"You should take more care about what you wear openly Sivana." Umbra spoke as she sat down on the couch opposite her. "There are soldiers all around and Siara is too young to be... to be exposed to such things."

Sivana looked at her oddly. "What things are you referring to Aunt Umbra?" She asked.

"You know full well what I am saying." Umbra said. "You and Anja insist on dismissing the customs of our people in your manner of dress and how you conduct yourselves. Those men could... they will see you dressed as you are and they might... and they might take it as an invitation to approach you inappropriately."

Sivana couldn't contain her laughter at that and she shook her head. "Oh Aunt Umbra... that is outrageous! Do these things actually occupy your mind daily?"

"Do not dismiss what I tell you!" Umbra barked. "I am your Aunt and your elder!"

Sivana glared at her. "The Durcunusaan soldiers that protect me and my children do so willingly!" She snapped. "Do not disrespect them by alleging they would do something like what you are suggesting! I am Belen's mate... his scent is all over me Aunt Umbra... and whether you wish to believe it or not, Lycavorians hold their mates more sacred than anything. Especially those who were raised in Sparta as Belen was. The only men I need to worry about doing something as foolish as what you are implying Aunt Umbra are Hadarian men. What you are suggesting is an insult not only to me... but to Belen... and I will not allow you to do that." She leaned forward on the couch. "Now why don't you tell me what it is you are here for before I lose my temper and end this little gathering just as unexpectedly as it began."

Umbra glared at Sivana for a long moment before motioning to Pcillany next to her on the couch. "Seanna's mother was kind enough to come to me first and inform me of what she is going to do before it became public knowledge."

"And what is that?" Sivana spoke harshly.

The woman with graying dark hair and light green eyes met Sivana's gaze evenly. "I intend to seek an audience before the Hadarian Elder Healers and ask that they begin an internal investigation into the many circumstances surrounding Seanna's death."

"What circumstances?" Sivana asked. "She was seriously injured during an Evolli attack upon one of our medical trauma units on Folta. Her wounds were too grievous and numerous to be healed. Anja tried for over an hour when she got to her and it was no use."

"I... I believe that Queen Anja did not do enough to save her." Pcillany spoke. "I believe she let her die because of the issues that had come up between them. I believe she had a hand in Seanna's death."

Sivana's eyes grew wide at this and she stared at the woman. "You... you are serious?" She gasped finally.

"If my daughter Seanna was of the right frame of mind and not corrupted by Queen Anja and her considerable influence, I believe she would be alive today." Pcillany spoke.

"Corrupted by Anja's influence?" Sivana said. "What exactly does that nonsense mean?"

"It is not nonsense!" Umbra spoke.

Sivana looked at her. "You are going along with this drivel!" Sivana barked as she came to her feet.

"Princess... I understand she is your sister and our Queen." Pcillany spoke. "However... from the moment Queen Anja came into her life Seanna changed. She... she entered into what I believe was an unhealthy relationship with Queen Anja and through the years that took a toll on her mentally. Rinard agrees with me."

"Rinard!" Sivana spat. "Rinard has hated Anja ever since she told him to go nubous himself because she would not sleep with him and Seanna!"

"Sivana!" Umbra snapped her eyes wide. "How dare you!"

"Don't 'how dare I'!" Sivana spat. "The man is a pig! He wanted Anja to sleep with him and Seanna and you know that Aunt Umbra! You are going to sit there and actually agree with what she is saying? That Anja somehow let Seanna die on purpose?"

"The relationship she shares with the other Queens is not normal." Pcillany spoke quickly. "She introduced my daughter into this lifestyle and corrupted her. She..."

"Never forced Seanna to do anything she did not want to do!" Sivana snarled. "The relationship my sister shares with the other Queens is one of love and devotion. Do not attempt to make it something sinister. Anja loved Seanna... and part of her will always love Seanna. That does not mean Seanna had the right to demand Anja sleep with her and her sick boyfriend so Rinard could strut around saying he got to fuck his Queen! Anja never forced Seanna into anything... and she certainly never forced her to join her and Martin and the others in their bed!"

"Yet Seanna was willing to do this if Queen Anja asked her too." Pcillany said.

"What kind of sick logic is that?" Sivana demanded. "Seanna never shared the warmth of their bed for anything other than sleep!" She stabbed her finger at Umbra as she started to reply. "And don't you dare say anything Aunt Umbra. Anja is my twin... my sister... and everything that has happened in her life she has shared with me either verbally or within Mindvoice! That is what twins do! You have no idea who she is! None! You never tried to learn anything about her because she did not conform to your ridiculous ideals of how a Queen should act! Just as you have never tried to learn anything about me! Seanna died over four years ago and you are going to do this now? You are actually going to support this?"

"I am only doing what I feel is best for our people." Umbra spoke calmly. "I believe the King's influence has altered Anja's perceptions regarding many things. I believe her intimate relationship with the other Queens has corrupted her as well. And in the process... she is also corrupting her children. Retta and Calyb know nothing of their Hadarian culture or heritage and she has made no move to change this. She puts them at risk everyday by allowing them to become bonded with those dragons. I could not intervene with Eliani... but I believe it is my duty as a member of her family to do so with my younger niece and nephew."

Sivana looked at her as if she was insane. "You must be joking!" Sivana said with a small laugh. "You... you don't honestly think you will challenge Martin Leonidas and Anja for their children do you?"

"They are my blood as well!" Umbra barked. "I deserve equal time with them!"

"Are you even listening to how completely stupid you sound!" Sivana snapped. "Martin and Anja are their parents! What gives you any right to see them? I can't honestly believe you are so ignorant and pompous that you would consider this. Supporting this fool attempt to besmirch Anja's name is not something I put past you Umbra... but actually attempting to take Anja's children? Martin's children? Are you truly that vindictive as to try something as completely stupid as that?"

"This has nothing to do with me!" Umbra barked. "I..."

"This has everything to do with you!" Sivana growled as her anger came forth and her eyes changed. Her wolf fangs burst forth and she glared at Umbra. "This is nothing more than you making an attempt at power! You think because you were our father's sister that you are due something more than what you have! I know exactly what this is! And it makes me sick!"

Pcillany came to her feet. "My decision to pursue this was not something that Lady Umbra had any part in." She spoke. "I understand your desire to protect and believe your sister Princess Sivana... but in this case you will find that your support is misguided. I believe you should truly look into this matter yourself before..."

"You should leave now." Sivana spoke sternly.

"We are not finished discussing this." Umbra barked.

"Yes we are." Sivana said.

"I came here to give you the option of supporting us in our endeavors or..." Umbra said.

"Or what?" Sivana almost shouted.

"I will include you in the investigation." Pcillany spoke in reply as she stood up. "As supporting your sister in whatever suspicious circumstances that led to my daughter's death."

Umbra got to her feet now as well. "And I will petition the Hadarian courts to have Siara removed from your care during the time frame of that investigation. She is a member of the Hadarian Royal Family and it is time someone showed her what that meant."

Sivana's smile was not welcoming or comforting in any manner. "Then by all means ladies... proceed with your plans. They will not succeed."

"Sivana you..." Umbra began.

"You are no longer welcome here Aunt Umbra. Remove yourself from these grounds before I have the Durcunusaan do it for you." Sivana growled. "Do not return and make no attempt to see Siara. I can guarantee you will never see Retta and Calyb ever again."

Umbra drew herself up haughtily. "We shall see."

Sivana smiled. "Yes we will." Sivana watched as both women turned and exited the Sitting Room. She took several deep breathes and then turned as one of the junior Healers came rushing into the room.

"Lady Sivana!" She gasped.

"Taelle please open a secure communications channel with my sister in Sparta." Sivana spoke turning to face her.

The young woman nodded. "At once Lady Sivana!" She looked at one of the women she hoped to emulate one day. "Milady... do you wish me to activate Lady Anja's alternate plans?"

Sivana shook her head. “No... not yet Taelle.” She said. “Let us see how this plays out first. Insure however that my Aunt comes nowhere near Siara as she goes about her schooling and activities. You have my authorization to remind her painfully if need be that she is not to come near my daughter.”

Taelle nodded. “As you order Lady Sivana.” She stated. “I will open the channel immediately.”

Sivana watched her exit the Sitting Room quickly and she lifted the mug of tea as her eyes returned to normal and her fangs faded. “What are you doing Umbra?” She asked softly. “What are you doing?”

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

CENTRAL DISTRICT/SPARTA KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL ANJA LEONIDAS’S OFFICE

“Vana... are you serious?” Anja gasped as she sat in the high backed chair behind her desk.

Anja’s office was on the thirty-second floor of the hospital named in honor of her father and dedicated nine years ago just before the start of the Evolli War. King Yelu had been the most powerful Hadarian Healer to have ever lived, more powerful than even their mother who was widely recognized as the finest Mage Warrior to have existed for centuries. It was a feat unprecedented in the annals of Hadarian history since the females were usually the ones who held this distinction. It was said their parents could go nearly two years without having to Ascend. They were remembered as being both exceptionally compassionate and wise and they were both revered on Hadaria, not only for their passion and wisdom but for their love of each other. There were several monuments erected across the planet in their honor among the many cities there, and over the years Anja and Sivana had been to all of them on numerous occasions. Neither Anja nor Sivana knew it, but many of the Hadarian people saw the King and Queen when they looked at the twin sisters. Anja’s was the more fiery and passionate like their mother, while Sivana carried herself with their father’s almost surreal calm. King Yelu’s legacy now carried on in his twin daughters and it was something Anja and Sivana took very serious. Anja lifted the mug of Aricia’s coffee and sipped it slowly as she stared at her fraternal twin sister’s projection in the holo imager.

The exceptionally clear image of Sivana, clear enough to be mistaken for being in the same room even, nodded as she smiled at Anja’s use of the nickname Eliani had given her as she first learned to speak. Eliani had been unable to form the first part of Sivana’s name and resorted to calling her simply Vana. The name had stuck.

“They left only a few moments ago Anja.” Sivana answered as she moved around the large desk in her own office on Hadaria. “Not exactly the most pleasant of ways to begin your morning I assure you. Thankfully Belen was not here or it would not have been pretty.”

“That is why they have been so cold to me the last few times I have gone to see them.” Anja spoke reflectively in a soft voice. “Pcillany must have been planning to do this for a while now.”

Sivana nodded. “It certainly seems that way.” She spoke. “Rinard is involved as well, though I don’t know to what extent. He is a Lycavorian and he can not request something like this from the Elder Healers.”

“No... but I guarantee he had a say in prodding Pcillany to go forward with this.” Anja answered quickly. “Aunt Umbra’s actions in supporting Pcillany do not surprise me either Vana. She has acted this way since I first returned with Martin. You should have heard her rant when we returned after rescuing Lisisa and she discovered Belen had not only claimed you but turned you as well. Even grandfather could not believe the words she uttered that day.”

“You never told me that sister.” Sivana spoke.

Anja waved her hand. “It wasn’t important.” She replied. “I was not about to let our Aunt or anyone take you from what you had discovered and accepted so freely with Belen. She wanted you in her clutches so that she could warp your view of things and make you think and act how she felt you should be. Something that she was never able to accomplish with me. When I denied her that in regards to you... her dislike of me only grew more.”

“Grandfather has told me it was always an issue between father and her.” Sivana spoke. “Aunt Umbra’s insistence on acting superior to everyone around her simply because she was of royal blood. Like she felt she was owed something more because of who her brother was.”

Anja nodded slowly. “Grandfather said our father hated that about her.” She said in agreement. “And when he took a Mage Warrior as his Queen, Aunt Umbra about had a cow.”

Sivana laughed gently. “I must spend more time around you and my niece sister.” She said. “The two of you can produce such vivid visual descriptions using several different languages. It is quite humorous actually.”

Anja chuckled. “So Martin and the others have told me.” She said. “Does Eurin know about this Vana?”

Sivana shook her head quickly. “I wanted to inform you first.” Sivana spoke. “I have already forbid Aunt Umbra from seeing Siara again under any circumstances. Taelle knows what she is to do if Umbra makes an attempt. She also complained that you allowed Retta and Calyb to bond with dragons and that you have not allowed them to experience their Hadarian culture more. She is also quite upset that you have let Eliani make her own way without her guidance.”

Anja nodded. “That wasn’t me. Eliani made her own decisions about Aunt Umbra when she was ten and decided to conduct her Agoge and not attend The School of the Healers. Not to mention that Eliani almost always brings Nyla with her to Hadaria when she Ascends and makes it a point to show as much affection in public with her as she can. It’s her way of sticking it to Aunt Umbra.”

Sivana chuckled. “Something she does quite well. Sort of like you.”

“Aunt Umbra can piss and holler all day at the Hadarian Elders about that if she wants.” Anja spoke. “They are our children not hers. Martin and I and the others agreed a long time ago that they do not need to be exposed to her pompous idiocy and twisted ideals of what Hadarian royalty... any royalty is supposed to be. And the Elder Healers are not fools enough to grant her any rights she may think or perceive she has to our children Vana. Martin and Belen would make them see the folly in that within hours of discovering what Umbra is doing.”

Sivana nodded. “That is why I recommend we do not tell them just yet Anja.” She spoke. “They are Spartans sister... and neither of them is very subtle about dealing with something that they might perceive as a threat to us or their children.”

Anja chuckled once more. “Subtly to Martin Leonidas is plunging his Nehtes through your chest as he tells you that was a very bad idea.”

Sivana laughed as well and nodded her head. “Yes... much like Belen. You have to admit though; it does stir your wolf blood knowing they will act in this way.”

Anja grinned at Sivana’s words. “Sets my blood on fire is more like it!” She stated. “But you’re right... this is not something they need to know about right now. Martin already has too much on his plate as it is with the High Coven and the Kavalians here in Sparta at the same time, not to mention the attack on MJOLNIR’S HAND.” Anja looked up at her in the holo image transmission. “Belen is still dealing with the Embassy transition right?”

Sivana nodded. “It should be complete within two weeks... but this is the largest turnover they have conducted in sometime. Everyone is scrambling to keep up with the demands of time and space.”

Anja nodded. “Everyone seems to have a secret agenda and all we want to do is live in peace.”

“I will make some discrete inquiries here in regards to what Pcellany is doing.” Sivana spoke. “I do not know when she planned to go before the Elders, but if she came to me this morning with this information, I would imagine it will be soon. She and Umbra both wanted me to side with them against you Anja. When I refused to do this; that is when Umbra made her veiled threat to petition the Healers to grant her custody of Siara. She apparently thinks neither of us is a very good mother.”

“Ah... nubous her and the horse she rode in on!” Anja popped. “I still can’t believe this Rinard fool would go this far Vana.” Anja spoke. “Seanna never slept with Martin or the others. She stayed in our bed at times, but only to sleep. Why would he do all this simply because I told Seanna that I would not allow him to bed both of us together? Is his ego so big as to think he could have somehow stolen me away from Martin?”

“Perhaps it was the way you told him sister.” Sivana spoke with a smile. “I don’t think he appreciated you telling him to go fuck himself with his little dick when he refused to believe what you had told Seanna in regards to his request.”

“Then he shouldn’t have acted like such an ass when he came to our home that day.” Anja hissed out. “He is lucky Martin wasn’t there or we would not be having this discussion because he would be dead.”

Sivana nodded. “True. Perhaps I will remind him of this.”

Anja shook her head. “Don’t bother wasting your time. If he has been pushing Pcillany to go this far, talking with him will only make it worse. Inform Eurin and Zaniai of what took place this morning and allow them to handle it for now. Eurin knows what Rinard tried to do and she doesn’t care for the man. Zaniai has far more contacts within the Elders than Pcillany could ever hope to gain, and he is not particularly fond of Aunt Umbra to begin with.”

“Taelle asked if we should activate the alternate plans you have put in place.” Sivana spoke.

Anja looked at her sister in the holo imager. “Do you feel that is necessary Vana?” She asked.

Sivana shook her head quickly. “No... but I would like your permission to act on your behalf should the need arise.”

“Vana... you never have to ask me that.” Anja spoke. “You know that.”

Sivana nodded with a smile. “Yes I know... but I like hearing you say it. It tells me just how close we really are.”

Anja chuckled. “If we were any closer in how we thought sister we’d be sharing the same body. Something I don’t think our mates would appreciate.”

Sivana laughed heartily now. “No they would not.” She stated. “I will handle things here Anja, have no worries. Now tell me sister... I have read the report Belen received from Atropos before that distasteful business this morning. You believe the High Coven has improved their cloning technology significantly?”

Anja nodded. “Very much so.” She stated. “I was going to contact you later today and have you begin running some tests of the samples I will send you. I don’t want to do them here for security purposes. Most are from the clones who conducted the attack on Martin’s ship, but half a dozen are samples we obtained from the Kavalian females who have undergone biogenic treatments and are now here on Earth as part of this Trade Delegation.”

“And how did you obtain them sister?” Sivana asked with a sly grin. “I doubt very much they would have given them freely given the distrust the Kavalians seem to have of anyone not of their species.”

Anja feigned a stunned and hurt expression. “Sister... are you suggesting I did something unethical by obtaining these samples through deceit? Even I would never stoop so low as to use the hidden bio scanners on the MENKLA transport?”

Sivana grinned in the transmission. “No, of course not sister. I would never suggest you would resort to something so sneaky and devious. That is not in your nature.”

“I should think not!” Anja declared with a smile. “Run the standard tests Vana and then anything else you can think of that might be useful.”

Sivana nodded. “I will see to it.” She said. “I will contact you when I have the results. Sometime tomorrow I would think.”

“Give Siara a hug and a kiss for me. And tell her I still owe her a ride on Miath.” Anja spoke.

“Be safe sister.” Sivana spoke.

Anja nodded. “And you Vana.”

The transmission ended and Anja sat back in her chair slowly bringing the mug to her lips. She had smelled him easily when he had come silently into the room minutes before but remaining in the shadows and staying quiet. The one man she trusted with everything outside of Martin Leonidas.

“You don’t approve?” She asked softly.

Atropos stepped into the light of her office and moved to the chair in front of her desk where he settled his bulk. He had been Anja’s Durcunusaan Captain since the day she became Queen and he would willingly throw his life away for the diminutive Persian haired woman across from him. She had made him a part of her life without question. She had allowed his son to love her sister shamelessly, and she was the High Guardian to both of his daughters, one of whom was turning out to be an exceptional doctor.

“You should have let me kill him long ago for doing what he did Anja. I would have been well within my rights as your Captain and you know this.” Atropos spoke using her first name as he always did when they were alone.

Anja bobbed her head back and forth. "Perhaps." She said. "We don't know if that would have prevented this issue we seem to have now Atropos. Rinard is not the one driving my Aunt to do what she is doing. I can't believe she is actually going to petition the Elder Healers to take our children from us. Who in their right mind would go after the Spartan children of the King? That is her own greed and grasping for power she does not deserve clouding her judgment."

Atropos nodded. "True." He spoke. "But Seanna's mother would not have the fortitude to do this without someone pushing her to do it and feeding her lies. And that could only be that fool Rinard." Atropos said thoughtfully. "Pcillany cared for you when you and Seanna were together, and now after so many years to have turned against you in such a way? That tells me outside influence is involved... and it comes from this Spartan Rinard."

"There is more to him than he wants us to know Atropos." Anja spoke softly. "I can not believe he would go to these lengths in an attempt to hurt me just because I would not sleep with him. If he is behind this... and I believe he is..." She continued quickly and lifting her hand seeing Atropos about to speak. "There is something else going on... something else driving this and I want to know what it is."

"What do you want me to do?" Atropos asked.

"Speak with General Vengal." Anja said getting to her feet. "Find out from him why he was transferred out of the Durcunusaan when we returned from Lycavore. There had to be a reason and I want to know what it is. I want to know what he has been doing all these years as well. Especially since Seanna's death. I want to know who he has seen... who he has spoken with... everything. Targeting me is one thing... but bringing my children and Vana's children into this was not the most intelligent thing for him to do."

Atropos stood up as well and stepped closer to the Queen he had served for a quarter century. "Targeting you is not exactly the sign of someone in their right mind either. You are far from being an easy target."

Anja nodded. "There is that to consider as well."

"You do realize Aricia has her own small investigation ongoing of this Rinard and what he is all about. Should I speak with her?"

Anja smiled. "God I love your sister Atropos." Anja said. "She is almost as possessive of us as Martin is."

Atropos nodded. "She was born a Spartan woman and will always be a Spartan woman no matter if we are wolf. She loves without conditions or regrets Anja, and like Martin she will protect those she loves."

Anja nodded. "I know. Speak with her first. Find out who she has poking around and then coordinate your efforts. I will talk with her and the others tonight about this."

"Limitations Anja?" He asked.

Anja shook her head. "Not in this case Atropos." She replied quickly. "Allow Vengal to know what is happening and why you want these answers... but no one else. Not yet. And most especially not Martin."

Atropos nodded. "Yes... the King would not take kindly to this bit of information. In fact I believe he would take it very personal."

Anja shook her head. "Yes he would." She said. "And we need to find out what is driving this Atropos. I love him with all that I am... but sometimes Martin can be rather predictable in his actions when it concerns us or his children just as Sivana said."

Atropos chuckled softly. "I can think of many words to describe the King." He said with a smile. "Predictable is not one of them. You have been with him Anja... you have loved him for so long... that you, Aricia and the others are beginning to think you know what he will do in almost every instance."

"Well... he does have his moments I suppose." Anja spoke turning to face him with a grin. "And we are his mates Atropos... we should know him."

Atropos nodded. "Yes... but I have discovered through the years that trying to predict what he will do is often times foolhardy." Atropos said. "No one predicted he would take only five thousand Spartans and a hundred dragons and destroy five times their number of these Kavalians on Beklan Nine. The Evolli did not predict he and Andro would never leave their dead comrades on Alba Tau and they lost nearly five thousand of their men in discovering this. They did not predict he would order the shattering of the crust of their homeworld's closest moon to destabilize the sector and make them unable to use the LSD drives for at least two decades." Atropos reached up and rested his hand on Anja's shoulder. "There are times my Queen when you and the others do not give the King enough credit for what swirls within his mind. He may act uneducated and unlearned, but that is only an act and you know that. When you are in his arms again look into his eyes Anja... look past where you normally go and you will see what I am talking about. And then you will see that same thing in the eyes of the son and daughter my beloved sister and you bore him.”

Anja stared at her Captain for a long moment and then reached up to place her hand on his broad chest. “Thank you Atropos.” She said softly. “I think I will take you up on your advice.”

Atropos nodded. “I will go and see General Vengal.” He spoke. “I will advise you of what I discover as soon as I am able.”

Anja nodded as he turned and left her office. She stood there for a long silent moment, turning to gaze out her window at the streets of Sparta far below as she contemplated Atropos’s words to her. She had known Martin longer than anyone but Danny, but had she and her fellow Queens let themselves grow so accustomed to his carefree attitude and loving nature with them and their children that she had forgotten just how truly lethal and exceedingly intelligent Martin Leonidas really was?

And their children?

SENATE ARBORETUM ANTI-ROOM

Martin turned his head from where he was watching the gigantic wall sized monitor of the trade proceedings in the main room as the door to the anti-room slid open. Deia, Laustinos, Stenys and For’mya sat across the massive table from Jalersi, Athani, Jiss and Matuarr. There were data pads scattered across the table, along with pitchers of refreshing water and also coffee and tea. Ardis sat with several other aides along the wall behind Deia, while Karun and Qurot sat behind Jalersi.

Martin smiled brightly when he saw Tarifa enter the room with Dilios and Lynwe and he got to his feet quickly and scooped Tarifa into his arms tightly hugging her. Tarifa’s smile was just as wide as she wrapped her arms around his shoulders and hugged him back. Martin was the big brother that Tarifa never had and she relished in how he could make her laugh and put her at ease.

“Bout time you got here.” Martin muttered into her elven ear as he kissed her cheek.

Tarifa squeezed his arms. “It is a full time job keeping Panos from worrying about every little thing that goes on within Sparta. You are giving him fits by bringing all these new and exciting people here for visits.”

Martin chuckled. “I bet he’s called me some choice names huh?”

Tarifa’s sapphire eyes gleamed in the light of the room. “You have no idea.” She said.

Martin laughed and turned to Dilios, taking his hand firmly. “Thank you for coming Dilios.” He said.

“I’m just glad Tarifa saw fit to drag me away from the Senate.” He spoke.

Martin looked at Lynwe and smiled. The six foot tall Drow female was one of his closest friends and a superior warrior no matter how you cut it. He stepped forward and embraced her as well without hesitation. “You are looking well Lynwe.” He said.

Lynwe tossed back her flowing white hair her amber colored eyes bright. “As if I have a choice in that.” She stated. “If Selene and Layna are not fawning over me... it is Joarl.”

Martin chuckled. “And this is a problem why?”

Lynwe smiled. “I never said it was a problem.” She spoke.

“Joarl is due back in a few days isn’t he?” Martin asked.

Lynwe nodded. “Yes... and if you send him away for three weeks again Martin Leonidas then Selene, Layna and I will have words with you.”

It had been the talk of Eden City for nearly a year when the news broke that the stern faced Admiral Joarl had claimed not only Selene and Layna as his mates, but Lynwe as well. Lynwe may have had equipment that the majority of men would kill for dangling between her legs, but she was a stunningly beautiful woman as well. It had taken her nearly three years to come to grips with the fact that Joarl loved her for who she was and not for what she had between her legs. He had acted like any old wolf would act, patient and calm. He had courted the three of them for three years, never once asking for something that was not offered. One night in that third year, and one sizzling kiss had swept aside all of Lynwe’s doubts as to what his intentions were. Selene and Layna would never have accepted him without Lynwe’s approval, for while they found him attractive in a rugged sort of way, both of them were very content with the life they had built with Lynwe.

Lynwe never thought she could love a man. She never imagined she would discover a man who would not look upon her in disgust when he realized what the High Coven's demented experiments had done to her. Joarl not only knew what had been done to her, it did not bother him in the least and he showed Lynwe and them that very thing the first time he had shared their bed. Until Joarl came into their lives, Lynwe had never been taken by a man. Up until this Spartan warrior had entered their world no man had been brave enough to approach her. Lynwe had howled out her pleasure for hours that first night as Joarl took her and Selene and Layna in more ways than they could have ever thought of themselves. That had begun a relationship that was to this day just as solid and devoted as the one Martin shared with his Queens. Joarl had given Selene and Layna four children, their children and Lynwe and Selene had adopted Cihera shortly after Teeria turned ten. Their home in Eden City was large and always full of happiness and love no matter who was there.

Martin laughed at Lynwe's words and squeezed her hand. "Don't worry... last thing I want to do is have the three of you mad at me." He spoke. "Have you heard from Cihera and Anton?"

Lynwe nodded. "They reported in last night to Armetus." She replied. "They did a recon of the resort's computer database but it did not provide them much in the way of information. The Kochab was there and I believe Cihera said they were going to pay him a visit soon." She said with a smile.

"That ought to be an interesting visit." Martin spoke with a smile.

Tarifa laughed herself. "Yes... Cihera is not terribly fond of the Kochab species." She said.

Dilios looked at the monitor now and stepped closer to the wall sized screen. "So these are our guests." He spoke.

Martin turned still holding Lynwe's hand and nodded. "This is them." He stated. "The talks seem to be proceeding rather boringly."

Tarifa chortled. "Anything involving diplomacy is boring to you Martin." She spoke as she came up next to Dilios. "So these are the biogenic clone daughters of the Kavalian Prefect Keleru?"

"Not clones." Martin spoke as Lynwe moved up next to Tarifa. He lifted the data pad from the table and held it out to her. "They underwent biogenic treatments to remove the coat of hair from their bodies and to make their tails recede." He said looking up from the pad. "Makes them more presentable to other people apparently. Though from what I can see... the younger one has obviously re-grown her tail."

Tarifa nodded. "It does not detract from her beauty." She spoke. "They are both quite stunning."

"The two in the back?" Lynwe asked.

"One Pride Commander Qurot and Pride Lieutenant Karun." Martin answered. "The woman in the center on the left is Jalersi' Puat. The one with the tail is Athani' Puat. Jalersi is Pleistarchus's mate and this Karun is his oldest son with her."

All three of them turned to look at him with wide eyes. "Your brother's..." Dilios exclaimed.

Martin nodded. "Yeah. He's been with the Kavalian people for the better part of three thousand years Dilios... it stands to reason he would take one of their females as his wife. It doesn't surprise me though that he was pretentious enough to wait until they had advanced their cloning techniques to the point where they could make their females look like that."

"Martin..." Tarifa began to speak turning to face him.

He shook his head. "My brother died the day he abandoned his people and left Earth with the Kavalians. Over a hundred Spartans died attempting to protect him as King and he just up and let them die. You know what happen that day, I don't have to tell you. No... Pleistarchus may be of my blood... but the only brother I have is Danny. This woman and his son by her mean nothing to me."

"Why did you want us here Martin?" Lynwe asked.

"You sat in on the negotiations with the Zaleisians twenty-five years ago Tarifa." Martin spoke. "Lynwe you interrogated Talco once he was exposed. I wanted you to observe them and see if they are similar in any way to this Talco. Dilios... you are just flat out scary when it comes to political maneuvering and that is why you are here."

"You don't trust Deia?" Dilios asked surprised.

Martin grinned. "Having you here was Deia's idea."

"Then my first question would be; why is Laustinos in there?" Dilios spoke. "He is the reason we had to accept this ridiculous delegation to begin with."

Tarifa and Lynwe looked at Martin as they all settled to the table. "What is this?" Tarifa asked. I didn't know that."

Martin shrugged. "Laustinos thought with the wrong head when he agreed to meet with them... and let's just leave it at that." Tarifa glanced at Lynwe quickly when Martin said this but she kept her thoughts to herself. "The man doesn't rate real high on my list of people I'd invite to dinner for a number of different reasons."

"Well... there aren't many on that list anyway." Tarifa stated with a grin.

"That's true." Martin agreed. "Anyway... we are pretty sure they are here to find out what is going on with the High Coven. This Trade Delegation is only a cover for that goal. So far For'mya seems to think the Cease Fire story we are using is holding up. All of you know of course why Aikiro and her ilk are really here?"

They all nodded. "Andro is training the dragons they stole from us." Tarifa spoke in reply. "Roluth felt them the moment they arrived in orbit and told Nya Istel and I. Aelnala confirmed it for us. Isra beat around the bush because he did not think you wanted us to know."

Martin nodded. "We didn't announce it publicly... but we knew anyone bonded to a dragon would sense them sooner or later. And we know none of them would run around yelling to the heavens."

Tarifa nodded quickly. "Of course not! If the Kavalians knew we were doing this they would automatically assume we were going to enter the war on the side of the Coven and act."

"That's why Andro has them at a very secure location far away from Sparta." Martin said. "Anja was able to discretely conduct bio scans of all of them as they made their way here and she and Sivana will know more in a couple days I would imagine."

Dilios looked at Martin. "You know of course Deia would not approve of that."

Martin nodded. "That's why she doesn't know." He said. "I love my Aunt... but there are times when we need to use Spartan ingenuity and not diplomacy. I will tell her when Anja gets the results of the scans."

"You think these scans will reveal something Martin?" Lynwe asked.

"We know that Kavalians have a very real and distinct fear of dragons." Martin spoke. "However... during the attack the younger daughter... Athani, she was able to Mindvoice back and forth with Cemath. She actually rode on his back within the landing bay. This is not information we had up until now and it's one of the two reasons I had Anja do the scans."

Tarifa turned back to the monitor. "Those are the tremors I feel then." She said softly. "So very faint and weak... almost indiscernible... but they are there. Roluth detected them as well when we landed outside."

Martin nodded. "We need to discover if this is something that is just now making itself known among the Kavalian people as a whole, or if it is an isolated incident. Either way... at the rate I sense her abilities are growing... within a week she'll be able to detect the dragons at least faintly. Helen and I are meeting later today to discuss it."

"Andro is prepared to move the High Coven dragons if that is the case yes?" Dilios asked.

Martin nodded. "Yes... but if this is the beginning of Mindvoice abilities as a whole within the Kavalian people we will need to drastically change our combat tactics. Lynwe that is why you are here. With Walter and Joarl off world for the moment... you and Tareif are the resident Kavalian experts. This Qurot is part of their military... and I want him watched. The second officer is Pian who is in the hospital at the moment. Learn all you can about them. How they move... what they might be thinking. What they look at when they go out among the streets. Everything. Use whatever assets you feel you need too, including your Drow scouts, but make sure they do not get a hint they are being watched."

Lynwe nodded. "Consider it done." She spoke confidently.

"You don't want the son watched Martin?" Tarifa asked.

"Athani'Puat is the bigger question mark right now." He replied. "However... this Karun is not here for the same reasons as the others. His purpose is different."

"What do you mean?" Dilios asked leaning forward at the table. "How do you know that?"

Martin reached forward slowly and slid the three data pads across the table, one to each of them. "Because my brother is doing exactly what I would do if the situation were reversed." He said. "What you are about to read is known by only seven individuals outside this room. The five women who share my life... because this is the reason we had that small hiccup a while back."

“Hiccup?” Tarifa spoke. “I would say having the King and Queens of the Lycavorian Union disappear for more than a month and no one knew where you were a little more than a hiccup. All of us could sense their anger even from Eden City.”

Martin nodded. “With good reason I suppose. Danny knows because his sense of smell is almost as keen as mine and he is my brother. I rarely keep anything from him. Helen knows because she is the Feravomir of our people. I do not want any of you to be surprised and though I have a feeling it will become common knowledge soon enough, no matter how much I wish it would stay buried, please keep this to yourselves until that time.”

“Martin you don’t need to reveal...” Tarifa started to speak.

Martin shook his head. “Read my elven sister.” He said softly. “Then you will understand and we will talk.”

GALLIAS’S LODGE

Aikiro opened her eyes at the sound of the door chime and took a deep breath. She rose gracefully from where she sat in the single chair and moved across the large room to the door. She waved her hand in front of the sensor and watched as it slid aside to reveal Robert Moran. Aikiro’s eyes flared briefly and she stepped back.

“Robert?” She spoke.

Moran looked at her seeing her distracted state. “I’m sorry Aikiro... did I come at a bad time?”

Aikiro gave a soft smile. “No Robert. Tesand is off trying to discover as much as he is able about the layout of the city and where the Kavalians are staying. Please come in.” She stepped out of the way.

“I’m sorry... you appeared distracted.” Moran spoke as he entered the apartment.

Aikiro nodded. “I was reaching out within Mindvoice and trying to determine if I could detect Yuri and Narice as well as where the Mindvoice ship is on this planet.”

Moran looked at her as the door closed. “Any luck?”

Aikiro shook her head as she moved to the small counter bar and poured them both glasses of the cloned blood. “No... whatever he has shielding the ship and the location of Yuri and the others must be derived from the Mindvoice technology similar to what we discovered on the Mindvoice ship buried in the mountain on Nuwaroa. It creates a void within Mindvoice that makes it impossible to communicate outwardly or inwardly or sense anything beyond the void itself.”

“Can’t you determine where these voids are and just narrow your search?” Moran asked.

Aikiro nodded. “I have tried this... however Leonidas is no fool. He has set these voids up all over the planet. At last count I had detected over a hundred of them, some nearby, some quite a distance away. There is no way for me to determine which is which.” She turned and held out the glass to him. “Some of them permit Mindvoicing within their radius, which is mostly likely where Yuri and the others have gone... but there are twenty-six such areas large enough on the planet to permit training of dragons and allow Mindvoicing. We don’t know which one they are at.”

“Can’t Yuri contact you?” Moran asked as he took the glass.

Aikiro shook her head. “As I said... Mindvoicing within this void is possible but reaching in or out is not.”

Moran shook his head. “Forgive me... I can use this skill to some extent... but I’m no where near as powerful as Yuri or yourself. It all gives me a big headache.”

Aikiro chuckled. “It is rather complicated in many respects. Leonidas and I will be going to this place later this week to observe how the training has begun.” Aikiro spoke. “I may be able to establish something while we are there so that Yuri and I can communicate... but that does not help us to locate the Mindvoice ship... no. The other locations across the planet vary in size from half a kilometer in radius to over ten kilometers in size. Any one of those could be hiding the Mindvoice ship given its ability to alter its size and configuration.”

“Are we sure it’s even here on Earth Aikiro?” Moran asked.

Aikiro nodded. “It’s here.” She said confidently.

“Isn’t Leonidas able to detect you are doing this?” Moran asked as they moved into the main room and took seats on the comfortable couches.

Aikiro nodded. “Oh I’m sure he is.” She said with a smile. “We have the ability to reduce our Mindvoice presence to miniscule levels, effectively making the tremors we create and ourselves invisible within Mindvoice to all but the most powerful. The Tier Six individuals as the Lycavorians rate them. There is a handful here on Earth who can detect what I am doing... Leonidas himself... his son, their First Oracle and one or two others. His pureblood Queen Aricia as well... for her blood is exceptionally pure judging by her power. If I had to guess she is most likely descended from the Pralors in some fashion as well. Leonidas has grown far more powerful than even I first thought as I said and his son is rapidly approaching this same level. He is confident in how he has set things up and he knows this will thwart my attempts. He is correct so far. He will do nothing as long as I am unable to find the ship. At the moment... I can’t.”

“What about probing the dragons we see on the streets?” Moran asked.

Aikiro shook her head. “I thought of that too.” She replied. “I have discovered that if we see a dragon here on the streets of Sparta it is almost always bonded to a member of their Durcunusaan. This effectively increases their own abilities by a factor of ten. They are able to block even the strongest of my soft probes, and I can’t use anything stronger because it would be considered an assault.”

“He shouldn’t have revealed that information to us.” Moran spoke. “Telling us they had over a thousand Bonded Pairs. That was foolish.”

“He did it on purpose... don’t doubt that.” Aikiro said. “We don’t know how many Bonded Pairs are here on Earth. I can detect individual Pairs... but they come and go from within these void areas so often and they can shield so well I can not determine accurately how many of them there are and I have given up.”

“Aikiro... why does it seem like... we only gave them two days notice before we arrived.” Moran spoke. “Why does it seem like he had all of this set up already? The Mindvoice shielded areas across the planet... the level of their individual shields? It seems... it almost seems like he was expecting us.”

Aikiro nodded. “I believe he was.” She answered. “Since the day we were able to obtain the dragons from that crash I believe Leonidas has prepared for this day when we would come to him. Only the Lycavorians have perfected the art of fighting with dragons and it is due to the close relationship they have with them. It also helps that the dragon elders... their ruling council if you will... they are all solidly behind Leonidas.”

“How do you know that?” Moran asked.

“Do not discount the intelligence of dragons Robert.” Aikiro said. “While they may look like beasts with claws and teeth, they are supremely intelligent, and they have communicated for thousands of years only within Mindvoice. Their abilities are far greater than what we have seen with our dragons.” Aikiro leaned back on the couch. “I also believe Leonidas is planning for when we leave and our dragons mate with each other and produce more. He also fears we will discover a way to clone them I believe, though I don’t know if he has shared that fear with anyone just yet.”

Moran looked at her with wide eyes. “Have we?” He asked.

Aikiro smiled. “What do you think?”

“I think when you want to accomplish something you succeed.” Moran answered.

Aikiro sipped her glass of cloned blood with a knowing smile. “Thank you for the compliment Robert. It is a goal I have... but as of yet... it has not come to fruition. Now tell me... why are you here? I thought you were staying on your ship now that Yuri has gone.”

Moran nodded. “I was. My face is still remembered from my time here with Yuri and I didn’t care for the looks I was receiving. I’ve been going over old intelligence reports and I think I have discovered where I heard the name of Androcles’s new wife before.”

Aikiro leaned forward. “Really?”

Moran nodded and removed the data pad from his jacket. “If I am correct... and I’m pretty sure I am... she was a low level operative for the Arryadyveluat that Veldruk established some four thousand years ago. Her step-mother was the actual controlling agent, and it was she who forced this Sadi into working with the Arryadyveluat to protect her father Vorilas. He was Governor of the Menkla District on Apo Prime at the time. This Sadi disappeared off the grid a week before the attacks on the Island Palace on Apo Prime. As we know... that attack began the purge of all our assets in the Union.”

“The Menkla District?” Aikiro said. “Isn’t that where their main transport is made... not to mention the majority of their fighters?”

Moran nodded. “Yep.”

Aikiro got to her feet. “That doesn’t make sense.” She spoke. “I felt this young woman at the State Dinner. Her Mindvoice power and her potential were exceptional. It was one of the reasons she was able to dismiss Dante’s fool attempt at controlling her mind so easily.”

“Yuri told you about that I take it?” Moran asked.

Aikiro turned to him. “There is precious little my daughter keeps from me Robert... you should know this.”

“Oh... I’m not upset about it. I was pissed off at him for doing something so stupid.” Moran stated. “Sometimes I think he considers himself as powerful as his mother in that regard.”

“You should be proud of him. He is stronger than most purebloods with this ability and with Yuri’s continued tutelage he will grow more refined at using his skills.” Aikiro said. “He has reinforced Yuri’s control of Carisia in regards to Thast so far without outside assistance from me or his mother.”

“I am proud of him. He just needs to stop thinking with his dick.” Moran said.

Aikiro laughed at this and returned to his chair. “He is young Robert... and he will learn. As long as he doesn’t attempt this with her again. If there is one thing I have learned in my years is that Lycavorians hold their relationships, especially those they call Anomes, to be sacred to the extreme. Androcles Leonidas would make short work of Dante if he discovered this I’m afraid. In many respects he is very different than his father, more methodical and slow to anger, but if tipped in that direction I believe he would be far more violent in his response. You saw his reaction with Thast?”

Moran nodded. “It almost seemed personal. And I’ve never seen a werewolf able to track us when we blur.”

Aikiro nodded. “Something he learned from his father no doubt. It does surprise me that Veldruk, fool that he was, that he did not sense this within this Sadi.”

“Would he have even had need to meet with her?” Robert asked.

Aikiro nodded. “Perhaps not... you think she had a hand in revealing our assets to Union officials don’t you?”

“She disappears completely a week before the purge began... then twenty-five years later she reappears as the wife of Androcles Leonidas.” Moran stated. “It seems pretty convenient to me. I want to do some discrete checking with your permission.”

“About her?” Aikiro asked. “Wait... isn’t she the one who purchased the dragon saddles for Carisia and Narice and the others.”

Moran nodded. “Yes. According to Dante and Lucia she was giving Carisia some strange looks in the shop as well. Given who she now is... I didn’t want to start asking questions about her without getting the ok from you first.”

“That is very interesting. Now that you mention this to me I remember she gave Carisia several glances at the State Dinner that did not seem entirely normal in many respects.”

“What do you mean by normal?” Moran asked.

Aikiro shrugged. “They appeared to be more affectionate than what you would usually bestow on someone who is supposed to be your enemy. And if what you have told me about her past is indeed true, it makes it that much stranger. She is easily a hundred years older than Androcles Leonidas yet they act as if they have been together for decades.”

“He was less than a year old when the attacks on the Island Palace took place.” Moran spoke. “I can’t believe they would have allowed her anywhere near him given who they had to know she was.”

“It is very strange... but with the Mindvoice ability and potential I sense in both of them together who can say. Do you think we can use her past against Leonidas in some way?” Aikiro asked now.

Moran shrugged. “It’s possible I suppose.” He said evenly. “It wouldn’t be easy given how popular she appears to be among the people here in Sparta. I heard Gallais talking about it downstairs with her husband shortly after we arrived.”

Aikiro nodded slowly. "Go ahead... but as you say... be very discrete. She is the wife and Crown Princess of Androcles Leonidas now. Until we get what we want... we do not need to make more waves than necessary."

Moran nodded. "I'll be careful." He said.

"I know it is probably too soon... but have our people been able to discover anything in regards to this insurgent group that attacked the Kavalians?" Aikiro asked.

Moran shook his head. "I checked before I came here." He answered. "We are positive it was the Duul'ssom's Lar group even without Leonidas allowing us to view the bodies. Only they have the means to pull something like that off."

Aikiro nodded. "It is odd that their leader would allow such an attack. He has never been known to let his rebels act in such a way. Butchering innocents like they did. Even Kavalian ones."

"They had to know it was a suicide mission so perhaps they figured what the hell?" Moran spoke. "Why didn't you allow Leonidas to go after them Aikiro? Given his history in how he views attacks on his family, we might have been better off letting him take them out."

Aikiro shook his head. "Don't let his outward demeanor fool you Robert Moran." She said quickly. "He may act the part of a reckless brute and do so very well... but Martin Leonidas is one of the most cruelly calculating minds I have ever come across. If he were to discover the identity of the leader of the Duul'ssom's Lar he certainly would not tell us. And I believe he would actively support them in their attacks against us. As long as he thought it in his best interests. Outside of the vampires who live within the Union including the Drow scum, his Queen Isabella and the pureblood whore Nyla who shares his daughter's bed, I don't believe he completely trusts any vampire. He has too much of his father in him for that."

"You think he will turn loose his own people to find them?" Moran asked.

Aikiro nodded. "Oh yes." She stated. "Order our people in The Wilds to keep their eyes and ears open so to speak. At the first hint of something that appears odd in any way have them contact you or Tesand."

Moran nodded as he stood up. "I'll make it happen." He said.

"Tesand briefed you on what I asked him to do?" Aikiro asked as she stood up.

Moran nodded as he came to his feet as well. "It's risky Aikiro." He said. "Very risky. And it could cost us assets within the Kavalian military structure."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes... but it will sow confusion... and until we succeed in what our primary goal is... confusion is what we need. I also want you to send Juliana One down to me here. Assign her as my personal guard or something of that nature."

"I thought Tesand said Leonidas ordered you to keep her out of Sparta." Moran asked.

Aikiro smiled. "He did." She answered. "That does not mean I am going to listen to him in any way. I will have her remain in the shadows for the most part."

Moran smiled and nodded slowly as he held up the data pad. "I'll get to work on this." He said. "What are you going to do?"

Aikiro smiled. "I thought I might go out and walk among the masses." She stated. "I would like to see just how truly hated I really am."

LYCAVORIAN BORDER

SECTOR THREE ONE

ULU EIRANS TRYN

It was one hundred and forty-three meters long and one of only six in existence.

It was not a warship per say, though it did have armaments equivalent to its ship class. The ULU EIRANS TRYN, or Omen One in the ancient language, was perhaps the most secret of all Lycavorian Union developments in history. It was the fastest ship in the entire fleet by a very wide margin, and packed to the outer bulkheads with the most advanced sensors and listening equipment ever devised. Most of the equipment had been developed with the assistance of the Mindvoice ship avatar Avi, installed and calibrated to such exactness; the sensors could detect a single life form on a planet fifty light years away, and within twenty light years the sensors could tell you what that person's body temperature was as well as give their location within a hundred meters. The outer hulls of the ships were layered with three coats of near invulnerable Dragon Armor combined with a new design Polyphasic cohesive metal, allowing them to absorb incredible punishment from almost any weapon, while remaining able to withstand extreme levels of heat and even high doses of every known type of radiation. The crews were all hand picked from the finest within the Union. Lycavorian, elves, and Algolian to name a few, and the process took three years to complete for all six ships. There were one hundred and eighty-seven crew members of the EIRANS TRYN, and all of them were what Armetus referred to as Super Patriots.

All six of these ships were under the operational command and direction of Armetus and the Krypteria.

Ten years now the EIRANS TRYN and her sister ships had patrolled the stars, returning to their classified staging area only six times in that span. They collected information and intelligence on nearly every known species and three of them were committed solely to the purpose of monitoring the war between the High Coven and the Kavalian Federation. Three days ago the EIRANS TRYN had received new orders, and they were about to begin a mission that could decide the fate of the Union they all so loved.

The Captain of the EIRANS TRYN strode onto the cramped bridge of the ship he had commanded for the last decade, a mug of steaming Elven herbal tea in his hand. There was not much in the way of comfort on his ship, at least not outside of the quarters the crew had. Due to their mission and how much time they would spend away from home, it had been decided that each crew member would have their own quarters, albeit very small. It was their sanctuary and place to call their own when not on duty. The Captain was tall for an elf nearing six feet, and while not hugely muscular; his body was all lean power. He was still single, as were all of those assigned to the Omen Squadron as they called themselves, though at only three hundred and forty-two years of age he still had plenty of time to find a good woman and have children.

Captain Tinnuar moved to his command chair in the right side of the bridge and settled into it being careful not to spill his tea. "Let me have it!" He announced.

The Tactical Officer turned from his seat on the opposite side of the bridge. "The border is one hundred and twenty seconds away Captain!"

"Ah... we made excellent time even with that Ion storm we had to dodge." Tinnuar spoke with a small smile. "Good work people."

The nine member bridge crew smiled as they looked among themselves. Tinnuar was very free with the compliments he gave to his crew, and he was just as free with the curses and anger if you screwed up. It was very uncharacteristic for an elf to show so much emotion, especially a male elf, but it showed the crew that he was every bit as fallible as the rest of them. There wasn't a male or female on the EIRANS TRYN that wouldn't die for Tinnuar in an instant. He took care of them in every way, even when they were surface bound, and they did the same for him.

"Tactical Officer, insure the Shroud is operating at peak efficiency and start bringing the long range YA9 Sensor Arrays on line." Tinnuar spoke. "The moment we cross the border I want to pick up the fart from a Wallite Worm Fly at ten light years distance."

"Yes sir! Beginning start up of the YA9s! Shroud Generator operating at point four one hundred." The TO answered with a grin.

Tinnuar looked at him. "I see Chief Engineer Gorak has been busy?"

The TO smiled. "He thought you might want that little extra sir."

Tinnuar smiled. "Helm... you keep us on a cross Z axis lateral course. Maintain the usual evasive maneuvers... no sense in getting stupid now. Uirmeik is only three light years away... four days at most. Let us not risk our asses by doing something stupid." Tinnuar spoke.

"Helm confirms!" The young woman answered as her hands flew over the three consoles that surrounded her chair.

"Give me a channel to the ship." Tinnuar said.

"Channel open Captain." The reply was almost immediate.

"Stand to men and women of EIRANS TRYN. We are about to step into the lion's den. Be sharp and be prepared for our actions and what we discover may well mean dramatic shifts in our future. We are King Leonidas's eyes and ears now, and it is we who must provide him what he needs to decide our course." Tinnuar said. "The moment we cross the border we shift to combat mode. We've had a relative peaceful last three months tooling around the Union... now it is time for us to earn our pay once more. That is all."

Tinnuar lifted his mug and sipped the warm tea relishing in the smooth flavor. It was something his mother sent to him in every care package she shipped and he had enough to last him for several weeks right now.

“Very well my friends.” He said looking up. “Let us do this and get back home in one piece. Helm... take us across the border.”

SPARTA

For'mya could smell his arousal and feel his aura calling to her the moment Aurith landed on the Spartan Estate Dragon pad and it only served to deepen the burning for him that was already surging through her blood. The Trade talks had progressed without incident, but as their dinner moved along For'mya only became more distracted and longed to feel Martin's arms around her. She had maintained her elven composure well enough to escape the dinner without making a fool of herself, but the moment she climbed onto Aurith's back, her dragon sister took to the skies with barely a pause. Aurith knew her well enough to know what was happening and she had streaked through the night sky with all possible speed to bring her home. Even twenty-five years of experiencing what he could do to her, to all of them, it never ceased to amaze For'mya. She had loved him dearly before he had changed her, but when she was finally wolf, that love increased a hundred fold. Only after he had changed her could she feel how he affected Aricia, Dysea and Anja. The burning in their blood for him, the need to feel his aura wrap itself around them. It was no different for Isabella, and though she could not feel the wolf aura he projected to her, she had often said the look in his eyes and the touch of his hands upon her flesh more than made up for it. She had tried to explain it once to her mother, how Martin Leonidas made her feel, but to someone who was not pure Lycavorian or someone who had not been turned it was so very difficult to understand.

For'mya even now kept her elven composure as she quickly made to remove Aurith's saddle. Her bonded sister could only look on in amusement as she went through the motions with barely a thought to what she was doing. Finally Aurith nudged her in the shoulder with her huge head and blinked her beautiful eyes.

Go sister! I may not be wolf... but even I can see the strength of his call to you tonight. Go! Aurith exclaimed in Mindvoice.

For'mya looked at her somewhat embarrassed, but leaned up to kiss her snout gently before turning and moving into the main villa. She heard soft female laughter and found Anja and Aricia sharing coffee and sweet biscuits with Helen at the large kitchen table. They both got up quickly and came over to her.

Aricia drew back from their kiss with a knowing smile. “He didn't think you were ever going to come home.” She said softly with a smile.

For'mya gripped their hands tightly. “Where... where are Dysea and Bella?”

Anja smiled. “They apparently missed each other quite a bit.” She said with a twinkle in her jade colored eyes. “And since Martin burns only for you tonight... they decided to go to bed early.”

Aricia chuckled. “Anja and I intend to join them rather soon too.” She said.

“That we do.” Anja chimed in. “And much fun will be had by all!”

“The Little Ones?” For'mya asked.

“All tucked in and sleeping. Helen made them an extra special batch of sweet biscuits and with some warm milk they were out like lights.” Anja said. “Why are you still here?”

Aricia smiled and pressed her body close to For'mya. “Let your elven control go tonight Kinsoaurgai.” She whispered. “He burns for you just as brightly as you do for him. Go.”

“Where?” For'mya asked.

Anja leaned over and kissed her softly. “Where does he always take us when he wants us to scream his name to the moon and stars?” She said gently. “Now go!”

For'mya grinned and looked at Helen. She began to speak but Helen held up her hand. “Not another word.” She barked sternly. “Go to him! Before he comes back here looking for you and wakes the children.”

For'mya smiled and kissed Aricia before turning and moving out of the double wide patio doors. Anja took Aricia's hand as they moved back to the kitchen table. “We really need to talk to that girl about just letting go.” She said with a smile.

Helen chuckled from her chair. “Unlike you and Dysea who are also turned... For’mya did not have the opportunity to know Martin before he discovered his true self. She has always been the reserved and controlled elven officer and it will take many more years I think before she surrenders completely to how he makes her blood burn so strongly with desire. Then I will need to purchase ear plugs... for all of you will be howling at the same time.”

Aricia looked at her shocked. “Feravomir... are you suggesting we are too loud when our mate possesses us.” She asked in mock horror.

Anja leaned into her. “Well... you do have a tendency to be rather noisy Little Wolf.” Anja said with an affectionate bump of her hip.

“Actually Anja...” Helen spoke. “It is you who howl the loudest.”

Anja looked at her wide eyed as Aricia burst out laughing. “Me?”

“You are the smallest among his Queens in physical stature and yet you sing louder than any of them. You have woken the Estate Guard at times.” Helen said. “Many of them have taken to wearing hearing protection when they smell the passion in the night sky.”

Anja’s tanned face took on a slight tinge of reddish embarrassment and Helen chuckled as Aricia nuzzled Anja’s neck. “I have told you this for years Anja... you just never believed me.”

Helen’s face became more serious and she looked at Anja. “Now perhaps you will share what is happening on Hadaria and why your fool Aunt is threatening to take the King’s children?”

Anja looked at her. “How?”

“You forget Eurin and I are very close. The moment Sivana contacted her and told her what is happening she burst me a transmission and we talked for more than an hour.”

“I can take care of what is happening on Hadaria.” Anja said confidently.

Helen shook her head. “I have no doubts about that.” She said in reply. “I just want to know how many bodies you will leave in your wake if this ignorant plan actually comes up for a vote in the Hadarian Elder Council.”

Anja took her mug in her hands and smiled as she sipped the coffee. “I can think of half a dozen right off the top of my head.” She replied. “Would you like to know who they are?”

For’mya stood on the edge of the patio and quickly stripped out of her boots and uniform jumpsuit, letting them fall to the ground as the cool evening breeze caressed her tanned flesh. She felt goose bumps form on the skin of her arms and legs but she ignored them. For’mya had never had large breasts for her five foot eight height, but they were perfectly conical in shape and incredibly firm. Her nipples were small but hard nubs that even now were stiffening due to the breeze and her ever increasing desire. While she had the smallest breasts of any of her fellow Queens and lovers, none of them had ever done anything but lavish them with attention. And Martin Leonidas simply adored playing with her breasts for hours since they fit perfectly in his large hands. For’mya concentrated and in the blink of an eye and in a soft pop of iridescent silver/white light the elf female who was For’mya was gone and in her place was the female wolf with golden blond fur.

Kmyla had been right when she first told her that she would be larger and stronger in her wolf form. Her normally lean, hundred and eighteen pound svelte figure gave way to a hundred and thirty-five pounds in another form of beauty. Her fur was shiny and healthy and For’mya wasted no time in digging her paws into the ground and propelling herself forward with startling speed. She saw everything with her wolf eyes in a bluish gray light and as she raced into the timber she caught his male scent easily. His mint scent and aura washed over her as the towering pine trees closed in about her and For’mya felt her blood begin to churn even more. This had happened before through the years. There were times when Martin Leonidas wanted only one... when his blood called for only one of his Queens. He never knew which one it would be, or when the time would hit, but it would build over a period of days until it was upon him full force. It most often happened with Aricia, but all of them had felt it many times through the years, and none of them could disagree with the passionate encounters it always led up to. They had found through the years that it had something to do with his mood and Helen surmised that because of his Mindvoice abilities it was considerably more pronounced than in normal Lycavorian men. When he was like this none of them could deny him, none of them wanted to deny him, for it would leak through his shields no matter how he tried to mask it and set their blood ablaze as well.

For'mya felt so very free when she ran, the muscles under her fur rippling with precision not unlike a finely tuned machine. She had long ago learned the nuances of running in her wolf form, and it came to her without even thinking. She knew where she was going for it was the place they had all been too many times with Martin. Surrounded by newly planted pine trees and several lilac trees, it rested on a plateau in the mountains not far from the villa. From this perch they could see all of Sparta in the distance and on a clear night it was the most incredible thing.

For'mya felt the ground tremble beneath her paws and she shivered in delight knowing what it was. She turned her head to the side and saw his massive black shape keeping pace with her easily through the trees perhaps five meters away. She loved watching him run, seeing the corded muscles like tightly wound steel flow beneath his midnight black coat of fur. He was larger than her by more than half, yet for all his power and speed he was the most graceful man or wolf she had ever seen.

It took you long enough. His deep voice sprang into her mind with passion filled humor.

For'mya yipped out a bark as she increased her speed. I wanted to insure your interest. She replied happily.

Martin let out a low growl as he matched her gallop, his yellow/gold orbs falling on her and taking her breath away with the intensity of their brightness. I will show you my interest Kinsoaurgai. Follow me!

For'mya watched him make an eye popping right turn and disappear into the shadows of the pines all around them. She snapped her tail around and executed a similar turn to follow, his scent flowing through her making it easy to follow him.

Where are we going Martin Leonidas? She asked as she increased her speed enough to see his huge hind quarters darting among the trees in front of her with the deftness of a wolf a third of his size.

I have found a new place. I think you will like it. His reply came.

For'mya felt the ground beneath her begin to rise more steeply and she dug her paws in deeper.

Martin... we are leaving the Estate.

For'mya heard Martin's soft chuckle. Are you afraid I intend to ravage your senses Kinsoaurgai?

Actually... I was hoping for just that. For'mya answered quickly no longer feeling the need to control herself. She was wolf after all... a female wolf that smoldered for her mate as much as he did for her.

Then stay close to me. He told her.

For'mya did just that, using a burst of speed to close the distance between them and then remaining within a few feet of him as he led her on a twisting, turning climb up what she realized were the western mountains surrounding Sparta. She was content to watch him as they moved with incredible speed, careful to follow his paw prints almost exactly. It was something Aricia had taught her long ago; follow in the prints of the wolf in front of you so that you could mask your true number. So intent on doing this as she was For'mya broke into the small clearing and came up short, her paws digging into the soft dirt for Martin was no longer in front of her. Her head snapped around looking for him, taking in the small fire burning in the pit with rocks surrounding it. Next to the fire was a double large bear skin rug spread out neatly with soft pillows. Beside that was an old style metal bucket with a chilled bottle of Spartan Wine and two glasses. For'mya shifted immediately, a smile forming on her face as the shimmer faded. A thin layer of sweat gleamed on her naked flesh in the light of the fire as she moved closer.

Martin Leonidas? She spoke softly. His scent permeated the air around this place and For'mya knew then he must have been here for several hours preparing what she saw.

Here. His voice answered and she turned her head past the fire and felt her body flush with excitement. He was naked as well; a luster of sweat sparkling on his divinely muscular and rippled body. He was squatting not far away and For'mya moved towards him, feeling his aura trembling against his shields, calling for only her.

As she approached him For'mya's eyes grew wide at what she saw spread out past the ledge in front of him. The sparkling stars were a multitude of colors in the night sky since the moon was only a quarter high. Green, red, yellow and blue filtered across her wolf vision lighting up the mountains further in the distance and spreading across the sky like the fingers of a god. She felt him rise to his feet as she came up beside him.

I know how much you like the Northern Lights in the mountains and how they dance across the sky. He said softly.

For'mya looked at him, tears forming in her eyes at what he had done. "You... you found this... this spot just for me?" She asked.

Martin nodded slowly, his shoulder length black hair wild and ruffled, his eyes still the yellow/gold of the wolf within him. Staring at him, For'mya felt her arousal and desire increase to maddening levels. He had found this place just for her and that knowledge quickly put her in the mood. He had done untold things over the years to show her, to show each of them just how deeply he loved them all, but this was by far the most telling of anything he had done with her. They had seen the Northern Lights some twenty-three years ago and For'mya had mentioned how incredibly beautiful they were. She had forgotten that statement the next day, but apparently Martin Leonidas had not.

For'mya stepped up to him quickly and wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders before covering his lips with her own and easily lifting herself into his arms. She whimpered in need and burning ardor when his powerful arms encircled her waist and pulled her to him. Their tongues danced a delicious tango, ever reaching for more, demanding more. For'mya felt him then, so hot and huge nestled between her thighs. His twelve inches throbbed almost madly, alive with his own lust and want. For'mya had no doubts she would never tire of having him fill her as only he could. She tore her lips away from his, groaning loudly as they descended immediately to firmly nuzzle her cheek and the outer lobe of her elven ear, enflaming her own desire to new heights.

"Take me my love!" She nearly shouted. "I don't care how... just take me in whatever way you desire!"

For'mya lifted her hips slightly, feeling his searing cock slide delightfully slow across her incredibly aroused pussy and near bursting clit. Her juices were already soaking their legs as she lowered herself down slowly, her eyes rolling into the back of her head as once more his long thick cock brushed firmly along the expanse of her now soaked pussy. She brought her head forward then, wrapping her arms around his shoulders and lifting her hips once more. She reached down with one hand between their bodies and grasped his huge cock, gasping as she felt the familiar heat. She maneuvered the flared head to her entrance, already spread like a blooming flower and she impaled herself on the first six inches of his throbbing shaft with barely any hesitation. She heard his sharp intake of breath and the way his hands tightened on her hips and she smiled knowingly in delirious passion. This night, right now, she would take what she wanted. Staring into his beautiful wolf eyes For'mya groaned as she raised and lowered her hips several times, allowing just those first six inches of steel hardness fill her and thoroughly coating the remainder of his thick shaft with her juices. She was more excited right now than she had been in some time and it felt wondrously divine.

No matter how many times Martin had her; it was always like that first time on his ship. He stretched her in a way no man ever had or ever would now. She watched as the veins in his neck pulsed, his hands tightening on her firm ass cheeks as he fought with all that he was to keep from plunging into her completely. She locked her hands and fingers behind his neck, lifted her hips once more and then plunged herself back down. For'mya threw her head back and screamed as his entire lava hot cock speared her completely and she came. She heard him growl in her pleasure clouded mind, his hands pulling her hips against his powerfully and then his cock swelled within her pussy's vice like embrace. His howl quickly joined hers as she felt the head of his cock balloon within her depths and then his essence was erupting into her. For'mya's head came forward, banging into his broad chest as blast after blast of his hot come filled her again and again. Multiple jets of his hot come spilling into her and warming her insides. It was over far too quickly as she felt his arms wrap around her tightly and he staggered slightly from the aftermath of his own orgasm, but she knew their night had only just begun. Her chest heaved in exertion and she lifted her head slowly to gaze into his eyes. For'mya knew just by looking into his eyes that she was right and they were far from done. When Martin was like this he could go on for what seemed like hours and never lose his hardness. Even now she felt his shaft within her, twitching as the last of his cum flooded into her belly and leaked out around the base of his cock.

"Do... do you intend... intend for us to remain standing this whole night?" She finally stammered out the words.

Martin looked at her with a grin, pulled her closer to him and began to walk towards the bear skin rug. For'mya gasped softly as each footstep sent a small, quivering orgasm slicing through her abdomen. She held to him tightly, her hips moving of their own accord, milking his dominating shaft with each stride. It took forever for him to reach the bear skin and For'mya knew he had done it on purpose. As he slowly dropped to his knees on the plush rug, he lowered her shuddering body to the luxurious black fur skin rug, her back arching as another orgasm quickened through her. Their lower bodies were saturated in her sweet come, and she could smell her aroused scent pungently, knowing it must have been driving him mad. She opened her dark brown eyes slowly, her arms lifting so she could place her palms flat against his chest and feel the beating of his heart.

“Bastard!” She hissed softly. “You... you planned that little trek didn’t you?”

Martin smiled in the firelight and his face looked so handsome and alive as he gazed at her.

“Kinsoargai... why would I want you trembling in continuous orgasms? I am not that cruel.”

“Yes... yes you are.” She replied with a loving smile. “My scent is driving you mad... and you only wanted me to saturate the entire plateau with my smell.”

Martin leaned over quickly, causing her to gasp in delight as his cock shifted inside her. His lips dropped to the valley between her firm breasts and he licked the sweat from her skin, dragging his tongue with agonizing slowness up to her throat. He lifted his face then and stared at her. “And you do smell so incredibly tasty.” He said softly, his voice trembling with desire.

For’mya reached up and caressed his face. “I meant... I meant what I said Martin Leonidas. Tonight I want you to take... take me in whatever way pleases you my love.” She spoke softly. “Even... even from behind if that is what you desire.”

Martin met her gaze. “Kinsoargai... why would I take you from behind, no matter how strongly my blood calls for you, when you do not care for this way?”

“Because you are my Alpha.” For’mya replied. “My mate and husband and I love you. With every breath I take I love you. Our... our loves seem to find it exceptionally pleasurable. They say you reach so deeply inside them when you dominate them in that fashion.”

Martin shook his head with a smile. “For’mya... you are not Aricia or Anja or Dysea or Bella. You are Kinsoargai. The Voice of my Heart. Since that first day above Ukwav when it was your words that saved me. Without you... I would not be here For’mya. I will never make love to you in a way you find so submissive and helpless. I know why you feel this way, for only I know what you endured in your captivity. No... there are many other ways for me to make you scream my name to the stars Kinsoargai. I don’t need to do that.” He finished with a smile.

For’mya stared at him, her hands holding his face, as his words echoed in her soul. She had never been raped by the Immortals who had captured her, but they had beaten her, as had the High Coven regular troops. They had fed on her blood countless times as if she was an animal. She had never felt as helpless in her life as she had in those weeks. Martin had never made love to her from behind, for in this position she felt helpless. He had never questioned it, never attempted it since that one time on his ship when even in her pleasure he could feel the helplessness coursing through her. She had always preferred being able to see his face and kiss his lips.

“Then take me... take me right to the edge my love!” She gasped finally. “Make me feel what only Aricia and Dysea can feel... if only a small portion. Just as you have done so many times with Melyanna.”

Martin needed no words to respond to that and he instantly lowered the barriers around his aura until they were almost gone. He knew that only Aricia and Dysea could take his unshielded aura, but he knew just how much Anja and For’mya could tolerate. Right now... he brought them down even lower, though not completely, and the reaction in For’mya was predictable and immediate.

Her dark brown eyes flew open and the blood in her veins instantly burned hotter than it ever had before. Her nipples became almost painfully erect, her skin sensitive to even the cool night breeze that flowed across them. The most telling was feeling his huge cock still buried inside her. Suddenly each throb and pulse of life his cock put forth ripped through her with the power of a tidal wave. Her clit, jammed against the base of his massive shaft as it was, began quivering in nonstop rapturous bliss. She took a deep breath, which only served to enflame her already over aroused body.

“Mar... Martin... I...” For’mya could barely form words clouded as her mind was with what she was feeling. His aura penetrated her, swept through her, around her and it never stopped caressing her body and mind. She could still think... still form words... but she found herself wanting to surrender to what she was feeling.

When Martin withdrew the entire twelve inch length of his searing hot cock from her depths, For’mya’s brain exploded in white lights and incandescent colors at the pleasure ripping through her. Her come gushed from her lithe body like a river and hit Martin full force in the face. His intake of breath was nearly as loud when by instinct alone For’mya hit him with every ounce of her female wolf aura in that single instant. With a growl from low in his chest Martin leaned forward, gripped For'mya's wonderfully firm ass cheeks in his hand and he began pile driving his beautiful elven mate with his cock.

For'mya screamed then. Louder and longer than she had ever screamed before, her arms wrapping around his shoulders as his massive cock plumed her velvety depths with power and desire he had never shown her. She had never felt his aura permeate her as completely as it did now, and if this was only a small portion of what Aricia and Dysea felt she knew without question she would be helpless to refuse him anything. It was pure unadulterated pleasure... her orgasms coming hard and fast, her belly clenching almost painfully as they crashed upon her one after the other with no pause. Her come flooded from around his driving cock, soaking the bear skin rug in a matter of seconds, and still he drove into her.

For'mya wanted this. She needed this. With each downward thrust of his hugely thick cock For'mya used all her wolf and elf strength to drive her hips up to meet his hammering thrusts. She would be sore tomorrow of that she had no doubts, but right now she had only one care and that was to feel her alpha mate blasting her full of his come until it spilled from her in rivers.

"Har... harder!" For'mya screeched into the night air, smashing her hips upwards with even more force. "Ahhhhhhh... more! Nubou lae! Nubou lae!" (Fuck me)

Martin Leonidas was not one to ignore the command of one of his mates and he tucked his face into the crook of her neck and shoulder, palmed her firm ass cheeks even more and did what For'mya commanded of him. He felt her ankles lock around the backs of his thighs, her firm breasts smashed against his chest, and the searing heat of the depths of her clutching pussy as he began to pound his elven queen with all that he was.

"Sarad... sarad nagan!" Martin gasped between clenched teeth. (So tight)

He would not last long this time he knew... he never could within the heated depths of any of his Queens. The first and second orgasms for him were quick and powerful, and then he would be able to remain hard for hours. Martin didn't fight the pleasure ripping through his own blood, nor did he deny For'mya's sweet orchid scent from swirling within his mind as it filled his senses. He felt his large balls contract painfully and he slammed into her fully once more as his cock expanded and he felt his come race up its length and explode within her belly. He could barely hear For'mya's own scream of unabashed delight or the way her arms crushed his head to her shoulder, but he could feel her quivering form in his arms and he smiled to himself.

They had the entire evening left and he planned to make his she-wolf elven queen howl for a large portion of that.

SPARTA

Athani stood on the balcony of her small Diplomatic apartment, her blue/green eyes searching the streets below for any sign of Resumar. She was barely able to contain herself during the end of the dinner, and she had to consciously remind herself to not do anything stupid that would jeopardize what she had found. She discovered she liked Queen For'mya quite a bit. She was open and friendly and genuinely pleasant to be around. The beginning of the Trade talks went smoothly, more smoothly than she would have thought given what had transpired over the course of the last few days. Prime Minister Deia was forthright and upfront about the actual Trade agreement, as well as the opportunity for opening an Embassy. She had basically ignored Qurot's many idiotic remarks and comments, which only seemed to anger him more. She had even noticed Karun roll his eyes once at Qurot's actions. He was out of his element and he knew it. He had leered at her several times during dinner, no doubt imagining what he thought bedding her would be like when they returned to Cabelir. Athani could hardly wait to see the look on his disgusting face when she revealed that Resumar Leonidas had taken her purity, many times over, and that she would be defecting and remaining on Earth with him to start the life she was meant for.

Of course she had to be with him to do that, and she had been waiting for an hour for him to appear and sweep her away as he had promised. Slowly she brought down the shields he had instructed her how to use and she reached out gently. She could feel tremors of so many minds and for a moment she panicked thinking she would be discovered.

Resumar! She reached out unshielded and more powerfully than she had intended and instantly she slammed her shields back up as she felt several minds reach for her in confusion. Athani felt fear sweep through her as suddenly she wondered if he would be coming at all.

[You need never fear that Aryschanne.] Resumar Leonidas's warm soothing voice filled her mind.

[Resumar! Where are you? I have been waiting for so long!]

[I wanted to insure those in your party were safely tucked away before I came for you Aryschanne. It would not due to have one of them see me take you from you balcony.] His voice said with some humor.

[What... what is that? What you called me?] Athani asked as her eyes swept across the ground looking for him.

[It is the Lycavorian ancient language. Aryschanne means cat woman. You are my beautiful aryschanne.]

[It... it is beautiful.] She said as warmth flooded through her.

[Just like you.] He answered. [Are you afraid of heights Aryschanne?]

[Would I be on this balcony five stories up waiting for you if I was?] She answered with some humor.

Resumar chuckled within her mind. [I would hope I am who you are waiting for.] He said. [I would be crushed if that was not the case.]

[Stop playing games with me Prince of the Lycavorians!] She snapped playfully. [Where are you? I want... I want to feel your arms around me again Resumar.]

[Then close your eyes Aryschanne and do not scream out when you feel yourself lift from the balcony.] He answered.

[What? What are you...]

Athani bit her tongue hard to keep from screaming out in surprise when she was suddenly lifted from the balcony and shooting straight up. Her eyes were wide as she saw the four additional floors of the Diplomatic Envoy building flash past her view as she was lifted and then she was above the building and looking down on the roof. She saw Resumar standing next to Cemath, his hand held out as if he was guiding her himself. Athani suddenly realized it was him who was lifting and guiding her as he lowered her quickly to the rooftop only a few steps from where he and Cemath stood. He stepped up to her quickly and Athani felt what she now knew to be his aura sweep around her as his arms gathered her up and his lips came down on hers. She whimpered in his arms, responding to his kiss as her tail curled around his thigh seductively.

[Quickly brother.] Cemath's voice echoed in their heads. [Before the Lifter patrol returns again.]

Resumar broke their kiss instantly but still held her in his arms suspended in the air. [You were on Cemath's back on my father's ship when he was on the surface. Do you trust him and I enough to ride him as he flies?]

Athani looked at him her blue/green eyes wide. She glanced at Cemath quickly and heard him chuckle within Mindvoice. [We will not let anything happen to you Athani'Puat.] He said.

[Where... where will you take me?] She asked.

Resumar smiled and pulled her towards Cemath, lifting her easily until she was in the saddle. He quickly followed up and settled in behind her, the dragon armor closing over their legs securely. [My villa in Gytheio.] He answered. [Outside of my brother Andro, who has the entire island of Cranae, my villa is the most isolated and it sits in the hills overlooking the Laconian Gulf. I think you will like it.]

[If I am with you... it will not matter where you take me.] Athani answered.

[Then we are off!] Cemath announced just before cocking his powerful legs beneath him and propelling them into the night sky.

SODRAG

“...officially is a Nodon Engineering Systems FRT STRIKER Dragon Transport.” Arrarn spoke as he led the twenty-two High Coven pilots into the rear of the DT. “Or STRIKER DT for short... or DT if you are too tired to say any of it.” Arrarn was backing up the ramp as he talked and he saw that several of the pilots chuckled softly.

The twenty-two pilots were normally High Coven fighter pilots who had been selected for their skill and sometimes brash maneuvers. Arrarn had read the profiles on all of them the last two days, to include Toria Dellion. She moved along with the other pilots in front, her stunning blue eyes never leaving his face.

“It is my understanding that all of you were chosen because you have displayed, shall we say questionable recklessness when flying your fighters.” Arrarn spoke and seeing some of them react with looks of scorn. “You’ll be happy to know... short of smashing this baby into the side of a mountain, it is next to impossible to hurt them. A DT pilot must be calm and in control, but also reckless at times. You have to know what your ship will do, and how it will respond in almost any given weather or combat condition. Your primary purpose and goal will be the transport and protection of whatever Bonded Pairs are assigned to your DT. It is my understanding that when you leave here, my father has agreed in principle to give you twenty-five stripped down *DT*s. They will have the same engines and cores as those you will fly in training here, but they will not have the additional Dragon Armor layers that protect our own ships or the active weapons systems.”

“Why?” A young man asked from the second rank.

Arrarn met his eyes. “We have agreed to train you, not give you our military secrets.” He answered. “And while we are on that topic I will say this now and with luck I’ll never have to speak of it again. While you are training you will be using our normal *DT*s that do have the Dragon Armor enhancements. Any attempt by one of you, no matter who does or does not know about it, to obtain samples of the enhancements so that you may pass them onto your leaders will be arrested, tried and then summarily executed for espionage. The remainder of you, as well as the riders will be expelled from Earth and Union space. I just want to be clear on that so I don’t have to mention it again. I hate violence.” He let his eyes pass over them and nodded. “Ok... so on to the good stuff!” Arrarn saw Sadi walk up the ramp and come around behind the group wearing the standard Union flight suit as the rest of them. “Oh... and this is Sadi Leonidas for those of you who don’t know, which is probably most of you. She is my co-pilot and holds the rank of Lieutenant Commander in the Lycavorian Union Fleet military effective yesterday.”

“Leonidas?” A female pilot asked now. “She is your... your wife?”

Arrarn laughed and shook his head. “Oh no... I’m not that lucky. This lovely young creature...” Arrarn pulled Sadi over beside him with a grin. “Somehow she seems to think my brother Androcles is who she prefers over me. She is his mate... though I did try to talk her out of it several times. I really don’t know what she sees in him.”

Sadi gave him an elbow in the side. “And you never will.” She stated.

“So you are the Crown Princess of the Union?” Another male pilot asked.

“That is my official title now yes.” Sadi answered. “However I much prefer Lieutenant Commander... or just Sadi.”

Arrarn grinned wider. “Sadi has nearly a thousand hours in a DT, and just recently became one of only six STRIKER pilots still active within the Union who have flown into combat with my mother.” He said.

“How much combat have you seen?” A pilot asked him with a touch of sarcasm in his voice. “Just so we know the credentials of the man who is supposed to be training us.”

Arrarn shrugged. “It’s not something I keep track of.” He stated offhandedly.

“That doesn’t answer the question.” The same pilot continued. “Most of us have seen combat on and off for over twenty years.”

“Prince Arrarn Leonidas holds the rank of Junior Colonel within the Lycavorian Union Fleet Forces.” Toria stated loud enough for all of them to hear her. Arrarn’s eyes cut to where she was standing in surprise. “He graduated second in his Agoge Initiation Training Class at age fifteen. He turns twenty-four in three months. He graduated from the Union Fleet Academy at the age of seventeen. Two years after entering the Academy and three years earlier than normal students. The Evolli War was two years old by then and he assumed command of Prince Androcles’s STRIKER DT immediately upon his graduation. During the course of the next four years he joined his brother on eighty-five combat missions usually carrying Elynth, his sister Eliani and her dragon Tharua. Just to give you an idea... there were ninety-seven combat missions during that same time frame that included Bonded Pairs of Mjolnir’s Hand. On those eighty-five missions, only six of them took place where he did not take ground fire of some kind. He is the only recorded STRIKER DT pilot in Union history to have actually shot down thirteen Evolli PENETRATOR-Class fighters...” She turned to look at the gathered pilots. “He has been decorated nine times for bravery under fire and along with his brother Denali and three others they are the only five members of the Union military to be awarded The Elven Cross of Gallantry. Outside of his mother Queen For'mya and Star Colonel Endith, he is the premier STRIKER DT pilot within the Union right now. I suggest we all take heed on what he will teach us." Toria finished and turned back around to look at him. She blushed slightly at the looks on his and Sadi's faces. "I read your Union profile quite thoroughly." She said softly.

Arrarn swallowed hard. "So I see." He said. "It said all that huh?"

Toria smiled at the expression on his face. "Yes."

"Well it was only eleven Evolli fighters." Arrarn spoke in an embarrassed manner. "Two of them sort of limped out of the AO after I tagged them. They were still flying though."

Sadi had a large smile on her face as she looked from Toria back to Arrarn. She was a woman and she knew interest when she saw it. "Don't argue with her Arrarn." Sadi chipped.

"It was only eleven." Arrarn protested looking at her.

"Eleven then." Toria said still with that smile on her face.

Arrarn looked back at her and took a deep breath. "Ok... anyway... you can see the pen here in the back for the dragons you will carry." Arrarn began moving towards the side. "The entire front section of the STRIKER detaches from the rear and basically becomes an escape pod for the crew and anyone else that can cram into it."

"What about the dragons and riders." A Coven pilot asked.

Arrarn looked at him. "They will bail out the rear ramp if a crash is imminent." He spoke. "Their psychic shields should be strong enough to protect them from most elements. At least for a time. Hopefully long enough for another DT to pick them up."

"And if not?" Another asked.

Arrarn looked at Sadi quickly and she stepped forward. "You must understand why your role is so important." She said. "Even I did not know this until I became Andro's mate and wife. No Bonded Pair... not Lycavorian, elf, vampire nor dragon... they will never leave the other behind. If they die... they will die together."

"Why?" Toria asked softly.

Arrarn looked at her. "So neither of them has to die alone." He said softly.

The course was six kilometers long, with a myriad of suspended bars and Lifter platforms spread out along the course to test flying skill and Mindvoice ability. It was an obstacle course for Bonded Pairs essentially, testing their turning radius and maneuvering ability as a pair. There were several sections where you had to fly between fake buildings very low to the ground to stab floating balloon objects. The last five hundred meters of the course was a close combat setting, where individual targets would pop up singly or in small groups and cause you to react instantly. All along this course Durcunusaan soldiers were set up to monitor and record the Pairs as they flew through the course, ready to spring to action if a Bonded Pair happened to slam into the ground or an obstacle itself. Andro, Denali and Lisisa had flown the course countless times already this morning, watching the High Coven Pairs move through. Eliani and Nyla remained on the perimeter in case they were needed, or flew along while one of the others broke for a different part of the course. It was a course design made specifically by Carina, and she was quite proud of it since every member of Mjolnir's Hand and the Bonded Pairs in the Union had been through it and done nothing but praise it for its ingenuity and difficulty level.

Now Andro paced back and forth in front of the forty-two Coven riders and their dragons, Elynth resting on the ground behind him. All of the High Coven riders either knelt on the hard ground their heads hung low, or they leaned against their bonded dragons heavily. They had been awakened at dawn, the sun not even above the trees yet, only to be thrust into a series of drills and then a ten kilometer run at a blistering pace set by Androcles himself. Then it was returning to the bungalows, only to be told to grab their equipment and meet him on the field with their dragons. Then they flew here and were told to proceed through the obstacle course at full speed.

None of them had made it through unscathed.

Twelve of their number had been knocked from their saddles for not ducking in time and having their dragon armor too loose. Two of them had smashed head long into one of the fake buildings during the high speed pass so close to the ground. None of them had been able to make the sharp turns and rolls that the course required. Carisia and Narice had come closest, but even they had taken their lumps. Yuri and Vollenth were one of the pairs that had collided with the building, while her children made it through without injuring themselves, but at three times the normal time for the course.

Andro wore the Mark IV ArmorPly as they all did, his helmet on his head, his swords strapped across his back. He wore one of the K12A KMs on his right thigh in its holster in order to appease Sadi's worry that Thast might try to attack him from ambush at some point in the future. Andro had laughed at this but had done what she asked of him because he loved her. The horse hair crested plume on top of his helmet moved slightly in the breeze, the shiny golden blond hair first in the line, followed by the shimmering raven colored hair similar to his own. Only Sadi knew the true significance behind the mixed colors for she was the one who had spent nearly two hours of the previous night in a transmission with the Feravomir having her tell her exactly how to add the feather soft fine hair.

Andro stopped pacing in front of them and reached up to remove his helmet just as Lisisa landed not far away with Jeth and Zarah behind her. He watched as Zarah dropped gracefully from behind Lisisa and move quickly to where he was standing. She reached up and removed her own crested helmet as she held out the data pad.

"That's everything." She spoke softly. "Deni and the others are already headed back."

[What did you see?] He asked his younger sister.

Zarah tossed back her long dark brown hair and looked at him. [I'm not a rider Andro.] She said.

[No... but you are my sister and a member of the Durcunusaan.] He told her. [And you are an accomplished rider Zarah, regardless of what you may think of your skills.]

Zarah looked into his azure blue eyes and smiled. She may have been five years younger than him, but because of what they had shared so long ago, Andro would always treat her as an equal no matter what. Only he knew her most intimate secret, a secret that not even Normya or her mother knew, and that he had never once even spoken of it in all the years since that day had only endeared her brother to her like nothing ever could.

[They need work.] Zarah answered. [They have not had the benefit of the closeness our Bonded Pairs have Andro. They are by no means hopeless... but I think they need more time to bring themselves closer with their dragons. With the exception of Narice and Lisi's sister many of them are still fighting the bonds, not surrendering themselves to it as they should.]

Andro nodded. [Yes... I felt that as well.] He smiled at her. [Do you have your training regime all worked out?]

Zarah beamed. [What do you think?] She exclaimed. [You give them to me in two days and I'll give them back to you in three weeks able to take down a squad of Immortals without even breathing heavy. Most of them are already skilled, they just don't know how to unleash that and combine it with their bonds.]

Andro grinned and leaned over to kiss her cheek. [Mother was right. For someone so young... you are decidedly more dangerous than I will ever be.]

Zarah laughed. [Like anyone will believe that.]

Andro nodded with a smile. [I'll see you at dinner tonight.]

Zarah nodded and turned to run back to where Lisisa waited. He watched as Zarah got back in the saddle behind her sister and then Jeth launched them into the air once more headed back to the main base. He was right... Zarah had taken to the fighting arts as if it was all second nature to her. No Durcunusaan instructor would even attempt to challenge her anymore, and it was one of the reasons she had been accepted into their ranks so young. While she was a lethal fighter, she was also an incredibly skilled engineer and while she acted reckless and carefree, she was equally as reflective and intelligent.

He turned to look back at the High Coven Riders. "You are probably feeling sorry for yourselves right about now." He began speaking seeing their heads come up and look at him. "That was some of the most pitiful Close Quarters Flying I have ever seen. Nubous dreadful to be honest." Andro saw Yuri's face twist into a scowl and she opened her mouth to speak but Andro held up his hand and shook his head. "Do not attempt to make excuses Princess Yuri, for there are none."

"I suppose you can do better!" Dante snapped from where he knelt by Marux's front foreleg.

Andro stepped closer to him. “Would you care to challenge us and find out Dante?” He asked coldly. “Or you Marux? Any of you?”

Dante turned quickly and looked at Marux. His head hovered only inches from his shoulder, his light yellow eyes focused on Andro even as Elynth moved up slowly behind him. His dark gray scales looked much healthier than when he had arrived on Earth, but Dante’s arrogant attitude still permeated his being. Andro reached up above his head without looking and placed his hand on the underside of Elynth’s jaw.

“Listen to me all of you.” Andro spoke. “Many of you still consider me your enemy. I know this... I can feel it radiating from you. Using the names given to us from Earth’s own ancient history, I am a werewolf... you are vampires and never the twain shall meet. You need to forget all you have been taught and let go of the perceived hatreds you have for my people. If you do not... we will be able to teach you nothing and when you and your bonded brother or sister go into combat against the Kavalians they will butcher you without regard. Then they will hold up your corpses as a sign that they no longer fear you or dragons.” Andro lowered his hand and moved closer to them. “Alba Tau taught us that we must surrender all that we are to our bonds. You must fight as one. Think as one. You must become each other. That is the only way you will survive. Then... then the Kavalians will fear you.”

“What do you know of the Kavalians?” Yuri snapped. “You have never fought them!”

Andro met her eyes and nodded. “No I have not.” He stated simply. “What does that matter? Kavalian, Evolli, Kochab... what difference does it make what species they are when they are behind the sights of a T19 waiting to blow you and your dragon from the sky Princess Yuri?” He spoke. “Their only intent is to kill you and your bonded one. As Talon Guardians... that is something Elynth and I will do our best to prevent... because since Alba Tau that is the path we have chosen. But in order to do that... you must be willing to learn what we can teach you. Otherwise... we are just wasting our time here.”

“You keep speaking of this Alba Tau.” A rider spoke up from the back. “Is that a battle or something?”

Andro nodded. “Or something. I don’t know if you could actually categorize it as a battle, but it was a turning point so to speak in Elynth’s and my life. In Moneus Simpson’s life. My father and uncle. Everyone who took part in it actually.”

“So are you going to tell us the story?” The same man asked.

Andro lifted his eyes to look at him. “Story?” He said softly. “I’m... I’m sure there is security footage of what happened somewhere, we documented the entire Evolli War in great detail. Will I tell you about it? No. It is not a story to me.”

They watched as Andro turned and replaced his helmet on his head and nimbly leaped up onto Elynth’s back. She rose to her legs, her yellow/gold eyes scanning the riders and dragons in front of her.

It is not a story to us. Her voice filled their minds. It has been and will always be a nightmare.

Andro looked at them again. “You have two days until the hand to hand training begins. Use this time to study the manuals we have given you and discover more deeply the bonds you have with your dragons. In the end... that is what will save you. I’m sure you can all find your way back from here. It is only twenty kilometers back to the main base. See to your bonded ones and their needs and then the time is yours. Prepare yourselves riders of the High Coven. In two days your training will truly begin.”

Elynth trumpeted her agreement and then propelled them into the sky.

SPARTA

WESTERN MOUNTAIN RANGE

For’mya pushed back against Martin’s form further, snuggling deeper into his embrace as she sipped the glass of wine and let her eyes take in the colorful dancing of the stars in the night sky. She was wonderfully sore but slightly disappointed. She was strong enough now within Mindvoice to know the moment she became pregnant, and part of her had hoped it would be this night as brightly as her blood had burned. Martin had not disappointed her with the intensity and passion with which he took her, his aura driving her to heights she had not yet experienced with him. He had taken her right to the very edge of her maintaining control of her mind and body, and it had been utterly glorious. Even now, an hour after he had filled her for the sixth undeniably blissful time, the fingers of his aura were still tightly corded around her senses keeping her body humming in harmony for him. Not that she needed any help in doing that. She was only slightly disappointed because she knew he would take her like this always now, and when she came into phase in just under six months she would most definitely become pregnant again. It would be a girl she somehow knew, and that knowledge made her giddy.

They were still very much naked, sitting on the edge of the bear skin that was not saturated with their combined juices. She closed her eyes in enchantment as he leaned forward from adding more wine to his glass and firmly nuzzled the back of her elven ear and her neck. She could feel the steady and powerful strumming of his heart against her back, his broad chest pressed tightly to her silky skin, and it soothed her like nothing ever could. He pulled aside the long blond hair, tucking it behind her four inch high ear and his lips settled a kiss on the very outer ridge making her shudder.

For'mya opened her eyes and leaned into his nibbling of her ear lobe with a smile. "Are you going to tease me the rest of the night or would you like to know about the talks and my dinner with the Kavalians." She said softly with a smile.

Martin chuckled softly. "I thought I might tease you until morning. The Kavalians are not a priority for me right now." He said whispered. "Your ears taste especially good tonight you know."

For'mya grinned. "Martin Leonidas... you have had me six times this night. Is that not enough?"

"It's never enough." He stated softly next to her ear. "Not with you... not with any of you. It will never be enough. You possess my being."

"Well that is good... because you possess ours as well." For'mya said. "And we expect you to do this to us for at least three or four millennia. I suggest you conserve your strength my love. You are over three thousand years old."

Martin grinned. "Remember Kinsoaurgai... I spent the first twenty-five hundred years of that in suspended animation. I have a lot of catching up to do."

For'mya laughed now as well. "And you are doing a superb job of it." She said.

Martin's arm slid around in front of her and For'mya used her free hand to pull it tightly to her chest. "Ok... if we must talk about them... but I will warn you... with the way you smell and taste tonight I might lose interest in talking about the Kavalians very quickly." He sighed.

For'mya chuckled. "The talks went smoothly... standard negotiations really. Deia did most of the talking herself. I don't believe she trusts Laustinos now anymore than we do."

"I will talk with her." He stated. "I don't think trust is an issue with him. I just think he is letting his hormones rule his brain, what little of it there is anyway. He's been sniffing after Melda Min for years and..."

For'mya turned slightly in his arms and looked at him. "You have known this?" She asked surprised. "You have known this and done nothing. Martin Leonidas... you surprise me with your control."

Martin smiled. "Kinsoaurgai... I have the five most delicious and beautiful women in the universe. It doesn't surprise me that other men desire them. I can't kill all of them... no matter how much my instincts clamor for me to do just that."

For'mya's eyes grew a little wider. "There... there have been more?" She gasped.

"You don't honestly think that you and my other Queens are the only ones who detect these things do you?" Martin said with a grin. "Those two or three you and the others have chased away through the years are only the ones I let you chase away. Most of them never even got that far."

"Martin... how... how many have there been?" She asked.

"Four after Aricia... three after Anja... three after Dysea... two after Isabella... and four after you." He replied easily.

"You... you jest with me!" She exclaimed. "Don't you?"

Martin shook his head. "No." He said with a grin. "Most of them were Alphas or Betas that remained from Chetak's rule. They are solid citizens... but they thought we still followed the old ways in that regard and that they could challenge me for you and the others. This all took place in the first ten years of us being together. With the exception of Laustinos and a couple others that my Queens quickly set straight, not since that time."

"Were they fools? Couldn't they see all of us want only you?" For'mya asked. "You didn't... Martin Leonidas you didn't..."

Martin laughed again. “No... I didn’t kill them.” He chortled. “That wouldn’t go over real well as King of the Union if I started whacking every man that ever desired or fantasized about one of my Queens. I fantasize about the five of you all the time.” For’mya lashed out and slapped his shoulder gently with her hand as he smiled. “I calmly informed them they needed to find their own female and move on with their lives. Laustinos I knew my Queens could handle, just like the others.”

“We... we never knew this Martin. You never told us this.” She said finally.

“Why would you? It wasn’t important enough to tell you. I dismissed it as soon as I took care of it.” He stated simply. “Now what else did you learn Kinsoaurgai? Do you sense a threat from any of them?”

For’mya shook her head quickly. “Qurot is an overbearing fool.” She said in reply. “He feels that we as females are beneath him. I know he is not happy that Jalersi is in a position of authority over him. It comes out in his demeanor and his words. If there is a threat from any of their delegation it will be from him.”

Martin nodded. “From what I understand the Kavalian people as a whole do not give their females a whole lot of freedom.” He said. “They are taught to fight and will defend what is theirs, but they have no voice in the greater scheme of things. And if what Armetus tells me is accurate, their females are taught to be submissive to the males. What you are saying lends a great deal of weight to that information.”

For’mya nodded. “The two male Legislatures are agreeable enough. They are intelligent and forthcoming to an extent, but I believe they allow Jalersi to take the lead in most everything to gain favor with her father. She listens to them on many things and they are very adept at negotiations.” For’mya looked at him. “She shows a great deal of interest in you Martin. She seems very excited to meet with you tomorrow evening.”

“The question remains as to why.” Martin said. “I can’t be very high on the Kavalian’s list of most loved people and my brother’s mate wanting to meet with me is odd don’t you think?”

For’mya nodded. “Yes... in a manner of sorts.”

“And you don’t sense anything nefarious from her?” Martin asked.

For’mya shook her head. “It is harder to determine someone’s emotions when they have training to control them, you know that. Helen has shown me ways around that in many regards, but no... if she is masking some darker purpose I have not sensed it. Where it concerns you I can only feel anxiety and interest.”

“To what end?” Martin said softly.

“Are you sure you wish to have them come to the villa?” For’mya asked. “Expose the Little ones to them?”

Martin nodded. “It is what we would do for any political leader or delegation.” He answered. “Deia told me I must maintain the status quo. I don’t see any reason to deviate from that rule. Deia wouldn’t let me even if I wanted too. If we are to maintain appearances that there is nothing else going on with the Coven then we need to keep things as normal as possible. I’ve already had Fache increase security around the grounds and Tarifa, Aihola and Isra have agreed to have the Little Ones stay with them for the evening. My mother and Riall will be joining us along with Deia and her mate. I invited Helen... but she is flying down to SODRAG in the morning at Andro’s request to observe and assist with the training for a few days.”

For’mya nodded slowly and sipped her wine. “It is a good plan.” She said. “Jalersi’s sister Athani and your brother’s son Karun are the enigmas” She stated. “When she came to our ship I sensed indecision and fear in Athani. A sense of hopelessness. It is completely different now. After the insurgent attack, coming down from orbit, the talks today. Now I sense only incredible happiness. And her Mindvoice shields are far stronger than they should be for someone who just discovered this skill my love.”

“Did you probe her?” Martin asked.

For’mya shook her head. “Not beyond her surface thoughts Martin Leonidas. You know we look down on that.”

Martin nodded. “With good reason... it’s a violation of a person’s privacy.” He answered her quickly. “What were her surface thoughts?”

“A mixture of many things. Nothing relevant really. Almost as if she was thinking many different things as a form of camouflage.” For’mya replied. “I did not want to press further... but it was easy enough to ascertain her abilities are growing by the day.”

Martin nodded. “I sensed that from the anti-room as well.”

“I can tell you with the utmost certainty that whatever her agenda is Martin... it has nothing at all to do with the trade talks and everything to do with herself.” For’mya said. “She seemed almost bored today during the initial discussions.” She turned her head. “The more that I am in her presence... the more I believe she is waiting for the right moment to ask us for political asylum.”

Martin shook his head. “Kinsoaurgai... you know I can’t grant that.” He said. “We have remained out of their war with the Coven up until now by being careful. Granting her asylum would be one of the fastest ways to a conflict with them. Her father is the Prefect of the KFI! He would never allow us to grant her asylum.”

“What if she is just seeking an escape Martin Leonidas?” For’mya asked looking at him. “From a life she does not want? A life that is being forced on her? Will you just dismiss the values you yourself hold dear? I know you Martin Leonidas, we as your mates and wives know you. You do not hate anyone arbitrarily my love. Your complete acceptance of your love for Bella and all those vampires that call the Union home is the perfect example. There is a reason you feel the way you do and it stems from your brother. What is it?”

Martin stared at her for a long silent moment. “I hate him Kinsoaurgai.” He said softly. “I hate him with every fiber of my being. He... he was able to touch our father, actually see him... feel his hands upon him. Look upon the flesh of his face and body. I... I never had that... all I have are images of who he is... who he was. My dreams and then his spirit that came to me that night at Thermopylae. To know that Pleistarchus had something I never will... to know that he dishonors that willfully and spits on our father’s memory by his actions. To know how our father died and why... and then to desert his people and our father’s memories as he did?” Martin shook his head slowly. “I will never forgive him for that. I can’t... and Pleistarchus sending his son by this woman is only another way for him to continue to torture me.”

For’mya’s eyes grew wider as she turned fully in his arms to look at him. “You don’t think he will...”

Martin nodded. “Yes... that is exactly what I think.” He said softly. “And I am dreading that day like I have dreaded nothing ever before.”

GYTHEIO RESUMAR’S VILLA

The only thing Resumar was dreading at the moment was an early end to the muscle stretching pleasure that Athani’Puat’s lips and tongue were providing him.

The ride to his villa had been maddening as her tangerine scent assailed his nostrils. Feeling her warm body pressed tightly into his arms, even as she gazed with wonder at the ground below them, was very nearly too much. Her feline eyes even picking out several other dragons that flew in the night sky a few kilometers away. He had intended to bring her here to his home and seduce her properly, spending more hours simply exploring her lush body and making her quiver in desire for him. Athani captivated him in a way he had never experienced before, but he failed to take into account that Athani felt equally enthralled by him and had plans of her own.

The moment they were inside his hillside villa, she pounced on him, her own desire far outweighing any sense of decorum. As he stumbled slightly into the main room of his villa, their lips locked in a sizzling kiss, he directed them towards the large couch. It was Athani who broke their kiss and pushed him back onto the couch, seeing his eyes go a little wider at her boldness. She lowered herself onto his body and kissed him once more as her hands undressed him slowly. Resumar could smell her desire easily enough and her need and he was content to let her take what she wanted. He wanted the same thing. He was half undressed when she reached up and in one fluid motion she pulled the top she was wearing from her body. She wore no undergarments, not that she needed them with the firmness of her breasts, and she leaned forward again pressing her full breasts against his bare chest as she kissed him once more. She rubbed her breasts across the hard flesh of his chest, her hard nipples dragging across his skin, inflaming not only his passion but hers as well.

Athani’s hands dropped between their bodies as they kissed and her fingers deftly worked the fastenings on his pants, pulling them open until her hands could reach the prize she so wanted. She felt his body stiffen and he groaned softly against her lips as her hands engulfed his straining eleven inch cock, wrapping her fingers around the shaft and beginning to stroke him with torturous slowness. Athani wasted no more time and slid her body off of his to settle before him on her knees. She pressed a hand to his muscular chest as he began to protest and her blue/green eyes glittered at him.

“Athani... you don’t...”

Athani smiled as she wrapped her small hand around the base of his cock possessively. “Oh but I want too.” She gasped. “More than anything.”

Athani pushed him back onto the couch with her hand before settling comfortably once more between his wide spread legs. She brought her other hand down to encircle the base of his thick cock and she stared at his throbbing eleven inch spear with wanton desire. Oh yes... he was so much larger and thicker than Pusintin, and she had taken all of him within her body without one iota of pain and only mind blowing pleasure. She used her hands to stroke his thick shaft slowly, feeling the veins pulsing with life and she leaned her face close to his cock. She pressed his length to her cheek lovingly, feeling the heat radiating from the organ. She could barely get Pusintin’s whole cock into her mouth, and often times he would simply grab her blond hair and ram himself fully into her throat, making her gag violently as he blasted his come into her belly. Her throat would be sore for days after he did this, but she tolerated it for enduring him was far better than enduring anyone else. Staring at Resumar’s cock now, she knew this would not be an issue and she did not fear it. He would never do something like that and Athani silently vowed that she would teach herself how to fully engulf his huge cock completely over the coming months and years. Now she would simply lavish him with attention and take as much as she was able.

Athani extended her tongue and felt Resumar’s thighs tighten as she began to lick his length as if she was cleaning him. She held his cock straight up in one hand while dragging her tongue up the side of his shaft, stopping to swirl around the flared head twice before dragging her tongue back down his length once more. She did this half a dozen times, each time her tongue battering the sensitive head of his cock, until she once more licked back downwards. Athani opened her mouth wide on her next upward lick and engulfed the pulsing head of his cock within her lips. Her eyes flew open when she felt his aura reach for her and surround her, setting her own body on fire, even as his hands grasped her head. She stopped with just the head of his throbbing cock in her mouth, thinking he was going to ram his huge pole into her throat. She hummed out her delight around Resumar’s cock when all he did was wrap his fingers in her long silky hair. That was all the incentive Athani needed to continue. It was all the information she needed to finally realize that this man was unlike any other she had ever known. Grasping his heated shaft in one hand at the base Athani took a deep breath and plunged her head down the steel hard pole until she felt herself begin to gag; quickly bringing her head back up until only the hot, bulbous head was still within her lips. She battered the head of his cock without mercy, before plunging her head down once again. She felt his hands tighten on her head, his fingers curling within her hair, but he made no move to force her to take more of him. She could feel the muscles in his thighs straining, his rippled abdomen contracting. He wasn’t going to last long she knew, and her pussy began to leak her own excitement at this knowledge.

Athani sped up her plunges, each time going further down his thick shaft and then retreating to swirl her tongue around the head. She tasted him then, and the moment his come touched her tongue Athani groaned in delight as a small but powerful orgasm coursed through her. Her juices poured from her, soaking the pants she was wearing and Athani not caring in the least. She heard him groan as her scent touched him, enveloped him and she felt his cock swell within her lips. Athani plunged her head back down quickly, reaching further and further until her soft lips touched the outside of her hand wrapped around the three inches at the base of his pulsing cock. She brought her other hand down and cupped his large balls, feeling his legs go rigid. She had eight inches of his beautiful cock within her mouth and part of her throat and it felt divine. The heat of his shaft sizzled along her tongue and she could feel every beat of his heart easily pulsing along the veins.

“Sibfla!” Resumar nearly shouted as his head whipped back, his eyes changed and his wolf fangs fully extending. “Athani... I... ughhhhh!”

Athani felt the first blast of his come rocket up the length of his shaft and erupt into her waiting gullet. She closed her eyes in glee as she drank down his come with no hesitation in the least. With Pusintin she resisted this action, yet with Resumar Leonidas she felt a powerful need to taste him, to swallow all that he gave her. Athani didn’t pause and as each following eruption came she drank down his essence with relish. His hips had come off the couch slightly; his entire body tensed so tightly it seemed as if his muscles would rip from his flesh. Athani knew from experience that he could come quite a bit, and she kept up her sucking motion, intent on not letting a single drop escape her lips, which were securely sealed around his spasming cock shaft.

It was several moments before his last eruption came and then his body collapsed back onto the couch. His cock was still incredibly hard, something that made Athani even more excited, and as the last remnants of his come leaked from the head she began to release his cock from the prison of her lips. She pulled back until just the head remained, once more lavishing the bulbous portion with delicate licks and soft nibbles. She felt his hands drop from her head and move to her shoulders and quickly she released his cock with her hands and stripped her pants from her hips, knowing what was coming and wiggling her hips until the pants dangled around her ankles. Resumar grasped her under her armpits and pulled her upwards, her mouth tearing away from his cock with a gasp and wide eyes as he pulled her into his lap. She felt the searing heat from his thick cock as it brushed firmly against her drenched pussy and she gasped when his lips covered hers. Her body was singing out for him more loudly than it had on his father's ship, and Athani knew what she wanted more than anything. She pulled her head away from his, grinning as he fought this action, nibbling on her bottom lip. She took his head in her hands and stared into his eyes, taking in the contours of his face, his eyebrows, his lips. All of him, and burning it into her memory.

"Make... make me yours... Resumar Leonidas!" She gasped softly. "I... I wish for nothing more in my life than that!"

Resumar leaned forward and nuzzled the hollow of her throat firmly, feeling her fingers trace the ridge of his elven ears. They may have been shorter because he was only half elf, but they were no less sensitive and Athani had discovered this on his father's ship in the midst of their pleasure that night.

"Now that I... I have found you." Res spoke lifting his face to stare into her eyes. "Now that I have found you Athani'Puat... I have no intention of ever letting you go." His hands dropped to her ass cheeks and he lifted her hips slightly. Her blue/green eyes were wide in desire and need as she felt the head of his still rock hard cock press against her drenched opening. "You are mine Athani'Puat!" He gasped loudly. "And no one... no one else but me will ever have you again!"

Athani's head flew back as he impaled her completely in one breath stealing plunge and she screamed out her joy. This man... this night... it firmly set her on a path into the unknown but Athani knew somehow that with this man beside her, nothing was out of her grasp. As she descended once more into a world of passion and pleasure, Athani'Puat felt the tears flood her eyes and she surrendered all that she was to him without fear or reservations.

LYCAVORIAN SPACE JUMP GATE 24 TRANSIT CORRIDOR

Normya scrambled into the cockpit of the TYPE II as the vibration throughout the entire ship was growing worse. She glared at Toral as she settled into her seat. Her Coming of Age fever was upon her now in full force and it was all Normya could do to fight it and not snap at everyone as she had the Chief Engineer when they had picked up the ship.

"What did you do?" She demanded harshly and immediately regretted her words.

Toral only glanced at her, knowing what she was going through and having seen it in other turned elves. He had been Normya's co-pilot for four years now, and he knew this was not her normal self. Her words barely glanced off his skin.

"The vibrations are increasing!" He told her. "LSD drive coils are reaching unstable levels!"

"They fixed the LSD coils!" Normya snapped as she strapped in and began to scan her instruments.

"Not good enough it seems!" Toral announced as his hands moved across his consoles. "We need to come out of LSD operation Normya."

"Where are we?" She asked.

"Sector Seventeen. Three minutes from exiting Gate 24." He saw her eyes go wide at this information.

"I know the fever is on you pretty bad and I figured I would let you sleep as much as possible."

"Can we make the Gate?" She demanded.

Toral shook his head. "It's possible... but the increased in vibration is rattling the power manifolds badly. Anse! It almost like the engineers did more bad than good. It's worse now than when we got to Apo Prime."

“I have control!” She spoke quickly as her hands poised over her console. “See if you can route additional power to the inertia dampeners through the secondary relays. We have to get the manifold vibration controlled or it will make the coils shatter!”

Toral drew his hands back. “Control is yours.” He stated as he began pulling at his own straps. “Damn space dock engineers!” He spat as he pulled himself from his seat. “They were supposed to fix this!”

Normya’s emerald green eyes scanned her instruments with a trained eye. “We’re losing containment in the primary core Toral. I’m compensating with external batteries!”

Toral was at the engineering station now, tearing the large panel from its housing and exposing a myriad of conduits and cables. He worked quickly pulling at several connectors and altering their connection and then plugging them back in. “Secondary relays active! Pulling power from sub light engines!”

Normya checked her display and shook her head. “It’s not working!”

“Hold on! I’ll jack the power ten percent!”

She saw the yellow caution lights begin to turn back to green as the manifold dampeners absorbed the extra power and stabilized. She could feel the vibration lessen considerably.

“That did it!” She barked.

“That won’t hold for long!” Toral shouted his head and shoulders almost buried within the engineering panel.

“Ninety seconds to the Gate!” Normya called out.

Toral ignored her as his elf eyes detected something that was not normal to this engineering work panel. He stretched out his body down the work area and reached for the small device on the main LSD power conduit. He and Normya were both skilled engineers and they knew their ship backwards and frontward. This device was not part of this section. He lifted his hand to touch the device and froze as his eyes went wide.

“Normya!” He screamed. “Don’t exit the Gate! Drop from the LSD corridor now!” Toral was scrambling backwards trying to pull himself out of the work section.

“What!” He heard Normya question.

“No!” He screamed again, banging his head hard against the inside of the conduit. “No!”

“Ten seconds!” Normya called. “Hold on!”

Toral pushed himself back as hard as he could. “Normya no! Drop now! Don’t exit the Gate! There’s a fused explosive on the main LSD conduit! Gate operation will cause it to overheat and trigger!”

Normya’s eyes were wide as she stared at him for a single instant. She needed no further direction and using all of her elven and wolf reflexes, her hands flew across her controls.

Her emerald eyes looked up knowing she was not going to be fast enough. “Oh sibfla!” She exclaimed softly.

The exit threshold of Jump Gate 24 was upon them and they could only watch as the Gate triggered in a silvery burst of light. They saw a flash of stars beyond the Gate itself and then the explosion from under the engineering station sent Toral careening into the back of his co-pilot’s chair as the TYPE II impacted the edge of the actual Gate braces. The faulty exit and collision caused the Gate Power core to rupture and explode just as Normya’s TYPE II cleared the actual Gate threshold. The resulting explosion smashed into the rear of the TYPE II and sent it spinning wildly out of control. The Gate’s destruction lit up the surrounding stars and then there was nothing but the darkness of space.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

THE WILDS

1.8 LIGHT YEARS FROM APRIAN TWO

“...on our way back husband.” Esther spoke as she sat in the engineer’s station behind Tir’ut who was piloting the Limian Transport.

The ship was a heavily modified Limian VANGRA 9-Class Tactical Transport. It was a common enough ship throughout The Wilds since the Limians were not particular about whom they sold their ships to. This ship however was quite different that most of those like it found in The Wilds. It was much more meticulously cared for considering it had more powerful engines, and quite an assortment of offensive as well as defensive armaments. All enhancements that Cha'talla had added to the ship's seventy meter length over the years. Cha'talla the Immortal was not one to skimp when it came to the protection and safety of his Blessed Wife or any of his tribe. As with the heavily modified G9 Long Range High Coven Runners they had in their small fleet, this VANGRA 9 TT was easily able to haul freight and personnel as well as defend itself from the many pirates and mercenaries that called The Wilds home.

Cha'talla's face appeared confused. "And just how did you manage that Esther? We were not expecting you for another six days at least."

Esther smiled. "I did not care to run into Gareld again my husband. Lesede informed us before we left Jagaliu of the ship he commands. It is an older model Bontawillian Frigate... but it could still be a threat to us. His ship was just departing orbit when we left and I had Tir'ut take us through Gate Nine to leave him behind quickly."

Cha'talla's eyes grew a little wider. "Esther... the Overseer Jump Gates in The Wilds are notoriously unstable. You took a risk doing that."

Esther nodded. "It was a risk I thought necessary Cha'talla. We definitely don't need Gareld following us back to our home on Kranek my love. At least not until you are ready to receive him in proper Immortal fashion." Esther heard Tir'ut chuckle from his seat behind the transport's controls.

Cha'talla shook his head slowly with a smile, exposing the tips of his vampiric fangs. "I wonder sometimes Du'ased 'ranndi, if you should not have been born Akruvian." (Blessed Wife)

Esther matched his smile and her dark eyes glittered with adoring love for him. "I was able to obtain everything on our list for once. The merchants on Aprian Two must have just received an influx of material from their sources."

Cha'talla nodded. "Good... the astrometric specialist from the Kortanie settlement also predicts another fierce winter as I suspected. We will be well prepared and able to help them if they should need something."

Esther leaned closer to the screen. "I was also able to obtain that certain scented oil you like so much Du'ased m'ranndii. I intend to make use of it the first night we return. I hope you are up to the task." She spoke in a soft whisper.

"I will certainly look forward to that." Cha'talla answered with a grin. "And I will most definitely be up to the task my wife."

"Tir'ut has plotted us a course between the Torana Gas Cluster and the Protonic Nebula." Esther said sitting back in the chair. "We should be home in just under three days husband."

"Make sure our son knows not to attempt his superior flying skills in the transport." Cha'talla spoke. "It is not an G9 and would not hold up well under the strain."

Esther chuckled. "I will insure this." She answered. "We..."

"Whoa!" Tir'ut's voice exclaimed loudly from his seat and Esther turned her head to look at him quickly.

"Tir'ut! What is it?" She asked.

"Mother pull up grid 57896 point three!" Tir'ut spoke excitedly. "Hurry!"

Esther adjusted a monitor adjoining the one she was using to speak with Cha'talla and punched in the coordinates Tir'ut had given her. The screen came alive with the remnants of a massive white flash and her eyes grew larger as she leaned forward. "Tir'ut... what is that?" She asked.

"Long range sensors are detecting massive Polarion particles saturating that sector of space and small amounts of isotopic radiation!" He replied instantly. "If I had to guess... I'd say a Jump Gate just exploded."

"That's inside Union territory!" Esther spoke. "Their Gates are perfectly maintained all of the time! The only way one of their Gates would explode is if something hit it, or someone destroyed it!"

"Esther... what is it?" Cha'talla asked.

"Stand by husband." Esther replied quickly. "Tir'ut... increase power to the lateral sensor array. Are there any signs of ships in the area of the explosion or nearby?"

"Mother... the lateral sensor array will be detected if I increase the power." Tir'ut spoke from his seat.

"Pulse a five second burst!" She ordered. "No one will be able to track that back to us."

"Five second burst coming up." Tir'ut stated adjusting his controls. "Pulse away!"

Esther's screen flickered for a couple of seconds and then cleared once more. "Tir'ut!"

“I see it! Can’t get a complete picture... but if the readings are accurate, it appears to be a Nodon Engineering Systems TYPE II.” Tir’ut said.

“One of their Dragon ships.” Esther spoke softly.

“We can’t tell much from here... but the power readings are fluctuating and it looks like they have lost one of their engine nacelles.” Tir’ut told her. “It’s adrift and heading right for the border.”

“Esther... what is happening?” Cha’talla asked once more.

“Cha’talla... one of the Union TYPE II dragon ships apparently struck their Jump Gate upon exit!” Esther spoke. “They are adrift and heading for the border with heavy damage.”

Cha’talla’s dark eyes narrowed now. “Their dragon ships are piloted exclusively by elves Esther.” He spoke. “An elf pilot would not strike a Jump Gate upon exit.”

“I know.” Esther said.

“Esther... it is not our concern.” Cha’talla stated. “The Union is more than capable of taking care of their own. They will send a recovery ship. One is probably already on its way.”

“Cha’talla we have always talked of when we would reveal ourselves to the Union.” Esther spoke. “This could be our chance husband.”

Cha’talla shook his head quickly. “No.” He ordered. “We have accomplished much my wife, but my people are responsible for the death of King Leonidas’s father and many others. He is not a forgiving soul Esther... you know this.”

“We don’t know that for sure Cha’talla.” Esther said. “Millions of purebloods and turned vampires alike live within the Union. Think of what we could gain if we were able to trade with the many Union planets along the border. We would want for nothing and our future would be so much brighter than it is even now.”

“Esther... I agree with you... but it is still too soon.” Cha’talla spoke. “Perhaps another decade or two when we have fully left that past behind us.”

“We have left it behind us husband.” Esther said forcefully. “And it is time now to start building even more than what we have already built.”

“Esther...” He began speaking.

Esther sighed heavily. “I will do as you say husband.” She stated quickly. “And we will talk of this when I return. You and T’lolt and the others have come so far and you do not give yourselves enough credit! We will see you in three days!” Esther stabbed her finger down on the panel before he could respond, ending the transmission. She immediately got out of her seat and moved forward to settle into the navigator and co-pilot’s seat beside her son.

“Mother?” Tir’ut asked looking at her.

“How soon before that TYPE II drifts across the border?” Esther asked.

“At its current rate of drift, perhaps nine hours.” He answered. “Why?”

“Lifesigns?”

“We are too far away to determine that.” Tir’ut answered. “And the neutrino particles in the Torana Gas Cluster will prevent getting a clearer picture than what we have now.”

“Unless we were closer.” Esther said.

Tir’ut nodded. “Yes... unless we were...” He turned to look at his mother.

“Alter our course Tir’ut.” Esther spoke turning to look at him. “Alter our course and then increase speed. Take us to the far side of the cluster closet to the Union border. How long?”

“Mother... father said...”

“I know what your father said.” Esther spoke. “He said not to get involved... he did not say we could not watch. Now... how long?”

“I can have us there in seven hours if I use the auxiliary thruster engines.” Tir’ut replied.

Esther nodded. “Then use them.” She spoke.

Tir’ut smiled and turned back to his controls. “Using them mother.” He stated.

Cha'talla turned from the monitor slowly and looked around the small command center at the five other Immortals who occupied it. All of them turned away quickly so as not to meet his gaze. The door to the center opened and T'lolt walked in casually, stopping several feet inside the center when he felt the tenseness of the personnel and his brother. He moved up slowly to where Cha'talla stood.

"Brother... I was coming to get the daily reports on the perimeter fences." T'lolt said. "Why does it seem like there is a problem?"

Cha'talla looked at him. "Bring up the charts of the sector our transport is in and put them on the plot!" He barked out. "T'lolt." He said motioning to the plot board.

They moved to the large waist high plot board and watched as the area of space Esther was in came up quickly. Cha'talla's eyes scanned it quickly. "Overlay any known Union Jump Gates along the border in the accompanying sectors!" He shouted.

"Stand by!"

"Cha'talla what is wrong?" T'lolt asked.

"Overlaying Captain!"

Cha'talla watched as seven points appeared on the chart, all of them inside the Union border. "Esther and Tir'ut reported a Union Jump Gate exploded just across the border here." He stabbed his finger down on the chart. "Union Gate Two Four. It is the only one they would be able to detect from their location."

T'lolt looked at him. "Cha'talla... Union Jump Gates don't just explode."

Cha'talla nodded. "I know. They also detected a Nodon Engineering TYPE II dragon transport adrift and heading for the border." He said. "Elves fly all of their STRIKERS and their dragon ships. No elf pilot will collide with a Jump Gate T'lolt. They would exit the Jump Gate corridor before they allowed that to happen. No matter where they were."

T'lolt nodded. "I agree."

"I know my pureblood wife T'lolt." Cha'talla spoke. "She will not listen to me. She is too inquisitive... too stubborn and too dedicated to insuring our tribe grows and prospers."

"That is why she is considered the Matriarch of our tribe now brother." T'lolt said. "It has been this way for years. Everything she does is for our benefit."

Cha'talla nodded. "That is why she will not listen to me. She will go and investigate this incident. Even after I instructed her not to."

T'lolt smiled. "She is stubborn brother as you said... more stubborn than you. That is why you love her so. If she did not look as she does... she could have been born an Akruxian in how she acts and thinks."

Cha'talla nodded slowly. "That is what I told her. And that is why she will investigate this incident."

"The Union will no doubt be aware of this already brother." T'lolt said. "All of their Gates are linked by an early warning system as well as a usage meter. And if it is one of their dragon ships, you can be assured help is already on the way."

Cha'talla looked at him, his dark eyes filled with questions. "T'lolt... in the years since the Union has been using these dragons and helping them to repopulate their species... when have you known these dragon ships to be piloted by anyone other than an elf?"

T'lolt shook his head. "Never."

"And in all our years fighting the Union... when have you ever known an elf pilot to collide with anything they did not intentionally want to collide with?" Cha'talla asked.

T'lolt looked at him. "You don't believe this is an accident do you?" He said softly.

"Take our G9s brother. All three of them. Fully armed and loaded with a complete squad of our finest in each ship. This is no accident... and I believe my Blessed Wife and sons are about to step into a Fever Wasp's nest." Cha'talla spoke. "If they are injured in any way... I will act in the same fashion as King Leonidas and I will slaughter any who are involved in hurting them."

T'lolt nodded. "We'll leave within the hour." He stated as his hand dropped to where he kept the Lycavorian Nehtes strapped to his right leg.

It was a memento of a life altering change of direction in his almost five thousand years of living. An opportunity given to him by a man he once considered a mortal enemy. A man who had treated him with respect and honor. A man who had insured the bodies of his sons would not be taken by the animals until he could properly intern their remains. T'lolt had embraced change after that day, and he had started over. He had a new wife who he had learned to adore, and he had three young children that he doted on in a very unlike Akruvian fashion. Yes he had changed.

And it was a change that he, like his brother and his tribe, had welcomed with open arms.

SPARTA DIPLOMATIC ENVOY APARTMENTS

Athani'Puat stepped from the shower in her apartment exquisitely sore and her lithe body still alive with the sensations from her hours in Resumar's bed. Their lovemaking had been more intense this time, both of them holding almost nothing back as they explored and delved and pleased each other until they could stand it no more. He had returned her only thirty minutes before, just as the sun was beginning to climb above the horizon, but everything was still dark. He had nuzzled her cheek and neck firmly, sending delightful tremors skittering across her flesh, as he kissed her passionately. He had given her special soaps and scented oils to wash with so that his scent was very nearly erased from her body in order to protect her. Her people he was not concerned with as much as his own people, and her nephew Karun. He was half Lycavorian and would be able to detect Resumar's scent on her if she wasn't careful. The hot water had helped in soothing her sore muscles, but it was a soreness that Athani relished in. She retrieved the towel from the rack with her tail and wrapped it tightly around her body as she walked into the main room of the apartment. So engrossed in her memories and feelings of the previous night she did not notice her sister sitting at the small table reviewing a data pad and sipping a mug of steaming liquid until she entered the main room.

Athani came up short. "Jalersi!" She snapped genuinely surprised. "How did you get in here?"

"You did not answer your door Athani, so I had the Spartan sentry open it for me." Jalersi replied.

"I was in the shower in case you didn't notice." Athani spoke harshly. "Do not do such a thing again!"

"I am your sister." Jalersi said.

"That does not give you the right to enter my quarters unannounced!" Athani spat. "No matter where they may be!"

"You were in the shower for quite some time sister." Jalersi stated.

Athani's blue/green eyes glared at her. "I did not know there was a time limit on the showers I take!" She snapped. "We have been aboard ship for nearly two weeks and I wanted to experience a hot shower for longer than is usually allowed on a ship. Is that a crime Jalersi?"

Jalersi met her glaring eyes. "No... it is not. Forgive me sister."

"What do you want?" Athani demanded as she moved for the small bed chambers in the room silently thanking herself for messing up the previously unused bed to make it appear it had been slept in.

Jalersi rose from the table and followed her sister with the data pad in hand. "I was able to speak with father yesterday." She said as her eyes fell on the rumpled sheets of the bed.

Athani dropped the towel from around her still damp body, her tail twitching in agitation at her sister for interrupting her thoughts. She silently thanked that Resumar had left no telltale signs of their lovemaking on her body. "So! You are the head of this delegation... why should that concern me. You have already shown me where my place will be."

Jalersi sighed. "Athani... mother and I only did what our laws and traditions dictated." She said.

Athani turned to look at her. "That is so much rubbish!" She snapped. "You and mother are giving me to Qurot for political purposes only! After you both promised me I would have a say in which male you chose for me! You lied to me Jalersi! You both did!"

"Qurot is a powerful Pride..."

"Qurot is a disgusting pig!" Athani barked. "You know that as well as I do! He has had two mates in the last two thousand years! Both of whom he killed in a Tazli Root induced rage!"

"Father has ordered him to treat you differently Athani." Jalersi spoke.

"And will father be there to insure when Qurot inhales the Tazli vapor again that he does not kill me in a similar fit of rage Jalersi?" Athani asked. "Will you be there? I think not!"

"You are quite capable of defending yourself from Qurot Athani." Jalersi said.

“Oh yes... and when I injure or kill him for attempting to force himself upon me will you or father support me against his Pride in the archaic system we call law?” Athani spat as she pulled on the light blue jumpsuit.

“Athani I have protected you all these years... you...”

“Allowing Pusintin to rape my ass and force me to suck his cock whenever he desired is not protecting me Jalersi.” Athani stated.

“Would you have preferred I do nothing and allow Qurot to take you twenty-five years ago?” Jalersi snapped back.

Athani looked at her. “That might have been better Jalersi. He would have certainly killed me by now and then it would not matter.”

“Stop it!” Jalersi demanded. “You are acting like a spoiled child! This is our way! The sooner you accept that the better it will be for you!”

“What do you want Jalersi?” Athani asked softly. “The talks do not begin for another hour.”

Jalersi tossed the data pad onto the rumpled bed. “Father wants to know about your ability to speak with this dragon. Why you were not afraid of him as the rest of our people are.”

Athani turned and picked up the pad letting her eyes read the first portion of it. “First of all... I can not speak with this dragon.” She stated plainly. “Our people do not have the ability to communicate in such a way. And secondly... I did not have much of a choice when it came to being placed on this dragon’s back. Prince Resumar put me there for my own protection. It is most definitely not something I would have chosen to do. And for your information I was terrified of this beast. However... I was more terrified of the vampire assassin who was trying to kill me.”

“It... it did not appear that way Athani.” Jalersi said.

“How it appeared to you does not matter to me.” Athani answered. “I was just as scared as you were Jalersi, even more so because I was the one next to this creature.” She held out the data pad to her. “I do not have some previously unrecorded ability sister. Those creatures make my blood go cold just as they do yours. That is what you can tell our father.”

“And if I don’t believe you?” Jalersi stated.

Athani shrugged. “Then send me home.” She said simply. “At least there I will not have to endure Qurot’s gloating or associate myself with these Lycavorians and their stench any longer than necessary. At least there I can have some peace before I am given to Qurot as a political prize because of all his glorious victories against the High Coven.”

“Athani...”

“Are we done sister?” Athani stated. “If we are... I would like to enjoy my breakfast before the talks begin.”

Jalersi stared at her for a long moment and then nodded. “Very well Athani.” She said. “I will leave you alone. We are meeting in the foyer in forty-five minutes. Do not be late.”

Athani watched as Jalersi turned and walked out of the bedroom area and to the main door of the apartment. She waited until the door had closed behind her before exhaling deeply.

[Stench?] Resumar’s voice erupted into her head.

[Creature?] Cemath’s voice followed.

Athani couldn’t help but smile at the playful tone of their voices as she crossed to the balcony. [Stop it you two!] She demanded. [I had to think of something! I love how you smell Resumar... you know that. And you are very handsome for a dragon Cemath. At least I think you are... you are the only one I know at the moment.]

Resumar’s voice took on a more serious tone. [Is this something I need to worry about Aryschanne?] He asked. [I can advance my plans if I have too.]

Athani felt warmth rush through her at his words and the name he called her. He had told her a little of his plans earlier, only saying that it was best if he kept the majority of it from her to protect her. [I can handle my sister Resumar. As long as I know that I have your love.]

[That is not something you have to question Aryschanne. I promise you.] Resumar answered.

[When will we be alone again?] She asked quickly.

[We will see each other tonight at the Royal Villa. You are coming for dinner remember.] He said.

[And you will be there?] She asked.

[I wouldn't miss it Athani.] He replied quickly. [I intend to see you wearing the dress I am buying for you.]

[Dress?] Athani asked. [You are buying me... you are buying me a dress?]

Resumar chuckled. [What... don't you think I can?]

[No... no one has ever bought me a dress Resumar.] She said.

[Then I will be the first? Good. I will make sure it is exceptional.] He replied. [I will have it delivered to your apartment while you are conducting the talks today. You can say you saw it in the window of one of the shops when you break for lunch and you ordered it delivered to your room.]

[I miss you already Resumar.] She said.

[All you need do is reach out to me and I will answer.] He told her. [Just make sure you are in a semi private place and shielded or others of my people will detect you. Especially my mother or the Prime Minister. With the shields we have helped you to establish no one who is below a Tier Five will detect the tremors of us talking. However my mother and the Prime Minister are some of the most powerful Tier Six Mindvoicers in the Union. They will undoubtedly feel the tremors if they are nearby.]

[I will make sure.] Athani said. [What... what color is it?]

Athani didn't see Resumar smile, but she could almost feel it. [It will be a surprise... but it will match your eyes.] He answered. [I must go Aryschanne. Reach out to me if you feel the need. I will see you tonight.]

[Resumar?]

[Yes?]

[Resumar Leonidas... I... I do believe I may be very much in love with you.] Athani spoke softly.

She heard him chuckle softly. [You don't know how much hearing you say that means to me Aryschanne. It matches what I feel for you. I will see you tonight.]

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE EDGE OF THE TORANA GAS CLUSTER THE WILDS

“... how long?” Gareld asked from his chair on the bridge of his ship.

“The ship will clear the Defensive minefield in just under three hours.” The Kochab officer turned from the console he was in front of. “Another three hours to the border and then they will be ours.”

“Make sure our boarding craft are ready.” Gareld spoke. “The minute they cross the border I want to be on them. The Lycavorian King's half elf daughter will bring a pretty price from the Kavalian detachment based on Jivrr. I understand she is almost a twin to her mother when it comes to looks. And the elf Queen is quite the looker.”

“The Kavalians? I thought we were supposed to kill her Gareld.” The Kochab spoke. “That is what our contract called for.”

“Yes I know Sandur. I accepted another contract as well. The Kavalians have been looking for an opportunity to capture one of the Lycavorian pig's children for over a decade. When I received this contract I contacted them on Nefoa where they maintain a small detachment. They were most pleased and they have already paid us for her. All we need do is deliver her.”

Sandur smiled. “So that is where the additional fifty million credits came from.” He stated.

Gareld nodded. “We make twenty from the fool who wants her dead. And fifty from the Kavalians. They both get what they want. The Kavalians will no doubt kill her... after they fuck her until she goes insane.” He laughed. “And we come away very rich.”

“And then?”

Gareld smiled. “Then we make some improvements to our ship... and we find where Esther and her Immortal dog have gone. When we do... we kill the Immortals... and I will make her my slave. After I whip her within an inch of her life that is. She will submit to me willingly I assure you.”

“As long as you let me watch.” Sandur spoke. “I've never seen you break a pureblood before.”

Gareld laughed. "You should have heard her squeal my friend. When I got done with her she was slinging her tight pussy on any cock I put in front of her to make the pain stop." He said. "Twenty of us took her that night. It was fantastic."

"I look forward to that Gareld." He answered.

Gareld got to his feet. "Contact the Lycavorian and put it through to my office." He said. "I want to make sure he transfers the rest of our credits."

"...so she is dead?" The cloaked figure asked.

Gareld turned toward the holo image holding the glass of Blood Wine. "She will be as soon as her ship drifts across the border. We can not enter Lycavorian space without activating the automated defensive field as you know. As long as you have kept to your part of the bargain and no Lycavorian help arrives we will accomplish your task."

"You need not worry about that." The figure spoke. "The device used to disable their ship will not be discovered once you vaporize it, and my people will make it so the destruction of the Gate is not noticed for at least thirty-six hours."

Gareld nodded. "Plenty of time." He stated.

"If she is not already dead make sure she suffers." The man spoke.

"This seems to be rather personal with you my friend. Not a good thing in this line of work." Gareld spoke.

"We are not now and never will be friends!" The cloaked figure hissed. "Simply because I use your services does not translate to something more. You came highly recommended and that is why I chose you. The Evolli fools who were also recommended failed in their task and that is why I had you as a back up."

Gareld nodded. "Whatever." He spoke quickly. "I want the rest of our funds transferred now."

"The task is not yet done." The man spoke.

"In nine hours it will be." Gareld said. "And thirty minutes after that I want to be on my way as far from the Union border as I can get. Which means I want the rest of our agreed upon contract transferred now. When word reaches that Lycavorian dog of a King that his precious half elf daughter is dead he will fly into a rage. I want to be long gone by then. With my credits! You can deal with him... and I hope for your sake you have a place you can go to hide."

The figure did not answer for a long moment and then finally nodded his head. "I will make it so within the hour." He said. "Contact me when it is fully done."

"Of course." Gareld spoke.

TYPE II DRAGON TRANSPORT

Normya Leonidas groaned and pushed her body back off of her center control console and into her seat. As her head touched the headrest she winced and groaned even louder as pain lanced through her temples. She reached up quickly and gasped when she touched the side of her head and her fingers came away coated in blood.

"Toral!" She croaked out. She turned her head slowly, but that still brought forth a wave of nausea and pain. She closed her emerald eyes tightly and fought to breathe deeply making the wave of nausea pass slowly. When she opened them again she turned her head even more slowly. "Toral?"

Normya spied her elven co-pilot's lower body stuffed behind his co-pilot's seat and her eyes grew wide. She reached up quickly, fighting back another wave of nausea, and released her seat straps. Slowly and with pain wracking her body she pulled herself from her seat and moved back between the seats. Toral's arm was twisted at an odd angle and he had blood leaking down his forehead from where he had collided with the back of his seat. An instant of fear coursed through her as she realized he might be dead. She knelt next to him and placed her hand on his chest.

"Toral!" She nearly shouted.

Normya almost burst into tears when he groaned loudly and his eyes opened. “You do not have to yell!” He snapped. “The ringing in my ears from the explosion is quite sufficient thank you!”

“I thought you were dead!” She snapped right back laughing as she did so.

Toral shifted slightly on the deck and groaned as he tried to move his arm. “No such luck!” He stated as he pushed himself up slowly, Normya reaching out to help him. “Uhhhh! My shoulder! It’s dislocated!”

Normya held his wrist and looked at him. “I have to pop it back in.” She said quickly.

Toral nodded his head. “Be quick!” He said reaching up to grip her shoulder with his other hand.

Normya eased his injured arm away from his body before twisting down and away quickly. Toral hissed in agony but did not yell out as he banged his head against her shoulder. “I’m sorry Toral!” She said softly.

“Medical kit!” He gasped. “Get me some Odexal!”

Normya pushed herself painfully to her feet and moved to the side of the cockpit, yanking the large metal container from the brackets on the wall. She brought it back quickly, entering the code to open it. She quickly rummaged through the contents until she found the yellow hexagonal pills. She popped open the container and dropped two into her palm. “Here!” She stated. “I can’t give you anymore! We need to find out how badly we are hurt!”

Toral nodded as he flipped the two pills into his mouth and swallowed. “It’s enough.” He stated.

“Toral... what happened?” She asked.

“Fused explosive.” He answered quickly looking up to see her face. “You are hurt!” He almost shouted reaching up to touch the head wound.

Normya drew her head back to keep him from touching it and causing more pain than there already was and she shook her head slowly. “I cracked my skull on the center console. I’m fine. I have my father’s hard head as you so often remind me. The bleeding has stopped as well. Toral... a fused explosive?”

Toral nodded as he shifted his body slightly on the deck rising into a sitting position. “Directly over the main LSD conduit. The Jump Gate activating and heating the coils caused it to trigger the explosion.”

“Sabotage?” She gasped.

Toral nodded. “It didn’t get there by itself. Someone knew right where to put it and what it would do when we exited the Gate.”

“Why?” She asked her mind racing through the possibilities. “We aren’t carrying any dragons. Why would someone do that?”

Toral looked at her. “I can think of only one reason. She has platinum hair and emerald eyes like her mother.”

Normya’s eyes flew open. “Me?”

“No one wants me Normya. I’m just a fun loving elf who happens to be your co-pilot.” Toral spoke trying to interject humor into the moment.

“Who the hell wants to hurt me?” She exclaimed.

“Well whoever it was knew what it would take to disable our ship and nearly kill us.” Toral said.

Normya looked at him. “The Chief Engineer?”

Toral nodded. “That would be my best guess. What did you say to him to make him try to kill us?”

“Toral... I may be in the midst of my Coming of Age fever... but I have been extra careful not to snap at anyone. And I certainly didn’t do anything to make him want to kill me.” Normya declared. She scrambled to her feet ignoring the pain as anger surged through her. “Oh... I will rip his eyes from his thick skull when we get back!” She snarled. “And then I will see to it the next ship he works on is a Lifter racer on Nortali!”

Toral chuckled. “Now that is the daughter of Leonidas talking. You will have to keep your father and brothers from killing him though.” He said with a smile.

Normya turned back to him. “We need to find out how bad the damage is and get a message off. Can you move?” Toral nodded and took her outstretched hand. Normya helped pull him to his feet gingerly and he looked at her with a grin. “What?” She demanded.

“I told you before we left to find someone to curb that fever.” He said with a smirk. “You obviously didn’t listen to me and now you have seriously pissed someone off with your fever induced tongue.”

Normya glared at him but knew what he was doing and she finally smiled. “You just wanted in my pants yourself!” She snapped.

Toral grinned wider. "It would have cured the fever." He said. "And we would not be in this position right now. We could have made beautiful children together!"

Normya shook her head with a smile. "I'll run a diagnostic of the systems. Check the engineering station mister comedian."

"... starboard LSD nacelle is gone!" Toral spoke from the engineering console. Half of the monitors were nothing but blackness and the lights in the cockpit were flickering on and off with the emergency power. "That is what must have hit the Gate ring and sent us spinning just before the Gate exploded."

"That probably saved our lives." Normya called. "The spinning kept any of the major sections from hitting us full on. I have hull breaches in three different sections, but nothing very large. Power conduits between sections seven and nine are severed. Life Support is at thirty-nine percent and holding."

"Atmospheric force fields are holding where the nacelle tore free." Toral spoke slowly as he traced his finger over the diagram on the monitor. "Communications are dead! Sensors are dead! Main engines as well as the sub lights are off line! Carians... we are in bad shape."

"We're alive!" Normya barked.

"Well... I guess that's something." He said. "There is power to the navigational shields, so at least we won't get pulverized by space rocks."

"ULU Command must have detected the Gate exploding by now." She said. "There is probably a ship already on the way here."

"The question is... will emergency power hold until they get here?" Toral spoke.

"The sub lights are intact?" Normya asked.

"Diagnostic shows minor stress fractures... but nothing that would prevent operation." Toral spoke. "Problem is... the conduits between G4 and G7 are severed. How do we get power to the sub lights?"

The massive clanging noise caused both of them to turn their heads upwards at the metallic sound as it dragged across the bulkhead.

"Ah... Toral... please tell me that wasn't what I think it was." Normya stated.

Toral moved from the engineering chair and went to the side of the cockpit touching the control panel. He waited while the metal covering over the small view window came down. "Unfortunately I can't say that." He said finally as he watched the disc shaped object pass by the view window.

Normya was leaning forward in her seat as far as she was able and peering out into the darkness of space through the pilot's view window. Her eyes grew wider when she saw the three meter diameter metal disc shaped object only a few meters from where she sat. Not far from that her elven eyes picked up several more.

"Nubou me!" She barked.

"Considering what we have surrounding us at the moment I will pass on that offer until a later time Princess!" Toral barked. "D12 mines! We're drifting Normya! Right into the DBZ!" (Defensive Border Zone)

"The mines aren't responding!" She snapped quickly. "Our IFF transponder must still be broadcasting!"

"So our own mines won't kill us!" Toral barked out. "Well that's somewhat of a relief I guess!"

Normya turned to look at him. "Toral... we need to get power to the sub lights. If we are drifting into the DBZ... then we're drifting towards the border and not away from it like we first thought!"

"Oh that isn't good!" Toral said turning to face her fully now. "We'll drift right into the Torana Gas Cluster and without power the atmospheric force fields will come down and we will die a very agonizing death."

"Pretty much!" Normya stated.

"How long?"

Normya did some fast figuring in her head. "Well we've been awake for ninety minutes now... and if we are already at the DBZ then we had to be out of it for at least ninety minutes. I'd say we have about three hours before we hit the border... and another three before we enter the cluster."

"Six hours?" Toral spoke softly. "How brushed up are you on your H44 Nodon Sub Light Engineering Skills Normya?"

Normya got out of her pilot's seat. "I think we both just became experts."

Toral nodded. "Indeed." He said. "I'll take the port side... grab the Hand kits and let's get to work."

“Your shoulder?” Normya spoke stepping closer to him.

Toral grinned. “Our impending death has a way of alleviating any pain I may be feeling at the moment.” He told her. “I’ll take the primary conduit. You work your way to the sublight conduit and we’ll figure something out.”

Normya nodded. “We don’t have much of a choice.” She said turning to grab the tool kit behind her pilot seat.

SODRAG BASE RECREATION CENTER

The Recreation Building was located in the center of all the bungalows as well as they barracks buildings nearby. It was the largest of the buildings on this end of the base, larger still than the huge Dining Facility. The Center was broken up into five distinct portions, with soundproof walls separating the sections. One was an enormous library with row upon row of data pads as well as written volumes of books. Spread out among the many dozens of ceiling high shelves was comfortable couches and chairs and even several large tables. The soundproof walls kept this library very quiet, and there was simply some very soft melody music playing in the background.

There was a main gathering section that held a medium sized bar of sorts, surrounded by much smaller tables and chairs. Many of these were filled with High Coven Riders who were talking quietly amongst themselves about the events of the day and the obstacle course. There were several large monitors in each of the corners near the bar which were tuned to the Netnews channels broadcasting different types of programming, one of which happened to be a sports channel which was currently showing Lifter races from the main course on Apo Prime. They were reminiscent of the stock car races of Earth’s ancient past and had quickly become the most popular attraction on Earth. Adjoined to that yet not divided by a soundproof wall were more comfortable couches and chairs in an area that allowed for the less raucous crowd to sit and talk among each other without having to shout or whisper. There was a small food counter here in this section and this is where most of the base security came to grab food when they were on duty. The sun had gone down only an hour ago, and while the heat and humidity outside was unchanged, the air conditioning units inside the Rec Center kept it at a very comfortable setting. Almost no one wore their uniforms in here, though it was easy enough to tell who was who since most of the High Coven Riders and personnel had very little in the way of civilian clothing and it showed in the rather drag outfits many of them wore. Surprisingly many of the Coven Riders had brought their data manuals and they appeared to be discussing items from within these manuals among each other.

Yuri however, was not one of those individuals and she sat with Dante, Javier and Lucia at the small table near the rear of the building sipping glasses of the cloned blood that tasted like fruit juice. Thast and two of the other security personnel they had brought with them had pulled chairs over to the table and were also sitting with them. As she let her eyes wander over the men and women in the center she saw Narice and Carisia sitting on a couch discussing something from one of the manuals while Toria Dellion and three other pilots that had been chosen were obviously talking animatedly about their first day working with Arram Leonidas and the Nodon Engineering STRIKER DTs.

“Thast?” Yuri asked softly as she turned back to them. “What did your recon last night determine?”

“There is not much in the way of security around the bungalows themselves.” Thast answered in a low voice. “We were able to move about quite freely wrapped in the shadows.”

“The entrances?” Yuri asked.

“One three kilometers west of us and another, that according to the signs, is some ten kilometers south. The entrance closest to us has a standard guard force of four Spartans and two fully grown dragons. There appear to be permanent Bonded Pairs assigned to this base that man all the security checkpoints.” Thast answered. “Getting inside the actual main operations center would be impossible in my opinion. There is an outer ring of security sensors and overlapping sentries to include at least three more dragons. Whether they are bonded to Spartans I can not say Princess. Ground and motion sensors and possibly even air current sensors as well. I will try and get a better idea tonight when we go out.”

“Were you able to determine how high up the Mindvoice shield goes?” Javier asked.

Thast shook his head. "That is also not among my abilities Prince Javier. Forgive me... but my Mindvoice abilities are not as strong as yours."

"I estimate at least five kilometers." Yuri spoke. "Vollenth and I reached almost twenty thousand feet above the base on our way back this morning and were unable to penetrate the shield. It is some kind of void. It allows us to Mindvoice within the void... but does not allow Mindvoicing out. I would suggest the same applies for anything attempting to project inward."

"So grandmother can't reach us inside?" Lucia asked.

Yuri shook her head. "No. And whatever it is... it also blocks the connection your father and I established many years ago."

"Grandmother was right then." Dante spoke. "They are using equipment they salvaged from the Mindvoice ship."

Yuri nodded. "It would appear so... but considering they are able to power all of it could also mean that the Mindvoice ship is not a derelict like the one on Nuwaroa."

"It still has power mother?" Lucia asked.

"When it rose from Lycavore it was fully intact and operating." Yuri said. "The people Leonidas had with him obviously learned how to fly it. And it stands to reason they did not simply just crash it on the surface when they brought it here."

"Mother... my control of Carisia is slipping." Dante said.

Yuri turned to look at him. "What do you mean?"

Dante shook his head. "Ever since we arrived on this planet she has been fighting it more and more. I have to expend far more effort to keep the subconscious commands in place. Her shields are growing more powerful and she is resisting harder. The entranceway we opened into her subconscious is closing and I can't stop it."

"What's this?" Thast asked.

"Do not worry Thast." Yuri said with a smile. "I will insure she remains in your bed. She has given you no signs has she?"

Thast shook his head quickly. "I thought that scum Leonidas changed our sleeping quarters because he may have detected it."

Yuri shook her head. "No. It is unlikely even with his abilities he would detect it. And it was done in such a way that would not be easily discovered even by a skilled telepath. He has his own whore and he seems much more interested in her."

"Is it even still necessary Princess?" Thast asked. "She is my wife by our law."

Yuri nodded. "None of which she will care about if Dante and I don't condition her Thast." She answered. "You are very skilled Thast... but do not doubt for an instant that Carisia could kill you easily if she chose too."

"She... she has responded to me in our bed recently." Thast stated. "I had hoped to continue that."

Yuri shrugged. "Believe what you will Commander. We will continue to do what we have been doing until I see a need to stop it. Enjoy it Thast... there are not many who look like you and can say they are bedding a Princess of the High Coven that looks like Carisia."

Thast nodded his head with a smile. "There is that to consider." He said.

"Dante... the younger daughter of Isabella?" Yuri asked.

Dante nodded. "You and grandmother insisted I be subtle mother." He said. "During our hand to hand training I will insinuate a suggestion to her very mildly. It will get things started."

Yuri nodded. "Good. We..." Yuri stopped when the door to the center opened and Sadi came in with Eliani and Nyla. Sadi wore lightweight shoes and an extremely tight pair of white pants that highlighted the curve of her ass and her pussy. The matching white shirt was loosely worn and tied under her large breasts leaving her abdomen bare. Eliani and Nyla had changed into loose fitting fatigues and they were chatting and smiling together. They broke apart as Sadi made her way to the food counter after sharing cheek kisses with both Eliani and Nyla. She was carrying the data pad as she came in and they all watched her move to the food counter where the elf male handed her the mug of coffee and she began to read from the pad as she headed for the smaller table along the wall.

“I would certainly like to tag that.” One of the security guards next to Thast blurted. He was a former member of the High Coven’s elite Vlos D’dro division and had only been assigned to their group right before leaving to come here. He had no idea who Sadi was. “Wolf or no wolf.” Yuri turned to look at him and his face frowned. “Forgive me Princess.” (Blood of Life)

Yuri smiled. “Not at all.” She said. “Feel free to try. I don’t believe Prince Leonidas has set any rules against mingling our forces together and trying to become more than friendly.”

The man’s eyes grew a little wider. “Princess?” He asked even as Thast opened his mouth to speak.

Yuri held up her hand to Thast. “Hold that thought Commander.” She said quickly. She turned back to the Security officer. “What is your name?”

“Walonn Princess. Junior Commander. Formerly of the Vlos D’dro Division.” He stated proudly.

Yuri nodded. “Well Walonn... since it appears Prince Androcles intends for us to mingle amongst ourselves... please feel free to indulge your desires. I understand she is quite available and has been willing to entertain several of our men. She even propositioned Dante here, but he had more self control than to accept her offers.”

Dante nodded. “Yes... I have heard she is quite the zhas uss in bed. She likes to be touched and controlled is what I heard.” (wild one)

Walonn looked back and forth between them and then got slowly to his feet. “I believe I will then.” He said.

They watched him begin to walk over towards where Sadi was now sitting. Thast leaned closer. “Princess... that is...”

Yuri nodded. “Yes... Androcles’s wife. Walonn does not know that however.” She said. “And I want to see how strong she truly is without her husband here to protect her. Robert thought he knew her somehow... her name... and now we will see if she is more than just a simple woman.”

Sadi lifted her green eyes from the edge of the coffee mug as the shadow of the figure stopped in front of her table. She gazed at the High Coven soldier, his dark blond hair neatly groomed and his blue eyes bright. He was of medium height and appeared to be in excellent shape.

“May I sit down?” Walonn asked as he placed his glass of cloned blood on the table and took the chair opposite of her before she answered him.

Sadi’s eyes grew a little wider at this and she lowered her mug. Since becoming Andro’s Anome Sadi discovered she no longer cared for the looks of desire or interest she received from other men. It hadn’t bothered her before Andro had come back into her life, and many times she had returned the coy looks especially if they were attractive males, though discounting Malic Sadi had never had a desire for any of them. Her relationship with Malic she now knew was only the final part of the path that had brought Andro back into her life. She knew well that no Lycavorian would ever show these things to her now, for if they did not know who she was already they would smell Andro’s powerful Alpha scent all over her. Like his father, Andro’s alpha scent would easily overwhelm another male’s interest in seconds. She had only gotten looks from those vampires and elves who called Sparta home, and while they could not smell Andro’s scent upon her, they were respectful towards her nonetheless. They were certainly nothing like the lustful gaze she saw in this vampire’s eyes. She had always kept her Mindvoice shields very high, and since becoming Andro’s Anome, her abilities had only increased. She maintained her control and kept her shields level for she knew either Andro or Elynth would come if they detected even a small amount of fear or anxiety within her. Sadi was a Leonidas now, and just that simple word on the end of her first name imbued her with confidence and strength.

“It appears you have already decided for me.” Sadi spoke calmly.

“Junior Commander Walonn!” He spoke as he removed the data pad from her grasp and lifted her hand to drop a soft kiss on her knuckles. “And I must say... you are a light in this distance and dark place.”

Sadi pulled her hand back quickly and picked up the pad again. “Really. May I suggest then that you purchase some additional illumination globes Commander? The base commissary has a wide selection I’m sure.”

“Please... call me Walonn.” He said with a smile. “And your light is already chasing away the darkness.”

“Is it?” Sadi asked evenly. “Is there something you wanted Commander? If not... I am rather busy.”

“Please... I insist you call me Walonn.” He stated. He took the data pad from her once more causing Sadi’s eyes to narrow and turned it in his hand to look at it. “Electro-magnetic Flow Currents of Light Speed Drive Coil Operation?” He looked at her. “You are an Engineer? That’s incredible!”

Sadi snatched the pad from him again. “I’m a pilot actually.” She stated. “I will ask once more... is there something you wanted Commander?”

“You.” He spoke plainly.

Sadi’s eyes flew open in stunned surprise and she sat back in her chair. “Excuse me!” She gasped.

“I want you.” Walonn said again. “This place is lonely and since we are both unattached I thought we could keep each other company. I would truly love to get to know you much better. You are a ravishing young woman.”

“You are joking of course.” Sadi said.

“Not at all.” Walonn said. “I would take great pleasure in exploring every crevice of your body. And right at the peak... I would bite you and send you over the edge. You’d never want to leave me after that.”

“Do... do you make it a habit of coming up to strange woman you don’t know and acting like this.” Sadi demanded.

Walonn reached out and took her hand in his again, stroking the back of her knuckles. “I was told you were as lonely as I am, and that you like it for a man to take control.”

“Were you?” Sadi gasped her green eyes darting to where Yuri sat with an evil grin on her face. She felt Walon begin to slide his fingers up her arm and she turned back to him. “Walonn... that is your name?”

He smiled. “That sounds delightful rolling off your tongue.” He said.

Sadi’s smile held no mirth in it. “I’m sorry but do all pureblood males of your species think so much of your skills that you take it upon yourselves to fondle whatever woman strikes your fancy?”

“Only when we see something that we want.” Walonn spoke.

“I know many pureblood vampires Junior Commander Walonn and none of them act as arrogantly as you are acting right now.” Sadi hissed. “I have said this to another male of your species in recent days... and I grow tired of repeating myself. Remove your hand from me Commander... and do so immediately.”

Walonn looked at her confused now as he released her hand. “I was under the impression you were available.” He spoke quickly.

“Yes... I’m sure that is what you were told.” Sadi spoke. “However... that is not the case. And even if it was... you would not interest me in the least!” She picked up her data pad and got to her feet. “I prefer men Commander... not boys who do not have the sense to know when a woman is not in the least bit interested in them!” She spat before heading for the door.

Walonn surged out of his chair his eyes angry and he blurred in motion to catch Sadi and grab her arm. He spun her around quickly, causing her data pad and coffee to spill from her grasp. “Are all Lycavorian females like you elg’caress? Or do I just need to vith you until you scream?” He snarled. (bitch)

This action caused almost everyone in the center to stop what they were doing and come to their feet. The High Coven Riders were unsure of what to do, while Eliani and Nyla simply stood by the drink bar leaning against each other with smiles on their faces. Narice rose and began moving towards him even as Yuri remained in her seat with a small smile on her face. Carisia reached out quickly and took her hand causing Narice to turn back and look at her. She shook her head quickly.

Sadi’s face was impassive as she stared at him. “Do you have a death wish Commander?” Sadi spoke. “Because if you do not remove your hands from my body I will kill you where you stand and not blink in the least.”

Walonn looked at her and smiled. “You? Kill me?” He stated confidently. “I think perhaps you overestimate your skills.”

“I did warn you Commander. “She said coldly. “And yes... I can be an elg’caress at times. But only to those who try to take what only belongs to my mates!”

Sadi snapped downward with the knife edge of her hand. The blow landed directly on the bone of Walonn’s wrist and his eyes went wide as pain lanced up his arm and his hand went numb. He looked down grasping his arm with his opposite hand as it dropped like a limp noodle to the side of his body. When he looked back up he was staring into the jungle green wolf eyes of a very pissed off Sadi Leonidas. She bared her wolf fangs in a vicious snarl and whipped her arm out to strike him. Walonn felt his body lift from the floor and rocket across the expanse of the center before slamming painfully hard into the far wall. He struck the wall hard enough to leave an imprint in the steel structure before he slumped to the floor on his butt and in obvious pain from the tremendous impact.

Sadi looked down at her hand in stunned surprise at what she had just done her wolf eyes wide. She had felt the surge of Mindvoice power within her and did not know enough of what it was to stop it before it exploded away from her. Walonn actually was very lucky her Mindvoice ability manifested itself physically at this moment. Sadi's intent had been to hit the fool with a heel strike, not sending him flying across the recreation center. The heel strike would have killed him instantly.

Sadi quickly gained control of her emotions and turned to retrieve her pad and spilled mug from the floor. She needed to find Andro and figure out what had just happened. She turned and moved quickly towards the door as it began to open and she saw the familiar bulk of the man beginning to enter.

"I'm not done with you wolf bitch!" The voice screamed.

Sadi whirled around instantly to see Walonn blurring towards her with a feral look on his face of anger and hate. Her eyes went wide as he stopped blurring only a few feet from her and she saw the knife in his hand held ready to strike. The larger shadow stepped in front of her and Walonn was lifted into the air by his throat by the much larger man even as the knife he was bringing down imbedded itself into the upper arm of the muscular Spartan.

"Malic!" Eliani and Nyla screamed at once dropping their drinks and rushing forward.

Malic's six foot three frame towered over many of those in the room and his head and eyes turned from where the knife was sticking from his upper arm holding Walonn a good six inches off the floor. He had felt the blade penetrate even through his body armor, but it only sank in an inch or so because Walonn was thrown off balance by Malic's large hand grabbing him and lifting him into the air. His dark blue eyes changed then and his own wolf fangs burst forth as he squeezed Walonn's throat tighter. His Spartan and wolf instincts detected the movement and in a single blink the K12A KM was out of his thigh holster and leveled at the table where Thast and Yuri were coming to their feet. Eliani and Nyla skidded to stops at this motion.

"You may blur if you wish." Malic growled savagely. "You may even get to where I stand... but you will die when you do fat man! And then who will your precious Princess call on to help her before she falls! Sit back down!"

Yuri and Thast saw two more Spartans move forward from where they were standing, their hands on the butts of their K12s and Nehtes, and slowly they sank back into their chairs. Malic turned back to look at Walonn's face which was turning red as he struggled for air. Vampire he may have been, but even he needed to be able to breathe. He was trying to pry Malic's fingers from around his throat with little success.

"My Prince has told us we are here to forge new territory vampire." Malic spoke. "To begin something that may possibly extend into the future. Do not let it be said that I was the one to destroy that. At any other time or place I would spill your blood without pause for assaulting the Crown Princess of the Union vermin!" He barked viciously.

Walonn's eyes grew wide and he glanced at Sadi who stood beside Malic her eyes still wide at what had just taken place. "I... I didn't... I didn't know!" He gasped out raggedly.

"And that is the only reason you still live fool!" Malic snarled. He turned his head and looked at Sadi. "What would you have me do with him Sadi?" He asked in a much gentler tone.

Sadi's eyes smiled at him as reached up and place her hand on his shoulder and she nodded. "Let him go Malic." She said. "He has learned his lesson I should think."

Malic turned back to Walonn. "Be thankful she is more forgiving than me fool. Like my Prince... I would have carved you into small pieces for assaulting my mate. You are lucky he is not here... for he would do just that." Malic turned and looked at the knife in his upper arm. "Take your blade vampire... you did not even have enough strength to complete a killing blow so it should be easy for you to pull it out."

Walonn reached up slowly and wrapped his fingers around the handle of the blade. He stopped, his eyes widening when he felt the barrel of the K12 press tightly to his left temple. He cut his eyes and saw Nyla's face twisted into an angry glare, her cobalt blue vampire eyes very prominent.

"Do it very slowly bunjiro." Nyla hissed. "Malic may have spared you... but I will not if that blade moves a fraction in the wrong direction." (asshole)

Walonn pulled the knife from Malic's upper arm slowly, Eliani wincing at the squishy sound it made and the blood that flowed forth from the slice in the body armor. Malic lowered Walonn to the floor then, Nyla's K12 still pressed tightly to his head. As she pulled it back slowly Eliani stepped into the vicious punch to the side of his head and sent Walonn spinning away to fall to the floor.

"Forn nubous geldus-van!" She hissed savagely her eyes changed and her own fangs protruding. (You fucking piece of garbage)

Had Malic more experience with women, aside of his arrogant treatment of them through his life, he would have known that Eliani Leonidas and Nyla Sinthe had just staked their claim to him in front of every woman in the room. And done so in a very convincing manner.

Sadi slid her hand down on Malic's injured arm and stopped it just above the wound. "Malic?" She said softly.

Malic's eyes turned to look at her quickly. "I never said I was sorry for how I treated you Sadi. I am sorry... and know that in Androcles's absence I will always defend you."

Sadi smiled and leaned up to kiss his cheek. "I know Malic." She said. "Thank you."

"Go now... before he comes and more blood is spilled this day because of this idiot's fool actions towards you." Malic said.

"Too late for that." Andro's voice filled the room.

Every head in the place lifted or turned and saw Andro's bulk fill the doorway now. He had not yet changed out of his body armor, and the hilt's of his swords still protruded over his shoulders. His azure eyes were changed and the tips of his dual fangs protruded from under his lips. Against the background of the open door and the darkening night sky he made a very menacing figure.

"KertaGai?" He spoke looking at her first.

"Malic and I took care of it Andro." Sadi spoke quickly and confidently.

A small smile split his lips. "So I see." He said. "And a fine job it was." He stepped up next to Malic and looked at the wound in his upper arm. "Enomotarch?"

"A scratch Milord." Malic answered.

"Scratch my ass!" Eliani spat now. "Get your armor off... you're bleeding all over the anse floor!"

"Where is Bren?" Andro spoke turning his head.

"I'm here sire." The voice spoke from near the back of the center and they watched the older Durcunusaan Spartan step around the throng of men and women, lowering the 190A3 that was clutched in his hands tightly from its firing position. If not for Malic, Bren would have shot Walonn dead before he reached Sadi and everyone now knew that.

"Bren please take this idiot to the infirmary..." He turned to his sister who was helping Nyla pull Malic's upper body armor off. "Eliani?"

"Fuck him!" She spat as she was directing Malic to a nearby chair. "Have one of my medics treat his sorry ass! If he is still here in an hour I'll put him out of his misery myself."

Andro grinned. "Bren... see to his injuries and then put him on a transport out of here." Andro spoke.

"As your order Milord." Bren spoke coming forward to grab Walonn's arm and hauling him to his feet. "On your feet boy!"

"You are sending him away for a misunderstanding?" Yuri stated getting to her feet.

Andro took a deep breath and turned to face her. "You continue to test me Princess Yuri." He said. "And as with my father it is becoming tedious and irritating. He joined your party just before we left Sparta so he would not have had knowledge of who Sadi was. Yet you were here, and you know who Sadi is and still you allowed him to conduct himself in this manner. You probably even encouraged him to test my mate in some ridiculous fashion."

"Everyone else here knows who she is as well!" Yuri snapped.

Andro nodded. "Yes... this is true. But unlike you... it appears everyone else was busy studying what I asked you to study and not paying attention to your soldier making a fool of himself. You should be thankful Enomotarch Malic stepped in when he did, for if Sadi had not killed him for his actions, Commander Bren surely would have."

"Over a joke?" Dante spoke now.

Andro glared at him. "If you want to see how much I consider another man touching my mate a joke Dante... please feel free to try it at any time. I will send the pieces of your body back to your mother in a box!" Andro snapped viciously as he stepped closer to him. Sadi and every Lycavorian in the room feeling the trembling rage underneath his demeanor. "My people consider our mates and wives sacred ground young Dante Moran. I believe your people act in much the same fashion in most regards. Or does your father let other men grope your mother?"

"Certainly not!" Lucia spat from where she stood.

Andro nodded. "My patience is not infinite as others of your party have already learned." He said softly. He turned to look at Yuri. "Continue to press me Princess and you will find you do not like the reaction you get."

"You do not frighten me Androcles Leonidas!" Yuri snapped at him. "And I will not allow you to threaten my children!"

"Then by all means Princess, tell me you and they wish to depart and I will have your asses on the next transport out of SODRAG so fast it will make your head spin. And I will fly the transport myself!" Andro spoke.

"You know I won't do that!" Yuri said.

"Then if you can not control the security personnel you brought with you... I will do it for you." Andro spoke turning his head slightly. "Bren?"

"Milord?" Bren spoke holding onto Walonn's arm.

"As of tonight... the three remaining security personnel that Princess Yuri brought with her will take an active part in patrolling the western sector of the base." Andro spoke. "Have them assigned to perimeter guard with the roving patrol. They can move to the barracks there when we are done here. They will be able to return at their leisure when they are off duty."

Bren smiled. "As you order Milord."

"I forbid it!" Yuri barked.

"Then I will put them on a transport with this piece of sibfla and they can all go back tonight. They should arrive just in time for your mother to wonder upon waking to a new day why her security force was thrown out." Andro stated jerking his thumb at Walonn. "Remember my directives to you Princess. I run this base... you have no say over anything. What is it going to be?"

Yuri glared at Andro for a long moment. "Commander Thast... you will do as he says." She snapped.

"Princess... you..."

"Do it Thast!" She almost shouted.

Andro then turned back to Dante and smiled. "I'm happy to see you like humor Dante." He said grinning. "I see everyone else here seems to have their manuals with them and they were spending this down time studying them. All but you and your mother." Andro nodded as he stepped even closer to Dante. "That's good... and since you are so well prepared, I will let you and your mother step into the ring with my sister Zarah first when the hand-to-hand starts. It will be quite humorous for all of us when she drops you on your arrogant ass!"

"I don't think so!" Yuri spat.

"We'll see." Andro said with a nod. "We'll see." He turned and took Sadi's hand. "Come KertaGai... before you take it upon yourself to injure more of our guests."

No one moved until Andro had left with Sadi clinging to his arm and then they all began to return to what they were doing. Narice settled back onto the couch next to Carisia and saw her maya blue eyes were brighter now than she had ever seen them.

Narice smiled. [Be mindful of your actions with Thast gone Carisia. She will be watching you more now.]

Carisia looked at Narice and nodded slowly. [Narice... why... why have you told no one about what you felt on the airfield?]

Narice met her eyes evenly. [I haven't told anyone because you and I are discovering many things about ourselves that we did not know before.] Narice answered turning her eyes briefly to where Toria was sitting. [And so far I like what I have discovered. Now... we were talking about the calculations for variant wind patterns.]

Eliani directed Malic to the nearby chair. "Sit down Malic. You are too tall for your own good."

Malic looked at Eliani as her willow and peach scent filled his senses. "It is nothing." He spoke quickly, very nearly overwhelmed by her scent as he had been on her brother's ship. When combined with the softer scent of buttercups that he knew wafted from Nyla, Malic was very close to the edge. "And I need to return to my duties."

Nyla smiled as she took his arm and squeezed tightly. "I have found it is better not to argue with her Malic." She stated.

Eliani looked up into his blue eyes. "Park your ass Enomotarch before I have you removed from duty for the rest of the day." She said with a brilliant smile.

"You... you would do that? Over a scratch?" He gasped.

Eliani batted her fern green eyes at him. "You bet." She said. "You have an annoying habit of getting injured when I am around and if I have to appoint myself your protector I will. Now sit your tight mida down!" She said pushing him into the chair.

[Ussta che... do you think Andro will mind if we simply take him right here in front of everyone and let him possess us?] Nyla asked her.

[I'm trying very hard to not do that very thing regardless of what Andro says.] Eliani answered with a smile that Malic did not understand.

He looked at both of them oddly, feeling the Mindvoice tremors strongly but unable to determine what they were saying. They were making fun of him he could tell. Malic surged off the chair quickly surprising both of them. The simple touch of their hands upon his skin was maddening and he suddenly no longer cared that Nyla was a vampire or that Eliani was a princess. He was obviously not good enough for them and they both knew that and were making fun of him within Mindvoice.

"I will report to the infirmary and let them treat my scratch!" Malic barked harshly. "Thank you for the concern Princess."

Eliani and Nyla stood there shocked as he gathered his body armor and moved around them for the exit. They turned to look at each other.

"Ussta Che?" Nyla asked.

"What did we do?" Eliani finished her statement.

VANGRA 9 TACTICAL TRANSPORT EDGE OF THE TORANA CLUSTER

"...anything Tir'ut?" Esther asked her son as she scanned the two sensor screens in front of her.

They had arrived less than an hour before and had been scanning the entire area with their passive sensors. Tir'ut had parked them just outside the edge of the Torana Cluster, the fringes of the Gas Nebula just touching them.

Tir'ut shook his head. "No. They are still drifting towards the border. Minor power fluctuations... probably some sort of emergency power cells. Heavy damage from what I can tell. Hull breaches in three locations... they don't appear large and force fields are active, but the structural integrity of the ship is most definitely compromised."

"Their starboard nacelle is gone." Esther spoke. "That must be what hit the Gate as they were exiting."

Tir'ut nodded. "From the stress fractures I'm seeing they attempted to decelerate very quickly and exit the Gate corridor prematurely."

"How do you know that?" Esther spoke.

Tir'ut pointed the screen between their seats. "The micro cracks here and here." He answered. "It's indicative of a full power emergency deceleration. Exiting a Gate corridor while in transit is no small feat mother and whoever attempted this knew exactly what they were doing."

"An elf pilot?" She said looking at him.

Tir'ut nodded his head. "Only they have the skill and reflexes to do the calculations and manipulate the drive coils in the fashion needed to produce this sort of deceleration."

"Why would an elf pilot want out of a Gate corridor prematurely Tir'ut?" Esther asked.

Tir'ut shrugged his broad shoulders. "Any of number of reasons mother... none of them very good." He answered.

Esther turned in her seat. "Fash'ka? Ja'narie? Anything?"

Ja'narie turned from where she sat in the engineering seat monitoring the lateral sensor array. "Without a full power scan I can not determine if there is anyone alive on board." She spoke. "And that is not something we want to do this close to the Lycavorian border."

Esther nodded. "No it's not."

"Spectral scans of the ship Ja'narie?" Tir'ut asked turning his head.

"The gases in the Nebula prevent such a scan from being accurate Tir'ut." She answered. "Even here on the edge of the cloud as we are it is still affecting the instruments enough to garble our readings."

Fash'ka pointed to the monitor that held the three dimensional image of the ship. The red areas were hull breaches while the yellow areas were heavily damaged portions of the ship. His finger touched the small blue point that was blinking just behind the cockpit view window. "Ja'narie... what is this blinking light? What does it mean?"

"That is in the location of the engineering station on this class ship." She replied.

"How do you know that Ja'narie?" Esther asked.

"The schematics for this ship are easily available Esther. I discovered them in Lesede's library several years ago." She said. "They are generic in nature and certainly the Union has improved them over the years... propulsion, weapons and such, but for the most part the general layout has remained the same. There would be no need to change it."

"Can you tell me what this area is then?" Fash'ka asked.

Ja'narie nodded and touched her console quickly. "The cockpit engineering access panel. It allows the pilot and co-pilot to access most major engineering functions without having to go below into the belly of the ship."

"And the blinking light?" Fash'ka asked.

Ja'narie shook her head. "It indicates an unknown substance." She said. "I will try and run a flurospatial scan. It will at least give us a list of compounds from this portion of the ship." She adjusted her controls and several seconds later a small readout appeared. Ja'narie nodded her head. "All standard composites in coil material and LSD construction. Ummm... what is this?"

"What?" Fash'ka asked.

"JB-19." Ja'narie said.

Tir'ut's head snapped around from his seat, Esther looking at him oddly because of his reaction. "Fash'ka?" He snapped.

"Ja'narie are you sure?" Fash'ka asked gently placing his hand on her shoulder.

Ja'narie nodded as she looked up at him. "Yes... the flurospatial scan is very precise." She answered. "What is this JB-19 compound Fash'ka?"

Fash'ka turned and looked at his younger brother. "I will power the missile tubes and plasma arrays!" He said quickly turning to leave the cockpit.

"Fash'ka wait!" Esther barked but he didn't stop. She turned back to Tir'ut. "Tir'ut... what is going on?"

"JB-19 is an explosive compound mother." He answered her. "Most often used in fused explosive charges. If placed over the main LSD coil... upon exiting a Jump Gate it will heat to six thousand degrees and trigger the JB-19. The resulting explosion will fracture the LSD coil and possibly caused a chain reaction destroying the entire ship or at the very least crippling it extensively."

"What are you saying?" Esther said. "This was no accident?"

Tir'ut shook his head. "That is exactly what I am saying. They must have discovered the charge just before exiting the Gate. It is the only reason they would have tried to decelerate so quickly. They knew what it was and what it would do."

"Then why didn't the ship explode like you say Tir'ut?" Ja'narie asked from her station turning her chair to face them.

"Whoever was flying this ship had decelerated enough by the time they exited to cause a minor variance in their trajectory. It can't be helped with the power they directed to the deceleration process. When they exited... they impacted the Gate ring and tore the Starboard nacelle free. The chain reaction would have stopped with the nacelle gone.”

“That’s what caused the Gate to explode?” Esther asked.

Tir’ut nodded. “The combined JB-19 compound and the nacelle’s own Phased Plasma Converters would have caused an explosion equal to a full missile volley from a REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought. It obliterated the Gate completely.”

“Tir’ut how do you know this?” Esther asked.

Tir’ut met his mother’s eyes. “It is how Fash’ka and I rid our tribe of the scum who father exiled four years ago.” He answered.

“Dek’za and his ilk?” Esther asked. “They died in a Gate...” Her eyes grew wide. “They died in a Gate explosion when they jumped back into High Coven space!”

Tir’ut nodded slowly. “Father knew they would return to the High Coven and ask to be reinstated. He could not allow them to reveal where we had gone.”

“Tir’ut... how many men have you killed?” Ja’narie asked suddenly surprising them with the directness of the question.

Tir’ut looked at her from his seat. “It is not important now.” He spoke.

“It is to me xsa o!” Esther snapped glaring at him. “Answer her question!” (damn it)

Tir’ut looked at his mother then. “Twenty-three.” He replied softly.

“Twenty-three?” Esther gasped. “Tir’ut... Dek’za... he had only twelve who went with him.”

Tir’ut nodded slowly. “Yes. I know.”

“Your father’s directive?” Esther said. “No violence when we leave Kranek for any reason!”

“You and father are more alike than you know mother. You strive for the same thing in different ways.” Tir’ut spoke. “Like you... he will never allow anything or anyone to harm you or our tribe. There have been times when it was necessary however to use means that all of us find distasteful. We are just better at it than those who would do us harm. And it was only after he exhausted all other means.”

Esther took a deep breath and closed her eyes nodding her head. “I... I believe part of me has known. And I understand why your father did these things. He just should have told me Tir’ut.”

The soft alarm began chirping and Tir’ut turned his head to his sensors. “Contacts!” He barked. “Two of them! Bearing six three four one point three!”

“Ja’narie!” Esther barked her eyes springing back open.

Ja’narie turned back to her station and adjusted her console controls. “I have them! Two Bontawillian assault pods! They are tracking the TYPE III!”

“Assault pods? Out here?” Esther snapped.

Tir’ut looked at her quickly. “Mother... didn’t Lesede tell us this Gareld had an older Bontawillian Frigate.”

Her head turned instantly. “Ja’narie! Three second pulse on the lateral array!” Esther snapped. “Just fast enough to tell us what is out here and not reveal ourselves!”

“Pulsing!” Ja’narie barked as Fash’ka re-entered the cockpit. “New contact! Bearing five eight four three point two. It’s a Bontawillian Low Gravity Assault Frigate!”

Esther turned back and looked out the view window. “Gareld!” She hissed.

Tir’ut nodded. “And he’s going after the TYPE II.”

NORMYA’S TYPE II

Normya rested on her back in the two meter wide conduit, several circuit boards and wiring spread across her chest. Her head wound had stopped bleeding quickly enough due to her elven and wolf metabolism and now it just left a dried blood stain in her normally silky platinum colored hair. She had pulled her flight suit down to her waist and tied it tightly and now all she wore was the dark gray tank top that was partially soaked with sweat and pressing quite seductively to her firm breasts. Since Normya, like her five mothers, hardly ever wore undergarments, her nipples were hard nubs due to the chilly air in the conduit as well as the fever still coursing through her body. They protruded proudly against her damp shirt.

Normya held the circuit board in one hand and was plugging the bare ends of cables into the many different slots on the board. With a deep breath she dropped the board to her chest.

“Toral... I’ve bypassed life support and main engine auxiliary propulsion control through conduits G3 and G6, bypassing G4 and G7.” She stated.

“Normya... forgive me... but we no longer have main engines. Or did you miss the fact the starboard nacelle is gone.” Toral’s voice replied with a chuckle. “I swear woman... that fever of yours is out of control.”

“We can still use the auxiliary control units to power sensors and computers you riad aulved!” She barked.

“I suppose that is true. Do I dare ask how you managed to override the safety protocols?” Toral said.

“Ah... no.” She answered. “I didn’t exactly override them. I simply tore them out.”

“Yes... typical daughter of King Leonidas response. If it doesn’t work... break it some more.” Toral said with a laugh. “What about sublight control?”

“I routed that through thruster access valve nine delta.” Normya replied. She heard Toral laughing in her ear implant and she grinned. “What?”

“I can’t wait to see the engineering team that enters this ship when we return.” He said. “They will not believe the modifications we have done. I have rerouted all the power couplings from the starboard nacelle into the sublight manifold through sections three and seven. I also severed the connections from both aft Hadron Reflector Arrays and transferred them to the forward ones using...”

“Using what?” Normya asked.

“Using isolinear circuitry I borrowed from the starboard Plasma turret.” Toral finished sheepishly.

“You are running four million terra watts through the isolinear circuitry?” She gasped. “What did you coat the interior of the injector couplings with?”

“You don’t want to know.” Toral replied. “It should work well enough. As long as we do not try to break any speed records. I think that does it Normya... let’s see if our more than unusual field modifications work shall we?”

Normya turned and looked at the control panel next to her. “Here goes nothing.” She said.

“Look at it this way. If it doesn’t work... we can always find something more pleasurable to entertain ourselves until we die.” Toral spoke. “At the very least... it will cure the fever for you.”

“Toral... you are such a pervert!” Normya blurted as she stabbed her finger down on the panel.

The lighting in the TYPE II surged strongly and Normya felt the steady vibration of the sublight manifold start back up as the dead ship came back to life. The repair conduit she was in began to power up completely and she banged her fists against the interior of the conduit.

“Yes!” Normya screamed as she began to scramble back towards the cockpit. It took her only a minute to reach the end of the conduit and she was thrusting herself out of the opening just as Toral’s legs were clearing the opening of the conduit on the opposite side of the cockpit.

As he stood up completely Normya leaped into his arms and hugged him tightly. Toral grinned as he hugged her back.

“Does this mean we are an item now?” He asked with a laugh.

Normya kissed his cheek and smiled at him her emerald green eyes bright. “Don’t ever give up Toral.” She told him. “You never know what might happen.”

“Well... since you put it that way... shall we get this hunk of junk turned around and find out what we still have power too?” He spoke with a large grin.

Normya nodded and he released her as they moved towards their seats. She practically jumped into her seat just as they heard the metallic clanking above and to their rear. They both turned their heads to the sound.

“What was that?” Normya asked.

Toral shook his head. “We are out of the DBZ. There shouldn’t be anything banging against our hull. Or what’s left of it anyway.” He moved to the entrance to the cockpit and looked out past the passenger level peering into the far rear of the TYPE II. He saw several sparks shoot from the ceiling as his eyes past over that location and they darted back as the sparks became more pronounced. His eyes grew wide and he turned back to her. “Normya... we’re being boarded!” He gasped.

“What?” She exclaimed.

“Check the aft cameras! Someone is cutting through the outer hull above the dragon section!” Toral barked as he went to the side of the cockpit and punched in a code on the wall. The small panel slid down to reveal three K12 KMs and three Nehtes. He quickly pulled two of each from the panel and turned back to her.

“Toral! There’s some sort of assault pod attached to the hull!” She almost shouted. She turned back to look at him. “Pirates?”

“They wouldn’t dare cross the border. THE DBZ sensors would detect it right away!” He stated as he charged his K12. “Check our position! Hurry!”

Normya turned back to her controls, her hands flying across the three consoles. Toral heard her gasp and he looked at her. “What?”

“Toral... we crossed the border thirteen minutes ago!” She stated taking the weapons he held out to her and getting to her feet.

“Nubou!” Toral cursed. “They must have been waiting for us to drift across the border!” He hissed moving to the cockpit door. “Could you tell what kind of pod it was?”

Normya shook her head. “Not clearly. One of the cameras is gone. It looked like a Bontawillian assault pod though.”

“Begin bringing the sublights online Normya.” He said. “I will cover...”

They both turned as the sparks became more pronounced and suddenly a three meter wide section of the top of the ship fell inward and slammed onto the deck below with a thunderous crash. They watched as half a dozen Kochab and Evolli pirates began dropping in through the hole in their ship.

“Too late!” Normya shouted bringing up her K12.

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE

“What?” Gareld demanded as he came to his feet.

“Sensors are detecting increasing power levels from the TYPE III!” Sandur spoke as he turned from his console. “Penktol reports both pilots are still very much alive!”

“Where is the second assault pod?” Gareld asked.

“They are attaching to the lower hull as we speak!”

“Tell them to hurry up! And I want the elf female alive!” He turned to his helmsman. “Bring us out of the nebula! Close to within five thousand kilometers of the TYPE II and prepare a tractor beam!”

VANGRA 9 TT

“...power!” Ja’narie exclaimed. “I’m reading increasing power levels on the TYPE II Esther! The sublight drive is powering up!”

Esther turned to Tir’ut her eyes wide. “They survived!” She gasped.

“They must have been working on repairing the ship this whole time!” Fash’ka spoke as he came up between their seats.

“Never underestimate the skills of an elf brother.” Tir’ut spoke.

“Esther! Gareld’s assault pods have attached. Sensors are detecting the signature of Kochab burn weapons and Kinetic Magnums!” Ja’narie announced.

Tir’ut turned when the soft chirping began again. “Mother... Gareld’s ship is moving out of the edge of the nebula! They are on a direct course to the TYPE III!”

“Weapons on the Bontawillian Frigate?” She asked quickly.

“Forward and aft plasma arrays!” Tir’ut answered. “Four missile tubes aligned on top facing forward! They can not pivot them!”

“Underneath?” Esther asked.

Tir’ut shook his head. “Nothing!”

Esther turned to look at her sons. One of her blood who was half her blood and half Cha'talla's blood. And one that had accepted her completely as his mother though no blood relation existed between them. "Consensus?" She asked.

"We should not get involved." Tir'ut spoke quickly.

"I agree." Fash'ka spoke. "Though it is an older frigate... it still has us outgunned mother. I would like to help... truly I would. For the very reasons you want to help. If we had the G9s here I would not hesitate... but..."

Esther nodded her head. "I know." She spoke softly.

Ja'narie's head jerked up as she heard the voice. "Quiet!" She demanded. "I'm detecting a communications!"

"Source?" Esther asked.

Ja'narie looked at her instruments and then turned to look at her eyes wide. "The TYPE II Esther."

"Put it on speakers!" Esther snapped. "Quickly!"

Ja'narie stabbed her console and the sounds of weapons fire filled the cockpit of the VANGRA 9 causing all of them to wince.

"...Union TYPE II DT!" The female voice shouted. "Our ship was sabotaged and we struck Jump Gate 24 upon exit! We have restored sublight engines and minor systems but we are under attack by a combined Kochab and Evolli boarding party! There is a Bontawillian Frigate closing on us as well! Any Union ship, please respond!" The voice stopped and they heard a male voice shouting in the background. "I say again this is Princess Normya Leonidas! I am piloting a Union TYPE II DT! We are being boarded by..." There was a heavy barrage of weapons fire and then the communications stopped.

"Princess Leonidas!" Tir'ut gasped. "The half elf daughter!"

Fash'ka looked at Esther his eyes wide. "This was no random act of sabotage mother!" He spoke. "They were targeting her all along."

"Gareld!" Esther said. "He said they were waiting for a larger profit."

"Targeting the daughter of King Leonidas's first Elven Queen is the surest way to sign your own death warrant mother." Tir'ut spoke. "Is Gareld that big of a fool?"

"It would appear so." Esther said.

"Did you hear the strength in her voice even fighting as she was?" Ja'narie spoke with a tinge of awe in her voice.

Tir'ut looked at her. "Yes." He spoke.

"Ja'narie... did Gareld pick up her transmission?" Esther asked.

"Unlikely... I don't think she realized she was broadcasting on a low band frequency." Ja'narie replied. "Range is only a few kilometers. We are much closer to her position than Gareld's ship."

"There's no way we can get to her before Gareld locks on with a tractor beam." Fash'ka spoke. "And even with her sublights operational... there is too much structural damage for her to outrun Gareld."

Tir'ut's eyes widened. "She doesn't have to outrun him. At least not for more than six minutes."

"What do you mean Tir'ut?" Esther asked.

"Fash'ka... our first hunt." Tir'ut said. "Remember where you took me brother?"

Fash'ka nodded. "Of course... Yocetu. It was..." Fash'ka matched his younger brother's expression. "Of course! All she would need to do is get inside the Cluster and make straight for Yocetu! We can pick them up there!"

Esther looked at them. "How do you propose we give her these six minutes?" She questioned. "You have said yourself we can not match Gareld's ship in firepower."

Fash'ka smiled. "That is where what you have taught us comes in mother." Fash'ka spoke with a smile leaning over to kiss her cheek. "Tir'ut! Tube four! I will make the modifications! Stand ready!" He spoke as he moved out of the cockpit once more.

Esther looked at Tir'ut. "Would you care to fill your mother in on what you and your brother are planning?"

Tir'ut smiled as he worked the controls on his console. "An Ionized Concussion Missile." He stated. "The Bontawillian frigate is an older model mother and it has no armaments underneath. We will sneak in; fire an ICM missile into its shields and it will short out every system on the ship. This model ship does not have the compensators needed to absorb the ion surge.”

“Of course!” Ja’narie said. “It will take them at least six minutes before they can restore function to their sensors and drive units.” Ja’narie smiled brightly. “Oh... Matriarch Esther... I am going to enjoy becoming Fash’ka’s wife. Events are never dull around your family.”

Esther looked at her and laughed. “Well... it will be an honor to have you Ja’narie.” She said. “If we live through this that is.”

Tir’ut looked at her. “No problem mother.” He said confidently.

“I was speaking about the wrath of your father when he discovers we disobeyed him.” Esther said.

Tir’ut looked at her. “Oh.” He said softly. “There is that to consider.”

“Yes.” Esther said.

“We can not do anything and just watch Gareld take her mother.” Tir’ut said.

“Something tells me that action does not appeal to you my son.” Esther spoke softly looking at him intently.

“Ja’narie was right mother.” Tir’ut said meeting her eyes. “There was strength in her voice even facing down the enemy as she was. She does not deserve to fall into the hands of someone like Gareld. Not with that spirit.”

Esther nodded. “I agree.” She said immediately. “I will deal with your father. Just make sure we are alive to do such a thing.”

TYPE II

Toral sealed the cockpit door behind him with a grimace. “There are still five out there Normya!” He hissed turning to see her jumping back into her seat. “What are you doing?”

“I’m going to vent the hold!” She snapped.

“Normya that could very well undo all the repairs we have done!” Toral gasped.

“Would you rather let them keep shooting at us and do it?” Normya barked. “Those are Kochab and Evolli out there Toral. I have no desire to fall into their hands!”

Toral nodded after only a moment. “Point taken.” He said in reply moving to his own seat. “I will try to reinforce the structural field as much as possible to compensate for the vacuum and decompression!”

Normya reached out and placed her hand over the panel as she looked at him. “Ready?”

Toral nodded. “Do it!”

Normya slammed her hand down on the panel and the rush of air was loud enough even within the cockpit as the cold vacuum of space thundered through the rear section of the TYPE II.

Nothing survived.

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE

“Massive decompression in the rear compartment!” Sandur shouted as he whirled around. “The elf bitch just vented our men into space!”

Gareld snarled at this information and turned. “How soon before we are in tractor range!” He screamed.

“Ninety seconds!”

“Prepare to engage the tractor beam and ready a Harpoon Boarding Grapppler! Pump the ship full of enough Golian Gas so that when that half elf whore wakes up she is being gang banged!” Gareld snapped. “And while we are fucking her... she can watch us kill her elf co-pilot!”

“The Kavalians?” Sandur asked.

“They have already paid for her!” Gareld snapped. “They did not care what condition she was in!”

TYPE II

“Forty-five seconds until sublights are online!” Toral announced. “Structural integrity is holding at fifty-seven percent!”

“I’m tracking a Bontawillian Low Gravity Frigate on approach!” Normya spat loudly. “No markings or IFF transponder! It’s most definitely not friendly!”

“Yes... I believed we determined that when they boarded our ship with their weapons blazing.” Toral barked.

“Damn!” Normya swore.

Toral’s head whipped around to look at her. “What?”

“I tried to get off a message!” She exclaimed. “The transmitter must be damaged! It only broadcast at short range and low freq!”

“That is the least of our concerns at the moment!” Toral snapped. “The residual Polarion particles from the destroyed gate will undoubtedly bring any ship in the area that can detect them... but they will also effectively mask our presence as well!”

“Oh you are just full of good news!” Normya barked.

“We are in The Wilds Normya.” Toral spoke. “We must get back across the border and to the safety of the DBZ.”

Normya nodded. “I know!”

“We can’t outrun the frigate Normya! Not in our current condition!” Toral said.

“Then we’ll have to out fly them!” Normya snapped.

Toral nodded. “If we first do not come apart at the bulkhead seams.” He stated.

“Is there any way to knock those pods off of our hull?” Normya asked. “We...”

“Union TYPE II... this is VANGRA 9 Limian Tactical Transport! Respond immediately to this message!” The female voice burst over their internal speakers.

Normya and Toral looked at each other. “The Frigate?” She asked.

Toral shrugged as his eyes scanned their sensors. “I’m not detecting any other ships in the area.”

“Daughter of King Leonidas... if you wish to survive you must respond to this message! We are attempting to help you but we will need to coordinate our actions! Respond or we will have choice but to leave you to your fate!”

Normya made a snap decision and stabbed her finger down on her panel. A decision that would forever change her life into the future. “Who is this?” She demanded.

“Who we are does not matter at the moment!” The female voice answered. “You must be aware of the Bontawillian Frigate closing on your position. It is under the command of a rather insidious pureblood vampire who fancies himself quite the leader. His name is Gareld. We have determined roughly what took place up until this point and...”

“How do you know that?” Normya snapped.

“Because we are not stupid!” The male voice snapped. “Now shut up and listen woman!”

Normya turned to Toral as she heard the woman’s voice again. “Tir’ut... not now!” There was a pause and then she continued. “We are trailing along just inside the edge of the Torana Cluster slightly behind Gareld’s ship. Our sensors indicate you are less than thirty seconds from sublight power being restored. We will fire an Ionized Concussion Missile at the frigate the moment your engines come back online. It will render the frigate unable to act for several minutes. When we do this... you must follow us into the Cluster!”

“Into the cluster!” Normya exclaimed. “Why can’t I just turn back for the border?”

“The disruption will only last for several minutes Normya Leonidas.” The woman’s voice spoke again. She had a slight accent to her tone, but surprisingly it was very friendly. “When his systems are restored he will catch you before you reach your border. This is your only chance. You do not want to be captured by this man Normya Leonidas. Trust me... I was in his clutches once. He will not be in a very receiving mood now, especially not after you have vented his fool accomplices into space. You must trust me.”

“I will not be able to maneuver very well.” Normya stated. “The pods will drag me down and I can’t push my ship too hard. The repairs we made are not exactly foolproof.”

“We will cover for you Normya. My son is an excellent pilot and we know this area of space quite well.” The woman’s voice answered. “But you must do exactly what we say. I do not wish to harm you child... and we are taking a great risk in helping you to begin with.”

“Ten seconds Normya!” Toral announced.

“Alright!” Normya stated quickly.

“Good! When the missile explodes you will see us break for the cluster! Follow us in! And keep this channel open.”

Normya looked at Toral who nodded his head, his hand poised over the engine controls. “We’re ready.”

“Tir’ut break now!” The woman’s voice barked.

They looked out of their main view window and could see the huge bulk of the frigate closing in on them. Toral’s elf eyes picked it up first. “There! Low port quarter!”

Normya saw it then, the sleek lines of the Limian Tactical Transport as it came tearing out of the cluster in a burst of speed Normya knew it should not have had. They watched as it swept gracefully under the long rear extension of the frigate and the missile launcher extended from the top of the ship.

“Interesting!” Toral spoke. “I bet the Limians never thought of that.”

The VANGRA 9 fired one missile which streaked away and locked immediately on the frigate. The explosion was not bright or brilliant in color, but they both saw the sparkling of ionized particles ripple along the length of the ship and the result was almost instantaneous. The frigate began to roll to the right and all electrical power began to flicker and go out.

“Now child!” The woman’s voice erupted from the speakers, just as they saw the VANGRA 9 execute a gut rolling turn and head back into the Cluster.

“Toral! Full power to the sublights!” Normya shouted.

Toral was way ahead of her as his hand came down on the panel. “We have full power!”

Normya shoved her throttles to full and the TYPE II leaped forward on its own power.

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE

“Emergency lights!” Gareld screamed. “What the hell was that?”

“Ionized Concussion Missile!” Sandur barked. “It struck the aft extension and spread across the shield grid! We’ve lost main power!”

“Get it back!” Gareld barked as he grabbed the side of the console.

“It will take at least six minutes for the surge to pass!” Sandur yelled. “Until then... all we have is emergency power!”

“Where did it come from? How did it penetrate our shields?”

“Where it came from is unknown!” Sandur replied as he came up next to him. “At least until we get main power back! This is an older model ship! We only have standard grid shields Gareld. It used our own grid generators to travel and then shorted them out along with everything else.”

“Damn!” Gareld snapped.

EARTH SODRAG

Toria walked out of her sleeping room into the main room of the bungalow with her nose buried in the data pad. The day had passed far too fast for her with the wealth of information that Arrarn Leonidas and Sadi had given to her and the other pilots. The capabilities of the STRIKER DT were amazing to her trained pilot’s eye. And she had no reason to doubt whether the ship would actually do what Arrarn told them it would do. He had covered navigation in this day’s training and then had taken them up in his personal DT. Toria and the others had been astonished at how nimble the seventy-two meter long ship was. Part of that was the power and reliability of the engines installed on the ship they knew, but mainly it was the skill and grace of Arrarn

Leonidas's touch upon the controls and the almost seamless way Sadi seemed to know just when to adjust power levels to compensate for some maneuver he was attempting.

They had taken turns sitting with them in the cockpit and during her time there she admired how he moved in his pilot's seat. No wasteful motions in the least, his hands dancing across his controls with the grace of a surgeon. As Toria walked towards the bathroom portion of the bungalow she found her mind wondering what his hands would feel like caressing her body in the same fashion as he flew his ship. Such gentle and graceful precision was not something she had ever experienced in a bed partner and she wondered if he was as skilled a lover as he was a pilot. These were the thoughts that were going through her mind, quite the opposite of what she as an intelligence officer should have been thinking. It was these thoughts that were racing through her mind and therefore she did not notice that the shower in the large combined bathroom was just turning off. She did however notice the sliding door open and she came to an abrupt halt when Narice stepped from the shower in all her glorious nakedness. Toria gasped softly causing Narice to look up in stunned surprise, her own eyes going wide as well.

"Toria!" Narice hissed softly.

"Narice! Oh... I'm..." Toria stammered as she watched Narice snatch the large towel from the rack and wrap it around her body quickly. "I'm so sorry... I wasn't paying attention!" Toria wore only the simple shirt over her own form and she felt a decidedly delicious tingle caress her skin at the picture of Narice's incredibly firm and succulent body and her nipples hardened almost immediately. She turned quickly to face away from her and get her suddenly racing heart under control. "Forgive... forgive me Princess. I was distracted reading this manual and..."

Narice stared at Toria's back for a long moment and found herself admiring the way her glossy rust colored red hair fell down her back. The simple light blue shirt fell only to just below her ass, leaving her long tanned legs in plain sight as well as her extraordinarily shaped ass. After their sizzling kiss the other morning and waking up with Toria's hands on her so intimately, Narice found those feelings and vibrations were something that she could not push to the back of her mind. They were something she wanted to experience so much more of.

"Toria?" She spoke in almost a whisper as she looked down. "I..." Narice lifted her head and saw Toria Dellion in front of her only millimeters away. Her eyes grew wide and she opened her mouth to speak when Toria's full lips descended upon hers and kissed her.

Narice then did something she had never done in her young life and she surrendered to the passion that was raging through her. She groaned loudly as Toria's hands pulled her body tightly against hers and her sweet tasting tongue plunged between her soft lips. She felt Toria pull her tight and then she was blurring, pulling Narice along with her. The main room flashed by in an instant and then they were on Toria's bed, the vibrations from their bodies flopping onto the soft mattress the only movement as Toria deepened her kiss and began to frantically pull at the towel covering Narice's body.

Their kiss broke apart as Toria pulled open the towel and pushed the ends to the side Narice gasping for air as fire raged throughout her body. Toria's knee was pressed firmly between her thighs and gently but very resolutely stimulating the smooth sensitive skin of her pussy. Toria stared down into her face as she brought her hand up to caress Narice's large firm breasts, her long fingers delicately tracing the outside of her nipples, turning them into hardened nubs screaming for attention.

"Tor... Toria..." Narice gasped as her body reacted quite enthusiastically to Toria's manipulations.

Toria lowered her lips to Narice's neck, her soft rust colored red hair brushing against Narice's shoulder. "I... I am going to feast on you Narice." Toria gasped as she brought her lips to Narice's ear and used her tongue to trace her ear lobe.

Narice's hands clamped onto Toria's incredible ass and she pulled her tighter in a rush of sexual want and need. "Oh... ohhhh... yes!" Narice gasped.

Toria dropped her head to the hollow of Narice's throat and set about her task with superior determination and drive. Her lips danced across Narice's throat and down between the valley of her large breasts. She brought her hands up to either side of each wonderfully shaped globe and let them fill the palms of her hands. She dragged her tongue along the inside of Narice's left breast, leaving a wet trail up the firm tanned skin until it tickled Narice's erect nipple. She heard her gasp as her warm lips engulfed the nub and she suckled hard, battering the nipple with her tongue. Toria repeated the same process with her right breasts, torturing Narice by pressing her knee tightly against her moist slit. As she sucked hard on her right nipple she felt Narice's hips undulate, effectively rubbing her pussy against Toria's leg firmly and drawing an even louder gasp of delight.

Toria continued her discovery, leaving Narice's nipples to be teased and twisted and rubbed by her hands and fingers as her head dipped lower. Once again her warm tongue left a trail of saliva down Narice's skin, feeling her vampire princess's chest heaving with newly revealed passion and desire. She delved deeply into the dark crevice of Narice's belly button before moving even lower, shifting her body downward on the bed as she neared the prize she so wanted to taste. She continued to tantalize Narice's nipples, rolling them between her finger tips. Her own supple figure was aflame with a fervor and intensity she had never felt before, and it was surging through her like a wave, causing her own pussy to become incredibly wet and aroused. As she planted soft kisses and licks across Narice's lower abdomen she could smell the heat of Narice's excitement and barely able to control herself she sank lower still, gently pushing Narice's thighs apart. As her sky blue eyes came to rest on what she so craved, Toria felt a tiny orgasm course through her and she squeezed Narice's nipples harder, causing her to whimper out in a mixture of pain and newborn pleasure. She stared at the dark folds of Narice's pussy, already soaked with her juices and open to her like the wings of a butterfly. She could see Narice's powerfully sculpted abdomen heaving in anticipation of what was to come. Toria dropped her right hand from Narice's breast, drawing the backs of her nails slowly across her beautifully tanned skin, now glistening with a fine sheen of sweat. She moved her lips closer to Narice's center while drawing her finger down along the outer labia and hearing Narice cry out softly at the feather like caress.

Narice felt Toria slowly draw her finger across her swollen pussy lips and she almost lost all control right then. The sensations ripping through her were unlike anything she had ever felt and she found she welcomed them completely. Her hands came up from gripping the bed sheets in her fist to clamp onto Toria's hand that still tortured her nipple with pinches and rolls. How could she be feeling these things? How could another woman make her experience such incredible pleasure? Narice lifted her head, her black hair damp from the shower and newly formed sweat and her wide dark eyes saw Toria's face snuggled between her thighs. So close... so very close to her pussy. This wasn't possible. It couldn't be possible.

"Toria... Toria..." Narice rasped out... her eyes wide and her heart hammering in her chest. "Toria we..."

Narice's eyes flew open at the almost electric feeling of Toria's wonderfully talented tongue as it touched the bottom of her pussy and dragged gloriously upward, bathing her slit in saliva. Her head fell back onto the bed, her back arching and causing her hips to push tighter against Toria's beautiful face. Her mouth opened in a breathless scream as Toria's hands grabbed her firm tight ass and she plunged that amazing tongue as deeply into her spasming pussy as she could. The orgasm shattered whatever resistance still remained in Narice's clouded mind and she reached down to grasp Toria's head firmly. Her head tossed from side to side as the immense pleasure swept across her like some unseen blanket and stars exploded into her eyes. She felt Toria's soft lips fasten completely over her clenching pussy and accept all that Narice offered her. The explosions came almost on top of each other, each one causing her hips to convulse as more of her come flooded into Toria's mouth. And then her eyes flew open at the dual pin pricks of pain as Toria's fangs sank into her spasming flesh just above her clit. Pain that just as quickly was washed away by the devastating and uncontrollable waves of churning rapturous bliss.

And in the midst of the first will crushing orgasm of her young life, Narice, Princess of the Vampire High Coven screamed out her passion for Toria Dellion and what she was making her feel.

How could her mother not wish this?

How could she not wish to experience this incredible, unexplainable pleasure?

How could she prefer that fool Tesand over the delicious creature lying before her now?

These were the thoughts that raced through her mind as Narice withdrew her vampiric fangs from the flesh just above Toria's still painfully erect clit. Her face was saturated with Toria's sweet tasting come as she lovingly drew her tongue across the two puncture marks closing them instantly, and then proceeding to lap away at the remnants of Toria's last body tingling orgasm.

Toria's bed was nothing more than a mass of soaked sheets now. Sheets soaked in the combined juices and sweat of both women. The perfectly trimmed line of curly rust colored red hair above Toria's clit had long been soaked through with Narice's saliva and Toria's come that had escaped her eager lips. Twice more Toria had feasted on her still throbbing pussy and when she had Narice teetering at the edge, she would then send her plummeting over. And at the very peak of those muscle stretching orgasms that followed, Toria would bite her and feed on her blood intensifying the orgasms Narice experienced by ten fold. Her body still hummed with the vibrations of what Toria had made her feel, what Narice wanted to feel over and over. And it made her wonder if Arrarn Leonidas could make her feel these things as well.

She had not the first inkling of what to do when she lowered herself quite willingly in between Toria's beautiful soft thighs. All she knew was that she wanted to taste her and return the pleasure Toria had given so willingly. She had explored Toria's pussy with her lips and tongue and fingers, all the while watching as she twisted, threshed and writhed in obvious delight. Narice had been surprised at the taste and texture of her come, and she had drunk it down like a starved kitten. She had explored Toria's body in much the same fashion as her red haired lover had done with her.

Narice lifted her face between Toria's thighs as that word resounded in her mind.

Lover.

She watched Toria's large breasts rise and fall evenly with her breaths as she fought to regain control of her flush and stimulated body. Her gorgeous blue eyes were fluttering open and closed as if she was trying to focus. Narice let her own cobalt blue vampire eyes gaze upon Toria's body, from her long leanly muscular legs to her still quivering but flat abdomen. They had shared blood in a way and moment reserved for those purebloods committed to each other in every way. In a way that meant they would go into the future together. And even as these thoughts rushed through her mind, she still saw Arrarn Leonidas together with both of them. Their bodies entwined around his powerful form. Incredibly this picture in her mind did not affect her in the way she thought it would. It was almost as if events were drawing them together somehow, pushing them collectively down the same path. And Narice found herself liking the way the path was leading.

And it had begun with this woman whose bed she shared.

Narice place a last lingering kiss on Toria's still swollen pussy, delicately drawing her tongue up and sucking in whatever drops of her delicious come remained. She was tired now, her body stretched and sore in a supremely divine fashion. She shifted on the bed and began her journey back up Toria's body, stopping often to place lingering kisses on parts of her flesh, to include her equally large and firm breasts. Soon she rested her lithe frame on top of Toria's, their breasts crushed against each others and Narice's thigh resting gently against the heat of Toria's pussy. Her eyes were still closed, her full lips pouty and moist.

"Toria?" Narice spoke softly as she drew a finger across her cheek.

Toria's eyes fluttered opened and met her gaze with a stunning brightness to them. A brightness that matched the smile she now wore. "Oh... Oh Narice." She stammered.

"I... I take it my initial performance was satisfactory?" Narice asked with a shy grin of her own.

"Gi dumo l'phraktos Narice siyo." Toria gasped. "Yes!" (Oh bless the gods yes)

Narice lowered her lips to hers and they kissed passionately, their tongues teasing and tasting and exploring. It was a kiss filled with more passion than either of them had ever felt. Narice pulled away after a long moment.

"Narice... I did not mean to..." Toria began.

Narice shook her head with a smile "Oh no Toria Dellion." She spoke. "You had every intention of feeding on my blood... just as I had every intention of feeding on yours." Narice kissed her softly. "You taste wonderful by the way."

"As do you." Toria said.

"That is good... because I intend to continue what we have discovered this night." Narice spoke confidently. "Well into whatever the future may hold for us. We have to explore what this night has given to us." Narice spoke softly. "We have shared blood Toria Dellion and after what you have made me feel I do not care that you are a woman."

"Your mother Narice!" Toria said quickly. "She will..."

Narice shook her head. “She will never have you again Toria.” She said. “I told you that you would never endure Tesand or my demented nephews again and I meant it. You are mine now. And I do not like to share.”

Toria looked at her with stunned shock. She brought her hands up and clutched Narice’s perfect ass in her hands, pulling her tighter. “I like this side of you Narice.” She spoke.

Narice chuckled. “So do I.” She said. “So do I.” She looked at Toria. “There is more to you inside Toria. Much more... and I want to discover all of it.”

“I could say the same about you Narice.” Toria spoke.

“Perhaps.”

“I will enjoy discovering it.” Toria spoke.

Narice smiled. “And so will I.”

TORANA CLUSTER

TYPE II

Toral settled back into his chair even as Normya lifted her face to him. “Well?” She asked in barely a whisper. The COM channel was still open to the strange VANGRA 9 transport and she did not want them to know what was happening. Normya did not yet know if she could trust them.

Toral shook his head. “The Sublight containment seals are failing. They are deteriorating rapidly.” He stated in the same fashion. “If we were not within the Cluster they would have lasted longer... but not by much.”

“Sibfla!” Normya cursed loudly. More loudly than she had intended.

“What is wrong?” The female voice echoed in the cockpit.

“Nothing!” Normya snapped.

“Young lady... I have raised four children and I have become quite good at telling when they are lying to me. I also speak your ancient language quite fluently.” She stated. “Something is wrong. You need to tell me so that we can help you. I think we’ve already proven we are not your enemy.”

“That is still open for debate.” Normya said.

They heard the woman laugh softly. “Fair enough.” She said. “My name is Esther Saira Princess. I am a Pureblood who left the High Coven many years ago with my Blessed Husband and our people. We have been living peacefully for the last quarter century and were returning from a trade run to Aprian Two when we detected your Jump Gate explode.”

“You are a vampire?” Normya asked.

“A Pureblood... yes.” Esther spoke. “Though considering who one of the women you call mother is... I would think that does not matter to you.”

“You... you know of my mothers?” Normya asked somewhat surprised.

“We do receive your Netnews channels here in The Wilds Normya.” Esther answered. “And there are few who do not know King Leonidas. His exploits and those of your brother are still talked about in some areas within The Wilds.”

“Your ship is not a standard VANGRA 9.” Toral spoke now. “Not if you were able to detect the Gate exploding from such a distance. And most certainly not with the weapons you obviously have it fitted with.”

“My husband likes to be prepared.” Esther answered. “Do you have visual?”

“No... our holo emitters are burned out.” Normya answered.

“There is a planet nearby. Yocetu. We use it for hunting large game.” Esther answered. “On it we have established several hunting camps. That is where we are leading you.” She told them. “You have a decision to make. I will give you’re the coordinates one our hunting camps on the surface and you can make your way to one. There you can attempt to survive with what you have remaining on your ship. However... Gareld will no doubt deduce where we have gone and that we helped you. He has little reason to like me. He will come to Yocetu looking for you since your LSD drive is trailing minute traces of biogel coolant that even the idiots he has working for him will detect. I do not know why he wants you Normya Leonidas... or what he intends to do with you. I do know your young male companion will not survive and Gareld will capture you.”

“My other option?” Normya asked.

“You can trust us.” Esther spoke. “We can land in one of the many large clearings on Yocetu and bring you onto our ship. Then we return to our home. At least there you will be safe and you can contact your father to arrange a place to meet so that we can see you safely back to him.”

Normya looked at Toral who shrugged his shoulders. “What choice do we have?” He asked. “And she sounds much nicer than this Gareld fellow.”

“Our Sublight containment seals are deteriorating.” Normya spoke making her decision.

“How quickly?” The male voice asked now.

“Complete failure in ninety-four minutes.” Toral replied.

“We don’t have the extra power to extend our sensors out past five hundred thousand kilometers.” Normya spoke. “How far are we from this Yocetu?”

“Another hour and twenty-two minutes.” The male voice replied.

“That’s cutting it very close.” Normya spoke.

“As your friend has said... what other choice do you have Normya Leonidas?” Esther asked now.

“I will drop in directly above you.” The male spoke once more. “I can reduce the drag of the assault pods attached to your hull with our ship’s mass. It will extend the life of your seals by several minutes.”

“Can you fly that close to us for that long?” Normya asked. “We have twice your length and four times your mass.”

“Elves are not the only pilots in the universe who are proficient in flying!” The man snapped.

“I’m only half elf!” Normya barked. “And if I didn’t have a broke ship I could fly circles around you blindfolded! Whoever you are!”

She heard the man laughing. “We shall see she-wolf elf! We shall see!”

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

SODRAG

“You did that on purpose.” Sadi spoke as she stopped in front of the couch where Andro sat holding a plate of food and a mug of his mother’s special coffee. She wore a thin, soft crème colored robe that fell to the floor. The front of it was loosely tied and it was obvious she was naked under it as the robe displayed the valley between her firm breasts along with her tanned skin.

Andro lowered the data pad he was reading and reached up to take the mug from her hand as she placed her knees on either side of his hips and settled herself onto his lap squirming slightly to get comfortable. He wore only his trademark white cloth pants with crimson trim down the legs, his upper body bare.

“KertaGai... are you suggesting I sent Thast and the other High Coven thugs away for some ulterior motive.” He spoke with a grin as he lifted the coffee to his lips.

Sadi used the fork to stab a piece of the hickory smoked meat on the plate and held it out for him. He snatched it off the fork and she smiled as he began chewing. “I certainly am.” She stated.

Andro’s azure eyes grew a little wider as the flavor flooded his taste buds. “Sadi... this is fantastic!” He spoke as he chewed the meat and sat up a little straighter looking at the food on the plate.

Sadi grinned triumphantly. “Aricia gave me the recipe before we left. I had the meat marinating all day. Your mothers are going to turn me into a very good cook!” She said as she popped a piece into her own mouth.

“Thast was watching her like a hawk. Even after she went to sleep last night he used the shadows to blur past her bungalow three times.” Andro spoke looking into her eyes. “He also thinks he and his fellow security troops went unnoticed when they conducted their little recon last night.”

“So when can we have her come here Andro?” Sadi asked bluntly. “Both of us grow tired of only being able to talk within Mindvoice.”

“With Thast gone it will be easier.” He answered. “But we will still have to contend with Yuri. It will not be as difficult... but we will still need to keep our guard up. For Carisia’s sake as well as our own. We have had this discussion before KertaGai.”

“I know... it just grows harder by the day as close as she is now.” Sadi spoke.

“For me as well.” Andro said.

Sadi fed him another piece of the meat. “What about Narice and Toria?”

Andro shook his head as he chewed. “There is something about both of them that is a mystery.” He said. “Narice’s bond with Deneth is almost as powerful as Carisia’s is with Anthar. She is far more capable than even her mother realizes I think. And she hides it from everyone for some reason. Carisia told me she believes Narice is well aware of how she feels for us. And we in turn for her.”

“You spoke with her?” Sadi asked her eyes going wide. “Directly? You are not afraid of doing that anymore?”

Andro nodded as he sipped the coffee. “I was never afraid KertaGai. Confused perhaps... part of me still is confused, but never afraid. I reached out to her briefly as she was returning to the base after the obstacle course. Carisia does not believe Narice will do or say anything to reveal her feelings. If that was the case she would have done this already. She believes, as I do, that there is more to Narice than we know. You and Arrarn had already begun instructing the Coven pilots and I did not want to distract you. As for Toria Dellion... well... I think I will leave that up to you and my brother to discover since she will be with you most of the time. She is certainly more than a pilot and intelligence officer, and vampire or not, her desire for Arrarn permeates the air around her.”

Sadi nodded with a smile. “Yes... I smelled it today as well.” She said. “Arrarn is so intent on training them that he failed to take notice of it.”

“I believe he is still very gun shy after what happen at the villa with Narice, even though her desire for Arrarn wafts from her pores as well. She just hides it better due to her strength.” Andro spoke.

“Our feelings for Carisia are growing stronger Andro... and she was beginning to batter my shields today. Especially after what happened at The Center. Not intentionally, but she is so much a part of us now that it happens often. I don’t want to shield from her my love. She is a part of us now... inside our minds and hearts. However it has happened... it has happened and we can not hide from that as the Feravomir has said.”

Andro shook his head quickly. “I don’t intend to hide from it KertaGai.” He stated plainly. “However we need to be careful as I said. I want to hold her just as strongly as I do you Sadi. I want to touch her and taste her... just as you do. You are not making this any easier for me.”

“Why should we? We want the same thing with you Andro. Don’t discount the pull you have on us my love.” She was quick to point out. “We are Anomes... all of us together. That much I have come to realize. Carisia is the final part that will complete all of us.”

Andro nodded slowly. “Yes... I’m coming to grips with that fact as well.” He stated. “How it has come to be does not matter. It is what it is... and I will not deny that.” He met Sadi’s eyes. “She is also Yuri’s daughter... and my father is not going to be happy when we finally reveal our feelings to him.”

“But he loves your mother Isabella just as much as his other Queens.” Sadi said. “She is a Pureblood... just like Carisia.”

Andro nodded. “Yes... that is very true. However... my father and Yuri have a long history... from even before he discovered who he is. The majority of that has been filled with hate and anger and violence. My father is not infallible KertaGai. He has his faults... and one of them just happens to be he is not a forgiving person. I believe he holds Yuri just as much at fault for the death of grandfather as he did Xerxes. I fear that unforgiving nature will transfer to Carisia because she is Yuri’s daughter.”

“Carisia is not like her mother!” Sadi snapped.

“No she is not... but initially I don’t believe my father will see it that way.” Andro said. “That is why we must be careful. At least until we are ready to reveal to everyone what the three of us share.”

“You know of course she and Anthar have no intention of leaving Earth when the High Coven departs.” Sadi said.

Andro nodded. “And that is another of the reasons we need to be mindful of our actions.” He said. “If that was discovered in some way, Aikiro would yank her from Earth so fast there would be nothing we could do to stop her.”

“And we would go after her!” Sadi said.

“Yes we would.” Andro said instantly. “However... that is not something I want to contemplate right now. I want to avoid it completely as a matter of fact. I do not wish to start a war between the Union and The High Coven.”

Sadi stared at him for a long moment. “But you would... wouldn’t you?” She said softly.

Andro looked at her. “If you or Carisia are taken from me Sadi... I would rain destruction and death down upon any who stood in my way of getting you back. If that meant I had to start a war? Yes... without a single hesitation.”

Sadi felt a shudder of desire course through her at his words. They were Anomes yes, devoted to one another for eternity now, but to hear him say he would come for her or Carisia no matter the cost made it all seem so dreamlike. He said the words, made the pledge as if it was the most natural thing in the world to do, so devoted to her... and now Carisia as he was. Sadi lowered the plate to the couch and then reached up and placed her hands on either side of his face gazing into his azure eyes. “How exactly did I become the luckiest female wolf in the universe in finding you?” She asked softly. “Not only do you leave me breathless in our bed... your words alone can make my heart sing to the stars.”

Andro grinned. “Wait until I make you angry with me.” He said. “You might speak a different tune.”

Sadi laughed. “Maybe. But not right now.”

Andro smiled. “Helen will be here tomorrow with Arzoal, ostensibly to review the bonds between the Coven’s Bonded Pairs. I intend to ask if she will exam Carisia in private. I want her to establish a private connection between the three of us. We could no doubt do it... but since your abilities seem to be manifesting themselves now considering your little display today... I thought it better if she be the one. I am also going to ask her to delve a little deeper with Carisia, with her permission. There is something about the way she acts around Thast that does not fit who she is.”

Sadi blinked. “You suspect something?”

“I’m not entirely sure.” Andro said. “I’ll know more tomorrow and I will tell you. You however, you need to speak with Helen at length about today. And whatever else you may feel inside you KertaGai.”

“I... that came as quite a surprise to me Andro.” She said. “I didn’t know my abilities would... would grow so blatant so quickly. It was... it was frightening.”

“No doubt. This Walonn fellow was very lucky. Bren told me afterwards that had you connected with the blow you were going to use... he would be very dead.” Andro spoke. “I must make it a point to never anger you KertaGai.”

“Well... your hands upon my body will never elicit that type of reaction.” Sadi said with a smile. “So you have no worries there.”

Andro’s hands slipped inside her robe and cupped her firm ass, pulling her closer to him as he released his aura and let it swarm around Sadi. He watched as her green eyes closed in enchantment and he leaned forward to nuzzle the valley between her breasts. “What kind of reaction will my hands upon your body elicit KertaGai?” He asked in a low growl.

Sadi smiled seductively. “Oh no!” She said quickly pushing his head back and reaching down to pick up the plate again. “You did this to me last night and I was starving for the better part of the entire day!”

“I thought we had fun?” He spoke with a smile.

“We had enormous fun.” Sadi agreed. “But we still need to eat Andro.” She held out the fork with a large piece of meat on it. “Don’t worry... you can have me for desert.”

“I will hold you to that KertaGai.” He said.

Sadi smiled. “And if you eat everything... I might even find some sweet caramel topping that you can pour on my body and then lick off.”

Andro’s eyes grew a little wider at this. “Now that sounds like it would be delicious.” He said.

“Then eat.” Sadi spoke pushing the meat into his mouth. “No deserts until you eat.”

“Now you sound like my mothers.” He groused as he chewed.

Sadi leaned forward and extended her tongue to lick the edge of his ear with the tip while she ground her hips down on his, pressing her warm mound hard against his rapidly thickening cock. “Your mothers can not do to you what I do my love.” She whispered seductively in his ear.

Andro trembled as her female aura swirled around him. “Give me the plate!” He barked as Sadi chuckled.

ROYAL VILLA

Dysea stepped onto the patio in her customary robe and holding the mug of coffee in both her hands. Her platinum blond hair was still somewhat ruffled as it fell over her shoulders down her back. The sun was already rising above the trees and she guessed the time around mid-morning. She always prided herself on being able to tell the time by the position of the sun, and it was something she had grown extremely good at over the years.

Something had woken her this morning however. A sense of something that was wrong. Isabella and Aricia had already risen to meet with Vonis, and Dysea had extracted herself from For'mya's arms on the bed, Anja spooned up against For'mya's back, her arms wrapped around her. She had smiled at the look of pure, blissful satisfaction on For'mya's face as she rose to her feet. It was the same look that she and the others wore the next morning after Nauta Melme took them with such intensity and passion that it made them scream. She had pulled on her robe and made her way to the kitchen for a mug of Aricia's coffee and then walked out here, unable to shake the feeling that something was wrong. As the wind shifted she smelled him easily and turned.

Martin was still wearing only his black pants and sitting in one of the large lounge chairs on the patio, the mug of coffee in his hand. Dysea turned to move to him, her emerald green eyes gazing upon his powerful tattooed body and feeling her own desire for him rising. Only she and Martin had tattoos on their bodies in any large number. Bella and several small ones that she had talked her into getting over the years, but nothing like what she and Martin had. She watched his dark brown eyes turn to look at her as she walked up and without a word he made room for her in the chair between his legs. Dysea settled there, sitting lotus style and she leaned back against his hard chest.

"You could not sleep either Nauta Melme?" She spoke softly.

Martin shook his head. "I been awake since a few hours after Kinsoaurgai and I returned to the villa." He said.

"Something woke you?" Dysea asked.

Martin nodded. "A feeling really Melda Min. Like something was wrong."

Dysea nodded. "That is what woke me as well." She said.

Martin leaned forward and nuzzled her elven ear gently. Dysea smiled and pushed back against him even more. "You have seen nothing Melda Min?" He asked.

Dysea shook her head. "I have not had a vision in several months." She answered. "This feeling... it is not about something on Earth I can say that. It is too distant... too faint."

Martin nodded. "It is the same for me. Just on the edge. It does not concern our children. Only Normya is off world and that is the first thing I checked. I contacted Apo Prime Center when I woke and they said she left nearly twenty hours ago. She and Toral were going to return via Gate 24. It was a longer route around the Dzorina Cluster and Asteroid Belt, but it is much less traveled. They wouldn't have to wait at the Jump Gates for commercial traffic to pass. You know how impatient she is sometimes."

Dysea smiled. "Yes I do."

"I had them check Gate Usage Control and she hadn't gone through Gate 24 yet, but Toral more than likely got her to travel at a more sedate speed and she knows Arrarn and Sadi won't need her for a least a few days." Martin said. "I expect we'll hear from her within twenty hours or so once they clear the Gate and are on their last leg. Of all our children... fever or not... Normya is the one less likely to get into trouble and I don't worry about her as much because of that. She has your calm about her."

"She is somewhat embarrassed Nauta Melme." Dysea said.

"About what?" Martin asked confused.

"Her Coming of Age fever." Dysea answered. "It was stronger than she was letting others see. She was fighting very hard to keep from snapping at people. I believe she welcomed this opportunity to remain away from everyone so as not to embarrass them or herself. She thinks Zarah was handling it much better than her and she does not want to disappoint you."

"Disappoint me?" Martin gasped. "Melda Min... I will be the first one to say that I have no desire to experience that part of what you and the others go through. I would go crazy. You, Aricia... all of you... you are far stronger in that regard than I am. She has nothing to be ashamed or embarrassed about."

“She is young my love.” Dysea spoke. “I think she is taking her time as she returns to allow the strongest parts of the fever to pass. Toral is a fine young elf male and he cares for her a great deal. He will not be affected in the least by her mood. I think he often wishes there was more between them.”

Martin nodded. “He’s a stand up young man. I wouldn’t blink if something developed between them.”

Dysea turned her head and settled her eyes upon him. “She thinks you would rather see her with a Lycavorian male. Someone like you.”

Martin chuckled. “Thank god there is only one of me then. I darn sure wouldn’t want her to mate with someone like me.” He said. “And I would never tell her who she can enter into a relationship with. That is one thing we all agreed on. We would let our children find their own way. We have done that... and that hasn’t worked out so bad.”

“I have told Normya that as well.” Dysea said with a smile. “She is just as stubborn as you however.”

“Yeah... well I seem to have passed that trait on to all my children.” He said with a grin. “Sometimes it’s downright annoying when they hit me with it.”

Dysea laughed now as well. “They are forging their own lives Nauta Melme. They are our future. The future of the Union. We must always let them find their own path no matter what we may think. No matter what we may feel. Our past is not their past and we must not hold them to that.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “I know.” He said softly.

Dysea sipped her coffee slowly enjoying the feel of his body against hers and how he wrapped his aura around her. “This dinner tonight troubles you doesn’t it?”

Martin shrugged. “Not really.” He answered.

“Nauta Melme... fool Deia and Panos if you must... but you can not fool us.” Dysea said. “Having the Kavalians here troubles you.”

“There are too many unknowns.” Martin said. “Too many questions.”

“Martin... do you wish me to sit in on the talks with For’mya and Deia?” She asked softly. “Perhaps having both Kinsoaurgai and I there will give us a better understanding and picture of what they are really seeking. Our inherent skills tend to compliment each other very well.”

Martin shook his head quickly. “No. Dinner here is one thing... but I want you and Anja to remain out of the loop where it concerns the Coven and Kavalians. I don’t like having three of my Queens so uncovered with two races that have shown no love for us in the past. I won’t expose you or Anja if it is not needed.”

“Then Lynwe and Vengal asked if I would join them with Aihola in Delmah and help them to plan what you want her to do concerning the Kavalians.” Dysea said. “I won’t do that if it troubles you.”

“That is fine Melda Min. You and Vengal were raised on small unit operations... just like Danny and I. Just like the Drow. Better to have our best people planning and executing that.” He answered. “And it keeps you out of direct contact with them as much as possible.”

Dysea nodded. “Irial and I will fly over later today then. I will return in time for the dinner.” She said.

Martin nodded. “I had Riall schedule a full military readiness briefing for two days from now. That is where I want you and Anja with me. We can pass the details to the others later.”

“I will contact GUC and have them inform me when Normya exits Gate 24.” She said. “From there she should return within twenty hours as you said.”

Martin nodded. “Then why doesn’t that feeling go away.” He said softly.

VANGRA 9 TT

“Ja’narie?” Esther asked turning in her chair to look at her.

Ja’narie was monitoring the two sensor screens at her station intently, using low power passive scans to sweep the area in front of them. They were stopped just inside the edge of the Cluster and looking out on the brownish red planet before them. She shook her head slowly. “I can detect nothing.” She said softly.

“Could he have given up?” Normya’s voice filled their cockpit.

Esther’s laugh held no humor in it. “I sincerely doubt it.” She spoke. “Targeting you is no small affair Normya Leonidas. And considering the way it happened, I would hazard a guess and say he had help among your own people. He did not just randomly appear by that section of the border. He knew you were coming.”

“The Chief Engineer who supposedly fixed my ship?” Normya asked in disbelief.

“Or someone with similar access to your ship yes.” Esther agreed.

“But why?” Normya asked the question to no one in particular.

“You said this Gareld mentioned something when you saw him on Jagaliu.” Toral’s voice spoke now.

“Not directly.” Esther answered as her eyes swept the stars in front of them. “Only that he had a much larger profit to make. If that profit however, if it was somehow related to capturing you... he would not give up I assure you.”

“That’s a big if Esther.” Normya spoke.

“Perhaps... but the fused explosive on your main LSD Drive Coil did not get there by itself now did it?” Esther spoke.

“Point taken.” Normya said.

“My son tells me that you must have discovered it. The explosives charge I mean.” Esther said. “That is why you were conducting a power deceleration just before hitting the Gate.”

“We brought the ship back from Earth to be fixed. It had micro fissures in the LSD Drive Coil Manifold.” Normya said. “During transit to Gate 24 we discovered they had not been fixed like we thought and that is when Toral discovered the charge. Your... your son Esther... he is very knowledgeable.”

Esther chuckled. “Tir’ut has been flying our ships since he was five years old.”

“I have crashed a couple of them too.” Tir’ut’s voice exclaimed. They heard Normya laugh softly.

“Striking the Gate probably saved your lives then.” Esther said.

“What do you mean?”

“Tir’ut says when your starboard nacelle collided with the Gate and was torn off; the chain reaction created by the JB-19 compound in the explosive charge was stopped. It did not continue and destroy the rest of your engine core. It did however react to the compounds of the Gate when your impact damaged it and that is why the Gate was obliterated in the ensuing explosion.” Esther said.

“Your son seems to know an awful lot about explosives too.” Normya said.

“You can thank his father and older brother for that knowledge.” Esther replied the note of disapproval very evident in her voice. “Something I will be speaking with his father about when we return home.”

“He is a Pureblood too? Like you.” Normya asked.

Esther turned to look at Tir’ut who met her eyes. “Yes.” Esther replied. “Pure of heart as well.”

Tir’ut rolled his eyes with a smile and turned to look at the console to his left. “How much longer before your seals fail?” He asked.

“Nineteen minutes.” Normya answered immediately.

“Mother... we can not wait any longer.” Tir’ut said turning to look at her. “If Gareld is out there... he is within the Cluster just as we are and we will not detect him until he attacks. At least if we surge forward now, we can cover her as best we are able and she will still be able to maneuver somewhat.”

Esther nodded. “Which camp?” She asked.

“Have her make for the Northern continent mother.” Fash’ka spoke now. “The camp is three hundred and twelve kilometers from the northern coast on a bearing of 5723.9. It has the largest pad clearing and the most modern facilities.”

“Normya Leonidas?” Esther spoke.

“5723.9 from the northern coast.” She replied. “I got it.”

“Whatever you do...” Tir’ut spoke. “Stop for nothing. If Gareld is out there... and it is likely... we will draw him away from you. Head straight for the planet. Do not attempt to help us. Land at the facility... you will find the security code for the barracks under the largest Oklan tree as you come up the path. Take whatever supplies and weapons you can carry and head for the mountains. There are transmitters powerful enough to reach your Union. Contact them and call for aide. Gareld will be looking for you so do not stop for very long in one place. Travel only by day and make sure you are well hidden and secure at night. The creatures on Yocetu are not exactly tame and friendly.”

“Wait!” Normya called out quickly. “I thought we were going to transfer to your ship and then leave.”

“And we will...” Esther said. “That is what you must do if we do not make it Normya Leonidas.”

“Why... why are you helping us like this?” Normya asked suddenly. “Risking your lives?”

“If you die out here in The Wilds Normya Leonidas... it will bring your father out of Union territory on a mission of vengeance and death.” Esther spoke. “He will sweep through The Wilds like a supernova until he has found Gareld and all those responsible and slaughtered them. Many others will be swept up in that torrent. Protecting you now... that ultimately protects us and what we have built.”

“Why would my father care what you have built in The Wilds?” Normya asked. “He does not even know you exist. Whoever you are. Why would he have a quarrel with you?”

“That is a story for another time perhaps.” Esther said.

“What do you mean? Do you know my father? Does he know you?” Normya asked the questions.

“Enough talk.” Tir’ut’s voice echoed. “I’m heading out in ten seconds. Stay right on my tail unless I have to break away! Remember what I told you il kal’daka darthirii. Do not hesitate and do not pause.”

“I won’t.”

Tir’ut nodded. “Then here we go!”

Tir’ut fed full power to his engines and the VANGRA 9 leaped from the edge of the Torana Cluster, the TYPE II directly behind them. “Fash’ka... weapons brother?”

“I am ready.” Fash’ka spoke from the smaller seat in the next compartment behind the cockpit.

“She’s with us.” Esther called out.

Tir’ut nodded. “She is a superior pilot to have kept her ship together this long.” He spoke as his own eyes swept the stars all around them as they hurtled for the planet.

Esther looked at him oddly hearing something in his voice. The loud beeping made her head snap around fully however.

“Contact!” Ja’narie screamed. “Contact! Bontawillian Frigate bearing three five seven nine point two! Breaking from inside the Cluster! Shields at full power!”

“Range Ja’narie!” Fash’ka shouted calmly.

“Three million kilometers and closing fast!” Ja’narie barked in reply.

“Mother... the next time Fash’ka and I suggest you let us kill someone... please allow us to do so.” Tir’ut snapped. “It could very well save us from circumstances like this.”

“I agree!” Fash’ka echoed.

“I’m beginning to see where that possibly would have been the best course of action now my sons!” Esther popped as she adjusted her controls. “Auxiliary power to engines Tir’ut!”

“Il kal’daka darthirii break now!” Tir’ut barked as he yanked the VANGRA 9 over in a gut wrenching ninety degree turn and headed straight for the much larger ship.

Normya slammed the TYPE II into as hard a left turn as she was able considering the damage they had and pointed the nose of her ship directly at the northern continent on the planet in front of her.

“What did he call you?” Toral yelled as he fed power to their sublight engines.

“It’s the vampire ancient language!” Normya barked out. “It means She-Wolf Elf!”

“Not very original!” Toral said.

Normya grinned as she fought with her controls. “I sort of like it.” She said.

“Bah! There’s no telling about some people’s taste!” Toral barked.

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE

“The VANGRA 9 is breaking right for us!” Sandur yelled. “The TYPE II is continuing on course towards Yocetu!”

“The markings indicate it is the same VANGRA 9 that left Jagaliu when we did!” An Evolli spoke from the side of the bridge.

“It’s Esther!” Gareld snapped. “It has to be!”

“The Pureblood from Jagaliu?”

Gareld nodded as he rose from his seat. “Yes.”

“Why would she be helping the half breed daughter of Leonidas?” Sandur asked.

“I don’t know!” Gareld growled. “We’ll find out after we capture the elf bitch! Come to course three one nine mark six! Target two TR9 missiles on the VANGRA 9! Two more on the TYPE III! Disable both ships! Once we collect our prize, we’ll return to get Esther!”

“Missiles ready!”

“Fire!”

VANGRA 9

“They are firing!” Ja’narie screamed. “Two missiles on us! Two at the TYPE III!”

“What kind of missiles Ja’narie?” Esther barked.

“TR9s!” She replied instantly.

“He wants to capture me.” Esther spoke softly. “Well he will find I do not capture easily. Fash’ka!”

“I have them!” Fash’ka’s calm voice replied. He was no stranger to ship combat and there was not much that fazed him anymore. Unless of course you included the dark haired Immortal female sitting only meters away from him. “Firing Anti-Missile Interceptors!” All of them heard the distinct hum of the missile launcher extending and then the swoosh of the six ripple fired missiles as they left the launcher. “AMIs away!” He yelled. “Reloading with Z-load Impact Warheads!”

“Fash’ka I’m adjusting five degrees!” Tir’ut called. “We need to cover the TYPE III!”

“Understood! Targeting engines and shields!”

“Don’t miss brother!” Tir’ut snapped.

GARELD’S SHIP

“Missiles!” Gareld shouted.

“Six AMIs! Targeting our TR9s!” Sandur replied.

“VANGRA 9’s are not armed!” Gareld protested turning to look at Sandur.

“This one is! Launcher extended from the top of the ship!” Sandur barked. “They are adjusting course! They are trying to protect the TYPE III!”

“Match their course and increase speed!” Gareld bellowed. “Time to impact on the TR9s!”

Sandur shook his head. “They got three of them!” He snarled. “The last one is targeting the TYPE III! Time to impact twelve seconds! It will hit in the atmosphere!”

“Carians that vampire can fly!” Normya gasped as they looked at the lone sensor that worked between their seats. They had watched as the VANGRA 9 dipped and turned and swatted the missiles from the stars with a volley of their own.

“Entering the atmosphere!” Toral called. “Four minutes on the seals!”

Normya brought her head up and looked at her instruments. “Rout power to the inertia dampeners!” Normya barked. “The smoother the ride the longer they will last!”

The TYPE II began to vibrate badly, the entire ship shaking and rattling like they were in the middle of a hurricane.

“Toral!” Normya screamed as she fought with the controls.

“Atmospheric force fields have failed in all sections! Bulkhead stress is rapidly reaching critical!” Toral shouted shaking his head. “We’re on fire Normya!” Additional alarms began blaring and he turned his head to the side console. “Sibfla!” He gasped.

“What now!”

“Missile! Port side! Impact in five seconds!”

“Missile!” Normya screamed.

“Turn Normya! Turn!”

Normya threw the TYPE II into a vicious full power turn, the damaged bulkheads of the ship groaning loudly in protest over the abuse. “Come on! Come on!”

The TR9 missile was meant to incapacitate a ship’s power supply when it struck. The small explosive charge would detonate the larger amount of Mettrionic particles which would in turn effectively release an electro-pulse that would shut down the drive of smaller ships. It was not meant to be used in atmospheric conditions however, and the effect was very telling. The small warhead exploded directly over the top of the TYPE II, the brute force of the small but powerful explosion slamming down on the rear portion of the ship, adding more stress to the already overworked bulkheads. As the force of the missile drove the ship down and the thermal layers in the atmosphere pushed the ship upwards, the hull of the TYPE II cracked open like an eggshell even as Normya tried to recover control and yanked the ship this way and that.

The stressed bulkhead tiers holding the port nacelle to the ship snapped like twigs and the TYPE II went into a brutal, out of control spin from which no one could recover.

VANGRA 9

“No!” Tir’ut screamed.

Esther’s eyes were wide as well, even as the swoosh of more missiles leaving the launcher filled the cockpit. “Tir’ut!” She gasped.

“I can’t tell!” He shouted as he turned the VANGRA 9 over. “I can’t see anything beyond the damn clouds!”

“The ship broke in half Tir’ut!” Ja’narie spoke from her chair. “Could... could they survive that?”

“Tir’ut... follow them in!” Esther shouted now. “Gareld can not follow with anything more than Assault Pods! We must get to the crash site first!”

“Hits!” Fash’ka shouted joyfully. “I have hits!”

Ja’narie turned back to her screen. “The frigate has lost engine power! Fash’ka you did it!” She exclaimed. “Their main engines took a direct hit! Their shields are holding but down to fifty-three percent! They are stopping!”

“Not for long! Gareld didn’t expect us to be armed! He’ll send out pods! Tir’ut go! Go now!” Esther barked. “We must find them first!”

Tir’ut turned the VANGRA 9 into the atmosphere of Yocetu and quickly disappeared from view.

EARTH SODRAG

“Deni... ohhhh... wait! Ahhhhhhh! Denaliiiii!”

Lisisa shuddered almost violently, the orgasm ripping through her and her hands grasping at his powerful calves for support, as Denali squatted above her and sank every thick wonderful inch of his eleven inch cock into her spasming pussy. She was on all fours on the bed, her face and chest pressed into the soft mattress and her smooth perfect ass and hips angled upwards for maximum penetration. Denali squatted over her easily, his large, strong hands pulling her hips upwards even as he drove his huge cock down into her. She felt his powerful aura embrace her, setting her body and nerves on fire, and just as his entire cock bottomed out within her depths her orgasm hit.

They had been making love for three hours now, Denali almost tireless in his actions, his aura keeping her very wet, very willing and oh so happily engaged. Fear of not being caught by anyone always increased their desire for each other. Here at SODRAG they knew no one would discover them as their bungalows were on the far end of the area quad, quite a long walk from the main courtyard in the center of the bungalow quad. Combined with the new knowledge that their grandmother had passed to them just this afternoon, this played a role in their increased craving for each other. Though Denali had been pretty sure there were no laws prohibiting them from being together, hearing that same news from Gorgo had sent both of them in to a sexual frenzy upon returning to their adjoining bungalows. Denali had long ago cut a large section out of the wall between their bungalows, and then moving the furniture around in both rooms to hide the open entrance with the large wall lockers. He made it so they were easy enough to roll to the side and give them access into each other's rooms. The moment either of them returned to the bungalows they slid aside the wall locker.

Denali clenched his teeth and lowered his head to the back of Lisisa's shoulder, gripping her tightly as her orgasm ripped through her. He remained still above her thinking of anything but the incredible tightness and warmth of her clenching pussy to stave off his own eruption. Lisisa was clenching and unclenching her fists on his calves, her raven hair askew in every direction, her eyes tightly shut. Her maple and wheat scent filled his senses to overflowing and he basked in the caress of her female aura as it swarmed around him possessively. He felt the shudders in her lush body reduce only a small fraction as the strongest part of her orgasm began to subside and then he began to move inside her. He smiled as Lisisa's eyes flew open as she felt him withdraw almost his entire thick cock, for she knew what he intended. He wrapped his arms under her shoulders grabbing her large firm breasts and pulled her upper body off the bed, clutching her to him. Lisisa released his calves and grabbed his powerful arms in anticipation of what he was going to do.

"Deenniiii!" Lisisa cried out as he rammed his entire length into her once more with total and devastating power. Her eyes almost rolled into the back of her head as he began to stroke into her with powerful and utterly dominating eleven inch strokes. The bulbous head of his cock would strike deep inside her when he bottomed out within her depths, sending electric jolts of heavenly bliss ripping through her. He filled her so completely in this way... stretching the walls of her pussy until she was quivering in continuous satisfaction. "Ohhh... ohhhh... carians... nubou lae mathaa aur enyla! Nubou lae mathaa!"

Denali smiled and felt his chest swell with pride and commitment. When Lisisa began crying out to him in the ancient language he knew he had possessed her. He sped up his thrusts into her tight body just as she asked him, his large balls slapping against her firm, tanned ass cheeks. Their auras entwined and wrapped around each other, their different scents filling their nostrils, the smell of both their excitement and sex saturating the room. They did not care in the least.

Lisisa gripped his powerful arm tighter, pressing her face to his large bicep as she held on for dear life, whimpering in delight every time his controlling cock crashed deeply into her. Pleasure unlike anything they had shared until now was coursing through her and she knew it was because of what they had discovered. They were so much closer to their goal of being able to announce their love for each other. She clenched her teeth, shoving back with her hips on his downward drives, wanting to feel him even deeper. She heard his breathing increase next to her ear and she smiled inwardly, knowing he was close to filling her. No matter what else happened in her life from now forward, as long as she had Denali, nothing else would matter to her. He filled her senses, both her wolf and vampire senses, unlike anything she had ever experienced.

"Lisi..." His voice gasped. "Lisi... I'm close!"

Lisisa's eyes grew wide and she turned her head even as he continued to pile drive his beautiful cock into her. "Deni... Deni... Usstan ssinsrrin ulu tyav dos ussta ssinsrrigg!" She rasped out the words as she pressed her lips to his cheek. "Usstan ssinsrrin ulu tyav dos vel'drav dos doer wu'suul uns'aa ussta ssinsrrigg!" (I want to taste you when you come inside me my love)

Denali's head lifted suddenly, pulling away and she felt his strong hands grasp her legs. Lisisa cried out softly as he pressed her down to the bed, barely missing a stroke into her drenched pussy, and he began to rotate her body slowly. It was a long, slow torturous rotation for Lisisa as she was shuddering almost violently in continuous orgasms. Denali held one of her legs as he turned her, stopping only to lick her calf as he brought her leg around in front of him. Then she was facing him and his upper body came down on hers without hesitation, crushing her large breasts to his steel hard chest. He slid his hands under her firm ass cheeks, tucked his face into the hollow of her throat and began pile driving her with all the power at his command. Lisisa's arms flew around his broad shoulders and she sobbed loudly in joyous abandon. She locked her ankles at the small of his back, his strength such that he was able to keep pounding her much smaller frame with all that he was.

"Lisi... Lisi..." He cried out against the side of her neck. "Lisi... you... you are mine!" He gasped.

Lisisa felt his cock expand in size within her as he rammed home one final time. She felt every thick inch of his shaft swell; the veins spreading the walls of her clutching pussy in belly contracting delirium. His large balls tightened against her upturned ass, the head of his huge cock ballooned against the bottom of her womb and her forest green eyes went wide as the first jet of his searing hot cum blasted into her belly.

Lisisa's fangs burst forth then, and with no hesitation in the least she sank those fangs into Denali's thick neck. His spicy tasting blood, the most delicious nectar she had ever tasted, splashed across her taste buds and triggered her own staggering orgasm. His arms crushed her to him, his own orgasm's intensity nearly triple in greatness as his cum roared from his cock into her depths. Denali Leonidas had barely felt the brief pain of her fangs piercing his skin, he had long ago grown accustomed to that, and he welcomed it now with all that he was. He didn't see Lisisa's eyes close in unearthly bliss as her orgasm stampeded through her out of control with all the power of an erupting volcano. He didn't see the look of dreamlike worship spread across her beautiful face as she fed on the blood of the only man she would ever truly love even as he filled her to overflowing with his essence.

"...is your sister by blood!" Denali spoke from the bed. He was sitting with his back against the headboard, watching as Lisisa padded across the room towards him with two glasses. They had moved to Lisisa's bungalow now as they basked in the feelings after their lovemaking. Deni or she would change the sheets of his bed in the morning before he went on duty. "Now that Andro has gotten rid of that idiot That you should spend more time with her."

Lisisa looked at him on the bed, the sheet barely covering his now flaccid cock, and leaving the rest of his delicious body for her eyes to take in. She wore one of his oversized dark tank top shirts that fell just below her thighs. She climbed back onto the bed and settled between his legs holding out the glass of juice to him. He had refused the juice the first time she had taken his blood, but the next morning he found himself weaker than normal and he had not hesitated to drink it since. The two small puncture marks on his neck were almost gone and would fade by morning easily. Lisisa's body hummed in delight as she pressed back against his chest and his hand came up to stroke her shoulder.

"I know." Lisisa spoke softly. "I don't want to make it any more awkward between her and Yuri however."

Denali chuckled. "How awkward do you think it will be when she reveals to everyone that she is Andro and Sadi's mate?"

Lisisa turned to look at him. "They have..."

Deni shook his head quickly as he sipped the juice. "No... not yet. But I know you can sense it whenever she is with either of them. The desire is almost a palpable thing."

Lisisa nodded. "Yes."

"Andro and Sadi will have to curb that desire soon, or even those who are not wolf will sense it." Deni spoke with a grin.

Lisisa slapped his bare knee. "Pig." She retorted.

"It will happen soon enough I think. Does that upset you Lisi?" He asked after a moment. "What Andro and Sadi feel for her? What Carisia obviously feels for them?"

Lisisa shook her head instantly. "No!" She sipped her own glass of cloned blood. "It makes me very happy to know that she will be loved in a way only a Leonidas can love." She turned her face to look at him. "Like you love me."

Deni kissed her then. A kiss filled with passion and want. "Like I will always love you." He said softly.

Lisisa smiled dreamily looking into his eyes. "There is something far stronger between them than we understand. Something that no one will ever come between."

"Then what holds you back from being her sister?" Deni asked.

"I don't wish Yuri to pull her from the training because she gets close to me." Lisisa said. "I can still feel the hatred that woman has for me. Because father saved me and her plans to use me to kill him were never successful. I can feel it every time I look at her."

Deni shook his head. "Andro won't let that happen." He said confidently. "Carisia's bond with Anthar is powerful... almost on a par with you and Jeth and Aradace and I. With continued training she will surpass even us and that does not include what she will gain from Andro and Sadi. You saw that Sadi's abilities are beginning to manifest themselves now?"

Lisisa nodded with a smile. “It surprised her.” She said softly. “I’ve never felt the level of power that is within Sadi from someone who is not bonded to a dragon.”

Deni downed the rest of his juice and placed the glass on the table. He wrapped his arms around Lisisa’s waist and pulled her tight, nuzzling her ear and neck. “I have thought much about what our brother said to Arrarn and I on the beach that night.” He said. “He is right you know...”

Lisisa turned her head slightly to look at him. He had told her everything they had talked about. He never held back from her, just as she never kept anything from him. “That this is our time?”

Deni nodded slowly. “What we do now could well alter the future Lisi. We should not let father’s issues with Yuri affect what we do. Andro certainly is not and more than any of us he is more like father.”

Lisisa nodded. “He is beginning to come out from under father’s shadow I think.” She said.

“What has father told all of us for all of our lives?” Deni asked her.

“Blood before all else.” Lisisa said instantly.

Deni nodded. “Blood before all else. Carisia is your blood Lisi. And while she will have Andro and Sadi soon enough I think; she will always need you. For only you have experienced what she goes through now. And that is where she will need your help. To break away as you did. To become her own woman.”

“When did you become such a skilled halludvigius?” Lisisa asked him with a smile. (Psychologist)

Deni grinned and shrugged his broad shoulders. “It must be all my sisters and mothers rubbing off on me.” He answered with a grin. “Not to mention the Feravomir and grandmother Gorgo. With so many women around it’s hard not to learn some of these things. You should hear Andro talk.”

Lisisa downed the last of her cloned blood and pressed back further against his bulk relishing in his aura as it filled her senses. The warmth of his body made her tingle and she smiled dreamily. “Never in all my years before father rescued me did I ever imagine I would love someone as much as I love you Denali. You had not even been born yet, but that didn’t stop me from dreaming you would come one day. Hold me aur enyla. I want to fall asleep with your arms around me.”

Deni took her glass from her hand and placed it next to his on the table before turning back and wrapping his arms around her. “That is something you will never have to ask me to do twice.” He said.

Lisisa smiled and wrapped her arms around his as she closed her eyes enjoying the feel of his body and the steady breathing of his lungs.

Yes... this is what she so enjoyed, even more than their lovemaking. Falling asleep in the arms of the man who was just as devoted to her as she was to him.

YOCETU THE WILDS

“Fash’ka you and Ja’narie stay with the ship!” Esther ordered as she and Tir’ut moved quickly into the back of the VANGRA 9.

“Mother we...” Fash’ka began to protest.

“Tir’ut and I can blur as well as use the shadows Fash’ka.” Esther turned and explained to him. “These are skills you and Ja’narie do not have. We can move and cover more ground quickly and remain undetected. And I would much rather have the two of you covering us than any others.”

Fash’ka sighed and nodded his head. “You are right mother.” He stated gently.

“Take the ship to the camp.” Esther spoke. “Activate its defenses and wait for us. We have a general idea of the crash site. We will join with you in several hours. If we call... come to us immediately.”

Ja’narie held out the data pad. “I have plotted where both sections went down Esther.” She spoke. “They are several kilometers apart, but we are closest to the portion that held the cockpit. I suggest beginning your search there.”

“And if you don’t find her?” Fash’ka spoke.

“We will find her!” Tir’ut snapped as he pulled the SA80 AR from the rack on the wall and charged the weapon. He turned and held it out to his mother as Fash’ka looked at him. Esther took it and Tir’ut pulled down another and did the same thing before turning to look at his older brother.

“Jous nau ka'lith dalninuk. Fridj 'zil ilharn keer udossa.” Fash’ka spoke holding out his arm. (Show no mercy brother. Just as father taught us.)

Tir’ut grasped his brother’s forearm tightly. “Usstan xuat inth ulu dalninuk.” (I don’t intend to brother.) That had been an hour ago and now Tir’ut was not so sure.

The forward section of the TYPE II was buried in the soft dirt almost covering the entire cockpit view window. It had slammed into the ground nearly half a kilometer back, digging a long furrow in the hard ground, ripping trees from their perches effortlessly. Smoke still rose from the wreckage, several small fires burning along the outside as well as in the shattered remains of the interior. Nothing had come away unscathed, the bulkhead breached and shredded in dozens of places. The rear third of the ship was long gone several kilometers away, while this forward section had broken into two parts upon impact, but remained attached by the hundreds of cables and struts even as it plowed through the ground to its resting point here.

Tir’ut worked his way around the jagged edges of the torn ship and peered into the smoky interior. His long cape and cowl was billowing around him from the coolness of the breeze, the hood drawn up to protect against any liquid that might be dripping from torn lines of the many fluids that helped to power the ship and make everything work. It was also the best way to hide his true nature from others but still allow him the ability to move freely. His dark eyes were wide and all of his senses alert as he trained his SA80 AR in front of him. It was the standard assault rifle of his people, much improved upon from those his father and brother had brought with them when they first settled on Kranek. He sensed his mother come around the opposite side and move up next to him, her cloak and hood also pulled up.

“Tir’ut?” She asked softly.

“The cockpit is up there.” He said softly motioning with his SA80. “Do you smell the blood mother?”

Esther nodded. “Kochab and Evolli blood. Those they killed and were trapped on the ship when she vented the remainder of them into space.”

“The stair ways are crushed beneath the upper deck. We will have to climb up to reach it.” Tir’ut said.

“Let us be quick then my son.” Esther spoke. “Gareld will find the site just as easily as we have.”

Tir’ut nodded and moved with speed and grace that belied his Immortal size. It was something that had always amazed Cha’talla about his sons with Esther. All of them possessed uncanny grace and could move far faster than any normal Immortal even when they weren’t blurring. His many hours and days training with his father had honed Tir’ut’s skills to that of a finely tuned precision machine. Esther followed him into the shattered remains of the rear of the ship and directly over to where the upper deck had collapsed into the lower deck. The dragon pens were bent and twisted almost beyond recognition. Tir’ut grasped a piece of cable and hauled himself up onto the upper deck which was now canted at a steep sixty degree angle. He used the cable to steady himself and then he held out his hand to her. Esther didn’t pause and grasped his hand. Using his immense strength Tir’ut lifted her easily and half tossed her up onto the level portion of the upper deck. She landed cat like and turned to reach out to him. Once they were both on the upper deck, Tir’ut hefted his SA80 once more and moved quickly to the entrance of the cockpit.

Esther followed him in, her own SA80 held out in front of her as Cha’talla had trained her ruthlessly on and her eyes went as wide as Tir’ut’s. The upper bulkhead of the cockpit above the pilot and co-pilot seats was open to the sun pouring in from the gaping hole. All of the instrument panels were destroyed beyond use, many of them dangling from their cables and hardpoints.

And both pilot seats were gone.

Tir’ut lowered his SA80 in confusion and moved forward while Esther looked around. “Where are the seats?” She asked looking up into the open top of the cockpit once more. “Something did not just reach down and rip them out while leaving the rest of the bulkhead intact.” She stated.

Tir’ut knelt between the two vacant areas where the seats would have been and looked at the deck. He saw the blackened marks on both sides and he reached down to run his fingers across the deck. He brought it back up and sniffed it. “I believe that is exactly what happened mother.” He said.

“What do you mean?” Esther asked.

Tir’ut looked up at the opening above them. “Look at the precision of the opening mother.” He said pointing to the edges. “They are not jagged as if it was torn open. It was a shaped charge... meant to blow an opening in the surface of the hull.”

“What? Why?” Esther asked.

Tir'ut stood back up and held up his fingers. "Explosive compound." He spoke. "MX Nine by the smell of it. A powerful Union explosive."

"Why would they put explosives under their own seats Tir'ut?" Esther asked. "They..." Her eyes went wide. "An ejection system?" She gasped.

Tir'ut nodded. "Similar to an escape pod... but meant for the pilots alone." He replied. "Just enough to blow open a hole above them and launch their seats clear of the ship."

"Who would be insane enough to develop something like that?" Esther exclaimed. "Let alone use it."

Tir'ut smiled. "You forget mother... the head of Union Operations is a human who came with the Lycavorian King from the past. It is said he was an exceptional pilot. This was something standard on all the human flying craft of that time."

"How do you know that?" Esther asked.

Tir'ut grinned. "You insisted we know as much about history as we could when we were growing mother." He answered. "Part of the history you gave to us was human history and that of the Lycavorian King."

"Oh." Esther spoke with a sheepish grin. "How do you suggest we find these seats then Tir'ut? We have no idea when they might have exited the ship as it was reentering the atmosphere."

"They would have waited until the atmosphere was breathable." Tir'ut said. He held up his wrist and tapped the metal band he wore there. "Fash'ka?"

"I am here brother." Fash'ka answered immediately. "We are secure and the camp defenses have been activated. You and mother need to start heading back Tir'ut. Darkness is coming and you know what comes out on this world at night."

"We will Fash'ka." Tir'ut answered. "Have Ja'narie run a spectral scan Fash'ka. She is looking for traces of MX Nine. They had some sort of Ejection system in their ship brother. They would have punched out somewhere after the air became breathable. I estimate within ten kilometers of the ship itself."

"Stand by." Fash'ka spoke.

Esther looked at him. "What comes out at night Tir'ut?" She asked.

"This planet has many predators mother." He answered. "It is why we come here to conduct our ritual hunts."

"Yes... I'm well aware of that." She said. "What comes out at night though that makes your brother's voice tremble?"

"Tir'ut! You are right brother!" Fash'ka answered.

"Where are they?" Tir'ut demanded.

"The closest one is one kilometer west of your current location Tir'ut." Ja'narie answered from the background. "Half a kilometer more past that is the second. Tir'ut... both of them are suspended in the air."

Tir'ut nodded. "Very well. We are moving to the first site."

"Be quick brother." Fash'ka spoke. "You do not want to be caught outside the camp when the sun goes down. Leave that for Gareld and his fools."

"We're leaving now." Tir'ut said.

"Tir'ut... what comes out at night?" Esther asked.

"Come mother... we must move quickly." Tir'ut spoke turning to exit the cockpit.

Esther shook her head as she made to follow. "Uk zhah fridj 'zil veirus norrs 'zil ukt ilharn." She muttered. (He's just as closed mouth as his father.)

The whipping air and roar of explosives.

Toral shouting at her.

The flashes of her father and mothers and siblings that she would never see again.

Her beloved sister Zarah alone and weeping.

All these thoughts and so many more had whipped through her mind as they spun out of control, unable to stop the mad roll and plunge the TYPE II was in. Then the single flash of white light, the sound of more explosives and then her seat leaving the cockpit of her crippled ship behind. She remembered watching her ship spin out of control beneath her and then the enormous opening shock of the parachute above her snapped her head up with enough force and pain to cause her to scream out and then blackness washed over her.

As her eyes fluttered open now, these were the thoughts that rushed upon her.

And then the pain hit.

Normya Leonidas's emerald green eyes flew open and she screamed in pure agony as unimaginable pain coursed through her the likes of which she had never felt before. Sharp, gut wrenching pain that pierced through her brain as her eyes changed and her wolf fangs burst forth instinctually. She shook her head back and forth as she clamped her mouth shut, her fangs clicking together loudly, her emerald wolf eyes tightly shut by rapidly filling with moisture and then flooding with salty tasting liquid that poured down her cheeks. After a long moment and a dozen deep breaths her eyes opened and she looked down slowly and saw the source of her agony.

Her right leg was skewered by a branch of some sort, easily two inches in diameter, and her blood soaking the ground some five meters below. The branch had snapped off during her plummet through the thick trees, leaving only the large piece sticking from her flesh. Normya groaned and lost whatever was in her stomach, vomiting into the air in front of her, the smell of her own bile adding to her misery. She hung her head limply, the straps from the parachute far above biting into her shoulders painfully. With a willful surge of strength she reached up and jerked the Hador fighting knife from its inverted sheath. The blade gleamed in the little light that was penetrating the canopy above her and with her rapidly fading strength she slashed at the shoulder strap on her right. The blade sliced through the reinforced strap easily and she groaned as she swung free and dangled from only one strap now, increasing the pressure and pain on the one shoulder. Switching the knife into her left hand she lifted the blade and placed it against the strap.

Normya took a deep breath and slashed downward.

Had she been uninjured, the fifteen foot drop would have been nothing to her. Now it was as if she fell hundreds of feet before her legs impacted the ground beneath her. Terrible pain ripped through her leg once more and before she even had time to scream once more, the pain overloaded her brain and she passed out.

Tir'ut lowered the body of the male elf to the ground as gently as he could; Esther guiding his actions carefully from the earth and laying out the limp form on the soft, moss covered dirt. Tir'ut had climbed the tree to get above the limp body and then cut through the straps easy enough and he lowered Toral's broken elf body the three meters to the ground. Once he was fully down on the surface, Tir'ut righted himself and dropped easily to the jungle floor. He moved up next to his mother who knelt next to Toral examining his body with soft probes of her fingers.

"Mother?" He asked softly hoping for a miracle perhaps.

Esther shook her head slowly. "His neck is broken." She said gently. "Whether from the plunge through the trees or the ejection I don't know. Considering the bruising... I'd say his back and both his arms as well."

Tir'ut looked up into the thick canopy above them, seeing the small opening his fall had made in the greenery above. "The Oklan trees are unyielding mother." He said softly. "I hope he was not alive when he came through them."

Esther got to her feet slowly and looked at her son. "He would have felt nothing the moment his back was broken Tir'ut. Whatever he hit on his descent snapped his spine in two cleanly. It had to have happened in the first seconds coming into the canopy. I am guessing that when his parachute finally snagged on the trees, it jerked him back so viciously it broke his neck as well."

Tir'ut looked down at Toral's form. "Dos malaruth lu'tois xuil bel'la dalninuk darthirii." (You fought and died with honor brother elf.)

"Fre'sla xuil dosst phraktos nin wun gre'as'anto." Esther echoed softly. (Stand with your gods now in peace.)

The piercing scream caused both their heads to whip around. It was a scream of pure unadulterated terror and it was definitely female. Tir'ut... son of the Immortal Cha'talla did not hesitate. Esther's dark eyes went wide as her oldest son blurred in motion. He she could not track him and he was gone, disappearing into the jungle around them.

"Tir'ut wait!" She screamed before following.

Normya's emerald eyes were wide in terror, as they had been from the moment she regained consciousness.

Her impaled leg was twisted beneath her, her whole body throbbing with pain, yet the only thing that occupied her attention right now was the tooth filled maw of the dark brown, leathery skinned creature that was looking upon her as it's next meal.

The reptilian creature was easily two and a half meters long and a meter tall. Part of that length was the tail that lashed about wildly behind its muscular body, thin needle like black spikes protruding from a good portion of that same tail. It's blazing brown eyes were sizing her up, it's jaws wide and exposing flesh tearing teeth easily four inches long. Teeth that would shred her body without regard. Her wolf nose could detect the creature's foul breath and only her fear kept Normya from vomiting at the stench of decay. Her Coming of Age fever was long forgotten, the pain lancing through her body an afterthought as Normya stared at her death. All she could do was pray it would be quick for she had not the strength to fight such a creature.

As the creature drew back its large head, opening its life ending jaws, Normya blinked at the blur of motion to her right. Her eyes grew wider as the creature roared in pain from the eight inch long blade that now tore through its lower jaw, piercing its mouth and tongue and ramming through the top of its long snout. Normya blinked once more and then the huge figure was standing next to the creature, pulling the long, ornately carved sword from a scabbard on his back. His face and body were covered with the long cloak and cowl, and she watched as if in slow motion the figure drew back the sword and plunged it through the neck of the creature completely, the bloody blade bursting from the other side of its flesh. With a bellow of rage it drew back its huge head, lifting the figure out of view.

Esther's eyes were wide as she skidded to a stop next to Normya on the ground on her butt. Her hands gripped Normya's shoulders as she witnessed the monster that Tir'ut was battling with. She had never been to this planet on the hunts. It was the one thing that Cha'talla and the other men had been adamant about. This was a male ritual of manhood and it would not do for females to accompany them. Esther was witnessing first hand why they had chosen this planet to begin with.

"Tir'ut!" She screamed in abject horror.

Tir'ut ignored her cry as he felt himself lifted off the ground. The Bancorik was one of the more prevalent hunters on this planet, the young ones even more deadly than the adults. They were not terribly bright... but they were lethal when there was more than one. "Take her and go mother!" Tir'ut screamed the command. "Now!"

"Tir'ut no!"

"Go now damn it!" Tir'ut screamed as he felt the Bancorik's tail spikes graze his lower back and the stab of pain coursed through him.

Normya's wide eyes looked at the beautiful face of Esther. "Esther?" She gasped. "How?"

Esther had happily been the wife of an Immortal for a quarter century now, and she knew well the voice of command, as well as the sound of an Immortal killing rage. She grabbed Normya's shoulders tightly. "Come child! We must go! Quickly!"

"My leg!" Normya shouted as Esther tried to pull her up and pain filled her senses once more.

"You must get up Normya! You..." Esther blinked as the huge figure flew past her and she looked up to see Fash'ka leap upon the creature now, burying his own sword deeply into the Bancorik's chest and underbelly and ripping upwards with all of his own Immortal strength. He dodged left as the creature swiped at him with lethal talons on its front legs even as its innards began to stain the ground beneath its body.

The Bancorik's roar of agony cut through the darkening sky even as Tir'ut ripped his sword free, spinning it elegantly as he lifted it high above his head and then drove it downward with all of his combined Immortal and vampire strength directly through its skull. The ritual Immortal sword, a weapon all of them carried as a reward after their first hunt, pierced all the way through the Bancorik's huge head, slicing completely through the small brain of the creature and killing it instantly. Fash'ka tore his blade free just as Tir'ut did the same and they both leaped clear of the falling predator, Tir'ut landing lightly next to his brother as the body of the beast crashed to the ground with a massive thud and rush of air. A small cloud of dirt and vegetation leaped into the air around the creature as it came to its final resting spot.

“Are you insane brother?” Fash’ka exclaimed looking at Tir’ut. “Attacking an adolescent Bancorik by yourself? Have you truly gone mad now?”

Tir’ut reached down to yank his knife from the creature’s jaw. “I had no choice.” He replied turning to face his brother as he wiped the blade clean on his leg. “It was about to make a meal of il kal’daka darthirii.”

“There is always choice brother.” Fash’ka retorted. “Do you know what father would have done to me if that creature made a meal of you as well as your il kal’daka darthirii?”

Tir’ut looked at him and grinned under his cowl, his vampiric teeth gleaming in the gathering darkness. “We succeeded.” He said. “It is done!”

They turned when the high pitched roar filled the surrounding area.

“Uh oh.” Fash’ka spoke softly, spinning his sword around expertly. “I believe it’s time to go.”

“Indeed.” Tir’ut agreed turning to where Esther held the female elf in her arms. He paused for a moment at the brightness of her platinum blond hair and emerald eyes, his breath catching in his throat. Another screech filled the night air and compelled him forward this time. He crossed the distance to them in three strides and tossed back his cowl as he squatted in front of them.

Normya’s eyes grew wide with fear when she saw his features. The very noticeable bone spurs protruding from his jaw line, though they were not as pronounced as the images she had seen of different Immortals. The semi sunken eye sockets were not as prominent either. His skin was different, more bronze in color than the gray she knew Immortals to have and he was simply huge. Easily as tall as her Uncle Danny and if she was any judge, extremely muscular. Yet there was no mistaking he was an Immortal.

He had blurred in motion. Immortals could not move like a vampire Normya knew... yet the one kneeling in front of her had done just that. Normya knew well the features of what she saw and she felt the cold fear grip her as she tried to scramble back away from him. Immortals had held her mother For’mya for weeks before her father rescued her. Part of her pilot training had been about never allowing yourself to be captured by High Coven Immortals. They were known to rape elven females simply because the elven female body was one of only a few female species that were able to accept their bullish sized male organs without injury. Unfortunately when that happened, it was usually a sentence of eternal servitude and addiction to the Immortal who broke them.

Elven females, no matter their training, would quickly become addicted to the chemical compounds in an Immortal’s semen. When those chemicals reacted with the elven females own chemical compounds in her body it created a powerful drug. It caused their bodies to crave what the Immortals could give them in their semen. It essentially turned them into willing sex slaves for all time; for there was no cure to how the chemicals reacted together and without continuous doses of that combined chemical the elven females would go completely insane within weeks. They would become mindless shells of their former selves and eventually they would be tossed aside and left to die. The only way to have those continued doses of the combined chemical was to become the slaves of Immortals.

“Immortal! No! Get away!” She hissed in terror. Her eyes darted to where Fash’ka drew back his cowl as well, exposing his pure, unaltered Immortal features. They were much more like the images Normya had seen of the Immortals growing up and her emerald eyes grew even wider.

Esther saw what was happening immediately and she grabbed Normya’s shoulders once more, turning her body to look at her. “Normya Leonidas... I am not an Immortal and we will not hurt you! We are here to save you!” Esther snapped.

“They are Immortals!” Normya hissed again, real terror in her eyes.

“Mother we have to go.” Fash’ka spoke looking off into the darkness.

“And quickly mother.” Tir’ut echoed.

As if to punctuate his words, more roars filled the air around them. Esther looked at him. “More of these creatures?” She asked quickly.

Fash’ka shook his head as he came up to them. “No. Worse.” He stated.

“Worse?” Esther gasped.

Tir’ut nodded as he leaned forward and gathered a supremely terrified Normya into his arms and he lifted her as gently and easily as he could. She hissed softly at the pain lancing through her leg but her eyes never left Tir’ut’s face and she could only stare at him in silence, the fear very easy to see. She was frozen with fear, unable to even put up a fight of any kind, not that the pain in her leg would allow her even that. His dark, almost black eyes gazed at her as he situated her small frame in his arms and then he spoke. Normya's eyes grew even wider when she heard the voice from the transport.

"I will not hurt you il kal'daka darthirii." He said softly. "I will protect you with my dying breath if need be, but we need to go unless you wish to greet this creatures' family and friends."

Normya shook her head quickly unable to speak, but her mind telling her she in no way wanted to deal with anymore of these creatures.

"Tir'ut what could be worse than that thing?" Esther asked gathering her SA80 from the ground and getting to her own feet. She looked at Fash'ka when Tir'ut did not immediately answer. "Fash'ka?"

Fash'ka looked at Tir'ut and then to his pureblood mother. "It's older brothers and sisters more than likely. And they will not be happy that my brother has killed their youngling." He said almost causally. "Ja'narie has already gathered the other pilot. We need to move now. Gareld's ships were landing when I came to find you mother and they will undoubtedly be spreading out. Let them deal with the creatures of the night... trust me... we do not want too."

Whether it was the blood loss or the shock of everything that had happened, no matter the cause, Normya Leonidas did the only thing available to her at the time.

She passed out.

TALBOR SEVEN SUITE 3897

His name was Gravork.

An oddity of his Kochab species because of his obesity. He had been a minor player in the black market arms trade within The Wilds for many years until a single deal he brokered got him noticed by some powerful people. It concerned T19s and how to obtain and use them. He had many Evolli friends who had been able to supply him with leftover stocks of the weapons after their failed war with the Lycavorian Union, and within a year of the war ending he had become the premier T19 weapons dealer in The Wilds. Many people wanted the weapon known as the Dragon Killer, but very few could afford them, fewer still could use them effectively. And Gravork failed to inform his many potential buyers that the Union's dragons and riders had learned how to adapt and defeat the weapons quite well, especially after the slaughterhouse that was Alba Tau.

Gravork was careful in his dealings, always insuring that his clients were not only well organized and well funded, but that they also were not the type of individuals who would expose his operations. What little if it they saw anyway. He had made a tidy profit in his last two deals alone and had decided to come here, his usual place to relax and enjoy his new found wealth. One of the deals had been almost too easy, bringing two parties together for a simple meeting, which earned him nearly ten million credits alone. And then the weapons deal with the High Coven middle man for the purchase of T19s netted him close to fifty million credits. He had thought to come here and spend his days lounging beside the waters of the many lagoons and pools and his evenings eating fine food and enjoying the company of scantily clad females of all species. When Gravork stepped off the elevator lift into his suite with the two stunningly beautiful elf females he had purchased for the night, he knew something was wrong right away.

His two longtime Kochab body guards lay in the center of the main room of his suite. One was draped over the expensive and lush couch his eyes open in death, the other laying askew on the floor near the patio that opened into the balcony, half of his head gone. Gravork began to sweat immediately and he stopped his forward motion, pushing the female elves in front of him. They were among the finest of the slaves on Talbor Seven, their beauty justifying their enormous price as well as the fact they were sisters. The blond haired female had the bluest eyes and large firm breasts, while the dark haired female elf had an incredibly well developed ass for an elf. He had purchased them for his two men to entertain themselves with, though they had not been aware of that when their owner had agreed to the purchase of their services. Gravork would have returned them in the morning, perhaps a little battered and bruised, but alive. He simply liked to watch his men take the female elves in every position and hole they had.

Now he had no qualms about using their bodies for protection and he guided them in front of him as they chatted and giggled thinking they were going to have an easy night of it with the fat man here. As they turned their heads and saw the bodies, they too froze in their tracks, and that is when Gravork felt the cold barrel of the weapon press to the back of his head.

“Doing something awkward at this moment will only result in your death.” The female voice spoke calmly. “I do encourage you to remain still.”

The two female elves turned at the sound of the voice and their eyes grew wide when they saw the tall, dark skinned elf behind Gravork, holding the very lethal looking weapon and dressed in a form fitting black bodysuit with thin plates of additional armor on her full chest.

“Ladies... if you would so kind as to come forward please. Do not mind the bodies... they will not harm you.” The male voice spoke now causing them to whirl around once more and look at the dark skinned male elf. The first thing that they noticed was that he was not completely elf due to the size of his ears, and the second thing they noticed was that he was very tall, and incredibly muscular under the tight black shirt and body suit that he wore similar to the female. Anton held the weapon in his hand, but his arm was hanging loosely at his side, ready to spring up in a blink if he needed. He motioned forward with his opposite hand and directed them to the opposite couch.

Clutching each other tightly they did as they were instructed.

“Now you obese one.” Cihera spoke. “And pray you don’t trip over your layers of fat. Your two men have already angered my associate and I enough this night.”

“You... you killed them?” Gravork gasped as he moved forward.

“They made the mistake of thinking my beautiful female companion was going to entertain them this night as you had planned for these young ladies no doubt.” Anton spoke with a smile as he saw the looks of the two female elves as their eyes went wide. “A rather painful assumption. And quite fatal I’m afraid.”

“You told us it was only going to be you!” The blond haired elf snapped glaring at Gravork.

Anton chuckled. “Yes... I’m quite sure he did not tell you about his two acquaintances here.”

Cihera pushed Gravork forward towards the couch. “Sit down Gravork. We have some questions for you.”

“Who are you?” Gravork demanded as he settled his bulk onto the couch.

“Who we are is not important.” Anton spoke as he moved behind the couch where the two elf females sat. “The questions we ask you will determine whether you survive this night however. Or your answers to them that is.” Anton pressed the barrel of his K12 KM to the back of the blond haired females’ head and saw her freeze instantly. “First however... if you would so kind to tell us who you are she-elf. You and your companion here.”

“We... we are slaves! My... my name is Las’elh and this is my sister He’liin!” The female gasped. “He bought us for the night! We know nothing! Please... you can’t hurt us!”

Anton extended his hand between their heads and opened his palm. One set of ocean blue eyes grew a little wider as they saw the small medallion he held in his palm, while the dark eyes looked puzzled and confused.

“The Krypteria!” The blond elf Las’elh hissed as she pushed off the couch. “Do you realize what you have done?” Las’elh exclaimed while the dark haired female sat there still stunned.

“Elven Intelligence.” Anton spoke looking at Cihera.

Cihera rolled her eyes as she kept her K12 leveled at Gravork and settled to the arm of the couch.

“You have just ruined an investigation I have been conducting for three years!” Las’elh snarled. “Who are you and why is the Krypteria interested in this fat fool!” She demanded.

“And why exactly would Elven Intelligence be investigating Gravork here?” Cihera asked from her perch, her eyes never leaving the Kochab’s face.

“His name kept popping up in local investigations being conducted of elven females who have disappeared through the years.” Las’elh spoke quickly. “I have been working here for the last fourteen months trying to discover what he knew. I finally got him to choose me for this night and now you have ruined that!”

“I take it she is not your sister then?” Anton spoke as he motioned to the dark haired elf female.

Las’elh shook her head quickly. “I only met her two nights ago.” She said. “She is no one!”

The female now got to her feet. “No one!” She snapped. “I have kept you warm for the last two nights in your bed! I’d say that makes me someone!”

Anton and Cihera watched as Las'elh stepped into a vicious palm strike to the woman's jaw. Her head snapped around and she dropped to the couch unconscious. Las'elh stood over her. "You were a means to an end!" She snarled to the unconscious form. "And you were not even that good in my bed!"

Anton brought the K12 and leveled it at her. "Please... take a seat once more." He spoke.

Las'elh glared at him. "I do not have to listen to you!" She barked.

Anton's smile held no humor. "If you wish to live... yes you do." He spoke. "And please do not think I won't shoot you simply because you say you are Elven Intelligence. We have not confirmed that... and your actions so far do not do much to validate your claim." Anton motioned with the K12. "Sit down. Quickly."

Las'elh glared at Anton with evil blue eyes. A look that bounced off his thick Spartan skin. She finally moved the three steps back to the couch and sat back down. Anton looked at Cihera. "Cihera." He said.

Cihera looked at Gravork. "Now... Gravork... I am not particularly fond of your species in case you haven't noticed. I will ask you several questions... and I expect you to answer them quickly and accurately. Are we understood?"

"Who are you?" Gravork snapped. "Do you know who I am?"

"We know exactly who you are." Cihera spoke. "Now tell me about the weapons deal with the Evolli and the High Coven?"

"What are you talking about?" Gravork snapped.

Cihera shifted her K12 and fired once. The Kinetic Magnum round punched into the floor between Gravork's feet causing him to almost leap from the couch, even as his bladder voided. Cihera curled her nose at the smell of urine and shook her head. "The next one will go through your right leg." Cihera spoke. "If that doesn't work... I will give you to my husband here. He is a Spartan mind you... and after what your two associates attempted to do with me, he is not in a very forgiving mood. He will get the information we want... you however... you will be very much a vegetable when he is done."

Gravork wasn't the only one who looked at Anton quickly. Las'elh stared at Anton her blue eyes wide as she saw Anton shrug nonchalantly. "A trait I inherited from my father." He spoke. "He is rather possessive of my mothers and has killed more than one fool who attempted to hurt them."

"Your... your father?" Las'elh asked softly.

Anton nodded with a smile. "Yes... General/Colonel Daniel Simpson."

Las'elh took another breath and suddenly realized she was in far over her head here. She knew well who General/Colonel Daniel Simpson was. There were not many within the Union who did not know that name. Beloved brother to the King, if not by blood, then by deed. One of the heroes of Alba Tau and the Kavalian Incursion on Gamji. A man who held almost as much respect and awe as did the King.

Las'elh had been a member of Elven Intelligence for nearly two hundred of her four hundred and nineteen years. A respected agent, extremely intelligent and very skilled, she had lost all of that the day her youngest sister had disappeared four years ago. Na'lia was only a hundred and nine years old when she disappeared, still naïve to the ways of the universe. She and Na'lia had been very close and Las'elh had not believed the report that the ship she was on hit an asteroid and was destroyed. Las'elh had spent the last three years tracking whatever clues she could discover. More than one clue led her here to Talbor Seven and the fat Kochab who now sat across from her. She had been so close to her answers... and now she would never get them. If the Krypteria were involved... Gravork was involved in far more nefarious activities. Las'elh was no fool either. She had no desire to cross the Krypteria in any way. She could not find her sister if she was dead, and she had no doubts this Spartan and his dark skinned elven wife would do just that if she got in their way. She was different somehow... not a normal elf even though her ears were of normal height.

Gravork also knew who Daniel Simpson was, and though his species did not normally panic... small beads of perspiration broke out on his forehead.

"The Coven approached me through a middle man!" He began nearly yelling his answer. "All I was told was to arrange for the transport and delivery of two dozen T19s. I did as I always do and contacted the smugglers I use the most."

"The Evolli who were killed along with the Immortals when they tried to complete this deal?" Anton asked as he moved casually around the side of the couch and settled his frame on the opposite end from where Las'elh was sitting.

Gravork looked at him. "Killed?" He asked.

“Oh yes. The Evolli attempted to make the exchange within Union space.” Cihera spoke now. “They were discovered and killed along with the Immortals who were there to pick up the illegal weapons you sold them.”

“T19s are not illegal in The Wilds!” Gravork barked.

“No... but they are illegal within Union territory.” Cihera said. “You supplied the Evolli with these weapons... that makes you culpable.”

“You can not charge me with a crime that took place in your borders!” Gravork snapped. “I do know a little of Galactic Commerce Law.”

“Who said anything about charging you?” Anton spoke.

“I’m telling you all I know!” Gravork snapped real fear in his voice now. “I did not know the High Coven middle man. We communicated on a secure Coven channel with holo images only. I never met him and I insured he transferred my fee before I gave the weapons to the Evolli for delivery!”

“Tell us about the Evolli.” Cihera asked now.

“What about them?” Gravork spoke turning to look at her. “They are an exceptionally competent and organized group. Some of my own kind mixed in with them as well.”

“Did you give them the job to attack the Union colony on Eleysi Three?” Anton asked.

“What? No! Why would I do that? I don’t have a death wish!” Gravork spat.

“Then who did?”

“How should I know?” Gravork exclaimed quickly. “Maybe it was that Lycavorian who contacted me several months ago!”

Anton leaned forward as he looked at Cihera. “Lycavorian?”

Gravork nodded. “Yes... he contacted me directly which was unusual in itself. He always wore one of those damn Spartan helmets so I never got a good look at him. And the image was always fuzzy... like it was being filtered somehow.”

“Then how do you know it was a Lycavorian?” Anton asked.

“I am not a fool!” Gravork almost shouted. “I do know what they look like! You are half Lycavorian yourself!”

Anton looked at Cihera. “What did this Lycavorian want?” Cihera asked.

“Names and contacts willing to target Union assets and people.” Gravork answered. “All I was to do was put him in contact with them. He would do the rest!”

“And what did you do?” Anton asked.

“I gave him the contact to my Evolli friends. They have no love for the Union after you destroyed them in your war!” Gravork replied. “He paid very well for the contact. Almost ten million credits!”

“And what would this contact’s name be?” Anton asked.

“Are you insane? The Evolli will kill me if I tell you that!” Gravork protested. “He’s violent, cruel and completely insane!”

Cihera pressed the barrel of her K12 against Gravork’s head. “And I will kill you if you don’t.” She stated coldly.

“I... I have no quarrel with the Union!” Gravork exclaimed. “Why are you doing this to me?”

“You are party to the deaths of over three hundred Union civilians in the attack on the Eleysi Three colony.” Cihera spoke calmly. “That is more than enough for me to vent your cranium of its contents but you are also party to much worse.”

“Worse?” Gravork gasped.

“You are party to the targeting and attempted assassination of a Queen of the Lycavorian Union.” Anton spoke getting to his feet. “You really should tell us what we want to know... for if you don’t... you will return to with us to Earth and we will give you to my Uncle Martin. Trust me when I tell you Kochab... you do not want that. My uncle is very protective of his Queens... and trying to kill one of them is certainly not the best way to get on his dinner list.”

Gravork’s eyes were wide. “I... I had nothing to do with any of that!” He screamed.

“Then give us the name.” Cihera spoke.

“I only have a location!” Gravork yelled. “He’s on Nebonese! He’s on Nebonese!”

Cihera turned to Anton. “Husband?”

Anton nodded. "Very possible. Nebonese is large... two major spaceports, half a dozen smaller ones that cater to those who don't want to be found. Four major cities and a number of smaller communities. Mostly refugees from the Coven War with the Kavalians and our own war with the Evolli. A very large population of Evolli. Pretty lawless compared to what we are used too. Slavery. Smuggling. You name it."

"Can you reach this Evolli?" Cihera asked.

"Of course I can reach him!" Gravork stated. "I have a preset meeting place on Nebonese if I need to contact him for any reason!"

"We don't actually have to bring fat man do we?" Anton asked.

Cihera smiled. "Unfortunately yes."

"He sleeps on the deck then!" Anton announced.

Las'elh came to her feet. "And what about me?" She asked quickly. "If you take him... I will never find my sister. He is the only link I have to her."

Anton looked at her. "Considering everything you just heard you will come with us and do exactly as we say... or you will disappear. Permanently. Your choice."

It was not a choice at all for Las'elh. "I will come with you." She stated.

Cihera grabbed Gravork's arm. "Then let us leave this place and contact Armetus." She spoke. "We'll let him decide what to do with you when we are done Gravork. I grow tired of your stench already."

Las'elh's eyes were wide once more. "Armetus?" She gasped. "The... the head of the Krypteria? You... you know him?"

Anton looked at her as he bent over the body of the dead guard. "We know him quite well." He said. "We work for him."

"Wait... I am in Elven Intelligence." Las'elh said. "Even I know that the only ones who work directly for him are..."

Cihera looked at her and smiled. "Yes." She said. "Shall we go?"

YOCETU

Gareld threw down the piece of wreckage from the crashed TYPE II and looked at Sandur as he walked up.

"I have pulled the men into a condensed perimeter." He spoke. "Heavy weapons are established and the creatures on this world should not trouble us through the evening."

"How many men did we lose?" Gareld asked.

"Seventeen killed within an hour of landing... another five near where we found the remains of the sail they used to escape their ship. We found a dead lizard like creature nearby, a pool of blood under the hanging straps." Sandur spoke.

"She is injured then... but obviously alive." Gareld spat. "And that Pureblood bitch and her abomination of a son are helping her."

Sandur nodded slowly. "It would appear that way." He answered. "The men... they are frightened Gareld. They do not want to move beyond the perimeter we have established here. Some of the creatures that attacked our men... even I have never seen them before. Large arachnid like beasts with armored skin and piercing fangs."

Gareld nodded. "We will not move before first light." He spoke. "The ship has detected no one leaving the surface so that means they are hiding just as we are. Waiting until daybreak. I hope they are in a place as filthy and open as we are!"

Sandur nodded. "I will tell the men." He spoke.

"Sandur... make sure we maintain a constant watch this night." Gareld spoke. "We do not need one or more of the creatures that inhabit the night here getting through our perimeter."

Sandur nodded once more. "I agree."

Gareld watched him turn and move away and he looked up into the star filled sky. "I hope you are as uncomfortable as you have made me Esther! When I find you... you will pay for everything you have put me through." He muttered.

IMMORTAL HUNTING CAMP

Unlike Gareld and his men, Esther and the others were very safe and comfortable. The Immortal camp, one of six spread across the surface of the planet, was built into the side of the mountain behind them. The main entrance was reinforced High Coven Vandium steel layered within a meter of solid granite. No creature that lived on Yocetu could penetrate the main entrance. The inside of the camp was broken into several rooms leading off of the large main room. Inexpensive or homemade furniture was scattered about the main room, along with several food dispensers and a communications panel. There were two small barrack like rooms off one side of the main room, each capable of holding ten Immortals. A small but well stocked medical clinic branched off the main room, and then an armory and cold storage area for the trophies they would store here until returning to Kranek.

Esther finished spreading the brownish colored ointment over the large hole in Normya's leg and then dropped the self adhering patch over the wound. Thankfully she had not been awake when Esther had removed the branch. Normya hissed softly as the nanofilaments dug into the skin of her leg and sealed the bandage to her flesh. She looked up as she rested her hand on Normya's leg.

"You've been through quite a lot young lady." She spoke with that soothing lilt in her voice. "I recommend waiting until the morning before you shift to fully heal the wound. You are drained... and you lost a lot of blood. Luckily it did not break your bone."

Normya's eyes drifted to the body lying in the medical clinic. The bed was easy to see from where she sat on one of the long couches. The body on the medical bed was wrapped tightly in pure white cloth which could be seen through the thick plastic covering. "Toral?" She said softly as fresh tears came to her eyes. "How did he die? Not one of those..."

Esther turned back and looked at the body of the male elf. She had been surprised when Tir'ut and Fash'ka had conducted a brief but formal Akruxian farewell ceremony, reverently wrapping the elf's body in the sheet with his hands crossed over his chest. They had cleaned his body of blood and gore and Esther thought he looked quite peaceful when they finally covered his face. "No." Esther replied. "As he was falling through the trees he must have struck a large limb. It broke his back cleanly on impact. When his parachute snagged and yanked him back up it snapped his neck. He felt nothing Normya Leonidas." Esther turned back to look at her. "He... he was special to you?"

Normya's moist eyes turned back to her. "He was my co-pilot since I graduated the Academy." She answered. "I think he... I knew he wanted there to be something else. There wasn't... but he was a good friend."

Esther looked at her. "You have never lost someone close to you have you?" She asked softly.

Normya shook her head slowly. "I was too young to fight in the Evolli War." She answered.

Esther nodded her head. "Be thankful for that child. I understand there were parts of that war that were especially hideous. At least that is the information we got out here in The Wilds. The Evolli are not nice individuals."

Normya's emerald eyes shifted to where the two Immortal men came into the room from what appeared to be an armory of some sort and talking in soft whispers. Her eyes went back to Esther once more filled with fear. "They are... they are..."

Esther nodded with a smile. "Yes Normya Leonidas... you can say the word. They are not ashamed of what they are. They are Immortals. Akruxian."

"You... he... he is your son?" Normya gasped. "How?"

Esther nodded again, her smile even brighter and filled with a small amount of humor. "Child... you are old enough to know where children come from. Tir'ut is my oldest with his father yes. That is why his skin tone is different and his bone spurs not as pronounced."

"He can... he can blur!" Normya stated.

Esther smiled brightly. "And use the shadows." She stated proudly as any mother would. "Quite well in fact."

"I thought... I thought Immortals served purebloods like yourself." Normya asked.

Esther nodded. "They still do within the High Coven. We however are not part of the High Coven." She replied. "Tir'ut's father and I broke his tribe away from the High Coven twenty-five years ago. Just before their war with the Kavalians started. Tir'ut was born fourteen months later. I have three more sons with Cha'talla... but Tir'ut is the oldest as I said."

"Cha'talla!" Normya gasped again her eyes wide. "Your... your mate is... Cha'talla is dead!"

Esther saw the recognition in Normya's eyes. "You know my husband's name I see." She spoke with a smile.

"There are not... there are not many among my people who do not." Normya spoke. "We... we thought he was killed by..."

"By Veldruk... yes... we let that story stand for good reason." Esther spoke softly. "The Cha'talla everyone knew and feared died that day. He is not the Cha'talla everyone remembers. He has not been for over two decades. I was the one who found him the day Veldruk thought he killed him. I nursed him back to health and I fell in love with him. The High Lord ordered all of his children and family killed for actions which were meant only to help Cha'talla's people. He is still an Immortal... though his features are altered somewhat... but he is also very different inside. He is not the man he was twenty-five years ago. Most of his tribe escaped to follow him and we settled on Kranek. We have been there ever since."

"You... you have four children with him?" Normya asked.

Esther nodded quickly. "All fine young men." She stated again with that motherly pride. "When we settled on Kranek we numbered just under ten thousand. We have grown through the years and now our tribe has nearly doubled in size. Many Immortals who left the Coven when the war with the Kavalians began sought us out. Most stayed behind after seeing what we were building and hearing Cha'talla tell them they could be so much more. Some chose not too." She explained. "We have developed solid relationships with the two settlements nearest to ours on Kranek... one of Amarian settlers and the other of a mixture of races from within The Wilds."

"The other one... he is pure Immortal." Normya said. "He calls you mother. And the... the female... she has hair... her features are..."

"Softer?" Esther said. "Yes. Fash'ka is Cha'talla's son as well. He survived the purge of Cha'talla's family and came with us. His mother was Akruixian... and now he calls me mother. Ja'narie is pure Immortal... but her parents underwent some genetic enhancements before she was born. I am a Bio-Genetic Scientist. I was able to develop a serum of sorts that softens the features of an Immortal. Not everyone has chosen to use it... but many did. It has allowed their children to look like Ja'narie. Have hair... softer features."

"Biogenics?" Normya asked.

Esther shook her head quickly. "No... never!" She said with force. "What I did was to alter a series of genetic sequencers and produce a serum that could initiate these changes. I would never dabble in biogenics. It disgusts me."

"But not Tir'ut?" Normya asked.

Esther shook her head. "Cha'talla altered his features somewhat as I said... but not before Tir'ut was born. I wouldn't let Cha'talla change himself from the man he was simply to become more pleasing to the eye. I fell in love with an Immortal and I am not ashamed of that. Tir'ut is simply a combination of both mine and Cha'talla's genes. This is what helped me to make the serum. He has the Immortal size and strength, and he also has vampire strength and the ability to blur and wrap the shadows around himself. In essence I suppose you could say he is the first of a new breed of Immortal."

"There are more like him?" Normya gasped.

Esther chuckled. "Child... our tribe has grown because others live with us willingly and they have children. There are other purebloods that left the High Coven and have mated with Immortals when they began looking at them in the same way I do. They found their way to us through the years the same as the other Immortals. There are some Amarians among us, a few Bontawillian, a dozen or so elven females and males..."

"Elven!" Normya gasped. "As slaves!" She hissed. "Sex slaves?"

Esther's eyes darkened somewhat and she leaned back slightly. "I do understand where your reaction comes from Normya Leonidas... you are half elf and it is only natural." She spoke her voice tinged with anger. "However... while your perceptions may be accurate on a much larger scale... you need to understand that not everything is as it seems and you can not lump everyone into the same category as those you have established within your precious Union child. You..."

"Mother!" Fash'ka's voice barked. "Quickly!"

Esther got to her feet looking at Normya. "My son risked his life for you today." Esther spoke. "We have risked our lives for you to prevent a wrong. A little bit of thanks from you Normya Leonidas, would go a long way in justifying that risk." She turned and began moving to where Fash'ka was angling Tir'ut to a chair. Esther's eyes went a little wider. "Tir'ut! What is wrong?"

"It is nothing!" Tir'ut spoke as he sat down.

"Show her you mal'ai!" Fash'ka snapped. (Idiot)

Esther looked at her son as she stopped in front of him. "Show me what Tir'ut?"

Tir'ut sighed heavily and looked at Fash'ka. "Thank you brother." He stated. "I could have taken care of it. Now she will fawn over me for days."

"Just show her! It must be checked for poisons! And you are too stupid to do that!" Fash'ka snapped. "Your actions in attacking an adolescent Bancorik by yourself prove that!"

"Tir'ut!" Esther snapped. "What is your brother speaking of?"

Tir'ut looked at her and pulled aside the cloak he was still wearing. Esther's eyes dropped down and then they went wide in horror when she saw the three, needle like spikes from the tail of the Bancorik protruding from Tir'ut's lower abdomen near his waist.

"Gi ussta yah Tir'ut!" Esther exclaimed. (Oh my god) Tir'ut watched her as she pulled the cloak off his shoulders with barely a pause and saw that the spikes protruded from the back as well.

"I was going to pull them out later mother and then just take a vial of blood to heal." Tir'ut spoke almost nonchalantly.

Esther leaned over close to his side and examined the wounds reaching up to touch one of the spikes. They were coated with Tir'ut's blood, but there were no fresh drops coming from either the entry or exit wounds. She stood back up and glared at him. "You fool! You should have told me about this right away!"

"Mother it is not all that bad." Tir'ut spoke.

"You have three spikes impaling your side clean through Tir'ut, son of Cha'talla!" Esther snapped. "Do not tell me this is not bad!"

Fash'ka grinned. "See... now she is angry with you!" He said as he crossed his arms over his chest. "Whenever she starts calling us the sons of our father she is angry with one of us and that usually means she will be angry with all of us."

"P'wal dos ph'jal fridj 'zil go'h karliik 'zil dosst ilharn!" Esther snapped. (Because you are all just as pig headed as your father) "Fash'ka... sil a uns'aa l'o 'Goth russus!" (Bring me the medical kit)

Normya watched as the huge pure Immortal she now knew as Fashka turned with a chuckle and moved into the other room. Her emerald eyes went back to where Tir'ut sat in the chair, Esther kneeling next to his side now and Normya saw then the cruel looking spikes protruding from the front and back of his side. She winced slightly at the sight and watched as Tir'ut lifted his arm so that Esther could cut away the shirt he wore. He tossed the blood stained fabric to the floor and Normya took in the immense physical proportions of the man who had saved her life. His broad chest and abdomen were nearly as sculpted as she had witnessed on her father and brothers. He was heavily muscled, the definition easily seen, yet it obviously did not affect his speed or movement. He...

"He took a great risk in saving you." The soft female voice spoke from beside her.

Normya turned her head quickly and saw the female Immortal standing beside the couch she was on. Close up her features were even softer than Normya first thought, the bone spikes just barely poking above her deeply tanned skin. She watched as Ja'narie squatted next to the couch and looked at her. Her dark eyes were bright and full of intelligence, her long dark brown hair silky and looking very soft.

"You were set upon by an adolescent Bancorik daughter of King Leonidas." Ja'narie said softly. "Not a baby by any means, but not yet fully grown either. The adolescents are far more dangerous because they usually travel in packs and they are exceptionally more vicious and hard to kill. Our projectile weapons will not penetrate their hides when they reach adolescence, so we must use swords and blades to kill them." Ja'narie turned to look at where Esther was working on Tir'ut. "The adolescent Bancorik Tir'ut attacked defending you... if what Fash'ka says is true... it was within a year of reaching maturity and adulthood. These are they most dangerous of the adolescents because they live only to kill and feed. Even when the men come here for our ritual hunts they avoid Bancoriks of this age and they most certainly do not attempt to kill them with anything less than four of our kind attacking at the same time and working in concert.” Ja’narie turned back to look at her. “Tir’ut knew this... and still he attacked it anyway, to protect you.” Ja’narie’s smile was soft and friendly even though it caused her vampiric fangs to show. “Our Matriarch Mother... Esther... everything she has told you is true. Our tribe is not like the Immortals you know and have learned about Princess Leonidas. Cha’talla is not as he once was.”

“She said... she said you have elves where you live.” Normya spoke. “Immortals... they keep elves... they keep elves as slaves.”

Ja’narie shook her head. “Not in our tribe.” She spoke firmly. “That is not something Cha’talla or Esther would ever allow. The elves Esther speaks of... seven females and four males... they are honored members of our tribe. The females are the Blessed Wives of seven Immortals from our tribe... just as Esther is to Cha’talla and they have many happy children together. They were rescued from a pirate ship over a decade ago. There were more... but the rest chose to return to their homes after swearing never to reveal we existed. Those that stayed with us had lost everything to the pirates and had nothing to return too. The male elves are older and they are honored teachers among my people now. As Esther told you... not everything is as it seems or has been taught to you.” Ja’narie turned back and looked at Tir’ut. “Tir’ut... he has been taken with you since first hearing your voice in your distress call. He said there was strength in your voice even in the midst of combat and fear. At the very least... when you are able... you should thank him for saving your life.”

“Who... who are you?” Normya asked.

Ja’narie smiled. “My name is Ja’narie... and in several weeks I will be Fash’ka’s Blessed Wife. And it is a day I have waited many years for. Set aside what you have learned up until now daughter of Leonidas. You will see it is nothing like what you have been taught.”

Normya watched her stand back up and move over to Esther’s side as she slowly pulled the second spike out of Tir’ut’s abdomen. Fash’ka was standing in front of him, Tir’ut’s hand gripping his brother’s shoulder as he clenched his teeth while his mother slowly withdrew the spikes. Normya’s eyes grew slightly wider when his head came up and she saw vampire cobalt blue in his eyes as he settled them upon her.

The brightest cobalt blue she had ever seen in her life.

LIMIAN JAL-14 ON COURSE FOR NEBONESE

“Nebonese? I haven’t been there in over five hundred years” Armetus spoke from within the holo transmission. “That fits though... it has a large Evolli population and it would be relatively easy for them to hide. Your accommodations have been made. Two suites on the eightieth floor in Sangtal. Same cover as before. I’m having some additional items sent to you when you arrive. Any additional information on this Lycavorian?”

Anton shook his head. “That is what we hope to obtain from the Evolli, but Cihera is questioning Gravork anyway. He is sticking to his story for the most part. The Lycavorian contacted him, he was wearing his helmet and the holo transmission was not very clear. He wanted to know of people willing to go after Lycavorian assets and targets. He seems much calmer now that we got him off Talbor Seven. Almost as if he feels safer with us than on the planet.”

“That is interesting.” Armetus spoke.

“You think it was the King’s brother, don’t you Armetus?” Anton asked.

Armetus nodded. “That would be the most likely hypothesis right now.” He replied. “It would also explain what the King and Andro think may have been an attack on Anja and Aricia as they were returning from Hadaria. The attack on the Eleysi Three colony was only to cover their real purpose. I wish Andro would have left one of two of the scum alive to question.”

Anton chuckled. “After Alba Tau... and attempting to shoot Eliani and Tharua in the back? You ask too much of him Armetus.”

Armetus nodded. “Yes.”

“If it was Uncle Martin’s brother... you would think he would be more discrete in his actions.” Anton spoke. “Actively seeking to support terrorist acts within our borders would be paramount to war itself. Especially using this Gravork as the initial contact. Since he became known as the one selling T19s, he has become very popular. Almost too popular.”

“Yes... well I want to say that war is not something these Kavalians would shy away from.” Armetus spoke softly lifting the mug of tea. “Though why they would do these things when they are supposedly beginning their final preparations to invade the High Coven again is not something I am able to understand. I would think they want to keep us out of the war and that is why this delegation is here on Earth now. To make sure we don’t enter the war for any reason and keep an eye on the High Coven. Did you secure this Gravork pig’s records as well Anton?”

Anton nodded. “Cihera and I were going to start going through them after speaking with you or sometime in the morning. Surprisingly... he kept very thorough records.”

“And you say he seems happy that he is with you?” Armetus said.

“Yes.”

“That is odd and it sticks in my head for some reason. Be mindful of everything on Nebonese boy.” Armetus spoke. “We have a small detachment of Drow who live there, so having Cihera move around without her disguise would probably be best. They own a small shop in Sangtal. I’ll send the details to you with your packet.”

“And what of this Las’elh?” Anton asked.

“I spoke with Colonel Su’ave, the head of Elven Intelligence. This Las’elh... she is rogue Anton.” Armetus spoke. “She’s been rogue for almost four years now. Her younger sister supposedly died in a transport accident, but Las’elh never believed the official results of the investigation. She’s been conducting her own inquiry since then. She was vetted out of EI because she refused to stop what she was doing and never believed the reports. She’s wanted by Elven authorities for breaking several laws as well as injuring a senior member of their legislative body.”

“Why didn’t she believe them?” Anton asked.

“Su’ave said it was over some small irregularities within the internal analysis itself.” Armetus replied. “Irregularities that Las’elh said proved her sister and the others on the ship did not die.”

“Did her sister die in an accident Armetus?” Anton asked.

Armetus looked at him in the communication. “You know we don’t get involved in the internal politics of member worlds Anton.” He spoke.

“That wasn’t the question I asked Armetus?” Anton spoke.

“I looked over the reports briefly after speaking with Su’ave.” Armetus replied with a sigh. “There were some inconsistencies in the reporting and investigation itself that lend some small credence to what she was saying.”

“And what was she saying?” Anton asked.

“Anton...”

“Armetus... we have her on our ship.” Anton spoke calmly. “I can ask her... but I would much rather ask you since she has not garnered a whole lot of trust so far in her actions.”

“She believes the disappearance or death of her sister is related to the disappearance and similar death of almost a hundred elf females over the past fifteen years.” Armetus spoke. “All of them disappeared or died under suspicious circumstances from what I saw. All of them were young... under two hundred years of age. The inquiries were closed due to lack of information by local authorities. Su’ave said there was not enough supporting information to have EI open their own investigation, so this Las’elh went rogue and started doing it on her own. She and her sister were very close it seems.”

“Does Colonel Su’ave know we have her with us?” Anton asked.

Armetus shook his head. “No... I said that a couple of agents ran into her on Talbor Seven during transit. He was going to dispatch an EI Recovery Team to pick her up.”

Anton’s eyes narrowed now. “Really? Why not just let her rant and rave if there is no evidence to support what she claims.”

“Anton it is against our charter to get involved with internal politics. You know this.” Armetus spoke. “If we could... I would. There are too many things that don’t add up in regards to her. We can’t however. Not without a direct approval from Dysea of For'mya. You can leave her with the Drow detachment on Nebonese if it makes you feel better. Send her back here and I will see what I can do for her. Su'ave would not lie to me... but EI also does not have the resources we do. They do not fully believe in our line of work, and they do not have the trained personnel to do what we do."

Anton nodded his head from the pilot's seat of the JAL-14 Leisure Transport. "Very well Armetus. I'll contact you as soon as we get settled into our suite in Sangtal and relay to you any new information Gravork has given us."

"Nebonese is a lot more lawless Anton." Armetus said. "Especially the outskirts of the cities. Both of you watch yourselves. I do not want to have to explain to your parents why our two best agents got caught with their guard down."

"We know." Anton said with a smile. "We will be cautious Armetus."

Armetus nodded. "I'll look for your contact in three days." He said.

Anton got up from his chair and moved to the door, passing his hand over the small panel and then stepping into the large main area of the JAL-14. His eyes took in Las'elh as she sat on one of the comfortable couches and looked up at him as he left the cockpit. The door to the next compartment opened and Cihera stepped through, her shimmering white hair still damp from the shower and the contacts gone from her eyes revealing her normal and radiant amber colored eyes. Anton smiled and felt a surge of desire sweep through him for his Drow mate. Las'elh came to her feet quickly, her eyes wide as she watched Cihera step up to Anton and share a deep kiss of passion with him.

Anton grinned as his mate pulled her lips back from him. "I see you were happy to get the coloring out of your hair." He said.

Cihera smiled. "Carians... I hate how it makes my real hair so greasy."

Las'elh watched them with wide eyes. She had never met a Drow elf in person before as she had never had cause to go to Earth where the majority of them lived and worked. She only knew what the reports she had read told them. Many of them had been tortured horribly by the High Coven when they controlled Earth, but they had survived and even built their own city not far from the capital of Earth. The half vampire Drow scouts were renowned throughout the Union for their actions with the King on Ukway as well as Alba Tau and other planets during the war. They were said to possess all the skills of a vampire but none of the usual needs such as having to drink blood. Even the children that had been born since still retained many of these vampiric skills. They were said to be deeply devoted to their Drow Queen who was herself Vice President of Earth and their loyalty to King Leonidas was completely unequivocal. Las'elh had also heard the Drow had an almost surreal beauty to them with their amber eyes, pure white hair and dark skin tones. Looking at Cihera now... Las'elh suddenly did not doubt that in the least.

In many instances Las'elh knew they would be the spearhead of any military operation the Union conducted. And it was rumored that Armetus had almost a dozen Drow working directly for him, and no one doubted the skills of the leader of the Krypteria. If this man and woman worked directly for Armetus... their skills would far surpass anything Las'elh could call upon.

"Where is Gravork?" Anton asked as he went to the dispenser and got them both a mug of coffee.

"I slipped him a sedative before I went to shower." Cihera spoke with a smile. "He will sleep the majority of our trip to Nebonese thank the gods. I had absolutely no desire to listen to his whininess for the entire trip. Did you speak with Armetus?"

Las'elh's eyes grew wider as Anton nodded and he held out the mug to his mate. "Yes. He will have things prepared for us when we get there."

Cihera nodded as she sipped the coffee. "Good."

"You... you spoke with Armetus himself?" She gasped in disbelief.

Anton looked at her and smiled. "Yes. I told you we work directly for him." He said as he moved to the table and sat down. Cihera pulled her chair even closer to him and settled into it, draping one long leg over her husband's. "I discovered some very interesting information about you."

"Me?" Las'elh exclaimed.

Cihera smiled. "We are Krypteria Las'elh." She spoke. "When we ask for information... we tend to get it. One way or the other."

“Sit down Las’elh.” Anton spoke motioning to the third chair at the table. “Sit down and explain to us why you went rogue over this incident involving your sister and why, as we speak, there is an EI Recovery Team on its way to Talbor Seven to arrest you?”

“Why should I tell you anything?” Las’elh spoke as she remained standing.

“Why indeed?” Cihera asked looking at Anton puzzled. “What exactly did Armetus tell you my husband?”

“Right now you are wanted for breaking several laws on Elear... including the assault of a member of your parliament.” Anton spoke calmly. “And if there is an EI Recovery Team involved in your apprehension... you have done something that officials in your government do not want others to know. You have a choice here... you can tell us what we want to know... or when we reach Nebonese we will hand you over to the Drow detachment there for return to Earth where you will be questioned by Armetus and then returned to Elear.”

“You can’t!” Las’elh barked. “Please... if you do that... if you do that I will never find out where my sister is.”

“Your sister is supposed to have died in a transport accident.” Anton spoke.

“My sister did not die!” Las’elh snapped. “She is not dead! I would know if she was dead!”

“And what leads you to this conclusion? It appears that all the information that your own Elven authorities’ discovered in their investigation reveals that she did indeed die in that accident.” Anton spoke.

“It was no accident!” Las’elh spat. “Their transport was hijacked and the young women taken!”

“Taken by who?” Cihera asked.

“That is what I was on Talbor Seven for! That pig Gravork knows! He is the one who sold the information on the transport’s flight path. That much I know for sure!” Las’elh spoke.

“And why would you know this is what happened?” Cihera asked.

“Because the daughter of that Parliamentary member was on the same transport as my sister Na’lia.” Las’elh spat. “She is now safely back home with her family. They say she was the only one to reach the escape pods. That the others malfunctioned in some manner. One or two I can see malfunctioning! The transport had thirty-three escape pods however. More than enough for all one hundred and nineteen passengers!”

Anton looked at Cihera for a long moment and finally she nodded slightly. He then turned back to Las’elh. “Please take a seat Las’elh.” He said.

Frustration brewed within her and she yanked the chair out in anger and plopped herself into the seat, her blue eyes burning in rage. She watched Anton slide his hand across the table to the small panel and enter a code. The small panel rose from the flat surface of the table causing Las’elh’s eyes to grow a little wider.

“Spartan Seven Dash One. Code 569812. Authorize Simpson, Anton Star Commander Krypteria Three one.”

-Authorization confirmed. Simpson, Anton Star Commander. Krypteria Three One. Please state communications request?-

Las’elh looked surprised at the computer’s voice request and she looked up at Cihera who only wore a small smile.

“Spartan Three or Spartan Five. Direct link. Level Nine Encryption. Full filters. No trace.”

-Spartan Five location is Sparta. Spartan Five is Code 344. Spartan Five is unable to respond. Spartan Three location is Delmah. Code 691. Spartan Three is active.-

“Affirmative.” Anton spoke. “Connect Spartan Three then please. Level Nine Encryption and no trace.”

-Stand by-

“What are you doing?” Las’elh demanded. “Who are you contacting?”

-Connection complete. Communication accepted. Routing-

“Anton? Cihera? What is wrong?” Dysea’s voice filled the small room and her image burst into existence from the large holo emitter on the floor of the ship. Las’elh’s eyes nearly bugged out of her head as the image of the Elven Queen of Elear and the First Elven Queen of the Union shimmered slightly and then became crystal clear. Las’elh could see several Drow moving around in the background of what appeared to be a military briefing room of some sort.

“Aunt Dysea.” Anton spoke with genuine warmth in his voice as he got to his feet. “You look positively ravishing as always.”

Dysea’s head tilted slightly in the transmission. “Anton Simpson... do not try and sweet talk me. It does not work for your father and it will not work for you. What is wrong? Where is Cihera?”

“Simpson... if my daughter is...” The new voice began and Las’elh saw the extremely tall Drow warrior she knew as General/Colonel Lynwe step into the transmission.

“I am fine mother.” Cihera spoke with a smile now causing Las’elh’s eyes to go even wider.

“Cihera... why are you contacting Dysea on her private channel?” Lynwe asked. “What is going on?”

“I will let Anton explain mother. He knows most of it since he talked to Armetus.” Cihera replied.

“Anton?” Dysea spoke.

“Something has come up in the course of our investigation Aunt Dysea.” He spoke.

“Something that you do not want Armetus to know?” Dysea asked.

“Not at the moment. It concerns a member of the elven parliament and some missing elven females.”

Anton spoke.

Las’elh saw Dysea’s eyes narrow. “Missing females? Missing from where?”

“There are at least a hundred, possibly more. Taken from different spots within the Union and The Wilds from what I understand. All of them listed as dying in accidents and such.” Anton spoke. “We have it on good authority that these young women did not die... and indeed were abducted by unknown parties.”

“Abducted? By who? For what?” Dysea snapped.

“That is information we don’t have at the moment.” Anton spoke. “We were hoping you could help us obtain it.”

“Where did you get this information Anton?” Dysea asked.

“I gave it to them my Queen!” Las’elh spoke now as she stood up from the table.

“And you are?” Dysea spoke.

“I am... I was a Commander in EI Milady.” Las’elh spoke quickly. “One of the missing elf females was my younger sister.”

“You speak in the past tense when concerning your status Commander.” Dysea spoke. “Why is that?”

“I was... I was vetted out because I did not believe the official report of what happened. I began my own investigation and discovered all was not as it seemed. I was vetted out to keep my silence.” Las’elh said.

“Las’elh? You... you are the young woman who assaulted Minister Cunlaut several years ago!” Dysea said.

Las’elh lowered her head. “Yes Milady... that is true.”

Dysea’s eyes turned in the transmission. “Anton?”

“You know what Cihera and I are investigating Aunt Dysea?” He spoke.

Dysea nodded. “Yes.”

“The contact we have made concerning our situation also appears to be involved in these so called disappearances of elven females. It appears he may be involved in both these events.” Anton spoke.

“What do you mean?” Dysea asked.

“It is possible... however unlikely... but it is possible what we are investigating is somehow linked with these disappearances.” Anton spoke. “This Kochab Gravork seems to be involved in quite a bit more than weapons deals.”

“Does Cihera share this feeling Anton?” Dysea asked.

“I do Dysea.” Cihera spoke.

“There is an EI Recovery Team going to Talbor Seven to arrest Las’elh here.” Anton spoke. “That by itself warrants something is not right.”

Dysea looked at Las'elh in the transmission. "You are not on Talbor Seven I take it?" Dysea asked. She held up her hand quickly as she saw Anton begin to speak. "Don't answer that! And no... an EI Recovery Team being sent to arrest her implies there is much more going on. Kinsoaurgai and I have given specific orders on the use of Recovery Teams, and this was not one of them. I assume you have documentation on everything you have discovered Commander?"

Las'elh nodded quickly. "Yes Milady!"

"Give it to Anton and Cihera. They will send it to me and I will review it." Dysea spoke. "Lynwe and I need to finish what we are doing now... but I will review it with For'mya tonight after our dinner with the Kavalians."

"Yes my Queen!" Las'elh spoke with new found hope in her words.

"Keep her with you and Cihera for now Mandri." Dysea said. "Either For'mya or I will contact you sometime tomorrow."

Anton nodded. "Is everything alright Tenna? You seem distracted." He said genuinely concerned.

Dysea shook her head. "I am fine. Commander Las'elh?"

"My Queen." Las'elh spoke instantly.

"You travel with the son of my Nauta Melme's brother and the daughter of two of my dearest friends." Dysea spoke. "If I discover there is something to what you say Commander... I will pursue it to the fullest. If however... you are making this all up over the loss of your sister and harm comes to one of them... the EI Recovery Team will be the least of your concerns. I will find you and bury you myself. Is that clear?"

"Yes my Queen."

"Good. Anton... I will be waiting for your transmission." Dysea spoke. "Cihera... say goodbye to your mother and then we must go."

Lynwe came into the transmission again and Cihera smiled. "Xuil udossta dumoas dos helothannin dalharil." (With our blessing you travel daughter)

"Dosst dumoas Usstan mir wun ussta xukuth ilhar." Cihera replied. (Your blessing I hold in my heart mother)

"Be mindful of him Cihera." Lynwe stated sternly looking at Anton. "He is just as wild as his father."

Cihera laughed. "I will mother."

"The spirit of the King's grandfather watch over you both. Until next time." Lynwe said as the transmission faded.

Anton chuckled as he returned to the table. "We must really tell them we are married soon Cihera." He said. "Lynwe doesn't seem to like me very much."

Cihera laughed and kissed his cheek. "We will." She said. "We will."

"You... you have the private channel for Queen Dysea?" Las'elh asked them still in shock. "Who else are you able to contact?"

"There are advantages to being my father's son." Anton spoke. "Namely... we do not have to wait around for permission or intelligence. We go straight to the source. You heard her Las'elh. Give me what you have and we will go from there."

Cihera nodded. "If Dysea says she will review it... you can rest assured she will. And all of us need to get some sleep." She said coming to her feet. "Commander... the couch there is yours since I doubt you want to sleep in the same bed as Gravork. Everything on our ship is coded to us alone. You will not be able to do anything should you think up some crazy scheme. We may have decided to help you up to this point... but that does not mean we trust you."

"If Gravork... if the Kochab has the only sleeping quarters... where will the two of you sleep?" Las'elh asked.

Anton got up and went to the wall panel. He touched several buttons on the panel and the wall opposite the table came down revealing a large bed. He began stripping out of his clothes as he made his way to the bed. Las'elh watched him with wide eyes and turned to look at Cihera who was also stripping out of the clothes she wore. Las'elh couldn't help but watch as she uncovered her soft, satin like dark skin.

"We sleep there." Cihera spoke. "As we always do. I suggest you get some sleep Commander. We are going to have some very long conversations tomorrow while we sort all of this out."

Las'elh watched her turn and walk over to the bed. That she was completed naked in front of a stranger did not seem to faze her in the least. Las'elh admired her long legs and flawless ass while she lowered herself into the bed next to Anton. Cihera looked at her, her firm breast jutting outward as Anton gathered her into his arms.

“Get some sleep Commander. We'll see you in the morning.” Anton spoke before reaching up and turning the lights down.

SPARTA ROYAL VILLA

He was not what she had expected.

Jalersi had found her heart rate and pulse increasing the closer they drew to the Royal villa. Since discovering this was Pusintin's brother Jalersi had done nothing but wonder what he would be like. What kind of man could so utterly defeat her mate that he would be sullen and withdrawn for nearly two years upon his return to her? What kind of man could inflict the damage done to her husband in the form of the injuries to his body? She had seen Pusintin fight on many occasions, and she had seen him train. He was very nearly without equal among her people, yet this man had beaten him down in a way nothing ever had.

Jalersi had worn her finest dress this evening, something she had ordered made for her by Kavalian tailors out of High Coven silken fabric. It was royal blue in color and fell almost to her ankles. Her abdomen was bare with a single asymmetrical shoulder strap that accented her large breasts, and a front slit that came almost all the way up to her crotch. She wore her shiny, platinum blond hair very long and flowing over one shoulder. She knew that women within the Union were much more open about their style of dress, and they were allowed enormous freedom in the styles of clothes they wore. She knew from the Lycavorian Netnews reports that for gatherings such as this, the Queens would always dress elegantly and quite provocatively as well. She wanted to insure she was dressed in a similar manner. Jalersi had been surprised at the dress that Athani appeared in the lobby wearing and she could barely contain her outburst of laughter at the look of disbelief on Qurot's face when he viewed her. It was a dress Athani had chosen to purchase during their lunch recess this very day. She had apparently seen it and couldn't resist buying it when the store's owner had said she could have it to her for this evening with little problem. It was also a floor length gown, blue green in color which matched Athani's eyes. The dress left her shoulders bare, wrapping tightly around Athani's own firm breasts and then splitting open to reveal her abdomen before coming back together just above her navel. It was slit up her right leg to the outside of her tanned thigh, and then both sides of the dress were cut into two openings which exposed the skin of her hips and very trim waist. Even Jalersi had to admit it looked as if she had been poured into the dress. Athani was most certainly going to take advantage of her time here on Earth to experience the freedom given to females within the Union, regardless of what her future mate thought or did. And there was very little Qurot could do to stop her and he knew that.

Qurot, Pian and Karun had all opted to wear their uniforms, Pian rejoining them after being released from the hospital. Unlike Qurot's wild and tangled coat of fur, Pian's light brown coat of hair was impeccably groomed and trimmed. He actually looked very handsome to Jalersi and she silently chastised herself for such thoughts. Pusintin's depression in the first years after returning had pushed her away and right into Pian's arms for a single night of blistering, hot and sweaty sex. Jalersi did not know why it had happened, but it had, and Pian had fucked her senseless that night. She barely had the presence of mind to keep him from fully seating his huge cock inside her, pulling her down around the thick bulb at the base of his shaft and locking them together for hours. She would certainly have become pregnant with his child had he done that, but something had kept him from doing that very thing, even without her plea that he don't. It would have gotten both of them killed when it was discovered and apparently he valued his life and career more than his pleasure and her. This had angered Jalersi to some extent. It angered her that he did not care enough for her to lock them together as he filled her with his cum; even after so many years of saying he wanted her and no one else. Soon after this night Pusintin began to come out of his self imposed depression and Jalersi had devoted herself to him. She had forgotten that night, swearing to herself it would never happen again, even as every time she saw him the memories would come flooding back.

Karun had been very quiet on the trip to the Royal Villa, and that had Jalersi wondering as well. Her oldest son was always reserved and quiet, never giving council unless asked for it specifically, but tonight he seemed more distracted than Jalersi had ever seen him. Jiss and Matuarr wore their formal Legislative Vestments and were content to talk with each other and Jalersi on the trip to the Royal Villa. It was not a long ride in the extended Lifter, but it was exceptionally beautiful. The towering pine trees and mountains in the distance truly made for a magnificent backdrop to the Royal Villa.

They had been greeted by the Prime Minister and her mate, a tall, well built Spartan male as well as Queen For'mya outside the main entrance to the Villa. For'mya was dressed in a stunning dress similar to Athani's in many respects, but a light crème in color. They were led into the Villa and all of them were struck at the simple elegance in how the interior was decorated. There was nothing extravagant in the least, the furniture appearing to very old but cared for meticulously. For'mya directed them through the main room with the large fireplace, and they caught only a small glimpse of two Durcunusaan soldiers as they walked the perimeter in the distance. On the patio Jalersi discovered that the Governor of Sparta had joined them for dinner, and it was here she was introduced to him and her husband's mother.

Gorgo.

Pusintin had not spoken of her very often after that day, only to say she had betrayed him in the vilest of ways. Abandoned him to fate and left him to die. Gorgo stood next to Riall, who wore his formal dress uniform as well, the medals and ribbons decorating his chest signifying many centuries of fighting the High Coven. Her dress was a very elegant wrap, a rich dark green in color and worn to highlight her still very attractive figure. Gorgo smiled at her when they were introduced, shook her hand warmly, but her eyes were cold and emotionless. Those same eyes softened somewhat when they fell upon Karun, but not by much Jalersi saw. Karun for his part gave no sign that she was his grandmother, and Jalersi knew that Pusintin would be happy about that.

And then For'mya took her hand and motioned back towards the house and introduced him.

Martin Leonidas.

Aricia Leonidas occupied his right arm, the Persian red haired Queen Anja his left. The second of his two elven Queens walked next to Anja, hand in hand with the dark haired pureblood vampire Isabella. All of them wore breathtaking dresses that accented their incredible figures and she even found herself admiring how stunning his vampire Queen was. Jalersi also noticed that all of them had exceptionally long hair. Martin Leonidas apparently liked his Queens with long hair. He stood just over two meters in height, perhaps an inch shorter than Pusintin's six foot three Jalersi calculated. He wore a formal dress uniform as well, eight rows of ribbons decorating his chest with the crimson shoulder boards of royalty clearly displayed. He was thickly muscled, slightly more so than Pusintin. His black hair was also long, falling almost to his shoulders but tied in a neat ponytail at the back of his head. Jalersi couldn't pull her blue eyes away from the dark brown orbs that gazed upon her as if they were measuring up their next kill. She knew from the Lycavorian's own Netnews channels that he was a physically imposing figure, but after more than thirty years with her mate Pusintin, she didn't think that could faze her. Standing in front of him however, Jalersi found herself almost frightened of the man.

He had greeted her warmly enough though, taking her hand gently when he shook it and smiling openly. It was no different when he greeted the others, though he stopped for a moment when he greeted Athani and looked at her a bit longer for some reason. He made no sign that he even noticed her tail as it rested in a relaxed position along the outside of her dress. There was something else he detected in her it seemed. He shook hands firmly with Jiss and Matuarr, Almost greeting Pian in a friendly manner and nod of mutual respect. Qurot however, his face turned to stone when he greeted Qurot, apparently deciding he didn't like him right away. No doubt from the information given to him by his Queen. Jalersi watched carefully when he greeted Karun... and as with his mother, he smiled and shook his hand cordially, but there was no sign of acknowledgment in his eyes of who Karun was. Jalersi found this very odd in a way, but she let it pass. Perhaps it had to do with the conversation Karun had had with his father before leaving. Neither he nor his father had shared with her what they talked about, Karun only saying that he looked forward to his role and the reaction he would get.

He introduced all his Queens to them, and Jalersi watched intently as Isabella was greeted by the men in her party. Karun she knew would be respectful and hold in his feelings, as would Jiss and Matuarr due to their positions. She was more concerned with Qurot and Pian however and once more this night Pian surprised her by greeting Isabella with a handshake and nod of his head. Qurot simply glared at Isabella for a moment, his eyes hard. The look bounced off the vampire Queen and she dismissed Qurot with barely a thought. This only seemed to infuriate him more. Jalersi knew he had not received the respect and deference he expected and received from females within the Kavalian Empire and this angered him. Only the fact that he was within enemy territory kept him from reacting how his upbringing had conditioned him to react.

Martin Leonidas directed them into the large dining room where his half elf son Resumar appeared now, also wearing his dress uniform. Jalersi did not notice the look of pure delight from Athani when she saw Resumar, and she did not understand the look he gave her when greeting her. They waited while he greeted everyone, and then they all took seats at the large table. Jalersi next to For'mya, who sat to Aricia's right. Athani was to Resumar's left on the opposite side of the table, as he sat next to his birth mother Dysea. Anja sat to Martin's left, Isabella next to her. Qurot managed to procure the seat next to Athani before Jiss did and everyone else settled to their seats.

The meal was a mixture of ancient Greek dishes from Sparta's history, and then several more modern selections. Jalersi noticed that there were several Kavalian foods among those on the table, and she realized that the cooking staff must have gone out of their way to obtain them. Small talk was exchanged between everyone as they began to eat, and Jalersi had to admit to herself, the Kavalian dishes were exquisitely prepared. She also noticed that Resumar Leonidas sampled all of them and appeared to prefer the Vremchek Beef Spice Rolls more than anything else which delighted her sister since she was the one who told him to sample the food. As the dinner began to wind down Prime Minister Deia was the one to angle the conversation towards what Jalersi had hoped.

"The negotiations are nearly complete Milord." Deia spoke. "With final approval from you and the Senate... I believe we will have an ample supply of Notal Berries for several years to come."

Martin nodded and sat back in his chair and lifted his wine to his lips. "The application for an embassy?" He asked.

"I was hoping to present that to you tonight King Leonidas." Jalersi spoke now. "After we had the chance to show you that an embassy could go a long way to bringing our two peoples closer together."

"It has actually left me with more questions than answers." Martin spoke.

"I will answer whatever questions you ask to the best of my abilities." Jalersi spoke.

"Why now?" Martin asked simply.

"I beg your pardon?"

"Why now?" He asked again. "Why come forward now and request these things? We have had no contact with your government in nearly twenty years. What drew you out of KFI space now?"

"If I am correct Milord... we have requested negotiations in the past." Jalersi said. "Many times... and they were refused."

"And why were they refused?" Aricia asked now.

Jiss leaned forward. "Jalersi... may I?" Jalersi turned to him and nodded. "Fourteen years ago we asked for similar negotiations in regards to Tratonic Ore. The Union has the largest concentration of Tratonic Ore known to exist. We offered substantial compensation for a trade agreement. It was refused." He spoke. "Nine years ago we came forward on a proposal for Talracian Ore. That was denied."

"Talracian Ore is a strategic asset to the Union." Deia spoke. "We do not trade Strategic Assets Legislature Jiss."

"This very planet has the largest deposits anywhere in the known universe now." Jiss spoke. "Surely the Union could part with a small amount of it?"

Deia shook her head. "No."

"And our request for a Free Rights Passage four years ago... that too was refused." Jiss spoke.

"At the time we were currently involved in our war with the Evolli Triad." Isabella spoke now. "Having KFI warships crossing Union space would not have been wise."

"And now?" Jiss asked. "Many of our merchant ships have to detour almost all the way through KFI space to reach The Wilds where we do most of our trading. You do not allow us to trade with worlds that are members of the Union."

"Member worlds chose who they trade with... not the King." Deia spoke.

“Then why did the Hadarian Council of Elders refused our request for a contingent of their Healers?” Jiss asked. “Our medical facilities and training is far inferior to yours... we openly admit that. Surely you would allow us to partake of their skills.”

“I am the Queen of Hadaria.” Anja said in a heated voice. “And my people are not a commodity to be bargained for Legislature Jiss!”

“So you deny us proper medical treatment for our people. New and improved medicines that could save thousands of lives?” Jiss spoke.

“Legislature Jiss... ninety-two percent of Hadarian Healers are female.” Anja spoke. “Why exactly would I allow them to enter KFI space and be subject to the same laws that govern your own females?”

“Now you question our laws!” Matuarr spoke coming forward in his chair.

“Why do you treat your women the way you do?” Anja asked.

“That has always been our way!”

“Yet Jalersi and Athani are here now!” Dysea spoke. “Leading this delegation. Or is that only for show?”

“They are the daughters to Prefect Keleru.” Jiss spoke. “They were chosen for this delegation because of their knowledge of the Union and your ways. When we return to KFI space, Athani will become the mate to Commander Qurot. She follows the old ways in this regard... as the daughter of the Prefect should!”

Qurot laughed. “And I do so look forward to that day.” He spoke cruelly reaching out to touch Athani’s hair. His face turned darker when she slapped his hand away.

“Don’t touch me Qurot!” She hissed softly.

Qurot leaned even closer. “I will enjoy making you my mate Athani. And I will enjoy taking your purity. And when I do... I will have you resume taking your treatments and rid yourself of the tail you have allowed to grow back.”

Athani turned to look at him with savage anger in her eyes. “My purity is something you will never have!” She snarled at him.

“Qurot that is quite enough.” Jalersi barked from across the table.

Athani was sitting close to the table, her legs well hidden and out of sight. She felt the powerful hand of Resumar extend under the table and rest gently on her thigh. Her hand dropped quickly and squeezed his fingers tightly as she regained her composure and took a deep breath.

“Our laws are not the concern of the Union.” Jiss spoke showing displeasure none of them had seen before now.

“No they are not.” Martin said. “However... like you... we can chose who we wish to do business with. The items and details you have requested in the past were not acceptable to us. As Anja has told you, her people are not a commodity to be traded back and forth. The Hadarian Council of Elders refused your request. Not me.”

“And the Union Senate’s decisions to not allow us to offer compensation for what happen on Gamji?” Jiss asked. “That is what the last twenty years have stemmed from isn’t it? That one incident?”

Martin looked at him. “The Union Senate voted to authorize that.” He said. “I refused to allow it to go any further.”

“May I ask why?” Matuarr spoke. “That was the result of one rogue officer among our millions of men at arms. And if I am correct... he had faulty intelligence telling him Gamji was a staging area for an upcoming attack. He...”

“I don’t put a price on life Legislature Matuarr.” Martin spoke. “You can not compensate for the innocent lives that were taken on Gamji.”

“And our men who you slaughtered?” Qurot demanded. “You killed all of them! You left none of them alive. Not even those who were not clones!”

“They were shown far more honor in death than you showed our people in life.” Riall spoke for the first time.

“Bah... what do you know of war?” Qurot barked.

“I know more of war than you will ever know Kavalian!” Riall spat. “I was fighting the High Coven a thousand years before you were ever born. I was fighting Immortals while you were still wearing diapers... or whatever your people call them! Do not presume to know all there is to know about a person Commander. More often than not... that tactic will get you very dead.”

“Is that why you will now sign a Cease Fire Accord with the High Coven?” Jiss asked as Gorgo rested her hand on Riall’s arm to calm him. “An enemy you have fought for more years than we have. Now... after so long you will sign a Peace Agreement with them? After all they have cost your people?”

“It is a Cease Fire Accord.” Martin spoke calmly. “Nothing more. We have not fought an engagement with the High Coven in twenty-five years. This is just a way for me to show them I have no intention of getting involved in their war with you. Would you care to sign something similar? Would Prefect Keleru be open to that? I’d be more than happy to sign something like that.”

“That is not what we are here to discuss.” Jalersi spoke now trying to regain control of the conversation.

“Why not?” Deia asked. “We are all here. The men and women in this room make up the majority of who will decide on such a proposal. Why can’t we talk about it?”

“I do not have my father’s authority to speak of such things.” Jalersi said. “We are here only to work out the details of the trade pact and request an embassy.”

“Why should we grant an embassy if you are not willing to talk peace?” Panos asked from the end of the table next to Karun. “Or do you not want peace?”

“The Union has many things they will not share with others.” Matuarr spoke once more. “Peace is always preferable to war... but the Union must be willing to share what they have in order to gain that peace.”

“We are always willing to talk peace.” For’mya spoke softly. “We are just not willing to sacrifice our values or what we hold dear to obtain that peace.”

“So you are willing to die for what you hold so dear and do not share with others?” Qurot demanded.

“Why? Are you planning to attack us Commander?” Martin asked casually.

“Certainly not Milord!” Jalersi almost shouted as she came to her feet now. “Please... Milord... I can not speak on my father’s behalf in regards to what you propose. Only in regards to what we were sent here for.” She said. “I would be happy to speak with him in regards to this and what you suggest.”

Martin looked at Jalersi now and leaned back in his chair. He nodded his head slowly. “Your request for an Embassy will be ratified by the Union Senate by the end of the week.” He said. “I intend to approve that. Perhaps then maybe we can see how far your father wishes to extend this tenuous friendship.”

Jalersi nodded her head. “Thank you Milord. He will be most happy to hear that. We...”

“King Leonidas!” Karun’s voice echoed from the end of the table drawing everyone’s attention. He had waited long enough, heard enough. He looked across the expanse of the table at his uncle.

“Yes?” Martin asked.

“Milord... I would like to meet my sister.” Karun spoke.

The reaction of everyone at the table with the exception of Martin and his Queens was predictable. Jalersi’s eyes went wider than he had ever seen his mother look. “Karun... what... what are you talking about?” She gasped. “Your sister is on Cabelir.”

Karun didn’t take his eyes from Martin. “King Leonidas knows what I speak of. Don’t you sire?” He said.

“Karun... you will stop this nonsense!” Jalersi snapped.

Gorgo’s eyes were nearly as wide as Jalersi’s and she looked back and forth between her son and Karun. Even Deia and Panos wore stunned expressions.

“Martin... Martin... what is this fool boy saying?” Gorgo finally blurted turning to look at him. Martin sat in silence staring at Karun, while Aricia and Isabella’s eyes were closed, Anja simply glared at Karun and Dysea and For’mya were looking at each other.

Karun stood up straight. “I want to meet my sister.” Karun said again. “I want to meet the sister of my father’s blood. I want to meet Lisisa.”

The gasps that followed that pronouncement could not have been louder than if a bomb had gone off in the room.

SODRAG

Andro stood on the tarmac as the STRIKER DT's engine noise began to recede and the ramp began to lower. Elynth stood next to him; her powerful legs draw up underneath her body, both of them agitated and filled with anxiety from what they felt within Mindvoice coming from Sparta. As the ramp lowered they saw the massive figure of Arzoal begin to take shape waiting to move down the ramp. Her giant head was turned downward as if she was speaking with someone. As the ramp came fully down, that turned out to indeed be the case as they both spied Helen standing beside the largest of all the living dragons. Torma was only half a meter shy of Arzoal's length, and much more muscular, but the Elder Mother had thousands of years of experience on Elynth's father. When Arzoal spoke, everyone took notice of what she said.

Andro and Elynth started forward as the two females of two radically different species began moving down the ramp of the STRIKER into the coming dawn sky. Recognized without question as two of the wisest individuals in the Lycavorian Union, they were venerated by all no matter the species or member. They met about a hundred feet from the rear of the STRIKER and Arzoal lowered her head to run her snout along the back of Elynth's neck in affection. The most powerful and reserved of her grandchildren, Elynth held a special place in Arzoal's heart, for of all Isheeni's children Elynth reminded Arzoal most of herself.

Grandmother. Elynth spoke softly even as her wings fluttered gently in joy from Arzoal's loving touch.

You are looking beautiful as always Elynth. Arzoal answered.

They both turned their large heads to see Andro embrace Helen tightly and then hold her much smaller frame at arm's length.

"What is happening Feravomir?" Andro asked. "We can feel them even here."

Helen squeezed his arms and looked at Arzoal quickly before turning back to him. "Truth is happening my boy." Helen said. "A truth many of us, myself included, have tried to deny these last years. It appears we can no longer do that now, and what makes it worse is the dreadful hour we are arriving here! Tell me Androcles... are the jungle insects even awake yet?"

"Most of them never sleep. Now... what truth?" Andro asked with a smile. "What is going on? Even my mother has blocked me. My mother never blocks my probes Feravomir."

"I will tell you when we get out of this infernal heat." Helen spoke with a gentle smile. "I will leave it for you to tell your brothers and sisters. You need to send Lisisa and Denali back to Sparta on our ship however. Your father will be calling for her soon enough. Better that she already be on her way back."

Andro's eyes went wide. "Father... father found out?" He gasped.

Helen shook her head quickly. "No... it's not that. Though I fear we will need to address that sooner than we had hoped." She said. "I have spoken with your grandmother Gorgo in regards to that and we were going to approach your mothers next week. I don't think we will have that time now."

"Feravomir... what is going on?" Andro asked once more.

Helen patted his arms. "Things are beginning to happen that will shape our future young Androcles... and you must be prepared to make difficult decisions. Decisions that will not be popular with your father and some of your siblings. Can you do that?"

"Me?" Andro asked turning to look at Elynth and then back to Helen. "What decisions?"

Feravomir... now you are beginning to frighten us. Elynth spoke.

Helen smiled and looked at her before shaking her head. "Now is not the time for fear." She said. "That will come I assure you. Now... now we must conduct ourselves as we have planned." She turned back to Andro. "They are all gathered in one area?"

Andro nodded slowly even more questions filling his eyes. "Yes."

Helen nodded. "Arzoal and I could feel them once we crossed the void." She said. "They are committed and strong. They are beginning to come out from under the fog that Aikiro and the others have created. More so than we first thought. Raw I believe is a word your father would use. And you have done this in only three... four days."

We both agree however that Yuri and Vollenth will pose a problem. Arzoal spoke now. Her children less so... but still. We have a plan to address that if you will allow me to explain it to Elynth and then she can discuss it with you.

Elder Mother... are you and the others plotting? Andro asked with a grin.

Dragon Elders do not plot young Androcles Leonidas. Arzoal barked out with smug humor. We plan wisely.

Yes... it seems I have heard that before. Andro said with a smile. Elynth and I have one voice... you know this. Of course.

Good. I think you both will like it. Arzoal said.

“You know of course that they failed the obstacle course miserably.” Andro said.

Arzoal chuckled within Mindvoice. Something I believe you and Elynth failed yourselves once Carina had finished it. Twice if I am not mistaken.

Elynth brought her tail around and tapped Andro in the shoulder gently. Something I reminded my bonded one of as we flew back. She said.

She devised something that is a marvel of engineering your sister did. Arzoal spoke. Most of Mjolnir’s Hand failed it the first or second time.

Helen chuckled and began pulling him towards the Lifter. “We have much to do, and Arzoal needs to inspect the dragons. Our STRIKER will wait for Lisisa and Deni... but they need to go back.”

“If father doesn’t know... why send Denali back?” Andro asked turning back to look at her. “Won’t that just make more questions?”

Helen looked at him. “Lisisa will need him.” Helen said as they walked. “I will tell you what is happening Androcles... do not worry. You need to know what is happening, for it will help you in the decisions you make in the future.”

“I truly hate it when you speak to me like the First Oracle of our people.” Andro said. “It always makes my gut twist up in fear.”

Mine as well. Elynth said.

Helen laughed. “Arzoal... are you listening to this. The most powerful Bonded Pair in the Union behind only your fathers and you are frightened of little old me?”

Then our fathers are too proud and have not told you that you scare them as well. Elynth said. Andro and I do not have that problem.

Helen squeezed Andro’s arm as they reached the Lifter. “Do not worry. As long as you remain true to each other... you can face anything. Now go Elynth! Take Arzoal to meet these dragons and I will speak with Andro. He will fill you in when you are together again.” Helen leaned forward and sniffed Andro lightly. She looked up at him and her eyes narrowed. “And you young man... you need to leave your young bride alone for a few days or you will wear her out! What is it with you and your father that makes it so you can’t keep your hands off your mates for more than a few hours? Is it some defect in your genes?”

Elynth laughed within Mindvoice as she turned with Arzoal. I have been telling him that for a week Feravomir. She said just before she lifted into the air with her grandmother right beside her.

Andro grinned sheepishly and looked at Helen. “I can’t help it.” He said.

“Bah... typical alpha response!” Helen spoke as she moved around and began getting into the Lifter. “Only you and your father. You are trying to repopulate our species all by yourselves!”

Andro glanced upward as he saw Elynth and Arzoal heading east. [I will talk with you later Elynth my sister.] He said.

[And I with you Andro my brother.] Her voice came back to him.

Andro ducked his head and got into the Lifter. Helen was looking at him oddly as he settled next to her.

“You and Elynth are still keeping secrets from everyone I see.” She said with a sly grin. “I thought I told you about secrets.”

Andro smiled. “You did Feravomir. You are the one who taught us how to keep them.” He turned forward and looked at the Durcunusaan driver. “The Rec Center.” He said. “And contact Bren and have him tell Lisi and Deni they need to return to Sparta immediately. There is a STRIKER waiting for them here on Pad Four.”

“Yes Milord.” The man spoke before turning around and charging the Lifters engines.

Andro turned back to Helen. “Now Feravomir. Tell me what has happened.”

“...did this happen?” Gorgo exclaimed. “Martin is what that boy says true?”

The dinner had ended abruptly after Karun's demand with Martin rising to his feet and marching out of the room. Aricia and the others followed him without question and now they all sat in main room of the villa. Karun and the Kavalians had been escorted out politely but very quickly. Martin had spoken briefly with Colonel Fache who only nodded and went to do his King's bidding.

Martin stood facing the patio doors now, allowing the breeze to blow over his face as the moon crept higher. He wanted to run. He wanted to shift and run until all of this went away. He knew that was not going to happen however and he turned as Aricia stepped up to him and pressed against his side.

[We knew this day would come Beloved.] She said softly.

[I was hoping maybe not.] He answered with a nod.

[Our children are probing us Martin. Especially Andro. We have to tell them something. They can all feel our anxiety and worry.] Anja spoke from the couch where she sat between For'mya and Dysea.

[Helen just arrived in SODRAG.] Isabella spoke moving closer to Martin. [She will tell Andro and he will tell the others. Coming from her will be as if one of us told him.]

[Bella is right Martin Leonidas.] For'mya said. [We need to address this issue now and let Helen tell Andro. She is the First Oracle to our people yes... but she is also a surrogate mother to them as well.]

[This is no mistake.] Dysea said now. [Your brother knew exactly what he was doing when he sent this Karun boy here.]

"Martin Leonidas!" Gorgo snapped loudly causing him to turn to face him. "You and the others stop doing that right now! We may not be strong enough to know what you are saying, but everyone in this room can feel the tremors within Mindvoice. Tell us what is going on!"

Martin turned to face all of them. "Listen to me... we..."

"The truth Martin!" Gorgo barked.

Martin's eyes flared as he looked at his mother. "The truth!" He snapped. "The truth is that Lisisa is my daughter! Perhaps not by blood..." He saw Gorgo's eyes go wide. "...but I have loved her! I have done what my nubous brother should have done and I don't regret one single minute of that! Do not bark at me about the truth mother!"

Deia stepped forward and placed her hands on Gorgo's arms. "Mandri... we are all confused and upset... we..."

Gorgo brushed Deia's hands from her arms and stepped right up to her son and embraced him tightly tears coming to her eyes. "What is going on Martin?" She asked softly.

Martin sighed heavily, placing his cheek against the top of her head and rubbing her long hair. His mother's scent filled him and instantly calmed in. He hugged her tightly before pulling his face back. "Sit down... all of you." He said softly. He released Gorgo and turned to look at Resumar who had so far remained quiet against the wall. "Resumar?"

Resumar pushed off the wall and moved to the couch next to his mother without question. He looked at his father, his dark eyes steady. "She is my sister." He said firmly. "She has been my sister all of these years and nothing will change that father. Nothing! I don't care what this Karun says or who her real father is or may be. Even if it is true... for twenty-five years it has been this way. None of us will stop thinking like that."

Martin nodded. "For me either son. For any of us." He said.

Resumar settled next to Dysea and she took his hand in hers. Martin pulled one of the table chairs over and dropped it in front of them.

"I discovered it when Anja had to remove that thing Yuri had fused to her rib." Martin said. "On the Mindvoice ship as we were returning from Lycavore to Apo Prime. I smelled it in her blood. It was then I suspected that Pleistarchus might still be alive."

Gorgo gasped. "You... you knew then?"

"Martin... your sense of smell is that keen?" Riall asked in shock. "I knew it was very sensitive... but to detect that in Lisisa's blood after so long? How?"

Martin shrugged. "I felt something within me recognize it. Deep in the back of my head really. Some subconscious part of my brain told me what I smelled was somehow familiar. I dismissed it at first... but it wouldn't go away."

"How did you discover for sure?" Deia asked.

"I ran a Fractal DNA Splicing Sequencer Scan." Anja answered.

Deia shook her head. “A What?”

Anja smiled gently. “It’s essentially a scan that breaks down DNA strands right down to their core sequencers and what made them form. A normal DNA scan would not detect it because Martin’s blood is so pure and dominant, it normally overrides anything else. When I saw and felt his reaction I knew something was wrong so I ran the scan. Martin and Pleistarchus may be many years apart in age, but because their father’s blood was so pure, their blood is almost identical.”

Martin nodded slowly. “Anja confirmed it even more a little later as she said. I didn’t want to believe it... not after all we had been through to get her back. And then finding you mother... I didn’t want to believe it. I did the only thing I could think of, the only thing I knew would get me the truth. I had Armetus dig through all the pads and files we had in the archives here in Sparta and those we took from the Coven’s base. And then he went through anything left that Tarifa and Aihola had gathered from the base’s we knew Yuri was at just before the comet came.” Martin took a deep breath. “We discovered that Pleistarchus had been to earth six weeks prior to the comet arriving. He and his Kavalian pals were doing another recon mission for a hit on Yuri. She had apparently been meeting with Robert Moran the whole time she was supposedly with me. Every time she came back to Earth they would get together. She must have turned him at some point during that period but it was also during one of these times when Pleistarchus got to her. He thought it would be fun I guess, rape the woman you are here to whack before you kill her. He wore a SEAL Team Twelve uniform and while a bunch of others from the Air Force security team held her down, he raped Yuri for several hours.”

“Wait... how do you know all this Martin?” Panos asked.

“Armetus discovered security tapes that weren’t destroyed. They were grainy and barely useable because of their age but leave it to Armetus to find a way to restore them. They showed Pleistarchus entering the secure floor of the hospital Yuri and Moran were supposed to meet at. She thinks she got a message from me to meet her there... but it was really from my brother. He set her up.” Martin replied. “November 12th 2068. Eight weeks before the comet came. Eight weeks before Walter told her she was pregnant. In her twisted mind this only confirmed to her that it was me, because only a pureblood Lycavorian could have gotten her pregnant at the time. She had no idea that Pleistarchus was still alive.”

“But Moran is... he has fathered three children with her.” For’mya said.

Isabella nodded. “As with those who are turned among Lycavorians... it takes time for the change to fully complete itself down to the molecular level.” She spoke softly. “That is why Tina and Ben did not have any children for two years once I turned them. The changes weren’t complete inside either of them.”

“Let’s not go there.” Martin spoke looking at her.

“It was their decision m’randii.” Bella spoke softly. You know Endith would have far outlived them and the love they have for each other is just as powerful as ours. It would have killed Endith to lose them in such a way. Slowly... as they aged.”

Martin nodded. “I know... I just wish you would have told me first.”

“And that is why she has hated you so much all these years?” Deia asked now. “She believes...”

Martin nodded turning to look at her. “She thinks I am the one who raped her. When I made such a big stink about finding Lisisa afterwards, it only cemented in her twisted mind that it was me.”

“Pleistarchus knew?” Gorgo asked.

Martin shrugged. “He knew about Lisisa when he came here that day. He wanted her back... or so he said.” He replied shaking his head. “I don’t know exactly how long he knew before that and I don’t care. I was not going to allow that to happen.”

“Martin... you knew all this.” Riall asked softly. “You knew all this even when he came here and yet you never told anyone? Why?”

“Anja knew. Not everything about it... all the details... but she knew Lisisa was not my daughter. I kept it from Aricia and the others until they discovered it on their own four years later.” He said evenly. “They weren’t happy with me to say the least.”

Gorgo and Deia turned to Aricia and the others who by now all sat together on the large couch. “That... that is what happened during those six weeks isn’t it? When you all just up and disappeared? You were angry with him for not telling you?” Deia asked.

For’mya nodded slowly. “It was foolish of us we know that now. We didn’t realize that at the time however, not until after we left Earth so abruptly. But by then we had already called him some very bad names.” She looked at Martin. “Names we could not take back. We wrongly assumed... quite stupidly mind you... that if he hid this from us... what else was he hiding? We were ashamed of ourselves because none of us thought of Lisisa and what she had come to mean to all of us. We thought only of our own pride as Martin’s mates.”

Martin grinned at them from his chair as they looked on embarrassed. “Well... they were very creative names Kinsoaurgai.” He said.

Gorgo looked at him aghast. “Martin how... how can you joke at a time like this?” She stammered. “What are we going to do?”

Martin turned his head and met her eyes. “What do you want me to do mother?” He asked. “Would you rather I throw myself from Torma’s back at twenty thousand feet and allow myself to smash into the earth? Shit... with the way my luck is going lately I’d probably survive that.”

“I am being serious!” She snapped.

Martin got to his feet. “So am I mother. The moment Yuriko told me that Lisisa existed... she became my daughter. The instant I set foot on Lycavore she became my daughter! I was meant to find her that day! I was meant to find her... because she was part of the ones Canth told me I needed to find. And in finding her... she led me to you! For twenty-five years I have considered her nothing but my daughter! She is a Leonidas! Period! She is just as much my daughter as Eliani or Carina or Normya or Zarah, Retta or Nara. You... you did not sense the happiness in her when I found her mother. You did not feel the freedom that bonding to Jeth granted her. I could feel it. The sense of peace and utter completeness after almost five hundred years of running and slavery and being treated like she was something lower than dirt! I had no intention of taking that from her. None! My dear brother Pleistarchus and Yuri can go right straight to hell if they think I’m going to let it happen now!”

“Aovi.” Aricia muttered softly.

“Spoken like a true Spartan father!” Panos muttered softly with pride in his eyes.

“Well it is obvious Pleistarchus’s own mate did not know this.” Deia spoke. “Not with her reaction and the look on her face when Karun revealed this to us.”

“But why do this now? In the middle of their trade talks and desires for an embassy?” Riall asked. “What purpose does it serve?”

“Well... if we needed any more proof that they are not here for peace, I believe we got it tonight.” Deia said. “Whether it was intentional or not, they revealed to us that they are far more concerned as to why the Coven is here and what we have. Things that we won’t give them.”

“Sibfla!” Anja spat. “We already knew that. I can’t begin to imagine what they would do to several hundred of my Healers if they went into Kavalian space. It turns my blood cold just to think about it.”

“I think it also showed that this Jalersi... that she is not the one pulling the strings.” Panos spoke. “Her father may have put her in charge of this delegation, but those other two... Jiss and Matuarr... they are getting their instructions from someone else.”

“Yes... the question remains from whom?” Deia said. “This Keleru is shrewd... we have seen that in how he dealt with the remnants of their old empire, not to mention the deals he has brokered with the Simian people as well as how he dealt with the Zaleisians.”

“Do not forget his Mutual Protection Treaty with The Icalro Alliance and The U’zolut Consortium.” Dysea spoke up.

“As if we want anything from those fools. Privateers and Warlords is what they are.” Riall snapped turning to look at Martin. He stood behind Gorgo, his hand on her shoulder affectionately. “I wouldn’t be surprised if this Commander Qurot character is getting his instructions from someone else as well Martin.” Riall said.

“We refuse them the embassy then.” Isabella said now.

Deia shook her head. “We can’t. Martin has already told them it we be ratified by the end of the week. If we back out now they will scream to the heavens.”

“Let them scream!” Resumar snapped.

“If only we could Res.” Dysea said squeezing his hand. “If we go back on the deal now... they will only take it to the public forum. They will draw in our allies and those governments that support us but are not part of the Union and demand to know why. We can't tell them we are refusing them because of Lisisa. And we most certainly can not tell them we are training the Coven's dragons."

"We'll catch some backlash with this Martin. They'll hold it over our heads. Try to get more concessions out of us." Deia spoke.

Aricia leaned forward. "Let them try." She said. "Lisisa and Eliani are almost as loved as their brother Andro among our people. Across the entire Union. Lisisa has forged her reputation on her own merits with her own actions. Hers and Jeth's. She and Jeth are widely recognized as the strongest Bonded Pair behind Martin and Torma and Andro and Elynth, even among those of Mjolnir's Hand."

"Aricia is right." For'mya spoke. "Our people accepted her without question as Martin's daughter. They saw what he went through to get her back safely. They know she is half vampire as two others of our children are. They do not care about this. As Lisisa has so often said... her life did not begin until she came to be with us. That is how our people see her. Nothing this Karun or his fool father attempt to do will ever change that perception of her."

"But even when they discover she is Pleistarchus's daughter and not Martin's?" Riall asked.

"They will see a Lycavorian Union and Spartan King who acted on the information that she was his daughter." For'mya continued. "And when he discovered that she was in fact the daughter of his brother, who we all thought dead and who is a traitor to his people as well as a bad father, they will see Martin took it upon himself to step in as the father she never had... and do this without question. They will see that Martin was the one to show Lisisa her true path. They certainly will not hold it against her. She had no say in whom her parents were, and she is most certainly not to blame for one of them trying to kill her for nearly five hundred years of her life. They will not see Lisisa acting as her real father has done. They will see her acting as the man she now calls father, as a true Spartan warrior and woman. And they will see who we call daughter without indecision or misgiving."

"Are you going to let him see her Martin?" Riall asked now. The question that all of them dreaded. "For all we know this could just be a ploy to get intelligence. As Aricia just said... if they know this about her and Jeth, their status among Mjolnir's Hand, perhaps it is a way for them to learn to defeat the fear of dragons so ingrained in their people."

Martin met his eyes. "That is not my decision to make. We agreed a long time ago to never impress our will on our children. I don't intend to start now. This will be strictly Lisisa's decision, but she would never put Jeth, our people or the dragons at risk. She should be on her way back here as we speak on Helen's STRIKER."

"Who is going to tell her Martin?" Gorgo asked now in a much softer tone of voice.

"I will tell her." He said softly. "It should be me. I'll give her the rest of the night once she arrives and tell her in the morning."

"And... and what if she decides she wants to meet him?" Gorgo spoke. "What if she wants to meet this Karun?"

"I can't stop her mother." Martin spoke.

"And what if she decides she wants to meet her real father? What if she wants to meet Pleistarchus Martin? Not that I believe she will... but what if she does? What will you do then my son?"

Martin met his mother's eyes. "I guess we'll cross that bridge when we come to it now won't we mother." He answered.

Gorgo gazed at him for a long moment. "I truly hate it when you say that." She spoke finally.

Martin nodded. "Yeah... me too."

HADARIA
CAPITAL OF UNOPA
MINISTRY OF MEDICINE AND RESEARCH
OFFICE OF PRINCESS SIVANA

"You are sure of the results Imaoi?" Sivana asked.

The face of the blond woman in the transmission nodded quickly. "I ran the test three times Sivana." She answered confidently. "The results were the same; within point two spatial sets of the metaphase chromatin."

“The others Imaoi?” Sivana asked. Like her sister Anja, Princess Sivana insisted that her staff and research teams refer to her by name. They worked together nearly every day, spending hours upon hours with each other, and it was silly to stand on such formality. This one thing, more than anything, endeared the twin sisters to those close to them like nothing else.

“All of them at point seven or higher.”

Sivana leaned back in her chair. “And can you determine how long this has been taking place?”

“I can’t be precisely accurate... but it appears based on cell regeneration and epigenetic mechanics I’d say at least twenty years. Probably closer to twenty-five.” Imaoi answered.

“And her levels have held at point two spatial sets?” Sivana said softly.

Imaoi nodded. “Yes... and her Tryptophan levels are nearly off the charts and this is what allowed the reversal of the biogenic compounds they were using. That and...”

Sivana looked at her. “What?”

“We know they were using a combination of spliced DNA Sivana. Anja and the Divine one discovered it was mainly from Elves and Lycavorian hosts. That is what Queen Dysea found was happening on Elear.” Imaoi spoke.

“Yes.” Sivana said.

“It was done in very small amounts mind you, but over the years those L-stereoisomer strands, which we all know Lycavorian blood is flooded with, that L-stereoisomer bonded at the molecular level with her core DNA strands. It essentially created a minutely smaller reaction in her core cells.”

Sivana nodded thoughtfully. “Almost as if she had been bitten and her blood flooded with the actual Lycavorian virus itself?”

Imaoi nodded. “Yes. That L-stereoisomer allowed her Tryptophan levels to rise well above normal for Kavalians. Five times normal to be precise. It is also probably why she stopped taking the follow on treatments that the others seem to rely on to keep their Tryptophan levels so low. They were making her sick.”

“And once the treatments stopped, her tail regenerated and the levels remained at such a high point stage they prevented further degradation.” Sivana spoke. “That is why she has not reverted back to her natural state.”

Imaoi nodded once more. “Yes. It’s unlikely the Kavalians have the equipment or the advanced genetic knowledge that we do to even detect this. Even if they did... it would be impossible to reverse it now.”

Sivana looked at her. “Not if they reduced the L-stereoisomer amino acid once more. That would lower her Tryptophan levels down again.”

Imaoi nodded her head. “That would have been the case a few days ago yes. But not now, not anymore.”

“Why?”

“There has been a massive influx of L-stereoisomer and Tryptophan levels into her blood within the last seventy-two hours.” Imaoi said.

“How massive?”

“Point two three.” Imaoi replied. “Elven core DNA strands were detected as well. They are already beginning to assert themselves into her core DNA molecules. Whatever she looks like now Sivana... she will look like for the rest of her life.”

“Imaoi... the levels you are describing to me would mean that she has either been bitten by someone with a combination of Lycavorian and Elven blood or slept with someone with this concentration.” Sivana spoke. “It is the only way to receive the levels you are referring too.”

Imaoi nodded. “Yes.”

“Purity Concentration Coefficient using the variables established by the Feravomir?” Sivana asked immediately.

“One hundred forty-eight point nine.” Imaoi answered.

“Imaoi... what is Martin Leonidas’s PCC?” Sivana asked.

“Two hundred ninety-three.”

“Aricia, Anja and For’mya?”

“Two hundred and fifty-four, one hundred eighty-one and one hundred seventy-six respectively.”

“And Dysea’s now that she is fully wolf?”

“One hundred and eighty-five.”

“Divide by the usual variables that the First Oracle and Eurin established a decade ago and please and tell me what the PCC would be to a child of Martin and Dysea?” Sivana spoke.

“Give or take point three in variance... one hundred forty-three to one hundred forty-nine PCC.” Imaoi replied. “I ran the numbers before contacting you Sivana.”

Sivana nodded with a smile. “You have come to know me well my friend.”

Imaoi smiled. “As much time as you spend with us... how could we not? Based on this information I’d say she was having a relationship with someone on Mjolnir’s Hand before they arrived on Earth. The only ones with the PCC levels we’re talking about that were on the King’s ship at that time were Queen For’mya and Prince Resumar. I think it’s safe to assume it wasn’t the Queen.”

“In that I would agree.” Sivana spoke. “Imaoi... thank you for your tireless work. Now please erase all the data you have compiled on this, as well as any backups we might have made up to this point.” Sivana ordered.

Imaoi nodded with question. “As you order.”

“May I ask what you are having deleted?” The male voice spoke from the doorway into her office. Sivana turned her head and saw the two men and one woman enter her office and the frantic shaking of her senior aide’s head.

Sivana kept the smile on her face and turned back to her monitor. “Imaoi... you have your instructions.”

“Yes Princess.”

“Thank you.” Sivana told her before ending the transmission and rising gracefully to her feet. She walked over to the counter along the wall and poured herself a mug of coffee. “Well... this is a surprise.” She spoke as she turned to look at the three new guests. “Elder Okein, Elder Voehls and Elder Buonau. Not one or two... but three Elder Healers have graced me with their presence today. I am overwhelmed.”

Sivana’s aide moved around them and looked at her. “Forgive me Princess... they would not take no for an answer. I told them you were busy.”

Sivana smiled. “It’s quite alright Yahri. I was just finishing up anyway.” She said moving to the chair in front of the large window that overlooked Unopa. She wore a casual outfit of dark gray pants that hugged her long legs and wrapped around her firm ass outlining every curve of her cheeks and the mound between her thighs. The white shirt was looser fitting but did nothing to hide her full breasts and the slim collar wrapped elegantly around her slim neck. Sivana had long ago dispensed with wearing undergarments as she found them restrictive and uncomfortable. Belen hated them as well, and more often than not, he simply shredded them when he removed them from her body. Sivana made it a point to stand for a few extra seconds so that they could see how she was dressed and then she began to sit with a small smile at the look in their eyes.

“So to what do I owe the honor of this visit?” She asked as she settled fully into the chair gracefully, pulling her legs up under her bottom and motioning them to the couch across from the small table in front of her.

The short brown haired woman gave her a disapproving look as she moved around first and sat down. Elder Buonau and she had a long history of dislike and Sivana made it a point to stick the needle to her whenever she could. The woman was a relic from the past, always wrapped in more layers of clothing that she and Anja would often joke about how long it took her to undress for bed in the evening. Her husband was a portly man, jovial and always polite, except when he was around his wife. She was the one who obviously wore the pants in the family. They had three daughters together, all of them no better than their mother in their arrogance. All of Buonau’s daughters were very resentful of Eliani because of her accomplishments in almost every way, and even Sivana’s oldest son and daughter Menelou and Riley were now feeling that same resentment directed at them. Of course... like her cousin... Riley was also half wolf, a more powerful healer, and considerably more attractive than any of Buonau’s daughters. Menelou was also an exceptionally skilled healer and had returned from completing his Spartan Agoge only the year earlier. Even at eighteen years of age he was just as tall as his father and his incredible good looks had far too many Hadarian females fawning over him.

Elder Okein she had dealt with before as well and Sivana found him just as pompous and arrogant as Anja did. Elder Voehls was less arrogant... and far more subtle in his distaste for what Anja and she had accomplished through the years. Sivana also knew that these three in front of her were the most vocal opponents and had caused the most fuss upon Anja’s return and discovering she was now wolf. They had also created quite the stir upon Sivana's return from the mission to Lycavore only to discover Belen had not only turned her, but claimed her as his mate. These were the men and women who led most of the other older Elders in opposing many of the things Anja and she had done through the years.

"What is it you ordered your aide to delete?" Buonau asked.

Sivana smiled. "Confidential medical research." She answered her. "Something entirely unimportant and not your concern."

"Have you spoken with the Queen recently?" Okein asked.

"I speak with Anja almost every day Elder Okein... you are well aware of that." Sivana spoke.

"Will she be returning then?" Buonau spoke.

"I wasn't aware she needed to return." Sivana said. "They have only just started their exodus to Earth and the little ones are settling into their schools."

"She will not return to address these charges that Seanna's mother Pcillany is going to level against her?" Buonau asked surprised.

"Has the Elder Council heard these charges yet?" Sivana asked.

"Well... no." Buonau replied.

"Pcillany is appearing before us in three days." Voehls told her.

"So if you have not heard these alleged charges that Seanna's mother intends to bring forth why is there a need for Anja to return here?" Sivana said. "She and Martin and their mates are involved with many things happening on Earth right now that concern the entire Union."

"So she does not intend to refute these accusations?" Okein stated.

"You just said yourself that Pcillany has not come before you yet." Sivana spoke. "To what accusations are you referring?"

"We... we have seen a preliminary draft of Pcillany's testimony and the accusations she will make." Okein spoke now. "We thought it prudent for the Queen to return and address them."

"Why would she give weight to something that is not true and has no basis in fact by addressing it as if it does?" Sivana asked.

"It has not been determined by the full Elder Council if these accusations are true or not." Voehls said. "Based on what we have already seen... the evidence is... it is substantial. We thought out of respect for the Queen and yourself that we would give her the opportunity to come before us and explain this before it is presented to the full Council."

Sivana tilted her head slightly. "Really? I was not aware Anja had to explain anything in regards to her personal life to the Hadarian Elder Council."

"She is the Queen of Hadaria!" Buonau snapped. "Her personal life is our business! As is yours!"

"Is it now?" Sivana spoke calmly. "What exactly brought you to that conclusion Elder Buonau?"

"Your parents were not like this!" Okein interjected now. "Their lives were an open book for all to review!"

"And judge no doubt. Or so it seems." Sivana said. "Anja and I are not our parents... as much as you would like us to be."

"They would never do what you and your sister have done!" Voehls said.

"And what exactly have Anja and I done that is so damning to your precious sensibilities Elder Voehls?" Sivana asked. "Not that we care mind you." She finished that with a smile.

"There... that very thing you just did!" Okein said quickly. "You dismiss the Elders and our opinions and wishes as if we do not matter!"

"In many cases your wishes and opinions do not matter. The Elder Council has no say in matters of governing Hadaria. Only in spiritual matters." Sivana told him. "Anja is Queen... I am Princess... it is we who decide what is best for our people and in what direction we will take them. Or has the Hadarian Constitutional Order of Bloodline Ascension been altered in some way and we were not notified?"

"You both have taken non-Hadarian husbands. Lycavorians... and you have allowed them to transform you. No member of the Hadarian Royal family in our history has ever married outside of our own species." Buonau hissed.

Sivana smiled. "So we were the first?" She spoke sardonically. "Using a phrase I learned from my sister and niece... That's way cool!"

“That is another point of contention.” Okein said. “Your insistence on refusing to adhere to our customs where it concerns your children. They should have been made to remain here on Hadaria and be schooled in our institutions. In the ways of our people!”

“You mean in the ways of my Aunt.” Sivana spoke calmly. “As she has raised her sons and daughters?”

“Umbra’s children know well our history and their responsibility as members of the Royal Family!” Voehls stated.

“Yes... I’m sure they have had it drilled into their brains since birth.” Sivana spoke rolling her eyes. “No wonder they are all so dull. No choice. Do this. Do that. It makes my brain hurt just thinking about it.”

“You and your sister do not act as your parents acted!” Buonau snapped. “Your mother would never have dressed in the fashion the two of you do.”

Sivana made a show of looking down at her clothes. “What’s wrong with the way I am dressed?”

“Our females should be reserved and demur!” Buonau spoke. “We should not put on display what we are as you and your sister do. As Eliani does even more! And she is next in line for the throne should anything happen to you or your sister. And your mother most certainly would not have taken another woman into her bed. Let alone four. Did you know that is a topic of discussion among our younger female generation? That the Queen of Hadaria openly admits to sharing the same bed with four other women! And now her daughter has gone and done the same thing by taking this vampire into her bed. And even flaunting her when she is on Hadaria! There are many who find that offensive!”

Sivana laughed openly now. “Come now Elder Buonau... this has never entered your mind?”

“Certainly not!” Buonau snapped. “And you disrespect me by even suggesting it!”

“Do I?” Sivana said her eyes narrowing. “But it is not disrespectful of you and the other Elders to speak openly of it and condemn it so vehemently because you don’t like it! Is that it?”

Sivana got to her feet and moved back to the counter. “I have been with Eliani and Nyla on many occasions when they are here and have gone out to shop or whatever it is that young single women do. I have never seen this reaction to them.” She turned after refilling her mug. “This is less to do with these ridiculous charges that Pcillany intends to bring before you and far more to do with what you and the other Elders deem to be appropriate in regards to Anja and me?”

“What do you mean?” Okein demanded.

Sivana turned back to him. “We don’t think and act as you feel we should.” She said. “And using another term I learned from my sister and niece... that just flat out pisses you off doesn’t it?”

“And you dismiss Hadarian customs and traditions!” Okein exclaimed. “In your manner of dress... in how you act in public. And in how you raise and educate our children.”

Sivana blinked. “Excuse me... our children?” She said. “You mean mine and Anja’s children don’t you? You certainly did not give birth to them. And you have not raised them as far as I know.”

“Your children are within the Royal bloodline and therefore they are just as much our charges as the Hadarian Elders of our people as they are yours!” Voehls spoke.

“You and your sister put them at risk!” Buonau said now. “Your sister by allowing Retta and Calyb to form a bond with those beasts. Those dragons. And you... by allowing Rileyya and Menelou to conduct that brutal Agoge practice.”

“Anja and I have let our children find their own way.” Sivana spoke. “It was Rileyya’s and Menelou’s decision to conduct their Agoge training. They did that to honor their father. As for Retta and Calyb... there is no way to predict if a bond will form between rider and dragon. In their case it did.”

“Seeing who their father and brother are... do you expect us to believe that the Queen hoped a bond would not form for the twins?” Okein snapped. “She knew well the possibilities of that happening and she allowed it. Had they been here on Hadaria... where they belong... such a thing would not have occurred!”

“So our children are expected to remain here on Hadaria. Locked away and shielded from all the universe has to offer and show them?” Sivana spoke.

“If it means they learn what they should learn as members of the Royal blood line... yes!” Buonau said.

“You mean what you deem is appropriate for them to learn.” Sivana said with a knowing smile.

“We were not able to act in a fashion that would have protected Eliani and now she has become just like her mother.” Voehls stated. “We were not able to act to protect Rileyya and Menelou though they may yet be saved. However... we can and will act in regards to Retta and Calyb and even Siara if you and the Queen refuse to do so.”

Sivana looked at them her eyes narrowing. “What exactly are you trying to say Elder Voehls?” She asked.

“When Pcillany appears before us in three days to present these allegations about the Queen’s actions the Elder Council will also hear a petition from Umbra to have the youngest of your children remanded to her custody for upbringing until such time as you and the Queen see fit to raise your children in the proper Hadarian manner.” Voehls said. “There is a majority on the Council of Elders that takes our side in this regard and I must warn you, the petition will pass from our Council with approval.”

Sivana looked at them for a long moment. “Truly.” She said.

“Unless you and the Queen agree to have them returned to Hadaria and be schooled properly yes. The dragons will not be allowed to accompany Retta and Calyb, and they, with Siara must attend the Hadarian Elder Ministry. As did your Aunt’s children.”

“And why exactly would we subject our children to that archaic foolishness?” Sivana asked.

“It is not foolishness!” Buonau shouted coming to her feet. “It is our history. Our tradition!”

“It is foolishness!” Sivana barked right back at her. “What is taught there is so out of date and useless off of our own planet we may as well be putting signs on our people that say kick me for I am stupid!”

“How dare you!” Okein roared coming to his feet.

“I dare alright!” Sivana snapped. “Have you never wondered why the Universities not influenced by the Hadarian Elder Ministry are so overcrowded and packed with students willing to learn? The only ones who seem to think it is useful anymore or those of you who cling to an archaic set of rules and values and some false sense of power that you hope will one day return. Thank the gods you have no say in the government any longer!”

“Outbursts like that do nothing to further our indulgence of you and your sister!” Voehls barked.

Sivana met his eyes with a smile and held up her hand. “Give me one moment please.” She said. She moved around the corner of her desk and activated her communications panel with three quick touches of her fingers. Buonau, Okein and Voehls watched as the image of the Durcumusaan soldier appeared.

“Lady Sivana?” The man seemed surprised to hear from her.

“Lieutenant Viusen what is your current location please?” Sivana asked.

“Little Siara has just gone into her Music Class Milady.” He answered with a smile. “She was very excited.”

“Lieutenant, please pull Siara from class and take her to the Spaceport.” Sivana spoke seeing the three Elders jerk in reaction to her words and step closer. “The RELIANT HEALER is in orbit correct?” The RELIANT HEALER was one of the recent AUTUMN MOON-Class Attack Frigates and was permanently assigned as Sivana’s ship.

The man nodded. “Always Princess. Milady Sivana... what is going on? Should I contact Belen?”

“I will take care of that Viusen. Tell Siara she is going to spend some extra time with Retta and Mara. She will be thrilled about that. Take her to the RELIANT HEALER and then you may depart for Earth and Sparta.” Sivana spoke.

“You will do no such thing!” Okein barked now moving up to the desk. “You will not listen to her Lieutenant Viusen! If you follow her orders I will have you expelled from Hadaria permanently!”

The Durcumusaan Spartan shifted his eyes to Okein and snorted. “As if that will hurt my feelings.” He growled. “This place is too tame for my tastes anyway. I do not follow your orders Elder Okein... only the orders of Lady Sivana and Star Commander Belen.”

“You are a member of the Union military Lieutenant!” Okein barked.

“I am a member of the Durcumusaan Elder Okein. The Wolves of the Blood. We do not fall under the purview of the regular military. Or you for that matter.” Viusen spoke. “Orders Lady Sivana?”

“You may operate under the Inveluiner protocols Lieutenant.” Sivana spoke calmly. “Do not stop until you have Siara safely with her cousins in Sparta. I will insure Lilika greets you when you arrive.”

Viusen nodded. “Aen forn rota.” He stated and the transmission ended.

Sivana stood back up and looked at them. “I’m sorry... you were saying something?”

“I will have the Hadarian militia stop them at the spaceport!” Voehls snapped.

“I wouldn’t if I were you.” The new voice spoke from behind them. They all turned and saw Eurin slowly walk into Sivana’s office. “The Inveluiner... the Crimson Storm protocols... they authorize use of force in protecting Durcunusaan charges. You will not drag the Hadarian Militia into this Okein. None of you will. I forbid it. Most of them would not follow your directives anyway.” Eurin walked fully into the office and stopped by the side of Sivana’s desk.

“Divine One we are only doing what we feel is best for the sake of the Royal Bloodline.” Buonau spoke. “We...”

“Spare me your preposterous drivel Buonau!” Eurin snapped. “The Inveluiner protocols mean that Lieutenant Viusen will get Siara safely off Hadaria and he won’t care who he has to hurt in order to accomplish that.”

“We will have the full support of the Elder Council Divine One.” Voehls stated. “The children need to be returned here to Hadaria to be raised in a safe and proper environment.”

“Then by all means Voehls.” Eurin spoke her voice dripping with contempt. “When the full Council does pass that resolution you may send your Council Guard to Earth and Sparta to try and collect Siara and King Leonidas’s children. I’m quite sure they will be welcomed most warmly.”

“We will do just that!” Okein barked. He cut his eyes to Sivana. “You will be presented with the official demand that you and Queen Anja surrender your children to the custody of your Aunt Umbra three days hence. We will also inform you of our decision in regards to the accusations brought against the Queen by Seanna’s mother.”

Sivana smiled sweetly. “Of course. Now if you will excuse the Divine One and I? We actually have work to perform that does not involve stealing other people’s children. I can have my Durcunusaan officer show you out if you like?”

“It would be better if you cooperated with us Princess.” Buonau spoke.

“You mean betray my sister!” Sivana snarled and her face twisted into an angry glare. “Betray my sister... the woman who saved me from the blackness I was living? Who showed me the life I could have? You want me to betray that woman?” Sivana stepped up to her. “Since Belen claimed me as his mate, I have discovered that I have developed a rather foul disposition when it comes to those who think to use me for their own nefarious purposes.”

“You... you would allow this man that protects Siara to injure your own people just to spite us?” Buonau gasped.

Sivana smiled. “If you think that is bad, wait until you try and take Anja’s children.”

“Milady...” The male voice said. They turned to look at the tall Spartan who now stood just inside the door. “You called for me Lady Sivana?”

“Yes Trius.” Sivana spoke. “Would you insure the Elders here do not get lost as they leave the building. I’d hate for them to trip over something and injure themselves.”

The Durcunusaan soldier grinned. “Of course.” He spoke.

“You... you summoned him?” Voehls spoke. “To escort us out!”

Sivana tapped her temple lightly. “Don’t you just love the ability to Mindvoice? I know I do. Good day Elders! We are quite finished here.”

No more words were spoken as the three of them turned and made their way to the door in a huff. The Durcunusaan officer smiled at Sivana and turned to follow them.

Sivana moved to the window and took a deep breath. “Eurin?” She said softly.

Eurin stepped up next to her. “Zaniai contacted me only a short while ago. He was told by an aide that the Elder Council was going to act on your Aunt’s petition even though she had not formally presented it. He wanted me to come and tell you before they did.”

“Eurin... do the Elders hate Anja and I that much.” Sivana asked.

“Anja and you have changed so much in the last two decades Sivana. And done so very quickly. The Elders fear they will lose what little influence they have.” Eurin said. “Even I did not see this coming. They think they can force you and Anja to do things their way.”

“So they have been planning this for some time and only used Umbra’s petition and these trumped up allegations against Anja as a catalyst for their own purposes?” Sivana spoke.

“Whatever is driving Pcillany and your Aunt to do this yes.” Eurin said. “However with these allegations against Anja... now the Elders actually have a point to begin their own power play.”

“They have no actual power Eurin.” Sivana spoke. “They can change nothing that Anja and I have instituted up until now. Can they?”

“No... but their voice does carry weight within the Ruling Ministry.” Eurin spoke. “If they can present their position in a convincing enough manner and sway enough of the Ministry that they are right... that would be a problem. We do not yet know what this supposed evidence is.”

“And we are stuck reacting to their actions for right now.” Sivana said.

Eurin nodded. “We won’t know the full scope of what they intend until they present the evidence that Pcillany supposedly will show them.”

“Why do I get the feeling their decision has already been made Eurin?” Sivana asked looking at her. “Even before Pcillany appears before them.”

Eurin met her gaze. “It is not just you Sivana. I have that same feeling.”

G9 HIGH COVEN LRR TWO HOURS FROM YOCETU THE WILDS

“...not going to be happy with you Esther.” T’lolt spoke with a smile from the right seat of the G9 High Coven Long Range Runner. “Where have you and Tir’ut gotten yourselves to now?”

Esther’s smile was bright but filled with embarrassment. “You have no idea T’lolt.” She spoke. “Part of me is glad it is you coming and not my Blessed Husband.”

T’lolt chuckled even louder. “What have you done now my brother’s wife?” He asked. “And where are you? You are not in the VANGRA that much I can tell.”

“No T’lolt... we are on Yocetu.” Esther said.

“Yocetu? Why would you be on Yocetu?” T’lolt leaned forward. “Esther... what is wrong?”

“We trailed close to the Union border after detecting the Jump Gate explosion.” Esther spoke.

T’lolt nodded. “I was with Cha’talla in the Command Center. There was something about a TYPE II Union dragon ship. He knew you would ignore him and go to investigate and that is why he sent me. Now tell me something I am not already aware of.”

“We rescued the elf pilots T’lolt.” Esther spoke quickly. “Gareld was...”

“Gareld!” T’lolt exclaimed. “The same one that...”

Esther nodded. “Yes.” She replied. “We have deduced that he had a hand in sabotaging the ship these pilots were on so that he could capture them.” Esther explained. “We sort of got in the way. The pilots were able to repair their ship enough and we led them here to Yocetu. Gareld attacked once more and the TYPE II crashed. The co-pilot was killed but we managed to save the pilot.”

“Why is Gareld after the pilots of the TYPE II?” Gareld asked. “Why not just take the ship. It would be worth more in The Wilds, if he doesn’t mind that he will now be hunted for the rest of his life for his actions. The Union will certainly hunt him if he has injured their dragons. If Cha’talla does not reach him first.”

“The TYPE II had no dragons on it. Only the two pilots T’lolt. They were returning to Earth.” Esther spoke. “The pilot is a female... an elf of some importance within the Union. Gareld would stand to make a substantial sum of credits if he was able to sell her to his buyers, whoever they may be.”

“Esther... we will reveal ourselves to the Union when Cha’talla feels the time is right.” T’lolt said. “I may not agree with him on this course... I agree with you in regards to that... but he is our leader and he knows best. He has kept us safe for all these years with his actions.”

“I know T’lolt... now however... now we may have no choice.” Esther said.

T’lolt’s eyes narrowed. “What do you mean?”

“We are in the camp bunker on the northern continent T’lolt. Gareld’s men are still here and will no doubt attempt to breach the bunker.”

“Still there?” T’lolt exclaimed. “Why would they be still there? Who have you saved Esther?”

“There is a Bontawillian Low Gravity Frigate in orbit above us. Our VANGRA sustained engine damage on the descent in. Tir’ut says it is very fixable... just not with the parts we have here.” Esther spoke. “Please tell me you are nearby.”

“Two hours.” T’lolt nodded. “How many men on the surface?”

“We don’t know.” Esther replied. “I would think at least thirty to forty. Tir’ut killed an adolescent Bancorik just before nightfall that was about to eat our elf pilot and...”

“What?” T’lolt gasped his small dark eyes wide. “He attacked an adolescent Bancorik by himself? Why in the heavens would he do that? Was he mad? Where is Fash’ka? Is he injured?”

“Tir’ut was injured protecting the elf pilot. He is fine. Three spikes penetrated cleanly through his side. I removed them... he is healed. We...” Esther spoke.

“No elf pilot is worth fighting an adolescent Bancorik alone Esther.” T’lolt said sternly.

“Yes... something that Fash’ka made very clear to him after he helped him to kill it.” Esther spoke. “Somehow... I don’t think it mattered to him. He would have done it anyway. The point is... Fash’ka says the animals, these Bancorik... they are still in a very agitated state and are milling about above us just outside the perimeter fences. We are safe from Gareld’s men... but unable to reach our ship. We would not be able to outrun the frigate regardless. If Gareld is able to chase these creatures away he will begin an assault against the bunker’s main door and then the door to the interior here.”

T’lolt turned to the pilot in the G9. “Increase speed to Point Four.” He ordered. “Inform the others to execute as well. Attack pattern Theta Omicron when we enter the system. We must chase the frigate away and then land!”

“T’lolt... they more than likely have been monitoring our transmission. The Bunker’s COM unit is not secure.” Esther spoke.

“Good... then they can monitor this!” T’lolt snarled. “You have attacked and attempted to bring harm to the Blessed Wife of the Immortal Cha’talla. My brother. When we arrive in...” He turned to the pilot.

“Sixty-eight minutes!”

“When we arrive in sixty-eight minutes mercenary scum... we will blow your ship from the stars and then we will land. The men you leave on the surface we will capture. We will skin them alive while they scream for mercy. Then we will feed them to the predators of that world you are on and watch them die!”

BONTAWILLIAN FRIGATE ORBITING YOCETU

“...anything?” The frigate’s second officer, a Limian mercenary asked.

The Evolli turned from the sensor display. “Nothing. Long range sensors are clear.”

“Then they are shrouded.” The Limian spoke. “And we do not know what type of ship or ships they may have.”

“Can they do what they say?” The Evolli asked.

“This tub is over a hundred years old!” The Limian replied. “We could not stand in a sustained fight against the VANGRA those on the surface were flying! They were able to out fly us and their ship is armed, which we did not expect. We are still conducting repairs from just the three missiles that hit us. Missiles that ship should not have had.”

“They are Immortals...” The Amarian helmsmen turned from his station. “If what that voice said is true and we have attacked this Cha’talla’s Blessed Wife as he said... I have no wish to do battle with them. You know who Cha’talla is?”

“I thought Gareld said he was dead.” The Evolli spoke.

“That is what he told us. He also told us this operation would be easy. Already we have lost two boarding parties and over twenty men on the surface.” The Limian complained.

“This pureblood female that Gareld so desires. If she is Cha’talla’s Blessed Wife as that voice said...” The Amarian began.

“Yes... and I have no wish to die. Contact Sandur and inform him of what we just intercepted. Gareld will listen to him.”

“We hope.” The Evolli spoke.

YOCETU

“When we arrive in sixty-eight minutes mercenary scum... we will blow your ship from the stars and then we will land. The men you leave on the surface we will capture. We will skin them alive while they scream for mercy. Then we will feed them to the predators of that world you are on and watch them die!”

Esther laughed softly as she turned from the communications console and looked at Ja’narie, T’lolt’s voice softly echoing away within the walls. “I do so love T’lolt and his directness.” She spoke.

Ja’narie grinned and nodded her head. “My father jokes that he is even more ushdui than Cha’talla at times.” (Crazy)

Esther turned and saw Normya sitting with her back against the pillows on the couch and looking at her with wide eyes. “You have questions and doubts in your eyes Normya Leonidas.” Esther said. “Do not be afraid to voice them.”

“What... what he said?” Normya spoke softly. “He wouldn’t...”

Esther smiled as she moved over to squat next to the couch. “This bunker does not have secure communications yet.” She said. “I was not lying about that. T’lolt was merely attempting to frighten those above us who were undoubtedly monitoring our transmission. We have been lucky so far... perhaps our luck will hold.”

“You did not tell him who I was?” Normya said. “Why?”

“On an open transmission?” Ja’narie spoke now but with that ever present smile on her face. “We may be Immortals... but we are not that crazy. If we would have announced to the sector who you were, every mercenary and pirate scum would have converged on this planet like a pestilence.” Ja’narie looked at her and patted her shoulder. “Tir’ut can not kill them all... no matter how much he would try.”

Esther pulled aside the pant leg and inspected Normya’s wound. She reached up and yanked the depleted patch from her skin and ran her fingers around the edges of where the branch had impaled her thigh. “It is healing nicely.” She said. “Do you have the strength to shift?”

Normya shook her head quickly. “I’m hot.” She spoke.

Esther turned and took a small rectangular device from the table and activated it, running it over Normya’s head and down her body. “You have a slight infection that is producing a mild fever Normya.” She spoke. “A reaction to having a two inch diameter piece of Oklan tree stuck in your leg no doubt. It is not high, but it is sapping your strength.” She removed the red pill from the small pouch on her belt and held it up to her. “Nalufem... it will kill the contamination within twelve hours and curb the fever. At least the fever the infection has caused. Your Coming of Age fever I’m afraid I can’t help with.”

“You know... you know about that?” Normya gasped.

Esther chuckled. “I may be a bio-genetic scientist by schooling... but I’m fairly well versed in the anatomy of many other species. Yes... I know about your Coming of Age fever. I could smell it in your blood last night. It appears you have weathered the worst of it though. How much longer do you have to endure it as it recedes?”

“Another week. Maybe two.” Normya answered. “If my father’s blood wasn’t so pure it would be behind me by now!” She snapped.

“If your father’s blood was not so pure Normya Leonidas... you could very well be dead.” Esther said.

“Yes... well I guess there is that to consider.” She said with a playful smile.

“Take the pill child.” Esther spoke.

Normya took the pill without hesitation and popped it into her mouth. Esther held out the small container of water which she accepted and chased the sour tasting pill down. “Esther... I’m... I’m sorry for reacting the way...”

Esther placed her hand on Normya’s arm. “You need not apologize Normya Leonidas.” She said. “In your position... I probably would have done the same thing. It is forgotten.”

“Where will we go?” Normya asked.

“We’ll take you to Kranek.” Esther told her. “It is our home now. We have built quite a sizeable settlement. Modern yet plain. There you will be able to contact your father and we can arrange for a point to meet him so that you can return to your people.”

Normya looked at her. “Not on Kranek?” She asked.

Esther shook her head with a smile. “No... I’m afraid that is out of the question.” She spoke. “We are still building our settlement Normya. We have remained peaceful to all those who are understanding and realize we mean them no harm. It is why we have been able to build such a strong relationship with the surrounding settlements. While I do not agree with my husband that it is not the right time to reveal ourselves to your father and the Union, I will not go against him. He has almost seven thousand years of life behind him... T’lolt just over half that. They both fought your grandfather on Earth millennia ago Normya. While they detested what Xerxes did in every way... they were Immortals and that is who they were told to fight. Cha’talla does not believe he has done enough to show your father that we are past that part of our history. It is well known that your father is not the most forgiving of individuals, especially when it comes to those who have harmed or attempted to harm those he loves. The Evolli war was the perfect example. As was the Kavalian attack on Gamji.”

Normya nodded. “He is very pig headed and stubborn.” She said with a small smile. “But he is not a bad man Esther.”

Esther shook her head quickly. “Oh no... I don’t believe he is. He is just very protective of what he cares for. And so are we. I’m sure we can arrange a more neutral meeting place away from Kranek to protect ourselves as well as your people.”

“The... the High Coven is on Earth right now.” Normya told her seeing her face come up. “The Empress herself. Yuri. Moran. All of them.”

Esther’s eyes were wide. “What? Why?”

“I take it you don’t have much contact with the Kavalians?” Normya asked.

“Vith no!” She exclaimed. “They are savage brutes interested only in conquering and killing. We have avoided them at all costs. Even here in The Wilds they will no doubt assume we are part of Aikiro’s forces and attack us. We don’t need that kind of attention.”

“The Coven brought their dragons to Earth for my brother to train.” Normya blurted.

Esther looked at her. “So the rumors we heard many years ago were true. That they had succeeded in taking several dozen of your beasts from a crashed ship.”

Normya nodded. “Yes. They...” Normya stopped as she realized what she was saying and her eyes flew open wide.

Esther laughed and took her hand. “You need not worry Normya. I will tell no one... and we certainly will not run out and tell the first Kavalians we see. They would just as soon shoot us on sight as listen to us anyway. Cha’talla hates them.”

“I’m sorry.” Normya spoke.

Esther shook her head. “Don’t be. Tell me of yourself.”

“Me?” Normya asked.

“Yes... how did you come to speak our language so fluently?” Esther asked.

“One of my mothers is a pureblood.” Normya said. “Just like you. Two of my sisters are half vampire. All of us speak the ancient vampire language. It comes as easily as our own does.”

“You speak of Isabella?” Esther said.

Normya nodded. “You know her?”

“Oh no! I know of her... not much... but enough to know that Aikiro hates her.” Esther said. “And towards then end, after she defected, so did Veldruk.” Esther looked at her. “One of your mothers? How many mothers do you have child?”

Normya chuckled. “My father has five mates.” She said. “All of us... myself... my brothers and sisters... we do not distinguish who our birth mother is. They are all our mothers as far as we are concerned. And they all speak with a similar voice. Especially when they punished us as children.”

“And your father... he... he loves them all equally?” Esther asked stunned.

Normya nodded. “Oh yes... without hesitation.” She replied.

“I would one day like to meet your father Normya Leonidas.” Esther said. “And your mothers. It would be very interesting to see them...”

The dull echo of an explosion reached their ears and they both looked up as the ground around them shuddered. Esther came to her feet instantly and lifted her wrist.

“Tir’ut! Fash’ka! What is going on?” She demanded as she moved towards the main entrance of the bunker which was three hundred meters further down the tunnel into the mountain. She lifted her dark eyes and could see a large dust cloud rising from the entrance to the bunker that led into the clearing and the landing pad. Esther turned as Ja’narie ran up to her, SA80 in her hands. “Tir’ut!” Esther spat again.

“We... we are occupied mother!” Tir’ut’s voice erupted from the COM link on her wrist, the background noise of SA80 fire easily discernable. “Fash’ka! Left thirty!” There was a pause and then they heard the heavy throated roar of the SA80. “Back to me Fash’ka! I will cover for you!” Tir’ut’s voice echoed once more. “Leave them for the Bancorik brother!”

“Tir’ut! What is happening damn it!” Esther barked again.

“They are breaking through Tir’ut!” Fash’ka’s voice echoed. “I don’t believe they like us very much!”

“Back to the bunker brother! Go! I will cover you! Go now!” Tir’ut’s voice shouted over the roar of weapons fire and the unmistakable sound of the roars they had heard last night.

Esther and Ja’narie looked up and down the corridor as they saw Fash’ka burst from the dust cloud running as if the hounds of Hades were after him. Large though they may have been, Immortals could move very quickly when they wanted too. Right now Fash’ka wanted too.

“Mother! Prepare to close the bunker doors!” Tir’ut’s voice blasted out of the COM at her.

“Tir’ut!” Esther called out.

They watched as Fash’ka skidded to a halt slamming hard into the door, nearly knocking Ja’narie over as he stopped. He turned towards Esther. “The fools!” He hissed. “They used missile cores to penetrate the outer door but they didn’t kill the Bancorik in the surrounding treeline. The moment the dust cleared they rushed the perimeter fence!”

“They are in the tunnel!” Esther almost shouted in disbelief.

Fash’ka scooped both Esther and Ja’narie into his arms when he caught the blurring motion out of the corner of his eye. He pulled them both into the main bunker just as Tir’ut blurred to a halt, skidding along the floor as he fell and slamming into the small table in front of Normya as Fash’ka slammed his hand down on the door controls. Esther turned quickly when the roar pierced her senses and she saw the tooth filled maw rushing down the corridor at breakneck speed. The last sight Esther saw was the door slamming and then the dull thud as the Bancorik slammed it’s head into the combined steel and granite door.

They turned quickly at the banging noise behind them and saw Tir’ut lying on the floor, his head just beneath where Normya still lay on the couch. His slide had taken out two of the table legs and it now rested on his chest as pieces of decorative statues rolled down to the end of the table and fell onto his chest. Fash’ka burst out laughing at the sight and slumped to the floor in a sitting position. It was infectious as first Ja’narie and then Esther began laughing as well. Tir’ut looked up with his dark eyes at Normya’s surprised upside down face as she gazed at him from the couch.

“Forgive me il kal'daka darthirii, I am... I am usually much more controlled in my slides across floors.” Tir’ut spoke. “I... I did not mean to disturb you.”

Normya Leonidas gazed down at Tir’ut’s face and could not deny the almost uncanny way his actions just now so reminded her of her father. His laconic attitude and his embarrassed face as he lay there looking up at her. Her emerald eyes took in his features with measured slowness and she found herself strangely drawn to his bronze skin and the small bone spurs that lined his jaw. Normya shook her head quickly, pushing those thoughts from her mind horrified that she had even thought of them.

“Will they be able to breach this door Tir’ut?” Esther asked.

Normya leaned back as Tir’ut shoved the table from his chest and got to his feet slowly, brushing off the dust and dirt. “No mother. It will hold.” He answered.

“Gareld and his men?” Ja’narie asked.

Fash’ka laughed. “They were running away so fast even the Bancorik were confused.” He spoke as he too got to his feet. “I don’t believe I have ever seen a pureblood shu his pants before. I thought his cheeks were going to explode when that Bancorik stepped up behind him.” (Shit)

Tir'ut couldn't help laughing at the picture in his head. "Well let's hope he is still running when ilninuk T'loft gets here. This trip has been far more exciting than we bargained for." He spoke. "And we ran out of refreshments on the first leg of the journey!"

Normya Leonidas could only sit on that couch and be amazed. None of her training, from her Agoge to Flight School and the Academy. None of that training had ever covered the part where she would be in the company of Immortals.

Immortals who were actually making jokes and laughing like normal men and women.

Normya knew she had entered an entirely different world here, and despite all that had happen so far; the explosion, the attack, the creatures and even Toral's death, even after all that Normya felt completely safe here with these men and women. Almost as if she was among family.

And that frightened her.

SPARTA

DIPLOMATIC ENVOY APARTMENTS

Karun staggered under the third slap from his mother. This one connected solidly enough and with sufficient anger fueled strength to drive him backwards several steps. He did not defend himself, did not react with his own anger at being slapped in front of everyone. Part of him knew he was wrong to have done this in this way... and the other part was stunned that his mother did not know what he had announced. Nor it seemed did anyone else in the room with them now.

"How long?" Jalersi hissed with savage anger. "How long have you known this?"

Karun lifted his head slowly to look at her. He had seen his mother this angry at him only one other time in his life and that had been after he had lied to her about forcing a female to submit to him. He had been sixteen years old, and that had cost him ten lashes from the whip she used to discipline them as they grew.

"Father... father drew me aside the day before we left mother." He replied timidly. "He swore me to secrecy and told me only to announce it when and if we had an audience with the King. I... I thought you knew."

Jalersi spun away from him, her anger seething through her unchecked. "Does your grandfather know?" She demanded. She whirled back around. "Does he know?" She shouted.

"I do not know mother." Karun answered.

Qurot laughed from where he stood. "I guess he is not the man you thought him to be eh?" He barked out.

"Qurot... you are an idiot and a pig!" Jalersi snarled at him. "Open your mouth again and I will cut your foul tongue from between your lips and pin it to your ears!"

Qurot surged forward towards her, his face darkening in anger. "Do not talk to me..."

Karun stepped in front of his mother, a cruel look on his own face now. Only Athani noticed that Pian also moved forward between them, but did so in a much more measured and dangerous way. "One more step Qurot... one more word... and I will end your life this night!"

Qurot glared at him stepping close to him. "Are you so sure boy?" He growled.

"Do you wish to find out?" Karun growled back.

"Enough of this!" Jiss barked stepping forward from the wall. "Step back Commander! Considering her age Jalersi... it's obvious this is something that happened long before Pusintin took you as his mate. Long before you were born."

"He should have told me!" Jalersi barked.

"He did not!" Jiss stated simply. "Creating an issue where there isn't one is foolish. He is under no obligation by our laws to tell you of any children he might have fathered before taking you as his Pridemate. Or any that he might have fathered from other females while he has been mated to you for that matter. You know our laws well enough to understand that."

Jalersi jerked Karun around to face her and he prepared himself for another blow, but instead she reached up and ran her fingers across his cheek affectionately.

"I did not know mother." He said softly looking into her blue eyes.

Jalersi nodded slowly and pulled his head to her chest, embracing him tightly. "I am sorry Karun. I should not be angry with you."

"According to our laws you should not be angry with anyone." Jiss stated evenly.

"Do not preach our laws to me Jiss!" Jalersi barked. "Not now! You and Matuarr may have cost us the opportunity for an embassy here! And a means of intelligence for my father. You openly threatened them... you almost told them we would invade if they do not share what they have."

"It was a risk I'll grant you that... but it worked." Jiss spoke.

"It worked?" Athani asked from the chair she sat in. "Just how do you come to that conclusion?"

"They will not refuse an embassy now." Jiss spoke. "Not after what Karun has revealed. It actually worked out rather well."

"Who are your instructions coming from?" Jalersi demanded. "My father?"

"I don't understand." Jiss said. "What do you mean?"

"My father put me in charge of this delegation Jiss. Not you. I gave you no signal or authorization before hand to act in the manner you did tonight." Jalersi stated. "That tells me you are either in touch with someone now, which is highly unlikely since the Lycavorians monitor every transmission that leaves this planet, or you had different instructions before we left. Now which is it?"

"Jalersi you..."

"Which is it Jiss?" She spat.

"I was told to insure that Kavalian interests were not compromised and if the opportunity arose that I should put added pressure on them. More than what you were authorized to use." Jalersi spoke. "Matuarr and I both received this same instruction."

"From my father?" Jalersi asked.

Jiss shook his head. "The who is not important right now." He stated. "Only the result. They can not deny us an embassy after telling us it would be ratified by the end of the week. It would be a purely vindictive move and leave us with far too much bargaining power. If the King does not know that, his advisors will tell him."

"Karun what were your instructions from your father in regards to this Lisisa?" Matuarr asked now.

"Get close to her. Get as much information about dragons as I could from her. And try to turn her against the King in some manner." Karun replied turning to look at him.

Jiss nodded. "This could very well work much better than we had hoped." He said. "You all saw the look from his mother. From the Prime Minister. Neither of them were aware of this information... and it stands to reason neither were his Queens. We can use that against them."

Athani snorted loudly. "You will try to turn the Queens and his mother against him?" She chortled. "I thought you were one of the wisest of our Legislatures Jiss? What kind of fool plan is that?"

"Be silent woman!" Qurot barked.

"Shut up Qurot!" Jalersi snapped. "What do you mean Athani?"

"We... you will never turn the Queens or his mother against him." Athani spoke getting to her feet. "They have been through too much already together. This... information that Karun has revealed... it will only serve to cause mild confusion at first. Did none of you notice the look on King Leonidas's face when Karun spoke? He knew. He knew this would happen. No doubt he and his Queens have already planned for it in some fashion."

Jiss looked at her. "You seem to be much more attuned to these dogs than the rest of us Athani'Puat. Why is that?"

Athani met his eyes evenly. "Because I have listened and I have watched. Something no one else in this room apparently has done. And you have played right into their hands by your actions and words tonight! Whatever trust and cooperation we have managed to build in the last few days, you have just tossed aside. You have only shown them what they already suspected. That we are not here for trade."

"Bah! You know not what you speak!" Jiss dismissed her. "Matuarr and I have been doing this far longer than you woman! Do not stand there and think to tell us what we have done or not done! You may be the Prefect's daughter... but you are not outside our laws."

"Enough!" Jalersi barked. "Athani step back... he is right."

Athani looked at her, blue/green eyes alive with anger. "Jalersi... we..."

“Please Athani.” Jalersi spoke.

Athani huffed and stepped back. “Fine. Since it is obvious my council is neither wanted nor needed I will retire to my room. All of you apparently have a different agenda you wish to follow.”

“I will escort you.” Qurot spoke.

“I don’t need your escort Qurot!” Athani snapped.

“But you will get it nonetheless.” He snarled.

Athani shook her head in disgust and moved for the door.

“What do we do now Jiss?” Jalersi asked.

Jiss turned to face her. “We wait and see what they do.” He replied. “If they are wise... they will finish the deal we have brokered tomorrow as expected. Then it is just two more days until they ratify the embassy. Once that is done... we can move into our new facility whether it be here in Sparta or Eden City the capital. It does not matter.”

“And then?”

“The security force your father is sending should arrive tomorrow sometime.” Matuarr spoke now. “Once the embassy deal is ratified we can turn them loose to discover intelligence on the High Coven.”

“They will not be allowed anywhere near where the High Coven is staying.” Karun spoke. “And their appearance will be noticed. Our species does tend to stick out.”

Jiss smiled. “Your father is sending six of our clone officers.” He spoke. “They are the oldest of the new clones. Superbly trained and normal in appearance. They will blend in just fine.”

“And once the embassy is ratified... we can begin making waves about Karun’s sister.” Matuarr spoke.

“What do you mean?” Jalersi asked.

“She is Pusintin’s daughter. Karun’s sister. By that virtue alone she is a citizen of the Kavalian Empire.” Matuarr spoke. “And if we act in the proper manner... she will be subject to Kavalian law as well. And as a female of the KFI, anything she possesses will become subject to Kavalian law and custom. Including the dragon she rides.” Matuarr smiled. “Yes... this may have worked out very well in our favor after all.”

“That is if she will even agree to meet with me.” Karun stated.

“She will meet with you.” Jiss spoke evenly. “Even if we have to force her to meet with you. With your permission Jalersi... I would like to use the secure transmitter to confirm what I am relatively sure we would be able to do. And with you father’s permission we will use the Union’s own laws against them.”

Jalersi nodded slowly. “I will speak with him when you are finished.” She stated waving her hand toward the small communications room. “And then I wish to be alone with my son.”

“I will enjoy taking you Athani.” Qurot hissed as he followed her into the apartment. Athani ignored him as she reached out within Mindvoice trying to feel for Resumar. She wanted to tell him she knew nothing of what had happened this night. She had not felt him at all after leaving the Royal Villa and that frightened her. She did not realize he was still there until he snatched her arm and spun her around. “Did you hear me woman!”

Athani tried to push back away from him but he held her arms tightly and squeezed even harder. “You escorted me Qurot! Now you will leave!” She demanded.

“Why do you resist me?” He spoke with a humorous chuckle. “Your father has given you to me. I could take you now if I wanted... as long as I did not mark you.”

“Release me Qurot!” Athani hissed. “You are drunk on Spartan Wine!”

“And excellent stuff it was! Being among our enemies has filled me with vigor!” Qurot growled. “Tell me... are you trying to tease me? Why else would you have purchased such clothing! To tease your future mate perhaps!”

“You are not my mate!” Athani snapped. “You will never be my mate! I don’t care what the laws of our people say! You disgust me!”

Qurot laughed cruelly. “You don’t need to like me Athani!” He sneered at her. “You just need to submit to me whenever I demand it! And once I rid you of that tail... I can assure you... you will spend long periods of time feeling me within you and locked together at our groins! Perhaps I will take a taste of your charms now. I would be well within my rights as long as I don’t mark you! I wouldn’t want to anger your father now!”

Athani's blue/green eyes flared and she brought tail whipping around her shoulder. Though it didn't look like much, appearing thin and cumbersome, Athani's tail was extremely strong and dexterous. She had spent hours and days training with it, making it stronger and using it as an extension of her will. The smooth, tapered end slapped into the side of Qurot's head with the force of a club. His head snapped back and he released her arms as he seized his head in pain and tottered back several steps. Athani knew she could not fight him effectively dressed as she was but she would die before allowing anyone but Resumar to touch her now. She dropped into as balanced a defensive form as she could, her tail poised to strike out again as Qurot looked up at her a thin trickle of blood running down the side of his furry face. The end of her tail had struck with such force it had actually broken the skin beneath the protective layer of fur and that surprised Athani.

Qurot reached up and touched the side of his head with his fingers and pulled them back looking at his blood. He looked at her wide eyed and he smiled. "Well at least you won't surrender to me without a fight!" He laughed. "I like that!"

"I won't surrender to you at all!" Athani hissed.

"QUROT!" The voice bellowed.

They both turned to see Pian standing in the doorway of Athani's apartment still in his uniform. Qurot looked at him and grinned. "Pian! Good! This female struck me! She has been promised to me by her father and she struck me! Drew blood too!"

Pian stepped into the apartment fully now. He held up the small bag that Athani had carried through the evening. "Jalersi asked that I return this to you Athani." He stated. "And Jiss has asked that you join us downstairs Qurot."

"What for?" Qurot asked.

"I did not ask him." Pian replied. "We should go."

Qurot looked at him but found that Pian was not going to leave without him. He had no desire to press this further in Pian's presence and he turned back to Athani. "We will continue this later my mate!" He barked. "I suggest you prepare yourself."

Athani waited until the door closed behind him and then she insured it was securely locked with a new entry code she had devised, stabbing the code into the panel, her heart racing in fear and anger.

[Resumar!] Athani blurted within Mindvoice. [Please answer me! I... I need to hear your voice! I...]

"I'm right here." His voice spoke gently but very much out loud and Athani turned quickly to face the balcony as he stepped into the apartment from the opened aired patio. Athani felt the tremors from Cemath as he lifted away once more and she crossed the room to him without hesitation.

Athani stopped when she saw the look of concern and worry on his face. "You were not answering me." She spoke softly. "I didn't know what was..."

"Just tell me you did not know about this Athani." He spoke looking at her as he moved closer. Athani didn't back away from him as he stopped inches from her looking down into her face. "Tell me what you make me feel is real and not some mistake. Tell me this is not all some game that we should stop right now."

"It is as real as what you make me feel." She said without hesitation. "Tell me what you want me to do to prove this to you. I will do anything you ask of me Resumar. I will..." His arms lifted her up and his lips came down on hers and Athani surrendered to his kiss with a whimper of delight. Her arms went around his broad shoulders and her tail curled around his waist as she returned his fiery kiss with all that she was. It was the most incredible kiss he had given her up until this point and as his aura surrounded her Athani felt her nerves and body come alive with indescribable feelings and sensations.

Athani's eyes opened languorously when she felt his lips slowly pull away from hers, pausing to nibble gently on her bottom lip. She brought her hand up and placed it against his cheek, feeling the scuff of his facial hair and his strong jaw. She bit her bottom lip as she trailed her long index finger down the ridge of his elven ear, watching as his dark eyes closed and an imperceptible shudder went through him, feeling his powerful arms pull her tighter.

"Resumar... I knew nothing about what Karun was going to do! Please believe me! None of us did! You must..." She said softly watching as his eyes opened and he gazed at her.

"No." He spoke interrupting her words. "You do not need to explain anything to me."

"Resumar... Resumar tell me we can make this work." Athani said tightening her grip on him suspended in his arms as she was.

“Is it what you desire Aryschanne?” He asked her.

Athani nodded instantly. “More than anything.”

“Then we will make this work.” He answered calmly. “I need one more day to arrange everything Aryschanne. One more day and we will not need to be apart after that.”

“And tonight?” She asked with a seductive tone in her voice.

Resumar looked at her. “Tonight I just want to hold you in my arms.” He said. “If that is acceptable to you?”

Athani’s blue/green eyes were bright and beautiful and she kissed him deeply as she nodded her head.

“That... that is very acceptable to me Resumar Leonidas.” She said finally. “Very acceptable to me indeed.”

SODRAG

“...her brother?” Eliani stated incredulously.

“Andro... is that... is that like a joke?” Arrarn gasped. “If it is... it ain’t nubous funny brother.”

They were in the small, secure briefing room, Andro standing at one end of the table and looking at his brothers and sisters as well as Moneus and Nyla.

Andro shook his head slowly, looking to where Sadi sat at the table directly to his left. “It’s no joke.” He said softly. “I wish it was.”

“Andro... how?” Eliani asked as Nyla grasped her hand tightly.

“Father has known since they rescued her from Lycavore.” Andro spoke settling into the chair. “Our mothers a few years less.”

“And he never told her?” Eliani gasped.

“Tell her what Eliani?” Carina spoke now. “That her father is a traitor to his own people? That he has killed hundreds if not thousands of his people? That he almost killed grandmother that day in Sparta? After nearly five hundred years of being a slave and plaything for the High Coven and thinking all that time the man who came for her was her father. Our father.”

“That would have broken her.” Zarah spoke softly.

“Regardless of his reasons... father did not tell her.” Andro said. “I for one agree with him. Mother contacted me very briefly as I was coming here to meet with you. Lisisa and Deni will be landing in about an hour. It’s late in Sparta so father intends to tell her in the morning.”

“How did this happen?” Nyla asked now.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. “I don’t know the whole story... I don’t really care to be honest. Lisisa is our sister... and that will not change for me. It appears Pusintin... or Pleistarchus, whatever you want to call him... he was on Earth roughly two months before the comet came. He raped Yuri and she thought it was father. When she became pregnant with Lisisa it only confirmed to her that it was father. She still believed they had killed Pleistarchus many years before.”

Eliani nodded slowly. “There would be no way to tell without a Fractal DNA Splicing Sequencer Scan.” She said. “Father’s blood is too pure... and apparently so is our uncle’s. A normal DNA test would not have revealed it.”

“And this is why Yuri has hated your father for so long my love?” Sadi asked leaning forward.

Andro nodded. “At least one of the major reasons.” He leaned back in the chair shaking his head. “She and Aikiro think they have a time bomb waiting to drop with that tidbit of information. They are in for a surprise I think.”

“Wait! You think they were going to use that against Uncle Martin somehow?” Moneus asked.

“It fits their pattern.” Arrarn spoke with a nod. “Sow confusion within the enemy ranks. The first lesson during our Agoge Training Moneus.”

“But no one would believe Uncle Martin raped Yuri.” Moneus spat.

“No... but it would still draw attention from what they are really here for.” Arrarn spoke. “And I think we all know that to be true.”

“Aikiro and Yuri... her children... perhaps.” Andro spoke. “Not the riders and dragons. Not now. Their bonds have changed them. Changed them before they even came here. The majority of them anyway. I know all of you can sense the desire to learn in them. They have been here three days and already they are beginning to open up and accept that they could be more. And many of them are beginning to see we are not the enemy any longer. Arrarn... KertaGai... what about the pilots?"

Arrarn met his eyes evenly. "Rough around the edges... but very teachable." He said immediately. "All of them have the desire to be the best. Some aren't too happy they will be flying a DT; they think they belong in a fighter. That will change when we begin to fly I think. Sadi?"

Sadi nodded. "I agree. Once they see what one can do, they'll change their tune very quickly I think."

"Andro... do you think this is some sort of play by the Kavalians?" Zarah asked. "To get a dragon maybe?"

Andro looked at her wide eyed. "Zarah... I... I never thought of that!" He gasped.

"Lisisa and Jeth are second only to you and father Andro." Zarah continued. "If this is some sort of ploy to get her to come over to their side. Turn her against us."

"No!" Carina stated. "A ploy to gain knowledge on dragons I believe, but they could never turn Lisisa against us! She is our sister! I don't care what this idiot Karun says. She has been our sister since all of us were born! She has been there for us... do any of you actually believe she would turn on us in some way? No... I agree with Andro."

"I didn't say it was something she would do Carina. Lisisa would never betray any of us, and I too believe as Andro and you." Zarah spoke. "But what if that is what the Kavalians are hoping to accomplish in some fashion. We all know how they treat females of their own species."

Eliani laughed. "Let them try some sibfla like that with Lisisa!" She stated. "She'll drop the first one to even blink at her funny."

"There is something else you all should know." Andro spoke leaning forward. "It will come out eventually now, probably sooner rather than later. But it is something you need to know now."

"Why do I get the feeling you are about to drop a big old bomb on us big brother?" Zarah asked.

"Bigger than this last one?" Arrarn spoke. "No way!"

"Denali and Lisisa have been together for the last three years." Andro spoke seeing their faces run the myriad of emotions to what he just said and then end up just showing their stunned shock.

"Wait... when you say together..." Eliani spoke finally leaning forward. "You mean together... together. As in..."

Andro nodded. "Yes. They are very much in love."

"Well dip me in sibfla and call me stinky!" Arrarn exclaimed from his chair.

"This is not some random act or matter of exploration on either of their parts. It is the reason that neither of them has ever been seen with someone else. They have not wanted or needed someone else." Andro spoke. "Helen and I have known for the last two years... and it is part of the reason I have kept them together on the SCIMITAR. So that they could fully cultivate what they have and it has only grown stronger. They told grandmother Gorgo the day of the State Dinner, and were planning on revealing it to everyone soon. They did not know how any of you would act or how you would think of them. Or how our parents will deal with this knowledge. It has been a cause of some concern of theirs since they discovered what they have is not just a passing fancy."

"Damn Andro... when you say you got something important to tell us... you don't jerk around do you?" Moneus declared.

Eliani shook her head. "I knew it!" She spoke. "I should have known it!" She corrected herself getting to her feet. "When she began asking for a larger supply of cloned blood to be kept on the SCIMITAR. And then when I found the three bottles in Deni's refrigerator. I thought he was seeing that pureblood from Engineering and all along it's been Lisisa. She was taking the blood to hide Deni's scent after they were together."

"That is why their quarters and apartments are next to each other. Why Lisisa sold her villa and bought one closer to Deni's in Gytheio. Why they took the bungalows furthest away from the Quad." Carina gasped. "So they could be close to each other."

Zarah smiled from her chair next to Moneus. "That's very romantic." She stated softly. "I think they make the perfect couple."

Andro nodded. "They were worried how all of us would think." He said looking at his brothers and sisters.

“Andro... this was commonplace in old Sparta.” Nyla spoke now. “In some respects it still is today. Dilios’s son is mated to his first cousin. I know of several other instances here on Earth. Your own grandparents were related. In many respects... your father and mothers... all of us... we have remained true to the culture of old Sparta even now. Because of that... this information does not shock us as much as others might think.”

“That is why they finally went to grandmother Gorgo.” Andro said. “She knew what they were experiencing and she would understand.”

“I don’t know how they do it?” Arrarn spoke. “When I look at Eliani...” Arrarn shuddered. “Eewwww!”

Eliani rolled her eyes at him. “Well you don’t actually get my blood to simmering either brother.” She snapped.

“Now... Carina on the other hand... I look at her and think yummy!” Arrarn said leaning towards her and batting his eyes!

Carina shoved him away. “Pervert!” She exclaimed with a laugh. “Get away you pervert!”

Andro smiled at his siblings antics and shook his head. “I take it this knowledge does not upset any of you.” He said.

Arrarn winked at Carina before leaning forward. “Listen... I am not going to look at her any differently because she and Deni are in love. And certainly not because of whom her parents are. Am I surprised? Yes... I’m floored. Does it change anything about how I feel about her and Deni? Hell no! She is still my sister as Carina said. She is still our sister, and that will not change. The same blood flows in all of us Andro. We have to accept that our uncle is a backstabbing bastard and traitor to his own people... but that does not mean that Lisisa shares those traits because she is of his blood. And Lisisa has said more than once her life did not begin until father found her. Well... this is her life. We are her life.”

“Aovi.” Eliani spoke looking at Andro. “Once in a while he does make some sense. Not often mind you... but once in a while.”

“We should increase our perimeter security Andro.” Moneus spoke. “If what Zarah says is even a remote possibility then we should plan for it.”

Andro nodded. “Agreed. Father has routed all Priority COMS to me here for the next twenty-four hours until he and our mothers can get a handle on things in Sparta. We knew the Kavalians were here for more than this ridiculous trade thing, and apparently they said some things during the dinner that only confirmed that. The Feravomir and Elder Mother will be here for the remainder of the day and probably into the evening as well observing the riders and dragons. Zarah... you ready to begin tomorrow?”

Zarah nodded. “All set.” She said.

“I think it’s safe to assume they have had extensive hand-to-hand training, so skip the basic skills and move right to the advanced.” Andro said seeing Zarah nod. “Carina and I will be in OPS going over training and covering any COMS that come in.”

“Nyla and I have our shift on Staff Duty beginning in an hour.” Eliani spoke. “We’ll be in the Command Center.”

“Arrarn... I’ll leave you and Sadi to continue your training of the pilots.” Andro spoke. “I don’t know when Lisisa and Denali will return but let’s plan for them to be gone for at least a couple days and adjust. I will contact Uncle Isra and see if he can fill in for Deni, at least short term.”

“Andro... what about when they come back?” Carina asked.

Andro met her eyes. “Considering how we all feel... I would think we act as if nothing has changed. Which in our opinions it hasn’t. Is that the general consensus?” He saw them nod their heads quickly. “That is our answer then.” He spoke getting to his feet. “Let’s get to work.”

YOCETU

They heard the explosions within the tunnel, as well as the roars of the Bancorik, dulled as they were through the thick metal and concrete.

“What’s going on?” Esther asked.

Fash’ka shook his head as he leveled the SA80 at the door. “The Bancorik destroyed the cameras in the tunnels mother.” He stated. “There is no way for us to know.”

“Xsa!” Esther spat as she hefted the SA80. “I thought T’lolt would be here by now!” (Damn)

Normya sat up on the couch just as Tir’ut appeared next to her like a shadow. He held out her K12 KM. “Your weapon Il kal’daka darthirii.” He spoke. “It is not damaged and I cleaned it for you. If it is Bancorik outside the door, do not waste your ammunition. I will protect you as much as I am able... even your KM rounds will not penetrate their skin. Wait as long as you can but if I fall... then use it on yourself. You do not wish to be eaten by one of these creatures I assure you.”

“We... we can’t run?” Normya gasped as she took the K12.

Tir’ut shook his head. “We did not make these bunkers with alternate exits. They were never intended to be used for defense. Only shelter at night against the predators of this planet.” He spoke softly gazing at her beautiful face.

There was a soft clicking sound and Fash’ka turned his head. “Someone is accessing the controls on the other side!” He snapped backing away from the door slightly.

Tir’ut turned quickly and lifted his SA80. “Gareld’s men!” He barked dropping to one knee in front of Normya, his bulk effectively shielding her. “Stand ready! Them we can fight!”

The seconds ticked by and then the seals on the door hissed. Esther dropped behind a flimsy table she had flipped over, while Ja’narie stood slightly behind her, half shielded by the doorway. Fash’ka was closest to the massive door as it opened, in the doorway of the small medical room. His dark eyes fell upon the bodies of at least three Adolescent Bancoriks littering the tunnel. Two of them looked as if they had eaten plasma grenades, as their midsections were completely blown open and shredded. A smile spread across his face then. It was the first and most effective way he and his tribe had learned to kill these beasts. Get them to ingest grenades pushed into huge chunks of meat. As the door opened completely Fash’ka’s face became very animated as he saw his uncle standing in the center of the tunnel, tall and proud. A dozen other Immortals of their tribe were spread out covering the tunnel in all directions.

“T’lolt!” Esther almost screamed, dropping the SA80 and letting it dangle on the quick release straps as she moved forward and threw herself into the Immortal’s arms.

The Immortals kneeling around T’lolt could only smile and shake their heads. All of them had long ago grown used to their matriarch tribe mother and her outbursts of emotion. T’lolt hugged his brother’s Blessed Wife quickly and then set her down on the floor of the tunnel.

“Du’ased dalniril... I see now why my brother has sleepless nights!” T’lolt spoke with a grin that exposed his vampiric fangs. (Blessed sister)

Esther kissed his rough cheek with a smile. “Gareld’s ship in orbit?” She asked quickly.

“Retreating quickly as we approached.” T’lolt answered. “One G9 they could have handled, but when all three of us de-shrouded they ran like tahta dalharen.” (Scared children)

“He’ll be back!” Esther stated.

T’lolt nodded. “This is why I suggest we leave quickly.” He said.

Esther nodded. “There is a body in the medical room. We must take that with us.” She ordered.

T’lolt motioned to two of his men and they moved forward even as Ja’narie came out of the bunker slinging several bags over her shoulders and handing two to Fash’ka. He turned back to Esther, still holding one of her hands. “Now tell me why you could not leave this elf pilot behind Esther.” He spoke. “The risks you have taken will...” He looked up when he saw the huge bulk of his nephew fill the doorway to the bunker. His eyes grew even wider when he saw the long, platinum blond hair and emerald green eyes of the petite elven female in Tir’ut’s arms. Emerald eyes that were bright and full of defiance, even as her hand clutched the K12 in her lap, her other arm draped over Tir’ut’s broad shoulders, her fingers hooked within the cloth of the shirt he wore.

“Xal l’athiyks d’l’phraktos lor phor udossa.” T’lolt muttered as he stepped around Esther to stand in front of Tir’ut. (May the spirits of the gods preserve us.)

“Yes... we said the same thing.” Esther spoke.

T’lolt’s eyes went from Normya to Tir’ut’s face. “This is...”

Tir’ut nodded. “Il kal’daka darthirii... this is my ilninuk T’lolt. My father’s dalninuk.” (Uncle. Brother)

Normya nodded her head slightly at T’lolt. “Vendui.” (Hello)

T’lolt’s eyes grew even wider. “Il telanth udossta xanalress!” He said in surprise. (She speaks our language)

“Yes I do.” Normya snapped. “Quite well in fact!”

T'lolt laughed. "Oh... she is spirited!" He spoke. "I would expect no less from a dalharil of Leonidas!" He turned and looked at Esther. "Now... now I understand why you did not let that vith'rell nadorhuan Gareld have her!" (Fucking Coward) He turned back to look at Normya, his eyes drifting down to Tir'ut's side where he saw the blood stains. "Vil'thm... take her... Tir'ut is injured."

Normya's grip on Tir'ut's shoulder tightened considerably. "No!" She barked causing T'lolt's eyes to narrow somewhat..

"I am fine ilninuk." Tir'ut said quickly. "I will carry Il kal'daka darthirii."

T'lolt looked at Normya's face and the set of her jaw. He also noticed how tightly she held to Tir'ut's shirt as well as the K12 in her small hand. He stepped closer and his face softened if that was possible for an Immortal. Normya watched him reach down and pull something from his leg. Her eyes grew wide when he lifted the Nehtes into view and T'lolt extended the spear in a single blink with his thumb. He turned his face back up and saw the look in Normya's emerald eyes.

"A man saved my life many years ago. A Lycavorian. He told me he did not hate my people. Only what we stood for. He gave me blood to heal my wounds. He sprayed his scent around the bodies of my dead sons to keep animals from their remains. He gave me the time to heal and honor my fallen sons Normya Leonidas." T'lolt spoke.

"How... how do you know my first name?" Normya gasped.

T'lolt smiled. "That man was your father." He spoke softly. "He left this for me in a survival pack since I was weaponless. I have carried this very weapon since that day... I have carried it in the hopes that one day I would be able to return the favor and the life he granted me that day." T'lolt collapsed the Nehtes. "I have lived... we have lived with the honor your father showed me that day Normya Leonidas. And now the gods have granted me the opportunity to return that gift to your father." He looked quickly at Tir'ut and then back to her. "It appears my nephew has already yvalm uktan wun xukuth to you, daughter of Leonidas and I will do the same." Normya's head turned and she looked at Tir'ut's face, which remained impassive. She turned quickly back to T'lolt. "While I live... no harm will come to you she-wolf elf and daughter to Martin Leonidas. If by chance they manage to get past your Quortek S'argt here then they will face me and my clan. And if they face my clan... they face our tribe and my brother Cha'talla." (Bound himself in heart)(Soul Guardian)

T'lolt saw his men bringing the wrapped body on the makeshift stretcher between them. He looked at Esther and nodded.

"The Il kal'daka darthirii remains with Tir'ut!" He barked. "She is to be protected at the cost of our lives!" Normya saw the Immortals nod their heads without hesitation. T'lolt turned back to her and smiled. "Now I suggest we leave this place before those who would do us harm return."

"Yes please!" Fash'ka snapped. "Before my brother decides to kill anymore Bancorik by himself."

T'lolt laughed heartily. "Yes... that will take a bit of explaining to your father boy." He spoke. He looked at Normya for a long moment then at Esther. "Though I believe he will understand completely. You and your father share..."

Esther grabbed T'lolt's arm. "Let us go T'lolt!" She spoke quickly before he finished his sentence.

T'lolt grinned ever wider and nodded. "I wish to be there when Cha'talla sees what we have brought him." He spoke beginning to walk. "I do believe my brother will surprised."

Ja'narie chuckled as she passed Tir'ut and Normya. "Surprised is not a word I would use." She said.

"Nor would I." Tir'ut said softly as he followed.

SODRAG

The Command Center for the Southern Dragon Base was a large two level room, a glass star chart wall separating the upper level from the lower level. The upper level held four offices along the ring, with a large conference table and tables outside the offices. There were two entrances to the conference room, on either end. The lower portion held three rows of techs and other Union personnel that monitored all activity for the southern hemisphere of the planet as well as serve as an alternate command center for the main one in Sparta. They received the same reports and transmissions and like now, there were times when everything was routed through them. There was always a senior officer present in the CC, and when any members of Mjolnir's Hand or the Durcunusaan were present in significant number, they all took shifts in the Center.

Eliani and Nyla were sitting at the large table in the upper level, both of them working on reports and going through files. Nyla still commanded a Durcunusaan Team, and they deployed with her whenever she accompanied Eliani. Her eleven member team had been with her for two years now, and they relished the opportunity to travel, no matter where it took them. All of them were aware of their commander's relationship with Princess Eliani, and this usually saw them go to many different places and planets which suited them just fine since all of them were single and hated being in one spot for too long. Nyla still had fitness reports to do, and that is what she was occupying herself with while Eliani looked over medical files of all the Coven Riders and Durcunusaan that were attached to helping them conduct the training.

Nyla looked up when she saw Eliani sit up in her chair quickly and reach across the table for another data pad. She watched as she put the pads side-by-side and her fern green eyes narrowed.

"Ussta Che? What is it?" Nyla asked.

Eliani looked at her. "Malic." She said softly.

Nyla looked around quickly, her own light green eyes searching for the man they both so wanted. "Where?"

"No... Nyla." Eliani spoke sliding her chair closer to her. "Look." She held out the first data pad. "These are his medical records since entering his Agoge. In all areas since he began his Agoge... Category Sevens. Heart rate. Pulse rate. Cardiovascular. Vital functions. All Category Seven."

Nyla nodded. "Yes... so you picked the perfect specimen of a man for us Ussta Che. I'm not seeing the problem here." She said with a smile.

"He barely felt it when that Coven idiot stabbed him." Eliani said. "The blade penetrated three centimeters into his upper arm Nyla. I saw his face... he almost didn't register that. It didn't sit well with me so I requested his medical records from Apo Prime, from when he was born."

Nyla looked at her. "Ussta Che... medical records are sealed by the parents once they enter their Agoge training."

Eliani nodded. "I know. I... I sort of called in a favor."

"Eliani... if your mother finds out you did this she will be furious!" Nyla said.

"She won't find out!" Eliani said quickly and held out the second pad. "Nyla... he was born with Nomatel Syndrome."

Nyla took the pad. "Nomatel Syndrome? Impossible. Look at him Eliani... he's over six feet tall... he has muscles everywhere. Exquisitely defined muscles I might add. Not to mention what you felt when you..." Nyla turned her eyes to the pad and stopped talking as she read.

"He was born with Nomatel Syndrome." Eliani spoke as she got to her feet. "Two point three pounds when he was born. Faulty lung function, two bad valves in his heart and his kidneys were not fully developed."

Nyla was by no means a doctor, an excellent field medic perhaps, but no where near the skill of Eliani or her mother or Anuk who she spent the most time around. The last four years sharing Eliani's life and bed had given her an insight into medical matters that not many people who were not within the field had however.

"Ussta Che... Nomatel Syndrome... even if he survived the first year... there is no way he could have grown into what he is now."

Eliani nodded. "All the known treatments we have would have stunted his growth to the extreme." She said.

"Then how?"

"There's only one way that I know of... and its use was outlawed four hundred years ago." Eliani said. "Before Malic was born."

Nyla looked at her. "I didn't realize there was a treatment." She said.

Eliani nodded. "It was experimental at the time it was developed. Peteracal. Basically it was similar to a compound known as a steroid in the early 21st century here on earth. It attacked the Nomatel compounds in the host and destroyed them while increasing the normal growth hormones and bodily functions by a factor of three. Eurin finally had it outlawed when it was discovered it was responsible for decreased brain function with extended use. It would kill the outlying nerves in the hosts body and degenerate higher brain functions."

Nyla leaned back in her chair. “Malic is not stupid Ussta Che.” She stated. “He may have gotten this far on his physical merits yes... but you can not be stupid or have some sort of brain dysfunction and make it to the rank of Enomotarch.”

Eliani shook her head. “I know that aur enyla.” She said.

“Then how?” Nyla asked.

“If they stopped giving him Peteracal after say three or four years. It would have reversed the effects of the Nomatel Syndrome completely by then and it would have begun his body on the superior level of growth that he has reached now. You saw his grades in school and during his time at the academy Nyla.” Eliani said.

“He flunked out of the academy Ussta Che.” Nyla spoke. “He was not able to pass Astromechanics and...” Nyla stopped talking once more. “Advanced classes.” She said softly. “He could pass none of his advanced classes.”

Eliani nodded. “Classic signs of Peteracal use.” She said. “Not to mention the fact that he practically didn’t feel the blade stab him. I would also hazard a guess and say that is why he has had no luck with women.”

“What do you mean?”

“As large as we think he is... he should have had a mate a long time ago Nyla.” Eliani spoke. “He doesn’t because he can’t feel. Because he can’t feel... he exerts more force. Then he only ends up turning his partner off because they think he’s only out for himself... or because he hurts them. I doubt he is even aware of it.”

“His father is an Admiral Eliani.” Nyla said. “He wouldn’t risk his career over...”

“He wasn’t an Admiral when Malic was born.” Eliani stated. “All of his older brothers are fleet officers with exemplary records. All of them finished tops in their class at the fleet academy.” Eliani said. “Two of his three sisters are professors at the Tuya University. The third is a teacher... but I don’t know of what. There is not much known about her in his file. His father finished in the top three of his academy class and his mother is a senior liaison with the Apo Prime Senate”

“What are you saying?” Nyla asked.

“I’m saying that... I think his parents knew exactly what they were doing Nyla.” Eliani spoke. “Given what I have discovered... I think they were ashamed of Malic. Their other children were all exceptionally intelligent and supremely healthy when they were born. They fit in with the class of people they associated themselves with. I think they allowed him to have the Peteracal treatments so he would not embarrass them.”

Nyla looked at her. “That is a big reach Ussta Che.” She spoke. “We don’t know what kind of relationship Malic has with his parents and siblings. We...”

They both looked up when the clear glass door opened and the Senior Lieutenant stepped slowly into the room. “Pardon me Princess... Commander...”

Nyla looked at him and shook her head. “It is no problem Lieutenant.” She spoke. “What is it?”

“I have a situation I think. I have an Admiral Megdar of the 32nd Expeditionary Fleet Group on the COM. He is demanding to speak with his son, but his son has refused further communications from him or his mother. He had that entered into the log and everything.” He spoke coming forward.

“Who are we talking about Lieutenant?” Eliani asked. “Is he here on the base now?”

The lieutenant nodded and placed the pad on the table. “Enomotarch Malic Princess.” He answered. “He took a communications from his mother the first night here and right after that he contacted the Duty Officer and had it entered into the Duty Log that he no longer wanted to receive COMs from them. This Admiral Megdar isn’t happy about that and is demanding to speak with the senior officer on duty.”

“Did you contact Enomotarch Malic?” Eliani asked.

The man nodded. “He said he has no desire to interrupt his duties to speak to anyone not within his chain of command.” He replied. “After what happened yesterday Princess... in the REC center I mean... there aren’t many of us who want to make this young man angry.” He said sheepishly.

Nyla looked at Eliani for a brief moment her eyes wide. “Ussta Che?” She asked finally. Eliani nodded quickly. Nyla turned back to the man. “Patch it in here Lieutenant.” Nyla spoke quickly. “We’ll handle it.”

The lieutenant nodded quickly and moved back into the main room signaling someone with his arm. Eliani stepped out of the way of the holo disc and Nyla nodded at the unspoken movement. They both watched as the holo image of the tall, muscular and slightly graying man appeared dressed in an impeccably tailored Fleet uniform. His hair was well within regulations, and it appeared as if his very uniform was as stiff as the way he was standing. His eyes quickly found Nyla as she sat at the table and she and Eliani both realized where Malic got his incredible blue eyes. They were the same as his father's it appeared.

"Well it's about time!" The man nearly shouted. "I've been waiting for nearly ten minutes! I don't like to wait!"

"I'm sorry for the delay Admiral Megdar." Nyla spoke. "I am Durcunusaan Star Commander Nyla Sinthe. What can I do for you?"

"I want to speak to my son!" Megdar exclaimed hotly. "That is what I have been telling the Lieutenant all along!"

"And who would your son be sir?" Nyla asked sweetly.

"Are all of you Durcunusaan as incompetent as that Lieutenant?" He snapped. "I told him my son's name! Enomotarch Malic! You need to train your personnel better Commander!"

"Thank you for the observation Admiral. It is my understanding sir that Enomotarch Malic has refused any further communications from you and your wife sir." Nyla spoke. "His request has been logged and acted on. He is currently on duty right now and can not be pulled away, nor does he wish to communicate with you sir."

"Do you know who I am Commander?" Megdar growled.

"Of course sir." Nyla spoke.

"I was attempting to contact my son to inform him I have spoken with the Personnel Assignment Office and gotten him assigned to my Fleet Group!" Megdar snapped. "He is to be ready to depart Earth when I arrive there in three days."

Nyla's eyes narrowed slightly. "Really. That is interesting sir. I wasn't aware that the Personnel Assignment Office has authority to transfer members of the Durcunusaan without permission. In fact... I know that to be the case."

"I am an Admiral/Lieutenant in the Union Fleet Commander!" Megdar barked. "I have full authority to act in this regard. If I want to transfer my son... I will!"

"It's Star Commander Admiral... and forgive me... but you do not have authority over Durcunusaan personnel sir." Nyla spoke calmly.

"He is not a member of your rogue unit yet Commander!" Megdar popped making sure to emphasize the commander portion. "And if I have anything to say about it... he won't be! I will not allow my son to walk the same paths as the rest of you. Undisciplined and without regard for rules and superior officers. And I most certainly will not allow him to become a member of that dragon unit."

"I'm sorry Admiral..." Nyla spoke keeping her patience as only a vampire could. "As I said... you have no authority over members of the Durcunusaan or those in their candidacy for entry into the Durcunusaan." Nyla spoke. "Enomotarch Malic is currently involved in training and he has requested no further transmissions from you or your mate be allowed to reach him. We will honor that request. Your orders will not be acted on sir... in fact... as soon as we get done here I will insure they are canceled completely."

"Who is your superior officer? I want to speak to them right now!" Megdar spoke.

"I work directly from Crown Prince Androcles sir. At the moment he is quite busy and will not be able to speak with you." Nyla said. "I will however leave him a message indicating your displeasure. It will not be a priority for him I'm afraid and it may be some time before he gets back to you."

"I will be on Earth in three days!" Megdar announced. "I want my son to meet me at the facility where he is and he will leave with me."

"Admiral... you do not possess the necessary security clearances to enter a Durcunusaan facility. I'm sorry." Nyla told him.

"I am an Admiral/Lieutenant! I have the highest security clearance there is!" Megdar spat.

"No sir... you do not." Nyla spoke firmly. "I'm sorry Admiral, I will inform Malic of your transmission however, I need to return to my duties. If there is nothing else?"

Megdar glared at her unable to comprehend that a junior officer to him had just dismissed him so casually. "I will have your rank Commander!" He snapped.

Nyla laughed. "Yes sir... I have heard that before too. Good day sir!" Nyla ended the transmission before the words Megdar were forming could come out and she turned to look at Eliani. "That... that is Malic's father?" She gasped. "The man is a pretentious, egotistical, self centered dalharuk d' elg'caress!" (Sonofabitch)

Eliani laughed softly as she stepped up to her. “Boy... he got you worked up.” She said.

Nyla looked at her. “You have discovered the one man who makes both of us burn for him in a way no other ever has ussta che. I do not have any intention of letting that go.”

Eliani nodded. “Neither do I.” She stated.

“Is there anything you can do to reverse the effects of using this Peteracal drug?” Nyla asked.

Eliani nodded. “Oh yes! The only problem will be getting Malic to agree to it.” She stated.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

SODRAG

Carisia knew who the woman sitting in front of her was. There was never any question in that knowledge, even though she had never seen her before today. The power radiating from her within Mindvoice equaled that of her grandmother in many respects, and even what she had felt briefly from King Leonidas himself. Carisia knew that she was different. How quickly she had bonded with Anthar was the first sign of that. Having Androcles and Sadi in her dreams for so many years was another. Her being able to deflect her grandmother’s Mindvoice probes was another and then coming here and with just a simple touch become so completely woven within the fabric of two other minds. It told her she was meant for other things than what her mother and grandmother intended. Better things. Carisia also knew there was something wrong with her when it came to Thast. She was not a weak person, and she knew without question she would never submit to the fat pig willingly. Yet she had submitted to him, more times than she cared to recall.

Most of the Coven riders had gathered in the REC center for the duration of the day, spending the additional hours of downtime reading through the manuals they had been given. Even Lucia, Javier and Dante had come to the REC center and were now sitting quietly at a table in the far corner. Only Yuri had remained locked away in her private bungalow. They were not allowed off the base yet, so this was really the only place they could come, yet Carisia noticed this morning when she entered that it was beginning to have the effect Andro had desired. It was bringing the Riders closer together, something they had not had before coming to Earth.

Carisia had noticed immediately the vivacious mood Narice was in when they gathered to eat, and that mood had continued into the late morning as they sat in the REC center going over certain flying formations and exit pointers. Her face and eyes seemed so much more relaxed and vibrating with new life and discovery.

And then she had felt Androcles call for her.

His Mindvoice presence within her psyche, while still heavily shielded, provided her an increased sense of things and an overwhelming sagacity of calm and peace. She and Sadi had spoken as often as possible over the course of the last few days, and both of them trembled to be with each other, as well as Androcles. Carisia couldn’t explain it, and like Sadi and Andro, she had stopped trying to figure it out almost as soon as she had come to Earth. They were meant for each other and it filtered through her body like the strumming of a fine musical instrument. She had left the REC center as if intently reading from the manual and made her way to the small mess lounge. Once inside she blurred out the back of the building, remaining within the shadows of the many structures, until she came to the small office building where she felt him. Inside she could barely tear her eyes from his tall, muscular form and it was then that she was introduced to the Lycavorian First Oracle.

Carisia had been surprised at first at the diminutive size of the woman in front of her, until she remembered that this woman held the memories and power of the original First Oracle of the Lycavorian people. The Oracle that her grandfather so feared that he refused to kill the man because he had wanted the power Canth wielded. Unlike her mother and brothers and sister, Carisia had spent hours delving into the intercepted Netnews reports and whatever history she could find on the Lycavorian Union and its history. Androcles didn’t say a word, only nodded his head as he turned and left. Helen motioned to the chair in front of her and Carisia had not hesitated in sitting down.

Now she was so very happy she had.

Almost two hours their minds had been joined and Carisia had seen things; places, events, people. It was like a trip through a time warp, as every barrier she had put in place over the years was brought down. Slowly, inexorably and with precise control, her shields came down and were rebuilt one by one, even more powerfully than they had been before. She and Anthar rejoiced in the clarity and expansiveness that now filled them, and Carisia almost broke out crying when she felt the love pouring from him for her. Yes... the Lycavorian First Oracle tore down those walls and rebuilt them, reshaped them into something far more.

Helen drew back her hands slowly and opened her eyes. "Well... that wasn't so bad now was it?" She said.

Carisia shook her head slowly. "No Feravomir." She answered with a smile.

"You are a powerful young woman Carisia." Helen spoke. "Your natural shields match those of Sadi you know... and outside of Martin Leonidas and Androcles... I have felt none stronger."

"I feel... I feel so much more aware. So much more alive and powerful." Carisia said softly.

Helen nodded. "Guard it well child." She spoke. "Your grandmother the Empress will detect your increase in abilities the moment you lower your shields below what they are now. You have Sadi and Andro to draw on now. I have strengthened that connection... well more finely tuned it is the better explanation. The three of you formed that connection yourselves and an extremely powerful bond it is. Do not hesitate to draw on it. Sadi will show you how."

"You... you don't seem surprised that I... that I have this connection to them." Carisia said. "Why is that?"

Helen chuckled. "Child... I have spent the last twenty-five years walking among some of the most powerful Mindvoicers I have ever felt in the Leonidas family. More powerful than even Canth felt in his time. I have come to learn to expect the unexpected with them. You were meant to be with Andro and Sadi by a much higher power Carisia. They know that now... and so do you. That is why you have called for each other across the stars for so long. Embrace that."

"I have Feravomir." Carisia said. "I don't question it."

"And neither do Andro and Sadi." Helen spoke with a smile. "Though you and Sadi may have to nudge him a little to stop being so obstinate. His blood calls for you both equally... as his father's blood calls for his mates. Sadi is also just discovering the manifestation of the more physical aspects of Mindvoice abilities. You saw the first sign of this yesterday."

Carisia nodded. "Yes."

Helen nodded. "She will need you and Andro to help her learn to control it. Focus it. She has not had the years you and Andro have in using this ability since she is not bonded to a dragon. The connection between the three of you is established... but I must warn you... once the three of you open it completely, you will not be able to close it. You will not have to speak shielded within your private connection; you will be open to each other's minds and thoughts. Perhaps even sense each other's emotions as well... but once open child... it will stay open."

"I understand." Carisia spoke softly. "I do not fear that Feravomir."

Helen nodded. "Pass on to Anthar what you have learned for he is just as much a part of you as Elynth is Andro."

Carisia looked at her with bright, maya colored blue eyes. "Feravomir... what about..."

"Tell me what you feel first." Helen spoke.

"I do not desire that fat pig's touch upon me!" Carisia exclaimed quickly. "I never have Feravomir! Now that... now that I have found them... I want no one else's touch on me! Please... you must believe..."

Helen held up her hand. "It is not a matter of me believing you Carisia." She said. "That you desire Sadi and Andro is clear enough to me. Now... tell me what you feel?"

Carisia shook her head. "It is like I have no control of myself." She spoke softly. "I despise him to the extreme... but I can't refuse him no matter how much I want to. How much I fight it. It frightens me."

Helen nodded slowly. "Well... it will not be an issue of concern any longer, so remove that fear from your mind." She stated flatly. "Someone very powerful implanted a subconscious command within your subconscious to make you submit to this man. They buried it very deep, for they did not want it to be found. They left a trap door so to speak so that another could reinforce this command from time to time and it appears that has been done for a few years at least."

Carisia looked at her evenly. "My mother?" She stated coldly.

Helen nodded. "That would be my first guess." She answered. "She has the ability to do this... we've known that the ability to alter perceptions and control ones actions to a degree has been part of her abilities for some time." Helen watched those beautiful blue eyes become hard points of rage. "I understand now that Moran is not your real father even though you carry his name."

Carisia shook her head. "My mother killed my father... or Robert did... I'm not really sure. He was a pureblood... a despicable man from everything I have heard... but the son of one of my grandfather's most loyal supporters. She had to give him a child to seal the pact of honor between my father's family and the High Lord. I was that child. He was butchered when my grandmother came to power."

Helen shook her head. "I will never understand the Coven's need for power and to have loyal subjects use barbaric acts to show ones support and loyalty. It is beyond me."

"My mother... she has never treated me as she does the others." Carisia spoke looking at her.

"I take it this Thast is from a powerful family?" Helen spoke.

Carisia nodded. "One of the first that swore loyalty to my grandmother."

"You and Lisisa... your paths are frighteningly parallel." Helen said.

"Where is she?" Carisia asked quickly.

"She has returned to Sparta for the moment." Helen replied. She placed her hands on Carisia's cheeks. "I have removed this command from your mind Carisia." She said. "Your mind is once more your own."

Carisia looked at her. "Won't... won't my mother notice this?"

Helen nodded. "Probably. There is nothing she can do about it now."

"Why remove it?" Carisia asked. "Now that I know it was there I could have fought it. If she discovers it is gone..."

Helen shook her head. "You would not have been able to fight it child. It was buried in your subconscious. You would have acted on it whether you wanted to or not. And whoever has been reinforcing this command is moderately skilled as well in controlling one's actions or perceptions. They will not be able to detect it now that I have established the connection with Sadi and Andro. You will naturally draw off of their ability to shield so tightly, and it will enhance your own abilities. The only way your mother will realize it is gone is if she conducts a deep probe of your thoughts. You are considerably more powerful at shielding than she is Carisia. You can deflect her probes easily. Make her see what she wants to see. If by chance she is able to breach your shields, she will not like the reception she will get I assure you."

"What do you mean?"

"The connection you now have with Sadi and Andro will allow them to know the instant an intrusion is made into your mind. Just as you will be able to detect it from them. Trust me if your mother or grandmother or whoever for that matter, were ever able to break through your shields, their mind would be shredded within seconds."

"But why do this?" Carisia spoke. "It puts at risk everything I..." She stopped talking and looked at Helen her eyes wide.

Helen chuckled softly. "Do you think we didn't know that was yours and Anthar's intent all along?" She said gently. "Andro and Elynth sensed this first, and then Sadi. I did this for two reasons Carisia. The first is to help you concentrate better on what you will learn while you are here. It will allow you to focus and expand what you already have. The second... the second reason was to protect you."

"Protect me?" Carisia asked.

Helen nodded. "You must understand child... you were meant for Sadi and Andro, and they for you. It is a destiny that others will try to halt or interrupt. That is what you can not allow. Androcles and Sadi are wolves... pureblood Lycavorians with some of the purest blood within the Union. Even Sadi did not realize how pure her blood was, not until after Androcles came back into her life. Because they are wolves... they are very possessive of what they consider to be theirs. I did this so that one or both of them does not do something drastic, say tearing Thast to pieces, if they felt you having to endure him. And to keep you from having to endure him and kill him yourself."

"They... they are possessive of me?" Carisia asked shyly.

"Yes." Sadi's voice echoed in the room. Carisia whirled around quickly as Helen smiled and got to her feet. Sadi stopped just inside the doorway, letting the door to the outer room slid shut behind her and she looked at Carisia. "We are very possessive of you."

Carisia's heart beat rapidly as Sadi stepped up to her and took her hands tightly. She was taller than her by five inches and she looked down into Carisia's eyes with intense desire and need. Sadi leaned over quickly and inhaled deeply of Carisia's rose petal scent, closing her eyes in bliss as it filtered through her being. She drew back slowly and dragged her full lips across Carisia's cheek slowly moving to allow them to come to rest on Carisia's own sweet, soft lips and she kissed her. It was a sensuous kiss of deep feeling and commitment, Sadi's body on fire as she probed tentatively with the tip of her tongue against Carisia's lips. Her mind called out in joy when Carisia's lips parted and her own delicious tasting tongue darted out and met hers.

"Ahem!"

They pulled apart quickly and both of them turned to look at Helen with embarrassed gazes.

"Feravomir!" Sadi spoke quickly. "Forgive us."

Helen smiled and stepped up to them. "I'm just glad Andro was not here." She said. "I shudder to think of what..."

"Of what I would have done?" Andro's voice spoke now as he came into the room.

Helen turned quickly startled by his sudden appearance. "Carians!" She gasped. "Will you and your father never learn to announce yourselves to this old woman before you enter a room? You will frighten me into having an attack!"

Andro stepped up to her and leaned over to nuzzle the top of her head. "If we did that... who would keep you on your toes Feravomir?" He said affectionately.

Helen slapped his broad chest. "Ahh... it is done." She said looking at him. "Cherish what the three of you have, but be mindful of your actions until you are ready to reveal it to everyone."

"Thank you Helen." Andro said.

Helen shook her head. "Do not thank me. This is part of what was pre-ordained young Androcles. Many thousands of years before either of us were born. It is all starting to take shape now. Be careful as I said... it is too soon for you to allow everyone to know what it is you share."

"We will be." Sadi spoke.

Helen looked at Carisia and took her hands. "Welcome Carisia." She said. "Welcome into the chaotic and often times utterly insane world of the Leonidas family." Helen kissed her forehead gently. "Do not keep her here long, she will be missed soon."

Andro shook his head. "KertaGai... you and Carisia can head back to the REC center. It will not look odd if you are together. The Feravomir and I need to discuss some things."

Sadi nodded and stretched up to kiss him softly. Carisia looked at Andro for a long moment and then suddenly she was in his arms, lifted off the floor and his lips were upon hers. Carisia's eyes flew wide as his powerful arms crushed her to his body and new sensations ripped through her. She surrendered to his kiss without hesitation and whimpered against his lips, heedless that Helen watched with a grin and shaking her head. Her eyes closed slowly as her arms tightened around his broad shoulders, his tongue searching, exploring and tasting. Carisia savored the faint pines flavor on his tongue, and she pressed her lush body against his tighter, the nerve endings in her body singing out in delight. His kiss ignited her body in ways she had never felt and she hoped it was a preview of what was to come. She wanted him... she wanted Sadi... both of them in the worse possible way, that much Carisia knew without question. She had always dreamed out what it would be like lying between their naked bodies, exploring each of them until she was bursting, and now her dream was within reach. That Sadi was a woman did not even cause her to blink. When their time together came, she was going to savor every delicious portion of her body as well as Andro's.

It was over far sooner than she would have liked and he set her down on the floor once more. "Soon." He said reaching up to stroke her cheek. "Soon you will be ours in every way."

Carisia smiled as she bit her bottom lip and Sadi took her hand. "Oh... I do look forward to that." She stated almost breathlessly.

"Come Carisia." Sadi said pulling her away from him with a smile. "Before you are missed."

Carisia found it difficult to tear her gaze from his azure eyes, but she allowed Sadi to pull her gently towards the doorway and then through it. She turned to look at her quickly. "Sadi... he..."

Sadi grinned as they walked towards the outer door that would take them outside. "Yes... I know." She said. "He can certainly kiss can't he? Wait until we have you in our bed and you see what else he can do." Sadi looked at her seductively. "What we both can do, for I intend to feast on you every bit as much as Andro does."

“As long as I get to return the attention.” Carisia said confidently.

Andro turned to look at Helen as he heard Sadi and Carisia giggling like school girls as they left the building.

“Now Feravomir... tell me more about this plan of yours and Arzoal’s.” He spoke. “Elynth passed a little of it to me... and I liked it. I liked it a lot.”

Helen took his hand. “Yes... we thought you might.” She said. “Walk with me to the Command Center and I will fill you in.”

CABELIR

HOME OF PREFECT KELERU

“...take it she was not happy with you?” Keleru spoke as he handed the glass of wine to Pusintin.

Pusintin shook his head. “I don’t believe I have ever seen her so angry with me.” He spoke taking the glass from him. “All because of some stupid, half breed, bastard child! I was sharp with her and told her to deal with it. I regret that.”

Keleru shook his head quickly. “No. Never regret it.” He spoke. “Jalersi knows our laws better than most. She has always known you could take another mate if you desired. That this took place before she was even born should not make it an issue for her.”

“She hates that I didn’t tell her.” Pusintin spoke.

“She is a female and will never know all that we know. That is the law. She must face that.” Keleru spoke. He shook his head. “Now I sound like I am speaking of Athani. This is a child by the vampire bitch! It is not something she should be upset about.”

“I truly hate that I even discovered that she existed.” Pusintin spoke.

Keleru settled onto the couch across from him. “How did you discover that... you never told me?”

“One of the High Coven traitors that was in place before our invasion began. He sent me a burst transmission saying that my brother was on Lycavore rescuing the daughter he had with Yuri.” Pusintin answered. “I found that odd and did some checking and realized that her age corresponded perfectly with the time I was on Earth just before the comet arrived. The same time I spent several hours raping her and listening to her howl for more.”

“More?” Keleru asked with a smile.

Pusintin grinned and nodded his head. “She was a little vampire slut Keleru. Aren’t they all?” He stated. “Nice and tight too.”

Keleru laughed. “I will insure I do not pass that along to my daughter.” He spoke with a shake of his head. “Somehow I don’t think she would appreciate that.”

Pusintin grinned. “No I don’t think so. And I have been careful since then as well.”

“Ah... so you have stepped outside your marriage bed?” Keleru spoke with a knowing smile.

“There have only been a few instances.” Pusintin answered honestly. “All done per our laws.”

Keleru shook his head quickly. “I do not judge you Pusintin. I myself have done the same thing. You provide for and protect my daughter... that is all a father could ask for. And your children make my Pride stronger.” He said.

Pusintin nodded. “Sini’s is a bit more head strong than our females should be, but I attribute that to her mother’s own stubbornness and the fact she is still very young.” He spoke referring to his nineteen year old daughter. Ditja and Maliab are following in their brother’s footsteps and will bring our Pride honor and victory.”

“Yes... others have commented on that as well. You have spent more time with them than you did when Karun was born.” Keleru spoke.

“That was because of the war.” Pusintin spoke. “He did not turn out so bad though. I’m proud of him even though he remains rather protective of his mother at times. That may be an inbred trait of my people showing through. It will disappear with time I’m sure.”

Keleru nodded. "I do recommend we do not tell Jalersi of our future plans until they have been acted upon however. The less risk of discovery the better, and something tells me she would not approve in the least, regardless that she has no say in it."

Pusintin nodded. "Agreed." He said quickly. "Now what about this half breed bitch who is my daughter? What did Jiss say?"

"He believes we can use the fact that she is your daughter to our favor." Keleru said. "Since the vampire witch has made no claim to her... and since she is your daughter by blood... technically she is a citizen of the KFI, not the Union. Therefore... according to the Union's own laws against tampering with internal politics of member states... as a female citizen of the KFI everything in her possession is property of the KFI, including the dragon she commands. And she is subject to our laws, not the Union's laws."

Pusintin looked at him. "You don't actually believe my brother and his cronies will allow that do you?" He said. "Or... what's her name anyway?"

"Lisisa." Keleru said.

"Or that this Lisisa will allow it." Pusintin finished.

Keleru shrugged. "Jiss believes he can make it stick in an open forum. And she will have no choice in the matter. As I said... technically she is a citizen of the KFI. The Union are such sticklers for their precious laws when it suits them... they wouldn't dream of breaking them when Jiss uses those same laws against the Union. If needed he will present it to the Union's own Galactic Laws Council."

Pusintin shook his head. "She'll never go along with it." He said.

Keleru nodded his head. "That is why I have taken extra steps to insure that she does." He said.

"Such as?"

"The leader of the security detachment I sent to Earth is Yoazat's son Timur. Since he has undergone the biogenic treatments these last years, he is perfect. All of his team will blend in perfectly." Keleru spoke calmly. "Your daughter is single Pusintin... and over five hundred years old. By Kavalian law our females are mated well before that age. Timur is virtually flawless in every way. He is an ideal physical specimen. He should be quite pleasing to her eyes. With Karun's help... we will see if Timur can't entice her."

Pusintin nodded. "Excellent idea... but what happens if she is not interested? Or there is someone else?"

Keleru shrugged. "Then we have him lay claim to her as if you gave him her hand many years ago. He will take her and once he has locked groins with her, he will make her with child. If there is someone else... they will not matter. She is a Kavalian citizen." He stated almost nonchalantly.

"That doesn't always work for those who are not pure Kavalian Keleru." Pusintin said. "Even when our females are in heat. You know that. Nine times out of ten it is successful with our females... but the times we have tried it with Lycavorian and elven females the odds drop to like two out of ten. And she's half vampire too."

Keleru nodded. "Yes... I'm aware of that. Timur will do whatever needs to be done however. She is a Kavalian citizen... and subject to our laws. As her father you are well within your rights to do this." Keleru sipped his wine. "Jiss is one of our senior Legislatures and he believes he can make this work. Matuarr agrees with him. If we are able to secure one of these dragons and a rider... it would be a major coup. Especially if it is done without violence and all according to law. And one who is as skilled as your daughter is supposed to be would be an exceptional result. I recommend we let Jiss and Matuarr handle that while Jalersi sets up the Embassy."

"So you are the one who gave Jiss and Matuarr their alternate instructions then?" Pusintin spoke.

Keleru nodded. "Yes. My daughters they may be... but they are still female and unable to do a male's business. I sent them because they would be pleasing to the Lycavorian dogs and their sensibilities. Once the embassy is open and running, I will order them both back and give the position to those who know how to run things."

"Something else you had better not tell Jalersi." Pusintin spoke.

Keleru chuckled and nodded. "Yes." He sipped his wine more downing the brownish liquid and reaching for the bottle to pour more. "Our other plans are proceeding well?"

Pusintin nodded. "He will make contact with the Immortal mercenary group probably late today or early tomorrow and then we will hear something. I'm having our teams train for all four locations. Obviously we would prefer a surface assault. I've also chosen all biogenic troops to conduct the missions. The latest batches.

They will be able to move around freely for the most part and not draw attention to themselves. Given another two months we can insert them into the Union to move to the assault positions and to complete preparations. Escape and egress routes, establish safe houses and such. The papers we have for them were done by the best forgery expert in The Wilds. They are perfect.”

Keleru looked at him. “You found such a man in so small a time frame?”

Pusintin shrugged. “We’ve done business with him before indirectly. I liked his work. Once he has completed what we need... he’ll disappear.”

Keleru nodded slowly. “Good. You don’t wish to conduct a ship bound assault?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “They wouldn’t stand a chance in such small quarters and the information we have now or could possibly obtain won’t give us the schematics of their LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers.” He replied. “Once it became known they were on board there would be no way they would be allowed off, no matter what they had. At least on the surface of a planet they have many different avenues of approach and execution they can plan to use if need be.”

Keleru nodded. “And we can be successful?” He asked.

“Given accurate intelligence and positioning... and a little bit of luck? Yes... we can pull it off. With the proper timing we can complete the first phase before they even recover enough to react. It will take them a minimum of a week to plan and execute any sort of operation. By then it will be too late because I will have already done what needs to be done.” Pusintin answered.

“So you agree with Ogat’s plan to insure cooperation?” Keleru said.

Pusintin nodded. “That’s where the mercenaries come in.” He said with a smile. “Once it’s done... what they do with their prize after that is not our concern. The package will be worthless except to them after they are finished. You do realize of course any team targeted at my brother or nephew will be sacrificed. Getting close to them is one thing, actually killing them and getting away is another. It won’t happen. We know where my brother is almost all of the time... but the son is turning out to be more difficult to lock down. We’ll find him though.”

Keleru nodded slowly. “Yes... there will be casualties I know. It can not be helped however.” He said. “However with both of them out of the picture... it falls to the half elf son or the younger pureblood. Our plan will work then according to the laws they have in place.”

“Only if the first phase succeeds.” Pusintin said. “There are only two ways to go in the first phase and I haven’t decided which would be the easier. Or which I prefer for that matter. Both options are very attractive. We have time. Both options will be open if the schedule we received is accurate.”

Keleru nodded. “It is accurate.” He said. “Ogat is very thorough.”

Pusintin nodded. “Then we continue forward with confidence.”

“What of this report that our T19 contact in The Wilds has disappeared from Talbor Seven?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin looked at him. “I hadn’t heard that one. I haven’t reviewed all my intel reports for the day.”

Keleru nodded. “This Kochab Gravork... he was last seen on Talbor Seven nearly fourteen hours ago. His suite is empty and his bodyguards are missing.”

“This is a concern for us?” Pusintin asked.

“A minor one.” Keleru spoke. “Only because we have done business with him in the past.”

“Keleru it is no secret we have been buying T19s.” Pusintin said.

“I know... however it would not due for others to discover the contacts he has had with our detachment on Nefoa.” Keleru spoke. “Specifically the one where we paid fifty million credits on the off chance that pureblood idiot Gareld could actually obtain Leonidas’s half elf daughter. It was a long shot... Gareld has a contract to kill her for some reason... and I was only going to turn her into a whore for our men there.”

“We covered our bases on that didn’t we?” Pusintin asked.

“Oh yes. The funds and transfer were all done through intermediaries, as were the actual contacts but even in The Wilds there are trails.” Keleru said.

“Do we know if this Gareld succeeded?” Pusintin asked.

Keleru shook his head. “No... but I would imagine if he had it would be all over the Netnews by now.” He spoke.

“So it was credits wasted?” Pusintin said.

Keleru shrugged. "We have a thousand times that amount in our coffers should we need to access it. The credits do not concern me as much as the exposure if this Gareld fool is caught. I will make contact with the detachment commander later today and discover the progress."

Pusintin looked at him as he got to his feet. "I will be in my office all day going over status reports. My sons and father are joining me for dinner, would you care to join us as well?"

Keleru nodded quickly. "Yes. That would be very relaxing."

"I'll see you tonight then." Pusintin spoke as he turned and headed for the door.

SODRAG

He was five hundred and thirty-two years old.

A child in the lifespan of his kind.

His silvery/purple scales shone with health, the muscles rippling beneath his broad chest and powerful wings. His front forelegs were slightly longer than most dragons, and ended with four, razor like black talons. He was just over fifteen and a half meters long and faintly more than three tons of muscle and bone. His neck was long and elegant, his head large and his mouth full of flesh shredding teeth. What caught your attention upon first looking at him were his eyes. They were the most unbelievable deep amethyst color and they were bright with incredible intelligence and calm. His movements were graceful and controlled, every limb precisely tuned to his body. He was considered the foremost dragon scholar outside of the Dragon Elders themselves, and one of the strongest Mindvoicers among their kind. Many of the adolescents and hatchlings came to him for instruction. His teaching method, while stern, was impeccable and no adolescent or hatchling to move forward ever regretted the instruction and lessons he bestowed upon him.

His name was Vincix, and while he truly enjoyed teaching, he would never achieve the one thing in his life that he knew he was meant for.

He would never be a member of Mjolnir's Hand.

He had been one of the first dragons to be tested for entry into the now famed and revered unit of dragon and rider. Four years after they were formed a DT crash had taken three of their number and his mother had pressed him to submit himself for testing. As a Dragon Elder, her voice carried quite a bit of weight and Vincix was tested. He was tested and he failed. Twice in a three year span. Though large and powerful, and very maneuverable in the air while flying, Vincix did not have the muscular development in his hind legs to support the weight of a rider on his back when he was landing. The dozens of times he attempted it, his rear legs always collapsed onto themselves and spilled the rider from the saddle. The one time he attempted to land aboard a DT that wasn't even moving, he had nearly killed the elf female putting him through his paces. It was discovered that for some reason the main muscles in his rear legs could not support the additional weight and violence of landing because they had not developed enough when he was young. After that incident Vincix withdrew his name from consideration willingly, against the wishes of his mother Dalah. He wanted to be a member of Mjolnir's Hand, not be responsible for killing his rider. After that he dedicated himself to being a teacher, and for the last twenty years that is exactly what he had done.

He was well known on Elear and Apo Prime where he traveled often to help train and school the Bonded Pairs. Whenever a new skill was learned within Mindvoice, Vincix was the first to master it and then he would move across the Union passing on this knowledge to the Bonded Pairs. He had accepted his role willingly, though a part of him would always desire the one thing he could not have.

When Prince Androcles approached him to help in training the High Coven dragons, Vincix had jumped at the chance. To train dragons that were not raised among the laws and rules of their kind was a challenge he could not deny. And it kept him close to the one thing he still hoped to obtain. His mother had thought him interested in Tharua, when in actuality he desired Arydun more than anything. He knew many females found him suitable material for a mate, but they hesitated because of his muscular development and worried that he would pass this on to any hatchlings he might sire. It was this reason that kept him from approaching Arydun. At least being close to Arydun made him feel better.

The Coven dragons were an unruly bunch just four days ago when he first met them. Their failure at the obstacle course had changed all that. Like his Prince, Vincix could detect a new sense of purpose in how they arrived here the last two mornings and absorbed the teachings of history and flight and combat. The only three dragons to still be an issue were Vollenth, Marux and Naruth, though it appeared as if Naruth did indeed want to learn. The others just kept him from paying attention.

Vincix stretched up his head from the front of the four ranks of dragons and focused his eyes on Vollenth.

Vollenth... would you care to give us the variables for adjusting to wind patterns and a 1.5G coefficient.

Vollenth's head snapped around and he glared at Vincix. I don't know. He snapped.

You don't know or don't care? Vincix asked calmly as he moved around the side of the ranks of dragons towards Vollenth.

Take your pick. Vollenth answered. Wherever it is I will fight. And win.

Vincix chuckled. Will you now. Have you ever flown in 1.5G gravity? It is heavier than Earth's, so you must use more effort to fly. You will not be able to turn as quickly as you do here. When you spit fire it will not be as long a stream for it is harder to catch a deeper breath.

These are all things that we teach our adolescents and hatchlings Vollenth.

Vollenth stepped forward slightly, his eyes unwavering as he stared at Vincix. Are you saying I am a child? He snarled.

In terms of education... yes. Vincix answered immediately. You... all of you... you lack the education that the hatchlings and adolescents here within the Union receive. We are not simply beasts here. The Elder Mother sits on the Union Senate. We are treated as equals in everything. We choose to bond with a rider and take up this life in defense of the Union and what it stands for.

Are you saying we are less Vincix? A light blue female asked turning to look at him.

Vincix shook his large head instantly. Never. You have not had the same opportunity as the rest of us. That is why Androcles wanted me here. To begin to show you how we live. What we learn.

Dragons are not considered simple tools then? As we were taught. Another asked. I mean... since coming here my rider Crelishan... he has actually made sure I was comfortable before he retired for the night. He has helped me to wash in the machines they have here. He has sat with me for hours and we have talked of his past and what the future brings.

Vincix nodded. No dragon bonded to a rider in the Union is a tool. The men and women and elves that bond with our kind treat their bonded brother or sister as a member of their family. You have all seen how Prince Androcles acts with Elynth. How Princess Lisisa and Princess Eliani, all of them, how they act with Jeth and Tharua and their bond mates. They go practically everywhere together. Dragons freely walk the streets of Sparta and Eden City here on Earth. They walk the streets on Apo Prime and Elear and a half dozen other planets that we have spread out to. We are citizens of this Union. We are not dismissed, not looked down upon as animals. In many cases we are far wiser and older than many, and we are treated with respect and dignity. And we return it willingly to those who treat us this way. When King Leonidas and the Elder mother brought us out of the darkness on Enurrua, our future began. And now you have a chance to be a part of that future. All of you.

Our riders are members of the High Coven! Vollenth snapped. We are enemies! We may be here to receive training from you... but we will fight you one day.

Vincix looked at Vollenth. And is that something you look forward too Vollenth? That you will fight your own kind?

I fight who my rider tells me to fight! Vollenth barked. Besides... I like to fight.

Vincix shook his head. And that is why you will never be more than you are now. He spoke softly.

What do you know! You are not bonded to a rider! Vollenth hissed.

If my rider is like Yuri Vollenth... then that makes me very happy. Vincix answered. She will be your undoing. The hatred she carries passes to you... and with that hatred will be your death.

Are you threatening me? Vollenth spat.

Vincix growled low in his chest and moved closer to him. I may not be bonded to a rider Vollenth... but do not make the mistake of thinking I can not defend myself. He spoke. It would be a very painful lesson for you to learn.

You do not frighten me. Vollenth growled back.

Vincix nodded. And your lack of fear and respect will also contribute to your demise. Prince Andro, Prince Denali and Princess Lisisa... they are members of Mjolnir's Hand Vollenth. Any one of them could slap you from the sky as an afterthought. Any member of Mjolnir's Hand could do this in the time it took you to form the thought. They have reached the pinnacle of what we can become with our bonded ones. You are naught but an insect to them.

The others Vincix? Another coven dragon asked.

Vincix turned. All of them Bonded Pairs, most part of the Durcunusaan. And still more than a match more any of you. At least right now. Members of Mjolnir's Hand you will never be, and it is they you should fear and respect more than any enemy you may ever face. He turned back to Vollenth. However if you wish a shorter life... please do challenge one of them. It will be amusing to watch. He turned quickly once more. I want all of you to finish with the instructions I passed to you. Study the tables and do not hesitate to confer with each other. Your bonded pairs begin hand-to-hand training tomorrow. You will begin advanced flight skills under Elynth and Tharua.

Females? Naruth asked surprised.

Elynth holds the distinction of being the most maneuverable dragon within the ranks of Mjolnir's Hand. Tharua is recognized as the fastest dragon in the Union behind only Isheeni. Vincix replied. You will find a wealth of information and tricks you can use by listening to them. They have flown in perhaps some of the worst possible weather known to exist, and you might actually have some fun. In the afternoon you will return here with me and we will go over and discuss everything you have done. I wish you good luck tomorrow and you know all you have to do is reach out to me and I will answer.

Vollenth stared at him, his eyes angry and embarrassed. Marux and Naruth moved closer to him.

[I will kill that fool Vincix.] Vollenth stated softly. [And I will enjoy watching him die.]

Marux and Naruth turned to look at each other quickly before watching the silvery/purple scales of Vincix moved confidently across the tarmac.

SPARTA

The huge crash ushered them into motion.

They came running around the side of the patio where they had been drinking coffee and waiting, watching as the sun was coming up, only to see a flash of blue/black scales and then Jeth was lifting into the air carrying Lisisa with him. Aricia was the first one through the shattered remains of the patio door into the main room, small pieces of glass speckled across the outside of the door and to some extent on the interior. Her azure eyes swept across the room and she saw Martin pulling himself out of what was once the wall bookcase. The seven hundred year old case was now nothing more than rubble as his two hundred and forty pounds of muscle and bone had smashed it into little pieces.

“Beloved!” Aricia gasped.

“Martin!” Anja echoed darting around her as the others filed in looks of astonishment on their faces.

Aricia and Anja helped Martin to his feet, Anja quickly healing the small scratches on the back on his shoulders that had sliced through his thin shirt.

“I... I don't think she took it well.” Martin said softly all of them detecting the pain and hurt in his voice. And it wasn't from being tossed into the bookcase.

“Lisi did this?” Bella gasped.

“I've been telling you guys she is stronger than everyone thinks.” Martin said as he bent over to brush his pants off. “She just proved it.”

The main door to the villa opened and they turned as Gorgo came rushing in her eyes wide. She had elected to remain here the previous night in the hopes of being some sort of support for Lisisa or her son. It appeared she would not get the chance to do that for either of them.

“Martin! What... what happen?” Gorgo gasped. “I saw... I saw Jeth carrying Lisisa away faster than I have ever seen him move. You told me you were going to wait!”

Martin looked at his mother. “She came here early. She wanted to get back to SODRAG to help her brother train the Coven riders. I couldn't not tell her mother.” He said.

“Oh my... I fear... I fear she did not take it well?” Gorgo said.

“What do you think?” Martin said.

“She didn’t take what well?” Denali’s voice entered the room now. They all turned to see Aradace just outside on the patio grounds. “Where is Lisi?”

“Denali Leonidas... you know the courtyard patio is not for dragons to land on!” Aricia barked.

“Spank me later mother!” Denali spoke moving further into the room. “What didn’t Lisi take well? And where is she?”

Gorgo stepped up to him quickly. “Denali... we... we discovered last night that Lisisa is...”

“That Lisisa is what?” Denali barked.

“Lisisa is not your sister.” Gorgo explained.

Denali’s face broke into a grin and he laughed. “That’s funny grandmother.” He spoke his eyes moving around to look at his father and mothers. When he saw they were not smiling, his grin slowly disappeared.

“What... what is going on?”

“It is why I asked Helen to send her back.” Martin said moving up to stand in front of his son. “You should have remained to help your brother.”

“Why did you want her to come back father?” Deni asked him. “You had dinner with the Kavalians last night. What could you have possibly learned that would make her act like this?”

“Sit down Deni.” Martin spoke.

“I don’t want to sit down! I want to know what made my Lisisa toss you across the room and then tear out of here and not answer me when I called for her!” Denali barked out his dark eyes narrowing.

Gorgo saw Aricia and the others look at each other quickly at the words and tone in Denali’s voice, but it went completely over her son’s head.

Martin took a deep breath. “Your grandmother is right.” He said softly. “Lisisa is not your sister. She is your cousin. Your first cousin.”

Deni shook his head. “What kind of nubous nonsense is that?” He spat.

“Denali Leonidas you will watch your tone of voice!” Aricia snapped.

“I will not!” Denali barked back. “Someone tell me why my Lisisa left as she did? Tell me why I can feel her pain and anguish! Someone tell me that! And do so quickly before I get angry!”

Aricia’s eyes were wide as she stepped closer looking at her son. “Deni... you...”

“Tell him Martin!” Gorgo snapped. “Before this gets out of hand!”

“Lisisa is not my daughter!” Martin barked. “She’s the daughter of my brother! Ok! There! She Pleistarchus’s daughter by blood... and if I ever see him in front of me I will rip his nubous entrails out of his body through his fucking nose!” Martin spun around and lifted the two hundred pound table in the center of the room within the grasp of his TK power like it was a toy and sent it hurtling out of the already smashed doorway to shatter on the granite outdoor patio. “Pen gur flana forn tyrn jur fervon!” Martin snarled viciously. “I will kill you and watch you wither and die for all the pain you have brought our family.”

Denali stood there looking at his father with wide eyes and a stunned expression. His head turned quickly when Gorgo took his arm. “It is true Deni.” She spoke. “We only discovered this last night. Now you know... and now you need to find her and be with her.”

“She said she didn’t want anyone bothering her!” Martin snapped as he turned back around. “That she wanted to be alone. I tried to comfort her... she wouldn’t let me! That is when she threw me across the room. I don’t know where she will have gone by now. She’s blocking me and Jeth is helping her. She thinks I have been using her all these years!”

“She will not throw Denali across the room.” Gorgo spoke softly meeting Deni’s eyes. “Deni is who she needs right now.”

“I... I know where she will go.” He said softly, disbelief still evident in his eyes. “I will find her.”

“She needs you now Denali Leonidas. Be strong for her.” Gorgo spoke squeezing his arms.

Deni nodded his head. “I will.”

“You won’t find her Deni!” Anja spoke. “She’s blocking all of us.”

Denali looked at her. “She is not blocking me.” He spoke quietly.

Martin looked at him. “What? Why isn’t she blocking you?” He asked.

Aricia Leonidas stepped up to stand next to Martin her eyes wide as she stared at her son. “Denali... you...”

“Yes mother.” Deni spoke as he looked up at her. “We are.”

Martin heard Dysea and For’mya gasp and he looked at them as Aricia reached out to grab his arm. “What’s wrong?”

“I will bring her back.” Denali spoke. He didn’t hesitate and turned. His strides were confident and strong as he shoved the remains of the shattered table out of his way with his own TK power and sprinted to where Aradace rested. She waited for him to settle and immediately flexed her legs and propelled them into the brightening sky.

Martin looked at Gorgo, at Aricia, and Dysea and For’mya. All of them with the exception of his mother had stunned expressions on their faces. “Would someone mind telling me why Lisisa would block me and her mothers but not block her brother?” Martin snapped. “Someone want to explain that to me?”

Gorgo stepped up to her son looking into Aricia’s eyes as she did so.

“Gorgo?” Aricia asked softly.

“They came to me the day of the State Dinner and told me.” Gorgo spoke.

“How long?” Isabella asked as the rest of them moved closer.

“Three years now.” Gorgo answered with a smile. “Three very happy and wonderful years for them.”

“Hey!” Martin barked. “I’m standing here too! Told you what?”

Gorgo looked at her son. “Lisisa will block you. She will block her mothers. She will even block Androcles. She will not block the man she loves however. The man who loves her back just as intensely as she loves him.”

Martin’s eyes grew wider as he realized what his mother was saying. “Are... are you saying...?”

Gorgo nodded. “Yes. Denali and Lisisa have been together for three years now. Their love is as strong for each other as yours is for any of your mates. And right now... the only thing that she needs is to feel Denali’s arms around her giving her strength. Not those of the man she has called father, or the arms of those she has called mother... but the arms of the man who will be her mate, who already is her mate for all intents and purposes to be honest. You will see Martin. He will bring her back. And then you must decide what you will do.” Gorgo took his hands. “And remember that your father was my half uncle Martin Leonidas... and our love burned just as brightly regardless of that fact.”

Martin’s eyes were wide as he moved to the couch and slumped into it heavily. “Wow! This has got to be the worst day of my fucking life. Could it get any worse already?”

Colonel Fache walked into the main room then, looked around at all the destruction, shook his head and turned to Anja.

“Anja... your sister and Eurin are standing by in a secure transmission in your office.” He spoke.

“Not now Fache!” Anja barked.

“Milady... you probably want to take this.” He spoke.

Martin looked at her and waved his hand. “Go on Red... I’m just going to sit here and try to absorb everything. I don’t know how long that will take.” He leaned forward and dropped his head into his hands. “If that is even possible.”

Lisisa stood in front of the monument to her grandfather, her forest green eyes red with the tears she had shed in the last hour. Everything she had believed. Everything she had worked for. All of it was gone now. Smashed aside with the knowledge of what she had been told today. She had already run the gambit of emotions, betrayal, loss, hate, anger... it was too much. This was the only place that she had found peace through the years and she had come here often just to sit and at the very least be in the presence of his spirit. She knew well the story that he had appeared to her father so long ago... and Lisisa had hoped one day he would appear to her.

Her father.

The man who she had dreamed of. The man who had come and taken her from her life of horror and darkness. The man who had brought Jeth into her world. The man who had given her so much. And now even that was gone. The man who she had called father for twenty-five years now and even that wasn’t true. Her mother hated her... tried to kill her. Her true father was a betrayer of his own people and a murderer of thousands. What had she done to deserve this? What could she have possibly done that was so horrible as to never have peace? Never have hope? Never have love?

You do have love. The voice whispered in her head. You have me.

Lisisa closed her eyes as she felt his aura wrap itself tightly around her and she felt fresh tears come. She could smell him then, peppermint and lavender, hear the thumping of his strong heart. She turned slowly to watch him walk towards her, his hand running along the side of Jeth's scales as he passed him. God he was beautiful to her.

Lisisa shook her head slowly. "I... I am not... I am not who you think I am." She choked out the words as he stopped in front of her.

Denali looked down into her tear stained face and felt her pain fill him. "You are the woman I love." Deni spoke. "What more do I need to know?"

"Deni... Deni I'm not... I'm not your sister." Lisisa said.

"Yes... I know." Deni spoke. "As I was coming here it crossed my mind that I can cado forn now and profess to the world that you are mine."

Lisisa lifted her face and looked at him. Her eyes darkened somewhat. "You knew!" She gasped. "You knew and did not tell me!"

"Lisisa... you..."

Lisisa's hand struck with the speed of a viper, lashing out and smashing across his face with enough power to rock his head back. "You bastard! You fucking bastard! You knew! Just like he knew! You... you used me... you... you have used me all this time!"

Deni looked at her his eyes wide in shock. "Lisisa... what are you talking about?"

"What you just said!" Lisisa screamed. "Now you can cado forn me! Is that all that occupies your sick mind? You knew Denali! How could you do this to me? After what we have shared?"

"I found out twenty minutes after you Lisisa!" He exclaimed.

"You lie!" Lisisa screamed. "You knew! Why else would you say you love me? I was convenient for you is that it! You get to fuck me whenever you want and not have to actually work at finding a woman for yourself! Leave me alone! Leave me alone you bastard!"

"Lisisa you..."

"Get the fuck out of my life Denali!" Lisisa roared.

"I won't leave you." Denali proclaimed. "I love you and I won't leave you."

"Bastard!" Lisisa screamed slapping him savagely once more.

Denali did not move. He didn't twitch a muscle. He had no intention of leaving this very spot no matter what she did.

"You bastard!" She slammed her fists against his broad chest, hurting her hands more than him and that only fueled her anger.

Lisisa! Jeth exclaimed in Mindvoice.

Stay out of this Jeth! Lisisa barked back at him. She turned back on Deni and slapped him viciously once more, this time raking her nails down his jaw and neck hard enough to draw blood. Still he didn't move.

"Tell me you knew!" She snapped. "Who else knew Deni? Who else knows about this game you are playing? Three years I have given myself to you! Three years Denali! All because I thought you loved me!" Another slap this time, even stronger and it bloodied his lips, and still Denali did not move. "My life is a lie! My whole life is a lie! Nothing is true! Nothing is..."

"I love you Lisisa." Denali spoke firmly. "More now than when we first discovered each other!"

"Liar!" Lisisa screamed slapping him once more. "Liar!"

"It is not a lie." Denali continued. "Not one bit of what we have shared in these last three years is a lie! Not one second!"

"Liar!" Lisisa's voice cracked this time and her slap was not as powerful.

"I don't care if you are my sister, or some purple skinned alien from the Amarian Nebula Lisisa. I love you." Denali said.

Lisisa shook her head. "No!"

Denali moved closer to her, towering over her shuddering five foot three frame. “I don’t care if you are my sister or my cousin or my aunt four times removed Lisisa Leonidas.” He spoke. “You are who I love. Not anyone else.”

“I... I’m not... I’m not a Leonidas!” Lisisa spoke softly as the sobs came.

Denali reached up then and took her face in his large hands. “You are and always have been a Leonidas.” He spoke tilting her face up to look into her eyes which were closed. “Open your eyes Lisi.” He said waiting until she complied and her tear filled orbs were looking at him. “I want you to see my face when I tell you I love you with every bit of my existence. I want you to see my face when I tell you that not one minute of any day, whether it is this day, yesterday, or tomorrow, not one minute goes by where I do not think of you in some manner. The feel of your hair in my hands. Your scent filtering through my head. The way your eyes glitter in the light. The sound of your laughter in my ears. The feel of your breath on my skin.”

“Den... Denali...”

“Your life is not a lie!” Denali barked. “Your life began the day our father brought you home! The day he brought you here!”

“He... he is not my father.” Lisisa sobbed even more. “He... is not who... I dreamed he was.”

“He is your father!” Deni snapped. “Fate brought him to you Lisisa! Fate brought him there. He heard you calling to him and he answered. It was he who risked all that he was to come for you! And even... even when he discovered the truth he did not hesitate! He has never... he has never treated you any different than any of us! He may not have had a part of bringing you into this world, but son vada carians he has loved you just as he has loved any of us. What more can you ask of a father? None of that is a lie Lisisa! It is as real as it gets!” Deni lowered his head until his lips were touching her forehead. “Just as my love for you is without question, without hesitation and without limit.”

“Deni... I...”

“I will not let this destroy you!” He snapped. “After all you have been through! All you have endured! I will not allow this to destroy who you have become! You are the daughter of King Leonidas! You are the woman I love and who I want to take as my mate and wife! And you are stronger than this! Draw on that strength now Lisi... take from me whatever you need. I have never held back anything from you! All that I am belongs to you! That is what you have now. That is what we have to build for our future. Don’t let it slip away over this rensibfla! That would be the ultimate betrayal and travesty. Let this make you stronger as everything else in your past has made you stronger. Let this make us stronger. I do not want to go on without you Lisisa. I can’t go on without you.”

That is what broke through the cloud that filled her mind and emotions. That voice and those six words were what sliced through the obscurity like a beam of sunlight cutting through the early morning darkness and stretching across the sky. Lisisa wrapped her arms around his head and she sobbed in happiness when his arms closed around her without hesitation and lifted her up. Then she kissed him. It was a kiss of promise and renewal, and when he kissed her back with even more intensity his words slammed home within her confused mind and set her free. He was right. Just as he had been right three years ago when he told her their love was meant to be and they had begun this journey together. She may have been almost five hundred years older than this man, but it was he who she had been meant for.

Lisisa pulled back slowly, feeling his teeth gently bite her upper lip, pulling on it like he did when he was being playful. Like he knew she loved. She saw the marks she had inflicted upon him, and struggled for breath at what she had done. She drew her fingers across his neck and cheek, the blood staining the tips of her long fingers.

“Denali... my... my love.” She whispered. “Look... look at what I have done to you.” She wept. “Deni... I am...”

“I will heal.” Deni answered cutting off her words and looking at her with those dark eyes that could make her heart and stomach do small flips whenever she gazed into them. “My only concern right now is for you Lisi. Tell me what you want me to do. Anything... I will do anything for you.”

“Take me home Denali.” Lisisa said softly as she pressed her head against his cheek and felt his arms pull her even tighter. Lisisa snaked her arms around his broad shoulders letting his power and strength filter through her. “Take me home my love. I want to feel your skin against mine and be within your arms. That is what I want right now. That is all I want to feel right now.”

“Home it is.” Deni said turning but still holding her six inches off the ground, unwilling to let her go. “Our home Lisisa, for I have a surprise for you.”

Lisisa drew back her head slightly and looked at him. “No. No more surprises Denali. I can’t take anymore surprises.”

Deni grinned. “You will like this one Lisi. It is one that we both made last year.”

Lisisa’s eyes grew wider. “The villa?” She gasped. “You... you bought it?”

“Gallais and Demetrious finalized the transaction for me while we were in SODRAG.” He told her. “I was... I was going to surprise you with it. Now however... now I am going to take you to our new home Lisisa. I am going to cado forn in more ways than you can imagine and then everyone will know you are mine. No more hiding. No more sneaking. It is over.” He looked at her. “If you... if you want that as well.”

New tears burst from her eyes, but these were tears of love and life. She nodded her head slowly, wrapping her legs around his waist and burying her face into the side of his neck drawing deeply of his peppermint and lavender scent. “Yes.” She whispered. “Yes.”

Aradace stepped up to her older brother Jeth and nudged him in the side with her large head.

He will heal her now brother. Aradace spoke.

Jeth nodded his head without pause. I know. For a moment... for a moment I thought she was lost to me Aradace.

Not while Denali lives Jeth. Not while Denali lives.

SPARTA

“...apologize for what happen last night.” Jalersi spoke evenly. “I think it took everyone by surprise.”

Deia and For’mya looked across the table at Jalersi silently. Thankfully most of the details had been worked out already and only the actually drafting of the Trade Agreement was needed. Jalersi looked a bit haggard this morning, as if she had been up late and not gotten a whole lot of sleep. This had been the case for all of them really, as For’mya and the others had done nothing but cuddle around Martin’s warm body for most of the evening, drifting in and out of sleep as their mate’s emotions and theirs as well assailed them. For’mya made it a point to thank Tarifa and Aihola personally for taking the little ones, for she didn’t know how good they would have been last night. Jiss and Matuarr appeared very well rested, though that could have just been that any expressions they made were hidden by their coat of fur. Athani also looked well rested, but she remained silent as if her thoughts were far off somewhere. Karun sat behind his mother, and the lack of sleep showed on his face, though not to the extent as on his mother. Qurot and Pian simply sat there like big tree logs as far as For’mya could tell.

Deia finally nodded her head. “Yes... I would say that is quite the understatement.” She spoke. She slid the data pad across the table. “A first draft copy of the Trade rights. I think you will find everything is in order.”

Jalersi took the pad slowly and handed it to Jiss. “You... you didn’t know?” She asked.

For’mya met her eyes. “I and the other Queens have known for quite some time.” She stated. “Deia and Gorgo were not aware.”

Jalersi looked at her. “He... he told you?” She asked somewhat surprised.

“There is very little our mate does not tell us.” For’mya answered. “What Karun did was unnecessary and disrespectful. He should have waited for or requested a more private meeting with Martin Leonidas.”

“You expect us to believe he would have honored such a request?” Matuarr spoke now.

“Honor it or not... it would have been the proper course of action.” Deia said. “The embassy will be ratified as the King said. You will be able to begin moving into your new facility later today once your additional personnel arrive.”

“Secure communications?” Jiss asked.

Deia looked at him. “As with all diplomatic embassies... you will be allowed one secure transmitter within the embassy. The KFI will provide for funding and upkeep of the facility and it will be sovereign KFI territory. Your personnel will have free passage within Sparta and on Earth. Like the other political embassies you will be allowed one ship in orbit that will be able to dock at the station in an assigned slot. Once more... the KFI will be responsible for the upkeep of that slot. This ship must adhere to established military protocols while in orbit, which includes no active scans of any city or military facility on the surface. If this is violated even once, the ship will be impounded immediately and the crew detained. This will also be the case for the facility on Apo Prime since the King and Royal family split time between there and here on Earth. These are the same rules that apply to all embassies and their staff, so do not say we are being sterner with the KFI.”

“You do not grant much in the leeway Prime Minister.” Qurot spoke from his chair.

“It takes two people Commander Qurot. Two people in the transition from passive sensor scans to active sensor scans. One to give the order and one to align and adjust the sensor arrays. That is not an accident Commander. That is a purposeful decision to disregard an order or rule.” Deia spoke. “In which case we will act. If this is not acceptable to your delegation or to Prefect Keleru, then by all means, we have enjoyed your company, we will cancel the embassy ratification and the trade agreement and you can return to Kavalian space.”

“It is more than acceptable to us.” Jalersi spoke.

“And what of security?” Jiss asked.

“You will need to provide your own security.” Deia spoke. “We do not post checkpoints at the embassy locations. There is no need too.”

“What about crime?” Matuarr asked quickly. “Petty thieves and murderers?”

Deia looked at For’mya quickly and then back to Matuarr. “The crime rate in Sparta is point zero two five Legislature Matuarr. It doesn’t exist. The crimes you are referring do not happen here.”

“Number of embassy personnel?” Jalersi asked.

“I believe that since you are just establishing the embassy, forty is a reasonable number to start.” Deia answered. “Anything exceeding that will need approval. And just so you are aware of this, outside the grounds of your embassy compound, your personnel are subject to Union law and there is no immunity from prosecution. If your people break our laws, they will be punished by our courts.”

“We will cause no problems Prime Minister.” Jalersi spoke. “That is not why we are here. We are here only to further the relationship we have established.”

Deia nodded. “As do we.” She said. “I will leave you with this copy and should you feel the need to change anything, feel free to contact Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos directly. He and First Secretary Stenys will be your points of contact now. If there is nothing else I have another meeting to attend.”

“I still wish to see my sister!” Karun snapped coming to his feet. “You can not deny me that!”

Deia looked at him as she got to her feet. “I am not denying you anything young man.” She told him

For’mya looked at Karun as she too got to her feet. “It is not up to us.” She spoke evenly. “Martin Leonidas told Lisisa this morning. It will be she who decides what she wants to do when she has had time to process the information.”

“I’m afraid I must insist.” Jiss said as he stood up.

Deia looked at him. “Insist what?” She asked.

“That this Lisisa be brought before us.” Jiss continued. “She is the daughter of Marshall Pusintin. She has a right... and an obligation to know who her real brothers and sister are. Karun will be her initial contact.”

“That’s very nice.” Deia spoke. “As Queen For’mya has told you... that will be Lisisa’s decision.”

“You don’t understand.” Jiss said with a smug smile. “As Marshall Pusintin’s daughter... not King Leonidas’s daughter... she carries Kavalian citizenship. She is therefore subject to our law. Kavalian law. As a Kavalian female she can not refuse her brother’s request.”

Deia looked at For’mya quickly once more and then back to Jiss. “What nonsense is that?” She demanded.

Jiss held out the data pad. “It is not nonsense Prime Minister.” He replied. “It is Kavalian law. And as part of the Lycavorian Union’s own Galactic Laws Council states, you are not allowed to interfere or intervene in the internal laws of other governments.”

Deia snatched the pad from his hand and dropped her eyes to it reading swiftly. For’mya looked at Jiss stepping closer to Deia. “Tell me Legislature Jiss... did you spend all night putting this together?”

“I am thorough Queen For’mya.” He stated in reply. Quite sarcastically in For’mya’s opinion. “And it only took me a few hours.”

Deia looked up then and held out the pad to Ardis, who stepped forward from the wall and took it quickly. "I will review this at a later time." She spoke. "But Kavalian law does not extend to Union territory. Nor will it be allowed too. Lisisa Leonidas will decide what she wants to do Legislature Jiss. Not you."

"Our demand remains the same." Jiss spoke urgently. "She must agree to meet with her brother. She can not refuse. It is our law. I will file a formal Petition of Acceptance to submit to your own judges if I need too, following exactly the process Union Law dictates." For'mya chuckled as their eyes went to her. "You find something humorous Queen For'mya?" He stated.

"I find you quite humorous." For'mya spoke. "The rest I will leave for you to find out yourself. Where Lisisa is concerned I would tread very carefully. You will find she is unlike any woman you have ever dealt with." For'mya twisted around to Jalersi, quickly meeting her blue eyes before turning and brushing past Deia out of the room.

Deia chuckled and turned her head to Jiss. "And she is the most patient and tolerant of Martin's Queens." She said with a smile. "File whatever petitions you wish Legislature Jiss." Deia continued. "Until then... enjoy your time here in Sparta."

Deia spun around and headed for the door with confident strides. Ardis paused for only a moment, her stunning eyes falling on where Karun stood. She gazed at him for a long moment before turning and following her Prime Minister.

Jalersi whirled angrily when the door slid shut on Ardis. "You are pushing them too much Jiss!" She snapped.

Jiss shook his head. "They understand force." He spoke. "Your father left this for me to take care of. He left establishing the embassy to you and Athani. We will succeed here because we will not let up on pressuring them until they surrender her and all of her belongings. Including the dragon."

"Have you stopped to consider that they dragons they may be bonded to are not some type of property?" Athani spoke. "That they are just as intelligent as you and I? Perhaps they will not want to become property of the Kavalian people."

Jiss, Matuarr and Qurot laughed openly at that suggestion. "It is a beast! Nothing more! And her beast will be ours." Jiss spoke. "Just as everything that belongs to her will be ours. I am working on discovering what property she may own here on Earth and Apo Prime. Think of the treasures we could obtain due to her duties within the Union military. Once approved through their own courts, we will send our people directly to whatever she may call hers and secure it as property of the Kavalian Empire."

"And you truly think the King will allow this?" Athani asked.

"He will not go against his own laws!" Matuarr barked. "Jiss is right. He has no choice! He is trapped by the very laws he proclaims to uphold so dearly."

"We should proceed carefully at first." Jalersi spoke.

Athani's eyes darted to her sister. "Jalersi... you aren't actually going along with this are you?"

"It is what our father wants." Jalersi stated.

Qurot stepped up to her, taking her arm in his large hand. "Why do you question your father's wishes woman?" He growled in a low voice.

Athani yanked her arm from his grasp. "Don't touch me Qurot." She snapped.

"You have been acting odd ever since we were on their ship coming here Athani, why is that?" Qurot asked.

"I've acted no differently than I always act Qurot!" She snapped. "But since I am not allowed to speak with father... all I see is Jiss and Matuarr and my sister with a different agenda than what my father sent us here with."

"Your father is the one who gave us this agenda." Jiss spoke. "It is his direction we follow. Jalersi knows this after speaking with him last night. It is best you keep that in mind Athani'Puat. You are not above our laws simply because you are the Prefect's daughter."

Athani glared at him. "Are you threatening me Legislature Jiss?" She hissed.

"I am merely stating to you what your place is in the grander scheme of things." Jiss answered. He looked at Jalersi. "Perhaps it might be better if Athani remained in her quarters Jalersi. At least until we have moved to the embassy we will be occupying. Then she can move freely within the compound."

"I concur." Matuarr spoke.

Athani huffed and gathered the two data pads from the table. “That suits me just fine.” She snapped. “I truly can not wait to return home and be rid of all of you.”

Qurot chuckled. “All but me Athani.” He said. “All but me.”

Athani very nearly spat in his face, but she felt Resumar’s warm aura surround her then, soothing her from wherever he was within Sparta. It truly amazed her how he affected her in such a way. It was as if he could sense her emotions and the turmoil within her. Athani kept the look of delight at feeling Resumar from her face and she made a show of indignation at being dismissed in such a way before marching for the door.

He had told her to be prepared tonight. Prepared for him to possess her in every way she could imagine. He was professing to do more than what he had done already and just the thought of feeling his hands stroking her body and making her feel more than what he already had, that made Athani hum with anticipation.

G9 HIGH COVEN RUNNER

“...nothing.” T’lolt said as his dark eyes turned to look at Normya as he came from the cockpit. “We have been monitoring all of the Netnews channels we are able to pick up and nothing has been announced. We also monitor many of your unsecured military channels, and there has been no indication that you are missing. No increased chatter... no new code phrases.”

“That’s... that’s not possible.” Normya spoke holding the mug of very rich Akruvian Black Tea in her hands. The flavor was almost as smooth as her mother’s coffee and equally as strong. It filled her with warmth and almost seemed to energize her from the first sip after Tir’ut had given it to her. “The Gate exploded and we were lost over two days ago. All of our Jump Gates are on an early warning system and monitored constantly. There’s no way it would not go unnoticed.”

“Il kal'daka darthirii...” Tir’ut spoke as he knelt in front of her. “You spoke of a Chief Engineer that worked on your ship?”

Normya nodded. “Yes?”

“Could he have the ability to do this?” Tir’ut asked.

“Do what?” Normya asked.

“Conceal that this happened.” Esther asked now.

“I don’t think so.” Normya replied. “He has been working out of the main shipyards for years. He’s worked on all of our ships. I thought maybe I had snapped at him because of the fever and made him angry but...”

“Fever?” T’lolt asked. “Are you sick?”

Esther touched his arm. “She is not sick and it will pass in a few more days.” She said. “Ol zhah natha jalil kal'daka klez T'lolt. Natha doerin d'kyikh d's'enaren, whol nindyn xuil kal'daka vlos.” (It is a female wolf thing. A coming of age of sorts for those females with wolf blood.)

T’lolt nodded. “Saph vel'drav udossta jalilen ul'plyr ranndilin kyikh.” (Like when our females reach mating age?)

Esther smiled as Normya’s tanned face blushed slightly and she placed her hand on Normya’s leg affectionately. “Yes T’lolt. And it burns in her stronger because of who her father is. Now this embarrasses her... so we will talk of it no more.” She stated sternly.

Tir’ut shook his head. “To attempt to kill you because you may have barked at him does not make sense.” He spoke seeing her emerald eyes turn to look at him. “You are the daughter to the King. Your... your condition... it is common?”

“Tir’ut!” Esther demanded.

Normya nodded quickly. Esther’s eyes grew a little wider when Normya looked at Tir’ut and answered his question without pause. “All females with wolf blood, pureblood or not, all of us go through it when we reach... when we...”

Tir’ut nodded and placed his hand on her arm indicating she need say no more. “That is enough information Il kal'daka darthirii.” He spoke. “Enough for him to recognize and identify your condition as not something you can control.” Tir’ut said with greater supremacy over his own raging emotions and hormones, even though he desperately wanted to ask his mother what this condition his Il kal'daka darthirii had was, and why he felt as he did when he looked at Normya Leonidas. And why he could detect the smell of orange cloves with a touch of mint and wildflowers. “Therefore not something he could get angry over. And the Fused Explosive charge... where you said your pilot friend found it? That is not something installed easily or quickly.”

T’lolt nodded. “A minimum of four hours time to make sure it works properly and test all the connectors.” He said.

“He had... he had my ship for almost eighteen hours.” Normya said feeling the warmth of Tir’ut’s hand even through her shirt and it was sending electric ripples through her body that she had never felt before. Electric ripples that felt so very good. She looked down at his large hand, the bronze color of his skin and the less pronounced bone spurs along the outside ridge of his palm and wrist. Normya almost groaned aloud in disappointment when he removed his hand and she made no move to shift away from him when he sat on the small couch next to her and pulled aside the torn edges of her pants to inspect her wound.

“That is sufficient.” T’lolt spoke.

“That is more than sufficient to plant the charge yes... but would he have access to what would be needed to hide the Gate being destroyed?” Tir’ut spoke looking up from her leg wound and into her eyes.

Normya shook her head quickly unable to tear her own eyes from his dark orbs. They were not as sunken in as T’lolt’s or Fash’ka, and though they were smaller than most people she knew, the size and shape of his eyes fit his head and skin color perfectly. Next to her father’s eyes they were the most beautiful dark eyes she had ever looked into. So deep and expressive that she could lose herself in them easily. “Impossible.” She spoke finally. “GUC is completely separate from the shipyards. And the civilians that work there are all thoroughly vetted.”

“Then he had someone helping him.” Esther said. “Or someone was directing him in his actions. Someone from this GUC perhaps?”

“It means Gate Usage Control. Where all of our Gates are monitored.” Normya answered turning to look at Esther. “And why would someone want to kill me?” Normya asked. “You are talking about...”

“Gareld did not just appear by chance so close to your border Il kal'daka darthirii.” Tir’ut spoke once more as he replaced the used MED COM patch with another and then refastened the torn cloth back over the wound to cover her bare skin. Esther noticed that her son did this with exacting slowness, almost possessively in nature. “He was there because he knew you would be there and what was going to happen. He was there to insure you were dead... or to capture you.”

T’lolt snorted. “Listen to him Normya Leonidas.” He said. “He is far too much like his father in that regard. Military operations... Force Potential Odds... intelligence aspects and ratios. He read all these books and more when he was growing. It gives me a karliik jiv'undus. Just point me at the enemy and tell me who to fight.” (Headache)

Normya found herself smiling in spite of herself and her training.

“Normya... is it possible to loop the feed from the monitoring station of this particular Gate?” Esther asked. “Make it seem as if it is still there even when it isn’t?”

“I suppose.” She answered quickly. “If you had access to the GUC monitoring stations and sensors. Why would you want to?”

“To give whoever wanted you dead or captured the time to insure that this task was completed and then make his or her escape perhaps.” Esther said. “That is why it is not being announced on your Union Netnews, and why your father remains on Earth. No one knows yet.”

“Mother... that would imply a much more far reaching aspect.” Tir’ut said evenly. “And a much more sinister reason behind the action.”

Esther nodded. “If Gareld is involved you can almost guarantee it is something sinister.” She said. “He said it was a profit he was going to make, which means he was only the one who was contracted to carry out the mission. Or part of it anyway. He did not come up with it.”

“What do you mean?” Normya said.

“Gareld wanted you alive Normya Leonidas.” Esther said. “If he was contracted to kill you, he would have simply destroyed your ship the moment it crossed the border, before you were able to make repairs. He is not smart enough to have arranged this for himself.”

“You... you said you knew who he was.” Normya spoke softly.

Esther nodded. "Yes. He was the Pureblood who whipped me with neutron radiation laced poisoned barbs and then laughed as I was gang raped by him and his friends. That was my punishment for falling in love with Cha'talla. If Cha'talla had not discovered the radiation in my wounds I would have died."

"Esther you..." T'lolt said in almost a whisper.

Esther shook her head. "No. He does not frighten me any longer T'lolt. Your brother's love for me purged every foul thing he ever did to me from my memory many years ago. Gareld is a coward and a fool. And I wish to be there the day Cha'talla finally catches up to him and fulfills his Iglata d'Vlos, for then he will know the meaning of fear."

T'lolt nodded slowly. "Yes he will." He looked at Normya and saw the look on her face. Confusion and anxiety and some fear. "When we followed my brother from the abyss the High Coven was leading our people into Normya Leonidas... many things changed for us. One of the first was how we view those we take as Du'ased 'Ranndi. It is an ancient Akruxian term that we now use in the vampire language. The Coven purged our native tongue from our heads many thousands of years ago so we adopted the vampire tongue as our own. It is very much like how your people, elves and Lycavorians view your chosen mates. They are more sacred to us now that we have been free of the Coven's influence for so long. And any who would do them harm will suffer an Iglata d'Vlos. A Promise of Blood if harm is brought to them. Cha'talla... my brother has sworn this very thing against Gareld for what he did to Esther. It will only end with Gareld's death... or Cha'talla's."

Normya looked at him for a long moment. "This... this is all so strange." She said finally. "I have been trained to... to fear Immortals. Yet... you... you have risked so much to save me. You are... you are not like we have made you out to be."

T'lolt smiled exposing his vampiric fangs. "I understand your trepidation daughter of Leonidas." He said. "Perhaps when you reach our home you will come to see we are very much different than the other scum Immortals that roam the universe as pirates and mercenaries. There are other elven females who honor our tribe with their wisdom and guile. They are the Du'ased 'Ranndi of eight Immortals. Young bucks as I used to be, and they would savage a path across the stars if anyone brought harm to their elven wives." T'lolt said with another grin. "You will see for yourself."

"I still don't understand why someone would come after me though." Normya said. "I'm just a pilot."

"You are daughter to the King of the Lycavorian Union." Esther said. "It is no secret how your father views his family. Or the lengths to which he will go to insure their safety. It is also no secret that your father has many enemies."

"Enemies that are too cowardly to come forward like nesstren!" Tir'ut hissed viciously. (Men)

"Yes... and that makes them more dangerous." Esther said looking at her son. "It has been forty-eight hours since the Gate's destruction. How much longer could they hide that you are missing and the Gate destroyed?"

Normya looked up, her emerald eyes bright. "If what you believe is happening is in fact taking place, perhaps another day, maybe two at most." Normya announced. "Every five days a pulse is sent through all of the Gates. To take Polarion Particle Readings and make sure they are within balance. If they have been hiding that the Gate is gone somehow, they won't be able to continue that once that pulse is sent. It's started at the GUC command center and bounced back from every Gate within the Union."

"And once it is determined that the Gate is gone and you are missing, your father will surge out of Union territory as a typhoon surges when it is hitting the edges of a continent." Esther said softly.

"But I'm not missing." Normya said. "I am with you."

Esther chuckled. "Yes well that might translate to the same thing for your father Normya. He is not aware of what we have built on Kranek. And without his presence to actually see we have changed, there is little that will stop him from acting."

"I won't tell my father where you are living." Normya said. "I will need to tell him what happened. I won't be able to lie to him Esther. Perhaps not all of it... because there is much more going on than when I left Earth and he is very anxious."

"How do you know this Il kal'daka darthirii?" Tir'ut asked.

"Because I can feel the spikes in his emotions even at this distance." Normya answered.

"You can touch your father from here child?" Esther gasped.

Normya shook her head quickly. “No. The distance is too great even for him. We can feel faint tremors of each other though. It’s almost like a pond... my family is a pond. Even over massive distances, though we can’t communicate directly within Mindvoice, we are still able to sense the other’s presence within the pond that we occupy by the ripples across the surface of the water. My father and mothers easily, my brother Andro easily, my other siblings less so, but not by much.”

“Cha’talla and I have this ability because we have shared each other’s blood. But not on so grand a scale.” Esther spoke.

Normya chuckled. “Trust me... there are times when it is down right annoying.” She stated. She looked up. “If you won’t let my father come to get me...”

“Normya... it is not a matter of what we want child.” Esther said. “We have come to cherish what we have built, and though our ultimate goal is to one day show your father we have changed... we still fear what he will do.”

“Will you allow my mother to come to Kranek then?” Normya asked.

“For what purpose?” Esther said.

“My mothers have a great deal of influence over my father.” Normya spoke with a small smile.

T’lolt chuckled. “That sounds familiar.” He said knowingly. “Not just for your father either.”

Esther slapped T’lolt’s chest with a stern look. “Quiet T’lolt!” She hissed but with a smile.

“They can control him for the most part.” Normya said smiling at T’lolt’s comment. “And my mother is not directly involved with either the High Coven or the Kavalians. She would not be missed if she left Earth. At least I don’t believe so. If what you tell me is true about what you have done... what you have accomplished on Kranek... and I believe it is. If this is true... then my mother is the one you want to see it first. She can come on one of our DTs so as not to draw attention.”

“And then you would reveal what really happened when she arrived on Kranek?” Esther asked.

Normya nodded. “Yes. Esther it is the only way to keep my father out of The Wilds in force.”

“Which of your mothers do you speak of Normya? You told me that you draw no distinction between them.” Esther said.

Normya nodded. “My birth mother.” She answered.

“Queen Dysea.” T’lolt spoke softly.

“Yes.” Normya said.

Esther looked at T’lolt now. “T’lolt? What do you think?” She asked.

“Cha’talla won’t be happy... but I believe he would agree without question.” He replied. “Ultimately it protects everyone. And if this is as big as you and Tir’ut suspect, then we have just dipped our hand in something far larger than you ever intended.” He looked at Esther. “You and I may be right after all Esther. It may be time to reveal to the Union we are here. We may need their help.”

“How do we contact him without using the repeater stations along the border?” Esther spoke. “Our transmission would be intercepted by everyone within two light years of every station. We’d have half the system looking for us.”

“Do you have secure capability on this Runner?” Normya asked.

T’lolt nodded. “Very secure.” He answered with a grin. “These are not standard G9 LRRs you know.”

Normya smiled. “Yes... I gathered that from the increased engine core design I saw as we came aboard. As well as the Phased couplers you have routed to the LSD coils.”

T’lolt’s face beamed and he laughed loudly. “Oh yes... I do like her Esther!” He growled looking at Esther. “She reminds me of you! Yes indeed... you will keep your Quortek S’argt on his toes, of this I have no doubt!”

“T’lolt, stop it!” Esther spoke with a smile. She looked at Normya. “Come child... I will show you where you can contact your father. You know of course all secure channels will be monitored.”

Normya shook her head. “Not the one I will use.” She replied. “It’s reserved for members of my family and a few others and only we have the codes.”

Esther nodded. “That is better... we don’t want some head strong young officer wishing to make a name for himself by rescuing you coming to visit us. The resulting confrontation would not be pretty for him I’m afraid.” She held out her hand and helped Normya to her feet. “This way.”

SPARTA ROYAL ESTATE

“...must have been some party.” Tesand whispered to Aikiro as they were led around the outside of the villa and past the shattered glass doors. Two techs from the Durcunusaan base were in the process of repairing and replacing the doors.

Aikiro smiled as Fache led them around to another single door and into the villa. “It would appear that way.” She spoke. “They met with the Kavalians dogs last night for dinner. It must not have gone well.”

“They invite them here and not us?” Tesand said. “Do you not find that odd?”

Aikiro shook her head. “No. Remember they are trying to maintain that we are only here for the signing of the Cease Fire. They followed diplomatic protocol in having them here for dinner. It would have been strange if they did not.”

Fache stopped by the door and turned to look at her as he passed his hand over the sensor. “King Leonidas is inside with the others Empress.” He said in a neutral tone of voice.

Aikiro nodded somewhat taken aback by the neutral tone of Fache’s voice. No matter where she went within Sparta, she detected no hostility from the men and women who she chose to stop and speak with. Indifference and interest... but no hostility. She and Tesand moved through the door and into what appeared to be a smaller version of the main room they had passed through. Two couches and several chairs were situated around the table, while bookcases lined one entire wall and were filled within ancient written texts that appeared to be hundreds if not thousands of years old. There were no windows in the room, but it was brightly lit and the dark colored pine walls gave off a polished feel and ambiance. There was a large desk at one end of the room and this is where they saw Martin Leonidas sitting, the elven Queen Dysea perched on the edge of his desk while they spoke to his mother in the communications holo disc.

“...found her as I knew he would. As only her mate could.” Gorgo was speaking. “He has taken her back to the new villa he purchased for them in Gytheio.”

“He bought a new villa?” Martin asked surprised.

Gorgo nodded. “Gallais and her mate completed the transaction for him while they were gone.” She answered. “He meant it to be his gift to her when they...”

“Mother...” Martin began.

“She needs him now my son. More than anything. Denali has given her what she never thought she would have Martin, outside of you and her mother’s love. He has been a constant pillar of devotion to her for three years now. Love such as you could not give to her. And she has blossomed even more in these last three years.” Gorgo spoke. “You must...”

Martin held up his hand. “I have no intention of doing what you are thinking.” He spoke. “I wouldn’t have even before all of this came out. Not with what I have felt between them now.” He said softly.

“I am going to meet with Gallais and arrange for her things to be moved. For’mya and I have already agreed to meet them there later this afternoon to check on them.” Gorgo spoke. “Aricia and Isabella will join us later. They need time alone right now... and we will give them that. Where is Anja?”

“She is dealing with that idiot Elder Council on Hadaria.” Dysea spoke now. “They have said they will attempt to take Siara, Retta and Calyb from Anja and Sivana to be schooled in the proper Hadarian manner.”

Gorgo rolled her eyes in the transmission. “Well... I’m quite sure Anja will tell that where they can put that idea.”

Martin nodded with a grin. “No doubt.” He said. “Melda Min, Anja and I will join you early this evening.” He said. “Tell them... tell them I love them mother.”

“You can tell them yourself when you arrive.” Gorgo said with a smile.

Martin nodded. “We have to go mother. We’ll see you this evening.”

Gorgo nodded. “Until later.” She spoke before ending the transmission.

Martin looked at Dysea as he got to his feet, taking her hand in his and squeezing it. “To have hidden it from us for so long Nauta Melme... that can only mean a level of devotion to each other rarely seen.” Dysea said.

Martin nodded. "I know." His eyes shifted to where Aikiro and Tesand stood by the door and he moved away from his desk. "Good morning." He said to them.

Aikiro's eyes narrowed at the subdued tone of his voice and she looked briefly at Tesand then back to Martin. "Your Colonel said you had some information for me." She spoke.

Martin motioned to the couch. "Sit down." He said.

Aikiro smiled as she moved to the couch. "Are you going to make this a habit Martin Leonidas? Inviting us over to your home after what appears to be a particularly interesting party you had with the Kavalians last night." She spoke as she settled onto the couch. Tesand moved behind where she sat and simply stood there. "Are you going to become best of friends with the Kavalian dogs now? Perhaps side with them against us?"

"Why would you say that?" Dysea asked as she sat in one of the chairs.

"I did not get an invitation to your home for dinner." Aikiro spoke in reply. "I'm rather hurt by that actually." She said with a small smile.

"Having them here was a political necessity and you know it." Dysea spoke. "If we are to continue training your dragons... we must make it appear nothing outside of the Cease Fire Accords is happening."

Aikiro gave her a smug look. "Do not explain to me what you are doing child!" She snapped softly. "I have been doing it far longer than you have been alive."

"Melda Min..." Martin's voice stopped her retort. "It's not worth it."

"Why did you bring me here?" Aikiro asked. "We were not supposed to go to wherever it is you sent my people until the end of the week. That isn't for two more days."

"You can tell your daughter she can stop hating me for something I never did." Martin spoke.

Aikiro smiled. "Whatever do you mean Martin?"

"Yuri thinks I raped her." Martin spoke plainly causing Aikiro to look at him. "You don't think I know that's why she hates me as she does."

"Are you admitting to that vile act?" Aikiro asked. "Or asking me for forgiveness?"

"Neither." Martin stated. "Because it didn't happen."

"I am supposed to believe you over my own daughter?" Aikiro asked with a shake of her head. "I don't think so."

Martin tossed the data pad into her lap before she could act. "Believe the medical information then. I've known since the day we got Lisisa off Lycavore. I tried to tell Yuri discretely and I even gave her the date, but as she always does, she dismissed anything I told her that day we met with Vonis. She has hated me all these years for something I never did. Over five hundred years Aikiro. That's a lot of hate to hold inside."

As Aikiro read the data pad her eyes first grew wider and then they narrowed. She looked at him quickly. "This is a lie!" She said.

"Is it?" Martin asked.

"All this medical data was compiled by one of your mates! By the Hadarian witch Anja!" Aikiro snapped. "Why should I believe any of it?"

"This is exactly why you should believe it." Dysea said. "As much as we love Martin, do you not think we would try to hide this to the best of our abilities as his mates if it was true? Why would we come to you like this? Pleistarchus raped your daughter Aikiro. He raped her and Lisisa is the result. Why do you think we are missing a door?"

Aikiro looked at her. "The Kavalians?"

"Lisisa." Dysea answered shaking her head. "When Martin told her the truth this morning."

"She didn't know!" Aikiro gasped.

"There wasn't a need for her to know. We didn't think it would ever rear its ugly head." Martin answered. "Now that it has... no doubt the Netnews worms will be all over it once the story breaks into the public. The Kavalians are going to announce it sometime soon I would think, just so they can rub our noses in it."

"I have no cares for this Lisisa! And neither does Yuri!" Aikiro snapped. "You granted them an embassy! You deal with it!"

"I granted them an embassy so we could watch the fools they have here to watch you Aikiro, you ungrateful bitch!" Martin barked. "I was put into the position of dealing with them and you know that! I want to deal with them less than I want to deal with you Aikiro!" He pointed at the pad. "What is on that pad is a major malfunction that Yuri has with me... and it's not even fucking true! Her hatred for me is unfounded... and it is affecting the training of your other riders as well. That is the first thing that my son told me a day after they arrived."

"Yuri needs to come back here to Sparta for the time being!" Dysea stated. "Without Vollenth."

Aikiro looked at her. "For what purpose?" She snapped.

"Do the Kavalians know she is bonded to a dragon?" Martin barked out.

"More than likely yes." Aikiro answered. "Why..."

"Queen Dysea is right Aikiro." Tesand spoke dropping his hand to her shoulder. "It is known that Yuri was here with us in Sparta. The Kavalian spies we have within our ranks also know she is bonded to a dragon. She was never seen on the streets with Vollenth... while the others were seen with their dragons. Narice and the others they can hide within their own ranks of dragon riders, especially here on Earth, but not Yuri. She is too well known."

"Do the Kavalians know where you trained your dragons on Usu Ozeib 7?" Martin asked him.

Tesand nodded. "Undoubtedly."

"Then they will know your dragons are gone from there." Martin said. "They know Yuri is here with you... if she shows up here in Sparta with Vollenth, the cat will be out of the bag. If she doesn't appear with you at all, they'll know something is wrong right away and begin focusing their attention here on Earth. You don't want that... and I damn sure don't want that. If they see her here with you without her dragon they will have no reason to believe the others are here as well. At least that is my hope. She needs to come back and stay with you at least for a few weeks, or until we get the Cease Fire Accord thing done. She can return when that is signed. You will then have to either leave Earth or move to Eden City. It's much larger than Sparta and it won't be difficult to hide you among the many vampires that live there. I doubt the Kavalians will even want to go there considering that is where most of the vampire population on Earth is located. Give me a reason Aikiro! Give me a reason and I'll yank those dragons from you and kick you off Earth so fast it will make your fucking head spin! I'm trying to help you here... I don't trust you one nubous second but I'm still trying to help you and you are giving me sibfla!"

The door to the room opened and Colonel Fache stepped in quickly. "Milord! Milady!"

"In a moment Colonel." Dysea spoke calmly.

"This can not wait my Queen!" Fache retorted.

"What?!" Martin shouted turning to face him.

"Sire... it is Normya." He spoke. "She is on Spartan Nine Alpha."

Martin and Dysea immediately lost all interest in Aikiro. Martin bolted for his desk and his finger slammed down on the console panel as Dysea moved up to the desk her emerald eyes full of questions and fear. Some of that fear was alleviated when the image of Normya appeared in the holo disc projection and she appeared unharmed. She saw her daughter smile brilliantly.

"Amille." She spoke in elven with a soft wistful tone as she saw her mother.

"Normya!" Dysea gasped. Normya almost never referred to her in the elven language. Not since she was a child. "Normya... what is wrong?"

"Where is Medwan... mother?" Normya asked.

Martin stepped up next to Dysea who gripped his arm tightly, digging her nails into his forearm. "I'm right here Fenneennum."

"Something... something has happened and you must promise me something father." Normya spoke.

"Normya what..."

"Promise me Medwan!" She insisted. "Promise that you will listen to me!"

Martin's eyes narrowed slightly. "I promise." He said slowly.

"There was an accident." Normya spoke. "Toral and I struck the Jump Gate on exit. The Gate was destroyed and our TYPE II heavily damaged. We drifted across the border..."

"Normya!" Dysea almost shouted.

"Mother I am fine!" Normya spoke quickly. Her face changed and became sad. "Toral... Toral did not survive mother. We... we were boarded by pirates and mercenaries when we crossed the border and he was killed. It happened very fast and he felt nothing."

"Where are you Normya? I will come for you!" Martin did yell.

“No!” Normya barked. “You can not Medwan!”

“Normya... what is... are you being held hostage?” Dysea gasped.

“No!” Normya declared quickly. “Tir’ut and his mother rescued me! They saved me. I am with them right now!”

“Who is Tir’ut?” Martin demanded. “Where are you? I don’t recognize the ship you are on.”

They watched as Normya turned to her left and nodded and she moved slightly to the side to allow the stunning dark haired woman into the transmission. That she was a pureblood vampire was clearly evident to Martin and Dysea.

“King Leonidas... Queen Dysea... I am Esther Saira.” Esther spoke. “Your daughter is quite safe at the moment. She was wounded but I am a doctor and she is well on her way to recovering fully. She is a very strong woman.”

“Esther!” Aikiro gasped out from behind them causing Martin and Dysea to turn and look at Aikiro as she approached them staring at the transmission. “I... I thought for sure he would kill you within a day of leaving the Nuwaroa.”

“Aikiro...” Esther spoke her voice tinged with hate. “I can’t say it is a pleasure to see you. I had hoped the Kavalians would kill you. I guess my prayers were not answered.”

“Who is this?” Dysea demanded looking at Aikiro.

“She was a former servant of mine.” Aikiro replied. “Quite brilliant in fact. I had high hopes for her. Until she gave herself to an Immortal dog willingly. Tell me Esther...” Aikiro stepped closer. “Did he sell you to slavers or mercenaries and leave you to your fate?”

Esther’s smile was genuine. “Actually Empress... he made me his Du’ased ‘Ranndi.” She answered seeing Aikiro’s eyes go wide. “We rejoined with his tribe... all of them Aikiro. And we have built a wonderful settlement outside of the reach of the High Coven and your fool ways.”

“He made you his wife?” Aikiro gasped. “Oh Esther... you have fallen so far as to actually share a bed with an Immortal. That is truly a pity.”

“An Immortal!” Martin growled looking at Aikiro. “Who are you?” Martin demanded turning back to Esther. “Where are you? If you hurt my daughter... trace this transmission Fache!” Martin barked.

“Medwan... you can’t trace it.” Normya spoke quickly now. “I have used a rotating encryption algorithm.”

“Who is this Aikiro?” Martin demanded once more.

“She is just who she says she is. Her name is Esther Saira... and apparently she is now the wife of the former Immortal Captain to my late husband. Cha’talla.” Aikiro answered.

“Cha’talla!” Martin snapped. “He was killed by Veldruk! I know that for a fact!” He turned back to the transmission. “I swear by every star in the night sky, if you hurt my daughter in any way I will hunt you down to the pits of whatever hell you believe in and make you die in more pain than you could possibly imagine!”

“Father!” Normya exclaimed. “Esther and the others saved my life!”

They saw the large hand enter the transmission and rest on Esther’s shoulder. She looked up and nodded before moving over even more. Dysea gasped as if in pain when T’lolt’s face appeared and the image of the pure Immortal became clear. “*Nauta Melme...*no!” She cried.

Martin knew that face however and he stepped closer to the image. His mind was swept back twenty-five years to a lonely grass plain on a world that he had tried hard to forget over the years.

“T’lolt!” He said in disbelief.

All of them saw T’lolt smile, exposing his fangs and nod his head. “I am truly honored you remember.” He spoke. “I of course remember you Martin Leonidas.”

“Nauta Melme... you know this Immortal?” Dysea gasped gripping his arm.

“Whatever issue you have with me T’lolt, it does not concern my daughter!” Martin spoke instantly.

T’lolt shook his head. “You misunderstand the tone of my words Martin Leonidas.” He spoke calmly. “Do you remember my question to you that day on Lycavore?”

Martin nodded slowly. “I remember you asked me why?”

T’lolt nodded. “And do you remember your answer?”

“Honor.” Martin spoke just as quickly. “It was you wasn’t it? You wiped out the crew of that APC.”

T'lolt nodded and held up the Nehtes. "With the weapon you left for me. I have carried it since that day in the hopes that one day I would be able to return the honor you showed me that day. As I have told your daughter Normya... destiny and fate has finally answered my wish. We have changed Martin Leonidas. My brother Cha'talla has changed, as has our entire tribe. We have tried to live with the same honor and conviction you showed so easily that day for me. And I believe we have succeeded."

"Do not believe a word they say!" Aikiro snapped. "She consorts with Immortals! She is a traitor and a whore! Your daughter is in great danger Leonidas! Esther is nothing more than a traitorous wench who beds with..."

"Be silent you l'puul sanguine elg'caress!" The second extremely large figure moved into the transmission now between Esther and Normya and they saw Tir'ut's dark eyes ablaze with anger and hate, his lips curled back over his own vampiric fangs. That he was an Immortal was easy enough to see, but he was also very different. They also noticed, at least Dysea did anyway that his arm snaked around Normya's waist to keep from knocking her over as he squeezed into the transmission. And her daughter did not shrink away from his touch, but only looked at his face with bright eyes. "You will not besmirch my mother's honor dos vithin al'vur!" (Foul vampire bitch)(You fucking cow)

"Why you insolent..." Aikiro started.

"You do not know what bel'la is! I will protect ussta Il kal'daka darthirii with my dying breath! What do you know of...?" (Honor)(My She-wolf elf)

Esther placed her hand on Tir'ut's wide shoulder and shake her head gently and his loud diatribe ceased immediately.

"My nephew does not care for you Empress." T'lolt spoke with a smile once more. "He is Cha'talla and Esther's first born, and he more than his three younger brothers knows well what you are responsible for."

"Firstborn?" Aikiro gasped. "You actually birthed a child for that monster?"

Esther smiled in the transmission. "Four actually just as T'lolt said." She answered as proudly as any mother would. "All of them with the power and strength of an Immortal and the skills of a Pureblood vampire. They are quite handsome don't you think."

"Mother..." Tir'ut hissed almost as if he was embarrassed.

Esther smiled. "A new breed of Immortal if you will Aikiro. Cha'talla and I hope to have a girl soon. Now removed your pathetic carcass from this transmission for we are not talking to you bitch!" She finished with a snarl.

"Martin Leonidas you..."

"Shut the nubou up!" Dysea screamed at her.

T'lolt chuckled and Dysea's head turned back to the image and she looked at him. "I see now where your daughter gets her spirit from. She is a superior pilot Queen Dysea, and a fine warrior."

"What... what do you want?" Dysea asked softly.

"My nephew is correct in his words Martin Leonidas." T'lolt spoke calmly. "He and I have proclaimed a Iglata d'Vlos. A Promise of Blood. We will protect and shield your daughter from any that would do her harm. That is my debt of honor to you. And I will see it fulfilled."

"Where are you taking her?" Martin asked.

"We are returning to our settlement." Esther spoke now. "We are shrouded at the moment to keep unwanted eyes and sensors from discovering us. The mercenaries who attacked your daughter will not give up easily for they knew who she was. We also... we also do not wish to fall victim to your quite famous temper King Leonidas. Especially where it concerns those you love." She continued. "It is why Normya has made it so you can not trace this transmission. And it is just as well since you seem to have dubious company at the moment. The Empress would not hesitate to order a full scale assault against our settlement in an effort to complete what she failed to do so long ago."

"Normya..." Dysea said.

"It's true mother." She spoke. "I am not afraid. Tir'ut almost died protecting me from something that wanted to eat me when we crashed. They risked their lives to save me father. And they have treated Toral's remains with the utmost honor. Mother... do you remember where you took me on Iriral when I was five? The mountain on Elear?"

"Yes." Dysea answered quickly.

“Reverse the letters and change the position of the first two mother. That is where I will be. We will get there in another twenty-four hours. Come in a DT.” Normya spoke. “Please father... only mother. I have told them I would help to protect their settlement and having you show up with an entire Fleet Group would not do that. I am not in danger. Son vada saar aur terit ano.”

Martin stepped closer to the transmission when Normya used the code word phrase they had developed long ago to indicate they were not in danger and among friends.

“Wen forn inniel?” Martin asked.

Normya smiled brightly again. “Jainn Medwan.”

“Melda Min?” He asked turning to her.

“I will leave within the hour.” Dysea answered immediately.

“We know you always travel with your Durcunusaan and your dragon Queen Dysea.” Esther spoke. “They are never far from your sides. I will not tell you to come alone, as that would only make you think we have ulterior motives. Which we do not. Please insure that they are made aware we are not the enemy however. If this is to be our first meeting, I would rather it be friendly so that we can build from there.”

Dysea was impressed with the woman’s calm and intelligent demeanor and she nodded her head. “You have my word. May I bring... do you need supplies? Medicines?”

Esther chuckled. “Well... if you could spare one of your wonderful Teraphasic Medical Sensors...” She shook her head. “No... thank you, we are actually very self sufficient.”

Martin looked at T’lolt. “What do you want in return?” He asked.

T’lolt smiled. “A case of that Spartan Wine your people make so well. It is a rare find here in The Wilds. And far too expensive.”

“What else?”

T’lolt snapped up the Nehtes in a horizontal motion and gripped it tightly. “Your trust King Leonidas. And in time... perhaps your friendship.” He stated firmly.

Martin drew his Nehtes instantly and snapped it up into the same position. The intricately designed and dragon armor forged Nehtes glittering in the light. “Return my daughter to me unharmed T’lolt of the Immortals... and you and your brother will have earned that trust. A hundred fold.”

T’lolt nodded. “Talinth ol xunor.” (Consider it done)

Martin turned as the transmission faded and looked at Dysea. “Melda Min... you don’t have to go.”

Dysea shook her head quickly. “She is our daughter Nauta Melme. She gave us the code phrase, but to contact us on the secure channel tells me there is something else going on. I am not afraid.”

“Immortals can not be trusted.” Aikiro spoke once more. “You know how they enslave elves. Your daughter is probably already lost to them. Sending your Queen among them too is rash and stupid! You should just launch a full strike against their base and take her back by force.”

Dysea whirled on her quickly, emerald eyes flashing in anger. “Does it not bother you that you move through life with blinders over your eyes? That you see only enemies and those you can conquer?” She hissed.

Aikiro shook her head. “No... it has kept me alive all these years.” She stated.

Dysea huffed loudly and turned back to Martin. She leaned into him and he drew her close for a deep kiss. As they parted Dysea ran her long fingers down his bearded face. “I will return with her. Do not worry.” She said softly.

“Take Danny and Anuk with you.” Martin stated.

Dysea shook her head. “Nayeca is only days from giving birth. I will not take them away from her now. Iriral and I will go and I will bring a standard detachment of five. I gave them my word... and I will keep it.”

“Take two engineers Melda Min. Just in case.” Martin said quickly.

[Give my love to Lisisa and Denali Nauta Melme.] She spoke switching to Mindvoice.

Martin nodded. [I will.]

Dysea kissed him once more and then turned to leave the room quickly. Martin looked at Aikiro and Tesand for a long moment and then spoke. “We are going tomorrow Aikiro. Yuri comes back with us. No more questions or problems. Even you have to admit things are happening with far too much frequency ever since you arrived here.”

Aikiro nodded her head slowly at that for she agreed with him. “Yes. In that you are correct.”

“Have your Spartan detachment bring you to the airfield at oh nine hundred tomorrow morning.” Martin said. “And be prepared to tell Yuri she needs to leave Vollenh where he is until things settle with the Kavalians. I ain’t playing games anymore.”

Aikiro watched him march out of the room and she looked at Tesand slowly. “Yes. Well neither am I.” She said softly.

GYTHEIO

Lisisa stretched luxuriantly on the soft, cool sheets, her body oh so pleasantly sore.

Her wolf nose twitched and the scent of peppermint and lavender filled her head. And it was coming from deep within her blood and her body. Lisisa’s mind rejoiced at this like never before. Denali had kept his promise to her. He had brought her back here to the new home he had bought for them and made love to her with a passion and intensity he had never displayed. She hadn’t even had time to look around the villa both of them had seen last year and fallen in love with. Denali had carried her right into the large bedroom, the only piece of furniture a large bed with fresh sheets on it. He had scented her half a dozen times, releasing his powerful male pheromones within his juices as he filled her and each time Lisisa received it and welcomed it with ecstasy and glee at what he brought to her. Four of those times she had fed on his delicious blood, making their explosions so much more powerful. No amount of cloned blood would remove his scent from her now that she had willingly allowed the wolf portion of her body to absorb him so deeply. And more than anything that knowledge made her body sing out in delight. Her felt familiar fingers tracing up the outside of her thigh and she turned her head with a smile.

“Hey.” Denali’s voice whispered.

Lisisa saw him sitting on the bed next to her wearing only a pair of shorts, leaving his chest and shoulders wonderfully bare. She sat up quickly, dismissing the sheet as it dropped from around her large breasts, and she wrapped her arms around his waist and kissed him. Lisisa whimpered in delight when his arms crushed her to him and he deepened their kiss, his hands stroking her bare back and her raven colored hair which was wildly strewn about her skin. They broke apart after a moment, Lisisa snagging his bottom lip gently within her teeth and pulling on it.

“Denali.” She whispered bringing her hands up to stroke his cheeks. “I love you Denali Leonidas.” She said softly. “So very much.”

Deni smiled. “And I love you Lisisa Leonidas.” He stated. He reached up and touched her jaw. “How are you doing?”

Lisisa nodded immediately. “I will... I will be fine.” She said. “You were right. He was the one who came for me. He was the one who made me his daughter even though he knew the truth. He is the one who has loved me as my father. He is the only father I have... and the only one I want. I will not let this destroy who I have become, or what I have discovered with you. I won’t.”

Denali chuckled. “How does it feel to be the mate of a man over four hundred years you junior? Some would say you are robbing the cradle.”

Lisisa laughed then, and it felt so very good. “Well... if they knew what a wonderful gift you have they would probably want to rob the cradle too.” She said seductively, her hand sliding down between them and brushing against his flaccid cock.

“My gift is for you only.” He stated taking her hand from his groin. “However... now would not be a good time. Everyone is here.”

Lisisa’s eyes grew wide. “Here? Who?”

“Father. Our mothers. Aunt Deia, grandmother Gorgo.” He replied. “They love you and they are worried about you.” He said. “And if I have to deflect one more inquiry from our brothers and siblings I will go insane. They have been probing me for the last nine hours asking about you.”

Lisisa looked at him. “They know?” She gasped.

Denali nodded. “Andro has known for two years.” He said.

Lisisa’s eyes went wide. “Two years!” She stammered. “But he... he...”

“Yes... he is the one that denied my transfer to the EPIC MYTH last year.” Denali spoke. “So that we could stay together on the SCIMITAR. He has kept us together so that our love could grow and be strong. Strong enough to defeat something like this.”

“Denali... my love forgive me.” Lisisa spoke taking his face in her hands. “What I said to you...”

“Was not you.” Deni finished with a smile to her. “You did not say those things Lisi. And I have already forgotten them. Now... now you must get dressed. They are waiting.” He got to his feet and held out his hand for her. Lisisa reached up and let the sheet drop fully away from her body as she stood up on the bed. She looked at him with a smile as she was now taller than him. “What?” He asked looking up into her face.

“You brought me here Denali. Yet you forgot to bring me any clothes. You shredded my uniform. What exactly do you think I was going to wear?” Lisisa said.

Denali grinned and pulled her close to him, his arms sliding around her firm ass and his face tucked into her flat powerful abdomen. “What is wrong with what you have on?” He said inhaling her maple and wheat scent deeply. “I have no problems with it.”

“I have no problems with moving about our home naked for your eyes to drink in.” Lisisa spoke. “I will not however give everyone else a free show. And most certainly not our father!”

Denali tore the sheet from the bed with one pull and wrapped it tightly around her lithe figure. Lisisa took it from his hands quickly wrapping it around herself like a dress as she shook her head at his antics. “A member of Mjolnir’s Hand you may be Denali Leonidas... but you really need to learn to tie a knot.”

“Knots make it harder to take off.” Denali spoke as he lifted her up and set her on the floor, towering over her five foot three frame. “Of course that is part of the fun.”

Lisisa pushed him away playfully and let him take her hand. She took a deep breath and nodded. “I am ready.” She said.

It had been like this many times in the past twenty-five years, but now Lisisa felt it a thousand times more. His strong arms around her, his bearded face pressed to her forehead, and her arms wrapped around his waist. Martin stroked her head gently, his eyes closed as he inhaled of her scent, now detecting Denali’s scent deeply embedded in her blood. So deeply that it would announce to all that Lisisa was his mate now.

“I am sorry father.” She said. “About this morning.” She whispered against his chest.

Martin shook his head. “I should have told you from the outset.” He whispered.

Lisisa shook her head now and pulled away to look at him. “No.” She stated. “I am your daughter. There is nothing to tell me. I don’t care what blood tests or DNA say. I am your daughter and I will always be your daughter. I just... I just lost my sense of balance for a moment.”

“And Denali gives this to you.” Martin asked her softly as he pulled her head away from his chest to look at her.

Lisisa’s eyes were bright and alive as she nodded. “And so very much more.” She said. “Please... please do not be angry with us father. We did not...”

Martin put a finger to her lips and stopped her words. “Does he make you happy Lisi?”

Lisisa smiled radiantly and nodded her head. “Oh yes... very happy. Almost as happy as they day you came for me.”

Martin nodded. “Then that’s good enough for me. I know he loves you... with every waking moment he breathes.”

Lisisa turned and looked over to where Denali sat between their mother Aricia and Gorgo on the couch. “And I him.” She said softly.

“Then let’s put our heads together and figure out what we are going to do.” Martin said holding her hand as he drew her back towards where the others sat.

Aricia was the one to look up when they approached. Panos had said Aricia might be the one to resist the union, but as Gorgo watched, she quickly made room for Lisisa on the couch next to her. Lisisa smiled as she settled next to Denali and Aricia took her hands and leaned over to nuzzle Lisisa’s cheek and neck affectionately.

Martin settled to the arm of the chair where Isabella sat. “Ok... our next move.” He spoke.

Deia looked up. “They will undoubtedly demand she meet with Karun.” She spoke. “They have already stated as much.”

Martin shook his head. “No way.” He spoke. “They can kiss my big Spartan ass! I won’t allow it!”

“Lover... you ass is many things... big is not one of them.” Anja quipped from where she sat next to For’mya on the other couch. “Incredibly firm and tight and...”

“Anja!” Gorgo almost shouted.

“I must agree with Melyanna about your ass Martin Leonidas. But we do understand the characterization of your feelings on the matter.” For’mya stated with a smile.

Gorgo shook her head. “It is a defect in his genes.” She muttered. “It has to be. And he has passed it on to his sons and infected his mates. Vada carians preserve us.”

“Details!” Denali barked. “We don’t need the details!”

Lisisa elbowed Denali in the side. “I rather like your ass as well Denali my love.” She stated matter-of-factly.

“Whoa! Stop!” Martin exclaimed. “Details! We don’t need the details!”

This broke the ice and tension in the room and all of them laughed heartily. Deia shook her head as she got to her feet holding her coffee. “So what do we tell them?”

“We don’t tell them anything.” Lisisa spoke looking up. “I tell them. I tell them I have a father and five mothers who love me and who I love with all that I am. I tell them I don’t recognize this Pleistarchus as my father. I will meet with this Karun... but they should not expect anything after the first meeting. I would much rather cultivate the relationship with the sister I have just recently discovered than any brother or sister who is half Kavalian.” Lisisa looked at them. “That is what I tell them.”

Deia looked at her. “And what if that is not acceptable to them Mandra?” She asked.

Lisisa looked at Martin with bright forest green eyes and a beautiful smile. “Then I tell them to kiss father’s big Spartan ass!”

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

SODRAG

“Argggghh!” Dante Moran screamed out as he landed on his back, the air leaving his lungs in a rush and pain shooting through the lower portion of his hips as he impacted the hard surface of the indoor mat.

Zarah Leonidas continued in her wickedly fast motion, twisting his arm and rotating her body over the top of his, all the while holding his thumb and palm in a savagely painful and distorted grip. Though only twenty-one years old, twenty-two as soon as her Coming of Age passed as she was always so pleased to tell everyone, Zarah Leonidas was perhaps one of the most lethal hand-to-hand instructors in the Union military. She had taken to the martial arts when only five years old and quickly advanced at a rate her own instructors could not believe. By the time she was eleven she could defeat all of her Agoge Instructors with ease. She had an exquisitely smooth combination of vampire and wolf strength and endurance, and the ability to blur and wrap the shadows around her with consummate skill. Her five foot five body was a picture of slim muscle and very feminine curves with long legs for her height and an ass that could turn the eye of a wolf or vampire hundreds of years older than her. She had her mother Isabella’s chest with full, firm and prominent breasts, something she had only just started to dress to accent. Her body drew the most attention obviously, with most young wolves and vampires drooling over the prospect of bedding her, until they came to their senses and realized who she was. She was daughter to King Leonidas, and sister to Androcles Leonidas, two males who had shown a very protective nature towards the females in their family. Often times that nature caused pain for the fool males who thought to make a play for a Leonidas daughter and were not sincere in their actions.

Those who took the time to get past her obvious physical delights discovered a ravenous seeker of new knowledge and experiences. Zarah Leonidas was well on her way to becoming an incredibly skilled engineer like her sister Carina, and she loved to tinker with machines and computers. When males saw this level of intelligence and insightfulness in her, they quickly decided Zarah was out of their league. Combined with who her father was, it made it next to impossible for her to find any male who was interested in her.

She wore the standard Mark IV ArmorPly armor as they all did, and the gathered High Coven riders watched with some awe as she dropped onto Dante's chest with all of her weight, another rush of air leaving his lungs and emptying them completely. She popped up quickly and released his arm, watching as he rolled to his side holding his arm tightly to his side. Zarah brushed her dark brown hair from her face as she watched Dante, the rest of her shoulder length locks pulled into a pony tailed and tied with Drow silk all the way to the tip. She looked to where Yuri was sitting on her sore butt from being dropped by Zarah in even less time. Her face was locked in a scowl as she nursed her twisted arm and leg.

"Anyone else?" Zarah popped out as she turned her dark eyes to the other riders. Like her mother's eyes, they were lightly shaded with green, but her father's dark eyes were definitely the more dominant.

Narice and Carisia looked at each other quickly with equally wide eyes and then back to Zarah. "You... my sister and Dante were the most skilled among us in hand-to-hand fighting." Narice spoke softly.

Zarah turned back as Dante began to get to his feet. "Less attitude more concentration next time." She spoke to him as she tried to help him to his feet.

Dante yanked his arm away from her. "You surprised me!" He snapped.

"No... you thought because you are a big bad vampire male that you could stomp my little female wolf ass." Zarah stated with a grin.

"You are not wolf!" Dante barked. "You are a half breed!"

Zarah smiled brightly at him, his sarcastic comment bouncing off her. "Actually... my father's genes are more dominant so that makes me more wolf than vampire, but if the best you can come up with is half breed... I guess it will do. I'm a half breed that just beat your ass!" She spoke. "Never judge a book by its cover. You've never heard that expression?"

Dante looked at her. "No!"

"Well now you have." She stated.

"You should not have been able to defeat us so easily." Yuri spoke now as she stood up and moved closer. "We are bonded to dragons! Our abilities are increased, enhanced by these bonds!"

Zarah nodded. "Only if you know how to call on them and use them." She spoke calmly. "Which you can't."

"What do you know child!" Yuri snapped. "You are not bonded to a dragon!" Yuri heard soft chuckling and she turned her head to see the two older Durcunusaan Spartans standing to the rear of the gather pilots.

"Are you so sure Princess?" Zarah asked lifting her hand. All them were stunned when the light blue psychic shield appeared and engulfed her hand up to her wrist. She lifted her other hand and another light blue psychic shield engulfed that hand as well. "That would be a painful mistake to make don't you think?"

Narice stepped forward a little. "You are bonded... you are bonded to a dragon?" She asked. "Our... our intelligence did not reveal this!"

Zarah looked at her and smiled. She liked Narice. She was even tempered and no where near as arrogant as her older sister. She was open to new things and did not treat those around her as if they were inferior. She was a little perturbed at how she had treated Arrarn the night on Andro's island, her arrogance showing through then but that had disappeared the moment she smelled the interest Narice had in her brother, as well as the red head Toria. Zarah quickly chalked it up to jealousy and fear and not arrogance.

"I would imagine there is a lot your intelligence did not reveal to you." Zarah said with a smile. "But no... I'm not bonded to a dragon."

"Then how...?"

Zarah shrugged. "No one really knows for sure... but I have the ability to draw from the psychic presence of any dragon or Mindvoicer in the vicinity of where I am. The stronger that person or persons, the stronger the shield I can project. I've learned how to channel that Mindvoice power into my physical blows and in how I fight. I use it to enhance my ability to blur and also regulate the power of my strikes." She looked at the riders. "It is a skill all of you have... you just have not tapped into yet and that is what you have to learn how to do. That's what I will teach you."

"And what will you teach us child!" Yuri snapped once more. "You have never fought Kavalians! Their clone soldiers are savage and large. As large as your brothers for the most part. They are fast, utterly ruthless and exceptionally strong. You would not last a second or two in single combat with them! I have barely escaped single combat with them."

“And I beat you down pretty effectively.” Zarah said.

“You... you caught us by surprise with you skills.” Yuri barked. “It was not a fair test of our abilities!”

“We can go a second time if you don’t think it was fair test Princess.” Zarah said. “The result will be the same.”

“Your arrogance will be your undoing child.” Yuri growled.

“I’m not arrogant Princess Yuri.” Zarah spoke calmly. “I know what I can do and I’m confident in my abilities. I have abilities you as riders have, but do not know how to use.” She explained. “I have read every report and studied every bit of intelligence on the Kavalians and the capabilities of the biogenic clones. We are not stupid, contrary to what you continue to believe.” Zarah turned back to the other riders. “I can teach you to focus and channel your psychic abilities to enhance the power and speed of your physical blows. You just need to amp up your connection with your dragon. Let it flow through you more. It must become second nature for you, just as it is for the riders of Mjolnir’s Hand.”

“I grow tired of hearing of Mjolnir’s Hand.” Yuri snarled more forcibly now. “You and the others speak of them as some sort of gods. They are riders, just as we are. No different!”

Zarah looked at her evenly and shook her head. “Not gods... just men and women who have taken the bonds with their dragons to the next level. Something you will never achieve because you choose to look at Vollenth as a tool rather than an equal. Any one of Mjolnir’s Hand could erase you in the time it would take for them to blink because you don’t believe.”

“Believe what?” Yuri snapped.

“That you can be more.” Zarah answered immediately.

“Are there any here on the base now?” A male rider asked from the ranks. “Members of Mjolnir’s Hand I mean?”

Zarah shook her head as she turned to look at him. “Just Andro, Deni and Lisisa.” She answered. “The members of Mjolnir’s Hand wear essentially the same uniform as we do, but their shoulders are painted in crimson. My brothers and sister don’t wear their Mjolnir’s Hand uniforms. They won’t start wearing them again until their ranks are filled once more. They are still missing one Bonded Pair, and until they find that pair the search will continue.”

“Wait... isn’t Princess Eliani and Prince Resumar... they are bonded to dragons as well.” A female rider spoke now.

Zarah nodded in agreement. “Yes... but they are not true members of Mjolnir’s Hand. Including my father there are only four in my family that are active members of their unit. Our younger siblings, maybe one day since they have all discovered their bonds early, but we won’t know for several years at least.” Zarah smiled. “You never know... no one really knows when they get together as a unit. They usually operate in ones and twos so it’s hard to get them all together.”

“Will they come here?”

Zarah shrugged. “Aside from my Uncle Isra... you might see one or two during your time here. No one really knows when they come and go as I said. They only have two people they answer too really. My father and Andro.”

“Aren’t many of them older than him by several centuries? Even their dragons.” Narice asked now. “I understand he is Crown Prince of the Union... but doesn’t that cause... doesn’t it cause friction between them, having to take orders from someone so much younger?”

Zarah shook her head quickly. “Never. Andro was bonded with Elynth when he was still within my mother’s womb... I think you have been told that before. In some ways their bond is stronger than my father’s and Torma, in some ways it’s not. And after Alba Tau... no one will ever question my brother because of his age. Besides... the members of Mjolnir’s Hand do not look upon each other as subordinates or officers. They view themselves as brothers and sisters with each other as well as their dragons. That is what makes them so very powerful. And that is why there are only three hundred of them at any given time. As a rider you must be one with your dragon in a way that goes beyond most Bonded Pairs. You must think and act with one mind, one breath and one heart.” Zarah looked at Narice. “You and Carisia have almost reached that point with Deneth and Anthar. You know what I am talking about.”

Narice glanced quickly to where Yuri stood looking at them and then back to Zarah. “Perhaps not as much as you might think.” She said.

Zarah may have been young but she was far from stupid and without even turning she could sense Yuri looking at Narice and Carisia. She shrugged her shoulders. "Maybe I was wrong then." She said quickly. She clapped her hands together. "Ok... let's get to the first lesson shall we."

"Immortals!" Arrarn gasped.

Andro nodded as he handed Arrarn the data pad. "She's with them now. Mother is on the way in a DT to meet with them and get her back."

"Wait a minute!" Moneus declared. "Get her back? Why isn't Uncle Martin sending a full Fleet Group to get her? They are Immortals Andro! Why would they... why would they just give her up?"

"You remember the Immortal that our fathers saved on Lycavore?" Andro asked him as he moved to the table in the Command Center. "His name was T'lolt."

Moneus nodded. "Father told me a little about him. It was Uncle Martin who saved him really. They seem to think that it was him who took out the APC that was assaulting their flank."

"It was him. Father talked to him." Andro stated. "And now he and his nephew have sworn an Iglata d'Vlos to protect Normya."

"His nephew?" Arrarn asked looking up from the pad.

"The son of the Immortal Captain Cha'talla and his pureblood vampire wife... this Esther Suira." Andro spoke.

They both looked at him. "Cha'talla?" Moneus exclaimed. "Andro we were told he was dead!"

"Well... apparently the reports of his death were exaggerated somewhat." Andro said as he looked at him.

"Andro... a Jump Gate exploding... that should be all over the Netnews!" Arrarn said leaning forward in his chair. "Especially seeing that it was Normya that was flying the TYPE II that hit it."

"Yes I know." Andro replied. "It appears the mercenaries that attacked her ship while she and Toral were trying to repair it had help within our ranks. That is why it hasn't been reported yet. Aside from those of us in this room, father and our mothers, no one else knows. At least not yet. Father decided to wait until just before the pulse to give mother time to get as close as possible before they announce it. We don't know who or what or why right now, and we won't until mother gets to Normya and talks to her and finds out."

"Uncle Martin trusts this Immortal Andro?" Moneus asked softly. "Isn't that a huge nubous risk? Immortals... they enslave elves, not help them. And forgive me for saying so, and don't tell Carina, but Normya is one smoking hot elf female. Immortals... they turn them into sex slaves and..."

"Yes we know." Andro said softly. "They spoke with him, and in this we need to trust father and mother's judgment. They were there and talked with this T'lolt. The only reason he told me was because he knew I had Arrarn checking why Normya hadn't even reported her position in, and he doesn't want it revealed just yet. Whoever set her up doesn't know she survived yet. We need to get as close as we can to finding the person or persons that helped these mercenaries before it is announced she is alive and safe. This mercenary scum was after Normya specifically. They knew where she was going to be, so it does not leave this room, and most certainly do not tell Zarah. She would be worried sick and demand to go after her."

"Someone at the GUC had to be helping them." Arrarn spoke. "They must have looped the feed somehow."

Andro nodded. "That is what Uncle Andreus is moving to check even now." He said. He looked at Moneus. "How are Thast and the others doing?"

Moneus grinned wickedly. "They don't like it... that's for sure." He said. "They are returning today after their shift... but the Security Commander is keeping them busy."

"No recons since they left?" Andro asked.

Moneus shook his head. "None that we've detected." He replied. "That's not to say they haven't developed something to mask themselves while wrapped in the shadows though."

"They would have used it by now." Andro acknowledged. "Keep the security around Operations and the Command Center here tight. Let Nyla know as well Moneus."

Moneus got to his feet and nodded. Andro was his best friend and he knew by the tone of his voice that he was keeping him out of the loop specifically to protect him. "I'll go over and tell her right now. She and her team are drilling by the east quad."

Andro nodded as he watched his friend leave. As soon as the door closed and sealed he turned to Arrarn. "You still have your contacts at the GUC Command Base on Apo Prime?"

Arrarn nodded. "Raloua's brother just got promoted. Why?"

"Contact him Arrarn. See what he can find out. We sent Normya off by herself... and now Toral is dead and our sister is in the hands of Immortals who say they are friendly and will protect her. Whether that is true or not remains to be seen, but I want to know who set our sister up. And when we find out, you and I are going to have a talk with them."

Arrarn nodded his dark eyes matching the anger in his brother's azure blue ones. "I'll take care of it." He spoke. "What's going on Andro?"

Andro shook his head as he got back to his feet. "The Feravomir said something to me yesterday." He said softly. "The Coven and Kavalians here on Earth, the issues mother and Aunt Sivana are having on Hadaria. This lash up with Lisisa. And now this deal with Normya. If I didn't know any better brother... I'd say they were all tied together somehow and it is being directed by some master conductor."

"Because they all seem to be happening at the same time?" Arrarn asked.

"It's odd don't you think?" Andro spoke.

Arrarn got up as well. "It may seem that way because you are trying to find something that may or may not be there Andro." He spoke. "That is a gift you and Elynth have, but sometimes it is not always right."

Andro looked at him. "Perhaps." He said. "How are the pilots coming?"

"You mean from when you asked me two days ago?" Arrarn said with a smile. "Sadi and I start taking them up today."

"And the other thing? Are you still going to pursue that?" Andro asked.

"After the other night?" Arrarn exclaimed. "I don't know Andro... they both tickle my nose for sure, Narice more so because of who she is I think, but she is just so anse uptight. Part of me says go for it... part of me says it ain't worth it."

"When have you ever backed down from a challenge Arrarn?" Andro asked.

"What about father?" Arrarn said. "You know he will have a fit."

"Does your blood burn for her?" Andro asked him. "For them... because now that they have found each other I have a feeling they'll be a package deal just like Eliani and Nyla."

Arrarn shook his head. "As much as I would like it to happen... it won't." He answered. "I'm not that lucky... and I think they may be more interested in each other. I can smell Narice all over her. Similar to how Nyla's scent saturates Eliani like you said. And there is something about both of them that is different somehow."

"Don't give up hope just yet." Andro said with a grin. "Stranger things have happened to the members of our family."

"Why do you... why does it seem like you want it to come about Andro?" Arrarn asked.

"Because you have never been this attracted to a woman before Arrarn. Let alone two. You are half wolf and you know when you mark their scents brother, you are hooked. And you have never marked the scent of a female before now." Andro said with a smile. "Sadi tells me she can see it in your eyes... and she also says Toria is making no bones about her interest in you."

Arrarn waved his hand. "Ah... she's seeing things." He stated. "Besides... I don't have the stamina for both of them to be biting me at the same time." He said with a grin. "I wouldn't know who to bite back."

Andro laughed at that. "Just hang in there. And find out what you can about the personnel in the GUC."

Arrarn nodded. "Will do." He said moving for the door.

Andro turned and moved to the small window in the command center briefing room and looked out across the tarmac.

[You are worried Andro.] Elynth's voice filled his head.

[Should I be sister? Is Arrarn right? Am I reading too much into what is happening all over?]

[We can not control everything ourselves brother. Only what is within our realm of influence. That is something our fathers told us long ago..] Elynth answered. [And our fathers have many more years of knowledge and experience than us.]

[I know. I'm just wondering if maybe they are keeping the same feelings we are having buried just as deeply as we are.] Andro spoke.

[If he needs us he will call.] Elynth spoke. [Now we have our own important mission to achieve. We are agreed with the Feravomir and Elder Mother about their plan?]

[Oh yes.] Andro said. [It eliminates one issue and potentially two. And it will go a long way to bringing them closer together.]

[I agree as well.] Elynth answered. She paused for a long moment. [Andro... I was going... I was going to ask Anthar to hunt with us tonight.]

[And you need my permission for this why sister?] Andro asked with some humor in his voice.

[I am not asking for your permission my riad aulved brother!] She barked out with some indignation causing Andro to chuckle. [I... I do not know how to act.] She replied.

[You act as you always act sister. Do not change who you are. Anthar is no fool and he wishes it just as much as you. Do not rush things if you are uncomfortable. I do not believe he will mind.] He answered.

[You are right.] She said.

[Of course I'm right sister.] Andro said. [I am a male. I know these things.]

[He has been in my thoughts much these last few days.] Elynth spoke. [I do not know if father will approve of him.]

[Then we are in the same position sister.] Andro told her. [As you have told me when it concerns Carisia. Do we ignore what we feel for them and allow it to pass from our lives and always wonder. Or do we act on what we feel for them and perhaps find happiness and so much more? They have been in both our dreams sister. And we agreed it was time for both of us to begin making our own path into the future.]

[Yes we did.] Elynth said.

[Then follow what your heart tells you my Bonded Sister.] Andro said.

[What you felt between them Androcles my brother.] She said. [I was passing him today and I felt it as well. In both of them.]

Andro nodded slowly. [I'm going to cultivate that as much as possible. And they will discover each other soon enough I think. Possibly sooner than even we think. Something is pushing them together Elynth, and once they do come together even without the training the others have had, they will be among the most powerful among us. It is almost as if they are two pieces that are about to be put back together in perfect harmony.]

[We must be ready to tell your uncle Isra and your uncle Andreus if it happens.] Elynth spoke. [We must welcome them in our way. All of them must be present for that. As well as the Elders. It is the way our fathers have always done it.]

[And so shall we.] Andro spoke. [I've already spoken with Uncle Andreus and he has already sent word to the others to move within one or two jumps of Earth and be on stand by. I will talk to Uncle Isra tonight and fill him in.]

[When will you have Carisia over to your bungalow?] Elynth asked her voice more relaxed and filled with humor now. [All of you must sate that burning... or we will never get anything accomplished.]

Andro laughed softly to himself. [When Yuri leaves I think.] He said. [Then we will be able to be together... and then we can really begin to train them. We can make them powerful Bonded Pairs sister. All we need is time.]

[I agree.] Elynth replied. [The question remains... will we get that time.]

JAL-14 LIMIAN LESIURE TRANSPORT

“...did your sister do?” Cihera asked her.

Las'elh looked at her intently from across the small table. Cihera was taller than her by a good four or five inch margin, almost as tall as her husband who Las'elh put at just over two meters in height. Her shimmering white hair fell loosely about her shoulders, still somewhat wild. Her skin was a dark chocolate color and incredibly smooth and soft looking, even more so than what she noticed the evening before. The light blue half jumpsuit hugged her lean, muscular frame tightly, wrapping around her body in all the right places as far as Las'elh was concerned. In her time since being vetted out of the EI, Las'elh had resorted to many things to find the truth about her sister, and that included bedding with other species and even females. She had also discovered she rather enjoyed the feel of another woman's body against her own, and the pleasure that could bring. The elven female they had left on Talbor Seven was quite adept at giving Las'elh pleasure in that way though she turned out to be rather empty between her elven ears.

Las'elh had awakened to the soft sounds of their love making and she had laid on the couch just listening, and becoming rather excited in the process despite everything that had happened in the last few hours. The sounds Cihera made were gentle whimpers of unabashed delight, and Las'elh could hear her soft professions of love. She had chanced a look in their direction and had to suppress a startled cry of her own. The darkness did nothing to hinder her elven vision and she had seen Cihera atop Anton's muscled body, her face contorted in blissful pleasure as she rode the largest cock Las'elh had ever seen on a male before. Las'elh watched for several seconds, the thick shaft disappearing again and again into Cihera's depths, before tearing her own eyes away and stifling a groan as her fingers danced across her bare mound under her pants and she squeezed her thighs together to keep from cumming herself.

They had awakened several hours later completely unaware that Las'elh had been witness to their lovemaking. Anton showered and dressed quickly, and since there was little privacy in the JAL-14 even though it was a leisure transport, Las'elh had to consciously keep her eyes from his flaccid cock as he dressed. She had, however, stolen several glances at Cihera as she dressed and couldn't help but admire her body. Anton had taken a tray of food to Gravork and then questioned him for several hours while Cihera studied the data pads Las'elh had given them to pass to Queen Dysea.

Cihera looked up from the pad and gazed at Las'elh with those amber colored orbs. "Las'elh?"

Las'elh shook her head quickly. "Huh... what? I'm sorry... what was your question?"

"Your sister?" Cihera asked again. "What did she do?"

"She was a student. She was completing her last year in school." Las'elh answered admonishing herself for letting her mind wander. "She was studying at The Genecor University on Apo Prime. She was returning to Elear for a week long break between final exams when she was abducted."

"Genetics?" Cihera asked.

Las'elh nodded. "She was to complete her finals and then transfer to Hadaria and study with the Divine One Eurin. It had already all been arranged. She was so happy she was chosen to study with Eurin. Not many students who are not Hadarian study directly with her."

"Yes... I understand that is somewhat of a distinguished honor if you are not Hadarian." Cihera answered.

They turned as Anton came out of the rear compartment and they caught a glimpse of Gravork sitting on the couch shoveling food into his face. The door slid shut and Anton moved to the table where he took the chair next to Cihera.

"I've asked him several different ways and the answer is still the same." He spoke. "All he did was to arrange a meeting between this Lycavorian and the Evolli. He was paid well and then cut out of the loop. It is how he conducts these sorts of transactions."

"So then we have to confront the Evolli?" Cihera said.

Anton nodded. "It looks that way."

"I was hoping to avoid that." Cihera said softly.

"Yes... so was I." He agreed pouring himself a mug of coffee.

"Did you ask him about my sister?" Las'elh asked quickly.

"Not directly." Anton replied quickly. "However, it does appear he made several contacts with unknown individuals that were requesting the flight schedules and plans of up to a dozen transports between Apo Prime, Hadaria and Elear. These individuals were quite specific in what they wanted, mostly elven females as Las'elh has said."

Cihera looked at him. "And?"

"He contacted this Lycavorian we are searching for." Anton replied. "It appears they have been working together far longer than Gravork wanted to admit at first. Upwards of twelve or thirteen years, perhaps even before that. He would not answer directly how long. Contacts were always made in the same fashion however; garbled secure holo transmissions and the Lycavorian always wore a helmet. He was never able to get a clear image of his face, and the Lycavorian had a scrambler on his end to prevent tracing the transmission. This Lycavorian provided him with the information which he then passed on to those who wanted it.”

“What about these unknown individuals?” Las’elh asked quickly.

Anton shook his head. “The only thing he could tell me was that they were large, they always wore heavy cloaks and cowls and that they moved like soldiers. Very well trained soldiers.”

“Immortals?” Las’elh gasped.

Anton shook his head. “He was reasonably certain they were not Immortals.” He replied knowing Las’elh’s fear in that. “He knows of the large Immortals mercenary group that operates here in The Wilds, but they are not shy about hiding their faces or what they are. No... these soldiers were someone else.”

“Can we trust what he is telling us?” Las’elh spoke quickly.

Anton looked at her as he sipped his mug. “Our drugs are quite effective.”

“Drugs?” Las’elh gasped.

Anton nodded. “A mixture of Lorpec and Vorelen. When combined they make for a very effective interrogation drug. It has no long term effects, and simply makes the person more susceptible to suggestion and answering questions. It is why we can’t allow you to question him Las’elh... no matter how much you think you would get out of him. It must be done in a way Cihera and I are trained in.”

“I thought interrogation by drugs was illegal within the Union.” Las’elh spoke. “It is not allowed or practiced.”

Cihera nodded. “Yes it is illegal within Union borders. However, we are not in The Wilds and this is a matter of the highest security. As Anton has said... the drugs have no lasting effects and it is much easier and far more accurate in terms of the reliability of the information we get. Torture does not work very well.” She stated with a smile.

“Does... does the Krypteria always operate in this way?” Las’elh asked.

“We act in whatever manner we need to act to keep the Union safe from harm.” Anton spoke. “And it would appear Gravork is involved in more than just T19 weapons sales, which lends more support to your theory about what is going on Las’elh.”

Cihera looked at him. “This might explain why he is so happy to be in our company.” She said. “If he somehow managed to anger one of his buyers in some way. Perhaps he was becoming worried for his safety.”

“Dealing with Kavalians doesn’t translate to a long life span.” Anton agreed. “According to him he has had thirty-three sales to the Kavalians of T19s and other assorted equipment over the last five years. When we destroyed the Evolli manufacturing plant for the T19 in the last year of the war, the Kavalians began asking him to supply them with more.”

“How many dragons did the Coven bring to Earth?” Cihera asked.

“Dragons?” Las’elh spoke. “The High Coven brought dragons to earth?”

Anton looked at her ignoring Las’elh. “Forty-three.”

“And how many T19s have the Kavalians purchased in the last five years?” Cihera asked.

“According to Gravork... over ten thousand.” Anton answered. “Not all of them were useable or operational mind you... but far more than what you would need to fight forty odd dragons. And more than enough to supply their forward units with them.”

Cihera nodded. “By quite a large margin.” She said.

“Well... it would appear that this Lycavorian, who we are pretty sure is Pusintin, we are positive he is involved in ordering the attempt on Aunt Anja and Aunt Aricia.” Anton spoke. “He obviously has access to information that is not day to day chatter if he was able to discover the exact time they were leaving Hadaria. Whether he is involved in the weapons deal with the Immortals we’ll have to ask the Evolli when we see him.”

“If it is Pusintin... then he has people embedded within the Union.” Cihera spoke. “High enough to get the flight plan for the Queens. And he obviously does not care that his actions risk open war with us.”

Anton shook his head. “Access to a secure terminal and the command codes is all they would need.” He spoke matter-of-factly. “Hadarian security is not as rigid as it is on Earth or Apo Prime. Or even Elear for that matter.”

“True.” Cihera spoke.

“As for risking war... I think we agree that the Kavalians would not be shy in attacking us if they knew they could get away with it. Sometimes I wonder if their leaders are even able to carry on an intelligent conversation without using threats and violence.” Anton said.

“What about my sister!” Las’elh demanded.

Anton and Cihera both looked at her then. Cihera leaned forward. “Understand something Commander Las’elh. Our priority is to the Union. Anton and I understand why you are doing what you are doing. I too am an Elf... Anton half elf. We will assist you in your endeavors as much as we are able, but our duty is to the Union first. If that is not something that is acceptable to you, we will give you credits, supplies and weapons and when we reach Nebonese you can go where you wish.”

Las’elh’s eyes grew a little bigger. “You would... you would just let me go?” She asked.

Cihera looked at Anton quickly and then back to her. “Personally... with your attitude... I believe you would be dead within a month now that Gravork’s friends appear to be looking for him. They do not know about us; however they know you saw him last on Talbor Seven. It seems our paths have crossed for a reason Commander... and your search for your sister is somehow tied to what is happening within the Union. Yes... we would just let you go.” She stated. “And you would be back to square one. Or you could remain with us... and help us to help you. Anton and I believe it is all tied together... and the sooner you learn to trust someone besides yourself, the longer you will stay alive. As our Aunt Dysea told you... she will do whatever she is able if she finds a need. That we have not heard back from her tells me that she just may very well have discovered what we sent her to be more than it is. But do not make the mistake of thinking she, or Anton or myself will not erase you from existence if you threaten to jeopardize our mission, for it concerns far more than just one elf female.”

“I... I just want to find my sister.” Las’elh spoke softly. “I swore to my mother I would find her. She is... she is the youngest of our family. The light. So young and vibrant and full of life. The only one of my parent’s children to not find a path within the Union military. She was going to be a researcher so that she could help others.”

Cihera nodded slowly. “Then work with us and not against us.” She said. “Believe me... having us as your friends, and by virtue of that most of the King’s family, your odds have greatly increased.”

Las’elh stared at her amber eyes, suppressing the shiver that ran through her from those incredible orbs. And it wasn’t a shiver of fear. She nodded slowly her blue eyes locked squarely with Cihera’s amber orbs. “If it... if it helps me to find Na’lia, I will do whatever you ask of me.”

Anton nodded and got to his feet. He leaned over and kissed Cihera’s head gently. “I will check our course and time to Nebonese.”

Cihera nodded as she reached up to squeeze his hand before he moved away. She turned back to Las’elh. “Now tell me about your sister.” She spoke. “I want to know everything about her.”

“Everything is in the data pads.” Las’elh said.

Cihera shook her head. “Tell me what is not in them Las’elh.” She said evenly. “Tell me about her friends... any males she may have been seeing. Her interests outside of school. All of it Las’elh.”

Las’elh nodded as she met Cihera’s eyes.

G9 HIGH COVEN LRR

Normya flipped on the bench once more trying to get comfortable and not succeeding very well. The G9 was not meant for creature comforts, and apparently the Immortals preferred the temperature to be a few degrees lower than what she was used too. She was trying to get a handle on everything that had happened in the last few days; the explosion and impact with the Gate; the mercenaries led by this Gareld trying to capture her; Toral’s death and the events on Yocetu. And then the huge Immortal who had anointed himself her protector.

Normya played it over in her head again and again what would have happened if Tir’ut had not appeared out of nowhere to attack that creature. And done so with such ferocity as she had never seen before in her life. And then to discover that he had attacked the creature alone, a creature that his own people would not dare hunt without at least four in their number. Normya didn’t know what to make of that. Nor did she know what to make of the feelings that just being around him elicited from her. At first Normya had thought it was because of her Coming of Age Fever. One of the strongest symptoms of the fever was that it made the females gripped in it very sensitive to any male who showed interest in them. Their senses and hormones were at such a peak that even a male of another species could draw their interest. In Normya's case however, her fever was slowly burning off and leaving nothing but mature woman in its wake.

Normya didn't see a monster when she looked at Tir'ut. She didn't see an Immortal either and part of her was frightened by that.

His dark eyes were filled with an animated life, his smile was infectious, and he and the others acted in a manner that mirrored her own brothers and sisters and their people. Their humor was almost laconic in nature, and Tir'ut had laughed at himself easily when he was looking up at her from the floor of that bunker. That was a trait all of her instructors had said no Immortal possessed, yet she had seen it for herself, and not just with Tir'ut. His brother acted in a similar fashion, as well as having showed obvious affection for the female Ja'narie. She glanced over to where his brother Fash'ka sat on the opposite bench. His pure Immortal features were relaxed and almost peaceful, Ja'narie leaning affectionately up against his side, both of them sleeping for the first time in several days without having to worry for their safety. That Tir'ut worshiped his mother was also plainly evident in his actions when the Empress began to call her names.

"Our blood is thicker." Tir'ut's voice spoke softly from next to her.

Normya turned quickly and saw him kneeling on the deck plates next to the bench. The burnt bronze color of his skin was very easy to look at, the smaller bone spurs along his jaw line giving him a fearsome visage to some extent, but surprisingly Normya felt no fear when she looked at him. His face was relaxed like his brother's, and then she could see the part of him that was his mother in his face. The smoothness of his skin and the narrow nose, his full lips, unlike those of the other Immortals, and then his eyes. Normya shuddered inwardly as she pushed herself up looking at those eyes and she didn't know if it was from the cold or the way those eyes gazed upon her. Not with lust or possessiveness, but intelligence and respect and desire.

"What?" She finally managed to stammer.

She watched him pull the large fatigue like jacket from his upper body. "Our blood is thicker." He said again. "That is why the cold does not bother us as much." He held out the jacket top to her. "It is... it is very big... but it will chase the chill from your body."

Normya looked at him for a moment before taking the jacket from his hands and putting her arms into the sleeves and pulling it on. She extended her arms out and couldn't help but laugh as the tips of her fingers ended about two and a half inches from the cuff of the sleeves. Tir'ut chuckled as well and reached up, his parted lips revealing the just tips of his fangs. She watched his face as he began to roll the sleeves up on the jacket.

"Your... your fangs..." She asked softly. "I thought..."

Tir'ut shook his head with a grin. "I am only half Immortal Il kal'daka darthirii." He said. "I can retract my fangs entirely, just like my mother. I simply choose not to most of the time."

"I'm... I'm sorry..." She stumbled out with the words.

Tir'ut looked at her. "Sorry for what?" He asked. "For asking a question you did not know the answer too? That is not something to be sorry for."

"You... you need to feed like..."

Tir'ut nodded. "Not as often as my mother or father. The combination of their DNA in my body made me less reliant on blood for some reason. It has something to do with my pure Akruxian genes. My mother tried to explain it to me once..." Tir'ut shook his head with a smile. "I was sorry I asked. When she goes off on a DNA related rant it is nearly impossible to understand what she is saying. To heal and such, blood speeds the process... but I usually do not take blood to heal."

"You were going to on Yocetu." Normya stated.

"Yes. To insure I was in condition to protect you." He answered. He looked at her as he finished rolling the sleeves for her. "I frighten you don't I Il kal'daka darthirii?"

Normya shook her head quickly. "No!" She stated. "It's just..." She saw him looking at her with those eyes. "Yes... a little I guess." She continued.

Tir'ut nodded his head slowly. "I do understand." He spoke. "My people do not have a stellar reputation for our past actions. Especially with elves. And many of them still serve the High Coven, something my father and uncle hope to one day change. Just know that we are not like them."

"I'm beginning to realize that." Normya said looking at him. "Why did you do it?" She asked.

Tir'ut tilted his head slightly and looked at her oddly. "Do what?"

"Attack that monster by yourself." Normya asked. "Your brother... your uncle... even your mother... I've heard them talking. Even those Immortal soldiers who came with your uncle look at you in a strange way. They say you were malda to do such a thing alone. That no one has ever done that."

"Malda? What is this word?" He asked with a smile.

"In the Lycavorian language it means crazy." Normya said.

Tir'ut chuckled. "Yes well... I have been called that many times. The Bancorik... it was going to make a meal out of you." He said. "I could not let that happen Il kal'daka darthirii."

"Why?" Normya persisted.

"It... it does not matter." Tir'ut spoke softly after a long moment. "You are safe and that is what matters."

"Tir'ut!" The voice called.

They turned and saw two of the pure Immortals who had come with his uncle waving him down to their location.

Tir'ut got to his feet slowly and looked at Normya. "You should try to get some sleep now Il kal'daka darthirii. We will arrive on Kranek in nine hours." He said. He tilted his head a little looking at her and then turned to move down to where the two Immortals were. Normya watched him as he moved, using the bar of the ladder to half leap and half slide down into the lower level of the LRR with ease. He moved with such confident grace and agility. Normya pulled the jacket he had given her closer around her shoulders and it was then her wolf nose detected the scent. His scent. A musky ginger smell that rushed through her head and tickled her nose like no man she had ever smelled before. She pulled the jacket tighter still, inhaling deeper and feeling that scent reach to every portion of her body and make her tingle all over.

"Normya?" Esther's voice filled her ears and she turned quickly to see her settle to the bench next to her. "Are you alright child?"

Normya glanced quickly back to where Tir'ut stood and then returned her eyes to Esther. "Yes... I'm fine." She said. "He gave me... he gave me his jacket."

"Immortal blood is much thicker than elven blood or even Lycavorian blood." Esther answered easily. "They do not get cold very often."

"He is very... he is very shy isn't he?" Normya said.

Esther's eyes widened. "Tir'ut shy?" She exclaimed with a small laugh. "Tir'ut is his father's son... and like his father he is blunt and straightforward. Much like Aikiro found out earlier. The little ones of our settlement think he is their personal plaything. He spends most of his days when he is not hunting or training with his father at the school entertaining them."

Normya chuckled now. "He did call her some rather inventive things didn't he?" She said.

Ether nodded. "Yes he did." She agreed. "I have spoken with Cha'talla." She said looking at her.

Normya's face took on a worried expression. "Esther..."

"You have nothing to be afraid of Normya Leonidas." Esther said quickly. "Once I explained to my husband everything that happened he agreed completely with our actions. In our stead he would have acted no differently. As I said... protecting you protects us as well." She said with a smile. "Besides... it has been nearly two weeks since I have felt his arms around me and when I told him I would make it up to him for disobeying him to remain away from the border, he came around rather quickly. He may be an Immortal... but he is still a man. And as his wife I know what buttons to push!" She said with a grin. "Your mother... she will have no trouble finding us, even coded as our location was that you gave her?"

Normya shook her head. "She will know right away." Normya answered deciding that she very much liked this Esther. "If Aikiro had not been there I would not have used code."

"So your father knows where this mountain is as well?" Esther asked.

Normya nodded. "He promised me Esther. My father has never broken a promise he makes in all the years I have been alive. And if what my Uncle Danny says is true... not in all the time he has been alive."

“I had heard that about your father.” Esther spoke.

They heard the laughter and turned to see Tir’ut and the two other Immortals sharing a laugh over the data pad one held in his hand. Esther chuckled. “What Tir’ut called Aikiro will rapidly make the rounds of our settlement when we return.” She said. “Do you need to shift to heal your leg completely?”

Normya shook her head. “I don’t think so.” She said. “It will be sore for a few days... but as you said nothing was broken.”

“Make sure you have Tir’ut carry you from the Runner.” She said. “It will protect you from being trampled by the young ones when we return and re-injuring your leg.”

“He doesn’t have too.” Normya said. “One of the others can...”

Esther shook her head. “No Normya Leonidas... none of the others will touch you.” She said. “At least not the males.” She smiled and squeezed her arm. “Get some sleep child. You still need the rest.”

Normya watched her wondering what her words just now meant.

None of the others will touch you. At least not the males.

HADARIA CITY OF NALUSS MERCHANT DISTRICT

The fifth largest city on Hadaria and where most of the import and export shipping took place. It had three large spaceports to accommodate this, and the Merchant District was filled with vendor stores and warehouses. It was also the city on Hadaria where most of those non-Hadarians lived and worked by choice. The Hadarians were a reserved people for the most part, though having Anja and Sivana as their Queen and Princess was changing that across the entire planet slowly. Their influence, combined with Eliani’s popularity and being tied so closely to the Lycavorians now was causing the people to be more open and less tame in their pursuits, more free thinking and restless in their natures. At least among the vast majority of the younger population and a good portion of the older generations.

The tavern was well kept and reasonably quiet. It was filled with dozens of freighter captains from dozens of different species, soft music playing in the background and loud talk between the many occupants. They sat in the rear of the tavern, on the raised level near one of the view windows that overlooked the thriving spaceport nearby. The sun was just going down and the lights of the spaceport cast beautiful scenery across the horizon. It also cast many shadows through the window adding to the dim nature of the upper level and making it even harder to see. They were just four nameless faces among the hundreds that came in and out of the tavern on a daily basis. The two females had scarves drawn up over their heads, covering their hair and the sides of their faces. One would have to be directly in front of them to see what they looked like. They sat with their backs to the stairways leading to the upper level where they were sitting at the table, the lone Lycavorian in their group leaning up against the wall in his chair. The single Hadarian male sat facing the Lycavorian. Dressed as he was in plain clothes and not the robes of the Hadarian Elders and since the Elders were almost never seen outside their sprawling compound, no one would recognize Elder Okein. It was the same for Buonau who sat to Okein’s left. The second female remained quiet and staring at the table for the most part in an almost subservient way.

“You are certain this will work Rinard?” Okein asked. “We are taking a massive risk in going forward with this plan.”

Rinard leaned forward in his chair. His face was clean shaven and very smooth, his lips thin but his nose wide at the end indicating it had been broken several times over the course of the years. He did not look his age of six hundred and fourteen, but then most Lycavorians never looked their real age, as was the case with vampires and elves as well. His muscular definition was massive however, with thick arms almost ready to burst from the shirt he wore, his chest wide and his shoulders broad. His six foot two body was nothing more than muscle, and exceptionally well defined. He was even larger in some respects than King Leonidas, who Okein had met on two separate occasions. His dark hair was cut very short as was the manner of the Lycavorians on Hadaria, mainly because of the rules put in place by Star Commander Belen, the overall commander of Durcunusaan and Union forces on the planet. This command position was usually filled by an

Admiral, but since Belen was a member of the Durcunusaan as well as Princess Sivana's husband, he was given this combined task four years ago. Rinard's eyes were hard points of dark brown, and Okein regretted for a brief instant that the Elders had ever gotten involved with this hard nosed and obviously cruel and angry young man. It lasted only an instant however, for like him, the other Elders were fearful of losing what little power and reverence they still held among their people. The Queen and her sister were rapidly pulling their people forward out of their more reserved and religious nature and setting them on a path of decadence and openness unparalleled in their history. And the Hadarian Elders held no part in that future in the Queen's view.

"Do not speak to me of risks Okein." Rinard spoke his voice low. "You stand to lose only what little face you retain among your people... I however will lose my life if we fail."

Buonau leaned forward. "We do not mean to imply there is no danger to you Rinard." She said. "Elder Okein was only asking if our plans are without error."

Rinard nodded. "They are perfect." He answered. "As long as the Elders pass and affirm the petition, we will be on our way to having what we want."

Buonau nodded. "We have more than enough votes to affirm Pcellany's petition." She spoke. "Taking it to the Ruling Council is another matter. You said you would supply us with what we need to convince them. That is why you needed my daughter's Duewa's help."

Rinard smiled. "And wonderful help it was." He stated looking at the young woman who had been silent so far.

"I do not wish to know what it is you had her do." Buonau spoke. "Once we pass the petition we will seek an audience with the Ruling Council. That will force Queen Anja to return to Hadaria. Even she can not dismiss the Ruling Council. We will need this information from you to give to the Council or all will be for naught."

Rinard reached down to his belt and removed the slim data disc. "Present this to your Ruling Council." He spoke. "When they see this... they will have no choice but to act."

Buonau looked at him as she took it. "What is on it?" Okein asked.

"Things that you were not willing to do to accomplish your goals." Rinard spoke. "I am not limited by your ridiculous sense of morality and high handedness, and neither it appears is Buonau here. Do not look at it before you present it to the Ruling Council."

Buonau looked at the disc and then lifted her eyes to gaze at Rinard. They shifted to where her oldest daughter sat for a brief moment as well. Buonau alone, among all the other Elders, only she knew the majority of Rinard's plan for she is the one who approached him about this undertaking. She hated Anja and Sivana with something bordering on obsessive behavior, and she would see the sisters brought down no matter what she had to do. She would not allow them to take away what she had spent seven hundred and eighty-five years building. "The subject who helped you to make this?" She asked finally.

Rinard grinned. "Already taken care of." He answered. "It was frighteningly gratifying to some extent."

"I'm sure." Buonau spoke. "The rest?"

"I received it back only today." Rinard spoke evenly. "It is complete and it is quite damning. One part is enough... but the others will help if any of the Elders or Ruling Council balk."

Buonau nodded and tucked the disc into the folds of her robes. "We have also held up our end of the bargain and plan as well where it concerns the children." She spoke. "We are in this together Rinard... so we must protect each other."

"We shall see." He spoke. "I have heard that before."

"You know of course he will never allow them to return here." Okein said now. "We are prepared to send the Hadarian Militia to Earth if need be... but it will end up being a very long court and hearing process."

Rinard nodded. "It will sow confusion and distrust among him and his Queen. That is what we want. That is what we need for this to work. I have waited many years for this... and I intend to see it through. His children are of no consequence to me, I only want to see her life destroyed and then I want to kill her myself and watch as the light leaves her eyes."

"The children are of consequence to us however and that is why I have an alternate plan in place." Buonau said. "The King is a brute. He lacks tact and intelligence and thinks only with what is between his legs. He will be easy enough to control once Duewa is entrenched within his life."

Rinard chuckled. "Yes... I know I was."

“You are disgusting!” Duewa snapped. “Just as he will be! I only do this because it must be done!”

“You didn’t seem to mind when I was pummeling your tight body into the mattress!” Rinard said with a grin.

“By the gods you are a vile man!” Duewa hissed.

“Enough!” Buonau barked softly. “We will succeed Rinard. You must have faith in our goals.” Buonau spoke.

“I hope you are right.” Rinard said.

“I suggest we do not meet like this again.” Buonau said. “Once events begin... we will all be watched closely I’m quite sure?”

Rinard nodded in agreement. “I agree. Though it will be a pity to not have your daughter Duewa’s attentions anymore.” He reached out to stroke Duewa’s cheek and he laughed when she reached up and slapped his hand away. “You must allow your daughter more freedom Elder Buonau... she has many repressed emotions bottled up inside her waiting to be released.”

“Shut up you pig!” Duewa hissed softly as Rinard got to his feet.

“My daughter’s emotions are none of your concern.” Buonau spoke softly. “We will contact you on the normal channel if we need to meet for some reason.”

Rinard nodded. “Don’t worry... I’m not going anywhere.” He spoke. He turned and moved off away from the table and was soon blending into the crowd and gone.

Okein looked at Buonau. “We need to be very careful with him.” He spoke softly and leaning forward. “Something tells me he is working from his own agenda. And much of that does not include us.”

Buonau nodded slowly. “Yes... unfortunately we do not know what that full agenda is.” She said. “However we do need to trust him for now, it is his contacts and access to funds that has gotten us this far.” She looked at the disc turning it over in her fingers. “This is what will bring down our pompous Queen and her arrogant sister. This is what we need to take back the control of our people and return them to the old ways. And then we can branch out and begin our plans against the King.”

“The cost could still be great Buonau.” Okein spoke softly causing Duewa to turn her head and look at him revealing her stunningly bright green eyes. Her face was narrow with high cheekbones and a thin delicate nose. The edges of her deep auburn red hair poked out from underneath the covering she wore, her full lips painted a soft pink in color. Her five foot seven height gave her a supple, yet leanly muscular frame, attesting to her almost hundred and twenty years as a Hadarian Mage Warrior before entering the service of the Elders. She was allowed to marry then, a man who was chosen for her by the Elders because of his status among their people. He was a man Duewa had not loved or cared for in the least, but she adored the two sons he had given her. When he was killed three years earlier in a transport accident, Duewa had not lamented his loss and only devoted more of her time to her sons. Tinrell and Tinyn were nine and ten now and growing almost faster than she could keep up with them. They were her purpose now. She instructed them daily just as she was raised by her mother, almost too sternly in fact. She allowed nothing of the events happening off Hadaria to influence them; just as her mother had never allowed the events to influence her brothers and sisters as they grew. She was also the oldest of her mother’s daughters at two hundred and twenty-eight years old. Duewa had been involved in this plan almost from the very beginning for her own reasons.

She hated Eliani Leonidas.

The Queen’s daughter was far more powerful than Duewa could ever hope to be, and she had not endured the many years of sometimes ruthless training and instruction that Duewa had to undergo under her mother’s tutelage. Eliani had more independence to do what she wished than Duewa had ever hoped to have, and she looked upon the Elders as beneath her in numerous respects, never passing up a chance to exhibit herself in front of them or disregard their spoken word. Not to mention she flaunted her vampire lover openly whenever they walked on Hadaria. Eliani Leonidas had been free to choose her own path even though as a member of the Hadarian Royal Family she should have been required to endure the same things as Duewa had. And in her mind Eliani treated her as inferior in many ways as well.

She had agreed to help her mother so that they could return power and influence back to the Hadarian Elders. She had not expected her mother to tell her she must tolerate Rinard’s vile touch upon her body however, but she had done so because she was committed to their goal. He was a cruel man, and built like a bull, and if not for her ability to heal she would have been left with dozens of bruises and injuries that would have been very noticeable. It was the Elder's way of keeping the man happy while they moved ahead with their plans.

Duewa had never met King Leonidas personally, only seen him at a distance with Anja. Her mother called him a brute and always spoke of him in a derogatory way, especially of his intelligence level and his propensity for violence to solve his problems. None of the Elders cared for him very much, though Duewa knew they all feared him in many ways. This constant belittling had rubbed off on her and now she hated the man as well as her Queen. Duewa didn't know what was on the disc her mother held, but she hoped it was enough to finally rid them of the Queen and her influence.

"What do you mean Elder Okein?" Duewa asked. "What cost?"

Okein looked at her. "The Union has adopted many of the more brutal laws from the ways of the King's father on Earth. Spartan laws as they are called. If what we are doing is discovered, we will face those laws regardless of our positions."

"We have known that since the beginning." Buonau snapped softly. "And still we have pressed forward. Part of our reasoning is to have many of these laws rescinded Okein... you know that."

Okein nodded. "Oh I don't doubt our commitment or cause Buonau..." He spoke. "The vast majority of the members worlds of the Union, ninety-six percent of them, they welcomed these laws however. They are the minds we will need to change. That will be a much bigger task."

Buonau waved her hand dismissively. "The Hadarian Elders have always held great sway and status among the species of the Union. Once we do this and expose the Queen for what she really is, I believe they will begin to doubt the leadership of the King as well. His past is by no means pleasant, and if need be, there are many who are willing to lie and bring him down. He has angered many people across the Union, and though they are few in number, they are powerful men and women. And the Lycavorians own sense of sexual openness and freedom will only help in bringing him down if he chooses to go against us."

"And the Prime Minister mother?" Duewa asked. "What of her? She and the King almost never disagree on a course of action. It is almost as if they are of one mind in many ways."

Buonau smiled. "If it comes to that, I have information that will benefit us... don't worry. You however, you must be prepared to go into the heart of the decadence and the uneducated daughter. A large portion of our plans hinge on you."

Duewa nodded. "I am ready mother." She spoke. "You need not worry about that."

Buonau nodded getting to her feet. "Good... then I suggest we make our way back to the Compound before we are missed. I despise being in this city... it already reeks of disease and debauchery."

GYTHEIO RESUMAR'S VILLA

Athani'Puat stood on the balcony of Resumar's bedroom overlooking the mountain city of Gytheio far below. She was nearly naked, the thin satin sheet wrapped around her body, held in place only by her armpit. Her long blond hair was askew and wild, her tail twitching slightly as it flipped back and forth behind her attuned to her mood, which was one of completeness and joy. His villa was far above the city below and she could see his brother's island stretching into the gulf. Athani looked down at her hand, her fingers twirling the round band of glittering gold and silver that wrapped snugly around her thumb. It had been something she had never heard of before, let alone taken part in, but that one hour long ceremony had bound her quite happily to Resumar Leonidas in a way nothing ever could. This is what her people lacked. A sense of commitment and love to one another that she was rapidly discovering was an attitude widely held outside of the borders of the KFI. She was well past committed now. She hadn't planned it this way, never even imagined it could happen this way, but it had happened. And it had swept her off her feet completely. She had never felt the devotion to someone that she felt at this moment for Resumar. A devotion that only grew more pronounced as the hours went by.

Yes... she was committed on her path now and she had no intention of altering what this future held for her no matter what it might be.

Athani sighed in delight as his powerful arms slid around her waist and pulled her close to the front of his body.

“What are you thinking Aryschanne?” He asked softly his lips brushing her ear.

“That I have never been happier in my life than I am at this very moment.” Athani spoke as she wrapped her arms around his and snaked her tail around his waist.

“That’s a good thing.” Resumar said. “I will undoubtedly drive you insane, badger you constantly and overall, just annoy you to no end.”

Athani chuckled. “It you love me as you do right now I will not care.” She said.

“I will remind you in a hundred years that you said that.” He spoke nuzzling the side of her neck and wrapping his aura around her tightly.

“It... it was a beautiful ceremony Resumar.” She whispered as she turned in his arms to face him.

“You... you did all that for me?”

“For us.” He told her holding up his hand and displaying an identical gold and silver band on his thumb.

“Claiming you as my mate was not enough Athani. It makes you mine yes...” He told her. “But the Elven Marriage Ceremony is what binds us together completely.”

Athani slid her arms around his shoulders and neck and lifted herself up easily so she could kiss him. And a sizzling kiss it was. Her legs curled up alongside his hips and her tail tightened around his waist as he held her securely and turned to carry her back into the bedroom. Athani pulled her lips away quickly.

“Food!” She exclaimed. “You must feed me first my... my husband!” She said the word she had spoken almost a hundred times in the last three hours, a word that she loved hearing herself say. “I will never refuse you... but we do have to eat!”

Resumar chuckled and altered his course across the room. “Food it is!” He spoke as he carried her out of the bedroom and headed down the hall to the stairs. “How does a thick Greek steak and vegetables sound my beautiful wife Athani Leonidas?”

“The food sounds wonderful.” She replied. “I like the name even more.”

Resumar smiled as he reached the bottom of the stairs and turned for the kitchen. “So do I.” He said softly. “So do I.”

“I can cook if you...” Athani began.

“Woman... I am a Spartan!” Resumar exclaimed. “If there is one thing my mothers taught me to do as I was growing up it was to cook!” He pushed open the door to the kitchen and walked in. “I will make you the juiciest...” He stopped his dark eyes going wide as he looked over Athani’s shoulder.

Her face became alarmed as she looked at him. “Resumar? My love what is...?” Athani felt her heart slam into her chest as if she had just been crushed against a steel wall as she turned to see where he was looking.

Anja and Isabella sat at the waist high counter, while Gorgo was making her way back from the dispenser with a mug of coffee. All of them turned and looked at him as he stopped and lowered Athani to the floor slowly, easing his way out in front of her protectively.

“We wondered where our son was when he did not come to Deni and Lisi’s new villa.” Isabella spoke calmly as she turned in the stool to face him.

“And then when he didn’t answer us... and was blocking us... we figured we come and see if he was alright.” Anja spoke. “We suspected something was not right since Resumar Leonidas tends to be the more reserved of his brothers.” Anja held up the data pad. “This only confirmed it.” Anja flipped him the pad.

“Mothers... grandmother... I can explain.” Resumar said quickly as he caught the pad.

“Damall un jar idie vada fenneennum rie vada Kavaalii Nabhe coi shidony tis terit maleja?” Isabella stated from her seat next to Anja. (Explain to us why the daughter of the Kavalian Prefect is naked in your home?)

“Jainn... lon caoira tur alda.” Anja said. (Yes... that should be good.) “Mithisoth vada shahle cingola forn neval jar idie forn wen shidony una?” (Especially the part where you tell us why you are naked too.)

“Neweni.” Gorgo spoke as she sipped her coffee. (Indeed.)

Athani looked between the three women and Resumar, still not able to understand more than a few words in the ancient Lycavorian tongue. Her Mindvoice abilities were increasing by the day, but that was not something she had begun to absorb so easily.

“Resumar...” She said softly. “Husband... what is going on?”

Resumar saw the looks on the faces of his mothers and grandmother when Athani spoke that term and he drew himself up to his full six foot one height.

“Huor?” Anja gasped as she glanced at Isabella. (Husband)

Resumar nodded. “As of three hours ago... yes.” He stated proudly. “And Athani is my valiath. We were married in an elven ceremony tonight.”

“Res... have you fully lost your mind?” Anja exclaimed coming off the stool. “She is the daughter of the Kavalian Prefect!”

“I know who she is mother.” Resumar replied.

Athani’s hands still resided in the region of Resumar’s waist, her tail curled protectively around his thigh. “Does... does that automatically make me a bad person Lady Anja?” She asked softly.

“What? Yes... no!” Anja snapped.

“I love her mother.” Resumar spoke firmly. “Since the moment she came aboard father’s ship I have known that. She came here with the intent to defect anyway and...”

“And you don’t find that in the least bit convenient?” Isabella asked.

Athani’s face darkened. “I came here to defect!” She snapped. “I did not come here with the intent to fall in love with your son! That... that evolved on its own!”

“So you say!” Anja snapped.

“Does... does father know?” Resumar asked.

“No!” Isabella replied quickly. “Aricia and For’mya are keeping him occupied at the moment. You do know what your father will do?”

“There’s nothing he can do!” Resumar spoke. “We’ve already been married in the Elven Ceremony. That can’t be changed. And I will not give her up. Not for you, not for father, not even for her people!”

“And I will not allow it!” Athani barked now.

“How did you find out?” Resumar asked. “I was... I was very careful in my actions.”

Anja snatched the pad from his hand. “This is how I found out!” She hissed. “A bio metric scan and its results. Do you know what is on here?”

“You scanned them without their knowledge?” Resumar asked.

“You had no right to do that!” Athani popped.

“I had every right sister!” Anja barked right back at her. “How many others among your people that have undergone the biogenic treatments are like you?”

Athani’s brow furrowed now. “Like... like me? What do you mean?” She asked.

Gorgo stepped from behind the counter, her eyes filled with realization. “Via pinnoc pera.” She said softly. (She does not know.)

“Know what?” Resumar barked.

Anja’s eyes grew a little wider now as well and Isabella came off her stool to step up next to her.

“Melyanna... is that possible?” She spoke softly. “Can she not know?”

“Is what possible?” Resumar demanded. “Someone tell me what the hell is going on?”

Anja looked at Isabella. “It’s possible.” She said softly turning back to look at Athani. “It’s possible if the Kavalian people are in some way related to Lycavorians somewhere along the gene code.”

Athani looked at her oddly. “What... what do you mean?”

“Your treatments.” Anja spoke. “When did you stop taking them?”

“Why?”

“Just answer the question please.” Anja spoke more subdued now.

Athani looked at Resumar who could only shrug his shoulders. She turned back to Anja. “Twenty-five years ago... almost twenty-six. Why? What... what don’t I know?”

Anja held up the data pad and looked at her, stepping closer. “Did you know that the treatments you were taking had Lycavorian and Elven core DNA strands in them?”

Athani shook her head slowly. “All we were told is that the serum would remove the hair from our bodies and our tails would recede. That we would look like normal people. It was done to improve our chances of infiltrating the High Coven. This happened over a period of years... from when we were small.”

“And the clones received the same treatments?” Anja asked.

“I assumed so... only in much larger concentrations.” She replied. “Why? What don’t I know? What is happening to me?” Her eyes were filled with very real fear now and all of them noticed how she gripped Resumar even more tightly.

“Why did you stop taking the treatments?” Anja asked.

“I... at first I lied about why.” Athani said. “I liked my tail and I wanted it back. I did it to rebel against my father and sister. When I tried to resume them... I became violently sick and I stopped taking them altogether.”

“And this happened with others?” Anja asked.

Athani nodded quickly. “Yes... many hundreds of those who were given the treatments. Why?”

“And they stopped taking them as well?” Anja asked.

Athani nodded once more. “Yes. Like me... they did not revert back to their normal forms. I... at times I have wondered why this is but our scientists could never determine why.” Athani looked at Resumar quickly. “Please... please tell me I am not sick!” She gasped turning back to Anja. “I have... I have only just found everything I have desired in this world and I could not bear to lose that now.”

“Mother?” Res asked the worry very evident in his voice now.

Anja looked at him and then turned to Isabella. “It would explain a great deal.” Isabella spoke. She looked at Athani. “Can you feel Resumar when he projects his aura upon you?”

Athani nodded quickly. “Yes. I did not think that was possible, but even that pig bastard Pusintin was able to affect me with his aura.”

“And your sister?” Isabella asked.

Athani shook her head. “I don’t think so. At least not on as large a scale as he could warp my senses. Why?”

“The sudden emergence of her Mindvoice abilities.” Gorgo spoke moving closer and stopping in front of Athani. “Her ability to sense and feel Res’s aura. Hers are the shields we felt at the dinner. That is why they seemed so familiar. Resumar instructed you how to shield didn’t he? And he and Cemath were helping to reinforce those shields.”

Athani nodded. “Yes.”

“Yes it would explain a lot.” Anja said moving closer to her as well.

“Explain what?” Resumar barked pulling Athani closer to him in a protective manner.

“You are not sick Athani’Puat... you...”

“Leonidas!” Athani stated firmly. “My name is not Athani’Puat! Not anymore! It is Athani Leonidas!”

Anja looked at Gorgo quickly her eyes wide. Gorgo couldn’t help but chuckle and shake her head. “She appears to have the same disposition as any female that has been claimed by a Leonidas.” She said.

“She most certainly does.” Isabella spoke moving up next to Anja.

“What is... what is wrong with me?” Athani asked.

“There is nothing wrong with you child.” Gorgo spoke with a warm soothing voice.

“Your treatments...” Anja told her. “When you were given the initial DNA sequencers as a child, you were injected with Elven and Lycavorian core DNA samples. Within Lycavorian core DNA samples are what we call L-stereoisomer cells, these cells are what makes a Lycavorian what he or she is. In those L-stereoisomer cells is a protein called Tryptophan. This protein is what makes the virus in our blood able to change others. The treatments you were taking were intended to keep the Tryptophan levels well below what Kavalians normally have. In you... and apparently within many others, the L-stereoisomer cells merged and bonded with your core Kavalian DNA. When this happened... the treatments began making you sick. The Lycavorian DNA had rewritten your own core DNA to an extent that your body was rejecting the treatment to keep your Tryptophan levels down. By the time you stopped taking the treatments, the L-stereoisomer cells were so abundant they were making their own Tryptophan. Far more than the treatments you were receiving could account for. That is why you did not revert back to your natural state when you stopped the treatments.”

“I... I am reverting back now?” Athani gasped. “Is that what you are saying?”

Anja shook her head. “No. Your relationship with Resumar has eliminated that possibility from ever happening. How you are now... that is how you will be for the rest of your years... not to mention you now have the Lycavorian longevity and a smaller portion of our healing ability.”

Athani's face suddenly became brighter and she looked at Resumar quickly, taking his hand in hers and pulling it tightly to her chest. "I... I have become more like Resumar?" She asked.

Anja nodded looking between her and Resumar. "Essentially yes." Anja said. "I would imagine the same principle exists with the others who have stopped taking the treatments. And if that is the case... then it implies that somewhere along the genetic stream of life, Kavalians and Lycavorians were one and the same."

Resumar's eyes grew a little wider as what his mother was saying hit him. "We are related to them?" He asked.

Anja nodded. "In a genetic sense yes." She replied. "Athani's Mindvoice abilities are growing in power. I doubt she will reach the level we have obtained because of your father's blood, but certainly a low level Tier Six."

"She already shows signs of this if she is able to communicate so easily with Cemath." Isabella said looking at her. "As well as hold back the inbred instinct of her people to attack and kill vampires. Which you are doing quite well by the way."

Athani met Isabella's eyes without fear. "I do not consider you my enemy." Athani stated plainly. "You... you are one of Resumar's mothers. And unlike the rest of my people I don't consider all vampires my enemy. Just those that want to kill me."

Isabella smiled. "Well... I'm glad that is the case."

"Does father know all this?" Resumar asked.

Anja shook her head quickly. "No. Are you kidding? He would fly off the handle! And he can't find out about you and Athani right now. There is far too much going on with Dysea meeting with Immortals and the High Coven here on Earth."

"Immortals?" Resumar declared becoming more alert. "What is that about? Mother is an elf... why would she be meeting with Immortals? What is going on? Where is she?" He barked out, worry for his mother very evident in his voice.

"It involves Normya." Isabella spoke.

"Normya?" Resumar said quickly. "What about Normya? What is happening?"

"Perhaps we should fill you in since you have been preoccupied these last few days it seems." She looked at Athani as she spoke. "Normya's TYPE II hit a Jump Gate near the border. She and Toral were set upon by mercenaries and Toral was killed. Normya was rescued by Immortals. They are among the tribe of the Immortal your father saved on Lycavore more than two decades ago. They have declared an Iglata d'Vlos to protect Normya. Ussta she-elf is moving to meet with them now."

"How could father trust Immortals?" Resumar gasped.

"An Iglata d'Vlos is sacred to Immortals." Isabella spoke. "It is a vow none of them have ever broken in their entire history. At least to my knowledge. This Immortal that your father saved... they spoke together and Dysea agreed to meet with them and recover Normya. They do not appear hostile to the Union and seemed very genuine in their manner. I trust your father and Dysea in this matter. They spoke with this Immortal directly. Besides... your mother is more than capable, and should the need arise help will not be very far away. Once they left, your father dispatched an entire Fleet Group to the area of the border. They will detect any signal for help that Dysea might send."

"It is a concern..." Anja said. "But not more so than you and your... your new wife. At least not right now."

"Mother it will come out about Athani and I eventually. Probably sooner rather than later." Resumar said. "Athani has been promised by her father to Qurot. He is becoming bolder in his actions in how he treats her because of this. I will not allow him to lay his hands on her anymore. She is my mate... my wife."

Gorgo stepped closer and took Athani's hand. "Then I suggest we put our heads together and figure out what we are going to do. And quickly." She smiled at Athani. "Come child... you may have not been welcomed to our family in the proper way, but I will not allow you to wander around your new home without clothes. Regardless of how much your husband desires it."

Resumar turned away from his grandmother and one could say he was almost blushing as Gorgo led Athani out of the kitchen. He turned back to look at his mothers in front of him and his small smile vanished quickly.

“Has it ever once occurred to you and your siblings to do something the easy way?” Anja asked in a serious voice. “To not cause tidal waves when you make a statement or complete an action? She’s the youngest daughter of the Kavalian Prefect Res.”

“I know who she is mother.” Resumar stated. “Do you honestly think I’m doing this for some wicked reason? She... she affected me the moment I laid eyes on her. I don’t know how to explain it... or how...”

“Resumar... do you love her?” Isabella asked. “Truly love her?”

“Without a moment’s hesitation.” He answered immediately.

Isabella looked at Anja and they both reached forward to take his hands. “Then let’s find a way to make sure this does not start a war.” Anja said softly. “And you need to put clothes on. Having you walk around half naked stopped being cute and funny when you turned ten.”

Resumar leaned over and nuzzled his mother’s cheek, and then did the same with Isabella. “Thank you mothers.” He said.

“I think you will owe us... what is it you say Melyanna... big time... when this is over.” Isabella spoke.

Anja shook her head. “That’s about as large an understatement as I have ever heard Bella.” She said.

“Yes... well... I had to say something.” Isabella answered with a grin.

SODRAG

Zarah sat in the comfortable chair holding the data pad and reviewing the training for the day. She was impressed with herself, but knew there were ways to improve on what she had done. It was the first time she had given instruction to such a large group and even with the assistance of the two older Durcunusaan Spartans, she had been hard pressed to keep up with the questions from the Coven riders. She had started them out with basic moves and quickly discovered that Narice had been right. Yuri and Dante were exceptionally skilled, and while Yuri put her sparing partner down efficiently and quickly, Dante seemed to enjoy dragging it out. He was showing off she knew, and that had not changed until the hulking Durcunusaan Spartan had lined up against him.

Zarah knew he was her DC, or Detachment Commander, and while she hardly ever noticed him he was always around whenever she was off duty or someplace that was deemed sensitive. His name was Rotan, and she had never really taken notice of him until today because of his duties. She definitely took notice when he took off his fatigue top and stepped across from Dante. He was easily six foot tall, the dark gray t-shirt conforming to the bulging muscles and washboard flat abdomen. He was handsome in a rugged sort of way, and he certainly didn’t carry himself as the six hundred and ninety-seven year old Spartan which Zarah knew him to be. She felt herself flush somewhat as she kept glancing at where he stood near the counter talking with another Durcunusaan soldier. Her hazel eyes were admiring the way he filled out all of his uniform, especially how the pants held what appeared to be a very promising package. Zarah shook her head quickly, feeling the fever in her blood rising as she gazed at him, and tried to push those thoughts from her head. As handsome as he was to her, she wanted someone far younger the first time. Someone close to her age who would not already be set in his ways. She took a deep breath and knocked back the remainder of her cool water and got to her feet.

She rose directly into Dante Moran’s path and he came up short before running into her reaching out to make it appear he was going to steady her. Zarah was far more coordinated than that and simply stepped back a half step.

“Excuse me.” Dante spoke in a gentle voice as he looked at her. His dark eyes flared for an instant and Zarah thought she saw a flash of red within them, but then it was gone. “I wasn’t looking at where I was going.”

Zarah looked at him and felt the fever within her amp up a notch. He was very handsome she decided, and not at all out of shape as his own muscles and hard abdomen attested to. She felt a strange tingling fill her head and she shook it quickly to clear her thoughts, feeling the fever begin to recede.

“No harm done.” Zarah spoke quickly looking at him. “You did very well today Dante Moran.”

Dante smiled warmly. “Thank you.” He replied. “You are far more skilled than I would have imagined. You must have been training since you were very young.”

Zarah nodded quickly. “Since I was five.” She replied.

Dante's smile broadened and she thought she saw that flash of red again as he gazed at her. "I as well!" He exclaimed.

Zarah smiled warmly then herself. "Kind of makes you wonder what else our two peoples have in common." She said.

Dante nodded. "Or just you and I." He said.

Zarah cocked her head to the side slightly. "Could be." She stated almost shyly.

"I don't suppose we would be allowed off the base yet?" He asked.

Zarah shook her head quickly. "No... I'm sorry."

"You are allowed off the base however." Dante spoke.

Zarah smiled and nodded. "Yes... but I'm not the one training."

Dante's smile was almost too perfect, but Zarah did not pick up on it as inexperienced as she was with men. "I was only thinking that I would like to buy you dinner and make up for acting like an ass with you this morning. You beat me soundly. I should not have gotten upset."

"Everyone loses once in a while." Zarah spoke. "It's the nature of things."

"Have you ever lost?" Dante asked.

Zarah shook her head. "Not yet." She said.

"Perhaps I will be the first." He said.

Zarah grinned. "There's a first time for everything." She said turning slightly as Rotan's bulk appeared next to them.

"Everything alright Princess?" He asked in a very calm and controlled voice.

Zarah nodded quickly. "Yes... we are good Commander." She answered looking at him. Viewing him close up right now was almost more than she could bear. The fever surged once more because she could feel his male aura banging against his Mindvoice shields and with a monumental show of will power Zarah took a deep breath. She could easily detect Rotan's almost irresistible amaretto like scent, and it tickled her nose deeply. She could also smell the much less prominent yuzu scent of Dante. It reminded her of the fruit of the same name that was sold in the western quarter that she thoroughly enjoyed. "If you will excuse me." She stammered before the combination of the two scents overwhelmed her completely and she jumped someone's bones. She turned quickly and made her way toward the door while Dante looked at Rotan.

"You got lucky today big man." Dante hissed.

Rotan smiled. "Let me know when you feel lucky again boy." He chimed back. "I can always use a good workout. And keep your distance from Princess Zarah."

Dante chuckled. "I wasn't aware there was a rule about speaking with the Princess." He spoke.

"There is my rule." Rotan spoke without humor. "And when it considers Zarah Leonidas, my rules are all that counts."

Dante tilted his head and looked at him. "Ah... you find her attractive." He stated.

"I am her Detachment Commander!" Rotan snapped. "It is my duty to protect her from the likes of you. Vampire or Lycavorian!"

"And you do such a good job of it!" Dante said. "Until next time Commander."

Rotan watched Dante turn quickly and march back toward the table where his brother and sister sat. He cut his eyes just as the Princess exited the building and the setting sun provided an incredible backdrop, outlining her incredible figure in its entire splendor. Rotan shook his head quickly, chasing those inappropriate thoughts from his head. He had guarded Zarah Leonidas since she was thirteen, watching as she grew into the woman she now was. She was almost like the daughter he never had, for his duties prior to acceptance into the Durcunusaan twenty years ago had kept him from finding a mate. It was something of a sticking point between him and his mother that he had not yet settled down and taken a mate, but Rotan was having entirely too much fun doing what he was doing now. Now however... seeing the beauty Zarah had become had made him start looking at her in a different light. And Rotan felt shame at that knowledge, but he did not know how to stop it.

He turned as his fellow Durcunusaan member stepped up to him. "Everything alright Ro?" He asked using his nickname.

Rotan glanced over at Dante quickly and nodded his head. "Yes."

"Let's get back to what we were talking about." The man spoke. "I'm telling you the sniper rifle they have just come out with is accurate to four kilometers and..."

Malic's dark blue eyes searched for her among the small crowd of personnel off loading from the STRIKER at SODRAG's main base Spaceport. Later in the afternoon as it was now and it was very quiet as most of the men and women who shuttled back and forth to SODRAG had already left. He spotted her easily enough, her slight figure standing out among the few techs and Durcunusaan soldiers that remained. She looked very out of place. She wore a simple tan jumpsuit and Malic's eyes grew a little wider when he saw her abdomen swollen with pregnancy. He had only been informed minutes ago that she was arriving, and Malic had rushed to the Spaceport. It had happened so fast, and he really hadn't even talked to her about coming here. As he raced across the base he wondered who could have gotten her arrival cleared so quickly. She was a civilian and a teacher, and not even senior military officials found it easy to gain entry to a Durcunusaan base. Yet there she was. She was the youngest and most outspoken of his parent's daughters, and as far as Malic was concerned the only one who really treated him as an equal. He threaded his way closer to her until he was just behind her and then he saw her nose scrunch up as she detected his scent among the many new and odd ones assailing her wolf senses. She turned quickly and her dark blue eyes flew open wide upon seeing him.

"Mal?" She gasped

Malic grinned quite uncharacteristically. "Hello Adriana." He said softly. Though easily eight inches shorter than her older brother Adriana jumped up and threw her arms around his neck as he hugged her to him, careful not to squeeze too hard due to her abdomen. He inhaled her wintry fresh scent and smiled even wider.

Adriana pulled back slowly gripping his shoulders. "Mal... what is wrong?" She asked quickly. "I had a pair of Durcunusaan Hippeis Sedla show up at my door telling me I had to come with them. They said you needed me for something. They escorted me all the way here from Hunlar Five. I've... Mal I've never even seen a Durcunusaan Hippeis Sedla before they came to my house."

Malic looked at her oddly. "Durcunusaan Hippeis Sedla?" He questioned. "I only asked four days ago if you would be allowed to come here. This is a Durcunusaan base, but I did... I did not think they would treat it as an emergency. And certainly not enough to send the Hippeis Sedla. There are few enough of them as it is."

Adriana looked at him, her eyes growing a little wider. "This is... this is a Durcunusaan base?" She asked softly. "You... you are here! Malic did you..."

Malic smiled slowly and nodded his head looking at her. "I have been selected for a candidacy into the Durcunusaan. I have come here to conduct my training and assist with some other things."

Adriana's face was bright and full of the pride that Malic never saw in the eyes of his parents or other siblings. "Malic... oh Mal that is wonderful!" She said hugging him again. "That is what you have always wanted."

Malic nodded slowly. "Part of it yes." He said.

Adriana pushed him back at arms length and looked at him. "My big brother... a member of the Durcunusaan. Oh Mal... I am so proud of you!"

Malic reached out and touched her swollen abdomen gently. "What... what is this?" He asked.

Adriana slapped his shoulder. "What do you think it is fool?" She barked playfully.

Malic looked at her. "Tovar's child?" He asked speaking of Adriana's pureblood vampire husband.

"Who else's child would it be?" She exclaimed. "He is my husband and mate."

"And so he is." Malic spoke softly.

Adriana looked at her brother carefully. He looked different than when she had last seen him. More calm and almost at peace with himself. She squeezed his hands tightly. "You... you do not show the distaste you normally do for Tovar Malic." She said. "Why?"

"I have been here... I have been here only a short time Adriana... here on Earth among these men and women and I have seen things I never thought I would. Small things really... but when you add them all together... everything father and mother pounded into our heads as children is..."

"Wrong." Adriana said simply.

Malic looked at her. "Yes. Wrong." He said firmly. "I have begun to look at... to see that vampires are not what father and mother always told us they were."

Adriana smiled as her eyes became moist. "Oh Malic you don't know how happy hearing you say that makes me." She said.

“I did not... I did not know if Tuvar would accept me after what I have said to him in the past.” Malic spoke even as shame filled his face and eyes. “That is why I did not think to ask if he could accompany you. I also did not know you would be allowed to come here so quickly. Security screening can take weeks and months to complete fully, especially the ones conducted for anyone associated with the Durcunusaan.”

“Why have you asked me to come here Mal?” Adriana asked. “I am a civilian. A teacher. I know nothing of fighting and war.”

Malic looked at her evenly. “I will need you to teach me Adriana.” He said. “I will need you to teach me what I need to learn in order to succeed.”

“Mal... I teach small children.” Adriana said with a smile. “You are not a child Malic.”

Malic nodded. “I know... but that is how I must start. I know that now. I have never been as smart as you or our siblings and...”

“Mal that is not true!” She snapped softly.

“But it is true.” He said quickly. “I will admit that now Adriana. I... coming here and seeing what I have seen. Just being among these men and women, it has made me accept who I am. I know what mother and father did when I was a baby. I may not understand all of it, but I know what they did. It is why I am the way I am. I am not as smart as you and the others. I want to change that sister.”

Adriana stared at her brother for a long moment. “You have changed Malic.” She said softly. “You have changed so much from the man you were only six months ago. Why has this happened?” She reached up and placed her hand on his cheek. “What has caused you to desire this now?”

“I have found my calling Adriana.” Malic answered softly. “I have found three things which I desire more than anything I have ever wanted. And it is here... among these men and women. Here among the dragons. And one day I hope to count myself among their number. Two of these things I will never have... but the third is within my reach. In order to do that... there is much I must learn. The ancient language to begin with.” He said. “My rank grants me a larger than usual bungalow... you can stay with me. Teach me at night and have the days to yourself. I will do whatever you think I need to do. I have my normal duties but I will study whatever you think I should at night. I can see about you being allowed into the nearby city and...”

Adriana reached up and put her other hand to his cheek now. “Yes Malic.” She said softly.

Malic’s blue eyes smiled and he looked around quickly before leaning over to nuzzle the top of her head. “Thank you sister.” He said softly. He scooped up her two bags in his hands. “Come... I will show you the dragons as we return to the bungalows. You have never seen one up close have you?”

Adriana shook her head quickly. “No never! You don’t fear them?”

Malic shook his head. “They are the most honor bound species I have ever come across.” He stated. “And they are... they are special.” He smiled. “Come!”

Adriana held his arm as he led her out of the spaceport.

Adriana’s eyes were wide as they fell upon the forty odd dragons near the hanger and Malic slowed the open aired Lifter. They were milling about half inside and half outside the hanger. Dragons of all colors and size Adriana saw. She took Malic’s arm as he helped her out of the Lifter with a grin, her eyes focused on the mystical creatures that were so revered in the Union. They were less than a hundred meters away and Adriana could not believe their size and the grace with which they moved. Malic could feel the Mindvoice tremors within his head and knew they were speaking to each other. He had grown accustomed to the tremors now, many times allowing them to fill him completely even though he could not hear what was being spoken.

Adriana held his arm tighter as they moved closer. “They... they are so massive!” She gasped out softly.

Malic nodded. “They have completed their training for the day and gather here to go over what they have learned with the Dragon Scholar who accompanied us from Sparta to teach them.” He said. “He is probably inside with the others. He is the one I want you to see. His scales are a silvery purple color Adriana. He is proud and strong.”

Adriana gripped his arm tighter as they walked closer, the heads of many of the dragons turning to look at them. She was taken aback by the intelligence she saw in their eyes. “They understand our spoken words, don’t they Mal?” She asked.

Malic nodded. "Yes. I can feel the tremors of their conversations within Mindvoice, but I do not have the strength to hear their voices."

Adriana looked at him strangely. "That is new." She said. "You never were a very strong Mindvoicer."

Malic nodded. "I know. It started on the Prince's ship when we were coming here." He said. "It has only continued to grow stronger the more time I spend here." Malic pointed. "There he is."

Adriana turned and looked to where he was pointing at the massive dragon. He did indeed have silvery/purple scales she saw, with a long neck and tail. She gripped Malic's arm tighter as they moved closer. She watched as the silvery colored dragon turned towards them, those amethyst colored eyes making her gasp softly in surprise. It crossed to them in three strides and suddenly it was in front of her and lowering its massive head.

"Mal... Malic?" She panted almost breathlessly, gripping his arm even tighter.

Malic smiled. "It is ok sister." He spoke softly looking at her. "His name is Vincix I believe. He is the dragon teacher that was brought to school the others. He will not hurt you. None of them will. He is just looking at you."

"Then why are his eyes focused on you?" Adriana spoke turning quickly to look at him.

"What?" Malic's head turned and even he was startled to see Vincix's amethyst eyes focused on him intently, his huge snout only inches away from his face. Then Malic felt it... the tremors within Mindvoice, and far more powerful than anything he had felt until this moment. His own dark blue eyes grew a little wider as Vincix's snout moved closer still.

Vincix stared at this tall Lycavorian, unable to comprehend what he felt pouring from the man. He was very tall and muscular, his dark blue eyes nearly unreadable as they gazed at him in confusion. He felt an enormous Mindvoice presence from the man, and it somehow seemed so very familiar to him. He had seen him several times over the past few days, always from a distance though while he worked.

Vincix had felt something different in the past two weeks. A presence of some sort that filled him like an echo in his mind. It was not something he had ever felt before, yet as the days passed these last two weeks the echo had become louder and clearer. It was not something he had told his mother or anyone else, for he himself had never experienced something like this before and did not know how to describe it. Yet now... standing in front of this man... the echo was no longer an echo. It was a shouting and hammering in his head that was causing his heart to race and his tail to twitch. He inched his snout closer to the man, his ocean driftwood scent filling even his senses, and seeing that the Lycavorian did not pull back. There was something about this large Lycavorian Vincix knew. Something that was reaching out to him in a way he'd never felt before.

And that something saved his life.

Time to show you what I learned today oh mighty Vincix! The cruel voice erupted within Mindvoice.

Vincix's head snapped around to his left and his amethyst colored eyes went wide when he saw the end of the large tail whipping directly for his head. The blow caught him unprepared and snapped his head around on his neck with such force his entire body was propelled across the floor of the hanger.

Malic's eyes flew open when the snout of the dragon disappeared from in front of him and he watched as his body was sent hurtling across the hanger floor, toppling two other Coven dragons to their sides until he rammed into the wall of the concrete hanger with enough force to crack and shatter the wall. Several large pieces broke free and fell on the body of the dragon he knew as Vincix, further adding to the stunned silver scaled dragon's predicament. He watched as the green and yellow scaled body of Vollenth moved past him quickly, Yuri's dragon appearing intent on doing more harm to the dazed Vincix, even as he struggled to get his feet back under him. Malic felt pain wrack his body, stabbing pain in his head, causing him to nearly double over in agony.

Adriana looked at her brother reaching for his shoulders stunned at what she had just witnessed. "Malic! What is happening?" She screamed.

Malic's eyes sprang open wide, and he staggered slightly, Adriana trying to steady him. "No!" He hissed. "No!"

"Malic... what is wrong? Malic!"

Malic's head snapped around and his eyes saw Vincix finally gather his feet under him, just as Vollenth slammed him in the side with his tail once more, Vincix's body smashing into the concrete wall of the hanger and slumping to the floor.

"NO!" Malic screamed, his voice carrying over the inside of the hanger like a clap of thunder rolling across the plains. It caused the head of every dragon in the hanger, each of them stunned by the sudden viciousness of the attack, to snap around and look at the near crazed look in Malic's eyes. "NO! YOU WILL NOT HURT MY BROTHER!"

Adriana would never forget what she saw next and it would remain with her for the rest of her life as the catalyst to the defining moment that changed her brother's path in life forever. Her own blue eyes grew wide as Malic's Shi Viska burst into existence and his eyes changed, his wolf fangs bursting forth. Malic sprinted toward the green and yellow scaled dragon with a speed she had never observed from any male Lycavorian before, and she could only watch in horror as that green scaled beast's tail came whipping around once more.

Vincix's amethyst eyes grew large as he saw the Lycavorian he had been looking at intently skid to a stop in front of him, his Shi Viska out and humming on his arm. He could only watch as if in slow motion as Vollenth's tail came whipping around with savage speed, intent on smashing into Vincix's body once more. The tail smashed into the Lycavorian man instead, impacting directly on the now exposed shield and Vincix watched as his body was sent hurtling backwards towards him. Vincix groaned when Malic's two hundred and thirty pound body rammed into his side with unbelievable velocity. The scream that followed deafened all within the hanger except for the trumpeting bellow that echoed the shriek in almost perfect harmony.

A scream and trumpet not of pain or shock, but the scream and trumpet of two minds becoming one.

It was a scream and trumpet that echoed through the endless chasm that was Mindvoice. It did not touch all those who were able to use this skill, for the power involved would have made many of them go instantly insane. Across the vastness of Earth and space five hundred and ninety eight minds came instantaneously alert and reached across the void from wherever they were to touch the final two that would complete their circle. Five of those minds right here on Earth.

They reached out and wrapped around the final two minds, passing to them all that they were, all that they knew. The many battles, the endless hours of training, the many tricks they had picked up through the years. They took from the two minds as well, blending within themselves the vast wealth of knowledge from one and the utter commitment and force of will to succeed from the other. They took it and made it part of themselves. Many of them were of the original group formed by the King. Twenty-five years and several conflicts had seen them lose twenty-three of their number. Twenty-three hearts and minds that they worked to replace through the years. Two of the final three positions had been filled only within the last two years since they were already Bonded Pairs within the ranks of the Durcunusaan, and they had thought it would be some time before the last position was filled. This sudden shock and the immense power of what they felt announced that their search was over and they were finally whole once more.

Two hundred and ninety-nine Bonded Pairs reached across the enormity of stars and planets and sent one message with one voice.

WE ARE COMING BROTHERS!

The Sacred Circle of Mjолnir's Hand was complete once more.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

LEONIDAS II-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER

ULU SCIMITAR

ORBITING EARTH

"Bastard!" She spat her hand coming forward and slapping the male Lycavorian's face hard enough to rock his head back. "I trusted you! I... I loved you!"

The male simply stood there, holding part of the sheet over his lower body while the blond female elf held another sheet over her naked body on the bed behind him. He turned back to look at her, opening his mouth several times to work out the sting of the slap she had just landed.

"Seven months!" He finally hissed at her. "We have been together seven months and not once have you allowed me to cado forn! Why is that Ne'Veha?"

"I wasn't ready!" She barked angrily.

"Wasn't ready?" He snapped. "What kind of answer is that? You are either ready or not!"

"You know how my parents feel about Lycavorians!" She exclaimed. "I was waiting until I could..."

"Until you could what?!" He snapped at her once more. "Find the courage to tell them we were a couple? For someone with as much confidence and strength of will as you say you always possess, you can't even tell your parents we have been seeing each other."

"So you go and find some slut who will allow you to do these things that I would not let you do?" She screamed at him. "You... you told me you loved me Tarren!"

"I do." He stated simply. "I love you both!"

She looked at him, her dark brown eyes flashing wide. "What?"

"Join us!" He said. "I have enough for both of you and you might discover you like the arrangement."

"You mean share a bed with you and that... that whore you just picked up off some street!" She shouted.

"I am no whore upae!" The blond snapped back at her. "I am just a little more open to things you are not!"

"Hy'la and I have been seeing each other for four months now." Tarren spoke calmly. "We were hoping you would be open to sharing our lives with us."

"What's the matter Tarren?" She barked. "I'm not enough for you?"

His dark eyes centered on her face. "To be frank... no." He answered bluntly. "You are too timid for my tastes. I was hoping you would come around... but so far you haven't."

Ne'Veha looked at him as if he'd suddenly lost his mind. "Timid?" She exclaimed in disbelief. "Simply because I won't share a bed with you and another woman, that means I'm too timid? Because I won't let you fuck me in my ass... that means I'm too timid?"

He nodded slowly. "Among other things?" He replied. "I'm only being honest with you Ne'Veha."

She glared at him for a long moment then. "We are finished Tarren! Done! I forgave you the first time! Not now!" She screamed.

He laughed arrogantly. "I need children... and if you won't give them to me I will find a woman who will." He stated. "I would prefer that you and Hy'la be the ones..."

"Stop right there!" She spat.

He stepped closer to her. "Where will you go? I am in your blood now. I may not have scented you... but no male will come near you now Ne'Veha. At least not here on Elear. Unless you leave... you will be alone. And we both know you won't leave your precious family behind and go out into the real fleet."

"Then I will leave!" She stammered. "You have only proven to me that my parents were right!" She spoke softly. "You have only validated their dislike of the Lycavorian men by your actions."

"You won't leave Ne'Veha." He stated confidently. "For all of your bluster and skill and arrogance... you are too afraid to leave Elear."

"We shall see!" She screamed out.

That had been six months ago, and twenty-five year old Commander Ne'Veha had left her home planet two weeks later. Born and raised on Elear, she had joined the Union military at the tender age of nineteen and as with all elves, rapidly displayed extraordinary skills in piloting. When she finally graduated from the Union Fleet Academy five years later, she was touted as the next coming of Queen For'mya with her flying abilities. Ne'Veha's most preferred flying craft was the newest Menkla Manufacturing M5 Devastator Heavy Fighter/Bomber and her ability to make this craft do things it was not designed for was famous throughout the Elear Central Command. She was well known within that circle of Four Fleet Groups, but she had never once served outside of that Command.

Until now.

She had requested a posting to the finest Elven Fleet Group outside of the Elear Central Command, assuming her skills would allow her to get posted anywhere she desired. She wanted to go to the Apo Prime Command Group so that she could remain close enough to Elear to return home and see her family as often as she wished. The Apo Prime Command Group also had an entirely elven squadron that needed a commander. The powers that be had other plans and Ne'Veha found herself posted to the 9th Spartan Combined Fleet Attack Group. She had protested the posting at first; not wanting to be part of a Fleet based Command, or have to endure being so far from her family. She also thought she was due a command slot because of her skills and she made her disappointment very clear to her superiors. She was told by the Lycavorian officer at Fleet Operations that they did not assign pilots by preference, but by need. Ne'Veha had always found Lycavorians to be arrogant and pompous. She had fallen in love with Tarren because he had seemed to be the exception to the rule at first. Her parents forbid any of their four daughters to be involved with Lycavorians. They wanted to keep their elven bloodline pure. They had Lycavorians friends and associates, but none of them were very close. Tarren's actions had only served to reinforce her parent's pseudo mindset when it came to Lycavorians, especially the males, and therefore Ne'Veha's distrust of them had only grown after Tarren had cheated on her again.

Ne'Veha had never met King Leonidas or the Queens directly, and she had only heard about Crown Princess Androcles through the Netnews. She did know that outside of the King's own 1st SCFAG and General/Colonel Simpson's 2nd SCFAG, Prince Androcles's command was one of the most sought after postings within the entire Union fleet. However the 9th was based on Earth and in her opinion too far away for her to return and see her family as often as she wanted. Ne'Veha had already made plans to speak with Captain Sa'sur, the SCIMITAR's elven commanding officer and request she be transferred back to Elear.

Ne'Veha stood only five foot three inches tall and barely a hundred and ten pounds when she was dripping wet. Her dark brown hair fell to the middle of her back, yet whenever she was on duty it was always tied in a single long bundle of soft, shiny locks. She had a typical elven body, with long legs for her height, and firm breasts that while not large by any standard were still proudly high and full. Her legs ended at her exceptionally firm and impeccably shaped ass. Her features were again typically elven, with four inch high ears that curved elegantly upwards and close to her head, full lips and completely unblemished skin. Since leaving Elear Ne'Veha had been approached by many males as well as several females who had shown interest in her, including Lycavorians who were attracted by her beauty alone. She had dismissed them all rather bluntly, though she was secretly surprised and pleased that she was found desirable by even females. It only fueled her ego and her mindset that Tarren had made a very big mistake in cheating on her. Tarren had tried to contact her several times in the last six months, but she had never answered him back. As far as she was concerned they were finished forever.

"Ne'Veha!" The male voice of her elven Weapons Control Officer finally penetrated her thoughts and she saw him staring down at her from where he stood.

He was motioning frantically for her to get up and Ne'Veha saw that everyone else was also standing. Her dark eyes went a little wider and she sprang to her feet just as the tall female elf strode into the pilot's briefing room. Her dark hair was streaked with white blond highlights, her uniform meticulously tailored but bearing no rank, which Ne'Veha found very odd. She moved directly to the podium and turned to look at the pilots. Her pale blue eyes were bright and held an air of confidence and experience.

Sa'sur let her eyes drift over the twenty-seven new pilots to the SCIMITAR, eighteen of them DEVASTATOR crews flying the new M5. These crews would complete the change over to the new ship Fighter/Bombers.

"Good evening and let me welcome you to the SCIMITAR." Sa'sur spoke confidently. "I am Captain Sa'sur for those of you who don't already know. The ULU SCIMITAR is the overall Command ship for the 9th Spartan Combined Fleet Attack Group and Crown Prince Androcles. Our home base is Earth, and many of our crew has established homes within Sparta or Eden City. We have just started the Royal families' six month exodus to Sparta; so much of our fleet training and maneuvers will take place within Earth's operational sector. When the royal family shifts back to Apo Prime we usually assume a lateral, nine sector border patrol along The Wilds and the former border with the High Coven. As you all know, the Coven has retreated from that area of the border due to their war with the KFI, leaving it mainly free of their influence, and it is now considered part of The Wilds. You will find life within the 9th to be very exciting and structured much of the time. Prince Androcles and I like to keep everyone on their toes so we will often issue training alerts and readiness drills outside of the norm.” Sa’sur moved around from the back of the podium and down in front of the large briefing room chairs. “Please... everyone take a seat.” She stated waiting as they all did. “The SCIMITAR is also home to at a minimum four dragons and I imagine now that Prince Resumar will be getting his very own combined FG to command, that number will remain at that level on a regular basis. For those of you who have never served on a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser, which is most of you after looking at your records, our ship is designed in such a way that the dragons have complete freedom to roam wherever they wish. There are only four areas that they can not reach because of their size, one of those areas being the main bridge unfortunately, but there was no way to make it large enough to fit even one of them. Prince Androcles is bonded to Elynth and Princess Lisisa to Jeth, both of them larger than usual adult dragons. The SCIMITAR is also considered the main transporter of dragons who are returning to Earth for the Harmony Ceremony. We can carry fifty dragons with ease, and the entire aft portion of deck ten is what we called the Dragon Den. Access to the Dragon Den and the aft portion of deck nine is restricted to senior crew and officers and it is one of the rules we adhere to rigidly here on the SCIMITAR.

“Life on the SCIMITAR will be unlike what many of you are coming from on the planet based commands. The ship is large yes... but everyone is treated as an equal. Standing orders from the Prince is that no rank will be worn on your uniforms. This promotes respect to all members of the crew whether your duties are pilot or second class tech hand. Many of the crew of the SCIMITAR has chosen to speak only the ancient Lycavorian language while on board ship, and I recommend if you do not speak it, you at least make an attempt to learn it. I will not sit here and give you the entire run down of operations, I will leave that to your flight squadron leaders, and they will also tell you where your quarters will be. My door is always open... as is the Prince’s... however make sure you bring your issue to your immediate superior first. I will take a few questions now.”

“Will we be allowed to come and go from the surface Captain?” A male pilot asked.

Sa’sur smiled. “This is not a prison ship Lieutenant.” She stated with some humor in her voice. “There are hourly shuttles to the surface and you can remain on the surface the entire time if that is your wish, as long as you are here for your duty shift. There are many historical places to see within Sparta, and I do recommend visiting the Memorial at Thermopylae for the King’s father and all those who perished there. It is quite beautiful.”

“Does the Prince stay on the ship ma’am?”

Sa’sur shook her head. “No. He has an apartment at the Royal Estate Villa but his main home is in Gytheio. He has just recently taken a mate, Crown Princess Sadi, and you will probably see her before you see Androcles. She is now the co-pilot of his STRIKER DT and she and Arrarn Leonidas will be using the landing bays off and on to train some new pilots in DT flight operations. He does sometimes pull a duty shift here on the SCIMITAR while we are on Earth, but his other duties normally keep him on the surface while we are here.”

“Other duties?” The voice blurted out.

Sa’sur cut her eyes and saw the female elf who had spoken. She was a stunning young female and Sa’sur knew who she was immediately.

“Commander Ne’Veha.” Sa’sur spoke seeing the look of surprise on her face that she knew her name. “You have a question?”

“He has duties that are more important than being on his ship Captain?” Ne’Veha forged ahead. The tone of her voice was easy to imply she did not approve of this.

“Crown Prince Androcles Commands two Ground Divisions based on Earth, as well as the eight Strike Wings that make up the 9th CSAFG. He also leads a section of seventy-five members of Mjolnir’s Hand. Is there something you don’t approve of about his workload Commander, because I assure you, he puts in far more hours than you will?” Sa’sur spoke.

Ne’Veha looked around quickly somewhat embarrassed at being put on the spot. “I just assumed he would... that he would spend more time here Captain Sa’sur.” She said finally, her eyes settling back on Sa’sur.

“Assuming anything in regards to any of the Royal family will usually turn out to be wrong, especially in the case of the King and Androcles. They are two peas in a pod for the most part, and that will sometimes make you insane with their unorthodox approach to things.” Sa’sur spoke with a smile. “I command this ship... that is how it has always been, that is how it will always be until I am told otherwise. Androcles and I have been together going on six years now, and he made it very clear to me when he assumed command of the 9th that the SCIMITAR is my ship to run. Since we agree on almost everything, there is really no difference between him and I when it comes to operations of this ship. Does that satisfy your question?"

"Yes sir!" Ne'Veha answered quickly.

"Good." Sa'sur answered. "Your squadron commanders will give you your assignments and a brief tour of the ship and landing bays. Commander Ne'Veha please hold a moment."

Ne'Veha sighed slightly as the three squadron commanders stepped forward and began ushering the pilots out of the briefing room. Sa'sur motioned her down closer to the first row and Ne'Veha grabbed her bags and complied.

"Captain?" She spoke as she moved up to her.

Sa'sur towered over her in height and this intimidated Ne'Veha slightly. "Sit down Commander." She spoke.

"I prefer to stand sir." Ne'Veha replied.

Sa'sur met her eyes and shrugged. "I understand you did not want to be assigned here Commander. Why is that?"

"I requested a planet based command Captain." Ne'Veha answered quickly. "The Elven Squadron on Apo Prime to be specific."

"Yes I know." Sa'sur said as she leaned against the podium. "I also know that your father tried to get some strings pulled for you as a member of the Elven Lower Parliament. That didn't work either. I've read your fitness reports Commander. All of them are excellent. Admiral Po'Tal thinks very highly of you."

"Thank you Captain." Ne'Veha spoke smugly, the arrogance in her voice dripping out even though she wasn't aware of it.

"Do you have an issue with Lycavorians Commander?" Sa'sur asked.

"Excuse me sir?" Ne'Veha spoke.

"You specifically asked for assignment to the Elven Squadron on Apo Prime." Sa'sur said. "Short of that, every other combat unit among your requests is commanded by elves. I'll ask again. Do you have an issue with Lycavorians Commander? It is well known that your parents do."

"I... no sir." Ne'Veha replied. "I don't believe I do. I do not care for many of their... of their practices... but no I do not have an issue with them as a whole."

Sa'sur shook her head slowly. "Your face tells me you are lying Commander, but I can't do anything about that. I don't know what has happened in your past to make you feel this way but that sort of attitude will not cut it on this ship. Almost all the squadron commanders on the SCIMITAR are Lycavorian, and the elf pilots we have follow them without question. I certainly hope you do not make waves."

"That is not my intention Captain." Ne'Veha spoke. "I am only here until other orders come through."

Sa'sur nodded. "Ah... about those other orders." She said with a smile. "None will be coming Commander Ne'Veha. You have been assigned to the SCIMITAR permanently. There will be no follow on orders. The powers that be decided that they needed your skills within a working fleet and not based from a planetary command. Nothing your father does will change that."

Ne'Veha's eyes went wide. "Captain... I was told this was only an interim posting." She stated. "Until something opened up within the elven squadron on Apo Prime."

Sa'sur nodded. "Yes I know. However... the Commander of that squadron does not want you posted to them. She made that known while you were enroute here. Your orders are final."

"May... May I ask why?" Ne'Veha spoke.

Sa'sur grinned. "She said you were a superior pilot... but she doesn't want a pilot with the baggage you seem to have when it concerns the Lycavorians. That squadron provides first response to the defense of Apo Prime Commander. She doesn't want a pilot who will stop and think about protecting a species she doesn't appear to like very much."

"Captain... that is not true!" Ne'Veha exclaimed.

Sa'sur held up her hand. "I don't want to hear about it." She stated. "I have a feeling on why you believe the way you do Commander but what you fail to realize, and something your parents apparently did not feel the need to pass on to you, is that whatever issues you have with Lycavorian males is not the norm. My husband is a Lycavorian and we have been mated for nearly four hundred years. He has never taken another mate, nor has he ever gone outside our marriage. We as a species owe our very existence to King Resumar and what he started. His grandson continues that tradition as does his great grandson. We are bound to them in a way the Hadarians and Algolians are not. And they to us. Do not let a few bad apples in your life sour your entire outlook of a species Commander.”

“With all due respect Captain... my private life is just that. Private... and not for anyone else’s knowledge. Why I feel the way I do is my business Captain.” Ne’Veha spoke firmly.

Sa’sur nodded. “Yes it is... I’m just letting you know don’t let it interfere with your duties Commander.” She stated. “Nearly half the crew on this ship is Lycavorian and all of us have been with Prince Androcles since he took command of the 9th. We have fought with him, eaten with him and wept with him over dead comrades. With every Lycavorian on this ship. Just be mindful of anything stupid that might blurt its way out of your mouth.”

“You don’t seem to care for me sir. If that is the case... why did you agree to have me assigned here?” Ne’Veha asked.

“Admiral Po’Tal is a friend and he said you needed guidance.” Sa’sur replied.

“I don’t intend to let my feelings interfere with my duties sir!” Ne’Veha stated. “You have my word on that.”

Sa’sur nodded. “We’ll see. Dismissed Commander.”

SODRAG

Background music: Never let go, Guardian Soundtrack

It was not something normally witnessed by others.

However, at this particular time, forty-two dragons watched as a rare bonding took place. Even Vollenth stood transfixed as the Lycavorian male slammed into Vincix’s exposed side and his shield disappeared completely. The roar of both of them was louder than any they had heard before, and they could only watch in fascination as Vincix withered on the ground, his rear legs twitching madly and his tail whipping back and forth. It smashed into the wall of the hanger several times, each time dropping more debris and dust down on top of him and Malic. Debris that wasn’t noticed by either of them. Malic also withered in what appeared to be supreme agony, whether from the pain of the blow from Vollenth’s tail or something else none of them knew. They could only watch as he turned slowly on top of Vincix’s body his limbs quivering noticeably, his deep blue eyes locked open in a position of what appeared to be horror, Vincix’s amethyst colored orbs matching that look in every way.

Images flashed through their minds, voices, places and events that neither of them had been too or seen ever before. They saw so much, they felt it filling every portion of their minds, as inexorably their combined awareness was expanding and intertwining and becoming one. They heard and felt so many new things on a level that was almost too much to comprehend. Their eyes blinked repeatedly and then focused on one another as Malic saw Vincix’s desire to become a member of Mjolnir’s Hand, yet how he was never able to because of his muscular deficiency. Vincix saw Malic’s desire, only to see it dashed aside by his lack of education and ability to understand higher functions and equations. They took from each other the sum total of their lives, sharing more of each other than they had ever shared with anyone before.

Then they gave back to each other in droves.

Into Malic poured Vincix’s knowledge of things, his blue eyes wide as equations and calculations raced through his mind. Things he never understood before passed to him and comprehension became his brother’s gift to him. Into Vincix poured the indomitable will and strength of body that Malic possessed, and even as they lay there touching, Vincix could feel the muscles on his hind legs grow and expand and strengthen to what they never had been before. They felt power sweeping through them, the power to right wrongs and defend what they so cared for in their lives. The Union, their brother and sister dragons and riders, and all those they considered family. As that power swept through them, the light blue psychic shield activated. Malic lifted one hand from where it rested on Vincix’s scaled side and he watched amazed as the shield extended and spread up his arm, tingling as it lifted to surround his shoulder and slowly move down his back. He looked down and watched as the psychic shield extended over Vincix's long muscular body, encompassing first his front legs and talons and spreading across his hind quarters and tail.

Malic lifted his eyes to Vincix's amethyst orbs and tilted his head slightly. My... my bonded... my bonded brother Vincix. His voice filled Vincix's head in almost a whisper.

My bonded... my bonded brother Malic. Vincix's voice burst into Malic's head with a whisper, but for Malic it was like the first sound he had heard after being deaf for so many years. Whatever pain Malic may have been experiencing vanished with those four words. All the shame he had felt growing up, all the empty words of love spoken to him by his parents and siblings, all of that simply disappeared into the mist that was their combined pasts.

Enough of this! Vollenth's voice shouted out within Mindvoice. Let's finish this Vincix! I'm not done showing you what I have learned!

One set of amethyst colored eyes and one set of deep ocean blue eyes slowly turned and looked upon Vollenth. In those eyes were the combined experiences and knowledge of three hundred bonded pairs. The combined commitment and shared faithfulness of six hundred minds and hearts.

Vollenth never really stood a chance.

Malic's Shi Viska flared into existence once more and was launching before it had fully formed, something he had never been able to accomplish before. No blades extended on the shield, but it rammed into Vollenth's armored scales directly over the bone connecting his front right foreleg to his shoulder with power of a point blank cannon shot. Malic slowed the velocity a millisecond before impact and Vollenth bellowed in agony as the edge of the shield impacted on the nerve bundle there. All feeling in his right leg disappeared immediately and he staggered forward, unable to support his weight. As he toppled forward, the silvery purple tail lashed out with wicked swiftness, far faster than Vollenth could follow. The near solid purple tip slapped into the side of his snout with a crack that echoed across the hanger. Vollenth's body was hurtling through the air then, flailing wildly until he too slammed into the side of the hanger wall. The grunt of pain that erupted from his snout was easy enough to ascertain as pieces of the wall dropped on him, granite powder showering his yellow green scales.

You have learned nothing fool! Vincix bellowed within Mindvoice as he rose to his feet now, moving up to stand behind Malic just as his shield returned to his arm. Come Vollenth! My bonded brother and I await you!

Vollenth roared in savage fury and came off the ground like a shot. He gave a mighty beat of his wings and was upon them in a flash. Just as he came within range to snag Malic's unmoving form with his talons, Vincix's left wing cracked forward with blinding speed and smashed into his muzzle with absurd force. Vollenth felt the skin along the lips of his mouth split painfully just as Malic lifted his shield, facing the frontage towards him. There was a fleeting flash of TK power and then the immense wave of shared Mindvoice TK power from both Malic and Vincix erupted from the front of his Shi Viska. The TK power wave took out Vollenth's front legs before he had a chance to recover and his collective forward momentum and the force of Vincix's blow sent him careening sideways, his neck and snout coming down with brutal force and impacting the hard packed dirt floor of the hanger.

The cloud of dust and dirt rose into the air directly towards where Adriana stood frozen in shock and unthinkable horror at what she was witnessing. Malic's eyes grew wide as he realized this and he began to move forward with no thought except to save his sister. He needn't have bothered as Anthar and Deneth appeared from the dust cloud, imposing their huge bodies between her and Vollenth's skidding form. Adriana blinked twice as the cerise red scales and the black and white scales of the two dragons blocked her view, and provided a wall of armored scales that Vollenth would not penetrate. His head and neck slammed into Anthar and Deneth's front forelegs and that is where he stopped as their combined seven tons ceased his body's forward motion as if he had impacted a wall.

Cease this Vollenth! Anthar demanded.

You can not win! Do you not understand what you face now! Deneth barked out.

Vollenth staggered as he came to his feet, shaking his head back and forth trying to clear his mind. He can not beat me alone! Vollenth screamed out.

He does not fight alone you fool! Not anymore! Anthar screamed out.

What do you speak? Vollenth snarled as he gathered his legs under him, his blood dripping on the ground beneath him.

He means that a Bonded Pair of Mjolnir's Hand never fights alone! The new voice joined them. If you fight one of us... you fight all of us!

All of them turned to see Androcles and Elynth move into the hanger from the wide open hanger door. The power radiating from them was a brilliant beacon and it rippled with barely controlled domination, the setting sun in the background only adding to the image the Coven dragons saw.

Anthar snapped his head around and looked at Adriana with his magenta eyes. Climb onto my back now little one! He screamed out as loud as he could within Mindvoice hoping that she was strong enough to understand him.

Adriana winced at the power of the command and without hesitation she stepped up onto his front foreleg and climbed onto his back as he and Deneth quickly backed up out of the way. Adriana was considered only a Tier Four Mindvoicer, but the dragon's voice had filled her head almost as if someone was shouting in her ear, and she knew well the voice of command. What is happening to my brother? She screamed out to the strange dragon.

Deneth brought his head forward and saw her blue eyes turn to look at him with stunned surprise as his soothing voice filled her head. Your brother and Vincix have bonded little one. He spoke gently. They have become one... in more complete a way than any of us have ever experienced.

Adriana turned back to where Malic stood proudly, his Shi Viska poised and humming on his arm, the huge head and silvery/purple scales of the dragon he had called Vincix hovering inches from his left shoulder as she watched who she knew was Prince Androcles step up beside her brother, the obsidian black dragon just to his right side. Her eyes were wide as she watched what was transpiring. They... they have become bonded? She gasped.

Andro looked at Vollenth as he stood only five meters away. I warned you Vollenth! I warned you! You have attacked a member of Mjolnir's Hand! His voice was angry and all of them knew it. Yuri's hate has warped you Vollenth! You are not meant for her! You are meant for someone else! And that festering bond she has forced upon you ends right now!

Elynth let out a trumpet of anger that echoed within the hanger and she moved without hesitation. She launched herself into a spin that none of the Coven dragons had ever witnessed one of their kind execute before, swinging her near four metric tons around with the grace of a ballet dancer. Her smaller but no less deadly mace like Heavyhorn tail cracked into Vollenth's muzzle before he knew he was under attack. As his head and neck snapped around with vicious force, Vincix was moving and sweeping his tail forward, crashing into both of Vollenth's right legs. Malic unleashed another staggering TK push that toppled Vollenth over onto his side, kicking and trumpeting in surprise and pain even as Andro was already moving.

He sprinted directly at Elynth, leaped against her tail just as she was bringing it forward again and pushed off with his powerful legs in a leap directly at Vollenth's struggling form. The psychic knife extended nearly eight inches from his right hand as he sailed through the air and landed on Vollenth's neck just as he was raising his head. Andro wrapped his arms and legs around Vollenth's thick neck, unable to fully embrace his muscular neck but digging the heels of his boots into whatever he could. He looked into Vollenth's dazed and very confused eyes for a just a single split second.

I'm sorry brother. Andro spoke the words before plunging the psychic knife into the base of Vollenth's huge skull.

Vollenth's yellow eyes opened wide in agony and he made to lift his foreleg to shred Androcles from his neck. He never got his talons off the ground as Elynth's front legs came down on his and pinned them to the floor of the hanger.

Andro leaned his head close to Vollenth's muzzle, unafraid of the flesh shredding teeth, twisting his fist and plunging the psychic knife deeper into Vollenth's large brain. Be at peace Vollenth. He spoke softly. I will free you this day to find your true path brother. You were meant for someone else Vollenth. You were always meant for someone else. The Dragon Elders have felt this and I will free you to find that rider Vollenth. The one who will be your true brother or sister. And then you will know calm and happiness.

Andro clenched his teeth and twisted his hand forcefully. Vollenth's final wail filled the hanger before his head dropped to the dirt and he was still. His yellow eyes fluttered for a few seconds before they closed slowly and he was quiet. Andro waited a few moments, closing his own eyes and channeling his and Elynth's combined power as Talon Guardians, searching for that link within Vollenth's mind. They found it easy enough, a dark sickly looking thread of Mindvoice power twisted with hate and evil, and Andro didn't hesitate. Like a skilled surgeon Andro used his psychic knife to sever that connection completely, effectively terminating the bond Yuri had forced on Vollenth, while throwing up incredibly powerful Mindvoice shields to protect him from Yuri trying to re-establish the bond.

Andro opened his eyes once more and as he gradually withdrew the psychic knife from Vollenth's head, the Coven dragons gasping collectively within Mindvoice. There was no blood, no wound, yet Vollenth lay as still as death itself. The only sign that he still lived was the slow rise and fall of his massive chest as he breathed. Andro got to his feet slowly, stepping away from Vollenth's inert form even as the Coven dragons closed in increasingly around them. All of them saw the psychic knife flare briefly and then disappear altogether.

Elynth moved close to Androcles, brushing her snout against his shoulder affectionately. It had to be done my brother. Her gentle voice filled his head even as his anger surged within him and then began to recede.

He looked up as Adriana dropped from Anthar's back and raced into Malic's arms. He crushed his sister to him as Vincix moved closer to his newly bonded brother. Andro turned and saw the Coven dragons closing in around them. He is your brother. Andro said softly looking at them. He is still one of you and he was forced onto this path. All of your bonds were allowed to begin naturally and grow, while Princess Yuri forced hers onto Vollenth. I have cut their bond. It no longer exists. A ship is coming to take him where he can heal and know peace. You must protect him until that happens. Shield him from Yuri trying to re-establish their bond. Only you can do this. All of you must stand watch over him.

You said... you said he was meant for someone else Androcles Leonidas. Deneth spoke softly as he moved forward.

Andro nodded slowly and looked at him. The Elders suspected as much. That is why Yuri's bond was twisting him so much, and it is the only reason why Elynth and I were able to render the connection. It is not something done to those such as us, those who have developed these bonds freely.

Who is... who is he meant for? Anthar asked.

Andro looked at him and shook his head. That is not known. Only time will answer that question. He is still your brother dragon, and no matter his past actions, now he needs your protection. These years and what Yuri has done to him have not been kind. He will be able to feel all of you watching over him, and that is what he needs right now. To know that no matter the past, all of you still stand with him. We have a plan to protect and guide him... but we need you to help in that plan.

Elynth's golden eyes filled with passion and desire as she watched Anthar settle to the ground first, placing his front foreleg on Vollenth's rear leg gently, his talons looking as if they could open his scales easily.

I will stay with you brother. He spoke softly.

Deneth was next as he settled to the ground. As will I.

They watched as the remaining dragons gathered closer and began settling to the ground around Vollenth's inert form. Andro nodded his head slowly and turned to look at Malic, who was still hugging his sister tightly. He and Elynth stepped away from where the Coven dragons were slowly surrounding Vollenth's form. Even Marux, Naruth and Seyra were not questioning what was happening and Andro could not detect them attempting to advise Yuri's children of what had taken place. They were joining in the powerful wall of Mindvoice power that was slowly wrapping around Vollenth in a protective embrace, shielding his mind from the outside world and all who would do him harm.

Malic turned as Andro moved up to them. He pushed his sister back slightly, but kept one arm around her waist.

"Milord... I..." He stammered.

Andro shook his head. "Do not thank me Malic." He spoke. "This was meant to be. You and Vincix were meant to be."

You... you knew sire. Vincix spoke now moving closer. That is why you bade me to come here with you.

"I suspected yes. Elynth and the Elder Mother agreed." Andro spoke nodding his head. He looked at Malic. "There will be a ceremony of sorts in three days Malic. You brought your sister here to help you learn what you needed to learn. Now you have two teachers. You are relieved of your duties until three days from now. Take this time to learn of each other, and conduct whatever teachings your sister can pass on to you. You will still need to take your exams Malic... but now you will have the same chance as the rest of us did. She can remain here as long as you need her too. After the ceremony I will expect you to resume your normal duties and continue to build your bond with Vincix.”

“Milord... sire... am I...” Malic hesitated unable to ask the question.

Elynth stepped forward now, her golden eyes bright as she pressed her snout to the top of Malic’s head. Yes. Welcome to our Sacred Circle brother Malic and brother Vincix, for you are now members of Mjolnir’s Hand. She spoke the words. And our circle is complete once more.

Malic knew Elynth almost never spoke below a Tier Six level, and hearing her voice fill his mind so easily and with such clarity was all the proof that Malic needed to tell him this was no dream.

“I will not fail you Milord!” Malic spoke with determination as he drew himself up to his full height, small tears forming in his eyes.

Nor will I. Vincix echoed.

Andro nodded. “I never doubted that you would.” He took a deep breath. “I must go deal with Yuri... but there is a secluded waterfall twenty-two kilometers from here due east. Elynth and I go there often to think clearly and be alone. It will be a good place for you to begin to know each other. Remain off the base during the day, at least until after the ceremony and Yuri has left, as you will not need the distractions. It will also avoid confrontations and unneeded questions until after what has happened here is revealed to everyone. My Uncle Isra will join you there tomorrow, for I feel he will prepare to leave Sparta and come here to be with you even now.”

Malic nodded. “As you order sire.”

Andro looked at Adriana who clung to her brother’s arm and he smiled. “I apologize for all the excitement.” He spoke. “Our days here are not usually filled with so much invigorating action.”

Adriana chuckled as she squeezed Malic’s arm. “I think I am used to it now, considering who my brother is.” She said looking at him with blue eyes filled with pride.

Andro nodded and stepped up close to Malic. “Welcome to our world Malic.” He said softly looking at him.

Malic looked into those azure blue eyes. “Milord... sire... when did you...?”

Andro smiled. “The moment you came onto my ship.” He answered. “And I expect you to use this as the stepping stone to achieve what else you want Malic.”

Malic’s eyes looked puzzled. “Sire?”

Andro chuckled and tapped his shoulder lightly. “You will figure it out sooner or later.” He answered. “Just know... I approve.”

[I certainly hope this works Arzoal.] Andro spoke softly to Arzoal as he crossed the quad moving for the REC center. The sun was just below the trees now and the shadows danced across the ground he covered in long, confident strides. [My father will not be happy that we went about it this way, you do realize that? Especially if we can’t pull it off.]

[Your father is a Talon Guardian just as you are Androcles Leonidas.] Arzoal’s voice filled his mind from the TYPE II that was currently sitting on the airfield by the hanger. Her eyes were mindful of everything as Vollenth’s inert form was gently loaded on the hover platform and was being ushered up the ramp, under the ever watchful eyes of the Coven dragons. [As King he may not approve of our actions, but as a Talon Guardian he will no doubt agree. It needed to be done.]

[I know.] Andro replied as he slowed his pace. [Can you and the other elders heal him?]

[You and my granddaughter severed the connection cleanly.] Arzoal replied. [We can feel the corrupting threads within Mindvoice even now shriveling up. Her hold on him was tenuous at best. He was fighting it Androcles, because a part of his mind knew he was meant for someone else, and that is why he appeared so violent to others. When he wakes, he will have around him those who had given up hope and now feel reborn. That is your gift to Vollenth Androcles. The gift you and my granddaughter have given him.]

[Do you know who is he meant for Arzoal?] Andro asked.

[Even we do not possess that skill young Androcles.] She replied. [The only reason you were able to detect the potential in Malic was because it was buried falsely due to the actions of his parents and it was fighting to find its way out. As with Vincix, that power can not long be contained if it really is meant to be. With

Vincix and Malic... it was destiny they come together in the grand scheme of things. For Vollenth... all we know is that the one he is meant for is already alive. They will find each other when fate and destiny decrees it.]

[Have you told Dalah?] He questioned.

[No. She will be beside herself and want to come here immediately. They must have the three days they need to fully come together as a Bonded Pair.] Arzoal chuckled softly within the connection. [When your father and I first formed Mjolnir's Hand, we had no idea the strength and influence that would grow within the three hundred Pairs Andro. The bond that all of you share is far beyond anything we ever envisioned and that is why the members of Mjolnir's Hand are the strongest of all the Bonded Pairs, and why they are able to do so much more. Malic and Vincix were meant to be part of that, and I surmise that Vincix only failed before because he had not yet found Malic.]

[She will undoubtedly attempt to re-establish the connection when she discovers what we have done.] Andro spoke. [Make sure you take him directly to Dragon Mountain and get him under cover of the shields there. We only have to pull this off for perhaps twenty-four hours. Can he do it?]

[That she has not appeared already tells me the bond was not natural and forced upon him.] Arzoal spoke. [Otherwise she would have come running the moment you began to do battle with him. He can do it. All of them have agreed to assist if need be. Even Marux and Naruth. They have not left his side with Anthar and Deneth.]

[Good. They may be bonded to riders they do not care for, but at least they are strong enough to resist the natural tendency to take on each other's traits.] Andro answered. [Can Elder Daurgo assume Vincix's role until after the ceremony?]

[He is already boarding his DT to come to your location.] Arzoal answered.

Andro nodded. [Father already intends to make Yuri return with him and the Empress to insure the Kavalians do not become suspicious. Without the distraction Vollenth and Yuri provided they can concentrate more on what they are here to learn.] He said. [It will be easier for them to absorb and focus on their tasks. And it will give Vollenth a little of the time he needs to heal from her abuse of him.]

[We will care for and heal Vollenth.] Arzoal spoke. [I will send Elynth back when we have finished loading his platform. You can deal with Yuri yes?]

[Considering the shields we have thrown up and her forced bond with Vollenth, I doubt she is even aware of what has happened.] Andro answered. [As long as Visio can pull it off... we will be alright.]

[He knows the risks and he is ready.] Arzoal answered. [They have longed for this day Androcles Leonidas, a day they never thought would come to pass. The remaining Elders are ready if you and Elynth feel the need to draw power from them.] Arzoal said.

[We'll be ok.] Andro spoke stopping just outside the entrance to the REC center. [Once she is gone tomorrow... we'll be good.]

[I will see you again in three days then. We are securing the ramp. I carry the thanks and blessings of seven souls to you and Elynth Androcles Leonidas.] Arzoal said. [Your actions this day will not be forgotten. You have spared when you could have taken as a Talon Guardian and that is a debt that can never be repaid.]

[There is no debt to pay.] Andro answered. [Dragons are just as much my brothers and sisters as my own blood. That is one of the things my bond with Elynth has taught me. Go with the gods Elder Mother.]

[And you son of our King.]

Andro looked at the door and took a deep breath. "Here we go." He said softly.

Yuri looked up from the table she sat at with her three children in the REC center, a small smile on her face from something Lucia had said. Many of the riders and other personnel had already moved to the mess lounge for dinner. Yuri looked up right into Androcles's bright blue azure colored eyes.

"There is something you want I take it." She spoke formally but the distaste for him in her tone easy enough to hear and feel.

"I have received word from my father and your mother." Andro spoke. "They will be here tomorrow to inspect and observe how things are progressing. You will need to return with your mother to Sparta when they depart. Vollenth must remain here however."

Yuri's eyes narrowed. "What? For what purpose?"

“It is my understanding the KFI knows where you have been training your dragons on Usu Ozeib 7.” Andro stated. “They are also aware that you are now here on Earth. It would be very hard to explain to them why you are here with your dragon Princess Yuri. My father and your mother agree it is better if you return and be seen with her going through the process of the Cease Fire Accords. If you do not they will suspect something. If you return and go back with Vollenth they will become suspicious as well and that will only lead them to one conclusion. That the rest of your dragons are here as well.”

“If you think I will leave Vollenth here among you and the others you are strongly mistaken Androcles Leonidas.” Yuri snapped.

Andro stepped forward closer, looking at her intently. “Vollenth will continue to learn with the others Princess Yuri. And do not think for an instant to fool me with your false concern for Vollenth.” He stated harshly. “Your bond with him is a forced thing... not natural like the others. That you are sitting here and not with him right now as he is being treated tells me that more than anything.”

Yuri’s eyes narrowed. “What do you mean treated?” She asked getting to her feet.

“He picked a fight with Vincix, the dragon instructor, and he was soundly defeated.” Andro spoke. “Eliani is treating him as we speak. His ego is bruised but he is not talking to anyone at the moment. That you did not sense this in him is all the information I need to know about your ‘bond’ with Vollenth Princess.”

“You do not need to know anything son of Leonidas!” Yuri hissed.

“Why is it you feel the need to turn him into someone as twisted as you?” Andro asked softly. “Why is it you hate my father so much? Hate my people so much?”

“Your father is not as innocent as you believe him to be!” Yuri barked. “He is no better than the rest of your barbaric animal race.”

Andro tilted his head. “I imagine you are referring to the belief that my father raped you many years ago.” He spoke pulling the small data pad from his belt.

“It is no belief!” Yuri snarled. “It is a fact! Your precious father committed one of the vilest crimes among your people! And now he sits as King!”

Andro held up the pad. “From your mother.” He spoke tossing the pad onto the table. “I think you should read it Princess. It will undoubtedly enlighten you more than you already are. My father didn’t rape you Princess Yuri... Pleistarchus did. Lisisa is not my father’s daughter... she is his brother’s daughter.”

Yuri laughed heartily. “Oh that’s a good one.” She barked out. “As if I would actually believe that. Blame his brother... how quaint!”

“Your mother has seen the medical data.” Andro spoke. “Perhaps you should look at it as well. Not to mention that the Kavalians are demanding to see Lisisa, who they apparently deem a Kavalian citizen now because of who her father is.”

“I don’t need to look at some forged medical data by the Hadarian witch you call mother! I was the one who was raped! I know who raped me!” Yuri snarled. “My mother would not believe anything that you or anyone connected to your father presented to her! And I hold the Kavalians in even worse regard than I do you and your people!”

Andro tilted his head to the side as he looked at her. “Yet you are here now.”

“This trip was not my idea!” Yuri told him.

“Does your attitude imply that we should not believe anything you present to us as well?” He asked. “To include the intelligence you gave to us when you first arrived?”

“That is... that is different!” Yuri snapped knowing she had come very close to outright saying they had ulterior motives for coming here. “The Kavalians are the bigger threat to both of us!”

“Yes... so you and your mother said when you first arrived.” Andro spoke. “Believe what you will Princess. Your mother will tell you herself when she arrives tomorrow no doubt.”

“Mother...” Lucia spoke looking up from the table and holding the pad. “Mother... this has grandmother’s personal code on it.” She stated.

Yuri turned to look at her holding out her hand. “Impossible.” She said as Lucia placed the data pad in her hand. She lifted it and began reading, her eyes growing wider as she did.

Andro smiled. “Enlightening don’t you think?” He said. “I suggest you say your goodbyes to Vollenth tonight Princess. They will only be here a few hours tomorrow and per your mother’s own directives, you are returning with her. When you return in three or four weeks after the Accord is signed, he will be here. Better trained and no doubt basking in the hatred you have bestowed upon him.”

Yuri’s eyes came up quickly from the pad and glared at him. “Do not press me too hard Androcles Leonidas! You think too highly of your skills. We may be equal in terms of power... but I have far more years of experience than you do.”

Andro smiled. “You are entitled to believe what you wish Yuri.” He spoke confidently, not using her title of Princess for the first time since she had arrived here. “I would not be so quick to anoint yourself the replacement for your mother just yet however.”

“You are an idealistic child!” Yuri snapped. “And in the end no match for what I could bring to bear. Do you think your little parlor tricks scare me as they scare Thast and the others?”

Andro chuckled softly. “To be honest Princess... part of your problem is that you don’t believe in anything besides your own false sense of superiority. Like your mother you believe you are always right. That attitude, more often than not, leads to incorrect assumptions and orders that get others killed. What exactly does that make you Yuri?” He asked.

[Andro my brother... what are you doing?] Elynth’s voice filled his head. [Why are you making her angry?]

[If it keeps her from discovering what we have done for a while longer than we had planned... having her angry is good.] Andro said with some small humor. [My father always said she had anger issues. Apparently he was right.]

[Do we want her anger directed at you though?] Elynth asked.

[Better me than someone else sister.] Andro answered. [At least until she leaves. Once she is gone from SODRAG we can proceed with the rest of the plan and insure she does not return.]

“You have no idea of what you are speaking about!” Yuri snapped.

“Don’t I?” Andro asked.

“Where is Vollenh?” Yuri demanded after a moment.

Andro motioned towards the door. “Eliani just finished treating him. He should be back at his pen by now. That is where I instructed him to go.”

Yuri tossed the pad back at him. “All of this could be faked.” She snapped. “And I will believe nothing from you until I am able to speak with my mother. I do not trust you any more than I trust your pig father!”

Andro shrugged. “As you wish.” He stated as Yuri pushed past him, followed rapidly by Dante, and Lucia. Dante glared at him with evil intent as he moved past but said nothing. Andro chuckled and turned, following them to the door and stepping outside the entrance. He watched as they made their way towards the Bungalows and dragon pens.

[Prepare yourself Visio. She is coming.] He spoke.

[I am ready.] Was the immediate answer.

[Can you do this Visio?]

[You and Elynth have given me back my brother. You have given our parents back the son they lost so long ago. I will do this!]

[Draw whatever you need from Elynth and I Visio. And good luck.]

KRANEK

Normya’s emerald green eyes watched with some surprise as the huge burnt bronze skinned Immortal lifted Esther into his arms as if she was a feather and they shared a kiss of simmering passion similar to what she had seen her father and mothers share. Normya now saw where Tir’ut got his height and build from. Cha’talla was easily six and a half feet tall and even wider than her father in terms of muscular definition. Though he had no hair, all of his skin was an even color and quite unlike the grayish pallor of purebloods like T’lolt and Fash’ka. The bone spikes were filed down to nubs, but still very noticeable, his eyes still small and somewhat sunken, but beyond that he was no different than some of the other strange species she had seen growing up.

Except for the fact he was an Immortal.

And not just any simple Immortal, but the once feared personal Captain to the now dead Vampire High Lord Veldruk. He was believed to have killed well over a thousand Lycavorians alone, his combat skills nearly unmatched even among the many instructors Normya had been under at the academy. It was also rumored that he had fought her grandfather on Earth over three thousand years ago at Thermopylae. Yet what she saw before her right now was not a feared Immortal Captain... but a very happy husband who held his pureblood vampire wife tightly.

Esther broke their heated kiss reluctantly and rubbed her cheek against Cha'talla's, while her hands held his head. "Oh I have missed you husband." She said softly in his ear.

Cha'talla's dark eyes smiled and he met her eyes. "We must talk about these trading trips you take." He stated softly. "Our bed is unusually large and empty when you are not in it. I often times end up sleeping in the main room."

Esther grinned at him. "Well I am home now. No more main room for you my husband."

Cha'talla lowered her to the ground gently, pressing his forehead to the top of her head and squeezing her lithe body against his. "Welcome home Blessed Wife." He said softly.

Esther smiled at his arms around her and placed her hands on his arms. "Cha'talla... may I present Princess Normya Leonidas." She spoke turning to motion to Normya who rested quite comfortably in Tir'ut's arms.

Cha'talla stepped up to stand in front of his son, his dark eyes on Normya. He saw her arm tighten almost imperceptibly around Tir'ut's neck and shoulders, and he allowed the smile to split his face, revealing his vampiric fangs. "To say that it is an honor to meet you would be an understatement I think daughter to King Leonidas." He spoke finally. "But know that in this particular circumstance, I am very happy my wife and son disobeyed my directives to not get involved." He held out his right hand to her with his palm held upwards. "I am Cha'talla."

Normya looked at his hand for a moment before reaching forward and placing her much smaller hand against his open palm. "Hello." She said softly unable to think of anything else to say.

Cha'talla covered her hand with his left one and lowered his forehead to touch their joined hands. "I understand my son and brother have declared an Iglata d'Vlos in regards to your protection. Something I will gladly take up now as well. Are you injured?"

"Il kal'daka darthirii's leg is almost healed father." Tir'ut answered. "I carried her to keep the little ones from toppling her in case they came to meet us as well."

Cha'talla looked at his son for a moment when he spoke and then he nodded his head and turned back to Normya. "A good thing too... they are waiting outside the port entrance." He spoke with a grin, once more surprising Normya. "I have been in contact with your mother Normya Leonidas. Her ship will arrive here in just under 36 hours. It appears your DTs are much faster than many people think."

Normya nodded slowly. "Just a little." She said.

Cha'talla looked at her and saw the indecision and fear in her emerald eyes. It was not as prominent as he first thought it might be, but neither did he expect her to cling to his son so tightly. "I know what is spoken of me and my people Normya Leonidas." He told her softly. "And while that may still apply to those who serve the cursed High Coven and Empress Aikiro, it does not extend to my people here. We have fully broken from the old ways and we have begun something new here on Kranek. You need not fear for yourself while you are here child. Technically, because my son has sworn a Promise of Blood towards you, you are now part of our tribe and my clan. If a threat does somehow manage to get past Tir'ut here... they will face all of us as well." He stepped closer to her and noticed she did not push back against Tir'ut as much as he thought she might. That showed Cha'talla she was a brave and strong willed young woman. "Would you allow me to show you as I will show your mother when she arrives. I am very proud of what we have built. I think... I think your father would approve. At least that is my wish."

Normya nodded unable to find the right words to use and she saw Cha'talla smile once more. "Ok." She said finally.

Cha'talla motioned for the dual doors near the hanger entrance. "This way." He spoke.

Normya was silent as Tir'ut carried her behind his father and Esther. When they reached the doors, they slid open automatically and bright sunlight bathed them as they stepped onto the large grated catwalk. Normya lifted her hand to shield her eyes quickly only to feel her heart rate increase at what she saw. Stretched before her eyes was a massive settlement, parts of it soaring tall above the surrounding tress. Most of the buildings were circular in construction, and she realized they were quite high up above the majority of the settlement. She could see towering mountain peaks and lush green forests all around them. Pedestrian bridges spanned between many of the buildings at different levels, and she could see Immortals and several other species walking the hard packed earth of the ground far below and along those same bridges. Children were racing back and forth on the ground below, and she could hear animals baying and barking in the distance.

She looked at Cha'talla then and the stunned look in her eyes made him very happy. He motioned to half a dozen men and women who stood to the side of the large platform and Normya's eyes grew even larger when she saw the male and female elf.

"This is our small ruling council." Cha'talla spoke. "I brought our School Master and the Blessed Wife of..."

Normya watched as the dark haired female elf's eyes grew wider when the dual doors to the port opened once more and a dozen of T'lolt's men exited. She let out a happy squeal and darted from where she stood to throw herself into the arms of the huge pure Immortal soldier. Normya watched them stunned as they shared a similar kiss to what Esther and Cha'talla had shared, the Immortal spinning her around several times as he held her in his arms.

"Forgive Erli'ra's reaction." The male voice said. Normya turned her head quickly and saw it was the distinguished looking male elf who spoke. "It is the first trip away for Na'Thu since the birth of his and Erli'ra's daughter six weeks ago. She has missed him." He held out his hand to her. "I am Illiad... the settlement's School Master as Cha'talla has said. Welcome."

"You... you and she are elves." Normya said softly taking his offered hand.

The man laughed softly. "Indeed we are. Two of almost a dozen that call this settlement our home. That does not include the children mind you." He replied. "Erli'ra sits on our council as Cha'talla has said... though you wouldn't know it from her actions right now!" He spoke sternly. "She still acts as she did the first days after they were married!"

Normya turned and watched The Immortal set the young elf down. She clung to his thick arm as she turned to look at them. "Hush papa!" She admonished as she pulled Na'Thu towards him. Normya watched as Illiad and this Na'Thu embraced in the same affectionate manner as she had seen her father and grandfather L'tian do so very often.

"It is good to see you return safely Na'Thu." Illiad spoke with warmth in his voice.

"It is good to be home darthirii ilharn." He answered. (Elf father)

Erli'ra looked at Normya. "It is an honor to meet you Princess." She stated. "I welcome you to our settlement."

Normya looked at the woman, estimating her age at four to five hundred years old by her scent. "I am... I am..."

Erli'ra laughed gently. "Lost for words it seems." She said. "Tir'ut... put her down by the gods; we can barely see her face because you inherited your father's height."

"I did not want to little ones knocking into her legs." Tir'ut spoke quickly.

Erli'ra looked at him oddly for a moment and then her blue eyes twinkled. "They want to tackle and climb on you Tir'ut... you are the oversized bear among us... not this child. Now put her down. We won't injure her."

They watched as reluctantly Tir'ut lowered Normya to the steel grate deck on the catwalk and almost everyone saw the reluctant way in which Normya unfurled her arm from around his neck and shoulders. She looked up at him over her shoulder for a moment, marveling at his size and how he towered over her, yet handled her with gentleness and grace. She turned back to Erli'ra and Illiad and found she was face to face with them now. They also found she still wore the fatigue jacket Tir'ut had given her, securing it even more around her waist with a length of leather she had found on the G9.

"There... that is much better." Erli'ra spoke as she took Normya's hands in hers. "Gods child... you are the mirror image of your mother."

"You know my mother?" Normya gasped.

Erli'ra shook her head. "Not personally no... but I have seen enough of her images and broadcasts to know that you look exactly like her."

“Erli’ra... there is an open apartment in the west quad yes?” Esther asked.

“There certainly is.” Erli’ra replied brightly. “Not two doors down from my own.”

“Why don’t we get Normya settled in there and then we can gather at the main dining hall and talk some more.” Esther said stepped up and taking Normya’s hand. “I’m sure there are some things she can tell about what has taken place on Elear since you left.”

“An excellent idea.” Erli’ra spoke taking Normya’s other hand. “It isn’t far... are you up to walking?”

Normya nodded. “Yes. I’ve rested for far too long.”

“Oh I like her.” Erli’ra said. “Busting to go and do things... just like your mother.” She drew her in tightly next to her between Esther and herself and they began to walk. “I will tell you some stories you wouldn’t believe child. And it will be very good to see our elven Queen when she arrives.”

Cha’talla stepped up to his son as Illiad moved closer as well. They turned as T’lolt left the inside of the port now and walked up to their small group. “Gareld my son?” Cha’talla asked.

Tir’ut looked at him. “He ran like a coward the moment uncle T’lolt de-shrouded in orbit.” He answered.

“Once we entered the atmosphere we lost our track on him.” T’lolt spoke. “His ship is a Bontawillian Low Gravity Frigate. Shouldn’t be too hard to find an old bucket like that even in The Wilds.”

Cha’talla nodded. “You say he was waiting for her?”

Tir’ut nodded. “Yes father. Just inside the nebula. The moment her damaged ship crossed the border he moved in. Two of his boarding craft attached but Il kal'daka darthirii and her co-pilot fought them off. She vented the rest of them into space.”

Cha’talla’s eyes grew a little wider at this and he nodded. “Excellent. I like this young woman more and more as the minutes pass.”

“She is half wolf we must remember.” Illiad spoke. “She will no doubt have that killer instinct within her as she displayed with Gareld’s men. I will put out word to our contacts Cha’talla and try to discover if this ship has appeared anywhere in the last few days.”

Cha’talla nodded. “Even though you were able to shroud... he will eventually figure out where we have gone.” He said. “There are not many habitable planets within range of our G9s from Yocetu. He will come here to Kranek sooner or later.”

“Then we should make sure we are ready when he does.” Illiad spoke. He looked at Cha’talla. “And give him a proper tribal welcome.”

He was a two thousand year old elf male that had seen much in his life. When they had been rescued from the slavers by Cha’talla and his men, it had been too late to save his wife of a thousand years, but they were able to save Erli’ra his daughter along with him. Illiad had elected to remain with Cha’talla and his tribe, partly to escape the sorrow of losing his wife, and partly because these Immortals had risked death and injury to save him and the others with no thought of reward. Within a year of coming here he found them to be completely unlike any Immortals he had ever heard about, and when Erli’ra announced she was in love and going to marry an Immortal, Illiad had barely blinked an eye. They had chosen to remain here freely and had been accepted by all the Immortals on Kranek. When Cha’talla had asked him to become School Master Illiad had jumped at the chance and never looked back.

Cha’talla grinned at Illiad. He had leaned heavily on this man in the past decade, and discovered a fast and faithful friend and tribe member. “Indeed.” He said. “Tir’ut... she is your Il kal'daka darthirii. Insure your gear is stowed and then make sure she has everything she needs. Your mother will insure this no doubt... but it is our way.”

Tir’ut nodded. “Yes father.”

“Iliad... T’lolt... let’s meet in the control bunker and insure our defenses and sensors are operating at peak efficiency.” Cha’talla spoke. “No sense in getting caught off guard now. Especially not with the daughter of King Leonidas among us and her mother to follow shortly.”

“It was the right decision Cha’talla.” T’lolt spoke. “Tir’ut and Esther made the right choice.”

Cha’talla nodded. “The more time that passes... the more I come to realize that.” He spoke. “That is why we will be ready.”

“Ready for what?” Illiad asked.

“You once said that wherever a Leonidas tread, trouble usually followed.” Cha’talla spoke.

Illiad nodded slowly. "I did say that didn't I?" He spoke with a smile. "And it's very true apparently."

Cha'talla nodded. "Considering that we will have his first elven wife and half elven daughter both among us shortly, I do not plan on anything happening to them while they are in our charge." He said. "As T'lolt has reminded me... it is a matter of honor now. And honor is not something we will dismiss."

GYTHEIO

"You do not have to do this Lisi." Martin spoke looking at her as she finished buckling her harness and holster around her slim waist.

Lisisa looked at him as she secured the Velcro fastener around her thigh, holding her K12 KM to her right thigh and her Nehtes to her left. Her Mark IV ArmorPly, like her father and Denali's now sported the crimson painted shoulders signifying to all that she was a member of Mjolnir's Hand and their number had once more reached three hundred. Her raven hair was pulled into a loose pony tail as was usually the case and draped over one shoulder. Lisisa let her eyes linger on him for a long moment as the last two days flashed across her memories. Taking a deep breath she could smell Denali's scent deeply embedded in her blood, proclaiming to any wolf within five kilometers who she belonged too, and that more than anything filled Lisisa with a deep sense of love and commitment. To Denali and what their future held for them. The man in front of her had been her father for far longer than just the twenty-five years she had been with him. He had been the father in her dreams and mind, always filling her with hope and the desire to never surrender to despair. He was the only man she had ever called father, and no one would ever replace him.

Lisisa stepped up to him and wrapped her arms around his waist hugging him tightly and inhaling his mint scent. It filled her with love and support as his aura washed over her as only a father's aura could without hesitation. "I know who I am father." She said softly. "Nothing will ever change that. I am your daughter and I will always be your daughter."

Martin nuzzled the top of her head. "I know that Lisi." He said. "I am not worried about that. I don't want you to have to go through this if you don't want too."

Lisisa pulled her head back and looked at him. "I am not afraid of the Kavalians father." She stated. "And even they are not fool enough to try something within Sparta. I will meet with this Karun and hear what he has to say. At the very least it will help to keep the Kavalians from becoming suspicious about what we are doing with Andro. I will also tell the Kavalian leaders they can stick their demands up their collective ass. I am not a citizen of the KFI and I certainly do not recognize their ridiculous laws."

"You realize they will try to use our own laws against us in regards to you." Martin said.

Lisisa nodded. "Then it is good that Deni bought this villa for us and most of my things have been moved here already." She said with a grin. "It is almost as if somehow he knew what was going to happen and it drove him to act in the way he did."

"The two of you are not members of Mjolnir's Hand because you are fools." Martin said. "Both of you are just as perceptive as your brother and I, and your bonds with Jeth and Aradace grant you greater insight into things. Considering how things have played out, you may be right that something drove Deni to act as he did." Martin reached up and stroked her cheek. "And I couldn't approve more of the man you have chosen as your mate and husband."

Lisisa grinned. "I'm glad." She said. "Though it would not have mattered if you did or not."

"Yeah... I'm beginning to realize that." He said.

They turned as Denali walked into the room with the small pack over his shoulder and the data pad in his hand punching commands into it. "I've activated the villa's security system." He spoke as he entered. "Once the pressure sensors feel us leave it will engage. You don't think they will actually try and break in here do you father?"

"Deia tells me the law grants them a great deal of leeway." Martin spoke. "Lisisa may denounce them and her pseudo citizenship of convenience, but they will press as hard as they are able. I would not put it past them to come here and try and gain access to her old villa. They aren't aware you are mated now and I'll let you two tell them that." He said with a smile. "It may make them rethink some things but I doubt it. I have a feeling they want you and Jeth more than anything, and they will stop at nothing to convince you of this.” He finished looking at Lisisa as Denali came up next to her.

“Well they can’t have us.” Lisisa spoke as she allowed Deni to draw her close to him, her arms wrapping around his waist in a much more intimate fashion. “I’m quite spoken for and beyond happy if that is even possible... as is Jeth. If they don’t like that they can line up and kiss my mida!”

“They can not!” Deni protested.

Martin laughed and stepped forward to kiss her forehead slightly. “Just try and be more diplomatic than that.” He spoke. “I have to go to the briefing in an hour, Anja is coming with me. Your mothers Aricia and Isabella are still working with Vonis and Armetus. Meet with the Kavalians, set up what you feel will keep them happy, and then return to SODRAG. I will see you there later today.”

“You’re bringing Yuri back with you right?” Deni asked.

Martin nodded. “She has to be seen with Aikiro here in Sparta, at least until after this Cease Fire Accord is signed. And not with Vollenth by her side either. They know she is here on Earth by our own admission, and she will need to be visible to them. Vollenth was never seen with her and that is a plus for us. Those who do know the Coven riders are here won’t say anything, and if they do, for all they know it is a new batch of vampire riders from Apo Prime. That is the story we are going to leak with the Netnews in a couple days anyway. Now that they have their embassy, I’m quite sure they’ll have all sorts of their biogenic clones staffing the building and they’ll be able to blend in rather well.”

“Father... what about mother and Normya?” Lisisa asked.

“I spoke with her first thing this morning.” Martin replied. “She’ll meet up with them on Kranek in about thirty hours.”

“You trust them father?” Denali asked. “These Immortals?”

Martin nodded. “Surprisingly I do son.” He spoke. “They damn sure did not have to let Normya contact us. They could have just taken her and disappeared into The Wilds. And I heard something in T’lolt’s voice... something that made me believe every word he said.”

“What?” Lisisa asked softly.

Martin looked at her. “Compassion.” He replied softly. “I have an entire Fleet Group on standby regardless. But your mothers and I agree... we think these Immortals are the real deal. Even if it is this Cha’talla leading them.”

“Having someone try to kill you and almost succeed could change your outlook on life very quickly father.” Lisisa said. “I know it did mine.”

Martin nodded. “And that is one of the reasons why I think they are legit. I’ll keep you up to date. Besides... in three days we meet back at SODRAG anyway to welcome Malic and Vincix.”

Lisisa shook her head. “I knew there was something about him the minute I saw him on the SCIMITAR.” She said. “I honestly did not think this was it though.”

“Neither did I.” Denali spoke.

“Well... you both have felt them join us and that is something we can’t deny.” Martin said. “And it wouldn’t be the first time only one or two of us felt the potential within someone. Andro is very attune to that... much more so than I am. How long before you are airborne for SODRAG?”

“Gear up in two hours and thirty-three minutes.” Denali spoke.

Martin nodded. “Then I will let you go and I’ll see you this afternoon.” He looked at Denali. “And do not think for an instant that you are getting out of making Lisisa your mate in the proper Spartan fashion boy!” He stated sternly.

Deni looked at Lisisa and then back to him with a bright smile. “That had never crossed my mind father.” He stated. “I look forward to that day.”

“Good! I have a feeling we’ll need all the parties we can get the way things are going.” Martin spoke.

SPARTA

“...told you they would not follow through on what they told us!” Jiss commented to Jalersi and the others as they sat and stood around the immense oak table at one end of the Great Meeting Room connected to the Spartan Senate Building. The vast great room had a single, one meter wide row of lush valley dirt and thick, medium sized pine trees and flower planters lining the walls in a rectangular shape, limiting the view from the other side. It also sported a colossal retractable glass ceiling which was now fully open allowing the smell of the mountains to filter into the room.

“They have a few more minutes to present her to us.” Jalersi spoke realizing she wanted to meet this young woman now.

“We should petition their courts immediately whether they bring her to us or not.” Matuarr spoke. “I have learned she had an apartment on the Royal villa as well as her own villa in a city not far from here called Gytheio. There could be a wealth of intelligence in either of these locations.”

Karun looked up from the table where he sat. “You don’t honestly believe they will allow us to search and confiscate her belongings from the apartment on the Royal Estate do you?” He asked with a sarcastic tone. “You think far too much of your ability to influence their laws Legislature Matuarr.”

“If they do not... we can use it against them.” Matuarr exclaimed.

“Use what against them?” The new voice spoke now.

They turned to see the tall, heavily muscled Kavalian approach the table. His name was Timur and he wore impeccably turned out and pressed dark gray pants and button down shirt that highlighted his extremely well defined upper body. His blond hair was almost the color of freshly grown wheat, and his blue eyes were alert and clear. Timur had spent years undergoing the biogenic treatments and now all that was going to pay off it seemed. The Prefect himself had asked him to take on this mission for the benefit of their people. He had read all of the intelligence they had on the daughter of Marshall Pusintin, and to say he looked forward to locking groins with her and making her his was too mild an expression. Timur stood six feet two and two hundred and twenty pounds of chiseled muscle. He was only thirty-six years old, but he was in superb physical condition and a veteran of dozens of battles with the High Coven vampire scum. He himself had raped and murdered several of their females, listening to them squeal in pain when he brutally locked groins with them after beating them half to death. The bulbs at the base of a Kavalian cock could cause extreme pain and injury if they were allowed to swell before entering into the tunnels of whatever female they were with. Timur had done this very thing on purpose when interrogating female prisoners and then listened to them beg for their lives before he executed them by locking them in dark rooms without the benefit of being able to feed. He was an officer within the KFI now, not because of who his father was, but because of his skills and tactical knowledge as well as his somewhat sadistic nature in dealing with prisoners. The only one among the group right now that truly cared for him was Qurot, for they had much in common.

Timur stepped forward to the table now, exposing himself from the shadows near the wall, his arms crossed over his broad chest and the rest of his detachment spread out within the room expertly.

Matuarr looked at him. “If they refuse us entry into her apartment on the Royal Estate we can take it to their Netnews Channels.” He spoke.

“And you honestly believe the people within the Union will care that their King has told us he will not allow us to enter his Royal Estate, his home, to search this female’s apartment?” Timur said looking at him. “A female many have viewed as his daughter for a quarter of a century?”

“She is not his daughter!” Jiss snapped.

“And you think this will somehow matter to them?” Timur asked shaking his blond head. “Gentlemen, as Karun has said, you think too highly of your skills.”

“It will give us more leverage within their courts.” Matuarr said in reply. “So yes... it will help us. You are young and inexperienced in matters of policy and diplomacy Timur. I suggest you let Jiss and I handle this. The King has backed his own people into a corner by adhering to their laws so stringently. It is all very black and white to this man. If he does not follow his own laws it appears he is making exceptions to the rules for himself and those close to him. He will not do this. You will get what you ultimately came here for. All of us will.”

“You still believe they will give us this dragon as property?” Jalersi said. “Athani has said they are considered sentient beings within the Union. Not property.”

“Your sister has little knowledge of dragons Jalersi. Certainly no more than any of us.” Jiss spoke in reply. “How exactly would she know something like this? They are beasts of burden. War tools. No more.”

“We should take care to...”

The sound of the dragons trumpeting was so close it could have been on top of them. And as they saw in seconds it was on top of them. All of them sprang to their feet as Jeth's enormous blue/black form dropped through the open ceiling to land with flared wings and a dull thump not ten meters away. His razor like black talons clicked on the granite floor of the center of the Great Room. He was quickly followed by Aradace's Brandeis blue scaled muscular bulk as she landed gracefully only two meters from her older brother also with flared wings.

Karun had moved in front of his mother instinctively, half blocking her body with his, Jiss, Matuarr, Qurot and Pian scrambling to the other side of the table with less than subtle movements. Timur moved with less urgency, and even though he had undergone the biogenic treatments to change his appearance, he was still pure blooded Kavalian. As he gazed at Jeth and Aradace, that inbred fear of dragons tugged at his lower gut, even as he fought to control it. They watched the massive blue/black dragon shift his position and fold his wings, lowering himself to the floor of the Great Room broadside to them. They saw the diminutive figure in the saddle, hands on her thighs, the matte black helmet with crimson streaks hiding the majority of the face and wearing the black body armor with crimson splashed shoulders. The nasal guard extended just past the tip of her nose and the elongated cheek guards hid all but her full lips. Lisisa hardly ever wore makeup, Denali telling her it took away from her natural beauty which was considerable, so her lips were naturally lavender pink in color. They watched as she swung her right leg over the saddle and dropped cat like to the floor, running her hand along Jeth's smooth scales. His massive head turned and brushed up against her shoulder affectionately.

Do not hurt them Lisisa my sister. He spoke to her with humor in his voice. It would cause far too much paperwork as your father says. And you know how much you hate to do paperwork.

Lisisa smiled at him and reached up to remove her helmet, gently dropping a soft kiss to the tip of his snout. Do not worry brother. She said tucking her helmet under her arm. This will be rather quick I think.

Good! We could still make it back to SODRAG to go hunting with Elynth and the others. Aradace broke in.

Denali chuckled as he sat in the saddle, one leg cocked up across the saddle. Do you think of nothing but food sister? He asked.

Bah! The hunting down there has much more variety. Aradace spoke.

Lisisa turned and looked at Denali. Deni...

I will be right here Lisi my love. He answered immediately.

Lisisa took a deep breath and nodded. She turned and strode confidently toward where the Kavalians were regaining their composure. As she approached she knew instantly who her brother was just by his scent. She may have been half vampire, but she had an extremely well developed sense of smell, much better than most that were of combined blood. She stopped a meter from the table and looked at them.

"Which one of you is Karun?" She spoke confidently even though she already knew the answer to her question.

Karun looked at his mother who nodded her head quickly and then he stepped forward. "I am Karun." He said moving closer to her. "I am Karun. You are..."

"I'm your sister Lisisa." Lisisa spoke as she watched him. The resemblance was there without a doubt and something besides his scent, something inside her told Lisisa that this was indeed her brother. She felt a small ache in her heart for a part of her had still hoped it wasn't true, but that passed quickly enough. She was who she was today because of the man who she knew to be her father. The father of her heart and soul. The father who had risked everything he was to come for her. The man who was, even to this day, unwavering in his love and support for her and all that she did.

Karun had not expected her to be so beautiful, the holo images his father had shown him not doing her justice in the least. He stopped only a few feet from her and looked down into her proud and unwavering forest green eyes. He watched her carefully, seeing the similarities in her face, most notably the shape of her nose and jaw. It seemed they both inherited that from their father.

"It is... it is a pleasure to finally meet you." Karun spoke carefully.

Lisisa looked at him tilting her head slightly. "Is it?" She asked softly. "I only came here for one reason actually. I have learned from the only father I recognize that you do not abandon your blood for any reason. That you..."

“Your father is Marshall Pusintin of the Kavalian Federation Imperium! You are his daughter and therefore a citizen of the Kavalian Empire.” Jiss spoke firmly stepping forward to stand next to Karun.

Karun turned his head quickly. “Jiss... shut up!” He snapped.

“I will not shut up!” Jiss barked right back. “She needs to know who she is and where she belongs!”

Lisisa looked at Jiss now. “I know who I am. I am Princess Lisisa Leonidas” She stated plainly. “And I already am where I belong... whoever you are.”

“I am Legislature Jiss!” He continued. “I am acting with your father and the Kavalian Prefect’s direct authority. You are the daughter of Marshall Pusintin and a citizen of the KFI, therefore you can leave here whenever you desire.”

“Leave here?” Lisisa asked him with a smile. “What would possess me to leave the only world and family I have ever known? Why would I even want to do something as ridiculous as that?”

“Your father of course.” Matuarr said stepping forward now. “And these men and women are not your family.”

“My father... the only father I recognize... my father is Martin Leonidas.” Lisisa said calmly. “And you would be wise to not tell me who my family is or isn’t, whatever your name is igord!”

“My name is Matuarr!” He spoke glaring at her. “I am a senior Legislature within the Kavalian Federation, just as Jiss is.”

Lisisa shrugged her shoulders. “This means absolutely nothing to me.” She spoke. “I don’t know who this Marshall Pusintin is... and I have no desire to know him. He means nothing to me as well.”

“He is your father!” Jiss snapped.

“He is not my father! He is a man who I have no desire to know or meet or even speak with!” Lisisa barked. “That has not changed simply because I have discovered I have a brother from him.”

“Three brothers actually.” Karun told her seeing her turn to look at him once more. “And a sister. I am the oldest. Well... you are the oldest really.”

Lisisa looked at him intently. “Why have you requested to meet with me? After all these years knowing who I am.” She asked. “An order from your father perhaps? He has known since that day here in Sparta when he fought his brother... the man I call father and will always call father.”

“He is your father as well.” Karun said. “And I did not know you existed until just before leaving to come here, just over two weeks ago. That is when he told me you lived.”

Lisisa shook her head. “No. He was never my father... and he will never be my father.” She said softly. “I won’t allow it.”

“You have no choice.” Timur said stepping up to stand next to Karun.

Lisisa cut her eyes and looked at him. “And you are?”

“My name is Commander Timur.” He stated.

Lisisa looked at him for a long moment, taking in his extreme good looks and well defined body. Had she met him before Denali had come into her life, Lisisa might have actually found him desirable, but the moment Deni entered her heart and soul in the way he had Lisisa knew no man would ever compare to him, no matter how attractive he was. She had decided long ago that Denali and her were meant to be together.

“Well Commander... this is the Lycavorian Union not the Kavalian Federation.” Lisisa spoke. “And choice is a big thing here see. That he waited to tell you I existed until just before you left leads me to believe his motives have nothing to do with discovering a lost child and more to do with intelligence gathering and taking what does not belong to him.” She said softly turning to look at Karun once more. She pulled the data pad from the pouch at the small of her back. “This is a written and signed statement from me, willingly renouncing whatever you seem to think I might be happy in having with the Kavalian Federation.” She held it up and tossed it at Jiss casually and watched him fumble with it before catching it solidly. “That includes this citizenship you seem to be so intent and focused on.”

“Kavalian citizens are not allowed to renounce their citizenship!” Matuarr spoke heatedly unprepared for the dismissive way Lisisa was speaking to them.

“Well I just did friend. There’s a first time for everything I guess.” Lisisa told him. “I like being first.”

“You really should watch the tone of voice you use.” Timur spoke. “Our woman are not allowed as much freedom as you seem to have here. Your father said I might discover this when he promised me you to me.”

Lisisa looked at him and chuckled softly. “He promised me to you did he? How nice of him.” She asked. Timur nodded. “As my mate.” He spoke. “As soon as the embassy is established we will return to Cabelir and you will become my woman. It is a day I look forward too.”

Lisisa couldn't help but laugh at his smug expression and she shook his head. “I hate to burst your obvious ego fueled bubble big guy, but I already have a husband and mate. And you don't compare to him in the least.”

“What is this?” Matuarr barked moving closer.

“That is unacceptable!” Jiss spat. “Who is this man?”

Lisisa smiled and turned her head back to look at Denali who sat on Aradace with a wide smile on his face. He lifted his hand and waved at them.

“That would be me.” He stated plainly.

“Is this a joke?” Jiss demanded. “That is... that is one of his sons!”

Lisisa smiled and nodded as she looked at him. “Yeah I know... kind of kinky huh? That whole forbidden love thing. We have some of the most intense sex you could imagine because of that fact!” She said. “Makes me want to jump Denali's bones right now just thinking about it to be honest.”

Timur grabbed her right arm tightly. “You are a Kavalian citizen!” He barked. “You are promised to me by your father! You will be mindful of how you speak and act to men who are your superior! You are...”

Lisisa swung her arm up and over his hand, clamping it in her armpit as she brought her left hand forward with vampire speed, smashing stiffened fingers upwards into Timur's throat with wolf strength. His eyes bugged out of his head and he released her arm, clutching his throat as he gasped for air. Karun and the others could only watch as Timur staggered back and Lisisa hit him again in the chest, enhancing her physical blow with her significant Mindvoice power. Her control and precision was such that the heel strike to his chest broke no bones, but caused his heart to skip a beat and his much larger body to lift nearly off the floor and crash hard to the shiny tiled floor surrounding the table.

Karun and Pian were the only ones with enough sense to not move, Pian standing next to Jalersi and reaching out to grip her arm gently and shake his head. Qurot moved forward quickly, only to skid to a halt a few feet from Lisisa as Jeth's massive head appeared in front of him, his golden colored eyes burning with anger and his long fangs exposed in a vicious snarl. Matuarr and Jiss had begun to move but froze the moment Aradace came to her feet and in a burst of incredible speed from an animal so large, she appeared directly in their path. Denali held his K12 KM leveled at the two of them.

“That would not be the most intelligent thing you boys have done in your lifetimes.” Deni spoke calmly as he looked over the barrel at them. His Shi Viska flared to life and his left arm came up, leveled at the two members of the Kavalian security detachment that were rushing towards them even as he extended the K12 out completely in his right hand, his eyes never leaving Jiss and Matuarr. “Who exactly do you think will win here? I guarantee it won't be any of you.”

Jiss held his hand up quickly and halted the movement of the security detachment. “Stand fast!” He barked.

“Never touch me! Ever!” Lisisa screamed at Timur's red face on the floor of the Great Room, his hands holding his chest as he struggled to draw in air. “Only one man touches me and you ain't him!”

“Enough!” Jalersi bellowed from where she stood. Lisisa snapped her head around to look at Jalersi, forest green eyes ablaze. “We are accomplishing nothing acting like this!”

“There is nothing to accomplish.” Lisisa stated taking a deep breath and calming her anger. “I am not now... nor have I ever been a Kavalian citizen! I want nothing to do with the KFI or my father Pleistarchus! I already have a father... and though he may not be my father by blood, he is who I call father now and forever! You can tell Pleistarchus that for me!”

“His name is Marshall Pusintin and we can force you to...” Jiss began to speak.

“Be silent you stupid fool of a man!” Lisisa spat at him viciously. “I will call him by one name... you call him by another! It doesn't matter! Your words mean nothing to me! Nothing! I am Princess Lisisa Leonidas, daughter to King Leonidas and a member of Mjolnir's Hand. My husband and mate is Denali Leonidas and he sits there!” Lisisa pointed at where Denali had his K12 leveled at Jiss and Matuarr, and his Shi Viska humming on his arm leveled at the two members of the security detachment. “That is who I am! I do not know what it is you hoped to accomplish by pursuing this... but it will not work.” She turned to look at Timur who was drawing in ragged breaths and rubbing his chest but otherwise unhurt. “In the Union... to touch me in the manner you have, Denali would be well within his rights to shoot you stone cold dead where you are! Do not press him Kavalian, I have seen my husband and mate angry and it is not a pretty sight to behold!”

Jalersi moved from around the table slowly, looking oddly at Pian as his arm held her protectively for just a split second longer than it should have. No one else noticed as focused as they were on Lisisa. Jalersi waited for him to release her and she continued around the table. She held up her hand quickly when she saw Jeth’s golden eyes shift to look at her and the low growl escaped his throat.

“Princess Lisisa... please... I apologize for what has happened.” Jalersi spoke as calmly as she could, the thumping of her heart easily heard as close to Jeth as she was. “If we could only talk to you about...”

“There is nothing to discuss.” Lisisa told her. Her green eyes went to Karun’s face and for an instant Lisisa thought she saw a smile on his lips. “My father has taught me to never abandon my blood.” She stated softly. “I do recognize you as my brother Karun, and I would welcome the opportunity to know you better. If this is something you wish as well then meet me at the Grand Center in Eden City in four days. Twelve hundred hours. I will wait until fifteen minutes past that time and if you do not arrive, then I will return to my duties and you will never see me again. Come alone Karun... leave your friends here in Sparta and come alone. And come with an open mind brother and not this political drivel that everyone else is so intent on spewing.”

“I will.” Karun replied instantly.

Lisisa met his gaze for a few seconds longer and then nodded. “I will make certain you are allowed transport to Eden City then and I will see you there.” Karun watched her as she moved up to Jeth’s side and easily scampered up his front foreleg and into the saddle. She looked at Qurot. “Move Kavalian. I wouldn’t want Jeth to accidentally step on you as he is taking off.”

Qurot did not question the warning and backed up quickly, the fear very evident in his eyes.

“This is not over!” Jiss barked out.

Lisisa turned to look at him as the Dragon Armor secured her legs tightly. “No I don’t imagine it is.” She said. “You will not succeed in getting what you want however. That much I can assure you.”

“The King will not violate his own laws!” Jiss snapped.

Lisisa grinned. “My father won’t have too.” She said. She turned and looked down at Karun. “Four days brother.” She said. “Don’t be late. Jeth go!”

With a trumpet of happiness Jeth flexed his powerful legs and propelled them up into the air and with one beat of his massive wings they were through the glass ceiling and out of sight. All eyes went to Denali now as he lowered the K12 and willed away his Shi Viska. He smiled as he looked at Jiss and Matuarr.

“You got to love a strong woman.” He said easily. “She gets my wolf blood to pumping no doubt!” He shifted the small pack on his shoulder and the Dragon Armor closed around his legs. “Have a nice day. Aradace!”

Aradace echoed her brother’s trumpet, cocked her legs and pushed them skyward through the ceiling, quickly vanishing from sight. Karun stood there watching the ceiling even as Jiss and Matuarr moved to help Timur.

Whatever had just happened... there was at least one person who no longer felt the way they did before this meeting had taken place.

SPARTA

DURCUNUSAAN BASE

Martin could only smile as he felt Lisisa pass to him what had just happened even as she and Denali were lifting off in their STRIKER DT. He felt Anja’s hand tighten in his and he turned to look at her as they walked. Her jade green eyes were bright, her Persian red hair long and shiny and she smiled as she bumped her hip against his.

“Well... we certainly know where she gets her disposition from lover.” Anja said with a grin.

“Now why would you say that Red?” Martin asked in mock surprise. “I am the picture of control and calm.”

“Aur mida!” Anja spat playfully.

Martin grinned and leaned over to nuzzle the side of her neck and ear. "And a delicious ass it is." He said softly.

"Pafocha!" Anja hissed as she leaned into his nuzzle her eyes closing. "I won't be able to sit right for days now." (Pervert)

"You didn't seem to mind last night." Martin said with a smile. "You made some very enticing sounds when..."

"Narta!" Anja gasped with a chuckle, leaning into him even more. (Stop)

They stopped outside the large door and Martin looked down at her as she stepped close and slid her arms around his waist.

"You are a wild one." He said softly.

Anja looked up into his beautiful dark eyes. "You could always get my blood boiling lover." She said in a seductive whisper. "Even before you made me part wolf."

"We'd better get inside before I decide to have a repeat of last night right here in the corridor." He stated.

"That sounds inviting." Anja spoke with a glint in her eyes.

"I'm going to have to give you extra attention tonight to tame that wild streak in you." He said.

"You like my wild streak." Anja said pressing her body even harder against his. "It's one of the reasons you love me so much."

Martin leaned over and kissed her deeply, relishing in the honey taste of her lips and the way her petite body molded against his. He had long ago grown used to Anja's four inch long tongue, and as she held the back of his neck she used that wonderful tongue to dance across his own in a myriad of ways that never ceased to make his blood burn, until finally she broke the kiss.

"Wow!" He stated with a smile. "You are still feeling full of yourself aren't you?"

"Me so horny." Anja drawled in a low voice causing Martin to burst out laughing at the ancient slang from their days as Navy SEALs.

Martin kissed her hard squeezing her to him once more. "Just hold onto to that thought. I'll arrange something as soon as possible."

"You'd better." Anja said with a smile.

"Now are you going to tell me what has got you all worked up coming from Hadaria?" He asked as he stroked her cheek.

"It's nothing I can't handle." Anja replied immediately. "It's Umbra getting the Elders all riled up about Vana and I. How we rule. How we don't adhere to ancient customs... yah... yah... yah. Same old drill every few years."

"You know... I'm seriously starting to dislike that woman. And the Hadarian Elders." Martin spoke. "They really need to step into real life for a little while. I understand keeping culture and tradition, but not at the expense of reality and moving forward. Retta and Calyb are our children and we will decide how to raise them. Not the Elders."

Anja looked at him as her eyes narrowed. "How did you..."

"You think Belen and I don't talk?" Martin asked with a grin. "I'm married to you and he's married to Sivana. We talk. He told me about what they threatened and having Siara leave Hadaria. Your Aunt believes very highly of herself if she thinks she can take our children."

"Just count yourself blessed that she isn't your Aunt." Anja spoke. "It's nothing Lover, really. I can handle Umbra and the Elders. You have enough to worry about and don't need the petty grievances my Aunt brings up distracting you."

"As long as you are sure." He said.

Anja's eyes closed in delight as the back of his fingers caressed her jaw and moved up to trace her ear lobe. "I'm sure." She said feeling his aura reach out and wrap around her just enough to let her feel his love and emotion. She stepped away from him holding his hand in hers. "C'mon lover... before we both lose control and put on a show here in the corridor. It would definitely make the Netnews Channels."

Martin rolled his eyes as they stepped towards the massive door, waiting as it began to slide open. "As if they needed more fodder to put us in the news." He said.

Anja chuckled as she pulled him into the massive room and nearly two dozen heads turned to look at them as they entered, not to mention the dozen holo images of men and women, including Andro.

“Well... well...” Danny bellowed from his chair. “Did you two get lost or something? The rest of us were on time!”

Smiles and soft laughter echoed in the room as Anuk elbowed her husband in the gut from her chair next to him.

“Blow it out your ass Simpson.” Martin spat as they walked in.

“Oh mighty king... forgive me... your witless servant. I know not what I speak.” Danny continued. “You need your beauty sleep, I know this now.”

Martin moved up to the chair next to him as Anja walked around and pushed Danny in the back of his bald head. “Asshole.” She muttered with a grin.

“As a matter of fact... I do need my beauty sleep.” Martin said as he settled into the chair next to Danny and Anja sat next to him.

“Only problem with that Skipper is that you ain’t getting any prettier.” Danny said. “You are still uglier than a three thousand year old zit that needs popping.”

“Daniel!” Anuk exclaimed.

“What? It’s the truth! Ask him yourself!” Danny protested.

“And you look like a six hundred year old shriveled raisin.” Martin spoke. “I wouldn’t talk.”

“I’m still prettier than you.” Danny said with a smile.

Martin poured a mug of coffee and slid it over to Anja before pouring one for himself. “I must have had a brain malfunction when I promoted you.” Martin spoke. “Riall... next time I want to promote General/Colonel Simpson, hit me really hard in the head with something... anything nearby.”

Riall nodded his head from where he sat to Anuk’s right. “A pleasure Martin... but I want the order in signed form before I do. It will save me from Gorgo’s wrath.”

This brought more laughter from around the massive table and the men and women in the holo images. They were most of the senior officers within the Lycavorian Union, and they had all seen this many times before in meetings just like this. There were very few who would dare talk to their King in such a manner and Daniel Simpson was one of them. Another such man snorted from the holo image beamed in from Apo Prime.

“Are you two done swapping spit?” Admiral/Colonel Benjamin O’Connor barked. “I ain’t getting any younger here you know.”

Martin looked at his former pilot and now one of his most trusted senior officers and the man who ran not only all operations within the Union fleet, but was also in charge of the Academy Flight School and New Projects. Ben had been human once... departing the base on the moon all those years ago with Martin. He and his long time lover Tina had discovered the stunning red haired female elf Endith in the first days after returning to Earth, and over the course of the next twenty-seven years the three of them were totally inseparable. As humans, Ben and Tina made the decision that changed their lives forever. Neither of them wanted to grow old and have to leave Endith behind, or worse yet have her witness them die of old age. Their love burned just as brightly as did Martin’s for his Queens, and Ben and Tina came to Isabella one day, asking her to turn them so that they would not lose that love. It was a decision that Martin had taken many months to come to grips with. He was not angry at what they had done, for he himself had turned Tareif’s son-in-law Steven so that Tarifa’s sister Zaala would not lose something they had only just discovered. He was more hurt that Ben had not come to him and asked that of him. He now understood why Ben and Tina had done what they did and why they went to Isabella and not to him, discovering the reasons after a long drunken talk and discussion with Ben and Danny and the party the night after Retta and Calyb were born.

Ben and Tina loved Martin, there was no question there. They did not want to put him in the position of having to choose their friendship and love over military matters, especially if he had been the one to turn them. Endith had played a large role in that decision as well, and now they had five children between the three of them, all of them healthy and very happy. Two half elf half vampire boys two years younger than Bryon and three full vampire children, twin girls and a boy that had just turned five and four respectively.

“Shit... you ain’t getting any older either Ben!” Martin snapped. “So sit down...”

“And shut the fuck up!” Danny finished the sentence with a wide smile.

Ben erupted in laughter from his office on Apo Prime and nodded his head. “And so speaks the voice of reason and knowledge. Simpson... you are nearly as half baked as he is. I swear the salt water on Tenla Eight corroded what little brains the two of you have left.”

“Then perhaps you should not have left them floating in the ocean for five days.” Anuk spoke crossing her arms over her ample chest and looking at him in the image.

“Ouch!” Ben spoke. “Check fire! Check fire! When you pull out the red haired gun it’s time to retreat!”

Everyone laughed again and Martin shook his head as he sipped his coffee. “Ok... folks.” He spoke. “What say we get this little party rolling? I get to spend the day with Aikiro when I leave here so give me lots of good news.”

“Better you than us Milord.” Imror spoke from one of the holo transmissions eliciting another round of soft chuckles.

Riall got to his feet with a grin and moved around the end of the table activating the huge star chart at the end of the room. The plain gray wall essentially became a star map of the entire Lycavorian Union, from one end of the immense system spanning empire to another.

“Overall Fleet and Ground Force Readiness is at ninety-seven percent Milord.” He spoke as dozens of large white dots began appearing on the map. “Twenty-one SCFFG’s are located as you see them here in white. The additional fifty-three Fleet Groups in blue are coming up now.” Everyone watched as the blue dots began appearing. “All Planetary Commands report readiness levels above ninety percent, with the exception of the Folcani Regiment and the Molari Division.”

“Reasons?” Martin asked.

“The Folcani Honor Regiment is in their Private Leave cycle Milord and are only at seventy-two percent for that reason. The Molari 1st Heavy HT Division Corp is split up in three different locations conducting extended training maneuvers. They just finished receiving their allotment of the new S94 Hover Tanks and are putting them through their paces with increased vigor from what I hear. Overall readiness is eighty-three percent because they are spread across so large a distance. Their commander, General/Colonel Gasile assures me they will be ready should they be called upon.” Riall said.

General Vistr snorted from his holo transmission. “She is a task master Milord. They will be ready if we call for them.” He spoke.

“Action and support ships are marked in orange.” Riall continued. “Eighteen medical ships and their accompanying Strike Wings. All fully staffed and supplied Milady.” He said looking at Anja and Anuk.

“They should be... it took Anuk and I nearly four months to get them that way.” Anja said. “I’m glad to see they have kept up the readiness.”

It may have been because of who she was, but Anuk Simpson was widely regarded as second only to Anja in terms of authority concerning medical matters. Officially she was listed as the senior medic within the Union, but when it came to medical matters, she was also Anja’s second in command. She may have been an elf, but she was perhaps the best medically trained elven female out there, with almost as much knowledge as many of the Hadarian Healers. It was another sticking point with the Hadarian Elders since they determined that Anja’s second in command should have been Hadarian.

“So am I.” Anuk spoke. “I didn’t envy having to leave Earth and spend several weeks chewing out lazy officers across the Fleet as we did last time.”

“I’ll drink to that.” Anja said.

“BIP patrols have reported nothing out of the ordinary.” Imror spoke now. “Aside from the visit from the High Coven, border activity is minimal.”

“Give me numbers Riall.” Martin said now. “If the Kavalians are planning what Aikiro says they are and they come pouring across the border what are we looking at?”

“I can only tell you what I would do Martin... and what I believe you would do as well.” Riall spoke. “Until we have a more definitive look at what they are fielding, all of it is guess work on our part. I don’t want to put much faith in the information the Coven has given us, but right now it’s all we have.”

Martin nodded. “Go with it.”

Riall motioned to the portion of the Lycavorian border that actually touched the Kavalian border. “Two invasion corridors Milord... possibly three... but that would be overextending themselves even if the numbers the Coven gave us are accurate. They have us outnumbered four and five to one in ground forces in many places... and two to one in number of ships but then again that is just an estimate on what we think they would need to move that many troops in a possible attack. Of course... when are we not outnumbered?"

Martin nodded his head. "That's true."

"Those numbers don't include their forces poised and marshalling all along the High Coven border Milord." Armetus broke in. "Omen Five's last report put that number at or near what we are seeing here. It appears the KFI has spent the better part of the last ten years doing nothing but building their biogenic clones and ships."

"Anything from Omen about this intelligence yet?" Martin asked him.

Armetus shook his head. "I'm still waiting to hear back." He said. "We should be getting a burst report by tomorrow I would think."

"Who is it Armetus?" Martin asked.

"Omen One Milord."

Martin nodded slowly and only Anja heard the sigh from him, though she did not know why. He got to his feet slowly, mug of coffee in his hand and moved around the table to the map to look at the star chart. "One corridor straight for Folcan and Elear." He said. "No detours or deviations. They'll want to hit Elear with everything they can bring to bear and kill as many dragons as they can in the process. I would scatter my ground units to other targets and pound Elear from orbit. Admiral Po'Tal?"

The older looking Elven Admiral in command of the Elear Defense Sector nodded from the transmission. "We agree with that assessment here as well Milord." He said calmly. "Given this inbred fear they have of dragons, landing any number of troops on Elear would not be something they would do. At least not at first... or until they are sure most of the dragons are dead. They will go for our capital shipyards and construction facilities and then settle in for a polar orbital bombardment of Dragon Island. Perhaps as many cities as they can target as well, given that they now know dragons moved freely among us."

Riall nodded. "We hypothesize they will branch off from an attack on Folcan once it is secure and break for Semtola, Ryuid, Voelt, and Ezoru One. At least initially... while their main fleet forces head for Elear."

"The second corridor?" Martin asked.

Riall touched the star chart and drew his finger up along the border. "Straight for Beklan Two and then cut inward and make for our main capital class shipyards in the outer Sol System around Apo Prime and the Jahdi System and Nodon."

"That's quite a stretch." Martin spoke. "Do they have legs that can reach that far and still fight?"

"Their GREATSOUL dreadnoughts have the ability to extend that far easily." Komirri spoke from his chair at the table. "As do their DIATAGA Attack Cruisers and their DIEROY Heavy Cruisers."

"All of them Attack or Heavy cruisers." Andro spoke from SODRAG. "How many of these ships do they have staged in this area according to the Coven Intelligence grandfather?"

"That breakdown is not available from the Coven Intelligence, but at least equal to what they hit the Coven with in the initial invasion near Lycavore Andro." Riall answered. "Upwards of three thousand ships. Probably more. All of them with their BLACK SOUL Heavy Fighter and the JAGUAR Interceptors in support. We know each GREATSOUL-Class Dreadnought carries six squadrons of the Heavy Fighters and at least equal that in JAGUARS. Head to head they are more than a match for our LEONIDAS IIA sire."

"Coming down one invasion corridor." Martin shook his head. "Man they don't care what kind of damage or casualties they take if they throw that much down one corridor. Coming that far into Union space they have to know we would hit them every few hours."

"Their primary troop carrier is also LSD equipped just like our VIPER. They would be able to maintain position with the command ships and jump away in case of any attack by us." Riall said.

"It is a similar tactic to what they used during their initial invasion of the High Coven just as Riall has said Milord." Admiral Ceneu spoke now leaning forward in his chair next to Ben on Apo Prime. "Massive and overwhelming force applied to worlds as they progressed forward. A heavy bombardment from orbit, drop troops and leave behind support ships to assist the ground forces as they sweep over the planets. Once they have taken the main governmental offices they demand immediate surrender or they eradicate the populous."

"So they have no qualms about targeting civilians?" Anuk asked from next to Danny.

“None in the least it seems.” Riall spoke. “And while we have our shipyards spread out all over the Union for security purposes, most of their shipyards are far outside our reach deep within Kavalian space. Without the Kavalian Jump Corridors and their codes... we would be jumping blind looking for them.”

“What about their ground forces?” Danny asked after a glance at Vengal. “Sixteen million sounds like a lot... but can they do anything?”

“They...” Riall began.

NEOR

KFI MILITARY HEADQUARTERS

“...have at least a four to one advantage in most places... upwards of six to one in others.” The Kavalian Colonel spoke as junior aides were distributing data pads out to Keleru, Pusintin and a dozen others who had come for this secret briefing. “Essentially the odds will be even.”

“Even?” A Pride leader exclaimed openly incredulous. “Outnumbering them six to one is even? How exactly do you figure that?”

“Yes Pride Leader Miwel.” The Colonel answered. “We all must remember... if we are to undertake this operation... this will not be the High Coven troops and clones we will be facing. These will be Lycavorian Union Spartans. They do not retreat, they do not surrender, man or female, elf or Algolian, and they will fight to the death.” He looked at Pusintin. “It seems your brother has instilled in them the spirit and code of the ancient Earth warriors you led for a time Marshall Pusintin.”

Pusintin nodded. “For all the good it did. That mentality got my idiot Spartan father killed.” He spoke harshly. “My Kavalian father is far more intelligent and would never stand and die in a hopeless situation.”

The Colonel nodded his head slowly. “Yes... sir.” He stated turning back to the others. “Continuing... after many years of study, my analyst team and I have come to the realization that the Union ground forces are conditioned in such a way as to eliminate ten of the enemy before they fall. This is not forced upon them; this is an attitude, a mental state if you will. A state of mind that they have developed with a combination of superior training and adherence to traditions and culture we neither practice nor understand. It is more than likely practiced within their fleet to a lesser degree as well.” The man turned to look at Keleru and Pusintin. “I believe this is part of the reason they were able to so soundly wipe out our force of biogenic clones even though they were outnumbered five to one on Gamji Prefect.”

“Your professional assessment?” Keleru asked.

“We would be successful Prefect... there is little doubt of that. No enemy could hold against the sheer volume of destructive power we could bring to bear... but we would take massive losses. Far more than at any point in our war with the Coven.” The man spoke. “We can make more clones easily, but the main concern is their tactical plans and how far they would go.”

Pusintin leaned forward. “Elaborate Colonel.”

“We don’t know how far they would be willing to go to win.” The man answered. “Will they sacrifice planets and people to buy time to bring their forces to bear, or would they stand and fight us at every turn? Much of their military is spread out over a wide area conducting training and maneuvers constantly. Unlike the High Coven they do not mass anywhere in large numbers for any length of time. With the exception of the events on Gamji, we really have no idea how they operate as fleet units. Their procedures, their command structure, their rules of engagement. We know none of it.”

“What of the Coven?” Another Pride leader asked. “We can not open a new front against the Union without risk of the High Coven hitting us along our lines with them. It would...”

SPARTA

“...be tactically unsound to open a new front against us when they have so much devoted to the High Coven already.” Vistr spoke.

Tareif nodded from his seat. “No one has ever won a war fighting on two fronts.” He spoke. “At least not anywhere in the history of Earth that I have read and the humans were very good at having wars to solve their problems. At least before the comet came. Now... now it is a chore to involve them in anything more taxing than a game of chess. Until they are angered at least.” He finished with a grin. “Anger them and even as an elf I would get out of their way completely.”

“We aren’t talking of just a border with a country either.” Vengal said. “We are talking a border of light years in size. Are they so smug and sure of their ships and clones that they would do this?”

“We aren’t sure of anything.” Armetus spoke. “The Omen units have been tasked with monitoring their conflict with the High Coven and keeping an eye on the smaller Kavalian units they have within The Wilds just across their borders. With the exception of very short runs to get to other areas, we’ve never gone in depth into Kavalian space. Omen One will be the first real deep run penetration of their lines.”

“That is my fault.” Martin spoke. “I did not want to provoke anything with the Kavalians if one of our ships happened to be discovered twirling around deep in their space taking pictures of everything. They are too unpredictable in their actions and what they would do.”

“Better safe than sorry Lover.” Anja spoke.

Martin nodded. “But now that may come around to bite us in the ass. Up until the end of the war with the Evolli, I’ve tasked most of our intelligence assets to monitoring the Coven and their activities.”

“They have been the recognizable enemy for thousands of years sire.” Armetus spoke. “And if you set aside the battle on Gamji, the Kavalians have done nothing to warrant further scrutiny.”

“Have we stopped to consider that may be what they want?” Andro’s voice broke in once more. “No one saw their build up before hitting the Coven the first time. They were able to hide millions of biogenic clones and thousands of warships from us and the Coven both. They did not build that in only a few years. It took them decades. We know now that they have the ability to beat our long range sensor drones. Perhaps we should take a more active stance now father.”

“What are you suggesting Andro?” Martin asked.

“Release two more Omen ships into Kavalian space.” Andro answered quickly. “Omen Six from The Wilds and Omen Five from occupied High Coven space. It is what we built them for father. Deep Penetration Intelligence Gathering. The only people who know about those ships are those of us in that room with you and in these transmissions. The crews are the finest we have and know what their purpose is. Let’s cut them loose to earn their pay.”

“I agree.” Ben spoke from Apo Prime.

“As do I.” Ceneu echoed.

Martin looked around. “Anyone against?” He waited a few moments and nodded his head. “Very well. Armetus... coordinate with Ben and make it happen.”

Armetus nodded. “Happily Milord.” He said.

“Set aside the one hypothetical invasion corridor towards our shipyards for now.” Martin spoke. “Walter... how many boots on the ground can we put on Folcan if the need arose?”

Walter Carson, Polemarch of the entire Union Ground Command, leaned forward in his chair. He had returned three days early from his whirlwind tour of Union ground forces only to come directly to this meeting after only four hours of sleep. Well over three thousand years of age but looking only in his mid-forties he held the respect and admiration of every Spartan within the ranks of the Union for his actions as Guardian of the Line and now Senior Polemarch of the military.

“The Folcani have allowed us to garrison a full Brigade on Folcan Martin.” Walter said using his first name. Another of the handful that Martin considered family. “That was one of the units I inspected on my trip. I would stand them against a full division of Kavalian clones if need be. Getting the Folcani to allow more than the Brigade will be difficult. They are an anti-war species. It took us five years to get them to allow the Brigade to begin with.”

“The Kavalians are not fools, let’s not forget that. They will have learned from Gamji just as we did. If this attack does come... and it is a big if... they will hit Folcan with a minimum of seven to eight divisions of clones. They have the manpower to spare easily. And Folcan would be the perfect staging area for follow on attacks into Union space. It is relatively close to their border for re-supply, and within striking distance of three main Jump Corridors. We would have to destroy upwards of four Jump Gates to limit their advance.” Vistr spoke.

“Destroying Jump Gates is not something we will do!” Komirri spoke now. “We would be cutting off our own ability to reinforce and supply.”

“Let’s not go there right now.” Martin spoke. “Riall... the Joint Training Exercises with the Bontawillian are still happening in three weeks right?”

“Yes.”

“Change the logistics.” Martin said turning to the star map. “Move three SCFFGs down into that training area here.” He spoke tracing his finger down the map along the border. “Put four more into a training pattern around Elear with the Elven Central Command Group. Then I want new patrol routes established for all nine Fleet Groups along the border here. Our staging areas are too far out of the way for them to have gotten spies close, so cut loose nineteen more under Shroud and move them to a forward staging area just outside the ECCG’s control grid.”

“How long do we keep them out there?” Riall asked.

“Four weeks and then they begin rotating back as the other Fleet Groups go out. Move them in and out of the staging areas under Shroud to hide the movements.” Martin said. “It should keep everyone guessing as to how many ships are actually in or out of harbor.”

“Ground forces?” Vistr asked.

“That will be tougher.” Martin said. “If we assume Elear and Folcan will be the focus of at least one invasion corridor, they will no doubt have eyes and ears out to feed back whatever information they can get.”

“Is it possible they have developed Shroud technology?” Danny asked. “It would be pointless to deploy under Shroud if they have. They’ll detect any large movement of ships and troops.”

Armetus shook his head almost immediately. “That is one of the things we need to ask Aikiro and the Coven.” He replied. “We simply do not know. Sire there is something else. Any large troop movement to Beklan Two, training or not, it will more than likely spook whatever High Coven insurgent forces that are there into leaving.”

“I ain’t telling Aikiro dick about what we are doing.” Martin said immediately. “I’m still not entirely convinced this intelligence they gave us is accurate. It all just seems too convenient to me. It’s almost as if they want us to conduct a preemptive strike of some sort.”

“I got a feeling that is what they want Skipper.” Danny spoke.

“The question is why?” Anja spoke now.

“Riall... let’s say this intelligence is confirmed by Armetus and his people.” Martin spoke. “Let’s say we launch a preemptive strike against the Kavalian forces there. How much damage could we do?”

Riall looked at Ceneu and Ben in the transmission and then back to Martin. “We have such a plan Martin.”

Martin grinned. “I know you do.”

“Told you.” Ben spoke. “Riall you owe me twenty Riyal.”

Riall shook his head with a smile. “We bet who would ask the question first.” He stated. “Ben won.”

Martin chuckled. “He knows how I think. He’s spent too much time around me.”

“You got that right.” Ben replied.

“What did you guys work out?” Martin asked.

“Five SCFFGs in a coordinated strike would obliterate the entire planet and everything on it.” Riall replied. “A simultaneous attack against the surrounding garrisons and the two Jump Gates in the system would render any Kavalian threat from this area null and void.”

“At least until they rebuilt their numbers or shifted units away from the High Coven border to hit us.” Danny said. “Then they would come at us full force. And not just from one direction or a couple invasion corridors. They would pour across that entire length of border like ants to honey.”

Martin looked at him slowly, his dark eyes intense. Everyone saw where Martin was looking and they fell silent as he stared at Danny. Dan finally met his eyes. “What? I got snot hanging from my nose or something?”

Martin turned to Riall. “Riall... hypothetically speaking... where is the most likely place the KFI would pull troops and ships from if we conducted such an attack and were successful?”

Riall looked at the star map. He pointed immediately to the area of former High Coven space that was now occupied by Kavalian forces. An area of space that held Ukwav and many other former High Coven fortress worlds. "Here." He answered. "These two systems around Ukwav and Yoimet. Several thousand ships and we estimate several million ground troops. All poised to hit the High Coven again no doubt."

"And how long would it take them to stage from this area and cross The Wilds?" Martin asked moving closer to the map.

"Two weeks at most." Riall answered. "That would put them within striking distance of Earth within four weeks easily."

Martin nodded. "It sure would." He said softly.

"Father, are you thinking we should conduct such a strike if the Coven intelligence turns out to be accurate?" Andro asked.

"Why mass that many ships and troops if you don't plan to use them?" Martin asked. "They are too far away to influence any battle against the High Coven in any amount of time that would matter."

"They did want a Free Passage of Rights through Union territory." Riall spoke. "Perhaps they did this thinking they would get such a thing."

Martin shook his head slowly. "Pleistarchus isn't that stupid. He had to have known I would never agree to such an arrangement. And shifting this much firepower near our border isn't exactly a friendly notion. They are planning something."

"They also do not yet know we are aware of this sire." Armetus spoke. "We could use that to our advantage."

"They'll figure it out sooner or later once we start shifting forces around." Dan said. "And if we approach them with it, they'll know we have some sort of asset in or around this area. Then things could get sticky for the Omen ships."

"We'll let it stand as it is for now." Martin spoke. "Have a release drafted so we can give the Netnews queers something on those Fleet Groups that aren't going out under Shroud. That should buy us some time. Maybe make them think twice about whatever it is they are planning. If anything at all." Martin looked at the time piece on the wall. "I got an hour before I have to head to SODRAG with my favorite person. They got us outnumbered in every aspect folks, and I want ways to neutralize that advantage within the first twelve hours of anything that might happen."

"Martin... what about Mando?" Ben spoke from his chair on Apo Prime.

Martin turned to look at the transmission. "Is she ready?"

"Is who ready?" Komirri asked.

"For the most part... yes." Ben spoke. "Riall can give you the latest report from her. She sent it three days ago."

"What are the three of you cooking up that the rest of us do not know about?" Vengal asked from his seat.

Ben leaned forward. "The HORNET, BISMARCK and YAMATO are three weeks away from joining the ARIZONA Marty. Six more within the year" He spoke calmly. "We should tell them now."

Danny's eyes narrowed. "Oh... secrets!" He stated. "I like your secrets Skipper."

Tareif nodded. "Indeed. I know my Earth history well... and the names you just spoke are all great water faring warships from Earth's ancient past." He said. "And we have all known Ben long enough to know of his predilection for rather nasty surprises."

Martin grinned. "One of his more endearing traits." He said. "Ben... why don't we give everyone a brief rundown on what you and I have been doing these last few years. They are your pride and joy."

Ben's smile grew wide. "It will be my pleasure." He said.

SODRAG

Sadi walked toward the door to hers and Andro's bungalow, her eyes shifting between the data pad she was reading and the direction she was going to keep from tripping over any furniture. She wore her usual evening attire, the nearly see through white robe clinging to her body. Sadi had always prided herself on the condition she kept her body in, training with the Nehtes almost daily even as a cadet. Yet since coming here five days ago, really since becoming Andro's Anome, she discovered she truly loved working out in the mornings. She, Arrarn and the Coven pilots had made this part of the routine right from the start, and it was paying off even more for her as just in five days her body had taken on more muscular definition and she was leaner. She felt better physically now than she had in her life, and she discovered that it caused Andro to take even more time to discover her body when they made love, giving her that much more pleasure.

Sadi passed her hand over the sensor on the side of the door and looked up as it opened. Her jungle green eyes grew wide when she saw who stood there.

"Carisia!" She exclaimed. She stepped half way of the door, using her wolf eyes to scan the area around the villa. "What... what are you doing? Yuri... Yuri might see you."

"I don't care anymore." Carisia spoke confidently.

Sadi took her hand without hesitation and pulled her into the bungalow, watching as the door closed and locked behind her. Sadi turned to say something and found Carisia directly in front of her, smelling of fresh rose petals and unyielding desire. Her green eyes grew wide for only a second as Carisia stepped closer and covered her lips with her own. Sadi groaned as Carisia's arms pulled her tightly against her own body and she plunged her tongue between Sadi's lips without indecision. Sadi dropped the data pad instantly and pulled Carisia to her even tighter, accepting Carisia's kiss without question and returning it with equal vigor. Their bodies molded against one another, rising heat against rising heat. Desire and want and need that could no longer be denied.

They felt each other's nipples grow stiff, Sadi's loose robe doing nothing to hinder her hardening nubs from pressing firmly against the thin light blue shirt that Carisia wore, and not preventing her own hard as rock nipples from burning into her flesh. Their tongues danced a delicious tango, Carisia's hands clamping onto Sadi's perfect ass and pulling her closer with her vampire strength. Only the need to breathe caused them to separate, a thin strand of combined saliva connecting their lips as they slowly drew back to stare into each other's eyes with unrestrained ardor.

"Where... where is Andro?" Carisia gasped.

"A... a meeting." Sadi panted.

"I... I don't want to wait anymore Sadi." Carisia spoke softly. "I... I can't wait anymore. I want you both so badly it is all I can think of anymore."

Sadi's jungle green eyes burned with intense craving. It was a sensation matched only by her yearning for the man who held her heart and soul. "We... we are the same Carisia." Sadi stammered out the words.

"Will... will he be back soon?" Carisia asked.

Sadi's smile was one filled with sexual hunger and want. "Not... not before we have started without him." She stated confidently. "He can... he can join us when he returns."

"He... he won't be angry with me?" Carisia asked innocently.

Sadi smiled. "Enylarcopri... the moment he walks in here and smells us together... our pleasure will triple this night."

Carisia's face beamed as her smile matched Sadi's. "Then we should waste no more time." She stated confidently. "I wish to explore you for as long as I can before he comes."

Sadi leaned forward and brushed her soft lips against Carisia's. "We will have eternity Enylarcopri. Eternity." Sadi gripped her hand tightly and pulled her into the bungalow further. "Come."

Carisia had no doubts anymore as her body hummed with excitement and anticipation. Her fingers entwined with Sadi as she was pulled into the bungalow and she saw where Sadi was leading her. Directly for the very large bed she could see in the next room. The knowledge of what was going to happen this night made Carisia wet with the expectation of what was to come.

An expectation she knew without a doubt would surpass any dreams she had ever had up until this point.

"Phraktos, nau mzild Toria!" Narice exclaimed as her upper body fell back onto the sweat soaked sheets, her chest heaving in exertion, the nipples of her large breasts protruding proudly upward. Her deeply tanned skin was covered in a fine sheen of sweat, her fingers entwined tightly within the silky softness of Toria's lush red hair. (Gods no more!)

Narice felt Toria's lips gently suckle her still painfully hard clit before they began the trek up her glistening body. Her heart was hammering away in her chest, the extreme pleasure she had experienced still rippling along her nerves and causing her taut thighs to quiver in the aftermath. Their days may have been filled with instruction and schooling, but their nights were filled with each other. Toria's red hair fell across Narice's well defined abdomen as she made her way back up her lover's beautifully ripped body, very mindful to make sure their flesh touched in all the right places. She made it a point to lift her upper body slightly so that their nipples brushed together and brought her knee up gently to press against Narice's still dripping mound. She lowered herself back down onto Narice, their bodies conforming to one another's wonderfully.

Narice looked at her flushed face as she opened her eyes, Toria's full lips still slick with her cum and a tiny drop of her blood. Narice moved with vampire speed, bringing her hands up and pulling Toria's lips down on hers to share a blistering kiss. Toria's groan of delight was all Narice needed to hear as she wrapped her arms around her waist then and pulled her tighter. Narice tasted herself on Toria's lips and tongue, her juices and her blood, and she could only marvel at the world this woman had opened to her in just the last week alone. Since their first night together, they could barely keep their hands from each other when they were alone, and they shared everything. The bed, the shower, almost as if they were two pieces of a problem and the only thing they lacked was the solution. Narice had let go of all her inhibitions, feeling freer now than at any other time in her life. They had even established and explored a Mindvoice connection just the two of them shared, and the more time they spent together, the more it grew in power and feeling. Narice could still sense something within Toria, within that Mindvoice connection. She still held back a small portion of herself, abilities within Mindvoice that she kept hidden and shielded very deep. It did not matter to her, for Narice knew they would soon share even their most intimate secrets with each other, and then all that would be left for them to do would be to secure the one thing both of them desired as much as they wanted each other.

Arrarn Leonidas.

Narice ran her tongue along Toria's upper lip as their kiss drew apart and she squeezed Toria's firm ass in her strong hands. "I... I never want to lose you Toria Dellion." She spoke softly.

"Nor I you Narice." Toria said in reply. She reached up and traced Narice's lips with a finger. "You were right you know." She said.

"About what?"

"Earth. This planet... these people." Toria said. "Just being here... being among them... it has opened my eyes to so many things Narice. They are so passionate in everything they do. They do not fear showing emotions; they do not fear where their hearts might take them."

"Never fear the unknown." Narice whispered.

"What?"

"It is something Carisia told me yesterday while we were studying." Narice spoke softly. "She said the difference between us and the Union. The difference between their people and ours is that they do not fear what the next day will bring. They embrace the unknown, no matter what it will bring to them. Good or bad."

Toria stared at her for a long moment. "Narice... do you know what my mission was to be coming here?" She asked.

"I assumed it was intelligence gathering about the Union STRIKERS and their many capabilities." Narice said.

Toria nodded slowly. "That was part of it yes." She said. "The other part... Narice you know I was a member of the Venorik Elghinn. Trained by them."

Narice nodded. "Yes."

"Once you are a member of the Venorik Elghinn Narice, you are always a member of the Venorik Elghinn." Toria said. "Even when you don't want to be."

"That is how you have such a strong Mindvoice presence." Narice said. "They detected this in you when you joined them. They taught you how to shield your mind even from my mother."

Toria nodded. "It was actually a directive from your mother to the Commander of the Venorik Elghinn." She explained. "There are several hundred of us spread throughout the fleet and ground forces. Specialists in intelligence mainly. They wanted individuals they could trust completely. Your mother could breach my shields if she truly wanted too. I have learned to mask my true strength within Mindvoice especially after her... after she ordered me into her bed." Toria's body relaxed more and she shifted her frame so she was laying half on Narice and half off. “My mission... the mission your mother and the Commander of the Venorik Elghinn gave to me was to come here, learn to fly their STRIKERS, learn as much as I was able about Arrarn Leonidas and his family and then... then I was to kill him and any others of his family that I was able to.” Her sky blue eyes stayed focused on Narice’s face for any sign of anger.

“But why?” Narice asked quickly. “Only they can give us what we need to train our Bonded Pairs.”

“I don’t know all of it... but I do know coming here to train our dragons is not the true purpose of why your mother came here.” Toria spoke.

“Toria... why are you telling me this?” Narice asked.

“The Commander of the Venorik Elghinn.” She answered. “Your mother gave him quite a bit of latitude in how he handled himself. I was purposely put on Tesand’s flagship so that he would notice me. They don’t trust him Narice. They think he is a traitor. It is not something that your mother is even aware of. They believe him to be the leader of the main insurgent group within the High Coven, but they fear approaching your mother. I was put there as a means to try and discover if this was in fact the case.”

“Tesand?” Narice exclaimed. “He is a military officer and totally devoted to my mother. He has neither the intelligence nor the drive to lead an insurgence against her and share her bed.”

Toria nodded. “That is what I believe as well... but he has acted suspiciously the last few years. Nothing major really... secret meetings with other officers and such, nothing which amounted to anything, but enough to have the Venorik Elghinn focus on him as much as they could without tipping off your mother. Our purpose here however, our purposes for being here are not what we think they are or have been told.” Toria said. “I don’t know why we are truly here, only that your mother and sister have ulterior motives. The Venorik Elghinn fears that Tesand will give away that purpose. They also fear what exposure to this way of life will do. The eyes it will open among our people. Your mother allowed the first slivers of another lifestyle into the open when she took power. The Venorik Elghinn fear it will grow now that we are here.”

“It is already happening.” Narice said quickly. “Among the riders anyway. We have opened ourselves more to the bonds we have with our dragons and what we are capable of. It is making many of us question what we have learned in the past.”

Toria nodded. “Then what they feared is happening. When word of this gets back to the Venorik Elghinn, they will no doubt tell your mother we need to act to bring whatever trust we have gained to an end. They want the Union involved in our war. I think we... I think we are closer to defeat than your mother or anyone will admit, and the only way to bring some relief is to involve the Union. They discovered something that made them press ahead with this mission to come here Narice. Something very important and something your mother feels is worth the risk of involving the Union. It is why your mother has bent so much to the demands that King Leonidas has made. They want the Union to enter this war for a reason that only those very close to your mother know.”

“Toria... Toria what you have told me could very well get you killed.” Narice said softly. “I am... I am a Princess of the High Coven... it is my duty to inform my mother of what you have told me.”

“I know this... but it also shows you that what I have come to feel for you is beyond trust for I have just put my life in your hands.” Toria said calmly. “You are not like your mother and sister Narice... your bond with Deneth is all the proof I need of that. I have placed my life in your hands in the hopes that you feel the same for me as I do for you. That you want to explore what we have discovered with each other and what we could have with Arrarn Leonidas just as badly as I do.”

“Oh Toria... I do.” Narice spoke without a moment’s hesitation.

“Then I have tied myself to you Narice. More completely than I have ever tied myself to anyone.” Toria said softly.

“How... how do you know I am not an agent for my mother or the Venorik Elghinn?” Narice asked.

Toria smiled. “If you were, you would never have let me feed on your blood Narice, no matter what you were willing or ordered to do. And you would never have tasted mine as you have. This relationship... what we are sharing... if your mother discovered what we have done while in this bed she would be incensed. I know that, you know that... and when you didn’t hesitate in your actions I knew you were acting of your own accord. I knew your actions were your own decisions and feelings.”

“They were and they are.” Narice said confidently as her hands left Toria’s ass and came up to grasp her face. “I will not let anything happen to you Toria. I swear this to you. Never did I expect to find what we have discovered and I embrace what I feel when I am with you. What... what we could feel in his arms." Narice laughed softly at her own words.

"What?" Toria asked.

"I am speaking of a half elf, half wolf son of my mother's greatest enemy, and I want nothing more than to feel his arms around me. To feel him filling me in ways I have only dreamed of." Narice said. "It is almost surreal."

Toria nodded. "How do you think I feel?" She said. "Finding you and what we have begun to share. Wanting him just as badly as I want you."

Narice looked at her. "Toria... Toria there is something you should know." Narice spoke. "About..."

Toria put a finger to her lips once more and shook her head. "I will never allow harm to come to you either Narice. Of that I am certain." She said. She leaned forward quickly and kissed her softly. "That is enough of this talk for tonight. I have something I want to show you." She said.

"What?"

"Sadi has told me where he trains at night." Toria said.

"Arrarn Leonidas?" Narice asked her interest peaked considerably.

Toria nodded. "He is almost religious in his routine." She said with a smile. "As long as we stay upwind of him, we can watch him and he will never know."

"Why would we want to do this?" Narice asked with a grin.

"Because like you he is the first man I have ever wanted to give myself too completely. Because like you, I find him irresistibly beautiful and because like you, just watching him makes me just as wet as it does you." Toria said.

Narice scrunched up her nose in a grin of agreement. "It does not bother you that he is so much younger than both of us? And that he is half wolf?"

Toria waggled her eyebrows with a smile. "Not if I walk around with the same smile that Queen Isabella seems to walk around with all of the time. All of the Queens for that matter. And from what I understand... it is a trait that is quite frequently passed down in Lycavorian males."

Narice laughed. "You are so bad!"

"Do I need to go watch him myself?" Toria asked.

Narice shook her head quickly. "No."

"Then we should get going." Toria said as she dropped a feather like kiss on Narice's lips. "Because I intend to have my way with you later."

SPARTA

"...never expected to hear from you again." The male Eanae spoke from the holo transmission. A humanoid bi-pedal race with very thin frames and a large bony protrusion extending upwards from their foreheads like a horn. Their skin varied in color from mud brown to dark gray, but all of them had the lamprey like mouths and either orange or red eyes. They were a peaceful race for the most part, their planet of Eode situated within the Icalro Alliance, many of them turning out to be quite proficient at smuggling, information brokering and managing credits for others.

"I could say the same about you Joyar." Vonis spoke.

The Eanae nodded. "Indeed." His eyes fell upon Isabella and Aricia who sat on either side on Vonis in the secure communications room. "I see you are keeping better company these days... at least in the looks department. Two Queens of the Lycavorian Union. Vonis I am impressed."

"Joyar... my sister Isabella." Vonis spoke. "And Queen..."

"Aricia... the pureblood soulmate of the King. Yes... I know who they are." Joyar answered evenly. "The better question is why you and they are contacting me? I haven't checked this COM unit in over twenty years Vonis, and when my servant said there was an odd beeping noise coming from within our storage room I thought the old woman had finally lost her mind."

"You don't seem the worse for wear Joyar." Vonis spoke.

“Thanks to you.” The Eanae replied. “Your warning to your network saved many lives Vonis, mine included. We thought perhaps, after word had reached us that you defected, that your mother would come after all of us. Is it true? You defected for an elven female?”

Vonis nodded. “Yes.”

They watched Joyar nod his head slowly. “We always knew you were different than your father.” He said. Joyar saw Isabella look at Vonis oddly in the transmission and he smiled. “Just before your people picked him up on Elear, Vonis here sent a coded transmission to all of us that he used as his network here in The Wilds. It gave us the time we needed to close down our assets and save many lives.”

“Joyar... it has been many years I know... but I need information.” Vonis said. “The Union is my home now... my wife and children’s home.”

The Eanae held up his clawed hand. “You need not explain to me.” He spoke. “I have no wish to get on the bad side of the Union. Not with the way King Leonidas is known to treat his enemies. I owe a debt to you... what is it you need?”

“The High Coven Insurgents that are operating out of The Wilds and in several locations along our border.” Vonis spoke.

“Word is spreading quickly out here that the High Coven is on Earth and that a Cease Fire Accord is not far from being signed.” Joyar spoke. “This was not something that many people expected from your King given his history with them. It has caused everyone to become very cautious in their dealings. Many of those who support the Union are wavering because of this fact. They see it as a betrayal of their trust.”

“What do you mean?” Aricia asked now very interested in the Eanae’s words.

“Your mate is considered by many out here to be the lone beacon of light against the oppression of the Coven.” Joyar spoke calmly. “Even though they fight a war with the Kavalian animals, the Coven still has time to oppress those within their Empire. Many think of the Union and your King to be a singular point of hope that is not lost your majesty. The one ray of lasting defiance to what the Coven is doing.”

“And they believe because the Empress is here and we may sign a Cease Fire with them that we are somehow bowing to them?” Aricia asked.

Joyar nodded. “In a manner of speaking yes.”

“Do you have the information we seek?” Isabella spoke now.

“It is possible.” Joyar replied. “Why would you want this information?”

“The insurgency conducted an attack against the Kavalians on board the King’s own ship Joyar.” Vonis spoke. “They attempted to assassinate the Kavalian Trade Delegation that was enroute here to Earth. In conducting this attack, they put the lives of For’mya Leonidas and the King’s second oldest son Resumar in extreme danger. It was a suicide mission Joyar, and these insurgents were willing to kill whoever they could to complete this mission. They failed... but it also put my mother and her cronies on a much heightened state of readiness across the board.”

Aricia leaned forward in her chair. “Their people boarded a Union transport within Union space, hijacked that transport, and killed eleven Kavalians female aides after raping them for several hours. They then boarded the King’s ship and conducted this attack. These actions alone would warrant we respond in kind, you know this.”

Joyar nodded. “Yet you are contacting me.” He said slowly. “Go on.”

Isabella looked at Vonis. “Brother?” She asked.

“Your brother saved my life and the lives of my younglings.” Joyar spoke. “He allowed many the time they needed to escape and cover their tracks when he defected. He did not leave us hanging in the vacuum of space on our own. That is a debt many of us can not repay. This transmission is more than secure if my knowledge of Union communications is worth anything. And I also know what Queen Aricia speaks is the truth. King Leonidas’s protectiveness of his Queens is well known ever out here. I most certainly have no intention of contacting the High Coven after talking with you. I hate them almost as much as I do the Kavalians. I can not in good faith put at risk others who take a more active role in pursuing their goal of one day bringing down the Coven however. You must understand.”

Isabella nodded her head. “Let’s just say all is not what it appears where it concerns the High Coven Joyar.” She spoke calmly.

Joyar's orange eyes grew a little wider at this information but aside from that he showed no emotion. "That is interesting." He spoke finally.

Vonis leaned forward. "Any information you might have on these insurgents working within The Wilds. Names. Places. Contacts."

Joyar looked at him. "What... what you ask Vonis... there is great risk involved. They are very security conscious. With good reason. They are the only group the Coven Intelligence forces have not penetrated. Their leader is supposedly very well connected and very high up within the hierarchy. He or she is called The General."

"How high?" Vonis asked.

"If I had to guess... within the Empress's inner circle if my guess is accurate." Joyar replied quickly. "And that number has dropped considerably through the years. She trusts fewer than she did when she first took power from Veldruk. Perhaps a few dozen men and women."

"Can you arrange a meeting for us? Quickly?" Isabella asked him.

"To what end?" Joyar spoke.

"Let's just say the King requires some information they have." Vonis spoke again. "And you must inform them they should not attempt anything against the Empress while she is here. There is too much chance for innocents to be injured... and that is something the King will not tolerate."

"And what should I tell them is offered in return for this information?" Joyar asked. "If I knew how to contact them that is."

"The continued ability to operate out of Union space unhindered." Isabella answered. "And perhaps... and perhaps gain a behind the scenes ally in their fight."

Joyar's orange eyes grew even wider now. "Now that is very interesting." He said.

"We must know something very soon Joyar." Vonis told him.

"How soon?"

"Within a few hours."

Joyar leaned forward and began typing into some console they could not see. "Come to these coordinates." He stated. "Four days Vonis. And bring your friends."

Vonis looked at the coordinates as they came over the small screen in front of them. Vonis looked up. "These coordinates are within The Wilds Joyar." He said. "You expect me to bring two Queens of the Union to such a meeting?"

"I know for a fact the insurgent leaders were dressed down by The General for the attack of the Kavalians on the Union King's ship." Joyar spoke. "And you need not fear for their safety for two reasons... both of them are more than capable of taking care of themselves, and together they are a target people would want to avoid. At all costs. The second reason is the insurgents are not your enemies."

Aricia placed her hand on Vonis's arm as he prepared to retort. "We will come to this meeting." She spoke. "In good faith. I suggest you tell your contacts the same thing."

Joyar nodded. "Of course." He said.

"And what do you want for arranging this meeting Joyar?" Vonis asked. "I know you too well... and this is not something you would do for nothing."

Joyar nodded. "What I want is simple." He spoke leaning forward. "Citizenship in the Union for me and all of my family. Forever. Our species does not live as long as yours and the Lycavorians Vonis. Nor those turned by your kind. I want my last years to be filled with peace and security. And I want my family safe."

"How many?" Isabella asked.

"Twenty-three." Joyar answered.

Isabella nodded without hesitation. "Have them at these same coordinates Joyar. An added incentive for you to make sure this is not a trick. If you are true to your promise and your word, you may return with us right then. Aricia and I will see to it that you want for nothing. If not... then you will die with them. And if you are not there... rest assured there will be no place for you to hide."

Joyar nodded, also without hesitation. "Then I will see you in four days."

The transmission ended abruptly and Vonis sat back in his chair. "It is a risk sister." He said.

"Did you trust him back then Vonis?" Aricia asked.

“In our business trust is a relative thing Aricia.” He answered. “I trusted him as far as I would allow myself too.”

“It is a risk that we must take.” Bella spoke.

“I agree.” Aricia said.

“Will the King share your view?” Vonis asked looking at them.

“Yes.” Aricia and Isabella spoke at the same time.

CHAPTER TWENTY

SODRAG

“Milord?” Adriana asked in a very surprised voice when she opened the door to Malic’s quarters and Andro stood there, a smallish velvet bag in his hand.

Andro smiled as he looked at her. “I hope you are settling in.” He said. “Forgive me for coming here so late... I was just returning from a briefing.”

Adriana nodded as she stepped to the side to allow him entry. “It’s not that late sire. Please... come in.”

Andro stepped into the bungalow and turned as she passed her hand over the control panel and the door slid shut. “I apologize again for being so late?”

Adriana shook her head quickly. “It’s not late for me sire.” She answered with a smile. “I...”

“Please Adriana... my name is Androcles. Or Andro for short.” He told her.

“Milord... I... I couldn’t.” Adriana spoke.

“Yes you can Adriana. I insist. I will not have Malic’s sister calling me Milord whenever I interrupt her sleep.” Andro spoke with a grin. “My mothers would be very upset with me if I did that.”

“I wasn’t sleeping Mi... Andro.” She said with a smile. “Really. I was just unpacking a few things.” She replied.

“I apologize for the lack of comforts in the bungalows, but they weren’t really designed for...”

“It is nothing.” Adriana said with a wave of her hand. “I have stayed in far worse. Malic has given me the bed which is the most important thing. At least right now.” She said dropping her hand to rub her swollen abdomen.

“How soon?” He asked.

Adriana smiled. “Three more months.” She answered. “She is our first.”

“You and your husband must be very happy. I was returning from a briefing as I said and I wanted Malic to have this.” He spoke holding up the small bag. “He will be assigned to my section within Mjolnir’s Hand and this is something I have done for all of them.”

Adriana smiled. “I think everything that happened today took its toll on them.” She said softly.

Andro looked at her oddly. “What do you mean?”

Adriana led him to the large bay window in the rear of the bungalow and pushed it open all of the way. She pointed out of the window with a smile. “We returned here after darkness fell as you asked and they studied for four more hours straight through. They fell asleep like that an hour ago.”

Andro leaned out the window and saw Vincix’s huge body leaning against the rear of the bungalow, Malic sound asleep between Vincix’s front and rear legs, his head leaning against Vincix’s midsection. Vincix’s head was resting on the ground next to Malic’s thigh, two data pads resting on Malic’s chest, three more on the ground between them. Andro leaned back into the bungalow and closed the window to keep the cool air inside.

“I’ve done that many times myself.” He said turning to look at her with a smile. “It’s not important right now.” He lifted the velvet bag. “Just make sure he gets this tomorrow before he leaves the base.”

Adriana took the bag with a nod and looked at him. “May I?”

Andro nodded. “Of course.” He said.

Adriana untied the silk cord and pulled the bag down to reveal the gold Dragon Armor plated pommel of the Nehtes. There were some intricate carvings in the hand grip, and the Nehtes looked as if it was brand new. Adriana looked up. “It is beautiful.” She said softly.

“He should find it is perfectly balanced for him and...” Andro said.

“Will he succeed Milord?” Adriana asked softly.

Andro met her eyes. “Succeed?” He asked.

“In... in Mjolnir's Hand?” Adriana asked again. “It is the only thing he has ever truly desired sire. When he... when he failed the Academy... our father was not kind to him. He was considered an embarrassment by everyone. When he told all of us he would ride a dragon one day and be a member of Mjolnir's Hand... no one believed he could accomplish it. Not even me. They even laughed at him. They thought he was too... they thought he was unintelligent. Our own father... he called him stupid.” She related the story with sadness and anger in her voice. “None of my family... our family... none of them has ever supported him as they have our other siblings. He has always been an outcast. I think they blame him for being born less than what they expected. It is why they acted as they did.”

“You mean using the drugs on him?” Andro asked.

Adriana looked at him shocked. “You... you know about that?”

Andro nodded. “My sister Eliani told me.” He said. “She is Hadarian. She was the one who discovered it several days ago. That is the past now.”

“Is it?” Adriana asked.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “Malic is bonded with Vincix now Adriana. They are bound together more tightly than normal Pairs. It is what separates Mjolnir's Hand from the rest of the Pairs in the Union. The bonds we share with our dragon brothers and sisters runs far deeper than most normal Pairs. Essentially we become a part of each other. Vincix is... was a teacher among the dragons. One of the wisest among them who is not an Elder. That knowledge is Malic's now. Malic's strength of body and his will is now part of Vincix. Their desire for the same thing is part of what pulled them together.” Andro looked at her. “Succeed? Your brother has already succeeded Adriana. We did not think we would fill the last position within Mjolnir's Hand for many years. It was only when he came onto my ship and I met him that Elynth and I were able to sense there was something more to him. Something that was crying to get out. As we drew closer to Earth it got stronger, and then even others were able to sense the pull towards each other that he and Vincix had. This was meant to be Adriana, never doubt that.”

“He will not be... he will not be slow any longer?” Adriana asked him still unable to comprehend what Andro was telling her.

Andro shook his head. “Whatever affects the drug your parents used on him as a child... whatever those affects were, they ceased being part of him the moment he and Vincix bonded. You will probably notice the changes starting tomorrow.” He said. “He will begin taking on Vincix's traits, and Vincix will take on Malic's traits. They share everything now Adriana and that includes the sum totals of their individual lives. Those traits and experiences and thoughts are now part of them and joined together as one.”

“I could feel the tremors within Mindvoice as they talked.” Adriana spoke softly. “They included me in some of what they were talking about, but for the most part they just sat next to one another looking into each other's eyes and speaking on a level I could not hope to reach.”

“Things will move quickly for them.” Andro told her. “The strength of a bond within Mjolnir's Hand accelerates everything because they are able to draw on the experiences and knowledge of all of us. You will see... come time for the ceremony welcoming him and Vincix, they will be completely different. They will have been reborn.”

“And you knew this was going to happen?” Adriana asked.

“It was already meant to be... I only helped matters along. Both of them had reached a major juncture in their lives. Vincix on whether to give up completely his one true desire to be part of us, and Malic had begun questioning all your father and mother had taught him growing up. They had begun questioning themselves, their very purpose and that is never good.” Andro spoke.

Adriana snorted softly. “It is why we are both outcasts.” She said. “Malic because of his learning deficiency and me because I chose to become the mate and wife of a vampire.”

“You followed your own path and made your decision.” Andro spoke. “Malic has now found his path. There are many who still harbor old hatreds, even among our people. It will take many centuries for that to finally be laid to rest. If ever. We can only follow what our hearts and fate have in store for us. No matter what it is.”

“And Malic?”

Andro smiled. "Malic is one of us now. Part of the Sacred Three Hundred that my father formed when dragons first came into the lives of the Union. With you and Vincix and us, he will never be alone again."

"You said this was a stepping stone to what else he wanted." Adriana said. "What did you mean?"

Andro chuckled. "Just remember this... burgundy and yellow." He said. "That is what else your brother desires. More than even he realizes."

"What is that?" Adriana asked.

"You will discover soon enough I think." Andro spoke with a smile. "Your father arrives tomorrow. He was coming to try and convince Malic to leave and he has since discovered you came here to help him stay. I have strict policies when it comes to security clearances and access to this base and your father does not have clearance to enter this base unless I give it to him."

"You... you allowed me to come here? I am not part of the military in any way." Adriana said.

Andro nodded. "Malic needed your guidance and support when I signed that order. He was reaching out to you because he had made his decision to travel down this path he is now on. He will need you even more now, as his sister, his friend and his mentor." He answered.

"Androcles... he is older than me." Adriana said.

Andro nodded. "He sees you as something else because of what you are. He reached out to you because he wants to learn. And you are a teacher. I imagine you and Vincix combined will make him a scholar."

Adriana shook her head after a moment. "It doesn't matter what my father wants." She spoke. "Our father can come here and rant all he likes but it will change nothing now. We will not change to what he wishes us to be. Not now."

Andro nodded. "Then I will allow him limited access as long as he remains on his best behavior." He took a deep breath and Adriana watched him tilt his head slightly as if catching a scent on the wind. "I... I have some other business to attend to before I do what Malic is doing." He said turning back to her with a smile. "My sister Eliani is part Hadarian as I said, and I would feel better if you went and saw her tomorrow to insure everything with the baby is fine. And to let her know you are on the base in case you need her."

Adriana nodded. "That is probably wise." She said.

"Let Malic know that my Uncle Isra will be joining him and Vincix tomorrow at some point." Andro said. "My sister Lisisa and my brother Denali will be with him as well. To help him prepare for the ceremony. The studying I will leave up to you and Vincix as the teachers."

"Thank you Milord." Adriana said softly.

Andro shook his head. "Don't thank me. If anything I should be thanking you and Malic. He has completed the Sacred Circle of Mjolnir's Hand and you were part of the catalyst for that taking place. I would imagine when they all get here you will be thanked quite a bit... so get used to it."

Adriana's eyes were wide. "They... they are coming here?" She gasped.

Andro nodded with a smile. "All two hundred and ninety-five that are off Earth. They should start arriving the morning after tomorrow. It will be quite a sight." Andro tilted his head upwards for a brief moment again and then bowed his head to her. "It is late and I will let you go now. Welcome Adriana."

"Andro... what will happen to the dragon that they... that they fought?" Adriana asked quickly.

"The dragon Elder Mother has taken him where he can recover and finally find his true path." Andro replied. "The bond he had with Yuri was forced upon him. It was not a natural event as it is with the others. He is meant for someone else. Someone he has not yet discovered. Something deep inside Vollenth's mind knew this and it was twisting him in his actions and intent as he tried to fight her control over his perceptions. It is not something easily done and it requires a great deal of Mindvoice power to accomplish. Princess Yuri is such a person. Now that Elynth and I have severed that bond, he can recover and perhaps one day he will find the person he is meant to be with." He explained to her. "As with Malic and Vincix... he will know who that individual is when they finally meet. And they will meet one day. Perhaps not for days or months or even years, but they will meet." He bowed his head slightly. "I truly need to go now. Thank you Adriana, and welcome once more."

Adriana watched him turn and exit the bungalow quickly, as if something suddenly was pulling him somewhere else. She looked at the Nehtes in her hand as she moved back to the bay window and looked once more down on the ground where her brother and the huge form of Vincix slept.

“You will never be alone again brother.” She whispered seeing the moon bathing them in a soft light. “And I will never doubt you again.”

SPARTA
GOVERNMENTAL OFFICE BUILDING
OFFICE OF QUEEN DYSEA AND QUEEN FOR'MYA

For'mya stared at Dysea's empty chair across her desk as she sipped her mug of coffee. She worried more for Dysea than the others because she was also an elf and knew well the horrors that an Immortal could inflict on a female elf if they so chose. Sexual enslavement not by force but by need. That is what an Immortal could do to a female elf. She kept her fears buried deep for she trusted Dysea's judgment explicitly, and she knew Dysea was extremely lethal when she needed to be. She was much safer with Iriral at her side, but it still did not allow For'mya to not worry completely.

She and Dysea had grown close over the past years and not just as lovers, wives and Queens to the man they both cherished so utterly. They were Queens of not only the Lycavorian Union, but also of Elear, the elven homeworld. This was not something For'mya had wanted or worked for, but it was something that Dysea had insisted on.

“You are the last of the true Elven Royal Blood For'mya; you and your father.” Dysea spoke. “It is you who should sit on this throne, not I. If you will not do so willingly, then I will make you co-Queen and we will rule our people together.”

Dysea had done just that, passing a new amendment to the Elf Constitution that named For'mya as co-Queen of Elear, and for the first time in the history of the elven people they had two rulers who they all adored. The last twenty years had seen them rule their elf homeworld together, almost never disagreeing on what they should do or how they should guide their people. And after their initial meeting and distrust of one another, Dysea and For'mya's father L'tian had grown to deeply care for and respect each other. In many ways, L'tian had become the father Dysea never knew. This is why Dysea did not blink when Anton had presented the information to her, and after she and For'mya had discussed it, they had contacted L'tian on Elear to dig further. For'mya turned her head when the small chime interrupted her thoughts and she saw it was her senior aide.

She reached out and touched the panel. “Yes Un'la?”

“Your father is on secure COM channel seven Lady For'mya.” The young female voice spoke.

“Thank you Un'la... you may put it through here.” For'mya answered as she turned in her chair to face the holo disc in the floor of their office. They had long ago torn down the wall separating the two offices between them since they were co-Queens. For'mya watched as her father's tall for an elf figure take shape and burst into existence with clear precision. “Father... I was going to contact you in another hour or so.”

L'tian's dark eyes twinkled as they always did when he looked at his daughter. She was the image of her mother in many ways and L'tian often thought of how her life had taken shape since Martin Leonidas had entered it. It was more than he could ever have hoped for as a father and his respect and loyalty for Martin Leonidas knew no bounds. “I decided I would beat you to the punch so to speak For'mya my child. Especially considering the information I have.” He stated quickly.

“You are looking well papa.” For'mya said with a smile. “I see you are finally eating what mother is feeding you.”

L'tian waved his hand. “It only took me some time to get used to all this healthy food that your mother has taken to eating.” He answered. “Have you heard from Dysea?” L'tian was one of only three that knew For'mya's and Dysea's location constantly. He was now a very senior and influential member of the Elven Parliament and the right hand to the Elf High Minister.

“She contacted Martin this morning.” For'mya answered. “Everything is proceeding as planned and she will land some time this evening our time.”

“I don't know how comfortable I am with Dysea among Immortals.” L'tian spoke. “Even those that Martin Leonidas says are trustworthy.”

“I would imagine you are feeling exactly how I feel.” For’mya stated. “I worry for her, but I also know she is more than capable of taking care of herself.”

L’tian nodded his head. “Yes... that is without question.” He said. “I was able to obtain the information you and she requested of me. And quite a bit more.”

“Tell me.” For’mya said.

“It would appear that this Las’elh is correct For’mya.” L’tian spoke. “At least given the information you received from her and after speaking with Minister Cunlaut.”

“He admitted this?” For’mya asked stunned.

L’tian nodded. “After I told him you and Dysea threatened to bring him up on charges of treason if he did not tell us everything yes.” He answered. “Las’elh is right... the transport her sister and Cunlaut’s daughter were on was not destroyed. It was hijacked by at least two dozen unknown individuals. They acted swiftly and precisely and were able to subdue the crew and passengers before they were able to react. Definitely not Immortals. According to Cunlaut’s daughter it was done with surgical precision and then they checked the manifest thoroughly before deciding that to keep an elven Minister’s daughter was not in their best interests. They put her in an escape pod with instructions she was to say nothing except that the ship was destroyed. They told her they would be watching her and if she said anything else they would kill everyone they took hostage and then find her and kill her and her entire family. The young woman was petrified For’mya. She still is. I practically had to force the truth from her. I did some checking and we have lost nine ships in the last ten years alone to so called accidents that were questionable at best. When I cross referenced this information among Netnews reports and other official documents I discovered three Hadarian ships and two Acamarian ships that were lost during the same time period. All of them carried elves, and the two Hadarian ships carried some rather advanced medical equipment as well.”

For’mya leaned forward in her chair now. “How many total?” She asked.

“If the manifests were accurate, four hundred nineteen.” He answered. “All of them listed as transport accidents and with the exception of Cunlaut’s daughter, all of the passengers listed as killed in the accidents.”

“That she was the only survivor did not raise questions?” For’mya asked. “Her ship had more than enough escape pods to accommodate the entire passenger manifest. Only one of them returns and with only one survivor and nothing is investigated as to why?”

“The Commander of EI is a boyhood friend of Cunlaut. He knows what happened and to keep Cunlaut and his daughter safe he buried the other incidents and never pressed forward with investigations.” L’tian said. “He is also the one that pushed to get Las’elh vetted out of EI in an attempt to keep her quiet.”

“Sending an EI Recovery Team to Talbor Seven to collect Las’elh is in no way following the directives Dysea and I laid out for their use!” For’mya snapped as she came to her feet. “What was he going to do if she refused to accompany them peacefully? Silence her?”

L’tian watched as she moved to the counter in the office and refilled her mug of Aricia’s coffee. He sipped his own tea as he watched her quietly. He knew his daughter well, and in the time since Martin had turned her they had grown even closer. The daughter he had once known no longer existed, the wolf blood now flowing in her veins making her more passionate about everything. She was still very much in control of her emotions in the typical elven fashion, but there were times when she and Dysea both let their wolf blood come rising to the surface.

“Given that these unknown individuals were able to act with such impunity within Union territory tells me they had help.” L’tian said. “It would not be a stretch to imagine they could follow through with their threat if they so chose to.”

For’mya turned back to look at the image. “And we have no idea who they were?” She asked.

L’tian shook his head. “None. Cunlaut’s daughter says they all wore full face helmets that hid their features. She said they were all large and muscular but she was almost certain they were not Immortals.”

“So some other group is out there targeting elves.” For’mya spoke. “Mercenaries?”

“I also checked the records for all major spaceports within the Union for the last three years since the end of the war.” L’tian said. “There have been no ships reported missing or disappearing under suspicious circumstances in that time. If it was mercenaries... why would they stop after being so successful?”

“Fourteen ships in a decade.” For’mya said. “Perhaps they were frightened that we would catch on to what was happening. You know how Martin regards mercenary scum.”

L'tian nodded. "Not much higher than insects if my memory serves me correctly." He answered. "That must be a trait that is unique to those who come from Earth... Anja, Dysea, Tarifa, all of them seem to consider mercenaries and pirates with particular vitriol."

"Did any of the Hadarian medical equipment appear on the Black Market lists in The Wilds?" For'mya asked.

L'tian shook his head. "Not on any of the lists that Armetus provides to us." He said.

"That is odd." For'mya said. "Hadarian medical technology is highly regarded by everyone. It could have brought them a great deal of wealth."

"That is the other thing For'mya..." L'tian said. "Armetus's people keep track of things like that, yet there has not been a huge influx of elven slaves into the market. Part of that is because of how Martin regards slavery and many have stopped targeting elves and other species altogether, but I find it odd that not one of these elves that were taken has appeared in the slave pits or underground channels and fed this information back to us."

"Well... they had to have been receiving some sort of help from within the Union." For'mya spoke. "Our civilian flight plans are not secret, but nor are they easy to obtain without the proper clearances."

"Can Armetus have some people check on it?" L'tian asked.

For'mya shook her head. "Between what Anton and Cihera are working on, the High Coven and Kavalian delegations here on Earth and trying to confirm the Coven intelligence, the Krypteria is stretched very tightly. I do not want to saddle Armetus with another task that would not draw a priority. These events are troubling... but nothing has happened in the last three years and that would not warrant drawing resources from other tasks."

"Then I will handle it." L'tian spoke. "With yours and Dysea's permission and authority, let me take care of it."

"Papa... you are not an intelligence operative." For'mya spoke.

"No... but the Commander of the EI is." L'tian said. "I do not condone what he has done For'mya... but I do understand it. Let me give him an opportunity to make things right. If he knows we have yours and Dysea's full support, I can tackle the political side of it and leave him to discover what he can using EI assets. This does appear to be targeted at elves."

"Does he know Las'elh is with Anton and Cihera?" For'mya asked.

L'tian shook his head. "That was not something I deemed he needed knowledge of."

"You do realize Papa; if you get yourself injured in any way mother and Martin Leonidas will confine you to your home on Elear." For'mya said with a grin. "The better to control you."

L'tian chuckled. "I have no doubt of that." He said.

For'mya nodded. "Very well... I will cut you authorization orders and transmit them to you within the hour. Make it very clear to him that he answers to you Papa. And if he attempts to hide anything else I will have his elf ass arrested and he will be tried here on Earth in a Spartan court."

"I will let him know." L'tian said.

"Where will you start?" For'mya said.

"I am going to get a list of passengers and while he tracks down the names I will try and find the cargo manifests of the ships and determine if this Hadarian equipment has turned up in some of the more unusual places." L'tian said. "You are dealing with the Kavalian delegation daughter... and you need to be focused. Rumors are already starting to circulate that Lisisa told them where to go this morning. The Netnews channels seem to have an inside source and they have been hinting at some rather harsh words and actions that were exchanged this morning between the two parties."

For'mya nodded. "They are trying to use the fact that Pleistarchus is her father to force Kavalian citizenship upon her so that they can gain access to her personal belongings and such. It is my understanding Kavalian females are not afforded many rights."

L'tian nodded. "I had heard this as well." He said. "I take it Lisisa told them what to do with their demands?"

For'mya smiled. "With a little assistance from Denali, yes." She replied. "Though if my perception of this Jiss and Matuarr is accurate they will push their agenda regardless."

“Be mindful For’mya... someone there is leaking this information to the many Netnews channels.” L’tian said. “Something was mentioned about using the Galactic Courts to force Lisisa to do their bidding.”

“We will be mindful father... don’t worry.” She stated. “You just continue to eat what mother places in front of you and stay out of harm’s way.”

It was L’tian’s turn to laugh and he nodded his head. “I will deal with this and you can let Dysea know that as well.”

“Keep me advised of what is happening.” For’mya said.

“Always.” L’tian answered. “I will contact you back as soon as I find something.”

For’mya nodded as the image of her father faded from the disc and she moved back to settle in the chair behind her desk. She sipped her coffee before passing her hand over the desktop control panel. “Un’la... someone is feeding the Netnews channels information they should not have yet.” She spoke evenly. “Have Durcunusaan Security check all outgoing communications from the Senate Meeting room and offices.”

“Yes Milady.” The voice answered. “Right away.”

“And advise Deia I will be a few minutes late for our meeting. I want to check on the little ones before Aurith and I fly over to her office.” For’mya said.

“I will tell her thirty minutes then Lady For’mya?” Un’la’s voice held some small humor in it.

For’mya chuckled. “You know me too well Un’la.” She said.

“I will see to it Lady For’mya.” Her aide replied.

SODRAG

“Sadi... f’sarn... gi phraktos... f’sarn aluin... ulu doer 'sohna!” (Oh gods I’m going to come again)

Carisia’s body arched off the bed once more as the orgasm thundered through her lithe frame. Her body was glistening in the light of the moon bathing the bedroom, the very dim illumination globes adding to the dreamlike atmosphere. Her large breasts rose proudly upward as her back domed off the bed, her nipples burning hot points, even as her abdomen clenched almost painfully and her mouth opened in a breathless scream as her sweet come erupted from her body in riotous waves. Her normally maya blue colored eyes were now the cobalt blue color of her vampiric nature, her long fangs completely exposed. This almost violent explosion was unlike any of the others that Sadi had given her this night. It was so much more powerful and staggering, Carisia sure that her muscles would rip through her skin as she clenched the edges of the soft mattress until her knuckles were white.

Carisia had never been with a woman before this night, and Sadi had only the one tryst with Teeria all those years ago. This fact in no way dampened their desire and need for each other and once they fell upon the bed together, they both succumb to what they wanted so desperately. Their exploration had begun slowly as Sadi peeled Carisia’s clothes from her one piece at a time. By the time Carisia was completely naked on the bed next to her, Sadi had long ago discarded the thin robe she wore and their flesh was touching in numerous places. Their exploration had begun with kisses. Sizzling kisses of love, discovery and passion. They were kisses that ignited inside Carisia what had been lying dormant for so long, an unquenchable need that Androcles’s kiss had awakened and almost released. She knew now that he had held back when he had kissed her, something Sadi was not doing in the least. Sadi’s lips were wonderfully soft and tasted faintly of sweet spices, her warm tongue deliciously talented in its movements and the sensations it had caused. Sadi had wasted no time, the burning need in her now ruling her actions. As Carisia withered on the bed beneath her ministrations, Sadi had used her lips and tongue to seek out and find what she wanted. They had danced across Carisia’s wonderfully large breasts, teasing and nibbling on her stiff nipples as her hands had caressed and explored her legs and ass.

The moment Sadi had tasted Carisia’s passion she knew she was hooked. Her pussy was lusciously bare, her labia fully inflamed in lustful passion of her own. Her clit was protruding arrogantly demanding attention, and Sadi willingly lavished that nub with unabashed attention. She encased it within her soft lips and battered it mercilessly with her tongue as her fingers caressed featherlike along Carisia’s smooth silky pussy lips, tracing up one side and down the other before she slipped two fingers deeply into Carisia’s tight tunnel and the floodgates opened fully, and Sadi drank her passion like a fine wine.

Carisia may have only been five foot two and a hundred and ten pounds soaking wet, but she was also a pureblood vampire, with all the strength and skills of her species. It took several minutes after that first explosion and eruption of her essence before she could form concise thoughts again, but then the only thought she had was how badly she wanted to taste this woman. Using her vampire speed and strength, it had been nothing to turn the tables on Sadi, flipping her over onto the bed and then stretching her body out on top of her. After an incredible kiss, a kiss in which Carisia tasted herself on Sadi's lips, she began her own trek downward to the treasure she so desired. It took her forever to explore Sadi's flesh, stopping to fondle and knead Sadi's incredible breasts and suckle her hard nipples. She lavished Sadi's well defined abdomen with long licks and strokes of her tongue as she slid lower between her beautifully tanned and firm thighs. When she saw the incredible tattoo adorning the flesh just above Sadi's visibly excited and moist pussy Carisia wondered if she had perhaps died and gone to paradise. She attempted to focus and inexperienced as she may have been, she tried to do the exact same thing Sadi had done to her to make her quiver and cry out. Sadi's fingers had entwined in her radiant raven black hair, pulling Carisia's head closer as her breathing began to quicken. It happened almost instantly when Carisia plunged two fingers deeply into Sadi's already soaked pussy. Sadi's body went completely rigid, her hips undulating powerfully, shoving her spasming pussy hard against Carisia's face and she erupted as well. Carisia's eyes closed in blissful satisfaction as Sadi's sweetness flooded across her lips and tongue, and like Sadi had done, Carisia drank the passion down without hesitation.

That had begun three very long and nonstop hours of delightful entertainment. They were unable to get enough of each other, causing each other to explode more times than they could remember. Carisia took a slightly more dominant role, for when they were locked together she was always on top of Sadi. The bed sheets were long since torn from the edges and soaked in their sweat and residual excitement, something neither of them were concerned about in the least.

Carisia blinked several times, her eyes wide in wonderment. What had she done to her to make this orgasm so much more powerful? She could still feel lips delicately caressing her still aroused pussy, Sadi's tongue slowly dragging along to capture any drops that may have escaped her lips. As her mind once more came into focus she felt the tongue more keenly now and it was wider and moved with dominance. Her eyes grew a little wider when she felt soft brush of hair against the insides of her thighs and she reached down to grasp Sadi's head and pull her up for a kiss.

Carisia's eyes grew even wider as her fingers found not long silky blond hair, but soft short midnight black hair. She lifted her head instantly even as she saw Sadi's face drop next to her from the side with a loving smile. Carisia's cobalt blue eyes filled with unleashed ardor and worship when she saw Andro lift his face from between her thighs with a ravishing smile, her juices coating his lips and the goatee he wore.

"A... Andro!" She gasped even as he nuzzled the insides of her taut thighs which were thrown over his shoulders and she realized it was Androcles that had just given her the most crushing orgasm of the night. She had been so enveloped within what was happening to her she had not even realized that he had entered the room and Sadi had gleefully surrendered her place between Carisia's thighs to him.

Sadi chuckled as she traced her tongue along Carisia's ear. "I told you he was talented Carisia." She said in a husky whisper.

"How... how did..."

Sadi nuzzled Carisia's cheek before taking her head in her hands and turning her face to look at her. Sadi then kissed her intensely; one hand dropping down to cupped her breast and pinch her nipple. "You didn't think our mate and husband would not smell us together even from across the base did you?" Sadi asked as she drew back her lips, tickling Carisia's top lip with her tongue. "That he would not feel us and our pleasure within Mindvoice?"

"Our... our mate and... and husband?" Carisia exclaimed softly as she felt herself responding to Sadi's passionate kiss.

Sadi nodded with a brilliant smile. "Ours... Enylarcopri." She spoke in a seductive whisper. "And I don't think you will be disappointed."

Carisia turned her head once more when she saw Andro rise from between her thighs, gently lowering her legs back to the bed. He was completely naked, his glorious body totally exposed for her eyes to take in. As her eyes wandered over his magnificently sculpted body, Carisia felt her own desire surge to the forefront once more. Her cobalt blue eyes lowered and grew wider still as she saw his equipment. It protruded dominantly to her eyes, so very long and thick and pulsing with desire and passion all its own. Compared to what she saw before her, what would soon be filling her, Thast's ridiculously small tool was beyond insignificant. It flashed briefly across her mind now why Lycavorian women were so completely devoted to their men. Carisia watched as Andro slowly moved onto the bed on his knees between her wide spread legs, his fingers dragging along her thighs and causing delightful shivers to skitter across her flesh. He moved closer to her, leaning over to drop his hands on either side on her hips until his handsome face was directly in front of hers, with Sadi's looking just over her shoulder. Carisia's heart was racing now, her cobalt blue eyes filled with renewed lust and want.

"I am going to make you ours now Enylarcopri." He spoke softly, his voice like wind chimes moving in the breeze yet commanding in tone and intent, as his lips came within inches of hers.

Carisia whimpered softly. "I... I already am yours." She hissed out the words gently as his head lowered to nuzzle the hollow of her throat.

"Not just yet." Sadi's voice whispered in her ear.

Andro's heart was pounding out of control within his chest, Sadi's sweet sugar plume and spice scent was sending his senses into overload mode as they always did. When saturated with Carisia's scent of newly blossoming rose petals as it was now, all conscious thought and decision making left him. He had heard their cries of zeal within Mindvoice, and as soon as he entered the bungalow, he was overwhelmed with the heavy scent of their combined passions. They had drawn him like a moth to a flame, and he had come without question or thought. He lifted his lips to capture Carisia's sweet rose tasting ones and what little control he had left evaporated when he tasted their combined juices on her soft pink lips.

Andro brought his hands under her thighs, leaning forward even more to push her back onto the bed, and with a single will crushing plunge he sank all twelve inches of his thick cock into Carisia. Her most recent orgasm still coated her tightness and it provided him all of the lubrication he needed to slam home fully into her depths. Her lips tore away from his, her eyes wide and she screamed in untainted ecstasy as her arms flew around his broad shoulders.

"Ahhhhhhhhhh!" The sound escaped her lips. "Vith uns'aa! Morfeth uns'aa dossta ussta ssinsrrigg!" (Fuck me! Make me yours my love.)

Carisia screamed as every wonderfully thick and throbbing inch of Androcles Leonidas sank into her depths and stole her mind, her heart and her very soul. Whatever lingering doubts that may have occupied the dark reaches of her mind were quickly smashed aside as his powerful arms completely wrapped underneath her waist and pulled her petite frame even closer to his scorching hot body. All ability to think with clarity was lost to her then as Andro began to drive into her with dominating power and divinely rapturous twelve inch strokes. Tears clouded her tightly shut eyes as she realized this was not merely a coupling of mutual desire and need. Andro was making her his, molding her to him and holding nothing back. She could feel every throbbing millimeter of his shaft as it filled her. Every vein as it pressed against the spasming walls of her pussy. He was larger than she had ever imagined him to be, yet he filled her so completely and without the slightest inkling of pain. He stretched her, shaped her to fit around his wonderful cock, and it was all she could do just to keep her heart from exploding at the devastating pleasure ripping through her at this very moment.

And then her heart did explode.

It exploded with emotions and feelings that she had never dreamed existed as three minds flooded together and they entwined the fabrics of their lives irrevocably. Carisia could feel Sadi's head drop to the opposite side of where Andro had tucked his face into her neck, her soft lips dancing across her ear and neck driving her to even higher heights of pleasure. As their Mindvoice shields mingled and combined and their collective power reached outward against those shields all three of them sensed it in the recesses of their minds. A fourth presence that was nearby and so very attuned to them. Attuned to them in a way it should not have been. Three minds probed outward, their collective power searching for that fourth presence. The contact had been fleeting but their united power allowed them to find that thread once more. It was suddenly lost to them however as their physical pleasure regained prominence in their minds and nothing but reaching for that pinnacle mattered anymore.

Andro was on the edge; Carisia's tightness and clenching heat far too much like Sadi's own pussy to allow him much in the way of control. He lifted his head from the crook of her shoulder and neck, one arm reaching for his Anome. Sadi did not hesitate as his lips claimed hers, stretching her body out to press against both their frames. Andro groaned loudly within their kiss as his cock swelled larger within Carisia's depths.

Carisia's eyes opened in blissful abandon, her fangs extended and prominent. She saw them kissing passionately, felt Andro's cock grow impossibly large inside her, felt Sadi's lush body pressed against both of theirs. And finally, just as Andro's burning come exploded from his deeply buried cock, Carisia snapped her fangs shut on his thick neck, piercing his jugular and flooding her mouth with his warm and heavenly tasting blood.

This action sent all three of them into volcanic eruptions, Sadi experiencing the first of what would be many orgasms simply because their three minds were so completely joined and she could feel every ebb of pleasure that shuddered through them. Andro's come blasted into Carisia's womb with electrifying force, and tears leaked from her tightly shut eyes. They could feel each other's pleasure racing through their minds to every corner of their beings, and without conscious thought they past that pleasure to another.

Andro crushed Sadi closer to him if that was even possible, even as his other hand held Carisia's head tightly to his neck. Sadi's lips claimed his as Carisia fed ecstatically on his blood even as her body shuddered in a mind numbing orgasm and she felt Sadi's pussy humping their hips, her juices coating their skin. They collapsed onto the bed a few moments later, Carisia sensuously drawing her tongue across the two puncture marks in Andro's neck, sealing the twin holes in his neck. As she drew her head back, Sadi's lips found hers once more and they shared a blistering kiss of love and commitment as he lowered them to the bed. Their limbs entwined together, Andro's powerful arms drawing both of them into his embrace as they basked in the aftermath of what would become the beginning of not only their future, but the future of their bonded ones as well.

Carisia drew her lips away from Sadi's and she looked at them with bright cobalt blue eyes, the tips of her fangs still very visible.

"Please... please tell me we are not finished." She gasped softly.

Andro grinned as he looked at Sadi and then back to Carisia. "Finished?" He said finally.

"Enylarcopri... we have..."

"Only just begun." Sadi finished his statement.

Anthar snorted heavily into the wind, trying to shake the sensations coursing through him. They were so powerful, unlike any emotions he had felt from his bonded sister ever before. She had finally found the love she had so desired, but neither of them expected the feelings and emotions to channel to him as well. It was not something he was prepared for, and he had taken to the calm skies to try and push the passion and desire from his mind, and subdue his own feelings of desire and want for a certain obsidian scaled female. He sliced through the skies, reciting the classes and calculations that Vincix had taught them over and over to escape the burning of his own blood. He had changed so much since coming here to this planet, his diet now allowing him to fully mature into the muscular form he now had. His sixteen meter long body had filled out incredibly since arriving on Earth and being able to feed on the protein rich food and prey they were allowed to hunt here. He was faster and stronger than before, his mind sharper with the new skills Vincix had taught them all. The calculations and equations of flight that they had once lacked was now theirs, and it was rapidly becoming second nature and instinct as he adjusted his flight to compensate for the less dense air this high up. His powerful wings beat easily, driving his four metric tone body higher with ease. Since coming here, the bond he shared with Carisia had grown nearly five fold in power and clarity, and that is why even through their natural shields he was feeling her pleasure and happiness and joy. Their minds had mingled even more as the days passed, making their connection stronger and focused. Unfortunately, that bond was now why he was experiencing the same passion and desire she was, but his feelings were directed toward one he had wanted more than anything since the day her golden eyes first penetrated his dreams. The stronger the emotions coming from Carisia, the stronger his desire for Elynth grew; until he could almost feel her hazel musk scent no matter which way he turned.

It was maddening to him, for he did not believe that Elynth would even feel the same as he did. She was far more refined a dragon than any he had ever encountered, and considerably more powerful.

Yet it was all Anthar could do to get her smooth obsidian scales out of his head this night and that was why he had taken to the skies.

An attempt to forget about her. An attempt that was not succeeding in the least.

It was so much more powerful.

Elynth had been able to block it from her mind when Andro and Sadi had come together, though only barely so intense was their love for each other. Now... with Carisia joining them as well, their combined Mindvoice powers were battering her shields in a way nothing ever had. Elynth had listened to Tharua describe her first time with Jeth, pretending she was asleep while Tharua related their coupling to Arydun in a hushed whisper within Mindvoice. It only made the deep set feelings she had for Anthar push closer to the surface. She had dismissed the dreams of him for so long, until he had come here to Earth and she had seen him. Never had she seen a more handsome male dragon in her young life, and there were dozens of their kind that wanted to court her. Most were too afraid to approach her father for his permission and thus remained away, and Elynth's indifferent attitude towards them also was part of why none had yet formally approached her. Elynth now knew why she acted as she did.

The cerise colored Anthar.

He had been part of her dreams for so long, and now that he was actually here among them and so much more handsome than in her dreams, Elynth was beside herself with trying to push her own desire and passion to the back. It had almost worked, at least up until tonight. She should have expected it, the intensity of what she would feel, but she knew there was no way she could have suppressed it for very much longer.

Perhaps it is time to follow our own path sister. Andro's voice had filled her mind just before he returned home this night. She could sense the building passion within him as he drew closer to Sadi and Carisia. I will not walk in my father's shadow any longer. It is time for me to reach for and grab what I want. Time for us to reach for and grab what we want sister. Anthar is what you want isn't he Elynth?

Yes. She had answered without a blink of hesitation.

Then let us grab what we want sister.

Elynth had made for the pens immediately after that conversation, only to find that Anthar had taken to the skies already, unable to hide the burning of his blood. She had followed instantly, pulling herself high and trying to find him within Mindvoice. It wasn't hard for her to do, and she pulled close to him from underneath watching as he snorted and shook his head trying to fight the sensations within him. Elynth felt them as well, her heart racing as she flew along beneath him and to his rear. Her golden eyes watched with increasing desire as long his muscular form moved with each beat of his wings. He was larger than the average Firespitter by at least a meter, and would probably grow another meter or two over the course of the next few hundred years, but that would only add to his beauty in her eyes. He kept going higher in a losing effort to fight what she knew he was feeling, for she felt it rippling through her body as well.

Andro was right.

And now was the time she needed to act and grab what she wanted.

Anthar banked slightly, rolling onto his back, his magenta colored eyes staring at the moon. He was at thirty-three thousand feet and still his blood was racing and burning. He snorted loudly and trumpeted out in the darkness in anger directly at the moon.

Why can't I fight it! He bellowed out in Mindvoice.

For the same reason I can't fight it. The soft female voice echoed in his thoughts. Anthar rolled over instantly, his magenta eyes sweeping the sky all around him. I want it more than I want to fight it.

Anthar's keen eyes swept left and right of him, and he dipped his wings slightly to shift course, scanning the empty sky all around. Elynth?

Anthar? Her voice was like music to his mind.

Where... where are you? What are you doing up here?

Making a decision I have been denying for a long time. Elynth answered. And I have been fighting the same things you are fighting right now.

I can't block them! Anthar exclaimed. No matter what I do... I can't block them! It's too powerful!
Why... why do you want to block these feelings Anthar? She asked her voice in his mind still whisper soft. Why not surrender to them?

Because it is you I want! It is you that has filled my dreams for so long! Just like Andro has filled Carisia's! He screamed out. And I am not good enough for you! He heard her chuckle softly within Mindvoice. And you laugh at me now!

Not at you my handsome Anthar. At us.

What... what do you mean?

We are the bonded dragons to two of the strongest Mindvoice users alive Anthar. And when they have decided to surrender all that they are to each other, we still fight what we know is meant to be. Elynth spoke. What our own bodies and minds tell us is meant to be. Why do you think that is?

Elynth... He began.

I desire you just as strongly as you desire me my handsome Anthar. She spoke with a husky voice filled with desire and want.

Do not play with me! He snapped out.

Look down you fool male! Elynth commanded. She waited for his head to whip around and turn downward where she flew beneath him not ten meters away. You are so clouded with trying to deny what you want that you let me get this close to you undetected. I want you just as badly as you want me Anthar.

Why do you tease me Elynth! He demanded in a subdued tone.

Elynth took a deep breath and rolled inverted so that the lighter obsidian colored scales of her belly was exposed to him, as well as her sex, which was swollen with excitement and passion. She smiled inwardly at hearing his audible intake of breath even as fast as they were flying and knew then her decision was the right one. I tease you because you are who I want as well Anthar.

Elynth propelled herself slightly ahead of him and adjusted her flight to ease up within a meter of his snout. It was here that she released a heavy burst of her female scent into the air directly into his snout just as her mother had told her to do. Isheeni had told her daughter it would send her father into passionate fits when she did that to him, but because she was mated it would not draw any other males. Elynth was not yet mated and her scent would carry that fact until she did mate. Anthar's magenta eyes exploded open as her hazel musk scent and desire spilled across his muzzle. His eyes narrowed a little as he heard her chuckle softly.

You are who I want Anthar, and you had better take me before my scent draws every unmated dragon within a thousand kilometers. Elynth spoke the words that set herself free just as her bonded brother had.

Elynth are you...

Elynth released another more sustained burst of her scent directly into his snout before he had even finished his sentence. I desire no one but you Anthar! Now take me you fool male... and mark my scent as yours so that others do not come here thinking I just gave them an open invitation! I desire no one's attentions but yours!

Anthar snorted loudly and peeled up and away from her. Elynth's eyes filled with worry as she watched him draw away quickly, and then they filled with anticipation as she watched him roll over and plunge towards her.

Elynth's eyes nearly bulged from her head and she let loose with a trumpet of unabashed pleasure and passion as Anthar slammed into her, his huge cock guided by instinct along and penetrating her fully. Pleasure unlike any her mother had tried to describe tore through her body and she clamped her talons into Anthar's armor like scales, attempting to draw him even deeper. He bellowed out his own trumpet of passion that rolled across the clouds like an echo before folding his wings around her, collapsing her wingspan within his and they plummeted towards the ground far below. Elynth wrapped her long neck around his as they fell, her golden eyes ablaze with heavy passion and she clamped her teeth onto his shoulder as his huge organ stroked into her with deliberate thrusts, filling her more completely than Elynth thought possible. The pleasure seared across her mind and her eyes became heavy with arousal and the burning of her dragon blood for this male who was making her his.

Gone was the hesitant nature and questioning personality. Now Elynth's talons dug deeper when he tried to withdraw, and they pulled him even closer when he rammed back in. Her fangs left his shoulder as the first orgasm of her life caused her to trumpet her joy to the moon, her pleasure amplified by Anthar's organ swelling within her depths and filling her with his searing hot seed.

They parted still several thousand feet above the earth, both of them snapping into parallel turns away from each other. Elynth found herself suddenly very weak and she made for the small clearing on the top of the mountain below. She flared her wings and alighted gently, her heart still racing out of control. A sensation of not being fulfilled washed over her as she flared her wings suddenly. That could not be it she thought to herself. It can not be over. She could not have been wrong about what she felt for him. He was the one... but the sense of fulfillment was not there. It...

Elynth?

She turned quickly and Anthar was upon her again, knocking her over onto her back and slamming himself into her once more. She bellowed out her joy into the dark sky, his talons lowering her gently to the soft dirt beneath them as his massive cock filled her to overflowing once more. And then his mind opened and filled her completely and Elynth saw all that he was, all that he knew and all that he wished for. Foremost among that was her love.

His trumpet echoed hers as her talons gripped him tightly, drawing him tighter; not wanting to lose what was coursing through every fiber of her being. Her wings beat the ground madly in blissful delight, her tail slamming against the grass in rapid succession as he thrust into her with dominating power. This is what she had dreamed; the total and unconditional devotion Anthar was showing her by opening his mind to her. Even as their physical bodies were joined in carnal delights, their minds joined in idyllic bliss. His powerful thrusts were more measured and controlled as he plunged into her swollen sex, keeping her poised on the edge, every nerve singing out. His magenta colored eyes remained focused on her beautiful dragon snout, even as her golden orbs fluttered in ecstasy. And then the pleasure spiraled out of control and they both lifted their heads to the night sky and bellowed out their release and pleasure. Anthar hunched against her, holding himself deeply buried within her sex, her talons pressing hard against his scales and even drawing blood in several spots. As his huge wings flared out and then gently arched around to wrap her within their embrace, Elynth felt her eyes become moist. Though they could not cry as most species did, for they lacked the major tear glands, her golden eyes did become very moist and she lifted her wings inside Anthar's huge span. Her wings formed an inner embrace contained by his wings and Elynth sighed joyously as his large body came to rest on top of hers. Her golden eyes fluttered heavily, and it was only moments before both of them drifted into the peaceful embrace of sleep. Anthar's voice filled her mind just before sleep took her and his words made her heart sing out in unabashed love and devotion.

For eternity my beautiful Elynth. He spoke. For eternity.

SPARTA

"...is not turning out to be a very relaxing vacation." Martin told Aricia and Isabella as they stood on the tarmac behind the transport that would take them up to MJOLNIR'S HAND. They had had a relatively quiet dinner the night before, and after putting the children to sleep they had gathered in their bedroom, all of them content to simply be naked and lying together in some fashion.

Aricia laughed softly. "When was the last time we had a true vacation Beloved?" She asked.

"It's been a while." He answered. "I really did mean for the five of you to take week in Gytheio after we got settled."

"Then when everyone has returned you can make it up to us." Bella said. "And we will hold you to that offer."

"I will keep that bargain." He said with a smile. "The five of you need your girl time together... I know that."

"Girl time?" Isabella asked as she rolled her eyes.

Martin grinned. "Best thing I could come up with so quickly." He pulled them both close to him and they instinctively pressed against either side of his muscular body. "How long will you be gone?" Martin asked.

“A week... no more.” Aricia answered. “This meeting is not far into The Wilds and we will eliminate much of the travel time by Jumping to Gate Thirty-three and crossing the border through Bontawillian space under Shroud.”

“Have Komirri keep the Strike Wing Shrouded unless you come under attack.” Martin told them. “There’s no sense in letting anyone know how many ships we travel with.”

Aricia reached up and ran her hand down the shoulders of his ArmorPly body armor, the crimson color on his shoulders signifying that Mjolnir’s Hand was once more at full strength. “When is the ceremony?” She asked.

“Two days.” Martin answered with a proud smile. Aricia and Isabella Leonidas knew what Mjolnir’s Hand meant to him as a complete unit, and to finally see it at full strength once more filled their mate and husband with pride. “Andro and Elynth did well. Malic and Vincix were hidden right under our noses and they will make a powerful addition.”

“Has anyone told Dalah yet?” Aricia asked.

Martin shook his head. “Arzoal wants to surprise her.” He replied. “And they need these three days to fully complete their bond.”

“Vonis is relative certain we can trust this Joyar.” Bella spoke softly. “We will be fine m'ranndii. You agree with our deal I take it?”

Martin nodded without hesitation. “Of course.” He stated. “When have I ever second guessed either one of you? Any of you for that matter?”

“It’s nice to know we have such control over you Beloved.” Aricia said in a husky voice.

Martin nodded and pulled Isabella closer to him, kissing her passionately as Aricia watched with a happy smile. Isabella drew back and caressed his face for a moment staring into his eyes with a loving smile.

“We will see you soon.” She said. “Contact us if you hear from ussta she-elf?”

Martin nodded. “You know I will.” He said.

Isabella nodded and kissed him once more and then turned and headed for the transport leaving him with Aricia. Martin waited until she was out of earshot before speaking.

“She is worried about Dysea Saaurano.” Martin said turning back to look at Aricia.

Aricia nodded slowly. “Yes... but she trusts in Dysea’s and your judgment completely.” She replied. “That doesn’t mean she does not worry though.”

“I do know the feeling there.” He stated.

“Beloved... be mindful of what is happening with Anja.” She said softly. “There is something bothering her. Something that she is not telling us because she does not want us to worry.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “What do you think it is?”

Aricia shook her head. “She is almost as good as you at brushing things off.” She said. “I think this time whatever the Elders are doing has her concerned more than she is letting on. You have felt her anger... just on the edges of her aura?”

Martin nodded. “Yes... but I did not want to press her on it.”

“That they would even suggest something like taking our children from us tells me there is more to what is going on.” Aricia said. “Perhaps more than even Anja sees.”

“I will be mindful.” He said drawing her into his full embrace. Aricia smiled brightly and wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders. “When you return Aricia Leonidas... I am going to take you into the mountains and curl your toes. Just my Anome and I.”

“Hmmm... that sounds very promising.” She told him in a husky voice. Aricia covered his lips with her and kissed with scorching passion and promises of pleasures to come. She nibbled on his bottom lip before nuzzling his neck firmly. “I will see you when we return.”

“Yes you will.” He stated.

Martin squeezed her hands and then watched as she too turned and headed for the transport. He stood there as the transport’s engines spooled up and then the ship was lifting off and was quickly gone. He didn’t pause then and turned himself and headed for the STRIKER DT that waited. He crossed the two hundred meters to the ship, Endith starting their engines as she saw him approaching, and moved quickly up the ramp into the rear. Torma turned to look at him as his hand came down on the ramp controls.

[Do you have as many questions as I Martin? Questions as to why all of this seems to be happening all at the same time?] Torma asked him.

Martin met his bonded brother's gaze. [I'm glad I'm not the only one who thinks it stinks to high heaven.]

[What do we do?] Torma asked.

[What can we do?] Martin answered as he came up to stand in front of him and Torma lowered his massive head to within inches of Martin's face. [We have no choice but to let it play out. At least until we get more information.]

[Isheeni and I had hoped this would be a calm six months.] Torma spoke.

Martin nodded. [You and me both Torma. You and me both.]

Martin reached up and patted Torma's obsidian scales. [We'll be ok.] He said. [We go down... look around... bring Yuri back and then we can relax until the ceremony. At least we have that to look forward too.]

Torma nodded his massive head. [Yes... there is that to consider.]

Martin shifted his eyes and saw Aikiro and several others sitting on the bench and watching him. No doubt she could feel the tremors within Mindvoice easily enough, but she was unable to penetrate their shields and listen to them speaking. [I should have told Endy to use all possible haste.] He stated. [Taking our time means I have to entertain Aikiro for two whole hours.]

Torma chuckled. [Better you than me brother.]

[Yeah... tell me about it. You could just eat her and be done with it.] Martin said.

Torma shook his head. [Too tough.] He replied. [I would expend too much energy trying to chew the stubbornness from her bones.]

[Oh that's a pleasant thought.] Martin said with a smile. [Are you sure you won't do that for me?]

Torma tilted his head to the side and gazed at Martin with the dragon equivalent of an 'Are you insane look'. Martin chuckled. [Not going to happen huh?]

[No.]

[Ok... well I had to ask.] He said as he watched Aikiro get to her feet and move back towards them. He forced a smile onto his face as she approached. "Empress?"

"Are we leaving now?" Aikiro asked. "We have been waiting on this ship for over an hour."

"It's only 0300 where we are going Aikiro." Martin answered. "Most of the base is still sleeping. Don't worry... we'll get there early enough... have some breakfast and then take a look around and see how everyone is doing."

"I would like a private meeting with my family while I am there." She stated.

"I can arrange that no problem." Martin spoke.

"This base must be on one of the other continents west of here if it is 0300 there." Aikiro said.

Martin nodded. "Yep!"

"You have derived technology from your Mindvoice ship that blocks any probe I make Martin Leonidas. Why not just tell me where it is?" Aikiro asked.

"And make your life easier? Perish the thought." He said with a smile.

"What else have you derived from the technology on that ship?" Aikiro asked evenly. "In reviewing the history cubes you gave to me, it is easy to ascertain that our ancestors were far more technologically advanced than either of our peoples."

"That's a safe bet." Martin said crossing his arms over his chest.

"I have as much right to that technology as you do." Aikiro stated. "Perhaps even more."

"See that is where you are wrong." Martin said. "I have no intentions or aspirations to conquer or take what is not mine. Can you honestly stand there and tell me if I gave you some of this technology that we have developed... and we have developed some things from that. We may be animals to you, but we are smart animals. Can you tell me that you will not use that technology to wipe out the Kavalian species?"

"We are at war with them!" Aikiro hissed.

"Yes you are, however, war and genocide are two completely different things." Martin said. "Something tells me you wouldn't differentiate between the two."

"You can't stand them either!" Aikiro snapped.

Martin nodded. “No I don’t. That doesn’t mean I would try and wipe out their species. I don’t like you either... and I haven’t used any of that new technology to take you out now have I. And I have more of a reason to dislike you than I do the Kavalians.”

“That is not something you could accomplish Martin Leonidas.” Aikiro stated confidently to him. “No matter how much you boast.”

Martin smiled and stared at her for a long moment. “Are you so sure of that Aikiro?” He asked softly. “I’ll let you in on a little secret Empress Aikiro of the High Coven. I may not have anymore agents within your command structure... or even within High Coven space, but I have eyes and ears everywhere. If I really had a hardon for you, I could have walked right into High Coven space the moment the Kavalians pulled back ten years ago and we would have cleaned your clocks in less than eight months. Period. End of story.”

Aikiro forced a laugh to come out for she saw something in his eyes that told her what he was speaking was no boast. “You... you are lying.” She finally said.

Martin tilted his head to the side a little. “You think so?” He asked softly never taking his eyes off her face. “Why don’t you ask Moran and then chew on what he tells you for a while Aikiro.” Martin moved past her several steps and stopped. “The flight is just under two hours. If you have anything specific you would like for breakfast let me know and I can forward the request before we arrive. Enjoy the flight Aikiro.”

Aikiro turned slowly and watched him move quickly past the benches and head up into the cockpit portion of the STRIKER. Aikiro had always considered herself an excellent judge of people and whether they were lying to her or not. Suddenly her instincts were screaming out louder than they ever had before, and they were telling her that whatever she may have felt towards Martin Leonidas and his people...

They were telling her that Martin Leonidas had not lied to her just now.

ULU SCIMITAR

Her body lowered back to her bunk, her sleeping t-shirt thoroughly soaked with sweat, the nipples of her breasts protruding proudly through the damp fabric as if someone had been sucking on them for hours. Her chest rose and fell heavily as she tried to get her breathing under control. Her dark eyes were wide in wonderment, the sheets of her bed drenched in her come, and her thighs and stomach still quivering in the aftermath of the three volcanic orgasms she had just experienced rapid fire. They had come one directly after the other, more powerful than any she had ever received while making love with Tarren, and beyond any she had ever been able to produce herself. They had cascaded upon her, one after the other, with no break in between.

The dreams had been so vivid... so real. The bodies of the others in her dream had been right there, the satiny blond hair and raven colored locks of the two women. The black haired female was a vampire she knew, for it was almost as if she had felt the prick of her fangs in her neck when she bit first the man and then the blond haired female. The feel of those fangs had caused her body to heave off the bed in the stunning power of the two orgasms that came with that feeling. The incredibly delicious looking body of the male, his huge cock larger than any she had ever seen, far larger and thicker than Tarren. She had felt every quiver, every single moment of agonizing pleasure they had experienced as if it was her very own. As if she was there in that bed with them.

Ne’Veha took a deep breath as her mind began to clear and the buzzing of her COM panel brought her eyes down to the desk in her small quarters. She looked around her quarters quickly, drawing her legs up and tossing them over the side of the bunk. She gasped as her bare feet touched the floor and she rose to her feet. She had to steady herself on the edge of the bed and she felt her juices slowly roll down the insides of her thighs. The shirt was all she usually wore to bed, and like most female elves Ne’Veha detested any kind of undergarment. She moved quickly to the desk and activated the COM panel. The small holo image of her co-pilot appeared.

“Yes?” She asked in a raspy voice.

“Ne’Veha?” The male spoke. “Ne’Veha, are you alright?”

“Yes... yes I’m fine Pai’lan.” She answered quickly. “What is it?”

“We have been assigned to the morning patrol exercises and I wanted to know if you wished to meet for breakfast to go over flight plans and tasks before we launched.” He spoke.

Ne’Veha nodded slowly. “Very... very well. I will shower and meet you in the mess lounge.”

“Are you sure you are ok Ne’Veha?” He asked. “You look like... do you have company Ne’Veha?” He asked with a smile.

Her eyes flared. “What? No!” She exclaimed. “I’ll meet you in twenty minutes Pai’lan!” She detected the smile on his face as the transmission ended and Ne’Veha stood up to her full height of five foot three. “It was just a dream.” She spoke aloud. “An exquisite dream... but still only a dream.”

Ne’Veha felt sated like never before in her life. Tarren had been her first man, and after the first few times it had grown pleasant to be with him. He had never made her feel as she did now though, so completely fulfilled, but at least he was real to the touch. No matter how much she had responded to this dream, it was not real. There was no man out there with two women of such beauty fawning over him, especially not with a cock like she saw in her dream. While Ne’Veha had refused Tarren’s invitation to join him and his other elf female in their bed, she had never been dismissive of that type of relationship. Had he asked her before hand, after they had been together a few years, Ne’Veha probably would have been very open to it.

Ne’Veha realized she hadn’t thought about Tarren in several weeks until just this very moment, and that fact made her confident that he was well and truly out of her life. She took a deep breath and moved for the shower in her quarters.

Perhaps she would have a similar dream tonight.

BELID THE WILDS

Colonel Drtev of the KFI had never really cared for Immortals when he worked with them daily. He cared for them even less now. His cobalt blue eyes held nothing but death and mayhem for the two much larger Immortals that held him pinned to the wall, however he was not in a position to do anything about it. He tasted his own blood from his split lips, his arms pinned to his sides and his head throbbing from where they had slammed him into the solid steel wall. His eyes cut to the large Immortal that moved up in front of him, his dark eyes filled with hate and cruelty.

“I’ll give you thirty seconds to tell me why you have been looking for us Pureblood.” The Immortal spoke. “Then I will gut you and leave you here in this warehouse to die while we drink to your corpse.”

“I was ordered to find you.” Drtev hissed. “Usstan xsa zhaunus kat ssinssrin ulu ragar dos.” (I damn sure didn’t want to find you.)

“Ordered by whom?”

“Marshall Pusintin of the Kavalian Federation.” Drtev replied knowing that to lie would only lead to a faster death. And he had no desire to die.

“What does the Lycavorian traitor want with us?” The Immortal asked.

“He has a proposition for your commander.” Drtev replied. “A task he wants you to perform.”

“What task?”

“I was ordered to give it directly to your leader.” Drtev spoke.

“I am Phy’iad. These are my Immortals.” The Immortal spoke moving closer. “So speak Pureblood.”

“He came without weapons Commander.” One of the Immortals that held him spoke holding out the data pad. “He carried this.”

“So you are either telling the truth or you think too highly of your skills Pureblood.” Phy’iad said taking the pad. “Which is it?”

“Marshall Pusintin wants you to complete a task for him.” Drtev said. “Once you have done that I am to contact him and he will come to where you designate to insure you can do what it is you say you can do.”

“And again I ask you what this task is?” Phy’iad spoke baring his vampiric fangs. “Do not make me ask a third time.”

“It is all there.” Drtev answered motioning with his head to the data pad. “Enter the code nine nine four one.”

Phy'iad's large finger entered the code and the pad came alive with the typed message. His dark sunken eyes grew slighter wider as he read for several moments and then he looked up at Drtev. "Is this Pusintin wun quarth d'ukt shar? Why would I want to do this and risk all that we have now?" (In command of his mind)

"I was instructed to tell you price is no object." Drtev said. "You can name it and it will be paid."

"We must be alive to spend it fool!" Phy'iad spoke. "I am many things... but I am not ushdui. Why would he want us to do this?" (Crazy)

"I don't know all the details." Drtev spoke. "I assume it would be something he discussed with you if he was satisfied with whatever results you show him. This task will lead to another task in the future that is more important."

"What task?" Phy'iad asked.

"I do not have knowledge of that." Drtev spoke.

"And why would he send you to deliver this message?" Phy'iad snapped. "I have no more love for the Kavalians than I do for Purebloods."

"He sent me because I am expendable and I knew where to begin trying to find you and your organization." Drtev replied honestly. "If this is not something you wish to undertake then just tell me that and I will be on my way. I have no love for your kind either and I do not wish to remain among you any longer than necessary."

Phy'iad laughed. "You are very brave to speak in this manner to me Pureblood."

"It's not bravery." Drtev answered. "I am consigned to my fate whatever it may be. I will either die fighting you, or the High Coven, or I will die by the hands of the Kavalian Secret Police. The how and the why is meaningless now."

"Having second thoughts about throwing in your lot with the Kavalian dogs are you?" Phy'iad said.

"No." Drtev answered immediately.

Phy'iad stared at Drtev for a long moment. "Release him." He told his two men. Drtev made no sudden moves as they released him and he flexed his arms to work out the kinks. "This will not be cheap." He spoke holding up the data pad. "We will have to take them from one of the resort moons near the Union border. There is always more security and risk involved when operating that close."

"Can you do it or not?" Drtev asked.

Phy'iad nodded. "We could always use new playthings." He spoke.

"How long?" Drtev asked.

"A week to plan and execute." He answered immediately. "I will contact you when it is done. Where will you be?"

"I have reserved a suite on Ricot Four." Drtev answered. "4483. I will remain there for one week and one day. If I do not hear from you by then I will assume you failed and I will return to Cabelir."

"We don't fail Pureblood." Phy'iad snarled.

Drtev smiled for the first time. It was a smile of regret and despair. "I have learned many things serving the Kavalians Immortal." He spoke. "I have an idea what it is they will attempt. And what your role in that will be. Trust me, you may succeed in your plans for the immediate future... but ultimately if I am right in what I think, you will fail."

Phy'iad smiled as well. "We shall see." He spoke. "We shall see. Take him back to the tavern. I will contact you when we have completed this operation and we have what your Marshall requires. I want a hundred million credits for this. We will talk of further payment when he tells us what it is he wants in the end."

Drtev nodded. "I will see to the transfer of the credits." He spoke.

"Do that." Phy'iad said. "When that is done we will act."

BONTAWILLIAN LOW GRAVITY FRIGATE

"...mean you lost them?" The Kavalian officer snarled in the transmission. His blue eyes were not in any way inviting.

Gareld stared at the transmission from the small office he had off the bridge of his ship. "It is just as I explained to you. She had help. A pureblood traveling with Immortals. They were able to escape us near Yocetu and my ship does not have the sensor capability to scan several sectors at once or to track them once they go to Shroud.”

“She is the elf daughter of the criminal Leonidas!” The Kavalian snapped. “Why would Immortals be helping her?”

“That is another story within itself.” Gareld spoke. “If you wish me to complete the task I will need assistance. The G9s have a limited range, and there are only so many planets they can go to but it would take me several months to search the nearby sectors with just my ship. We do not have the range of advanced sensors to conduct such a search.”

“You were paid fifty million credits and you told us you could do this Gareld!” The Kavalian spoke.

“Yes... and had not the Immortals interfered I would have.” Gareld snapped back. “You did not tell me she would draw interest from Immortals!”

“We do not deal with the scum that used to serve your kind!” The officer barked. “We kill them!”

“Yes, well it is that scum that has taken your fifty million credit elf.” Gareld spoke. “And I am not equipped to fight Cha’talla and his Immortals.”

“Cha’talla?” The officer spoke leaning forward in his chair. “You said Cha’talla. We were under the impression that the former High Lord’s Captain was dead. Killed by his very hand.”

Gareld nodded. “Yes... many were led to believe that. It is not true however. He told him. “He was saved by this pureblood female I have been speaking of. She is his plaything it seems. He has taken his entire Akruvian tribe and hides somewhere within The Wilds. If we find Cha’talla... we find the elf female.”

The Kavalian officer was silent for a moment. “Stand by on this channel Gareld. I need to contact my superior for directions.”

Gareld nodded. “I’ll be here.” He stated as the transmission ended and he sat back in his chair. He turned his head to look at his executive officer.

“We are taking a chance involving them in this way Gareld.” Sandur spoke. “And the men will not be happy about having to deal with Immortals. Not after we lost twenty-four on Yocetu.”

Gareld nodded. “A necessary risk Sandur.” He spoke. “I have made arrangements for you and I should the need arise. You have been beside me since the beginning. All is not lost yet however.”

“The funds?”

“Safely tucked away in four different accounts that only you and I know of.” Gareld spoke.

“Do we want to cross the Kavalians Gareld?”

“For the seventy million credits we made on this operation I would betray my very own mother.” Gareld said. “And if they help us to find her... we will not have anything to worry about.”

“He seemed very interested in the fact that Cha’talla is alive.” Sandur said.

“Yes... I thought that odd as well.” Gareld spoke. “It doesn’t matter really. If they want her that bad they will help us. And from the way they jumped at this opportunity when I first presented it to them, they want her Sandur.”

“I hope you are right.” Sandur spoke. “I hope you are right.”

SODRAG

“...he is correct Yuri.” Aikiro spoke from the portable chair she occupied inside the huge hanger.

The remainder of the flight to this base had been uneventful, Leonidas remaining in the cockpit of the STRIKER and his beast in the pens. When they landed, the dawn was beginning to spread its fingers across the sky and he led them to the large mess lounge. It was a common misconception that vampires did not need to eat. Contrary to the ancient Earth legends and myths, vampires were about as undead as Lycavorians and humans. It was true that they drank blood, and that they needed it to survive, but that was not their only means of sustenance. They could eat normal food just as well as the next person and upon entering the mess lounge they found many men and women had already begun to rise and were in the lounge when they got here drinking coffee and talking in quiet voices as they ate their food. And many of them were vampire members of the Durcunusaan detachment assigned to the base.

Aikiro was able to eat breakfast with her daughters and grandchildren, Javier and Lucia doing most of the talking during the breakfast, eager to show their grandmother what they had learned. Neither of them, however, gave their instructors any of the credit. After the breakfast Martin walked with Aikiro as they moved among the stations of hand to hand training that Zarah Leonidas was conducting, as well as the close quarter's flight maneuvering that Daurgo was instructing the dragons through. She sat through a brief class in Ground Support tactics for the pilots, noticing that Toria seemed very animated, more so than at any time since she had known the young woman. Looking at her, Aikiro decided she missed the red head's attentions and would take her back with her to Sparta. Though she remained silent during most of the short tour, Aikiro grudgingly admitted to herself that the instruction was intense and very thorough. She also was able to take in and memorize at least the portions of the base she was able to see. She didn't expect and was not given a tour of the main Operations Command and Control center, but she was able to mark entry ways and exits to that one story facility. She was also able to locate at least two positions that had to be assisting in generating the Mindvoice Shield that encompassed the entire base. She had been unable to sense anything before moving through a certain point, but once inside the shield her mind exploded with the thoughts and emotions of everyone within the shield.

Narice was being very reserved, more so than she usually was, and Carisia remained silent for most of the breakfast. Aikiro noticed a flush in their tanned skinned however, and she easily noticed that their Mindvoice shields had increased significantly in power, Carisia's even more than Narice. The dragons as well had radically more power in their Mindvoice shields from when they had arrived on Earth, and many of the Riders had grown in stature as well. Where as before she could easily touch all of them and breach their shields, she found it increasingly difficult to do now, not without directing more concentration to the attempt. She knew it was because their bonds with their dragons was growing more powerful, and to try and force anything while she was here would be a drastic measure she did not want to use for risk of it being detected.

Now as they gathered in one of the empty hangers near where the STRIKER was parked, Aikiro would get a better sense of what was really happening. She could detect no listening devices nearby or set up within the hanger itself as they gathered around and sat at the large table that had been set up for them.

"Mother I..." Yuri began.

"It is the truth Yuri. I had our own medical people on the INQUISITOR confirm and verify the information and data from the Hadarian witch. Leonidas is not the one who raped you nor is he Lisisa's father." Aikiro said softly. "It was his brother Pleistarchus."

Yuri sat in the chair still very stunned even though she had read completely through the information Androcles had given to them. The pad had been signed by her mother and unaltered in any way, but Yuri still could not believe the facts in front of her.

"How... how could that be?" Yuri gasped.

Aikiro shook her head. "I don't know all the details, but his brother, who we now know as Pusintin, is Lisisa's father." She replied. "Somehow he made his way inside whatever facility you were staying in and then faked the call from Leonidas. You saw what I sent you." She stated. "It matches perfectly with the time you were raped and then confirmed by some grainy but still very viewable security tapes. It is also the way they were able to confirm Pusintin's true identity. Leonidas was confirmed as on the EDEN Moon Base when you were raped daughter. That is in the standard logs from the base. Not to mention Lisisa's core DNA data strands match Pusintin's, not Martin Leonidas."

Yuri got to her feet slowly and walked around the table deep in thought. Aikiro and the others watched her as she moved in silence. She finally stopped behind Lucia and looked at her mother. "It does not matter." She spoke suddenly. "I do not distinguish between the two. They are both animals as far as I am concerned."

"Your hatred towards Martin Leonidas has been misplaced all these years sister!" Narice spoke. "And he is nothing like Pusintin and you know that. Pusintin is a monster that has gleefully butchered our kind for sport. Martin Leonidas has done none of these things."

"He is a pig!" Yuri spat viciously. "Their entire species are pigs! They are animals that are beneath us! Why do you defend him Narice?"

"I defend him because he is innocent of the reasons you hate him." Narice spoke. "You can not hold him responsible for something his brother did. He did not even know who he was when this act occurred Yuri. Your loathing is misplaced and it clouds your judgment and reason now. We are here to have them train us and our dragons to battle the Kavalians. Since we have arrived you have been nothing but a distraction to the others and you have fought everything they have tried to teach us.”

“We do not need their help?” Yuri hissed.

“Perhaps you do not... but I have no desire to die in battle with the Kavalians. Nor do I wish to see Deneth killed because we are ill prepared.” Narice said. “You have seen yourself that our dragons and riders are children when compared to what they can do.”

“It has something to do with the Mindvoice ship.” Aikiro said. “They have found some way to increase their bonds with the technology in that ship.”

Narice shook her head. “I don’t think so mother.” She said. “The bonds we have with our bonded ones have increased ten fold since we came here, and that is simply because we have taken the time to study and know our dragons as we never did before.”

“Listen to yourself Narice!” Yuri snapped. “You are beginning to sound like one of them now!”

“I am listening and I am learning what they teach us, because unlike you and Vollenth sister, I know where my place will be when we fight the Kavalian dogs again!” Narice barked angrily as she came to her feet. “If Deneth and I die when that day comes, it will not be because I let some fool hatred of an innocent man keep us from learning all we can to stay alive!”

“Then you are a fool!” Yuri snapped dismissing her. “You are still a child when compared to me Narice. You have not seen what Lycavorians can do! You did not see the way he butchered our brother!”

“Our brother Xerxes was a demented pig!” Narice snapped. “As you so often have told me! He fancied himself a god!”

“Enough!” Aikiro snapped loudly. Aikiro watched her oldest and youngest daughters for a long moment, her dark eyes unreadable as they glared at each other. She took a deep silent breath and shook her head. “We must not fight among ourselves.” She said softly. “I will not allow it. Yuri... you will return with me to Sparta. The Kavalians know you are on Earth and you do not make an appearance with me they will know something is not right. And Vollenth must remain here and continue to be instructed. Leonidas is correct and the Kavalians undoubtedly know our dragons have left Usu Ozeib 7. We must not give them any reason to suspect they are here on Earth. They are already acting like fools by trying to force Lisisa Leonidas to become one of them.”

“The Kavalians are trying to force their laws upon her grandmother?” Carisia asked quickly, leaning forward in her chair.

Aikiro nodded. “They apparently tried to force their citizenship laws upon her early this morning in Sparta.” She answered. “They were not successful. Robert and Tesand were going to move among the streets of Sparta for the better part of the day and try to gauge what kind of reaction this will elicit from the people.”

Narice shook her head. “It will not matter.” She said as she settled back into her chair. “She is a hero to the people of the Union. She is almost as highly regarded as Androcles. The Kavalians will not succeed.”

Aikiro nodded. “Robert, Tesand and I agree with that assessment as well.” She stated. “Robert has also discovered some rather interesting information in regards to Androcles new wife.” This brought Carisia’s head up somewhat. “It appears she was part of a program that Veldruk established many years ago. They used Lycavorian women as low level Intelligence Agents. It appears this Sadi is the one that helped Leonidas and this Armetus to begin the Intelligence Purge twenty-five years ago. Her stepmother got her involved but apparently Sadi Leonidas became much more established than anyone thought. When she discovered they were about to expose her, she gave all she knew to this Armetus.”

Yuri looked at Aikiro her anger at Narice simmering just under the surface. “You think... you think her position as Crown Princess is a reward of some sort?”

Aikiro nodded. “Yes. Robert is attempting to confirm as much of it as possible, and it might be information that comes in useful when it is time to act. It apparently is not common knowledge among the people of the Union.”

“So our initial plans remain active then?” Yuri asked.

Aikiro nodded. “Yes.”

Narice leaned forward. “Mother isn’t it wise that all of us be aware of the initial plan?” She asked. “Whatever it may be?” Narice felt Yuri’s eyes focus on her as well as her mother’s but she remained calm and completely in control.

Aikiro shook her head after a brief moment. “The less that know of what our full plans are the better. You will be made aware of them when the time is right.”

“Is that wise mother?” Narice pressed forward.

Aikiro met her gaze. “It is how it will be Narice!” She spoke sternly. “I will speak no more of it now. Not here. Androcles Leonidas has demanded that Thast and the others return as well. He says he is tired of hearing them complain.”

“He will learn nothing useful where he is.” Yuri spoke turning to her mother. “Better to bring him and the others back and make it appear we are acquiescing. They might be useful within Sparta.”

Aikiro nodded. “Very well. Now tell me of this shield surrounding this base. Anything that you may have learned. We need to establish some sort of communication conduit through it.”

“The main gate is too heavily guarded and patrolled grandmother.” Dante spoke quickly. “It is, however, possible to penetrate it in one area that I have seen. One of us could do this, blur outside the shield range and send back a transmission from within the elf city nearby. I know the city is not surrounded by this shield for I heard several of the Durcunusaan talking how they hated having to enter the elf city to contact their mates via Mindvoice.”

“You are certain of this?” Aikiro asked.

Dante nodded. “Yes.”

“Explain it to me quickly Dante. Leonidas will be coming soon for us to return.” Aikiro said.

Narice glanced quickly at Carisia and they shared a concerned look before turning to listen to Dante.

“...damn fool thing to do!” Martin spoke firmly as he and Andro walked slowly along the tarmac heading for the STRIKER. Torma and Elynth moved with them on opposite shoulders. Andro’s ArmorPly matched his father’s with the crimson shoulder boards now adorning the body armor. “You should have contacted me first and got permission.”

Andro looked at his father. “It was a solid plan and we had to move quickly.” He said evenly. “Helen and Arzoal agreed and I thought I was beyond having to ask you for permission to conduct myself father?”

Martin looked at him and sighed. “You are Andro... but if the plan had backfired it would have caused a really big problem with the Coven.”

“It went perfectly.” Andro said. “Yuri does not even know the difference, and it only confirms our suspicions that the reason for his behavior was that the bond was not natural. Even you agreed with that assessment.”

“And what do we tell her when she discovers the truth?” Martin asked. “And she will discover the truth Andro.”

“We tell her to get nubous!” Andro popped. “They brought their dragons here to learn from us father. We agreed as Talon Guardians that we could not send forty of our brothers and sisters into battle untrained didn’t we? All of us?”

Torma nodded his massive head. [We did.]

[King Martin... we did not act rashly.] Elynth spoke gently. [The Elders had the plan worked out very carefully. The Elder Mother would not have agreed to it otherwise.]

“It also allowed us the opportunity to discover the final member of Mjolnir’s Hand father, and that is something none of us expected as an outcome.” Andro spoke softly. “You can’t tell me discovering Malic and Vincix was not worth it?”

Martin nodded. “True.”

“The shield will prevent her from discovering the truth until she returns father, and it will be all the time Vollenth needs to be well on his way to ridding himself of her. She is a festering disease with the hatred she carries in her. It taints her thinking.” Andro spoke. “It is a hatred that will not go away even though she now knows the truth. She will continue to hate you, all of us... and she won’t know why. There is something else going on with her. Inside her... and it is slowly eating away at her and you, me and our people are just the thing she needs to act out against.”

“I get that feeling too.” Martin said softly. “Well... it’s done now. We’ll deal with it when it comes up again. The others?”

Andro nodded. "They are progressing better than I had first thought father." He said. "Better than any of us had hoped I think. They are not like what we thought they would be."

[Even though their bonds were not well developed, they took on more of their bonded ones traits than we first thought.] Elynth said. [Given time and training I believe that Deneth and Anthar could challenge for a spot among Mjolnir's Hand with their skill and ability. The others would make fine Bonded Pairs within the Union.]

"Have we discovered anything on these insurgents?" Andro asked.

Martin shook his head. "Aricia and Bella left this morning with Vonis to try and make some headway. Anton and Cihera should be on Nebonese by now. They are trying to set up a meet with the Evolli who supposedly is in charge of the group that hit Eleysi Three and were targeting your mothers. Andreus is still trying to make headway into who gave up your sister's Jump route and do it without making too many waves and send whoever is involved scurrying for cover like cockroaches. We'll be announcing it tonight on the Netnews. You told Zarah I take it?"

Andro nodded. "Against my better judgment... but better she find out through us just before mother gets there. She will not worry as much knowing Normya is with mother. She took it better than I expected. She's maturing father."

Martin nodded. "I know... I just don't need her running off to save her sister and causing more issues with her temper, especially since she is going through her Coming of Age. She is too much like me in that regard."

"She won't leave... she knows with you keeping Resumar helping mother with the Kavalians I need her here." Andro spoke.

[Her unarmed skills are unmatched and it is better that they learn from the finest.] Torma spoke.

"Well... that's another thing. Just keep an extra eyeball on her." Martin said looking at him. "Has Res talked to you recently?"

Andro shook his head. "Not since right after they returned to Earth why?"

"He's been acting odd." Martin said. "Nothing real major, but not his usual self. I think he has found a female. I can detect a faint tangerine scent on him now, but he has been using scent maskers so I can't get a clear enough mark."

"Perhaps he does not want you to discover this woman and chase her away before he has a chance to prepare her for becoming part of our family." Andro said with a grin.

"Sadi didn't have any issues." Martin said.

"Sadi has been part of our family since that night on the island father." Andro answered. "Though twenty-five years had passed the transition for her was seamless."

[KertaGai is not your average female either King Martin.] Elynth spoke with some humor in her voice. [She can't be and be devoted to Andro.]

"Thank you so much sister." Andro spoke reaching out to shove her in her thick neck scales.

Martin nodded and laughed softly. "Yeah... that's true. You guys just used to tell me everything."

"And that usually amounted to us getting into trouble in some fashion." Andro said with a nod. "Perhaps he is preparing her. Give him space father. I have Arrarn working his contacts at Gate Control on Apo Prime. I will have him coordinate with Uncle Andreus so that they are not working against each other."

"Sending Normya back to Apo Prime with a busted ship was wrong." Martin spoke sternly looking at him. "She's still too young."

"She is the finest pilot we have behind mother and Arrarn in the STRIKERS and the TYPE IIs and you know that." Andro replied. "She is under my command, and Arrarn and I both felt it would be an excellent training experience. And it was. She made it to Apo Prime with no trouble. You are the one who told me I am Crown Prince and I will need to look at my siblings as soldiers when the time is needed. Normya is more ready than you give her credit for father. Arrarn and I agreed it was a good move to build her confidence."

"You should have checked with me or your mother." Martin said.

"My Command... my decision." He answered.

Martin met his eyes. "What else aren't you telling me son?" He asked. His dark eyes bore into Andro for a long moment. "Lisisa and Denali for example?"

“What aren’t you telling me father?” Andro asked him. “The ARIZONA Class you kept hidden from all of us? From me? Lisisa not being our sister by blood? For example.”

“It is a purely offensive weapons platform Andro.” Martin said quickly. “It goes against everything we have done for the last quarter century. It wasn’t something I wanted bandied about. And Lisisa is your sister, regardless of whose blood flows in her veins.”

Andro nodded. “We decided that within an hour of Helen telling us.” Andro replied. “You still should have told us.”

“Maybe.” Martin said. “I want you to watch them carefully Andro. I don’t trust Aikiro as far as I could throw her. None of them can be trusted in my opinion. And do not give them the Mark Eleven saddles.”

Andro stopped walking and looked at him. “Father the Mark Elevens are the only reason we were able to develop suitable tactics to fight the T19s.”

“Teach them whatever else you think they can handle... but no MEs.” Martin said.

[Without the MEs King Martin, the protection they provide, they will suffer many casualties needlessly.] Elynth spoke.

[They will also be able to reverse engineer the technology.] Torma spoke now. [That is not something we can allow.]

[Does grandmother know this?] Elynth demanded.

“This is a decision I’m making as King Elynth.” Martin spoke. “I will not hand them a means to create technology they will undoubtedly turn back on us. Arzoal... Arzoal didn’t like it... but she agreed to it.”

[But... they will die King Martin. No matter what or how well we teach them they will die. Sending them into battle without the MEs will see them invariably die in groups until they are all gone.] Elynth said.

“I know.” Martin said softly. “It is not a decision I made lightly.”

“Father... they are not our enemies.” Andro said. “They are Riders... just like you and I.”

“They are High Coven!” Martin said.

“Yes... but as we have seen over the years and even now with these insurgents... not everyone adheres to Aikiro’s and Yuri’s dream of domination.” Andro spoke.

[That is not a risk we can take.] Torma spoke.

“I know neither of you likes this but...” Martin said.

[It is wrong!] Elynth barked out.

[Daughter!] Torma exclaimed surprised at Elynth’s reaction to say the least. [You will watch your tone!]

[It is wrong father and you know it!] Elynth spat.

“You two are the ones who advised caution before they even got here.” Martin spoke. “You said if there is not a possibility of training them we should send them packing.”

Andro nodded. “Yes... but with the exception of Yuri and Vollenth... which we have already taken care of... it is possible to train them. They have come so far in only ten days father.”

Martin shook his head. “My decision stands. They are not here just for us to train their dragons and you know it. You can sense it just as I can.”

Andro nodded. “Yes I know... but where does the mistrust end father? Where does the inbred hatred stop?”

Martin stared at him for a long moment. “I’ll meet you half way son. Show me what you think they can do when they are ready. Show me that they won’t turn that technology around on us. Show me that and I will rescind the order. Until then it stays in place. We can’t take the risk that giving them the technology in the Mark Elevens will expose.” Martin turned his head and saw Aikiro and the others leaving the hanger near the STRIKER. “I want to get back before morning in Sparta and catch a few hours of sleep.” He looked at Andro. “I know the Coven son... they can’t be trusted.” He gripped Andro’s hand and forearm. “I’ll see you tomorrow evening your time so we can prepare for the ceremony.”

Andro nodded slowly. “Very well father.” He spoke tight lipped.

Martin nodded and then turned to head for the STRIKER with Torma on his heels. Andro felt Elynth move closer to him, dropping her huge head to within inches of his shoulder.

[Andro...]

[He has no intention of giving them the MEs Elynth.] Andro said softly to her in their private Mindvoice connection. [No matter what we show him they can do. Dante and Javier I don't trust and Lucia is questionable... but the others... they are becoming just as dedicated to their bonded ones as any Pair in the Union.]

[What... what do we do?] She asked.

Andro turned his head to look at her. He reached up and ran his hand along her snout and under her golden eyes. [I will not let old hatreds and distrust take from us what we both have only just found Elynth... you know that.]

[It is not Carisia and Anthar I worry for.] Elynth said. [I understand what our father's mean Andro... part of me agrees with them... but the Talon Guardian in me is repulsed at the thought of just dismissing them.]

Andro nodded. [I as well.]

[Then what do we do?]

Andro turned back to face the STRIKER as its engines wound up and they prepared to take off.

[I don't know.]

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

KRANEK

Normya stood on the walkway along the outside of her quarters looking down upon the small park like setting below. The sun was just beginning to lift over the trees and mountains and Normya was surprised at how long she had slept. The events of the last few days had taken more of a toll than she thought and with barely any reflection on where she was, Normya had gone right to sleep when Esther and Erli'ra had shown her to the small apartment. She had woken this morning, the throbbing in her leg gone, and feeling completely refreshed. In the small apartment's main room she discovered a bundle of clothes left for her by Erli'ra, and she quickly showered and changed into them. Though there was still some small fear inside her, lingering just beneath the surface, Normya found herself wanting to explore the settlement and see everything.

They had been very thorough in what they had left for her, leaving a small bundle of clothes and programming the coffee to be made and ready when she woke. Now she wore the almost leather like tan pants and the button down white shirt with her normal combat boots. Her combat harness was present as well, and she removed the shoulder straps and simply buckled on the holster with the K12 on her right thigh and her Nehtes on the left. Now she stood on the walkway looking down on what had to be one of the main thoroughfares of the settlement for there were already hundreds of men and women moving back and forth on the hard pack dirt street beneath her. Most of them were Immortals she saw, but she also spied a goodly number of different species as well. They moved among the streets with barely a pause, greeting the many Immortals with a wave or smile or laugh. It was beyond strange for her to see this, particularly with the training she had been given during the Union Academy and Union Flight School. She lifted the mug of strong coffee and sipped it once more, letting the liquid chase away the cool chill that still lingered in the air.

"It's not what you were expecting is it?" The female voice said.

Normya turned and saw Erli'ra approach her from a short distance away; carrying the small bundle in her arms of what could only be a newborn infant. As she came closer Normya saw the full head of dark hair on the baby as well as a much lighter but tanned skin tone. It was like a medium brown shade, almost sienna in its tone. The bone spurs were just small nubs along the baby's jaw line and extending back under the ears but that the child had Immortal blood in its veins was obvious. And then Normya saw the elven ears on the baby, and she realized they were much less pronounced and would more than likely end up being no larger than her own half elven ears.

Erli'ra saw where Normya was looking and she adjusted the thin blanket so that more of the baby was exposed.

"This is To'palia." Erli'ra stated quite proudly. "She was born six weeks and four days ago. She is our first child, Na'Thu and I, our light and happiness."

Normya had to admit that even with the bone spurs and oddly colored skin, the baby was incredibly adorable. “She is... she’s beautiful.” Normya said as she reached up and allowed To’palia to latch onto her index finger. Her emerald eyes flew open as she felt the small baby’s grip squeeze tight. “She is... she is so strong!”

Erli’ra nodded with a chuckle. “She has her father’s strength.” She said looking at her with a smile. “An Immortal’s strength.”

Normya glanced up into her eyes shyly. “Forgive... forgive me.” She said quickly.

“Forgive you for what?” Erli’ra spoke earnestly. “For not believing everything you have been trained to expect from Immortals? That is why you ask for forgiveness Normya... because everything you have ever been taught to believe is turning out to be wrong. At least for those Immortals you have seen so far.”

“How?” Normya asked. “I thought that... elves... female elves were...”

“You thought that female elves were the sexual slaves of Immortals.” Erli’ra said with a small smile. “That once we were broken by an Immortal, we would be forever bound to that Immortal because of a dependency on a chemical in their semen. Enslavement not by force but of need if we wished to stay alive?”

Normya nodded her head shyly. “Yes. That is what... that is what we are taught and trained to expect in the Academy.”

Erli’ra nodded. “Yes. It is what I was brought up with as well.” She said softly. “I would imagine that is still the case in many places with the Immortals that serve the High Coven, and with those Immortals who have turned to a life of mercenary work and such. Not here however. Not among the Immortals of our tribe.”

“How?” Normya asked.

“Esther is how.” Erli’ra answered. “She has several degrees and one happens to be in Bio Genetics. Using small samples of each Immortal’s blood she was able to develop a serum unique to each male Immortal. She basically rendered that one chemical in their bodies inert. Every single male in this settlement volunteered for this procedure Normya, without as much as a second’s hesitation. They knew their Tribe needed to be different in every way if they were to break from the old traditions of their people. And they have.” Erli’ra tucked the blanket back around a cooing To’palia and looked out over the settlement.

“Na’Thu rescued me from Kochab Bounty Hunters that had attacked our transport. There were over a hundred of us on that transport ship; elves mostly, but many others as well. They killed almost half, including my mother and older brother, before they took us to some desolate planet. They were going to sell the rest of us as slaves to whoever would buy us. My father and I, and some fifty others escaped with the help of Cha’talla and the Immortals here. They had intercepted our last distress call, and tracked the Kochab scum to where they had forced our ship to land because of heavy damage. Na’Thu found me about to be raped by three of them. He was so enraged at this he practically tore one of them in half with his bare hands. They brought us back here to Kranek, Esther healed my father and so many others and they protected us.” Erli’ra smiled as she remembered those weeks. “Na’Thu hovered and doted over me for weeks, like I was some precious gem. We didn’t believe them at first, much as you find it so hard to believe now. Slowly however, we began to see that what they were telling us was true. I think I began falling in love with him six months after I came here. I was... I was terrified the first time we were together, after I convinced myself I wasn’t going completely crazy for falling in love with an Immortal. Let’s just say Na’Thu is exceptionally well equipped shall we.” She said with a seductive smile.

“That... that is true of all Immortals I thought.” Normya spoke.

“I wouldn’t know... Na’Thu is the only one I care about.” Erli’ra stated with a fake smugness. “It was the most incredible experience of my life.” She continued. “I have not looked back since Normya Leonidas. I share my husband’s bed not out of some drug induced need, but out of desire and love. When I woke the next morning and I was curled into his arms it was the most incredible feeling in the universe. I was his gem, and he has been my prince since that day. I was the first, but the other seven female elves who had lost everything and remained here also found husbands among the Immortals. Husbands they adore just as deeply as I do Na’Thu.”

“What about the others? The ones that didn’t remain with you here?” Normya asked.

“A year past and once they were well enough to travel... Cha’talla told them they would be welcomed and honored to remain here with us. Many of us did because we had lost so much in the attack there was no point in returning to the lives we had. Those that did not he provided them a transport and escorted them back to Union space. Those that went back never revealed that we remained here, and we have had monthly contact with them over the years. We are friends with many of them and if we can not find something here in The Wilds we ask them to provide it for us.” Erli’ra looked around. “There are over twenty Elven/Immortal children now Normya. Children born of love and devotion. To’palia is only the latest. Two more elves are expecting soon. There have been several mixed marriages among other species as well, but surprisingly all of the female elves that remained with us have chosen Immortal husbands. Once that ingrained fear was gone, the natural instinct in elf females to find strong, suitable husbands came forth. That just happens to be Immortals. Cha’talla made my father a member of our Ruling Council almost from the day he recovered from his wounds. I was elected two years ago. This is what we have built Normya... and it is something we are all so very proud of.”

Normya let her eyes wander over the settlement. “It is incredible.” She said softly. “You have kept it so very simple, but so modern as well.”

Erli’ra nodded as her eyes also drifted across the settlement. “It was T’lolt’s idea actually. To combine the older, more sturdy and plain architecture with modern facilities and advanced construction techniques. The Tribe has nearly doubled in size since they first came here twenty-five years ago. And we grow larger every year. We...”

They heard the squealing of small children and looked down. In the park like area below them were eight or nine children. Four were pure Immortal, that was easy enough to see, but of the others were three that were half elf. They were running in circles around the large fountain being chased by someone Normya recognized immediately, for he had filled her dreams the night before. She watched as Tir’ut roared loudly and lifted one screaming girl off the ground, while snatching another in his large hand. The others proceeded to leap upon Tir’ut’s legs and around his waist as he stomped along the ground roaring like a bear. Normya couldn’t help but chuckle at this. Erli’ra smiled as well.

“He truly loves children.” Erli’ra said. “Nearly every morning, if his duties do not pull him away, many of the children in his apartment complex go to him and this is what he does. He chases them around playing with them before they depart for the main school. He always encourages them to learn all they can from their teachers. He tells them education is the key to finding what their purpose in this life is.”

Normya looked at her. “Their purpose?” She asked.

Erli’ra nodded. “He is the first born son of a pureblood Akruxian Immortal and a pureblood vampire.” She said. “He and his brothers are unique... a new breed of Immortal if you will. The future. Just as To’palia is the future.”

“Esther said that as well.” Normya spoke.

Erli’ra nodded. “She is wise beyond her years.” She said. “As Cha’talla’s Blessed Wife, she is considered the Matriarch of our tribe.”

“You consider yourself part of their tribe?” Normya asked.

Erli’ra nodded. “Oh yes. All of us do. Without question or regret. Just as you are now.”

Normya’s eyes grew a little wider. “Me?” She gasped.

Erli’ra nodded once more, only this time with a small smile. “The moment that Tir’ut proclaimed an Iglata d’Vlos to protect you, he became your Quortek S’argt. While he lives, no matter where you may go, he will protect you with his life. As will the members of his family and his tribe. An Iglata d’Vlos is not something undertaken lightly by Immortals. It is a sacred tradition, one that Cha’talla has allowed them to maintain from their old lives.”

“Why would he do this?” Normya asked. “He... he doesn’t even know me.”

Erli’ra smiled and let her eyes gaze down on where Tir’ut was now on his knees while the children happily buried him with their bodies. “Tir’ut has always been different. Because he was their first born, Esther and Cha’talla were incredibly stern and rigid with him. He has all the strengths of an Immortal and a pureblood vampire, but almost none of their weaknesses. He is the perfect combination of the two. He also has quite a powerful Mindvoice ability.” She saw Normya’s eyes grew even wider. “Esther has taught him how to shield it ruthlessly, to levels that are nearly undetectable even by someone with your skill, but it is there.”

“That... that still doesn’t explain why he did it.” Normya said softly. “I saw that... that Bancorik that he attacked. It had to be three or four times his size but he didn’t hesitate. Fash’ka, Ja’narie, the others... they said he was crazy to do such a thing. That they don’t go after Bancorik without at least four in their hunting party.”

Erli’ra nodded. “That is very true.”

“So then why Erli’ra?” Normya asked.

“Why don’t you ask him?” Erli’ra answered. “He is your Quortek S’argt. He will deny you nothing Normya, no matter what you ask of him.” Erli’ra stepped closer to her. “Your Coming of Age is nearly over Normya Leonidas, I have seen enough of them to know that. And you can’t decide if your attraction to Tir’ut is because of the remnants of your maturing fever, or something that you really feel.”

Normya looked away quickly. “How would you know that?” She stated.

“Because I am a woman.” Erli’ra spoke softly. “And I have seen the look in your eyes when you gaze at him. I also noticed that you have not returned his uniform top, and I noticed the way you would sniff it when you first arrived. I do know something of Lycavorians and their ways. His scent tickles your senses.”

Normya looked at her shyly. “He smells... he smells like jasmine.”

Erli’ra smiled. “I also noticed the way you clung to him when he carried you in his arms when you first arrived. Everything you have been taught in regards to Immortals is being called into question because of your growing feelings for Tir’ut.”

“I... I am grateful to him for saving my life.” Normya spoke quickly trying to deny what Erli’ra was saying. And failing miserably. “But an attraction...?”

Erli’ra nodded. “Yes I’m sure you are grateful to him. However there is much more isn’t there? I am the Blessed Wife of an Immortal Normya Leonidas and I know that look.” She followed Normya’s gaze down to where Tir’ut was roaring like a large bear once more. “Isn’t your father the one who says never to fear the unknown?”

Normya looked at her. “Erli’ra...”

“You will do what you will Normya.” Erli’ra spoke with a soft smile. “If my judgment of character is still any good, you will come to realize what it is you want Normya Leonidas. All I’m saying is if what you want somehow includes Tir’ut, do not fear the unknown.” She shifted To’palia into one arm and reached out to take her hand. “Come... let us get you some breakfast. Your mother arrives in two hours and it wouldn’t do for you to greet her on an empty stomach.”

Normya nodded slowly and turned her emerald eyes once more on Tir’ut far below. Her heart caught in her throat as she realized he was looking up at her. It was only a fleeting glance, but it was enough to cause shivers to course through her even as she felt the gentle caress within Mindvoice of a new and powerful presence. It was something her mother had taught her, how to expand her horizons within Mindvoice almost subconsciously to detect other users without them knowing it. Normya Leonidas, as with all her brothers and sisters, was considered a very powerful Mindvoicer. She was easily on a level with her brother Resumar even though she was not bonded to a dragon, and she lowered her shields far enough to detect the new Mindvoicer. As Erli’ra had said, it was an exceptionally powerful mind, and heavily shielded in a way that made it impossible to penetrate those shields without a concentrated probe. Her father or Andro could have done it with barely any effort, perhaps even her mother, but she could not. She felt Erli’ra take her arm gently and she tore her eyes from Tir’ut and allowed Erli’ra to lead her down the walkway.

SODRAG

“...everything seems to be in perfect order. You and the baby are in ideal health.” The elven medic told Adriana as she lowered the scanner.

Adriana smiled brilliantly. “Thank you.” She said.

“Eliani will be in shortly.” The female spoke. “She’ll want to examine you. You are the only pregnant woman on the base at the moment, and we much prefer your company to the injured and grumbling soldiers and riders. They usually come in because they have injured themselves doing something stupid.”

Adriana chuckled. “Yes... I have heard that.”

The female elf heard voices and patted her leg and smiled. “I’ll be right back.” She said. She gathered the data pad and moved into the hallway outside the examination room where she saw Eliani and Nyla entering the small clinic. They were holding hands and laughing softly, having just returned from lunch. Eliani was the senior Hadarian Healer on SODRAG at the moment because the complement of base personnel was not that large. As SODRAG continued to grow and house more personnel a Hadarian Officer would be assigned permanently. The medic truly enjoyed working with Eliani. She was just as sharp witted as her mother and unbelievably knowledgeable for someone only twenty-five years old. She walked up to Eliani who turned to look at her.

“I did a preliminary exam Princess.” She stated as she held out the data pad. “Lycavorian female, ninety-six years old, excellent health and twenty-nine weeks pregnant. Baby is also in excellent health and developing on the base scale.”

Eliani took the pad with a smile. “Thank you Renala.” She stated.

“I told her you would be in shortly. Exam Three.” She stated as she turned and began to walk towards another room.

“Renala?” Eliani spoke quickly looking up.

“Yes?”

“The baby’s father is not listed.” Eliani said.

“She is staying with Enomotarch Malic Princess.” Renala answered. “I... I assumed he was the father.”

“Malic?” Nyla gasped.

Renala nodded. “Prince Androcles granted her access to the base and she arrived late yesterday afternoon. She’s staying at Malic’s bungalow.”

Eliani looked at Nyla, her fern green eyes wide. She glanced back to Renala. “Thank... thank you Renala.” She said softly turning back to Nyla as Renala went about her duties.

Nyla’s green eyes were also wide in surprise and they quickly filled with regret and a little anger. “Ussta Che?” She questioned.

Eliani shook her head slowly. “This... this was not in his records Aur Enyla.” She spoke softly. “Not anywhere that I saw.”

“Nor I.” Nyla answered.

“That ronnus!” Eliani hissed softly. “She’s twenty-nine weeks pregnant! There’s no way he could not have known!”

“Perhaps that is why he brought her here!” Nyla stated with heat in her own voice. The most noticeable trait that their deep connection within Mindvoice gave Eliani and Nyla was that they could feel each other’s emotions and in many ways Nyla was almost able to use Eliani’s wolf senses. It also allowed them to feed off of each other emotionally. “She is staying with him at his bungalow. And he has not been on the base since late yesterday either. He was gone before full light this morning. I checked.”

“He’s avoiding us now that she is here.” Eliani said. “Andro knew! He had to have known!”

“Eliani... Andro... he knows how we feel about him. Why would he not tell us?” Nyla asked.

“I don’t know... but intend to find out!” Eliani snapped. “As soon as I meet this Adriana female!”

“May... may I come with you?” Nyla asked softly. “I... I wish to see her as well.”

Eliani nodded as she began moving down the corridor to the exam room. It took them all of twenty seconds to reach the room and they saw Adriana turn from where she was looking out the window as they entered. They both stopped when they saw her. Her face was bright, her hands rubbing her swollen abdomen. She was exceptionally beautiful, that they could not deny, and she appeared to be in excellent physical condition just as Renala had said.

“Good afternoon Princess.” Adriana spoke animatedly. “I hope my coming here hasn’t interfered with your schedule. Andro said I should come to see you.”

“Hello... hello.” Eliani stammered as they moved further into the room. “And no... you are not interfering. So you have talked with my brother?”

“Oh yes.” She said. “He’s not... he’s not what I expected from everything that I have seen on the Netnews. He’s much more... he’s very normal.”

Eliani looked at Nyla. “Yes he is.” Eliani almost snarled out the words as she turned back.

Adriana stared at them for a moment. “Is there something wrong?” She asked quickly.

“Huh... what? Oh no!” Eliani said. “We... we just didn’t expect you to be...”

“Expect me to be what? That I would be so pregnant?” Adriana said with a smile as she rubbed her abdomen.

“Renala didn’t tell me how far along you were.” Eliani caught herself quickly. “This is... this is Nyla Sinthe. She is... she is working with me in the clinic today.”

“Yes... it... it helps me to be better prepared on the field of battle.” Nyla stammered out now.

Adriana moved back to the low table and perched herself on the edge before pushing back and sitting. “Your medic said you would want to examine me.” She stated.

Eliani glanced at Nyla quickly before moving up to the table. “Just... just some questions really.” She said. “Renala... Renala is very efficient.”

“She’s very nice.” Adriana said with a smile. “We don’t have any elf medical personnel on Hunlar Five.”

“Hunlar Five?” Eliani said. “You came all the way from Hunlar Five?”

Adriana nodded. “Yes. I’m a teacher there. The smaller children mostly. It is quite an adventure teaching them. They are very active.”

“You are staying with Enomotarch Malic I see.” Eliani said looking at the pad.

Adriana nodded. “Yes. The bungalow is larger than I thought he would have.” She replied. “The bed is very soft though... which helps because I have to sleep on my side now.”

“Yes... I’m sure it is.” Eliani stated. “And how long have you known Malic?”

Adriana looked at her, surprised at the sternness of her voice and the set of her jaw. She glanced at the Nyla woman next to her and saw a similar look. Her husband was a pureblood vampire and Adriana knew well the nuisances that the faces of purebloods took on when they were perturbed or angry, as well as when they were happy. Her husband’s parents had been overjoyed when they were married and even happier when they told them she was expecting their first child. It was the complete opposite when Adriana told her mother. Her mother was incensed at this, her father even more so when he found out. Adriana had long ago accepted their attitude towards Tovar but she still felt the need to tell them they were going to have a baby.

“I’ve known him all of my life. I love him so much... and I’m even prouder of him because of his accomplishments.” Adriana replied. “We haven’t seen each other in a while and he was surprised when I arrived and was so pregnant.”

“He didn’t know?” Nyla asked.

“Oh no, he knew. He found out the same time I told my parents.” Adriana said. “They weren’t too happy I’ll tell you. Mal was more open to it though.”

“Mal?” Eliani said.

“My nickname for him.” Adriana answered with a smile.

“And my brother... Andro knew you were coming?” Eliani asked.

Adriana nodded. “Oh yes. He approved my clearance. I understand it was done much quicker than normal.”

“Yes... it usually takes almost a year for the correct security clearance to find entry onto a Durcunusaan facility.” Nyla answered in a similar stern voice.

Adriana looked at them, sensing the underlining hostility radiating from both of them. It was then that Androcles words came back to her.

Just remember burgundy and yellow. That is what else your brother desires. More than even he realizes.

Princess Eliani’s hair was the color of deep burgundy and Nyla’s was yellow blond. Adriana knew what they meant to each other, and there was almost no one within the Union who did not know of the relationship they shared. Right now they were acting as two very jealous Alpha female wolves would act in the face of competition for an alpha male’s attention. These two women wanted her brother Adriana thought to herself, and if Princess Eliani’s scent was any indication, they viewed her as a threat to what they wanted. Adriana smiled inwardly to herself, keeping this discovery from her facial expression. She was being continually stunned by the events and people surrounding her brother in the last few days. His bonding with Vincix in such a way that he was now a member of perhaps the most famed and feared unit within the Union Military. And now she was discovering that not only did a Princess of the Union desire her brother, but so did that Princess’s pureblood vampire lover and companion. Adriana did not take offense at the way they were reacting, for they wanted her brother and thought she had him. Strangely it made her very happy.

“Perhaps Prince Androcles knew I could be trusted.” Adriana said.

“Where... where has Malic been these last two days?” Eliani asked. “He hasn’t been reporting for his duties as he should.”

“Yes...” Nyla stated. “I’m... I’m going to have to recommend he be reprimanded. The Durcunusaan do not shirk their duty, no matter how mundane it may seem.”

Adriana shook her head. “I don’t know. He only told me he would be gone during the day and at the bungalow in the evening.” She replied, keeping with the story Malic had told her. Adriana knew Eliani undoubtedly would know she was lying, and no doubt Nyla did as well. Tuvar could tell when she was teasing him or not telling him everything just by her heart rate, though you had to be a very skilled vampire to be able to detect this. “You can stop by tonight if you like.”

[She’s lying to us ussta che.] Nyla spoke.

[Yes I know.] Eliani answered as she looked down at the pad. [We need to go see Andro and find out why he allowed her to come here! I am so angry right now I want to rip her face off! And his!]

[He should have told us!] Nyla declared.

[I know.] Eliani looked at her quickly and then turned back to Adriana. “Well everything appears to be in order. Remain with the diet you are on and if you have any problems one of the medics will assist you.”

“Andro said I should come to you.” Adriana spoke knowing she was prodding Eliani in an almost evil way, but she wanted to see just how much this Princess and her lover wanted her brother.

“I am usually very busy!” Eliani snapped intentionally. “I don’t really have the time to direct my attention to just one person!”

“Oh...” Adriana spoke sweetly. “I understand. I will see Renala if I need something then.”

“That is probably best.” Eliani stated. “It was nice meeting you, but I need to check other patients.”

Adriana got to her feet. “Of course Princess. It was a pleasure meeting you both.” She said with a smile.

“When you see Enomotarch Malic, please instruct him he is to report to me immediately when he returns.” Nyla snapped.

“Certainly.” Adriana said. “I should get dressed and leave you to your duties.”

Eliani nodded and looked at Nyla. “We need to do other rounds now Nyla.” She said in a flat voice.

“Of course Eliani.” Nyla answered.

Adriana watched as they both turned and exited the exam room. She smiled to herself as she began to dress in her normal clothes.

“My brother...” She said softly. “First you become a member of Mjolnir’s Hand... and now you have a Princess of the Union and her vampire lover wanting you so bad they can hardly contain their anger at me.” Adriana chuckled. “Oh Malic... you have become so much more than even I had hoped.”

Background Music is Malic’s Theme in the Yahoo Group Black Hawk Down Soundtrack

The sum of cross currents in fifty-three knot winds and a gravity coefficient of point three nine? Isra’s voice asked the question.

Sixteen degrees. Vincix’s voice answered.

Turn radius in a gravity of 1.5, altitude of twenty-three and speed of two hundred nineteen kilometers? Lisisa’s voice asked.

Four point three meters per second. Malic answered immediately. Malic heard Denali’s voice chuckle within his head and he smiled inwardly, his hand reaching up to touch Vincix’s lower snout which was inches from his shoulder.

Twenty for twenty. Denali spoke. Excellent.

You and Vincix have been studying. Isra spoke with some humor in his voice as well.

And flying. Vincix spoke quickly. We woke long before dawn and went out over the western portion of the base.

We can see with each other’s eyes. Malic said. We hunted together. I shifted and was on the ground, Vincix in the air.

Isra nodded slowly his eyes remaining closed. I can honestly say I was very wrong about you Malic. He spoke. I will never make that mistake again.

We will never make that mistake again. Aelnala chimed in.
Nor will I. Lisisa said.

Take it all in brothers. Everything around you. Sense it... feel it... wrap yourselves within it. You must be aware of even the tremors of the smallest branch or leaf around you. All of it is life in some manner. Isra's voice was calm and even within Mindvoice. And all of it could shape your actions and their consequences.

The roaring of the hundred foot waterfall filled the clearing not far from the edge of the small lake the waterfall emptied into. The jungle was cut back in a large circle, able to fit a dozen dragons with no trouble. Now it held four with their riders. Isra sat between Lisisa and Denali, the three of them sitting around Malic in a loose circle. Jeth, Aelnala, Aradace and Vincix rested on the ground behind their bonded ones, all of them with closed eyes.

Feel the beat of your bonded one's heart. Lisisa's voice echoed now. His blood pumping in his veins.

You are one now... and you must surrender to each other all that you are. Denali's voice spoke.

Do not be afraid our brothers... Isra spoke once more. Your bond was destined by greater powers than we. Just as mine and Aelnala's was. Just as Lisisa and Jeth were and Denali and Aradace. Never doubt each other. You have reached that pinnacle and now you must harness it. Do not be afraid to reach out Malic and Vincix. You have brothers and sisters now. Draw on their years of experience and knowledge, just as we draw on yours.

We have become far more than the Elder Mother and King ever suspected. Aelnala's soft smooth voice caressed their minds. Three hundred Pairs that think and fight and breathe as one. No doubts, no hesitation. You have learned much in only one day and more will come as the hours pass.

We will teach you to absorb it all. To focus and retain everything. Aradace spoke now. Unlike the other Bonded Pairs, who must nurture and develop their bonds, our bonds radiate at full power from the moment they come into being.

It makes us different. Jeth's deep voice spoke now, all the childlike personality gone from his nature. Now it was Jeth, a member of Mjolnir's Hand talking. More powerful, yet with that power... with that power also comes the added responsibility of possessing it.

Others will look to you and Vincix now. They will trust you to lead them... to guide them in their endeavors. Isra said. If you trust no one else... then trust in each other.

I can... we can see all that you are. Malic spoke softly his voice filled with awe.

We keep nothing but our most personal thoughts from our brothers and sisters. We share all that we are. Isra continued.

Forget what has happened in your past Malic. Lisisa spoke. Let go of it, for you are reborn now. You are no longer the Malic you once were. Now you are part of us, and we a part of you. Your failures are ours as well. Your victories we share with you. You no longer need to question your purpose in this life. You and Vincix are where you belong. Where you were destined to be.

Can you lay down your lives Malic and Vincix? Lay down your lives so a stranger can live? Androcles's voice boomed within their minds. Clear, powerful and commanding.

Yes. They replied together.

Can you take what you need from your brothers and sisters Malic? But give back more than you take? This new voice burst forth with even more commanding a presence and Malic knew immediately who it was.

We will always give more my King! Malic replied.

Can you close every day without glory and fame? Torma's voice echoed now. Can both of you hold your heads high even when no one knows your names? For that is our path... our calling as Mjolnir's Hand.

You speak with a single voice now my brothers. Andro continued. Do not be afraid to share with us your thoughts.

I wished this at one point. Malic answered honestly. But no more. Not after what I have seen. After what... what we feel coursing through us is not what we expected. I do not know how to describe it.

It is purifying. Vincix said. All our doubts and fears have been brushed aside. There is nothing left but the two of us. Pure. Whole. Free.

Good. Martin's voice said. Very good. Never look back brothers. You are what you were meant to become. We live and we die for our bonded ones and those we serve within the Union. You have completed the circle for us and now we also can move forward. Welcome my sacred brothers and I will see you in the morning when the rest of us arrive.

Thank you my King. Malic spoke quickly.

No Malic. Martin spoke. To you and Vincix... now I am your brother as well as your friend. I am simply Martin Leonidas.

Sire... Martin... I wish...

He heard Andro and Denali's voices laughing softly within the connection. He certainly does not lack for courage father. Andro spoke.

Nor boldness it seems. Elynth's voice echoed with humor.

Martin could be heard chuckling as well. I have seen your heart and soul now Spartan. He said after a moment. What I have seen leaves me with no doubts as to what you desire in your heart. Yes... you have my blessing to pursue Eliani and Nyla if that is your wish Commander Malic of Mjolnir's Hand.

It is Milord!

I believe Nyla's parents would very much approve. Martin said.

We will not disappoint you Milord! Vincix announced.

No... I don't believe you will. Torma and I must go. We will see you tomorrow. Martin's voice said.

Speaking of my sister and Nyla... I must go as well. Andro spoke. They appear angry with me for some reason. I will stop by your bungalow tonight Malic. I have something else I want to give to you and Vincix.

Yes sire. They answered.

They felt Andro and Elynth leave the connection and Malic slowly opened his eyes. He looked around and saw Isra and the others gazing at him and Vincix.

"What... what do we do now?" He asked.

Isra smiled and looked at Lisisa and Denali and then back to him. "How about we do some close quarters flying." He stated. "That always gets my blood pumping. At least Tarifa and Aihola think so."

Lisisa shook her head. "Oh... that is so enough Uncle Isra!" She exclaimed.

"Too much information!" Denali agreed. "Way too much information."

Isra laughed and got to his feet. "Sister... why don't we show the young ones here a thing or too."

Aelnala snorted loudly and nodded her massive head. It would be my pleasure!

Isra looked at them. "Last one to circuit the base at a hundred feet and return here buys the first round tomorrow at the REC."

Lisisa and Denali scrambled to their feet. "That's a bet." Denali spoke.

They turned to see Malic scrambling onto Vincix's back. He looked at them as he settled into the saddle and smiled. "We are the newbies." He said. "We must use every advantage! Vincix my brother! Go!"

Vincix trumpeted his approval and propelled them into the sky.

SPARTA NEW KAVALIAN EMBASSY

[...are angry that your sister acted as she did.] Athani spoke as she walked the granite tiles in the large flower garden. The early morning hours in Sparta she had learned were the quietest times, and also when you could most often smell the pine trees that covered the surrounding mountains in the air. The moon was just beginning to begin its journey down to the western skies.

They had been allowed to move into the new embassy today and Athani knew it would be several days before she could feel her husband's arms around her again. Being able to touch him within Mindvoice provided her the comfort and strength she needed. His mothers and grandmother had surprisingly gotten over the shock of them being together rather quickly, and before she had left Resumar's mountain villa they had taught her several new tricks to mask her presence within Mindvoice to a level that would not raise the suspicions of anyone powerful enough to detect her. They seemed more concerned about what his father would do more than anyone else and that told Athani quite a bit about the type of people they were. She knew they were a spiritual species, believing in a higher power or powers. She had spent countless hours researching the Lycavorian people and to a smaller extent many of the species that called the Union home. King Leonidas the First had started this ingrained mentality, the idea of Gods being very prevalent on Earth in their ancient times. The Spartan mystique was wide ranging and had taken root in almost everything they did. His son and five Queens continued this in how they saw the dragons and each other. They believed something larger guided their actions and reasons. They believed destiny and fate played a huge role in who a person was and what their ultimate path would be. Gorgo had said that she and Resumar had found each other for a reason as strong as their love for each other had shown itself to be. To brave what would undoubtedly be a death sentence for Athani if it was discovered she had married Resumar, or even allowed him to have her in his bed was all the truth that Gorgo had told her she needed.

Her species had always forged ahead in their lives mainly because they thought they were far more cunning and militarily superior to the next species. This mentality had almost cost them their very existence in Athani's eyes, for their war with the High Coven nearly a thousand years ago had brought them to the brink of extinction. Her father's actions had saved their species, but to Athani's way of thinking they had learned nothing from that action. They sought not to improve their people and live side by side with others, but only to conquer and regain the prominence they once had. The actions and concerns of Resumar's mothers and grandmother had shown Athani that, while the Union may have considered them a threat, they did not fear her people in any way.

The actions of Lisisa and Denali Leonidas today had only sealed that notion for her. Jiss and Matuarr were so incensed at what Lisisa had done and the disrespect she had shown them they were practically foaming at the mouth, while Timur fumed silently at how easily Lisisa had handled him. They were livid that she had taken Denali Leonidas as her mate, and thrown that fact into their faces. The part of their plan that Timur would play a role in was now effectively neutralized. Jalersi was also acting differently since they had come here. She remained silent for the most part listening to the males rant back and forth with each other and drinking the strong Spartan wine. Karun had come briefly to the embassy to secure his temporary quarters and then disappeared to walk the streets of Sparta. The Lycavorian blood within him allowed him to pass more easily among the citizens of Sparta, and he was more readily accepted. He had not returned as of yet, but Athani knew Karun was more than capable of taking care of himself.

Resumar's soft laughter filled her with warmth and she felt his aura wrap itself around her even from his villa in Gytheio. [She has never been one to beat around the bush so to speak.] He answered.

[I miss you my love.] Athani said.

[Has Qurot or anyone...]

[No.] Athani exclaimed quickly. Athani had seen Resumar in action on board his father's ship and she knew well what her new husband was capable of. [They are too involved in trying to figure out how they will get your sister to respond to their demands.]

[That is what my mother For'mya determined as well. Their attention will not be on you for the time being.] Resumar said. [If anyone attempts anything with you Aryschanne you contact me instantly and I will send Cemath to get you out of there.]

[That would be very revealing my husband.] Athani answered with humor of her own. [Having Cemath snatch me from inside the embassy walls would undoubtedly announce to everyone that I am not just a simple Kavalian female.]

[You are not just a simple Kavalian female.] Resumar answered. [You are my wife and mate. I will not allow anyone to touch you.]

[I am capable of taking care of myself.] Athani said.

[That is not something I question Aryschanne.] Resumar said. [You are mine however, and I will not be happy if some fool thinks he can have his way with you.]

Athani smiled when he called her his. [I will call for Cemath if things get out of hand my love.] She said. Athani was no fool, and while she was very deadly in her own right, she had no desire to feel anyone's touch upon her body now except that of Resumar.

[It will only be for another day or so Aryschanne.] Resumar explained. [My mothers are working with Deia to make sure that when you announce you are defecting that your people can do nothing politically. They don't believe your father will be very happy, and they want to take away every recourse he may have before we act.]

[Resumar... I could try and find out as much as I can before I leave.] Athani spoke. [Troop deployments, fleet movements, what they plan for the embassy here. How they will try to discover about the High Coven.]

[No!] Resumar nearly shouted within Mindvoice. [You are my wife and mate Athani. I did not fall in love with you to try and discover what your father and others are doing and use you as some sort of intelligence operative. I don't want you to risk yourself in any way. My mothers agree with me.]

[I know that Resumar.] Athani answered gently as warmth swept through her at his words. Hearing his answer brought down any doubts that may have been lingering in her subconscious.

[Then do nothing to put yourself at risk!] Resumar stated again. [Nothing.]

Athani's tail twitched slightly and curled up around her waist in a sign of contentment and peace. [Then I won't.] She said. Athani's sharp feline like eyes caught movement near the turn up ahead and she stopped walking when she saw her sister appear. [My love I must go. Jalersi is nearby. I will contact you later today just so that I may hear your voice.]

[Soon Aryschanne. Soon nothing will draw us apart.] Resumar said.

[And I look forward to that day.] Athani spoke as she continued to walk towards her sister who had seen her now.

Jalersi held the mug of Kavalian tea in her hands as Athani walked up and stopped in front of her. She eyed her younger sister evenly, taking in the confidence in her gait and the brightness of her eyes. There was something different about her sister since they had arrived on King Leonidas's ship and Jalersi could not place it.

"You are up early sister." Jalersi spoke softly.

"With the men ranting and hooting from the first floor it is a wonder anyone can sleep." Athani replied. "I take it they did not agree with what the daughter of Leonidas did?"

Jalersi snorted softly. "I don't believe any female has ever talked to them as she did this morning. And she is Pusintin's daughter, not Leonidas."

"Really? Well... obviously she does not agree." Athani said.

"Jiss and Matuarr will force her to comply." Jalersi said slowly. "They are preparing an extensive brief to present to the Spartan Galactic Court. A brief this Lisisa will have no choice but to adhere to."

"And you think that she will just do this because Jiss and Matuarr say she has to? Sister... I have never known you to act stupidly." Athani spoke seeing Jalersi turn to glare at her. "Why is it so important for Jiss and the others to force this woman to do something she will not ever do?"

"You know why Athani." Jalersi replied. "She is a member of this Mjolnir's Hand. One of the most powerful of them if all accounts are accurate. Almost on a level with the King and his oldest son."

"And you think she will willingly give up this position because Pusintin is her father?" Athani asked almost sarcastically. "Or because of some ridiculous laws Jiss and Matuarr will attempt to use against her. And bringing Timur here, declaring he was promised by Pusintin that she would be his was foolish. Jalersi... we were the ones who studied these men and women for months. Why is father dismissing our council now? Or was his intent to never listen to us in the first place?"

"Athani you have no idea what you speak." Jalersi snapped but with no where near the vehemence she should have because part of her was beginning to believe her younger sister.

"Don't I?" Athani said softly seeing Jalersi look at her with bright blue eyes. "The moment Jiss and Matuarr revealed what their real purpose was I was pushed to the side like a piece of meat. I do know that father never really intended for us to make any serious decisions or commitments while we were here. We were only sent as a show to the Union that perhaps females were not treated as badly as the Union believes. They failed in that regard and now they will attempt to use outdated laws against the Union in the hopes of gaining what it is they want." Athani said. "This only serves to confirm to the Lycavorians what they have always believed. And the Lycavorians are not as stupid as Jiss and Matuarr believe them to be either."

"What would you have me do Athani?" Jalersi said. "I have spoken with father! He..."

"He told you that Jiss and Matuarr would now be in charge didn't he?" Athani said.

"Yes."

“And no doubt Pusintin agrees with him sister.” Athani told her. “He may be Lycavorian Jalersi, but he has been among our people for too long. In many ways he is no better than Qurot. Even Pian has shown you more respect since coming here.”

Jalersi looked at her evenly wondering if her sister was aware of what Pian had told her in the hospital room on the ship. Jalersi did not want to admit to herself that she had relished in the night she had spent with Pian all those years ago. He had not marked her because she was mated to Pusintin, but he had fucked her until her mind was awash in pleasure. It had angered her that he had not locked groins with her then, for no matter how much she professed to love Pusintin, Pian always had a small part in her head and she did not know why. Pusintin treated her with the respect she would not receive from a male of her own species and that is what drew her to him at first. But now Jalersi wasn't so sure. He had fathered a child from someone other than her, and he had never told her about it. It didn't matter to Jalersi that it was from the vampire witch, but the fact Pusintin hadn't told her made her wonder what else he had not told her. And it made her question whether he had gone outside their union since becoming her husband and mate. Since that moment on the ship when Pian had professed he loved her, Jalersi had begun to question everything. Athani was right she knew, for Pian had acted differently ever since then. He was always meticulously groomed, and he would be considered fantastically handsome by Kavalian standards. He had stepped up to shield her on several occasions since joining them on this mission, even facing off against his friend and mentor Qurot on one of them. His actions were not typical of the Pian of old, and though Jalersi had always found him extremely handsome, she had avoided him and his advances because of his association with Qurot.

Now she wasn't so sure that perhaps a different part of Pian was coming to the surface.

Jalersi looked at Athani. “You seem different Athani.” Jalersi said softly. “More calm and in command of your emotions. Why?”

Athani shrugged with a small smile. “I have accepted what fate and destiny have given to me Jalersi and what role I will play.” Athani spoke.

“You... you have never believed in these things before sister.” Jalersi said. “Why now? What has made you change your mind?”

“Does it matter?” Athani said gently.

“You... you will not protest Qurot taking you?” Jalersi asked.

“If that is what destiny decrees... then that is what will be.” Athani said. “There is no sense in fighting it.”

“You know that father will... he will order you to return to Cabelir within a few days.” Jalersi said. “He... he doesn't feel your presence here is needed any longer. He thinks you are more of a...”

“Distraction?” Athani said with a small smile. “Yes I determined that already. When will I be going back?”

“He dispatched a Courier Ship last evening. It was traveling with Qurot's ship and should arrive in three days I would think. The Union has given us access to their Jump Gates for diplomatic purposes.”

“Really?” Athani asked.

Jalersi shook her head. “Pian has already told me they are civilian Jump Gates and have no military value at all. They do not transit anywhere close to sensitive areas within the Union, and if we veer from them then our ships will be intercepted and they will need to travel with an escort all of the time.”

Athani nodded. “They are not fools Jalersi.” She said. “They don't trust us, and we do nothing to alleviate this in their minds with our actions here. You must know that no matter what Jiss and Matuarr come up with in regards to Lisisa, they will not succeed.”

Jalersi nodded. “In that I fear you are right. But they will try.”

“They will fail.” Athani said.

“You have always been the more stubborn of the two of us sister.” Jalersi spoke softly. “Athani... I... my intent all these years was never more than my way of protecting you. I may have gone about it wrong, but you know how our laws work. It was the only way I could think of to keep you at least reasonably safe.”

Athani nodded. “I know Jalersi.” She said softly. She stepped closer to her sister and took the hand that did not hold the mug of tea. “Jalersi... you will do what you must I know... but one day you will need to let your heart rule your actions. When that happens... you might find out your heart leads you down a different path than what you travel now.”

Jalersi's eyes narrowed. "You sound like we will never see each other again sister." She said with a smile.

Athani chuckled. "We are sisters! We will always see each other." She said. "What of Karun? You worry for him."

"Ever since meeting this Lisisa he has been odd." Jalersi said. "He hasn't returned from his walk. His locator beacon puts him somewhere in the southern section of Sparta, but Qurot and Pian can not go there. They would not fit in. And Timur is more interested in discovering a way to get this Lisisa into his bed now that she humiliated him."

"Karun is very capable of taking care of himself." Athani said with a small smile. "And he is half Lycavorian. He will be fine sister. I have discovered that even those who are half Lycavorian are treated as if they are full blooded. Even the elves. That elf female we saw, Ardis was her name; I saw full blooded Lycavorian males taking her orders without question. She seemed interested in Karun as well. Perhaps he is trying to focus himself for the tasks his father sent him here to accomplish."

Jalersi nodded slowly and looked up to meet Athani's eyes. "I will miss you when you go sister." She said.

Athani slipped her arm into Jalersi's, suddenly feeling very protective of her older sister. Jalersi had always seemed so confident and in control, and now it was as if she had lost that somehow. Or perhaps not lost it, but questioning all that she believed. "Come... let you and I go to the kitchen. The staff has not arrived yet and we can cook ourselves breakfast like we did when we were younger."

Jalersi smiled as Athani began to draw her back towards the embassy.

SODRAG

Eliani stared at her older brother, literally shaking in anger as he slowly moved his head back to look at her. He lifted his hand to rub the side of his face where her slap had struck like a trip hammer. The power of the blow had surprised Eliani, Nyla grasping her arm quickly after she had lashed out, and her own green eyes wide in shock at what Eliani had done.

Andro opened his mouth and moved his jaw back and forth a few times before meeting her fern green eyes with his azure orbs. "I can only assume you are not happy with me for some reason Eliani." Andro said calmly.

"You knew damn it!" Eliani exclaimed now.

"Knew what?" Andro asked.

"You knew how Nyla and I feel about... you know how we feel about Malic Andro!" She snapped. "You knew and you allowed him to bring his pregnant girlfriend here onto the base!"

"I take it you have met Adriana then." Andro said.

"Yes we met her." Nyla spoke barely able to keep the anger from her voice.

Andro smiled. "She's a teacher you know." He said.

"You think this is nubous funny?" Eliani snarled as she tossed the data pad at him watching him catch it easily and set it on his desk. "You know how we feel about him yet you bring his girlfriend here! And then you tell her to come see me specifically. Are you trying to make me look the fool Andro?"

"We thought perhaps he may not have known." Nyla stated. "This Adriana said he has known from the beginning. She made it a point to tell us how proud she was of him and how much she loved him."

"She was making fun of us!" Eliani stated angrily.

Andro couldn't contain his chuckle as he moved back to his desk and sat down. "Making fun of you huh?" He said. "She did a little more than I thought she would."

Two sets of green eyes grew even wider as they looked at him settle into his chair. "You knew she would do that?" Nyla exclaimed.

"Andro... you nubous ronnus!" Eliani spat. "How could you do that to us?"

"I did it so the two of you would pull your heads out of your asses and go after what you both want so much and stop tap dancing like a couple of love struck adolescent wolves." Andro stated as he poured himself a mug of his mother's coffee.

“What?” Eliani hissed.

“You are worried about what father and our mothers will think of Malic.” Andro said. “It’s obvious Eliani. You have never been shy about going after what you wanted. And neither have you Nyla. You were concerned about what everyone would think of Malic and you were playing games with him.”

“So you bring his pregnant girlfriend here!” Nyla declared. “This is supposed to inspire us to act differently. He is going to be a father Andro! This Adriana is carrying his child!”

“Did you examine her Eliani?” Andro asked.

“What? Why?” Eliani snapped. “Why would I need to? Renala examined her! She’s twenty-nine weeks pregnant with Malic’s child. What else do I need to know?”

“So you didn’t examine her?” Andro asked again.

“I didn’t feel the need to examine her! I’m the doctor here!” Eliani barked at him. “And I didn’t need her to keep flaunting in our faces that she had Malic and we didn’t! I can’t believe you would be so low as to do something like this!”

“You are only half wolf Eliani, but I know your sense of smell is very acute. Much more so than either Carina or Zarah or even Normya.” Andro said calmly as he sipped his coffee. “You and Nyla are so intent on trying to discover why Malic is why he is that you are letting it blind you to what you really feel.”

“We know why Malic is how he is!” Eliani snapped loudly. “His mother and father used Peteracal on him when he was a baby. It’s why he didn’t hardly feel the blade that vampire idiot stabbed him with! And don’t you dare tell me we don’t know what we feel!”

“I will tell you that because if you weren’t acting like such a mida... you would have detected the similarities to Malic in Adriana’s scent.” Andro said.

“What I detected was his scent all over her!” Eliani barked at him viciously. “I’m not stupid Androcles!”

“You are sure acting like it.” Andro stated.

“You egotistical bastard!” Eliani shouted.

“She has Malic’s scent on her because she slept in his bed.” Andro said picking up the data pad now. “If you would stop ranting like a child for a moment and look past your desire to fix what is not broken, you would have noticed that she has a similar scent to Malic. A similar scent to Malic because Adriana is his younger sister.”

“What?” Nyla gasped moving up to stand next to Eliani now.

Andro nodded. “Adriana is a teacher. Malic requested that she be allowed to come here and act as his teacher. His desire to become part of Mjolnir’s Hand led him to this decision. I approved the request immediately and had her brought here. Adriana is married to a pureblood vampire Colonel who is stationed on Hunlar Five. His name is Tuvar. The baby is their first child. I had to pull some strings, but Tuvar will be arriving next week so they can remain together while Adriana is here helping Malic with his studies.”

“His... his sister?” Eliani gasped now as Andro got to his feet and moved around to stand in front of her.

Andro smiled. “Eliani... do you honestly think for a moment that I would purposely do something to hurt you or Nyla. I know how Malic affected you the moment I saw you looking at him before we left the SCIMITAR. I also know you and Nyla are so closely bound together that you desire the exact same type of man, and that she would feel the same thing as you.” He said. “You and Nyla have been requesting his records and learning all you can about him by sneaking around with grandmother Gorgo helping you.”

“How... how do you know that?” Nyla asked.

Andro grinned. “A little bird told me.” He said. He reached up and placed his hand on Eliani’s cheek causing her to look up at him. “You are a Leonidas... and Nyla you have been considered a part of our family from the moment you and Eliani came together. Eliani Leonidas and Nyla Sinthe do not sneak around... they take what they want. This is how you have always acted, and it is how you acted with Malic when you beat his ass on the SCIMITAR.” He saw her surprised look and smiled. “Resumar told me. You put him down quite easily I understand, and then you made it very clear to him what you wanted. You acted exactly as father and mother would expect you to act. Do not change who you are now. Either of you.”

“He is... he needs help Andro.” Eliani said softly. “His condition is...”

“You are speaking as a Healer Eliani.” Andro said shaking his head. “Speak and act as a Lycavorian alpha female. That is who you are at your core.”

“She is his sister?” Eliani asked.

Andro nodded. "And more than likely she was getting great pleasure from seeing the two of you act as you did. She was testing you... just as you and Lisisa and Carina and my sisters tested every female before Sadi came back into my life. She loves her brother... the two of them have quite a bit in common."

"He thinks we have mocked him within Mindvoice." Nyla said squeezing Eliani's hand. "He believes we were making fun of him Andro."

"I think you will find Malic has changed quite a bit in the time he has been here." Andro spoke as the COM panel on his desk began to chime. He turned and reached for it. "Perhaps you should discover just how much before you get it in your heads that you must help him." Andro pressed the panel. "Yes."

"Milord... there is an Admiral Megdar and his mate Golina here to see you." The voice said.

Eliani's eyes grew wide. "His parents?" She spoke.

Andro nodded. "Yes." He spoke touching the panel again. "Show them here Jagar. Make sure they have the correct Security Pass on before you bring them through."

"Yes Milord."

Andro looked at his sister and Nyla. "I think I pissed his father off even more than Nyla did when I told him I added my name to Nyla's order stopping any transfer he may have initiated. Then I let it slip that Adriana was coming here to be with her brother and that angered him even more." He explained with a smile.

"He said he was coming here." Nyla said. "I didn't think he would actually do it."

Andro nodded. "Yes... well apparently he feels the need to be in control of their lives as he controls the lives of his other children. Malic and Adriana are the only ones to break away from that control."

Eliani blinked several times as she noticed the crimson shoulders of Andro's ArmorPly for the first time. "Andro... your... your uniform." She stated looking up into his azure eyes. "You have found the last Rider for Mjolnir's Hand?"

Andro nodded with a smile. "Among the Durcunusaan yes." He replied. "It came as quite a surprise to be honest. We hadn't detected them before a few days ago."

"That is where Lisisa and Denali are isn't it? That's why we haven't seen them since they returned?" She asked.

Andro nodded. "I asked them to help Uncle Isra in working with the new pair."

"Who is it?" Nyla asked.

"I don't think you know them. Uncle Andreus found them on Apo Prime several weeks ago and they only just arrived here two days ago." Andro lied. He had grown quite good at hiding when he wasn't telling the truth, and Eliani and Nyla were so worked up over Malic that they would not notice the slight change in his heart rate or the miniscule adrenalin dump into his system. He did not want to reveal to them that it was Malic and Vincix just yet. They would discover that when everyone else did tomorrow morning. "Do you want to remain and meet Malic's parents?"

"Are you kidding?" Eliani said moving to the couch and settling into the soft cushions. "I wouldn't miss this for the world."

"Nor would I." Nyla said settling next to her.

Andro grinned as the chime on his office door sounded and he shook his head. "Be on your best behavior." He spoke watching as Eliani stuck her tongue out at him. He chuckled and turned back to the door. "Come!"

They watched as Andro's Durcunusaan aide entered first, followed by the tall, heavily muscled Admiral and the more petite dark haired woman.

"Milord Androcles... Admiral Megdar and his mate and wife Golina." The young Durcunusaan lieutenant spoke.

"Thank you Jagar." Andro spoke. "I'll see to them now."

"I'll insure their quarters are ready Androcles." The officer spoke as he turned to leave. Andro took note of the twitch of disapproval in Megdar's jaw at the informal way the officer spoke to him.

Andro looked at Malic's father and mother and decided it was easy enough to see where Malic got his size and the color of his eyes. He held out his hand. "Admiral Megdar... it is a pleasure to meet you."

Megdar looked surprised as he reached out and shook Andro's hand. "Sire." He spoke.

Andro turned to Golina and bowed his head slightly. "Lady Golina... an honor."

Golina was just as taken aback and she forced a smile. "Prince Androcles." She stated.

Andro motioned to Eliani and Nyla. "You know my sister Eliani and I believe you have already spoken with Nyla."

Megdar's eyes narrowed when he saw Nyla and he forced himself to nod. "Princess Eliani." He stated as they got to their feet. "Commander."

"Star Commander." Nyla spoke quickly correcting him. "I'm quite proud of my rank Admiral as I have already told you. I earned it."

"Yes... of course." Megdar spoke dismissing Nyla almost out of hand. He turned back to Andro. "Sire... I am here to escort my daughter Adriana home and complete the transfer orders for my son Malic."

Andro motioned them to the two chairs in front of his desk. "Please... sit down." He said. "Can I offer you some of my mother's coffee? It's freshly brewed."

"No thank you Milord." Megdar spoke as he sat down.

"Lady Golina?"

"I do so love the Queen's coffee sire. Yes... with light cr me if you could." Golina asked as she settled into the chair.

"Certainly." Andro spoke as he moved to the counter.

"Sire... I was under the impression that we would be speaking alone." Megdar said.

"Eliani is the senior doctor on the base and Malic falls under Nyla's direct command." Andro spoke. "I felt they should be present. Is that an issue?"

"No Milord... of course not!" Megdar replied.

"Good." Andro spoke moving back and holding the mug out to Golina.

"Thank you sire." Golina spoke taking the mug from his hands. Andro saw the expensive jewelry adorning her wrists and glanced up to see the glittering ruby red pendant dangling from the pure silver chain around her neck.

Andro forced a smile and then moved back to his desk where he settled into the chair across the simple desk from them. "So... about the transfer orders." He spoke.

"Yes Milord..." Megdar spoke quickly. "I have an enlisted billet waiting for Malic on my Command Ship. Once he assumes his duties there he will see that hard work will pay off and he will climb in rank quickly."

Andro nodded as he sipped his coffee. "Malic is a Durcunusaan Candidate." Andro said. "He has expressed a desire to one day become bonded to a dragon and challenge for a position in Mjornir's Hand."

Megdar chuckled. "Sire... I think... I think after viewing Malic's record you will find he is not capable of doing that." He said. "He lacks the higher reasoning and abilities to solve advanced equations and calculations. The same equations and calculations he would have to contend with if he was ever able to... bond with a dragon as you say. Certainly he will never become a member of the King's unit. He does not have the necessary educational level or ability to reach that level."

"No thanks to you." Eliani snapped now as she got to her feet.

Megdar looked at her. "Pardon me Princess?" He asked.

"Don't play coy with me Admiral." Eliani stated. "You will find I am very much my mother and father's daughter when it comes to individuals who think they can play me. You and your wife had Malic treated with Peteracal when he was an infant. I have seen his medical records... Malic was born with Nomatel Syndrome."

"How do you know that?" Golina demanded. "His medical records were sealed!"

"I unsealed them." Eliani stated.

"You can not do that!" Megdar barked. "Even as princess you are not allowed to open sealed medical files without our permission!"

"Malic is a Durcunusaan Candidate." Eliani snapped right back unfazed by Malic's father. "I am senior medical officer on this base... as well as a Princess of this Union. Malic was stabbed by a vampire during training and even though the blade penetrated his flesh nearly three point two centimeters he didn't feel a thing. That is one of the classic signs of Peteracal use. When I did further research and discovered his inability to understand higher equations and functions I knew I was right. You stopped the treatments when he was four years old, after the Peteracal destroyed the Nomatel Syndrome, but by then it was already too late. If you want to deny it Admiral feel free, I will call my mother to confirm my findings, and then you will see just how much of a temper my mother has when she discovers what you and your mate have done."

“Milord... I must protest!” Megdar complained turning to look at Andro. “That was many years ago... my mate and I regret our actions, and we have done everything we could since that time to give Malic everything he needed.”

“Blivet!” Nyla snapped.

Megdar glared at her. “What did you say?” He demanded.

“Blivet!” Nyla spoke. “It is a term that Eliani’s mother taught me. She is quite fond of it. It means ten pounds of shit in a five pound bag. Basically what you are speaking now in trying to explain yourself and your actions.”

“May I remind you that I outrank you Commander?” Megdar spat. “I will...”

“You do not outrank me however Admiral.” Andro spoke now leaning back in his chair. “And you would do well not to threaten an officer under my command. Especially not one of Nyla Sinthe’s credentials and record. And most assuredly not in my presence.”

Megdar met his eyes now. “Forgive me Prince Androcles.” He stated. “We have traveled a long way and we are both tired.”

“Yes... I’m sure. It is my understanding that after arriving here Malic asked and was granted the request that no further communications from you or your mate be allowed to reach him.” Andro spoke. “He is well past the age where he need follow your direction. He has forged a name for himself with his deeds and accomplishments. You know of course he reached Enomotarch faster than anyone in the history of the Union?”

Megdar looked at him. “That... that may have been known to me.” He said.

“And yet you refused to go to his promotion ceremony Admiral.” Andro said. “In fact... neither you nor your mate has ever been to one of his promotion ceremonies. Neither you nor your mate, or any of his brothers and sisters was present for any of his decorations when they were awarded. And that includes the Union Commendation Cluster he received for saving the lives of two of his unit in a training exercise. The highest non-combat decoration that we can award to a Spartan and you saw fit not to attend that ceremony.”

“I do have my duties as Fleet Commander Milord.” Megdar spoke almost arrogantly.

Andro nodded. “Yes you do.” He stated. “Malic is a Durcunusaan Candidate Admiral, therefore he does not fall under the auspice of the regular Fleet Personnel Office. He falls under the control of the Durcunusaan. He belongs to me. I forwarded Nyla’s order voiding his transfer orders; my signature is right below hers. Malic is going no where.”

“Milord... he belongs with... he belongs with Spartans who are like him.” Golina spoke now for the first time.

“With all due respect Lady Golina... you have no idea who your son is.” Eliani snapped.

Golina looked at her. “He is my son! I think I know him far better than you.” Golina spoke.

“Do you?” Eliani said crossing her arms under her full breasts. Nyla looked at her lover with a knowing smile. She had seen Eliani in full alpha female wolf mode only once before, and it was certainly a sight to see. That day had seen her dress down a male officer who was interested in Nyla and would not take no for an officer. She had gone up one side of him and down the other before laying a blistering, toe curling kiss on Nyla directly in front of him. That night had seen them have some incredible sex together. The passion radiating from her right now, professing what they both felt so deeply for Malic made Nyla love her all the more.

“Then I’m sure you know that Malic has already made his intentions known to claim Nyla and I as his mates. He makes my blood burn just being close to him, his scent drives me into a lustful fury that I don’t want to control, and he didn’t need Peteracal to do that to me. Nyla can hardly be in the same room with him without becoming flustered because of what he does to her vampire blood. He does that to us all on his own. And when he claims me... when he claims Nyla, we are going to sing his name to the stars.”

Megdar actually laughed at this. “Malic would never have the courage to approach you in such a way Princess. It is not in his nature. He has never been able to keep a female because he is for lack of a better word... a brute.”

“That is because of what you did to him!” Nyla snapped.

This caused Megdar and Golina’s eyes to go wide. “Malic... Malic would never... he would...”

“He would never claim a vampire as one of his mates?” Nyla said with a knowing smile as she gripped Eliani’s hand tighter and felt her step close and press her body against Nyla’s svelte frame. “That is your first clue that you do not know who your son is.”

“He will not succeed in whatever he has come here for!” Megdar barked out turning back to Andro. “The Durcunusaan are not for him! And he would never claim a vampire as his mate! Not my son! None of my sons would ever do this!”

“What is it that you have against vampires and the Durcunusaan Admiral?” Andro asked calmly. “It is obvious in the way you speak their name that you do not hold them in high regard. Why is that?”

“Vampires are responsible for the death of my parents!” Megdar spoke with seething rage beneath his tone.

“You are referring to members of the High Coven Admiral.” Andro said. “Not the vampires that call the Union home.”

“In my opinion they are all the same.” Megdar said.

“And the Durcunusaan?” Andro asked.

“Respectfully Milord... they are undisciplined and do not know what respect is.” Megdar said looking at him. “They are unorthodox and do not follow procedure in how they conduct themselves. They do not even look like soldiers should look. Their hair is too long, their facial hair unkempt.”

Andro chuckled. “Have you brought this to the attention of my father?” He asked. “It appears he does not seem to meet your extraordinarily high standards either.”

“Milord... he is... he is King.” Megdar said more subdued now.

“And you think we will be angry if you speak ill of our father in our presence?” Andro asked with a smile. “You should see all of my brothers and sisters when we get together and talk about our father Admiral. Your concerns however, they have no bearing on why you are here.” Andro got to his feet. “I will inform Malic and Adriana you are here Admiral. It will be up to them what they want to do.”

“Milord... that is not acceptable to us.” Megdar spoke coming to his feet.

Andro looked at him. “Respectfully Admiral, what is acceptable to you and your mate is not my concern, nor is it Malic’s or your daughter. Adriana is mated to a senior vampire officer stationed on Hunlar Five. An excellent officer by all accounts, and they are expecting their first child in several months. Did you know that?”

“We know Milord.” Golina stated rather offhandedly. “We did not approve of her union with this man. He is several hundred years older than her and he...”

“Because he is a vampire?” Nyla asked.

“If you must know... yes.” Golina said.

“Colonel Tuvar has never married and he pursued Adriana for eight months before she agreed to finally acknowledge his advances.” Nyla spoke. “It was another seven months before they actually became an item. And then another seven months before she accepted his proposal of marriage. Yes... he is three hundred and fourteen years older than her, and he worships the very ground she walks upon. And if you had taken the time to know him, you would have seen that for yourselves.”

“Adriana... as well as Malic... they are well past the age that they can make their own decisions in regards to their futures.” Andro spoke. “I will advise them you are here, and it will be up to them how they wish to proceed. You have been given very limited access to SODRAG Admiral... but do not attempt to abuse that. You will find that those same disheveled and undisciplined Durcunusaan soldiers you don’t like very much will arrest you so fast it will make your head spin. We take security very seriously here.” Andro moved around his desk and stood in front of them. “We are having a promotion ceremony of sorts’ tomorrow morning. As a Flag officer you will be required to attend since my father will be there and you are here on the base. I will leave two passes for you and your mate. After the ceremony you can meet with Malic and Adriana if that is what you and they wish. Otherwise I will have a transport standing by to return you to your ship so you can depart.”

“You are dismissing me?” Megdar asked stunned.

Andro tilted his head slightly to the side. “Yes... I believe that is what it is called. I am very busy. Jagar will escort you to your quarters. I believe the mess lounge serves dinner at 1930 tonight. Good day Admiral.”

Dysea turned to look at Lexi and her seven member Durcunusaan detachment as the STRIKER's engines began to die down. The trip here had taken far too long in Dysea's opinion, the whole time her concern for Normya increasing. She felt as Martin did, that for some reason these Immortals could be trusted on their word, but the inbred fear of Immortals still rubbed at her consciousness. All of them wore the standard ArmorPly body armor and were heavily armed. Lexi had been her Durcunusaan Captain since their inception, and while Dysea almost never went anywhere without Iriral, Lexi was also never far behind. They had become close friends through the years, Dysea even being named as Guardian to Lexi and her mate's two children should anything happen to them.

Dysea sensed Iriral unhook herself from the take off and landing harness and move gracefully into the main body of the STRIKER. Dysea's long, platinum blond hair flowed around her face and shoulders, reaching down to just above her firm buttocks. Her Nauta Melme had commented once on how delicious she looked when she allowed her hair to fall freely about her face and shoulders, and since that time she almost never wore it tied into a pony tail. Nor did any of her fellow Queens, unless it was needed in some fashion.

"Remember... we are not here for conflict." Dysea said. "We truly do not know what we are entering into and until we have Normya safely within our grasp I want nothing foolish undertaken that could put her at risk."

"I briefed them already Dysea." Lexi said with a smile.

Dysea looked at her and smiled. "I'm sorry Lexi... I am just worried for Normya."

Lexi reached out and took her arm. "There is nothing to apologize for." Lexi answered. "Many of us have been with you for over a decade... and we know how you are. You and the King felt she was not in danger right?"

Dysea looked at her and shook her head. "No. These Immortals seem to be... they seem to be different somehow. And the one we spoke to is the one who helped Nauta Melme to escape Lycavore."

"Then let's operate under the assumption we are entering into if not a hostile situation, an unknown one." Lexi answered. "Though we all trust yours and Martin's intuition more than most intelligence reports any day of the week."

Lexi is right Dysea my sister. Iriral spoke now causing Dysea to turn and look at her. If their intent was anything but honorable would they have allowed Normya to contact us directly?

Dysea shook her head. No... I don't believe they would have.

Then let us proceed as Lexi has said. Iriral said. Every species is able to change... and perhaps we have come upon the first of the Immortals who are changing with the shape of the universe.

Dysea took a deep breath and nodded. "Both of you are correct." She said turning to face the ramp. "Let us take our own advice and not fear the unknown."

Lexi smiled and motioned with her head to the Durcunusaan troop closest to the ramp controls. He nodded and brought his hand up, entering the code quickly. The ramp unlocked and began its trip down.

Dysea moved to the end of the ramp, Iriral on her right and Lexi on her left. They watched as the sun began to snake its way into the interior of the STRIKER, and then they could see lush green mountains on the horizon. As the ramp continued down they began to see the tops of the simple yet modern buildings spread as far as the eyes could see, as well as numerous figures in the distance walking casually along the upper pedestrian bridges they could see. As the ramp began to descend into its permanent fixed position on the ground all their eyes turned to the two dozen or so figures that waited a short distance away. The majority of them were Immortals, that was easy enough to ascertain due to their height and builds, but they also saw half a dozen elves mixed in with the Immortals. Standing between the bronze skinned Immortals was the exotic looking pureblood vampire female that Dysea had already talked to, and just to the right of who Dysea knew as Tir'ut was Normya. Her heart skipped a beat seeing her daughter so close to Immortals, but her face was beaming and the moment the ramp locked into place on the ground Normya was running forward.

Dysea forgo her royal position and rushed down the ramp as well, gathering Normya into her arms just past where the bottom of the ramp met the ground and she buried her face in Normya's long platinum colored hair.

"Amille." Normya gasped softly as her mother's arms embraced her and surrounded her with her female wolf aura.

“Oh Normya!” Dysea gasped herself, squeezing her tightly as Iriral and Lexi came down the ramp next, followed by the six others in the detachment. She held Normya at arms length and ran her hands over her face and head.

Normya gripped her hands with a small laugh. “I am fine mother.” She stated with a smile. “Really.”

Iriral extended her head out and brushed Normya’s shoulder with her snout. It is very good to see you safe Normya. She spoke within Mindvoice.

Normya smiled and reached up to rubbed Iriral’s snout. Thank you Iriral. She answered. It is very good to see you. All of you.

It was becoming boring on Earth. I welcomed the trip. Iriral said with some humor. And never let it be said that a Leonidas leads a dull life.

Dysea couldn’t help but laugh now as well, tears of joy streaking her cheeks and she held Normya’s hands. They watched as Iriral lifted her snout and let her emerald colored eyes wash over those Immortals and others who stood patiently in front of them. She glanced back to Normya. They do not seem frightened of me Normya. She spoke.

Normya looked quickly back to where Tir’ut stood, her eyes finding him easily. No. There is little that frightens them I think.

Iriral nodded her massive head. Then they are more like us than we suspect.

Normya nodded. Yes they are. Come mother... I will introduce you. Gripping her mother’s hands she turned and drew her back towards where Cha’talla and Esther stood next to each other. Erli’ra and her father stood beside them as well and Dysea watched as Cha’talla’s head snapped around to the side.

“Udos jous udossta bel'lain whol ilta ussgyot 'zil Valsharess d'l'Union.” He barked. (We show our respect for her position as Queen of the Union)

Dysea watched wide eyed as everyone dropped to one knee in front of her, the Immortals rapping their weapons on the metal walkway loudly one time as they bowed their heads to her. The movement was very precise and the noise echoed across the area loudly as she stopped in front of Cha’talla’s kneeling form.

“I extend our sincere welcome to you Queen Dysea Leonidas.” Cha’talla spoke as he lifted his face to look at her. “To Kranek... and to our home.”

Dysea looked at him with wide eyes. It was easy enough to discern he was an Immortal, but his skin was more bronze in color and the bone spikes had been filed down to small nubs. Though he maintained his sunken eyes, it wasn’t nearly as pronounced as Dysea had expected and his face appeared very relaxed. But also very proud. She let her eyes drift over the gathered Immortals and the elves, stunned that there would be elves living freely among them.

“Please...” Dysea finally spoke. “All of you... you need not bow to me... or to anyone.”

Cha’talla allowed the small smile to split his face and he rose to his feet, recognizing that this elven queen was taller than he expected. She was easily five foot nine or ten and her figure was muscular and lean under the body armor she wore. Dysea watched as they all got back to their feet, but her focus was on Cha’talla the entire time.

“I welcome you to our home Queen Leonidas.” He stated again. “And though this day has happened much sooner than I had the courage to pursue, I am very glad it has come about.”

“I would like to... my Nauta Melme and I would like to thank you for what you have done.” Dysea said softly. “In protecting our daughter.”

Cha’talla bowed his head. “I would like to present my Du'ased 'ranndi Esther Saira. I believe you have already spoken with her.”

Esther stepped forward and held out her hand in greeting. “It is an honor to meet you Queen Dysea. Erli’ra and her father have told us much about you. And so has your daughter.”

Dysea didn’t pause and embraced Esther tightly, her hands on her shoulders. “Nauta Melme and I... we owe you a debt we can never repay.” Dysea whispered looking at her.

Esther shook her head with a smile. “Not me.” She said. “Our son Tir’ut.”

Dysea turned at where Esther motioned and saw the same half Immortal she had seen in the transmission. He was easily a match for his father in height and musculature, his skin a similar bronze color, but much more natural like a deep tan. His bone spurs were not filed down, but they were not as prominent as they were on pure Akruvian people. His dark hair was cut very short and Dysea surprisingly found herself admitting he was handsome in a certain way.

“Tir’ut.” She said softly stepping up to him and looking up into his dark eyes. Dysea felt something within this young man, something powerful and bright. She sensed Iriral come up closer behind her and then two sets of emerald eyes were gazing at him and Dysea noticed this did not cause him to flinch in the least. He actually looked back at Iriral with something akin to great interest.

[He is so very strong Dysea.] Iriral spoke softly. [The tremors I feel are... they are that of a Tier Six Mindvoicer easily.]

Dysea nodded. [Perhaps... perhaps you are right Iriral. Perhaps the universe is changing.] She held out her hands to Tir’ut. “T’yin ol zhah ulu dos udos ruebuss udossta dalharil’s dro.” (Then it is to you we owe our daughter’s life)

Tir’ut looked at her evenly. He knew they had spoken within Mindvoice, but he never lowered his mental shields down very far, and all he felt were the tremors of their heavily shielded conversation. His mother Esther had been taught by the Empress herself, refining her Mindvoice abilities to levels that many within the High Coven would not achieve. The moment Esther had shared Cha’talla’s blood, they had established a personal connection, and the natural strength of the Akruvian people to shield against Mindvoice users was added to his mother’s considerable abilities and all of this had been passed to him. Tir’ut lifted his large hands and placed them in Dysea’s smaller ones gently.

Dysea’s eyes grew wider the moment he touched her. Images flashed through her mind as her precognition ability surged to the forefront, and she saw a radiant looking Normya holding the cooing baby. A baby with Immortal bone spikes and bronze tanned skin but with platinum colored hair and beautiful dark eyes. And she saw the huge Immortal that was Tir’ut step into the image and pull her daughter into a loving embrace from behind, Normya’s face happier than she had ever seen it as she leaned into the embrace.

Then it was gone.

“Ol zhah sekene biu bel’la ulu thalra ussta il kal’daka darthirii’s du’ased darthirii ilhar.” Tir’ut spoke bowing his head. (It is truly an honor to meet my she wolf elf’s blessed elf mother)

Dysea drew back her hands slowly as she looked at Tir’ut. “We can not... we can not repay this debt to you.” She stammered the words.

Tir’ut shook his head with a smile exposing the tips of his smaller vampiric fangs. “There is no debt to be repaid Darthirri Ilhar.” He stated evenly.

Dysea turned back to Cha’talla and Esther. She saw him turn to the side and motion to the two elven females and three elf males that were standing there. “Queen Dysea please allow me to introduce Erli’ra and her father Illiad. They are members of our small ruling body.”

Dysea looked at him with some surprise. “Your ruling body?” She asked still somewhat flustered by what she had seen when she touched Tir’ut.

Illiad stepped forward. “It is an honor Queen Dysea.” He spoke bowing his head slightly.

Erli’ra was much more forward in her words, not to mention she was the wife of an Immortal and not in the least bit ashamed of that fact. “The look on your face tells me you are shocked at this Lady Dysea.”

“Erli’ra!” Illiad hissed.

“I do not believe Queen Dysea thought there would be other elves among our number here.” Erli’ra said.

“She is very surprised. And something tells me she prefers blunt speaking.”

Dysea shook her head slightly. “Yes...” She answered. “My time with Nauta Melme has found me preferring forthcoming words and deeds.” She stated as she regained her composure. “And no... this is not something that I expected. However... seeing it only confirms what I had hoped in my heart and it lends credence to Martin Leonidas’s words to never fear the unknown, for you know not what it will bring to you.” She looked at Cha’talla and smiled brightly. “It has brought us to you and what you are building here.”

“What we are building Lady Dysea.” Cha’talla answered. “What we hope will extend into the future for many centuries to come.” He reached behind him and drew forward the blue satin like material. “I... I have made these for you. It is known among my people of your exceptional fighting skills and your fondness for using two blades. It is my hope that this gift will show you we have left behind most of the old ways of our people and that we forge ahead on a new path. One I hope you will see similar to that path which your mate walks.”

Dysea took the bundle slowly and un-wrapped it. Her eyes grew a little wider when she saw the dual knives with their matte black pommels, each with the half snout of a dragon extending onto the blade. In that was a glittering emerald eye. The blades themselves were honed to razor sharpness she could tell, and they appeared hand crafted for incredible strength and durability. She lifted her eyes to Cha'talla.

"They... they are beautiful." She said.

"Please allow me to show you that I am not who I used to be." Cha'talla said looking at her. "My love of Esther and what she has brought into my life when I thought it was over, it has made me see things in a very different light Dysea. Allow me to show that to you. Allow us to show that to you."

Dysea met his gaze and smiled. "I... I believe I would like that." She said. "Your brother... is he..."

"I am here." T'lolt's voice boomed from the rank of men and women behind Cha'talla. Dysea watched him move forward and come to stand beside his brother. "Lady Dysea." He said bowing his head.

"I don't know how much you and your people believe in destiny and fate Cha'talla." Dysea spoke.

"More everyday it seems." Cha'talla spoke with a smile looking at Esther.

"That it was your Blessed Wife, your son and your brother that saved the life of our daughter... to Martin Leonidas and to me... to our family... that is a chapter in fortune and destiny that can not be denied." Dysea spoke. "The Leonidas family is in your debt and we..."

T'lolt shook his head. "No." He stated sternly seeing Dysea's eyes grow a little wider. He looked at Cha'talla. "Brother?"

"You have always been better with words than me T'lolt." Cha'talla answered with a nod of his head.

T'lolt turned back to Dysea. "We were enemies once... and an act of selfless honor by your mate, even though we were enemies, altered my path in this life. It has allowed me the opportunity to come forward and help my brother in building what we have built. It allowed me the opportunity to find happiness again. I have taken another Blessed Wife and I now have three strong, fine sons and a young daughter. I have this because Martin Leonidas chose to act with honor that day. In rescuing and protecting his daughter, I have repaid what I thought could never be repaid. It is our hope... my brother's and mine... all of us... it is our hope that this will allow us to be, if not friends, then at least no longer enemies."

Dysea smiled warmly and stepped closer to him. "My Nauta Melme asked that I pass on a message to you both if events worked out as we had hoped." She spoke looking at Cha'talla. She turned back to T'lolt and reached up to take his hand. "L'draeval p'los zhah zho'aminth. Ulu l'ulin." (The past is forgotten. To the future)

T'lolt looked at Cha'talla and then back to Dysea. "Ulu l'ulin." He said.

"I brought the Spartan Wine you asked for." Dysea spoke seeing his eyes grow brighter. "And the medical equipment you asked for Esther. As well as some other things that I thought might be helpful. Let us begin to establish our future right now."

"I do believe that would be an excellent idea." Erli'ra spoke now.

Cha'talla nodded. "Indeed it would."

Tir'ut had a small smile on his face as well, and he turned slightly to look at Normya, only to find that her emerald eyes were already gazing at him. He held her gaze for several seconds before looking away shyly as Dysea took her hand and pulled her along as Cha'talla and Esther turned to lead them further into the settlement.

T'lolt watched his nephew's eyes follow her and he stepped up to him. "Tir'ut?" He asked softly.

Tir'ut looked at the man who held his utmost respect and had helped his father to raise him and train him. "Uncle... is it possible to feel... to desire something so much it is almost painful?"

T'lolt smiled. "That is usually the case when it comes to females Tir'ut. She is as fine a female as I have ever seen. If things work out the way you wish them nephew, treat her as you would treat a precious gem or ruby. For I have come to understand that they are our future."

"I will Uncle." Tir'ut said. "I will."

SPARTA GALLAIS'S LODGE

"...you don't know where they went?" Yuri asked her mother.

Aikiro turned from the balcony overlooking the rising city of Sparta and moved back into the suite sipping her glass of hot tea. Yuri wore only a loose fitting robe over Robert's large shirt that fell to mid thigh. She and her husband and shared an almost painful night of sex, fucking each other nearly to exhaustion, and Yuri felt wonderfully sore and fulfilled. He had risen early and departed with Tesand and Juliana One into the waking Sparta. They had been moving among the streets and alleys of Sparta, memorizing approaches and exits to the lodge and the area of the city they were in. They tested the limits of what they could do, knowing that they were under almost constant surveillance. Though they could never determine who it was that was watching them, they knew whoever it turned out to be, they were exceptionally skilled. Though they had used the shadows most of the time, no one ever stopped them as they did, but no matter where they unwrapped the shadows that feeling of being watched never went away. Tesand and Moran had come to the conclusion the Lycavorians had developed some sort of means to track them even when they wrapped the shadows around themselves.

Aikiro moved back into the large main room and shook her head as she went to the counter. "They departed so quickly... Robert was unable to track them for any length of time with our passive sensors on the INQUISITOR. Placing our ship on the opposite side of the moon also inhibits sensor function."

"Cha'talla is alive." Yuri spoke shaking her head. "That is not something I expected to be the case."

Aikiro nodded. "Nor I." She said. "And to have sired children with Esther? They have effectively created a new breed of Immortal... in that Esther was very correct. A breed of Immortal that we do not control, and one that we will find extremely difficult to defeat for they would have the skills of both. Akruxian and vampire blood?" Aikiro shook her head. "I certainly do not want to face an army of that combination."

"I hope you have told no one about this mother." Yuri spoke. "If it gets out that Cha'talla is still alive, the Immortals that still serve us might begin to question their orders."

Aikiro turned to look at her. "Only Tesand, Robert and I know. And now you." She said. "You think he actually holds that much sway over other Immortals Yuri. He was declared a traitor to his own people."

Yuri nodded. "Yes... but he was long considered a hero among his people, and that worship does not just disappear because father declared him a traitor. Many of them know what he was trying to do and why father killed him." She looked at her mother. "You are trying to discover where they went I hope."

"Of course." Aikiro said. "Tesand has gotten word out to our contacts within The Wilds to remain alert for one of the Union DTs and where it might appear. They were ordered to report back but do nothing." She moved to the couch across from Yuri and settled onto it drawing her legs up under her. "You have something on your mind Yuri. It is just you and I here daughter. Speak what you are thinking."

Yuri looked at her. "You did not put up much of an argument when Arrarn Leonidas told you Toria had to remain at the base if you wanted her to learn to fly a STRIKER. And when Narice agreed with him..."

Aikiro shrugged. "I was bringing her back for personal reasons." She said dismissively. "If I feel the need strongly enough I will order Juliana One to share our bed. She is an adequate replacement and she does not mind Tesand's touch. There is something else that troubles you however."

"I do not like the closeness Narice and Toria share." Yuri spoke. "I don't trust Toria Dellion... there is something more to her than we know. And I believe her and Narice... I believe they are sharing a bed with each other now as well."

Aikiro nodded. "Of course they are." She stated. "And from the possessive why your sister spoke I would say she is quite attached to Toria."

Yuri looked at her very stunned. "You know they share a bed? And you let her remain mother? Whatever for? Why?"

"You must remember Yuri... Toria Dellion was indoctrinated and trained by the Venorik Elghinn." Aikiro said softly. "She is more than just an Intelligence Officer and a superb pilot. Her Mindvoice abilities are exceptional, and she is able to block even me if she needs to. She also became quite good at giving me pleasure... she was very enthusiastic indeed. It is what the Venorik Elghinn trained her to be as well as an Intelligence Officer. They trained her to be perfect in terms of her body and skill in bed. I do believe she may prefer women to men anyway and Narice is naive enough to fall under her spell. Why do you think Dante and Javier enjoy her so much?" Aikiro said with a smile.

"I did not know they still trained their female agents for such things." Yuri said.

Aikiro nodded. "Those they find suitable yes. And to my knowledge Toria is the best they have trained in many centuries. Yuri, you know as well as I do that once you have been indoctrinated into the Venorik Elghinn you do not leave them for any purpose. Regardless of any of that Toria is a lethally trained killer who has never failed in a mission. Any mission. And she has her own task to complete in the grand scheme of things."

"You trust her that much?" Yuri asked.

"I trust in the training the Venorik Elghinn." Aikiro said. "I should... I designed most of it."

"And Narice?" Yuri asked. "She is becoming far too close with the Lycavorians. She is beginning to think like them when it comes to Deneth. She and Carisia were spending far too much time together to suit me, taking what Leonidas's son and others were teaching them far too seriously. I also believe they were able to detect and remove the subconscious thread Dante was using to control Carisia."

Aikiro nodded. "That was the First Oracle's doing." She spoke. "I sensed a faint presence from her while I was there. Carisia must have seen her during that time."

"How was she able to break away?" Yuri asked.

"Do not let it be said that the Lycavorians are not cunning Yuri." Aikiro spoke. "They are wolves after all. Some of the most prolific hunters and killers in the known universe. No doubt they devised something to get Carisia in front of their First Oracle. More than likely in an attempt to use her against us in some manner. As an intelligence asset. That would be the only reason I can see them risking discovery that they removed the connection Dante was using."

"So their First Oracle removed it?" Yuri asked. "We should have killed her when we had the opportunity twenty years ago. The Lycavorian Oracles have always been a problem for us."

Aikiro nodded. "More so this Helen than any other because she now has the wisdom and power of their First Oracle. She is the only one powerful enough and skilled enough to attempt it. Leonidas does not have the training or precision needed to do such a thing. Only she and I have the patience to do something like that." Aikiro said. "She also reinforced Carisia's shields as well, and made it harder to detect that the connection had been terminated."

"Mother... Carisia is becoming more of a liability since we came here. With Thast no longer on the base to control her, there is no way to monitor her movements all of the time. And now that I am gone..." Yuri spoke quickly. "We need to remove her from their influence and terminate her."

Aikiro nodded. "I'm beginning to agree with you on that." She said. "We can not ask Lucia or Javier to monitor her for they do not have the experience or ability no matter how much they boast. Dante could match her if he applied himself but I want him concentrating on the youngest daughter Zarah and obtaining the formula for their dragon armor and whatever else is in her mind. Carisia can not hurt us Yuri. We will give it a few more weeks, allow her to grow complacent and learn as much as she can and then we will act."

"And Narice?" Yuri asked.

"Narice is your sister Yuri." Aikiro said looking at her.

"I know that." Yuri answered. "That does not mean I trust her mother. She takes this Bonded Pair issue far too seriously. Dragons are a means to an end, animals and beasts of war, nothing more. Why encourage this?"

"I want her too Yuri." Aikiro said. "She is the one who will be leading our dragons against the Kavalians. Your talents are better suited to command. Your years with Robert have tempered you and you are able to make the hard decisions in a battle. That is something Narice will never learn I'm afraid. No... I let her remain because if she learns all she can, she may actually be able to turn our own dragons into a very effective force. And the Lycavorians have proven what tactical advantage dragons are against the Kavalians. Whatever she learns will only make her stronger."

"That is the problem I have mother." Yuri said. "What if all she learns ultimately turns her against us?"

Aikiro canted her head slightly. "Why would your sister betray us Yuri?" She asked.

"I'm not saying she will... only that there is a possibility." Yuri replied. "You have said yourself she is not like me."

"No she is not like you." Aikiro said. "That does not mean she is automatically an enemy either Yuri. She conducts herself differently than you... she has different leadership traits but I discovered that our other riders naturally look to her for guidance. She is different than you yes... but she is no traitor to us."

Yuri sighed heavily. "You are right mother. Forgive me." She said. "It is just being here causes me to become angrier more easily. I truly hate this planet and these people. Right down to the very core of my being."

"This stems from the knowledge you have maintained all these years that it was Leonidas that raped you doesn't it?" Aikiro said. "You don't believe it was Pusintin do you?"

Yuri looked at her. "It doesn't matter to me mother. I hate them equally. I hate them for what they have done to me... I hate them because they are animals and I hate them because we have to resort to using them to save ourselves."

"May I ask what drives this hatred?" Aikiro asked.

Yuri met her eyes. "I don't know mother." She answered. "Something... every fiber of my being vibrates with hatred whenever I am around Leonidas. Around any of them really... but more so when it involves anyone connected with Leonidas and his family."

"That is interesting." Aikiro said softly. "I never knew you felt this way daughter."

"It will not affect my duties mother." Yuri said quickly.

Aikiro shook her head. "Oh I don't question that Yuri." She stated. "May I ask when these intense feelings of hatred began?"

Yuri looked at her. "They did not become more pronounced until after my time on the Mindvoice ship on Nuwaroa. When you had me discover as much as I could before it lost power."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes I remember. You studied as many of the history files as you could." She said.

Yuri nodded. "It began then." She said. "Since we did not have any contact with them for so long it was not something I took notice of. However when we decided to come here on this mission it began to come forth more."

"The purpose of the mission is very important Yuri." Aikiro said gently. "I need you to maintain control of this hatred as you have done up until now, no matter what happens. It must not make you act in a way that reveals our true purpose for coming here."

"Mother I think you know I would not allow that." Yuri said.

Aikiro nodded. "I know... and I apologize for having to put you in this position... but it must be done."

Yuri nodded. "I know that as well mother. I will not fail you."

"I have never doubted you Yuri... and I never will." Aikiro said quickly. "Were you able to determine anything in regards to the shielded areas he has across the planet?"

Yuri shook her head. "I may hate them... but as you have said their operational security is impeccable." She answered with a disgusted look. "I was able to discover where it appears three Mindvoice generators of some sort were set up."

"Mindvoice generators?" Aikiro asked suddenly very interested.

Yuri nodded. "They were putting out concentrated and focused Mindvoice projections. A psychic beam if you will. Detecting the tremors was easy, and outwardly they look like normal power generators, but they were definitely helping to project the shield around the base. I was not able to get close enough to inspect one, security is heavy as I said, but the tremors were directed upwards so I can only assume they were helping to power the psychic shield that is surrounding the base." She replied.

"They have found a way to do this by using the technology they have discovered on that ship. It is the only explanation." Aikiro said. "Incredible. I did not think they had someone with enough intelligence to decipher the encrypted portions of the data pads as our scientists did. And because only a third of our ship was able to be salvaged our information was related to just our cloning processes. Since their ship was fully intact... it has given them access to technology we do not have."

"Why would they not use it then mother?" Yuri asked. "In all our time here I have seen nothing that would indicate they have some sort of secret technological advances."

"You forget what Narice reported to us about her encounter with Arrarn Leonidas in the tavern." Aikiro said. "Appearing as if from thin air?"

"You think they have developed some sort of untraceable Shroud then?" Yuri asked. "A Shroud that is able to mask them completely."

Aikiro nodded. "Something along those lines. It is all that makes sense. You said this human O'Connor possessed the needed skills to develop the advances?"

Yuri nodded. "As you know throughout the history of Earth there have been humans who were born with exceptional reasoning and logic aptitude, not to mention the ability to think outside the normal realm. Ben O'Connor was such a human. An intensely skilled pilot yes, but his gift was in developing new technologies. Were he a vampire among us he would be head of our Research Department without question."

Aikiro sipped her tea. "With technology like that, if we could apply it to our ships, we could strike the KFI headquarters and shipyards with impunity. Not to mention what else we could develop. That is why we must be mindful as our plan progresses." Aikiro told her. "Is there a way to coerce this man?"

Yuri shook her head. "Doubtful." She replied. "He has served with Leonidas longer than anyone except for Simpson. They saved each other's lives on many occasions. Leonidas went against orders to retrieve O'Connor when he crashed behind enemy lines during one of Earth's ridiculous little wars. His loyalty to Leonidas is without question. I know he has a human and elf wife. And he and his human wife must be reaching the pinnacle of their human lives. They will not want to leave their immortal elven wife. Perhaps approaching them with an offer to turn them and give them immortality will entice him to help us. You know how addictive elven females can be. Especially to human males."

Aikiro nodded. "Find out what you can now that you are back here in Sparta." She spoke. "If it is possible... it may be worth the risks."

"Robert told me he has confirmed that this Sadi Leonidas was in fact part of father's list of Lycavorian agents." Yuri said. "As was her stepmother. Her father was Governor of the Menkla District on Apo Prime at the time and was apparently unaware of their activities. Her current position is no doubt a reward for turning double agent."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes... he informed me of this as well. He has been researching your father's old records and finally came across the files on that portion of his failed plans to use the Lycavorians against each other as he had done before." She said. "I'm having Robert work with our people to determine what impact this information might have if it finds its way into the hands of some promising young Netnews journalist."

Yuri smiled. "Something else to drive them crazy and keep them confused and unable to focus." She said.

Aikiro nodded again. "The more they have to deal with... the less they will question what we have given them."

"No word on that yet?" Yuri asked.

Aikiro shook her head. "I'm assuming whatever ship they have trying to discover the validity of our information is just now getting to a location where they can scan the area."

"And you truly believe Leonidas will strike preemptively?" Yuri asked.

"The man is many things Yuri... but a military fool he is not." She stated. "His only viable option will be to strike preemptively if he wishes to keep the KFI from launching an overwhelming invasion into their territory in the same fashion they did us. At least that is what he will believe. He will act... of that I have little doubt. The man is stupidly predictable. And we can use that predictability to our advantage."

SODRAG

Arran Leonidas looked up from the data pad he was reading, holding the mug of coffee in his opposite hand when the two shadows fell across his table. He still wore his ArmorPly uniform, the one inch thick single crimson line extending from his collar down the top of his shoulders signifying that he was a STRIKER DT pilot for a member of Mjolnir's Hand. He was finishing up the reports for the day that needed his signature and putting the final touches on the training schedule for the next week.

That was until he looked up into the stunning blue eyes of Toria Dellion and the striking dark brown orbs of Narice.

The REC center was relatively full with almost everyone situated in the main room and watching the very close championship game of Triad Squares on the Netnews. The broadcast was from Apo Prime.

"Can we sit down?" Toria asked softly.

Arran turned quickly, looking behind him and to the sides to make sure that she was talking to him and this caused both Toria and Narice to chuckle softly as he turned back to them. "Ah... sure." He stammered finally, their pineapple and cherry scents flooding into his nostrils and causing his wolf blood to stir. While he and his other half wolf siblings would never have the incredibly keen sense of smell that their father, Andro and Denali possessed due to their pure blood, the remainder of the Leonidas children had extraordinarily strong senses of smell for those who were not full blooded Lycavorian. It had been incredible torture to go through the past three days smelling Narice's pineapple like scent mixed so deeply with Toria's cherry scent. That they had been together was obvious to any wolf that could smell either of them, but their scent also carried with it a warning to stay away for they were not interested. At least it had up until now, and now their scents were calling to him more powerfully than he had ever smelled in two women before.

Toria and Narice settled into the chairs across from him. Neither of them wore their ArmorPly uniforms, both having changed into the civilian clothes they had. Clothes that Arrarn saw greatly showcased their incredible female figures. He shifted uncomfortably in his chair.

"Did... did I do something wrong?" Arrarn asked quickly. "Say something really stupid maybe?"

Toria looked at Narice with a smile. After what he had done this afternoon, standing up to Aikiro without fear and basically telling her that Toria was the finest pilot of the group, and that if she left she would never be able to catch up. He had told Aikiro he was suppose to train pilots and he did not need Aikiro pulling any of his pilots for activities that did not help their training. Of course that is what he had told Aikiro in front of his father, knowing Aikiro would not get into a spitting match with Martin there. In reality Arrarn Leonidas was slowly working up the courage to approach Toria and Narice, for even though he was half wolf, he could still smell the desire wafting from both of them.

Narice leaned forward a little and folded her hands in front of her on the table. This was something they both wanted immensely and after Arrarn's display earlier today, both she and Toria decided they needed to make the first move if they wanted to get this Leonidas in their bed. Narice could not explain the freedom she felt being here on Earth, even from the very first day. Her relationship with Toria was something she craved everyday, and the sense of openness and accepting attitude her on Earth had allowed that part of Narice to finally come forward. It also allowed the part of Narice that desired Arrarn Leonidas to the extreme, even though he was half of the species her mother called savage animals. Surprisingly, it was that part of him that Narice wanted to explore and touch.

"Actually... I wanted too... I wanted to apologize to you." Narice said. "And thank you."

Arrarn let his dark eyes move back and forth between them briefly before he looked back at Narice. "Did I miss something?" He asked. "Thank me for what?"

"For not allowing my mother to take Toria away from her duties here." Narice answered. "And to apologize for the way I treated you on your brother's island. It was uncalled for and vindictive. I acted... I acted arrogantly and did not know the truth."

Arrarn looked at her. "Wow... I bet that hurt." He said with a smile.

Narice looked down and away from his piercing gaze. "You... you have no idea." She said.

"I take it you don't apologize much huh?" He asked.

Narice lifted her eyes back to his. "I don't usually find myself in a position where I am wrong about something." She answered honestly.

"Really?" Arrarn said. "That's too bad. Sometimes being wrong about something can lead to situations that you gain experience from."

Narice's eyes narrowed somewhat. "Are you going to continue to hold it against me that I may have been wrong about you?"

"May have been?" Arrarn said.

"Ok... I was wrong about you." She stated sharply. "Are you happy now?"

"Narice!" Toria said.

Arrarn chuckled softly. "You know... you are incredibly beautiful when you are angry." He said causing both of them to look at him with surprise in their eyes.

"I'm not angry!" Narice snapped.

Arrarn touched his nose. "Your scent says different." He told her.

"Vampires don't have individual scents." Toria said.

Arrarn nodded. "Yeah... that's what my mother said for quite a few years, until my father tracked her across half of Apo Prime to prove her wrong. You smell like cherries in full bloom Toria, and Narice you smell like fresh pineapples. Everyone has a unique scent, just because you ingest blood as a portion of your diet does not mean you don't have a scent. Your scents fit you both... whether separate or together as they are now."

Toria and Narice looked at him. "Together? You can tell that..." She gasped.

Arrarn nodded. "Any Lycavorian could tell that you two have... claimed each other so to speak." Arrarn told them. "Did you think that wouldn't be noticed?"

Narice was very embarrassed by this knowledge and it showed in her expression and the threat of the deep blush overriding her dark tan. "We... we did not think anyone would perceive this... no." She said softly.

Arrarn smiled and shook his head. "Hell, who am I kidding... both of you are downright gorgeous period. As for doing what I did, Toria is a superior pilot plain and simple." Arrarn said quickly. "Your mother wants skilled pilots. Taking her away from her training even for a day or two will set her back quite a bit. Much the same as taking you away from your training would set you back." He told Narice. "I only told her the truth."

"Well... well thank you for that." Toria said. "I did not want to be... I did not want to be taken away from Narice so soon after discovering what we share." She said becoming more confident and unashamed with her words as she spoke.

Arrarn nodded even as his wolf blood was beginning to burn in his veins. He needed to get out of here and away from them quickly. Individually their scents would drive him crazy, but together as they were now; it was driving him positively insane. "It... it was no problem really." He said as he began to gather his data pads slowly.

"We... we have discovered something else as well." Narice spoke, her own voice now confident and firm. "Something besides that which we share. Would you like to know what that is Arrarn Leonidas?"

Arrarn lifted his mug of coffee. "I'm sure you will tell me whether I want to know or not." He said as he began sipping from his mug.

"We have discovered... we have discovered we want you Arrarn Leonidas." Narice stated very plainly and clearly, her words spoken with firm confidence and without a trace of embarrassment.

Arrarn turned his head quickly to the side as the coffee he was holding in his mouth spewed forth in a spray of liquid. His dark brown eyes were wide as he lifted them and gazed at Narice and Toria from across the table while dragging the back of his hand across his mouth. He set the mug on the table and looked around quickly to see if anyone had seen or heard what had just happened. His eyes shifted back to Narice and Toria when he realized that no one who was within eye sight had paid any heed to them.

"Excuse me?" He finally blurted out.

"If you can pull yourself from your work..." Toria said with a seductive voice. "And your sense of smell is as keen as you say..."

"Then if you find us... you can have us." Narice finished in an even more alluring tone of voice as they got to their feet holding hands tightly.

Arrarn looked at them. "This... this is a joke right?" He stammered.

"What does your nose tell you Arrarn Leonidas?" Toria asked.

Arrarn got to his feet slowly. "I know what my nose is telling me." He said. "I just don't know if I believe it."

Narice blurred around the edge of the table appearing in front of him in an instant. She then did something that two or three weeks ago she would never have imagined herself doing. She grasped the front of Arrarn's uniform and pulled his head down to her face, covering his lips with her own and kissing him with all the same intense and sizzling passion she kissed Toria with. She felt her whole body ignite as never before, every nerve ending singing out in simultaneous rapture as his lips sent delicious shivers whistling through her. She pulled away just as quickly, before the plan she and Toria had so carefully crafted was tossed to the wind and she let him take her right here.

"You may... you may believe it Arrarn Leonidas." She whispered sensuously. "For it burns within our blood just as brightly as I feel it burning within your blood." She stepped back quickly and slowly backed up before taking Toria's hand again.

Toria for her part leaned over and shared an equally sizzling kiss with Narice before lifting her blue eyes to look at him.

"Don't make us wait too long Arrarn Leonidas." She said softly.

"Find us." Narice whispered just before they both blurred in motion and were gone from in front of him.

Arrarn stood there for several moments, the feel of Narice's lips still fresh in his mind and on his lips, along with her mouth-watering pineapple scent. This is what he had wanted from the moment he had seen them on Andro's island, and now his brother's words to him filled his head.

“Does your blood burn for her?” Andro asked him. “For them... because now that they have found each other I have a feeling they’ll be a package deal just like Eliani and Nyla.”

Arrarn shook his head. “As much as I would like it to happen... it won’t.” He answered. “I’m not that lucky... and I think they may be more interested in each other. I can smell Narice all over her. Similar to how Nyla’s scent saturates Eliani like you said. And there is something about both of them that is different somehow.”

“Don’t give up hope just yet.” Andro said with a grin. “Stranger things have happened to the members of our family.”

Arrarn Leonidas then made the decision that would alter his future as well as two others for all eternity. He swept his arm across the table, pushing all his data pads into the small pack, tossed his mug into the recyclable dispenser and then bolted for the door, his wolf blood beginning to boil.

Carisia turned her head slightly to take in the sight of Anthar and Elynth resting only a few meters away. His huge tail was caressing the top of Elynth's tail almost absentmindedly, each time her wings twitching in delight. Their mid sections were touching in a most intimate manner for dragons and they shared the enormous bone. Carisia could feel the incredible joy and happiness from her bonded brother and Elynth as well. The sense of complete love and devotion one feels for the one they were meant for. It matched Carisia's own sense of utter happiness. Feelings she never thought she would experience were hers now and she basked in the attention and delight they gave to her. She was naked, her back pressed firmly against Sadi's bare chest as she rested between her legs, with an equally seductive and naked Sadi resting between Andro's legs. Her head rested on Sadi's shoulder, their raven black and golden blond hair entwined together as it spilled down their shoulders. They sat on the large soft blanket, watching as the stars began to fill the sky above and sipping the same glass of sweet Spartan wine. The bottle rested in an ice filled bucket next to them, the plate of half eaten fruit and Greek beef appetizers covered but still warm. Sadi's hand gently stroked Andro's arm as it stretched out across both Carisia's and her shoulders in a possessive sort of way, while Carisia's hands caressed the inside of his thigh near his knee which was cocked upward. His back rested easily against the saddle behind them.

Carisia felt him lean over and nuzzle first the side of Sadi's neck and cheek, her wistful sigh of delight very audible and then he leaned over and did the same to the side of her neck and her cheek, his hand moving so that his fingers lovingly caressed Sadi's cheek and the side of her neck in the same motion. Carisia smiled and leaned into his nuzzle.

“What are you thinking Enylarcopri?” He asked in a soft whisper.

“That I have never known such wondrous feelings as I have discovered in the last few days.” Carisia replied.

“I hope that is a good thing.” He said softly.

“Oh yes... a very good thing.” Carisia answered. “I... I can not begin to imagine what it will take to repay what you and Sadi have given to me.”

Sadi's head turned slightly at her words and she shifted her body slightly to the side. Her jungle green eyes met Andro's azure blue ones and then moved to Carisia's face. “Repay us?” She stated as her arms tightened around the petite form of the woman who had so captured their hearts. “By the gods Carisia... there is nothing to repay. We wanted you just as much as you wanted us. Perhaps even more.”

Carisia laughed. “That is not what I meant my loves!” She exclaimed her maya blue eyes bright. “I was talking about what I could imagine to repay you both in our bed!”

“Oh... you slut!” Sadi announced as she reached over and pinched Carisia's right nipple between her fingers.

“We will have to punish you for that!” Andro declared lowering his head even further to run his tongue along her ear.

Do you mind! Elynth's voice erupted in their heads. We are trying to eat here!

All three of them turned to see Elynth's golden eyes and Anthar's magenta orbs gazing at them with almost a scolding look.

Well pardon us! Sadi barked out. If I recall correctly... aren't you the one who came back early this morning with what could be considered bags under her eyes for a dragon.

Yes... all because you and Anthar were up all night doing the dragon nasty. Andro spoke with humor in his voice. At least we had the sense enough to sleep sister.

There was nothing nasty about it! Anthar snorted. It was... it was...

Divine. Elynth exclaimed in a wistful voice her golden eyes falling on her new mate. Her snout brushed against the underside of Anthar's muzzle with loving affection, contrasting with his cerise colored scales.

Yes it was. Carisia echoed.

Five minds laughed quietly within Mindvoice. Minds that were now as open to each other as the floodgates of a raging river. Yet still there was the tiniest of gaps in those gates. A single gate that somehow remained closed to them and they did not know why. Whatever the reason, it would come to them sooner or later, and now they had each other to continue to discover.

Carisia shifted slightly, turning her body between Sadi's legs and resting her arm on Andro's upraised knee as she looked at them. Sadi draped her long leg seductively over both of hers with a smile.

"Andro... I... I must tell you some things." Carisia said softly.

Andro glanced at Sadi quickly detecting the indecisive tone in Carisia's voice before looking at her directly. "Enylarcopri... you make it sound like someone is dying." He said gently.

"It concerns my mother, my grandmother and what their plans are." Carisia said quickly. She would keep nothing from this man and women. She loved them too much.

Andro shook his head quickly. "No." He said firmly.

"My love... it..."

"No!" Andro spoke more forcefully. "I will not allow you to do this." He said. "KertaGai and I did not pursue this relationship with you as a means to garner information as to what your grandmother's purpose is. I won't allow you to do it."

"I agree." Sadi said taking her hands in hers and entwining their fingers together. "All we are is already known to us Carisia. What one of us knows... so does the other. There is a lingering presence of something or someone that we all feel... but in time that will become known to us. Right now... all we should be concerned with is discovering each other. You have made us happier than we ever thought possible Carisia. Andro and I both thought we were complete when we found each other, but it wasn't until we found each other that we realized we needed you to complete us."

"Sadi... we are not complete." Carisia said.

Sadi nodded. "And in time we will discover what it is that we feel as I said. Right now however... right now all we want is to wrap ourselves around you and share all that we are with each other."

Andro smiled. "KertaGai is much better than I with words." He said.

"This concerns Zarah." Carisia said.

Andro nodded. "Yes I know. Enylarcopri... we are connected now. All of us. You are concerned about what Dante's hidden agenda with my sister is. So am I. But I also trust in my sister and her abilities. She may be young... and she may act crazy at times... but Zarah is very intelligent and she will not fall prey to whatever your grandmother has planned. Your mother is no longer here... so she can not alter Zarah's perceptions of things in that way. She is the only one that we know of with this ability and with her gone it will be much easier."

"You will still... you will watch him?" Carisia asked.

Andro nodded. "Yes. And Zarah already knows. Now stop worrying and let us hold you. I have to leave early and I don't want to waste a minute I have with my mates."

Sadi grinned and turned her head. "Does that mean you intend to ravage us again?" She asked pushing back against him.

"The thought had crossed my mind, yes." Andro said.

"Then perhaps we should act before you have the chance!" Sadi quipped.

Carisia grabbed his ankles with her hands and pulled with her vampire strength, just as Sadi twisted her body on top of his and pinned his shoulders to the ground. She ran her tongue along his bare chest teasingly, lapping at his skin. Andro smiled at her as she did this, feeling her slender hand snake down to wrap around his rapidly thickening cock.

“What exactly... what exactly did the two of you have in mind?” He asked.

Sadi grinned at him as she looked into his striking eyes. “I don’t think you will mind very much my Anome.” She stated evenly. “It’s just that... Enylarcopri and I have something we simply can’t get enough of.”

Andro watched as her head dropped lower on his chest, her lips and tongue dancing across his flesh and he felt his blood begin to burn brightly. His azure eyes grew a little wider when he felt Carisia’s hand join Sadi’s around his now steel hard shaft and he lifted his head. “Now wait a minute!” He spoke. “Two against one is not fair odds! We...” Andro hissed and his head dropped back to the blanket as Carisia’s warm lips engulfed the head of his throbbing shaft.

“I’d say the odds are fair.” Sadi spoke just before dropping her head alongside Carisia’s and extending her tongue out to lavish attention on Andro’s warm balls.

Andro lowered his hands to their heads, wrapping his hands within the silky softness of their hair and surrendering to the pleasure ripping through him.

Anthar turned his head back from the sight and looked at his new mate with desire in his magenta colored eyes. Elynth was already looking at him and they both felt the passion from their bonded ones beginning to surge through them. They made no attempt to stop those feelings from spreading into them as well.

It is a beautiful night my lovely mate. Anthar spoke sliding his snout along the underside of Elynth’s neck while his tail caressed hers.

Oh yes... it is. Elynth answered softly her golden eyes closing at the exquisite sensations coursing through her.

Could I interest you in exploring the skies with me? Anthar asked with ardor.

I would be so very disappointed if you did not. Elynth answered.

Then let us take to the skies so that I can trumpet my love for you to the stars. Anthar said as he rose to his feet.

Elynth looked at him with increasing fervor as she too rose to her feet. Yes... let’s do that. It is becoming far too crowded here.

Anthar rubbed the top of her wings with his snout. Yes it is.

I will meet you at the second cloud on the right there. Elynth spoke sweetly just before launching her body into the air.

Anthar trumpeted loudly and snorted. I shall make you sing my name tonight Elynth! He declared as he propelled himself into the night air right behind her.

Elynth’s laughter was like music to his mind as she climbed with powerful sweeps of her wings. Promises... promises.

Narice squeezed Toria’s hand as they stood in the small clearing. The moon was filtering through the canopy of the jungle above them and filling the clearing with an almost surreal glow. They had spread a double wide blanket on the ground from the pack they had left here earlier, and now they sat waiting for the man they both so desired.

“Toria... you don’t think we scared him off do you?” Narice asked innocently. She felt like a small child in the way they were conducting themselves, but it was so liberating to her to feel this way.

“I find it hard to imagine there is much that any Leonidas son fears Narice.” Toria spoke turning to meet her eyes. “Why are you so nervous?”

“I’ve never been so forward with a man Toria!” Narice exclaimed with an embarrassed smile. “I practically assaulted him in front of everyone! And he is not... he is not a pureblood. He is not the one my mother hopes that I will one day marry.”

“I didn’t know your mother has made this known to you.” Toria asked.

Narice nodded. “She has been very subtle about it... but the clues have been there. He is the son of Admiral Unla.”

Toria's eyes grew a little wider. "You are speaking of Johan?"

Narice nodded. "You know him?" She asked.

"I know of him." She answered. "It is said he is a fine officer and leader of men."

Narice nodded. "My mother thinks he is incredibly handsome." Narice said. "I heard her talking with Yuri one time several months back. She hopes I will be more receptive to his advances once we have completed our training here and return to High Coven space."

"And will you?" Toria asked.

Narice looked at Toria and rolled her eyes in a bemused expression. "Toria Dellion how can you ask me that question now? After what we have discovered together?" She spoke. "What we wish to have with Arrarn. At least if I have not ruined that for us. I don't think I have ever wanted a man more than I want Arrarn Leonidas."

Toria smiled. "He is beautiful isn't he?"

"Toria... do you think he will come?" Narice asked her as she settled to the thick blanket they had brought, Toria matching her motions. "Do you think he will come and know that we do not want a causal fling?"

Why don't you ask him? The deep male voice erupted in their minds, slipping past their lowered Mindvoice shields easily.

Toria and Narice gasped together and spun around on the blanket. The huge dirty blond wolf rested on its haunches only three meters away from them, its yellow eyes outlined in dark brown. The same color as Arrarn Leonidas's eyes.

Arrarn? Narice exclaimed.

How... how did you do that? Toria demanded gently. You... you brushed aside our shields as if they weren't there!

For all intents and purposes they weren't. Arrarn answered. Following you was child's play. I told you both that you have unique scents. The wolf got up and moved closer to them. I burned your scents into my mind a long time ago. My father's children who are only half wolf inherited his sense of smell at least, albeit on a smaller scale since we are not pure Lycavorian. I could follow either of you across the surface of this planet if I needed too.

Narice and Toria watched as that wolf moved closer to them, until it's large muzzle was only inches away from their faces, his eyes burning brightly. Both of them could see the corded bands of muscle beneath that thick coat of hair, the claws of black razors and the gleaming flesh shredding teeth. For all they had learned in their lives about Lycavorians, Narice and Toria had never seen one this close before. Granted Arrarn was also half elf, but his father's genes were clearly far more dominant as shown in the large form of a wolf he could take. His father, Andro and Deni were all much larger in terms of muscle and size, but Arrarn was the largest wolf that either of them had ever seen.

And then in a soft flash of white blue light the wolf was gone and they were looking at Arrarn Leonidas in his entire naked splendor. Toria's eyes drifted lustfully over his hard body, and for the first time in her life she actually felt her vampire blood stir wildly for a man when it wasn't being forced from her. Her blue eyes lifted and she smiled when she saw Arrarn's face only millimeters from Narice's wide eyes. Her chest was rising and falling heavily, her large breasts heaving upwards and brushing against his bare skin. Her dark eyes were wide in shock at what was rippling through her body, and all Narice could think about at this moment was having this man possess her in every way.

Arrarn let a smile caress his face as he leaned closer to Narice, pressing his hard muscled chest against Narice's large breasts and hearing her groan in delight.

"I am going to possess you Narice." He whispered. "I'm going to possess you in such a way that you will look at that pureblood waiting for you back home and laugh at him. When you look at him you will see me... and what I am about to do to you and Toria both."

Narice groaned at his words, her eyes closing in passion as he pressed closer and she could feel his lips brush along the side of her cheek.

"Take you clothes off." Arrarn whispered. "Both of you."

"You presume much Arrarn Leonidas!" Narice fought the surging delight through her as best she could, the last remnants of her stern upbringing coming forth. "You..."

Arrarn kissed her then.

Arrarn kissed her, and as his tongue demanded entrance between her lips, molten passion exploded within Narice's veins. Colors burst forth behind her eyelids, her hands gripping his thick arms and her nails digging into his skin. Her thighs trembled once and then Narice cried out into his kiss as the orgasm surged through her from just his first kiss. Her hips lifted from the blanket to grind against his and her eyes flew open when she felt the size of his searing hot cock against the thin fabric of her pants. She tore her lips away from his and her eyes dropped between their bodies as he knelt over her, even as her orgasm threatened to cause her to pass out with the intensity of it. She saw his cock then, standing proudly at attention and throbbing madly with desire. Desire for her and for Toria she knew. Almost without thinking Narice was pulling at her lightweight pants and pushing them down around her hips, using her legs to kick and push them down to her ankles until they were completely off. She watched as he lifted one hand and with a powerful grip he shredded her lightweight shirt, exposing her bare breasts to his eyes and the cool night air.

Narice glanced up at him again, seeing the almost feral lust in his wolf eyes, yet also seeing something she had never seen before. She saw passion and commitment and love.

"Arrarn... you are... you are so big." She gasped. "Please you must..."

Narice's eyes practically exploded from her head as the lava hot shaft of his cock pressed against her already drenched center. Her engorged clit was throbbing madly, her sweet come already coating the insides of her thighs.

"All for you Narice." Arrarn hissed into her ear as he lowered his head to one of her painfully hard nipples just as every thick, throbbing inch of Arrarn Leonidas's half elf and half wolf cock buried itself into her.

In one soul robbing, breathe stealing and utterly orgasmic ten and a half inch plunge, Narice's world erupted into a realm she had never visited before. A dominion of pleasure she never imagined could exist. Her arms wrapped around Arrarn's broad shoulders, squeezing him with every bit of her vampire strength in an effort to keep from going completely off the edge. It didn't help her, as Arrarn withdrew all ten plus inches of his thick cock and rammed them back home in another equally spirit shattering stroke. Narice careened out of control then, her lithe powerful legs wrapping around his waist as her pussy clamped down on his throbbing shaft and she screamed out her pleasure to all who could hear them. Her sweet juices burst from her with a force she had never experienced before, squirting out around the circumference of Arrarn's thick cock as he held her trembling body in his powerful arms and simply remained still, buried so deeply inside her Narice thought she would fracture apart.

Arrarn clenched his teeth together, the dual wolf fangs that so distinguished the Leonidas males fully extended, and his own eyes wide in utter wonderment. Arrarn was no stranger to a woman's charms, yet Narice's clenching pussy and searing heat was almost too much for him to bear. Her pussy muscles milked his thick cock rhythmically, the walls of her tunnel velvet like in texture. Her hips undulated against his, as if she was trying to swallow more of his thick cock, even though she had all that he was already buried within her depths. He lifted his head from the valley between her large breasts and slowly looked up into her face as her cataclysmic orgasm began to subside.

"Tell... tell me what you want Narice!" He hissed out.

Her eyes opened, now changed to vampire cobalt blue, her own vampire fangs extended. Her features were a divine work of beauty to Arrarn as he gazed at her, and she wasted no time in answering him.

"Vith uns'aa! H'aryn uns'aa! Morfeth uns'aa dossta!" Narice cried out. (Fuck me! Possess me! Make me yours!)

Arrarn's lips curled into a smile. "Whatever you command of me Princess." He growled lustfully.

Narice's eyes rolled into the back of her head, as without warning Arrarn began to drive into her with controlling strokes. The pleasure rapidly spiraled out of control for her, every iota of her body responding to the touch and feel of this man who was making her feel crazed with lust and desire and...

And love!

Narice's eyes burst open. "Arrarn... my love!" She screamed out as her arms and hands slapped down onto the blanket, her ankles locked at the small of his back and she began lifting her hips to smash against his pile driving hips.

Arrarn cupped her incredible ass cheeks in his large hands and lost himself to the wolf within him. His large balls slapped against her upturned ass cheeks, his hips almost a blur of motion as he drove himself into her velvety depths with wild abandon. He felt long silky hair brush against his shoulders and lifted his head quickly to see Toria's wide blue eyes and sexually charged body pressing up against his side. Without missing a single delving stroke into Narice's glorious body, Arrarn reached up with one hand and pulled Toria's face around in front of his with a commanding presence. Her wide blue eyes stared up at him with desire and passion as his lips descended to hers and he kissed her with all that he was. Toria nearly screamed out as the intensity of his kiss stole her breath away.

Venorik Elghinn trained she may have been, but Toria Dellion was still very much a woman. She was a woman who now held everything she had ever desired in her hands, and no training would ever take that away from her. She felt Arrarn's deliciously muscular body tense up and she tore her lips away from his, quickly moving behind him as he yanked Narice up into his lap. Narice screamed louder as she dropped even deeper onto his pulsating cock. His thick shaft plumed her pussy even deeper, as if trying to reach the bottom of her bottomless pond and Narice lost all pretence of control. The moment her tortured nub of a clit slammed against the wash board hard base of his cock Narice shuddered violently in a volcanic eruption. Without any cohesive thought Narice snapped her head forward and plunged her vampire fangs into Arrarn's neck, piercing his jugular vein. The instant his blood splashed across her taste buds, their world collided and blew fantastically apart. She felt his cock balloon enormously within her, his large balls drew up tight and then the first jet like blast of his come fired into her womb. The combination of feeling his scorching come filling her body and his spicy blood spilling into her parched throat caused Narice's eyes to roll into the back of her head once more in divine enchantment.

Narice fed on Arrarn's blood as if it was the sweetest nectar she had ever tasted, his hand lifting to hold her head in place as his other hand dropped to pushed at the small of her back, keeping her convulsing pussy impaled on his spewing cock. She suckled Arrarn's blood even longer than she had Toria's delicious sweetness, knowing that she was binding them together in the most scared of ways for a vampire and surrendering completely to the bliss that gave her. It was only a small twitch, but Narice felt the slightest ebb of her staggering orgasm and immediately she withdrew her fangs, her tongue quickly sealing the two puncture holes in his neck and then suckling the small dots lovingly. She felt the last of his come leak into her still quivering pussy and drew her face back to look at him, his wolf eyes still very prominent. The next thing that surprised her was that his enormous cock was not growing soft in any way even after unloading into her as he just had. She kissed him then, tasting the sweat on his lips and Toria's unique flavor as well. She groaned when she tasted her red haired lover's lips on him and she reached up to grip the sides of his face.

"Lower me down." She whispered to him with a seductive grin.

Arrarn's eyes became puzzled but he held her hands as he lowered her back onto the blanket, until she was stretched in front of him still impales on his cock. Narice took a deep breath trying to calm the overwhelming ecstasy ripping through her at just that small movement of his cock within her.

"Toria!" She croaked out softly. "Toria... I want to taste you!"

Arrarn's eyes grew wide when Toria was beside her instantly, her nipples hard points stabbing into the air, the cherry scent of her own excitement filling the air around them adding to Narice's more potent pineapple scent. He watched with wide eyes as Toria straddled Narice's head, lowering her dripping pussy onto her lover's extended tongue. It was almost as if she had forgotten he was there, facing away from him as she was.

"Ohhhh.... Narice!" Toria exclaimed as Narice's tongue stabbed deeply into her tight tunnel, the thin line of soft red hair rising from above her clit already drenched with her juices.

She... she belongs to us Arrarn Leonidas! Narice's voice projected into his still lustful mind. Possess... possess her as you have possessed me my love Arrarn Leonidas! We... we belong to you now!

Arrarn looked up and saw Toria gazing back over her shoulder at him, her blue eyes inviting him to take her in any way he wished. Instantly Arrarn was beyond ready. He pulled his still hard shaft from Narice's tight pussy, joining her in groaning as his cock finally left her depths. He shifted forward as Toria leaned further towards the ground, exposing her pink slit to him. The red hair glistened and he could see Narice's tongue and lips battering Toria's stiff clit mercilessly. Her somewhat fairer skin contrasted amazingly with Narice's deep tanned flesh, her ass nearly as perfect as Narice's. He wasted no time in moving up directly behind her, placing the head of his enflamed cock at her opening and reaching around to grab her equally large breasts. Her hands came up to cover his with a soft gasp of pleasure and Arrarn leaned forward, nuzzling the back of her ear.

"Are... are you ready Toria?" He gasped into her ear.

“Phraktos siyo! Vith uns'aa Arrarn! Vith uns'aa hwuen Usstan h'ros ul'nusst jalamzild!” (Gods yes! Fuck me Arrarn! Fuck me until I can't scream anymore!)

Arrarn didn't pause and speared Toria Dellion with ten and a half inches of cock in one single stroke. Her blue eyes flew open wide; her lips parted in a silent scream of unimaginable pleasure as the largest cock Toria had ever seen penetrated her right to her very core, even as Narice's tireless tongue drove her to atmospheric heights of ecstasy.

Venorik Elghinn be damned. Toria Dellion had found her place in the universe.

SODRAG

0530 HOURS

Background Music, Heavy Metal, Taking a Ride, Ozzy Osbourne Crazy Train, Mjolnir's Hand Themes

CRACK!

The noise rolled across the horizon like a slap of thunder causing both Narice and Toria to wake from a sound sleep and sit up instantly their eyes wide.

“Arrarn!” Narice snapped her eyes looking around for him. They had fallen asleep only a short time earlier, both her and Toria thoroughly exhausted and barely able to move. It appeared that even though he was only half wolf, his sexual stamina was equal to that of a pure blooded Lycavorian wolf, much to Toria's and her delight. They had curled against either side of his body and slept the sleep of the content. Narice looked around not seeing Arrarn, her heart skipping a beat and wondering if it had all been an exquisite dream of some kind.

“Narice... look!” Toria said softly.

She turned quickly to look at her red haired lover and Toria motioned to the end of the blanket. Narice turned then and saw the two bundles of fresh roses on the edge of the blanket and the single hand written note between the two bundles. Holding the thin blanket over her breasts, Narice scampered to the end of the blanket and picked up the paper as Toria moved up next to her. She unfolded it slowly, her heart racing as Toria rested her jaw on her shoulder.

Do not be angry with me for not waking beside you both. Today is a special day and one that I can not miss. Come watch on the airfield... you might like it. I will make it up to you both if you will allow me. I can think of nothing I desire more than to have you both in my arms. Tonight. Tomorrow. For eternity. I will see you both soon.

Arrarn

Narice pulled the note to her chest like a giddy school girl and sighed. She felt Toria kiss her shoulder softly. “It wasn't a dream.” She said softly.

Toria chuckled gently. “Not if the exquisite soreness in my body is any indication.” She spoke.

“Oh Toria... I feel so...”

“So completely happy and fulfilled?” Toria asked.

Narice nodded quickly. “Yes... it is like...”

CRACK!

Both of them ducked instinctively and rolled away from each other as all of their combat senses came alive.

“Phraktos! Vel'bol zhahus nindel?” Narice stammered as her eyes lifted skyward as the sound rolled across the horizon. (Gods! What was that?)

“A ship!” Toria responded her blue eyes also scanning the dark sky. “Entering the atmosphere at high speed!”

“A ship!” Narice exclaimed. “Over the base? Androcles Leonidas would never allow that!”

CRACK!

CRACK!

CRACK!

The sounds came one upon the other now in quick succession, each shattering sound making their bodies shudder from the reverberations.

“Narice... get dressed! Something is happening!” Toria almost yelled as the immense noises continued overhead. “The ships are entering the atmosphere faster than I have ever experienced. All of them over the base! Something is going on! We must get back!”

Both of them scrambled to pull on their clothes as the earth-shattering sounds of the ships entering the atmosphere over SODRAG continued to roll across the land.

SODRAG HIGH COVEN BUNGALOWS

CRACK!

CRACK!

CRACK!

Lights were coming on all over the Quad as the High Coven Riders and pilots began stumbling from their bungalows, many of them still half dressed, their eyes searching the skies above. Their dragons were already out among the area quad, eyes staring skyward. They alone could feel the staggering presence that was growing larger with every shuddering sound.

“An attack!” A voice screamed out.

“Impossible!”

“Ships! They are ships!”

“They are inside the Mindvoice Shield!”

“So low? What kind of ship has that power?”

CRACK!

CRACK!

“There!” Someone screamed out stabbing his hand upward into the darkness that was slowly beginning to lighten.

Nearly eighty pairs of eyes found the dark blue and black shapes of the STRIKER DTs as they ripped across the sky, curving slightly towards the airfield four kilometers away.

“STRIKERS!” Someone shouted.

“Damn! Look at how they are maneuvering!” One of the Coven pilots exclaimed as his keen eyes watched three STRIKERS bank tightly in perfect formation.

CRACK!

CRACK!

CRACK!

“More of them! Eight o’clock!”

“Vith uns'aa!” Another pilot yelled. “They’re spilling bonded pairs out the back!” (Fuck me)

“Where? Where?”

“Look at that! Full speed exits!” Another voice echoed. “They are exiting while still moving!”

The airfield! Deneth screamed out in Mindvoice, turning the heads of the riders towards him. We must go to the airfield!

Forty-two dragons didn’t hesitate and began lifting off into the night sky with mighty sweeps of their wings.

“Go!” A voice echoed. “Follow them!”

Background music Malic’s Theme, Blackhawk Down ST, Battlestar Pegasus theme from BG, Reuniting from BG

Malic stared at the black ArmorPly in the mirror of his bungalow as Adriana was behind him smoothing out the crimson cape dangling from the gold fasteners on the crimson shoulders of his Mjolnir's Hand uniform. His deep blue eyes were off somewhere in a mythical land of warriors and leaders as the realization that the one goal he had coveted for so long was only hours from truly being his. Androcles had delivered this uniform to him the previous night just after dusk, and Malic had remained awake for most of the night simply staring at it. He and Adriana had both refused to see their parents the previous night, saying only that they would visit with them the next day after the ceremony.

Malic's blue eyes shifted when the window shudders near the mirror pushed open and Vincix's huge head appeared, his amethyst eyes bright and clear.

[Brother?] He spoke softly.

[This is really happening Vincix.] Malic said with a halting voice. [We... we have both achieved what we have so desired.]

[And we will prove to all our fellow brothers and sisters this day and every day into the future... we will prove we are worthy.] Vincix replied. [I thought this opportunity lost to me until you...]

Malic stepped forward towards him, causing Adriana to look up. "Malic you..." She stopped when she saw her brother step up to Vincix's head and place his hands on either side of Vincix's muzzle. He leaned his head forward until his cool purple/silver scales touched his forehead. Adriana saw both of them close their eyes.

[I swear to you this day my brother Vincix. I will never fail you. I will never leave your side. Even if it means death takes us into its embrace. Without you I am nothing.] Malic whispered.

[I pledge to you the same my brother Malic.] Vincix replied. [For without you now... I too am nothing.]

The door chime echoing caused them to turn as Adriana went to the door quickly and passed her hand over the panel. She stepped back as Andro moved into the doorway when it opened, his uniform identical to Malic's except for the gold trim that lined his crimson cape. He carried his helmet under his arm, the golden figure of Elynth on top of his helmet poking out from under his bicep, the pommels of Halize and Iphan Rie Aellseleum protruding above his shoulders. He wore the K12 Kinetic Magnum in a right side thigh holster and the intricately carved Nehtes in a left thigh holster.

"What do my two newest bonded brothers say?" Andro spoke with a smile. "Are you ready?"

Adriana laughed. "I think they are so nervous both of them could shit!" She barked playfully.

Andro laughed as well noticing that Malic and Vincix made no effort to deny Adriana's statement. He stepped up to Malic.

"Your future begins today Malic." He spoke. He looked at Vincix's head and part of his neck in the window. "Both of your futures. This is what you were meant for. Grab onto it and never let go."

Malic turned and looked at Vincix who only nodded his massive head. He turned back to Andro. "We will Milord." He stated confidently.

"Good. Adriana... my sister Eliani and Nyla volunteered to pick you up in thirty minutes with your parents. Ostensively to provide you support with your parents. In reality they want to apologize." Andro said.

"Apologize?" Malic asked. "Apologize for what?"

Adriana grabbed his arm. "It's a girl thing." She said quickly. "Never you mind." She leaned up on her tip toes and kissed his cheek. "I am so proud of you Mal."

Malic pulled her into a gentle embrace, careful not to squeeze too tightly. "You have never doubted me Adriana." He said.

Adriana touched his lips with her finger. "I have Malic." She said softly. "But after what I have seen these last days... I will never doubt you again."

Malic leaned over and kissed her cheek. "I am ready sire." He spoke.

Andro nodded. "Then let's get Vincix ready and get to where we are supposed to be. The others have already begun arriving and your mother arrives with Arzoal and the rest of the Dragon Elders in one hour Vincix."

She does not know Prince Andro? He asked.

Andro shook his head. "Arzoal wanted to surprise her." He reached out and put his hand on Malic's shoulder. "Let's get his Mark Eleven on your brother and make sure it is adjusted properly. You have your entrance planned?"

Malic nodded. "We think it is appropriate sire." He said. "It will allow me to leave my past behind forever."

Andro nodded. "Good. Then let's get moving."

Background Music, Heavy Metal, Taking a Ride, Ozzy Osbourne Crazy Train, Mjolnir's Hand Themes

CRACK!

CRACK!

CRACK!

CRACK!

The High Coven Riders and dragons were mingled tightly together, most of them electing to climb on top of the hanger and watch as the STRIKER DTs of Mjolnir's Hand continued to announce their arrival with the staggering sonic booms. None of them knew yet who it was they were watching, only that the precision they were witnessing was beyond anything they had ever seen. Most of the dragons were gathered around the tarmac below the hanger, Deneth among them. He kept trying to find Anthar, calling out to him within Mindvoice to no avail, but he was not going to tear himself away from the spectacle he was watching.

"Did you see that turn?" One pilot called out.

"It was a one eighty standing on the ship's nose!"

"I'll do that no problem!" Another announced.

The Coven riders were grouped more closely together and not acting as excited, at least outwardly. All of them were studying as the dragons exited the STRIKERS with flared wings, many of them immediately diving for the ground as soon as they were clear and executing stomach twisting close quarter maneuvers as they plummeted. Dragons of all colors and breeds they could see now as the sun was beginning its march upwards, almost cresting the trees now.

"That's an inverted S-turn!" One rider called.

"The one on the left did a corkscrew the entire way down!"

Many of the riders were simply watching in awed silence for they too could now feel the staggering Mindvoice presence of each new arrival as they exited their STRIKER.

"They must be here for some sort of training!"

"I'm telling you... it has to be Mjolnir's Hand!" Another rider spoke.

"You're crazy!"

"Zarah said they never gather in one place!"

"She said almost!"

Deneth whipped his head around when he felt Narice caress his side. He saw her and Toria moving up alongside him, appearing as if they had blurred for a long period of time. They had returned to their bungalow in fact, so that Narice could replace the shirt Arrarn had shredded in their passion.

Narice... sister... look! Deneth exclaimed. It is amazing!

Narice and Toria too were awestruck by the sight of so many DTs in the sky above them, some very high, some executing low speed passes as they approached the airfield in the distance from them. Already over three dozen DTs had set down on the tarmac, some of them even executing mind numbing maneuvers just before they settled like feathers to the ground.

We have been watching since they started arriving. Narice told him. How many have you counted Deneth?

At least two hundred sonic booms. He answered immediately. Many of them are still airborne and circling the base before landing. Deneth looked at her keenly. Narice... there is something different...

Narice reached up with a smile and placed her hand on his snout. I will fill you in later my brother.

"Who do you think they are?" Toria asked.

Deneth shook his enormous head. I don't know. They...

"They are Mjolnir's Hand!" The female voice shouted causing all heads to turn and watch as Carisia settled to the tarmac on Anthar's back. "They are gathering for a ceremony on the other side of the base. The last Bonded Pair among their ranks has been chosen and they are going to welcome them. I know a place where we can watch and stay out of the way for our presence here is still secret. Gather your bonded ones and a passenger. The rest of you follow in the Lifters near the motor pool. We must circle around to the west to avoid detection and protect ourselves. Hurry!”

“How do you know that?” Lucia asked from the top of the hanger and looking down on Carisia.

Carisia looked up at her. “How I know is not important. We must hurry before they finish arriving and the ceremony begins.” She called.

“Look!”

All of them turned to see Andro landing on Elynth, Denali and Lisisa right behind him on Aradace and Jeth. The three of them wore the crimson shouldered black ArmorPly with their gold trimmed crimson capes. They watched as Andro reached up to remove his helmet. He glanced at Carisia with love in his eyes that only Narice and Toria understood for what it was.

“You are welcome to watch the ceremony.” Andro spoke as the Riders were dropping down from the top of the hanger to gather around their dragons. The one thing that Andro and the others noticed was that the Riders didn’t hesitate to help their pilot brethren. “Carisia will show you from where so that prying eyes do not see you. We will be gathering in the REC center afterwards and I encourage all of you to join us.”

“So it is Mjolnir’s Hand?” A Rider called out.

Andro smiled as he replaced his helmet. “Yes. Now you will be able to see what bonded pairs can do when they are truly one.”

Andro lifted his right arm and touched a small, flexible control on his wrist. They watched as Denali and Lisisa did the same, and over a hundred pairs of eyes grew wide in shock as they watched conforming layers of Dragon Armor begin to extend from the Mark Eleven saddles and encase Elynth, Jeth and Aradace in shimmering invulnerable metal skin.

It was a device that Avi, the Mindvoice Ship Avatar, had developed for them during the scramble in the Evolli War to defend against the deadliness of the T19. The thinness of the Dragon Armor allowed it to be loaded in spring ejectors all along the saddle’s edge and on command from the rider or dragon, the armor would extend and encase the dragon in a matter of seconds. The High Coven Riders watched as the armor extended all the way up the necks of the three dragons, ending just behind their heads, with a thin strip working its way around their muzzles and extending outward on top of their heads, effectively encasing them in protective armor that could stop the fragments of a T19 missile at close range, as well as any number of smaller caliber weapons. The armor extended fully down their long tails, and since all three of them were half Heavyhorn dragon, it provided an additional measure of destructive ability when it encased their mace like tails. It snaked around under their midsections and down their legs, a thin strip covering each lethal talon. A thin strip extended down the front edge of their wings, enabling them to use their wings as ram weapons. As the riders watched, Andro touched another tiny button on his wrist and from the back of his body armor and a small compartment on his helmet that no one had ever noticed before sprang similar layers of Dragon Armor that more quickly encased his entire body. Denali and Lisisa also did the same thing and within seconds they were looking at three glimmering Bonded Pairs encased in the silver like metallic metal. Their eyes went to Andro’s face and they saw the edges of the Dragon Armor extended further past his normal helmet, the ends of the cheeks guards nearly touching his chest. The same was the case for Denali and Lisisa, and now all they could make out were small portions of their lips and their eyes.

“Follow the direction of your Section Leaders.” Andro spoke. “And witness what you could do one day if you believe. Elynth... go!”

Elynth ripped out a trumpet of defiance and propelled them into the air easily. The dragon armor was so light it was no different than if she was carrying an additional person in the saddle with Andro, something all dragons could do quite easily. Jeth and Aradace followed suit with similar trumpets and they too took to the air.

Carisia turned to look at the others. “This way!” She exclaimed.

CRACK!
CRACK!
CRACK!

Megdar and his wife were standing outside their bungalow staring into the sky as more STRIKER DTs entered the atmosphere. The thunder like claps had been happening for nearly an hour now, and he stood outside fastening his dress uniform jacket as he watched the ships hurtle over the base, some of them executing some sincerely insane power maneuvers that even he had to admit were impressive. Golina had never seen a dragon close up, and her eyes were wide as she saw dozens filling the sky above them.

“Son vada carians!” She gasped out.

“Impressive isn’t it?” Eliani’s voice echoed and they whirled around to see her sitting on Tharua’s back just behind them. Arydun was next to her, Nyla sitting proudly in her saddle. Megdar was stunned into silence for he had not heard them land behind them. How could they be such huge beasts and not make any sound?

“It’s... it’s incredible!” Golina panted.

“What is going on?” Megdar demanded.

“Mjolnir’s Hand is arriving.” Nyla replied. “They are welcoming the last member of the Circle of Three hundred. It is a special ceremony for them.”

“Where is Malic and Adriana?” Golina asked.

“Malic is providing security for the event as a member of the Durcunusaan.” Eliani answered as she climbed from Tharua’s back. “The Lifter with Adriana will be here shortly.” She ran her hand over Tharua’s scales as she walked up to where her head was. She leaned over and kissed Tharua’s muzzle.

Go sister! She said with a smile. Go watch your mate.

Tharua blinked and nudged her in the shoulder with her snout before taking to the skies once more, Arydun on her heels. Eliani and Nyla walked up to Megdar and Golina holding hands.

“I have been instructed by my brother to tell you that you will make no demands of Adriana or Malic.” Eliani said. “They have their own minds and free will to make their own decisions.”

Megdar glared at her. “They are my children!” He growled.

Eliani smiled unfazed by his words and demeanor. “Yes... they are your children... not your possessions. Perhaps things might be different if you saw them in that light.”

Golina took his arm quickly stopping the retort that she knew would do nothing but get him in trouble, Admiral or not. “We... we will see them both?” She asked.

Eliani nodded. “Yes. After the ceremony everyone will be gathering at the REC center. Andro also told me to tell you that what you will see when you are there at the REC center is Classified Compartmental Level Nine. If I’m not mistaken Admiral you only have a Level Seven Clearance, and I would hope that this show of trust in you is not misplaced.”

Megdar looked at her with wide eyes. “Level Nine?” He gasped. He was a Fleet Admiral and even he did not have Level Nine clearance.

Eliani turned as the large Heavy Lifter approached. Designed as a troop transport, it had been changed into a passenger carry easily and it came to a smooth stop three meters from where they stood. They watched as the Lifter’s door slid to the side and Adriana climb out slowly. Golina gasped, her hands going to her mouth as she saw Adriana’s swollen abdomen and the radiance she was projecting because of her pregnancy. She forgot herself and rushed forward to stop in front of her youngest daughter.

“Hello mother.” Adriana said with a reserved smile.

“Adriana... you look...” Golina was at a loss for words as tears began to form in her eyes.

“Pregnant?” Adriana said. “Yes... my husband and I are very happy.” She spoke being careful to emphasize the words my husband.

“I was... I was going to say you look beautiful.” Golina spoke reaching out with her hands. She stopped just before they touched her abdomen. “May I?”

Adriana nodded slowly and watched as her mother’s face became animated as she pressed her hands to Adriana’s abdomen. She and Megdar had no grandchildren as of yet, and Adriana carried the first of a new generation. Golina felt the baby kick and she laughed. “Oh... he...”

“She...” Adriana said with a smile. “And yes... she is very active. Especially around those she likes.” She told her. “She did the same when Malic touched her. She kicked for hours afterwards. And she never stops when her father rests his hands on her.” Eliani and Nyla stepped up to them and Adriana looked at them with a bright smile. “Princess Eliani... Star Commander Sinthe.”

Eliani took her hands quickly. “Adriana... we want to apologize to you for...”

Adriana laughed and shook her head. "Is my brother who you both desire?" She asked bluntly.

Eliani met her gaze. "More and more as each day passes." Eliani replied.

"Our blood burns for him." Nyla said softly.

Adriana nodded. "As his does for the both of you." She said. "I think after today things will be much easier to explain."

Eliani looked at her oddly. "What do you mean?" Nyla asked.

"You will see." Adriana said. "Both of you will see. We should go... Andro said your mothers would already be in the stands and that we were to sit with them."

Golina looked at Eliani quickly. "The... the Queens will be present?" She gasped.

Eliani nodded. "My mothers Anja and For'mya yes." She replied. She grabbed Nyla's hand. "We should go." She spoke turning back to Megdar. "Admiral... are you coming? Or would you prefer to walk the eight kilometers to where the ceremony is happening?"

Megdar grunted and nodded his head.

Dalah walked beside Arzoal as they made their way to the flat stretch of ground that overlooked the massive field below. Just below that piece of ground was the rapidly filling bandstand of bleachers. Stretched out before the bleachers was a huge expanse of open, grassy field immaculate in its green lushness. The flat ground above the bleachers was designed specifically for the Dragon Elders, each indent in the soft ground sized especially for the individual Elders for maximum comfort, not that any of them really noticed. It was a pointless effort since they would be comfortable on even the hardest stone given their scales, but the Elders sincerely appreciated that they were so highly thought of among not just the royal family but the entire Union.

... Wanted to remain and begin to help Vollenth as he woke and discovered his new world. Dalah complained softly to Arzoal.

There will be time enough for that. Arzoal answered. This is an important occasion and it would be an insult if the Elders were not all here.

Arzoal...

Dalah my sister dragon and fellow Elder... I do know how you feel. Arzoal spoke before she could continue. Truly. You wanted so much for Vincix to be a member of this sacred circle, and you blame yourself because he could not.

Dalah looked at her flame colored eyes. I blame myself for his physical condition and his inability to land with a rider. He has all the other tools necessary to be a member of Mjolnir's Hand.

Except a bonded one. Arzoal reminded her. And that is what makes them so powerful as Pairs Dalah. You know this.

A Bonded One would have come in due time. Dalah said. One is out there somewhere for my son, of that I have no doubts. A powerful Lycavorian with a steel will and the desire to never fail. He will find my son soon.

Arzoal looked at her somewhat surprised. You have seen this?

Dalah nodded confidently. In my dreams. A face I never saw... but I know he exists. He is out there waiting for my Vincix.

Arzoal nodded her head slowly. If anything, this confirmed in her mind without any doubt that Malic and Vincix had been meant for each other and as Andro had said, they would make a powerful Bonded Pair.

If you have seen it... then I believe you. Arzoal finally said. Come my sister Elder... let us watch the ceremony and rejoice in Mjolnir's Hand being complete once more. You had a hand in helping the King and I form them, and you should be happy that they are once more complete.

Dalah nodded her large head. You are right. And I am happy Arzoal. She looked around below them, her eyes scanning the expanse of ground before them. Have you seen Vincix... he should have greeted me and he is not answering my calls to him?

I know his role as the instructor to the Coven dragons has kept him very busy. Perhaps he is with them. I'm sure he will join us soon enough. Arzoal replied. She lifted her head and let her eyes drift to the distant hill top three kilometers away where she could see the lone figures of a single dragon and rider standing motionless. Dalah... there... the chosen one is waiting.

Dalah lifted her eyes as well and spotted the dragon and rider, both of them covered in full Dragon Armor and that silver like metal radiant in the morning sky as the sun began to rise over the trees.

It will be an honor to welcome him. Dalah said softly.

Eliani hugged her mother tightly; the gathered men and women around them smiling as the fiery Queen and Princess they all so adored greeted each other. Nyla and For'mya exchanged similar hugs and soft kisses while Megdar, Golina and Adriana looked on. Eliani held her mother's arms as they parted, the sun reflecting off their Persian and Burgundy red hair.

"Any word from Aunt Vana?" Eliani asked softly.

"She is contacting me later today." Anja answered.

"Why are the Elders being so obstinate mother?" Eliani asked.

Anja shook her head. "It's not something you need to concern yourself with. Sivana and I can handle the Elders and their stuffy old rules and ideals. When is this party going to start? Your father told me there is a free breakfast involved!"

Eliani laughed as she hugged For'mya tightly and Nyla embraced Anja. "The sections will be coming soon." She answered. "Where are Miath and Aurith?"

For'mya motioned to the hill just below where the Dragon Elders now sat. "They are catching up with Tharua and Arydun." She answered.

Eliani smiled as she saw the four dragons sitting on the hillside among perhaps a dozen more. She held For'mya's hand and took Anja's other hand as she turned to Adriana. "Mothers... this is Admiral Megdar and his mate Golina and their daughter Adriana." Eliani introduced them. "They are Enomotarch Malic's family."

Megdar snapped quickly to a rigid position of attention and bowed his head. "My Queens!" He almost shouted. "It is an honor."

Anja and For'mya nodded their heads. "Admiral Megdar." Anja stated rather coolly for she now knew Malic's entire history since he was the man that her daughter and Nyla so coveted. Her face and eyes changed instantly however as she stepped in front of Adriana and placed her hand on her swollen abdomen. "Oh my... she is a spitfire!" Anja declared.

Adriana chuckled. "Yes she is my Queen." She spoke. "It is truly an honor Milady."

For'mya stepped forward now and reached out to touch her abdomen and she smiled as well. "It must be that vampire blood in her Melyanna." She spoke gently, though emphasizing the word vampire. "It has combined so completely with Lycavorian blood, what we have here will be a whirlwind child with boundless energy."

"Indeed." Anja stated.

Golina stepped closer and bowed her head as well. "I never... I never imagined I... we would ever meet any of you." She spoke.

"We have come to the conclusion that things happen for a reason." For'mya stated with a smile as she turned to look at Golina. This ceremony was a welcome break from having to deal with the Kavalians. She and Deia had been working nearly non-stop over the last few days to thwart their political attempts. "And sometimes those reasons are not what we expect."

Golina met her dark eyes, seeing the way her golden blond hair reflected the rising sun making her appear almost angelic. "I... I have never thought of things in such a way." Golina said softly.

For'mya's smile was warm and friendly. "Perhaps it is time to start." She said. "There is..."

"There!" A voice shouted out. "The sections are coming!"

All eyes turned to the distant specks in the sky. Four long lines of dragons, twenty-five across flying in perfect unison, each section three rows deep. The two massive screens on either side of the huge field came alive with this picture as well.

"Admiral... I understand you don't care for Mjolnir's Hand or dragons very much?" Anja spoke looking at the man.

Megdar met her eyes without flinching which impressed Anja. He was a man of powerful convictions and will it seemed and while that was an excellent character trait, it was also a flaw as well. "I do not doubt their skill Milady." He spoke. "Their deeds speak for themselves... I just don't care for their practices."

Anja nodded slowly. “Well hopefully today will change your mind.”

“I don’t think that is possible Milady.” Megdar spoke.

For’mya took his arm in one hand and Golina’s in the other as Anja drew Adriana close to her. “You might be surprised Admiral. All you need do is look at things from a different perspective.” She said with a brilliant smile. “Let’s watch shall we?”

Background Music, Heavy Metal, Taking a Ride, Ozzy Osbourne Crazy Train, Mjolnir’s Hand Themes

Four sections of armored dragons and riders was impressive no matter how you cut it or what you thought of dragons. Two hundred and ninety-nine Lycavorian and Elven riders sat high in their Mark Eleven saddles, all of them with their hands on their thighs and their heads proudly looking forward, their legs held securely by the dragon armor wind brakes. Their Dragon Armor shone brilliantly in the sunlight, causing flashes of vivid light to reflect off the ground a thousand feet below them.

They flew as one mind, Martin Leonidas in the front with Section One behind him in three rows of twenty-five, followed by Andro, Andreus and Isra, all with their respective sections behind them. Andro’s section was missing one, that position in the first rank left open to signify that they were not yet complete. Their wings moved in perfect unison, no dragon missing a beat or moving their wings out of sync even though only a few meters separated their enormous wingspans. It was the perfect choreography, their minds and hearts acting as if they were all slaved to one central brain. They had become so much more than Martin and Arzoal had first envisioned through the years. Their training was intense, and they shared every experience with their fellow riders of Mjolnir’s Hand, for only they had the power within Mindvoice to do this. They had begun as Tier Six Mindvoicers, and now all of them were considered the most powerful of Mindvoicers within the Union save very few. Only Arzoal and the Elders, the First Oracle and members of the Royal family could hope to match what they could bring to bear.

Martin turned in his saddle as they grew closer to the ceremony field far below and he couldn’t help the swell of pride he felt when he saw them behind him maintaining perfect formation no matter what maneuver he and Torma executed.

[This is what it is all about Torma my brother.] Martin spoke. [We will be complete once more.]

[It has been too long Martin.] Torma answered knowing that three of his children had joined his bonded brother’s children in this calling of rider and dragon and were perhaps the strongest of them all.

[That it has.] Martin said. [Malic and Vincix are a powerful pair and they will do justice to Mjolnir’s Hand I think.]

[Even though he wants your daughter?] Torma chuckled.

[Given what he has accomplished up until Vincix came into his life... knowing the odds stacked against him, I would have given him my blessing even had this not happened.] Martin answered. [Eliani and Nyla would have fixed him eventually, even if they had to hold him down to do it.]

Torma chuckled. [Yes... she is the more forceful of your daughters. And Nyla has taken after her in that regard.]

Martin turned back around and saw they were nearly over the ceremony field. He turned to the right and off in the distance he could see Malic and Vincix standing proudly on the hilltop waiting for their time to come. [Torma my brother... I believe its time we got this party rolling and brought our brothers and sisters together.]

[I agree]

Martin reached down and removed the Nehtes from his right thigh. He triggered the extension button and watched as the spear extended to its full length of nearly nine feet. He lifted it above his head.

Brothers and sisters of Mjolnir’s Hand! Let us welcome our new brothers! He screamed out within Mindvoice.

Background music Malic’s Theme, Blackhawk Down ST, Battlestar Pegasus theme from BG, Reuniting from BG

All eyes in the grandstand watched as first their King and Torma peeled off and dove for the ground, followed in exacting formation by Section One. They saw them hurtle downward towards where the lone rider and dragon stood like a statue, the sun now reflecting off their armor dazzlingly, positioned as they were in the path of the rising sun. There were gasps of awe as first Martin and Torma swooped low to the ground, passing within a few meters of where Malic and Vincix stood, and he threw his Nehtes with incredible force from the saddle as he passed overhead. Men and women in the stands came to their feet as they watched the enormous screens on the sides of the field. Martin's Nehtes plunged into the ground only twelve inches from where Malic stood, each successive member of Section One breaking over the top of them and reaching out to them within Mindvoice.

Welcome brothers!

Welcome!

You honor us!

We are complete now!

Welcome!

Anyone who could Mindvoice at a Tier Four level or better could hear the many voices within Mindvoice and that was most of those gathered in the grandstand. Mjolnir's Hand was not shielding their words now, allowing all to hear them as each of them passed within feet of Malic and Vincix, never once revealing their names. That was to be their King's duty.

It happened again with Andro plunging his Nehtes down into the earth next to Malic's opposite foot as Elynth rolled on her side as they passed overhead. Lisisa and Denali followed next, Jeth adding a welcoming trumpet as they rocketed over the top of them. The same event happened with each section and soon Mjolnir's Hand was circling the ceremony field, every pair of eyes looking skyward at them. Even Malic's father had been impressed at the level of perfection they had displayed in formation and then flying over the lone rider and dragon. The few members of Mjolnir's Hand that Megdar had seen through his life were always on the ground, and he had not until this day realized the level of skill it took for a Bonded Pair to fly in such a precise formation, or do what they had done. Several times he had thought they would smash into the ground at such high speed as they passed over the lone pair, yet each time with a single flick of a tail or altering of wing position, they were soaring skyward once more. And through it all that lone pair had not moved a single muscle, remaining absolutely still, the rider standing slightly in front of the large dragon, his hand holding his extended Nehtes, his head never moving from looking forward. Megdar was considered a Tier Five Mindvoicer and he was able to hear the voices within Mindvoice easily. He had leaned over to his mate quickly when she yanked on his arm to inquire of what was happening and he explained rather animatedly what was occurring and telling her what was being said in Mindvoice. This excitement did not go unnoticed by Adriana, Eliani and Nyla.

"You see papa." Adriana said softly taking her father's arm in her hands and looking up at his weathered face. "They are more than you thought they were. So much more. This is what Malic desires... more than anything."

Megdar looked down at his youngest daughter and she thought she saw a hint of softness in his deep blue eyes that she had never seen before. "Adriana... how... how can he achieve this? He is..."

Adriana shook her head slowly with a gentle smile. "Never doubt the influence of destiny papa." She said. "What is done is done. You must let go of what you want of us and embrace the paths we take of our own accord. Be proud of who we are..." Adriana turned to gaze across the field and look at the lone rider and dragon in the distance. "And of what we could become."

"Is... is he watching this?" Megdar asked. "Can he see what is happening? He should be here."

Adriana turned once more and looked up at him. "He is closer than you think." She said with a smile.

It was then that Eliani and Nyla looked at her oddly, for they had heard everything she said to her father.

Background music Shall never surrender, Devil May Cry VGST, Leave No Man Behind Blackhawk Down ST.

Martin and Torma were the first to sweep over the field and land easily once they passed over Malic and Vincix. Martin remained on Torma's back as each member of Mjolnir's Hand Section One executed a perfect landing, once more in ideal formation behind him. Andro was next to land and Section Two behind him, again without so much as a millimeter of error. The front rank of Section two still missing one Bonded Pair. Andreus and Isra led their sections in as well, until all of them were on the ground in four sections. Andro and his father faced off across from each other, Andreus and Isra doing the same. Four sections all facing towards each other.

Martin climbed from his saddle and dropped easily to the ground, the psychic shield that encompassed them when they flew dissipating. He walked slowly to the center of the formation and waited as the rest of Mjolnir's Hand dismounted in unison and stood beside their dragons. The Dragon Armor reflected magnificently in the sunlight as the riders extended their Nehtes and drove the weighted ends into the ground with one mind. Even on the soft earth the effect could be felt vibrating through the ground even by those in the stands.

My honored brethren of Mjolnir's Hand! Martin's voice erupted from Mindvoice, easily carrying to all those who were able to hear.

We come together today to unite as one! Martin continued. Five years we have searched for those to take the place of our fallen comrades! They died as they lived!

HEROES! Five hundred and ninety-eight voices bellowed out.

They will never be gone from our hearts and minds! They live on inside us! We have searched long and hard to find others that would equal them in every way! I stand before you today... and I tell you... that search is over! Martin barked.

MJOLNIR'S HAND LIVES!

Against the enemies of the Union and those who are damned!

Against the enemies of the Union and those who are damned!

We shall show no mercy!

We shall show no mercy!

For we have none!

For we have none!

Our enemies shall fall!

Our enemies shall fall!

As we up rise!

As we up rise!

To claim our fate!

To claim our fate!

Now and forever!

Now and forever!

We will be together!

We will be together!

As Mjolnir's Hand!

As Mjolnir's Hand!

Martin turned to face where Malic and Vincix still stood in the distance.

Come with us brothers! Come with us and we'll stand and fight together! Through your strength and will you'll make us better! And you will see we'll fight until eternity. We'll make a better day tomorrow, for we shall never surrender!

All those who were watching turned their eyes to see the lone dragon in the distance let out a roaring trumpet that rolled across the field before them with supremacy and power. It was a trumpet that one dragon recognized instantly.

Dalah came to her feet as if she had been shot out of a cannon. Vincix! She gasped loudly within Mindvoice causing many to turn and look at her, including Eliani and Nyla.

They turned back and watched as the rider vaulted himself into the saddle and the dragon leaped into the sky with a surge of power and command influence. They watched as that pair climbed quickly into the sky with powerful sweeps of the enormous wings, rolling over several times as they climbed.

Vincix? Dalah gasped again as she recognized her son's coloring. Her eyes were wide as she turned to Arzoal and Daurgo, who were now standing as well. Arzoal? Daurgo?

Can you feel him Dalah? Arzoal spoke softly.

It is him isn't it? She exclaimed. It is my son! How... how can this be?

It is destiny stepping in once more to shape our future and the future of those around us. Daurgo spoke.

All of them looked skyward as Vincix hurtled over the huge field at breathtaking speed, banking sharply over the grandstand and rolling into another dive toward the field. They could only watch as the rider raised his arm and plunged it downward, the Nehtes releasing from his grasp to smash into the ground twelve inches from Martin's right foot.

We pledge ourselves to our brothers and sisters! Two voices rang out together.

Vincix executed a vertical climb rolling over at five thousand feet and spiraling back towards the earth. They watched the rider's arm flash forward three more times in quick succession.

We pledge ourselves to the Union! Andro's Nehtes slammed into the ground to his right.

We pledge ourselves to each other! Andreus's Nehtes came next.

We pledge all that we are as a Bonded Pair of Mjolnir's Hand! Isra's Nehtes was the last.

Vincix snapped into a tight roll and screamed across the field over the top of Martin's head, blasting directly at the grandstand. Dozens of men and women shot to their feet, Megdar and Golina among them as Vincix flared his massive wings and slowed to a crawl in mid air. Dalah realized what he was about to do and she shook her head.

No my son! She cried. You...

Vincix roared out his new position with a trumpet of happiness and elation and pride directed right at the grandstand as his hind legs touched down on the ground with Malic sitting high and proud in the saddle.

Dalah was shocked into silence at what she saw and Arzoal leaned close to her. You see Dalah... fate always has a way of righting whatever might be wrong. Your dreams were correct Dalah. Destiny was only waiting for the right moment to fix itself.

Megdar watched as the dragon moved closer to the grandstand, its amethyst colored eyes seemingly directed squarely at him. He felt Golina grasp his arm tightly as the huge dragon turned to the side and the tall rider slid easily from the saddle. Two gasps from behind him caused him to turn and he saw the unbelievable looks on the faces of Princess Eliani and her vampire lover Nyla.

Eliani's fern green eyes were wide as she felt the overwhelming power of his aura sweep over her. She leaned into Nyla slightly, knowing that Nyla could feel what she was experiencing easily.

"Malic!" Eliani gasped loudly.

Megdar turned back around at this and the armored rider was directly in front of him and Golina. He glanced at Adriana and saw his daughter was gazing with love and pride at the rider. He turned back once more his eyes wide now as he caught the ocean and driftwood scent of his son.

"Mal... Malic!" Admiral Megdar gasped focusing on the identical to his deep blue eyes set behind the shimmering helmet. They were wolf eyes now, but Megdar knew his son's eyes when he saw them. Malic was the only one of his sons to have inherited his blue eyes.

"Hello father." Malic spoke confidently. He glanced at his mother. "Hello mother."

Golina held her hands to her mouth as she burst into tears. "Malic!" She sobbed.

Malic lifted his right hand and touched the small control panel. Megdar watched as the Dragon Armor receded from around his son's helmet, exposing more of his eyes and mouth and revealing the standard matte black helmet, only with crimson slashes across the sides and front. Malic reached down and withdrew the Nehtes given to him by Andro and held it up for his father to see. His thumb caressed the trigger and the spear extended to its full length with an audible snap and click. The intricate carvings on the shaft were obvious as were the several amethyst colored jewels.

"I... I harbor no feelings of malice towards you father." Malic said softly. "I can not change who you are, nor do I wish to try. You told me once that this was out of my reach. That what I coveted more than anything would not happen. This is who I am father... this is who I was always meant to be. I will forge my own path now. My bonded brother and I will forge our own path.” Malic held up the Nehtes. “This is for you father. To show you that you were wrong about what I could accomplish. This is to show you that I am not like you and nor will I ever be like you.” Malic plunged the Nehtes down firmly into the ground between his father’s feet. “My destiny lies down another path, and I will walk that path father... with your blessing... or without.”

Malic’s eyes shifted upwards and he looked at Eliani and Nyla who were too stunned to do anything but gaze back at him in shock. He let his eyes linger on them for a long moment before he looked at Anja and For’mya and bowed his head. “My Queens.” He spoke softly. “With your permission... with your permission I will take my place.”

“With our permission...” Anja said.

“And our blessing Star Commander Malic.” For’mya finished.

Malic bowed his head and touched the control panel once more, activating his helmet armor and waiting until the Dragon Armor had extended again. He glanced once more at Eliani and Nyla and then turned back to the field where the members of Mjolnir’s Hand had moved into a huge circle waiting for him. He stepped off the stands and began walking back to where Vincix waited.

“Malic!” Megdar’s voice boomed.

Malic stopped and turned back to look at his father. He watched him reach down and yank the Nehtes from the ground between his feet and walk up to him. Megdar depressed the trigger and collapsed the Nehtes. He thrust it out to his son in the horizontal fashion of greeting.

“You will... you will need this Star Commander!” He spoke.

Malic reached up and grasped the Nehtes with an armored hand, only to have his father grasp that hand with both of his tightly. He shifted his eyes up and looked into his father’s face seeing the single tear rolling down his father’s cheek.

“With my blessing... Malic. With my blessing... and the love I have never shown you... my son.” Megdar spoke.

Malic heard his mother and sister sobbing softly, Eliani and Nyla’s eyes also full of tears. He nodded his head to his father. “My Bonded Brother and I will never dishonor you or the title we now carry father. I swear this to you.”

Megdar nodded. “Then go! Go Malic... go and take your place! Do not keep our King and your brethren waiting.”

Malic nodded his head and moved quickly to climb onto Vincix’s back. “Vincix my brother! Go!” He barked.

Vincix trumpeted his agreement and propelled them into the sky once more as Megdar stepped back to stand between his mate and daughter.

They watched as Vincix circled the field once and then landed in front of where Martin’s place in the circle was. Andro was to his right, Andreus and Isra to his left.

King Martin Leonidas! Malic bellowed out. My Bonded Brother and I are ready to assume our duties! Take your place then! Martin spoke.

Malic saw the opening between Andro and the female rider beside him and he directed Vincix in that direction. They walked past the opening, turned and then filled the gap in the circle. Malic looked at Andro as he came into position next to him.

Mjolnir’s Hand! Our Sacred Circle is complete once more! We are united as one again! Martin shouted. Let all who bear witness this day, pass on word that we are united once more! That we stand ready in defense of our Union! Let them know we will never surrender! Not while even one of us breathes air! This we swear!

This we swear!

Mjolnir’s Hand I salute you! Martin screamed out.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

MENKLA K2 MILITARY TRANSPORT ASSIGNED ULU ARIZONA

Earth.

She hadn't been back to the planet of her birth in more years than she could remember it seemed. This lush planet held nearly all of the most painful memories of her young life, and no matter where she went or what she did; it never failed to happen that she returned to Earth in some way. Perhaps it was the call of home, or perhaps it was the call of the few memories of what little happiness she had experienced on the blue/green world beneath her. Whatever the reason, she was back once more.

Captain Miranda 'Mando' Lorian allowed her dark brown eyes to gaze out the view window from the upper deck of the MENKLA transport as the pilot brought them closer to the planet on a smooth approach heading. She could see three of the colossal LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers in orbit, the smaller accompanying ships of their Strike Wings maintaining station outside of orbit to allow them freedom of movement in case they needed to respond. Miranda also knew the three captains of those three Strike Cruisers could have the ships moving from orbit in less time than it took her to get a mug of coffee. The gray moon she remembered from her childhood sparkled with lights from this distance and she knew it was from the major building expansion that EDEN Moon Base had undergone ten years ago, enlarging the base to cover fully twenty square kilometers. Combined with the PROMETHEUS-Class Planetary Command Station that orbited Earth, and the ASOC II Planetary Defense Platforms, or PDPs for short, Earth had become the second most heavily defended planet in the entire Lycavorian Union behind only Apo Prime.

The Lycavorian Union.

Her home and what she had now dedicated her life in defense of. Her parents had been original members of EDEN Moon Base's crew, her father a flight engineer for the RAPTOR squadron, her mother a civilian administrative assistant. She was their only child at the time; any brothers and sisters she knew had been put off after her birth because they had taken a huge role in making sure EDEN Moon Base succeeded. The comet and Senator Graham had changed all that. Her parents had taken Miranda in what was now known as the Eden Exodus, when thousands of men, women and children had left the moon with Martin once Graham had briefly taken power. All of them knew that they followed someone who was not entirely human in Martin Leonidas, yet they did not truly understand the truth of that statement until much later. Not that it would have mattered to her parents, they adored the man who they thought was a genome. Had they lived long enough to discover that he was actually a King of werewolves and the son of a legendary Spartan King who had lived three thousand years before, Miranda had no doubt her father would have thought that to be so very cool.

She lost her parents James and Miyazuki Lorian in that first unprovoked attack on the encampment they had established near the High Elf lands. If not for the superior reaction of one of those that Martin had turned into a werewolf, Miranda would have died as well. Her world had come crashing down that day when she was only four years old. At that age she hadn't known why someone would want to hurt her parents and take them away from her. It was a question she often asked the adoptive parents she had been placed with under the watchful eye of Ben O'Connor. The elven mother and human father had three other children, all of mixed heritage and she was accepted unconditionally and loved the same, if not more because of the loss she had already endured. They had taken part in the building of Eden City, both of them in the medical field under Queen Anja, and both of them intent on returning the life to her that had been ripped from her grasp. Those months with her adoptive parents and three siblings had been hard, many nights Miranda found herself crying to sleep in her elven mother's arms. However, she was a resilient young lady, and the loss slowly began to fade as her life with her adoptive parents grew more and more routine and happy.

The High Coven attack on Eden City had ripped that from her yet again.

Her adoptive parents and all of her adoptive siblings had been lost in the bombing and shelling of Eden City. The only thing that had saved her life was a half vampire Drow elf female that had snatched her from the jaws of death yet again and protected her ruthlessly. It was a stretch of seven hours that Miranda still had dreams about to this day. The way the Drow female had viciously killed nearly a dozen High Coven cloned troops as she fought to get them to the safety of the northern airfield and War Master Tareif's forces. It was that single event in her life that made Miranda always view Drow elves differently. She had a respect and affection for them that did not carry over to the majority of other elves.

Miranda Lorian bounced from home to home after things had once more become settled, always under the watchful eye of Ben and Tina O'Connor for they had been close with her parents and in some way they felt responsible for her. Their lives had taken a different direction when the spunky red haired female elf Endith entered it, but no matter what happened in her life, Miranda could always turn to them no matter which one it was. She had done just that on several occasions when she had confrontations with the newly formed Eden City police force as she was growing up. Miranda tended to hang with a rough crowd as she grew, quick to anger and violence, she rapidly gained a reputation as someone you did not want to make angry. She had incredible reflexes for a human and though she stood only five foot two, and a hundred and thirteen pounds, constant life on the streets had honed her body to perfection. Many of the elf children her age would not tangle with her because they knew she was as tenacious as a lion on the hunt and would never back down. She had been in numerous fights, usually giving far more than she received.

It wasn't until she stole a planetary transport on a dare that she came back with a flare to the attention of Ben O'Connor and a certain reptilian Union Fleet Admiral. The transport just happened to be the personal transport of Admiral Ceneu and even without proper piloting skills Miranda had given the Earth Air Defense Forces fits for three hours before she managed to land the transport without damaging it. She was sixteen at the time, and her tough demeanor and experiences had impressed Ceneu to such an extent he backed her entrance into the Union Fleet Academy without so much as a passing thought.

Miranda had entered a new world then, leaving Earth for Apo Prime. So caught up in the utter strangeness of everything around her, Miranda Lorian nearly lost it all when during the first week in the academy she thoroughly beat a vampire cadet almost to death for a simple comment he had made in regards to her attitude. That is when Ben, Tina and Endith had taken her to see Helen. Miranda had a distrust of everything non-human with the exception of Drow elves surprisingly, and she had a particular dislike of vampires, which unexpectedly did not extend to the Drow. It was the Lycavorian First Oracle that discovered the fears Miranda held deep inside her, fears that would never go away, but fears that could be treated in some fashion so they did not rule her actions. Helen had taken her to the Royal Palace on Apo Prime, and it was there Miranda met and lived with the King and his Queens and small children for almost two months during the break in classes at the Academy.

Martin Leonidas was a portion of her memories that would never fade, for she blamed him in some small part for the deaths of both her families. As she had grown older, she realized that was not realistic for he was trying to save all those who desired freedom and happiness, and her parents would never have held their deaths against him. During her stay on the Royal Island, she had her first interaction with dragons and while she found their wisdom and strength to be magical, outside of her time on the island she stayed away from them unless she needed to be around them. They frightened her in some manner she could not explain. Miranda spent quite a bit of time with Queen Isabella who had taken a shine to her because she reminded Isabella so much of herself while growing up on Usu Ozeib 7. The feelings of being lost and unwelcome were something she understood quite well. Miranda had grown even closer to Ben, Tina and Endith as well, for they were her last link to her parents and her past which she clung to rigidly.

Miranda Lorian also had the distinction of being the only non member of his family to have spent so many hours with Martin Leonidas and his sons Androcles and Resumar. What she had learned from him during that time had remained with her until this day and it was a defining factor in her own command style. She learned about his life before he had discovered who he was, what he had felt after he had discovered his past, and how there had been many times he had attempted to escape that and return to simpler times as he called them. He also bestowed upon her in those two months the same skills he taught his sons when it came to fighting and when she left that island Miranda Lorian was far deadlier than when she had arrived for she had learned the patience of a wolf and Spartan.

And she had become completely focused on what she would accomplish.

Five years later she graduated third in her class, a feat that widely set the course for the rest of her career, for she had beat out nearly a dozen elves in terms of academics and piloting skills, not to mention she was one of only a handful of humans who had actually learned the Lycavorian ancient language and become fluent in its use. At the age of twenty-one Miranda 'Mando' Lorian returned to Earth for a brief stint in the Air Defense Forces that she had made look the fool five years earlier. Her rise to prominence continued steadily, all the while with Ben and Admiral Ceneu patting themselves on the back at their decision to see beyond the exterior and see inside her. Her relationship with Ben and Tina waned when she discovered they had asked Queen Isabella to turn them. At first Miranda had felt betrayed by the very man and woman who she trusted most of all and considered her only real family. She learned quickly why they had done what they had done, and though that eased much of what she felt, it made her remain away from them until the end of the Evolli War. One of Admiral Ben O'Connor's first accomplishments as the new Admiral of Union Fleet Operations was to establish almost human like distinctions within the Union Fleet when it came to ships and fighter squadrons. He took a huge work load off of Admiral of the Fleet Riall in terms of planning and logistics and research, which freed Riall to use his tactical knowledge and skills to direct Union forces. It was something that Miranda had supported fully, for it allowed the humans that dotted the fleet to feel accepted and respected. It was also a sign to her of Ben's refusal to let go of his humanity even though he was now a vampire, and under Ben's care and with King Leonidas's support, humans within the Union fleet were becoming much more prominent and many of them held positions of great importance as pilots and engineers.

At the beginning of the Evolli War Miranda was leading a four ship flight in VFA7, one of the newer squadrons in the fleet onboard the new LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser DORI LETH. The first two years of that war had seen her score twenty-seven Evolli kills, all of them their most advanced fighter, and she become a five time ace and one of the most renown pilots within the entire fleet. Also during that time she did not lose anyone in her section or squadron and VFA7 became one of the premier fighter squadrons of the fleet. She was well known for her aggressive flying skills and decisive decision making, but she was also known to never leave or abandon anyone in her section. They had become her family now and she was almost possessive in her protection of them, and the two Elves and one Lycavorian in her section had become just as possessive of her in return.

All that changed in the Battle for Alba Tau.

The DORI LETH, or HADES GATE in translation, was supporting the ground attack on Alba Tau when word reached them that the King and Crown Prince and their reduced sections of Mjolnir's Hand had been shot down and were under sadistic and brutal attack by thousands of Evolli ground forces. This had sent the six supporting Union fleets into a controlled frenzy, for almost immediately after receiving word of that, fully seven front line Evolli Fleets jumped into the system and began attacking. Suddenly a well thought out Lycavorian attack against inferior Evolli ground and fleet forces had turned into an ambush by superior Evolli forces with top notch equipment and ships.

That had begun a twenty-one hour hell not only for those on the ground, but for the pilots of the Union fleets as well.

The seven Evolli Fleets were all top of the line ships, with their advanced fighters and experienced pilots. Apparently their goal had been to wipe out the King, Crown Prince and three of the Queens in one fell swoop thinking they could cripple the entire Lycavorian Union. With Aricia, For'mya and Anja screaming and directing forces from the surface of the planet, the next twenty-one hours had been one battle after another, the Evolli giving almost as good as they got. Miranda's wingman was the first to be killed in the thick fog of fighters that had filled the stars that day. One second he was there, the next he had been completely obliterated by an Evolli plasma burst. Miranda had killed that fighter screaming out her rage, and then she had reformed her section to continue the attack they had begun only to find that VFA7's squadron commander had been killed and she was now in command. Most of that time in her life was a blur now, but she had continued the attack against one of the main Evolli Carriers, she and the survivors of their squadron screaming out in happiness as that massive ship had nosed over and exploded in the upper atmosphere. Miranda led VFA7 back to DORI LETH to refuel and rearm, and then they launched once more to provide support for another attack on the second Evolli carrier that had jumped into the system. This ship and its fighters had already destroyed one LEONIDAS II Strike Cruiser and half a dozen smaller ships and it needed to be killed before it could bring its weapons to bear on the planet below. She and VFA7 provided fighter support as the older Lycavorian Union M4 DEVASTATOR Fighter Bombers finally blew that carrier into tiny pieces, the death blow coming when an M4 fighter had insanely flown its last missile right into the landing bay of the ship and then rode the expanding fireball out the other side.

An emergency call found her with nine of the original sixteen fighters in her squadron surviving and being sent to assist with the M4 squadron to attack and destroy the main Evolli Aerospace Command Platform. It was a huge oval shape sphere that was coordinating all the Evolli forces in the system. They needed to knock out that ship and do it ASAP before the Evolli could bring in more reinforcements. By the time that oval shaped sphere was cracking like an egg, Miranda was filled with nothing but rage. Miranda had lost the remainder of her squadron in the vicious attack, including the remaining three pilots of her beloved section members. The Evulli defended their Command ship fanatically and many pilots died that day. The deaths of her section members, her family, brought long buried memories rushing to the front, only this time Miranda 'Mando' Lorian could lash out.

And lash out she did.

Taking her damaged fighter into the atmosphere against orders, Miranda proceeded to pull up the ground forces frequencies and was credited with destroying three heavy Evulli gun positions with just her pulse cannons. The last attack run however cost her fighter half of its propulsion, and trailing smoke for kilometers from the remaining engine, she finally crashed deep in Evulli territory. Miranda thought she was dead for sure so far behind enemy lines as she was, and she welcomed death's embrace if it came for her. She never imagined they would react to her going down so drastically. Her actions had saved countless thousands of Spartans lives, and the Lycavorian commanding General of that unit was not about to let her go down without a fight. He immediately dispatched two RAPTOR evac ships under heavy RAPTOR II gunship support to rescue her. Both of her legs had been broken along with one arm and several ribs when she crashed, yet when they found her she was ready to put our rounds from her K12 and go down fighting.

Her injuries got her an evac to the medical ship in orbit, and six hours after she arrived, so did the King, the Prince and the survivors of the ground battle, which she later discovered was far more grievous a battle. All of them were hard hit even with their famed healing systems, and they had spent a week in the same ward together as the medical ship made its way back to Apo Prime at its best possible speed, all of them under the watchful eye and care of Queen Anja. It was that week with them on the hospital ship that kept Miranda from going completely insane with grief and guilt for being the only survivor of the battle, all those she considered her family once more ripped from her grasp. That week with Martin Leonidas and his son, with General Simpson and his son, and dozens of others who had lived through Alba Tau, it granted Miranda a new family in a sense.

What war had taken from her, it had also given back.

It took her thirteen months to recover from her wounds, both physical as well as mental and she was immediately handed the position of the Commander Air Group for the RAGE OF DRAGONS, a new LEONIDAS II Strike Cruiser that had just been commissioned. It was over the course of the next two years of the war that she earned her nickname 'Rogue Alpha' by the Lycavorians, for her iron will and detachment from those around her unless her duties called for it. She allowed no one close to her emotionally, and while she flew and fought beside her fellow pilots, never allowing any of them to fall while flying with her, none of them reached the part of her heart that her former Squadron mates had. Those she had bonded to on that medical ship were the only ones she allowed close to her, and they were who she communicated with on a regular basis. Miranda considered many Lycavorians, Elves and vampires arrogant by their very nature, and while she knew there were exceptions to that rule she had only accepted her 'War Family' as part of that group. She clung stubbornly to her humanity, refusing many times the offers by Lycavorian men and even vampire men to turn her so they could build a relationship together. She attracted many males with her exotic beauty and raven colored hair, and many male wolves knew of her exploits and drooled at the opportunity to turn her and claim her as a mate. They knew she would give them strong children. Miranda worked very hard to keep her figure in superb condition, her breasts high and firm, and her waist small. Her legs were long for her height of five foot two, and she had what she considered being somewhat of a flat ass, though most men did not think of it that way. The choice to not be turned caused many wolves to regard her as a bigot, which anyone who worked with her knew was untrue. She was known as a stern disciplinarian, a CAG that would not tolerate fools or the risks they brought with them. She was known as someone who, while not a stickler for the rules, expected perfection from her pilots and ground crew no matter how they had to obtain it. Or they had to at least try for perfection to the very best of their abilities.

She attended the Lycavorian Senior Officer Command Academy two years previous at Ben O'Connor's recommendation, and upon graduating tops in that class she was promoted to Captain and assigned by Special Order of the King to the position she now held. She had spent a year going to the Command Academy and in that time had purge much of the hatred from her, and even strengthened the relationship she had with Ben and Tina. She lived with them for that year, and seeing them together and the way they interacted and accepted here without question purged any doubts or questions about them from her mind. They were all Miranda Lorian had left that connected her to her past, and along with Endith, she swore to never lose them no matter what it cost her.

“Mando?” The male voice spoke softly from her left, pulling her out of her thoughts as she turned to look up into the face of her Executive Officer.

“Janon?” She spoke. “Something?”

The tall, thickly muscled older Lycavorian Spartan held up the data pads. He had been with Miranda since the RAGE OF DRAGONS, coming over as her Executive Officer and now one of only forty-three people within the entire Union with Level Ten Security Clearance. He trusted Miranda, or Mando as she preferred to be called, with his life for she had already saved it on several occasions. A fact that allowed him to continue to enjoy the pleasures of his elven mate of three hundred and nine years and their two small children. Janon was one of those exceptions to the rule as far as Miranda was concerned, and though she would never become fast friends with him and give of herself as she had done in the past, he was far closer to her than perhaps anyone but Ben, Tina, Endith and Miranda’s ‘War Family’.

“General Lynwe finally replied.” He stated. “She sends her apologies, but the King has her working on something that is taking up quite a bit of her time.”

Miranda motioned for him to take a seat opposite her and sat up straighter. “Well if the Drow are involved you can bet it is important.” She spoke watching him sit down. “The King only involves them when he wants his A Team on the job. And the Drow are definitely his A Team.” She took the pad from him as he settled into the chair. “She can still meet with us right?”

Janon nodded. “The day after tomorrow.” He answered. “The list she put together is very short... there are only five names, but I think the first two officers are what we are looking for. General Lynwe sends her recommendation for the third officer however. She is one of the original Drow elves to escape with her and Vice President Aihola’s brother Tari. She is only a Lieutenant, which could cause some waves.”

Miranda rubbed her face and activated the pad, her dark eyes perusing the information quickly but efficiently. She scrolled down to the third Drow elf, passing over the male and female above her. Miranda gazed at her picture for a long moment, taking in the gorgeous amber colored eyes that had always caught her attention on Drow ever since that female had saved her life as a child, and then the near flawless light chocolate colored skin. Her long shimmering white hair was tied into a tight pony tail with violet Drow silk and draped over one shoulder.

“Lieutenant E’dira. She’s two hundred and thirty-four years old.” Miranda spoke looking at him. “Why only a Lieutenant?”

“It seems she took offense to something an Amarian diplomat she was guarding said to her six years ago.” Janon replied with a smile. “She bent his feelers slightly. The Amarian demanded she be punished and threatened to make a political stink out of it. She volunteered to be reduced in rank to Lieutenant to avoid any political mess.”

Miranda smiled. “Really?” She asked. “Oh... I would have liked to have seen her bend his feelers. Amarians can get a little frisky at times.” She said. “What does Lynwe say about her?”

“Her transmission was short, but she said she would fill us in more when we see her.” Janon spoke. “Basically she says this Drow has a mind like a computer, finished at the top of every Security Operations course within the Union, and was part of the King’s invasion of Ukwav and the destruction of Enurrua. She is also the only survivor of her Drow Scout Team from Alba Tau.” Janon finished softly.

Miranda looked up at him quickly. “Alba Tau?” She said softly.

Janon nodded knowing the memories of Alba Tau sometimes made her very upset. “They were trying to get to the King’s position during the night and were caught in the same ambush as General Simpson.” He answered.

Miranda lowered the pad and looked out the window once more. “It seems I can’t escape the memories of Alba Tau Janon. None of us can.” She said.

Janon nodded. “My mate tells me there are times when she can hear me whispering in my sleep. Like I am re-fighting that battle. Not very often now... but it does still happen.”

“It has affected a lot more people than even I first thought.” She spoke turning to Janon. “It says she has never had a ship posting. Is she qualified on the Nodon JCN 71 Tactical Network and the NorthAm FCS?”

Janon nodded with a grin. “Completed last year with a 97 percent Attack/Defense ratio.” He answered.

“Oh... I like her already.” Miranda spoke. “The other top two?” She asked.

Janon shook his head. “They scored 89 percent and 92 percent respectively. Not even close to her.”

“Tell Lynwe we want to meet with her.” Miranda spoke immediately.

“I already did.” He answered with a smile. “She’ll be with Lynwe when we meet with her for lunch at the Grand Center.”

“Good.” Miranda said. “Let’s roll off the CAG names again.” She said. “I want to make sure we are making the right decision here.”

Janon looked at the pad he held. “Senior Lieutenant Rekon?”

Miranda shook her head as she lifted the pad. “Too tight in the thrusters and too by the book.” She said. “Senior Lieutenant Bolar?”

Janon shook his head now. “He thinks his sibfla doesn’t stink.” He said. “What about Junior Commander Golnar? He had fourteen kills during the war.”

“He spent most of his time trying to bounce the wives of other officers on his little celie after he got hurt. He spent a total of nine months in the combat zone Janon. We spent more time in the cockpit in the last two years than this midaeus spent the entire war. And nine of his fourteen kills were third rate Evolli fighters. Not exactly their top of the line.”

Janon nodded. “Point taken.” He said with a grin.

“This Senior Lieutenant Talay is promising.” Miranda spoke.

Janon looked at her. “Mando... you would eat that young elf for breakfast and spit him out in the first six hours. He’d be screaming for a transfer inside of the first day. He has no backbone and he is the epitome of why you think most elves are arrogant.”

“I’m not that bad!” Miranda exclaimed.

“This coming from the human officer who told the elven Commander of the 39th SCFFG to suck her left tit when he refused to allow you to refuel.” Janon said.

“He told me I couldn’t use his gas to get back in the fight when he had his birds sitting on ready in their launch tubes because it violated safety protocols.” Miranda snapped. “And I told him to suck my right tit. My tattoo was still healing.”

Janon laughed and nodded his head. “You are right.” He said. His eyes scanned the list of names and he stopped. “What about this one?” He spoke. “Major Steven Randall, he’s currently the CAG for EADF.” Janon’s eyes grew a little wider. “Whoa! Sixty-seven kills during the war! That’s almost as many as you! Five decorations for bravery, and get this... two letters of reprimand, one that should have been given to his wife.”

“What ship?” Miranda asked her interest piqued.

Janon looked up at her. “NORMYA’S LIGHT.” He answered.

“Queen Dysea’s ship?” Miranda spoke suddenly very interested. “She and Queen Isabella led some of the largest campaigns against the Evolli during the war. Dysea didn’t care for them very much it seems.”

Janon nodded. “He was a Squadron Commander for three years, and then acting CAG for the last thirty-six months of the war.”

“Call Sign?”

“Call Sign was...” Janon looked up from the pad. “His Call Sign was Scar.” He said softly.

“Scar?” Miranda said her mind flashing back over the years. “That was the... that was the call sign of the M4 Squadron Commander that took down the second Evolli carrier at Alba Tau.” She said quietly.

Janon nodded. “By shoving an Y14 missile right down its throat and into its landing bay.”

“He flew the damn missile into the landing bay Janon! His fire control computer went tits up and he executed a manual release inside the landing bay!” Miranda said. “And then he rode the fireball out the other side!”

Janon looked at the pad. “He’s one of Ben’s initial pilot trainees from after the Battle of Eden City. He’s qualified on everything we have in the inventory, with nearly seven thousand hours in the Tempest alone. He is married to War Master Tareif’s youngest daughter Zaala, has been for the last twenty-three years. He...”

“What?” Miranda asked.

“He was turned by the King.” Janon spoke looking up at her. “He was human but asked that the King turn him after he married Tareif’s daughter.”

Miranda took the pad from his hand, reading for a moment. “He asked for the same reason that Ben and Tina asked Queen Isabella to turn them. It says he rarely, if ever shifts to wolf form.” She said softly. “He’s turned down three promotions to remain in command of EADF. Superior pilot... the Lycavorian blood only increased his test scores by a factor of two instead of the usual four or five. He had... he had all the skills before the King turned him.”

Janon nodded. “That is love for you.” He said softly. “Tareif’s youngest daughter must be something else.”

“No children. Married to Zaala Randall, daughter to War Master Tareif and sister to Sparta’s Lieutenant Governor Tarifa. I wonder if she looks like Tarifa... that would explain a lot. Wow... she has two degrees, one in Astrophysics and the other in Quantum Engineering. She also has a Level Nine Clearance.” Miranda said reading from the pad.

“A civilian with Level Nine Clearance?” Janon asked. “That’s strange isn’t it?”

Miranda nodded her head. “We’ll have to ask Ben about that when we see him. There has to be a story behind that and it answers your question about her being something special.”

Janon nodded. “I guess so. Randall has two Flight Valor Awards one Cluster each, two Distinguished Valor decorations and one Distinguished Flight Commendation.” Miranda’s eyes grew a little wider as Janon spoke slowly. “He was reprimanded the first time when he told the Commander of the 23rd SCFFG to go fuck himself when he refused to launch an R&R mission to get one of his pilots who had been shot down over Modasi Three. He then proceeded to land his fighter on the surface, stripped out its weapons pods to dump the weight and then flew his ship back with his downed pilot crunched in behind his seat. The second reprimand was given to him when his wife punched out an Elf Minister from Elear for making advances towards her and then calling her husband an overbearing brute of a man.” Janon spoke his eye brows lifting a little. “The details of that incident are compartmentalized at Level Ten.”

“Level Ten? We have clearance.” Miranda asked motioning with her head. “Open it then.”

Janon shook his head. “Eyes only for Ben or Admiral Riall. We’ll definitely have to ask Ben about that if we go with this guy. We don’t need any baggage to come with him.”

Miranda scrolled down the pad and found the information she wanted. She ran her finger across the pad slowly and gently. “He’s the one Janon.” She said softly looking at him and holding out the pad. “He brought them all home. Every single one of the pilots in his squadron that started the war with him, he brought them all home Janon. Over a thousand sorties and not one death in his squadron. After he became CAG they didn’t lose one ship throughout the remainder of the war, and they took part in four of the last five major battles. We have our CAG Janon. Now all we have to do is convince Earth Command he belongs with us.”

THE WILDS NEBONESE

Las’elh stood to the side quietly, holding Gravork by his arm as she watched Anton and Cihera greet the male and female Drow elves just inside the entrance to the rear of the trading post. The last three days and nights traveling with them had exposed Las’elh to things she had never seen before. Working as a member of the EI she had never been exposed to the Krypteria in any way. It was said that you could be working next to one of them and not even know it. They were masters of disguise and being able to take on new identities and all of them could speak many different languages fluently. Quite a few of the operatives for EI had heard through different sources of operations conducted by the Krypteria. They were restricted from working within Union territory by their founding charter, but it was very well known they had a hand in breaking open the extensive High Coven Intelligence network over two decades ago and working hand in hand with the newly formed Durcunusaan to rid themselves of High Coven agents. They were overseen by a small committee of Lycavorian, Elf, Algolian and Hadarian senior ministers, unknown to all save the King and his inner circle, but to Las’elh’s knowledge these Ministers had never once refused a petition by Armetus.

The Lycavorian Spartan Armetus was legendary even among Elven Intelligence for his skills and tenacity and his ability to wade through the political muck as field agents called it. He never abandoned his people for any purpose, and during the Evolli war had even gone on several missions himself, one of them to retrieve the bodies of two agents that had been killed transmitting secret Evolli documents to Union Headquarters. It was rumored that he had also slaughtered nearly an entire platoon of Evolli troops in retribution for their actions. Las'elh knew that he had a fondness for Drow elves, and it was by his actions that they now had the reputation they did.

Las'elh knew that many Drow elves called The Wilds home, with several reasonably large settlements spread on different worlds, all of them some of the roughest parts of The Wilds. Rumors had been started that the Drow were not happy with the more peaceful nature that their Queen Aihola had pushed on them, and had struck out on their own. The Drow were a dominant in all that they did, even with those they chose to mate with. Female Drow were higher in the pecking order than males, and it was not uncommon to see Drow females in The Wilds with female slaves doing their bidding. Mostly other female elves and humans, as it was not uncommon even in within the Union to see female Drow with female lovers, all of them very beautiful. The majority of them were elven or human but since being discovered some Drow had taken other compatible females as lovers as well. That was not to say that Drow females dismissed their male counterparts. They did not... and seeing the male and female in front of her told Las'elh that. It was a point of contention with the elves on Elear about why their King had allowed them to establish themselves like this, but as Las'elh had discovered from Anton and Cihera as they transited to Nebonese, the Drow who called The Wilds home were all members of the Krypteria and fanatically loyal to King Leonidas and their Queen Aihola. This was obvious to Las'elh as she watched the male and female Drow greet Anton and Cihera with animated faces and warm hugs.

Las'elh also knew that Drow females were considered by many to be exotically alluring even to other women. Two nights she had witnessed Anton and Cihera making love on their bed while she faked being asleep. Anton Simpson was larger than any man she had ever been with, his cock long and thick while his body was sculpted muscle, no doubt the result of his father's Spartan blood. Cihera was equally beautiful in Las'elh's eyes, her dark skin and very long legs supple and firm on her near five foot ten height. Her breasts were not as large as Las'elh's, but they were firm and pouty and obviously very sensitive if the noises she made while her husband suckled on them was any indication. Las'elh had watched them for hours it seemed, pleasuring each other in ways she had never imagined or attempted in most respects, and just last night she had brought herself to a silent but powerful explosion of her own, imagining herself sandwiched between their dark bodies and having them do all those things to her. It had embarrassed her this morning, for she didn't doubt that Anton Simpson could detect the scent of her lingering arousal, yet nothing was said or even hinted at to her about it. Though Cihera had gazed at her with those amber colored eyes almost hungrily it seemed.

The voices brought her out of her thoughts.

"...no trouble with the port authorities?" The female Drow asked.

Anton shook his head. "We hid Gravork in our equipment compartment." He answered. "We passed off Las'elh as Cihera's property."

"I did not agree to that!" Las'elh spoke quickly her elven modesty and independence coming to the forefront.

She saw four pairs of eyes turn to look at her. "Better that she did Commander Las'elh." The male Drow replied.

Las'elh's blue eyes grew a little wider. "You... you know who I am?" She gasped.

The male Drow elf spoke now as he moved closer to her. "Who do you think it was that cleaned up after you on Talbor Seven Commander? Once Anton and Cihera contacted us we sent our people on Talbor Seven to secure Gravork's suite before your EI recovery team could make an entrance. We took the young lady you knocked out into custody, removed any sign that you had been there, erased the traces of your stay from their computer banks, and basically made it so you never existed." He turned to Anton. "You are getting sloppy by the way. You know that head shots to Kochab's vent blood explosively."

Anton chuckled. "That wasn't me." He said motioning to his wife. "The fool got touchy feely with Cihera."

The Drow male laughed. "Oh..." He turned back to Las'elh. "A singularly bad thing to do with a mated Drow female." He stated to her with a grin. "As I was saying Commander... now that Cihera has established you as her property so to speak, her slave if you will, none of the vermin on this infested rock will approach you if they know what is good for them. We made it clear some time ago that to impose yourself between a dominant Drow female and her slave was not a very wise move. It is more a security precaution than anything else. And trust me... with your beauty, if she had not done this, there would have been trouble.”

“So... you all play... you play roles here?” Las’elh asked.

“It is part of our cover.” The female Drow answered the question. “Nalar and I have been husband and wife for almost twenty years, though there are times when I question what was going through my mind when I fell in love with him.” She finished with a grin.

The male Drow chuckled. “Yes... I’m quite sure you have thought other things as well.” He spoke.

“I am Malia by the way. We own this establishment here. All the elves and humans you meet here work for us and are also playing a role Commander. We know of your proclivity for doing things your way, so I ask that you curb that while you are here, for if you do anything that puts our operation or friends at risk we will kill you Commander. Without a second’s pause. And then you truly will disappear. Forever.”

Las’elh watched as Cihera stepped closer to her. “We have covered this with her already Malia. She understands. And our goals seem to be converging at one point which makes our survival beneficial to her as well.”

Malia’s amber eyes looked at Cihera and she nodded after only a second. “Then we will speak of it no more and I welcome you to Nebonese.” She stated confidently bowing her head slightly to Las’elh. “Queen For’mya has sent word to us in regards to what it is that Las’elh was working on and Nalar and I both agree your two missions seem to be, at least partially, very much intertwined. Minister L’tian has discovered that what Las’elh has been saying all along is true and has begun a very discrete investigation of his own.”

“Minister L’tian!” Las’elh hissed. “He is one of the senior Elven Ministers. I tried to make them see what was happening in the beginning. They dismissed me! What makes you think he will do anything?”

Malia and Nalar shook their heads. “Minster L’tian is Queen For’mya’s father. He is also one of the four Krypteria Committee members.” They saw Las’elh’s eyes grow a little wider. “He did not dismiss you Commander... he was never made aware of what you presented to the other senior Ministers. The moment For’mya and Dysea contacted him he began a discrete investigation of his own as I said and what he discovered was eye opening to say the least. We have the reports upstairs and you can review them later.” She turned to look at Gravork. “First however... we need to secure our guest in special quarters.”

“I have cooperated with you fully!” Gravork snapped.

“And I’m sure the fact that all of your purported business partners are scrambling to find you played no part in that decision.” Nalar spoke. “You appear to be a very popular man now Gravork. Rumor has it that even the Kavalians are looking for you.”

“The Kavalians?” Gravork gasped.

“Oh yes. Since your disappearance all of them are apparently afraid that the information you have in your head will find its way to their competitors perhaps? I imagine many of them would rather see you dead than have that happen.” Nalar spoke.

Malia looked at Anton and Cihera now. “And our Evolli friend, the one you came here to meet, he was very interested in speaking with us when we told him we have news of Gravork here.”

“So you’ve made initial contact?” Anton asked.

Malia nodded. “I told him we had heard through some of our brothers and sisters on other worlds that Gravork would be coming here to meet with him the day after tomorrow. We made it seem as if Gravork was coming to him for protection. He was very insistent that no harm would come to him if we were able to arrange it.”

Anton snorted. “No harm would come to him until after he got the information he wanted no doubt.” He said.

Cihera nodded. “Did you set up a preliminary meeting?”

“Tomorrow evening at seventeen hundred hours.” Malia answered with a nod of her head. “An abandoned mining facility three kilometers southwest of the settlement. I don’t trust that Evolli scum any further than I could throw him. I’ve had my people scouting the site since dawn this morning. So far it is clean.”

Anton nodded. “Good. It will give us time to go over what For’mya sent to us and inspect our equipment from Armetus.” He said.

“That arrived yesterday. It’s upstairs as well.” Nalar spoke. “Malia my love... I will insure our guest is settled in for the evening. Why don’t you take Anton, Cihera and our good Commander Las’elh upstairs and help them settle in.”

Malia nodded. “An excellent idea.” She said leaning over to kiss Nalar’s cheek. “Don’t amuse yourself too much husband. We still have much to do.”

Nalar nodded. “I will join you all shortly.” He stated.

Malia looked at Anton and Cihera who were smiling. “This way. We changed things a bit since you were last here. We’ve made it more peaceful.”

Las’elh hesitated for a moment unsure if she was welcome to go with them. Cihera’s hand gently taking her arm gave her the answer.

“You are welcome here Las’elh.” Cihera said softly. “You may lower your guard as much as you are able and try to relax. Things will become quite busy in the near future and Anton and I would much rather have you sharp and confident.”

Las’elh met her soft amber eyes with stunning blue orbs that Cihera found intoxicating to say the least. “You’re not going to leave me here then?” She asked.

Cihera smiled and shook her head. “No Las’elh... your diligence through all the adversity you have faced has earned you the right to be beside us every step of the way to the end. The more that is revealed to us, the more it becomes clear that our tasks are becoming more and more linked. I think you will find that with L’tian and Queen For’mya and Dysea now involved we will discover much more about what is going on.” Cihera smiled and curled her fingers around Las’elh’s arm. “Come... I will introduce you to real home cooked Drow food while we are here. Malia’s mother is one of the finest cooks in the universe and she positively loves showing off her culinary skills to any newcomers. Especially elves from Elear who have never experienced our food before. Come.”

Las’elh allowed the smile to split her face and she relaxed somewhat as Cihera led her after Malia and Anton.

DRAGON MOUNTAIN FORMER ISLAND OF SARDINIA

You are safe now. Open your eyes... there is nothing to fear here.

The voice was soft in his mind. Soothing and calm. It filled him with warmth, the tingles coursing through his muscular body right down to his tail. His eyes had lost much of their redness with nearly two full days of sleep and healing. They now resembled a dark orange color and were much softer than they had been in years. He felt different. No longer did anger surge through his being, no longer did hatred for what he did not know or understand ripple through his veins. He felt empty somehow, but it was an emptiness that his mind told him was not a bad thing.

Slowly Vollenth opened his eyes.

And was looking directly into the most beautiful cyan colored eyes he had ever seen. He blinked several times, focusing his vision and saw that the cyan colored eyes were attached to a stunning light green female dragon that rested on the ground in front of him. The dirt where he lay was spongy and layered with soft hay. He lifted his large head from the ground, his eyes blinking several more times as he took in his surroundings. The cave appeared large, easily able to accommodate several fully grown dragons. The walls were a grayish brown color and dry of moisture, but it was cool and very comfortable. Sunlight was peeking in from high above, casting several rays of light on the ground around him, adding to the four illumination globes that were set in each corner of the cave.

Where am I?

You are within our mountain. The female spoke gently, tilting her head to the side. This is Dragon Mountain. The King’s gift to our kind who call Earth home. This is your home now as well.

Vollenth lifted his head higher. Yuri! He exclaimed. She will...

The vampire witch who was controlling you is not someone you ever have to suffer again. The female spoke firmly and with conviction.

Controlling me? Vollenth asked. She... she was my bonded one.

The female shook her large head back and forth. No. The bond she created with you was forced upon you Vollenth. It was never meant to be. This Yuri... she used her Mindvoice power to tap into your subconscious and control you. To alter your perceptions. It is one of her many skills... but for those powerful enough to detect it... Prince Andro and Elynth, the Elder Mother, it was child's play to sever that hold she had on you.

My perceptions? Vollenth asked as his mind cleared and he was sitting up fully, resting on his legs. My mind... it is...

Uncluttered? Focused and clear? The rage and hate that always was just beneath the surface? It is gone now isn't it?

Yes.

The light green scaled dragon nodded. Her control has been cut. She can no longer cloud your perceptions and force you to do things that you know are wrong. She no longer has any hold on you. She will never be able to breach the Mindvoice shields that guard our island and mountain, and she will never set foot inside this sacred place. Your mind and your ability to decide things for yourself are yours once more Vollenth. You are free.

I remember fighting. Vincix! Our instructor! I attacked him! He angered me and I attacked him! I remember the Lycavorian Prince and his dragon. She struck me! He struck me! Vollenth said. I have never felt such agony as when her tail struck me.

All true. She answered with a nod. Elynth is a hybrid. Half Firespitter like us... half Heavyhorn like her father. There are several among those who came with you, but they have not yet learned to use the different skills that their blood grants them. She is also the bonded sister to Prince Androcles. She bonded with the Prince while he still grew inside his mother's womb. They are second only to the King and her father Torma in power and ability. You... you would not have defeated them.

They spared me? Vollenth asked with surprise.

They knew the agony you were in fighting the control this vampire witch had of you. She answered. It is what made you so angry Vollenth... you were fighting what your instincts told you was wrong but were forced to do. And... and you were meant for someone else.

What do you mean? Who are you? Vollenth asked.

The loud scrapping sound drew both of their attentions towards the cave entrance and Vollenth turned to see three small hatchlings poke their heads around the edge of the cave wall. Two of them, females by their smell, had the same coloring of the female in front of him, while the third, a male had an almost golden yellow in color.

Mother? The child like female voice entered his thoughts.

You may come in now children. The female told them with small humor in her voice. He is awake.

Vollenth watched as the three hatchlings bound into the room flapping their wings madly as they crossed the floor to settle next to the female. She lowered her muzzle and rubbed the back of their necks and Vollenth saw their wings twitch in delight.

This is Isleia, Dela and Kenir. They are my youngest hatchlings... only four months old and nearly ready to take to the skies. The female told him.

We are waiting for our father and brother to return! The one she had called Isleia spoke excitedly. They were helping you.

Vollenth looked up at the female dragon in front of him. He could smell now that she was over two thousand years old, but she looked to be vibrant and healthy unlike any dragon he had seen before. Her scent was somehow familiar to him, but he could not place it.

I am Danica.

Helping me? Vollenth asked. What does she mean?

They remained at SODRAG to insure Yuri did not know of our deception. Danica spoke softly. They will be returning soon, in fact I feel they have already arrived.

What do you mean? How could she not know?

She does not know yet... but she will discover it soon enough. Since your bond with her was forced, it did not have the same level of emotional connection that normal Bonded Pairs have. She never knew that you fought Andro and Elynth. My mate Galen and our son Visio were able to insure she took no notice when she left SODRAG to return to Sparta with her witch mother.

How is that even possible?

Visio took your place for a time. Danica said.

Took my place? How could he take my place?

He looks like you silly. Isleia spoke giggling as she moved closer and gazed at his thick leg. You are funny.

You could not fool Yuri with a dragon that looked like me. Vollenth exclaimed. No two dragons are alike!

Danica nodded. You are correct. Unless those two dragons are twins. Fertilized with the same gene and broken into two eggs. As was the case with you and Visio. We thought... we thought you were dead. Lost to us forever.

Vollenth came to his feet, his orange eyes wide in shock. What... what are you saying? He gasped out.

Danica followed suit and came to her feet as well. I am Danica... and I am...

She is your mother boy! The deep throated male voice spoke now. Vollenth's head whipped around and he saw the huge shape of the mustard yellow scaled dragon enter the cave. His movements were confident and graceful, his orange eyes bright and clear, and he was gazing at Vollenth with intensity. Vollenth's eyes grew even wider when he saw the image of himself enter behind the male dragon. The same orange eyes and greenish yellow scales. The same muscular body and proportions, nearly as large as the older male who he smelled was at least four thousand years old.

Mo... mother? Vollenth gasped. My... my mother is dead! My... my family is dead! They were killed in the same crash that orphaned me!

NO! Danica exclaimed as she moved closer to him. That was one of the lies they told you my son! One of so many lies. We were in a ship only an hour behind you. We were all returning to Elear for a welcoming ceremony. Your ship was attacked and crashed. The High Coven stole you from us! We... we thought you were dead! We thought all of you were dead! We knew you lived the moment you entered the system just weeks ago. We could feel you within us and we rejoiced. We have been plotting to save you ever since you came here. To get you away from the witch who was torturing you! She moved closer to him. I am Danica... and I am your mother. You are not alone anymore Vollenth my son. We are here! All of us. You have met your younger siblings... and this is Visio... your twin dragon brother. He is the one who never allowed us to give up hope. He is the one who refused to believe you were dead. He and your father.

Vollenth watched wide eyed as the identical dragon came right up to him and stared into his eyes. It was amazing to actually look at an exact copy of himself, but Vollenth could feel the truth coursing through him at her words. He could feel his mind screaming out in happiness and joy at what all of his senses were telling him.

I have waited for this day my entire life brother. Visio spoke softly. And now that day has come and I can not begin to express what it means to me. I have felt the power of the witch Yuri and the hold she had over you. Without the aide of the Elder Mother and Prince Andro and Elynth I would not have been able to resist her. We succeeded however, and she has gone back to Sparta. We...

Enough Visio. The stern voice spoke as the yellow scaled beast moved closer. We will have plenty of time to tell your brother of the years that have passed.

Vollenth's eyes shifted to the male dragon, his scales shiny with health but marked with scars in some locations. His Mindvoice presence was strong and clear however and he projected authority and power. He also projected something that Vollenth had never felt before. He felt Danica moved closer to him, touching his neck scales with her snout almost shyly. This is... this is Galen my son. She spoke softly. This is your father.

As Vollenth gazed at the stern dragon he felt him moved closer, until his snout was within inches of his. Those orange colored eyes gazed at him intently and then the words burst into his head that could not have come from so dominating a male dragon. They were soft and compassionate and filled with sadness and even greater joy.

The... the Elder Mother has shown me the battle you waged within you as this vampire witch controlled you. I have fought many battles... I have fought beside the King and Torma... yet never have I seen such bravery as you displayed by fighting her within your heart and mind. Galen spoke gently.

She... she made me do things! Vollenth said softly. Things I... things I knew were wrong. I... I hurt others of my kind!

Galen nodded slowly. Yes... this is true. The Elder Council has already decreed that you will not be held accountable for your actions because of the witch Yuri and her control of you. You... you have been given back your life my son. How you go forward with that life is what will matter. Those are worries for another time however... now... now all your mother and I... all your family wants is to be with you.

Vollenth looked at him. I am dead aren't I? He asked. I fought the Prince and Elynth and they killed me as they said they would didn't they?

Danica brushed up against him firmly, using her snout to caress his wings and neck and causing them to tremble. Would you feel these things if you were dead my son? She asked softly.

Vollenth's head snapped around when he felt the three small hatchlings flap their wings madly and bound up onto his back. Isleia was closest to his head and she bounced upon his shoulders happily.

Our brother is home! Our brother is home! She announced loudly.

Vollenth turned when Visio moved around to stand beside him, their muscular bodies touching in affection. His head lifted to gaze at those orange eyes again.

Father? He spoke in barely a whisper.

Welcome home my lost son! Galen spoke his deep voice within Mindvoice heavy with emotion. Finally... welcome home where you belong.

OMEN ONE

ULU EIRANS TRYN

1.2 LIGHT YEARS FROM UIRMEIK

KAVALIAN SPACE

Tinnuar looked up from the sensor screen he was standing next to and let his eyes sweep across the bridge of his ship. With the exception of two tense three hour long periods when they detected Kavalian patrol craft moving across their course, the trip to their current location had been uneventful. His crew was among the finest within the small Omen Fleet, and he had complete faith in them. The YA9 Sensor Array was the most advanced sensor grid they had, most of the technology derived from the Mindvoice ship and at the moment it was detecting many things that Tinnuar had hoped they would not find.

“Status!” He echoed across the bridge.

“Sixteen hours until final Nav position sir.” The Helm officer reported from his seat.

“Sensors are operating within optimum ranges sir!”

Tinnuar turned slightly as his XO came up next to him. “Captain?” The man asked him softly.

Tinnuar shook his head. “I don't like it Perein.” He spoke.

“Sir?” The man asked.

Tinnuar looked at him. “How many troops have we detected on the ground Perein?”

“At last count... better than eight million.” He replied quickly. “We won't be able to get an accurate count from the other side of the planet until we arrive in our final position. That will be before the planet completes another rotation.”

Tinnuar nodded. “Eight million that we can see right now... and at least two complete Fleet Groups.” He said. “The Coven Intelligence is turning out to be accurate it seems.”

“I take it you and the King were hoping this was not the case.” Perein said.

Tinnuar looked at him. “The King has no more desire than I to face eight million ground troops and two fleet groups. And that is just what we can detect on the core side of the planet.” He answered. “The Coven intelligence stated nearly sixteen million ground troops with ships to match and carry them all. Have we detected any Troop Transports?”

“Not as of yet sir. They could be on the surface or hidden behind the planet itself. We won't know until we are in our final sensor position.” Perein answered.

Tinnuar nodded. “Another sixteen hours.” He said. “I just find myself being surprised that High Coven Intelligence picked this up and we did not as close to our border as it is.”

“Perhaps we just...”

“Captain...” The sensor operator spoke now, turning in her chair. “Captain... Captain I’m detecting an unknown power source.”

Tinnuar glanced at Perein before moving to the woman’s station. “Let’s have it.” He stated leaning over her shoulder.

“It’s... it’s weird sir. It’s very faint, but wavelength doesn’t match any known Kavalian power sources in our databanks. I only picked it up because I was doing a spectral analysis of the upper atmosphere of Uirmeik and it spiked on the Cohesive Fault Line at four point six.” The woman said.

“Four point six?” Tinnuar said somewhat surprised.

“Yes sir. Too high for a Kavalian ship or ground station.” She replied.

“Location?”

“That’s another thing Captain. It’s not coming from Uirmeik. It’s radiating from Ritaah. Three point three light years past Uirmeik. Southern pole area of the largest continent. I’m also detecting six other much smaller TriCobal power centers eighty kilometers from the unknown. I doubt anyone but us can pick them up. They are being masked in some way.” She answered adjusting her screen so that the dark green planet came into better focus now. It centered on the large continent and zoomed in to a hundred kilometers distance. She pointed to the sensor screen. “This is the unknown sir, in this mountain range here. These are the others, roughly five kilometers between each one. Low power emitters too. They are definitely being masked in some fashion.

“Ritaah?” Perein spoke softly. “I thought Ritaah was nothing more than a jungle planet with a whole lot of nasty creatures and bugs on it.”

“That’s what Intel says on it sir, but that is where the readings are emanating from.” She answered.

“Whatever this power source it is I can tell you it isn’t Kavalian. At least nothing that we have ever seen.”

“Perein move us eight degrees port, Z-plus forty thousand meters and keep the starboard YA9 array focused on Uirmeik.” Tinnuar said. “Put us between the two planets here.” He pointed at a position on the star chart. “Bring all passive sensors on line and focus them on Uirmeik.”

“We’ll be dodging a lot of Kavalian traffic to obtain that position sir.” Perein spoke.

Tinnuar nodded. “It will keep us sharp.”

Perein nodded and turned. “Helm... eight degrees port! Z-plus forty thousand meters. Increase speed to one quarter on the sublight drive and take us to six four nine three point seven!”

“Helm answers! Adjusting course!”

Tinnuar looked at his sensor operator. “Lieutenant... once we are in our position the port array is yours. You find out what that power source is.”

“Understood sir.” She replied.

Tinnuar stood back up and looked at his XO. “Perein... load three TOPA decoys in the torpedo tubes. If someone gets a hit on us for some off the wall reason launch two decoys on a heading of two seven three, and one more on a heading of sixty-two. We’ll scatter them in different directions and sneak out of here right between their Fleet Groups over the top of Uirmeik.”

Perein nodded. “Lots of nice imagery from that position.” He said with a smile.

Tinnuar met his smile. “Prep a Black Sun Shrouded COM probe too. Load it with what we have and program it to jump back to Union space and begin broadcasting. We’ll pick it up on the way back.”

Perein nodded. “Yes sir.”

“Perein... make sure everyone is on their toes.” Tinnuar spoke his voice turning serious. “Something about this stinks to the heavens.”

Perein nodded and moved to follow his Captain’s orders.

They were a body formed almost from the outset of the birth of the Lycavorian Union. A group of men and women who would put aside their personal loyalties to whatever their species were and make rulings of law between the hundreds of different species within the whole of the Union. Though they held no official governmental powers, their rulings on civilian law were binding and upheld on a regular basis without fail. They heard cases from Trade Agreement law disputes between official parties to simple land disagreements, as well as many contested issues between major corporations within the Union. They were respected by all, and many of them also had a deep respect for King Leonidas. When he first took power, given his attitude toward frivolousness, they wondered if he would simply disband the Galactic Court Body. Surprisingly he had honored them by acknowledging the importance of the many duties they performed and swearing that would never change. He had even gone so far as to have built a similar building like the one they used on Apo Prime. It was their realm and in the center of Sparta where all the major government buildings resided. Whenever the King came to Earth for the Royal Family exodus... six of the twelve sitting Magistrates remained on Apo Prime and six came to Earth with the Prime Minister to conduct their duties from Earth.

The elevated half oval table held six high backed chairs with an additional space between each sitting member. These open spaces were now filled by six holo images of the Magistrates on Apo Prime sitting in a similar chamber within their building on the capital planet. There was a Magistrate from each founding species of the Union, all four permanent members of the Court Body, while the other eight were elected for ten year terms from across the Union. Three of those eight were also from founding species of the Union, two elves and a Lycavorian. In front of the oval table on the main floor of the chamber sat two similar tables, though much smaller in size. Behind those tables was a gallery of men and women from dozens of different species, as well as every major Netnews organization in the Union. Today's setting was one for the history books, and no one wanted to miss this.

Sitting at one of the smaller oval tables were Jiss and Matuarr. Jalersi, Pian, Qurot and Timur sat behind them in comfortable chairs in front of the waist high divider between the table and gallery. Video drones were hovering all around the chamber covering every aspect and angle of the hearing. Deia sat at the opposite table with For'mya and two senior aides behind them. The video drones were whirring silently as Jiss was finishing his presentation even as the sun was beginning to dip below the horizon.

"...you can see your honors we have followed to the letter of your very own laws the proper course of action. Our petition, all six parts of it, have been recorded and filed in proper format and in accordance with your rules and guidelines." Jiss was speaking confidently, his fur meticulously groomed and his clothes pressed and smooth. He moved and spoke like a man who was confident in his position. "We ask for an immediate ruling on Part One of our petition which relates directly to Section Thirteen, Paragraph Four of the Lycavorian Union Constitution concerning non-interference with the Laws of Union members and said Laws of Compliance for non Union members." He held up the data pad and read from it directly. "Section Thirteen, Paragraph Four of the Union Constitution states no interference shall be endorsed or acted upon concerning the recognized and the written laws of character and faith among non Lycavorian Union members." He looked up once more. "We have produced sufficient evidence in regards to the birth and status of the female known as Lisisa Leonidas. This information is indisputable and is reinforced by your own medical findings. Her bloodline marks her as the daughter of Marshall Pleistarchus and not of King Martin Leonidas. It also marks her as a direct descendant of King Resumar through Marshall Pleistarchus and goes towards her position within the Rule of Ascension Law of the Lycavorian Union." Jiss let his eyes wander over the faces of the Magistrates before him before continuing.

"We also ask for an immediate and final ruling on Parts Two, Three and Four of our petition concerning the search and seizure of three different locations and any property known to be owned or considered living accommodations of the aforementioned female known as Lisisa Leonidas to include the dragon she rides. We request that she surrender herself to our newly established embassy so that she can return to be among her people and consummate the union promised to Kavalian Commander Timur by her father Marshall Pleistarchus. All in accordance with Kavalian custom. Parts Five and Six of our petition relates directly to the Kavalian citizenship of the aforementioned female and the laws of the Kavalian Federation in regards to this, as well as the consequences should these laws not be followed. I believe your honors that we have stated our case unequivocally and that following your own Standards of Protocol that the Union states to hold so dear, you will rule in our favor on all parts of our petition. Thank you."

Jiss bowed his head slowly and then turned to walk to the empty chair next to Matuarr. He wore a smug expression on his face that was easily discernable even through all the hair that covered his features as he settled back into his chair.

All of the Magistrates wore dark green robes over their normal clothes, while the Chief Magistrate wore a crimson sash over his shoulders as well. The Elven Chief Magistrate fingered the data pad in his hand and turned his head to where Deia and For'mya sat. "Prime Minister Deia... this Galactic Court Body recognizes and welcomes you and Queen For'mya Leonidas before us once more. It is an honor to have your company among us."

"Thank you Chief Magistrate Sel'ke." Deia answered.

"I may assume then you will act on behalf of King Leonidas and the Lycavorian Union in this regard?" He spoke.

Deia nodded as she stood up. "I will be acting on behalf of the Union and Queen For'mya will act on behalf of King Leonidas. I know Queen Dysea usually acts with me when we appear before this body; however her duties as Queen and mother have pulled her away for the moment to be with her daughter Princess Normya. As I'm sure you all have heard just recently, Princess Normya escaped a serious collision during a training mission and was injured slightly. Since our goals are the same... Queen For'mya and I will speak with one voice throughout these full proceedings."

Sel'ke nodded. "We were made aware of this incident only this morning Prime Minister. Our blessings and prayers go out to Princess Normya, and we extend our wishes for a safe return here to Sparta."

Deia nodded. "We did not feel the need to make a public announcement until we had the majority of the facts. They will be released later today by order of King Leonidas."

Sel'ke nodded again. "Very well. This body recognizes you and Queen For'mya. Do you have a statement you wish to open with?"

Deia stepped forward slightly. "Actually Chief Magistrate we have only two corrections to Legislature Jiss's fine opening statement that we would like entered into the record." Deia spoke. "We will then present our evidence to you which you may release to Public Record as you see fit. This matter, as far as we are concerned, is quite indisputable as Legislature Jiss has said."

"Continue." Sel'ke spoke.

Deia got to her feet. "The first correction we would like to make to the record is that of whom Legislature Jiss refers to as Marshall Pleistarchus. We feel this needs to be clarified before we continue."

"I fail to see what clarification there is to make." Jiss spoke. "We have..."

"Legislature Jiss... you have had your opening statement." The Hadarian Magistrate spoke now, her green eyes flashing. "Please refrain from interrupting again."

Deia smiled. "Thank you Magistrate Galia. As I was saying... the individual to which Legislature Jiss refers to is in fact now called Marshall Pusintin of the KFI military. He is a Lycavorian by birth, formerly known as Pleistarchus, the first born son of King Leonidas the First yes, but a man that freely chose to leave behind his people and start a new life with the Kavalian people. He has no claim to anything whatsoever concerning the Rule of Ascension Law of the Lycavorian Union. The Ascension Law is very clear in this regard. Pleistarchus willingly gave up his seat as King when he decided to leave Earth with the Kavalian people and become Marshall Pusintin a Kavalian citizen." Deia moved around to the front of the table she sat at and walked directly up to stand in front of Sel'ke, handing him the data pad. "The second correction we would like to add relates directly to Lisisa Leonidas's status as a Kavalian citizen in relation to the Union. Now... we do not dispute the bloodline of Lisisa Leonidas in any way. We do however point to the fact that twenty-six years ago Marshall Pusintin stood not three kilometers from this very spot and essentially gave up whatever right he wishes to claim now in regards to Lisisa's status as his daughter. I think the many security footages of what was said between King Leonidas and Marshall Pusintin will attest to that fact irrevocably. I will present three different ones now just as a reference." Deia moved forward and set another data pad in front of Sel'ke. "Three weeks after that meeting and confrontation, King Leonidas officially adopted Lisisa Leonidas in accordance with Lycavorian Law and all of these records are now being made public for review by anyone who wishes. Since Lisisa was already considered his daughter by so many, the truth behind the Lycavorian half of her bloodline was not released so that she could continue to build on the life she so embraced when King Leonidas rescued her. So in reality... Lisisa Leonidas is a citizen of the Lycavorian Union as well as the Kavalian Federation and she has held this distinction for twenty-six years.”

Jiss stood up. “Respectfully your honors, we were not made aware of this.” He spoke quickly.

“Perhaps it was something you should have checked before moving down this road then.” For’mya spoke sternly from her chair. “We have made copies of the official documents for your review.” She turned back to one of the aides and handed him a data pad which he then walked over to where Jiss stood and handed it to him.

“Your honors... we protest!” Matuarr came to his feet. “This is information that was not readily available to us when accessing Union records!”

“Legislature Matuarr... you will find that personal information on the Royal Family is not readily available to just anyone who asks for it.” Sel’ke spoke calmly. “This type of guarded information must be requested through not only the Royal Ministry, but also through the office of General/Colonel Vengal of Durcunusaan Command. Had you done further investigation you would have realized this.” He turned back to Deia. “Is there anything else you would like to add Prime Minister?”

“The Royal Family will also be releasing a statement later today announcing the mating and marriage of Lisisa to Prince Denali Leonidas.” Deia spoke calmly. This announcement caused a mild uproar among the many Netnews people present as they all pressed forward.

“Prime Minister... I hope this was not done as a means to counter this Petition by the Kavalian delegation.” Sel’ke asked sternly.

“It most certainly was!” Jiss demanded coming to his feet.

Deia smiled and shook her head never taking her eyes from Sel’ke’s gaze. “No Chief Magistrate... I believe you will find that the relationship between Prince Denali and Princess Lisisa had been going on in secret for the better part of the last three years. It was kept secret because Prince Denali and Princess Lisisa were regarded as brother and sister and they did not know how their love for each other would be received. Just before the State Dinner recently they confided in their grandmother Lady Gorgo of their relationship, who in turn took this information to Governor Panos. Since unions of this nature were not uncommon in ancient Sparta, no law is present that forbids this. The First Oracle also insured that no Union law outside the realm of Spartan law addressed this and she found nothing to deny Denali and Lisisa what they both so wanted. With the blessing of the King and Queens, they consummated their union four days ago. I believe these facts will null and void Part Three of Legislature Jiss’s Petition.”

Sel’ke nodded. “It would seem so. We will review the timetable of these events however, to insure accuracy and adherence to established laws.” He said.

“Of course Chief Magistrate.” Deia spoke.

“Is there anything else?” Sel’ke asked.

Deia shook her head. “Not at this time.” She stated. “We believe Union law is very clear in this case.”

Sel’ke nodded. “Very well... we will recess until thirteen hundred hours tomorrow local time to review this case. I will say this however, Legislature Jiss and Legislature Matuarr... our ruling on Part Four of your Petition we can give you right now. Dragons are considered sentient life forms within the United Lycavorian Union. The Elder Mother Arzoal sits on the Senate body in case you were unaware of this. They are honored members of the Lycavorian Union, just as every race and species within the Union is, and many of them are considered part of more families than I can begin to mention or imagine. You request in your Part Four that the dragon known as Jeth be turned over to your control as part of Lisisa Leonidas’s property.” Sel’ke looked at Jiss and Matuarr. “I find this request personally insulting to even address. The many actions and deeds of Jeth, the son of Torma and Isheeni are well documented in Union history, separately and together with his bonded sister Lisisa Leonidas. Sentient lifeforms are not property Legislature Jiss... and I can give you our answer to that demand right now as I said. The answer is a vigorous denouncing of such a demand in the first place. We will not even dignify such an application by addressing it in any way.”

Jiss bowed his head slowly. “Then we will wait for your ruling on the remaining portions of our Petition.” He stated.

Sel’ke lifted the gavel and banged it on the table. “We will adjourn until thirteen hundred hours tomorrow.”

Everyone in the room came to their feet as the judges present stood and began filing out of the room. The members of the Netnews organizations began to swarm forward around the Kavalian delegation even as members of the Durcunusaan crowded around Deia and For'mya to prevent this. For'mya got to her feet and looked at Deia.

"That went well." She said softly.

"Too well." Deia answered. "We need to speak with Martin. They can only rule one way as our laws state clearly, but we will need to make concessions of some sort I'm sure For'mya. If nothing else... to keep them off balance and unaware of what is really happening."

"Why?" For'mya asked. "This action only confirms their true purpose for being here in Union space."

"Yes... I agree." Deia spoke. "However... that is not something we can expose or even suggest openly."

"Martin will not budge in regards to Lisisa's status Deia." For'mya said. "You know this. Especially now that she and Denali have claimed each other and are mated. You know how Martin regards marriages and mates. They are sacred to him and to many others of pure Spartan blood."

Deia nodded. "Which I am sure the Kavalians will use as a means to turn opinion in their favor. Or at least attempt too. That's why the concessions need to be in other areas if they are needed."

"What did you have in mind?" For'mya asked.

"I don't think Martin will have a problem with it. But we should meet just to make sure." She said.

EDEN CITY GRAND CENTER

Karun stared up at the towering horseshoe shaped building at the center of Eden City from the surrounding plaza all around it. The sun was beginning its rise into the sky from behind the eastern mountains and casting almost majestic shadows from the many buildings. The large circular base of the building and the many lights dotting this circular base told him that the city and its people were early risers. It was the governmental head of Earth as a planet and naturally those who governed Earth would be on the job before others. He was surprised however at how many people he did see already crowding the streets and promenades that filled the area. Flying in on the planetary transport Karun had seen many parks like settings spread out among the many square miles of Eden City. Sandwiched between two mountain ranges, Eden City had expanded south and north primarily, though thousands had built homes within the mountain ranges on both sides. The reservoir was still present, the area around it turned into the largest park in the city's domain. New Technologies had allowed a man made river to be cut through the center of Eden City and connected to hundreds of underground tributaries flowing from the north. The Grand Center had been built spanning this river and Karun had to admit to himself, the architecture was far more impressive than anything he had seen within Kavalian space.

He could see the Lifter traffic darting back and forth among the designated lanes, most of them along the outskirts of the city as in Sparta. There were very few buildings over fifty stories high within Eden City, and Lifter traffic between them was limited. The dawn sky revealed many small transports however, bringing men and women to work in Eden City, as well as at least a dozen dragons he could see just from his spot alone near the Grand Center Square. He had walked the streets of Sparta near the new embassy for hours and found things similar to what his father had described to him, but also very different in some respects. He knew what his mission here was and after meeting her that first time, Karun found himself questioning those orders. His mother was distracted for some reason as well, torn between the fact that his father had not told her about Lisisa, and perhaps now questioning his truth to her in regards to many things. Karun had been surprised when his father had first told him before coming on this mission, stunned that his father had a child that was half vampire. That this child was a result of his father raping the vampire witch Yuri did not bother him as much as the fact that while she was half vampire, Karun still felt drawn to her in some way.

Karun turned back to look at the two Durcunusaan soldiers that had accompanied him to Eden City, one of them the half elf female Ardis. He had not seen her since their first day here on Earth but her scent he remembered instantly when she entered the transport a few hours ago. This in and of itself had surprised him for while he had an excellent sense of smell because of his Lycavorian blood, he had never had much luck in sorting and keeping different scents separate from each other. It was not something that his father had ever showed him how to do and it was a skill he lacked. His keen wolf nose twitched slightly once more when he detected her peach and wild timber scent filter to him on the slight breeze. She sensed him looking at her and her incredible eyes turned to gaze at him across the three meters distance between them. He watched her turn her head to the second Durcunusaan soldier and he nodded his head towards her. Karun knew then she must have been speaking to him in Mindvoice and he watched as she covered the distance to him in several even strides, nearly as tall as his own six foot one.

He gazed at her when she stopped close to him. "You are nervous Karun." She stated evenly.

"I am not nervous!" He answered a touch too forcefully.

Ardis smiled at his reaction and tilted her head slightly. "Admitting something you feel is not a crime Karun." She said softly. "It is a sign of strength."

"It is a weakness." He said.

"Why is it a weakness?" Ardis asked as she shifted her P190 into a more comfortable position on her shoulder.

"Kavalian males must not show weakness." He stated. "It makes the Pride weaker."

"But you are not entirely Kavalian." Ardis spoke. "You are also half Lycavorian, and I have found that Spartan men are quickly shedding their veil of strength now that my Uncle Martin is King. He is not ashamed to show emotion with his Queens and children in public. It makes us stronger." She moved closer to him still, sniffing the air gently. "It is overwhelming isn't it?"

Karun looked at her. "What do you mean?"

"I have watched you since getting off the transport. You do not know how to categorize scents you don't know." Ardis said. "When you smell everything assaulting you now, like in Sparta, you can't keep it all separate. The wolf in you is edgy and nervous because you can not distinguish the myriad of scents assailing you. Your... your father never taught you this skill?"

Karun shook his head minutely as he cast his eyes downward. "No."

"Would you like for me to explain how you do this?" Ardis asked him. "It is not such an overwhelming task as you might think."

Karun looked at her. "You can do this?" He asked surprised.

"Whether full blooded or only part Lycavorian, it is a skill that is passed on to every child who is wolf." Ardis said. "My father taught all of us this by the time we were four. It was harder for my mothers to learn since one was turned and the other is only part Lycavorian, but it is relatively easy to teach to children as they are growing."

"Why do you call her your mother when she is a vampire?" Karun asked.

"She is only part vampire." Ardis told him. "She is also a Drow elf and since my father came into her life and bit her, she is also part Lycavorian, albeit on a much smaller scale. She was experimented on as a child by the High Coven. They thought to make better warriors this way, and in a way the failed experiences with my mother Aihola and others enabled them to create the clones they now do. What was done to her did not change the person she was inside. When she and my birth mother Tarifa came together, they followed what was in their hearts. They came together at a time in both their lives when they needed each other. Just as they did when my father came into their lives. Destiny and fate brought them together. She is just as much my mother as my own birth mother. Just as my siblings from her and my father call my birthmother their mother."

"Kavalians believe we make our own destiny." Karun spoke. "We do not believe things are preordained as you do."

Ardis moved closer still, only a few steps from him and she could smell his unique scent then. It was pungent and pure; a mix of walnut and hazel, and it sent little tremors through her body.

"There are many who do not believe as we do." Ardis said. "Elves and Lycavorians have powerful faith in destiny and fate. It is one of the reasons that our two species are so compatible in relationships. That does not make what others believe wrong. Hadarians believe strongly in faith and what my Aunt Anja brings to them, and to a lesser extent in many of the same things we believe in. The Folcani and Amarians are two species that do not believe in a higher being or purpose, yet they are honored members of the Union, respected and holding great knowledge."

Karun shook his head. "It is all very confusing." He stated. "So many different species and having to accommodate all of them. Their beliefs. Their culture."

"Yet you are here now." Ardis said.

"What do you mean?"

"You are here to meet Lisisa, your father's daughter by Yuri, Princess of the High Coven. A half vampire. Even though your people war with them." Ardis said. "In Kavalian culture, would your father's children by another Kavalian female be considered by you to be a brother or sister?"

"My father would never do that!" Karun snapped. "He... he would never take another female into his bed over my mother! He lov..."

Ardis smiled as he stopped his words. "He loves her?" She said.

"I was not going to say that!" Karun spoke.

Ardis's eyes glittered in the rising sun. "I believe you Karun. However, if he was to do this, would you consider a child from that union a brother or sister?"

"They would be of his blood." Karun said. "I would not question that."

Ardis nodded. "It is really no different for me... or others within the Union in similar circumstances. It just happens that my father has taken both my mothers as his mates and we are always together. They speak with one voice in more ways than one since they were so deeply bound together even before he came into their lives."

"My people... my people do not allow relationships such as you have here." Karun said. "Two females would never... they would never be allowed to be together. We are taught it is wrong."

Ardis shrugged. "Wrong by whose standards?" Ardis asked. "Have you ever shared a bed with two females who love each other as much as they love you? Who take great pleasure from each other as well as you?"

"Certainly not!" Karun barked.

"Nor have those among your people who make the laws I imagine." Ardis said. "They outlaw it because they don't understand it... or they fear it. Take your pick."

"Have you ever done this?" Karun snapped.

Ardis smiled and shook her head. "No... but only because the opportunity has never presented itself to me. I would not dismiss such a relationship out of hand. One day I will have a mate and with the gods blessing I will have many children, but if along that road another woman comes into my life and we are compatible and wish the same things and we fall in love, I will not dismiss that either."

"I... I could not do that." Karun said.

Ardis nodded. "It does take a special kind of man to be able to accept that. It is why it is not common within the Union. The man has to be confident in himself almost to the point of arrogance to be able to accept that his mates derived as much pleasure from each other as they do him. You will find that the majority of these relationships in the Union involve exceptionally strong Alpha males. My father, my uncle Martin, my adoptive uncle Daniel Simpson. They seem to be among the few who can accept this for the most part." Ardis shook her head. "But we veer from our original topic don't we? Are you meeting Lisisa because it is what your father has ordered you do, or are you meeting her because despite everything you have been told and ordered to do, you find yourself interested in her because she is your sister?"

Karun looked at her. "Does it matter?"

"It will to Lisi." Ardis answered seeing his confused look at her name. "It is the nickname given to her by Andro when he was too small to speak her full name. It kind of stuck for all of us as we grew." She explained gently. "She will detect what your purpose is within the first few minutes Karun. She may be half vampire, but she is also one of the most powerful Mindvoicers within the Union now. Your meeting today will either be very short, or you just might discover you have quite a bit in common with her."

"She is half vampire!" Karun declared.

Ardis nodded. "And both of you are half Lycavorian. That is your common ground. Whether you choose to build on that or dismiss it as the others of your delegation have is up to you."

"She is a Kavalian citizen." Karun said firmly. "Our... our laws are very specific when concerning our females."

"Yes... so I have gathered." Ardis said. "That is a shame really."

“Why?” Karun asked her quickly. “It is how our people live. Why would you think this to be shameful?”

“You misunderstand the context of the word.” Ardis stated. “I said the way you treat your females is a shame, not shameful. There is a difference. For instance... someone like me... who finds you incredibly attractive...” Karun’s eyes grew wide at this. “...in your society I could not approach you as my mate and whisper to you that I want you to make me scream your name in passion. I would not be able to show others what I felt for you in public and you would not be allowed to do the same.”

“Kavalians mate to reproduce.” Karun said.

Ardis nodded. “Yes I know. There is no love or exploration or passion.” She said. “No desire or want. At least that is shown publicly. That is the...”

The large shadows passed over them and Ardis smiled as she looked up and saw the two dragons swoop low over the Grand Center promenade. Karun followed her gaze and watched as first Jeth and then Aradace settled to the ground lightly ten meters away. Karun clenched his teeth, refusing to show any anger at the two monsters that moved closer to where he stood before settling to the granite surface of the promenade. He watched as Lisisa tossed her leg over the saddle and dropped easily to the ground, Denali Leonidas matching her movements. Lisisa moved up to Denali immediately and smiled as his arms and aura enveloped her and pulled her close.

The party yesterday celebrating Malic becoming a member of Mjolnir’s Hand had lasted well into the early evening, until Denali had pulled her away so that he could curl her toes in their bed before they slept and came here this morning. Lisisa looked up into his dark eyes and felt her heart sing as it always did when she knew she belonged to this man in heart and mind.

“Do you want me to stay with you Lisi?” Denali asked softly.

Lisisa shook her head. “You promised Jeth and Aradace you would take them to the school. They are looking forward to having the children around them today. I will meet you there. It’s why we came four hours earlier than I had told him Deni. We need to get back to SODRAG before mid-day so that we can start close quarters flying. Besides... I will know in the first few minutes why he is truly here.”

Denali nodded. “Call if you need us.” He said.

Lisisa pulled his head down and kissed him passionately. “I owe you for last night.” She whispered seductively.

Denali grinned. “I will hold you to that.” He said kissing her quickly and then releasing her and moving back to climb into the saddle on Aradace. She trumpeted quickly and launched them into the air.

Jeth stepped close to Lisisa, his massive head lowered next to her upper body. You are sure about this sister? He asked.

Lisisa nodded and reached up to stroke his snout. I will see you in a few hours. Now go have fun with the children.

Jeth butted her shoulder gently and then flared his wings, reaching into the sky to follow Denali and his sister. Lisisa turned back to see Karun and Ardis watching her. She took a deep breath and began walking towards them.

Karun watched as she strode confidently towards them. The ArmorPly she wore was different from the other morning, as now it had large crimson colored shoulder boards, and the crimson cape she wore was trimmed in gold. The K12 and Nehtes were in the same spots as they were before and Karun noticed for the first time the thin leather strip that cut across the palm of her hand. He knew what that was immediately, the bridle of a Shi Viska, a weapon only Lycavorian Spartans could wear and control. A weapon whose technology was beyond what his people could easily manipulate. Phased Spatial Dimension Shifting was something that none of their scientists was very knowledgeable in. Lisisa’s long black hair flowed around her face and cascaded over her shoulders.

Lisisa stopped in front of them and looked at Ardis. “Ardis.” She said happily and Karun watched as they embraced and shared soft kisses on the cheeks.

“You are looking well cousin.” Ardis said holding Lisisa’s hands.

“So are you.” Lisisa replied. “Thank you for escorting him here.”

Ardis turned and looked at Karun briefly before nodding and looking back to Lisisa. “It was a pleasure.” She said. “We will meet you by the school in four hours as agreed.”

Lisisa nodded and squeezed her hands before Ardis glanced at Karun once more and then turned. She motioned to the other Durcunusaan soldier and they began walking back towards where the small transport was resting. Lisisa watched her for a moment and then turned to look at Karun.

"I apologize for changing the time, but my duties require that I be somewhere else at mid-day." Lisisa spoke.

Karun shook his head slowly. "I... I'm not exactly busy." He said. "You sent... you sent your mate away?"

Lisisa smiled. "We arranged for him to visit a local school with Jeth and Aradace."

"Your dragon's names?" Karun asked.

Lisisa nodded. "Jeth and I bonded the day we found each other on Lycavore. Denali and Aradace a week after she was born. Deni was six at the time I believe. The children love getting rides and playing on their tails." Lisisa answered.

"And your... your guards will not remain?" Karun asked.

"They are not my guards." Lisisa spoke with a smile. "I asked that someone escort you here and remain with you until I arrived. They will join with us near the school to take you back to Sparta in four hours. Like my brother Androcles, I detest having the Durcunusaan follow me wherever I go."

"He is not your brother!" Karun hissed.

Lisisa canted her head. "Is this visit where you tell me what I am supposed to think and say according to what our father has directed you to tell me?" She spoke. "If it is I will call Jeth back right now and we can end this right here. I have known only one family in my life Karun, and how I regard them will not in any way change. Androcles is my brother just as much as Eliani and Carina and Normya are my sisters. As Resumar and Arran are my brothers. As all my siblings are, from all of my mothers. That is what I have known and come to cherish. Do not think because we share the same father I will change who I am." Lisisa said. "I came here with the intention of getting to know you because you are my brother by blood, and the man who I call father has a saying he has pounded into our heads for years."

Karun looked at her. "What is that?"

"Blood before all else." Lisisa replied. "I will not listen to you try and convince me the Kavalian way is how I should act and respond. If that is why you came here... again... we can end this right now."

"They will... they will try to force you." Karun said. "That is what they are doing even now."

Lisisa shrugged. "They will fail... but they are not my concern. My mother For'mya and Prime Minister Deia will deal with them." She said. "Why did you come here Karun? You can not force me to do something I don't want to do. You aren't skilled enough to beat me in a conflict if that is your intention."

Karun looked at her. "You think much of your skills." He stated.

Lisisa shook her head. "Not really. I'm just very confident in what I can do." She said. "I have both Lycavorian and vampire skills Karun. I can blur, I can use the shadows, I have wolf and vampire strength, speed and endurance and thanks to my father, I have become very good at using my nose and sense of smell. My sisters Carina and Zarah are equally as skilled, Zarah more so. If I found myself in a situation that was untenable I would simply need to speak one word within Mindvoice and every Durcunusaan soldier in this city, my mate Denali and Jeth would be here in under a minute."

"So we are being watched?" Karun asked.

Lisisa shrugged. "I may be able to dismiss my guards... that doesn't mean they don't find a way to keep an eye on me regardless of what I want. It drives all of us insane, but we have come to accept it." She said with a smile. "So please tell me... have I wasted a trip here... or do you wish to know about me? About what has occurred in my life to bring me to this day? You are not like those fools Qurot and Timur in Sparta, I can tell that much just from your scent."

Karun met her forest green eyes. "Do you wish to know of me? Of my life?"

Lisisa stepped closer to him. "Yes Karun... yes I do."

"Why?" He asked softly.

"You are my brother." Lisisa said softly. "And just as I have found a sister of my blood recently, now I have found you."

Karun nodded his head. "Then I wish to know you as well."

Lisisa smiled and surprising Karun she stepped even closer and took his arm in her grasp. “I know of a quaint little café nearby where we can sit down and talk then. It has my mother’s coffee and it’s quiet.” She said. “You do drink coffee don’t you?”

Karun nodded. “My mother tells me far too much.” He said.

Lisisa smiled. “Well there you go... that’s something we have in common to start and we have only been talking for five minutes!” She squeezed his arm. “Come.”

SODRAG

Her mother had been so wrong.

Narice’s body still hummed gently in delighted harmony as the memories of the previous night made her tremble exquisitely. Narice felt alive with new found strength and purpose. She could not remember how many times he had made her explode in delirious passion. Just feeling how she folded into his powerful arms with his cock buried deeply inside her caused incredible sensations to ripple through her supple frame. He had feasted on her body, his lips and tongue and fingers caressing every portion of her flesh, never stopping in their wondrous exploration. He never seemed to tire of her or Toria, his huge cock always ready to plunge into their depths and make them scream. Narice thought perhaps she would be jealous that Toria took from his attentions to her, yet watching him please Toria gave Narice fits of delight as well, this only serving to confirm to her that whatever else happened going forward the three of them were meant for each other. They never stopped touching each other in some fashion, and neither she nor Toria could get enough of his huge cock. It was the largest either of them had taken inside their bodies, yet the incredible thickness and heat of it within them caused their eyes to glaze over in passion and lust. And then, while gripped in the throes of passion she had never felt, Arrarn had bitten her. His unique dual wolf fangs had penetrated the skin of her shoulder, sending her tipping over into the abyss of carnal heaven. Toria had joined her seconds later and they writhed in fantastic bliss while he made them his. His bite would not affect them, as vampires were immune to the virus within Lycavorian blood, but both of them knew it was how many Lycavorian males expressed their final commitment to a female. A show that he would take no others. To Toria and Narice, it was the ultimate sign they were to be together.

Her cheek was pressed to the tanned washboard hard skin of his powerful abdomen now, her raven colored hair splashed wildly over the rest of his midsection. She had slept for the last five hours just as she was laying, waking only moments before. One of Arrarn’s long legs was cocked upwards, Narice lying between his legs, her large breasts covering his now flaccid cock. She could feel its warmth against her skin, and the memories of what it had made her feel when it was throbbing and alive inside her sent shivers through her. One of her arms was resting on Arrarn’s chest, her fingers entwined in thick strands of Toria’s lustrous red hair. The other arm was draped over Toria’s naked hip, her lightly tanned leg resting atop Narice’s lower back.

Toria’s face was tucked into Arrarn’s neck, her lips slightly parted as she breathed deeply. Narice lifted her head slowly not wanting to wake her two lovers as the sun began to shine in earnest through the window. Her dark eyes lifted slowly, gazing across the muscular definition of Arrarn’s body, and the incredibly lithe figure of Toria pressed against his side as she was. Her eyes continued to rise until she was looking up at his face and she nearly gasped when she saw Arrarn’s eyes already open and gazing at her. Gazing at her intensely with almost palpable emotions that Narice could feel just through his gaze. She opened her mouth to speak but saw his hand raise and put a finger to his lips.

[She is still sleeping.] Arrarn spoke within Mindvoice, throwing up shields around their private connection. [I think we wore her out.]

[How... how long have you been awake Arrarn?] She asked him within that Mindvoice connection, adding her own considerable power to the shielded connection between just the two of them.

[I never went to sleep.] He answered with a smile as his hand lowered so that his fingers were grazing her cheek. [Watching you and Toria sleep is much more fun. I told you I would make it up to you.]

Narice’s eyes closed at his touch, and she reveled in the sensations that his touch gave to her. [Arrarn...] She began.

[Are you going to tell me that no matter what has happened between us you are still a Princess of the High Coven and nothing can ever come of this?] Arrarn interrupted her.

Narice opened her eyes quickly and looked at him. [Do not say that! And that is not what I was going to say!] She snapped.

[Good! Cause I was going to tell you to just shoot me and get it over with if you did.] He answered with a grin.

[I was going to ask... I was going to ask if it would be like this always.] She spoke softly. [I have... I have never given of myself to a man as I have given to you. I have... I have had other lovers but none that I have... none that I have tasted their blood in the midst of passion.]

[And correct me if I'm wrong... but in your culture that is like taking a husband.] Arrarn said.

Narice nodded. [Yes... that is essentially what it means.]

[Are you regretting it now Narice?] He asked.

Narice shook her head quickly. [Phraktos Arrarn Leonidas... no! Not one bit of it. I want it to happen again and again. Just as it has with Toria! I want it to continue for all of us. I don't want it to stop! Ever!]

[Then what is the problem?] Arrarn asked.

[I think... I think I may be in love with you.] Narice said shyly. [I know I am in love with you. With both of you.]

[And that is a bad thing?] He asked with a grin his own heart singing out in happiness at her words.

There had been five women in his life, the first at fifteen years of age, the last only eight months ago. None of them had caused his wolf blood to burn as Narice and Toria did, Narice even more so than Toria. His wolf blood just called that extra bit for Narice in some way. His mothers had always said that when the person who would be beside you into the eternal future made an appearance in your life, you would know without question. Arrarn only had to look at Narice's sizzling eyes to know that she was one part of that for him. Her lush body was a divine wonderland, the most incredible female figure he had ever had the pleasure of exploring; the only one coming close was the second woman who rested now in his arms. He could have gone on for hours more last night, never tiring of their incredible scents and the taste of their flesh. They had fed on his blood two times each, and though he should have been tired because of it, it only made him feel more alive. He knew it would catch up to him today at some time, but he didn't care in the least.

[No... it is not a bad thing you fool!] Narice snapped. [Why do you insist on commenting on everything I say with ridiculous questions?]

Arrarn chuckled within Mindvoice. [Sorry.]

Narice dropped her forehead to his abdomen. [My mother and Yuri would be incensed and shocked if they saw me like this.] She stated looking back up to his eyes. [In this bed with you and Toria. If they knew what we have done.]

[I'm thinking my father wouldn't be too happy either.] He said. [Especially since Andro and Sadi have claimed Carisia too.]

Narice met his eyes. [I wondered if that had happened.] She said softly.

Arrarn nodded as his fingers gently caressed her shoulder, tracing over the now faint scar of where he had bitten her. He watched as she shifted her body and moved up, her large breasts dragging across his abdomen, her nipples burning into his skin. Toria groaned in his arm as Narice settled once more on his chest, her raven locks falling over one shoulder as she gazed at him. She reached up and placed her palm flat on his cheek and stared into his eyes.

"Tell me... tell me what we have begun here will never end Arrarn Leonidas." She spoke in a soft whisper. "Tell me that no matter what happens you will never take anyone but Toria and I into your bed. Tell me that no matter what happens... tell me that we will always be together."

"I can tell you that no one makes my blood burn as you do. As Toria does." Arrarn answered. "I can tell you that no one will ever share my bed but you and she. And I can tell you that no matter what happens, I will fight until there is no breathe left in my body to keep us from being separated."

Narice couldn't help the warmth that surged through her at his words and she lowered her lips to his kissing him as deeply as she had at any point thus far, feeling his arm curl around her back and draw her body closer as their tongues danced together.

"Ahem!" Toria's raspy voice spoke gently. Their kiss ended and they both turned their heads to look at her, though since her face still resided in the crook of his neck Arrarn could not turn his head very much. "I understand... I understand that the two of you with all your royal pureblood have a little more energy..." Narice watched as her lover's gorgeous blue eyes opened and she smacked her lips lifting her head to gaze at them. "There are those of us who actually enjoy sleeping however, and it is very annoying to be woken when..."

Narice covered Toria's lips with her own and kissed her deeply, cutting off her words and making her whimper in delight. The dryness in her mouth and the faint taste of Arrarn's blood was rapidly chased away by Narice's kiss and Toria pressed her body tighter to Arrarn's side. Her eyes were closed once more, her face frozen in an idyllic pose, when Narice drew her head back and looked at her with a brilliant smile. Arrarn didn't wait and fisted her thick red hair in his hand and pulled her head down to his and kissed Toria as well. Toria felt the shudders of delight course through her and she felt Narice's lips graze her shoulders as Arrarn kissed her wantonly. The fire in her belly reignited and Toria groaned reluctantly and pulled her lips away from his.

"Ok... ok..." She gasped. "I forgive you for waking me up!"

Arrarn and Narice laughed softly. "But we didn't wake you in the proper manner Toria." Narice said.

Toria's blue eyes looked at her, new passion and desire filling them. "We... we don't have much time before..."

Arrarn growled softly. "We'll make the time." He said.

"Now wait a minute..." Toria protested. "We have too..."

Her words of protest vanished as Narice's lips covered hers once more and Arrarn rolled all of them over on the bed.

"We are hungry for you!" He growled. "And we won't be denied."

KRANEK

"Sabotage!" Dysea gasped from where she sat back in the chair.

The previous day had been quite the eye opener for Dysea Leonidas. She had been given the whirlwind tour of the settlement on Kranek, Cha'talla and T'lolt intent on showing her that at least their tribe of Immortals had changed their ways. What Dysea saw could not have been faked or staged in the two and a half days it took for her to get here. She saw a main school where Immortal children and half elf half Immortal children were learning a variety of subjects, many of which were taught in Union schools. Dysea was a voracious reader and advocate of education and this pleased her greatly. She had even spent time sitting with the children and taking part in their reading classes. Lexi could only stand to the side and shake her head as she saw something she never thought she would see as long as she lived. Immortal children sitting in the lap of an elven Queen and proudly showing her what they had learned. Dysea had toured a medical clinic that would have been first rate even in the Union. She saw Immortals of all ages working in the many fields that surrounded the settlement, harvesting any number of plants and vegetables. The facilities were all as modern as they could get; some of the tools ancient but extremely well cared for.

She witnessed a pure Immortal father chasing his two half elf children around their small home, the small boys screaming out in joy while their blond haired elven mother looked on holding the small baby. It was no different than what Dysea had seen so many thousands of times on Earth and Elear and Apo Prime. She was introduced to several Amarian settlers from the nearby Amarian settlement several kilometers north of them. This was no guided tour, as they randomly walked along the many pathways and roads, Normya clinging to her mother's hand for the most part. She had seen much of it already on her lone forays during the last two days here. Dysea noticed that Normya appeared to hold no fear of the Immortals in any way, some of them even waving to her as she passed by. It was different seeing the fearsome Immortals as she had seen them on Earth, waving and smiling even laughing uproariously with each other. She was introduced to many of them, all of them greeting them with friendly shakes of her hand. She learned a little of their lives, what they had done while being here, and almost always the praise that was heaped upon Cha'talla and Esther for what they had succeeded in doing was rapidly chasing away the former Immortal Captain's past. Dysea knew just by looking that this was a united settlement, and while she had not seen everything by the time darkness fell, she and Iriral agreed that what Cha'talla had told them was in fact the truth.

Much quicker than she had suspected, evening was upon them and she sat down with Cha'talla's family. The food was not extravagant, but it was delicious as far as she was concerned, and Iriral earned a friend for life when Tir'ut had dropped an entire hind quarter from a Bancorik in front of her, seasoned with sweet smelling spices. At Esther's suggestion they refrained from speaking of what had brought them to this day until Dysea was well rested and they had time to actually sit and discuss everything. Dysea had woken this morning to the sounds of Normya's high pitched squealing and she rushed outside to see her daughter and Tir'ut chasing a dozen small children around the small fountain beneath her quarters. One of the smarter Immortal children had spoken that Normya was not scary enough and her squeals had come from Tir'ut lifting Normya onto his broad shoulders which when combined made them over nine feet tall. This caused the children to begin running around the courtyard with wide eyes as Tir'ut provided the roaring and Normya the arms that were reaching for the children. Dysea had lifted her eyes when she felt her bonded sister nudge her within Mindvoice and she spied Iriral on the ground beneath her apartment.

Sister? She had spoken then.

The past is changing into the future before us my bonded sister. Iriral had told her softly lifting her head to gaze at Dysea.

Dysea had watched for a few more minutes as Tir'ut and Normya chased the children around the courtyard until ushering them off to school. She had watched as Tir'ut had lowered Normya to the ground in front of him then, gazing into her face and speaking softly. Even from her elevated position Dysea knew right away that Tir'ut desired her daughter, and when she saw Normya make no move to pull away when he took her hands and kissed the knuckles softly, Dysea knew that there was something there for her as well. She watched as Tir'ut bowed his head to her and then Normya watched him move off before turning to move for the stairs that would bring her up to the apartment.

That had been two hours ago, and after a filling breakfast Cha'talla had led them here to this large building that apparently doubled as some sort of command center for the settlement. Dysea and Normya sat at one end of the table, Lexi to their right, while Cha'talla, Esther, Tir'ut and T'lolt filled the rest of the chairs. Fash'ka, Cha'talla's remaining pureblood Immortal son would join them shortly after retrieving some information from the G9 Runners. Cha'talla had even banged open a window that had not been used in a decade to allow Iriral to extend the majority of her head and neck into the room.

Esther nodded from her seat next to Cha'talla. "Normya's co-pilot found the device used to destroy their LSD Drive Coil just before it exploded."

Dysea looked at Normya. "Normya?"

Normya nodded. "Toral discovered the explosive device. It is the reason I was bringing the ship out of the Jump Corridor early. We found it too late, and by the time I acted we were already within the threshold of the Gate. The explosion sent us crashing into the Gate Ring and sheared off our Starboard engine nacelle and put us in a wild spin. It also destroyed the Gate, and that explosion sent us spiraling towards the border."

"Who would do this?" Dysea demanded. "Why?"

"The Chief Engineer at the Apo Prime Port Dry Dock." Normya said. "He was the one with access to our ship before we left Apo Prime. If it was someone else, his pre-release check should have discovered the device. One of the check points is the LSD Main Drive Coil. Since he did not find it, I can only assume he was the one who put it there, or at the very least gave access to whoever did."

"But why?" Dysea asked.

"I believe that I can answer that." Esther said waiting until Dysea turned to look at her. "His name is Gareld. He's a pureblood vampire, a former aide to Aikiro herself who deserted when it seemed the Kavalians would win the war in the beginning. He became a mercenary. We ran into him on Jagaliu several days before and he mentioned something about a big pay day coming for him. We didn't think anything of it until we detected the Gate Explosion on our way back here and moved to investigate. We picked up the TYPE II drifting, and then we detected Gareld's ship waiting in the exact spot where Normya's ship came across the border."

"He was waiting for her?" Dysea said.

"It appears so yes." Tir'ut spoke now Dysea turning to look at him. "Which means that someone within the Union gave him the flight plan that il kal'daka darthirii was going to be using. What Gates she would be transiting and possibly where she would come across the border. I would like to meet this person soon."

Dysea could detect the possessive tone of his voice and the real anger he used when speaking. She turned back to Normya. "This is all very..."

"Amille... someone did not notified Gate Command that the Gate was destroyed until just before the maintenance pulse. We were watching it from here when father allowed the information to be released three hours prior to the pulse.” Normya spoke. “If Gate Control detected the destruction of a Gate someone would have responded within hours. Nothing happened. Toral and I floated for almost nine hours as we tried to fix our ship. No one came. Which means no one knew the Gate was gone.” She met her mother’s eyes. “That could only mean one thing.”

Dysea nodded her head slowly. “Someone was hiding it.”

“Gareld knew who was piloting that ship. He knew who your daughter was Queen Dysea, for he pursued her relentlessly.” T’lolt spoke. “He would not have...”

Dysea held up her hand quickly. “After what you and the others have done... let us drop the formalities please. It is rather silly don’t you think?”

T’lolt smiled. “Very well Dysea.” He said.

“My brother is correct Dysea.” Cha’talla said now. “He would not have pursued her to the surface of Yocetu if he did not know who she was. Mercenaries do not put down on the surface of any planet once they see a ship break up in the atmosphere. It is not tactically sound for them to do so considering their numbers are limited and they do not know what they are walking into. Gareld knew who Normya was and that is why he pursued her. He also knows who Esther is, and he knows that we helped your daughter escape. He knows she is alive; Gareld only retreated from Yocetu because T’lolt arrived with our three G9s. His ship, a Bontawillian Low Gravity Frigate, it was no match for three G9s. Even now he is more than likely searching the surrounding systems for where we are.”

“Our settlement here is not well known.” Esther spoke. “We have maintained a very low profile over the years so as not to draw interest in ourselves and because the Empress still has death warrants for Cha’talla and I and anyone related to us.”

“That is why she tried to convince us you were not who you said you were?” Dysea asked.

Esther nodded. “Cha’talla and I did not leave the High Coven on the best of terms.” She said with a small smile as she looked at Cha’talla.

He shrugged his massive shoulders. “She had you raped and beaten and then she tried to kill us both even after I told her what she wanted to know.” He said. “If I could have survived I would have tried to strangle her myself.”

“Why does she want you dead?” Dysea asked.

Esther and Cha’talla chuckled softly. “Pick a reason.” She said extending her hand out and placing it in Cha’talla’s. “The main reason if I had to guess is because she does not want the Immortals that still serve the High Coven to know what we have built here. She does not want them to know that they could be so much more. She does not want them to know that Cha’talla has taken me as his wife and she most certainly does not want them to now know they can have children outside their own species.”

Dysea glanced quickly at Tir’ut. “Your children with Cha’talla?” Dysea said looking back at her.

Esther nodded. “Tir’ut and our other three sons, they are a new breed of Immortal if you will Dysea. All the strength and the more primal skills of an Immortal, and all the abilities of a pureblood vampire. The ability to blur; use the shadows, and at least here in our settlement, expand the boundaries of their minds to whatever their limits may be. Something they are not allowed to do within the Coven.”

“Now that she knows we are alive... I have no doubts she will do everything within her power to find out where we are.” Cha’talla spoke.

Esther nodded. “Yes she will; however, our more immediate concern is Gareld.” She said. “Unless Aikiro mounts a full scale assault against our settlement here, there is little she can do. Gareld is another issue altogether.”

“Why?” Normya asked leaning forward.

“Gareld was working for someone Il kal'daka darthirii.” Tir’ut spoke turning towards her. “Someone within the Union.”

“And he is not the type of man to give up easily.” Esther spoke. “He knows we are now involved and he will stop at nothing to discover where we have taken Normya. Gareld and I... we have a history. He is a vain man... and I... I insulted him many years ago.”

“Insulted him how?” Dysea asked.

Esther looked at Cha'talla with love in her eyes and then back to Dysea. "As he was raping me I told him he could never do to me with his little tool what Cha'talla's cock could do to me." She said with a grin. "He did not appreciate that comment very much."

"Esther!" Cha'talla exclaimed.

Dysea looked at Cha'talla and saw that even under his new bronze colored skin that he was blushing something fierce. "Oh my." Dysea spoke finally.

Tir'ut couldn't help but laugh at the look on his father's face. "Oh thank you mother." He stated. "I will become a hero to our warriors when I tell them what you just said and the look it invoked from father."

Cha'talla glanced at his son. "You will do no such thing!" He roared.

"It is a compliment brother!" T'lolt spoke.

Esther leaned over and kissed Cha'talla's cheek as he sat there with his arms crossed over his massive chest. She turned back to Dysea. "Anyway... I insulted him again on Jagaliu when we last met. And Tir'ut nearly killed him."

"You should have let me." Tir'ut barked out.

"He knows we helped Normya. And he will not stop until he finds her. He also knows when he finds her... he finds us. And the location of our settlement would bring a hefty price from Aikiro." Esther said evenly. "Whoever he is working for right now must be paying him a fortune."

Normya's eyes went from Esther to Tir'ut and back to Esther. "You... you did not tell me what kind of risk you were putting the settlement in by helping me." She said.

Cha'talla shook his head quickly. "Do not worry for this Normya. We would have come forward eventually." He stated confidently. "That we were able to do this now... to show you and your mother that we have changed... that is well worth the risk."

"I must contact Nauta Melme... we must tell your father." Dysea declared.

"No!" Tir'ut barked out causing everyone to look at him as he came to his feet and moved up behind Normya's chair.

"Tir'ut... the King must know." Esther said looking at her son.

Sister... he is right. Iriral broke in for the first time, not shielding her thoughts or words and causing Dysea to turn and look at her directly.

"Iriral... we have to tell Martin." Dysea said.

"With all respect darthirii ilhar, if we do that we run the risk of exposing Il kal'daka dardhirii to greater danger." Tir'ut spoke waiting until she turned back to him. "If we are to discover who is behind this, then it must remain unknown that this was more than an accident. We have seen the broadcasts of your Netnews, and they are saying it is nothing more than a misfortune. Right now... those who are behind this do not feel in jeopardy. If you tell the king he will initiate a full scale investigation and he will want blood. It will cause those involved to go underground and we will never determine who is behind this."

Tir'ut... you and your mother can hear me? Iriral asked.

All of us in this room can hear you Iriral. Esther replied. Cha'talla and T'lolt have Tier Five ability within Mindvoice. They can hear you as long as you don't shield.

Iriral nodded. Your son is right Esther. Martin will act Dysea... you know this. He is already on edge with the High Coven insurgent attack on the Kavalian delegation. Not to mention having both parties on Earth and in Sparta. With what the Kavalians are now attempting in regards to Lisisa... if another threat to his family is brought to his attention he will automatically go into a lock down mode.

Normya looked at her mother. He still believes it was an accident mother?

Dysea nodded. I spoke with him last night, but I did not know what I know now. He is still under the impression that the accident and the attack by mercenaries are unrelated. She looked at Tir'ut. You are asking me to lie to my mate and bounded love Tir'ut of the Immortals. This is not something I have ever done. It is not something any of us have ever done.

Would he lie to protect you? Tir'ut asked quickly. Would he lie to protect any of his mates and children?

Normya looked at her mother. Amille... Tir'ut is right. She said softly. We should take advantage of this and return to Apo Prime and discover who it was that is behind this. I know Andro and Arrarn will have already begun inquiries outside of the normal channels. They know far more people than father. Many of those now working in these fields went through their Agoges with my brothers. And if I know them, Andro and Arrarn will feel responsible for what happen and they will act outside of father's realm to discover the truth. And if they find out who is behind this, that person will disappear forever without us ever getting the chance to question them.

Dysea looked at her. Your brothers would not act in such a way! She stated.

Normya canted her head slightly. "Mother... do you remember the vampire officer who wanted to take Eliani and Nyla as his mates? He wanted to use his position as their husband to get close to father and act larger than he really was. To strut around and to show what a big man he was. When Eliani and Nyla told him to nubous off, he got angry and struck Eliani. He tried to rape her mother, in Nyla's parent's home." She spoke openly now. "Nyla's father and brother returned just in time to keep him from raping Eliani and killing Nyla. They contacted Andro immediately."

Dysea's eyes grew wide. "What? We... we never knew this!" She exclaimed.

Normya nodded her head. "Because we never told anyone." She replied. "Arrarn, Zarah and I flew the DT; Andro, Denali and Resumar then threw him out the back of the DT into the atmosphere of Rellaon Two. Lisisa, Carina and Nyla's two brothers emptied his apartment on Apo Prime making it appear as if he left in haste and Nyla altered the records to show that he had deserted his post. All of it was conducted in two days time. That was four years ago mother, right before the end of the Evolli War."

Dysea looked at Cha'talla and the others with a mortified expression at this admission by her daughter of the cold blooded murder. What she saw were the stern set of jaws and the looks of sincere appreciation for what Normya had just admitted too.

"Forgive... forgive me..." Dysea stammered. "I..."

"Would King Leonidas have acted any differently than your children Dysea?" Esther asked gently.

Dysea looked at Normya for a long moment and then back to Esther. "In all honesty... in all honesty, Nauta Melme would probably have made the officer suffer for quite some time before he killed him." She finally spoke.

"It was not a lawful action no." T'lolt spoke now looking at her calmly. "But it was a just one."

"I can call off Andro." Normya spoke softly. "If we tell him what we want to do he will give us whatever information he and Arrarn have gathered and he will allow us to handle it. But not if father is involved. In many ways my brothers are far more subtle than father."

"I can say the same Il kal'daka darthirii." Tir'ut spoke looking at his father and placing his large hand on Normya's shoulder. Dysea noticed that Normya did not flinch in the least at the contact, and her eyes even seemed to grow a little brighter.

"Bah!" Cha'talla exclaimed waving his hand at his son. "At least I know the King and I share one trait. We confront these issues head on and do not sneak around like our children appear to prefer!"

Esther laughed. "Yes you do my Blessed Husband. However... the trail of bodies you and King Leonidas would leave might be harder to explain."

Dysea couldn't help herself and now she laughed as well, even Iriral joining in within Mindvoice. All of them turned when the door slid open and Fash'ka came into the small command center.

Tir'ut turned to face him fully. "Brother... what have you found?" He asked.

Fash'ka moved right up to Tir'ut. "Ja'narie and I did as you and Normya suggested." He said. "We went through the sensor logs of the G9's." Fash'ka replied. "Only one G9 was in a position to pick it up. It was higher in synchronous orbit and on the trail of the formation. It also jumped twenty-six minutes after we did."

"Pick up what?" Dysea asked.

Fash'ka turned to look at her. "A low frequency sub-space transmission Lady Dysea. A transmission from Gareld's ship directed into Union space."

Dysea slowly came to her feet. "Into Union space where?" She asked.

"The G9 sensors have a limited range... but we were able to determine it was aimed at the general direction of Apo Prime." Fash'ka answered.

Normya looked at her mother. "The Chief Engineer." She said. "It has to be."

Dysea turned her head and looked at her bonded sister. [Someone has tried to kill my child sister. Nauta Melme's and my child. Our child!] She spoke heavily shielded.

Iriral's eyes narrowed slightly. [Then we will do what we must.] She replied.

[Yes we will.] Dysea turned to look at Cha'talla. "I can not ask you to do more than you have already done Cha'talla of the Immortals. Saving the life of my daughter is a debt that can never be repaid."

"As my brother has already told you Lady Dysea." Cha'talla spoke getting to his feet. "There is no debt to be repaid."

"Your actions in saving Normya have put your settlement here at great risk, hidden though it may be." Dysea said. "The sooner we leave, the safer you will be."

Cha'talla shook his head. "We are involved now." He spoke confidently. "My Blessed Wife has told me we would need to reveal ourselves one day. It appears that destiny has decreed that day come sooner than I had expected. We have a long range transmitter here, encrypted communications, and whatever you have on your ship. Tell me what it is you wish Lady Dysea. This concerns my tribe now, and we can accomplish more if we work together."

Dysea smiled. "Yes we can." She said. "Normya... use the secure COM controls in my DT to contact Andro. Call your brother off and get whatever information he or Arrarn has gathered. Tell him I want no one that is connected to this suddenly disappear. I have a feeling this is much larger, and when we act I want to gather all of them up in my net."

Normya stood up and nodded. "He's still at SODRAG?"

Dysea nodded. "Yes."

Normya looked at Tir'ut. "Want to see a real ship?" She asked.

Tir'ut nodded. "Indeed."

Normya took his large hand. "Then follow me."

The diminutive Normya leading the much larger Tir'ut out of the command center caused smiles to split the faces of T'lolt and Fash'ka. Dysea watched until they were gone and turned back to Esther and Cha'talla to see them looking at her intently. Seeing how easily Normya was accepting of the Immortals and their company, especially the hulking Tir'ut caused shudders of fear to course through her. While everything she had seen so far had done a great deal to dispel her uncertainties in regards to the Immortals, after seeing the vision she had, Dysea still harbored doubts and questions.

"Never fear the unknown." Dysea whispered.

Cha'talla looked at Esther and then back to her. "Lady Dysea?"

Dysea lifted her eyes to meet his. "It is something Nauta Melme has instilled in all of us." She told them. "Never fear the unknown for we don't know what treasures it could bring us."

T'lolt snorted. "If we had feared the unknown, we would have never gotten this far." He spoke.

Cha'talla nodded. "Indeed brother." He said.

Dysea took a deep breath. "Your transmitter?" She asked. "May I use it?"

Cha'talla nodded with no hesitation. "This way." He said.

SPARTA ROYAL VILLA ESTATE

"Really is no other way they can rule on this Mandri." Deia spoke as she sat on one of the couches in the main room of the villa. "Our laws are very clear. Lisisa has renounced whatever Kavalian citizenship she may hold, and her adoption by you makes her an immediate citizen of the Union. Very nice planning by the way... making sure you filed the proper documents so long ago."

Martin turned from where he stood in front of the repaired glass doors staring out into the night. Anja and For'mya rested on one of the couches dressed casually as they had finished dinner not so long ago. They could hear the high pitched voices of Retta and Calyb playing with Nara, Deion and Bryon as they chased their bonded dragon brothers and sisters through the villa's large hallways."

Martin shook his head. "That wasn't me." He said. "That was my mother's idea. She suspected something like this might happen. I don't think she ever considered from where however."

"Well according to our laws, the adoption and Union citizenship trumps whatever they can declare because Lisisa is here, and she has lived within the Union since you rescued her." Deia spoke. "Worse case scenario is the Court rules in their favor, in which case Lisisa declares for political asylum and you grant it. Sel'ke shot down their primary reason for doing this I believe.”

“Getting their hands on Jeth?” Anja said.

Deia nodded. “Yes.”

“Don’t you find it odd that they did not know dragons are considered sentient beings in the Union? Able to make their own decisions and guide their own lives?” For’mya asked.

Deia shook her head. “Oh... I believe they were aware of it.” She said. “I just don’t think they care. To make it appear we are not being totally unreasonable and to further our standing I suggest we grant them concessions as I told you during dinner.”

“You mean letting them search her apartment here on the estate.” Martin said.

Deia nodded. “I know it violates your privacy Mandri... all of you.” She said. “The Durcunusaan can insure they are escorted directly to her apartment and out. They will not go anywhere else. And it will immediately put us on the high ground.”

“They won’t find anything Deia.” For’mya said. “Lisisa has, for all intents and purposes, been living with Deni for the last three years. Everything she considers of value has already been moved to their new villa in Gytheio.”

Deia nodded. “I know that.” She said. “So there is no reason not to allow them to search her apartment.”

“And if the Kavalians demand to search their villa in Gytheio?” Anja asked.

“It is in Deni’s name.” Deia said. “I already checked. They can do nothing if Deni does not approve it. The Lycavorian Union Galactic Court will not go after Denali Leonidas, nor will they allow the private residence of a Prince and Princess of the Union to be searched by agents of a foreign government. It would set a very dangerous precedent and they know that. At least this way we will look like we are trying to reasonably cooperate with them.”

Martin looked at Anja and For’mya. Anja shrugged. “I don’t care.” She spoke. “As long as Lisisa has no issues with it. From the gate to her apartment and then back. If it helps put this behind us...”

For’mya nodded. “I agree Martin.” She said.

Martin nodded slowly. “Very well Tenna.” He spoke softly. “Lisisa already agreed to this action if it ever came to be, so if that is what they request, give it to them. No scanners of any kind will be allowed and only three individuals.”

Deia nodded. “I will not offer it unless they press the issue Martin.” She said. “Most of their embassy staff finishes arriving tomorrow. All of them appear to be the biogenic females similar to Jalersi and Athani.”

“Any word on who their Ambassador will be?” For’mya asked.

Deia shook her head. “I’m assuming either Jiss or Matuarr.” She stated. “Whoever it is will only be a figure head really. All of their directives will come from Prefect Keleru.”

“Armetus has his people in place?” Martin asked.

Deia nodded quickly. “An office building four blocks away.” She answered. She looked at Martin. “Mandri... you do realize that when we sign this Cease Fire Accord with the Coven, they will automatically be granted an Embassy here in Sparta and on Apo Prime.”

Martin nodded. “It can’t be helped.” He said. “As long as the High Coven behaves, I won’t send forty dragons to their death. I promised Arzoal and the Dragon Elder Council as Talon Guardian. Militarily... they are in no position to challenge us, not with their ongoing war with the Kavalians. Aikiro is many things; stupid is not one of them. She doesn’t want to fight us as well as the KFI.”

“I quite sure she would be tickled if we got sucked in against the Kavalians though.” For’mya said.

“That’s why we need to make sure the intelligence she gave us is accurate.” Martin spoke with a nod. “I’m not going to do anything until I know for sure the Kavalians have plans for a preemptive invasion of Union space. We...”

The holo disc in the corner of the room on the floor chirred loudly. Anja got up quickly and moved to the small panel above it, touching the console. “Yes?”

“Lady Anja... we are receiving a priority transmission from the Hadarian Governmental Arch Ministry for you.” The female voice spoke. “A Chief Minister Wiktor. She is being quite insistent.”

Anja looked at Martin who shrugged his broad shoulders. “Very well Lieutenant... you may route it here.”

“Stand by.” The voice said.

Anja stepped back as the holo disc shimmered into life and the figure of the Hadarian Chief Minister of government appeared. She was dressed formally, her dark hair graying and tied back tightly in a large bundle at the rear of her head.

Anja lifted her coffee mug as the image cleared up and became focused. “Chief Minister Wiktor...” She spoke sipping her coffee. “What can I do for you?”

“I have been bounced from place to place for thirty minutes Queen Anja.” The woman stated in a stern voice. “I am not in the best of moods so I will make this very short.” She lifted a data pad in the transmission. “The Hadarian Governmental Arch Ministry is issuing an Executive Directive that you return to Hadaria immediately and appear before this Ministry body.”

Anja lowered her mug as her jade green eyes darkened. “Chief Minister... the Hadarian Governmental Arch Ministry as no authority to order me anywhere.” Anja snarled. “And I suggest you watch your tone of voice when speaking with me.”

“In this case we do Queen Anja.” The woman spoke her voice more subdued. “We have recently been given evidence of several alarming charges that have been brought against you. This evidence is very damning in many respects... and we are utilizing our Ministry Dictates to order that the Queen return to Hadarian and face these charges forthwith.”

“What charges?” Anja snapped.

“The most serious and damning charge among the three being leveled against you is that you were maliciously negligent in the death of Senior Mage Warrior Seanna.” Wiktor answered sternly.

Anja’s eyes grew wide at this announcement. “What kind of bullshit is that?” She nearly screamed. “Who is saying that? Chief Minister Wiktor if this is some kind of ploy by you and the other ministers to...”

“This is an attempt to get the truth!” Wiktor snapped in anger. “This evidence was passed on to us from the Hadarian Elder Healers! Mage Warrior Seanna’s own mother is leveling this charge against you! And the evidence she presented to the Elder Healers in defense of her charge is quite... it is repulsive for lack of a better word. Combined with the two charges being leveled against you by your Aunt, the Governmental Arch Ministry decided that action was demanded.”

“Charges that my Aunt has brought forth?” Anja declared stunned. “What charges?”

“Two charges. One brings into question your fitness as mother to the Hadarian heirs to the throne. Umbra charges they are being exposed to influences that are detrimental to their spiritual growth and could very well end up damaging them as they grow. She has presented evidence of Eliani’s upbringing as supporting this charge. The second charge is that you willfully violated established Hadarian Protocols concerning medical and political matters and bypassed not only the Elder Council, but this Ministry as well!” Wiktor stated smugly. “Due to the first charge from your Aunt, we are also ordering that Retta and Calyb return to Hadaria with you, without the dragon creatures that they are said to be bound too. Once here they will be placed in your Aunt’s temporary care until such time as a decision is made in regards to your status.”

“My status?” Anja growled. “I am Queen!”

Wiktor met Anja’s eyes in the transmission. “Based on the outcome of these charges against you Anja, your reign as Queen may very well be over.” She spoke with that same smugness and arrogance. “Failure to return with your children and surrender them to your Aunt will force us to remove them from your custody permanently by order of this body. In that circumstance the Hadarian Militia will take them from your...”

“That will not happen!” Martin’s voice was loud enough to cause Wiktor stop in mid-sentence and glance up from the pad she was reading from as Martin stepped into the transmission.

“King... King Leonidas!” She exclaimed her eyes wide. “I... I thought Anja was alone!”

“Anja is never alone Chief Minister.” Martin snarled. “And you are threatening to take my children Chief Minister. Our children. That is not something you want to do.”

“Milord... Milord Retta and Calyb are heirs to the throne of Hadaria.” Wiktor stammered out the words. “They...”

“Chief Minister Wiktor... if the Hadarian Militia comes to Sparta and tries to take our children from us, I will personally send every one of them back to you in a box and you can explain to their families why they are dead!” Martin growled menacingly. “And Anja is still Queen of Hadaria and the Lycavorian Union! You will address her with respect Minister, or I will see to it your career in politics is over! Am I making myself clear enough for you?” Martin snarled at the woman.

Anja reached out and took his hand, seeing that he was about to lose all pretense of calmness with Wiktor. “Lover... calm down.” She said softly.

“Sire... sire I am only speaking on behalf of the Hadarian Governmental Arch Ministry and their directives.” Wiktor spoke quickly knowing she had crossed an invisible line and trying to reign herself in. “This... this is a purely Hadarian matter. It has nothing to do with Union laws or procedures.”

“You threaten to take the King’s children and think this has nothing to do with Union laws or procedures Wiktor!” Deia snapped as she too came to her feet and moved into the transmission.

“Deia!” Wiktor spoke.

“Where is Zaniai?” Deia demanded. “Is he aware of what you are doing?”

“Prefect Zaniai is fully aware of what the Arch Ministry is doing.” Wiktor stated now regaining control of her composure. “He has seen the evidence and reluctantly he voted to pass this measure.”

“What evidence?” Anja snapped.

“You will have full measure of all the evidence when you return to Hadaria Queen Anja.” Wiktor spoke. “It pains me to have to relay this information to you, but the Hadarian Ministry and Elder Healers are in full agreement in this situation. Failure to comply with these directives will only result in an admission of guilt, in which case you will be stripped of your authority as Queen, your sister will be stripped of her authority and Umbra will be named as Steward until such time as Retta and Calyb come of age. Furthermore... formal charges will be brought against you within the scope of Union law.”

“Umbra?” Anja barked. “This is all a ploy by her to make a grab for power! Can’t you see that?”

“Will you acquiesce to this body’s directive Queen Anja?” Wiktor spoke firmly.

“You’re damn right I will!” Anja snapped. “And when I get back there... we are going to have a long conversation Chief Minister. You, me and the entire Governmental Arch Ministry!”

“I’m sure.” Wiktor spoke smugly. “I will arrange for your Aunt to take custody of Retta and Calyb when you arrive.”

“No you won’t.” Martin stated plainly. “Umbra will come no where near my children! And neither will they be taken from their Bonded Ones.”

“Milord... this is a directive of the Governmental Arch Ministry!” Wiktor spoke in an urgent voice.

“Tell them to suck it up and drive on! They are our children Minister Wiktor! No one tells me or my mates how to raise our children!” Martin spoke in a menacing voice. “Or does the Hadarian Governmental Arch Ministry suddenly tell me what to do?”

“Sire... no... of course not!” Wiktor stammered. “I am only following the directive laid out by our ruling body.”

“Yes and you can explain that to Anja and I when we arrive Chief Minister.” Martin barked.

“King Leonidas... Milord... there is no request or need for you to come here.” Wiktor stated.

“But I intend to anyway Chief Minister.” Martin spoke. “We will see you in three days. Good evening!”

Martin slammed his hand down on the small panel and the transmission vanished before Wiktor could speak another word.

“Martin... this is for shit!” Anja snapped quickly. “They are trying to get back at me for going against them for so many years! This has my Aunt’s fingerprints all over it! Take my children from me and put her as Steward!” Anja flung her half filled coffee mug across the room where it shattered against the fireplace.

Martin nodded and stepped up to her quickly. “You don’t need to explain anything to me Red. To any of us.” He said pulling her into his embrace. He could feel her diminutive frame trembling in anger within his arms and he squeezed her tightly, letting his aura wash over her completely. For’mya came up to them immediately and pressed her body tightly to both his and Anja’s frames, and each of them slipped an arm around her waist. “The arrogance in her voice was enough proof of that. Kinsoaurgai?”

“Deia and I can handle things here.” She said softly.

“Martin you don’t have to come with me.” Anja said pulling her head from his chest and looking up into his face. “I can handle this... really.”

Aricia's words came back to Martin in that moment and he nodded his head. "I know you can. I'm going to keep you from killing anyone. At least initially. And to make sure they know that no one takes our children from us."

"Damn straight!" Anja barked.

Martin turned to Deia. "Tenna... we'll be leaving in the morning on the SPIRIT, if you need me for anything contact me on my personal channel." He said.

Deia nodded quickly. "I don't think it will be necessary Martin, but I will do so if I feel the need. You will leave me with full authority in regards to these Kavalian fools?"

Martin nodded. "Don't you already have full authority?" He asked with a grin. "A quick hop to Hadaria... we settle this... and then come back." He stated calmly. "Let Andro know in the morning Kinsoaurgai."

For'mya nodded. "Of course."

Martin pulled Anja and For'mya into his arms tighter and Deia saw Anja's petite form relax in her nephew's embrace. She smiled when she felt the tremors within Mindvoice signifying they were talking to one another and she picked up the data pads from the table in front of her. "I will leave you alone now to prepare for your trip." She said not expecting an answer.

Deia headed out of the main room and moved for the door that would take her to the main entrance of the Estate. She had things of her own to prepare for.

Martin stared at Anja's sleeping face resting on For'mya's smooth, flat abdomen as he sat on the edge of their massive bed. Her Persian red hair was splashed across For'mya's midsection, sleep finally claiming her after three hours of second guessing everything she had done through the years, Martin and For'mya providing her with a ranting board. They had put the small children to bed and then moved into their own bedroom, Anja's aura angry and twisted and confused. It had taken three hours just for him and For'mya to caress her with their own auras, listening to her vent and being there for her until finally she fell asleep pressed between him and For'mya. Looking now at two of the five women that so held his essence in their hands, Martin Leonidas could do nothing but thank the gods they were part of his life. He would be nothing without each of them and what they brought to his life. Even after all these years Aricia was the one he would reach for first as his Anome. She was the one who knew him better than anyone alive, who could elicit just that little extra surge in his blood, yet each and every one of them held a part of his heart. They were what made him whole in this life.

They were who he would protect with his last dying breath if need be, and he had decided long ago he would shatter more worlds if need be to save them from harm.

Martin sighed gently and got to his feet moving to the chair near the bed. He pulled on the loose fitting black pants and made his way out of their room and down the long corridor back to the main room of the villa. He lifted his hand to indicate the two Durcunusaan troops to remain in their chairs as they were beginning to rise and turned as Colonel Fache moved up to him and held out the mug of coffee. He turned to see the large monitor on the wall, one of the Netnews channels on it and interviewing the Kavalian Jiss. He turned slightly to listen along with the Durcunusaan.

"...do you think the Galactic Court will rule?" The reporter asked.

"There is really no other way they can rule." Jiss replied. "The female you know as Lisisa Leonidas is in fact a Kavalian citizen, and therefore subject to our laws. She is not the daughter of King Leonidas as he has made everyone believe all these years. She is the daughter of Marshall Pleistarchus, the King's brother."

"You mean Marshall Pusintin don't you?" The reporter spoke.

"We know him by one name... you know him by another." Jiss answered. "He is still the King's brother. He is still of the same bloodline of King Leonidas the First."

"Marshall Pusintin deserted Sparta over three thousand years ago Legislature Jiss." Another reporter spoke up. A female this time. "When he returned... he attempted to kill his own mother in front of many witnesses. According to Court transcripts he knew who Princess Lisisa was then. Why didn't he come forth then instead of trying to kill his mother?"

Jiss looked at her. “Passion of the moment.” He said. “He allowed pent up anger at what he perceived to be his mother’s desertion of him when he was still a boy to control his actions. He has tried many times since that day to contact her and explain his actions. Lady Gorgo has never responded to his attempts. Nor has his brother I might add. And if I am not mistaken the current King Leonidas is the younger brother, the second of King Leonidas the First’s sons, yet it is he who rules the Lycavorian Union.”

“Many people, including the First Oracle, have said Pleistarchus gave up the right to his bloodline when he deserted his people and swore his allegiance to the Kavalians.” The same female reporter said.

“How does one give up the right to their bloodline?” Jiss asked. “It is still part of who he is.”

“By being a traitor and taking an active part in a war against the Lycavorian Union, as well as killing his own people.” The female said.

Jiss’s jaw twitched as he looked at her. “At the time Marshall Pusintin came to live with our people we were not at war with the Lycavorian Union. He really had no contact with any of his own species, and given the way we were regarded even by the Union, he chose not too.”

“Why fight then?”

“Marshall Pusintin was defending what had become his home and family by then. Brutal attacks against those he considered his people. Is that not natural.” Jiss spoke.

“Legislature Jiss... the Kavalian Empire started the war between our two peoples and that is an indisputable fact you can not deny.” The female said firmly not in the least deterred by the angry look Jiss gave her. “Marshall Pusintin or Pleistarchus, or whatever you want to call him, he is a traitor. He actively sought out and killed his own people during the war.”

“Your current King Leonidas killed far more of our forces twenty years ago if I am not mistaken.” Jiss told her.

“Your forces had brutally conquered a Union planet!” the first male reporter spoke up.

“Those Kavalian forces were led by a rogue officer acting on what he thought was accurate intelligence.” Jiss answered. “That operation was neither sanctioned nor approved by Marshall Pleistarchus or Prefect Keleru, and in fact we have tried to make reparations through the years. All of our overtures have been rebuffed.”

“And the Trade Agreement now?”

“Is mutually beneficial to both our peoples.” Jiss answered. “And we hope more will happen in the future. First however... first we must have closure on this issue with Marshall Pleistarchus’s daughter Lisisa.”

“And her adoption by King Leonidas?”

“We do not recognize this adoption.” Jiss spoke. “Nor does Marshall Pleistarchus. He never gave up the rights to his daughter.”

“It would seem he did not care in the least considering he is the one who raped the High Coven Princess Yuri, knowing that a child might be the result of this.” The female reporter broke in once more. “And Princess Leonidas is not a piece of property that you can assume ownership of as you have implied.”

“Kavalian females do not have the rights that the females in the Union have, that is correct.” Jiss spoke. “We have never tried to deny that. It is how we have lived our lives for millennia. Do you deny us our culture now?”

“What if she chooses to remain here? To continue the life she has here within the Union.” The female asked.

“She does not have the right to make that decision according to our laws.” Jiss spoke.

“What if the court rules against you Legislature Jiss?”

Jiss paused for a moment and then shrugged his broad shoulders. “Then we will know that the Union does not follow the very laws they purport to uphold now won’t we.” He smiled and bowed his head. “Thank you for your time. I must go now.”

Martin turned back to where Fache stood. “Wonderful people aren’t they?” He said.

“Please tell me that when we are done training the Coven dragons sire... please tell me we will throw their barbaric asses out of Union space.” Fache spoke. “Their arrogance is far greater than the High Coven’s ever was, and it makes me want to vomit.”

Martin chuckled. "In a New York minute Colonel." He said.

"Milord?" Fache asked confused.

Martin patted his shoulder. "It's slang from a long time ago. It means you bet your ass that is what I intend."

Fache smiled and nodded. "Good."

"We all ready?" Martin asked.

"Everything is set up Milord." Fache spoke. "I put some of the Feravomir's biscuits on your desk as well."

Martin accepted the mug and nodded as he sipped the strong rich coffee that Aricia had invented and was now a mainstay of millions across the Union. "Lock me in then Fache." He said.

Fache nodded as Martin turned to the door into his inner office and moved through it. He waited until the door had slid shut and he heard the electronic locks activate from the opposite side. Colonel Fache would stand just on the other side and not unlock the door unless directed by Martin himself within Mindvoice. Martin smelled the sweet delicious scent of Helen's biscuits and moved to his large desk to pick one up. He savored the flavor and texture of the still warm dough as he bit into it and closed his eyes settling into the high backed leather like chair. He let his mind wander for a few moments, enjoying the quiet and collecting his thoughts on what he was about to do. He took a deep breath finally and leaned forward in his chair, tapping the control console built into the top of his desk.

There were only two people in the entire breadth of the Lycavorian Union who knew the code he was entering and he watched as the COM panel rose at a slightly inclined angle out of his desktop.

"Spartan One Actual. Code One, One One, One Alpha. Spartan Alpha One Protocol initiate."

-Authorization confirmed Martin Leonidas. Initiating Spartan Alpha One Protocol. All records of this transmission will be deleted upon completion-

-Confirm Command Authorization Codes-

"ADAFI Crimson Shield one four plus one."

-Command Code Authorization Confirmed-

-State Communication request King Leonidas-

"Omen Three. Secure voice and image. Yuriko seven nine seven."

-Stand By-

-Initiating-

Martin sat back in his chair as the holo disco on the floor flared to life, flickered and then cleared almost immediately to reveal the sleepy eyes of the stunning young Asian female as she sat up in the bed slowly. Her own eyes focused and then grew wider.

"Papa!" Yuriko Leonidas rasped as she sat up in her bed the rest of the way instantly, holding the sheet around her obviously naked body.

Martin's smile was warm and sincere and he gazed at his adopted pureblood vampire daughter with love and respect. "I apologize for breaking established procedures Yuriko." He spoke.

"Papa!" She gasped using the name she had called him as a child on EDEN Moon Base. "What is wrong?" She asked instantly. "We were not due to communicate for another two weeks."

Martin sat forward in his chair now and set his mug on the top of the desk. "I have a mission for you." He said. "And then I want to drop this façade you and I have been playing all these years and I want you to come home."

"Father... what is wrong? In the four years I have been doing this you have never contacted me on the SOA channel." Yuriko asked once more, her voice soft but confident. "You are scaring me."

Martin lifted the data pad and plugged it into the slot on his desk. He pressed two buttons and then looked up at the image of her. "This is what I want you to do." He said.

He watched Yuriko scramble from the bed and move for the desk in her quarters. He spied the lanky but muscular form of the Hadarian Healer Filrian roll over to the side, his long hair wild and unkempt. It had taken Martin ten years to finally make Yuriko see that the man who now shared her bed and her life worshiped the very ground she walked on, and not just because she had saved his life. When Yuriko finally came to realize this herself, after several failed relationships, she had thrown all that she was into their relationship. It had not made the Hadarian Arch Ministry very happy, but Filrian had long ago stopped trying to please them. He and Yuriko had been married in a very lavish ceremony in the mountains of Sparta nine years ago, and Martin still recalled the incredible party they had afterwards.

“King Martin.” He spoke in a sleepy voice.

“Filrian... I hope you are taking care of my daughter.” Martin said with a smile. He knew those on Yuriko’s ship held the highest security levels among any of the Omen crews, and those on Yuriko’s ship knew well the guise of anger that he and Yuriko had been operating under the last five years so that she could go places not normally accessible to a member of the royal family.

“When she lets me Martin.” He answered with a grin. “When she lets me.”

Martin chuckled and cut his eyes when Yuriko lifted the pad from the slot on her desk and directed her eyes back to the transmission.

“Father...?” She asked.

“Can you do it?” Martin asked.

Yuriko nodded and moved back to the edge of the bed, resting next to Filrian as he too sat up. She handed him the data pad. “Easily. We are only ten light years from the facility, and security is not what it once was. Husband?” She asked turning her head to look at Filrian.

Filrian nodded. “We have enough tactical team members to conduct the mission yes.” He looked up at Martin in the transmission. “Why would we want too? This is one of the reasons you have had us out here. To monitor this facility. Why do this?”

“Yuriko... remember when I told you and Andro that an end game was coming and we would have to play by other people’s rules?” Martin asked.

Yuriko nodded. “Yes.”

“Well that end game is coming. Sooner than I had thought.” Martin answered. “You are sure you can do this without risking your ship?”

Yuriko and Filrian both nodded. “Yes.” Yuriko answered. “Aside from that one security breach of the facility seven years ago, there has been nothing out of the ordinary. We never did find out who made it on to the station, or if they succeeded in doing what they came to do. We tracked the ship out of High Coven space to Icalro Alliance space, but lost them in the swarms of mercenary ships hiding out there.”

Martin nodded his head. “Good enough. Once you have what I want, destroy the facility and make it look like an accident.”

“Father... who knows about this?” Yuriko Leonidas asked.

Martin met her eyes. “Just you and me Yuriko. Just you and me.”

“Not Andro?” She asked.

“He’ll discover it before everyone else... but not right now no.” Martin said shaking his head. “Contact me when it’s done and you are on your way back Yuriko.”

Yuriko nodded slowly and got to her feet. “I will see you soon father.” She moved a little forward towards the holo image. “It will make me very happy to feel your arms around me again Papa.”

Martin smiled. “It will be good to hold you in person as well.” He stated. “Then you can help Lisisa deal with your sisters.”

Yuriko chuckled and nodded her head as the transmission faded.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

CENTRAL DISTRICT/SPARTA KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

“Get out of my way!” General/Colonel Vengal roared as he charged down the corridor of the maternity wing in the hospital, his elven wife of nearly four hundred years doing her level best to keep up with his long strides and shaking her head. The sun was beginning to set outside and as it poured through the many windows in the rooms it caused Vengal’s shadow to stretch down the corridor for what seemed like forever. She tried to apologize for her husband’s words and actions, to no avail. There were few people who did not know General Vengal, as he was one of the most well known and respected elves in the entire Union, and he was also one of the deadliest men alive.

General Vengal was tall for an elf, nearing six feet in height, his two hundred plus pounds lean and muscular and uncharacteristic for an elf. His long hair was nearly all white now but neatly groomed, with a bushy mustache that extended to just past the corners of his mouth. The many elf, Hadarian and human nurses and technicians got out of his way quickly as he strode briskly down the long, wide corridor. This was a man who had fought beside King Leonidas since before the day he discovered who he truly was. This was the elven man who, along with General/Colonel Vistr, had formed, trained and now led perhaps the second most feared Spartan military unit within the entire Union.

The Durcunusaan. The Wolves of the Blood.

He and Vistr commanded all Special Operations Units within the Union, and the two men had grown as close as any brothers could ever be. It was not uncommon to see them training with the troops they led, neither man afraid to jump into the same dirty water or crawl through the foot thick mud. It was the main reason Generals Vengal and Vistr were so revered among the Durcunusaan. Outside of the Durcunusaan Hippies Sedla assigned to the Royal family, no one actually knew the number of Durcunusaan within the Union. It was not an uncommon sight to see them out and about with other troops, but actually pinning down their exact number was something no one could ever do. Vengal and Vistr had designed them that way to keep their numbers a secret. Not even Durcunusaan members knew how many of their unit was active outside those detachments they were assigned too. General Vengal was also the father to Star Commander Anuk Simpson, and adopted father to Star Commander Nayeca Simpson, both wives and mates to General/Colonel Daniel Simpson. And everyone knew who that man was. The men and women in the hospital knew why Vengal was bellowing as he led his wife Narlea down the soft white of the maternity corridor, and they paid him no mind.

“Veni...” Narlea hissed softly as they walked the corridor. “You must stop bellowing like a wounded bear. You are scaring everyone!” She admonished him, though her own face was animated and bright. They had gotten the call only thirty minutes before and while she projected calm and control outwardly, Narlea would have been charging down the corridor in the lead had her husband not taken the point.

They rounded the corner and saw Moneus already gathered with Daniel Simpson’s father Melancton and Daniel himself in the hallway, Melancton holding a small bundle in his massive arms. Most elf men would never walk up to the three hulking figures without some trepidation. All of the men were nearing six and a half feet tall, well over two hundred and twenty pounds each and their bodies forged into muscular Spartan perfection. The sight of the three of them together was nothing short of frightening. Vengal was not one of those elves. Melancton caught his scent first and turned. His dark ebony face was scared in some places, and his usually stern look was now one of gentle grace. His dark eyes were bright as he saw Vengal and he held up the bundle in his arms, two tiny arms and legs kicking and jerking from within the white blanket.

“Vengal my friend!” Melancton bellowed happily, matching Vengal’s tone. “Look what your daughter has brought into this world!”

Vengal and Narlea stopped in front of the massive ebony Spartan and Vengal held out his arms for the bundle. Belying his huge size, Melancton gracefully and with the utmost gentleness placed the cooing baby in Vengal’s hands. Narlea gasped at the soft dark skin and bright eyes as her husband held the baby in front of him.

They knew the relationship their birth daughter Anuk had with Nayeca was one of Drow Mistress and Drow slave. They also knew that turn of phrase did not extend outside the realm of playful expression in their bed with Daniel. They loved each other just as intensely as they both loved the large black Spartan who had claimed them both. Within a year of their relationship beginning, Nayeca had become a cherished member of their family and adopted daughter to both her and Vengal in every respect.

“Another fine elven Spartan son to join our family!” Melancton spoke proudly. “Your blessed Drow daughter has done it again Vengal.”

Danny looked at his father. "Hey... I had a hand in this too you know!" He spat.

Narlea slapped Danny's shoulder, never taking her eyes from the baby in her husband's arms. "Nayeca did all the work Daniel Simpson. Carrying your children is a duty all its own!" She exclaimed happily as she reached up and gripped the baby's hand in hers. She smiled as the tiny fingers clamped down with strength.

Melancton laughed heartily. "That it is!" He said looking at his son. "That it is."

Narlea looked around the men and into the private room they stood outside of, seeing Nayeca sitting on a pillow on the floor, Anuk, Carina and Daniel's mother Malaika sitting with her and holding hands in the traditional elven way of thanking the gods for a healthy child. She brushed past the doting men and moved into the room quickly where she saw Anuk and Nayeca make room for her on the floor between them. She settled easily between her birth daughter and the Drow female they had called daughter almost from the moment she had come into Anuk's life. She leaned over and nuzzled Nayeca's beaming face in wolf fashion.

"He is beautiful daughter." She spoke softly.

"Thank you Amille." Nayeca replied gripping Narlea's hand tightly.

"Yes he is." Malaika spoke softly holding Carina's hand her face also very bright and animated at this happy time. "Strong and proud like his parents. We have been waiting for you Narlea. Shall we welcome him in the fashion of your ancestors? As we have welcomed all of my son's children with his beloved elven mates?"

Nayeca nodded her head, her shimmering white hair shiny in the light of the room, her amber eyes vivid and clear. "Yes. Let us welcome our son..." Nayeca said looking at Anuk who met her eyes with love and adoration. They both turned to look at Malaika. "Let us welcome Melancton Simpson."

Malaika's eyes grew a little wider at this and they became moist as she heard the name of her new grandson. She nodded her head slowly. "Oh... you... you will make him so proud." She said softly.

Narlea smiled. "And he will honor that name throughout his life. Malaika... would you do the honors?" She stated confidently. She squeezed Anuk and Nayeca's hands and closed her eyes as the others followed suit.

"I would be privileged." She answered taking Carina's hand in her right and Anuk's opposite hand in her left. She took a deep breath and closed her eyes. "The... the gods have smiled upon our family once more... for they have seen fit to bestow a new life to us. A new life burning with Spartan and Elven blood. Proud blood... honored blood. The blood of warriors and scholars both."

"Aovi." They all spoke together in the Lycavorian tongue.

"May his hand be guided by the spirits of both our people. Those still living and those no longer among us." Malaika continued in the elven ritual.

"Nasie." They spoke in the elven language. (Amen)

"And may blessings reign down upon him from the gods and all those who shape our destiny."

"Aa' menle nauva calen ar' ta hwesta e' ale'quenle." (May thy paths be green and the breeze on thy back.)

Their eyes opened slowly and they began to chatter among themselves as only women could do.

Danny looked into the face of his new son, the hard warrior look now gone from his expression, the baby curled into the crook of his arm.

"He will be a strong warrior." Vengal spoke.

Melancton nodded as he draped his arm over Vengal's shoulders. "Indeed." He spoke looking at Danny. "What will you name him boy?" He asked.

Danny looked up at his father, glancing at Moneus quickly with a grin. "We decided he needed a strong name." He said.

"Bah... he is of Spartan and elven blood." Melancton spoke with a wave. "There is no question of his strength. All one has to do is look at Moneus here. Or Anton. Or Odara, or any of Vengal's and my grandchildren. Just spit out his name will you! Vengal and I need to know what we will be drinking too!"

"It took us a while to come up with a name we thought would be worthy of this little guy." Dan spoke.

Moneus chuckled. "Who are you trying to kid father? It took you and my mothers all of thirty seconds to decide." He said.

"Well...?" Vengal barked.

Danny met his father's eyes. "Melancton Simpson." He stated.

Melancton didn't do anything at first, but Vengal felt his arm tighten around his broad elven shoulders and he smiled. Daniel's father was an old Spartan Vengal knew, nearly two thousand five hundred years old, and he was still of the mindset that Spartan men did not show emotion. Vengal felt Melancton nod slowly, but he knew the emotion whirling through the man just by the grip he had on his shoulder.

"A... a fine name." Melancton spoke.

"A strong name." Moneus said looking at his grandfather.

"Yes... yes..." Vengal broke into the awkward moment knowing he was saving Daniel's father from having to respond further. "When is the party to welcome our new boy home?"

All four of them broke into laughter as the female elf nurse walked up tentatively, not wanting to intrude on the moment. Daniel looked at her as his father gripped his shoulder. "What is it Lieutenant?" He asked.

"General... I hate to interrupt sir, but there is a priority transmission for you." She spoke.

"Marty?" Dan asked.

"No sir... the King departed earlier this morning with Queen Anja for Hadaria. This is a Spartan woman by the name Hali." She answered.

Danny looked at his father quickly and motioned for Vengal to take his new son. "I'll take it over here." Dan spoke motioning to the small monitor. The nurse nodded and tapped on her pad several times as Danny moved to the monitor. He touched the panel and the face of Julie Collins's mother appeared. Spartan woman though she may have been, she was still a mother and Daniel detected immediately that something was seriously wrong. "Hali... Hali what is wrong?" Danny asked.

"Daniel... please forgive me... forgive me for interrupting you at such a time..." The older Spartan woman spoke in a weak voice.

Danny shook his head hastily. "Never think that." He said quickly. "What is wrong Hali?"

"Kim So is in Eden City Daniel." Hali spoke. "My children spread throughout the Union. I did not know who to contact. You and Martin... you have always told me to contact you if ever I needed something..."

"And we meant it. You contacted the right person Hali." He said seeing the woman's distress. "Now tell me what is wrong?"

"She's here Daniel." Hali spoke softly.

"Who?"

"The... the clone of my daughter that you and Martin told us of." Hali replied softly. "She is standing outside my home right now Daniel. Staring at the house. This is the fourth day in a row now she has done this. She is wearing a cape and cowl... but I know it is her. She has been there for nearly an hour doing nothing. Just staring."

Danny's eyes were wide now and he glanced at his father quickly. "Hali... we'll be right there. Go out the back and get over to Larissa's house. Do it now. Don't worry about taking anything... just go."

"Please hurry Daniel." Hali said.

Danny turned to look at Vengal who shook his head. "Go!" He spoke immediately. "I will watch out for my grandson."

Danny moved to the door into Nayeca's room waiting until they all looked up at him. "Carina... with me. I may need your skills." He stated formally, everyone detecting the sudden shift in his demeanor to his command voice. Daniel Simpson was the most laid back person anyone could know, but when he shifted into his role as a General of Spartans, something was wrong. He moved quickly to Anuk and Nayeca as they came to their feet.

"Daniel what is wrong?" Anuk asked.

"Hali just contacted me." He said softly drawing both Anuk and Nayeca into his arms. "The clone of Julie is stalking her home and has been for a few days. She's outside the house right now. I told her to go to Larissa's out the back, but I need to go there now and find out what is going on."

"I thought Martin told Aikiro she was not to leave their ships for any purpose!" Anuk spoke sternly.

"Yeah... well apparently the great Empress Aikiro doesn't listen too well. Or she thinks she doesn't need to listen." Danny answered. "I need to go."

Anuk and Nayeca nodded immediately. "Go!" Nayeca spoke. "Hali is like family to you Daniel. Go!"

Danny leaned over and kissed first Anuk and then Nayeca with deep passion and intense feeling before turning and heading out of the room, Carina on his heels. They watched as first Moneus and then his father fell in behind him as they moved down the corridor. Anuk looked at Nayeca's amber eyes as they drew each other close and Vengal came into the room slowly rocking Melancton in his arms.

"Anuk?" Nayeca said softly, barely a whisper that only Anuk heard.

Anuk smiled at her. "The Julie Collins our Daniel knew and shared his life with is dead Mistress." She said softly. "We are his wives and mates and we have been for a quarter century. This clone is nothing to him."

Nayeca shook her head. "It... it was silly of me to think..."

Anuk leaned over and kissed her. "No Mistress. I thought the same thing for an instant when Martin first told us." She said softly. "I only needed to look at our husband's face to know we are the only ones in his heart. We are his world, just as he is ours. Nothing will ever come between us."

Nayeca nodded. "Of course I know that." She said sheepishly. "It must be my hormones to even think such a thing." She squeezed Anuk's hand and smiled once more, her amber colored eyes bright. "We need to plan our welcoming party." She spoke now so that everyone could hear her.

"It's about time." Vengal interjected. "We haven't had a good party since Moneus and Carina were mated. It's been nearly a month now!"

"Oh hush papa!" Anuk hissed at him with a loving voice.

SODRAG

"...everything Arrarn was able to obtain from his sources at Jump Gate Control mother." Andro spoke to Dysea and Normya in the secure holo transmission from within his office.

He could see three others in the transmission with them, one a dark haired pureblood who Dysea had called Esther and the other two were oddly colored Immortals, and one who he was sure was known as Cha'talla. The second bronze skinned Immortal sat closer to Normya than Andro would have liked but he said nothing in regards to this. He was still very unsure of the trustworthiness of the Immortals his first elven mother and younger sister were among.

"This information is accurate Andro?" Dysea asked looking at the pad in her hand.

Andro nodded. "As accurate as Arrarn was able to press for." He replied.

Dysea looked back up at him. "There are several names here Andro." She stated.

"Yes." He answered.

"Does your father have these names?" Dysea asked.

Andro shook his head. "Arrarn and I were gathering this information on our own mother. Outside the official investigation. Father left with mother to return to Hadaria very early this morning. It seems the Arch Ministry is having another of their fit in regards to how our father and mothers raise our siblings. He will probably contact you while they are enroute."

"The Arch Ministry?" Dysea exclaimed rolling her eyes. "Will they never give up trying to change Melyanna?"

"Apparently not." Andro stated. "From what little father was able to tell me before they left with Retta and Calyb, the Arch Ministry has brought three charges against mother."

"Charges? That is something new Andro." Normya asked leaning forward now. "What charges?"

"The main charge is for supposedly being maliciously negligent in the death of Seanna in some fashion. Seanna's mother Pcillany has brought that charge forward. Aunt Umbra has also charged that she is an unfit mother and that she circumvented the Arch Ministry in regards to several medical and political practices." Andro said. "It all sounds like a big load of sibfla to me."

"Anja had nothing to do with Seanna's death!" Dysea snapped. "The Evolli caused her death! I was there. I watched her try and save Seanna for three and a half hours!"

"Well apparently Seanna's mother does not think so." Andro stated. "They supposedly have some evidence that they intend to show her and father when they arrive that proves their charge. All I know is that Eliani is steaming mad right now. Chief Minister Wiktor said Eliani's upbringing was proof that she is not a good mother, implying in some fashion I would imagine, that Eliani is some how twisted or deranged because of how we were raised. It is a ridiculously veiled criticism of Eliani's and Nyla's relationship. I had to order Eliani to remain here before she went to Hadaria and extracted a pound of flesh from someone.” Andro saw the woman Esther and the two Immortals chuckle softly within the transmission.

“Andro... your father does not know the incident with Normya was sabotage.” Dysea said. “And he must not know. At least not yet.”

“Yes... I gathered that when Normya contacted me and asked me not to do anything that would alert father to something other than what the Netnews people are reporting.” Andro said. “It’s just as well. With the High Coven and Kavalians in Sparta, father probably welcomed the chance to leave for a time. You know what they are trying to do in regards to Lisi?”

Dysea nodded. “Yes... we suspected as much when this Karun first informed us of his intent to seek a meeting with Lisisa.”

“They met yesterday morning mother.” He said. “According to Lisi... it went better than she had truly expected. The Galactic Court postponed making a ruling on the Kavalian petition today as well mother. I don’t know whether that’s good or bad.”

“For how long?” Dysea asked.

“Just until tomorrow Sparta time.” He replied.

“There is only one way they can rule according to Union law.” Dysea said confidently. “It matters not what Kavalian law says because she has been adopted and a citizen of the Union since your father returned from Lycavore with her.”

Andro nodded. “She and Deni aren’t concerned.” He said. “What exactly are you and Normya going to do mother?”

“The assistance Cha’talla, Esther, Tir’ut and their tribe have given to Normya has most likely exposed them to possible serious repercussions. I do not intend to let that happen if I am able.” Dysea said. “Apparently the man who was contracted to capture your sister knows of Esther and Cha’talla. They have a rather one sided history together.”

“One sided on his part I’m guessing.” Andro spoke seeing Esther holding Cha’talla’s hand on the table.

“Let’s just say Gareld and I do not see eye to eye.” Esther spoke from her chair. “In fact, given the opportunity, I would gladly remove his eyes from his head.”

“Andro... how is the training of the Coven Riders coming?” Dysea asked.

Andro looked at his mother in the transmission with slightly wider eyes. “Mother... mother you have just...”

Dysea shook her head. “They are already aware that the Coven has dragons on Earth and that we are training them Andro. They have known for some time it seems. They apparently have contacts within the ranks of the Immortals that still serve the Coven.” Dysea said. “I ask because we could use yours and Arram’s sources more efficiently if you were helping us.”

Cha’talla leaned forward in his chair. “We are not your enemy young son of Leonidas.” He said.

Andro met his eyes unwavering. “Simply because you have filed down your bone spikes and changed the color of your skin does not make you a friend Cha’talla of the Immortals. You are the former Captain to the Coven High Lord.” Andro stated coldly.

“Androcles Leonidas!” Dysea barked. “You will speak with respect to this man and his son and wife! They saved your sister’s life! Cha’talla’s brother is the Immortal your father told you about as a boy! They have risked a great deal in this venture.”

Andro nodded. “That is all well and good mother.” He stated. “And I bless the gods you were there for her. Respectfully however, that one act does not erase the thousands of years of war and mistrust between us. I thank you for what you have done, truly I do, but you will forgive me if I reserve judgment until more time has passed.”

Cha’talla laughed from his chair and nodded his head. “I like your son Dysea.” He stated. “Straight to the point! And in his position I would say the same thing. Are all of your child just as stubborn and cautious?”

Dysea turned to look at Cha’talla. “That seems to be the case.” She said turning back to Andro. “All of them have inherited their father’s blunt and sometimes tactless nature.” She scolded.

Andro shrugged his shoulders and smiled. “You still love him though.” He said seeing his mother nod her head in the transmission and smile affectionately.

“With every breath I take.” Dysea spoke softly.

“Will you be getting anymore information? While these names are helpful, considering their positions within your Union, they do not seem capable or highly placed enough to be the man or men who would be powerful enough to hire Gareld and direct all of this.” The second Immortal called Tir’ut asked the question. He leaned forward in his chair, his broad shoulders brushing against Normya’s arm. Like Dysea did the day she arrived, Andro noticed that this did not seem to trouble Normya in the least and she in fact turned to look at his face with dazzling emerald eyes.

“Arrarn’s contacts will continue to delve for information, but there is probably little more that they can tell us.” Andro replied. “It helps that the Netnews announced this was nothing more than an accident. Whoever is behind it will not immediately panic and it gives us time to discover more.”

“This man may very well try again.” Tir’ut spoke again. “I will allow no harm to come to Il kal'daka darthirii, and I will eliminate even those who come from the Union if they intend to harm her or her mother.”

Andro tilted his head as he gazed at Tir’ut and saw the fiery look of passion in his dark eyes. He watched his sister take his large hand in hers and look at him.

“Kestall ith'arl ol won't doer ulu nindel Tir'ut.” Normya spoke softly. (Hopefully it won’t come to that.)

Tir’ut met her emerald eyes and Andro saw him nod in the transmission. He shifted his eyes back to Dysea. “What is your plan mother?” He asked.

“I’m going to have my flight crew change the IFF transponder on my DT.” Dysea spoke. “I’m going to take Lexi, Iriral and Normya to Apo Prime without anyone knowing we are there and have a talk with the people on this list.” She answered. “The two engineers your father told me to take will remain with the rest of my detachment here and they return to Yocetu to fix their VANGRA 9 transport. They will also try and salvage what they can from the TYPE II that Normya was flying before destroying it completely.”

“Mother anyone willing to go after our family in this way is either very crazy, or very well connected.” Andro stated evenly. “Iriral and Lexi can only protect the two of you to a point.”

Dysea nodded. “Yes... that is why Tir’ut and Esther have volunteered to come with us as support.” She stated. “And I have accepted. Cha’talla and T’lolt will return to Yocetu with the remainder of my detachment while Illiad and Erli’ra, the elves on Cha’talla’s ruling body here put together an extensive list of everything they will need here to defend themselves.”

“Elves?” Andro asked.

Dysea nodded. “There are a dozen or so elves here, seven of them females that I have seen, among perhaps a hundred others from different species. All of them are the Blessed Wives of Immortals my son. They... I have seen most of them Andro... they have children and they love with the same passion as we love your father. I was skeptical as I traveled here, but after what I have seen... not anymore.”

“As you say mother.” Andro spoke.

“It will not be a large list” Cha’talla spoke quickly. “What we lack are planetary shield generators and anti-air batteries. Those are far too expensive for us to purchase in The Wilds, and it would draw attention to us that we don’t want. We might be able to trade for them in Bontawillian space but we...”

“No.” Andro said getting to his feet.

“Andro... they have risked their lives to protect me! To protect our mother!” Normya protested.

“Pen pera allon arande.” Andro spoke.

“Then why are you being such a butt head?” Normya snapped using slang she had learned from her mother Anja and her sister Eliani.

Andro chuckled as he came around his desk and pushed aside his chair to begin typing into the control panel on the desk face. “You are spending too much time with Eliani.” He said with a large smile.

“Aikiro knows they exist as well now, and she wants nothing more than to kill all of them to keep what they have built here from being discovered by the rest of the Immortals within her ranks. The threat to them has increased two fold because of me! I won’t just leave them to their fates!” Normya spoke.

Andro looked at his sister in the transmission and he smiled at the set of her jaw, and he also noticed she had not released the hand of the bronze skinned Immortal. “You never used to get into this much trouble my elven sister.” He said as he continued typing on the main console of his desk. “Why have you suddenly become a nuisance?”

Normya smiled at the look on her older brother’s face knowing then that he was playing with her as he had when she was younger. “It must be all the time I have been hanging around you.” She stated confidently.

Andro chuckled and nodded his head. “Yes... well I have only just begun to rattle many cages with my actions sister.”

Dysea looked at him oddly in the transmission. “Andro what are you speaking of?” She asked.

Andro didn't answer but picked up the pad and inserted it into the slot on the panel. He keyed several sequences and looked up. “Normya... Encryption Algorithm Three Nine Nine Beta Four. Same as our training exercise on Podella Three. Do you remember?”

Normya nodded as she got to her feet and moved to the control panel in the large table, Tir'ut right behind her very interested in the coded talk they were using. He stood behind her as she keyed in several sequences on her end. “Initiating.” She said.

“Sending.” Andro stated as he stabbed down on the button.

“Locked. Receiving.” Normya said.

Tir'ut's eyes grew a little wider when he saw what she was receiving. He lifted his face up to glance at Androcles and then back down to the table as Normya finished downloading what he had sent to her and withdrew the data pad from the slot.

“Got it.” She spoke.

Andro moved back around to stand in front of the transmission disc and looked at them. “The seal security code is six four one three seven seven alpha Normya. Tell the Durcunusaan detachment leader that remains behind he has seven hours after he cracks the seal to take what he and Cha'talla believe they will need to defend the settlement. After that the seal code will randomly change and reset.”

Andro watched as Cha'talla rose and moved up next to his son and Normya, looking down over her shoulder as she held it out. His own eyes grew wide as he saw the information scrolling across the small screen and he turned back to Andro.

“This is... this...” Cha'talla was too stunned to speak. “This is on Yocetu!” He declared finally. “We... we never discovered it.”

Andro nodded his head. “We have such caches all over The Wilds Cha'talla. My father and uncles plan very well. It is very well hidden and unless you knew exactly where to look, you would never find it. It's an older Union cache, most of the equipment left over from the Evolli War, but it is still very serviceable and in excellent condition.” Andro said. “It will have all you will need to defend your settlement from everything except a dedicated ground and orbital assault.”

“Why?” Cha'talla asked him.

“My mother and sister apparently trust you Cha'talla, and my mother is the best judge of character I have ever met in my young life. I also find myself wanting to trust in you after what you and your son have done.” Andro spoke softly. “Mother... I sent a Mjolnir's Hand IFF code to program into your DT. Land at the Mjolnir's Hand base across the lake from the palace. Stay away from the palace to avoid anyone seeing you. The base commander will have documents for Esther and Tir'ut when you arrive.”

Tir'ut looked at him now. “My mother will pass easily, she is a pureblood. I will not be so lucky. I am an Immortal.” He spoke.

Andro nodded. “Yes... and when you arrive on Apo Prime you will be a member of the Krypteria.” He spoke seeing Tir'ut's eyes grow larger. “I'll contact Armetus and he will arrange it.”

“Thank you my son.” Dysea said softly. She looked at him in the transmission for a long moment staring into his azure eyes in the transmission. “What were you going to do with this information Androcles?” Dysea asked him finally.

Andro returned her gaze for an equal amount of time. “You don't really want to know do you mother?” He asked finally.

Dysea met his azure blue eyes once more and shook her head finally. “No.”

“Keep me in the loop mother.” Andro said as he tilted his head away for a moment like he had detected a scent. “If we are going to keep this unknown to father for the time being you need to keep me apprised of what is going on.”

Dysea nodded. “Of course.”

Andro lifted his eyes and looked at Cha'talla and Tir'ut reviewing the information on the data pad. “Cha'talla of the Immortals.” Andro spoke waiting until Cha'talla and his son looked at him. “Hear me now... you may be many thousands of years older than me Cha'talla, but if I discover you have betrayed my mother and sister, and harm comes to them because of this, I will come for you no matter where you may run. You will not need to worry about my father for there will be nothing left of your corpse for him to find. And neither your son, nor your tribe will keep me from watching you die beneath my sword. On that you have my word as a Spartan Prince.”

“Androcles!” Dysea hissed.

Cha’talla didn’t bat an eye and nodded his head with a knowing smile. “May I expect the same of you in regards to my Blessed Wife and son while they travel within your Union young Leonidas?”

Andro nodded. “A Blood Oath then?”

“A Blood Oath it is.” Cha’talla spoke without hesitation.

“Then I look forward to the day I meet you in person sir.” Andro said.

“As do I young Leonidas. As do I.” Cha’talla spoke.

“Mother, you and Normya travel with my love always. Contact me immediately if you need anything.” Andro said. “I must go now mother. Sadi and Carisia are calling for me.”

Dysea’s emerald eyes grew quite a bit wider at this bit of information. “Carisia?” She gasped. “Andro... this is... she is the daughter of...”

“I know who she is mother.” Andro spoke with a grin and a shrug his broad shoulders. “One of the many cages I have begun to rattle mother. No doubt there will be many more.” He said. Andro’s azure blue eyes settled on Tir’ut as he stood very close to Normya. “Sslig'ne ussta dalniril Tir'ut.” He spoke. (Protect my sister)

Tir’ut nodded. “Xuil ussta dro.” He replied. (With my life)

SPARTA

She knew this place.

And she didn’t know how.

The modest sized home looked so very familiar to her yet she had never been here before. Sparta was new to her, filled with those she knew only as enemies, yet as she had walked the streets these last few days it all seemed so natural to her. She knew exactly where she was going without looking at the map on her data pad. The main entrance to the Royal Villa looked like someplace she had been before. The sights and sounds ringing in her vampire ears chimed with sensations she had experienced before. It was all very confusing for her. Ever since coming down from the INQUISITOR and becoming Aikiro’s shadow, feelings and sensations she had never felt before, but they seemed so real pulsing through her.

She had spent the last fifteen years of her life fighting the Kavalian dogs, killing them with no remorse. Her skills were beyond reproach she had heard many say, she held the rank of Major in the High Coven military, yet she had never felt so odd and out of place among her own kind as she did now. She was a vampire clone, she knew that. The last of a special batch of clones bred many years ago from the cells of known natural vampire leaders she had been told. The others of her unit had been killed through the years fighting the KFI, many of their bodies never recovered, but she had always survived. She was used now mainly for protection of high ranking officials and assassination missions. When she arrived here on Earth, she had been Empress Aikiro’s shadow for the first two days until she was ordered to walk the streets of Sparta trying to gather information and intelligence about where the KFI delegation was staying and any intelligence she could gather about city defenses and troop garrisons.

In the week she had been doing that, she had discovered only one actual garrison of Spartan troops, and that was more of a police barracks than anything else. She had witnessed dozens of dragons and their riders walking the streets, species of every kind sitting among the hundreds of cafés and shopping plazas that dotted Sparta. Her trained eye had detected no city defenses of any kind, and she determined that these Spartans had hid whatever anti-air batteries or artillery positions they had and hidden them very well. She did not think they would rely just on the PDP platforms in orbit. She had absorbed everything while walking the streets, yet somehow she always seemed to end up here in front of this house. Today she had decided to enter this home and try and discover why it felt as if she had been here before.

Her five foot nine body was muscular and lean, her black hair cut short around her face. Her breasts were firm and pushed against the sweater like turtleneck shirt she wore. Her black leather like pants was actually a form of body armor, and dual fighting knives occupied sheaths on each of her thighs. The cape and cowl hid her features almost completely, allowing her to move about the city without notice really. Juliana One glance up quickly at the sun as it began to dip below the mountains in the west. The rays cast long shadows from many of the surrounding buildings, and as she looked around carefully she saw that no one was nearby. With a simple wave of her hand she wrapped the shadows around her and blurred forward towards the house. It was a simple matter to bypass the security lock still wrapped within the shadows and Juliana One stepped into the modest home and waited until the door closed before she allowed the shadows to fade from around her body. She detected no heartbeats within the home, telling her the house was empty and she stepped into the small main foyer, her dark eyes scanning the area.

Different smells assailed her nostrils, home cooked food, the spicy smell of Lycavorian blood. These smells made her stagger slightly as images flashed across her mind. A smiling woman and man... a white haired Drow elf male with glittering amber eyes. Images of the King of the Lycavorian Union and a huge black Spartan. A gorgeous red haired woman, their naked bodies entwined with that same ebony skinned Spartan. Juliana moved forward slowly, turning to look into what appeared to be the main room. She saw several couches and chairs, a fireplace and mantel with at least a dozen holo pictures. Juliana crossed the floor to the mantel and began looking at the holo images. They were of several large dark skinned Lycavorians smiling and holding the older man and woman. Several images of the older woman and man standing in front of their home and one where they stood with the King and several others she did not recognize. Juliana's face softened somewhat as she looked at the photos, a small smile creeping across her features, until she reached the last holo frame.

Juliana froze and her eyes grew wider.

She saw images of herself in the holo picture. Her hair was much longer, but it was definitely her. Several images she was posing in what appeared to be a park with the older man and women, holding both of them tightly. Several other images had her in the arms of a Drow elf male, her face looking animated and bright. She reached forward and picked up the holo frame, her eyes wide as she watched the images change within the frame. As she lifted her hand to touch the image she heard them.

Three heartbeats.

Three powerful heartbeats and beating with calm control, but most definitely Lycavorian hearts. She had been discovered.

Slowly she slipped the holo frame into her uniform and wrapped her hands around the pommels of her dual blades. She prepared herself for action but froze once more when she heard the snik of three Nehtes extending at the same time and then the razor sharp spear head of one touched her right shoulder.

"That would not be the smartest move you ever made." The deep voice spoke calmly. "Lift your hands back up and turn around slowly assassin. I'm not in a real good mood, so no funny stuff."

Juliana did as she was instructed. She was no good to the Empress dead, and she could easily say she had simply gotten lost. As she turned her eyes focused on the face of Danny, his wolf eyes very prominent and the Nehtes in his hand unwavering as it held the spearhead only two inches from her neck. A single flick of his wrist and he could decapitate her easily. That is not what concerned her at the moment, not nearly as much as the fact that this was the man she had seen in her mind. She saw the much older Lycavorian and then the younger one in the middle surrounding her on three sides, but her eyes went back to Danny's face.

"Do you make it a habit of breaking into people's homes?" Dan snarled at her. "Cause here in Sparta that is not a nice thing to do."

"I do not wish any trouble." She spoke. "Please just allow me to leave. I have only lost my way."

Melancton shook his head. "That won't happen." He said.

"I have done nothing wrong." Juliana spoke her eyes never leaving Danny's face. "I do not wish to hurt any of you."

"You think highly of your skills vampire." Moneus spoke menacingly. "Too highly I believe."

"I could easily avoid all of you." Juliana spoke once more. "I have not because I mean no harm. Just allow me to leave."

"We can track you even in the shadows assassin." Melancton spoke. "All of us have the training for that. And we have brought the cure for your speed."

"I'm sorry... I can not let you take me." Juliana stated.

Juliana spun away from Danny's Nehtes, wrapping the shadows around her as she did. She had never been trained to fight Lycavorians, and even during all her additional hours of training no one had ever told her wrapping the shadows around her while fighting pureblooded wolves would not help her. As she shifted towards the door the younger Spartan, he appeared to be half elf as well, moved with speed belying his size. His arm flashed forward and Juliana's eyes were wide as she saw the blow coming directly for her. Stunned, she could do nothing to stop it from connecting, and his thick forearm smashed into her upper chest with enough power to stop her in her tracks and make her stagger back as she gasped for air. The shadows fell away from her as she lurched, and the older Spartan spun gracefully, sweeping his right leg in front of him and taking out both of her legs. Juliana felt her body fly back and up before slamming to the floor of the home and the air left her lungs in an audible rush of noise. As her now cobalt blue vampire eyes looked on, the space in front of her blurred and the shadows fell away from around a stunning young woman who extended her arm and pressed the cold barrel of the K12 against her temple.

Juliana stared at the dark haired young woman for she looked vaguely familiar somehow. Juliana also knew just from the sound of her heartbeat and the smell of her blood that this young woman was a perfect combination of vampire and wolf blood. Something else she had not been told to expect.

Carina jacked back the hammer on the K12 and smiled sweetly, her own dark eyes now cobalt blue in color. "I have never particularly cared from seeing someone's brains before I eat dinner." She spoke calmly. "However, if you do not stand down, I will pull this trigger without hesitation."

Juliana recognized the cold tone of her voice for what it was. The finality of death if she refused. She slowly opened her palms and began to relax on the floor of the home. The Empress would be upset, but not overtly so. Juliana would never reveal anything to the Lycavorians, and all she had really done was to enter someone's home without permission.

"Very well." She said softly.

EDEN CITY MILITARY AIRFIELD
OFFICE COMMANDER AIR GROUP
EARTH AIR DEFENSE FORCES

Zaala Randall hated when she woke early and he wasn't beside her.

It was something she had grown accustomed too through the years, for there were times when her work kept her at the Research Facility overnight, but it was something that neither of them cared for in the least. She used her finger to curl her long black hair around her elegantly curved elven ear on one side as she sifted through the data pads on his desk. This move revealed most of her flawless features and the identical beauty to her older sister.

Lieutenant Governor of Sparta Tarifa.

Zaala was the youngest daughter to War Master Tareif and his wife Palina, nearly twenty years Tarifa's junior, but she and her sister were as close as any set of twins could ever be. She spoke to her sister two, sometimes three days a week and they shared almost everything with each other. Zaala had grown up almost completely opposite of Tarifa, not holding the title of Queen of the High Elves and being the more promiscuous of Tareif's daughters. She was well known back then as a female elf that would truly rock your world between the sheets. Since female elves born and raised on Earth had far less inhibitions than their sisters from Elear, they were prone to being more open about having relationships, even with men they had just met. It was not considered loose behavior for female elves from Earth to do this while they were investigating the possibilities for marriage and a husband. Zaala had been the epitome of this type of female elf, never one to shy away from getting a man in bed, especially the Spartan wolves once they had become more open about their existence. She wanted a man and wolf like her sister, one who was incredibly well endowed, and treated her like a goddess. There were many wolves vying for that honor, but not even Zaala had expected to fall head over heels in love with a human.

Steven Randall had won her heart from the moment he stood up to that hulking Spartan some twenty plus years ago. Zaala still remembered that exact moment almost like it had happened yesterday and she could not recall how many times she had lain in Steven's arms after a breathless night of sex and stared at his sleeping face, thanking whatever gods were up there that they had given him to her. Zaala had taken his last name when they were married in a traditional elven ceremony to honor his human heritage, and she had used that name as a blanket of warmth and honor ever since. The ultimate expression of his love for her was when he asked Martin Leonidas to turn him because he did not want to lose her. To Zaala that had bound them together even tighter for all eternity. The change had not only turned him into a wolf, but ironically it had also changed him physically in some respects. He gained nearly three inches in height when the change had finally become complete, his body adding at least forty pounds of muscle to his already delicious frame. While he was not the largest man Zaala had ever been with, his size fit her like the piece of a puzzle, and he could make her see stars with his skill in their bed. When the change had granted him an additional two inches in the length of his cock and also increased thickness, Zaala's already overwhelming pleasure had increased three fold when her husband made love to her. Whenever her husband took her, it most definitely rocked her world.

Zaala Randall was considered one of the foremost experts within the Union in regards to Quantum Engineering and the new technologies developed from the Mindvoice ship. There were few who could match her intellectually, and her husband was one of them, which only served to make her elven blood call out for him even more. He was a superior pilot, considered by many as among the top ten or twenty within the Union even before Martin had changed him. While he was now part wolf, Steven clung to his human traits and history with fervor. He had asked to be changed so that he could stay with her as long as they lived, not to become a better person physically. He rarely changed to wolf form, and the Lycavorian blood in his veins now had really only increased his skills by a factor of two compared to four or five in other humans who were turned. He could have an intelligent and thoroughly analytical conversation with her in one minute, and the next he was acting like a love struck school boy as he nuzzled her elven ears making her melt into his arms. Zaala had helped to design and develop many of the new trinkets that Spartans and elves and others within the Union used to defend them. Her mind was like a sponge, absorbing everything around her, and then sorting it all out. She could attack problems and issues from inside or outside the box, and more often than not she was successful in solving them. It was Zaala who worked out the extension coefficients when deploying the Dragon Armor from the Mark Eleven saddles. She was also responsible for incorporating new techniques in the Flat Spatial Dimension Shifting technology that Lycavorians used with their Shi Viskas, making it more efficient and reducing the size of the bridle one needed to wear to operate it. She had tried to discover a way to allow those non-Lycavorians to be able to use the FSDS technology as well, but the only person within the Union without some small portion of Lycavorian blood in them that could use a Shi Viska was Isabella. That was still a mystery to many on why only she could use the FSDS technology. The only species known to exist right now that could use the Shi Viskas were Lycavorians. The FSDS Technology disrupted the cellular tissue and genes of its operator and only the advanced nature of the Lycavorian healing factor coupled with the speed in which it worked allowed them to be able to safely use the technology. Those with even small amounts of Lycavorian genes and blood in them could use the FSDS technology, but it was considered extremely lethal for any others. Why Isabella was different was a mystery, and Zaala and the others working on that project had stopped trying to figure it out.

Zaala Randall, because of her work with the Mindvoice ship, held a Level Nine Security Clearance and was privy to much of what was going on behind closed doors within the Union as far as advancements and new technologies. She communicated with Admiral O'Connor whenever she needed too, and given her status and position she was one of the few who could contact Tarifa or the King directly. Even with all that she had accomplished in her life, though she was still considered a child in elven terms, Zaala was essentially unchanged. Even with all the respect she held among so many, the thing that gave her the greatest joy was to be wrapped within her husband's embrace, on the couch in their home as they shared a mug of coffee and read to each other from a novel.

Zaala found the data pad she was looking for and shook her head at Steven's filing system. "How do you ever keep track of everything my husband?" She said softly as she lifted the data pad on Tempest Maneuvering Thruster Control and turned to perch her butt on his desktop.

Zaala's figure matched her sister's in almost every way, though she was three inches shorter than Tarifa's five foot nine frame. Her tanned body was lean and typically elven in nature with the natural musculature and definition of all elves. She had full and exceptionally firm breasts topped with pert nipples and even darker areolas. Her legs were long and her ass incredibly perfect in shape and firmness. She knew many men gawked at her when she walked the streets of Eden City or Sparta, but she also knew that those who were even part wolf could detect Steven's heavy Dogwood scent embedded in her elven blood and they would not dare approach her without respect. Those who were not Lycavorian had only to look at the glittering ring she wore on her finger, or the way she dismissed all those interested with barely a thought, to know she was well and truly in love and very taken. There had been those who had tried to approach her anyway, the majority of them being shown the error of their ways quickly by Zaala. Only one had resulted in a confrontation with Steven, and now Steven wore the thin scar on his cheek from his right eye to his jaw from the blade of a vampire male. It was the only blow the man had gotten in before Steven had killed him in the street for attempting to force himself on Zaala. The investigation had been quick but thorough, the vampire male's body destroyed and they had gone on with their lives. In Zaala's eyes, the scar only made him more handsome.

Zaala looked up when she heard the voices in the corridor outside his office and her dark eyes grew a little wider when the human female and Lycavorian male walked through the open door into the office. They both wore Union Fleet uniforms, jumpsuits of dark gray sleeves with crimson and black on the shoulders and across the waists. Zaala quickly recognized the four thin silver strips on the woman's cuffs and the three on the Lycavorian. The Asian woman was incredibly attractive, but Zaala had always found human females of the Asian persuasion fascinating in many respects. They both came up short when they saw her sitting on the edge of Steven's desk.

"I'm... I'm sorry." Miranda spoke quickly, taken aback at the absurd natural beauty of the female elf. "We were looking for Major Randall's office."

Zaala nodded her head with a disarming smile. "This is Steven Randall's office." She stated quickly sliding off the desk. "Can I help you?"

Miranda glanced at Janon quickly and then back to Zaala. She hadn't realized that officers here on Earth had begun using female elves as secretaries. Especially not ones that were as drop dead gorgeous as this one. "We were told by base operations that we would find Major Randall here this morning." Miranda spoke.

Zaala nodded as she moved closer to them. "He will be here in a few minutes. He left very early this morning to try some new modifications to the lateral thrusters on his Tempest." She said. "He landed a few minutes ago. I'm waiting for him too."

Miranda looked at the very friendly female elf and tilted her head slightly. "You are his secretary then?" She asked.

Zaala laughed and shook her head. "I am many things to Steven Randall... but I am not his secretary." She said. She motioned to the desk behind her. "I'm much more organized. I truly don't see how he keeps everything in order."

Miranda saw the data pads scattered on the desk and she looked back to Zaala. "Then you are a civilian?" She asked.

Zaala nodded. "In a manner of speaking yes." She replied.

"Yet you are standing in the office of the Commander Air Group for Earth Air Defense Forces." Janon spoke now. "This is a highly restricted area you know."

Zaala nodded. "Oh yes... I know that."

"How did you get past security?" Miranda asked.

"I walked. Just like you." She replied as she moved to the counter and began pouring herself a mug of tea. "Is there a problem?"

Miranda looked at Janon once more and then back to the female elf. "If you are not his secretary and you are not part of the military... who are you?" She asked finally.

"I could ask the same of you." Zaala spoke lifting the mug to her lips as she turned back to look at them. "You are not assigned to Steven's Squadron, and based on the rank you both wear, I'd say you are not assigned to any unit here on Earth either since they maintain the ancient Earth ranks for the most part."

"I didn't realize Major Randall allowed civilian females into restricted areas to give them tours." Miranda spoke. "Does he do this often?"

Zaala laughed. "Oh no." She exclaimed. "Steven only has eyes for his wife."

"You seem to know Major Randall very well." Miranda said. "I wonder... does his wife know you are so familiar with him?"

Zaala's dark eyes twinkled at them. "Hmmm... that depends on your definition of familiar." She said with a smile.

Janon snorted in disgust. "I don't particularly care for officers who are not satisfied with the attentions of their wives." He spoke sternly. "Mando... I think we have made a mistake."

Miranda cocked her head to the side as she stared at Zaala. "You don't seem to care that Major Randall is married." She said.

"Is that how it appears?" Zaala asked sweetly. "I wonder; do you often intrude on the affairs of people you know nothing about?"

"Miss... I think I will call security and have you escorted off this base." Miranda stated. "And then I intend to have a talk with Major Randall and his commanding officer in regards to security issues."

Zaala chuckled. "Be my guest." She said. "I'm quite sure War Master Tareif would like nothing better than to discuss base security with you."

"I don't think I care for your...?" Miranda began to say.

"...told you it would work Mela en' coiamin." The new voice broke in. A low deep voice. (Love of my life in elven)

Miranda and Janon turned as the tall man walked in wearing a basic flight suit and carrying a flight helmet. He barely glanced at them as he tossed his helmet onto the chair as Zaala put her mug of tea down on the counter.

Major Steven Randall swept his elven wife up in his arms and laid a blistering kiss on her luscious lips, Zaala wrapping her arms around his shoulders and drawing her legs up along his hips. Janon glanced at Miranda quickly his eyes wide. This was Steven Randall, all six foot one inches of him since being turned. His dark hair was cut short, his exposed skin deeply tanned. The standard flight suit for a Tempest pilot was lightly armored as they knew, but providing excellent mobility. Major Randall filled out his flight suit quite well Miranda had to admit. She and Janon watched quietly as Steven pulled back, nuzzling Zaala's four inch high elven ear firmly and watching her eyes close in bliss. They acted like a couple that was newly married within the last week.

"I missed you this morning." Zaala gasped softly. "You left so early."

Steven held her in his arms easily, Zaala's hands holding his face. The thumb of her left hand traced the long scar on his cheek absently as she gazed at him.

"I wanted to test the engine seals you designed for the lateral thrusters in the cooler air." He said with a grin. "At'loa and Tomas went up with me."

"And what did you find?" Zaala asked.

"I told you they would work." He said with a smile.

"I believe it was I who told you it would work." Zaala said with an equally bright smile.

Steven shrugged his broad shoulders. "Ah... schematics." He stated with a quick kiss of her lips. "We'll need to let Ben know so we can start getting all the Tempest engine mounts reworked."

"You have visitors?" She stated motioning with her head.

"Huh?" Steven turned quickly, still holding his wife in his arms and he saw Miranda and Janon. He silently berated himself for missing them; for once he locked his wolf nose onto his elven wife's sweet almond scent he was like a guided missile. "Who are you?" He asked quickly. "And what are you doing in my office?"

"You are Major Randall I take it?" Miranda asked even though the image she had seen on her data pad already gave her that answer.

"Yeah. I'll ask again... who are you?" Steven spoke.

"Major Randall... do you know the penalty for allowing unauthorized civilians into a restricted area?" Janon asked.

Steven looked at the big Lycavorian as he lowered Zaala back to the floor. "I don't think you answered my question Lieutenant Commander." He stated firmly. "Who are you people?"

"Major... I am Captain Miranda Lorian." She spoke. "I had come here with the intention of finding a new CAG for my ship. I was told you were one of the top candidates. Apparently my information was wrong."

"Why's that?" Steven asked.

Miranda glanced at Zaala quickly before shifting her eyes back to him. "I can't abide an officer who is married and screws around on his wife." She snapped looking at Zaala's smile. "Especially one that doesn't even attempt to hide it." She nodded her head. "I will make a formal complaint to War Master Tareif when I see him later today Major. I wonder what he will say considering you are supposed to be married to his daughter."

Steven felt Zaala tighten her grip on his hand and he glanced at her to see her shake her head minutely. He turned back to Miranda. "Suit yourself Captain." He spoke.

Miranda looked at him stunned. "You have big balls Major!" She hissed. "Do you know who I am?"

"Someone who obviously does not do their homework." Steven replied nonchalantly. "And my wife likes my balls."

"And so do I." Zaala chimed in with a smile.

Janon stepped forward. "She is a Captain in the Union Fleet Major!" He barked. "You will speak with the proper respect!"

Steven shrugged his shoulders. "Your Captain and I are equal in rank here on Earth Lieutenant Commander whatever your name is. I command a ground based Air Group while she commands a ship." He said calmly. "This is my base area. My command. I'll treat her with the same respect she shows me, which so far ain't jack shit! War Master Tareif's office is down the hall to the left. I believe he just got here. Unless you got something important to tell me in regards to my mission here, you'll excuse me if I take this stunning young lady to a late breakfast. I missed chow this morning and I'm starving. My suggestion is leave your attitude at the door when you see Tareif though. He's grumpy in the mornings."

Steven gripped Zaala's hand and pulled her along as he headed out of his office. "Come with me Mela en' coiamin, I'll give you the specs and stress ratios on the way to the mess lounge."

Miranda looked at Janon with a stunned expression on her face at what Randall had just done. "C'mon Janon." She growled. "I'm about to stomp Major Randall's world into little pieces!"

Miranda had only met Tareif twice, but each time he had struck her as the epitome of the soldier's soldier. He was rough around the edges, but exceptionally smart, and he had no trouble jumping into a work detail with any of the Spartans or Dragoons under his command. His two sons were much the same as their father and were rapidly climbing the ladder within the Union military. Randall had been right however, and when they marched into his office, they found Tareif gulping coffee and grousing over reports from the previous night's work details. He looked up after a moment or two and saw them, his eyes showing instant recognition of Miranda. A smile split his face as he came to his feet.

"Miranda Lorian." He stated loudly. "Well... look at you!"

Miranda smiled warmly. Tareif was one of the exceptions to her elves are arrogant rule, and she genuinely liked the elf War Master. He had refused to change his rank or title, and with no hesitation in the least, Admiral Riall had instituted the rank of War Master to accommodate the gruff warrior.

"War Master... it's been a long time." She stated as he came around his desk and held out his hand.

"Indeed it has. Nearly fifteen years if my memory serves me right." Tareif spoke. "I see you have made Captain now. Outstanding Miranda... outstanding."

"Tareif... this is Janon... my First Officer." Miranda said introducing the man.

Janon shook Tareif's hand. "My elven mate speaks fondly of you all the time War Master Tareif." He said. "She says with a hundred like you... the High Coven would never have conquered her world."

"Bah... all the stories are untrue." Tareif barked. "I hate violence of any kind." He said with a twinkle in his eyes. He looked back to Miranda. "What brings you to my realm Miranda? You haven't come back to drive the EADF insane have you?"

Miranda shook her head. "No. One of your officers came up on a short list to be my new CAG." She spoke. "It's a classified ship right now Tareif so I can't tell you anything."

Tareif nodded. "I understand perfectly. You must be speaking of Steven. He just came back from a pre-dawn flight. He should be in his office by now."

Miranda looked at Janon and then back to Tareif. "We just left his office." Miranda spoke. "I... I don't know how to say this Tareif... but I question his integrity."

Tareif leaned against his desk. "In what way?"

"He is married to your daughter isn't he?" Miranda asked.

Tareif nodded. "Twenty-four years next month. Tarifa, Isra and Aihola just celebrated twenty-five years together last month." He answered proudly. "I am lucky as a father, for both my daughters have chosen excellent husbands. Men who honor them and love the ground they walk upon."

Miranda canted her head slightly. “Tareif... we just saw Major Randall getting very cozy with a dark haired female elf that had somehow gotten through security and was in his office.” She said. “Neither of them seemed in the least bit ashamed at what they were doing. Frankly... I’m flabbergasted they are bold enough to do this so close to your office.”

Tareif couldn’t help but smile and shake his head. “I see they have not yet changed the picture of Zaala in the Union personnel database.”

Miranda looked at him. “What?”

Tareif nodded and held out his hand for the data pad Janon held. “May I?” He asked.

Janon nodded. “Certainly.”

Tareif activated the pad and typed in some keys before nodding his head with a smile. He held it out to them. “This is not the woman you saw in his office I take it?”

Miranda looked at the dirty blond haired elf female. She shook her head quickly. “No it’s not.” She said.

Tareif turned and took a holo picture frame from the top of his desk and held it out to her. “This is Zaala and Steven on Isra’s birthing day last year. We threw a huge party here in Eden City.” He said.

Miranda looked at the holo image, seeing the dozen or so pictures flash across the display. She recognized Tarifa, Aihola and Isra easily, along with Tareif and his wife Palina. There were many others in the photos, but she froze the last two images on the display when she saw Major Randall and the same dark haired female elf from his office. One photo had them sitting on a stone bench, Zaala between his longer legs and feeding him something. The second photo was a close up shot up them facing one another, the sun just ducking below the horizon, Zaala’s arms wrapped around his waist and his arms holding her tightly. They were just staring into each other’s eyes, but for some reason Miranda did not believe the picture had been staged.

“This is who you saw in his office yes?” Tareif asked.

Miranda held the holo frame out to him. “Yes.”

Tareif nodded. “You must forgive my daughter.” He said with a shake of his head. “She is sometimes overly protective of Steven when she does not know who you are. Did you tell her why you were there?”

“I may have mentioned it...” Miranda said softly. “I think I was just too pissed off after seeing the game I thought they were running.”

Tareif smiled. “Twenty-four years they have been together and they act as if they are still newly married at times. It is a gift they have. A gift both my birth daughters and my adopted daughter Aihola have. You know of course that is how Steven got the scar he wears on his face? Protecting my daughter.”

Miranda shook her head. “That wasn’t in his file.”

Tareif nodded. “A vampire gave it to him. The man just did not want to understand that Zaala and Steven were married. They were returning from dinner one evening and he attacked them. It was shortly after Martin turned him. The vampire thought he would make short work of Steven and take Zaala for himself. He slashed Steven in the face...” Tareif touched his own face by his eye and traced an imaginary line down to his jaw. “Witnesses were saying Zaala was screaming for him, seeing the blood and thinking him to be mortally wounded. Steven Randall grabbed the vampire’s hand when he attacked again, broke his arm like dry timber and then snapped the fool’s neck in two places. He had Martin turn him so that he would not have to bear Zaala watching him grow old and die before her eyes. His devotion to my daughter and hers to him is beyond question Miranda. The picture in the database file is of Zaala’s cousin. When it was taken, Zaala and Steven were visiting the southern continent and she did not want to come back. Believe me... Tarifa and I scolded her for days for doing such a thing, but they have not changed the database to reflect her picture.”

Miranda looked at him. “Ok I think I have made an ass out of myself then.” She said.

Tareif chuckled and stood up straight. “Nonsense.” He said. “Come... we will join them for breakfast. Have you and Janon here eaten?” He saw them shake their heads. “Then follow me.” He stated.

Zaala’s arm was laced within Steven’s as they sat close together at the long table in the mess lounge, Zaala sipping tea while Steven was tackling the heaping pile of eggs and bacon and toast on his plate. She had long ago given up trying to get her husband to eat healthier foods, and he did often acquiesce to her requests, this morning she let him splurge however.

“The fractal ratio was point three, and even during an eleven G climb at full fusion burner the seals maintained their cohesion.” Steven told her as he stabbed another piece of egg on his fork. “Shrinking it three millimeters was brilliant. It negates almost all residual plasma leakage and increases coil efficiency by six point three percent.”

“And I only estimated a four point one percent increase.” Zaala spoke. “It did not affect your turning power?”

Steven shook his head quickly. “No... and At’loa executed a split S turn with flaps fully extended. She practically came to a standstill at full throttle and turned it on its nose.”

“And you engaged the XLM-800s at the precise moment I told you?” Zaala asked.

Steven rolled his eyes. “We followed your maneuver list exactly Mela en’ coiamin.” He said leaning over and nuzzling her ear. “The seals are perfect.”

Zaala’s heart was racing as she felt him nuzzle her four inch high ears and she leaned into his caress with a smile. The shadow casting over them drew her attention and she saw her father standing in front of where they sat with the human woman and Lycavorian man from earlier. She looked up at her father.

“Papa?” She asked.

“I believe we have a misunderstanding here.” Tareif spoke as he sat down directly across from Steven and eyed his food hungrily.

Steven grinned and pushed his plate forward slightly as Miranda and Janon settled on either side of Tareif. He watched Tareif snatch up a fork that Zaala wasn’t using and stab a piece of bacon from the plate. His dark eyes fell on Miranda and Janon.

“I understand the Captain and her Lieutenant Commander here made some accusations without attempting to discover all the facts.” Steven spoke setting his fork down as Zaala handed him the coffee she held in her hand.

“They haven’t changed Zaala’s photo in the Union personnel database Steven.” Tareif said. “They saw how you and Zaala were acting and assumed that the photo in the database was accurate. They thought it was Zaala.”

“Assumptions are...” Steven began.

“The mother of all fuck ups.” Miranda finished. “Yes... I read that book by Benjamin too.” She said. “It might have helped if your wife had told us who she was right away. And please forgive my language.”

Zaala looked at her and smiled as she took the mug back from Steven. “You did not ask Captain.” Zaala spoke with a calm smile. “And regardless of the rank and uniform you wear, it is not good OPSEC to just announce who I am to whoever appears in my husband’s office. I do hold a Level Nine Clearance Captain, and doing that to people I don’t know is not the smartest thing. As for your language... I have heard far worse from my husband and father. You should hear them when they are drunk and together with Isra.”

“We are not that bad.” Steven spoke turning to look at her. “Are we?”

Tareif chuckled. “I believe we are.” He said.

Miranda nodded her head with a small smile of her own now, amused at the antics of the three of them. “You are very correct Mrs. Randall.” She said.

“It is just Zaala.” She said quickly her dark eyes gazing at Miranda evenly. Almost as if she was measuring her up.

“And forgive me for questioning your integrity Major Randall.” Miranda spoke turning back to Steven.

Miranda let her eyes linger on the long scar that adorned the right side of his face and decided that his call sign was aptly given. His face was restful and calm right now, but given the location of the scar, Miranda was quite sure if he ever got angry that scar would give him a frightening visage. In its current state however, it did not mar his looks in any way and in fact only added to the rugged handsomeness of his features. That she looked at him in such a way surprised Miranda and she berated herself, considering what his elven wife looked like.

Steven waved his hand in a dismissive manner. “Water under the bridge.” He spoke quickly. “And Zaala and I tend to act rather possessively towards one another sometimes.”

“I act possessively with good reason.” Zaala said squeezing his arm and looking at him with those large dark eyes and a heart stopping smile. “You don’t often get beautiful women who come looking for you in your office Steven.”

Steven looked at her. "As if I need anything more than you." He spoke softly before kissing her tenderly. Miranda watched Zaala's face soften even more, though her comment had surprised her. Steven sat back in the chair now, his food forgotten and looked at Miranda. "Would you care to tell me why Miranda 'Mando' Lorian is here on Earth wanting to talk to me?" He asked calmly. "I already have a job I'm very happy with."

"Your name came up on a short list of possible CAGs for an assignment I have been given." Miranda spoke.

"My name?" Steven said. "I don't know why."

"Sixty-seven kills during the Evolli War is why." Janon spoke up now. "Two FVAs with cluster, two Distinguished Valor Awards and a DFC. That is why?"

"Two FVAs?" Steven asked surprised. He looked at Zaala. "I have two of those?"

Miranda and Janon looked at him stunned as Zaala nodded. "Yes you do." She answered. She turned and looked at Miranda. "He doesn't wear his dress uniform very often and when he does I am the one who puts it together for him."

Tareif chuckled. "As your mother does for me." He said.

"You don't... you aren't aware of the decorations you have been awarded?" Miranda asked.

Steven looked at her. "Colorful medals don't interest me." He said. "They don't mean spit in the cockpit in the middle of a fight. You know that as well as I do. When is the last time you wore your uniform?"

Miranda grinned. "Three years ago." She answered.

"And you got more fruit salad than I do." Steven said leaning forward and looking at her. "Miranda 'Mando' Lorian. Hero of Alba Tau. Four FVAs with clusters, three DFAs and two Distinguished Flying Commendations with clusters. A shitpot full of lesser medals to go along with the three WIA Crimson Hearts for wounds received."

"I... I was no hero." Miranda whispered.

"That's not the way I heard it." Steven spoke gently. "You took out two Evolli heavy gun positions with just your pulse cannons, and when they ran dry you used your engines to melt the third by passing only five meters above it at high speed."

"That one got me shot down." Miranda corrected him.

Steven nodded. "And you saved the lives of six thousand Spartans who were on the ground and about to come under fire by those heavy gun positions." Steven said. "I'd say that makes you a hero."

Tareif nodded. "As would I."

"I... I lost my entire Squadron." Miranda said meeting his eyes.

Steven met her gaze without flinching and nodded his head again. "We all lost a lot in those twenty-one hours Captain." He said softly. "We all lost a lot. Zaala's love helped me to let go of my demons from that war... maybe you should do the same."

Miranda shook her head quickly. "I didn't come here to trade war stories or be analyzed Randall." She said with no hostility in her voice, no emotion in her voice at all. "I came to offer you a new job."

"What's wrong with the one I have now?" Steven asked with a smile.

Miranda looked at Tareif. "War Master... you'll forgive me if I have to ask if you can leave us alone. This is classified at Level Ten, I'm sorry."

Tareif nodded. "I understand." He said rising to his feet. "I hope you will stop by once more before you leave Miranda."

Miranda smiled. "I will War Master. Thank you." She watched him nod before turning back to Zaala. "I'm sorry... but..."

Zaala shook her head. "There is no need to apologize." She said getting to her feet. She leaned over and kissed Steven deeply, caressing his face as she did. "I will see you for lunch my husband."

Steven nodded. "That's a date Mela en' coiamin." He answered.

Zaala looked at Miranda. "It was nice meeting you Captain." She said. "Perhaps we will see more of you in the future."

Miranda watched Zaala as she turned smartly and moved to catch up with her father. She turned back and looked at Steven as she slid the data pad across the table. "These are the initial details." She spoke softly. "I can't tell you more unless you accept. I suggest you look this over and then take some time to think about it."

Steven picked up the pad. “Level Ten huh?” He said. “That’s cool.”

“I suggest you read Major.” Miranda said.

“Zaala comes with me.” Steven said.

Miranda looked at Janon quickly and then back to Steven. “We don’t have any slots for civilians on this ship Major Randall.”

Steven set the pad down. “Then I can give you my answer right now.” He said getting to his feet. “Zaala is my wife and mate. She goes where I go. That is a decision we made together when we were married. It is why I returned here to Earth after the Evolli War. This is where Martin sent her to continue her work on the Quantum aspects of the Mindvoice ship.”

“She was aboard NORMYA’S LIGHT with you?” Janon asked surprised.

Steven nodded. “She may seem to be eccentric Miranda; sometimes that comes across as arrogant, but she is anything but. She ran the Astrometrics Sensor Array on NORMYA’S LIGHT. And Dysea and Isabella didn’t cut here any slack either.”

Miranda looked up at him. This was the man she wanted on the ARIZONA, of that she had no doubt. This was a man who cared more for his pilots than he did for any medals and that is what she wanted. “I’ll talk to Ben and see what we can come up with.” She said finally. “I can’t make any promises.”

Steven nodded. “619.” He said.

Miranda looked at him. “619?”

Steven nodded again. “That’s our house number in Officer Country. When you get your answer that’s where I’ll be. No offense Captain... but if it’s Level Ten... it’s probably one of Ben or Martin’s wildly dangerous schemes. That doesn’t bother me... but if I buy it... I want you to be the one to tell my wife. Not some officer coming here to Earth who doesn’t even know her.”

Miranda got to her feet and looked at him. “I could offer the job to someone else.” She said.

Steven nodded. “Yep.” He spoke. “And that won’t bother me one bit either. 619 Captain Lorian. Have a nice day.”

Miranda and Janon stood there slightly stunned as Steven Randall smiled and headed for the door to the mess lounge. They heard him laugh as two pilots in flight gear walked up to him and they began talking animatedly as they left. She watched Steven put his arms around the shoulders of the two pilots as the three of them left the mess lounge.

“We should go with someone else.” Janon spoke turning back to her.

Miranda shook her head. “No.” She said instantly. “Let’s find a transmitter and get in touch with Ben.” She stated looking at him. “I want him Janon. And if we have to make a position for his wife so that he agrees... that’s just what we’ll do.”

“May I ask why Mando.” Janon asked.

Miranda met his eyes with a smile. “The man who just walked out of here will do everything in his power, including giving his own life, to make sure he brings as many of his pilots back as he can. He’s a leader Janon. Most of the pilots we are getting have been flying for what, two or three years. They’ve never experienced anything like Alba Tau. One day they will Janon, and if Randall is leading them, he’ll bring the majority of them home. Put him in command of those pilots and I’ll have an Air Wing that could tear the ass from the Kavalian Empire all by itself.”

“There are other leaders Miranda.” Janon spoke.

“Not like him Janon.” She answered.

“What makes him so different?” Janon asked.

“Major Randall has faith Janon.” Miranda said softly. “And he has attitude. Attitude and faith. That is a deadly combination. No... Major Randall is the man we want. Cancel the other interviews Janon. Let’s go talk to Ben.”

Aricia walked confidently and calmly down the wide corridor of her Beloved's ship, the gold trimmed crimson cape just brushing the deck of the corridor as she walked.

Twenty-five years had changed Aricia from the young, wide eyed female wolf the first day she had stared into Martin's deep brown eyes. He was so imposing, so powerful and so very confident. When compared to Anja and Dysea at the time, Aricia had felt so very inferior even though it was she who was the pureblood Lycavorian. Her times with Martin had stolen her breath away, and then when they had bitten each other and let instinct take over and become Anomes her life had begun to change.

What Joric had done to her would have destroyed her if not for Isheeni. It also made her a far stronger woman than when she had first met Martin Leonidas. Those months on Enurrua had changed her significantly, almost resulting in her death. Isheeni had kept that from happening, and that night had been the defining moment in her young life. When Martin had come to Enurrua and crushed an empire to get her back, her life had begun anew. Their connection as soulmates had become so much more powerful and focused. Their lovemaking had become more passionate and intense, almost to the point that they could pleasure each other just within their minds. She had become a complete woman after that.

And far more deadly.

It was without question that in terms of Mindvoice powers, Aricia was second only to Martin, though her son with Martin was rapidly closing the gap and she had no doubts he would one day surpass her and his father. And twenty-five years of training with him, Dysea and Bella had also made her into a Black Widow spider in many respects. Exceedingly lethal. She was able to use her Mindvoice powers to enhance her physical abilities just as Martin, Andro and Zarah could. The explanation behind Zarah having this ability had long eluded them, but after a few years it no longer mattered. The four of them were the only ones able to use this skill outside the riders of Mjolnir's Hand. While the many Bonded Pairs could use something similar, it did not have the power or focus. Aricia had given her Beloved four strong children, all of them bonded to dragons and growing stronger by the day. Aricia was truly a Queen in every definition of the word. She could be the most compassionate person in the universe, or the most savage. She had spent years learning of combat from Martin and the finest warriors in the Union. During the Evolli War she had led countless missions on her own, earning her the admiration and respect of even the gruffest Spartan warrior who may have thought her too young. When Aricia spoke now, everyone listened. She was incredibly intelligent and could almost always think outside the norm and figure a way to complete a task.

Aricia Leonidas was also the one that Martin's Queens all deferred to in regards to almost everything. While they all loved Martin, and he loved them all in return, because she was his anome Aricia was considered senior among the Queens of the Union. She had an insight into Martin Leonidas that none of them would ever have, and knowing this they naturally gravitated to her. Aricia had never imagined herself in this position when she first came into Martin's life. Soulmate to the King of the Lycavorian Union, and lover of four woman who she considered even more beautiful than herself. They never denied each other attention, and their love for each other was just as powerful as their love for Martin. In times like this when they were separated from the others because of their duties and such, it only brought them closer. She and Bella had done nothing but talk of past and present things while transiting to their meeting. They trained together several hours a day, ate together and made passionate love to each other in the evening. They were both concerned for Dysea, but For'mya had contacted them to let them know what was going on, and while they still worried it had helped to alleviate some of their concerns. Isabella was more concerned because of the deep love she had for Dysea, and it seemed whenever she and Dysea were apart they worried for each other and Martin more than even themselves. It did not stop them from taking comfort in each other however, as attested to the twin puncture marks low on Aricia's neck, just below her ArmorPly collar. Bella had a way of being able to make all of them do anything she asked when she bit them. Perhaps it was because of her darker and more dominant side, but whatever the reason, Bella could make her fellow queens quiver in delight.

Aricia came to the large double door and past her hand over the sensor to the side. The twin blast doors responded immediately and she entered the bridge of MJOLNIR'S HAND. As with all the newer class LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers, the bridge of MJOLNIR'S HAND had been refit to match them. It was laid out in such a way that Martin or Komirri could stand in the center and shout commands in any direction. Helm controls were directed from the main console in the center of the massive view window, navigation and operations directly behind the helm officer at consoles facing each other. Tactical and Communications were slightly elevated on opposite sides of the bridge to either side of the main doorway she had just entered. She saw Komirri and Bella standing in the center of the bridge; Isabella dressed almost identical to her, while Komirri wore the standard Fleet uniform of dark gray and crimson. She crossed the open area between them until she was standing next to them. Komirri and Bella turned as she came up.

“We are at the coordinates.” Bella spoke with a smile. [Did I wear you out Aricia?]

Aricia looked at her seductively with vivid azure colored eyes. [We shall see tonight won't we Bella?] [I can hardly wait.] Isabella answered.

They both turned as Vonis moved from the main sensor console and looking over the chief's shoulder. He wore a standard ArmorPly uniform with a K12 strapped to his right thigh and a wicked looking hand knife strapped to his abdomen on the left side for easy drawing.

“Sensors show no other ships in the area.” He spoke as he came up to them.

“Our Strike Wing is Shrouded and maintaining positions to cover us.” Komirri told them.

“Are we early?” Aricia asked.

Vonis shook his head. “I believe Joyar is on a Shrouded ship.” He spoke. “Making sure we came alone no doubt.”

“Would he have access to such a ship?” Aricia asked.

Vonis shrugged. “It's very possible if he is traveling with the insurgents. I think we all agree he is involved with them far more than he wanted us to believe.” He answered. “They would most definitely have Shroud capable ships.”

“Which also reveals to us that they are far more organized than Aikiro believes.” Bella spoke. She turned to Komirri. “Send out a low frequency, short range transmission Komirri. We are here as we said we would be. Reveal yourselves or we will immediately return to Union space and regard the High Coven insurgents as hostile and deal with them accordingly.”

Komirri nodded. “Repeating every twenty seconds?” He asked.

Isabella nodded. “That is sufficient yes.”

Komirri nodded and moved to his communications station. Aricia stepped closer to Isabella, taking her hand. “How long do we wait?” She asked.

Bella looked at Vonis. “Brother?”

“Joyar isn't stupid enough to think he can try anything Bella.” Vonis answered. “If he is sincere... and the insurgents are sincere... I would think thirty minutes. No more.”

“What if they are not here yet?” Bella asked. “Perhaps they had trouble coming here?”

Vonis shook his head. “Joyar has my personal channel. Now that he knows it is active once more he would have contacted us.”

Aricia turned to where Komirri was giving orders to his COM officer. “Komirri... tell them we will wait only fifteen minutes and then we will leave.” She looked at Bella and Vonis. “Tell them fifteen and we wait thirty. It makes us appear more than serious in regards to this meeting.”

Komirri nodded his head to his operator and walked back over to them. “The signal is going out.” He said.

“Now we wait.” Bella spoke.

High Coven DARKBROOD-Class Frigate ORCAVA

“It's a short range, low frequency transmission.” The woman spoke turning in her chair to look at the ORCAVA'S Commander. “Repeating every twenty seconds.”

“Let's hear it.” The man spoke leaning forward in his command chair.

“...arrived as agreed. We will wait fifteen minutes and then return to Union space and regard any insurgent contact as hostile. We will act in the best regards of the Union and dismiss further contact. No distinction will be made between High Coven forces and insurgent forces. This is your only chance.”

“It's showing the authorization codes of both Queen Aricia and Queen Isabella.” The woman said.

The Commander turned to the Eanae male standing next to his chair. “Isabella and Aricia?” He asked.

Joyar nodded. “The two of them are the more militant of his Queens.” He spoke softly. “And perhaps the most deadly of the five. You are aware of Isabella’s skills, and no doubt they have improved considerably in the last quarter century sharing a life and bed with Leonidas. He is said to have trained all of them extensively. The Evolli War showcased Aricia’s proficiency at warfare, and she is regarded as the most powerful of his Queens within Mindvoice and the one who he holds closest to his heart as well.”

“Can we trust them Joyar?” The man asked. “The General’s ultimate goal was to achieve the Union’s aide, but even he did not know how this meeting would evolve. Our assassination attempt of the Kavalian delegation on this very ship may have killed whatever hopes we had of Union help.”

Joyar nodded. “It is a possibility yes... but I do believe we can trust them.” He replied. “If I did not... I would not have brought my entire family on this trip.”

“You can damn sure bet that there’s an entire Strike Wing out there somewhere.” The Commander spoke.

Joyar nodded again. “Undoubtedly.” He said. “But would you send two of your Queens into The Wilds with just one ship. Even if it was a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser?”

The man nodded. “Good point.”

Joyar looked at the former High Coven commander. “You broke from the High Coven because you believed in what the General and the insurgents were doing Maros.” Joyar said. “This is the opportunity that the General has waited for. Do we just throw it away?”

Maros held his gaze for several more seconds before exhaling heavily and turning his head. “Tactical... de-shroud the ship.” He barked. “And pray we are not making a mistake.”

MJOLNIR’S HAND

“Admiral Komirri! High Coven DARKBROOD-Class Frigate de-shrouding off our port quarter!” The officer at the tactical station snapped out loudly.

“Stand by!” Komirri barked out looking at Isabella and Aricia. He smiled. “Looks like you were right Milady.” He said.

“Let’s see where this takes us first.” Bella spoke.

“Admiral... they are hailing us?”

Vonis nodded and looked at the COM officer. “Narrow beam! To the main bridge holo disc!”

“Transferring.”

The holo disc in the center of the floor of the bridge shimmered to life and they were looking at the Eanae Joyar and a pureblood vampire officer sitting in the command chair of the frigate.

“Joyar.” Vonis spoke calmly. “A DARKBROOD frigate my friend. You travel in style. I’m impressed.”

The Eanae chuckled softly. “I said I would put you in contact with the Insurgents.” He said. “Queen Aricia... Queen Isabella... may I present Commander Maros.”

The man rose from his chair slowly looking at the transmission calmly. “An honor.” He spoke.

“We almost left Commander Maros.” Isabella spoke calmly. “Aricia and I are not the most patient of individuals.”

“I... I am only protecting those I fight with Queen Isabella.” He answered. “Our actions on that very ship you occupy did not advance our status among you or King Leonidas I’m sure.”

“In that you would be correct.” Aricia said.

“Our leader... he was not happy that some of our other commanders took this tact when they decided to attack the Kavalian delegation.” Maros spoke quickly. “I have been instructed to offer my sincere apologies for that, and to insure you it will not happen again.”

Isabella glanced at Aricia. “I understand from Queen For’mya and Prince Resumar that your men fought bravely Commander. They were just overmatched from the outset.”

Maros nodded. “Against Queen For’mya, Prince Resumar and their dragons... yes I could not agree more.” He said. “While she is not considered to be the strongest fighter of King Leonidas’s Queens, she is more than a match for any of our soldiers. I...”

“Commander... why don’t you dispense with attempting to stroke our egos. None of us have egos to stroke.” Aricia stated bluntly. “We are here to discuss matters and I assume you have been given the authority to act, at least in some regard, on behalf of this General.”

“I have Lady Aricia.” Maros answered.

Aricia nodded. “Then Colonel Vonis will give you instructions and Isabella and I will meet you in the landing bay.”

Maros watched in the transmission as Aricia and Isabella turned and left the bridge. He cut his eyes to Vonis. “They do not mince words Prince Vonis.” He spoke.

Vonis smiled and shook his head. “No they do not. I suggest you keep that in mind.” He said. “And I am no longer a Prince. You have a transport?”

Maros nodded. “A long range G9, yes.”

“Then why don’t you and Joyar use it to come over.” Vonis spoke. “Joyar... have your family ready to transfer over as well. I will send our MENKLA transport to conduct a dry seal dock.”

“So you will keep your word?” Joyar asked the relief in his voice very evident.

Vonis nodded. “You will find that King Leonidas and his Queens do not break their word when they give it.” He spoke.

“I will not forget this Vonis.” Joyar spoke seeing Vonis nod in the transmission.

SODRAG

“...contact you when we return to Apo Prime.” Golina told Adriana and Malic as they stood in the departing passenger area of the small spaceport on SODRAG.

“I have some time coming to me...” Megdar spoke looking at his daughter and son. “It... it is time we became a family again. Time for your mother and I to atone for what we have put you through all these years Malic; Adriana. Time for...”

Malic looked at his father and shook his head. “No father.” He spoke looking at Adriana who smiled at him. “Better that we leave the past where it belongs and begin fresh.”

The last two days they had done just that.

Seeing Malic during that ceremony, the pride and accomplishment that he had achieved when no one believed in him had changed Megdar. The huge, silvery/purple dragon rested comfortably on the ground behind where Malic stood those amethyst colored eyes clear and shining with intelligence. They had never been apart in the last two days, and many times he had felt the tremors within Mindvoice as they spoke to each other on a level he could not achieve. Seeing his son upon that dragon’s back, seeing him wearing the shimmering Dragon Armor of a member of Mjolnir’s Hand, that had brought it all home for Megdar. The son he thought would never amount to anything without his help had achieved something Megdar had never suspected. He had failed the Union Academy yes, but as a member of Mjolnir’s Hand he had automatically been promoted to Star Commander. Parts of their duties within the Union were to act as Ambassadors of a sort to the many different species that called the Union home. And Megdar knew that to become a member of the King’s revered unit, his son must have been very special indeed. Until two days ago he had never thought much of the men and women who were members of that unit, but watching the Acceptance Ceremony and then mingling with them afterwards had changed all of his views on the members of Mjolnir’s Hand as well as the Durcunusaan.

Watching Malic standing proudly among the ranks of dragons and men, listening to Malic’s numerous achievements as they were read off in the small promotion ceremony afterwards, it had humbled Megdar. Listening to all that his son had accomplished even without his guidance, it was these things had filled Megdar with a sense of guilt and dishonor that shamed him. It was then that he finally admitted to himself he was holding onto a hatred that was not only wrong, it was a hatred that would eventually destroy him. And his family. Megdar had wept in his mate’s arms the night after the ceremony, wept in shame for all he had done. Those tears had been cleansing in a way, for he had woke the next morning with new purpose, a purpose to discover who his children were once more. It would take time Megdar knew, time to let go of all the past distrusts and suspicions, but what he had begun here two days ago was something he would continue into the future.

He and Golina had spent the day after the ceremony learning of their son and daughter once more. He truly did not want to leave, but his command waited for him and he needed to return. In the last two days however, he had learned who his son and daughter had become, and he could not have been prouder. He made a silent vow to begin making amends for everything he had done.

Megdar nodded his head at Malic's words. "You are right." He spoke softly. "Adriana will remain here with you?"

Malic nodded. "A member of Mjolnir's Hand I may be... but we are still very new to the knowledge that has been given to Vincix and I, and I must still pass my exams in three months. Adriana will be able to help me."

"And Tuvar arrives next week to be with you?" Golina asked holding Adriana's hands tightly.

Adriana nodded. "Prince Androcles has made it so he could conduct many of his duties from here on this base. Those he can't will be given to another officer to manage. I think we may visit Sparta when he arrives. It is something neither of us has ever done."

Megdar took Malic's arm and pulled his son to the side to speak privately with him. To Malic, this is what he had waited for his entire life from his father. He held no malice towards his parents, his bonding with Vincix making that emotion impossible when it came to family. Megdar reached up and placed his hand on Malic's shoulder, spreading his fingers out on the wide crimson shoulder boards that signified his unit.

"Malic..." He spoke softly.

"No father." Malic said. "I meant what I said. "Let us leave the past behind us. We..."

Megdar shook his head. "That is not what I was going to say." He said. "I was going to speak of Princess Eliani and this Nyla Sinthe."

Malic looked at him oddly. "I don't... I don't understand."

"You told me that they are connected in a way that makes them almost one mind yes?" Megdar asked.

Malic nodded. "Yes."

"The Princess... her aura and her blood burns for you my son. Her scent... her scent is sweeter when she is near you, anyone who is wolf can detect this. If this is how you affect her, then I can only assume this Nyla feels the same if they are connected as you say." Megdar spoke.

Malic dropped his dark blue eyes and shook his head slightly. "I don't know... I don't know how to approach them father. Or if I should even try." He said softly.

"Do you desire them as your scent tells me you do?" Megdar asked.

Malic lifted his eyes. "Yes." He stated without hesitation.

"You are an Alpha Malic." Megdar spoke. "She is an Alpha female with the blood of our King in her veins. The blood of a Leonidas. She is waiting for you to come forward and claim her. Claim them. If they are what you truly desire... then as I did with your mother do not hesitate and make them yours. As old as I am... I have seen my share of female wolves make their intentions known to the male they want. That she wants you... that they want you is quite obvious my son. Act on it Malic. And make them shout your name to the moon. And also as I do your mother... worship them Malic... for they are your future as well. The future of our family."

Malic met his father's eyes and took a deep breath. "Then I will do just that." He stated confidently.

Megdar nodded. "Good." He said with a smile. He gripped his arm as they turned back to where Golina was hugging Adriana. "I will return to my command now. I have several lessons that I insist my officers study and commit to memory. They are tactical lessons learned from centuries ago, but I have found many of them still apply. I will send them to you. You may find them interesting."

Malic nodded. "Thank you father."

Golina released Adriana as they came up and she turned to Malic. Her eyes were moist and she immediately embraced him tightly, barely able to get her arms around his waist. "Watch out for your sister Malic." She said looking up into his eyes.

"I will mother." He stated with a smile.

Golina patted his broad chest. "And do not keep those two females waiting forever." She said with a glint in her eye. "Your father did not make me wait."

Malic chuckled and leaned over to kiss her cheek. "Travel with the gods mother." He said squeezing her hands.

Golina nodded. "I will contact you when I return to Apo Prime and see about having some of your things sent here from your apartment there. I imagine you will be securing your own home here on Earth." She said.

Malic nodded. "That is my hope." He said. "Within Gytheio, Sparta's ancient port city."

Golina nodded. "Good." She pushed him to arms length and smiled. "I will try and return in a few weeks to visit with both of you if that is something you both wish?"

Adriana nodded. "It is mother." She spoke.

Golina saw Malic nod and smile at her. "Very much so." He stated.

Golina nodded once more and stepped back to grip Megdar's arm. "I will see you then." She stated.

A loud chime echoed in the spaceport and the voice announced the transport was leaving for orbit. Megdar nodded his head. "We must go." He said.

"Be safe." Adriana told them as she took Malic's hand.

They both nodded and turned to head for the ramp that would take them to the transport. Malic felt Vincix move closer and turned to look at him.

They have changed my brother. He spoke so that both Malic and Adriana could hear him within Mindvoice.

Malic nodded. "Yes they have."

Then you only have one other task before you are complete. Vincix spoke as Malic met his amethyst eyes.

Are you going to badger me about that as well? Malic asked.

Vincix chuckled in Mindvoice and Adriana smiled. Until you follow where your heart leads. As I now have with Arydun.

Adriana squeezed Malic's hand. He is right Malic. Now do what your bloods burn for you to do. Vincix and I will find something to do won't we Vincix.

I believe we can come up with something. Perhaps a study plan for my bonded brother that will allow him to score perfect on his upcoming exams. Vincix answered.

Malic rolled his eyes. Will I have time to pursue other things as well? He asked.

Vincix butted Malic in the shoulder with his snout. We will see what we can do.

Malic reached up and placed his palm flat on Vincix's snout, staring into his eyes. My... my life has truly begun again. He said.

As mine has. Vincix answered. Now go... do what your blood burns for you to do. Adriana and I will see you tomorrow and we will begin our training together.

Malic took a deep breath and nodded. He leaned over and kissed his sister on the head. "Keep him out of trouble." He said.

Adriana nodded. "He will keep me out of trouble." She said.

Malic grinned and stood up straight. He nodded to them and turned to leave the spaceport with confident strides.

Vincix lowered his head even more until he was staring at Adriana. We should start with a lesson plan.

Adriana nodded. "We will need to add several items from the manuals he has at his bungalow." She said as they began walking. "It will be intensive since he only has three months, but it is not impossible."

ELIANI AND NYLA'S BUNGALOW

It had been a very hard two and a half days for them.

Their emotions had run the gambit from anger to jealousy to stunned shock and then back to anger. Discovering Malic was the final member of Mjolnir's Hand and set them reeling, only to have the situation with Anja and the Hadarian Arch Ministry cause considerable anger within Eliani about what they thought of her upbringing. Andro had practically ordered her to remain at SODRAG and not attempt to return to Hadaria with their parents and kick someone's ass. He had told them to take two days to come to terms with everything and then get back to work for he needed them. What the Arch Ministry was doing alone would have been enough to deal with, but discovering that Malic and Vincix were the last of the Sacred Circle was the most prominent in their minds.

Seeing him gazing at them in the stands with those devastating eyes, his features hidden behind the Dragon Armor, his male aura coursing through Eliani and by virtue of that through Nyla as well. He had suddenly vaulted into a position of incredible importance and with that came mastery over Mindvoice abilities neither of them would ever have. It had suddenly made them feel inferior to him in some way. Images of him taking other women as his mates flashed through their minds, and they had remained away from him trying to come to terms with this new knowledge. Through it all, since that day on the ceremony field, their blood burned for him now more than it ever had. He was no longer a man that would need their support, now he had become the alpha wolf fate and destiny had intended him to become.

Nyla came out of their small kitchen dressed in the loose fitting sun dress. Her long blond hair fell well below her shoulders as it always did when she was off duty. She carried the two plates and moved to the table as Eliani pulled down two glasses from the cupboard and poured them both a glass of Spartan Wine.

“Maybe it won’t be as bad as you think Ussta Che.” Nyla spoke as she put the plates on the table. They each had sandwiches and a small portion of green vegetables on them over the top of spicy cooked noodles.

Eliani moved into the small room with the table and nodded. “Maybe... but I wouldn’t trust the Arch Ministry as far as I could throw them.” She stated coming up to the table. “They have always given mother a hard time about how she and Aunt Vana rule. They just can’t seem to get past the part where they have to move and change with the times.”

“You think these charges will be worrisome?” Nyla asked as Eliani came up to her.

Eliani held out the glass. “I don’t know. They never gone this far before.” She stated. “I bet my Aunt is dancing up a storm thinking she’ll get her hands on Retta and Calyb and turn them into the automations she has made of her own children.”

“Take them from their Bonded Ones?” Nyla spoke shaking her head. “Your mother and father would never allow that.”

Eliani nodded. “That’s why I’m glad father went with her.” She said. “Elder Healer Buonau is a grade ‘A’ bitch and always has been. And her daughter Duewa has hated me ever since I told her she was an arrogant, obnoxious wench and if she wanted to challenge me I’d beat her like a two riyal whore.”

Nyla chuckled softly as she nodded. “I remember that.” She said as they sat down at the table. “It was quite amusing to watch the look on her face. I imagine she ran home to her mother and told her what you had learned from Anja.”

Eliani laughed. “My mother didn’t teach me that one.” She said. “I learned that one from Uncle Danny.”

The chime on their door sounded and Nyla turned. “I will get it.” She said rising to her feet. “Did you tell her to contact you when she arrived?” Nyla asked as she moved to the door. She turned back when Eliani didn’t answer. “Ussta Che?” She asked as she passed her hand over the sensor pad.

Eliani felt him first and her fern green eyes grew wide as she turned to look at the door. His aura was pulsating powerfully, radiating from him like a beacon and it was causing her blood to grow hot with desire and passion. His aura was focused and directed, not like an alpha on the prowl for a female. His aura was focused on her and Nyla and he was holding back the majority of it, caressing their senses letting them know what he wished and waiting to see if they would respond. Nyla turned to the door as the sun light shone into the bungalow and her green eyes green wide when she saw him filling the doorway.

“Ma... Malic!” She gasped.

Malic had changed into civilian clothes, a dark gray t-shirt and dark blue pants. The shirt conformed to his muscular body, outlining every ridge and contour of his chest and abdomen. He had waited until he was outside their bungalow before releasing his aura. Their scents filled his head and made him smolder with want. He touched Eliani with his aura, knowing that Nyla would feel it as well through her. Even Sadi had never affected him in this way, causing him to tremble with need and excitement. His blue eyes took in the curves of Nyla’s face, the delicate lines of her lips and cheeks, the way the dress outlined every delicious curve of her body. He watched as Eliani rose from the table she was sitting at, her lunch forgotten as she gazed at him. She wore a simple short skirt and top with large sleeves, her feet bare on the cool floor as she stepped up next to Nyla. Malic gazed at them standing together and the sweet buttercup and maple and willow scents were very near too much. Eliani's aura was hitting him back as she had on the ship, more a matter of instinct than her controlling it.

"Malic?" Eliani stammered softly as she gripped Nyla's hand.

"I have..." Malic stared at them, the color of their skin, and the brightness of their eyes. All of it was combining to literally drive him insane. His eyes followed the curve of their moist lips and the arc of their throats. "I wanted to..."

"Malic..." Eliani finally spoke getting her raging hormones under some semblance of control. "Malic... why are you here?"

"I wanted too... I have asked your father Eliani..." Malic looked at them standing so close together. "I wanted to tell you that..."

Eliani and Nyla inched closer to him, everything else forgotten as his driftwood and ocean scent ignited all kinds of receptors in Eliani's body and transferred to Nyla's as well through their bond. "Tell us what Malic?" Nyla asked softly, almost cooing the words out.

Malic looked at them now and something inside him just switched on. "Ah... nubous it!" He declared.

Eliani and Nyla both gasped as he stepped close to them and gathered both of them in his arms, his lips descending onto Nyla's moist lips. Their bodies went rigid for a split second, unsure of how to respond, and then they melted into his embrace and both of them groaned loudly. Eliani's eyes were ablaze as she clutched Nyla's waist with one arm, her other wrapped around Malic's broad shoulders. Nyla's arm joined hers there as her other arm drew both of them tighter. Nyla's light green eyes closed dreamily as passion and desire all her own crushed through her, enveloping Eliani as well as Malic. Her entire body grew hot, her nerves singing out in happiness that was all her own. This was not sensations and emotions she was feeling because of her beloved Eliani. These were feelings and sensations she was feeling because of what Malic was doing to her.

She gasped loudly when Malic tore his lips from her, turned his head slightly and claimed Eliani's full lips. He had lifted them both off the floor now, his arms crushed around their lithe bodies with possessive fervor. As these new vibrations coursed through her, Nyla gazed at Eliani and Malic wide eyed as they shared an equally blistering kiss. She watched as he pulled his head away quickly, their eyes large with the trembling engulfing them.

"I want you!" Malic's voice was raspy but very clear. "I want you both! For the women you are! I want to claim you both! I don't care what I have to do! Tell me how I can prove this to you! Tell me what I need to do! I... I need you both! Now! Tomorrow! Forever!"

Eliani and Nyla looked at each other for a long moment, their passion undeniable, and the joy both of them felt at his words evident in how their lips trembled.

"Our bedroom!" Eliani gasped turning to look back at Malic. "Hurry!"

"Where?" Malic exclaimed beginning to move forward into the bungalow.

Nyla released her arm from around Eliani's waist and pointed past the table with their forgotten lunches. "That way!" She panted loudly.

SPIRIT OF HADARIA

Martin lay face down on the large bed, the sheet covering his naked lower body, while his upper body rested on the edge. His arms hung over the side of the bed, the data pad in one hand, the glass of Spartan wine in the other.

"Avi... give me the odds again for successful completion of Operation Spartan Wind." He stated looking at the face of the avatar on the small screen.

-Which Scenario should I load King Leonidas? - The image of the Mindvoice ship avatar asked.

"Run them both." Martin spoke as he lifted the wine to his lips.

-Operation Spartan Wind Scenario One Four... initiating... running. Calculating. Odds of successful completion 74.9%-

-Operation Spartan Wind Scenario One Five... initiating... running. Calculating. Odds of successful completion 83.2%-

Martin shook his head slowly. "What if you factor in what Yuriko's mission is?" He asked.

-Successful completion of Yuriko Leonidas's mission will only increase the odds by two percent on both scenarios-

"Avi... those odds suck!" Martin spoke.

-I agree King Leonidas. However the other scenarios we have run have had much less of a success rate-

"I've had the odds stacked against me before." Martin said.

-You are the descendant of the Chief Elder Pralor King Leonidas. This fact has no doubt played a large role in what you consider luck. Even before you were able to advance your skills to the level they are now, your abilities would have manifested themselves subconsciously in certain situations. I have reviewed your history King Leonidas and there is substantial proof to back up this data-

"So you have been telling me for years." Martin said. "Is Aikiro more powerful than me Avi?"

-Given what we know King Leonidas, she is undoubtedly the direct descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Xaxon on City Ship 19-

"Wait... you never told me they had names." Martin spoke.

-You never asked King Leonidas-

"What... was my ancestor's name?" Martin asked.

-Chief Elder Pralor of City Ship 41 was called Sumar. He and Chief Elder Pralor Xaxon were considered two of the most advanced Elder Pralors-

"Sumar?" Martin said softly. "Resumar?"

-Yes. The possibility that your grandfather was named after him in some way is very probable. Chief Elder Pralor Sumar was known as a supreme mediator and accomplished Warrior Pralor. Chief Elder Pralor Xaxon was recognized as the premier Warrior Pralor of his time-

"So you had wars?" Martin asked.

-Yes King Leonidas. The last one Warrior Pralor Xaxon started. It lasted for nine thousand years. He was given command of a City Ship as punishment. It was considered an exile by many of the ruling Pralors-

"I thought it was considered an honor to be in command of one of these ships?" Martin asked.

-To those who had earned the command yes. To others it was an exile. The species you know as the High Coven discovered City Ship 19 approximately three thousand years before the Lycavorians began to realize their potential under your grandfather. By then Xaxon's war like nature would have been generations advanced within their species-

“My people were war like.” Martin said. “They were savage Avi.”

-This is true Milord. Until your grandfather was born. The direct descendant of Sumar. It was he who began to turn your people from their violent ways. Xaxon’s descendants did not follow this path. If my data scrolls are accurate, Xaxon held great hatred for those who exiled him. Sumar was one of those that voted to have him exiled. It stands to reason he would have passed this on within his genes to his descendants-

“So her hatred of me and our species is inbred?”

-To a certain degree-

“And does that make Aikiro stronger than me?” Martin asked.

-She has had millennia to learn precise control of her abilities King Leonidas. In terms of raw power no, she is not stronger. In terms of experience in what she can do... my calculations indicate yes. You have not reached the pinnacle of what you can achieve. Nor has Queen Aricia or your first born son Prince Androcles-

“Avi... can she find City Ship 41 on Earth?” Martin asked.

-If she were to remain on Earth long enough she would eventually discover City Ship 41 yes. She has the ability to eliminate many of the Mindvoice Ghost Zones we have established as more time passes. The odds of Empress Aikiro actually penetrating the security we have in place, and being able to remain undiscovered by the dragons that reside here is only 11.45% King Leonidas. I have also established protocols should my calculations of the odds prove incorrect-

“Would she know that?” Martin asked.

-As you and your son have secretly studied the many functions of City Ship 41 through the last years King Leonidas, no doubt Empress Aikiro did the same with City Ship 19. It is very possible that the avatar for City Ship 19 did not survive the crash. This would explain their lack of significant engineering advances such as those we have made. However based on the level of their cloning technology, she has extensive knowledge of a City Ship’s systems-

-The initial sensor scan I ran as we were leaving Lycavore twenty-five years ago specified that no Quantum signature was present. That indicates the Quantum Drive Nacelles and Engine Propulsion Systems were destroyed upon reentry. This is the engineering basis for many of the advancements we have gained in the last years as you know-

Martin nodded. “And this is what she would want to get her hands on no doubt.” He said. “I have to believe that is why she came to Earth. Avi... is there anyway for you to reactivate your engines?”

The Avatar shook his head. -Such an event is not possible King Leonidas. Due to the relative solar activity and collectors built around City Ship 41 it is possible for me to maintain full power indefinitely. However, I estimate it would take one thousand five hundred and thirteen years for my repair drones to harvest enough Quantum particles from within this system to actually infuse my engine cores to full power-

“Then she is there for whatever technology she thinks she can get her hands on.” Martin spoke. “Technology she will reverse engineer and use against the Kavalians and then probably us.”

-That is the most likely scenario King Leonidas. The sections I detected on City Ship 19 were not equipped with sensors. There is no way she would have been able to detect the other ships that crashed. Your orders to destroy whatever did remain were quite effective-

“Avi... do not release anymore history files to Panos to give to her.” Martin ordered. “I’ll let him know as well... but I don’t want to take the chance she will discover something we consider to be innocent information and turn it into something it was not intended for.”

-Done-

“Send a transcript of our conversation to Andro at SODRAG and then delete any records that remain of what we have discussed.” Martin said. “She isn’t stupid... and she has to know even if she finds City Ship 41, she’ll never get near it. So she has something else in mind. Freeze all access to City Ship 41’s database by anyone outside of my family and Arzoal. No one else gets access until I say so.”

-Does that order extend to Zaala Randall and personnel involved in Operation Arizona as well?-

Martin shook his head. “No... Zaala is Tarifa’s sister and our foremost expert on your technology correct?”

-She is the only one so far to have grasped the higher calculations and functions King Leonidas. She is incredibly astute considering her ancestors were cloned by Walter Carson. Given her medical scans and growing Mindvoice abilities, I estimate within five hundred years she will be able to construct at least a working design of my engines-

Martin nodded. “Leave their access as is. Restrict everything else... but I want you to start keeping records of everyone who accesses your database even if they have clearance.”

-As your order-

“I have one more task for you Avi.” Martin said looking at the humanoid avatar on the small screen.

-Standing by-

“I want you to use whatever scenario your brain can think up, no matter how crazy or implausible it may seem.” Martin spoke.

-What would be the purpose of this King Leonidas?-

“When you have the results, you will send them to Androcles and me via Level Twelve Encryption and then destroy all records.” Martin said.

-Understood. What is the design of this operation?-

“Find me a weak spot for the Kavalians that I can use Avi.” Martin spoke. “Find me a weak spot that if I need to, I can send them a message that tangling with us would not be the most intelligent thing they have ever done. I need to buy us more time. I need you to find me a way to get that time.”

-I will begin work immediately King Leonidas-

Martin nodded. “I will return to Sparta within the week Avi. If you get something before then, advise me. If not... Andro and I will meet with you when I return. And Avi?”

-Yes King Leonidas-

“I am authorizing you to activate and deploy your static defenses on Earth.” Martin said. “If it doesn’t belong on Dragon Island or the other safe zones we have established... kill it. With extreme prejudice.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

CENTRAL PRISON SPARTA

“...were instructed to leave her on your ship!” For’mya snapped as she stood between Daniel and his father glaring at Yuri and Moran in the prison room.

Sparta’s prison complex was just that.

It was a prison. There were no amenities or comforts within the walls. Criminals were treated with dignity, but they were given no special care. The cells were standard six by eight rooms, the force fields blocking the entrance, and the small windows allowing the sunlight in during the day. Each cell had a small sink and toilet and a bed that slid out of the wall on the side. There was a desk and chair that were both bolted and welded to the floor. Right now the moon could be seen rising in the night sky, casting its glow through the many windows of the empty cells on this floor.

There was very little crime within the limits of Sparta, Eden City or any of the rapidly rebuilding and enlarging cities on the planet. Like Apo Prime and the rest of the worlds within the Union, men and women wanted for nothing and crime as a whole was just not accepted. There was no poverty within the borders of the Lycavorian Union, and while there were parts that were less developed and not as wealthy, the basic needs of everyone were met without question of status or standing. Prisons were to house those who chose to break what few laws there were, and the penalties for breaking those laws were severe depending on the crime. Criminal punishment within the Union was harsh before Martin found himself and took his place as King, and it grew even harsher once he took power. Many found their king had a particular dislike for those who would not help themselves and took from others who would.

Individuals did not need to steal from their neighbors, no one was denied medical care and there was the opportunity for everyone to become wealthy if they worked hard enough. One of the reasons that crime was so rare is that those who had wealth, people, major corporations and companies, all of them gave back to society without question. Many had come from a life of slavery and poverty under the High Coven boot heel and once they found their dreams within the Union, they gleefully gave back to celebrate what they had achieved. Many of the deals that Martin Leonidas had brokered with the five major companies within the Union in relation to Enurrua and the breaking up of the People’s Lycavorian Republic raked in billions of riyal each year. Fully half of that profit, Martin and his Queens ordered redistributed to those who were not as fortunate, to allow them to realize and advance their own dreams. Several funds were established and now thousands, if not millions of families across the Union and even within The Wilds benefited from the education and assistance those funds had given to them initially. It was one of the primary reasons that the Leonidas family was now revered more than they had ever been.

Those in the prisons were offered rehabilitation and either trained in a useful skill or some field or given schooling in an area that would allow them to rebuild their lives. Most accepted this second chance without question, and many had gone on to become prominent figures within Union society because of the second chance they were given. Those that were not given this opportunity were those who had shown a depraved lack of compassion for life and freedom, and they were locked up for eternity.

Murder.

Rape.

These were two of the most heinous crimes that would result in execution or send men and women into the darkness and solitude of a prison, never to be seen again. Sparta’s prison held only twelve such individuals, three of them Lycavorians who had taken females against their will, showing no remorse for their actions and were awaiting their execution. There were four humans and two elves that had committed murder without purpose and they were spared execution for one reason or another, usually due to circumstances beyond their control, and the Union judges were not monsters after all. They would spend their lives in this prison. Then there was one Algolian and two Kochab mercenaries that had been captured on Earth trying to establish a slave trading black market. Their sentences had been handed down by the human judges in Eden City within two days for the crimes they had committed. All three of them received the maximum sentence and since they had not taken life or raped anyone while on Earth they would remain in Sparta's prison for the duration of the rest of their natural lives.

The tenth floor of the prison was used by the Durcunusaan exclusively to hold high value targets or spies caught within the boundaries of the Union. The only other location similar to this floor of the prison was on Apo Prime in a very remote section of the northern hemisphere. Very few people had access to this floor of the prison, even fewer knew it existed. For'mya and Daniel were among those who did.

"So it is now a crime to walk the streets of Sparta?" Yuri asked smugly standing beside Robert. They had responded to the summons by Durcunusaan guarding her mother, and upon arriving found a very upset Daniel Simpson and an even angrier For'mya Leonidas.

"Walking the streets of Sparta is one thing... breaking into someone's home is quite another!" For'mya barked.

"It is my understanding Juliana mistook this home for a shop of some sort." Yuri stated calmly.

"That's a load of shit and you know it!" Danny snarled. "She bypassed the door security locks and when we found her she was just standing in the living room of this home."

For'mya took a step closer to her. "Do not take us for fools Yuri!" She hissed. "You are in our realm now, and I could order you and your pathetic husband put in that cell beside your clone spy and there isn't a thing you could do about it."

Yuri smiled as a small flash of red escaped her dark eyes. "My dear For'mya... you are not still angry with me for the exquisite visit we had so long ago are you?" She spoke sweetly. "We had such a wonderful time together, you, me and Robert. Don't you remember the wonderful times?"

For'mya's dark brown eyes narrowed slightly. "You think too highly of your influence Yuri." She spoke in a low, menacing voice. "Your powers to alter ones perceptions and control their actions will not work on me any longer. Attempt this again and I will gut you where you stand and feed you to the dogs in the streets."

Yuri's eyes flared angrily. "You? You do not have the skill to face me!" She spoke savagely.

For'mya smiled. "Would you care to put that boast to the test vampire witch? I have not shared Martin and Isabella's bed and love for twenty-five years and learned nothing. You would be surprised at what your sister and Martin know about you."

"That bitch is not my sister!" Yuri almost shouted.

For'mya smiled even more at Yuri's anger at being compared to Isabella and saw her eyes grow smaller and change to vampire cobalt blue. "Do not mistake the freedom Martin Leonidas has granted you while you are here for something it is not. Your being here on Earth serves only one purpose Yuri. Violate the rules he has laid down for you and the bargain we have struck will be off. I will order our son to confiscate your dragons and I will send you and your people back to your ships in the same amount of time it would take you to formulate the next coherent thought in your hate filled brain."

"You do not have the authority to do that!" Moran spoke now.

For'mya glanced at him. "You seem to keep forgetting that as his Queens, we all speak with Martin Leonidas's voice. That is how he wants it, and he has never once gone against one of us when we have made a decision. If I decide it is in our best interests to rid Sparta of you, your mother and your cohorts, he will not question that decision in the least."

Yuri took a step forward towards For'mya but suddenly found she was staring at the dark and deadly barrels of two K12s and three P190s. Danny and his father extended their arms over both of For'mya's shoulders with their K12s, and the three Durcunusaan in the room with them stepped up to either side of For'mya their weapons leveled at Yuri's head. Moran had reached for her arm seeing her actions and he too now froze as he gripped Yuri's forearm.

"Give me a reason you bloodsucking vampire cockroach bitch!" Danny snarled viciously. "I'd be doing the universe a fucking favor, and I will put you down like right now!"

Yuri hissed angrily and turned her now changed cobalt blue vampire eyes from Danny and glared at For'mya, who met her withering gaze without flinching. "I want Juliana released!" She demanded.

"She was apprehended in a private home within Sparta... not a shop or store. She was gathering intelligence for you and your mother. While we may not be able to prove that, we will hold her for trespassing." For'mya spoke calmly. "The owner of that home will determine what her fate will be."

"You actually intend to hold her?" Moran demanded now.

"Oh yes, I intend to... and if the owner of that home wishes to press charges than she will be prosecuted under Spartan law for her actions." For'mya answered. "Martin warned you when you first arrived he would not tolerate your attempts at subversion."

"My mother will not allow you to hold her." Yuri snapped.

"Aikiro has no say in the matter whatsoever!" For'mya spat turning her head slightly. "Enomotarch?"

The Durcunusaan soldier turned his eyes slightly, never removing the barrel of his 190 from Yuri's head. "My Queen?"

"Escort our guests back to street level." For'mya spoke. "Make sure they are pointed in the right direction to Gallais's lodge."

The Durcunusaan nodded. "Yes my Queen!" He turned his eyes back to Yuri and Moran. "The door is behind you. Move towards it... now." He snarled.

Yuri glared at For'mya. "This is not over." She said softly.

For'mya grinned as her eyes changed then and her wolf fangs extended in that instant. The tips of those fangs protruded past her glistening lips, her bottom lip fuller than her top, making more of her fangs seen. "It had better be..." She spoke softly. "For your sake."

Yuri spun around quickly and Moran followed her out of the door of the room. When the door slid shut behind the Durcunusaan troop that is when For'mya lost her patience. She turned and scooped up the metal chair within her TK power and sent it hurtling across the room to smash against the far wall as Danny and Melancton looked on with surprised but amused expressions.

"Oh... I so hate that perverted, twisted upae!" For'mya nearly screamed. She scooped up the chair twice more, both times smashing it into the invulnerable walls and reducing the chair to nothing but a bent pile of scrap.

She stood in the center of the room taking deep breaths, the loud trumpeting of a dragon now heard from outside. For'mya looked up quickly and reached out within Mindvoice to Aurith who was in the street below, bellowing in a mixture of rage and concern, her large tail thrashing back and forth as she twisted around in large circles and sent Durcunusaan soldiers scurrying for cover in the street.

[Sister!] Aurith screamed out within Mindvoice.

[Aurith... Aurith I am fine!] For'mya spoke quickly. [I... I lost me temper my sister. I lost me temper because of Yuri!]

[Where is she? I will burn her to cinders!] Aurith declared as her head whipped around looking for the vampire princess who had so humiliated and tortured For'mya a quarter century ago.

[No!] For'mya announced. [I made my point sister! I am here with Daniel and his father. I am fine Aurith.]

The Durcunusaan soldiers began coming out from behind the thick concrete pillars that dotted the area around the prison entrance as they saw Queen For'mya's dragon begin to settle down.

[For'mya...] Aurith began.

[Truly I am fine.] For'mya spoke. [I will be down momentarily and we will return to the Royal villa. I need to feel the peace our children bring me and contact Deia.]

Aurith settled to the street once more and looked up at the side of the building, her tail twitching only mildly now as the Durcunusaan guards began to return to their duties. Many of them had seen fits of unexplained anger or worry from dragons of the Royal family before. It only showed them how closely tied together the royal family was to their dragons. The only thing to do when this occurred was get out of the way until it passed.

[We will fly first sister.] Aurith declared now. [We will fly and allow the anger we feel to bleed away. Just as Aricia and my mother taught us.] Aurith heard For'mya sigh within Mindvoice and she could almost feel her nodding her head.

[That is probably a good idea.] For'mya answered instantly. [I will see you soon.]

Danny was holstering his K12 when For'mya turned around and looked at him and his father. His dark eyes held questions in them and For'mya moved closer.

“What?” She asked.

Danny shook his head. “Nothing.” He said.

Melancton shook his head. “Coward!” He hissed at his son. He looked at For'mya. “We are wondering now who has the most volatile temper of Martin’s Queens. We thought perhaps it was Anja or Aricia... but after seeing that display...”

For'mya saw the looks on their faces and felt her anger bleed off even more and she laughed. “I am fine.” She said. “I don’t like Yuri or her sick husband. That is all.”

Dan snorted. “Yeah we got that part!” He stated with a grin.

The door into the room opened once more and Moneus and Carina rushed in their eyes wide. Carina went directly to For'mya.

“Mother?” She exclaimed taking her hands.

For'mya shook her head. “I am fine. I only got angry.”

“Mother... Aurith was smashing planters in the street.” Carina declared. “Perhaps you should not be in the same room as the witch Yuri.”

For'mya rolled her eyes and leaned forward to kiss Carina’s cheek. “Enough of this! I am fine.” For'mya looked back at Danny and leaned up on her tip toes to kiss his cheek gently. “And I understand congratulations are in order. A fine Spartan and Elven baby boy!”

Melancton nodded his head proudly and punched his son lightly in the arm. “His name is Melancton!” He announced loudly.

Danny chuckled and nodded to For'mya. “Nayeca is doing fine.” He said softly. “I think this pregnancy took more out of her than she lets others see.”

For'mya took his hands in hers and smiled. “Carrying children for Spartans with the pureness of blood that you and Martin have is no small task Daniel.” For'mya said. “She will be fine. I will come over tomorrow to see her and little Melancton and bring some of Gorgo’s tea that she likes so much.”

Danny nodded. “I’ll tell her.” He said. He motioned with his head to the door. “What about our guest?”

“Hali has already informed me she refuses to press charges. Keep her overnight and then release her in the morning.” For'mya spoke. For'mya squeezed his hands tightly and Danny met her eyes puzzled. [Daniel... I want you to contact Lynwe. I want a team of her best Drow scouts here tomorrow morning. I do not want this clone to go anywhere without us knowing it. They are half vampire and are the only ones with the skill to accomplish that. I want to know what she does and where she goes. And if she violates anymore of our laws or the rules Martin has put in place.]

Danny nodded. [I’ll make it happen.] He said. [If she does?]

Melancton, Moneus and Carina knew they were communicating heavily shielded within Mindvoice and simply stood there watching and wondering what was being discussed.

For'mya met his eyes. [If she does... take her into custody again and make it appear she was killed. Make it appear like an accident. I don’t care how.]

Danny didn’t flinch and nodded his head. [Done.]

SODRAG

Malic had carried them into the bedroom easily, the sexual energy radiating from the three of them unbearable. Their scents were burning into his mind like nothing he had ever known, the flavor of their lips like the finest aged wine he had ever tasted. He had intended to take both of them quickly, claiming them urgently.

Eliani and Nyla had other ideas however.

Malic found himself pushed onto his back on the large bed within moments of entering the bedroom, and he could only watch from a half sitting position as both Eliani and Nyla did a slow striptease in front of him. They undressed each other in seductive movements, their hands wandering over each other’s bodies intimately and slowly exposing each other to him, until Malic’s eleven inch cock was ready to rip through the fabric of his pants. Their hands roamed each other's tanned, silky skin, his deep blue wolf eyes wide as he gazed hungrily on Eliani's large firm breasts. Her nipples were standing erect a quarter inch, begging for attention. Her center was already drenched just from feeling his aura caress her, the scent of her juices wafting to him and causing his blood to scream out. Nyla's breasts were equally as aroused, and firm, her own nipples protruding proudly outward. When Nyla's lips descended to Eliani's breasts Malic very nearly lost control and erupted in his pants. He watched Eliani's head fall back and she sighed heavily, holding Nyla's head tightly to the nipple she was lavishing attention upon. Watching them had caused his passion to surge to heights he had never known and when he could take no more he reached for them.

[No!] Their voices burst into his mind stopping him in tracks. He looked at them with sudden confusion and worry.

[I... I want to...]

Eliani shook her head quickly. [I guaranteed you that you would never wish for another female the rest of your days once you tasted us Malic.] Eliani spoke in a voice that simply overflowed with rampant desire and need.

[I wish for no one but the two of you now! You have nothing to prove to me!] Malic announced without hesitation. [I desire no one else!]

[Then let us take care of you.] Nyla spoke now.

"But I..."

Eliani pressed her naked flesh to his shoulder and grabbed his head before plunging her lips down and kissing him as she had only kissed Nyla before this day. Her fingers entwined within his dark brown hair and she pushed even closer to his broad chest, crushing her breasts against his hot skin behind his shirt. Her four inch long tongue extended completely out and Malic's eyes grew wide as she explored with her tongue where no woman had ever gone before. His hands reached up to grasp her firm ass and pull her tighter to him as Eliani's hands dropped to his shirt and began quickly stripping it off his upper body. Nyla helped her pull his shirt off and Eliani had to force herself to reach down and take his hands from her body. The feel of his hands and the grip he had on her ass cheeks had ignited flash fires across her flesh. She and Nyla had planned this together, how they would seduce him, and it took every bit of her will power to keep from simply surrendering to his aura which was calling for her to do just that. Eliani knew he could push his aura beyond what he was using, for he was a powerful Alpha wolf, and as her lips descended to his throat and she pushed him back further on the bed, small tears of joy crept into her fern green eyes as she realized he was holding himself in check.

Eliani and Nyla explored his broad chest with just their lips and tongues, bathing his burning skin as they teased the nipples of his chest, their fingers dancing across his sculpted abdomen. Each of them was pulling at his pants with one hand until they finally got them unfastened. They dropped to either side of his body and with powerful downward yanks Malic's pants flew across their room. When they turned their heads and saw what awaited them, neither could contain the whimper of wanton desire and shock.

Nyla's vampire blood was churning madly for her lover and the man who would make them his, and the moment her eyes settled on the towering eleven inch shaft that would soon possess them both, a small orgasm rippled through her.

"Ussta... ussta che...!" She gasped through clenched teeth and closed eyes. When Eliani did not immediately answer and she heard Malic hiss loudly she opened her eyes, shuddering in the aftermath of her tiny orgasm.

Eliani had taken the base of Malic's cock in her small hand, her fingers unable to reach around the thickness, her fern green eyes now changed but her fangs not extended and her face gazing at Malic's cock with wonderment. Her upper body was pressed against his thigh and hip, her large breasts crushed against his skin. "Aur... Aur Enyla... I have never... it's..." She gasped. "I... I suspected he was... but never like this!"

Nyla lowered her head down now and slowly brought her hand up to encircle Malic's cock just above hers. They could feel the searing heat of his cock and the incredible hardness in their palms and they looked at each other. They had taken men into their bed before in the last four years, however none of them came close to equaling the size and dominance of what Malic offered them, and what they were about to accept without hesitation. It would be a chore Nyla thought, but oh what pleasure that chore would bring them.

"It's magnificent!" Nyla gasped out.

Eliani's wolf eyes glanced up and she saw Malic's face distorted in agonizing pleasure. His hands had slapped down onto the bed the moment Eliani had grasped his quivering cock, and now he threatened to tear up the mattress with his immense strength. She looked quickly back to Nyla.

Aur Enyla... he can feel. She gasped out in Mindvoice. When he... when he bonded with Vincix... it must have... it must have healed him.

Comprehension dawned in Nyla's cobalt blue vampire eyes and she glanced quickly at Malic's face and then back to her lover with a passionate glint in her eyes.

Ussta Che... Eliani my love... this is...

Nyla's eyes grew wide when she watched Eliani lips engulf the head of Malic's cock and she swallowed clearly half of Malic's thick throbbing shaft. Nyla wasted no time and lowered her head beneath Eliani's and began to use her own talented tongue to stroke and torture the portion of Malic's dominating cock that Eliani strained to take more of.

It happened without warning... Nyla felt Malic's lower body surge off the bed, his hands coming to rest on both hers and Eliani's heads and instead of grinding their faces into his groin as the other men they had taken into their bed had done, Malic simply plunged his fingers into their satin like hair. She felt the thick vein adorning the underside of his cock throbbing madly, and then his cock swelled in size. Eliani groaned loudly, gagged softly and Nyla felt Malic's come erupting upward. She could actually feel his come exploding up the length of his cock as she had the thick shaft pressed against her tongue. Nyla was just as far gone as Eliani now and she brought her face up as Eliani slid her lips to the tip of Malic's exploding shaft, his hot come filling her mouth and belly as she swallowed without question. Malic roared loudly as Eliani squeezed the base of his cock tightly and quickly tore her lips away from the bulbous head, Nyla's equally warm and soft lips engulfing his cockhead and shaft with barely a pause. Eliani released her grip and Nyla's eyes went wide as Malic's come rocketed into her mouth and raced down her throat. She moved upward on the bed, crushing her body to Malic's naked skin and simply forced her head down further, not wanting to release his erupting shaft and delirious with pleasure and the wonderful taste of his essence.

Eliani had a wistful look on her face as she licked her lips and savored the taste of her new mate's offering to her. With blissful contentment and burning desire Eliani simply lowered her face once more to provide much needed attention on Malic's large balls, content to let Nyla feed on what both of them had craved for so long.

Eliani smiled as she used her tongue to tickle Malic's pulsating hairless balls; for she knew their time together had only just begun.

EDEN CITY

It did not take a lot of convincing Miranda thought as she walked along the crowded street in southwest Eden City.

The moment she and Janon had left the airfield Miranda had contacted Ben on her Secure Personal COM unit. Every officer over the rank of Star Commander carried a SPC so that they would always be in touch. They were just tiny little flexible boards that fit right on the inside sleeve of their uniforms and allowed them to communicate securely with nearly anyone in the Union who had a similar device. She had explained her meeting with Major Randall to Ben and waited while he roared with laughter for a good three minutes. When he had finished, Miranda herself couldn't help but shake her head at what she had done. Looking at Ben's glowing face and eyes, Miranda would never understand why she had let his and Tina's decision and love for the sexy Endith push them away from her for those years. They had Isabella change them for one purpose, and that purpose was love of the red haired female elf who was perhaps the most skilled pilot in the Union right now along with the Queen and her son Arrarn. Within twenty minutes Miranda had the authorization and blessing of both Ben and Admiral of the Fleet Riall. Ben even thought it might give them an added advantage having her. Zaala Randall was no stranger to combat he had said, having been aboard NORMYA'S LIGHT when her husband had served there, and she knew more about the new technology they had built than anyone since she had a hand in building most of it.

Miranda stopped and looked up at the sign that Tareif had told her to look for. She knew it once he described it for she had been here several times before leaving Earth to attend the Academy. The sign was easily five meters across and two meters wide, and the most colorful in the area.

FREEDOM FIGHTER'S TAVERN
Within these walls tread our heroes.
Treat them that way.

Miranda had to smile as she remembered the tall, voluptuous woman Mary who owned the tavern.

“Mando?” Janon asked.

Miranda looked at him. “Lots of memories here Janon.” She answered his questioning look. “All of my good memories from Earth anyway.”

Miranda didn't pause and pushed through the now gleaming polished oak doors and stood in the foyer as she took in all that had changed. No longer were the floors worn and unpainted as they had been for so many years. Now they were treated pinewood floors, the walls paneled in a similar color. There were dozens more tables on the main floor and Miranda realized Mary must have enlarged the interior significantly over the years. It reminded her of ancient holo vids she had seen as a child of the old western taverns, only this was very modern and exceptionally well kept. The lunch crowd had long cleared out, but still the tavern was busy as the dinner crowd was beginning to filter in, the waitresses moving back and forth from the old style bar and food counter to the many tables they had assigned to them.

Miranda and Janon had returned to the airfield in time to see Tareif closing up his office early. At the end of every week they gathered at Freedom Fighter's Tavern with their wives for dinner he had explained. Since the only scheduled flight was the one this morning, Steven always let his pilots go to be with their families or enjoy the time together. Tareif had invited them to the event and they had arrived fashionably late.

“Oh my god!” The female voice spoke.

Miranda turned and saw the tall and still voluptuous human Mary step up to her from the side. Her hair was still white, her face now more wrinkled as she showed her sixty-seven years of age, but she was still a commanding presence regardless.

“Miranda Lorian? Is that you?” Mary declared as she stepped up to her.

Miranda couldn't help but smile. “Hello Mary?”

“Well I'll be a sonofabitch! Look at you young lady!” Mary announced taking hold of Miranda's shoulders and ignoring the hulking Lycavorian next to her. She pulled Miranda into a rib cracking embrace, though Miranda smiled through the whole process. Her five foot two frame looked petty against Mary's near six foot height. She pushed Miranda back and stood looking at her. “My gods... haven't you grown up now!”

Miranda chuckled. “You aren't any different Mary.” She stated.

“The hell I ain't! I'm twenty plus years older with the wrinkles to show for it!” Mary answered. “You should hear these old bones go snap, crackle and pop in the morning!” Her dark eyes fell on Janon. “Who is this fine looking wolf man here Miranda?” She asked. “Is he yours?”

Miranda smiled at the look on Janon's face. “Mary this is my First Officer Janon.” She said.

“First Officer? Well now... isn't that a leap forward for women power.” Mary declared. “You aren't an Admiral or anything are you?”

Miranda chuckled. “God no!”

“Well good... I charge them extra. Overbearing basket heads is what they are.” Mary replied. She looked at Miranda and her face turned semi serious. “We... we followed your career here Miranda... the others and I. It wouldn't do to forget the street urchin that got all of us into more trouble than the rest. We all worried about you endlessly after Alba Tau. We drank buckets when we found out you had survived that meat grinder with Marty and Andro and so many others.” She took Miranda's hands and held them. “How are you doing? No bullshit girl... straight from the hip.”

Mary had been a safe zone for many orphaned children after the Battle for Earth, and she well and truly cared for dozens of them. There were some that she took special interest in; and Miranda had been one of them. She nodded her head as her face became serious too.

“I'm... I'm surviving.” Miranda said softly meeting her steady gaze.

Mary nodded and glanced quickly at Janon. She turned those eyes back to her and squeezed her hand. “I expect no less from Miranda Lorian.” She stated. “Now tell me... what brings you to my place?”

“You... you own this establishment?” Janon asked.

Mary looked at him. “No... I just stand around and hold up the walls!” She snapped. “Of course I own this place! Freedom Fighters Tavern is my life! You’ve never been to Earth have you son?”

Janon looked at her. “No. And with respect ma’am... I am considerably older than you and referring to me as son is not accurate.”

Mary burst out laughing and shook her head. “Nope... you’ve never been to Earth. I can tell. Well... we’ll fix that! Now... tell me Miranda... what brings you here?”

“I’m actually looking for a pilot.” Miranda said. “I’ve been given a pretty decent sized command and I wanted to talk to him about becoming CAG. You know him... Major Randall.”

Mary’s eyes grew a little wider. “Steven? Of course I know him! He and Zaala have been coming here for the better part of a quarter century! They are the ones along with her father Tareif who helped me to get all the improvements done!” Mary smiled. “It’s like their second home you know!” She said coyly.

“I understand he comes here with many of his pilots at the end of every week.” Miranda said. “I spoke with him earlier today and I wanted to get back with him.”

“He won’t go anywhere without Zaala.” Mary spoke firmly. “Those two are practically joined at the hip. Find one and you usually find the other. They still act like newlyweds half the time! You should see it when they get together with Martin and his ladies here for a big family gathering. It’s hysterical to try and figure who is more whipped. Steven or Marty.”

Janon’s eyes grew wide. “You should not speak of the King in such familiar terms.” He scolded.

Mary looked at him. “I’ll speak about him anyway I want!” Mary spat. “I’ve known him for over twenty years and they are in here eating almost as much as they are Gallais’s Tavern in Sparta when they come here for their six month stays!”

Miranda could attest to that for she had been chased away from the Freedom Fighter Tavern many times by the Durcunusaan when she was growing up. “Is he here?” Miranda asked.

Mary nodded. “They usually take over the upper dining room and balcony portion we built ten years ago. Most of the others are gone, but he is still here with Zaala and Tareif and Palina. Come on... I’ll take you up.”

Miranda smiled as Mary gripped her hand and began weaving her way across the main floor of the tavern. Towards the rear of the main room was a stairway and they went up it to reveal an expansive upper floor with two dozen additional tables that the employees were now beginning to turn over and clean for the dinner crowd.

“For the dinner crowd Steven and the others move onto the patio so the dining room here is free.” Mary explained. “We get pretty swamped sometimes, another thirty minutes and even the tables up here will be full.”

“You don’t have anymore problems like with the construction crews back then do you?” Miranda asked.

Mary shrugged. “Most of them know not to fuck around in my place.” She stated quickly. “There are those who like to test the waters so to speak, but since most of my customers are all regulars, they get shown the door quickly if they want to get out of hand. You know I don’t tolerate any of that crazy shit.”

Miranda chuckled. “Yes... I do remember that.”

Mary led them across the upper floor and through a set of french style double doors to an expansive patio balcony. She immediately saw the large table in the center of the patio and the six individuals that sat at it. Miranda could hear the laughing from the three men and she looked at Mary.

“Tareif and Palina’s oldest son Fal’sas returned from Elear just this morning with his new bride.” Mary spoke. “She is not like the other elves from Elear, not so stiffed upper lipped if you get my meaning. I imagine it’s because of Fal’sas... he is every bit his father’s son.”

Miranda watched as Mary led them up to the table and she saw Major Randall look up and get to his feet.

“More strays Mary?” He asked quickly with a smile. “They just can’t seem to stay away from you.”

Mary shook her head. “No I guess not. Look at you! You’re still here!”

“How true!” Tareif bellowed.

“Touché.” Steven said with a wide grin. “Captain Lorian... what can I do for you?” He motioned to the table. “Please... sit down.”

Mary leaned over and kissed her cheek. “Be careful of him.” Mary spoke. “He’s gotten more feral over the years. He’s corrupted poor Zaala and he’ll corrupt you as well.”

Zaala smiled brightly as she reached up and squeezed Steven’s hand. “Mary... I think it’s more the other way around.” She said.

Mary nodded. “Maybe.” She said with a smile. “If you need anything... just grab one of my girls.” She looked at Janon. “Except you... you might hurt them.”

Miranda chuckled as Janon looked horrified at her accusation and he watched Mary walk off laughing. She turned back to Steven Randall. “Do you have a moment?” She asked.

Steven nodded. “Sure. Tareif... why don’t you pour Commander Janon here a big glass of Spartan Wine.” He spoke turning around. “Captain Lorian and I are going to talk for a minute.”

“Sit down Commander!” Tareif spoke loudly. “That is an order!”

Steven and Miranda moved off to the edge of the enclosed patio and looked down on the streets of Eden City and the park like setting with the Grand Center in the background. Miranda looked up at him. “I talked with Admiral O’Connor...” She said.

Steven nodded. “Yep... so did I.” He said as he sipped his glass of Spartan Wine looking at her. “I caught him in the middle of Endith and Tina chewing him a new ass for trying to ride one of the Durcunusaan dragons. He and dragons don’t get along.” Steven told her with a grin. “You, Captain Lorian, have Level Ten Security Clearance... which in and of itself says more to me than anything else since only like fifty odd people within the Union have that. You have a direct line to Martin Leonidas, again which implies quite a bit, only twenty odd people have a direct line to Martin.”

“That number includes you.” Miranda told him.

Steven nodded. “That’s because of Zaala and Tarifa being sisters.” He dismissed her statement. “And then there is the fact that whatever you are working on doesn’t even exist.” He said looking at her. “I do have my own sources you know.”

Miranda looked taken aback at this but continued anyway. “Ben told me you were the best Randall. He said if I really wanted you, I needed to find a place for your wife. That you two were a package deal so to speak. Admiral Riall sent me her classified file... and most of the technology we will be working with is based on the Quantum technology derived from the Mindvoice ship. I discovered she is the foremost expert on this stuff and she actually helped to design some of the systems we’ll be using. I’d be a fool if I didn’t use her skills in that area. I’m many things... but I’m not a fool.”

Steven nodded. “Ben said that as well.” He spoke.

“So... you up for it?” Miranda asked.

“It’s a ship isn’t it?” Steven asked.

Miranda canted her head slightly. “Yes. A very special ship. The first of twenty in her class.”

“And you want me as CAG?” Steven asked.

“Most of the pilots that will be, or have already been assigned, are the best and the brightest of the lot.” She spoke.

“Which means that most of them will only have a few years behind the stick right?” Steven said.

Miranda nodded. “You know the drill just as much as I do.” She said. “We can’t pull the most experienced pilots away from their duties because that will draw attention. Up until a week ago, only three people even knew we existed. Ben, Martin and me. The selection process was rigorous and demanding. I should know... I’m the one who designed it.”

“What happened a week ago?” Steven asked.

“Tell me you’ll take the job and I’ll tell you.” Miranda said.

“And if anything happens to me...” Steven said looking at her. “If anything happens to me... you’ll be the one that tells Zaala and not some public relations officer?”

Miranda nodded her head. “May I ask why that seems to be the most important thing to you Randall? It’s not usually what most people ask when I offer them a job. They usually ask if it increases their pay or gets them better quarters.” She asked.

Steven laughed. “Hah! Zaala and I have enough riyal saved right now to buy a small island somewhere.”

“Then why?”

“My father was killed in the third Central American War.” Steven spoke softly. “He was shot down over what used to be Honduras. My mother was working with NASA at the time, getting ready for all of us to transfer up to EDEN and become part of the crew. I think I was seventeen at the time. I remember coming home from school and seeing the PR officer at the house and walking in to my mother in tears. They wouldn’t tell her anything. Only that he had been killed in action. I saw what it did to her, not knowing how he died. I don’t want to put Zaala through that. If I die... I want her to know how and why I died. And I want someone she knows to tell her.”

Miranda met his eyes. “I give you my word.” She spoke.

Steven nodded. “Then we’re in.” He told her.

Miranda looked surprised. “Just like that? Don’t you have to talk with her?”

Steven chuckled. “Miranda... I had Martin turn me so that I could spend my life with Zaala and not have her watch me grow old. I almost never shift to wolf form because I never took the time to learn how to run as a wolf and it wasn’t the main reason behind becoming what I am now. I like to think of myself as more human than wolf. I do like having the Mindvoice connection with my wife however.” He tapped the side of his head. “Took us a while to get past all the headaches and stuff, but we have a strong connection now that Marty and Tarifa have shown us some tricks to ease the transition.”

“So she has heard everything we have talked about?” Miranda asked sternly.

Steven looked at her and shook his head. “No... she is more security conscious in many respects than I am. And I’m a bear. Hell... her clearance is higher than mine. She knows why you are here and she knows I will tell her everything later.”

“Why did you take the second reprimand in your record?” Miranda asked. “Your wife was the one who punched out the elven minister not you.”

Steven met her eyes. “That is what the record shows yes.” He stated.

“So that’s not what happened?” She asked him.

“Maybe I’ll tell you someday.” He said with a grin. “Unless you order me to tell you right now.”

Miranda shook her head. “I wouldn’t do that. Just so you don’t use that Mindvoice thing too often.” Miranda said. “It drives me nuts when Janon uses it with his mate and others on the ship. What Tier are the two of you anyway? Your file doesn’t say.”

Steven smiled. “Who turned me Miranda?”

Miranda rolled her eyes. “Shit... so like you are Tier Six and higher I take it? You have to be if Martin turned you.”

Steven turned back to the table. “C’mon Captain Lorian... let’s have a drink together. Our family is pretty tight.”

Family.

Miranda looked at him for a long moment wondering if somehow he knew what her greatest fear was. She looked at his dark eyes and decided that couldn’t be possible. She nodded her head and allowed him to lead her back to the large table where Janon was already laughing at something Tareif had told him.

SODRAG

Malic had never felt the trembling sensations coursing through him before. He was no stranger to women by any means, but what he felt rippling throughout him now was unlike anything he had experienced in his life. No matter where they touched him, it sent shuddering waves pulsating across his body. It was as if he had been blind until now, and he was seeing wonders for the first time. He had dreamt of this moment for weeks, how he would act and what he would do. All those plans had fallen by the wayside the moment he bonded with Vincix and his life changed. He had tried to bring them back to the forefront when he came here, but Eliani and Nyla had other ideas.

They were not about to let him dominate them. They were not that type of female. They in turn directed him and caressed him, showing him where to touch them, how to stroke their bodies to elicit the most tantalizing reactions. His first explosion had been the most powerful he had ever felt, their hands and lips and tongues upon his bursting cock indescribable in any words. It had taken him by such surprise that all he could do was lay back and attempt to keep his muscles from ripping through his skin at the intensity. Eliani and Nyla both had taken him deeply into their mouths, drinking down all he gave to them without hesitation, their hands never ceasing to drum across his body. He had caught himself right at the last moment, keeping himself from crushing their heads to his groin, settling by wrapping his hands within their silky hair. He was different, and they were different. He could not act as he had always acted, unable to sense the incredible feelings before. He knew now why Sadi and the other females he had taken into his bed never seemed excited about what he offered them, and he was determined to not go that route with Eliani or Nyla. After he had recovered from his first explosion, his cock softened only a fraction, but they had kissed and licked their way back up his now naked body until both of them were staring at his face. Without even thinking he had kissed first Eliani and then Nyla, not caring in the least that they had just shared his explosion of passion. If nothing else, this action seemed to incite them even more.

Eliani then scrambled onto the bed higher and Malic's exploration and instruction began.

Even though his cock was once more bursting within minutes, the new Malic took his time. The wolf within him wanted to physically possess these females in every possible way, yet the man within him, the man he had become wanted to possess their very essences. He had moved agonizingly slow down Eliani's body, discovering every contour, every crevice. With Nyla pressing against him and directing his actions he found the most erogenous zones in the most unlikely spots. The sides of her breasts, the insides of her knees, the supple curve of the top of her ass. All these spots served to raise Eliani's passion to heights he had never seen from a woman. When he finally found himself face to face with her center, Nyla was beside him, her long blond hair falling over Eliani's thigh. She taught him where to lick, how to caress Eliani's painfully erect clit, how to drag his lips along the outer folds of her glistening pussy to drive her insane. These are the things he had learned, and when Eliani's hips undulated off the bed and she screamed out in bliss, Malic received his reward. Her sweet juices tasted just as she smelled, and for the first time in his life Malic had greedily drank of a woman's passion while she writhed beneath him. By the time Eliani collapsed onto the bed, her breath coming in great heaves Malic had turned to look at Nyla, his wolf eyes very prominent.

Nyla had smiled seductively at him and whimpered passionately when he kissed her, pushing her up on the bed and beginning anew with her. Nyla Sinthe had more control, and her hands directed him to her spots, and the squeezing of his head was the indication he was doing everything right. Malic reveled in his new skill and as Eliani recovered and joined him in his exploration of his vampire mate, he began to take charge. As his lips and tongue explored Nyla's flesh his hands traveled over both of their taut bodies. He would show them that he wanted both of them equally.

He cast aside his old self and as Nyla's screams of release filled his ears and her juices flooded into his throat, Malic was truly reborn.

He was up instantly as her body fell back on the bed, caressing her long legs as he parted her thighs and positioned himself. Eliani rose off the bed quickly, opening her mouth to protest, but his kiss silenced her as he pressed the flared head of his rock hard cock at Nyla's entrance and pushed forward. Nyla gasped out, her cobalt blue vampire eyes wide as the largest cock she had ever seen began its torturously slow plunge into her body. Her hands pulled at the mattress as with inhuman control Malic pushed into her with precise power. The sensations he was experiencing were beyond his imagination and he did not want them to stop. The velvet like heat and powerful clenching of Nyla's pussy were combining to drive him into a whole new world, and he would not ruin this by acting like a brute. It took him several long minutes before he was buried completely in Nyla's clutching pussy, her legs wrapped around his lower back, her hands gripping his arms. Three times she had shuddered beneath him as an orgasm rocked her, Malic feeling the warmth and force of her come erupting from around his cock shaft. Eliani had moved up and with her own changed eyes wide with fervor she watched as Malic began to stroke into Nyla.

Watching them close their lips together, seeing their tongues lovingly entwined and playfully teasing within their lips when they parted slightly was enough to drive Malic to the edge rather quickly. His nerves were alive with new electricity, pleasure unlike anything he had ever experienced coursing through his powerful frame. He clenched his teeth, determined to make this last as long as possible, and show his mates that he was not the brute many thought him to be.

Nyla, for her part, was in a realm of pleasure that she had never experienced with Eliani. Malic's dominating cock was larger by a wide margin than any man they had ever taken into their bed. He stretched her in a way that caused her vampire blood to churn within her as only Eliani could do to her. Feeling her lover's hands caressing and licking her breasts while Malic's cock stroked into her with exquisite slowness was more than Nyla could take. Her orgasm came from deep within her belly, pushing outward with the force of a tidal wave until it consumed everything around her. With Eliani suckling one of her nipples, Nyla's head flew back and she screamed louder than she had ever screamed before. Her pussy clamped down on Malic's deeply buried cock and she erupted with the force of a hurricane. Her cobalt blue eyes rolled into the back of her head when she heard Malic groan loudly, his fingers pressing into her hips and then he was exploding inside her.

His come erupted like a cannon inside her, reaching places no man ever had, and her legs clamped onto his hips with all the vampire strength her body could generate. Her undeniable pleasure surged even more when he lowered his face to hers and kissed her, taking her head in his hands and kissed her with passion and desire that she had only ever felt from Eliani. Tears clouded her eyes then as her world became complete, and as Malic's come warmed her belly and he nuzzled her throat and neck firmly, Nyla lost herself to blissful sensations and collapsed onto the bed exhausted.

That had been thirty minutes ago and now Malic felt more than recharged, he felt like an Alpha wolf that had all he could desire.

His black outlined deep ocean blue eyes stared at Eliani as she straddled his hips; her full pouty lips parted slightly, her hands braced on his broad chest as she lifted her hips once more with deliberate slowness. Her juices coated half his straining cock, his hands resting on her thighs as he gazed hungrily at the protruding nipples on her breasts. She had been trying for ten minutes now to take him inside her, each time taking a little more as she slid deeper, and each time shuddering in gentle orgasms as they washed over her.

"Shit... shit... shit!" Eliani gasped softly as her face contorted and she lowered herself once more. Her velvet heat was so much like Nyla's, engulfing another inch of his cock shaft as she held herself above him, a look of pure unadulterated bliss on her face. "It's so... so big! Malic... Malic I..."

Malic turned his head as he felt Nyla's lips caress his neck and he lifted his hand to wrapped his fingers within her satiny blond hair. Nyla kissed him, their tongues doing an intimate tango as she dragged her nails down along his chest and arm.

Nyla pulled back from their kiss, gently biting his bottom lip as she smiled devilishly. "She is a female Alpha wolf Malic." Nyla whispered to him. "You are a male Alpha. Make her yours Malic, just as you have made me yours."

Eliani's black outlined fern green eyes grew a little wider when she heard Nyla say this. "Aur Enyla... he is too big... I can't...!" She gasped out the words.

Malic sat up then and Eliani's head flew back as the last five inches of Malic's wonderful cock impaled her in one single stroke.

"Ahhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh... Maaliicc!" Eliani screamed as the orgasm ripped through her and she felt his large balls pulsing wildly and pressed firmly against her ass cheeks. Malic's arms crushed her too him, her nipples burning points against his broad chest and he wrapped his aura around Eliani Leonidas.

Eliani's eyes were wide, her lips parted in another breathless scream as she felt every throbbing centimeter of Malic's eleven inches spear her to her core. She felt his wolf aura wrap around her, driving her nerves to incredible heights of orgasmic intensity, yet he did so in such a way that allowed her to keep her wits about her. Eliani knew what a powerful alpha could do to a female wolf with his aura; even her mother couldn't absorb the full force of her father's aura for she was not fully wolf. Like her father however, Malic was hitting Eliani with just enough of his aura to drive her right to the edge of the abyss and then holding her there. Every movement, no matter how insignificant, caused rapturous waves of pleasure to vibrate through her. She could feel every pulsing vein of his masterful cock against the walls of her tight pussy. There had been no pain when he plunged completely inside her, only a feeling of incredible bliss. Eliani smashed her head forward to his shoulder as he pressed a hand against the small of her back and pushed her downward, pressing her pussy further down on his will crushing cock.

"Malic!" Eliani rasped out in a hoarse voice as the pleasure trampled her earlier fears that he would hurt her with his size. "Malic... you... you better... you better cado forn! Scent... scent me Malic my love!"

Malic rolled her over on the bed then, causing her to cry out in abandon, her arms strong wrapping around his shoulders.

“Ohhhhh... nubou lae! Nubou lae Malic!” Eliani screamed.

Malic had learned one thing in all his years of watching his parents together. Rarely did his father ever refuse a request by his mother and mate. Malic had learned that lesson well, and at Eliani's request he began to do just that. He lowered his head to her shoulder, reached his hands under her body to cup her wonderfully firm ass cheeks, and Malic proceeded to fuck his breathtakingly beautiful Hadarian/Wolf mate with long, slow and powerful eleven inch strokes. Eliani's world descended into a sphere that she had never been to before. Malic's aura never ceased the endless teasing of her body, her own wolf aura responding to the magical feel of what he was doing to her by reaching out and spreading around him just as tightly as it could. This was a place Nyla could not send her because she was not a wolf, and she opened her mind to her vampire lover so that Nyla could feel every exquisite sensation that rippled across her mind and flesh. She heard Nyla gasp at the feeling and then Malic's mind, powerful and pure with an indomitable will joined their thoughts and Nyla could do nothing but writher on the bed beside them as she felt every delicious tremor of pleasure that Eliani felt.

Malic was well beyond anything he had ever dreamed this could be.

While he had desired it, and imagined it ever since meeting Eliani the first time, actually having her and Nyla both together was something he never realistically thought would ever happen. Even after bonding with Vincix so completely Malic did not believe they could ever desire him as he desired them. He knew that to be false now, for he could feel Eliani's aura wrapping around him like a loving blanket. He could smell Nyla's passion and desire for him just as easily as he could smell Eliani's, and it was driving him mad. His hips began moving faster, driving into his wolf mate with dominating strokes and hearing her cries of delight in his ears, feeling her hands clutching him tighter and urging him deeper. Malic could feel new vibrations through his body, sensations that he had never felt before, and instead of deep driving strokes that invoked no pleasure in the other women he had shared a bed with, now he was able to sense his own power. He could actually feel the euphoric vibrations Eliani's tight, clutching pussy caused as she squeezed her inner muscles on every downward stroke into her, milking his near bursting cock. He could feel the walls of her velvet tightness stretching to accommodate him, wrapping around his shaft like the fingers of a form fitting glove. These were the things he felt now, things he had never felt before, and it was these new sensations and vibrations that were driving him to new levels of pleasure that he had never achieved before.

Malic lifted his head as he felt his abdomen tense, the pleasure spiraling out of control. His large balls drew up tight to the base of his shaft and he looked at Eliani's gorgeous face. Her black outlined fern green wolf eyes gazed at him with a mixture of passion and love that Malic swore he could actually feel. His mind flared briefly with passion driven by instinct and he slammed into Eliani one last time. As her wails of utter blissful pleasure filled the room and the most spirit shattering orgasm of her life crashed through her, Malic dropped his head once more and bite down into her shoulder with his wolf fangs. Eliani's eyes burst open at that moment as she felt his cock balloon in size within her and then his lava hot come was erupting into her depths. When the first eruption splashed against her womb Eliani's own wolf fangs, now fully extended in passion, snapped shut on Malic's thick shoulder.

Nyla had tears in her eyes, for she knew the significance of what was happening and a part of her began dying at this, thinking perhaps she would become secondary in their lives. That is until Malic reached for her in an orgasmic daze and pulled her head closer to his. More tears came, tears of joy this time as she realized what he was doing and with barely any thought Nyla twisted around and pressed her lush body against his broad back, opened her mouth wide exposing her vampiric fangs and she bit deeply into his neck. As Malic's warm blood splashed across her taste buds Nyla came. And came hard as she felt every minute amount of staggering pleasure her lovers were feeling flood her mind and become hers as well.

It was over far too quickly to suit them, but as the last drops of Malic's come spilled into Eliani's belly, and they collapsed onto the bed in a mass of tangled limbs and sated spirits they knew they would have eternity together. An eternity to explore the boundaries of what they had discovered this night. Malic's powerful limbs pulled both of them to his warm body, and they gleefully curled into his arms before sleep took them all into its embrace.

They would awake in a few hours to continue their explorations well into the evening hours.

NEBONESE

Las'elh watched as Anton charged his K12 Kinetic Magnum and returned it to the holster on his leg as the Lifter shifted seamlessly across the rough terrain. The last two days had been eye opening to say the least. Until meeting Cihera and Anton, Las'elh had only ever heard about the Drow elves that hailed from Earth. They had been created by the Senior Polemarch of the Union, Walter Carson as the name he went by now. His skills in medicine and cloning apparently passed on to him through his genes when he was born. Though he still practiced medicine in many fashions, Walter no longer dabbled in any sort of cloning technology. He had achieved the goal he had sought all of his life in Martin discovering who he was and he had openly stood beside Queen Anja as they denounced cloning in all its forms.

The Drow elves were his creation and Las'elh knew their population on Earth had ballooned in size through the years. As she had watched and studied them in the last two days she began to realize why they were considered almost as deadly as a Spartan wolf. There were five Drow total in Nalar and Malia's family. Two of them were their children, a twenty year old boy and nineteen year old female. The third Drow was also a female who she was told was their cousin. Four different elves and three humans also lived with them, all of them members of the Krypteria, all of them having been born and raised on Earth. Two male and two female elves, and two female humans and one male human. All of them knew who Anton and Cihera were based on the greetings they had received, and all of them were part of some larger Drow clan she discovered. Nalar and Malia's son Idafi and one of the female elves from Earth were married, and had been married since they were teenagers. She carried their first child, and they were completely devoted to each other. Nalar and Malia's daughter Eriri was the one who ran the storefront they lived above. She was the face of their cover here, and after listening to them talk over the last two days, Las'elh discovered Eriri was the most deadly. She and the tall Wood Elf from Earth were planning to marry in the following year. Their cousin Ovana and one of the human females from Earth, a petite blond haired young woman named Rachel, were involved in a committed and torrid relationship if the soft sounds Las'elh had heard during the previous night from the room they shared were any indication.

Malia had told her during the day previous that Drow females were not shy about their relationships, and if it was another female that roused their passion, a Drow would not hesitate to pursue that. Las'elh could attest to that since Cihera was by no means shy based on what she saw enroute to Nebonese. If she wanted her husband, Cihera didn't seem to care that Las'elh slept only two meters away and neither did Anton.

No one was treated differently, and the table they all sat at for dinner was enormous. The conversation was plenty, discussing the ongoing events within the Union, and also the mission Anton and Cihera were on. Las'elh found that all Drow, no matter where they were, worshiped King Leonidas and their Queen almost fanatically. Their King knew of their history and skills and no matter what Scout unit you went to within the Lycavorian Union, more often than not you would find a Drow leading that unit. Though they projected an outward dominance to others and stuck to their reputation during the days and in public, here in private Las'elh noticed that all disappeared. Whether Drow or simply elf, the conversation and sense of warmth reminded Las'elh very much of her younger years when she was growing and the love and warmth her own family shared. It was why she had abandoned all she had gained to find out what happened to her sister.

Las'elh felt the nudge on her arm and turned to look at Cihera's amber colored eyes. She felt an involuntary shudder vibrate through her at those eyes and how they looked at her. It was a look that actually made her feel wanted, and for a brief instant she imagined herself servicing Cihera in any way she desired. She tore her blue eyes away and looked down at the wickedly shape knife Cihera held out to her. She took the blade and slowly withdrew it from its sheath. The blade was matte black; the pommel curved and with a stud point on the end for piercing, backhanded blows. The back of the eighteen centimeter long blade had two wide spaced teeth forged into it, the rear of the razor edged blade also having a small U shaped gap near where it met the base of the pommel. Las'elh was an expert with knives and the one she now held was an intricately carved blade, supremely crafted and weighted perfectly. She turned back to Cihera.

"It is a Drow Vlos volve. A Blood Blade. It would look odd if you were not armed." She spoke softly. "We will see about getting one balanced just for you, but for now this will do. I know you don't approve of how we established your cover when we arrived here Las'elh, but it was needed to protect you."

“I can take care of myself.” Las’elh stated quickly but without any trace of hostility.

Cihera nodded her head. “I have no doubts of that. You survived on your own in The Wilds without any support from the EI. I do not question your abilities. As you no doubt know, elves of any kind in The Wilds often disappear into slavery of the worst kind. And female elves are especially popular. Your beauty would have drawn much interest from the scum who live on Nebonese. Doing what we did keeps you from falling victim to this. As Anton explained... if they think you are my... if you are my...”

“Subservient Drow slave?” Las’elh spoke.

Cihera nodded and looked at her. “Yes. If they think this... most of them will not dare approach you.”

“Most?” Las’elh asked.

Anton leaned over from his seat across from her. “Even The Wilds has its share of stupid individuals who would risk their limbs to have an elf of your beauty Las’elh.” He said holding out the cut down version of what looked like the K12 to her. “For inside your calf. It is the K14 Special. Made especially for the Krypteria. Same design and action as the K12 KM, but much easier to hide.”

“It is why we asked you to wear what you do.” Cihera said.

Las’elh looked down at the one piece jumpsuit that conformed to her lithe body as if painted on. It proudly accented her large breasts and the curves of her ass, making it impossible for anyone to let their eyes drift down to her legs where the pant legs were free flowing and open. “I was wondering that.” Las’elh spoke.

Cihera smiled. “The jumpsuit is weaved with a reinforced Drow fiber that we harvest and design on Earth. It takes four months to make an outfit like that, but when it is done, it provides the same level of protection as a Scout/Sniper’s armor. It is very good at stopping small caliber weapons and blades, but also helps to accent your physical assets.”

Las’elh looked at her. “Do you have... do you have a real slave Cihera?” She asked quickly.

Cihera chuckled and shook her head. “No.” She stated. “And my people do not refer to their partners that way. Male or female.”

“It appears common among the Drow.” Las’elh spoke. “Your own mother has two. Don’t they call her mistress and she calls them slave?” She saw Cihera’s surprised expression. “Ovana told me last night.” Las’elh said quickly.

“Yes she does. However... my mother Lynwe is rather unique. And I consider Selene and Layna my mothers as well. They adopted me when I was very small and I have known no other family. You will find if you remain among the Drow for very long that those words are used more as affectionate terms of endearment and no longer have meaning among my people aside from expressions of love.” She said with a smile. “As for the second part of your question... the opportunity has never presented itself to us.”

“Us?” Las’elh asked.

“I love my husband Las’elh.” Cihera said.

“I certainly hope so.” Anton chimed in with a smile.

“It is not something I would do without Anton’s permission. If this opportunity ever came about... that female would need to understand that she would be part of both our lives in every way. Not just mine.” Cihera told her. “There are not many of them out there who would accept this... and I have no desire to look. Anton is already almost more than I can handle.” She finished with a smile.

“Wow! You’ve never told me that C.” Anton spoke with a larger grin.

Cihera looked at him with bright amber eyes. “And now that you know, your ego will grow by leaps and bounds I’m sure.” She said with an alluring voice.

“But you wouldn’t dismiss it?” Las’elh said.

Cihera looked back at Las’elh and shook her head. “No. My mother and Queen Aihola believe that Walter somehow and quite unknowingly, gave the Drow elves a predisposition in some fashion in this regard. A powerful attraction to both sexes.” She shrugged her shoulders. “It has been passed down through our bloodlines for centuries now and it is something Drow have come to expect and honor as part of our culture. Secretly I believe my mother and Aihola have always wished to see a Drow become part of the Royal family in some way. It would cement our standing within the Union for many still do not believe we are our own species of elf.” Cihera smiled. “Do not worry, Anton and I will let nothing happen to you Las’elh. Just know that we do not operate the same as the EI. Guard your emotions and responses well. The scum that live here in The Wilds have come to expect those we call slave to be subservient, but not completely so. Prepare yourself... we will be arriving at the meeting in a few minutes.”

Las’elh fastened the vlos velve to the waist belt she wore. As she leaned over and used the Velcro straps to secure the K14 to her inner calf, she did not see the look that passed between Anton and Cihera. It was a look of intense interest, especially on Cihera’s part, and when she saw Anton give her an almost imperceptible nod Cihera knew he could smell it on her. She knew he could smell her desire for Las’elh wafting from her pores. And he approved. It was not something they had ever spoken of, yet seeing his acceptance if she wished to pursue it made her love him all the more.

As the Lifter glided up the worn gravel path towards the abandoned mining facility, Las’elh sat back up. The small armored window between the cockpit of the Lifter and the rear opened and Nalar’s face appeared.

“We are almost there Anton.” He spoke. “Our people say he has four in the towers above the entrance. Another seven inside. All lightly armed.”

“You think he plans something Nalar?” Cihera asked.

“I think he knows Gravork has disappeared from Talbor Seven and suddenly we know of his whereabouts here on Nebonese.” Nalar spoke. “While not unusual considering the type of information we have been able to obtain in the past, he also knows Gravork is one of the few who know who he is and where he can be located. He also knows that Anton’s father wiped out their weapons trading unit and Prince Androcles destroyed his forces on Eleyis Three. He will be cautious and suspect everyone. Considering the losses he has taken in the years since the end of the war he is allowing non-Evolli into his ranks now, he controls them but they are more unpredictable in their own reactions.”

Las’elh looked at Cihera. “Prince Androcles destroyed his forces? How?”

“These Evolli were the ones that Gravork put this Lycavorian in contact with. He wanted people willing to target Union assets and individuals. These same Evolli were contracted by the High Coven to deliver T19s to an Immortal detachment. They were also contracted by what now appears to be a Lycavorian to conduct an assassination of my Aunt Aricia and Aunt Anja as they were returning from Hadaria several weeks ago. The attempt failed mainly in part because Andro got there first with his brothers and sisters and killed them all.” Anton spoke.

Las’elh looked at him. “And now you want the name of that Lycavorian.” She spoke.

Cihera nodded as she met her eyes. “We told you this before... not in as great detail... and you were distracted with anger at the time, but essentially yes.” She answered. “We believe this Lycavorian to be the King’s brother Pleistarchus. We also believe he is attempting to hurt Martin Leonidas by going after those he thinks are easy targets. We came out here originally to discover about the weapons dealing, you were there when we first interrogated Gravork. You know what he said. This has gotten much larger than we first thought.”

“Those targets were my Aunts.” Anton spoke sternly. “My uncle doesn’t allow anyone to target his family. Especially not his Queens.”

“What does that have to do with my sister?” Las’elh asked. “I understand about these Evolli targeting the Queens. But this Lycavorian sold the information to Gravork, who then passed it on to these unknown mercenaries. Why would finding him help me?”

“Tell her Anton.” Cihera spoke. “She has a right to know everything now. All of this is now linked together.”

“Gravork put these unknown individuals directly in contact with this Lycavorian.” Anton spoke. “He did not sell them the information as he first said. During my interrogation of him I discovered he put them in direct contact with the traitor among our people. This Lycavorian met them on three different times that Gravork arranged. He was the middle man only. Similar to his actions with most of his weapons deals.”

“We believe this Lycavorian to be the King’s brother as we said. But to do what he has done indicates he is moving about the Union with more freedom than he should have. And that can only mean he has help among others within the Union.” Cihera spoke.

Nalar nodded from the front as he listened to them. “Queen For’mya and Queen Dysea’s directives were very clear.” He stated. “Discover who this Lycavorian is positively, even though we already believe it to be Pleistarchus, and then find out who is helping him. And end them.”

Las’elh looked at Cihera. “I thought the Krypteria’s own Charter forbade working within Union space.” She said.

Cihera nodded. "It does." She stated. "Unless a direct authorization from the King or Prime Minister Deia is issued."

Anton smiled. "Deia is the King's Aunt Las'elh." He stated seeing her blue eyes go wide at this information. "She is the younger sister of the King's grandmother Eliani. And she is far more devious and protective of the King than even his Queens. She released Armetus and the Krypteria to discover what is going on three days ago. The Krypteria Oversight Committee approved the request to operate within Union borders until such time as all the information is gathered. Minister L'tian, Queen For'mya's father, is now also involved in the investigation. As well as the Hadarian Oversight Minister since these ships were apparently carrying Hadarian medical technology and either leaving or going to Hadaria."

"So you see Las'elh..." Cihera spoke. "Our paths have crossed for a reason. And now our goals our mutually beneficial. We find this Lycavorian... we find who took your sister."

Nalar smiled. "Welcome to the Drow Clan Anatyla, of the Family Anatyla. The Drow Queen's family." Las'elh's eyes grew even wider at this and she opened her mouth to speak.

The deafening roar and sound of screeching metal silenced her and then the Lifter was struck by a hammer like blow lifting it up onto its side. Las'elh's last vision before darkness claimed her was of Anton reaching for Cihera.

Then blackness claimed her.

MJOLNIR'S HAND

Aricia and Isabella stood in the landing bay watching as the G9 Long Range Runner was guided by the anti-grav beam projecting from the massive struts and cylindrical balls that lined the ceiling of the bay. It was how all of the ships were moved as they were brought into the landing bay itself from the launch tubes, or lifted on elevators from the hanger deck and the repair facilities below. Along the massive length of the landing bay were lined TEMPEST and DEVASTATOR fighters and fighter bombers. Three STRIKER ATs could be seen parked along the far wall of the bay, their ramps down while crews moved in and out of the ships. The two STRIKER DTs that were always assigned to MJOLNIR'S HAND sat idle next to their more heavily armed sisters.

A reinforced squad of Durcunusaan stood in a loose half circle around Aricia and Isabella. Close enough to react to any threat they might detect, but also far enough away to make it seem less threatening. Aricia and Isabella both wore the black ArmorPly, their gold trimmed crimson capes brushing against the deck of the landing bay as their eyes followed the movement of the G9. They both turned when the azure scaled Isheeni moved off the elevator from the upper deck and deftly moved her muscular form to take up station just to Aricia's right. The Durcunusaan troops shifted slightly when Isheeni did this, allowing them and her more room to react if they needed. Isheeni settled gracefully to the deck, her four limbs cocked under her like springs while her wickedly long talons rapped on the deck plating gently.

While Arzoal held the title of Elder Mother and Matriarch, her daughter Isheeni was now widely recognized and known among the dragons of the Union as their moral compass. Like her mother, Isheeni possessed incredible awareness and intelligence because of her bond with Aricia and the strength of their Mindvoice abilities. Over the years she had also become known as the most compassionate dragon within the Union. Her uncompromising love of her hybrid dragon mate Torma was legendary among the dragons, as was the story of how they had become the two most powerful dragons within the Union. Yet for all her compassion, Isheeni was also the type that once you pushed her to the point of breaking, her wrath was unimaginable to behold. Three hundred Evolli soldiers had fallen under her talons and teeth and inferno like breath. She held the distinction of being able to sustain her flame for longer than most other dragons in the Union, and the retreating Evolli had learned just that in hers and Aricia's dash to get to their beloved mates the morning after the slaughter that was Alba Tau. Isheeni had wailed within Mindvoice upon seeing her Torma on the ground, soaked in blood and the wounds on his side beginning to grow infected from the foul dirt of the planet. He and Martin lay against one another, the bodes of the Evolli stacked sometimes six or seven high around them, the massive log beside her mate, stained with the blood and rotting flesh of those Evolli he had smashed into pulp with it when he could no longer pull his huge body off the ground. It had been a terrible time for her and Aricia, their mates and children looking so batter and broken, Andro and Elynth a short distance away looking even more bloody and ragged. They had come through it together however, and only grown stronger for it.

Do you sense anything sister? Aricia asked her.

Isheeni shook her huge head slowly. Only a mild Mindvoice presence. There is more confusion within several of those on board than anything else. Confusion directed inward really.

Inward? Bella spoke looking at her.

Isheeni nodded. A question of purpose really. But they are determined nonetheless. I sense no deception Aricia.

Aricia turned back. Nor do I.

Isabella shook her head. For'mya's skill is rubbing off on you. She spoke. It is very nerve racking at times to hear you talk like that.

Aricia grinned and bumped her hip into Isabella. We can teach you. She said.

Isabella shook her head quickly. No thank you. I don't want to know another's purpose until they act. Then I will know how to act. It keeps me sharp.

Isheeni and Aricia chuckled within Mindvoice and Isheeni butted her snout gently into Isabella's shoulder. Bella you are one of the calmest individuals no matter the situation. Isheeni spoke. Imagine if you had this skill.

It is hard enough having to deal with ussta she-elf and her visions. Bella answered. Knowing what another person thinks is not something I'm prepared for.

We can only sense their surface emotions Bella. We can't read their thoughts. Aricia said.

That's bad enough. Bella answered with a smile. What do you do when you come across a man who sees you and has intimate thoughts and fantasies about you suddenly racing through his mind Aricia? Or when a young dragon has fantasies about you Isheeni. And don't tell me that doesn't happen. What do you do?

Aricia looked at Isheeni with a grin. Well... it has led to some very promising nights of pleasure with the men in our lives. Isheeni finally answered.

Aricia nodded. It most certainly has.

Isabella shook her head. You two are such pomai! She exclaimed with considerable humor.

Aricia shrugged her shoulders with a smile. Martin and Torma don't complain. Besides... there may be men out there more handsome than Martin, but we would never deceive and betray him. Not with the way he makes us all feel. She stated smugly. She looked at Isabella. How long were you going to wait before you told the rest of us you are pregnant again Bella?

Isabella looked at her with an embarrassed grin. I was going to wait until we returned. She replied knowing she could not deny it after all their years together. I have wanted... I have wanted to give him a son for so long Aricia. Anuk received the results back just before we left to come here.

That is why you have been so amorous then. Not that I am complaining mind you. Aricia said with a smile. He is strong already Bella. We can sense that even now.

Isheeni nodded. And For'mya desires to give him a girl more than anything. When she does perhaps the five of you will stop having children and begin to enjoy your pleasure more.

Aricia laughed out loud then and she reached up to put her hand on Isheeni's snout. "I believe Anja and I already came to that decision." She said. "After we both gave birth to twins, we said enough."

Bah! Isheeni exclaimed. He has only to caress you with his aura and you will do anything he desires.

Aricia snorted. "As if you are any different with Torma sister."

The three of them laughed and Aricia reached out and took Isabella's hand. "She's right you know." She said as the loud clunking noise indicated the G9 locking into place on the deck twenty meters away.

Isabella nodded. "Yes... but that is why it is so much fun." She answered.

They both turned as the whirring noise began and the ramp on the G9 began to come down slowly, the Durcunusaan moving closer, their hands holding their 190s ready, but not pointed at the ship. Aricia and Isabella moved closer as they saw three figures begin to come into view as the ramp lowered. They watched as the Eanae and vampire they had seen in the transmission were among the three men. The third looked vaguely familiar to Aricia in some way and she slowed her pace as they approached.

Isheeni detected this instantly. [Sister?] She asked.

[The one on the left.] Aricia said. [I know him from somewhere.]

Bella looked at the blond haired man, his face relaxed but his body tense. [From where?] She asked.

[That's just it...] Aricia spoke. [I know I've seen him before... but I can't...] Aricia's eyes grew wide in that instant and her hand dropped to her Nehtes, pulling it free in a single blink as the three men stopped in front of them. "Durcunusaan! Move!" She screamed.

There was no hesitation in their movements. No questioning looks around. Aricia swept her Nehtes in front of her, enhancing her movement with her Mindvoice abilities. The unknown vampire had no chance to blur. No chance to wrap the shadows around him and in that single instant before she dropped him painfully onto his back, Aricia wondered why. Isabella did blur however, her dual blades appearing in her fists as she appeared behind Maros and pressed them tightly to his throat as two Durcunusaan pushed Joyar to the deck none too kindly.

"Do not move if you wish to continue breathing!" Isabella hissed.

Aricia shoved the razor like head of her spear into the second vampire's chest, his blue eyes looking up at her from the deck. She reached up and tapped the COM unit on her uniform as alarms began going off all over the ship. "Komirri!" She barked.

"My Queen!" His voice was angered because he thought it was happening again on his ship. "Aricia what is going on?"

"Komirri... lock our port side Type Two batteries on that frigate and prepare to fire!" Aricia ordered without hesitation.

"Port side!" Komirri's voice chimed out on the COM. "Port side! Full charge! Prepare to fire!"

Maros's grew wide. "Wait! We aren't armed! We came just as you asked!"

"My family is on that ship!" Joyar screamed. "You gave me your word!"

"You bring this creature onto my Beloved's ship!" Aricia snarled poking her Nehtes harder into the vampire's chest.

"What are you talking about?" Maros exclaimed quickly. "He's a Commander in the Insurgency!"

"Aricia what is wrong?" Isabella asked holding Maros securely in her grasp.

"I knew this man!" Aricia snapped. "I knew this man on Earth! He was one of Martin's men! One that he turned before the comet! He was part of Martin's Royal Guard when he first came to Sparta. He was killed during the Battle of Eden City!"

Isabella's eyes dropped to the man as he lay on the deck, his hands extended out to show he was unarmed. His blue eyes flashed to her and then back to Aricia. He had a handsome face, and looked perfectly human except for the cobalt color of his eyes and the tips of his vampiric fangs protruding from under his top lip.

"I don't suppose... I don't suppose there is any way I could talk to the Skipper is there." He asked.

Aricia's face twisted slightly as she glared at him. "You will speak to no one but my Nehtes unless you tell me why you are here clone scum!"

The Durcunusaan troop stepped up to Aricia now, his 190 leveled at the vampire clone. His eyes were wide as he glared at the clone, but he motioned with his head to Aricia. "My Queen." He broke in. "He speaks of the King."

Aricia looked at him. "What?"

"This word he used. Skipper. It is what the King's unit called him. A term of affection and respect." He replied.

"Olant... are you sure?" Aricia asked.

He nodded. "Positive Milady. I studied the King's history before the comet quite extensively. I wrote a Final Term paper on his past to finish my studies before graduating and moving on to the Durcunusaan. I received an excellent grade for content. Bad grade for grammar." He said shrugging his shoulders.

Aricia looked at the vampire. "What name do you use now clone?" She barked. "And how do you know this term?"

"My name is Colin. Colin Walsh." He answered. "And I know that term because I know the Skipper. I was... I am Chief Petty Officer Colin Walsh."

Aricia glanced at Isabella quickly. "You lie!" She said. "You are a clone! Martin saw your body!"

Walsh nodded. "Yeah he sure did. Kind of spooky if you ask me. And yes I'm a clone. I was made by the High Coven scientists. Only problem is they never thought we would end up having the memories of the original host take over who they made us out to be? I much prefer being a wolf I'll tell you that."

Arcia stared at him as she slowly pulled her Nehtes back. "You expect me to believe this?" She snarled at him.

"Contact him! Ask him yourself!" Walsh spoke quickly. "Ask him about Operation Thunder Blade!"

"Martin's history is well known to any who have access to the Netnews!" Isabella snapped.

Walsh shook his head. "Not this mission. Only four of us went on it. It was unsanctioned! Only four of us went on it and only three of us came back! Contact him and ask him! I'm telling you I'm Colin Walsh!"

"My Queen... we are standing by!" Komirri's voice echoed over the COM.

"Komirri... stand down!" Arcia ordered. "And get me a secure Spartan One channel to Martin on the SPIRIT. Are we still within COM range?"

"Extreme range yes." Komirri answered.

"Then do it right now Komirri! We need to speak with him."

"Done." Komirri barked.

"Olant... take them to the holding room." Arcia said. "Bella and I will go and talk with Martin." She turned back to Walsh. "If what you say is false clone scum... I will vent your carcasses into the void of space myself and watch as we blow your ship from the stars! And I will not blink when I give that order."

Arcia stepped back as the Durcunusaan moved in to secure the three men. "Bella... Isheeni... come." She said. "Quickly... before Martin and Anja move out of range."

SPIRIT OF HADARIA

"...Operation Thunder Blade?" Martin asked softly looking down at the deck plating from where he rested on the edge of Anja's desk.

He and Anja were sitting in her office on the SPIRIT when the urgent communication from Arcia came in.

"Do you know of what this clone speaks Beloved?" Arcia asked.

Martin looked back up. "Yes." He replied. "It was an operation that four of us conducted when we returned from Iran. Unsanctioned like he said. We did it on our own. We... we went after the politicians who sold us out and left us in the desert. They did it for oil and money. We discovered that when we returned. One of us didn't make it back. Petty Officer Wendt took out his targets and himself to keep from being caught by police."

"Anja... how could this clone know of this?" Isabella asked. "If only Martin and Daniel knew of it when Colin Walsh was killed in the Battle for Earth... how could he know this?"

Anja got up from her chair and moved around to stand next to Martin. "There's only one way." She said. "Memory ingrams."

Martin looked at her. "Memory who?"

"All of us have memory ingrams in our brains lover." Anja explained. "They are sort of like memory discs for a computer. They are coded directly into our DNA. It's what allows us to remember things after we have been knocked unconscious for instance. Given the Lycavorian healing system... even if these ingrams are damaged in some way they will re-grow over time."

"Anja... this is a vampire we are talking of." Arcia said.

Anja nodded. "Yes... I know. But if the Coven cloning process is as good as Aikiro boasts... as good as we've seen in the past... it's possible the memory ingrams of the original host have resuscitated."

"So you are saying that though they may now be clones, they have all the memories of their original host?" Bella asked. "That is... Anja that is..."

Anja nodded. "Crazy I know... but we've determined that their cloning process is based at least in part off the Mindvoice ship technology. AVI himself has confirmed that. The clone I showed Martin in Sparta... the one who was part of the insurgent attack on the Kavalians... he was perfect in every way. Aside from the fact that he was a vampire."

“I thought you said Aikiro removed any Lycavorian DNA from these clones when she created them.” Aricia spoke.

“That’s what she told us as well.” Anja said. “That is obviously not the case if this clone with you retains memories of the original Colin Walsh. Especially memories that would have been buried very deep. I would need to have Anuk run tests on the body we have at the hospital to be sure... but that’s my guess on it.”

“But if she had any Lycavorian DNA removed... how could these memory ingrams have the original host memories?”

“He was a genome before Marty turned him.” Anja spoke. Aikiro couldn’t remove those Source DNA strands. Not is she wanted to create leaders. Once Martin turned them and the cellular bonding became complete, the genome DNA and Lycan DNA was fused. She may have taken it out of their bodies, but not out of their brains.”

“So this clone... this man is Colin Walsh Red?” Martin asked her.

Anja looked at him and nodded. “Maybe not in a physical sense... but if what Aricia and Bella are saying is accurate... then as far as his mind is concerned, yes.”

Martin rose to his feet then. “Man this clone sibfla gives me a headache!” He spat.

Anja looked at them in the holo transmission. “We’re going to lose the COM signal very soon Aricia. You and Bella get him to submit to an immediate medical exam and then send everything to me on Hadaria via secure data pack.”

“Not a transmission?” Aricia asked.

Anja shook her head. “Given what is going on with everything, the less people who know about this the better. I don’t think even Aikiro realizes what is going on with her clones.”

Aricia nodded as the transmission flickered suddenly. “We will make it so.” She said. “I will contact you when we return to Earth. You should be on your way back by then.”

Martin turned and nodded his head. “Be alert Saaurano, Du’ased ’ranndi. Cover each other’s backs.”

Isabella nodded. “We will.” She spoke. “We will see you soon.”

Martin looked at Anja when she turned from the holo transmission and met his eyes. “I’ll be able to tell what’s going on with the clones when I have live samples of their DNA.” She said confidently.

“Is all that crap you were just spewing... is all that actually even possible Red?” Martin asked her.

Anja chuckled as she stepped up to him. “Unfortunately yes.” She spoke looking up into his face. “The question remains... just how much of the memories have returned? And how many of your team that was cloned is still alive? Outside of this one with Aricia and Bella and the clone of Julie on Earth that is.”

Martin met her jade green eyes. “AVI told me that we have a genetic predisposition to hate one another.” He said. “Because of these Pralors. The Pralors used command of these ships as a reward and an exile. The one on Nuwaroa was being exiled. My ancestor was apparently one of those who voted to have him exiled. Guess they didn’t get along even then.”

Anja smiled. “I thought you didn’t like hanging around AVI?” She said.

Martin shrugged. “He ain’t so bad.” He spoke. “At least he doesn’t call me Milord... or your Kingship... or some other silly shit like that. When we get back from Hadaria I think I’ll have another talk with Aikiro.”

Anja slipped her arms around his waist. “You did not have to come with me Martin.” She said.

Martin looked at her. “You trying to get rid of me Red?” He asked.

Anja smiled. “Not at all... I can handle my Aunt and the Elders though. And you have enough to worry about.”

“My Queens come before everything else.” He said. “The women I love and my children. Besides... I’m getting sick of your Aunt and her arrogance.”

Anja chuckled. “You and me both. Do you think Aikiro knows what could be happening with her clones?”

Martin snorted. “Maybe... maybe not.” He spoke. “She either knows or just didn’t want to tell me why when I asked her in Sparta, or she doesn’t know why and can’t explain it any better than I can. In which case she would say nothing because she won’t let slip of that persona of hers that she is better than me.”

Martin inhaled deeply and Anja’s sweet honey scent filled his senses completely. She was worried about what would happen on Hadaria, angry that the Hadarian Elders were finally showing their religious fanaticism, and very angry that they would threaten to take her children. Martin could tell all of this easily just by her scent and the gentle caress of her mind in his.

“What are Retta, Calyb and Siara doing right now?” Martin asked finally. They had also brought their niece with them so that she could return to Hadaria and be with her mother.

“Universal History Studies.” Anja replied immediately pulling back her head and looking at him, knowing exactly what her children were being taught in their schooling. The Hadarian Elders could think what they want, she and her fellow Queens were ruthless when it came to instructing and educating their children. All one had to do to discover that was ask Andro and the older Leonidas children who got more beatings by skipping their tutored classes on top of their normal schooling. “It just started... why?”

“So we got like two hours.” Martin said.

Anja saw the glint in Martin’s eye and a smile crept across her beautiful face. “Two hours and fifteen minutes.” She said. “Did you have something in mind lover?”

Martin shrugged his broad shoulders. “I don’t know... there’s not enough time.” He spoke. “And we arrive on Hadaria in eighteen hours.”

Anja pressed her body tighter against his and smiled wickedly. “I’ll make it worth your while my big Alpha wolf.” She spoke alluringly, releasing her female aura to reach out and caress Martin’s senses.

Martin looked at her, maintaining rigid control of his own aura and senses which were rapidly spiraling about. “We should get back to the bridge and make sure we’re not needed.” He stated calmly. He leaned over and kissed her forehead before turning to head for the door.

Anja stared at him stunned and in a huff bent over her desk to stab the controls for the door. Her own passions had risen and now she wanted her mate and husband. If she had to force herself on him she would do just that.

“Martin Leonidas you stop right... Ohhhhhhhh...” Anja gasped as she felt Martin’s body press up against her tightly from behind, his aura reaching out to embrace her tightly. She felt his face lower to her neck and he nuzzled the skin of her neck and her ear firmly as his hands reached around in front of her. One hand smoothly covered her left breast while his right hand dropped lower to her abdomen and slid quickly inside the loose pants she wore, his fingers coming to rest pressed against her already aroused clit, slowly brushing against her nub and enflaming it even more.

“One minute with you is worth a thousand years of solitude Red.” Martin hissed into her ear gently.

Anja’s body ignited then as he hit her with nearly the full force of his aura, her jade green eyes flying open and her arms reaching up over her shoulders to grasp his long black hair. Every nerve ending lit up, every brush of his fingers against her clit savaging her rapidly dwindling control.

“Martin...” She gasped. “Martin... not... not in my office!” She stammered as the fingers of his left hand manipulated her breast expertly, as only he could. “The bridge... the bridge is...”

“Do you still have your extra uniform here?” Martin asked her.

Anja could only nod her head. “Yes... yes....”

“Good!” Martin said and took the fabric of her top in his left hand and yanked hard. Anja gasped delightfully as the shirt tore away under his powerful tug, exposing her heated skin to his male touch. Anja never wore undergarments and she hadn’t for more years than she could remember. As his hand came back up and his fingers found her hard nipple she gasped once more as his right hand left her now soaked pussy and quickly ripped away her pants with a single pull. All that remained of the pants were shredded parts that covered her calves, which she quickly discarded by kicking off the lightweight shoes she wore and letting the fabric drop away around her feet.

“Oh... oh you bastard!” Anja snarled as his face once more lowered to her neck and ear and he nuzzled her even harder, inciting her passion.

Anja’s whole body was on fire now... her skin burning with desire and need for her mate. Martin was hitting her with the full extent of what she could tolerate from his aura and it was driving her insane with want. It was as if his hands were everywhere, touching every square millimeter of her body at once, caressing her like a thousands feathers and setting fire to her skin and her blood. His lips came up to her ear, nibbled on her ear lobe and spoke to her in a husky voice.

“You are mine Anja Leonidas!” He rasped knowing that it increased her passion when he spoke to her in such a fashion. “And I am going to fuck you now!”

Anja's legs became weak and she shuddered in a mini orgasm as his words filled her head. He had her pressed against the front of her desk, his body somehow already without clothes. She felt his hot skin against her back, and the straining dominance of his thick twelve inch cock nestled between the cheeks of her ass.

"Yes!" She rasped out. "Fuck me Martin! Fuck me! Take me now!"

Martin pushed her upper body down, her breasts smashing against the top of her desk as he reached down and lifted one of her legs in his hands. He positioned the flared head of his cock at the sopping entrance to her bald pussy, hearing her moan loudly as he pushed the head inside her velvet heat and stopped. Anja's hands slapped down on the top and she lifted her upper body, her back arching off the desk as she glared at him over her shoulder with jade green wolf eyes.

"Do it Martin! Don't you tease me you prick! I need you too badly! Do it!" She growled at him.

Martin didn't make her wait. He rammed his hips forward and Anja could do nothing but wail in explosive delight as every wonderfully thick inch of his cock impaled her with a single dominating stroke. She grabbed the edges of her desk as he lifted her legs off the floor, holding her hips in his powerful hands and he began to stroke into her with spirit shattering twelve inch plunges. He reached forward with one hand, wrapping her silky Persian red hair in his fingers and pulled her head back as he leaned forward, her neck straining with effort. God she loved it when he dominated her Anja thought. He placed his lips next to her right ear as he pummeled her tight body, driving his cock into her. Smallest she may have been in physical stature Anja knew, but when Martin made love to her it was powerfully passionate and she used all her combined wolf strength and Hadarian healing power to make it last as long as possible. It would not happen now she knew as his cock pounded her with driving strokes; both of them wanted each other too badly to make it last for very long. She loved it when he spoke dirty to her as he possessed her, or when his fingers danced sinfully across her engorged clit as he was fucking her.

"This is what you want my Queen?" Martin hissed. "You want my cock inside you?"

Anja could only whimper out her response, her fingers clenching and unclenching on the top of her desk as his driving strokes into her petite body caused mountains of delightful ripples to tumble upon her with machine gun regularity. The orgasms were coming quick and furious, and her come had already soaked their lower bodies. This is what his aura could do to her; it held her on the edge of that pleasure crest, always in control and never pushing her into the realm where she could refuse him nothing. Her body drummed with a myriad kaleidoscope of delicious sensations as it always did when Martin made love to her. It never grew tiresome or superfluous what he could do to her, what he could do to all of them, each time seemingly surpassing the last.

"I... I love it!" Anja screamed out. "Nubous lae! Nubous lae mathaa Martin!"

Martin was lost already, her honey scent floating from her pores and saturating his wolf senses, her sweet come soaking his upper thighs. Her pussy was a delight he would in no way grow weary with. The heat and tightness, the exacting control she had of her inner muscles gripping his cock, and threatening at times to tear it from its roots. He reached forward and pulled her back towards him more, driving his hips faster and harder into her supple body. The groans and loud gasps of blissful abandon spilled from Anja's lips wantonly, filling his ears and her office with the tones of her voice. Her office was not completely soundproof, and Martin had no doubts those who passed by in the corridor could hear her sinful cries of pleasure. Neither of them could care in the least. He pounded into her once more, pinning her upper body to the desk and reached down to grasp her calves. Anja howled out her pleasure as he turned her slowly, still impaled upon his dominating cock. Her arms whipped about, knocking items from her desk as she tried to grab onto something and failed. Halfway through the belly clenching turn her back arched off the desk and she came again. Martin leaned forward quickly, his lips claiming hers in a demanding fashion as Anja's body bucked in his arms from the force of her orgasm. She plunged her four inch tongue into his mouth in response to his kiss as his arms curled under her. She tore her lips away when he lifted her from the desk and she sank ever further onto his thick cock, her eyes rolling into the back of her head as his hands gripped her firm ass cheeks and he began to raise and lower her upon his cock.

Anja felt the orgasm building once more and she wrapped her arms around his shoulders, nibbling his ear painfully hard with her wolf teeth as her abdomen undulated.

"Bastard!" She hissed. "You... bastard! So... so good! Martin... Martin I... I love you!" It hit her with the force of a meteor strike, ripping through her body and sending every pleasure receptor in her body into overdrive. “I... ahhhhhhh... I love... youuu!” Anja screamed as her head flew back and her hips smashed against Martin’s and she held them there reaching for the pinnacle of release.

Martin’s groans matched Anja’s and he pulled her down tightly onto his throbbing cock. Her almost violent orgasm seized his cock, squeezing it tighter and Martin knew then he had lost this fight. His twelve inch length ballooned in size and he roared out his own release as his searing hot come erupted into Anja’s convulsing belly. Her ankles locked at the small of his back and she ground her pussy down on his length instinctively, not wanting to sacrifice a drop of his essence.

Martin staggered slightly as the orgasms shook them, and as Anja clung to him like glue with her hips still moving and milking his cock, he made his way to the couch in her office. He lowered them down with a heave of air, Anja whimpering in bliss at the vibrations this caused within her. Her head fell to his shoulder, her Persian red hair spilling across his shoulder and chest and down to the small of her back. Her fingers entwined in his long black hair as he nuzzled the side of her neck featherlike, dropping small kisses on her shoulder and upper arm.

Anja pulled her face back slowly and looked at his black outlined yellow wolf eyes. Eyes that had caught her attention and undying love from the moment she had seen them in their changed shape. She brought her finger up and caressed the savage looking dual fangs that protruded from his gums. To anyone else, even other wolves, his dual fangs gave him a frightening visage. To Anja and the four other women who worshiped this man, it was the most beautiful thing they had ever seen.

“It’s... it’s been a while since I’ve had you all to myself for so long a period of time.” She told him tilting her head slightly as she felt his throbbing cock still buried within her.

Martin’s eyes twinkled. “Do you think we should waste it?” He said with a grin.

Anja matched his smile. “Hell no!”

Martin laughed and rolled over onto the couch bringing Anja with him. “We still got two hours and nine minutes!” He told her before lowering his lips to hers and continuing his possession of her.

MJOLNIR’S HAND

“...what did the Skipper say?” Colin Walsh asked as Aricia and Isabella walked in with Vonis.

Walsh’s eyes grew a little wider when he saw Vonis and he turned to look at Joyar. “Vith uns’aa! You weren’t kidding Joyar!” He exclaimed turning back to watch as Vonis stood beside his sister. “Vonis... son of the Empress herself. Damn... she’s had a contract for you since you got smart and found yourself an elf woman and told her to take a leap!”

Vonis blurred instantly and was upon Walsh before he could react. His hand closed around the clone’s throat and he rammed him into the bulkhead while Maros and Joyar looked on with wide eyes. Maros had never seen a vampire move so fast, not even a pureblood like himself. He saw Isabella and Aricia looking on with smile on their faces.

Vonis’s cobalt blue eyes glared at Walsh intensely, holding him easier since he was at least six inches taller and probably eighty pounds heavier. Vonis was very large for a pureblood vampire. “You will speak of my Blessed Wife with more respect clone!” Vonis snarled. “I agreed to this meeting with Joyar, not you. Do not make my sister and Aricia regret staying their hands when they could have killed you without thinking. You are no match for either of them and I suggest you keep that in mind.”

“I... I was only trying to make a joke!” Walsh gasped as he tried to pry Vonis’s grip from around his neck. “I meant nothing by it!”

“Vonis!” Isabella spoke softly. “Release him brother.” Vonis didn’t take his eyes from Walsh and slowly backed up pulling his hand from his throat. He turned and returned to his spot by Isabella as she settled into one of the three chairs at the table. Isabella looked at him with a sisterly gaze and then turned back to Walsh and the others. “Sit down please.” She said.

“My family?” Joyar asked. “I have done what I said Vonis... my family is...”

“Your family is boarding our MENKLA transport as we speak Joyar.” Aricia said looking at him. “You are correct and you have kept your word. And Bella and I will keep ours. We have established new identities for all of you and Martin has authorized a payment of fifty million riyal for you to live out the rest of your lives in peace.”

“Fifty... fifty million riyal!” Joyar gasped. “Lady... Lady Aricia this is... I did not ask for such a thing.”

Aricia nodded. “We know. But considering your actions may have just saved countless lives on both sides... Martin thought it appropriate.” She answered. “Vonis has suggested that you join us however, at least until your family has arrived. He says your insight into how conditions in The Wilds are could be even more invaluable.”

Joyar nodded quickly. “Of course. Anything Lady Aricia.” He said moving to the chair.

“You spoke to the Skipper then?” Walsh asked as he sat down.

“You would be dead if we had not.” Vonis snapped.

Isabella reached out and placed her hand on his arm. “My brother is very protective of his wife Va’nimia.” She said. “We are more respectful of such things within the Union Mister Walsh.”

The clone nodded his head. “Fair enough.” He stated sincerely. “I apologize if I seemed disrespectful. That wasn’t my intent. We have... we’ve just heard a lot about you from the General. How you made a choice to rebel against your mother. How you made a choice to live free and prosper. It has... it has inspired many of us.”

Vonis looked at Isabella with surprise on his face. He turned back to Walsh. “Me?” He gasped.

“You were the first.” Walsh said. “The first to decide your mother was a vith'rell ushdui emp'poss.”

(Fucking nut job)

Maros nodded his head with Walsh. “The General was the one who gave us the details to your defection Prince Vonis.” He said. “The uncensored version of what happen. Four years ago... when he first took over command of all the groups within our insurgency. You have been a light to what we all want. What you have achieved I mean.”

“Your insurgency attacked the Kavalian Trade Delegation on this very ship with Queen For’mya and Prince Resumar onboard.” Aricia stated. “Your people raped and murdered eleven Kavalian females to accomplish this mission. You’ll forgive us if we are leery of what you say.”

“The General wasn’t happy about that.” Maros said quickly. “In fact he was so angry he demanded we only concentrate on High Coven targets and remain out of Union space for the immediate future. Four other senior commanders made that decision without consulting him.”

“Let us talk about this General.” Aricia said.

“Hold on...” Walsh spoke. “How do we know we can trust you?” He asked. “We took a great risk coming here. Aikiro wants us dead! She’d give her left ovary to see all of us burn. How do we know you aren’t setting us up so she can bury all of us in one fell swoop?”

“Your first indication of that would be is that you still breathe.” Isabella spoke calmly. “And that order came from Martin Leonidas.”

Walsh leaned back in his chair. “He remembered huh?”

“He remembers the Colin Walsh who went on that mission with him.” Aricia said. “We are not yet convinced that is you. I will warn you, given Martin’s feelings towards clones because of what the Coven did to his mother; your fate now rests with us. Anja has demanded that you submit to a complete and extensive medical exam. I will only ask that you do this. She has an idea of what is happening with you... only a medical exam will confirm it.”

“And if I refuse?” Walsh said.

Aricia shrugged. “That is up to you.” She spoke. “You will never get close to Martin unless it is through us.”

Isabella smiled. “And you will never get through us.”

Walsh looked at her. “Ph'jal d'ukt roma saph dos draa?” (Are all of his women like you two?)

Isabella and Aricia chuckled together. “If you think we are bad... you should see Anja or Dysea when they are protecting him.”

“We know that there is more to my mother’s visit to Earth than a simple Cease Fire Accord.” Vonis spoke.

“You are training the dragons they stole from you twenty three years ago. We already know that.” Walsh said. “That doesn’t sit too well with many of us. That you are helping them in any manner makes a lot of us wary of what your intentions are.”

Aricia and Isabella looked at each other and Vonis. “You seem to be very well informed about things.” Aricia spoke turning back to him.

Walsh shrugged. “The General has a lot of sources.” He spoke.

“We do not wish to make an enemy of the Union.” Maros spoke. “That is not what we wish. We have built homes and settlements in secret. We have families and schools and hospitals. Ask Joyar. He has seen what we have built. And what we lack.”

Joyar nodded. “It is true Lady Aricia. Lady Isabella.” He spoke. “I have shuttled between these settlements for years.”

“And what is it you hope to achieve with your insurgency Commander Maros?” Vonis asked.

“The same thing you achieved when you defected.” Maros answered. “Freedom to make our own choices. Live how we want to live and not be under Aikiro’s brutal heel. She and her daughter throw our lives away needlessly against the Kavalians. In hopeless missions that cause thousands of lives and gain nothing. I have seen too many of my friends die to gain some pathetic moon or jungle world. For what? So that she remains in power and does not make the changes needed to end this war once and for all. We need to reach out to others. To show them we are willing to change. That is what we need to do. Now we do nothing to strike fear into the Kavalians. Nothing that makes them think twice about attacking us. Even Moran has become more political now. We grew tired of this and began to form the insurgency. We were scattered and inept at first... until four years ago when the General took over. His intelligence made the difference. His planning and where to strike. That is what made her take notice of us.”

“Yes... well... your information is true.” Aricia said. “However... we are training the dragons to give them a better chance against the Kavalians. Not to fight you. We did not even know there was an insurgency until you attacked the Kavalian delegation on this ship. Martin and our son Androcles are Talon Guardians. Sworn protectors of the dragons. They will not send them into battle without the proper training and skills to defeat an enemy who has weapons that, for a time, caused us a great deal of problems.”

“The T19s.” Maros said.

Aricia nodded. “A very nasty weapon... and one that took three years and twenty-three dragons and riders before we learned how to combat it effectively. The Cease Fire Accords are merely a front as you no doubt have figured out.”

Walsh reached over and tapped Maros. “We told you Maros. We told you the Skipper wouldn’t willingly side with that sadistic vampire bitch!” Walsh looked at Isabella. “Ah... no offense meant.”

Isabella looked at him. “None taken. Exactly how many of those like you still live?” She asked.

“You mean those of us that were cloned from our old team?”

“Yes.”

“Five of us.” Walsh answered.

“She told us those like you were all killed and that only Julie survived.” Aricia said.

“I bet she did.” Walsh spat. “It began happening to all of us. The memories of who we were began coming back. I’ll tell you we weren’t fucking happy. We went along with her little scheme until the time was right. By the time we decided to act there were nineteen of us left. Fourteen of us were killed in the mission to destroy the facility where we were made. We had to make sure we got the embryos and anything she had and make it look like an accident. All the data cores, all the computer discs and every fucking sample they stole from EDEN. We burned it all and fourteen of us died in the process. We are all that’s left. I haven’t seen Julie in years so I don’t know if what happened to us is happening to her. Aikiro paid her extra attention for some reason. Probably because Aikiro knows the Skipper and Danny were tight with her and she took to this vampire shit better than we did.”

“So you will allow our doctors to examine you?” Aricia asked.

“Hell yes, if that’s what it takes to get you to trust me.” Walsh spoke.

“In order for us to trust you... you have to do something to earn that trust.” Vonis spoke. “Everything you have told us up until now we have already known for the most part. Joyar I know... and he knows me. He has done what we agreed too and we will honor our bargain with him. This insurgency you say is going on...”

how do we know it isn't all an elaborate plot by my mother to gain more power? To affect the Union in some way."

"You ask us this question when the very woman we all hate is right now on your planet? The planet second only to your capital of Apo Prime in importance to the King." Maros said. "She has been trying to kill us and the only thing that has kept us alive is that the General knows her plans and leaks them to us discretely. We could ask the same question of you."

Isabella sat back in her chair. "Yes, you could Commander." She said simply. "Why haven't you?"

"I believe you already know the answer to that question Lady Isabella." Maros spoke. "I believe you have no more love for the High Coven than we do. I believe that King Leonidas is using Aikiro just as she is attempting to use him."

"Do you know she suddenly decided to come to us why this request for side?" Bella asked.

Maros shook his head. "All we know is that eight months ago she began calling more meetings of her inner staff. She wanted to know if their dragons would be ready to fight the Kavalians. Her own daughters disagreed on this."

"Yuri and Narice?" Vonis said.

Maros nodded. "Yes. Apparently Yuri said they were, but it was the younger one Narice that said no. It was Aikiro's idea to come to you for assistance. That much we have been able to determine positively through intelligence passed to us from the General."

"This General seems very high placed." Vonis spoke. "To know that it was her idea to come to Earth. How many know she brought her dragons to Earth?"

Maros shook her head. "While the existence of High Coven dragons has been known for some time, no one knows who the riders were. It was done to protect the riders from assassins that either defected to the Kavalians or those that were hired by them. Our contacts still within the Coven on Usu Ozeib 7 and in other places reported right away that the dragons and their riders disappeared from their normal training facility. If we know this, then the Kavalians know, for many who defected to them still have agents in many places. We surmise that the Kavalians are actively searching for these dragons."

"Considering how they react to dragons I'm not surprised." Vonis said.

"We did not know Aikiro had planned to bring them to Earth until four weeks ago." Maros told them. "It is also our understanding that Yuri protested vehemently while her sister Narice actually supported the idea immensely."

Aricia nodded and looked at Isabella and Vonis. "That seems to fit. Andro said her bond with Deneth was far stronger than the one Yuri had with Vollenth. More focused and natural like Yuri's daughter Carisia. It is the reason he and Elynth were able to sever the connection so easily."

"Wait..." Maros spoke. "You are saying that Yuri is no longer bonded with one of these dragons?"

Aricia turned back to him. "My son was able to sever the connection she had with her dragon." Aricia spoke. "The bond she had with Vollenth had been forced upon him and it was the main reason he was so violent. She was controlling him to a large extent. Perhaps she knew that if they came here this would be discovered."

"That must have pissed her off." Walsh said with a grin. "Good... maybe her black heart will blow up or something."

"She doesn't know yet." Isabella answered him. "At least not when we last spoke with Martin."

"The General believes that Aikiro went along with Narice for a reason that we do not yet know." Maros spoke. "He also believes that even with the additional training provided by you and your riders that Aikiro has every intent to allow her daughter Narice to lead the dragons against the Kavalians and be sacrificed if need be."

"What can you tell us about Narice?" Isabella asked.

"We have extensive files on all of them." Maros spoke. "At least as much as we were able to obtain. We can give them to you and..."

The chime on the table interrupted him and Aricia stabbed down on the small panel. "Yes Komirri?" She spoke.

"Aricia, Isabella... I thought this location was supposed to be unknown and almost never used because we are so far off the travel corridor." Komirri asked.

Aricia looked up at Maros. He nodded his head quickly. "It is." He replied. "We use these coordinates, as well as many others to exchange information with others within the resistance. Only a very few know its location."

"Well it's not unknown anymore." Komirri spoke calmly. "One DIATAGA-Class Attack Cruiser and two PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigates just jumped into the sector. They are on an intercept course."

Maros came to his feet. "You have betrayed us!" He snarled.

"Gi zu'tour phor!" Isabella snapped back as she got to her feet. "If we had wanted to turn you over to the Kavalians we would have done so already!" (Oh shut up)

"Komirri... how long?" Aricia asked as she triggered the small holo disc on the table and his image appeared from the shoulders up.

"Considering the speed they are traveling at... thirty-six minutes... maybe a little more." He answered.

"They have detected us I take it?" Aricia asked.

"It would be kind of hard to miss us as big as we are Aricia, even though their sensors are junk for the most part." Komirri answered. "We could just re-Shroud and be gone from here. There's no way they could track us."

"Perhaps not... but it would raise too many eyebrows and questions." Aricia said. "Questions that very well could get back to Aikiro and questions we don't want to answer."

Vonis nodded. "Like why we are meeting with members of a resistance group known to be fighting her."

"I didn't think they had any bases this close to their border." Komirri said.

"They have to be from Nefoa." Walsh said.

"This close to the Bontawillian border?" Aricia asked.

"They have the equivalent of a Fleet Group stationed at Nefoa." Walsh spoke. "We got word that many of these ships headed out about six days ago. In all different directions. The government on Nefoa has allowed them to use the planet as a base even though it's within The Wilds. They seem to think they run everything out here. Personally... I think the Kavs said either do it or we kill you."

"That does sound like something they would do." Vonis spoke. "Komirri... is the Coven Frigate on their sensors?"

Komirri shook his head. "Doubtful. Right now she's in our shadow. They'll have to get a lot closer to actually manage to separate the signals considering the level of Kavalian sensor technology on these class ships. They aren't the Kavalian front line warships by any stretch of the imagination, but they still pack a pretty good punch."

Aricia looked at him. "What do you have in mind Vonis?"

"Pull her in tighter Komirri." Vonis said. "Within our shield bubble. We can tell them we pursued and captured the ship in response to the attack on the Kavalian Trade delegation and that is all they need to know and they can be on their way."

Komirri nodded. "Nice."

"Do it!" Isabella ordered. "Aricia and I will join you on the bridge."

Aricia looked at Maros. "Commander... give the directions to your ship please. The trust you were speaking of... it appears that it will begin now."

NEBONESE

Las'elh shook her head to clear the ringing in her ears and opened her eyes.

The immediate air around her was swirling with black smoke, the horribly bent frame of the Lifter reaching above her head. She heard the weapons fire on either side of her then and snapped her head to the side. Cihera was two meters away firing a Kochab assault rifle from around the end of the destroyed Lifter, and she heard loud cracking noises to her opposite side turning her head quickly to see Anton on one knee, both his hands filled with K14 and blasting away.

"Ambush!" Nalar's voice filled her head now.

Las'elh looked down and saw the male Drow, a nasty cut along his hairline, as he was fumbling with the High Coven SA80 rifle. The driver of the Lifter was Idafi she saw, and he appeared unhurt as he inched along the lip of the dirt mound that the Lifter had plowed into the ground when it flipped. She glanced at the Lifter and realized she was staring at the roof of the vehicle, and lethal projectiles were slamming into the bottom of the Lifter and not penetrating.

“Dragon Armor protects the bottom! It is why we are not now in pieces scattered back to our home.” Nalar shouted with a grin as he got the SA80 charged. “We are safe right now.”

“They attacked us!” Las'elh shouted as she confidently yanked the K14 from the holster on her calf. “They know who we are!”

Anton ducked back down, his shoulder brushing against her as his large hands began to expertly change the hundred round magazines of the two K14s. “That’s possible.” He shouted. “However, more than likely, this Evolli got greedy!”

Cihera rolled back now as well. “Nubous ronnus!” She screamed out as puffs of shells hitting the dirt near her caused her to duck back behind the Lifter. “I hate Kochab! Nalar!”

Nalar didn’t hesitate and tossed her the heavier SA80 as she threw the Kochab rifle at him. “Full load!” He barked. “Our people our moving into position!”

“Look out!” Las'elh screamed as she saw the Evolli head lift above the boulder behind them only ten meters away. She didn’t hesitate and lifted the K14, ripping out five rounds in quick succession. The last of her rounds caught the Evolli in the top of the head a glancing blow that spun him around and flung him into the open. Idafi lifted his SA80 and the heavier sound of that weapon joined the chorus, stitching the Evolli from groin to neck and blasting him into ragged pieces. Las'elh came to one knee as another Evolli came charging around the boulder and she didn’t hesitate. She fired three more quick rounds, each of the Kinetic Magnum rounds punching into the Evolli’s chest center mass. The rounds staggered him at first and then the last one tossed his body back physically, slamming him into the boulder, most of his chest and back gone. Evolli blood stained the gray colored rock as he slumped to the dirt dead before his body hit the ground completely.

They heard screaming and Las'elh turned just as two Kochab burst around the side of the damaged Lifter lifting their weapons. She watched wide eyed as Anton lifted the K14 in his left hand and without even looking he fired four times. The heads of the two Kochab mercenaries blew apart as Anton returned to his knees and began firing once more back at the mining facility. Las'elh turned her head back and saw Cihera looking at her. Those amber eyes were vividly bright and gazing at her with amusement.

“He is such a show off!” She yelled. “He smelled their foul stench before they came around the side!”

Las'elh gazed at her stunned at the almost careless way they were acting. Projectile rounds were punching into the armored belly of the overturned Lifter, any one of them able to kill them with a single round, and Cihera was making jokes. Who were these men and women who were carrying on as if this attack was the most natural thing in the world to them? Las'elh waited until Cihera had turned back around the side before lifting her head higher. She inched up as rounds impacted the Lifter and caused her to flinch. She got far enough up on one knee that she was able to gaze through the now shattered windshield of the Lifter. The majority of the return fire was coming from their front, from inside the entrance to the mining facility it looked like. She could count eight dead bodies scattered in front of the Lifter, no doubt the work of Anton and Cihera.

Las'elh felt Nalar grab her leg and she ducked back down. He held out the small COM unit to her. “Put this in!” He screamed over the din of the weapons fire. “Our people are getting ready to assault from the opposite side!”

Las'elh snatched the COM unit and shoved the ear piece into her elven ear. It slid in easily, designed as it was for the four inch high ears of full blooded elves. When she stuffed the small box like object into her jumpsuit pocket the COM unit came alive with voices. Calm and very controlled voices.

“Nine targets!”

“Four upper! Five lower!”

“No sign of the Evolli lard ass Leader!”

“Fucker thought we would bring Gravork with us!” Cihera’s anger filled voice came across the COM. “Stupid sonofabitch!”

“Good bet! Standard ambush positions! Fucking amateurs! Armetus would be pissed off to see these idiots in action!”

“Request permission to engage!”

“Execute!” Anton’s voice echoed now. “Bring us a prisoner!”

“Nine minus one! Affirmative!”

“Engaging now!”

Las’elh heard the deep throated buzz of the deadly Spartan 190. There weren’t many who did not know that sound. The weapon was a rare find in The Wilds, but it was available on the Black Market she knew. And impossibly expensive. As she lifted her head once more, her blue eyes detected two Evolli turn at that moment to something behind them. She saw fine red mist explosions from their chests and then their bodies were blown backwards out the remains of the windows they were standing in front of.

“Engaging! Lower level!” The new voice spoke. “One down! Moving!”

“Engaging lower level! Two down! Continuing sweep!”

“Three down upper!”

“One down upper! Shit... I got too close on that one. He vented all over my uniform! Fucking Kochab bastard!”

Cihera had rolled back around and was resting beside Las’elh, the back of her thigh pressed into Cihera’s shoulder as Las’elh watched from her position with wide eyes. “Nalar... your head!” Cihera spoke.

Nalar waved at her. “It is nothing!”

Idafi moved quickly up beside his father. “Don’t move father! It’s deep!”

“Lower level! Engaging! One down!”

“Rabbit! Rabbit!” The voice declared. “Coming right at you Anton!”

Las’elh saw the Evolli burst from within the mining facility, no weapon in his hand as he ran. He was running right for where they were and Las’elh couldn’t shake the thought of how incredibly stupid that was. Her blue eyes cut left as she saw Anton rise quickly to his feet, the extended Nehtes appearing in his hand like magic and he threw it with every ounce of Spartan strength in his body. Las’elh couldn’t track the spear itself, but she saw the nine foot length of killing power strike the Evolli in the upper right side of his chest with such force it threw him back nearly five meters. The spearhead of the Nehtes embedded into the pile of twisted metal and dilapidated soft framework of what appeared to have been a crane of some sort once. The Evolli’s grunt and cry of pain split the air with a piercing sound causing Las’elh to flinch.

“Clear upper!” Sounded in her ear piece.

“Clear lower!”

“Full sweep!” Nalar barked out as he pushed his son away and climbed to his feet. “We have our prisoner! Anyone left alive is sanctioned! Terminate with prejudice!”

“Affirmative!”

“Roger!”

Las’elh turned as Cihera climbed slowly to her feet, her amber eyes sweeping the area around them. Her shimmering white hair was splotted with dirt and grease from the rear of the Lifter, but she was otherwise unhurt. She too climbed to her feet, her blue eyes looking around as she saw flashes of black clad apparitions within the windows of the mining facility in front of them. She turned back to Cihera.

“Who are they?” She asked.

Cihera met her eyes. “A mixture of Drow and human soldiers.” She replied quickly. “We call them a MUTT Squad because they have chosen to live and work together. They have been trained by Queen Aihola and several senior Drow Instructors. Each Drow settlement in The Wilds has such a unit within calling distance if it is needed. Today it was needed.” Cihera saw Anton had reached the struggling and completely impaled Evolli and she grabbed Las’elh’s hand. “Come... we will find out why they suddenly attacked us.”

Anton stepped up to the amphibian looking Evolli, his wolf eyes now very prominent. He had holstered one K14, but held the second in his left hand. He reached up quickly and took hold of the shaft of the Nehtes causing the Evolli to howl in pain.

“You made a mistake today Evolli scum!” He snarled. “Why did you attack us? We were coming for a meeting with your leader! To provide him information!”

“I... I will tell you nothing!” The Evolli screamed.

Anton lifted the K14 in one smooth motion and fired point blank into the Evolli’s thin leg. At such close range the Kinetic Magnum round blasted through his entire leg, shattering bone and shredding flesh. His bulbous eyes nearly exploded from his head in unimaginable pain and his screamed echoed through the small valley as Cihera, Las'elh and Nalar approached. Las'elh looked at the Evolli, his leg now dangling by a few strips of flesh.

"Tell me what I want to know scum and I will see to it you are healed!" Anton shouted. "Tell me now... or I will shoot off your other leg and leave you to bleed to death where you are!"

"We... we wanted Gravork!" He bellowed. "We knew you had him! Told... told to take him from you!"

"And how were you to do that?" Cihera asked savagely.

"Take... take you alive! Find out where!" The Evolli stuttered now.

"How do you know we had him?" Anton spoke.

"Bontick knew! Bontick knew!"

"This is your leader?" Cihera asked.

The Evolli nodded. "Yes... Bontick!"

"And where is your precious leader now since it appears he is not here?" Nalar snarled.

"Spaceport! Waiting... waiting for us..."

"How did Bontick know?" Anton shouted.

The Evolli shook his head. "I don't know! I don't know!"

"Then you are no longer any good to us!" Cihera said coldly.

Anton lifted the K14 and fired once more, the round punching through the Evolli's head and splashing blood and brain matter over the twisted scrap of metal behind him. He reached forward and ripped the Nehtes free and turned to face a stunned Las'elh and Cihera as the headless body dropped to the dirt.

"Now we have a name." He said.

Nalar nodded. "I will redeploy the MUTT Squad to the spaceport." He spoke. "Then I will contact Malia and tell her to pack up and meet us there. It's time to leave this foul world."

Las'elh looked at him as he turned and headed off. Her eyes went back to Anton and Cihera who had stepped close to one another. Anton was nuzzling her neck and cheek gently and Las'elh watched as the pent up adrenalin began to bleed off of both of them. At least for now.

"Anton... Cihera? Why is he getting ready to pull your entire operation off Nebonese?" Las'elh asked.

"This Bontick knew we had Gravork." Anton spoke softly looking at his wife.

Las'elh nodded. "Yes... so?"

Anton and Cihera both looked at her. "Only one person knew we had Gravork Las'elh." Cihera said.

Las'elh's eyes widened. "Are you saying Armetus is a traitor?" She gasped.

"Armetus? A traitor?" Anton laughed. "No Las'elh... Armetus is no traitor. He is the only one we told that we had Gravork."

"But then how..." Las'elh stopped talking and looked at them her eyes wide. "He was already being watched." She said finally.

Cihera smiled and stepped up to her quickly. Las'elh had no chance to stop her, and given how she reacted, she probably wouldn't have tried. Cihera's lips came down on hers and among the blood and death all around them; Cihera laid a sizzling kiss on the shorter Las'elh. It was a kiss that had Las'elh's nerves screaming out within seconds as Cihera pulled her lush body closer to her own lean muscular frame, their breasts mashing together and Cihera's hands holding her head tightly. Las'elh, quite unlike herself, moaned deeply into the kiss and even reached up slightly to grasp Cihera's waist pulling her closer.

Cihera pulled back just as suddenly and stared at Las'elh's wide blue eyes while Anton looked on with a smirk. "Yes Las'elh... he was already being watched on Talbor Seven. Which means someone else knows we have Gravork as well. That is why we need this Bontick. We will continue this later Las'elh... I guarantee you that. Your lips are very inviting."

Las'elh could only nod her head in agreement mesmerized by those amber eyes as she was, her mind saying no, her body all but surrendering right there to this taller and very confident Drow warrior woman.

Anton chuckled. "Ok!" He bellowed. "Let's get to the spaceport shall we! We have no time for these intimate moments between lovers! All this killing and shooting has made me hungry and I want to secure this Bontick fool before I enjoy my next meal!"

Cihera smiled at Las'elh and squeezed her hand. "Come... before we have to listen to my husband gloat any further at what a perfect specimen of a man he is."

Anton shrugged. “Hey... it runs in the blood! I’m only stating the obvious.”

Cihera looked at him. “Perhaps I should have married Moneus.” She said with a grin. “He is humble at least.”

Anton watched her with wide dark eyes as she pulled Las’elh towards the destroyed Lifter. “Hey C... you don’t mean that do you?” Anton asked as he pursued them.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

SPARTAN GALACTIC COURT

“...would like to apologize for taking the extra time we needed to make a ruling on the Kavalian Federation’s Petition before this body. We felt it needed our undivided attention and further investigation given the level of importance.” Chief Magistrate Sel’ke spoke.

The court gallery was once more filled to near overflowing, many of the gathered men and women members of one Netnews Channel or another. For’mya sat with Deia and in quite the surprise to everyone who entered the gallery this morning, Andro and Sadi sat with them as well. Sadi was wearing a standard Union flight suit with her long blond hair cascading around her face, while Andro wore his customary ArmorPly with crimson colored shoulders. Jiss and Matuarr sat at the similar table to their left, Karun, Qurot and Timur sitting in the gallery behind them.

“On behalf of my fellow Magistrates I would first like to say that we view the intricacies of this Petition very seriously, however Lycavorian Union law is quite clear in this regard and this Galactic Court can not overrule Lycavorian Union law. We feel the circumstances behind Lisisa Leonidas being adopted by King Leonidas twenty-five years ago should have been made public knowledge, as well as her heritage and bloodline, however we do understand the reasons behind the King not being as forthcoming as he should have been.” Sel’ke looked directly at Deia and For’mya when he spoke now. “The Lycavorian Union has come far in the last several centuries in terms of acceptance of ones background and history, and our own Queen Isabella is the foremost example of this. She is a pureblood vampire and an honored Queen of this Union, something that I’m quite sure a thousand years ago would never have been accepted given the history between our two species.”

Deia nodded her head calmly. “I don’t disagree with that assessment Chief Magistrate.” She said.

Sel’ke nodded in return. “That being said... as I stated... Lycavorian Union law is quite clear. We have reviewed the security tapes from twenty-five years ago. This was the last time that Marshall Pusintin was...”

Jiss came to his feet. “You mean Marshall Pleistarchus don’t you your honors.” He said quickly. “He is also a son of King Leonidas the First and grandson to King Resumar, the founder of your Union. The oldest son I might add.”

Sel’ke turned to look at him now, his elven ears appearing to lay back along his head in anger. “No... I mean Marshall Pusintin of the Kavalian Federation.” He said in reply. “The man you refer to as Pleistarchus was a son of King Leonidas the First, yes. He was a King of this very city we now reside in Legislature Jiss, and Spartan Historical records indicate that King Pleistarchus died in 458 B.C. of Earth time. The statue honoring his rule resides on King’s row not a kilometer from here.”

This information caused Karun to sit up and look at the man intently. This was not something he had known or had been told.

“The man you refer to may be a Lycavorian by birth, however he is not Pleistarchus. He ceased being Pleistarchus the day he chose to depart Earth and become a Kavalian citizen, no matter the reasons behind that decision. Lycavorian Union records are meticulously kept in this regard Legislature Jiss; Spartan records even more so surprisingly. Governor Panos of Sparta was very forthcoming in allowing this body access to the Spartan Historical Archives, many of the documents still hand written and thousands of years old, and this entire court body is in full agreement. King Pleistarchus died in battle with the High Coven. Marshall Pusintin may be this same man, all facts lead to that undeniable truth; however he has no claim to that name anymore by his very own actions throughout the years no matter his status as first born.”

“I protest this! It...” Matuarr came to his feet.

“You may protest it as much as you like.” Sel’ke said calmly. “It will not change the true facts, nor will it have a bearing on the decision this body has made.” His gaze was steady as he looked at them. “Now... would you like to hear that decision?”

Jiss held out his hand to Matuarr and motioned him back into his chair. “Certainly Chief Magistrate.” He said finally.

Sel’ke nodded his head. “Good. As I was saying... we reviewed nine different security tapes of the last day Marshall Pusintin came to Earth and Sparta. What we saw was disturbing to say the least. Though many of us have heard of what happened that day; we have never seen actual security footage of it however. Marshall Pusintin made scant reference to Lisisa Leonidas that day, never by name and most certainly not in a way one would expect a father to react concerning his daughter if he was interested in a relationship with that same daughter. He did however attempt to kill Lady Gorgo if my understanding is accurate and was stopped by King Leonidas the Second, his brother, before he accomplished this vile act.” He turned and accepted the data pad from the Hadarian Magistrate Galia. “We will not begin to address nor bring up the grievous nature of this attempted crime, for by order of King Leonidas the Second, signed just six months after the events of that day, any and all crimes committed by this man have been pardoned in full. And it is also my understanding that decision was not greeted with much support. It is something he did despite what others were telling him.”

This knowledge struck Karun like a sledgehammer blow and his head turned quickly to where Androcles sat. He was surprised to see those azure colored eyes looking at him intently.

“While the medical records were sealed twenty-five years ago, I have Queen Anja’s official medical report right here. It was discovered as they were returning from the mission to Lycavore who Lisisa Leonidas’s true father was. Queen Anja’s medical scans only confirmed what King Leonidas’s extraordinarily keen sense of smell had already told him. He authorized the release of these records to us by the way, exactly six minutes after the request was presented to him.

“Now... exactly three weeks after the events of that day here in Sparta, King Leonidas officially adopted Lisisa Leonidas. Those records were also sealed, and we have them as well. They were sealed because of the circumstances leading up to her returning to Earth, and the possible security concerns given who her mother is. Marshall Pusintin has not made a single attempt in the last quarter century to pursue her, or contact her in any fashion. Nor had he made any attempt in this regard in the preceding four hundred plus years of her life that you have presented or we could find. Anywhere. Lisisa Leonidas was conceived due to a vicious crime that Marshall Pusintin committed while here on Earth as a member of the Kavalian military. A crime that is regarded by the Lycavorians as among the most heinous crimes one could commit. In essence he showed no interest in what his actions could bear, nor did he show any interest in establishing any sort of relationship with his daughter after discovering she existed. He gave up those rights the day he dismissed her existence here on Earth and chose instead to fight his very own brother. A brother I might add, that spared his life and the lives of every Kavalian soldier and individual on Earth at that time. All of them being held on Espionage charges at the time. Union law dictates that anyone held on espionage charges to be executed immediately upon conviction.

“Given all that information... this body unequivocally denies Part One of your Petition to force Kavalian citizenship upon Lisisa Leonidas based on who her father is. There is no legal basis for such a claim that we have found within Section Thirteen, Paragraph Four of the Lycavorian Union Constitution, nor within the Laws of Compliance for non Union members. And there is nothing in the Petition you have filed to provide anymore information than what we have now.” Sel’ke told him.

“Had he made such an attempt your honors, there is little doubt he would have been scorned at best and killed at worst for entering Union space.” Jiss spoke. “That is also an undeniable truth.”

Sel’ke nodded. “That may well be true, however, you can not just suddenly decide to become a father to a child of your blood when it suits you or your agenda if you have had no contact or interest in that child for the previous five hundred years of their life. I will not begin to weigh into the equation of what Princess Lisisa endured through the years before being discovered on Lycavore. Lisisa Leonidas is an active and respected citizen of the Lycavorian Union and is a recognized Princess of the Union, duly confirmed and all records support this fact. As Prime Minister Deia stated when we were here last, Princess Lisisa and Prince Denali were just recently mated, which once again according to Lycavorian Union law establishes the precedent.” Sel’ke spoke. “Therefore Part Three of your Petition is also null and void.”

“And you wish us to believe this was not done to counter this petition in some way?” Jiss demanded.

The Hadarian Magistrate Galia leaned forward now. "I examined Lisisa Leonidas myself Legislature Jiss. She willingly submitted to blood and tissue scans by members of my personal staff, as well as a full medical examination. Because she is half vampire her body and her blood retains the source DNA code for those she has been intimate with recently. In fact, it is retained in her blood for several months based on what we now know. The only source code I found in her blood was that of Denali Leonidas and given the levels that I found, it indicates a physical relationship that has been ongoing for at least two years, probably more. You may believe what you wish, but the medical data is without question. We would be more than happy to make the results available to you if you wish."

"We would prefer an actual copy of the examine itself and all materials relating to it, as well as her medical records, to confirm your results with past examines." Jiss spoke quickly.

"With respects Magistrates..." Deia spoke coming to her feet, holding out her hand to For'mya to keep her from standing. "Lisisa is a member of the Royal family and they would strongly denounce this action were it to take place. I see no plausible reason why a copy of the medical examine and related materials be handed over to Legislature Jiss. Princess Lisisa volunteered to undergo that examine in an effort to speed this process to conclusion. That does not give the Kavalian Delegation the right to her complete medical records."

Galia nodded her head and looked at Sel'ke. "I concur with the Prime Minister. The results will be made available to Legislature Jiss... but complete medical records are not called for and nor will they be surrendered."

Sel'ke nodded. "So noted." He turned and waited for Jiss to respond and when he didn't he continued. "Part Four of your Petition we already gave our answer to you, and I will only reaffirm it now. Dragons are considered sentient lifeforms with the Lycavorian Union, and the Dragon Elder Mother occupies a seat on the Union Senate. They are not considered property in any way, shape or form, therefore that part of your Petition is also denied.

"Parts five and six of your Petition relate directly to Marshall Pusintin having allegedly arranged a marriage between Lisisa and a member of the Kavalian military. While she may hold Kavalian citizenship in your eyes and the eyes of Marshall Pusintin and your people, she does not recognize that citizenship, and neither does this Galactic Body. She holds Union citizenship and has now become the wife and mate of Prince Denali Leonidas. I sincerely hope you do not expect this body to rule in favor of Parts Five and Six of your Petition Legislature Jiss. That will not happen. The Galactic Court is not going to tell Princess Lisisa that she needs to dissolve her union with Prince Denali because the father she has never seen supposedly arranged a marriage between her and an officer in your military. We would look like fools, not to mention she would most likely tell us what we could do with our decision, and given her closeness with the King and Queen Anja, she would do so in much more colorful terms than I am laying out to you right now."

This caused Andro to chuckle out loud and many eyes turned to look at him as he leaned close to For'mya and whispered into her ear. Sadi also had a smile on her face and was holding Andro's hand tightly within hers. Qurot and Timur glared at Andro from the gallery with rage in their eyes.

"Now... Part Two of your Petition relates to the search and the seizure of any property known to be owned by Lisisa Leonidas. Given the fact that she is also deemed a citizen of the Kavalian Federation because of whom her father is, and whether she or this court recognizes it or not, this Galactic body must by definition distinguish that fact in some format. In the interests of continuing the gains made recently in relations between the Kavalian Federation and the Lycavorian Union, this body has decided to rule in favor of Part Two of your petition. In that regard only and in accordance with Kavalian laws and customs. This is not an overall ruling as we have made perfectly clear, but a ruling towards one part of the complete Kavalian Petition. That being said... we do hereby order that any property or items belonging to Lisisa Leonidas, not received by her as gifts and prior to the filing of Legislature Jiss's petition, be surrendered to the Kavalian Delegation, and that her villa in Gytheio be subject to immediate search and subsequent seizure of said items. We also order that her Royal apartment within the Royal Estate grounds be made available for immediate inspection in accordance with this ruling and any location she may have frequented where she may have items stored, to include the homes and villas of her brothers and sisters. This action will be coordinated and supervised by the Durcunusaan as needed and directed." Sel'ke stopped talking and looked at Deia who was still standing. "Prime Minister Deia...?"

All eyes turned to Deia as she shifted her feet on the floor. "On behalf of the King and the Lycavorian Union, we will grudgingly accept your ruling Chief Magistrate." She stated evenly. "Though I will inform you that the villa Lisisa owned in Gytheio has been sold. I can produce the transaction details for that if it is needed.”

“Then where does she live now?” Timur demanded from the gallery his voice harsh and not at all respectful.

“She lives with her mate Denali Leonidas, as is usually the case when that happens.” Deia replied as if Timur had asked the stupidest of questions.

Sel’ke’s eyes turned to For’mya. “Queen For’mya?”

For’mya stood up now. “On behalf of Martin Leonidas, my fellow Queens of the Union and our younger children, I would first like to say we honor and respect this Galactic Body and fully support its rulings. We will adhere to this court’s ruling and consent to the inspection of Lisisa’s apartment on the Royal Estate with Durcunusaan supervision only. They will escort whoever the Kavalian Delegation dictates, no more than three individuals, directly from the main gate to Lisisa’s apartment and back when they are complete. And this inspection will be of Lisisa’s apartment only. We will allow no other access anywhere on the estate. Any breach of this permission and the Durcunusaan will immediately remove any members of the Kavalian delegation from Royal Villa grounds and the offer will be withdrawn.”

“I object!” Jiss spoke up as he came to his feet.

Sel’ke looked at him. “What is it that you object to Legislature Jiss? We are granting this Part of your Petition.”

“We protest the supervision, as Queen For’mya refers to it, of the Durcunusaan. We feel that this will impede our ability to act within our laws.” Jiss said evenly. “As well as limiting our search to just her apartment. The ruling on Part Two of our Petition should include the entire Estate and all facilities therein.”

Sel’ke looked at him shocked as loud murmurs swept through the gallery at this brazen disrespect of the Royal family.

“You must be joking.” He said after a moment to gather his thoughts. “Having agents of a non-Union government search the Lycavorian King’s Royal Estate? His home and the home of his Queens and children?” Sel’ke shook his head. “That is not something this body would even consider Legislature Jiss. Your search has no basis for legality outside the confines of Lisisa Leonidas’s apartment, and the only reason we are allowing that is to further relations between our governments and to show that we desire peace and co-habitation and that we respect your laws as well as our own. The Durcunusaan will insure that the privacy of the Royal family is maintained. And you forget... we are a Galactic Court Body, and we have to adhere to the individual laws of each member world. No court within this Union will grant you unfettered access to search the Royal Estate either here in Sparta or on Apo Prime as if the King is some sort of common criminal. And before you ask, the Palace on Apo Prime will not be included in your Petition. It goes to the openness of the Leonidas family that you have been granted what you have so far. They could have just as easily told us they would not have adhered to our ruling. Would you allow agents of the Union government to search the Kavalian Prefect’s home and property in similar circumstances?”

“Certainly not!” Jiss replied indignantly. “However a situation like this would never be called into question within the Kavalian Federation.”

Sel’ke nodded. “We are not the Kavalian Federation Legislature Jiss. The Durcunusaan are charged with the protection of the Royal Family and everything that falls within their realm of influence, and they have done this since their inception. That includes the Royal Estate here in Sparta.” Sel’ke spoke. “Are you now saying that you will forgo this action because you will not have free reign within their home?”

“No your honors... we do however feel with the supervision of the Durcunusaan we will not be afforded the proper leeway to follow our own laws.” Jiss spoke.

“What law would that be?” Andro’s voice boomed out causing all heads to turn to him.

Jiss glared at him. “The Kavalian Laws of Possession and Property.” He spat.

“You mean the law that allows you to take what does not belong to you.” Andro spoke. “That law?”

Jiss turned back to Sel’ke. “Who is this upstart that he is allowed to sit with the Queen and Prime Minister and address me and this court so casually?”

“He is Crown Prince Androcles Leonidas Legislature Jiss. He and Crown Princess Sadi have just recently returned from a very quiet marriage vacation in the southern hemisphere of Earth. They decided to come to today’s proceedings to lend support to Queen For’mya and myself, and see that the rights of the Prince's siblings were looked after." Deia spoke turning to look at him. "And he needs neither your permission nor this court's to go where he will. But then you already knew that didn't you? And for a senior diplomat from a foreign government Legislature Jiss, you tread very closely to open disrespect of a member of our Royal family."

"I would like to lodge a formal complaint in this regards." Jiss spoke quickly. "The presence of Prince Androcles has influenced these proceedings."

Sel'ke snorted. "The presence of Prince Androcles was not known to this body until, like you, we came out into this court room. The supervision of the Durcunusaan is something you will have to accept Legislature Jiss." Sel'ke told him. "And your compliant will be noted." He turned back to For'mya. "Queen For'mya... do you have anything else?"

For'mya nodded. "Yes Chief Magistrate..." She replied holding up four data pads in her slim fingered hand. "While my fellow Queens and I along with Martin Leonidas can speak for our younger children, we can not however speak for the older ones. It is well known that all of our older children own villas within Sparta's port city of Gytheio, and we anticipated your ruling, at least to some degree. We can not however dictate to them what they will do; they will follow their own hearts and conscious. Normya and Zarah Leonidas live together and both have authority to respond to your order. I have Zarah's signed acceptance of your directive here. Eliani Leonidas and Nyla Sinthe have also agreed since they own their villa together. I suggest whatever search that is conducted of their home be done so quickly however."

"Why is that?" Galia asked. She was Hadarian after all and she was very interested in the recognized heir to the Hadarian throne.

"We were informed very early this morning that Eliani and Nyla have been claimed and now mated with Star Commander Malic, the most recent addition to Mjolnir's Hand. They will begin the process to have their personal holdings combined with that of their new mate and husband within the next few days. Eliani and Nyla also informed me that Malic will not allow such a search to occur when the paperwork is completed. He is a very private young man and has expressed to them distaste for what is happening in regards to Lisisa." For'mya could hear the whirring of the holo feed drones in the back of the room.

"As you all know our daughter Carina Simpson just recently became the wife and mate to Moneus Simpson, and their holdings have been combined already. Moneus and Carina have agreed to such a search with one of them being present as well as the Durcunusaan." For'mya set the last of the four data pads on the table and reached for three more. "Our son Arrarn has consented to such a search, as well as our son Resumar as long as the Durcunusaan is present. I present their signed orders as well. Unfortunately... Denali will not consent to the search of the villa he just recently purchased as a marriage gift to Lisisa. His words to me were that Lisisa is his mate and wife and he will allow no one to violate the sanctity of that union and he would be remiss in his duty to her as her mate and husband if he allowed this."

"He realizes of course we could very well bring charges against him?" Sel'ke asked.

For'mya nodded. "Yes... he understands that. He believes you will do what you must, but his answer will not change. It is a matter of honor with him."

"We will address this in chambers at a later time and we will advise Prince Denali of our decision." Sel'ke said. He and his fellow judges had already expected this and they had decided they would in no way pursue this. The calm from the Netnews reporters also told Sel'ke this was not unexpected. "I can only assume then that the Crown Prince and Princess are here in regards to this as well?" Sel'ke asked knowing that the only reason for Andro and Sadi to be present would be to address this issue, not to lend support to two women who were some of the finest politicians in the Union.

For'mya smiled and motioned to Sadi. "I believe Sadi will address what hers and Andro's decision is Chief Magistrate."

Sel'ke nodded. "Very well... this body recognizes the Crown Princess Sadi Leonidas. We welcome you Princess. I would hope these last weeks since your mating ceremony have been pleasant?"

Sadi got to her feet slowly, squeezing Andro's hand as she rose even while the Netnews holo drones closed in around her and reporters became hushed and pressed forward.

"Thank you Chief Magistrate, and yes... these last weeks have been more than pleasant." She answered turning to give Andro a bright, dazzling smile with a devilish twinkle to her eyes. "Androcles and I come here before you today since the end of our vacation and his duties found us within Sparta this morning. We felt one of us should respond to your ruling in person if you decided in the fashion that you have.”

Sel’ke nodded. “Of course.” He said.

“It is our decision alone and in no way reflects upon the rest of our family members and their decisions.” Sadi spoke evenly. “Androcles, I and Elynth, who is also a member of our family, we have made this decision based on our own personal feelings and convictions.”

“We fully understand and recognize Elynth, daughter of Torma and Isheeni, as Prince Androcles’s bonded dragon sister.” Sel’ke said.

“At this time Chief Magistrate... nor at any time in the future will we allow the Kavalian Federation, its personnel, or agents access to our home in Gytheio.” Sadi spoke clearly. “We feel it is inappropriate for members of the Kavalian Federation, no matter whether it is done in the auspice of good will or not, to be allowed to inspect where we live and essentially invade upon our privacy for the sake of political gain. We sincerely apologize to this body... but we will not acknowledge your ruling and we will not adhere to it in any way.”

The court room practically exploded with noise as reporters pressed closer around where Sadi stood and Andro sat, and the holo drones whirred on mindlessly doing their jobs and feeding the images they were taking to billions of species across the Union. Sel’ke lifted the silver rod and banged it on the large bench producing a loud ringing.

“There will be calm in this hall!” He bellowed out, surprising many who did not expect such a deep voice from an elf. He waited for several moments before turning back to Sadi and meeting her steady gaze. “You do realize Princess Sadi that we have the authority to force this issue further?” Sel’ke said.

Sadi nodded. “Yes... and if you feel that is what you need to do... then by all means go ahead. As it stands right now... any attempt made to breach the defenses of Cranae Island and our villa there, aside from those that we consider family and friends, will be considered hostile and the security apparatus that we have in place will respond accordingly.”

“Princess Sadi... is that a threat?” Galia asked now leaning forward once more a look of shock on her face.

Sadi shook her head quickly. “Not at all Magistrate Galia. It is a simply a statement of fact.”

Sel’ke looked at Andro who sat calmly, looking around at all the commotion that Sadi’s announcement had caused with an amused expression on his face. “Prince Androcles?” He spoke now.

Andro turned back to look at him. “Chief Magistrate?” He answered coming to his feet next to Sadi.

“Is this decision spoken by Princess Sadi also your decision as well Milord?” Sel’ke asked.

Andro looked at him confused for a moment. “Forgive me Chief Magistrate; was there something Sadi said that was not clear in any way?”

“No... she was very clear in her statement?” Sel’ke answered. “Exceptionally clear and blunt I might add.”

“Then why do you question me your Honor?” He spoke candidly but with the utmost respectful tone. “Sadi and I are Anomes. We speak with one voice.”

“I just want to make sure you understand what you are doing?” Sel’ke asked.

“I understand this Chief Magistrate...” Andro said. He ignored Deia who turned to look at him and shook her head quickly in an attempt to have him stop before he began what she knew he was going to say. He was like his father in that regard, and like his father, Deia failed in getting him to hold his tongue more often than not. For’mya simply shook her head politely with a small smile on her face knowing when Andro made up his mind in regards to something, there was little that would change it.

“I understand that for the twenty-six years of my life, Lisisa has been my sister. I have called her nothing else, thought about her in no other way than as my sister. I will not be party to any ruling, whether man made or handed down by the gods, that calls that into question. Nor will I be party to a ruling that invades upon the privacy of my family simply to advance the political notion of fairness as Sadi has already explained to you. I don’t care if her father is Marshall Pusintin, Marshall Pleistarchus or some masterful leader or tyrant from another universe, call him what you will. Lisisa is my sister, and while I support my brothers and sisters fully in their individual decisions but that does not mean that I will do the same. That is what I understand sir.” Andro spoke.

“We are not calling into question Lisisa’s status as a Leonidas or a member of the Royal family Prince Androcles.” The Algolian Magistrate spoke for the first time as he leaned forward in his chair.

Andro’s eyes moved to him. “That’s what this whole proceeding is about isn’t it?” He said. “That is why it was begun. You have acknowledged yourselves right here in this very courtroom that there is no basis for the Kavalian Federation claims in regards to my sister.”

“Yes we have.” The Algolian answered.

“If that is your ruling... why are you allowing them to conduct searches of my families’ homes to advance the political gains made by a simple trade agreement?” Andro said. “If the Kavalian Federation wishes to advance whatever was gained by this trade agreement we have recently signed, then perhaps they should go about it in ways similar to everyone else who wishes such things. Without veiled threats and the use of subtly worded threats and coercion.”

“Chief Magistrate...” Jiss shouted. “I must strongly protest this... this attack against my government, my people and our very laws and culture.”

Andro turned his head to look at Jiss and he chuckled gently before turning back to Sel’ke. “Sadi, Elynth and I made this decision.” He stated. “I know my sister Lisisa, and even though she may not outwardly show it, she abhors this type of politically driven sibfla just as much if not more than I do.”

“Androcles Leonidas... your language!” Deia barked showing real anger in her face. Anger that bounced off her nephew.

“My brothers and sisters do what they do because they wish to make this whole thing go away so that my sister and brother can get on with their lives. I love them for that. I will be the one that speaks to what is in Lisisa and Denali’s hearts however, and while they may not be able to publicly mention or display what they feel in regards to this situation, I will do it for them.” Andro took Sadi’s hand, leaned over and kissed For’mya’s cheek and then looked back to Sel’ke. “Our decision stands... and this honorable court my do what they feel is right. Just as I am doing.” Andro bowed his head slightly. “Good day Magistrates... may you walk in the shadow of the gods.”

Andro spun around and he and Sadi marched out of the courtroom with the Netnews reporters practically drooling in their chairs as they turned to face the Galactic Court body.

“Your honors...” Deia spoke quickly. “If you will allow me the time to speak with Prince Androcles I’m sure some arrangement can be reached. I...”

“We will recess for two days to discuss these events!” Sel’ke blurted. “The rest of our ruling stands and will be complied with!” He banged the gavel on the table and rose to his feet. “We are adjourned for today.”

“...that level of drama needed Andro?” For’mya asked him as they stood outside the courtroom. “We are trying to at least please the Kavalian fools, and actions such as yours do not help with that.”

They stood near the entrance to the courtroom, the Durcunusaan holding back the mob of reporters at a respectful distance. Some of them could be seen interviewing Jiss and Matuarr while Qurot and the others looked on with stern faces. Elynth and Aurith rested on the ground next to them flicking their tails at one another. They were sisters, and along with Jeth made up the first of the three clutches of eggs that Isheeni and Torma had brought into this world. They had a special relationship and were very close as dragon sisters went, both of them fighting the assassins sent after For’mya and Andro when they were less than a year old, something unheard of in the annals of dragon lore and history.

Andro smiled as he leaned over and nuzzled his second elven mother affectionately. “I realize that mother... I will not conform to how the Kavalians want us to act however. I only did what my heart and conscious told me to do, and what I know everyone else in my family wanted to do. Besides... if our entire family rolled over and bowed to their every whim they would suspect something right away.”

For’mya nodded. “You are correct in that regard, but you are the Crown Prince. Deia is beside herself you know.” For’mya said. “You should have told her what you and Sadi were planning.”

“If we had done that then the level of her reaction would have been muted.” Sadi spoke in reply. “Better that she looked as she did. Completely surprised.”

For’mya looked at her. “His more devious tendencies are rubbing off on you Sadi.” She said with a grin. Sadi nodded and pressed up against Andro’s side. “I know... and it feels wonderful.”

For'mya laughed and took her hand squeezing it. "It is probably good that you made your appearance now." She said. "How long will you stay?"

Andro shrugged. "A day or two at least." He answered. "Enough to make sure that the Kavalians do not suspect we are doing anything behind their backs. They have not reacted to Yuri being back in Sparta I take it?"

For'mya shook her head. "Not outwardly, but with Vollenth not at her side, it is a large signal that wherever the Coven dragons are, they are not here. That façade is at least holding up quite well."

"And the clone of the woman that father and Uncle Daniel fought with... this Julie?" Andro asked.

"She is being watched." For'mya stated. "Carefully. Two of Lynwe's Drow are tailing her wherever she goes."

"They are using the new technology to enhance their natural skills?" Andro asked.

For'mya nodded. "The first group to graduate the Advanced Training, yes." She said. "Lynwe and Aihola were very pleased with the results. Your father already had them tasked to watching the Kavalian embassy once it was established and it was a small matter for Lynwe to assign two more to this clone from those already here in Sparta. Aricia and Bella made contact with the High Coven insurgent group, and they should be back in three days. Your father and Anja will return hopefully by the end of the week. One can never tell with the Hadarian Elders. They can be even more infuriating than elven ministers at times."

"Mother... why is Res remaining here in Sparta?" Andro asked. "We could certainly use his help at SODRAG."

For'mya looked at him. "It is complicated." She said. "He is involved with something that is... it is sensitive right now."

Andro looked at Sadi and then back to For'mya. "Father has him doing something with the Kavalians?"

For'mya shook her head. "No... no your father doesn't know what Resumar is doing right now." She said.

"Why do I get the feeling that father would not approve from the tone of your voice." Andro spoke.

For'mya met his eyes. "I don't... to be honest I don't know how your father would react. I know that your mothers and I with the exception of Dysea have seen his commitment and dedication and we approve. And I wouldn't be a bit surprised if Dysea senses something and just has not said anything yet. Resumar is from within her, and she has always been able to sense his moods and such. The same with Normya. Just remember that he loves you Andro. All of you."

Andro looked at her for a long moment, questions in his eyes. Questions that he would have to ask his brother if he wanted answers. "She and Normya should be on their way back to Union space right now." Andro said. "They are going to attempt to discover who caused the sabotage on Normya's ship before father finds out about it."

For'mya nodded. "Yes... and if that happens... whoever did it will disappear." She said. "I spoke with her this morning Sparta time and I understand what they are doing. It worries me... but I trust them."

"You don't trust the Immortals For'mya?" Sadi asked.

For'mya shrugged. "They have been the enemy for as long as I can remember. It is hard to trust after so long a period. Dysea and Normya seem to trust them, and they are there. And from what Dysea has told me and what I have seen in her reports, she and Normya may have come across the first Immortals to actually change the direction of their lives. I must trust in their instincts but I do still worry."

"Mother you need too..."

"I hope you are satisfied Androcles." Deia's voice carried to them as they turned and watched her approach.

Andro smiled. "Tenna... whatever do you mean?" He asked.

"You are too much like your father Androcles." Deia snapped. "Jiss and his ilk are at this very moment suggesting to the Netnews vultures that you will not comply with the court's ruling because you have Lisisa's things at your villa."

"What he tells the Netnews vermin is of no consequence to me." Andro spoke.

"We are doing this in an effort to appease them Andro." Deia said. "So they do not go out of their way to discover what else we are doing."

"I know that." Andro snapped now.

"Don't you dare take that tone of voice with me young man!" Deia growled at him.

“Deia... we thought about this.” Sadi said now coming to her mate’s defense as any alpha female would. “This is a decision that we came too together with Elynth. This was not some last second decision done only to anger the Kavalians or make your life harder. It ultimately helps to keep the Kavalians focused on the issue with Lisisa as opposed to trying to discover what else they can while they are here. Namely that we are training the High Coven dragons.”

Deia looked at her for a long moment. “A warning of what you were going to do would have been helpful.” She stated now as she got control of her own anger. “Your father learned long ago to keep me in the loop with decisions such as these. He found it helped him more than hindered him.”

Andro looked at her. “I am not my father Tenna.” He said sternly. “And I wish people would begin to realize that!”

Deia seemed taken aback by the tone of his reply. “I did not mean to imply that you...”

“Yes you did.” Andro said quickly. “Everyone seems to think that I am in some way a clone of my father. That is not the case. I have my own beliefs, my own mind. I may be like him in many respects, but I am very different in others. I will not walk in my father’s shadow anymore and I wish people would stop treating me in such a fashion.”

“My apologies Andro.” Deia said softly glancing at For’mya who was also wearing a surprised look on her face at Androcles’s passionate reply.

Andro looked at her and shook his head after a long moment. “Bah... ignore my rants Tenna. I am sorry for acting like such a child, forgive me.”

Deia nodded her head. “We are family... there is nothing to forgive. And you are correct Andro, you are not your father and I will need to learn to recognize that. Though you do both have the skill of making my life extremely hard.”

Andro smiled. “I believe that does run in the blood.” He said with a twinkle in his azure eyes. “I will be more forthcoming in the future Tenna, I promise you.”

“You will need to speak with the Netnews Andro. You and Sadi both.” Deia said quickly. “If for no other reason then to give credence to your announcement and why you are doing it.”

“Oh joy.” Sadi exclaimed softly.

“We can limit their questions... but it is something that you need to do. This is the part of diplomacy that your father took years to learn. How to make it appear like your decision is the best one.” Deia spoke.

Andro sighed heavily and looked at Sadi. “KertaGai?” He asked.

Sadi grinned and leaned over to kiss him. “Let’s just do it and get it over with so we can go to Gallais’s Retreat and enjoy our time here.”

Andro looked Elynth then. Sister?

Personally I would burn them... Elynth replied playfully knowing For’mya and Deia could hear her easily. But if it is something we must address then so be it.

Andro nodded. “Alright Tenna a few questions.” He spoke.

Deia motioned with her hand to the Durcunusaan detachment leader from the villa and he nodded, motioning perhaps two dozen reporters forward past where their line was. They had been waiting patiently, for they knew it would cause painful backlash to try and press their way past the Durcunusaan security around the royal family. The Netnews channels had discovered this many years ago when they tried to rush the podium where Martin stood announcing the beginning of the Evolli war. Several of their number were beaten back and injured for this lack of protocol on their part.

Sadi gripped Andro’s arm as they approached and Deia faced them. “A few questions only...” She told them. “The Prince and Princess are here to enjoy the last days of their marriage vacation and I do not want it spoiled. Cammon... you may begin.” She indicated an older reporter who had followed the Royal family for years and was a staunch supporter of them.

“Prince Androcles... was the decision by you and Princess Sadi to resist the Galactic Court ruling made to conceal items of Princess Lisisa that may be at your home as Legislature Jiss and Matuarr accuse?” He asked.

“Lisisa is my sister, and like all my brothers and sisters, each of us have items of clothing and such at the other’s homes so that we can change if need be. My villa is the largest simply because of Cranæ Island and it has become a gathering spot as you all know for my siblings and I to relax and be with one another. Nothing more.” Andro replied. “I am hiding nothing more than a few bathing suits and clothes that belong to Lisisa.”

“If that is all that is there, then why not let the Kavalian delegation search your home?” Another reporter asked.

“Would you allow them to search your home if the situation concerned you and your family?” Sadi answered the reporter’s question with one of her own. “It is simply a matter of principle with us.”

“But the King has allowed them to search her apartment on the Royal Estate.” Another said.

Andro nodded. “Yes. That is my father and mother’s decisions.” He answered. “They feel it is right to further relations with the Kavalian Federation. While I support the decision for better relations, searching my home and the home of my mate is not advancing that, it is hindering that.”

“In what way?”

“We would never demand to search the private residences of the Kavalian Prefect if the situation with Lisisa was reversed and she was a daughter of Prefect Keleru.” Andro said. “Our laws are different and it would not happen. The Galactic Court has already said that Marshall Pusintin and the Kavalian Federation have no legitimate claim to Lisisa’s citizenship, not that she would care anyway, and in my opinion that is the end of it. Allowing them to search my home to further political gains because the court did not rule in their favor is not something I will do.”

“What if the court had ruled in their favor?” Another reporter asked.

Andro shrugged. “They didn’t.”

“But if they had; would you have allowed the search?” The same reporter pressed.

“No.” Andro stated flatly. “It is my home. No one searches my home but me when I seek to find my socks because Sadi has moved my laundry.” This brought a round of small laughter from the reporters.

“What of the decision by your brothers and sisters to allow the search?”

“We all have our own opinions in regards to everything.” Andro said. “As I stated earlier, I believe their decisions are motivated by wanting to put this business behind us so that Lisisa and Deni can get on with their lives. I love them for that... but that does not mean I agree with them. I would hope should you interview them, they would say the same thing about me.” Andro chuckled. “At least they had better. Half of them serve in my command.”

This brought another round of laughter from the reporters.

“Princess Sadi... can you say where Prince Andro took you on your vacation?” A reporter asked.

Sadi’s smile was dazzling. “A remote island off the southern tip of what used to be the African Continent. White sands and warm water. Though we did get chased out of the ocean several times by sharks in the area.”

“It has been reported that you have completed early graduation requirements from the Fleet Academy and now hold the rank of Lieutenant Commander in the Union Fleet.”

Sadi nodded. “Yes... that is true. I have been assigned as Arrarn Leonidas’s co-pilot on the SCIMITAR.” She answered. “I am looking forward to beginning my duties in a few days.”

“Princess Sadi...” An attractive female elf reporter spoke from near the back of the group of reporters. “Is there any truth to the rumors that you were once a member of what was once called the Arryadyveluat?”

Sadi and Andro’s eyes both grew wider at this. The expressions of their faces said all anyone needed to say.

“What? Where... who told you that?” Sadi stammered.

“Is it not true that The Arryadyveluat was an organization formed by the former High Coven Lord Veldruk? An organization that used young Lycavorian women as couriers and intelligence agents working against the Union. Is it not true that you were a member of this organization and that your eventual ascension to the role you now have as Crown Princess is only a reward for becoming a double agent and helping the Krypteria in the Intelligence purge that took place twenty-five years ago?”

If anything could silence a group of Netnews reporters it was the dropping of a proverbial news bomb on them unexpectedly. Which is exactly what was happening now as all of them had become silent and stared at the elven female with astonished looks.

“Reward? That is not true!” Sadi hissed.

“Is it also not true that you were the one responsible for bringing the assassins to the Royal Island on Apo Prime, resulting in Queen For’mya being gravely wounded and King Leonidas then having to turn her in order to heal her grievous wounds? And how is it possible that after twenty-five years, the mating of you and Prince Androcles took place within a matter of days and not the normal months and even years of courting? When you first met the Prince he was only eight months old. It isn't possible for him to remember you let alone retain any feeling for you. Can you shed any light on these rumors Princess?"

The immediate air around Andro and Sadi became deathly quiet as the questions hung out there for a long moment. Deia moved forward but For'mya gripped her arm and shook her head.

Andro snarled. "Where exactly did you..." He started to say.

Sadi squeezed his arm tightly and he looked at her. "No aur armen enyla." She spoke softly. Her face relaxed and became confident in its expression and demeanor. "I am not ashamed of my past and I will not hide from it now." She said. "Better that they hear the truth from us and we put these rumors to rest."

"KertaGai you don't need to..." Andro spoke.

Sadi's eyes were bright and focused. "I know Androcles. I want too. We knew this day would come sooner or later my love. Let us face it and be done with it forever." She smiled and squeezed his arm tighter before looking at the reporter. "Which question would you like me to answer first?" She asked.

"Were... were you a member of this Arryadyveluat ?" The female elf asked again very much shaken that none of them were denying it.

Sadi nodded. "Yes I was. The Arryadyveluat or Traitors of the Female Flesh in the old language was an organization created by the High Lord Veldruk for the purpose of gathering intelligence and operating low level couriers within the Lycavorian Union. As you all know my father Vorilas was the Governor of the Menkla District on Apo Prime and head of the Menkla Engineering Corporation at the time. My mother had passed away many years before and my father was smitten by another Lycavorian female some ten years after my mother died. This woman as it turns out was also a member of the Arryadyveluat and she was using my father's position as Governor to..."

APO PRIME MENKLA ENGINEERING CORPORATION MAIN MANUFACTURING PLANT OFFICE OF THE FORMER DISTRICT GOVERNOR VORILAS

Director Vorilas sat at the large desk in the spacious office going over the reports from the monthly shipping and manufacturing numbers. The backdrop of the Menkla District of Apo Prime took up most of the massive window behind his desk as the sun was dipping below the horizon. He was a man who was dedicated to his work and he was usually the last one to leave the offices and the first one to arrive. Vorilas was well respected and very well thought of even before his daughter Sadi became Crown Princess, only now he just got more invitations to events and dinners that he had never received.

Vorilas looked up when the door to his office slid open and the young Lycavorian female rushed in. "Director Vorilas!" She exclaimed.

"Lenna... what is wrong?" Vorilas asked quickly. She had been his assistant for three decades now, and she never panicked.

Lenna moved to the large wall monitor and touched the panel. "Director you need to see this." She stated.

Vorilas got to his feet as the monitor came to life with an image of his daughter and Andro, Queen For'mya and the Prime Minister standing with two dragons in the background. "What is this?" He asked.

"It's a live broadcast from Sparta Director." Lenna replied as she adjusted the volume. "You need to hear this."

"...was using my father's position as Governor to conduct intelligence drops and gather information for the High Coven." Sadi was speaking. "I adore my father, I have ever since I was a little girl. That adoration only increased when my mother died and he became not only my father, but my very best friend. This woman that he took as his mate... neither me nor my brothers liked this woman. We all sensed there was something wrong about her, but my father loved her.

“She knew of the love I had for my father and she basically came to me one day and told me if I did not do as she told me, she would expose my father as a traitor that he was not. I was very young at this time, and like today I would do anything to protect my father’s good name. He was never a traitor to this Union, his own parents were killed by the High Coven in one of the concentration camps they had for our people. I did what this woman demanded of me in order to protect my father.”

Vorilas looked at Lenna. “This is live?” He asked stunned.

Lenna nodded quickly. “They were caught coming out of the Galactic Court Building and the ongoing case with the Kavalians over the status of Princess Lisisa.”

“What exactly... what exactly did your step mother force you to do?” The female elf reporter asked.

“I was used as an intelligence courier for the most part. I was sent to a High Coven training facility in The Wilds and trained in espionage as well as other arts and then sent back to the Union.” Sadi continued. “The majority of the things I did were very low level intelligence courier missions. I was not a major player as some, including those who gave you this information would have you believe. My step mother made sure of that. She was my controlling agent. I was forced to...”

Vorilas saw her look at Androcles, seemingly drawing strength just from gazing at him as she pressed closer to him.

“My step mother... she forced me to bed with my half brothers... and several other foul men to keep her from producing lies about my father. These lies would have seen his name dishonored and he would have been put in prison for life, or executed. I was not willing to take that chance. This went on for many years, and it is something I never told my father. I couldn’t tell him. My older brothers actually moved off Apo Prime because they saw how my stepmother was using our father and he did not see it. Only I remained to protect him. Up until I was given the task of ferrying the ten assassins to the Royal Island on Apo Prime, I had never been involved in anything even remotely damaging to the Union as far as giving away secrets and such. The day... the day I ferried those assassins to the island is the day my life changed forever.”

“What do you mean?” Another reporter spoke up.

“The assassins I brought to that island failed in their task of killing Queen Anja’s twin sister Sivana. That is why they were sent there. Sivana knew the location of Lisisa. Of where she was being held and the High Lord did not want that information discovered because it would also reveal other intelligence he was keeping from many in his own circles. What none of the assassins counted on was the presence of Torma and Miath, Anja’s dragon. Yes... For’mya was grievously injured and...”

Sadi stopped speaking to compose herself and Vorilas saw For’mya step up next to Sadi and take her opposite hand.

“You all know how I view my own father.” For’mya spoke now. “I regard him in the same fashion as Sadi does her own father. My mother teases me about endlessly. Sadi came to us when she could no longer bear the burden herself. When she was at the end of her ability to deal with what was happening, she came to the island with her father and told Armetus and I what was going on. Once the reasons behind Sadi’s actions were discovered, how could I hold anything in my heart for her except understanding and anger at what she was being forced to do.” For’mya looked at Sadi quickly with a smile.

“Sadi freely admitted to Armetus and I what was going on... what she was forced to do and why she was being forced to do it. Apparently however, the High Lord Veldruk got it in his head that I also needed to die for reasons known only to him. That is why the island was attacked a second time while Martin Leonidas was gone from Apo Prime. Sadi was there with me when the assassins attacked again. She killed one herself and had a hand in helping to kill two others.

“All of you know by now that our son Androcles had bonded with Elynth while Aricia still carried him in her womb. We have never tried to hide this fact. In essence this bonding allowed Andro to know complete awareness and understanding of everything around him even as an infant and it enabled him to see all that Elynth saw. We can not explain this, not even the First Oracle is able to explain such an utter and complete bonding of two minds, but it did happen. Andro was eight months old when Sadi came to our island, and that night when the assassins came, even though he was safe with his grandmother in the panic room we had built he...”

“He saved my life that night.” Sadi spoke softly looking at Andro with adoration in her green eyes. Andro rolled his eyes. “You and Elynth were doing quite alright by yourself.” He told her.

“Wait...” The elven female who had begun the questioning asked. “Milord... you can remember that night?”

Andro met her gaze. “As if it happened yesterday.” He stated.

“He projected his thoughts to me through Elynth, warning me of an assassin nearby and it saved my life.” Sadi spoke once more. “It allowed Elynth to kill that assassin and give us the time needed until his uncle arrived. When Andro and Elynth touched me as they did that night, it triggered my own Mindvoice abilities that had been lying dormant, and I became part of his and Elynth’s mind. It appears my blood is purer than I first thought, for even after I left the island, my abilities only continued to grow.” Sadi reached under her flight suit and pulled out the Dragon Heart pendant and let it dangle as she fingered it with two fingers.

“He gave this to me... or rather Elynth gave this to me for him before I left the island. Elynth told me that night on the island that Androcles Leonidas was a child then... he was eight months old, but she said that one day he would be a man... and the love I had sought would one day walk into my life. I didn’t know it then... but the moment I saw him those weeks ago on Apo Prime, the love I had been destined for walked back into my life.”

Sadi looked at the reporters. “You ask if this... if being Crown Princess is some sort of reward for doing what I did all those years ago?” Sadi shrugged her shoulders. “Perhaps it is. I would dismiss it all if all I had was Andro’s love. My father never discovered what it was I was forced to do... and he doesn’t care very much for the Netnews channels so perhaps he isn’t watching now, though I doubt that. That was part of the reward I suppose if you wish to call it that. My father never discovered what was going on. That is why I did what I did to begin with. It just so happens it led me to Androcles and I finally found my Anome. The man I was fated to be with. And now that we have come together we have already found one of three others that we are meant for as well.”

Andro looked at Sadi with wide eyes. “Three?” He gasped.

“Princess... are you saying... are you saying you and Prince Androcles... that you...?”

Sadi nodded. “Fate and destiny has shaped our path for us, mine and Andro’s. I firmly believe that. And that path will bring us to those who are meant to walk that path with us. We can feel them even now within Mindvoice. We have found one already... we will find the other two as well. Eventually.” She said with a smile.

“So Prince Androcles has taken another mate?” A reporter blurted. “Who? Where?”

Deia stepped forward now. “You have had your questions answered.” She spoke evenly. “I believe it’s time we left Androcles and Sadi alone to finish their vacation. Since the events of that night are now public record, I will consult with my staff and I will make available to you everything that is still not classified in some manner. We...”

Vorilas turned to his aide. “Lenna, contact Admiral O’Connor’s office. There will be many questions coming our way and I want to discuss with him what I should say.”

The young woman looked at him. “You... Governor... you never knew this? Truly?” She asked.

Vorilas shook his head. “I knew she was on the island, but not for the reasons she has said. I never knew any of that.” His face turned hard. “Ask Admiral O’Connor if he knows where that back stabbing bitch of a wolf ex-mate of mine is Lenna. And those foul excuses for sons she bore me. Where are they being held?”

“Why?” Lenna asked.

“Because if they have not been charged with rape... I will bring the charges against them myself and see to it they are executed for what they have done to my daughter.” Vorilas snarled.

Lenna nodded and moved quickly for the door where she stopped and turned back around to look at him. “Prince Androcles has loved her since he was eight months old Governor.” She said softly. “That... that is beyond romantic sir, that is simply... it’s dream like.”

Vorilas nodded. “Yes it is.” He said softly. “Yes it is. Hurry along now... before the calls begin to start coming in. And bring in some extra personnel to assist you if needed. I have a feeling this day has just gotten much longer for us Lenna. Cancel whatever appointments I may have had for this evening and tomorrow as well.”

Lenna nodded. “Yes Governor. It may have gotten longer for us sir... but I for one look forward to it.”

SPARTA

Deia stepped forward now. “You have had your questions answered.” She spoke evenly. “I believe it’s time we left Androcles and Sadi alone to finish their vacation. Since the events of that night are now public record, I will consult with my staff and I will make available to you everything that is still not classified in some manner.”

Andro pulled Sadi back towards Elynth and looked at her. [What is this KertaGai?] He asked. [What do you mean two others? I don’t want more than you and Carisia!]

Sadi smiled and pressed her body up against his running her fingers along his jaw line. [You have felt it just as Carisia and I have felt it Andro. Don’t deny it. Two other minds wrapped within our three. Both of them powerful but one stronger than the other... like a great distance is between us.]

Andro nodded quickly. [Yes I have felt it as well... that does not mean I will act on it KertaGai.]

[Carisia and I have surrendered ourselves to destiny and whatever that may bring to us Andro. We have done that willingly and without doubt or question. We have embraced it and look forward to what it brings to us. It has brought us you and it has brought us each other. It will also bring two more who will share our lives just as intensely as we do now.] Sadi spoke softly. [You are an Alpha wolf and like your father you will draw strong women to you. I know this. So does Carisia. Neither of us is afraid of that Andro. You have already felt one in our thoughts as we make love together. Sharing our thoughts openly, even as we share with her.]

[You are my Anome Sadi! Nothin and no one will ever change that fact!] Andro spoke pulling her even closer to him. [It is you I can not live without.]

Sadi nodded. [Yes I am. And that fact makes me sing every day. But like your mother I know that others will love you and I will love them as well. I’m comfortable enough with myself to know that no matter what happens I will always have the part of you that no one else will.]

They both turned as For’mya came up to them and they opened their heavily shielded Mindvoice connection to include her.

[Deia will deal with them.] For’mya spoke. [We need to leave and stop being targets for more questions. We have certainly made this day eventful don’t you think?]

[For’mya... better that we faced it now.] Sadi spoke.

[Oh I agree. So does Deia. What is of some concern is how this elven reporter got the information to begin with.] For’mya said calmly. [And we must keep the information in regards to Gorgo secret as well for now. No one knows the one on the island with us was a clone. That is information that is buried deep and needs to remain there.]

Sadi nodded. [I will tell no one.]

[Good. Now perhaps you can tell me about this other woman?] For’mya said. [This is not something that any of us knew Andro.]

Andro shook his head. [In due time mother.] He spoke. [We do not... we do not wish for her to become overwhelmed by everything.]

For’mya gazed into his eyes for a long moment and then looked at Sadi for an equally long period of time. [Why do I get the feeling you aren’t telling me for another reason?] She asked with a grin.

[This is Aikiro’s doing.] Andro spoke changing the subject. [Only they would think to do something like this in an effort to damage our family. And they would know about the clone of grandmother.]

For’mya nodded. [I agree. But I don’t think it will turn out as they had hoped. And if they release the intelligence about Gorgo to this reporter we can easily squash it and say they are simply coming up with fairytales. And Aikiro would not want it known that Veldruk held Gorgo for nearly fifteen years. As adored as Gorgo is... no matter what she said... Spartans young and old would begin plotting to remove the vampire witch.]

[Are you so sure mother?] Andro asked. [There are those who don’t like father or our family.]

[No doubt.] For'mya said with a nod. [However their voices are small and they dislike us for the very reasons that we are so well thought of.]

[We will leave in the morning.] Andro spoke looking over to where Deia was talking with the reporters, some of them having departed already to file their own stories. [Better to be gone and let this die quickly on its own. I will tell the others to begin making frequent trips back here so the Kavalians do not suspect anything is going on.]

[Lisisa is still meeting with Karun?] For'mya asked.

Andro nodded. [She said it went very well and she was surprised at him and his posture. They are meeting again in Eden City in eight hours.]

For'mya nodded. [By then it will be common knowledge what has happened here.] She said. [And it will only help our cause when it is discovered that Lisisa has reached out to Karun. It will show she is not being as difficult as the Kavalians want everyone to believe she is.]

[What does it matter?] Andro spoke. [The Galactic Court has ruled.]

[Yes... but I would be very surprised if the Kavalians let it slide and never brought it up again.]

For'mya spoke. [This was all part of something larger. Dysea felt it... I felt it and your father is certain of it.]

Andro shook his head. [Plans within plans.] He stated. [I truly hate these games people think they must play. Why can no one just leave us alone in peace and not involve us in their schemes and plots.]

[Your mothers, your father and I have asked that question many times through the years Andro.]

For'mya spoke. [We have yet to find an answer. Go on! You were going to Gallais's Retreat. I will tell Resumar you inquired of him and Deia and I need to meet with Panos and Tarifa to finalize the terms of this supposed Cease Fire with the Coven. We must maintain the illusion of what we are doing.]

[Now that they have an embassy... the Kavalians will be out among the streets more. Trying to gather intelligence and cause trouble with the High Coven no doubt.] Andro spoke. [Are they being watched?]

For'mya nodded. [Already taken care of.] She stated reaching up to kiss his cheek. [Now the two of you go.]

Andro met her gaze for several more moments before nodding his head. He turned and hoisted Sadi into the saddle on Elynth's back and then bounced up himself as Elynth came to her feet. Both of them pulled on their helmets, their crested plumes blowing slightly in the mild breeze. For'mya noticed the golden blond of Sadi's hair in the plume. Unlike his father, who wore a plume of the hair color of all his queens and his own, Andro did not. Yet now For'mya saw the raven black section of hair within the plume, combined with Sadi's. Her mind raced with the possibilities of who her son's new mate was.

The Spirit of Grandfather guide you mother. Andro spoke.

And you son.

Be safe my sister. Elynth spoke nudging Aurith with her snout.

Give my greetings to our brothers and sisters. Aurith answered.

Call us if you need anything For'mya. Sadi spoke as Andro's arms snaked around her waist.

For'mya nodded. I will. Have fun.

"Elynth go!" Andro barked.

QUEEN DYSEA'S STRIKER ENROUTE BACK TO APO PRIME

"...message from Arram." Normya spoke coming up to the map chart in the center of the DT. "Not much else in the way of intelligence, but it does firm up some of what we already knew."

Dysea looked at the pad, reading quickly and nodding her head before passing the pad to Esther who stood next to her. Dysea watched as Normya stepped away from her and moved to where Tir'ut was bent over the map chart studying a diagram of a building with Lexi. Dysea watched as Normya brushed up against him intentionally and Tir'ut looked up and without question made more room for her next to him.

"If your son is correct..." Esther said looking up from the pad. "Then it appears making the announcement that the crash was an accident has paid off. No one appears to be missing from work shifts and such."

“That also tells me they are comfortable enough to believe in their own security.” Dysea said turning her head back to what Tir’ut and Lexi were doing. “Lexi... what is this?”

“A blueprint of the main hanger where the Chief Engineer works.” Lexi spoke. “Tir’ut and I were working out how best to enter and exit without being seen.”

“A difficult task considering how busy it is.” Dysea spoke.

Tir’ut nodded and looked at her. “Not as much as you might think Lady Dysea.” He said. “This man has his own office.”

Dysea leaned closer. “Yes.”

“Your brother’s information is accurate il kal'daka darthirii?” Tir’ut asked turning his head to look at Normya next to him.

Normya nodded. “Yes. Arrarn may seem carefree and unobservant when you first meet him, but he is very thorough.”

Tir’ut nodded and turned back to the diagram. “Then we will take him when he departs his office to return to his home.” Tir’ut’s dark eyes drifted over the blueprint and map again searching the new style of map trying to find what he wanted. Normya leaned under his arm and stabbed the board with her finger, not caring in the least that her firm, full breasts pressed hard against his side. Dysea also noticed that this did not seem to faze Tir’ut, as intent as he was on finding who was after her daughter.

“Here.” Normya spoke.

Tir’ut nodded. “Yes... here. The junction of this main promenade and alley near his home. It is quiet and remote, without much foot traffic. With your Iriral flying high and using her enhanced vision to insure he is not being watched, my mother and I can use the shadows to take him easily.”

Dysea looked at Tir’ut surprise in her emerald eyes even as Iriral moved forward from the pen in the rear of the STRIKER DT.

“How... how do you know of a dragon’s enhanced vision Tir’ut?” Dysea asked gently.

Yes... I would like to know this as well. Iriral said as she came up behind Dysea. They had agreed before leaving to not shield their conversations within Mindvoice since Tir’ut and Esther could converse on a Tier Six level easily, which had stunned Dysea and Iriral at first. They knew vampires had this ability, but never had they known or heard of an Immortal who could use Mindvoice with such skill and on such a level as Tir’ut. This is not something that would be known to someone who is not a rider.

Tir’ut looked at Dysea for a long moment. “I... I don’t know.” He answered softly. “It... it seemed like... I think I read about it somewhere. There were many brochures floating through The Wilds of your dragon mountain on Elear. Perhaps in one of those.”

Dysea nodded. “Yes probably.”

Tir’ut turned back to the board. “My mother and I take him and bring him to wherever you have decided we will set up. He is not a large man and I can carry him easily.”

Esther nodded quickly. “I will dose him with Lilpan. He will drop like a limp noodle from a single dart.”

“This will not harm him permanently?” Lexi asked.

Esther shook her head. “It’s a mild nerve agent really.” She answered. “He will retain all conscious awareness, his brain will function and he will not lose the ability to breathe but he will be unable to move his limbs for at least three hours. After that... the use of his limbs will return to him over time.”

Tir’ut looked at Dysea. “Why do you not wish to use your famed Drow Scouts Lady Dysea?” He asked.

Dysea shook her head. “There is only a small detachment on Apo Prime. Part of Nauta Melme’s 1st Spartan Attack Division. We can not request their use without him finding out about it.”

Normya smiled. “It wouldn’t do to have my father’s Spartan Attack Division running all over Apo Prime knocking heads.” She said looking at Tir’ut with bright emerald eyes.

Tir’ut smiled as well, exposing the tips of his fangs. “No... that would not be conducive to us remaining covert.”

“Dysea... you realize this Chief Engineer may only be a middle man?” Lexi spoke. “A go between or someone at the very bottom of whatever chain we are about to begin climbing.”

Dysea nodded her head. “That is a possibility yes... but given his position and the access to information and ships that he has, I’m going to take a guess and say he is rather high on whatever list we find ourselves with.”

“I agree.” Esther spoke now. “Normya... you are certain he is the only one who would approve whatever repairs were needed on your TYPE II?”

Normya nodded. “As Chief Engineer he is required to inspect every ship before he signs off on the report of whoever did the work. It is his only job. He is either involved in what happen... or he knows who is. One of the inspection points is the main LSD Drive Coil. He has to visually inspect it.”

“Is it possible he just forgot... or chose not to? Perhaps he was in a hurry to get home?” Esther asked.

Lexi shook her head. “Not with a ship being flown by a member of the Royal Family.” She spoke. “And Arrarn’s information says he is not mated and has no children. Why would he be rushing home?”

“Would this man have had access to the flight plan you would have filed il kal'daka darthirii?” Tir’ut asked.

Normya nodded. “Yes.”

“Then I wish to talk to him.” Tir’ut spoke in a low menacing voice.

Dysea nodded. “Yes... so do I.” She spoke. “Normya... how long?”

“Nineteen hours through Bontawillian space. Another four to Gate Two Three, two jumps within the corridor and then six hours to Apo Prime.” She replied immediately.

“Just over a day.” Dysea spoke with a nod. “I suggest we all get some rest. We will need to be on our toes when we enter Union space.”

Esther and Tir’ut looked at her. “Why?” Esther asked.

Dysea looked at her. “Martin Leonidas is many things Esther... stupid is not one of them I assure you. We may have said Normya’s Gate Strike was an accident to the Netnews people, but I guarantee you that the BIP ships are on high alert and will stop anyone coming across the border no matter what IFF we are using.”

“BIP ships?” Tir’ut asked.

Normya looked at him. “Border Interdiction Patrols. Usually a Strike Wing built around a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser. Very fast, very mobile and very possessive of our border.” She explained.

“The Union border is huge.” Tir’ut said. “What are the chances we will come across one of these BIPs?”

Normya looked at her mother and then back to Tir’ut. “Probably better than half.” She answered.

“There are that many of them?” Esther asked with wide eyes.

“Let’s just say that Martin Leonidas is possessive of our border as well.” Dysea answered with a grin. “With the IFF codes Andro has given us, we will not be questioned as much. Being in a STRIKER helps as well. Once we are past the Border Defense Zone we should be ok.”

“Border Defense Zone?” Esther asked.

Normya nodded. “Minefields. Automated Defense Platforms. It’s a pretty nasty area all around. Not someplace you would want to be stranded I’ll tell you.”

“No... I would imagine not.” Esther said softly.

“Esther... you may take my quarters.” Dysea spoke. “Lexi will stay in the pilot’s cabin. Tir’ut you...”

“One of these benches is fine Lady Dysea.” Tir’ut said quickly. “I am used to much harsher standards. And I wish to study these maps more and acquaint myself with the intricacies of them. They are far more detailed than anything we have had in our settlement and I do not want to take a wrong turn somewhere.”

Dysea nodded. “Normya and I will stay with Iriral in the pen in the rear.” She said. “It is not something we haven’t done before. I suggest we get as much rest as possible.” She looked at all of them. “Events will begin to happen very quickly once we arrive on Apo Prime. We need to be ready to act instantly.”

“I’m going to help Tir’ut Amille.” Normya said quickly. “It’s easier to learn how to read these maps from someone who already can.”

Dysea met her daughter’s eyes and nodded her head slowly. “Very well. Do not forget to sleep. Either of you.”

Esther watched Dysea as she turned and headed to the rear of the STRIKER. She turned back to see Normya move even closer to her son, their heads close together as she began to explain more of the maps. She smiled inwardly to herself. Normya Leonidas was growing more attracted to her son as the hours passed. Whether it was because he had saved her life and sworn a Blood Oath to protect her or not, she had quickly gotten over her inbred mistrust and fear of Immortals and it appeared she found her son just as handsome as he found her beautiful. Esther knew Dysea was having a hard time with that, for she saw the same signs as Esther did. She would speak with her after getting some much needed sleep. Esther did not notice Dysea turn back around from the pen where she and Iriral had stopped.

[Sister... he did not read about our vision in a brochure.] Iriral spoke.

Dysea shook her head. [No he did not.]

[Dysea... only a rider would know these things. Our enhanced vision is not something commonly spoke of.] Iriral began. [He knows this, yet he is not bonded with any dragon.]

[He certainly has the Mindvoice ability for that.] Dysea said. [He is as strong as any Bonded Pair I have felt within the Union Iriral. Perhaps more so than most.]

[We would have sensed a dragon on Kranek if one were present.] Iriral spoke. [They would not know how to hide their presence from the two of us combined. I sensed none.]

Dysea nodded. [Nor did I.]

[Then how?]

[We have never been able to fully grasp much of how Mindvoice works Iriral.] Dysea said softly. [Even Helen says there is so much she can not explain. Andro and Elynth bonding while he was still in Aricia's womb? Zarah's ability to draw from Mindvoice users all around her? There are things we just can not explain. Immortals have always had the powerful latent ability to shield. Esther studied under Aikiro for over near two centuries. While she does not use it as we do, in a physical manifestation, her blood must be very pure to be as strong as she is. Perhaps when her blood and Cha'talla's blood combined in Tir'ut it somehow made him even stronger than both of them in that regard.]

Iriral nodded her massive head. [Yes... but it still does not explain how he knows about our vision.]

Dysea looked at her. [There is much that we can't explain about what has happened in the last few weeks sister.] She spoke turning back as she heard Normya's laugh and she saw her daughter pressed so very close to Tir'ut, her emerald eyes brilliant in the light of the DT and Tir'ut gazing at her intently, a small smile on his own face. [There is also much I am coming to accept... and that is what frightens me.]

OMEN ONE

ULU EIRANS TRYN

KAVALIAN SPACE

.05 LIGHT YEARS FROM UIRMEIK

Tinnuar looked up when the door to his small Ready Room slid open and Perein walked in, his face buried in the data pad. Perein was the only one among the crew who could get away with this. The two men had served together for nearly fifty years and were as close as any two brothers could be.

"Perein?" Tinnuar asked as he got up and moved to the coffee dispenser.

"We're holding station sir." Perein reported as the door closed. "Continuing to scan."

"I'm assuming you didn't come in here to tell me that old friend." Tinnuar spoke as he turned back to his small desk. "Spit it out man!"

Perein shook his head. "It's odd Tinnuar." He said.

"When has anything we have ever done not been odd?" He answered as he settled back into his chair.

"Well... that is true." Perein answered. "I want to show you something. Run it by you and see if it's odd to you."

Tinnuar nodded. "I was becoming bored with fitness reports anyway." He said sitting back in his chair as Perein moved to the wall monitor in his ready room. He plugged the data pad in and played with the side panel some, bringing up several sensor scans from the YA9 Array.

"This is the initial scan when we arrived in system." Perein said. The picture was on the planet's northern and western continents. Tinnuar could see the marked symbols of what were Kavalian troop encampments too numerous to count. Hundreds of small red dots on the two continents. The entire northern and western parts of the planet were covered in these red dots. "Now this is a graph showing YA9 pulses every fifteen minutes." Perein changed the view and the image began to change every few seconds.

Tinnuar got up from his chair and moved closer to the monitor with his coffee in hand while his eyes stayed focused on the monitor. “The contacts are cycling on the last frame. Fading in and out.” He spoke finally.

Perein nodded. “Yes sir.”

“How often?”

“We thought it was our instruments at first, or something within the atmosphere causing an echo to bounce, but it’s not.” Perein spoke confidently. “It’s a series of low power Avidyne generator Nodes on the surface. Doubtful the Kavalians even know they are there. We’ve detected thirty seven of them scattered all over the western and northern continents.”

“Avidyne generators?” Tinnuar asked. “Those are High Coven power node sources. Used to reflect solar radiation. What are they doing here?” Tinnuar asked.

Perein nodded. “Reflect being the key word here Tinnuar. I had Ops run a data search trying to come up with something that corresponds with the Avidyne Node capability.”

“And?”

“If you connect a Multisynaptic Polarity Baffle to the Avidyne Node... you can use it to reflect whatever is in the immediate area.” Perein answered.

“By reflect... you mean make it appear larger than it actually is?” Tinnuar asked.

Perein nodded his head. “They can be released from orbit. A shrouded ship goes over the continent in a low synchronous orbit and you could pump these things out all day and no one would ever know they are there. They burrow into the ground until only six millimeters extends outward.” He explained. “Drop one or two of these inside a perimeter that has, say a hundred troops in it, and suddenly you have a thousand troops showing up on normal sensors.”

“And inside the perimeter of say a thousand troops?” Tinnuar asked.

Perein nodded. “Instant army. Very big... very imposing... at least from preliminary sensor scans that is how they would show. Kavalian sensors aren’t as sensitive as Union or Coven sensors. Like I said... I doubt they even know that the nodes are there, or what they are doing.”

Tinnuar looked at him. “So what are we looking at Perein? Can you filter out the reflection of the Avidyne node and get an accurate count?”

Perein nodded. “Already did.” He said. “It’s still a lot more than we want sitting on our border... but it’s only half of what the Coven Intelligence told us. Still putting all the figures together... but it looks like roughly eight and a half million ground troops on the high end. Ship count is unchanged... and that is now two thousand three hundred and nine.”

“Why give us false intelligence?” Tinnuar asked softly. “That doesn’t make any sense Perein. Why go to all the trouble of planting these nodes to make it appear the KFI forces are larger than they are?”

“Almost nine million ground troops is nothing to sneeze at Tinnuar. And when has anything the High Coven did make any sense Tinnuar?” Perein said using his friend’s own analogy from earlier.

Tinnuar nodded. “True... but the Empress had to have known the King would want confirmation of what she gave us. She had to have known that he would get it somehow. Why risk our continued assistance with training their dragons when we found this? The King will be incensed that she has lied to us again.” Tinnuar turned as the chime on his desk sounded. He stepped over to the smooth surface and pressed the pad. “Tinnuar.”

“Captain... you should... sir... you should come to my station.” The sensor operator’s voice echoed gently.

“What is it Lieutenant?”

“Sir... you should really come to my station.” She repeated.

Tinnuar looked at Perein with puzzled eyes and saw him shrug. “Stand by... I’m on my way.”

They exited Tinnuar’s Ready Room, immediately turned right and moved the ten meters to the entrance to the bridge and entered. Tinnuar moved across the bridge to where the young woman sat.

“What do you have?” He asked.

The female Lieutenant shook her head. “It’s very strange sir.” She spoke. “I’ve been scanning the surface of Ritaah for the last thirteen hours on that unknown power source. I’m alternating between Graviton Emulator Pulses, Spectral Phase Scans and anything else I can think of. All I’m picking up is the six TriCobal power sources. Definitely settlements of some sort. There is... whoever it is they are using Magnetospheric Deflectors to bounce their signal off the magnetic core of the planet. The interference isn't allowing me to penetrate the fields that are being generated."

"So what is the problem?" Tinnuar asked.

"The unknown source didn't show up on any of the normal sensor sweeps Captain. None of them. It should have at least shown up on the Polarized Magnetic Induction scan... but nothing. I was still getting that spike of the CFL of four point six, so I re-aligned the Phased Quantum Inducers." She spoke.

Tinnuar looked at her. "The PQIs? Why?"

"It wasn't showing up on anything Captain." She answered. She adjusted her controls. "Something Doctor Randall said during our initial training came back to me then and I executed the re-alignment."

"Zaala Randall?" Perein asked.

"Yes sir. She helped to design most of the systems we use." The Lieutenant spoke. "She's an anse genius if you ask me. This is what I got sir."

The small monitor changed views and several multicolored lines came up, slowly drifting across the screen like waves.

"Nubou nio!" Tinnuar gasped.

"Yes sir! That is what I said." The Lieutenant spoke.

Perein leaned closer. "Ok... help me out here." He said. "I'm not exactly a scholar in the field of Quantum Mechanics Lieutenant."

The Lieutenant touched the screen. "This is a Phased Quantum Based power signature Commander. An intact PQB... complete with Antilepton Harmonic Inducers and a Bio-Neuro Mechanical Matrix. "

Perein stood back up. "Phased Quantum Based?" He spoke. "I thought our OMEN ships were the only ships in the universe that used that?"

Tinnuar looked at him. "There is one other." He said softly. He put his hand on the young woman's shoulder. "Size?"

"If the readings are accurate seven point one kilometers." She answered. "Buried under a hundred and thirteen meters of lava rock it looks like. Probably an old volcano of some sort."

"Compress everything you have into a single data stream Lieutenant. You have sixteen minutes to complete whatever sensor sweeps you have in progress." Tinnuar said.

"Yes sir!"

Perein looked at him. "Captain?"

"Drop two Black Sun Probes into synchronous orbit of Ritaah Perein." Tinnuar told him. "Have them programmed to send back encrypted sweeps of their onboard sensor arrays every twelve hours. Full masking and encryption. Helm! Seventeen minutes... then come about to course three four nine six point three! Go to full power on the sublights and plot the fastest LSD Operational Course to return to Union space! Once you have your plot, engage the LSD Drive!"

"Helm acknowledges Captain!"

"Captain?" Perein spoke.

"Perein... you always wanted to find a prize worth writing home about right?" Tinnuar asked.

Perein nodded. "I'm... I'm not so sure right now."

Tinnuar nodded with a smile. "There is only one other ship in the universe with a Phased Quantum Based power source Perein. The same type of ship that most of our systems are based on."

Perein's eyes grew wider. "Sibfla Captain! Tell me you are joking?"

Tinnuar shook his head slowly. "I wish I was. We just discovered another Mindvoice ship buried in that mountain Perein and the Kavalians don't even know they are sitting on top of it."

"Nubou nio!" Perein gasped repeating Tinnuar's phrase.

"The King needs to know this like yesterday. I don't want any interruption in the LSD Drive core or computer. Tell the Chief we're going to be pushing her harder than we ever have before and we need to break every speed record there is."

Perein nodded. "Understood sir!" He spun around and headed for engineering.

Tinnuar turned back and looked at the Lieutenant. His eyes swept across the bridge before he tapped her shoulder once more and she looked up at him. "You confirmed your data Needa?" He asked.

Needa nodded quickly. “Three times Captain. There’s no doubt sir. I could increase the power, but our PQBs are so similar sir, we may activate something on that ship that will cause it to become detectable by sensors not as advanced as ours.”

Tinnuar shook his head. “No! We don’t want to do that. You are sure the Kavalians can’t detect it Needa?” He asked softly and calling her by her first name. “It wouldn’t do for them to discover this ship. Our lives would become a whole lot more difficult if they did.”

The Lieutenant shook her head knowing when he used her first name it was important and very serious. “Impossible Captain.” She replied instantly. “The best sensors they have are on their GREATSOUL Dreadnoughts sir. On a par with our LEONIDAS I- Class... but not the LEONIDAS IIs, and no where near as sophisticated as what we have on board right now. Even if they did detect it, they wouldn’t know what the hell it was, and given their propensity for discarding something they can’t use to build weapons, if they don’t know what it is they’ll ignore it completely. They’ve also had ships in this sector for the last ten years if the scans are accurate sir.”

“Drop a Class Four Masker anyway.” Tinnuar said. “Let’s keep it that way.” He shook his head as he moved to his command chair eight steps away. “Just what we did not need to find. Another Mindvoice ship. So much for a simple deep intelligence gathering mission. I knew something was wrong with this mission.”

HADARIA ROYAL LANDING PAD

Buonau stood with her daughter and Okein on the edge of the landing pad east of the Hadarian Royal Palace. Half a dozen Hadarian Militia stood behind her casually, their older side arms appearing as if they hadn’t been pulled from their holsters in years.

The Hadarian Militia was broken into two distinct and different groups; those who acted as peacekeepers in the many cities and as the last line of defense, and those who served only the Elders. These men and women were usually former Mage Warriors chosen by the older Elders to serve them as Elder Guards. They were referred to as the Elder Sentinels by many of the younger generations, mainly for their decided lack of personality and complete blind faith in the Elders and what they preached.

Since Anja had taken her father’s place on the throne, her following and standing among the millions of younger Hadarian Healers had grown by leaps and bounds. When Sivana had joined her in helping to rule Hadaria and bring the planet out of what many called the Blind Times, these millions of younger Hadarians had gleefully thrown their full support behind her. They welcomed the opportunity to serve in the fleet and among the ground forces of those they were chosen to treat. They welcomed the opportunity to meet the many different species and form lasting friendships and even many relationships with those off their world. While not overly oppressive in an outward sense, the younger Hadarians found the ancient teachings of the Hadarian Elders too anchored in the past and almost regressive in many ways. They happily went on to adopt their Queen’s approach of willingly heading into the unknown and discovering new and wonderful things. Combined with the fact that Anja and Princess Sivana, with the backing of the Divine One Eurin and the Prefect of Hadaria had all but pushed the Elders out of any true political decision making, it only served to make the Elders angry and very resentful towards her. They were appalled that she lived the life she did, many times in the past making spiteful comments in regards to her sharing a bed with four other women as well as the king. At times they openly criticized how she had raised Eliani, and was now raising Retta and Calyb. They were critical of how all of them were raised in an almost communal situation, calling five different females mother, and not getting the proper education in Hadarian culture that they felt was needed for those of Royal blood.

Okein leaned close to Buonau. “We did not plan for the King to return with her.” He spoke softly.

“It doesn’t matter.” Buonau answered looking over to where Eurin stood with Sivana and Zaniai on the far side of the pad. “Whether he sees our information from Sparta, or he sees it here will change nothing. He will be enraged and leave Hadaria within hours.”

“Are you so sure?” Okein asked. “He is said to be completely devoted to all of them.”

Buonau looked at him. “He is a man and a Lycavorian. They are all pigs. And our plan will show just how devoted he is to his many Queens. Do not worry Okein... I have thought of everything.”

“I just hope Rinard’s information doesn’t sink us before we accomplish our goals.” Okein spoke.

“Rinard is just as much a fool as Martin Leonidas. He thinks with his tool. All of them are brutes.” Buonau said. “When I approached him with our offer he jumped at the opportunity saying he had this information. You have seen it yourself. How much more damning could it be?”

“I know... I do not want to trust him so much that it endangers our own plans.” Okein spoke. “We’ve worked too long to achieve this.”

“And in a few more days we will have what we have sought.” Buonau said. Her head turned as she saw Umbra approaching with a Senior Mage Warrior from the palace. She marched right up to Buonau as if she belonged there. Buonau shook her head slowly knowing Umbra was only another pawn in their plan.

“The palace Senior Mage Warrior has told me they departed their ship thirty minutes ago.” Umbra spoke. “They should have been here by now.”

Buonau looked at the Mage Warrior. “Where are they?” She demanded sternly.

The young woman gave her a blank stare and an expression that said everything she thought about the senior Hadarian Elder. “I do not question the King and Queen.” She replied. “They do this often and will arrive when they arrive.”

“They left the SPIRIT thirty minutes ago!” Buonau snapped.

The young woman nodded her head, disinterested in the Elder’s attitude. “Yes... and most likely they are flying over the city on Torma and Miath to unwind from the trip here. They do this often. They may go directly to the palace. Who knows?”

Buonau’s eyes narrowed. “They were told to come here!” She barked. “I specifically directed the officer on the SPIRIT to tell them that! And to come here on their ship and leave their beasts in orbit!”

The Mage Warrior looked at her. “Oh.” She said casually. “Perhaps they didn’t get the message Elder Buonau. Or they chose to disregard it.” Her eyes lifted and Buonau followed her gaze to see two large specs in the blue sky and two smaller ones close to the larger ones.

The forms of Torma and Miath quickly took shape as they barreled over the landscape as if they were racing. The smaller dark specs were keeping up, barely. As the four dragons flew over the top of the landing pad, Buonau saw the smaller figures of two children in the saddle with Martin, and one in the saddle with Anja. Torma and Miath trumpeted out their arrival as they flared their wings and settled lightly to the landing pad to the excited cries of children.

“It appears they chose to disregard your directive Elder Buonau.” The Mage Warrior spoke as she began walking towards where the two dragons had settled completely to the ground.

Buonau glared at her back as Umbra and Duewa moved closer to her. “Oh I am so going to enjoy watching her fall.” She hissed softly watching as Sivana, Eurin and Zaniai moved up to where Martin was lifting Retta and Calyb from the saddle.

“Mother... perhaps bringing the Elder Guard to take custody of the children with the King here was unwise.” Duewa spoke her blue eyes bright in the sunlight.

“Nonsense!” Buonau snapped. “He will not resist the will of the Hadarian Elder Council or the Arch Ministry. Let’s get this over with. I want to spend as little time in his company as I have too.”

“I agree.” Umbra spoke.

They began walking towards the group.

“...did you see Mama?” Siara exclaimed as Sivana squatted on the tarmac and hugged her daughter tightly.

“Yes I did.” Sivana said with a smile. “Did you have fun with Aunt Anja and Uncle Martin?”

“They gave me candy.” Siara said shyly. “And I got to ride Miath a lot!”

Sivana laughed and kissed her cheek as she scampered over to where Retta and Calyb were stroking Mara and Endeem’s scales. While their bond with both Torma and Isheeni’s children was growing stronger by the day, they had only just begun to evolve. Mara and Endeem were now over three meters tall and nearing a thousand pounds. Sivana turned as Martin and Anja came up and she embraced her sister tightly.

“Anja.” Sivana said softly.

“We only gave her candy once.” Anja said with a smile.

Sivana laughed as she released Anja and embraced Martin tightly. "She does love her candy." She spoke. "I hope she wasn't any trouble."

Anja shook her head as she took Martin's hand in hers tightly and leaned up against him. "No... big boy here let her spend the days with Helen and the others and Gorgo spoiled her terribly."

Sivana looked at her sister as she pressed close to Martin, his arm snaking around her waist and holding her tight. Anja's jade green eyes were brighter than normal and she looked radiant. She watched as Eurin kissed their cheeks in greeting.

"It is good to see both of you." Eurin spoke gently. "I just wish it was for better reasons. Zaniai and I tried to divert this situation before it came to this but we were unsuccessful."

Zaniai bowed his head to them both. "I apologize for that." He stated.

Martin shook his head. "I needed to get off Earth anyway." He stated. "One more issue with Aikiro and I would have ended up punching her ticket myself."

Eurin chuckled and looked at Zaniai who had a confused look on his face. "I will explain later Zaniai." She said with a smile.

Anja shrugged. "We just arrived and I don't want to worry about that right now." She said.

Sivana stared at her twin sister for a long moment and smiled. "Anja... are you pregnant again?" Sivana asked.

Anja met her eyes. "What? No!" She exclaimed. "Why would you ask that?"

"You just look very happy." Sivana told her taking her hand.

Anja laughed and shook her head. "Martin made me an offer I couldn't refuse." She said looking up at him. "We had a very relaxing trip here, and I got pampered the whole way."

Martin grinned. "That's not exactly hard to do?" He spoke. "You are easy to please."

Anja's eyes grew wide. "Why you... I'll remember you said that!"

Sivana grinned knowingly. "We have..."

"King Leonidas!" Buonau's voice carried to them cutting Sivana's words off in mid sentence. They turned and watched her walk up with the others in tow.

"Elder Buonau." Martin spoke. "How wonderful to see you."

Anja was barely able to contain her laughter at the tone of Martin's voice, and it went completely over Buonau's head.

"King Leonidas... I specifically told your officer that I wanted you to come down on your ship and leave your... your beasts in orbit." Buonau told him sternly. "Did you not receive this directive?"

Martin nodded. "No... we got it." He replied. "I ignored it Elder Buonau in case you didn't notice."

"May I ask why?" She snapped.

Martin shrugged. "It seemed like a good idea." He replied his eyes going to the six Hadarian Militia behind her.

Buonau looked at Anja. "Majesty."

Anja nodded. "Elder Buonau... always a pleasure to see you."

"I have been authorized by the Arch Ministry to tell you that we will convene a special session for the morning." Buonau spoke. "At that time evidence will be presented to corroborate the charges against you."

"I can hardly wait." Anja spoke.

"My Hadarian Militia Detachment will take custody of Retta and Calyb now." Buonau continued. "Their beasts will remain with you and they will be staying with Umbra until this issue is decided." She turned to the Hadarian Commander. "You may proceed Commander."

"As you order Elder Buonau." The man nodded and began to move forward with his men towards where Retta and Calyb were with Mara and Endem.

"If you value your lives I would stop where you are." Martin spoke in a low voice.

The Militia Commander did so and looked at Martin with hard eyes. "We have our orders King Leonidas. The Elders have spoken."

Martin shook his head slowly. "Buonau... let me be very clear on something right now." He spoke turning to look at her. "If they take another step towards our children, you will have six deaths to explain to the Arch Ministry and six families."

Buonau held up her hand quickly stopping the men and turned to glare at him. "The Elder Council has ordered this!" She barked. "You must comply with our directives concerning the heirs to the Hadarian throne. You are not above the law King Leonidas." She spoke the words with a great deal of sarcasm.

"Buonau you upae!" Anja snarled. "Retta and Calyb are our children and you have no authority to do shit! And neither does the Elder Council!"

"We have decreed your children will be placed in an environment conducive to their growth and development. An environment that provides stability and safety and love with your Aunt." Buonau barked right back. "The charges against you are very serious Queen Anja... and it is the Elder Council's opinion that leaving Retta and Calyb in your charge is not healthy."

"Not healthy?" Anja quipped at her, her fingers digging into Martin's palm almost painfully now. "What a nubous joke!"

"Retta and Calyb are our children Buonau." Martin said. "And you will not take them anywhere. Not if you know what is good for you."

"It is the Elder Council's decision as a whole." Buonau stated. "It is for their own well bring of course."

Eurin stepped forward. "Retta and Calyb are children of the King and Queen of the Lycavorian Union Buonau. That takes precedence over their roles as heirs to the Hadarian throne and you know that. You can not remove them from their parents."

"Your attitude and actions right now only give credibility to our fears Anja." Umbra spoke now. "Why do you fight this? We only think of Retta and Calyb!"

Anja looked at her and began to speak but Sivana beat her to it. "You stay out of this Aunt Umbra!" She snarled. "You are part of the problem! You want to turn them into the religious automations that you have turned your own children into."

"I am only looking out for the welfare of Retta and Calyb, as well as Siara. She is also involved in this as well." Umbra declared. "Especially now."

"Now?" Martin asked.

Buonau looked at him. "You haven't spoken to Eliani I take it?" She said.

"Unlike you it seems Elder Buonau we don't feel the need to speak with our children every day." Martin said. "They have duties all their own that take up much of their time, and they are all adults."

"Apparently not enough of their time." She announced spitefully. "Did you think we would not find out?"

"What does that mean?" Anja spat. "Find out what?"

"It has been all over the Netnews for the last few hours." Eurin spoke now. "The Galactic Court ruled in favor of Part Two of the Kavalian Petition considering Lisisa. They have been given permission to search the places where Lisisa may have stayed recently before becoming Denali's mate. This includes the homes of her brothers and sisters."

Martin nodded. "Yes... we know that. It is a concession that we agreed too with the rest of our family. So?"

"Androcles and Sadi refused to allow this and will not abide by the Galactic Court's ruling, and neither will Denali." Eurin said. "It caused quite the spectacle."

Martin grinned and shook his head. "I haven't been able to control that boy since he was sixteen. And Deni's becoming just like him." He said looking at Anja. "We'll have to have a talk when we get back."

"You find their actions amusing?" Buonau demanded.

"Androcles has his own mind Buonau. So does Denali." Anja stated. "They are old enough to make their own decisions and they will do what their hearts and minds tell them to do."

"Well the Kavalian's did not find it amusing. And from what I understand their Petition was very fair." Buonau said. "Perhaps you need to instruct your sons to be more diplomatic in their actions with those outside their family. The rest of your children seemed to go along with the ruling just fine."

"Really? That just goes to show you that they have minds of their own." Martin said looking at her. "Well... I guess I should be lucky that you don't sit on that court then Elder Buonau?"

"That isn't all." Zaniai spoke now seeing Buonau open her mouth to retort. "The rest of it concerns Eliani."

Anja looked at him. "What about her?"

“It also came out during the same court proceedings that she has allowed a Lycavorian to claim her!” Buonau spoke harshly her voice laced with contempt. “Not only does she share a bed with a female vampire, she now has allowed herself to be mated to a Lycavorian! A member of your Mjolnir’s Hand it seems.”

“His name was Star Commander Malic Buonau.” Eurin spoke.

“His name is of no consequence Eurin.” Buonau snapped. “He is a Lycavorian!”

Martin nodded his head. “Malic is a fine officer and he makes a fine addition to Mjolnir’s Hand.” He said with a smile. “And it’s about time he got around to claiming her and Nyla.”

“Eliani did not receive permission from the Elder Council to mate with a Lycavorian!” Duewa spoke now stepping closer to her mother.

Martin looked at her his eyes taking in her long red hair and bright eyes. “Who the hell are you?”

“This is my daughter Duewa.” Buonau spoke quickly. “She is my assistant. And she is very correct in her statement.”

“You don’t say.” Martin spoke rolling his eyes.

“Eliani did not and does not need your permission to mate with a man Buonau! She is our daughter... and well past the age of consent!” Anja said. “Martin, I and Eliani’s other mothers approved of her and Nyla’s choice as a husband!”

“The age of consent for a Lycavorian perhaps!” Buonau answered her smugly. “But as heir to the throne of Hadaria, she should have sought our approval and blessing as well. That is how it has always been! The Council of Elders will be issuing a Directive that we did not agree to this union and in our eyes it is not binding. Eliani should have married a Hadarian male to keep her Hadarian bloodline pure.”

Anja shook her head. “This is crazy.” She said. “Why exactly does the Elder Council think they can tell a Princess of the Union who she can or can not marry?”

“She is not only a Princess of the Union, but a Princess of Hadaria as well!” Buonau snapped. “And she still needs to adhere to the dictates of the Elder Council! We do not approve of her relationship with this vampire female and we never have! Given that the charges being leveled against you are so severe, we are doing what we must to protect the royal bloodline.” Okein said. “You and Princess Sivana don’t seem to care in the least about this.”

“We don’t care about...” Sivana stepped forward but Anja took her hand and shook her head.

“No Vana.” She said softly. “It just isn’t worth it.” She turned back to Buonau. “I want a list of these terrible charges being brought against me. And the evidence you supposedly will present that is so damning.”

Buonau smiled cruelly. “Eurin has such a list.” She stated. “The evidence we will present to the Hadarian Arch Ministry tomorrow at the special session. You will view it when they view it Queen Anja.”

“Good... then we are done here and we will see you in the morning.” Anja said.

“Retta and Calyb will need to go with Umbra until such time as...” Buonau began.

“No.” Martin stated.

“King Leonidas... this is an internal Hadarian matter and you have no authority to...” Okein began to speak.

“No.” Martin spoke once more looking at him.

“You are interfering with a Hadarian political directive King Leonidas!” Buonau spoke.

Martin nodded. “Then you can fucking sue me.” He barked.

“I will bring this before the Hadarian Arch Ministry and contact Prime Minister Deia myself!” Buonau snapped. “You can not do this!”

“You can tell the Hadarian Arch Ministry whatever the hell you like!” Martin snapped. “And Prime Minister Deia is my Aunt and she will tell you exactly where to go and how quickly to get there when you tell her you want to take our children from us!”

Buonau’s eyes were wide. “Your... your aunt?” She gasped.

Martin smiled. “Yeah. She was my grandmother’s sister. Pretty neat huh?” He stated with sarcasm. “And if the bully boys you brought with you there take one more step towards my children, none of them will be breathing two seconds after that, because those I don’t kill Deia will.”

“You are threatening them?” Buonau gasped in shocked.

Martin’s eyes changed then and his dual wolf fangs exploded from his gums. Those yellow orbs outlined in black bore into Buonau with the intensity of a supernova and she actually took a step back.

“If they don’t stand down in the next three seconds Buonau... they’ll be deader than that bloodsucking fucker Xerxes himself! And he got off easy!” Martin snarled viciously.

“You wouldn’t dare!” Buonau exclaimed.

“You want to test that fucked up theory you got?” Martin growled at her as he stepped forward.

“Your grandfather would not have acted in this way!” Buonau barked.

“You’re right...” Martin snarled. “My grandfather would have put you out of your misery the moment you even suggested taking his children from him. You are getting off easy right now too! Touch my children and we’ll see just how much your title as Hadarian Elder will help your little weekend warriors! Even you won’t be able to save them, because you won’t be able to find all their body parts.”

Anja stepped in front of Martin quickly knowing he was right on the edge of snapping and she knew he would do just what he had threatened to do. “We’ll see you in the morning Buonau. If you have any common sense you’ll take your toy soldiers and leave now.”

“This is not over with Anja!” Buonau snapped.

“It is for right now.” Anja stated. “Have a nice day.”

SPARTA GALLAIS’S RETREAT

“...a rumor that there is a major fleet exercise coming up.” One of the female pilots spoke from the table they sat at.

Gallais’s Retreat was nearly full, Spartans and elves and many others from the three Strike Wings in orbit filling the place many had come to call their second home. This is where many of them came when the Royal family came to Earth. Hundreds had even bought homes across the planet.

Ne’Veha sat at the table with five other female elven pilots from the SCIMITAR, having arrived before the last table was gone. It was her third time here since coming to Earth; her efforts at trying to get her orders changed hitting obstacles no matter who she spoke to. Captain Sa’sur no doubt had something to do with it, but she never mentioned that Ne’Veha had even gotten her father to try and pull strings. He had told her there was nothing he could do, Fleet Command being very set on duty assignments. Her father and her mother were also upset with her for not telling them about her relationship with Tarren and both of them were very perturbed about how that relationship had since ended. Tarren had apparently contacted them directly and inquired of where she was and how she was doing, and that had led to them discovering their now ended relationship. It only confirmed to them both how they regarded most Lycavorian men. The previous two trips here had been uneventful, Ne’Veha eating some very delicious elven food and then returning to the SCIMITAR. This night however had seen Ne’Veha very depressed and she had accepted the other pilot’s offer to get together on Earth for dinner. She was on her third mug of Spartan wine and well on her way to becoming more intoxicated than she had ever been in her life because of what she had seen today on the Netnews.

It was them.

Ne’Veha, like many of the pilots and crew of the SCIMITAR, had seen Androcles and Sadi on the Netnews earlier this day. They had seen how they had stood up to the Galactic Court and then the Netnews reporters after they revealed Sadi’s history. Ne’Veha had been stunned into silence upon seeing them, for they were two of the three people from her dreams. Exquisite dreams no doubt, as each one had left Ne’Veha shuddering in the aftermath of an incredibly powerful orgasm, but dreams that troubled her. Tarren had destroyed her trust of Lycavorian men, and Ne’Veha had never considered sharing a bed with one woman let alone two. Princess Sadi’s words had shocked her quite a bit, not only because her words had filtered through her deliciously, but because her words had knocked the lock off a part of herself that Ne’Veha rarely showed.

Was she one of these women that the Crown Princess spoke of? Is that why she was having such wonderful dreams of them? How could she be one of these women? Ne’Veha hated Lycavorian men after what Tarren had done to her, yet looking at the Prince caused her heart to begin racing and moistness to creep into her center. When combined with Princess Sadi and the luscious raven haired woman in her dreams, those dreams were utterly divine.

The issue she was having was very simple. These feelings and thoughts were not going away and that frightened Ne’Veha, for she knew it meant something that she didn’t know if she was able to return. And they were only growing stronger as the days and hours passed. It was almost as if her awareness was expanding somehow. She had never been more than a Tier Three Mindvoicer, yet now she was seeing and even feeling things that she was not taking part in. These feelings troubled her to some degree, but they also filled her with a sense of warmth and belonging that she had never experienced either.

These are the things that had troubled her all day, and these are the things that now led her to be here this evening with her fellow pilots, and well on her way to waking up tomorrow morning with a agonizing headache and possibly not be able to fly. She had never been able to hold her alcohol very well, and the signs were beginning to show now.

Another of the female pilots nodded. “I heard we will be spread out across the sector conducting operations.” She spoke. “This is why I wanted this assignment. The 1st, 2nd and 9th are never stationary for very long. They train continuously.”

“What do you expect from the King’s personal SCFFG?” Another pilot said downing the last of her wine.

“General Simpson’s 2nd is no different.”

“I understand that Prince Androcles’s 9th will be taking the side of the aggressor in the exercise.” A female elf pilot spoke. “That will be fun.” She said with a smile. “Did you see him on the Netnews today? The story of how he and the Crown Princess have loved each other since he was eight months old? That is amazing.”

“And that he will have four mates?” Another spoke. “I’d give anything to be wrapped around his body!”

“I want to be one of the three females they find!” Another said cheerfully.

Ne’Veha looked up then. “You... would shares a beds with... with him and threes other womenz?” She gasped

The female laughed. “Are you kidding Ne’Veha? Princess Sadi could make anyone’s blood churn with desire. She’s breathtaking! Can you imagine being sandwiched between them? Think of the pleasure you could have in that bed?”

Another elf chuckled as well now. “Think of the pleasure you could have with Prince Androcles and three other women.” She made her body shudder on purpose as she smiled dreamily.

“They... they are females? And he... he is a Lycavorian male. They... they arezz all the samezz.” Ne’Veha slurred as she downed the last of her wine as well.

“Ne’Veha... are you drunk?” One of the pilots asked with a smile.

“I amzz nots!” Ne’Veha exclaimed.

“Oh yes you are!” Another spoke with a laugh.

One of the pilots looked towards the door as it opened, admitting three Lycavorian males in their dress uniforms. Her dark eyes narrowed as she saw one of them men and she looked at Ne’Veha. “I thought you and Lieutenant Tarren were through Ne’Veha?” She asked.

“Tarrenz izz a pig.” Ne’Veha snapped.

“Well... he just walked in.” She spoke.

Ne’Veha’s eyes grew wider and she turned quickly in her chair. “What?” Her dark brown eyes quickly found the tall, young Lycavorian male who had cheated on her. “Sibfla!” Ne’Veha barked surprising the five females with her.

“Ne’Veha... when did you learn to speak the ancient language?” One asked with wide eyes.

“I... I can’t!” She answered turning back to look at her just as Tarren’s eyes fell upon her.

“Ne’Veha... you just spoke in the ancient Lycavorian tongue.” The pilot spoke again. “You just swore in the ancient language!”

“I did not!” Ne’Veha barked out.

“We all heard it Ne’Veha!” Another said.

“I did...” Ne’Veha started to speak but stopped when she heard the familiar voice.

“Ne’Veha... this is a pleasant surprise.” Tarren spoke as he came up to the table with his two friends.

Ne’Veha sighed and looked up at him, anger surging through her and sobering her up to an extent.

“Tarren.” She stated coldly.

“We just arrived.” Tarren said as he pulled the chair up to the table and sat down next to Ne’Veha, his friends mimicking the action and settling at the large table with them. “Are you going to introduce us to your friends?”

Ne’Veha glared at him. “Where is your... woman?” She hissed.

“Ah... Hy’la... well things did not work out between us.” Tarren answered. “After you left... after you left I realized that I had made a mistake.”

“Oh really.” Ne’Veha said even as her elven ears were almost pinned back along her head in anger and distaste. On top of that... she was not feeling so well. “That’s too bad for you isn’t it?”

Tarren looked at her. “Ne’Veha have you been drinking?”

“No!” She snapped.

Tarren smiled at her leaning closer. “You can’t hold your liquor very well Ne’Veha. You smell of Spartan Wine. You know you shouldn’t be drinking, especially as much as I smell that you have. Your parents wouldn’t approve.”

“What... what do you want Tarren?” Ne’Veha snapped at him. “Have you not humiliated me enough with your actions?”

“You haven’t introduced us to your friends.” Tarren said looking at the other five female elven pilots. His two friends were smiling as they looked at the young women, all of them doing their best to remain away from the two Spartans.

“We know who you are.” One of the female pilots said with hostility in her voice. “My name is Ra’Neeria and Ne’Veha has told us all about you Tarren.”

Tarren looked at her. “Has she now?” He spoke with a smile. “All one sided I’m quite sure. This is Jocab and Merto, members of my new unit.”

“What are you doing here Tarren?” Ne’Veha asked. “You were assigned to the Spartan Division on Elear. Why are you here?”

“I came for you Ne’Veha.” Tarren spoke. “I followed you here to Earth. It was an easy decision and I have never been to Sparta before.”

Ne’Veha looked at him with wide eyes. “What?” She gasped out her face aghast. “You must be joking!”

Tarren shook his head. “Not at all. I found out where you were assigned and got some friends of mine to pull some strings. I am now a member of the 9th SCFAG.” He answered. “My detachment is posted to the SCIMITAR. And I got a promotion to Pentekostyes. Captain of Ground forces. Can you believe that?”

Ne’Veha shook her head. “No.” She gasped. “I can’t believe that!”

Tarren nodded. “I made a mistake Ne’Veha.” He said in a serious voice. “I want to show you that I have changed. That’s why I am here.”

Ne’Veha shook her head quickly. “You must think I’m a very large fool Tarren.” She quipped. “What would possess me to believe you now? After what you have done?”

“We were good together Ne’Veha.” He spoke. “That’s why?”

“So you can make me appear the idiot again?” Ne’Veha barked. “And you were not that good Tarren.”

Tarren chuckled. “Oh no? I was your first Ne’Veha and unless you have bedded with quite a few men since leaving Elear, then I am the only male you have been with. You forget... I can still smell myself in your blood.” He said. “I want to keep it that way. I’m ready to settle down.”

“You must be joking.” Ne’Veha spat. “I could never trust you Tarren. Ever! And what makes you think I even desire you anymore?”

“I’ll fight for you Ne’Veha.” He said quickly. “I won’t let any other male come close to you. I am a strong Alpha and I’ll stake my claim to you. No one will approach you Ne’Veha. I’ll see to that.”

“So now you are stalking me Tarren?” Ne’Veha snarled.

Tarren shook his head. “No... just staking my claim as I said.”

Ne’Veha got to her feet. “You have no claim to me Tarren!” She popped. “You gave up that right when you took another into your bed and cheated on me for seven months! I need another drink! Just stay away from me!”

Ne’Veha whirled around and started weaving her way through the crowd heading for the long bar at the far end of the building. Tarren shook his head with a smile and looked at Ne’Veha’s friends who were doing their best not to look at the two other young males who were gawking at them.

“She really does love me.” He said getting to his feet to follow her.

All of them snickered at him. “Perhaps someone should tell her that then.” The dark haired elf female Ra’Neeria spoke again. “Why can’t you just leave her alone?”

“Perhaps Merto and I could interest the four of you in some entertainment.” The Spartan Jocab spoke as he reached out to run his hand down Ra’Neeria’s arm.

Ra’Neeria snorted and pulled her arm away rolling her eyes. “Please...” She said. “We prefer real men.” She stated. “Not those who play at being real men.”

“I’m more man than you could hope for.” Jocab spoke confidently.

Tarren chuckled at this. “Careful... they might surprise you.” He spoke as he turned to follow Ne’Veha.

“If they are your friends... not likely.” Another of the female pilots said looking at his back. She got to her feet. “Let’s get out of here.” She spoke quickly. “If we are going to find real Spartan men... we need to look elsewhere.”

Ne’Veha weaved her way through the crowd, not really paying attention to where she was going. She just needed to get away from Tarren. How could he come here thinking she would take him back? She wiped at the sweat beginning to bead on her forehead as she darted up the small flight of stairs into the upper landing of Gallais’s Retreat. The tables were spread out wider and there weren’t as many people on this upper level. It was also much quieter and she slowed her pace considerably. The dozen or so tables on this level were all filled, but no one stood between them talking or trying to be heard over the din of other voices as it was on the main floor. These men and women maintained normal conversation levels and appeared to be much more in control.

She also felt something very odd. It was the same feeling she had relished in during her dreams. So warm and inviting and so welcoming and caring. A mild buzzing was sounding off within her head. Something she had felt only in her dreams when she was with them.

She felt them!

The ones from her dreams. Her dark brown eyes darted back and forth among the tables and finally widened when she spied them sitting at a table near the window. She recognized them immediately, her golden blond hair and his captivating azure blue eyes. Eyes that had stared into her own dark orbs in her dreams, almost as if he was looking at her. Ne’Veha also recognized Captain Sa’sur sitting at the same table and her heart skipped a beat. She could not allow Sa’sur to see her in this condition. The Captain of the SCIMITAR already didn’t care for her very much, and if she discovered her drunk like this when she had to fly tomorrow, Sa’sur would certainly recommend disciplinary action against her. She took several steps forward, her eyes darting back and forth looking for another exit and she saw the identical flight of stairs on the other side of the large open area. Many of those men and women on this upper level were looking at her oddly. They were a mix of Lycavorian, Elves, Algolian and several other species. Ne’Veha clenched her fists tightly. They could not see her like this, it would be humiliating to say the least, but the mild buzzing in her head was growing and making her vacillate in her actions. She focused on the stairs through the buzzing and the cloud of Spartan Wine she had drunk and began making her way as quickly as she could to the opposite set of stairs.

She didn’t make it.

Tarren’s hand closed around her arm firmly and she spun around. “Why are you running from me Ne’Veha?” He asked in an amused voice.

Ne’Veha turned her head and glared at him through her intoxicated eyes. “I want nothing to do with you Tarren.” She hissed softly. “Why can’t you see that? You disgust me!”

Tarren looked around slowly. “Ne’Veha... this is not the place for this.” He spoke softly. “Let me get you some coffee and we can sit down and discuss this. We...”

Ne’Veha yanked her arm away, her anger flaring and whatever natural Mindvoice shields she had acquired over the years came crashing down.

“NO!”

“...we can rotate them in shifts.” Sa’sur was speaking. “Three or four DTs at a time so as not to raise suspicion. How soon do you and Arrarn think they will be ready Sadi?”

Andro and Sadi sat close to one another, her hand resting on the inside of his leg as they leaned over the table looking at the data pad Sa’sur held. Sa’sur had worked for the last six years alongside Androcles Leonidas and members of his family, and she knew and had witnessed some of what they could do. The moment Sadi became Andro’s Anome, she ceased being a subordinate and was elevated to equal in Sa’sur’s book. You could not be a member of the Leonidas family and not experience some of what they had seen and done throughout the years.

Sadi met her eyes. “At the rate they are progressing... two weeks... perhaps three.” She replied. “All of them have already mastered atmospheric flight loaded with Bonded Pairs. Arrarn wants to start them on exiting procedures tomorrow when I return. It will be a learning experience for me as well since I have only done it once.”

Sa’sur smiled. “One time with this character and any of his brothers and sisters is worth a hundred exits for normal pilots.” She spoke jerking a thumb towards Andro. “Nothing they do is ever normal.”

Sadi grinned and squeezed Andro’s thigh. “Yes... I imagine that would be the case.” She stated.

Andro rolled his eyes at this. “Just because we do some things differently does not make us odd.” He said.

Sa’sur looked at him. “No? What does that make you then?”

“Different.” Andro spoke.

Sa’sur chortled. “Different is not a completely accurate word I would use to describe you Andro.” She said. “More like otherworldly.”

“When do the DTs begin arriving?” Andro asked.

“The end of this week.” Sa’sur answered. “I’m having them arrive in twos and threes to keep any prying Kavalian eyes from figuring out what we are doing. They’ll come in from behind EDEN Moon Base and land on the SCIMITAR. We’ll keep them over night and then cut them loose on a polar entry corridor to keep them out of Sparta’s airspace. They’ll come down over North America and drop to a hundred feet off the coast for the rest of the trip.”

Andro nodded. “We...”

“NO!”

Andro stopped talking and looked up quickly the movement catching Sa’sur’s eye. She glanced at Sadi and saw that she too was looking up with an almost blank stare.

“Andro?” Sa’sur asked softly.

Andro looked at Sadi quickly. [KertaGai?] He questioned.

Sadi nodded. [I feel her too.] She said softly.

Sa’sur picked up her mug of Spartan wine and nodded her head to make it appear as if they were still talking in soft whispers. She was only a Tier Five Mindvoicer, but she knew well the signs of Tier Six individuals as they spoke in a shielded conversation. She had also grown able to detect the faint buzzing in her head whenever Andro or any of the Leonidas clan talked within a heavily shielded connection.

[Andro! Sadi! She is so close!] Carisia’s musical like voice exploded within their minds as she communicated with them in Mindvoice from SODRAG.

[You are undergoing training Enylarcopri!] Andro stated in a humorously stern voice.

[I am eating breakfast right now!] Carisia answered immediately, sounding indignant in her reply. [And I can’t help it if I feel everything both of you do.]

[We will need Helen to show us how to better shield between ourselves.] Sadi spoke. [If nothing else at least for our own protection.]

Andro nodded as his azure eyes swept across the upper level reserved for senior officers and he saw her. He felt Sadi’s hand on his leg grip him even tighter as her eyes also found her. Her flowing dark brown hair, the way her dark blue jump suit clung to her lithe five foot three body. The elegant curve of her four inch high elven ears. Andro and Sadi both reached out with their wolf senses and quickly found her delicious sweet amaretto like scent.

This was her... the one they had felt so close to them and Carisia as they lay tangled in each other's arms every morning for the last week. Each time they had felt her more intensely, adding to the pleasure they were bestowing upon each other.

Andro turned and looked at Sa'sur. "Sa'sur... who is she?" He asked in a whisper.

Sa'sur turned and saw Ne'Veha standing with the tall Lycavorian. She shook her head. "Commander Ne'Veha." She spoke shaking her head. "She is one of our new DEVASTATOR pilots. She's been here about three weeks and she is intelligent enough to know this area is for senior officers only."

Sadi tore her eyes from Ne'Veha and looked at Sa'sur now as well. "Where did she come from?"

"The Elven Defense Squadron on Elear." Sa'sur answered. "She requested a posting to the elven squadron on Apo Prime but the commander of that squadron didn't want her. She has an issue with Lycavorians it seems. She floated around for six months before finally being assigned here with the new M5s. She has been trying to get out of the 9th ever since she got here. Her father is a low level elven minister and she has had him hounding personnel officers across the fleet to get her transferred to an all elf unit."

"That man is her issue with Lycavorians." Sadi spoke confidently.

Sa'sur looked at the tall officer. "He just came over two days ago. Took command of a company of the 9th. The same one that provides security on the SCIMITAR."

"He is trouble." Sadi spoke turning back to look at Ne'Veha. "He did something to her. He did something to her that hurt her."

"Sadi... she is arrogant and borderline disrespectful." Sa'sur spoke. "And she has a serious dislike for Lycavorians. I did some checking and it appears that her mother and father don't care for Lycavorians either."

Andro turned back to look at Ne'Veha. "There is a reason behind that." He said softly. "There is always a reason behind that. I don't like the way he is handling her."

Sa'sur looked at them closely hearing the tenseness in Andro's voice. She too had seen the Netnews interview they had given earlier in the day and what Sadi said then came back to her. She also knew Androcles Leonidas well enough to know when he was beginning to become angry. "Sadi... is this..."

Sadi nodded as her eyes turned back to Ne'Veha as well. "Yes." She replied softly.

"She's been drinking heavily." Andro spoke. "I can smell the wine in her blood. She is not used to it and it is affecting her equilibrium. She is going to be sick."

"Her scent is spiking with fear as well Aur Armen Enyla." Sadi said now. "Go! I will call Elynth."

Sa'sur watched as Andro came to his feet instantly and Sadi stood up on his heels. "Sa'sur... she will not be able to fly for at least two days with as much as she has drunk. Can you shift the flight schedule around and make it appear she is doing something else? It would not due for her squadron commander to know about this."

Sa'sur nodded as she stood up as well. "Of course. I'll say I had her do some remedial training here on Earth. What are the two of you going to do?"

Sadi smiled warmly. "We can not explain these things Sa'sur." Sadi spoke. "There are times when we wish we could but..."

Sa'sur shook her head. "You forget Sadi... I've served with Andro for the last few years of my life and I've seen some pretty unexplainable things. It is the norm with him. In situations like this... I have come to learn a few things and one of them is that I do not question his faith, your faith or my own."

"She is... she is one of those who will share our lives Sa'sur. We have felt this." Sadi said confidently. "We will act as wolves should to protect those that we will love and share our lives with. We will take her back to our villa tonight and the on to SODRAG with us in the morning. It will take at least two days for the wine she has drunk to purge from her system fully. She can return the day after tomorrow. At least then she will not show signs of how much she has drunk."

Sa'sur nodded. "I'll take care of it."

"Thank you Sa'sur." Sadi spoke before she turned and followed Andro.

"Don't touch me!" Ne'Veha exclaimed staggering somewhat as she pulled her arm away from Tarren's grip.

Tarren's eyes narrowed slightly. "Ne'Veha you are drunk and you are making a scene." He snarled at her. "Let me take you back to the room I have reserved at the lodge nearby."

"Oh that is just so convenient for you isn't it you pig!" Ne'Veha snapped. "What will you do then Tarren? Help me out of my clothes and then nubou me?"

Tarren's eyes grew a little wider and he looked around quickly. "Ne'Veha... when did you learn the ancient language?" He asked.

"I don't know the ancient language you ronnus!" She snapped. "I can't speak the ancient language! Why does everyone keep telling me I am speaking the nubous ancient language?"

"Ne'Veha you need to keep your voice down!" Tarren spoke sternly. "You are acting like a fool!"

"I hate you Tarren!" She barked. "You need to leave me alone now!"

Tarren took her arm again. "We are going to someplace more private and talk about this!" He snarled.

Ne'Veha yanked her arm away again, this time with enough force to cause her to stagger back and stumble into the table closest to her where two Durcunusaan officers sat. Ne'Veha yelped in surprise as she realized she was falling and would not be able to catch herself. She staggered back even more, her balance thoroughly fouled up because of the Spartan wine she had drunk, her body spinning around until she slammed into the unyielding chest of the tall male.

Ne'Veha felt the warmth flood through her as those strong hands gripped her arms and steadied her easily. She looked up then into the most delectable azure colored eyes, eyes she had seen only in her dreams up until this point. She gasped softly as her hands flattened against the broadly muscular chest. She could feel the warmth of the skin beneath the thin shirt, and the rapid but strong beating of his heart. She felt her senses come alive then, her head flashing with images and sensations that she had never experienced before as she looked into those eyes.

Tarren stepped forward quickly reaching for Ne'Veha. "My apologies sir." He spoke quickly not knowing who this young wolf was, but able to detect the pungent scent of lavender and pines along immensely powerful aura radiating from him. An aura Tarren could not come close to matching even on his best day. "She has had too much to drink. I will..."

"You will do nothing!" Sadi's voice filled the small area as she came up and blocked him from moving forward. "Whatever you have done is quite enough!"

Tarren looked at this blond haired Lycavorian female, wondering why she looked so very familiar. "I am Captain Tarren of the 9th SCFAG... Commander Ne'Veha is with me. I will take care of her."

"It appears she does not want your care Captain." Sadi spoke keeping the angry in her voice cleverly masked. "You will remove yourself from this level now sir. Your actions are no longer needed Captain and this area of Gallais's Retreat is reserved for senior officers or parties."

"I am a Spartan Captain!" Tarren retorted sensing the force of this female's aura easily. She was most definitely an alpha female, and a very beautiful one at that. In very male fashion Tarren wondered briefly what she would be like in bed. "I am commander of an elite company of Spartan troops of the 9th SCFAG. Prince Androcles's command!" He stated proudly as he pushed out his chest. "I don't believe I know your name madam." He said as he released a small portion of his own aura to test the compatibility between this female and himself. He could smell her sugar plum and spice scent mixed in heavily with lavender and pines, but he did not make the connection between the two.

Sadi couldn't help but shake her head. Before becoming Andro's mate, and before most knew who she was, many alpha males here in Sparta had tried to entice her with their auras. It had taken nearly two weeks for the information that she was now Crown Princess to filter down to every facet of life and touch even those who did not have access to the Netnews monitors. Or chose not to watch them. Sadi had endured this for she knew what it was, and none of them had even caused her to pause in what she had been doing, for she had already tasted Andro's aura and none of those males compared to her Anome. She saw Tarren's eyes narrow slightly as he realized that his aura had absolutely no affect on her in the least and he couldn't understand why the two Lycavorian Durcunusaan officers had looks of revulsion and anger on their faces at his actions.

"My name is not important right now Captain. Only that I most definitely outrank you." Sadi spoke sternly. "You..."

Ne’Veha coughed several times from behind her and Sadi turned quickly. Ne’Veha lowered her head to Andro’s chest, her fingers clenching and unclenching on his shirt. “Oh... oh no... I think I’m going to be sick.” She gasped out.

Sweat poured from Ne’Veha’s face now, her full lips quivering as her empty stomach rebelled against the copious amounts of wine she had drunk and heaved upwards. The two Durcunusaan officers backpedaled quickly as three full mugs of Spartan wine and what little Ne’Veha had in her stomach came billowing out from between her lips. They watched in horror as Andro took the expulsion full on in his chest, their noses wrinkling at the foul smell. Andro’s eyes were wide as he felt the warm liquid douse his chest, his own nose rebelling at the smell, but he didn’t release Ne’Veha’s arms. He pulled her closer to him and directed her head to the side as she heaved again, her petite frame shuddering as it expelled the cause of her condition from her body.

“Milord!” One of the officers barked out.

Tarren’s eyes went wide when he heard this and he saw Sadi’s head turn back to him, her jungle green eyes flashing with anger. “Remove yourself from this location Captain. I will not ask again.” She snarled angrily.

“I... I will take...” Tarren stammered as Sadi turned back to where Andro held Ne’Veha in his arms.

Sa’sur stepped up quickly from the side then. “Captain... it is my experience that when the Crown Princess of our Union gives you a directive... you obey it.” She snapped. “I do know for a fact that Prince Androcles Leonidas does not care for officers in his unit who do not have any common sense!”

Tarren gawked at Sa’sur for a moment and then looked back at where Andro held Ne’Veha. His azure blue eyes were focused on him and not in the least bit friendly. “Prince... Prince Androcles!” He gasped. “My... my apologies sire!”

Andro turned his head to the two Durcunusaan officers as he lifted Ne’Veha into his arms heedless of the vomit that soaked his chest. Ne’Veha had already fainted and gone limp in his arms. “Commander if you would, clear me a path out the back door and give our goodbyes to Gallais for Sadi and myself.”

The Durcunusaan officer nodded immediately. “At once Milord!”

Sadi felt Ne’Veha’s head with her hand. “She’s burning up with fever Andro.”

Andro nodded as he looked at her. “Spartan wine will increase an elf’s body temperature if they drink too much.” He said. “Have Elynth take her and you back to Cranae Island and allow her to cool down and sleep it off KertaGai. I will join you shortly, after I have cleaned myself up.”

Sadi nodded as they walked towards the exit leaving Tarren watching them with stunned eyes and a sinking feeling in his gut that he had made a mistake coming after Ne’Veha. There was obviously something she had not told him if the Crown Prince and Princess acted as if they knew her so well.

And he intended to find out why.

NEBONESE SPACEPORT

Las’elh watched the throngs of people moving about the spaceport as she stood beside Cihera in the shadows of one of the spaceport’s many vender stands. No one seemed to be moving with urgency, and there did not appear to be anymore security than when they had arrived. They had come immediately here after the ambush near the mine. Nineteen of this Evolli’s men now lay dead after engaging Cihera, Anton and the other Drow.

After engaging her as well.

Las’elh had never experienced a firefight like the one that still caused her heart to beat rapidly and her blood to churn. She had never killed before, at least not from this close up and by her own hand. Her actions during the Evolli war had led to the death of several dozen Evolli Commandos when she called in a STRIKER AT to attack their position, but she had never taken a life herself and been so close. She glanced out the corner of her eye and took in Cihera as she stood there calmly, amber eyes keenly sweeping the area around them. Las’elh could still feel Cihera’s kiss upon her lips, the way she had pulled her body close and how that single kiss had ignited sensations within her that Las’elh had never felt. She was no stranger to pleasure among females, during her time on Talbor Seven she had resorted to this with three different female elves in the course of trying to find out information about her sister. While it had been very pleasurable to an extent, it had not set her body on fire as Cihera's kiss had. Perhaps it was because she was a Drow, and Las'elh now knew that if she was to enter into something with Cihera, she would also be giving herself to Anton Simpson as well. Surprisingly that knowledge did not make her blink and she could imagine herself between them now, being held in their arms and experiencing delights that she never had before.

"What are you thinking Las'elh?" Cihera asked softly without looking at her.

"You can't sense it? My surface thoughts?" Las'elh spoke.

Cihera looked at her with a small smile. "Neither Anton nor I use Mindvoice very much." She explained. "We are not as strong as others... though with training and time that potential is there for us because of whom our parents are I suppose."

"You never use it?" Las'elh asked.

"Only when we truly need too." Cihera said. "My birth parents escaped with Lynwe from a High Coven camp. They were trained as Lynwe, and our Queen's brother, as assassins and warriors, but still kept within this camp. When they joined with Martin Leonidas their lives changed. They died in the battle for Earth. I was only four years old then... and Lynwe and Selene adopted me without question. It was an easy decision really, for we are like Lycavorians in many respects. We know children are our future, and no Drow child that lost parents in the Battle for Earth was left to fend for themselves. All of us were adopted within months. Lynwe and Selene are powerful Tier Six Mindvoicers, but I never really chose to use that skill. Anton's younger brother Dario is even stronger in many respects than their father and my mothers, for he is bonded to a dragon. Anton and I prefer to use the skills we have been given and have cultivated over the years."

"I have never been very strong within Mindvoice." Las'elh spoke softly. "And I have never killed someone up close like I did today. You were so calm... and... and Anton was making jokes!"

Cihera chuckled softly. "You should see his father." She said. "Hearing him and the King toss insults and demeaning comments back and forth during a battle is most amusing."

"They are fearless?" Las'elh said meeting her eyes with no apprehension now. At this moment, standing here and now, Las'elh decided she wanted Cihera. She wanted this supremely confident and skilled Drow to have her in any way Cihera desired. And having Anton tossed into the mix would only be an added bonus as far as Las'elh was concerned for he was gifted in his own right.

"No... they fear." Cihera spoke. "They are afraid... they will be the first ones to tell you if you do not fear war and battle then there is something wrong with you. They are Spartans however, and from the time of his father they have been trained to embrace that fear and use it to give them strength. That is how they do it, by swearing and insulting each other. I do not understand it..." Cihera spoke with a smile. "But it works for them."

"Cihera... about earlier... I..." Las'elh stammered.

Cihera lifted a finger and placed it on Las'elh's lips silencing her. "Be very sure Las'elh." She said softly. "Be very sure it is what you want in your heart. It has happened very quickly and I do not want you to rush something that you are only experiencing for the first time right now."

"Aren't you rushing it as well?" Las'elh asked.

Cihera tilted her head with a smile. "Perhaps... but that is because I do not wish to lose you to another."

"My... my mind tells me to... it tells me that I shouldn't open myself to people who will be gone when this mission is over." Las'elh said. "My body... my heart screams out for your touch. For Anton's touch." Las'elh shook her head. "I can't believe we are even having this conversation right now."

Cihera grinned. "Wrap your mind around this Las'elh. If you enter into a relationship with us, you will become part of my family. Part of Anton's family. You will become part of a very large, combined Spartan and Drow clan that includes not only the Leonidas family but the Drow Queen herself. A Spartan and Drow clan that loves without question, fights for each other without hesitation, and we are utterly loyal to the man we call our King. If you decide to enter into a relationship with us Las'elh, you will never be alone; you will never have to rely on just yourself anymore; and we will love you fervently until the day we pass from this life and into the next." Cihera told her in a calm even voice, her bright amber eyes boring into her.

"And... and you swear this to me?" Las'elh asked.

Cihera smiled. "Oh yes." She told her.

“Then that is what I want.” Las’elh spoke instantly. “I...” She stopped speaking when Anton appeared ghostlike from the side of the vendor stall and moved close to them. She and Cihera turned to look at him, and for the first time Las’elh realized just how extremely well built he was and it made a warmth spread through her as she realized she had just committed herself to a relationship with a Drow and her husband. And that fact only made her happier than she had ever been.

“He’s here.” Anton’s voice carried to them in almost a whisper. “The MUTT squad has removed the outer layer of guards and they have sealed the other entrances into his lair. Three Kochab and two Evolli remain just inside the entrance according to thermal scans.”

“What is the overconfident Evolli bastard doing?” Cihera asked. “He obviously did not feel the need to be part of the ambush he planned for us.”

Anton met her eyes. “He is eating his dinner.” He replied. “He apparently did not think his men would fail my Drow wife. One of the outer guards told us he is preparing to leave Nebonese this evening once they had Gravork in their hands.”

“And he just offered this information to us?” Cihera asked.

Anton shrugged. “Well... he was promised his life would continue if he told us what we wanted to know.”

Las’elh looked at him now. “Was that promise kept?”

Anton grinned flashing his perfect white teeth. “Yes. For an additional four minutes.” He answered. “They never told him how long it would continue for.”

Las’elh couldn’t help herself now and she allowed the bright smile to split her face. She looked intently at Cihera with those dazzling blue orbs. “I find the prospect of our relationship more enticing by the moment... Mistress.” She said coyly.

Anton’s eyes grew a little wider. “What’s this?” He asked.

Cihera’s amber eyes were focused on Las’elh and she too smiled. “We will fill you in later husband.” Cihera told him as she looked into his handsome face. “Right now however, could you use your delicious skills as a Spartan warrior and clear us a path to this Bontick fool.”

Anton smiled and mocked bowed his head. “Your wish is my command... Mistress.” He spoke.

The Evolli guard turned from his conversation with his brother at the pounding on the door into the outer spaceport. They had followed Bontick since the end of the Evolli War. All of them had lost everything in that war, and with the unconditional surrender of the entire Evolli government at the end, they became mercenaries and pirates. Always with the intent to cause as much death and destruction to Union forces and people wherever they got the chance. Those opportunities had become less and less easy to obtain in the last few years since the Union forces were aware of their presence and very mindful of the fact that there were thousands of Evolli who had become mercenaries and pirates when their government signed the surrender. Bontick had offered those that joined him credits and power and they had that across The Wilds. They were feared by many people and even though there were other Evolli of Bontick’s power and influence, he was the most feared. They had been killing and raping for the entire three years since the end of the war, always more brutal to those they captured who were citizens of the Union. The elves they had captured were treated especially harsh, the females ganged raped and beaten, while the men were tortured for hours before being killed. Their organization had begun accepting outsiders when their numbers dipped too low, and while the Kochab, Unsaar and Bo’yak were savage and brutal in their own right, none of them held the hatred for the Union that the Evolli did.

They were waiting now for their assault team to report back that they had secured the Kochab Gravork in the ambush of the Drow. Bontick had arranged a huge payoff that somehow included getting their hands on Gravork. The Kochab was wanted by many people within The Wilds for the information he held in his head. When they had Gravork, Bontick told them their power and influence would grow exponentially. How he had found out Gravork was with the Drow who had recently come to Nebonese was not something they worried about.

The Evolli turned back to his brother. “Why would they knock?” He asked.

“Who cares?” His brother spoke. “If they brought some of those Drow females with them it will only make it better. I’ve always wished to fuck one of those Drow elves and listen to them scream.”

“You think with your dick brother.” He said as he moved to the thick armored door.

“Yes I know.” His brother answered with a laugh.

The three Kochab mercenaries watched from the table where they were playing some silly game with small cards and dice of some sort.

“You have to find your dick first Tenru!” One of the Kochab announced with a laugh, eliciting laughter from his two companions.

Tenru turned to look at them. “What the fuck do you know?” He snarled as the large door hissed open.

“Hi there!” The strange voice spoke causing their heads to snap around and stare at the tall dark skinned half elf Spartan in the doorway. The same one who should have been dead by now. “I believe we have an appointment!”

“Brother!” Tenru screamed as Anton brought up his left arm and the Shi Viska flared into existence.

In that split second the razors sprang into place on Anton’s Shi Viska and the shield launched. The Evolli in front of him, three meters by Anton’s estimate, lost his head before he even knew what was going on. The wet thud of his head hitting the floor was like a crack of thunder in the quiet of the doorway and long corridor, as was the sound of the explosiveness of his blood splashing on the walls.

Anton was moving forward before his Shi Viska returned to his arm, heading directly for where Tenru stood with every bit of his elven speed, even as the shimmering white hair of Cihera flashed quickly from the side of the door, and Las’elh’s long blond hair right with her. Though neither of them had vampire speed, both Cihera and Las’elh had the natural elven speed which was far faster than the three Kochab would ever be able to move. Two silenced K14s came up and four rounds were let fly. Cihera was the more experienced and better shot; both of her rounds struck their Kochab targets in the center of their foreheads, exploding their heads like overripe fruit. As was customary with Kochab because of the arteries that ended in their skulls, the blood spray was massive, coating the side of Tenru’s shoulder and face. Las’elh was less experienced, but still an excellent marksman. She fired twice, the first of her kinetic magnum rounds striking the third Kochab in his throat and the second punching through his open mouth. His blood fountained outward from his mouth and added to that already gushing from his ruined and shredded throat as he dropped to the floor, dead before he collapsed fully.

Tenru had only three seconds to react, and his reflexes were not even in the same league as Anton Simpson. As his head came back around dripping with Kochab blood, his bulbous eyes flew open as the head of Anton’s Nehtes perforated his chest and erupted from between his shoulder blades. Anton grabbed his shoulder and rammed the Nehtes further forward as he pulled Tenru closer to him with a vicious snarl, his wolf fangs now extended and his dark eyes changed to yellow orbs surrounded by blackness.

“You will never have your wish Evolli scum!” Anton mocked savagely. “You will be dead!”

Anton twisted the shaft of the Nehtes with precise movements, grinding it inside the Evolli’s chest cavity and destroying his internal organs even as Tenru hung from the Nehtes already dead. When Anton saw the life leave his sickly looking eyes, he stepped back and ripped his Nehtes free, the razor like head of the spear tearing more massive wounds in the Evolli’s chest and bringing with it pieces of his lungs and heart. Anton spun the Nehtes gracefully in his hand as Cihera and Las’elh watched, leaned back and brought his right leg up in devastating high kick that impacted just under Tenru’s jaw. The sound of his neck popping was like a gunshot in the room, Tenru’s body lifting into the air and crashing back down with a wet thud fifteen feet from where Anton stood. Anton lifted his hand, his Nehtes fully extended and he depressed the thumb button, collapsing the spear in a single blink. He lifted his left arm and his Shi Viska tore free of the wall it had impacted and remained after severing the head of the first Evolli. Cihera and Las’elh stood together and watched as his Shi Viska snapped back to settle onto his arm and then vanished with a soft flare of white light. Cihera nudged Las’elh gently with her elbow and waited until she turned to look at her.

Cihera smiled devilishly. “He will be exceptionally passionate tonight Las’elh. He may only be half wolf, but his father’s blood burns within him brightly.” She said. “I hope you are prepared.”

Las’elh matched her smile. “I’m looking forward to it.” She said.

Cihera nodded her head. “Good. Now let us go and see this Bontick. The rooms appear soundproof, and he is most likely unaware we have even come to visit him.” She turned and headed down the short corridor opposite the door they had come in, Las’elh right on her heels as Anton brought up the rear.

The inner door was not armored and no where near as thick. Cihera glanced at the wall panel and saw it was foolishly unlocked. She turned to Las'elh. "This Evolli fool is supremely confident in his manner. The door is unlocked."

Anton grabbed her arm and motioned downward with his head. "Daxen gas! He knows we are here!"

Cihera saw the wistful fingers of the deadly white vapor seeping out from under the door seals and she shook her head. "Fool!" She said. "Husband... you may have the lead."

"Thank you my Drow wife." Anton spoke. "A pleasure."

The three of them took deep breaths from the clean air above the gaseous vapor and Cihera punched the wall panel. While not able to hold their breaths for as long as Lycavorians or Algolians, elves could hold their breaths for three to four minutes easily. It was something all elven intelligence agents learned and practiced on a regular basis. Las'elh was no different as she nodded to Cihera and the door opened. She and Cihera went in first, their K14s out in front of them. The room they entered was completely filled with the gas vapor and had they not been holding their breaths, it would have penetrated their lungs and caused them to go into severe convulsions before death took them.

"Ah... I see you got this far!" The voice echoed around them as Cihera and Las'elh broke to different sides of the room, though it sounded muffled. "I must say I am impressed. You have managed to kill all of my men here on Nebonese! That is not something I ever expected. You are apparently much more than simple Drow elves."

Cihera and Las'elh held their K14s leveled at the sound of the voice and circled slowly. The gas did not allow them to see inside the center of the room or more than a few feet around them, but their elven ears allowed them to know exactly where Bontick was. They moved with precision, covering themselves as they moved closer.

"As you can see... I have released Daxen gas vapor into the room." Bontick spoke. "I am not without my means. In a few minutes you will be dead and I will leave this retched planet with Gravork."

Bontick stood by the large table in the room, his shaking hands holding the older High Coven assault rifle. The breathing mask covered his mouth and nose, his orange eyes darting back and forth at every shadow that the gas was causing. He could see nothing to shoot at, and the interior of this room was lined with armor and soundproofing material, making it highly resistant to projectile weapons. The rounds would ricochet lethally around the room if he didn't hit what he was aiming at. Fear gripped Bontick. A fear he hadn't felt since the last battle of the war when his entire command had been slaughtered while he listened and watched from orbit. Whoever these individuals were that were working with the Drow, they were certainly not normal elves, and he had to get off this planet if he was to report this to his Kavalian handlers.

Bontick heard the smashing sound of glass and his head darted to the left as the Daxen gas began to be sucked out in another direction. He swore to himself as he realized someone had reached the small control room and activated the vacuum controls for the room. He lifted his assault rifle and pointed it in that direction, intending to open fire at the first sign of flesh he saw and damn with the risks. He heard a metallic 'snick' like a door opening and saw a dark flash of something that was not a shadow. As his finger tightened on the trigger his eyes grew wide when he felt the horrible pain rip through his leg and cause him to scream in agony, dropping the rifle and reaching for his leg. His hands wrapped around the shaft of the Nehtes, his eyes growing wide in horror when he realized what it was. His screaming stopped when he felt first one and then two barrels press to the exposed skin of his head and he froze. Cihera and Las'elh appeared from the dissipating cloud fully, their silenced K14s locked and cocked and ready to deliver the final rounds of his life. His orange eyes darted to the side as the last of the gaseous vapor was sucked from the room and he saw the dark skinned male standing by the shattered window of the small control room. He stared at Bontick as he reached through the window and slammed his hand down on the controls and let out a slow breath.

"Spartans!" He gasped looking down once more and seeing the Nehtes clearly for the first time. The only people who could use these weapons with any effectiveness were Spartans that much he knew.

Anton smiled as Cihera and Las'elh also exhaled slowly so as not to cause blood to rush to their heads and blur their vision.

"Bontick my Evolli friend!" Anton bellowed as he walked towards him. "It's not polite to keep prospective clients waiting Bontick. Have you learned nothing in your time in The Wilds you pathetic worm?"

Bontick watched as Anton leaped up onto the table in front of him and squatted down on the surface, kicking several plates of expensive food onto the floor. He never saw Cihera's hand snatch the front of his breathing mask and rip it off with little fanfare, the straps slicing into his skin and causing blood to streak downward.

Anton looked at him, his wolf eyes going to the Nehtes that impaled Bontick's leg completely through. He smiled a cruel smile baring his wolf fangs. "Does that hurt Bontick?" He asked in an almost cheery voice. "Here let me help you with that." Anton leaped from the table and landed in front of him his hand closing around the Nehtes.

"No!" Bontick screamed too late as Anton yanked the Nehtes free from his leg with barely a pause.

Cihera snatched a chair from the table just as he began to fall and slammed it into the back of his legs causing him to collapse into the small seat. "Take a rest Evolli bastard!" She snarled.

Bontick cried out as his squat body settled into the chair, his yellowish blood splashing wetly on the floor as it flowed from between his fingers. "What... what do you want?" He shouted as he watched Anton remove something from his belt and slap it down on the table activating it. The small blue light came on and flashed on and off in the center of the small disc.

"I should skin you where you sit for ambushing my friends and attempting to kill us!" Cihera hissed at him. "Las'elh if he so much as twitches, please ventilate his empty Evolli skull!"

Las'elh jammed the barrel of her K14 tighter into Bontick's moist cheek. "With the utmost pleasure!" She spoke.

Cihera moved around in front of him. "How did you find out we had Gravork?" She asked.

"You will kill me anyway!" Bontick snarled. "Why should I tell you anything Drow bitch?"

Anton's fist lashed out with devastating power and smashed into Bontick's injured leg causing his eyes to nearly explode from his head. "That is my mate and wife you speak to Bontick!" Anton growled. "You will answer her questions... for if you don't I will begin with your injured leg and start removing pieces of you as I go! You will not die Bontick!" Anton removed something else from his belt and set it on the table, unwrapping it slowly to expose gleaming metal tools with edges and points. "I will keep you alive my Evolli friend... and you will experience more agony than you could ever imagine even on your worst day." Anton reached over and removed the first long tool. The edge was blunt with what appeared to be pinchers at the end.

Cihera smiled savagely. "You should listen to him Bontick." She spoke. "I have seen him keep a member of your vile species alive for six days before the fool broke. When my husband was done with him all that remained was his upper torso. He had lost both arms and legs."

Bontick's eyes grew wide. "You are part of the Union!" He screamed. "Only a Spartan can use a Nehtes! You can not do this!"

Cihera looked at Anton. "You may begin husband." She said. "Take his left fingers first!" Anton smiled and moved forward.

"NO!" He bellowed. "Wait! You are Krypteria! You have to be! Only the Krypteria would be so bold! I want... I want immunity! I will tell you everything... but I want to live!"

Anton's hand stopped and he looked at Bontick for a moment before turning to Cihera. "Wife?" He asked.

Cihera turned her head to the table. "Armetus?"

Bontick's eyes grew wider as he saw the small device on the table flare into a small holo image of the famed leader of the Krypteria. Armetus was in what appeared to be a very neat office standing in front of a large window and drinking the mug of steaming liquid. Bontick knew well who Armetus was; the Lycavorian leader of the Krypteria had a price on his head almost as high as the King and his vile son during their war.

"Give me a reason to not give you to Anton." Armetus spoke in a harsh voice. "I have little reason to trust you or any of your disgusting species Bontick."

"I have information!" Bontick barked. "Valuable information!"

"How did you find out my people had Gravork?" Armetus asked.

"The Kavalians told me!" Bontick barked immediately. "They have had people watching that Kochab bastard for months! The moment they left Talbor Seven with him my Kavalian contact sent me a transmission."

"You are working for the Kavalians?" Las'elh demanded.

“I worked for whoever paid me the most!” Bontick snapped. “The Kavalians have set up an outpost of sorts on Nefoa. They strong armed the government there and basically took control under the guise of keeping peace between the warring factions. They are branching out all over The Wilds from there!”

“Why do they want Gravork so badly?” Cihera asked.

“He has brokered all of their T19 weapons deals!” Bontick replied. “He has been to Nefoa! He knows the lay out of the base there and he supposedly has information that would lead them to some sort of resistance group!”

“Resistance group?” Armetus asked.

Bontick nodded. “Rejects from their early biogenic experiments! Biogenic clones that did not die at the end of their life cycles! Things like that! That is all I overheard when I met with them! Gravork knows who their leader is. And he was the one that set up the meetings between these resistance fighters and the Lycavorian who gave them the ship manifests!”

“Anton?” Armetus asked looking at him in the transmission.

Anton nodded. “It’s possible. I never asked directly about the Kavalians and there would have been no reason for him to answer. I was only concerned with the weapons shipment and how these scum got the information about my aunts.”

“Your aunts?” Bontick asked. “What are you speaking of?”

Anton looked at him. “The two Queens your men were waiting to ambush on Eleysi Three!” She spat. “The ones my cousins sent to an early grave!”

“They are related to you?” Bontick gasped.

“My father is General/Colonel Daniel Simpson!” Anton barked.

“The Black Devil!” Bontick hissed.

Anton smiled. “You know him? How quaint. This leads me to my next question. How did you get the information about them? When they were leaving Hadaria?”

“One of your people!” Bontick snapped with a grin. “He hates all of you!”

Cihera rolled her eyes. “As if that is anything new.” She stated as her hand snapped out and she slapped him viciously. “Tell us something we don’t know! Is it the traitor Pusintin?”

Bontick looked at her. “Pusintin? He is a rabid dog. He hates my people almost as much as your pathetic King! He would never give us anything. He enjoys being Kavalian! It allows him to be that much crueler.”

“Well... we both hate you; at least we have that in common with him.” Armetus spoke.

This time it was Las’elh and she smashed the K14 across the side of his skin head hard, the action of the weapon cutting open his hairless scalp. “Then who!” She shouted as she jammed the K14 back into his cheek.

“And I grow tired... my finger might slip if you do not begin telling us something we don’t know!”

“I don’t know who he is!” Bontick screamed. “We have only met once and that was in a crowded tavern on Jagaliu! He wore a helmet and cowl. I never saw his face clearly. He wanted people who would target Union assets! I offered my help! And he paid well!”

“How well?” Cihera asked.

“To target the Queens of Leonidas and Union assets near the border and in The Wilds... five hundred million credits!” Bontick exclaimed. “I am not the only one he hired!”

Armetus’s eyes grew wider. “What do you mean?”

“He hired vampires too! Rogue purebloods to target your King’s children! And he had another Lycavorian lap dog with him!” Bontick told them. “He is the one who was meeting with the Kavalian resistance leaders and giving them the manifest information about the ships. This Lycavorian dog is smart. He uses others to do his dirty work and he plays both sides of the coin. He is far more than he makes himself seem!”

“Tell us about this other Lycavorian.” Cihera asked.

“He also wore a helmet and cowl... but I saw him remove it just as they were leaving. I caught a glimpse of his face! Dark hair... thick neck. It was too far to see his eyes!” Bontick spoke quickly. “They talked for a few moments and then parted in separate ships!”

“To where?” Anton asked.

“I don’t know! I didn’t bother to check!” Bontick shouted. “He is also the one that hired the vampire to kill the half elf daughter!”

Anton came alert even more than normal. “What?” He exclaimed.

Cihera turned to the transmission. "Armetus? What does he speak of?"

"Someone sabotaged Normya's TYPE II." Armetus explained. "An explosive device on her LSD Coil Drive. It sent her ship out of control and she hit a Jump Gate trying to save it. A group of mercenaries waited until her ship drifted across the border and then they tried to take her."

"Tried?" Anton asked.

Armetus nodded. "Normya was rescued by a group of Immortals Anton." He spoke seeing the alarm on Anton's face. "She is alive because of them!" He added quickly seeing the looks of horror on both Anton and Cihera's faces now. "They are part of Cha'talla's Tribe and they have sworn a Blood Oath to protect her because of what Martin did on Lycavore a quarter century ago. Dysea and Iriral are with her now and they are heading back to Union space to begin a discrete investigation of their own. Normya and Dysea were with these Immortals for a week Anton. These are not the Immortals we have grown up knowing."

"Does Uncle Martin know this?" Anton asked.

Armetus chuckled. "If the King knew someone was targeting his children, we would have locked the Union down a long time ago Anton." He said shaking his head. "No... Dysea is keeping this limited to a few so that those involved do not run underground and hide. Which only makes her actions more intelligent based on what this fool has told us." They watched Armetus move to a large desk. "The weapons deal with the High Coven Immortals? Was this Lycavorian involved in that as well?"

Bontick shook his head quickly. "No. We did that on our own. They reached out to us and I had a supply of the dragon killers myself."

Armetus nodded as he sat down in the high backed chair. "That corresponds to what your father discovered Anton." He spoke calmly. "Martin is on Hadaria right now with Anja. The Arch Ministry is acting up again. They will be returning in a few days I'm sure. Dysea should be reaching Union space shortly and then on to Apo Prime. That is where they will start their investigation." They watched as an aide came in and Armetus took the data pad from him. "Commander Las'elh... I owe you an apology. It appears you were right all along. I intend to pass this information of to Minister L'tian and Colonel Su'ave. Once Dysea and For'mya got involved with this... he became rather forthcoming."

Cihera looked at Las'elh and smiled at her. "I told you." She said softly.

"Thank you... I... I don't know how to refer to you sir." Las'elh spoke.

Armetus chuckled once more. "You are permanently attached to the Krypteria as of right now Commander." He stated. "Full reinstatement with the EI is yours if you wish. Or you could remain with Anton and Cihera and continue helping them."

Las'elh didn't hesitate. "I will stay with them sir." She stated. "I am closer now to finding my sister than I have ever been, and I have found something I have never had before. I am not leaving now."

Armetus nodded. "Then welcome to the Krypteria." He said. "Anton... Cihera... have Malia and Nalar execute their extraction plan. If the Kavalians knew you had Gravork then they know that at least our operation on Nebonese was a front. I will need to review all our Drow Ops and decide from there."

"They are already working on it." Anton spoke. "Do we return to the Union Armetus?"

Armetus shook his head. "Not openly. Have Nalar and Malia bring their people home, but take half the MUTT Squad and meet Dysea on Apo Prime. I'll have Lynwe and Aihola debrief Nalar and Malia on Earth. Go to the Mjolnir's Hand base near the palace. That is where Dysea will be set up for now and your information will confirm what she already knows based on what Normya told her. As far as everyone else knows the royal family is on Earth... with the exception of Dysea. All they know is that Martin and Anja left for a quick trip to Hadaria and that is how it will stay. I will have some equipment and documents waiting for Las'elh when you arrive."

"Armetus... a Lycavorian with access to those types of funds." Cihera said. "There can't be that many of them."

"You might be surprised Cihera." He replied. "Millions have prospered since Martin became King. And prospered very well. Unfortunately... there are those out there that do not like that."

"The Peace and Utopia movement." Cihera said.

Armetus nodded. "Yes indeed." He lifted the pad in his hand and began reading. "We will need to..."

Anton and Cihera saw his eyes go wider as he read whatever was on the pad. "Armetus?" Anton asked.

Armetus looked up at the aide who was still in the office with them but out of the transmission cone. “This is accurate?” He demanded as he came to his feet.

“The transmission was received only nineteen minutes ago sir.” The voice replied.

“Armetus... what is wrong?” Cihera asked.

Bontick began to laugh then. “The great Armetus at a loss for words!” He bellowed. “I...”

Anton twisted around and delivered a straight right cross to Bontick’s face. The blow had the desired affect, Bontick’s head snapped around, his body warped out of the chair and he fell unconscious to the floor blood leaking from his now shattered jaw.

“Armetus... what is wrong?” Cihera asked.

“Nubou!” Armetus barked. “This is not good!”

“Armetus...”

“Anton... I want you to use your drugs on Bontick!” Armetus snapped. “I want you to take that scum and drain whatever may be of value in his head. Everything.”

“And then?” Anton asked.

“Martin has already ordered the sentence for Bontick and his ilk.” He replied. “Carry it out. I need to act on this here Anton!” He declared. “Marci has full knowledge of what you are doing. If you need anything... contact her. I will be out of pocket for a few days.”

“Armetus... what have you discovered?” Anton asked. “What is on that pad?”

Armetus looked at him in the transmission. “The real reason the High Coven is on Earth.” He stated. “And Martin Leonidas is going to sibfla in his pants when he sees this... for lack of a better phrase at the moment. I have to go. Remain alert... all of you.”

Armetus ended the transmission before Anton could speak and he turned to look at Cihera and Las’elh who had moved up next to her. “Cihera... when have you ever known Armetus to look as harried as he just did?” He asked.

“Never.” Cihera answered immediately. “Whatever he just found out I am sure we will discover it soon enough. I will contact Nalar and Malia. Will you see to our extra baggage here?”

Anton looked down at Bontick’s limp frame. “Can’t we just interrogate him here and then leave his corpse in the garbage pile in back? We already have one piece of garbage stinking up our cargo hold.”

“What... what is the King’s sentence for Bontick and the others?” Las’elh asked.

They both looked at her. “They began the war and did not want to stop when they lost.” Cihera said. “The Evolli who live peacefully on their worlds have no worry from us. Those who do not... well... Uncle Martin has said they are to be executed on sight.”

“Without a trial?” Las’elh asked.

“The Surrender Terms were their trial.” Anton spoke. “They chose not to abide by them... now when they are caught... they are treated as war criminals and executed without pause.” He told her. “We did not start the war Las’elh... and we have helped those Evolli who agreed to peace rebuild their world and government. This scum chooses not to follow their leaders who decided peace was preferable to war.”

“There are many like them out here Anton.” Las’elh spoke.

Cihera nodded. “Yes... that is what worries us the most.” She said. “It seems we have enemies popping up out of the woodwork I believe the saying is.”

Anton nodded. “Then it’s time to get an exterminator.” He stood up fully. “I will get my bag and interrogate this idiot here. Take Las’elh and prep our ship Cihera. I won’t be long. Whatever Armetus has discovered is very big and I want to be back in Union space with Aunt Dysea when we find out what it is.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

OMEN THREE

PE’LOHAGRO

HIGH COVEN SPACE

This is why her father had given her this command.

Yuriko Leonidas stared through the view window at the smoke rising from the other end of the compound that protruded from the barren rock surface of Pe'lohagro. Her personal Mark IV ArmorPly was covered in dust and splotches of blood from their assault, and now her team was working on placing their explosive charges. They had hit this place with no warning and no mercy, her team of vampire and Lycavorian troops superbly trained and having worked together for nearly five years now.

Yuriko let her mind wander back through the years, always going back to the day when Martin Leonidas, the man she called her father had come back into her life. The two years she had spent on EDEN Moon Base as part of the witch Yuri's cover story had very few moments of real joy in them, all of them concerning him. He had accepted her without question as his daughter, surprising even himself in his actions then. He had not known who or what he was at that time, nor had Yuriko for that matter. She had figured it out during her four plus centuries looking for Lisisa and fighting the Coven on Earth, and the one fear that had always crept into her belly was that he would not accept her once she came back into his life. All those fears had been laid to rest that day on the LEONIDAS I-Attack Cruiser when he had embraced her in his powerful arms outside that cell just as tightly as he had when she was but a child. Yuri had butchered her parents, robbing Yuriko of a childhood with her own kind, but in the process of doing that Yuri had unwittingly given her so much more.

That day on the ship outside that cell Yuriko had been reborn.

She had spent the next year looking for Lisisa with Daniel Simpson and Filrian at her side. At first she had questioned her father sending Daniel with her, believing he sent the man he considered his brother along to watch her because he did not trust her. That had never been the case as Yuriko quickly learned. He entrusted the man he considered his brother to Yuriko's care and guidance, entrusted her to teach him of The Wilds. He communicated regularly with her, denying her nothing when it came to searching for Lisisa or anything she might need on a personal basis. When she told him they had found Lisisa, her father had kept his promise to her, and together they had rescued her from Lycavore. It mattered not that Lisisa was not her blood sister; Yuriko had spent the first ten years of Lisisa's life shielding her from Yuri's demented ideas and experiments.

This was the entire bond Yuriko needed to call Lisisa her sister.

Even after Andro had been born, and then Eliani, he never dismissed her or Lisisa. If anything he pulled them closer to him, training them to be even more lethal and competent than they already were. They were his daughters, perhaps not by blood she now knew, but by the bond of a promise and love.

And Martin Leonidas never broke his promises.

It was her father who had finally gotten her to see the love that Filrian held for her in his heart. It was Martin Leonidas who finally got her to admit that she loved the Hadarian man back just as intensely as he loved her, and to let go of her past and embrace the future they could have together. It was just another list of events that tied her closer and closer to him in a way that even blood could not sever. She and Lisisa had gone with him to defeat the Kavalian animals when they had attacked Gamji, standing beside him and Torma in the thick of battle. She had fought beside him during the Evolli War, always covering his back and side. He left her out of nothing, and next to Andro, Yuriko knew without question that she was perhaps the best informed of any of his children. She and Andro had a very close relationship. One that nearly matched the closeness he shared with Zarah. And only Yuriko knew what the reasons behind that were.

When they discovered this facility existed he came to her with an opportunity.

It was during the third year of the Evolli War, and they had met in secret with Armetus and Andro. He wanted to give her this new ship, the finest technicians and skilled operators anywhere in the Union, and he wanted to turn her loose in High Coven space to monitor this facility and gather intelligence. She would be his 'Ace in the Hole' as he had called it. This opportunity entailed that they stage a falling out of sorts, a public disagreement that could be used to explain her disappearance from the Leonidas family venue. It was the hardest thing she had ever done in her life, savagely disagreeing with him in public, even striking him as hard as she could. All to advance their plan. Only Armetus and Andro knew the real reasons behind these actions, but it allowed her to go places and report intelligence that would not have been possible had she been on good terms with her father. It gave her freedom to operate as she wished, and while they could not speak to one another in the open, they spent hours talking of everything when they communicated once a month. Here she was, a pureblood vampire woman, and she called a pureblood Lycavorian her beloved father. A Lycavorian with the purest blood of all, and who was King. Yuriko had to smile at this, for she knew Yuri had never envisioned this would come about.

Yuriko had an idea of what her father had going through his head when he sent her here. Like Andro she had spent hours upon hours delving into how his mind worked. He was not the violent, ignorant brute everyone thought him to be. He only cultivated that idea so as to disarm his potential enemies. Her adopted father was a cunning beast, more so than any man, woman or creature she had ever met and she would follow him into the very pits of Hades itself if he asked her too.

Yuriko shifted her 190 to the opposite hip as the door to her side opened and Filrian entered. His ArmorPly looked much the same as hers, his dark hair longer now and tied into long strips almost like dreadlocks. Her cobalt blue vampire eyes watched as he approached and Yuriko felt the warmth flood through her whenever she gazed at her husband. He had been with her for going on three hundred years now, and it had taken her that long to realize that he loved her with all that he was. She felt shame when she thought back on all the men who had shared her bed in that time, knowing now what he had felt for her for so long. This was another reason she so loved her adopted father, he had helped her to take off the blinders and see Filrian's devotion to her for what it was. He had not even gotten the question of her marrying him fully out of his mouth and Yuriko was telling him yes. He was not the largest man who had ever shared her bed, but his touch was the only one in all her years that could set her on fire with a simple caress or make her tremble in need. His marriage to her had caused many rifts within the Hadarian Arch Ministry, but as he had always done, Filrian dismissed them without thought. He had the backing and support of Anja and Sivana, the Divine One Eurin and Zaniai. What he had taught himself through the years on how to extend his powers and have to not return to Hadaria as often to Ascend was now taught within the Healer Academy on Hadaria.

"Husband?" Yuriko said softly as he came up to her.

"The facility is secure and Team Four is finishing its sweep of the lower levels." He spoke. "One minor injury. Security was higher than we had planned for, but we dealt with it. Fewer guards but much more electronic surveillance. We hit them in the middle of a shift change it appears. Six Immortals and forty-three High Coven Elite are KIA. We have the nineteen scientists who did not resist locked down in the mess lounge."

"The Immortals are new." Yuriko spoke.

Filrian nodded. "Perhaps after the breach seven years ago the Empress decided to station them here."

"How soon before High Coven Command realizes something is amiss?" She asked.

"I'd say three hours tops." Filrian answered. "Another two before that ORIC-Class Heavy Cruiser and its DARKBROOD frigate escorts get within sensor range of this rock."

"We won't be here that long. Make sure we download the entire core for my mothers to examine." Yuriko spoke. "I know it has been a long time, but let's see if we can discover who hit them seven years ago and what they took if anything?"

"I can't tell you who hit them... but I know what they took." He said.

Yuriko looked at him surprised. "How?"

Filrian handed her the datapad. "They never replaced it." He said. "Perhaps they felt they had enough."

Yuriko looked at the pad reading quickly and her cobalt blue vampire eyes grew darker. "We must get this information to father as soon as we are off this rock." She stated.

Filrian nodded. "I already have them prepping a Black Sun COM probe. We are placing Tetreon charges under each of the fusion units, and around the cooling system for the reactor. This planet has a sizeable volcanic and seismic signature. It will appear as if a dormant volcano erupted directly into the ground level of the facility. Team Three is in the process of removing any possible footprint we could leave. For all intents and purposes... we will have never been here."

Yuriko nodded. "What would I do without you Filrian?" She asked.

Filrian chuckled. "You did pretty well before you met me." He said.

Yuriko pressed her body up close to his taller frame and relaxed, her cobalt blue eyes returning to their normal dark brown as she gazed at him. "I bless the day you came into my life husband. And I berate myself just as much for being so blind as well through those years."

Filrian shook his head with a smile as he looked into her eyes and reached up to stroke her cheek. "Our time was not yet meant to be Yuriko. We have had this discussion before. We were not meant to come together until after your father returned and changed the course of both our lives. I do not regret one moment of our time together before we were married. Now that I have you... I intend to make the most of it.”

Yuriko smiled up into his dark green eyes. “As do I.” She said. She rested her head against his chest, stealing a moment among the death and destruction to feel the peace he gave her so utterly. “I will be very happy to return and be among my family once more. As much as I know what we have been doing is important, I miss my brothers and sisters.”

Filrian stroked her long black hair and nodded. “Do you think our villa in Gytheio has held up to our absence?” He asked with a grin.

“We’ll just have to break it in again... as we did when we were married.” Yuriko said.

“Now I will look forward to that.” Filrian said.

Yuriko smiled. “As will I.” She said.

“Do we take the Coven scientists with us?” Filrian asked.

Yuriko allowed her head to rest against his chest for a moment longer, the beating of his heart always able to calm her. She took a deep breath and stepped away from him. “Is the item father wanted secure?”

Filrian nodded. “Already on its way back to OMEN THREE.” He replied. “Why would he want it?”

Yuriko shook her head. “I don’t know.” She replied. “I do know for him to resort to this action he is very worried about something.”

Filrian nodded. “Your father does nothing without thought Yuriko. You know this better than I.”

Yuriko nodded. “Yes I know. I have an idea what he is planning... and if I’m right he will cut the head from the Kavalian leadership in one stroke. Then again... he is as predictable as an Ion Storm.”

Filrian nodded. “That is also very true.”

“We know part of it husband.” Yuriko spoke looking at him. “A part that my father said Andro will be the first to discover. There is purpose in that statement. There is purpose in almost everything he does. He has a plan and our answer will come when Andro discovers what my father intends for him to discover.”

“The question remains... how Andro will react when he finds out?” Filrian said. “I have come to realize through the years that your brother has the potential to be far more ruthless and unforgiving than your father.”

Yuriko nodded. “Yes... he certainly does. And that is what I think my father is counting on.”

“And the scientists?” Filrian asked.

“Vith them!” She spat. “For what they have built here... they can die with the horror they have created. Let us gather our people and leave this place husband.”

“That’s the best news I have heard in a week.” He stated taking her hand. He lifted his other arm and placed it close to his lips. “All OMEN THREE units... this is Omen Three One Alpha. Execute extraction protocols per Omen Three Actual. We are leaving.”

Filrian and Yuriko turned and headed out of the room as acknowledgments came over the COM implants they wore in their ears.

EARTH EDEN CITY

Miranda had decided to meet with E’dira alone and while she had no fear of the Drow, the moment she laid eyes on E’dira, Miranda began to wonder if coming alone had been such a good idea. Seeing her the first time, back dropped against the rising sun in the window had sent a shudder through Miranda. A shudder she thought she would never feel again.

The Drow Lieutenant E’dira almost matched Lynwe’s height of six foot, her body a near perfect combination of muscularity and femininity. Her breasts were not large, smaller than Miranda’s own, but exceptionally firm and protruding proudly. The lightweight Drow Scout body armor hugged her lithe frame exquisitely, highlighting all her curves as well as the definition of her legs and ass. Her iridescent white hair looked like it was spun from silk, long and flowing over her shoulders to curl around her firm chest. Her skin was like dark chocolate in color, her lips full and a light pink in color. And her amber colored eyes held Miranda’s gaze as a flame could hold a moth. Tareif had allowed her to use his office and now she silently thanked him for that. Unlike at any time in her adult life, Miranda Lorian found herself unable to call on her supreme self control and she found herself weak kneed and nervous.

The Drow E'dira for her part was in almost no better shape.

E'dira had escaped the High Coven concentration camps with Lynwe and Tari and three hundred others nearly twenty-six years ago, the Coven scientists and their twisted experiments turning all of them into things that they thought would make them outcasts even among their own people. The dramatic realization that Aihola, a fellow escapee and experimental subject just like them, was in fact descended from their Drow Queen began their long journey back into active life and honor. Aihola had been named Queen shortly before the Battle for Earth and had brought the remaining Drow out of hiding to the city their King had been building. They were accepted without question and many of them, Lynwe and Tari among them, were promoted to some of the highest ranks among the defenders of Earth. E'dira had fought beside Lynwe until she had been injured, then she had happily joined with General Vengal's unit just before they stormed that field of battle against the High Coven Immortals. She was one of hundreds of Drow who fought that day, who witnessed the unimaginable bravery and savageness of their King and so many Lycavorian Spartans they fought beside. They were made to be the closest to the Spartan warriors as was possible, and they proved their mettle that day. Since that day, King Leonidas had heaped upon them positions of honor and distinguished importance.

General/Colonel Lynwe was the highest among them not including their Queen. She was honored throughout the Union for her actions on that day so long ago and for her actions during the Evolli war. She had commanded a complete battalion of Drow Scouts that had wreaked havoc behind Evolli lines for the entire duration of the war. She now commanded all Drow Scouts with General Vengal. She was married to a Lycavorian, and she had two females that called her Mistress and were devoted to her. She had built a life for herself, with family and friends and a position few Drow hoped to obtain as one of King Leonidas's closest and most trusted advisors. It was well known among the Drow that when King Leonidas wanted something done, something very important and requiring the most unique of skills, the only place he came was to Lynwe. This respect and honoring of the Drow had earned him status on a par with their Queen Aihola, and there was not a Drow among their people who would not throw their lives away in a heartbeat for him.

It was Lynwe and Aihola who had shown E'dira that there was a path back from the abyss that the High Coven had dropped them into. She was half vampire, she could use blood to heal herself, but she did not need blood to survive. She had all of a vampire's skills, and none of their weaknesses. The training she had received from the Lycavorian Spartan instructors had given her and her fellow half vampire Drow elves unequalled skill, nearly doubling their lethal abilities. It was Lynwe who had shown her that she did not need to hold on to her hatred and anger, for it was a path to self destruction. It was Lynwe and her Queen, Selene, Tarifa and even Layna who had shown all of them they could love and be loved. When this epiphany finally came to E'dira; that is when she rededicated her life.

To the Union. To her friends and to herself.

E'dira took what she wanted, and what she wanted was to be the best Tactical Officer anywhere in the Union. She had worked towards this goal for the last two years, and now at two hundred and thirty-four years old, what she had desired for so long was finally going to be hers.

E'dira knew who Miranda 'Mando' Lorian was. There were few from Earth who did not know that name, or what she had accomplished as one of the fastest rising stars within the Union Fleet. She had the ear of Admiral O'Conner, Admiral Riall, and the King himself if the rumors were correct, and she had done all this as a human. Looking at her now from across the desk, E'dira couldn't help but be transfixed by the intensity of her dark eyes, or the way her uniform flowed around her figure. Lynwe had told her Mando Lorian was here for a tactical officer. A tactical officer on a new ship that would become King Leonidas's armored fist. She would not tell her more, but that was enough to entice E'dira to put forth her file for the chance to be chosen. It appeared that her dedication had paid off in more ways than one. She may have been human, but Miranda Lorian stirred E'dira in a way that no man or woman ever had, and for a female Drow who had returned to her roots that was significant. Like Lynwe and her Queen, E'dira was dominant in all that she did. Unlike Lynwe and Aihola however, E'dira had not yet had the courage to actively pursue a relationship because of what she was. Looking at Miranda Lorian across the desk caused E'dira to suddenly want that courage in the worst way. There was something about the woman and it was not just physical beauty. There were many beautiful females all over Earth, but to E'dira they lacked the one thing that she had always searched for in a partner.

Strength.

That is what Miranda Lorian had oozing from her pores. Strength of character, strength of body and spirit, and above all else strength of mind.

So caught up in her thoughts, E'dira almost didn't hear what Miranda was saying and missed the question.

"Excuse me?" She asked quickly for lack of anything better to say.

Miranda met her amber eyes. "Why did you accept the demotion?" She asked again. "I read the report... you were not wrong in your actions."

"A political situation would have embarrassed Aihola my Queen, and it would have also embarrassed King Leonidas, for they would have sided with me." E'dira said honestly. "I would never allow that to happen."

"You did it for political reasons then?" Miranda asked.

E'dira shook her head. "I did it because they would have done the same for me if our positions were reversed." She answered. "Some may call it politically motivated; they do not understand what honor is then."

Miranda sat back in her chair impressed by the answer. She nodded her head finally. "In that I would have to agree." She said. "May I ask you a question?"

"Of course Captain Lorian?"

Miranda shook her head. "You have the position E'dira... you had it before this meeting began based on your record alone." She said. "I wanted the best... Lynwe told me you were the best. She wasn't wrong. I prefer to be called Mando... it's my call sign and something I have worked very hard to build."

E'dira cocked her head slightly. "You and Lynwe speak of each other as if you have been friends for many years." She said softly. "If that is true it is something that is not well known among others."

Miranda nodded. "It's true." She said. "Lynwe had a hand in keeping me out of trouble when I was younger. My adopted parents and siblings were killed in the Eden City Battle. A half vampire Drow like you saved my life and protected me until the Battle was over. She looked after me for a few weeks until a foster care program was established after the war. Lynwe and Selene were part of that."

"Mary as well?" E'dira asked.

Miranda nodded. "Mary helped many orphans after that day."

E'dira nodded. "And many elves." She said. "Several dozen Drow children if memory serves me correctly."

"Yes she did." Miranda spoke.

"Please Mando... what is your question?" E'dira asked.

Miranda smiled. "Well... this is not in regards to the position or anything. It's more personal really, but it's something I've always been curious about." She said. "Aihola... Lynwe... the Drow as a whole really... you are, some would say you are fanatically loyal to Martin Leonidas. I have always wondered why that is."

"There was a time when King Leonidas held our Queen's life in his hands." E'dira spoke softly. "She didn't know who she was at the time... that knowledge did not come until later... but something stayed his hand that day. He could have extinguished her life flame in a blink of an eye, but he did not. He could have destroyed our city in Canada after the actions over those few days. He stayed his hand. We owe... we owe our very existence to him. We owe the life of our Queen to him. Never once has he brought this knowledge up or used it against us in any way. Instead... he considers us his elite warriors. On a par with his Durcunusaan and Mjolnir's Hand. That is why any of us would die for him. For any of his Queens or children as well."

"So it's a matter of honor?" Miranda asked softly.

E'dira nodded. "Honor and faith." She said. "One day... one day if we are lucky, perhaps a Drow female will attract a member of his bloodline enough that it will bind us to him forever. I believe many of my people secretly hope that this will happen one day. The Drow are few in number when compared to others, and a Drow female or male warrior within the bloodline of Leonidas would insure our existence millennia from now, for the line of Leonidas will never die." She shrugged with a smile. "Who knows?"

Miranda nodded as she got to her feet. "I'm sure by now you have figured out it is a ship." She said.

E'dira nodded. "I figured that out the moment you began meeting with Steven Randall." She answered. "With the exception of Queen For'mya, Arram and Normya Leonidas and Star Colonel Endith, and yourself I understand... there are none who could match him in the cockpit of a fighter. He and Zaala will be joining us?"

Miranda nodded. "Word gets around." She said.

E'dira shook her head. "Not as much as you might think... Mando." She said detecting a small amount of anger emanating from Miranda. "There is a very small circle on Earth... here in Eden City. It all stems from Aihola my Queen and Tarifa. War Master Tareif, Isra, General Lynwe, Lady Selene... those are a few in this circle. It is a very close knit and faithful family."

Family. There was that word again Miranda thought.

"Does that circle include you?" Miranda asked.

E'dira smiled and her amber eyes glittered in the light of the room as she shook her head. "No. I am just very close to the fringes of that circle. I will have my own circle, my own family one day. It will allow me to rebuild my clan and its name."

"What is your clan name if you don't mind me asking?" Miranda asked. "I know the Drow consider their clan and family name sacred... not something that is known to those who are not part of that. I would understand..."

"My Clan and family name is Tedeyara. I am all that is left of my clan and family, the rest were killed fighting the High Coven or the Evolli." E'dira smiled and gazed at Miranda. "I am the only one left... at least for the moment."

"Yet you fought at Alba Tau." Miranda said softly. "Why did you risk your clan name there if you were the last?"

E'dira got to her feet. "You must understand... King Leonidas... he is magical to us." She said. "No one knows how... but without even asking he knows every Drow family and clan. He knows our secrets... what resides in our hearts. Many of my people say that his gifts within Mindvoice have allowed him to become part Drow in a sense. Prince Androcles is no different now. I was on Alba Tau... yes... my scout unit was assigned to General Simpson's command. He is married to Nayeca as you undoubtedly know and he is a member of Clan Anatyla. The Queen's Clan. The others in my scout unit were killed. We were pinned down with General Simpson and I was injured... but somehow King Leonidas knew I was close by. He knew I was there... I believe he communicated within Mindvoice to some within our perimeter because three Spartans formed a protective circle around me and refused to let me throw myself upon the Evolli. I believe... I believe King Leonidas knew I was there... that I was the last of my family and clan and he ordered those Spartans to protect me at all costs."

"What makes you believe that?" Miranda asked enthralled with this knowledge.

"When it was all over... as the medics were putting me on the medivac, I asked one of these Spartans why they had done this." E'dira spoke softly. "He told me they were following orders and that I had more to accomplish in this life. When they told me that... I knew." E'dira stepped closer to her. "Just as you have more to accomplish Miranda Lorian. That is why you survived as well."

Miranda looked at her as she stepped even closer. "I... I always thought it was luck." She stammered.

E'dira stopped in front of her, looking down into her beautiful dark eyes as she shook her head. "Luck is just another word for destiny." She said softly. "For faith. Perhaps as we work together you will allow me to show you what faith and destiny is? If... if you will still offer me the position."

Miranda took a deep breath and called on her iron will to calm her racing heart as she stared into those near glowing amber points of light.

"The job is yours, I already told you that." She spoke calmly. "We just have one more place to visit before we begin heading back."

E'dira smiled as she held her own raging emotions and racing heart in check in typical Drow fashion. Oh she wanted this woman without question. She watched as Miranda turned and moved back to the desk and began gathering her things, E'dira's amber eyes admiring the way Miranda filled out her uniform. She felt the tug in her lower abdomen and the warmth it caused. It was a sensation that E'dira never thought she would feel again.

"Where is this visit we must make?" She asked finally.

"I made Admiral O'Connor a promise when he gave me this command." Miranda told her. "I intend to keep that promise. We are going to Pearl Harbor."

What was happening to her?

This was not what was supposed to be happening. This was not how she was told it would be. They had told her that she would be hated and looked down upon. They had told her they would not respect her or her abilities. They told her a machine would be used to increase her bond with her dragon.

None of that had come to pass.

Her bond was growing in power not because of a machine, but because she had finally taken the time and effort to learn of her bonded one. To meditate and speak with them and learn of their dreams and desires for the future. To see her bonded one not as a tool to be used, but as an extension of herself. In just short of a month now she had learned more than she had ever envisioned. Her body was leaner and she was faster and stronger, adding to impressive skills no one knew she possessed. Androcles Leonidas was a task master, driven and purposeful to the extreme. His siblings were no different, driving all of them to the edge of what they could do and then extending and expanding that edge a little each time.

They were accepted here in SODRAG. Accepted as fellow riders. Her bonded one had immersed themselves in the history and lore of their kind, discovering history they would never had known had they not come here. The others were changing as well, and it made her that much happier to see it was not just her. Seeing the interaction of the Leonidas family, the respect and adoration they held for each other was spreading to all the riders, not just her. The care and love that they bestowed upon their bonded ones, how they were viewed as members of their family and not as beasts of burden. Being surrounded by all of this had changed her even more than what she had witnessed those years ago that had set her on this path. Being here in this place, being treated with respect and equality, it made what she felt inside so much stronger and more pronounced. It had opened her eyes to things she would never have experienced or felt and she found herself embracing those new sensations and feelings tighter as every hour passed. Not to mention that she had found the one who would complete her, of that she had no doubts. And considering who it was, and the knowledge that she didn't care who it was, that told her all she needed to know. That told her she was right. Where she would be scorned and ridiculed in the High Coven for her feelings, here she would be embraced and honored.

She knew others were feeling it as well.

She and the others were sent here to hide a different agenda that much she was sure of. What that agenda was she did not know, but bringing them here was not going to produce the results that were expected. With only those fools Dante and Javier Moran as the exceptions, she and the other riders were learning and growing. They were seeing the High Coven for what it was, they were seeing the path of destruction the High Coven was hurtling down and they were seeing what all of them could become.

She had set herself on this path that day, and the more time that she remained here, she knew that had been the right choice.

And she had no intention of failing.

Eliani rolled over with a soft moan of exquisite soreness and settled her head onto Nyla's bare breasts. Her fern green eyes popped open when she realized Malic was not between them as he had been when they had fallen asleep and she lifted her head up. Her wild and tangled looking burgundy colored hair fell all around her face and shoulders, brushing against Nyla's flawless skin and she saw her beautiful green eyes half open and she was wearing a dreamy expression on her face.

"Aur Enyla?" Eliani whispered softly.

Nyla smiled and shook her head slowly. "Do not move Ussta Che." She answered in a whisper as well. "I wish to relish the divine soreness I feel for as long as I am able too." She said.

Eliani grinned. "I do know what you mean." She said as she lowered her chin to Nyla's shoulder and stared at her vampire lover's face. Nyla's almost porcelain like features had always been a turn on for her and now that they had found Malic it was even more pronounced and deep.

"By the gods Eliani... he has reshaped us." Nyla spoke softly. "He was like an insatiable beast." She spoke with a chuckle. "And we loved it!"

“Well... we haven’t really left this bed for two days you know.” Eliani stated with a sated tone of voice. “I did not realize how well endowed our new husband is aur enyla. I don’t think I was this sore even after completing my Agoge.”

“Will it always be like this?” Nyla asked looking at her.

“Carians I hope so!” Eliani exclaimed.

The last two days had been nothing short of blissful ecstasy for both of them.

Eliani could not remember how many times she had exploded over the course of the last two days. If it wasn’t Malic exploring her body as a child would explore a new toy, kissing, nuzzling and caressing her in every way she could imagine, it was his huge cock making her scream out his name. And if it wasn’t Eliani crying out in abandon it was Nyla, quivering in the same devastating pleasure as she was. He had opened his mind completely to them, his soul laid bare, and they had wrapped him within their love as tightly as they were able, returning to him all that they were as well. Their only true break came as they laid here snuggling against his warm, powerful body and they spoke of Lisisa. They were his mates now, his wives, and they would not do something against his wishes. He had expressed his opinion and agreed to what they suggested to him. They would begin the process of combining their holdings as mated and married individuals did, but until the time the documents and paperwork was complete, he would not question their decisions. He felt it was wrong what the Galactic Court had ruled, for Lisisa had helped him to see who he truly was, and Malic abhorred politics in any form. Eliani had told her mother For’mya that if they were going to search their villa, they needed to do it before their holdings were combined, for Malic was opposed to the Court’s decision and would not allow it afterwards. He trusted them and did not question their decision, and they loved him completely and would not go against him once the process was completed.

Nyla looked at Eliani’s bright eyes and reached up to stroke her cheek. “We have found our future Ussta Che.” She said softly.

Eliani nodded. “Yes we have.”

Nyla dropped her fingers to caress the marks of where Malic had bitten Eliani. “It feels different.” She said softly. “You... you and Malic are Soulmates now... and you didn’t keep that from me. What it makes you feel. I can not... I can not love you both more completely for sharing that with me.”

“Nyla... we will never keep anything from you.” Eliani said. “We are all soulmates. We belong together. I’ve sometimes thought Andro was always a little too preachy and serious when it came to finding Sadi... but now after experiencing these last two days I have come to understand him much better. The way our thoughts and minds have come together now, it gives me such a sense of peace.”

Nyla nodded her head. “Yes. A sense we have finally found our place in the universe.” She said.

Eliani rested her cheek on Nyla’s shoulder just as the smells of cooking food reached her sensitive wolf nose. She looked up quickly when she smelled the burning of meat and she chuckled. “He’s trying to cook!” She exclaimed.

Nyla turned her head and sniffed the air, and while it was very pronounced to Eliani, she could just detect the smell of burning meat. She chuckled softly and looked back to Eliani. “Should we go rescue him?”

“If we want to keep our bungalow from burning down... yes.” Eliani declared.

I told you it was too much heat! Vincix’s voice spoke from the window opposite where Malic stood in the kitchen. His silvery/purple scaled head and long neck was poking into the large window and gazing at his bonded one from across the room.

Malic wore only a pair of loose shorts, the rest of his body bare. He felt more alive at this moment than at any other point in his life. Not only had he and Vincix discovered each other, but he had found two women that he worshiped the ground upon which they tread. That Nyla was a vampire could not have mattered less to him than the color of the sky. Yes he had bitten Eliani, instinct driving him to do this more than anything because of the pure wolf blood in her. She may have been half Hadarian, but the Leonidas blood in her veins was exceptionally strong and something he could smell if he concentrated enough. While Eliani Leonidas was now his wolf soulmate, both of them together had claimed his soul and his being and he would draw no distinction between the two.

Well thank you brother! Malic retorted as he pulled the steaks off the stove top. Perhaps you could have said something before I wasted three perfectly good slabs of beef.

Do not listen to him Malic! Arydun's soft voice cooed now as her head moved up next to Vincix's, her large eyes in their own dreamy state for a dragon. Though Malic could not see it, when Vincix caressed the back of her neck with his snout, he knew her wings were twitching in delight. It is the thought that counts.

They aren't wasted! We will eat them! Vincix declared happily.

"Eat what?" Eliani's voice carried to them.

Malic's head turned quickly and he looked at Eliani and Nyla. Eliani had simply wrapped a sheet around her lithe frame while Nyla had thrown a thin black robe on. He fought down the renewed surge of desire as he looked at them, knowing that they needed food and all of them needed to return to their normal duties. Androcles had given them ample time to discover each other, but Malic knew they could not abuse that. They would have the rest of their lives to discover each other. He watched as they came up to him standing in their kitchen, two sets of sizzling green eyes looking at him with desire and love.

"I was... I was trying to make us breakfast." He spoke sheepishly. Eliani and Nyla looked at the burnt steaks on the counter as they pressed up close to him and they both smiled. "I am not much of a cook it seems."

Not a cook at all I'd say. Vincix chimed in with considerable humor.

Malic turned and looked at his bonded brother, seeing the humor in his eyes. "I will remember you said that when we are stranded somewhere and I need to cook for you." He stated stabbing the thick steak with the knife and flipping it at him across the room.

Vincix caught it easily in his razor like teeth and he turned to Arydun. A gift for you my beautiful new mate.

Arydun snorted and snatched the steak from his teeth, gulping it down. Thank you my handsome new mate.

Eliani and Nyla laughed and both of them extended up on their toes to kiss Malic's cheeks. "Sit down Malic." Eliani told him. "We will cook for you."

Malic drew them closer to him, wrapping his arms around their waists. "I will learn to cook." He said nuzzling first Eliani's neck and ear and hearing her sigh in delight and then switching to Nyla. As closely tied together as they had now become, Nyla could almost feel Malic's aura as he nuzzled her. She could feel what it did to Eliani and by virtue of that, what it did to her and she too sighed in enchantment.

We have more items to learn first. Vincix declared quickly. We still need to study for our exams!

Malic stabbed another of the steaks and flipped it at him. "Will you allow me to eat in peace before you assault my head brother?" He exclaimed as Vincix snatched the steak from the air and gulped it down.

Arydun was chuckling softly in Mindvoice as Vincix smacked his dragon lips. Perhaps if you give me that last one. He said.

Eliani and Nyla laughed and Eliani reached down and grabbed the last steak, flipping it through the air towards him. Vincix caught this one as well, but Arydun then snatched it from his jaw and gulped it down. He stared at her in surprise.

I was going to enjoy that! He exclaimed.

Arydun butted the underside of his jaw with her snout. Come my new mate... let us join Tharua and Jeth while they hunt. We need more than these morsels. We will leave Malic in the capable hands of his new mates.

Malic watched with a smile as their heads retreated from the open window and then he turned and looked at Eliani and Nyla as they stared up at him. Their green eyes gazed at him and he found his breath constricting in his chest as he gazed at their sensual and staggering beauty. "What?" He asked softly.

"Malic... do you realize how utterly and completely happy you have made us?" Eliani asked him in a similar voice as she stared into his gorgeous sea blue eyes.

"As happy as you have made me?" He asked her.

Nyla shook her head. "No Malic my love." She said. "We had almost given up hope of finding a man who could embrace what Eliani and I share. A man who could embrace it and not be frightened of it."

Malic smiled warmly. "I have come to understand that is what makes the two of you so very unique." He said. "It is part of who you are, and any who try to change that are fools. I have the two most beautiful women in the universe, and they are mine. That they love each other as much as they love me only makes it all the more sweet."

Eliani grinned as she pressed closer to him still. “Wow! And he even says things that make our hearts beat faster.” She said.

Malic chuckled. “Actually... Vincix told me to say that.”

They all laughed now and Eliani reached up to stroke his cheek. “I told you there was an Alpha in there somewhere that was scratching to find his way out.” She said as she nuzzled his chest. “I am so very happy he finally came out of his shell.”

“As am I.” Nyla said.

They heard the soft growling of Malic’s stomach and all of them burst out in laughter again. Eliani pushed him towards the nearby table with a gentle nudge. “Go sit down our love. Smelling your attempt at cooking has made us hungry as well. Can you make coffee?”

Malic smiled. “That I can do very well.”

Nyla directed him to the machine. “Then that is your task.” She said.

SPARTA GALLAIS’S LODGE

“...did not work as we had hoped.” Moran said as he sat in the main room of the suite apartment with Yuri, Tesand and Aikiro. “We did not anticipate they would admit what her role was so readily, nor did we take in to account that she may have been forced into her actions by her control officer.”

Tesand leaned forward. “Her step-mother and half brothers are currently in the maximum security prison on Apo Prime serving life sentences.” He spoke. “I was able to obtain that bit of information using the Netnews archives. Based on the reports that they have made public, it appears her version of the story is all very true.”

“This Sadi is also being hailed as the second coming of Gorgo in her manner, intelligence and how she treats others.” Moran stated evenly. “Acting as they have, admitting it and giving an extensive explanation as to what happen; it makes her untouchable right now. Even if we came into the open and revealed the situation with the clone of his mother, they would label us liars and no one would believe us.”

Aikiro nodded. “That was to be expected.” She said calmly. “I did not hope for anything to come of it. I only wanted to see their reaction. How they would act in the face of an event totally out of their control to predict.”

“His son’s action concerning the Kavalian Petition also gives us insight into him.” Yuri said. “Refusing to honor the Galactic Court Ruling, even as his other siblings followed the path of their bastard father.”

Aikiro nodded. “Indeed it does.” She said softly. “Though not as much as I would have liked.”

“It tells us he does not care for the Kavalian animals.” Yuri said confidently. “The reason he gave for refusing their ruling was very weak. It could only mean he distastes them almost as much as we do.”

Aikiro got to her feet and moved to the counter in the suite. “I question that to some degree.” She said thoughtfully. “Leonidas’s actions we can predict with reasonably certainty, the oldest son however, I am not so sure he follows his father’s path as closely as others seem to think.”

“What do you mean mother?” Yuri asked.

Aikiro poured herself another crystal glass of cloned blood and turned to look at them. “Androcles Leonidas is an enigma. In some respects his path parallels that of his father, but in many others he is completely different. His dedication to training our riders is not something I anticipated, nor is it something that his father expected, of that I am positive. His Mindvoice potential is... it can not be measured to be honest. It may have to do with the emotional state of his parents when he was conceived, that and the extreme pureness of their blood. If measured... I expect his blood is even more pure than yours Yuri.”

“Are you saying he is more powerful than me?” She asked.

Aikiro shook her head. “Not in terms of his different abilities no. I have taught you far more than he has learned simply because we discovered the remains of our Mindvoice first and were able to understand its effect on us. However, what he lacks in expertise, he more than makes up for it in terms of raw power. Just like his father. It would indicate that this Aricia is also descended from the Pralors that crashed on Lycavore, and somehow her ancestors were among those chosen to come here to Earth by Resumar.”

“You don’t actually believe Leonidas is on the same level as you mother? Do you?” Yuri asked aghast.

Aikiro nodded. "Like his son, he lacks finesse and experience, but in terms of raw power yes. Much of that is because of the bonds they share with their dragons, but technically in a prolonged one on one confrontation, they would ultimately win. You and I lack the necessary endurance that is a part of their wolf genes Yuri, and that is why we must use the superior skills that we have."

"Are you concerned about Leonidas's reaction Aikiro?" Tesand asked. "When he finally discovers why we are really here?"

Aikiro returned to the couch. "As long as we stick to the second phase of our operation we can control him. We can make him believe what we want him to believe. He will bluster and bluff, but he likes having the only Mindvoice ship in the universe under his control and he will do everything within his power to keep it that way." She replied. "That is why Juliana One is so important in the plan."

"Well... the only way he could discover what we want him to discover is to put boots on the ground." Moran spoke. "And in doing that he risks discovery, which would lead that pig Keleru to respond in kind."

"Leonidas may be a brute..." Aikiro said with a small smile. "But he surrounds himself with those who are intelligent and cunning. While we may have not seen the signs of superior technological advances, do not assume they are not there." She spoke. "What were you able to discover about this O'Connor person?"

Tesand shook his head. "What we talked about will not work." He replied. "Apparently he has had an ongoing relationship with an elf female since they first returned to Earth twenty-six years ago. She is Leonidas's personal pilot. He and the human female that he married were turned by Isabella two decades ago. There is nothing we can offer him that will coerce him to betray Leonidas now."

"It was a long shot anyway." Yuri spoke shaking her head. "I have found out through the years that he is very careful about whom he allows into his inner circle. Those that reside in that circle are completely loyal and will never betray him."

"We will sign this farce of a cease fire in three weeks." Aikiro spoke. "All the details have been worked out. Once that is signed we will be granted an embassy as well. It will allow us to do the same thing the Kavalians are doing now. Keep an eye on things."

Moran nodded. "I've seen some of their biogenic females that are now working at the embassy. They are being allowed to move about Sparta freely without obvious security." He said. "Including Keleru's youngest daughter. Don't you find that surprising?"

Aikiro shook her head. "Leonidas is doing the same thing I would do." She stated. "He is trying to insure the Kavalians do not find out about our dragons being here on Earth. He and his son have a fondness for the beasts that I do not understand. If that were to be discovered before our plans are in complete motion, it would be a major setback. We must do our part in that regard as much as it pains us."

"We should be mindful of where we go and what we do from now on." The new voice spoke.

They turned and Juliana moved from the shadows of the balcony where she had been standing silently. She had maintained a very low profile since being released from the prison cell, but still found herself drawn to that house and having to fight the increasing desire to return there. Her dark chocolate features were void of emotion, but her dark eyes were bright and very intelligent. Aikiro felt sexual warmth spread through her as she looked at her. While she may not have been as experienced as Toria in hers and Tesand's bed, Juliana was turning out to be an adequate replacement.

Aikiro nodded. "Juliana has informed me she is reasonably sure she is being followed. She can not pinpoint who or where, but she is certain of it. They are using the shadows but she can not detect them even when they move. Only that they are there."

"Drow." Moran told them confidently. "More specifically, the half vampire Drow that your scientists experimented on when we controlled Earth Yuri."

Juliana nodded. "I have reviewed that information and I believe Admiral Moran is correct in his statement." She said. "They were difficult for even purebloods to detect once they were altered and changed. My assessment is that they have had substantial additional training in using the shadows from someone very skilled and have blended this with their natural ability to remain undetected."

"Vonis and Isabella." Yuri spoke. "It has to be."

Aikiro nodded her head. "I would agree. Vonis was better at using the shadows than even your father." She said looking at Yuri. "And Veldruk, as much as it pains me to say, he was the finest I had ever seen. I have this Durcunusaan escort wherever I go so they must be using these Drow to cover the rest of you, and possibly the Kavalians. That is why they are letting them roam freely within the city.”

“Neither of us has done anything that would draw attention to ourselves.” Moran spoke quickly indicating Tesand.

“I would be extra cautious however.” Juliana spoke. “They will no doubt make the very correct assumption that the only place the elf reporter you approached could have gotten the information she had is from us.”

Yuri nodded. “And I doubt they will be happy we tried to embarrass the Crown Princess of their precious Union.”

“They will not do anything. They would have come to us already if they were going to do something.” Aikiro said calmly. “Even though Leonidas is not on Earth right now, his elf Queen For’mya or Deia would have come to me and blustered and blathered and threatened by now.”

Yuri looked at her. “If he is gone, will they adhere to the schedule you and he made for returning to the base and speaking with Narice and our people?”

Aikiro nodded. “I have already received confirmation from his son that he will arrive at the end of this week to take me there if Leonidas has not returned.” She looked at Yuri. “Both of us will not be able to be gone Yuri.” She stated. “I am quite sure the Kavalians are doing their best to watch us in whatever way they can. If we are seen departing together they will start asking questions. Once the Cease Fire is signed and the embassy is established, I will move to a home on the outskirts of Eden City. We have arranged for a Netnews release saying I will be remaining here on Earth to try and work out the details of several minor trade agreements with Earth’s President. Yuri... you will return to this base to continue your training with Vollenth, but it will be reported that you have left to return to Usu Ozeib 7. The Kavalians are being limited to Sparta right now, and I don’t imagine that will change in the near future, so they will think you have departed Earth completely to return to wherever they think our dragons are. Or attempt to follow you. In which case... the ship you will supposedly be on will be tracked going across the whole of High Coven space.”

“I don’t look forward to returning to that place mother. If they have not already killed Vollenth I might just do so myself.” She snorted in disgust. “He is becoming unmanageable even for me. I welcome the opportunity to not have his foul presence in my head.”

“It must be done Yuri.” Aikiro said.

Yuri nodded. “I know. I will endure.”

“I believe I have thought of a way for me to communicate with our people there even through the Mindvoice barrier. I think I have discovered a pattern to how the void Mindvoice areas are arranged.” Aikiro said gently. “I will need to test this idea when I am there again to see if it is possible. It may help me to discover where he is hiding the Mindvoice ship.”

“That is still a goal then?” Moran asked.

Aikiro nodded. “Oh yes. If anything... to deprive him of using it against us.” She looked at Tesand. “Have our people discovered anything in regards to where Dysea went?”

Tesand shook his head. “Nothing so far.” He replied. “The Wilds is a large place Aikiro. And if she went aboard a STRIKER DT, they would have a very long range.”

“That she has not returned yet is a surprise. Leonidas can not have any love for Immortals in his heart.” Moran spoke with a nod. “And it could also be a problem as well.”

Aikiro shook her head. “What I saw in the transmission... the conversation between him and the Immortal T’lolt... they appear to know each other. They spoke of some incident and words that were exchanged. We need to be very careful in that regard.” She said in agreement. “However, Dysea could very well lead us to Cha’talla and his tribe and enable us to remove that possible problem. At the very least it will allow me to achieve some measure of retribution for his traitorous actions by taking Esther as his wife and birthing those abominations.” She leaned forward now. “Also Tesand... get word to our agents in the KFI and abort the operation against me that we had planned. Given what is happening... such an attack will only seem more staged to Leonidas and hinder my plans for Phase Two.”

Tesand nodded. “Good.” He said quickly. “Too many things could have gone wrong with that.”

“Once Phase Two begins, as long as we stick to the original plan and maintain a very low profile, Leonidas will have no reason to suspect anything other than what we tell him.” Aikiro said. “Yuri... Dante had made initial contact with the daughter Zarah before you left?”

Yuri nodded. “It was brief but according to him effective.” She said. “He has taken to heart what we discussed with his mother. He will move things along as slowly as he sees fit so as not to draw attention to himself or what he is doing.”

Aikiro nodded. “Good. Her abilities within Mindvoice make her a better candidate than her older sister anyway, and I would like to discover just how those abilities came to be. The Coming of Age Fever for Lycavorians drags on in half breed female children longer, especially those who are half vampire. That much I have been able to discern from reading several medical journals and such. They are pathetically open in this society and everything one needs to fight them can be found in their books or on their Netnews. This Coming of Age fever for her should give Dante an excellent advantage. It will make her more pliable whether she wants to be or not.”

“What should he be looking for?” Yuri asked.

“Anything that might help us to find the Mindvoice ship.” Aikiro said. “He and Javier can rape her mind as well as her body for all I care... but I want to find that ship. That is the most important of his tasks. Combined with Toria’s separate mission... once that takes place we will cause sufficient confusion and angst that we can move on the Mindvoice ship here on Earth and either take control of it or destroy it.”

“We’ve been bringing our people down very slowly over the last weeks.” Moran spoke. “Most of the team is down and in hiding.”

“Where are they set up?” Aikiro asked.

“The remains of London. The city is empty right now. They haven’t begun to rebuild the cities along the Atlantic coast of old Europe yet.” Moran replied. “They’ll be ready to move when we call for them.”

Aikiro nodded. “Good. Once Dante and Toria execute their objectives we will need to move quickly in the confusion and mayhem they create.”

“Our escape routes are all plotted and committed to memory.” Tesand spoke. “Once we determine the location of the base our riders are at we will begin to move ships into position slowly. They will be disguised as civilian transports and we have already obtained clearances through our Limian contacts. The ships have been moving back and forth for the last month as part of the ongoing reconstruction projects across the planet.”

“The contacts were eliminated I take it?” Aikiro asked.

Tesand nodded. “Various accidents... yes.”

Aikiro nodded. “We must be cautious but we will move forward with our plans as if the Kavalians are not here on Earth. When we execute... we will try to take out Keleru’s daughters and Pusintin’s son as well... but that is not a mission priority.”

“I will attempt to discover if destroying their embassy is even feasible Empress.” Juliana said. “I am being watched, but if we do nothing in the way of trying to discover what the KFI are doing, the Lycavorians will suspect something as well. Better that I do this than someone more high profile.”

Aikiro nodded again. “Very well.” She said. “We have waited a long time my friends... we must be patient for a few months longer and we can succeed.”

KAVALIAN EMBASSY

“...press as far as we are able Prefect.” Jiss spoke from the chair. “I don’t know how much support we will receive however.”

Jiss, Matuarr, Qurot, Timur and Pian sat around the small table in the Communications room of the Kavalian Embassy. The Images of Keleru and Pusintin were exceptionally clear, almost a 3D image of the two men generated from the holo disc in the center of the table. It was easy enough to discern they were in Keleru’s office on the Kavalian homeworld.

“This Galactic Court of theirs is nothing more than an extension of Lycavorian Union and their rule.” Keleru spoke offhandedly. “Our petition was never meant to be successful, and you can be assured whatever items of importance this Lisisa had are long gone. You may conduct the searches and press as much as you are able of course, but do not cross the diplomatic line. Timur?"

"Prefect?"

"Insure that you maintain control of your temper and keep your men in check." He stated flatly.

Timur nodded. "Of course Prefect." He answered. "What of the Marshall's promise to me of having his daughter?"

"Short of kidnapping her, what would you have us do Timur?" Pusintin asked from his chair next to Keleru. "You would never make it off the planet with her, and you most certainly would have to kill her dragon."

"And if I found some way?" Timur asked hopefully. "I need only lock groins with her once and leave her with child to be successful in making a claim on her."

"She is that worth it?" Pusintin asked slightly surprised by his demeanor. He was of the same mind as Keleru, that no female was truly worth the effort. He had attempted to discover how his brother could have five females so utterly devoted to him. While all of them were exceptionally beautiful, there was no doubt of that, he never understood why his brother just remained with the five of them. As King he could have any female that he wanted within the Union. It was one of the reasons Pusintin enjoyed being King of Sparta. He had only to demand that a female join him in his bed and they would happily comply. Even the married ones.

"You have not seen her in person Marshall Pusintin." Timur spoke. "She is like a goddess to gaze upon, even though she is half vampire. In bed I do not doubt she would be worth the effort."

"There is no guarantee that will work Timur." Keleru said. "Pusintin and I have already spoken of this scenario. You would not know for several days at least, and in that time the first place they would come for her is there at the embassy. They would kill you with the utmost prejudice and then expel the rest of those from the embassy." Keleru shook his head quickly. "I am not willing to risk our one asset within Lycavorian space to sate your sexual urges. There will be other females for you to choose from."

The twitch of Timur's jaw indicated he did not like that decision but he nodded his head. "As you order Prefect." He said finally.

"Where are my daughters Jiss?" Keleru asked.

"Jalersi is seeing to the arrangements for several meetings with the representatives of Union members who might be sympathetic to our cause. We have many items that we can trade and now that the door is open, other members of the Union will speak to us about it." Jiss replied. "We have Athani moving among the streets near our embassy during the day Prefect, under guard of course. She has gathered some excellent intelligence as to the mindset of the people in and around the building and grounds."

"The last time I spoke to Jalersi, she told me Athani was being difficult." Keleru said. "That is no longer the case?"

Jiss shook his head quickly. "I believe she is doing as much as her limited skills enable her Prefect. She has made it very clear she abhors being here among the Lycavorians. She does not hold them in very high regard. She is looking forward to returning on the transport that will bring the remaining staff members."

"The transport will be there in two days." Keleru said. "Once it was made clear we would be getting an embassy I dispatched them immediately from Qurot's ship. The transport will then return with her and Jalersi. Qurot... you will return as well with Pian and leave Timur as the head of the security detachment."

Qurot nodded. "Thank you Prefect. Will I still..."

"She is yours Qurot." Keleru stated. "I will submit the documents tomorrow to the Pride leaders and she will be yours. Tomorrow evening you may do as you wish... but my directive still stands. If you mark her in any way Qurot I will have your cock and your head stapled to my wall. Is that understood?"

Qurot nodded his head. "Clearly Prefect." He stated quickly. "We will give you many fine grandchildren."

Keleru nodded with a grunt. "You will be officially named Ambassador by the end of the week Jiss. Matuarr will be your deputy. Your actions have done your Prides proud."

"Thank you Prefect." Jiss spoke bowing his head.

"Many thanks Prefect." Matuarr echoed.

"Where is Karun?" Pusintin asked.

“He is having his second meeting with your daughter Marshall Pusintin.” Jiss answered. “He told me he was operating with yours and the Prefect’s direction. I did not question him.”

Pusintin nodded. “So he is.” He stated. “He will try and learn as much as he is able from her by pretending to want to know her as a sister. He is not to be interfered with in any way. He may be able to learn items of intelligence that are not readily available, and no woman is smart enough to not speak of things they shouldn’t speak of.”

“Is that wise Marshall?” Matuarr asked. “He is your son. He may very well become a target of the Lycavorians should anything happen.”

“Karun is more than capable of taking care of himself. Trust me when I tell you my brother will not allow harm to come to his blood. No matter how much he hates me.” Pusintin said. “And Karun is expendable when it comes to our ultimate goals.”

“Leonidas departed a few mornings ago for Hadaria with the red haired wench.” Matuarr spoke now. “We have not seen the vampire Queen Isabella, the first elf queen or the youngest one, Aricia. It appears he is leaving all dealings with us to the elf queen For’mya and his Prime Minister.”

“The Coven?” Keleru asked.

“They are remaining on the opposite side of the city for the most part.” Jiss replied. “We have seen the Empress Aikiro and her daughter on the Netnews channels several times walking the streets. It appears they will be signing the Cease Fire Accords in three weeks time. This will also grant the Coven an embassy here.”

“My brother is becoming soft to allow such a thing.” Pusintin spoke looking at Keleru. “This knowledge bodes well for our plans.”

Keleru nodded. “Indeed it does.” He said. He lifted his hand and picked up the data pad from the table. “I trust that all of you have reviewed the information Timur brought with him in regards to our ultimate plan?”

“Is this information we truly need to know Prefect?” Jiss asked.

“Yes... the time has come for you to be made aware of our plans for it will require you to respond in a certain way.” He stated as he looked at them. “I suggest you begin your research as soon as you can. What I presented to you must be made to stand firm Jiss. I am sending you the Union archive files and laws that were referenced initially to analyze but you will need to insure it can work. How you put it all together Jiss is up to you and Matuarr, but we want to review it first. You are certain they can not intercept this transmission?”

Qurot nodded. “I sweep the embassy every morning Prefect.” He replied quickly. “Our communications are secure, and we have jammers operating regardless.”

Keleru nodded. “Very well. Jiss... your initial thoughts?”

“Very feasible Prefect.” He replied. “Matuarr and I will have to delve more into what you just sent us... but at first glance... a bold plan with a better than half chance to succeed. As long as certain other conditions are met.” He spoke as he withdrew the pad when it beeped softly and notified him the download was complete.

“Pian, Qurot, you may review the plan as well and provide your military input when you arrive back here.” Keleru said. “As it stands, only four of us know of this plan here, and now the five of you. It will remain that way upon pain of death and honor to your Prides.”

The men nodded quickly. “Prefect!” They all stated together.

“Karun?” Jiss asked.

Pusintin shook his head quickly. “It is not something he needs to be made aware of.” He said. “He is not to know.”

Jiss looked at him oddly and nodded slowly. “As you order Marshall.” He stated.

“He would not understand Jiss.” Pusintin spoke explaining further. “Unlike my younger sons, he is still too close to his mother.”

“That is why he will remain on Earth with you when Jalersi returns here Jiss.” Keleru spoke. “Some time under Timur will be good for his advancement.”

“Understood Marshall Pusintin. Prefect.” Jiss spoke.

“We have already put in motion the first portions of this plan within The Wilds.” Keleru stated. “We should be receiving reports of successes within a few days.”

None of them took note of the shadow outside the room. Had Karun been present he may have smelled her tangerine scent, but Kavalian males were not taught to use their sense of smell in such a manner. The capability was there, but never taught.

Athani Leonidas however, did not limit herself in such a way. Especially not now, when the man she loved and who was now her husband was half wolf and a Prince of the Union. Her blue/ green eyes stared ahead at the wall across from her, her mind racing with options and what to do. She did not panic in the least, but instead went over the alternatives to their plan and how it would affect things if they acted a day earlier. Resumar's calming aura filled her even from where he was in his apartment on the Royal Villa Estate and she let it fill every portion of her body and mind. Athani pushed off the wall silently and began moving back to her room.

[Resumar my love! Cemath! We must act sooner than we had anticipated!] She called out within Mindvoice.

Athani felt both of their consciousnesses become more alert in their private connection and she smiled. She felt so very complete because of this man and what he made her feel.

[Aryschanne! What is wrong?] Resumar's voice filled her head instantly.

MJOLNIR'S HAND

THE WILDS

SIXTEEN HOURS FROM BONTAWILLIAN SPACE

Aricia looked up when Komirri entered the Ready Room from the short corridor to the bridge. She was sitting in the long couch against the wall, staring out into the stars through the view window. Even from this distance, she could feel Martin's apprehension on Hadaria within Mindvoice. The years had seen them develop an uncanny ability to feel each other even across great distances like now. This unique skill carried over to their son as well, and Aricia could feel Andro's own wariness, but she could also feel great happiness within him. She had seen the interview he and Sadi had given, and while she could feel nothing but pride in her sons for their actions, she was left with many questions as to who these additional females that would fill Andro's life with Sadi would be. Sadi had said they had already found one, and Aricia knew that it had to be one of the High Coven riders, though part of her hoped it was not one of Yuri's daughters or her sister. There was no other explanation for what Sadi had said, and she knew her son well enough to know what kind of female would attract him. If they were not in some way similar to Sadi in their strength and demeanor, they would have no chance of drawing even a glancing sniff from her son or from Sadi.

Denali she already knew would remain devoted to Lisisa for the rest of his years. They had a connection that was rarely found in those who were not soulmates, and he was a son of hers and Martin's blood. Avi had told her some years ago that within her blood was the blood of the Pralors, and any children she and Martin had would naturally be more attuned to Mindvoice. Denali was a pure blood Lycavorian, their son and therefore much more powerful than any normal Spartan. He would never come close to achieving what his father and older brother had and would achieve within Mindvoice because of how Andro and Elynth bonded while she still carried him in her womb, but Denali was very powerful within his own right.

So many things were now beginning to happen at once, Aricia herself thought, and the more they discovered the more it led her to believe everything was all tied together somehow. And she did not know if that was a good or bad thing.

Aricia Leonidas had grown in the last quarter century, grown into the woman she was now. She was widely considered the most militant of Martin's Queens, the most like him in almost every respect. Her fighting skills were hailed from one end of the Union to the other, and like the man she so loved, she was not known for being very forgiving. And she most certainly was not known for being diplomatic. Though she was the youngest of Martin's Queens, she was the one they all naturally deferred to in many respects. It was also Aricia that was the one to continually make time for all of them to be together.

As her azure colored eyes came to rest on Komirri, she remembered the confrontation with the Kavalians only eight hours ago.

"The Kavalian ship is hailing us!" The male COM officer sang out.

"Activate the main holo imager." Komirri barked after looking at and receiving a nod from Aricia.

Isabella had gone with Vonis to the landing bay to return to the Coven Insurgent Frigate to make sure that they did exactly as they were told. Neither of them doubted the sincerity of the insurgents and Isabella's presence on the frigate would insure the Kavalians did not do something stupid like trying to destroy or board the ship.

The Kavalian officer's face appeared in the holo disc emitters, his dark brown fur neatly groomed and covering every portion of his body. His yellowish vertical slit feline like eyes glared at them from the transmission.

"My name is Commander Angak, commanding officer of the Kavalian Seventh Echelon, Twenty-Fourth Legre ship NGANE." The man spoke. "You will immediately stand to and prepare to be boarded for inspection."

Komirri laughed heartily at that. "I am Admiral/Lieutenant Komirri, commander of the United Lycavorian Union flagship MJOLNIR'S HAND! Just what would possess me to allow you to set foot on my ship Commander Angak?"

"You have a known High Coven frigate within your shield arc." Angak snapped. "That ship and its crew are wanted for crimes against the Kavalian people! You will remand this ship to my custody and prepared to be boarded for inspection."

"We will do no such thing!" Aricia spoke now moving forward to stand next to Komirri.

"Commander, please allow me to introduce Queen Aricia Leonidas of the Lycavorian Union." Komirri spoke with a grin.

The Kavalian's eyes blinked several times before he shook his head. "This is of no matter to me." He stated ignoring Aricia and looking at Komirri. "You will do as I order you to..."

"Commander... this ship is carrying the individuals responsible for the attack on your trade delegation within Union space. I have no intention of handing them or their ship over to you." Aricia stated flatly. "We will take them back to Union space and they will face our justice."

Angak's eyes grew a little wider and he came to his feet. "You will hand them over to me this instant!" He nearly shouted. "They are criminals! They have butchered a dozen Kavalian females! I demand that you..."

"You demand nothing Commander!" Aricia barked now. "You have no jurisdiction within The Wilds Commander; therefore we will be on our way back to Union space. With our prisoners."

"You will do as I order you woman!" Angak snapped vehemently as he glared at her. "If you do not I will fire on that Coven frigate even though it resides within the shield arc of your ship!"

"That ship carries another Queen of the Union Commander." Aricia spoke evenly. "Isabella Leonidas is on that ship with a detachment of Durcunusaan insuring the prisoners are secured. If you attempt such an action, you will kill a Queen of the Lycavorian Union and that action will plunge our two peoples into a war you will not win. The moment we detect your weapons powering up I will order you and your ship blown into nubous atoms Commander."

"I have you outnumbered and I do not fear your vaunted LEONIDAS II-Class ships!" He barked.

"Then you are a fool." Aricia said calmly. "But my experiences with the males of your species as already proved that to me. If you wish to expand this meeting into a shooting match, you are more than welcome Commander. You will lose and we will continue on our way without as much as a pause."

"You would not dare woman!" He barked. "I don't believe you!"

Aricia smiled as her eyes changed and her fangs extended. "Then that would be the single most ignorant thing you have ever done Commander. You go ahead and let your male pride rule your actions fool! I will blow your ship into so many tiny pieces no one will ever know you existed."

Angak's eyes grew wide as the insult to his male pride hit him. "I will contact... I will contact my superior officers! You will remain here until this is done."

Aricia chuckled. "You may remain here if you wish." She stated simply. "We are leaving however." She looked at Komirri. "Take us home Komirri. For olyn allon igord sarad ioion aen derolfar willude, tyna jen mida dur rie vada sivrera." (And if this fool so much as twitches wrong blow his ass out of the stars.)

Komirri's reptilian face was locked in a wide grin showing his razor like white teeth. "It would be my pleasure Milady."

Aricia lowered the tea she was holding and looked at the man who held her beloved Martin's complete and utter trust. Komirri had been the commander of Martin's ship since he had assumed his role as King, and he was the one who had taught Martin everything he knew of ship combat and tactics.

"Something Komirri?" She asked.

"We are sixteen hours from the Bontawillian border Milady." He spoke.

"We still have our guests I take it?" Aricia asked.

Komirri nodded. "Trailing behind us by several million kilometers and matching our course and speed. I ordered our Strike Wing to remain Shrouded and keep separation between them so no accidents happen."

Aricia got to her feet. "So what is it that you need?"

Komirri held out the pad to her. "Long range sensors have detected three additional Kavalian ships entering the sector on an intercept course with us. They will reach us before we get to the border."

Aricia took the pad and looked at it. "What type of ships?"

"Two DIATAGA-Class Missile Cruisers, we call them the Civet Cat because of their long range capability and one DIEROY-Class Heavy Cruiser. What we call the Sabertooth." Komirri answered.

"Threat level?" She asked looking up at him.

"The Sabertooth is more the concern because of her massive weapons load, but she has a very limited firing arc and we can maneuver to defeat that should it come to an exchange. The Civet Cat ships are more a nuisance with their missiles. Our point defenses would destroy their missiles before they ever hit." Komirri answered.

"You think this Angak fool called for reinforcements?" Aricia asked.

Komirri shrugged. "If he did... they did not bring enough." He stated calmly. "They obviously think we are out here alone. I have tasked our Strike Wing into sections, targeting all the ships. The Kavalians fight with a brute force mentality Milady. We maneuver against the Sabertooth, staying out of her forward firing arc and decimate her with our port and starboard Type One batteries as well as our missile launchers. We use our torpedoes in a support mode on the other ships while our Strike Wing cleans up the others."

Aricia nodded her head. "Martin has told me this. They charge into battle thinking they are superior to all around them and no one could defeat them. They do not care about the losses they suffer, as long as they accomplish their goals."

Komirri nodded. "Essentially yes."

"How soon before they intercept us?" Aricia asked.

"The Civet Cats will be in extreme range of their missile batteries in fourteen hours if they maintain their present course." Komirri answered. "They'll reach us..."

"...still two hours from the border." Aricia said to herself as she turned to look out the view window once more.

"Yes."

"Will this Sabertooth ship have a senior officer on board?" Aricia asked.

Komirri nodded. "Senior to Angak... more than likely."

"They wish us to back down Komirri." Aricia spoke softly. "They want us to do what they tell us to do. They want us to fear them? And they want us to hand over Maros, Walsh and the others."

Komirri nodded. "Yes Milady. All they really know is how to use threats and brute force to make others comply with what they want."

"I don't respond well to threats Komirri." Aricia said.

Komirri chuckled. "No... as Martin's wife and one of our Queens I don't imagine you do."

Aricia looked at him her azure eyes smiling. "Martin holds you in such high regard Komirri." She said softly seeing Komirri's eyes grow a little wider at this. "You have taught him so much through the years and you are one he trusts completely."

"I could say the same about him Milady." Komirri said softly.

Aricia nodded. "Yes I suppose so." She said evenly. "Have our fighters ready to launch if they attack Komirri. If it is a test of might the Kavalians wish to engage in, I will be more than happy to oblige them. I will not be cowed by these ignorant people and neither will Isabella I assure you."

Komirri nodded. "I will give the orders."

DARKBROOD-CLASS FRIGATE HIGH COVEN INSURGENCY

“The Kavalian ships are still there Commander.” Maros’s operations officer told him.

“Maintain your course.” Maros ordered. “We must not do anything that would provoke the Kavalian pigs into something rash.”

Maros turned his head and looked at Isabella who stood beside him on the bridge. He had never envisioned this day. Isabella and Vonis were famed heroes of the insurgency and they didn’t even know it. They had stood up to Aikiro and Veldruk and decided they wanted more than what life within the Coven offered. They now had that life, Isabella being a Queen of the Lycavorian Union against all the odds, and the mother of two of the King’s daughters. And as Maros had discovered when they returned to his ship, she would be mother to his son as well for she carried the King’s sixteenth child in her womb. Vonis was married to an elf female with five children, and a senior officer within the Union military and Intelligence establishment.

Vonis and Walsh were standing by one of the computer stations deep in a conversation and Maros looked at Isabella intently as Vonis turned.

“Sister... a message from Aricia.” Vonis spoke. “Three additional Kavalian ships on intercept course with us. They will come into weapons range while we are still two hours from the border.”

“Type?” Bella asked. She was no stranger to space combat.

“Two Civet Cats and a Sabertooth.” Vonis replied.

“The senior officer must have called for assistance.” Maros spoke. “They do not take kindly to being insulted. Especially by women as Queen Aricia did.”

Isabella smiled. “No I didn’t think they would.” She said looking at him. “You enjoyed that exchange I take it?”

Maros smiled broadly. “Best show I have seen in decades Lady Isabella. I thank you for leaving the channels open so that my crew could view it.”

“No matter what you may have heard Maros... Martin Leonidas is no friend of the High Coven.” Isabella said. “And he certainly will not allow Aikiro to discover your identities...” Bella turned as Vonis and Walsh came up. “...or that you and her other clones still live.”

Walsh grinned. “No sense in telling her that her cloning process is flawed.” He spoke. “She’ll find that out so enough on her own.”

Vonis gave Isabella the data pad. “Walsh and I have worked out a code.” He said. “I will return with them to their operating base and try to make contact with this General.”

Isabella looked at the pad. “You truly have no idea who this General is?” She asked.

Maros shook his head. “He has been giving his commands from the shadows since he made himself known to us.” He answered. “We understand why considering the position he must be in.”

“How do you know he is not a plant of Aikiro?” Bella asked.

“Two of the initial operations he planned and sent to us were on high profile targets. A weapons research lab and a new ship yard that was to build their BLOOD REVERENCE dreadnought.” Maros replied. “We were skeptical at first, just like you. The intelligence was perfect Lady Isabella. Plans, defenses, positions of ships, what docks to destroy. The weapons lab was the better target of the two in my opinion.”

Walsh nodded. “They were building new planetary missiles.” He said. “They could have launched them from orbit and devastated entire kilometers of ground on the surface. Even our underground facilities would have been at risk. They were fucking expensive to build and once we whacked the facility, Aikiro decided not to reconstitute the program.”

Isabella looked at him and laughed softly. “There is no doubt in my mind that you are who you say you are Colin Walsh.” She said. “You even speak like Martin does when he is excited or angry.”

Walsh chuckled. “He kind of rubbed off on us through the years I suppose.” He said.

“Wouldn’t Aikiro have clamped down on intelligence once these two operations were successful?” Isabella asked.

Maros nodded. “She did... but the General is a superior tactical mind. His tactics were to make it appear as if the intelligence we received was random in manner. We would attack some facilities, only to make it appear as if we lost badly and then run with our tail between our legs. Others we would press as hard as we were able until we were victorious. His transmissions are random and usually come as a surprise to everyone. He is smart. He even stopped us from attacking the base where they had their dragons. We didn't want them used against us."

Isabella looked at him. "Why?"

Maros shrugged. "We never knew why... but we didn't go through with the attack. And they have never been used against us in any manner. He finally told us the dragons were not our enemy and they were being forced to do things against their as well. It was a compassionate plea to be honest."

"Indeed." Isabella said.

"What happens when those Kav ships get here?" Colin asked.

"If they wish to try and intimidate Aricia they will not succeed." Isabella spoke. "She is... hard as fucking nails... I believe Martin says often."

Vonis chuckled. "That she is."

"And if they pick a fight?" Walsh continued.

Isabella looked at Vonis for a moment and then back to him. "Then they will quickly find that Aricia Leonidas's bite is far worse than her bark."

DYSEA'S STRIKER DT FIVE HOURS FROM APO PRIME

Dysea stood silently as she lifted the mug of tea to her lips, her emerald eyes focused on where her daughter sat.

Normya was curled up on the couch of the STRIKER, her body pressed tightly to Tir'ut's muscular side, her head resting comfortably on his broad chest. He was slumped lower on the couch, and Normya's platinum blond hair splashed across his chest and abdomen. Tir'ut's left arm was draped over her upper back protectively, Normya's face tucked against the side of his neck, both of them sleeping soundly.

"What is going through your mind when you look at them Dysea Leonidas?" Esther's voice asked from behind her. "I know of your abilities within Mindvoice. You saw something when you touched my son on Kranek. What did you see Dysea?"

Dysea turned slowly and looked at her. Esther was holding her own mug of steaming tea in her hands, her beautiful face relaxed and calm. Dysea doubted very much could get this woman to show her emotions unless it was related to her husband Cha'talla.

"I saw... I saw a child. A beautiful child. A child with my daughter's hair, and your son's skin and eyes." Dysea said softly. "Their child. I saw... I saw the love for my daughter in his eyes, and the shining brightness of Normya's eyes when she looked at him."

Esther stepped up beside her and glanced at where Tir'ut and Normya slept. "Is this a bad thing Dysea?" She asked softly.

"Love is never a bad thing Esther." Dysea said.

"I never imagined myself falling in love with an Immortal Dysea." Esther said. "It just happened. I did not see Cha'talla's outward appearance. I saw what was inside him. I know what you fear Dysea, and I don't know how to make you understand that can not happen to your daughter."

"You sound so certain." Dysea said.

Esther nodded. "I should be... that particular Akruxian gene is not present in my sons." She said confidently. "None of them. Every Immortal male in our settlement has voluntarily had that gene within them suppressed Dysea. Erli'ra and the other elven females who are married to Immortals show no signs of what you fear Dysea. You saw that for yourself. You spoke to all of them."

Dysea nodded. "Yes." She said.

"I knew something was there the first time he spoke to her over the COM. There was something in his voice. He had not even met her yet but I could sense it. And then when he attacked the Bancorik without even a moment's hesitation I knew for sure. He would gladly give his life to keep her safe Dysea." Esther said.

Dysea nodded. "Yes... that is quite obvious."

“Is it... is it that my son is not good enough for Normya?” Esther asked with a very neutral voice.

Dysea shook her head adamantly. “No Esther! Never that! We... we pride ourselves on being so open to change... yet looking at her in his arms, it makes me shudder, but it also makes me very happy that she found someone who loves her as Tir’ut obviously does.”

Esther nodded with a smile. “As King Leonidas no doubt loves you.” She said.

“Nauta Melme loves all of us equally.” Dysea said.

“Yes I imagine that is true. But there are many who say he favors you most after his soulmate Aricia.” Esther said.

Dysea nodded. “Yes... we have heard that too. Some say me... some say Melyanna. We laugh about it.” She said with a smile.

Esther took a deep breath. “Cha’talla will be the first one to admit that the Akrujian history with elves is wrought with violence and forcing them to be slaves to Immortals. It was one of the things he most wanted to change. He values the wisdom of elves Dysea; that is why he has Erli’ra’s father running our schools. It was the first thing he told me in our bed when they came to be with us. He wanted Illiad to teach our children, and the children of our future.”

“How did you do it?” Dysea asked.

“Do what?”

“Change them so.” Dysea finished her question.

“It was relatively simple really.” Esther answered. “To be honest I only followed Queen Anja’s blueprint.”

“Melyanna?” Dysea asked surprised.

Esther nodded. “She came up with the suppressive compound and didn’t even know it.” Esther answered. “I suspected that was the case when I saw the balance of amino acids and nuclides. I spent quite a bit of one of our harvests to get the needed samples from within Union space, but it was money well spent. With blood samples of every male Immortal in our tribe, it took only eight months to test and then produce the serum. When I announced it was finished, they were lining up outside our clinic the next day Dysea. Cha’talla’s tribe has embraced the changes he has brought Dysea. Changing our past history with elves was the first and most important step.”

“Our history?” Dysea asked.

Esther nodded. “I am Cha’talla’s Blessed Wife. I am a member of their tribe... so yes... it is our history.”

“I only saw your two younger sons and Tir’ut Esther.” Dysea spoke. “You said you have four sons with Cha’talla.”

Esther nodded. “Lynom was born a year after Tir’ut. He is doing something for his father in The Wilds that ultimately protects us as well. He is almost as skilled as his brother, and shares his wild streak, though he is not as accomplished within Mindvoice. He and Tir’ut are very close.”

“This is the connection I sense within him then?” Dysea asked. “It is heavily shielded and even I would be hard pressed to intrude upon it.”

Esther nodded. “More than likely.” She said. “He keeps it open in case Lynom contacts him for some reason.”

“You will not tell me where he is will you?” Dysea asked.

Esther smiled. “I would if I knew.” She said. “Only Cha’talla and Tir’ut know where he is. I do not want to know, the truth is told... for it will undoubtedly make me very upset. He is my son, and putting him in danger goes against every instinct inside me.”

Dysea nodded with a smile. “Yes... I do know that feeling.” She said. She turned back and looked at Tir’ut and Normya on the couch.

“Will Martin Leonidas try to separate them when he finds out Dysea?” Esther asked softly. “I know he must harbor quite a bit of hatred for Cha’talla’s people over the events with his father.”

Dysea shook her head. “No. We made a promise to ourselves that we would not interfere in the lives of our children. That we would allow them to find their own paths. Nauta Melme is very open Esther, more so than most give him credit for. He embraces change and the unknown, and over the years he has come to trust in fate and destiny more than he ever did.”

“Like when he saved T’lolt’s life?” Esther said softly.

Dysea nodded. “Yes. Once he sees the love for our daughter that Tir’ut holds; the love for him that Normya is no longer fighting within herself, he will embrace change once more. It is just part of his nature.”

“Dysea... does... does this nature allow him to trust what Aikiro tells him.” Esther asked softly.

Dysea turned and met her eyes and Esther thought she saw a vicious glint in those emerald orbs that disappeared just as quickly as it flashed across them.

“Martin Leonidas is many things Esther.” She said calmly. “A fool is not one of them. He no more trusts that woman than he trusts the Kavalian pigs that have come to Earth.”

Esther grinned. “I take it he does not care for the Kavalians.” She said.

Dysea shook her head. “There are exceptions to every rule Esther, you know this as well as I. When it comes to the Kavalians however, we have not found any of them yet. They have more in common with that vampire upaee Aikiro than they think. They seek to conquer and control by brute force and fear, while Aikiro seeks the same thing; only by using subversion and assassination. He may be a Spartan, and he definitely loves to fight, but we have found he much prefers when he is in our bed and we shower him with attention.” She said with a seductive grin and twinkle in her eye.

Esther chuckled. “That sounds very much like Cha’talla.” She said.

“No Esther... he does not trust Aikiro. Or anything she tells him. What we are doing... what our son Androcles is doing... its only purpose is to give those dragons that she stole from us so long ago a chance to see for themselves what they could become. And have a chance if they need to fight the Kavalians.” Dysea said with a smile. “Empress Aikiro is not as skilled and influential as she likes to believe she is. And she does not know what is happening right under her own nose.”

Esther looked at her confused. “What do you mean?”

Dysea smiled. “It is something I sensed several weeks ago. That is part of my ability and I can’t control it. Like the visions it comes to me out of the blue really. It will come out soon I think.” She said. “And no doubt you and Cha’talla will hear her scream from here when it does.”

Esther grinned now. “I will certainly look forward to that.” She said.

Dysea nodded and took her hand. “Come Esther... let us as mothers insure our plans are adequate enough so that our children do not place themselves in too much danger. And Iriral I know would like to question you and get to know you more since we will be working together.”

Esther nodded. “I would like to know her as well.” She said.

“Then we have six hours to insure that your son does not kill those who have tried to kill the woman he loves.” Dysea said. “At least not before we have had ample time to question them.”

“And then?” Esther asked.

This time Dysea’s smile was exceptionally cruel. “Then Tir’ut may do with them what he will for trying to kill my daughter. I may be an elf Esther, but I was turned by the most powerful Lycavorian Spartan within the Union and I have inherited many of his traits, first and foremost among them is the savage protectiveness of family. I do not think they will like what Tir’ut has in mind for them.”

“No... I don’t think they will.” Esther spoke. “Not one bit.”

IRARUZU THE WILDS

A world of towering white capped mountains and rolling green plains. It was a world that many would be proud to call home and live upon, except for the growing population of pirate and mercenary scum that now called the world their home. It sat within a week’s travel of the Bontawillian border, but those blue and black skinned aliens had grown very close to the Union and its King in the last twenty years, changing many of their own laws to mirror those of the Union. They dared not approach the Bontawillian Alliance border any longer looking to cross into Union space or for any nefarious purposes. The destruction of a dozen of their pirate ships through the past years had shown them the Bontawillian Alliance had thrown their hat in almost completely with the Lycavorian Union. The Bontawillian Alliance had the strongest treaties of mutual trade and protection among the non-Lycavorian Union worlds, and the fact that the Lycavorian King had embraced their independence and even encouraged it only made the Bontawillian Alliance that much more loyal to him. He gave them weapons and training and ships, and their trade agreements were among the most profitable in the Union.

The mercenaries and pirates who stayed on Iraruzu were some of the vilest in The Wilds, but they were also some of the most intelligent and they knew who not to make angry. As with Jagaliu, Ricot Four and Aprian Two, Iraruzu had several large settlements where most of the pirates and mercenaries tended to remain. There were many smaller settlements along the outer rim of the main spaceports on the planet, those who chose to remain away from the laws of the Union, but who were not criminals in some shape or form. One of these small settlements was a combination of Drow elves and humans, situated exactly thirteen kilometers from the main city. Like the settlement on Nebonese, all of these Drow and humans were members of the Krypteria. They were highly skilled and trained, and their main task was monitoring the area near Gellen Station and the planets within the former Lycavorian People's Republic that their King had destroyed a quarter century ago. There were twenty-seven of them altogether, fifteen Drow and twelve humans, all of them from the same family clan. The humans, seven females and five males were the wives or husbands of the Drow since the family clan Dareitara worked very closely with humans in Eden City. The Dareitara Clan was well respected among the Drow and looked to for leadership and wisdom. They were among the first who had embraced the changes brought about by their Queen when they had come from Canada to Eden City.

The Dareitara Clan was her family clan and she could not have been prouder.

Her name was Lu'ria and she was the epitome of a female Drow warrior in looks. She was only twenty-five years old and in the lifespan of elves, still very much a child. The black Drow jumpsuit held a five foot nine, hundred and twenty-one pound frame of feminine curves and Drow muscularity. Her breasts were not large, but they were very firm, her waist small but highlighting an incredible firm and perfectly shaped ass. Her long legs were taut and powerful, and her abdomen flat and displaying the feminine ripple of her stomach muscles. Her long and silky shimmering white hair was braided, with several dreadlock strands ending in black beads on either side of her face. Her skin was typical in its flawless, elven texture and the sepia color of her skin contrasted greatly with the lustrous white of her hair. Her eyes were a burnt amber color, very alert and holding great intelligence in them.

Lu'ria had accomplished much in only twenty-five years of life. She held a Degree in Aerospace Engineering from the Eden City University and she was an accomplished pilot with hundreds of hours in both the Raptor III as well as several different transports. She spoke both the ancient language of the Drow as well as being fluent in the Lycavorian ancient language. This was something that all Drow learned without question to honor their king. Her parents were well respected and influential in Eden City and the Drow city of Dalmouzh only six kilometers away. Her mother was the Matron of their family, and one of Queen Aihola's advisors, while her father was a sought after and very skilled engineer in his own right. Their family and clan were very traditional in many respects, adhering to the culture of their Drow heritage almost religiously. Her mother had been one of the first to fully commit their family to support of Queen Aihola when she had come to Canada and over the years the strict laws by which they had lived lessened to some degree as they embraced the new life that had been granted to their people. Her parents had been very proud of her when she made the decision to join the Krypteria, following in the footsteps of her three brothers and two sisters.

Lu'ria had come to Iraruzu after fully completing three years of intense training for the Krypteria, to include days and weeks of hand to hand training, and the use of every conceivable weapon known to exist. She was technically an agricultural expert as her cover and she was very knowledgeable of plants and flowers and weeds. It was not the most enjoyable of fields, or the most exciting, but to get into the Krypteria was all that mattered to her. In typical Drow fashion, as the youngest child she was also the one to be the brunt of her older sister's and brother's jokes about her standing within the family. She would never be the head of their family unless some catastrophic event killed her sisters and mother, and the likelihood of that happening was astronomical. To compensate for that Lu'ria was a little more adventurous and took a few more risks than her sisters and brothers, a fact that angered her parents to some extent. Lu'ria was also the only one of their children to not have at least a steady lover. She was no stranger to relationships, but Lu'ria was not one to let a man or woman tie her down. She had had three lovers in her young life, two Drow elf males and a female High elf while in school. As with any culture, the two males had hoped to advance their own status within the Drow hierarchy by becoming her husband, and Lu'ria had quickly shown one of them to the door while her father had chased the other one away. The female she had been with for five months, and while it had been very pleasurable while they were together, both of them wanted much more in their lives and went their separate ways after school. Her brothers and sisters made fun of her because Lu'ria said she would only be swept off her feet by royalty. That one day she would know the love of a Prince and Princess. Her mother thought this childish, while her father secretly wished for this to happen for his youngest daughter.

The post on Iraruzu was an excellent starting point for the Drow in their Krypteria careers for their settlement had existed longer than all the others. The Matron mother of Clan Tonairo was an older woman, but close friends with Lu'ria's mother and almost like a loving aunt to Lu'ria. Many of the pirate scum and mercenaries had long ago learned not to mess with anyone associated with the dark skinned elves if they valued their lives and their sexual equipment. The settlement was six kilometers away from the main spaceport where they had opened and now ran a well established weapons shop. They bought and sold weapons from all over The Wilds; some of them legal, some not as legal, as was their cover.

Lu'ria looked across their establishment at the counter where the older son of Clan Tonairo was showing a long energy weapon to a Kochab. She stood behind the herbal counter in keeping with her cover, as they sold many items that had natural healing properties in them, and provided an excellent additional income considering the line of work of many of those that frequented their establishment.

"He's handsome isn't he?" The female voice said from just behind her.

Lu'ria turned and looked at the very pretty human female. She smiled. "If you prefer his type Jennifer, then yes I suppose he is handsome." Lu'ria said.

The blond haired young woman was one of the "slaves" to Clan Tonairo, and the frequent lover of one of Clan Tonairo's daughters. She was exceptionally bright and always had a kind word to say to everyone.

"You don't find him attractive?" Jennifer asked.

"I didn't say that." Lu'ria spoke with a smile. "He is just not my type."

Jennifer moved closer to her. "I didn't realize that clan Dareitara allowed the youngest females to have relationships outside of the Drow." She said. "I thought custom dictated that the youngest female marry a Drow to keep their bloodline strong."

Lu'ria nodded. "Yes... that is our custom... but that does not mean I agree to it." She stated shaking her head. "No... the man I spend my life with will have blue eyes, and the three women I will call my slaves will have sea green eyes, soft blue eyes and glittering dark orbs. They will worship and pleasure me just as I will worship and pleasure them."

"Three slaves?" Jennifer spoke with wide eyes. "Wow... even General Lynwe has only two slaves. You are aspiring to greatness Lu'ria."

Lu'ria shrugged. "It is what I feel inside me." She said. "It is what I have felt for many years. Everyone laughs at me... but they will see."

The young blond stepped right up to her. "You know... Kodsu and Ixara are spending the night together." She spoke boldly. "She doesn't mind if I occupy myself when she and her husband are together. Do you think you might want too...?"

Lu'ria lean over and smiled seductively. "I think I would like that Jennifer." She said with a smile.

"Like what?" The gruff voice spoke and they both turned to look directly in the cruel green vertical slit eyes of the Kavalian. He was close to six and a half feet tall and easily over two hundred pounds. The dark blond hair that covered his body was groomed well enough, but he gave off a musky odor that was not pleasant in the least. An odor like one would smell from someone who had not bathed in several days.

Lu'ria forced a genuine smile onto her face. "Good day sir." She announced. "Can I interest you in some herbal medicines that my people developed on Earth? They are guaranteed to take care of whatever ails you."

"I want nothing from that backwater planet you call Earth!" The man snapped.

Lu'ria's Krypteria training was perfect and she kept the smile on her face. "Then can I interest you in something that you don't have right now?"

"How much for you?" The Kavalian barked. "Think you can survive a night in my bed Drow wench?"

Lu'ria continued to smile sweetly. She knew how Kavalians viewed their females, and that apparently extended to females of different species as well. "That would very much depend sir." Lu'ria stated.

"Depend on what?" The Kavalian snapped with an evil grin. "Wench... once I lock groins with you... you'll be ruined except for another Kavalian. You'll never want another."

“Locking groins with me would mean you need to actually have a cock right?” Lu’ria stated calmly, the smile never leaving her face. “Something you won’t have if you touch me.” Lu’ria made a show of sniffing the air and she wrinkled her nose as she turned to look at Jennifer. “It would also entail that you bath more than once a week.”

The Kavalian’s eyes flared wide in anger and he leaned across the counter, placing his hands on the top for better leverage. He froze when he felt the cold metal of two very large hand weapons placed to his temples, and the tiny pin prick from the tip of the wicked looking blade Lu’ria now held in her right hand.

“Your actions will be forgiven right now.” The older female voice spoke from the side in as calm a voice as the Kavalian had ever heard. “Raise your hand another millimeter Kavalian, and you will no longer have brains to control your body. Not to mention Lu’ria there will open your throat so wide not even a Hadarian Healer could save you.”

The Kavalian looked out of the corner of his eye at the face of the older Drow female as she came closer. He saw the male Drow from the weapons counter standing just to one side with the large K12 KM pressed to his temple, and another smaller female with a cut down version of the K12 in her hands and jammed into his opposite temple.

“She insulted me!” He roared.

“Another step and she would have cut off your cock before you knew what happen.” The older Drow spoke. “My name is Vlonjra... and I am the Matron of the Drow Clan Tonairo. You will find we are not like other elves Kavalian, and we do not fall down with our legs open whenever a male who says he has a big cock comes forward. We are Drow... and we left Earth because that fool King would not allow us to live as we please.” Vlonjra stepped right up to him as he looked into Lu’ria’s bright burnt amber eyes. They held no fear of him, only contempt. “You are welcome to shop in our establishment sir, and if there is something you need that we do not have, we can probably obtain it for you at a very reasonable cost. You will not however, you will not treat members of my family and clan with your Kavalian bravado and abusive nature. If you do... I will ask you to leave. If you do not... I will kill you sir. You will disappear and your leaders will think you have deserted for no sign you ever existed will remain.” She leaned close to his face and waited until his eyes left Lu’ria’s and looked at her. “Am I making myself clear enough to that underdeveloped feline brain of yours?”

“Do not push me woman!” He snarled at her. “I heard you!”

Vlonjra nodded. “Good. Now... do you wish to buy something?”

“Not from this place!” He snapped.

“Then I will ask you only once to leave.” Vlonjra spoke. “We have been doing business here for near two decades now and I don’t need your foul kind chasing away my legitimate customers.”

“I will not forget this woman!” He growled.

Vlonjra nodded. “Yes... I had heard that about you Kavalians. All brawn and no brains. Living off of centuries old hatreds and vendettas. I am quite sure you won’t forget it, but now you need to leave.”

Vlonjra motioned with her head and the two weapons came away from his head. His eyes went to Lu’ria and she smiled as she slowly drew back the blade, lifting it in front of his face and angling it in the light.

“It is very sharp.” She said softly.

The Kavalian push back slowly from the counter and then turned to exit the store without so much as a second glance back. Vlonjra moved closer to the counter as Lu’ria vaulted herself over the chest high obstacle and landed cat like next to her. She looked at the Drow from the weapons counter as he came forward and the younger female Drow as she replaced the K14 in the small holster within her loose fitting dress.

“Rikmyr?” She asked softly.

“I’ve never seen him before mother.” He answered.

“Neduna?” Vlonjra asked.

“Nor have I mother.” The female spoke.

“There is a Kavalian frigate in orbit. It arrived only yesterday.” Rikmyr spoke. “I saw dozens of them walking the streets earlier today.”

Vlonjra nodded. “Perhaps.” She said thoughtfully.

“Matron Mother... did I act wrongly?” Lu’ria asked.

Vlonjra looked at her. “No.” She answered immediately. “You acted just as they have come to expect a dominant Drow female to act. Any other way and others would become suspicious.” Vlonjra turned back to the door that the Kavalian had exited. “This however, was no ordinary soldier from one of their ships as we have seen before. He tried to act the part, and he may fool others who are less observant.”

“What do you mean mother?” Neduna asked.

“He was wearing very loose clothing.” Lu’ria spoke. “His hands are scarred which means he does not work on a ship. He was too alert and he acted as if he wanted to provoke a reaction from us.”

Vlonjra nodded. “Excellent Lu’ria.” She said. “Rikmyr... pass the word to the others to be more mindful of Kavalians who come around the store here and the road towards our home.”

“You don’t think he will try something do you mother?” Rikmyr asked quickly. “After the reputation we have cultivated here?”

“I would not put anything past these Kavalians.” Vlonjra spoke evenly. “They use cloned soldiers that they know will not live past a certain time. It makes it easier to control them.” She shook her head. “No... once those fools on Nefoa gave them complete control of their planet; the Kavalians began acting like they owned The Wilds. Have our family keep more of a watch on their surroundings.”

Rikmyr nodded. “I’ll pass the word mother.”

Vlonjra looked at Lu’ria. “You have done well Lu’ria.” She said warmly. “You will do your mother proud as you grow older.”

Lu’ria smiled. “Thank you Matron.”

The Kavalian made his way through the streets of the Iraruzu spaceport and when he was almost to the actual landing bays he ducked into a dark alley and moved quickly for a man his size. He sprinted down the dark alley and around the rear of the spaceport, coming to the ten story abandoned building. He slipped between the bent doors and took the old stairs three at a time until he was on the fourth floor. He moved around to the east side of the building and came to the closed door. He knocked several times and pushed the door open to reveal a dozen other Kavalians lounging around the large room, all of them cleaning weapons of some sort. He moved directly to the senior officer who sat at the table looking at a chart of the terrain. The Kavalian looked up.

“Report?” He ordered.

“Just as the intelligence said Major.” The man spoke. “I saw at least six Drow elves and two human females.”

“The leader?” The Kavalian Major asked.

“An older Drow female.” The man answered. “They reacted just as you said they would to my actions.”

The Major nodded as another Kavalian came up to the table. “Byttao... send your initial report. The intelligence from the contact has proven to be accurate and we will begin planning our assault.”

The man nodded. “Yes Major.” He spoke before turning and moving to the large communications set up on the table near the wall.

“A request Major.” The man asked.

“You have done well Kamal.” The Major spoke. “What is your request?”

“When we finally move against them, I request that the female who stuck her knife to my throat be mine.” He said.

“Why?” He asked.

“I intend to use her as a repository for my seed for however long she survives.” Kamal said cruelly. “She was a lush thing and she needs to learn her place.”

The Major nodded. “You will have her Kamal.” He replied. “Get some rest. We will begin setting up observation points tomorrow so that we can learn their routine. If they are members of the Krypteria, their routine will never be the same from one day to the next and we will need to discover how to eliminate them with the most efficiency.”

“Thank you Major.” Kamal said bowing his head slightly.

CRANAE ISLAND

The sunlight bathed her face in its warmth and she knew immediately something was very wrong.

Ne'Veha sat up in the bed quickly; the satin like sheets caressing her naked flesh as the cover fell away exposing her firm breasts, her nipples hardening instantly in the cool morning air. Her long brown hair fell around her face and well past her shoulders, and when she sat up fully the wave of nausea hit her and the temples in her head began to throb almost painfully.

“Ohhhhh.” Ne'Veha groaned loudly her hands going to her head.

She waited for a long moment as the pain and nausea passed after a time and then she lifted her head to look around the huge bedroom she was in. This was most definitely not her quarters on the SCIMITAR, nor was it any lodge or resort suite she had ever been in. She felt the sun coming in through the large double doors leading out onto some patio, and then she smelled the salt in the air. She was by the ocean, for as she listened she could hear the birds and the gentle lap of the waves as they came up onto the beach. She was very close to the ocean if she could hear that. Ne'Veha looked around the huge room once more, seeing several dressers as well as a large couch near a fireplace against the wall. There were two large windows with blinds of some sort, as well as the double doors leading outside. There was another set of double doors on the wall closest to the bed that obviously led into another part of wherever she was. She saw a discarded male shirt on the floor near the bed, as well as a pair of light blue panties.

“Oh carians.” Ne'Veha muttered. “Please tell me I didn't sleep with Tarren last night.” She spoke as she gathered the sheet around her body. She froze as she realized she had just spoken a word in the ancient Lycavorian language. Tarren's comments as well as those of her friends came rushing back to her now. How could she know the Lycavorian language? She had never studied it in school, never even bothered to make an attempt to learn it. Her parents had made sure that it was not part of her curriculum.

You understand and speak it because it is now part of you Ne'Veha. The female voice rang out softly in her mind. Just as we are part of you. And you a part of us.

Ne'Veha looked around the room quickly, her dark eyes darting from corner to corner looking for the owner of that voice. “Who are you?” She demanded. “Where are you?”

At this moment I am in our kitchen preparing something for your headache, which must be nearly intolerable considering the amount of Spartan Wine you drank last night. The voice answered. You may join me if you like. You know the way Ne'Veha... you are part of us now.

“Spartan Wine?” Ne'Veha asked softly as the memories from last night came rushing back. Her eyes grew wider in horror as she remembered what had occurred at Gallais's Retreat. “Oh... oh no. Please... please tell me I did not do what I remember doing?” She gasped. “Please tell me I did not vomit all over Prince Androcles.”

The female voice chuckled softly. I don't believe anyone has ever thrown up on Andro. She spoke with considerable humor. It was quite entertaining to see the look on his face. Come Ne'Veha... join me in the kitchen and we can discuss what you and we have discovered.

Ne'Veha wrapped the sheet around her tighter and climbed from the bed, moving for the double doors into the interior of the home almost instinctively. It was almost as if she already knew where she was going. Like she had been here many times before. She pushed open the door and was assaulted with the smells of cooking food. The smell of the meat almost made her nauseous, but she fought it down quickly. She stepped into the massive expanse of the main room, the morning sun shining brightly in through several windows along the wall and from the massive skylight above. There were couches and chairs all over the room, as well as several large book cases and a great fireplace along the north wall. She heard the sizzling and angled across the room, the rug covered tile floor cool and soft against her bare feet. The kitchen area was large and set against the west side of the main room, attached with two large arches leading into it. Ne'Veha gasped loudly when she saw the golden blood hair and wonderfully tanned skin of the female sitting at the counter sipping a large mug of steaming liquid and reading from a data pad. She saw those dazzling jungle green eyes come up to gaze at her and they wrapped around her with warmth.

It was her!

It was the Lycavorian female from her dreams. It was the Crown Princess of the Lycavorian Union. One of three others that she had been having delicious dreams about over these last weeks, along with the raven haired vampire female and a faceless dark skinned woman with long legs and confident hands.

Sadi got to her feet, the thin white robe hugging her figure. She was naked underneath the robe as she always was, and it was tied loosely around her waist exposing a good amount of the valley between her large breasts. "Good morning." She said warmly, her voice sounding exactly like the echo in her mind. She motioned to the additional chair at the kitchen counter and held up the large mug. "This should help with your headache and the nausea you feel."

Ne'Veha moved forward slowly, her eyes darting back and forth around the kitchen and main room looking for him. Sadi smiled as she lifted her own mug of coffee now and looked at her. Six months ago Sadi would never envisioned this. She would never have seen herself so eagerly wanting to taste another woman. She had that brief relationship with Teeria yes, but what she felt now for Carisia, for Ne'Veha and for the last woman who occupied their dreams, that simply had no words to describe. Helen had begun her on the road to discovery and their conversation just before the State Dinner those weeks ago had only reinforced what Sadi felt coursing through her. She could no more deny the incredible attraction and pull towards the others anymore then they could deny it to themselves. It all centered on Andro, he was the focus and the core of it all. It was not merely a physical attraction between all of them, it was far deeper than that and it was something that made them all far more powerful and committed. She could feel it within Ne'Veha even now, and she passed it without question through Mindvoice to Carisia who eagerly awaited their return at SODRAG. As with his mother, Sadi was Andro's soulmate and she would always have the part of him that no other female ever could. But like his mother Aricia, she would also love the other three females who were destined to be part of their lives, and they would love her just as intensely.

And all of them would love Andro without question or hesitation in the least.

Sadi smiled as Ne'Veha stepped up to the counter looking at her. "Andro is walking along the beach with his brother." Sadi said.

"I... I was sick... I vomited on him." Ne'Veha spoke softly. "I am... I am so horrified. I will never live it down."

"No one will know." Sadi spoke.

"Tarren will tell everyone!" Ne'Veha exclaimed.

Sadi smiled. "Tarren will tell no one if he knows what is good for him." She said. "I think he is still trying to grasp how it is you know us. How you deal with him will be up to you Ne'Veha, but whatever you do we will support you."

Ne'Veha lifted the mug from the counter top and her nose wrinkled slightly. "What... what is this?" She asked.

"It is something Andro's mother Dysea made. She is a genius with natural herbs and such." Sadi answered. "It does not smell very pleasant, but one mug of that and it will settle your stomach and rid you of the pounding in your head."

Ne'Veha didn't hesitate and took a long sip of the lukewarm liquid. It was dark brown in color and tasted faintly of mint, but as the warmth entered her throat and stomach, the effects were almost instantaneous. The nausea began to subside and her headache no longer throbbed quite as painfully against her temples. She looked up at Sadi with wide eyes and saw her jungle green orbs smiling back at her.

"I told you." Sadi said. "Drink the rest Ne'Veha, and I will get you a mug of Aricia's coffee and then you will need to eat."

"You... he has been in my dreams." Ne'Veha spoke quickly.

Sadi looked at her and nodded as she stood up. "And you have been in ours."

"I... I felt everything that you... I felt all that you did." Ne'Veha stammered. "You, him and... and Carisia." She looked at Sadi. "How... how do I know her name? I have never met her in my life, yet I feel as if..."

"You feel as if you know her completely." Sadi asked moving around the counter to stand in front of her. "You feel as if you know Andro and I completely. You feel as if you know the last of us completely. The one we haven't found just yet."

"She... she is a Drow." Ne'Veha said. "Her skin is so... it is so perfect. And her hair!"

Sadi nodded. "Like white silk spun from masters." She said. "Yes... we feel it too. We see her too Ne'Veha."

"Carisia... she is a vampire!" Ne'Veha said. "A member of the High Coven!"

"Carisia is a vampire yes." Sadi answered. "But like Androcles and I were fated to be together... she was fated and destined to be part of our lives as well. As were you Ne'Veha. You can't deny it. You have been using the ancient language... yet you never learned out to speak it. Others have commented on that haven't they?"

Ne'Veha looked at her. "My friends... and Tarren."

Sadi nodded. "It is coming from us." She said. "The closer we are together, the faster our minds will come in concert."

"Princess... I am only a Tier Three Mindvoicer." Ne'Veha said.

"Is that what you think?" She asked with a smile. "Then how is it you can hear my words in your mind Ne'Veha? Andro, me, Carisia... we are all much stronger than Tier Six, and we almost never drop our shields enough to communicate with anyone who is not at least a Tier Five. Yet you hear us easily. You feel us easily. How do you explain that? And don't call me Princess... it's ridiculous considering what we will mean to each other."

Ne'Veha looked at her. "I... I don't know."

Sadi nodded. "Do you believe in destiny Ne'Veha?"

Ne'Veha nodded her head. "I believe we are all here for some ultimate purpose in our lives." She said. She looked away shyly. "It is an idea my parents have tried to get me to leave in the past. They don't think it is realistic."

"Why do they dislike Lycavorians so much?" Sadi asked.

Ne'Veha looked at her. "My grandmother had an affair with a Lycavorian that resulted in her leaving my grandfather. She followed this Lycavorian because her heart told her too I suppose." Ne'Veha met her eyes. "She was killed with him during one of the battles with the High Coven a hundred and seventy years before King Leonidas returned to us. They had a son..."

"Did he survive?" Sadi asked.

Ne'Veha nodded. "Oh yes... but he is not welcome by my father or my other uncles and aunts." She stated. "He is an officer in the fleet. I understand he commands a Leonidas II-Strike Cruiser now."

"And you have fought with this for quite some time I take it." Sadi said. "Your parents have tried to shape your thinking along their lines when it comes to my people."

"Tarren's actions did not do much to alleviate their concerns." Ne'Veha said.

"No I don't imagine they did." Sadi said.

Ne'Veha nodded slowly. "I... I thought they were right after he cheated on me." She spoke looking at Sadi. "I thought that was the reason I would never let Tarren cado forn. That I could not trust him." Her eyes grew a little wider when she spoke the words and Sadi grinned.

"I told you." She said.

"That's... that's not the reason is it?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi shook her head. "It may have played a small part in your distrust of him. But you did not let him cado forn because a larger part of you knew he was not the one that called to you. That he was not who you were destined to be with." She said gently reaching out and taking her hand. "You were meant for Andro... for us... for all of us. No more and no less than I was meant for Andro and for us. Just as he was meant for me, for Carisia, for you and for the Drow when we find her. As much as he hates being compared to his father... because of who he is... the type of man he is... he will have all of us. And we will have each other and him."

"You sound... you sound so sure." Ne'Veha said. "I have... I have never been with a woman before."

Sadi shrugged. "It is something that only happened to me once before I met Andro. And up until that night on the island I was sure about nothing." She said softly. "I struggled with it just as you are now. I could not believe I was in love with an eight month old infant... but I was. It was the reason that I never let any man I slept with before Andro came back into my life cado forn Ne'Veha."

Ne'Veha looked at her. "And now?"

Sadi smiled. "Now?" She asked. "Now I could not imagine anything else. Carisia and I can give each other almost as much pleasure as Andro gives to us. It would be no different for you and me, or Carisia and the two of us. But no man will ever take Andro's place in our hearts or our lives. And I have come to accept that there is a higher power, or powers, guiding us in all that we do. We were meant for Andro Ne'Veha and him for us."

Ne'Veha looked at the mug in her hand and took another long drink of the odd tasting liquid. Her mind was telling her that this was all too much to believe, that it could not be the way Sadi was explaining it. Her body however, her body was calling out for Sadi in a way she had never experienced before. Calling out for Androcles like it had never called for any man, not even Tarren who she thought she had loved. And calling out for the touch of two women who she had never even met before. She looked at Sadi who was simply gazing at her with those beautiful jungle green eyes.

"I... I need... I need some time to wrap my mind around all this." She said softly.

Sadi nodded. "I'm sure you do." She said getting to her feet. "Right now... why don't I finish cooking us some breakfast? You can't return to the SCIMITAR because the wine in your blood is still very pungent for a wolf's nose. It will be at least another day before it fully leaves your system. We are returning to SODRAG later this afternoon and you will go with us. You can return to the SCIMITAR from there."

"Just like that?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi laughed. "Did you think we would keep you prisoner?" She asked. "You need to eat... and I know Andro is hungry, I can hear his stomach growling from here. Our path is already laid before us... time does not have any meaning right now." She turned and moved for the large stove. "I hope you like Greek meat? It is a recipe Andro's mother showed me."

"...coming along better than we had hoped." Andro spoke as he and Resumar walked along the beach near the villa. Elynth and Cemath rested near the patio of the villa, both of them flicking their tails at one another in some manner of sibling torment. "We could certainly use you and Cemath when we begin CQCF next week."

They stopped walking to look across the bay at the city in the distance. They were both barefoot in the white sand, their upper bodies exposed to the rising sun. Physically it was like looking at two perfect specimens with the extreme definition and ripped muscularity. All of them, whether half elf or not, all of them had taken after their father in that regard. While Andro was the tallest and heaviest at nearly six feet two and two hundred and twenty-five pounds, they were within two inches of each other in height and perhaps twenty pounds in weight. Andro wore his customary white pants, while Resumar had stripped off his civilian shirt to join his brother on the sands.

"I'll probably be there relatively soon." Resumar answered him.

Andro looked at his brother. "Why do you say that?" He asked.

Resumar met his brother's blue eyes. They had fought together in some of the most horrific places in the universe during the Evolli war. They had seen death and war at its worst, or so they thought. Never once had Androcles treated him, Denali or Arrarn any differently because they had different mothers. It was not the way they were raised. Resumar also knew that his brother hated the title of Crown Prince because to him it signified in some way that he was supposedly better than his brothers, something that Andro had never once cultivated or even brought up in a joking manner. This was the brother who had worked with him, helped him to become a better leader of men, and then assisted in Resumar getting his own command.

If he could not trust this man, who could he trust?

"Andro... do you love me?" He asked finally.

Androcles Leonidas looked at his brother and smiled. "You have never asked me that question Res." He said.

Resumar nodded. "I didn't think it was ever needed?"

"And you feel it is needed now?" Andro questioned him.

Resumar shrugged his broad shoulders. "I guess... I guess I wanted to be sure." He said.

"I think the better question here brother... is do you love her?" Andro asked.

Resumar looked at him with wide eyes. "You know?" He gasped.

Andro chuckled. "Did you think I wouldn't be able to sense her?" He asked. "Resumar, I am the one who taught you how to shield in a way so that none of our parents could intrude upon something we wanted to keep from them."

"How... how long have you known?" Resumar stammered out the question.

"When I felt her presence in Sparta using the same techniques you and I use." Andro answered. "It was easy enough to realize it wasn't you. The first night she was having difficulty adjusting the layers of Mindvoice and how much shielding to apply. I helped her until she was able to finally reach out to you."

"You helped her?" Resumar exclaimed.

"As loud as she was announcing her presence within Mindvoice, if I hadn't caught it when I did, father was sure to detect her." Andro said with a knowing smile. "Do you love her Res?"

"More... more than I can put into words Andro." Resumar answered.

Andro nodded. "Then that's good enough for me." He said.

"You don't care that... you don't care that she is Kavalian?" Resumar asked.

Andro shrugged once more. "Once I got past the tail part...?" He asked with a wide grin looking at his brother. Andro reached up and put his hand behind Resumar's neck and squeezed tightly. "If she was able to claim your heart brother... that says it all right there. Yes... she is Kavalian. That does not automatically make her a bad person. She obviously does not adhere to the twisted views of her people... and while she may not know it just yet, her abilities within Mindvoice do not allow her to hide her true intentions. She wears them on her sleeve for all to see. And the love she feels for you is genuine and real."

"You didn't probe her did you?" Resumar asked.

"That is not something I will do and you know that." Andro said. "You don't need too anyway. Like I said... her feelings for you are open for all to feel right there on the surface. She hasn't learned how to shield them just yet. That is something you should probably get around to teaching her by the way." He spoke with a smile.

"She... her scent drives me mad." Resumar spoke with a sheepish smile.

"As Sadi's does to me." Andro said.

"I can hardly think straight let alone teach her something when I am with her." Resumar said.

"Then you need to take her to see Helen and let Helen teach her." Andro spoke. He looked at his brother. "You are going to do it today aren't you?"

Resumar nodded. "Athani heard them talking last night. Her father gave her to Qurot... and he will undoubtedly come for her tonight and try to force himself on her. I won't allow that Andro."

"Nor should you." Andro stated. "I hope you at least married her already?"

Resumar nodded quickly. "Six days ago." He answered. "Thr'won conducted the elven ceremony."

"Does mother know?" Andro asked.

Resumar shook his head. "She left to gather Normya before I had a chance to tell her. The rest of our mothers know however, but I did not want to tell her via a communication. She already has too much to concern herself with when it comes to our sister."

Andro nodded. "Ain't that the anse truth?" He said with a smile. "I take it mother has been working with Aunt Deia to put the petition through?"

Resumar nodded. "Tenna got the final signatures last night." He spoke. "I'm going to pick her up today and get her out of there. She will be in the Market Square at noon. I imagine I will need to get her out of Sparta quickly."

Andro nodded. "I was going to send Sadi back with Ne'Veha but we will wait over the city and you can return to SODRAG with us. At least until father returns. You do realize he will be crazy with anger."

Resumar nodded. "That's what I'm afraid of."

"He'll get over it." Andro said. "Especially if Athani has proved to four of our mothers that she is indeed sincere. And that is no easy feat I will tell you that."

Resumar looked at him. "I'm more concerned with what you feel brother." He said seriously. "I don't have a friend like Moneus is to you Andro... you are my closest friend. I need to know that you approve... that you trust in me."

"You don't need my approval Res." Andro said quickly. "If you are asking me as your brother and friend if you have made the right choice... then I will say without hesitation that you have. Vampire, Kavalian, Drow... it matters not as long as they are true in their feelings Resumar. Isn't that what Helen always taught us in those tediously boring classes?"

Resumar nodded. "Yes."

"Then that is all you need to know." Andro spoke. "Now... for the record... I wouldn't choose her over Sadi... but she is a hottie. Isn't that what Uncle Daniel always calls Aunt Anuk?"

Resumar laughed and nodded his head. "Yes! And she hates that name!"

Andro laughed and nodded. He squeezed the back of his brother's neck. "And for the record as well brother... I will always trust in you. Without question. Without pause. And without reservation."

Resumar reached up and took his brother's thick arms. "Thank you."

Andro motioned with his head. "Now let's get back in there and eat that breakfast Sadi is making. I can smell it from here and my stomach is very close to overpowering my mind." He draped his arm over Resumar's shoulder as they began to walk back to the villa. "Tell me though... what exactly can she do with that tail of hers?"

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

SPARTA

KAVALIAN EMBASSY

The door hissed open loudly, shorting out the security system and allowing Qurot to burst into Athani's room on the second floor of the embassy. Qurot marched right into the room as if he owned it, gripping the data pad tightly in his hand and a large smile decorating his cat like features.

"You belong to me now Athani'Puat! A full day earlier than I had expected woman!" He bellowed too loudly, his voice carrying humor and arrogance as his eyes darted back and forth. "Your father has..."

Qurot stopped in the middle of the room and looked around. The large main room was empty; the blinds pulled open allowing the sun to pour into the room. The couch cushions were tossed askew on the floor as if someone had been looking for something in a hurry. His eyes narrowed slightly as they scanned the room. He moved to the counter along the wall and saw the empty containers of food sitting casually. The dispenser was still active with a large mug of cooling coffee in it. Qurot dipped his finger into the liquid and brought it to his mouth, tasting the flavor. It was the coffee they had served at the dinner on the royal estate. The coffee made by the youngest wolf Queen. Qurot turned his head towards the bedroom, remembering that Athani had commented that the coffee was foul tasting and she didn't care for it.

Qurot's head came up and he moved to the COM panel, slamming his hand down on it. "This is Commander Qurot!" He barked. "Where is Athani'Puat?"

"The Prefect's daughters left this morning Commander." The female voice answered. "Their departure orders said they were going to the Market Square."

"Who authorized that?" Qurot snapped.

"Ambassador Jiss Commander." The voice answered.

"Instruct Jiss to meet me in Athani's quarters immediately!" Qurot nearly screamed as he started walking towards the bedroom.

He paused for only a second as the door slid open to reveal the unmade bed and different clothes strewn about the floor and on the bed. He stepped further into the bedroom; the blinds in this room were not yet open and he moved to the window stabbing the control panel impatiently and hearing the soft whirring as the blinds began to open. He looked back to the bed as the sun began to light the interior and his eyes grew even wider. He moved quickly to the bed and scooped up the silk garments, holding them up to the light. He realized the garments were some very expensive and seductive underclothes, one side of the soft pink panties torn in such a way that they appeared to have been pulled off Athani's body in haste. Qurot hissed loudly, knowing that Kavalian women were not allowed to wear such clothes. He lifted his head and moved around to the other side of the bed, his yellow eyes searching the floor. He spied the flicker of metal on the floor just under the edge of the bed as the blinds opened fully and he bent over to pick up the object. As he stood back up and looked at it, his eyes began to grow dark with killing anger. He turned as Jiss entered the main room and moved across to the entrance of the bedroom quickly.

“Qurot... how dare you!” Jiss exclaimed. “You have no right to...”

Qurot whirled on him savagely. “I have every right!” He screamed. “Prefect Keleru sent the order making her my mate this morning!” He flipped the data pad at Jiss and he held up the undergarments with the opposite hand. “Where did she get these?”

Jiss looked at the undergarments and his eyes grew a little wider. “I don’t know.” He declared reaching up to take them.

Qurot snatched them away and then he held up the small object. “And this?” He growled angrily.

Jiss took the object, staring at it for a long moment. “This is... this is...”

“Yes Ambassador! It is a button from a man’s shirt! Athani’Puat has no clothes made for men.” Qurot almost screamed. “A male has been in this room with her! A male!”

Jiss looked at him. “What... what are you suggesting?” Jiss spoke.

“How did a man get in her room with her Jiss?” Qurot barked. “She is on the second floor of this embassy. The only way to get into her room unseen is by using the roof! The only way to get to the roof is to move through the embassy! I checked all access points myself!”

“There have been no others except Timur, Pian and Karun!” Jiss snapped right back. “Are you suggesting...”

“You fool! It is a Lycavorian!” Qurot screamed out tossing the garments down to the floor. “A Lycavorian that rides one of their beasts! He must have landed on the roof and then dropped to her balcony!”

Jiss looked at him wide eyed. “Impossible!” He gasped.

“Athani’Puat is mine! Her purity will be mine!” Qurot snarled. “I am going to the Market Square! She will not be allowed out of the embassy until such time as the transport arrives and we leave!” He spoke as he headed for the door. “I will have that wench under me and I don’t care what the Prefect says!”

Jiss turned slowly as Qurot stormed from the bedroom.

SPARTA MARKET SQUARE

Athani and Jalersi sat at the small café table in Market Square, the largest and most popular gathering place for assorted vendors and men and women simply looking to relax and be with family and friends. Jalersi had begun coming to the Square with her sister four days ago at Athani’s suggestion, in essence to get her out of the embassy since it was now very clear that their father had only sent her to Earth as a figurehead. Jiss and Matuarr were running things, and Jalersi was left out. Unlike her younger sister, this did not bother Jalersi as much as Athani, for she was more anchored in the culture of their people. It did bother her however that her father chose to disregard her council when it came to the Lycavorians. Jiss and Matuarr had gone about things the wrong way. Facing the Lycavorians head on was not the answer she was beginning to learn. More often than not their endurance was far superior to whoever they faced. They were a much more tolerant people, allowing species of every known race to walk freely within their city. She did not see any Evolli or Kochab, and the only Unsaar people she had seen were peaceful traders, but aside from those examples she saw them all. The vampires she had seen in the last four days went out of their way to greet her openly and with friendly voices. Jalersi quickly learned that the vampires within the Union were in no way like those among the High Coven. She saw females in high ranking positions within the military, and she saw one thing she never imagined and that was mothers walking their children on the streets.

Jalersi had been working on trying to set up trade agreements with member worlds of the Union, anything that would help them to advance her father’s goal of expanding the KFI and become a major player in the universe. She found that while the men and women politicians and the heads of companies she had spoken to in regards to trade were open and frank, they were very wary of doing business with them. King Leonidas had opened the door to trade with the KFI without so much as a question but that now gave Jalersi pause for she saw why he had done it. He was not telling these people what to do; they made their trade decisions for themselves, but they were exceptionally wary of the Kavalian people because of the policies her father had enforced for so long.

Jalersi lifted her mug of tea and looked at her sister over the rim of the mug. Since that last day on Leonidas's ship her sister had been different somehow. She was more animate and full of energy and also more prone to question what it was their father was doing. Her normally dull blue/green eyes were bright and full of life, as if she had found something recently that caused her great joy. When she had been confined to her quarters she had not questioned it, and when she had been instructed to venture out into the city proper near the embassy she had done so without question. This was not the Athani she was used to seeing and had seen for the last few years. This was a different Athani's Puat. She watched as Athani glanced at her time piece again for the third time in the last hour.

Jalersi lowered her mug. "That is the third time you have checked your time piece sister." She spoke. "Is something going to happen?"

Athani looked at her evenly. "Jalersi... have you ever thought about what it would be like to live like they do?" Athani asked motioning with her head to the people all around them. "Do you never wish for something more than what you have?"

Jalersi let her blue eyes sweep across the expanse of the café, taking in the soldiers and civilians and the young couples along with the older ones. Males and females and children of all species. "It is not our way Athani." She said softly turning back to look at her.

"So you don't want to know what it is like to be able to walk the streets and not be looked at like a piece of meat." Athani said. "As something beneath the males of our species?"

"Now you are beginning to sound like you did as we were coming here." Jalersi spoke. "I wondered where that Athani had gone too."

"Jalersi... do you love Pusintin?" Athani asked abruptly.

Jalersi looked at her wide eyed. "What kind of question is that?" She declared. "He is my husband."

"That is not what I asked you Jalersi." Athani spoke matter of factly. "I asked you if you loved him."

"I won't answer that question." Jalersi hissed softly. "It is inappropriate."

"Why?" Athani asked softly staring at her older sister for a long moment. "You don't love him do you?"

"Athani..."

"Is that why you slept with Pian shortly after Pusintin returned to you from here? After his brother almost killed him?" Athani asked seeing her sister's eyes grow wide in horror. "I know he wanted nothing to do with you for many months. Did you turn to Pian for comfort because you care for him and always have, or did you turn to him for the physical gratification that Pusintin does not provide to you?"

Jalersi looked around quickly. "Athani... you know not what you speak of! How dare you ask me such questions?" She spat.

"Don't I Jalersi? I saw the two of you leave his home Jalersi. You can't deny it." Athani asked. She leaned forward over the small table. "You can't see it can you sister?"

"See what?" Jalersi demanded.

"Pian has changed Jalersi. He has changed for you." Athani spoke softly. "Why do you think he is so well groomed now? Why do you think he returned to his schooling even as a fleet officer and got a Decree of Education? Why do you think he has never taken a mate in all the years since that day?"

"Athani stop it!" Jalersi spoke.

"He loves you Jalersi." Athani spoke. "Even Karun sees it. You do too... you just won't admit to yourself your own feelings. And do not sit there and tell me you feel nothing for him because you would be lying to me."

"Athani..."

"Pusintin is not for you sister." Athani spoke. "He has become no better than father in many respects. He speaks of change and nothing ever comes of it. Only more war and death and conquering. He said he would pull our females out of the horrors we have to endure. Has he done this? Do you wish this for your daughter? Pusintin is sure to do things in the old fashion way. Do you wish to see your daughter given to some brute like Qurot?"

Jalersi glared at her. "He promised me we would not allow that!" She barked. "He told me he would allow me to choose her mate!"

“And you believe him?” Athani asked.

“He would not...” Jalersi stopped speaking then and Athani nodded her head slowly in confirmation.

“You were going to say he would never lie to you weren’t you?” She asked. “Are you so sure sister?”

“Why... why are you questioning me like this?” Jalersi spoke quickly.

“Because for all your talk sister, you are too frightened to take a chance on something that would give you happiness.” Athani replied. “You thought sending us here was father’s first attempt at making good on what he has told us for so many years. It did not turn out that way did it? It was never meant to turn out the way you had hoped. The way we had hoped.” Athani reached across the table and took Jalersi’s hands in hers, squeezing them hard and meeting her sister’s beautiful blue eyes. “I don’t hate you Jalersi... I could never hate you. I love you with all my heart. You are my sister and under that façade you put forth, you are no different than me. You tried to protect me from our more disgusting laws and you thought it would be different with Pusintin. You thought that he would be the catalyst for the changes that we thought would finally be coming forth. You have really discovered that he is no different than the Kavalian father who raised him in our ways. He is no different than our father Jalersi, and you know that in your heart. He relishes his role as a Kavalian, and he plays the part much better than some of the other fool Pride Leaders.”

“Athani... if Qurot or Timur... if they heard you speaking like this they would punish you harshly!” Jalersi said. “I don’t want to see that sister... no matter what you may think I do love you!”

Athani nodded her head as she sat back. “I know you do Jalersi... truly I do. But I will no longer hold in my words or my emotions. I have discovered something Jalersi... something that gives me more joy and happiness than I have ever known. And it will only grow as the days pass by.”

Jalersi’s brow furrowed. “Athani... you are speaking in riddles.” She said. “You will return with Qurot and I when the transport arrives. You will be Qurot’s mate.”

Athani met her gaze evenly. “No.” She said shaking her head quickly. “Qurot will never have my purity Jalersi. He will never have my love and devotion... and I will never be his mate.”

“Athani... what are you saying?” Jalersi asked as a sudden sinking feeling began in the pit of her stomach and began to climb upwards inside her chest.

Athani smiled at her lovingly. “Qurot will never have these things Jalersi... he will never have them because I have found and given them to the man I will gladly spend the rest of my days with.”

Jalersi’s eyes grew wide. “What?” She gasped.

“We must go Aryschanne.” The male voice spoke from behind Jalersi and she bolted to her feet quickly whirling around as Athani got up with a smile on her face.

Jalersi watched as Athani stepped up to Resumar and slid her arms around his waist lovingly, her long tail curling around his right leg in affection as the memories of their previous night together flooded her. He had torn the undergarments from her body in the midst of their passion, forgetting that he had bought them for her only the day before, before spending the next hours worshiping her in ways that still caused her to see stars. Jalersi watched with wide eyes and a sudden feeling of lost chances and opportunities as they shared a blistering kiss right there in front of her. Resumar Leonidas had come up behind her without so much as a rustle in the leaves and Jalersi’s heart was racing out of control. She watched as his right arm closed around Athani’s waist possessively pulling her closer to him and they turned to look at her.

None of them noticed the Netnews crew twenty meters away standing among others as they began watching what was taking place.

Watching and recording.

“Jalersi... you know Resumar Leonidas.” Athani said with a brilliant smile. “You are exactly four minutes late my love.” She continued looking back up at Resumar’s face with an adoring gaze.

Resumar grinned and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek. “I had to bring backup.” He stated. “Just in case.”

“Backup?” Athani asked with a confused expression.

“In case those who wish to stop your defection decide to make a scene.” The new voice spoke causing Athani to turn quickly and watch Androcles Leonidas walking confidently among the tables.

Andro wore his Mark IV ArmorPly with the crimson shoulders and carried his helmet under one arm. The pommels of his swords could be seen extending up over his wide shoulders. Athani looked behind him and saw Elynth resting on the stone walkway next to Cemath, an elf female she did not recognize in Elynth’s saddle with a wide eyed expression on her face under the helmet and gripping the saddle mounts tightly. Andro stopped in front of her and Athani pressed back closer to Resumar as she gazed into those azure colored blue eyes. “Good morning Athani’Puat, excuse me... Athani Leonidas.” He spoke.

“What?” Jalersi gasped loudly now.

All of them heard the commotion to the side and saw Qurot and Timur shoving their way through the crowd with two other members of the Kavalian security forces. It took them only five seconds to finish closing the distance, Qurot’s eyes ablaze with rage when he saw Athani holding Resumar Leonidas, tail curled around his leg, and his arm intimately around her waist holding her close to him.

“What is going on here?” He barked. “You will remove your vile touch from her person immediately son of Leonidas and I will forget this ever happened!” He snarled.

“Not likely fool!” Resumar stated.

“Seize her!” Qurot snapped.

Timur and the two Kavalian security troops had taken only three steps to comply with this order before they were confronted with two gleaming silver Shi Viskas, one razor sharp sword tip pressed tightly to Qurot’s throat, and the barrel of the K12 which had appeared in Resumar’s hand almost magically pressed against Qurot’s opposite cheek. Resumar had inched Athani behind his body protectively Jalersi saw, but not enough to take away her natural defiance, and she glared at Qurot with undisguised hatred.

“It is my recommendation that you stand your puppets down Commander Qurot.” Andro spoke. “If you do not... you and they will be very dead.”

“Athani’Puat is a Kavalian!” Qurot shouted angrily. “She is to be my mate! You will have your brother unhand her! She is mine! My property! Her purity and her possessions will be mine!”

Athani laughed at this and she stepped forward slightly, her tail retreating from around Resumar’s leg to curl seductively around his waist as she pressed up against his front. “I told you Qurot!” She snapped. “I told you that you would never have my purity. I have given that to the man I love! I have given that to my husband!”

Jalersi’s and Qurot’s eyes grew wide at the same instant, but for entirely different reasons to be sure. Qurot made to step forward, anger surging through his veins, but the tip of Andro’s sword held firm and Resumar pressed the K12 tighter into his face as he shifted Athani to his side and Qurot glared at them savagely.

“Give me a reason channubous!” Resumar growled viciously. “She is my wife! My mate! And you will never lay your hands on her as long as I live!”(Motherfucker)

“Then I will kill you!” Qurot hissed.

Resumar’s smile was not one of friendly greeting, and his eyes changed while his wolf fangs extended. “I have more important things to do igord! Licking my wife’s body all over comes to mind right away!”

More shouted voices caused Jalersi and Timur to turn and see Jiss sprint up to where they stood his own eyes wide.

“What... what is going on?” He barked taking in the situation. He saw Athani’s hands holding to Resumar’s waist and her body pressed far too intimately against his back where she had moved after her outburst. “Why is your brother holding the Prefect’s daughter in such a way Prince Androcles? You will unhand her immediately!”

“Tell your troops to back away Ambassador.” Andro stated firmly. “If you do not... you will have four less embassy security.”

“You threaten them!” Jiss shouted. “While your brother paws the Kavalian Prefect’s daughter like she is...”

Andro’s eyes turned to him. “She is his wife!” Andro snarled at him seeing their eyes grow wide at this information.

“That... that is not possible!” Jiss finally stammered.

“I won’t allow it!” Qurot screamed.

Andro moved with lightning reflexes when he detected Qurot beginning to spring. He snapped his sword back and drove the hilt of the weighted sword into Qurot’s jaw with the force of a club. For all his size, Qurot dropped to the ground like a rock under the blow, his hands coming up to grasp his now fractured jaw. His eyes glared up at Andro, staring into azure colored wolf eyes now, Andro’s fangs fully extended.

“I am unlike any man you have ever met Qurot!” Andro snarled at him. “Do not make the mistake of thinking I will not stand with my brother against you. It would be a painful lesson for you to learn. Perhaps even fatal.”

“I will not allow this!” Jiss bellowed.

Andro lowered his sword from Qurot’s neck but kept this Shi Viska leveled at Timur and the others. “You have no choice.” He growled. “Athani... look in the pouch on Resumar’s belt. Take the pad out and give it to Ambassador Jiss here.”

Athani did so quickly, her own eyes wide at the utter vehemence with which Resumar’s brother was displaying in defending her. Resumar’s words to her many days ago came rushing back.

“We will always stand with each other.” Resumar had said. “That is something our father and mothers have drilled into our heads for years.

Athani removed the pad from the pouch and came up next to Andro holding out the pad to Jiss confidently as the enormity of what was happening hit her full force. And it made her want to scream with happiness.

“I have defected.” She announced proudly. “I have officially renounced my Kavalian citizenship and everything that offers me, which is precious little anyway. I have requested and been granted citizenship within the Lycavorian Union.”

Jiss looked at the pad for a long moment. “You can not do this.” He finally stated.

“Oh but I have.” Athani said getting over her own surprise at having Resumar’s brother defend her so diligently. “I have met and fallen in love with Resumar Leonidas. He asked me to marry him and I said yes without so much as a second’s pause.” Athani looked down at Qurot who was glaring at her with cruel eyes. “Resumar didn’t take my purity Qurot... he didn’t have to. I gave it to him freely and with enormous exuberance... and I have done so many times since that first night we shared. And it is more glorious each time! You should hear me cry out his name in passion. Something you would not be able to produce from me no matter how hard you tried you nubous ronnus!”

Andro glanced quickly at Resumar who met his eyes at Athani’s words. Resumar shrugged his broad shoulders. “She learns quickly.” He said in reference to Athani’s use of the ancient language.

Andro grinned. “There you have it Ambassador Jiss.” Andro said turning back to the man. “She is no longer a citizen of the Kavalian Federation. She is now my brother’s wife and mate. She is now a Leonidas and a Princess of the Union. You will find that the last signatures needed to approve her citizenship were inked last evening, and the request was approved by not only my mother Queen For’mya, but the Prime Minister as well. Not to mention eighty-three Senators of the Union. Now stand your men down, for the penalty for attempting to assault a mated and married female in this Union is imprisonment for a minimum of twenty years. To actually lay hands on her means death if her husband discovers you in the act. I won’t tell you what it would mean to assault a Princess of the Union...” Andro glared at Jiss. “You would not enjoy that reaction in the least. All of which means your men will be dead since I will support my brother without thought in defending his wife.”

Jiss looked up from the pad. “Stand down!” He snapped.

“Jiss... you can’t...” Timur stammered.

“You will do it damn you!” Jiss barked. “We can not break their laws!” He said holding up the pad. “It is all here in writing! Athani has made her decision! Now stand down!”

Timur snarled his own distaste and anger and turned to help Qurot to his feet as the others took several steps back. Jiss looked at Athani with distaste. “You will be marked among our people Athani’Puat.” He spoke softly, the anger and hatred in his words very evident. “You will never be allowed to return.”

Athani snorted in disgust. “Do you see me shedding tears over that fact Jiss you fool?” She snapped.

“Cemath my brother!” Resumar called over his shoulder.

Cemath came to his feet instantly and moved forward, men and women alike moving back further as he pushed aside tables and chairs to come up behind them. Resumar squeezed Athani’s hand. “After you Aryschanne.” He said.

Athani looked at Jalersi for a long moment. “I love you sister.” She said softly. “But I want a future of my own making. A future with a man I love. Not with a pig like Qurot!”

Athani turned without hesitation and walked confidently to where Cemath looked at her. He lowered his huge head affectionately, his eyes bright as she reached up to kiss his snout fearlessly, stunning those Kavalians in the security force that were watching them as she climbed easily and without hesitation into the saddle on his back. All of them were holding in the fear these dragon beasts produced almost naturally in their species, and Athani'Puat had just shattered that with her actions and made all of them look the fool.

“Go brother.” Andro spoke looking at Resumar. “I will meet you in the sky.”

“Are you sure?”

Andro nodded. “We have come to an understanding.” He said looking at Jiss. “Go now... for we don't want to cause more of a scene than we already have.”

Resumar nodded and his Shi Viska vanished instantly. He wasted no time and crossed to where Cemath was, using his TK power to lift himself into the saddle behind Athani. Her blue/green eyes were bright with love and promise as she looked back over her shoulder when his arm slid around her waist and pulled her firmly against his chest. Her tail snaked around his waist completely.

“The first day of the rest of our lives starts now Aryschanne.” He whispered into her ear.

Athani Leonidas kissed him as fervently as she could given she was twisted around at the odd angle. Even Cemath getting to his feet and spreading his wings did not cause them to break their kiss. He trumpeted out his own happiness, echoed by Elynth as she moved forward and then he launched them into the blue sky.

Andro waited until Timur and the others had helped Qurot to his feet and stepped back before he spun his sword gracefully and returned it to the scabbard on his back. He lowered his arm but did not dismiss his Shi Viska as he looked at Jiss.

“Do you realize what this will do to relations between our governments?” Jiss declared. “The repercussions this will have will resonate loudly.”

“It will do nothing.” Andro answered him evenly. “If it does... it will be by your doing and not ours. We followed our laws Ambassador Jiss. Just as we have done for thousands of High Coven men, women and children who have defected to us over the years. We have also followed Galactic Law and its processes, something to which you purport to hold in such high regard. We just sped up the process somewhat.” Andro said with a smile. “Any repercussions will be on the part of the KFI... and it will show all those in the Union just how unyielding and barbaric you truly are. And nothing that you do will change that.” Andro turned his head slightly. “Sister?”

Elynth moved the last several meters up behind him, causing the Kavalians to back up in fear. Andro willed away his Shi Viska and it vanished into Flat Space once more. He paused a few seconds and then turned to climb easily onto Elynth's back. He settled himself in the saddle, one arm going around Ne'Veha's waist without thought. The helmet hid most of her features except for her lips and eyes, and her hands gripped his arm tightly as his arm encircled her. He used his other hand to call his helmet to him from where it had dropped on the ground and he slid it down over his head. He leaned close to Ne'Veha's head.

“Ready?” He asked softly. Ne'Veha nodded without speaking and Andro smiled. He looked at Jiss and Jalersi standing there. “It was pleasant talking with you.” He spoke. “Elynth go!”

Elynth trumpeted out her answer and cocked her legs beneath her, exploding into the air and spreading her enormous wings easily to gain lift. Jalersi watched with a stunned expression completely different from the expressions of Jiss and the others.

“I love you sister.” She whispered to herself so that no one could hear her. “I pray the gods grant you all that you desire.”

None of them saw the Netnews crew off to the side watching intently, the small holo recorder drifting to the right shoulder of the man who was directing it and focused on the two dragons as they lifted into the sky and quickly receded from sight.

ANDRO'S STRIKER DT TEN THOUSAND FEET ABOVE SPARTA

Ne'Veha watched for as long as she was able while they closed on the back of the single STRIKER DT with Sadi at the controls. The rear of the ship was wide open, a long ramp extended outward and she had witnessed Resumar Leonidas land on that ramp with no difficulty. She had agreed to fly with Prince Androcles because he had offered and she had never flown on a dragon before. Speeding along at five thousand feet from Gytheio to Sparta had been exhilarating to say the least, only the landing had given her any pause. Sadi had been right when she told her that Andro would do or say nothing to try to convince Ne'Veha of her place in this universe. They would allow her to discover that all on her own. He spoke to her easily within their Mindvoice connection while they were flying, Ne'Veha almost feeling her ability within Mindvoice growing by the hour the more she remained with them. When she had stammered out her apology for vomiting on him he had laughed softly and his arm pulled her closer to him.

Ne'Veha had to admit to herself, Androcles Leonidas was the most physically handsome man she had ever seen and the numerous scars she had seen on his chest and back only added to his beauty in her eyes. His skin was more deeply tanned than Tarren's, the muscular definition far exceeding what Tarren sported. His eyes however, his eyes could cause her knees to become weak just by looking into them, a feeling she had felt with looking into Sadi's eyes as well. He did not come across as arrogant or pompous as she had always assumed members of the Royal family to be. As her mother and father had always told her they would be.

Ne'Veha had watched him while they ate breakfast with Sadi and his brother, the jokes that were tossed out between the two brothers wildly humorous and directed normally at each other. She was amazed at how much he could laugh at himself and the fool things he had done as a boy. She also noticed the complete and total trust he had in his brother and his decision to marry the Kavalian female. He and Sadi were always touching in some way, their fingers, their arms brushing against one another and the love they had for each other was plainly apparent. Yet as they sat there, Ne'Veha could also feel that love wrapping around and surrounding her. She could touch them both within Mindvoice even then, sensing their powerful desire for her and for the raven haired Carisia who she would meet later. She could also feel the desire and want for the dark skinned elven female, she had to be a Drow, Ne'Veha determined. While linked with them in such a way she could see flashes of the shimmering white hair and unique amber eyes. They could not see a face clearly, but the pull to her was there and very strong. Ne'Veha also couldn't deny the utter sense of belonging that filled her when she floated within their minds and saw their dreams for the future. Dreams that very much included her.

Having him hold her as they flew to Sparta and then back up to the STRIKER had sent sizzling sensations of pleasure through her. Her fear had caused her to press against him tightly initially, but that quickly passed and yet she stayed pressed against him because it caused her to shudder in delight she had never felt before. She had her eyes shut tightly as they landed softly on the ramp, but then opened them quickly as Elynth moved into the interior of the STRIKER. He jumped from the saddle and turned to help her down, her hands on his arms as he lowered her in front of him and she looked up into his azure blue eyes.

I know what Sadi told you this morning comes as quite a shock Ne'Veha. His voice filled her head and her dark eyes grew a little wider still at the ease with which this happened. It was just not something she was used too. Trust me when I tell you, it was more of a shock to us when we discovered this. We will not pressure you in any way Ne'Veha. If this is to develop, we want it to be something you want as well.

Can... can you hear my thoughts? She asked haltingly.

Andro smiled. Yes. Quite well in fact. You are far stronger within Mindvoice than you first thought.

This... these last hours have been overwhelming. She spoke honestly.

I imagine for you they have yes. He told her.

You... you don't question it? She asked looking at him surprised.

Andro chuckled within the connection but his face remained unchanged. Actually... I question everything. He replied. It drives my father and mothers crazy. If you are asking if I question what I feel for you... what Sadi and Carisia feel for you... no. When it feels right... when my mind and body tells me it is right, as it does now... I don't question. I follow what they tell me. As do Sadi and Carisia. And I know you can feel these same things running through you because we are tied so closely together.

What... what do they tell you? Ne'Veha asked softly. About me?

They tell me that when I taste you... when we taste you... we will all be that much closer to being complete. Andro answered.

When? Ne'Veha exclaimed.

Andro shrugged. I'm confident I guess.

Ne'Veha couldn't help the smile that crossed her face at his words. They were not spoken with arrogance, but with commitment and truth. It appears that you are. She said finally. She looked down away from his eyes. I need... I need time Prince...

Andro took her chin in his fingers and lifted her head back up. He stared at her for a long moment and traced the edges of her cheek that he could reach behind the helmet. He reached up and took the sides of her helmet and gently lifted it from her head. He let it drop gently to the deck using his TK power and then reached up to remove his helmet. He leaned over quickly and placed his lips next to Ne'Veha's four inch high elven ear, nuzzling the edges of her ear oh so gently, causing Ne'Veha to grip his arms tighter and close her eyes as wonderful sensations coursed through her. Tarren had only nuzzled her elven ears when he was about to fuck her, never as a means of affection or foreplay. Prince Androcles obviously knew quite a bit about elven females, and the reaction he would illicit when he nuzzled the edges of her ears. It would not have worked had she not been at least somewhat attracted to him, but from the force of the delightful shivers coursing through her Ne'Veha knew she wanted this man badly.

My name is Andro. And you will have all the time you desire Ne'Veha. We are not going to change our minds... and no one will take your place I can tell you that. We will wait forever if need be... even after we find the last of us. He told her.

Your words... your words threaten to make me surrender right now. Ne'Veha spoke softly. Being able to talk with you like this... what I feel racing through me for Sadi... for Carisia... for another that I have not even met. It is... My parents would... they would tell me I am crazy for feeling these things. She... she is a Drow you know?

Andro nodded. Yes she is. He said. A supremely intelligent and capable young woman, just like you and Sadi and Carisia. I don't know how this all came to be, I've told you that. It began only after Sadi and I came together. Only then were we strong enough together to feel Carisia and you and her, and what we feel for all of you. We could not just dismiss that, as much as I wanted too.

You wanted too? Why? She gasped.

I am trying to forge my own life Ne'Veha. Out from under the shadow of my father. Andro said looking at her. Discovering that I have these feelings for four different women reminds me that I parallel my father in many respects, no matter how much I try not too.

Ne'Veha gazed at him for a long moment before reaching up and running her fingers along his cheek and through the neatly trimmed goatee that he wore. She could feel the truth of his words to her, feel the conviction in them, and more than anything this is what started Ne'Veha down the road to her future. Perhaps... perhaps destiny has plans for you Androcles Leonidas. She said softly.

Andro smiled and nodded his head. When you are ready Ne'Veha. Andro spoke to her. And only when you are ready. They heard the ramp finally lock in place and Andro turned as Elynth moved completely past them. My sister Eliani will give you something to help purge the wine completely from your blood so you can return to your duties. A transport will take you back to the SCIMITAR in the morning from SODRAG. Tonight you can stay with us and learn about us. If that is what you wish.

Ne'Veha nodded quickly. Yes. I believe I would like that very much.

Andro nodded. Good. He squeezed her hands and turned to face the cockpit, tapping the COM unit on his chest. "KertaGai... shall we return to SODRAG?" He asked.

"On our way!" Sadi answered.

Andro turned as Resumar and Athani stepped up to him. He gazed into her blue/green eyes and saw the questions in them as she clung to Res's arm tightly. "You have a question Athani Leonidas." He said. "Go ahead and ask it. You are among family now and you need hold nothing in."

"You... I did not expect acceptance from Resumar's family so easily." She said haltingly. "Why?"

Andro chuckled. "That's easy Athani. You have taken my brother's heart and wrapped it within yours. Resumar trusts you completely. He loves you without question. That is how I feel for my brother." Andro smiled at her as he leaned over and kissed her cheek. "Welcome to our family Athani Leonidas and thank you for making us better for it." He spoke to her. He stood back up and looked at Resumar. "Our brothers and sisters will be waiting for the two of you Res. You had better prepare her for Arrarn's warped sense of humor, and Eliani's sharp tongue."

Resumar could only nod his head as he looked at him. "I will." He said finally.

Andro nodded. "I must talk with Moneus and Carina and make sure the training is still taking place as we had planned. You know that our brothers and sisters are very much the slackers when one of us isn't around to watch them."

Resumar chuckled as Andro began walking forward towards the cockpit.

HADARIA ROYAL PALACE

"...as you can see from this taped recording, the encounter in Sparta's main Merchant Square between Prince Resumar and Prince Androcles and members of the Kavalian Embassy Security Forces was far from friendly and open?" The voice of the female elf Netnews reporter spoke confidently. "We have learned very little since this incident four hours ago, but Queen For'mya has scheduled a Netnews conference to explain what is happening. Once again if you missed the footage just shown, Prince Resumar and Prince Androcles confronted Kavalian Embassy Security Forces in the main Market Square four hours ago. Blows were exchanged and the Princes left with Athani'Puat, daughter to the Kavalian Prefect. At question is the status of the Kavalian Prefect's youngest daughter Athani'Puat whom you saw in this footage, though it is apparent she and prince Resumar are much closer than was previously known." The attractive elven female turned her head quickly at something to the side. "Queen For'mya has just come out the main gate of the Royal Villa and she will make a statement now."

The picture changed to For'mya stepping up to the podium looking radiant in the long Brandeis blue dress that hugged her slim hips and waist and was cut low enough to show a good amount of cleavage from her small but very firm breasts. Her hair was pulled back tightly along the top of her head, showing her four inch high elven ears, while most of her blond hair fell to just past her shoulders.

"Good morning." For'mya began drawing the attention of at least two dozen Netnews reporters. "I will make a brief statement and then take a few questions, but then I would like to get back to my children." For'mya took a deep breath. "It was made known to me several days ago by our son Resumar that Athani'Puat, the youngest daughter to the Kavalian Prefect Keleru, was expressing a great desire to defect to the Union. It seems that Resumar's bold actions on board MJOLNIR'S HAND in saving her life opened a unique relationship between Athani and Resumar. For the past several weeks since the Kavalian Trade Delegation has been here, they have been meeting in secret, exploring the boundaries of this relationship. They announced to me and to Prime Minister Deia that they had in fact fallen in love and four days ago were joined in marriage in a traditional elven ceremony conducted by Senior Mage Thr'won in the mountains around Sparta. Knowing that her people would in no way approve or accept this marriage to Resumar, and knowing that she was going to be given to an officer in the Kavalian Delegation whom she has considerable distaste for, Athani asked that she be allowed to remain here with Resumar with political asylum. Deia and I explained to her that this was not possible as she was a citizen of the Kavalian Federation. Two days ago Athani'Puat presented to us a signed document from her renouncing her claim to any sort of Kavalian citizenship and formally requesting asylum and citizenship within the Union." For'mya looked up. "After consulting with Deia and several senior Senators, as well as several of the Magistrates on the Galactic Court, we accepted Athani's petition. Her sworn statement has been entered into official Union record, and she has been granted temporary asylum here in the Union until such time as her full citizenship request is processed. Given the fact that she is now also my son's wife and mate, that process will be completed by the end of today. Athani has eliminated her Pride's name and taken Leonidas as her married name. Just so everyone gets that right... her name is now Athani Leonidas." For'mya said with a smile. "Any other important information or details that you want will be released in an official statement later today by my office. I will take a few questions now."

The reporters all shouted out questions as any reporter dating back centuries would do and For'mya pointed to the young male Lycavorian in the front row.

"Lady For'mya is this in any way a response to the Kavalian attempt to have Princess Lisisa handed over to them?" The man asked.

For'mya shook her head quickly. "This is nothing more than two people falling in love." For'mya replied. "When Athani realized her feelings for Resumar she knew she would not be able to pursue them if she returned home. Her feelings for my son guided her actions. This has nothing to do with Lisisa."

"So it's not some form of retaliation?" He pressed.

For'mya smiled. "Retaliation for what?" She asked. "We defeated all but one portion of the Kavalian petition in regards to Lisisa. We agreed to the search portion of their petition to further the gains the trade delegation had made."

"So you do not see this as affecting the new Trade Agreement?" Another reporter shouted.

"Why would it?" For'mya asked. "This has nothing to do with the Trade Agreement. If the Kavalians wish to withdraw the Agreement because Athani decided she wanted to pursue a love she has discovered for my son that is their right. We did not force her into her decision. It was something she decided all for herself. A decision, if I'm not mistaken, that would not have been given to her if she returned home."

"The confrontation this morning in the Square?" The elven female who had been giving the initial report asked now.

"The confrontation in the Square this morning was regrettable." For'mya answered. "We will gladly treat Commander Qurot for any injuries he may have sustained, but he attempted to take the wife of a Spartan against her wishes. As you all know this type of action is frowned upon heavily within the Union. We hold our wives and mates in the highest of regards, just as we do all freedom loving species. Resumar asked his brother Androcles to accompany him to avoid just this sort of thing, but the Commander and his men were not as understanding. Andro was defending his brother and his brother's new wife as any brother would do."

"Queen For'mya... is King Leonidas aware of the events that have taken place?" Another reporter asked.

"Martin Leonidas is well aware of the events that have taken place." For'mya answered. "There is little that goes on within our Union that he does not know about. I spoke with him very early this morning and he sends his love and well wishes to his son and new daughter-in-law. He..."

Martin turned and looked at the holo image of For'mya in the corner of the main sitting room of the palace.

"You didn't speak to me Kinsoaurgai!" Martin snapped. His arms were crossed over his broad chest and he wore only his loose fitting black pants. Anja sat on the couch sipping the mug of coffee and wearing the simple thigh long sleeping shirt with three button lace appliqué in the front that displayed the deep cleavage between her full breasts. The thong panties matched the soft white color of the sleeper perfectly.

"Do not bark at me Martin Leonidas!" For'mya snapped right back. "And what would you have done? Denied your son the woman he loves? The woman that loves him?"

"How do we know this is not some sort of game?" Martin asked his tone softening.

"Thr'won married them Martin." For'mya spoke. "I spoke with her, as did Deia. She told us there is no chance that Athani was acting in any way. The love in her eyes for Res was very real and very powerful. Her presence within Mindvoice grows by the day and I for one am not going to dismiss that. You can punish me for my actions when you return."

Anja chortled from where she sat on the couch. "Ohhh... that sounds like fun." She said waggling her eyebrows. "I want a piece of that." She saw Martin turn and glare at her. "Glare at someone else you big oaf! You don't scare me!" She snapped.

"How long have you known about this? It damn sure didn't just come up within the last few days!" Martin said.

Anja shrugged. "A couple of weeks." She answered dismissively. "I won't begin to bore you with the details."

"A couple weeks?" Martin gasped turning back to For'mya. "Do I assume my other Queens know about this as well?"

"Dysea left before we or Resumar could tell her." For'mya said with a smile. "Though I'm sure she will see this transmission at some point and contact Res. The rest of us knew."

"And you didn't feel the need to tell me about it?" Martin asked.

“You would have told Resumar to stop seeing her and he would then have ignored you completely and done it anyway.” Anja said getting to her feet and moving up next to him. “Better it happen this way lover, better this way than it be discovered by the Kavalians while he is sneaking her around on Cemath so they can be together.”

“How long has Andro known?” Martin asked.

“When you are able to crack that boy’s Mindvoice shields you let us know.” Anja stated. “I for one would love to see what he’s got swirling around inside his head. He’s worst than you when it comes to keeping secrets from those he shouldn’t.”

“Melyanna does have a point Martin.” For’mya stated.

“Sibfla!” Martin swore. “Any reaction from the Kavalians?”

For’mya shook her head quickly. “Not as of yet. At least not officially or publicly. There is nothing they can do really; Jiss is smart enough to know that. Not if they wish to continue trying to arrange trade agreements with other member worlds of the Union.”

“You can bet they will attempt something.” Martin said. “Where are they?”

“They returned to SODRAG with Andro and Sadi.” For’mya answered. “And before you say anything, Resumar told her to bring nothing with her when she left and she did not. All she had were the clothes on her back. Resumar trusts her Martin, and after speaking with her I do not doubt her intentions. She loves our son Martin Leonidas.”

Martin nodded his head slowly. “Then I will not question your decision Kinsoaurgai. You are there and I am not. I will have a talk with my sons when I return however.” He said. “You and Deia must be prepared for repercussions. Have they searched Lisisa’s apartment?”

