

Pa'cour looked at him. "Nalavi... why do you think he let us go?" He asked.

"What?" Nalavi gasped.

Yuri nodded her head. "He could feel it within me Nalavi." Yuri spoke. "He could feel that the urge to rule, to command no longer resided within me. His perceptions of Mindvoice are far more attuned than anyone I have ever met. Including my mother. His father is the same way, but Androcles in many respects is more ruthless and devious than his father."

"Are you saying that he let us go because he knew you would do what you are planning?" Nalavi asked.

"I doubt he knows that Yuri ordered the research he wanted destroyed moved to another location." Pa'cour spoke. "But I believe he knew this is the road our redemption lies upon and he is giving us the opportunity to do it."

"Why?" Nalavi asked.

"I am different from my sister." Yuri said. "Narice will only resort to violence as a last resort and only then will she crush anyone who stands in her way of moving the High Coven forward." She explained. "I am not so conservative. I can act in ways that Narice cannot to insure that she succeeds."

"A shadow force?" Nalavi said.

Pa'cour nodded his head. "We will watch over her from a distance. Never making ourselves known to her or those close to her, but always supporting her in what she does. That is what we can do."

"And I ask again... you think Androcles will allow this?" Nalavi asked.

"Given what he felt within me..." Yuri said. "I believe he hopes that is exactly what we will do."

"What about Moran?" Nalavi asked.

Yuri rose to her feet and crossed the small room slowly. “Ah... Robert.” She spoke softly. “When the time is right...” She turned back and looked at them. “When the time is right we will meet again. I want the pleasure of gutting that vith'ez fa'la zatoast myself for everything he has done to me. For everything he and my mother were doing to me knowingly. And I will give Dante and Xaxon’s foul presence within him to Androcles Leonidas, for now only he or his father can truly destroyed what Xaxon has become.” (Fucking bastard.)

Nalavi watched as she returned to her place beside Pa'cour and took his arm within her hands. He shook his head finally and couldn't help but smile.

“Ah uoi'nota... retirement didn't look so promising anyway.” He said. “I'm in.” (Hell)

ULU ARC ROYAL EDGE OF THE OUTER ARM

Martin Leonidas leaned against the edge of the door frame into the bedroom and let his eyes gaze upon them in the bed. He couldn't help but think that a long time ago he would have considered all this a very big dream. He was a King to billions of lifeforms. Leader of a collection of species that thirty years ago he would have only seen in some Science Fiction Movie. He shared his existence and a bed with six of the most breathtakingly beautiful women he had ever met in his life and he loved them all to the point of insanity. With the possible exception of Aricia and her soul stealing azure colored eyes, all of them could incite him both intellectually and sexually. Aricia was only different because she could see into his very soul and this gave her an added edge the others did not. He knew she was the cog in their wheel. He was the center yes, but Aricia made it all work. All of them would be the first to admit that had anyone ever asked. How they laid in the bed was the perfect example. Aricia was at the center of the tangle of limbs. Her arms were tightly wrapped around For'mya; Anja spooned firmly against For'mya's back. Dysea was pressed to Aricia's opposite side; Cirith spooned against Dysea's back with Isabella's arms spread out over both of them. He knew every intimate detail of each of their bodies, their scents burned into his brain many times over. He would never forsake any of them. They were part of who he was and now nothing would ever separate them again. Many people had tried to determine through the years who he favored most after Aricia, and he always found it amusing to listen to their rationale.

In truth... they were all more precious to him than his very own life.

Aricia, his Saaurano, could and always did incite the wolf within him just a little more than the others, because they were anomes and because she was pureblood like him. Her lavender and coco scent was the one that reeked from his pores more potently. Who would he reach for after Aricia? There was something unique about Dysea's wildflower scent and her five foot nine, powerfully built and tattooed body was a divine temple that he would never tire of worshipping at. Every sensual curve and contour of his Melda Min, and there were many, rippled with power and sexiness and her elven ears were utterly delicious. Whenever he was within her velvety depths, power flowed through him. What could he say about Anja? Her five foot three inch body was just as powerfully built as Dysea's, yet the fire within her was a drug within itself. She could go longer than any of his other Queens, even Aricia at times, because of her Hadarian blood and the healing radiation within her. And her screams of passion were by the far the loudest of them. Anja was totally uninhibited and probably the most sexually adventurous after Aricia in their bed. Her talented tongue could drive any of them insane with pleasure and she had happily done this to all of them for years. For'mya... his Kinsoaurgai. The calm and patience that radiated from her was unmatched, and her quiet intensity in their bed was beyond thrilling as she drove them to new heights. His brother's rape of her had all but been washed away and she was rapidly returning to the woman she was before with their love swirling around her. They would spend many more hours rediscovering For'mya, especially now that her breasts had grown larger because of the Kavalian serum. They were extremely sensitive and she would gasp delightfully just from having them kissed. Isabella was his dark lover. Intense and wild and always whispering into his ears. Her vampire scent of sweet lilacs was addicting and her equally long legs were just as enrapturing. Cirith. What could he say about her? The perfect combination of vampire and wolf blood. Cirith had the best of both worlds and was growing stronger by the day. That she carried Aikiro's blood within her did not matter to him in the least. The wolf blood within her, one of the original six ruling packs, more than made up for that. She was rapidly beginning to become more familiar with all of them and her passion and desire for both him and his other Queens was growing each day. Her black hair and lush body they had spent hours exploring as she exploded endlessly.

Who did he prefer after Aricia? To him the answer was easy.

All of them.

Martin's head lifted just a little as he felt Wayonn tapping gently against his MV shields. Martin sighed softly. There was always something. At times he utterly hated who he was and wished only to escape and take his women and go to so uncharted world to spend his days basking in the sun and sand and reveling in the scents and charms of his wives and mates. He could not though. He would never lead a normal life because of who he was and what he could do and the name he carried. A name that instilled respect in many and fear in others. A name that was his to wear with pride. Something he did every morning he awoke.

With barely a conscious thought he lowered his shields just enough to talk with him. [Wayonn?]

[Forgive me for disturbing you my boy.] Wayonn spoke. [We need to have that talk now however. I have gathered Helen and Arzoal. We are waiting for you in the landing bay with Torma and Isheeni.]

Martin nodded. [I'll join you in five minutes.]

Martin gazed upon the bed once more, his dark brown eyes alive with life as he brought his hand up to his heart and then clenched his fist over it.

I will love all of you until the very last breath leaves my body and I join my father and grandfathers beyond. That is my vow to all of you my Queens. Never again will any of you endure the touch of another upon your bodies or minds. You are mine. And mine you will be for all time.

Martin Leonidas turned and began to head for the door of their quarters. He did not see six sets of eyes open and heads lift to gaze at where he had been standing only moments before. He did not see those six sets of eyes then turn and gaze at one another with complete and utter love and commitment. He did not see those eyes close once more as those six women drew each other closer and sleep claimed them once more.

And you will be ours for eternity Martin Leonidas. Six voices reached out softly. Forever more.

ARC ROYAL PORT LANDING BAY

The port landing bay had been turned into something of a nursery as half of it was now taken up by nearly two hundred sleeping hatchlings instead of fighters. Iriral and Miath were resting on the deck among the hatchlings now, all of the adult dragons willingly splitting their time to help the hatchlings adjust and begin to learn what they needed. Most of them were terrified of Torma, not just because of his size, but because he was a Talon Guardian and whenever he spoke he had the attention of all of them without question. He had joked with Isheeni how he wished their children had shown such rigid attention to him. That had quickly earned him a whap in the shoulder from Isheeni's wing.

Now Torma, Isheeni and Arzoal sat around the small table that had been set up, with Wayonn, Helen, Danny and Julie occupying the chairs while Martin sat on top of Torma's right foreleg. It was a unique spot that he had been sitting in for years when he and Torma were alone and thinking or speaking just the two of them. When you came upon the two of them when they were sitting this was usually the position you found them in. It was like this with all the Bonded Pairs within the Union. They were so tightly connected that everything was second nature to them. There were some, like Torma and Isheeni's children who were much more introverted and would rarely allow others besides Andro or his siblings to touch them let alone ride them, but this was the way of things.

"...Paladins?" Martin spoke as he looked at Wayonn.

Wayonn nodded. "I was able to communicate briefly with Shiria before we left Union space and that is the term she was going to use to describe them when she told Andro and Deia and the others. It is the closest to what they could be called in terms you would understand completely."

"Holy Warriors?" Helen said softly looking at him. "Why does that sound rather ominous grandfather?" Martin snorted. "Holy Warrior? There ain't nothing holy about me." He stated.

Danny rolled his eyes. "You got that right." He quipped. "Holy shit head maybe! That fits pretty good."
"More like evil sinner..." Julie stated with a large grin. "The way you made your ladies howl for two nights straight. Pitiful!"

Torma chuckled in Mindvoice and butted his snout against Martin's shoulder. Sort of like when I pinned Isheeni to the deck and made her trumpet my name.

Isheeni snorted herself now. You did not make me do anything I didn't want to do. She stated calmly. I trumpet your name when I am angry with you as well my husband. Not just when you are causing my wings to tremble.

True enough . Torma answered.

"Enough!" Wayonn barked loudly ending the banter. "This is important Martin!"

"Ok. Ok." Martin said. "We're listening."

"There is a gene..." Wayonn spoke as everyone returned their attention to him. "An extremely rare gene found only within the Pralor species. Sumar had it. Xaxon had it. One in three trillion, or some similar ratio according to Shiria, that is how many Pralors had it."

"So it was like... really rare." Julie spoke calmly. "We get that part. Drop the other shoe Val'istar."

Wayonn nodded to her with a smile. Daniel and Julie were here because he knew that Martin trusted them as he would trust a brother and sister. As Andro trusted his siblings. He was actually beginning to like both of them quite a bit. Behind only his wives and mates, Daniel and Julie knew Martin the best and they knew how his mind worked. And both of them treated Wayonn with respect and reverence that he did not feel he deserved, but he could not get them to stop.

"The other shoe... yes." He spoke. "Let's just say that this gene allows the person who has it to evolve the use of their Etheric powers and abilities into a physical manifestation of those same powers." Wayonn said.

"Like what Marty did on Enurrua?" Danny asked.

Wayonn nodded. "Yes."

"Very nice by the way Skipper." Julie spoke looking at him. "Very nice indeed."

Martin smiled at her. "Thanks Jules."

Wayonn looked at Martin. "You have this gene Martin."

"Yeah... I gathered that." Martin said. "I'm guessing it was kind of hard to miss."

"That's a fucking understatement if I ever heard one!" Danny spat.

"Daniel Simpson... your language." Helen scolded him. "Just because Anuk and Nayeca are not here to reign you in, does not mean you can resort to your former self with Martin before they came into your life. It would be a shame to have all their fine work go to waste by your association with this brute." She flipped a finger at Martin with a smile.

"Ouch!" Julie spoke with a smile as Danny looked properly chastised.

"You won't tell them will you?" Danny asked with a playful tone.

Helen smiled back at him. "I just might."

Wayonn shook his head but couldn't help but smile at the ease with which all of them acted with each other. "As I was saying..." He brought their attention back to him. "Androcles has this gene... and it appears to have now manifested itself within Denali and Jomann as well." Wayonn told him.

"So it is passed down within bloodlines grandfather?" Helen asked returning her eyes to him.

Wayonn nodded his head. "For the most part...yes. But it also appears to skip some generations. Resumar did not have the gene, nor did any of his siblings. I do not know about your father Martin. He may or may not have had it, I ten to believe he did based on what he accomplished, but unfortunately he did not survive long enough for it to manifest itself if he did. In you and your sons it has. Quite possibly Nara and Deion as well."

"Why not Resumar or Eliani or Arrarn or Zarah?" Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head. "I do not know all the particulars... Shiria would be better suited to explaining the intricacies of the genetic coding involved... but I do know that it will only manifest itself in those who are Purebloods. Lycavorians with two pureblood parents like your father and Gorgo. Like you and Aricia. Purebloods descended from the original bloodlines on Lycavore after we joined with them."

"And why does this matter?" Martin asked.

Wayonn met his eyes. “How many of Sumar’s Tomes did you and Avi discover?” He asked. “And do not try and tell me none because you and your son would not have known how to do the things you have done without studying those Tomes intensely Martin. I know that because I helped him to write them!”

Martin exhaled deeply. “Fourteen.” He answered. “Avi told me that was all of them.”

“You have all fourteen?” Wayonn gasped. “I believed most of them lost during the Black Day!”

Martin shook his head. “Avi said Sumar knew something bad was going to happen and he put them on CS41 before the Coven attack. He told me about them six months after I brought CS41 to Earth.”

“The entire Regime.” Wayonn said softly shaking his head. “Thank the gods.”

“You want to fill us in on why these Tomes are so important?” Martin asked.

“Those Tomes are the entire training Regime that Sumar devised for those chosen to join us on CS41.” Wayonn answered. “It has allowed you and your sons to know how to channel your Etheric abilities in the ways you do. If you have read them all, then I assume you know why Xaxon was punished the way he was?”

Martin nodded. “Yes. I also know that nearly all of these... Paladins you called them? They were killed near the end of the first war with the Scourge.”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. The Paladins were... they were responsible for the last dozen or so successes that drove the Scourge away and gave us victory. Unfortunately those last battles claimed many of their lives. When the war ended only fifty-three of them survived. Fifty-three out of a thousand. Among them Sumar and Xaxon.”

“And the Conclave of Elder Pralors punished Xaxon for what he did.” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes.”

Helen looked back and forth between them. “What exactly did he do to be punished as he was?” She asked. “Separating his conscious mind from his body seems rather extreme.”

“His crimes were extreme.” Wayonn told her. “Xaxon’s actions are what started the first war with the Scourge. His actions are also what gave them the ability to begin the second war and bring about the eventual destruction of the Pralor species. I won’t go into great detail now Helen, but the history is all in the Tomes, which you will read I’m sure.” He turned back to Martin. “Where are they?”

“Safe.” Martin answered.

“That does not answer my question.” Wayonn spoke.

“There are five of us who know where those Tomes are Wayonn.” Martin spoke. “Me, Torma, Avi, Androcles and Elynth. That is the way I’m going to keep it for now. It is not a matter of trust Wayonn... it is a matter of common sense. I... Andro has more than likely already told Shiria, or he will soon. Until we return and are within Pralor space, it’s safer if we keep the number as small as possible.”

Wayonn lifted his hand. “You do not need to explain it to me Martin.” He said quickly. “I would do the same. When the time is right you will tell me.”

Martin nodded his head. “I’m going to have to... you’ll be the one doing the training.” He said. “Or did you think I would not know. That is why you have stayed alive all these years Wayonn. That is why fate made you decide to keep tabs on us, and follow us and eventually bring you back to us. To fulfill the role intended for you. To shape Dutkne to stand beside my son and train the next generation.” He said.

Wayonn looked at him for a long moment and finally nodded his head. “There is more of Sumar in you than I had ever imagined my boy and it stirs my Pralor soul to know this. Your insight is unchecked. How much of Sumar’s memories do you understand?”

“Not nearly enough.” Martin answered. “They are mixed in with my father’s, with my grandfather Resumar’s. I catch glimpses of things and places. I witnessed Xaxon’s trial as if I was there. His sentencing. All of it. He was a bastard you know.”

Wayonn nodded. “That he was. Twins they may have been... but two different twins you will never find.” Wayonn looked at him. “What we saw on Enurrua... what we saw Androcles do... that is not all the two of you are capable of is it?”

Martin shrugged. “Let’s just say we still have some tricks up our sleeves.” He answered.

“And you won’t tell me?” Wayonn asked.

“Not just yet Wayonn.” Martin answered. “We are still trying to accept this... these kinds of abilities.”

“You do realize that you are the most devious man I have ever met.” Wayonn said.

Martin smiled and nodded his head. “Just don’t let it get around.” He said. “I’ll never hear the end of it from those two.” He motioned to Danny and Julie.

“Training?” Helen asked holding up her hand. “What training?”

Wayonn turned to her. “The next generation of Paladins.” He said calmly. “For seventeen years before CS41 launched, Sumar and I searched Pralor space for those with this gene. He was driven and convinced that the Scourge would return because of what his brother did. He needed to replenish the ranks of the Paladins lost at the end of the first war. At the end of that seventeen year period we had six hundred and nine candidates. All of them were assigned to CS41. We were going to use the years it would take for the Seed Mission to train them. By the time we returned to Pralor space, the Paladins would have been well on the way to being back to their original number of one thousand when they were at their peak.”

“Why were these Paladins so important?” Danny asked.

It was discovered early on during the first war that the Scourge were very sensitive to Paladins. Being able to manipulate Etheric psychic waves as they were caused the Scourge discomfort and distorted their ability to fight cohesively. It was only certain individuals mind you and after further study it was discovered that this gene was the cause. That is when the Paladins were born. Arzoal spoke from where she sat on the deck. Danny looked at her oddly and Arzoal chuckled within Mindvoice. I was not always a dragon Daniel Simpson. She said.

“Oh right! I keep forgetting that. Sorry.” Danny spoke sheepishly.

“So you discovered that this gene was the cause sister?” Helen asked looking at her.

Arzoal nodded her massive head. I was not involved in the project... but I shared much information with the men and women who were.

“Sumar and the others with this gene were shown to have the ability to physically manifest their Etheric powers as I said.” Wayonn continued. “They had the power to turn their abilities into weapons.” He looked at Martin. “The psychic diamonds that you and your son can throw were the first signs of this ability. They are the top of the tier of Etheric abilities for those who are able to use them in this way. Those who have this gene. Aricia has shown this ability and I believe Sadi had also shown an increased level in her abilities. From what I understand on several occasions she has physically tossed objects or men into the air with great force?”

Martin nodded. “Yes.”

“She came to me when this first happened grandfather.” Helen said.

Wayonn nodded. “These are also the first signs. Usually random and driven by emotion. I would not be surprised to learn that both Aricia and Sadi have this gene within them and it is in its dormant state.”

“Dormant state?” Martin asked.

“The gene is extremely rare as I said.” Wayonn spoke. “It also has two stages if you will. It is either active or dormant. Within you, Andro, Denali and Jomann it has become active. It most likely has been active your entire lives and was simply waiting until you achieved a proper level of training and abilities before kicking in. In others, it will remain dormant, but allow that person to achieve things others just as skilled as they cannot. Aricia and Sadi being the best examples of this. Aricia’s ability to use her psychic knives and now Sadi’s ability to toss people about with the control she has. You and the others will be able to manifest your Etheric powers in a physical form Martin. This is evident in what you did on Enurrua and what Androcles, Denali and Jomann did at the Icalro Alliance base and what Andro did in the senate chamber. Balls of psychic Etheric power that can be hurled, waves of Etheric power that can be sent crashing forth with devastating power. Being able to make the ground beneath you ripple and heave as if you were controlling it in some way. All of these are abilities that the Paladins under Sumar had. And they used them with crushing success against the Scourge.”

What we were able to determine is that the high concentration of Etheric power within the Paladins could disrupt the Scourge along a mental plain if you will. Just being around a Paladin would cause them to falter and sometimes act erratically. We believe it has something to do with the electrical impulses to their brains and higher functions but we were never able to confirm that. Arzoal spoke.

“Why?” Julie asked utterly fascinated by this information.

“Prolonged exposure to a Paladin would eventually drive the Scourge subject insane.” Wayonn answered her. “It is why the Scourge frequently targeted Paladins in battle and even attempted to kill some of them in surprise ambushes on Pralor worlds. They feared the Paladins and what they could do. One Paladin could alter the course of an entire battle. It is why we won the first war with them.”

“Why not the second?” Danny asked. “Sumar and you were gone but you said that fifty others remained behind. If they were so powerful...”

Wayonn nodded. “And for the first few millennia they were able to hold the line. Even just the fifty-three. The Conclave of Elder Pralors had been trying for decades to discover where our ship crashed according to what Shiria told me. Eventually they gave up. It wasn't until the abominations that Xaxon had created began to appear and take power that the tide shifted against the Pralor species as a whole. They were immune to the affects of the Paladins and there were many more of them during the Extermination. From what Shiria has been able to tell me, and history scrolls she gave to me once I discovered her, these abominations were dubbed Magistrate Elites or Holy Elites. The Scourge are for the most part an insectoid like species. Hard shelled exteriors with four to six legs. The Magistrate Elites and Holy Elites had evolved enough to walk on two, triple jointed insectoid legs. Most of them still had the tentacles and hard shelled skin of the soldier class, but they were more evolved in most respects.”

“Evolved how?” Helen asked.

Wayonn shrugged. “I did not go into great detail with Shiria about them. I was Sumar's Mage council... we existed to fight them and kill them. We did not try to study them. That was not our job. The Magistrate Elites were the Generals, the Holy Elites their ruling government for lack of a better term. We left the study up to the scientists.”

“That didn't work out too well.” Martin said.

“No it did not. As it turned out, there was a disconnect between the scientists and the warriors. They did not share information. Now that they existed, the Conclave of Elder Pralors began to fear the remaining Paladins because of what they could do.” Wayonn said. “Shiria told me when the Scourge attacked the second time they used tactical surprise and superior force in every instance. They went after key installations and cities. They butchers billions and took hundreds of thousands prisoner.”

“Prisoner?” Martin asked. “Why?”

Wayonn shook his head. “We do not know. All we know is that hundreds of thousands were taken alive during the Extermination. None of them were ever heard from again. Many of those they killed they gathered after battles and used them for a food source for their eggs when they hatched.”

“Wait!” Julie stammered. “They ate your people?”

Wayonn nodded. “The bodies of many dead were collected and preserved so that when their next brood hatched they had food. At least that is what we believed given the evidence.”

“Fuck me!” Danny gasped.

Julie leaned forward. “Wait a minute.” She said. “Why are you telling us about these Scourge? They are hundreds of thousands of light years away. Why would anything we do affect them?” Wayonn met her eyes and then looked at Martin. Julie turned and looked at Martin and then back to him. “Oh man!” She gasped. “You can't be serious?”

“Yes... I am.” Wayonn spoke. “They are coming.”

“The bugs?” Danny rasped. “The fucking bugs that killed the Pralors are coming here?”

“We're the only ones who know right now.” Martin said. “Let's keep it that way.”

“Andro?” Julie asked quickly.

Martin nodded. “He knows. Sadi and his other mates as well I'm sure.” He looked at Wayonn. “That doesn't explain why all of a sudden this ability we seem to have has become so important though.”

Wayonn met his gaze. “It's important because we need to find those with this gene and begin training them.” He said. “Our people will look to you Martin. They will look to you for guidance and support.”

“Wayonn... don't make me into something I am not.” Martin said. “I hate it when others do that.”

“You cannot deny what you are Martin Leonidas. No matter how much you and your son wish it.” He said.

“Jesus...” Martin spoke getting to his feet. “Canth told me something very similar to that and I didn't like the way it sounded then. Now I know what he was talking about and it sounds even worse.”

“And what did my son tell you?” Wayonn asked.

“You have a power within you Martin Leonidas, a potential to be so much more than what you are now. You need to step beyond the power that you wield... step beyond the boundaries of what your eyes and your senses tell you. Everything is not always as it seems son of Leonidas.”

Martin looked at him. “I remember every word.”

Wayonn smiled. “He was very good with words my son.” He stated. “And he is right. Helen has told you before and I am telling you now. You cannot deny what fate and destiny have proclaimed you to be Martin Leonidas. Nor can your son. Or any of those with the Paladin gene.”

“What are you saying grandfather?” Helen asked him.

Wayonn turned to look at her. “Androcles’s actions have bought us time.” He said. “Time to find those with the Pralor gene and then to train them to properly use their abilities for when the Scourge arrive. And they will come. By their very nature they live to exterminate everything having to do with the Pralor people. Even their descendants. That means us?”

“Why?” Julie asked.

“It was because of what Xaxon did.” Wayonn answered softly. “His experiments twisted the subjects he used. Scourge and Pralor alike. His experiments were not sanctioned by the Pralor Scientific Council... and those subjects he created were driven mad. Mad with hate. With rage. All of it directed at the Pralor people, though they had no idea what Xaxon had done. Once his subjects returned to the Scourge colonies, this dark mentality became the predominate emotion among all of them over the course of centuries.”

“No one knew?” Helen gasped.

The Conclave of Elder Pralors chose not to reveal Xaxon’s deeds to the public. Arzoal spoke once more. There were many of us who knew what he had done, but we were sworn to secrecy. Even those like myself who only worked on the periphery of the projects. I dare say my deeds on Elear were of a similar nature.

Wayonn shook his head. “No they were not!” He snapped. “Your goals were honorable Arzoal! It was Artre who holds the blame for that!”

“Why would what Andro did determine when they come?” Julie asked finally.

Wayonn shook his head. “I can sense them. Just as Martin can. And Andro. His actions on Lycavore over twenty-five years ago set it in motion. Though it would have happened eventually.”

“What actions?” Danny asked.

“Activating CS41.” Martin answered. “They detected the ship’s engines when Avi got us into orbit didn’t they?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. With Andro’s actions concerning the High Coven and with the activation of VORTEX Cruiser 341 they have stopped however. I don’t know why at this moment, but it has something to do with the High Coven I believe. And Cruiser 341. Perhaps they question if we have more ships or not. Their Colony ships were slow and ponderous when we fought them but immensely powerful. It has been nearly twenty-five thousand years since we escaped and settled on Lorent.” He shook his head. “I don’t know anymore about them now than any of you. What matters is that Androcles’s actions have given us the time we need.”

“And just how do we go about finding these people?” Martin asked. “They aren’t going to be wearing a sign that says I have the Pralor gene.”

“Shiria will work out the details I’m sure.” Wayonn answered. “She is more than likely already working on it. Our task is just as important however.” He looked at Arzoal. “Finding these lost dragon eggs... finding Muton and the others with Pralor blood in them. These things are happening now for a reason.”

Arzoal nodded. Yes... I agree.

“What reason?” Martin asked.

Wayonn shook his head. “That I do not know.” He answered. “All I know is that what we do now is just as important to our future as what Androcles has done. And the High Coven ties into the circle somehow. Just as Muton and the eggs do.”

Danny shook his head. “Man... this is some heavy shit!” He rasped.

Helen nodded her head at his statement. “Some very heavy shit.” She stated causing all of them to look at her with barely concealed humor. Helen almost never used foul language.

Wayonn... could not the Bonded Pairs or Mjolnir’s Hand do the same thing as these Paladins? Isheeni asked now.

Wayonn shook his head. “No. While they are powerful in their own right... their abilities do not generate enough of a resonance to be helpful against the Scourge.” He looked at Martin. “You asked why your other children can not achieve this skill Martin. It is because they are not pureblood. All of them have the potential to become more than what they are now with the proper schooling... especially those bonded to dragons... but they will never achieve the skills of you, Andro or other Paladins. Zarah is the first among them to show signs with her skills, part of that is because of what Andro did, but her own skills are far superior to others already. Now that she has come together with Lucia... I understand they both have displayed odd abilities.”

“But Aikiro and her father had no physical ties to Xaxon.” Martin said. “Bella and Narice confirmed this for us. Only his Etheric essence was contained on CS19. His body was on CS41. Without his actual body...”

“No... they did not have his physical body but he was more than powerful enough within Mindvoice to transfer some of his lesser skills to her father.” Wayonn answered. “These skills were carried over in her own children and so on down the line. Because of the specific Etheric composition of these skills, they lost none of their potency through the generations. Lucia’s psychic whips are the equivalent to the psychic knives Aricia uses. Almost on a physical plane... but not quite. When used while charged with high emotions they can be quite lethal however.”

Wayonn... Arzoal interrupted. CS19 had survivors aboard. Pralors that merged with the vampires of the High Coven. Is it possible that some of CS19’s had this gene in a dormant state and Sumar and you just did not detect it? It is really no different than what you and Sumar did on Lycavore.

Wayonn met her flame colored eyes and his own grew wider. “That’s it! That has to be it!” He finally exclaimed. “That has to be why the Scourge have halted! The total combined population of the Lycavorian species and vampires is in excess of twenty trillion alone. They do not know how many of them are Paladins!”

“Six months.” Martin said as he rose to his feet. “Eight tops.”

Wayonn looked at him. “What do you mean?”

“I agree what we are doing now is needed and necessary Wayonn.” Martin spoke. “I feel it within me just as you do. If however, after eight months we find nothing, then we are going back. I will not remain away and let my children and my friends fight a war with the Kavalians that I threw the first punch in.”

Training the Coven dragons. Arzoal spoke softly.

Martin nodded. “Eight months. That is all I am willing to spend out here among the stars searching for something or someone that may or may not exist.”

I agree. Arzoal spoke. In eight months the hatchlings will need to be set free in blue skies and clouds to truly evolve. And I believe as Martin does... for that decision was also partly mine as well.

Wayonn looked back and forth between them and finally nodded his head. “Then it will have to do.” He said.

Danny raised his hand. “Just one question folks... and this may seem minor really. Not important at all! Just a thought that crossed my mind.” Danny spoke. “Just how in the holy billy hell do we fight fucking bugs? No pressure mind you... I’d really like to know that. Just out of curiosity.”

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

They were sleeping soundly, Sadi on her back with Ne'Veha snuggled against her on one side and Carisia pressed to her other side with Lu'ria spooning Carisia from behind. The single sheet was disheveled, but it managed to cover most of their bodies from the coolness of the morning air. Carisia was the beneficiary of the body heat from both Sadi and Lu'ria which added to her warmth. The patio doors were open slightly and Andro was awake and holding a large mug of his mother’s coffee in his hand, the dragon medical scanner on his left arm active as he swept it over first Elynth and then Anthar and Majeir. The morning sun was above the horizon in the distance and basking everything it touched in warmth now. Sadi very slowly extracted herself from Ne'Veha and Carisia’s embrace and when she reached the foot of their bed she saw Ne'Veha move closer to Carisia and Lu'ria to regain the heat that Sadi’s body had given her. With a smile of love and affection Sadi got to her feet and reached for the thin robe on the back of the chair. She moved to the patio door padding silently and stopped when she could see him. The tremors of his conversation with Jomann had woken her and he would tell them what they discussed later she knew.

He had taken to wearing his body armor most of the time now and while the Mark IV ArmorPly conformed to his muscular body like a glove, he preferred to wear only his white pants and a loose shirt when he was here at the villa. He had not slept very well these last few days Sadi knew, the events and circumstances of everything that was happening keeping him very busy. Today was the first day where he would start without an early morning meeting and he was using it to do one of the things he enjoyed most Sadi knew, and that was to take care of Elynth and the other dragons that were now part of their family. Witnessing what they had in the Senate Convocation Building had stunned all of them. No one except Sadi and his other mates had known he had grown so much with his power and abilities, but even they were shocked at what they had seen. He had kept it secret from all his siblings and everyone else except for Denali. Now it was out in the open because he had become angry at the Kavalian ambassador's attitude toward the rape of his mother For'mya. Sadi had seen many Netnews reports on what had happened in the chamber that day and all of them eventually came back to what he had done. Sadi knew he was not yet fully comfortable with the Etheric power within him. The brief excerpts from the Ancient Pralor Tomes that she had seen in his thoughts had spoken of his responsibilities with this power. What he needed to do. How he needed to act. Androcles, Sadi knew, was not a man of inaction but the fact he had this power within him forced him to think about everything he did now and it caused him to hesitate in his decisions sometimes. That is what he did not like. He was learning to deal with it, as he did with everything, but it was frustrating for him at times.

Andro had told them of his discussion with Shiria and Deia and what they were going to do. He never kept anything from them and that was part of the reason they all loved him so. Though Sadi Leonidas knew that deep within him, he would choose her over all of them because they were Anomes, it was not something he or she would do willingly. He was like his father in so many ways, and loving each of them just as intensely as the other was part of his strength. Part of the reason that Sadi and all of them were so drawn to him. No other man could ever do to her, to all of them, what Andro did. He missed Caliria she knew, they all did. She was part of them now no matter the struggles she had within herself. Sadi had no doubts she would eventually realize she belonged with them. With Caliria part of them now, adding to them, Sadi had detected something a few days ago while they were in the Senate chamber. It was very faint, almost undetectable, but her own power and the influence of his aura in the chamber on all of them had caused them to feel it. Almost like another mind had joined with theirs for the briefest of moments. Sadi knew if they had felt it, then Andro had felt it as well, but it was not something he would bring up. She and the others had discussed it, for the presence had been female in nature and feeling that presence even for that brief instant had caused all of them to shiver in delight.

His resonance is much more calm and focused this morning. Lu'ria's voice filtered into her mind and Sadi turned to see their Drow Mistress move up next to her.

Lu'ria's glorious ebony body was still completely nude, her shimmering white hair falling far past her shoulders. They had explored each other's bodies intimately since coming together, Lu'ria's smooth ebony skin a delight for all of the to delve into, and to them having clothes on when it was just them was silly unless it was very cold. Since becoming wolf her body had taken on a much more muscular definition and as a proud Drow female she already reeked of sexuality. Her new figure had led to many nights of blissful pleasure even when Andro was not among them. She could be dominant or she could be submissive in their bed but no matter what she was always willing to give pleasure just as easily as receive it. Lu'ria sipped from the large mug of coffee before holding it out to Sadi as she pressed her ebony body against Sadi's side. They always had a large coffee machine in their quarters that was ready to brew on a moment's notice. With the exception of SirsanGai, all of them had developed a great like for Aricia's coffee. Ne'Veha still preferred the tea her grandmother had got her hooked on, which they now had plenty of at the villa.

Sadi nodded as she took the mug from her. Taking care of Elynth and the others has always done this for him. She answered as she sipped the hot, rich coffee. It will help to center him again.

He does not like having the lives of so many hinge on his commands and orders. Lu'ria said. My father and Am'uur saw that when they met. My father says it is a strength and that it will keep him on a path of moral righteousness.

Sadi looked at her. Lu'ria's father, her entire family really, had taken an immediate liking to Andro and all of them. Lu'ria was much ballyhooed within the Drow culture now, a celebrity of sorts, for she had four equally stunning women who referred to her as their Drow Mistress and she was the first pureblood Drow who had ever been changed into a wolf. Her body in wolf form was covered in a lustrous coat of soft, pure white hair and she was very nearly as large as Sadi while Ne'Veha was slightly smaller than them. Your father and Am'uur have left? She asked.

Lu'ria nodded. They took a ten member team. Most of them fought beside the King here on Earth. She looked at Sadi with those glittering amber colored eyes. Those who betrayed my people will pay for their actions. She said.

Sadi nodded. As well they should. She spoke.

The Krypteria had discovered that two very powerful merchants within The Wilds had been the ones who sold the information to the KFI about the location and routines of any of the Drow outposts that had been struck. In a move that was totally unexpected from Androcles, but which ended up garnering him almost as fierce a loyalty among the Drow as his father, he ordered the assassinations of these two men to be carried out by the Drow in retribution. He was not about to let them escape after helping to facilitate the rape and butchering of Drow females and small children among those the Kavalians killed with the help of these men. Aihola had approved of the mission and left it to Lu'ria's father and brother to execute the mission with her blessings.

What happens now Sadi? Lu'ria asked her.

His actions have bought us the time we need. Sadi answered. Now it is a matter of being able to consolidate what we have, reinforcing our strengths, addressing our weaknesses and ramping up our production.

So we will be remaining here on Earth? Lu'ria asked.

Sadi shrugged. There is no telling what he has planned. She answered. The part of his mind that formulates tactics and ideas is not one I will delve into. I tried once and it very nearly drove me crazy with his calculations and scenarios. I could keep nothing straight. I gave up finally. She said with a smile.

Lu'ria laughed softly. There have been many great military leaders in the history of Earth. Humans mostly, but no one ever wanted to analyze their minds either.

They both turned when they felt Ne'Veha and Carisia wake. As was usually the norm for Ne'Veha, she reached for the table console and turned on the Netnews. It was a running joke between them that she could not function without getting her daily dose of news. As she sat lotus style on the bed, Carisia settled next to her with a mug of coffee and one of tea. Ne'Veha kissed her softly in thanks and they both began watching. Sadi and Lu'ria grinned at one another but those grins vanished quickly as they felt Ne'Veha and Carisia's hearts begin to beat faster.

"SirsanGai?" Sadi called moving back into the room fully. "What is it?"

"That fool Senator Icho." Ne'Veha answered motioning to the monitor built into the wall. "He is giving a Netnews conference in Sparta."

Sadi and Lu'ria moved back into the room near the bed and turned to watch the monitor as Ne'Veha turned up the volume. They could see Ulana in the background as well as half a dozen other Senators.

"... Saying that you are one of those who voted against the implementation of Spartan Law and going to war with the Kavalian Federation Senator?" A reporter asked.

"Of course I did!" Icho answered. "War is not what is needed now. What we need to do is talk with the KFI. Find out what their issues are with us and address them accordingly. It is irresponsible for King Leonidas to leave the Prince in command while he gallivants across the stars doing something that none of us are aware of. This is what I have been saying for years. We need to think of reorganizing the Union government. Prime Minister Deia has been in power for too long and we have no need for a King. Especially one who has spoken publicly about how he does not want the job!"

"So you are willing to essentially give the Kavalian Federation a pass on killing nearly a thousand Union citizens in the bombing of the Senate Building? Not to mention the brutal killings of nearly three hundred Drow citizens of the Union." The same reporter asked.

“I’m saying we need to address why the KFI did this.” Icho spoke. “They had reasons for their actions! Reasons that we gave them. Prince Androcles has convinced everyone we need war to settle this. To get revenge for their actions. What drives the Prince to think this? We know very little about Prince Androcles... he has intentionally avoided most contact with the Netnews over the years. He orders the destruction of the Jump Gates around Hadaria, killing millions. He orders these surprise attacks against Kavalian forces who he says were preparing to invade... also killing millions. And his actions in the Senate Chamber behind me have to be explained. We all saw what he did. Where did these abilities come from? Why do we not know about them? And why has the School of the Mages been left out of the loop?”

“Seven times they have requested that the King’s children attend the School and each time they have been rebuffed. Why is this? What is the Leonidas family hiding? What is hidden within the Crown Princess’s past? We all know she was an agent for the High Coven! I have learned only recently that it was she who led the assassins to the Royal Palace on Apo Prime all those years ago! The same assassins that almost claimed the life of our Queen For’mya. Now she is Crown Princess of the Union! How is that? These are the things we need to know. These are the questions that need to be answered! We have now been plunged into a war with the Kavalian people while we make friends with those who have been our enemies since The Black Day! Two of our King’s sons have taken daughters of our vile enemies as their wives and mates! What are we to fathom from this reversal? I for one would like answers! As would many of those I represent and...”

“It’s starting.” Sadi said softly. “And that upae is there with him.” She finished her statement with a hiss of revulsion.

“It certainly is.” Andro’s voice echoed hers and they all turned to see him standing there in the room with them. “He can unquestionably play to a crowd don’t you think? And he is asking all the right questions too? How convenient don’t you think?”

“The right questions?” Ne’Veha asked looking at him. “What do you mean when you say that Saradasaar?” She asked.

“They are exactly the questions the Kavalians would want the answers to.” Andro said as he lifted his mug and sipped his own coffee. “Coincidence?” He asked. “I think not.”

“You think Icho is working for the Kavalians?” Sadi gasped.

“Laustinos wasn’t working alone that is for sure.” Andro answered her. “And the good Senator is in the perfect position to provide Laustinos many different types of information. So yes... I believe the good Senator is working for our enemies.”

Sadi looked at him as he moved to the COM panel in their room. “Andro what are you going to do?” She asked.

Andro grinned at her. “I’m going to make a couple of command decisions and then we are going to a Netnews conference my beautiful mates. I suggest you all get dressed.” He spoke as he stabbed down on the panel. “Command?”

“Durcunusaan Command Milord. Captain Feknar!”

“Patch me through to Assistant Director Marci.” Andro spoke. “Priority One.”

“Stand by Milord.” The officer spoke. “Patching her through now.”

Since the panel was audio only Andro typed several commands and then stepped back.

“Andro?” Marci’s voice spoke. “What’s wrong?”

“Are you seeing the Netnews Marci?” Andro asked.

“Armetus, Nesa and I are watching it now.” She answered.

“Good. Marci... how much funding does Icho’s family Engineering Firm get from the Union government?” He asked.

“They just received a proposed contract for a hundred billion a year times five, to develop and build a viable replacement for the M7 TEMPEST.” She answered. “We haven’t received a signed copy as of yet. Not to my knowledge anyway.”

“Really?” Andro asked. “That much?”

“Yes.”

“Pull it!” Andro ordered. “All of it! And void the contract.” Sadi looked at Lu’ria and the others with a large smile and beaming green eyes.

“Androcles...” Armetus’s voice broke in. “We will need to find a company to give that contract too. We need to continue the development of the fighters. Ben will scream if we do not.”

“Give it to MENKLA Manufacturing.” Andro said. “Sadi’s father no longer runs the company so it is not a conflict of interest. They have a larger construction base anyway do they not?”

“Very much so... yes.” Armetus answered.

“Then give it to MENKLA.” Andro said. “I will be arriving at the Senate Convocation Building in fifteen minutes. Have the voided contracts sent via my data pad.”

“Understood.” Marci spoke.

Andro looked at Sadi and the others. “Shall we go rock the boat as my father says?” He spoke with a grin.

SPARTA UNION SENATE CONVOCATION MEMORIAL BUILDING NETNEWS BRIEFING ROOM

“...attending the School of the Mages is not something required within Union space Senator.” The female reporter spoke.

“No it is not.” Ichō answered. “However, as far as I know, any child with Mindvoice abilities in excess of the norm has attended the school at their parent’s request. At least those parents that I have talked to in my district on Apo Prime. Many of them have asked my why the King’s own children do not attend the school. It is the foremost academy for teaching our children how to use their skills is it not? My many constituents want to know why, if it is good enough for their children, why isn’t it good enough for the King’s?”

“Senator... why the sudden interest in the King’s children?” Another reporter asked. “You have been on the Senate for over seven decades, before King Leonidas ever took power. You have remained silent until now. Why?”

“Prince Androcles has plunged us into a war with the Kavalian Federation!” Ichō replied. “A war of choice! I could sit back no longer and watch as his father and he took the Union in the wrong direction!”

“Senator... you and those who think like you are in a severe minority.” The same reporter spoke. “The outcome of the vote three days ago was very telling in that regard.”

“I believe it was because we were not given all the information we needed to make a sound decision.” Ichō spoke.

“So... are you calling the Prince a liar Senator?” The man continued.

“Certainly not!” Ichō popped. “I’m saying I believe he withheld information from the Senate that possible would have altered the decisions of many of my colleagues.”

“Senator Ichō... these accusations are quite inflammatory.” An elven female asked. “If you have such concerns... why did you not address them with the Prince in private instead of an open forum like this?”

“I believe the people have a right to know.” Ichō answered. “I have asked for an audience with the Prince four times in the last month alone and I have been rebuffed. Senator Ulana, a friend and former love interest of Androcles Leonidas has asked for an audience just as many times and received no reply.”

“Senator Ulana... is this true?” The reporter asked.

Ulana stepped up next to Ichō. “I have wanted to speak with Androcles for some time regarding our relationship. As many of you know, we were together for quite some time after the Evolli War. I was the one who comforted him and talked with him after the war. As soon as the Crown Princess came back into his life, he dismissed me out of hand. As if nothing existed between us. I found that very out of character for Androcles.”

“Are you implying that there is something else to this reaction that you say is out of character?” The reporter asked.

“I’m saying I know Androcles Leonidas to know he would not act in the way he did.” Ulana answered.

“You have heard what they said together many months ago no doubt.” The same reporter pressed on. “They are Anomes. Meant to be together by destiny and fate. This is something that is highly regarded by your people is it not? Why question that?”

Ulana smiled sarcastically. “Anomes are a myth of our people.” She spoke arrogantly. “No one believes in them anymore and there is nothing based in medical or scientific fact that supports this. Those who do adhere to this way of thinking are either uneducated or religious fanatics.”

This statement caught many of the reporters by surprise and some of them even looked to where Dilaen Roan was standing off to the side glaring in obvious anger at Icho and Ulana. She had not been informed of this Netnews Conference beforehand as was the procedure. It was a common courtesy for senators and others to inform the Royal family about such events if the topics that were going to be discussed concerned them or the policies of the Union in any way.

A Lycavorian reporter stood up now from the back. “Senator Ulana... you do realize that the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Sparta, as well as a good number throughout the Union believe deeply in what you are dismissing. Do you think it is appropriate for you to call them uneducated or fanatical because of what they believe?”

Ulana looked at him. “The Lycavorian people who settled here in Sparta are an offshoot of our people.” She answered. “They do not reflect the mainstream thinking of those men and women who live on Apo Prime or other worlds.”

“Are you sure about that Senator?” The man asked. “It seems to me that you are, in one way, demeaning the men and women who were born and raised here in Sparta. Lycavorians who were sent here by King Resumar to save them at the beginning of the Rebellion. He sent his own son King Leonidas himself here because he believed it a final act. A way to insure our people lived on. Since the return of King Leonidas, many of the Lycavorians who do not live here in Sparta have rediscovered their faith. Are you demeaning them as well?”

“I’m saying that there is no factual information that supports this claim of anomes and soulmates.” Ulana said in reply.

“And therefore it does not exist to you?” The reporter continued.

“I would rather trust my future and what I do to what I can prove.” Ulana stated. “Not some ancient and silly myth.”

“It is not a myth to many of our people Senator.” The man snapped at her.

“All I am saying is that I know Androcles Leonidas... and his actions were not part of his character back then.” Ulana said. “He dismissed me for a woman who led a group of assassins to his home to kill his elven mother. A woman whose past is... questionable to put it mildly. Given what we shared I...”

“You what Ulana?” Androcles’s voice echoed in the room causing all of their heads to turn towards the back of the room to see Andro standing in the open doorway. Sadi stood beside him, Carisia, Ne’Veha and Lu’ria on both either side of them. He had changed into his Mark IV ArmorPly, the crimson cape with gold trim falling to the floor from his shoulders. Sadi and the others were dressed in a similar manner, Sadi gripping his right hand tightly, Carisia his left.

Andro looked at Sadi. KertaGai?

Sadi’s eyes beamed at him and she smiled. Ulana and I will have a reckoning of our own Saradasaar. You can not stop that now. She spoke softly. I will deal with her in my own way. That does not mean you cannot defend your honor if it makes you feel better my love.

Andro chuckled and leaned over to kiss her. A lingering kiss of passion and love that was just as much for the benefit of the Netnews crews who were watching as well as Ulana. I promise I will act appropriately.

So will I. Sadi told him.

Andro turned back to the Netnews room and started up the center aisle towards where Ulana and Icho stood. Andro glanced to where Dilaen was standing with Thomas and he saw her shake her head, cross her arms over her ample chest and shoot him three fingers, meaning that Icho’s people had not let her know that they were going to do this and that at least three of the Netnews channels were privy to it before it began. Andro nodded his head and turned back to look at Icho as he walked closer. He let his eyes gaze across the men and women gathered in the Netnews conference room as he walked.

“Good morning everyone.” He spoke casually as he moved towards the podium. “Since the good Senator Icho did not deem it necessary out of courtesyness to inform my Chief Information Officer Dilaen Roan that he was going to have this little gathering, when I saw it on the Netnews I thought I might crash the party. I hope no one minds?”

Icho and Ulana watched as he mounted the podium stage with them while murmurs swept through the gathered reporters. Andro ignored Icho for the moment and looked at Ulana while shaking his head. “You are so far out of your realm of understanding Ulana that it isn’t even funny anymore.” He said softly to her though his voice carried to the first rows of reporters. “You don’t know me Ulana. You never knew me.”

Ulana’s eyes narrowed in anger. “You were mine!” She hissed softly. “I am five times the female she is! She is nothing more than a common tart!”

“I was never yours upae!” Andro snarled at her more loudly this time. “I have belonged to Sadi since I was eight months old! And she to me! You never understood that Ulana! You have never believed in that! Do not presume to think you know me because we laid together a few times Ulana! You have never known me! You will never know me! And to be honest... it was never that good anyway! You don’t hold a candle to any of my mates individually, let alone when they are all together!”

This statement was heard by nearly everyone in the large chamber for Andro’s voice had risen several decibels in anger. Eyes flew open across the room, Dilaen Roan’s hands went over her mouth in stunned shock and Sadi, Carisia, Ne’Veha and Lu’ria could not help but burst out in soft laughter at the rear of the room.

Icho stepped forward now, his own eyes filled with anger. “How dare you treat her in such a manner?” He snapped.

Andro met his gaze. “I will treat her exactly how she treats everyone around her Senator Icho! You and she have no right to stand there and judge what the vast majority of our people believe to be wrong because it does not fit into your perfect little world! Neither of you can even speak the ancient language of our people! You think it beneath you!” He barked right back at the man. He shoved the data pad into Icho’s chest. “Here is what I think of you old man.” He spoke harshly. “My father and I, the Leonidas family, we will not have a company whose owner and chief operating officer believes it is acceptable for the Kavalians to rape my mother and kill hundreds of our people because they questioned our action; we will not have them building the many fighters our pilots will go into combat with. Your contract with the Union government has been voided and the now MENKLA Manufacturing will build the ships we need.”

Icho’s eyes grew wide in disbelief “You can not do this!” He declared.

“It’s already done igord!” Andro spoke before turning away from him and moving to the podium and looking out at the shocked Netnews reporters. “You wish to know me?” He called out. “Here I am! I will give those of you in this room one question each! The good Senator Icho complains that no one knows me... well here I am. I will answer whatever questions you wish to ask to the best of my ability. Since none of you have had the time to prepare for this, your questions will be honest I hope. Before we begin let me say this...”

Androcles looked at Icho and Ulana for a long moment before turning back to the many faces before him. “I am a Lycavorian Spartan! I was born here in Sparta and the gods be willing I will die in Sparta! I am the Crown Prince yes... but as many of you know... I do not care for titles. I never have and I never will. I... I follow what is in here!” Andro pounded his chest over his heart with an armored fist. “As my Spartan father taught me! As the Spartans who knew my grandfather Leonidas taught my own father in this very city when he discovered who he truly was! I do not care what you think of me. Every action I have taken in my life... every decision I have made has been made with the best interests of the people of the Union at its center! That is what my father taught me! Our people come before all! I am no different from them except for the blood that runs in my veins! I would die for any of them with question! That is my purpose and role in this life!” Andro turned and looked at Icho. “Others may see something else...” He turned back to the reporters. “But they do not know me!”

Andro lifted his right hand slightly and picked the heavy podium up several inches with his Etheric power before tossing it across the room to smash against the far wall between two Durcunusaan troops who didn’t move an inch from their spots. The reporters all looked at him in shock. “You wish to know me?” Andro said as he settled to the edge of the stage and sat down casually. “KertaGai! SirsanGai! Enylarcopri! Ilythiiri Tessai!” He called out. Everyone watched as Sadi and the others moved forward confidently holding each other’s hands as they climbed up on the stage to settle beside him. Sadi on his right, Lu’ria on his left and Carisia and Ne'Veha on either side of them. "Our Inamarno is not here with us at this moment but we will stand for her as well. The time has come for the people of the Union to know what we have discovered these last months. Ask your questions. But know this... I will not reveal military decisions or plans nor will I discuss them. I do this because it protects our men and women out there now and our citizens as well. Sadi has agreed to allow you to ask questions about her past as the good Senator Icho has questioned so recently. Whatever may have happened it is in the past, and that is where it belongs... in the past. And that is where it will remain. You wish a window into me. Into my family. Now is your chance. I hope Senator Icho does not mind if I take over his Netnews conference?"

Small murmurs of laughter came from the gathered reporters as they pressed closer, many of them moving their assigned chairs closer to the stage, fascinated by this unheard of access to the one member of the Leonidas Royal family who had always shunned the Netnews at every turn.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

"And to be honest... it was never that good anyway!"

Shiria nearly lost the tea she was drinking as they heard that and she saw Deia pump her fist up and down once.

"That is the way to get the attention of a crowd and take control Mandri!" She gasped in delight. She turned her head quickly at Shiria's almost choking fit and she saw her, Thr'won and Panos looking at her with wide eyes. "What?" She spoke defensively. "I never liked that little upae anyway! Or that worm Icho!"

Shiria wiped her lips with her napkin before speaking. "He certainly knows how to get a person's undivided focus." She said. "Deia is this wise of him?"

"Androcles has always been the one that so many have wondered about." Thr'won spoke softly and saw Shiria turn to look at her. "He is Martin's oldest son. The heir to the throne. He has never been shy about displaying his distrust and outright dislike of the Netnews. Rightfully so really. Ever since he was a small boy they have always been curious about him. He is the enigma they have always asked about and were never able to get answers on. Do not doubt he knows exactly what he is doing Val'istar. By doing this... he neutralizes any enemies that may try to use Sadi's past against them. That is what Icho was trying to do. And by doing this... he is finally giving others a window into himself. To see what many of us have always seen. When he is done... he will have made far more allies than enemies. That is why he is doing it. He wants their trust. If he has their trust... he will have their support."

Panos nodded. "It's a brilliant move tactically speaking."

"And it will divert any attention from what we are doing." Deia said shaking his head. "That boy is too much like his father... no matter that he does not want to be."

Thr'won nodded her head in agreement. "That he is." She stated. "That he is."

UZU OZEIB 7

VENTASH'MA MEETING CHAMBERS

The windows had been repaired quickly, several tables now lined up against the far wall that held Danishes of all kinds and pitchers of Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos. For the first time in more than twenty thousand years, the men and women in this room did not fear their fate. They did not fear the dozen Immortal Guards that stood along the edges of the room. They had never been allowed in this chamber before, but now things were different. No one in the room feared for their life. The Immortals were present because they had sworn themselves to the protection of Narice and the Ventash'ma for the good of the Coven and Akruxian people. Three speeches Narice had made since the Ventash'ma had overwhelmingly named her Empress of the High Coven with their full support. Two of the speeches had explained to the citizens of the Coven what she was doing to insure their existence into the future. By now, word had reached to every corner of the Coven about Admiral Pontal leading High Coven forces against the Kavalians and doing so with ten Fleet Groups of Lycavorians fighting beside them every step of the way. The word of Androcles Leonidas had proven true and now the combined Coven and Lycavorian forces were methodically taking back planets lost decades ago in the initial invasion. The light of hope could not change the atmosphere of their planet, but it had made the hopes and spirits of so many soar higher and louder than at any time in the Coven's long history. The reaction and emotion of their people had breached millennia of distrust and caution and touched the men and women of the Ventash'ma allowing them to finally see that this should have been done long ago. It would not be easy going forward they knew... but their personal influence and power had only grown for the decisions they had made in the last few days and it was far sweeter than it had ever been. Now they were actually looked up to and not reviled. All of them had decided either in groups or by themselves that they needed to see this through. That this is what they should have done millennia ago.

The three holograms in the center of the table were Pontal, Riall and Cha'talla as they made their daily report. Narice sat at one head of the table, Toria and Felisa on either side of her. Datarik sat at the other head. He had been put forth as Chief of the Ventash'ma by Narice and the vote had been unanimous across the board. Something that had never happened before.

"...pressing on all fronts." Pontal reported. "If all goes according to plan... we should retake Acewea and Taett by the end of the week."

Riall nodded from his office on his own ship. "And we will have secured Kabjell and the forward Coven shipyards by the same time."

"How much more can you reclaim Admiral?" Narice asked.

"The Kavalians are not putting up much of a fight, but forward reconnaissance indicates they have stop retreating and begun digging in along the Cuwa-rue and Yiyala 4 Systems." Pontal answered. "They still have substantial forces however."

Arrarn pushed off from the wall where he had been standing next to Ki'nuq. "Too much." Arrarn spoke loud enough for them to hear him.

Narice turned and looked at him. "Arrarn?" She asked. He had been a rock for her these last days. He had grown so much in only the last two weeks, yet his humor and sharp wit was still there.

"We are taking too much." Arrarn said moving closer to her. "We won't be able to defend it all if they counterattack. We need to stop and circle our wagons."

"Circle our wagons?" Datarik asked from his chair. "What does this expression mean Arrarn Leonidas?"

"I realize that I am not as experienced as you or my grandfather Admiral Pontal... but I have learned quite a bit from watching my father and brother work." Arrarn spoke. "Everything has happened quickly. Perhaps too quickly. We..." Arrarn stopped talking and looked around the room. "I'm sorry... I didn't mean to overstep my bounds. I shouldn't have said anything."

It was Ventash'ma Riara who spoke next. "No!" He barked. "I wish to hear what it is you have to say young Leonidas. You are in a unique position. You are outside these events and looking in at everything that has happened. Your only concern is for your Blessed Wife Narice. We on the other hand are inside looking out. Tell us what you see young Arrarn Leonidas. I think I speak for all of us that we have entered a new age and we are not all knowing. We need young and fresh ideas. Tell us... what does this circle our wagons mean?"

Arrarn looked first to Narice who was staring back at him with beaming dark eyes and a dazzling smile. He then looked to Riall in the transmission. "Grandfather?" He asked.

"Tell them." Riall said.

Arrarn moved up next to Narice. "It is an ancient Earth term... but one that has worked well in the past. It is how the Union survived against the Coven for so long just after the Rebellion began though they had a different term for it. We have taken nineteen planets back but our forces are stretched out across seven systems. Not bad right now... but if we try to take back more it will become dangerous. It is the same tactic my brother is using now within the Union."

"Time." Cha'talla spoke now.

Arrarn nodded. "Yes. We don't know how much of the Coven military is still supporting Moran at the moment. Yuri is a non-factor as we all know. But Moran is still a threat. We don't know how many support him."

"My people tell me he has at least eight Fleet Groups." Pontal spoke.

“Eight Fleet Groups that he can turn against us at any time.” Arrarn spoke. “I don’t think he is going to care that if he attack us, it only weakens us to the Kavalians. And he still has Dante with him and we don’t know what he is capable of.”

“Because of the same blackness that infected Yuri?” Toria asked.

Arrarn nodded. “We all saw it first or second hand. Everyone in this room. Some of you may not believe in it completely... but you are opened minded enough to at least consider it.”

“What do you propose Arrarn Leonidas?” Pontal asked.

“Circle our wagons Admiral. Consolidate our gains. Reinforce everything we have taken. Get the people back on their feet. Make each and every planet we have taken back a virtual nightmare to attack again.” Arrarn told them. “We have millions and millions of tactical mines that we aren’t using correct grandfather?”

Riall nodded and leaned forward in his chair as he began to see what Arrarn was saying. “Yes we do.” He answered. “As well as defensive fortifications that we have in storage.”

“Instead of trying to reclaim the old High Coven border... let’s make a new one. At least for right now.” Arrarn said. “Mine the shit out of the coreward side of our gains. Shift the PDPs you have guarding planets closer to Uzu Ozeib 7 further out. If the Kavalians want to attempt to take these planets back, we make sure they know the price in blood is going to be too high no matter how many clones and ships they throw at it.”

“So you did listen to the many hours of lessons you got?” Riall exclaimed.

Arrarn smiled. “Of course I did grandfather. Just don’t tell father or Andro. I’ll lose my reputation of being an airhead.”

Riall laughed at this. “Your secret is safe with me.” He spoke. “It is a sound and proven plan. If we move quickly... the Kavalians will not be able to shift enough of their forces into any one area to stage a serious counterattack.”

Pontal nodded. “Thank you Arrarn Leonidas.” He spoke. “I was becoming so revitalized by our victories that I almost lost my sense. How soon can we shift our own assets and get the rest from the Union.”

Arrarn grinned. “Andro is my brother sir. I just happened to have a direct line to him.” He said. “I’m not really doing anything right now. I don’t think Narice is going to be jumping across the stars anytime soon and I’m sitting on my hands. That’s kind of boring for someone like me. I can coordinate the move and where to send the assets if you like.”

Pontal looked at Narice from his own ship. “Empress... the decision is yours and the Ventash'ma’s... but with our current disposition we could implement it easily. Do you agree Riall?”

“Yes.” Riall answered.

Narice looked at his image. “How long can you stay Admiral?” She asked.

“I have a reserved force standing by to enter Coven space.” Riall spoke. “Personally... I would like to remain until Andro calls me back. I’ll be honest... I have fought the Coven for the better part of my entire life and I’d be lying if I said it doesn’t feel downright invigorating to work with you instead of against you. We’ve been where you are now Narice. We can help.”

Narice looked at the men and women at the table. “Do the Ventash'ma have anything to say?” She asked. “Other options perhaps?”

“I don’t think we have many of those open to us right now.” Anebal spoke. “Admiral Pontal... do you disagree?”

Pontal shook his head. “No.”

“Then I move we go forward with Arrarn Leonidas’s plan as he put forth.” Anebal spoke.

Datarik nodded. “As do I.”

Narice nodded. “So be it.” She said.

“I will shift a battalion of Immortals to each location.” Cha’talla spoke. “Narice I will also divide the Coven dragons as well. Given the fear the Kavalians have of our dragon brothers... even two or three on the surface of a planet will give them additional pause.”

Narice nodded. “Very well. We’ll speak again in the morning and advise everyone of the status.” She spoke. “I would like a moment with just the Ventash'ma before we begin the rest of our day.”

Datarik and the others looked at one another as the room began to clear. Narice rose to her feet and moved to the table to refill her glass before turning back.

“I believe we have some decisions to make.” She spoke. “And I will not make them without the consent of the Ventash'ma.” She moved back to her chair. “Let’s talk.”

CHAPTER EIGHTY-FIVE

AUSTROVA

COREN RE MYDALA’S OFFICE

Coren lowered the pad he was reading and looked at Dutkne. “You are certain about these individuals?” He asked.

Dutkne nodded his head. “I’m certain.” He answered. “Drey and I haven’t been able to ascertain just how they are involved, but they are.”

“Two of these men are part of your government Dutkne.” Coren stated.

Dutkne nodded. “Yes they are.” He replied. “And I will make examples of them all.”

Coren got to his feet and moved to the counter pouring himself a glass of wine. “Wine?” He asked Dutkne.

Dutkne shook his head. “No. Thank you though.”

Coren turned and looked at him once more, sipping the wine before speaking. “As much as I struggle with everything I have thought and felt for your people Dutkne... I can’t help but see just how wrong I may have been all these years. I watched every single bit of the interview Androcles did you know. He is a supremely complex young man.”

Dutkne nodded. “That he is.”

“Why would he do such a thing? Over three hours they took questions.” Coren asked. “It was obvious to me that this Icho character was attempting to impugn that somehow Sadi Leonidas was not what she truly is. Revealing what was involved in her past was not something they needed to do.”

“He knows there are people within the Union government who do not like his father and mothers or they change they have brought.” Dutkne spoke. “Better to face the problem head on and make it something they can’t use. Icho was trying to inject suspicion about Sadi. He may have succeeded in some fashion, but addressing it as they did eliminates all those who are not fanatics.” Dutkne looked at him. “We have not been on the best of terms Regent Re Mydala... I will be the first to admit that... but my people as a whole are not enemies of the Vanari. It may seem that Androcles is harsh and cruel... but you must remember what the Lycavorians of the Union endured for so many years. In many ways it is similar to what the Vanari have endured over the decades and centuries. Slavery is abhorrent to my people, more so to those within the Union. This mentality has carried over to the vast majority of the species within the Union, many of whom have been with them since the very beginning. The Spartan way of life was embraced by many more who are not Lycavorian.”

Coren looked at him. “His father is the same way?” Coren asked.

Dutkne nodded. “If what my grandfather has told me is true, very much so.” Dutkne got up and moved across the room to stand in front of Coren. “Coren... you will not lose your children. The virus within our blood that changes a person can not be transferred to a Vanari. That is a medical fact and you know that. Our ability to Mindvoice can be passed to a Vanari if they are touched by a Lycavorian strong enough within Mindvoice to make a connection. You’ve seen that already with Caliria. We treasure our wives and mates Coren. They are the future. Do you honestly think Andro cares that any child he and Caliria may have will look like her and not him?”

“What?” Coren asked.

Dutkne nodded. “I had a long talk with Eliani after we rescued Caliria. The virus in our blood can’t change a Vanari, and any child born of a Lycavorian and Vanari union would carry the Vanari pigmentation in their skin. They may be half Lycavorian, have our added strength and endurance and skills, but they will look like a Vanari.”

“And this... this would not bother you?” Coren asked.

Dutkne laughed softly. "Our children are sacred to us as well... second only to those who give us those children. It would not make a lick of difference. Caliria, Arduri, even Naesta... they are still your daughters and will always remain so. Meaning no disrespect sir... perhaps now is the time to fully let go of what you have believed up until now and start being more open minded. Let our actions and beliefs show you that everything you have believed is false. At least for the vast majority of our people."

Coren looked at him. "That you admit there are those among your people who act as I have always believed tells me that you are sincere Dutkne."

"I hope that is a good thing sir." Dutkne spoke. "We would be far better friends and allies than enemies."

Coren nodded. "Yes... I'm seeing that. However... it appears that there are others within the Board of Regents who have latched onto my way of thinking and pushed it even further to advance their own goals."

"Have you identified anyone suspect?" Dutkne threw the question out there not really expecting Coren Re Mydala to answer him. Coren's answer surprised him to say the least.

"Seven that I am certain are involved." Coren answered returning to his chair now. "Two of them on the SBR... including Ardan."

Dutkne was silent knowing the relationship between the two men and how far it went back. After a moment he met Coren's eyes. "You are sure?"

Coren nodded. "Yes. As much as it pains me to say that." He answered. "Caliria also contacted me and told me the Eridiani human male she was seeing before she was taken has magically reappeared. He said he was forced to return to the Eridiani homeworld when his father realized that he was seeing Caliria. He swears he had nothing to do with her being taken by the OSG. She met him for lunch and he gave her a pad with several Lycavorian names." He lifted the pad and handed it to him.

Dutkne took the pad. "I take it you don't trust him from the tone of your voice."

Coren snorted. "I trust the Eridiani even less than I did the Lycavorians before all of this happened." He spoke.

Dutkne looked at the pad. "Did she reveal anything to him?" Dutkne asked. "About what we are doing?"

Coren shook his head quickly. "She may have had feelings for him before, but she is very wary of him now. I don't think she trusts him in the least. That is the sense I got from her anyway. She is head strong and will do things her way, but earning her trust now would be an infinitely hard thing to do." He answered. "And surprisingly... he didn't ask."

"He didn't ask?" Dutkne said moving back to his own chair. "Why does that not bestow a whole lot of trust in me?"

Coren smiled. "Yes... I said the same thing." He told him.

"This is a lot deeper than we first realized Coren... you do see that?" Dutkne asked.

Coren nodded. "Very much so." He answered him. "I suppose it should not surprise me considering how long it has been going on. The SBR keeps coming up with excuses to not meet with Denali as well. They are stalling for time."

Dutkne nodded his head. "They realize that Androcles will do exactly as he says he will by severing all ties to the Vanari."

Coren looked at him. "The loss of our many trading contracts with the Protectorate would cost us billions in annual revenue." He said. "We would not be able to make that up in other ways without a retooling of many of our industries. That would take years and force us to open talks with several species that we do not usually associate with. It frightens them. Androcles frightens them."

"Yeah... he does that to a lot of people." Dutkne said with a smile. "It can be a hindrance at times."

"Interacting with these other species would not benefit our people. We would have to open up Vanari space to their use, allow them to land on our planets and colonies. That is not something that the SBR wants to do." Coren said. "All of them at one point or another have tried to take what they want by force or coercion. They failed."

Dutkne nodded. "Because most of them consider the Alkay the Vanari secrete a valuable tool of espionage and they want it for their own purposes. Or they don't trust your people because of it."

Coren nodded slightly surprised as he looked at Dutkne. "Yes." He said.

Dutkne saw the look on his face and smiled. "I may have hated my duties as Director General... but that doesn't mean I didn't know them to the best of my abilities sir."

Coren nodded with a small smile. "Of course."

"We need to catch them red handed sir." Dutkne spoke. "Your people won't believe it otherwise."

"I agree." Coren said. "The question remains... how do we do that?"

"Ardan has told no one that the Union developed a counteragent to the OSG chemical?" Dutkne asked.

Coren nodded. "Which to me is the biggest sign of his involvement."

"Has he approached you about it?" Dutkne asked.

Coren shook his head. "No. And I doubt he will. I believe he is waiting for Denali or Lisisa to reveal this publicly, and then he will have all the ammunition he needs to prove that the Lycavorians are guilty of conspiring to enslave us. He would turn the entire board against you, all the while protecting himself and those others who are selling our people."

"Could he be doing that right now... behind closed doors?" Dutkne asked.

Coren shook his head. "No. I would hear about it. I have built relationships with these men and women while I neglected my family and pushed my daughter away because of the color of her hair. They know me... they trust me. Any one of them would come to me before giving their support to Ardan in dismissing the Protectorate and now the Union. I know it."

"I will trust you in that regard sir... all I ask is that you take precautions." Dutkne spoke. "Ardan, if he is involved as deeply as both of us believe, he would not hesitate to have the OSG or the Lycavorians working with him to stage some sort of attack against you to show we can not be trusted."

Coren nodded. "I have thought of that as well. I know Denali has some of your people watching me from the shadows. I have not seen them as I move about so I can only assume those who are watching me are some of the vampires within your ranks that are so adept at using the shadows and moving about unseen."

"They are there to protect you Coren." Dutkne said. "That was Andro's order."

Coren met his eyes. "He ordered me protected? Even after what he believes I feel about him and his people?"

Dutkne nodded. "That ought to tell you what kind of man he is."

Coren nodded. "Indeed it does." He said. "If Ardan moves against me he will employ Lycavorians, of that I am sure." He said. "It would be another example of why we can not trust your people."

"Why not the OSG?" Dutkne asked.

"The Eridiani here on Austrova are constantly watched by Vanari Intelligence." Coren answered. "Anything out of the ordinary that they do immediately gets sent up the chain. That goes directly to the VI Director. A man who I happen to be excellent friends with."

"And you trust him?" Dutkne asked.

"I should... he is my brother's oldest son." Coren answered. "No... Ardan would not use OSG people for this. He is trying to insure the selling of my people continues. He will use your people. In this way he can put forth to the board that we need to reach out to others to..." Coren stopped talking. "That's it." He said coming to his feet.

Dutkne looked at him. "Sir."

"If Ardan can prove to the SBR and the entire Vanari Board of Regents that Lycavorians are the enemy he can get them to void our trade contracts with the Protectorate himself!" Coren gasped.

"Wait! You just said that would be a bad thing." Dutkne said. "Why would he want to do that?"

Coren looked at him. "Then it forces us to do exactly what we don't want to do! It forces us to open our borders to species we don't want to deal with because of their past transgressions towards our females." Coren answered. "And it gives him an avenue to further his wealth by having other buyers for our females." Coren's eyes grew wider. "And it puts him in a position to dispose Alrerin Sha Harael as First Regent! Ardan is next in line!"

Dutkne's eyes grew a little wider as well now. "He wants to take over the government?" He gasped.

"It has to be!" Coren hissed. "Why else go through all of this and take such a long time developing it all? He must have been planning this for years!"

"This... Coren if what you say is true... this changes things a great deal." Dutkne spoke.

“Indeed it does.” Coren spoke looking at him. “I must speak with Denali Leonidas. As soon as possible Dutkne.”

Dutkne got to his feet. “Let’s go.”

DEIA’S OFFICE SPARTA

“... Bold move Andro.” Deia told him as she finished pouring him a mug of his mother’s coffee. Her temporary office was crowded with six people in addition to her and Androcles, two of whom were not human. Avi and 341 stood to one side of the room, while Shiria and Resumar occupied the two chairs closest to them. It seemed that wherever Resumar went now, one of the hulking avatars was beside him. Thr'won sat on the small couch with Panos.

Andro accepted the mug from his aunt and nodded. “He’s a nubous traitor Tenna.” He told her. “This way I have put him on the defensive. I don’t know how long he has been helping the Kavalians and Laustinos, but long enough to influence many others and turn them to his way of thinking. Since I can not move against him without direct proof, I used the provisions of Spartan Law to dictate military logistics. It was a sound move all around to be honest.”

Deia looked at him. “Ulana?”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders and they all could see he was truly at a loss when it came to discussing her. “I don’t know Tenna. I think Ulana is motivated by something else. She truly believes herself superior to Sadi. She’s acting stupid and I need to avoid her as best I am able.”

“There is an old saying from here on earth.” Thr'won spoke softly smiling at Andro’s obvious ignorance of what was motivating Ulana. “There is nothing more dangerous than a woman scorned.”

Andro looked at her. “I acted honorably with her Val'istar.” He spoke softly. “I never disrespected her in any way.”

Thr'won shook her head. She had never been able to break him of the habit of referring to her as Val'istar. He had always held her in great regard and this was his way of showing her just how important she was to the overall scheme of things. While Thr'won was not as powerful as say Helen or himself, her Mindvoice abilities were quite superior to most others. She had spent nearly a decade learning all she could from Helen, and now she was the second most influential graduate of the School of the Mages behind only Helen herself. When Thr'won spoke, men and women listened. Her mate of nearly a thousand years had turned her long ago and she had fallen hopelessly in love with the much older Spartan. Now after six hundred years together and three children, Thr'won was the Senior Mage of Sparta, a feat that was a first of its kind in Sparta’s long history.

Deia looked at Panos and a flicker of understanding passed between them. [He has no idea does he?] She reached out to Panos.

Panos shook his head minutely. [I don’t believe he does.] He answered. [Even I do not understand the nuances of the females of our species Deia. As my mate tells me so often.]

[She’s obsessed with him.] Deia spoke. [He doesn’t know what kind of draw he has over women but he is just like his father. Women would slaughter and maim over them. I once heard Anja threaten to sew a female’s opening shut with fifty year old leather dipped in feces if she kept pursuing Martin. I don’t know what it is that makes their women so devoted but it is far more than normal. It will come to blows Panos.]

[Then so be it Deia.] Panos answered.

[Sadi will kill her you know.] Deia spoke. [I’ve seen the way she looks at Andro. They way they all look at him. If Ulana steps across that line she is towing right now, Sadi will end her in a very vicious fashion.]

[There is nothing we can do there.] Panos spoke. [The instincts of our people are strong Deia and there are times when we need to let them out. If Ulana pushes Sadi too far, then we just need to step back and let nature take its course.]

Deia nodded. [You are right.] She said softly. [I just hope it’s not too bloody.]

“I understand that Andro.” Thr'won answered bringing them back into the main part of the conversation. “No one believes otherwise no matter what Ulana says. I’m just telling you how Ulana is thinking. You left her for another woman. For Sadi. Ulana is arrogant to the extreme. She is wealthy, beautiful and she believes she is better than everyone else. She truly can not understand what you see in Sadi that makes her better.”

“That’s an understatement.” Resumar snorted. “She’s a real uppity upae.”

Thr'won chuckled and nodded her head. She had been part of the birth of every Leonidas child up until Dorian, and she knew each of them well. “That is a most accurate description Res.” She told him. “That is also what makes her dangerous. She will not let this go. She has it in her mind that you belong to her Andro. She will not let this go until it comes to blows with Sadi I’m afraid.”

Andro sipped his coffee and looked at her. “That would be a singularly stupid thing for her to do.” He said. “I only found this out a few days ago, Sadi and Ne’Veha both felt they wanted to know more after seeing what happen with my mother. Lu’ria and Carisia have been instructing them in the finer points of hand to hand combat. They are working out nearly every day.”

Panos laughed now and shook his head. “Then they will be just as deadly as they are beautiful.” He stated. “Oh... I wish to be there for that confrontation.”

Deia sat down. “They didn’t tell you?” She asked.

Andro shook his head. “No.”

“Drow trained Princesses?” Thr'won spoke softly. “A lethal mix if I do say so myself. And one that I would not want to be on the receiving end of.”

“Better check under your pillow every night fervon.” Resumar told him with a laugh. “And be very careful you don’t piss them off.”

Andro smiled. “Tell me about it.” He said. He turned back to Deia now. “What is it you wanted to see us all for Tenna?”

“Shiria and I have put together a plan.” Deia said as she too sat back down gingerly in her chair. She still used her hover chair for long periods of time but she was getting stronger by the day and moving around more and more under her own power.

Shiria leaned forward now and spoke for the first time. “We believe that we have found a suitable way to detect anyone who may carry the Paladin gene whether it be active or dormant. It is a medical gene and therefore we can scan for it from orbit of a planet with one of the Pralor long range corvettes that SPARTA’S WRATH carries. I spoke with Eliani and she has localized and centered the systems on two corvettes with Avi and 341’s help to detect and focus on this particular gene.”

Androcles nodded. “Ok... why did you need to see me?”

“I want to begin recruiting them Androcles.” Shiria said.

“You?” Andro gasped. “No way! Absolutely not!” His voice carried considerable heat in it and this surprised Shiria and she sat back.

“And why not may I ask?” Shiria spoke finally.

“Who you are is beginning to spread Val’istar! It may be of my doing but it would have begun sooner or later!” Andro told her. “Hell... you can’t miss that SPARTA’S WRATH is in orbit! How can anyone miss a ship that is seven kilometers long and unlike anything we have ever built! That we did not build that ship is obvious, and sooner or later they will put two and two together! They will know you are from the species that built that ship! Who you are is beginning to spread Shiria and I will not risk you for some silly undertaking!”

“I am perfectly capable of taking care of myself Androcles Leonidas.” Shiria spoke very defensively. “And this is not a silly undertaking!”

Andro shook his head. “That is not what I meant and you know it!” He snapped. “Once Keleru discovers who you are and that you are the one who encouraged Athani to defect, that it was you all of these years, that you were hiding SPARTA’S WRATH from him, he will make capturing you a priority! He will want the secrets you have in your head and he will come after them!” Andro told her. “It’s what I would do! We do not know the full extent of those who sympathized with Ichu and his ilk. We...” Andro stopped talking for a moment as if something had just occurred to him and got to his feet. He set his coffee on the table and moved to the window that provided a beautiful background of the Evrotas River as it wound its way through Sparta.

Shiria was about to open her mouth and respond but felt Resumar and Thr'won both rested their hands on her arms. Thr'won shook her head quickly indicating that she should say nothing. Andro looked at his hands as he held them up in front of him. He could feel the Etheric power surging through him. He had felt it for years now, just as his father had and like his father he had tried to pass it off as advanced Mindvoice abilities. It filled him with strength and confidence and purpose. It was a power that he did not truly understand until he began reading the Tomes of his Pralor grandfather. A power gifted to him and his father and now he knew so few others. A power that could help him protect and serve those who looked to him. Those that looked to his father and their family. He had only caught a few fleeting images and sounds from his grandfather Sumar's memories that he gotten from his father's own memories, but he knew that his father could see more. What he had seen, it had frightened Androcles. It frightened him right down to his core because it made Alba Tau look like a picnic in comparison. Andro turned back and looked not at Shiria but Avi and 341.

"Avi... can you and 341 integrate Shroud Mark Nine Shields into the Pralor Corvettes?" Andro asked.

-Easily Androcles Leonidas-

"The ships are armed as well?" Andro asked.

It was 341 who answered. -They carry a standard complement of weapons for a Pralor Corvette. Ten batteries and four torpedo bays-

"What is the crew complement?" Andro asked.

-Eighty-three standard- 341 answered.

"How many does SPARTA'S WRATH carry?" Andro asked.

-Seven that are fully functional. Two that had their power cores removed to enhance the PILLAR OF FAITH- Avi answered.

Andro nodded. "Avi... I want two of them configured with Mark Nine Shrouds and any additional weapons you and 341 think could supplement what they have. Scan the service records of the Durcunusaan and the Drow. Assigned an additional twenty to each ship. Small unit operations experience a must. Preferably those who have seen combat. I already know who will command them and I will give you their names."

Avi nodded his head. -I will see to the modifications-

"341... you will be accompanying SPARTA'S WRATH to Dreamland. My Uncle Ben is looking forward to meeting and working with you." Andro said.

-I am to be removed from combat- 341 asked surprising everyone with the tone of his voice. It almost sounded as if he was hurt.

Andro shook his head. "Only for the short term." He answered. "You are more familiar with SPARTA'S WRATH and her systems. I need you to help Uncle Ben disseminate what you learned in the Farnuri Expanse, and then I want you to help him in finding ways to augment our normal systems with Pralor technology that can be done quickly. Or something to that effect. During the same time you will be picking and training members to bring SPARTA'S WRATH to a full crew complement. You will have access to the entire Union database of personnel. I will leave it up to you to choose who you think best suits the tasks in running her. The next time you go into battle I want you worrying about the weapons systems and leaving the rest to others. It's your ship."

341 blinked several times as he processed what Andro said. -Forgive me if my inquiry is incorrect Androcles Leonidas... but it processes within my neural systems that you are placing me in command of SPARTA'S WRATH-

Andro nodded. "I suppose I am in a way. Can you think of someone better for the job at this time?"

-Processing- 341 spoke. –Analysis complete. You are correct-

Andro smiled. “I do get some thing rights once in a while.” He said looking at Shiria. “You will have your ships Val'istar. Anything you need you will have. Tenna Deia will be here on Earth coordinating your efforts. You are too important for us to risk Val'istar. Understand I will give you free reign until you act recklessly. Then I will order you back here.”

Shiria came to her feet. “I am perfectly capable of taking care of myself!” She snapped.

“I don’t question that.” Andro said. “What you need to understand is that you are the only pure Pralor left alive. I will not put you in harm’s way for any reason. My father would not allow this, and neither will I. You will not fight me on this or I will lock you within a villa in Gytheio under guard.”

“You wouldn’t dare!” Shiria snapped as she came to her feet. “I am not helpless young man! I am...”

Andro lifted his hand and suddenly Shiria was lifted into the air, encased in a light blue aura. Her eyes grew wide at this and she realized that she couldn’t move. She glared daggers at Androcles which bounced harmlessly off him, but that glare contained a fair amount of respect as well now. Andro stepped closer to her, looking at her as he held her within the Etheric field. “You are not helpless Val'istar... no. But you are also not a warrior. You are a scientist and we need you. Now more than ever with what is coming. What those of us in this room know is coming. You have a reckless streak within you Val'istar, so please do not fight me on this. You will not win no matter what you do.”

Shiria glared at him knowing he spoke the truth. He could easily overpower her no matter what she did simply by the dominance of the blood of Sumar in his veins. “I... I need to do this Androcles.” She managed to finally stammer. “I sat back... I was sent away while my people died! I need to do this!”

Androcles nodded and released her, gently lowering her back to the floor. “I know. That is why I’m going to give you the means to be reckless Val'istar. Only it won’t be you actually doing it.”

Shiria looked at him puzzled. “I don’t understand.”

“You will.” He said. “You will. Those who you find are not to be told why they are being selected. At least not yet. When you find them, have them assigned to your command. A Secret training mission. They will be sent to the Dragon Brigade facility to wait. When you have all of them then my father or I will talk with them. They must know what it is they are being chosen for and given the option to accept it or not.” He turned to Resumar. “Once Avi and 341 have done the refits... you and Athani are to take one of the corvettes and return Mican, Pian and Jalersi to the Val'istar’s fortress. From there you and Pian will coordinate the rebels with Mican. Uncle Isra will remain with you to command the section of the Dragon Brigade but Tenna Tarifa needs to remain here and begin acting in her role as Governor of Sparta or the Kavalians will begin to wonder. As will others. Her absence will be a liability we can not afford.”

Resumar nodded. “I understand.” He said. “The PILLAR OF FAITH’S Strike Group?”

“It is your Strike Group fervon. They go where you go. I’m also assigning two OMEN ships to your command. Keep them apart from the Kavalian forces but give Pian full access to their abilities.” Andro said. “Establish a supply list that has whatever you can use before you depart.”

“Uncle Vonis?” Resumar asked.

“I have plans for Uncle Vonis.” Andro spoke. “At the moment I do not want to reveal too much for they are not fully formulated.”

Resumar nodded. “Works for me.” He said.

“Avi... you will go to Dreamland as well for the time being.” Andro said.

-My mission?-

Andro looked at him a moment. “Our shipbuilding capabilities are no where near what the Kavalians have because of their clones. I want you to find a way to create more of the Worker Drones to help us in building our own ships and merging the Pralor technology into them. Is that possible?”

Avi nodded his head, his red eyes blinking several times. He looked at Andro. –It would require access to the power core of SPARTA’S WRATH for a short time, but yes I believe it can be done-

“Then do it.” Andro said.

-This will not take much time Androcles- Avi said. -The Worker Drones are fairly easy to replicate. What am I to do after?-

Andro looked at him. “Five city ships crashed with yours Avi.” Andro said. “We know the fate of four of them. I need you to find the fifth. I need you to find that fifth ship and then we will pray it is reasonably intact.”

RICOT FOUR THE WILDS

Am'uur lowered the body of the Kochab mercenary silently to the ground, his throat neatly sliced from side to side. He held the foul smell mercenary in his death throes, before driving his Drow combat blade deep into his lower back, twisting the blade up to insure he died. The body was cooling quickly as all Kochab did when life left them. Am'uur lifted his hand with a clenched fist and raised two fingers. Two more Drow appeared from the shadows behind him and dashed forward with only the brushing of fabric on the ground to indicate any sound. Am'uur turned when his father settled beside him clutching the silenced version of the venerable HK74 that the Drow had adopted for these types of operations. The former SEAL Team Twelve weapon was perfect for them as it combined excellent stopping power and near silent slide action. All of the Drow in Am'uur's team were equipped with them, as well as silenced K14 Magnums and their personal assortment of knives.

There were seven of them assigned for this operation. The first of three such operations they would conduct before returning to Earth. They had been meticulously planned, each of Am'uur's Drow warriors knowing exactly what they were doing. His father had come because he was just as skilled as the younger warriors and he had vowed to Daba and his daughter that he would have retribution for what had happened to their people. Daba had wept as he held her and gave him her blessing only telling him to return to her safely. She and Ceneia needed him to return. Androcles had granted them their retribution and his as well Teya thought. To return to his beautiful Daba and her new elven lover would be worth remaining alive.

The Evolli they were after right now had sold information to the Kavalians in regards to two of the Drow outposts destroyed. He had done business with the Drow before and though they had always treated him fairly and with respect even after the Evolli war, he had chosen to betray them.

“That is guard four.” Teya spoke in barely a whisper.

Am'uur nodded to his father. “There should only be two more between us and the Evolli in his chambers.”

Teya grinned. “Do not be so quick to launch yourself into the fray my son.” He spoke with a grin flashing his white teeth. “I am too old to die for something stupid. If you would be so kind as to confirm with the lovely blue skinned Vanari woman you have taken as your wife I would appreciate it.”

“You don't trust me?” Am'uur asked with a grin.

Teya shook his head. “Not at all my son. I just trust her more.”

Am'uur shook his head and tapped his jaw. “Tastia?” He spoke softly. “What is our status now?”

“Thermal and motion sensors are detecting only the two remaining roving guards Am'uur my love.” Tastia answered. She had refused to be left behind after discovering what being with the ebony skinned Drow elf had meant to her. Tastia had never imagined she would discover such a man in her lifetime. Now that she had... she wasn't about to let anything happen to him. Her decision to remain had angered Coren immensely, but he knew as well as she did that their time together was long over. Tastia's skills in piloting and manipulating sensors were incredible to say the least and she fit in perfectly with the two Drow pilots of their corvette.

“Explain to me again how you got her to fall for you Am'uur my son? She is far more refined than you.” Teya asked his son.

“I heard that Teya.” Tastia’s voice echoed softly.

Teya smiled when Am'uur’s chest swelled with pride. “I am only asking a question.” He said.

“Perhaps it is because he makes me shudder in his arms when he makes love to me. Or it could be that he tastes delicious and the difference in the color of our skin is divine.” Tastia spoke. “Or the fact that his ears are so...”

“Enough!” Teya announced softly shaking his head in amusement. “I do not need the intimate details Tastia!”

“You asked.” Tastia answered him matter-of-factly from the Drow Interceptor Corvette in orbit. “Vanari are not shy about our sexuality Teya. Especially when we discover a man such as your son.”

“Yes... I am beginning to see that.” Teya spoke. “A fine Drow wife you will make Tastia of the Vanari.”

“Thank you.” Tastia said. “Now shall we continue with our task?”

“Indeed.” Teya spoke. “Time to deliver our message.”

“Renin and Itelli have eliminated the two remaining roving guards Am'uur.” Tastia spoke. “You are clear all the way into his chamber.”

“How many inside with him?” Am'uur asked.

“Three.” Tastia answered immediately.

“Very well. Stand by to pick us up at the LZ.” Am'uur told her. He looked at his father. “Shall we Ilharn?” (Father)

Teya grinned. “We shall ussta dalharuk.” He answered. (My son)

The Evolli they were speaking of was currently eating his dinner with three of his trusted lieutenants. He had come far since the Evolli War, barely escaping with his life. He had started up his business shortly after the war, choosing the life of an information trader and enterprising entrepreneur. He never dealt with Lycavorians or their allies because he still held a substantial amount of hate and distrust of them for their actions during the war. He completely discounted the fact that the Evolli were the ones who started the war after they felt they were slighted, or the fact that they killed thousands of innocent Lycavorian Union citizens and forced even more into brutal labor camps. He had built his organization from the ground up, and was doing quite good for himself when the Kavalians approached him about the Drow within The Wilds and what he knew of them. He knew from his experience in the war that Drow rarely left Earth, and the majority of them were almost fanatically loyal the Lycavorian King. He always suspected the Drow within The Wilds to be more than they appeared and this is the information he had given to the Kavalians at substantial profit.

His sins would catch up to him this night.

His eyes lifted as both doors to his chamber opened at the same time and he saw a rush of shimmering white hair and dark skin. His lieutenants were the best he could find, two other Evolli and a Kochab mercenary. They were ruthless and totally loyal to him because he paid so well. They did not come close to the seven black clad apparitions that rushed into his chamber with all the inbred speed of the elven species. He saw the tall for an elf Drow male step up to him and he could not avoid the butt stroke from the strange but wicked looking rifle as it connected with his jaw and sent him tumbling backwards out of his chair, pain registering all through his brain. He briefly thought about how they had gotten past his guards, but then Am'uur was grabbing his collar and yanking him to his feet dazed. He was shoved back into the chair and his eyes saw his three men with weapons jammed into their faces and chests. His beady yellow eyes cut to the doorway as the older Drow male walked in. He thought it strange that no females were among the team of Drow and did not understand the significance of that.

“What is this?” He roared finally getting his mind working again. “Do you know who I am?”

Am'uur hit him with an open palm slap hard enough to rock his head painfully to the left and sending pain lancing through his neck. “Shut up scum!” He snarled.

Teya smiled as he walked up to the Evolli in the chair. His son’s men impressed him. He had not seen such precision since he had fought in the Battle for Earth with the King’s forces. He looked at the Evolli in the chair and stopped two feet from where he sat.

“You are the Evolli fool called Sdunn.” Teya asked.

“Fuck you Drow!” Sdunn spat at him. “You’ll pay for this! This is The Wilds! You can’t come here!”

Teya smiled at the man as he drew out the long bladed Drow fighting knife. “You are wrong Evolli.” He spoke with a deathly calm. “You sold information to the Kavalian dogs that allowed them to kill and rape and butcher our people. That was an infinitely unintelligent thing to do!”

“It was business!” Sdunn shouted his eyes wide in fear now as he realized what was going to happen. “Information is my business! It wasn’t personal!”

Teya looked at him. “It is personal to Soul Slayer and he does not agree.” He spoke in a soft voice.

Sdunn’s eyes grew wide. “Soul Slayer?” He gasped in horror.

Teya smiled then. “Yes. It is good you remember that name fool. This is not business to us Evolli scum. This... what we are about to do... this is personal. To Soul Slayer and to us. It is deeply personal. A pity for you.”

“You can’t do this!” Sdunn screamed.

“Oh... but we can. And the other two traders of information that betrayed the Drow and Soul Slayer. They will suffer the same fate as you... have no worries. You just happened to be the closest.” Teya spoke. “Soul Slayer sends his regards by the way.” Teya spoke as he stepped closer. Sdunn struggled against Am’uur’s powerful grip holding him in the chair. “You may scream if you wish.” Teya spoke. “It will not matter.”

“No!” Sdunn roared. “No I...”

Teya lifted his blade and the screams of agony began.

LENTANI ROTHRYN HOMEWORLD

She guided Sehri easily through the throngs of men and women crowding the streets going about their daily lives of shopping or work. Lentani was a planet slightly larger than Earth, but much more heavily populated. Oceans only took up half of the planet and allowed for more development than the planet the Rothryn had originally come from nearly fifty thousand years ago. Their original planet had become the largest colony world of the Rothryn now, while Lentani was their government and population center. Sehri allowed her to maneuver them through the groups of men and women and children into the clothing store and into the rear of the building. They moved into a small storage room with no exit and Sehri watched as she lifted her arm and called her SensorTool from Flatspace. She typed a code into the holographic tool and a small section of wall activated, lifting up into the ceiling to reveal a staircase that spiraled down. They entered immediately and the section of wall fell back into place seamlessly.

Ilossa looked at Sehri as they began to descend the stairs and she smiled. The soft spoken young woman was calm and confident in her actions, just as all her instructors had said she was. She was supremely intelligent and her surreal beauty was completely devastating. Coupled with her lush body, which was encased in a form fitting dress wrap under the cloak and cowl, Ilossa wondered how her father and mother kept the young men at bay when it came to her. Her glaucous colored blue eyes were enrapturing, and filled with wisdom. Very little rattled her and she had no desire for male companionship at this time it appeared. That would change in time Ilossa knew, especially if the right man came along who stirred her female aura in that way. It was enough for a Shaman of such a young age to hold such control over her natural instincts, but combined with her obvious Etheric abilities, it was overly impressive as far as Ilossa was concerned.

Sehri had been brought to their organization by Praetor Dyack himself. It had frightened the members of their group until they realized that Dyack and his mate Aleatia believed as they did. The Rothryn Academy had become nothing more than a means for powerful old men to exert their control over men and women who showed more promise than they did when it came to Etheric abilities. When Sehri began to show signs of such advanced abilities at so young an age, the Praetor had brought her to them immediately to keep her out of the clutches of the Rothryn Academy. She was incredibly gifted and surpassed even several of the Shaman Masters in raw Etheric power. Ilossa had no doubts she would ascend to Shaman Master far sooner than any before her. Ilossa turned her head back forward as she led her down the stairs into the secret complex. At the bottom of the stairs they were greeted by a short corridor leading to another door. This one was steel reinforced and appeared very heavy. Ilossa walked right up to it and once more called her SensorTool from Flatspace, entering in another code. The door clicked once and began to swing open. She and Sehri waited until it was fully open and they were looking at two men and a woman dressed as they were in long cloaks and cowls. Behind them stood an additional three young men armed to the teeth.

“Cleric Mother.” The older of the three men spoke holding out his hands.

Ilossa smiled as she took those hands. “Shaman Master Lassim.” Ilossa spoke with a smile. “It is so very good to see you.”

The tall Rothryn smiled as she squeezed his hands. “It has been some time Ilossa.” He spoke.

“Nearly a year.” Ilossa told him looking at the other man and woman. “Shaman Master Harira. Shaman Master Shael.”

The woman smiled. “It is an honor to be among you again Cleric Mother.” Harira spoke warmly.

Ilossa smiled. “It is an honor to be among all of you.” She turned to Sehri. “I present Shaman Sehri... daughter to Praetor Dyack and Aleatia. It is she who has set our course in action.”

Harira stepped forward and took Sehri’s hands. “Our blessings to you child.” She spoke just as warmly.

Sehri bowed her head. “It is a true honor Shaman Master Harira.”

Harira reached up and ran her fingers across Sehri’s cheek with an affectionate smile. “I see the claims of your beauty do not do you justice young lady.” She spoke. “The young males must drool at your feet.”

Sehri smiled. “It is unbecoming of them Shaman Master.”

Harira laughed. “And you possess a sharp wit and tongue!” She spoke squeezing Sehri’s hands tighter. “Oh child... that is refreshing.”

The second man leaned over and planted a soft kiss on Ilossa’s cheek. “We have been monitoring Vanari Communications grandmother.” He spoke with respect. “There has been another transmission from the Alpha Quadrant.”

Ilossa looked keenly at her oldest son’s first born child. “Unsecured Shael?” She asked surprised.

“It apparently was something of a spectacle within Union space. Since arriving in Vanari space the Union ships have been feeding public news broadcasts to the Vanari with the SBR’s permission. Unencrypted and using QCR tech. It was fascinating. The SBR agreed to this which was a surprise, but we believe it is only so they can use it against them in the end. We have been cataloging the transmission into sections for easy access.”

Ilossa looked at him and then the others. “What do you mean it was a spectacle?” She asked.

“It appears that Shaman Sehri was correct Ilossa.” Lassim told her. “The intercepted communications was some sort of interview or conference the Union Prince was giving. Sehri was correct. It is the Prophecy.”

“Show us!” Ilossa gasped.

Lassim motioned with his arm and they moved down another corridor into a massive room with a very advanced QCR system built into the center of the control core. Half a dozen Shaman apprentices operated the three different control panels.

“Apprentice Shatar... replay the first section.” Lassim spoke.

The entire room lit up with the activation of the holo generators and suddenly they were standing among what appeared to be hundreds of men and women that were seated in neat rows all facing the elevated podium where the young man sat with four equally stunning females, two on either side of him. Ilossa heard Sehri gasp and she turned to look at her.

“Sehri?”

“That’s... that’s him Cleric Mother!” She hissed softly staring at those mesmerizing azure blue eyes. “The one I saw in my mind. It’s all of them. Minus the Vanari Caliria.”

“He has taken a Vanari as one of his mates?” Lassim gasped.

Sehri nodded. “As has his brother Denali. Yes. Both of them daughters to Regent Re Mydala.”

“Regent Re Mydala? He is one of the most powerful and influential members of the SBR.” Shael spoke.

Lassim nodded. “Indeed he is.” He spoke turning back to the transmission. “From what we have seen so far of this Prince, he is having to fight elements within his own government and people who do not believe as he does. This took place a day ago. He just appeared at this function, something that he apparently does not do very often if the commentary of the reporters is accurate. Based on the channel and frequency modulation of this transmission we have been able to tune one of our QCR relays to monitor this traffic from Union space ourselves.”

“The Union ships around Austrova did not try to stop the transmission?” Ilossa asked.

Lassim shook his head. “No. They were beaming it to the planet in fact. Apparently they are trying to make inroads with the Vanari as a whole. We have compared the transmission Sehri sent to us with other transmissions from this frequency and everything is as she said it was. This Lycavorian Union has declared war against a species called the Kavalians. A feline like species like the one that was killed.”

Ilossa looked at him. “The manner of his death?”

Lassim looked at Sehri and then back to her. “For lack of a better description Cleric Mother... this Prince Androcles... he crushed him within the grips of Etheric power unlike anything I have ever seen before. It was...”

“Andro.” Sehri said in barely a whisper.

Ilossa looked at her once more. “Sehri?”

“He prefers to be called Andro.” Sehri spoke quickly. “No one calls him Androcles except his family and only when they are angry with something he has done. Sadi... his KertaGai... she calls him Androcles when she...” Sehri stopped talking and suddenly became very embarrassed.

“How do you know this child?” Lassim asked.

Sehri met his eyes. “I don’t know Shaman Master... I just do.”

“KertaGai means Eternal Heart Cleric Mother.” Shael spoke. “It is the ancient language just as the Tomes spoke of.”

“Then they speak the ancient language?” Ilossa asked.

Shael nodded. “It appears many within the Union do. He referred to names in the ancient language for all of them except the dark skinned one. He used a language we are not familiar with for her. Ilythiiri Tessai he called her.”

Ilossa looked at Sehri. “Sehri?”

“It is the ancient language of the vampires of the High Coven.” Sehri answered her question. “It means Drow Blossom.”

“You understand this?” Lassim asked stunned.

“Yes Shaman Master.” Sehri spoke.

“Cleric Mother... this is not... Sehri is not a Shaman Master.” Lassim spoke evenly to her. “How could this be? The Prophecy... it spoke of first contact being made with the Bearer of the Prophecy and a Shaman Master. Sehri... she knows things that... she knows things that she should not.”

Ilossa nodded. “Apparently the Prophecy was wrong; or slightly misinterpreted through the years.” She said. “It is only a guide to what we believe will happen Lassim. Not everything is set in stone. There is a reason Sehri is seeing these... visions if you will. A reason she can sense him... all of them on so deep a level.”

“I was there Shaman Master!” Sehri urged him. “I was there for a fleeting moment awash within the minds and auras of him... all of them. I know what I felt and saw Shaman Master Lassim.”

Lassim nodded his head moving over next to her and placing his hand on her arm. “I do not question your visions or your feelings Sehri.” He spoke to her quickly. “Your skills and abilities are well known to all of us. You are much more attuned to the ebb and flow of Etheric power than many Shaman Masters double your age from all accounts. Do not mistake my questions for doubt of you.”

Sehri dropped her eyes quickly. “Forgive me.” She said.

“There is nothing to forgive child.” He spoke.

“We are certain this is Etheric power we are seeing?” Ilossa asked. “There is no mistake here?”

“It can be nothing else grandmother.” Shael spoke.

“It was gruesome.” Harira spoke softly. “He didn’t blink... he didn’t pause. He simply went ahead and crushed this man.”

“What is more important is during this briefing he mentions the Ancient Ones several times.” Lassim spoke again moving to stand beside her. “And he puts a name to them Ilossa! He called them Pralors. If what he said is to be believed then it is as we originally feared, the Ancient Ones, these Pralor, they are extinct now. But their blood and DNA lives on within many of those Lycavorians inside the Union. And so do the miracles of their technology. He spoke of a ship designed and built by these Pralors that orbits his planet. And how they have derived much of their own technology from this.”

“So the Prophecy is true to its design.” Ilossa whispered softly. “He has the blood of the Ancient Ones within him. This means all of his family does.” She looked at Lassim. “All we have hoped for is true. They are us and we are them! The Prophecy that we would one day be reunited with them is coming true.”

Lassim nodded his head. “After all these millennia we have finally found them.” He said softly.

Ilossa turned to Sehri. “You must return to your father and tell him this Sehri.” She said. “Tell him the Prophecy is true. And the Bearer of the Prophecy has made himself known to us. Through you.”

Sehri stepped closer to her. “The Rothryn Scientific Academy will denounce this as soon as it goes public Cleric Mother.” She said. “They have dismissed the Prophecy for centuries. They will not change their minds easily, if at all. They will denounce this fervently.”

“Then we will keep the knowledge within our ranks and your father until the time is right. Sehri you must ask your father to obtain a sample of their DNA. Preferably from this Androcles.” Ilossa spoke. “He appears to be the strongest that we have seen so far. His DNA will tell us the truth of everything.”

Lassim nodded. “His father is off world somewhere he will not reveal. He only told these news people that he is doing something that needs to be done to secure the future of their Union and its people. He did not go into specifics. A sample of his father’s DNA would be the best as he is King and would have the closest ties to the Ancient’s bloodlines, but this Andro will do for now. Their own broadcasts have said he is the strongest behind only his father.”

Sehri looked at him. “What about from the brother who is on Austrova? Denali is his name.” She asked.

Ilossa nodded. “We can use that as a barometer but what we need is his DNA.” She spoke motioning to the frozen image of Androcles.

Sehri looked at her. “Cleric Mother... the only way to do that without causing an incident is to tell them the Prophecy. You have seen bits of his personality through what I have shown you. He will not just hand over his DNA or that of any of his family. He won’t.” She said. “My father is already concerned that Anroth will inform Barnak of what they have discovered up until now. He is wary that Barnak will attempt some misguided action to try and obtain what he wants. What he has always wanted.”

Ilossa nodded. “The ability to manifest Etheric power into the physical realm. To use it as a weapon as this Androcles has shown can be done. In order to use it and push his family to rebel against your father’s rule and claim the leadership of our people himself.”

“Yes Cleric Mother.” Sehri said.

“Barnak is a fool and that is why your father leads us. Barnak may attempt something in regards to her once it is realized she is the conduit to this Androcles.” Harira spoke. “Cleric Mother I request that I accompany Sehri back to Austrova. It is obvious to all of us that the Bearer of the Prophecy has touched her, at least in some manner, and he may well again in the future. Perhaps my skills will be better suited in helping her to try and establish a more definitive connection to him as well as be added protection for her.”

Ilossa looked at Sehri. “The decision is yours child.” She spoke. “I will not force you to move this forward if you choose not to.”

Sehri shook her head quickly. “I want to Cleric Mother.” She answered quickly. “I...” Sehri paused for a long moment embarrassed by the flush that coursed through her or saying anything in front of Lassim and Shael.

Harira took her hand causing Sehri to look at her. [He stirs you child? Doesn’t he?] She asked.

Sehri nodded instantly. [In so many ways Shaman Master. They all do. I want... I want them all. But... but then I don’t. Does that make sense?]

Harira nodded. [Indeed it does.] She turned to Ilossa. “Cleric Mother?” She asked.

Ilossa nodded. “See to your transportation back.” She said. “Try to get Praetor Dyack to grant you a meeting with this Denali Leonidas. According to Sehri’s earlier report, his brother is coming here to the Beta Quadrant at some point in the near future to finalize the merger of the Protectorate into the Lycavorian Union.”

“They are merging?” Lassim gasped.

Ilossa nodded. “Yes... I was surprised as well.”

“We have never had good relations with the Protectorate Cleric Mother.” Shael said.

“For reasons which we never understood.” Ilossa answered. “Now we do. The Bearer of the Prophecy was never among them as we thought. He was among these Lycavorians from the Alpha Quadrant. Their merging is not a surprise to me.”

“And the Vanari?” Shael asked her. “They have never really cared for those in the Protectorate.”

“The Vanari are arrogant fools.” Ilossa spoke. “Their Board of Regents sells their own people into slavery. At least quite a few of them know of it anyway. The OSG is no threat to us, and the Eridiani know not to play games with your father Sehri. He has already showed them the error of their ways once.” Sehri looked at her confused and she smiled. “Ask him about it sometime. It happened many years ago, long before Kelelm was even born.”

“Andro has threatened to void all of their trade contracts with the Vanari.” Sehri spoke.

Ilossa looked at her. “Truly? For what purpose?”

Sehri shrugged. “I do not know. My father has asked about it but the Vanari are being very closed mouth about it.”

“That is a very large portion of their annual income.” Lassim spoke. “I could try and find out with my contacts among the Vanari.”

Ilossa nodded. “Be discrete Lassim.” She spoke. “That information will not be public knowledge just yet. And to know why he has threatened this would be interesting. The more we discover about this young man the more I like him.” She said with a smile. “He has a certain backbone about him that is lacking among many of our own kind and the Vanari.”

Harira took Sehri’s arm. “Come child... there is still time to catch the last transport to the starport and take your ship back to Austrova.”

“Sehri... report anything you believe to be relevant.” Ilossa said. “I will keep you advised of what we discover after viewing these transmissions.”

Sehri bowed her head. “As you wish Cleric Mother.” She stated.

“Go with the gods Cleric Mother.” Harira said.

“Both of you as well.” Ilossa spoke as Harira took Sehri’s hand and they began to leave. She turned back to Lassim quickly. “I want to view this entire briefing Lassim. Do we have it all recorded?”

Shael nodded. “I’ll start it from the beginning.” He said.

AUSTROVA

VANARI GUEST HOUSE

“Are you sure about this Regent Re Mydala?” Deni asked as they sat in the large main room.

Coren nodded. “There can be no other reason.” He stated. “I’ve known Ardan for the better part of a thousand years; I know what he is capable of. When it comes to politics and advancing his goals he can be ruthless.”

“Selling our people into slavery father? Ardan?” Arduri asked from the spot on the couch to Deni’s left. Lisisa sat on his right.

“Yes... selling them into slavery.” He stated. “If it ultimately gets him to the position he wants then yes... it is exactly something he would do.”

“Does the First Regent know?” Arduri asked.

Coren shook his head. “Not yet. I came here first. Alrerin Sha Harael is a fine man but he follows too closely the letter of the law as First Regent. Ardan’s actions will directly affect the status of the Lycavorian people however Denali Leonidas. All of these years I have believed one thing and I have been blind to what my own people are doing right under my own nose. It makes me sick to my stomach!”

“There are those among our people that have still wronged the Vanari Coren Re Mydala.” Dutkne spoke from the side.

Coren nodded. “Yes. But it is a tiny fraction of your people and ones who do not adhere to the values I have come to realize that the majority of your people do. I have hated your kind for so long it has blinded me to the truth!” He hissed angrily. “And it may well have doomed my people!”

“No!” Arduri exclaimed coming to her feet now. “Deni... there must be something we can do!”

“The security teams that we brought have strict rules Duri.” Denali answered using the nickname he had come to start calling her. “They are to insure your father’s safety... not actively take part in espionage against the Vanari. That is not something Andro would allow.”

“It is not espionage if I authorize it.” Coren spoke. “We... we must stop Ardan and those who are working with him or he will lead my people to ruin Denali Leonidas. If he somehow becomes First Regent he could very well alter the balance of power within the Beta Quadrant and he would most certainly use the information we unwittingly gave to him to bolster his position against the Protectorate specifically and Lycavorians generally.”

Denali looked at him for a long moment. “Does the Vanari Empire pose a military threat to the Protectorate?” Deni asked looking at Dutkne.

Dutkne shook his head. “Meaning no offense Coren... but no.” He answered. “They have an equal number of ships, but my people drill and train harder everyday. They have few combat experienced officers. Their ground forces are slightly larger in size, but aside from their Vanari Commandos, many of them have never seen combat in any form. Certainly never against one of us.”

Coren looked at him. “That makes a difference?” He asked.

Dutkne nodded his head. “We may have learned how to curb the more feral instincts of our species Coren, but in battle we have also learned how to harness those same instincts.”

The communications panel next to the couch chimed and Lisisa reached for it. “Yes?”

“Princess... the Rothryn Praetor and his son are here requesting an audience with Prince Denali.” The voice of the Durcunusaan trooper spoke.

Lisisa looked quickly at Deni with surprise in her eyes. “Deni?” She asked.

Denali looked at Dutkne. “This is unexpected.” He spoke.

“There is already a relationship established with Coren.” Dutkne thought quickly. “It would not look odd if he is here. You can’t refuse him as the leader of his people. It would be seen as a major slight.”

Deni looked at Lisisa and nodded. She touched the panel. “You may show them in Commander.” She spoke getting to her feet.

“Why would the Rothryn want to meet with you?” Coren asked.

Deni looked at him. “The Rothryn are Lycavorian Coren.” He answered. “The only difference between us is that they can’t shift. You must have noticed the similarities through the years?”

Coren nodded with wide eyes. “Of course... but we never thought... are you sure?”

Lisisa nodded. “Eliani can confirm it when she arrives with Andro, but we are reasonably sure that is the case. It would explain a lot of things really.”

“The dislike between the Rothryn and the Protectorate?” Coren asked looking at Dutkne.

Dutkne nodded. “We suspected for many years but never had opportunity or reason to confirm this. They were not exactly happy to see us the few times we have run across each other in the past.”

They became silent as the Durcunusaan trooper led Dyack and Kelelm into the main room where they came up surprised that Coren and Dutkne were present.

“Forgive me.” Dyack spoke. “I wasn't aware you already had guests.” He stated.

“Praetor Dyack... it’s a pleasure.” Denali spoke moving closer to him. “What brings you here?”

Dyack glanced at Coren and Dutkne before looking back at Denali. “I was hoping to discuss something of a private nature Prince Denali.” He spoke finally. “I can return at a later time if you are busy?”

Deni shook his head completely out of his realm now. “No... please stay. What can I do for you?”

Dyack met his eyes. “It is of a private nature as I said.” He stated calmly but with a tinge of anger in his voice.

Kelelm heard this and also knew from the expression on Deni’s face that he was lost. He stepped forward quickly. “You are not use to diplomatic missions are you?” He asked with a smile.

Deni met his eyes. “No. No... I am not.” He answered honestly.

Kelelm nodded. “Neither was I.” He stated with a smile. Though he was considerably older than Denali he knew just what he was talking about. He was also a shrewd negotiator and from the looks on their faces he could decipher what it was they were talking about. “I assume that Regent Re Mydala is not here visiting his daughter?”

“We were discussing private matters as well!” Coren hissed.

“Papa!” Arduri exclaimed moving closer to him and placing her hands on his arms. He had changed in these last weeks. Slowly she could see a different man emerging from the distrustful and angry man he had been these last years. Perhaps his eyes had truly been opened with all that had happened.

Coren looked quickly to where she touched him and he could not hide the emotions that poured through him when he felt her hands on his arm. “Arduri.” He said softly looking into her stunning green eyes.

Dyack knew immediately what his son was doing and he saw an opening that could provide benefits to all of them if he played his cards right. He stepped forward closer to Denali. “I can infer from the presence of Regent Re Mydala and Director General Dutkne that you were discussing security measures and more than likely how to end the selling of Vanari females into slavery.”

They all looked at him with wide eyes and it was Kelelm who chuckled. “We are not without eyes and ears.” He said.

“You... you know?” Deni asked in shock.

Dyack nodded. “The OSG approached us many years ago about buying Vanari females.” He answered. He held up his hand when Coren began to speak. “Do not worry Regent Re Mydala, I told them exactly where to stick their offer. They were not happy to say the least. We do not believe in slavery of any kind among my people. After they departed, we did a very small investigation and came to the conclusion that someone within your government was assisting the OSG. Something that I think you may have just come to realize.” He said looking at Coren.

Coren met his eyes and nodded his head after a long moment. “It seems many more know of this than my own people.” He said.

Dyack moved closer. “Do not regret not believing members of your own people capable of such thing Regent Re Mydala. I have a similar issue among my own people...” He looked at Denali. “Which is why I have come here now.”

Deni canted his head. “Really?”

“Perhaps there is something we can do for you.” Dyack said. “And in exchange... we would want something in return.”

Denali held up his hands. “Whoa! Stop right there!” He snapped. “No way I’m making the call on this!” He moved to the COM panel. “Prince Denali to ARCHDEMON. Secure... three nine Lisisa, four one Arduri.”

“COMs secure!” The voice answered. “This is Lieutenant Hopla sire! Senior COM Duty Officer.”

“Initiate a secure QCR COM with my brother on Earth Lieutenant.” Deni spoke firmly. “Find him! Interrupt him if you have too. I need to speak with him right now!”

“Stand by Milord. Prince Androcles’s schedule is still forwarded to us in daily reports.” The voice answered. “It is 0730 on Earth Milord. He is still on Cranae Island. I’ll initiate the COM center there and connect you. Stand by.”

“... Is wrong Deni?” The deep voice echoed as the holo transmission engaged and the room they were in flickered suddenly and the figure of Andro appeared sitting on the couch in the private area of his villa. He was shirtless, for it was still early and he wore just his white pants and held a mug of their mother’s coffee in his hand, a data pad in the other. “Have you broken something already fervon?”

Deni chuckled upon seeing his brother and watched as Andro looked up and saw who was with him in the transmission. His coffee mug stopped as it was rising and he set the pad to the side.

“Not exactly.” Deni answered.

Andro glanced at Coren. “Is it Caliria? Is something wrong with Inamarno?” He asked quickly.

Coren shook his head just as quickly, seeing the genuine concern in his face and hearing it in his voice. “No Androcles.” He stated quickly. “There is nothing wrong.” He paused for a moment. “You should contact her... I know... I know she misses all of you terribly.”

“Part of her returning with you was to discover what it was she wanted sir.” Andro answered.

“Contacting her will only make matters worse as much as I want to see and talk to her.”

Coren nodded. “I understand.” He said.

Andro rose to his feet now and his azure eyes fell upon Dyack and Kelelm. “Fervon... I assume that if the Praetor of the Rothryn people and his oldest son are present, there is probably something you have not told me.”

Dyack looked at the image of the young man before him. Even within the transmission he exuded power and confidence. The black flaming bird tattooed to his abdomen only enhanced that persona, as well as the odd shaped symbol on his upper right chest that looked as if it had been burned into his skin. It was oddly shaped like one of the razor like talons he had seen on the dragons that had arrived with Denali Leonidas. Three small scars dotted his upper left chest which Dyack recognized immediately as some kind of weapons fire. He sighed an internal sigh, thankful that he was going to speak to a young man who knew about combat. A young man who could speak from experience unlike his own son Anroth who thought he was better than fellow officers even though he had never tasted combat.

“Andro... things have become more complicated than we first thought.” Deni spoke moving around next to Dyack and drawing his thoughts away from his internal observations. “Coren believes... and to be honest most of the evidence is supporting his theory... that Ardan is at the top or very close to the top of the conspiracy within the Vanari government in selling their people. He also believes Ardan is making a play for leadership of the Vanari Empire.”

Andro’s eyes went to Lisisa. “Arande... you concur with Deni?” He asked.

Lisisa stepped up beside Deni and nodded knowing that Andro only asked because they were so closely tied together. “Yes.”

“Arduri? Coren?” He asked.

Arduri nodded and Coren shook his head. “As much as it pains me to admit. Yes.”

Andro saw Dyack’s son lean close to his father and whisper something. He turned his head back to them. “Something Praetor Dyack?” He asked.

Dyack shook his head quickly. “No Prince Leonidas... Kelelm was simply telling me what Arande means. I am not as well versed in the Ancient Language as some of my children, a situation I will remedy as soon as I am able.”

Andro’s head canted slightly. “Forn echta vada allsknes nimerd of the Lycavorians?” Andro asked him surprised. (You speak the ancient language?)

Kelelm nodded his head. “The... the dialect you use is slightly different than what we have been taught... but amazingly it is almost identical. It is rarely spoken among our people now; it is too difficult to learn. Our history teachers refer to it as the Ancient Language. They never knew its origins. You are saying it is the language of your people.”

Andro nodded slowly. “Spoken over fifty thousand years ago and lost during our long years as slaves to the High Coven. Lost except for those Lycavorians born and raised in Sparta, It is rapidly making a comeback here in the Union... but you are correct... it is difficult to learn. It requires commitment and interest.”

Kelelm smiled as he looked at his father. “Another sign that what we believe is true father.” He said.

Dyack nodded. “Indeed it is.”

“Very interesting.” Andro said looking at the man. “That would imply that my brother was very correct in his initial assessment of you and your people Praetor Dyack.” Andro said softly.

“You... you have me at a disadvantage Prince Androcles.” Dyack spoke. “I do not know what your brother reported to you after our dinner. It was cut rather short once we witnessed your display.”

“You saw that?” Andro asked.

Dyack nodded his head. “An impressive feat to say the least.” He said.

“He told me that in his opinion and given everything he has seen and smelled that the Rothryn people are not so different from my own.” Andro spoke. “And in fact we may even be genetically related after some fashion.”

Dyack nodded his head slowly. “There is a legend among my people if you will indulge me. A Prophecy if you will.” He said stepping forward. “That one day we would be reunited with those of our own kind that we were taken from so long ago. It is a legend... a myth really. Very few of my people believe it anymore. I thought it was simply a myth... at least I thought it was, until I witnessed what I did. The Prophecy of the Ancient Ones said we would one day be reunited as a whole with our brothers and sisters. And that they would return what the Ancient Ones took from us.”

“What did they take?” The female voice asked and they watched Andro turn and hold out his hand.

Dyack and Kelelm watched as Sadi came into the transmission now, Andro drawing her close and sharing a soft nibbling kiss. He held her close to him, dressed as she was in her usual robe, and looked back to Dyack. Dyack and his son were both quite taken by her almost surreal beauty and grace and Dyack was stunned at how her demeanor mirrored that of Sehri. A very confident woman not only in her movements but also her station.

“My wife, mate and Anome Praetor Dyack. Sadi Leonidas.” Andro spoke.

Dyack and Kelelm bowed their heads out of respect immediately. “Princess Sadi.” Dyack spoke softly.

“Gentlemen.” Sadi spoke turning her eyes to Coren immediately. “Regent Re Mydala? How is Inamarno?”

Coren nodded and smiled. “She is fine. She misses you. All of you.” He threw that out once more.

Sadi smiled warmly at this news and nodded to him. “Perhaps I will contact her.” She said. “I do not want to confuse her more than she already is however.”

Coren nodded. “I understand.” He told her. “But... I know she would enjoy talking to you.”

Sadi turned back to Dyack. “You said these ancient ones took something from you.” She said. “What did they take?”

“It is said they took our ability to shift as you can.” Dyack answered. “Our scientists have determined that our original homeworld was environmentally unsuitable to being able to shift our forms and somehow this ability was taken from us so that we could settle the planet. We have recovered artifacts that seem to support this that appear to have been left intentionally. So that we would find them. Unfortunately we have only the study of the Lycavorians within the Protectorate and information that our scientists have gathered through the many years to base our data on but that is the general feeling among many of them. It appears we have made the mistake of distancing ourselves from the Protectorate when we should have been embracing them. It is not an idea that is widely propagated among my people however due to other factions within my government. In fact very few of the Rothryn people believe it anymore.”

“Yet you do?” Sadi asked.

Dyack met her gaze evenly. “Let’s just say that what I have seen these last days is rapidly making me think that perhaps there is something very truthful to the old legend. My youngest daughter Sehri believes it deeply... and I trust her completely.”

“Sehri?” Sadi asked softly.

Dyack nodded his head after glancing at Kelelm in surprise. “Yes. How did you...? Sehri is my youngest of three daughters and two sons. Kelelm here is the oldest of my children.” He answered. “The Ancient Ones in our history scrolls are remarkably similar to these Pralors that you mentioned during your recent news briefing Prince Leonidas. If there is a chance that perhaps they are one and the same. It could mean a great deal to us as well.”

“The ability to admit that you believe something when most others do not is an admirable trait Praetor Dyack.” Sadi said after a long moment.

Dyack nodded his head to her. “My wife and mate has reminded me of that through the years.” He said. “Until now I always was skeptical.”

Sadi smiled at him as she turned and settled to the couch and took the coffee mug from Andro’s hand. Dyack and Kelelm were quick to take note that she was not going to be leaving the transmission and this action only proved to them that Union females were allowed far more freedoms when it came to politics than Rothryn women. It was then they saw another set of long legs enter the transmission and then Ne’Veha’s elven figure entered the transmission. She didn’t acknowledge the men and only sat on the couch next to Sadi and shared a soft kiss with her as she sipped from the mug of tea. Dyack and Kelelm had only heard of the elven species so far and seeing Ne’Veha caught them by surprise. They heard more soft voices and watched as two more females entered the room, a stunning dark skinned female elf with shimmering, pure white hair and an exotic looking raven haired female who, though shorter than all of them others, looked to be in superb physical condition. The dark skinned elf stepped up to Andro and they shared a similar kiss as to the one he had shared with Sadi. Then she too moved to the couch and curled up close to the raven haired female.

Andro looked at his brother once more, tearing his eyes from his mates and wives. He bowed his head slightly. “Forgive our attire Praetor Dyack, but it is still morning here and as you can see, our species and the elves are somewhat open about our sexuality. “Deni... you would not have initiated this transmission unless you needed something.” He said. “Speak at me fervon.”

Deni took a deep breath. “Andro... I need you to authorize our people here on Austrova to be allowed to conduct espionage duties. We need to find out what Ardan and the others within the Protectorate are up to. Right now... right now they are several steps ahead of us and we got some serious catching up to do.”

Andro met his eyes. “You realize what you are asking me to do fervon?” He asked softly. “Father would not approve of such a thing. It exposes us to too much backlash if anything should happen. Armetus would not approve either.”

“Marci would though.” Deni answered quickly. “Coren has agreed to this fervon. If we don’t discover what is going on, when you come here in seven weeks Ardan and the SBR are going to ambush you.”

“What do you mean?” Andro asked.

“If what Coren says is true and we all agree that it is...” Deni said. “Instead of you telling them we are ending the trade agreements because of their refusal to be open minded and fair in their dealings with us, they’ll end them because members of the Protectorate are selling Vanari females and it only proves what Coren has been saying for decades.”

“The merger of the Union and the Protectorate will only be seen as a way to gain further power to continue the slavery practice.” Lisisa continued.

Dutkne stepped forward seeing the confusion on Andro’s face. “Andro, essentially Ardan will declare all Lycavorians slavers and there will be no peace or corporation between us going forward. Financially it will hurt the Vanari short term, but Ardan’s plans probably already are set to include opening their trade to species the Vanari don’t usually associate with. This will increase his ability to sell Vanari females and further weaken the Vanari as a whole. It will also impact us because we do not associate with these species for primarily the same reasons as the Vanari. Financially we would need to find someone to replace the Vanari as a trading partner. That could take years.”

“So it is a matter of money most of all?” Andro said with some disgust.

Dutkne nodded. “I’m afraid so.”

“We could find buyers for your products here in the Union.” Andro spoke.

“Yes... but it would take time and resources to get those trade goods known and then shipped to Union space.” Dutkne spoke.

Coren nodded. “As it would for the Vanari to do something similar with the species here in the Beta Quadrant.”

“Money!” Andro hissed angrily. “It always comes down to nubous money!”

Dyack looked at Kelelm after this display and he saw his son smile.

Androcles looked up. “I will speak with Marci. As it stands right now... you have my authorization.”

Deni nodded. “We’ll be careful fervon.” He said.

“You’d better brother. You have a habit of breaking things that aren’t meant to be broken.” Andro said.

“And where exactly did I acquire that skill I wonder?” Deni asked with a crooked grin.

Dyack stepped forward once more. “Prince Androcles... I believe I can offer a way to get the information you need and have it not be such a large risk.” He spoke.

Andro met his eyes in the transmission. “In return for what?”

“A sample of your brother’s DNA. A sample of your DNA and a sample of your father and mother.” Dyack spoke. “This would be kept in the strictest of confidence and only used to verify information that we have believed for centuries.”

“DNA?” Andro asked.

It was Sadi who looked up from talking with Ne’Veha. “Why exactly would you need DNA?” She asked.

“As I said... it would be used to verify information that we already have.” He replied. “We have what we believe to be remains of several Ancient Ones in Cryo Storage. These Pralors you called them. If we could compare your DNA with the samples we have collected from the remains it could go a long way to prove that the myth is not a myth at all.”

“My DNA would be no different than any citizen of the Protectorate.” Andro spoke.

“None of us have seen any member of the Protectorate do what you have done Prince Leonidas and you have said it yourself in your news briefing... your father, you, your brother Denali... you are all descended from the strongest of those you call the Pralors.” Dyack spoke.

“You will forgive my hesitation Praetor Dyack... and please do not take this the wrong way... but that is an extraordinary request.” Andro spoke.

“Yes... I know it is.” Dyack answered.

Sadi returned to her feet and moved up next to Andro reaching out and squeezing his arm to indicate she wanted to speak. It was a simple move but one that Kelelm picked up right away because it is what his wife and mate did all the time. “We have no reason to trust you with such information Praetor Dyack.” Sadi spoke calmly making sure to keep her voice neutral. “But we have not had the best things happen to us when this kind of information is in the hands of others besides our own doctors.”

“Is your DNA sample not in a public database?” Dyack asked. “In case something may happen to you in war time?”

“No. It is listed in a separate database restricted to the Royal family and only accessible by certain individuals for the purpose you just mentioned.” Sadi answered.

“I see.” Dyack said looking at Kelelm for a moment. He turned back to Andro in the transmission. “I would be willing to assist regardless Prince Leonidas.” He spoke. “To be honest I shouldn’t have asked to begin with. You are correct Princess Sadi... you have no reason to trust us.”

“Would you be open to a compromise?” Andro asked.

Dyack looked at him. “What did you have in mind?”

“The ARCHDEMON has the samples you wish to view on file.” Andro stated. “You could bring your samples to the lab on the ARCHDEMON and do your comparison. You could send whoever you like within reason to assist in the testing.”

“You would do this?” Dyack asked surprised.

Andro looked at Sadi and she nodded her head. He turned back to him. “In the interests of future relations... yes.”

“There... there would be one thing in the future but I believe that is best discussed when we are face to face.” Dyack answered.

“How would you help us?” Andro asked.

“It is simple really.” Dyack said. “The OSG has approached us on numerous occasions with the opportunity to purchase Vanari females to harvest their Alkay. We have always refused in the past. We have no interest in slavery of any means as I said earlier. This time we won’t.”

“How does that help us?” Andro asked.

“It will get us an inside source within the OSG and possibly a direct connection right to Ardan.” Coren said with bright eyes. “It’s perfect.”

Andro turned and looked at Sadi once more. She shrugged her shoulders. “It couldn’t hurt.” She said.

Andro nodded as he turned back. “Very well Praetor Dyack.

Dyack nodded. “I look forward to meeting you Prince Leonidas... and perhaps one day your father.” He said. “Kelelm is my oldest son and he will be in charge of making the contacts with the OSG. We can work out the details with your brother and Regent Re Mydala.”

“Deni?” Andro asked.

“Sounds like a plan.” Deni said.

“Deni... Lisisa... tnobbaf.” Andro said.

Denali and Lisisa nodded. “Avoi.” They spoke.

TALBOR SEVEN

PUMA’S PRIDE

Popal watched as the Hadarian female ran the medical scanner over Pusintin as he laid on the bed staring at her intently. Her auburn colored hair was cut shorter than shoulder length but curled around her attractive face and bright dark green eyes. Those eyes were filled with fear at what would happen in the future and had been happening for three days now. They had been taken from Talbor Seven against their will, her husband beaten down severely trying to keep them from being taken. Now her husband and their two children were being held somewhere on this ship while she treated this Lycavorian who commanded Kavalians.

Her name was Ceale and they had left Hadaria a decade ago to become part of a Hadarian Group that treated those who were not part of the Union. They had found themselves on Talbor Seven for it was the safest place within The Wilds to try raise their now fourteen year old son Danim and now eighteen year old daughter Serale. Ceale had not really wanted to leave her home on Hadaria, but her husband was adamant about it. She left with him out of the need to keep their family from being broken apart not out of any love for her husband who she had come to dislike over the years. Their marriage had been arranged by their parents for both of them were from strict upbringings. Ceale had never really been off Hadaria before and the exposure to the many different species that frequented Talbor Seven was astounding to her. And wondrous in many ways. She still missed her family on Hadaria and worried for them even more now that the Kavalians had occupied the planet. Ceale had no illusions about Buonau and her ultimate goal. Unlike her husband who adored Buonau, Ceale saw her for what she was and didn't trust the Elder Healer and knew her motives were far more sinister than she led on. Her husband believed she did the right thing in disposing Queen Anja and this had led to an angry disagreement between them for Ceale was a staunch supporter of Queen Anja and Princess Sivana. That argument was the beginning of the end for them and Ceale knew it. It no longer bothered her anymore. Only her children mattered.

Ceale drew the medical scanner over Pusintin's head and then used her right hand to pass it slowly over his midsection and upper body, the soft white glow of her palm clearly visible. When her hand reached his neck she stopped and drew it back, setting the scanner back on the table. She turned her dark green eyes on his cruel face.

"It is done." She spoke. "Your ribs are fully healed, as well as the other broken bones. They will be sore for a few days so I recommend rest. The infection you had is gone, but the damage to your lungs was severe and will require time to fully heal. I suggest you do not exert yourself more than necessary in order to speed the healing process naturally. The lacerations had already begun to heal because of your enhanced regeneration abilities. I finished healing them but you will have scars."

"I'm not concerned about scars." Pusintin spoke.

"If you don't... if you don't mind me asking now... who did this to you?" Ceale asked. "They came very close to killing you. You do know this don't you?"

Pusintin met her eyes and smiled. "They didn't." He said. "That displeases you doesn't it?"

Ceale looked at him. "It's not my place to say." She spoke. "I've done what you asked. I would like you to release me and my family now."

Pusintin shook his head. "I'm bringing you with us doctor." He spoke. "Your skills will be most useful."

Ceale's eyes grew wide. "That... your officer said you would release us when I treated you! You can't do this!" She protested.

"I can do what the fuck I want!" Pusintin snarled as he threw his legs over the side of the bed and got to his feet. "We have many wounded onboard and you will treat them while we continue on our mission!"

"I am not a Kavalian citizen!" Ceale barked. "I am a Union citizen and you can't just take me to..."

Pusintin moved around the end of the bed quickly and slapped her hard across the face, knocking her back and bleeding her lips. "Shut your hole woman!" He growled at her. "Be lucky I don't kill you outright! We are at war now and you just became a prisoner!"

"I... I will not help you!" Ceale snapped bravely. She was not one to back down from any man. "You can't force me!"

Pusintin looked at her. "See... that is where you are wrong." He snapped turning to Popal. "They are separated?"

"As you ordered Marshall Pusintin." Popal answered.

Pusintin snapped out with his hand and grabbed a handful of Ceale's short but thick auburn colored hair. She screamed in pain as he yanked savagely and dragged her over to the wall with several monitors on it. "Watch this Hadarian bitch!" He snarled at her. He held her head painfully, jerking it toward the monitor where she saw her husband in a small room by himself and her children in another.

Her eyes grew wide when she saw the door open and a large Kavalian soldier enter. Ceale knew what was about to happen. “NO!” She screamed. “No! Please! No! You can’t! No!”

Pusintin jerked her face close to his. “Then you will do what I tell you bitch!” He growled at her. “If you don’t... I’ll have my men dismember your fool husband and then I’ll give your pretty little daughter to my men for some extended sexual fun. Your son I’ll just vent out an airlock!”

“No!” Ceale barked. “Please! I’ll do... I’ll do anything! Don’t... don’t hurt my children!”

“That’s right you will bitch!” He snarled shoving her away and turning to Popal. “Status Popal?” He asked.

Popal moved forward quickly. “We have main power and engines restored Marshall. The crews are working double shifts with the injuries, but they are not complaining. I’ve had to force some of them to stop before their work began to hurt others. We are hurt Marshall... but everyone is pulling together. You would be proud of them!”

Pusintin nodded his head. “We hand picked most of them.” He stated. “Give me the full rundown.”

“We lost half to the task force Marshall. Thirteen ships total. Nine destroyed... four too damaged to salvage. We got most of the survivors off the crippled ships and I have integrated them into our crew in similar positions.”

“One ship did all that Popal?” Pusintin asked.

Popal nodded. “It is unlike any Union ship I have ever seen Marshall. It appeared from no where and it’s weapons were already firing before it had fully dropped its Shroud. It’s weapons were nearly four times as powerful as normal Union ships and they cycled much faster. They had missiles inbound before we had fully recognized what was happening. They launched no fighters, but the volleys they used managed to destroyed our fighters before they even got airborne. It is my fault Marshall... I was... I was taken by...”

Pusintin shook his head quickly. “My brother is a master at ambush Popal... remember that in the future. This was my fault. I underestimated him. Again. I won’t make that mistake a third time.”

“Third... third time?” Popal looked at him.

“We’re going after them Popal.” Pusintin growled.

“Marshall?” Popal asked stunned. “We... the Lycavorian Union has declared war on us! Should we not return to Cabelir to begin operations?”

“Operations against what?” Pusintin snapped. “It will take us a minimum of six months to recoup the losses my fucking nephew inflicted. We’ll be back by then and I will bring my brother’s head to give to Keleru! We can still track the Borellum Acoustic Pulse by its refractor variance?”

Popal met his eyes knowing what he intended. “In order to do that we would need a Borellum Acoustic Pulse Receiver Marshall.” He spoke. “There are only three left in existence and...”

Pusintin grinned. “One of them is on Nefoa. Send a coded transmission to Nefoa. I want a full Fleet Group and entire Division ready to depart when we arrive there. We’ll get the Pulse Receiver and install it into our sensor array. If they exited their jump anywhere within a thousand light years we’ll detect it. If they aren’t there anymore, we can track it using the remnant pulse traces.”

“It is... it is not at all precise Marshall.” Popal risked saying. “We would need to make multiple jumps in order to find...”

Pusintin looked at him. “I intend to find my brother Popal!” He snarled viciously. “I intend to find him and skewer him through with his own fucking sword! And while he is lying their dying I’m going to fuck my mate For’mya in front of him while my men have their way with his other bitches and he hears them howl! Mark my words!”

Popal wisely kept his mouth shut and nodded his head. “I will contact Nefoa and issue the orders.” He stated.

“I will join you on the bridge later Popal.” Pusintin stated turning his head and looking at Ceale.

Popal knew exactly what his Marshall was going to do and he nodded. “As you order Marshall.” He turned quickly and exited the medical bay while Pusintin turn to face Ceale fully. He stepped up to her and glared at her frightened face. “You can begin showing just how respectful you will be right now Hadarian bitch!” He snapped.

“You bastard!” Ceale hissed at him knowing exactly what he meant. “I... I will not! I am... I am married!”

Pusintin reached up and snagged her hair once more pulling viciously on the roots and watching her cry out in agony and try to dig her nails into his arm to stop the terrible pain. “You’ll do exactly as I say Hadarian bitch!” Pusintin growled. “Or I will make your daughter service me! Is that what you want? I’m sure she is very tight! And she looks unspoiled. That would be pleasant I’m sure!”

“You... you vile bastard!” Ceale screamed with tears in her eyes.

“Yeah... I’ve been called that before!” Pusintin snapped. “Get on your knees and show me how much you appreciate me keeping your daughter from becoming the ship whore!” He pressed down on the side on her head forcing her to her knees. “Suck me good bitch! Maybe that will be all I want!”

Ceale whimpered at the pain but reached up to Pusintin’s pants. With shaking hands she open his pants and exposed his rapidly stiffening cock. Ceale had never done anything like this before with her husband and it was... all thought of what to do was lost as Pusintin grabbed her head with both hands and violently shoved his hard cock between her lips to the sounds of her whimpering and gags.

ARC ROYAL

3000 LYs SPACEWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM

“Anse!” For'mya exclaimed as Anja lowered the medical scanner and smiled at her as she sat on the medical bed in the ARC ROYAL'S Medical Bay.

“For'mya... do not get upset.” Anja told her. “It will happen. Marty ain’t exactly sterile you know.”

For'mya lowered her eyes and shook her head with a shy smile. “I... I know. I was just hoping that... I was hoping that it would be because of the other night.”

Anja shook her head. “That might be pressing it lover.” She explained. “The drugs they used are still in your system. The doses they gave you were four times what they normally use. Even our advanced healing systems will need time to purge that. It also speeded up your period of being in Phase. It’s over now.”

For'mya nodded. “I sensed as much.” She said.

Anja nudged her as she sat on the bed beside her fellow Queen and lover. “Look at it this way... at least you can keep your goldar now that they are bigger! They have been a source of delight for all of us!”

For'mya reached up quickly and covered her new, enlarged breasts protectively with her hands.

“Ginartas Vin!” She spoke with a laugh. “Pen bray el una inion!” (Heavens no! I like them too much!)

Anja leaned over and kissed her shoulder softly. “Don’t worry KinosaurGai... all of us have decided you will give him a daughter before any of us have anymore children. That is our promise to you.”

For'mya looked at her. “I don’t want that Anja.” She spoke. “It would not be right to...”

Anja took her hand. “It is what we want For'mya.” She said softly. “All of us have given him boys and girls. Now it is your turn. After that...” Anja shrugged with a seductive grin. “All bets are off.”

For'mya laughed and leaned into her. She became somber after a moment and lifted her eyes to Anja’s face. “We must never let this happen again Anja.” She spoke. “To any of us. It must never happen again!”

“It won’t For'mya.” Anja said confidently.

For'mya shook her head. “No! There is no guarantee Anja and you know it. The fact that we go through a Phase of heightened sexuality as purebloods or turned females makes all of us targets now. And Martin’s blood racing through us makes it all the more powerful! It was never been openly acknowledged as it was with me. And it was used against me! It will not be forgotten by our enemies!”

“For'mya you...” Anja began.

“Anja... my mind was nearly lost. I knew it was wrong Anja... but when Pusintin hit me with his aura I was very nearly overcome! As it was... the burning inside me made me crave what he did to me.” For'mya said. She turned away a little and shook her head. “It shames me how I wanted him to take me.”

Anja took her hand tightly. “You stop that do you hear me!” She hissed softly. “It could have been any of us For'mya! You know that!”

For'mya nodded. “I do... and that is why it can never happen again! It weakens him Anja my love! It weakens him inside. He is stronger when we are strong with him. Strong with our love and desire for him and him alone! That is part of his power and you know it as well as I do. I could feel the surging within him when he kissed me on the ground there. It felt so wonderful. His aura was so pure and raw I was wet within seconds.”

Anja grinned. “We did smell it you know.”

For'mya looked at her. “We will be targets now Anja. You, me, Aricia, Dysea.” For'mya said. “They will come after us thinking they can use that weakness against us. Against Martin.”

“It worked against you because you thought he was dead.” Anja said. “Because they had the static inhibitor inside you. Not being able to feel any of us within Mindvoice is what allowed that to happen For'mya.”

For'mya nodded. “This time.” She said softly. “Those who hate Martin enough will find other ways Anja. You know this.”

“She’s right.” Aricia’s voice made both of them turn and they saw Dysea, Isabella and Cirith with her.

Anja and For'mya waited while they moved closer, Cirith sitting beside For'mya on the bed while Dysea sat beside Anja. Aricia and Isabella leaned against the bed from either end and all six of Martin’s Queens were together.

“Aricia... we can’t just turn off what is now part of who we are.” Anja said. “The Phase is part of us. We’ll never get away from it. You know that better than us, you’ve battled it since puberty. We’ve only had to deal with it since we were turned.”

“I know.” Aricia said softly. “And it will only grow more intense as we get older.” She spoke evenly. “But For'mya is right... now that it is now common knowledge outside our own species... others will use it against us. Against Martin. Or try to. Just as Pusintin did with For'mya.”

“I thought Martin was crazy when he told me Pusintin was in love with me.” For'mya spoke shaking her head. “I’m beginning to think he was right. Pusintin actually thinks I belong to him, that I love him because of the way he forced me to act. That can not be allowed to happen ever again.”

“I understand what you are saying KinosaurGai...” Dysea spoke now. “But we are Queens. We all have obligations. Nauta Melme is the strongest Alpha male of our species. While he lives no other man could affect us as he does. We would be remiss in our duties to our people and to him if we just stopped doing them because we fear our... sexual nature will be used against us. There must be something else we can do. All six of us can not remain at his side while we are in Phase. We all come into Phase at the same time now after so long together. Even Bella is oriented to our cycle because of this. Cirith will become this way as well.”

“It’s not like we can clone him.” Anja said jokingly. “Though that is a most delicious idea. Two or three Martin’s at the same time? Wow!”

“Melyanna you are such a slut.” Dysea spat playfully.

Anja laughed with her. “I won’t deny that I love every single glorious inch of that man’s body and I could eat him every day.”

“I don’t think any of us would disagree with that sentiment.” Bella quipped with a twinkle in her eye.

“Well... if this is really a concern...” Anja began. “A way to alleviate some of the beginning portions of Phase is for us to begin travelling in pairs or trios wherever we go. At least during Phase. We can ease the fever some that way.”

“What about the last two weeks when it is the strongest?” Aricia said. “We can not give each other what we need then Anja. And if we return and the war is still going on we can not expect Martin to stop in the middle of a battle to sate our desire for him. No matter how much he would want too or we would want him too.”

Dysea looked up. “I could... I could make more casts of him.” She stated. “Like I did before Melyanna.”

Anja shook her head. “While they are extremely gratifying... they would not suffice.”

Aricia nodded. “I don’t think so either.”

“I could try and design some sort of med, but it won’t be easy suppressing part of our natural instincts.” Anja continued.

“We don’t have to figure this out now.” For'mya spoke. “Maybe it is just me being too worried. Wherever this trip takes us we have him all to ourselves now. Just us. We can worry about this later.”

“Yes we do.” Aricia spoke. “And we have all of us together for the first time in over a year.” She moved closer to For'mya, between her legs and took her hands. “I think it is the perfect time for all of us to become reacquainted as well. It has been too long.”

Dysea nodded and leaned against Anja. “Yes it has.” She said. “There is not a whole lot for six Queens to do right now.”

“Do not forget we have two children with us.” Isabella said. “Though at the rate they are growing... we won’t long be able to call them children.”

“Get dressed For'mya.” Aricia said. “We’ll have a healthy breakfast and then we will begin showing our children what they can do.”

Martin looked at the star chart once more and then turned his head to Muton. They were in the ARC ROYAL’S port landing bay which had been turned into a combination nursery and Combat Ops center because of all the dragons that were with them. The short and shrill trumpets of the dragon hatchlings as they were being schooled under Miath, Aurith and Iriral in short take offs and landings filled the opposite side of the landing bay. Arzoal and Isheeni sat on either side of Torma behind Martin. “You are sure about the coordinates Muton?” He asked.

Muton nodded. “Yes.” He answered. “I’ve written the images down twenty different ways and it always comes out the same King Leonidas.”

“Stop with that King shit!” Martin barked at him. “You and your son saved For'mya and our children. I think that has earned you the right to call me by my name.”

Muton bowed his head slightly. “Milord.” He said.

Martin looked at Akemi. “Captain Katsumi?” He asked.

Akemi nodded her head. “My people have confirmed what he put together Milord.” She answered. “Damn fine work too considering he was doing it all from memory.”

“So what’s our plan?” Martin asked. “This is as far as any of our Long Range Probes has been out. What are we looking at?”

Akemi leaned over the star chart and pointed to the small greenish dot. “This planet Muton has marked as our ultimate destination is in the Echo Quadrant. That’s twenty-eight thousand light years away. Muton and I have plotted fourteen LSD jumps that will get us there in seven weeks.”

“Seven weeks?” Martin asked looking at her.

Akemi nodded. “We’ll be slaved together as we make each jump, but we’ll need at least three days between jumps for our people to go over each drive unit after the jumps to insure there are no problems. We have to separate to do that. Elder Mother Arzoal’s Drones will be assisting us and that will make it much faster, but I’d rather not shear off part of either ship upon exiting a jump.”

Danny chuckled. “That sounds painful.” He stated.

Akemi grinned. “It would be yes.” She said. “We also don’t have the stores to feed everyone on both ships for the entire trip. Even with the extra supplies Androcles sent, Iama says we’ll need to re-supply within a month.”

Martin looked at her. “Iama? The Kavalian girl we rescued?”

Akemi nodded her head. “I’ve spoken with her. And she submitted to a drugged session of questioning voluntarily. The hate for her own people runs deep Milord... and she has a genuine desire to stay among us and try to rediscover a life for herself. One day find love and have children. That is what she wants. Surprisingly... she is an excellent cook and we won’t lack for expertise in that area. I’ve assigned her quarters and she has been in the main Mess Hall since coming aboard. Setting things up just how she wants them. She knows a lot about food stuffs and supplies we need. You said to use everyone and when we left Dreamland we didn’t have a full galley crew. Now we do.”

Martin nodded his head. “If she passed muster with you then I accept your decision.” He stated. “Just to be on the safe side however, let’s put weapons scanners on all the entrances to the main Mess Hall. We’ve been burned in the past by those claiming to be our friends. I don’t want to make the same mistakes.”

“As you order Milord.” Akemi said.

Wayonn stepped up to the table. “Can we use the time between jumps to search for planets that might provide suitable food?”

Akemi nodded. “That is a possibility as well Milord. Queen Anja and Iama would have the final say on whether we can ingest it though. Medically and edibility are a priority.”

Martin nodded. “Danny... you and Jules make sure teams are ready to deploy once we exit the jumps. Standard Recon Op, heavy on load.”

Danny nodded. “Expecting trouble?”

“We are moving through two different quadrants to get where we are going. Better safe than sorry. We don’t know who or what we might run into.” Martin said. He looked at Wayonn. “You moved around a lot in your travels Wayonn, ever get out this far?”

Wayonn shook his head. “I never came out this far Martin my boy.” He answered. “I was reckless... not foolish.”

Akemi shook her head slowly. “I don’t like not having a CAP Milord.” She spoke. “Our sensors are good... but we can extend the range even more if we equipped a KADEN transport with some of the Shroud generators Prince Andro sent to us. We launch that ship while we are between jumps and she does a continuous loop on the very edge of our sensor envelope. We can extend the range by twenty light years easily.”

Martin nodded. “Endy... you and Tina handle that. Put together a schedule of all pilots that we have. Including me.”

“You?” Endith exclaimed as the others who knew Martin and his history with Endith only smiled. “Shit Skipper... I wouldn’t trust you behind the wheel of Ben’s old 2021 Chevy let alone a KADEN.”

Martin chuckled at the dig and shook his head. He looked at Muton who appeared very confused. “Inside joke.” He told him.

Muton couldn’t help but smile. “You are unlike any King I have ever known or read about in history books Martin Leonidas.” He said.

“Yeah... I get that a lot too.” He answered with a smile. “Akemi... this is your ship. You run it like your ship. Just think of all of us as hired hands.”

“Cheap labor in other words.” Julie quipped.

Akemi chuckled and nodded her head. “Thank you Milord... I don’t think that will be necessary. I have almost a full crew. I’d like to have Muton’s engineers come over here though. That ship they built is something and we would benefit by working together.”

Martin looked at Muton and he nodded. “I will see to it right away.” He stated.

“We don’t know what we are going to find out here.” Martin spoke now. “Let’s be damn careful about everything we do. We can get support from Earth, but even with the Pralor ships they have it will be a minimum of a couple days before anything comes. We need to rely on everyone and they need to rely on us.”

We also need to consider the hatchlings Martin. Arzoal spoke now. They will need space to fly and learn to hunt. Something none of us considered before we brought them with us.

Martin nodded. “We’ll figure something out.” He answered her. He looked at Akemi. “How long until we make the first jump?”

Akemi met his eyes. “Six hours.” She answered skeptically. “Never thought I’d be jumping into the unknown. This is all very new to me.”

Danny laughed and looked at Julie. “Captain... that ain’t the half of it. With Marty here it’s not just a job...”

“It’s a fucking adventure!” Julie finished the statement.

Martin shook his head. “Assholes.” He muttered with a smile even as a swell of love and pride coursed through him that he had them here with him..

UZU OZEIB 7

YDARE

TEMPORARY HOME OF ARRARN, NARICE AND TORIA LEONIDAS

“Ahhhhhhh! Arrarn!!!!” She screamed out in rapture, reaching up with one arm to try and grasp his head.

Perhaps it was because he was half wolf and half elf and part of his very essence was the need for physical contact. Perhaps it was because what she experienced with him and Toria in their bed had been so taboo within High Coven society for so long. Perhaps it was because he simply enjoyed torturing them, but whatever the reason Narice Leonidas wished for it to never end. He could do things to her and Toria that caused them to scream and cry out for more over and over. His hands were cupping her large breasts as he drove into her from behind with power and confidence, using her breasts to assist his dominance over her. Her black hair flew back and forth as she shook her head from side to side in utter bliss. Her lips were slick with Toria's passion, their red haired lover already nearly out of it from Narice's ministrations, and laying in front of her with passion heavy eyelids as she came down from her orgasm. Narice could feel every wondrous pulse of life and passion from his cock as it plunged into her depths with ever increasing urgency. She felt his hand grasp her hair and twist her head around and she cried out as he covered her lips with his own. That kiss is what set them both off, and Narice moaned in surreal bliss against his lips as her orgasm struck her. She felt his cock swell in size and then he was filling her with his own passion, pushing her to greater heights of decadence.

Arrarn pulled her tightly against him, holding her by her breasts to his chest as her hands went to his hips trying to pull him even further into her depths. Narice could feel his large balls against her ass cheeks as they emptied his seed into her and caused her to shiver in delight. His kiss deepened and she returned it with every fiber of her being as her own passion coated his pulsing manhood in her sweet fervor.

Slowly Arrarn lowered them forward, one hand leaving her breast to guide them back to the bed. Narice dragged her tongue over Toria's delicious breasts as she settled half onto her taunt body and Arrarn remained buried within her as they found a comfortable position on the bed and their arms drew Toria close to them. His face was buried in the back of her neck, his lips and nose nuzzling her skin and the back of her ear constantly as the last vestiges of his hot passion filled her and he began to soften inside her tightness. Narice smiled in wonderful love as he made no move to remove himself from her and simply pulled her tighter against his chest as she pulled Toria in to her arms.

She cooed her delight as his lips drew across her lobe of her ear and he breathed heavily. "Son vada carians... you two will be the death of me." He gasped warmly.

Narice and Toria both began to chuckle at his words since he could easily outlast both of them and they knew it.

"Death by sexual pleasure." Toria groaned as her face nestled between Narice's breasts. "Not... not such a bad way to go."

Narice smiled and nodded. "No... but we have many more years to experience before we need to worry about that." She stated as her breathing began to return to normal. She groaned once more as she felt Arrarn slip from within her depths and lean forward over her shoulder. They rested for several minutes in that position thoroughly enjoying the feel of their bodies so intimately pressed together and his hands stroking their flesh.

"You two don't move." He spoke finally. "I'll get us some juice."

Toria grinned. "I don't think I could move even if I wanted too." She spoke. "And I don't want to."

"Neither do I." Narice agreed with a smile.

Arrarn grinned, proud of himself, and rolled off the bed. The two most beautiful female creatures in all the universe as far as he was concerned and they were all his. He padded naked through the large apartment and into the kitchen area where he poured three glasses of juice while silently thanking his brother for encouraging him to pursue his feelings for them at the beginning. He reached up to gently touch the two spots on either side of his neck where both Toria and Narice had bitten him earlier and fed on his blood in the midst of their passion. Both were nearly gone but he knew from experience he needed the juice just as much, if not more than they did. Holding the tall glasses he moved back across the dark apartment and into the bedroom to find them both sitting up on the bed, neither of them bothering to cover themselves. After what they had shared over these past months and the intimate way they knew each other's bodies it would be silly to try and hide from each other. He sat on the side of the bed and they both took a glass from him and drank down nearly half immediately, just as he did.

Toria then leaned forward and kissed Narice's bare shoulder. "You should tell him." She said softly.

Arrarn looked at them his eyes moving back and forth between them. "Tell me what?"

Narice looked at him, her black hair cascading around her shoulders and exotic features. Her normally dark eyes looked at him with love and devotion. "Arrarn... I..."

Arrarn smiled. "I get it now. This is where my two delightfully naked wives and mates convince me to remain out of the spotlight. To not make any waves."

Narice grinned. "Actually... actually it's quite the opposite Arrarn my love." She stated. "The Ventash'ma and I have been discussing certain items. We... we want to erase how the past government was run under my mother and father."

"You are the Empress Narice." Arrarn spoke.

Narice nodded her head. "But we want to make certain changes to spread the authority out more."

"I don't follow." Arrarn said.

Toria laughed softly. "Just spit it out Narice!" She exclaimed.

Narice smiled at her. "We are establishing several new positions." She told him. "One of them is A'ni d'Sikul. General of Defense." Narice met his eyes. "I want you to assume that role Arrarn my love."

Arrarn looked at her with wide eyes. "Me?" He finally exclaimed. "Narice... ussta ssinsrigg I am no politician!"

"And that is why you will be perfect for the job." Narice said. "As A'ni d'Sikul you would remain outside that realm but retain all of the power. For this to work, for me to be able to show my people that I am serious in my goals, I need to show I will be different. Appointing you as my A'ni d'Sikul is only the first step."

"Narice I am not a general." Arrarn said.

"Admiral Pontal disagrees." She said. "His words to me when I questioned him about it were very much to the point. He says you represent three things. You represent change and the commitment of the Union to Andro's promise. He said you also think outside of the box, which is what our forces need now. Cha'talla agreed my love."

"Narice... I'm not a citizen of the High Coven." He said. "The Ventash'ma would never agree to it."

"You are my Blessed Husband and that makes you a citizen." Narice answered him. "And the Ventash'ma be damned! I will not do things as they have been done in the past. I need to be different."

"Making me this A'ni d'Sikul isn't going to make you any friends Nari." Arrarn spoke moving closer to her and using his nickname for her. "I don't have the experience and no one can deny that... and I am my father's son. There are still those out there who don't particularly care for Lycavorians on the whole and they positively hate my father."

Narice nodded. "I know." She said. "But I believe the majority will see it as part of the change I have told them I will implement. You will have Pontal behind you my love... and I intend to appoint Colonel Norris of the Union as Commander of all Coven Ground forces. He was a man that Andro and General Tareif recommended to me."

Arrarn nodded. "I know him. Excellent commander... very experienced... but he is a cloned soldier. Not a Pureblood."

Narice looked at him. "Arrarn... Purebloods are part of the reason things have become so convoluted. We are almost a minority on Uzu Ozeib 7 now you know. Everyone knows it."

Toria nodded. "The numbers establish her statements Arrarn." She answered. "Across the entire Coven Purebloods only make up fifty-nine percent of the population."

"Androcles... my father... they'll never go for it." Arrarn said. "And I will not forsake my title as prince of the Union."

Narice reached out and took his hand. "That is something I would never ask of you Arrarn my love. And I will never forsake my title as Princess of the Union. Nor will Toria. And I have already run it by Androcles. His words to me were to do what I thought was best for I was Empress now."

Arrarn looked at her with wide eyes. "He said that?" He asked.

Narice smiled. "He loves and trusts you more than you will ever know Arrarn Leonidas." She said. "Regardless of what you think. This may work, it may not, but I want to try."

Arrarn stared at her for a long moment. "A'ni d'Sikul of the High Coven huh?" He spoke finally. "That doesn't mean I have to wear some funky uniform does it?"

Narice and Toria laughed at the look on his face. "No... no funky uniform." Narice said bringing his hand to her cheek.

Arrarn nodded his head. "Ok... if it helps you Nari. I'll do it."

Narice leaned forward and kissed him with zeal. She pulled back and looked at him with dark, sultry eyes. "There is still several hours before we have to be back to work." She spoke with a devious tinge in her voice. "Do you think you are up to showing us how much you love us?"

Arrarn's eyes narrowed. "I don't know... I'm pretty beat." He said. "Maybe you should show me how much you want me to show you that I love you both."

"So it is blackmail is it?" Toria said with a seductive grin.

Arrarn shook his head. "Blackmail is such an ugly word." He said. "Why don't you think of it as..."

They didn't give him a chance to finish his statement as first Toria and then Narice fell upon him with glee, their glasses of juice falling quickly to the floor forgotten.

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

Androcles leaned back on the couch in the main room of his villa, the mass of data pads and reports spread out in front of him on the knee high table. He wore his white pants with crimson trim and an unbuttoned shirt that left his arms bare. He lifted the mug of his mother's coffee to his lips and sipped. His face twisted up as the cold coffee hit his taste buds and he swore under his breath at letting the coffee get cold. Disgusted with himself he set the coffee back on the table and was about to get up and retrieve more when her sugar plume and spice scent filtered to him and he turned.

Sadi smiled from the patio doors and walked into the main room holding the large mug and wearing only her usual thin robe. Seeing her dressed as she was made Andro stop and realize that it was nearly two in the morning and all but the Durcunusaan guards had long since gone to bed.

"I was beginning to think that my scent no longer made you turn your head my love?" Sadi spoke as she moved up to the side of the couch and looked at him.

Andro smiled. "You know that would never be true KertaGai." He stated holding out his hand for her.

Sadi moved seductively and stepped in front of him, lifting her long leg over his knees and settling into his lap. She was completely naked under the robe as she always was, but it remained tied at her waist and she offered the mug to him. "It went cold over an hour ago Andro." She stated. "Even I could smell that. You need to take a break."

Andro took the mug with his right hand while dropping his left to her hip. Sadi adjusted herself slightly and became comfortable as she stared at him. He took a long sip of the coffee and took a deep breath. "There is... there is so much to do." He said. "Deployment reports. Logistics. Fleet Readiness Reports." He shook his head. "I feel overwhelmed Sadi." He looked at her. "Do you think my father felt this way during the Evolli War?"

Sadi shook her head. "No. Your father knows he has men and women who are trained to do these things better than he can and he lets them. He concentrates on his strengths and he lets others do their jobs and complement his weaknesses."

Andro chuckled softly. "You don't pull any punches do you KertaGai?"

Sadi reached out and traced his jaw with her finger. "You are trying to do too much Andro my love. Everyone knows it but you. You are a tactical and strategic mastermind. That is your strength and that is what you need to concentrate on. Let those who are more skilled than you in other areas do their jobs. They will not let you down."

"Did they put you up to this?" Andro asked.

Sadi shrugged. "Jomann mentioned it but I have seen it for several days now. I wasn't going to say anything until Jomann came to me." Sadi reached out with her hands and placed them on either side on his face leaning forward to put her cheek against his where she inhaled deeply of his lavender and minty scent. She fought back the rush of sexual energy his scent always caused within her and she rubbed her cheek against his reveling in the sensations he could invoke from her. "I know you Androcles Leonidas." She whispered softly pulling her head back until she was staring into his azure eyes. "You do not need to impress anyone with what you know or can do. They know you are not your father Andro, and they believe in you regardless of that."

"I'm... I'm frightened KertaGai." He said softly. "I'm frightened of what I have had to start. This war with the Kavalians for what they have done. I'm frightened of what I... what I am supposed to be and I am frightened of the future."

Sadi nodded. "I know my love." She whispered to him. "I know. You have never shied from the unknown Andro. You have always faced your fears. What is different now?"

"I never had you." He said instantly. "I never had you, or Carisia or Lu'ria or Ne'Veha. Or Caliria." He looked down. "I don't... I don't want to lose any of you. And knowing that what I do could bring harm to any of you... it twists me inside."

"What makes you think you could possibly lose any of us?" Sadi asked him. "That anything you do could hurt us?" She gripped his face tighter. "You listen to me Androcles. There is nothing living or dead that could make us love you or trust you any less than we do. Part of what we all love is the part of you that mourns every time you give an order that costs lives. You don't think we see when your eyes are far away and you are thinking of those who were lost. You can not change who you are my love. You are a Leonidas. A leader. And no great leader in the history of any species became what they were without having to give orders that they regretted or that shamed them. You think of the greater good Andro. You always have. And so has your father. That is why people look at you differently. They see these great leaders of men... but they also see men who are normal. It is what inspires them to greatness."

Andro stared at her jungle green eyes and reached up to stroke her cheek. "Did you ever doubt what you felt for me KertaGai?" He asked softly.

Sadi met his gaze. "Every day." She answered him. "Right up until I saw you once more on that flight line. You were so... so handsome. You smelled delicious... and then I knew that I was truly meant to be with you. With Carisia. All of us. Each of us have felt this Saradasaar. And so has she."

Andro shook his head. "I don't want to talk about that now." He said.

Sadi smiled and rubbed her nose against his. "You will accept it Andro. Just as your other wives and mates have already accepted it. Just as your father has accepted it. But I will not speak of it again right now. We will cross that bridge when we come to it. I don't think it will be as easy as I believe."

Andro leaned forward and set the mug on the table. He then took her face in his hands and stared at her deeply. [I love them all KertaGai. I do. But you command my soul and no one else. You always will.]

Sadi smiled brilliantly. [I know that Saradasaar.] She said. [I have known that since the day you made me your mate.]

Andro buried his face in the valley between her firm breasts and inhaled of her sweet scent deeply as her arms wrapped around his head. [Pen enyla forn KertaGai.] He whispered.

[For pen enyla forn Androcles Leonidas. With every waking breath I take my love.] She answered with a smile. "Let us contact Caliria Andro." She said pulling his head back and looking at him.

"I do not want to pressure her." Andro said.

"Nor do I... but ignoring her completely is too painful and we need to make sure she knows we love her as well." Sadi said.

Andro blinked several times and finally nodded his head. "Yes we do." He rose to his feet making Sadi cry out in surprise when his arms kept her suspended in the air. She wrapped her legs around his waist and laughed as he made his way towards the QCR COM relay.

AUSTROVA CALIRIA'S APARTMENT

What had she been thinking?

After all she had been through, all she had found, how could she have let this happen like this? Caliria sat in the chair in her room, the thin sheet wrapped around her lithe body, the tears rolling down her cheeks as she stared at the bed. Franklin Adams' form was still there under the sheet and Caliria felt ashamed and guilty for what she had allowed to happen. She didn't trust Franklin Adams when he contacted her. She didn't trust him when he left her that message to meet him. She didn't trust him even after meeting him and hearing what he had to tell her. That his father had found out about them and he had been left with no choice but to go home and try and smooth things over right after their last night together. So very convenient that she had been taken not two days later by the OSG and sold into slavery.

He had been so convincing though when she met him. He even showed her proof of his travel arrangements. He told her he tried for weeks to discover where she had been taken because he was going to come after her himself. He was so very sweet and kind to her, he seemed so happy that she was back and safe. Not once in the days since she had returned had he asked about her work. That should have set her alarm bells to ringing right away for he had pestered her constantly before she had been kidnapped. Even Paga believed he was lying to her after what she had told her. Paga had become such a wonderful friend in so short a time. The Lycavorian Durcunusaan had done exactly as she had promised she would. She was a friend to Caliria in every sense of the word, not trying to steer her in any sort of direction and not even mentioning Androcles once since they had returned.

Androcles.

The tears came harder now as she thought of the most handsome man she had ever met in her entire three hundred plus years of life. He was perfection in every sense of the word; a superb specimen of a man with a physique that shamed every man she had ever been with. A man with the largest manhood she had ever seen, let alone had inside her. Their hours together had washed away every memory of any man she had ever been with. All the pain and shame she had endured, he had sucked right out of her with his passion and love for her. Those exquisite sensations she had felt within his arms had made her cry out for more over and over. And then there was Sadi and the others. Never had she so desired another woman as she desired Sadi and Carisia and Lu'ria and Ne'Veha. Lu'ria's ebony skin and Carisia's smooth petite figure had driven her mad with delight while Sadi's and Ne'Veha's sweet taste left her craving more of them. Those hours with them had been so very perfect. As if she had always belonged with them, belonged to them and they to her.

Caliria cursed herself for not remaining with them. She began to miss them the moment the ship left orbit. And she had no one to blame but herself. Her entire life she had heard nothing but negative things about Lycavorians from her father and so many of her friends and elders. They were savages and beneath the Vanari people. They were uneducated and violent and out of control. Caliria saw the way those Lycavorians from the Protectorate were treated and even though her father shunned her she agreed with it. She agreed with it to try and make him proud of her somehow. To have him accept her because she thought like him about them. It was so simple a thing really, something she had done to try and have her father love her. It did not work as she had hoped but so many years of acting like she had made it difficult to just dismiss it. She had seen Androcles and the others fighting as they rescued her. They showed no mercy or regret for their actions. They fought savagely and took no prisoners, just as her father had always said they would.

Yet they were fighting like that to rescue her. Andro had come to save her. Something no Vanari man would have ever thought of.

It was this inner struggle that caused her to be here. Andro said he wanted her to be with them because it was what she wanted. What she desired. And thinking the way she did insured that would never work. He told her it did not matter to them in the least that she was three hundred years older than him. And as she had discovered, the memories he had within him made him far older than she was. Androcles had told her to return home and come to terms with her feelings and discover what it was she wanted for her future. She had seen the pain in his eyes doing this caused him. It was not something a Lycavorian did to a woman he considered his mate and wife. And she knew that is what Androcles considered her. His wife and mate. She was so very confused given everything that was happening and she had betrayed that love. She felt a surge of anger through her that Franklin would take advantage of her as he had, but then she had allowed him to. Caliria had allowed him to coerce her back into bed with memories of the times they had shared before. She had thought she had been in love with Franklin before all of this had happened and Caliria had allowed herself to be wooed by him to try and discover that again. Cursing herself once more Caliria knew it had been no different than before. Franklin did not even remotely come close to Androcles in bed, in either skill, size or what he made her feel. All during the act of Franklin pleasuring himself with her, Caliria felt like she was somehow betraying Androcles and Sadi and the others, but she did nothing to stop it. She even had to force her Alkay to secrete for she felt nothing for Franklin anymore and this she quickly discovered during the act.

By the Prophets how she wanted to feel his powerful arms around her once more. To feel their lips on her skin.

The chirping of her COM array drew her attention and caused Franklin to stir on the bed. She wiped her tears from her eyes and quickly rose to her feet, crossing the room in front of the large bay window where the sun was beginning to rise in the sky. She stopped in front of her terminal and assuming the transmission was from her father because he always called at this time since they had returned in order to exchange information, she stabbed her finger down on the panel and activated the array.

“Father I am rather busy at the moment!” She snapped as Franklin began to sit up in the bed. “Perhaps you could...” Caliria looked up and her green eyes flew open in shock and horror as she saw the two people within the transmission. Sadi stood just in front of Andro in the transmission, both of them smiling brightly. “Sadi! Androcles!”

“Inamarno do not be angry with us!” Sadi spoke quickly. “We only want to let you know that we are thinking of you and...” Sadi’s words died out and her jungle green eyes grew wider at what she saw, as did Andro’s beautiful azure colored orbs.

Caliria saw those azure orbs flash through the spectrum of emotions in a fleeting instant and he moved closer to the transmission as he saw Franklin. With wide eyes Caliria tried to interpose her body in front of the monitor. “Androcles! Sadi! I can explain!” She stammered. “I can...”

“Caliria...” Franklin Adams spoke now as he came fully awake. “Who is it?”

Andro’s eyes narrowed as Caliria could not block the entire view of Franklin getting out of the bed completely naked and then looking at what Caliria was wearing. Andro was not a stupid man by far and his azure orbs centered on her. “I... I see that you have... that you have made your decision Inamarno.” His voice quivered with a combination of anger and savage pain.

“Androcles... it’s not what it appears!” Caliria felt foolish for even saying something so stupid.

“It is not what it appears?” Andro snapped. “I see it did not take you long to make your decision Caliria Re Mydala. I would have thought I had earned the right to have you tell me to my face instead of discovering it this way.”

“Androcles please... listen to me!” Caliria pleaded. “I...”

“You... you are my mate and my wife!” Andro snarled. “And this is what you are doing behind my back? Why would... why would you betray me so? Why would you... why would you hurt me like this? What have I done to deserve this Caliria?”

Andro watched as Franklin Adams came up behind Caliria still naked and slid his arms around her waist. “Good morning.” He said in a husky voice as he intentionally leaned over and kissed her neck.

Caliria twisted away from his grasp. “Franklin stop!” She snapped at him.

“Arrggghh!” Andro screamed within the transmission and turned to walk out of the room.

“Androcles wait!” Caliria called after his image. “Let me... let me explain!”

“How... how do you explain this Inamarno?” Sadi asked softly. Her green eyes were moist with tears.

“Sadi please... I...” Caliria gasped.

“Caliria who is this?” Franklin asked as he stepped around her and exposed himself proudly. “One of the friends you made while you were in the Union?”

Sadi’s fangs burst forth now, her jungle green eyes changing as well as she glared at Franklin. “I am not talking to you stupid little man!” She snarled. “And you are not impressive in the least so cover that tiny thing you call your cock fool or I will cut it off if I ever see you in person.”

Adams’ face changed immediately and he stepped back out of the transmission.

“Sadi please!” Caliria pleaded as she pushed Franklin out of the transmission even more. “Sadi I can... I can explain this!”

“We thought your feelings for us ran deeper than they obviously do Inamarno.” Sadi spoke harshly as she turned her eyes back on Caliria. “But to do this... without even telling us. To let Andro see you with another man before you told him your decision. That is a betrayal of the highest kind as his wife and mate.”

Caliria let the anger at herself overrule her response and her own eyes narrowed. “I did not ask to be his mate!” She screamed. “I never agreed to that!”

Sadi’s eyes were wide now. “Inamarno... how can you say that?” She gasped angrily. “You knew what... you knew how we felt for you! We do not... contrary to what your father may believe Caliria Re Mydala, we are not rutting beasts and we do not fuck everyone we see! When you came to us willing... you became our wife and mate that night! You knew that even with all the doubts in your mind! And now you have betrayed that without the simple common courtesy of telling us first!”

“Sadi please...” Caliria whined. “I... I need to...”

Sadi shook her head. “No. No more talking. You have made your decision very clear now. We have seen that.” She reached up to the transmission on her end. “We wish you all the very best in your future Caliria Re Mydala.”

“Sadi wait!” Caliria pleaded.

“Goodbye Inamarno! We will always love you... but we will never forgive you for this.” Sadi stated just before she ended the transmission and the monitor went black.

“Sadi no!” Caliria screamed out trying to get her back.

Adams stepped forward. “Forget them Caliria.” He spoke. “They are animals just like your father says. They...!”

“GET OUT!” Caliria roared as she whirled on him. “Get out of my home! Get out of my life! This is your fault!”

“Caliria... you...”

Caliria was crazed with anger now and she shoved him with all her strength. Franklin went teetering backwards and slammed into the wall painfully. He grunted and caught his balance.

“What the fuck!” He shouted. “What is your problem? After last night...”

Caliria stepped closer to him, balling her hands into fists. “Last night was a mistake!” She barked at him viciously. “I have no feelings for you Franklin! Last night was a mistake do you hear me! I love him! I love them! And I have lost them because of you!”

“I didn’t force you to jump into the rack with me!” Adams protested. “I love you Caliria! You know that!”

“You lie!” Caliria screamed. “Get out! Get out now!”

Adams took a step towards her. “Caliria I...” He froze when he felt the cold metal of a weapon placed to his head.

“She told you to leave.” Paga growled as she held the K12 to Adams’ temple wearing only her sleeping shirt and having come from across the apartment at the sound of Caliria scream not for Androcles to leave. “I suggest you do what she asks.”

“No!” Adams snapped. “I will not leave!”

Paga used her thumb to jack back the old fashioned hammer on the K12 and pressed the barrel harder to his temple. “You will leave Eridiani, or they will find what is left of the frontal lobe of your brain somewhere in the river that runs nearby. They will never find your body.”

Adams looked at her out of the corner of his eye. “Ah fuck this!” He snarled and reached for his clothes.

Paga watched as he pulled his pants on and then began walking for the exit as he pulled on his shirt. “I will call you later Caliria.” He spoke.

Paga shook her head. “Not likely.” She said.

“Just leave Franklin!” Caliria snapped. “Just leave!”

Adams grunted in disgust and stabbed his hand down on the door control panel, moving through even before it had fully opened. Paga lowered her weapon and turned to look at Caliria. “Princess?” She gasped.

Caliria looked at her as she staggered to the chair and flopped into it. “What... what have I done Paga?” Caliria asked with tear filled eyes.

Paga moved in front of her. “He saw him didn’t he?” Paga asked.

Caliria looked at her. “I didn’t check to see who was calling me first. I didn’t check like I always do and the identifier didn’t work! Paga... I let that pig have me last night and Andro saw him get out of my bed! He saw him! The look... the look on his face was...”

Paga took her hands. “Caliria... he considered you his mate.” She said softly.

“He never... he never asked me Paga!” Caliria stammered lifting her eyes to look at her. “I...”

Paga shook her head. “When you give yourself to a Lycavorian in such a way. Physically as well as within Mindvoice... that is essentially saying yes Caliria. You swam within his thoughts yes?”

Caliria looked at her with wide tear filled eyes. “I... I didn’t know that! I saw so much of who he is! I...” She gasped. “By the Prophets I didn’t know that!”

Paga nodded her head. “Considering why you returned here I am not surprised.” She said softly.

“Why... why didn’t you stop me?” Caliria gasped. “Why did you let me do...?”

“You came home to discover what it is you want in your life Caliria Re Mydala.” Paga said. “You came home to discover what you believed. It was not my place to interfere in that.”

Caliria looked at her. “I’ve... I’ve lost them Paga! I’ve lost them! The only place I... the only place I found true love and peace was in their arms. His arms. I’ve lost that now!”

Paga squeezed her hands tightly. “What does your heart want Caliria Re Mydala?” She asked. “What does your heart want above all else?”

Caliria looked at her with tear filled eyes. “I... I don’t... I don’t know anymore.” She sobbed.

Paga nodded and rose to her full height pulling Caliria with her. “Then let me help you.” She said.

Caliria looked at her. “What? How?”

“Get dressed.” Paga told her. “We have two people to talk to and I want to show you something.”

“Paga... I...” Caliria began.

Paga looked at her and smiled warmly. “You are my friend Caliria Re Mydala. You love Androcles Leonidas! You love all of them or you would not be acting in this way. I am going to help you see that!”

“How?” Caliria asked.

Paga smiled. “By putting your trust in me.”

EARTH CRANAE ISLAND

“...after him Sadi?” Ne’Veha asked as the four of the stood on the patio and watched as Andro’s powerful form entered the waters of the Laconia Gulf and began to stroke out into the ocean.

Sadi shook her head slowly. “No.” She answered softly. “That will only make it worse.”

“We can feel the turmoil within him Sadi!” Carisia exclaimed. “We can’t just leave him like this! How could Caliria do this?”

Sadi looked at her. “I don’t know.”

“There must be something we can do!” Lu’ria asked.

“Someone is already on it.” Sadi spoke turning her head. “Someone who knows him just as well as we do. The only one who can really?” She said softly turning her head and they watched as Elynth’s sleep powerful form came screaming in over the shore and her wings carried her out over the water.

Elynth had felt Andro’s pain from ten miles away where she and Anthar had been hunting in the early morning mist. Without so much as a word to Anthar she dipped her wings and rocketed off back towards the villa. Now she sped across the surface of the water, her golden eyes focused on her Bonded Brother as he cut through the surface of the water with power and ease.

[Andro?] She called out as she swooped low above him.

[Now is not the time sister!] His voice snapped to her.

[What will you do? Swim all the way to the next continent to dull the pain you feel?] Elynth spoke as she turned lazily in the air above him.

[I saw... I saw that man in her bed!] Andro snarled. Anger fueled his strength and he cut through the water even faster now. [She laid with that man! She betrayed me!]

[Did she?] Elynth spoke softly. [Or did she just follow her heart?]

[She was my mate! My wife!] Andro growled.

[Listen to you!] Elynth exclaimed. [You speak like you owned her and that is not you!]

[Bah!] Andro snarled. [Leave me alone!]

[You will not Bah me Androcles Leonidas!] Elynth snapped at him. [And I will not leave you alone! Your emotions course through me too you fool! We are one!]

[Just leave me to my misery sister!] He growled.

[I will not!] Elynth barked out and she swooped down to the surface of the ocean and using her wickedly curved right talon she snatched Andro’s naked form out of the warm water and rose into the air holding him in her grasp.

[Put me down!] Andro barked right back at her.

[Shut up!] Elynth scolded him. [You will not act like this! I won't allow it! I will drop you if you do not listen to me!] She snapped her jaw shut close to his face as she stared at him and her wings drew them higher into the morning air.

[You wouldn't dare!] Andro snarled at her.

Elynth grunted and opened her talon, releasing him from a hundred and fifty meters up. She curled back through the sky as she watched him fall; bringing his legs and arms together just before he entered the water of the ocean with a slight splash. [Excuse me?] She called out. [Did you say I wouldn't drop you?]

Andro came sputtering back to the surface of the water and shook his head, his eyes wide. [You dropped me!] He screamed. He groaned as the impact with the water finally caught up to him and his free hanging balls contracted in pain.

[Next time wear clothes when you swim fool!] Elynth called out as she swooped down and once more scooped him into her talon and rose into the air. [Now will you listen to me? Or do I need to drop you again?]

Andro gripped her talon tightly. [Why can't you just let me alone?] He snapped.

[You are my Bonded Brother!] Elynth barked at him. [I could never leave you alone. Just as you would never leave me alone.] She lifted her talon up to her shoulder and Andro easily scampered across her shoulder to settle onto her back where the saddle would normally be. They had flown many times with no saddle and Andro settled gingerly between her shoulders, his balls still aching in dull pain.

[That hurt sister.] Andro moaned out as he leaned forward and pressed his chest to her warm scales.

Elynth chuckled softly as she drew them away from the island. [You will live brother.] She stated. [Now you must let this go.]

[Caliria... I saw that man... I saw the way she was...] Andro said.

Elynth turned her head and looked at him. [She loves you Androcles.] Elynth spoke. [She loves all of you.]

[Then why?] Andro gasped.

[It is your fault.] Elynth told him.

[Mine?] He shouted.

[You should have never sent her away. I told you this.] Elynth spoke. [You should have never let her go back. All it did was confuse her even more than she already was. All it did was lower her ability to understand. You wanted her to know you and know all of us. What better place to learn that than here with us.]

[What... all these years of listening to Coren warped her perspective sister? Staying here would not have changed that.] Andro said.

[Rensibfla!] Elynth barked as she turned into the easterly wind. [Remaining here with you? With Sadi and the others? That is what she needed. To see the true inner world of you and your people. Of all of us. This is where the love for her would have brought balance back to her. made her stronger. Sadi is your core Androcles my Bonded Brother. I know this... I have always known that. Ever since that day on the island. But each of them make you stronger, just has your mothers make your father stronger. You love them all, and they love you. It is the center of your strength! And she will be part of it as well.]

[I don't want to talk about that!] Andro snapped.

Elynth laughed once more as she executed a complete inverted roll, relishing in the feelings of flying with her Bonded Brother again. Just the two of them. [You can not deny it will come to be Androcles. It is your destiny. The destiny of all of you.] She righted them once more and looked at the sun as it continued to climb into the sky. [We have not done this in so long Andro. Just the two of us. It is wonderful isn't it?]

Andro lifted his head and looked at the sun and the ocean far below. Their psychic shield activated instantly the moment they touched as it always did, but he could still feel the pressure of the air currents across his naked flesh. [What do I do now to make this right sister?] He asked softly.

Elynth turned her head once more and gazed at him with her golden eyes. [You let it run its course.] She answered. [She will return to you. To all of you. It will just be by a different path now. And you have other things to concern yourself with now. Others who look to you.]

[I'm scared Elynth.] He said finally.

Elynth nodded her huge head. [And the truth finally comes into the light.] She spoke. [Do you think you are the only one who is frightened my Bonded Brother? Do you think your father and grandfathers never felt this way? It is natural to fear Andro. As long as you don't let that fear rule your actions.]

[And how do I keep that from happening sister?] He asked.

[The Feravomir once told your father something Andro.] Elynth said. [My grandmother told me of it many years ago. She said... she told me one day I would need to share it with you my Bonded Brother.] Elynth turned her head and looked at him as he sat up straighter on her back. [She told me to tell you... Do not be afraid to lose Androcles Leonidas my Bonded Brother, for the moment you become afraid to lose something or someone, you will become afraid to act. And when you become afraid to act... all will be lost. And the same remains true for your father.]

Andro was silent as he stared at her golden eyes for a long moment. The wind carried them easily, Elynth's wings fully extended as she glided along with little effort. Cranae Island was far to the west now and thousands of feet below them as they flew over the ocean. Andro felt a surge of warmth through him. The warmth of love and devotion coming from Sadi and his other mates and wives as they reached for him. Everything in his life had brought him to this point. Every action, every decision, it had all been leading him to this very moment. All he and Elynth had endured, all the pain and death they had witnessed and wrought. All of it had been driving him to this exact moment. A moment where he had to make a decision. A decision that would alter his life and the lives of so many in the coming years. A decision not unlike those decisions his father had made over the course of his own life.

Androcles Leonidas had spent so many years and so much effort trying to come out from the shadow of his father that he never realized that the shadow was of his own creation. A more than simple shadow that his own thoughts and actions had created. A test. His father had known he would come to this point in his life. He had known all along that Androcles would reach the instant where he would truly become a man and a Prince. That instant was right now.

Androcles Leonidas took a deep breath and allowed the partial change to come over him. The black ring surrounded his azure colored eyes and his dual fangs slowly extended from his gums as he felt the power within him. Within Elynth.

[I... I am Androcles Leonidas, Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union.] He stated proudly. [And I am my own man!]

Elynth released a trumpet that shattered the silence of the wind around them. [I am Elynth, daughter of Torma and Isheeni and Bonded Sister to Androcles Leonidas! I am my own person!] She bellowed into the sky.

[Let us return home sister!] Androcles announced. [I have mates to love! My mother's planet to free! And a war to win for our people!]

[And plans to make.] Elynth stated.

Andro met her gaze. [And plans to make. For the true war that is coming.]

[We make an oath this day my Bonded Brother.] Elynth continued. [An oath to serve all those around us. To never quit. To never stop. Not until the last breath leaves our bodies and we become one with our grandfathers and those who went before us.]

Andro nodded. [An oath it is my Bonded Sister.] He spoke.

Elynth dipped her right wing and sent them into tight turn back towards Cranae Island. [Then let us return and begin to show the Kavalians and others the error of their ways!]

Andro smiled. [Now that sounds like an excellent idea.] He said. [May my grandfather's spirits watch over and guide us sister.]

Elynth folded her wings back. [And pick us up if we fall.] She finished just before she lowered her head and they plummeted for the surface far below them.

The sun struck the surface of the water just then in a way that almost appeared like a rupture of light. Andro and Elynth both smiled as they plunged for the surface far below because to them it appeared as if those who had come before them were shining their lights on them from on high. It was a sign that war was coming. But it was also a sign that change was coming as well.

Never fear the unknown! Andro's voice echoed softly. Never fear the unknown!