Qurot nodded. “Yes. I surmise that Timur happened upon them, killed them and when he discovered Pian and the others they killed him. He had been shot nine times with a Lycavorian K14 hand weapon. That is no accident!”

“Jalersi and Pian?” Pusintin gasped.

Matuarr came up next to Qurot. “I have suspected for some time but did not say anything until I had real proof. I have seen her exiting his quarters at odd hours of the day Marshall Pusintin. I can only surmise she is...”

“She’s fucking Pian!” Pusintin growled. “That’s just beautiful! I’ll gut that fucker and feed his intestines to the worms!”

“Without an Edict of Dissolution from her in regards to your marriage, her actions call for a death sentence Marshall.” Matuarr spoke.

“I know what it calls for Matuarr!” Pusintin snarled at him. “And she would never file an Edit of Dissolution! She’s not smart enough to do that and she loves me too much!”

Matuarr nodded his head slowly. “Then... then perhaps I am wrong.”

“This is unbelievable!” Keleru spoke once more. “First Athani... now Jalersi? Pian and Karun? I refuse to believe they are all traitors! You have no idea where they went? Perhaps they were just running for shelter somewhere and mistook you for a Coven soldier through the smoke.”

“Karun looked right at me Prefect!” Qurot answered. “And it was a K14 that killed Timur... not a Coven weapon.”

“You did not attempt to contact them?” Keleru asked.

“Karun almost killed me Prefect!” Qurot snapped. “I did not feel it necessary to ask his intentions after that.”

“You did not follow them?” Pusintin asked.

“I did not find the tunnel until a short while ago! The damage to that side of the embassy is extensive and it took me several minutes to even reach that area. I have part of our remaining security detachment guarding the entrance.”

“Casualties?” Pusintin asked.

“A third of the staff. Mostly the administrative females who had other duties as well.” Qurot answered. “The High Coven attacked with only eleven commandos. I don’t believe they knew we had recently arrived security personnel.”

“Prefect... the Union has offered their assistance several times already.” Matuarr spoke. “If we continue to refuse it they will grow suspicious as to why?”

“What did they know?” Keleru asked now his voice low and trembling with anger.

“Only what you have allowed us to know Prefect.” Matuarr answered. “I do know that Pian and Jiss both did not agree with our plans to target the Leonidas family. They believe it will pull us into a war we can not win.”

“That’s bullshit!” Pusintin snapped viciously. “We have more than enough men and ships to do what we want to do. I could invade the Lycavorian Union from four different directions and overwhelm them if I wanted!”

Keleru stopped pacing in the transmission. “These events could work to our advantage.” He said finally, Pusintin turning to look at him Qurot and Matuarr saw. “It will make our tasks easier.”

“How so?” Pusintin asked.

“We will know where all of them are.” Keleru said. “If they have locked down the royal family as their Prime Minister announced so generously only moments ago, we can combine our teams and hit them in larger force.”

“Androcles took the older children off Earth Keleru.” Pusintin spoke. “We don’t know where they went.”

Keleru met his eyes. “Oh... but we do.” He said. He held out the data pad to him in the holo transmission. “I received this late last night from our contact within the Lycavorian Union government.” He said as Pusintin began to read. “It took some time... but they were able to find out where the elf Queen Dysea is. As well as her daughter.”

Qurot and Matuarr watched Pusintin look up at Keleru. “Cha’talla?” He gasped.

“Cha’talla?” Matuarr asked quickly. “Prefect we were under the impression the Immortal Cha’talla was dead.”

Qurot looked at Matuarr. “Who is this Cha’talla?” He asked.

Matuarr looked at him. “Former Captain to the High Lord Veldruk.” He answered. “The Immortal who protected Veldruk during our last war with the Coven. He was believed killed by Veldruk twenty-six years ago just before Aikiro rose to power. Something to do with betraying the High Lord.”

Keleru nodded. “Interesting isn’t it?” He said from the transmission. “The first Elven Queen of the Union and she is among Cha’talla’s tribe of Immortals. It’s perfect. That is where the son Androcles is taking them to finish their training. Kranek has the space and the terrain he needs apparently, and our contact has already confirmed several messages between Kranek and the son from his ship.”

“We’ll need to shift some forces around and contact Phy’iad and his mercenaries and let him know where she is!” Pusintin spoke now looking at Keleru. “This is like a gift to us Keleru!”

“Indeed.” Keleru spoke. He looked at Matuarr and Qurot. “There is a Puma Bane Pride Team in Sparta now disguised as traders. They have all undergone biogenic treatments and have been filtering among the city for weeks. I will send them a message. I want my daughter and the others found!”

“Is it wise to continue with our plans Prefect?” Matuarr asked. “They will be at their highest state of readiness now since the Coven did this.”

Keleru nodded. “This will limit them immensely and make it far easier for us to act.” He answered.

“And when your daughter and the others are found Prefect?” Qurot asked quickly. “What do you wish done?”

“Jalersi will be taken unharmed Qurot!” Keleru spoke quickly. “Pusintin will deal with her. Pian and Jiss are to be executed upon sight. Karun...” He looked at Pusintin.

Pusintin turned to the men from within the transmission. “I have two other sons who are risking their lives as we speak with the Puma Bane Pride Assassin Teams in The Wilds. Loyal Kavalians both of them! Karun can burn with Pian and the others for all I care. He has always been different.”

“The information he gave us is undoubtedly false then.” Matuarr spoke. “Do we still act on it?”

Pusintin looked right at Qurot. “NO! It can’t be trusted anymore. Make him pay Qurot.” He spoke. “I will give Jalersi and our daughter to the brothels of Nefoa for what she has done. I will have other children!”

Keleru nodded his head in the transmission. It would be fitting punishment for what she had done. “Matuarr... accept whatever help the Union offers you.” He spoke finally. “We need to keep them off balance for as long as we can. Our operations in The Wilds have already begun with great success, and by this time tomorrow Hadaria will be under our control as well. These attempts by the Coven have given us the advantage and they don’t even know it. This could not have come at a better time. That fool Aikiro, I always knew the bitch was insane. To attempt this without proper support was completely stupid.”

Matuarr nodded. “As you order Prefect.”

“Contact us with any strange requests they might have, but be as accommodating as possible and make it appear like we are victims as well.” Keleru spoke. “We must keep a public image of openness and friendship for a time longer. Qurot... I will pass on the coded channel of the Assassin Team when this transmission ends. Coordinate with them to complete our goals, but insure that you and Matuarr are off of Earth within moments of the attacks. They will not be accommodating to us once we kill off their precious royal family.”

Qurot nodded. “Of course Prefect.”

“Contact us if you discover my daughter, but until you leave Earth we should not speak again.” Keleru told them. “Your part of these plans is essential Qurot. Do not fail for everything hinges on what you do!”

“We won’t Prefect.” Qurot spoke firmly.

CABELIR
KAVALIAN HOMEWORLD
OFFICE OF PREFECT KELERU

“The man is a fool!” Keleru spoke as he turned and returned to the chair behind his desk. “He thinks brute strength will suffice at all times!”

“He serves his purpose.” Pusintin answered as he went to one of the chairs across from the desk Keleru settled behind. “I’ll be surprised if he makes it off Earth alive.”

“Well... it will be no great loss.” Keleru said as he settled into the plush chair. “This business with Jalersi and Pian is...”

“I reacted angrily Keleru.” Pusintin said. “I’m sorry.”

“Don’t be.” Jalersi’s father answered. “If it is true and she is consorting with Pian... you have the right to act in any manner you see fit according to our laws. Including disowning her and sending her to the brothels on Nefoa! Your daughter is another matter however. She is still very young Pusintin and...”

Pusintin shook his head. “She is just like her mother.” He spoke. “She is always pushing for more freedom and things that our females are not allowed. Karun does not treat her as a brother should. He is always giving her gifts and things. Telling her to read and be educated. I do not want to deal with that.”

“Then give her to a male seeking a plaything.” Keleru spoke. “Or arrange it that you can profit if you give her to the brothels.”

Pusintin looked at him. “You will not contest what I do?” He asked.

“Jalersi is your mate.” He answered. “She may be my daughter... but after what Athani did... it would not do for me to treat her differently than any other of our women who would dare entertain the attentions of a male that is not their mate. Pian’Nurarani however... he should know better.”

“He has always wanted Jalersi for himself.” Pusintin declared. “For many years now. I could sense that even though he gave no outward indications.”

“His Pride is large... but they are on the outskirts of our border with Wild Space... and unless I send a full force I can do nothing right now. At least not directly to his Pride aside from cutting off funds and such, which I will do immediately when we are done here.” Keleru said.

“Are there any members within the inner ring of planets?” Pusintin asked.

Keleru shook his head. “Not in positions of power no.” He answered. “Pian has kept them out of the main parts of the KFI and now I question as to why. Perhaps I will send a small ship to discover just what it is he is doing out there.”

“Nikkei is on Femeyau right now.” Pusintin spoke. “She went there to attend a gathering of Kavalian females who are coming to mating age. She didn’t want to go. She actually told me she didn’t want to be submissive to any male. She wanted to be like her mother.”

Keleru nodded. “Then I suggest you seize her as quickly as possible when she returns.” Keleru said. “If you wait to long and she discovers what it is you intend...”

Pusintin nodded. “They return tomorrow.” He said. “I’ll meet her myself and turn her over to the Entertainment Bureau for processing.”

“I will send word to our border post in that sector and have the officer there dispatch a small cruiser to investigate what exactly Pian is doing with his Pride.” Keleru spoke. “In the meantime, you need to notify Phy’iad of the location of the elf Queen so we can continue with that portion of our plans.”

Pusintin nodded and got to his feet. “I’ll do that right now.” He stated.

“You should be happy Pusintin.” Keleru spoke. “In a few short days you will have a new plaything, and we will be on our way to controlling the Lycavorian Union with you as its ruler. As it should have been long before now.”

Pusintin nodded. “And I look forward to that.” He stated. “As well as the fact my brother and that bitch of a mother will be very dead.”

ANJA'S OFFICE IN PALACE

“Buonau you upae!” Anja snarled angrily at the small holoimager on her desk. “Zarah is my daughter!”

“Zarah Leonidas is not your daughter. She is the vampire Queen’s daughter.” Buonau’s face answered smugly. “And your use of foul language does not do your cause any good!”

“Nubous my cause! And her name is Isabella Leonidas!” Anja barked as she came to her feet. “This is not a game to me Buonau! The Coven just tried to kill members of my family! My daughter was raped and beaten by...”

“And according to the Prime Minister’s own statement just moments ago, she is alive and no longer on Earth and has left with Androcles and her other half siblings! There is no reason for you to return to Earth right now and delay the hearing.” Buonau spoke. “I have granted you a stay for one day to discover more information Anja, but your hearing will progress tomorrow morning.”

“You have granted me a stay?” Anja spat. “You have granted me nothing... and when I am through with you Buonau, you are going to wish you never were born!”

Buonau shook her head in the transmission. “Such talk and threats is another reason why you will not be Queen after tomorrow.”

Anja’s jade green eyes narrowed. “We’ll see Buonau! We’ll see!”

“You really should...” Buonau began to speak but Anja stepped to the side of her desk and slammed her finger down on the control panel terminating the connection.

“I hate that woman and her smug, arrogant attitude!” Anja snapped. “Someone needs to fuck her in the ass and then I’ll bet she sings a different tune!”

“Anja Leonidas!” Eurin declared from her spot on the couch next to a smirking Sivana. She turned to look at Atropos and Belen and saw them smiling as well. “That is not funny!”

Atropos turned from Eurin and looked at the petite Queen that he so adored. “The SPIRIT is in orbit Shrouded Anja.” He spoke. “We can be gone and half way to Earth before they even know we have left.”

“Do not encourage her Atropos!” Eurin snapped.

Anja took a deep breath and shook her head. “No. That will only make things worse. As much as it burns my ass to admit... Buonau’s right. There’s nothing I can do. Andro has left with his brothers and sisters and the young ones are safe within the Estate.”

“For’mya or Aricia will contact you as soon as things stabilize Anja... you know this.” Sivana spoke softly. “For the moment, aside from Zarah we know they are all safe.”

Anja returned to her chair. “I can’t believe Aikiro is dead.” She said softly.

Atropos chuckled as he moved towards her desk and Anja looked at him. “I have always known there was more to the Feravomir than her outward appearance.” He stated. “She has only proven that this day with her actions.”

“It certainly has.” Anja said. “I only wish she could have gotten Yuri too.”

“If she lives Anja rest assured that Androcles will have marked her good.” Atropos spoke.

Anja nodded. “That’s the truth. That boy is frightening sometimes.”

“He takes after his father.” Belen spoke as he moved over to the couch and sat on the arm next to Sivana. She looked up at him with an adoring smile as she placed her hand on his leg.

Eurin got to her feet. “We must be prepared for tomorrow.” She stated evenly. “Once this distasteful event is behind us we can all return to Earth. I haven’t been there in some time myself and after all this I believe a vacation may be in order.”

“I’m going to crucify Buonau for this.” Anja said with considerable heat in her voice. “And that will be pleasant compared to what I plan for Umbra!”

“I wish to be there for that.” The female voice spoke causing them all to turn.

Ceuma stood in the doorway to the office wearing a simple jumpsuit that hugged her curves exquisitely. She clung to Joci’s hand tightly looking tiny compared to her Spartan husband as Anja and Sivana came to their feet and Eurin turned. Anja’s eyes were wide as she looked at her and Sivana smiled as she walked up to her.

“It’s perfect.” She exclaimed reaching out to touch Ceuma’s hair and the Persian red color she had turned it to. It matched Anja’s exactly. “I do good work!”

Ceuma smiled shyly and reached up to run some strands through her fingers. "I prefer blond." She spoke simply.

"As do I." Joci commented.

"Don't worry... after tomorrow we can wash it out." Sivana said turning to Anja as she walked up. "Not bad heh sister? I will always have a career in disguises if I ever lose this one."

"Sivana stop!" Eurin declared as she moved around Ceuma looking at her intently.

Ceuma looked directly at Anja, her jade green eyes identical to Anja's in every way. "Your family?" She asked.

Anja nodded slowly. "They are safe for the moment." She answered. "Thank... thank you for asking."

Anja looked at Joci. "You are prepared?"

Joci nodded. "Yes my Queen." He answered.

Anja waved her hand dismissively. "We can dispense with the my Queen, or Milady crap right now! It's kind of pointless don't you think?"

"You are my Queen." Joci stated firmly. "It is not pointless to me. No matter what I have done in the past... my duty is to you, to Ceuma and to this Union. I will not falter in my duty ever again."

Anja met his eyes and nodded. "Well said Spartan. Well said." Joci did not see Atropos's face take on a stern look of approval at Joci's words. Anja returned her eyes to Ceuma and reached out to take her hands. "I... I was taken by surprise when I... I apologize for anything I may have said to you."

The corners of Ceuma's lips curled. "You do not apologize much do you Anja?" She asked.

Anja matched her smile and shook her head. "No. Usually only to Martin when I am in phase and I am demanding more of his attentions." Anja watched Ceuma smile even wider and turn to look up at her husband and his ebony skin.

"It seems we are not so different." She spoke softly turning back to look at her while Joci lowered his eyes in embarrassment.

"It will take some getting used to but..." Anja began to speak.

"I wish to learn all I can." Ceuma said. "Joci has protected me... trained me to fight... now I want to learn to heal. I can feel it within me... the ability to do this. I have been able to use it to some extent... but I want to learn more. I do not want to be a freak. I want to be my own person. I will go to another part of the Union if my presence makes you uncomfortable but I wish to..."

Anja shook her head. "No." She stated. "Martin has always told us... he has told us to live by the rule to never fear the unknown. I will not send you away. You will stay here with Sivana and Eurin and I. We will teach you. And we will move into the future together."

They watched as the wide smile split her face. It was the first genuine smile they had seen from her since she had arrived. Anja turned to look at Joci. "Joci you are officially reinstated into the ranks of active Spartans." She spoke seeing his look of shock. "You have been assigned to the Durcunusaan under Lokhagos Atropos and will hold the rank of Dilochitès to him. I have already entered it into the Union database. After tomorrow it won't matter who knows."

Joci looked stunned and bowed his head. "Milady... Milady I do not deserve... my actions up until now have not been..."

"You acted as a man." Anja said with a small smile. "I can not hold that against you Joci. Martin wouldn't let me considering the fantasies we have..." She saw his eyes widen and Anja blushed as she stopped. "Never mind. The point is... once you realized your feelings you acted and you saved Ceuma's life. And you have forsaken all that you were to protect her since then. Just as any Spartan and wolf would do. Besides... it was Atropos's recommendation and I rarely go against his recommendations."

Atropos snorted. "If only that were true." He snapped stepping up to look at Joci. "I loved my mate Lilika for many years even while she was mated to another. I can not condemn you for the very thing I did. You have my respect Dilochitès Joci."

Joci took a deep breath as Ceuma squeezed his hand tightly and pressed her petite frame against his. "I will... I will not fail you, my Queen or my mate." He stated.

Atropos nodded. "Then let us leave Ceuma with Anja and we will go over our plan once more."

Joci nodded and looked at Ceuma. He leaned over and kissed her deeply, her tiny hands coming up to stroke his cheek and his dreadlock hair. "Don't let them make you cut your hair Joci." She whispered to him. "I like it too much."

Joci smiled and nuzzled her cheek and neck and everyone saw her eyes close in bliss and happiness. "I won't." He spoke.

SCIMITAR

Isabella watched him enter the Med Bay slowly, his eyes immediately going to where Zarah lay sleeping. Carisia walked on his left side, Sadi on his right with Ne'Veha holding her hand tightly. He released Carisia's and Sadi's hands instantly and moved up next to the bed slowly as the rest of them came into the Med Bay and moved around the bed. Tears filled Andro's eyes as he pulled the chair closer and he slid his hand under Zarah's, entwining their fingers gently. The signs of the beating she had seen him take from Martin were still somewhat visible, though Eliani had healed them almost completely. His face was drawn and tired though and Isabella could see that right away.

Eliani came up next to him and dropped her hand onto his shoulder. "I gave her a mild sedative when we got here. She woke briefly... but now she is sleeping soundly." She said softly.

Isabella reached over and placed her hand on top of his gently. "She asked for you." She said softly. "She wanted you here with her."

Andro nodded. "I know." He whispered.

"Andro..." Isabella said staring at this young man she called son without hesitation or doubt.

"I failed mother." Andro said softly. "Father was right you know. I should have been protecting her more. I should have..."

"No!" Isabella stated emphatically squeezing his hand. "You will not carry blame for this! I forbid it! And so would she! Do you hear me Androcles? You will not carry blame for this!" Isabella lifted her head and looked at Carisia and Narice directly. "None of you, do you hear me? None of you?"

"The others are dead." Andro said softly turning his azure eyes on Isabella. "All of them but one. I swear to you on my life mother, I will hunt him until the end of time if I have to. I will see he answers to me for what he has done! No matter how long it takes, no matter where I have to go, I will find him mother. I will find him and I will make his death as painful and as hideous as I am able."

Isabella wasn't the only one in the Med Bay who felt the shudder of death's hand brush through them as Androcles uttered his vow. There was no question in his voice, no doubt in his words and all of them at that instant realized just how seriously dangerous their brother truly was.

Isabella squeezed his hand and nodded her head. "I will hold you to that vow Androcles Leonidas." She said softly. "You have... you have always been closer to Zarah Andro. I need... I need you to tell me why now my son. During... when Eliani was examining her she found..."

Andro turned his face back to Zarah's and lifted her hand in his. All of them gasped when the soft blue psychic shield activated around their hands and shimmered gently, pulsing with power and life. "She found trace elements of Stage Three Blood Fever in Zarah's cells." He spoke softly. "Yes... I know."

Blood Fever was the vilest of diseases among vampires. It was brought on by a lack of blood when it was time to feed. Many pureblood vampires could go weeks without needing to feed on blood. The purer their blood the longer they could survive without it. Isabella herself could go almost two months without needing to ingest fresh blood to maintain her body if need be. With the development of the cloned blood by Anja, and the many improvements over the years in the taste and texture of it, Blood Fever cases had dropped to nothing. Vampires could drink the cloned blood like others drank coffee and tea, and most of them did everyday, which then eliminated the worry of ever having Blood Fever affect them. It was a common sight to see them in the many taverns and cafés drinking cloned blood which had been named Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos because of its fruity taste. It allowed them to fit in quite naturally among the citizens of the Union and it was something that had endeared Anja to every vampire who called the Union home.

If one went without blood when their time came however, it was not a pretty event to behold. The first stage of Blood Fever was the cold, damp skin and minor trembling with a slight fever. This was easily treated when discovered, just by ingesting new blood. The second stage was further along and harder to treat since the individual would now be losing their sense of reality and all thoughts of trying to cure themselves. A much higher fever and spasms were the usual signs of Stage Two. It was still very treatable, sometimes having to be forced due to behavior, but as long as the individual got blood they could be helped and would recover.

Stage Three of the Blood Fever was fatal.

Once an individual advanced to the third stage, their normal brain functions rapidly deteriorated to that of mindless machines whose only thought was to kill. The fever was at a point that it would begin shutting down other organs within their bodies, shrinking the size of the blood vessels within their internal organs and even if they fed, their minds were usually destroyed by now and they would continue to feed and kill until the fever ended their lives or they were killed by someone else. They essentially became monsters. And it was this reason that within the Union, anyone known to have Stage Three Blood Fever would be put out of their misery before they were allowed to die such an agonizing death. It was a little known or used law, but in all the time vampires had been part of the Union, the law was never disobeyed. This was the manner that the Kavalian Federation had refined to a sick art with prisoners they took during their war. Starving the vampires until Stage Three of the Blood Fever had gripped them and then turning them loose on other prisoners who they had taken and betting on who would survive the longest. It was a heartless practice and completely heinous, and one of the reasons the vampires within the High Coven so dreaded being taken prisoner by the Kavalians.

“Andro... Andro how could that be?” Isabella asked.

“She always hated having to take blood.” Andro spoke softly. “When she ran away that time... into the mountains it was because she didn’t want to take blood.”

“But... Andro you were the one who found her.” Eliani said.

Andro nodded. “Yes. And when I did... the Third Stage of Blood Fever had already set in.” He answered. “She attacked me when Elynth and I landed. She was so strong. She could smell my blood and it was all she wanted.”

Isabella’s hands went to her mouth in horror as she turned back to her daughter and looked at her.

“But... Andro... there is no cure for Stage Three. Her mind... her mind would have been... the law says...”

“She was my sister and I was not about to let any law take her away from me.” Andro stated firmly.

“She is stronger than you know mother... stronger than any of you have ever suspected. She was fighting it... Elynth and I could sense it... she was fighting it with all that she was.”

“But how...”

“I reached for her mind... I wrapped my shields around her mind and I let her feed.” Andro said flatly as if it was the most natural thing in the world. “Elynth and I shielded her mind for three days... I let her feed in increments to satisfy the thirst... and as each hour passed we pushed back the fever. I wasn’t going to let her die.” He reached up with his other hand and caressed Zarah’s cheek. “I had to break her leg when she fought me, but Elynth and I channeled my blood into her brain for the most part. There were times when she wouldn’t take her fangs out of my neck and I had to force her, but by the end of the second day it was working and she was becoming herself once more.”

“Andro... Anja did not detect this when she examined her after you returned.” Isabella spoke in shock.

Andro shook his head. “No. When I knew she was well enough to travel and had beaten it I took her to the Feravomir. She hid what I had done... after calling me some choice names and saying I was just as reckless and stupid as my father. And then she made sure she was present when mother examined her to insure her subterfuge worked.”

“Why?” Eliani asked softly.

“To protect her.” Andro answered. “All of you would have fawned over her and protected her to the extent she would never have grown into what she is now. What she will still be one day.” Andro willed away the psychic shield around their hands and brought it to his cheek, pressing the back of her warm skin to his. “A devoted lover, a beautiful wife and a wonderful mother to many children.” He said softly. “We must help her to regain that. Lucia is the biggest part of it, but she will need our support and guidance, not our pity and sorrow over what has happened. I will do it alone if I must... as I did before... but it will be much easier with all of you helping me this time and not trying to hide it.”

Isabella was the first to answer wiping the tears away as she placed her hand on Andro’s short black hair. “Yes.” She said softly.

“Yes.” Carina spoke almost immediately after her mother.

“Yes.” Sadi spoke next as she, Ne'Veha and Carisia stepped closer.

They converged as one then, all of the Leonidas children and those that were now members of their family. All with that one goal and purpose in their minds.

Blood Before All Else.

CHAPTER FORTY

RITAAH

KAVALIAN SPACE

STRIKER ONE

Her decision had been made the moment she had left that warm, modest home on the outskirts of Sparta. She didn't know how to explain it, only that the sights, smells and sounds of Sparta had ignited within her the desire for knowledge and truth and above all else closure. To know who she was and why everything felt as it did. Why she saw things in her mind that she hadn't actually physically seen while here in Sparta. To feel like she knew so many people yet have them look at her like she was a stranger. She had spent nearly seven hours with them, well into the evening and early morning hours, all the while holding the holoimager in her hand. They had been so kind and open and... and so very loving towards the end. Love... it was an emotion she had never felt before now, and it filled her entire being. They had held nothing back from her, condensing so much information into so few hours. The horror she felt at what had been done to her was a blatant thing, knowing that she had died on this very planet over two decades ago. Knowing that she had been wolf at one point in her life, and now she was a vampire. The eternal enemy of the wolves or at least that is what she thought. The tears had flowed freely at that time, the sense of loss like a dark chasm that could not be crossed. She had felt so alone and frightened at that one point in her life, another emotion she had not experienced so far in this new life she now hated. She was unsure of what to believe or what to do. So much had been lost that she could not even remember. It was nearly unbearable.

Until two sets of hands, one smooth and gentle and the other warm but rough from hard work and years of harsh fighting, until those two sets of hands had reached across that great dark chasm and reclaimed what they had lost so long ago through no fault of their own.

Hali had gathered her into her arms then and cradled her as she wept, her soft, tender hands caressing her long hair and skin. Hali... Hali her mother. And then the lean but muscular frame of the Spartan Kim So had wrapped his arms around them both and together the three of them had wept for what had been lost, and what was now found again. Over the course of the next five hours they had sat with her, held her and attempted to help her fill in all the blanks that filled her mind. When she left that home as the sun began its rise over the horizon many things had changed in her life. She had learned more of whom she really was and the history behind that woman, more than she had known before coming here. She had discovered that she had a man and a woman who now regarded her as the daughter they had thought lost to them so long ago. She discovered she had a mother and father who did not care that she was a vampire now, they cared only that their daughter had been given back to them. And most important of all, she had discovered who she truly was.

That morning the vampire known as Juliana One had died and in her place was now the vampire Julie Collins. She had a long way to go to get her life back, but as they parted ways that morning a tearful Hali and Kim So, her mother and father, vowed they would help her regain all that she was and had lost. And most important of all to her, she would have to gain back the trust she had taken so many years to earn with the two men who she wanted most to be part of her life once more. And she knew right where she had to begin.

Julie Collins looked up from her seat in the STRIKER and stared at the back of Resumar Leonidas's head as he knelt between the two pilots and the atmosphere buffeted their ship as they skipped along the surface. The memories she had of her former life never imagined that Martin would have children. The life they had led back then, the missions, the fighting, those thoughts had never entered their minds. Now she knew he had many children. Strong, powerful children just as he was. She could almost feel his arms around her from the different times they had embraced through the years. Strong arms that held her close and comforted her. Martin's arms...

Danny's arms. His smiling ebony face could always make her laugh. Her family back then, and if she had anything to say about it, her family in the future once more. Julie let her eyes drift to the over two dozen men and women on this ship; half of them part of the vampire strike team she was leading. She glanced back to where the dark green scales of Resumar's dragon Cemath resided beside the purple hued scales of the female she had heard them call Mirra. She was slightly startled to see both sets of their eyes focused on her, but she hid the outward reaction from her face. They appeared calmer than her, secured in the harnesses as they were. Julie had fought the Kavalians for more years than she could remember, all under orders from the Coven Empress. She had killed hundreds of them, and been injured many times in the process, but always there was a sense of instinct that kept her alive. She hadn't known then what it was, no one did, but she knew now. It was the instinct of the wolf that was ingrained in the memory of her former self. That almost sixth sense of danger that had saved her more times than she could recall. That instinct was screaming at her what to do now, and Julie Collins stood up slowly intent on doing just that.

She glanced at the men and women she knew had every intention of killing as many of the Lycavorian Union team as they could before blending into the darkness and making their way to the Mindvoice ship on their own. Their task was simple enough. They were to secure the ship, and if at all possible remove the ship from the planet as Martin had done twenty-five years ago on Lycavore. Julie had worked with this team for years and she knew each and every one of them very well. They were all loyal to the High Coven no matter what it was they were asked to do. They followed her orders because the Empress had put her in charge; however Julie knew they did not trust her as they did each other. That suited Julie just fine since she had no intention of betraying the loyalty that had taken her more years to cultivate and grow long before she had ever known them any of them. She moved up into the cockpit area of the STRIKER and saw Athani Leonidas sitting at the engineer station monitoring their progress and different settings while her tail twitched nervously behind her. The wondrous cyborg like machine they called Avi sat beside her silently monitoring different functions of their STRIKER.

"Coming into pattern now." The elven pilot spoke softly as she adjusted her controls.

"Point Two percent degradation of Shroud." The co-pilot spoke in return. "We are still ghosts."

"STRIKER Two, ease four degrees to your port." The pilot spoke. "We don't want to mix on trails going in. No sense in testing if the Kavalian sensors are better than we think."

"Two confirms." The voice spoke from the COM.

"Princess?" The female pilot asked turning her head slightly. "Avi?"

Athani shook her head. "No indication that the remaining ships even know we are here." She replied quickly. "I'm not picking up any transmissions that are unusual. Avi?"

-Sensor emissions from the remaining Kavalian ships do not indicate any activity outside of normal parameters- Avi answered.

"What's normal Avi?" The co-pilot asked with a smirk.

Avi paused before turning to look at him. -Anything that would likely cause them to increase their scanning parameters and reveal our position is not normal Lieutenant-

Athani smiled in response to Avi's answer. "An announcement that they have detected two Lycavorian Union STRIKER DTs entering the atmosphere of Ritaah would probably qualify as very unusual as well." She said reaching out to place a hand on Avi's massive shoulder.

That they were entering the atmosphere of a Kavalian planet, deep in Kavalian space, knowing that she more than likely had a death sentence on her throughout Kavalian territory did not deter Athani from feeling the excitement. Since becoming Resumar's wife and a Princess of the Lycavorian Union, Athani had seen and experienced more wonders in the last almost five months than she had in her entire life with Jalersi and the others of her kind, and it all began with the man she loved devoutly. She wondered briefly how her sister was, and if she had ever opened herself to discovery as Athani had done. Athani hoped so for she did love her sister and wanted to see her happy. The co-pilot's voice brought her quickly back to their very tense and current situation.

The co-pilot nodded his helmeted head with a chuckle. “Yep! That would qualify since we ain’t suppose to be here.”

“How many ships Athani?” Resumar asked now.

Athani shook her head. “I’m only detecting twenty-six.” She answered. “There should be thousands Resumar. Avi... do you have the same amount?”

-Affirmative. Twenty-six confirmed. One GREATSOUL-Class Dreadnought, eight DIMERU-Class Medium Cruisers, nine PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigates and eight as yet previously unknown Frigate Class sized vessels. Passive Thoron Scan indicates similar weaponry as PURUSIAN-Class but with thicker hull dimensions. Supposition is they are meant to replace the older PURUSIAN-Class vessels. I can detect nothing else that would hide a Kavalian ship from the sensors on this STRIKER-

“New class of ship huh?” The pilot spoke.

Resumar looked at Athani. “Anything?” He asked.

Athani shook her head. “I was not allowed to look through plans of that nature.” She answered. “It doesn’t surprise me though... my father and Pusintin are always looking for bigger and better ships.”

Resumar nodded. “Bigger isn’t always better.” He spoke softly.

Athani batted her blue/green eyes at him seductively. “It is in your case my love.”

The soft coughing sound came from the pilot. “Oh... gag me to death!” She exclaimed. “Way too much information!” The female elven pilot spoke.

Resumar laughed and looked at Avi. “Ok... Avi give it a name and file it to the Union databanks. I’m sure Antell is doing the same thing on the FAITH.” Resumar spoke.

-Considering the Union’s penchant for naming ships of the Kavalian species after feline creatures or of similar meaning, I will call it the NIGHTFANG- Avi answered.

Athani looked at him. “There is a reason for that Avi.” She spoke with a smile. “We are a feline species.”

Avi’s almost crimson colored red eyes turned to her. -This is why many Union ships have references to the Lycan heritage of their species then. As the High Coven ships have blood in their names in many instances?-

“Yes.” Athani said.

-A curious practice- Avi spoke. -I have added and filed the proper category to the data banks Resumar Leonidas-

Resumar nodded. “Thank you Avi. That they left only a few ships in the area fits with what we picked up on the FAITH. The majority of their forces have left the area. Maybe this new class is undergoing some sort space trials.”

“But the question remains husband, to where did the rest go?” Athani asked looking at him. “U’zolut Consortium Space in this region is completely empty and void of anything worth while. Unless they are preparing to invade Limian space as Captain Antell suggested.”

“As long as they ain’t here I’m not going to complain.” Res answered. “And that isn’t our mission right now.”

Athani nodded. “Point taken my love.” She stated with a grin.

“Dropping through outer atmosphere.” The pilot spoke. “Glide pattern Delta Four One.”

“Delta Four One confirmed. STRIKER Two is maintaining separation and matching your maneuvers.”

The pilot of the second STRIKER spoke.

“Release altitude in six minutes!” The pilot of Res’s ship spoke softly.

Julie stepped forward and placed her hand on Resumar's shoulder then. She watched as his handsome face turn to look at her and she saw Martin's eyes looking at her. It made her unique decision so much easier. "A word Resumar." She whispered to him.

"Juliana this is not..."

"My name... my name is Julie Collins." She spoke in that same soft whisper but this time with more forceful tone to it.

Athani turned her head this time for she had heard Julie speaking. She had spent many days and weeks learning of the history of Resumar's father and how he had returned to the Union. Martin Leonidas's victories on Earth against the High Coven were legendary even in The Wilds and Kavalian space. She also remembered the name of the one who he considered a dear sister. A sister whom he had buried after that Battle for Earth. She sensed Resumar's dark eyes focus on her for a moment and then he casually stepped toward Athani. "Bring up the two dimensional specs of the terrain once more for the Major and I Aryschanne." He told her in a voice that could be heard by those first few soldiers just outside the cockpit.

Athani nodded and did as he told her even as Julie moved closer and made a show of looking at the screen.

"I am not your enemy Resumar Leonidas." Julie whispered. "However... those who are part of my team do not share that same view. They will attack you once we are on the ground, try and kill as many as possible and then blur into the night. Their goal is the Mindvoice ship. It has always been the Mindvoice ship. The Empress's plan was to eliminate all of you and then take the ship from this planet if it was possible."

Resumar's expression didn't change and Julie could only inwardly smile at the calmness he displayed at this information. He was like his father... at least the part that she remembered Martin to be.

"Why should I trust you?" Res asked her softly.

Julie met his eyes. "If you are your father's son, like your brother Androcles, you will not trust me." She answered just as evenly. "I am speaking the truth however." She tilted her head slightly. "You already suspected didn't you?"

"They won't succeed." Resumar told her gently. "If you care for them you will inform them that..."

"You assume that I care for them." Julie said firmly. "Which I do not."

"Then they will die." Resumar told her.

Julie nodded. "So be it." She said. "I am not Juliana One anymore... if I ever was. I know who I am... and I hope to rediscover all that I have lost in the future. I would like it to start here and now with you. You may be half elf... but you carry the blood of Martin Leonidas in your veins and that gives you an uncanny sense of smell if my memories of your father are correct. Am I lying to you Resumar?"

"No." He stated without hesitation.

"Then will you tell your mate and wife to take her hand off the K14 she now has leveled at my abdomen. I would prefer not to hit a patch of rough air and have her blow my stomach out my back." Julie said calmly turning to look at Athani.

Athani met her gaze unwavering. "I will protect what is mine." She said softly. "Against any threat."

Julie smiled gently at her. "Yes... I predict you would." She turned back to Resumar. "I imagine you have already briefed your people to be aware of such action by the Coven troops considering your reaction now?"

Resumar nodded slowly. "Yes. Dario and Sorran will act the moment we touch down. My cousin will leave none of them alive."

Julie nodded her head. "I once considered your father like a brother Resumar Leonidas." Julie spoke softly. "I may be... I may be vampire now, but all of my memories are the same as that woman. My... my mother and father will help me to regain what I have lost and I hope... I hope to consider him a brother one day in the future again. I will not betray one of his sons. I would die first."

"I know." Resumar said his eyes staring at her without wavering. "We..."

"Whoa!" The pilot of their STRIKER spoke causing them to turn around.

"What is it?" Resumar asked her moving back between the seats.

"I don't know." The pilot answered. "A good sized power surge from the PILLAR OF FAITH. It caused their Shroud to fluctuate for several seconds!"

Resumar's eyes grew a little wider and he turned to Avi. "Avi were they seen? Were they seen?"

-Unknown at this time- Avi answered. -It appeared to be an ion particle burst of some sort-

“There it is again!” The co-pilot hissed. “Sibfla... bigger this time!”

-The lieutenant is correct- Avi stated turning to Resumar. -I have confirmed it as a level three Controlled Ion Particle Emission Burst. Similar to what the Union calls their PSGs. The Portable Sensor Grenades designed to scramble ground sensor arrays. These are much more concentrated however-

“Nubou! If the FAITH loses her Shroud she’ll be a sitting duck and we’ll lose our support and ride out of here!” Resumar cursed. “Athani get me Captain Antell! Quickly!”

PILLAR OF FAITH

“...find out where the fuck it’s coming from before it kills us all!” Antell bellowed at his bridge crew.

“Captain... incoming transmission from STRIKER One!”

“Put it up quickly!” Antell barked turning to the Holo Disc on the floor of the bridge.

“Antell!” Resumar’s image burst into existence.

“Milord... we don’t know what it is! We are...”

“Antell... Avi says they are PSGs!” Resumar exclaimed.

Antell’s eyes went wide. “PSGs!”

Resumar nodded. “The High Coven Strike Team must have placed them all over the ship and set them with timers! You must get out of the area until you find them all!”

“Milord you...!”

“Damn it Antell! If we lose you and the PILLAR OF FAITH we are finished before we even get started! Evac the area now! That is an order!” Resumar barked.

Antell was a military man before all else and he reacted as such. “Helm! Bring us about! Full power to the sub lights! Prepare for a combat jump to the secondary holding position! Stand by on the...”

The systems on the bridge of the FAITH flickered madly for several seconds before returning to normal.

“Fuck!” A voice screamed. “Captain we’ve lost the Shroud! They can see us! They can see us!”

Antell had not been chosen to command the PILLAR OF FAITH because he was hesitant in his actions. Martin Leonidas and Admiral Riall had chose him for his decisiveness and his ability to command.

“Milord... you are on your own! I will contact you when I am able!” Antell barked as he turned from the transmission. “Helm! Evasive pattern Echo Three! Full power to all turrets and missile batteries. Shields to max power and prepare a full spread on Photonic torpedoes! Max yield! If we have to blast our way clear then let’s get to it!”

STRIKER ONE

“Fuck!” Resumar exclaimed.

Julie grabbed his arm quickly. “Do not react as you want to Resumar.” She said quickly, consciously blocking the view of him from the rear of the ship. “We do not want a battle on board this ship while we are descending. You can do nothing for your Captain now except trust in his ability while he leads them away from us.”

“She’s right Resumar.” Athani said quickly. “My people will assume the FAITH was here to spy on the ships and ground troops. They won’t suspect we are landing on Ritaah. As much as it pains me to say, they are not that forward looking.”

Resumar stared at Julie for a long moment as he breathed deeply and got his anger under control. “If you betray me or anyone under my command... I will feed your guts to the insects that inhabit this world!” Resumar hissed softly.

Julie nodded without hesitation for she had no intention of doing any such thing. “I will not.” She spoke. “We must act as if nothing has happened. It will confuse them when it comes time to act on the surface”

-Resumar Leonidas... my counterpart on the surface has initiated contact with me again. He was able to activate many of the main systems on VORTEX Cruiser 341- Avi spoke as he turned to look at him in the oversized chair built specially for him.

Resumar turned to him surprised. “How did he do that?”

-Apparently... he has found someone with sufficient Etheric abilities located on the surface of this rather unsightly and humid planet and this enabled him to activate the majority of Cruiser 341’s main power drives-

Athani looked at Resumar with a stunned expression. “Someone like me. Among the ones we think are rebels!” She gasped. “Your mother said the biogenic treatments altered me enough to be able to develop Mindvoice abilities. It is why Cemath was able to speak with me. It is why I can converse with anyone now in Mindvoice.”

“Wait!” Julie demanded looking at him. “You... you have contact with this ship on the surface?”

Resumar looked at her. “The ship’s Avatar. One like Avi.” He spoke quickly. “Every Pralor ship had one. The one down there made contact with Avi few hours ago and Avi’s been in contact with him ever since.”

“And you didn’t tell me!” Julie said.

“I didn’t feel the need to share that with you... no.” Resumar stated flatly. He turned back to Avi. “Avi... can he get those with him to meet us when we land?” He asked softly. “Julie says the Coven troops will attack us and a battle on the surface is not something we need to have draw attention to us.” Julie looked at Resumar when he spoke. There was no hesitation in his words or his tone when he had called her that. This more than anything proved to her that he believed her.

-Many of those with him are like Athani Little One- Avi answered. -I will ask him to do this- “Avi... I have asked you not to call me that.” Athani stated looking at his reptilian features.

-Yes I know. However... Martin Leonidas told me fourteen point three years ago if the name fits... the name fits- Avi answered blinking his red eyes at her innocently. -Taking into account your physical proportions to your husband and myself... the name does fit you-

Athani looked at her husband with a stern expression. “Your father and I will have words when we return.” She spoke.

Resumar grinned in spite of what was happening all around them. “I’ll make sure I’m somewhere else then.” He stated. He turned back to Julie. “Be prepared Julie. When we land Dario will attack immediately. We must as well. It needs to be quick and decisive. We don’t want a long, drawn out battle. It will only bring the Kavalians to the surface.”

Julie nodded. “I will be.” She stated.

Resumar nodded and turn to his pilot. “Senior Lieutenant, inform STRIKER Two to close formation and get us on the ground as quickly as you can.”

The female pilot nodded. “Here we go.” She said.

HIGH COVEN BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT FREEDOM’S VOICE
ORBITING RITAAH

“... appears to be some sort of ion surge sir!” The tactical officer spoke from across the bridge.

“Ion surge?” Maros exclaimed looking at Vonis as they stood on the bridge of the largest and most powerful ship in the High Coven inventory.

“Ion surge from what?” Vonis asked now.

“Unknown Colonel!” The officer replied. “Appears random and... there it is again! Whatever they are, it’s causing their Shroud to fluctuate wildly!”

Maros looked at Vonis. “We did not detect their presence when they arrived Colonel Vonis.” He spoke. “The Union has improved dramatically on the Shroud technology, or our passive sensors are not as good as we thought. I tend to believe you have improved on the Shroud.”

Vonis nodded with a small smile. “We’ve incorporated technology from the Mindvoice ship into the newer ones.” He spoke.

“Then I can assume they are probably already headed to the surface?” Maros spoke.

“More than likely yes. No telling how long they have been here... but my guess is the STRIKERS are heading down now. Resumar is a careful one Maros... he would have run sensor sweeps of the surface before leaving his ship.” Vonis answered.

Vonis spoke freely with this man and had for several months now. Their commitment to seeing his mother’s rule end was genuine and serious. The men and women he had worked with and watched these last months were of the highest caliber and all of them knew their jobs well. All of them also wanted to see the war prosecuted in another fashion that saw them give up less and end it quicker. They had seen too many of their friends and family suffer under the current leadership and their policy of reacting to Kavalian moves as opposed to making their own. The shock that the leader they had followed for so long was actually Lucia Moran had passed within hours of Lucia revealing herself to them in the control center of their command base. It had impressed Vonis how they had gone from shock to questioning to having their purpose renewed even more when they came to the realization that if Lucia was with them, there could be others who had not yet revealed themselves. He could not fault their trust; Lucia’s information through the years had been dead on accurate, many times forgoing obvious targets because they were traps she warned them about. It also pleased Vonis to know that it was his sister’s daughter who was leading the insurgency, and the fits they must have had trying to discover who it was, when all along the very person they wanted to find was sitting with them.

They had arrived two days previous, leaving one of their BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts and the rest of their ships further out in the system. They had approached Ritaah with only their seven ships to limit accidents or exposure. Vonis knew Resumar to be the more methodical of the Leonidas sons and more than likely had plans for every circumstance. The vampire commandos with Resumar didn’t concern Vonis as much as the unknown factor that Resumar could not prepare for. Vonis knew from experience that the unexpected usually and often happened to even the best laid plans. And the unusual was happening right now.

“Shit!” The tactical officer barked. “Captain! Colonel! They just lost their Shroud! The Union ship just lost its Shroud!”

“Put it up!” Maros hissed loudly. “Put it up!”

The star chart in front of them burst to life from the table and they could easily see the streamlined and massive shape of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser beginning to turn rapidly.

“They just went to full power on their sublights!” The officer screamed out. “Their weapons are fully charged and they are heading on a course that takes them away from Ritaah! The planet’s gravity well is holding them back some but they are maneuvering!”

“I can see that!” Maros barked. “What are the Kavalian dogs doing?”

The chart shifted it’s shape and widened and then they saw the red dots that signified Kavalian ships. They were beginning to turn towards the Union Strike Cruiser.

“They are slow!” Vonis spoke softly. “Very slow!”

Maros nodded. “Ill trained and caught by surprise no doubt. Sloppy.” He looked at Vonis evenly. “Even a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser can not stand against twenty-six ships Vonis.” He said.

Vonis met his gaze. Maros was an excellent tactical leader and a man who sincerely cared for his crew and those who followed his orders. “You realize by now that the word has gone out to KFI Headquarters. They’ll turn more ships this way.”

Maros nodded. “Our primary mission according to Lucia was to safeguard your nephew and his people while they conducted their mission to destroy this ship on the surface. I am a fleet officer sir... I...” Maros took a deep breath. “We are not the enemy of the Union and I can not allow a fellow ship captain who is not my enemy face such odds alone! Not when we are so close to achieving part of what Lucia wanted for us!”

Vonis looked back to the star chart and made his decision. “Well... it may not be what Lucia wanted... but the day had to come sooner or later. Give me a LRR with Shroud capability and two officers. I’m going to the surface.”

“I will fly it!” Asharli declared moving from her spot on the bridge.

Vonis looked at her and then turned back to Maros. “Give me an experienced soldier then Maros. A heavy weapons person preferably.”

Maros nodded. “Done.”

“COM Officer...” Vonis barked. “Open a channel to the Union ship. Secure COM Code Vonis six four three Alpha! Do it now!” Vonis looked at Maros. “Time to let them know they aren’t alone.”

Maros smiled. “Helm! Standby to maneuver! Weapons and shields to full power! Full yield torpedoes to standby!”

PILLAR OF FAITH

“...weapons range in forty seconds!” Antell’s Tactical Officer declared. “We’re ready Captain, but the gravity of the planet slowed us down enough that we couldn’t turn as sharply and then turn away in time to beat them!”

“Maintain course!” Antell barked from his chair. “We have to draw them away from Ritaah! Standby aft Type One turrets and missile batteries to draw their attention and...”

“Captain! Incoming Secure transmission!”

Antell came to his feet. “The Prince?”

“Negative sir!”

“Then who?” Antell snapped. “We are the only ship out here!”

“Secure COM code Vonis six four three Alpha!” The officer turned to look at him with wide eyes. “It’s Colonel Vonis’s Command Code Override!”

“Activate!” Antell almost screamed turning to the holodisc on the deck. He watched as the image burst into existence and he was looking at Colonel Vonis of Union Intelligence and brother to Queen Isabella. “Colonel Vonis!” He snapped.

“We are monitoring your situation Captain.” Vonis spoke. “I will make this brief. I’m heading to the surface of Ritaah to help my nephew. There are thirty-seven former High Coven ships that are now part of the Insurgency lurking about all around you. I’ve been operating with them for three months now by order of the King. This is Captain Maros, commander of this ship FREEDOM’S VOICE. His forces are standing by to assist you.”

Antell looked at the image in shock. “Assist me?” He gasped.

Maros stepped forward fully. “Captain... it would be our honor to stand beside you and squash these Kavalian dogs!” He spoke forcefully.

Vonis chuckled. “Make it happen Captain! I’ll contact you from the surface when I have linked up with Resumar.”

Antell watched with wide eyes as Vonis disappeared from the transmission and it focused fully on Maros. “I have seven ships moving with me right now and another thirty inbound from coordinates 56793 Mark four. They will join with us in fifty four seconds.”

Antell’s stern face took on the look of a predator about to feast on its prey and he smiled widely. “Helm! Come about one hundred and eighty degrees!” He barked out. “Full power to forward shields and armor. Standby main Type One and Type Two turrets! And jam any further communications from those damn ships!”

“Already on it sir!” The COM officer replied.

Antell looked at Maros. “I’ll bore in on the GREATSOUL’s port side!” He said.

“We will take the starboard then!” Maros barked. “We’ll see you after we blow her to ashes!”

Antell smiled. “That we will!”

Maros turned in the transmission. “Helm... port turn to course 7754 point three! Standby all weapons for a suppression barrage to starboard! All port side batteries to manual for targets of opportunity!” He turned back to Antell. “Fight well Captain!”

“Live well Captain!” Antell replied as the transmission ended. He turned to his executive officer and shook his head. “I’ll be damned! Fighting beside High Coven ships! I never thought I’d live to see that!”

His XO grinned. “The King told you it would never be dull sir.” He spoke.

Antell laughed. “That he did!” He nodded. “Let’s do this people! Stand by suppression barrage to port! High yield warheads in the Mark 22Bs! Let’s hurt them real bad in the first pass people! Starboard batteries to engage at will any ships in their cone of fire! Once we are clear of the GREATSOUL launch every fighter we have to help coral the others! And make it clear to our pilots the High Coven ships are on our side!”

His XO turned from the console he stood next to. “I’ve already sent word to our fighters sir! Medical Bay reports they are ready and damage and control crews are standing by!”

Antell nodded in approval. “Then let’s get to it and see what our new ship can do!”

The first instance in known history of Lycavorian Union and High Coven ships fighting as allies would come in a little known system of space above an even lesser known planet on a mission that had already altered the future with its implications the moment it was begun.

Only the gods knew if it would grow into anything more than that, but the odds had just gotten a whole lot better.

RITAAH VORTEX CRUISER 341

Channa had never seen or experienced anything so amazingly wonderful in her young life.

It began the moment they entered that hatchway into this ship and a new world. The second she entered the first corridor, bright lights began to come on extending down the long tunnel like scene in front of them. Channa watched as this towering cyborg nodded his head in obvious approval and motioned them further into the ship. Avatar 341 began explaining that there were fourteen decks on the nearly seven kilometer long ship. Discovering just how big the ship was stunned all of them. It took up the entire ridge of the mountain; it was the mountain for all intents. No matter where they went in the ship, every section, corridor or room; as soon as Channa entered the illumination rose nearly twice what it was before they had entered and computer consoles came to life all around them. The walls of the ship were odd, Na’lia commenting that they almost appeared alive in many respects. While many of the walls in the corridors appeared to be cave like in nature, the individual rooms they entered definitely appeared with metallic walls. They eventually made their way onto what could only be a bridge of some sort with over a dozen individual chairs and consoles. The bridge was enormous and surrounded by a clear glass like substance that showed the rock like façade that surrounded the outside of the ship.

Na’lia was sitting at one of the consoles now watching as copious amounts of information was filtering across the large screen. It appeared that Avatar 341 had extensive files on all of them and she realized as long as he had been here it stood to reason he would know far more about them than they did of him. She was also gazing at some of the most sophisticated medical journals she had ever seen. Avatar 341 stood next to where Channa sat in the body hugging chair. The chair had shifted shape to wrap comfortably around her lithe frame when she settled into it, frightening her terribly at first. Avatar 341 explained that that chair was activated by each individual operator and conformed to that operator’s shape for maximum comfort. Her hands rested on the two arms and her palms were spread out within the similar conforming spots obviously meant for hands. Her heart was racing as the towering Avatar 341 directed her to concentrate on certain things and she watched as the nine screens around her chair came alive. Channa watched in unmitigated delight as the different parts of the kilometers long ship activated because of her ability. An ability she never imagined that she had.

Mican stood close to his elven wife and mate, gripping his weapon and unwilling to leave her side for very long. He could only shake his head and decide that in some cases females were far more calm and accepting of the unknown. Channa and Na’lia were enjoying the new ship and the discovery it was bringing to them immensely, and they had been for the last twelve hours. He was a warrior however, and he knew that you always had to be ready. Mican's blue eyes shifted to the nine screens that surrounded Channa in the incredible chair and his keen feline sight caught the image of ships in the stars exchanging fire. His eyes grew wide and he moved to where Channa sat, standing opposite of where the avatar stood across from Channa. His red eyes were watching the screens as well and seemed focused on a plain image of Ritaah that looked to be part of the next valley.

"What is that?" He demanded looking at the screen and pointing to it with his finger.

-The Union ship bringing the Sub Pralor here was struck by sabotage and has lost its ability to remain hidden. The High Coven ships we detected in orbit are apparently friendly to the Union forces and they are now engaging the remaining Kavalian warships in this sector. I was unable to jam the initial call for assistance the Kavalian Command ship sent, but using my nodes throughout the system and combined with the jamming capability of the Union ship, they will send no more messages-

Mican and Channa's eyes shifted to the large screen that showed three massive ships exchanging immense amounts of weapons fire. The Kavalian GREATSOUL-Dreadnought was taking a severe pounding at the hands of the Union and High Coven capital ships, while smaller High Coven ships were locked in battle with the other Kavalian ships that had remained behind.

"What are they doing?" Channa asked looking at the Avatar. "They are moving further away from the planet!"

Avatar 341 nodded. -Yes it appears they are drawing them away from Ritaah. There can only be one reason for that-

"What? Why?" Mican asked.

-To keep them from learning the Sub Pralor known as Resumar Leonidas has already begun to make his descent onto the surface of this planet I would surmise- The avatar moved to a console near where Channa sat in the chair. -I am adjusting my primary sensor array to compensate for disturbances in the atmosphere and residual Ion pulses. Curious-

"What?" Channa asked as Na'lia came up to stand next to Mican.

-It appears they have incorporated small bits of technology from City Ship 41 into their Shroud capable ships. I am detecting similar Quantum fluxes in the design of the Shroud's power matrix-

Mican's eyes were wide now. "You... you didn't think to tell us this!" He demanded. "Where?"

The avatar pointed to one of the other screens. -Their landing zone is three point six kilometers due east of our current location as it stands- He answered. -My counterpart has since requested...-

"Counterpart?" Channa gasped as she came half out of the chair turning her body to face him. "Wait... there is another of you coming here as well?"

-Avatar 41 is the primary Avatar of City Ship 41. He is an earlier model avatar, not as sophisticated as myself. We have been communicating for the last three point four hours through coded sub space transmissions. It was surprising that he would leave his duties on City Ship 41 to accompany the Sub Pralor, but he has informed me they will be landing in...-

"You told us he had made initial contact but you've been communicating with them this whole time?" Channa snapped turning even more in the chair to look at him.

-That is correct- Avatar 341 answered.

“Why didn’t you tell us?” Mican demanded.

-It was not necessary to inform you of our communications. However... two point seven minutes ago Avatar 41 requested that the forces I am in contact with here on the surface meet with their ships as they land. They apparently are aware of a plot by the High Coven members of their crew to eliminate them when they land. Their goal is this ship-

Channa looked at Mican without hesitation. “Mican we must go to them and help them!” She exclaimed as she practically leaped from the chair.

“Channa... we don’t know if they are friendly to us!” Mican spat.

“They specifically asked for our help!” Channa protested. “This is what we have talked about so many times in the past Mican! We have our opportunity right now! We must seize it right now!”

“Can’t you help them from here?” Mican asked Avatar 341.

-The geography of the surrounding terrain prohibits use of my weapons array to provide assistance due to the location of their landing zones- Avatar 341 answered quickly. -An errant missile strike without proper guidance could very well injure or kill the Sub Pralor. My programming does not allow me to exercise such risks concerning the safety of the Pralors descendants-

“Mican... we have to go!” Channa declared confidently.

Mican looked at her oddly at the tone of her voice. “Why?”

“Mican... I have always trusted you. I need you to trust me now. I... something is telling me we need to help them. It is drawing me to help them. Calling me.” Channa said softly.

“Why?” Mican demanded.

Na'lia moved closer to her. “Channa... what is it?” She asked gently. “What do you feel?”

Channa shook her head slowly. “It is hard to explain.” She answered. “It has grown so much stronger since we have been in this ship.”

-It is reasonable to assume that your Etheric abilities have become more prominent since you have been onboard. Combined with the biogenic alterations to your internal structure that stimulated L-Stereoisomer cells within your molecular structure, it has also stimulated the dormant abilities within those same L-stereoisomers-

“My name is Channa!” She barked out looking at him. “Channa! Do not speak about me as some sort of medical finding.”

Na'lia stepped up to her quickly. “He meant nothing by it Channa.” She said softly.

-The elven female is correct. I...- They watched as his facial features changed, almost as if he was thinking and those red eyes blinked several times. -Ten thousand years on this planet alone has caused me to lose the interaction I had obtained with the Pralors. I have slipped back into the primary mode of my programming and not realized it. Interesting- He looked at Channa then and moved closer to her. -The Pralors used this unique Etheric ability exclusively to communicate... Channa. Though VORTEX Cruiser 341 was not assigned a crew as it was originally designed for, it was built by the Pralors and their Etheric residue would permeate the entire ship and encourage your own abilities that have laid dormant until now-

“Why now?” Na'lia asked him holding Channa’s hand.

-Etheric abilities powerful enough to allow communication and such aspects are very rare among the Kavalian species. Only Lycavorians, Elves and what you call the High Coven are inherently born with this ability. Others can learn it if they have been touched in some way by a person with powerful

Etheric skills but for many of them it does not advance past the initial stages. The recent discovery by the descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar of the Cretvore Draconius only enhanced this ability among their kind. Since the biogenic treatments you have undergone had minute traces of L-Stereoisomer cells in them, and since these cells are known to exist only in Lycavorians or those turned by Lycavorians, it is reasonable to assume your Etheric ability has been slowly building over the years. Entrance into this ship simply speeded that evolution. The Sub Pralor Resumar Leonidas and three others approaching are among those who have refined this talent to very skilled proportions and use-

“Who?” Mican asked now finding himself very interested in what this cyborg was telling them.

-The Sub Pralor himself, a Kavalian female like you Channa and one Lycavorian male. My supposition is that this other female is the wife of the Sub Pralor and has been touched similar to your interaction within this ship allowing her abilities to come forth. She is the one with similar DNA structure to you Mican. Your sister I believe you called her. The Lycavorian male is undoubtedly a rider of one of the Cretvore Draconius for his abilities to be so powerful-

“A rider?” Channa whispered. “That’s... that’s not what I feel.” She said looking at Avatar 341. “It’s different... more feminine.”

-Etheric abilities are hard to focus when first discovered and they need to be stimulated constantly or they will degrade over time. I do not wish to guess at what it is you are feeling. I am unable to feel emotion so anything I say will only seem... it will only seem useless-

“Is it dangerous for her? This Etheric ability?” Mican demanded now as worry for the young woman he regarded as a sister came forth.

Na'lia was the one to take his arm. “No husband.” She said softly. “It is not dangerous for Channa. What the Avatar is saying, is now that Channa’s natural ability with this skill has been realized and stimulated, it has reached the point where she can now feel things we can not.”

-Crudely put but reasonably accurate- 341 answered.

“Channa?” Na'lia asked. “What do you feel?”

“It’s pulling me.” She answered softly. “Pulling me towards where those ships are going to land. It’s... it’s stronger than anything I have ever felt Mican. So warm and inviting and so very...”

“So very what?” Mican asked stepping closer to her.

Channa rolled her eyes as she looked at him. “So soothing.” She spoke sheepishly.

Mican stared at her for a long moment. They had fought and worked and trusted each other for almost four years now. Channa had beaten all the odds stacked against her after her time as a prisoner and being beaten and raped. She had used Mican and Na'lia as her lifeline to keep from falling into a pit of despair and now she was stronger than she had ever been both physically and emotionally. She had become a part of the family he and Na'lia were building. She was like a sister to both of them, and in the future they had talked of the hope that Na'lia would one day have her elven family accept and welcome all of them and their children into their extended family. He knew there were many things he did not understand in this universe. Mican did not understand his elven wife’s shameless love for him even though they were completely different in almost every way. He was stern and reserved while Na'lia’s true elven nature was outgoing and adventurous. Na'lia proved that every time they made love, and she had proved it from the very first day when she decided to stay among them with the other hundred or so elves and discover a way to save them from dying. He did not understand many of the more advanced properties of ships or engineering, though he was learning daily under the expert tutelage of his wife and other elves who were teachers in their settlements. Mican was a soldier and what he did understand was that in order to improve yourself and understand what you do not comprehend you must be open to things that perhaps you did not believe before. When he thought like that, as the leader he had become, it was really very simple.

Mican made his decision and lifted his hand, pushing two fingers into his right ear and activating the COM implant. "Pasat, dispatch your squad to our location immediately! Light weapons and ammo! Quickly my friend... we might be heading into a hailstorm." Mican waited for a response and then looked up at Channa. "I hope you are right Channa." He said.

Channa nodded. "I am Mican." She said. "I can feel it!"

Na'lia stepped up to her and looked at 341. "Can you monitor from this location without Channa being here?"

-Main power has been restored enough at minimal levels to sustain all systems- Avatar 341 answered. -Ground sensors are powered by subsystems not connected to the main power relays. It is accessible-

"Is that a yes?" Mican demanded.

-Affirmative-

Mican nodded. "Channa, Na'lia let's go and meet these men and women you say we need to meet." He spoke. "Will you allow us back onto this ship when we return?"

Avatar 341 looked at him with that blank expression. -That decision will be made by the Sub Pralor Resumar Leonidas, however I see no reason he would not grant this request. If you follow the corridor all the way to the end and then turn right you will see a sealed hatch that will allow you to exit above where we came in- He looked at Channa. -You will be able to open this door just by touching it Channa-

Mican shook his head. "Infernal machine." He spat with disgust before turning and heading for the doorway.

Na'lia and Channa could not help but smile as they began to follow him. The Avatar's next words made them pause.

-My primary function is the overseeing of VORTEX Cruiser 341 and safety of any Pralor that may come in contact with me. Be advised... any attempt made to injure the Sub Pralor known as Resumar Leonidas and those with him will be met with the full power of this ship-

Mican turned to look at him. "Is that a threat?" He asked.

-My programming does not allow me to make threats Mican. I am simply stating a course of action. Your obvious willingness to assist me and communicate with the Sub Pralor, as well as Channa's Etheric abilities, this shows you are not a threat to the Sub Pralor or this ship. You never have been. It is the primary reason I have allowed you to place your settlements so close to VORTEX Cruiser 341, and increased the masking nodes without your knowledge. That does not mean however that others of your species will act in similar fashion-

"What are you saying then?" Mican asked.

-Act quickly Mican. The terrain in which they will land does not provide adequate space for the Cretvore Draconius to use their full abilities. They will need your assistance- He moved to a console and his large hand danced across the multicolored lights on the panel. He turned back to them. -I have activated a communications channel within your implants that will allow you to speak with me directly. I will provide whatever support I can from here-

"So you will help us?" Channa asked.

-Helping you was never in question Channa- 341 replied. –Only the manner in which it would be done-

Channa looked at Mican as she hefted her rifle. Her blue eyes shone with brightness and hope and she smiled, revealing perfect white teeth with the slightly pointed incisor teeth that marked all Kavalians unless they were completely changed. “I told you this would be a good day!” She announced.

KRANEK

“Ohhh... Mistress! I can’t... Ahhhhhhhhhhh!” Las’elh’s head came up from between Cihera’s quivering thighs and she tried to escape the devastating pleasure smashing through her. She slid up her Mistress’s lithe body and screamed out her delight as Anton buried his heavenly thick ten inch cock fully in her convulsing pussy and the orgasm ripped through her lush elven body.

Las’elh’s blond head dropped to Cihera’s heaving abdomen, her lips slick with her Drow Mistress’s sweet come, as Anton bellowed out his release and his huge cock erupted deep into Las’elh’s shuddering frame. His head came forward and he nuzzled the back of her four inch high elven ears firmly, switching from one ear to the next as he did with Cihera, and prolonging the sensational feelings of bliss as his cock filled her with his searing hot come. He would erupt inside her for at least a full minute she knew from familiarity now, each explosion lessening in force, but no less wonderful to experience. The combination of his elven and wolf genes gave him incredible staying power, and it allowed him to release enormous amounts of his delicious come inside her or Cihera, depending on which one of them was lucky enough to receive his gift to them in the midst of their passion. As his powerful body came to rest on top of her back, his cock completely buried inside her, Las’elh rested her head between Cihera’s firm medium sized breasts and allowed the feelings of love and happiness to wash over her. Never had she imagined herself in such a position, but now as her tanned body was sandwiched between her ebony skinned Drow Mistress and the exquisitely powerful form of their chocolate skinned Spartan husband, Las’elh could not picture herself anywhere else.

Until she had met Cihera and Anton Simpson, nothing in her life seemed to have purpose or direction. Las’elh had never met a Drow elf female before Cihera had come into her life. She had heard about them yes, and the almost surreal reaction they could elicit from other females was practically legendary. Las’elh never thought she would experience that, yet from the first moment Cihera had looked at her with those amber colored eyes Las’elh had been hers. The blistering kiss Cihera had given her on Nebonese had begun what all three of them now vowed would continue for as long as they had days in this life. Their goals had been traveling in the same direction and meeting at the same people, but until Las’elh had joined them and had the full resources of the Krypteria at her disposal through Anton or Cihera, Las’elh had only been spinning her wheels in finding her sister as Anton had once told her. She was closer now to finding her sister than she had ever been before, and the biggest part of that was because of this man and woman who had given her so much.

Las’elh had gone from a rogue agent with Elven Intelligence, to a respected temporary member of the Krypteria, the willing slave of a Drow Mistress and then wife to both that same Drow Mistress and her Spartan husband who adored them both immensely. That single kiss on Nebonese had begun it all and Las’elh hadn’t looked back yet. She was no stranger to sleeping with other females; her main cover on the resort had been one half of an elven female duo that pleased each other as well as their clients. Las’elh thought she knew what she was doing in that regard, at least until she had surrendered to her desire for Cihera that first night and learned the wickedly divine pleasures that she received and gave to and from her Drow Mistress. Their first night together had been right here on Kranek, and it was a night Las’elh would remember always. Anton had made no move to intervene or join them for the first few weeks, content to see that they were both happy exploring what they had found together. When he did eventually join them Las’elh had been stunned at what he made both her and Cihera feel. He was unlike any man Las’elh had been with, and Anton Simpson had made her elven blood sizzle that night. She discovered what it was that made Cihera so utterly devoted to her husband, at least the physical part of it. Las’elh discovered the rest as more time past and Anton showed her what he showed Cihera every day. The complete devotion to both of them.

They had been married for two weeks now Anton, Las'elh and Cihera, and none of them had any intention of looking back.

Las'elh lifted her blond head from between Cihera's breasts and saw her Mistress's eyes gazing at her with love and desire. She leaned forward without question and their lips came together in a sizzling kiss while Anton nuzzled her ears and the back of her neck. He groaned softly as he withdrew from Las'elh's warmth and tightness, Las'elh matching his sounds even as she continued her kiss with Cihera, and rolled slowly to the side to keep his weight off them. It had been an incredible morning for all of them, Anton still coming to terms with the fact that like his father he now had two women who adored him just as much as he adored them. He had woken to the sounds and smells of Las'elh and Cihera locked in a torrid position of mutual pleasure and he had become instantly aroused and ready to perform. Now... two hours later, after having both of them twice, they collapsed onto the bed exhausted.

Anton smiled as he saw they were still locked in their kiss. "You two are going to kill me." Anton finally spoke as he leaned back away from them.

This caused Las'elh and Cihera to finally pull apart from their scorching kiss and turn their heads to look at him. One set of amber colored eyes and one set of bright blue eyes gazed at him with worship and unrestrained desire.

"Think of the death it will be husband." Cihera spoke finally. "You will be the only Spartan alive that can say he was fucked to death! Of course... you will be dead and only my 'slave' and I will ever know."

Las'elh burst out in a soft laugh and quickly climbed off Cihera's body to scramble across Anton's broad chest, making certain to rub her large breasts and moist center across his skin as she shifted positions so that they could both cuddle up to him. Cihera joined her as they pressed up against his sides and his powerful arms pulled them tighter.

"I think I'll last a while longer." He spoke with a grin.

"I would hope it's for many centuries to come." Las'elh said as she nuzzled his neck. "My Mistress and I still have many things we have not yet tried with you husband."

Cihera did the same and she grinned at Las'elh's words. "Indeed we do."

Anton smiled as he let his eyes drift between these two women. "We should get up and get some food in us before the meeting." He said finally. "We have to put the finishing touches on this Op and I would rather do it with a full stomach."

"We are not enough food for you husband?" Cihera asked.

Anton chuckled. "Very high sweet content." He answered with a straight face. "But aside from that..."

The pounding on their door of their small apartment given to them by the Immortals caused all of them to sit upright quickly. Anton moved quickest of them, pulling on his pants as he moved across the bedroom and into the main room. Cihera looked at Las'elh and they both licked their lips in desire at what he showed them.

The banging continued and Anton finally slammed his hand down on the control panel to the side. He was about to snap at whoever was on the other side when he saw Tir'ut's massive form standing in the doorway and he was pulling on a shirt over his bare chest and abdomen.

"Tir'ut?" Anton asked.

"Something has happened on Earth and Dysea darthirii ilhar is calling all of us to the command room immediately." Tir'ut spoke looking at Anton. "Normya has gone on ahead for her mother was..."

"What?" Anton asked suddenly very much alert. He sensed Cihera and Las'elh coming out of the bedroom as well pulling sheets around their bodies when they heard the tone of Tir'ut's voice.

"Darthirii ilhar Dysea was... she was incensed!" Tir'ut answered.

It took them only a few minutes to throw clothes on and rush to the Command Center in the center of the Immortal Settlement on Kranek. The pathways and metal walkways high above the ground made for easy access to different parts of the settlement itself without having to walk the crowded streets below. They burst into the command center to see Normya in Tir'ut's arms a look of extreme worry on her beautiful face. Dysea was standing beside Esther and holding her hand tightly as she trembled in anger and the others in the command center looked astonished, among them Danarla and her elven husband Ta'lon. Anton knew that his Aunt Dysea and Cha'talla's wife had become very close friends over these last weeks and they were almost never apart when they weren't working on the operation to rescue the female elves from Belid. They had much in common it seemed, especially now that their children were married and their friendship was growing. The image of Deia was on the table in the holoimager and she was speaking to several aides in whispers as she approached the podium that was set up from what looked like outside the Spartan Senate Building on Earth. T'lolt stepped up to them immediately when they came in.

"We have been monitoring Union Netnews Channels and discovered they were reporting explosions and attacks in Sparta and different parts of Earth. The only thing they will say is that there have been attacks against the Royal family. They have been saying that the Prime Minister will be making a statement and finally stopped trying to guess at what was happening." He then pointed to the transmission. "She just arrived and is about to speak."

"Attacks against the Royal family?" Anton asked quickly.

T'lolt nodded his head. "Whatever it is that is happening... it isn't good." He answered as the image of Deia began to speak.

"I will make a brief statement and then take a few questions, but please understand the situation is still ongoing and we are still reacting to events." Deia spoke. She took a deep breath. "Approximately seven hours ago Zarah Leonidas was captured by a handful of High Coven Commandos in a vile terrorist act. She was brutally beaten and raped by Dante and Javier Moran as well as others."

"By the gods no!!" Dysea gasped as her eyes filled with tears and she gripped Esther's arm tighter.

"NO!" Normya screamed pulling away from Tir'ut's embrace. "Zarah no!"

"...location of the Mindvoice ship. Once this objective was met, that information was passed on to Empress Aikiro and additional High Coven terrorist forces that have been hiding on Earth for what appears to be several months. An attack was then launched against Dragon Mountain. At the same time other Coven forces attacked the Kavalian embassy here in Sparta while still others attempted to extract the Moran brothers from the elven city of Reylan in the south. Empress Aikiro of the High Coven and all the men with her that attacked Dragon Mountain are now dead. Aikiro was killed by the Feravomir's own hand. Our brothers and sisters who call Dragon Mountain home insured that there were no survivors. A small transport that attempted to land shortly after the attack began was destroyed as it approached Dragon Mountain by automated defensive systems."

"Javier Moran is also confirmed dead at the hands of his sister Lucia, who as it is known to me right now, saved Zarah Leonidas's life. His bonded dragon Naruth was killed by Prince Androcles and Elynth in battle. Dante Moran and his dragon Marux were severely injured battling Prince Androcles until his mother intervened and allowed him to escape. Androcles then took the fight to Yuri and gravely wounded her before being seriously injured himself and having to withdraw. Currently we are in the process of trying to find her and any who may be assisting her. When we do, she will either be captured or tried as a terrorist or she will be executed on sight. Probably the latter if the Durcunusaan find her first. Androcles has taken his older siblings aboard the SCIMITAR and left the system in order to protect them. The younger Leonidas children are all under heavy guard at the royal estate. The King and Queen Aricia are on location at our southern base and helping in the search for Yuri. Queen For'mya is on her way back to Sparta now. Queen Isabella Leonidas has left with the SCIMITAR." Deia looked up. "There is not much else we can tell you at this time. Events are still happening as I said." She set aside the data pad. "I will take a few questions... but I will warn you now, terrorist forces have acted in a heinous string of events against members of my family and I am not in a particularly good mood at the moment!"

Dysea and the others could see that many of the reporters were stunned at this revelation and it showed on their faces.

"You?" Deia asked quickly.

The man looked stunned but he stammered out his question. "Prime Minister Deia... you said... you said members of your family. Are you saying...?"

Deia nodded. “Yes... King Leonidas and I are related. I am... I was Queen Eliani’s sister. I knew both Resumar and Eliani very well. And no... I will not go into details at this time. Martin Leonidas and I decided long ago there was no need to reveal this information. Now however, now after what has happened, I felt the time had come so it will give you some idea as to my anger over these monstrous acts.”

“Prime Minister... is the story that we have been reporting about Carisia Moran and Prince Androcles... about Empress Aikiro’s daughter Narice and Prince Arrarn... are they true?” A woman spoke from the side. “And if so... are they involved in any way with what has happened?”

Deia nodded. “Yes they are true. Carisia Moran is now Carisia Leonidas. She was married to Androcles little more than a month ago. In the same ceremony where Narice and Toria Leonidas were married to Arrarn and became members of this family.”

“And this was not a ploy to...” The woman attempted to continue.

Deia turned dark eyes on the woman. “Carisia Leonidas is the one who gave the order to activate the Durcunusaan and lock down the Royal family and priority individuals! Her actions could very well have saved lives!” She hissed. “She and Narice were part of the initial search for Yuri and in cleaning out Coven terrorist forces from Reylan. They are not part of this vile act and any insinuations from any of you in that regard will be met with the full weight of my office in retaliation!”

This caught many of the Netnews reporters by surprise as well since it was well known Deia was very patient and methodical in her actions. This showed on their faces and the way they looked at each other.

“Is it true Prince Androcles was training High Coven dragons to fight the KFI?” Another reporter blurted out.

“Empress Aikiro brought those dragons here as a means to gain our trust. They are the same dragons that she had taken from their mothers and fathers when their ship crashed in The Wilds nearly twenty-four years ago.” Deia announced. “They were a façade for her to earn our trust. She did not foresee that Androcles would turn those riders and dragons into true Bonded Pairs. Yes... he has been training them... but certainly not to fight the KFI. He has been training them to realize their own potential and break the bonds of High Coven oppression. A goal he succeeded in since every single one of them departed with him aboard the SCIMITAR.”

“And Princess Carisia... Princess Narice...?”

Deia shrugged her slim shoulders. “They found love and their futures in the arms of two Leonidas brothers. What more is there to say in that regard? They looked past what they have been taught and made their decision. It is a decision the Leonidas family has embraced.”

“It is being reported that the Kavalians are not allowing any rescue personal and equipment into the remains of their embassy Prime Minister. Can you comment on that?”

Deia shook her head. “Queen For'mya is returning to Sparta to address this issue as we speak. Their embassy is sovereign Kavalian territory granted to them by the Union Senate and leadership. We can't force them to take our help.” Deia held up her hand. “I will address you all in another few hours when we have more information. Please wait until then for further questions. Thank you.”

“I want to speak with Deia!” Dysea snapped angrily as she reached up and wiped away the tears. She turned to T'lolt where he stood next to a stunned Cihera and Las'elh. “T'lolt can you do this if I give you her personal COM channel! Aricia, Martin, For'mya... none of them are answering their personal channels... and I have tried several times since this news began to break!”

T'lolt nodded immediately. “Give it to me.” He replied moving quickly towards the main communications console. He caught the pad Dysea tossed to him and plugged it into the console without pause. “It asks for a code Dysea?”

Dysea didn't hesitate in answering. “Spartan Three... nine three seven one ML.” She answered.

T'lolt nodded and entered the code. “It's activating!” He spoke turning back to the holomager on the chart table.

The image of Deia lifting a mug of something to her lips came into view, flickered and then cleared instantly. They could see several individuals moving around inside what could only be her office. Dysea gasped when she saw For'mya step into the transmission as well. She looked tired and worried and her face showed it.

“Dysea our love!” For'mya gasped.

“For'mya... Kinsoaurgai!” Dysea exclaimed. “Tell me... I have just seen this... tell me what is happening For'mya!”

For'mya began to speak but stopped as the emotions finally became too much and she shook her head tears filling her eyes. They watched Deia get up from her chair and moved up beside her quickly, placing her hand on her shoulder and squeezing. For'mya turned to look at her and nodded as she struggled to gain her composure.

Deia turned to face them in the transmission. “We are still investigating Dysea.” She began.

“We... we just saw your announcement to the Netnews!” Dysea spoke.

She nodded. “I gave that about forty minutes ago. We do not know much more than what I said in that briefing.” Deia told her. “Things are still rather confusing at the moment.”

“Deia... do not...” Dysea began.

Deia shook her head quickly. “I’m holding nothing back Dysea. Not now, not this time. There is too much at stake.” She replied instantly. “Martin and Aricia are still at SODRAG with Helen.”

“Aikiro is dead?” Esther asked now stepping closer to Dysea.

Deia looked at Dysea in the transmission. “Dysea we should...”

Dysea shook her head. “We are among friends and allies here Deia.” She said quickly. “You may speak freely.”

Deia nodded without hesitation then. She had worked with Dysea more than enough times through these last years to know that she was a superior judge of character. If she said it was ok to speak freely than that is what Deia would do.

“Yes... Aikiro is dead.” Deia answered. “Helen was the one who killed her. Androcles killed Javier’s dragon Naruth and he came very close to killing Dante Moran and his dragon as well. Witnesses from Reylan... they are saying they saw him doing things Dysea! Things they had never seen before. He went after Yuri and...”

“Does that monster live?” Dysea asked with heat in her voice.

Deia nodded slowly. “We believe so unfortunately. How we don’t know. Androcles’s own words to others at SODRAG made it seem as if he mangled her too severely for her to survive. If he hadn’t been shot he would have...”

“Shot?” Normya barked moving up next to her mother as well.

Deia held up her hand to stop any further rapid fire questions as For'mya lifted her head, once more in command of herself.

“He was hit four times Dysea.” For'mya spoke now. “When Aricia and I saw him at SODRAG before Martin arrived he had been able to push two of the projectiles out before he shifted back.”

Dysea and Normya looked at her with wide eyes, as did Anton now as he stepped closer. “He shifted back to human form before purging the projectiles from his body?” Dysea gasped. “Andro should know better than that!”

For'mya nodded slowly. “His only concern was getting back to where Zarah was.” She stated.

“Mother...?” Normya spoke. “Mother how is... Zarah? Is she...?”

“She was aboard the SCIMITAR and that is where Aricia and I dropped Bella before returning to Earth.” For'mya said. “I did not see her Normya, but Eliani was with her. To have reacted as Androcles did... I can only assume the reports were accurate.”

“Lucia Moran saved her?” Dysea asked in disbelief.

Deia nodded. “Andro made that very clear to me. He contacted me from the TYPE II he was on after the confrontation with his father as they were returning to the SCIMITAR and...”

“Confrontation?” Dysea asked moving closer to the transmission. “What do you mean Deia? What confrontation?”

“Martin has not been himself these last weeks Dysea.” For'mya spoke now. “It has something to do with his Pralor ancestors and those of Yuri. We are waiting for Helen to tell us more, but Martin has been... he has been under the influence of an evil force that was somehow warping his mind. It was controlling his actions and... he struck out at Aricia and me...”

“Kinsoaurgai no!” Dysea sobbed.

For'mya waved her hand. "It was not our Martin." She said quickly. "Our Martin would never strike out at us for anything. You know that! I... I questioned this as well right after... but it was a foolish thought Dysea my love! He loves us with all that he is and he would never hurt us willingly. It was stupid of me to think such a thing. This thing... this evil thing was controlling him."

"Then this thing... it still..." Dysea asked.

For'mya shook her head. "He is free of it once more. Helen, Arzoal and Torma have made certain of that. Unfortunately, they did not get there in time to stop him from beating Androcles severely in his rage. It was almost as if this dark evil wanted Martin to kill his son. It was horrible to watch... it... he beat his son so badly." For'mya stopped for a moment then continued. "Helen and the others saved him though. I returned here to Sparta because the Kavalians would not allow our rescue personnel to help them. I had to contact the Kavalian Ambassador myself as I was enroute back here. He relented and I have gathered with Deia here in her office until we discover what else is going on."

"The Durcunusaan has locked down all family members and any sensitive locations here on Earth." Deia picked it up then. "The only one unaccounted for at this time is Ardis, Tarifa's oldest, but she is also a member of the Durcunusaan and will more than likely contact us soon. She is probably on her way to a secure location now and has just not checked in. A team is going to her apartment as we speak."

"Deia... you said Andro has left with his siblings!" Dysea asked. "Where has he gone? Why..."

"He is coming here." The deep male voice spoke from behind all of them. Dysea spun around quickly and saw Cha'talla enter the command center holding several data pads in his hands. "They are taking a longer than necessary route here, but they should be here in three days time if Androcles's calculations are accurate. And I believe they are."

"Cha'talla?" Dysea asked even as he came forward, his dark eyes looking at For'mya and Deia in the transmission. He stopped next to Dysea and Esther, pulling Esther close to him and looked down into her surprised emerald green eyes.

"You... you have spoken with him?" She exclaimed.

Cha'talla nodded. "Just after they left Earth." He answered. "I spoke with Captain Sa'sur personally."

"That is where you went three hours before daybreak?" Esther asked pressing closer to her Immortal husband and placing her hand on his massive chest.

Cha'talla nodded. "He brought this idea to me six weeks ago. The possibility of coming here to train these dragons. He said it was important that the Coven riders have a place that will be neutral to them, a place where they would not have to guard their actions and words. A place where they could grow and become one. Androcles asked me if I would allow this and I said yes immediately. Over these last weeks we have finalized the details, and just a few days ago he contacted me to confirm that this is what he needed to do."

"You... you allowed this husband?" Esther asked with surprise.

Cha'talla looked at her with his dark eyes. "It was you and our son who started us down this path my Blessed Wife." He told her softly. "A path that I was reluctant to take for fear that we have not done enough to show we are different than the other Immortals. Look at what has happened because of your actions. Normya Leonidas loves our first born son and she is now his Blessed Wife; Lynom protects with his life the one who he has come to love no matter what she thinks of him..." This information made both Danarla and Ta'lon look at him stunned.

"We are different! Our tribe is different and I will no longer attempt to hide them! Our actions speak louder than our words and I will not sit by any longer and be without action." Cha'talla turned back to look at Dysea even as Esther's eyes became blurry with tears. "Your son did not question my request for help in defending our home here Dysea Leonidas. He acted because he could see the love his sister held for my son... the love Tir'ut holds for her. He acted because he trusts you and your purpose here. Saying yes to Androcles was as easy as breathing in the air around me.

"I no longer care if it becomes known I still live. That my tribe is here. Let them come for me! We will stand and defend what we have built. And we will stand with those who did not hesitate in trusting us to begin with. It is why T'lolt and I have worked so diligently with Anton and the others to come up with a plan to rescue As'hia and my son as well as the other elven females Phy'iad and his men hold against their will. Our future began the day Normya Leonidas stumbled into our lives, and I will make sure that future does not die in its infancy."

Dysea was unable to say anything as she looked at Cha'talla. He was at one point in time perhaps the most feared Immortal in High Coven history. He had been Captain to the High Lord for well over a thousand years, longer than anyone before him. His history before that was well documented within the Coven history scrolls and the history texts of his own people. He was fearless and intelligent and supremely skilled in the art of war. His years since Esther had come into his life had tempered and refined him and Cha'talla knew it. He was smarter and more skilled now than he ever was, all because of the diminutive pureblood vampire female who had claimed his heart and soul that day so long ago.

Cha'talla turned to the transmission where Deia and For'mya were still watching. "The SCIMITAR and her Strike Wing will be here in three days. Androcles asked that I not pass that information along, but I am a father as well and it is something you must know. Your family and friends will be safe here, just as Dysea and Normya and all others who have come here have been safe. You have my oath on that Prime Minister Deia of the Lycavorian Union."

Deia nodded her head confidently in the transmission. She stepped closer to the small holomager in her office on Earth. "Then know this Cha'talla of the Immortals... you have but to ask me for anything for your people and it will be yours. Anything at all."

"The two that were protecting Lucia Moran?" Cha'talla asked. "They were the sons of a fellow warrior in my tribe. They were good men. Do they...?"

"They survived. They left with Andro." Deia said immediately. "And they are bringing with them a surprise as well."

"A surprise?" Cha'talla asked.

"You will see." Deia spoke.

"Dysea my love..." For'mya spoke. "We must keep an open channel now. Too much is happening here and I don't know if it is over? I need to be able to contact you if the need arises. We have arranged such a thing with Melyanna as well on Hadaria."

Dysea's eyes went a little wider. "Melyanna!" She barked out. "I never thought to ask! What is happening there? Is Buonau letting her leave?"

Deia shook her head. "She refuses to allow this." She answered. "Anja is furious... but she is remaining for now. The hearing has been moved back until tomorrow morning and when Anja is done dealing with Buonau she will take the SPIRIT and return to Earth."

"And Resumar!" Dysea asked. "The High Coven troops with Resumar! They must be aware of what Aikiro and Yuri planned! They will attempt..."

Deia nodded her head. "We know." She answered. "However... Resumar is under a communications blackout until they reach the surface of Ritaah. He will not break that blackout. We will know nothing until he contacts us from inside the new Mindvoice ship. It is one of the reasons Avi went with him."

"How soon will we know?" Dysea asked.

"They should be reaching the surface just about now if everything went according to plan." Deia spoke.

BELID

As'hia didn't know why she felt so warm as she woke lazily.

They had reached the caves easily enough just before dusk and then moved deep into the bowels of the huge mountain range. Lynom obviously knew where he was going and she simply followed him as he used his vampire vision and she her wolf eyes until he came to a tunnel that became a dead end. She was about to question him and ask him quite sarcastically if he had gotten lost when he stepped up to the rock face of the wall and touched his hand to two small boulders that protruded from the rock face. The moment his hand touched them, a two meter wide, half a meter thick section of the wall lifted up to reveal an enormous cavern behind it. As'hia's eyes were wide as she followed him through the entrance. She didn't even bother to look back as the hidden section of rock wall dropped back into place, so stunned by the inside of the cavern as she was.

It was obvious Lynom had been here many times before. She watched as he immediately began to activate Illum globes all around the huge cavern when they arrived and she began to see even better just how big it was. There was a large fresh water pool near the back and she could hear the running of the water which told her it was being fed from somewhere else in the mountains. There were large crates of equipment scattered all about, several heating globes near where most of the equipment was stacked neatly. She saw boxes of fresh clothes and boots, weapons, food and even medical supplies. Enough to last for months if need be she estimated. She had watched him silently as he set about activating the heating globes and set aside the equipment he carried. He hadn't spoken three or four words at a time to her since they had left the stream where she finally saw who Lynom truly was. Her reaction towards him had no doubt made him think many things and withdraw further into the wall he kept so powerfully erected around him. They had slept that night on different sides of the main camp area, and even with the blanket As'hia had been shivering most of the night from the chill of the caves. The next day he had left her in the cavern while he scouted back along the trail. As'hia had never felt so alone while he was gone, and even though she took a long bath in the cool spring water and found clothes that fit her in the many crates, she could not escape the sense of loss that gripped her. She spent the better portion of the day cleaning every weapon Lynom had stockpiled in the cave and adjusting the ground sensor units he had placed during his patrol. When he had returned, she had waited expectantly for him to speak with her, yet he had only grunted that no one had followed them. She had sat sullenly while he took fresh clothes and moved to the spring and jumped in fully clothed before removing the uniform he had on while he was in the water.

He was attempting to hide his body from her, believing she could not stand the look of him after her reaction the other day, and not knowing this was the furthest thing from the truth. As'hia had watched him while he washed his upper body, her wolf eyes easily able to see him even in the dimness of the cavern when he shut off the Illum globe near the pool. The ripple of the muscles in his shoulders and arms and the ripped definition of his abdomen and back could only be described as glorious. His physical definition matched that of any Spartan that As'hia had ever spent time with, and in many ways was even more impressive because of his size. The bronze color of his skin shone in the dim light, no trace of his Immortal blood seen until you saw the bone spikes along his jaw and the outer portions of his hands. Even the normal sunken eye sockets were not as prominent because of his long dreadlock like hair. And As'hia loved his hair. It was almost as long as her own dual colored locks and he had apparently decided not to cut it off, instead unwrapping and then re-braiding each strand of his hair. Once that task was complete he used a leather strand to pull it all together and secure it in a dreadlock ponytail. He must not have known she was watching him, for Lynom had climbed from the pool completely naked and As'hia had to consciously suppress the groan of intense desire as she saw his flaccid cock dangling between his legs.

Whatever the cause, As'hia could not remember the Immortal men who had raped her. Whether it was due to the beatings or the drugs, she did not know, but she could remember only small bits and pieces of that time and only very vaguely. Lynom's cock was not as large as the Immortal cocks she had seen on the men at the base raping the other female elves, but it was certainly quite impressive. Easily nine inches long even flaccid as it was and it looked to be very thick. It matched the color of his skin and As'hia was stunned at her next reaction. She actually licked her lips in desire when she saw it and felt the wolf blood in her begin to simmer. She looked away quickly when he dressed efficiently and headed back into the light of the main cavern. Once more he only spoke short words to her, while giving her rations and such before he moved to the spot where he had spread out a sleeping mat. He ate quickly and then stretched out his six foot four body on the mat saying he would scout the area once more tomorrow to insure they were not being followed and then he was asleep in minutes. He left As'hia poking at the rations in her hand before she too settled onto the sleeping mat and allowed sleep to claim her.

As As'hia opened her dark brown eyes slowly she discovered the reason she felt so warm and it was quite the surprise to her. She was not staring across the ground at the back of the cavern; she was staring across the broad expanse of Lynom's chest looking at the back of the cavern. As her eyes grew wider and she realized where she was, she also realized her firm breasts were pressed tightly against Lynom's ribcage, her right leg drawn up over his and her right arm stretched across his powerful abdomen. She felt the pressure on her shoulders and down her back and knew it could only be his arm holding her in place. The warmth radiating from his body was filtering wonderfully through her, her cheek resting on his chest. Her mind exploded with many things, foremost among them was how she had gotten in this position. She didn't move a single muscle and she could feel the even rise and fall of his broad chest that told her he was very much asleep. As her senses came back to her she realized that the warmth of his body had attracted her at some point during the night and she had sought out this warmth as her wolf instincts naturally took over. Lynom's Amarian Willow Flower scent filled her nostrils powerfully and she felt even more warmth surge through her as her body reacted to his scent. Reacted in a way she certainly did not expect. Her nipples grew extremely hard and she felt moisture seep out of her suddenly very aroused pussy and soak into the pants she wore as her mind remembered the view of his naked body. Instinctually she reached out with her mind and felt the warmth of his presence within Mindvoice and the way it made her feel, and her eyes grew suddenly very wide.

As'hia yelped in stunned surprise and pushed off of Lynom's body, propelling herself away from him. She didn't see his dark eyes burst open and his hands reach for the rifle that rested next to him as he rolled and came to his knees instantly alert and ready to kill.

"As'hia! What is it?" He barked as his eyes swept around them holding the SA80. As'hia sat on the ground staring at him with wide eyes. "As'hia!"

"You... you bastard!" She exclaimed viciously causing Lynom's eyes to grow wider at her words.

"What?" He asked with a confused expression as the SA80 lowered slightly. "What is wrong?"

"You... you let me lay next to you!" As'hia snarled.

Lynom's eyes grew wider and he lowered the SA80 fully. "You were cold! Your whole body was shivering!" He spat. "You mumbled something and then laid next to me!"

"You should have... you should have given me another blanket then!" As'hia growled at him as she got to her feet.

Lynom stood up fully as well and looked at her with a disgusted expression. "I am that much of a monster to you that you would rather lie on the ground and shiver than be warm?" He asked walking up to her.

As'hia looked up at him and lashed out with her hand, raking her nails along his cheek savagely and drawing blood. "Did you get your thrills having me so close to you Lynom?" She hissed as Lynom's head rocked back more from the surprise than the force of the blow. "Did it make you feel manly when I was...?" As'hia gasped when he turned his head back to her slowly, the four bloody scratches from her nails on his cheek and his dark eyes now the cobalt blue of his vampire genes.

Lynom trembled in anger, his vampire blood boiling in his veins at this unexpected attack against him for something she perceived he had done. He hissed softly at her surprised face, fully exposing his vampiric fangs and seeing her eyes grow larger, changing to her wolf eyes and her own wolf fangs extending as she naturally reacted in a manner to defend herself. Lynom paused for a long moment and simply stared at her. His love for her would not allow him to react as she expected him too, and he no longer denied the fact that he did love her. He would not act as those animals that had mistreated her so. Lynom almost laughed at the irony of this situation. He loved this elven female with every fiber of his being and had since the first moment he had seen her strength in fighting those animals who had forced themselves upon her. As'hia in turn hated him with equal feeling he wrongly assumed. He knew what he was doing the moment he laid his eyes upon her and had acted the way he did even knowing it would put his people in jeopardy. He had not cared. He still did not care, for even though she hated him, he still loved her with all that he was. It was more painful than any physical hurt he had ever experienced to know how she felt about him, but at least she was alive and would be safe when she returned to her family. For all that... he would not have done anything differently.

Lynom turned quickly away from her startling As'hia somewhat, and he moved to several of the equipment crates and picked up the pack.

"Your elven metabolism has not fully recovered from the drugs and beatings you were subjected too." Lynom spoke as he began stuffing items into the pack. "That is why you are still cold during the nights. I know you have refused so far, but I suggest taking the medicines I left for you so that it speeds your recovery."

"What are you doing?" As'hia snapped as she watched him moved to the crate with the rations and take an armful, only to move to the pack and drop them in.

"My presence here is not beneficial." He spoke softly. "You don't want me here and you certainly don't need me here."

As'hia watched as he dropped several small cans of ammunition into the pack and took several plasma grenades and then he sealed the pack. He hefted it onto one shoulder and then turned to look at her as he lifted the Immortal sword from the rock and pushed it through the straps on the pack. “Where are you going?” She demanded.

Lynom’s laugh held no mirth in it. “One day to hell probably.” He answered her. “Right now I am going to set up my own camp on top of this mountain and leave you to yourself.”

“What?” As'hia gasped.

Lynom stepped up to her side as his cobalt eyes vanished. He looked down at her face. “I do not begin to understand what you must feel after enduring what you have Ssin'urn 'Anon. But I am not one of the monsters who did these things to you.” He said softly. “Even so... my presence continues to remind you of what happened so I will leave. I will be on top of the mountain making sure no one followed us and monitoring the communications array. My father and brother will be here soon, as will your parents, and then you will never need to see another Immortal in your lifetime. You can return to your life and try to rebuild what you have lost. I will not remain here and let you hate me for being what I am however. Not with as much as I have fallen in love with you As'hia. That is too painful to endure.”

As'hia stared at him in shock at this pronouncement and he turned without another word and moved to the cavern entrance. He touched the opening and As'hia watched it slide open and then Lynom moved through it without a second look back. The sound of the rock wall closing was almost thunderous in the now empty cavern and As'hia was then truly alone. As alone as she had ever been.

RITAAH

Resumar didn’t think it was going to be easy.

It seemed nothing a Leonidas did was ever easy, and this fact appeared to follow him and Andro more so than their other siblings for reasons which he could not begin to fathom. The clearing was there just as their imagery had told them, however the terrain surrounding the clearing was far thicker than it appeared and this immediately caused problems. The moment the STRIKER’s landing pads touched the ground the High Coven troops in the back began their assault. Even as prepared as they were, the sudden quickness of the attack caught them only partially aware. Cemath and Mirra could not use their superheated breath within the confines of the STRIKER and they were left to activate their psychic shields and try and stay out of the fighting as the Coven troops began exchanging heavy fire with the Spartan troops among the numerous large crates of equipment they had brought. A stray projectile round had ricocheted off the interior walls of the STRIKER and then into the cockpit where it entered just below the pilot’s left ear and blew her brains all over the front of the windshield even before she had fully powered down the ship. As the co-pilot worked frantically to shut down the ship’s systems so they were not damaged more by stray fire because they were powered on, more projectiles slammed into the armored sides of the cockpit doorway making Athani cringe and stay out of the line of fire as she clutched the K14. One vampire commando had blurred fast enough to reach the doorway of the cockpit, intent on killing the Kavalian whore and the two pilots. All of the commandos knew the layout of the STRIKER by memory and he knew he could escape through the cockpit hatch.

His plan did not factor in the towering bulk of Avi, or the immense strength of the cyborg in the cockpit. As he blurred into the cockpit, the tree branch thick arm came whipping from the side to smash into his chest even in the middle of his blur. As he wailed in agony, his body lifting into the air and all forward momentum gone, he wondered how anyone could have matched his speed while blurring. He never got the chance to answer that question as when he landed on the deck with a grunt of pain and rush of air, the Kavalian whore appeared above him the K14 extended in her hand, and she calmly pumped two kinetic rounds into his cranium. Athani didn’t pause as she stepped over his lifeless corpse and slammed her hand down on the controls, activating the emergency hatch and turned back to the co-pilot. Though filled with worry for her new husband, Athani had a job to do and she knew Resumar would be upset with her if she did not complete it.

“Open the ramp!” Athani screamed out. “We must get them off the ship before they destroy all our equipment or ignite the explosives!”

“Ramp coming down!” The harried co-pilot shouted as she slammed her hand down on the panel between the seats.

“Avi... the cameras in the back? Can you get them working?” Athani screamed as they heard the roar of gunfire that could only be the exchange of P190A3s and SA80 weapons fire. Athani knew that while the STRIKER was a large ship for its class at over seventy meters, it was only twelve meters wide and there were only so many places Resumar and the others could hide from sustained weapons fire.

-Stand by- The hulking cyborg returned to the seat he had occupied and his hands flew over the console with a blur. -I have all the cameras up-

Athani crossed over to stand beside his shoulder, her blue/green eyes wide as she saw the gaping opening in the back where the ramp was now down. She could also see Cemath and Mirra attempting to make themselves as small as possible in the back of the STRIKER. There were two bodies by Cemath’s right foot and she could see bright blood on the deck. She smiled grimly as she realized two Coven troops had gotten too close to him. The cameras could also see the bodies of half a dozen others, but it was too dark to make out whether they were Coven troops or Spartans.

“Damn!” Athani swore. “Is there nothing we can do to help them?”

-This vessel has no internal defensive systems. It was not designed for battle on the interior- Avi answered. -We must remain here as Resumar told us and keep the Coven troops from taking the ship-

“Nubou!” Athani spat. “If they hurt my Resumar I will gouge out their eyes and feed them their entrails!”

Resumar ducked down behind the crate once more and slammed a fresh magazine into his K12. More projectiles whizzed over his head and impacted the bulkhead of the STRIKER and he winced slightly as the buzz saw sound of the 190s returned fire. He turned his head quickly as Julie Collins blurred across the open area between the two massive equipment crates and skidded to a stop next to him holding the K12 in her hands and slamming roughly against the crate.

“They want this ship as much as we do!” Julie barked above the gunfire.

Resumar looked at her. “No! What gave you that idea?” He shouted before leaning around the crate and sending six rounds whistling down the center of the STRIKER before leaning back. “How many are left?” He barked out.

Julie squatted on the balls of her feet and launched another half dozen rounds over the top of the crate before lowering herself back down. “Nine I believe!” She yelled back as she quickly changed magazines.

“We aren’t going to stay lucky for very long!” Resumar declared. “One of us is going to hit the crates with the explosives and do major damage!”

“Your dragon can do nothing?” Julie asked.

“Too confining!” Resumar answered. “He can’t even get his wings open fully inside the ship to fight! He did take out two of them who got too close to them though!”

“Yes! I saw that! Efficient use of his talons if you ask me!” She answered.

“We do try!” Resumar shouted.

Julie looked at him and couldn’t help the smile on her face from showing. Yes indeed, he was so much like his father, and Julie had every intention of returning that part of her life to herself no matter what she did.

“Are you always so nonchalant about men and women shooting at you?” She screamed as she extended and sent another tirade of projectiles down the length of the STRIKER.

“You should see my brother!” Resumar answered. “He would have just stood up and pushed them all out the back with...” Resumar’s dark eyes grew wide for a moment. “That’s it!”

“What is it?” Julie declared.

Aryschanne? Resumar reached out within Mindvoice.

My love? Athani answered immediately.

Athani... release the upper rear compartment locks! Resumar commanded.

What? Resumar... that's insane! She barked within Mindvoice. The entire ship will drop! The landing struts will be crushed! They...

Aryschanne... we must get them off the ship! They are all located behind the last two equipment crates. He explained quickly. If you unlock the upper rear compartment locks it will knock them over and allow us to rush their position! Trust me Athani... it will work!

Very... very well husband! But if you die on me Resumar Leonidas I will haunt you for the rest of your spirit life! Athani spat.

Resumar looked at Julie. "Grab onto something!" He barked. "The others will know what it is when they hear the alarm!"

Julie watched him wrap his hand and arm around the large straps securing the crate to the floor and she did the same as a red light began flashing a buzzing alarm sounded. "What are you doing?" She screamed at him.

Resumar smiled stupidly at her. "Giving us the edge!" He exclaimed.

Cemath's eyes went wide and he turned to look at Mirra! Mirra! Brace yourself! Quickly! He commanded as he wrapped his tail around one part of the harness mechanism and saw her do the same. He dug his talons into the deck plating as much as he was able and closed his eyes. I hope you know what you are doing brother! He shouted within Mindvoice.

The alarm stopped sounding and the floor of the STRIKER dropped away. Literally.

Athani opened the dividing door into the rear of the STRIKER and bright moonlight met her eyes. She gasped at what her feline eyes saw. The moment she had bypassed the upper locks on the rear compartment, it was as if they were separating the rear of the ship from the cockpit area as an in-flight emergency. Since she only released the upper locks, the last fifty-five meters of the ship had dropped with all of its weight down ten meters. It had the desired effect she saw, as Resumar and Julie were now mingling at the rear of the half buried ramp, the landing struts on the STRIKER crushed beyond repair. She could see all the way through the ship even though the forward section was also beyond repair bent down and inward as it was. Even the Dragon Armor skin of the outer shell could not withstand the stress of the odd position and weight and had buckled outward as opposed to ripping completely as the rest of the normal Duridium shell had done.

Athani leaped across the small opening nimbly and used her catlike abilities to slide and maneuver her way down the steep incline of the rear section of the ship. She saw Resumar turn towards her as she neared him at the foot of the ramp and she leaped the last six meters with ease landing in front of him.

"This was your solution!" She exclaimed. "This was... it was..."

Suicidal! Mirra exclaimed with equal emotion in Mindvoice. Athani Leonidas... you married this one?

Cemath chuckled. I thought it was a brilliant move. He spoke.

Mirra whirled her purple scaled head toward him. You would! You are just as suicidal as your Bonded One!

Resumar looked at Julie with a smile and then turned back to her. "It worked didn't it?" He spoke.

Athani looked around and saw the remains of five High Coven troops in the light of the moon, three of which had been crushed by the last equipment container when it broke its restraining straps. Julie was squatting slightly away from the overturned crate as the remaining Spartans moved back from around the now grounded STRIKER. The senior enlisted Spartan came up to Resumar.

"We swept a hundred meters around the clearing as you ordered Milord. No sign of them." The man spoke.

"How many dead?" Resumar asked with some trepidation.

The enlisted man shook his head. "Surprisingly none Milord. The High Coven was using soft ammunition. Seven of our people were knocked out by the massive concussive force of the projectiles, but none were killed."

"Soft ammunition?" Resumar said looking at Julie.

She nodded standing back up. "The Empress did not want any equipment damaged Resumar. She wanted these ships as well as the MV ship." She turned back to the woodline along the clearing. "The remaining Coven troops blurred off in that direction." She said pointing to the southeast.

Resumar nodded. "That's the secondary landing zone where Dario's STRIKER was setting down. He isn't answering calls in Mindvoice, though I can feel him and Sorran both. They are agitated to say the least!" He turned to the enlisted Spartan. "Hyperetes Mescis, leave half the team here and ready the others to move to Dario's location. You remain here and secure the ship and prep the contents to be moved."

Brother? Cemath inquired as he came to his feet.

Resumar nodded. "Get airborne and see if you can see anything Cemath. Mirra go with him. Athani..." He spoke turning to her.

Athani shook her head. "I will remain with Avi." She said quickly. "I know. He seems to be the only one who thinks your stunt was just as insane as I do."

"I don't like that Dario won't answer me." Resumar spoke.

"Perhaps he thinks you are just as crazy as I now do." Athani snapped.

Resumar began to smile but was cut off from completing that smile by the massive explosion to the southeast. All of them whirled as the huge fireball spiraled skyward lighting up the darkness like a small sun. A fireball that was quickly followed by the sound of rolling thunder. A powerful gust of wind slapped all of them in the face, staggering Athani and Julie slightly as they watched with horror in their eyes.

"Dario!" Resumar exclaimed. "No!"

Dario was not answering his cousin for a very good reason. He was fighting to stay alive to the very best of his ability.

Things had started to go wrong the moment their pilot flared their ship for landing. They had hit a batch of rough air and two Coven troops mistakenly took this as them setting down on the surface. Even though Dario and the other Spartans were prepared for an attack, the two troops blurring into the cockpit before they had landed surprised them completely. Without even thinking to look out the cockpit window and take notice that they were still a hundred feet in the air, the two Coven troops lifted their SA80s and shot both pilots in the back of the head. Though they were using soft ammunition, STRIKER pilots rarely wore helmets, and Dario's eyes were wide in horror as the blood and brains of both pilots decorated the inside of the windshield almost simultaneously. Their deaths sent the STRIKER into an immediate tailspin from which there was no recovery. Thrown violently back by the gravity of the tailspin Dario was pinned against the chair he sat in even as the two Coven troops were turning their weapons on him.

The STRIKER impacted the ground at nearly a hundred and thirty KPH directly on its belly with no landing gear to break its fall. Not that it would have mattered anyway. Dario was saved from the fate of the Coven troops in the cockpit for the simple reason that he was sitting and not standing. The impact on the unyielding ground sent both Coven troops rocketing upwards and then down again, their heads and shoulders instantly crushed by the crash as the dorsal section of the STRIKER caved downward from the force of the contact with the ground, and then their lower bodies shattering in the downward motion of the crash. As it was, the chair Dario sat in was nearly torn from its metal bolting in the deck and he was suddenly dangling sideways, dazed and very confused.

The STRIKER's collision with the ground sent up a billowing cloud of dirt and shredded grass. The ramp was torn from its mountings and all twenty-two members of the assault team were sent hurtling in different directions. Sorran and Dario had been in another STRIKER crash similar to this before and the moment Sorran felt the ship go into a tailspin he shouted a warning to his partner and drew his tail and head as close to his body as he could. He relaxed his body so as not to try and anticipate the impact with the ground and he would be able to spring about with the force if he was lucky. His fellow dragon was not as lucky. He did not pull his body in as tightly as he could, ignoring Sorran's directions in fear. The rear of the ship smashing into the ground shattered all four of his legs for he was trying to brace for the impact. As his head came up and he began to bellow in pain, the top portion of his harness snapped off and was driven downward through his skull as the top of the rear of the STRIKER dropped a good meter and a half, turning the now lethal protruding piece of metal into a killing apparatus.

Dario shook his head to clear his mind and began tearing at the straps holding him in place. Using his strength he was able to yank the main one free of its mounting bracket and he slipped out of the chair under the other strap. He staggered towards the open door into the rear of the ship and came face to face with the dazed

High Coven senior officer of their group. With a snarl of intense rage Dario smashed his head forward, the thicker bone of his Lycavorian skull impacting the nose and cheek of the dazed vampire officer and crushing that bone and cartilage to mush. As the officer screamed in pain and staggered backwards away from him Dario drew his Nehtes, thumbed the extending button and drove one half of the nine foot spear through the man's chest. He yanked it out in the same motion and looked into the rear of the ship with wide eyes.

"Execute! Execute! Execute!" He screamed the words as he moved into the rear of the ship.

Then all hell broke loose.

Dario dove for cover behind one of the crates as he saw two High Coven troops rise up and level their weapons at where he was standing. As he rolled into the back of the first crate his eyes caught the motion of three of his men struggling to get their weapons unlimbered. They accomplished this exactly at the same time as two High Coven troops dashed forward with their weapons already out. Dario could only watch with wide eyes as the five men unloaded on each other from point blank range. He watched as the bullet strikes to all of them men were burned into his memories for all time. Blood blossomed from the bodies of the Coven troops even as two of his troops staggered back under multiply impacts to their reinforced Mark IV ArmorPly. Dario would learn later that this is what saved them from the soft ammunition that the Coven troops were using.

Sorran! Dario screamed out in Mindvoice.

Brother I am stuck! Sorran answered instantly. Get out Dario! My harness is crushed and the body of...

No! Dario exclaimed.

He died quickly! Sorran spoke. His body pins me to the floor. You must get out! The impact broke open one of the explosive crates! The electrical fire will ignite it in moments! Get out Brother!

NO! Dario screamed out. I will not leave you!

Dario bolted to his feet and turned to run to the back of the ship just as another High Coven troop stepped out in front of him and lifted his SA80. Dario didn't hesitate and didn't pause. He simply reached out with his long, powerful arm and snatched the shorter Coven troop up by his throat and ripped him off the ground carrying him with him as he walked. The Coven troop dropped his weapon as he tried to claw at the iron grip now squeezing his throat closed to no avail. Dario was a large Spartan, nearing six foot three and two hundred and thirty pounds and he was physically extremely powerful. As he moved forward he finally squeezed with just enough force that he crushed the vampire's larynx as he rammed him into the next equipment crate in the line. Dario didn't hear the man's spine shatter on impact with the metal crate, or the gurgling of the blood pouring into his throat. The only thing that mattered to him was getting to his Bonded Brother. Dario ignored the random weapons fire, or the fact that both the Coven troops and Spartans that had survived were doing all they could to get out of the ship before the electrical fire that had begun along the port side reached the now shattered crate that had held the explosives they were to use to blow up the MV ship.

Dario made his way quickly through the increasing smoke from the widening fire and reached the pen area of the STRIKER. His eyes were wide at what he saw. Sorran was pinned under both the crushed harness and the body of the second dragon that had come with them. Blood was pouring from the massive wound in the second dragon's skull all over his Bonded Brother's back. He rushed forward immediately and without regard for his own safety he began trying to heave the head and neck of the dead dragon off Sorran's back and shoulders so that they could tear at the harness.

Dario you have to go! You have to leave me! Sorran growled out even as he tried to move his shoulders and help his Bonded Brother push the weight of the dead dragon off him.

"NO!" Dario screamed as he grabbed the saddle harness the dragon wore.

You will die fool! Sorran snarled.

Dario glared at him then. "Then we will die together!" He shouted. "Now shut up and help me idiot!"

Sorran gathered as much of his legs under him as he could and with Dario using all of his wolf strength and their combined TK power they were finally able to push the body of the dragon off Sorran's back and shoulders. Dario immediately looked at the crushed harness and yanked his Nehtes from the thigh holster once more.

"Can you never do anything the easy way!" Dario screamed at him as he began to hack at the remaining sections of the twisted metal dragon harness.

Only you would put us on another ship that crashes! Sorran barked right back at him. You volunteered us for this mission! He continued as he used his clawed talons to pull down on the opposite section of the harness framework. See the sights you said! Meet beautiful female dragons you said! And here we are! I should have known! Once more digging our way out of a crashed STRIKER that is going to explode at any moment and scattered us to ashes!

“It won’t if you shut up and pull!” Dario screamed as he finished severing the frame at the top and it dropped free of the ceiling allowing Sorran to pull the remainder off his back and shoulders with his talons. Sorran looked at him then, his eyes bright. “Can we go now Brother?” Dario snapped.

With all haste! Sorran popped.

Their psychic shield almost glowing, they plunged through the smoke and flames licking at them as they dashed for the ramp. They had to duck lower than normal to clear the top of the ramp but then they were out among the stars and moonlight and Dario immediately shifted to his wolf form to put as much distance between them and the ship as possible. His dark blond fur rustled in the night air as his powerful legs propelled him away from the doomed ship.

Go brother! He screamed out as he willed his four legs to carry him away as fast as possible. Go!

Sorran didn’t hesitate and immediately snapped out his wings and reached for the sky, pulling away rapidly with powerful sweeps as he climbed into the cloudless sky. Just as he cleared the tops of the trees and the edge of the clearing the STRIKER exploded.

The resulting concussion wave sent him spiraling out of control over the tops of the trees, snapping the crowns of large trees off as his nearly four metric tons became something akin to a meteor. He didn’t hear his Bonded Brother yelp in surprise as the concussion wave picked the dark blond wolf up in its wake and tossed him like a ragdoll. They didn’t see the fireball that blossomed in the night sky and reached nearly four hundred feet up considering the amount of explosives the STRIKER was carrying.

Oh this is going to hurt! Sorran heard Dario spit out just before his huge skull smashed into the top of a three hundred foot tall tree and knocked him silly.

“Gods!” Na’lia gasped as they came up short and watched as the fireball reached skyward and the explosion caused the ground around them to tremble.

Nine Kavalian rebels had joined with them and they were sprinting through the darkness with ease, navigating the terrain easily since they knew anything with ten kilometers of the settlement like the back of their hands.

“They must have been carrying a huge amount of explosives!” Mican declared without pause. “No transport ship would cause that large of an explosion!”

“We must hurry!” Channa spoke as she began to move again.

“Channa... there could be vampire troops out there!” Mican snapped. “We can not fight vampire troops at night! They’ll take us down one at a time using the shadows!”

“Mican... do you think they would be moving back towards that explosion if any of them survived?” Channa barked. “They would be moving as fast as they could away from that in case it draws the attention of the Kavalians in the sector! They don’t know the ships are above us fighting! I thought I saw a body flying through the air to the northwest! Lycavorians are hard to kill! Perhaps he or she survived!”

“How do we know that?” Pasat spat as he stepped forward. “Channa... we are taking a huge risk! The Lycavorians can see in the dark far better than we can! They might mistake us for Coven troops! You said yourself that the Coven would tried to kill them! How do we know that is not what has happened?”

The pull was becoming too strong for Channa to ignore and she snarled viciously. “Then I will go alone and we risk only me!” She spat before turning and bursting into a run into the darkness heading northeast.

“Channa!” Mican shouted to no avail as Channa used her feline speed and agility to disappear almost immediately. “Fuck!” He whirled on Pasat. “Take half your squad and move around to the west Pasat!”

“Mican she...”

“Has she ever been wrong before?” Mican snapped.

Pasat blinked several times and then turned to the group following them. Channa had saved his life once and he would not forsake her. “First four with me! The rest of you stay with Mican!” He ordered.

Mican looked at Na’lia who was still watching the fire reach into the sky. “Na’lia?” Na’lia turned to him and lowered the portable scanner she held. “The composition of the explosion was concentrated Talorium Mican. From the force of the explosion and radius of the blast I'd estimate at least two thousand kilos of it." She said softly. "Whatever they are here for, it's not to hurt us. They came to destroy something with explosives!"

"Are you sure?" Mican asked.

Na'lia nodded. "Yes."

Mican took a deep breath and turned back to the darkness. "Let us find Channa before she steps into a shitstorm and hurts herself."

He took off at a fast trot followed by the others.

Dario! Brother where are you! Dario wake up anse you! Sorran's voice filled his head.

Dario groaned loudly as he opened his eyes and found himself staring at the night sky through the trees. Stop shouting! Dario snapped. You're hurting my head! Uhhhhhhh!

Dario! Resumar's voice broke in now filled with relief. Are you hurt? Where are you?

That... that depends on your definition of hurt. Dario answered as he slowly moved his head back and forth. When he felt no pain he lifted his head slightly and looked down to make sure he still had his arms and legs. He lifted his hands and only felt the painful ache of soreness as his arms followed. He wriggled his toes in his combat boots and then bent his legs slowly so that his knees were extended up and his feet were flat.

"Ok... ten fingers... ten toes." Dario croaked softly. "At least everything is still present."

Dario! Sorran's voice erupted in his head again.

"Damn it Brother! Stop shouting!" Dario snapped.

I'm not shouting fool! Sorran snarled back.

Dario can you see where you are? Resumar asked. Sorran nearly crushed us when he fell!

I see two moons! Dario replied. Does that count?

There is only one moon Dario! Athani's voice spoke. Resumar... Avi has got the short range sensors working again. He is four hundred meters to your northeast.

Dario... we're on our way!

"Great!" Dario spoke letting his hands drop to the ground once more. "I'll just sit here and rest then."

The Coven is still out there cousin! Resumar barked out. Be mindful of everything around you!

"The way I feel... dead might be better." Dario spoke with a soft chuckle.

I will show you dead when I get there idiot! You should have left me! Sorran declared but the worry in his voice was obvious.

Complain. Complain. Complain. Dario retorted.

Dario grunted when the weight pressed onto his chest and he blinked several times until he focused and saw the boot attached to the very long leg. His eyes followed that lean leg up to the very shapely hips and firm ass, the slim waist and large breasts and then into the most delicious blue eyes and full lips he had ever seen. Blue eyes with vertical slits like the cats he had seen on Earth. He saw the amazingly long raven black hair surrounding those eyes and sensuous lips and the near flawless tanned skin.

"Athani... you have blond hair right?" Dario spoke.

What? Yes... you know that!

"Then I'm looking at a beautiful angel and I must be dead." Dario spoke.

Resumar! Athani's voice erupted. Avi is detecting a dozen heat signatures closing on Dario! One is already on top of him!

Shit! Resumar's voice filled Dario's head.

"Who are you talking too?" The soft voice asked him as the large caliber projectile hand weapon lowered to point at his chest.

Dario smiled as the scent of apricots filled his nostrils. "The angel smells good too." Dario said.

"Tell me who you are talking too!" Channa barked as she leaned over and brought her handgun closer to his chest. "Who are you?"

Dario we are almost there! Resumar shouted.

Dario looked into those beautiful vertically slit blue eyes. "You know... it's not polite to pretend you are an angel." He spoke.

Channa's face became confused. "Are you stupid?" She asked the moonlight bathing the face of the man beneath her boot in a dim light. She could see the strong jaw and masculine cheekbones but the shadows hid the rest of his features. She knew he was a large man, easily the size of Mican, for he had made a slight impression in the ground where he had landed after she watched him fall through the trees.

"You smell really good!" Dario said once more.

Channa leaned over even more as she felt tingles in her body at the whisper of his voice. "Can you hear me?" She barked. "Who are you talking too? Tell me or I will shoot you in the chest and leave you here to die!"

"No." Dario said.

"No? No what?" Channa snapped.

Dario ignored the ache in his body and his hands flashed up. He grabbed the barrel of the weapon with his left hand, his long fingers wrapping around the weapon and twisting it to the side directing it away from him. His left hand snatched the front of the shirt the female wore and he pulled her down towards him. His green eyes changed and his wolf fangs burst from his gums as he snarled viciously.

"You won't shoot me!" He spat before lifting his right leg and using his knee to heave Channa off the ground above him and throw her over his head. He used the momentum of his throw to roll over on top of her and pull the weapon out of her hand which he promptly tossed to the side. He pinned Channa's hands to the ground and leaned over her face seeing her eyes go wide. "I told you it wasn't polite to point guns at people you don't know."

"Get off me!" Channa snarled baring her feline fangs.

"Care to tell me why you..."

Dario's head snapped back as Channa brought her tail whipping up and smashing into the side of his head. His grip on her hands loosened just enough that she pulled her left hand free and sent it driving upwards into his chest with all of her strength. This caused Dario to roll to the side of her and Channa instantly rolled away from him and leaped to her feet. She whirled and watched Dario stagger slightly to his feet holding his head where he tail had struck him. He turned wolf eyes on her in surprise. "You are Kavalian!" He gasped.

Channa didn't hesitate and snapped up with a front kick aimed for his head. Her five foot nine height and long legs gave her exceptional power and her constant training regime with Mican and Na'lia had made her a deadly fighter. She had killed over a dozen Kavalian troops with just her hand to hand abilities, using her speed and the superior acrobatic ability her tail gave to her. She had underestimated Dario's height in the dimness of the timber around them however and her boot slammed into his shoulder and stopped as if it was hitting a wall. She heard him grunt in pain as she faltered with her balance. Channa didn't hesitate and seamlessly went with the momentum of her action, turning in mid air and whipping her tail around to strike him again. She heard the satisfying thwap of her tail striking skin and she felt him stagger once more as she completed her spin in the air and landed on her feet. She immediately launched into another side kick that would have crushed the skull of her opponent if it had connected. This kick did not and two very strong hands caught her foot easily with speed she had never been witness to before. Dario glared at her down the length of her long leg.

"Nubou woman! I am not your enemy!" Dario shouted.

His words fell on deaf ears as Channa leaped off the ground even as he held her right leg and she sent her left leg whistling forward to connect with Dario's jaw. The power of her kick sent him stumbling back as he released her foot and she landed upright on both her feet once more.

"I will not allow you to hurt those I protect!" Channa barked as she stepped forward. "I will kill you Coven scum!"

"I am not part of the...!" Dario began to shout as he looked up, blood running from his mouth where Channa's kick had smashed into his jaw and lips.

Channa's tail whipped out once more as she leaped into another flying kick at his head. The tip of her tail slapped into Dario's face and she heard him grunt in pain just before her fist smashed into his cheek. Channa used her fists and her tail in conjunction, pummeling Dario with blow after blow. She had refined this skill to an art, her tail acting as a less powerful fist so it appeared she was a whirlwind of action. Channa had never felt so charged and powerful and she was caught up in this new feeling. Her limbs felt quicker, her blows more powerful, and her speed even more than what it normally was. Her blue eyes were wide with newfound energy and she did not know why. There was only one downside to her current fight.

Channa had never fought a Lycavorian that was bonded to a dragon.

“Enough of this tail sibfla!” Dario’s voice growled.

Channa’s eyes went wide when Dario caught one of her wrists and her tail in his two hands and she froze in mid motion. The next thing she knew, she was sailing through the night air where she landed with a loud grunt of pain and air escaping her lungs from the force of her landing. Dario wiped the back of his hand across his cheeks as he moved towards her. The force of her landing had stunned her and Channa blinked several times trying to focus once more as she pushed herself up on her elbows.

“Are you done?” Dario snapped as he moved to stand above her. “Listen... I just had my big ass tossed over three hundred meters through the air when my ship exploded. I came down through those trees hitting every nubous branch there was, and then I landed like a sack of limp sibfla! I am not in the mood to play games with you anymore! And I am not part of the High fucking Coven! And if you hit me with that tail one more time...”

Channa sprang off the ground and did just that, her tail snapping forward and crashing into Dario’s face with enough force to knock him back a few steps. This time however she darted to the side after hitting him, preparing for his retaliation. She did not see the Coven soldier unwrap the shadows from around his body and lift his weapon to shoot her in the back. Dario however, he did see the Coven soldier the moment the shadows began to shift behind her. His wolf eyes were much more attuned to the night and he moved forward with speed that stunned even Channa. Her blue eyes were wide as she blinked and then the huge man was upon her. She closed her eyes in recognition that she was about to get hit very hard but all she felt was a rush of air move past her and the sound of the collision of bodies. She spun gracefully and could only watch with unmitigated awe at what happen next.

“You Coven motherfucker!” Dario snarled with fury as he knocked the SA80 upwards and used his superior height to wrap his arm around the soldier’s head and shoulders while he twisted his body back to face Channa. “A dragon is dead because of you and your pals! My friends are dead!”

Channa heard a ghastly guttural sound as she watched the larger man use incredible strength to lift the lower body of the vampire who had appeared behind her in the air and then bring it smashing down as he held the man’s head in the crook of his arm. The snapping of the man’s neck and spine was grisly in its tenor. His legs twitched horribly several times and then the man dropped the body without regard on the ground. She could see his chest heaving in the dim light and suddenly she realized that this man was far more dangerous than she had first realized. He had moved with speed and strength she had never seen before. He had frozen her with some sort of power in the middle of a kick that would have snapped his neck and then he only tossed her a few meters. Her eyes lifted from the twisted body of the Coven troop and she gasped softly at what she saw. The moonlight caught those eyes just right and they were the most appetizing eyes she had ever seen. She could not determined their true color in the darkness even with the moonlight, but she could see the black ring around the light cornea and she could also see the man’s long flesh tearing fangs extending from his upper jaw. He hadn’t been lying to her. He was no vampire.

Channa saw Mican and Pasat emerged from the darkness with their weapons leveled at the man with unwavering arms. She opened her mouth to warn them but Mican spoke first.

“Do not move!” Mican spat. “There are a dozen weapons directed at you this very moment.”

Dario lifted his wolf eyes and looked at Mican. “You think?” He snapped sarcastically. “Is this beat on Dario day? Do I have nubous lae stamped on my head somewhere?!”

“Shut up!” Mican barked. “Channa are you alright? Did he hurt you?”

“Mican this is not...” Channa began to speak but this time Dario cut her off.

“You know... I’m really tired right now! I was almost blown up! I fell through a bunch of really hard tree branches. I’ve been slapped by her tail way too many times. I save her life... and now you are pointing weapons at me.” Dario spoke. He threw up his hands in disgust. “I can’t win cousin.”

“Do not move!” Pasat shouted as Na’lia came forward now and moved up next Channa.

“Channa... are you...” Na’lia looked at her face and saw her looking at the man oddly. “Channa?”

Whatever it was Channa decided; it was growing stronger by the millisecond. She could feel it pulsing through her like currents of electricity and it was energizing her body like before. It was like a blanket of power and warmth that was wrapping around her, protecting her and feeding her energy. The only problem with that was that Channa also felt it coming from the man in front of them. And it was staggering in its power.

Her eyes went wide and she looked at Mican. "Mican put your weapons down!" She barked. "Do it now! Quickly!"

Mican looked at her confused. "What?" He exclaimed. "Why?"

"Because if you don't... we will kill all of you and leave your corpses to rot." The new voice spoke from Mican's right side. He froze when he felt the cold steel barrel of a weapon press to his temple and he saw the slightly shorter but equally as wide Lycavorian step further from the shadows.

Pasat and the others began to shift their weapons and make ready to fight when the three piercing roars filled the darkness and three massive dragons dropped out of the night sky. The sounds of snapping and crushing trees that surrounded them echoed across the landscape as they landed in a triangle all around them, Sorran behind his bonded brother and Cemath behind Resumar. Gasps and yelps of surprise and fear echoed in the small clearing Dario and Channa's fight had brought them too and the Kavalian rebel troops staggered in all directions. They found there was really no where to turn as a dragon glared at them from every angle.

"I suggest you take my advice." Resumar spoke once more. "It has been a bitter night for us... and we would rather not have to kill those who are suppose to be our allies."

Mican didn't lower his weapon but he turned his eyes to look at Resumar and the head of the massive beast behind him, his arms shaking. He was superior in controlling his fear, but even Mican could feel the coldness of death grip the pit of his stomach with three of the beasts his kind were so terrified of.

"All... allies?" Mican spoke.

"You are Mican correct?" Resumar asked.

"How do you know that?" Mican demanded.

"The Avatar I have traveling with us heard it from the one you just left on VORTEX Cruiser 341." Resumar answered. "Put your weapons down... there are still High Coven troops like this one that survived the crashes of our ships. We do not need to fight them as well as each other."

"You... you are Resumar Leonidas?" Mican asked as his weapon began to come down slowly. "Son of King Leonidas."

Resumar nodded. "Yes. The man your friend here..." Resumar motioned to Channa. "...has been slapping around is my cousin Dario."

"She wasn't slapping me around." Dario snapped.

That does not appear to be the case my brother? Sorran spoke as he lowered his huge head next to Dario's shoulder and turned his eyes on him.

Dario turned his own head and looked at him. "Yeah... look at you? Big old knot on your head! Scales all busted up! You ain't looking so rosy either! I just got tossed three hundred meters across the surface of this planet and..."

Channa watched them converse back and forth with eyes of wonder. The head of the dragon alone looked as if it could swallow the man whole, but yet he stood there talking to the dragon as casually as one would a family member. She could not hear the dragon's end of the conversation, but it was obviously a lively one no doubt. Channa felt the presence of someone close to her and she turned her head quickly to come face to snout with the rather large dragon only one meter away. Her gasp of surprise drew the attention of Mican and the others.

"Channa!" Mican barked reaching for Na'lia instinctively to protect her. "Channa get back!"

Mirra moved her head closer to Channa; her amethyst colored eyes wide and unblinking as everything she had felt for two weeks came crashing to the forefront once more. The reasons she felt she needed to come on this mission. The reason that she choose to ride with Cemath and not Sorran, who she had taken quite the liking too according to Athani Little One. This was the reason standing before her with raven black hair and dazzling blue feline like eyes.

You can feel me can't you? Mirra asked gently within Mindvoice. You can hear my words yes?

Channa's eyes grew enormous then as the soft tone of the female voice echoed in her head. Amazingly it didn't frighten her... it soothed her more than anything else she had ever felt. Channa found herself nodding her head quickly at the question that voice had asked her and she sensed Mirra move even closer. Once more Channa ignored Mican's shout of alarm and that voice filled her head once more.

My... my name is Mirra. Touch me please.

Channa did so without a moment's hesitation, placing her palm flat on Mirra's snout. Na'lia, Mican and the other Kavalian troops all gasped in stunned shock as the light blue color psychic shield activated at the tips of Channa's fingers and began to spread back up her arm and around Mirra's massive head and snout and then down her long neck and across her lean muscular body until it ended at the very tip of her tail. By now it had engulfed Channa's entire body as well and she felt a whirlwind of memories and experiences race through her, places she had never been, people she had never seen. Wondrous places with towering mountains and lush forests, blue green oceans and white sandy beaches. Mirra's amethyst colored eyes opened slowly and she stared at Channa.

Destiny has brought us together my Bonded Sister. She spoke with giddy happiness in her words. And I am so very happy to finally meet you. May... may I hear your voice Channa my Bonded Sister?

"You know my name?" Channa gasped.

Mirra nodded her massive head. I know many things about you now. Just as you know many things about me. You are strong and willful. Speak with your mind sister. It will come easily to you now.

I don't know... Channa's eyes flew open when she began to answer without even using her mouth. She looked at Mirra with unabashed glee. I... I spoke with my thoughts! She exclaimed.

Mirra nodded. And we will do so much more.

Channa turned to the man and women who she regarded as brother and sister and she saw Na'lia with tears in her eyes and her hands over her mouth. Mican looked utterly stunned as she moved closer to Mirra and lifted her hands to brush her smooth scales.

"Mican! Na'lia!" She exclaimed now. "This is... this is Mirra! She is what I have been feeling all along!" Channa declared. "It has been her all this time!" Channa turned her head back and placed her small hands on either side of Mirra's massive snout. "My... my Bonded Sister!"

IRARUZU

"...say again?" The Puma Bane Commando Leader spoke as he pressed his finger into the curve of his slanted ear.

They were holding position four hundred meters away from the Drow estate waiting for the explosive traps to be tripped so that they could move forward and confirm that the two females who had escaped the store were dead. The soft whimpers of humiliation and pain still filtered to his ears from the two Drow females his men had brought with them. His men were growing tired with them, both of them beaten and raped more times than he cared to keep count.

"Major... a Bontawillian KJU21 Corvette landed at the spaceport minutes ago." The voice of the five member team he had left in the city reported.

"Why is this of interest to me?" The Major snapped.

"Not the ship sir... who exited the ship." The voice answered. "Senior Polemarch Walter Carson."

The Major's eyes grew wide. "The senior enlisted man in the entire Union? Here on Iraruzu! You must be mistaken!" He spat.

"No sir! I checked with our data files three times." The man answered calmly. "Two Elven Dragons from a unit assigned to Earth and an older Drow female also left the ship with him. They are just now departing the spaceport facilities and moving into the city."

"Why would the senior Enlisted man in the entire Union military be here? In a civilian ship no less." The Kavalian Major asked no one in particular.

"Events are still very confused here sir! Many people are still running around and looting the store! Others are just milling about in shock."

"Extend the simulated Deutrino field around the city as well." The Major ordered immediately. "His presence here is not a coincidence! It can't be! We are still waiting for these two females to show themselves and can not leave until we know they are dead. Destroy the Corvette with missiles from a secure location and then kill this Polemarch when he returns to investigate."

"As you order sir!" The voice answered.

“Major!” Another voice barked from his left and he turned to see the stationary guard pointing back towards the house. He could see the three remaining members of the Puma Bane team that had hit the Drow store in the city running across the open area towards them.

“Damn this can’t be good!” He spoke getting to his feet as the three men trotted up.

“Major!” The one who had been stabbed in the face by Lu’ria’s blade was first to speak.

“Why are you here Kamal?” The Major demanded. “You were suppose to insure they were dead before leaving the estate!”

“They did not enter the estate sir!” The assassin answered. “We discovered a hidden control room of sorts near the main entrance. Inside we found cameras and monitoring equipment. One of the cameras was directed on this location! They knew you were here!”

“Fuck!” The Puma Bane Leader snarled. “Where did they go?”

“They appear to have loaded several packs and then moved above ground through an escape hatch of sorts. It came out on the far side of the estate five hundred meters inside the timber. We returned rather than follow them.”

“They are on foot?” The Major asked.

“Yes sir.”

“They will try and get out from under the Deutrino Field!” The Major spat. “We can’t allow them to make their way into the mountains or we will lose them for sure.”

“Major... one of them is a human female.” The man spoke.

“Yes... a human female who has lived among the Drow for at least two to three years! She will be in excellent physical condition and extremely intelligent if she is a member of the Krypteria! She will also know how to kill our men! Take two more men with you and follow them! Pick up their trail before it becomes cold and...”

“I will find them Major.” The voice spoke from behind them.

The Major turned to see the tall young man come forward from behind two other commandos. His dark blond hair was matted with sweat and the camouflage paint decorating his face gave him a disturbing look, but there was no mistaking whose son this was.

“Leruk... your father entrusted you to me.” The Major spoke.

The young man nodded. His skin was deeply tanned with no trace of hair so like the Kavalian commandos that stood around him. He wore similar body armor and carried identical weapons, but he was definitely not Kavalian. “Yes he did.” The young man spoke. “He expects us to accomplish our mission as well. Making sure I am not put in danger was not part of that mission.”

“Leruk... you are the second son of Marshall Pusintin! You...”

“I am a Puma Bane Commando am I not?” The young man asked. “I have completed all the training just as these men have. I have been on four operations with your unit before this one. I am very capable Major. And I’m the only one among us who has the ability and advanced enough skill to track them by their scent. An ability my father taught me quite well.”

The Major met Leruk’s eyes for a moment before making his decision. “Kamal... take Leruk with you. I will remain here until I know this Carson person is dead and then I will follow with the rest of our force. Our secondary team is waiting at the rally point. If you need assistance contact them.”

“I will not need them sir.”

“If you do... do not hesitate to call them.” He spoke. “They are a hundred strong and they arrived only yesterday so they are fresh. Do nothing stupid Kamal... we have already lost more than we were supposed to lose on this mission. I hope the other teams fared better than we have. Six dead and five wounded. Against elves!” The Major shook his head. “I do not want to lose anymore.”

Kamal nodded. “As you order sir.”

Walter and Daba moved along the main street of the city. It had no official name but was the main port city and was simply called Iraruzu Center. The two Dragoons walked behind them, their eyes and ears alert for anything. All of them wore civilian clothes so as not to draw attention to themselves, but even still whoever they came across as they walked made it a point to move away quickly, all of them muttering under their breath and looking at Daba. Walter's hand unconsciously caressed his right leg where his Nehtes rested in its thigh holster. He carried a standard P190A3, since these weapons were common finds out in The Wilds now. It was one of the very few weapons of war that Martin and Deia had allowed to be exported to allied worlds for the simple reason it was extremely reliable and rugged. They knew of course that the designs would have made their way to the Black Market eventually and they wanted to insure their allies had such weapons to defend themselves if need be. Over the course of the last few years however, many of them were turning up on the Black Market because of lost equipment caches or Black Marketers who had gotten their hands on several shipments of the weapon. While they had been seized and dealt with severely, they had already sold the weapons by the time they had been caught and now forged copies of the real weapon were turning up all over The Wilds. The real P190A3 was now considered a status of wealth and skill in The Wilds. Walter also wore a Limian Hand Blaster that fired hardened darts that carried a small explosive charge in the tip of the round. The charge was powerful enough to blow a half credit sized hole in the target causing massive bleeding and pain. He carried the weapon because it reminded him of the ancient Earth weapon he had grown fond of as a young man, the M1911 .45 caliber automatic.

Daba carried a K14 secured in a holster on her side under the long cape she wore, plus her dual Shakur fighting knives. They were a gift from Aihola when she became a Senator and she treasured them. The two Dragoons carried an assortment of weapons but Walter knew they were out of place here almost immediately. All of them moved with practiced grace and natural confidence. And there were very few elven mercenaries or pirates. The elves were just too noble a race to resort to such a life.

Walter finally stopped on the street outside what appeared to be some sort of small general store and he turned to look at Daba. "Something isn't right." He spoke to her.

Daba nodded as she looked around and then back to him. "I agree." She said softly. "And whatever it is... it has to do with me. They... the people are avoiding me like I have Acamarian Plaque."

Walter reached up and tapped his right ear. "Ceneia?"

"We're here Walter." She answered from the Corvette.

"Have you pulled up an overview of the city yet?" He asked. "It's bigger than we first thought."

"According to Krypteria records... the Drow front operation should be straight on the main street you are now on. It is approximately a hundred meters across from the large ten story structure on the left. It is the tallest building in the area. That is the main Lodge for visitors to this dreary place it appears."

Walter turned and spied the ten story building. He estimated it was three quarters of a kilometer away and he nodded. "Very well. I see it."

"Walter... be mindful. There is a lot of chatter on the radio frequencies about some sort of assassination at a store in the vicinity." Ceneia said. "I can't make heads or tails of what the idiots are saying, it's all very random, but I can tell you that something has just occurred that has got the population stirred up quite a bit."

"Yes..." Daba broke in touching her ear implant. "We are seeing it on the streets as well ussta cryso. They are treating me as if I have a disease of some sort."

"You Mistress?" Ceneia's voice answered.

"Yes... they are avoiding me." Daba spoke. "And going to great lengths to do so I might add."

"Walter... I don't like this." Ceneia said quickly. "Given what Majeir felt and now this? It smells like a trap."

Majeir... can you sense Lu'ria nearby? Walter asked within Mindvoice. He left their conversation open so that Daba and Ceneia would be able to hear and speak as well.

Not nearby no. I can feel her... but she is heavily shielded Walter and this is preventing me from touching her. I wish to take to the sky. I can find her quickly this way. Majeir told him.

Walter shook his head. Not yet. We don't know what is going on Majeir and having you take to the skies from the spaceport would announce to everyone that there is a dragon on this world. The Drow's cover would be blown wide open.

Walter... her shields have a... they...

Walter looked at Daba when he answered. They what?

They are far more powerful shields than she should have. Majeir told him. It is almost as if someone is reinforcing her natural shields for her and they are doing it subconsciously. Someone with... Walter it is the same level of power I have felt whenever I go to visit Syrilth and Androcles or his father is there to see the Elder Council. Daba this... this is...

Another sign that what Lu'ria has felt all this time is true. Daba spoke softly.

Yes. Majeir answered.

Let's get to the store they are using and go from there. Walter spoke. And do so quickly. Ceneia... keep your eyes open and let us know if you pick up anything unusual.

Affirmative.

Walter turned to Daba. "Let's get moving." He said. "The longer we stay here the more this stinks like a trap just as Ceneia said."

WESTERN MOUNTAINS FORTY-SEVEN KILOMETERS NORTHWEST OF CITY

Lu'ria lowered the small pair of macrobinoculars and looked at Jennifer who laid next to her. "See them?" She asked.

Jennifer nodded not taking her own long glasses from her eyes. "Six of them." She stated. "Roughly five clicks behind us. Moving quickly but not overly fast. They are being careful. They should not be able to follow us Lu'ria. How are they still tracking us?"

Lu'ria nodded and lifted her glasses again to focus in on Kamal and the five others with him. "The one in the front. He is not Kavalian."

Jennifer focused her glasses on the tall figure moving easily through the timber. He was not as large as the Kavalians though he conversed with them easily and they appeared to take his directions without question. Jennifer lowered her glasses. "A Lycavorian?" She gasped.

Lu'ria nodded as she watched them in her view. "Not part of the Union." She said. "But yes, he is a Lycavorian. He wears their uniform, carries their weapons and they are taking his orders without question. That is how they are following us."

"Our scents?" Jennifer exclaimed.

Lu'ria nodded. "Kavalians do not have as acute a sense of smell as Lycavorians. Whoever this man is, he is helping them willingly and must be someone of importance if they follow his directions and consult with him."

"If he can track us by our scent we will never lose them." Jennifer spoke quickly. She looked at Lu'ria. "They will run us into the ground Lu'ria."

Lu'ria shook her head. "The Matron Mother took me up here to hunt for several days. There is a stream two clicks further north from here. Along the bank are Hadarian Tulip Buds." She saw Jennifer's eyes fill with realization. "Yes... we can spread the buds all over our clothes and keep enough with us to continue doing this so that their bitter smell masks our scent. We will be ok until help arrives. Come."

"NO!!!"

Daba's cry shattered the chatter of the half dozen scavengers that were in the Drow store looting the shelves and manhandling the bodies of the dead. All of them had been stripped of their boots and half of their clothes, the many shelves of herbs and ointments now scattered all over the floor of the large store.

It was when her eyes fell upon the half naked body of her dear friend Vlonjra that Daba, Matron Mother of the Drow Family and Clan Dareitara, Senator on the Earth Council, went totally off the deep end and lost all control. Moving with all of her inbred elven speed Daba snatched her dual knives from her belt and fell upon the luckless Limian male before he ever knew what happened. Two vicious slashes and a gurgling sound filled the air as his head was nearly sliced clean off when Daba ripped both blades down either side of his neck. Moving with the fury of a Hurricane, the Limian female died next as Daba plunged her blades into the woman's chest as she turned to run. Two Evolli males, obviously leftovers from the war with the Union, began to unlimber their weapons. They were incredibly slow in their efforts and Daba had buried her blades in the neck of one even as a P190 blew apart the silence in the store and the second Evolli's head splashed yellow blood onto the wall behind him as the Dragoon soldier next to Walter had brought his weapon up and fired with barely a pause.

The Icalro male and female were trying to back peddle from the lethal whirlwind of death that Daba had become and bring their sidearms up to target her. The male's eyes went wide when he saw the long shaft and broadhead of the Nehtes burst from his neck just below his jaw. He died without seeing Daba spin in midair and bury one of her blades in the oval skull of the Icalro female just above her eyes. Walter ripped his Nehtes free of the Icalro male's shredded throat and kicked him forward with a heavy boot, his own face a mask of disbelief and rage. He turned as Daba dropped her blades and fell beside her friend on the floor of the store, weeping uncontrollably as she reached out with shaking hands. She ignored the insects that were buzzing around Vlonjra's bloody skull, ignored the bits of her scalp and hair that fell away when she lifted her ever so gently off the floor and Daba dropped her head to Vlonjra's chest and let out a wail of sorrow that would have woken the dead.

Walter turned to the two Dragoons, the one having fired his weapon being Hval. "Hval... check the others! Olar... watch the entrance!"

Walter kept his Nehtes extended for quick use as he let his eyes move around the inside of the store. There was blood everywhere on the floor, the bodies of six Drow crumpled in death, all of them having been shot at least a dozen times, including the two females. The male Drow closest to the door was perforated with holes, half his head gone and his mid section looking as if someone had used him for target practice. The fingers on his bloody hands were all broken from where someone obviously smashed them to get the weapon out of his dead hands. As his eyes scanned the interior he noticed the smashed wall behind the counter to the left and he moved quickly to the counter, vaulting it on one bound. He slowly drew his K12 as he let his Nehtes lead his body into the darkness of the tunnel. He squatted and stopped, letting his eyes change and then taking note of the rail tunnel and dimly lit section of track.

"Holy One!" Hval spoke moving up to the counter.

Walter stood back up and turned to looked at the Dragoon. "Hval?"

Hval shook his head slowly. "None of them survived Holy One." He spoke softly. "Four appear to have been caught completely off guard, the last two at least died fighting." He pointed to the front. "From the directions of the projectile strikes, they assaulted from the front door. Rigor is only just now setting in, this did not happen long ago. An hour... two at most."

Walter nodded his head as he cleared the counter once more in a single leap Hval saw this and watched with keen eyes. Nearly thirty-one hundred years old and he didn't look a day over forty-five. The last surviving Spartan to have fought with his former King at Thermopylae, and next to that King's son who he now served with devotion and honor, he was perhaps the most recognizable face within the Union. His history was taught in the schools on Apo Prime, Earth, and every planet in the Union just about. He was in better physical shape now than he had been in nearly a thousand years, for the moment Martin had named him Senior Polemarch of the entire Union Ground Army, Walter's life had begun once more.

Walter moved quickly to where Dana wept softly now. He didn't bend over but instead placed his hand gently on her shoulder. "Daba?" He said seeing her head come up. "Daba... I need your skills now. Tell me what happened here."

Daba lowered Vlonjra's body reverently to the floor and wiped the tears from her eyes. She folded her friend's hands across her chest and touched her fingers to Daba's open amber eyes. Gently she closed her eyelids and stroked her cheek one more time before slowly getting to her feet. She turned to Walter and met his eyes taking a deep breath. "Forgive me." She whispered.

Hval was the one to answer and he reached out to squeeze her arm. "You have nothing to apologize for Matron Mother. You acted as any of us would have."

Walter nodded. "Hval is right." He said. "Right now however... I can smell over a hundred scents, mixed in with the herbs and ointments that are now scattered over the floor; I can't pick out any individual one."

Daba nodded and allowed her eyes to sweep the room quickly. She stepped away from the two men, bending down to pick up her blades as she looked toward the entrance. "Seven of them." She spoke. "Two broke towards the counter, the other five stood here.” She said moving to one spot in the floor that was covered in blood.

“Hval?” Walter spoke and the Dragoon pulled the small hand sensor from a pouch on his combat harness and moved up next to her squatting by a large portion of the blood pools and holding the sensor out.

Daba turned her head and looked around. “Two fell.” She said pointing to blood pools larger than the others and squatting next to Hval. “Another injured badly but living.”

Hval looked at her. “How can you tell that Matron Mother?” He gasped.

Daba pointed to the blood pools on the floor. “The differences and color of the texture of blood.” She answered him. “Lethal wounds produce dark red blood that is thick and consistent. Severe wounds... but those that aren’t life threatening... they produce a lighter color blood with less consistency and less thickness like this.” She said pointing.

The sensor in Hval’s hand beeped softly and he looked at it with wide eyes. He stood up quickly, Walter looking at him. “Hval?” Walter asked.

“Kavalian blood.” He spoke.

Walter and Daba both stepped closer to him. “Kavalian blood?” Walter snapped. “Are you sure?”

Hval twisted the sensor in his hand. “The scanner is.” He replied. “We should...”

“Walter!” Ceneia’s voice broke through on the COM.

Water lifted a finger to his ear and activated his implant. “Ceneia we are rather busy here. There are no survivors inside the store, but it appears Lu’ria and another made it out. We...”

“Walter shut up and get back to the ship!” Ceneia barked. “Something has happened on Earth!”

Walter looked at Daba as his blood went cold. “What has happened?”

“I’m watching a garbled transmission from Prime Minister Deia recorded about thirty minutes ago. I tapped into the frequency of one of the spaceport Netnews channels. It’s an automated report that keeps repeating. The Deutrino field has somehow extended over the city itself. Walter... Walter there has been a series of coordinated terrorist assaults made by High Coven Commando units on Earth.” Ceneia’s voice sounded tense and anxious. “It’s says that Zarah Leonidas was... Saoi sibfla!”

“Ceneia!” Walter barked.

“Majeir! Unamal! Get off the ship! Get off the ship now!” Ceneia’s voice screamed into his implant.

The explosion caused Walter to wince and then they felt the ground shudder beneath them. Olar rushed into the building.

“Holy One! The Spaceport!” He shouted. “Our ship!”

“Ceneia!” Walter screamed. “Ceneia answer me!”

“Holy One!” Daba snapped. “We must go back!” She exclaimed. “I will not lose her!”

Walter looked at Hval. “Incendiary Charges!” He popped.

Hval yanked his small pack from his shoulders and practically tore open the top before yanking out three oversized grenades. “Plasma grenades!” He announced.

Walter snatched one. “Good enough!” He barked. “Burn it! Burn it all! We won’t leave them for the scavengers on this foul world to have!” He twisted the charging timer on the top of his grenade and tossed it over the counter into the opening of the tunnel he had viewed. Hval tossed one of the grenades to Daba as he twisted the timer on his grenade and tossed it behind the main counter. Daba repeated the action a third time and looked at the body of Vlonjra.

“You rest with the King’s father now my dearest friend.” She spoke softly before rolling the grenade onto the floor next to her body. “Watch over us and I will sing your name into the future.”

“Go! Go!” Walter snapped. “Back to the spaceport!”

The Kavalian Gunner lowered his rocket launcher after putting the third and final rocket into the now burning ship through the top of the spaceport bay ceiling. He felt the pat on his shoulder and turned.

“Excellent shooting Kao!” His squad officer spoke.

“Nothing will live through that sir.” Koa answered.

The officer nodded. “Indeed.” He answered.

“Now what sir?”

The officer grinned as he looked up the street where they could see hundreds of others scrambling to get out of the way of each other and to avoid any secondary explosions that might occur.

“Now we wait for the old Lycavorian and Drow bitch to show themselves and then we kill them.” The Kavalian said. “How many rockets do you have left?”

“Two.”

“Load one... prep the other.” The officer ordered. “We may need to take out some of these ridiculous scum to actually kill this Polemarch.”

Walter grabbed Daba’s arm as they made their way down the street, pushing aside civilians that were rushing in the other direction.

“Hval! Olar!” Walter snapped bringing the two Dragoons up short.

“Holy One we...” Daba’s face was filled with sincere concern and dread.

Ceneia? Walter reached out within Mindvoice. Majeir?

We live Walter. Majeir’s voice answer almost immediately.

Walter could see the massive relief on Daba’s face. Where are you?

Ceneia ussta cryso! Daba exclaimed.

I am alright Mistress! Ceneia answered immediately. A little cooked from the rush of flames but ok.

Majeir and I made it off the ship! Ceneia said. Unamal was not so lucky! We’re hiding in a storage room off the west side of the hanger itself. It’s beneath the overhang of the ceiling and they can’t see us.

Who can’t see you? Walter demanded.

Kavaliens Walter! Ceneia answered. A rocket team from the building next to our hanger. It was looking directly down into the bay. They fired three rockets. The ship is wasted.

Nubou the ship! Walter exclaimed. Kavaliens attacked the Drow in their store. They killed everyone except Lu’ria and another female it appears. They made it out through a hidden rail tunnel.

Walter... why are the Kavaliens killing the Drow and attacking us? Majeir asked.

Ceneia you said something about Deia. Walter asked.

We were watching it when the Kavaliens attacked. Several High Coven Commando Teams attacked different sites on Earth. Zarah... Zarah Leonidas was raped and nearly beaten to death. The Prime Minister was beginning to speak about Prince Androcles but then the rockets hit. Ceneia replied quickly. It was a recorded transmission Walter. The damn Deutrino field has extended over the entire city now. This was a fucking trap! The whole thing was a trap!

Ceneia... stay calm damn it! Walter barked out. Majeir... can you get airborne?

Yes. Unamal... Unamal was kind enough to put my saddle on while we waited for you. I will take Ceneia and burn them for what they have done! Majeir answered with heat in her tone.

No! Walter almost yelled. He knew Majeir to be strong willed and very independent. He had watched her grow from a hatchling and the day he had saved her from the White Skinned cannibals in that Mountain in North America. He had watched her on the oceanside cliff as Martin asked her to decide the fate of Maruad. And more horrible a death he could not think of at the moment. Through the years she had become supremely intelligent and having an older sister who sat on the Dragon Council, having a brother who was bonded to two of the most famous female elves on Earth, and having unfettered access to the Royal family and the Bonded dragons who were part of their family made Majeir very confident and skilled. She had trained for days with Elynth and Jeth and Tharua her second older sister. All of the children of Torma and Isheeni. She was just as much a part of their family as they considered Walter to be even though he and Majeir were not bonded. She was also exceptionally passionate about things and very defensive of those she loved and cared for. Majeir... they will know where Lu’ria is. You can’t kill them!

Lu’ria! Majeir exclaimed. If they have harmed her Walter, by all that I hold dear, I will burn and tear my way to the very heart of the Kavalian homeworld and I will take my fury and vengeance on them!

Daba looked at Walter with wide amber eyes when she heard this but he didn’t answer as he shook his head. If you get airborne... can you find her quickly?

Within a few hours at most. Majeir answered confidently. Having Androcles reinforcing her shields also makes it easy to track her. His signature is so clear and powerful and when combined with hers it is like a beacon.

I would assume the rail tunnel we found leads back to the Drow estate outside the city. That will be the first place we look. Walter spoke.

What about this rocket team? Ceneia asked quickly.

Walter looked at Daba. Leave them to Daba and I. Where were they again?

The five story building to the east of our bay. It appears decrepit and almost mossy green in color.

Ceneia answered. Walter how will we know when you have succeeded.

Walter met Daba's eyes and she watched his wolf eyes once more take shape and narrow. His wolf fangs slowly extended from his gums and Daba felt a shiver of fear course through her. He had known the Holy One for many years, and at this moment she was more afraid of him than at any time in her life.

You'll know when we discover if Kavalians can fly! Walter Carson snarled.

*Now that...!!! Majeir announced loudly. That is my Walter!!!

I can tell you that a tough-minded optimism is best.

The future is not shaped by people who don't really believe in the future.

Men and women of vitality and courage have always been prepared to bet their futures, even their lives, on ventures of unknown outcome Androcles.

If they had all looked before they leaped, we would still be crouched in caves sketching animal pictures on the wall.

That was always your father's way, and though you do not wish to admit it, it is your way as well my boy.

The decision is now yours Androcles Leonidas.

I suspect no matter what, you will do your father proud

-The Feravomir to Androcles-

-Three days before the start of the Kavalian Wars-

-Earth Year 2576-

-Recorded by Dilaen Roan-

-Narrator-

-Personal Journals of Androcles Leonidas-

CHAPTER FORTY-ONE

RITAAH

PILLAR OF FAITH

Antell gripped the arms of his command chair as the FAITH executed an amazingly tight turn for a ship her size. It was habit for him, even though he could barely feel his ship turning, left over from his days as an AUTUMN MOON Commander. The attack frigate was perhaps the most maneuverable ship he had ever commanded and you could feel each and every turn and increase in speed.

“Port and starboard batteries reinforce!” Antell barked as the FAITH settled on a more level course. “Reload torpedo launchers! All Type One turrets to stand by, Type Two's to manual control! Status of Mark22Bs?”

“Thirteen seconds to full reload Captain!” The answer came immediately.

Antell stood up from his chair. “Damage status?”

“Moderate damage to our ventral hull!” His XO reported from the console to the left. “Minor cracks in the plasma conduit seals running the aft quarter of decks fourteen and fifteen. Damage crews are already repairing them! Shields are down to fifty-three percent but they are recharging quickly! No hull breaches sir! That Dragon Armor coating our hull is a gift from the gods! We caught them flatfooted sir!”

Antell nodded. “That we did. Status of FREEDOM’S VOICE and the GREATSOUL?” Antell barked.

“FREEDOM’S VOICE took heavy damage to her starboard quarter, but she gave more than she got! She’s leaking plasma in two locations but it’s nothing serious. Her shields are down to thirty-eight percent and minor buckling to her forward compartment. Her shields are recharging faster than ours though!”

Antell grinned. “The Coven is making their ships tougher nowadays.” He spoke. “The Kavalians?”

“The GREATSOUL is dead in space sir!” His XO announced. “Massive damage to her structural integrity fields and engines! Shields are gone! Sensors are detecting over a dozen hull breaches including all three of her landing bays!” He turned and looked at Antell. “That must be why she got no fighters off! The Mark22s and Type Ones carved her up good sir! Our Point Defense turrets only added to the damage.”

“Power readings?” Antell asked.

“Minimal sir!” The XO replied. “Their power core is offline and readings indicate its fluxuating wildly. If scans are accurate... they have massive casualties. I don’t know if she will even stay together. Sensors are reading massive stress fractures to her hull in three different locations!”

“Too bad for them.” Antell spoke. “They chose the wrong ships to pick a fight with. What about the rest of the Kavalian ships?” Antell asked moving to a console and looking over the shoulder of the operator.

“The Insurgent ships and our fighters mopped them up quickly Captain.” His XO told him. “I don’t think they’ve had much experience in combined forces action sir. CAG reports they couldn’t respond quickly enough to their actions. Our fighters were working with the Coven fighters that launched and taking directions from the second BLOOD REVERENCE. And they were pounding the sibfla out of them!”

Antell couldn’t help but smile. “Interesting XO. Combined Forces Control gave them fits. I thought the Coven used CFC just as much as we did, the Kavalians should be used to it, so that’s a bit of information we didn’t know.” He spoke. “Let’s file that for further review XO, we might need it in the future.”

“Aye sir!”

“Get me Maros on the VOICE.” Antell ordered.

“Stand by!” The COM officer declared. It only took a few moments. “Captain Maros online sir.”

Antell turned to his holodisc on the bridge as Maros’s image appeared and became clear. “Captain Maros.”

“Captain Antell!” Maros spoke with a grin. “We are reading massive damage to the Kav ship! We caught them by surprise with our maneuver!”

Antell nodded in agreement. “Your damage sir?” Antell asked. As far as Antell was concerned these Coven ships were now his best friends, and Antell was known for looking out for his friends.

“Nothing we can not repair quickly. My damage control teams are already working on it. Twenty of my gun crew personnel were injured, but I have no deaths that I’m aware of right now.” Maros spoke his face showing the thanks of the question without actually speaking it. One commander to the next with respect. “You?”

Antell nodded. “About the same. Colonel Vonis?”

“He should already be on the surface by now.” Maros spoke. “I would imagine he will link up with his nephew shortly. One of us will hear from him when he does. Your Colonel Vonis does not strike me as one to stay out of the mix so to speak.”

Antell nodded with a smile. “No... I don’t imagine he is. Captain Maros, I extend an invitation to you and your senior officers to meet with me here on the FAITH. I can send a transport for you if needed. It appears we are now allies, and that makes me feel a whole lot better.”

“I would be honored to accept Captain.” Maros replied immediately. He had no intention of allowing this opportunity to slip away. Lucia had set the Insurgency on this path and Maros was going to see her wish fulfilled.

“The Kavalians got a message off just before we attacked. We don’t know what it was they were able to tell their command, but we should assume the worse. We should expect some sort of response within a day or so I would think. I suggest we put our heads together and plan for that.” Antell spoke.

Maros nodded. “Agreed. I will come over in a LRR. Say one hour?”

Antell nodded. "I'll be waiting." He answered. "FAITH is clear." Antell waited for the transmission to end before turning to his XO. "Let's get our fighters recovered and rearmed and have them on standby. And get the damn Shroud back up so we don't have our mida hanging out here!"

His XO nodded. "Yes sir!"

The sun was beginning its climb into the sky over Ritaah and it found all of them gathered around the rear ramp of Resumar's crashed STRIKER. The Lycavorian troops and Kavalian rebels were mixed together, all of them pointing out into the surrounding timber in case the Coven troops who had escaped made some sort of attack against them. Mican sat next to Na'lia across from Resumar, Athani and Julie. Mirra rested on the ground inside that small perimeter, Channa sitting between her front forelegs lotus style. Cemath sat to Mirra's right facing her and Channa and he watched with some humor as Mirra kept dipping her huge head and rubbing the back of Channa's shoulder and head. She hadn't stopped asking questions and Mirra and Cemath were doing their level best to answer them all without overloading her with information.

Mican turned his eyes from Channa and settled them back on Resumar and Athani who sat very close to him and was looking at him intently with those blue/green eyes.

"The... the green one is your dragon?" Mican asked.

Resumar nodded his head with a smile. "We are bonded as Channa and Mirra now are. We do not consider them possessions... but yes... he is my Bonded Brother. His name is Cemath."

"How long have you and he...?" Na'lia asked softly.

"Since I was eight years old." Resumar answered.

"And they are speaking within this thing you call Mindvoice?" Mican asked. "You can hear them?"

Resumar nodded. "Yes. Channa is very inquisitive. She is asking them question after question." He said with a smile turning to look back at her. "She will learn quickly however. That is usually the case with those who are not bonded from childhood. They learn quickly from their bonded ones. She's very strong within Mindvoice. Stronger than I would have thought to be honest." He turned back to Mican. "I wanted to thank you for coming to our aide so quickly."

"Not fast enough it seems." Mican spoke. "The machine at the ship did not tell us right away. We could not arrive before all of this happened."

Resumar looked around at the condition of the STRIKER and nodded. "Yes... well I don't think it would have mattered much at all given the way things went down."

"Do you know how many of the Coven survived?" Na'lia asked.

"That is what Julie and Dario will try and determine while they are out there." Resumar answered.

"They know where this ship is Resumar Leonidas." Mican spoke. "Will they not try and gain entrance to it?"

Res shook his head. "Avi... the avatar that travels with us... he made sure to inform the avatar on the ship here what our intentions were, as well as the possibility that the Coven might attempt to gain entrance to the ship without us."

Na'lia smiled now. "You gave him a name." She spoke evenly. "Avi... short for avatar I take it?"

Resumar nodded with a smile. "It was something my father's pilot did when they first discovered City Ship 41 on Lycavore." He answered looking up into the back of the ship where Avi was taking inventory of the explosives. "He's developed his own unique personality since he came back with the ship."

"How is it that a female elf came to be inside Kavalian space?" Athani asked looking at Na'lia.

Na'lia met her eyes. "That is a story for another time." She answered unwilling to just announce how she and the others came to be among them. "Mican is my husband... we have been here for almost four years."

"We?" Resumar asked.

"There are ninety-six other elves that live among the Kavalians here." Na'lia answered. "We are doctors and scientists. Many of us have Kavalian husbands. Some... like me... have children with our husbands." She said looking at Mican with love and adoration.

Resumar looked at Na'lia intently, suddenly remembering what Andro had told him their cousin Anton and his Drow wife Cihera were working on and how it related to their mother and what was happening with Anja and even connected to Dysea and Normya.

“So you are among the hundred or so elves that were ostensibly kidnapped from their transports within Union space and made to appear dead.” Resumar spoke calmly. His eyes went to Mican. “I take it you and your people did the kidnapping?”

“I will not...” Mican began to speak forcefully but Na'lia grabbed his arm and squeezed causing him to look at her. “Na'lia... I...”

“However we arrived here...” Na'lia began turning back to Resumar. “We remained here because it was our choice. Mican wanted our help in saving the biogenic clones from their built in cycle of death. We agreed once he explained to us what it was they wanted. We succeeded in this task and many of us chose to remain here willingly for we had found something to remain for.” Na'lia looked at Mican with those bright eyes. “I found love and so much more.” She turned back to Resumar. “I would not change anything that has happened in these past years and I will not allow it to be taken away from me. None of us will.”

Athani looked at Resumar and a small smile split her lips. She turned back to Na'lia. “As someone who found love and a future in the most unlikely of places Na'lia, you have no fears in losing what you have found. And you may tell the others this as well.”

“Your sister will be very happy.” Resumar stated.

Na'lia's head snapped around to look at him. “Sister!” She gasped. “Las'elh... she has...”

Resumar nodded. “She hasn't stopped looking for you. She never believed you died in the accident. She has been looking for you ever since. Right now she is with my mother and cousin working an angle of what is going on that seems to be all leading in one direction. I believe she has also found love. With my cousin and his Drow wife.”

“Drow?” Na'lia gasped.

“I don't know the whole story... but it appears from the last time I talked to my mother that is what was happening between them.” Resumar spoke. “We will need to pass on the information that you live. It will go a long way to easing the need to find you within your sister until such time as we can arrange it safely.” He looked at Mican. “And you will need to give us the names of those who you contacted that supplied you with the information you needed to kidnap them in the first place.”

“My name would be taboo in The Wilds then.” Mican spoke shaking his head.

“Your name would be taboo in The Wilds, but it won't matter because when we leave here all of you are coming with us.” Athani stated firmly. Athani looked at Mican and saw his eyes boring into her once more. He had been staring at her at different times since they had arrived back here and it was beginning to make her feel uncomfortable. True to her nature Athani decided to face this head on. “Why do you stare at me?” She asked. “You have been staring at me at different times since you came here. Why?”

Mican looked at Na'lia quickly before lowering his eyes. “Forgive me. I meant no offense.” He said. “I...”

Resumar came to his feet quickly then, his head coming up as he turned to the wood line. Athani looked at him oddly as she stood.

“Resumar?” She asked. “What... what is it?”

Uncle? Resumar reached out within Mindvoice as he felt the familiar tremors and MV resonance.

Resumar... it's been a long time my boy. Vonis's voice filled his head causing Athani to gasp in surprise.

Uncle... where are you?

I have two others with me Resumar. Vampires. Vonis's voice answered him immediately. I would prefer we did not get shot. I'd like to come in and we can compare notes.

Resumar stepped away from Athani. “Colonel Vonis coming in!” He shouted. “Hold fire! Colonel Vonis coming in!”

This pronouncement caused the Lycavorians to turn towards him surprised but they quickly lowered their weapons and urged their Kavalian counterparts to do the same. They all knew who Vonis was and none of them wanted to be the one to shoot and kill Queen Isabella's brother.

Mican and Na'lia came to their feet as well now as they saw three individuals unwrap the shadows from around their bodies as they left the tree line and trot quickly towards their small perimeter. Resumar moved quickly to greet his taller uncle as he entered the perimeter with the stunning young vampire female and surprisingly wide vampire soldier. Resumar knew right away they were both Purebloods like his uncle. Resumar and Vonis grasped forearms and he couldn't help but smile.

“Uncle!” He exclaimed with a smile. “To say this is a complete surprise would be beyond words!”

Vonis chuckled and squeezed Res’s thick arms. “Yes I would imagine it is.” He stated.

“Father didn’t...” Resumar started.

Vonis shook his head. “No! No one knows I’m here. Your mothers left me with the High Coven insurgents several months ago. That is where I have been.”

“Then you made contact with them?” Resumar asked remembering the Commando team that had attacked the Kavalian delegation on MJOLNIR’S HAND.

Vonis nodded. “You won’t believe me when I tell you who their leader is... but it is she who ordered them out here to watch over you. It appears she was right in sending us here. The Captain of your ship is a man of vision Res. He didn’t bat an eye when the insurgent ships with me offered their help.”

“Ships?” Resumar asked.

Vonis nodded again. “I haven’t made contact since we entered the atmosphere, but when we last saw them, the Kavalian ships were getting their asses handed to them by something I never thought I would witness in my lifetime. Union and Coven ships fighting as one unit.”

“I told Antell to get the FAITH out of the system.” Resumar spoke sternly.

Vonis nodded his head. “And that is exactly what they were doing. They were drawing the Kavalians into the outer system away from Ritaah. And kicking the sibfla out of them in the process!”

“Then she made it.” Resumar said softly.

Vonis nodded. “That is my conclusion as well. We’ll probably be hearing from one of them soon.” He looked up as Athani came up next to Resumar, Mican and Na’lia just behind her. Vonis looked at Athani with smiling dark eyes. “And this is the Athani Leonidas I have heard so much about these last months.” He spoke taking her hand and leaning over to kiss her knuckles. “Res... when are you and your brothers going to stop making so many waves in the things you do?”

Resumar laughed then and nodded his head. “We do have that tendency don’t we?” He said. “Athani... this is my Uncle Vonis. My mother Isabella’s brother.”

Athani smiled at him then. “Yes... I’ve heard much of you.” She stated.

Vonis chuckled once more. “Yes... all of it bad I’m sure. My elven wife Va’nimia is trying very hard to change my reputation around.”

“Actually... it was all very good.” Athani said.

“Really... then perhaps Va’nimia’s work is paying off.” He stated. He looked at Mican and held out his hand to the equally as tall Kavalian. “Colonel Vonis... Union Intelligence.”

Mican looked very surprised and hesitated for a moment before taking the hand. He had never had a vampire ask to shake his hand, and Vonis’s grip was firm and friendly. “I am Mican.” He said. “This is my wife Na’lia.”

Vonis bowed his head to her slightly, not batting an eye at this information and he turned too motion at the man and woman with him. “Lieutenant Commander Asharli and Senior Trooper Orthon. They are members of the insurgency as well.”

“Uncle... Uncle why are you here?” Resumar asked.

“Lucia Moran sent us out here to look out for you.” Vonis answered.

Resumar looked quickly to Athani and then back to Vonis. “Lucia Moran?” He gasped in shock.

Vonis nodded. “Trust me... I was just as surprised as you.” He stated. “But she is the leader of the Insurgency. They call her the General. I don’t know all the specifics, but she did not trust her mother and grandmother, she made me aware of this and then ordered her people out here to help in whatever way they could. We’ve been waiting for two days now and did not know you had even arrived until the FAITH lost her Shroud. You know that the Kavalian fleet that was here left just before we arrived?”

Resumar nodded. “Yes.”

“The other STRIKER? That was the explosion we detected as we were coming in?” Vonis asked.

Resumar nodded his head. “We knew they would attempt something. They hit us just as we landed. They killed my pilot and I had to detach the rear compartment to give us the edge to drive them off. They hit Dario’s STRIKER while they were still in the air the idiots! Killed the pilots and she dropped the last hundred or so feet. The crash broke open one of the explosive containers we brought and an electrical fire set it off.”

“Dario? Sorran?” Vonis asked quickly, the worry on his face evident and real.

“They survived. Barely. They are out now circling the area attempting to find out how many of the Coven troops survived and what direction they went in. Julie is with them and...” Resumar said.

“Julie?” Vonis asked.

Resumar shook his head. “Another long story.” He spoke. “They should be back soon. We’re going to move to the MV ship then. Avi has been in contact with that ship’s Avatar for a few hours now.”

Vonis nodded and looked around. “Well... you got three more under your command now.” He spoke. “Antell and Maros won’t come near the planet now... not with us here. They won’t want to draw attention to us and they will keep the Kavalians at bay as much as they are able.”

“We can talk to them once we get to the MV ship.” Resumar spoke.

“You were going to use Cemath and the other dragons to move the explosives from here to there weren’t you. That’s why you landed so far away?”

Resumar nodded. “We didn’t want to get too close until we knew where Mican and his people stood in the scheme of things. Those plans didn’t go very well.”

“Most plans never go right.” Vonis said.

“We’re not flying out of here in the STRIKERS, so I was going to get everyone to the MV ship and then contact Antell.” Resumar said. “We’ll have to go to plan B.”

Vonis grinned. “Plan B?”

“Uncle... I always have a Plan B.” Resumar spoke.

They turned as the hulking figure of Avi came down the steep ramp with a data pad in his hand. He marched right up to where Resumar stood and his eyes fell on Vonis.

-Colonel Vonis. None of our mission scenarios involved your presence. Interesting. You have a similar mission as we do?-

Vonis shook his head. “No. It just so happens that our paths have come together Avi.” He answered.

-Curious- He looked at Athani. –This is an example of chance I take it?-

Athani nodded. “Yes it is.” She said with a smile.

-Fascinating. I will need to study this more when we return to Earth- He replied holding out the data pad to Resumar. –I have finished my inventory Resumar Leonidas-

“Where do we stand Avi?” Resumar asked.

-With the destruction of STRIKER TWO we lack sufficient quantities of explosives to completely destroy the ship. We can cripple it... but...-

“It still allows others access to its technology with what’s left.” Resumar said.

Avi nodded. -Correct-

“You wish to destroy this ship?” Na’lia asked surprised. “But why?”

“Those are my father’s orders.” Resumar answered looking at her. “Destroy this ship so that it does not fall into the hands of the Coven or the Kavalians. The only problem now is that we don’t have enough explosives to do the job! We...”

Resumar stopped talking when Sorran’s massive form swept in from above the trees and he flared his wings quickly and landed to the excited and anxious chatter of the Kavalians on the perimeter. Julie was clinging tightly to Dario’s waist, her eyes wide and the moment they landed she leaped from Sorran’s back and landed on shaky legs. Dario was grinning as he dropped easily from the saddle while Sorran was still settling to the ground. He moved up and placed his hands on Sorran’s huge head as he lowered it to Dario’s shoulder.

Let me brief Resumar and I will tend to your scales brother. Dario spoke softly.

Sorran nodded his head as he looked at Dario. They had been bonded together for over fifteen years now, and though Sorran was six hundred and four years old, he felt younger and more vibrant now than at any point in his life. He had never envisioned himself bonded to a rider, yet their personalities matched seamlessly from that very first day. Their banter back and forth was famous among the Bonded Pairs, and while it may have seemed callous and uncaring to an outsider, there was nothing Sorran and Dario would not do for each other.

The Apricot salve. Sorran spoke. It smells good.

Dario chuckled and pounded Sorran on his thick scaled neck before turning to follow Julie. His eyes narrowed in surprise when he saw Colonel Vonis standing with Resumar, but Dario had grown up first with his father as part of Anja's Durcunusaan detail on Hadaria and other places she went. He had, more than any other cousin, interaction with all of the Leonidas children from a very young age. Some said this was the reason he was now bound to a dragon, that being with them and playing with them as children stimulated his MV abilities to higher levels than he might have normally achieved. Dario didn't care one way or the other. He loved his life and what he did.

Julie was looking at Vonis intently as she walked up, her eyes darting back and forth between him and Resumar. She knew who Vonis was; there was an extensive file on the son of Aikiro who was now considered a traitor of the highest sort by the High Coven. Julie had to admit, he didn't seem concerned about that in the least.

She turned her attention fully to Resumar when she stopped. "I estimate between fifteen and twenty of them survived Resumar." She spoke. "We swept the entire area for a kilometer around the ship with Dario in wolf form and I wrapped in the shadows. If any were watching us, we would have seen them."

Dario stepped up to the small group and smiled as Vonis held his hand out. "This is a surprise Colonel." He spoke.

Vonis nodded. "I imagine surprises are becoming common for you now that you are hanging out with your cousin more."

Dario nodded with a chortle. "That's the nubous truth." He said quickly. He turned to Resumar. "Julie believes they would have started for their preplanned rendezvous point Res." He said. "Four kilometers north of here and two kilometers west of the MV ship."

Mican's eyes grew a little wider. "That puts them very close to our settlement!" He stated. "Too close!"

Res met his eyes. "How many of your people are there?"

"Over three hundred. Including our daughter." Mican answered his voice holding the tenseness of a concerned parent.

Julie shook her head. "I don't believe they would try anything..." She said looking at Mican. "To be safe however... I recommend we move Mican's people from that settlement to the MV ship Resumar. I can not predict what they will do now and better to move them during the day. They would be safer in the MV ship for the time being. Even we would be hard pressed to defend ourselves against them at night and we can see them or sense them within the shadows for the most part. The Kavalian rebels would not stand a chance."

Resumar didn't hesitate in the least and nodded his head. "I agree." He said looking at Vonis. "Uncle?"

"You are in command Res." Vonis answered looking at Julie. "Though I tend to agree with..."

"Julie." She answered immediately. "Julie Collins."

Vonis's eyes grew a little larger but he didn't pause in his response. He knew well who Julie Collins had been. There were very few people close to the Leonidas family who did not know who Julie Collins was. Or who she used to be actually. "I tend to agree with Ms. Collins here." He said. "If any of them are injured they'll use whatever blood they have to heal and hold up today. Tonight however, they'll need to replenish that stock. The easiest way to do that is take Mican's people."

Resumar nodded then. "Avi... divide the remaining explosives between Cemath, Mirra and Sorran. The rest of us will load up with what we have left and move to Mican's settlement." He turned to Mican and saw his blue eyes were wide in shock and Na'lia's expression matched his. "Can you contact your people and have them prepared to move? Take only what they can carry."

"You... you will help us?" Mican asked surprised. "Why?"

"We are part of the reason your people are now at risk." Resumar spoke. "Helping you will only help us in the end. Uncle... your ship?"

“Well hidden and under Shroud.” Vonis told him. “Asharli has the remote for it. We could call it if need be.”

Resumar shook his head. “No. We’ll save it for when we need it.” He said. “How long are the days here?”

Na’lia stepped forward. “Once the sun fully reaches its apex, we will have perhaps ten hours left of daylight.” She replied. “It should reach its apex in three hours.”

“Thirteen hours.” Resumar spoke. “We’re already behind schedule as it is. Let’s get to it people!”

Avi stepped up to Resumar and Athani as the others turned to alert everyone that they would be moving.
–Resumar Leonidas... this is not part of the mission parameters–

“I know Avi.” Resumar said softly.

–Interaction with the rebels here was to be minimal at most. VORTEX Cruiser 341 is a Pralor combat vessel. This single ship under full power could decimate fully one quarter of the Union fleet if it fell into the wrong hands. It must be destroyed–

“I know Avi.” Resumar spoke. “We had a hand in putting these people at risk by coming here. We have to help them.”

–They were already at risk Resumar. The Kavalian government obviously would destroy them if they knew of their existence–

“Avi... it is the right thing to do.” Athani spoke. “We can’t just leave them to their fates. The High Coven actions most likely gave away our presence here. The explosion of STRIKER TWO would have been viewable from every ship in the immediate area. We must assume they know we are here. We need to move quickly now. Without the High Coven forces we need Mican’s help to assist us. Besides... having more allies never hurt anyone.”

–I do not question what we are doing Athani Little One– Avi spoke.

Athani looked at him oddly. “Then... then why mention it?” She asked.

–King Martin could have just as easily deactivated me when we returned to Earth. Instead he allowed me to remain active and learn. Just as Chief Elder Pralor Sumar did. My programming does not allow emotion to factor into my actions but it does allow me to grow and understand where emotion plays a role in decision making. This is one of those times. I was only informing Resumar of the possible end results of these actions. I did not say I agree with them–

“So you would do the same thing we are doing?” Athani asked with a smile.

Avi blinked his red eyes and tilted his head slightly. –Given what I have learned and my interaction with the Leonidas family through the years. Yes–

“Why didn’t you just say that?” Athani asked.

–Paraphrasing King Leonidas Athani Little One... that would just be too damn easy– Avi answered.

Athani’s blue/green eyes were wide and she glared at him for a moment before moving off towards the back of the STRIKER muttering under her breath. Avi and Resumar watched her.

“Avi... you are more human in your actions than you might think my friend.” Res told him looking up into his red eyes. “I’m glad you are here.” He left Avi standing there as he followed Athani and the hulking Avatar blinked his eyes several times processing what Resumar had said.

-Fascinating- He spoke finally.

EARTH THERMOPYLAE TOMB OF KING LEONIDAS

Martin stepped into the dimly lit tomb of his father with the same reverence he always had when entering. The Illum globes grew brighter, revealing the gold and now Dragon Armor encased caskets of two individuals. Martin stood in the entrance for a long moment and stared at the caskets. The one on the left was of the man who had set him on the path of discovery so long ago, and who now rested beside his father as Martin had sworn to him that he would. The man whose name his son wore proudly.

The casket on the right... Martin would never forget.

He brushed his fingers across the top of Androcles’s casket before turning fully to place both hands flat on the metal and Dragon Armor encased casket of his father. The man whose life had been cut short far too early. The father that Martin had never known or seen except for astral projections provided by powerful neural boosters within his tomb here and along the outer portions of the statue outside this very monument. Martin leaned heavily on the casket, trying to wrap his mind around everything that had happened in the last few months. Trying to determine when the darkness had infected him, what he could have done to prevent it. He let his hands slide gently over the smooth curve of the casket.

“Father.” He whispered softly. “If ever there was a time I needed your guidance... now would be it. I have... I have not acted as a king should act. A husband and a mate. As a father. I lashed out at my... I lashed out at my Anome. At my Kinsoaurgai. Two of the five brightest points in my life. The five who make me what I am.” Martin choked up then and clenched his teeth in anger at himself. He remembered taking Aricia in his arms upon leaving the SODRAG underground Command Center. He remembered crushing her lush body to his and kissing her with more passion and love than he had ever kissed her before. He could not express how horrific he felt about what he had done, and Aricia only grasped his face in her soft hands and looked at him with those breathtaking azure blue eyes and told him she knew it was not her Beloved who had done these things. For’mya had already headed back to Sparta to deal with the Kavalians and their refusal to allow entrance to their embassy after the attack but Martin swore to wrap his dark eyed elven Queen within his arms and love her until she couldn’t stand it any longer.

“They raped and beat my daughter father! Zarah is... she is... she is my daughter and those fucking bastards almost killed her! I beat my son father! I almost killed my son for what I perceived he had done wrong! My firstborn son! I’m lost father... I’m lost and I don’t know what to do! So much is happening around me and none of it is good! I...” Martin stammered now, not really knowing what he was saying or why.

“What happened today is not your fault grandson of Sumar.” The voice spoke from behind him.

Martin spun around as the astral projection of the much older humanoid man appeared in the tomb with him. The imaged faded in and out for a brief second and then became as clear an image as Martin had ever seen. The man was tall, with flowing white hair and a deep tan. He had wrinkles under his eyes but they were blue eyes that were filled with a knowledge that Martin could only guess at. There were slight differences in the figure, the voluminous ivory cape draped over wide but thin shoulders and half covering the dark tan earth tones of the pants and shirt he wore. His face looked no different than humans; except that he did not have the same ridges and curves within his ears as humanoid ears. This man was not a species Martin had ever seen before. He stared at Martin with sincere, intelligent eyes.

Helen had told him he needed to come here and talk with someone. She didn’t give him a whole lot of information, she could be incredibly tight lipped when she wanted to be and not even he could easily get information out of her when she didn’t want to give it. He had thought perhaps he was going to see some senior High Coven officer who would give him information. Information that would enable him to respond in kind to what Aikiro and the Coven had done this day. Looking at this figure, Martin knew that was not the case. His dark brown eyes moved up and down the figure as he stood there silently looking at him. Martin knew who this person was. He didn't know how, but Martin knew who this man was. He could feel who this man was and his eyes grew wider as they came up to the face again and realization struck him like a slap in the face.

"You... you're a Pralor!" Martin gasped then.

The man in the image smiled warmly. "Your insight and instincts match that of your grandfather young man." He spoke evenly. "My name is Wayonn... and yes... I am of the Pralor species as we are called. I am the last of the Pralors to my knowledge. The last of my species."

Martin turned from his father's casket to face the image. "The last?" Martin spoke. "I thought... Avi said..."

Wayonn smiled. "Ah yes... you speak of City Ship Avatar 41. He was the avatar of Sumar's ship. Our ship. I never understood Sumar's interaction with him, but he was never far from Sumar's side."

"That's why...? Wait... your ship?" Martin started to speak.

Wayonn nodded with another smile. "Yes... Avi as you call him... he knew who you were the moment you set foot on Lycavore all those years ago." He answered. "If a machine could be happy, I'm quite sure Avi would have been thrilled that it was you who discovered him. That you have not deactivated him and he holds a role of some prominence within your family only makes you that much more like Sumar. Another reason he will forever be a rock for you."

"Your ship?" Martin asked. "Are you saying you were on that ship? That... that means you are..."

Wayonn nodded with a chuckle. "Yes indeed. Very old in terms of how you and your kind relate the passage of linear time to a person. Ancient would be a good term to describe me. It's really quite amusing actually."

"You called me..." Martin began.

"Yes Martin Leonidas, you are of Sumar's blood. His great great grandson if my vague recollection on humanoid descendants is accurate. Resumar was Sumar's first born son with the Lycavorian woman he took as his wife when the decision was made to join with the your kind after we had crashed on your world." Wayonn spoke.

Martin's face became confused. "But the ship crashed over thirty thousand years ago." He said. "How could..."

"There were nearly a million of us that survived the crash Martin Leonidas." Wayonn spoke. "We could not all just join with the Lycavorian people at once. The merging was spread out over the course of thousands of years. Sumar was the last of us to finally become one with Lycavorians. That was little more than eighteen thousand years ago. It took him that long to discover a Lycavorian that pulled at his heart. He always was odd in an eccentric way. When he finally found her, he had her change him, and they became mated. Resumar was the first of his four children with this woman."

Martin's eyes grew wider. "Four?" He gasped.

"Resumar... your grandfather... he had two brothers and a sister." Wayonn answered. "They were... they were killed in the High Coven conquest of Lycavore. Sumar and the woman he had chosen to love died during that time as well. They watched their son become King and begin to pull your people out of the barbaric and savage ways of your species before they passed on however. So many good people were lost during those days. So many."

"You... you sound like you knew Sumar well." Martin said.

"I did indeed." Wayonn answered. "We were very close friends. I was his Oracle. The teller of his tale. His wise one. There are many things you could call me."

"Oracle?" Martin asked. "Like First Oracle?"

Wayonn smiled. "That was my son's doing." He spoke.

"Your son?" Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded. "There is much I need to tell you Martin Leonidas. To be honest... up until you released my son's Mindvoice essence from his prison I had no idea a descendant of Sumar still lived."

"Wait!" Martin exclaimed. "Canth? Canth was your son?" He gasped.

Wayonn nodded. "Yes. He was the youngest of my thirteen children with my Lycavorian wife. I was among the first to become part of Lycavorian society. Sumar reasoned that my skills as a religious icon and mediator if you will... he reasoned that these skills would be better put to use among the Lycavorians more quickly. I chose a Lycavorian woman. I didn't even know her really, she was about to be taken by one of the more aggressive males of your species and I saved her from that fate. She in turn chose me." Wayonn smiled warmly. "I didn't even care for her in the beginning but as the years grew I fell deeply in love with her and we started our own family. About a thousand years before Resumar was born Sumar asked that I take my wife and children and a few hundred others onto the only remaining escape ship we had left on City Ship 41. Avi had repaired it enough where we could use it once more. So I set out with roughly two thousand of the remaining Pralors, those they had taken as wives and husbands and all of our children. We were first going to attempt to return to Pralor space, and while we made it, what we found was not what we had expected. We were chased out of Pralor space by what we found and began to make our way back to Lycavore. We..."

"Wait! What chased you out of Pralor space?" Martin asked quickly.

"This is information I can give to you when I see you, however right now..." Wayonn began to answer.

"See me?" Martin exclaimed. "What do you mean see me? You're dead!"

Wayonn had a hearty laugh then and Martin watched with wide eyes as he shook his head and moved closer to him in the holomager his eyes bright. "Dead? No my boy I am not dead." He spoke with a chuckle. "At least I don't believe I am. I'm quite sure Dutkne would agree with you though."

"Dutkne? Ok... I'm really lost now." Martin said. "You're not dead?"

Wayonn shook his head. "No. Even with my abilities, if I was dead I would not be able to project and hold this transmission as I am now. The neural boosters here in your father's tomb help a great deal, but it is still I who initiated this contact."

"If you aren't dead... then where are you?" Martin quipped.

"Trust me Martin... I will answer all your questions." Wayonn spoke. "But first there are some things you need to know and understand." He moved around and appeared to be carrying something with him until he stopped in front of the long bench that Martin usually sat at. Martin watched him do something with his hands and then he settled onto the stone bench as if he was actually sitting down there. He looked up at him then standing next to his father's casket. "This is important Martin my boy." He stated. "I know you long to return to Sparta and your Queens. To take them in your arms and hold them. To go after your children who now all believe you have gone off the deep end as Dutkne says so often. Rest assured you will do these things, but for now know that your son Androcles will keep them together and not let anything happen to them. And since he knows at least in part what it was within you, he will insure your other children know. However... you need to know what it was that infected you and how it came to be. And you need to know the only way for you to be fully rid of the evil inside you is to come and see me."

Martin moved to stand next to the bench. "It's not gone?" He asked stunned.

Wayonn shook his head. "Not entirely... no." He replied. "You have Sumar's strength Martin, a strength which he passed down to Resumar his son. A strength he in turn passed to his son, your father. That strength of will, that untapped Mindvoice power you have yet to realize, that is what helped you to beat him back this time. That and your Bonded Brother Torma who waits outside for you."

"My brother?" Martin asked softly and he watched Wayonn shake his head.

"Pleistarchus is not like you Martin. He never was nor has he ever been. A son to your father he may be, but he has always been different. He has Mindvoice skills, but they are so far removed from his understanding he could spend the rest of his days learning of them and never achieve what you have right now. And you have not reached your potential just yet." Wayonn spoke.

"You said I beat him back?" Martin asked now settling to the bench.

"What infected you was a small portion of what now deeply contaminates Yuri Moran." Wayonn spoke. "It is the essence of Xaxon, Sumar's twin brother. And more evil a man did not exist anywhere within Pralor space. Xaxon was the complete opposite of his twin brother in every way. Where Sumar was everything a leader could be; compassionate, knowledgeable, a tactical wizard with a will and drive to never fail, his twin Xaxon was the mirror opposite. He was cruel, one of the cruelest Pralors to ever live. He thought himself a great military leader, and his arrogance is what led to the beginning of a war that cost over three trillion lives in the first seven hundred years. His actions began what would eventually lead to the downfall of our civilization. He was punished for his initial actions and his mind was separated from his body. He was given a chance to redeem himself when his mind was placed in command of City Ship 19 while his body was placed on the ship of his brother, who would keep it safe.”

“You mean that this Xaxon’s remains are...”

Wayonn nodded. “They were.” He stated. “Helen destroyed his remains the moment she defeated Aikiro and discovered that it was him that had infected Yuri and that they were both here on Earth. As Pralors Martin, we did not regard our physical bodies as more important than our minds and spiritual essence. Our technology was at such a point where we could remove a person’s conscious mind, their essence and imprison it. This procedure was the very harshest of punishments our people could met out, and it was rarely used. Xaxon was the last one to receive this type of punishment. He was not happy about this at all I assure you, but he could not defeat the entire Ruling Quorum of Pralors and he knew it.”

“Doesn’t sound like something I’d be happy with either.” Martin spoke.

“He was given City Ship 19 as a means to redeem himself. City Ship 19 as you know thanks to Avi, it crashed on Nuwaroa. A world belonging to what you know as the High Coven. It was Aikiro’s father who found the ship, and it was he who made a deal with Xaxon’s essence. Xaxon told Aikiro’s father that he could have the survivors of City Ship 19 if he assisted him in returning to his body and gaining prominence once more. He wanted to return to Pralor space and take his revenge upon those who had imprisoned him. This is how the people of the High Coven soon realized their inherent ability to Mindvoice. It is the same way the Lycavorians realized this potential within them. It was one of the reasons Sumar decided to join you’re your kind. Your ability to Mindvoice. Through generations of breeding with the survivors of City Ship 19, sometimes forcefully I might add, Xaxon’s descendants cultivated it to the point they could use it like Aikiro and Veldruk. As a weapon. Xaxon’s influence is also what drove the High Coven to attack Lycavore, for Xaxon could sense the descendants of his brother among your kind. He did not foresee the stubbornness of that idiot Veldruk and his goal of finding his body was never realized thanks to Avi. Avi hid the City ship as you found it when you arrived. Buried in a huge mountain, operating with just enough power to generate a MV shield around the ship blocking it from Aikiro’s ability to detect. That is what Helen felt when you first arrived on Lycavore. Do you remember?”

Martin nodded quickly. “Yes. She said she could feel evil. Darkness.”

Wayonn nodded. “She had my son’s memories and knowledge in her head then. She knew that Xaxon’s remains were on City Ship 41 even though it was subconsciously and not something she could explain.”

“How did he infect Yuri?” Martin asked. “How did he infect me?”

“The only possible way he could have infected Yuri to the extent he has is if Aikiro gave him access to her daughter’s weaknesses. She had to have been communicating with him within the holding chamber that his essence was sealed in, just as her father did. It would have been located within the medical research sections of City Ship 19. The part of the ship that survived the crash. Xaxon was among the most powerful of Pralor Mindvoicers. Sumar as well. They were twins after all.” Wayonn stated. “Once Xaxon knew what to attack, he would have kept at it until Yuri unwittingly released the seals on his chamber. This would have been the explosion of darkness that Lucia speaks of. What she told your son she saw that day.”

“Wait a minute!” Martin snapped. “How do you know what she told Andro?”

Wayonn smiled gently. “Your son Martin Leonidas has embraced much of what you still balk at. The pureness of your blood, of your Queen Aricia’s blood, it gives him an advantage you did not have. You had to learn everything you now know, and learn it after thinking you were something entirely different for much of your life after you were removed from that sleep chamber. Androcles has not been so limited, and his bond with Elynth while he was still in Aricia’s womb only added to his power. He has embraced it all without hesitation and it makes him stronger because of it. Because he has chosen to let his essence open his mind to everything I have been able to catch words and phrases echoing within Mindvoice. He is exceptionally powerful just like you, but like you he lacks the skills to fully shield what he is thinking from Mindvoice users who have the ability and skill to skip along a person’s shields and detect the small things. I believe he and Dutkne will get along quite well.”

“How does this concern Lucia Moran?” Martin asked.

“A finger of Xaxon’s filth touched Lucia that day as well, but she knew enough to reach for the one thing that could save her. Something she had tried to deny up until that point. That was your daughter.”

Martin looked at him with wide eyes. “Zarah?” He gasped. “But why?”

“The possibilities of two people being born at the exact same moment in time, the exact same millisecond are infinitely impossible to calculate and even less likely to happen.” Wayonn said evenly. “Yet with Lucia and Zarah it happened. In such a circumstance, a union is created even from across great distances. This link if you will... it has existed between Zarah and Lucia since they were born. Lucia reached for it at that time, and it was Zarah’s strength and purpose and love that allowed Lucia to beat back the darkness. All things she learned from you and your Queens. When Lucia saw that... reached for it... it altered the path her life was on and without fail everything she has done since that day was with the goal single goal of coming together with your daughter. Your daughter is far stronger than you know Martin Leonidas. Androcles knows what she is capable of, or I should say, he believes in what she is capable of. He has seen it inside her. The reason why they are so tightly bound I will allow you to discover on your own. It will only show you the commitment and love that your son has for his siblings. A trait that he gets from you I might add.”

“So you are saying that Xaxon is controlling Yuri... like he controlled me?” Martin asked.

“Controlling is such a generic term. Xaxon’s foul Mindvoice essence within Yuri only increases the darkness within her own heart.” Wayonn spoke. “Increases it to levels that she can not control. If I am correct... there is no hope for her now. His essence has permeated her entire being now and it will only become worse until he actually takes over her essence completely and she essentially becomes him. Death is the only way she will be free of him now.”

“And me?” Martin asked.

“You can rest assured he knew who you were the moment she stepped into the same room with you when they came to earth. Aikiro would have known this too.” Wayonn spoke. “He sensed your weakness then and while he could not jump from one body to the next, he did the next best thing. He infected you and targeted the one weakness that had grown inside you since Alba Tau. Just as Helen told you. Your self doubt over what happened on that planet and your horror at having your son experience it as well.”

Martin was silent for a long moment as the scope of what Wayonn was saying hit him fully. “And it is still inside me?” He asked finally.

Wayonn nodded slowly. “Your natural strength of will and purpose is enough to contain that darkness for now.” He said. “However you will not be completely free of it until I can purge it from your essence.”

Martin looked at the image. “You can do this?” He asked.

Wayonn nodded. “It was part of our duty as the religious or spiritual support role that those in my caste among the Pralors played. We were the sounding boards for those we were assigned too as guides and advisors. As I played this role with Sumar, when we returned from Pralor space my son Canth chose to remain with Resumar and play this role. They became fast friends and as events evolved it was Canth who helped Resumar to shape the Chronicles of Law and the First Oracle’s Declaration that your people so cherish and follow.”

“Then that is why Deia says Canth just appeared one day and took his place at my grandfather’s side?” Martin asked.

Wayonn nodded. “The ship we were on was damaged as we escaped from Pralor space and we settled on a planet outside of known space. It was several hundred years before we were able to build a ship from the scraps to take a select few passengers back to Lycavore. It was essentially a one way trip at the time and they knew it. Canth was the first to volunteer, since he reasoned Resumar and him were so close in age it would be better if it was him that returned. Canth was... he was...”

“Unique?” Martin finished.

Wayonn chuckled. “Yes... unique. I see your time with him on Ukwav made a definite impression.”

“To say the least.” Martin agreed.

“Yes well... he took his mate and two oldest children with him and left his youngest two with me and the others. As it turned out, it was the last time I ever saw my son alive again.” Wayonn answered softly. “We had thought all was lost when we heard Resumar and he were dead. It took almost two years for that information to reach us, and when it did we left the world we were on and began returning to try and reclaim what we had lost. We got as far as where we eventually decided to make our homes. Returning would only bring us agony and slavery we knew, and it was decided collectively to attempt to rebuild where we were. My son was able to touch me those first hours after you released his mind Martin and for that I will always be in your debt. That is when I truly first discovered you still lived. That the grandson of Resumar and descendant of my dear friend was alive.”

“Then it was you who was talking to Arzoal all that time.” Martin said. “Not Canth?”

Wayonn nodded. “For the most part yes.” He replied. “I masked my voice to her using my son’s voice. In a sense it was a way for me to remember him. Even I did not know what it was you were doing or who you really were until you freed him. I was only assuming that the rumors of your bloodline that we had heard were true.”

“Are you saying that... are you saying that there are more of my people out there? More Lycavorians?” Martin asked him. “Canth told me I would need to find those who had been lost. When I discovered those on Lycavore I thought it was them. Are you saying it’s not?”

“Oh no... they were part of it.” Wayonn spoke quickly. “They were not all of them. No one among those I am with knows you live Martin. I have hidden it from those I am with to protect them. I did not know how you would act as King. I wanted to insure that you were like Sumar and your grandfather Resumar. That you carried the same values and morals as they did. I have seen all you have done through Helen’s eyes since the day you returned to your people and I am duly impressed. I will not apologize for my actions so whatever you say in that regards will not matter to me.” He turned those blue eyes on him. “However... when I felt Xaxon’s vile presence begin to grow stronger, I knew he had found a suitable shell to infect. I began to take notice even more when the Coven came to Earth. Helen has been communicating with me all these years thinking it was Canth.

“I did not have the heart to tell her that when he passed all that he was to her, he did so knowing his essence would be lost.” Wayonn told him. “She has... she has carried her own self doubt about herself and her skills after the horrid events surrounding your father. She believes she failed him that day so long ago, and she has carried that burden for so long, fearing that she would fail you in some way. At least until now. The death of Aikiro by her hand has set her free. You will find her to be your greatest asset now; that she is bound to Arzoal only makes her wiser and more powerful.”

Martin leaned over and placed his head in his hands and rubbed his face. “Oh man... this is giving me a headache.” He stated sitting back up. “I need to get back to Sparta. I need to hold For'mya and Aricia in my arms. I need to contact my son!”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes... I know. You can not just yet.”

Martin stood. “Why?”

“There are some things I need to show you first.” Wayonn spoke.

“What things? Why can’t this wait until later? You do realize what is going on here don’t you?” Martin barked. “My family is being torn apart before my eyes and I need to stop that!”

Wayonn shook his head. “Your family torn apart?” He asked gently. “I truly believe there is very little in this universe that could accomplish that task no matter how they tried. You and your five Queens have instilled in all your children that Blood comes before all else haven’t you?”

“Well yes but...” Martin began.

“Martin... a chain of events has been ongoing ever since Xaxon took control of Yuri. It can no longer be stopped. You have always believed that for every action there is a reaction yes?” Wayonn asked.

“How do you know that?” Martin barked.

“Because it was the same way Sumar thought.” He replied. “Your ancestor was like you Martin. He did not think simply in the here and now. He thought and acted for the many future generations that would come after. It is a trait he passed to all his offspring, and they to theirs. You can not stop what is already in motion Martin.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “What’s already in motion? Jesus... Canth talked in riddles too! Now I know where he got it! Where Helen gets it! Why can’t you just tell me what the fuck is going on?”

“If I knew that Martin I would.” Wayonn replied. “There are trials and tribulations that we all must face and pass through in order to better ourselves. How we react to them forms the basis for the person we are. What I can tell you is that events have already begun and nothing you do will alter their path. It is not a source of knowledge to me... it is only a feeling within the many threads and tremors of Mindvoice. These events will strain your control, and the control of your children, but these events are what will define you in the future and prepare you for what lies ahead.”

“That is why I need to get back!” Martin declared. “My children will...”

Wayonn shook his head with a small smile. “You think too little of your children Martin Leonidas.” Wayonn spoke. “Too little of the love and devotion you have shown your children through the years. What you have taught them. You and your Queens are part of why they are who they are. Androcles will never let that be lost to them! Ever!” Wayonn spoke forcefully and looked at him. “As he gave without thought to save Zarah he will give without thought to keep them all together no matter the cost to him! He has even gone so far as to seal the bond of blood in the different Lycavorian bloodlines of your people and he doesn’t even know it. Neither of them do. It was something that Resumar and Canth tried to do very early on. He will discover it soon enough though. Your sons Androcles and Arrarn have brought the two bloodlines of the brothers back together again Martin. It is that bloodline that will be your greatest strength... and your greatest curse.”

“What are you talking about now?” Martin demanded. “How did Andro save Zarah? What curse?”

“Martin... while you find it distasteful to consider... Sumar and Xaxon were brothers.” Wayonn spoke. “Twins. There will always be an affinity between the descendants of those two bloodlines. While Aikiro is not a child of Xaxon as Resumar was of Sumar, she still carried within her his presence to a large extent because her father had allowed Xaxon to act through him for the most part. When he impregnated his wife and Aikiro was conceived she was born with part of Xaxon inside her. There will always be a Mindvoice connection between Aikiro’s children and her children’s children and the children of your blood. It is undeniable. It is part of why Carisia and Androcles came together. Part of why Lucia and Zarah came together. Why it feels so very right to them. Now that you are yourself once more, you will come to accept this has you have accepted everything in your life. Never fear the unknown you say... and you live by this creed more than any man or woman I have ever met. And now your children live by it, probably more so than you at times.” Wayonn stood up. “There are some things I must teach you now, so that you are better able to contain Xaxon’s evil within you until you reach me. What I will show you will assist you greatly until I can remove it permanently. It will also allow you to better understand some other things that I will tell you. At least until we are able to stand face to face in the future.”

“And how long will this take?” Martin snapped.

Wayonn smiled. “Just like Dutkne.” He said gently shaking his head. He looked at him. “You have Queens and other men and women who can get by without you Martin. Helen has informed them of where you are and that you are in good health. Like Sumar did, you have surrounded yourself with men and women who are exceptionally capable and this will only serve you well into the future, for you have some hard decisions facing you in that future.”

“Here we go again with the riddles!” Martin spat. “I really fucking hate riddles! I told Canth I hate fucking riddles! ”

“Yes indeed I remember. Your son hates riddles as well. Nearly as much as you. That is why he and Dutkne will get along famously. I suggest we get started my King. So that we can solve these riddles.” Wayonn spoke with a large smile.

SPARTA HOME OF ISRA, TARIFA AND AIHOLA

It was a larger than normal villa that sat only half a kilometer from the edge of the Royal Estate. It was surrounded by a decorative four foot high white stone wall that encased the ten acre property completely. The immediate area around the home and patio was an enormous flower garden lovingly tended to by Tarifa and Aihola almost daily when they weren’t in some sort of meeting either in Sparta or Eden City. The flight to and from Eden City was only half a hour for Aihola and it was a flight she had no problems in making. Her work and office may have been in Eden City, but her loves and her life was in Sparta. There was a very large dragon pen and cave along the north treeline for when Miath was on Earth this is where he called home. Roluth had begun flying back and forth to Dragon Mountain when Aelnala and Miath mated, giving them the privacy they needed and desired as mates. He didn’t mind making the trip each day, and when Miath wasn’t there he would remain on the estate.

Now Roluth landed carrying Tarifa and Anuk on his back and before he had fully settled to the ground, Tarifa and Anuk were leaping from the saddle and running for the front door of their home.

“Is she hurt?” Anuk asked as they darted from the dragon landing pad.

“I don’t know Anuk!” Tarifa answered. “She didn’t sound injured and she is blocking me within Mindvoice. She said only to grab you wherever you were and bring you here!” Tarifa passed her hand over the Bioscanner by the main double doors of their home and the doors slid open easily.

“Ardis!” Tarifa exclaimed as she burst into the foyer of their home, her sapphire eyes darting left and right looking for her oldest child.

“In the den mother!” Ardis’s voice reached out to her and Tarifa looked at Anuk oddly as she dashed to the right, her hand dropping to the K12 in its holster on her thigh. Tarifa may have been Lieutenant Governor of Sparta, but long before that she was a warrior and very skilled at taking care of herself. Anuk followed her motion, her hand dropping to draw her own K12 and they moved to the half open glass double doors.

Tarifa didn’t hesitate and burst into the large den, breaking left as Anuk entered and broke to the right. Their eyes went wide as they saw Karun and Pian standing behind the couch where the stunning blond haired woman Tarifa knew as Jalersi lay. They were both armed, but neither of them had lifted their weapons in a threatening manner. Jalersi’s leg was bloody and her jaw was clenched in pain. Tarifa saw the second Kavalian male holding the mug of tea in his hands which had froze as it was lifting to his lips. Ardis came to her feet from where she was kneeling next to Jalersi’s leg.

“Mother... Aunt Anuk! No!” Ardis barked as she came to her feet.

Tarifa looked at her daughter, seeing the soot and scraps on her cheeks and arms, her K12 dropping almost instantly. “Ardis?” She questioned as her daughter stepped up to her.

“Momma... please.” Ardis said. “You have to trust me.”

Trust was never an issue with Tarifa and she embraced her daughter tightly. Her wolf nose detected many scents on her, the smell of burning metal and wood very prominent. She could also detect the scent of something else permeating her daughter’s timber and peach scent. It was the heady scent of walnut and pines. She pushed Ardis away and held her at arm’s length. “Where have you been?” She demanded. “The Durcunusaan sent a team to your apartment and it was empty! It appeared to have been searched! What...?”

Ardis nodded. “It’s a long story mother.” She spoke.

“Why... why are these people here in my home Ardis?” Tarifa asked casting her eyes to Pian and the others.

“I can explain everything.” Ardis said quickly. “Where is father? I can not feel him within Mindvoice. He is shielding heavily.”

“At the Durcunusaan base!” Tarifa answered immediately. “He and Daniel are directing the deployment of forces throughout Sparta.”

Ardis nodded and looked at Anuk who still had her K12 leveled at Karun and the others. “Aunt Anuk... please!” Ardis spoke. “Jalersi is injured. These people are not a threat to us! We are unable to get the bleeding to stop. Her artery is intact, but I think the splinter of wood may have caused unseen damage.” She looked at Tarifa. “I tried contacting Eliani mother but got no response. You must trust me!”

Tarifa looked at Anuk and nodded. Anuk’s K12 dropped immediately and she flipped her large medical bag from her shoulder. “You had better contact them Tarifa.” Anuk spoke as she moved forward. “The moment you say we have found her Isra will come running!” Anuk went to the couch and knelt beside Jalersi. “I will treat you. I am...”

Jalersi nodded quickly reaching out and squeezing her arm. “I know who you are Anuk Simpson!” She spoke between clenched teeth. “Something mild for the pain would be most appreciated!”

Anuk nodded and delved into her Med Kit. Tarifa pulled Ardis closer as Anuk passed Jalersi a small pill and began to inspect the wound on Jalersi’s leg. “Tell me what is going on Ardis!” Tarifa snapped. “The High Coven has struck our family in the most heinous of ways! The entire planet is under lock down!”

Ardis nodded as she squeezed her mother’s arms. “I know... we saw the broadcast from Aunt Deia.” She spoke. “Karun and I...”

Tarifa looked at the handsome young man quickly and suddenly put together what she smelled on her daughter. Karun’s walnut and pines aroma filtered from every pore of her oldest daughter and Tarifa knew it could only be for one reason. “Ardis what...”

Ardis saw recognition at what she smelled in her mother’s eyes and gripped her arms. “Do not judge mother!” She snapped. “I know you can smell him within my blood. It was my choice! Our choice! And I don’t regret it in the least!”

Karun stepped forward quickly at hearing Ardis speak and he swiftly tucked the K14 into his waistband as he moved closer to them. “Lady... Lady Tarifa... I...” Karun saw those bright sapphire eyes focus on him and for the first time in his young life he felt fear looking into the eyes of a female.

Tarifa turned her eyes back to Ardis. “Ardis... this... he is the son of your Uncle’s brother! You know how Martin feels about his brother. He is...”

“Am I suppose to allow what Uncle Martin feels for his brother to influence my feelings for his son mother?” Ardis popped. “Karun is nothing like his father! Nothing! He is...”

Karun stepped up next to her and bravely put his arm around her waist. Tarifa’s sapphire eyes grew a little wider at this action and she was about to snap at him when he spoke. “Your daughter has shown me who I am Lady Tarifa.” Karun stated as calmly as he could. He did not want to lose Ardis, and he most certainly did not want to have her mother as an enemy. “I came here with many questions, and in the time that has passed, Ardis and my grandmother have answered most of them. I am not my father’s son... I am my mother’s son.” Tarifa’s eyes darted to where Jalersi was laying on the couch and saw her powder blue eyes focused on her son. “I have nothing to show you that what I say is the truth, no way to prove it to you. Only that I love your daughter with every breath I take. I can only ask that you give me the chance to prove what I say is what is in my heart.”

Tarifa looked back to him and then at her daughter who was also looking at Karun with violet and sapphire eyes full of love. “This... this is not the way I envisioned meeting the man who would claim my daughter.” She spoke finally.

“Believe me Lady Tarifa... this is most definitely not the way I wanted to meet you.” Karun spoke. “I was hoping to go about things as my grandmother told me I should. In the old ways of the Spartans. It appears fate will not give me that opportunity.”

“You believe in fate young man?” Tarifa asked surprised at his words.

“I believe I came here for a reason Milady.” He spoke with sincerity in his tone of voice. That was something Tarifa was able to detect easily. “I believe I was meant to come here and discover the part of my heritage I would not have learned had I stayed behind. Fate put me in the hands of my sister Lisisa, who did not turn me away. And fate guided me to your daughter.” Karun looked at her evenly and didn’t blink. “Do I believe in fate Lady Tarifa? After finally discovering what I have discovered... fate is all I have left. Fate and the love of Ardis and my mother.”

Tarifa stared at him for a long moment and then looked to her daughter. “Ardis?”

“This is what I want mother.” She spoke confidently. “Karun is who I want. No matter what that may bring.”

Tarifa couldn’t help but pull her daughter into her arms and hug her tightly. “What it will bring is gruff words and yelling when your father discovers this, but...” she looked at Karun. “You have convinced me.”

Karun felt a wave of relief wash over him and he too smiled. “Thank you.” He spoke.

“Now let me ask if what I have told you would have mattered to you when it comes to my daughter.” Tarifa spoke.

Karun shook his head. “Not in the least.” He answered without a moment’s hesitation.

Tarifa chuckled and nodded her head. “Good... you will need that commitment to Ardis when her father discovers what is going on.” She looked at Ardis. “Now tell me why they are here and not at the embassy with the others. If the Durcunusaan knew they were here our home would be swarming with them.”

This is when Pian stepped forward. “I am Pian’Nurarani Lieutenant Governor Tarifa. I am...”

“I know who you are sir.” Tarifa spoke firmly. “I make it a habit to know everyone who is within the walls of my city as guests of the King. And if I don’t know, you can be assured Panos does.”

“We can not return to our embassy.” Jiss spoke now setting his cup on the knee high table and moving closer to her.

“And why is that?” Tarifa asked.

“We would be executed on sight.” Pian answered her.

Tarifa looked at him, her wide eyes going from him to Jiss and then to Ardis. “What exactly is going on here daughter?”

Pian stepped even closer. “Lady Tarifa... I need to use a secure transmitter.” He said. “I need to contact my brother before word of our betrayal makes its way to the Kavalian military. The life of Jalersi’s daughter hangs in the balance.”

“Why?” Tarifa demanded.

“Milady please I...”

“Commander... you are in my home!” Tarifa said. “I have Durcunusaan Guards outside right now. You tell me if you return to your embassy you will be executed, yet you escaped the High Coven attack on your embassy. Now you are asking me to grant you the use of a secure long range transmitter so you can contact your people.”

“Only my brother Milady.” Pian spoke astonished at how easily respect came for this female elf now that he had discovered his true feelings for Jalersi and she was now his wife and mate. All that mattered to him was protecting her and their future and the future of his people. Pian was changing more and more as each hour went by.

“We wish to defect!” Jalersi barked from the couch.

Tarifa’s eyes went wide at this and she pulled away from Ardis to look at her. “I beg your pardon?”

“If you have loved one man for many years Tarifa of the elves, then you will know why we are doing this.” Jalersi said.

“My... Isra, Aihola and I have been together for over twenty years now.” Tarifa said. “I know what it is like to love a man for such a time.”

Jalersi nodded. “And I have loved Pian for just as long.” She spoke calmly. “Only I did not come to realize it until I discovered Pusintin regards me as nothing more than property and Pian showed me what was in my heart. I may look like you with the exception of your elven ears, but I am still a Kavalian female. I was not able to submit my Edict of Dissolution before events overtook us. When Pusintin discovers that I have laid with Pian, allowed Pian to make me his wife, he will take it out on our daughter. Nikkei is only twenty years old and still very innocent. I fear what he will do.”

Pian stepped up to her once more holding out the data pad. “There is also this information that we give to you to consider.” He spoke.

Tarifa took the pad and began reading it. Her eyes grew wider and her blood went cold when she saw what it contained.

“By the Gods!” She gasped.

“There are Kavalian assassination teams within Sparta even now.” Pian spoke. “If it is discovered where we are, they will come after us in force and do everything within their power to insure we do not speak. And they will not care we are here.”

“It is why I brought them here other.” Ardis spoke now. “My apartment is the first place they would think to look. It appears they already have given what you said moments ago.”

Tarifa looked up quickly and met Pian’s eyes. “This is... this is not some sort of joke?” She asked.

Jiss shook his head. “If only that were the case.” He stated.

“You... you were the Kavalian Ambassador!” Tarifa spat.

Jiss nodded. “I am a Kavalian as well. This path the Prefect wishes to pursue is a death sentence for my people. A war on two fronts? All we have built in the last years will be lost. I... I do not think like you in many regards Lieutenant Governor Tarifa, in fact our views on many things are probably very different. I am old and set in the ways of my people, but I am also intelligent enough to know change can come. I have seen a small part of that change with Pian and Jalersi and surprisingly I have accepted it.” This statement caught both Pian and Jalersi by surprise and they looked at him with equally stunned expressions. “I am Kavalian and I can not allow the current leaders of my people to throw away the few gains we have made in a fool attempt and grasp for more power.”

Tarifa looked up quickly from the pad as she listened to him. Her decision was easy to make. “Both of you come with me!” She ordered. “We have a secure transmitter in our office upstairs!” Tarifa turned to Anuk. “Anuk?”

Anuk’s eyes were wide as she met Tarifa’s gaze for she had heard everything. “Go!” She said. “I will finish here and treat Karun as well. Go! You must get this information to Deia or someone in her office!”

IRARUZU

The Limian couple and several Kochab mercenaries leaped back with shouts of alarm and confusion when the large body of the Kavalian soldier smashed into the top of the Medium Lifter crushing the frame of the vehicle and sending its Plexiglas windshield rocketing into the air to land several meters away. They had been rushing to view the burning of the large Drow store many of them had frequented on different occasions. Now they staggered back and their eyes were drawn skyward to the roof of the five story building that most visitors stayed at if they had the credits to do so.

Walter, Daba and the two Dragoons had crept up on the Kavalian assassination team with little problems. Their attention had been focused downwards into the landing bay and the now destroyed Bontawillian Corvette. Walter's thrown Nehtes now protruded from the back of the missile launcher Kavalian, his body skewered to the wall he had been leaning against. Daba had used all of her elven speed to fall upon the others with a savagery she hadn't felt in more years than she cared to remember. Her dual Shakur fighting knives, already bloody from killing the scavengers in the Drow store, quenched their thirst for more blood when she buried one in the chest of another Kavalian, while the other flash up and across his throat, his blood fountaining from his neck like a water faucet. Walter and the two dragoons quickly subdued the remaining three Kavalians, one of which had just taken a plunge to his death. Walter was in no mood for games at this point in time, and he had simply lifted one Kavalian within the grip of the TK power he had fostered through the years with Majeir. They were not a Bonded Pair, but they had learned how to share each other's strengths, and with Majeir assisting him from the hanger below, Walter had lifted the Kavalian a hundred meters into the air and smashed him back to the surface without a single word.

He turned back to the leader of the small team and the remaining Kavalian soldier. His wolf eyes were very prominent and his fangs were fully extended now. It had been many years since Walter Carson had felt the anger and power surge through him as it did now. Seeing the dead Drow and knowing that Kavalians hunted Daba's daughter only increased this anger to levels that he had not felt since Thermopylae.

"Well... now that I have your attention..." Walter growled as he moved back to the two Kavalians who glared at him with hard eyes. "Let us have a civil conversation shall we."

"We will tell you nothing Lycavorian dog!" The leader of the small team hissed savagely.

Walter nodded. "See... that is where you are mistaken." He spoke moving closer. "You made two blunders friend. The first was attacking and killing so many of our people to begin with. We are not at war with you... but after this... I assure you we will be if I know Martin Leonidas! The second blunder was attacking and butchering Drow elves." Walter motioned to Daba. "Allow me to introduce Drow Senator Daba of Earth. The Matron Mother of the Drow family you slaughtered here was a dear friend to her, and we know your friends are after two survivors from within the store. One of them happens to be Daba's daughter Lu'ria. The Drow are not known for their kindness towards those who do the things you have done. I should know since I'm the one who made them. Where is your main force and how many men do you have chasing Lu'ria?"

The leader of the Kavalian team laughed and spat at Walter, the spittle landing near his right boot.

"The place they lived is in ruins now!" He snarled at them. "We are from the Puma Bane Pride and we never fail! My brethren slaughtered the Drow and humans like animals! After they raped every Drow and human female there many times! You should have heard them squeal! They..."

Daba surged off the ground where she was squatting with a cry of rage and slashed out with her fist. She may have been a female, but she was still an elf, with all the speed and strength elves had. The heel strike to his fur coated face rocked his head back and tore open his lips with the power it carried. "I will remove your eyes from their sockets one at a time you foul beast!" She screamed loudly. "I will peel the skin from your disgusting carcass and feed it to the insects!"

The leader spit blood on the ground and lifted his head to glare at her. "You are nothing when held to the might of the Kavalian Empire! Nothing!"

Walter nodded. "I figured you would say that!" He spoke. "Be thankful we are not within Union space."

"Hah!!" The man spat. "Your threats mean nothing to me!"

Walter shook his head. "Oh no... I'm not making a threat! If we were in Union space I wouldn't be able to do what I'm about to do." Walter looked at Hval and could see the anger in the Dragoon's eyes at what he had seen so far this day. Walter also knew that Hval was deeply in love with a Drow female on Earth and what he had seen caused his elf blood to churn with the need for vengeance. "Hval... hold him." Walter ordered. Hval didn't hesitate and let his 190 dangle on the quick release straps as he stepped up behind the man and seized his arms and shoulders. Walter leaned close to the man's frightening face. "I'm going to let Daba show you why the Drow are so feared on our world mister big Puma Bane Pride warrior. I hope you enjoy pain... cause you are about to experience it in living color." Walter stood back up and looked at Daba. "Daba... he's yours!"

Daba's smile was perhaps the most unpleasant thing Walter had ever seen so far this miserable day as she withdrew one of her knives. She glared at the Kavalian. "Let me show you what I will do to each and every one of your kind if you have harmed my daughter in any way!" She snarled stepping towards the man.

He was strong no doubt, but after the third section of skin Daba peeled from his neck, taking hair and hide with it the screaming began. It had no effect on Hval who exerted all his strength to hold the man who had inflicted so much agony on his lover's people. The second Kavalian soldier knelt on the ground in horror at what was taking place, his eyes wide as he watched the excruciatingly slow and painful death of his commanding officer. His dark eyes rapidly filled with fear as he watched the dark skinned elf female appear to take great pleasure in what she was doing. The screaming went on for four minutes before he vomited all over himself, but by this time half his commander's face was gone, nothing but raw, bloody muscle showing and Daba had dug one of his eyeballs out with the tip of her blade.

"They are... they are on the outskirts of the Drow estate!" The man finally screamed the front of his uniformed chest and fur matted in his own filth. "Our commander has perhaps twenty or twenty-five with him... another full company waits on the other side of the planet! A hundred men perhaps!"

Walter looked at the Kavalian. "The females who escaped?" He asked immediately as Daba turned to look at him.

"They are heading north! The Major believes they are trying to get out from under the Deutrino field and call for help!" The Kavalian exclaimed. "The Marshall's son leads the patrol hunting them!"

"Pusintin's son?" Walter asked in shock.

The soldier bobbed his head up and down quickly. "Yes! His name is Leruk! He is the youngest of Marshall Pusintin's sons! He hunts them like you would hunt them! He hunts them by their scent! I do not want to die!"

Daba used the but end of her knife to viciously smash it into the leader's head, the crack of his skull fracturing very audible. Hval let his limp and moaning form drop from his grasp then as Daba turned to the soldier and held up her knife. "Why have you done this?" She snarled. "And know that if you lie to me I will feed you to the dragon that travels with us. My daughter is to be her Bonded One and she is not happy at all that your people wish to harm her!"

The man's eyes went even wider. "Dragon!" He gasped.

Majeir chose that time to rise above the edge of the building, her massive wingspan causing reverberations in the air, Ceneia sitting calmly in the saddle on her back. The Kavalian soldier's eyes nearly exploded from his head as he watched her land gently only meters away from him. He pushed back against the dragoon still holding him, and lost control of his bladder then, urine staining the front of his pants as intense fear seized him. Majeir waited until Ceneia had dropped from her saddle before she moved even closer. Her ruby eyes were ablaze with hate and anger.

"I... I do not know all of it!" The man barked out. "I am just a soldier! We are targeting the... the Drow settlements all over The Wilds! I don't know why! I swear it! You... you won't kill me will you? I do not want to die in this way!"

Daba's eyes came up quickly and she looked at Walter. "Holy One!" She gasped.

Walter was already turning to Ceneia. "Can you burn through the Deutrino interference?" He asked her quickly.

"If we still had the ship yes!" Ceneia answered immediately her eyes wide. "I doubt there is anything on this planet powerful enough to do it now!"

"Can you make something?" Walter barked.

Ceneia glanced at the remains of the Corvette below her quickly. "I can yank whatever remains from the ship and see what I need. The cockpit is toast... but maybe the transmitters in the rear compartments survived." She turned back to Walter. "I'll need time Walter! Time and whatever electronic equipment you can find me."

Walter nodded. "I'm sure that won't be a problem on this fucking planet!" He snapped. "It's filled with scavengers. How much time?"

"If I can pull one of the main transmitters from the rear... some conduits and electronic components... maybe four hours!" Ceneia answered. "I won't know until I see what I can salvage Walter!"

"Take Olar with you. Strip what you need!" Walter snapped.

Majeir stepped towards him. Walter... I can not wait four hours to find Lu'ria.

Walter looked at her then back to the Kavalian. "Do any of your troops have T19s?" He demanded.

The Kavalian shook his head. "Not here!" He replied quickly. "Only the support unit on the other side of the planet!"

"How many?" Walter snapped.

"Four!" He stammered. "Only... only four!"

Walter turned back to Majeir. Take Ceneia and Olar back to the hanger. Lu'ria will be headed north from the Drow estate when you find it. Be mindful Majeir... he is terrified of you but he may be lying. Stay low to the ground and avoid the Kavalian forces by the estate. He looked at Ceneia as she was already moving to climb back into the saddle. Olar right behind her. "Strip what you need and let me know what you lack. Hval... head back down through the building and assist them. If anyone attempts to interfere, kill them."

"These scum Holy One?" Hval asked.

Walter looked at Daba. "Daba and I will take care of them." He said. "Go! We must move quickly!"

Hval nodded and gave a savage kick to the bloody body of the Kavalian leader on the hot surface of the building's roof. He gathered his 190 into his hands and ran for the door down into the interior of the building that they had come through.

I will Mindvoice you every fifteen minutes Walter. Majeir barked out as she propelled herself into the sky. I am this close to her and I will not act foolishly. I promise you.

Find her Majeir! Find her and let her know she is not alone! Walter barked.

I will! Majeir declared as she dipped below the buildings edge and was gone.

Walter turned back to the Kavalian soldier. "Let's talk boy!" He growled yanking his R4 blade from his belt. "And unless you wish to end up looking like your supreme asshole boss, you won't lie to me about anything."

ULU SCIMITAR ON COURSE FOR KRANEK

Viera! Seyra was the first to see her when the Lift Elevator arrived within the Dragon Den of the ship. She maneuvered her bulk quickly and was next to her as the elevator began to go down again.

Viera's eyes were bright and smiling as Seyra came up to her and they brushed their snouts together. It is good to see you again Seyra!

Oh Viera you look wonderful! So healthy and your scales shimmer! Seyra spoke as both Deneth, Anthar and Elynth now moved up next to her.

Viera! How are you? Anthar asked.

Viera bobbed her huge head up and down. I understand congratulations is in order for you and Elynth. You are mates now.

Elynth leaned into Anthar's side and ran her snout under his jaw. A fact that makes me sing with happiness. She cooed out within Mindvoice causing Anthar to shift on his clawed feet in embarrassment.

Where... where is Vollenth? Anthar asked finally.

Seyra looked at Anthar. Why should we care? She snapped. He...

Viera touched her snout to Seyra's side. He is not the same Seyra my friend. He is not the same Vollenth you knew.

Seyra looked at her. I am glad you are free of him. You can find another mate and...

Oh no! Viera said now shaking her head quickly. I will never want or need another mate. He is all I will ever need.

Viera he forced himself upon you! Seyra exclaimed. You do not need to stay mated to him and you know that.

He may have forced himself on me while he was being controlled by that vile witch Yuri, but he certainly did not force himself upon me the many times we have been together since he came to Dragon Mountain and begun healing. I will be a very happy female for the rest of my life. Viera spoke somewhat smugly.

Elynth chuckled and bumped her midsection against Anthar. Yes... I do know the feeling Viera. She said with some humor. They make your talons ache with desire and your mind erupt with explosions of...

Elynth! Anthar exclaimed. They do not need to hear everything!

You jest! Seyra said looking at Viera.

Viera shook her head. No... not at all. She said. The Elder Mother told me the same thing Seyra, but you have not seen him since he came to Dragon Mountain. He is different. So very different. He has done nothing but learn from the Elder Mother and play with our sons. He...

The elevator rising into view caused Viera to stop talking as they all turned to see the huge body of Vollenth rise into view. Pinned under one of his large talons was the light green scaled dragon hatchling perhaps three months old. The hatchling was snapping at Vollenth's snout, his wings beating furiously while the second hatchling was bounding up and down on Vollenth's back, his jaws snapping open and shut by Vollenth's head as his wings were flapping madly as well.

I got him Cinol! I got him! The hatchling on top of Vollenth's back was barking loudly within Mindvoice as he clamped his jaws on his father's armored scales just behind his head, his wings flapping to give him added leverage.

Knock him over! Knock him over Caydren! The one pinned beneath Vollenth's talons shouted as his wings beat madly, flapping on the deck plating of the elevator loudly even as he squirmed to get out from under his father's huge talon.

Knock me over will you! Vollenth bellowed as he lifted one wing and gently battered the hatchling from his back. The one meter tall hatchling stumbled forward from the nudge and rolled off Vollenth's back.

I got his leg! The pinned hatchling shouted out as his talons gripped Vollenth's foreleg tightly. Get his other one brother! Get his other leg quickly!

Seyra was looking at them with horror in her eyes as other dragons came to their feet from around the entire Dragon Den at the commotion. Many of them also gazed with horror in their eyes as they were witnessing an adult dragon attempting to injure hatchlings. They all looked at Viera who couldn't help but chuckle as she saw the looks of shock in the eyes of the other dragons. All of them except Elynth and Anthar who looked on with amusement. She stepped away from the others towards the elevator and settled to the deck casually.

AHEM! She barked within Mindvoice.

Viera's voice froze all three of them in mid motion and their heads turned to look at her. One of the hatchlings was dangling from Vollenth's raised talon, Vollenth's wings half flared to the side, and second hatchling's jaws clamped shut on the forward edge of that huge wing. All of their eyes went wide when they saw her staring at them.

Uh-oh! We're busted! The hatchling under Vollenth's talon stammered.

Oops! The other echoed.

Viera! Vollenth chimed in his eyes wide.

And exactly what do the three men in my life seem to think they are doing? Viera asked sternly.

Ummm... I was showing them... I was showing them the proper way to smooth their wings! Vollenth announced. Yes that's it!

He was momma!

And exactly what would Cinol be learning about smoothing his wings pinned under your talon my mate? Viera asked barely able to contain her laughter. Or Caydren suspended from your other talon and gnawing on the edge of your wing? Hmmm?

Huh? Vollenth spoke confused. Oh that... Vollenth lifted his huge foreleg and his light green scaled son scampered up to stand beside his father. His brother release his jaws from his father's wing and dropped nimbly to the deck. They both stood in front of their father then, trying to look as innocent as they could. I...

I have asked you not to wrestle with them my mate. Viera spoke pleasantly. They will not sleep for days now.

Who can sleep mamma! The dark tan hatchling barked. This ship is amazing! Papa said he would give us a tour!

And exactly how would your father do that when he does not know his way around the ship himself. Viera asked.

Trial and... Caydren looked at his brother. What did papa say?

Error! Cinol answered.

Yes! Trial and error! Caydren finished turning back to his mother.

Elynth and Anthar burst out into laughter within Mindvoice as many of the other High Coven dragons were crowding around, Deneth among them. Elynth was the one to step forward before all the others with smiling golden eyes. Looking into Vollenth's eyes she no longer saw savage anger and hate, but she did see peace, wisdom and happiness.

They look like fine handsome young hatchlings Vollenth. She spoke as they gazed at her with wide eyes.

Vollenth ushered his sons back gently with his huge snout as he came to his feet and met Elynth's gaze evenly and without fear. I would never have experienced this happiness without yours and Androcles's actions Elynth. I would never have discovered how Viera feels, how I feel. And I would not know the joy of my sons. I am... I am forever in your debt. Both of you.

Elynth shook her head and looked at him. No Vollenth. Andro would never accept this statement from you and neither will I. To see you now... how you are with your sons... with your new mate? That is the prize that means more to us than anything. We only severed the tie Vollenth. It was you who broke the bonds.

His sister? Vollenth asked. She is...?

She will be herself once more in the future. It will take time... but she is a Leonidas and she is stronger than many suspect. With Lucia at her side now, she will be who she once was one day in the future. Elynth spoke.

If there is anything we can do? Vollenth spoke. You and Andro have only to ask.

Elynth nodded. I thank you. We thank you. Now why don't you and Viera and your sons sit with us? There is room for us all and we can enjoy the company of friends and loved ones. After the last few days that we have had, it seems the best course of action.

Vollenth looked at Viera and she moved up next to him, brushing her midsection against his in affection and nodded. We would like that very much.

Androcles leaned against the bulkhead just inside the door of the Med Bay and let his azure blue eyes linger on Zarah. Even with Eliani watching almost constantly, she had missed it when Zarah had moved from her bed and slipped into the bed that held Lucia Moran. Zarah was now tucked very tightly against Lucia's body, her face resting peacefully on Lucia's firm cone shaped breasts, Lucia's arms holding her almost possessively. It was almost exactly how Andro had found them in that foul room on Earth what seemed like just minutes ago.

"Eliani can't determine when exactly Zarah did that, but it was within the last hour or so." Isabella's voice spoke softly from next to Andro. He had smelled his vampire mother coming from down the corridor and knew she could walk like a ghost when she wanted. "Eliani gave Lucia an added sedative so that she rests, but the remnants of the Blood Fever are almost completely out of her system." Isabella said looking at him. "They both need to rest right now."

"She loves Zarah mother." Andro spoke.

Isabella nodded her head. "I know." She stated. "I do not doubt that after what she has done. She knew didn't she Andro?"

Andro looked at her. "Knew what?"

"Pureblood vampires can smell even the earliest onset of stages of Blood Fever in another vampire's blood. You know that as well as I do." Isabella said. "Lucia had to know Zarah had it at one point. With the injuries Zarah had, Lucia had to have smelled it."

Andro nodded. "I'm sure she did." He said. "I don't think it mattered a whole lot to her to be honest mother."

"Androcles... what you did..." Isabella began speaking.

"I would have done for any of my brothers and sisters." Andro interrupted her. "It just so happens it was Zarah, and now she and I are connected in a way now that we don't regret and have learned to cultivate to our advantage."

"That connection has increased her Mindvoice abilities beyond what they might have been." Isabella spoke.

"Have they?" He spoke. "Or has it simply released any natural blocks that may have been there? It does not matter mother. I still have my sister, and I will keep my vow to you and to her."

Isabella saw the set in his jaw and knew he meant every word. "She could have killed you Andro. You know that don't you?" Isabella spoke softly.

Andro shook his head. "No. Even in the grips of the fever I think she knew who I was and what I was doing." Andro shrugged. "It doesn't matter... we have put it behind us and so should everyone else." He looked at her and saw the radiance of her face from her pregnancy. He smiled and reached out with his hand. "May I?"

Isabella rolled her eyes at him. "Like you need to ask." She spoke with a smile.

Andro placed his palm on her abdomen and smiled when he felt the flicker of powerful life in his vampire mother's womb. "He's going to be a handful." He said.

Isabella then allowed the first smile to split her face in many hours. "All of you were a handful." She said. She let her hazel green eyes fall upon Zarah once more. "We'll help her to get through this."

Andro nodded. "Yes we will, all of us. Lucia will be the biggest part of it, but we'll all be there."

"Andro... your father..." Isabella saw Andro's jaw twitch just a fraction and she knew that no matter how much he loved his father, he was still very angry with him for what had happen.

"Father will be alright." He said softly. "He is free of whatever it was that was controlling him."

Bella looked at him. "Are... are you sure?"

Andro nodded. "Helen was able to touch me before we left the system. It has something to do with the Pralor ancestors we have. We went dark and jumped before she could tell me everything."

"Yet you are still angry with him." Bella spoke softly.

"I can't help it I suppose." Andro said. "I know it's wrong but..."

Isabella stepped forward and took his arm and squeezed it tightly. "It is not wrong! Your father is not invulnerable Androcles." She said softly. "No one is. He has weaknesses and he has faults. We all do."

Andro nodded with a heavy sigh. "I know." He stated.

"You made a stand Androcles Leonidas." Bella said. "You made a stand and now every rider and dragon on the SCIMITAR owes you their thanks and their lives. Do not dismiss your actions my son. What happened was beyond our ability to control. I have come to realize through the years that being married to your father is no easy role. Our capabilities and our name make us targets Andro. That will always be the case. You know that."

Andro nodded. "Yes I do." He turned completely to face her. "It's not what... it's not what he did mother. That was not my father... I know that."

"Then what?" Isabella asked.

"I was powerless to help him mother!" Andro stated looking at her.

Isabella placed her hands on his cheeks and smiled up at him. "There are some things and some people you can not help Androcles. You and your father fail to see that all of the time and more often than not it gets you both into trouble."

Andro couldn't help the small smile that creased his lips. "We do have that in common don't we?" He said.

Isabella nodded. "And so much more." She stated. "Be angry if you must. At least for now... but I know you will let it go. That too is something you have in common with your father. You can not stay angry at those you love for very long."

Andro nodded his head. "I will be fine." He told her as he smiled. "Mother will be happy to see you. Especially since you carry our brother."

Isabella let the twinkle in her eye at his reference to Dysea show without shame. She missed her ussta il-darthirii and after twenty-five years she did not care who knew this fact. She nodded her head quickly. "It has been too long since I have tasted your mother's lips, and it will be useful for Zarah to be around her calming influence. It will also be interesting to see what Cha'talla has built on Kranek. "

Andro nodded. "There's no denying that." He said.

"You trust him Andro?" Isabella asked.

"I trust mother and I trust Normya." Andro answered. "They would not have associated themselves willingly with Cha'talla if there was even a hint of deception. And Normya would not have fallen in love with this Tir'ut had there been any doubt. You know that as well as I do."

Isabella nodded. "Yes. It will just take some getting used too."

Andro nodded looking back to Zarah. "Yep! I imagine it will. For all of us."

Isabella took his hand in hers and squeezed tightly. "You should get some rest Andro. You have not left the Med Bay since you returned." Isabella spoke. "You have three mates who worry for you, and you have a ship to run."

"Sa'sur is very capable of running the SCIMITAR without me." Andro said. "I want to be here when she wakes."

"No." Isabella spoke causing him to look at her once more. "You have been through quite a bit yourself and you need to reassure Carisia that none of this is her fault."

"Carisia?" Andro said. "What do you mean?"

"I am a woman and I saw it in her eyes." Isabella said. "She will not speak of it openly, but I know she believes you will think less of her because it was her brothers who did this."

"I don't think that!" Andro protested. "I have never thought that! Not for an instant!"

"Then go to her and make sure you show her that." Isabella said. "I will call you when Zarah wakes. She will ask for you first I have no doubt. Now go."

"Mother I..."

"Do I need to turn you over my knee like I did when you were a boy and you chose not to listen to me?" Isabella spoke sternly.

Andro rolled his eyes. "You only did that once." He said.

"You learned your lesson didn't you?" She snapped softly.

"Yes."

"Then do as I ask you now." Isabella said. "I will sit with her a time longer and then Eliani or one of the medics will call us when she wakes."

"Are you sure?" Andro asked.

Bella nodded. "Yes. Now go!"

Andro leaned over and kissed her cheek lovingly before turning and heading out of the Med Bay. He was sore yes, he was tired yes, but the best medicine he could think of now was to take his three mates and drag them into a very hot shower with him. He needed to feel Sadi's body in his arms, he needed to nuzzle Ne'Veha's elven ears and he needed to stroke Carisia's porcelain like skin. He needed to smell all of them close to him. That is what he needed right now. And that is what occupied his mind as he headed down the corridor of his ship.

FEMEYAU KAVALIAN SPACE

Nikkei was standing with four other Kavalian females chatting quietly amongst each other in the Spaceport as they waited for their transport to return them to Cabelir. The Spaceport was actually very busy at the moment, mainly filled with Kavalian Biogenic troops moving to and from wherever their bases were. There were thousands of civilians as well; the men keeping in small groups while the women and children kept to themselves. It was a typical scene almost anywhere within the KFI that you went. Even though the Prefect had loosened somewhat the restrictions on females and what they could do, they were still treated as second class citizens. Nikkei sat silently, her white blond hair matching her mother in its length and silkiness. Her skin was deeply tanned, her blue eyes stunning in their brightness. The clothes she wore were very conservative and a drab light blue in color. She hated going off Cabelir for she was forced to wear the unflattering clothes that the majority of the Kavalian females in the KFI were forced to wear. Solid colors with no thought for style or attractiveness.

Anything that was remotely sexy in nature was a definite trouble starter and for a female who was mated, unheard of. Though her friends were pure Kavalian females, one having dark brown hair and the other two blond hair, they had undergone the biogenic treatments to remove the fine coat of hair from their bodies by order of their fathers just as Nikkei's mother and Aunt had. All three of them knew that this action was a precursor to them being drafted by the KFI Intelligence apparatus for use anywhere across the expanse of the KFI or wherever they were deemed needed. They all knew when that happened, more than likely they would never see their families again. No biogenically altered Kavalian female had ever returned to their families and Prides after serving with the KFI Intelligence. They were considered tainted then, exposed to the outside world and probably used by non-Kavalian males for sexual pleasure and unfit for breeding. Nikkei to them was a dear friend. She did not think of herself as any different as them no matter who her parents were. These three females were the only ones who had actually taken the time to get to know her and not assume she was arrogant. It helped that they had grown up with her for the most part, the young daughters of servants on the Marshall's property on Cabelir. Nikkei had played with them since childhood and many times they defended her willingly, for she was always sneaking them gifts or holo novels from off world and even out of KFI space. They were items that were strictly forbidden for anyone to have inside KFI space but Nikkei had been able to obtain them from her brother Karun. He was always bringing her gifts and things she should not have had. Karun was different than her two other brothers. He was more like their mother and he showed her far more respect and attention than did her other brothers. Nikkei asked for nothing in return from her friends for she wanted them to have nice things, and the risks she took for them elicited the manner in which they defended her while in school or walking among the markets shopping. There had been many occasions where she had thoughtlessly defended them with their parents if somehow they had managed to get themselves in trouble.

Nikkei's blue eyes wandered over the throng of civilians and military clones with intense interest while her friends chatted amongst themselves. The soldiers moved with a purpose and the civilians basically got out of their way. She knew right away who the officers were among the biogenic clones for they barked orders and generally moved with a bit more confidence and superiority. Nikkei guessed they were the newest batch of clones for all of them looked young and untouched by the war with the Coven. Nikkei let her eyes wander over the throngs of men and women and they fell upon the four, tall Kavalian males sitting nearby at a single table only four meters away from where she sat with her friends.

"Nikkei!" The dark brown haired female snapped softly causing Nikkei to turn her head around quickly.

"Linay ... what?" Nikki snapped back playfully.

"Don't stare at them Nikkei... you will draw attention to us." Linay spoke.

"They are staring at us." Nikkei spoke.

"Yes... they've been staring at us for nearly twenty minutes." The dark blond haired female Gualli said with a nod. "Ever since they sat down."

"Who are they?" Nikkei asked keenly interested as her eyes drifted back to the four males. One appeared younger than the others, his dark brown fur actually very handsome to look at. He and the four men with him appeared to be far better groomed than many of the Kavalian males she was used to seeing.

"I don't know. They don't have uniforms on, but they definitely look military." Gualli said softly.

"Why do we care who they are?" The second blond haired female spoke. "They are pure Kavalian males. We are nothing to them."

Nikkei looked at her. "They seem different somehow." She spoke thoughtfully. "They are definitely concerned with their appearance. I don't think I've ever seen a male with such well groomed fur. The one on the end is actually very handsome."

"Handsome?" Meoocki hissed softly. "Did you hit your head while we have been here learning how to be submissive to males of our species Nikkei?"

"No! I just think he is rather..."

The shadows of four large figures fell over their table and the four friends turned to look directly into the stern faces of four Kavalian men from the Puma Bane Pride. The Puma Bane Pride were the enforcers of her father and grandfather's will, and there were very few who considered a visit from the Puma Bane beneficiary in the least. Their uniforms immediately set them aside from others as they wore black pants and combat boots with the khaki colored shirts. All of them wore rank insignia on their shoulder boards, but everyone within the KFI knew who Puma Bane soldiers were. Three of the men were lower in rank than the fourth and a quick glance from Nikkei told her he was an officer with the rank of Captain.

"Nikkei' Kagur... you are to come with us." The Captain was obviously leader of the Puma Bane squad and it was he who spoke.

Nikkei knew immediately that something was not right. She was never referred to by her Kavalian name. Kagur was the Pride name of the man who had adopted her father when he had become a Kavalian citizen. She and her brothers bore this surname, though most everyone considered them members of her grandfather's Puat Pride. If they were referring to her as a member of the Kagur Pride something was very wrong.

"I am waiting for my transport to return me to Cabelir!" Nikkei spoke quickly trying to keep her voice level and confident. "I do not need an escort sir. Our transport should be leaving shortly."

"We are not here to escort you wench!" The Captain spat with contempt. "We are taking you into custody! It has been decreed and ordered that you are to be given to the brothels on Nefoa for your mother's actions! I intend to see we enjoy your female charms before we take you there!"

Nikkei came to her feet angrily her blue eyes wide in disbelief. "I am the daughter of Marshall Pusintin!" She snapped. "You have no idea what you say sir! I wish to speak with my father!"

"Who do you think signed the order?" The Puma Bane officer stated tossing the data pad onto the table. "You will come with us now and do so quietly. I do not wish to make a scene here by beating you for your insolence! It would devalue the profit your father is making off of selling your whoring hide!"

"You lie!" Nikkei snarled. "My father would not do this! I want to speak with my father! You will let me..."

The officer's large hand whipped out and slapped her hard, snapping her head back and staggering her to the floor. "You do not know your place wench!" He growled as he stepped closer to stand over her.

The many dozens of Kavalian civilians in the area were rapidly putting as much distance between them and the Puma Bane soldiers as they could. They were notorious throughout the KFI as ruthless warriors and skilled above all others. They were also known as the enforcers of the Prefect's will. No one wanted to cross them in any way or get on their bad side for they had free reign to do what they wished.

Linay dropped to the floor instantly next to Nikkei, her hands going to her friend. "She has done nothing wrong! We have done nothing wrong!" Linay shouted looking up at the officer. "Why do you do this?"

"Take them all!" The Puma Bane officer ordered now. "The wench could probably use the company! And we can make some profit ourselves!"

"No!" Linay barked. "You can't do this!"

"We are Puma Bane whore!" The officer viciously growled. "We can do what we want! We can..."

Linay's eyes grew wide as she watched the blade of the sword emerge from the chest of the Puma Bane officer just below his sternum. She was secretly studying as much medical science as Nikkei was able to smuggle to her and Linay knew immediately upon the rush of the released air she heard that his entire diaphragm and lungs had been perforated completely. Nikkei sat up quickly now as well, pushing back against her in horror and they watched the face of the Kavalian male Nikkei had been admiring appear from the side as his fingers tightened on the bone shaped pommel of the sword and he yanked the nearly one meter long blade out of the officer's chest. Nikkei could only watch as his ocean blue eyes glared angrily at the now dying Puma Bane officer.

"Others of your foul, cruel Pride will follow you into the abyss soon scum!" He snarled savagely.

"Hatos!" The voice of one of the others barked out as the screams of horror and alarm began to sound all around them. Nikkei and Linay saw the other three men from the table now as well and each of them had already dispatched the remaining three members of the Puma Bane squad, their cooling bodies now on the floor and the blades of the three men wet with their blood.

"It is time to go Nikkei." The male voice spoke causing Nikkei's head to whip around once more and settle on those eyes. The Kavalian male extended his hand out to her as she and Linay looked at him in horror.

"You... you killed him!" Nikkei gasped.

The Kavalian nodded. "Yes. We must go before more of those within the Spaceport come to investigate!"

Nikkei shook her head. "No! I... I must contact my father! He..."

The Kavalian leaned over and snatched the data pad from the table and held it out to her. "The scum was not lying to you Nikkei!" He hissed. "It was your father who signed the order for them to arrest you! See for yourself!"

"No!" Nikkei barked. "No! My father would not..."

Linay took the pad from his outstretched hand and activated it. Her dark eyes grew wide as she began to read. She looked up and stared at Nikkei. "He's telling the truth Nikkei!" She gasped holding out the pad. "Your... your father ordered it!"

Nikkei grabbed the pad from her and her eyes showed the horror at the truth as she saw her father's electronic code at the bottom of the order to have her arrested and imprisoned in the brothels on Nefoa. She shook her head slowly unable to comprehend that her father would do this. He was stern with her yes; he hardly ever showed her affection as was the Kavalian way, but to do this?

"Wh...why?" Nikkei sobbed turning her blue eyes up to look at the Kavalian who had saved them. He appeared no older than perhaps thirty years of age, still a child in many respects among Kavalian males. His actions and skills however spoke of him being something much more however.

"I do not know all of it... and it is better if you hear it from your mother." He replied gently.

"My mother?" Nikkei asked now. "What do you know of my mother?" She scrambled to her feet.

"Has... has he hurt my mother? Has he..."

Hatos'Nruarani shook his head. "No... your mother is safe." He replied.

"Who are you?" Linay demanded. "What do you want from her? From us?"

"I want nothing." Hatos spoke. "Our orders were to watch over you and protect you should the need arise. This morning, only a few hours ago actually, we received new orders to retrieve you and insure you were spirited away to safety."

"Orders?" Nikkei asked. "Orders from whom?"

"My uncle. Pian'Nruarani." Hatos answered. He took Nikkei's arm in his grasp. "Now... forgive me... but we must go and I would rather not have to pick you up and carry you."

"Go? Go where?" Nikkei demanded. "I am not going..."

"If you remain here you will be killed." Hatos spoke. "All of you would have spent your remaining years on Nefoa in the brothels of that vile world entertaining every Kavalian pig who could afford to fuck the Marshall's daughter. And believe me Nikkei, there would be many who would save their credits to do just that."

"You have killed Puma Bane Pride officers!" Linay hissed vehemently. "Puma Bane officers! We will be flogged and tortured for this!"

"That is why you are going with us!" The new voice spoke softly. They turned to see the older Kavalian male come up holding Gualli's arm. "We must go now! Our ship is waiting in orbit and we can slip away into the crowd but we need to go! Your mother Jalersi will explain everything when we are safe."

"But..."

"Nikkei do you wish to be a whore for every Kavalian soldier who can afford to purchase an hour with you?" Hatos snapped softly. Nikkei looked at him with wide blue eyes filled with fear. "I did not think so. Come... we must go quickly."

Whether it was the inbred submissiveness of Kavalian females or simply the shock at what was happening, Nikkei was docile as she let Hatos take her arm and lead her into the crowd. She would discover soon enough what was going on, and the shock and horror of what had been planned for her would diminish over time.

The hatred and anger for her father however, that would grow as she discovered more and more about what was happening and those feelings would remain for the rest of her natural born life.

Walter and Daba entered the small room off the landing bay where their ship was now nothing more than a smoldering slag heap. Ceneia looked up from the contraption of equipment she was sitting in front of as they entered, Hval and Olar providing security. Ceneia had been able to salvage three of the powerful transmitters from the rear of the corvette and connected them all together with the single power node that had survived. With a jumble of wiring and conduits that Walter and Daba had secured from a very frightened local merchant she had been able to build this machine in just over four hours.

She stood up as she was wiping her hands and looked at them. "Ok... I have broken so many Union regulations and codes by building this I can't even begin to list them. This is it though."

Walter stepped up to her and looked at the square shaped box with a single computer keyboard and screen. "Will it work?" He asked quickly.

Ceneia nodded. "I had to reroute the power connections and I'm tapped illegally into the spaceport's power supply. It was built with Limian power conduits and I had to jury rigged a transformer to make them compatible, but yes it will work." She looked at him. "It will send one twenty second transmission before the entire thing overloads and fries. We'll be able to transmit it but not receive and we won't know if anyone answers."

Walter looked at her. "Ceneia..."

"Damn it Walter... it's the best I could do!" She spat. "Olar and I were barely able to save the three transmitters we did. I had to cobble the parts from them to make one, and then I had to recharge the single power node that survived! I...!"

Daba stepped up to her quickly and took her hands drawing her close. "Peace Ceneia." She said softly. "It is alright."

Ceneia nodded and took a deep breath. "I'm sorry Mistress." She spoke. "We've been shot down before... but I've never had anyone try to kill me while I'm on the ground. It's very unnerving."

Walter chuckled softly and squeezed her arm. "I told you it would be interesting flying for me." He said. "And I know you have done your best." He looked at the transmitter once more. "Will it burn through the Deutrino field surrounding the city?"

Ceneia nodded. "Yes. That's why it will burn out once we transmit. The power needed for such a thin beam to penetrate the field is extreme." She answered. "Where do we send it Walter? It won't reach Apo Prime. Not from here. The automated monitoring stations along the border will deflect it as an unknown signal and scramble it. It definitely won't reach Earth and... Earth!"

"Ceneia!" Daba asked. "What is wrong?"

"Son vada carians! We've been trying to stay alive and I forgot!" Ceneia declared.

"Forgot what?" Walter asked.

"The Coven! They launched terrorist attacks against specified targets on Earth!" Ceneia declared.

"Terrorist attacks!" Walter gasped.

Ceneia nodded quickly. "The Netnews recording was old, it was an interview by the Prime Minister actually but it said that Zarah Leonidas was captured and raped by Coven personal who wanted the location of the Mindvoice ship from her. It said Aikiro was dead, killed by the Feravomir. Yuri was believed gravely injured and that they were searching for her. It reported that Prince Androcles took all of his brothers and sisters aboard the SCIMITAR with the High Coven riders and dragons and jumped out of the system to protect them while the Durcunusaan got things under control on Earth!" Ceneia told them excitedly. "The report was several hours old and it was automated since nothing was penetrating the Deutrino field, but that is what I was contacting you to report when everything else happened."

"Zarah?" Walter gasped.

Ceneia shook her head. "All the report said was that she was still alive. There was also an attack on the Kavalian embassy in Sparta!"

"Nubou the Kavalian bastards!" Walter snarled. His mind was running different options over and over and he looked at Ceneia. "Does this thing have enough power to transmit to a specified channel?"

Ceneia shrugged. "It could." She answer. "It will shorten the transmission length if I adjust it to a specific frequency though."

"How long?" Walter asked.

Ceneia shrugged. "Ten seconds! Maybe twelve!"

“Do it!” Walter snapped.

“What channel?” Ceneia asked as she squatted back in front of the machine.

“The coded auxiliary fleet channel of the SCIMITAR.” Walter answered.

Ceneia looked at him. “Walter... we don’t even know where the SCIMITAR jumped to.” She said. “How do we...?”

“This report you saw on the Netnews... it said Andro took the Coven riders and dragons with him yes?” Walter asked.

Ceneia nodded. “That is what the Prime Minister told the Netnews in the report yes.” She replied.

Walter nodded quickly. “I spoke with Helen very briefly before we left Earth. She was Mindvoicing with Arzoal at the time when I contacted her and she mentioned something about Andro and The Wilds and Kranek. I don’t think she realized I overheard her.”

“Kranek?” Ceneia said. “There’s nothing on Kranek except some underdeveloped settlements.”

Walter nodded. “Which is exactly what Andro would look for in a place to train the Coven dragons. That boy thinks outside the box, just like his father. If he took the Coven riders and dragons with him, then that is where he is going.”

“Holy One are you sure?” Daba asked.

Walter looked at her. “What other options do we have?” He asked. “The SCIMITAR will be in The Wilds. The transmission won’t have to pass through the border scramblers. It’s our best shot.”

“A direct link to the SCIMITAR’s coded alternate fleet channel will mean we can only send words Walter.” Ceneia spoke. “The AFC’s are low power passive receivers.”

Walter nodded with a smile. “I know. And if it gets through I know just the words that will bring Andro running here without question.” He looked at Daba. “If what you and Ceneia think is true is actually true?”

Daba looked at him. “What do you mean?” She asked.

EARTH SPARTA

“...will insure this is passed to the Prime Minister immediately Lady Tarifa.” Laustinos spoke from the transmission. “She is still meeting with Queen For'mya at the moment, but I will hand carry this to her myself!”

Tarifa nodded as she looked at the man in the transmission from her home. “This is top priority Laustinos! Interrupt her if you have to! For'mya will want to know as well! Where is Aricia?”

“Queen Aricia has just returned to Sparta. She went directly to where the Prime Minister and Queen For'mya are meeting at the Senate Building.” Laustinos answered hesitantly as he fingered the data pad in his hand.

Tarifa had been informed that Deia was in a private meeting with For'mya and had been transferred to Laustinos’s office instantly. Tarifa knew the man to be practically worthless when it came to anything political. Like any other woman who came in contact with him when he was in the same room as Dysea, she had long ago detected his infatuation with the emerald eyed elf Queen Tarifa considered a dear sister. He walked the line among Lycavorian males when it came to Dysea, always doing whatever he could to be in the same room with her and then quite brazenly making it known he was interested in her. His actions were tolerated because of his position and because Dysea was so devoutly in love with Martin, that no other male even came close to him in her eyes. Tarifa was among those who secretly believed that Dysea was the Queen who Martin most loved after Aricia. She was the first he had turned among his three turned Queens, and Dysea was the one who had been the one with him the moment he had discovered his true nature and history. Tarifa was also one of only three women outside of his Queens who knew that Dysea was able to take Martin’s full unshielded aura during their times of passion. His blood was more deeply embedded in her body and this allowed her more of a natural resistance to his aura than Anja or For'mya. Like Aricia, she was still able to function and think when gripped in the throes of his aura, and for this reason alone Tarifa felt the way she did. Laustinos had about as much chance of stealing Dysea from Martin as he did in ever becoming Prime Minister of the Lycavorian Union.

“The moment we end this transmission you will take this to them!” Tarifa ordered. “Is that clear?”

“Forgive me Lady Tarifa... if it is so important why didn't you just go to the Senate Building yourself?” Laustinos asked smugly.

Tarifa glared at him in the transmission. “I have... I have other issues here to deal with!” She barked not wanting to let everyone in the government to know she had four Kavalians in her home who would likely end up very dead if it was known where they were.

Laustinos nodded his head. “As you wish.” He spoke.

“Have our rescue and recovery teams found anything of those missing from the Kavalian embassy?” Tarifa asked.

Laustinos shook his head. “It seems everyone is accounted for now.” He replied. “The death toll was very great. Fully one third of their embassy staff as well as senior members of their senior staff.”

Tarifa cocked her head. “Which ones?” She asked innocently. “I had a meeting with this Ambassador Jiss scheduled for next week to discuss ratification of a trade agreement that would have greatly benefited our poultry stocks.”

Laustinos shook his head. “I'm sorry Lady Tarifa; you will not be having that meeting. They have reported Ambassador Jiss as being one of those killed in the assault, as well as the Kavalian Prefect's daughter Jalersi, two senior military officers and his grandson Karun. To my knowledge the Kavalian government is already beginning to blame us for not providing enough security for the outside of the embassy. I am embroiled in trying to make them see they did not request our assistance so they can not hold us to blame.”

Tarifa nodded her head. “Very well.” She spoke. “Please get this information to Deia and have her contact me if she has any questions.”

“May I ask where you received this information Lady Tarifa?” Laustinos asked. “This evidence is... it is very volatile and it could cause a great many problems.”

“Yes... plotting to kill the royal family should cause problems!” Tarifa snapped. “If Deia wants to talk with me have her contact me on my personal channel! I will be waiting!” Tarifa ended the transmission bluntly. She hated having to deal with Laustinos. She turned to where Pian and Jiss were standing outside the range of the holo transmission cone. “Whatever doubts I may have had are now gone.” She stated looking at them.

“You trust this man to get the information to your Prime Minister?” Jiss asked.

Tarifa nodded her head. “He may be a joke of a politician, but he knows who leads the Union.” She answered easily. “He walks on very thin ice with Deia and the Queens right now for other reasons. He will not do anything to make them angrier with him than they already are and he will not risk alienating himself from the corridors of power.”

“I... I thank you for allowing what you have done so far.” Pian spoke looking at her.

“Why... why would your leaders set themselves on this course?” Tarifa asked. “Even with Aikiro dead, they must know the High Coven war will not end. They must know their course of action is flawed. There is no way Pusintin could ever gain the throne of the Union.”

“I don't believe they knew of the High Coven's actions on this day, so that would not have factored into their thinking.” Jiss spoke. “For whatever reason, they believe this turn of events will somehow keep the Union from responding in a warlike manner to whatever else it is that they have planned.”

“They can't simply believe we will sit by and do nothing.” Tarifa said. “Targeting the royal family? That is not the action of sane leaders Ambassador.”

Jiss nodded. “I could not agree with you more Lady Tarifa.” Jiss answered. “As I told you earlier, my views on matters are very different than yours no doubt, but I do not wish to see my people bear the brunt of what these actions will surely result in. At least that is the view I have. The Prefect and Marshall Pusintin seem to think you will not go to war if Martin Leonidas and others are dead.”

Tarifa shook her head. “I don't know what they think would stop that from happening.” She stated.

Pian nodded. “That is the piece of the puzzle that we do not have.” He stated.

“Knowing Pusintin like I do... it will most likely be something we can not imagine or suspect.” The new female voice said. They all turned to see Jalersi limping heavily as she came into the room.

“Jalersi!” Pian exclaimed as he started for her.

Tarifa got there first using her elven speed and agility and she placed a shoulder under Jalersi's arm and helped to support her. “You should not be up.” Tarifa stated.

“Your doctor... she said movement will help it to heal faster.” Jalersi said shaking her head. “And I do not wish to simply lay around.”

“Anuk is the senior Field Medic in the Union.” Tarifa said quickly. “Don’t let her hear you call her a doctor. She hates when people do that.”

Jalersi looked at her with wide eyes. “She is not a doctor? Her skills... her skills are...” She gasped.

Tarifa shook her head. “No. Anja offered to have her go to some additional training to become a certified doctor but Anuk refused. She said it would take her away from the soldiers in the field who need her more. Anja instead placed her in command of all medics and Healers who are not part of the planet based commands. Essentially she holds the rank of Admiral and commands all the Healers and medics that operate as part of Union Fleets.”

Pian stopped next to her and took her other arm gently. “You should move slowly Jalersi. Do not strain yourself to much.”

Jalersi looked up at him and the look of concern in his face made her feel warm all over. She gripped his arms as she looked at him with stunning blue eyes. “Did you...?”

Pian nodded. “I ordered my brother to have Nikkei taken.” He said. “There have been four of our finest Pride warriors following her since our first night together my love. Wherever she is they will make sure she is safe. They will contact us when they have her on one of our ships and are clear of any Kavalian fleet forces.”

“When Pian?” Jalersi asked. “I worry for her.”

“A few hours more I would think.” Pian said. “We can not contact them any sooner from here. They will not fail my love... I promise you that.”

Jalersi nodded and looked at Tarifa. “I can not... I can not thank you enough for what you have done.” She said. “You believed in us.”

“My daughter believes in you.” Tarifa said. “And I believe in my daughter. Your son’s words to me I believe. Trust begins in the simplest ways, and it has begun this night with us Jalersi. My daughter and your son have connected us now, and it is up to us to discover the rest. My father once hated my mate because he did not discover who Isra was before making a decision. He believed things about him that I allowed him to believe because of my emotional state at the time. I swore never to let that happen to us.”

Jalersi nodded. “What about now?” She asked. “Your mate and your father?”

Tarifa chuckled. “There are times when I have to pull the two of them apart.” She said. “The Spartan Wine flows freely when my mate and father are in the same room. And it is always an event to watch too.”

“I do not drink.” Jalersi said.

Tarifa nodded. “Neither do I.” She said. “I do like coffee however.” She looked at Pian and Jiss. “For all of us?”

Jalersi nodded. “I think we would like that.”

“What do we do right now?” Jiss asked.

Tarifa met his eyes. “We wait for the moment. Deia will contact me soon I would imagine and you can speak to her directly. Right now... right now our biggest concern is my husband Isra and Anuk’s husband Daniel. They know we are here and they will contact us sooner rather than later. Once they discover you are here they will come here immediately. Then we will need to find a safer place for you.”

“They will not...” Jalersi began to ask.

Tarifa shook her head. “No!” She stated emphatically. “If Anuk and I trust you... Isra and Daniel will trust you. Right now... right now all we can do is wait until Deia contacts me. If what you say is true then they will know who Ardis is... they will know who I am... and they will be watching our home. It is safer for us inside right now. Our home is very secure, and help is only moments away.”

“Your dragon’s presence will deter them somewhat as well.” Jalersi said.

Tarifa nodded. “Then I suggest we have coffee and wait until Deia contacts us. I know it does not seem like much... but it is all we can do right now.” She looked at Jalersi. “You can help me to get their coffee if you like. I believe there are some things we can discuss.”

Jalersi met those sapphire eyes and nodded. This was another part of her future now and she would not shrink from it in any way. “Of course.” She stated.

“Gentlemen... we shall return shortly.” Tarifa said as she and Jalersi turned for the door.

Jiss looked at Pian who shrugged his broad shoulders. “What do they wish to discuss?” He asked.

Pian shook his head. "I have no idea." He answered. "Each step we take forward is another step into the future and the unknown for me Jiss."

Jiss nodded. "Indeed it is. The question remains... will we see that future."

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO

CABELIR

OFFICE OF MARSHALL PUSINTIN

"...do you mean gone!" Pusintin snarled at the man in the transmission.

"The Puma Bane squad sent to arrest your daughter was killed in the middle of the Spaceport Marshall." The man answered. "Your daughter and those with her were taken. All we know is that they were four Kavalian males. Very well trained to have surprised the Puma Bane team. Witnesses say these four males took your daughter and those with her and blended back into the crowd of thousands in seconds."

"Fuck!" Pusintin screamed. "Lock the planet down! Find her!"

"We have locked the planet down sir." The Kavalian officer replied. "However... over three hundred ships departed before the lockdown was fully implemented. We do not know if your daughter is still on the surface or on one of those ships."

"Then your mission is to find out General!" Pusintin barked. "Tear that planet apart if you have too! I don't care! I want her found and taken into custody! And you can announce that anyone aiding my daughter and her friends will be executed for assisting a fugitive!"

The Kavalian general nodded. "That is what I needed to hear you say sir." He spoke. "We will find her Marshall Pusintin. I promise you!"

Pusintin turned as the transmission went dead and he cursed long and loud, throwing his mug across the room and listening to it smash against the wall. "Fuck!" He said. "The wench is just like her mother!"

"Problem?" Keleru's voice broke into his thoughts and Pusintin turned as the Kavalian leader walked calmly into his office.

Pusintin took a deep breath and quickly got his anger under control. Keleru had to have heard him and if he did he showed no change in his expression. "The Puma Bane team sent to arrest Nikkei was killed." He told him bluntly. He wasn't about to start keeping things from Keleru. They had come this far because they shared all information. "She and the three friends she was with are gone."

Keleru came fully into the office carrying the two data pads. "Killed?" He spoke calmly but clearly surprised. "Who would dare attack and kill a Puma Bane squad?"

"I don't know... but whoever they are they blended back into the crowd and disappeared before the back up team got there." Pusintin answered. "They were very professional and well trained according to the Puma Bane Garrison Commander."

"Pian?" Keleru asked looking at him.

Pusintin shook his head quickly. "I don't think so Keleru. He would not risk his Pride by doing something that stupid." He said. "He may have convinced Jalersi to submit to him, but he is still a Kavalian male. Her children with me would mean nothing to him! He only cares that he finally twisted Jalersi enough against me to allow him lock groins with her."

Keleru nodded then. "That is true. We will deal with Pian accordingly when we find him I assure you. However, you must also realize she may have submitted to him willingly. The Union allows far more freedoms to our females Pusintin, you know this. Perhaps she was enticed by the perceived freedoms she has gained there." He spoke coming forward.

Pusintin met his eyes. "I... no." He said. "I refuse to believe she allowed Pian to take her willingly. There must be something else involved."

Keleru shrugged noncommittally. "When we find them we will discover what it is." He spoke. "You have made your decision as far as she is concerned I see. She will join your daughter on Nefoa?"

Pusintin studied Keleru's face. "Unless you order otherwise." He said. "She is your daughter and I..."

Keleru shook his head. "She is your mate." He stated. "She disappoints me with her actions and she is intelligent enough to know the consequences of her actions. No... she chose the path she now walks, and it is your right. I will not go outside our laws simply because she is my daughter. I can have more daughters if I need them for something. I would prefer to have sons however."

"Then yes." Pusintin spoke. "If and when we find her and she is arrested, she will join Nikkei in the brothels on Nefoa for what she has done."

Keleru nodded. "So be it. You have men active in finding Nikkei and you must leave that to them. Something has come up that we need to discuss."

Pusintin looked at him detecting the tone of his voice. "Something has happened with the plan?" He asked.

Keleru shook his head. "No... our plan is fully implemented and already in motion. It is proceeding according to our timetable. This Immortal scum Phy'iad and his men are moving towards Kranek as we speak and I have four Fleet Groups taking a longer than necessary route behind the Torana Protonic Nebula. They will crush whatever resistance is provided by the Lycavorian ships there and lead the ground assault against the Immortal settlement. Phy'iad and his ilk will complete their portion of the operation easily concerning what will be amassed against the fools there."

"The operations against the Drow are proceeding normally then?" Pusintin asked.

Keleru nodded as he settled into the chair. "Five of the Puma Bane teams have reported in. All of their targets have been wiped out. Your son is leading a small force in tracking two survivors of the attack on Iraruzu. Once they complete that mission five of the nine settlements we targeted will be destroyed completely with no survivors."

"The other four?" Pusintin asked.

"Another thirty-six hours before they report in to their superiors and then our forces will attack just as we did with the others." Keleru answered evenly. "Our complete Hadarian force is staged and ready to begin transit as soon as they receive word that the red haired Queen is in custody or dead. Do not worry Pusintin my friend. The Puma Bane Pride is our finest and most cunning and our forces have been training for nearly a year to take Hadaria. They will not fail. We will need to advise Vice Admiral Menot to have the Hadarian fools delay this hearing another day at least. I will tell him to contact this woman he is communicating with to delay her proceedings. It will allow our teams to further cement their positions and the confusion the Coven has unwittingly wrought to sink in further."

"It will also allow our teams in Sparta to try and discover where Pian and Jalersi have gotten too." Pusintin said. "Sparta is not that big and they would not have left the city."

Keleru nodded. "Our contact will inform me later today if he has been successful in this regard." He said.

"You've spoken to him already?" Pusintin asked surprised.

Keleru nodded. "Within hours of this information becoming known to us." He answered. "Our contact knows he will not be able to remain among his people when they discover what he has done. He is setting himself up to ask for sanctuary."

"Will you grant it?" Pusintin asked. "He's a traitor to his own people and he can't be trusted."

Keleru shrugged. "We will see. So far his information has been completely accurate and he has held nothing back. He could be a valuable asset into the workings of the Union Senate and how they will act when we present our case to them."

Pusintin thought about that for a moment and nodded. "I didn't think of it that way." He said. "But you may be right."

"I haven't made a decision yet... we'll see what else he can do for us until that time comes." He held out the data pad. "Have you gone over your daily reports yet?"

Pusintin took the pad. "I haven't had the time just yet why?"

Keleru nodded. "Understandable. You should read this however."

Pusintin joined him in sitting, taking the chair opposite Keleru and beginning to read the information on the data pad silently. Keleru saw his body stiffen slightly and his head came up. "When did this come in?"

“Early yesterday evening.” Keleru answered. “Our communications people were so intent on monitoring the events happening within the Union concerning what the Coven attempted that it slipped through the cracks until this morning.”

“What do you think the results will be of what happen?” Pusintin asked.

“They are still confused and gathering information.” Keleru spoke. “We do not have much intelligence on this so called Dragon Mountain. I understand it is actually a ship. Or it used to be.”

Pusintin nodded. “So I’ve been briefed yes.”

“Amazing.” Keleru stated. “A ship that can transform into a mountain. Think of the power we could wield with such a ship.”

Pusintin nodded. “And think of the losses on our part if even an attempt to take it was tried. We can use Aikiro as an example. Trying to take that ship was the end of her.” Pusintin said.

“I must inform our contact to obtain any information he has on this ship.” Keleru spoke. “Unlike Aikiro... I will be content to have even a small amount of its vast technology. It is undoubtedly where your brother has gotten the majority of his technological advancements in these last years.”

Pusintin nodded. “Yes... but he is also stupid. He should have been using those gains to build weapons and defenses. Instead they used these advancements to improve the lives of the citizens of the Union.”

“Have faith Pusintin.” Keleru spoke. “When you are once more in power... you can make whatever changes you deem necessary.”

Pusintin nodded. “And I will.” He spoke holding up the data pad. “This is only a partial transmission Keleru. It’s not... it’s not even clear. Union... Coven ships... engaging them... will report.” Pusintin spoke looking up at Keleru. “Have we tried contacting the ship’s captain again?”

“That is why I brought it to you.” Keleru said. “We can no longer communicate with him. He no longer answers any transmissions and though Ritaah is at the extreme range of our long range sensor platform in that sector, his ships are not showing up on sensors. We left a force of twenty-seven assorted ships in this system after moving our main Hadarian Assault force to the Consortium border.”

“They could have moved out of range.” Pusintin offered.

“Yes they could have.” Keleru said evenly. “Given what was recently staged in that area I dispatched an entire fleet group to investigate an hour ago. If a Union ship has been in that area spying on us, we can not let that ship escape. Even using our Jump Gates, it will take those ships two days to reach this area and our full plan will be in motion already. The second report was a bit more interesting however. It came from a border patrol ship on the border of the next sector that was taking sensor scans of a Polarized Ion Cloud.”

Pusintin nodded as he continued reading. “Large explosion detected on surface of Ritaah. Moving to investigate and will advise.” He looked up at Keleru. “There’s nothing on Ritaah Keleru. It’s a jungle world. Not the most hospitable.”

Keleru nodded. “I know. Union and Coven warships in our space concerns me greatly if it is true. Considering the amount of ships and planet based arrays we had in this sector, for a Union ship to slip past unnoticed is not good. It tells us their Shrouds are just as good, if not better than the Coven. That is why we can not let it escape. And now this explosion on the surface of Ritaah? A planet only a single light year from our staging area? It’s too much of a coincidence my friend.”

“I agree.” Pusintin spoke looking at the pad once more. “There’s nothing to indicate what kind of ships they were.” Pusintin said quickly. He snorted angrily. “I thought I was very firm when I told officers they need to be precise in their reports or we won’t know what they hell they mean.”

“You can deal with that when we discover what it is this officer encountered.” Keleru said. “I am going to have Matuarr file an official protest to see what type of reaction we get from the Union leadership. It will only add to the confusion they are already experiencing. You have found the one you were seeking?”

Pusintin nodded. “In Sparta.” He answered. “I’ve already sent a message forward to Team Three to execute her capture when the others act.”

“Good.” Keleru said. “If we are lucky... and so far our luck is holding it seems... if we are lucky we can take out your brother’s entire family in one fell swoop.”

Pusintin looked at Keleru. “Vice Marshall Menot has his instructions for when he arrives on Hadaria I assume?”

Keleru nodded his head with a small laugh. "Oh yes. And he is looking forward to becoming very close with this Hadarian Elder Healer. Buonau is her name. After seeing her image I believe he said she would look good with his cock stuffed in her ass."

Pusintin chuckled and nodded. "That might be interesting to witness." He spoke. "I understand Menot has been banned from just about every brothel within Kavalian space due to his size."

Keleru nodded. "Indeed." He got to his feet. "Keep me abreast of what the task force I sent to Ritaah discovers and inform me immediately should anything arise."

Pusintin nodded. "You know I will."

RITAAH

Channa stared across the large room inside the Mindvoice ship and watched him work.

It had been an eventful last few hours to say the least. They had descended upon the rebel village in haste and unbelievably everyone was ready to depart the village within three hours. They were used to being hunted so it was no matter to be prepared to move quickly, but even so three hours was the fastest Channa had ever seen them move. The move to the Mindvoice ship was also without incident, and Channa had looked on with awe as a massive door in the side of the mountain had opened to admit them easily. It was four hundred meters from the door they had been standing and watching all these years and it allowed everyone to enter the ship freely. It was something none of them had ever expected. Channa had watched as Resumar, Athani and Dario had entered and the ship became even more alive and bright on the inside because of the massive presence of the dragons and others who could Mindvoice easily. She had stood beside Mirra as they watched Resumar Leonidas, the second avatar and several others greet the avatar of this ship. Channa could not believe how easily Mirra moved along the corridors of the ship. She manipulated her huge body flawlessly, with graceful motions of her wings and tail and she very happy to be rid of the hundreds of pounds of explosives that she had carried on her back.

Everything to Channa was just so much more open now. Her mind saw images and places where her new Bonded Sister had been to and traveled to in her young dragon life. The last few hours as they explored their new bond Channa felt her awareness and knowledge of things expand to levels she had never reached. She discovered that Mirra was considered one of the brightest students under the tutelage of the dragon Elder Mother as she was growing. Channa could see and feel each event of Mirra's life as clearly as if it was her own, and now Mirra could see Channa's as well. It was something they would explore deeply in the months ahead, but both of them knew that what was going on around them needed their full attention. They were content to remain in almost constant physical touch sharing their feelings with each other without question and slowly forging their bond tighter and tighter as every minute passed.

Mirra butted Channa in the back of her shoulder tenderly with her snout. Channa had taken to sitting almost exclusively between Mirra's huge front talons whenever they stopped. Many of the Kavalian rebels had given her a wide berth while looking at her in amazement and a healthy dose of fear even while the children crowded around in wonder. It was becoming apparent that the inbred fear of dragons that was somehow coded within the DNA of the Kavalian species was something that could naturally be controlled. Though there were perhaps a dozen mixed elven and Kavalian children from the many relationships that had forged over the last four years, most of the children were pure Kavalian. When Na'lia and the other elves had worked their medical magic and discovered a way to reverse the DNA degeneration and slow deaths of the biogenic clones, they had unwittingly allowed them to have children as well. These children did not have the almost paralyzing fear of dragons that most Kavalians had, and when put together with the half elven and half Kavalian children that were among them, what little fear that was present was quickly brushed aside as the children crowded around Cemath and Mirra easily. They remained away from Sorran only because of the hulking Spartan that was applying the ointment to his wing scales.

[He is very handsome isn't he Channa?] Mirra said softly speaking within a shielded conversation. It was one of the first things that she had taught her new Bonded Sister and Channa was an excellent student.

Channa nodded slowly as her blue eyes followed Dario's movements keenly. He was shirtless and moving around Sorran's huge muscular body applying an ointment of some kind to several locations on his wings which were spread out nearly to their full length on the floor of the ship. His six foot three body was superbly defined in exacting detail Channa thought to herself. [His eyes are... they are beautiful. Are all... are all Spartans like him and Resumar Leonidas?] She asked.

Mirra chuckled softly. [Physically many of them are equally as muscular and defined. Since the return of the King many Spartans have dedicated their lives to being in the finest shape they could possibly be in. The King and all his sons are defined in such a way. Dario is just like them but he is also different however. Just as Resumar is different.]

Channa turned her head. [Different how?]

[Dario has spent much of his life growing and interacting with the Leonidas children. Just being around them has stimulated his and Sorran's bond deeply.] Mirra answered. [Their bond and abilities within Mindvoice are far more than the normal bonded pairs within the Union. It was one of the reasons the King chose them to come with Resumar. There are several bonded pairs that have gained more than they normally would because of their constant interaction with the Leonidas family. Dario and Sorran are among them. He and Resumar are very close.]

[He was holding back when we were fighting wasn't he Mirra?] Channa asked looking at her. [I saw him kill that vampire without so much as any effort or hesitation. He was not really fighting me was he?]

Mirra nodded her massive head. [We did not come here seeking confrontation, and the Spartan in him will not allow him to strike a woman unless he is in danger of losing his life.]

[I was never a threat to him was I?] Channa asked.

[You are powerful and skilled Channa my new sister and together we will grow more skilled and powerful, but no, you were never a threat to him. Though I must say, you surprised him with your very advanced skills and your ability to use your tail to such a degree.] Mirra answered.

Channa looked down and allowed her hand to stroke her smooth tail curled around her thigh as it now was. [My tail.] She said softly. [Most Kavalian women who are biogenically altered choose to take drugs so that their tails do not re-grow. It allows them to better fit in. I did not have that luxury because my eyes never took to the treatments. I like my tail. It gives me an advantage in battle.]

Mirra nodded with a small chortle. [Something Dario discovered unwittingly.] She said. [He has teased Athani endlessly about her tail since they first met. She has slapped him with it on many occasions for being so male.]

[He mocks her?] Channa gasped.

[Oh no!] Mirra replied quickly. [Not like that. Dario is very free spirited and he has developed a very dry sense of humor from his time among Queen Anja and Princess Eliani. In a sense... if Dario is teasing you or joking with you... it is because he considers you a trusted ally and friend.]

[So he is eccentric?] Channa asked.

Mirra nodded. [Very much so.]

Channa smiled. [I like eccentric.] She said turning back to look at Dario once more as he squatted next to Sorran. She saw him nod his head and she knew he was talking to his bonded brother within Mindvoice.

[You find him attractive don't you?] Mirra asked.

Channa nodded quickly. [Mmmmm... yes I do. Very much so.]

[What happened in your past does not hinder you in this regard?] Mirra asked again.

Channa turned to look at her. [I made a conscious decision to let that part of my life go.] She stated. [Mican and Na'lia helped me. If I had not chosen the path I did, I would never be able to go forward into the future. I may have been biogenically altered but I do still wish for the same things as any other female. Children. Happiness. A man who loves me for who I am inside. A man who will be satisfied with only me.] Channa turned back to look at Dario. [If I had held to the hate of what was done to me I would never have those things. I would much rather go after the things I want. Especially now. I am not ashamed of what happened to me... it has only made me more cognizant of insuring I act when I see something I want.]

Mirra gently ran her snout along Channa's shoulder. [Wise words my sister.] She stated. [If that is how you feel... then do not hesitate sister. Spartan men like Dario and Resumar are very quickly scooped up by the female wolves or elves who, like you, know a prize when they see it.]

[How do I approach him?] Channa asked softly.

[You be the woman who was slapping him silly.] Mirra said with a laugh.

Channa looked at her oddly. [I would prefer to worship his body Mirra. Not slap him silly.]
[Do not change who you are for any male!] Mirra spoke firmly. [You are confident and secure in yourself. Approach him as you fought him last night. Without fear. You might be surprised.]

[She is very beautiful brother.] Sorran spoke as he watched Dario spread the apricot ointment on his scales where his tumble through the trees had scraped them.

Dario looked up from his work and met Sorran's eyes. [She smells very good too. You should have seen her when I looked up from the ground and saw those eyes brother. They were two shining orbs of blue.]

[Do you find her as attractive as I do Mirra?] He asked.

Dario smiled. [I imagine so. And you really need to get over that age thing between you. The Elder Mother has stated many times since the Council loosened the restrictions on female dragons that no one can control what their hearts tell them.]

Sorran nodded. [I know. I'm quite sure however there are many younger dragons that have approached her. She has been of mating age for two decades now.]

[So what.] Dario answered. [Wasn't Torma almost three hundred years older than Isheeni when he first approached the Elder Mother? And that was during the war with the fools on Enurrua. Attraction and love know no age limits Sorran, you should know that.]

Sorran nodded his head slowly. Outwardly around others the two of them were always gruff with one another. They enjoyed insulting each other over the smallest things; it only served to strengthen their bond in a way many did not understand. Alone however, alone they could and did have deep discussions on many different topics. They shared everything with each other and held nothing back. It was what made them such a powerful Bonded Pair.

[We should offer them whatever help we can give to them in this period.] Sorran spoke. [Now was not exactly a good time to discover their bond. We are deep in enemy territory with little support.]

Dario looked at him. [We aren't exactly helpless you know. The FAITH is nearby, and if Vonis has vouched for these insurgents then we have an added ally as well.]

Sorran nodded his huge head. [But we are here on the surface of this world. They are not.]

[Good point.] Dario spoke.

His head lifted slightly when the sweet smell of apricots filled his nostrils and he turned slowly to see Channa and Mirra moving over to them. He took the time to admire her even more in the light of the ship. She was taller than most women he knew, nearing five foot nine in height. Her legs were long and deliciously muscular and ended at what had to be the finest shaped female ass Dario had ever set eyes on. Her breasts strained against the civilian clothes she wore, and her raven black hair cascaded around her face and well past her shoulders. If she tasted as good as she smelled Dario had no doubts a night with her would be addictive in every way. Her vertically slit blue eyes were amazingly bright and the color of the deep blue of the Pacific Ocean on Earth, her lips full and incredibly soft looking. And then there was that two meter long tail that danced along behind her. She obviously was extremely adept at using it, and the force of the blows she could deliver with it were exceptional. He could attest to that quite personally considering she had been able to hit him with it half a dozen times. Now however, that tail hung loosely wrapped around her thigh. Dario watched as she marched right up to him and Channa suddenly became much more attractive to him. She did not lack for confidence and she was obviously independent, something that Dario found incredibly sensual in a female. He watched her stop half a meter in front of him and with dozens of Kavalian children and rebels looking on their official introduction took place.

"You do not... you do not have those words stamped on your body." Channa stated confidently.

Dario looked at her confused. "Excuse me?"

"Fuck me." Channa stated calmly. "You asked in your ancient language if you had fuck me stamped on your body somewhere because of the situation you found yourself in last evening. You do not."

Dario chuckled. "Well... it sure felt like it at the time." He answered unable to tear his gaze from those gorgeous blue slit eyes. "I see your bond with Mirra has allowed you to pick up our language very quickly."

Channa stared at this man and though she was only a few inches shorter than him, she felt in awe of his imposing size. In awe and very much wanting to discover what the rest of him looked like. His green eyes were like two points of bright light and they twinkled with a unique combination of intelligence and mischief. She could feel his Mindvoice presence, as Mirra had taught her almost immediately how to detect and recognize another Mindvoice user's distinctive resonance within Mindvoice, and what she felt was very powerful and focused. She could also feel the warmth just grazing her mind and it made her body tepid and her skin tingle. Mirra detected the shift in her new sister's mind and she moved a little closer to her.

[You feel that Channa?] She asked shielded, her voice carrying surprise in it.

Channa kept herself from nodding. [Oh yes! It is warm and inviting!]

[It appears our bonding has allowed you to feel his aura.] Mirra spoke.

[His what?] Channa asked as she continued to stare at him.

[He is Lycavorian Channa.] Mirra told her calmly. [He has the ability to project an aura or sorts. An invisible field of scent and curiosity and small charges of energy that he uses to allow females to know he is interested in them. All female wolves can feel this aura. Athani Leonidas is the only non-wolf who I have ever known that could feel it. At least until you it seems.]

[He is interested in me?] Channa asked with some surprising desire in her voice.

[If what he is projecting is evidence... very much so.] Mirra answered. [But he is also a Spartan raised in the traditional manner by his father and mother. Be confident and strong as your personality says you are. As we were destined for one another sister, perhaps our being here has also brought into your life something which you have not yet known.]

Channa took a deep breath and pointed to the tube Dario was holding in his hand. "What are you doing?" She asked with a slight quiver in her voice.

Sorran had to lean forward and butt Dario in the back of the shoulder with his snout to snap him out of his surreal state.

The young woman asked you a question brother! He stated gruffly. Do not make her stand there and wait for an answer!

"Huh? Oh... it's... it's an ointment for his wings and scales." Dario answered quickly. "It helps them to heal quickly. He's so fat he took out a couple trees when he fell."

Sorran snorted. More like an entire forest it felt like.

Dario turned his head. "Next time duck." He snapped playfully before turning back to Channa. "I can show you how to apply it if you like?"

Channa smiled brightly and stepped closer to him. "Please yes." She declared.

Mirra settled to the floor of the ship then, her amethyst colored eyes gazing at Sorran as Channa turned with Dario to work on his wing. [She is taken by him.] Mirra spoke to Sorran.

[As he is with her.] Sorran answered turning to meet her beautiful eyes. [It seems this mission has brought out much more in all of us than anyone ever anticipated.]

[I would have to agree.] Mirra stated inching ever closer to him.

[Mirra...]

Mirra finally stopped moving for her talons now touched his. [Do I desire you as much as you desire me?] She spoke in a husky voice of her own. [The answer is a resounding yes I do.]

Sorran gazed at her. [There... there must be others who...]

Mirra nodded. [There are.] She stated confidently. [Three have expressed great interest and never fail to try and impress me. Two have even asked me outright.]

[You did not accept? Why?] Sorran asked.

[I have always felt I was different and that the male I chose to spend my life with would need to be different.] Mirra answered. [You are as different as they come Sorran... and that is what causes my talons to ache just being around you.]

Sorran met her beautiful eyes. [My age does not...]

[Are you still able to function at your advanced age of six hundred and four years old?] Mirra asked with a seductive and sarcastic voice.

Sorran's eyes grew a little wider and he knew then he would have this female for himself. She was brash and confident and for a female dragon exquisitely attractive. [I function quite well thank you.] He stated finally.

Mirra leaned her head forward and touched her snout to his with great affection. [Then perhaps when we finish this mission you will see fit to make me yours for you are all I want Sorran.]

Sorran blinked but pressed his snout closer to hers. [I will look forward to that moment Mirra. I will not disappoint you.]

[Hmmm! Of that I have little doubt.] She answered as she shifted her body around completely and lowered it back on the floor when she was resting alongside him. Their abdomens pressed together in the dragon show of intense affection and neither of them pulled away from the contact. [I look forward to that moment.] She said.

Resumar stood with Athani, Vonis, Asharli, Julie and Mican and Na'lia and they watched as Avi and Avatar 341 manipulated the side by side control consoles against the wall. Not really understanding what they were doing Mican looked at Resumar. His eyes fell on Athani standing beside him, her long tail alternating between twitching slightly behind her and curling around his leg. How to tell her that they were brother and sister? Mican had once planned a great speech where he would reveal this information to either Athani or Jalersi whenever he had the opportunity to see them. Now however, standing and looking at her beauty and confidence, that speech had been lost.

“What are they doing?” He asked finally asked Resumar Leonidas curious as they all watched the two cyborgs.

These men and women had arrived at their small settlement and did not blink at the biogenic Kavalian clones, or those who were pure Kavalian. They treated everyone with respect and sincere concern. Mican had never taken the time to discover much about the Lycavorian people, as he was more concerned with staying alive and keeping those with him alive. Seeing their interaction with his rebels, how they viewed them as allies without question stunned him to a large degree. They accepted and adapted to the changes that had occurred in the last hours with barely any effort, as if it was the most natural thing in the universe. Resumar Leonidas and this vampire colonel Vonis had refused him no answer to a question he asked. Mican had fought and killed many vampires in his years, but this Vonis was different. He was confident, keen of mind and he in no way acted superior to Mican or any of his people. None of them did for that matter. Several of the Spartan troops had even carried small Kavalian children on their broad shoulders as they moved through the jungle to the Mindvoice ship. They did not hesitate to help carry whatever they could even though they were loaded down with equipment as well.

Resumar turned to look at him. “They are trying to establish a secure communications link via subspace to my father on Earth. We need to report what has happened and that we are continuing with the mission.” Resumar told him.

“I still don’t understand why you want to destroy this ship.” Na'lia asked him. “It seems like... like such a waste. The technology alone could...”

-The technology will be preserved Na'lia of the Elves- Avatar 341 spoke as he and Avi finally turned from the two consoles. -But the Sub Pralor Resumar Leonidas is correct. This ship must be destroyed-

“Why?” Na'lia asked again.

-VORTEX Cruiser 341 is not a Seed ship- 341 answered. -I have downloaded and analyzed the information Avatar 41 has passed to me and the most logical course of action is to download my computer core and then destroy this ship. If allowed to fall into the hands of those who would use the technological advancements this ship can provide for war and oppression, there is very little that could stop them-

“But King Leonidas already has a ship like this.” Mican said. “Doesn’t he? He has not used those advancements for war?” He asked.

-City Ship 41 is not a warship- Avi answered. -It was designed for the purpose of spreading life. The technological advancements the Union has procured from City Ship 41 technology is all defensive in nature-

-And King Leonidas is the descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar- 341 added. -It is not within his biological makeup to seek oppression and war-

“But he is a Spartan!” Na'lia exclaimed. “A warrior! Descended from warrior Kings!”

-King Martin is a warrior unequaled- Avi agreed with her. -The difference is he will not use his skills as a warrior to enforce his will onto others. I am the Avatar of City Ship 41 and I am fully aware of every piece of technology that was shared with the Union engineers that came from City Ship 41. None of it is being used directly as a weapon to conquer others-

“We have no interest in conquering others.” Resumar spoke now. “Only to live happy and free and raise the children we have through the years.”

“Avoi.” Athani spoke softly Resumar’s words having special meaning for her.

“They are right my wife.” Mican spoke. “If my...” His eyes darted to Athani quickly and he saw her look at him oddly before he continued. “If the Kavalian Prefect or Pusintin were to discover this ship... if the High Coven were to discover and seize this ship... it could very well spell the end of us all.”

Avi also noticed his inflection and tone of voice and he activated his internal sensors and began to run a series of tests that only his mind could see.

“There is... there is so much we can learn from it though.” Na'lia said.

Athani nodded. “That is why Avi and Avatar 341 will download the core before we destroy it. We won’t lose that knowledge...” She said. “Only the means by which we study it. Trust me... Resumar’s mother Anja will be giddy when she discovers the wealth of medical knowledge on this ship.”

-This was only so we could contend with the effects of the...- 341 began to speak.

-It will be in the databases for us to study- Avi interrupted him quickly. -Resumar... there is a communications blackout surrounding Earth and all military channels within the Union-

“A blackout?” Res asked perking up.

“What sort of blackout?” Vonis asked.

-A Level Six Communications Blackout- Avi answered. -I am unable to penetrate the command overrides-“Avi... you helped design the command overrides.” Vonis said.

-Yes Colonel- Avi answered. -However... I designed them in such a way to not allow me access should a certain level be reached for the sake of security. I did not want individuals to be able to breach secure communications should I be captured and reprogrammed-

“You can reach no one?” Res asked. “Not even Andro?”

-Avatar 341 and I were able to monitor and record several Netnews broadcasts. We were unable to penetrate secure Union channels however. The Netnews broadcasts provided the reasons why- Avi answered.

“And they are?” Resumar asked feeling a sinking feeling in his gut.

-It seems there has been an attack against your family Sub-Pralor Resumar- 341 answered him. - Another Sub-Pralor... your sister Zarah... she was attacked and...-

Resumar looked at him for a moment. “And what?” Res demanded stepping closer. He looked at Avi. “Talk to me Avi!”

Avi had been so named by Endith because it was much easier to say than Avatar. The name had stuck to him through the years however. Hardly anyone ever called him Avatar 41, and he rarely ever responded to that name now. He had been designed as a learning cyborg, part tissue and part autonomous lifeform. His time with King Martin and his family had given him the opportunity to learn vast amounts of knowledge in regards to moods and emotions. It was the reason he could not let 341 answer Resumar's question. -Zarah was violated Resumar Leonidas- Avi answered. -Xaxon's descendants Dante and Javier Moran were among those who took part in this act-

Athani gasped and grabbed Resumar's arm tightly. "Resumar no!" She hissed in horror.

-The Netnews reports that we were able to view state that there was a rather vicious battle between Andro and the Moran brothers- Avi continued. -Helen is responsible for killing the Empress of the High Coven during an attack she led against Dragon Mountain-

"She's... she's dead?" Vonis gasped now as he too stepped forward.

Avi nodded. -Your sister Yuri was apparently gravely injured by Androcles before he had to pull back because of his own wounds. Lucia Moran is being named as the initial person who saved Zarah's life while Androcles and others did battle with her brothers and a High Coven commando team that infiltrated the city around SODRAG. Prime Minister Deia's statement to the Netnews channels was brief and vague in details. She has another briefing scheduled for six hours from now our time-

Vonis looked at Resumar quickly. "That's why." He said.

"What do you mean?" Resumar asked.

Asharli stepped forward quickly now. "When she... when she revealed her identity to us... she said she had her own reasons for doing what she was doing." She spoke. "This must be... this is what she meant!"

"Avi... contact my brother!" Resumar snapped turning back to him.

Avi shook his head. -The SCIMITAR left Earth orbit with all of your older siblings and all of the High Coven dragons and riders just after these events took place. Even if there was no communications blackout, we do not know where the SCIMITAR has gone-

"Nubou!" Resumar exclaimed spinning angrily in place.

"Avi... you sure they said my mother is dead?" Vonis asked.

Mican looked at him with stunned shock in his eyes. "The... The High Coven Empress is your mother!" He snarled.

Vonis met his eyes. "That woman may have given birth to me but she was never a mother!" Vonis hissed back. "Avi?"

-The Netnews reports are very certain of that Colonel Vonis. It was one of the first facts that the Prime Minister confirmed- Avi answered.

Resumar turned back to him. "Avi... can you reach my mother on Kranek?"

Avi looked at him. -Easily. If she is aware of these events, and she probably is, because she is off Earth and in The Wilds she would not fall under the Communications blackout-

"Resumar my love..." Athani spoke. "Why?"

"That is where Andro will go." Res said.

"Res are you sure?" Vonis asked.

Resumar nodded without pause. "I know how my brother's mind works Uncle. He said something to Arran and Denali before we took this mission. It was many months ago, right after the Coven came to Earth. Deni told me when Athani and I went to SODRAG. Andro said 'We make our own history by the paths we choose to take.'"

Realization blossomed in Vonis's eyes now. "Your sister Normya marrying the son of Cha'talla. Your mother working with them and living among them for so long now." He said softly. "A new path. A new history."

Resumar nodded. "Yes. That is where Andro is going. He will take the Coven dragons and riders with him and finish their training there."

-You must also be aware Sub Pralor Resumar that a Kavalian Fleet Group has been dispatched to this system to investigate the battle between your forces and the Kavalian fleet forces left in system- 341 spoke. -They will arrive in two days maximum-

"Shit!" Resumar swore. "When it rains it pours!"

-There is also a single Kavalian ship approaching Ritaah from the adjoining sector- Avi said. -It will arrive here in just under twelve hours-

"A warship?" Mican asked.

341 shook his head. -It is too small for that Mican. I estimate a Border Patrol Craft of some sort- He answered quickly. -Preliminary sensor readings indicate a vessel heavy with scanning equipment-

"It's a Recon Ship." Asharli spoke again. She turned to Mican "We saw several as we were coming into the system. They must have detected the explosion of the STRIKER on the surface and are coming here to investigate. The Kavalian Border Patrol Ships are used as early warning ships and are equipped with some of their most powerful scanners. Detecting the explosion, even from the border of this system would have been easy for them."

Mican nodded. "She is correct."

"Crew?" Resumar asked.

Mican shrugged. "No more than a hundred and fifty. They are atmospheric capable ships as well, so they will probably land to investigate. They..." Mican's eyes grew wide. "Yes!"

Na'lia looked at him. "Husband... what?"

Resumar smiled as he met Mican's eyes. "We let that ship land and then take it from the Kavalians." He said. "Will it fit three dragons and all of your people?"

Mican nodded. "Easily. They usually carry portable sensor platforms that they deploy to replace those that are old and broken. If we remove them we could fit five hundred if we squeeze them in."

Resumar nodded. "Mican... will you work with my uncle in putting a plan together to take that ship when it lands?"

Mican nodded. "Without question." He answered immediately.

Resumar turned to Julie who had remained silent so far. "Julie?" Julie looked at him her dark eyes holding a certain brightness in them. "Are you ok?"

A smile slowly spread across Julie's face and she nodded. "I am... with Aikiro dead... I am finally free." She said softly. "I can... I can get my life back. Part of it anyway."

Resumar nodded. "Yes you can." He said. "I need you to work with Dario and insure that the rest of Mican's people are brought here."

Julie nodded quickly. "Of course! Anything."

"Channa and I will assist her." Na'lia spoke now. "The other settlements know us and will listen to us."

Resumar nodded. "Very well... but you need to stay here for now."

Na'lia looked at him. "These are my people now. I will not abandon them."

“I’m not asking you too.” Resumar spoke. “However... your sister is with my mother and I’m quite sure she would like to talk with you, even briefly, so that she knows you are safe and alive.”

Na'lia's eyes grew wide. “Oh... I would so... yes!”

“Perhaps... perhaps Athani could assist your friends and Channa.” Mican spoke. “It is well known who she is and to see her now, back among her people helping them, it would go a long way to motivating the others.”

Athani squeezed his hand and reached up on her tip toes to kiss Resumar's cheek. “I will help Dario and this Channa. Mican is right... it might serve us to have the others see me so that they know there is much more to life than what they have known these last years.” Athani stepped close to him and everyone saw her tail wrap around his leg as her arms went around his waist. “They need to see they can be so much more.”

Resumar nodded as he pulled her tightly to him and kissed the top of her golden blond hair. “Then let's get started.” He said.

SCIMITAR

Sadi Leonidas was lost.

Lost in the overwhelming force of Andro's aura and passion. She did not know where it had come from considering what they had all been through in the last few hours, but Androcles Leonidas had returned to their quarters with his blood on fire. Sadi knew Carisia harbored a fear that Andro would think less of her after what Dante and Javier had done to Zarah, and thirty seconds after arriving in their quarters, Carisia no longer held that fear in her heart. He had gone straight to Carisia and picked her surprised form up in his arms and laid a kiss on her that had stolen her breath away and had Carisia whimpering in as yet unfelt passion. That single kiss had ignited the entire room, and Sadi and Ne'Veha practically leaped into each other's arms as he carried Carisia into their bedroom leaving a trail of clothes behind them.

That had started five blistering hours of passionate and inventive sex between the four of them. Sadi didn't think their lips or their tongues had ceased working during that entire five hour period. Kisses, caresses, and sharing Andro's magnificently huge cock. Sharing each other with barely a pause. While Carisia's fresh rose petal like scent surely tickled Sadi's female nose, it was Ne'Veha's sweet amaretto scent that had elicited the most response from her Sadi found out. She and Ne'Veha spent the first two hours of their tryst feasting on each other with equal gusto, exploring even more than they had their first night together, while Carisia's wails of delight filled the room. When Carisia collapsed exhausted it was Ne'Veha's turn, and she lasted less of a time than Carisia. Sadi knew by the time her beautiful mate got to her he was only just beginning to come alive and he proved to her in the first few moments that it was she who ruled his soul.

Ne'Veha and Carisia were curled into each other's arms on the bed completely exhausted now, even as Sadi's body was still singing out her exquisite delight at the attention Andro was showing her. He had taken her three times now with unrestrained zeal. He had brought her to the most crushing orgasm of their time together with just his soft lips and the tip of his tongue, teasing her until she was writhing on the sheets unable to keep the passionate screams of lust from escaping her lips. Even as her mind was still grasping what she had just felt ripping through her, it began again when his throbbing twelve inch cock impaled her in one glorious, soul shattering plunge. When his large balls bottomed out against her upturned ass, Sadi could do nothing but wrap her arms and legs around his powerful form and hold on for dear life as another will breaking orgasm smashed through her. His male aura was inciting her to new heights of their union, completely unrestrained and unleashed and focused entirely on her to Sadi's everlasting joy. Sadi knew that only she could feel his aura pulsing as it was, focused exclusively on her, wrapping around her and teasing her female senses until she could not take it anymore. When his huge cock ballooned inside her depths and she felt his searing come erupt into her clenching pussy, Sadi's mind sank into a coalescing stream of consciousness that had shattered the boundaries of everything she had experienced up to this point in her life. Andro's mind and essence filled her in a way they had yet to experience together and she surrendered all that she was to her husband and mate.

Even as they shuddered in the aftermath of that first titanic explosion, Andro was pulling her from the bed and moving to the couch in their quarters. Here he began to possess her with powerful twelve inch strokes of his enormous cock. Sadi could do nothing but grip the edges of the couch and howl out her bliss as one volcanic orgasm crashed upon the other like the waves of a raging ocean storm. As he held her convulsing body in his strong arms, his lips and nose firmly nuzzling her ears and neck and throat, Sadi could feel every fiber of her man pouring into her. He was relinquishing all that he was to her and Sadi knew then that not even the gods could separate them now. The strands of their minds were so tightly intertwined it was impossible to tell where one of them ended and the other began. And as they wrapped each other within the fibers of Mindvoice and beyond, they drew three others with them tighter and tighter until there were no difference in the strands and fabrics of five individuals. Twice he had filled her with his essence on their couch and she had to do nothing but sing out her brazen answer to her mate's attentions.

Now as they stood beneath the hot stream of water, Andro stroked into her with slow, sensual and loving movements that caused sweet pleasure to undulate through her with every movement. Tiny mini orgasms swelled through her continuously now, and she could feel the pulsing veins on his beautiful cock pressing against the inside walls of her tightness as he lifted her and lowered her back down with exquisite slowness. No matter how often they made love, Andro's cock could and did stretch her to the extreme. He was larger than any man that had ever shared her bed, and though there weren't that many to begin with, the most exquisite thing about him was that Androcles Leonidas knew what to do with his delicious equipment. His hands never stopped stroking her skin and his fingertips danced along the outside of her taut thighs and down her legs which were securely locked around the back of his powerful legs. Even though her arms were wrapped around his broad shoulders, she was completely suspended off the floor of the shower by his dominating manhood. He nuzzled and suckled her full breasts, teasing her eraser hard nipples with his extended fangs until she was hissing out her glee.

Sadi Leonidas was not meek by any means, and every time he moved to withdraw his cock and plunge back into her she made him pay for that action by squeezing her pussy muscles as hard as she was able along the entire length of his cock shaft. His eyes would close tightly as agonizing pleasure seared his own pleasure receptors, his mouth open in silent gasps of ardor. Sadi took an almost perverse pleasure in seeing how she could make him react, his lavender and pines scent filling her senses to overload. She had let all of her shields come tumbling down this night, hitting Andro with the full force of her female aura, and seeing him react with such zeal in his actions only made her love him more.

Their lovemaking this night was more about completeness than physical pleasure. The complete and utter devotion that he felt for Sadi most of all, but for all of them as well. This was about Andro letting his mates know that they were everything to him, and the four of them letting him know that no man could ever take his place. While Lu'ria may not have been with them physically, her resonance within Mindvoice they felt as if she was next to them the entire time.

"Jainn aur enyla!" Sadi gasped in Andro's ear as she felt her belly tighten and undulate with the force of the orgasm that was rapidly building. This movement only caused his delicious cock to impale her deeper. "Cova Andro! Cova!"

Her handsome mate did not disappoint her as he tightened his grip on her firm ass and began to speed up his strokes, slamming into her with confidence and power. Sadi's jungle green eyes rolled into the back of her head as she brushed her cheek against the side of his face wondering how she had ever been so blessed. Her firm breasts were crushed against his steel hard chest, her nipples burning points of hardness that seared into his equally hot skin. Her golden blond hair was plastered to her face and his shoulders, her fingers clutching at the back of his neck. Sadi screeched out her irresistible enchantment when he rammed home within her, pulling her ass down on his cock completely as his own howl of release filled the small shower stall. As with so many times before Sadi felt his enormous cock swell inside her, the throbbing veins alive with life just before his eruption. Her eyes sprang open, black surrounding the green cornea now, her wolf fangs bursting from her gums and Sadi Leonidas sang her eternal love to whomever would listen as Andro's seed filled her for the fourth time this night. Once... twice... four times... five huge eruptions before it began to ebb, each one causing her to see stars and gasp at the intensity of what he could make her feel.

Sadi yanked his head back, gazed into his azure wolf eyes, stared at his dual wolf fangs and then she crushed her lips to his in a kiss of surreal passion. She felt his arms squeeze her to him now, even as she milked his cock for every precious ounce of his come. She wanted all of him inside her, unwilling to allow even a drop to escape her pussy. Sadi had no doubts that with the amount of his passion he could produce, when the time came and they decided it was time for her to bear him a child, it would not take much for that to happen. He broke their kiss without speaking and lowered his soft lips to the hollow of her throat, nuzzling her slick skin with the gentleness of a parent nuzzling a newborn child. He dotted her skin with soft butterfly kisses even as he staggered slightly and placed his hands on the wall of the shower stall. Sadi had no fears of falling, for her legs were locked firmly around his hips.

[It is... it is you who commands my soul KertaGai.] Andro's voice filled her mind in the shielded connection that only they shared and she smiled wistfully at the soft brush and caress of his powerful aura as it began to lose its passionate claim on her senses even while swirling around her unwilling to let her come down. [I will love all of you... but only you will have sway over my soul.]

Sadi pulled his face away from her throat and gazed into his wolf eyes, the tips of his dual fangs just visible below his upper lip. She smiled dazzlingly, revealing her own fangs and her wolf eyes filled with shameless love.

[Aur enyla my Androcles Leonidas.] Sadi spoke softly stroking the skin of his cheek with her fingers and allowing her female aura to flutter across his essence and seeing his azure eyes twinkle in delight. [Words... words do not exist that could begin to describe to you what I feel for you.]

Andro stared into her shining eyes for a long moment. [Have I failed Sadi?] He finally asked her softly. Sadi's jungle green eyes filled with puzzlement. [Failed? What do you mean?]

[Everything that has happened?] Andro spoke softly. [Have I failed by allowing it to happen in the first place?]

[That is what this night was all about my love? You love us breathless because you think you have failed us somehow?] She asked.

[No!] He answered quickly. [This night was about me needing you. Needing all of you. I am asking you... my KertaGai... I'm asking you if I have failed in my duties as a Prince and brother..]

Sadi gripped his face tighter in her hands. [Do not speak such words Andro!] She told him forcefully. [You have failed no one, least of all your sister! And Zarah would be the first to tell you that! I forbid you to place blame for what has happen upon your shoulders! As would Zarah! Do not begin to doubt yourself over something you could no more control than the weather.]

[Sadi I...]

[Do not forget my love... I have seen inside your mind deeper than anyone ever will except for Elynth.] Sadi spoke. [I have seen what you did. What you continue to do every day. You... we... we walk a different path Andro. And you have remained true to that path. The Feravomir told me once... she told me to pursue what our hearts told us. That we should not wonder what could have been when we had the opportunity to make it be.]

Andro nodded slowly. [Never doubt.] He said.

Sadi nodded. [Yes. Do not waste time looking back on what you may or may not have done my love.] Sadi said stroking his cheeks and running her fingers along his mustache and goatee. [Zarah is alive and we will help her to heal. We will see her through this as a family should, and as you have already said, she has the biggest piece of that already. Do not take upon your shoulders a burden that is not yours to bear.]

[You will... you will not think less of me?] He asked her softly.

[Think less of you?] Sadi gasped. [Oh Andro...] She wrapped her arms around his head and pulled his face to her throat, feeling his powerful arms crush her lithe body to his. [We would die for you my love! Carisia, Ne'Veha, Lu'ria and I. We would violently and without pause destroy any who tried to take you from us for any reason. Think less of you... son vada carians aur enyla... that is not even possible with how we feel about you.] She whispered. [You are the reason we are who we are. We belong to you and you belong to us. Without you we are nothing.]

[Without you KertaGai... without you I am nothing.] Andro said. [I have known that since I was eight months old and I smelled you for the first time.]

Sadi smiled wistfully once more and closed her eyes in bliss. [I know my love.] She said. [I have known as well... it just took me a little longer to figure it out.] Sadi reached over and slapped her hand on the shower controls stopping the water. [Take me to bed my handsome mate Androcles Leonidas. Take me to bed and let us lay with others who we love just as much as they love us.]

Andro didn't hesitate and pushed away from the wall and stepped out of the stall. He held Sadi's firm ass in his hands as he padded across the floor to the bed. His azure eyes gazed at the two figures already there, surprised when a pair of maya blue eyes and stunning dark orbs looked up at them. There were no words spoken and Carisia simply tossed back the sheet as she and Ne'Veha made room for them between their bodies. Andro didn't hesitate and while Sadi clung to him tightly he lowered them to the bed. He rotated his body until he was on his back, Sadi releasing a soft groan of pleasure as he slid from the warmth and tightness of her pussy. Sadi and Carisia pressed tightly to his sides, burying their faces into his neck while Ne'Veha shifted her body and settled between his legs, her head on his abdomen, her firm conical breasts pressing delightfully against his cock. She cared not that his and Sadi's passion coated his now softening cock, and her dark brown hair splashed across his lower abdomen as she closed her eyes in happiness.

This is how sleep finally took them into its soothing embrace.

"...what the hell got into you last night?" Arrarn asked him as they walked down the corridor heading for the mess lounge.

Arrarn and Denali had found their brother by his scent easily as pure and pungent as it was this morning. They met their brother as he walked slowly reviewing several data pads of reports he had retrieved from the bridge, both of them with grins of satisfaction on their faces.

Andro looked up from the pad. "What do you mean?"

"What Arrarn means is whatever got into you last night permeated the entire deck and affected all of us!" Denali spoke with a grin. "I don't think Lisisa and I have had such a night of hot sex as we did last night. It was incredible!"

Andro stopped walking and looked at them. "Wait a minute... you..."

Arrarn chuckled now. "Man... I about wore Narice and Toria out." He said. "I've never felt that charged with energy. Narice lasted longer than Toria but she finally had to beg me to stop. I couldn't get enough of her! Either of them... but her most of all!"

"Sibfla!" Andro exclaimed.

"Forgot to engage the dampeners didn't you big brother?" Denali laughed now. "Boy can you imagine the looks on the faces of any crewmen who cut through deck ten last night. I bet the corridor was filled with the screams and groans! Lisisa about blew out my eardrums with her howling!"

"Jeez! That means..."

Arrarn pounded him on the back. "You bet it does! I haven't seen Malic or Moneus yet, but they'll probably want to thank you as well." He said with a grin. "Thank you Andro... I think we all needed it." He said softly.

Deni nodded. "It's been a rough last day or so Andro, for all of us. You especially. It was nice to forget about it even for a little while and show the women we love what they mean to us in every way."

They turned the corner of the corridor and entered the large mess lounge in another fifteen steps. It was three quarters full of crewmembers, and Andro's eyes went immediately to where he felt Sadi, Carisia and Ne'Veha. They were sitting together with Eliani, Carina and Nyla. Malic sat between Eliani and Nyla and both of them were pressed very close to him, while Carina had an arm around Moneus's waist as they sat with their backs to them. Narice and Toria were having a rather dynamic conversation with his mother Isabella and Lisisa. Andro felt the flush of embarrassment when Sadi's eyes lifted and her face became bright and animated when she saw him. This caused everyone else to turn and Andro suddenly felt very small and very embarrassed. Arrarn and Denali shook their heads with smiles as they walked up to the table. Denali went immediately to where Lisisa sat, leaning over to give her a blistering kiss, which she returned with equal fervor. Arrarn did the same to a very receptive Narice and Toria while Andro moved timidly to the seat between Sadi and Carisia.

[We forgot to engage the psychic dampeners my love.] Sadi told him as he sat down.

Andro looked at her. [Yeah... Arrarn and Denali were reminding me of that fact.] He answered.

[Is that such a bad thing?] Ne'Veha asked with a smile. [Given what has happened perhaps it was what everyone needed. I for one am not going to complain.]

Carisia smiled dreamily and looked at Andro with those Maya blue eyes filled with love and devotion. [Neither am I.] She said leaning over to Ne'Veha and brushing her shoulder with her cheek. [Your blood is very sweet when you are gripped in passion Ne'Veha. Sadi will have to show me what it is she did to you to make you scream so loud.]

Ne'Veha blushed. [Carisia stop.] She gasped.

As close as they were, Moneus was the first to lean over to Andro across the table and nudge him in the arm. "I want you to feel free to leave the psychic dampeners off whenever you like brother." Moneus said with a grin.

Carina slugged her new husband in the gut and he groaned. "God... you are such a pig Moneus!" She exclaimed. Her face told a different story however as she looked radiant and extremely satisfied.

"I happily concur." Malic chimed in from his seat between Eliani and Nyla.

"I'm sorry ok!" Andro hissed loudly. "I forgot! So sue me!" He declared using a phrase his mother had often used in the past.

This brought a round of soft laughter from all of them and Eliani leaned into Malic's side with a huge smile on her face. "I don't know... I thought it was the perfect tension reliever." She said.

Malic leaned over and nuzzled the side of her neck and ear and all of them saw her fern green eyes close in delight. "Was that before or after I nibbled on..."

Nyla's hands whipped around to cover his lips. "Malic my love... we can not reveal our Eliani's secret weakness!" She said quickly. "It would not be proper. If I remember correctly, it was before you nibbled on..."

"Nyla!" Eliani exclaimed in mock horror as she turned.

The Leonidas children were like their parents in that they were not shy. All of them broke out into soft laughter then and silently thanked their brother for the strength of his aura and how it could affect them all as tightly tied together as they were. Andro shook his head as Carisia beamed and leaned into him. He looked at Eliani intently.

"Zarah?" He asked.

"I gave them both an additional sedative last night." She answered immediately. "They should be waking up in a few hours and then the healing will need to begin." She answered reaching over to squeeze her brother's hand.

The other men and women in the mess lounge could only watch and admire the fortitude of the Leonidas children. Their family had almost been torn apart and yet they were rebounding and laughing with each other in a discrete manner. Their sister lived, and while the events of the last few hours were beyond horrific, none of them had given up for an instant. They would support their sister with all that they were until their dying breath.

Andro nodded at Eliani's words and took the mug of coffee Sadi held out to him. "We will need to put together a schedule for the riders and dragons for when we reach Kranek." He said. "It will be condensed... but they can handle it." Andro turned to Narice. "Narice if you would..." Andro looked up when he felt and saw Sa'sur enter the mess lounge carrying a data pad and looking quite intense. His alarm bells began to go off and he came to his feet slowly as she came over to their table directly. "Sa'sur?"

"A transmission came in late last night." She spoke quickly holding out the data pad. "It was on the SCIMITAR's AFC channel Andro."

"The AFC?" Andro stated as he took the pad. "We don't use the AFC channels for anything anymore."

Sa'sur nodded. "I know. It's a general transmission but it was directed specifically at the SCIMITAR's AFC. And they had to know we would be in The Wilds or else it would have been scrambled by the border COM nodes. You had better read it Andro. I think it has to do with you."

"Me?" Andro said as he activated the pad and began to read. It took all of five seconds and then he looked up. "Deni... Arrarn, Malic and Moneus... meet me in the Captain's Ready Room in twenty minutes! Sa'sur... you're with me."

Andro handed the pad to Sadi as he grabbed the coffee from the table and moved quickly beside Sa'sur heading for the bridge. The others crowded closer to her as she read from the pad. Isabella moved closer as well. "Sadi?" She asked.

Sadi looked up her jungle green eyes wide. "It's from Walter." She spoke looking at Ne'Veha before meeting Isabella's gaze. "The AFC's do not allow for normal communications. It only allows single words to be broadcast in a set time frame."

Ne'Veha nodded quickly. "Every pilot is assigned a specific code word or words. Never more than two words though." She continued. "You are assigned this word or phrase when you complete flight school and it is listed in an enormous database at Fleet Headquarters. The word never changes throughout your career, and for the most part we do not share these code words with anyone else."

“It is basically a very advanced form of code words that are used when main COM arrays fail.” Sadi finished. “Ne’Veha, Arrarn and I have our own code words.”

“Wow... even I didn’t know that.” Deni spoke.

Arrarn shook his head. “It’s not something we pass around as Ne’Veha said Deni.” He spoke. “When you take command of your own Fleet is when you would discover these code words exist.”

“So what are the words in the message Sadi?” Eliani asked.

“Spartan. One. One. Crimson Storm. Iraruzu. Lu’ria. Drow. Come. Urgent. Walter.” Sadi said softly.

“Crimson Storm!” Arrarn gasped with wide eyes and coming to his feet. “Sibfla!” He spun from the table and dashed for the exit Narice and Toria watching with wide eyes.

“Sadi... Sadi what does this Crimson Storm mean?” Narice asked turning back to look at Sadi with large dark eyes. After last night, both Narice and Toria knew they could never love a man more completely than they both loved Arrarn Leonidas. They were older than him yes, but he spent more hours than they could even recall making them scream his name in unadulterated pleasure last night and the last almost three months prior to now. This fact more than anything showed them they were part of his life forever now. No matter what had happened to his sister, he harbored no hidden feelings of distrust within him. They were the wives of a Leonidas now, and both Narice and Toria could not have been more proud of that fact.

Sadi looked at her. “I don’t know.” She stated.

“Anse!” Deni spoke quickly. “Arrarn obviously did!”

“Arrarn has a different command authorization than the rest of us.” Sadi answered him quickly. “It stands to reason he would know the code words of anyone associated with your father or us for that matter.”

“It has to be Ceneia’s code word. The Guardian of the Line would not have his own.” Ne’Veha said getting to her feet.

“What the hell is going on? Man we don’t need anymore surprises!” Deni snapped angrily.

“Whatever it means... we will all go to the Ready Room.” Isabella spoke reaching for Carina’s hand as she came to her feet. “Something has happened and we all need to know what it is.”

The others didn’t hesitate and began to follow their vampire mother out of the mess lounge with barely a pause.

“...came in eleven hours ago Milord.” The COM officer told them in the holoimager from the bridge. “We don’t get AFC transmissions anymore so the duty officer called me. He thought it might be something important. It was garbled and I had my people spend the next few hours cleaning up the signal as much as we could. It took quite a bit of work but what you see before you is the complete transmission.”

Andro sat next to Sa’sur in the Ready Room off the side of the bridge. “No source?” Andro asked.

The officer shook his head. “No sir. AFC messages are low power and random. They can bounce between repeater stations for weeks before finally reaching their intended destination end. It’s why they are no longer used. Whoever sent this knew the SCIMITAR’s AFC channel and that it why it came directly to us. They also knew we would be outside the borders of the Union or the BSN’s would have scrambled it completely.”

“Excellent work Commander!” Andro said with a nod. “Excellent work. Thank you!” Andro turned to look at the others as the image faded.

“Andro... what is going on now?” Isabella asked. “What is this Crimson Storm that Sadi mentioned? She and Ne’Veha spoke of code words that all pilots are assigned.”

Andro looked at Arrarn quickly and then back to her. Arrarn leaned forward at the table. “Crimson Storm is the personal command code word for Walter’s STRIKER pilot Commander Ceneia mother.” He spoke. “It means that Walter’s ship has been destroyed and they are down but alive.”

“Destroyed?” Isabella hissed. “Destroyed by whom?”

“We don’t know.” Andro said.

“I confirmed with Vice-President Aihola that Drow Senator Daba and Majeir were with him as well as three of War Master Tareif’s Dragoons.” Sa’sur said.

Majeir?” Nyla spoke now. “Isn’t she the dragon hatchling that always follows Walter around but is not bonded to him?”

Eliani nodded to her vampire lover. “Syrilth’s sister. She’s the one who decided the fate of Maraud. Only she’s not a hatchling anymore. I saw her the last time we had a gathering at the estate. She’s just as large and beautiful as her sister as dragons go and she most definitely has got Walter’s disposition.”

“What is Walter, the Senior Polemarch of the entire Union Ground Forces, doing in The Wilds without backup?” Isabella was the first to ask. “He still has a very generous bounty on his head after his actions during the Battle for Earth.”

Walter Carson, Guardian of the Line of Leonidas, and now the Senior Polemarch of the entire Lycavorian Union Ground Forces was also well known as the only man in history to have killed more Immortals in battle than even the King he served so diligently three thousand years ago. With his actions during those days on Earth, Walter had personally killed or ordered the deaths of over sixteen thousand High Coven Immortals.

Andro looked at her. “Senator Daba is Lu'ria’s mother.” He said softly seeing everyone turn to look at him. “Majeir is meant for Lu'ria and Lu'ria is...”

“She’s the fourth woman that Sadi spoke of isn’t she Andro?” Carina asked very softly looking at her brother. Her keen mind had put it all together more quickly than the others. “The fourth one who will share your life?” Her eyes went to Sadi who sat on the other side of Andro.

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

“She’s... she’s a Drow?” Eliani gasped in surprise.

“That is not a bad thing Eli.” Deni said.

Eliani’s eyes narrowed. “I didn’t mean it like...” She spoke quickly. “It’s just... it’s surprising that’s all. You know how deeply they are committed to father. To our family. They are even more devoted than the Durcunusaan at times.”

Isabella nodded. “Yes... and in some cases they would be considered fanatical in their devotion to him. To our family.” She echoed Eliani and looked at Andro. “You realized this will have a rippling affect through the Drow people when it is discovered. You have read their ancient scrolls?”

Andro nodded. “When I realized that Lu'ria was meant to be with us. Yes.”

“They regard your father... they regard us to be almost sacred in many respects and when it becomes known that a Drow will be a Leonidas and a Princess it...” Isabella looked at him.

“What do you mean mother?” Eliani asked.

“The ancient Drow scrolls have a passage in the Yara Parma, their Holy Book if you will. Dysea and I read the entire series of scrolls while we were pregnant with Normya and Zarah. Miai had just given birth to her first child with the Drow twins and they wanted us to act as Guardians.” Isabella spoke softly. “The firstborn of many, the son of knif'rt kal'daka eyes and virile manhood. He will have the heart of amber and wrap his hands in white satin. Yvalm xuil to'ryll euol, uuthli ujuol lu' charnag d' olath solen, whol jal draeval orn nind ssinssrigg.”

“Bound with greenest gems, bluest glass and deepest of dark orbs, for all time will they love.” Carina said with wide eyes.

Isabella nodded. “And she will become Valsharess d'Ilythiiri. Queen of the Drow.” She finished.

“Mother... do you honestly think I... we care about that?” He asked motioning with his hands to indicate Sadi, Carisia and Ne'Veha.

Isabella smiled gently and reached over and covered his large hand with hers. They all knew Andro to be very private and reserved outside of their family. He was also still trying to come to grips with the undisputable fact that like his father, he was meant to have more than one woman in his life that he loved and that loved him.

“No... I know you don’t care about it.” Isabella spoke softly. “But many millions more will care about it. This is... all of you are certain?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.” He said finally looking up. “According to Aunt Aihola... Walter was taking Daba and Majeir to Iraruzu to meet with Lu'ria. Majeir was finding it more and more difficult to block Lu'ria from her thoughts and Walter decided they needed to be together.” Andro chuckled without humor. “It’s our fault really.”

“What do you mean Andro?” Eliani asked.

“When Sadi and I came together it increased our MV resonance to the point that Ne'Veha and Lu'ria could finally feel us.” Andro said. “When Enylarcopri and then SirsanGai joined us, it only increased the strength of our connection ten fold. Lu'ria's powers have been growing even though she is so far away and Majeir could no longer deny it or block it. Walter sensed this because they are as close as friends could be. It's not a matter of actually power and abilities, but more that we are so tightly knit together."

"The question remains... what does this message from him mean?" Moneus said. "His ship is obviously down and I for one have never known Senior Polemarch Carson to panic over anything."

"It can't be anything good." Malic echoed. "Why else would he use the AFC and this code word?"

"Deni..." Andro said looking at his brother. "I need you and Lisisa to continue on to Kranek with the others and finish the training of the High Coven riders with Malic and Moneus helping."

"Us?" Denali spoke. "We..." His eyes grew wide and he focused on his older brother. "And where will you be?"

"I'm taking a STRIKER and Elynth and going to Iraruzu. I..."

"We are taking a STRIKER and going to Iraruzu." Sadi corrected him. "Iraruzu is a haven for the scum of the universe and you and Elynth will not go alone. We forbid it."

Andro saw the set of her jaw and then saw similar looks from Carisia and Ne'Veha before smiling and turning back to his brother. "We are going." He said correcting himself. "Walter is obviously in trouble enough for him to send this." Andro announced firmly. "Ceneia would not have sent the words Crimson Storm unless his ship was really destroyed. We're talking about Walter here... and whoever was able to destroy his ship is a threat we can not ignore as Malic said. And it is a threat that endangers Lu'ria which is something I...we will not allow. She is part of us and we of her and I will not dismiss that."

Denali nodded his head immediately. "Most of the class work sibfla is done now. If any is needed Vincix can handle it." He spoke softly running different things over in his head. "Lisisa and I can take care of the aerial training and Malic and Vincix can handle the ground training with Moneus and the Durcunusaan we have on the SCIMITAR."

Lisisa watched him formulate plans in his head and she reached over to take his arm. Her long years of slavery and solitude had hardened her to everything until the man she called father had saved her. And now to have the unquestioning love of Denali, at this point Lisisa had far more in her life than she had ever hoped for. And it also helped that he could steal her breath away with just a kiss, not to mention set her blood on fire in their bed.

"We can handle it Andro." Lisisa said.

Andro nodded. "I know. Arrarn... continue with your pilot training. Cha'talla has already assigned an entire valley for the STRIKER's in the Strike Wing. Get them on the surface and get them going. Use the SCIMITAR as your command post. I was going to say to keep the ships Shrouded at all times, but if Cha'talla is no longer concerned about others discovering where his tribe is, then there is no reason to be shy."

Arrarn nodded. "No problem."

"I will go with you." Isabella said.

Andro shook his head. "No mother." He told her quickly. "Zarah will need your strength. With two of our mothers and Lucia... she will be in good hands until we return. We are leaving in two hours and I suspect we will be no more than three days. We should actually be turning around to come back when you arrive at Kranek."

"I wish you would reconsider and take a NOVA III Andro." Sa'sur spoke referring to the new class of NOVA-Class Attack Cruiser.

Andro shook his head. "We are in The Wilds now. While there is no law prohibiting this from happening, I do not want to offend any of our allies by being out and about with warships in the places many of them trade and conduct business."

"If they are doing business in The Wilds you can be assured it is not approved Trade Agreements!" Isabella snapped.

Andro nodded. "Be that as it may... father and Aunt Deia would expect me to at exercise restraint. At least for now." Andro's mention of their father made all of them look at him oddly and he let his azure blue eyes sweep across the table. "Yes... I am angry with father over what happened. I'm very angry in fact. He is still our father however and he was not himself. I will come to terms with that in my own way and the anger will pass and things will be back to normal soon."

“Andro... Andro he beat you like...” Eliani began to speak gently. “I think we all would understand if you stayed angry for a long time.”

Andro sat back in his chair. “There is too much going on to keep hold of our anger.” He stated. “What happened with father is in the past now. We need to concentrate on our sister and completing the training of the Coven riders. That is our purpose now. Father and our mothers on Earth can handle that... and our mother can certainly handle what is happening on Hadaria with the help she has.”

“Yes.” Isabella said. “When it comes to deviousness and temper Melyanna can most definitely handle those stooges of Buonau.” She looked at Andro. “Don’t you find it odd that all of this is happening at the same time son?” Isabella asked.

Andro met her eyes. “I find everything is odd right now mother. From the moment very Normya’s ship was attacked it feels like everything has been happening has been rehearsed and planned.” He replied. “Too much is happening for all of it to be coincidence. Unfortunately right now we can only roll with the flow as mother says.”

Isabella nodded. “Yes.”

“One problem at a time.” Arrarn spoke mimicking a phrase their father used often.

Andro nodded. “Yes. Sa’sur will keep an open channel between the SCIMITAR and us and when we have Lu’ria and Walter and the others we will contact you and let you know we are enroute back.”

“I have to agree with Sa’sur brother.” Denali said now. “Going alone? It doesn’t feel right.”

Andro got to his feet. “I have my reasons.” He stated simply. “I’m going to say goodbye to Zarah and explain to her what is going on.”

They watched him turn and exit the Ready Room before they all looked at one another. Moneus shook his head finally. “Is it just me... or is he just as pig headed and obstinate as Uncle Martin?”

“No.” Lisisa said. “He’s infinitely worse than father.”

Andro settled next to the bed on the Med Bay and looked at his sister’s sleeping face. Lucia was spooned against her back, both of them sleeping with peaceful expressions on their faces. Lucia’s arm was wrapped possessively around Zarah’s midsection, her face half covered by Zarah’s long hair.

“You’re leaving?” Zarah’s soft voice filtered to him and he looked down quickly with surprise in his eyes.

“You’re awake?” He said.

Zarah didn’t move from where she lay on her side, her fingers interlaced with Lucia’s and holding their hand tightly to her chest. “I smelled you coming down the corridor.” She stated as he settled to the chair.

Andro fidgeted slightly as he got comfortable in the chair. “Zar...”

“I love you Andro.” She whispered. “You have always been there for me... no matter what it was... it was always you.”

“I was not there for you this time.” He stated flatly. He reached out and placed his hand on her cheek. “I can not begin to tell you how sorry I am that this...”

“No.” Zarah spoke firmly. “Do you remember... do you remember the talk we had after you returned from Alba Tau? At your villa?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“You told me... you told me everything happens for a reason.” Zarah said softly. “That for every action we take there is a reaction. For every cause there is an effect.”

Andro shook his head. “This is not... this is not what I had in mind when I said that Zarah.”

“I will not let this destroy who I am Andro.” Zarah said.

Andro looked at her and felt his eyes become moist. “This is not something you needed to endure.” He spoke softly. “This is not...”

“It wasn’t me Andro.” Zarah said. “I... once I knew... once I knew what was happening I did what you taught me. I separated myself Andro. They may have violated my body and parts of my mind, but they did not violate me! I wouldn’t let them!”

Andro stroked her hair gently. “I’m so sorry sister.” He said.

Zarah smiled then and her grip on Lucia's hand tightened. "Through all the horror of it Andro... through it all... at the end I found her. When I tasted her blood... it was like... it was like the finest Spartan Wine I have ever had. I saw her love for me... what she has endured. I have never felt as completely loved as she loves me Andro."

Andro nodded. "She has waited many years to find you sister. Everything she has worked towards has been with you as the ultimate goal."

"And that is the strength I have drawn on." Zarah spoke. "I almost killed her when I took her blood and no matter what happened to me, no matter how violated and sullied and in pain I felt... that knowledge is what frightened me more than anything. This is the love... this is the love I have always wanted Andro."

"You are young Zarah." He said. "Given time and healing you may..."

Zarah shook her head slowly. "Lucia is who I was meant for." She stated confidently. "I see it now just as she has seen it for so long. I... I don't think I will be able to trust another man the rest of my life."

"Then so be it." Andro said. "Just do not dismiss it now. It is something you have always wanted and you can work through this. Lucia will help you. I will help you."

"I do not want to be babied or pampered Andro." Zarah said softly. "I don't want to be treated differently."

"You won't." He said sternly. "I swear to you."

"Then go and find Lu'ria." Zarah said. "She needs you now."

"I can send others if you want me to remain." Andro said. "I can..."

"No!" Zarah said forcefully. "I am a Leonidas! I am strong. As long as I have Lucia I will... I will survive this. I would never forgive myself if something happened to Lu'ria because of me."

"Zar that is not..."

Zarah covered his hand on her cheek with her own hand and smiled. "Go to her Andro." She said. "Lucia and I will be here when you get to Kranek. We will... we will need what you can teach us. And then we will need the Feravomir even more."

Andro leaned over and kissed her cheek softly. "I will return in three days." He said. "I will... I will tell our mothers what you have said Zarah. But you must allow them to be mothers too. You are their daughter and they love you."

Zarah looked at him. "Andro... have you never questioned why you call five different women mother?" She asked. "I know... I know our siblings have asked the question in the past."

Andro shook his head. "Never." He answered. "Each of them is just as much a mother to me as the next. They are bound so tightly together it is very hard to differentiate to begin with. Each of them is my mother, and they will be my mothers until the day I pass into the next life. Nothing and no one will change that."

Zarah nodded. "I feel that way as well." She smiled. "Go to her Andro. And bring her back safely. Or do not come back at all."

Andro grinned and leaned over to kiss her on the lips in a very brotherly fashion. "I will do as you say Milady." He spoke. "Be strong sister. Lucia and I will help you every step of the way."

Zarah nodded and closed her eyes. "I want to sleep some more." She said softly.

Andro smiled and watched as she drew Lucia's hand tighter and drifted off to sleep again. He stood up slowly and nodded.

"Woe be unto the person or creature that ever brings you harm again Zarah my sister." Andro whispered softly his words barely audible. "For they will face my wrath and fury."

Andro didn't see Zarah's face break into a soft smile as he turned and moved out of the Med Bay. He didn't see her eyes flutter open for the briefest moment.

"Avoi." Zarah whispered.

HADARIA
CAPITAL OF UNOPA
ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

Anja looked around the interior of the huge Arch Ministry Chamber and slowly shook her head. She wore the Persian red robes of Queen of Hadaria, every King or Queen having their robes match the color of their hair. She sat in the usual innately carved throne chair that she had tried many times through the years to dispense with. It was the chair of the King or Queen whenever they were in attendance and had been for millennia. No matter what Anja did, she had never been able to get them to disregard it. To her it was a single pompous piece of furniture that implied she was somehow better than everyone else when she was not. Sivana sat next to her in royal garb matching her raven black hair with Persian red trim on the sleeves and collar. Like Anja she had never cared much for the oversized robes and their significance, so she wore them as little as possible. Eurin sat on Anja's opposite side with Ceuma beside Sivana dressed in a plain Persian red cloak and cowl with the hood drawn far up to hide her features. Atropos stood behind the Queen he had served for a quarter century ever alert. Joci and Belen, Anja knew, were watching the proceedings from someplace high up as their guardians. Anja no more trusted the Hadarian Elder Healers than she did the High Coven. She saw Buonau sitting with the Hadarian Elder Council looking positively smug and arrogant dressed in her own elaborate robes as Chief Elder Healer. She saw Rinard sitting with her Aunt Umbra and Seanna's mother Pcillany in the row of seats directly in front of Buonau and the other Elder Healers. Her uncle was no where to be seen Anja saw, and then she knew the rumors she had heard that he was taking no part in Umbra's actions were true. Anja leaned close to her sister and spoke so that she and Ceuma both could hear her.

It was extremely unnerving for Anja to have Ceuma around them at first. Having to look at an exact twin of herself and know that she was a clone somehow felt so very different and unnatural. She and Sivana were dizygotic twins, so while they shared their mother's womb, they did not appear identical in any way. Their DNA was almost identical but that was common with any offspring of the same parents. Ceuma however, she was identical to Anja in every way. Her looks, her DNA and even sharing some of her mannerisms. It was Sivana who actually got Anja to realize that Ceuma was not an oddity. She was a clone of Anja, with the same genes and features as the two sisters. It was Sivana who told Anja that she was always going to be around now, and better to begin to treat her and accept her as a sister than try to deny she existed. And for the last three days Anja and Sivana had done nothing but get to know Ceuma as a person, for while she looked like Anja she was also very different. Joci's mother had spent a year schooling her as a traditional Spartan/Lycavorian woman, and it was a role Ceuma had embraced. She was exceptionally intelligent and dry witted they discovered and as the hours passed by they began to see that perhaps things would not be as bad as they first thought. Ceuma had no desire to be part of any royal family. She wanted to be a Healer and a wife and mate to Joci. She could not stop raving about her ebony skinned husband or how he treated her, and Anja and Sivana both were amazed at how expressive she became when speaking about him. Over the course of these last days, Anja found herself opening up to the idea that having Ceuma around was perhaps not the end of the world.

"I can't stand that smug assed smirk of hers." Anja whispered.

Sivana kept her face neutral and nodded. "Well... we will wipe it off soon enough." She replied.

"I can't believe she allowed the Netnews in here." Anja stated. "She hates the Netnews almost as much as we do."

"Perhaps she thinks publicly debasing you will make her famous." Sivana snarled gently. "Carians I hate this woman."

"Will you allow her to remain in her position when this is over Anja?" Ceuma asked turning her head slightly.

"I don't know." Anja replied honestly. "Her support with the Arch Ministry is significant and she holds absolute sway over the other Elders. They all fear her."

"Then knocking her down several notches is acceptable." Ceuma spoke.

Sivana contained her chuckle. "Oh Anja... it will be so much fun to have Ceuma around us all of the time now."

"Around you?" Ceuma asked in surprise. "What... what do you mean?"

"You wanted to be a Healer Ceuma... well that is what you are going to be." Anja told her. "You and Joci can stay at the palace with Sivana and Belen. I could bring our entire family here and there would be plenty of room. You will live here and stay with us when we go to Sparta every year."

"You do not trust me?" Ceuma said.

Sivana smiled and reached out to take her hand. "On the contrary." She said. "Whether you realize it or not Ceuma... you and Joci just became members of the extended Leonidas family."

"You will have the same opportunities and chances that both Sivana and I had when we got our lives on track." Anja said firmly. "We will not keep that from you. We will teach you all you wish to learn."

Ceuma opened her mouth to reply but the commotion caused many heads to turn as Chief of the Arch Ministry Wiktor and the other members began to file in.

"Here we go." Eurin spoke from Anja's right.

They all watched as the seven most senior members of the Ministry settled into the chairs in the front row, a long curved table in front of them with data pads and pitchers of water on it as well as glasses. Several dozens other Ministers filled in the three rows of chairs behind the seven member senior panel. It was done efficiently and quickly and Anja turned when she felt her great grandfather's unique presence fill her wolf senses. She saw him settling to the chair in the front row with Zaniai, the stern looking man beside him. Anja was surprised when she realized it was her Uncle and she saw Fuleos flash her a hand signal that spoke all he wanted to say. The rumors were true and her uncle was not taking sides with Umbra against her. This gave Anja an uplift in spirit and she smiled at them brilliantly until Wiktor's voice brought her head back around. She tapped the thin oak rod against the small chime.

"This session of the Arch Ministry will now come to order." She spoke firmly. Wiktor waited as it quieted down and members of the Netnews that had been allowed into the chamber were broadcasting the proceedings live and in color across the Union.

Anja watched as an aide to Wiktor leaned in from behind her at the exact same time as one was whispering to Buonau. Anja saw both their eyes go to where her uncle was sitting with Fuleos and Anja saw her aunt's eyes burning with anger at her husband. Wiktor leaned forward in her chair.

"Senior Mage Instructor Vamm... it is my understanding you had a part in bringing this petition to the attention of the Elder Council and this ministry." Wiktor spoke. "I have been informed that you have withdrawn your support."

Anja watched as her uncle, a tall man for a Hadarian, got to his feet easily. "My apologies Chief Minister Wiktor, but your understanding is not correct. I have never supported this action against the Queen. I just have been unable to voice my own opinion until now." He motioned with his hands. "This is my way of saying who I support and who I do not."

"Vamm!" Umbra hissed from across the chamber. "You will sit beside me!"

"No." He stated firmly. "I want the record to be clear Chief Minister. We failed in our charge once to protect Anja and Sivana from fates not of their own choosing. The gods gave us a second chance to do what King Yulu needed us to do. For twenty-five years since Anja and Sivana returned to us I have been silent and watching as others attempted to twist them into something they are not. I will no longer be silent. I support them in all that they do and I refuse to believe any of these charges that have been brought against Anja or Sivana. That is where I stand. And I represent every Mage Warrior across the Union in my words." He said holding up the data pad. "All seven hundred and nineteen of them."

The Hadarian Mage Warriors were the most senior of Hadarian Healers throughout the Union. The most powerful and best trained. They were the ones who staffed the four palaces across the Union, as well as working under many of the most senior Researchers within the Union. They were first trained as Healers and then spent six grueling months training under Spartan Instructors in all forms of combat to better be able to protect those they were charged with. This was an event neither Wiktor nor Buonau had counted on and the ripple of voices murmuring in the assembled gallery was very evident.

Wiktor glanced briefly at Buonau before looking back to Vamm. "Thank you Vamm." She spoke intentionally leaving off his title this time. "Your stance will be noted." Vamm nodded and sat back down with little fanfare, tucking the data pad back into the jacket he wore. Wiktor shifted in her chair and then turned to look at Anja. "Anja Leonidas you are..."

"Queen." Anja snapped.

Wiktor blinked. "Excuse me?"

"You heard me Chief Minister!" Anja stated getting to her feet. "I will refer to you by your title Chief Minister... and I expect the same in return. I am Queen of Hadaria and one of five Queens of the Lycavorian Union. You will use my title when you address me."

Wiktor's jaw twitched ever so slightly and she nodded her head. "Very well. Queen Anja Leonidas, the Hadarian Arch Ministry has called this special joint session to address six charges leveled against you by citizens of Hadaria and by the Hadarian Elder Council."

Eurin got to her feet now. "Six charges?" She asked. "We are only aware of five charges leveled against the Queen. Has something changed?"

Wiktor looked at her data pad. "I will read the charges if you like Divine One."

"Yes... I would like Chief Minister." Eurin snapped. "And I will also file a grievance with this Special Session for not being provided a complete list of the charges the Queen is being charged with to begin with. You can not just arbitrarily add charges at your own choosing and you know this."

"The Hadarian Constitutions states that additional charges may be filed after the original ones if sufficient evidence has been produced and the new charges fall in line with those already being leveled." Wiktor spoke. "Notification can be made at the time we convene Divine One."

"And what is this new charge?" Eurin demanded.

"I will read them all now if you are ready?" Wiktor acted smugly. "The new charge is the most serious and relates to the second and third charges."

"Please do so." Eurin snapped. She looked at Anja quickly as she felt Anja's soft hand slowly wrap around her wrist.

"Charge number one that has been brought against Queen Anja Leonidas is the most serious as I stated. After reviewing the information and relevant evidence given to this Ministry it was our decision to add the charge of Murder."

"Murder!" Eurin gasped astonished as murmurs swept through the chamber. "You can't be serious!"

"We are very serious Divine One. The evidence given to us clearly indicates that the Queen did knowingly delay her departure from the Field Hospital on Z'Qyhieu 5 when informed of Senior Mage Warrior Seanna's injuries. The Queen was the only Healer on the planet with sufficient abilities to render proper medical care to Seanna. The military records we obtained are quite clear. She knowingly delayed her departure from her Field Hospital after being informed of the seriousness of Seanna's injuries. The flight records indicate that her STRIKER was fully fueled and prepared to transport her directly to Seanna's location."

"I made a decision to remain because I was treating several dozen seriously wounded Spartans!" Anja barked.

"Spartans that could have shifted to at least make them stable so that you could respond to a fellow Hadarian who needed your attention." Wiktor replied.

Anja's eyes grew a little wider. "I don't play favorites in war Chief Minister! And your dismissal of the injuries to the Spartans I was treating are disturbing to me!"

"Seanna was an Hadarian who just happened to be your former lover and who had very damaging information in regards to your actions if they ever became public knowledge. The injuries to the Spartans you were treating were not injuries that needed your immediate attention or treatment." Wiktor finished speaking before looking at her. "Your refusal to respond to the transmission for aide for Seanna, this Ministry saw as a deliberate and conscious act of deprived and premeditated murder, hence the new charge."

"That is outrageous!" Eurin shouted.

"You will have time to address these charges in the future Divine One." Wiktor said smugly. "May I continue?"

Eurin's eyes narrowed and she glanced quickly at Anja. Anja gave her a minute shake of her head and Eurin turned back. "Very well Chief Minister." She snarled turning back to Wiktor fully. "Please do."

"The second and third charges have not changed. The second charge is willful acts of a deprived nature that resulted in the death of a fellow Hadarian and the third is neglect of duties as the senior Hadarian Healer on the planet that resulted in the death of a fellow Hadarian." Wiktor said reading from the data pad in her hand. "The fourth charge is perhaps the vilest next to the charge of murder. The fourth charge is levied against you for depraved acts of a deviant sexual nature while within the palace walls as Queen. The evidence supporting these charges has quite unfortunately been circulating across the Union thanks to the inadvertent release by an aide to this Ministry." She looked at Eurin and Anja. "Do you wish to say anything in regards to the fourth charge?"

"You mean aside from the fact that it's bullshit and not true?" Anja quipped. "No."

"Please refrain from using..." Wiktor began.

“Do not tell me to refrain from doing anything Chief Minister. I am still Queen and I will speak however I like!” Anja snarled.

Wiktor’s jaw twitched once more but she took a breath and continued. “The fifth charge is dismissal of the Hadarian constitution by both you and Princess Sivana concerning policies you put in place without the guidance or support from this Ministry or the Hadarian Elder Council. That charge has three sub-categories within the main charge itself relating to specific occurrences where you and Princess Sivana ignored the recommendation or advisement of this Chamber and or the Hadarian Elders.”

Anja rolled her eyes. “With very good reason.” She stated. “But we won’t get into that now.”

“The sixth and final charge is perhaps the most hard to accept. You are charged with the willful neglect as mother to the heirs to the Hadarian Royal Family. This charge has listed four sub-counts within the main one where you exercised depravity in the presence of Retta and Calyb, heirs to the throne of Hadaria, as well as allowing Princess Eliani to marry a Lycavorian male with a known history of corruption without first obtaining the blessing of the Hadarian Elder Council. Allowing your children into your bedchambers while you are taking part in actions with other females is at best un-queen like and at worst disgusting and inexcusable as a mother in my opinion and the opinion of the Hadarian Elder Council and this Ministry.” Wiktor stated.

Anja couldn’t help but laugh and shake her head. “Your opinion and that of the Elder Council in regards to my sexual preferences and what I choose to do in the privacy of our home do not concern me in the least. I have slept with one man and four women in the last twenty-six years and I will continue to sleep with them for as long as I have years left in this life. I rather enjoy our time together. It’s hot and steamy and...”

“That is quite enough!” Wiktor bellowed as Anja’s comment brought forth laughter from the gallery in the Chamber. She glared at Anja with real hate in her eyes. “You will maintain decorum while present in this Chamber and not disrespect this body with your dismissive and disgusting attitude! And I will tolerate no other outbursts from within the gallery either!”

“It does not appear that King Leonidas or the other Queens share your commitment to this supposed arrangement Queen Anja.” Buonau spoke from her seat. “It is well known he left Hadaria quite upset with you, and you have had no contact with him since. Or the other Queens of the Union for that matter.”

Anja met her eyes. “Is that what you think Elder Buonau?” She asked confidently. Anja snickered. “All I will say to that is... you don’t know Martin Leonidas very well at all. And as someone who is supposedly one of the strongest Hadarian healers within the Union, your lack of knowledge of the Lycavorian people as a whole is astounding.”

Wiktor’s eyes darted to Buonau and then back to Anja. “Are you... are you admitting to communicating with the King and Queens while confined to the palace here on Hadaria?” She demanded.

“He is my husband and they are my lovers, fellow Queens and best friends.” Anja stated proudly. “What do you think Chief Minister?”

It was Eurin’s turn to curl her fingers around Anja’s wrist before she got wound up and really let them have it. “Anja is still a Queen of the Lycavorian Union and has duties as such.” Eurin spoke. “Duties this body can not interfere in.”

“All forms of communication off world were blocked from within the palace!” Wiktor snapped. “How was she able to communicate?”

Anja shrugged. “I’ll tell you like I was taught by the man who raised me on Earth. That’s on a need to know basis.” She said with a grin. “And you don’t need to know!”

“You freely admit to violating the restrictions we placed on you!” Buonau barked.

“Last time I checked... I was Queen.” Anja said. “You can place all the restrictions on me that you like when it comes to Hadarian law, but as Queen of the Lycavorian Union you have no say or power over me in the least.”

“You will relinquish these means of military communications at once!” Wiktor snapped. “Any and all equipment will be confiscated immediately! You will surrender it to the Militia Guard!”

Anja shook her head with a laugh. “I don’t think so.” She said evenly.

“This body orders it!” Wiktor barked.

“This body does not tell the Union military what to do.” Anja stated calmly. “And as Chief Medical Officer of that Military, neither do you tell me what to do in that position. As much as you appear to want too.”

“So your hold on the King is such that you have somehow convinced him it is not you who has committed these vile acts? These acts that have been playing across the Union for months now.” Buonau barked from her chair.

“Yeah... and we all know how that happened don't we Elder Buonau.” Anja spat.

“That will not work on the members of the Ministry or the Elder Council I assure you Queen Anja!” Buonau hissed at her.

“Actually... love, trust and the truth worked better.” Anja said.

“Do you wish to respond to these charges now?” Wiktor demanded. She wanted to get this over with before Anja was able to wrest control and favor back to her.

Eurin stepped forward quickly. “I will respond...”

Anja stopped her by taking her arm. “No Eurin.” She said. “I've about reached the end of my patience with all of this crap and I will respond to each and every one of these trumped up charges myself.”

Eurin met her eyes and saw the confidence and pride in them and she smiled. Anja had taught her many things over the years, and even though several hundred years separated them in age, Eurin found she adored the younger Anja. They had worked seamlessly over these last years making several new discoveries while working side by side in one lab or another. She was fiery and brash and exceedingly intelligent as well as compassionate and brave. She handed the data pad to her and nodded. “I will enjoy this.” She said softly.

Anja grinned and leaned over to kiss her cheek. She waited for Eurin to sit down before turning back to Wiktor. “You are dismissing your council?” Wiktor asked stunned.

Anja nodded. “Pretty much.” She said. “Eurin is the Divine One of our people and I don't want her to be tainted by my responses or actions to these fubar charges!”

Anja watched several ministers lean over to Wiktor in puzzlement and Wiktor finally held up her hand to them and looked at Anja. “Fubar?” She asked.

Anja nodded. “Yeah... fucked up beyond all recognition.” She snapped.

Wiktor's eyes grew wide as muffled murmurs swept through the chamber again, some of them hiding laughter at Anja's words. “Your insistence on insulting this chamber with your use of foul language is beginning to tell on us Queen Anja!” She barked.

“You don't say?” Anja said. “How many languages can you speak Chief Minister?”

“What?”

“How many languages can you speak?” Anja asked again.

“What bearing does that have on these proceedings?” Wiktor barked.

“None I guess.” Anja said. “I can speak nine if case you're wondering... and that doesn't include the twelve different dialects of languages on Earth. I speak the Lycavorian ancient language, the vampire ancient language, the elven language, the Folcani native language, and the Nodan and Algolian languages to name a few. And I can swear in all of them real well!”

“I still don't see the bearing your fluency in languages has on the reasons you are here!” Wiktor snapped.

“No... I don't imagine you can see past your own narrow-mindedness.” Anja spat. “That has always been a problem for you Chief Minister Wiktor. Not to mention Elder Buonau and my Aunt.”

“Insulting me only enforces the view of this Chamber in regards to your actions over these last years!” Wiktor snapped. “Do you wish to address these charges or shall we move directly to the next portion of this hearing.”

“Let's do just that.” Anja barked at her.

EARTH SPARTA DEIA'S OFFICE

“They are setting her up. I've seen Wiktor work before... she's a shrewd upaee.” Deia stated from where she sat behind her desk. Aricia, For'mya and Gorgo.

Almost all of the Netnews channels were tuned to the proceedings on Hadaria, with billions of citizens watching across the Union. Gorgo had come here under heavy Durcunusaan guard once Riall moved to the station orbiting earth. With the level six lock down of the planet, only Netnews channels and military communications were allowed, and the Netnews channels were monitored heavily during this time.

“These charges are so outrageous it’s ridiculous to comprehend.” For'mya stated.

“Deia is right For'mya.” Gorgo spoke. “We saw her try the same thing about eight hundred years ago to Anja’s father King Yelu. Buonau was not yet the Elder Healer, but she quietly supported her actions from the shadows.”

“She didn’t succeed did she?” Aricia asked.

Gorgo shook her head. “No. The terms of the agreement he made with them were never released... but Wiktor suddenly stopped all proceedings she was undertaking.”

“Why?” For'mya asked.

“No one knows.” Deia answered now. “What I do know is that Wiktor is not to be trusted in the least. If you ask me... their decision has already been made. Now all we can do is see if they have enough support to succeed.”

“How do we...?”

They all turned as the door to Deia’s office opened and they heard the voices. “It is very important!” The male voice barked. “Now seal the damn building!” Aricia and For'mya got to their feet when they recognized Thoti’s voice.

They watched as Thoti squeezed the Durcunusaan’s shoulder and then proceeded into the office area. “Thoti?” For'mya asked. “What is it?”

Even in only two short days, it was easy enough for Aricia and For'mya to detect the monumental changes in Duewa since becoming Thoti’s wife and mate. It was almost as if she had woken up one morning and decided the life she was leading was the wrong one. Essentially that is exactly what happened when Duewa allowed herself to feel the love Thoti held for her and to return it as much as she wanted. She acted almost like a love struck teenager in the giddiness she displayed when around the man who had altered her life and that of her sons. She had not taught the children a single thing in the past two days, and only spent the days with them learning of what they could do with and without their bonds with Mara and Endeem. Even Nara and Deion had joined them and Duewa had spent hours with them in the villa’s garden seeing and learning what they could do. Her sons joined them for all of it and children will be children. Duewa’s sons had changed from the reserved and quiet boys they had been when they had arrived, to exactly how boys should be at that age.

The data pad Thoti had given them revealed the presence of at least three squads of the Hadarian Elder Militia Guards in Sparta, and these were the men that would try to take Retta and Calyb. Since there were thousands of Hadarians within Sparta, there was no way to put all of them under surveillance. The children were more closely guarded now by Durcunusaan troops that were not readily seen, but it still did not reveal the identities of the men who would try to kidnap them. Duewa had spent several hours going through holo images of men and women who had come to Earth but could find none she knew by face. To Aricia and For'mya it was the ultimate sign that Duewa had indeed changed in so short a time. The data pad she had given them contained information about her mother’s plan to usurp Anja, and Duewa’s role in it. She had given this freely even though it incriminated her as well. She didn’t care about this in the least and her honesty and obvious love for Thoti had convinced Aricia and For'mya. They could smell Thoti all over Duewa, and Duewa's scent always spiked whenever he entered the room she was in and she saw him.

“Duewa just reported from the children’s school.” He told them. “She has seen no faces of Hadarians that she recognizes but she will remain with the Schoolmaster until the end of the day and then return with them.” Thoti spoke. “She is concerned because this is the day her mother wanted the children taken. The day they put Queen Anja on trial.”

“There is additional security around them yes?” Aricia asked.

Thoti nodded. “They would be foolish to attempt to take them... but let it not be said I have ever met an intelligent Hadarian Militia Guard.”

“Well... they have gotten this far and remained undetected.” For'mya said. “Let’s not underestimate them.”

“Point taken my Queen.” Thoti said. “I thought it best to remain here with you in case anything does happen. I have a Heavy Lifter outside with a full squad on standby in the lobby.”

Aricia nodded. “Isheeni and Aurith are circling the city as well.” She said. “Their dragons eyes might detect something our men on the ground do not.”

“Has anyone heard from the King?” Thoti asked.

For'mya shook her head. “He is still at Thermopylae and heavily shielded. The tomb of his father is a natural Mindvoice dampener to those outside. All Helen told us was that he would be meeting someone there and it could be many hours before we heard from him. She has returned to Dragon Mountain with Arzoal to insure several things were complete that she needed to do.”

Aricia slid her hand into For'mya's. “Do not worry Kinsoaurgai.” She said. “He will return soon.”

For'mya nodded. “I know. I just want to feel his arms around me.”

“She is beginning to answer.” Deia barked out, her attention focused on the holomager of the Netnews broadcast.

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

“...Eliani is a grown woman and capable of making her own decisions. I do not know what information you have received in regards to Star Commander Malic, but I met the young man. I've met his parents. They are fine Spartans... and even though Eliani is half Hadarian, she and Malic have become Anomes.” Anja heard the murmurs from the gallery. “It surprised us all, but we were very happy.”

“The supposed mythical bond of the Lycavorian people between a man and woman. Something that conveniently came back into prominence with the return of King Leonidas and queen Aricia.” Wiktör said with contempt. “The Arch Ministry does not recognize it, nor does it recognize their marriage. They share their bed with a vampire female!”

“Nyla is just as much a wife to Malic as Eliani is!” Anja snapped. “She and Eliani are bound together by blood! It was Eliani's blood that saved Nyla's life during the Evolli War! There is not one without the other!”

“Princess Eliani is a lost cause.” Buonau spoke dismissively from her seat. “When she received the order from my office to return to Hadaria and come before us to seek our approval of her marriage to this Malic she told the messenger to... she told the messenger to... ‘go fuck himself’.”

Anja nearly burst out laughing but contained herself. She nodded with no small amount of pride. “That sounds like Eliani.” She said.

“We are more concerned with Retta and Calyb.” She held up the data pad in her hand. “We have concrete evidence of them appearing in your chambers while you were engaged in lewd sexual acts. Twice with the elven Queen Dysea and once when that included the vampire Queen Isabella. Once with King Leonidas. And once with King Leonidas and Queen Aricia. Do you deny these charges?”

Anja shook her head. “Deny them?” She gasped. “Why the hell would I deny them? They were acts of love within the privacy of our home. I'll dismiss how you obtained your so called information for the moment because I'm quite sure spying on the Royal family is against the law in some way. Did Duewa or your other children never walk into your bedroom by accident while you...” Anja stopped talking. “No... wait... I'm sorry. That is not a question I should be asking you Elder Buonau. If I remember correctly you once told me sex is only to produce children. It should not be used for pleasure. You probably had a schedule for your husband to follow when you let him touch you. Sex 101 maybe?”

“You do not dispute these charges?” Wiktör asked.

“What is there to dispute?” Anja declared without shame. “There have been times when all of our children have come into our bedroom through the years for one reason or the other. They were frightened or didn't feel well. If we were engaged at the moment we quickly stopped what we were doing and took care of our children. As parents should.”

“Hadarian parents would not allow such a thing to happen to begin with!” Buonau barked out.

“Well... as you so often remind me Elder Buonau... I'm also half wolf.” Anja stated. “We do not view sex as something vile and disgusting. Too bad for you really. Perhaps you should try it once.”

“You are the Hadarian Queen!” Wiktor snarled. “These acts fall under our laws as lewd behavior and when involving children, bringing harm to their welfare.”

“And I’m also half wolf thanks to the man I love.” Anja said. “I have the same Phases and desires as any other female wolf who wants the attentions of her mate. Marty doesn’t seem to mind.” Anja quipped with a dreamy grin.

“So you admit to being guilty of these charges?” Wiktor said.

Anja shrugged. “Are you expecting me to deny them?” she answered. “I’ll never turn away Martin Leonidas or any of my fellow Queens when they want me. Just as they won’t turn me away when I desire them. If you can’t understand or accept that... too bad for you. I made that very clear to this Council when I first returned here. You are beating a dead horse with that and it won’t get you anywhere.”

“Then let it be known that you willingly accept guilt for your actions concerning these charges and we will move on.” Wiktor snapped.

Anja again shrugged her slim shoulders. “Suits the sibfla out of me. I ain’t gonna change for a bunch of stuffy men and women if that’s what you are leading towards. As for Retta and Calyb, they are Prince and Princess of the Lycavorian Union before they are heirs to the throne of Hadaria. You will never control them or influence them. Martin and I... all of their mothers... we won’t allow it.”

“An order by this Arch Ministry can force you to delegate custody of Retta and Calyb to our care.” Wiktor popped.

“You mean to my wonderful Aunt Umbra.” Anja snarled glaring at her in her chair. “Fat chance that will ever happen. You can write as many orders as you want.” Anja snapped. “If you do... Retta and Calyb will never set foot on Hadaria again. Then what will you do with your precious orders.”

“Now you threaten this body?” Wiktor spoke stunned.

Anja shook her head. “Not at all. Just a statement of fact.”

“She has admitted guilt in this regard.” Buonau declared. “Let us move on Chief Minister Wiktor.”

Wiktor nodded. “Very well.” She shifted to another data pad. “The fifth charge states that on three separate occasions you and Princess Sivana disregarded the recommendations of this body and the Elder Council and made political decisions without our consent. The first instance is when you rescinded the lifetime exile of Mage Warrior Filrian and allowed him to return to Hadaria to Ascend.”

“Yes. I did that because the esteemed Elder Council refused to even consider that Filrian had learned and taught himself techniques that have allowed our Healers to go longer periods without Ascending. It allows them to use their abilities to the maximum affect. This act also allowed them to remain among the units they were assigned to and build unit cohesion. That is something all of them found very agreeable I might add.” Anja answered.

“No doubt the fact that he is now married to the adopted vampire daughter of King Leonidas played a role in your decision?” Buonau spoke sarcastically.

“Not a bit.” Anja said. “They got married afterwards if you recall.”

“The second instance of your abuse is when you told the Menoalian King you would not allow him to direct Hadarian Healers on the surface of his world after this body specifically told you that is what we agreed to.” Wiktor spoke.

“You agreed to let him use our Healers to cure only those men and women who were supporters of himself and his stupid ass government.” Anja popped. “Their decisions are what caused the outbreak of Jepalot Syndrome to become so out of control to begin with. I wasn't about to let them dictate to our people who to take care of and who not too.”

“Against our specific orders.” Wiktor said.

Anja nodded. “Pretty much yes.”

“And I suppose denying the Kavalian government access to our Healers after we agreed on a lucrative agreement with them falls into the same category.” Wiktor said.

Anja glared at her. “You were about to send our Healers, most of whom are female, into the territory of a regime that regards women as lower than dirt!” Anja snapped. “You’re damn straight I’m gonna stop that.”

“The representative of this body and the Elder Council signed an agreement with them Queen Anja.” Wiktor said evenly. “We are within our rights to do such things you know. You however, even as Queen, do not have the authority to rescind an order given by this body unless you present sufficient evidence to support your claims. You broke our laws on all three of these occasions, and Princess Sivana supported you in these decisions which makes her just as guilty in their actions.”

“So what were you going to tell our Healers Chief Minister?” Anja snapped. “What were you going to tell them when our Healers began to disappear or end up beaten or killed because they violated some law within Kavalian space?”

“We had assurances from the Kavalian Prefect that this would not happen!” Wiktor barked back. “You broke the law by ordering our Healers to disregard this agreement with the Kavalian people!”

“And I saved a lot of lives in the process too.” Anja said. “Hadarian lives. Or doesn’t that concern you?”

“So once more you do not deny guilt to these charges brought against you?” Wiktor snapped.

“I’d do it again.” Anja said.

“Your plea is entered.” Wiktor announced. “Now we will move on to charge number four and the one that is the starting point for why you have been brought before us.” She shifted her data pads around. “The fourth charge is levied against you for depraved acts of a deviant sexual nature while within the palace walls as Queen. These acts were in fact recorded by a Lycavorian Spartan who was the betrothed to Mage Warrior Seanna. As I said earlier, the unfortunate release of the security feeds was made to the Netnews channels, but they clearly show you fornicating with not only the Spartan Rinard, but four other men at the same time. Your actions also indicate that Mage Warrior Seanna was not a willing participant in these acts and you in fact forced her to take part even though she told you she was in love with Rinard and did not wish too. Once more your depraved nature rears its ugly head Queen Anja.”

Anja rolled her eyes and grinned. “Marty likes it when I act depraved.” She said playfully back at Wiktor.

Buonau leaned forward. “Faced with the proof before your eyes that you willingly took part in these vile acts and still you stand there and deny them?”

Anja looked at her now with hardness in her jade green eyes. “This goes back to the fact that you know jack shit about the Lycavorian people Buonau, and you’ve been among them far longer than I have!”

“So you continue to claim the Queen Anja we see in these security videos is not you?” Wiktor asked.

“Do you take this entire body for fools Queen Anja? The entire Hadarian Elder Council for fools?”

“Blivit!” Anja barked.

“Pardon me?” Wiktor asked.

“Blivit.” Anja said again.

“What... what is this word?” Wiktor asked.

“It’s an old Navy SEAL expression that Martin Leonidas and I used quite a bit back in the day.” Anja answered. “It means ten pounds of shit in a five pound bag! It means I think you are all full of shit and I’m tired of tap dancing with you.”

“How dare you!” Wiktor exclaimed as gasps filled the gallery and the chamber.

“Oh I dare Wiktor.” Anja barked. “And I’m going to dare a whole lot more.” She snapped. She turned toward Sivana. “Ceuma would you join me please?”

All eyes went to the cloaked figure with the large cowl drawn up over their head. The figure appeared to be diminutive in nature, not much larger than Anja if at all. The figure glided gracefully out of their chair until they were standing next to Anja.

“You will apologize to this body this instant!” Wiktor shouted. “And you will answer to these charges without fail!”

Anja met her eyes. “I intend too.” She snapped.

“So you do not deny that this is you in these security videos!” Buonau barked. “That it was you who committed these acts?”

Anja shook her head. “No... it wasn't me.” She stated calmly.

“How can you stand there and tell this honored body what is so obviously false?” Buonau barked out. “You lie right to our faces! This is not the action of any Queen!”

“I can stand here and confidently state it wasn’t me.” Anja spoke stepping closer to Ceuma as they had spoken of.

“Because it was me.” Ceuma spoke as she tossed back the hood and revealed her face for everyone to see.

The looks of stunned shock shattered the calm in the chamber and the uproar of voices and shouts and questions began. Anja looked at Ceuma and smiled. "Nicely done." She said softly.

"I thought you were doing a fine job all alone." Ceuma said. "You know of course they are not going to change their minds."

Anja nodded as she turned back to look at Wiktor who was glaring at her. "I know." She said. "I've already put things in motion."

DREAMLAND SHIPYARDS

ULU ARIZONA

To say the last few days had been frustrating for E'dira would be an understatement.

It had nothing to do with her new duties on the ARIZONA. In fact, that had been going far better than she had ever hoped. At her fingertips she had the most advanced systems to call upon and she had spent hours on the bridge of her new ship marveling in what she could do. The ARIZONA's systems were based in part on the technology of the Mindvoice ship, and all the Union engineers had learned with Avi's assistance over the years. City Ship 41 had nearly two dozen small power generators that Avi had shown Union engineers how to incorporate into current Union advances. These power generators, more aptly called Quantum Resonance Field Reactors, were the core of the ARIZONA Class and it's abilities and they were far from small in terms of size. Alone they were far more powerful than even the main power cores on the massive LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers, though Zaala Randall and some very promising Nodon engineers had developed a power core very similar to the Quantum Resonance Field Reactors that powered the ARIZONA class. This new design was now the staple of LEONIDAS II-Class and any new ships coming out of the yards.

E'dira had been in her glory as she ran tactical simulation after tactical simulation, all the while keeping her three hundred member security force on their toes and loving that their new commander did not believe in simply running the same old drills. Her security force was made up of a combination of Spartans, elves, humans and a smattering of Algolians. All of them were former ship bound security troops and they were a no nonsense bunch of fleet men and women. Quite a few of them had families, but since the ARIZONA did not allow families to be on board, it also fell to E'dira to make sure she had a rotation that suited these men and women in order for them to see their families. It was definitely the largest command she had ever had, and without question it would fill her time easily, especially considering she was fourth in command of the ship.

All of them had been busy these last days, Steven Randall working his pilots around the clock, and pushing himself just as hard. There were launches and training missions almost every six hours, the ARIZONA's pilots becoming familiar with their new commander and he with them. In the times she had been in the huge mess lounge E'dira had listened to the combination of elven, human and Lycavorian pilots. She could tell from the tone of their conversations that they were loving the training regime and the fact that their new commander took shit from no one as one Spartan had exclaimed. Zaala Randall, like her husband, had practically not left the engineering compartment. She and the Nodon Chief Engineer had become nearly inseparable as they explored and tested each and every new system with meticulous care. It was also quickly made known by the pilots that arrived with them that Zaala Randall was very much off limits. She was the wife of the pilot known as Scar, and E'dira had no doubts no one wanted to get on the bad side of Steven Randall by trying to proposition his beautiful elven wife.

E'dira's frustration was because of her lack of time with Miranda Lorian. Her Drow blood burned for the human woman who had managed to elicit the emotions E'dira thought she was incapable of. Her asian features were surreal to look at in E'dira's eyes, and she wanted Miranda in her bed so that she could claim her. Miranda had been in and out of meetings with Admiral O'Connor, flying with Steven and his pilots and inspecting portions of the ship that fell under Janon's prevue of duties. She had seen her only a few times on the bridge and each time it had seemed as if Miranda had lost the desire for E'dira that she had first shown. She had been very business like and almost unresponsive to the looks of want that E'dira had given her. E'dira began to wonder if this somehow meant that Miranda was no longer interested in pursuing a relationship of any kind and for the first time in her life E'dira felt the pang of rejection in her heart and it did not feel good in the least. In typical Drow fashion however, and after speaking with Zaala Randall, E'dira decided to face the situation head on.

Zaala had become her sounding board and confidant due to her closeness with Lynwe and Aihola and the relationship her sister Tarifa had shared with both of them as 'slave' to a Drow mistress.

E'dira stopped in front of the door and looked up and down the corridor shyly. Part of her did not want others to know of her desire for Miranda, and part of her did not want to embarrass Miranda in any way since she was the Captain of the ARIZONA. She took a deep breath and lifted her hand to the side panel only to see the door slide open quickly and Miranda appear. E'dira hid her intake of breath at the beauty Miranda was, from her exotic features to her exceptionally firm and supple body. She fought down the sudden surge of sexual desire that threatened to overwhelm her as Miranda's beautiful dark eyes went wide and she came to an abrupt halt.

"E'dira!" She gasped quickly looking back into her quarters.

E'dira noticed this and resisted the urge to follow Miranda's gaze, quite sure she would discover a man in her quarters. "Forgive me... I... I know I did not call before coming down but I..."

Miranda Lorian was many things, but lacking in confidence and pride was not one of them. She had worked hard for everything she had gained in this life so far, forsaking almost everything else because of the pain of losing so many friends and family through the years. She had never had the desire to be close to anyone before taking this command. Ben had told her she was a perfect fit for the job, demanding and knowledgeable. If anyone could do it she could. Miranda had taken the duty as another means to escape the pain of her past, not realizing that with every cross section beam and new system that was installed on the ARIZONA as she was built, replaced a little of what she had lost. Not realizing that as every new member of the crew came together, Miranda was forming another family. A family she was drawing closer to with each passing hour. And at the tip of that pyramid was the devastating beautiful Drow woman in front of her.

Miranda had never openly entertained the idea of having a relationship with another woman. She had experienced two instances that occurred during drunken binges, but beyond that nothing. She was not against it, for she had grown up with the incredible openness of this new world she had come in to. Same sex relationships were common within the Union, and they were some of the strongest she had ever known in her life. When this tall Drow female had walked into her life that had all changed. E'dira's dark ebony skin and bright amber eyes caused Miranda's hardness to melt and more and more she wanted nothing else but to submit to this woman. She knew of the Drow propensity for being dominant in their relationships, but she also knew that Aihola had changed the course of their future when she assumed the role of her mother as Queen. The relationships among couples or unions that involved a Drow were perhaps the most solid relationships outside of the Lycavorian people. Drow were intensely committed to those they chose to share their lives with, and while they may have been dominant in the privacy of their bedrooms, that dominance rarely was shown outside of that private area unless like Tarifa and Aihola, it was done with love and respect in mind.

Staring at E'dira now, Miranda knew without question she wanted this Drow female and all she had to offer no matter what it was. She had been working toward that one goal all day. Miranda Lorian wanted to know love and all it entailed, for she knew without it, she would never be able to forget her past and move into the future.

"Forgive me... I... I know I did not call before coming down but I..." E'dira was stammering out the words. "If you are busy with someone I will... I will speak with you about it later."

Miranda blinked several times. "Busy with someone?" She asked. "What? No!" She exclaimed realizing that E'dira saw her look back into her quarters and assuming she had company. "No... E'dira... I was... I was just coming to get you."

It was E'dira's turn to blink rapidly as she looked at Miranda. "I have filed my report for the day." E'dira said. "It is in the computer."

"Your report?" Miranda said. "Why would I want your report?"

E'dira glanced into her quarters once more. "You are occupied yes?"

"Occupied?" Miranda said. "No. I was... I was coming to invite you to have dinner with me."

E'dira's amber orbs widened and Miranda Lorian knew then she wanted to look into those beautiful eyes for many long years. "Dinner?"

Miranda stepped to the side of the doorway and motioned her to come in. "Yes E'dira... dinner."

E'dira stepped hesitantly forward and looked into Miranda's large quarters. She saw the table in the center of the main room set for two people, with a bottle of what appeared to be Spartan Wine in the center and a large bowl of salad. "Miranda... I..."

Miranda stepped around her and moved further into her quarters. "I have been so busy the last few days. I wanted to at least unpack some of my things before I actually had you over. I asked the ARIZONA's Mess Officer to put together a leaf salad for us with beef strips on the side. He cooked it like the Drow but I don't know how good it is."

E'dira looked at her surprised. "You did this for... for me?" She asked.

Miranda nodded. "Yes." She answered. "You seemed surprised?"

"I thought perhaps you were... I thought you were avoiding me." E'dira said.

"Why would I be avoiding you E'dira?" Miranda asked. "I want to discover you as much as you wish to discover me. I want..."

E'dira was a Drow elf, and like the Lycavorian people, the Drow were not shy about making it know they wanted someone. E'dira stepped forward and took Miranda's face in her hands before sealing her lips over Miranda's soft full ones and kissing her with decades of pent up emotion and desire. E'dira heard Miranda groan loudly as her hands gripped E'dira's waist and she leaned into the kiss. E'dira dropped her hands to grasp Miranda's firm ass, pushing her right leg between Miranda's until her upper thigh and knee was pressing firmly against Miranda's pussy. E'dira could feel the heat pulsing from Miranda's pussy, and it was quickly followed by a moistness that E'dira felt and rejoiced at. It told her all she really wanted to know. She pulled her lips away from a gasping Miranda and stared into her dark orbs.

"You... you are my slave Miranda Lorian." E'dira stated confidently then looking at Miranda's flushed cheeks and wide eyes.

Miranda's eyes were wide because never in her life had she become so wet so quickly. It was almost as if E'dira's lips were an aphrodisiac, and her belly was rapidly building with pleasure. "Yes... yes Mistress." Miranda finally stammered out as she let go of all the walls she had built over the last years.

E'dira's amber orbs danced with intense delight as she drew Miranda even closer, wanting to feel every portion of Miranda's lush body against her own. "Miranda... there is something you should know." She said softly.

"I don't care." Miranda stated quickly.

"No... I need to tell you this." E'dira spoke. "The High Coven experiments on me... they made me different."

Miranda looked at her oddly. "Different? Different how?"

"They introduced a chemical into my body." E'dira said. "This chemical... it allows me to..."

E'dira's words were drowned out by the blare of the ARIZONA's intercom.

"Senior officers to the Captain's Ready Room! Senior officers to the Captain's Ready Room! This is no drill!"

"Fuck!" Miranda swore viciously at the interruption when blissful pleasure was so close. Instantly however, both women became all business as was their natures, but not before Miranda took E'dira's hands in hers. "... I will have you Mistress!" Miranda hissed softly.

E'dira drew her close and nodded. "I look forward to that slave." She said.

"...saw the briefing by the Prime Minister." Ben spoke as he walked around the large table with Miranda, E'dira, Zaala and Steven sitting on one side, while Janon and Chuess sat on the other side. Their only vacancy was a Science Officer that would be filled at later time since the ARIZONA was built as a warship first and foremost. "Earth is still under a Level Six COM blackout, and Androcles has taken the SCIMITAR out of system. Most likely into The Wilds. I spoke very briefly with Riall and he is pretty certain they are going to Kranek."

"Kranek?" Janon asked. "Kranek is nothing more than a mountainous rock. A few scattered settlements, but that is it."

Ben nodded. "According to Riall, it's also where Dysea and Normya are." He said with a grin. "Hold on to your seats folks, you're gonna love this. Cha'talla isn't dead and his tribe of Immortals have been living on Kranek for over two decades.” Ben saw their looks of stunned shock and he couldn’t help but grin wider. “And the kicker is this. Apparently Cha’talla has been married to a pureblood vampire female for all this time. He has four sons by her, and Normya Leonidas just recently married the oldest.”

“Married?” E’dira gasped.

Ben nodded. “Riall wasn’t able to relate all of the story to me, but from what I understand Cha’talla’s oldest son kept Normya from being captured and killed or worse by mercenaries. She was specifically targeted and we don’t know why. Dysea has been running an investigation into this as well as the disappearance of over a hundred elven females through the last few years. They are pretty close in figuring out what is going on.”

“Why do you think Androcles is going there sir?” Miranda asked.

“Because Androcles is just as down right dirty nasty mean as his father. Probably more so in many respects.” Ben answered. “If he took the Coven dragons and riders with him it is only because he intends to finish their training.”

“What does that have to do with us?” Steven asked.

“Technically nothing.” Ben said.

Miranda tilted her head to the side. She had heard that tone from Ben O’Connor many times before. “And technically... since we don’t exist...” She said softly.

Ben smiled. “The HORNET is fully crewed and waiting for her Strike Group to arrive.” He said. “Riall and I agree all of this shit happening now is no coincidence. So... while we wait for the HORNET’s group to arrive we are going to play guardian angel.”

“Guardian angel?” Zaala asked.

Ben nodded and reached down to the table activating the star chart. “Mando... I want you to park the ARIZONA and the HORNET here. Two light years from Kranek. Remain under Shroud and conduct drills, but keep an eye on this planet. If any Coven ships come within a light year of Kranek I want you to blow them out of the stars.”

“Technically wezz have signzzed a Ceasezz Fire with the High Coven Admiral.” Chuess spoke.

Ben nodded. “Which they violated the moment they attacked Zarah Leonidas and Dragon Mountain.” He answered. “Technically they can now kiss my ass!”

Everyone in the room laughed at this and Miranda leaned forward. “And if we have to engage?” She asked.

“Deploy our Penetrator EWs and make sure no one ever knows we were there.” Ben said.

Steven grinned. “So essentially... we’ll be ghosts?”

“Yep.” Ben said.

“Oh... I like being a ghost.” Steven said.

“I want you underway in an hour.” Ben spoke. “I’m heading back to Apo Prime to see my little ones and coordinate a response if one is needed. That’s it. Dismissed.”

Miranda waited while the others got to their feet and quickly exited the room. She also stood up and moved closer to Ben waiting until it was just the two of them. “Admiral... Ben...” She started softly.

Ben looked at her. “This is what you were born for Miranda.” Ben said looking at her. He took a deep breath and turned to fully face her. “I know what Tina and I did, having Isabella change us, I know that pissed you off.”

“I came to understand why Ben.” She said.

“From the first moment I saw you I knew this is what you were meant for Miranda.” Ben said. “You are like me and the Skipper... you are a doer. It’s why you were the only one I even considered putting in command of this ship. This ship and the others like it... they will need very unique captains because of the purpose they were built for. Martin didn’t hesitate when I told him I wanted you. It’s time for you to let go of the past Miranda.”

“Ben... you...”

Ben shook his head. “No. You have a new crew. A new family. The men and women who served under you and died would not want you to destroy yourself. They died doing what they loved.” He said. “They would want you to go on and make this family just as special as they were to you.”

“I don’t know if I can do that Ben.” Miranda said.

“You have already started Miranda.” Ben spoke with a smile to her. “I may be a man and a vampire... but I’m not completely dense. Tina and Endith look at each other the same way I see you and E'dira look at each other.” Ben saw Miranda blush even under her tanned skin. “All I’m saying is this... your life experiences up until now have pulled you to this one point in time. They have guided you and shaped you into who you are now. This ship... this command... this is what you were meant for. Now it’s time for you to leave the past behind and forge ahead into the future.”

Miranda looked at him for a long moment and then she smiled. “You practice that speech with Tina and Endith Admiral?” She asked.

Ben laughed and nodded his head. “How did it sound?”

“Thank you sir.” Miranda said. “Thank you for believing in me.”

“Believing in you was never the question.” Ben said. “You believing in yourself is what was at issue.”

“And the King?” She asked.

“Who Marty?” Ben exclaimed. “Shit... you let me worry about Marty. The saltwater has corroded what brains he does have. He went along with me all the way. You just have to know how to play the game.”

Miranda laughed now and even as she stood there she felt the veil of doubt beginning to lift from around her. “I won’t let you down Admiral.” She said.

“Hell... I know that.” Ben said. “It will be interesting to see them in action together. Send me a secure transmission when you are in position and I’ll update you with any new information I might have when I get back.”

“Understood.” Miranda said.

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBER

Anja and Ceuma stood next to each other as the many ministers and those in the gallery were still murmuring amongst themselves in disbelief. No one's face was more shocked than that of Buonau and Rinard.

“Order! There will be order!” Wiktor bellowed banging her rod against the small bell. She directed her eyes back to Anja, glaring at her. “What trickery is this?” She exclaimed as the voices began to quiet. She waited a few more seconds and then turned to glare at Anja. “What trickery is this?”

“Trickery?” Anja spoke. “There is no trickery here. Unless you count the trickery that Rinard was using.” Anja turned to look at Ceuma. “Allow me to introduce Ceuma... and she is a clone. A clone of me.”

Once more roars and muted conversations filled the chamber and Wiktor began tapping her gavel on the bell again and again. “There will be order!” She barked. “Or I will clear this chamber of everyone but the Ministers!”

“No you won’t.” Anja snapped as she moved closer to where Wiktor sat. “This chamber and this gallery will see just how much you are willing to do to see me out of power.”

“You would do well to mind your words Queen Anja!” Wiktor barked. “It is you who are on trial here.”

Anja turned and looked at Rinard now seeing the anger in his face. “You didn’t think we would find out did you Rinard.” She spoke. “Son of Lucvaun.”

“You know nothing!” Rinard snarled at her.

“Don’t I?” Anja said. “You should have done your homework better Rinard. If you had... you would have known it was Torma that killed your father. Not Miath. Not me. I wasn't even bonded to Miath when we broke up your sick empire then.”

“I have no idea what you are talking about!” Rinard barked.

“Don’t you?” Anja said. Anja turned back to Ceuma. “Allow me to relate a little history of the Lycavorian people for the Ministers and the Elder Council. This tidbit of information is little known outside of the Lycavorian people, but it is something you as Senior Elder Healer should have known Buonau.”

“What nonsense do you speak now?” Buonau announced.

“You can do whatever tests you want on Ceuma here to determine that she is in fact a perfect clone of me.” Anja said. “Be mindful though... she is very headstrong and she doesn’t like to be poked and prodded. She will be more than happy to relate to all of you how Rinard bit her in the exact place that Martin Leonidas bit me when he changed me. She will be more than happy to relate to you the horrors that Rinard put her through, as well as the fact that when he was done with her and had all the security video footage he wanted, he tried to kill her and dump her body at the incinerator near the space port.”

“That is a lie!” Rinard shouted coming to his feet.

Anja looked at him. “Is it now?” She stated calmly. “Would you care to tell this chamber why it is impossible for me to have acted in such a way in these so called security videos of yours. Would you like to tell them or should I?”

“I don’t know what you are talking about!” Rinard snapped.

“You don’t?” Anja said sweetly. “Now that is surprising considering your father was a close personal friend of Chetak. I bet you forgot to tell Elder Buonau and Chief Minister Wiktor of that fact didn’t you?”

“Chetak?” Wiktor spoke now. Her eyes cut to Rinard and she glared at him. Everyone within the Lycavorian Union knew who Chetak was and what fate befell him for his actions so long ago. “Is this true?” She snapped.

“So what if it is!” Rinard barked. “It doesn’t change the facts!”

Anja laughed now and shook her head. “The facts?” She said. “The facts Rinard... the facts are I wouldn’t let you fuck me on your best day!”

“Queen Anja you...” Wiktor began to speak.

“Martin Leonidas is the wolf that turned me!” Anja bellowed loudly. “It is impossible for me to act in the manner depicted in your so called security videos. My blood calls only for Martin Leonidas, and as long as he lives, no male could ever elicit the types of reaction you see in the security videos. It is a medical and emotional impossibility.” Anja snarled at her.

“What nonsense is this?” Buonau demanded.

“Nonsense?” Anja exclaimed. “This goes back to you not knowing about the Lycavorian people as a whole Elder Buonau. If you did, you would know that because Martin turned me, because his blood burns within me as well as my own, you would know that I am incapable of acting in the manner seen in these videos. It is the same for any female turned by a Lycavorian. Unless Martin dies, my blood would never call for another male. It wouldn’t allow me too. No male but my husband and mate could make me act in such a way. Basically... Rinard has been playing you for fools.”

“There is no medical basis for this ridiculous explanation you give us! Only... only your word!” Buonau announced.

“I can produce several million females within the Lycavorian Union if you like Elder Buonau.” Anja stated calmly. “All of them will attest to this same thing. Or will you dismiss them as well?”

“You can also test both of us.” Ceuma spoke now. “You will find that I was turned within the last eighteen months. You can...”

“Silence!” Buonau barked.

Anja’s face darkened. “Do not tell her to be silent you bitch!” Anja growled at Buonau now startling not only Buonau, but many of the Elders and Ministers as well. “You will not dismiss this Buonau! I won’t allow it!”

“You won’t allow it?” Buonau barked at her. “You are in a position to allow or disallow nothing!”

“I am still Queen of Hadaria!” Anja snapped. “Are you refusing to run the tests? If you refuse to run the tests then you will dismiss this stupid charge outright! If you run the tests you will know the truth!”

“If... if what you say is true... how do we know this is not something you arranged all along?” Wiktor demanded.

Anja looked at her wide eyed. “Are you kidding me?” She declared. “You actually believe I would go to all this trouble to clear my name of false charges? Ceuma was saved from death by her husband. It was she who decided to come here secretly from Apo Prime to help me. I guess she didn’t like being left for dead too much.”

“Her husband?” Wiktor barked.

Anja turned and motioned with her hand. The door to the side of the chamber opened and Joci strode into the main chamber with his head held high and wearing his Spartan uniform. Six rows of vertical decorations adorned his dress uniform and he could hear the many gasps from within the chamber and the gallery as he walked towards Anja. Everyone in the gallery knew who Joci was, for he had been one of the men in the security footage, and he was also supposed to be very dead. Joci didn’t hesitate and marched right up behind Ceuma and leaned over next to her head. Ceuma's eyes closed in blissful delight when he nuzzled her cheek and neck firmly.

"Hello my wife." He said softly.

Ceuma smiled and pushed back against him. "My husband." She said.

Anja smiled and looked at Rinard. "Fancy that Rinard. I guess you aren't as strong an Alpha as you first thought. Whatever influence you may have had on Ceuma was quickly overwhelmed by Joci here."

"This man... that man is supposed to be dead!" Wiktor shouted.

Anja nodded. "Yep. But he isn't." She said. "You still want to contend that this was me Chief Minister? You have the Netnews here... are you going to dismiss this in front of the citizens of the Union. The Lycavorian people already know this was bullshit to begin with because they know what I speak of. Now that the rest of the Union knows, will you conduct the tests or dismiss the charge outright, in which case you will have to dismiss the charge to begin with. Which also means you will have to dismiss the charges concerning Seanna, which are all bullshit as well."

"Do not tell me what I need to do Queen Anja!" Wiktor barked angrily. "I will decide what I need to do! And your lack of decorum is most disturbing!"

Anja folded her arms under her firm breasts and looked at her. "Fuck decorum!" Anja snapped. "Why don't you inform us of what it is you intend to do Chief Minister, because I grow tired of these games. I have not seen my children in almost three months! I have not seen my husband in almost three months, and my blood calls for him something fierce." She stated with a grin. "I need to conduct some more depraved acts of a sexual nature with him."

"You dare mock this Ministry with your words!" Wiktor shouted.

"My sex life is my business Chief Minister but since you have seen fit to make it the business of the entire Union. I only felt they should know that if the last twenty-five years have been any barometer, I will be howling out my delight thirty minutes after being in my mate's arms." Anja said. "I have quite a bit of time to make up you know."

Wiktor could only clench her teeth in anger as those Lycavorians in the gallery nodded and chuckled among each other. They did in fact know of what Anja was speaking, and to a man and woman, none of them had believed the stories anyway. Wiktor banged her small rod on the bell drawing everyone's attention. "We... we will adjourn for two hours to determine this new evidence and the validity of it." She announced.

"I protest!" Buonau exclaimed. "This is nothing but a ploy on Queen Anja's part!"

"Perhaps..." Wiktor spoke glaring at Anja. "But we must insure all the facts as they have been presented. You will... you will make this woman... this supposed clone available for tests to be conducted."

Anja looked at Ceuma who nodded. "I will do what they ask of me." She stated. "But both Anja and my husband will be present during these tests." She said turning back to Wiktor.

"You do not trust us to conduct these tests?" Wiktor asked wide eyed.

"To be blunt... I wouldn't trust you in any way based on what I have seen so far." Ceuma replied. "I may be a clone of Anja, but I am my own person. And that nubous igord Rinard will not come near me!" She snapped looking at him from across the chamber. "I might forget that I am now better than him and decide to gut him where he stands."

"I have a right to be present if my honor and word is being called into question!" Rinard barked.

Anja looked at him. "You have no rights Rinard." She snapped. "Be lucky I don't order you arrested right now for what you have done. And don't think that still won't happen. You will not leave the planet Rinard. Atropos... insure every spaceport security force has images of Rinard and know he is not allowed to leave the planet." She spoke turning to him.

"You have no right to order such things!" Wiktor barked. "All the authority you have as Queen has been suspended until these proceedings are over!"

"I'm not acting as Queen of Hadaria!" Anja barked. "I'm acting as one of the five Queens of the Lycavorian Union. Or do you call that into question now as well? If you do... I'm sure within seconds of you stating that, you will have an incoming message from the King telling you otherwise. Don't doubt for an instant he isn't watching this farce of a proceeding!"

“King Leonidas has no say in the judgment of this Chamber! He has no say in what the Hadarian government rules upon! And these proceedings will determine whether you will be Queen at the end of this day!” Wiktor barked at her.

Anja turned back and looked at Wiktor oddly. She felt a sinking feeling in her gut and Martin’s words to her those months ago resounded in her mind loudly now. Too loudly.

“Anja... you do know you may have to initiate a Shining Path. Can you do that Red? I know... I know it will tear you apart but can you do it?”

“Let’s get these tests over with!” She snapped finally. “Ceuma is doing this for me... and I do not want her to be held up in any way.”

CHAPTER FORTY-THREE

SPARTA

HOME OF ISRA, TARIFA AND AIHOLA

Tarifa moved out of the kitchen carrying the two mugs of steaming tea in her hands. She made her way straight for the couch main room of their home since it was the closest, and that is where Jalersi had finally been convinced to sit until her daughter was able to contact her. She saw Jalersi turn her head as she came up and it was then Tarifa’s sapphire colored eyes went to the two figures on the floor and sitting against the wall under the large mural painting. Karun’s back was against the wall, Ardis sitting sideways between his legs with her head resting on his shoulder and her face tucked into the side of his neck. Karun’s arms and hands were holding her protectively even though he too was sound asleep. Ardis had the most peaceful and content look on her face, a look Tarifa had seen from her sleeping as a child. Jalersi followed her eyes and saw them as well, and then looked back as Tarifa settled to the couch slowly.

“My son... he is different Tarifa.” Jalersi said softly. “He is nothing like his father.”

Tarifa turned her head and looked at her. She held out the tea. “This is a blend of teas that Nya Istel makes. It’s quite good, and it will help you to recover your strength faster with its medicinal properties.”

“Nya Istel?” Jalersi asked taking the mug.

Tarifa nodded. “My name for Aihola.” She said.

“Your... your Drow...”

“Lover.” Tarifa said with a smile. “Lover. Partner. Wife. Mate. Whatever you choose to call her. She is all of those things to me. And to Isra our husband. There was a time when she was the only point of light in my life at one period and I have called her that ever since.”

“Forgive me. I didn’t mean...”

“Forgive you for what?” Tarifa asked. “Asking a question? You will find that neither Aihola nor I are shy about our relationship in any way. There is not one of us without the other. It’s simply what was meant to be.” Tarifa answered easily. “Just as it appears your son and my daughter were meant to be.”

“Your husband will not approve I take it?” Jalersi asked.

“On the contrary... when he sees the love for Ardis that Karun has shown me, Isra will accept it fully.” Tarifa answered. “We decided long ago to allow our children to make their own lives and future without hindrance from us. It is how we have raised all of them, and continue to raise our young ones.”

“You still have young children?” Jalersi asked.

Tarifa nodded. “Three that are under ten.” She replied.

“They are not with you now? Why?”

“Though we do not bear the surname Leonidas, because of the relationship Martin and I share, our young children go to a bunker with the other children of the family in a situation like this. Since we do not have the Durcunusaan protection that Martin’s children have, he went the additional step of insuring the children of those close to him would be protected. They go to a secret bunker.” Tarifa answered.

“An attack on your family you mean?” Jalersi spoke.

“Martin and I... we were lovers a very long time ago. Those few weeks after he first returned to earth were the catalyst for many things, foremost among them was both of us discovering the path both our lives would follow.” Tarifa said. “He is the closest thing to an older brother that I have ever had, and he considers me a sister of his blood though I am an elf. Aihola as well. He and Isra have fought together and shed blood together and that binds them in concert tightly as members of Mjolnir’s Hand.”

“The King’s dragon unit?” Jalersi asked surprised. “Your mate... he is a member of this unit?”

Tarifa nodded. “He is a section leader yes.” Tarifa answered. “You did not know this?”

Jalersi shook her head. “The Intelligence we have focuses on you and your Nya Istel. There is precious little on your mate.”

Tarifa smiled. “Isra would get a good laugh out of that.” She stated. “He likes to fly under the sensors so to speak.”

“And you have a dragon as well.” Jalersi said. “He is the red one outside?”

“Roluth is bound to both Aihola and I.” Tarifa answered. “It is a unique binding between us and to our knowledge the only one like it in the annals of dragon history.” She smiled shyly. “Aihola and I take great joy in being the only two bound to a single dragon. It gives us a certain notoriety.”

“They terrify me.” Jalersi said honestly. “They terrify all of my people and we have always wondered why. It is almost genetic in nature I think.”

“Your sister did not seem to fear Cemath.” Tarifa said. “On the Netnews... she was upon Cemath’s back and as comfortable as any rider I have ever seen.”

Jalersi nodded. “Yes... and that fact is another reason why my father was so angry with her when she defected. He had hoped to use her as a building block to ridding our people of that inbred fear.”

“He would do this to his own daughter?” Tarifa asked.

“You must understand Tarifa... Kavalian males do not regard our females with any sort of respect or honor.” Jalersi said. “It is the way of our people and has been for millennia.”

“But Pian... he... I’ve seen the way he looks at you Jalersi.” Tarifa said. “That man... he worships the ground upon which you tread.”

Jalersi flushed at her words and she felt her love for Pian grow even more. She nodded her head. “Believe me... I was just as surprised. Pian is unique.” She answered turning to look where he was sitting with Jiss discussing something. “And it took me twenty years to discover that.” She turned back to Tarifa. “Now that I have... I do not want to lose it. Ever.”

“Pusintin?” Tarifa asked.

“He is not the man I thought him to be.” Jalersi answered. “He did not bring about the changes he told me he would help to make. He was like a machine when he took me... I was just too foolish to see it. I was clouded with hopes and dreams. Pian... Pian feasts upon me like I am the only thing in the universe. He respects me and treats me as an equal in all things. Just his touch leaves me...” Jalersi’s eyes grew wide when she realized what she was saying and she blushed a deep cherry red. “Oh my...”

Tarifa chuckled and shook her head. “You are explaining nothing to me that I do not know myself from personal experience.” Tarifa said. “One day I will tell you the story of how Isra and I came together. And believe me... it is not the way I ever expected to meet the man who would claim my heart and soul.” Tarifa looked at her powder blue eyes intently. “Come with me Jalersi.” She said getting to her feet and holding out her hand.

Jalersi surprised herself and didn’t hesitate in taking her hand as she too got up. This was something that Tarifa took notice of immediately and confirmed to her that indeed this Kavalian female had found the path of discovery to her liking and did not want to venture away from it now. Tarifa squeezed her long fingers and began to lead her through their home towards the doors that led out to the patio area where Roluth stayed. They moved through the double doors into the patio area and Jalersi froze in place when she saw Roluth’s massive body resting on the patio and thoroughly enjoying the exam he was getting from Anuk. She wore one of the medical gloves designed for riders to measure and track their dragon’s health and was passing it over his midsection now. Tarifa stopped as well and looked at Jalersi but did not release her hand.

“Jalersi?” She said softly.

“I... I can’t!” She gasped softly feeling the fear almost lock her limbs in place.

“Grab your fear Jalersi’Nruarani.” Tarifa said softly as first Roluth's huge head and then Anuk’s head turned to look at them. “Embrace it and make it a strength.”

“What?” Jalersi gasped.

“Embrace your fear.” Tarifa told her. “It is the only way you will ever be rid of it. Don’t deny it or fight it. Accept it. Take what that fear can teach you and make it part of who you are. Just like your sister.”

“I... I am so frightened I can barely move!” Jalersi gasped.

“There is nothing to fear from dragons Jalersi.” Tarifa spoke softly. “They are the most benevolent creatures you will ever meet.”

“The reports!” Jalersi exclaimed. “I have seen the reports! I’ve seen them fighting!”

“I did not say they were docile or weak... only that they will consider you a friend before an enemy. Your actions will dictate how they view you.” Tarifa said. “You have trusted us... trusted me this far... trust me a little further.”

Jalersi looked at her and saw those sapphire eyes bright in the growing darkness. She was right Jalersi decided. They had trusted them and their trust had been rewarded. These men and women that her father and Pusintin so wanted to conquer, to control; they were not anyone’s enemy until you made them an enemy. Then they would be the most terrible enemy one’s mind could possibly imagine. Jalersi squeezed her hand tighter as she allowed Tarifa to pull her closer to the enormous dragon. Her heart was racing faster than it ever had before, even as Roluth’s red hued eyes watched her with something akin to amusement in them. Jalersi’s eyes were wide then as she suddenly realized she was directly in front of the huge beast, his head lowering down to stare at her intently.

Tell her I said hello sister. Roluth spoke within Mindvoice.

Tarifa smiled. “He says hello.” She told Jalersi. “Embrace your fear Jalersi...” Tarifa spoke. “It is the only way you will ever be free of it.”

Jalersi closed her eyes and reached out with her hand tentatively. Roluth insured she needn’t reach far and moved his head closer, settling his snout under her palm until it was flat against his scales. Her eyes flew open with a start when she felt the smooth coolness of his scales, but she didn’t draw her hand away and only stared at the head of this dragon before her. She spread her fingers out on the scales slowly, marveling in the texture of the scales and that she was actually touching one of the beasts her people so feared.

“His... his skin!” She gasped looking at Tarifa with wide powder blue eyes. “It is so smooth!”

“Not what you expected is it?” Anuk said with a grin.

Jalersi shook her head. “No! Never!” She exclaimed as she spread her palm out further and rubbed a small area on his snout. The longer her hand remained in contact with Roluth’s scales the more Jalersi felt that fear slipping away to nothing.

Change. Everything was changing around her and Jalersi couldn’t believe how easily she was embracing it all. This planet had changed her. These people had changed her. Changed her enough to see the love that Pian carried for her, and she for him. Changed her enough to see that she wanted so much more than what life had given her until now. She had that opportunity now she knew. Her future began the first night that Pian had locked groins with her, professing his love for her and making it clear she was all he desired. It had begun with Athani... and it would continue with her.

“Mother!” Ardis’s voice broke into the moment and they all turned. She saw Jalersi’s eyes were wide in wonderment and she smiled as well. “We are receiving a transmission from Nikkei inside Kavalian space.” She spoke. “It’s coming over your personal Spartan Two Five secure channel just as you directed. You need to accept and approve the transmission.”

Jalersi turned to Tarifa and grasped her hand tightly. “Thank you!” She gushed. “Thank you so much!”

Tarifa smiled and nodded. “I am a mother too.” She said. “Let’s get back inside and you can fill your daughter in on what is happening.”

Anuk patted Roluth’s scales as she turned to follow them inside.

None of them were aware of the decidedly unfriendly eyes gazing down upon them from the mountains above.

“...confirmed.” The Puma Bane warrior spoke softly as he lowered his macrobinoculars. He turned to his senior officer. “It’s her Major Kowe.”

“You are certain Gatha? We must be certain.” The Kavalian Major spoke.

“Positive Major.” He answered. “It was Jalersi’Puat.”

The major nodded his head. “Then Pian, Karun and Jiss will be with her as well.”

“Do we attack sir?” Gatha asked. “We have nine men with us.” He asked.

“How many T19s do we carry?” Kowe asked.

“Two sir. More than enough to kill the dragon before he even gets in the sky.” Gatha answered. “The wind blows into our faces and we are too high to be detected. We can fire down into the patio area, kill the dragon and then advance while they are trying to determine where the attack came from.”

“I will send a transmission to our main force on the other side of Sparta.” Kowe spoke. “Prepare the team to assault them within the hour.”

“Yes sir!”

THERMOPYLAE KING LEONIDAS’S TOMB

“...not a matter of strength anymore Martin Leonidas.” Wayonn spoke gently but firmly from within the transmission. “You and your son have reached the pinnacle of physical power within Mindvoice. You have shaped your abilities to the point that you are nearly unstoppable on the field of battle, you and your son. With Torma and Elynth at your sides there is very little that could stand against you in single combat and you know that. That has now become your main and most glaring weakness. More so you than your son I’m afraid, for Androcles has allowed himself to expand and grow within Mindvoice more than you for the simple reason he has known what he is capable of since he was born and he has taken more of Helen’s schooling to heart. You did not have that luxury before being thrust into the position you now hold, and it is harder for you to concentrate on the mundane when you are King.”

Martin stared at this man’s image in silent contemplation as he had for the last nearly thirty hours. He was unaware of what was happening beyond the walls of his father’s tomb for he had found something infinitely more interesting inside. The horror he had felt at what he had done these last months had dwindled away as Wayonn revealed more and more information to him and he absorbed it like a sponge.

“You have reached this level far more quickly than any Pralor ever did that I know of. I will reason it is because of the bonds you share with your dragons, those magnificent beasts, but you have reached the point where Sumar was and it took him nearly seven thousand years to reach it.” Wayonn told him. “It is a point now where you will need to seek out Helen’s guidance just as your son has. As I said... it is not a matter of strength any longer. You must learn it all. You, your son, Aricia and soon even Sadi.”

“Sadi?” Martin asked softly.

Wayonn smiled and nodded his head as he got up from wherever he was sitting on some faraway planet and moved around a table. “You and your son have quite remarkably chosen the only two women in the universe who descend from the same pure Pralor bloodline and don’t even know it. Just very different ancestors.”

“Come again?” Martin asked.

Wayonn waved his hand. “It is a rather long story and not one that needs to be addressed right now. I will share it with you in the future however, if you do not discover it yourself before you come to see me. The fact remains now however, due to the pureness of her own blood, Aricia has already been able to call and shape and use a psychic knife just as you and your son have done. Given more time and considering her growth already since coming together with your son, Sadi will soon begin to develop abilities all her own. If I’m not mistaken, they have already begun to manifest themselves. It is why your Queens are so different. Why they have evolved so much since becoming one with you. Dysea’s skills with precognition are not focused or controlled, but they are frightening in their power. For’mya’s skills in sensing different tremors of life and death within Mindvoice is also very impressive. Anja’s abilities speak for themselves. Even had she not been mated to you, she would still be the most powerful healer in all of the known universe. Because you turned her, because she like the others is so tightly woven within the strands of Mindvoice with you, her abilities have far exceeded those of even her mother and father. These are all things you have passed down through your blood to your children in one form or another and it has made others reach for and obtain levels that they would not have reached without your existence.”

Martin got up. “Wayonn... you keep telling me I need to come see you.” Martin said. “And believe me... I truly want too...”

“Yes... I can see that in your eyes young man.” Wayonn answered with a gentle smile. “And before you retort with some offhanded remark, compared to me in age Martin Leonidas, you are very much a child.”

Martin’s eyes narrowed. “You get that a lot I take it.” He said.

“You have no idea.” Wayonn answered him. “I understand that events will seem to be propelling you in different directions and to do different things, but you must understand Martin Leonidas, you need to come see me sooner rather than later. And it will not be just so that we can rid you of Xaxon’s dark presence inside you.”

“How is it that Helen knows these things that I need to learn?” He asked. “That my son is obviously learning?”

“It is not a matter of you learning them Martin; indeed... you already have them within you. What you lack is the refinement to use them and focus them.” Wayonn spoke. “You need to learn what Aikiro learned. She knew she could never have matched you in a battle of wills... the instincts within your people... within you are just too powerful. It is why she needed to use deceit and subterfuge against you. Meeting you head on so to speak would have accomplished nothing. As it was... she underestimated Androcles and Helen and the abilities they have when combined with these dragons and ultimately that was her undoing.”

“So Xaxon will teach Yuri what he taught Aikiro?” Martin said.

Wayonn nodded once. “That is what I suspect yes.” He answered. “And since Aikiro’s daughter was already a powerful force... his influence will become even more ingrained in her being now that Aikiro is gone.”

“Wayonn... why are you in such a rush for me to learn all this? All this refinement and focus?” Martin asked.

“The universe is far larger than just the Union, the Coven and those other empires you are currently aware of my boy.” Wayonn said.

“I’ve always believed that anyway.” Martin said seeing him nod. “Why are you telling me that?”

“Your insight is well developed Martin and that is one of your strengths. There are other empires among the stars as I said; much larger empires in size than the Union, and empires that have rejoiced at the demise of my people. Though they are not yet aware of what Sumar and those on City Ship 41 and City Ship 19 did, it will not remain secret for very much longer I’m afraid.”

“You mean merging with the populations like you did?” Martin said. “My people and the vampires?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. It is not normally something we would have done.” He explained. “Once Canth... once my son relayed back to us what had happened in our own system, and that they were turning back around, we were already nine hundred years into the blending of our peoples. To Sumar’s mind it was the best decision to insure our history and memories never passed into oblivion. He was not aware of what Canth’s son built. To be honest... I don’t even believe Dutkne’s father knew... though based on what he told you before he passed into the next life... he may very well have suspected.”

“What do you mean?” Martin asked. “You are referring to the “Lost Ones” again aren’t you? There are more of my people out there aren’t there Wayonn?”

“You already know the answer to that question Martin.” Wayonn said.

“Shit! A simple yes or no would do you know!” Martin snapped.

Wayonn smiled at his outburst. “Our technology was the most advanced Martin, and our ability to speak and conduct ourselves with our minds made many of these empires very uneasy and distrustful of us. We refused to trade or conduct business with many of them because of their violent natures and because of this many looked down on us. However... this skill of ours was also what they feared and it kept them in check. Xaxon’s fool actions with one such species marked the beginning of the end of our race.” Wayonn said gently as he returned to his chair and sat back down. “Sumar would have been very proud of you. As would your grandfather Resumar.”

“You are starting to ramble.” Martin said. “You’re not telling me everything. I’ve been here for almost two days Wayonn. Why couldn’t you have taught me some of these things you say I need to learn?”

“Canth was the teacher.” Wayonn spoke. “That knowledge and those skills he passed to Helen... not to me. I only know of it because he was my son. Trust me... if I could teach you in such a connection as we have I would.”

“So what aren’t you telling me?” Martin asked.

“Do you enjoy being King Martin Leonidas?” Wayonn asked.

Martin shook his head instantly. “I fucking hate it!” He snapped.

Wayonn nodded. “So did Sumar. So did your grandfather. Yet there are those among the stars who enjoy commanding so many and having those willing to die at their very word. They know that Lycavorians exist but they do not yet know that you exist. Trust me when I say they are not going to be happy when they finally discover the descendants of Sumar are alive and flourishing. Or the descendants of Xaxon either for that matter. They also know that the High Coven as you call them exist. When they discover it though... you must be ready.”

“That doesn’t sound very promising Wayonn, would you care to give me a little more information?” Martin asked.

“I won’t need too.” Wayonn spoke. “Your grandfather’s namesake does that even now. The VORTEX 341 Cruiser you discovered in Kavalian space will have all this information. Your son will return with it after he destroys the ship. To the best of my knowledge that is the only Pralor ship that still remains aside from City Ship 41. Once it is gone... our history... the Pralor history and all we knew will be left with you. That ship houses data and intelligence on the last ten thousand years of my people. It is something that not even Dutkne has. It will be however... it will be something that many will want when it is realized it exists. And they will come to you to get it.”

“How are they going to know I have it?” Martin asked.

Wayonn smiled and shook his head. “How they discover it is an event that has already been set in motion Martin. Nothing you or I do now can alter that. That decision was made by you many years ago, and as it was the right decision then, it still remains the right decision today. You will have several advantages though.”

“Fucking riddles again Wayonn!” Martin out barked loudly. “I told you I hate nubous riddles! What decision that I made?”

Wayonn chuckled and he nodded his head. “Yes I know you hate riddles Martin. You have made that abundantly clear on several occasions. This is a riddle that will answer itself in time however.” He spoke. He looked up in the transmission.

“What advantages?” Martin asked.

“Your name for one.” Wayonn replied. “Your name alone is enough to inspire all species with the ears to hear it. When the name Leonidas is spoken in the known universe... people usually listen. Your father’s sacrifice and death is not just revered within the Union Martin. His actions are known to many different species who regard him as a hero. And then there is also your advances in Flat Space technology. It is something unknown to the vast majority of the species you have yet to encounter. And those wonderful Spartan shields you can call from within Flat Space are simply put... amazing. Not to mention that only you and those within the Union have the advantage of dragons and as I have said... their existence will be a shock to just about everyone.” Wayonn smiled. “So you see... the universe is far bigger than you think.”

“Wayonn... why is the little voice in my head screaming to run for cover right now?” He asked. “The more you tell me these things... the more that voice is telling me to pucker up and prepare to get fucked.”

Wayonn met his gaze in the transmission. “I’m not familiar with your more colorful terms and slang Martin.” He stated calmly. “Though I’m quite sure Dutkne will find them flattering.”

“You know... I’ve been cooped up in here for nearly two days listening to you tell me all these things.” Martin said. “And don’t get me wrong... they are incredible things.”

Wayonn held up his hand. “Yet you wish to return to your queens and try to get a handle on everything that has happened in the last three days?”

Martin paused for a moment but then nodded his head. “Yes.”

Wayonn nodded. "Then give me a few more hours and then whatever else we need to discuss can wait until you come to see me."

Martin returned to his chair and looked at the holo image. "What more could we possibly talk about that is more important than what has happened in the last two days?"

Wayonn met his eyes evenly from within the transmission. "Your brother." He said softly.

Martin looked at him as his face became hard and emotionless. "I'm listening."

SPARTA HOME OF ISRA, TARIFA AND AIHOLA

"...tried to arrest me mother!" Nikkei spoke anxiously. "They were going to send me to the brothels on Nefoa! They said father order it! I saw... I saw the order! It had his personal authorization!"

Jalersi held it together and touched the small monitor with her fingertips as she felt Pian's hand squeeze her shoulder gently. He stood just behind her, Karun on the opposite side of her as they looked at the transmission.

"I know Nikkei." Jalersi said gently. "I know."

"Mother... what is happening?" Nikkei continued. "These men. They... they killed the Puma Bane Team sent to get me. They brought us to a ship and I don't know where we are! Tell me what is going on mother!" Her powder blue eyes looked at Karun. "Karun? Please."

Jalersi reached up and squeezed Pian's hand on her shoulder. "Nikkei... there is much going on that you are not aware of." She said. "I can not begin to explain it all to you now... but know that you are safe with the men and women you are with. They will take you someplace safe until we can be together."

"Mother that is..." Nikkei began. She stopped when Pian lowered his face next to Jalersi and she saw his stern Kavalian features on her monitor.

"Do you trust your mother and brother Nikkei?" He asked her.

Nikkei nodded hesitantly. "Y... yes."

Pian nodded. "And you should." Pian looked at Jalersi and planted a soft kiss on her cheek surprising Nikkei. He turned back to the monitor as Jalersi smiled. "Know that your mother has submitted an Edict of Dissolution for her marriage to your father. She is now my wife and mate Nikkei. Your father was not the least bit happy about that among other things as well."

"An Edict of Dissolution?" Nikkei gasped her eyes wide.

Pian nodded. "You are among members of the Nruarani Pride now Nikkei." He said. "And I'm sure you have already discovered we do not adhere to the same harsh rules of those Prides within the heart of the Empire."

"There are... there are many females on this ship." Nikkei said nodding. "They have duties! One even works within the engine room!"

Pian nodded. "That would be Kotania... my brother's oldest daughter. She is turning out to be a fine engineer. You will find Nikkei... you will find that my Pride... Pride Nruarani... we do not subscribe to the same ideals as much of the KFI."

Jalersi gripped Pian's arm tightly, her own powder blue eyes bright. "I have discovered so much since coming here Nikkei." She spoke. "Most of all I have discovered Pian. No matter what you hear... no matter who says it to you... I love Pian with all that I am Nikkei. I love him in ways your father can not begin to understand... and I decided I did not want to fight it any longer. And he loves me with the same intensity Nikkei."

"Mother you..."

"Nikkei... do you remember when you were smaller and I told you that Kavalian females would never really have choice. That we would never be considered equals. I told you I was trying to fix that. Do you remember?"

Nikkei nodded. "Yes."

"Since coming here Nikkei... since coming here I have discovered so much." Jalersi told her. "Your aunt discovered what it was she desired and look at her now. Athani is a Princess of the Lycavorian Union."

Jalersi smiled gently. "Your father was not the man he told me he was Nikkei. I have known that for some time and denied it. Coming here... discovering what I have discovered with Pian... my eyes have been opened."

"You are a member of the Nruarani Pride now Nikkei." Pian spoke. "Is my mother there?"

"I am here Pian." The older voice spoke and they watched as the pure Kavalian female came into the transmission now next to Nikkei. Her dark blond fur was sprinkled generously with gray but her dark blue eyes were bright and intelligent. "And you continue to this day to find yourself in difficult situations Pian'Nruarani."

Pian chuckled softly and nodded his head. "It appears that way does it not mother?" He spoke.

"You are... you are safe there Pian?" Maysi asked.

Pian nodded instantly. "We have found friends and allies here we did not know or expect mother. We are safe for the time being."

"I'm taking her to Rizon Four Pian." Maysi spoke.

"Rizon Four?" Pian asked. "Why there mother?"

"It is where... it is where the Scribe Mother Demahra has gone Pian." Maysi answered. "The moment Athani defected Keleru put a contract out for her death. He says it was her who corrupted Athani with her wild teachings. She went into hiding and I only received her location two days ago."

"Mother... Rizon Four is close to the Consortium border." Pian told her. "Insure Mersh takes every precaution."

Maysi chuckled and turned her head at the sound of the voice. She looked back to Pian. "Your brother says he has been on board ships longer than you and not to tell him how to protect me."

Pian grinned and nodded. "We will try to make our way there mother." Pian said. "I don't know when that will be... for we need to see if we can somehow stop this insane plan of Keleru and Pusintin."

Maysi's eyes grew dark now. "You can not stop it my son!" She said softly. "Demahra has said events are already in motion and now the only thing that can happen is war."

"That is what we want to avoid mother!" Pian snapped.

"It can not be avoided Pian and you know this." Maysi spoke softly. "The actions of our esteemed leaders will serve only to awaken the wrath of those who we should be reaching out to and embroil us in a war that will cost us far too much."

"We can try to stop it!" Jalersi declared. "We... we have to try! Tarifa we..."

Tarifa nodded quickly. "I've passed on the information you gave me." She said. "Right now it should be in Deia's hands and she should be able to stop whatever it is that they are planning."

Maysi nodded within the transmission. "You and your Drow mate are well respected by the Scribe Mother Tarifa of the Elves. I hope... I hope you are right and she is wrong." Tarifa looked surprised at this statement and it showed on her face. Maysi turned back to look at Jalersi in the transmission. "Know this Jalersi'Nruarani... you are my son's wife and mate now and it is his desire for you that has brought about the many changes within our family and Pride. Changes for the better that Pian started to win your affection and continued because he knew they were right. His love and desire for you made him what he is now. On that fact alone I will guard your daughter with my life, as will all of us. Both of you are members of our Pride now... and we will defend you until our last."

Jalersi looked at her face on the monitor. "I will do what I must for our people." She stated proudly.

Maysi nodded. "As will my son." She said. "Now say goodbye to Nikkei, for we need to make several jumps. Pian... Mersh has told me to pass on that he has scattered our Pride by Fleet Groups, whatever that means. No doubt Keleru and his ilk will discovered it was us that took Nikkei eventually, and then he will come for us."

"Mother I am..."

"Do not apologize for following your heart Pian'Nruarani!" Maysi spoke. "There is not a single member of our Pride that does not agree with everything you have done these last years. We will be fine... but you need to return to us with your hide and your bride intact. Jalersi is becoming very popular within our family and it would be a shame to lose her before she has a chance to influence the future of our children or bear you your own sons and daughters to carry on in your stead."

Pian nodded his head. "I will mother."

"Rizon Four Pian." Maysi said. "Demahra's mountain home."

Pian nodded. "As soon as we are able."

“Nikkei... say goodbye to your mother and brother child.” Maysi spoke now. “They have much to do, and now that you are safe, they no longer need worry. Besides... there is much I wish to share with you as well.”

Nikkei had sat silently thought the exchanges between them and now she looked at her mother. “Momma?”

“You are safe Nikkei.” Jalersi said with a smile. “Karun and I will... we will all join you as soon as we are able.”

Tarifa moved closer. “Jalersi... we must close the connection now.” She said. “Anything longer than ten minutes under the blackout at this level and the Kryperia will take notice and begin to ask questions we do not want asked. The fewer that know you are here the better it will be for us.”

Jalersi nodded. “Nikkei... we must go. I love you daughter. We will see you soon.”

“I love you as well Mother.” Nikkei answered right away.

Jalersi reached forward and terminated the conversation before she spoke more words and kept going. She took a deep breath and leaned her head against Pian’s shoulder, pulling his arm tighter. “Pian... I swear by the gods if he hurts my daughter I will use a dull knife to carve his heart from his chest.”

“She will be safe Jalersi.” Pian answered. “We are in more danger than she is.”

Tarifa cocked her head upwards causing all of them to look at her. It was an odd head movement and not one they had seen her make before.

Roluth? What is wrong? Tarifa asked reaching out to her dragon brother.

There are no birds singing in the trees sister. Roluth answered her immediately. There are always birds and insects singing at this hour.

Pian got to his feet looking at her. “Tarifa... what is wrong?” He asked.

Roluth are you sure? Tarifa asked.

Yes. Roluth answered. Something is within the surrounding mountains that are causing the other creatures to be silent.

“Sibfla!” Tarifa hissed.

“Mother... what is wrong?” Ardis asked moving closer to her.

Tarifa looked at her as Anuk came into the room sensing the tension and hearing the conversation between Tarifa and Roluth. “We may have company.” Tarifa stated simply. “Anuk... kill the lights in the main room and make sure the drapery is shut. And stay away from the windows! And Anuk...”

Anuk turned back to look at Tarifa. “Yes.”

“Perhaps now would be a good time to call for your husband.” Tarifa said. “Isra is within the Durcunusaan base and I can’t reach him within Mindvoice with the level nine dampeners they have in place. Daniel’s COM channel will be one of only five active in the entire city during the blackout.”

Anuk tapped her finger on her jaw. “Spartan Two One this is Spartan Two One Alpha.” She spoke quickly. Anuk’s cerulean colored blue eyes grew a little wider when she heard the responding static in her implanted ear piece.

“What?” Tarifa asked moving closer to her.

“It’s being jammed.” Anuk said.

“Jammed?” Tarifa hissed as she moved to the wall bookshelf. “I guess that seals it then.” She pulled down on three books in order and the entire upper half of the bookshelf hummed to life and spun in a complete one hundred and eighty degree direction revealing a hidden compartment of weapons. “In order to be close enough to jam our implants they have to be in the mountains as Roluth said.” Tarifa pulled down the K14 and cut down version of the Spartan P190A3. She turned and looked at Pian and Jalersi standing with Jiss and staring at her. “I suggest we arm ourselves my friends. I believe things will start to become difficult in a short while.”

“Why don’t we just run for it?” Karun asked as he moved without hesitation to the shelf to get a weapon.

“If they are close enough to jam the Union implants...” Pian spoke as he too moved to grab a weapon. “Then they are probably watching the house now.”

Tarifa nodded. “Pian... will they have T19s?” She asked.

Pian stopped his actions and looked at her. "If... if they are from the Puma Bane Pride... yes more than likely."

Roluth! Go now brother! Get away from our house! Tarifa nearly shouted within Mindvoice.
What? Why?

They may have T19s Roluth! I won't risk you! Get away from the house and go for help! Tarifa exclaimed. Do not argue! Just go!

Tarifa almost felt the flutter of air and heard her bonded brother taking to the sky from inside the house. I will return sister! Roluth declared. I will return with an army!

Tarifa felt some small relief flood through her as she felt Roluth within Mindvoice pulling away from the villa with powerful sweeps of his wings. Isra, Daniel and a company of Spartans would suffice Roluth my brother. And tell them to hurry.

Tarifa jacked back the action on her K14 and looked at them. "I think we should prepare my friends. Something tells me that once they realize Roluth is going for help they will attack in force."

IRARUZU

TWENTY-TWO KILOMETERS NORTHWEST OF FORMER DROW ESTATE

"...still be following us Lu'ria?" Jennifer asked as they lay on the ground studying the path they had just taken to reach this ridge.

"It's that Lycavorian half breed." Lu'ria spoke softly as she lowered her binoculars. "It has to be. He must be following the bitter scent of the root we have been spreading on ourselves. Vith!" Lu'ria swore. "Instead of masking our scent we have been giving him something to follow that's just as good."

"I can't see them anymore." Jennifer said using her glasses to sweep the semi thick terrain below them. "How would he know what to follow Lu'ria? The scent I mean."

"I can't see them either. I don't know how he would know what to follow Jennifer. It is obvious that he has had some training in using his sense of smell though." Lu'ria agreed a bit testily. She regretted it instantly and looked at the young human female. "I'm sorry."

Jennifer shook her head. "After the way I treated you initially... you can bite my head off all you want." She answered. "I'm scared Lu'ria. The Deutrino field seems to keep getting bigger and bigger. Every time we think we are close to the edge, it expands more. Or it is following us somehow."

Lu'ria nodded. "That tells me there are more than just this group that is tracking us and those that hit the estate." Lu'ria spoke. "Someone else is controlling the Deutrino field and they are moving it along as that Lycavorian moves and he tracks us."

"Do you think the Patron got an emergency message off?" Jennifer asked softly. "They couldn't have been taken by complete surprise."

Lu'ria shook her head. "I don't know." She replied. "The small security room we were in looked untouched since the last time I saw it. I don't think anyone made it into a secure area to get an emergency beacon off. And we had just reported in... so without that beacon... no one would think to begin making inquires until we did not report in. It has been nearly thirty-six hours since our last report and we are not due to report in for another three days."

"Fuck!" Jennifer swore softly.

Lu'ria nodded. "Yes."

"What about your mother and the Guardian of the Line?" Jennifer asked looking at her. "You told me they were coming here."

"That is what she said." Lu'ria answered. "But our transmission was jammed before I ever found out what ship, where she was or how soon before she got here. And I know she was bringing some male Drow to introduce me too. That was her plan all along."

"If you are referring to the old hag Drow and Walter Carson..." The male voice spoke from behind them. Lu'ria and Jennifer were rolling to the sides even before the words had finished echoing in the air as they came to their feet and saw the five Kavalians standing around them with their weapons leveled at them. Leruk had his arms smugly crossed over his broad chest as he gazed at the two women. “We destroyed their ship and killed them within moments of them arriving. You are very much alone I assure you.”

Lu'ria's eyes darted back and forth quickly measuring up what actions she could take, none of which would get them out of this situation without grievous injury or death. She cut her eyes back to Leruk when he lowered his arm and moved closer to them.

“I have to say... tracking you has been something of an exercise. Putting the bitter flower on to mask your true scents was an excellent move.” Leruk spoke. “In the end it was futile however. I simply followed the scent of that instead.”

“Why are you doing this?” Lu'ria demanded. “We have done nothing to you!”

“We are simply following orders.” Leruk spoke in reply.

“You will not get away with this!” Jennifer barked. “You'll pay for those you have killed here!”

Leruk chuckled. “Not likely.” He answered. “None of the others survive. After our men got tired of fucking those Drow females we kept alive in the ass over and over, we got tired of hearing them scream and killed them. You two are all that is left. And you...” Leruk pointed to Lu'ria. “You are going to provide entertainment to this man here.” Leruk put his hand on the large Kavalians shoulder. “He did not appreciate the injury you gave to him.”

Lu'ria's amber eyes recognized the Kavalian as the one from the store who she had stabbed with her small blade deeply in his cheek. She could still see the pink skin of the wound though it appeared to be almost entirely healed now. She looked around quickly once more, desperately trying to find a way out of this. She never imagined her life would end like this. She would never know the touch of Androcles Leonidas upon her body, never know the pleasures she would give and receive to Sadi, Carisia and Ne'Veha. She would never know what it was like to fly on the back of...

You will know these things and more! The female voice boomed in Lu'ria's mind causing her amber eyes to go wide.

Who are you? Lu'ria demanded unsure if she would be heard in Mindvoice. She had been trying to learn all she could from books and items, but without another person to Mindvoice with, it was impossible to tell if she was doing it correctly or if anyone would even hear her when she projected her thoughts.

Open yourself to it my sister! I have felt you for so long just as you have felt me! Reach out with your thoughts my bonded sister! Let me in!

Majeir? Lu'ria gasped.

It is I Lu'ria! Please sister... lower your shields! I know you know how! Majeir answered.

Majeir... a Kavalian is about to kill us! Lu'ria sobbed. If I can hear you... If I can hear you than you must be very close, but not close enough.

Do as I ask you Lu'ria. I am far closer than you think! Open your mind my sister! Open your mind and let us become what we are meant to become. Majeir spoke with just a trace of humor.

Majeir... Majeir how close are you? Lu'ria asked.

As if in reply to her question Lu'ria felt a slight tingling along the skin of her arm and she looked down quickly. It began at her fingertips and slowly began to travel up her arm. Without further hesitation, Lu'ria dropped all pretense of maintaining the shields she had developed over these last months all on her own. Shields she had somehow known to erect and reinforce with simple exercises that she somehow knew all about and how to do. As Lu'ria allowed those shields to come down, the psychic shield began spreading faster up her arm drawing the attention of Leruk and the others now. Lu'ria was awash in memories and thoughts that were not her own now. Memories of a childhood that was not hers, memories of white skinned creatures and a single Lycavorian. Of a dark red colored dragon and then she saw flashes of a man she knew as Walter. She saw him transform into a wolf with snarling fangs and teeth and saw him leaping out of the darkness of the smoke. She saw the king beating another man on a plateau overlooking a deep blue ocean in the background. She saw war and memories that were not hers, but now had become part of her. Almost without thought Lu'ria returned the entirety of her young life back through that same connection, and she gasped when she felt a surge of power and knowledge course through her.

It was utterly amazing to Lu'ria. Never had she felt such comprehension and knowledge. The sum total of Majeir's equally young life was filling her freely, just as she passed to Majeir everything that had ever happened to her in her twenty-three years of life. She could hear Leruk shouting at his men, but his words were muffled and broken. They appeared to be moving in slow motion, Lu'ria able to see each and every heartbeat of movement as two of his men began to bring weapons up and Leruk was turning away from her.

I am this close sister! Majeir's voice boomed.

The savagely angry trumpet sounded in the next instant as everything around her came back into complete focus. Lu'ria watched with adoring amber eyes as the dark green scaled head smashed its way through the limbs of the trees just behind the two Kavalians who were lifting their weapons. The men had time to turn, and then they died. Majeir's huge head descended with lightning like speed and her massive jaws clamped shut on one Kavalian before he even had an opportunity to scream. The second was able to scream but then had that scream cut off when her massive talons came up and Majeir slashed downward with a single swipe, severing his head from his body and opening his entire chest cavity to the mid day air as her entire body now pushed aside half a dozen sapling trees and emerged from the timber like some avenging monster.

Lu'ria was not idle by any means. Using her speed as an elf and her fighting skills as a Drow, she found herself charged with energy and new awareness. There was a brief flash of silver white light and then Lu'ria saw Leruk sprinting away from where they were in wolf form. She paused briefly, for he was larger than many of the Lycavorians she had seen, but then Lu'ria was springing into action. The scarred Kavalian had already turned to face Majeir and Lu'ria leaped upon his back with barely a thought. Her K12 appeared in her hand and she rammed the barrel of the weapon into the Kavalians neck as his eyes were open in terror. Lu'ria didn't hesitate and twice caressed the trigger of the K12 sending two kinetic bullets punching through his thick neck. As his body fell, Lu'ria rode him to the ground and looked up as with a flick of her massive head Majeir tossed the Kavalian within her jaws into the air. A short trumpet of anger and then a stream of intense flame erupted from her maw and when the Kavalian's body impacted the ground it was nothing more than a smoking charred pile of flesh. Her head whipped around and she unleashed another stream of blistering fire at the last two Kavalians who were by now running as fast as their legs could carry them away from the small clearing. That stream of flame engulfed a fleeing Kavalian completely and like his comrade, his entire body nearly disintegrated to nothing.

"They are getting away!" Lu'ria exclaimed as she lifted her 190 and tried to sight in the fleeing Kavalian and Leruk's wolf form as it danced through the trees.

Let them go! Majeir spoke as her ruby eyes settled on her Drow sister. She watched Lu'ria turn to look at her and even Majeir was struck by the unearthly beauty that her bonded Drow sister was.

"Majeir we..."

Majeir moved closer to her now, slowly settling herself to the ground in front of Lu'ria and gazing at her intently. She saw a very stunned Jennifer out of the corner of her eye move closer as Lu'ria stared at her, but Majeir ignored her and focused on Lu'ria.

Touch me sister. Majeir spoke. I have waited so long to feel your touch and know that we are as one. Touch me.

True to her Drow nature Lu'ria didn't hesitate and she lowered the 190 as she stepped up to Majeir and placed her right hand flat on Majeir's snout. Jennifer gasped when she saw the soft flare of blue psychic light surround them both and the almost orgasmic look that came over Lu'ria's beautiful face.

Oh... my bonded Drow sister! Majeir gasped within Mindvoice.

As with the many different instances and circumstances of the thousands of Bonded Pairs within the Union, Lu'ria and Majeir coming together was not as elaborate or staggering as some others as they would come to learn. Perhaps it was because deep in their subconscious they had always known they were meant for one another, or perhaps it was the influence of Walter and Andro in each of them. Whatever the cause, Jennifer could only stand there and watch in awe as two minds became one.

It was everything her sister Syrilth had told her it could be. As their minds mingled and swam together, both of them saw and experienced the entire scope of each others lives within only a few moments. It was not as telling as the bonding of Malic and Vincix as Majeir had heard from others at Dragon Mountain. Their bonding had been special as members of Mjolnir's Hand, but it was everything and more as far as Majeir was concerned. Soon one set of amber eyes and one set of ruby orbs were gazing at one another with understanding and love.

My... my dragon sister! Lu'ria exclaimed after several moments.

Hurry! Majeir spoke now. Climb onto my back both of you. We must return to Walter and your mother before these fools come back with help.

My mother? The Guardian of the line? They are here? Lu'ria asked.

Why do you think we came here Lu'ria my sister? Majeir spoke. I could no longer deny the draw to you. Walter knew this and... and he insisted he bring me to you. He is a dear dear friend. Now hurry... they are many in number and they have those foul missiles with them. We must return to Walter and make a plan.

Lu'ria slung the 190 across her back and looked at Jennifer. "We have to go." She spoke.

"Go? Go where?" Jennifer exclaimed. "On him?"

Lu'ria smiled. "Jennifer... this is Majeir! This is my bonded sister! She will take us to where the Guardian of the line and my mother wait."

"Lu'ria... Lu'ria I've never been on a dragon before!" Jennifer spoke.

"Then that makes two of us." Lu'ria said as she moved around to the side and with her elven reflexes scampered up into the saddle. "We will learn as we go. Unless you wish to stay here and wait for them to return."

Jennifer no more wanted to stay here than die and she quickly climbed into the saddle behind Lu'ria. As Majeir rose to her feet the dragon armor clamped down on their thighs as a windbreak and secured them in the saddle. "Shit!" Jennifer stated. "I can think of many less painful ways to die."

Lu'ria looked at Majeir as her head turned on her long neck. "We are not going to die Jennifer. Not anymore."

With a soft trumpet of acknowledgement Majeir cocked her powerful legs and flung them into the sky.

"Where is she Holy One?" Daba asked softly as Walter settled to the ground beside her and Ceneia. "She has been gone for hours."

They had scavenged enough equipment and then borrowed what little they needed from a trader in the city and built their transmitter. Once they had sent the message, Walter moved them several kilometers into the mountains surrounding the city. He did not want to get caught up in a battle with Kavalian troops within the confines of the city, and part of him had no desire to kill innocent people, scum though many of them were. Daba was sitting on the fallen log, Ceneia between her legs while she used a Drow comb to run through Ceneia's shoulder length black hair. It was her way of maintaining her sanity while waiting for word from Majeir about Lu'ria. Daba had three daughters and three sons, Lu'ria being the youngest among them all. In a fashion that was very un-Drow like, Daba had always regarded Lu'ria in a special way because she was the youngest of her children. That was coming out now as she worried about her and was trying to absorb all that was happening. She was tying braids of Ceneia's hair with a peach color satin signifying that Ceneia was now a member of her family and that Daba had made claim to her. This tradition among the Drow had become even more important since Tarifa. There was not a day that went by that Tarifa was not wearing some sort of soft purple silk in her hair telling all who knew what it meant that she was Aihola's 'slave' and lover. She had done this for over twenty-five years now, and it had caught on very quickly among the other Drow on Earth and was now seen more and more frequently.

"I know this is redundant Daba, but you must have faith." Walter spoke. "Majeir will find her, of that I have little doubt."

"Can't you touch her within Mindvoice?" Daba asked.

"Walter nodded. "I could... but she is keeping her shields very high right now as she searches. I do not want to disturb her or pester her. She can be very willful at times."

I heard that! Majeir's voice announced causing both Walter and Daba to spring to their feet surprising Ceneia.

Majeir! Walter almost shouted. Majeir where are you? Did you find Lu'ria? Did you...

Daba gasped loudly as the large shadow swept over them and then Majeir was settling to the ground not ten meters away. Again in very un-Drow like fashion tears burst into Daba's eyes as she saw her youngest daughter sitting proudly in the saddle on Majeir's back.

I will always find my bonded sister! Majeir announced with her wings extended fully out to the sides.

Daba watched as the human female released her grip on Lu'ria's waist and dropped quickly to the ground while Lu'ria's amber eyes were focused on her mother as Majeir settled fully to the soft dirt beneath her.

Daba watched as Lu'ria swung her long leg over the saddle and followed suit, dropping easily to the ground without effort.

“Lu'ria!” Daba gasped then dashing forward to crush her daughter in her arms tightly. Ceneia and Walter watched with small smiles now, knowing that this was very unlike Drow behavior and it was something they were honored to witness.

“Mother!” Lu'ria sobbed as she embraced her tightly.

Daba pushed her back and looked at her. “Are you injured? Are you hurt Lu'ria?”

Lu'ria smiled and shook her head, her amber eyes moist from tears. “I am... I am uninjured mother.” She said softly. “I... we... we are lucky. So many of those we cared for were not.”

Daba nodded slowly holding Lu'ria's hands tightly. “We... we saw the store.” She stammered softly. “Those at the estate?”

Lu'ria shook her head and looked at Jennifer. “They... they are dead as well.” Jennifer spoke softly now as she stepped up to Lu'ria.

Daba looked at her. “You are Jennifer.” She said. “You are...”

“I was.” Jennifer answered softly. “My... my mistress is dead as well.”

Daba released one of Lu'ria's hands and took Jennifer's slim hand. “You are strong to have made it this far.” She spoke. “There... there was nothing you could do Jennifer. And as per our custom you may now consider yourself a member of my Drow clan and family.”

Lu'ria looked around and saw only the three dragoon elves keeping watch in different directions a hundred meters away. She turned back to her mother and Walter as he stepped up next to her. “I thought... you did not bring...?”

Daba looked at her and smiled. “No my daughter.” Daba answered. When the Holy One and Majeir came to me in Eden City and said they were searching for you I knew then all you have told me through the years is true. I... I have my doubts still on whether all of what you believe will become reality... but I knew I had to come and help the Holy One bring Majeir to you.”

“It is all true mother!” Lu'ria declared. “All of it!”

Daba drew her tight for another hug. “Right now... right now all I care about is that you are safe and in my arms.”

“Then let us get off this foul world!” Lu'ria stated. “There are more of these Kavalians here and they will be coming after us. We need to warn Armetus and the Krypteria. This could be happening all over The Wilds.”

“Well... that might be a problem.” Walter said.

Lu'ria drew back from her mother's embrace. “What do you mean?”

Walter met her eyes. “The ship we came on was destroyed by the Kavalians in the spaceport. We are kind of stuck here now.”

HADARIA

PRIVATE ROOM OUTSIDE ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBERS

“...are all rensibfla!” Sivana snapped from her chair. “Now that we have exposed them as the vindictive witches that they are they can't go forward with these proceedings!”

“I would not put anything past them.” Zaniai spoke from his chair. “They have been waiting and planning for this day for some time.”

“What more could they do?” Fuleos demanded. “We have already shown the entire Union their case is nothing!”

“The fact remains that Anja and Sivana did break our law by going against the Ministry and then dismissing their order.” Eurin spoke. “We all know the charges in regards to Seanna are fabricated, but they still have much they can use against her. They...”

Anja stood by the large window overlooking the capital and not taking part in the discussion. Wiktor had informed them they would adjourn for two hours and that time was almost up. She sipped the mug of coffee, her thoughts wandering as she let her eyes gaze across the city into the distance. She smelled her uncle come up behind her slowly and she turned to look at him.

“Uncle Vamm?” she spoke softly.

“Anja...” He said stepping up next to her. He lowered his head unable to meet her eyes. “Anja I am ashamed at what is happening. I can not express to you how disgusted I am with what they are doing. I... I have never agreed with it... but it took Fuleos to get me to step up and finally be a man and make a stand for what I believe.”

Anja looked at him with those jade green eyes. She had always considered her uncle to be a quiet man who went along with whatever her aunt wanted. She knew that he was the senior instructor at the Mage Warrior Academy, but even in all this time she and Sivana had been back she had never really taken the time to get to know him. He seemed so distant and timid when he was around Umbra.

“You do not need to explain your actions to me Uncle.” Anja said.

Vamm held up his hand stopping her before she continued. “Yes... yes I believe I do.” He told her. “I... I have always carried a large amount of guilt for the events that transpired after you and Sivana were born Anja. It is our fault that she was lost to begin with. We...”

Anja cocked her head slightly and set her mug of coffee on the window sill. “Uncle you... Sivana and I don’t blame you for that.”

Vamm nodded his head. “Perhaps not... but it is how I feel nonetheless.” He told her. “I have... I have seen this before Anja.”

“Seen what?” Anja asked.

“No one knows of this except a select few. Prime Minister Deia knew... perhaps Eurin and Zaniai but I doubt it.” Vamm said.

“Knew what Uncle Vamm?”

“Wiktor came after your father in such a manner the year before you were born.” He stated. “She did not approve of the direction your father was taking our people. He was on the road to doing much of what you and Sivana have done. Tying our people more tightly with our Lycavorian brothers and sisters. Buonau was part of it against him then as well, but she was not the Elder Healer on the Council at the time. I do not know what it was that made them stop... an agreement of some sort was reached with your mother and father before you and Sivana were born. They ceased all proceedings afterwards.”

Anja looked at him keenly. “An agreement?” She asked.

Vamm nodded. “I don’t know what it entailed. I think Umbra may... she was always at odds with your father... but I only know after this agreement was made they stopped pressing to bring your father up on charges.” He looked at her evenly. “It is my belief that the agreement had something to do with you and Sivana, and that is why I believe they are pressing so hard for custody of Retta and Calyb. I believe they would have tried when Eliani was still small... but they knew there was no way they were going to get her away from her father and you.”

“I’m not sure I am following you Uncle.” Anja said.

“This has to do with the Hadarian Royal Line more than anything Anja.” Vamm stated. “It is only my opinion Anja, but I believe the agreement your mother and father made was to relinquish at least in some form, yours and Sivana’s upbringing so that the Elder Council and Wiktor would retain at least some means of control over the royal bloodline. They feared losing control. They feared that if unchecked, your parents would raise you and Sivana to continue what they were doing and eventually the Arch Ministry and Elder Council would lose whatever power they perceived they should have.”

Anja met his eyes evenly. “You believe they are doing this because their original plan failed?” She asked.

Vamm nodded. “At least in some part... yes.” He answered. “It is why they have pushed for so long to have Retta and Calyb spend more and more time on Hadaria. Why they were so angry when you allowed them to become bonded to dragons as you and Martin are. It is also why I believe they will go to any lengths to insure Retta and Calyb are returned to Hadaria.”

“Uncle... you do know this was all an elaborate plan.” Anja said. “Duewa has confirmed all of it to us on Earth.”

“Duewa?” Vamm asked surprised.

Anja nodded. "I was rather surprised myself to be honest... but it appears Duewa has found something she desires more than power and her mother's approval."

"What is that?" Vamm asked.

Anja smiled. "The love of a certain Spartan soldier who has made her his wife and mate."

Vamm's eyes grew large. "Duewa has... she allowed a Lycavorian to claim her?" He gasped.

Anja nodded. "There is still quite a bit of distrust between her and I... but I do know the man who has claimed her and he is no fool. Rinard brought this to them first. He told them he could set everything up as far as the issue with me was concerned. I don't know how or where he got the means to get a clone of me. Only the High Coven has the unique cloning technology to produce something so perfect. They have known all along this was not me and they have played along with it the entire time."

"Then... then all of this is...?" Vamm gasped.

Anja nodded slowly. "If what you are telling me is accurate... all of this is simply a continuation of what they thought they would receive in the deal with our parents."

Vamm met her eyes. "At least some form of control over the heirs to the Hadarian throne allowing them to influence policy."

Anja nodded. "Yes. See... the only problem with that is they think they are dealing with Deia and the Union Senate. Deia may be Martin's Aunt... but she will always try diplomacy first. Wiktor and Buonau know that and they think Deia will be able to control Martin if they take Retta and Calyb from us. That is the first mistake. The second mistake is they think the men and women protecting us are nothing more than knuckle draggers, when in fact many of them have advanced degrees in one field or another. Any attempt by Wiktor, Buonau or their cronies to remove Retta and Calyb from Earth will be met by some very angry Durcunusaan soldiers and half a dozen pissed off dragons. Calyb and Deion are very protective of their sisters. As are their dragons. I am not worried about our children Uncle..."

"Then why are you not at the table with the others discussing what Wiktor and Buonau can and can not do?" Vamm asked.

Anja met his gaze. "Because they are going to succeed no matter what I do."

"You believe they will remove you as Queen?" Vamm gasped.

Anja nodded. "If not entirely... they will certainly cripple my ability to conduct business as Queen."

Anja said. "Any decision I make will need to go through them... and if it does not meet with their superior approval it will never see the light of day. Personally... personally I think there is more going on that we don't know about and none of it is good if it leaves them in charge of Hadaria."

Vamm looked at her intently. "Anja... tell me what you want." He said softly. "I have watched you through the years... and you are far too much like our King. You have something rolling around in that head of yours, I know you do. Order me. I was not lying when I said every Mage Warrior in our ranks supports you one hundred percent. They believe none of what is happening."

Anja met his gaze. "Uncle... how many of your Mage Warriors are on Hadaria right now with you?"

"Forty-seven." Vamm answered without hesitation. "And that does not include the sixty-nine that are currently in training."

"Uncle... get them off Hadaria." Anja stated plainly. "I will not allow our Healers to become political pawns of the Arch Ministry or Elder Council. They will get them killed. Get your Mage Warriors and students off Hadaria tonight. Anyway you can. Wiktor and Buonau will not stop until they get what they want, and they want me out of power. That they did not blink when Ceuma presented herself to them makes me believe there is something far more sinister about to happen."

Vamm nodded. "I will see to it." He stated. "I will take them to our training facility on Apo Prime and we will be gone within the hour."

Anja nodded. "Thank you Uncle Vamm."

Vamm stepped closer to her. "I have remained silent when I should have spoken out. I will no longer do that. You are my niece and I support you and Sivana in all that you do. Not because you are my family... but because you are right in what you are trying to do."

Anja leaned up on her tip toes and kissed his cheek. "You should go." She said softly. "Leave out the back of the Ministry and contact me when you have arrived on Apo Prime."

Vamm nodded and turned for the door, ignoring those at the table even as Atropos moved out of the shadows and up next to the diminutive Queen he so adored. Anja didn't turn to face him as she watched her uncle leave, but instead retrieved her coffee mug from the window sill and stared out across the city once more. Atropos remained silent knowing she would make the decision she had to make. After four minutes Anja lowered her mug.

"Atropos?" She spoke softly.

"Anja?" He answered. He had not called her Queen when they were in private in over two decades.

"Atropos... initiate Shining Path please." Anja said softly.

Atropos nodded his head. "As you order."

"Leave nothing behind Atropos." Anja said. "Nothing."

Atropos nodded once more before bowing and moving for the door just as it opened and Belen stepped in.

"They are calling us back into the chamber." He said.

BELID

As'hia rested on her wolf haunches while her dark wolf eyes gazed at his powerful back. Two days she had remained in that cave alone. Lynom had returned only when he thought she was sleeping to retrieve one piece of equipment or another and then he left her alone again. She could not penetrate his Mindvoice shields for it was like trying to invade a towering black wall. Her dreams were confusing and almost always the same, but they were so very vivid and they were exquisitely divine in nature.

Yes she had been captured and raped when she had first been brought here. Yes the Immortals had broken her, making her act in ways she would never have acted, at least until her wolf blood had purged the chemicals from her bloodstream that caused female elves to become addicted to Immortal semen. She did not remember exactly what was done, and whether this was because of the drugs given to her or simply her subconscious As'hia didn't care. She did not want to know what happened in those few hours for if she did she might never feel what she was feeling now. Yes Lynom had bitten her and fed on her blood, five times in all and the last time it had set her blood to burning. He had done this to protect her she now knew. Protect her so that the other Immortals would not attempt to do what the first one did that caused Lynom to kill him in such a brutal fashion.

As'hia had never imagined she could feel for an Immortal what she was feeling coursing through her body and her blood now. Two days without his scent filling her nostrils was more than she could bear. Consequences be damned As'hia had thought just before shifting to her wolf form and leaving the cave to find him. Now as she stared at his back while he sat on the ground looking out over the treetops with the macrobinoculars, As'hia could do nothing to stem the ache in her heart and the calling of her blood without him nearby.

Lynom was the son of the Immortal Cha'talla and his pureblood vampire wife Esther and As'hia wanted him so badly it was almost painful. That he was half Akruixian Immortal was of no matter to her any longer, for he was physically the most delicious man she had ever set her young eyes upon. The bone spurs along his jaw only increased his rugged handsomeness in her eyes, while the physical definition and superb shape he was in made him a match for even the most beautiful Spartan males she had seen. His long black hair was now braided tightly and pulled into a ponytail that dropped well below his shoulders and As'hia found herself wanting to run her fingers through that hair. His dark eyes could make her wet just staring into them, and she had seen him in all his naked glory when he wasn't looking. The size of his cock even in a flaccid state was enough to make As'hia want to feel him buried so deeply inside her she was howling out her pleasure to the very gods. It was so disconcerting for her to feel this way, but this is what filtered through her blood.

This man... Lynom... he had done everything within his power to protect her and keep her from harm, even while under the impression that she hated him and everything he was. This was something that As'hia had done nothing to dispute, and it had led him finally to leave her alone in that cave for the last two days so she would not have to contend with someone she saw as a monster and blamed for everything bad in her life. The truth of the matter was As'hia could not reconcile her feelings for this man until now. She had wrestled with her emotions ever since helping him to remove the outer skin he had been wearing to make him appear completely Immortal. Even before then she admitted to herself. As'hia inched closer to him in her wolf form, never taking her dark eyes from him. She watched him lower the macrobinoculars and set them next to the long sleek shape of the High Coven SR9 Sniper Rifle. The weapon could fire a 25mm Kinetic slug over two kilometers away in the hands of an excellent shooter. Lynom was apparently such a shooter for the weapon was superbly crafted to As'hia's eyes and in excellent condition.

As'hia watched him lift a small fruit and take a bite out of it as he looked up at the darkening sky. Her wolf senses were fully alert and taking in all around her on the small mountaintop. She could see thick tree tops and even more towering mountains in the distance on three sides, while a shimmering blue green ocean occupied the distance to the east of them.

"You can not sneak up on me Ssin'urn 'anon." Lynom's voice caught her attention and her muzzle turned to see him looking at her over his shoulder. "I smelled your blood the moment you came out of the cave. If you wish to kill me you should have just shot me in the back and been done with it."

In a soft silvery white flash of light As'hia shifted back into her normal form squatting on the ground only three meters behind him. His verbena scent was powerful and pure and once more it tickled her nostrils as nothing ever had. Her mother had always told her that when she discovered the man who she was to spend her life with she would not be able to rid his scent from her brain and since that first night out here in the open air and the mountains, Lynom's verbena scent had filled her mind completely.

"I... I wasn't trying to sneak up on you." As'hia finally said softly. She turned her head and saw the thin bedroll nearby, the portable heating stove and several other items stacked very neatly on the ground next to the bedroll.

Lynom turned back around and looked out over the mountains. "I spoke with Tir'ut early yesterday. Something happened on Earth and they are expecting Androcles Leonidas and his siblings to arrive on Kranek soon. When they do... they will depart with several LRRs and two STRIKERS to come here. He estimated four more days at the most. The Union engineers have done some modifications to our Runners and made them faster."

"Why didn't you tell me?" As'hia asked moving even closer.

Lynom looked at her with those dark eyes. "I was under the impression you did not wish to hear from me unless I was telling you they were here. It is not what you wanted to hear so I did not tell you."

"What happened on Earth?" As'hia asked moving closer still, until she was squatting next to him so close she could reach out and touch him. Lynom turned back away from her and took a deep breath. "Lynom... what has happened?" She asked again.

"The Empress of the High Coven and her cronies decided to strike against the King's family." He replied. "They... they assaulted Zarah Leonidas and attacked someplace called Dragon Mountain."

"Assaulted?" As'hia asked softly.

Lynom nodded. "Tir'ut told me... he told me it was a vile assault against her honor and person." He said. "They do not know much other than Androcles is bringing the High Coven dragons and riders to Kranek to complete their training. The Empress of the High Coven is dead... killed by the hand of your Feravomir it appears." He said looking at her as she inched closer. "One of Yuri's sons is dead, the other was injured, and it is my understanding that Yuri was gravely wounded by Androcles Leonidas before she escaped Earth. More than that I do not know and I didn't press my brother. He and Normya have much happening and I did not want to inquire further."

"The... the High Coven Empress is dead?" As'hia gasped.

Lynom nodded. "Yes. That has been confirmed by many sources." He spoke. "It could not have happened to a nicer person in my opinion. My mother has told my brothers and me that she was quite the elg'caress."

As'hia's eyes narrowed and she shook her head. "Elg'caress?" She asked.

Lynom nodded. "Bitch." He took another bite out of the fruit. "Though I should be thanking her I suppose."

"Thanking her?" As'hia gasped in shock.

Lynom nodded. "If not for her actions, my father and mother would never have come together and I would not be here." He answered. "Aikiro is the one who sent my mother away with my father. She had hoped he would kill her when he got away, but they ended up falling in love with each other much to the Empress's disgust. I will lose no sleep now that she is dead."

"Princess Zarah?" As'hia asked.

Lynom shook his head. "He did not go into great detail." He answered. "Only that they expected them on Kranek within several days. Three at most."

"Why are you looking off back towards the base?" As'hia asked. "There's no way they could have followed us. Is there?"

Lynom held out the macrobinoculars to her. "See for yourself." He spoke. "They are part of the indigenous life on Belid."

As'hia took the glasses and brought them to her eyes. She scanned the area back in the general direction that they had come until she found the large brown furred creatures just making their way out of a small clearing and back into the timber. She could just make out that two of them were smaller than the two others.

"Guy'ya." Lynom spoke. "I believe they are called bears on Earth, though the guy'ya here are considerably larger. They are docile for the most part unless they have young ones, which those two adults do. They will not come up here, but they provide us a unique early warning system."

"You... you are out here watching bears?" As'hia asked somewhat exasperated as she looked at him. He was out here watching animals when he had all but professed his love for her and would not stay inside the cave with her. Of course her actions towards him did nothing to improve her status in his eyes no doubt.

Lynom nodded slowly detecting the tone of her voice. She sounded almost angry that he had said that. "Yes." He spoke. "I... I was under the distinct impression you did not want me around however. Not with what you have endured."

"I never said that!" As'hia hissed softly looking at him. "I... I don't remember any of it. I don't remember any of it Lynom. All I can remember is my time with you. And you have been nothing but... nothing but wonderful to me, while I treated you horribly."

Lynom could hear the sorrow and pain in her voice and he did not press her on the issue. He could not begin to imagine what it was she felt knowing she had been raped by any number of Immortals and not being able to remember it. He knew of at least four Immortals who had forced themselves on his Ssin'urn 'anon before he was able to get Phy'iad to allow him to make her his 'property', and Lynom had every intention of making sure it was he who killed those men when they attacked the base. Lynom looked out over the tops of the timber before them and took another bite of fruit.

"That is good I think Ssin'urn 'anon." He finally spoke after several long moments. "It will allow you to go forward into the future and put these past weeks behind you more quickly. I will settle the debt that is owed to you as I told your mother I would."

As'hia stared at the side of his face and in the darkening twilight she noticed that his bone spurs had all but disappeared due to the gathering darkness and the moonlight reflected most invitingly off his tanned skin. She had to admit once more that his features were anything but frightening. At least not to her. Like his brother he had obviously inherited their mother's flawless skin and dark complexion. While they had the Immortal bone spurs along their jaws, they were no where near as pronounced as full blooded Immortals. As she looked at him now, regardless of their predicament and what she knew had happened recently, As'hia still found herself wanting to be wrapped in those arms. His arms.

"You... you will do that won't you?" She asked softly seeing his eyes turn to gaze at her.

"If it is within my power... yes." Lynom answered.

"That may... it... it may explain why..." As'hia turned her eyes on the ground between her legs. "It may explain why I feel the way I do." She stated.

Lynom looked at her. "What do you mean?"

As'hia looked up at him meeting his dark eyes with her own and once again she thought of how beautiful his eyes were. "I don't want to be alone Lynom." She told him softly. "Not anymore."

Lynom's eyes grew wide when As'hia didn't hesitate and shifted her lithe body between his legs. She settled her firm butt to the ground between his legs and pushed back against him. She drew one of his arms around the front of her body, pulling it tight against her full breasts as she leaned back against his chest.

"As'hia... As'hia what are you...?"

"Just hold me Lynom." She said softly. "Just hold me."

Fighting down the new sensations that were surging through him, Lynom could only allow her to pull his arm tighter even as the scent of her blood so close to him caused his head to spin. He had not expected this in the least, and having her body pressed so intimately against his meant it was going to be a sleepless night. Not that it mattered really, for the last few months he had experienced many sleepless nights because she tormented his dreams. If this was as close as he would come to achieving what he so wanted then that is what he would accept. Lynom pulled his arm tighter, feeling her breasts press tightly against his forearm as he pulled her tighter to him reveling in the feel of her lush body so close to him.

Lynom didn't see the look of pure contentment bathe As'hia's face when he did this for if he had there was not a force of nature in the universe that would have kept him from returning to the Immortal base and laying waste to the entire facility at this very moment.

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBERS

The tension in the air was almost a palpable thing Anja thought.

The huge gallery of those citizens witnessing these events was silent as they waited for Wiktor to call the session back to order. She was conversing with Elder Buonau and another aide in soft whispers turned away from the gallery in front of them. Rinard was nowhere to be found and this was an unexpected move on Buonau's part. Anja felt certain that she would have had Rinard present to witness her attempt at bringing Anja down. Umbra remained in her seat with Pcillany, an almost permanent scowl on her face now that her own husband had gone against her wishes and sided with Anja. Anja knew they were scrambling, or at least she hoped they were. They could no longer use the security videos as proof of anything since Ceuma had come forward and been tested. It was confirmed by several different Healers, all of them fully influenced by Wiktor or Buonau, that Ceuma was indeed a clone and had been just recently turned. After some heated protest Rinard had also submitted to testing and it was discovered that Ceuma had been turned by him. Anja saw Eurin and Sivana whispering to each other on the other side of Ceuma, while her clone was watching the different people in the chamber keenly.

Hadarian culture was such that females were considered, if not superior to men, then at the very least holding a slightly higher plane of respect. Over ninety-five percent of Hadarian Healers were females, and while there were thousands of male healers, the females tended to be the more powerful of the Healers who worked in the field. To some Hadarians, mainly the much older or the stridently loyal followers of the Elder Council, this was seen as a status symbol of sorts that afforded the females more political clout. To Anja and many of the more forward looking individuals, this way of thinking was bullshit. Filrian had proven that by being away from Hadaria for so long and being able to use his Healing powers to the utmost.

As her Jade green eyes moved slowly over the crowd Anja noticed that there were far more Elder Militia troops along the walls of the chamber and she knew then that Wiktor and Buonau had something planned. They were standing casually as if they were uninterested in the proceedings, but Anja knew otherwise. She glanced up high into the loft of the Arch Ministry Chamber casually and let her eyes pass over where she knew the small outcropping was. It was a small ledge where an Elder Militia Guard always stood when the chamber was in session. It was a security means that hardly anyone knew about. Anja only discovered it because she could detect the scent of the individual up there and the count did not match those scents that were actually in the chamber. As she let her eyes fall back on where Wiktor and Buonau were nodding to each other she reached out within a shielded Mindvoice connection to the man who she knew would be there.

[Joci?]

[I am here my Queen.] Joci answered immediately.

Anja felt a sense of relief pass through her at his voice. She had seen for herself his devotion to Ceuma and after talking with Atropos she had no doubts about where his loyalty was. [You have taken note of the additional Elder Militia standing around the chamber as if they are only watching?]

[They wish to try and blend in, but they are here for other purposes.] Joci spoke.

[Joci... I have a sinking feeling this is not going to turn out as I had hoped.] Anja said. [No matter what happens... you will cover Sivana and Ceuma.]

[You are Queen!] Joci protested.

[And Ceuma is your mate and Sivana is my sister.] Anja stated calmly. [I can handle myself Joci... but neither of them are true warriors. You have the high ground and can cover them better than Belen. You did not kill the man up there did you?]

Anja could almost feel Joci turn his head to look at the inert form of the Elder Militia Guard who was now unconscious and secured with bindings. [No my Queen.] Joci answered. [He is very much alive... but he will have a unique headache when he awakes.]

Anja felt the gentle tapping against her shields and she immediately recognized the gentle MV reverberation of Belen. She instantly open their connection to allow him to talk. [Belen? What is it?]

[I am in position to the rear of the chambers Anja.] Belen replied. [There is a small transport shuttle on the pad back here. It has no markings on it and did not receive clearance from Union Control to land. They have no record of it.]

[A Union ship?] Anja asked.

[No... it is a Limian short range shuttle.] Belen replied.

[Why would they feel the need to have an unmarked shuttle outside their chambers?] Anja said thoughtfully.

[Perhaps they worry that you will not control your temper.] Belen spoke.

[Any signs of activity near it?] Anja asked.

[No. And the cockpit windows are blacked out as well.] Belen told her.

[That can't be good.] Joci broke in. [They did not want anyone to see who occupied the shuttle.]

[I agree.] Belen spoke.

[Perhaps the extra Militia troops came from that ship.] Anja said.

[Anja... did you notice the Union Ambassador is in the gallery as well?] Belen asked.

Anja's eyes darted to the gallery until they came to rest on the Lycavorian male. He had a puzzled and bored expression on his face. [That's odd.] Anja stated. [Why have him here if this is supposed to be an internal matter.]

[Anja... I don't like the feelings I am getting from this.] Belen spoke. [Something else is going on. Where is Rinard?]

[I noticed he was missing as well.] Joci spoke. [A pity... I was hoping you would allow me to shoot him for all he has done.]

[Have patience Joci... you just may get the opportunity.] Anja answered. [Miath?]

[I am ready my sister. Can we get this over with please?] Miath answered immediately. Anja smiled at the calmness in Miath's voice and she briefly thought back on how far they had come. When they were first bonded he had been a brash and reckless young dragon, but through the years with Aelnala and Torma's influence he had become a methodical young dragon. He was completely devoted to her and to his mate Aelnala and he had taken on many of Anja's more humorous traits as his answer suggested.

[Soon brother.] Anja answered.

[We should...] Belen began.

The tapping of the thin rod on the chime cut off his words as Wiktor set the rod on the massive table. "I will now call this session back into order." She announced.

The gallery became quiet once more, the Netnews reporters all hanging on Wiktor's every word while their hover drones recorded it all.

"As we instructed... this woman was tested and..." Wiktor started.

"Her name is Ceuma!" Anja snapped as she got to her feet.

"She is a clone!" Wiktor announced harshly. "A clone created by the High Coven for some devious means no doubt! She is not a Hadarian! She is an object and..."

Even as mild mannered as she was Ceuma came to her feet as well. "I am not an object!" She declared angrily. "I am a person! I think and breathe and feel just like the rest of you! I..."

"You are a clone!" Buonau barked from her chair. "You are not a citizen of Hadaria and therefore you have no rights as a Hadarian! By your own admission you have been schooled as a traditional Lycavorian female by the mother of the man who supposedly took you as his mate!"

“Ceuma is a clone yes!” Anja spoke as she wrapped her fingers around Ceuma’s wrist to keep her from speaking. “She is a clone that was brought into existence by Rinard for whatever nefarious reasons he conjured up! She is a living person now, with a will and mind of her own and that is how you will treat her! However we are not here to determine that Ceuma is in fact an individual... we are here to determine what your findings discovered in regards to Rinard and his actions. Where is Rinard by the way?”

“This body advised Rinard to cease attending these proceedings.” Wiktor stated.

“And why is that?” Eurin asked also coming to her feet now. “He is one of the three individuals who originally brought these charges to this Ministry. Now you no longer need him?”

“After reviewing the information given to us by you... we have determined that there is enough cause to remove charge number four against you until such time as it can be further reviewed.” Wiktor spoke.

Eurin looked stunned. “What we presented to you is more than enough evidence for you to remove all but the last two charges against Queen Anja!” She snapped. “How can you leave these charges in place when the reason, as you state, for Anja’s actions was to conceal what she supposedly had done in charge four!” Eurin lifted the data pad. “Your own findings clearly state that the events we witnessed in the security footage was not Anja!”

“Our findings do not state that.” Wiktor spoke.

“They do indeed!” Eurin barked lifting the pad. “I read from your personal physician’s own words Chief Minister now... ‘It is very likely, given the findings after several tests were conducted, that the subject in question is the sole participant of the security videos presented by the Arch Ministry on behalf of Spartan officer Rinard. There is no trace of the Spartan Rinard’s DNA anywhere within the blood of Queen Anja Leonidas, while significant DNA results were obtained from the bloodstream of the clone called Ceuma’” Eurin looked at her. “Or was it your intent to not reveal the results of your own tests?”

“You will mind your place Divine One!” Wiktor barked. “You do not dictate to this body even if you are the Divine Healer of our people!”

“I’m not dictating anything but what your own doctor has stated.” Eurin snapped right back.

“The first three charges will remain for there is sufficient evidence to prove the Queen acted in a willfully negligent manner in regards to Senior Mage Warrior Seanna!” Wiktor spoke.

“We have proved that your basis for these supposed negligent acts is false!” Eurin almost shouted. “How then can you leave the other charges in place?”

“We can... and we will!” Wiktor loudly barked out. “By her own admittance she chose to remain and treat less seriously wounded Lycavorian soldiers instead of moving to Seanna’s location and treating her. A fellow Hadarian who she just happened to have an intense decade long relationship with! A relationship that ended for mysterious circumstances.”

“The reasons for ending our relationship are none of yours or this body’s concern!” Anja growled.

“On the contrary Queen Anja... I believe the reasons for ending that relationship relate exactly to the way you acted when notified of Seanna’s injuries!” Wiktor stated. “Elder Healer Buonau agrees with me, as does the entire Elder Council and Arch Ministry!”

“That is bullshit and you know it!” Anja snarled. “I was treating injured soldiers who were fighting a war!”

“You chose to treat them over a fellow Hadarian and former lover!” Buonau spoke from her seat now. “Why is that Queen Anja? Why would you chose others over a young woman who you were intimately involved with for over a decade. Why would you chose others over your own people?”

“What?” Anja asked aghast. “We are all part of the Union and we were fighting a fucking war!”

“Yes. A war begun by King Leonidas and Queen Dysea for questionable reasons to begin with and a war that cost the lives of one thousand three hundred and nine of our Healers!” Wiktor announced.

“All of whom died honorably doing what they were trained to do, beside those who they were happy to fight beside!” Anja snapped with vicious intent. “Do not demean their sacrifice Chief Minister... I won’t allow it! I have spoken to each and every mother, father, wife and husband of those killed in the Evolli War and not one of them ever questioned the reasons behind their loved ones service! And as far as the reasons for the Evolli War... I suggest you turn to the three hundred fourteen thousand Quartari that were slaughtered by the Evolli because they were pissed off that Dysea cancelled our trade agreements with them.”

Wiktor waved her hand dismissively at Anja's words. "We will never know the King's true reasons for that war... only the results! And we will never know the true reasons you let Mage Warrior Seanna die." She spoke cruelly. "Perhaps it was because she knew things that you did not want her to reveal. Things in regards to your behavior perhaps?"

"What?" Anja gasped. "Now you are grasping at straws? Your little plan didn't go as you like and now you'll make stuff up? Is that how it works now?" Anja shook her head sadly. "Now I know why Duewa made the decision she did."

"You will not speak of my daughter!" Buonau shouted.

Anja looked at her. "I'll speak of her all I want." Anja said. "At least she isn't going to turn out like you. At least she is smarter than you."

"You know nothing of what you speak!" Buonau nearly screamed. "And I will not listen to you demean my daughter! She would never do the things you have done! The things you have allowed your own daughter to do! Princess Eliani disrespects this sacred body every time she comes to Hadaria by flaunting her vampire lover. And now she has allowed a Lycavorian to claim her? These are the same things you continue to do!"

Anja chuckled. "When was the last time you talked to Duewa Elder Buonau?" She asked. "Last I heard... she had fallen head over heels in love with a senior officer in the Durcunusaan and was exquisitely happy when he claimed her as his wife and mate!" Anja tossed out the insult at her.

"You lie!" Buonau did scream now.

"I guess you don't know your daughter very well at all." Anja said.

Enough!" Wiktor barked. "It is the decision of this Ministry and the Elder Council to leave the first three charges in place for there is ample evidence that has been presented to prove them all."

Anja stepped away from her chair, her wolf blood burning with anger now. "You know; why don't we just cut all the bullshit Chief Minister Wiktor!" Anja growled. "I grow tired of yours and Elder Healer Buonau's games!"

Wiktor met Anja's eyes with unpleasantness. "If that is your wish Queen Anja." She stated with supreme smugness. She made a show of straightening up the data pads scattered in front of her and no doubt it played well to those fanatical followers of the Elder Council and others. "This Arch Ministry and the Hadarian Elder Council has fought with the evidence put before us for several weeks now. It saddens us at what has transpired these last months but we feel the actions we take now are for the betterment of our people as a whole."

"The Hadarian Elder Council has no say in the rulings of the Arch Ministry!" Zaniai barked from where he had sat silently up until now.

"I beg to differ Prefect Zaniai." Wiktor said.

"The Elder Council is a religious body and by our own constitution can not take part in the workings of government!" Zaniai declared.

Wiktor nodded. "That was true." She stated calmly. "It is no longer."

"You can not change the constitution Chief Minister!" Zaniai barked.

"With a unanimous vote of the Arch Ministry, according to our constitution, I can. And we have." Wiktor announced. "The Arch Ministry and the Hadarian Elder Council has ruled on these charges and we will now pronounce our findings!"

"This is outrageous!" Eurin shouted. "You can not do this! It goes against everything our people have worked towards for millennia!"

"The Elder Council preached that we were leaving too much of ourselves behind during the rule of King Yelu!" Buonau stated. "We were dismissing too much of our past! We have warned of this for centuries and were ignored! This is what has resulted! Now we have suffered under the rule of a Queen and Princess who show no regard for Hadarian culture and history! A Queen and Princess who have done nothing but throw our most scared values back in our faces ever since they returned to us!"

"You cling to culture and values that do not apply to the real world!" Sivana snapped now as she stood up still somewhat in shock over what was happening. "We can not remain in the past when the future calls us to move forward! That is what happened to our Lycavorian brothers and sisters until Martin Leonidas returned and brought them balance again!"

“Your words fall on deaf ears Princess Sivana!” Buonau stated. “You yourself allowed yourself to be claimed by a Lycavorian without approval or blessing of the Elder Council or this Arch Ministry!”

“When has it ever been the law that marriages must be approved by the Elder Council or Arch Ministry?” Anja shouted. “That has never been law in all of Hadarian history!”

“We will not go into the changes that we have made right now!” Wiktor said.

“Changes you have made?” Anja snapped. “You have no right to make changes to the constitution!”

“With a unanimous vote we do.” Wiktor stated with a smug smile. “As I have already explained to Prefect Zaniai.” She stood up and held up the data pad. “As to the charges against you Anja Leonidas... on Charge Number Six; the willful neglect as mother to the heirs of the Hadarian throne Retta and Calyb Leonidas, you are found guilty. You will surrender custody of Retta and Calyb to Umbra immediately, who will then act in accordance with this Ministry’s guidance.”

Anja’s jade green eyes changed quickly to her wolf eyes and her fangs extended. “Fat chance of that happening Wiktor! You will not touch my children!” She barked.

Wiktor nodded. “Yes... we thought that might be your response... therefore we have instituted actions that will yield the same result.”

“What?” Anja gasped. “Wiktor... are you a fool? You can’t take my children! Martin’s children! He will kill anyone who tries that!”

“He has no choice in the matter... and I will explain why in a short while!” Wiktor stated calmly. “On Charge Number Five; your blatant dismissal of the Hadarian Constitution and the directives of this body on three separate occasions. Three times that we know of mind you... you freely admit these actions... so the verdict is guilty.” Wiktor exclaimed. “Charge Four we have dismissed for the moment... but we reserve the right to reinstate this charge at a later time. Charge Number Three is Neglect of Duties as senior Hadarian Healer on location, and Charge Two is the willful acts of a depraved nature that resulted in the death of a fellow Hadarian. On both these charges we find you guilty. Charge Number One is the charge of murder and on this charge this body and the Elder Council has also found you guilty!”

The murmurs were running rampant through the stunned gallery of onlookers which only seemed to make Buonau and Wiktor even fuller of themselves.

“This is preposterous!” Zaniai shouted moving up beside Anja, his face angry and in shock at what was happening. “As Prefect of the Hadarian Ambassadorships, I am telling you this is illegal and unconstitutional! You can not do this!”

“We have done it Prefect Zaniai.” Buonau barked. “And you can either follow us or suffer the same fate as Anja.”

“What?” Eurin gasped her eyes wide.

“By unanimous vote of the Hadarian Arch Ministry and the Hadarian Elder Council Anja Leonidas, your status as Queen of Hadaria has been dissolved.” Wiktor continued. “The Arch Ministry and Elder Council have decided it was time that our people returned to the ways of old.”

“You mean religious rule?” Sivana shouted vehemently. “Even when the majority of people are against such a thing!”

“Call it what you will.” Wiktor stated. “Your status as Princess of the Royal family has also been dissolved Sivana. As soon as Retta and Calyb are returned to Hadaria we will see to their upbringing and education and insure they play the proper role in the future of our people as the members of the royal bloodline are supposed to.”

“You are making a big fucking mistake Wiktor!” Anja growled at her. “The people of Hadaria won’t stand for this!”

“The people of Hadaria need guidance and direction.” Buonau announced. “We will give that to them.”

“At the cost of their freedoms?” Eurin spat. “Because you do not agree with the direction Anja and Sivana have led our people even though over ninety percent of the population embrace them?”

“We will show them that we do not need to surrender to depravity to achieve what it is we all want!” Buonau snapped.

“You have really gone too far this time Buonau!” Anja growled. “You don’t expect me to stand for this do you?”

“You have no choice in the matter!” Buonau snarled. “It is already done!”

“The Union Senate will not allow...” Eurin began.

“The Lycavorian Union Senate no longer has any say over Hadarian property or will!” Wiktor stated. “As of nine a.m. this very morning... the Arch Ministry and Elder Council have declared Hadaria independent of the Lycavorian Union. We no longer are members of the Union and therefore do not need their approval to do anything!”

Anja’s eyes were nearly bugging out of her head. “You must be joking!” She gasped in astonishment.

“Not at all.” Wiktor stated calmly. “As we speak... the Hadarian Ambassador is on Apo Prime delivering edicts to the Senate Leader. Since Prime Minister Deia chooses to spend so much time on Earth, we delivered our decision to the Senate itself. We have ordered that all Union personnel begin leaving Hadaria immediately and have given them a week to comply. All equipment will be impounded by the Hadarian Militia for inspection before it is returned to Union hands.”

“A decision like this must be made by the people!” Zaniai screamed. “We have been part of the Union for nearly four thousand years! We are a founding member! We can not leave the Union!”

“We can and we have.” Wiktor stated plainly. “Anja Leonidas... you will be remanded to the custody of the Elder Militia until such time as Retta and Calyb are returned to Hadaria and final sentence is passed.”

“I don’t think so.” Anja growled in a menacing voice.

“You have no choice in the matter.” Buonau stated. “You will adhere to our directives!”

“I will adhere to nothing you say Buonau!” Anja barked out viciously. “You are nothing but a conniving upae that needs to be put out of her misery!” Anja tilted her head as if deep in thought and reached out to Atropos. [Atropos... are you monitoring?]

[Monitoring? Son vada carians Anja... it’s going out live over the Netnews!] He answered.

[Martin was right Atropos.] Anja said sadly. [Marty was right.]

[Shining Path is already in motion Anja! I’m going to order Belen and Joci to get you and the others out of there! We do not know what they are prepared to do!] Atropos stated.

[I can fight this!] Anja declared to him. [The people won’t let this stand!] Anja looked at Buonau.

“Have you thought about what you are doing? Who will protect Hadaria? Who will you trade with? Who...”

Buonau’s smile wasn’t a friendly smile and her green eyes were cruel. “Do you think we are fools Anja?” She announced. “We have already secured the future of our people. We have reached out to those who will assist in all that we need and who will allow us to rule Hadaria as we see fit. Of course... it will be much easier with the Union equipment that all Lycavorian forces will leave in place. Our new allies will see to it that we are protected and they will allow us to return to the old ways. They...”

“New allies?” Eurin barked. “Who are you talking of? No member of the Union will let this action stand! They...”

“The Kavalian Federation Imperium is not part of the Lycavorian Union.” The new voice spoke loudly from the door into the Minister’s chambers.

Anja’s eyes grew wide, as did every set of eyes in the gallery as they all turned to see the tall dark furred Kavalian male step from the Minister’s chambers with three Kavalian soldiers next to them. Though all of them were armed, none of them had weapons out.

“What is the meaning of this?” Zaniai screamed now. “Why are they here?”

Wiktor smiled as the Kavalians stepped up beside the large central table where the senior Ministers sat. “The Kavalian Federation has graciously accepted our request for aide and support Prefect Zaniai. They will fill the roles that the Union has played for far too long and they will allow us to rule Hadaria the way it should be ruled. I present Vice Admiral Menot of the KFI. He will be the representative of the KFI to Hadaria.”

Eurin stepped forward quickly. “This is insane! You can not do this!” She screamed.

“As I have already stated... we can and we have.” Wiktor stated.

Eurin let her eyes roam across the faces of the Ministers at the table. “All of you have done this?” She cried. “You have betrayed your people and the Union! You have done this willingly?”

“We have betrayed no one!” Buonau barked. “We will usher in a new era for Hadaria!”

“An era of religious zealot rule!” Sivana barked again. “You will force our people to adhere to ridiculous laws and rules you put in place? You... all of you! The moral conscious of our people!”

“Hadaria needs guidance now.” Buonau stated calmly. “I will give her this guidance as Elder Healer. The Chief Minister will give them guidance as interpreter of our laws.”

“Laws that you intend to change and alter to suit your twisted ideals! You will take away free will?” Anja shouted. “That’s a fucking dictatorship! And then you go to the KFI for the support you knew you would not receive in the Union? You do realize the only reason they are doing this is so that they can have access to our Healers. So they can send them to heal their clone troops in their war against the Coven.”

“Your information is not accurate Anja Leonidas.” Menot stated.

Anja’s jade green wolf eyes cut to him. “I’m not talking to you Admiral Fur ball!” She snarled.

Menot’s dark eyes narrowed and he stepped closer to Anja. “We are here as friends to the Hadarian people. Nothing more.”

“You must think I’m fucking stupid!” Anja growled. “I know exactly why you are doing this! I won’t allow it.”

“I believe you have been removed from power and therefore have no say in what the new government does.” Menot spoke smoothly with a smile. “Elder Healer Buonau came to us with a request for aide and her intention to announce their independence from the Union. Naturally we could not support her in her endeavors until such time as the Hadarian government actually changed hands. Now that this has happened we are very free to offer whatever support the new Hadarian government requires.”

“At what cost?” Sivana barked. “What are you getting in return?”

“That is of no concern of yours.” Menot answered sweetly. “We only wish to assist the new Hadarian government as much as possible.”

“That is so much bullshit and you...” Anja cut her eyes when she saw Wiktor’s aide rush up to her side and whisper into her ear. She saw Buonau’s aide doing the same and both Wiktor and Buonau’s eyes grew a little wider and they looked at Anja quickly their eyes darkening. Anja smiled inwardly knowing what their aides had told them.

“What have you done?” Wiktor barked moving around from behind the polished table to glare at Anja. “Tell us! I demand you tell us!”

“Whatever do you mean Wiktor?” Anja asked.

“You will refer to me as...”

“I’ll refer to you any nubous way I choose!” Anja hissed loudly. “I’m no longer Queen of Hadaria, or do you not remember. And I have no idea what you are talking about.”

“You know very well what Wiktor is speaking about!” Buonau shouted. “We have just received word that...”

EARTH SPARTA QUEEN ELIANI EARLY CHILDHOOD ACADEMY SIMULTANEOUS TIMELINE

Duewa sat in the School Administrator’s office and shook her head as she listened and watched the broadcast of what was happening on Hadaria at this very moment. Duewa felt a sense of loss when it came to her mother, but seeing her actions now in how she treated Anja, Duewa saw her real mother coming out. She reached up to touch the sparkling green emerald necklace she wore and let her fingers caress the credit chip sized precious stone encased in the glittering silver and gold bindings. The gem had been a gift from Thoti to her only last night, a symbol of his powerful love and devotion to her. He had given it to her while they rested in the bed of his home, their home now he had told Duewa, their naked flesh touching in all the right places. They hadn’t been taking part in the pleasures of the flesh, but Thoti had told her when they were alone in their bed he wanted to feel only her skin against his. This was something very new to Duewa, but she was rapidly coming to relish it. They simply talked of the future and what that would bring to them. His simple caresses could light her body on fire in a way she had never known no doubt, but even still knowing that he was a master of his male hormones and could simply hold her naked body close meant more to her than anything.

Thoti had practically moved Duewa and her sons into his home with him and his son. Their house on the edge of the royal villa was certainly large enough, each of the boys having a room of their own. Their own bedroom was massive, with double doors that opened up onto a small stream of cool running water that emptied into the Evrotas River only a kilometer away. The smell of pines and flowers filtered into the home nearly all the time and it was the most peaceful place Duewa had ever been too. During these last three days Duewa had also learned more about herself than she ever knew existed. She discovered patience and control and most important of all Duewa had discovered true happiness. She had begun the plan with her mother in the hopes of keeping her sons from having to fight and die in war. What she had discovered was the complete opposite of what her mother had been preaching for decades. The Lycavorian people were not warlike in the least. The last three days she had truly taken notice of different things as she walked among the streets of Sparta with Retta, Calyb and her own sons. She had discovered laughing and playing children. She had discovered Spartan soldiers in the many parks playing with those same children. Their children. She had seen countless Lycavorian Spartans walking the streets with their wives and mates, unafraid to show emotion and hold their mate's hand or steal a kiss on the streets. Things her mother had said these people did not do and she had been witness to that very thing every day and just had not noticed until Thoti had taken her that first night and essentially rocked her world as Retta had told her the morning after that first night with Thoti.

Oh yes... Thoti had rocked her world. He had made her experience more sinful pleasure than Duewa could begin to describe, yet the most important thing Thoti had done was open her eyes to what was reality and what was fantasy.

"...can't believe this is happening." The administrator spoke drawing Duewa out of her selfish thoughts of what Thoti made her feel.

Duewa looked at the older elven female and nodded. "Yes. It appears the Arch Ministry and Elder Council had this planned for quite some time. My mother among them."

The School Administrator was over a thousand years old, but her elven beauty hadn't changed in the least. She did not look a day over forty years old, and she was sharp as a whip. She knew who Duewa was, and who her mother was, but had accepted her without question. She had been married to the same Lycavorian for nearly seven hundred years now, one of the rare marriages of elf and Lycavorian before the return of King Leonidas. Now it was a common occurrence and those who had hidden their relationships for so long brought them out into the open. It wasn't that those relationships would not have been accepted, just the opposite in fact, it was just that thousands of years of culture and tradition would need to be changed and none of those couples wanted to be the first to make that step. Not until Martin Leonidas had returned with an elven wife who was now Queen did the fear of change crumble away. When he took For'mya as his second wife of elven blood, change was finally embraced by the majority of elven people.

"You are not part of this Duewa." Rel'laria spoke looking at her.

"I was... I was part of it in the beginning Rel'laria." Duewa said as she got to her feet.

"Perhaps... but thankfully you were intelligent enough to see that all that they are saying is not true." Rel'laria told her sitting back in her chair and watching as Duewa went to the large window that overlooked the playground outside.

"If I had not met Thoti... if he had not desired me as intensely as he had... I would never have seen." Duewa answered. "He... he saved me."

Rel'laria shook her head. "No. Thoti may have been the catalyst for that... but deep down had you not been willing... you would not have discovered and accepted." She spoke. "That is what really matters."

Duewa allowed the small smile to play across her face as she let her glittering green eyes drift across the playground and the laughing children. "Perhaps you are right..." She said. "I have to thank you Rel'laria. I have to..."

Duewa's olive green eyes stopped moving across the playground when she saw him. Her eyes narrowed somewhat as her brain began to send impulses throughout her body. He wore nondescript clothing but the motions of his head kept giving him away as something other than a simple civilian. He appeared to be measuring up all the people in the area and continuously looking over his left shoulder at a Heavy Lifter that was parked on the corner of the Lifter lane. He looked so familiar to her and Duewa called on her keen memory, part of why she finished so high in her Healing Academy classes. She could remember the most obscure details and rare ingredients needed to make certain medicines.

"Rel'laria... do you know that man?" Duewa asked.

“Hmmm...” Rel'laria got to her feet and moved to the window and let her hazel eyes fall on the man Duewa was pointing at through the window. “He has walked by the school for the last several days. One of our teachers spoke with him briefly when he showed interest in one of the children as they played. Why?”

“He seems very familiar to me.” Duewa said softly.

“Fat chance of that happening Wiktor! You will not touch my children!” Anja’s voice barked from the monitor.

“Yes... we thought that might be your response... therefore we have instituted actions that will yield the same result.” Wiktor’s voice replied.

Duewa and Rel'laria both turn back to the monitor at the same time when they heard that and Rel'laria met Duewa's gaze. “You don’t think...?”

Duewa’s olive green eyes grew wide. “Of course!” She gasped. “He is Hadarian Elder Militia! A senior officer if I remember correctly! They are going to try and take the children!”

“Sibfla!” Rel'laria snapped moving off to her desk and unlocking the lowest drawer. “Not if we have anything to say about it!” Duewa watched as she withdrew two K14 hand weapons and set them on her desk top and moved up next to the desk as Rel'laria withdrew two extra magazines for the weapons. She looked at Duewa. “I may be an elf, but I have learned a few things in the last seven hundred and eight years being the wife of a Lycavorian Spartan.” She picked up one of the K14s and held it out to Duewa. “You have a secure channel to Thoti?”

Duewa nodded as she took the K14. “Rel'laria... I have... I have never fired a weapon before.”

“It’s easier than you might think.” Rel'laria spoke. “Take this and go to the children while I contact Durcunusaan Command. And contact your Thoti and let him know now would be a good time for him to make his way here. They will not assault the school, but they undoubtedly will attempt to take them when school lets out in fifteen minutes.”

Duewa didn’t hesitate and lifted the small transmitter Thoti had given her that was linked directly to his personal COM implant. “Thoti?”

His calm voice filled her ear instantly as she moved down the corridor towards the classroom where the children were. “Duewa? What is wrong?” He asked.

“Thoti... I believe now would be a good time for you to come to the school.” Duewa said quickly. “I have recognized a senior officer from the Hadarian Elder Militia lurking about outside the school. I can see no others but given what is happening right now on Hadaria, they must be planning to move against the children.”

“We will be there within minutes Duewa my love.” Thoti answered immediately. “How many have you seen?”

“Only the one... but they would never attempt to take the children without a full squad.” She answered. “The others have to be hidden nearby somewhere. This is part of what my mother’s plan Thoti! To take them when they bring Anja down! They are doing that right now!”

“We are watching it now!” Thoti answered. “Keep your wits about you Duewa. We will...”

“Duewa?” Aricia’s voice broke into the transmission and Duewa realized Thoti must have been with her.

“Aricia?” She spoke in reply.

“Duewa... we have entrusted our children to your care.” Aricia spoke. “You have our full faith and confidence!”

Duewa stopped walking as Aricia’s words washed through her. She took a deep breath and stepped fully into this new life she had found. “I will allow no harm to come to them!” She spoke firmly. “I give you my word.”

“I know. Thoti and I will be there within minutes.” Aricia said.

“We are coming my wife and mate.” Thoti’s voice spoke once more.

Duewa smiled and nodded her head. Her small hand tightened on the K14 and she began moving again with definitive purpose.

SPARTA
OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

“...don’t care what they are telling you!” Deia’s voice snapped. “I want to talk to one of them!”

“Prime Minister... I’ve been trying for the last few minutes and their staff is telling me the same thing!” The voice stated. “They are in session and will not be taking transmissions until later. I told them that wasn’t good enough and the person rudely told me to stick it in my ear. They no longer take direction from Union lackeys. Those were the words they used.”

“Sibfla!” Deia snarled as she looked up at For’mya and Aricia. “This is not good!”

“We have to go.” Aricia spoke. “Duewa has recognized a man from this Hadarian Elder Militia outside the school. She is certain he is there to attempt to take the children.”

Deia nodded. “Go!” She exclaimed.

Aricia and For’mya shared a brief kiss. “I will contact you when the children are safe.” She stated. “Try and find out what else is going on.”

For’mya nodded. “Hurry! I trust Duewa... but she is not experienced.”

Aricia nodded. Isheeni... you and Aurith meet us in the courtyard! She reached out within Mindvoice. We are already landing!

Aricia kissed For’mya once more and turned to Thoti. “Let us go!”

For’mya watched as they exited the office quickly and then she turned to Deia. “Deia... can they do this?” She asked.

Deia met her eyes. “Every planet within the Union has its own government For’mya, you know this.” She replied. “We don’t dictate what they do.”

“Anja is still a Queen of the Union!” For’mya snapped. “They can not hold her on these ridiculous charges! Their proof may be sufficient for them, but it is not for us!”

Deia nodded. “Yes... I know. Something I’m going to make clear to them right now.” She touched her desk COM panel.

“Prime Minister!” The voice answered.

“You find the Hadarian ambassador and tell him Anja Leonidas is to be released without pause!” Deia barked. “We do not recognize these trumped up charges they have leveled against her for they have proved nothing! You tell that man, Anja Leonidas is a Queen of the Union and if she is held against her will they will answer to me!”

“Yes Prime Minister!”

Deia looked at For’mya. “And find Armetus!” She continued. “Find Armetus and tell him to discover how the Kavalians were able to do this and not have us detect it!”

“Yes Prime Minister!”

“I want answers!” Deia snapped. For’mya settled to the chair in front of her desk and looked at her oddly. “For’mya?”

For’mya shook her head. “I don’t know Deia.” She said softly. “I sense something.”

Deia leaned forward quickly. She had spent enough time with her nephew and his queens to know that with the exception of Isabella, all of them had developed unique and sometimes unexplainable abilities because of the level of their Mindvoice abilities. Dysea had a gift of precognition, Anja of healing, Aricia of incredible combat skills and For’mya of being able to somehow sense the ebbs and currents of the very life around her. Over the years she had come to accept and rely on these abilities in many cases.

“What do you feel?” Deia asked.

For’mya met her eyes. “I feel death Deia.” She answered.

SPARTA
QUEEN ELIANI EARLY CHILDHOOD ACADEMY
MAIN ENTRANCE

“...are still inside the school!” The Elder Militia Commander hissed softly into his Com unit as he casually made it appear as if he was scratching his thick mustache.

“The Queen’s dragons just landed in the courtyard of the Government Office Building! Just now a dozen Spartans ran from the rear of the building to a Heavy Lifter! If you do not take them now we will lose the opportunity!” The voice answered.

“You are talking of assaulting a school!” The Commander exclaimed.

“Elder Buonau was insistent that we act at the same time they were denouncing Anja! We have to move now!” The voice ordered. “If those dragons or Spartans get there first we will lose our chance! Now attack!”

“Colonel... what if there are Durcunusaan inside the school?” The Commander asked.

“You are to kill any adult that attempts to stop you!” The order came down and sealed the fate of him and his men.

“Damn! This is insane Colonel!” The Commander snarled.

“We have our orders! Now act on them Commander!” The voice shouted in his earpiece.

The commander gripped his weapon under his cloak and he heard several gasps as he pulled it from under his cloak and yanked up his assault rifle. “Militia Teams Two and Three! Switch to Plan Gamma and move! I will join you at the door!”

QUEEN ELIANI EARLY CHILDHOOD ACADEMY MAIN CORRIDOR OF THE SCHOOL

“...is happening Duewa?” Retta asked hurriedly as they made their way down the long center corridor of the school. Retta gripped one of her hands tightly, Mara keeping up with them easily now, while Tinyn held his mother’s other hand. Tinrell and Calyb were keeping up with them from behind Duewa’s moving form, Endeem scampering behind the two of them. “Where are Nara and Deion and Bryon?”

“They are not in danger Retta.” Duewa answered without hesitation. “There are some men outside who want to take you and Calyb away from us here Retta!”

“Take us away?” Retta gasped. “To where?”

“They want to take you back to Hadaria to live with your Aunt Umbra.” Duewa replied as she directed them around the corner.

“We don’t want to live with her! She’s mean and stupid!” Retta looked at her with her mother’s jade green eyes. “Where are you taking us?” She demanded.

Duewa met her eyes and stopped at Retta’s question. She squatted down in front of her and reached up to take Retta’s face in her hands. She looked at Calyb, who was watching intently, and then back to Retta. “I... I have found happiness here Retta.” Duewa said without shame or pause. “For myself and for Tinyn and Tinrell.”

“You mean Colonel Thoti?” Retta asked.

Duewa nodded. “Yes.” She smiled as the truth of her words poured out of her. “I will not let anyone take you from your parents Retta. Your mothers and I knew this might happen and we have devised a safe route to get you and Calyb out of the school. That is where we are going right now.”

“These men... they are here now?” Calyb asked.

Duewa nodded. “Yes. That is why we are leaving.” Duewa dropped her hands and took Retta’s and Calyb’s. “I will not let harm come to you.” She looked at all four of them. “Any of you! Now come... we must continue to the south entrance where we will meet your mother and Thoti.”

Duewa stood back up and turned to start walking down the corridor when the doors at the far end of the corridor slid open without pause and eight heavily armed Hadarian Elder Militia burst into the corridor. Amazingly, Duewa acted in the one manner she had never thought possible for her. She acted without thinking.

“Back!” She barked. “Go back! To the east entrance! Go Retta!”

Her voice drew the attention of the Hadarians and Duewa’s eyes grew wide as she saw the cruel eyes of the Hadarian officer focus on her.

“There!” The man shouted. “Get them!”

Duewa turned immediately and ran after the children. Her longer legs made it easier for her to catch up to them even as teachers and students began to poke their heads out of individual classrooms to see what was happening. This served to slow the Hadarians down slightly until the lead officer finally rammed his shoulder into the chest of a female elf, toppling her over without regard. It was then that the screams of children began. As they returned to the large intersection, Duewa grabbed Retta's arm and directed her down to the left.

"That way!" Duewa shouted. "Head that way! Tell Mara and Endeem..."

"Duewa!" The male voice bellowed.

Duewa spun around almost by instinct, the K14 coming up in the heartbeat of time and leveling at the face of the senior Hadarian Officer. His eyes grew wide as she imposed her body between him and the children and the snarls and hisses of a very upset Mara and Endeem filled the corridor. "Stop!" Duewa shouted.

"What are you doing?" The Commander yelled. "You are supposed to be helping us, not running and trying to get them away! We must leave now... the Queen and the Durcunusaan are almost here!"

He stepped forward and stretched out his hand to grab Calyb and Duewa did the one thing she knew would stop him in his tracks. She pulled the trigger of the K14 and watched his whole body jump as the retort of the weapon in the corridor echoed like thunder! He looked at her wide eyed.

"What are you doing?" He screamed.

Duewa brought both hands up to grip the K14 and at least steady her shaking hands as more Hadarian Militia came up short and were bringing their weapons up. "I won't let you take them!" Duewa shouted. "It is wrong! What my mother is doing is wrong! I won't let you take them!"

"We must go!" The Commander shouted. "The Durcunusaan will be here any moment Duewa! Your mother demands it!"

Duewa shook her head vehemently as she backed up slowly, Retta pushing up against her hip while they moved down the corridor. "No!" Duewa snapped. "My mother will not twist their minds as she did mine! I won't allow her too! No more will she poison me or my sons! And I will not allow her to poison Retta and Calyb! I won't! You will have to shoot me to get them!"

"Duewa! Stop this right now! You..."

The single shot that rang out in the corridor was deafening. It caused almost everyone to jump in surprise, none more than the commander of the Hadarian Militia. His eyes grew wide as he saw Duewa's olive green eyes open in surprise and look down. He turned quickly and saw the Militia soldier lowering his rifle. "I told you no firing unless it was an adult or you had a target!"

"I had a target!" The young man snapped.

"Not the Elder Healer's daughter you fucking fool!" The Commander's eyes filled with horror and his eyes cut back to where Duewa was looking down at the growing blood stain in the center of her chest. The solid projectile had been traveling so fast and was fired from so close that it had struck her just above her right breasts and exited below her shoulder blade before anyone had even noticed. The jacketed projectile had not even gone far enough to gain enough momentum to cause Duewa to stagger and zipped by Mara's snout before imbedding in the wall. The Commander watched as the K14 slowly fell from Duewa's hands to clatter on the floor as Retta's wide eyes filled with horror.

"Duewa!" She screamed. "Duewa!"

Duewa staggered slightly then and found she could no longer remain standing as she sank to the floor. "Mother!" Tinyn and Tinrell screamed at the same time as they came to her side.

"No! Momma! You can't leave us!" Tinyn screamed as he tried to hold Duewa's upper body up against him.

"NOOOO!"

The male voice reverberated through the corridor of the school with unrestrained ferocity and anguish. The Hadarian Militia Commander turned his head instantly to see a savage looking Lycavorian Spartan walking towards them, his face a mask of pure unadulterated berserker fury. He watched as if in slow motion as that Spartan lifted his left arm extended towards them and there was a soft flare of white blue light as the Shi Viska appeared from Flatspace. Half a second after it had fully materialized, it was launching from Thoti's arm directly at the man who had fired the shot into Duewa. As the Hadarian Commander opened his mouth to cry out a warning the steel head and fully half a meter of Nehtes erupted from his chest, splashing blood and bits of flesh outward onto the two men closest to him. This caused half the Hadarian Militia troopers to turn, only to see the raven black hair of Aricia Leonidas whipping back around as she completed the spinning thrust of her Nehtes and was bringing her left arm up as she called forth her Shi Viska.

Thoti's Shi Viska struck the man who had shot Duewa just below his jaw line; the razors along the edge fully extended and locked in place. The Shi Viska's sixty-seven inch diameter cleaved cleanly through the man's neck and spine and slammed into the wall behind him nearly half way. His head did a lazy flop through the air, his body still standing there not realizing he was already dead. So enraged was Thoti, that he waded into the mass of Hadarian soldiers with little care for anything other than killing as many of them as he could. The Hadarian Militia Guard were well trained troops, however after their initial training, most of them never set foot inside a training facility again. They were sluggish and unresponsive to the lethal terror that had descended upon them and twenty seconds after that shot had been fired, nine of their brethren lay on the floor dead from hideous wounds with barely any sound. Five of the remaining Hadarian Militia turned and ran in abject terror, throwing their weapons away as they dashed for the doors to the school.

As the sensors activated and opened the doors the Hadarian soldiers could only run straight to their deaths at the hands of two very seriously pissed off female dragons. With roars of savage rage, Isheeni snatched up one Hadarian in her gaping maw and bit entirely through his mid section before he had a chance to scream. Aurith was opposite her mother and her wicked curved talons came slashing down twice in quick succession, one head flying off into the distance while another Hadarian troop fell with his entire chest cavity opened to the daytime air. Isheeni stepped forward and slapped her massive talon equipped foreleg down on the ground completely impaling another Hadarian soldier and pinning him to the ground beneath her as his hands clutched at her steel hard talons while Isheeni placed her other front foreleg on top of his head and crushed it while she pulled her talons free of his now dead flesh. Aurith's tail snapped forward with blinding speed and caught the last Hadarian just as he thought he was breaking free. The sounds of bones snapping and shattering was hideously audible as his body rocketed over sixty meters before slamming into the side of a steel and concrete apartment building with a sickening crunching sound.

Inside the school the screams and moans of the dying were also ghastly noises as Aricia and Thoti used their superhuman strength and speed to shatter bones and crush limbs. The bodies of fifteen Hadarian Elder Militia dotted the corridor of the school now and Thoti snatched up the last one left standing by his skinny throat and glared at him with deep blue wolf eyes, his fangs fully extended in savagery. Thoti barely exerted any effort as he crushed the young Militiaman's throat and flung the body against the far wall of the corridor. He turned to see Retta and Calyb kneeling beside Duewa, their small hands over the bloody wound in her chest desperately trying to save her. He savagely kicked several bodies out of his way before dropping to his knees beside Duewa and gathering her body into his arms.

"Duewa my love!" He sobbed.

"We can't fix her!" Retta sobbed loudly. "We can't fix her!"

Duewa's eyes fluttered open. "Tho... Thoti?" She gasped with bloodstained lips now. "Thoti... I..."

"I have you my mate." Thoti gasped as he brushed her rich red hair from her face. "I have you."

"Thoti... the children?" She wheezed.

"The children are fine." Thoti stated as his eyes drifted over her body and he looked at the wound, pulling her shirt aside.

"Thoti... Thoti I don't want to... I don't want to leave!" Duewa cried as she gripped him with all her remaining strength.

Thoti shook his head as he pulled her tighter. "No Duewa my beautiful Hadarian mate!" He gasped. "I will not... I will not lose you as I lost her! I will not!"

Duewa's olive green eyes fluttered briefly and then focused on him. She smiled gently as she lifted her quivering hand to place her palm on his cheek. "Don't... don't leave me my love" She gasped softly. "Don't... I don't want to lose you and... and my sons."

Thoti felt the small but strong hand grip his shoulder and he looked up into Aricia's azure wolf eyes and exposed fangs. "Turn her Thoti!" She spoke. "Retta and Calyb can not heal her anymore than they have and she does not have the strength remaining. The medics are two minutes away and she will not last. Turn her or she will die."

"My... my Queen..." Thoti cried.

"She is your wife and mate now Spartan and this is not her time Thoti!" Aricia hissed softly. "That is why you are here! Now bite her..." Aricia looked up as she felt the tremors within Mindvoice. "For my Martin and your King is arriving and he is not happy."

Thoti turned and looked at Duewa's beautiful face. He had lost one Hadarian wife so long ago. They had not had enough time together and he had been given a second chance by the gods with Duewa. He would not lose another. Thoti opened his mouth, exposing his long wolf fangs and bent his head to Duewa's neck. Her eyes flew open in pain as his fangs sank deep, and in a knee jerk reaction her arms tried to push him away as she groaned in pain. Tynyn and Tinrell sat there weeping as they suddenly saw their mother's face light up and become animated. Her olive green eyes grew enormously wide and her arms wrapped around Thoti's broad shoulders as the virus raced through her veins. It was a mixture of sweet pleasure and pain as Duewa could almost feel the potent virus racing through her system, Thoti's salvia mixing deeply with her blood stream, carrying the virus to every portion of her body. She groaned softly, clinging to the man she loved as she felt the torn flesh and arteries begin to rapidly heal themselves. She gasped as the entry and exit wounds were the first to close completely and then she felt empty as his fangs withdrew from her neck and he buried his face in her hair.

"You are mine Duewa of Hadaria. Now and forever... you are mine." Thoti whispered into her ear just before blackness washed over her eyes and Duewa passed out.

HADARIA ARCH MINISTRY CHAMBERS

"...received word that the main Lycavorian military base has shut down and expelled all non-military personnel from the actual spaceport!" Buonau barked out. "Union ships are not responding to commands from Hadaria control! And there is a report of transport craft landing at every military facility across the planet!"

Anja's face was impassive as she glared at Buonau. "Yes I know." Anja stated calmly.

"What is the meaning of this?" Wiktor demanded.

"I issued directives to the Union military." Anja stated flatly. "They are following those directives."

"What directives?" Buonau barked. "What have you done? We previously ordered all Union personnel and ships to not move until they received commands from us!"

"The Union military does not answer to you Buonau!" Anja growled. "They..."

The commotion near the entrance caused everyone's heads to turn. One Hadarian Militia officer went sailing backwards from behind the divider wall skidding across the floor until he came to a halt by the rear gallery bench. Eyes lifted and everyone saw Atropos move into view holding the second Hadarian Militia troop by his throat, his eyes changed and his wolf fangs bared viciously, even while his Shi Viska was out and humming on his arm. Several more Durcunusaan followed him into the room as well, moving quickly to surround Sivana, Eurin and the others. Atropos wasted no time and brushed past several civilians still dragging the militia officer by his throat. Even Anja's eyes were wide in shock and she stepped towards him.

"Atropos?" She snapped. "What are you doing here? You are supposed to..."

"I have just spoken to Colonel Fache!" Atropos snapped as his eyes went to where Buonau stood. "He is the Durcunusaan Officer in command of the Royal Villa on Earth! Three squads of Hadarian Elder Militia have just tried to kidnap Retta and Calyb Leonidas!"

"What?" Anja shouted. She whirled on Buonau. "You sanctimonious bitch! You tried to take my children? Our children?"

"They are heirs to the Hadarian throne!" Buonau snapped back unashamed. "You have been ordered by the Arch Ministry and the Elder Council to surrender custody of them to us. We knew you would not comply so we took action!"

Atropos dropped the militia troops he was holding and snatched Anja's arms before she was able to execute the leap he saw her preparing for. She would have killed Buonau without a moment's pause. Her wolf eyes and fangs were very prominent now as she struggled in his grasp. "I will kill you!" Anja screamed. "You nubous bitch whore!"

Wiktor pointed at Anja. "This is what we have had guiding our people the last two decades!" She announced. "Retta and Calyb will be returned to Hadaria and..."

Atropos looked at her. "Retta and Calyb are safe within the arms of their family!" He announced. "Your little kidnapping attempt failed! You only succeeded in getting some sixteen of your men killed!" He snarled at her. “Did you think you could take members of the Royal Family from the Durcunusaan? How will you explain that to their families now?”

“You lie!” Buonau snapped.

“I do not lie Hadarian witch!” Atropos barked at her. “Your men were so ignorant of their goal they shot your own daughter!”

“Duewa!” Buonau gasped.

“Yes! She was wounded by one of your fine Hadarian Militia idiots because she was defending the children in her charge!” Atropos popped seeing Anja’s eyes turn to look at him. “She almost died except for Colonel Thoti.”

Buonau stepped off the elevated platform towards him. “Where is she?” She snapped. “You will release her immediately!” Buonau made it half way across the open area towards Atropos before the brilliant flash of white light formed in front of her and the holographic image of Martin Leonidas appeared in the center of the room.

Buonau staggered back as murmurs swept through the chambers and Netnews drones focused on the image of the King of the Union. There were very few Mindvoicers within the Lycavorian Union with the power and ability to activate a Mark II Holographic Neural Booster. Martin Leonidas was such an individual, and he had spent many hours with Helen and Aricia learning ways to smooth the connection to make it unstrained and allow them to hold it much longer. They in turn had passed this knowledge and skill to Androcles, Denali and Lisisa, who along with Dysea were the only other Mindvoicers with sufficient skill and ability within Mindvoice to activate a Mark II NB.

Martin’s image was exceptionally clear, even over the great distance between Earth and Hadaria, and it was very easy to see that his wolf eyes were bright and his dual fangs were exposed. His yellow/gold wolf eyes moved from Buonau to Wiktor to where Menot stood and finally he turned to where Atropos still held Anja in his grasp.

“Retta and Calyb are fine Red.” Martin spoke softly and everyone present could see the relief wash across Anja’s face along with the adoring love. Martin Leonidas’s voice was filled with longing and it was easily discernible to all present. “They just arrived back at the villa with Nara, Deion and Bryon. My mother and Dasha are with them now. The blackout is still in effect over what the Coven did so when you get to the SPiRiT contact me and we can talk at length. I miss you Red.”

“I miss you too Lover.” Anja spoke. “I miss all of you so much!”

Martin’s image turned away from Anja and focused on Buonau as by now she had moved back to stand alongside Wiktor. “What you have done this day is beyond anything I had ever imagined you capable of. Your hatred of me and Anja must run very deep for you to act in this manner.”

“We no longer wish to be ruled by you!” Wiktor barked out.

“I have never dictated anything to the Hadarian people Chief Minister. In all the years I have been King, not once have I ever demanded anything from you!” Martin spoke.

“You didn’t need to!” Buonau snapped. “You had her doing your work for you!” Buonau pointed at where Anja was moving back to stand next to Sivana.

“That is a lie and both of us know it.” Martin told them his holographic image walking towards them. “Just as this plan of yours to discredit Anja was a lie! Every bit of it!” As he stopped in front of them Buonau and Wiktor backed up instinctively.

“The Hadarian government has chosen its path!” Wiktor exclaimed. “We are no longer members of the Union! You can not tell us what to do!”

“Did it occur to you Chief Minister to put such a referendum before the people of Hadaria if it was such a concern of yours?” Martin asked maintaining his demeanor.

“We make the decisions for the citizens of Hadaria!” Buonau snarled. “We know what is best for them! We will do what is best for them!”

Martin’s head tilted to the side a little. “You know Elder Buonau... I’ve heard of that type of government before. I’ve had experience with it in my past. It didn’t work then and it won’t work now.”

“You know nothing!” Wiktor exclaimed. “And you can do nothing! The Arch Ministry and Elder Council acted within our constitution! We will guide our people into the future now King Leonidas!”

“You will guide them to ruin.” Martin spoke softly. “But at this moment... after what you have perpetrated... I don’t care!”

“Martin?” Anja barked moving closer to the image of him.

Martin glanced briefly at Anja in the transmission and then turned back to Buonau and Wiktor. “You wish to no longer be part of the Lycavorian Union... so be it. Anja has initiated what we call a Shining Path. It is the complete evacuation of every Union soldier, scientist, doctor and civilian. As we depart your world Chief Minister Wiktor, we will take everything that belongs to us... to include every ship, every building, and every computer. Every scrap of data and information.”

“That material is on Hadaria. It is our property!” Okein exclaimed from his chair now, speaking for the first time as he came to his feet. “Those ships are in Hadarian space! They belong to us!”

Martin looked at him. “If you have the nine hundred trillion Riyal that all of those items cost Elder Okein... I will be happy to leave it.”

“What?” Okein gasped.

“Did you think we were just going to let you take it?” Anja snapped.

“We will stop you!” Buonau shouted.

Martin looked at her. “Do you honestly think your pitiful Elder Guard Militia can stand against soldiers of the Union?” Martin spat angrily. “Sixteen of them are now dead because you attempted to kidnap my children you igord nubous upae! Sixteen lives that you have thrown away not a single hour into your so called new government! That is an act of war in case that has slipped your deranged minds!”

“The new Hadarian Government is under the protection of the Kavalian...” Menot began to speak as he stepped forward.

Martin turned to look at him. “Shut the fuck up Kavalian!” Martin snarled. “I’m not talking to you!” Martin turned quickly back to Buonau and Wiktor. “Three days Chief Minister. We will be off Hadaria fully in three days and we will take everything that belongs to us and not one thing more. If that is not acceptable to you... then more of your precious Elder Guard Militia will die and everyone will see just how ignorant you both truly are! After that... you can communicate directly with Prime Minister Deia through your ambassador here on Earth in regards to travel corridors and the use of Union Jump Gates!”

“You can not limit...” Wiktor began to speak.

“Woman... you have tried to take my children from me this day!” Martin growled. “You should be lucky that I do travel to Hadaria at this moment and slow cook your carcass over a hot fire!” Martin hissed. “Do not test me woman! At the very least I could bring you before the Galactic Court for your actions. The only thing holding me back is my respect for the Hadarian people and the history we have. Do not think to press your luck for my patience is already on the edge!”

“You will return my daughter to me.” Buonau snapped. “She does not belong among your kind!”

“My kind?” Martin asked looking at her. “Duewa is my kind now thanks to your actions Elder Buonau. Your fool soldiers shot Duewa and if not for Retta and Calyb sustaining her until her husband could reach her she would be dead! As it is, Colonel Thoti had to turn her in order to save her life!”

Buonau’s eyes went wide in horror. “You lie!” She screamed.

“Do I?” Martin asked. “I will arrange for you to speak with your daughter as soon as she is able. She can tell you herself to get fucked!”

“My daughter will want to return home to her people!” Buonau spoke confidently.

“And you don’t care that she was shot by your own troops?” Martin asked.

“There must have been... she must have gotten in the way of...” Buonau looked at Martin. “She was doing her duty!”

Martin nodded. “Yes she was. I see that now.”

“Anja is to remain here to face these charges against her!” Wiktor stated.

Martin shook his head. “I don’t think so.” Martin answered. “I will not leave one of my mates... one of the women I love in hostile territory. Even if any of your ridiculous charges were truly honest, she would never receive a fair trial in front of you and your cronies.”

“You can not remove her!” Buonau snapped.

“I can... and I will.” Martin stated. “She is a Queen of this Union! And unless you can come up with something far more convincing than the hatchet job of charges you have right now... something you can bring before the Galactic Court... she will return to Earth on the SPIRIT OF HADARIA. If she is impeded in any way..." Martin looked at Menot. "By anyone... the Durcunusaan will defend her with every weapon at their disposal. Do I make myself clear?"

"You violate your own laws with your actions King Leonidas!" Wiktor shouted.

Martin smiled. "Your interpretation of them perhaps. Not mine. I have also issued a warrant of arrest for Rinard. And you can pass this message on to him for me since I know you are hiding him. It was Torma that killed his father... my bonded dragon brother. And I let him kill Lucuvan. Now if he chooses to face me as a man for this... he is welcome. He will no longer target my mate. If he is seen within Union space anywhere... he will be arrested and executed on sight. I know he has been working with others... and I know he is involved in a myriad of other nefarious deals. If it is discovered you knew of these other things he was involved with Chief Minister... there will be penalties to pay. And they will not be pleasant."

"Are you threatening us King Leonidas?" Wiktor demanded smugly. "I will recall all of our Healers throughout the Union Fleet. Where will that leave you then? You will not threaten us!"

"Actually... the Hadarian Healers are members of the Union military Chief Minister." Martin said. "Therefore they are under Union orders. Those who wish to return home at your call may do so... I will allow that. Those who do not will continue their duties wherever it is they are assigned."

"You will send them to Hadaria!" Buonau screeched.

Martin shook his head. "I will leave that decision up to them." He replied. "You should be pleased Chief Minister... everything we have just discussed has gone out over open and live Netnews feeds." This caused Wiktor and Buonau to realize for the first time that they have allowed the Netnews into the chamber for the hearings.

"Stop recording!" Buonau screamed. "Stop what you are doing! Militia! Confiscate their equipment! Do it now!"

Martin stood in the transmission and shook his head. He turned without speaking and looked at Anja. "Red?"

Anja met his beautiful eyes. "I... I don't want to leave Martin." She said softly. "I don't want to... but I will."

Martin nodded. "Thank you. I didn't want to have to order Atropos to force you." He turned within the transmission once more and looked at Buonau and Wiktor. "I hope you know what your actions have wrought and who you have climbed into bed with to sate your grab and need for power. Now you will reap what you have sowed Chief Minister; now you will reap what you have sowed."

The transmission ended as abruptly as it had appeared and the Arch Ministry's chamber was silent except for whirring of the Netnews drones which were being confiscated by Hadarian Elder Militia without resistance. Anja looked at where Buonau and Wiktor stood glaring at her. She met their gaze for a long moment and then held out her hand for Sivana. Her sister took that outstretched hand without hesitation, and Sivana was holding Ceuma's hand just as tightly.

Two sisters and a clone that would come to be the third sister began their trek out of the Arch Ministry Chambers. Eurin and countless others fell in behind them silently, while Buonau and Wiktor looked on. Though they did not know it then, none of them would stand in this chamber again for nearly a decade to come. And as the former Queen and Princess of Hadaria, so beloved by so many of their people exited out of the Arch Ministry chamber, thousands across the face of Hadaria began the race against time to get off the planet of their birth before darkness fell upon them all.

FERRANAUS SECTOR NINE
HIGH COVEN SPACE
112 LY FROM UZU OZEIB 7

She walked slowly and confidently between the thirty-seven desks, her rich dark eyes keenly watching as the students were deeply involved with the test they were taking. She stood a mere five foot six and a hundred and twenty-one pounds, but it was a lean, muscular figure that was encased in the matt black conforming jumpsuit. Her breasts were high and firm, straining against the body armor like clothing. Her black hair was silky and very long, falling well past her shoulders to the middle of her back just above the incredibly shaped and firm ass. She had relatively long legs for her medium height; taut legs that many a pureblood wished to have locked around their hips while they pummeled her sweet body into the bed. She was easily the most desired female in their small group, yet in all the nine hundred years she had been among them, none of the soldiers or scholars had ever come close to bedding her. In fact, many believed she had never taken a man into her bed in all her two thousand twenty seven years of life. She could tease and talk as if she was very experienced, but no man or woman had ever gotten close enough to her to experience the pleasures of her flesh.

In many ways she was the ultimate enigma.

Many in their group knew who her father was, but only two out of the three thousand men, women and children in their organization knew who her mother was. It was definitely her father where she got her looks, for she looked nothing like her mother with the exception of the flawless skin and blue/black hair. He was still alive, for she always talked of him in the present tense and she loved him without question. She had joined them over nine hundred years ago at his behest and quickly established herself as perhaps one of the more deadly of their covert soldiers. Her ability to use the shadows, combined with her unique Mindvoice abilities enabled her to strike from the shadows before the target ever knew what hit them. There were many small blades secreted on her person, and she was lethal with all of them. The High Coven P11 Kinetic Magnum was strapped to her shapely right thigh, the long bladed dual knives that were her trademark secured in scabbards at the small of her back where she could draw them instantly with both hands if necessary. She was friendly yet distant; many times you could find her several hundred meters up in the mountain city built into the side of the fourteen thousand meter high mountain, staring into the night sky on Ferranaus as if speaking with the stars and the three moons.

Even given her extraordinary combat skills, she was also superbly well schooled and it was she who often could be found teaching the children of their organization. She could speak over nineteen alien languages, including the Lycavorian ancient tongue which was no small feat. She hated having to take blood, and was one of the very few vampires under the age of ten thousand years that had the will and determination to be able to control their blood lust for nearly four months before succumbing and having to ingest blood to replenish their bodies. She had not taken real blood in over two decades, preferring the fruit juice type cloned blood designed and marketed by the Hadarian Queen of the Union. It was easy enough to come by in The Wilds and considering they were on the border of one of the roughest areas of The Wilds, no one ever questioned when they purchased more. There were thousands of vampires who had deserted the High Coven early in the war with the Kavalians when they saw what was aligned against them and chose to make careers for themselves and smugglers and mercenaries.

She ignored the sounds of the booted feet when they stopped just inside the door to her classroom for several moments as she allowed her eyes to sweep over her students once more. As she turned at the back of the room, her dark eyes found the two men standing just inside the classroom and she hid the racing of her heart at the sight on the older man. He was tall and much older than the other, gray hair dotting his thick dark locks. The second was a much younger vampire of pureblood who was this man's most trusted aide, and one who had been seeking to take her as his wife for more years than she remembered. He was a very competent soldier and aide to the older man, but she had no desire for him as a husband. He did not move her in the way she wanted a man to move her. He was an exceptionally handsome man yes, but he sorely lacked the one thing that was needed to stir her passion and her blood. He was not comfortable or confident with himself and therefore could not stir her ardor for adventurism and exploration. The older man motioned imperceptibly with his head and she nodded as she began walking back towards them through another row. The two men exited the room and would wait for her in the corridor.

She maintained her decorum even though she wanted to run to the older man for she hadn't seen him in over three years now. It was safer for both of them this way, considering the position he still held within the High Coven military. She glanced back once more at her students before stepping into the long corridor where two others waited with the men she had seen. She ignored the man and women and stepped right up to the taller older man.

"Ilharn." She spoke in the ancient language softly as she folded herself into his strong embrace.

Cirith felt warmth flood through her as his arms pulled her tight and he kissed the top of her head while hugging her.

“Cirith ussta Dalharil.” He spoke.

Cirith relished in the feel of his arms around her and placed her palms flat on his broad chest before pulling her head away and looking up into his dark eyes. “Why are you here father?” She asked softly. “I did not expect you for another seven months at least.”

Valin Esavorna smiled as he nodded his head. “I know... but something... something has come up that has changed things greatly.”

Cirith looked at him for a moment then turned to the younger man. He stared at her stoically before she looked at her father once more. “Are you going to tell me, or do I need to guess.” She asked playfully.

Valin reached up and took her flawless face in his large hands. “Your mother is dead.” He stated flatly.

Cirith stared at him for a long moment unmoving and unblinking. Valin didn’t know what to expect as he looked at her and finally she blinked. “Do you expect me to mourn her passing father?” She asked plainly.

Valin let out a small chuckle and shook his head. “No.” He answered. “But I expect you to now think of what will happen because she has died.”

Cirith shook her head. “I don’t understand. What do you mean?”

“Your existence will become known.” Valin told her.

“How?”

“Her security files and everything in them will pass to your sister.” The younger man spoke quickly.

Cirith looked at him. “I asked my father Micardo, not you.” She stated flatly.

“He is right Cirith my child.” Valin spoke. “When those files pass to your sister, she will order your death. She will not allow you to live for she will consider you a threat.”

“Why?” Cirith exclaimed. “I have done nothing wrong.”

“You have been working for the Venorik Elghinn Cirith.” Valin spoke. “A small group of the Venorik Elghinn that is not supposed to exist. Once those security files are seen by your sister she will seek to destroy you and me. Your mother did not because she knew of what information I held against her. She could not move against me and you because of that information. And those we eliminated helped her in many ways.”

“She never knew how large our group is father!” Cirith stated. “Only The General knew that. It is why he let our group assist him through the years.”

Valin nodded. “That is true yes. But your sister will not care.” He stated. “We are leaving now... and the others are following within several days. I have a BLOODLETTER MARK IV-Class Cruiser waiting for us in orbit. It is a Venorik Elghinn ship. They will not be happy I have taken it... but it will get us where we need to go.”

“Where are we going?” Cirith asked. “Where can we go?”

“There is only one place that will be safe now.” Micardo spoke.

“Micardo is right.” Valin said. “We will make for the closest planet that has Union forces assigned to it. Not to mention it has the man we have been looking for, unsuccessfully I might add, for some time.”

Cirith’s eyes grew wide. “Cha’talla?” She gasped. “You found him?”

Valin shook his head. “We didn’t find him. Normya Leonidas found him. And if reports are accurate she has married his son with Esther Saira.”

“Father you jest!” Cirith exclaimed.

Valin shook his head. “Not in the least.” He replied. “I can tell you more on the way. We will have to cross quite a large expanse of The Wilds and it appears as if events are cascading out of control even for the Lycavorian King. It is the only place I believe we will be safe.”

Cirith nodded. “I agree.” She stated.

“Then you must say your goodbyes to your friends here and we must go.” Valin said.

Cirith gripped his arms tightly and met his eyes. “Who killed her father?” She asked. “Who killed my mother?”

“She was foolish to do what she attempted.” Valin said. “She thought she could go into the heart of the dragon’s den and take what the Lycavorians treasure and protect most of all. If the reports are accurate... and there is no reason to doubt them... the Lycavorian First Oracle and her dragon killed her. Aikiro always did think of herself as indestructible. Apparently that is no longer the case.”

Cirith was silent for a long moment before nodding her head. "Then I hope I meet this woman one day." She said softly. "I would very much like to thank her for what she has done."

"Come." Valin spoke taking her arm. "Our shuttle is waiting."

CHAPTER FORTY-FOUR

SPARTAN 11

ANDRO'S STRIKER DT

TWENTY-TWO HOURS FROM IRARUZU

Sadi came out of the cockpit of SPARTAN 11 after leaving Carisia checking the systems and playing with the sensors. She slid easily down the short flight of stairs and saw Ne'Veha standing beside the small counter that served as the food preparation area. She had learned from Arrarn that the STRIKER DTs the Leonidas family used were all custom made. Each of them was very different on the inside depending on the dragon and rider that would spend the most time within the ship. This was the case for most of Mjolnir's Hand as well, and Androcles's STRIKER DT was a single meter wider just behind the cockpit in order to accommodate the extensive food dispenser system that he had had installed. Andro Leonidas was an exceptional cook to the delight of his mother and grandmothers and it was not uncommon at all for him to be able to make a delicious meal out of simple military combat rations. Androcles Leonidas was also completely addicted to his mother's unique blend of coffee and kept a large complement on his STRIKER as well as the SCIMITAR. When they had first become mated Sadi had added some items to the inside of SPARTAN 11 at Andro's behest to make it seem more restful and like home for her, but Elynth had excellent taste she realized and she had made sure Andro didn't leave it barren. Sadi didn't change a whole lot, adding only small holoinage portraits. Two of them were of their ceremony with Andro in the armor of his grandfather and looking delicious as far as she was concerned. He complained he looked stiff and Sadi only laughed at him. She had since added holoinages of Carisia and Ne'Veha and all of them together and there were four empty holoinages that would be used later. Sadi had also come to realize that while no one had actually made the decision, the piloting of Andro's STRIKER had fallen to her, just as her status as Anome to Andro elevated her within the Leonidas family, even more than the title of Crown Princess. She now knew it was why Arrarn had grilled her so intensely during the weeks and months they had trained the High Coven pilots.

At the moment, Ne'Veha was leaning against the counter and holding a mug of tea in her hands while she stared into the back of the STRIKER at where Androcles was sitting on one of the three large couches, seemingly deeply involved in the data pad he was reading. Sadi didn't hesitate and came up behind her silently, leaning forward to brush her lips ever so gently across the back ridge of Ne'Veha's four-inch high elven ear. She felt Ne'Veha shudder slightly and lean back into the caress, a soft sigh escaping her lips. Sadi Leonidas basked in the knowledge of what she had right now and what she knew she would have in the future. Coming back into Andro's life after so long had brought everything together for her. All the horrors of her life, her step mother forcing her to do so many terrible things when she was younger and forced to work with the Arryadyveluat. That woman was now serving a life sentence on a prison planet with her sons for their actions as traitors to the Union. Sadi had fought her feelings for so long, even though deep down she knew she had belonged to Andro since that very first time she had seen him and he was only eight months old. Her love for him had opened her to so much more, and foremost among that was her ability to love Ne'Veha and Carisia and Lu'ria almost as intensely as she did Andro. She was a female Alpha wolf, and while she had shared a torrid night with Teeria long ago, it was not until she had come back into Andro's life that she realized there would be other women that were meant to share hers and Andro's life in every way. Sadi and the others loved each other as deeply as they did Andro and there was no competition between them for Andro's affection for they knew Sadi held the title of Anome and was first in Andro's heart. As with the Queens of the Lycavorian Union, this was not something that bothered them in the least for Andro loved them more deeply and with such passion that no man could match it.

Sadi had never actively slept with other women until she realized the pleasures she could have with Carisia and Ne'Veha. Now... she didn't know if she could live without them. She and Andro were the center of it all Sadi knew, but there were others and next to Andro's lavender and pines scent, Ne'Veha's sweet amaretto elven scent was the one she would never deny.

"What are you doing SirsanGai?" Sadi asked softly.

Ne'Veha half turned her head with an adoring smile and motioned with one hand. "I'm just watching him." She said softly. "Watching and wondering how all of this has come to be. All of us. I never once imagined I would find love in such a way Sadi. And certainly not with the Crown Prince of the Union." Ne'Veha turned and looked at her. "Or you and Carisia. And Lu'ria in the future."

Sadi smiled gently. "It wasn't exactly something I had thought about until Andro came back into my life either." She said softly. "I don't know what it is SirsanGai. I did not believe as deeply in faith and destiny until after those nights on the Island twenty-five years ago. After that it was like my eyes were opened and slowly through the years they have opened more and more. Now I truly believe that everything happens because it is destiny's way of guiding us. I met Andro for a reason when he was only eight months old. I needed to see his gorgeous eyes, to smell his scent back then so that I would know who would fill my future. Yet he had a path to follow until we came back together, and fate's way of making sure I never committed to anyone else was to burn his scent into my brain. In all those years, there were many times when I could almost smell him in the air, and he would not even be on the same planet We became Anomes for a reason. We did not discover you and Carisia and Lu'ria until we came back together for a reason. We were older... stronger... more mature... more knowledgeable. I have not told... I have not told Andro but I..."

Ne'Veha looked at her. "What?"

"He so hates being compared to his father." Sadi said with a smile. "I don't know how to tell him that I feel like there will be one more who will join us and complete us and share our lives together." She met Ne'Veha's dark orbs. "You know the star on my... on my tattoo?"

Ne'Veha grinned and stepped closer to her. "Intimately." She answered with a seductive lilt to her voice. "I have committed every line to memory."

Sadi grinned back at her. "A five pointed star has always had significant meaning to me, almost mystical in nature really. It stems from something my mother left for me. It was a five pointed broach that my father said had been passed down through her family. It was the only thing she had left from her family when she met my father. There are five points of our star SirsanGai with Andro in the center. We are still missing a single point. Just like his father and mothers, there will be one more that will be with us." She said softly.

"So you think there is one more that will be with us after Lu'ria then?" Ne'Veha asked softly her voice sounding almost agreeable.

Sadi cocked her head slightly at her tone. "You... you believe it... you sense it as well don't you?"

Ne'Veha nodded slowly. "Carisia and I have felt it. It is what we were talking about when Andro was entertaining you in the shower the other evening." She said with a knowing smile for they had heard the cries of pleasure Sadi was filling their room with. "The closer we get to Lu'ria, the stronger our Mindvoice connection and bond becomes, but it still lacks something. We decided that it could only mean that there is still someone who has not come into our lives yet. We did not feel it was appropriate to bring up just yet even though we knew both of you must have felt it as well."

Sadi nodded slowly. "Andro... he tries so hard to be different from his father and I don't want to tell him how close he actually is, at least in some respects."

"I only... I have never met his father... but I have seen him on the Netnews." Ne'Veha said. "Andro... he seems darker in certain ways."

Sadi nodded. "There is a piece of his mind that he keeps locked away even from me. I think Elynth is the only one who knows what resides there, and I think it has to do with all of us. At least in part. He's embarrassed to admit that he feels what we feel. His Lycavorian and Spartan sense of honor."

"Then the part of Carisia and I that feels empty... even now... you feel it also? He feels it but will not speak of it?" Ne'Veha asked her.

Sadi nodded. "Yes." She answered.

Ne'Veha nodded. "I think all of us should speak of it." She said. "You and I... perhaps Lu'ria when we find her... we are not ashamed to speak of it. Carisia may feel somewhat reserved due to her upbringing but even she feels it and will talk of it. We must never keep what we feel from each other my love."

Sadi nodded motioning with her head to where Andro sat. "I know he feels it... but he will never say anything. He feels... he feels like he is betraying us if he does. We will have to work on him. I do know he finds it somewhat overwhelming that we... all of us... that we could desire him and only him and that like his mothers we are not jealous of each other. That is something he doesn't understand."

Ne'Veha turned back to look at him on the couch as well. "What I feel now... for him... for you and Carisia and Lu'ria... it will only grow stronger I know. Even as quickly as things have come together, it feels so natural and meant to be. I can feel the changes inside me Sadi. I can feel the changes growing stronger every day." Ne'Veha spoke softly. "My senses are more acute, I'm stronger, faster..."

Sadi nodded. "That is because of what you share physically with Andro. His DNA... his blood is bonding with yours. The changes are subtle but they do happen."

"Will they continue to change me?" Ne'Veha asked turning back to look at her.

Sadi shook her head. "Perhaps a little more, but nothing like if Andro actually turned you no."

"Will... will he... will he ask me for that?" Ne'Veha asked softly.

"That is not my decision SirsanGai." Sadi answered. "We love you for who you are right now. Turning you will not change whom you are inside, only what you are capable of. Andro lives by the same rule as his father, and it is a rule that many of the Lycavorian people have adopted since his father's return. Never without their consent and only in times of life or death."

"But... but what if I choose this?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi shrugged. "Then it is different." She answered with a grin. "But it is not something we need to worry about right now."

"My mind has... I was never a very good Mindvoicer Sadi." Ne'Veha said. "Until... until I began to share in your dreams."

"We did not do that on purpose SirsanGai." Sadi spoke with an embarrassed look.

Ne'Veha chuckled. "I know... but it was glorious nonetheless. Even more so now that I have experienced it for real. Now... it is like our minds are one Sadi. We can sense each other's thoughts and emotions to a large degree. It is illuminating what we share and I can not think of ever being without it." She said with a shy seductive smile. "I... I have spoken with my mother Sadi." She said after a moment.

Sadi looked up and met her eyes. "How did she take the news?"

"Surprisingly... incredibly well." Ne'Veha answered. "I think much of her distaste for others comes from my father. When she saw me... heard my words... discovered what he did with his own mother, she was very upset. She... she wanted to know if she could meet Andro. Talk with him."

Sadi smiled. "You know how Andro views family Ne'Veha. You can see it within the corridors of his mind. He will never refuse your mother."

Ne'Veha nodded her head. "I know." She said. She sipped her tea and looked at this stunning blond female wolf. She felt warmth sweep through her inside as she remembered the way Sadi had made her feel. Sadi had explored every crevice of her lithe elven body and done so with great gusto, driving Ne'Veha to heights of passion that were only surpassed when she was in Andro's arms. Ne'Veha looked into her jungle green eyes. "Do you remember your mother Sadi?"

Sadi shook her head slowly. "She died when I was very young. I can remember vaguely what she looked like, but we have plenty of images of her, and I know she was very beautiful."

Ne'Veha grinned. "It seems you got her genes in that regard. Deliciously so."

Sadi smiled at her. "My father truly loved her." She said. "I don't think he will ever take another mate now. He... he is gun-shy so to speak after what my stepmother did... and part of him has always loved my mother. Even though she told him to find another woman before she died I don't believe he ever will. Not now."

"What about other family members?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi nodded. "My grandparents on my father's side lived on Apo Prime for a time before they passed from this life... my mother never had grandparents. At least not that my father and I ever knew about."

"Did they die?" Ne'Veha asked.

Sadi nodded. "I believe so. He never met them and she did not speak of them very often. I know they escaped from a High Coven prison camp when my mother was very small. I believe they died shortly after. Relatives raised my mother here on Apo Prime when she finally arrived here. It was shortly after Apo Prime was named as our new homeworld and things were still very confusing. I never really delved too deeply into her history, especially after she died. It was too... it was too painful even when I was older.”

“Forgive me my love.” Ne'Veha said quickly.

Sadi took her hand and squeezed it. “It is alright.” She said. “My father remembers the happy times and that is what he shares with me and my brothers. We...”

“Sadi... you, Andro and Ne'Veha should probably come up here.” Carisia’s voice carried over the intercom.

Sadi looked at Ne'Veha and they both turned and headed back up the small flight of stairs into the expanse of the very advanced and large STRIKER cockpit.

“On our way Enylarcopri.” Sadi said.

[You will have to tell us what it is you feel about this fifth and final point of our star Sadi.] Ne'Veha told her as they moved forward. [I know I feel it as well... and Carisia as well.].

[I will... don't worry.] Sadi answered. [When it is just us.]

The pilot and co-pilot would sit next to each other surrounded by multiple monitors and consoles. A small engineering station behind the pilot could be used for the optional Union engineer when they traveled on the ships. Carisia didn't pause and rose from the co-pilot's seat as Sadi settled into the pilot's huge chair. Carisia was an adequate pilot, but nowhere in the same league as Sadi or Ne'Veha and she moved to the engineer's station as Ne'Veha settled into the co-pilot's seat. The two pilot's seats whirred as they conformed to the two females that now occupied them, all of their bio-signatures having been automatically programmed into the ship's computer.

“Carisia... what did you discover?” Sadi asked as she scanned the instruments all around her.

“Look at the long range sensors Sadi.” Carisia spoke as Andro entered the cockpit now. “Bearing one four seven.”

Sadi touched her console and brought up the long range sensors on the monitor between the seats just as Andro was kneeling between her and Ne'Veha's seats. Sadi's eyes grew wide when the sensor screen came alive with contacts. Lots of contacts. The STRIKERs throughout the entire fleet, including the STRIKER ATs, had some of the finest sensor arrays in use for their class ship and they had unbelievable range, something that was kept very quiet even within the small family of STRIKER pilots.

“Whoa!” Sadi exclaimed as her fingers danced across the console.

“What are they?” Andro asked as Carisia moved up behind him.

Ne'Veha was working her console with practiced ease. While she had never flown a STRIKER before, it had almost the exact sensor package of her beloved DEVASTATOR-Class Heavy Fighter Bomber and she fit into the role easily now.

“Kavalian.” Ne'Veha answered her dark eyes studying the sensor display. “Looks like an entire Fleet Group plus some. I'm picking up over a hundred and twenty warships. Frontline ships by the look of them.”

“Out here?” Andro asked with some surprise in his voice.

“We are in The Wilds my love.” Sadi told him turning in her chair. “We may adhere to the unwritten rule of no warships in The Wilds... but the Kavalians obviously do not.”

“Course?” Andro asked.

“Heading 67412 point three.” Ne'Veha answered. “Twenty-two light years away and moving on a pseudo reciprocal heading. They are moving oddly... staggered and spread out. As if they do not want to draw attention to themselves.”

“They can't see us right?” Andro asked.

Sadi shook her head. “They have nothing that can penetrate our Shrouds.” She answered. “At least that we know of.”

“Sadi... focus and align the port array and direct it at Iraruzu.” Carisia said. “It's what I was doing when I detected them. I thought I saw something there in orbit before they showed up.”

Sadi adjusted her controls once more. “SirsanGai... feed another sixteen percent power to the port array.” She spoke.

Ne'Veha nodded and her fingers slid along the console. “Done.”

All of them watched as the greenish red planet came into view on the holomonitor. Andro leaned forward. “This is Iraruzu?” He asked.

Sadi nodded slowly. "One of the many havens for the scum of the universe." She replied as she recalled the intelligence reports they had on this world. "It has a number of medium sized settlements, and a good sized spaceport, but the only types that go here are those who don't want to be found or those who don't mind breaking the law."

Carisia nodded. "Mercenaries. Slavers. Bounty Hunters. You name your poison and they are on this planet."

"It is also a hub for intelligence gathering." Ne'Veha spoke. "Having the Drow set up a settlement here was ingenious." Andro looked up into her dark brown orbs and grinned widely. Ne'Veha blushed even under her dark tan and turned away quickly. "Swimming in your mind and thoughts while you sleep is..." She spoke in a whisper.

"It's divine." Carisia finished her statement pushing up against Andro from behind.

Andro leaned over to the side and nuzzled Ne'Veha's elven ear and all of them saw her body shiver in delight. "You're right SirsanGai." He said finally. "They're moving away from Iraruzu though?"

Sadi nodded. "Yes. There's no way they could catch us even if..."

"There!" Carisia hissed as she pointed at the monitor. "I knew I saw something."

All of their eyes were drawn to the monitor now as the long range array detected and focused on the ship in orbit above Iraruzu. It was a medium sized ship, perhaps a light cruiser in size from the somewhat fuzzy picture. Andro's eyes narrowed considerably. "KertaGai... can you tell me what type of ship that is?" He asked.

"It's definitely Kavalian." Sadi said adjusting her sensors. "Got it! One PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigate. She's maintaining a low ecliptic orbit."

Andro shifted on his knees, his hand going between Carisia's thighs to steady himself as he dropped to both knees. "Why is a Kavalian heavy frigate in a low orbit around an essentially pirate planet?" He asked the question to no one in particular.

"They apparently do not care who they associate with it seems." Ne'Veha spoke.

"Maybe." Andro said softly his mind tossing about different ideas. "Sadi... initiate a secure transmission. Spartan Three Five. Krypteria Headquarters."

Sadi reached across her controls. "Why the Krypteria Andro?" She asked as she worked.

"Something is not right." Andro said. He held up the data pad. "I've been catching up on intelligence reports since we left. There has been an unusual amount of military activity by the Kavalians in The Wilds over the past four months."

"Who is Spartan Three Five?" Carisia asked.

"Armetus." Andro answered.

Sadi's head turned at the soft beeping. "Return verification says Spartan Three Five is off the grid." She spoke. "Spartan Three Six is available."

Martin nodded. "Do it. Sync it up."

The small holo disc on the center console came to life with the image of the dark haired young woman sitting at a desk. Carisia knew immediately she was a pureblood vampire. The woman looked up as the holo disc on her desktop activated on her end and she was staring at the images of Andro and his three mates in the image on her end.

"Andro?" Marci spoke surprised.

"Marci... where is Armetus?" Andro asked immediately.

"Andro where are you?" Marci asked. "The last anyone heard you and your Strike Wing had jumped out of the system."

"That is not important Marci." Andro told her. "Armetus?"

Marci shook her head. "A lot has happened since you left Andro." She answered quickly. "The Krypteria is stretched further than we have ever been. Armetus is leading the investigation into the events on Hadaria himself and..."

Andro's eyes narrowed. "What events on Hadaria?" He demanded.

"You... you don't know Andro?" Marci gasped. She sat back in her chair. "Of course you wouldn't know... there is a level six blackout and you are operating under radio silence yourself." She leaned forward again. "The Hadarian Arch Ministry and The Elder Council have removed your mother as Queen. They have declared themselves independent of the Lycavorian Union. They even sent three squads of their Elder Militia here to Earth and then they tried to kidnap your brother and sister!”

“What?” Andro gasped in shock.

Marci nodded but held up her hand. “Colonel Thoti and your mother stopped them... and none of the Hadarians survived. Chief Minister Wiktor and Elder Buonau wanted to hold your mother for murder and a bunch of other trumped up charges. Your father used a Mark II NB to appear in the chamber and tell them that would not be a good idea. Anja has initiated a Shining Path and it’s already nearly twenty hours in.”

“The Hadarians are founding members of the Union!” Andro declared. “Have they lost their minds? They can’t leave the Union!”

Marci nodded. “It appears so. They’ve announced a new government has been formed. It is pretty much a religious dictatorship. And they have announced that the KFI has stepped in to provide them full backing and recognition as well as support.”

“The Kavalians?” Andro snarled as another alarm bell in his head began ringing oh so loudly.

Marci nodded quickly. “That came as quite a shock to all of us and Deia ordered Armetus to discover how that escaped our notice. They have at least a full squad of troops on Hadaria along with a senior military officer who apparently is the liaison from the KFI. We are trying to discover just how they got into the Union to begin with. This whole thing stinks to the heavens as Armetus spoke and it has obviously been going on for quite some time. They set your mother up Andro. They set her up and stabbed her in the back sure as sibfla.”

“What... what did my father do?” Andro asked.

“He told Wiktor and Buonau if they wanted their independence they could have it. He told them in three days not a single Union Spartan or ship will be on Hadaria. They actually thought they were going to impound all of our equipment and ships can you believe that?” Marci answered shaking her head. “He was pissed off big time. He told them if they attempted to hold Anja he would kick them into the next universe!”

Andro couldn’t suppress his grin. That definitely sounded like something his father would say. He shook his head and looked at Marci. “Marci... without telling you exactly where we are... we are picking up an unusual amount of Kavalian activity in The Wilds close to the Bontawillian border. Have you gotten any reports recently from our Drow outposts in the area?”

Marci shook her head. “No. Nothing out of the ordinary that I’m aware of.”

“There is a Drow outpost on Iraruzu correct?” Andro asked. “Have they reported the Kavalian Frigate that is now in low orbit around that planet?”

Marci looked at him in the transmission. “Iraruzu?” She asked. “No. Hold on a minute.” She turned and pulled a data pad from the side of her desk, reading as a strange expression formed on her face. “Andro... that is where Walter went. He took Senator Daba and several Dragoons with him.”

Andro looked at Sadi quickly as more alarm bells began to go off in his head and they were almost painful. “Marci... we received a transmission on the SCIMITAR from Walter on the old AFC channel. The message stated his ship was down and destroyed but that they were alive.”

“Destroyed?” Marci gasped. “Destroyed by what? Why didn’t we get this? What...”

“They obviously did not have access to a long range transmitter, or something else is preventing them from contacting anyone. The AFC channels are very old emergency channels as you know. The only reason we received it is because it was directed solely at the SCIMITAR and Sa’sur and I have sharp people working on her.” Andro said. “The message states he is on Iraruzu Marci. That his ship is destroyed. And now we discover there is a Kavalian warship in low orbit above that planet! We are still too far to get detailed scans of the planet itself but we can detect the ship in orbit.”

“I’m also picking up Deutrino particles.” Ne’Veha spoke now. “The moon of Iraruzu mines Deutrino, but there should not be particles of it filling the space around Iraruzu. That is what is blocking long range transmissions. And they appear to be focused somehow. I can’t tell because we are still too far away but it definitely is not normal to the area.”

Marci listened to her finish and then turned and pulled up something on her desk monitor. “They met their report time and nothing was out of the ordinary. All of the Drow outposts have reported the same thing. Business as usual. The last one reported in twelve hours ago.” She explained.

“When is the next scheduled report time?” Sadi asked now as she could feel Andro’s apprehension and anxiousness. All of them could.

“Not for another two days.” Marci replied. “At least for Iraruzu.”

“Nubou!” Andro snapped loudly as a light bulb went off and it all came together in his mind. “Marci... contact them all now! Do it now! Get status reports and updates from them and tell all of them to go to high alert!”

“Andro what...”

“Don’t you see?” Andro exclaimed. “Their embassy on Earth! The farce with Lisisa! They have been setting themselves up! The events on Hadaria! The clone of my mother! This attack on Iraruzu! They are moving against the Union and they are doing so from the shadows to take us by surprise!”

“Andro there is no evidence to suggest they are targeting our outposts in The Wilds. All of them have...” Marci began.

“Damn it Marci!” Andro almost yelled. “As Crown Prince I am giving you a direct order to contact all of our Drow outposts immediately. Drop what you are doing and make contact with them yourself! Report back to me and me alone! And make sure no one knows what you are doing! If I am wrong then fine... and I hope I am wrong!”

Marci sat there and stared at the screen. In all her years and experience in the Krypteria and dealing with Androcles Leonidas she had never once seen him conduct himself or use the power of his title to accomplish anything. If he was doing so now... it meant something was very bad. Marci nodded. “I’ll take care of it right now Andro.” She stated evenly. “Where are you Andro?”

Andro looked at her image on the screen. There was no point in trying to hide where he was from her... not now. “We are...” He looked at Sadi.

Sadi turned back to her controls and adjusted something on her console. “I can stretch our NAVCOM to max Andro... it will get us within six hours with a full power Hyper Fusion Jump but it will burn out our LSD Fusion Coils in the process.” She stated confidently turning back to him.

“We can replace LSD Coils KertaGai.” Andro said softly. “We can not replace Walter or Lu’ria.”

“Ne’Veha... plot the jump!” Sadi spoke.

“Marci... we will be six hours from Iraruzu in minutes.” Andro told her turning back to the monitor. “You have six hours to contact all of them and get in touch with me before we arrive! Use my Spartan Secure Channel. I need to know if we are walking into a trap!”

Marci nodded. “I’ll be back to you in three!” She stated. “Andro... permission to put the... permission to raise Alert Level of the Fleet?”

Andro shook his head. “No. Not yet.” He answered immediately. “We need to know what is happening first! Can you get word to my father?”

“I can try.” Marci answered. “He hasn’t answered his COM in nearly four days. He’s in Sparta and he obviously used the Mark II but no one has seen him in several days. The Level Six Blackout also disables the COMs for your mothers if they are in a secure location which they are.”

Andro didn’t hesitate. “Contact my Uncle Danny.” He ordered. “His COM is one of four that is always active, no matter the Blackout! Have him get in touch with my father once you find out what you can.”

Marci nodded. “I’m on it Andro.” She stated. “Good luck.”

Andro looked at Sadi as the holoimage of Marci faded. “Take us to Iraruzu KertaGai.” He spoke. “With all possible haste! Lu’ria is in trouble... I can feel it.”

“Andro what if...?” Carisia asked gently.

Andro rose to his feet now and looked down into her Maya blue eyes. “We would know Enylarcopri.” He said softly. He leaned over and kissed her tenderly, taking her face in his large hands. “We must prepare Anthar and Elynth.”

SPARTA OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

For'mya practically cooed out her enchantment as Martin’s arms engulfed both her and Aricia in a powerful embrace of love. He leaned over and firmly nuzzled her elegant elven ears and Aricia’s neck and cheek until their legs were weak and both of them were barely able to stand upright. For'mya knew this was his apology for what had happened, and what had been happening for the last few months and no one had really taken notice. It was not his fault after all she knew, he had no idea that the darkness had infected him and there was nothing he could have done about it. His simple powerful embrace and gentle caress now, feeling him resonate so brilliantly within Mindvoice as he always did and sensing the shame he felt over his actions made For'mya silently chastise herself for ever doubting his love for her... for all of them. She drew deeply of his minty scent, letting it filter throughout her entire being and seeing Aricia close her eyes in bliss as she did the same thing. Twenty-five years together and all it took was the smell of him nearby and that elicited some of the most divine sensations For'mya and the others had ever felt.

For'mya looked up into his eyes as he drew their heads away from his chest and looked at them. His dark eyes were filled with shame and hurt at what he had done, but For'mya and Aricia both knew it was not their Martin Leonidas who had done these things and they held only love for him in their hearts.

"I... I am so sorry." Martin spoke softly. "I..."

Aricia reached up with a slim finger and placed it to his lips silencing his words. For'mya pressed tighter to him and shook her head as her arm went around Aricia's waist. "That was not you Martin Leonidas." For'mya said softly. "We know that."

"I... I should have been stronger." Martin said. "I should have..."

"Beloved... you are not impervious to everything bad that inhabits this universe." Aricia told him.

Martin looked into her azure eyes. "Our... our son!" He gasped.

Aricia shook her head once more. "Our son is stronger than even we know." Aricia told him. "He knows what happened Martin... for it was he who saw it first."

"He still won't answer his COM." Martin said.

"Give him time Martin." For'mya spoke. "He has discovered much about himself these last weeks as well I think. You will see... things will be fine."

"Beloved... why have you been at Thermopylae these last days?" Aricia asked him. "What have you been doing? Helen said you were... she said you were learning but she would not tell us anymore than that."

Martin nodded. "I have been learning." He answered. "Learning many things. And I have much more to learn when the time comes." He leaned over and laid a blistering kiss of love on For'mya, pulling her tightly against his powerful body. Her supple elven frame molded to his rock hard body like clay and she whimpered in delight, responding as she always responded to his kisses, with equal fervor as she allowed his tongue to claim and dominate her own. When he pulled away after a long moment Martin repeated the event with Aricia. He pulled her firm body tightly as For'mya's flushed face looked on, her arm still around Aricia's waist, until finally he pulled away from her leaving Aricia equally out of breath and worked up. "Have we heard from Anja?" He asked.

"Not yet." For'mya answered as she got her raging hormones under control. She may have been still a week away from fully entering Phase, but with the kisses he had just given her and Aricia, For'mya had no doubts that one of them would be pregnant after this Phase passed and she so wanted to give him a daughter. "Your transmission shocked everyone. Including us. We didn't think you were aware of what was going on."

Martin nodded slowly. "My father's tomb is an excellent dampening field for those of us who can Mindvoice. However... it does not affect Wayonn or the Pralors in a similar fashion. He told me."

"Pralors?" Aricia gasped her eyes wide.

"Martin... you... you have been with a Pralor?" For'mya matched Aricia's surprise. "How... how is that possible?"

Martin nodded. "The last of his kind apparently." He replied. "I will tell you everything when we have time. You will... you will be amazed at what he has shown me. Told me. You will... you will also be frightened, for not everything he told me was pleasant. He..."

Martin's words died as Deia's entrance into the office stopped him from continuing. All of them turned as she walked in, her face angry. Martin knew his Aunt was a passionate woman when it came to the Union. She had sworn to continue what her sister and his grandfather had begun and since Martin's return it seemed that there were far more people who wanted to take what they had away from them. Deia was a career politician, but her great nephew's return to lead their people had made her so very happy and she and him thought alike far more often than most people realized. Martin was her link, her connection to her lost sister and the man who Eliani had so loved. Resumar had made her a powerful voice within Lycavorian culture, and that voice was one the Coven had taken away from her for a time. It was a voice that she had regained by the actions of Martin's father, and continued to have even to this day. She marched right up to Martin and met his eyes while taking his hands in hers.

"You are fully yourself again Mandri?" She asked calmly.

Martin nodded. "I am Tenna." He answered.

Deia nodded and reached up on her tiptoes to kiss his cheek. "A fine display with the Mark II. It sent them for a loop and gave us the time we need to discover what is going on and how this happen." She told him as she moved to her desk and turned back to face him. "I've always known Wiktor was a shrewd upae, this only proves it."

"We can do nothing Deia?" Aricia asked.

Deia shrugged her slim shoulders. "What could we do?" She asked. "The Hadarians are founding members of the Union. They were one of the first races Resumar approached during our years as slaves. Wiktor would know the Union Constitution just as well as I. She may not have had a hand in writing it, but rest assured to pull this off she had to have studied it very extensively. There is nothing in the Union Charter that says they can not leave whenever they wish."

"How many others are going to follow them?" Martin asked moving to the couch near the window and lowering his large frame into it. Aricia and For'mya dropped themselves onto the couch on either side of him pressing close as his male wolf aura caressed their female wolf senses.

Deia shook her head as she took the chair opposite the couch. "Follow them?" She asked in surprise. "Mandri there is not a Union Senator or politician that does not know what Chief Minister Wiktor is, or Buonau for that matter. None of them want any part of a Theocracy with them in charge." Deia leaned back in the chair. "I doubt very much they will even acknowledge them as a legitimate government. Those Hadarians who live here in Sparta practically stormed the Hadarian embassy in a fit of rage when this broke four hours ago." She reached across the small table and handed Martin the data pad. "They are demanding that Wiktor and Buonau cease their activities and announce that Anja is Queen again."

Martin shook his head. "It's gone too far." He said softly. "Even if they were of the mind to listen to their citizens... they couldn't now."

Deia nodded. "I know. Riall reported in as well. Not a single Healer among the Union ranks has requested to return. The Hadarian Elder Militia has severely curtailed the Netnews on Hadaria but they are only so large, and if what has come out in the last few hours is any kind of barometer, not many agree with what is happening."

Martin lowered the pad and handed it to For'mya. "They've been planning this for some time." He spoke. "And the Kavalians have been involved. It is the only way Rinard could have gotten the location of the Coven Cloning Facility. Yuriko has been in command of one of our OMEN ships ever since our 'falling out'. One of her tasks was to monitor that facility."

"You mean... you mean all of that with Yuriko wasn't true?" Deia asked in surprised.

"It was the only way to insure she could operate within The Wilds and High Coven space with any kind of freedom." Martin replied. "They were never able to determine who assaulted the facility, but now we know who and why."

"We should send reinforcements to Hadaria." Aricia spoke quickly. "Anja will not ask for them... she is too proud, but after what they attempted with Retta and Calyb I wouldn't put anything past them now."

For'mya nodded. "I agree. Especially if the KFI is openly assisting them."

"It must be tearing her apart to have to leave." Deia said gently. "She has come to love Hadaria and her people almost as much as being wolf and living here in Sparta."

Martin nodded. "I could hear it in her voice." He said. "I do not want to have to force her to leave, but she can't stay there. They won't allow it and she will be in too much danger now that the Kavalians are involved."

"Atropos will see to it she leaves Martin. Even if he has to force her." Aricia said. "He is my brother and he knows how we all view Anja."

"That's what I'm counting on." Martin said. "Resumar has made it to the Mindvoice ship. Wayonn was able to tell me that. He could not breach the Mindvoice shielding of the new ship because of the distance but..."

"Wayonn?" For'mya asked. "This is the Pralor Martin?"

“Wait a moment?” Deia interrupted. “A Pralor? You have been talking with an actual Pralor these past days? Son vada carians! I thought they were extinct Mandri! We thought they were extinct. Avi told us...”

“Avi didn’t know.” He said nodding as he leaned forward on the couch. “He... he was Canth’s father actually.” He spoke.

“Canth’s father... he still lives?” Deia gasped. She had know Canth personally, met him on several occasions even. “But that would... that would make him older than even Aikiro!”

“Yes I know.” Martin said.

“Mandri... where... where has he been all these years? What has he been doing?” Deia gasped.

“What happen with me has to do with the Pralor brothers that we are all descended from. Aikiro’s family. Our family. It seems the hatred between the two is still very much alive and well even though it is one sided. It is a very long story and at times very confusing. I will need to sit with Helen and try and make sense of it somehow.” Martin got up and moved to the coffee counter and began pouring himself a mug. “Aikiro’s High Coven Commandos succeeded in attacking Resumar’s teams as they were landing. They were able to kill a dragon and the pilots, but Resumar’s team is still intact, albeit very short on explosives. Wayonn told me they have met up with friends of sorts but I don’t know what that means... and...”

“Vonis!” Deia started now.

“What?” Martin asked as they all looked at her.

Deia scrambled to her feet. “It didn’t hit me until you just said friends!” She started to her desk and quickly settled behind the monitor and began pulling up reports. “Armetus told me of Vonis’s last report and that it had sounded strange. He didn’t question it however since Isabella is the one who gave him his orders. The High Coven Insurgency Leader... this General...”

“We know this General was Lucia Moran Deia.” For'mya said. “Helen told us.”

Deia nodded. “Yes... I know. Vonis reported that this General... Lucia we all now know... she sent the bulk of their fleet ships to watch over an important asset that was now deep in Kavalian territory on a special mission. He wouldn’t say what it was... only that they were moving there with all haste. He said Lucia told them they needed to keep her mother from discovering it.”

Martin closed his eyes and sighed. He shook his head slowly. “She has worked toward one goal for the better part of her life, against all odds and in the heart of those who would have killed her without hesitation had they known what her true intent was.” He said softly. “And that goal was to be with my daughter.”

“What do you mean Beloved?” Aricia asked.

“Lucia Moran.” Martin spoke looking up. “She was touched by the same darkness that infected her mother, the same one that almost got me. She reached through Mindvoice and grabbed hold of Zarah’s essence to help her, to sustain her. They were... they were born on the exact day and the exact time to the second, Lucia and Zarah.” He said. “Precisely the same time. It forged a link between them in Mindvoice from across the light years that no one could have detected. It is something Wayonn told me. That is what Lucia Moran reached for that day, for she was terrified by what the darkness... what Xaxon showed Yuri and what she saw. Zarah was the only thing keeping her sane... and now that they are together... nothing will ever separate them.”

“Lucia... she saved Zarah’s life Martin.” For'mya spoke softly.

Martin nodded. “Oh... I know. I have no intention of trying to force them apart. Ever. I owe her a debt I can never repay.” He saw Aricia and For'mya relax and breathe easier at his words and he knew then how badly he had acted these last months.

“Can Resumar still destroy the ship Mandri?” Deia asked.

Martin nodded his head. “He is reviewing the information he has right now. I have no idea how Wayonn was able to touch Res over so great a distance, I can only assume he was using something similar to our Mark II NB, but much stronger. He wasn’t able to actually communicate with him because of the MV shields this ship has in place as I said... but he could see things. He knew things that only Resumar could know. The High Coven Commando squads got away pretty much intact, but Resumar also has the help of Kavalian rebels now. The Avatar on this MV ship is working with Avi to come up with a plan. Especially now that we know the Kavalians have been helping Wiktor and Buonau, I wouldn’t trust them as far as I could throw them. Once Res has secured his position enough and come up with a plan I’m sure he’ll contact us.”

Deia met his eyes. “Then I can tell this Ambassador Matuarr to shove it up his mida when he demands again to know why we have a warship ship in Kavalian space near Ritaah?” She declared.

“They know?” Martin asked stunned.

For'mya shook her head. “They are reaching Martin Leonidas.” She stated coming to her feet. “I was the one he brought this to. He was trying to probe for the truth of it. Our Shrouds are too good for them to penetrate. They do not know for sure and it was a ploy to deflect from the fact we noticed four of his staff are missing though we have said nothing.”

Martin looked at her. “Missing? What do you mean missing?”

“He was trying to hide that four members of his embassy staff are still missing.” For'mya stated.

Martin looked at her. “Who is missing?”

Aricia nodded. “Commander Pian, Co-Ambassador Jiss and Jalersi. And your nephew Karun.” She stated. “When they finally allowed our crews into their embassy to help them, a very promising Krypteria agent was among them. All were accounted for except them. This Matuarr character told us they were dead.”

“Son vada carians... I have been such a fool! They have been playing us all along!” He exclaimed. “So where are they then?” Martin asked.

“We are still trying to figure that out.” Deia spoke quickly. “Armetus and the Krypteria are stretched very thin Martin. So much happening at once. Most of his agents here on Earth are taking part in the investigation of the High Coven attack and...”

Martin shook his head with confidence Deia saw. Another sign that her nephew was once more the Martin she knew. Decisive and quick thinking. “Contact him and have them pulled off that.” He ordered without hesitation. “Allow the local authorities to conduct that investigation. We know what Aikiro was after and she didn't succeed. She only wanted what was on City Ship 41. She's dead and Andro nearly whacked Yuri... there is no reason to commit Krypteria resources to that. They failed and they are gone.”

“Are we certain of that my love?” For'mya asked.

Martin moved to the window in Deia's office and stared out across the expanse of Sparta. He nodded his head slowly. “I saw... I saw in his mind what Andro did to her when we were at SODRAG and...” Aricia stepped up to him when he stopped talking and she took his arm seeing the pain on his face at the memory.

“It is the past and it was not you Beloved.” She said softly. “Let it go.”

Martin turned and looked at her azure blue eyes and saw the love they held for him. He cut his eyes to see that same love and devotion in For'mya's beautiful dark brown orbs as well. He nodded slowly and turned to gaze out over the city once more. “I'm certain.” He spoke finally. “Andro mangled her but good... and unless she got aide within the hour she would have died. That we didn't find her body means she made it off Earth with Moran, but she's going to be out of it for a while if they saved her.”

“We confirmed that Aikiro and this Admiral Tesand are dead.” Deia spoke. “Helen destroyed Aikiro's remains before we could confirm it, but I will not question the Feravomir. Tesand's remains we found among the wreckage of the transport they tried to land near Dragon Mountain. That would leave Moran in charge until Yuri recovers. If she survived at all.”

Martin turned and looked at her. “He's running Tenna.” He said. “They are heading back into High Coven space.”

“How do you know for sure? The Commandos are still active on Ritaah. Returning to High Coven space takes them further away.” Deia asked.

“It's what I would do.” Martin said. “Moran is many things but he is a competent military commander.” Martin said. “He wouldn't stick around in Union space any longer than necessary, especially if Yuri was seriously injured. They would need to get her into a Blood Vat wouldn't they?”

Deia nodded. “That... that would be the normal procedure for critically injured vampires yes. It speeds the re-growth of tissue.”

Martin nodded. “The Coven Commandos would be their best troops. And they would have some sort of plan to get back. They had to have known they could never remain on Earth, even if they succeeded in what they wanted. The technology we have gained from CS41 has allowed us to improve our Shrouds well beyond what the Coven has. They would not be able to remain undetected for long that deep in Kavalian space and Moran's knows it. No... his people have another way home once they are done.”

“You think they are after the new MV ship?” Aricia asked.

Martin nodded. "If not the entire ship, than at least data modules or something they can use to weaponize. Res, Athani and I talked of this concern. He knows what to do." Martin looked up quickly. "I... I didn't think to ask." Martin said swiftly. "Duewa?"

For'mya nodded. "She is recovering nicely." She replied. "Thoti bit her with barely enough time before she bled out, but he saved her life. She is at the hospital under heavy Durcunusaan Guard."

Martin nodded. "Not exactly what I had envisioned when I told him to try and get her to see us for who we were and not for whom she thought we were." He spoke.

"I think she discovered that the night after Thoti claimed her Martin." For'mya said with a knowing smile. "She has been different since then."

Martin looked at his Aunt. "Make sure she is covered 24/7 Tenna. I wouldn't put it past her mother to try a snatch and grab with her fool Militia."

Deia nodded. "Buonau has already demanded through the Galactic Courts to speak with her or have her released." Deia said. "I will let Thoti know and he said he would pass on the information. You are not going to go off and do something totally insane for what Buonau has done are you?"

"No. Anything I do now would only hamper what Anja will try and do as she pulls off Hadaria." He answered. "Though I did consider it very briefly. Let Thoti remain with Duewa for now. She will need his strength to adjust. Keep the little ones at the bunker with Dasha until we are sure this is over."

Aricia nodded. "Already done."

"Melda Min? Bella?" He asked.

"We have not heard from Isabella since she left with Andro, Zarah and the others aboard the SCIMITAR." For'mya answered him. "I spoke with Dysea yesterday morning very briefly. Normya was very upset and the communication was short."

Martin nodded. "That is where Andro will take them." He said softly.

They all looked at him. "Martin... how do you know this?" Deia asked.

"I know my son." Martin stated confidently. "Andro does not think in the here and now Tenna. He thinks as if he is playing Chess or Pysin Squares." He told them referring to the now ancient but still popular Earth game of strategy and the supremely difficult Algolian Tactical Game. Pysin Squares pitted up to six individuals against each other in a test of wits and skill using simulated playing pieces. Andro hadn't lost a game of Pysin Squares in nearly ten years and he had played with his father at least three or four times a month before everything had gone to shit. They both loved the game.

"He is always plotting two or three moves ahead of himself." Martin continued. "If he saw this coming, and he was helping his mother before, then he would have already arranged and spoken with her and Cha'talla to allow him to bring the Coven riders and Dragons there to finish their training."

"I will contact Dysea right away." Aricia said.

"No." Martin spoke quickly. "She has been among Cha'talla and the others all this time and no harm has come to her or Normya. I also know that Normya and Tir'ut have become husband and wife."

Deia's eyes went wide even as Aricia and For'mya gasped in surprise. "Mandri... are you... you can't be serious?"

Martin nodded. "Another little tidbit of information that I picked up while Andro and I were fighting. I think all of us are going to have to learn how to shield much better when our emotions run high."

"You... you don't sound upset or disapproving Beloved." Aricia said moving closer to him.

Martin shook his head as he squeezed her hand and drew her closer, reaching out to pull For'mya close to him as well. He looked at them when he answered. "We agreed not to try and direct our children in what they do." He said. "I trust my daughter to know what she feels and to be intelligent enough to know if a male is trying to yank her chain. If she fell in love with this Tir'ut, then he is undoubtedly a fine young man."

"He is... he is an Immortal!" Deia said.

"He's only half Immortal Tenna." Martin told her looking up. "And do you think Melda Min would have allowed it if she suspected anything was amiss with Cha'talla and his bunch?" Martin shook his head. "No. I trust Normya completely. And if they had any sort of bad ideas towards either of them they would have acted before now."

"We must keep that from the Netnews for the time being." Deia spoke now thinking as a politician once more. "That is not news we need becoming public knowledge just yet."

Martin nodded. "I agree there. Those nubous scavengers have enough to report on."

Aricia and For'mya couldn't help but laugh softly at that remark. To them it was the most definitive sign that their Martin was himself once more. His distaste for anything to do with the Netnews was infamous throughout the Union.

"I will contact Armetus and direct him to reallocate his people." Deia said. "First and foremost we need to find our missing Kavalians and discover why Ambassador Matuarr is keeping that information from us."

"Could they... could they have used the Coven attack to hide the fact they wish to defect as Athani did?" For'mya asked.

"A Senior Kavalian Military Officer and Politician as well as Prefect Keleru's oldest daughter?" Deia asked moving from the chair around to her desk. "Not to mention our nephew Mandri? I find that to be quite the stretch."

"I'm discovering that nothing is a..." Martin began but stopped when Colonel Fache appeared in the doorway holding his finger to his ear.

"Stand by Spartan Seven, I have the King here." He spoke looking directly at Martin. "Milord... General Simpson on Krypteria Secure COM One three."

Martin tapped his jaw instantly. "One Three." He paused and nodded to Fache. "Go Danny." He spoke motioning for the others to do the same.

"Bout time you got your sorry ass back in the game!" Danny's voice boomed in their implants.

"I love you too ya ugly black bastard!" Martin snapped. "What do you want?"

"Marty... I'm with Isra at Durcunusaan Command. Roluth just landed as is chattering away about something being wrong at their home." Danny said.

Martin looked at Aricia and For'mya. "Like what?"

"He is telling Isra all the birds and insects are no longer talking in the mountains." Danny said. "And that they have guests in the house."

"Guests?" Martin asked.

Deia got to her feet behind her desk. "Has Ardis been found Daniel?" She asked quickly.

Martin looked at her. "Ardis?" He asked. "What about Ardis?"

"Your niece Ardis is the only one we have not been able to account for since the Coven attacks." Deia replied. "We have searched her apartment in Sparta, pretty much all of the city. We assumed she made her way to a secure facility but has not reported in yet. Tarifa is waiting at her home in case she appears there."

"Anuk is with her but I can't raise her on the COM Marty." Danny said. "The MV bubble around the base keeps me from contacting her that way as well. And if it was Ardis, Roluth wouldn't be so damn vague!"

Martin paused for a moment. He knew Danny hated to Mindvoice even though he was very proficient at it. If he was considering contacting his spunky red haired elven Anome via Mindvoice he was worried about her. "Dan... how long since you spoke with her last?" Martin asked.

"Nearly thirty-six hours." He answered immediately. "Since right before all this shit started happening! Something stinks brother! It stinks badly!"

"Danny... you grab Isra and a company of Durcunusaan and I'll meet you there!" Martin ordered instantly. "Come in from the west and keep Aelnala and Roluth away from the house."

"What? Why?" Danny demanded.

"If Tarifa sent Roluth for help it was because she was worried for his safety." Martin spoke. "And the only thing that would make her worry for his safety is T19s."

"Shit! Another Coven hit team with dragon killers!" Danny snarled. "We'll be gone in two minutes!"

Martin looked at Deia but Aricia cut him off. "I'm coming with you." She announced.

"I as well." For'mya declared.

Martin shook his head. "No. Kinsoaurgai... we can't all be there. Stay with Deia and find out what you can from the Kavalian Ambassador."

"I... I do not care for their kind Martin Leonidas." For'mya spoke. "They look at me... they look at me as if I am a piece of meat."

Martin moved closer to her and kissed her softly. "But at least you won't kill them if you lose your temper." He stated with a grin.

For mya couldn't help but chuckle and she nodded. "Yes... I see your point. Keep an open COM channel Martin. If there is more Coven in the city I will activate the reserves and send them to you at once."

Martin nodded. "Done." He kissed her firmly once more and then turned for the door. "Aricia... let's go!"

Aricia Leonidas had to practically run to keep up with her mate and King who had considerably longer legs.

THE WILDS

16.6 LY FROM BONTAWILLIAN BORDER

ARIZONA STRIKE GROUP

Miranda couldn't help but smile as she sat in her command chair on the bridge of the ARIZONA and watched as her crew, most of them hand picked, went about their duties with a sense of purpose and ease. The moment Ben had cut them loose; it had taken her only two hours to get the entire Strike Wing out of Dreamland and into open space. Three jumps later they were in The Wilds and had reached their position only an hour ago. Miranda had chosen this position and not the two light years from Kranek that Ben had wanted because it put them in place to respond to several different locations with only two or three LSD Jumps. As with all Union Military warships, their computers and engines allowed them to make longer jumps and be more precise in their calculations, yet the ARIZONA Class ships were exacting in the precision they could execute.

Miranda allowed herself to turn and look over where E'dira sat at her station, her long shimmering white hair pulled into a tight ponytail as she studied the charts from this area and others. She felt a wave of warmth sweep through her looking at the stunning Drow warrior, and Miranda knew she could hardly wait to get E'dira in bed. The tall Drow made her feel things that Miranda had thought she was no longer capable of and Ben's words to her came rushing back now. He was right she knew. This was perhaps the finest crew anywhere in the Union fleet, and they all looked to her for guidance. Steven, Zaala, E'dira, all of them had now wormed their way into her heart no matter how much she tried to hold them back. Ben was right damn him, she had a new family now, and Miranda Lorian was going to make sure that this time she protected them far better than she did the last family. It was almost as if she could feel the smiles and whispers of encouragement from those long dead now. Those she had served with and considered family. They were happy for her. Happy that she had once more rediscovered about herself what everyone else already knew. And they were happy that Miranda had finally allowed herself to love.

Love? Did she love E'dira? If the ache in her body to feel the Drow's touch upon her; to truly want to taste her ebony skin and explore every contour of her taut body; to explore what made her the woman she was; if these things were any indication... then yes, Miranda Lorian was in love. Madly in love. She wondered briefly what it was that E'dira had wanted to tell her before they were interrupted, though Miranda knew that no matter what it was it wouldn't matter or change how she felt. She...

Miranda saw E'dira's head come up suddenly as her consoles began to chime softly. Her amber colored eyes were moving over her triangular shaped control systems as she reached for her consoles. As Chief Tactical Officer, E'dira had absolute control over the ARIZONA's vast weapons array, and as Miranda watched with nothing short of awe E'dira, gracefully took everything in with practiced ease.

"Something E'dira?" Miranda finally asked softly from her chair.

"Aft Lateral Sensors have detected a massive Hyper Matter Fusion spike one point three light years behind us." E'dira answered instantly. "Trying to localize it."

Miranda slid from her chair gracefully and covered the four-meter distance between them in a dozen steps. The CTO officer's stations was closest to hers and slightly in front and to the right to better facilitate communication between the captain and his weapons officer. Three months ago she wouldn't have been so informal, but now she stepped close to E'dira and found she wasn't ashamed of the fact that in essence she belonged to this woman already.

"Cause?" Miranda asked.

E'dira shook her head. "If I had to guess... I'd say a ship." She stated. "But nothing is showing up on the sensors."

Miranda turned to the main sensor operator across the bridge. "Position of that Kavalian fleet?" She barked.

"Maintaining base course Captain." The sensor operator responded. "All one hundred and twenty-three contacts."

Miranda turned back to E'dira. "So it's not one of them trying to sneak around." She said looking at E'dira.

"Not unless they have developed Shrouds and we did not know this. Running a Hyper Matter Fusion Recognition scan." E'dira said as her hands adjusted her consoles.

"You think it's a Union ship E'dira?" Miranda asked.

E'dira nodded. "The spike was too small to be a large ship, but large enough to register on our sensors."

"Well... you do have them tuned a lot tighter than normal." Miranda said. "I doubt the HORNET picked it up."

E'dira smiled almost shyly. "Yes... I suppose I do." She answered softly. "If it was an AUTUMN MOON the spike would have been larger. No... this is something smaller and the only ones with ships smaller than an AUTUMN MOON equipped with Shrouds are us and the Coven."

Miranda nodded. "And the only way that we wouldn't see the ship was if it was running Shrouded." She stated.

E'dira nodded. "Yes."

The panel to her left beeped and they turned to look at the results.

-HYPER MATTER FUSION RECOGNITION SCANS COMPLETE. MATCH FOUND-
-WARNING! LEVEL TEN COMMAND CODE CLEARANCE REQUIRED-
-ENTER COMMAND CODE AUTHORIZATION-

E'dira looked at Miranda who had moved even closer to her when she saw the small screen. "Level Ten?" She asked in surprise. "Level Ten is reserved for senior military officers and members of the Royal Family."

Miranda nodded. "Yes it is." She spoke leaning forward. "Enter Arizona one nine four one."

E'dira's amber eyes grew a little wider but she complied and typed in the code Miranda had given her. "A l'phraktos." She gasped at what came next. (By the gods)

-COMMAND CODE ACCEPTED-
-LORIAN, MIRANDA J. CAPTAIN ULU ARIZONA-

-INQUIRY MATCH FOUND-
-HYPER MATTER FUSION RECOGNITION SCAN INDICATES INQUIRY IS SPARTAN 11-
-STRIKER DRAGON TRANSPORT ASSIGNED TO LEONIDAS, ANDROCLES, CROWN
-PRINCE OF LYCAVORIAN UNION-

E'dira looked at Miranda then. "The Prince's STRIKER?" She asked. "I thought..."

Miranda nodded. "Yes... so did I." She stated moving even closer. "Can you extrapolate their heading?"

E'dira turned back to her console. "Now that we have confirmed the Hyper Matter Fusion signature yes." Her long fingered hands bounced deftly across all three of her consoles as she pulled up the information. "Their course would take them to... to Iraruzu." She answered turning to look at Miranda.

"Iraruzu?" She questioned E'dira. "That's nothing more than a haven for the scum of The Wilds." Miranda spoke. "Why would they be going there?" She turned away her mind working. "There's no indication that the rest of the SCIMITAR's Strike Wing is with them?"

E'dira shook her head. "If they were, why would we pick up the just the STRIKER's HFM and not the rest of them? And if my knowledge of LSD coils is accurate, in order to leave this sort of signature, they would have to burn out their coils. It would leave the LSD Drive totally depleted upon completion of the Jump. Zaala can confirm that for us, but I'm almost positive that is the case. This was no normal Jump they just executed."

"We should..." Miranda began but was interrupted by her sensor officer.

“Captain Lorian! That Kavalian Fleet has just shifted course and increased their speed!” The operator announced.

“Shifted to what?” Miranda barked.

“Their base course and speed now will take them directly to Kranek Captain!” The sensor officer answered turning to look at her. “They’ll arrive in seven hours and thirty-two minutes. They are burning away at full sublight speed Captain!”

Miranda stepped away from E'dira and looked at her chair. “Oh... I don't like that.” She stated softly. She turned back to E'dira. “Do we have anything on Iraruzu E'dira?” She asked.

E'dira shook her head. “Aside from the Drow outpost there no.” She replied.

“Shit!” Miranda swore. “We can't be a Guardian Angel if the one we are suppose to be guarding goes off on a joy ride!”

“Miranda...” E'dira asked softly. “Admiral O'Connor said we are to be on the watch for High Coven ships.” She said. “He said nothing about Kavalian.”

“Yes I know.” Miranda answered. “I just don't trust them anymore than I do the Coven.” She looked across the bridge. “Chief... I want a constant lock on those Kavalian ships. If one so much as farts in the wind I want to know about it!”

“Understood Captain!”

“And direct the Port Ventral Sensor Array on Kranek.” Miranda said. “Is there anything showing?”

“Negative Captain!”

Miranda nodded. “Which means NORMYA'S LIGHT is shrouded. Good.” Miranda stated. “Estimate on when the SCIMITAR and her Wing will arrive?”

“If our Intel is accurate Captain... and we don't know if it is... roughly five and a half hours. We don't know for sure since we don't know if they took a direct heading.” The sensor chief answered.

Miranda shook her head slowly. “Androcles wouldn't take a direct course... he would be on Kranek by now if he had.” She said to no one in particular. She noticed that several heads on the bridge turned and looked at her. Many of them knew her history and record, and part of that history and record was her closeness to the Crown Prince of the Union and his brother Resumar and sister Eliani. They had grown up together for almost half a year, Miranda learning and even training under Martin Leonidas himself. It was another reason why she was so well respected and thought of by many people. “He also would not want to interrupt the training of the High Coven riders and dragons for too long.”

Miranda was silent for a long moment as she ran several scenarios over and over in her head. E'dira simply watched her from her chair and could only admire this woman more. That Miranda was hers was not something E'dira questioned anymore. The petite Asian female had already made that very clear to E'dira in her quarters when they shared a sizzling kiss and Miranda allowed her to be the dominant one. Lynwe had been right E'dira thought to herself as she remembered their conversation from several years ago.

“You will know by how she is in your arms E'dira.” Lynwe had told her. “A woman who questions her role or does not truly want to enter into a relationship with a Drow will not surrender all she is to you. There are many who simply seek to say they have bedded a Drow. Now... the woman who melts in your arms, who allows you to be whom we as Drow are in our heart of hearts, they are the ones who will enter into a union with us without question. And they will cherish that Union almost as much, if not more than we do E'dira.”

“There are not many of those women out there Lynwe.”

Lynwe nodded her head. “No there are not. They must be confident and strong within their own hearts to be able to love us as we would love them. Selene is that way, Tarifa and Anuk. There are others... but they come to mind first. They love without question or pause because they are strong of mind and heart already and have no issues with their individuality.”

“Do you think I will find such a woman?” E'dira asked.

“If you truly give of yourself as Selene taught me... yes.” Lynwe had answered. “They will know E'dira. They will know when they look into your eyes. Then you will have what you seek.”

Miranda Lorian made her very first serious decision as Captain of the ULU ARIZONA then, and it would be written many years later as the decision that defined her future within the Lycavorian Union.

“E'dira... contact Commander Velnar. I want the HARBINGER on its way to Iraruzu in ten minutes.”

“We don't know if that is where the Prince is going Miranda.” E'dira said softly.

Miranda met her amber orbs with nothing but love in them. “That's where he is going.” Miranda said. “That's what my gut tells me E'dira.” E'dira didn't blink and turned to follow her orders as Miranda turned back to the front of her bridge. “Helm, signal the HORNET and the rest of the Wing. I want to be ready to Jump at the first sign of anything out of the ordinary!”

SCIMITAR

Lucia Moran stood looking at the rows of pictures that Zarah had along the shelves on her wall. Zarah's quarters were spacious, much larger than she thought, until she realized that Zarah and Normya usually shared quarters. The last week had been one she would have preferred not to have lived through at all, but the only saving grace if one could call it that was that she had finally found what her heart had desired for so long. Lucia Moran had been driven by only one thing for the last ten years of her life and she turned as that purpose walked slowly out of the large bathroom.

Zarah Leonidas wore the standard Fleet uniform of dark gray jumpsuit and black t-shirt just as Lucia did. In Lucia's eyes however, she filled out her uniform much better. Her dark brown hair hung well below her shoulders but pulled into a long ponytail that was draped over one shoulder. Her dark eyes met Lucia's immediately and Lucia saw her face brighten just a bit. Lucia had first awoken in the Med Bay with Zarah curled into her arms and pressed very close to her own body. Lucia remained awake long enough to wrap her arms tighter around Zarah and cry softly for several minutes until sleep claimed her again. The relief that Zarah was alive and recovering was too much for her, not to mention that the aftereffects of Blood Fever was still purging from her system. She had not known that Zarah once had Blood Fever and that Andro had been the one to save her. She had not known this until Zarah nearly drained her blood from her body to heal, stopping only when she felt Lucia's life begin to ebb from her. She clearly remembered Zarah stroking her face, begging her not to leave and then she awoke in the Med Bay. They had not been apart for more than a few minutes since she had awoken fully.

Zarah had taken so much of her blood that a unique bond had formed between them. She knew it was very similar to what Zarah's Aunt Tarifa shared with the Drow Aihola, just far more powerful. They now knew everything there was to know about each other, their minds so closely intertwined that it would be impossible to tell them apart. This connection was only augmented by Lucia's own bond with Seyra, and the three of them had spent the last two and a half days exploring the limits of that new bond. Zarah was growing stronger by the day, regaining her life as each moment passed. She refused to have Lucia sleep in other quarters, and the last two nights they had slept in each others arms and simply talked of their lives and what had brought them together. Lucia avoided any conversation about her brothers, not only for Zarah's sake, but because her own hatred and anger at them and her mother was still fresh in her mind. What they had done to her beautiful Zarah she would never forgive or forget, and given the opportunity, she would kill either of them in a blink if ever she saw them again. If she was feeling extra cruel that day, she would turn them over to Androcles Leonidas, for she had seen the death his mind prepared for Dante or her mother should they ever cross paths and it made her shudder in horror. Zarah had a unique and special relationship with Androcles, and now Lucia shared in that relationship by default.

They had spent many hours here in Zarah's quarters, with her sisters and her mother. Lucia had thought they would try to baby Zarah, protect her and make her feel surrounded and pressed down upon. She should have known better. This family did not compete with one another, they did not try to outdo each other, and they were not false in their sincerity. They loved their sister without question or thought and they allowed Zarah to progress at her own pace, and given the strength of Zarah's will and determination, that was what she needed most of all. Lucia did notice that Zarah flinched ever so slightly when embraced by her brothers, but it was a reaction that quickly passed as the scent of her brothers filled her senses and she knew she was safe. Lucia thought it would be like that with her, but she was the only one that Zarah melted against and touched without hesitation. Lucia had never been with a man or a woman in her life, yet she desired Zarah Leonidas more than anything she had ever desired. She was also intelligent enough to know that now was not the time. She had waited this long, and Lucia Moran would wait for eternity if need be to discover Zarah in that way.

Lucia turned fully as Zarah stepped up to her. "Ok." She said softly. "I'm ready."

"We... we do not have to do this Zarah." Lucia spoke. "We can eat here in your quarters again."

Zarah shook her head. "No. I can't hide anymore. I can't be frightened anymore Lucia. If I stay here I will never..."

Lucia stepped closer to her and put a slim finger to her lips silencing her words. "You do not need to explain anything to me Zarah Leonidas my love." She whispered gently. "Never to me."

Zarah met her beautiful eyes and smiled softly. No matter the horrors that had happened; no matter the perversions she had been forced to endure at the hands of Lucia's brothers; Zarah could feel nothing but an overwhelming love for Lucia. She was as desirable a woman as any Zarah had seen, and the experiences of her young life had allowed her to grow up and not think of such a relationship as wrong. Her mothers were the most beautiful women in the universe as far as Zarah was concerned, and they shared each other willingly and eagerly. They were the most beautiful at least until she gazed at Lucia. Her angular Asian features were soft, graceful and utterly flawless and very unlike her mother's sharper contours, and Lucia's dark brown eyes gazed at her with unabashed adoration.

"Lucia... I... I don't know if..." Zarah began.

Lucia shook her head slowly. "No... do not say that." She said quietly. "I have spent the last decade hoping and waiting that I would one day be together with you. At times I did not understand it myself, especially when I was younger. It is not easy to understand now. Why it happened this way? I will forever bear the shame and knowledge of what my brothers did to you and because I love you as I do, I can not..."

Zarah was the one to move this time and she stepped right up to Lucia and covered her lips with her own. Lucia Moran was not her brothers. Lucia had saved her at incredible risk of her own life and did so without hesitation. If not for Lucia as her anchor these last three days Zarah was quite sure she would have been unable to cope with what happened. Knowing that Lucia still desired her, still saw her as beautiful, that is what saved Zarah. These were the things she had seen in Lucia's mind, things that she did not hide from her. And Zarah could not deny the overpowering attraction to Lucia now that she knew who she was. She had felt the tremors for months against her Mindvoice shields and only thought it was a man. Had she known it was Lucia, Zarah would have pursued her just as voraciously as any wolf pursued their prey. It was different now... Lucia's brothers had taken away Zarah's innocence... but Zarah's feelings for Lucia were not affected by that. In order to go on with her life Zarah knew she needed to overcome what she had endured. She also knew the first and most important step on that road was the woman in front of her.

Lucia whimpered softly when she felt Zarah's lips and instinctively her arms pulled Zarah tight against her body, their breasts crushing together and Zarah molding her body to Lucia's. Their tongues stabbed forth, tentatively at first as they explored new sensations and emotions and then Zarah's arms wrapped around her waist and pulled her even tighter. Their kiss deepened with Zarah surprisingly taking a more aggressive approach because of her wolf blood. It was an approach that Lucia welcomed as they melted together in the midst of the blistering kiss. Their kiss lasted for what seemed like a glorious eternity to Lucia, but then slowly they drew apart, the tips of their tongues still dancing with each other even as their soft lips finally parted. Lucia stared at her, her wolf eyes and fangs fully changed and extended. She felt giddy when she saw Lucia's cobalt blue vampire eyes open slowly and her own slimmer vampiric fangs poking from under her top lip.

Zarah took a deep breath, her mind rejoicing that her body could still feel what it was feeling even after what had happened to her. She shook her head even as she gripped Lucia tighter. "You will bear no shame for what happened Lucia ussta sanguine qu'essan." She said seeing Lucia's cobalt eyes glitter in delight at her words. "Dos dormagyn uns'aa. I don't... I don't know how long it will be before I..." Zarah shook her head again. "No. We are together now. I... I love you! I want... I want to go forward with you in my life! I need you in my life now. You are my life! As long as I have you... as long as you are with me I can get through this." (My vampire princess)(You saved me)

Lucia couldn't help the tears that rolled down her cheeks. "I will never leave you Zarah." She said. "Not after all we have been through to get to this point."

Zarah met her eyes and smiled. She reached up and brushed away the tears on her cheeks. "Then let's start right now. I'm hungry... and I can't hide from the world in my quarters for the rest of my life."

Lucia took a deep breath and nodded. "Your mother and sisters are waiting for us."

IRARUZU

Walter reverently lowered the last of the bodies on the ground and stood back up looking at the Dragoon Hval. He was an older Dragoon Walter knew, roughly two hundred years old and he had fought in the Battle for Earth. Walter also knew he was deeply involved with a Drow female on Earth and seeing so many massacred Drow was making him extremely angry, unlike his younger counterpart. The Drow females were especially hard to look at for they had been brutally raped and beaten and that was obvious. Walter knew how Hval felt, for while he considered the elves on Earth his creation, which they were, he felt closer to the Drow for he had made them more like the Spartan people.

"You must hold in that anger Hval." Walter spoke softly. "At least for now."

Hval looked up from the row of bodies. "I have seen battle Senior Polemarch. I have taken life and seen life taken. This mindless brutality is beyond me. They..."

Walter moved closer to him. "They will pay Hval." Walter spoke. "We will stand beside our Prince when he arrives and we will make them pay."

Hval met his eyes. "Will he come sir?" He asked.

Walter nodded slowly. "Ceneia was able to confirm that the transmission was received by the SCIMITAR. He will come Hval."

Hval turned and looked over to where Lu'ria sat with her mother, Majeir and Ceneia. "He will come for her won't he?"

Walter nodded. "And when he arrives and he sees what has happen here his retribution will be swift. He is a Leonidas Hval. They don't believe in doing things halfway."

Hval looked at him again. "I have never met any of the Royal family Senior Polemarch. Is he... is he much like the King?"

Walter chuckled softly. "In many ways... yes he is." He answered. "In many ways he is also much harsher than his father."

"He loves a Drow Senior Polemarch... as do I." Hval spoke. "I will take my vengeance for this act beside him. I will not allow this act against Re'sora's people go unanswered."

Walter nodded. "As will we all." He said.

"Why did we come here?" Hval asked. "The Kavalians already destroyed it once."

Walter shook his head. "They executed the Drow but they left the defenses active. It was an arrogant move on their part. We could not remain in the city for there are too many there who do not care for citizens of the Union to begin with." He answered. "Lu'ria went back into the tunnels and activated the emergency power grid. We have ground sensors and turrets."

"Will it hold against over a hundred men?" Hval asked.

"We'll have to make it hold." Walter answered. "At least until Andro arrives."

Hval nodded and bent over to pick up his P190A3. "Then I will insure we are ready when they come."

Walter nodded as he watched Hval march toward the now empty building of the Drow estate. Neither Lu'ria nor Daba wanted to go inside the building and see the horrors again. He turned and began walking towards them smiling for the first time in days as he saw Majeir lower her snout and brush it against Lu'ria's shoulder again. He had to admit, seeing the massive form of Majeir sitting casually on the ground behind the much smaller elf was somewhat humorous, but he could feel the happiness pouring from Majeir at what she had discovered with Lu'ria. As he moved closer he could hear Daba explaining why they had left Earth.

"...did not want to believe what you were telling me Lu'ria." Daba spoke softly. "I didn't believe it until the Holy One brought Majeir to Eden City and she touched my thoughts. She told me she was to be yours. Part of me still can't believe it."

"So you believe me?" Lu'ria asked. "About everything?"

Daba met her daughter's gaze. "I see Majeir here beside you. I have seen you fly on her. The psychic shield you both project. How could I not believe?"

"What about..." Lu'ria began.

"What has happened so far stretched my ability to be open Lu'ria." Daba spoke. "All we know is that Ceneia was able to confirm the Prince's ship received the message. He has many responsibilities and even if what you say is true, I find it incomprehensible that he would abandon his duties to come here."

"You must have faith mother." Lu'ria spoke confidently.

Daba shook her head. "I have faith child... it is just so... it is so difficult to believe that the Yara Parma could actually have predicted such a thing."

"Mother... you are the one that schooled me to believe the Yara Parma to be the basis for our people and our beliefs." Lu'ria said. "Our very beginnings. They predicted the return of King Leonidas... they predicted that Queen Aihola would come to power! Why is it so hard for you to believe them now?"

Daba looked at her. "You have not read the entire Yara Parma as I have Lu'ria."

Lu'ria looked at her. "What do you mean?" She asked. "You made me read all twenty-three books when I was growing up."

Daba looked at Walter and he shrugged as he squatted to the side. "She will discover it sooner or later." He spoke.

Lu'ria's amber eyes went from her mother to Walter and then back. "Discover what?" She asked heatedly. "I am meant for this mother! Majeir is proof of that! I am meant for Andro and Sadi. For Carisia and Ne'Veha! You will not convince me otherwise."

Walter looked at her surprised. "You know their names Lu'ria?" He asked. "How is that possible? Their names were only just released a few days ago. No official... no official announcement has been made with everything that has happened on Earth. Deia only mentioned them fleetingly when she reported Andro had left the system and who was with him."

Lu'ria nodded. "I know their names! I know what they look like. I know their likes and dislikes. And they know mine. I can feel them here..." She placed her hand over her heart. "And I feel them in my thoughts and dreams. I have felt them in my thoughts and dreams for the last three months. Probably before that... but I just did not know what it was."

Daba looked at her daughter. "Lu'ria there is a twenty-fourth book of the Yara Parma." She said.

Lu'ria looked at her mother. "I don't care if there is a hundred and twenty-four mother. You will not convince me what I feel is wrong."

Daba shook her head. "No my daughter." She said with a sigh. "Only the senior Elders of the Families have access to the twenty-fourth book. It is not distributed openly as the others are."

Lu'ria's eyes narrowed "Why?"

"It is a list of foretelling." Daba answered. "Prophecies and the like. Many of them have come true as you say... but there are many that have been written about that have not yet come true. If they will at all. Many of them are not pleasant."

Lu'ria cocked her head to the side. "Such as?"

"They don't matter right now." Daba said.

"Why not?"

"Book Twenty-Four of the Yara Parma... the last prophecy in Book Twenty-Four was one of the first that was even written after the Sky Fire." Daba said. "It reads... The firstborn of many, the son of knif'rt kal'daka eyes and virile manhood. He will have the heart of amber and wrap his hands in white satin. Yvalm xuil to'ryll euol, uuthli ujoool Lu' charnag d 'olath solen, whol jal draeval orn nind ssinsrigg."

Lu'ria's amber eyes grew a little wider. "It... mother it says that?" She gasped in shock and wonderment.

Daba nodded. "Yes. It... it also says that one day ... that one day you will be Queen of the Drow."

Lu'ria's amber eyes grew even wider and she came to her feet. "What?" She stammered.

Daba nodded her head as she too got to her feet and looked at her daughter. "Lu'ria we need to..."

All of them saw Walter's head snap around and look towards the mountains to the west. Ceneia took note instantly that the wind was coming from the west. "Walter?" She asked softly as she stood up.

Walter's hand dropped to his Nehtes. "Everyone inside." He said. "Everyone inside now. They are coming."

SPARTA

"Tarifa!" Isra's strong voice echoed as he burst through the front door of his home the P190A3 leading him.

"Anuk baby!" Danny barked sweeping the K12 in front of him like a guided missile launcher.

Behind Danny and Isra came twelve fully armed Durcunusaan soldiers even as the sounds of windows shattering from upstairs echoed in the corridor.

"Isra!" Tarifa's voice shouted as she came sprinting around the corner from their large main room, Anuk right behind her. "Isra... we are safe!" She barked out.

Isra didn't question her for he could smell no fear or indecision on her. He tapped his jaw. "All teams take up defensive positions! We are secure down here!"

Anuk smiled as Danny's arms swallowed her up and he lowered his head to firmly nuzzle her elven ears. "Bout time you showed up!" Anuk quipped as she shivered in bliss at his touch.

Isra was doing the same with Tarifa, who had an equally blissful look on her face as Isra inhaled deeply of her peach scent. "You sent Roluth!" Isra stated. "We thought something was wrong! Daniel hadn't heard from Anuk in over thirty hours and you would not reply to my Mindvoice calls."

Tarifa nodded. "I know. Our young ones?" She asked quickly.

Isra nodded. "They are at the bunker as directed." He replied. "Tarifa... why did Roluth say you have guests? What is going on? Where is Ardis? She has not checked in since the High Coven attacks."

Tarifa clung to his hand and arm and pulled him toward the doorway as his 190 dropped onto its quick release straps. "Ardis is here and safe. Come." She said glancing back at the Durcunusaan soldiers. "Put your weapons away! There are no enemies here!"

The Durcunusaan had learned long ago that when the Lieutenant Governor of their city gave an order she expected it to be followed. It was one of the reasons that the King considered her his most treasured sister even though they were not related in any way. The twelve Durcunusaan troops obeyed without question for they too could smell no fear or indecision in the room.

"Baby... what is going on?" Danny asked holding Anuk to him tightly.

Anuk squirmed from his grasp but continued to hold his hand. "Well... if you will let go of me I will show you. We will show you."

Danny looked at Isra. "Are you as confused as me?"

Isra nodded. "More." He answered.

Tarifa and Anuk pulled them towards the opening of the main room and just into it. Both Danny and Isra came up short when they saw six more Durcunusaan troops with their weapons leveled at three Kavalians, Ardis and Karun, all of whom were holding weapons but not pointing at anyone. Tarifa saw this and broke away from Isra.

"Put your weapons away!" She demanded once more. "These people are not our enemies nor are they a threat!"

"Tarifa!" Isra hissed. "What is going on?"

Tarifa turned back to look at him but stopped when she heard the voice. "Yes sister... please tell us what is going on?"

Tarifa whirled around and saw Martin standing just behind Karun with his K12 pressed against the back of his head. Jalersi and Pian turned as well, stunned that they did not detect him, or the fact that Aricia stood just to his right with her 190 leveled at them. Jalersi gasped even louder when she saw where his gun was aimed.

"No!" She spoke softly.

"Do not move!" Aricia growled from behind the sights of the 190. "I do not wish to shoot you but I will not hesitate in the least."

"Martin!" Tarifa barked as she stepped towards him. Her daughter beat her to the punch.

Ardis acted as any female wolf would act when she had found the man who she knew was the perfect mate for her, not only physically but emotionally as well. She stepped around from where she stood in front of Karun until she was facing her uncle, her eyes changed and her wolf fangs extended. She reached up slowly, never breaking eye contact with the yellow/gold wolf eyes of the uncle who had bounced her on his knee as a baby. Her hand came to rest on the barrel of the K12.

“Uncle Martin... you would not deprive me of the man who is my mate and husband would you?” She asked calmly.

Martin’s changed wolf eyes cut to his niece quickly but the K12 did not move. “Ardis?” He asked softly.

“Karun is not your brother Uncle Martin. He is nothing like his father and all you need do is give him the chance to prove that.” Ardis spoke. “You have always trusted me Uncle Martin. Trust me now. I am my parent’s daughter Uncle Martin... you and they have taught me well... would I allow Karun to claim me if there was even a hint he was like his father?”

Martin’s K12 withdrew instantly at her words. “No.” He stated flatly.

Martin stepped close to Karun then, leaning over slightly as Ardis lowered her weapon. He could smell Ardis’s sweet scent all over Karun, deeply imbedded in his blood. He also smelled something that he hadn’t when Karun had first come to Earth. He detected the dormant wolf blood within Karun’s veins now pulsing strongly and it was filled with Ardis’s essence. He turned and looked at his niece. “You showed him?” He asked.

Ardis nodded as she reached up and placed her hand on Martin’s arm. “I did Uncle. Just as you did for me.”

Martin turned back to look at Karun who met his eyes unflinching. “Show me.” He said.

Martin couldn’t help but smile as he saw Karun’s eyes change instantly and his dual wolf fangs extended from beneath his lips. Apparently the dual fangs unique to the Leonidas blood still were dominant even with a Kavalian mother. “I guess we learn something new every day.” Martin said softly. “Your father didn’t teach you that boy.”

“My... my father taught me only how to hate.” Karun hissed. “He was too busy bedding other women and making grasps for power to be concerned with me. My brothers... my younger brothers are lost... but I... I found myself when I came here.” Karun blinked several times. “I... I wish to learn about... I wish to learn about my history Uncle.”

Martin holstered his K12 then and looked at Karun. His eyes returned to normal and his dual fangs disappeared and he stared at Karun for a long moment. He could see so much of his hated brother in Karun, but he could also see far more of his beautiful Kavalian mother. As he usually did, Martin Leonidas went with his gut instinct. He stepped forward and pulled Karun into a rib cracking bear hug and Jalersi felt tears come to her eyes when she saw her son hesitate and then return the embrace, his fingers pulling tightly on Martin’s shirt. She heard Martin pound Karun on his back and then push him away to arm’s length. He brought his hand up and grasped Karun’s neck and looked at him intently.

“Welcome nephew.” Martin said with a smile. “Welcome... Karun Leonidas.”

Karun held back the tears he wanted to let flow from his eyes as he stared at the man who his father had cursed and harangued ever since Karun could remember. A man that was unlike anything his own father had taught him, and a man who had just welcomed him into a family that was his blood. Karun gripped his uncle’s arms tightly.

“Blood before all else Uncle!” He croaked out the words. “Blood before all else!”

Martin nodded his head with a smile. “I see my niece has taught you well.” He said.

Karun shook his head. “Ardis has taught me many things Uncle... but grandmother taught me that.”

Martin’s eyes went a little wider and he nodded his head. “Good.” He said. “Good.” He released Karun’s neck and turned around, reaching for Ardis who stepped close to him. His eyes fell upon Pian and Jalersi standing very near to one another and Jiss who stood alone but in close proximity to them. His eyes finally went to where Tarifa stood. “Sister... perhaps you could tell us just exactly what is going on here.” He stated.

Tarifa crossed her arms over her ample chest and looked at him sternly. “I would have if you had given me the chance!” She snapped. “No... you have to come busting into my home, the Durcunusaan breaking how many windows in the process? Are you going to replace them Martin?”

“Tarifa... Roluth was very insistent that something was wrong.” Isra spoke up now.

Tarifa nodded turning to look at her husband and alpha mate. “And we thought it was until just before you and my thick headed adopted brother made your grand entrance!” She turned back to find Martin standing directly in front of her. She blinked several times and then slugged him in the arm. “You big oaf!”

Martin chuckled and leaned forward to kiss her cheek in a brotherly fashion. “Now that you have that out of the way... could you tell us why there are three Kavalians in your home who are being listed as dead by the Kavalian ambassador?”

“Dead?” Jalersi asked.

Martin turned to look at her and nodded his head. “Killed in the High Coven attack on your embassy. Or so they told us.”

“They were not killed!” Tarifa hissed. “They came here with Ardis and Karun because they are trying to stop a war! When they were seen trying to escape their own people tried to kill them. This is the only place Ardis could think to bring them where they would be safe for a time.”

“A war?” Martin asked. “What are you talking about Tarifa?”

Tarifa looked at him oddly. “Deia did not tell you?” She asked.

“Tell me what?” Martin asked as he turned back to look at Tarifa. “She told me nothing!”

“I gave the information to Laustinos at least ten hours ago. Perhaps more. He said he would make sure it got to Deia.” Tarifa spoke.

Aricia stepped forward. “Tarifa... we came here from Deia’s office. One of us has been there for the last two and a half days. She told us nothing about you. Only that Ardis was still missing. Then Daniel called.”

“What information?” Martin asked turning to look at Jalersi and Pian.

“King Leonidas we are not part of this!” Jiss began. “We...”

Martin pointed at him. “Ambassador I fucking hate politicians! You are a politician! Now shut up!” He snapped turning back to Jalersi and Pian. “What is going on? Retaliation for your sister defecting and marrying my son? I won’t change my mind about that... Athani is my son’s wife as far as I am concerned. I will not...”

Jalersi stepped closer to him. “She is... she is doing well?” She asked hopefully.

Martin nodded. “Very well.” He replied. “And she’s very happy.”

“Can I see her?” Jalersi asked quickly.

Pian came up behind her and gently took her arm pulling her close to him, something that did not go unnoticed by Martin who looked at Pian with questions in his eyes. “Jalersi has seen who Pusintin is and renounced him.” Pian spoke. “I have taken her as my wife. Something I have wanted to do for twenty years.”

Martin grinned. “Bet that didn’t go over well with my dear brother I take it. Is that what this is all about?” He said.

“He doesn’t know yet.” Pian said. “Well... he may have an idea now.”

“This was a mutual thing I take it?” Martin asked.

Jalersi nodded. “Very much so.” She replied before Pian could. “I was blind to what Pusintin really was. I believed he would change things and all he did was embrace the old ways of my people. Nothing was going to change. Pian made me see that just as much as his own actions!”

“My Pride inhabits the fringes of Kavalian space. We do not adhere to the many more violent traditions of our people concerning our females. To my Pride our woman are to be treasured and respected for they will bear our future. It is not something that we have allowed to become public knowledge since it would not go over well.”

“Yeah... no shit.” Danny spoke. “It’s damn impressive you’ve lasted this long.”

“So tell me why your own people are trying to kill you? Is my brother that vindictive as to come after you for that and start a war with me to achieve that?” Martin asked.

Pian shook his head. “They are not trying to kill us for that. They will kill us for what we know.” He answered.

Martin felt tightness grip his abdomen. “Ok... I’m listening.” He said.

“They are trying to kill us because we know, at least some of the details anyway, we know of a plot by Prefect Keleru and Marshall Pusintin to target and kill as many of your family as possible. Including you King Leonidas. You and at least some of your Queens.” Pian spoke as calmly as he could. “We gave this information to Tarifa when we came here and she passed it along.”

Martin's wide eyes cut to Tarifa. "Laustinos?" He asked.

Tarifa nodded. "I could get no one else on the COM and the MV dampeners are active all over the city. It renders Mindvoicing impossible except for you and Androcles and a few others, you know this!"

"Why didn't you try me?" Martin snapped.

"I did!" Tarifa barked back. "Your shielding was too high you fool! I could get no one! I sent Roluth away because he said the insects and birds in the mountains had gone quiet and I suspected an attack. One did not come and now you are here. I overreacted!"

"Oh... fuck me to tears! No you didn't!" Danny snarled as he looked at Martin. "We fell hard for this one brother!"

Martin Leonidas hadn't survived countless battles by being dense. He knew a trap when he sensed one... and they had just walked into a very well set trap, one that could get them all killed. He looked up as Fache rushed in from the corridor to the front door.

"Milord!" Fache snapped. "I can not raise the two teams we left on the perimeter of the property!"

"Nubou!" Danny snarled.

"Fuck is right!" Martin barked. "We just walked into a trap and you were the bait!"

"What?" Pian gasped as he pulled Jalersi closer to him.

"Pian... the Puma Bane Teams!" Jalersi hissed.

"The what?" Danny barked as he un-slung his 190.

"They are... they are like..." Pian was struggling to explain them when Karun stepped in.

"They are Shock Troops Uncle." He spat. "The very best that my father and grandfather employ. They receive the finest training and weapons and they are renown for their cruelty. They take no prisoners and they rarely ever fail. That is what they sent into The Wilds after your Drow bases."

Martin's eyes grew wide. "The Drow?" He gasped.

"Their intent was to cripple your intelligence networks within The Wilds so they could move at will." Pian spoke. "It is why we... it is why we came to Tarifa. The Prefect and Pusintin will plunge our people into a war we can not win with their actions!"

"What actions?" Aricia almost screamed.

"Not only are they targeting your Drow outposts, but they are targeting every member of your family in a scheme to somehow get Pusintin restored as King of Sparta and by default King of the Union!" Pian exclaimed.

Martin opened his mouth to bark an angry question but his wolf ears detected the soft popping noise far off in the distance exactly the same time as Danny, Isra and Fache.

"INCOMING!" Danny and Martin screamed at the same time as they yanked on Anuk and Aricia respectively while throwing themselves onto the floor. Pian and Karun had been under fire enough times to know what that word meant and they were moving half a second after it left two sets of lips.

Jiss stood in the center of the room stunned at what was happening and completely exposed. He saw a flash of a body in front of him before a blinding explosion outside the glass window erupted and the concussive force of the first plasma mortar landing outside the wall of the home only ten meters away first buckled and then ruptured the wall sending glass, steel and concrete blistering across the room at nearly the speed of light. Jiss felt a massive pain in his side and then blackness claimed him into its embrace.

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

RITAAH

The door to the bridge of the Kavalian Science Frigate opened and the captain of the ship turned in his chair. They had detected the spike of a massive explosion on the surface of this normally uninhabited world and after sending off an inquiry to KFI Headquarters he decided to come and investigate. With the knowledge that KFI was sending reinforcements, the captain set course for the planet. Upon establishing a routine orbit they detected several abnormal readings from the surface and he made the decision to land their atmospheric Frigate on the surface to investigate. Though he was not a scientist, most of the crew was and the senior scientist was adamant about being able to get up close to the source of their anomalous readings. The Captain relented and brought his ship onto the surface. What could go wrong? They were deep within Kavalian space and Ritaah was an uninhabited world.

It would be the last command decision of his life and the most enlightening unfortunately for him.

The Kavalian Captain's yellow eyes grew wide in surprise as the bridge doors slid aside to reveal not members of his own crew, but a huge pureblood vampire, several Lycavorians and half a dozen Kavalian clone troops. All of them with weapons out and leading them into the room like any well trained soldiers. It flashed through his mind that he had never seen Spartan troops up close before and they looked just as ferocious as any Kavalian clone troops he had ever seen. The last thing that processed through his brain was that they moved as a single unit, as if they had trained together for decades. He saw the huge vampire raise his arm, the large and deadly Union K12 hand blaster in his grip and he saw and heard the flash of light just before the Kinetic round entered above his wide open left eye and blew his brains and bone matter all over the back of his chair and over the shoulders of the young male scientist standing by the sensor station.

Vonis watched with keen eyes as his combined strike team swept across the small bridge barking orders to the crew of the frigate and shoving them to the deck. He lowered the smoking weapon and smiled a warrior's smile. They had entered the same way the Science Team had exited the ship, thirty-seven hand picked Lycavorian and Kavalian troops. As the members of the Kavalian crew looked on in shock, they watched as the lone Lycavorian and Kavalian clone soldier stepped up to Vonis. The Senior Spartan NONCOM knew what Colonel Vonis was capable of and he was not in the least bit surprised they had taken the ship. The senior Kavalian troop had never worked with a vampire however, he had only killed them, and to say he was impressed would be an understatement. This Colonel Vonis was the epitome of a leader. This was the type of man who he had been trained to follow as a clone child and he learned in the military classes. This was the type of man he had never seen among the Kavalian troops. Vonis had been in the front of their file their entire sweep through this frigate. He had even saved two of his men's lives with his incredible ability to blur, and he had done so without a second's thought. It was these actions and the fact that Vonis had asked him for whatever thoughts he had on the best way to take the ship. The Kavalian soldier was impressed with Vonis's obvious knowledge, yet he had asked for help from him. It had astonished him until it dawned on him that this vampire was a member of the Lycavorian Union, and while he may have been the son of the hated and now dead High Coven Empress, he was nothing like her or the cruel vampires he had fought before.

"We are secure Colonel." He stated. "The follow on team is securing the prisoners below decks."

Vonis nodded. "Excellent." He said.

"You... you did not have them executed sir?" The man asked.

Vonis met the Kavalian's eyes. "They are your people Kangam." Vonis told him. "What you do with them will be up to Mican and those among your people. We only needed to secure the ship for our use. Slaughtering the crew would serve no purpose since most of them are scientists anyway. Don't you agree?"

Kangam nodded his head. "I do sir." He replied. "I just did not think it would matter to you."

Vonis did not take offense and smiled. "Well it does." He answered. "As my nephew has told Mican... we are not your enemies and we need each other to get out of here in one piece."

Kangam smiled as he nodded. "Yes we do."

"Besides... my elven wife would be very upset with me if she ever discovered I acted without thinking." Vonis said. "I do not wish to make her upset with me."

Kangam chuckled softly and nodded his head once more. "It is good to see that females are the same no matter the species." He said. "My elven wife would be the same way."

Vonis nodded. "You see... we are not so different Kangam. We are not so different. Let's get these prisoners secured and then start stripping whatever we can off this ship so we can get your people on board."

"Yes sir!" Kangam barked before moving off to comply with his orders.

Vonis turned and looked at the Lycavorian NONCOM. He was a grizzled eight hundred year old soldier and he nodded his head in approval. "They are good Colonel." He said.

"Yes they are." Vonis agreed. "However we have only begun working together so make sure the prisoners are secured properly."

The NONCOM nodded. "As you order."

“I’m going to contact Resumar and find out where they stand.” Resumar spoke. “Stand by for follow on operations Sergeant. We don’t know where or when these other ships are going to appear and we may have to move fast if the PILLAR OF FAITH can not react quickly enough for us.”

“On it Colonel.” The man spoke as he moved to follow the Kavalian soldier off the bridge.

Vonis let his eyes move around the bridge as he moved to the side, finally settling on the Kavalian male with gray in his short fur. A Durcunusaan soldier was securing his hands behind his back, but the man stared at him with fury in his eyes. As the Durcunusaan pulled him to his feet he spat at Vonis.

“Our fleet will be here soon!” He screamed. “Your Union will not stand once all of your precious royal family is dead! You will see!”

The Durcunusaan troop yanked on his arm. “Shut up fool!” He snapped as he dragged him from the bridge. “Don’t give me a reason to cut your idiot tongue from your mouth!”

Vonis contemplated the Kavalian’s words silently as he lifted his hand and tapped the implant on his jaw lightly. “Resumar?”

The response was immediate. “Uncle... are you secure?” Res’s firm voice filled his ear clearly.

“The frigate is secure Resumar.” Vonis spoke. “We are locking the remaining crew and the scientists in the lower decks. What about those that were moving to your location to investigate the MV ship?”

Resumar turned and looked at the nine Kavalian troops and scientists that had survived their ambush only a hundred meters from the entrance of the Mindvoice ship. All of them were wide eyed in almost paralyzing fear as Cemath stared at them, doing his very best to look imposing, which in reality was not very hard considering he was a dragon. Resumar held his chuckle in due to the seriousness of the situation. He could see Athani and Na’lia helping to go through the equipment they had been carrying, while Mican and two Durcunusaan troops were insuring their bindings were tight. His dark eyes cut to the four bodies that were now covered in dark blankets from the Kavalian packs of equipment.

“They gave us mild resistance Uncle... at least until Cemath showed them the error of their ways.” Resumar answered.

Resumar heard his adopted Uncle chuckle softly. “We will begin stripping everything we can from the interior of this ship to make room for our charges Resumar. Mican was right... it is definitely large enough to carry his rebels as long as they travel light.”

Resumar nodded. “As soon as Dario and Channa bring the last of them to the MV ship I’ll have Mican begin moving them to your location. Can you hold?”

“Asharli has already brought their weapons systems online and we should be able to protect ourselves from everything but a sustained assault.” Vonis answered.

“Uncle... did you see any sign of the Coven troops that escaped?” Resumar asked.

“No.” Vonis answered. “You are concerned about them I take it?”

“Julie returned a short while ago.” Resumar told him. “She says the rendezvous point they were to use showed signs of them staying the night, but they have since moved on. They could be anywhere by now. She also said at least six of them are wounded.”

“This means they will be even more dangerous and bold.” Vonis spoke. “Do you trust her Resumar?”

“Yes Uncle.” Res answered immediately. “If not for Julie we would all be dead by now. They... your mother underestimated the pull of the wolf Uncle. Julie may be a vampire now... but she thinks like a wolf. Her heart is a wolf.”

“I agree.” Vonis said. “Any word from the FAITH or Maros?”

“They are holding under Shroud just inside the system.” Resumar answered. “Depending on the size of the force the Kavalians send, they will attempt to ambush them when they arrive. Avi and Avatar 341 have completed roughly sixty-five percent of the core download and that is progressing rapidly now.”

“What do you need me to do Res?” Vonis asked.

“Hold what you have Uncle.” Resumar answered as he saw Avi’s massive form exiting the entrance of the MV ship and begin moving towards him. “I can have Avatar 341 extend a sensor bubble around your location to keep you invisible from sensors, but we are still trying to determine how best to destroy this entire ship. It is nearly seven and a half kilometers long and we can leave nothing that could be studied by anyone.”

“I’ll be standing by here Resumar. We’ll secure the ship and you may begin bringing Mican’s people over as soon as you are ready.” Vonis spoke. “I’m going to send out a small patrol to scout the area around our location. The Coven teams may have seen the ship land and I do not want to be caught by surprise.”

“I will have Julie move to your location before you do that. She can take the patrol out. She has a better chance of detecting them than we do.” Resumar spoke.

“That works for me.” Vonis said. “I’ll standby until she gets here.”

“I have to go Uncle... Avi is coming up.” Resumar said.

“Keep me informed of your progress and what I can do to assist.” Vonis said. “I’m clear.”

Resumar turned as the nearly seven foot tall Avi came up to him. Resumar had grown up with his brothers and sisters with this hulking cyborg around all of the time and Avi’s size didn’t faze him anymore. Avi was holding a data pad in his massive hand and he ignored the Kavalian men and women who watched him with wide eyes.

“Something Avi?” Resumar asked as he stopped next to him.

-Three things Resumar- Avi spoke.

Resumar nodded his head. “Hit me with them.” Res told him with a smile. “Uncle Vonis has secured the Kavalian Science Frigate and I could use some more good news.”

-Five Kavalian warships entered the fringes of this system twenty-two minutes ago- Avi spoke.

“Avi... I said give me good news.” Resumar snapped.

-I have been in contact with THE PILLAR OF FAITH and given the information to Captain Antell. Avatar 341 has activated passive jammers so they will not be able to contact anyone outside the system and Captain Antell is moving to engage them. When combined with the ships Captain Maros commands... they will destroy the Kavalian ships relatively easy enough. Is that good enough?- Avi said.

“Ok... that’s good news.” Resumar spoke.

-We will not be able to download the entire VORTEX Cruiser 341 core Resumar- Avi spoke seeing Resumar look at him.

“What? Why?” Resumar barked. “That’s not good news!”

-Several of the portable data core units we brought with us for transferring the memory banks were damaged in the explosion of the STRIKER. Micro fissures in their biogel casings that I did not detect with a routine scan-

“How much information are we talking here Avi?” Resumar asked evenly. “And what information?”

-I followed the outline laid out by your father when we copied City Ship 41’s cores- Avi answered.
-All history data cores were downloaded first. Followed by engineering data cores and specs, then shield cores and then the sensor cores. As with City Ship 41, your father was far more interested in defensive modifications and the history of the Pralors. Weapons were not a concern for him, though if there was enough room he wanted them as well-

“Why would my father not want weapons data cores?” Resumar asked.

-Your father is a descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar Resumar Leonidas. Just as you are. Though he was an accomplished and exceptionally skilled warrior, knowledge was his power- Avi replied.

–Your father is no different He once told me he would start no war with anyone but he would damn sure finish any war that someone started against him. Permanently. That is an adequate paraphrase I believe–

“That still doesn’t explain why he would forgo useful weapons plans and schematics for history data cores.” Resumar said.

–The LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser is already the premier ship in the Union Fleet Resumar. You know this. It is much faster and can project more power than any comparable sized ship in either the Kavalian or High Coven ranks- Avi told him. –With the upgrades that they have already begun to undergo, it will increase the combat power of the LEONIDAS II to the exact proportions that your father wanted–

Resumar nodded. “You are talking of the Quantum Matter Reactors?”

Avi nodded. –While not as efficient as the Quantum Fusion Reactors fully based and designed on Pralor technology that the ARIZONA Class ships are equipped with, the prototype QMRs designed by Zaala Randall are excellent, if a bit under powered copies. Your father knows this, and he wants to improve on her design. He feels the strength of the Union comes not in her ability to bring power to bear, though our power is quite considerable, but in the ability to project our power and show our allies and friends we are able to stand beside them in times of need–

Resumar looked at Avi and grinned. “Avi... how much time have you and my father spent together?” He asked.

Avi’s red/orange eyes blinked several times. –I do not see the relation that has to our current predicament Resumar–

“Just answer the question Avi?” Res told him.

–Including the times when we have spoken via COM units... total time would equal four years, three months, one week and nine days– Avi answered.

Resumar shook his head. “And here all these years he has led us to believe he never spent any time with you.” Resumar looked at him. “And what did you talk about?”

Avi shook his large head. –Conversations between the King and I are confidential Resumar Leonidas–

“So you are keeping his secrets?” Res spoke with a wider grin. “Leave it to my father to tell his secrets to the one person in the universe that would never reveal them.” He shook his head. “Ok... how much are we going to have to leave behind?”

–Avatar 341 and I estimate that we will only be able to complete seventy-five point two percent of the shield data hub download with the remaining memory cores that we have. Mican and his people have been very helpful to the three engineers we brought with us in removing the forty-three Quantum Hyper Fusion Power Cores VORTEX Cruiser 341 had in sealed storage. Avatar 341 is very confident he can adapt them to our current technology and assist us in building our own. The Hyper Resonance Power Cores are several levels more advanced than City Ship 41’s own design. They are packaged and ready to be moved– Avi reported.

“So you told him we will be taking him with us.” Resumar said.

Avi looked at Resumar. –This was a correct assumption was it not?–

Resumar nodded. “Indeed it was.”

Avi nodded. –I told him as much. He had already made plans to remain aboard VORTEX Cruiser 341 when it was destroyed. He may be more advanced than me, but I have had the interaction with other species that he has not. He welcomes the opportunity-

“Avi why can’t we just yank the remaining computer cores and bring them with us as well?” Resumar asked.

-That is not possible Resumar. The remaining two computer memory hubs weigh in excess of three million metric tons together and are the size of a STRIKER DT. Where would we put them? We have no means to bring them with us- Avi asked innocently.

Resumar looked at him. “I see your point.” He stated nodding his head. “Then we destroy them with the ship.”

-That would be the plausible plan to follow- Avi spoke. –Avatar 341 and I have been trying to determine what we could do to increase the explosive force of the munitions we brought. Every scenario we run data on comes up far short. We believe the ship needs to be incinerated Resumar and we have come up with a way to do this though...-

“Incinerated?” Res gasped cutting him off. “Avi... just how are we suppose to vaporize a ship that is almost eight kilometers long and buried in a mountain when we don’t even have enough explosives to do anything but break it into a dozen pieces?”

-If we place eleven of the Power cores we have packaged at strategic points within VORTEX Cruiser 341... combined with the chemical composition of the explosives we have brought... it would be more than sufficient to shatter and incinerate ninety-seven point six percent of the ship. The remainder would be too damaged to be of any use- Avi answered.

Resumar looked at him. “Why do I get the feeling that there is a very large drawback to this idea?” He spoke.

-An explosion such as the one we would create, even underground at the depth VORTEX Cruiser 341 resides, it would annihilate any living creature within a hundred kilometer radius of point zero- Avi answered. –Including plant life and any animal life that may be living in that zone. It would also destabilize this continent and send a cloud of toxic ash into the atmosphere that would remain for at least seven point three months-

“Sibfla!” Resumar gasped in horror.

-As I said... the plan does have its drawbacks- Avi spoke.

“Yeah... no kidding!” Resumar quipped.

-It is the only way to be sure Resumar- Avi said. –Anything less and we will risk not destroying it completely. Even a small amount of Pralor technology falling into the hands of those who will use it for nefarious means would be difficult to fathom-

Resumar nodded his head slowly. "I know." He said softly. He thought about it for a few moments, weighed the pros and cons and came up with the only true method of completing their mission here. "Do it Avi." He stated finally. Avi nodded his head and began to turn back to return to the ship. "You said there were three things Avi..." Resumar stopped him. "What was the third?"

-It is not important at this time Resumar- Avi answered.

"If you were going to tell me about it before it must be important enough." Resumar answered. "You are not just a machine to our family Avi... you are... you are a member of our family when it comes down to it. Speak what you have to say."

Avi turned back and looked at him. -It concerns Mican and Athani Little One-

This got Resumar's undivided attention and he moved closer to the cyborg. "What do you mean?" Res demanded. "Has he done something?"

Avi shook his head. -He has done nothing. Not directly-

"I don't follow Avi." Resumar spoke.

-You know I am able to conduct deep tissue and DNA scans without having to touch the individual or draw blood- Avi said.

Resumar nodded. "Yes."

-Avatar 341 has similar abilities. I was reviewing his earlier scans of the Kavalians that he allowed on the ship just before we arrived. I conducted a deep tissue scan of Mican and all the others among his group as they came onto VORTEX Cruiser 341 this time to verify his results. They were the same- Avi spoke in that now familiar almost mechanical voice. -I was able to obtain a DNA match Resumar-

"I'm still not following you." Res spoke. "A DNA match for who?"

-Mican's DNA strands match those of Athani Little One Resumar- Avi told him. -If my calculations are correct... and there is little reason to doubt them... they are brother and sister-

Resumar stared at him in open mouthed shock.

VANEDI
12,678 LY FROM EARTH
SPACEWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM
UNEXPLORED SPACE

Wayonn moved gracefully along the well worn path through the trees, his tan cloak dragging along the top of the hard packed dirt trail. He was used to the slight incline and climb to his great grandson's perch high in the valley. Vanedi was a large planet with a slightly lesser gravity than what he was normally used too, but it made it that much easier for him to traverse the terrain. Twenty-five years they had been here now, Wayonn playing the part of School Master, teaching Dutkne all that he could. The boy was infuriating sometimes, always wanting to contemplate the meaning of this or that, yet he had learned his lessons well. His Mindvoice skills had advanced to a level very near what he felt from Martin Leonidas. Perhaps not in sheer power, but in refinement and ability he was an equal. Dutkne had spent the better part of his five hundred and forty-eight years of life soaking up all Wayonn could teach him, even while continuing to build on the great legacy left to him by his father and his grandfather. Wayonn couldn't help but smile at the many memories as Dutkne grew. He reminded him so much of his own son Canth as a small boy, always inventive and adventurous. In terms that others would understand, Dutkne was Wayonn's Great Grandson, the first born of Canth's youngest son who he had left with Wayonn when he returned to Lycavore. As far as Wayonn was concerned Dutkne was the last living male link to his beloved son Canth. All of Canth's children had died through the years, either at the hand of the Coven or for other reasons. Only Dutkne, his mother and two sisters remained. Dutkne's mother had never taken another mate and though only several thousand years old and still a beautiful young wolf in their terms of lifespan, none had ever caught her fancy enough though many had tried. Perhaps because with Dutkne gone so much, she had committed her life to insuring the Protectorate continued on in her son's absence. With the help of his two sister's, Dutkne's mother had indeed insured the Protectorate remained true to its core values.

The similarities between Martin Leonidas's path in life and that of Dutkne were far removed from each other but Wayonn knew this would not stop them from forging ahead into the future. If they had a future. Wayonn still concluded that the reserved but sharp tongued and dry humored Dutkne would be more suited as a friend to Martin's son Androcles since they were closer in age and abilities and surprisingly temperament. It would be interesting to see them finally meet when that time came. And it was closing in on them, far faster than Wayonn had first expected.

Wayonn knew of Dutkne's inherent fondness for escaping for long stretches of time, and it drove his advisers mad as they tried to find him. When Wayonn suggested that they get away twenty-five years ago, Dutkne had jumped at the chance. He was an inspiring leader, but he hated the more mundane roles he was forced to take. When Wayonn had seen what Martin had begun to accomplish after discovering the Mindvoice ship, Wayonn knew it was time for him to begin in earnest teaching Dutkne everything he could. The Pralor Wayonn knew without any question that CS41's engine activation would have been detected upon leaving Lycavore that day long ago, and he also knew that they would come eventually. He just didn't know when. The growth in power of Xaxon's tremors within Mindvoice would also be detected eventually, and over the last ten years he had pressed Dutkne hard.

The boy was an explorer like his father, and he had traveled to many different worlds in his five hundred plus years. He had even managed an extended stay on Earth, in Sparta when he was only thirty-nine years old. Long before Martin had any idea who and what he was, and before the passing of the comet. He had wanted to study the history of his people and how the descendants of the man his grandfather had followed lived. It was where he had picked up the many Earth words he quite fluently now espoused. It was slang Wayonn knew, but in many cases it was impossibly infuriating. If they were to survive what Wayonn knew would come, they now had to discover each other. They could no longer remain apart, and Martin Leonidas, his son Androcles and Dutkne would be the beginnings of what they could have. Wayonn rounded the trail around the now familiar boulder and let his eyes settle on the figure before him.

Dutkne stood the same height as his father at two meters even, his form lean and quite muscular. He lacked the definition of Martin Leonidas and his sons perhaps, but the potential was there. Dutkne was a seasoned and lethal fighter, but he much preferred to talk his way out of potential incendiary situations. Many times he had succeeded in this, though he was anything but helpless. His precise control over his Mindvoice abilities was exacting, and aside from himself, Dutkne's MV shielding abilities was unapproachable. It was a skill he would need to pass on to Martin and the others when they met, something that he and Martin Leonidas had discussed. He was shirtless now, wearing only the dark brown fatigue like pants and his combat boots, and sitting lotus style on the flat expanse of the adjoining rock face. His skin was deeply bronzed in color now after two decades on this sun drenched world, his dark hair cut to soft fuzz on top of his head, and his thin beard and goatee meticulously trimmed. His five hundred plus years of life had taught him much, and Wayonn saw the Razer Pulse Blaster in its holster by his right leg. Next to that was another holster of sorts that held Dutkne's weapon of choice. It would have been called a Quarterstaff by others, but this weapon was far deadlier in his hands. It was collapsible, like the Nehtes that Martin's elven Weapons Master had designed, and it could be broken into two sections. Each tip was weighted with a coating of thin metal making it extremely deadly. When broken into two sections, Wayonn had seen Dutkne extend his physic essence down his arms and hands to encompass the two sections, turning them into weapons that could kill with a single blow.

Wayonn let his eyes drift out over the view of the valley before them and allowed his wolf senses to inhale deeply of the nearby ocean breeze that filtered through the mountains all around them. Dutkne was looking inland, but just over the ridge above and behind him was an ocean that was vast in its size. He turned back just as Dutkne opened one eye and focused on him.

“Have you decided to continue my schooling grandfather?” Dutkne asked. “You have been gone for three days now and I almost sent out a distress signal to Drey to bring our ship back and begin searching.”

Wayonn chuckled as he moved around in front of the rock slab and looked at Dutkne. “Your schooling is at an end grandson.” He spoke evenly.

Dutkne’s other eye opened quickly and he looked at him in surprise. “At an end?” He spoke comically. “Aren’t you the one who told me, not so very long ago, ‘Your schooling never ends Dutkne’, isn’t that your phrase grandfather?”

“I did say that didn’t I?” Wayonn spoke.

Dutkne snorted. “More times than I care to recall.”

Wayonn grunted in returned. “Perhaps if you had listened the first time I would not have had to repeat myself.”

“Where would the fun in that be grandfather?” Dutkne asked as he got to his feet.

“As I recall... you came on this journey willingly.” Wayonn said as he crossed his thin arms over his chest.

“Anything that gets me away from the insidiously boring realm of politics I will agree to without hesitation.” Dutkne answered dryly. “Life on Etheru was becoming mind-numbing in its normalcy.”

“Your insistence on discovering the unknown will one day clip your tail grandson. You know this.” Wayonn said. “How will your turn on four paws with no tail?”

“Ah... I will discover a way.” Dutkne replied playfully.

“We must talk Dutkne.” Wayonn said. “We must talk of the future.”

“Ah yes... time for riddles. Always a favorite of mine grandfather.” He replied drolly as he pulled on his shirt and began to fasten the straps.

Wayonn snorted and shook his head. “Yes indeed... you will fit in very well in the future providing you learn humility.” He muttered to himself.

Dutkne looked at him. “Grandfather... you are muttering to yourself?” He asked in mock horror. “This is not like you.”

“After three days of speaking with Martin... I’m surprised I am not a raving lunatic.” Wayonn said. “He is quite possibly equally as infuriating as you.”

“Martin?” Dutkne asked as he fastened his staff across his back. “Who is this Martin? Another of your long lost friends... or someone that the Protectorate has newly appointed to drive me mad with the mundane.”

“I have taught you well Dutkne.” Wayonn spoke with a grin. “Perhaps too well. You rarely drop your shields far enough to feel the tremors of Mindvoice outside our simple and limited bubble.”

“Why would I?” Dutkne asked. “What is there outside our bubble as you say?”

“There is the Lycavorian Union.” Wayonn replied softly. “Your people. Our people.”

Dutkne chuckled softly. “Grandfather, the Lycavorian Union is as they have always been. They are our people, yes, but they lack the will and the purpose of our ancestors. They lack what those of us in the Protectorate have kept close to our hearts. They have drawn themselves away from the feral instincts of our people and allowed themselves to try and reach a point that King Resumar and my Grandfather Canth never meant for them to reach. Even Prime Minister Deia walks this path now, and she should be the one to know better as Queen Eliani’s sister.”

“Our feral instincts is one of the reasons the Vanari remain aloof from us Dutkne.” Wayonn told him. “They could be powerful allies.”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes that is true; however I will not be the one to lead our people away from who we are simply to appease another race. The Vanari can accept us for who we are, or things can remain as they are. We are not allies and we are not enemies. They are xenophobic towards others not like them. We do not partake of the insidious slave trade of their people as others do. When we find it, we stamp it out. Besides... the Vanari are more than capable of taking care of themselves.” Wayonn smiled as Dutkne faced him and he stepped off the slab of rock. Dutkne’s faced crinkled somewhat as he looked at Wayonn’s tanned weathered cheeks and crooked smile. "What? Did I release an explosion of foul smelling air? I did have Kremtar Roots for dinner last night."

"I brought you here almost twenty-five years ago for a reason Dutkne my boy." Wayonn said.

"Truly? And here I thought it was to get me away from the politicians." Dutkne answered him with a grin. "What would that reason be grandfather? Or is this another of your riddles that I am supposed to spend years trying to solve?"

Wayonn smiled. "This is no riddle boy." He stated as his eyes grew bright. "City Ship 41 is no longer on Lycavore Dutkne." Wayonn spoke calmly.

Dutkne laughed and shook his head. "Oh grandfather... now we are resorting to jokes! This is very unlike you!" He stated as his dark eyes came back to rest on Wayonn and he saw that Wayonn's expression was plain and very serious. "Grandfather are you feeling alright? Did you perhaps hit your head in the three days you have been secluded on the other side of the planet? Lycavore is occupied by High Coven forces and has been for nearly eleven thousand years."

Wayonn shook his head. "No. Not any longer. It is no longer occupied by anyone and hasn't been for nearly a quarter of a century. The Coven abandoned it after Martin left it in ruins and the Kavalians refuse to set foot on the planet for some reason."

"Kavalians? This Martin character again?" Dutkne barked comically. "Oh grandfather... I like this new you. You are actually cracking jokes."

Wayonn grinned. "If only that were the case." He stated as he held out the data pads from behind his back. "You should probably read these."

Dutkne took the pads. "What are these?"

"The unedited Intelligence reports that Drey and the others have been delivering here for the last twenty-five years. Surprisingly, even they do not know of City Ship 41's exodus, or what has transpired." Wayonn spoke. "Avatar 41 did his job very well."

"Avatar 41?" Dutkne popped. "Unedited reports?"

Wayonn smiled. "That is what they call him now. Avi. Martin's elven pilot named him within hours after meeting him."

"Martin?" Dutkne barked. "Again you mention this name. Who is he? What does he have to do with CS41? No one could have moved that ship!" Dutkne protested. "You told me Avatar 41 was programmed to awaken only if a descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar or Grandfather Canth entered the ship. Only they would have the level of Mindvoice abilities to activate the ship's systems!"

Wayonn nodded as he turned and settled to the edge of the massive slab of rock Dutkne had been occupying just moments before. "That is very true." He said. "Fortunately for us, both of these things occurred."

Dutkne's face took on an expression slightly of anger and slightly of exasperation. His grandfather had done this to him before in the past in order to test his reasoning and his ability to control his temper. "Grandfather... I am not in the mood for another of your lessons! Why have you altered Intelligence reports?"

"Because they contained items that you were not ready to accept, and our people were not ready to face." Wayonn answered evenly as he looked at him and met his stern gaze. "That needs to change now."

"What items?" Dutkne snapped. "What are you talking about now?"

"City Ship 41 was activated Dutkne. It was activated and then flown from Lycavore to the planet Earth." Wayonn explained.

"Earth!" Dutkne exclaimed. "What nonsense is this? Why would it go to Earth? There is nothing on Earth! It is a warring wasteland since the Comet passed between the moon and the planet. The High Coven uses it as a colony for food! Nothing more! Whoever the fool was that created the elves there should be shot for he only made the Coven stronger in its position!"

"Because that is where the descendant of Sumar... where Martin Leonidas directed Avi to guide it. Earth is free now Dutkne. Free and rapidly rebuilding under Martin's guidance and those he put in charge of the planet. And the man you call fool is the Senior Polemarch of the entire Lycavorian Union army of ground troops." Wayonn told him. "Earth is Martin's seat of power half the time, in Sparta. The city of his father. It is where all his children have been born. Every one! The other half of each year he resides on Apo Prime. And the Lycavorian Union is no longer as you once knew it to be Dutkne. Not since he returned and claimed the throne of his grandfather." Wayonn answered calmly.

“Martin...” Dutkne’s eyes grew wide in shock. “Martin Leonidas! As in...?”

Wayonn nodded slowly and took great pleasure in the expression on his grandson’s face. “Yes... the great grandson of Resumar, Elder Pralor Sumar’s first born son. The second son of Leonidas. The child we all thought lost so many years ago. He has returned... and he has taken his place as King of the Union and of Sparta. He has returned to our people the instincts which you correctly stated they had forgotten. Lower your shields Dutkne... lower your shields and allow me to let you feel what I have felt for twenty-five years since his return.”

“Twenty-five years!” Dutkne shouted. “You... you have kept this from me for all this time? Why?”

“To give him time to do what needed to be done.” Wayonn spoke. “What you yourself have said needs to be done. It has taken him twenty-five years to do it but he has done it most effectively and our people have embraced it to their very core. I was wary at first, of who this man was, until I felt him like a burning star within Mindvoice just as I felt Sumar. They are ready Dutkne... he has made them ready... and he will need your help in the near future. Your unique abilities. He has enemies closing in all around him and I am unable to see what will happen any longer.”

“The son... the son of King Leonidas?” Dutkne asked. His voice was soft now... almost in awe of what he was being told.

Wayonn nodded. “He returned to our people in the Union twenty-five years ago and for all of that time he has dragged them kicking and screaming into the future. He and his Queens have finally brought them back to what Resumar and Canth intended. Avi and CS 41 have afforded them advances in their technology that bring them very much on a par with us, though it is still in its infancy. He has led as a Lycavorian and a Pralor Dutkne. As Sumar once led us when we first arrived on Lycavore all those millennia ago. And his oldest son, all his children, they follow in his footsteps.”

“Son?” Dutkne gasped looking at him.

Wayonn nodded with a grin. “Martin Leonidas is quite the ladies man it seems. A typical Alpha Wolf of old. He has five Queens... all of them of astonishing beauty. And he has a total of fifteen children. Two of them are adopted daughters. Only the oldest ten are able to fight and Androcles is the strongest among them. His first born pureblood son.”

Dutkne’s eyes grew wide. “Pureblood?” He gasped again.

Wayonn nodded. “He and his son have sealed the divide between the Lycavorian people with the mates they have chosen Dutkne. His son did so and does not yet even realize it. The female pureblood who is now Androcles’s anome is a descendant of the line of Eliani’s Uncle.”

Dutkne looked at him stunned. “Truly? We thought... we thought they had all been killed grandfather. That is what our history pads tell us.”

Wayonn nodded. “In context... Resumar’s blood was of one line of royalty... Eliani’s of another. When they became mates that bloodline was sealed. When they died we thought it ended. There is not a full accounting of who escaped Lycavore except for Chetak and his scum, you know this, but we do know many did. One of those was Eliani’s Aunt and Uncle. Their daughter escaped with them and the Coven never discovered them. She mated very young and her last child, a daughter, gave birth to Androcles’s Anome Sadi.”

“Grandfather... how do you know all this?” Dutkne asked.

“When Martin freed my son, he was able to touch me one last time Dutkne.” Wayonn answered. “For that briefest of moments he was able to relate to me all he had learned through the years about what happened to our people. It appears Veldruk would visit him during his imprisonment and think to torture him with this knowledge. It was this information he gave to me while he passed his wisdom and experienced to Helen.”

“Grandfather... are you saying he... was on Earth when I visited Sparta and stayed among our people there?” Dutkne asked gently. “No one knew who I was, only that I was an eccentric lone wolf.”

Wayonn nodded his head. “He did not yet know who he truly was then and it is unlikely you would have even detected him given the level of your shields and his own natural shielding ability.” Wayonn said as he got to his feet. “There is something else you should know... and then you need to contact Drey and have him come here to remove us from this place.”

“What... what else can you tell me that is more unbelievable than what you have already told me?” Dutkne gasped.

Wayonn smiled. “Canth lives on Dutkne. Martin freed his Mindvoice essence from his prison and he passed all that he was to the Helen... the Lycavorian First Oracle.”

Dutkne’s eyes grew even wider if that was possible. “Grandfather... we have not had... we have not had a First Oracle since the Black Day!”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes we have.” He replied. “She has just been in a different part of the galaxy. When Martin freed my son, all his knowledge and wisdom passed to her. Everything that my son and your grandfather was; it is now held within her. She too is still discovering herself or she would have felt us... you... a long time ago. It is time we stood behind our King and united our people Dutkne. Our King has begun this journey and now it is time we brought them all back together after twelve millennia. Martin Leonidas started it when he saved all those left on Lycavore and guided CS 41 to Earth. He has continued it even now. And together... together we will see it into the future.

“For the future is fast approaching... and it is not as utopian as we had hoped.” Wayonn finished grimly.

RITAAH

The High Coven senior officer placed his hand on the arm of his fellow commando and shook his head as the man lowered his SA80. The man turned his head and glanced at him before turning back to watch the dark green scaled dragon moved further off above the trees, the blond hair clearly visible.

“No Jomar.” He said softly. “We are not equipped to fight dragons and that monster would burn us all before we knew what hit us.”

“He carried that Kavalian whore Captain.” Jomar spoke. “I was going to shoot her. Knock her from the saddle. Our wounded can use her blood to further heal.”

“And when your round bounced from the shield they have around them when they fly and she sent out a Mindvoice warning to her husband then what?” The Captain said. “You would bring that big Spartan and his dragon from west of here, not to mention the other Kavalian whore and the purple scaled beast she rides. Then our mission would be over before we ever got a chance to complete it.”

“Our comrades will die without fresh blood Captain.” Jomar said. “They are moving the last of the Kavalians to the Mindvoice ship even now. We will be unable to obtain fresh blood when they do that, even though the thought of taking Kavalian blood turns my stomach.”

The older man nodded. “As it does mine. The fact remains however... we are very much ill-equipped to fight these dragon beasts Jomar. And the big Spartan that is Leonidas’s cousin is not one we want to discover us. Nor Leonidas himself. We still have a mission to complete and we can not do that if we are dead.”

Jomar lowered his weapon the entire way and nodded his head slowly. “Yes sir.”

“Come... let us move back to the others. We go tonight and I want to be prepared.” The officer said. “We will need to shift to Plan B, and then plot our way to the extraction area. They are intent on destroying this ship and we must retrieve what we came for before they do.”

The two vampire commandos turned slowly before blurring off into the shadows created by the thick timber.

The only thing that Athani Leonidas would have liked to feel is her long hair whipping behind her as she sat low in the saddle on Cemath’s back and they soared above the treetops. The Dragon Armor braces secured her legs tightly to the side of the saddle and she had no fear of falling, even as Cemath executed sharp turns and dives. She had even grown so accustomed to flying on her husband’s dragon that she no longer bothered to hold onto the edges of the Mark IV saddle. Athani could not explain why she did not harbor the fear of dragons that hampered the majority of her people. She hadn’t feared Cemath since that first time on the Union ship where she met Resumar and the more she flew on him, the more she came to understand and relish the feelings as her husband did.

Athani could not believe she was actually back in Kavalian space after trying so hard to escape. She had escaped though, and part of her new life with Resumar was acting as a Princess of the Union would act. She was now the wife of a Prince of the Lycavorian Union and where he went she would follow without question. It just so happened that now they were in Kavalian space attempting to keep a devastating weapon from being discovered by her father. Martin Leonidas had asked her personally to come on this mission and after what she had discovered since defecting, and the complete acceptance and unquestioning love she had received, Athani could not refuse. She did not want to refuse. These men and women they had discovered here were still her people and she would do what she could to insure they were kept from her father's clutches and help them to find what she herself had found. Even Resumar had told her the same thing. Their mission here was important, for Athani knew if her father or Pusintin ever got their hands on the technology from this wondrous ship he would turn it against any who opposed him and make a bid to conquer the galaxy.

She felt Cemath turn sharply as they moved lower across the tops of the trees and his wings flared as they appeared above the small clearing where the entrance into the Mindvoice ship they had been using was. She smiled gently as her keen feline eyes saw her tall husband standing with Mican and Avi waiting for her. Cemath extended his talons with his wings flared out and he touched down lightly, slowly going forward until his front forelegs were on the ground. He lowered himself completely to the soft earth as Athani leaped from the saddle and landed beside him. She ran her fingers along his scales as she moved towards Resumar.

Thank you Cemath. Athani spoke to him within Mindvoice as she moved up to his snout.

Cemath bobbed his head up and down and brushed against her shoulder. Always Athani.

Athani smiled and turned her eyes on Resumar as he walked towards her with Mican and Avi. "Why have you called me back Resumar?" Athani asked as she stopped and folded her body into his arms, her long tail wrapping instinctively around his waist. "Dario, Channa and I were almost back anyway with the last group."

Resumar nodded. "I know... but this is important."

Athani looked at him oddly. His tone of voice was apprehensive and she had never heard that from him before. "What is wrong my love?" she asked. "Has something happened?"

"Avi has discovered some information that you need to be aware of. It's... it's personal information." Resumar told her.

Athani looked at Avi and then Mican. "If it is personal then why is Mican here Resumar my husband?" Athani asked. The Kavalian had been looking at her oddly ever since she arrived and Athani was beginning to think he harbored lustful thoughts towards her even though his wife was a beautiful elven female.

"You told me that your older brothers had all been killed Aryschanne. Before you were born." Resumar said as he took her hands.

Athani nodded quickly. "Yes. The oldest two in the poison missile attacks by the Coven some nine hundred years ago. The third was killed just a year before I was born. You know all this Resumar."

"And you know of no other brothers?" Resumar asked.

"Others?" Athani gasped. "If my father had other sons, Jalersi and I would never have been the ones to come here to begin with. Resumar what is going on?"

Avi stepped up beside Resumar now and Athani looked at him. -Athani Little One... you know it is my duty to scan everyone we come in contact with?-

Athani nodded. "Yes."

-I ran deep tissue and DNA scans on all those with Mican's group- Avi said.

Athani nodded. "Yes... that is procedure like you said. What does this have to do with me?"

-My scans revealed a match to your DNA sequencers. The Synaptic strands indicate a relation to you. A brother-

Athani's blue/green eyes grew wider at this information. She looked at Resumar then. "That's... that's not possible! My father... he told me... he told Jalersi and me that the last of our brothers had been killed in a..."

-My scans were completely accurate Athani Little One-

“He told you I was killed in an explosion at a training base.” Mican said softly as he stepped up next to Resumar now. “Yes... that was the official story.” Athani’s eyes cut to Mican in shock. Her vertically slit blue/green eyes were as shocked as Resumar had ever seen them, and he reached out to take her arms and steady her. “In reality... I led a revolt of a cloning facility. Our father was using me as one of his test subjects, just as he used Jalersi and you Athani.”

Mican felt a weight he had carried for decades beginning to lift from his shoulders. It was a weight that Na’lia coming into his life had all but erased, but a weight that still lingered. Until now. He moved closer to her, looking down into her stunned eyes.

“I did not turn out as he expected.” Mican said. “As he wanted. My eyes. My abilities. He wanted to change me to the point where I could lead his clones in battle and look no different than the vampires he planned to invade. When I did not turn out as he hoped I became a liability to him. As did the clones. He ordered us executed Athani. I... I did not want to die. I led the clones in an escape attempt. We succeeded and this is where we have ended up. We have saved more over the years, and we bring them here.”

Athani stared at him in silence. This was why he had been looking at her strangely since she had arrived here. No matter what she was doing he always seemed to be watching her. And now she knew why. Jalersi had told her he had been killed, and when she asked her father, he had told her the same thing. Was it all a lie? Was her entire life a lie? Athani blinked several times and looked at Resumar. No... whatever had gone on before, whatever lies she had been told before she had met Resumar, they no longer mattered. This was her life now. This is what she was meant for. And her life with this man was no lie.

Athani looked back to Mican. “That... this is why you have...”

Mican nodded. “I have known about you and Jalersi for many years.” He said gently. “I think Jalersi may know more about me than she lets on or speaks of, but when word reached us here that you defected... I was very happy. I... I did not know how to approach you once I realized you were here. Na’lia has called me a coward half a dozen times since you arrived because I would not come forward.”

Athani looked at him. “She... she loves you without question.” She said.

Mican nodded. “As I love her.” He stated moving closer still. “I have always imagined what I would say when and if I was ever able to see you or Jalersi. How I would tell you... if you would even believe me.” Mican looked at Avi and then back to her. “I did not suspect he could do what he can do.”

-I have the ability to...- Avi began.

Resumar shook his head. “Avi... not now!” He hissed. He turned back to Athani and squeezed her hands. She inched closer to him, her long tail circling around his leg as it always did when she was anxious or troubled. “We have time now Aryschanne. You and Mican can talk for a time. Dario and Channa will be here shortly with the last group. After that I don’t know when...”

“Yes.” Athani told him quickly glancing at him and then turning to Mican. “If... if you wish to.”

Mican didn’t hesitate. “It would make me very happy.”

Resumar nodded his head. “Stay with Cemath Aryschanne. No one will interrupt you then.” Resumar leaned over and kissed her softly, nuzzling her cheek and ear as he did. Mican watched as Athani’s face turned wistful and contented, her eyes closing for the briefest of moments. “You have perhaps an hour before we begin moving everyone to the Coven ship that Uncle Vonis has secured.” He stated before smiling and moving away, dragging Avi by his arm, which was a feat in and of itself.

Mican watched Resumar walk away and then he looked back at Athani. “He is a fine man.” He said softly.

Athani met his gaze steadily. “He is my husband, my mate and my very best friend.” She said proudly. “He saved me. Loved me without pause or regret. Without him... without him I would be nothing.”

Mican nodded. “As it is with Na’lia and me. Ever since she came into my life.” He said softly.

That was the opening and Athani stepped closer. “Tell me.” She said softly. “Share it with me and I will tell you of my life.”

Mican nodded. "It is as good a place to start as any." He said.

IRARUZU

Walter cringed as another plasma mortar smashed into the ground only a hundred meters from the front of the Drow estate. He dashed across in front of several windows, the sound of weapons fire zipping over his head as a barrage of small arms peppered the windows behind him as he moved. Walter skidded to a halt next to Hval, who was squatting behind the corner of the wall clutching his 190.

"Their mortars have moved back out of range of our turrets and are finding the range again!" Hval shouted.

"You noticed did you?" Walter barked. "How many?"

Hval shook his head. "Two at least! Maybe three Holy One."

Walter nodded. "That is what I think as well!" He shouted back. "They are short ranged mortars however! They can get within range of the estate until they take out the turrets! Once they take out our defensive turrets they will move forward, target the estate and begin to pound us into oblivion!"

"They outnumber us ten to one Holy One!" Hval snapped. "Why waste the ammunition when they could simply overwhelm us after they destroy the turrets! It would be faster than trying to realign their mortars!"

Walter nodded. "Good point!"

"We will not be able to hold them Holy One!" Hval barked.

Walter slammed his hand down on Hval's shoulder. "Then die well Dragoon!"

Hval nodded his head, his face a stern mask of determination as he gripped his 190A3. "I intend too Holy One! And I will take as many of these dogs with me as I can!"

Walter looked up and then dashed across the open area in the room and skidded around the corner as he headed down the stairs. He saw Ceneia, Daba, Lu'ria and Jennifer huddled behind some heavy furniture they had piled in front of the main door to the estate. Majeir he knew was occupying the entrance to the underground tunnel and watching the exit which Lu'ria and Jennifer had initially escaped out of. The tunnel entrance had never been meant for a dragon to enter, but it had taken a ten second burst of Majeir's intense burning flame to actually melt the metal and concrete enough for her to squeeze into the much larger tram tunnel. He shook his head as he passed the entrance and saw Majeir extend her head and neck out of the now much larger doorway.

Walter! She exclaimed. I do not like the vibrations of the ground Walter.

Walter nodded and let his fingers brush against her snout. "Be strong Majeir. You can't fly because we know they have T19s."

I can burn them before they fire! Majeir complained.

It was Lu'ria who got up and moved next to her new Bonded Sister. No! She barked out within Mindvoice, placing her hands on Majeir's massive head. I will not risk losing you so soon after I have found you! You are safer in the tunnel!

I do not want to die in this tunnel! Majeir announced.

You will not die! Lu'ria snapped. I won't let you die!

Walter turned and moved to where the other three women squatted or knelt behind the makeshift barricade. Daba looked up at him as he knelt on one knee.

"He is not coming is he Holy One." She said softly.

Walter met her eyes. "I don't know." He answered honestly.

"We know he got the message." Ceneia spoke.

Walter nodded. "That does not mean he would have put it all together though."

"You... you are saying that what Lu'ria thinks she feels could be very wrong." Daba said looking at him.

"I don't know what to believe." Walter said. "I... I would have thought he would be here by now. Then again I don't know where in The Wilds the SCIMITAR was when they got the message."

"Or if he and the others feel the same for Lu'ria as she does them." Daba said looking at where her daughter was stroking Majeir's scales. "You do not have to try and make me feel better Holy One. If we are meant to die here, then we are meant to die here. At least I will be with my child..." She looked at Ceneia and reached out to take her hand. "And the love I have waited many years for."

Walter met her amber eyes. "Do not lose hope yet Daba." Walter said.

"The enemy is on our doorstep Holy One." Daba spoke. "I for one... I intend to make them pay for what they have done before I die."

Walter heard the chambering of a fresh power cell in the 190 and looked at Jennifer. She clutched the weapon tightly, a look of unreal determination set on her jaw.

"For what they did to my Drow Mistress... I will kill as many as I am able before I join her." Jennifer spat.

Daba nodded her head in approval. "Aovi." She spoke in Lycavorian.

Walter's head came up when three larger than normal explosions caused the ground to shake and the walls to vibrate.

"They got the turrets!" Hval's voice echoed over their implants. "They got the turrets!"

Walter looked back at Daba and the others. "Prepare yourselves... based on what they have done already they will not leave it to mortars to kill us. They will assault the estate in force with all of their troops to insure their goal is complete this time!"

"Why?" Ceneia asked. "Why do this?"

"Whatever the reason..." Walter told her. "Whatever the reason... let's make sure they know they were in a fight!"

He saw the three women nod and then he turned to look at Lu'ria and Majeir. Lu'ria didn't hesitate and nodded her head, while Majeir's massive head bobbed up and down.

ULU HARBINGER IN RANGE OF IRARUZU

The elven commander of the HARBINGER was pacing his bridge as they closed on the pirate planet. They were under full Shroud and closing the distance by the second. Velnar had been handpicked by Miranda Lorian to command the HARBINGER. Four hundred years in the Union Fleet and countless battles, most recently in the Evolli War where he had earned his commendations for bravery by saving three medical ships that the Evolli decided they were going to destroy out of spite. He hadn't allowed that to happen, and he would be damned if he allowed his Prince to walk into a trap.

"...me a report!" He barked out loudly.

"Kavalian PURUSIAN-Class Heavy Frigate!" His sensor operator called out in response. "Maintaining a low Ecliptic orbit. Barely above the outer atmosphere! Picking up what appears to be some sort of battle on the ground just on the edge of the Deutrino field. Getting spikes that appear to be plasma mortars!"

"Centralize the location?" Velnar snapped.

The woman at the sensor station turned to look at him. "The Deutrino field is making our scans fuzzy Commander, but it is definitely in the location of where the Drow base is supposed to be!"

Velnar nodded his head. "The bastards are trying to hide in the atmosphere!" He stated. "The Prince's STRIKER?"

"No sign of it Commander!" The woman answered immediately. "But we wouldn't pick it up anyway sir!"

"Nubou! Nubou! Nubou!" Velnar swore long and loud causing many of his bridge crew to turn and look at him. Their elven Commander was usually much more reserved and he rarely used profanity of any kind that they knew of, and many had served with him for years. "They jumped before us! They must already be here!"

"They have to detect the Kavalian ship Commander!" She called out. "The STRIKER's sensor array is even better than ours in some ways!"

"Can we burn through the Deutrino field on the surface?" Velnar asked. "Get a message to the Drow base?"

"Yes sir... but we risk exposing ourselves if we do!" She answered instantly. "We'd have to increase power by forty-one percent, and it appears as if the Kavalian Frigate is the thing generating the field! The planet's entire upper atmosphere is saturated with Deutrino particles now!"

“Fuck it!” Velnar barked as he straightened up. “We need to let the Prince know we are here! Communications officer! Spartan 11! Go secure! And do it quickly!”

SPARTAN 11

“...been trying since I spoke with you Andro!” Marci almost shouted. “I can’t get any of them on the board! Not one!”

Andro shook his head as he looked at her holoimage. He had never seen Marci so upset and flustered. This was not something he had wanted to hear. “It’s a prelude to an all out attack Marci!” Andro announced immediately. “It has to be!”

Marci shook her head. “I’ve been trying to raise Armetus or your father as well! Neither of them is answering! Your Uncle’s COM channel is off the grid! When I inquired of the Durcunusaan officer at the base he only told me that they had left with Isra and a full platoon!”

“Left to where?” Andro asked.

“The man didn’t know!” Marci stated. “Andro... Andro something isn’t right! Even with the Level Six Blackout I should still be able to get in contact with someone. None of your mothers are answering! Not even Deia! I got Laustinos in his office and he told me he would look into it!”

“Laustinos?” Andro snapped. “Look into it? He is a whimpering idiotic fool! He will do nothing!”

“Andro... I have a bad feeling about this.” Marci said. “I need to increase the alert of the fleet!”

“Do it!” Andro told her without hesitation. “Alert Level Three! All Fleet groups are to stage to their Line of Departure immediately! All ground units on Earth to full battle readiness!”

“What are you going to do?” Marci asked.

“Our main sensors are being jammed or deflected by a massive Deutrino field that is encompassing almost the entire planet Marci! It is coming from this Kavalian frigate in low orbit!” Sadi spoke now from her seat. “We are only getting small breaks in the field and it appears there is...”

The loud claxon overhead sounded three times in quick succession and Ne’Veha’s head whipped around to look at one of her consoles. “Incoming secure COMS on Spartan 11!” She announced.

“Identify that SirsanGai!” Sadi barked. “No one knows we are here!”

“It... it says it’s coming from a Commander Velnar aboard the LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser...” Ne’Veha was turning as she spoke, but Andro finished her statement.

“The HARBINGER!” He spat. Andro looked at Marci in the image. “I’m going down to Iraruzu and find Walter Marci. I am authorizing you to use whatever means you have to find out what is going on! Any means Marci! Until you have re-established contact with my father or Armetus, you are now in command of the Krypteria and the Intelligence arm of the Union military by my order. You report to no one but me in your actions and I have just approved anything you need to do!”

“Andro that... I will get it done!” She barked.

“Until we find a way to stop the frigate from generating this Deutrino field you will not be able to contact me.” Andro spoke. “Get a warning to my mothers on Kranek and Hadaria that something is about to pop and it isn’t good!”

“Consider it done!” Marci replied as she was moving around to the back of her desk and bringing her control console online. “Watch yourself Andro!”

“I will contact you as soon as I am able.” Andro said. “Spartan 11 out!” Andro reached forward and tapped the console. “Bring up Velnar SirsanGai! Secure Spartan 11!”

The holoimager flickered once more and then the upper body of the HARBINGER’s elven Commander appeared and focused.

“Prince Andro!” Velnar exclaimed as he saw him.

“Commander, explain what you are doing here and do so quickly!” Andro snapped.

“Milord... we detected your emergency Jump six hours ago! Captain Lorian sent us after you in case you needed assistance!” Velnar answered without hesitation.

Andro’s brow furrowed. “Miranda?” He asked.

Velnar nodded his head. “Yes Milord. Admiral O’Connor sent us out into The Wilds to be a Guardian Angel as he called it. We positioned ourselves to be able to respond to several different locations and then we detected your jump. The sensors on the ARIZONA are calibrated differently Milord, and we were able to detect your jump even while you were Shrouded. Captain Lorian ordered me to bring the HARBINGER after you.”

“The ARIZONA’s Attack Wing is no longer at Dreamland?” Andro asked stunned at this knowledge.

Velnar shook his head. “No sire... we... Milord... we are detecting what appears to be plasma mortar explosions near the location of the Drow estate. There is a Kavalian frigate in low orbit that is generating...”

“Yes I know... it is generating the Deutrino field!” Andro barked. “Velnar... I’m going to the surface! Walter is down there! My Drow mate is down there!” Andro saw Velnar’s eyes grow a little wider. “The Kavalians are trying to kill them and advance their plans against the Union! Every Drow outpost we have in The Wilds is off the board! The Kavalians are moving against the us! It has to be!”

“They... Milord that is... but why?” Velnar gasped.

“I don’t know and I don’t care!” Andro snapped. “Velnar... make that frigate disappear and then stand by to receive further orders from Sadi!”

Velnar stood up straighter and nodded. “It will be done Milord!”

Andro leaned over and laid a blistering kiss on Sadi and then Ne’Veha. “Take us down KertaGai! Drop us right on top of the bastards and then provide whatever cover you can to Walter and Lu’ria!”

“What about you and Carisia?” Ne’Veha asked.

Andro turned and saw Carisia pull her matte black helmet onto her head. There were now crimson and gold lines that extended across her cheek guards on both sides as well as along the top of the helmet. The plumed crest was the same color as her raven black hair and stretched well down past her shoulders. He saw her smile, her cobalt blue vampire eyes and the tips of her vampiric fangs very visible. He smiled and turned back to Ne’Veha, nuzzling her elven ear with firmness and love. “We will be fine.” He stated. He turned quickly and nuzzled Sadi’s cheek once more. “Fly like the wind KertaGai.” He said.

Sadi nodded. “The Deutrino Field will disrupt our Shroud when we enter the atmosphere my love. Hold on tight!”

Andro nodded. “It can’t be helped.” He said. “Part of our life... our future is down there and I won’t forsake it for anything.”

“On our way.” Sadi stated.

IRARUZU WEST OF THE DROW ESTATE

“Move in from the west now!” The Kavalian commander yelled to his officer as he lowered his field glasses and turned to Leruk who knelt beside him. “Their defensive turrets are down Leruk.” He stated. “I will begin my assault from the west. Take your force in from the south through the timber. Use the depression to attack along the rear of the building. You can make your way right up to the back!”

Leruk nodded. “I have distributed the T19s evenly Major.” He spoke as he came to his feet.

“You are sure you only saw the one dragon?” The major asked.

Leruk nodded. “They must have it hiding in the structure somehow.” He stated.

The major nodded. “The team we sent to the spaceport found the bodies of our missile team. They say one of them was... one of them had begun to get his skin peeled from him! It had to be the older Drow whore! They will know we have T19s and will keep the dragon under cover.”

“It helps us!” Leruk said. “If we are lucky we can bury the creature!”

“Bury the dragon but I want them alive Leruk!” The major snapped. “No matter the cost... I want them alive! I am going to rape and kill that Drow whore myself for what she has done to my men!”

“It will cost us many!” Leruk reminded him.

“Not if we progress quickly!” The major answered. “Now get moving!”

PURUSIAN-CLASS HEAVY FRIGATE

“...attack has begun sir!” The tactical officer called out.

“Good. I am growing tired of this planet.” The captain answered as he looked up from the data pad he was reading. “Prepare our transports to retrieve our ground team and...”

“Captain!” The sensor operator barked out as his vertically slit eyes went wide. “Captain I have a contact!”

“Identify!” The Captain spoke coming to his feet.

“Union ship! STRIKER Dragon Class!” The man barked. “She’s making a run for the surface!” The man’s eyes went wide. “Captain! It matches with one of the VF Codes we got from Command!”

“Which one?” The captain asked.

“Sir! It matches to the Crown Prince Androcles!” The operator barked turning in his chair. “The Crown Prince’s STRIKER is here sir!”

The Captain’s eyes were wide. Many things flashed through his mind at this information. They had received many Verification Friendly Command Codes from the Lycavorian traitor and until now, they had not picked up any of them. If he destroyed the STRIKER DT of the Crown Prince, he would be viewed as a hero since KFI command had never been able to nail down his exact location. He made his decision quickly and without real thought.

“Weapons!” He barked out. “Lock forward Anvil Cannons on the STRIKER and prepare to fire! Load tubes one and three with full yield warheads and...”

Captain!” The sensor operator barked out again. The captain of the Kavalian ship turned his head so quickly at the sound of real fear in the man’s voice that he tweaked his neck.

“Speak!” He yelled.

“Captain! LEONIDAS II-Strike Cruiser has just de-shrouded off our aft quarter!” The man screamed.

“What?” The captain shouted. “Impossible!”

“Captain... they are powering forward weapons!” The sensor operator screamed.

“Evasive!” The Kavalian Captain roared. “Evasive hard to port! Hard to port! Defensive measures!” It wasn’t in time by any stretch of the imagination.

HARBINGER

“Captain the Kavalian frigate is preparing to fire!” The sensor operator snapped.

“Not on my watch you don’t!” Velnar snarled coming to his feet.

“Forward MK9s locked!” The weapons officer spoke crisply.

Velnar stood just in front of his command chair with his hands behind his back and nodded. “Forward MK batteries fire! Stand by Mark22Bs! Four missiles from launchers one and two! Full plasma matter yield! I want nothing left of that ship but atoms! Fire!”

There were five large MK9 Alpha Series Type One Plasma batteries in the bow of a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser. The Type One MK9 was the heaviest ship mounted weapon that Union ships carried. A single blast from one of these turrets could rip through the hull of nearly any unshielded or armored ship as if it was paper. The concussive force alone was powerful enough to crush the life from men or women near the impact point. All five of the HARBINGERS forward MK9s fired at one time in a blinding flash of yellow/red color. Five single lines of Plasma reached out for the Kavalian frigate and struck the ship dead center of its superstructure.

The PURUSIAN-Class frigates were not designed to go head to head with a behemoth like the HARBINGER and five concentrated beams of plasma seared through the frigates light shields as if they weren’t there and gutted the Kavalian frigate like a fruit. The forward section of the frigate burst away from the rear section as secondary explosions rocked the two hundred meter section of hull. Flashes could be seen through the hundreds of portal windows as interior decompression ravaged the ship from the inside. As the concussive wave of the five plasma beams smashed into the Tri-Cobalt engine core of the frigate, the force field protecting the core failed instantly and the entire rear section of the ship blossomed into a small sun. Six hundred of the frigates nine hundred member crew died instantly in the resulting engine explosion which completely vaporized the rear section.

“Missiles locked on forward section Captain!” The weapons officer barked out.

“Reading numerous life signs in the forward section Captain! They have multiple hull breaches!” The sensor operator shouted. “Their atmospheric shields are holding right now. Emergency power has kicked in.”

Velnar shook his head slowly as his dark eyes watched their holoimaging Heads Up Display. “Nubou them! They should have thought about that before they decided to attack our Prince and our Union!” Velnar growled angrily. “Mark22Bs! Fire!”

“Missiles away!” The weapons officer called as his finger stabbed down on his control console.

A total of eight smallish missiles launched from either side of the HARBINGER's ventral mounted Mark22B launchers. Smallish in that the missiles were only six meters in length and perhaps four meters thick, yet they packed a horrific punch. Two hundred kilos of pure, refined Pallidium. The most powerful explosive in the Union arsenal. All of it packed into the single warhead the missile carried at speeds that almost could not be tracked. Seven seconds after the missiles launched they impacted the forward section of the Kavalian frigate and detonated. The resulting explosion was not as brilliant in nature, but equally effective. The forward section of the Kavalian frigate appeared to swell from the inside and then almost sixteen hundred kilos of Pallidium exploded and blew what remained of the ship into tiny pieces that would burn up in the atmosphere for the next two months.

Velnar turned his head. “Launch the Ready Squadron!” He barked out the command. “I want a company of Spartans on the surface like yesterday! Full combat load! Anything that even looks Kavalian... kill it!”

“Troop ships are already loaded and powering up sir!”

“Tight beam COM to the ARIZONA!” Velnar snapped as he returned to his chair. “Let Captain Lorian know what is going on and tell her to keep her eyes open! Give me a CAP patrol out to ten million kilometers! Anything that enters the system I want to know about and I want an immediate solution for our weapons! Let's move people! The sibfla has hit the fan, and our Crown Prince is about to make an even bigger mess than we just did!”

IRARUZU

Andro leaned close to the front of his saddle as Elynth tore across the treetops at nearly two hundred and fifty kilometers an hour. Her wings were folded back and she was expertly using the height they had exited the STRIKER from to glide in at a lesser angle and therefore keep her speed constant. They were almost upon the estate and Andro turned his head to see Anthar slightly behind and to Elynth's left, keeping pace and matching her every move. It helped that they were mates and Anthar could simply link his mind to her and know what she was going to do at the same time she did. His azure wolf eyes easily saw Carisia's small form leaning forward much the same as him, her palms spread across Anthar's broad shoulders, allowing him to feed off her own Mindvoice abilities. As with Elynth and himself, it was the perfect harmony of two powerful minds. Their psychic shield kept the skin peeling wind from harming him and he turned his head forward once more, reaching out with his wolf eyes.

Enylarcopri! The mortars! That is where they will have their T19s. Andro barked out within Mindvoice. Remove them before they fire again or threaten us! Break now!

There was no hesitation in the least and Anthar peeled away with jaw dropping speed and dipped even lower to the tall treetops, slowly extending his huge wings out to garner lift as he leveled off from their descent. Seeing that they were approaching properly and were as equally prepared as he was Andro turned his attention back to the open field in front of the Drow Estate. At this moment, Carisia was nearest to him in fighting skill, her vampire speed and ability to blur making her the obvious choice to join him on the ground. Sadi's skills were improving everyday, though she worked on her Mindvoice powers more than her unarmed combat skills. Ne'Veha had yet to begin spending time with them training as she had only come into their lives days ago, but Andro knew she would join them as well. The mortars and T19s he would leave to Carisia, and he would tend to the Kavalians dogs attacking the Estate.

Sister! Andro snarled out within Mindvoice feeling her heart beating calm and collected just as his was. Perfectly in tune with each other.

I count sixty-seven still living! Elynth barked out. Half of them are in the trees to the west and moving towards the structure!

Torma Two One! Just as we did on Hagnar Three! Those in the trees I will leave to you sister! Walter will know what to do when he sees us! Andro barked.

They did not outnumber us four to one on Hagnar Three Andro! Elynth quipped.

The Evolli expected us! The Kavalians do not! It will work! Andro snapped.

Then here we go! Elynth shouted as she snapped out her wings and rose a few meters higher. Then she rolled over onto her back just as they cleared the trees and appeared in the huge cleared field, dropping until she was only three meters from the ground with Andro upside down in the saddle.

The Kavalian major lowered his macrobinoculars and cursed under his breath as another wave of seven of his men went down under withering weapons fire from the first and second floors of the building. He counted at least one weapon on the second floor and at least four on the bottom floor. Whoever these Drow were, they had cut a killing zone around their main estate building as there was hardly any cover anywhere for his men to hide as they dashed across the open ground and through the thin treeline. Half of them were in the open area using what cover they could to bound past each other while covering each small group. The others were racing through the treeline trying to get the defenders to split their fire in two directions. He lifted his wrist mounted COM unit.

“Mortar teams! Target the roof of the building!” He screamed. “The second floor! Direct fire into the windows where the bastard is killing our men!” The major looked at his COM unit when he received no immediate answer. “Mortar teams! Direct fire into the building’s second floor! Why...”

“Nooo... arggghhh... look... out...!”

The major’s eyes went wide when he heard the unmistakable sound of an angry dragon and the distinctive sound of that dragon unleashing a sizzling stream of deadly flame. He whirled around and lifted his macrobinoculars back to where his mortar teams were set up a kilometer away. His blood went icy cold when he saw them on the face of the ridge, a huge red dragon in their midst and laying waste to their positions with his wings, talons, fangs and searing hot flame while the blurring motion told him a vampire was among their number as well. The Major saw the flash in the sky even through the lenses and he pulled them away from his eyes and looked skyward. He was then able to witness the death of the Kavalian frigate in orbit, just as nearly everyone on the planet did as well. He heard the unmistakable sound of another trumpeting dragon and whirled back around only to see the obsidian scaled beast flying directly at his men from the east upside down. He saw the dragon’s maw open even from this distance and the orange tinted stream of superheated breath blistered across the ground.

“NO! NO!” The major screamed as he broke into a run for where his men were.

It was the most gut wrenching stop he had ever conducted and six months ago it was something he would never had attempted. Anthar didn’t slow down as they tore across the tree tops; if anything he increased his speed somewhat. His magenta colored eyes were narrowed to slits, but they took in all around them. The nerves on his scales fed his brain data on wind and speed and course, and it was the training of the last months that allowed him to bring it all together as one.

Sister! Anthar called out.

I’m ready! Carisia barked.

We go!

Anthar let out a bellow of rage, snapped out his wings to both sides and came to an abrupt and quite heart stopping halt ten meters above the three plasma mortars the Kavalians had set up. Twelve heads came up at the massive rush of air and twelve sets of eyes went wide just as Carisia leaped from her saddle and Anthar cut loose with a stream of nearly four thousand degree flame directly at the mortar crew under him.

Carisia had jumped from higher heights and her small five foot two stature made her an impossible target to hit. In the middle of her leap she drew her dual fighting knives and in another blink her booted feet smashed into the chest of the largest Kavalian, driving him down into the hard packed surface. Even though she weighed barely more than a hundred pounds, her momentum and forward motion was enough to crush every bone in the Kavalian's chest and shoulders as she flexed her legs, adding to the force of the impact. Her vampire hearing detected the sound of his bones snapping and she sprang into motion without thought.

She was a whirlwind of deadly motion, blurring to the next closest Kavalian who stood there astonished at what was happening. His astonishment would be forever etched on his face as Carisia's dual blades flashed in a single instant and both sides of his thick neck were opened to the midday air. As his blood fountained in two arcs away from his body, Carisia was already blurring again. The third Kavalian was struggling to get his weapon unlimbered from his holster and he looked up as he brought the hand blaster up. The blurring motion ceased directly in front of him and the much smaller vampire female appeared. Her hands caught his wrist and twisted savagely and he screamed as his bones burst from his skin and the weapon dropped from his grasp. Carisia stepped towards him, slashing her right blade across his exposed throat while spinning to the side to move around him. As she turned fully, she reached back and buried her left blade into the Kavalian's lower back, using her vampire strength to rip upwards several inches before yanking it free.

The fourth Kavalian had lifted his weapon and targeted her. As he pulled the trigger of his rifle Carisia blurred once more and he sent eight rounds punching into the back of his fellow soldier. Carisia didn't give him another chance, stepped under his arms and brought both her knives slashing down. One blade opened his arm from his elbow to his shoulder, the other burying itself in his chest. With no pause in her spinning motion, Carisia's right hand dropped to her thigh and she yanked the K12 from its holster. As she completed moving she jammed the K12 into the Kavalian's neck and pulled the trigger twice in quick succession. The kinetic rounds blew out the other side of his neck, sending out bloody fur and flesh and showering the ground beside him while nearly decapitating him.

As Carisia whirled to face the last of the mortar crews Anthar was now fully on the ground looming behind her. The four Kavalian troops had their weapons leveled at them, but it was easy enough to see the shimmering blue psychic shield surrounding both of them. Even as they pulled the triggers on their weapons, Carisia and Anthar were moving as one. His right wing slashed forward over the top of his bonded sister as she rolled to the left. The hard bony cartilage that was the front edge of his wings smashed into the first Kavalian's head, crushing his skull and flipping his body through the air like one would kick a ball. As the last three began to pull back on their triggers Carisia extended her hand with the K12 and pulled the trigger. Five kinetic rounds walked their way up one Kavalian's lower body beginning at his groin. As each round struck him he staggered back as if hit by a massive fist. Blood was erupting from four massive wounds before the fifth round entered his screaming mouth and blew out the back of his skull. Carisia was already blurring as she rolled to the side and Anthar brought his left foreleg down in a devastating swipe. The third Kavalian had been trying to track Carisia with his rifle and never saw the four razor like talons. Anthar's talons severed the man's arm and dug six inch deep furrows into his chest and abdomen until his foot slapped into the dirt once more. The Kavalian died silently, Anthar's talons having torn his throat open and sliced through his voice box.

The fourth Kavalian was furthest away and did the only thing his horrified mind could think of. He turned and threw away his weapons as he began to run. True to their feline nature Kavalians could run very fast, nearly as fast as a wolf on four legs. Carisia had the advantage of her momentum and vampire speed however. The Kavalian had gone twelve steps before the shape appeared to his side and he felt an agonizing pain rip through his leg. He lost his balance and slammed hard into the unyielding ground rolling several times before smashing into the base of the tree. His hands reached down to grip his now crippled leg as blood squirted from the four inch long slice in the back of his thigh and knee. Carisia's blade had severed his hamstring and all the tendons and ligaments at the back of his knee.

His eyes were filled with fear as he watched the smallish vampire female blur until she was only a meter away from him. His eyes grew terrified when Anthar's massive head lowered to just above her right shoulder, his magenta eyes burning with anger. Carisia stared down at the man, her blood seething at what she knew had happened here.

"No one hurts my Drow Mistress and those I love!" Carisia snarled savagely, baring her vampiric fangs. "No one!"

“Wait!” The Kavalian screamed. “I didn’t...”

“Burn him brother!” Carisia snapped.

“NOOOOOOO!” The Kavalian's screams died with the rush of flame and heat as Anthar didn’t hesitate and cut loose with a short but exceedingly lethal stream of fire.

Carisia stared at the writhing form for only a few seconds before turning and leaping to Anthar’s back. As the dragon armor locked her legs in place she placed her palms on Anthar's sides. She heard the trumpet that announced Elynth’s arrival and both she and Anthar turned and could only watch with awe and adoring eyes as the two they loved most in this universe brought their vengeance to bear.

Walter was the first to notice the dwindling weapons fire as he peeked above the scarred table he was using for protection. As his eyes cleared the edge of the table he heard the dragon trumpet and he recognized it without question for he had heard it many times before. His head came all the way up as the weapons fire peppering the front of the estate had ceased almost completely.

“Make my brother proud boy!” Walter whispered to no one but himself and the thin air around him. “Make my brother proud!”

“He’s here!” Hval’s voice screamed over their COM implants. “The Prince is here!”

Walter turned back slowly and looked at Daba whose amber eyes were focused on him and wide in stunned realization. He smiled. “I guess the Yara Parma was right after all.” He stated softly.

Daba’s head snapped around and she saw Lu'ria standing beside Majeir with an almost dreamlike expression on her face. Her amber eyes were wide as for the first time she felt the full force of Androcles’s Mindvoice presence engulf her. Seconds after she felt that, she could feel Sadi and Ne'Veha reaching for her... and then finally the one she most wanted to meet in the diminutive Carisia.

“By the gods Holy One!” Hval’s voice echoed. “I can not believe what I am seeing!”

All of them broke for the front of the building and cautiously peered around and over the shattered remains of the windows and their frames. What Daba saw would forever be engraved into her memory, for this was the man who would claim her daughter as his own. Her amber eyes were wide as she watched.

“A jal nindel zhah orthae!” Daba gasped loudly. (By all that is Holy)

Walter glanced at her. “My father once called them, father and son, he called them Talis rie Annur.” He told her softly. “Forces of Nature.”

Walter caught the movement out of the corner of his eye and saw five figures rise up from the shattered remains of the window frames and bringing weapons to bear. “Down!” He bellowed. “Get down!”

Walter leaped for Daba just as the weapons opened up and he felt three hot lances of fire strike his side as he threw his weight upon Daba and buried her. Lu'ria reacted to Walter’s warning but much slower than she normally would have because of what she felt from Andro and the others. She was still not skilled with using their psychic shield either and as she turned she released her control of it and the shimmering blue shield dropped from around her body. Daba grunted from the impact of Walter’s weight on top of her and looked up just in time to see Lu'ria take four rounds to her chest and abdomen.

“Lu'ria! Lu'ria no!” She screamed.

Sister no! Majeir’s voice echoed Daba’s even as she winced with the force of the strikes against her psychic shield. NO!!! Die! Die! Die! Majeir bellowed in anger as her head turned towards the windows and she let loose with a stream of searing flame at the windows while she struggled to bring her body out of the tunnel entrance.

Ceneia and Jennifer whirled before Walter had finished his warning and were bringing their weapons up just as projectile rounds began to dance across the floor causing them to roll away and seek cover. Majeir’s blast of flame slammed into the window frames, igniting it instantly and setting the five Kavalian troops outside the windows instantly on fire. So close were they that two of them were charred to brittle bone within seconds as the others screamed out their agony.

“LU'RIA!” Daba screamed as she finally pushed Walter’s groaning body from atop her and scrambled to her feet.

“DON'T MOVE!” The voice roared.

Majeir's head snapped around and saw Leruk standing over the top of Lu'ria now, his weapon leveled at her head, the second Kavalian with his rifle leveled at them. She inhaled and prepared to unleash another jet of flame but he held up his hand.

"Open your mouth dragon and she dies!" Leruk barked. "I know you understand me! You will kill me... but you will kill her as well!"

Majeir's rage filled eyes glared at Leruk, but she kept her mouth closed. Daba began moving again and Leruk lifted his other hand.

"I said don't move Drow whore!" He screamed causing Daba to stop in her tracks. "You have caused far too many problems for us these past days! Now it is time for you to make full amends for the lives of my comrades who you have killed."

Leruk motioned with his head at the Kavalian soldier who fired two quick rounds into Jennifer's chest. Her body was blown backwards with the force of the rounds, blood spraying the wall behind her as she slammed into the wall and was still.

"It was me!" Daba shouted. "I skinned your friend on that building! Kill me instead!"

Leruk met her gaze. "I'll get to you Drow whore!" He snarled in reply. "You came all the way to this planet for her and I want to know why before I kill her!" He asked lowering his weapon closer to Lu'ria's forehead as he positioned his body with his back into the destroyed main foyer of the estate home. Her eyes were closed and blood was rapidly pooling on the floor under her from the four bullet wounds.

"Tell me why!" He screamed.

Torma Two One.

It was a relatively simple maneuver that Andro and Elynth had named and mastered when Andro was thirteen and Elynth fourteen. It was a maneuver they could do in their sleep, and it was also a maneuver that could have devastating results if executed properly. During the Evolli War they had tried this maneuver on a company of elite Evolli Shock troops. It had not worked then because the Evolli had been expecting dragons and were prepared for the type of combat that would ensue. The Kavalian troops however, they were not so lucky.

Even upside down Elynth could direct her stream of flame tinged superheated breath with exacting control. As she burned a scorching path towards the bunched together Kavalian troops, engulfing seven of them in the stream's path, Andro released the Dragon Armor braces around his legs and fell away. While Elynth sped over the top of the now burning field, Andro rolled in midair, extracted and extended his Nehtes from its holster and then rammed it into the ground as he landed in a cloud of dust and ash. In that split second he channeled all of his considerable Mindvoice power into the Nehtes and through it. As the razor sharp spearhead fully buried itself nearly eighteen inches into the ground, a psychic ripple expanded outward with devastating results. The half dozen Kavalian troops nearest to Andro caught the full brunt of this ripple as it pulsed through them shattering bones and pulverizing organs. The force of the ripple dissipated quickly but it allowed Andro the time he needed.

The Kavalian troops who were only staggered by the ripple of enormous Mindvoice power watched as Andro stood to his full height and glared at them from under his helmet. The crested plume, now with five different colors of hair moving slightly, the last one Andro adding only the previous night and was a silvery color that extended past his shoulders. His azure eyes were now wolf eyes and his dual fangs were bared in a snarl. They watched as he lifted his left arm and called forth his Shi Viska from Flat Space and then nineteen Kavalian troops lifted their weapons and sent a furious barrage of kinetic projectiles screaming at the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union.

Andro dropped to one knee bringing up his Shi Viska in front of him even as the rounds began to impact his psychic shield. He clenched his teeth as he concentrated and brought forth more of his MV ability and reinforced his shield. The barrage was tremendous in its intensity, causing the front of his psychic shield to flare a brilliant white color even as many of the Kavalians moved closer and closer to him, confident that they would fell this supposed Crown Prince with unique powers they did not understand. He was without his dragon, and alone and there was no way he could stand against all of them.

Only three of them would survive this confrontation, and two of them would never walk again.

Whether by chance or fate, it seemed as if the power cells on the Kavalian rifles all went dry within seconds of each other. As each of the troops began to reach for a reload the level of fire slackened and as they turned to look at where the Prince was as they reloaded, their eyes went wide in disbelief.

Andro slowly rose back to his feet, his psychic shield still shimmering and his left arm lowered slowly until his Shi Viska was pointed at the ground. His azure eyes were nearly glowing now as he surrendered himself to the power coursing through him completely. His left arm snapped back up in a blink and the Shi Viska launched, humming out its eerie delight as it sliced through the weapons and chests of the three Kavalian troops closest to Andro before speeding off. Andro knew Kavalians were made of sterner stuff than Evolli and as one hand reached back and cleared Iphan Rie Aellseleum from its scabbard on his back, his right hand dropped and yanked the K12 from its holster. It was a complete rout from that moment on.

Androcles Leonidas had sat and listened to his father once. He was only ten years old and it was just months before he departed for Sparta to enter his Agoge. Torma and Elynth had flown them to the peak among the many mountain ranges on Apo Prime and as he looked down on Tuya he listened to his father.

“We are different Androcles my son. You and I. You will always be stronger than your brothers and sisters because of the time you were conceived in your mother’s womb. It was a time of high emotion for both of us. We had just discovered each other again, and we let go of ourselves and surrendered to the instincts inside all Lycavorians. We surrendered to our feral instincts. The instincts that so many have forgotten through the years because they thought it was what my father and grandfather wanted.” Martin spoke softly.

“This was not what they wanted father?” Andro asked.

Martin shook his head. “We thought to better ourselves and we pulled away from who we are at our core. We must learn to harness the animal within us; harness and use that strength and power. We are wolves in the form of men Andro. It is what made your grandfather and the Spartans so dominant in their time. They embraced our feral side in battle, but they learned to control it as well. No retreat. No surrender. That was their way.”

“But our soldiers now... they are like this.” Andro said.

Martin nodded. “Yes... because they embrace it more than they ever have. Because of me. Because of your Uncle Danny and all the others who fought with me on Earth.”

“I have this instinct father? Like you?”

Martin turned to look at his azure eyed son. “Oh yes. Your blood is as pure as mine. As your mother’s. This does not make you better than others; never fall into that trap. You are only as strong as the man or women to your left and right. Your blood... it means you must lead them with your heart.”

Andro nodded. “Fight with my head. Lead with my heart. You have taught all of us this father.”

Martin nodded his head. “Yes I have... but with the exception of Denali... it will mean more to you in the future because of your blood and the pureness of it. It makes you stronger. Your bond with Elynth makes you stronger. No Lycavorian or elf has ever bonded with their dragon brother or sister while still in the womb. You are special son. Elynth is special. You will know when it is time to fully embrace that feral instinct inside you, but you must learn to harness as I said. It can be your greatest strength. It can help you defend those who need you to defend them.”

“How will I know when it is time father?” Andro asked.

“You will know son.” Martin spoke nodding his head. “You will feel it inside you, screaming to come out. To act on your instincts! Follow those instincts always! I did not act once and it almost cost me your mother. My Anome. My soul. I swore never to hesitate again Andro. You must never hesitate either son, for in hesitation there is death.”

Androcles Leonidas did not hesitate that night on Alba Tau, and everything his father told him had come to pass. He embraced the feral side of his blood and unleashed the animal within. They all did that night. It was the only thing that saved them then. Androcles Leonidas did not hesitate now either.

“My turn!” Andro snarled loudly. Androcles embraced that feral side once more. He felt it swell within him, engulf him within its arms and he let it guide his actions. There was no hesitation, no pause and no regret. Androcles Leonidas attacked.

It was a beautiful thing to watch if you excluded the spray of blood and the sounds of screaming and dying men. If you dismissed the crunch of bone and the bark of the K12; if you dismissed the scene of arms and legs and even heads being severed from living bodies. Andro was a tumultuous storm sweeping over a portion of calm land. Iphan Rie Aellseleum spun in wide sweeping circles that almost transcended time and space. The Dragon Armor laced blade was impossible to see let alone block or parry, always where it was supposed to be, always with a precision born of countless hours of regimented training and the unique Mindvoice power to encompass everything around him. Every time it struck flesh and bone, it was a fatal wound. Every boom of the K12 Kinetic Magnum spelled death. It was an exquisite choreograph of pure unblemished skill and power.

His psychic shield flared almost to a transparent blue as he moved. It formed around his limbs like a second skin, adding an additional layer of armor to the Mark IV ArmorPly he already wore. His movements as natural, smooth and graceful as any ballet ever performed. It was as if he danced to the sound of some music that only he heard, yet you need only look to where Elynth was to see that two hearts and minds danced to that same tune. Seven Kavalians fell under Iphan Rie Aellseleum before Andro's Shi Viska came whipping from behind him just as he ducked down. With the blades fully extended, the shield turned vertical and cleaved a Kavalian soldier completely in two before speeding off once more. Two barks of the K12 and two more Puma Bane soldiers fell. A powerful slash of Iphan Rie Aellseleum and a head was sent flying. Blood soaked the ground behind him, as did the bodies of the Kavalian troops. Nothing would stand in his way. Nothing could stand in his way. These men were here to hurt someone who would share his life into the future. Someone who was more than dear to him in many ways. A woman who would share his life and the life of his Anome. Androcles Leonidas would never allow harm to come to his Anome. Like his mother was to his father, Sadi was the most beautiful and precious thing in the universe to him. Whatever caused her pain then caused him pain. If harm were to come to Lu'ria... it would cause his Ilythiiri tessai pain. Lu'ria's pain would be his pain... and his pain would be Sadi's pain. He would never smell Lu'ria's sweet honey melon scent or feel her white satin hair in his hands. This would cause his Sadi pain. (Drow Blossom)

That was something Androcles Leonidas would not allow.

They were here to hurt those he called family and friends. And they would pay for that folly in spades now. Andro completed a final spin, the K12 twirling in his hand until it seated in the holster on his thigh. He faced the last five Kavalians who were scrambling to reload their weapons still. Thirteen seconds and fourteen of their comrades lay dead or dying on the ground around this terrible creature before them. Their eyes locked with Andro's as his motion stopped and he looked at them, his azure eyes as cruel as anything these hardened fighters had ever seen. They saw him twirl Iphan Rie Aellseleum in his right hand, the blood stained blade whistling in the air until it was seated in the scabbard on his back. Their eyes filled with confusion at this for he was now unarmed. This false thought only urged them to reload quicker and just as the first man brought his weapon up once more they saw the silvery diamond marquise shaped psychic projectiles form in the palms of both his hands. The shapes appeared to be roughly two inches long and perhaps an inch wide. Seeing these shapes caused all of them to pause once more, so very confused and effectively signing their own death warrants. Andro's hands snapped forward and the two psychic projectiles shot from his hands with uncharitable speed. The chests of two men blew apart instantly, their bodies launching backwards with savage force until they fell nearly ten meters behind the remaining three, gaping wide holes in their chests that appeared to have been fused open. As three heads came back around two more psychic projectiles erupted forward, and two more chests blew apart, throwing their bodies back with incredible force.

The last Kavalian kept his eyes on Andro as fear unlike anything he had experienced in his lifetime gripped his body. There was no compassion in those azure eyes. No reasoning or sympathy or pity. There was only death. He had fought High Coven soldiers and Immortals many times, yet never had he seen such pure, unadulterated death. The Puma Bane soldier did the only thing his limited mind could think of. He placed the barrel of his rifle under his chin and blew his brains over the scorched earth behind him.

"Nubous coward!" Andro hissed loudly.

"LU'RIA!" The woman's voice reached his wolf ears causing him to spin around and look at the shattered and pocked home with glowing azure blue eyes. That word galvanized him instantly. With a silver/white flash of light the massive raven black wolf appeared racing for the structure.

Sadi alone had felt the tremendous tidal wave of emotions through her mate. Only she was bound to him so tightly it allowed this. She had felt every emotion, seen his mind's eye, and what he felt for her, for all of them, but primarily for her. She turned her helmeted head back slowly from the field after witnessing what he had done and her eyes changed to her wolf eyes, her fangs growing slowly. If Sadi Leonidas had any doubts, questions that resided deep down about what her role in this life was going to be, seeing and feeling what Andro had done quickly lined up those doubts and questions and shattered them for all time. She was his soul, his core, and in being these things Sadi realized he was the same to her. The gods had kept them apart until they were ready, until he was old enough to fully grasp his gifts, and when it was time they had brought them back together. She could feel Andro's blood swirling through her, melding with her own so pure and unblemished, infusing her with his will and determination. And Sadi Leonidas spread her arms and embraced it.

Sadi looked out the windshield of the STRIKER and her jungle green wolf eyes grew wide as she saw the ghostly beautiful face of the blond haired woman. Her green eyes glowed brightly even as her misted body drifted before her like an apparition. Her ghostly face was animated and smiling brilliantly.

"Mother?" Sadi whispered softly.

Ne'Veha's head came around from where she was monitoring her instruments. "Sadi?" She asked.

Sadi watched the ghostly figure nod her head and lift a hand to blow a kiss before the mist was taken by the wind and it was gone. Sadi blinked and before her she saw the ground and Elynth's huge body smashing her way through the trees, her flame tinged superheated breath scorching Kavalian troops at every turn.

"Sadi my love?" Ne'Veha gasped again causing Sadi to look at her. Ne'Veha's eyes grew a little wider when she saw those jungle green wolf eyes. They burned with intensity and passion and Ne'Veha felt her own elven blood begin a slow smolder.

Sadi smiled at her, baring her wolf fangs. "Let us end this SirsanGai!" Sadi spoke. "Lu'ria is injured badly. Andro is going to her now but we need to end this and land quickly."

Ne'Veha nodded. "Yes."

Sadi turned back to the front of the STRIKER and focused her eyes on Elynth. Elynth! She reached out within Mindvoice.

Elynth's large head snapped around and looked skyward directly at where Sadi had the STRIKER hovering. KertaGai! She barked out. Sadi... I feel it! So powerful! So wonderful!

I as well Elynth! Your armor! Extend your armor! I'm going to blow those Kavalians bastards to hell! Lu'ria needs us!

Do it! Elynth barked out. I can not kill them all for they cower and run in fear! Elynth trumpeted out her distaste. I am only a female Kavalian dogs! You run from a female!

Sadi smiled at Elynth's words and turned to Ne'Veha. "SirsanGai! Missiles! Both pods!"

Ne'Veha's hands flew over the weapons console activating the pods on either side of the STRIKER. She turned back to Sadi. "Extended and locked!"

Sadi reached out and touched her panel. "For Ilythiiri tessai." Sadi muttered before stabbing her finger down on the panel.

Anthar and Carisia landed on the edge of the field, their own Dragon Armor extended at Sadi's silent warning and they watched as twenty-three missiles plowed into the stretch of tree line. The ground heaved up and shook violently as the missiles devastated the terrain. Trees that were burning were torn asunder and shattered into lethal fragments that peppered the air all around. Kavalian troops that were hiding behind large trees were shredded as these same splinters punched into their bodies at lethal velocities. Through it all, Elynth walked calmly towards the edge of the clearing, the fragments bouncing harmlessly off her Dragon Armor encased body and her psychic shield.

Anthar could only watch with unabashed love and pride as his beautiful obsidian mate finally came into the clearing and left the exploding and burning timber behind. He watched her lift her right foreleg and flick it outward, the upper body of the Kavalian troop she had crushed moments ago slipping off her talons and sailing through the air to land many meters away.

Yuck! Elynth announced.

Carisia ran up to Elynth and Anthar extended his snout towards her. "Elynth! Are you hurt?" She exclaimed out of breath.

Ah! Elynth spat. I will need to clean my talons when I am done, but no Enylarcopri, I am not hurt!

Anthar watched as her armor began to retract and he waited until it had retreated full into the saddle before using his snout to firmly rub her neck and wings. Are you certain Elynth? He asked her.

Elynth bobbed her head up and down even as the tips of her wings twitched in delight at the touch of her mate. Yes! We must go to the home! Lu'ria is injured and Andro may need our help!

Anthar looked back slowly to the field and the bodies that were strewn about from Andro's battle. Help? He spoke. He may need something... but help from us is not one of them. You saw what... what he did? He asked turning back.

Elynth met his eyes with stunning yellow/gold dragon eyes. Does he frighten you my handsome mate? He does not frighten you? Anthar asked.

I will never fear my Bonded Brother. She answered proudly. Scold him perhaps... but never fear him. Come... we must go. Sadi will land nearby.

Elynth... is she... Carisia began to speak.

Elynth lowered her head and touched her snout to Carisia's cheek. Never doubt his love for any of you Enylarcopri. Like his father, he would shatter worlds for you if need be. Come!

Elynth cocked her powerful legs and flung herself into the sky just as Carisia leaped onto Anthar's back and he followed.

"Tell me why!" Leruk screamed once more.

The coughing sound drew everyone's attention and Leruk's eyes turned to watch Walter lift himself slightly from the floor. "Fool boy!" Walter spat as he rolled himself over onto his back, his hand holding his side. His fingers were bloody and the entire left side of his abdomen was soaked in dark blood. "I see you are just as nubous dense as your father!"

Leruk glared at him from across the room. "You know nothing!" He screamed.

Walter laughed gently as he pushed himself up against the wall. Ceneia didn't care and went to his side, the lone Kavalian shifting his weapon to shoot her in the back, Leruk's hand stopping him in mid-motion.

"I know who you are boy!" Walter barked. "I can smell your father's traitorous stench even through the death you have wrought here!"

"My father is no traitor!" Leruk screamed. "He is a proud Kavalian and leader!"

"Your father is an ignorant fool and a power hungry ronnus!" Walter snarled. "He has no idea what he has set in motion this day boy! And neither do you! You have no comprehension at what you have unleashed!"

"Tell me who she is!" Leruk screamed once more. "Tell me who she is and I may spare your lives!"

Walter laughed almost madly and both Ceneia and Daba looked at him as if he had gone insane. He shook his head slowly. "Oh... Leruk, son of Pleistarchus. Your father has abandoned you boy! He has taught you nothing!"

"Do your lives mean nothing to you?" Leruk screamed.

Walter's wolf eyes glared at Leruk from across the room. "It is not our lives that will be lost today!" He snarled. "Your father should have taught you better boy! He should have taught you to never bring harm the mate of an Alpha wolf of Spartan blood."

Leruk's eyes went wide then and he began to twist around. His body was lifted into the air and shot across the room to smash into the opposite wall with a sickening crunching sound. A single shot boomed out and the Kavalian trooper's head snapped back as his brains and fur splashed wetly on the wall behind him. Ceneia and Walter looked up to see Hval step from around the corner of the upper balcony, lowering his 190.

"Fucking Drow killing scum!" He could be heard muttering as he came down the stairs.

Daba didn't see the massive black shape cross behind her as she skidded across the floor to where Lu'ria lay unmoving. "Lu'ria! Lu'ria my baby!"

Leruk staggered to his feet, blood leaking from his mouth and nose, his hand blaster lost somewhere among the rubble. He twisted around and saw Androcles Leonidas crossing the room towards him and his eyes went wide. "You!" He gasped.

Daba looked up from where she cradled Lu'ria in her arms and her amber eyes grew wide. She saw the towering son of King Leonidas Drow his arms to his side and the eight inch long glowing psychic knife extended from his right fist.

Andro's azure wolf eyes were filled with savage rage as he stepped up to Leruk. "No one touches my mates!" He snarled loudly.

Leruk swung at him then, Andro deflecting the clumsy blow with little effort, and he stabbed upward with his psychic knife. Leruk's eyes flew open wide in unimaginable agony as that psychic knife entered just under his jaw and sliced its way into his brain. His whole body went rigid as Andro lifted him off the floor and pinned him to the wall. He stepped forward even closer and glared at Leruk with cruel eyes.

"My father once told me it is forbidden to draw blood from family!" Andro snarled so very loudly. "Blood before all else he taught my siblings and I! You may have the same blood flowing in your veins Leruk my cousin... but you are not my family! You are not my blood! And now I will kill you for what you have done!" Andro leaned closer. "Cousin!"

Andro's eyes flared intensely and he twisted his fist against the underside of Leruk's jaw. His eyes exploded open in torturous agony as Andro solidified his psychic knife while it was still imbedded in Leruk's brain. Leruk's arms and legs kicked hideously as the PK fused his flesh and brain and bone into a single mass of gore and when Andro yanked his hand away there was a three inch wide smoking hole under his jaw that extended into his head. His eyes were frozen open in death as his body dropped to the floor and Andro turned away.

"Walter!" Andro barked.

"I will live!" Walter shouted as Ceneia was tearing open his body armor. "Lu'ria! You have to turn her Andro! We have no medic!"

Andro's eyes went to where Daba held her daughter tightly and he crossed the room in a blink kneeling beside her. He tore his helmet off and tossed it down, Daba gasping in shock at his glowing eyes and handsome features. Andro looked at Daba's tear stained eyes. "Give her to me elf mother!" He spoke softly.

"She... she will not open her eyes!" Daba sobbed.

Andro reached out for her. "Give her to me so that I can love her as my Ilythiiri tessai."

Daba didn't resist as Andro gathered Lu'ria's body into his arms. He settled to the floor and brushed some of her strands of white hair from her face. Blood leaked from her lips but his wolf ears could hear her heart beating and he could smell her sweet honey melon scent. His fingers wiped away the blood from her pink lips and he leaned over slowly brushing his lips against hers as Daba watched.

"I am here Ilythiiri tessai." He whispered against her lips. "I am here for you now and you will be mine. You will be ours Lu'ria of the Drow."

Daba watched as he opened his mouth and she saw his vicious looking dual fangs fully extended as he lowered his head and sank them deeply into Lu'ria's flesh where her shoulder and her smooth neck came together. Lu'ria's amber eyes sprang open in that instant, her arms whipping around Andro's shoulders and her legs kicking out.

"ANDRO!!!!" Her voice pierced them all to their core and Daba could only watch as Andro drew her tighter, sinking his fangs in deeper, the virus within his blood surging through Lu'ria's veins like searing hot liquid. She gasped out in agony as the bullets inside her body were rejected and forced out through her flesh and the wounds began to knit themselves back together. Lu'ria groaned and clutched Andro tighter as the virus spread quickly, altering her body and granting her the gift of life and so much more. It raced through her blood, purging everything that was foul and unknown. It mixed and mingled with her cells, changing them, making them stronger. She could feel her muscles stretching and contorting inside her skin and she screamed out in pain, yet strangely she didn't pull away. She tried to draw Andro tighter, pulling him closer, her hands going to clutch his head and hold him.

Ceneia looked at Walter as she worked on the two rounds that had penetrated his armor. "Walter?" She asked in worry.

Walter nodded reassuringly. "His blood is the purest among us." Walter said. "Like his father. Like his mother. The strands of the virus inside him is more potent and powerful. It will change her quicker, but it is far more painful because of this strength." Walter twisted his head. "Hval... Jennifer?"

Hval looked up from where he was treating Lu'ria's human companion. "Only one round did any real damage Holy One!" He spoke back. "She is unconscious but stable. I sealed the wound but we must get her to medical facilities quickly."

Walter nodded. "No worries Hval. Help is coming!"

As if to emphasize his words, the wall into the home in the main room came smashing down and obsidian black scales along with carmine red appeared in the dust. Three female figures rushed through the dust and made their way towards them as the roar of STRIKER AT's could be heard in the distance.

Daba could only watch in shock as Andro began to withdraw his fangs just as the three women appeared around him and Lu'ria. Her heart was beating out of control as she saw in front of her the words of the Yara Parma.

The firstborn of many, the son of knif'rt kal'daka eyes and virile manhood. He will have the heart of amber and wrap his hands in white satin. Yvalm xuil to'ryll euol, uuthli ujool lu' charnag d' olath solen, whol jal draeval orn nind ssinssrigger

Bound with greenest gems, bluest glass and deepest of dark orbs, for all time will they love.

As Daba watched, history began to unfold. As Daba watched, the future of the Drow was altered forever.

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX

HADARIA ROYAL PALACE

"...not enough!" Anja spat angrily as she looked up from the table shoving several data pads onto the floor. "It's not enough damn it!"

Sivana stepped up to her sister, reaching out to place her hands on Anja's arms. Sivana's jade green eyes met Anja's own jade colored eyes and Sivana saw anguish in her sister's eyes. Anguish and anger both.

"Anja... we can only do so much. You know this. You can not torture yourself over this." She stated softly. "Wiktor and Buonau have the Elder Guard Militia watching our every move. They are monitoring everything we take with us. Our hands are tied sister."

Zaniai stood beside Eurin near the door of Anja's old office that had now been stripped bare of anything that belonged to the Lycavorian Union. Every computer and data core within the large palace had been packed up and already moved to the SPIRIT OF HADARIA in orbit. Anything that belonged to Anja or Sivana had been loaded and shipped out. The Palace was as effectively bare as it could be. Anything having to do with the Union or their parents was gone. The many dozens of ancient books on the shelves of the study were gone and the shelves were now empty. This was a military withdrawal only and nothing else was being taken if it did not belong to the Union or those who had called Hadaria home for so long. A senior Elder Guard Militia officer had protested when holoimages and items that had belonged to Anja's mother and father were taken down and packed. When he had tried to stop this, he ended up in the nearby infirmary when the Durcunusaan soldier who was gently packing the items broke his arm and two ribs. Buonau had arrived to protest this action and Anja had told her that they were mementos of her father and mother and she would be damned if she left them. Then she had closed the door in Buonau's face.

Half a dozen Durcunusaan soldiers were standing guard just outside the door to the office, as well as many places on the palace grounds. Many of them were just as angry as the diminutive Queen they protected and adored. They had lived here on Hadaria for years, many had Hadarian wives and friends, yet now they were being forced to leave. It did not sit well with them, having to force their wives and families to leave the only home many of them had ever known. Only Eurin knew that to a man or woman, not a single wife or husband had chosen to remain behind while the one they loved was being forced to leave. They revered their Persian red haired Queen almost as much as their loved ones who protected her. Eurin could not even remember how many times Anja had had those same families and friends to the palace for gatherings filled with food and dance, the palace walls filled with the screams of playing children. It was a testament to the charisma and respect she held not only as Queen but as a person.

Ceuma was sitting quietly in the chair along the wall and she slowly stood up and moved closer to Anja. She had witnessed many things in the last few hours, and though she had only truly been alive for less than two years, she had Anja's memories and many of her same traits. She was very different however, as she had shown over the last hours and days. Like Anja, she worshiped her husband completely, and felt the most happiness and safety in his powerful arms when she was pressed against his ebony skin. Yet Joci's mother, a woman she had come to love and respect strongly, had instructed her in a traditional Lycavorian manner and she was far more reserved than Anja. Like Lycavorian women of old she was more in control of her baser emotions. At least to a point. No matter all that, Ceuma felt sincere heartbreak at something she had absolutely no control over.

"Do you... is what I feel because of you Anja?" She asked softly looking at Anja. "Or is it because of whom I am?"

Anja and Sivana looked at her and in a move that surprised Eurin and Zaniai they drew Ceuma close to them. Eurin shook her head in surprise as she stared at these three women. You would never know one of them was a clone of Anja. At first glance they looked only like a trio of sisters that looked extraordinarily alike, almost triplets even, though Ceuma was a clone to Anja. The similarities in looks between Anja, Ceuma and Sivana were easy enough to see, though Anja and Ceuma had much larger chests. Now Ceuma shared these same traits as Anja and some of Sivana as well and as the three of them brought their heads together Eurin knew where at least a portion of Ceuma's future lay.

Anja squeezed Ceuma's hand as she took it and the three of them stood close together. "What do you think?" She asked softly.

Ceuma's jade green eyes gazed at her. "They... they are my people. I am a clone of you yes but I am still Hadarian and..."

"NO!" Anja snapped surprising Ceuma with the force of her words. "You are not a clone! Not any longer!"

Ceuma looked at her oddly and gave her a gentle smile. "Then what am I Anja?" She asked softly. "I am not ashamed of what I am. I..."

It was Sivana's turn to take her hand now and Ceuma looked at her. "You are our sister." Sivana spoke softly. "You are not Anja. You are your own person Ceuma. You have already proven that to everyone around you. Your blood makes you our sister!"

"My blood is cloned!" Ceuma said with that now signature gentle smile. "It is..."

"Marty..." Anja interrupted her words. "Martin has a saying... I don't even think he remembers how it came to be. Blood before all else. You are our blood Ceuma. No matter how that came to be, it doesn't matter anymore. Not to us. You have our blood coursing through your veins. Sivana's and mine. Our parents. That makes you our sister."

Ceuma stared at these two women for a long moment and for the first time in her very short life, with the exception of her burning love for Joci, Ceuma felt part of something. "Is this why I feel... I feel as if I am deserting them."

"You are not deserting them!" Eurin snapped as she stepped forward now. "None of you! You are still Queen and Princess of Hadaria in the eyes of millions. Those millions do not have a voice and they are being silenced!"

"How do we make those voices heard then Eurin?" Zaniai asked. "There is still time to stop all this."

Eurin shook her head sadly. "No." she spoke in almost a whisper. "We can't stop it. Not any longer. We couldn't stop it the moment Wiktor and Buonau started down this path and aligned themselves with the Kavalians. And we can not stay here."

"Why?" Anja said. "We could..."

"No." Eurin spoke. "If you stayed here it would only bring death to those who support you, and possibly to you Anja."

"I don't have to stay here in the palace. I never liked it here anyway." She said motioning around with her hand indicating the palace all around her. "I can hide among the people!"

"And do what?" Eurin exclaimed. "We are Healers! We do not have yours and Sivana's combat training Anja! Even Ceuma can fight better than most Hadarians because of what Joci has taught her. We can not fight like you! If you remain here... our people will die. Buonau will hunt you! She will hunt you and she will insure she sees you dead. She will use these Kavalian animals as her enforcers and they will not be kind."

“So I just abandon them!” Anja gasped.

Eurin shook her head as she stepped closer to them. “You are not abandoning them... you are saving them! If you are killed on Hadaria... you know very well what Martin Leonidas will do.”

“Martin Leonidas would not attack Hadaria!” Anja snapped. “Marty is many things... but he will never attack a founding member of the Union. It is not in his...”

“In his nature?” Eurin snapped forcefully. “Do not defend the part of him that makes so many fear him with good reason Anja. It is whom he is, and I for one honor and respect that more than you know. It is his greatest strength and he knows just how to use it. He is far more cunning than you give him credit for. I suspect your love for him blinds you in a way to what he is truly capable of. Martin Leonidas is the most powerful Lycavorian walking among the stars. He is wolf... the largest I have ever seen in my near thousand years of life. Do not tell me what he will do Anja Leonidas! I have seen that man when he is angry, truly angry to the point he allows his feral nature to come forth, and it is the most frightening thing in the universe to even witness. I have seen that man deal with those who have wronged him or harmed those he cares for! Martin will come here with every single Spartan and ship at his command and he will lay waste to Hadaria without blinking an eye if you are killed by Buonau or her Kavalian thugs because you chose to remain.” Eurin nearly shouted. “He will burn this planet to a shell until he knew Buonau and Wiktor were dead, and every Kavalian with them! And the cost to our people would be devastating!”

“Martin would not...”

Eurin stepped closer to her. “You don’t get it do you Anja?” She exclaimed loudly. “You truly don’t realize it do you?”

Anja looked at her puzzled. “What are you talking about?”

“You! I’m talking about you and the others!” Eurin stated calmly. “Do you think that those close to you and the other Queens don’t know? That we don’t hear the rumors and whispers in the back alleys and smile because we know the truth.”

“What truth? Stop talking like Helen!” Anja snapped as she began to lose her patience. “You aren’t making any sense Eurin.”

“Aren’t I?” Eurin asked her. “I have seen that man crush the life from an empire to take back what belonged to him. I was there beside you as we witnessed it. Do you not remember Enurrua Anja?”

“Enurrua?” Anja gasped aloud. “You think he will act the same way now? Aricia is his soulmate. His Anome. She is of his people. She is his strength and ours as well. You’ve seen the woman she has become since then! That is why he did that?”

Eurin looked at her wide eyed. “By the gods woman... you truly do not see it!” Eurin said.

“See what damn it?” Anja barked angrily.

Eurin smiled softly as she moved closer still. “Everyone seems to think it is Dysea who he favors most of all after Aricia. I know you and the others joke about it when you are alone together. You have said as much to me.”

Anja met her eyes. “Yes... so! It’s true! Eurin what are you saying?”

“Everyone knows it Anja.” Eurin said. “The Durcunusaan, his mother, your grandfather Fuleos. Deia. Even Dysea knows it, for she told me herself during the symposium to Elear that I attended with her two years ago. All these years and you have never seen it? Never felt it?”

“Nubou!” Anja growled. “Now I know how Martin feels when Helen goes all prophetic on him! Speak plain damn it Eurin! Spit it out!”

“The unquestioning confidence he has in you. The time he, Aricia and For’mya spend on Hadaria when you are here acting as Queen, when he is supposed to be on Apo Prime. He never doubts you. He always listens to you. He denies you nothing.” Eurin stated.

“He doesn’t deny any of us.” Anja quipped.

“Yes I know. Yet only you have the same pull on him that Aricia seems to have Anja.” Eurin said. “Only you and she. Oh... it is there with all of you, but it is stronger with you and Aricia because the two of you are most like him.”

Anja looked at her wide eyed. “What? Eurin you don’t know what you...”

“I don’t know what I’m talking about? I did not fully believe it until these past weeks.” Eurin said. “I did not believe it until I saw him in that transmission after Buonau’s security videos were leaked for all to see. I should have seen it much sooner.”

“Seen what?” Anja asked her.

“He never doubted it was not you Anja. He never even questioned it for a millisecond. The love and longing I saw for you in his eyes in that transmission from your ship, even so vast a distance as it was, it was unquenchable. A lesser man... a man who did not love you like he does... a man who was not so secure in the love his mates have for him... he would have had doubts. Not Martin Leonidas. I do not understand or realize the pull that man has over all of you, but it is an almost palpable thing.” Eurin looked at her. “It is not Dysea who he favors most of all after Aricia, nor For'mya or Isabella or even you Anja. As Aricia is his soul... you are his very heart. Dysea and For'mya his will, and Isabella his conscious. The five of you are what makes that man who he is. And in turn he shapes you... makes you who you are. You have played your part since that very first night you spent with him so long ago.” Eurin stepped right up to her. “You are the first woman he ever truly loved Anja, and you continue to have that hold on him even today. Just as he has hold of you.”

Anja chuckled softly. “Eurin you don’t know what you are saying.” She said.

“Don’t I?” Eurin asked calmly. “Atropos... tell me I am wrong.” Eurin spoke turning her head to see him standing in the doorway he had just entered. Atropos seemed surprised that she had detected him and he stammered something unintelligible and shifted his feet. “Tell me I am wrong in what I am trying to express to her? And why she can not stay on Hadaria.”

Atropos glanced at Eurin quickly and then slowly turned his eyes on Anja. “Eurin speaks the truth Anja.” He said softly.

“You are wrong!” Anja declared.

“The Feravomir told me long ago when we were on the mission to Lycavore, when we were rescuing Lisisa and Gorgo; she told me why Martin had chosen me as your Captain. She told me it was because of whom I was and the loyalty I had shown to Sparta during my exile. She told me he spoke with Panos to assign me to you for my loyalty. I... learned years later that it was my sister who urged Martin to appoint me as your Captain, though he had already made that decision himself. For my loyalty to Sparta yes, but because Aricia knew I would never allow anything to happen to you and this is what she and Martin wanted. Aricia knew what you meant to him. To Dysea. To her. She learned this during those weeks you two spent with each other in Eden City when he was in Sparta. It is why I was the one to choose Dysea’s Captain, and For'mya’s and then Isabella’s.” Atropos moved into the room.

“Atropos... you are just saying these things.” Anja stated yet her words were soft and quivering.

Atropos shook his head. “No... I am not. Have I ever lied or misled you once in all the years as your Captain? As your friend?”

“No! Never!” Anja declared instantly.

“My King... Martin... he would do everything within his power to defend or rescue one of his Queens. He would go to the ends of the universe if need be, he would forsake everything he knows, for his love of his Queens knows no boundaries. He loves you all more than I can put into words... for there is truly no way to describe it.” Atropos shook his head. “If you remain here Anja and you die, or you are captured by Buonau and the Kavalians, there will be nothing living in this universe that will stop Martin from coming here and glassing this planet into oblivion in his vengeance. Aricia knows what you mean to him, what you mean to her, to For'mya, Dysea and even Isabella and it is why I have been your Captain all of this time. Eurin speaks the truth... if he had... my sister may be his anome, his soul, but you are all his mates. If there is one thing that I have learned through the years serving you and the Leonidas family, it is simply this. He is wolf... he will destroy, maim, and obliterate anyone or anything that does the five of you harm. Without question, without pause and completely without regard.” Atropos said.

“Don’t say that!” Anja snapped viciously as she glared at him. “Don’t you... don’t you ever say that again! Never!”

“I told you not so long ago to look past the surface when you gaze into his eyes and you will see the truth of this. You will see the possessiveness of an Alpha wolf for all of you, not just my sister.” Atropos said.

“You know it is true Anja.” Eurin spoke again meeting her eyes. “I know you can feel it. You try to hide and mask your abilities in Mindvoice, but you are far stronger than you let on. Stronger than Isabella and For'mya to be sure. Perhaps even stronger than Dysea. I know he has worked with you in private, Aricia as well, and they are the two most powerful Mindvoicers in the Union with the possible exception of Helen. When you go for your runs in the morning, just the two of you, I know very well he schools you within Mindvoice. And perhaps many other things. Martin saw the spark of what you could do that day on Gellen Station when you rescued Sivana. Do you think Belen did not tell him?"

"Sibfla!" Anja snapped turning away and looking out the large bay window. "Stop it! Stop it all of you! You aren't making this any easier!"

"Leaving is the only option." Atropos said. "You know that as well as I my Queen! I will remove you if I have too... but I know you recognize it is the only way to save your people from harm. We must..."

Atropos turned as Joci's ebony bulk filled the doorway and he was barking out orders into his jaw implant. Anja had shocked Joci by reinstating him into the ranks of the Union military and then promoting him into the ranks of the Durcunusaan. She even promoted him to a position of some importance behind only Atropos and Belen within her personal Durcunusaan detail. He was the first to not have to go through the rigid and sometimes harsh training of the Durcunusaan, but Anja reasoned all he had been through up until now was equal to anything he could have learned during the training, and Atropos had agreed. Since that time Joci had thrown himself back into his role as Spartan soldier and now a Durcunusaan leader. As his actions became more well known, the Durcunusaan troops quickly began to respond to him these last days.

"...negative!" He was almost shouting, his 190 dangling from quick release straps as he moved. "Maintain your position until we arrive! No one is to be allowed near the STRIKER! If they attempt to force their way, shoot them! Do not let them reach Belen's position! He only has six with him. And inform the SPIRIT that we are inbound back to her in five minutes! I am with the Queen now and I will tell her!"

All eyes turned to Joci as stopped and removed his finger from his ear. "Joci... what is going on?" Anja asked.

Joci moved up next to Ceuma and slipped his powerful arm around her slim waist as her hand went up to stroke his long dreadlock hair. "A Kavalian Fleet Group has just exited Jump Gate Four and entered the system my Queen!"

"What?" Atropos screamed moving closer to him. "How did they get access to our Jump Gates?"

"No one knows! Jump Gate Control on Apo Prime is right now scrambling to find out." Joci answered shaking his head. "I believe I could hear Admiral Riall screaming even from Earth that he would discover how it happened. Kavalian Troop ships are being detected by Admiral Omore on the SPIRIT and they are mixed in with the others ships. They are trying to hide them, but they are not doing a very good job. And there are Kavalian troops already on the surface as well my Queen! They must have been snuck aboard civilian ships in order to bypass Hadarian Security at the ports!"

"Where?" Atropos barked.

"At least two full companies at each civilian space port. And that is just in and around the capital." Joci answered quickly.

"Two companies at each port?" Zaniai gasped. "That is over a thousand troops!"

Joci nodded. "And we are down to less than two hundred on Hadaria right now." He spoke. "The Spartan detail at the Domar military spaceport is watching them via ground and motion sensors. They have not tried to seize either of the two Union military ports, but Belen believes it is a only a matter of time. He is holding your STRIKER at the Western most pad in Domar Central. Miath is already aboard, albeit unhappily. Belen believes if there are Kavalian troops on the ground already they undoubtedly have T19s and he secured Miath himself. We are out of time! We must go my Queen! Now!"

"That upae sold Hadaria out!" Anja snarled as she turned back to the table and began to gather data pads. "I'll kill her! I'll rip her face off when I see her again!"

Joci tilted his head down and jammed his finger into his ear. "Say again!" He barked. Atropos was listening now and both his eyes and Joci's eyes went wide.

"Where?" Atropos growled out causing Anja to look at him. "Nubou!" He cursed and looked at Anja as he and Joci listened for several moments. "Very well! Evac from your current position now! Straight to the Domar spaceport! We no longer need you there!"

Anja moved closer to him. "Atropos?" She asked.

“The Durcunusaan Surveillance Team I left monitoring the Hadarian Elder Council’s secure communications network just picked up a transmission from this Kavalian Admiral Menot. He has ordered his ships to intercept Union forces as they come into range. Their orders are to seize and board all Union ships in the system. The Kavalian troop ships have been ordered to separate from the rest of the Kavalian fleet and begin landing. He has also ordered that you, Sivana and Ceuma are to be arrested on sight for murder and sedition and this was approved by Chief Minister Wiktor and Elder Buonau. A Kavalian detachment is on its way here now with the Elder Militia and Rinard leading them.”

“Rinard?” Ceuma spat.

Joci nodded looking at her. “Apparently they have given him some sort of leadership role within the Elder Militia. A liaison to the Kavalians.”

“Liaison!” Ceuma declared. “Let that foul man come near me and I will cut off his cock and feed it to him for what he has done!”

“It hasn’t been three days yet!” Eurin exclaimed.

“They never intended to wait three days! They never intended to allow the Queen to leave!” Joci snapped. “They only needed enough time to get troops on the surface to reinforce them!”

“They would risk open war with the Union in their actions!” Zaniai declared. “Wiktor and Buonau know this! Have they gone mad?”

“They must believe the Union Senate and Galactic Court will not allow Martin to act.” Sivana spoke quickly. “And if they have Anja and I prisoner, Martin will not attack! They know that! They have planned this for quite some time.”

“Atropos... how long?” Anja demanded.

“Four... maybe five minutes before they get here.” He answered. “The Lifter lanes are jammed with traffic and it will take them that long to clear the lanes. Twenty-nine minutes before their fleet comes within range.”

Anja made her decision then and she pushed away from the table smoothly, turning to pick up the P190A3 that leaned against the wall behind her. “What about the bunker entrance?” She asked.

“Sealed my Queen.” Joci replied quickly. “They will never find it no matter how much they dig.”

“Time to go then!” She snapped. “Initiate a planet wide Broken Arrow! All Lycavorian Union personnel are to evacuate right now! Whatever they can’t take... destroy with plasma grenades! I want everyone off the planet within fifteen minutes.”

Atropos turned to Joci. “Joci... lead us out!”

Joci nodded and clutching Ceuma’s hand he headed for the door. “All teams we are moving to the Domar central spaceport! Stand by to depart!” He barked into his jaw implant. “We are now under a Broken Arrow by order of the Queen. If it does not wear a Union uniform you are authorized to use lethal force!”

Anja took one last look at the office before she turned and followed her Durcunusaan captain out of the room, Sivana, Eurin and Zaniai right behind her.

KRANEK

Dysea wrapped her arms tightly around Zarah, her emerald eyes tearing up as Zarah returned her powerful hug without hesitation. She felt her daughter relax slightly in her arms and take in the warmth that Dysea projected. Dysea pulled her back quickly, taking her face in her hands as the tears rolled freely.

“Zarah my child.” She spoke softly. “Oh Zarah... I...”

Zarah shook her head. “I will get through this mother.” She spoke with strength in her voice. “I know... I know you worry for me... but I will get through this.”

Dysea took a deep breath and nodded. “Andro told me to be strong for you and I will.” She stated.

“Then... then don’t coddle me mother.” Zarah said in a whisper. “Please. I was raped... but I am still me.”

“Yes you are.” Dysea said. She leaned over and kissed her softly, nuzzling her cheek. “I am here for you. We all are.” She whispered.

Zarah closed her eyes and reveled in the caress and she nodded. "I know... and that is my strength." She whispered back.

Dysea drew back and looked at her. Her emerald eyes moved to where Lucia stood silently watching and she smiled. "Lucia." She said reaching out and taking her hand. "We can not thank you..." Dysea stopped and took another deep breath. She blinked several times and smiled wider. "Welcome Lucia."

"Lady Dysea I..." Lucia began.

Dysea shook her head. "No. Now is not the time. In the future perhaps... but right now, know you are now part of our family. And that is good enough for me."

Dysea saw Lucia's dark eyes glitter in joy. "That... that is almost exactly what Lisisa and Arrarn told me."

"See... we think alike." Dysea said with a smile.

Zarah looked at Dysea. "Mother... where is Normya?" She asked anxiously. Zarah had worried that her half elven sister, the one she considered her twin, would not be here to greet her. Zarah's heart dropped for only a split second until she saw two blurring motions off to the right and then the enormous Immortal and stunning vampire female came to abrupt halts and the huge arms of the Immortal released her platinum haired sister from his embrace.

"Zarah!" Normya screamed as she broke from Tir'ut's arms and raced for her sister.

The two of them met in the middle in an embrace of sisterly love and affection, both of them now with tears in their eyes as they hugged and nuzzled each other, allowing the wolf in their blood to show through. Tir'ut came over to stand beside Dysea with his mother trying to ignore the fact that the eyes of the Leonidas children were focused on him. He looked at Dysea with questions in his eyes and Dysea nodded. "Have Normya explain it to you later Tir'ut." She said kindly. "She and her sister are very close."

Tir'ut nodded. "Yes elf mother."

Dysea smiled and patted his arm. "We are hard to understand sometimes."

Tir'ut looked at his mother and then back to Dysea. He turned back and saw Normya and Zarah pulling Lucia close to them now. "Yes... I am figuring that out slowly. Someday it may sink entirely into my thick head as mother says. I doubt it however."

Dysea's eyes grew wider as her keen nose detected Isabella's lilac scent and she turned quickly to see her beautiful vampire lover walking towards them. She looked radiant in her new pregnancy and she watched Isabella gaze at her with lust in her eyes as she came up. Dysea didn't hesitate and didn't care who saw and she stepped into Isabella's embrace for a sizzling kiss of passion and desire. She hadn't seen her vampire lover in longer than she cared to recall and Dysea yearned to feel her naked skin beside her.

"Oh it has been too long since I have tasted you ussta she-elf." Isabella spoke huskily as their kiss broke apart.

Dysea nodded. "Far too long." She agreed. Dysea turned and looked behind Bella only to see most of their older children standing behind them with smiles as wide as any sun. Lisisa leaned up against Denali with her arms crossed under her ample chest, Eliani and Nyla both leaning up against the large Spartan who Dysea knew could only be Malic.

Isabella laughed when she saw Dysea's eyes. "You know how they follow their brother." She said with a grin. "I could not keep them away."

Dysea very nearly felt overwhelmed as she felt her children crowd around her tightly, sharing the embraces of love and family. It was always the same she knew. The wolf in all of them needed the touch of one another and the sensations that each other's auras brought. It was so soothing and loving. Dysea greeted them all in turn, even as Normya followed on her heels holding Zarah's hand tightly. After several minutes of hugging and nuzzles Dysea ended beside Isabella, her arm around her waist tightly, and holding Lucia's hand.

"Where... where is Andro?" She asked then, not seeing or smelling her oldest son. "Did he stay with the Coven riders?"

"We received a distress call from Walter's ship while coming here." Bella answered.

"Walter's ship?" Dysea asked her emerald eyes going wide.

Bella nodded. "It apparently had been shot down on Iraruzu. The planet that one of our Drow outposts was on."

Dysea looked at her with those wide yes. "Shot down!" She declared in shock. "Shot down by whom?"

“Walter mentioned something about Kavalians in the message mother...” Denali told her. “But we don’t know anything for sure. Andro took Sadi, Carisia and Ne’Veha on his STRIKER and they went to investigate. We should know something soon. He’s due to contact us in a few hours.”

“Everyone...” Normya called causing them all to turn. They saw her pull Tir’ut closer to her, though he came reluctantly in the face of so many of Normya’s family here, and Normya pressed up against his side quite intimately. “This is Tir’ut.” Normya stated quite proudly. “This is my husband and mate.”

Denali was the only pureblood left among his brothers and sisters and in Andro’s place it was he who stepped forward and met Tir’ut’s dark eyes, Lisisa right behind him as his wife and mate. He looked at the towering Immortal, easily over a foot taller than his sister and he leaned forward sniffing intently as the others looked on. He could smell his sister’s familiar scent deeply imbedded in this Immortal’s blood, and his ginger scent wafting from Normya’s pores powerfully. He felt his siblings move up all around him as he looked at Tir’ut. That he had Immortal blood in him was obvious by the bone spurs along his jaw, but they were much less pronounced than what many of them expected. His skin was deeply tanned and he had very short hair.

“Can you speak Immortal?” Denali finally asked him.

“Deni!” Lisisa hissed as she poked him in the back while Normya glared at him.

“Denali Leonidas you apologize right now!” Normya barked.

Tir’ut knew right away what Denali was doing and he grinned. It was something that his elf mother Dysea told him would happen. They were very protective of each other and that was coming out now.

“They will test you and your commitment to Normya Tir’ut.” Dysea had told him one evening. “They trust in their sister, but it is still the way of the wolf. Even though most of them are of mixed blood, it is their father’s blood that is so dominant. The wolf in them. They will want to insure your intentions for their sister are pure.”

“My intentions darthirii ilhar?” He asked. “She is my Du’ased ’ranndi. My heart and soul. My intentions are to love her until I pass into the next life.”

Dysea had looked at him then. “Then tell them that.” She stated plainly.

They would test him to see if he was worthy of their sister. In their older brother Andro’s absence it fell to the oldest pureblood to officially greet Tir’ut and that was Denali. It was obvious he was uncomfortable in the position, but he was making an admirably attempt for he knew Andro would expect him too.

“I did not... I did not expect to meet all of my il darthirii kal’daka’s family at one time and I am at somewhat of a loss.” Tir’ut said plainly.

“What exactly are your intentions with our sister Immortal?” Denali asked as sternly as his good natured personality allowed.

“Denali!” Normya gasped with blazing emerald eyes. “You have no right to...”

“I intend to love her breathless for eternity!” Tir’ut answered immediately, cutting off Normya’s reply. “I intend to make her sing my name to the moon and only my name. I will love her shamelessly and we will have many children who will carry on for us.” Normya’s eyes were wide as she looked at the husband she adored so completely. She had never heard these things from him and his words made warm shivers course through her.

Denali grinned. “No kidding?” He said. Deni turned his head slightly and looked at Lisisa next to him. “Lisi?”

Lisisa grinned. “I think... given the look on our sister’s face, that her new husband is full of surprises.”

“You think?” Deni asked with his trademark smile. He turned back to Tir’ut. “Be careful, she may be tiny, but she has a mean right cross.”

Normya glared at him. “I am not tiny!” She barked.

Arrarn stepped up next to Denali now, Narice and Toria right behind him. He looked Tir’ut up and down, even while Normya glared at Denali. “Anse sister... I don’t suppose you could have picked one that’s not so damn tall could ya?” He declared finally.

Normya Leonidas and a murderous look on her face as she stepped in front of Denali and Arrarn and glared at them. She crossed her arms over her generous breasts and stared daggers at her brothers. “You ronnus!” She spat at Denali. “How dare you!”

“Sister...” Zarah spoke from the side where she clutched Lucia’s hand. “Sister... he is very large.” She stated.

“Zarah!” Normya exclaimed.

Zarah’s words set off the tide of laughter and Denali scooped his sister up into his arms with a joyful shout, spinning her around as Arrarn stepped forward and gripped Tir’ut’s arm in greeting. The rest of them crowded around quickly as they welcomed their sister’s Immortal husband into their family.

Esther allowed the breath she was holding where she stood next to Dysea and Isabella out slowly and wiped away the beginnings of the tears in her eyes. She saw Dysea and Isabella look at her and she smiled. “Forgive me.” She said softly. “I still worry for how he will be accepted by others. I did not... I did not know how they... if they would recognize him. Receive him as Normya’s Blessed Husband.” Esther stated.

Isabella knew who Esther was and she smiled and leaned over to place a friendly kiss on her cheek. The happiness within her at finally being with Dysea was plentiful and all she wanted was to get her ussta she-elf alone in her arms.

“Our children are unique Esther.” She stated. “There has only been one occasion when they did not accept someone one of their siblings brought before all of them. That was many years ago too. All of them have grown since then.”

Esther looked at her. “Really?” She asked in relief. “Dare I ask why they did not accept that person?”

Dysea laughed. “It is probably better if you didn’t.” She answered quickly. “Eliani would never forgive us if we brought that distasteful subject back up. And neither would Andro. It was before she met Nyla, and she has moved on.” She looked at Isabella. “Where are the Coven riders?”

“Bren and Famus were with them as they flew toward the facility Cha’talla reserved for them.” Bella answered quickly. “You will be impressed with what Andro has made them into Dysea.”

Dysea nodded her head. “I’m sure.” She took Esther’s hand in hers as she talked. “Come Bella... I know you are burning to meet Cha’talla. All of them must be.”

Isabella nodded. “It is not everyday you get to meet a man that has an entire shelf in the Apo Prime history logs all to himself.” She said with a smile.

“I would imagine it is not the type of history Cha’talla would be proud of.” Esther spoke softly looking at her.

Isabella met her dark eyes. “His actions so far Esther... they have begun to weave a new history. And that is the one we will build on. Our children already seem to be doing just that.” She said motioning to where Tir’ut was embracing Carina while Moneus pounded him on his back laughing.

Esther smiled at the sight. “Yes we will.”

“...make sure the plasma coupler is seated properly!” Cha’talla barked out. “I don’t want the damn thing popping out if we have to maneuver!” He spoke as he gathered up the towel and began wiping his large hands. Three of their G9 LRR’s occupied the landing pads all around him, Dysea’s STRIKER parked on the fourth.

Cha’talla looked at the equally dirty female elven engineer walk up to him carrying a large portable engineering console. The female elf wore the uniform of the famed 1st Elven Engineering Corp, though the upper half of her jumpsuit was down and tied around her waist. Her firm, medium sized breasts strained against her t-shirt but like all the elves that had come down here from NORMYA’S LIGHT, they found these Immortals were so unlike those they had read about it wasn’t even right to compare them. Cha’talla looked at her evenly, and though like all elven females she was stunning, no woman could compare to his Blessed Wife Esther now.

“Re’naria?” He asked.

The green eyed elven female looked up at him. “I was able to adjust the power flow on the G9s to increase their LSD range by a factor of four.” She stated. “I just wanted to make sure it was ok with you to install micro cooling cells in the conduits.”

“How long will this take?” Cha’talla asked. “I want to leave for Belid in twelve hours.”

Re’naria shrugged. “Three hours tops.” She answered. “Three of us are going with you so we can monitor the new systems and make any small corrections to power flow and absorption rate.”

Cha’talla looked at her surprised. “I did not know this.” He said.

Re'naria nodded her head. "You don't think we're actually going to send you out with all these improvements without someone to watch over them in case they need to be adjusted do you? What we've done to your Runners is not in any book Cha'talla... and we're going to make sure it doesn't kill you. Or us." She said with a smile.

Cha'talla laughed and nodded his head. "Very well." He spoke. "It will be good to have you."

Re'naria looked at this towering Immortal. She had been skeptical when she first came to the surface knowing who Cha'talla was and what he had done in the past, but after seeing all she had that skepticism quickly turned to trust. She had seen Elven females and their Immortal husbands walking among the streets of the settlements, their children either scampering along around them or in the arms of one of their parents. She had seen Normya Leonidas's new mate actually playing with the small children in the park while Normya sat with her mother over tea. Re'naria had seen many things in her life, more so since the return of King Leonidas, but none so inspiring as what she had seen here.

"May I ask you something Cha'talla?" She asked.

He nodded. "Of course."

"Would you be going to Belid to get your son if those elf females were not there?" She asked.

Cha'talla shook his head slowly. "Lynom... he had his own escape route worked out and established if it became time for him to leave. He would have been able to leave Belid without help from us."

Re'naria nodded slowly. "That's what I thought." She said softly. "I'll get these cooling cells installed and we'll be ready in twelve hours."

"Thank you." Cha'talla said and watched as she turned around and headed back towards the G9 on Pad Two.

"Husband?" Esther's voice echoed from behind him startling him slightly and he whirled around to see his wife standing behind him demurely, her hands behind her back and her dark eyes smiling up at him.

Cha'talla smiled slightly. "I hate when you do that Esther." He stated somewhat gruffly.

Esther grinned. "I know... but it keeps you on your toes." She answered.

Cha'talla swept her up in his arms and crushed her to him then, Esther's arms snaking around his broad shoulders. "I will show you what keeps me on my toes." He growled hungrily at her.

Esther laughed and kissed him, holding his face in her small hands. She rubbed her cheek gently against his and whispered in his ear. "I will hold you to that husband." She said huskily. "But now would not be a good time, unless you wish to take me in front of our guests. Though that does sound kinky."

Cha'talla's eyes grew a little wider and as he held his Blessed Wife in his arms he turned fully around to see a smiling Dysea behind him with over a dozen others, undoubtedly her children, and all of them were grinning. If an Immortal could blush, Cha'talla's bronze skin would have turned the color of ripe Cartlo Roots. Slowly he set his smiling wife down on the hard packed dirt and felt her press up close against his side.

"Dysea?" He said softly.

Dysea couldn't contain the small laugh that escaped her lips as she came up to him and took his hands. "Cha'talla... the expression on your face right now is absolutely priceless." She stated.

"I'm sure." He spoke.

Dysea kept his hand in hers and turned to look at Isabella and her children. "Bella, Deni, everyone, this is Cha'talla."

Cha'talla's dark eyes scanned the single row of Leonidas children and their mates. Elf, Lycavorian, vampire, all members of one family. Children of one man. A man he had tried very hard to kill so many years ago. Though they were no older than Tir'ut who he saw holding Normya close to him, like his own sons with Esther, all of them looked very capable of doing battle.

"I welcome you." He finally said. "I welcome all of you to Kranek. To our home." To say he was amazed when they all surged towards him at one time would be an understatement. That amazement didn't stop the happiness that he felt in his chest though.

Vollenth and Viera were the last to move slowly down the ramp of the TYPE II DT, Cinol perched on his back and Caydren on his mother's as they looked around the wide expanse of towering timber and mountains all around them. They could see the Coven dragons and riders also taking in the cool fresh air and warm sun as they moved towards the portable buildings in the distance.

Papa! The... the mountains stretch so far! Cinol declared from Vollenth's back.

The clouds mama! The clouds reach to the ground! Caydren echoed his brother.

Viera's eyes smiled and she nodded her massive head. Yes. It is beautiful isn't it? We could hunt for days on such a world. Her head turned to look at Vollenth. Vollenth? Vollenth had remained silent up until now, the closer they drew to their destination, the more anxious he had become. She saw his wings fluttering slightly and she brushed up against him now. He had held nothing back from her since Dragon Mountain, sharing all that he was with her. [You... you feel your Bonded One don't you? On this world?] She masked her words from their sons so they could not hear.

Vollenth turned and gazed at her. [It is so powerful now Viera.] He spoke. [It... whoever they are, they are strong and proud Viera my mate. Their shielding is very nearly impenetrable. They... they do not know I am here. They do not yet understand what we are meant for. What they feel.]

[Then you will need to show them.] Viera stated proudly.

[Me?]

[The Dragon Elder Mother Arzoal and Androcles knew you were meant for someone else Vollenth. They could feel it within you. There are many who do not understand what it is they feel until they meet their Bonded One.] Viera told him. [The Elder Mother said as much.]

[Viera... I do not know... I do not know if I am ready.] He said softly.

[You are ready my Vollenth.] She told him lovingly. [This is the true bond that we dragons hope for. Not that horror Yuri witch forced on you. This will complete you and finally purge the last of what she did from you. This is your future.]

Vollenth blinked and looked at her. [You are my future.] He stated emphatically. [You are my future. My sons... and the many hatchlings we will have in the future.]

Viera's eyes filled with love and warmth at his words and she brushed her snout against his lovingly. [Is... is that a promise of more exquisite encounters to come my handsome mate?] She asked him.

[Many more.] Vollenth promised her. [Many more and many centuries together. If you will have me.]

[I can hardly wait.] Viera spoke. [And I will have you Vollenth. I will have you for as long as I have years.]

Vollenth drew his snout down her long neck making her wings twitch in delight. [I have waited this long.] He spoke softly. [I will wait until my mate and children are safe in the facility that...]

Excuse me? The female voice spoke.

Vollenth and Viera turned to see the elven pilot standing next to them, her helmet under her arm.

Commander? Viera asked shyly.

You are Vollenth and Viera correct? She asked. And your sons Cinol and Caydren?

She knows who we are? Caydren gasped from his mother's back. That is so cool!

Vollenth nodded his huge head with a chuckle within Mindvoice. His sons had picked up the unique use of slang during their stay at Dragon Mountain and their interaction with the many hatchlings from Earth that were there. Yes.

I am Commander De'lia, 1st Elven Engineering Corp. She spoke easily in Mindvoice and the presence of two very large dragons did not faze her in the least. Prince Androcles told his mother that you would be accompanying them. She had a separate structure set up for you away from the Coven pens so that their training did not disturb the hatchlings at night. It is larger and has room for the hatchlings to scamper about.

We do not want to be far from our friends. Viera spoke.

De'lia shook her head with a smile. It's not. Only a hundred meters. Elynth and Anthar are next to you. Jeth and Tharua across from you. We tried to give the mated dragons a little more privacy.

Vollenth blinked. You did that?

The elven engineer smiled once more and reached up to stroke his smooth scales without fear. She knew all about Vollenth's history and this did not stop her from touching him. My kind is descended from yours Vollenth. In essence, we are you. At least a part of each of us. We will always look out for you. I'd be happy to show you. Elynth and Anthar have a separate pen, as do Jeth and Tharua.

Thank you Commander. Viera said kindly.

This way. She spoke as she began to walk across the ground towards some dome like rises in the ground. Viera nudged Volleneth as they began walking. [Perhaps we can start tonight.] She spoke seductively. Volleneth's eyes glittered in response. [I believe I will enjoy that.] He stated confidently. [Practice makes perfect.]
[Ah! Just don't become too perfect. Then you won't need to practice and I will be very unhappy!]

RAPTOR IIA3 (ELINT)

ULU ARIZONA

CALLSIGN FALCON ONE FOUR

TWENTY-FIVE MILLION KILOMETERS FROM KRANEK

Hardly anyone knew they existed and the pilots and crews liked it that way.

They were based on the old design of RAPTORs from EDEN BASE, with this ship and the others like it known as RAPTOR IIA3s. They were the extreme long range eyes and ears of the ARIZONA'S Attack Wing. They were designed to operate independent of the ARIZONA for long periods of time, sometimes moving into days, and because of this the Raptor A3s were built for stealth and speed. Her double layered outer hull was composed of matte black Dragon Armor rendering her all but invisible to the naked eye, and while she had no Shrouds, thanks to some very advanced Stealth screens improved upon by Avi, she was effectively invisible to all known sensors. The rear of Falcon Four One was like any other Raptor A3 operating. There was a small section with four bunk beds and a small table and chairs bolted to the deck. Aside from that, the entire rear portion of the A3 was dedicated to the four massive sensor stations where the operators sat back to back and the two smaller identical consoles along the wall. Her unique design was unlike anything currently in existence, and the array of sensor pods that dotted her superstructure gave her abilities that no other ships had. With a Nodon JCN Type 71 Tactical Network as the ship's brain, the Raptor A3 had become the perfect Electronic Warfare ship in the fleet. They were able to monitor and track multiple fleet groups whether they be friendly or foe. They could direct fighters and ground strikes, and their sensor arrays gave them the maximum potential of any ship similar in size. As with almost everyone involved with Project ARIZONA, these men and women were the crème of the crop from within the Union Fleet.

The crews of these ships were made up of four pilots, two flight engineers and eight technicians. Two complete teams that went out on long missions so they could operate at maximum efficiency all of the time. They were a tight knit bunch, and many of them stayed together even when they were off duty. The crew of Falcon Four One was one of these crews.

The elven pilot of Falcon Four One adjusted her thruster controls just a bit with one hand and then leaned back in her large pilot's seat as she brought the mug of tea up with the other. They were maintaining station twenty-five million kilometers from Kranek using just their thrusters and had just witnessed the SCIMITAR discharge the TYPE II Dragon Transport and half a dozen STRIKERS that headed for the surface of the planet.

"...going to do Falarie?" The female co-pilot asked as she too sat back in her chair. The light red hair of the elven co-pilot shone with health as she turned in her seat and looked at her friend.

"I don't know Qilie." The blond pilot spoke looking at her with soft brown eyes.

"You've been dating him for eight months Falarie." The Lycavorian engineer turned in his chair and looked at her. "There must be something there."

"Be quiet Fausith!" Qilie snapped. "What do you know? You're a man!"

"I know he has been devoting every waking hour to Falarie." Fausith snapped back. "That ought to count for something Qilie!"

"He's a pilot! A human pilot!" Qilie stated.

"What's wrong with that?" The male voice broke in over the intercom. As long as they stayed out on missions and as close as they all had become, it was pointless to try and hide what was happening in each other's lives from their fellow crewmates. Falcon Four One was just too small. And in reality, it made them more of a family since they knew what was going on with relationships and children and such. "I'm human!"

"You and Chloe are different Matthew!" Qilie stated quickly. "You are... you are our family."

“Yes we are.” The female voice chimed in.

“Falarie... let him take you to bed and then make your decision!” The gruff male voice echoed. “If he curls your elven toes then he is a keeper!”

“Bah!” Qilie spoke waving her hand dismissively. “That is a typical wolf perspective. Not all female elves wished to be pawed and licked raw all over Meamo!”

“That’s not what you said last night Qilie.” The voice stated with some humor. “Or were those soft squeals I heard forced.”

“You mean the ones that kept most of us awake last night.” The male voice said.

“Sounded like he was curling your elven toes quite well.” Chloe stated.

“Our relationship does not count in this discussion Meamo!” Qilie protested as soft laughter filtered through the intercom.

“There is something there.” Falarie said finally with a smile on her face.

“Colonel Randall is human!” Fausith pointed out.

“Colonel Randall was turned by the King!” Qilie said.

“Yes... he was. But he and Zaala were married long before that.” Chloe’s voice joined in now. “I’ve seen the way you look at him Falarie. It is the same way Zaala Randall looks at her husband. If it feels right to you then I say go for it. He is a pilot on the rise, and he wouldn’t have been chosen for the ARIZONA if he carried any sort of attitude. The Colonel wouldn’t have allowed it and for sure Captain Lorian wouldn’t tolerate it.”

Fausith nodded. “See. Even I wouldn’t want to tangle with the Captain! If she had a hand in choosing him... he is probably a fine man.”

Meamo’s voice came on again. “Has he tried anything Falarie?” He asked with sudden concerned.

“What? No! Meamo... he has been the perfect gentlemen!” Falarie declared.

“What do your parents say?” Qilie asked.

“They adore him.” Falarie answered. “They believe him to be a vanguard to what humans are once more beginning to reclaim.”

“Then as the King says... never fear the unknown!” Meamo spoke confidently. “At the very least... you will outlive him by many hundreds of years! If you tire of him... wait until he dies and then find another!”

Fausith broke out laughing at the joke even as soft laughter once more filtered through their ship wide intercom. “Carian Meamo... you are such a pig!” Qilie stated but she had a twinkle in her eyes.

“And that is why you adore me Qilie.” He retorted.

Falarie shook her head with a large grin. This is what she so loved about her crew. Yes they talked a good game and ribbed each other mercilessly sometimes, but they would always stand up for each other no matter the reason. For all intents and purposes... the five elves, five Lycavorians and four humans... they were more her family than her own brothers and sisters.

She sipped her tea and made her decision.

“I will allow him to have me.” She said. “I may have to entice him however. He has been such a gentlemen I think I may have put him off to a degree.”

Chloe laughed now. “Ah! Just shove your naked tits in his face Falarie and he’ll perk right up!”

Falarie’s eyes grew wide. “Chloe!” She exclaimed.

“What?” She answered boldly. “It worked for the wolf I wanted! And it led to some very promising pawing and licking. Something I thoroughly enjoy I might add. And he’s been mine for three years now!”

“Bitch!” Qilie declared with a chuckle.

“Sibfla! With tits like yours... I’m not surprised!” Matthew’s voice echoed.

They all heard the soft thud of a fist hitting flesh and more laughter ensued. That laughter stopped immediately with one word and the soft chirping alarm.

“Contact!” Chloe hissed aloud. “Wait... it’s gone! Must have been...” The alarm once more sounded again. “That’s no coincidence! Intermittent contact... bearing seven three four mark six! Distance ten million kilometers!”

Falarie looked up. “One of the SCIMITAR’S wing Chloe? A fluctuation in their Shroud from the nearby Nebula?”

“Negative Falarie.” Chloe answered. “This came from just inside the Nebula. Trying to localize it.”

“That is a Protonic Lightning Nebula.” Qilie stated. “Why would a ship be in there?”

Falarie’s eyes didn’t leave the overhead intercom panel. “Chloe?” She asked.

“The distortion from the nebula is making it hard to... there! Got it!” She announced. “Can’t identify it... but there is definitely a ship just inside the leading edge of the Nebula. And it isn’t a Union ship!”

Falarie set her tea down in the holder and was turning in her seat. “Stations!” She barked with the tone of command.

Falcon Four One became all business then.

“Give me one quarter power on the aft thrusters Qilie.” Falarie spoke firmly. “I’ll move us closer.”

“One quarter coming up.”

“All defensive systems online and ready.” Fausith spoke from his engineering seat. “Stealth pods generating at nominal output.”

“Stand by!” Falarie stated as her hands moved across her three consoles. “I’m moving us closer.”

None of them felt the Raptor II move in the least. Falarie could make the ship do loops and they would never know it because of her skill. Falarie had broken her crew into two watch groups so that they could optimize sleep and off time on long missions such as this. The first group, Qilie, Meamo, Matthew, Chloe and Fausith always worked with her. The second group were prepared to move into the seats however as they began to rise and become aware of what was happening.

“Seven percent power on thrusters!” Qilie stated calmly. “Distance is now eight million five hundred kilometers.”

“Chloe?” Falarie asked again.

“I don’t know...” Chloe said softly. “It’s weird.”

“What do you mean?” Falarie asked.

“It’s almost as if I’m getting thirty or forty echoes.” Chloe answered.

“Switch to the paramagnetic subspace transceiver Chloe.” Matthew spoke. “That might clear up the echoes.”

Chloe nodded instantly. “That did it. Fuck me!” She exclaimed.

“Chloe! Chloe what is it?” Falarie demanded when she heard Chloe’s tone of voice.

“Fuck! Fuck! Fuck! I’m sweeping with an inverted nanopulse! I have over fifty contacts! Warships by the size of them! All of them are hiding in the nebula!” Chloe barked.

“Inside the nebula?” Qilie barked. “How?”

“Adjusting the shield modulation to repel the lightning particles.” Fausith spoke from his seat. “It’s easy enough to do... just no one wants to do it because of the draw on main power cores to keep the shields switching between modulations.”

“Can you identify them Chloe?” Falarie snapped.

“Negative!” Chloe answered. “The nebula is scattering the major portion of the signal. Nothing is coming in completely clear!”

“Why does the SCIMITAR not see them?” Qilie demanded.

“We’re scanning in three dimensional spatial patterns!” Chloe answered. “They only scan in two dimensional spatial patterns because of the area they must cover.”

“I can do a visual recognition scan!” Matthew barked as he began adjusting his consoles. “I’ll use our database to get a match. If it’s in our database I’ll find them. It will take me a couple minutes!”

“Do it!” Falarie ordered quickly. “Meamo... tight beam COM to the ARIZONA! Alpha priority!”

“Alpha Priority is war time Falarie.” Meamo reminded her.

“We have unknown warships hiding in a lightning nebula within spitting distance of where the majority of our royal family is. What would you call that Meamo?” Falarie asked calmly.

“Not good!” Meamo answered. “Not good!”

“We have to let Captain Lorian know about this. And piggyback the other RAPTORS in the system in on our signal so we are all on the same page!” Falarie ordered. “We may need to shut down the system.”

“Stand by!” Meamo announced.

EARTH
SPARTA
HOME OF ISRA, TARIFA AND AIHOLA

“Uuugghhhhhh!”

Danny surged upward from off the floor, shrugging his broad shoulders as he did and throwing off the large chunks of the now destroyed wall from his back. His dark wolf eyes immediately went to his anome Anuk who was beneath him and coughing heavily.

“Anuk... baby!” He barked.

“I’m ok!” She coughed out the words. “I’m ok!”

Danny pushed himself up to his knees, his eyes going to his right where he knew Martin would be. The air was filled with nothing but the smell of burnt plasma, effectively nullifying his sense of smell and he snorted heavily, even as he shook his head and tried to shake away the ringing in his ears.

“Marty!” He screamed as he began pulling Anuk up to a sitting position. His eyes saw the large figure of Martin Leonidas roll to the side a few feet from him, also throwing off bits of the now destroyed wall.

“Stop yelling!” Martin screamed back as he pushed himself up, his hands pulling an uninjured Aricia up with him. “My head hurts enough!”

Martin’s eyes, also now changed, darted left and right and he saw the Kavalian Pian shoving what was once a chair off his back as he pushed himself to his feet. Martin saw the flash of white blond hair shaking back and forth as Jalersi shook her head to a shouted question from Pian that he didn’t hear. His eyes once more moved back and forth and he saw Karun pulling Ardis up while three Durcunusaan troops were pulling the remains of a cabinet off of Isra’s back. He had pushed it as far as he could to keep from crushing Tarifa who was under him, her raven hair now almost white from the dust.

“We need to move! Now!” Martin barked as he got to his feet and pulled Aricia up with him. “Before they find their range!” He turned and saw the unmoving bodies of at least half a dozen Durcunusaan troops, their body armor peppered and pocked with what could only be savage hits from plasma particles or debris. He saw the fur covered arm move beneath the rubble and body of one troop and he scrambled across the destroyed pieces of wall and pulled the female Durcunusaan off the Kavalian Jiss gently. Her dark hair fell across her face, a nasty slice in her scalp right to the bone, and her face peppered with small cuts. Martin cursed under his breath as he moved her gently, her body limp and unresponsive. She was an experienced Spartan female from Apo Prime. Fache had spoke of her when she first became part of his detail and how her father and mother, both senior officers within the fleet, had praised their daughter at her promotion ceremony. She was only two hundred and twenty-eight years old, and now she would never reach another year.

His eyes went to Jiss who was sputtering and spitting out debris. His face was scratched heavily, but her body had protected him from the most damaging effects of the explosion. “Jiss!” He shouted.

Jiss’s eyes were wide as they attempted to focus on Martin’s face. “I can’t... I can’t hear you!” He screamed.

Martin grinned and grabbed his shoulders. “Then you are alive!” He shouted himself as he pulled him up.

Jiss’s eyes went to the body of the Durcunusaan female as he came first to a sitting position and then to his legs. He wobbled slightly but quickly got his balance. He turned back to look at Martin with wide, disbelieving eyes. “She... She threw herself in front of me!” He stammered. “She... she saved me.”

Martin nodded. “Yes... she did.”

“But why?” Jiss questioned his eyes confused and disoriented.

“Because you are not the enemy.” Martin exclaimed. “We have to move! Now!”

“The side!” Isra shouted from the other side of the room drawing everyone’s attention. “The patio doors! We can get directly into the timber from there!”

Jiss turned and looked at the body of the female. In all his years of life, no woman had ever done such a shameless act of sacrifice for him. In many ways he agreed with the old ways of their people, but after seeing Pian and how he acted with Jalersi, his views were slowly beginning to change. He could hear and feel everyone beginning to move towards the still intact patio doors and as he began to step off to follow his feline eyes grew wide when he saw the fingers of her right hand twitch.

“Jiss!” Pian shouted as he grabbed him. “We must go!”

“She’s alive!” Jiss barked back as he knelt beside her body.

“She is dead Jiss!” Pian barked grabbing his shoulders.

Jiss shrugged his hands off violently. “I saw her move! She’s alive! I’m not leaving her!” However Ambassador Jiss of the Kavalian people had been raised, as each moment passed, he was changing and didn’t even know it. Pian watched him lift the bloody and inert figure of the Durcunusaan female into his arms easily. Jiss may have been a politician, but he was still Kavalian and equally as strong as any other. He held her easily in his arms, her head lolling against his chest and her cheek pressed to the dark fur of his shoulder.

“We go now!” Pian shouted.

TORMA! Martin screamed out within Mindvoice as his right hand reached down and he activated something on the small control panel of his uniform. He looked across at Isra who stood on the other side of the double patio doors.

A tiny yellow light blinked only twice on that small panel and then stopped. The signal it sent would not be traced. It could not be traced. It went to just one location and appeared to vanish into the void of space.

Torma, Isheeni, Aelnala and Roluth had been circling high above the home; staying well out of range of any T19s should they be a threat. Roluth had spent many months training with Torma after first bonding with Tarifa and Aihola. He had tried to plunge on Isheeni in a lustful state when he was only five years old, not realizing that the ways of the dragons had changed through the years. Isheeni had bested him soundly then, and she had been the one to start him on his path of redemption. He had thought Torma would crush him like an insect when he had discovered this, but in reality Torma became like the father Roluth had never had. While he was gone more often than not, Roluth had learned well from the most distinguished dragon of their species whenever he was on Earth. As close as their bonded ones were, it made them close as well, and now Roluth flew only a few meters from Isheeni’s tail as they circled the blue sky. He was one of only two male dragons who were not her children that dared fly this close to her, especially with Torma flying just above her and dwarfing both of them in size. Aelnala brought up the rear of the small vertical diamond formation they were in.

It had been Roluth who had seen the flash of the plasma mortars as they were fired for he just happened to be looking back behind them as they executed another wide sweeping turn.

MORTARS! Roluth savagely announced in Mindvoice causing both Torma and Isheeni to turn. Mortars on the ridge above our home! They fired Torma! They fired!

All four dragons practically stopped on a dime and turned in mid-air. The explosions landed very near the home that held all of those they loved within it and all of them saw the entire front and right side of the home erupt in the explosion that caused the both sections to crumble inward.

ARICIA! Isheeni screamed out within Mindvoice.

Split up! We must stop them before they fire again! Torma screamed. Roluth, Aelnala to the west! Isheeni and I right in! We must not let them fire again!

They are Kavalians! Isheeni barked out. I see them massing on the crest! Torma... Aricia is...

They will be dead if we do not keep them from firing again Isheeni! Torma barked at her. Twenty-six years with Martin Leonidas as his bonded brother had made Torma a superior tactician just like him.

Look! Aelnala barked. The Durcunusaan convoy from the base is under attack!

Now! Now! Torma screamed out as he and Isheeni folded their wings back and dove. The flash of red and dirty mustard out of the corner of his keen eyes told him Roluth and Aelnala were doing the same thing.

“Dragons!” The Kavalian shouted from his position near the mortars.

The senior Kavalian Puma Bane soldier on Earth had called all of their Assassination Teams together. He knew who Tarifa was and the moment he saw Roluth take to the sky, he knew that the red dragon would return with help. He had suspected her husband would return with another dragon, but he had not counted on the King and Queen arriving as well with additional ground forces, and now the targets they had been sent here to eliminate were now all in one location. He couldn’t believe his luck. Those members of the Assassination

Teams knew this was more than likely a one way mission. If they were successful, there was no way any of them would leave Earth alive. It was comfort enough to know they would kill the King of the Union and so many other high ranking officials, and he knew their actions would draw all the Netnews media here and allowed his other teams the ability to complete their assignments with at least a better than average chance.

The advance unit of Spartans from the base had been met in their Lifter Transports and all of them lay dead or dying because of the ambush. They had tried to come in over the top of the mountains and this only gave the Kavalians the advantage. He knew it would not have been so easy had the Union troops suspected Kavalians were involved and he kept this information in his head even as he rejoiced at the completeness of their ambush. The only ones to actually make it into the home had been those dozen or so that had accompanied the King and the elf witch's husband down the main road below them. He had not counted on the large ebony skinned Spartan to be anywhere near their location, but it would be another medal to pin to his chest. He would be known as the only Kavalian in history to kill a King, a Queen, a governor and two of the most senior military officers within the Lycavorian Union.

The Kavalian General's head whipped around at that one word. "Missile teams!" He screamed.

As if on cue, like they had been waiting for the call, four teams of two moved quickly out from under the heavy timber where they had swiftly erected a heavy camouflage net. As they brought the short boxy launchers to their shoulders they could see the four dragons diving out of the sky right at the mortar crews only two hundred meters away.

"Kill them!" The General barked. "Kill them all! Do it now! Send in our force! Straight down the hill at the back of the home. Kill anything that moves but make sure the King and the Kavalian traitors die!"

The Kavalian missile teams responded instantly to the order and eight fingers squeezed the triggers of their launchers at the same time. There were eight small flashes of flame and eight dragon killing missiles leaped into the sky while over seventy Kavalian Puma Bane Commandos began racing down the side of the mountain using their feline speed and agility to carry them.

TORMA! Martin's commanding voice erupted in Torma's head.

Not now brother! Torma snapped. We must remove the mortars before they fire again!

Torma they are Kavalians! Martin shouted. They will have...

DRAGON KILLERS! Aelnala's voice cut off their conversation.

Now brother! We must act now! Before it is too late! Martin's voice screamed out.

All of them, with the exception of Roluth, had faced the dragon killing missile that took the lives of twenty-three members of Mjolnir's Hand during the Evolli War. Without so much as an afterthought it took only a miniscule touch of their TK power and Dragon Armor began to extend from their saddles even as they continued their plummet towards the surface. As the last of her armor wrapped around her neck and head Isheeni cut loose with a stream of flame that reached out nearly three hundred meters. Through the years and with the intense regime that she and Aricia had practiced all that time, Isheeni was able to spit out the hottest base stream of flame of any living dragon. She was also able to direct it with unerring accuracy due to her immense Mindvoice skills. Using her power now, she concocted a shield of flame in front of her and Torma as they dove. A shield of flame that reached nearly four thousand five hundred degrees in temperature. The first three of the eight T19s rose directly into this flame shield at nine thousand feet and the small cones of the missiles melted instantly, igniting the explosive warheads. Deadly shrapnel filled the air then, two large chunks slamming into another missile and causing that to veer off course and add its own explosive power to the fray. Exploding so far away as they did caused Isheeni and Torma no harm in the least as the shrapnel and pieces of missile bounced harmlessly off their psychic shields.

It was an elf and a Lycavorian who actually developed the maneuvers to counter a T19 and when added to the wonderful Dragon Armor they all now had, the odds of survival went much higher. Isheeni's maneuver and tactic raised their odds of survival incredibly as now the four remaining T19s locked onto a single dragon.

Unfortunately, that dragon was the largest one airborne at the time. Torma recognized this almost instantly for it had happened before during battle with Martin and he instantly snapped out his wings, turned and dove away from his precious mate at a blistering rate.

Torma! Isheeni screamed out flaring her wings and slowing as she began to turn.

They are locked on me! Torma snapped as he rolled and dove for the ground. I am the largest their sensors can see! Take out the missiles my mate! Leave the mortars for Roluth and Aelnala! Take out the missiles before they fire again as well!

Torma no! Isheeni screamed.

Do it Isheeni! I will be fine! Torma barked as he snapped rolled. Do it quickly or we will leave our children with no parents to mind them!

Torma I can...

Damn it Isheeni! For once in our lives ... listen to me! Torma barked. Take out the missile teams! I will be fine!

Isheeni turned her head back and folded her wings once more, a murderous scowl coming over her dragon features as she trumpeted out her hatred and anger and opened her maw at two thousand meters.

Roluth's stream of flame reaching out for the first mortar crew was the perfect cover Aelnala needed. As the screams of the burning Kavalians reached her, Aelnala rose up, rolled over the top of Roluth who was flaring his wings to land heavily and she let out a savage trumpet of rage as her three and a half metric tons of muscle and weight came down in a huge cloud of dirt and leaves, utterly crushing the plasma mortar beneath her armored body. Aelnala had no flame bursts to use in battle for she was a pure Heavyhorn dragon. What she did have was weight and agility and a tail that could bring down buildings if she so chose it. Her long Heavyhorn tail came whipping from the side; the dragon armor encased flat portion of the tip smashing into the bodies of four Kavalians with the force of a speeding Lifter. Bones shattered, organs burst and four Kavalians were sent hurtling through the trees. As Aelnala turned to move for the last mortar she left behind a twisted and bent mortar with explosive shells scattered all about.

Roluth had not trained with Torma and learned nothing. As his own flame stream licked at the edges of his psychic shield he leaped from where he had just torn open a Kavalian with his talons and landed beside Aelnala with a rustle of wings and together they tore into the last mortar crew with barely a pause making short, bloody work of the terrified Kavalian troops. The familiar trumpet brought their heads up and the both turned to see the azure scaled dragon bellowing out her rage and hate as she dove from above. They could only watch in awe as Isheeni cut loose with another stream of flame at the Kavalian missile teams that were standing in the small clearing. Two of them had reloaded their missile launchers and were turning to fire when the flame engulfed them. Their screams lasted for only a few seconds before the four thousand degree flame and heat seared their throats shut and cooked the flesh from their bones even as they stood there and realized they were dying.

Isheeni landed among the remaining Kavalians with a horrific snarl and gleefully began ripping the burning Kavalian troops to shreds with her wickedly curved talons, her psychic shield and the dragon armor protecting her from the fire she had started. Bunched together as they were, it was over in a matter of seconds and Isheeni launched herself into the sky once more, her azure eyes scanning for her beloved dragon mate.

Torma was nearly four hundred years older than her, yet she had loved his obsidian color scales from the moment he had begun teaching her to fly on Enurrua. His quiet instruction was perfect and Isheeni was now considered the fastest and most maneuverable dragon anywhere. He had schooled her, taught her and the entire time had fallen more in love with her by the day. Many thought dragons were just beasts, unable to feel emotion in a similar manner as humans and Lycavorians. Even to this day, many still believed this, but it was so far from the truth it was ridiculous. Isheeni loved Torma with the same intensity and passion that Aricia loved Martin. And he loved her in passionate return. They were no different emotionally than other species and this knowledge was slow to make its rounds among the Union for they had only been part of the Union for twenty-five years. This was changing slowly Isheeni knew, as did all dragons, and this information was part of the reason they were now so well regarded by other species.

When her mother came to her and told her Torma had asked to join with her, to take her as his mate, no matter her age and how she would not be able to give him eggs for at least two hundred plus years Isheeni had been ecstatic. She felt a powerful draw to that monstrous hybrid dragon from the first moment she laid her azure eyes on him and it hadn't diminished in all their centuries together now. The moment they had come together and coupled in that devastatingly exquisite first plunge Isheeni had been his for eternity. Never could she replace the feeling of his scales against hers, his enormous maleness filling her or the way his wing wrapped around her while they plummeted from high above locked together in sizzling pleasure. She could not imagine life without him, and this is what drove her as she beat her wings faster than she had ever beat them in an effort to catch up with him. He had drawn the missiles far away, and she could see his huge body rolling and flipping as he dove around mountaintops and even between trees in an effort to fool the T19 missiles. She had seen what the full force of one missile could do, for only Torma and her daughter had ever survived a direct full on blast. Both of them had been injured, peppered with shrapnel, and Isheeni did not care to see what four of these terrible things could do to her beloved Torma.

Husband! She screamed. Turn back towards me!

Isheeni! The missile...

They are dead! Isheeni barked worriedly. I can not lose you! Turn back towards me and I will flame them!

They are too close! I will lose speed if I turn so sharply!

Damn you Torma! I will die without you! Only you rule my soul! Turn towards me and let me help you!

Isheeni exclaimed.

Isheeni blinked in stunned shocked when she saw his massive wings snap out completely to the sides and he executed a one hundred and eighty degree turn that a dragon his size should never have been able to do so sharply. As she sped towards him she saw two of the missiles turn just as sharply but brush into each other at the apex of the turn in a stroke of wonderful luck. She saw his powerful psychic shields flare as one missile exploded and was peppered with hot shrapnel, but he didn't slow and was gaining speed once more with each beat of his powerful wings as the last three missiles completed their turn and raced after him. Isheeni beat her wings faster if that was possible trying to close the distance.

I will not lose you! Torma's voice echoed in her mind. I can not out fly three missiles!

Torma! Isheeni's eyes grew wide as she saw him barreling at her with amazing velocity. Speed she had never seen from her dragon mate in all their years together, the distance between them rapidly shrinking. Torma what are you doing? Turn away now! I can burn the missiles!

It needs to be this way my beautiful Isheeni!

What? Torma turn! They are within my range! What are you doing husband? Isheeni's eyes grew larger as her mate came directly at her but kept his huge body between her and the oncoming missiles.

Saving you and our children. Torma answered as his massive body rocketed over the top of her smaller one. She felt the brush of his front talon against her armor and her azure eyes grew wide as she realized then what he had done. Dragon Cave!

TORMA! NO! Isheeni screamed out just before she vanished in a flash of a silver like vortex.

Torma flared his huge wings and his speed bled off in seconds and he looped around and faced the incoming missiles. He reared back his head and let loose with a sustained burst of his superheated breath. For the future!

The three T19 missiles sped directly into the path of Torma's breath, the four thousand degree heat burning through the protective cone of the first missiles with ease. The first missile was only a hundred meters from Torma before the heat from his breath ignited the explosive. The explosion from the first warhead engulfed the second two which were only meters behind the first and set them off. Even as hundreds of men, women and children stood far below in the streets of Sparta and watched, the explosive force of three T19 missiles struck Torma's psychic shields with unmitigated fury. His shields flared brilliantly for a few seconds and then the concussive force of those three missiles and all the shrapnel that accompanied them struck Torma head on. As those same people watched in horror, the explosions were like sonic booms and they became a small sun in the sky above causing many to turn away at the brightness.

When they turned back all they saw was the huge body of the King's dragon plummeting to earth. As Aelnala and Roluth looked on in horror from where they were racing to the scene, they watched Torma's mangled body smash into the side of a building two thousand feet below them as people raced to get out of the way screaming out their own terror.

Ten kilometers away Isheeni reappeared just as she was about to smash into the side of their home on the royal estate. She flared her huge wings to the side and twisted her body to avoid colliding with the top of Dragon Cave. As her talons brushed the opening at the top of the cave where they had taught their children to fly Isheeni heard her mate's words.

For the future!

Then there was nothing.

The shriek within Mindvoice was deafening as Isheeni's wail of anguish filled the minds of every Mindvoicer with the power to hear her cry as she streaked back into the sky gaining altitude and heading back to Sparta. And this included her most precious and closest friend. Her bonded sister.

Aricia staggered under the onslaught of Isheeni's wail in Mindvoice and Martin turned to face her as they made their way through the timber and broke into the open of the small, quiet neighborhood half a kilometer from Isra and Tarifa's home. The old style homes were actually very reminiscent of ancient Sparta in their design with large concrete flower beds surrounding property and stylish designs on the open windows and doorways. Men and women all around were coming from their homes and looking towards where Tarifa's home burned wildly. They all knew whose home it was that was burning not far away for most of the men and women in this neighborhood had thrown a huge block party type celebration when the female elf they all knew as the King's sister was named Lieutenant Governor of Sparta and moved into their quiet neighborhood. They could just hear the sounds of emergency crews that were rushing to the scene.

Aricia looked at him with wide, pain filled eyes. "Beloved! Isheeni!" Aricia gasped.

"I know!" Martin barked his face stern and unreadable. "C'mon!" He snapped pulling on her hand. "We have to keep moving!"

"GET DOWN!" Pian roared from behind them as he shoved Jalersi to the ground behind a medium sized Lifter car.

Martin whirled just in time to see a dozen Kavalians break from the line of trees behind them, two of them bringing up some sort of grenade launchers. His eyes could detect many more rushing through the timber behind them, moving to flanking positions as he pushed Aricia to the ground behind some concrete flowerbed just as weapons fire erupted all around them. As he dropped to the ground next to her, Aricia was still shaking from the onslaught of Isheeni's cry and she grabbed his arm.

"Martin!" She screamed. "Torma..."

"I KNOW!" Martin roared back as he pulled his Nehtes from its thigh scabbard. Two explosions just on the other side of the planter sent clouds of dirt and gravel up into the air, tiny pieces falling all over them as Martin turned to partially cover Aricia with his body.

"The King is over there! Behind the low wall!" He heard someone shout above the din of weapons fire and the sound of projectiles smashing into the buildings and Lifters all around them. "He is the primary target! Kill him! The others are a bonus! Kill Leonidas! Move! Move! Move!"

Her name was Me'alla and this was only her first full day on the job. It was a first full day she would remember for many years to come.

Me'alla had graduated from the prestigious Earth Academy of Arts only two short months ago. In barely twenty years the EAA had become renowned for turning out some of the finest media people in the Union, as well as several up and coming politicians. Me'alla had gotten the job with Netnews Channel 65 only last week and this was her first full day on the job alone in the field with her technical aid. The Netnews reporter gaped in shock at the wisps of smoke that still remained in the air above her. She turned quickly to look at the elven technician who was handling her technical equipment for the interview she was supposed to be conducting with Governor Panos's senior aide. They had been enroute to that aide's home when the explosions from Tarifa's residence only eight blocks away drew their attention. As their vehicle screeched to a halt and they piled out they could see the dragons off in the distance bellowing out trumpets and suddenly and quite spectacularly firing lethal blasts of their flame into the tall, mountainous terrain backstopping the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa. They had watched in awe with the several hundred others who now lined the streets around them as the battle in the sky above between dragon and missile took place.

The King's dragon Torma was by far the most well known of the dragons with their Elder Mother and Prince Androcles's dragon Elynth running close seconds. They had witnessed him performing some of the most incredible aerial maneuvers anyone had ever seen from a dragon this day as he tried to outrace the obvious T19 missiles. Me'alla knew immediately what they were for her oldest brother was bonded to a dragon and he had talked of the much hated Evolli designed T19 missiles before. That someone had fired so many at one time at the King's dragon could not mean good things and Me'alla had her driver stop what he was doing as they filmed it all and sent the feed out live to their headquarters in Eden City. They had witnessed Torma speed by the azure scaled dragon and were stunned when that dragon suddenly disappeared in a silver vortex of incandescent light. They had watched him execute a stunning maneuver and rear back to fire his superheated molten breath at the missiles that still followed him only to bear witness to the missiles exploding so close to him they blinded almost everyone on the ground. When they looked back up, the gasps of so many could be heard as they saw the King's dragon plummeting to the earth obviously mortally wounded.

Me'alla looked at her tech now in shock. "Hr'man... please... please tell me we didn't just see the King's dragon blown from the sky?"

The Elven tech could only nod his head just as stunned as she was. "Carians! Who would shoot down the King's dragon?" Hr'man exclaimed.

"It has to be the High Coven!" Me'alla declared. "This must be a follow on operation after their attack on Zarah Leonidas and Dragon Mountain!"

Many heads began turning as the sound of weapons fire could be heard in the streets now several blocks away. "C'mon!" Me'alla barked as she began to move quickly with the others in the street as they migrated towards the sounds. "We'll never get there by Lifter! We have to see what is going on!"

Hr'man didn't hesitate as he followed, they were reporters after all. He saw Me'alla reach for the COM unit on her wrist and she activated the connection that would send her broadcast communications out live. He heard her voice erupt in his small earpiece as they started to run towards the sound of the weapons fire.

"This is Me'alla reporting from the outskirts of Sparta!" She gasped out as she ran with the others heading in the same direction. "We... we were on our way to a scheduled meeting with Governor Panos's senior aide Janae when... by the gods... the King's dragon is dead!" She exclaimed as she ran. "We just witnessed Torma being killed by what could only be three T19 missiles fired from a location unknown to us! Somewhere in the mountains around Sparta we think. We stopped enroute to our meeting when three very large explosions originating from what could only be the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa shook the quiet neighborhood we were in. As we exited our Lifter to view this we saw the dragons in the sky in the surrounding airspace! No one knows what is going on here and we are moving with many other citizens towards the sound of the heavy gunfire. Some of them are soldiers and they are carrying their weapons with them even though half dressed!" Me'alla turned back and looked at Hr'man. "Hurry up Hr'man!" she barked at him.

EDEN CITY NETNEWS CHANNEL 65 HEADQUARTERS

"...by the gods... the King's dragon is dead!" She exclaimed as she ran. "We just witnessed the King's dragon and Bonded Brother Torma being killed by what could only be three T19 missiles fired from a location unknown to us! We stopped enroute to our meeting when three very large explosions originating from what could only be the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa shook the quiet neighborhood we were in. As we exited our Lifter to view this we saw the dragons in the sky in the surrounding airspace! No one knows what is going on here and we are moving with many other citizens towards the sound of the heavy gunfire. Some of them are soldiers and they are carrying their weapons with them even though half dressed!"

The director of the Netnews station was human and his eyes were wide as he listened to their newest journalist and how she had just found herself in the middle of an exploding war zone in Sparta.

"Fuck me!" He swore turning to those in the control room with him. "Get all our people on this!" He barked out. "Is she getting any footage... can she hear us?"

The woman turned from her seat, her ears telling everyone she was only half elf. “Getting the feed from Hr'man now!” She announced.

The five men and women in the control center became silent as they witnessed the very clear footage of Torma’s death. “Oh my god!” The woman gasped. They watched the dragon’s huge body plummet to earth until it was out of sight and then the footage shifted to smoke rising in the distance not so far away over the tops of the obvious civilian area.

“Where is that?” William Moore barked.

“Looks like the Old Sparta District along the mountains!” A man answered quickly.

“She said she was going to meet Major Janae!” Another woman spoke. “That’s Governor Panos’s senior aide! She lives in that area! Star Colonel Isra’s home with Tarifa is in that same district as well.”

The door to the control room slid open and two men came barging in. “Bill... we’re getting information of a running gun battle in Sparta’s old district!”

“We’re also getting reports from assets in Sparta’s Old District of mortars being fired from the mountains overlooking the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa.” The second man barked out. “Their home is burning and half of it has caved in according to this!”

“Me'alla and Hr'man just sent a live report from Sparta!” Moore snapped. “They caught the King’s dragon being killed by T19 missiles over the city!”

“The new girl?” One man gasped. “The King’s dragon being killed! What the fuck is going on?”

“Lino... get a full crew into our transport and get over there before they shut down the planet! I need someone to back up Me'alla!” Moore snapped.

“Back her up?” The man hissed.

“Yes damn it! She’s already there and she has the lead!” Moore barked. “Frank... go with him and get to Deia’s office and find out what is going on!”

The two men nodded. “On it!”

“I want all our stations on this people!” Moore answered turning back around. “Someone just killed the King’s dragon live and in color and I want to know who! Keep an open link with Me'alla no matter what! Something is going down in Sparta and I want to know what it is! God bless that elven girl... I knew she was going to be a star! First day on the job and all hell breaks loose!”

They were pinned down but good Martin thought as he brought his K12 back down and slammed in another fifty round Kinetic projectile clip. Danny huddled with Anuk, Jiss and the still inert form of the Durcunusaan soldier he had refused to leave claiming she was still alive. Jiss was firing over the top of the bullet riddled Lifter with Danny’s K12, while his huge ebony skinned brother used short, controlled bursts from his 190. Tarifa, Isra, Karun and Ardis were behind similar concrete flower planters as what he and Aricia huddled behind now. He could not see Pian or Jalersi from his location, but he could certainly hear the 190s burning out ammo from the other side of Danny’s position.

[Milord!] Fache’s voice erupted into his mind. [Martin!]

[Fache!] Martin answered.

[We are thirty seconds away! Coming from the timber! They ambushed our support team sire! I have twenty surviving Spartans with me! Reports are coming in that civilians are moving towards your location from the east! All of them armed! Kavalian troops are everywhere!] Fache gasped out and it was easy to ascertain he was running.

[Call them off Fache! These are Kavalian shock troops! They’ll kill anyone who gets in their way! They’re flanking us on both sides with heavy weapons and grenade launchers! Our people won’t stand a chance!] Martin shouted in reply as he lifted his K12 over the top of the planter and let rip with ten rounds in quick succession.

[Milord! We have to do something or they will overwhelm you from the flanks! There is easily a company of them!] Fache exclaimed.

[They’re after me!] Martin declared. [They want me dead! This is my brother’s doing! Warn Deia and For'mya! Warn my mother! Keep them safe Fache!]

[I have men moving there now! Milord I can see your position! We are almost there! We'll hit them from the rear!] Fache screamed.

[No time Fache!] Martin declared. [They want me and I'm going to draw them away from the others!]
[Martin no!] Fache screamed. [No!]

Martin turned his head and looked at Aricia. She could feel the tremors within Mindvoice of his conversation and she looked at him with wide eyes even as she flinched from the rounds hitting the planter and the grenade explosion that showered them with more dirt. Her K12 was clutched in her hands and she looked every bit the warrior alpha female. Martin leaned over quickly, seizing her sweet lips and kissed her hard.

For the future Saaurano! He spoke. Stay here under cover Aricia!
Beloved? She questioned him.

Tell Andro he must meet with Wayonn now! He must meet with Wayonn! Under my uniform on the chair Saaurano! Under my uniform! For the future!

Aricia saw what he intended in his mind then and she reached for him even as he surged to his feet. “NO! MARTIN NO!” She screamed as her hands grasped air and he was running away from her even amid the intense weapons fire.

Aricia came to her feet unintentionally as well as she screamed his name, her azure blue eyes wide. She never saw the Kavalian troop who was closest to her or his eyes grow wide at this action, nor did she see him instantly realign his weapon and pull the trigger. Aricia felt the three rounds punch into her side between the plates of armor on the Mark IV ArmorPly. Her eyes flared at the intense pain as her body was physically tossed back and she slammed into the side wall of the home the planter was in front of with enough force to dislodge several bricks from the side. As she slumped to a sitting position Aricia saw her Beloved, the man and mate who held her very essence in his hands, running away to draw their enemy away from them and then blackness claimed her into its embrace.

As the Kavalian Puma Bane soldier stood up with a delighted and cruel sneer to finish the first Queen of the Union, he did not notice the flash of dark brown fur to his right, and as he brought his weapon up, Colonel Fache hit him in full stride in his muscular wolf form. Long flesh shredding fangs and black razor claws shredded the Kavalian's throat and tore one arm from his body before he had an opportunity to pull the trigger. As the Kavalian staggered, blood erupting from his torn throat, Fache was landing on his feet and transforming back to human form. That is when twenty Lycavorian Spartan wolves, extremely upset that so many of their friends had perished in the ambush of their column, descended on the unsuspecting Kavalians from the timber with berserker blood fury in their eyes and murder in their hearts.

Aricia's scream caused Danny to turn his head just as Martin broke from cover and his dark eyes flew open at his brother's actions. He saw Aricia stand up and then get hit and tossed back against the home hard, sliding to a sitting position with her blood staining the outside of the wall, her eyes closing in either unconsciousness or death Danny did not know.

Daniel Simpson felt the rage well within him from deep down for he knew what Martin was doing. He had heard the same shouted commands among the Kavalians. As Danny came to his feet, he didn't hear Anuk scream out and reach for him. He didn't feel the strike of two rounds to his body armor. He didn't see himself lift his P190A3 with one hand and return fire, the un-aimed burst striking the Kavalian Puma Bane troop in the chest and throat. All he could see was his brother Martin running away as fast as his legs would carry him, firing his K12 at the Kavalians, trying to draw the enemy away from so many whom his brother loved. Danny sensed the weapons fire directed at them slackening even as the Kavalians turned to follow the running King of the Union, projectile rounds dotting the concrete and pavement under Martin's feet as he ran and the Kavalians shifting fire completely. His mind's eye saw a similar action many years ago in the heat and harshness of a desert not so very far from here. Danny knew instantly that today would not end so happily as that one did.

He saw Martin's Shi Viska flare into existence and launch with barely a thought, slashing off at some Kavalian's head that Danny couldn't see. Danny was frozen in his spot, held by some unseen force as his wolf eyes detected the two large Kavalians appear from the corner of the building with grenade launchers in their hands. He watched as they tracked Martin slowly, everything now moving as if time was standing still all around them.

It was then that Daniel Simpson moved.

He moved faster than he had ever moved in his life. A flash of silver/white light and the large, dark chocolate colored wolf was bounding towards Martin as fast as his four legs would carry him. Anuk Simpson didn't hesitate and came to a standing position screaming out her own rage, holding back the trigger on her 190 as she sprayed the positions of the Kavalians in an effort to protect the man she so loved. Daniel Simpson ran as if the hounds of hell were nipping at his paws, his chest rumbling in effort and he screamed out within Mindvoice louder than he had ever screamed before in his life.

BEHIND YOU BROTHER!

Danny saw Martin's head turn as he ran and his yellow wolf eyes erupted in agony when he saw the two Kavalians fire simultaneously.

NO! NO! NO!

A piercing howl of anguish filled the air all around as if by some cruel action of the gods Danny watched those two explosive rounds track unerringly on the only man he had ever truly known as brother. Daniel Simpson had brothers, all brothers by his birth parents and he was close with all of them. Yet they and everyone knew the deep relationship that he shared with Martin. They had grown together, fought together, bled together and discovered together. They had been through more battles than they could remember, fought and killed more enemies than either of them could imagine and they had always come out on top. They had saved each other on countless occasions, never leaving each other alone. Even when they discovered who and what they really were, after so many years of not having the answer to that question, this only brought them even closer. Wives, mates, children. They had shared it all. Through no fault of their own, now they would share death.

Danny's eyes filled with tears even as he ran, knowing he would not be in time.

He was cursed to watch as those two explosive grenades struck his brother in mid stride. He saw Martin staring at him and witnessed the most amazing thing. Martin Leonidas smiled at him just as those two grenades blew up one meter above the ground and only half a meter from him.

For the future brother! Those words echoed in the corridor of Danny's mind and would for weeks to come.

Daniel Simpson then endured the supreme torture and agony of watching as his much-loved brother's body was shredded and torn in half by the explosive grenades, the bright silver like center of the explosion tossing his lower body one way while his upper body went another in a ghastly display of blood and bone and flesh.

Martin Leonidas, twenty-ninth King of Sparta and the Agiad Line and the second King of the Lycavorian Union, died as he had lived life.

Saving the lives of those he loved and never fearing the unknown.

Colonel Fache stared in unmitigated horror at what he had just seen; his eyes wide as he felt searing anger and berserker madness grip him. He lifted his hand in the last act of the senior Durcunusaan commander of the royal villa estate.

"ALPHA STORM! ALPHA STORM! The King is down! The King is down! Spartan One is down!!" He screamed into his jaw implant before he allowed the madness to engulf him as it had all the other Spartans who had witnessed the events unfold before them.

Unknown to Daniel Simpson or those Spartans who now went completely insane with fury and misery, a lone journalist named Me'alla and her technical aide Hr'man stood only two hundred feet away on the corner of another house with dual expressions of horror and surprise as their video drone hummed away mindlessly behind them recording everything as it took place live and in color. They could only watch as every Spartan turned toward where their King had fallen and they began to systematically kill everything between them and their fallen King in an effort to reach his body.

Ten seconds after the death of Martin Leonidas, it was going out across the Lycavorian Union and would serve as a rallying cry for the son who would now become King.

ULU HARBINGER

Daba moved up next to Walter as he stood leaning against the doorframe into the medical bay. He turned to look at her and smiled gently. He motioned into the room with his head. “The Yara Parma was right after all.” He stated slowly.

Daba’s amber eyes followed where he motioned with his head and she saw Lu’ria resting comfortably in the medical bed, the three women crowded around her. Carisia sat on one side of the bed, Sadi and Ne’Veha on the other. Sadi held Lu’ria’s hand within both of hers, Carisia’s hands resting on Lu’ria’s other arm. There were no words being spoken between them, but she could see Lu’ria’s bright amber eyes gleaming in happiness as she looked back and forth. Daba turned back to Walter and he saw the question in her eyes.

“They are speaking within Mindvoice Daba. Sadi is beginning to help Lu’ria to adjust to her transformation to wolf.” Walter answered the unspoken question in her amber colored eyes. “The change will be nearly complete outwardly by now. Her senses and her strength will have tripled at the very least. Her abilities in Mindvoice even more so given what Andro is capable of. It will take probably another sixteen to eighteen months for it to fully encompass her entire molecular structure as it did with Anja and Dysea. It is a lot to take in and Sadi will be an excellent teacher for her. She is very much like Gorgo in her demeanor and patience.”

“So fast?” Daba asked stunned.

Walter nodded. “It’s the pureness of Andro’s blood.” He replied. “It is so virulent in its nature that it makes the initial transformation more painful, but it also makes the transformation much more quickly. Sadi and Andro will teach her to use her new senses and abilities. They’ll teach her how to shift and run as a wolf, how to sing to the moon. They’ll teach her all she needs to know Daba. She is his mate now, and she is their Mistress if what I have seen so far is any indication.”

“Walter... there has never... there has never been a Drow who is completely wolf.” Daba said softly.

Walter looked at her oddly. “I thought... Daniel’s father... Melancton... he changed a Drow during their assault of your city in Canada didn’t he?” Walter asked. “Lu’ria isn’t the first.”

Daba shook her head. “Ta’rena was one of the last Drow to be cloned from your work Holy One.” She answered. “She was not pureborn a Drow. And she is very happy as the second mate to Daniel’s father and Mistress to his mother. Aihola our Queen was born part vampire because of the Coven experiments conducted on her mother and father.” Daba looked at him evenly. “Lu’ria... Lu’ria is the first pureborn Drow to be made a wolf. We have known this could happen; our females are drawn to strength and prowess, as you know. Lycavorians have the traits we look for in mates and husbands but we have purposely avoided this circumstance as much as possible until our...”

“Until you had two or three generations of re-populating your species of elf within your own ranks?” Walter asked.

Daba looked embarrassed as she nodded slowly. “Yes.” She said. “I know that it is not right but...”

“Daba... do you think Martin didn’t know that.” Walter said. “He understood it. And he in part believed in what you were doing. He has great personal respect and reverence for the Drow Daba, he always has. Much of that stems from Lynwe and Aihola and what they started with him in Eden City. Andro does as well... but with him it is more spiritual than anything. The Drow are closest to Lycavorians in terms of tradition, honor, duty and culture and general mentality. But now... with Lu’ria and Andro... now you will need to release the last book of the Yara Parma and begin letting the Drow choose for themselves. I think it might surprise you just how many remain true to their culture and history. I believe they will see Lu’ria becoming Andro’s mate as a sign that the Drow are meant to be tied to the Leonidas family. Not as a way for them to break free of what you believe.”

“I know.” She stated softly. “Aihola has tried through the years to slowly get all of the Elders to see this. She has succeeded to a degree, but now I think they will see Lu’ria and Andro and they will know it is the right way.”

“Were you able to get a hold of your oldest daughter?” Walter asked.

Daba shook her head slowly and looked at him. “There is still a Level Six blackout on Earth and the ship’s communications officer told me since this ship does not officially exist, I can not call her ship until we are back in Union space.”

Walter nodded. “Yes... the HARBINGER came from Dreamland. There would be no record of her status.”

“Dreamland?” Daba asked looking at him. “What is this place?”

Walter chuckled softly. “Welcome to the world of the Leonidas family Daba. I would imagine you would become privy to information that is by no means common knowledge. You might be surprised at what goes on behind the scenes in this family and...”

“Sadi what is wrong?” Ne'Veha's voice barked out drawing their attention into the room. They saw Sadi come to her feet and stagger backwards from the bed, holding her temples with the palms of her hands.

Sadi shook her head back and forth as Ne'Veha gripped her arms and Lu'ria sat up in the bed. “No!” Sadi exclaimed painfully. “No!”

“Sadi... what is wrong?” Ne'Veha almost screamed with worry.

Sadi's usually tanned skin had gone pale now, and her jungle greens eyes were wide in horror and disbelief. “An... Andro my love! Oh no!” Sadi gasped. “Elynth!” She clenched her teeth and squeezed her head tighter as Walter and Daba came into the room quickly.

Walter moved right up to her and took her arms, pulling her close to him. “Sadi! Sadi what is it?” He demanded.

It touched Carisia first, then Ne'Veha and finally Lu'ria. All within seconds of each other and then they were all gripping their heads as if sharp blades were being plunged into their brains and twisted around.

“Phraktos nau!” Carisia hissed as she leaned against the bed and held her hands to her head.

Sadi's eyes grew wide as just as suddenly as it had struck, the pain was gone. They heard it then, the woeful trumpet of horrible agony from Elynth as the echo of her cry rolled along the three decks closest to the Hanger Bay where she was, including the deck they were on which held the medical bay. Sadi pushed back from Walter quickly.

“Something... something has happened!” She gasped.

“Something terrible!” Ne'Veha gasped as she shook her head still, trying to shake the intense feelings from her mind.

The shrill alarm cut through all of them like a knife and their heads came up as the voice came over the internal COM.

“HARBINGER is now at Condition One! HARBINGER is now at Condition One! All on duty personnel report to your combat stations! All on duty personnel report to your combat stations! This is not a drill! I say again this is not a drill! We have received a Alpha Storm alarm from Earth! We have an Alpha Storm alarm from Earth! Stand by for sustained combat operations!”

Sadi looked at Walter as she felt his hands squeeze her arms almost painfully and the air expelled from his lungs in a shocked manner. “Walter what is it?” She demanded. “What does that mean? I have never heard that term before! What does it mean?”

Walter's face was a mask of disbelief as his dark eyes focused on her. “Martin... it... he...”

“Damn it Walter! What does it mean?” Sadi screamed.

Walter met her fear filled eyes. “It means the King has... it means the King has been killed.” He spoke with disbelief.

SPARTA PRIME MINISTER DEIA'S OFFICE

“...find me a fucking Durcunusaan officer!” Deia screamed at the image of her aide on her monitor, her eyes filled with tears at what they had just witnessed. She held a trembling For'mya in her arms, the woman sobbing almost uncontrollably from the assault of Aurith's cry within Mindvoice and seeing the man she loved more than her own life blown apart before her eyes.

Deia had experienced many things in her long life. Joy. Sorrow. Anger. Her nearly fifteen thousand years of life had shown her many things that most would never experience in four lifetimes. She had seen and witnessed the unquenchable love Resumar had for her sister. His actions in reclaiming Eliani from Chetak, no matter what the cost or risk to him, this had caused Deia to love and trust the man utterly. She had been beside her sister Eliani and Resumar when they had succumb to the High Coven destruction of their world and their subsequent rule and slavery of all Lycavorians. She had seen the barely controlled rage on Resumar's face when he agreed to this in order to save what remained of their people. She had stood with them the entire time during their slavery by the Coven, working with them behind the scenes, many not even realizing she was Eliani's sister. She had been one of those working with Eliani and Resumar as they planned the exodus of the ten thousand fetuses to Earth, not realizing that in their actions they were saving the last of the royal bloodline.

When Resumar and Eliani fell beside Canth and their beloved elven concubine that day, Deia had vowed to never let their legacy die. She actively entered the political arena the day Martin's father died, swearing to insure he did not die in vain. It was her will and skill that had finally brought all the different factions together in one voice, completing what Resumar and her sister had begun. It was Deia who orchestrated Apo Prime becoming the seat of the new Lycavorian Union. All this she did as a simple senator of the Union, the loudest and most influential voice among the many thousands who had joined them. When she was elected as Prime Minister, Deia threw herself headlong into the job. Part of it she knew was because she had made that vow so long ago, and part of it was because she truly believed. They had Gorgo back among them and the second son of Leonidas hidden and safe. They simply needed to buy time and fight the Coven until they could be reasonably sure Martin would be safe growing somewhere.

The day she found out that Martin's ship had been destroyed almost ended her desire to continue. The baby who would be their King was lost to them. The last link to her sister and the man Eliani so loved. Deia never knew what it was that possessed her to continue on with what they had started. She didn't know why the fire did not leave her. Something drove her to stay on the path and continue what they had started no matter the cost. Some sense of awe and respect and will to not see their goal die. She was never able to fully put her finger on the invisible force that drove her forward.

Until the day that signal first came to them twenty-seven years earlier.

A signal on a channel reserved for Lycavorian Oracles. A communications channel that had not been used in over two thousand years until it activated that fateful day and announced that Martin Leonidas lived. In that signal Deia discovered why she had never given up hope. Why she had never stopped moving forward and keeping the dream alive. A part of her, so very tiny and miniscule in relation to everything else, that part of her knew Martin had lived and therefore would not let her fail. Through everything that had happened since his return, Deia had never felt such joy and happiness. They thought so much alike, and in Martin Leonidas Deia saw Resumar. The passion, the power and the desire for peace and freedom for all his people. These last years had seen many things happen that tried her patience with him, he was stubborn as a mule, willful and did not seem to take things as seriously as he should even though he was now king to trillions of lifeforms. Only when she stepped back at different times did she see the manner and methodic workings of his mind and how he did things. He loved his Queens just as brightly and unashamedly as Resumar had ever loved Eliani. As his father had loved his mother Gorgo. There was nothing he would not do for any of them. Many considered him politically inept, though Deia knew him to be a consummate diplomat when he wanted to be. Through it all, never once did she doubt that he would lead their people and the Union into a bright future.

Never once did she imagine she would see that future explode in living color.

Isheeni's wail of anguish within Mindvoice was only the prelude to the nightmare when Torma died. As For'mya staggered from the force of both Isheeni and Aurith screaming out their agony, even Deia could hear and feel the pain. She had pulled For'mya to her then, yelling at the open communications monitor to her aides to find Martin. To warn him. Anything. She had never felt so helpless in her life. The large wall monitor in her office had been tuned to this young elven reporter as she ran through the streets of Old Sparta. It was an area she knew well, for like every Lycavorian within the Union, Deia adored coming to Sparta. It was like being able to live in the past and future together with the history that encompassed this city that Martin's father had built. She had no idea she would be there holding For'mya and together they would witness the gruesome death of a man they both loved in different ways. For'mya had screamed out her horror and combined with the assault of Isheeni and Aurith's cry within Mindvoice she was very nearly overwhelmed with grief.

Deia knew that For'mya's latent abilities within Mindvoice allowed her to sense things that were odd. It gave her an uncanny ability to know things were not as they should be, almost like a powerful sixth sense. More powerful than anything Deia had ever seen before. Several times over the last twenty years this ability had saved her life and the lives of others by keeping them from acting on something that For'mya felt was out of sync as she described it. This ability also made her more susceptible to overwhelming emotions around her. While she was not physically weak by any standard, she did not have the harsh and sometimes brutal upbringing that Martin's other Queens had experienced to some extent. She was not as hardened to outside events as they were, and while she knew Martin adored this about For'mya, Deia also knew For'mya considered it her single most damning weakness.

"I can raise no one Prime Minister!" The aide shouted back from on the monitor. "The moment the Alpha Storm directive went out, all Union communications and security devices went into automatic. I'm having difficulty getting through to the Durcunusaan main base! Your own detachment is trying as well and they are unable to get through!"

"Who is leading this?" Deia screamed out. "Find Armetus! Riall! Anyone! The Kavalians didn't get here on their own!"

"I'm on it Prime Minister!" The aide barked.

Deia turned back to look at For'mya. "For'mya... child!"

For'mya's golden blond hair whipped back and forth slowly. "He... he can't be dead!" She sobbed. "Deia! Deia I can't feel him anymore! I can't..."

"Hold on For'mya child..." Deia stammered as she pushed herself to her feet. "I will get you something to ease the screaming in your mind."

Deia knew well the effect on the mate of a male Alpha wolf when they died, especially a powerful Alpha, of which Martin Leonidas was the most powerful. The connection they had to their wives and mates within Mindvoice and emotionally ran very deep, no matter if they were turned or pureblood. When that connection was severed so completely and utterly, and done so quickly such as it had been when Martin died, it could leave the female dazed and confused for days.

As Deia made her way quickly to her desk the door to her office began to open. She stopped and began to bark out an order assuming it was the Durcunusaan entering. Her eyes grew wide when she saw Laustinos enter the office with five very large and well-armed Kavalians behind him. Deia's eyes darted out into the anteroom of her office and she saw the bodies of her aide and two Durcunusaan soldiers lying on the floor of the outer office with large parts of their heads missing.

"Laustinos... what is the meaning of..." Deia's eyes went wide when she saw him lift his hand and the K12 Magnum appeared.

"Shut up you fucking bitch!" Laustinos screamed as he stepped up to and smashed the K12 across her face sending her sprawling. "I'm helping to usher in a new rule for the Union!" Laustinos shouted at Deia as she held her face and glared at him from the floor, blood leaking between her fingers.

"You nubous traitor!" Deia screamed as she scrambled up next to For'mya and taking her in her arms. "It was you! You have done this!"

For'mya glared at Laustinos with fully changed wolf eyes and fangs exposed. "YOU!" She bellowed. "You have helped them to kill my Martin!"

Laustinos's laugh sounded almost insane in its makeup. "Of course I have!" He barked. "This is the only way that Marshall Pusintin can sit on the throne once more. His brother... that stupid brute of a man... he was leading us to ruin! He didn't love you For'mya! You are a fool to think he could love more than Aricia!"

"LIAR!" For'mya snarled as the Kavalian troops slowly spread out in the room behind Laustinos.

"You! Anja! That vampire whore... even my Dysea! He doesn't love any of you! Why can't you see...?" Laustinos continued.

"You... you did all this for Dysea?" For'mya gasped now. "You killed our... you killed Martin to win Dysea? Are you mad? You cannot compare to him! Never in all of eternity! Dysea will kill you horribly for what you have done!"

"See now that is where you are wrong." Laustinos declared. "She is wolf! Her body will sing for a mate now that Leonidas is dead! I intend to be that mate!"

"NEVER!" For'mya growled.

"We shall see! When Pusintin is once more King of the Union... you will see." Laustinos stated.

"We have to move quickly." The Kavalian closest to him snapped.

“Pusintin?” Deia gasped as she came to her feet wiping the blood from her cheek which was laid open nearly to the bone. “He can never sit on the throne of the Union or Sparta! You have betrayed your people for nothing! You have killed Martin! You helped them to kill my... you helped them to kill my nephew!” Deia screeched in unrelenting anger.

Laustinos pulled the trigger twice in quick succession just as Deia was leaping off the floor in mid-change. Those two kinetic rounds punched into Deia’s chest center mass and physically tossed her body backwards with incredible force. Blood blossomed from between her shoulder blades as at least one round punched clean through her midsection. As she slammed into the wall and slumped into a sitting position Laustinos stepped up to her and leveled the K12 at her head. “I hate you!” He screamed. “You overbearing arrogant upae!”

Laustinos heard the growl too late and turned just as the golden blond fur of the large female wolf appeared out of the corner of his eye. Those jaws snapped shut on his arm and long flesh tearing teeth sank to the bone.

For'mya Leonidas may have been the most docile of Martin’s queens, but she was by no means helpless. She was a seasoned fighter pilot and the premier pilot within the Union of the STRIKER Class ships. She had seen battle before, some of it up close and personal. As her fangs sank deeply into the flesh of his arm, she brought up her right front paw to rake it savagely down Laustinos’s face. The hammer like blow fell upon her skull then causing her to see bright stars. She was vaguely aware of the Kavalian to the side of her drawing his rifle butt back for another blow that she could not stop. The butt of that weapon smashed into her head once more and For'mya lost all control of her limbs as her jaws released Laustinos’s arm and she staggered drunkenly into the side of Deia’s desk. Two other Kavalians lashed out with savage kicks to her sides drawing wolf yelps of pain and surprise as she was launched across the room to crash into the monitor, shattering the glass partition into hundreds of pieces. She fell to the floor, her wolf eyes blinking rapidly and trying to focus on anything but the pain that lanced through her entire body.

“Don’t kill her you fool!” Laustinos screamed out as he held his bloody arm with his opposite hand. “Your Marshall wants her alive to insure completion of the plan! Secure her as she is, but leave room for her to shift back!”

The Kavalian who had spoken earlier removed something from his combat harness. “The charges are set?” He asked.

Laustinos nodded. “I positioned them myself over the last few weeks.” He replied as he tore a piece of his inner shirt away and wrapped it around his bloody forearm. “They will bring the entire building down once we enter the tunnel!”

“It will kill many of your people.” The Kavalian declared.

Laustinos met his eyes. “They are not my people as long as Pusintin keeps his end of the bargain.” He barked.

“Where is this secret entrance?” The Kavalians asked.

Laustinos motioned with his head. “Behind the first bookcase. The touch panel is under her desk chair. Once in the tunnel we can blow the building while we make our way outside the city.”

The Kavalian nodded. “Then let us go!”

ULU ARIZONA

Miranda was pacing the bridge of the ARIZONA deep in thought. Ever since they had detected Andro’s STRIKER make the jump to Iraruzu she had had a feeling of foreboding that was growing steadily as time passed. Velnar had contacted her just before engaging the Kavalian frigate that was generating the Deutrino field around Iraruzu, and now they could get no sensor readings from the planet. That could only mean they had succeeded in destroying the frigate, but also spreading massive particles of Deutrino through the entire system making sensor readings iffy at best. There had been no communications with the HARBINGER since. Miranda did not worry for Velnar and his ship. The HARBINGER, like the SCIMITAR and other newer LEONIDAS IIA Strike Cruisers, was the pinnacle of advanced technology. Those ships were closer to the ARIZONA than any other ship in the fleet when it came to technology and weapons, though they lacked the mighty punch that the ARIZONA could unleash in so many different ways.

Miranda was a fighter pilot by nature, and her mind was always plotting scenarios and steps to take even before she took them. It was why she and Steven thought so much alike and why she wanted his as her CAG. Miranda turned and looked at E'dira sitting at her station and running one diagnostic or another. She was fastidious in her duties Miranda knew. Looking at the Drow female that she so desired gave Miranda that little extra push and she took a deep breath.

"E'dira... can you run a gravometric spatial sweep of the system around Iraruzu?" She asked moving towards her.

E'dira looked up at her with amber eyes. "A gravometric scan will not allow us to see past the massive Deutrino disruption."

Miranda nodded her head. "I know... but it will detect the Dragon Armor weave of the HARBINGER'S hull. It will tell us if she is still in the system."

E'dira's eyes grew slightly wider and she smiled. "Miranda... that is... that is excellent!" Yes... this woman was most definitely going to be hers E'dira thought. Her hands began to move across her consoles as she adjusted her sensors. "Compensating for Deutrino particle emissions..." E'dira looked up at her shaking her head. "No... the HARBINGER no longer appears to be in the system."

"Shit!" Miranda muttered. "And Velnar would run dark with the Crown Prince onboard. At least until he returned here and formed with us."

"We could use a tight beam sub space carrier wave and contact Androcles Leonidas on the Spartan 11 secure frequency." E'dira offered.

Miranda shook her head. "No. I want..."

"Captain Lorian... Alpha Priority transmission from Commander Falarie on Falcon Four One!" The female voice barked from across the bridge.

Miranda spun around quickly. "Alpha Priority?" She exclaimed moving back towards her command chair. "Put it up! Holo Station One! And get Colonel Randall up here pronto!"

"I'm already here!" Steven's voice barked out as he strode onto the bridge with Zaala holding his hand. She immediately broke from his grasp and moved to her specially designed Engineering Station next to E'dira.

Miranda moved back to stand in front of her chair and console as Steven came to stand next to her and looked at the large holodisc that was built into the deck at a forty-five degree angle from her chair. There were two such main holodiscs, one to her station's left and one to the right of E'dira's station. "Alpha Priority from Falcon Four One!" She stated to Steven.

Steven looked at her surprised. "Alpha Priority? We aren't at war with anyone Mando." He replied.

"Something tells me that is about to change." Miranda spoke. "This whole Guardian Angel thing has been bugging me since we left Dreamland." She turned and watched as the image flickered for a second and then they were looking at the face of Commander Falarie. "Talk to me Falarie!" Miranda barked.

"Captain Lorian... three minutes ago Chloe detected some unusual readings coming from the Protonic Lightning Nebula in Kranek's system. I adjusted course and moved us closer. Captain... we are looking at over ninety Kavalian warships hiding in the nebula! Everything from three GREAT SOULS to PURSIAN-Class frigates!"

"Kavalians?" Miranda gasped.

"Yes ma'am! Matthew confirmed their configuration from our data banks!" Falarie replied.

"Ninety ships?" Steven snapped. "Falarie... that's almost a complete Fleet Group by the TOE of the Kavalians!"

"Yes sir! They match our Fleet Groups in size if not ability." Falarie stated.

"Falarie have you been detected?" Miranda barked.

"No ma'am!" Falarie answered. "I have cross decked the other RAPTORS in on our readings and positioned them in such a way to cover the entire system, including the nebula. I did not feel this was a simple report filing Captain Lorian. That is why I contacted you on the AP channel."

"The SCIMITAR and NORMYA'S LIGHT haven't detected them Falarie?" Miranda asked.

"No ma'am." Falarie answered. "NORMYA'S LIGHT has remained shrouded the whole time we have been here. The SCIMITAR is the only ship we show actually visible above Kranek ma'am. Their wing is still shrouded as well. Due to the overall sensor coverage they must provide themselves, they will only scan in a two-dimensional spatial patterns unless they need to change, as you know. We are not so limited and Chloe found the Kavalians using three dimensional patterns.”

“Shit.” Steven swore. “Miranda... do we warn Sa'sur on the SCIMITAR?”

“If we do that... we risk exposing ourselves.” Miranda stated swiftly. “No one knows we are out here except Ben! We need to contact Andro on the HARBINGER! COM officer! Lorian secure to the HARBINGER! Do it now!”

“Aye Captain... initiating... Captain Lorian!” The COM officer yelled so intensely all heads on the bridge turned to look at her. She was facing Miranda with large eyes and a look of utter disbelief on her face. “Captain Lorian we are...”

Miranda nodded. “Say it Cel'ina.” She spoke.

“A secure Level Nine emergency transmission was just flashed to all fleet ships and all ground units throughout the entire Union Ma'am. The originating signal was Admiral Joarl on the PROMETHUS ma'am!” The elven female stammered. “Captain... it is declaring an Alpha Storm. Spartan One is down! They... they are saying he is... they are saying the King... they are saying the King is dead!”

Steven's eyes grew wide. “The King? Martin?” He gasped. “What? How?”

“The transmission doesn't say Colonel... only that...” She turned quickly back to the three triangular patterned consoles that wrapped around her chair as her instruments began chirping insistently. “There's more! All Union Fleet Units are ordered to full alert! We are to report our readiness and preparation for unrestricted combat actions!”

“Jesus! Against the Kavalians?” Miranda stammered as she moved towards the second disc. “Bring the ship to combat alert!” She barked as the plot table came alive with the Kranek System and all Union ships currently within the system. Only the SCIMITAR was currently showing, as she was the only ship not shrouded.

Cel'ina turned and looked at her Captain. “Yes Captain!”

“Fuck me!” Steven growled as he moved to the Air Boss station and slammed his hand down on the panel. “This is CAG! I want all ships prepped to Ready Alert with full loads! I want them standing by in the next thirty minutes Senior Chief! Call out all the ground crews if you have too! This is not a drill. No training this time. Everything is to be war shots!”

“On it CAG!” The voice echoed.

“Captain... HARBINGER is responding!” Cel'ina barked her eyes wide.

“On the second disc Cel'ina!” Miranda snapped. “Now!”

The image of Androcles appeared, flickered briefly and then cleared. Not one soul on the bridge of the ARIZONA would ever forget the way he looked. His face was drawn tight, as if he was holding in so much sentiment and ready to explode, his azure colored eyes filled with a myriad of emotions that were running the gambit all at once.

“Andro?” Miranda gasped. “My... my god Andro!”

ULU HARBINGER

Androcles was ready to explode.

He could not begin to even describe the emotions churning within him. Dark emotions. Vengeful emotions. He and Elynth had been together in the landing bay when they felt their father's die, and as Majeir and Anthar leaped to get clear of Elynth's thrashing tail, several crates of equipment weighing nearly four tons lifted from the deck of the landing bay and went smashing into three fighters. The echoes of their cries in and out of Mindvoice were perhaps the most painful things anyone on the HARBINGER had ever seen or felt. If not for Anthar and Majeir physically throwing their huge bodies on Elynth's thrashing body, her Heavyhorn tail would have injured or killed several crewmen who blundered around trying to get out of the way. It was only after they had pinned her to the deck that they watched as Andro wrapped his arms around her massive head, encircling only part of her snout and touching his forehead to hers between her eyes.

Anthar then witnessed how deeply his mate's bond with Andro extended as he felt them reach for each other within Mindvoice. They reached not for their mates and friends but for each other and it was only this bond that allowed them to finally bring some manner of control back to their actions. Anthar did not know what they had said to each other, for the MV shield he felt around their conversation were more powerful than any he had ever experienced in his lifetime. They were similar in power to what he had once felt the Empress Aikiro generating while she discussed something with the witch Yuri. As Anthar watched Andro slowly make his way away from the dragon pen in the hanger deck, he felt his mate's scales lean heavily against him. His head turned and he saw her azure eyes filled with such pain and sorrow that it nearly broke his heart.

The HARBINGER had received the Alpha Storm alert from Admiral Joarl only seconds before the ARIZONA, and crewmembers quickly found themselves getting out of the way of the Crown Prince as he made his way to the bridge. Lycavorian, Elves, Algolian, Hadarian, it mattered not what species they were, all of them could feel the slow burning rage that resided just beneath the surface of the young prince, and no one wanted to be in the same galactic system when that fury was unleashed.

Velnar turned as the doors to his bridge opened and he spied Androcles enter. "Milord!" He exclaimed. "Sire I...?"

"Set a course for Earth!" Andro barked. His voice told everyone who heard it that he would brook no opposition.

"I am already doing..."

"Captain... incoming secure from ARIZONA!" Velnar's COM officer shouted.

"Put it up!" Velnar snapped as he came up next to Andro and put his hand on Andro's shoulder. "Sire perhaps you should..."

"Andro..." Miranda Lorian's voice filled the bridge intercom. "My god Andro!"

Andro looked at the woman in the transmission. "Miranda... I need... I need you to..." Andro stared at her for a long moment unsure of what to say. What did he need her to do? What could she do? His father and Torma were dead. This was beyond anything he could have ever anticipated, especially so soon after the High Coven attacks against his family. He did not think the Kavalians capable of such bold operations. His father and Torma? While they could not communicate within Mindvoice because of the distance involved, every member of his family could still feel each other over great distances. Each of them had their father's blood running through their veins and while Denali, Resumar, Lisisa and Eliani were the strongest of his siblings in terms of Mindvoice abilities Andro knew only Denali and his mothers would be able to actually feel that their father was gone. At the moment, Androcles Leonidas was lost for what to do. His eyes never left Miranda's face. She was only a few years older than him, and she had lived with their family for over six months. She was a familiar face and one he knew well for they had always gotten along easily. Miranda's next words were what spurred the Leonidas blood within him to come raging back to the forefront.

Andro watched as Miranda's head turned at the commotion on her own bridge. "What?" She gasped. "From where? How many?"

There was a pause before she turned back to look at him. "Andro... fuck!" She swore. "Andro... Ben sent us out here to look after you! I have four RAPTOR A3s in position around Kranek and the lead bird is telling me... shit... we are tracking two Kavalian fleet groups currently closing on Kranek Andro!"

Andro's eyes went a little wider as he turned and saw Walter rushing onto the bridge with Daba, Sadi and the others. He turned back to Miranda then. "It's a systematic attack against my family!" Andro snarled. "They are trying to decapitate the Union leadership! They have already succeeded in killing my father! I will not allow them to kill anymore of my family! We will join with you and..."

"No!" Walter barked as he came up next to him causing Andro to glare at him with angry azure eyes.

"Do not presume to tell me what I will do Walter!" Andro growled menacingly. "These Kavalian bastards have killed my father! They've killed Elynth's father! They've attacked and killed countless Drow! I will show them the error of their ways! I will nubous kill every one of them and glass their planets into oblivion! What the High Coven did to them will pale in comparison to what I will do! I will..."

"You will not do these things! You can't!" Walter roared out moving closer and raising eyebrows on the bridge as he challenged Andro's orders. "Andro you must return to Earth!"

"My father is..." Andro screamed. He stopped himself the moment he felt Sadi's hands touch his chest and shoulder. He felt Carisia and Ne'Veha crowd around him, Lu'ria not missing a beat, as she pressed close even though still dressed in hospital garb. Andro felt the burning and consuming anger welling within him lessen just at their touch.

“They have killed my father! Killed Torma!” He continued now with measured but angry words. “They have assassinated the King of the Lycavorian Union! Now they go after my family on Kranek! They are probably moving against my mother on Hadaria! What would you have me do Walter? Let this go unanswered?”

Walter stepped closer to him. “You are a Spartan damn it!” He snapped. “As your father was! As your grandfather was! I expect you to act as a Spartan and do your duty as Crown Prince! You must return to Earth and insure that the glue that holds this Union together is not torn asunder! That glue is your family! You!”

“My family is under attack!” Andro hissed.

“You are King now boy! You are King!” Walter barked poking him in the chest, unafraid of him. He had sworn a vow to Andro’s grandfather three thousand years ago, and while the spirit of King Leonidas may have released him from that vow, Walter had not released himself and he never would. Velnar and many on the bridge looked shocked at how he was talking to Androcles.

“Your father would expect you to act like it, damn you! I expect you to act like it!” Walter stepped close to him and glared into his eyes. “He would expect you to step into his shoes and insure the Union does not come apart at the seams! Only a Leonidas can reign in the military now! If you do not return to Earth and allow men and women to see you, if you do not assume command the Union military will go off on its own and begin killing Kavalians wherever they find them! They will not act as the cohesive force you and your father led during the Evolli Wars. You must set aside your... you must set aside your anger and grief right now and get control of things before it gets worse!”

“It is worse!” Andro screamed. “They are going after my family on Kranek! Two of my mothers! My brothers and sisters!”

[He is right my brother.] Elynth’s voice burst into Andro’s mind behind shields that no one could breach unless they allowed it.

[Sister... sister they...] Andro began.

[We are bound to each other Androcles! More deeply than even our fathers! They would want us to insure their sacrifice was not in vain!] Elynth spoke and Andro alone could hear the pain her own words caused her. [We... we must act as Walter says, for no one else can!]

[I do not want to be King!] Andro shouted.

[Yet... yet now you are King.] Elynth spoke. [The time for our vengeance will come. It is not now however. As much as I want to burn every Kavalian alive and shred them with my talons, we must think of others right now. We are close enough to Denali my brother. Reach out and touch him, tell him he must hold them together. He must insure he protects his brothers and sisters and mothers.]

“Andro! The Kavalian Fleet Groups are closing on the SCIMITAR!” Miranda’s voice brought him back into reality. “Andro I can help them! They won’t stand a chance without...”

Andro turned and his azure eyes burned into Miranda Lorian with an intensity she had never witnessed before and it caused her words to die. “Manda...” He spoke softly, using the name he and Resumar and the others had called her when they were together. A name that Miranda had not heard in a very long time and a name that even to this day caused shivers to course through her for it told her she always had a family to turn too. “Save our family Manda.” Andro whispered. “Save our family no matter the cost!”

Miranda Lorian’s reply was immediate and resolute. “Count on it!” She spoke forcefully. “ARIZONA is clear!”

Andro turned to Velnar as her image faded from the holo emitters. “How fast can we return to Earth Velnar?” He barked.

Velnar sputtered for a moment before answering. “Sire... the HARBINGER has... our LSD Drive coils are Hyper Matter Fusion Coils.”

“So... what does this matter?” Walter snapped. “We need to move quickly!”

“Wait... Hyper Matter Fusion Coils were supposed to be in only the theoretical stage!” Ne’Veha spoke now with wide eyes.

Sadi nodded her head. “We had not even reached the prototype stage according to the Fleet Journals.” She added.

Velnar shook his head. “That is what those outside of Dreamland think.” He answered. “They were designed by Zaala Randall and others using technology from City Ship 41. They allow us to execute much longer and more accurate jumps. They are similar to the ARIZONA’s secondary drive plants.” Velnar answered.

Andro’s brow furrowed. “Her secondary? Velnar... my only interest is getting back to Earth! Like yesterday if at all possible!”

Velnar nodded surprising himself with the calmness he felt facing the Crown Prince of the Union at such a time. “Yes Milord. The ARIZONA, the HORNET and every ship of her class will be fitted with Quantum Resonance Field Reactors. Avi helped us to design and build them. They are essentially smaller versions of the City Ship’s own drive cores, taken from City Ship 41 itself. We needed to design the HMFC drives to be able to keep up with them. It was... it was your father’s idea.” He finished softly. “He and Admiral O’Connor wanted to be able to... they wanted to be able to project Union influence faster and further than ever before.”

“I don’t need the techno babble!” Andro spat. “How soon can this Hyper Fusion thing have us back to Earth then?”

Velnar turned to a human woman standing off to the side watching what was transpiring on the bridge like everyone else. The rank on her uniform marked her as senior engineer. “My Chief Engineer Milord. Commander Rachel James.”

The woman stepped forward tentatively. “I need an hour to plot the precise coordinates of the jumps Milord.” She answered quickly. “At full power... the HMFC’s can make it to Earth from our current location in three consecutive jumps, compensating for minor course alterations to avoid natural space born phenomenon.”

“In hours please!” Andro asked rolling his eyes.

“If you are authorizing the use of full power Milord...” She spoke. “We can be to Earth in just under twelve hours. We will need at least three days to recharge the coils after...”

“Do it!” Andro barked. “Anything that gets in our way Velnar, if it does not bear Union signatures I want it obliterated it completely.” Andro spun around and marched off the bridge leaving everyone on the bridge staring at where he had just exited.

“Senior Polemarch Dymas?” Velnar asked softly a moment later watching as Walter turned to look at him.

“Yes Captain?”

“Senior Polemarch... forgive me for saying this but...” He looked at Walter intently. “Why do I get the distinct feeling that the Kavalians do not yet realize they have killed the wrong Leonidas?” Velnar asked softly.

Walter tilted his head slightly as he looked at the man taking no offense at his statement even though Sadi and the others glared at him with barely restrained hostility. “I believe your observation would be very accurate Velnar. Very accurate.” Walter stopped Sadi as she huffed and began to walk out.

“Let me talk to him first Sadi.” He said softly.

“Walter we are his mates!” Sadi complained. “He needs us right now. Especially now! We need him!”

Walter nodded as he moved closer to her and looked at the four of them. “Yes he does.” He spoke softly. “I... this is something I need to do.”

Sadi looked at him. “Why?” She demanded.

Walter shrugged his broad shoulders. “You do not fully know the history of Martin and I Sadi. It is something Andro’s father would expect of me, and it is something that I should have done long ago with Martin’s brother.” Walter replied. “If I had... all of what is happening now might not be happening at all. Please.”

Sadi looked at Ne’Veha first and then Carisia and Lu’ria. She saw acceptance in their eyes, at least for the moment and she turned back to Walter. “Protect him Walter.” Sadi said softly.

Walter smiled almost shyly. “That is a job for the four of you.” He spoke gently. “I can only attempt to guide him and keep him from unleashing hell on the Kavalians the likes of which his uncle has no concept of.”

ULU ARIZONA

“...count on it! ARIZONA is clear!” Miranda hissed just before the transmission faded.

“Jesus Christ Mando!” Steven declared.

Captain Miranda Lorian was many things to many different people. As she looked around the bridge of her ship and saw some those people staring back at her the words went off in her head. Captain. Friend. Future lover as she looked at E'dira. Leader. That was the single most resounding word that echoed in her mind.

She was a Leader. She was the symbol of what humans could become, of what they were working their way back to being. They were accepted as equals throughout the entire Union now, where less than a century ago they were considered helpless and unworthy of anything but scorn. Ben, Steven, Tina, Charles Turner, and now her. They were changing the very face of humanity with their actions, and Earth was fast becoming the center of the Lycavorian Union.

Family.

She had lived with them for only seven total months and yet they had accepted her as easily as if she was one of them. In some ways she knew Martin still considered himself human, and combined with his fierce love of Sparta, that is why he spent so much time on Earth. He had fought beside many humans as they reclaimed their world from the Coven, and even as he became King to trillions, he dragged the humans on Earth kicking and screaming into the future with him. He was the reason she was standing here this day when all was said and done.

Save our family Manda! Save our family no matter the cost!

Miranda looked at the faces on her bridge, many of them also fast becoming her family. And like these men and women around her, she would do everything in her power to keep them safe.

“Janon!” She barked out knowing her XO would have entered the bridge long ago.

“Captain!” He snapped coming forward.

“Take a fighter and assume command of the HORNET Janon!” Miranda ordered looking at him.

“Miranda... Captain Telson will...”

“Captain Telson has no combat experience!” Miranda told him as calmly as she was able. “We are about to jump into one serious shit storm and I want my best on the job! Do it Janon! I need you on the bridge of the HORNET so we can coordinate smoothly!”

Janon nodded without questioning. “On my way!”

“Helm... spool up the QRFs!” Miranda snapped out as she moved across the bridge of her ship. She could almost feel the power contained within the hull and deck plates of this ship, just as the sailors and officers of her namesake must have felt long ago. “Inform the entire Attack Wing to link their navigation with us and prepare to max out their HMFC drives to full power!”

“Captain... we haven’t tested the QRF yet!” The engineering officer turned from his station and replied before Zaala answered.

Miranda looked at Zaala. The elven officer was extremely competent if a little on the sedate side.

“Zaala?” She asked.

Zaala Randall nodded her head without hesitation. “It is ready and it will work!” She spoke. “Chizz and I have been tweaking the QRF with the new specs from Avi ever since we came onboard. I will plot the jump myself!”

“How long?” Miranda asked.

“Fifteen minutes!”

“Do it!” Miranda barked.

Steven took her arm. “Mando... the SCIMITAR is going to engage now!” He hissed out. “She’s already outnumbered four to one. And that doesn’t include the Kavalian fighters! The GREAT SOULS can carry upwards of a hundred birds and if our sensors are correct there are eight of them moving on the SCIMITAR and NORMYA’S LIGHT! Let me take some help to her now Mando and then you bring the ARIZONA in and wipe the rest of them up!”

“The Micro HMFC’s also haven’t been tested Steven.” Miranda said. “Everything we do now is a huge risk.”

“Life is a fucking risk!” Steven snapped. “I trust my wife! She says they will work... just like the engines on this big beautiful ship! She helped to build them!”

“How many?” Miranda asked.

“We have enough on board for ten squadrons! The ground crews can put them on in three minutes the moment I give the order! I can launch in five!” Steven answered. “I’ll go in DEVASTATOR heavy. Seven to three! We’ll target the capital ships and try to take some heat off the SCIMITAR and her wing. Knowing Sa’sur like we do... you can bet she has ordered NORMYA’S LIGHT to evacuate the planet. The RAPTORS already in system can shut it down! No one will ever know we were there!”

Miranda hesitated for only a second and nodded. “Bring as many of them home as you can Steven.” She said softly.

Steven nodded. “I will. All of them if I can swing it!”

Miranda nodded. “Get moving!”

Steven glanced at where his wife stood. Their eyes met and Zaala nodded her head in acknowledgement. She loved her husband, but she knew what he did was dangerous and she accepted that. Steven gave her that lopsided grin and Zaala smiled back as he headed out of the bridge.

Miranda moved to her command chair. “Give me weapons!” She barked out. “Set Point Defense Batteries to zone defense, full saturation fire! All guns ready for salvo fire. As soon as we complete the jump, scramble every fighter we have within two minutes, even if you have to throw them out the fucking hatch!”

“Priority Miranda?” E’dira asked from her station.

“Vector them in on capital ships only!” Miranda ordered. “Any with the ability to turn their Planetary Gauss Cannons on the surface! Have Falcon One Four and the other RAPTOR’S coordinate.”

E’dira nodded. “Passing the Intel on!”

“Zaala... plot us between the Kavalian fleet groups closing on the SCIMITAR!” Miranda snapped as she moved to her command station and stabbed a small button on the arm of her chair. “How soon?” A small cover slid aside on the arm to reveal an archaic phone like device that Ben had insisted was installed on all the ARIZONA Class. It was leftover from an age long dead but when combined with the technology of today it was connected not only to the ARIZONA’S internal ship COM, but the rest of the Assault Wing’s internal COMS as well. It was a heavy thing, but she lifted it with ease and brought it to her face, the mouthpiece only millimeters away from her lips as she looked at Zaala.

“I’m adjusting for Protonic particles in the system Captain!” Zaala declared without looking up from her station. “We can jump in... eight minutes!” She declared turning to look at her.

“I thought you said sixteen!” Miranda barked.

“They are my family... just as they are yours.” Zaala said. “I work fast.”

Miranda nodded as she lifted the phone device. “Attention! Attention! This is Captain Lorian. We have just been informed by Lycavorian Union Fleet Command that the KFI has conducted sneak attacks across the breadth of the Union. They have...” Miranda stopped as all heads turned to look at her on the bridge. Many of them knew of her close relationship with the Leonidas family and the familiarity she shared with many men and women they would never meet. “They have... assassinated our King.” Miranda continued with the pain obvious in her voice. This was something she had lived through not once in her life, but twice. And it appeared to be happening all over again.

“All of you know why we are out here, what we were sent here to do. We have detected two Kavalian Fleet Groups moving against Kranek with the intention of killing as many of the Leonidas family as they can. Our orders come from Androcles himself and we are to stop those fleets at all cost. We are outnumbered two to one, but numbers make no difference to a Spartan. I am human! Many of you within this Attack Wing are human. It makes no difference for we are all Spartans!” She paused for a moment searching for the right words and then continued. “I spent over half a year of my life living with Andro and his siblings and their family. They came to regard me as part of their family because I had lost mine. I do not wish to see that happen again and this time I have... we have the ability to stop it! I intend to take this ship and our Attack Wing into harms way, and I intend to do what Androcles has asked me to do. We will kill the Kavalians trying to murder our Royal family, our friends on those ships and our allies! I don’t intend to hold back and I want to insure none of you do either! We will execute a combat jump in eight minutes using our Quantum Drive and may the gods be with us all.”

She replaced the phone into its cradle and moved back to the plotting table and then turned to E’dira. “E’dira... order the 1st and 2nd Attack Squadrons to break from us the moment the jump is complete and execute evasive pattern Bravo Five Two! They will cover NORMYA’S LIGHT! Target flanking ships and work their way in! Channel all power to shields and the Black Sun EW Nodes! Stand by on the Missile Rack Clusters and prepare to launch on my command! Make sure Falarie has shut down the system before we get there and transfer control of the remaining DEVASTATORS that we launch to her so she can direct them in on the priority targets! We'll leave Colonel Randall to run amok and do what he's best at! Cause trouble! I don't want those murdering bastards able to fart in the fucking wind without us knowing about it! And spool up the Graviton Wave generator E'dira, it wouldn't be prudent or proper to have any of our guests leave the party early!"

E'dira looked at Miranda with love in her Drow amber eyes. No matter what else was happening right now, E'dira knew Miranda had finally laid the past to rest and was moving into the future. And E'dira knew that future included her.

The mood across the ship had shifted. A majority of the crew was human as Miranda had said, descended from a long ago age of wooden ships and iron men, and it was a quiet rage that took them now. They drove themselves into the preparations as the ship's magazines were opened and the live ordinance was moved into position with both computers and power loaders. In the ship's main hanger bay, it was what military leaders all across history called controlled chaos. Purple armored crews lowered elongated tails onto the ten selected squadrons, quickly locking the portable LSD engines into place as red armored crews loaded anti-ship missiles onto the strike fighters. The different colored armored suits signified which section each male or female worked in, and the partial body armor would protect them from explosions and shrapnel should they come under attack. Pilots could be seen climbing into their cockpits as the Mag-Lift elevators began to lift the first wave of fighters into their launch tubes. They all bore names from long ago that had been reborn along with this ship. The Black Widows. The Jolly Rogers. The Grey Wolves. The Death Jesters. They were names out of Earth's storied flight history and they would be sung once more on the field of battle.

In the space of five minutes after the first fighter was launched, all ten squadrons were taking up formation ahead of the ARIZONA with Steven in the lead. He turned his helmeted head to either side seeing the ten squadrons of ships lined up in formation behind him. He saw three TAUR'OHTAR Destroyers shifting their position to take the lead in front of the ARIZONA as they prepared to make their own jump. The computer between his legs flashed a tone telling him that the micro HMFC was charged and ready for jump.

"ARIZONA, this is Scar Lead! All fighters in formation and ready for jump!" Steven barked.

"Confirmed Scar Lead. We'll be eight minutes behind you Steven. Save some for us!" Miranda replied confidently.

Steven laughed. "No promises Captain!" He looked out either side of the cockpit of his TEMPEST fighter. "Squadron leads sound off!"

"Black Widow Lead! Let's get some!" That from an elven female.

"Grey Wolf Lead. Time for some hurt!" A human male.

"Death Jester Lead standing by!" The ever calm and cool voice of a Lycavorian.

"Jolly Roger Lead! Let's do this!" Another human voice, this one female.

"Raven's Wings Lead! Let's stop talking about it and kick some ass!" This coming from a normally very reserved elven pilot who was married with nine children. The emotion in his voice was a palpable thing.

Steven waited as the last five echoed within his helmet but he didn't really hear them as he stared ahead into the blackness of space feeling his blood surging and the wolf within him wanting payback. Martin Leonidas hadn't questioned him when Steven went to him that day and asked to be changed so that he could grow old with his elven wife. It may have been that Zaala was Tarifa's sister and Martin would do anything for family, but Steven believed it was because he saw the utter devotion to Zaala that Steven held. If not for Martin Leonidas, Steven Randall would not be here today. He would have aged as any normal human and been on the tail end of a career that Steven valued almost as much as Zaala. Now Steven Randall would be able to live hundreds of years, if not thousands, and with his plan to turn Zaala in the future they would have all the time in the world to explore each other to their heart's content.

First Steven Randall was going to make them pay for killing the man who gave him all this.

"Scar Flight! Grey Wolf Squadron will disperse and cover the moment we come out of the jump! Jam the fuckers' silly! I don't want them to be able to talk with one another even if they are five feet away from each other! Once jamming has commenced... Grey Wolf Lead you are cleared to use your Plasma Matter missiles and take out any sensor signals you detect trying to burn through the jamming!"

Steven heard the Grey Wolf Squadron Commander grunt in reply. “Two seconds after we light one up we’ll kill it Colonel!”

“Fly free...!” Steven barked.

“Die well!!” One hundred and sixty voices chimed in simultaneously.

“Jump in four seconds!” Steven barked. “Four... three... two... one! Mark! Engage LSD drives!”

The fighters sparkled as their LSD coils flared to life, and then they disappeared in perfect formation as their Jump Drives sent them hurtling across space into the teeth of the Kavalian Fleets.

SCIMITAR

Sa’sur got up from her command chair and downed the last of her mug of tea. “Status?” She spoke.

“TYPE II and all STRIKERS now on the surface Captain.” The COM chief turned from his station.

“Admiral Thodias of NORMYA’S LIGHT sends his welcome and invitation for dinner.”

Sa’sur grinned. “Tell the Admiral I accept as long as he promises not to chase my tail.” She answered. “I don’t think his brother would care for that.”

The Chief nodded with a smile. Everyone knew that Sa’sur’s husband and mate, the Lycavorian that had turned her, was the younger brother to the commander of NORMYA’S LIGHT. “I’ll advise him Captain.”

“Have the wing disperse to normal monitoring stations. Everyone to maintain Shroud for now. If anyone is watching let them think we are the only ship here.” Sa’sur ordered. “Keep all sensors radiating passively and...”

“Captain!” The voice came from the sensor Chief and Sa’sur turned to look at her. “I... I have something on sensors sir. I think.”

Sa’sur rolled her eyes. The SCIMITAR’s normal Sensor Chief had fallen ill this morning and his replacement was a young Lieutenant fresh out of Fleet Operations where she had been for the last four years. Sa’sur turned her mug in her hand contemplating just telling the young elven woman to log it, but she sighed and knew that would not be the proper thing to do. She crossed the expanse of the bridge and came up behind her.

“We have only just arrived Lieutenant Zeria.” Sa’sur spoke in a calm and even voice. “What exactly could you have picked up that NORMYA’S LIGHT did not pass on to us?”

“I’m sorry ma’am.” The Lieutenant said somewhat flustered. She had only been aboard the SCIMITAR for a week now. She had been supremely thrilled at being assigned to one of the most sought after Fleet Groups in the Union Fleet, and had bragged to her parents and brothers how she was going to be on board the Crown Prince’s ship. The SCIMITAR was widely known as one of the five most powerful ships within the fleet of LEONIDAS IIs because of recent upgrades and many even said secret weapons platforms. The SCIMITAR, MJOLNIR’S HAND, General/Colonel Simpson’s ship SPARTAN’S SOUL, Queen Anja’s SPIRIT OF HADARIA, NORMYA’S LIGHT and Fleet Admiral Riall’s ship RISING MOON were all thought to have newer and unique weapons systems. Zeria never thought she would be sitting here on the first watch in only her first week.

Sa’sur placed her hand on the young woman’s shoulder. “Never apologize Lieutenant.” She said. “You are doing your job.” Sa’sur leaned over her chair and looked at the three huge displays Zeria was tasked with monitoring. “What do you have?”

Zeria pointed to one display. “It was here Captain. Along the edge of the Torana Protonic Lightning Nebula. It’s gone now. I was probably just seeing things ma’am. I am...”

“Excited to be on the first watch?” Sa’sur said with a gentle smile.

Zeria turned and looked at her. “Yes ma’am.”

“Don’t worry about it. I did the same thing.” She said turning away and starting for the door as Zeria turned back to her sensor consoles. “XO... I’ll be in my Ready Room. Make sure that...”

“Contact!” Zeria exclaimed loudly as her hands flew over her consoles. “Sibfla... it’s gone!”

Sa’sur turned quickly losing her patience now. “Lieutenant Zeria... your enthusiasm is much appreciated but if you can not do the job I will find someone who can!”

“I saw it captain! I swear! It was...” The contact appeared once more on the large screen and this time Sa’sur was standing close enough to her to see it as well before it vanished from her screens.

Sa'sur was beside her in a heartbeat. "What's your name?" She asked looking at the screen.

"Lieutenant Zeria Captain."

"Nothing on the board Captain!" Her XO called out. "Sensor glitch maybe?"

"That was no glitch Captain." Zeria spoke looking at Sa'sur. "I know it! There's a ship there and it's hiding in the Torana Lightning Nebula!"

Sa'sur looked at her evenly. She and Andro had personally selected the senior crew for the SCIMITAR for the last five years. They were scary in the similarities they wanted in the men and women who served on their ship. Insightfulness and gut instinct was chief on that list of what they looked for in officers.

"Transfer all primary and secondary sensor functions to the Lieutenant's station XO!" Sa'sur barked. She looked at Zeria. "Find me that ship Lieutenant."

"All secondary systems transferred to primary control!" The XO sounded.

Zeria turned back to her consoles and took a deep breath. "I'm adjusting for the distortion in the Nebula. I'm switching to three-dimensional spatial patterns to try and localize the signal! Particle emissions are very high but I can..." Zeria shook her head quickly. "I need more power Captain."

"Tactical!" Sa'sur barked. "Increase portside ventral and dorsal arrays power output fifteen percent?" She looked at Zeria.

Zeria nodded. "Yes."

"Portside ventral and dorsal sensor arrays increased by fifteen percent!" The voice answered.

"Got it!" Zeria exclaimed. "There! Bearing three nine seven!" Her eyes grew wide. "Sibfla Captain! Multiple contacts within the Nebula! Mark as Group One! At least sixty ships that sensors can detect along the perimeter!"

"Identify!" Sa'sur snapped as she stood back up. "Tactical... full power to active sensors! All arrays! Pulse everything within half a light year! Weapons officer... all batteries to standby! Give me full shields! Helm... nineteen-degree turn to port! Unmask the entire dorsal array!" Sa'sur barked out the orders as she returned to her elevated command chair. "Zeria... give me something!"

"Working on it Captain!"

"Get me NORMYA'S LIGHT! Now!" Sa'sur growled. "No one knew we were coming here! No one!"

"Admiral Thodias responding Captain!"

The face of the older Lycavorian Admiral appeared in the main holomager and he was smiling. "Sa'sur... I will have to tell my brother you should have married me. You can't seem to stay away from..." His words died when he saw her face. "Sa'sur what is wrong?"

"Thodias! I have multiple unknown contacts lurking just inside the Torana Lightning Nebula." Sa'sur told him.

"What? How did you manage to scan...?" He shook his head. "Never mind! Are you sure Sa'sur?"

"No question. I'm bringing the SCIMITAR to full alert and moving to investigate! No one knew we were coming here Thodias! No one knew Queen Dysea and Princess Normya were here! No one knew we were coming here?" She replied. "My wing is still shrouded. We..."

"Captain!" Zeria shouted. "Kavalians! Captain they are Kavalian!"

"Kavalian!" Sa'sur declared. "What..."

"I'm detecting over a hundred contacts!" Zeria turned to looked at her. "Captain... they have detected our active sensors! They're moving out of the Nebula coming right for us!" The loud noise caused her to turn back to her station and every head on the bridge heard what she muttered next. "Son vada carians! Full power to all arrays! Give me full power to all arrays!"

Sa'sur didn't hesitate. "Do it! Now!"

"Sibfla! Sibfla!" Zeria could be heard swearing. "Kavalian Fleet Group entering Kranek's system! I'm picking up an additional one hundred and twenty-eight contacts! Mark as Group Two! Bearing two seven three mark four!"

"Thodias! It's a trap!" Sa'sur shouted.

"We are not at war with the KFI!" Thodias exclaimed.

"One hundred and thirty-seven Kavalian ships confirmed exiting the Torana Lightning Nebula! We are caught between them!" Zeria barked out. "They are powering weapons and shields! I can pick up the emitters for their main Gauss cannons powering! They are launching fighters Captain!"

“How many?” Sa'sur shouted.

“Multiples of ten!” Zeria barked. “At least ninety from the GREAT SOULS alone!”

“Sa'sur... you can not fight nearly seven hundred fighters and two Fleet Groups with just your Strike Wing!” Thodias barked.

The COM Officer came to his feet now. “NUBOU LAE!” He shouted. “Captain Sa'sur! Incoming Level Nine transmission from Admiral Joar! Captain... they are issuing an Alpha Storm! They are issuing an Alpha Storm! Kavalian forces have... son vada carians! Kavalian forces have... they have killed King Leonidas! King Leonidas is dead!”

Sa'sur stared at the man in open-mouthed shock as his words rammed home. Zeria's words quickly brought her back to painful reality without being able to fully comprehend what he had just told them.

“Captain... Group Two just entering the system will be in weapons range Of NORMYA'S LIGHT in twenty-three minutes!” Zeria barked. “Seven minutes before Group One exiting the Nebula can bear on us!”

Sa'sur looked at the holomager as her training took over. “Thodias! We're at war now! They mean to attack us! They must be after the Royal family!” Sa'sur shouted out. “I'm moving to intercept Group One coming out of the Nebula! I will keep them off you as long as I can! Get the Royal family off Kranek! Get them off now Thodias! You have twenty-two minutes before the second Kavalian Fleet Group comes into range!” Sa'sur screamed as she came to her feet and cut off his response. “Get me Wing wide!”

Her XO had already anticipated this. “Go!” He barked.

“Strike Wing to form on the SCIMITAR! Execute Attack Pattern Gamma Four Nine! We are weapons free! Protect NORMYA'S LIGHT as long as you are able! Target capital ships as priority!” Sa'sur barked.

“Captain!” Zeria called out. “I'm picking up PROTOSS-Class Troop ships breaking from Group One! They are diverting for the surface at full sublight speed! Their heading is four nine six point three! Bearing one six four! They're going in lateral to us and breaking for the upper atmosphere!”

“Warn Thodias!” She spat quickly. “Send a Fleet wide distress! All channels, secure and in the clear! SCIMITAR and NORMYA'S LIGHT under attack! Multiply Kavalian Fleet Groups! NORMYA'S LIGHT attempting to evacuate the Royal family! SCIMITAR and Strike Wing moving to engage! Send it!”

The COM officer's hands were furiously moving over the console. “Message away! All channels! Secure and open!”

“Nubou!” Sa'sur swore. “Deploy missile pods one and two! Power up the Zero Matter Fusion Mark 22s!”

Her XO turned towards her. “Those haven't finished trials yet Sa'sur!” He shouted from across the bridge.

Sa'sur turned to meet his gaze. “Let's finish them now and see if the damn things work then! We need every advantage we can get! They are the longest ranged weapon we have! Zeria how many GREAT SOULS are we facing girl?”

“Eight.” Zeria answered instantly.

“Weapons! Target them first! Let's see how many we can take out of the equation!” Sa'sur barked. “Helm! Full power to sublights! Let's take it to them!”

HIGH COVEN BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT PHY'IAD'S COMMAND SHIP

“Union ships are moving to engage the Kavalian fleet.” The tactical officer spoke turning his head to look at Phy'iad in the chair.

“As expected.” Phy'iad answered. “Have we been detected?”

“It does not appear so.”

“Where is that fool Gerald's ship?” Phy'iad asked.

“Maintaining position inside the Shroud grid as ordered. He has come aboard and is waiting with our strike team.”

Phy'iad nodded. “As soon as our Strike Team lands destroy that hunk of garbage! And make sure Gerald does not return! His payment in full for failing the Kavalians. Better yet... disarm him and turn him loose on the planet. I have heard that Cha'talla has a special death planned for him for some past insult. If Cha'talla lives through this and he finds Gerald... he can have his vengeance.”

“Yes sir.”

“Get me Kr'nak.” Phy'iad said turning to look at the holodisc as it came alive with the face of the grizzled Immortal who had been with him for decades.

“We are ready Phy'iad.” The man spoke.

“Nothing fancy Kr'nak! Enter the settlement and capture the elf Queen. With Kavalian troops landing they will not be able to evacuate her. They will undoubtedly attempt to secure her in the center of the compound so maintain your façade until you have her. And do not let her dragon kill you or your men.” Phy'iad said.

“And if we encounter Kavalian troops who think we are the enemy?” Kr'nak asked as he adjusted his SA80.

Phy'iad shrugged. “Pusintin did not seem concerned so neither will I. Kill them and continue on. They must think you are members of their pitiful settlement and you are fighting the Kavalian dogs for this to work.”

“And Cha'talla?” Kr'nak asked.

“By all means... if you see him or his pureblood vampire whore... kill them.” Phy'iad answered. “Less work for us later.”

“I will succeed.” Kr'nak stated.

Phy'iad nodded. “Contact me when you have her and I will send in the Runner to the extraction point.”

“Understood.”

“Good luck my friend.” Phy'iad spoke. “Succeed in this and I will give you that half elf bitch that Cha'talla's son has claimed as his own. It will be pleasant to hear her howl while you fuck her ass.”

KRANEK

At the moment Cha'talla and Esther were standing and wondering why exactly Dysea, Denali and Isabella had staggered and gripped each other tightly as they dropped to their knees from some imaginary pain. As they looked around Cha'talla saw Denali gripping Lisisa securely, his eyes blinking rapidly in what was obviously shock. Lisisa Leonidas was holding Deni's arms firmly trying to understand what it was that was happening. The other Leonidas children were staring at their mothers and brother with looks of confusion and worry. It had struck them all at the same moment and Cha'talla thought perhaps it was some sort of mind assault by Coven Remnants.

“Esther?” He gasped as his head turned and he saw T'lolt running madly towards them.

Esther shook her head quickly, a look of helplessness on her face. “I don't know.” She stammered. “A mind assault of some kind?” She was thinking the same thing he had.

“Martin!” Dysea cried out as she and Isabella tried to hug each other tighter. “Nauta Melme! No!”

“Mother!” Normya exclaimed as she dropped next to her on the ground. Zarah fell to her knees next to Isabella and grabbed her mother's shoulders.

Cha'talla turned as the sounds of trumpeting dragons erupting from the distance where they had built the pens. “What is happening?” He snarled as worry began to fill him and T'lolt skidded to a halt next to him.

Lisisa grabbed Deni's face in her hands and looked into his dark eyes as Carina and Arrarn moved to his sides. “Deni?” She gasped. “Deni what is wrong? What is happening?”

“Fath... father!” Deni hissed shaking his head. “Torma!”

“What about father?” Arrarn barked. “Deni... what about father?”

Deni looked up and met his brother's eyes. “He's... he's...”

Lisisa felt a stabbing pain in her head now, like hundreds of blades were puncturing her head and then Jeth's trumpet resounded even louder across the landscape. Her green eyes went wide as she felt what her Bonded Brother now felt and realization came to her as tears flooded forth.

“No!” She wailed. “No! No!”

“Denali... Lisisa... what is wrong?” Eliani shouted now as she squatted in front of Dysea her voice filled with worry. “Mother what is wrong?”

Cha'talla looked at T'lolt as he slowed and stopped next to him. “T'lolt what is...?”

“Cha'talla we have Kavalian troop ships descending on Kranek right now!” T'lolt barked with some worry. “Two of their fleet groups just appeared! One out of the nearby lightning nebula, the other just jumped into the system. Dysea’s ships are moving to intercept! Admiral Thodius is sending transports to remove Dysea and her family.”

“Kavalian?” Cha'talla snapped. “Why would they...?”

“The Kavalians just assassinated Martin Leonidas and his dragon Cha'talla.” T'lolt told him somberly drawing the eyes and horrified expressions of the Leonidas children and their mates. “On Earth! In Sparta! It’s beginning to break all over their Netnews channels! Some reporter caught it... she caught it all! Fash’ka is watching the feed as we speak! The Kavalians are moving against the Leonidas family and they are here now for them! Somehow they knew they would be here! Somehow they knew his children would be here! Planetary sensors have detected at least a hundred troop ships heading down to the surface. The PROTOSS-Class can carry six hundred fully loaded troops Cha'talla... that’s almost a hundred thousand we will be facing!”

Just over seven thousand years of life had instilled in Cha'talla of the Immortals many things. One of them was the innate ability to react quickly to events. “Dysea and the others are under our protection brother! I will not surrender them to these Kavalian dogs and nor now will my son or Blessed wife. We are so deeply intertwined now, what affects one affects us all!”

T'lolt nodded with a grin. “Good. I was hoping you’d say that.”

“Activate the defenses given to us by Androcles! Do it quickly! Bring the settlement to alert. We have planned to defend our homes for twenty years, and now we will have to do just that. I doubt very much the Kavalians know what we have done in the past months.”

“I’ve sent our Runners to the far side of the planet at the abandoned mine.” T'lolt told him. “They will use it to arm and refuel!”

“Anyone who can fight to arms! The children to the underground caves! Inform the other settlements to abandon their homes and head for the mountains. The Kavalian animals will not stop or hesitate to kill them and this is not their fight! Quickly!” Cha'talla turned to look at Dysea as T'lolt turned and headed back towards the settlement in a sprint.

Cha'talla was not an emotional man in many respects, but what he had learned through the years had come from the almost obsessive way that he and Esther loved each other, and her presence improved him on a daily basis. He looked at his wide-eyed Blessed Wife before dropping to his knees in front of Dysea and Isabella and gripping their arms. Tear filled eyes looked up to gaze at his Immortal features.

“I... I grieve with you Dysea.” He spoke softly. “But... it appears as if they are after you and your children as well. We...”

In a display of will power that none of them had witnessed before from Denali Leonidas, he rose to his feet with a guttural sound and shook his head hard several times. Deni could feel his older brother’s presence within his mind and the power which he felt from him was almost staggering just like their... father.

[Protect them Denali! You and Aradace must lead them brother! Hold them together! I must go to Earth and discover what is happening or everything will be lost! This is not random Deni; they are attacking us from all sides! I will contact you as soon as I am able!]

[Andro? Brother they...]

[Our blood is purest of our siblings Deni! You and Aradace must do this! I’m trying to contact mother on Hadaria. Help is coming Denali. Manda is on her way! You must hold and survive. No retreat brother!]

[No surrender!] Denali hissed. [Kill them Andro. Kill them wherever you find them for what they have done!] Deni snarled.

[I intend too.]

Deni shook his head once more as Andro’s voice drifted into whispers. Lisisa’s tear streaked face met his eyes as he stood to his full height and she looked up into his face. “Deni... Deni my love what...”

“We are Spartans!” Denali barked out turning his head to look at his siblings. “Andro... Andro is returning to Earth! It is where he belongs! This is happening everywhere and he needs to get control of it!”

“Andro... he spoke to you?” Normya gasped.

Deni nodded quickly as he watched his mothers get to their feet and look at him. “The Kavalians are striking us everywhere, not just here. Andro is... he is sending us help! I don’t know in what form but we must act like our... like our father would expect us to act. As he taught us all to act!”

“Deni...” Lisisa gasped.

Denali took her beautiful face in his hands, staring into those forest green eyes, and Deni was quite sure he could not survive without seeing those gorgeous eyes ever again. He had always thought he would find his Anome, just as his older brother had, but looking at Lisisa’s tear stained eyes Denali knew he could never love a woman as he loved her. The day he and Lisisa surrender to their love for each other was the day his life changed and took on new meaning. Perhaps that was what it meant being anomes, and Denali was quite sure Andro would tell him exactly that.

“They are coming after us as well Lisi! Just as Cha’talla has said.” He stated evenly. “We must prepare to defend ourselves! We can... we can mourn our father if we survive! Andro will make them pay, you know this!” He turned and looked at them. All of them saw a fire in his wolf eyes now, a fire that they had never seen before this day.

“Deni... Denali is right.” Dysea stammered even as she took deep breaths to get her emotions under some semblance of control. Dysea Leonidas was an elf but like Aricia and Anja she had been with Martin since the very beginning. She had embraced the Spartan lifestyle without missing a beat and made it all her own. She had been a strong woman before she had met her Nauta Melme, and having him change her to what she was now had only made her that much stronger. Like all of his Queens, they had spent hours and days with Gorgo and Dasha and learned so much of life back then as a woman, embracing many of those same ideals and values. It was one of the main reasons that so many men and women in Sparta looked at them with respect and awe and love. They had reveled in the history and strength of the Spartan women of old and they emulated them to a large extent.

“We must survive before we can... before we can mourn! We must use all we know to insure that we survive now!” Dysea spoke looking at her children.

It was then that Denali Leonidas took the final step on the long path that would see him become a leader as his father and brother before him.

“Narice!” Deni barked looking at his brother’s vampire wife and mate. “I need you to prepare your Riders! We will need them this day. Split them into groups, Lisisa will command the second group! Arrarn... we have twenty-one STRIKERS on the surface! Take command of them and their Coven pilots! Cha’talla’s forces will need the support!”

“Done!” Arrarn answered.

“Let’s do this family!” Denali spoke. “Then we will see about avenging our father.”

VANEDI

12,678 LY FROM EARTH

SPACEWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM

UNEXPLORED SPACE

PROTECTORATE CRUSADER-CLASS CRUISER

TALON OF JUSTICE

The ship was eight hundred meters long and the most advanced warship of their medium sized fleet. They were fierce looking in design, with four long rib-like extensions reaching out from under the rear of the superstructure and one extending from the strangely shaped bow of the ship. These extensions, or arms, as well as the other sharp pointed parts of the superstructure gave the ship a menacing appearance. The TALON OF JUSTICE was the flagship of the three-dozen races that made up the Protectorate, and she was impressive in her design and ability. The Lycavorian turned as the double doors to the bridge opened smoothly and a smile played across his face as he saw his childhood friend and the brother of his mate strode onto the bridge, Wayonn on his heels. His name was Drey and he was considered by many to be Dutkne’s closest advisor and friend.

Drey held no real rank within the scheme of things, he was simply known as Dutkne’s right hand. He refused to use any rank that the Protectorate government tried to saddle him with and insisted that everyone simply call him Drey. He and Dutkne had grown together since he was four years old and Dutkne five, practically inseparable in everything that they had done. Only a year separated them in age and both of them had studied more hours than they cared to recall under Wayonn and his often times tedious teachings. They had gotten into trouble as children; they had gotten themselves out of trouble as children. When Drey reached the age where he became interested in finding a mate, Dutkne's younger sister Caia is the one who caught his eye first and foremost. She was one of a set of twin daughters that Dutkne's mother had given birth to some three hundred years after Dutkne was born. The dark haired beauty Caia was one whom Drey had been watching for several years as she grew into womanhood, always sniffing around when he could, knowing that Dutkne approved of him as a mate for his sister. Caia had taken his interest in stride, even returning it often enough for she felt the same way, and when Drey had finally approached her about courting her Caia had been thrilled and very excited. As with all Lycavorians, you could tell within the first few moments if you were going to be compatible with a prospective mate, and Drey and Caia were very compatible they came to find out. They had been mated now for over a hundred years, a hundred and nineteen to be exact, and their time together had only gotten better and more passionate as each year passed. Caia could do things to him that Drey had never thought of, and he happily returned the favor to her in their bed. Caia accompanied him on the TALON wherever he went with her brother and she had even begun working in the small medical bay they had to pass the time.

Drey watched Dutkne stride right towards him as the doors to another entrance slid open and two more individuals entered quickly. Drey recognized their longtime companion Vanari Nirilo Re Mydala immediately with his blue skin and black hair, and he rolled his eyes at the younger Lycavorian that trailed along behind him like a puppy.

Nirilo Re Mydala was a Vanari Commando and had been with them for going on a hundred years now. The Vanari were an introverted species that did all they could to remain outside the sphere of influence of the Protectorate or any other race. They were one of the first species that the Lycavorians had met when they settled in this part of space, and that first meeting had not gone well, leading to a short and violent conflict. It had taken Dutkne's father to resolve that by promising the Vanari that the Lycavorian people had no interest in conquering them. The Vanari were and always had been wary of the feral nature of the Lycan people, and their violent history. Nirilo was one of the very few Vanari who had actually lived and worked with the Lycavorian people and he was their contact back to the Vanari leaders since his father and mother were senior members of their ruling Board of Regents. The Vanari could be very warlike if they needed as they proved during that short conflict and in subsequent conflicts with other races that thought they were weak because of their blue skin and intellectual background. Their territory was far larger than the Protectorate, but not as densely populated. Their blue skin also made them the blunt of many jokes from different species that first encountered them, yet those jokes quickly turned to fear if they riled the Vanari in any way.

The Vanari were close-minded and introverted but they were far from weak. Another cause of their reserved nature, and perhaps the most definitive reason they were reticent to outside species, was that their females were prized as slaves in the very lucrative Black Market that permeated this area of space. Vanari females were exquisitely beautiful and striking with their different shades of flawless blue skin and silver hair. While they were superior warriors, just as their men were, once captured and broken they made extremely docile slaves who were particularly talented in the sexual arts. No one really knew why this was, for in many cases the females were even harsher than the males in terms of competition between each other. It was almost a genetic disposition that their most prominent doctors had determined made them this way, like a switch that would be thrown in order for them to act in any way necessary to insure their survival. It was determined because they had long ago been a mono gendered species; they would do anything to survive, and that meant even becoming docile slaves to those who would subjugate them for nefarious purposes.

Vanari females were very open minded and adventurous, something that was also passed on through their family lines from tens of thousands of years ago. Almost all of their females and many of their men actually studied the sexual arts as a means to better understand different species and be able to interact with them. Vanari females also had the uncanny ability to secrete odorless pheromones from their skin upon command that could make the males of the vast majority of species exceptionally open to suggestion by them. Combined with their docile nature when broken and their sexual prowess, this is the reason Vanari females were so prized among slavers. This was also one of the major issues when the Lycavorians first encountered the Vanari people, for this pheromone had rendered a third of the Lycavorian forces susceptible to suggestion to the Vanari females, which in turn angered the Lycan females to the extreme. As far as Drey knew, there were very few species that were immune to the pheromone in a Vanari female's skin, and that included other females as well, though they were not as strongly affected by it.

Dutkne stopped in front of Drey and the two of them grasped forearms tightly. “Glad to see you finally decided to rejoin the rest of us who actually work for a living.” Drey stated plainly.

Dutkne smiled. “I needed a vacation.” He spoke as many of those on the bridge grinned and shook their heads.

“Twenty odd years is a long vacation.” Drey spoke dryly.

“Not long enough.” Dutkne told him. “You look well my friend. I see Caia is feeding you well. How is my sister?”

“Why don’t you ask her yourself igord?” The female voice said causing Dutkne to turn and look at the much shorter dark hair female come walking up behind him.

“Ah... Caia!” Dutkne grinned.

“Don’t ah Caia me brother!” She popped as she stopped in front of him. “Mother has been asking for you to return for years now!”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes... I know. I’ve been contemplating things.”

“And you were so deeply contemplating these things you could not even send us a holo transmission?” Caia spat.

“Well... they were... they were deep contemplations.” Dutkne answered finally wilting under the steely gaze of his younger sister.

“Rensibfla!” Caia barked.

Dutkne looked at her oddly. “Your tongue has become much sharper since I last saw you sister.” He stated.

“When mother, Carana and I have to do your job because you are avoiding it... it tends to put you on edge.” Caia told him. “And my mate likes my sharp tongue.”

Dutkne looked at Drey for a moment and saw him shrug broad shoulders in indifference. “Why argue when she is right I always say?” He said.

“Bah... you are just a whipped...” Dutkne rolled his eyes and turned back to face his sister only to find her wrapping her arms around his waist and burying her face into his chest. He smiled then and pulled her tight, inhaling deeply of her familiar scent and sensing her doing the same as he allowed the feelings of family once more wash over him. “He still pleases you I see, since you have kept him around.” He spoke next to her ear as he nuzzled her cheek in a brotherly fashion.

Caia drew back her face and nodded her head with a smile. “Most effectively and as often as I like. We complete each other.” She answered with a bright smile. “Would you care to share why exactly we are here? Wayonn said it was important.”

Dutkne looked at Wayonn. “You had already sent for them when we talked?” He asked.

Wayonn shrugged now. “It seemed like the prudent thing to do.”

Dutkne grunted at him and released his sister turning to Nirilo. They grasped forearms in greeting and Dutkne smiled. “It is good to see you again my friend.”

“Likewise Dutkne.” Nirilo said. “Wayonn made it seem important when he contacted us and I brought your aide from Darom so you do not feel left out.”

Dutkne looked at the fidgeting young male wolf. He was a beta wolf Dutkne could tell immediately, and appeared to be very excitable. “Do I know you?” Dutkne asked.

“I was only assigned to you two years ago Director General.” The man answered. “I am your First Assistant Director General. My name is Eldiet.”

“Director General?” Dutkne asked looking at Drey with questions in his eyes. “What happened to Prime Minister?”

Drey chuckled. “The people voted to change your title ten years ago Dutkne.” He told him. “They apparently didn’t like Prime Minister any longer.”

“They have changed my title six times in less than four centuries!” Dutkne snapped. “Is one title not good enough?”

Caia slapped his powerful and flat abdomen through his shirt. “If you did not go off on these ridiculous trips then you would be there to put a stop to it.” She hissed at him.

“I have brought some items that you need to review Director General.” Eldiet spoke holding up the half dozen data pads. “I have time whenever you are ready.”

“What are those?” Dutkne asked.

“Simple Bills and Legislative Acts that need your approval.” Eldiet answered.

Dutkne shook his head. “Not now Eldiet.” He snapped turning his head to take in all of the bridge crew of his ship. “We will be departing shortly and we may not be back for some time. If anyone would like to contact mates or family members to advise them we will be gone please do so now. We...”

“Grandfather Wayonn?” Caia’s worried voice sounded.

Dutkne heard his sister’s voice and he turned quickly to see Wayonn lean heavily against the tactical console. He stepped towards him but Wayonn lifted his hand and shook his head. “Grandfather?” Dutkne asked.

Wayonn looked at him with wide eyes. “We must hurry Dutkne!” He gasped.

Dutkne gripped his arms tightly now. “Grandfather... what have you felt? Is it Martin? Androcles?” Dutkne had quizzed his grandfather mercilessly over the last hours trying to learn more of Martin Leonidas and his history. To say that Dutkne was duly impressed would have been a sizeable understatement. Wayonn had passed all that he had seen and talked with Martin about to Dutkne over these last hours and his grandson was supremely impressed with Martin and Androcles Leonidas.

“It... it spiked for several seconds Dutkne!” Wayonn said softly. “It is gone now... but I can no longer sense Martin as I did before. And Androcles... all I sense from him is unbridled rage.” He looked up at his grandson. “It has begun Dutkne already. His brother must have moved sooner than I thought. Something has happened and we must hurry if we are to make a difference in what is coming.”

Dutkne nodded without question, the witty humor pushed to the background. After what his grandfather had shown him, the humor would have to wait for the moment. He turned quickly to Drey. “Set course seven three four nine one eight mark six. I have the coordinates and rally points set already.” He stated evenly handing Drey the data pad. “Bring the Quantum Drive online and execute the first jump.”

Drey looked at the data pad with surprise in his eyes, for he thought they were returning to Darom. His dark eyes grew even wider when he saw the coordinates and the course plot that Dutkne had laid out on the data pad. He looked up quickly. “Dutkne... these... these sets of jump coordinates take us coreward of the Perseus Arm!”

“Yes I know.” Dutkne answered.

“Dutkne... we... we have never been coreward of the Perseus Arm.” Drey stated with no small degree of surprise. “This area... it is on the fringe of what is called The Wilds. It is very close to Lycavorian...”

Dutkne nodded his head. “It is close to the Lycavorian Union border yes. In fact it is closer to Kavalian space, but still within what they call The Wilds.”

“Where are we going and why?” Drey asked.

Dutkne looked at Drey and saw everyone’s eyes on him now, including his sister’s and Nirilo.

“Tell them Dutkne my boy.” Wayonn spoke. “They have a right to know why. They have a right to know who it is we are going to meet.”

Dutkne looked back at his grandfather for a long moment and saw him nod. He turned back around and looked at Drey. Drey took a step closer to him. “Dutkne... why do I get the feeling this isn’t going to be one of your normal adventures?”

“City Ship 41 is no longer on Lycavore Drey.” Dutkne told him seeing his eyes go wide along with Caia’s and Nirilo’s.

Nirilo stepped forward now. While many among the Vanari Board of Regents had never taken the time to learn the history of the Lycavorian people, he had delved deeply into their past for many different reasons. Since he had decided long ago to remain and live among them and learn about them it had been the prudent thing to do. When his father had first suggested this course of action to him it was so that the Vanari could gain some sort of a tactical advantage over the Lycavorians. After only a few months among them, Nirilo stayed and learned because he wanted to. He knew about the High Coven, the Black Day, even the Pralors for it was hard to deny when you associated with one on a regular basis. He even had a Lycavorian female that he spent quite a bit of time with, and their relationship was always exciting and adventurous and quite fulfilling. She was a blond haired wolf who adored him no matter that his skin was blue. Their time together, in and out of their bed was always exciting. There were a few members on the Vanari Board of Regents that believed as he did, his mother chief among them, that the Lycavorians could make formidable allies and long time friends. They were a passionate and determined species and exceptionally forward looking in the paths they chose. And they were very unlike what many of the senior Vanari Regents viewed them as. Nirilo knew well what City Ship 41 was, and also the condition the ship was supposedly in. Now Dutkne was telling them that a ship that was not supposed to be able to fly was no longer where it was always believed to be. A ship that could very well alter the balance of power within the universe itself.

“Come again?” Drey asked stunned.

Dutkne nodded. “City Ship 41 is now on Earth.” He said.

“Earth?” Caia exclaimed taking his arm and turning her towards him. “Dutkne... how is that even possible? We all know that City Ship 41 was buried on Lycavore and the High Coven has been using the planet as a base. A prison in some respects.”

Dutkne nodded. “That is what I thought as well.” He stated looking at Wayonn. “That is no longer the case and hasn’t been for some time.”

“Dutkne... how did it get to Earth?” Nirilo asked. “Are you not the one who said that only a descendant of Sumar or your grandfather Canth would have the MV ability to actually release the security fields and allow the ship to power up?”

Dutkne nodded. “That’s what I told you yes.” He said turning once more to look at Wayonn. “However I was not aware of certain intelligence reports that my grandfather here had altered before he gave them to me.”

“What intelligence reports?” Drey asked quickly. “I have been bringing the reports here since you arrived. I am aware of no altered Intelligence reports. Everything has gone through me!”

“And you would not have been aware of them Drey.” Wayonn spoke. “For I was the one who altered them before you received them because they came from several assets that I alone control.”

“Assets?” Nirilo asked.

Wayonn nodded his head. “I have several contacts within The Wilds and even one within Lycavorian Space. It is I that has hidden the fact that the High Coven abandoned Lycavore after Martin freed his mother and left their garrison there in tatters. It is I who has been shuttling funds to an account in The Wilds for the last two thousand years. That account was established for use by any descendant of Resumar that may have come along. One did come... and his identity was a surprise to many, including me.”

“I will give all of you a full briefing when we are underway.” Dutkne spoke to them. “Right now... right now know that the grandson of Resumar rules the Lycavorian Union and he has for the last twenty-five years.”

“The traitor!” Drey hissed.

Dutkne smiled and shook his head. “No Drey! The one we thought lost when Leonidas died. His unborn son.”

Caia stepped away from her brother. “Wait!” She declared. “Our people know the history after The Black Day just as well as you Dutkne. We know all about King Resumar and the son he sent to Earth with the other Ten Thousand fetuses. We know about Leonidas and what he achieved on Earth. We also know that the son Queen Gorgo carried and gave birth to on that ship while they fled the High Coven after his death, we know that child died in the destruction of his cruiser while he slept in a Cryo Chamber! What you are saying can not be true!”

Dutkne shook his head slowly. “No... it is true.” He stated with a smile. “The great grandson of Sumar lives Caia! Wayonn has talked to him. He has shared their conversations with me.”

Caia’s dark eyes cut to Wayonn. “Is this true grandfather?” She asked him.

Wayonn nodded. “Every bit of it. I set up the secret account for any child of Leonidas’s first-born son Pleistarchus that may have survived the Coven purge and chose not to follow the destructive path of his father. As it turns out, I was notified when the funds were accessed and I discovered it was the second son himself who had accessed them. The son we all thought dead. He goes by the name Martin Leonidas and has since he discovered who and what he was. I have been monitoring events within the Lycavorian Union since that time.”

Dutkne was about to speak again but they watched Drey hold up his hand. “Stop right there!” He barked loudly. “Helm! Come to course seven three four nine one mark six. Engage the Quantum Drive for pre-arranged jumps! Tactical Officer!” He held out the data pad and waited for the Lycavorian to take it. “Follow these coordinates exactly and do not deviate from them.”

“Yes sir!”

Drey turned back to Dutkne. “You have some explaining to do my old friend.” He said quickly.

Nirilo nodded his head in agreement. “That would be the understatement of this century Drey.” He spoke. “If what you say is true Dutkne... the Vanari Board of Regents will want this information. It could mean that our two peoples can finally become closer and become the allies we should be. Especially if Wayonn endorses this man.”

Wayonn nodded. “I do.” He answered. “But I warn all of you now; Martin Leonidas is unlike any man you have ever met. As is his first born son Androcles. They are the most powerful pureblood Lycavorians alive today anywhere. Martin’s Anome... his pureblood wolf Queen, she...”

“Grandfather...” Caia gasped looking at him. “He has... he has taken an Anome?”

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. As has his son Androcles. And though they do not know it just yet, they have brought the Lycavorian bloodlines of our people back together. Aricia and Sadi both are descended from the different lines of Lycavorian blood that existed when Resumar was chosen as King. The royal bloodlines of that time and beyond. Neither of them are aware of it as I said, for Aricia was born in Sparta and they did not know the complete history of our people. Sadi is not aware of it for the very reason we have avoided contact with those in the Lycavorian Union for all these years. They had moved too far from the direction that Resumar and Canth intended for them. Martin has brought that back to them and his son follows his father’s path like the same set of footprints in the sand. And like Resumar they both have taken others as mates and wives, and their beauty matches their skill, which is superior.”

“Grandfather... there has not been a recognized union of Anomes since...” Caia began to speak.

“Since King Resumar and Queen Eliani.” Drey finished her statement in a soft voice.

Wayonn nodded. “In some ways they still do not know the significance of their Unions to these women... but we will teach them.” He spoke. “They follow the Spartan tradition and code instilled by Resumar’s son Leonidas while he lived on Earth and they follow it closely. They do not deal in deceit and subjugation between allies. If you are their friend, you will find no more loyal a friend; but if you are their enemy, they will utterly destroy you without blinking an eye.”

“They have more than one mate?” Nirilo asked surprised.

Wayonn nodded. “Martin has five... one of whom is a pureblood vampire. Androcles has four right now, also with a pureblood vampire among them. A young woman that has brought the lines of the two brothers back together again as well. Androcles will have one more, though they just have not found her yet. Two other of Martin’s sons have also cemented this rejoining by taking wives of Xaxon’s blood, but Androcles’s wife and vampire mate is by far the most important.”

“This is... this is unbelievable.” Nirilo gasped. “We can not keep this from the Board of Regents Dutkne!”

Dutkne nodded and looked at Nirilo. “I know what this could mean Nirilo, but let’s hold off on telling them just yet. There are events happening now with Martin and Androcles that we need to assess first. I will fill all of you in on what grandfather has shown me but can we do it over some Olmarian Steaks. I haven’t had decent food in many months and my wolf genes are about to assassinate me for not providing them the nourishment they need.”

“Mess Lounge!” Drey stated taking Caia’s hand.

“You too Grandfather.” Dutkne spoke. “You are more to blame than me for this. There’s no way I’m facing them alone.”

Wayonn nodded with a smile now that he knew they would begin executing their jumps. The wolf within him also told him he wanted meat. It was something that he would never have partaken in before his chosen mate turned him, as Pralors did not need to ingest meat to maintain their health. Since becoming wolf so long ago Wayonn now enjoyed meat almost as much as those who were pureblood wolf.

“A steak sounds rather inviting right now.” He said.

SCIMITAR

“All fighters are away Captain!” Zeria barked out. “All squadrons from NORMYA’S LIGHT responded as well! We have Kavalians launching in response! Fighters and missiles! They are dividing Captain... GREAT SOULS are remaining to the rear while the DIATAGAs and DIEROYs are boring right in.”

“Typical! Nubous cowards!” Sa'sur hissed.

“I'm also detecting a new type of Kavalian Fighter! It appears larger than the Jaguar but the profile is similar!” Zeria exclaimed.

“Designate them Jaguar Mark IIs and file them Zeria! Weapons what about the Zero Matter Mark 22s!” Sa'sur quipped from her chair.

“Just finishing the reloading Captain!” The man answered turning to face her. “Fifteen seconds and we'll be ready to launch!”

“Target the GREAT SOULS!” Sa'sur barked. “Nothing else! We have to take out those ships so they can't use their planetary Gauss Cannon!”

“Captain we have a total sixty-nine warships bearing down on us!” Zeria shouted. “The DIMERUs and PURUSIANs have broken away and are taking up position on the fringes of the rest of their fleet! The second Kavalian Fleet group has launched fighters and is pushing hard to reach NORMYA'S LIGHT!”

Sa'sur nodded her head. “They will use them for hit and runs on our flanking ships!” She announced. “They really need to change their tactics... they've been doing this to the Coven for years.”

“They are winning against the Coven Captain!” Her XO spouted from his seat across the bridge from where hers and Andro's command seats were anchored.

“We aren't the High Coven XO! How bout we show them that!” Sa'sur snapped.

Her XO grinned. “Works for me.”

“The moment all Mark 22s clear their launchers come to course three nine six four one four and reload with conventional warheads! Full spread on the Photonic Torpedoes and ready a port side barrage from the Type One Alpha turrets! Strike Wing to execute Gamma one three and follow suit!”

Zeria turned in her chair and looked at Sa'sur. “Captain... that course will... it will take us directly at the Kavalian Fleet!”

Sa'sur nodded. “Yep!” she announced. “Let's see how quick on the uptake they are.”

“Captain! Zero Matter Fusion missiles are ready!”

Sa'sur's eyes narrowed in a very evil manner, the wolf blood in her coming out now. “All launchers! Fire!”

KRANEK
GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
DEATHMANE
KFI COMMAND SHIP

“...positioned them between us and the planet Admiral!” The Kavalian Tactical officer barked out. “The elf Queen's command ship has de-shrouded and dropped lower into the atmosphere after launching its fighters! The Prince's command ship has launched fighters as well and is moving to engage with his Strike Wing!”

The Kavalian Admiral nodded. “He is a fool! He cannot stand against our numbers! He should have turned and run and left the others to their fate on the planet! Launch our own fighters! Have the Jaguar Mark IIs cover the Black Soul Heavy Raiders! Send all our normal Jaguars against theirs. We outnumber them four and five to one. Their DEVASTATOR is the main concern and I want all of them killed first! They can do the most damage if we allow them to get too close.”

“Yes Admiral!”

“Have the DIATAGAs and DIEROYs form an attack line and bear straight in! Order the DIMERUs and PURUSIANs to remain on the flanks and target at their discretion!” The Admiral spoke. “Remind General Gerrum that they are to destroy the Immortal settlement completely and leave none alive! Especially those damn High Coven dragons.”

“Yes Admiral!”

“Send a tight beam transmission back to KFI Command that we are beginning our attack and will advise when it is complete!” The Admiral spoke.

“Message already sent Admiral!”

“Excellent.” The Kavalian got to his feet and looked at the large holoimager plot board. “Hold our position here while our other ships bear in. Let them take the brunt of the first strike from the Lycavorian Command ship and its missiles and fighters. Once they have depleted their stores we will move in and pound them into atoms with our medium Gauss turrets. He is a child compared to me, this Androcles Leonidas, and I intend to show him this.”

“Admiral... the co-captain of the SCIMITAR is one of their most experienced female elf commanders.” The XO spoke moving up to him.

The Kavalian waved his large fur covered hand in dismissal. “Even better. Elven females are good for nothing more than spreading their legs and howling out their approval when we lock groins with them. I’ve had half a dozen elven females and once I was filling them with my load they could do nothing but whimper and beg for more as I fucked their brains clean out of their heads! Rub their ears a little bit and they will melt before you!”

His bridge crew began to laugh along with him. At least that is until his Tactical Officer turned from his station his eyes wide.

“Admiral Ocarsh! Missiles inbound! The Command ship SCIMITAR has launched missiles directly at us! They... we can’t track them and they are maneuvering through our forward warships locked on us!”

The Kavalian looked at the man. “That is not possible!” He barked moving to the plot station. “How many missiles?”

“Forty-six total Admiral! Six appear to be locked on us!”

“Point defenses now!”

“Admiral... our gun crews can not lock the missiles!” The tactical officer shouted. “They have some sort of stealth coating on them!”

“Switch to manual targeting then!” Ocarsh barked savagely. “Tell our gun crews if they do not destroy all of them I will kill them myself!”

FALCON ONE FOUR

“How long Matthew?” Falarie almost yelled.

“Twenty-six seconds!” Matthew answered immediately.

“Kavalian Troop ships are beginning to land!” Chloe called out.

“We can not stop them from landing!” Falarie barked out feeling almost helpless as they watched dozens of Kavalian troop ships entering the atmosphere on their sensors. “We must hope the Immortals and our people can hold until we are able to send troops down from the SCIMITAR and NORMYA’S LIGHT!”

“If they are around to send them at all! I have never seen so many ships in one area!” Qilie snapped.

“Missile warning! Missile warning!” Chloe announced. “SCIMITAR has fired Mark 22s! Missile profile suggests Zero Matter fusion warheads! The Kavalians won’t be able to track them!”

“Are we clean?” Falarie asked as she banked their ship over to starboard to get a better view.

“No contacts!” Matthew replied deeply involved. “No one can paint us! Sixteen more seconds!”

Falarie reached above her head and stabbed a button on the overhead console. “All Falcons prepare to initiate System Wide Scramble!”

“Falcon Two Three standing by!”

“Falcon One Nine!”

“Falcon Two One ready!”

“On Matthew’s mark!” Falarie snapped.

“Stand by...” Matt spoke now. “Three... two... one! Mark! Initiate SWS! ARIZONA squadrons entering the system!”

The RAPTOR A3s were set up in a box formation around the edges Kranek’s immediate system. They were well out of the fighting area, now nearly a six million kilometers from Kranek, the ships barely discernible except for the streaks of plasma based weapons and Gauss cannons skittering across the stars. In all four craft the main sensor operator touched a button on their main center console initiating an invisible beam of particle energy. Each beam reached out to connect with their sister ships until it took the shape of a large box. Supremely powerful particle emitters in the belly bubble of each ship sent out and received these beams of energy, and in quite unspectacular fashion ceased all enemy communications outside of the immediate system of Kranek no matter the type or scope. The connected particle beam also had the secondary effect of scrambling all long range sensors to the point it was impossible to scan anything more than five hundred thousand kilometers in any direction. They had developed and used the tactic in the last two years of the Evolli War and it had given the Evolli fits. The Union ships were all fitted with a special reflective ablative coating within their hull armor and it did not hinder them in any manner.

“SWS active!” Matthew shouted. “Signal is strong and clear! The Kavalians bastards are now blind, deaf and mute!”

In the cockpit of Falcon One Four Falarie nodded her head. “Now... now they will see they should have never embarked on this path!” She muttered.

“Avoi.” Qilie stated softly.

SCAR FLIGHT

They appeared almost as one complete entity from their jump, nearly one hundred and sixty fighters and fighter/bombers, each one bursting into existence exactly where they were supposed to be, Colonel Steven Randall in the front.

It took Steven all of two seconds to glance at his sensor board and begin giving orders.

“Scar to Scar Flight! Grey Wolves break for your positions! Their sensors belong to you! Make each shot count! There won’t be any reloads until the ARIZONA arrives!”

“Grey Wolf Lead copies Scar! Breaking now!”

Steven glanced out his cockpit and saw the Penetrator variant of the DEVASTATOR fighter/bomber begin peeling away in formation. Designed primarily as an electronic warfare craft, Steven knew in the hands of an experienced ECW officer, they could be deadly with their homing missiles and drones. He dropped his head once more to his scope and assessed the situation with the speed and experience of a veteran flyer.

“Looks like the SCIMITAR has launched missiles!” Steven barked out. “Falcon One Four and the other RAPTORs have shut down the system! NORMYA’S LIGHT has dropped lower to the planet probably to cover Queen Dysea and the others!” Steven spoke openly in their secure COM link. “The Kavalians will know we are here since we’re on the edge of their active sensor range so let’s get to killing things!”

“Bout time Scar!” A voice echoed in his helmet.

“Picking up new version fighter Scar!” A voice barked out. “Bearing four nine three!”

Steven adjusted his sensor and nodded. “Looks bigger! It doesn’t matter... it’s Kavalian and we can still kill it!”

“Works for us!”

“Black Widows and Jolly Rogers take the Death Jesters in from three four one and assist the SCIMITAR’s fighters! They look to be going after the DIATAGAs and DIMERUs. The rest of you on me from six three nine! We’re going to bore straight in on them and hit that Fleet Group bearing on NORMYA’S LIGHT! We need to keep those fighters off her until the ARIZONA and HORNET get here! Maintain your spacing and stick with your wingman! We’re outnumbered five to one and we need to have eyes in the backs of our asses!”

“Course six three nine takes us between two of the GREAT SOULS Colonel!” A voice chimed in.

Steven nodded. “It sure does!”

“Ah sibfla... who the hell wants to live forever anyway!” The same voice bellowed.

Steven grinned. “Once we get into the mix cover your wingman and take it to them! Let’s go people!”

KAVALIAN GREAT SOUL COMMAND SHIP DEATHMANE

“...we are unable to lock them!” The DEATHMANE'S Executive Officer barked out. “Seventeen seconds to impact!”

“Track them manually!” Ocarsh shouted.

“We can't!” The officer shouted back. “They are moving too erratically, changing course and weaving in and out among our fighters!”

“Damn our fighters!” Ocarsh barked angrily. “All Firestorm cannons to saturation fire! Half a million kilometers distance! Stop those missiles!”

“Admiral... saturation fire will destroy our own fighters still moving to engage the Union forces!” The XO spoke.

“Then so be it!” Ocarsh exclaimed angrily as he came to his feet. “Fire now damn it! I don't want those missiles to reach my ship!”

Fifty-four quad mounted Light Gauss cannon turrets came alive then, filling the space around the DEATHMANE with deadly projectile fire. Each high-density shell from the Quad mounted Gauss cannons reached a certain apogee half a million kilometers from the ship and then a small explosive charge went off, triggering a larger popping explosion that saturated the entire area around the DEATHMANE with lethal, hyper-velocity fragments that could shred missiles and ships alike. It was an extremely effective anti-air defense weapon and one of the reasons why High Coven missiles many times did not reach their targets. It gave the Kavalian an advantage in their war with the Vampire High Coven; however against Union missiles it was nowhere near as effective.

A lesson learned in the war with the Evolli was quickly applied to every Union ship and missile across the board. The Evolli had similar weapons that they had used for air defense, and for the first two years of the war it had proven effective. That was until the Union began coating the outer shells of all their missiles with a Crystanium and Dragon Armor weave. Due to its properties, and the near weightlessness of the combination of the two metals, it did little to hinder the performance of their anti-ship weapons. Even still, the sheer force of the barrage the DEATHMANE unleashed was enough to destroy the missiles targeted on them. And this the barrage did.

Except for two.

Zero Matter Fusion warheads were developed by a Nodon Engineer who had originally been working on the Quantum Engineering aspects of the ARIZONA's Drive Core. He had discovered the power of these weapons quite by accident, and then with some ingenuity and incredible skill he was able to harness the force of the weapon, which wasn't really a force at all. With the assistance of Avi and several other brilliant technicians, the Union scientists quickly came to understand and harness a new type of weapon. Zero Matter Fusion warheads were just that. They had zero matter for warheads. There was no explosives charge in them whatsoever. What these missiles had was the most destructive power of any missile in the Union arsenal due to the nature of zero matter and fusion.

One missile struck just aft of DEATHMANE's starboard nose wing, the other directly over the top of the GREAT SOULS's drive core.

The moment the tiny fingernail sized computer told the missile's brain it was in the right spot, the missile's brain activated the internal sequence and in seven tenths of a second it was complete. The concept behind the Zero Matter Fusion warhead was actually very simple and had been around since the dawn of time. There was a point when the energy created by matter moving through time and space reached zero and stopped, creating a vacuum of energy. It is at this point where Zero Matter became lethal. When combined with a small fusion reactor, no larger than a person's finger really detonating inside that vacuum, the resulting reaction was catastrophic. The ZMF warhead detonated just as it was designed to, and just as it was designed to, the vacuum of the explosion sucked in all energy in the surrounding area. It didn't matter if it was solid matter or energy matter, the vacuum sucked it all in. This included the power from the DEATHMANE's large shield grid in both those locations, as well as the actual structure of the ship itself. For a split second it appeared as if the hull of the ship buckled and twisted before tearing away, consumed by the ZMF reaction. It was also known that when a zero matter fusion reaction became too much energy and matter to be contained within its small field, it ruptured outward. It ruptured outward like a massive projectile of supercharged matter energy.

As the ZMF reaction absorbed more than its small field could hold, it ruptured outward. It just so happened that this rupture was carefully directed back in a single direction. In this case, right back at DEATHMANE's hull. All this took place in the time it took to blink ones eyes twice. It was like a massive shotgun blast at point blank range and this matter energy, finally unleashed, punched clean through the hull of the GREAT SOUL as if it was punching through paper. A huge chunk of its own hull, plus massive amounts from its own shield grid were sent hurtling through the hull of the ship. The first ZMF tore completely through the one of the front wing like structures in the front of the GREAT SOUL, and then passed halfway through into the second before losing its energy. As huge internal explosions erupted from the now severed wing, the force of those explosions was blown back at the ship, engulfing dozens of fighters as they tried to launch. The second ZMF ripped through the LSD Drive Core of the Kavalian ship, disrupting the Tri-Cobalt energy source and pushing the ship's main engines to overload in the space of three seconds. It was a sight to watch really, as the resulting explosion ripped through not only the top of the DEATHMANE, but blew out the bottom of the ship's superstructure as well, nearly fifteen decks below.

It would be the only bit of luck that the Union forces would receive this day for when the DEATHMANE blossomed into a fireball it took the overall commander of Kavalian forces with it. The Kavalian forces in the system had been told to fight to the death, as was their usual way of things in battle. With the death of Admiral Ocarsh, that order could not be rescinded in any way and the battle now would come down to who had the most resolve and staying power. It also served to incense the remaining ship captains within the Kavalian fleet and they turned their full attention to the ship that had launched the missiles to begin with.

The SCIMITAR.

ARIZONA

Miranda looked impatiently over where Zaala was at her station next to E'dira and tapping away at her console with insane swiftness. She could feel the tenseness of everyone on the bridge, and no doubt it was permeating the ship as well. The rest of ARIZONA's fighter group was already loaded and waiting for launch. Their pilots were standing by in their cockpits and waiting for the first group to erupt down the launch tubes. The gun crews were all standing by, live war shots in each and every tube and battery. Miranda could feel it, the pride and determination that filtered to all of them. She moved up next to E'dira slowly and did something that she would never have done weeks or months earlier. She lifted her hand and allowed her fingers to caress the back of E'dira's elven ear. It was a brief touch, only in passing, but in just that simple contact Miranda made claim to E'dira in a way that had the Drow's blood burning with desire. E'dira looked up at her with those amber eyes, so full of emotion and so deep.

"We are ready." E'dira spoke firmly almost sensing the churning of Miranda's emotions.

"I know." Miranda said softly. "I just..."

"Captain Lorian!" The COM officer barked from across the bridge. "Feed from Falcon One Four!"

Miranda squeezed E'dira's shoulder as she turned. "Put it up on holodisc one!" She ordered facing the holodisc closest to E'dira's station.

"Captain Lorian!" Falarie's voice erupted from the transmission as the image of the RAPTOR pilot flickered and then cleared.

"Falarie! Give me a report!" Miranda spoke.

"Captain... all of Colonel Randall's fighters made it and they are engaged now! A ZMF missile barrage by the SCIMITAR has taken out two GREAT SOULS and severely damaged three others, but they are still in the fight! Captain Sa'sur is trying to keep one Fleet Group off NORMYA'S LIGHT with her Strike Wing while our fighters engage the second! The SCIMITAR is taking a pounding Captain! We must have taken out the Command ship or something because they are seriously pissed! She's lost six ships from her Strike Wing, another too badly damaged to fight and they are adrift! There's just too many Kavalians!"

"Have they landed troops?" Miranda asked.

"Yes ma'am!" Falarie answered immediately. "We don't have any information on the defenses of Kranek Captain. All we know is that Queen Dysea has already stated they are not leaving and she has ordered NORMYA'S LIGHT to clear the lower atmosphere and help the SCIMITAR. The second Kavalian Fleet Group will be in range of Kranek and NORMYA'S LIGHT in just under two minutes. They'll be able to hit her with their heavy Gauss turrets and..." Falarie's head turned slightly and her eyes went wide. "What? No! Captain Lorian... Chloe is tracking sixty four anti-ship missiles just launched against the SCIMITAR. The Kavalians must have coordinated their strike! She..."

"Zaala!" Miranda almost screamed as she turned to look at her. "Zaala we have to go now! We're out of time!"

Zaala stabbed a few more buttons on her console and turned in her chair. "QRFR Drive is online and ready!" She barked. "Give me coordinates!"

"It hasn't been tested Captain!" The engineering officer snapped as he turned away from Zaala and looked at Miranda. "We don't know if it will work!"

Zaala came to her feet then, her beautiful face angry. She grabbed the engineer's shoulder and spun him around to face her. "My husband is there!" She snarled viciously before snapping out with an open heel strike to the male elf's jaw. The blow caught him completely by surprise and he dropped like a limp noodle to the deck. Zaala glared down at him. "That is my husband! And these are my engines! Don't you dare tell me they won't work you pompous fool!" Zaala looked up and directly at Miranda. "Give me coordinates Miranda! Give me coordinates and I will put us there faster than you can say I love you E'dira!"

Miranda blinked several times and glanced at an equally wide eyed E'dira. She turned back to Zaala and opened her mouth to answer when Falarie's voice burst out of the transmission again.

"Captain Lorian! Twenty-six seconds until those missiles hit the SCIMITAR! She's maneuvering but it won't be enough! We have to do something!" Falarie screamed.

It was a simple decision for Miranda and one that would propel her into the history books yet to be written for the audacity and bravery of the maneuver. It would be studied and repeated many times over the course of the centuries as a brilliant military decision.

For Miranda Lorian... she was simply saving her family.

"Helm! Plot me a course between the SCIMITAR and those missiles!" Miranda barked. "Feed the coordinates to Star Commander Zaala Randall and order the Wing to prepare to jump! We're going now!" She whirled on the holoimage of Falarie. "Falarie... go secure and contact Sa'sur! Tell her we're coming and prepare to execute once we jump in! She'll know what to do!"

"Yes Captain!" Falarie barked. "Falcon One Four clear!"

Miranda didn't hesitate and moved to her command chair. "E'dira... prepare to initiate the Point Defense Batteries to Zone Defense! All guns ready for salvo fire. They will fire on your command! As of right now we are weapons free! Instruct Janon he is to break immediately and cover NORMYA'S LIGHT with half the Attack Wing! We'll join with the SCIMITAR and take it to the Kavalians!" Miranda was settling into her chair as she barked the rapid fire orders. The bridge crew of the ARIZONA responded as well as any finely tuned and oiled machine as a loud claxon began to sound on every deck.

"Miranda... Captain Lorian...!" Zaala snapped. "Coordinates are set!" She announced confidently. "We are ready!"

Miranda paused for a split second for she was about to commit her forces to combat action. This time however, she was in control. This time she would save those she had come to regard as family.

"Let's get sum!" Miranda shouted. "Helm! JUMP US NOW!"

It was not spectacular by any means, just a collection of forty odd flashes of white light as experimental Jump Drives became reality and forty odd warships of the Lycavorian Union went into battle.

They would never know their action was detected. Detected by a race of beings who were the epitome of horrific evil. A race of beings that had wiped out the advanced species known as the Pralors with all their sophisticated technology and power. A race of beings who would now stand up and take notice and make plans to finish the job they had started thirty thousand years ago.

They were known as The Scourge.

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

HADARIA

It was not far from the palace to the Domar spaceport. In normal times, perhaps a twenty minute walk through some of the finer park like settings on Hadaria. Today however, today was very different. The streets were crammed with hundreds, if not thousands of men, women and children who were scrambling to leave while more sat at the outdoor cafés or stood and watched what was going on with blissful ignorance. Anja and Sivana did not really know the level of respect and adoration they had obtained over the last two decades ruling their world, yet they saw it now with the number of people who were trying all they could to get off the planet before Buonau and her Kavalian cronies shut down the spaceports. They knew it was going to happen, and now with little more than what they could carry, they were acting in the same manner as their Queen.

Atropos cursed under his breath as they moved deftly through the throngs of men and women. Only a few hundred meters outside the palace gates they had to draw up their cloaks and cowls to keep people from following them in the hopes they could depart with the Queen. He was moving as quickly as he could, one hand gripping Anja's arm, the other Eurin's. Sivana clung to Anja's hand just in front of her, while Ceuma led them just behind Joci. Atropos was a Spartan of old, born and raised in his beloved city on Earth. His history was well known, as were his acts of bravery and fortitude while in exile. When he was chosen as Anja's Captain he had set about assembling the finest group of men and women he could to be her detail. He knew of Anja's proclivity for getting into trouble, and he needed Durcunusaan members who could react swiftly to events and adapt on a whim. He found those men and women in those trained by General's Vengal and Vistr, the two men most responsible for bringing the Durcunusaan into existence.

What he had found in the Spartan Joci however was different. After what he had taken part in Atropos was initially loathed to allow the man to even live another hour. After the last few weeks however, Atropos was so very happy Anja had stayed his hand. Joci was a predator through and through. He was a Lycavorian that should have been born in Sparta instead of on Apo Prime, for he would have fit in seamlessly with the men and women there. The man's skills were without question and Joci was utterly committed to his mate Ceuma, and while she may have been a clone of Anja and almost impossible to tell apart from his queen in physical description, Joci had eyes only for Ceuma. Atropos knew what love and absolute commitment was, for he had loved his own mate from the first moment he had seen her. He saw that in Joci's eyes for Ceuma. He wasn't looking at Ceuma and seeing a sexual fantasy involving his Queen as he had before, now he was looking at Ceuma and gazing upon his treasured mate and wife. That was the single most important aspect that made Atropos trust him without question.

Joci was also turning out to be a superior commander and soldier. Though he was large at nearly six feet two inches tall and over two hundred pounds, he moved with the grace of a ballet dancer as he sliced through the crowds, guiding them as they moved closer to the spaceport. His eyes and senses never ceased to take in all around them as they moved and combined with Atropos's own combat senses and dedication, they were moving rapidly and so far unnoticed among the crowds as they made their way to the spaceport. What Atropos knew that perhaps the others did not was simple.

A member of the Leonidas family never stayed unnoticed for very long. It just wasn't in their nature. And it was something Atropos knew they had passed down to their children.

Anja's Mindvoice presence was just too powerful to hide effectively no matter how much she tried to shield herself. And she could shield herself quite well. Her training with Martin and his sister and her deep bond with her dragon brother Miath however, this did not allow her to move totally uninhibited. It also did not help when suddenly she stopped and gripped his arm so painfully Atropos had to suppress a gasp of surprise and sting. They were in the open on one of the wide pedestrian thoroughfares that dotted Hadaria and was surrounded by shops and stores of every description. As with all the cities on Hadaria, Lifter traffic was kept to a bare minimum within city limits unless necessary. Anja came to an abrupt halt and Atropos felt her body go rigid and her head shook under the cowl.

"Anja?" Atropos hissed in a whisper. "Anja... what is wrong?"

Anja tossed her head back and forth under the cowl several times as her fingers dug into his arm. Atropos reached up as the others looked on worriedly and pulled the lip of her cowl back enough so that he could see her face. The expression he saw was one of horror and sorrow and incredible pain, her jade green wolf eyes wide, the black ring around her jade cornea thicker than normal. Atropos stepped in front of her completely, partly to block her face from the causal passerby, partly to try and discover what it was that made her look so terrified. "Anja my Queen!" He whispered. "What... what is wrong?"

Anja grasped his arms tighter. “Martin!” She exclaimed in a gasp.

“Martin? What about Martin? Anja... tell me what you feel?” He declared to her.

“I... I feel... I feel nothing.” Anja gasped as tears began to pour down her cheeks as if someone had suddenly opened a faucet.

Eurin moved closer, instinctively trying to shield this young woman who she had come to adore over the years. “Atropos... we can’t stop here.” She stated. “What is wrong? We’re in the middle of the Domar Promenade. The Spaceport is only a few hundred meters away.”

Atropos glanced at her. “I don’t know!” Atropos exclaimed softly. “Something about the King and not being able to feel him anymore!”

Eurin looked at Anja’s face and saw the tears rolling down her cheeks as Sivana moved up next to her as well. Anja’s fraternal twin sister grasp her sister by the waist as she pressed close to her. They were both wolf now, and Sivana knew well the pull of a powerful Alpha Wolf on its mate for she felt that with her own husband and mate Belen. “Anja... sister what is wrong?”

“He’s... he’s gone Sivana.” Anja whispered softly. “He’s gone.”

“What do you mean gone?” Sivana gasped.

It was Ceuma who saw it first and even though she had never met the man, she did have Anja’s memories up to the point just before the Passing of the Comet and she knew exactly who Martin Leonidas was. As she clung tightly to Joci’s hand, her own eyes were sweeping the crowd around them and trying to detect any danger, her jade green eyes fell upon one of the many large monitors dotting the promenade that displayed Netnews Channels for reports from around the Union twenty-nine hours a day. Her eyes grew wide when she saw the monitor and the picture on it. She recognized the images from Sparta on Earth, for Joci’s mother had always talked of one day going there and walking among the city streets that were home to the King and so many of their people who were just as traditional as she was. She didn’t hesitate and yanked on Joci’s arm.

“Joci... Joci the monitor!” She hissed in a disbelieving tone.

Joci turned his head to the large screen as well and she watched his eyes go wide as he saw what was happening. “Atropos!” He barked out as he moved closer to the monitor which was only a few meters away. Men and women were crowded around it watching the events unfold hundreds of light years away. “Atropos look!”

Atropos lifted his eyes and saw where Joci was going, and his dark blue orbs acted in a similar manner when he saw what was on the screen. He released Anja’s arms to Sivana and Eurin and stepped closer, coming up beside Joci and Ceuma.

“...unimaginable has happened.” The female elven reporter was speaking. That a battle was raging all around her was obvious to even the most idiotic person as they saw weapons fire and the uniforms of Durcunusaan troops in the background. There were flashes of wolves in the picture as well as they fell upon what could only be Kavalian troops, tearing flesh from bodies, blood splattering the ground. “The members of the Durcunusaan protecting the King have gone insane! Just seconds ago they witnessed the assassination of their beloved King and now they have... they are attacking the Kavalian troops responsible for this action in what can only be called a berserker rage!”

Atropos looked at Joci with stunned eyes and turned quickly to look at Anja, who was still slumped in her sister’s arms and shaking her head slowly back and forth.

“...don’t know if anything else is happening here in Sparta or across the Union, but it appears as if the Kavalian Federation is launching a coordinated attack against the Union government and doing so in a brutal manner. King Leonidas was assassinated only moments ago while trying to draw the attackers away from the men and women with him. There appears to have been some sort of running battle from the home of Lieutenant Governor Tarifa which culminated here in this square with the death of the King. Behind me you can see others who are attempting to save the life of Queen Aricia who was gravely injured in the attack.”

The elven female ducked at the sound of a nearby explosion as the camera shifted its axis and centered on a red haired elf not far from them who was on her knees next to a prone body with raven black hair. Atropos recognized the biogenically altered Kavalian female Jalersi beside her, helping her in any way she could, while Isra, Tarifa, Ardis and two Kavalian men he didn't know covered them with P190A3s. He saw the larger of the two Kavalians lift his 190 and send out a short burst that the camera followed just as quickly and Atropos saw a Kavalian soldier flung from his feet as the well aimed burst tore apart his chest.

“General Simpson is among those Lycavorians here who have gone crazy. He could do nothing to stop them as the Kavalians killed the King. It is mayhem here! There is... there is blood is everywhere! Screaming and shouting is everywhere! Civilians are pouring into the area, the majority of them armed and in one case we witnessed a Kavalian being beaten to death with clubs in the street! It is chaos! The Kavalians are firing indiscriminately into groups of people before finally being brought down by survivors or some Durcunusaan troop in wolf form! Casualties are very heavy! We will try move closer to where a group of Durcunusaan have gather around the remains of their King and...”

Atropos could only stand there in open mouth shock as they watched. He heard the snorting sound next to him and turned his head to see the older Hadarian male next to him.

“It's about time someone got rid of that brute of a King!” He spoke arrogantly looking at the cloaked Atropos and not realizing who he was talking too. “He would have led us to ruin along with our whore Queen! The Kavalians will make fine allies!”

Atropos was a man who did not often lose his temper. He was known to be like a rock to so many people and the consummate professional in all that he did. Atropos however, he was no different than any others, he just controlled it better. At least up until today. Atropos reached up slowly and drew back his cowl from his head, watching as the man's eyes grew wide in horror as he recognized him. He opened his mouth to stammer something but Atropos didn't give him the chance. His right hand lashed out and his closed fist slammed into the Hadarian's face, easily crushing his nose and splitting his lips open. The power of the blow sent the man to the ground like a rock, his eyes dazed and in terrible pain. Atropos didn't stop there and drew out his K12 from his thigh holster and leveling it at the man's head.

“Can you heal your own death Hadarian?” Atropos snarled viciously leaning over and pressing the barrel of the K12 to the man's forehead and watching his eyes go wide in terror as he gazed up at Atropos's wolf eyes and fully extended wolf fangs. “He... he was my King! Our King!” He screamed as men and women both scrambled away from them in shock. “And my Queen is no whore!” Atropos brought his K12 whipping across the man's face, easily slicing open his cheek and breaking his jaw with a loud popping sound.

In his rage, which Eurin and Zaniai were watching but doing nothing to stop, he almost didn't hear the insistent chiming of his implant and he reached up almost in a dreamlike state and tapped his jaw.

“Atropos!” Admiral Omore's voice erupted into his COM from high above them on the SPIRIT OF HADARIA. “Atropos are you there?”

“Admiral!” Atropos gasped bringing his hand up. “Admiral is it...?”

“Yes! It's true damn it! Joarl has sent out the Alpha Storm Alarm! He is unable to contact Queen For'mya or Prime Minister Deia at the Senate Building! We have lost contact with Queen Dysea and Queen Isabella on Kranek! Andro and his siblings are off the board! We don't know where they are! This is a systematic attack against the royal family Atropos! You must get to the spaceport and get out of there now! The Kavalian Fleet Group is only nine minutes away from weapons range! They already have troops on the ground! We must get Anja off the planet now Atropos! Now! She may be the only remaining member of the Royal family who is not... who is not dead!”

“We... we are only a short distance away!” Atropos stammered as his emotions churned. He turned to look at Joci who was listening as well, a similar look of horror on his face. “We are moving now!” He spoke as he holstered his K12.

He turned back to the Hadarian man on the ground at his feet, his face bloody and his eyes glazed over. “You are a fool Hadarian! The Kavalians will enslave your people! When we return... and we will return, I hope to meet you igord! For I will laugh at you!” Atropos lashed out with his booted foot and kicked the man in the side savagely, hearing the satisfying snap of bone, before turning back and moving to Anja's side. “We must go my Queen!” He spoke gently. “We must... I need you to draw upon your will Anja! We need to get off this planet and I need you able to function.”

Anja's jade green eyes lifted to meet his and she stared into his face. "Atropos... Atropos I feel so... so empty! There is nothing... he's gone. Martin is..."

"This is... this is what happens when an Alpha..." Atropos then did something he would never have considered in his life before this very moment. He took Anja's face gently in his large hands and stared at her. "You are still Queen Anja Leonidas! Our Queen! I need you to call forth the Spartan woman in you Anja, the Spartan woman Martin saw within you, within all of you and I need you to hold in your pain! Martin Leonidas was a true Spartan! He would not have chosen weak women for his mates! I need you to push that pain aside now or we will all die here!"

Anja blinked several times and Atropos saw the light of recognition in her eyes. He had often wondered through the years what it was that Martin saw in the women he had chosen to be his mates and Queens, women he adored and cherished more than anything Atropos knew. All of them were elegantly beautiful; all of them had lush, firm bodies that they were not afraid to display in the clothes that they chose to wear. He knew his King could turn all of them to whimpering fools with just a few simple caresses and his aura, and he also knew they were totally uninhibited when it came to their sexual preferences and they did not care who knew. What he saw in Anja's eyes now, what he saw blossom forth at his words, this is what Atropos knew his King saw in them. The strength of will, of purpose and determination. This is what he knew Anja had, what he knew all of the Queens had, and now he saw it coming forth in the direst of situations as she summoned control over her emotions and the Spartan woman in her came rushing back.

Anja reached up and grasped his arms tightly, squeezing her eyes shut for a moment and nodding her head. "What... what do we...?"

"We know nothing of the others yet!" Atropos spoke quickly. "Only that we need to get off this planet before that ronnus Rinard and his Kavalian scum find us."

"Too late!" Joci barked as he unlimbered his 190.

Atropos and Anja both looked to where Joci was turning. Atropos had known if anyone could find them it would be Rinard, the man who had been raised among the vilest of their people, in an empire now long dead for their actions against his sister. And a man who wanted Anja dead almost as badly as Atropos wanted her to remain alive. So while Atropos was angry when it happened, he was not by any means surprised. And judging from Anja's non-reaction in his grasp neither was she. Atropos had to suppress a tight lipped smile even given the situation. He knew what the death of a powerful Alpha wolf could do to his mate, yet this very petite and diminutive five foot three woman; Queen of Hadaria and the Union, with devastating beauty and intelligence; she could be the most lethal, snarling polecat one could cross paths with if she chose to be.

Atropos stopped and rose to his feet pulling Anja with him just as Joci moved in front of them clutching Ceuma's hand and gently moving her behind him protectively. The large ebony skinned Spartan looked out from under his cowl, his wolf eyes sweeping the crowds all around them, sensing some sort of danger just as Atropos and his Queen did. And then they saw them, Hadarian Elder Militia moving in from the sides as well. Rinard was pushing and shoving his way through the crowd, the gasps of surprise and indignation from the Hadarian civilians in his path quite clear as he made directly for where they were standing with a dozen Elder Guard Militia and half a dozen Kavalians behind him. Atropos began to bring his 190 around but felt Anja grasp his arm and shake her head.

[Not yet!] She hissed softly within Mindvoice. [There are too many civilians in the area.]

Atropos met her eyes. [They are not my concern! You are!]

[I know.] Anja said. [They are still my people however, and they are innocent in all this. I will not put them at risk Atropos! We must stall them for a few more moments.]

[Stall them? Why?]

Anja met his eyes. [Miath is coming.]

[He takes too great a risk in flying! You know that!]

[Who said anything about flying?]

The Lycavorian Rinard came to a halt roughly three meters in front of Joci, with what appeared to be a Kavalian officer and senior Elder Guard Militia Officer on either side of him. "Well... well... it appears you will not escape justice after all." Rinard spoke.

"We are fulfilling the terms of Anja's dismissal." Eurin declared stepping up next to Anja and Atropos. "We are leaving."

Rinard shook his head. "I'm sorry... I can't allow that. The Hadarian Arch Ministry and Elder Council have altered the terms. Anja is to be detained and will stand trial for the original charges leveled against her. They have appointed me as their executor and I intend to see her answer for her crimes."

"What about your crimes?" Ceuma spat viciously as she stood next to Joci.

Rinard looked at her. "Ah... yes. Ceuma you call yourself now is it?" He spoke smugly. His gaze turned to Joci who glared at him with dangerous wolf eyes. "Is she still as tight as I remember Joci? She's a clone of Anja, perfect in every way. Doesn't it ever cross your mind that your precious Queen is just as tight as the pussy you fuck when you bed the clone? For all intents and purposes you are fucking your Queen. You should have heard her howl out her delight when I changed her while I was hammering her tight ass into the bed. I didn't think she was going to let me go!"

Joci maintained his control of his anger which was rapidly building. Rinard was trying to goad him into some action, and he was not going to take the bait. Too much was at stake for him to go after the man who was insulting his beautiful Ceuma. He needn't have worried, for Ceuma pressed close to him with a wicked yet cruel smile and looked at Rinard as her hand dropped over Joci's crotch, surprising even him.

"I howl so much louder for my husband Rinard." Ceuma said sweetly. "He is so much more gifted in the cock department... far more than you will ever have and unlike you... he knows how to use it."

Rinard's jaw twitched in anger. "We will see bitch!" He snarled. "I am placing all of you under arrest by order of Chief Minister Wiktor and Elder Buonau. You will come with us now. Peacefully is preferred, but we are more than willing to take you by force."

"You know what is happening!" Atropos barked. "You must have seen it!"

"I know that tukannupae of a King is dead!" Rinard announced. "And I know that pretty soon the Kavalians will control the Union."

Anja stepped around Atropos, her right hand hidden behind his leg and clutching the K12 in her fist. "You knew?" She gasped as realization came to her about so much. "This... this was never about Seanna was it? You never cared for her in the least did you. This has never been about getting back at me. This is about bringing down Martin and the Lycavorian Union!"

Rinard shrugged. "Seanna was a good fuck! That's about it. She loved you too much though. She would never have helped me do what we have done now. She would never have allowed Buonau and Wiktor to bring you down. She would never have taken part in our plans. It was easy to manipulate her mother after she was dead. Pcillany never did care for you. The right words, the right emotion, and pretty soon she was fully onboard. I have waited for the right moment to take from Martin Leonidas what he took from me all those years ago. Now... now I'm going to accomplish that."

"Females are predictable. All females!" The tall Kavalian officer stated in a deep voice that held humor and disgust. "It is why you are fit for nothing more than spreading your legs and giving us more sons."

"You aren't smart enough to have planned all this out by yourself Rinard." Anja quipped, ignoring the Kavalian "You didn't even realize it wasn't me that killed your father, it was Torma. Who is pulling your strings Rinard? Who controls you?"

Rinard laughed softly and shrugged his broad shoulders. "It doesn't matter now. It will no doubt come out eventually." He stated dismissively. "Now that the big bad Martin Leonidas is dead... it opens the door for Pusintin to reclaim the throne of Sparta and the Union."

Anja's eyes grew wider. "What?" She gasped. "Pusintin can never sit on the throne! The Union Senate would never allow it! You are out of your mind!"

"Am I?" Rinard said arrogantly. "Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos is the one who gave them the tools and knowledge of what they needed to do in order to achieve that goal. Now that the King is dead and once they succeed in getting rid of the rest of your putrid offspring that can challenge Pusintin, then it will just be a few of you and Pusintin. And when Pusintin presents his case to the Union Senate... something Laustinos has been helping him to do... they will have to follow your own laws no matter what."

"Laustinos?" Atropos snapped.

"What case?" Anja barked. "He can make no case to reclaim the throne!"

Rinard nodded. "How do you think they got access to Union Jump Gates?" Rinard hissed. "How do you think they knew where everyone was and where to hit you to do the most damage and cause the most confusion? You and your King aren't as smart as you think you are. If you surrender peacefully, I might be able to keep the Kavalians from killing you.” He stated looking at Anja. “Submit to me... and you may just come out of this alive.”

“Submit to you?” Anja snapped.

Rinard nodded. “It’s the only way to save yourself.” He spoke. “I have the Admiral’s word that if you are with me... you will not be killed.”

Anja’s laugh held no mirth in it. “I wouldn’t submit to you on my worst day, after drinking all the alcohol in the universe and if you were the last man in the galaxy!”

Rinard shrugged once more. “It is your choice.”

“This is what you have chosen over your own people?” Atropos asked in disbelief.

“You are not my people!” Rinard shrieked viciously. “She killed my people! Her and that nubous igord of a King!”

“You... you helped them to kill Martin?” Anja asked in a slow raspy voice. Atropos looked at her quickly for he had heard that voice before. It was the voice she used when she could no longer control her fiery temper and was about to spring.

Rinard laughed once more. “It was so easy!” He spat. “The Union believes in freedom so much that it allowed us to use that to help with your destruction! Getting the biogenic clones into Sparta, positioning them just so. Taking out the Drow Intelligence posts you have in The Wilds so they could not warn you about the attack on Kranek. It was all so simple. Now make your decision or all of you will die in the street like the animals you are!” Anja’s head tilted to the side slightly as if she was suddenly detecting a scent on the wind. Rinard saw this and shook his head. “If you call your dragon Anja, he will die the moment he takes to the sky. The Kavalians have T19 Missile Teams set up all around the area.”

Anja brought jade green eyes into focus on him and Rinard watched those eyes change slowly into black outlined wolf eyes. He watched as her fangs slowly extended from beneath her quivering upper lip and he watched her slowly shake her head. “There’s something you should know Rinard.” Anja spoke softly.

“And what is that upae!” He snapped.

“The thing about T19 missiles, they are deadly to a dragon in the sky, but they don’t work for fucking shit on the ground because their guidance systems can’t track below fifty feet! MIATH! NOW!” Anja screamed as her light blue psychic activated instantly.

There were many things that people who were not familiar with dragons did not know. They knew them to be powerful and lethal when flying, devastating creatures when used in ground support of their Bonded Ones. What many forgot was that dragons lived their first few months on the ground until they learned to fly, and they were just as maneuverable and deadly on the ground as they were in the air and in some cases even more so. Miath’s dark green body smashed through the front of the clothing shop only twenty meters from where they all stood. Glass and pieces of stone and thin, shattered steel framework burst forth as his huge body hurtled towards them with a trumpet of unbridled rage at what he felt churning through his bonded sister. What he felt churning through him by default. Something else so many did not know about dragons was that they were just as complex emotionally as any other species, they loved, they feared, they hated. At this moment in time, Miath felt hatred coursing through him the likes of which he had never felt. He knew about what was happening on Earth, he knew everything and his worry for his beloved mate Aelnala, as well as the rage he felt over the agony his sister was experiencing had sent him into a whirlwind fit of destruction. As heads turned to watch Miath with wide frightened eyes, Anja and the others moved.

Anja’s Shi Viska flared to life, appearing from Flat Space a moment after Atropos’s and Joci’s shields. She lifted her arm without thought and launched her shield at the Kavalian officer as she dashed to one side, bringing up her K12. Atropos and Joci, as well as the others of the Durcunusaan detachment simply stood in place and shoved their charges to the ground. All of them had been expecting something, and unlike the Hadarian Elder Militia and Kavalian troops they were ready when that moment came. Miath’s maddening trumpet of anger ended when his right wing came whipping forward and smashed into three Hadarian Elder Militia troops from the side. Their screams of pain grew even louder as bones shattered and their bodies were physically tossed into the air. Anja had told him not to hold back in the least through their bond, and Miath put all four tons of his weight into every sweep of his huge wings, the bone like cartilage running along the front edge of his wings like hardened steel as it crushed whatever it hit. The Kavalians began shouting and yelling as they came face to face with the one thing that their species had a real and uncontrollable inbred fear of. It made killing them so much easier.

Atropos and Joci let their weapons dangle on quick release snaps as Nehtes extended and began stabbing microseconds after Miath's trumpet sounded. Atropos stepped into a piercing thrust, driving his Nehtes through the chest of the nearest Kavalian who was frozen in his spot while launching his shield in the same instant. The screams of the civilians in the area sounded loudly as they scrambled to get out of the way of the battle. The Hadarian Elder Militia died very quickly. None of them had real combat experience in any sense of the word, and now they were facing a dozen well armed and trained Durcunusaan troops whose only goal was to protect their beloved Queen. Most of them fell under the first Shi Viska barrage, heads, arms and even whole bodies cleaved in half or severed completely. The Durcunusaan troops guarding Anja were also enraged over what had transpired and now they were letting it all hang out in anger. Blood splashed wetly on the ground all around the Durcunusaan troops as they too switched to their Nehtes in order to keep from randomly spraying their 190s and possibly injuring innocents. Many of the Elder Militia opted to simply turn and run in the face of such savage anger and skill. Most did not survive.

As Rinard turned back to face Anja, his wolf eyes and fangs now fully exposed, his face took on a look of surprise as the Nehtes impaled him through the upper chest, the broad razor like spearhead bursting out his back just below his left shoulder blade. His wolf eyes grew wide as he saw the petite figure holding that spear in front of him.

Ceuma stood in front of him gripping the Nehtes tightly in her right hand. Her own jade green eyes were now changed, her fangs bared in a savage snarl. Ceuma may have been a clone, but the moment Rinard had changed her, she became far more than he had ever envisioned. He had never taken into account her Hadarian DNA when he left her for dead that day, and he had never taken into account the love Joci had for her. He could only watch as her grip tightened on the shaft of the Nehtes and she ripped it back out of his body, bringing flesh and copious amounts of blood with it. Rinard could only watch in stunned amazement as she twirled the Nehtes expertly in her hand and stepped closer to him as he slumped to his knees, his right hand pressed against the gaping wound in his chest, blood pouring from between his fingers.

"Didn't expect that did you Rinard!" Ceuma snarled viciously as the fighting began to ebb around them. "You may have made me what I am Rinard... but my mate shaped me! He made me a true Lycavorian woman! And now this woman is going to kill you for what you have done! To me! To my husband! To my sisters!" She screamed. Ceuma would not know it until much later, but with those simple words she committed herself to one path in this life. And it was a path she and her adoring mate and husband would embrace.

As Ceuma drew back her arm to plunge her Nehtes into Rinard's unprotected chest a thick arm wrapped around her waist and pulled her along with their momentum. The male Durcunusaan troop ignored her wails of protest as he dragged her with him and began following his fellow detachment members. They had grabbed Eurin and Zaniai after the first few moments of their assault, knowing that they were to be protected at all costs, along with Ceuma. An order from their diminutive Queen they would never think to violate.

The Kavalian officer could only watch from the ground as Miath shredded the last of his men with huge black razor like talons. He was helpless to assist his men, for Anja's Shi Viska had cut through both his legs like a hot knife through butter. He could feel his life ebbing from him, his feline eyes looking down to see one of his legs only a few inches away, the stump still spurting blood. He saw the shadow fall across him and his head twisted up to see Anja step up to him, her Shi Viska returning to her forearm and attaching itself back to the harness she wore on her left arm. Anja looked down at him, her wolf eyes savage, her fangs extended further than even she had ever seen them when not in wolf form.

"Bet you didn't predict that huh motherfucker!" Anja hissed savagely as she brought her K12 up and leveled it at his head. "This is for... this is for taking from me all I have ever loved! I'll find your family you Kavalian bastard! I'll find them and I'll skin every one of them alive for what you have done!"

Anja Leonidas began pulling the trigger on her K12 and didn't stop until four seconds later when the magazine ran dry. The Kavalian's head was no longer recognizable and his broad chest was perforated with twelve plus large caliber holes. She stood above him, her finger still pulling the trigger on the now empty weapon, until Atropos stepped up beside her and his large hand covered hers.

"Anja." He said softly. "My Queen... we must go!"

Anja turned her eyes up and looked at him. His eyes and fangs were still very visible and she saw worry in those dark eyes. Worry for her. Anja felt Miath move up behind her, his talons covered in blood, several long streaks down the left side of his muzzle where he had bitten three Militia troops in half. His psychic shield shimmered brightly, the matching shield around Anja responding to her bonded brother's closeness.

Sister?

Anja's head and eyes turned to look up at him as he dipped his head over her shoulder, his snout close to her, his massive body shielding her as his right wing curled around her and Atropos slowly.

Miath? Anja whispered within Mindvoice.

We... we must go my bonded sister. Miath spoke. Before more of these scum arrive.

Miath I don't know if I can...

Miath leaned his head closer and touched his snout to her forehead. You must sister. If... if you are all that remains... Martin would expect you to carry on. You know this is what he would want. What all of you have spoken of in the past.

Anja's eyes closed at the feelings of his smooth scales against her cheek and she nodded as the tears came once more. You are... you are right.

Let us leave this place and salvage what we can sister. Miath spoke softly. It is what we need to do now.

Anja reached up and stroked the underside of his muzzle as she blinked several times and turned to Atropos. "The others?"

"Already entering the spaceport!" Atropos answered. "We must go now! Admiral Omore is screaming for us that we are out of time."

"I intend to return Atropos!" Anja stated as her voice lost its soft edge and turned hard. "I will return and take back what is mine!"

Atropos nodded as he took her arm. "And I will be beside you when we do." He stated unequivocally. "For now... let us leave."

Anja nodded slowly and Atropos began pulling her towards the spaceport. Miath turned his head and let his grey eyes sweep across the promenade. Hadarian civilians were beginning to come out of where they had been hiding while the battle raged, wide eyed and still in a state of shock.

Be strong men and women of Hadaria. You will need much strength in the months ahead if you are to survive. Miath spoke softly.

Miath turned and followed Anja and Atropos.

The future of Hadaria had changed in only a few short moments, and that future did not appear to be bright.

RITAAH

Athani found her husband sitting off by himself on the large fallen tree staring off into the stars of the night sky. Her vertically slit feline like blue/green eyes spied him easily even in the darkness. She had been with Mican for the last several hours ignoring everything else that went on around her. Athani's own emotions were running a gambit all their own as she discovered she had a brother who she had never known about. A brother that had been used and discarded by their father just as she had been. She found Mican to be extremely intelligent and protective of her. He had known about her and Jalersi, but because of his situation in leading the escaped Kavalian biogenic clones, there was no way he could contact them and let them know what their father was truly doing. When he had found out she defected and married Resumar Leonidas Mican told her that he had had a party with Na'lia and their daughter to celebrate her escape and to hope that one day Jalersi would also have her eyes open.

Athani had only begun to drift when she felt the churning of Resumar's emotions along his MV shields. They were skills she was still discovering since becoming his wife, but she knew if she could feel them so easily something had to be wrong. Mican had seen this distraction in her and ended their reunion with a bear hug and a promise that they would sit more and try to discover a way to let Jalersi know. Athani had moved quickly now, Cemath telling her within Mindvoice that something was wrong and Resumar was shutting even him out. It was easy enough to find him, for while she had undergone biogenic treatments to rid herself of the fur that normally covered a Kavalian female's body; she still retained the instincts and skills of their feline species. Her sense of smell was not as acute or developed as a pure blood Lycavorian, but it was enough when combined with her incredible eyesight to find him easily. That and the fact she would always be drawn inexplicably to his male wolf aura now that he had claimed her. Unlike Pusintin, who used his aura on her to elicit actions she could not control, Resumar used his aura to incite her to new levels of pleasure she had never known existed. As Athani came up behind him, she sensed something else radiating from her handsome husband. It was a sense of foreboding and sorrow. Her keen feline like eyes could just detect that he was also shivering, even though the temperature this night was relatively cool for a jungle planet.

"Resumar?" Athani whispered as she came up next to him and rested her hand on his shoulder. Athani's eyes grew wide when his head turned to face her and she saw that he had been crying. This stunned her, for she had never seen a man cry before and she knew immediately that something was terribly wrong.

"Resumar my love... what is wrong?" She gasped as he drew her into his embrace and buried his head in her abdomen. Athani didn't hesitate and she pulled his head tighter, dropping her cheek to the top of his dark hair, while his powerful arms crushed her to him. The tears had already come and gone she decided, for he simply held her body to him drawing deeply of her scent, and letting his love for her flow through the connection they had within Mindvoice. It was not something Athani had felt before this night, and it took her breath away with the intensity. Finally she took his head in her hands and drew his head back, looking at him with wide blue/green eyes. "Resumar... what?"

"My father is dead." Resumar stated flatly.

Athani's eyes grew even wider if that was possible and her intake of breath was very audible in the silent darkness around them. "What?" She finally gasped. "How... how could that be? How? How do you know this?"

"We... my family... we are able to sense one another within Mindvoice." He told her.

"You have told me this." Athani said. "But..."

"Though we can not communicate directly because of the distance I could still feel him. I can feel nothing from him now Aryschanne." Resumar spoke softly. "Even if he was seriously injured I would still feel his presence. That is how powerful he is. I feel nothing now. It is empty and... his presence is completely gone. My mothers and brothers and sisters are... they are in turmoil. Especially Andro. It is the only explanation. Nothing else could make them send out the tremors within Mindvoice that I am feeling. Not over so great a distance."

"My love... how... who would, who could kill your father!" Athani asked.

Resumar shook his head. "I don't know. He has many enemies."

"Resumar... we are talking about your father here!" Athani protested. "Who would dare attack him? No one is that foolish!"

"Whoever it is... they have succeeded where many have failed." Resumar said. "Which means they are a grave threat to us. I..." Resumar turned his head when he heard the snapping of branches and he saw the huge form of Avi making his way up the slight hill. It was hard not to discern the hulking Avatar, and while he usually moved with a grace many did not think he had, at the moment Avi was obviously not concerned about making noise. Resumar got to his feet holding Athani's arm as Avi trotted up and came to a halt.

-Resumar Leonidas... I... there is something you must know. Avatar 341 and I were monitoring coded transmissions and we intercepted... Avi stopped talking for a brief moment and Resumar thought he looked more human than he had ever looked before.

"My father is dead isn't he Avi?" Resumar spoke.

Avi's small red eyes met Resumar's. -The Alpha Storm Alert went out sixteen point three minutes ago. You have felt his... his passing within Mindvoice haven't you Resumar Leonidas?-

Athani looked up at her husband's face as he stood there silently. She could see the turmoil and grief in his eyes, yet behind those powerful emotions she could also see a unique kind of strength that Athani had never seen before. She had seen many strong men in her life, physically strong men anyway, but not until she had been accepted so completely into the Leonidas family had she come to know the true meaning of strength. Strength of will; strength of purpose; strength of mind and body as well as love. She felt the tears come now for she had only known Martin Leonidas for a short time, yet even in that short time and regardless of the fact that she was Kavalian, he had accepted and treated her better than her own father had for so many years.

“What else did you learn Avi?” Resumar asked in a choked up raspy voice.

Avi looked at Athani for a moment his face emotionless. –It was a coordinated effort of attacks by Kavalians of the Puma Bane Pride- He spoke.

Athani gasped in shocked and her hands came up to her mouth. “No!” She hissed.

-Contact has been lost with your mothers on Kranek and Hadaria. Aricia has been seriously injured according to the reports. The Durcunusaan have had no contact with either your mother For'mya or Prime Minister Deia either. It appears right now that they struck in several locations within Sparta and even in The Wilds as well. Over a dozen of the Union's Drow outposts have fallen silent.-

“Andro?” Resumar asked as he saw his Uncle Vonis blurring through the trees towards him, Dario close behind with Mican and the biogenically altered Kavalian female Channa who had become his constant shadow as he taught her everything he could about her new bonded with Mirra.

-Avatar 341 was able to pick up several transmissions from the LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser HARBINGER only moments before I came up here to you. It appears your brother is enroute back to Earth. He was able to rescue the survivors from the Drow outpost on Iraruzu and was informed of the attack on Earth as he was returning to Kranek. The transmission stated that he would arrive in ten hours and that help was moving to Iraruzu-

Avi paused for a brief moment as Vonis and Dario came up to them, and Resumar saw Channa clinging to Dario's hand now. Mican moved up next to Athani without question.

“Help?” Resumar asked.

-VORTEX Cruiser 341's sensors are calibrated to a different quantum phase than normal sensors. 341 detected a massive spike in the quantum flux dimension field.-

“What... what does that mean?” Athani asked.

Resumar nodded. “How many Avi?” He asked.

-Based on the size of the spike... the entire Attack Wing- Avi answered. –If this is the case, the circumstances for revealing their existence now must be dire-

“Andro gave the order.” Resumar said. “And he is returning to Earth because he knows he must step forward.”

“Resumar I...” Vonis stammered.

“Cousin?” Dario gasped.

“Who has done this?” Mican demanded with real emotion.

Avi turned to look at him. –Members of the Puma Bane Pride of Kavalians. That much has been confirmed from intercepted transmissions by Avatar 341-

“My father?” Mican gasped with wide eyes of disbelief. “Has he... has he lost his mind? There can... there can be only be one response to...”

-Intercepted Netnews broadcasts have shown the battle live. It clearly shows several Kavalians, including your sister Athani Leonidas- Avi said.

“Jalersi!” Athani gasped. “Avi she wasn't...”

-The footage from the battle that was shown clearly showed General/Colonel Simpson and Anuk. Tarifa, Isra and Ardis. There was also your sister Jalersi and two Kavalian males shown. All of them were seen defending Anuk Simpson as she was treating your mother Aricia. We are continuing to monitor, but once I witnessed... once I saw Martin Leonidas fall I...- Avi stopped talking now and looked at Resumar.

“You can say it Avi.” Resumar spoke.

-I felt the need to come out here and tell you to comfort you- Avi replied.

“Avi... can I communicate directly with my brother on Spartan 11 from here?” Resumar asked.

-A minor adjustment to the transmission node to sync up the encryption I installed in your personal Com units is all that is needed- Avi answered.

“Can it be detected?” Resumar asked.

-Unlikely. It would require that Kavalian...- Avi tilted his head to the side as if hearing something no one could. -It will be unnecessary now Resumar Leonidas-

“What? Why?” Res asked.

-Avatar 341 is informing me that there is an incoming transmission from a Mark Two Neural Booster. It is being directed from the PILLAR OF FAITH- Avi told him. -He is quite excited Resumar. He has not seen this level of Mindvoice power in one place since he left the Pralor homeworld- “Andro.” Resumar nodded as he broke into a run for the entrance to VORTEX Cruiser 341.

EARTH SPARTA OLD DISTRICT

Pian looked at the Durcunusaan soldier as he tore a strip of crimson cloth from the cape he wore and finished tying it around Pian's arm. He looked up at the tall Kavalian, his dark blond fur matted with dirt and stained with the blood of his Queen.

“Don't take that off until you get to a secure location!” The Durcunusaan troop shouted at him. “Either of you!” He looked at where another Durcunusaan was doing the same thing for Jiss. “We don't know how many Kavalians are here on Earth and we don't want you targeted by mistake!”

Pian nodded quickly, his combat senses still alert and active as his blue eyes scanned the area. “We will do as you say!” He barked. “How do you...?”

“You are killing your own kind with that 190 you got sir. If you were our enemy, you'd already be dead. And you... you are protecting our Queen!” The Durcunusaan looked at Anuk as she clenched her teeth and continued working on the inert form of Aricia on the ground. “Colonel?” He shouted at her. “Medivac is inbound!”

Anuk ignored him as intent on her task as she was. She had torn Aricia's upper body armor off her to find three entry wounds. Two of the projectiles had lost almost all velocity after hitting the edges of the body armor where they came together under the arm. They had only penetrated into Aricia's flesh perhaps an inch and Anuk was able to quickly use her fingers to pry them out. The third projectile however, that was trickier. It had entered just under her armpit, the one area on the side that had no body armor. She must have had her arms in the air at the exact instant the Kavalian fired for him to have gotten this lucky. Based on the blood oozing from between her lips, the projectile no doubt hit at least one lung. Anuk had to move quickly before her healing system began to close the wound and heal her body around wherever the projectile may have ended up. Anuk tossed down the laser scalpel and looked at Jalersi.

“Jalersi... you have to help me!” She snapped.

Jalersi was no stranger to battlefield injuries and she had immediately begun helping Anuk as they took her body armor off. “Tell me!” She barked out, her sensitive feline ears still ringing from the many explosions that had gone off around her.

“I don’t have my normal medical bag! I need to reach in and find the slug!” Anuk yelled her own ears also ringing. “Her Lycavorian healing system will act quickly, so you have to hold apart the incision until I find the slug!”

Jalersi didn’t hesitate and reached out. The incision Anuk had made was almost three inches long and she gently used her fingers to pry open the wound further. Anuk lifted the portable scanner and held it over the wound and Jalersi heard her cuss. “What?” She gasped.

“It’s lodged against her heart wall!” Anuk snapped. “It went clean through one lung and nicked the other. It must have bounced off a rib to end up where it is!”

“Can you get it out?” Jalersi barked.

“If I try it could kill her!” Anuk answered.

“Do it!” The female voice spoke from behind them.

Anuk turned quickly knowing that no one was getting close to them with all the Durcunusaan pouring into the area. Her cerulean blue eyes grew wide when she saw Duewa.

“Duewa!” She exclaimed as she watched Thoti help lower Duewa to the ground next to her.

“Perform the procedure Anuk!” Duewa had to raise her voice slightly to be heard over the sounds of weapons fire all around them in the distance. “I will insure any damage that is done is healed.”

Anuk looked at her wide eyed. She knew Duewa had been turned only a few days ago and she still looked somewhat weak. “Duewa... are you sure? You are still weak and...”

Duewa nodded. “Yes. Thoti turned me... he did not kill me!” She replied. “I am weak... but I can still use my healing powers!”

Thoti leaned over and kissed her head, nuzzling her cheek and ear. “Do nothing foolish my mate!” He barked out. “And remain with Anuk and the others until they get Aricia back to safety!”

Duewa looked at him with those beautiful soft green eyes and nodded. “Go! Our children are safe and I am safe here!” She exclaimed. “Fache needs you more than I do right now!” Thoti nodded and in a silver/white flash the large dark furred wolf was sprinting off towards the sounds of the fighting. Duewa turned back to Anuk who was looking at her. “I made him bring me! Aricia may be the only Queen we have left alive and I will not allow her to die!”

“For’mya is with Deia!” Anuk exclaimed.

Duewa shook her head. “There is no answer from either of their details at the Senate Building.” She replied. “A Durcunusaan detachment was finally mustered and dispatched there moments ago! The Kavalians hit us in over half a dozen locations Anuk! They targeted many people and it appears they have succeeded in many cases!” Duewa looked at Jalersi who was staring at her. “I only state fact and...”

Jalersi shook her head. “It doesn’t matter!” She barked. “Let us save Aricia and then get her out of here before something more horrible befalls us and we lose the opportunity to make my father pay for his lies and deceit!”

Duewa nodded and looked at Anuk. “I will heal as you enter the wound!” She stated. “Jalersi... you must keep the two edges of the wound open. Anuk... you know what to avoid as you enter her chest cavity. We must be quick about it before her healing factor fully kicks in. With the pureness of Aricia’s blood, it will be three times as powerful as normal and even harder to compensate for!”

Anuk lifted the odd looking instrument with tapered plastic coated ends on seven inch long thin arms. “I’m ready!” She announced.

Duewa extended her hand over the top of where Anuk was going to enter Aricia’s chest and nodded. “Do it Anuk.” She said.

SPARTA OLD DISTRICT

Danny had finally changed back to human form, his uniform saturated in blood and fur from the seven or eight Kavalians he had slaughtered with his teeth and talons. He had never felt the rage seething through him right now before. It was a cold and calculated rage and anger. Daniel Simpson loved his blood brothers, but Martin had been his source of inspiration and strength through all these years together. The ties they had formed would never be broken, and as Danny's yellow outlined dark eyes swept over the area he was in, his wolf fangs fully extended and almost as long as they were in wolf form Danny allowed his eyes to fall on where almost twenty Durcunusaan troops were circling the area where Martin's body had fallen. The smell of plasma and burnt cinder and wood filled the air all around them, making it nearly impossible to pick out individual scents. He knew that many of the Lycavorians in the area would spend days trying to get the smell of death and blood from their nostrils. The plasma mortars the Kavalians had used had the nasty habit of rendering the Lycavorian sense of smell nearly impossible to use since it burned the very air around it, singeing the tiny hairs inside noses and such. He also knew from chatter on his implant that a STRIKER AT was inbound to their location to gather the remains of his brother's fallen body. He had no doubts they would treat it with reverent care as they took him back to the Durcunusaan base.

Daniel Simpson was also a Spartan by birth and upbringing, and like Martin he had embraced their heritage completely when they finally discovered who and what they were. He had lost a beloved brother, but now Danny needed to act as Martin would expect him to act. Officially there were nearly a dozen officers, who all outranked him within the Union, but all of them knew what he could do and that he was considered by the King as his only true brother and no one would dare challenge Daniel Simpson. His wolf eyes spied Fache nearby, kneeling on one knee, his face in his hands. His uniform was also splattered generously with blood, for like Daniel and roughly twenty-five others nearby, when Martin had fallen they had all gone into a terrible berserker like rage. Danny sprinted over to where Fache knelt and put his hand on the man's shoulder.

"Fache?" He spoke softly.

The Commander of the Royal Villa Durcunusaan Detachment for the last twenty years lifted his head and looked at Daniel. His own eyes and fangs were still visible and this close up Danny could see he was trembling with rage and shame at what he had allowed to happen. Fache came to his feet quickly. "Gen... General I must request..."

"Stow it!" Danny barked. "This is not your fault! This is no one's fault! The Kavalians have been planning this for some time and they had help!"

Fache's eyes narrowed. "Help?" He asked.

"It's the only way they could have gotten the plans on how we would respond from the main base!" Danny snapped. "If all the shouting on the COM I have been hearing is accurate, they've had teams hit at least six other locations across Sparta! I don't know what for! That is what I need you to find out!"

"General I..."

"Damn it Fache!" Danny snarled loudly. "This isn't over! They've killed... they've killed Martin! We need to make sure they don't kill anymore of his family! You call out the entire division if you have too! Mobilize every Spartan on Earth! I want every Leonidas within the city limits of Sparta covered like a nubous blanket five minutes ago! Joarl is reporting he has lost contact with the Durcunusaan details of both For'mya and Deia at the Senate building!"

Fache nodded. "Thoti dispatched a company there before coming here!"

"Send detachments to Gorgo and Riall's home first! If they came after Marty... then they probably went after Gorgo as well! Then add another two companies to the bunker where the children are!" Danny ordered. "This was a systematic attack against the Leonidas family and anyone even remotely connected to them! We need to find out how far it extends! Contact Panos, Lynwe, Selene, Tareif... all of them!"

"Who... who would help them to do this?" Fache nearly screamed. "What traitor to their species would take part in this?"

“When you find him or her Fache... you save them for us you hear me?” Danny snarled viciously. “We will show them how Spartans deal with traitors!”

As with all the Spartans, a cold and calculating anger now surged through Fache. He nodded his head and replaced his Spartan helm on his head securely. “Consider it done!” He snapped.

“Get over to the Senate Building and make sure For'mya and Deia are secure! Report to me when you are with them!” Danny said.

“General... Daniel... what are you going to do?” Fache asked.

Danny turned back to look at where the Durcunusaan were gingerly placing the remains of their King in a clean white sheet that they had somehow acquired. They were wrapping him tightly, so it appeared as if his body was in one piece even though they all knew it was not. Danny could see dozens of civilians standing around, some of them with bloodstains on their clothes, some of the older women weeping at the scene before them. Many of the older Spartans were keeping a loose perimeter around the Durcunusaan and allowing them to conduct themselves with some measure of honor and grace. Danny could see several Netnews people standing among the crowds, their remote drones sending out live footage to their main broadcasting stations.

“I’m going to take... I’m going to take my brother home.” Danny said softly.

BELID

As'hia opened her eyes slowly against the warmth of the sun and as she shifted slightly she felt the powerful arm pull her lithe half elven body closer, pressing her naked flesh against the equally naked flesh that was spooning her from behind. She felt the large hand squeeze her firm breast, her stiff nipple a burning hard point in the palm of the hand and as the memories of the last few hours came rushing back to her, a smile of complete and utter bliss washed over her face. She rested both her hands over that large one and pulled Lynom’s powerful arm tighter around her chest as she burrowed back against his naked body. What had begun as a simple kiss had quickly developed into the most sexual and scorching hot five hours of her young life, and As'hia never wanted it to end.

Six hours earlier

She remembered falling asleep in his embrace so As'hia wasn't surprised when she woke up still wrapped within those powerful arms. She was surprised at the position she was in as her dark eyes opened slowly, but as her eyes focused and she saw his face she didn't move for fear of waking him. It was easy for her to discern he was still sleeping by the rhythmic rise and fall of his broad chest. Sometime during their sleep she had shifted position, turning to face him and burying her face against the side of his thick neck. His verbena scent filled her nostrils and wafted delightfully to every portion of her mind. One of her legs was stretched over the top of his long legs, and she could feel his arm wrapped around her back, his large hand resting on her firm ass cheek. She lifted her head slightly and stared at his face, her wolf eyes easily picking up the contours of his strong jaw and medium sized lips. The bone spurs along his jaw were easy to pick out, but if anything they made him appear more handsome to her. She had seen him when he was angry, and the visage he presented with his vampiric fangs and the Immortal bone spurs was not something she would want directed at her. Yet resting peacefully as he was now, the bone spurs actually enhanced his rugged handsomeness to her. As'hia was half wolf, and since her mother was the Lycavorian, she inherited all of the traits of a female wolf. These traits included knowing when the scent of a male was telling her he was the one. Powerful female Alphas could easily detect this in the scent of the male they chose as their mates. Her mother told As'hia it was something different, sharper and more pungent. She had smelled this in her elven father and As'hia's mother had not hesitated when the confident and well-respected elven officer had asked to court her.

As'hia detected that from Lynom right now. His verbena scent was more pungent than any alpha wolf that had ever shown an interest in her. More distinctive than any elven officer who had asked to court her. No matter what had occurred over the last months, As'hia's wolf instincts were telling her, screaming at her actually, that this was the man who would claim her. Her mother had always told her, her elven father agreeing completely, that her instincts would almost always be right and to follow them no matter where they led her.

As'hia's wolf instincts had led her into the arms of this half Akruxian Immortal, and it had taken this long for those same instincts to beat her natural elven fear of Immortals out of her and allow her to see Lynom was very different. As'hia reached up with her hand and extended her index finger, slowly drawing it across his slightly parted lips. She wanted to taste those lips in the worse way, and she was no longer going to deny her instincts. She shifted slightly; lifting her lithe body further up on Lynom's chest and seeing his eyes flutter open. Before he knew what was happening or could say anything, As'hia lowered her lips to his and kissed him tenderly. Lynom's dark eyes flew open in surprise, his arms lifting off the ground in stunned shock, but he could not deny the seething desire her kiss was bringing out in him. Like his brother Tir'ut, Lynom had never been with a woman. Those on Kranek had returned to the old ways of the Akruxian Immortal society which frowned on sexual relations outside of true unions between partners. It was one of the reasons his father took his mother as his Blessed Wife so quickly after settling on Kranek. Unlike his brother however, Lynom had watched pirated Vid Movies from The Wilds and read books that described the art of kissing as well as many other items, so he at least had some idea of how to do these things. At the moment however, as he watched As'hia lift her face from his, he was very lost about what to do.

“As'hia... As'hia what are you...?” He stammered.

As'hia opened her dark eyes and looked at him while she licked her soft lips, savoring the taste of his lips and committing it to her memory. “Yummy!” She spoke seductively.

“As'hia are you feeling...”

As'hia grinned in the moonlight and Lynom's heart skipped several beats as her beautiful eyes sparkled. “Surprised you didn't I?” She spoke confidently.

Lynom's eyes were wide as he nodded quickly. “That... that is putting it mildly.” He said in response. “Why... why did you do that?”

“I wanted to taste your lips.” As'hia answered.

“Why?”

As'hia leaned her head forward and brushed her nose against his cheek gently, feeling the bone spurs press against her skin and feeling deliciously electric jolts hum through her because of it. “I can smell your desire for me Lynom.” She whispered.

Lynom was also not as dense as his brother. “I have... I have made that perfectly clear Ssin'urn 'anon. I do not understand what...”

As'hia took his face in her hands and met his eyes. She used her thumbs to traced his jaw line and rub over the tops of the bone spurs they could reach and she saw his cheeks twitch ever so slightly. “They are sensitive?” She asked him in curious surprise.

Lynom nodded slowly. “Yes... at times.” He answered.

“Like now?” As'hia asked teasingly.

“Yes like now!” He hissed feeling his blood beginning a slow burn. “What... what has gotten into you? This is not what I have come to expect from you Ssin'urn 'anon.”

“My mother always told me when I meet the man I will spend the rest of my days with... I will not be able to get the smell of him out of my mind.” As'hia spoke softly. “She said it would stay with me no matter where I went and no matter how far apart we were. It is part of how a female wolf chooses who she will mate with.”

“That is very... that is fascinating As'hia... but what does it have to do with...?” He began to speak.

“Don't you see you big Immortal fool?” As'hia exclaimed cutting off his words. “It's you! Ever since I smelled you that first time I haven't been able to get your scent out of my head!”

Lynom looked at her with wide eyes. “I... I thought you hated me?” He finally was able to spit out.

As'hia shook her two-toned blond/black hair. “That... that was my elven side battling with the wolf within me. Lycavorians are not as reserved as elves when it comes to expressing what they want or need. I was trying to resolve what one part of me wanted and the other feared Lynom.” She explained.

“Ssin'urn 'anon... I don't... I don't want one side of you.” Lynom said softly. “I want both sides of you. I don't want you battling your feelings or...”

As'hia put a finger to his lips and stopped his words once more. “My wolf side finally got my elven side to see that we both want you Lynom. I am stubborn and willful, and it took me this long to come to terms with how I feel about you.”

Lynom's eyes narrowed. "Do you make it a habit of interrupting everyone who is trying to talk with you?" He snapped.

As'hia grinned and nodded her head. "My mother says it was one of my most annoying traits when I was a child."

"It is still annoying." Lynom spoke.

"Are you going to complain about my willful attitude Lynom, son of Cha'talla, or are you going to..." As'hia's eyes flew open when Lynom suddenly sat up and his hands clamped on her hips. He covered her lips with his own and kissed her.

Oh... did he ever kiss her.

As'hia whimpered loudly as her arms went around his broad shoulders and she kissed him back. Her wolf blood ignited instantly at the new sensations ripping through her from just his kiss, and she wrapped her legs around his waist as he jerked her to the side and rolled over on top of her.

As'hia groaned as he deepened the kiss and she couldn't help her toes from curling in on themselves within her combat boots. No man had ever kissed her like this before and it was sending every one of her senses into orbit. She felt a familiar surge in her lower abdomen, and she became very wet between her thighs as his hands moved up the outside of her hips slowly, dragging his fingers along the fabric of the shirt she wore.

As'hia whimpered even louder as his hands came together over her chest and he lifted his upper body from atop her and with one powerful pull Lynom shredded her shirt from her exposing her naked breasts. That he did not stop kissing her registered resolutely in her mind and As'hia became even wetter. She began to pull at his own shirt urgently with her hands, basking in the divine sensations his kiss was causing. That was when his fingers dragged along the outside of her breasts and up along her shoulders until they came to rest on either side of her face. As'hia inherited very sensitive ears from her father and up until this moment in time, no male, whether Lycavorian or elven had ever paid enough attention to her elven ears. Lynom obviously had other intentions. When his fingers touched the tips of her two-inch high elven ears As'hia's eyes flew open and when he dragged those same fingers languorously down the outer ridge of her ears As'hia's lips tore away from his and her head flew back as she screamed in an orgasm the likes of which she had never experienced before.

"Aaarghhhhhh! Lynommmmm!" As'hia's voice echoed across the top of the mountain they were on.

Lynom watched her beautiful face as her eyes blinked rapidly in unrestrained bliss, her fingers digging into the back of his shoulders on his bare skin and no doubt leaving marks with the strength she was exhibiting. Her lush body bucked against him and he held her tightly, proud of his power over her and what he could make her feel. Lynom intended for it to be just the beginning. As'hia was the most beautiful thing in the universe to him now, and suddenly he understood what his father and brother saw when they looked at their Blessed Wives. She had already proven her strength of will by enduring what she had endured up until now. Lynom had every intention of erasing any memories of the horrors that had befallen her. He was going to love her with all that he was and not stop until she could scream his name no more. He watched as she slumped back to the blanket they were on, her chest rising and falling and making her firm breasts stand out proudly, her nipples begging for attention.

Lynom dropped his head between those proud mounds and dragged his tongue up between them tasting the sweat of her body and feeling her blood pulsing beneath that same flawless skin. "As'hia?" He spoke when he lowered his face back in front of hers.

Her head turned and her eyes focused on him. "You... you evil... evil Immortal bastard!" She hissed at him. Lynom's eyes grew concerned for a split second before her hands began pulling at his shirt even more frantically and she fastened her lips onto his intent on stealing his breath away. As he maneuvered his body so that she could finally pull the shirt off, he felt her hands drift along his sides and then across his broad chest and he heard her whine in need. "Stand up Lynom!" she gasped out.

Lynom hesitated for only a moment and then slowly got to his feet in front of her. He watched her lift her body to a sitting position and she began to frantically pull at his pants. As'hia was not going to be deterred and Lynom could only watch as she yanked down his pants and exposed his already hard fourteen-inch cock to her mouthwatering lips. As'hia gasped as her hands wrapped around the huge cock's base with barely a pause and she held it pointing straight out at her face. A fire unlike any she had ever felt swept through her as she gazed at all Lynom had to offer her. Her drenched pussy was once more becoming aroused even so soon after the crushing orgasm she had just experienced. Her fatigue pants were beyond soaked, and while she gripped

Lynom's massive cock in one hand she began to unfasten her own pants. Her wolf senses were more alive at this moment than they had ever been before. As'hia had always thought a male Lycavorian would be the one to make her feel these things with his aura, yet as she inhaled deeply of Lynom's verbena scent, the wolf blood in her was going mad. And her elven genes were simply screaming out in delight. She finally was able to kick off her pants and she looked up into Lynom's face, seeing his teeth clenched as she brought her other hand back to his cock and stroked him. She could feel the throbbing veins in his shaft, feel the enormous heat that his cock was putting off, and feel the wetness at the tip when precum oozed from the huge flared head. As'hia bent her head quickly and licked the head of his cock firmly, swirling her moist tongue all around the head tasting him, teasing him, and feeling his powerful legs tighten and go rigid. As'hia couldn't begin to put into words how badly she wanted to taste him completely. The vibrations and emotions she was feeling now were all new to her. The force with which she desired Lynom surpassed anything she had ever imagined she could feel. As she opened her lips to take his cock into her mouth, Lynom's hands gripped the sides of her head. Her eyes grew a little wider when she thought he was going to ram his massive tool into her throat, but his hands kept her from taking him into her mouth with gentle pressure instead and she glanced up at him, never releasing his thick cock from her hands.

"No!" Lynom hissed.

As'hia was all about need right now. "Lynom... Lynom I want... I want to taste you!" She gasped.

Lynom dropped to his knees in front of her quickly, her hands never releasing his or ceasing their stroking of his throbbing shaft and he looked down into her face, her bright eyes wide and staring at him. Even kneeling in front of her, because of his six foot five height he still towered over her. As'hia stared at him and saw the desire in his eyes for her, the need for her, but he shook his head. "Not like that!" He rasped out the words. "Not yet!"

"Lynom I want..." As'hia stammered. She wanted this man more than any man she had ever met and he was denying her. Lynom released her face and quickly reached down grasping her ass cheeks in his hands and easily lifting her into his arms with a yelp of surprise from her. As'hia instinctively wrapped her arms around his shoulders, her eyes wide in heated passion. Lynom looked at her, his normally dark eyes now changed to vampire cobalt blue and gazing at her with possessive fervor. It was a look that caused As'hia's heart to skip a beat with its intensity. Not out of fear or distrust, but because she felt the same thing looking at him. She glanced down between their bodies quickly when she felt the enormous head of his pulsating cock brush against her moist opening. She looked back up into his eyes quickly, the fire in her blood almost unbearable. "Lynom... damn you I..."

Lynom shifted his hips slightly and As'hia's eyes nearly exploded out of her head as half of his massive cock pushed its way inside her and she sank onto him with agonizing slowness. As'hia's head crashed forward into his shoulder as he began to lean forward, every pleasure center in her body now screaming out in unabashed delight. She gripped his broad shoulders as her body convulsed and shuddered in another staggering orgasm, her juices coating his cock in copious amounts. It occurred to her somewhere in her sexually charged mind that because she could not remember being raped by the Immortals when she first came to this place, Lynom was the largest man she had ever seen let alone slept with. Half his wonderful cock filled her more than any man she had accepted into her bed in her young life and she was exploding all over his dominating shaft with only a portion of him inside her. As'hia didn't release him, clinging to his body shuddering in the grips of the breath stealing orgasm, as he lowered her to the blanket beneath them drawing his legs up so that his knees were bent and supporting his weight. He could have released her at any time, impaled as she was upon his enormous cock; Lynom however loved the feel of her supple body and skin against his.

Lynom for his part was struggling to keep his control, but it was a losing battle. As'hia's velvet warmth and the tightness of her pussy around his cock was almost too much. He could feel her pussy seizing around his cock, her sweet juices running down his cock shaft, and it was all he could do to keep from erupting within her right now. She was clinging to him as if her life depended on it, her tightness trying to draw him in more.

"Ssin'urn 'anon... Ssin'urn 'anon... I can't..." Lynom gasped into her elven ear.

As'hia was covering the side of his face and neck with butterfly kisses and nibbles from her wolf fangs. Her breasts were crushed against his chest, her stiff nipples burning points against his already hot skin. "All... all of you Lynom... my love!" As'hia gasped finally. "I want... I want all of you! Nubou lae Lynom! Nubou lae!" As'hia reached down with her hands and grasped his powerful ass cheeks in her hands. She turned her wolf eyes on him and Lynom swore they were the most beautiful dark orbs he had ever seen. “Make me... make me yours Lynom!” She gasped out.

Lynom remembered then something his father had told him many years ago.

“Never refuse something from the woman who has claimed your heart my son.” Cha'talla had told him and Tir'ut both. “Never deny them for they will be your strength, your future and your life.”

Lynom then did as As'hia had asked him.

As'hia's eyes rolled into the back of her head and her lips parted as she howled out her heavenly enchantment in the soul robbing plunge of the remainder of Lynom's massive cock into her depths. The instant she felt his large, swollen balls come to rest against her upturned ass the orgasm started deep in her belly and cascaded outward to every portion of her body. She felt Lynom's vampiric fangs sink into the flesh of her neck and she could do nothing but clutch him in otherworldly bliss as he fed on her blood, increasing the depth and intensity of her orgasm to a level As'hia never thought could exist. She felt his massive cock balloon inside her and then his searing hot come was erupting into her depths with the force of a volcano, adding to her own sinful pleasure.

As his come filled her, As'hia suddenly found herself awash within the confines of Lynom's mind, and she saw everything he was. She saw and felt everything that she meant to him, and this only added to her overwhelming sense that she had found the man who would be the center of her life for centuries to come. This was what her mother had told her she might find someday in the future, only events had insured she found it much sooner than she had ever hoped for. She felt his arms tighten around her, drawing her body even closer if that was possible, and As'hia knew. She knew in the midst of the horrors she had experienced in the last months, As'hia had found her idyllic man, and he had been in front of her all this time.

Present time

As As'hia relived the last few hours and held Lynom's hand to her breast, she decided she had never felt more secure in all her life. He hadn't gotten soft after that first explosion into her, and for the next three hours Lynom had worshiped her like some sort of goddess. By Lynom's third orgasmic explosion into her, her half-elven body had fully adjusted to his enormous size and she felt nothing but perfect pleasure. Not once in that entire three hour lustful period had his thick Immortal cock left the warmth and tightness of her pussy. It was almost as if she had not stopped coming, like she was experiencing one cataclysmic orgasm after another. Her orgasms had all rolled together one after the other and by the time they had stopped and could not continue, no matter that they both wanted to, As'hia knew it would only get better through the years. She had many more things she wanted to do to him, and he had promised to memorize and explore every contour of her body with just his tongue.

As'hia wondered briefly what her family would think if they could see her now. Her mother and grandparents on her mother's side she knew would only be happy for her and what she had found with Lynom. They would be able to smell his devotion and love for her, and Lycavorians were far more accepting of interspecies marriages and unions because they let their instincts and senses guide them when it came to most relationships. Her father and her father's parents, As'hia did not know how they would react. Her father no doubt would see how Lynom treated her, how he adored her, and he would eventually come to accept him. Her traditional elven grandparents however, they were another story. They would probably... As'hia felt Lynom's lips and nose slowly nuzzle the back of her elven ear, and she sighed in utter and complete happiness, thoughts of her grandparents quickly fading away as Lynom's touch ignited her blood once more.

“What are... what are you thinking Ssin'urn 'anon?” He whispered into her ear as he pulled her even tighter against his hard, warm and powerful body.

As'hia looked out over the top of the mountain they were on and could just make out the sun as it rose from behind the mountains in the distance. It hadn't yet begun to lift above the mountaintops and it was giving off a light gray like background across the sky. Wrapped as she was in Lynom's arm, it was going to be the most beautiful sunrise she had ever seen.

“I’m trying to determine how I will tell my elven grandparents that I am head over heels in love with a man who is half Immortal.” As'hia replied honestly. “And that he makes my wolf and elven blood sing at just his simple touch.”

“As with Tir'ut and Normya... many will look at us as if we are odd and out of place.” Lynom said softly. “No doubt they will call you names for associating with me.”

As'hia turned in his strong arms until she faced him. She slipped her arms under his, spreading her hands out on his powerful back and making sure her breasts pressed firmly against his broad chest. She curled her leg up over the top of his and felt his thigh press against her deliciously sore but still semi-aroused pussy. The thin strip of black hair above her pussy was matted with their combined juices, but neither of them cared in the least.

“They can call me anything they like.” She told him as she used her fingers to trace his jaw and rub the tips of his bone spurs. “It won’t matter in the least to me. I have you and that is all that matters.”

“They will think you are with me for other reasons.” Lynom spoke.

As'hia grinned wickedly. “Well... I am addicted to you now.” She stated in a slow and seductive voice dripping with need and desire. “I’ll never be able to get enough of you... my Immortal Master.”

Lynom rolled his eyes. “Ssin'urn 'anon... that is not even funny to talk about.”

“It’s true though.” As'hia stated confidently. “After what you have made me feel... I want no one else. I will need you all the time. I want you all the time. Everyday if I can manage it!”

“Don’t you think that is just a little unrealistic As'hia? Everyday? You will grow tired of me.” Lynom asked with a grin.

“I’m half wolf Lynom. I’m a very sexual and passionate woman.” As'hia answered him evenly. “And I will never grow tired of what you make me feel. What’s wrong Immortal... not up to the task?”

Lynom chuckled now and pulled her closer. “I will show you just how up to the task I am Ssin'urn 'anon.” He said.

As'hia was smiling as she took his face in her hands and once more she used her thumbs to stroke his bone spurs as she simply gazed at his features. Yes... he was the most handsome man she had ever met and he was all hers now. As'hia found she didn’t care what others would think... they would never know what it was that had brought them together. They would never know what he had done to safeguard her and the risks he had taken for her. And they would never know what Lynom could do to her in their bed. As'hia decided she may not have been addicted to him as those females elves they had left behind were addicted to the Immortals that had broken them, but she doubted very much after experiencing what Lynom had made her feel, she could ever feel the same for any man.

“You will have to teach me your language.” As'hia finally spoke.

Lynom smiled. “That is simple enough.” He brought his hand up and tenderly stroked her elven ear. “We are connected now Ssin'urn 'anon. All you need do is reach out within the many tremors of Mindvoice and touch my thoughts and you will know everything I know.”

“How did you become so strong like that within Mindvoice?” As'hia asked him.

“My mother.” Lynom answered immediately. “She was one of the few who the Empress Aikiro allowed to study Mindvoice extensively. When you combine her skills and the natural shielding ability of my father, all Akruxian really, Tir'ut and I and our younger brothers all have developed this ability. My mother was a taskmaster when she was schooling us.”

“And this allows you to communicate even though we are so far away?” As'hia asked.

Lynom nodded. “To a large degree yes. Tir'ut and I need help to speak as we do, and usually he would draw from my father’s dormant abilities when he did. My father is far stronger in Mindvoice than he lets anyone but my mother see. He is still a traditional Akruxian Immortal to a large degree, and he has not developed his Mindvoice abilities to what they could be. Now that Tir'ut has found Normya Leonidas, it is so much easier for us. Normya is even stronger in Mindvoice than Tir'ut because of who her parents are, and this only makes Tir'ut stronger.”

“So you can feel him even now?” As'hia said.

Lynom nodded. “Like Tir'ut I keep my shields very high most of the time. I have not tried to communicate with him since the day before yesterday. They were preoccupied with what happened to Zarah Leonidas and the others of Darthirii ilhar Dysea’s family and I do not want to distract him.”

“Dar... darthirii ilhar?”

Lynom smiled. “Elf Mother.” He answered.

“So I can see within your thoughts?” As'hia asked.

“I will hold nothing back from you Ssin'urn 'anon.” Lynom stated. His eyes lifted quickly and he looked at the sky before looking back at her. “We have two hours before the sun is fully up. Do you wish to see all that I am Ssin'urn 'anon my love?”

As'hia nodded her head quickly pressing her hands tighter to his face. “Oh yes!” She exclaimed.

Lynom pressed his forehead to hers and drew her body tighter to him. “Then let me show you who I am.”

SPARTA

SPARTAN SENATE BUILDING

The Spartan Senate Building was unique in its design. When it was first determined that King Leonidas was going to be spending six months of every year within the City of Sparta, it was also determined that the senior government officials would need to follow him to Earth on a rotating schedule. The Prime Minister and the top four or five officials would come to Earth each time he did, effectively making Sparta and Earth the secondary capital of the Lycavorian Union. When this was decided, it was also decided to build a new large single story addition to the permanent ten stories of Spartan Senate Building already standing. This section would be much more heavily fortified and guarded for it would house the senior leaders of the Union and their offices. It was designed like their offices on Apo Prime and it was done in a single story version to maintain the décor of Sparta.

The six foot three, two hundred and twenty-six pound Durcunusaan officer who burst in the front entrance of the Senate Building was a new Pentekostyes. His name was Jomann, and he had just recently received his promotion to Captain and completed the grueling eighteen month training course that all new Durcunusaan officers went through. He was only twenty-five years old, still very much a child in the eyes of many older Lycavorians, but his rise through the ranks was without question. He was the oldest pureblood son of his parents, his father a Lycavorian Spartan from Apo Prime and his mother a young Spartan woman born and raised in Sparta. Jomann's father was among the eight hundred Spartan Shock troops who had initially come to Earth with Vistr and helped to defend and hold the line with their King. He was a powerful thousand year old Alpha wolf who now held the rank of General/Lieutenant and commanded three complete Divisions based here on Earth. His father had met his mother on his first trip to Sparta, three months after first arriving, and as the saying goes lightning struck instantly. The flowing hair and traditional nature of the proud Spartan females was something that caused many Lycavorians to flock to Sparta in the hopes of finding mates. His father got lucky, as he was among the first able to go there. He had met his mother outside a small café, and her blond hair and stunning blue eyes had caught his attention right away. Her two hundred year old body was still as supple and firm as when she was a child, and she had never taken a mate. At least until his father pronounced he was going to claim her on the first day he met her, and then for the next seven months had courted her endlessly. His persistence, honor and respect was what finally wore her down and won over her family as well as her.

Jomann was the oldest of their four offspring, for they had not wanted to wait to have children. Even to this day, their love for each other was an obvious thing in the manner they treated each other and how they acted together. Jomann had been born here in Sparta, born and raised. There was never a question of the profession he would take, and he followed in his father's footsteps into the Union military. He had started out as a eighteen year old enlisted Spartan, but a single battle at the beginning of that war had seen him granted a field promotion to Junior Lieutenant and Jomann hadn't looked back. By the end of the war he was a Senior Lieutenant and the men under his command had not suffered a single KIA the entire rest of the war even though being involved in every major ground offensive staged. The men who served under him, many of them grizzled older veterans of many battles with the High Coven, would follow him up to and through the Gates of Perdition if he was leading them. King Leonidas had made it a point to instill in his officers that leaders could be made, but leaders of men were born. Like his father before him, Jomann was born to be a leader.

His graduation from Durcunusaan Training and subsequent assignment to the Earth was a crowning achievement in his budding career and Jomann fully intended to take advantage of it. He had inherited a powerful Mindvoice ability from his parents and his ultimate goal one day was to hopefully become bonded to a dragon and become part of an even more elite group within the Union Military. He wanted to be part of a Bonded Pair and perhaps one day serve with the famed Mjolnir's Hand. Jomann had taken command of the Durcunusaan Senate Detail only six short months ago, and even though he did not know it then, that posting would one day lead him to a status and position Jomann had never considered. It was a posting that would see him rise up and steal the heart of a Princess of the Union and become the Captain and closest friend of one who would be King. It would also see him realize his dream of one day becoming a Bonded Pair.

None of that was anywhere in his mind at the moment.

Jomann had rallied part of his DSD force from the barracks and immediately began issuing orders to them as news and frantic calls began to sound over the radio implants about the battles taking place all over Sparta. Jomann was a natural leader, and he knew that each individual person had a role to play in the larger scheme of things. He did not wish to go rushing into battle, though it usually ended up coming to him he had found during the Evolli War. Each part of the whole had a role to play, and protecting the Senate was his role and that of his men. He had found sixteen of his men lounging around the barracks when the alerts began to sound and grabbing them up they began to make their way to the Senate Building to secure whatever Union senators were in residence at the time. Jomann began barking orders immediately upon entering the main lobby entrance even as civilian clerks and many visitors scrambled to get out of his way and that of his men.

“Pheas! Thol! West entrance!” Jomann barked out. “Lior! Mosaic! East side! No one gets in or out!”

The civilian aide to a senior Senator strode up to Jomann as if he hadn't a care in the world while Jomann used hand signals to direct the rest of the men with him. All of them had managed to leave the barracks with their Mark IV ArmorPly, though only a few had managed to grab their 190s from the weapons rack. The rest of them had their K12s out and very visible, including Jomann.

“What is the meaning of this Captain?” The aide barked. “You know weapons are not allowed to be displayed within the Senate Building! You...”

Jomann turned his dark, ocean blue eyes on the aide. “Where is the Prime Minister and Queen For'mya?” He barked cutting off the man. “Have any Kavalians tried to enter?”

“Kavalians?” The man snapped indignantly. “Captain you are scaring those civilians in this building with... urkkhgg!”

His words died as Jomann's hand clamped on the front of his perfectly manicured shirt and he yanked the man closer to him, baring his wolf fangs and his eyes now fully changed. “The King is dead you fool!” Jomann snarled viciously. “He has been assassinated by Kavalian Commandos! Have you no idea what is going on outside these walls? Where is the Prime Minister and Queen For'mya?” Jomann lifted his K12 and placed the large barrel against the man's head. “Answer my questions now and do not waste my time anymore!”

The man's eyes were huge as he pointed to the rear of the main lobby. “In... they are in... her office!” He stammered. “In the secure... in the secure zone!”

“Get everyone out of this building now!” Jomann snapped. “The Kavalian dogs are hitting us all over the city and we don't know where else they will strike! Get these people out of here! This building is a prime target! Move fool!”

Jomann shoved the man aside and motioned to half of the remaining men behind him. “You are with me!” He barked. “Lidias... take the others and begin getting everyone out of the building! Move quickly... an attack could come at any moment!”

Jomann saw his men nod and begin to sprint across the lobby in different directions as he made his way to the other side of the huge lobby entrance behind the main reception area. Six of his men were standing by the large metal double doors which would open into the new addition of secure offices for senior senators and the Prime Minister. One of his men was stabbing the control panel with his fingers as Jomann came up.

“My code is not working Captain!” He barked.

“Try the emergency activation code!” Jomann snapped.

The man stabbed in another set of numbers and digits and shook his head. “Negative!”

“Sibfla! That ain't good!” Another of his men spoke as he checked the action on his 190.

Jomann thought quickly. All of them had Level Nine Security Clearances and with few exceptions, they could open any door within the senate building if they so chose too. "Is it not accepting the code?" He asked.

"It's accepting it sir... but the door isn't working!" The man spoke. "It's like the releases have been disengaged or something!"

Jomann blinked. "The doors should have opened the moment the alert sounded for quick exit of any in the office area!" He snapped. "Do a diagnostic?"

The man pounded the console again and shook his head quickly. "The diagnostic shows the lock release is disengaged!" He snapped turning to look at Jomann. "That's the only reason our codes won't work!"

"Anicetus... the only way to disengage the computer Mag locks is from inside the office control center!" Jomann said.

The senior enlisted man looked at him and nodded. He had served with the young Captain since he entered the Union military and when Jomann had told him he was applying for the Durcunusaan Lidias had applied as well. The seven hundred year old Enomotarch knew an exceptional officer when he saw one. "Yes sir!"

"Nubou!" Jomann spat turning to one of the others. "Nusa do you have explosives?" He asked.

The Durcunusaan troop grinned and reached into the small knapsack he always wore on his field equipment. "When have you known me not too sir!" He spoke pulling out a several small circular devices.

Jomann nodded. "Blow it! Blow it now!" He snapped.

It took the experienced soldier only fifteen seconds to slap the four disc shaped devices on the double doors at each corner. Each small disc contained exactly one kilogram of the newest explosive substance the Union had. It was similar to C-4 explosive which originated here on Earth many hundreds of years ago. The discs were magnetic and attached easily to the door. He touched the small detonator in the top of each disc until all of them showed small blinking red lights. "Set!" He barked as the all moved back several meters to either side of the door.

"Do it!" Jomann barked.

"Firing!" Nusa exclaimed as he touched the single button on his wrist control.

The four explosions went off simultaneously, each kilogram of explosive NX18 material directed inward by the shape of the disc. Each disc succeeded in severing the sealing control rods for the door that extended into the wall. This was a bunker door, and the sealing control rods were no where near as thick as the rods for a bunker door. As the low rumble washed over the lobby, civilians screamed and began moving even quicker for the main doors into the building. The large double doors were blown inwards, torn from their support rods with little grace or gentleness. Smoke from the explosions mixed with the dust and debris of the door tearing sections of the wall away with it as the now twisted and bent doors came to rest inside the office area lodged against the reception desk for the office area.

"Go!" Jomann barked bringing up his K12 as he turned the corner and led his men through the smoke and dust without hesitation.

What they saw inside the secure office area brought them up in horror as the dust and smoke cleared quickly because of the air circulators operating within this section of the senate building. There were probably fifty offices in this section of the building, most of them for the many senators who chose to maintain such offices here when the King was in residence on Earth. It rotated every six months on which senators would have the offices in this section, but since the majority of them genuinely liked and respected the King, there was no infighting between them. In the twenty years this part of the building had been in use, nearly all of the thousand senators that made up the Union had been here at least once. Depending on how many senators were in residence each day was harder to determine, but there had to be close to a hundred staff members at any given time of the day.

What Jomann and the others saw were bodies. Dozens of bodies sprawled about in death, their blood staining the floors where they had fallen, or decorating the walls around them. Just in the entry foyer here Jomann counted nearly fifteen men and women who had been slaughter like cattle. Many of them were in positions that indicated they had no idea what had hit them, but it was obvious to see all of them had been riddled with weapons fire.

"Left and right! Anicetus take the right side!" Jomann hissed out. "Weapons free! Watch your fire! Sweep back to the Prime Minister's office! Go! Go!"

Jomann started down one side of the foyer entrance with three others while the rest headed down the opposite side. This area of the building was set up in such a way that the vast majority of offices were on the outer wall, allowing many to have windows that overlooked the river or park on either side. The center was a mixture of small gathering areas with couches and chairs and a single indoor water fountain surrounded by flower beds. There were bodies everywhere, some sprawled over the chairs and couches, some half in and half out of office doorways. Jomann's eyes were wide as they moved quickly down their side. Whoever had come through here was lethally trained, for many of the wounds were head shots and instantly critical even to a Lycavorian. Jomann and his team could also see the bodies of at least half a dozen of their Durcunusaan brothers and sisters lying where they had begun to put up a fight, most of them reacting and dying with their weapons in hand. They ignored the bodies, not stopping to check for wounded as they had only one goal right now. Secure the Prime Minister and Queen.

Two minutes later they met Jomann's other team by the single door at the very end of the building. It led into the largest office in this section of the building and the door was jammed open by the body of one of Deia's senior aides. It kept attempting the close but would slid back when it struck his body. Jomann felt cold fear grip him as he saw the bodies of Deia's personal two member Durcunusaan detail sprawled on the floor in the aide's office by his desk. He stepped gingerly over the body of the aide and into the outer office, his men following quickly and efficiently, spreading out in the large anteroom. The door to Deia's office was open and Jomann motioned forward with two fingers and then pointed at himself and Nusa. They all nodded and Jomann sprinted into Deia's office, his K12 sweeping back and forth around the room. The massive monitor on the west side of the office was tuned to the Netnews and playing in the background, and Jomann's eyes grew wide in horror when he saw the Prime Minister slumped against the far wall, blood pooling the floor around her inert body.

"Nubou!" Jomann cursed as he rushed to her side. "Cover!"

The other Durcunusaan in the eight member team spread out sweeping Deia's huge office and checking the several rooms that branched off from it. Jomann kneeled next to Deia's body and saw the two projectile wounds to her chest. The front of her tan jumpsuit was saturated in blood, staining it a dark red almost copper color. Jomann reached out and placed two fingers gingerly against Deia's neck. His dark blue eyes grew wide then.

"Lysandra!" He roared turning to look at the lone female Durcunusaan in this portion of his team. She also happened to be a qualified medic trained by Colonel Anuk herself. He looked at her as she dashed to where he was. "I have a pulse! It's very weak!"

The female Lycavorian began tearing at the front of Deia's jumpsuit. "Two entry wounds!" She barked. "Large caliber! Look like..." She looked to the side and saw the small glittering casing next to Deia's body. She reached down and picked it up. "Captain!" She hissed holding it up. "Her wounds are from a K12 Magnum!"

"Can you do anything?" Jomann hissed.

Lysandra tossed down the casing. "I didn't have time to grab my bag... but I will do what I can!"

"She is the Prime Minister!" Jomann shouted. "Do more!" He stood up and lifted his finger to his jaw, tapping it urgently. "Durcunusaan Nine Four to Durcunusaan Command!"

"Jomann!" Anicetus's voice and the tone of it caused Jomann to turn. "The Queen is missing!" He barked out. "Queen For'mya is not here!"

"That's not possible! She was in here with the Prime Minister!" Jomann barked.

"We've swept the entire office! She's gone Jomann!" Anicetus spoke with wide eyes.

"Durcunusaan Command... go Nine Four!" The voice burst into Jomann's ear implant.

"Jomann... look!" Lysandra snapped. Jomann turned and looked at where she was pointing next to Deia's body. He knelt down quickly again where there was another few drops of blood and bits of blond fur. He dipped his fingers into the blood and fur and drew them up to his nose.

Every man or woman within the ranks of the Durcunusaan were expert trackers, and all of them knew the scents of the King and Queens without question. Jomann drew his fingers back.

"It's the Queen." He announced holding up his fingers. "And she was in wolf form!"

"Durcunusaan Command to Nine Four!" Sounded once more.

"Captain!" Nusa's voice caused Jomann to stand up with the urgency in it. He looked at the man.

"You found her!" He exclaimed.

Nusa shook his head. “Captain... the entrance to the underground bunker is open. It has been used recently and there are blood stains leading into the tram tunnel!”

“She’s alive then!” Jomann barked.

“I detected Laustinos’s scent and at least a dozen others Jomann.” Nusa spoke. “None of them Lycavorian or elf!”

“Kavalian!” Anicetus exclaimed. “It has to be! They took For'mya! They took the Queen!”

Jomann tapped his jaw without thinking. “Nine Four to Command! We have a...”

“Bombs!” The new voice rose above his and Jomann whirled to see Deia’s eyes fluttering open.

“Destroy... cover... escape! Took... For'mya... must get out! Betrayed... dog Laustinos! Must...”

Lysandra allowed her to slump against her body armor as she looked up at Jomann. “She’s got severe internal injuries Captain! And I’m pretty sure one of the projectiles severed her spine! She’s dying! We need to get her to King Yulu Hospital!”

“She said bombs!” Anicetus snapped. “Cover their escape!”

Jomann’s eyes went wide. “Nubou lae! They must have rigged the building to explode!” He turned back towards the way they had come. “We’re too far!” he turned back to Deia and knelt in front of her. “Prime Minister!” He snarled. “Prime Minister... how long?”

Deia’s eyes fluttered open once more, blood leaking from between her lips. “Must... must hurry!”

The first rumbling brought all of them to their feet and they turned back towards the main entrance of the Senate building. The next explosion made the building shudder violently and then they began to come very quickly.

“Into the tunnel!” Jomann screamed turning to bend over to pick up Deia.

“Captain... if you move her it could kill her!” Lysandra shouted.

“If I don’t we all die!” Jomann screamed back. “Forgive me Prime Minister!” He said as he lifted Deia’s bloody body into his arms. “Go! The tunnel! It’s our only chance!”

Jomann led his team towards the massive wall of bookcases as the rolling thunder got closer and closer. He watched as Anicetus and Nusa entered the tunnel first followed by Lysandra and the rest just as the concussive force of the chain of explosions picked him up and physically tossed him and Deia the last few meters into the mouth of the tunnel. Two more explosions sounded and then the whole of the Senate Office Building, all ten stories of it came raining down on the section they were in.

In covering their escape Laustinos and his Kavalian allies killed over a thousand men and women with the destruction of the Senate Office Building. The death toll would take weeks to compile as the remains were dug through. It also succeeded in burying the only knowledge of For'mya’s fate beneath ten stories of concrete and steel. It would be days before this information was known... and by then it would be too late.

“I have done some things that I am not proud of son. I’ve hurt people I did not mean to hurt. It was not done on purpose by any means, but I did them regardless.”

“Do you regret these things father?”

“You will find there is very little I regret Androcles. That is the same as living in the past and it is something I will not do no matter what. I did what I did because ultimately it saved more lives than it cost.”

“Why are you telling me this now father?”

“Someday in the future, you may have to make those same choices Androcles. I might now be around to ask advise from, and it will be all you. Someday you might have to cause others pain in order to discover the truth of something. Better to end up having to say you’re sorry you did what you did than you’re sorry you did nothing.”

“Why did you decide to do what you did those times father?”

"I hate to lose boy."

CHAPTER FORTY-NINE

KRANEK ULU SCIMITAR

"Report!" Sa'sur screamed as she gripped the sides of her command chair to keep from falling out. That last barrage of Gauss Cannon fire had strained the SCIMITAR's shields in their aft quarter as Sa'sur barked orders to maneuver, and the battering they had taken had sent half a dozen crewmen sprawling.

"Aft ventral shields down to thirty-six percent!" The officer who acted as her XO barked from the station he stood at. "We have power disruption in the starboard aft quarter and Type One turrets are offline! Seven blown power conduits have caused main power to fluctuate on decks nine through fourteen! They're beating the sibfla out of us Captain!"

"We're buying NORMYAS LIGHT the time she needs!" Sa'sur snapped. "What about our Mark 22s?"

Zeria turned her head only slightly from where she was frantically trying to track and direct all of the SCIMITAR's fighters. "Three GREAT SOULS destroyed! Two more heavily damaged and out of the fight!" She barked out. "The other three have moved out of Mark 22 range!"

"Nubous cowards!" Sa'sur snarled.

"Captain... Captain I'm detecting multiple unknown Quantum signatures! They are appearing all over! Sensors are detecting what appears to be over a hundred Union fighters and fighter/bombers that have just jumped into the system and have begun attacking the Kavalian ships!" Zeria screamed turning to face her.

Sa'sur turned to look at her. "Union Fighters jumped into the system! How? From where?"

Zeria shook her head excitedly. "I'm detecting no ships within ten light years of this system Captain!" Her eyes grew wider and she leaned closer to the three screens arrayed around her. "Captain... I'm detecting over sixty Kavalian missiles inbound! Son vada carians!" She whirled in her chair once more. "Captain... all of them are targeted on us!"

Sa'sur's lips curled up into a half smile of fateful events. "Got their attention I guess!" She muttered coming to her feet. "Helm... hard to starboard! Give me aft starboard dock thrusters at seventy percent! Put our port side to the missiles! Weapons... prepare saturation barrage on all point defenses! Recharge and fire at will!"

"Captain!" The XO barked turning to look at her. "We need to move!"

Sa'sur shook her head firmly. "We have to protect NORMYA'S LIGHT!" She barked. "I will not allow them to kill anymore of Andro's family!"

"We won't get them all Captain! And they are landing troops as we speak!" The man snapped.

"Then we will go down fighting!" Sa'sur barked. "Just like our King!"

The XO blinked, took a deep breath and nodded his head as he turned back to his duties. "Damage Control Teams at the ready! Let's make sure we stay alive long enough to at least put more of a hurting on them!" He snapped turning back to his station. "How long?"

"Forty-eight seconds until impact!" Zeria shouted.

"Give me full power to port side ventral and dorsal shields!" Sa'sur snapped now. "Over charge them with power from the secondary emitters if you have too! Close all bulkheads and prepare to activate atmospheric force fields! We..."

The COM officer came to his feet and turned to look at her. "Captain I have an incoming Spartan Secure transmission! It's using Alpha Priority War Channel 11!"

"Andro?" Sa'sur asked instantly.

"Admiral Thodias!"

"Put him up!"

The holo imager shimmered to life instantly. "Sa'sur! What are you doing?" Thodias snapped.

"What I'm supposed to do! Make it quick Thodias. Why aren't you evacuating the Royal family?" Sa'sur barked.

“Dysea’s statement to me was simple and clear!” Thodias announced. “We aren’t fucking running! I’m moving back into high orbit and turning to engage the second fleet group! Where did these fighters come from Sa’sur?”

Sa’sur chuckled. “I have no idea, but they are welcome to join our fight! We...”

“Captain! Second incoming on Alpha Priority 11!”

“Thodias stand by!” Sa’sur nodded to the COM officer and the second holo disc came to life. Sa’sur expected someone from Earth but suddenly she was looking at the helmeted face of a young female elven pilot.

“Who the hell are you?” Sa’sur snapped.

“Captain... there is no time to explain!” The answer came. “I am Commander Falarie of the 3rd RAPTOR Interdiction Squadron belonging to the 1st ARIZONA Attack Wing! We have shut down the system so the Kavalian bastards do not know we are coming!”

“ARIZONA? Shut down the system?” Sa’sur asked in shock.

“Captain you must change course immediately to six nine eight four three mark one!” Falarie barked. “There is not time to explain!”

“Listen to me! We are about...”

“Captain Sa’sur!” Falarie shouted through the transmission. “You are occupying space that will be a firestorm in just over twenty seconds! You must turn now! Prince Androcles has sent us!”

Sa’sur didn’t hesitate when she heard Andro’s name. “Helm full power turn to starboard! Six nine eight four three mark one!” She screamed.

“Helm answering!” The shout echoed her voice.

“Captain Sa’sur!” Zeria shouted her eyes wide in disbelief. “Captain... I’m reading dozens of Quantum Fusion signature anomalies directly astern and to port! It’s... by the gods Captain... I’ve never seen anything like it before! It’s enormous!”

Sa’sur looked at the transmission with wide eyes and saw the female commander smile a predatory smile. “Miranda Lorian, Captain of the ULU ARIZONA, sends you her regards Captain Sa’sur!” She spoke.

“Ships!” Zeria screamed out now as her sensor station began to sound madly with alarms. “They’re ships! By the gods... they are Union ships and...”

Sa’sur turned and looked at the holographic screen that acted as her window to the stars outside and her ice blue eyes grew wide as the enormous white light flashed just off the aft port quarter and the monstrous ship materialized as if out of thin air.

“The gods preserve me!” Sa’sur gasped.

ULU ARIZONA

She was built for one single purpose.

Captain Miranda Lorian was about to unleash that purpose.

“Three seconds!” Zaala called out. “Two... one... reversion!”

Miranda came to her feet as the three massive displays in the front of the bridge flashed with white light and then reverted to bright single stars in a single blink of her eyes. The Quantum Resonance Field Reactor LSD drives taken from City Ship 41 and adapted to work with the ARIZONA and others of her class had worked to perfection and suddenly before them were dozens of ships, hundreds of fighters and a whole lot of missiles bearing down on them as every alarm on the bridge began to go off at once. It had taken only one well calculated jump and here they were. The massive reversion field generated by the ARIZONA and her Attack Wing resonated for several hundred thousand kilometers all around them, and the gravity concussive force of such a reversion sent an entire squadron of Kavalian Jaguar Mark II fighters spiraling out of control, two of them not able to stop from smashing against the reversion field gravity well and literally being torn asunder.

“Report!” Miranda shouted.

“Missiles inbound!” E’dira barked. “Bearing six four one point two!”

“SCIMITAR turning hard to starboard!” The navigation officer snapped out.

“Multiple fighters! Kavalian ships port and starboard! Picking up Colonel Randall’s attack force heavily engaged!”

The displays were really holographic images of the outside being projected by micro receivers and transmitters built into the hull of the ARIZONA. It was like looking out three massive windows and the wondrous thing about that is they could change them to any view they wanted.

Miranda didn't have time to admire the view and she turned half a second after they had fully reverted. "E'dira! Make us sing! Fire! Fire!" She shouted pumping her fist down to the deck in a show of defiance.

The very first Drow Elf Tactical Officer within the Union Space Fleet stabbed her hovering finger down on her control consoles instantly. "Initiating Zone Defense Saturation Fire! All batteries weapons free, repeat weapons free!"

Miranda could almost feel the turrets coming alive, she could almost see them beginning to track and whirring into place, and for years to come she would swear she had even heard the first sounds the guns made as they erupted in a single massive sustained barrage. The ULU ARIZONA, named for a warship in Earth's storied past, finally was allowed to let her guns fire in anger.

In each turret, armored gunnery crews began feeding the quad guns a steady diet of plasma based ordinance as the gunnery chiefs zeroed in on their specific zones as assigned by E'dira from her tactical console. Due to the advanced power systems of the ARIZONA, this information was transferred in milliseconds to the Gunnery Chief's own computer who then fed the targeting package into the gun itself. The Terra series Quad PDTs were designed to use 'hard shells' that would convert to plasma when lased with a set of harmonic particle beams. The entire shell converted to plasma and propelled down the barrel at the speed of light, but at a cost of losing 25 percent of its explosive warhead. The lost power was made up for in the rate of fire that could be achieved with the shell/magazine/breach guns as opposed to the straight plasma capacitor feed system currently used by a majority of Union warships. Another difference between the ARIZONA and other ships was that each gun turret had its very own crew as opposed to one crew having control of three or four guns standard. Due to the high rate of fire the ARIZONA could pump out, a single gun crew was needed in case of any problems that might arise. It meant more crew on the ship, but it also meant that repairs and maintenance took half the time in many cases.

Sixty-four Kavalian missiles were targeted on the SCIMITAR and in the space of only sixteen seconds; every single one of those missiles was dead. Unlike the turrets on the regular Union warships which were limited by the amount of power they could draw to operate their motors and targeting computers, the ARIZONA was not so restrained. While the LEONIDAS IIA-Class ships were by far the premier ships in the fleet, even their computers and power sources were limited in what they could do. Many of their systems drew off their four HMF main power cores. The most recent LEONIDAS IIAs like the SCIMITAR and NORMYA'S LIGHT also were equipped with nearly a dozen of the small power nodes designed by Zaala Randall and a bevy of other engineers and closely fashioned after the power nodes scattered throughout City Ship 41. This provided them added power without the added bulk of an additional two or three HMF Core Units.

The ARIZONA on the other hand, and the ships in her class that would follow, she had a working prototype of CS41's QRFR main drive right down to the biomechanical gel packs that acted as circuits. Avi had helped them solve the problem of power for their version of the QRFRs by using phased quantum physics to break down the molecules of plasma enough to use as a similar power source to CS41's own QRFR drives. While this would never suffice to operate the QRFR drives on City Ship 41 due to power restraints and the ability to de-phase the fuel source, for their version of the QRFR drives it worked exceptionally well. Their two main QRFR cores provided four times the power that the SCIMIATR could produce and therefore made it easier for the ships computers to target and fire at a far faster rate than normal. All of the 60 Quad PDTs sat in smooth operating ball joint like turrets and this allowed them to track and fire on targets well outside the normal firing arc of most PDT turrets. As one would look at the starboard side of the ARIZONA, twenty PDTs turrets stretching from bow to stern, along with another ten running the length of the top of the ARIZONA all opened fire at once and filled the space out to their front four hundred thousand kilometers away into a killing field that nothing would survive.

It was the ARIZONA's welcoming to the Kavalian fleet as the spread of her weapons was such that it covered an area the size of two SCIMITAR sized ships easily. As Kavalian missiles were shredded into pieces and began to blow up, nearly a dozen Kavalian fighters were caught in the unexpected size of the killing zone and their ships were minced into tiny pieces before the Kavalian pilots even knew what was going on. It was a thing of beauty to Miranda Lorian and one she had every intention of continuing.

“Z-minus ten degrees starboard!” Miranda barked as she moved to her tactical board. “Launch everything that we have left! Kick them out now! Let Falarie know she has to direct them until the BIG EYE is airborne... but get them to launching!”

“HORNET is breaking towards the planet with 1st and 2nd Wings!” The sensor officer shouted. “Holy shit Captain... look!”

Miranda ignored the excited exclamation and turned her head to the massive monitor on the left as it switched to a picture of the HORNET conducting a radical turn towards the planet and spewing fighters from either side as if they were angry hornets swarming from their nest. Miranda watched with glee as Janon held nothing back and the HORNET's main Type One Terra Series Plasma cannons began to blast out at an alarming rate, far faster than anything the Kavalians had ever expected or could compensate for. They were targeting Kavalian ships and scoring hits on every strike, three frigate sized ships actually buckling and imploding from the massive fire he was directing.

“Hah!” Miranda barked. “Stuck your hand in the hornet’s nest didn’t you!” She snarled. “How many GREAT SOULS left?”

“Three within weapons range!” The sensor operator exclaimed. “All of them maintaining station outside the cone of fire! Six more that the HORNET is turning towards!”

“Fucking cowards!” Miranda growled. “Well hell... let’s not let Janon have all the fun! Sa’sur proved they worked... so let’s really get this party going before we lose the advantage our arrival has caused!” She announced moving back to her chair. “Missile Batteries One and Three! Load Mark 22 ZMF missiles! Helm... come to course four seven eight three one mark two! Weapons! Full yield on the ZMFs and ripple fire twenty per launcher at the GREAT SOULS!”

“Aye Captain!”

“E’dira... Graviton Wave Generator?” Miranda barked turning to look at the Drow.

“Charged and standing by!” E’dira barked in return actually getting into the emotion that permeated the bridge. She could feel it all around her now, overriding her normally stoic Drow nature. This is what it meant to be part of something larger she now knew. All of them were part of a well oiled machine that was finally showing what they could do and in the direst of circumstances. The humans and Lycavorians she saw on the bridge were antsy and bouncing about on the balls of their feet as they went about their duties. The elven members like her were much more reserved, but even they were beginning to show their emotions. One glance at Zaala next to her and she saw Steven Randall’s wife engrossed in power distribution panels and usage outputs with Chizz as they monitored it all. Her long black hair was bouncing as she bobbed her head up and down slightly in tune to what could only be a song she heard in her head.

“Pulse them E’dira!” Miranda shouted. “Those fuckers opened this dance and let’s make sure they stick around so we can damn well finish it!”

“Firing the GWG!” E’dira spoke as her long fingers played across her panels like a musical concerto.

The Graviton Wave Generator was a weapon designed and implemented by the most unlikely source and completely by accident. The main designer was an Evolli defector who came over to the Union at the very beginning of the Evolli War. An Evolli that turned out to be a brilliant scientist and was now working at Dreamland with some of the best minds to be found anywhere in the universe. He had not agreed with the Evolli leadership when they decided to react to Queen Dysea pulling their trade contracts by invading Union space and attacking nearly a dozen planets initially. He had escaped with three dozen other likeminded Evolli scientists and engineers and their families and immediately went to the nearest Union outpost and Deia declared them refugees. Within the space of the first year of the war, all of those Evolli were working diligently with the Union to bring about the end of the war in the only way they knew how. In the fields they were trained in. Experimental weapons. The Graviton Wave generator was their crowning achievement and it worked exactly how it was supposed to work in its first full non-testing use.

The moment E’dira touched her panel, four small Theta power nodes in the four corners of the ARIZONA sent out a massive pulse of Theta power. This huge ring expanded outward instantly, looking like the waves from a pebble being dropped into a calm mountain pond. The weapon itself did no physical damage in the least, for that was not its purpose. The GWG’s main purpose was to scramble the LSD coils on any targeted ships to the point that they were disrupted by the unseen Theta waves and useless for hours. Essentially, the harmless Theta waves merged with the power cores of the LSD Coils and threw out the delicate balance of power needed for faster than light operation. As this wave effect passed almost unnoticed by so many, it would come as a lethal surprise to the Kavalians. That their only hope of survival had just been taken away from them by a diminutive human female with Asian features, who at this very moment commanded the most devastating warship in the known universe, did not even begin to register in their minds.

And Miranda Lorian was not afraid to use it.

SCIMITAR

Sa'sur and her bridge crew could really only watch with awe at what was happening only a few thousand meters from their own ship. Though not as big as the SCIMITAR in length, the ships they saw before them were much wider, and one of them was spilling fighters from both port and starboard sides at intervals that was making heads spin, even as it conducted a gut wrenching turn that should have been impossible for a ship its size. They watched as the entire side of the new ship in front of them, Sa'sur knew she was the ARIZONA for she had been present for the briefing on Earth, became engulfed in a suppression barrage the likes of which she had never seen. Her PDTs were firing far faster than Sa'sur had ever seen Point Defense Turrets fire, and they were covering an area twice the size of the SCIMITAR, filling it with lethal plasma laced particles. As Sa'sur watched she saw the ship execute a Z rotation by no more than a few degrees and then it too was spilling fighters from either side. Her launch tubes appeared to sit just under the protective curve of her superstructure on the ventral axis of the ship allowing her main guns on top and three quarters of the PDTs to fire at will without worrying about damaging their own fighters.

“Captain!” Zeria exclaimed. “The fighters that jumped in earlier! They are all squawking as being from that... that thing!”

Sa'sur would not admit it until later, but she would make it a point to lay a big old kiss on Miranda Lorian's lips for saving their bacon this day. And Sa'sur knew she could never repay that debt. “THAT thing is the ULU ARIZONA!” Sa'sur announced with a smile. “And she just saved our collective asses!”

“Carians Captain!” Her XO barked. “Let's buy lots more of them!”

Consummate professional that she was, Sa'sur only grunted as she moved back to her chair. “We have our own teeth XO!” Sa'sur barked. “And Miranda Lorian has given us a second chance to use them! Let's not let her down!”

“No ma'am!”

“Reload all missiles with standard warheads! Maximum payload and deflection! Let's give the Kavalians something to think about!” Sa'sur snapped. “Helm... emergency power turn to starboard! Maintain our ventral shields oriented towards the ARIZONA! All batteries free! Gunnery stations to local command! We're still outnumbered three to one people! Let's not get cocky!”

ARIZONA

Almost the same thing was being said on the ARIZONA by an equally experienced ship commander.

“Missiles away clean! Good tracks! Time to impact thirty-two seconds!” The ARIZONA's Weapons Officer shouted.

“We caught them flatfooted and overconfident! Sa'sur's initial missile launch came as a surprise! Let's keep that rolling!” Miranda snapped. “Let's not make the same mistakes the Kavs did! They still have us outnumbered three to one! Evasive Pattern Omega One! Full sublights! Come to course six nine seven four mark three! Third Attack Squadron executes Beta One! Fourth Squadron Beta Five! Their guns track slower than ours so let's keep moving and hitting them on the run!”

“Helm answering six nine seven four mark three!”

“Third and Fourth Squadrons acknowledge Captain!”

“Status of launch?” Miranda snapped.

“All remaining birds away clean! RAPTOR One Four has directed them to focus on the DIATAGAs!”

“BIG EYE launching now Miranda!” E'dira barked. “Two minutes until they take up station!”

“All Gun Batteries to Free Roam! Target the capital ships first! We need to knock down their advantage!” Miranda snarled. “If the crews can see it... they can kill it! Get the STRIKERs prepped for immediate GS operations and mobilize our Spartan Detachment for immediate deployment! Zaala! Power status?”

Zaala turned to look at her with wide dark eyes. She had never been in sustained combat before and her heart was racing. “Nominal!” She almost screamed. “Everything is operating within more than acceptable parameters! I told you it would work Miranda!” Her dark eyes cut quickly to the engineering officer who she had leveled. He did everything he could to avoid her eyes, his face still smarting from the beating she had given him.

“Very well!” Miranda spoke with a slight grin as she turned back to the front of the bridge. “SWORD OF DAMOCLES and TRIUMPH OF TEARS to maneuver on us! Straight at them!”

“SWORD and TRIUMPH signal ready!”

“Let’s follow our missiles in!” Miranda barked.

KFI GREAT SOUL DREADNOUGHT

WERRU

“...do you mean we can’t communicate with our fighters?” The Kavalian Captain shouted angrily.

“We are being jammed Captain!” The man answered. “No long range sensors either! Only short range arrays and no communications! Short range sensors have detected nearly a hundred Quantum anomalies in the last minute but we can not localize them!”

“Anomalies do not interest me!” Captain Pucatacs snapped. “Modulate the frequency and get me communications back!”

“I am Captain! No matter what I do... the jamming is still there!”

“It has to be coming from the SCIMITAR!” He barked. “How long until our missiles destroy that ship?”

“Twenty-three seconds to... it can’t be!” The sensor operator hissed. “Captain... short range sensors have just detected a massive surge of quantum particle fields in the immediate area!”

“I told you I do not want to hear about these stupid...” Pucatacs snarled coming to his feet.

“The computer states quantum based engine drives!” The sensor operator screamed.

Pucatacs’s eyes went wide. “That’s impossible! No ship has quantum drives! They do not exist! They...”

“Union ships! Union ships! I’m detecting Quantum Reversion Waves! Union ships decelerating from LSD operation!” The man screamed.

Pucatacs could only stare at the view screen in front of him as dozens of ships began appearing in simple white flashes. “What is this?” He screamed. “Get me identification! Burn through this jamming damn you! Do it now!”

“I’m pushing output to full power already captain!” The sensor operator shouted. “It’s having no effect!”

“I need to know what is...”

Pucatacs’s words died when the entire aft third of his command bridge became a death pyre. The two A22B Anti-Emissions missiles from the M5 DEVASTATOR Fighter/Bomber punched clean through the thin outer hull of his command bridge. This was where the large view windows were situated and now covered with thin armor. The sensors in the nose of the missile had zeroed in on the power output of the sensor array easily, and sensing the commands coming from the bridge it had signaled its pilot it had a lock. The single M5, flanked by the two M7 TEMPEST Fighters, sizzled along the hull of the GREAT SOUL as the explosion erupted behind them and then they peeled away from the massive ship in a graceful, eye popping maneuver. That they were undetected and flying within the shield grid of the massive dreadnought ship was information that would be used in the future. To great effect.

The A22B missile was similar to the Harpoon Radiation missile from the 20th and 21st centuries in Earth’s past. It helped when the man who assisted in running all Fleet Operations with Admiral Riall was a former human who had grown up in those times. Ben O’Connor had brought much to the Union Fleet, including his old school tactics. They were tactics that the Union Fleet had never really practiced before until Ben brought these issues to light. Now... now there wasn't a fleet officer that did not swear by the new things they had learned. A dedicated fighter/bomber whose only purpose was to kill sensor emissions from enemy ships was one of Ben's brain child's and Miranda's Death Jesters were having a field day. The two five hundred kilo warheads were small in comparison to others that the M5 could carry, but when they went off in the rear of the bridge, it made a very big and deadly bang. The fireball swept forward and methodically incinerated every crew member on the bridge, causing massive decompression as the thin armor could not hold against the concussive force of the warheads going off inside the ship. The armored hull was meant to keep the explosions of missiles from passing through the armor from the outside. It was never intended to keep the explosive force of a missile contained inside its own hull.

DEATH JESTER SQUADRON
JESTER ONE THREE SQUADRON COMMANDER

“Stick that in your nubous pipe and smoke it Kavalian scum!” The senior Lycavorian Commander of the Death Jester Squadron retorted savagely as he twisted his head around in his cockpit and saw the damage he had wrought.

“Clean hit and kill!” The pilot of one of his escorting fighters announced.

“I think you took out the bridge!” The other spoke.

“Good!” Jester One Three barked. “I still got three missiles! Jester One Three to Death Jester Squadron! Home base has arrived! Find me more targets! Return and rearm as needed with your wingman per Op Plan! Four birds in the air at all times!”

“DIATAGA bearing two seven one point three!” The fighter pilot exclaimed. “They’re trying to burn through the jamming!”

Jester One Three yanked his controls to the right. “Rolling!”

“On your wing!”

“Got him!” Jester One Three called.

“Shoot him!”

“I got him locked! Hack left!” Jester One Three exclaimed.

“Right with you One Three!” The M7 pilot echoed.

“I got good tone! In range! Firing! Missile away!” Jester One Three announced cheerily as he mashed down on his firing button.

Another A22B Anti-ship missile ignited and rippled away from the M5's wing mounted pod. Sixteen M5s of the Death Jester Squadron were running rampant through the Kavalian fleet, locking up any source their instruments told them were trying to burn through the jamming. As nimble and low profile as the M5s already were, not a single Kavalian ship commander took notice of them with all the other Union fighters that had now filled the stars, many of them appearing out of nowhere. They were only adding to the confusion of what was going on. A confusion that the Kavalians were having a hard time adjusting and compensating for.

A confusion that more than one senior officer within the numerous Union ships was taking notice of.

ARIZONA AIR WING COMMANDER (AWC)
COLONEL STEVEN RANDALL
CALL SIGN SCAR

Steven jerked his control stick slightly to the left and pummeled the firing button on the upper left corner of the wide tip. His four Kinetic Pulse Cannons ripped out to his left and right and walked up the right side of the Kavalian JAGUAR fighter. The pulse rounds impacted along the edge of the Jaguar's dorsal wing and completely severed the wing from the body of the ship. Colonel Randall snarled happily as the ship spiraled out of control and went careening into the side of the DIEROY-Class Heavy Cruiser. The ship was already burning inside from numerous hits from the combined fire of two NOVA-Class Attack Cruisers and an ADMIRAL CENEU-Class Heavy attack Destroyer. There were no shields on this side of the DIEROY to protect it, and the JAGUAR fighter slammed into the hull with a massive fireball as Steven yanked back on his control column and turned his head quickly.

“Still with me Ty’coa!” He barked to the M7 TEMPEST fighter that was shadowing his every move.

“I’m on you Steven!” The elven pilot responded with calmness in his voice. “Two more from above! Point three!”

Ty’coa was the only pilot who had made the transfer with Steven when he took command of the ARIZONA’s Air Wing. He had flown with Steven Randall for five years now, and the two of them were a deadly pair. Steven slammed his throttles to full and pulled his column back sending the TEMPEST into a vertical climb to get above the huge DIEROY cruiser. None of its air defense batteries were firing, which told Steven they had probably lost main power.

“Where away?” Steven barked.

“Seven o’clock and closing at fourteen KPH!” Ty’coa answered.

They pulled out of the DIEROY’S shadow and Steven glanced over his left shoulder. “Got them!” He barked. “Split S! Roll with me!”

Steven yanked right on his control column and sent his TEMPEST into a stomach twisting turn down the opposite side of the crippled DIEROY.

“They appear to be two of the new *JAGUAR*s Steven!” Ty’coa echoed in his helmet. “They are closing fast and maintaining course!”

“Well... they do still have us outnumbered!” Steven snapped.

“We have disrupted their cohesion!” Ty’coa spoke calmly. “We must continue that!”

“How close do we let them get?” Steven snapped.

“I believe now would be a good time!”

“I’ll take the right one! You got the left!” Steven snapped. “HACK now!”

The two TEMPEST fighters appeared to pass within millimeters of each other as both Steven and Ty’coa executed inward turns back in the other direction using their powerful Verner Maneuvering Thrusters. The VMTs allowed them to turn far tighter than any known fighter, giving them exacting directional control over how they were fired. This maneuver confused the two Kavalian pilots as the smaller fighters split apart and went in separate directions in a single blink of an eye. They eventually choose to follow Steven’s fighter and both the larger JAGUAR Mark IIs rolled into formation and took up pursuit.

“They’re on me!” Steven barked as he wrenched his TEMPEST into a twirling turn behind the MOONLANCER-Class Battlecruiser that had turned sharply in the direction of several DIATAGA’s.

“Coming up on the opposite side!” Ty’coa’s voice echoed.

Steven could picture his wingman as he tore down the length of the MOONLANCER no doubt at full burner. “Breaking now!” Steven barked as he erupted from behind the Battlecruiser and executed an almost ninety degree change in course using his VMSs.

“Locked!” Ty’coa exclaimed from his cockpit as he thumbed his cannons.

The first JAGUAR Mark II flew right into the lethal storm of kinetic projectiles and the front of his fighter came apart right before his wide eyes. He didn’t have any chance to react as three Kinetic rounds punched through the bubble of his canopy and blew his head and chest into bloody pulp right before his fighter exploded into a small fireball. The second Kavalian fighter banked hard to the opposite direction, the explosion searing the edges of his fighter’s frame as he turned frantically away from the debris. Ty’coa watched as the Kavalian fighter executed a sharp turn and roll and suddenly ended up behind him as he swept out away from the Union Battlecruiser.

“This one appears to have some skill Steven!” Ty’coa spoke as he dipped one wing and sent his TEMPEST into a hairsplitting inverted turn.

“It won’t save him!” Steven’s voice echoed.

Ty’coa saw a flash of steel gray and black and crimson and corkscrewed his fighter over as Steven came in from above with all four of his pulse cannons blazing.

“Got you fucker!” Steven’s voice filled his helmet and Ty’coa could only smile under his helmet as the explosion of the Kavalian fighter caused his TEMPEST to shudder slightly.

Steven jerked his head around and found no targets in the immediate area, the brief chase and combat having pulled him and Ty’coa away from the main battle taking place above the planet now. He glanced down between his legs at his sensor display as he felt more than saw Ty’coa drop into formation on his right and he quickly gauged what was happening. It had descended to a pitched battle between fighters and ships right now. No one whipping through the stars was concerned or even thinking about what may have been happening on the surface of the planet beneath them. From the dozens of recognition signals he was getting Steven could tell that the fighter squadrons from every ship involved had begun to merge together as the individual battles between pilots played out.

He could see a Hodge Podge squadron of TEMPEST fighters from both the ARIZONA and NORMYA’S LIGHT banking together and turning back towards the Kavalian Fleet Group. They were no doubt talking to one another now since they were maneuvering so closely. As he looked up Steven could see the streaks of Type One Plasma turrets crisscrossing the stars all around them as the HORNET and his old ship NORMYA’S LIGHT teed off side by side while their escorts maneuvered all around them and they were taking it to the Kavalian Fleet Group something fierce. Steven knew Admiral Thodias commanded NORMYA’S LIGHT and had since the ship’s inception. He knew the man to be supremely intelligent and pseudo reckless at times. Martin had chosen him to command Dysea’s ship for this very reason. He was much like his Queen in demeanor and while outwardly they could appear as friendly as anything, both of them could become hissing pit vipers if aroused.

“The Kavalians are confused Steven.” Ty’coa’s voice filled his helmet. “No doubt our arrival has thrown them into something of a fit!”

Steven nodded. “I think Sa’sur’s first volley of Mark 22s took out their command ship!” He echoed.

“That would indicate they have a centralized system of command!” Ty’coa announced. “Kill the leaders and it throws the rest of them into chaos!”

“That could work in our favor!” Steven snapped.

Steven saw brief flashes off to his right and behind him and he turned his head quickly to see the ARIZONA ripple fire nearly forty missiles at the three GREAT SOULS that had not yet entered the battle. The entire front of the ship was ablaze as the SCIMITAR swept over the top of her, her Type One Plasma cannons blasting away as fast as her computers and crew could make them. It didn’t match the speed of the ARIZONA’s fire control systems, as not a moment after the last missile cleared the launchers in the ship’s nose; the huge ship turned away slightly and suddenly joined the SCIMITAR in pounding the Kavalian fleet with Type One turrets. The ARIZONA’s rate of fire was far superior however, and her gun batteries began to obliterate a DIEROY, even as that ship began to return fire to no avail. Miranda and Sa’sur both were smart enough to press their gain from the ARIZONA Attack Wing’s stunning entry into the battle, and they were using every advantage they could now. They were keeping the pressure on the Kavalian fleet and going after the secondary ships while leaving the GREAT SOULS to their many missiles.

The Kavalian ships however, they were giving as good as they got, and Steven could see the heavily damaged hulls of at least three MOONLANCERS and four NOVAs drifting with heavy damage and fires burning inside. As AWC, Steven’s TEMPEST had a single small computer that could track all of his Air Group. As the recognition signals of the fighters came up Ty’coa heard Steven swear.

“Steven?” His wingman barked.

“We’ve lost twenty-eight Ty’coa!” Steven growled angrily. “Fuck!”

Ty’coa’s onboard sensors began to chirp loudly and he looked quickly over his shoulder. “We have problems of our own!” He snapped. “Four more inbound from eleven o’clock! They look like Mark IIs!”

Steven’s head whipped around as well and his wolf eyes quickly found the telltale sign of fighter engines using full burners. “Shit!” He swore. “On me! We’ll duck under and around the MOONLANCER again!”

“Rolling now!” Ty’coa exclaimed as both TEMPESTs rolled to their left and slashed under the MOONLANCER’s main engine with four Kavalian fighters in hot pursuit.

The battle was a long way from over.

THE WILDS

.09 LY FROM KRANEK

BLOODLETTER MARK IV-CLASS CRUISER

BEL'LA D'VENORSH (Honor of Silence)

Admiral Valin Esavorna walked calmly onto the bridge of his personal ship even as he was pulling his shirt on over the wide shoulders and muscular arms. Nine thousand four hundred and nineteen years old he may have been, but he was still in superb physical condition due to the position he had held up until only three days before, and though gray was just beginning to touch the temples of his jet black hair, he was still considered a very handsome man by many female vampires, purebloods and turned females alike.

“Speak to me Micardo!” He barked seeing his long time aide standing beside the ship’s senior Captain. The BEL'LA D'VENORSH was his ship.

Valin Esavorna had hand picked the entire crew of nine thousand men and women, and he had not cared that many of them were turned vampires and not purebloods like the crews of the other ships of senior officers within the Venorik Elghinn. These men and women were completely loyal to him no matter the reason and they were the very best among the hundreds of thousands within the High Coven Fleet as far as he was concerned. Valin looked at his most senior aide as he walked up. Micardo was an exceptional officer, extremely skilled and highly intelligent. He had been with Valin for eight hundred of his nearly three thousand four hundred years of life. The man was like a machine in what he could remember and dictate and it was a skill that Valin had used many times through the years. Valin also knew Micardo wanted to take his daughter Cirith as his wife. In his limited view of things, Micardo assumed if Cirith was his wife that he would forever be tied to Valin and all that he did. Micardo did not know or understand the closeness of father and daughter, and Valin had long ago decided he would never pressure Cirith into something she did not want. Micardo may have been handsome and an outstanding officer and agent of the Venorik Elghinn, but he was obviously not a man Cirith found in the least bit attractive. Valin knew his only child was eccentric in many ways, and he also knew that together they had several secrets that no one but the two of them shared now.

With Aikiro dead, they were the only ones who knew the biggest secret they shared, and it was the one that had allowed Valin to keep Aikiro from killing Cirith the moment it was discovered she was conceived. It had been only a single night between the two of them, a night of superior sex no doubt as the Empress was a lush woman and surprisingly adventurous, but a single night no less. Aikiro had practically ordered him into her bed, and Valin complied not only because he was a man, but because he did not fear Veldruk as so many others did. It was a night that Valin Esavorna would always remember, for it gave him his beautiful daughter Cirith. If not for one of Aikiro’s handmaidens, he might not still be here, and that woman now lived a very safe and comfortable life far from the hustle and bustle of the Coven capital and she had taken a large role in raising Cirith in her formative years. When this woman had contacted him and told him Aikiro had discovered she was pregnant and planned on aborting the child, Valin immediately set in motion a plan that would see him rise to the top of his profession, and put him in a position to insure his daughter’s survival as well as his own. He had given Aikiro a choice essentially; carry the child to term or risk Valin exposing their relationship and what he was for everyone to see. Aikiro knew this knowledge would destroy whatever power base she had, so she agreed to the terms. When Cirith was born, Valin spirited her away within hours and Aikiro never saw her again. Throughout the many years that followed, Valin used his position within the Venorik Elghinn to eliminate many ‘problems’ that Aikiro instructed him too, and in recognition of this, his rank within the Venorik Elghinn rose steadily.

The moment Aikiro died at the hands of the Lycavorian First Oracle, Valin Esavorna knew they would not be safe. The instant Aikiro’s files reverted to Yuri, she would order a massive manhunt for Cirith in an attempt to kill her and bury her mother’s sins deep. In truth, Valin had already decided that he was going to take Cirith and depart High Coven space as early as next year, and take as many of those who thought like him with him as well. It was why he had so readily accepted and then helped the Insurgent known as The General behind many screens of deception. On the path they were currently going down, Valin truly believed the High Coven would cease to exist in less than a decade. He saw the full lives the vampires within the Union had, the freedoms and influence many carried, and he knew that the Union was their future if they were to have one. Aikiro’s death only sped up his plans by several months.

“We’ve dropped from LSD operation and...” Micardo began.

“Yes... I knew that the minute it happened!” Valin barked. “Now tell me why? We are still four hours from Kranek and had not planned to exit our last jump until we were within the planet’s system radius!”

Micardo nodded. “Yes sir... we...”

He stopped talking when the doors to the bridge opened and Cirith followed in her father’s steps as she moved with consummate grace and elegance onto the bridge, but did so in an urgent matter. Her waist length black hair was pulled over one shoulder and ornately braided. The dark gray fatigue pants conformed to her lush frame like a glove, while the fatigue top strained over the top of her full breasts. Cirith knew she was considered exquisitely beautiful by many. She had yet to meet a pureblood who had not tried to gain her favor in some way in all her years. Unlike many pureblood vampires, Cirith was not one to shy away from pleasure, and she accepted it where she found it regardless of the sex of her partner. She had had several relationships with fellow female vampires, but never something that had meant anything with a man. She was looking for something far more than the men she had met up until this point had ever come close to giving her.

She walked right up to her father and stopped. “What is going on?” She asked. “We have reverted back to normal space before our allotted timeframe.”

“Micardo and Captain Drdanu were just going to tell us why.” Valin spoke.

The man who commanded Valin’s ship was not afraid of his commander as Micardo suspected. The Admiral’s senior aide was just a micromanaging fool. Lirur Drdanu stepped forward. “I have had our people monitoring communications throughout The Wilds as you ordered Admiral. We...”

Valin looked at him. “Lirur... considering what we are all now guilty of, and what you and I have faced through the years... it seems rather pompous of me to expect you to continue to refer to me officially don’t you think?” He stated.

Lirur smirked and nodded his head. He motioned to the communications station as Micardo’s face took on an unhappy expression. “We began picking up open communications several minutes ago Valin. Mostly between civilian settlements on different worlds, but all of them saying the same thing.”

“What’s that?” Valin asked.

“Apparently the KFI has just conducted a rather extensive assassination operation against the Leonidas family. One that appears to be still ongoing.” Lirur answered seeing their eyes go wide in shock. “They have succeeded where the Empress failed. It is being reported that King Leonidas is dead and the Queen Aricia is severely injured and possibly dead as well. Our sensors also told us that there is currently a very large space battle over Kranek where Dysea and Isabella are known to be.”

“Vith uns'aa ulu krik'vlicss!” Valin exclaimed. (Fuck me to tears)

Lirur smiled and nodded his head. “I said essentially the same thing. When we began getting these COMS, I tapped into the open Netnews channels broadcasting within the Union. There may be some sort of military communications blackout, but their Netnews channels are still allowed to broadcast. They have confirmed the death of Leonidas; it was broadcast live across the Union by accident it seems. There have been at least six other attacks across Sparta targeting Leonidas family members or assets according to the Netnews with no reports of casualties. And the whereabouts of his children are also in question.”

Cirith stepped forward now. “In question?” She asked softly looking at Lirur. “What do you mean in question?”

Micardo’s eyes narrowed as he nodded his head. He took her question as something more than casual interest. “It appears that, from what some of the Netnews channels are reporting anyway, is that there was a falling out of some sort between King Leonidas and his oldest son Androcles after Aikiro’s failed attacks. There is no way to confirm this however.” He shrugged his broad shoulders indifferently. “There are many unsubstantiated rumors that are beginning to circulate on the Netnews channels, but all of them have confirmed that his son’s ship left Earth’s system with most of his older children as well as Zarah Leonidas, the target of Dante and Javier’s twisted plot. Personally, it does not surprise me. They are two dominant men and regardless that they are father and son, they will clash.”

Cirith shook her head. “No.” She stated confidently. “They are too close, father and son. Nothing my mother could have done would drive a wedge between them. Nothing anyone could do would do this.”

“We don’t know that Cirith!” Micardo spat.

“I know that!” She snarled back at him. “And I have studied them and their family far more than you!”

“What about this attack on Kranek Lirur?” Valin asked as he moved to the plot board on his bridge. “This was our destination.”

Lirur nodded. “It is the reason I ordered us to drop from LSD operation.” He answered. “Long range sensors initially detected two Kavalian Fleet Groups. One coming from the Torana Lightning Nebula here, and the other jumping in to sector six here. Two LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers and a single Strike Wing for the Union.” He explained pointing on the board.

Valin shook his head. “Not good odds.” He said softly shaking his head. “Not good.” He looked at Lirur. “Wait... you said initially?” Valin asked.

Lirur nodded. “We are no longer able to scan directly into the system.”

“What? Why?” Valin asked.

“Something is jamming our sensors.” Micardo answered.

Valin looked at him. “The BEL'LA D'VENORSH has the most sophisticated sensors the High Coven has ever developed!” He snapped. “I should know... I helped to procure most of the technology from the Science Division!”

“Micardo is correct however Valin.” Lirur stated. “Exactly four minutes twenty-two seconds ago, the entire system was jammed. We’ve tried spectral scans, phased motion scans, even multilevel tachyon beams. Nothing will penetrate the system. Whatever it is... it is operating on a Hypermorphic Resonation that we have never seen before.”

“Hypermorphic Resonation is not achievable with the current known power sources. That’s impossible Lirur.” Valin spoke.

“Yes I know. The only thing we were able to detect, and only for nine point three seconds the first instance and eleven point four seconds the next were massive levels of quantum particle spikes!” Lirur said.

“Quantum particle spikes?” Cirith asked moving even closer.

“Quantum Particle Spikes are the supposed residual effects of Quantum Fusion LSD Drive Coils.” Micardo spoke looking at her. “They...”

Cirith looked at him with her dark eyes. “I know what they are from Micardo!” She snapped.

“Quantum Drives are only theoretical.” Valin said quickly. “Even our best engineers could not develop anything that would work from the remains of the Mindvoice Ship that Aikiro had on Nauwora.”

Cirith looked at him. “The Union has had a working MV ship to study for over two decades father.” Cirith stated. “Is it not reasonable to assume they have been able to develop this technology?”

“The Lycavorians?” Micardo asked exasperated. “Cirith... you give them far too much credit.”

Cirith met his eyes with obvious contempt. “And you do not give them enough!” She hissed. “You still carry within you the falsehood inbred in many of our people Micardo. That we are better than them somehow when we are not! It is the Lycavorians who have withstood the test of time and millennia to rise to the position they now have and they have done it without help from anyone! And others flock to join them because of what they offer! Their adaptability is without peer, their sense of purpose and honor unmatched. When it came to be that Martin Leonidas returned to them and took his place as King, he returned to them their faith and the desire to act upon their instincts! The one thing that they had let slip during their slavery.” Cirith shook her head slowly.

“If we are so better than them, why is it we could never conquer them Micardo?” She snapped at him. “Even through the thousands of years of slavery to Aikiro and Veldruk they never once let that spark of freedom die! Through everything that has happened they have persevered. And they have been killing our kind for far longer than you and I have been alive! We would be wise to take lessons from them.” She looked at her father. “The Kavalians may have succeeded in killing Leonidas himself, perhaps others of his family as well, but they do not comprehend the wrath they will have unlocked with their actions father.”

Valin looked at the expression on Micardo’s face and could barely hold back his laughter. He had given Cirith access to every piece of knowledge he was able to come by as she grew. No matter where it came from and no matter what it represented, she had studied it. Her mind was like a sponge, and Valin had encouraged her to seek whatever knowledge she desired. One of the side effects of that was her complete distaste for individuals who thought they were superior to others simply because of what they were.

“You’re... you’re joking of course?” Micardo exclaimed finally.

Cirith looked at him again. “For the answer to that foolish statement all I will do is direct you to the millions of our people who call the Union home. At least they had the foresight to look past everything we have been taught to believe and discover the truth for themselves.” She looked at her father once more. “We should not dismiss it simply because we don’t believe it possible father. We have seen much that we did not believe possible, and we have seen it first hand.”

“I don’t intend to dismiss it Cirith.” Valin answered. “At the moment however... we can not see into the system where we are going, and I do not wish to blunder into the middle of a battle and get us all killed.” He looked at Lirur. “Cha’talla’s tribe on the surface Lirur... how large do we suspect they have grown?”

Lirur turned to the female vampire officer standing just to the side. “Neona?”

The officer held out the data pad to Valin. “We had been scanning Kranek ever since coming in range of it with our long range sensors Admiral.” She stated. “There appears to be one major settlement on the northern continent. It is situated between several mountain ranges. There looked to be several smaller settlements scattered about the northern continent as well, but the majority of the Akruvian lifesigns were coming from the largest.”

“How many?” Valin asked.

“There is no way to be certain Admiral.” She answered. “Whoever built the structures within the settlement used materials that have high concentrations of Lactium Ore in them. This type ore scatters sensor quality at greater distances as you know.”

Valin nodded. “Something an old war horse like Cha’talla would do.” He said. “Your best guess then?”

“Cha’talla’s tribe was nearly forty thousand strong when it escaped the Coven.” Neona said. “We can assume they would want to rebuild. Repopulate. I estimate at least a thirty percent rise in numbers since they settled here. And that is just among the Akruvian and does not include the other lifesigns we detected.”

“Others?” Cirith asked.

“Limian mostly.” She answered with a nod. “Nearly all the elves our sensors detected were within the Immortal settlement.”

“Elves?” Valin gasped.

Lirur nodded his head. “Some of the rumors we have heard over the years said that elves live freely among Cha’talla’s tribe. There are said to be marriages between Immortal and elves. That Esther Suira somehow was able to cure them of the effect they have on female elves.”

“There is also the distinct possibility that the intelligence we have stating that Cha’talla and this Esther are Blessed Husband and Blessed Wife is very true. Their children, if they have any, they would be...” Neona stopped as they looked at her.

“They would be what?” Valin asked.

“They would be the perfect combination of pureblood genes from both our species and Akruvian. They would have all the skills of their parents sir.” She said.

Lirur shook his head slowly. “Our ability to blur, our strength and skills combined with the Immortal’s strength and will. Their children would be...”

Cirith nodded. “They would be devastating.” She said softly. “And my mother wanted to kill them.”

“Yes...” He said softly. “I just didn’t... I never thought that could be true.” Valin said. He stood up and turned away swearing under his breath. “Damn! All that we had hoped for is coming true and we are within reach of it!” He looked at Lirur. “Where are the others Lirur?”

“Holding position at the rendezvous as we ordered.” Lirur answered.

“How many?” Valin asked.

Lirur nodded. “All of them made it Valin. Eighty-seven ships.” He stated. “Baleve was the last one to depart and the overall Fleet Commanders were just beginning to realize they had ships and officers dropping off the grid. “Moran will be incensed when he discovers what has happened. He had heard nothing from the Venorik Elghinn when he departed.”

“They will do nothing.” Valin spoke with a crooked smile. “Not after the data pad I left First Director Onelala.”

“What did you tell him?” Lirur asked.

“I told him that if any attempt to pursue us was made I would release the name of every High Coven agent working outside the borders of our space to an information broker in The Wilds who would then release it over every public channel he could find.”

Lirur’s eyes were wide when Valin finished. “You... you realize you will have signed your own death warrant by threatening him in such a manner.”

Valin shrugged. “I have no intention of going back anyway.” He answered.

Cirith took a deep breath finally and looked up. “We could always take the direct approach father.” She said.

Valin turned to look at her. “The direct approach?”

Cirith nodded her head. “Our sensors may be jammed, but our secure communications equipment is completely operational. We can localize their channels and use our own Venorik Elghinn systems to bypass the jamming. I doubt they would know the frequencies we use or the subspace transmitter signals we have. It would be impossible to jam them. We may not be able to communicate with the Union ships, but we could certainly contact the settlement.”

“And say what?” Micardo spat. “Cha'talla and his tribe have aligned themselves with the Union, that much is obvious! Why else would Queen Dysea and Queen Isabella be here? If they are aligned with the Union, then they will not be happy to talk to us after what that fool Aikiro and her stupid followers did!”

“Micardo is right Cirith.” Valin spoke. “Dysea is the more politically astute of Leonidas’s Queens, but she is by no means a gentle wolf. She is just as skilled and deadly as his pureblood mate Aricia. And she is also a female elf. Isabella is her lover and with only exception for Aricia, perhaps the most militant of his Queens. They would not have aligned with Cha'talla if they detected even a remote chance that they retained any of the ways of the Immortals still under the boot heel of the Coven. If they are there, it could only mean the rumors are true and they have amazingly formed some sort of pact.”

Cirith nodded. “Yes... I know father, yet their presence on Kranek means that they do trust him a great deal as well. If you did not... would you allow your first elven Queen to remain among them so freely?” She spoke.

Valin shook his head. “Never.”

Cirith nodded. “Lirur... you said you detected two LEONIDAS IIAs before the jamming began?”

Lirur nodded. “Yes.”

“Were you able to identify them?” Cirith asked looking at him.

Lirur nodded. “Dysea’s ship NORMYA’S LIGHT and the SCIMI...” Lirur’s eyes grew wide as his answer died on his lips. “The SCIMITAR!”

Cirith nodded. “Prince Androcles’s ship.” She stated looking at her father. “Now we know where his children came too.”

“What difference does that make?” Micardo asked. “After Aikiro’s attack it would be a sound tactical move to evacuate Earth.”

“The difference is a concept within the Lycavorian people that you constantly fail to grasp Micardo.” Cirith said. “Honor.”

“What does honor have to do with it?” He quipped.

“By all reports... official and unofficial that we have gathered in the years since Leonidas returned to the Lycavorians, the one thing we have heard most about above all else is his sense of Spartan honor.” Cirith said. “When he discovered his true nature and who his father was, he embraced the mentality of the Spartan people his father so loved and guided. The Spartans of Old Earth lived for honor. They lived for each other. They followed a code. That is what he has instilled in his people since he returned.” Cirith choked up for a moment, not understanding why the death of a man she had never met affected her so profoundly. “If... even if he is dead... that honor would live on in his people so profound is the impact he has had on them. And most certainly in his mates and children.” She looked at her father. “If Dysea is there... if his children are there... then something happened between them and Cha'talla’s tribe that brought them together as you said father. Something weighing heavily in their honor based society. And it would fit perfectly with the old ways of the Akruxian people before Veldruk conquered them.”

“That still does not equate to a reason why they would trust us after what Aikiro did Cirith.” Valin said.

“None of you are seeing it?” She asked with a smile.

They looked at her for a long moment and only Valin grinned as the others stood there stupefied. “What is there to see?” Micardo snapped finally.

“They have no reason to trust us.” Cirith said. “However... they would have no reason not to trust one who has already gained their confidence and acceptance and embraced a new life as Arrarn Leonidas’s wife and mate alongside my sister Princess Narice.”

Valin’s eyes were smiling. “Toria!” He spoke.

Cirith nodded her head. “Toria Dellion. One of the Venorik Elghinn’s most promising young intelligence officers. A young woman who was known within the Venorik Elghinn to hold great distaste for Aikiro. And by all accounts now one of Arrarn Leonidas’s wives. She knows us... she knows your father.” She stated. “She also knows of the tenuous relationship between you and Aikiro, though not the reasons for it. We contact her and we ask her to be our conduit. We ask her to convince them we are not part of my dearly deceased mother’s foul bunch of cronies. She would still have her Venorik Elghinn implant and I doubt it would be deactivated.”

“You doubt?” Micardo spoke. “She has been among the Leonidas family for months now. By all accounts one of Arrarn Leonidas’s wives for several weeks at least. At least as long as Princess Narice. Why would she not work to have the implant deactivated?”

Cirith smiled. “Because she is a woman Micardo.” She said. “And she is not a fool. She will not toss aside something that might help her in the future protect what she has now found with Arrarn and Narice.”

“What reason would she have to trust us Cirith?” Lirur asked. “Your father, you, many of us are from the very organization she secretly abhorred. Now that she has escaped and found a new life as you say, why would she trust us?”

“We need to convince her our intentions are real.” Cirith said.

“How do we do that?” Micardo spat.

Cirith looked at her father. “We tell her who I am. What I am. That will at least keep them from blowing us out of the stars. And it may very well get us the meeting we want with one of Leonidas’s Queens. Preferably Isabella since I believe she would understand us better.”

Valin shook his head. “That was not part of our plan Cirith.” He stated. “Not yet.”

“If we wish to continue into the future, on the road all of us have chosen, it is the only way father. You know this.” Cirith said.

“It would expose who you are far sooner than we had planned daughter. The plan was to insure you were within the safety of the Union, under their personal protection before revealing this information.” Valin said.

“What plan is this?” Micardo asked. “What are you talking about?”

“We no longer have a choice father, considering what the Kavalians are now doing.” Cirith said ignoring him. “They will not kill me, nor will they kill you. It is up to us to make sure they see we are not the enemy, nor those who follow us.”

“Admiral... you are keeping information from the rest of us.” Micardo spoke looking at Valin.

Valin glared at him. “If it protects my daughter Micardo... there is much I won’t reveal.” He stated. “This was information you did not need to know.”

“If we can make them see we are not the enemy father they...” Cirith began.

Micardo shook his head. “Just how do you plan on doing that Cirith?” He asked keeping his tone level. “After what Aikiro has done they...”

Cirith lifted her left arm, her uniform sleeves extending all the way down to her wrist. No one had ever seen her wearing anything even remotely revealing, and never without sleeves of some kind. The flash of silver/white light caused everyone on the bridge to stagger back and then a millisecond later, the Shi Viska was humming on her arm, and leveled directly at a wide eyed Micardo’s face.

“Phraktos dormagyn uns'aa!” Lirur gasped. (Gods preserve me)

Cirith tilted her head slightly as she looked at Micardo. “This is how I know they will not kill me Micardo.” She stated calmly. “I can’t say the same about you.”

“Captain! Admiral!” The young Com Officer turned from his station and looked at them, interrupting the tense moment. “Admiral... I’ve been monitoring the COM channels, trying to detect something from within Kranek’s system!”

“And?” Valin asked meeting his eyes with a small smile at his daughter’s display.

“I’m detecting a very old High Coven War channel being used on a low frequency Beta Wave network, and it’s coming from with the Kranek system.” The man answered. “It... I want to say it is very similar to the old Immortal War Channels used over a millennia ago.”

“Source?” Lirur asked moving to the man’s station his eyes never leaving Cirith and where she stood.

“It’s heavily modified... and mixed in with random space echoes... but it is there.” He stammered his own eyes wide. “If I had to guess admiral... and I think I’d be right on... I’d say it was an old Immortal War Channel.”

Valin stood up. “Immortal War Channel?” He asked surprised. “They have not been used in centuries.”

Cirith looked at the man as she lowered her arm and willed away the Shi Viska. In a simple flash it vanished back into Flat Space and was gone, but leaving many surprised expressions and many questions, especially from the wide eyed Micardo “Is it coming from the planet?” She asked.

The COM officer shook his head. “It’s being directed at the planet Lady Cirith.” He said. “And it’s coming from a ship in the area?”

Lirur looked at Valin. “We know Aikiro was trying to find Cha’talla. She has been for years. Would she have used exiled Immortals for this?”

Valin shook his head. “She barely trusted her own children after what Vonis did. No... she would never allow exiled Immortals to return and work for her. She would think they all worked for him.”

“Then it could only be one thing.” Cirith said.

Valin’s dark eyes grew wide as only one thing entered his mind when he heard his officer and his daughter speak. “Mercenaries!” Valin was many things, but indecisive was not one of them. “Lirur... how soon can our other ships join with us if they jump in the next three minutes?”

“The rendezvous is only two light years away.” Lirur replied instantly. “They can be here in under ten minutes.”

Valin nodded. “Contact them. Order them to jump and use our beacon as their homing guide. I want them here yesterday!” He barked. “COM officer... pulled Agent Dellion’s code from the database and initiate a secure transmission with her.”

“She may not respond Admiral.” The COM officer spoke turning to do his duty.

Cirith stepped up next to her father. “She will answer me.” She said.

KRANEK IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

Cha’talla looked at the Limian and human men standing just outside the massive steel and concrete doors of the settlement, as well as the hundreds of men, women and children who were strung out behind them.

“Contar... Robert?” Cha’talla exclaimed. “Why are you here? We warned you to escape into the mountains!”

“They landed a large force to the west of our settlement Cha’talla and cut us off.” The Limian replied. “It was the only route into the mountains! We had nowhere else to come! They are pushing in this direction even as we speak.”

“Contar... they are coming here. They are after us!” Cha’talla told him. “It will not be safe here!”

“We have lived in peace and cooperation for almost twenty years Cha’talla.” The human spoke. “We are not trained as you and your tribe. We do not stand a chance against these Kavalian animals!”

Cha’talla turned as Esther and Tir’ut appeared next to him. He needed only an instant to make a decision that was only another brick in the path he was blazing into the future for himself and his tribe. “Come inside!” He snapped. “All of you! Esther... take the women and children to the bunker! Any of you who are able to fight... no matter your skills... we will need your assistance!”

Robert nodded and stepped forward. “Give me a weapon! I’ll fight!”

Cha’talla watched as dozens of men and women also stepped forward determination set in their jaws. “Tir’ut... take those who wish to fight to the armory. Get them fitted. How many landed near your settlement Robert?”

“Several thousand at least.” The man answered.

“Did you see any heavy armor? Hover tanks? Artillery?” Cha'talla asked.

“No tanks... but as we crested the north ridge I turned back and saw them setting up what appeared to be plasma cannons.” He answered. “At least four that I saw.”

T'lolt had come up beside his brother and he heard Robert's answer. “Standard artillery battery.” He said watching as Cha'talla looked at him.

Cha'talla nodded. “We must assume they will be set up all around us. Tell Narice and Lisisa Leonidas this must be their first priority T'lolt.”

“They will have the T19 missiles protecting these artillery pieces brother.” T'lolt spoke to him.

Cha'talla nodded. “I know... but it can not be helped. If they are allowed to shell us they could bring down the entire settlement without ever setting foot inside the walls! Risks must be taken, and the Kavalians may be as yet unaware that we have dragons here! Lisisa and Narice will know this.”

T'lolt smiled a predator's smile. “That would be a nasty surprise for them.”

“Get them moving T'lolt.” Cha'talla said. “It only works in our favor if we attack them first.”

T'lolt nodded and began to move off as Esther was ushering women and children past where Cha'talla was standing. He turned back to Contar and Robert. “Come with me to our command center. Show me where you saw them setting up their artillery as best you are able. Dysea and Isabella are there, they are coordinating the overall defense.”

IMMORTAL COMMAND CENTER

“...Don't know where they came from Lady Dysea!” The Immortal soldier sitting at the two small sensor stations barked as he turned to look at Dysea and Isabella who stood around the large plot table that showed the settlement and the surrounding terrain for ten miles. “At least fifty Union ships and hundreds of fighters!”

“What is happening Kr'das?” Bella barked.

“Admiral Thodias pulled your ship into high orbit and joined with these new ships!” The man barked. “Their arrival took the Kavalians by surprise and your forces were able to get a significant first strike in! Many of the Kavalian GREAT SOUL Dreadnoughts are damaged or destroyed. The fighters are too numerous to count... and the battle is now ship to ship!”

“Can you tell who is winning Kr'das?” Dysea asked turning to look at him.

“No darthirii ilhar!” He answered. “Our sensors were never meant to track a full scale battle above us. I can't differentiate between fighters, only the larger ships!”

“Ground sensors?” Isabella snapped.

“All of them are working properly.” He answered. “You should be getting the feed from them now!”

Isabella and Dysea looked at the plot table as it came alive with numerous white and blue dots which signified friendly forces. The red dots appeared in three different locations and were far more numerous.

“They are massing to the west, south west and the north.” Bella spoke.

“They are the only areas where they could land so many troops.” Dysea said with a nod. “It could also work to our favor.”

Isabella looked at her and came to the same conclusion as Cha'talla had. “Have Lisisa and Narice hit them before they get situated for an assault.”

Dysea nodded. “If we don't... it will only be a matter of time before they breach the settlement walls.” She said.

Dysea knew that both she and Isabella were just barely holding it together, Dysea having even more difficulty for she was also wolf and not being able to sense her beloved mate within Mindvoice was even more pronounced. She was coming into full phase in only two more days, and her wolf blood was already burning for her Nauta Melme. It was a burning that would never be sated now and she was distraught over that.

“If these readings are accurate... we are looking at nearly a hundred thousand troops!” Bella spoke.

Dysea looked at her then. “They knew I was here Bella.” She stated plainly. “Who flies around with a hundred thousand ground troops in Troop Carriers? They knew I was here Bella! It is the only feasible explanation. And if they knew that it could only mean one thing.”

“Someone has betrayed us then.” She stated in agreement. “Someone very high up.” Isabella turned her head and cursed long and loud in the vampire ancient language. “I thought we had seen enough of traitors when Armetus conducted his purge!”

“Apparently that is not the case.” Dysea said. “We must...”

They turned as the doors slid open and Cha'talla emerged with the Limian and human man that Dysea had met before. They were the leaders of the next largest non-Akruxian civilian settlement on Kranek. She had met them before and had been impressed by their devotion to their people and the cooperation they and Cha'talla showed towards one another. Cha'talla led them right up to the plot board, standing close beside Dysea himself. Dysea didn't flinch at the closeness of the former Immortal Captain to Veldruk. She trusted the man implicitly, knowing that his life with Esther had changed him so completely. His son and her daughter were now husband and wife, just as devoted to one another as Cha'talla was to Esther, as she was... as she was to her Nauta Melme.

“Robert saw artillery setting up on this ridge.” Cha'talla stated as his finger touched the board.

Bella looked at the spot and shook her head. “Same elevation as us.” She stated. “They can lob artillery right into the settlement proper from there.”

Cha'talla nodded. “It is why I have told Lisisa and Narice to search for and destroy their artillery first.” He saw them both looked at him but they said nothing. They too knew that T19 missiles would be protecting those artillery pieces if the Kavalians had any idea there were dragons here. It was a huge risk.

“It can't be helped. We were just talking about that as well.” Bella spoke. “Cha'talla... you have defensive positions set up all along the outer settlement wall I assume?”

Cha'talla nodded. “Building the wall was two fold.” He spoke. “It protected us from the harshness of the northern winds during the winter, and it allowed for defensive positions to be built. Many of them are built right into the wall itself.”

“How thick?” Bella asked.

“Two feet of granite and steel.” Cha'talla replied. “But nothing that will stand against a sustained artillery assault. I never... I never thought it would be needed. We must go on the assumption they will breach the walls in at least one location and Fash'ka is making ready for this.”

Dysea looked at him now. “Forgive me Cha'talla.” She said softly. “We have brought... we have brought this down on you and your people.” She looked at the human and Limian. “We have brought this down on all of you.”

Robert Sutton lifted the Immortal SA80. “It would have happened sooner or later no matter what.” He stated. “Contar and I have built new lives here and we are going to defend it with the friends we have made.” He looked at Cha'talla and nodded his head. “I'll take the South wall.”

“I will take the north.” Contar spoke.

Then both men spun around and exited the command center leaving Cha'talla to watch them for a moment before turning back to Dysea and Isabella.

“When you make friends Cha'talla...” Isabella spoke. “You seem to make very loyal friends.”

“Again I must ask you to forgive me Cha'talla.” Dysea spoke. “We have...”

“Forgive you?” Cha'talla gasped looking at her with wide eyes. “You wish me to forgive you for beautiful Normya loving my son as my Blessed Wife loves me? You wish me to forgive you for her becoming Tir'ut's Blessed Wife? You wish me to forgive you for believing in us and trusting in me when you had no reason to?” Cha'talla shook his head slowly.

“No... I will never forgive you for that Dysea. Your faith in me... in us... Normya's love for Tir'ut. This... these are all things we would not have had without you. My son's Du'ased 'ranndi was the da'urzotreth wun l'et'zarreth that I needed to make things... to make things as they should be. It was the sign for me to finally let go of our past and embrace our future. I will never look back now! Never! Your enemies are our enemies... for you and your family are now part of my tribe. We are united as family now, and like you, family is everything to us.” (Kick in the ass) Cha'talla took a deep breath for it was the most emotional speech he had ever given in his lifetime outside of Esther's company and he had meant every word. “If these Kavalian dogs want you... then they will have to go through us to get to you. And it will not be as easy as they seem to think.”

Dysea reached out and took his hand in hers, squeezing it. “Thank you Cha'talla.” She said softly.

“There is nothing to thank me for.” He stated. “As my Blessed Wife Esther is so fond of telling me... I’m not as dense as I make myself out to be.”

Dysea couldn’t bring herself to laugh at the obvious intent of humor but she nodded her head and turned back to the plot board. “Denali and Aradace are scouting the north right now with Malic and Nyla. They are staying low to the treetops so that any T19s the Kavalians have cannot track them. Eliani is with Ja’narie setting up the school for trauma cases. It is the largest building in the center of the settlement and the most fortified.” She spoke. “Normya and Tir’ut will maintain the bunker that safeguards the young ones and the civilians. Arrarn and Toria will guide the STRIKERS we have once the Kavalians commit to an attack. They are standing by with your Runners on the southern continent Cha’talla and...” Dysea stopped and took a deep breath.

Cha’talla looked at her and noticed she had not released his hand. He squeezed her small hand in his and watched her turn once more to look at him. “Dysea... you are entitled to...”

Isabella watched as Dysea shook her head and reached up to touch his cheek. “We do not have the luxury of mourning right now.” She said. “When... when this is over.”

Cha’talla reached up and covered her hand with his on his cheek. “Be strong through your pain Dysea.” He looked at Isabella. “Both of you. We will need your strength this day.”

Dysea turned and looked at Isabella. “We will be.” She said. “I was able to speak with Andro briefly and let him know everything that is happening here and he was able to tell me what he has heard from Earth. He is talking with Panos, Aihola and Selene since everyone else seems to be off the grid.”

“Aricia?” Isabella asked with concern in her voice.

Dysea shook her head. “He doesn’t know that much and neither did they. Panos is under heavy guard around his home ever since this began. Aihola can speak with Tarifa and Isra, but she has not tried because of the fighting. She does not want to distract them. The Durcunusaan has locked down Earth tighter than when we first liberated it from the High Coven. He has spoken with Admiral Joarl and Riall as well but only briefly. Gorgo and Dasha are safe with the little ones at the sanctuary. He is unable to get in touch with Armetus or Marci from the Krypteria. They...” She paused and Isabella saw the intense pain flash across her face.

Isabella’s eyes narrowed. “Dysea?”

“The Kavalians destroyed the Senate Building Bella.” She said finally meeting her eyes. “The entire structure was brought down. The casualties will be enormous as it was in the middle of a work day. Deia... Deia and For’mya were inside the Senate Building.”

Isabella’s hands went to her mouth in horror. “No!” She gasped.

“Nothing is known at this time according to Andro.” Dysea said trembling as she spoke. “But he can not feel For’mya within Mindvoice any longer. He is distraught and barely holding it together. Just as we are.”

“Arrarn... the others...” Isabella asked quickly.

Dysea shook her head. “We... we must keep it from them until we survive what is happening around us. Andro agrees. It is... it is too much to expect them to be able to function if they know...” Dysea took a deep breath as tears rolled down her cheeks. “He has heard from Admiral Omore; Melyanna and the others made it off Hadaria before the Kavalians began landing additional troops. Since they declared themselves independent of the Union, Andro does not believe it is linked with the attacks underway, though they did try to stop her from leaving.” She met Isabella’s eyes. “Other than that... we know nothing. He was going to try and contact Resumar using a Mark II Booster and he is in direct communication with Miranda Lorian of the ARIZONA. They are the ones who entered the system only minutes ago. Thodias informed me that they are heavily engaged, but they are holding their own.”

“They are outnumbered Dysea.” Cha’talla said.

Dysea met his eyes. “We are used to that Cha’talla.” She told him. She turned back to Isabella. “Bella... you should join Normya and Tir’ut.”

“No! I will remain here with you!” Isabella snapped.

“Bella... you are five months pregnant with Nauta Melme’s son. Our son. The son you have wanted to give him for so many years. The son whom we all have wanted you to have. I will not see you risk that now. You will go with Normya and Tir’ut and at the first sign that things are breaking down you will use the bunker’s emergency exit and get off this planet.” Dysea spoke.

“Ussta She-elf... you...” Isabella began to protest. “I am pregnant not... crippled!”

“Iglata uns'aa ussta ssin'urn Isabella.” Dysea spoke in almost a whisper. (Promise me my beautiful Isabella) “Usstan shlu'ta naut noa dos 'zil al 'zil riluss dkinoss.” (I cannot lose you as well as everyone else)

Isabella was silent for a long moment before she finally nodded her head. Dysea was right she knew. They had no word from Earth, only word from Anja that they were off Hadaria; they did not know who was alive in their family outside of those on Kranek and Andro who was returning to Earth even as they spoke according to Denali. “Very well.” She stated quietly. “But I don’t like it.”

“Yet you know one of us must survive.” Dysea said softly. “If anything happens to us... Androcles will need brothers to help him avenge us in the future, for you know that is exactly what our son will do.”

Isabella nodded and moved around the table to stand next to her. She pressed close to her elven lover and fellow queen and they shared a soft kiss of great feeling and love. “Sat dro ussta il darthirii.” She whispered. (Stay alive my she elf)

“I will certainly attempt too.” Dysea told her as she nuzzled Isabella’s throat.

“Kr’das...” Cha’talla barked. “Escort Lady Isabella to the bunker and then return here to your duties.”

The large Immortal got to his feet without hesitation. “As you order!”

Isabella squeezed Dysea’s hand before turning to follow the hulking Immortal soldier. Dysea turned to look at Cha’talla once more. “I will have Zarah and Lucia here with me. Zarah is an excellent engineer and she can help with routing power where it needs to go. Where will you position yourself?” She asked him.

Cha’talla stabbed the plot board. “Here!” He stated immediately. “I can monitor the three areas most likely to be breached and with you here in the command center directing Arrarn and the others we can at least let them know we will not go down easily. I can assigned more of my trusted men here?”

Dysea shook her head. “They will be needed elsewhere.” She stated. Dysea once more did something Cha’talla never expected, but to him it was only another sign that his future and the future of his tribe was now squarely on the path that would take them well into the future. If they had one after today that is. Dysea wrapped her arms around his waist and hugged him tightly, holding in her tears, but taking some measure of comfort from him. Bewildered as to what to do, Cha’talla loosely put his arms around her, and then pulled her tight as a friend would embrace a friend.

“We... we will prevail this day Dysea Leonidas.” He spoke softly. “And when you strike out to seek vengeance for what they have done this day, I will be beside you and your family, for our two families are now entwined for all time.”

Dysea pulled her head back and looked up into his face. Her emerald eyes were moist, but she refused to succumb to the sorrow coursing through her. She needed to be strong for everyone else. Nauta Melme would expect her to be strong.

“The day your son saved our daughter you became family Cha’talla of the Immortals.” She said squeezing his arms tightly. “Nauta Melme knew this. And he welcomed it. It only showed him that saving T’lolt all those years ago was the best thing he could have done.”

“To the future then.” Cha’talla said.

“Let us insure we have a future to witness my friend.” Dysea said nodding her head.

KRANEK FAR NORTHERN CONTINENT EIGHTY-THREE KILOMETERS FROM IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

“...says they are setting up here on this ridge.” Lisisa spoke as she and Narice knelt before the portable map chart on the ground between them. The other Coven riders were gathered around as tightly as they could while the heads and necks of dozens of dragons were looking in over the top of the riders. If the situation was not so dire, it would have been comical to many people who witnessed it. “We need to eliminate the artillery batteries before they begin shelling the settlement or else all will be lost.”

“Princess Lisisa... is it true what we have heard?” One of the Coven riders asked. “Is the King... are your father and Torma dead? Did the Kavalians kill them?”

“Sebel!” Narice hissed in angry.

The tan scaled head of a dragon butted the rider heavily in the shoulder. That is not an appropriate question to ask brother. Everyone heard the dragon speak.

The vampire looked at the dragon. "If they were able to kill King Leonidas and Torma Fanir... we must assume..." The man began to reply.

"Yes!" Lisisa spoke firmly after drawing in a breath. "Yes... it's true!" She looked up and let her eyes sweep along the gathered faces and muzzles of the riders and dragons. "We... we are all threatened here." She continued. "We will... we will mourn my father and Torma if... when we survive this day." Lisisa reached up and placed her palm on Jeth's muzzle. He had remained silent for the most part since feeling the death of his father. "We..."

"Listen to me!" Narice exclaimed rising to her feet. "All of you!" She looked around at the many pairs of eyes now focused on her. "We traveled to Earth not really knowing each other. Not knowing our bonded ones. My mother's only thought was to control us! Make us instruments to further her plans for domination! Androcles, Lisisa, Denali... all of them. They took us in and began to show us what we could be. We... we have become what my mother feared we would become. We have become bonded pairs... but with our own wills and our own values! Many of us have become friends to Athani Leonidas... a Kavalian. A member of the species who have terrorized the Coven for decades. We learned from her that they are not all the same and we became friends with her!" Narice looked all around. "Don't you see... don't you see what we have become!"

"Even after she perpetrated such a heinous act against Zarah... Andro's first thought was not how to punish us, but how to protect us from his father's wrath. I will not apologize for who I have become! I will never regret turning my back on my mother and embracing who I have become! I... I love Arrarn Leonidas and Toria with all that I am! I love Deneth with all that I am!" Narice turned and as Lisisa had done she placed her hand on Deneth's snout. "He was so right in the words he spoke to us on his ship as we left Earth behind, for that day is when our lives began anew! Live our lives he said! Live our lives by our rules and conscious! I think we all made that same choice when we chose to leave Earth. This is our test! Our final test! This is where we begin to make our mark! These men and women, no matter that they are Immortals and elves, they accepted us. Welcomed us! Just as Andro and his brothers and sisters did. This is when we begin to show them they have not been mistaken about what they saw in all of us!"

Narice saw many of the riders and even the dragons nodding their heads as they listened to her words.

"They need us now!" Narice continued. "They need what we can do as Bonded Pairs. This is what we must now do. We must put our lives in danger for those we have never met or know." Narice blinked several times as realization of what she was saying struck her. "We must do this not because we have too... not because we are ordered too... but because it is what we are meant to do! This is what Andro felt we were all meant to do!"

Lisisa came to her feet looking at Narice as every Coven rider and dragon moved even closer nodding their heads. She felt the surge of power through them all within Mindvoice... the new sense of purpose and determination. She reached out and took Narice's hand her eyes moist with tears. Narice looked at her and squeezed her hand. Lisisa looked at all of them. "I know many of you do not adhere to a faith in higher beings. I did not until my father saved me. It is something that he brought back to our people with his return. Have faith in each other. Have faith in what we have taught you." She shifted on her feet. "There is something Andro says every time before going into battle or leaping from the back of a STRIKER. He believes strongly in faith and the gods. It is a blessing he wrote as a boy to honor our grandfather. It is a blessing I would like to share with all of you now." Lisisa took a deep breath. "Into the hands of our grandfather's spirit do we commend our souls...?"

Jeth lifted his own head now. May he guide our actions and thoughts and pick us up if we fall!

Lisisa lifted her head and looked at them. "Your saddles are all Mark Elevens. If you must use your teleporters... remember that they only carry enough power for two... perhaps three teleportations. This technology is how we finally began to beat the T19 missiles, but only those who ride dragons know of it. You are the first outside the ranks of our own Bonded Pairs to have this knowledge. Be mindful of when and if you need to use it. And be certain you can see where you are teleporting too. My section will come in from the north. Narice will bring her section in south to south west. The artillery is our priority... but do not be afraid to target any Kavalians fool enough to be in your way."

Narice nodded. "Maintained communication via your implants as long as possible and switch to MV if you must. If for any reason the settlement walls are breached and you are nearby, descend quickly and join the battle. Andro has told us only one Bonded Pair can change a battle. We have forty! I expect to see you all there when we are done!”

Let's do this! Jeth bellowed with Mindvoice and followed that with a long and very loud trumpet. A trumpet which Deneth quickly matched as Narice leaped onto her saddle. Soon forty plus dragons were joining in and Lisisa looked to the sky.

We are coming Denali my love! She reached out just before Jeth cocked his legs and launched them into the sky.

Arrarn stood two hundred meters away with Toria and the Coven pilots and turned back to them as he saw Jeth left into the sky, nearly twenty of the Coven Riders right behind him. He reached out within Mindvoice and felt the powerful presence of his vampire mate. She may not have been wolf, but Arrarn could not think he could love anyone more than he loved Narice and Toria. She was not able to feel the aura he could project so he had learned to do almost the same thing with his mind.

My grandfather's spirit guide you my beautiful mate. He barked out.

Go with the wind Narice our love. Toria's words filtered into his mind as well as she projected her thoughts to Narice.

Be safe my loves... and I will speak with you when we are in the air and try to give you a better idea of where to strike! Narice answered.

You and Deneth mind yourselves! Toria said. We can not lose you!

We will prevail. Narice said. We must prevail. We have too much to live for the three of us! I will see you soon!

Arrarn watched as the black and white scaled dragon that was Deneth lifted off into the sky followed by the remaining members of the Coven riders. He smelled Toria come up next to him and take his hand and he looked at his stunning red haired second wife. Narice and Toria were almost completely opposite in looks, Narice with flowing black hair and deeply tanned skinned, while Toria had silky red hair and a much lighter tan. He had burned both their scents into his brain from the moment he met them.

“Arrarn?” Toria spoke softly. He turned to look at her, her beautiful blue eyes bright and clear. “We'll... we'll get through this Arrarn.”

Arrarn took her face in his hands and nodded. “I know.” He whispered. He looked up and saw the Coven STRIKER pilots standing around behind him and Toria. Their ships were ready, they had seen to that, and now they were waiting for the word from Denali to launch.

“Be mindful of your targets on the ground!” Arrarn barked. “If any Bonded Pair requests to land, pull away from whatever you're doing and give them a platform to land upon! We will be outnumbered more than likely, and we don't know if they will have anti-air missiles that they will use on us. Expect them and plan accordingly.”

Arrarn could tell all of them were hyped up and ready to go. He could smell it in the air, the adrenalin flowing so openly. “Alright! Fire up your engines and let's move to the stand by positions!” Arrarn barked as he pulled Toria towards their own STRIKER. Toria clung tightly to his hand as they made their way up the ramp backwards, watching as the other pilots sprinted for their STRIKERS. Arrarn knew they had a better than even chance here on the planet even against a hundred thousand Kavalian troops. Between the Immortals, their dragons and the STRIKER DTs the Kavalians would only outnumber them two to one. It all came down to how well they did in the stars above. Their mother had told them all via Mindvoice of Miranda Lorian's bold entry into the battle, but they were still outnumber four to one and would be hard pressed to keep the Kavalians from beginning a bombardment of the surface. They needed to win in the stars above if they were to succeed here on the surface.

Arrarn's head snapped around when Toria stiffened in his grasp and her eyes went wide. “Toria... Toria what is it?” He barked.

“Who is this?” Toria snapped shaking her head. “How did you get this code?”

“Toria?” Arrarn shouted once more.

Toria turned to look at him and tightened her grip on his hand as she pulled him to the cockpit of their STRIKER. Arrarn followed, he could do nothing else as Toria's strength was nearly equal to his due to her vampire genes. She guided him to his pilot's seat as she settled into her seat and began flipping switches and buttons on her right console. Arrarn looked up as a strange female voice filled the internal speakers of the STRIKER.

"I asked you a question!" Toria snapped once more.

"And I answered your question Toria Dellion. My name is Cirith Esavorna." The female voice answered. "Ah... I understand now... you are undoubtedly with your husband Arrarn Leonidas and you wanted him to hear. Is he listening now?"

"If this is your plea for me to return to the High Coven and come back to work for the Venorik Elghinn?" Toria spat. "That will never happen! Not while I draw breath in this life!"

"On the contrary Toria... I am contacting you for the complete opposite of what you think." Cirith stated. "You know of course who my father is?"

"I know of him." Toria spoke.

"We have left the High Coven Toria." Cirith spoke calmly.

Toria snorted in disbelief. "You expect me to actually believe that?" She spat. "Admiral Valin Esavorna leave the High Coven? He was second in command of the Venorik Elghinn! What could possibly encourage him to leave? The Venorik Elghinn would never allow you to defect! I'm not a fool!"

"The fact remains that we have." Cirith continued. "Right now we are holding position outside Kranek's system. We can't enter because we are as blind as the Kavalians it seems. We are not the enemy Toria Dellion... we..."

"Fuck you!" Arrarn snarled. "After what was done to my sister you expect us to believe anything you say?"

"What was done to your sister was a heinous act Arrarn Leonidas and not something we had any knowledge of." Cirith stated. "My father and I... the others who are part of our group... we have been planning our escape for sometime. We..."

"You'll forgive us if we don't have time for this shit!" Arrarn barked. "We are in the middle of a crisis and..."

"Yes I know." Cirith interrupted him. "The Kavalians have systematically attacked your family throughout the entire Union. We know your father is... we know your father has fallen victim to their treachery and..."

"What do you want?" Toria snarled now. "We are very busy!"

"We want... we want to help!" Cirith spoke. "We can not do that if we are blind. We have been working with the insurgent known as The General for years. We have been feeding him information and..."

"Lucia Moran is The General!" Arrarn snapped.

"Lucia... Lucia Moran?" They heard her gasp out. "But that is... how is that possible? She has been..."

"I'll give you twenty more seconds of wasting my time before Toria pulls the plug on this communication and disables her implant." Arrarn barked. "We have no more reason to trust you than we do the fucking Kavalians! We..."

"We are nothing like those dogs!" Cirith shouted through the COM, displaying the first signs of emotion. "If Lucia is The General as you say... ask her yourself! Ask her about the information she received from us. The lives of her friends that it saved."

"Why should we believe anything you say?" Toria asked now. "We know why Lucia did what she did. I know you... I know your father... and nothing..."

"Right now we are detecting almost a dozen High Coven ships within Kranek's system that are shrouded and maintaining station away from the fighting some five million kilometers. They are communicating using an old High Coven war channel used exclusively by Immortals! All I ask of you is to check with Lucia! She can tell you that we are not the enemy! We have nowhere else left to go. With Aikiro dead... once knowledge of who and what I am gets out to Yuri my life will be useless. I..."

"Why would that upae Yuri care about you?" Arrarn asked. "And you are down to five seconds now!"

"Xsa dos!" Cirith swore viciously. "My name is Cirith Esavorna... I was born three thousand one hundred and twenty seven years ago. I carry Lycavorian blood in my veins; I was meant to be the second wife to your grandfather Leonidas and lover to your grandmother Gorgo Arrarn Leonidas. All that changed the day he died. And Empress Aikiro was my mother." (Damn it)

Arrarn's dark eyes looked at Toria in stunned silence.

HARBINGER

SEVEN HOURS THIRTY-FOUR MINUTES FROM EARTH

"...then it's true?" Resumar asked.

"I don't know anything more than what I have told you Res!" Andro exclaimed to the holographic image of his brother. "I'm heading back to Earth now... but communications is tenuous at best. They have hit us in more places than... more places than father ever thought they could."

Andro watched his brother pacing back and forth in the transmission as he always did when he was excited or apprehensive about something. Andro flexed his fingers on the transmitting end of the Mark II booster, the pins seated a quarter inch into his skin.

"I can be on my way back in under an hour Andro." Resumar stated.

Andro shook his head. "No!" He barked.

Resumar looked at him wide eyed. "Andro they have attacked our family! They have attacked the Union!" Resumar snarled. "They have killed... they have killed our father! Possibly... possibly two of our mothers! We can not let this go unanswered! I will..."

"You will follow your orders!" Andro snarled back at him. "You will destroy that ship before you leave! And you will stay away from Earth!"

"What? Why?" Resumar was stunned.

"Damn it Res!" Andro snapped. "We both cannot return! Deni and most of our family is on Kranek fighting for their lives! I am returning to Earth! You and Yuriko are the only ones not caught up in this brother! You must stay away! If... if anything happens to me... if they defeat our forces and those of Cha'talla on Kranek! You will be all that remains!"

"Where is Yuriko?" Resumar asked.

"I don't know... I've been trying to contact her but she is not answering her Secure COM." Andro replied.

"You don't expect me to just sit here and do nothing do you Andro?" Resumar barked viciously.

"You must!" Andro stated. "Please don't make me order you Resumar! I will order the captain of the FAITH to insure you stay away. Uncle Vonis as well if I have too!"

Andro saw Athani step into the transmission and take his brother's arm as she looked at him. "Andro... Andro I... I did not..."

Andro shook his head. "Do not question it Athani." He spoke quickly. "It never once crossed my mind. If grandfather Riall was accurate... your sister and several others fought beside our parents before my father fell. And they guarded our mother while Aunt Anuk treated her. I need you to keep him away Athani. You must complete the mission... it means more now than it ever did."

"The High Coven team is still out there somewhere." Athani told him.

Resumar looked up at him. "We... we are secure as long as we stay inside the ship. Avi and 341 have insured they cannot breach the interior of the ship!" He said. "Mother made it off Hadaria?"

Andro nodded. "Admiral Omore contacted me only a short while ago. It appears my channel is the only one operating right now."

"What... what will you do Andro?" Resumar asked.

"I... I don't know." Andro answered. "I don't know anything right now. I've ordered all our forces to maximum alert and deployed to their staging areas. More than that I don't know right now. This is a coordinated strike at us... our family. No one is reporting the Kavalians coming across our borders anywhere! They are intentionally staying away except for those that moved to Hadaria. I just don't understand what they hope to accomplish Res. It doesn't make any sense to me. I will not act prematurely and order an invasion of KFI territory... it could very well be what they want us to do."

Resumar nodded as he regained control at least part of his raging emotions. "We pour across the border and they hit us from behind."

Andro nodded slowly. "This... they have planned this for sometime brother considering the success they have had. I will not play into their hands by doing something they are ready for now. How soon before you can destroy the ship and become deployable?"

Resumar shrugged. "Another day... perhaps two." He replied. "What about those moving to Hadaria? We can't let them keep pouring forces there Andro."

"I don't intend too... but I must get to Earth or at the very least speak with Uncle Atropos and our mother before deciding what to do. They must have built a Jump Gate that is tied into our own network somewhere to be able to bypass our measures as they have been doing. It is the only explanation. Omore said they had detected nearly six hundred ships within the system when they left. JGC on Apo Prime has already tried to shut down the Gates around Hadaria with no luck. They planned this well Res... we cannot do one thing for fear of something else happening. This type of action... targeting our family like they have... it has effectively tied our hands for the moment." Andro said. "I don't know what is truly going on... and I won't for at least another twelve hours."

Resumar looked at him in the transmission. "Cut off the head and the body dies." He said.

Andro nodded. "Kill our family and throw the entire Union into disarray." He said. "There is something else going on here Resumar. Something far more sinister that we can not see yet. Why target just our family? No military invasion... no ships, no troops. Only our family. It just doesn't make any sense!"

Resumar nodded his head as what Andro was saying began to take shape in his head as well. They had studied together endlessly with Denali and Arrarn. The four brothers were known to be scholars of history in every form, and as Andro spoke Resumar saw what he was referring to easily. They had fought together more than their younger brothers, and combined with Eliani and Lisisa, the four of them had received the most attention from their father and mothers when it came to military and political happenings.

"No... it doesn't." Resumar said.

"Finish your preparations and standby to hear from me." Andro spoke. "As soon as I get a handle on things I will contact you. Have Avi continue to use the MV ship's systems to monitor the Netnews Channels. You must keep the FAITH and Uncle Vonis's friends and their ships hidden. If anything changes or I need something from you I will use the code we designed during the Evolli War. Do you remember?"

Resumar nodded. "Yes."

"Give Julie a STRIKER from the FAITH and send her back to Earth. She will have much information that I want." Andro said.

"Andro... if not for her we would all be dead! She is not our enemy brother." Resumar answered.

Andro shook his head. "I don't view her as such Res. The information she will have is too valuable to disseminate over the COM link. I will need her on Earth to pick her brain about Kavalian targets and such. Right now she is the most valuable piece of intelligence I have outside of you Athani. And you must remain with Resumar."

"I will transcribe anything I think can help to a pad and send it with her Andro." Athani said. "Anything. My brother Mican might..."

Andro's eyes grew wide. "Brother?" He asked.

Athani nodded. "I have... I have discovered some rather amazing things Andro. The largest being that Jalersi and I have a brother. He leads the Kavalian resistance against my father."

Andro blinked several times at this information. "Resistance?" He said. "We... this was not known to the Krypteria."

Athani shook her head. "No. But it will be as soon as Julie arrives back on Earth." She stated confidently.

"He is helping you?" Andro asked.

Athani nodded once more. "They have been helping us since we got here."

"We could not have taken the Kavalian Science ship without them." Resumar spoke now.

"You captured a Kavalian vessel?" Andro gasped.

Resumar nodded. "It's a long story. Julie can fill you in. I'll get her moving ASAP!" He spoke.

Andro shook his head slowly. "So much... so much is happening at once." He stated softly. "Do nothing that endangers your position brother!" He snapped. "Nothing! I need you to stay alive Resumar! You must stay alive in case anything happens to me."

“Andro... Deni is...” Resumar began.

“Denali is just coming to realize what he can do! He will be the first one to admit that!” Andro barked out. “No! If anything happens to me... it will fall to you brother! We have never considered ourselves anything more than brother and sister no matter who our mothers are have we?”

“No!” Resumar answered instantly.

“Then half elf or not Resumar my brother... if I fall... if we can turn back the Kavalians on Kranek... then leadership of the Union goes to Eliani and you!” Andro barked. “Do nothing that endangers that!”

“Andro...”

“I must go now!” Andro spoke. “I will contact you again when I reach Earth and discover more of what has happened. I promise you. Twelve hours Resumar. I have... I have ordered the Durcunusaan to be ruthless in securing the situation. We will... we will know more in twelve hours.”

“And if they succeed in killing our family on Kranek Andro? Then what do we do?” Resumar asked.

Andro’s azure blue eyes grew dark and sinister. “Then Resumar my brother... we will not stop until our uncle and the Kavalian Empire is nothing but ashes and a memory blowing upon the wind.”

Resumar’s face became hard and he nodded. “By the spirit of our grandfather brother.”

“By the spirit of our grandfather.” Andro echoed before pulling his hand off the end of the Mark II and watching the transmission fade into nothing.

Andro staggered back slightly, rubbing the palm of his hand and it was then he smelled them. The scents of sugar plum and spice, fresh rose petals, sweet amaretto and soft honey melon drifted to his nostrils. Sadi was the first one to reach him as he dropped to one knee, gathering him into her arms as all strength left him and he slumped to the floor of the communications room by the wall. Sadi slid slowly to the floor under his weight, pulling his head to her chest as his body stretched out on the deck void of any energy or strength.

“We... we have you my love.” She whispered to him, pulling his head to her chest. “We have you Androcles our love.”

“Gone.” Andro gasped. “My father... mother... so... so much lost.”

“We will... we will go on Andro.” Carisia’s voice spoke softly.

Andro turned his head and saw them and he didn’t hesitate. He turned his body on the floor between Sadi’s legs and pulled Ne’Veha to his right side, Carisia to his left side and Lu’ria simply settled between his legs. He felt their warmth flood through him as he nuzzled Lu’ria’s head when she placed her head on his chest, their Mindvoice presence powerful and clear as Sadi’s arms closed around him and them tighter.

It had taken its toll, these last few days. The combat on Iraruzu, the flight from Earth, having to take the life of one who was his cousin. Andro was powerful, far more than they were, but he was still only human as the expression went. They felt his mind surrender to the exhaustion of everything that had taken place in these last hours and his arms only drew them tighter as Andro drifted unwillingly into the realm sleep. The four women who meant most to him in the entire universe simply wrapped their own minds around his, shielding him from the outside world, protecting him from harm and daring anyone to interfere. Only one person on the ship was powerful enough to feel this outside of the dragons on the hanger deck, and he had no intention of interfering.

Walter reached up slowly and flicked off the monitor he had been watching from Velnar’s Ready Room. He felt Captain Velnar rise from his chair behind the desk and come up beside him and he turned. It had taken Walter nearly ninety minutes to finally get Andro to see what he was saying to him and the why of it. During all that time he could barely keep from smiling at how similar Andro was to his father and the conversations he and Martin had had through the years. Indeed, the only reason the smiles did not come out, were because the man who he had a hand in keeping safe and raising to some degree was now dead.

“Senior Polemarch.” Velnar spoke softly. “What do we...?”

Walter met his eyes. “A storm is coming Velnar.” Walter spoke softly. “I have learned something in these last hours and it began when I saw him strike down his cousin on Iraruzu without as much as a blink. Androcles Leonidas is like his father in many respects... and so very different in others. A storm is coming my friend and the Kavalians do not yet realize what they have done this day.”

Velnar looked at him oddly. “I don’t follow.”

“The Kavalians have killed the one person who could control that storm Velnar.” Walter spoke gently. “Without his father to hold him in check, Androcles Leonidas will follow his instincts now. Pleistarchus has no idea the door into the dark abyss that he has opened with his actions today.” Walter shook his head. “I... I sense there is something else going on Velnar. We have not seen it yet... but I can’t shake the feeling that killing Martin is only the beginning of something else. I know Pleistarchus... he is devious yes... but he would not fully commit acts like he is doing unless he had another plan.”

“Another plan for what Senior Polemarch?” Velnar asked.

“Have we detected any other locations within Union space besides Hadaria where Kavalian forces are moving against us?” Walter asked.

Velnar shook his head. “No.”

Walter nodded. “Nothing. Which means Pleistarchus has something else planned. If invading was their purpose, they would be coming across the border from three or four different locations like ants to honey.”

“They are occupying Hadaria Senior Polemarch.” Velnar spoke. “Surely that means something.”

Walter shook his head. “That is something entirely different, and given the players involved, I’m surprised it hasn’t happen before now. Buonau and Wiktor are two of the most conniving female bitches I have ever met. No... the attacks against the royal family are something else entirely. We have much to do before we reach Earth Velnar. I need to speak with the Feravomir first and foremost. Can you pull up her Secure COM Channel even with the blackout?”

Velnar nodded still not understanding what Walter meant. “I believe so.”

“Do it. Quickly.” Walter said.

ULU ARIZONA

“...have a lock!” E'dira’s voice boomed across the bridge to drowned out the pounding her shields were taking from Kavalian guns.

“All portside batteries fire!” Miranda screamed out. “Full dispersal and yield on Type Ones and Type Twos! Fire! Fire!”

The ARIZONA had pulled in alongside the DIEROY-Class Heavy cruiser with a single minded purpose that matched her commander’s determination. The DIEROY-Class model of cruiser was among the workhorses of the Kavalian fleet. Primarily a heavy gun platform that could go toe to toe with just about any ship in the High Coven fleet. Next to the GREAT SOUL Dreadnoughts, these ships were the most dangerous of any Kavalian fleet ship. No Union commander wanted to fall into the trap of exposing their ship to a full on frontal shot from the DIEROY’s twin Spinal Mount Super Heavy Mass Driver Gauss cannons. A single shot from those cannons, which fired all at the same time, could break the back of even a LEONIDAS IIA with relative ease. The DIEROY was known to have killed more High Coven warships than any other during their ongoing war.

The ULU ARIZONA however was not part of the High Coven.

As with the suppression barrage that she had initiated upon first entering the system, all of her portside batteries came alive in that single instant. Even as the Hellfire and Anvil series Gauss cannons pounded her port side, ten Type One Terra series and fifteen Type Two Terra series plasma turrets came alive. As two other DIEROYs and three DIATAGAs had discovered in the last twenty-two minutes, they just could not hold up under a sustained point blank barrage from the ARIZONA’s main batteries. Red streaks flashed across the thousand meter open area between the two ships and great swaths of the DIEROY’s superstructure began to buckle as each blast of her Type Ones opened up a gaping hole in the hull of the ship. Several of her Gauss turrets were hit directly and these only ignited stores of the mass accelerated shells used by the gauss cannons causing some of them to explode in place while others reach maximum velocity within the structure of the ship itself. Something that was never intended to happen. Explosions began to cause the DIEROY to vibrate horribly as the ARIZONA was able to reload and fire far faster than any Coven ship the Kavalians had faced. In the time it took them to reload their own cannons, the ARIZONA’s gun crews had already pumped three rounds per gun into the Kavalian ship.

As the DIEROY lost main power and its engines began to go critical, the ARIZONA was pulling away quickly. The last turret along her port axis got off one last charged plasma round and that single round punched through the armored plating of the DIEROY's bridge armor. In the space of three tenths of a second, the entire command crew for that ship was either incinerated or sucked into the vacuum of space as the hull gave way and caused a minor implosion of massive power. The next explosion occurred in the ship's LSD Coil reactor and as the huge bulk of the ARIZONA banked away, the last seven hundred meters of the DIEROY's superstructure blew outwards with the force of the reactor going critical. Huge chunks of the ship's hull smashed harmlessly against the ARIZONA's aft ventral shields as the forward section began to nose over and begin a death spiral into the atmosphere of Kranek.

Miranda couldn't contain the whoop of glee that escaped her lips, but she quickly gained control of her emotions as the need to regain control of her Attack Wing hammered itself home. She sat back in her command chair quickly.

"Status?" She barked out.

"Shields at sixty-three percent but beginning to recharge!" A voice called. "There is some minor structural damage on deck fourteen, but repair crews have already been dispatched. All batteries report standing by!"

Miranda shook her head. "No! Now we have to act like a command ship." She stated. "Where is the SCIMITAR and NORMYA'S LIGHT?"

"SCIMITAR is just finishing blasting a DIATAGA into atoms off our starboard aft quarter!" E'dira sounded out. "NORMYA'S LIGHT is maneuvering with..." E'dira's amber colored eyes went wide. "Miranda... High Coven ships deshrouding off starboard! Three BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts and nineteen BLOODLETTER-Class Cruisers turning to... sibfla!" She barked out. "Another twenty-three to port! They're all around us!"

"As if this fucking day couldn't get any worse!" Miranda snarled coming to her feet. "Stand by to engage the nearest..."

E'dira looked up at her with even wider eyes. "Miranda... the Coven ships are firing on the Kavalians!"

"What?" She gasped.

"Confirmed Captain!" The sensor operator shouted. "Sweet gods... they are pulverizing the Kavalians something fierce. NORMYA'S LIGHT is turning radically to support! We..."

"Incoming message from Admiral Thodias and Queen Dysea on the surface! It's being relayed through Commander Falarie!" The COM officer shouted. "High Coven ships are friendly! The High Coven ships are friendly!"

"Well shit... we just figured that out!" E'dira barked. "Why didn't they contact us directly?"

Miranda looked at her with wide eyes. "Sonofabitch! They don't have our COM signals E'dira! We didn't pass them on when..."

"When we entered the system!" E'dira finished her statement.

Miranda smiled at her soon to be Drow Mistress and moved to her plot table. "Get me Queen Dysea on the surface!" She snapped. "Open secure COM link! They have to be able to monitor channels if they contacted Falarie! Quickly now! And get Colonel Randall to start bringing our people in for rearming! The odds have just shifted in our favor and we need to take advantage of it!"

"Our fighters are still heavily engaged Captain!" The sensor officer reported. "The second Kavalian Fleet Group is still three quarters intact and putting up heavy resistance!"

"Give me status on our Attack Wing?" Miranda snapped. "What...?"

"Captain! Queen Dysea is responding directly from the Immortal Command bunker!" The COM officer declared.

"Put her up!" Miranda barked turning to face the holodisc. She watched the tall, muscular figure of the platinum haired elf Queen materialize, flicker and then clear. "Dysea!" Miranda barked before catching herself.

Dysea probably would have chuckled at the look on Miranda's face and her lack of protocol; however she appeared to be gripping the sides of a chart table she stood in front of. Light smoke lingered in the background, but Miranda could easily see several Immortals in the background at computer consoles.

"Manda." Dysea spoke kindly. "It is very good to see you... I just wish it was under better circumstances."

"Milady... I... we..."

“I apologize for not informing you directly of the High Coven ships arriving Manda... but we did not have your secure COMs code.” Dysea continued.

“Who are they?” Miranda asked.

“I don’t know just yet... but information they passed to us only someone who was friendly to us would know. I understand they have begun their attack!” Dysea said.

Miranda nodded. “They about scared me out of my shorts!” She answered.

Dysea clenched her teeth as the bunker vibrated again and more dust and dirt dropped from the ceiling. “It appears the Kavalians were able to land more troops than we first thought. Denali and the others have taken out their main artillery, but they brought plasma mortars with them and they are hammering the settlement from positions to our north and west.”

“I will prep our ground units and send them off Milady!” Miranda snapped.

“Any help is greatly appreciated Miranda.” Dysea answered. “Tell your people that Denali and the Coven dragons are sweeping in from the south. If you can land you people at the northern most settlement wall, that is where it appears the Kavalian will attempt to break through. Zarah and Lucia have already moved for that location with a detachment of Immortals and we...”

The loud dull smashing sound caused Dysea and the Immortals inside the bunker to whirl around.

“Someone is breaching the bunker!” Miranda heard one Immortal scream.

“They haven’t gotten through the wall yet!” Another echoed. “Who could...?”

The explosion that followed ripped the door of the bunker free of its thick roller like hinges and sent several large chunks of metal and debris hurtling through the air. Even Miranda flinched as she watched Dysea extend her Nehtes in a single blink. The sounds of weapons fire filled the communications and Miranda could only watch in horror as Dysea hurled her Nehtes into the smoke filled bunker now. She heard a howl of pain and then the huge Immortal appeared from the smoke. She watched her Queen elegantly leap into the air and hit the Immortal with a vicious front kick that sent him staggering back violently. Even as Dysea landed and began to pull her two knives from their places on her side, two more Immortals appeared from the smoke, one of them already using his weapon as a club and bringing it smashing down across Dysea’s head.

“NO!” Miranda screamed as she watched.

Her wail caught the attention of the second Immortal who quickly lifted his weapon and sent a burst of weapons fire into a computer panel. Instantly the transmission was severed at the source.

“Get her back!” Miranda screamed. “Get her back!”

“Signal is lost Captain!”

“Fuck! Fuck!” Miranda snarled. “NORMYA’S LIGHT! Get me Admiral Thodias! Now! Now damn it now!”

Miranda’s warning would not be fast enough.

In the forty-seven minutes since the attacks began against the Leonidas family, the fates of King Leonidas and his two elven Queens had been decided.

What the future held from here on out... what the future had cost so far... no one would ever be able to ascertain.

* One note... Cirith’s age is three thousand one hundred and twenty-seven, not the two thousand twenty seven as stated when she was introduced in Chapter 43. ****

“YOU SPARED ME WHEN YOU COULD HAVE KILLED ME ANDROCLES LEONIDAS.”

“WE SPARED YOU BECAUSE WHAT WAS HAPPENING YOU HAD NO CONTROL OF VOLLENTH. IT WAS NOT WHO YOU ARE INSIDE. AND AS YOU ALREADY KNOW YOU ARE MEANT FOR SOMEONE ELSE. YOU ARE MEANT FOR GREATER THINGS. I WILL NEVER FORSAKE THAT.”

“I CAN FEEL THEM EVEN NOW MILORD. SWIRLING AROUND WITHIN MY MIND. SO STRONG AND PROUD.”

“I AM NOT YOUR LORD VOLLENTH. I AM NOT YOUR BETTER. WE ARE BROTHERS NOW. YOU WILL KNOW WHEN THE TIME IS RIGHT. EACH DAY IS A GIFT FOR ALL OF US MY FRIEND. IT IS NOT A GIVEN RIGHT.”

“IT IS A GIFT FOR ME SIRE. EVERY DAY I WAKE AND SEE VIERA AND MY SONS IT IS A GIFT.”

“SOME OF US ARE MEANT TO WALK THE PATH LESS TRAVELLED VOLLENTH. YOU, ME, ELYNTH... WE WILL ALWAYS BE DIFFERENT. THERE IS PURPOSE IN THE LIVES WE HAVE LED, THE EXPERIENCES WE HAVE ENDURED UP UNTIL NOW. EVEN THE PAIN WE HAVE SUFFERED. LEAVE YOUR FEARS IN THE PAST MY FRIEND. IF IT IS WORTH THE PRICE, IT IS ALWAYS WORTH THE FIGHT. YOU HAVE ALREADY PROVEN THAT.”

*-Androcles speaking with Volleth in the SCIMITAR landing bay enroute to Kranek-
-Earth Year 2574-*

-Recorded by Dilaen Roan-
- Chronicler -
-Personal Journals of Androcles Leonidas-

CHAPTER FIFTY

KRANEK

Denali whirled as he savagely yanked his Nehtes from the chest of the Kavalian Siege Engineer, the spray of blood showering his helmeted face and part of his shoulder. Aradace's trumpet of savage anger filled the air around them as she twisted her armored body around, her viciously sharp talons gripping the severed upper body of the Kavalian briefly before she sent his remains sailing through the morning sky with a flick of her talons. The two artillery pieces lay in twisted ruin all around them, bodies strewn grotesquely around the smashed or blackened pieces of artillery. Their scouting with Malic and Nyla had brought them over this southern mountain ridge and directly in line with two Kavalian artillery batteries and several hundred Kavalian security troops massing near the treeline in the valley below. They found them just as Narice and her section of the Coven riders had appeared on the horizon speeding towards them, just barely skimming the treetops. After ordering her to assault the massed Kavalian security troops, Denali had descended upon the Kavalian artillery battery with a bloodlust in his eyes and a rage gripping him that he had never felt before this day.

Aradace was Torma's daughter and she did not need much to push her over the edge like her bonded brother. They tore into the artillery battery with a rabid glee, as Malic and Nyla struck the second one. Denali was a son of Martin and Aricia, and by virtue of that, his blood was just as pure as his older brother Androcles. He had bonded with Aradace when he was only three, the earliest of the Leonidas children behind only Androcles. Their Mindvoice bond was very powerful, and many suspected it would only grow deeper as they grew older and gained more experience. The difference between the brothers was that Denali Leonidas and Aradace had never really delved into the vast intricacies of their Mindvoice powers, their carefree spirits and infectious attitudes labeling them as the easiest going of the Leonidas children as well as the children of Torma and Isheeni. After the evil events of the last few hours, that attitude and way of thinking would now be changed forever. Denali and Aradace had immersed themselves in their Mindvoice bond far deeper than they ever had before, and the result was simply incredible to behold.

Aradace slammed her armored right foot down upon the body of the injured Kavalian soldier who was trying to crawl away from the insane beast. Two of her talons impaled him completely and he lay still after that, blood erupting from his mouth and nose as the life left his eyes. Aradace tore her talons free; blood and bits of flesh showering the Dragon Armor that now encased her massive body. The only portion that was truly not covered by the armor were her talons, which were considered diamond hard anyway. Denali's dark eyes swept the field around them, his helmet covering his savage features for the most part. He could see the twenty coven riders and dragons thoroughly decimating the group of Kavalian troops at the bottom of the ridge, and across the small valley, Malic and Nyla had destroyed the two other guns from this battery with relative ease.

Malic! Denali screamed out in Mindvoice.

These guns will never fire again! Malic answered instantly and Deni's keen wolf eyes saw Vincix lift his head from across the valley as Malic spun around to face him from two kilometers away.

Malic... take Nyla and proceed south along this valley! Deni barked. I will take Narice and her section straight to the settlement! The Kavalians are hitting them from the northwest with heavy weapons and mortars according to mother!

Mortars! Malic exclaimed. We did not think of mortars Denali!

We will deal with them! Deni answered confidently. Lisisa is hitting the Kavalians that moved up from the south! Join with her group as you complete your run and assist her and the Immortals that are protecting that flank!

We need air support! Nyla screamed out within the open connection. We will not be able to hold them for long even with forty of us Deni! They will eventually overwhelm us and bring us down!

Arrarn and Toria have lifted off and are coming in from the west! They will attack anything you spot for them! So far there have been no Kavalian fighters in the sky above us! Denali answered her. We cannot allow them to breach the settlement walls! Watch for T19s as you make your sweep!

We will join you shortly! Malic barked and Deni watched as two dragons lifted off and began streaking south.

Deni turned and looked at Aradace. She moved closer to him, lowering her head so that they were eye to eye. The Dragon Armor that now encased their bodies hid most of her features, but her eyes were bright and clear. And full of anger. I want to... I want to peel their flesh from their bones Denali my brother. I want to make them pay for what they have done. What they have taken from us!

Deni reached up and placed his armored hand flat on her snout, stepping even closer to her massive head. He could not feel her warm scales through the armor that protected both of them, but he did not need to touch her to know what she had swirling in her mind. They had bonded far younger than most Bonded Pairs in the Union, mainly because of the blood that swirled within their veins. Neither of them had embraced the power of that blood until today, but both of them could feel the power surging through them now and it was because of that same blood.

I feel it too my sister. Denali spoke. And we will.

Then climb on my brother. Aradace spoke. Let us help Narice finish the scum here and then the real battle can begin.

Denali wasted no time and easily leaped onto the Mark Eleven saddle. As the dragon arm leg braces tightened on his thighs and calves he nodded his head. We must set aside who we have been up until now Aradace. Denali spoke softly his palms going to either side of her thick muscular neck. We must embrace what courses through our veins just as our brother and sister have. We must become a weapon, just as Andro and Elynth became after Alba Tau. He knew this day would come Aradace. As did our fathers.

Aradace let loose with a piercing trumpet that echoed across the top of that ridge and announced to all that they were coming.

Then let us embrace that weapon and wield it today! They will pay dearly for taking out fathers from us! She barked out before tensing her powerful legs and thrusting them into the sky above.

KAVALIAN GREAT SOUL CHAOT

"...Coming around on our port quarter Captain!" The Kavalian sensor operator screamed from his chair.

The Kavalian Captain, a cruel man called Pualli, pulled himself to his feet from where the last crushing hits from the SCIMITAR had smashed against his shields, overloaded them and then the plasma cannons had punched two neat holes in the already weakened hull on his starboard quarter.

Pualli wiped blood from his mouth where he had hit the side of his chair when he was thrown to the deck by the last barrage. “Where did the High Coven ships come from?” He screamed. “How many?”

“At least sixty!” The reply came quickly. “They just appeared and began attacking Captain! Coven fighters are launching from at least seven of the ships!”

“The Union ships aren’t attacking them?” Pualli barked in disbelief.

“No sir! They... it appears as if they are maneuvering together sir!” The man answered him.

“Fuck! They should be attacking the Coven as well!” Pualli snarled. “Give me a damage report!”

“Heavy damage to decks six through nine! Main power has been cut off to the hanger bays and everything below deck twelve! Shields are down to twenty-one percent. The entire starboard weapons grid is offline! Three Union missile hits and four plasma beam strikes! We are leaking plasma gas from intake three and six! Our...”

“Order the HUKUAM to close on our starboard and...”

“The HUMKUM is gone Captain! We are the last Command ship!” The sensor operator shouted.

Pualli came to his feet when he realized he was now in command of the last GREAT SOUL in the system. “The last one!” He gasped in disbelief. “How is that possible? We outnumbered them five to one!” Pualli shook his head to clear his thoughts. “It doesn’t matter now! Order all remaining ships to tighten up and form on us! Our troops are on the ground and we can do no more!”

Several of his officers turned to look at him. “Sir... we’re leaving?” He asked.

“I will not sacrifice this ship and crew!” Pualli spat. “We no longer have the upper hand anymore. Surprise has shifted to the enemy and now it is time to pull our teeth back!”

“We... we will be leaving our troops without support Captain!” The officer spoke. “Contact the...”

“Communications are being jammed Captain!” The COM officer retorted as he frantically tried to work his console. “We can’t contact anyone!”

“What?” Pualli barked. “What do you mean we can’t contact anyone?”

“No contact across the board Captain!” The COM officer announced once more. “I can’t even raise our own fighters! It’s some sort of Hypermorphic Resonation field! I’ve never seen anything like it before! It’s jamming communications and long range sensors! Only short range sensors are operational, and only out to half a million kilometers!”

“Captain Pualli! Captain! Union M5 DEVASTATORS bearing three two one mark six!” The sensor operator screamed. “Coming in on our starboard side! Sonofabitch... I’m reading nine High Coven BLOODWAND Fighter/Bombers right behind them, with TEMPEST fighter cover! Captain they are teaming up!”

“High Coven and Union ships?” Pualli yelled still trying to comprehend that the Union was taking sides with the Coven after what they knew Aikiro had done. “Impossible!”

“They are almost upon us Captain. It is right here in front of us! They have tasted blood and now they are winning!” The man barked.

“Jump!” Pualli barked then. “Jump right now! Use emergency coordinates Beta! Helm emergency Jump coordinates Beta! Engage now!”

The CHAOT was far more damaged than Pualli and his crew knew. Micro fractures had formed all over the hull in the area where they had taken the most damage. Missiles from the SCIMITAR and the ARIZONA’s main guns had pulverized the starboard aft quarter of his ship badly. They were micro fractures that could not be detected unless done with a multi-thermic imaging sensor and that was not a tool normally used out of a space dock. As the helmsmen began to bring their main engines online and began to sharply turn the CHAOT, he set the catastrophic failure in motion. The CHAOT banked over hard, trying to put as much distance between them and the incoming fighters as they could, though it would not have mattered regardless. Ships the size of the CHAOT do not outrun fighters. In doing so, with the added gravitational stress on the joints and the rising power levels throughout damaged conduits, the Graviton Wave Generator fired by the ARIZONA claimed its first combat casualty, a result that was never intended or thought of.

Four large main power conduits fed the CHAOT's Tri-Cobalt Main LSD Coil drive. The radical turn and micro fractures in just one of those conduits was near certain death. As power increased in the conduit, the micro fractures became large fractures, and then Tri-Cobalt Matter Gas began to pour from the conduit explosively. Usually a stable ore, when refined into its gaseous state, Tri-Cobalt became very volatile. And most especially when mixed in very heavy concentration with the nitrogen in oxygen. The micro fracture became a crack, and that crack began to spew flames as if from a blowtorch. Most of the senior Kavalian engineering crew that was still alive was attempting to repair damage on the opposite side of the engineering spaces. Only a senior enlisted soldier looked up when he heard the harsh hissing noise of what sounded like flames. His eyes grew wide and the fur on the back of his neck curled inward. He opened his mouth to shout a warning and that is when the conduit blew open completely.

The flash wave of flame incinerated the closest Kavalians, the heat nearly six thousand degrees. Oxygen was ripped from the air, lungs were seared and skin was melted. Those were the lucky ones. The flames quickly overheated and then melted the three undamaged conduits, and in less than twenty seconds the engineering section of the CHAOT was a firestorm that would not be stopped.

COLONEL STEVEN RANDALL
ARIZONA AIR WING COMMANDER
M7 TEMPEST
CALL SIGN SCAR

“Lined up nicely!” Steven barked as he kept one eye glued to the massive Kavalian ship they were closing on, and one eye on his bank of screens between his legs. “BLACK KNIGHTS in first! Coven BLOODWAND's right after on the secondary power junctures! We'll maintain cover in case any JAGUARS decide they want to stick their noses where they don't belong!”

It had come, as somewhat of a surprise to say the least, when Dysea had contacted him directly to let him know that High Coven warships and fighters would be joining the battle on their side. That surprise didn't stay with Steven long though. He knew Dysea far better than Miranda and given everything that had happened in the last few hours it stood to reason she would contact only those she knew personally. No matter whom she had contacted first, the moment the Coven ships had lowered their shrouds, their guns and missiles had begun putting a hurting on the Kavalians. Coven TORPEDO and BLOODWANE fighters were soon spilling from the larger High Coven ships and obviously under orders to respond to Union flight leaders. Steven had picked up this group of BLOODWANE Fighter/Bombers almost as quickly as they had launched. Whoever they were, they knew what they were about and they were obviously on the side of the Union for they laid into the Kavalian fleets with undisguised glee.

The three groups of fighters had already taken out one DIATAGA Attack Cruiser and Steven had guided them towards this GREAT SOUL after watching the SCIMITAR and the ARIZONA pound the shit out of it with their main guns and over a dozen missiles. The two monstrous ships working in concert had been a sight to see, and it had stunned Steven to see Miranda drive their ship as if she was back in her fighter. He should have known though, she was still a fighter pilot at heart and because of its power matrix; the ARIZONA would be able to do many things other ships would not.

The Coven squadrons were obviously made up of only nine planes, and Steven had communicated with the female fighter pilot who was obviously the leader in order to bark instructions. Her voice was soft, but firm and full of confidence as she acknowledged his orders and then directed her own ships in response. They Coven pilots were cool and efficient and it made their small group that much more deadly.

“Oh...oh... she's peeling away!” Ty'coa echoed from Steven's right side causing him to look up completely.

“Stay with her KNIGHTS!” Steven barked. “Twenty seconds to range!”

“I got some odd power readings coming from her aft center Steven!” Ty'coa announced.

“Colonel Steven Randall! Pull your people back! Pull them back now!” The female Coven pilot's voice screamed into the intership COM. “Her LSD Coil is going critical! It will explode at any moment! Pull them back now!”

Steven didn't hesitate. "KNIGHTS abort! KNIGHTS abort!" He snapped. "Break left and right! Rolling away!"

"With you!" Ty'coa exclaimed.

Like insects scattering when a bright light came on in a dark room, the Union and Coven fighters sent their ships spinning and banking away from the massive GREAT SOUL and kicked in their booster engines to get as far away as possible.

Steven righted his fighter and looked back over his shoulder at the fast retreating bulk of the dreadnought. His keen eyes saw the red glow begin on her ventral axis and grow brighter as each second passed. "Shit! She's going up!" He barked.

The explosion was spectacular in its makeup. The GREAT SOUL dreadnought blossomed with light almost near the center of its length and it spread outward like a wave along the ship's entire length in both directions. Nothing was spared and no one would survive the cataclysmic explosion that sent a circular wave of destruction outward for hundreds of kilometers all around it.

"The ARIZONA and SCIMITAR's weapons must have done more damage than we first thought." Ty'coa's voice echoed in Steven's helmet.

"I guess so." Steven spoke. "We..."

"Flagship One to CAG!" The voice erupted in his helmet. "Flagship One to CAG!"

Steven banked his fighter over slightly and looked at the massive bulk of the ARIZONA in the distance. "Scar here! Go Flag One!"

It was Miranda's voice that came on next and it didn't sound happy at all. "ARIZONA actual to Scar! Things on the ground are not as good as they are up here Scar! Someone just breached the bunker Dysea was in Steven! She's off the grid! She's off the grid Steven!" Steven could easily detect the concern in her voice. "I can't raise anyone on the ground either! Denali! Lisisa! Not even the Immortal Command Center! Get down there with what you have and provide whatever support you can! And make contact with someone! I'm redirecting our STRIKER ATs there as we speak! They'll meet you on the ground! Something isn't right! Get down there and find Dysea!"

"Rotating now!" Steven barked without thought turning his TEMPEST toward Kranek in the distance. "KNIGHTS on me! KNIGHTS on me! We're going atmospheric!"

"BLACK KNIGHTS lead confirms! Forming on you Scar!" The voice answered.

"Nothing leaves the planet that isn't Union!" Miranda snapped over the COM. "Janon is recovering three squadrons to rearm and act as planetary cover! Sa'sur and I will wipe up the Kavalian scum that is left! I'm ordering our fighters to return and prepare for follow on operations! With the Coven ships on our side we can do this quickly! Get down there and find out what the hell is going on! ARIZONA clear!"

Steven pointed his TEMPEST at Kranek and then looked over his shoulder once more, directing his eyes at the nine High Coven BLOODWAND fighters that were still shadowing him and Ty'coa. "What's your name Coven Lead?" He snapped.

"You are... you are the Union pilot they call Scar?" The voice answered with a touch of admiration that was not there before. "You... you are human!"

"That would be me." Steven answered. "We need to break off now. Thanks for the assist! It was welcome and you are some fine pilots."

"We... we were ordered to remain and assist you in whatever you needed done Colonel Randall. That is what we will do." She replied.

"What's your name?" Steven asked again turning his head as he saw the BLOODWAND move up on his right side, opposite Ty'coa.

"Senior Commander Ardonia Usaro." She answered.

"Our Queen... our friends are down there and it ain't going well for them!" Steven spoke. "We are trained for fighting on the ground as well Senior Commander Ardonia. I intend to land my pilots and attempt to help!"

"Then we will land together Colonel." She answered. "We are trained as well."

Steven blinked several times and then shrugged his broad shoulders. "Fair enough!" Steven said. "I hope you can keep up! KNIGHTS... let's get tactical! In we go!"

Twelve Union fighters and nine High Coven fighters rolled once more as a single entity and made for the large planet in their cockpit view windows.

KRANEK SEVEN KLICKS SOUTH OF IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

The Kavalian Ground Commander in the southern operation was barreling along the wide valley trail, his eyes large and filled with horror at what he was witnessing. He gripped the sides of his CHAOS Light Lifter, standing in the command hatch as his eyes took in the hundreds of bodies that littered the valley floor. Smoke rose above the trees all around them, many of their bodies still on fire in some manner, and the blackened bodies of his men lay scattered about like rag dolls. The valley floor could easily fit four or five abreast of the Kavalian CHOAS Heavy tank, but the plan did not call for them to land their heavy equipment. Only a few Light CHAOS Command vehicles had been loaded and brought to the surface to supplement the KFI Plasma Artillery batteries, as it was thought the heavier CHAOS MBTs would not be needed. He was a relatively young Kavalian commander, having only fought in three smaller battles with the High Coven at the end of their last conflict. He had never seen destruction and death like what he was witnessing right now. He could see the poorly trained medics trying to attend to the Kavalian biogenic clones with skin that still smoldered, their screams of agony filling the air around him. Many of those who lived were beyond saving he could tell just from looking at them as in most cases their uniforms and even their weapons were melted right to their bodies. He saw what had to be hundreds of blackened corpses littering the valley floor on either side of his CHAOS LCV, many of them burned to an unrecognizable state. He banged on the armor plating of the LCV as they moved slowly forward, all of his combat senses screaming for him to turn around and run. They came to a halt near where two Kavalian medics were trying to save the life of two purebloods. Their fur was burn completely off their bodies revealing nothing but singed and melted skin. He pulled himself out of the hatch and leaped to the ground while his driver pulled himself halfway out of his hatch, his assault rifle out and his eyes weeping the area around them nervously. The sounds of fighting could be heard in the distance, echoing along the valley walls.

The Ground Commander sprinted up to the two medics. “What happened here?” He screamed. “What the fuck is going on? Why are all my men dead?”

One of the Kavalian medics looked up and snarled at him, his normally light blond fur now darkened with soot and blood. “What does it look like?” He barked savagely. “We were attacked by the Union and their infernal dragons! They came out of the sun and did this! There had to be at least two dozen of them!”

“There were supposed to be no dragons here except for the elf Queen’s! Where is the rest of the column?” The Commander barked with a sudden and very real look of fear on his face now.

“They ran!” The other medic shouted. “They burned hundreds and then landed and began tearing into our men! They ran to get away from them, what do you think?”

The Kavalian General whirled around when the deep trumpeting sound filled the air and echoed along the valley floor. His eyes grew even wider when he saw the two large shapes barreling at them barely a hundred meters from the valley floor. Two gleaming armored shapes with huge wingspans.

“More of them!” The medic shouted scrambling to his feet. “Run! Run!”

The Kavalian General had never fought dragons. He’d never even seen them before this very day, and the inbred fear inside all Kavalians for these beasts gripped him in its death hold, freezing his boots to the blood stained and burned ground. Not a single Kavalian scientist could ever determine why this fear could freeze a hardened warrior in his tracks, and they had been working for years in trying to discover a way to get rid of this gene somehow. They did not know they were looking in all the wrong places for their answers, turning to medical science and even guesswork, when all they had to do was take the example set by the two pureblood Kavalian daughters of the Prefect who had discovered their fear was a natural thing. It was a natural thing that could be overcome as easily as being close to a dragon, riding a dragon, or being able to communicate with one of the magnificent beasts within Mindvoice.

It was a clue the Kavalian General would never read about or experience.

Vincix let out a bellow of rage and unleashed a powerful stream of flame at the man, as he landed not a hundred meters away. The Kavalian General felt a moment of pure excruciating pain and then the three thousand degree flame melted every information receptor in his brain. As Malic leaped from his saddle extending his Nehtes, Nyla and Arydun landed in front of the CHAOS LCV. No one would ever know how it happened, for it would never be seen by any living Kavalians, but the driver of the LCV slammed his hand down on the control panel of the LCV accidentally, hitting the accelerator as he reached for his weapon in terror. The CHAOS LCV exploded forward just as Arydun began to open her jaws to unleash a jet of flame. The CHAOS LCV slammed into her head and she bellowed in pain as the LCV, all ten tons of it continued forward, knocking her body to the side and riding up over her side as she fell. Nyla screamed out as she fell with Arydun, the dragon armor leg braces keeping her pinned in the saddle.

Malic's helmeted head whirled at Nyla's scream and his eyes went wide as he saw the LCV drive up over the top of Arydun's body as she trumpeted in pain. The wonderful Dragon Armor was a blessing and a curse at this moment. The leg braces kept Nyla securely in the saddle, preventing her from leaping clear even as the left side of the LCV came within a hair's breath of crushing her chest. It just so happened that as Arydun fell, her bulk shifted the LCV just enough to cause the ground vehicle to slid away from her armored body, unable to keep traction on the gleaming armor, and it's hover jets igniting and attempting to right the craft. As it was, both of Nyla's legs were broken as the LCV's weight snapped one and Arydun's body weight broke the other as she fell, though the dragon armor also served to keep her legs from being crushed completely. Both Arydun and Nyla bellowed in pain as four of Arydun's large ribs and part of her forward wing were also snapped before the LCV rolled completely off to the side.

"Nyla!" Malic screamed out as he bolted for where Arydun flailed on the ground, trying to regain her footing.

Vincix also turned and saw this and a deep rage filled him as he stepped right up to the LCV and cut loose with another flame jet that essentially turned the LCV into a cooking pyre. The metal heated up to over three thousand degrees instantly as flames ripped through the entire vehicle and cooked the Kavalian driver squirming in pain and screaming out his last sounds until his lungs were seared shut. Malic skidded to a halt next to Nyla as Arydun finally got her talons under her and began to right herself. The dragon Armor braces released Nyla then and she fell to the ground, her face a mask of pain as she tore off her helmet.

"Vith! Vith! Vith!" Nyla screamed as she tried to drag herself away from Arydun, her face twisted in a mask of pain.

Malic skidded to a halt next to her tearing off his helmet as well. "Nyla!"

"My legs!" She snapped. "My legs are broken Malic!"

Malic could tell that easily by the off angle they were at. He gripped her upper body tightly, slapping his hand down on her wrist and deactivating her armor. She cried out as the Dragon Armor receded into its casings, forcing her legs to straighten and causing her hands to grip his arms painfully. Malic's eyes grew wider when he saw the bone of her thigh had torn almost out of the skin.

Nyla! Arydun cried in Mindvoice. Nyla my sister!

Arydun! Vincix exclaimed moving up next to her after insuring that nothing lived near them.

My ribs are broken! Arydun spoke, leaning to her left side heavily as Vincix came up beside her and allowed her to lean against him easing the pain somewhat. My wing as well! Nyla!

"It... it hurts Malic!" Nyla gasped as she gripped him tighter.

Malic looked around them and saw that the small container of cloned blood she always carried was smashed. "Nyla... you need to take my blood!" He snapped. "You need to heal your legs!"

Nyla shook her head. "Ussta Che... she..."

"Eliani is at the settlement! It is under attack!" Malic screamed. "She will not get here in time before you go into shock! I don't have the medical training to fix you! Nyla you have a compound fracture of your leg!" He pulled her tighter to him. "I can not lose you Nyla!" He barked out. "I will not lose YOU!"

Nyla's green eyes went wide as she looked at him. The strength of his words was easy enough to detect and it stunned her. He stared at her with those deep blue eyes unashamed of what he had just professed to her and she felt her heart ache at his words. "Mal... Malic?" She gasped.

"Take my blood Nyla!" He snapped once more. "Do it now!" He said pulling her head closer to his neck as his own armor began to retract. "If you love me you will do it!"

Nyla blinked several times as the enormity of what he was saying hit her. It was never a question in her mind of whether she loved him, from the moment Eliani had pointed him out to her, she had loved him with all that she was and it was not because she and Eliani were bonded so closely. This was a different feeling and it had been growing ever since their first night together. “Malic... we...”

“Damn you woman! You will die if you don’t!” Malic barked. “Do it! We will deal with the repercussions later Nyla!”

Nyla stared at him for only a few more seconds before lifting her head, extending her vampiric fangs and sinking them deeply into his neck. She felt his arms close tighter around her as his blood flooded her mouth, the pain wracking her body as her wounds knit back together and the tears flooding her eyes at what this would mean to all of them. Her eyes grew wide then as memories and emotions swept through her, and she not only saw the unfettered clarity of his love for her, but she felt it as well. He loved Eliani yes, but he loved her more. Nyla should have pulled away then, she should have stopped, but the totality of his emotion was like a wave that swept her up and she relished in the warmth it sent through her. She pulled him tighter by his broad shoulders and sank her fangs into his flesh deeper, closing her eyes in bliss even though the pain was almost unbearable as her wounds knit back together.

Yes... there would be repercussions of course... but at this moment Nyla did not care about that.

Vincix tore his eyes away from them and looked skyward. The teacher in him allowed him to be calm in the midst of the storm and he reached out within Mindvoice. Denali... Nyla has been seriously injured... as has Arydun! We need a STRIKER to pick us up!

Deni’s concerned voice replied instantly. Is she...

She will survive but we are out of this fight for the moment! Can you...

I’ll order Arrarn to send a ship immediately! Denali answered. We have... my mother has dropped off the normal COMs Vincix! We are proceeding to the settlement! We have vampires from the High Coven who are assisting us! I don’t know who they are or where they came from but they are not friends of Aikiro or the Kavalians! I’ll... I’ll make sure Arrarn gets the ship to you!

Inform Lisisa that the southern route is littered with Kavalian dead! She must keep the pressure on! Vincix reported. When Nyla and Arydun are safe we will continue our sweep for any who may have survived!

Understood! Denali answered. We are almost to the settlement Vincix. I must go!

Go with the gods Denali! Vincix echoed. Go with the gods!

IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

SOUTHERN APPROACH

1.2 KILOMETERS FROM SETTLEMENT WALL

It was reminiscent of several battles she had fought during the Evolli war beside her brothers and father, but the Kavalians were much sturdier opponents. The crush of bodies, the screams of the wounded and dying, it filled all of her many vampire/wolf senses. It wasn’t until the man she called father had rescued her from that life that Lisisa Leonidas had embraced the totality of what she was. Even through it all, sharing in every moment of his life after that day, watching Androcles grow and giving her the name Lisi because he could not fully speak her name as a child. It was a name that stuck and a name she now treasured. Twenty-six years she had shared in the warmth and love of her family, never really doubting who she was. The first moment Denali had professed his love for her, Lisisa knew she was complete. She had fought her feelings at first yes, but after so many years of not knowing whether she would ever find love, she truly did not have the strength to fight for very long when love walked right up to her and slapped her silly. She surrendered to what her mind and heart screamed for her to accept in what she could have with Denali, and Lisisa had not looked back since. Three years they hid their love for each other, three years Andro protected them and they did not even realize he knew. When they finally announced it to everyone, they found nothing but acceptance and joy for what they had found together. It was a testament to him and how he and her mothers had raised all of them. Never fear the unknown.

Now he was gone.

It had not fully settled within her mind that he was gone. Part of her believed he could not die; that he was too powerful for fools like the Kavalians to kill no matter how skilled they were at inflicting death. Seeing her mothers react as they did however, that is what made it all so very real. As the minutes and hours passed and this moment approached, her anger only grew. The anger of Denali and Jeth and Aradace. They were among the strongest within their family after Andro and Elynth, sons and daughters to Torma, sons and daughters to Martin Leonidas. She could feel the cold calculating anger surging through her beloved Denali. She could feel it coursing through her Bonded Brother Jeth, and she most certainly could feel it rippling through her. This day Lisisa Leonidas allowed that anger and rage and hate to come out. This day she left nothing hidden behind powerful Mindvoice shields. This day... the four of them would take whatever revenge they could before death took them into its embrace.

Lisisa Leonidas had been very forthright in her approach this day. She had led the Coven riders down low into this valley after spotting the Kavalian columns of troops far below. Their ability to not be detected on any sort of sensors when they flew was a gift this day and Lisisa would use every gift she could take. They swept in out of the sun and fell upon the rear of the Kavalian troops with unabashed hatred and rage. One pass along the long lines of fast marching Kavalian biogenic clone troops was all it took to remove nearly two thousand of them from the equation instantly. They came in low, Jeth the first one through, his superheated blowtorch like breath scorching the very ground beneath him, and any Kavalian in the path of that incinerating breath. One after the other they swooped down, adding their own jets of flame to the screaming Kavalian troops in that languorous pass along the bottom floor of the valley. All of them knew they were too low for T19 missiles to be of any use and this added to the time they loitered over the valley. They would not know it until much later, but the Kavalians had a limited supply of T19s on this mission for they did not predict the Coven dragons would be here. Those T19 missiles were destroyed in the first thirty seconds when the DEATHMANE met her demise. As the front ranks of Kavalian troops turned to watch the carnage from three kilometers ahead of where the dragons were attacking, many panicked and broke into runs in the opposite direction. Many of those in the front columns would survive, but nearly eight thousand of the brethren would not.

When Lisisa and the Coven riders descended into the ranks of the Kavalian troops the second time, it was going to be hand-to-hand, and unbelievably it was a complete rout. The very inbred fear of dragons had been passed to the biogenic clones through the cloning process, and this fear came out now as twenty-one beasts dropped out of the sky into their ranks and began to kill everything. The biogenic clones were different than their pureblood officers in that most of them had no hair covering their bodies. It wouldn't have mattered anyway as talons and teeth, swords and projectile weapons; none of them discriminated in the least. Blood flew; limbs were severed, heads blown apart. Many different colored furs sailed through the air to mix with the thickening blood on the ground until it was so slick it was as if they were splashing through water. The future of these Coven riders hinged on them helping to stop these Kavalians from destroying an Immortal settlement led by a man many thought dead. They all knew this to be the most important day of their lives. All of the training they had received in the last months came rushing to the forefront now, every hour studying the many books, the blood they had spilled during training. The bruises and scrapes were too numerous to count, but now they knew what Androcles Leonidas was pushing them towards. Now they knew what he had forged them into. Staring out from behind the helmets of their Dragon Armor, their weapons and swords and knives and talons and teeth killing Kavalians at every turn, the Coven Riders all knew their transformation was complete. They had found where they belonged, they had found where they fit in, and they would now die to preserve that at all costs.

All because one young Lycavorian Prince who was supposed to be their enemy had trusted and believed in them. Believed in them even after what many of them viewed as the vilest crime they had ever been witness to was exacted upon his sister by the women who many of them at one point had looked up too.

The Kavalian troops tried to fight. Indeed many of them knew if they wanted to survive this day they needed to fight. Even as they turned and ran, they fired their weapons back, to no avail. Against the psychic shields of Bonded Pairs who were filled with unfettered rage, they may as well have been shooting blanks. Yes... they turned and fought. And they died. In droves they died. Lisisa and Jeth held nothing back, letting all their years together come bubbling forth now. There was a reason that the dragon Elder Council allowed Jeth and Tharua to mate even though they were still so young. That reason came forth now as Jeth called upon all his father and Martin had taught him and Lisisa. Behind only his father and grandmother Arzoal, Jeth was the largest dragon among their species. Behind only his father and sister Elynth, Jeth was considered the strongest in both physical stature and his Mindvoice abilities. He unleashed it all this day; he embraced what he could do with glee. Every sweep of his massive wings shattered bone and sent bodies sailing. Every tremendous swipe of his talons and blood would fountain into the sky. He lifted whole groups of Kavalian troops into the air with his Mindvoice TK power, smashing them back into the earth with cruel power. His Dragon Armor was already stained heavily with blood, and still he did not stop. Like his sister and Andro, he and Lisisa had trained together for years, and they were a perfect combination of whirling and devastating death.

And as it would come to be, Lisisa Leonidas whirled to look upon her Bonded Brother and suddenly there were no more Kavalians to kill. Her own armor was saturated in blood, her Nehtes dripping with the blood of many, her Shi Viska humming on her arm like a living thing waiting to be launched again to claim another life. As her cobalt blue vampire eyes returned to their normal forest green color Lisisa's head whipped back and forth as she saw the riders who had followed her discovering the same thing. Her keen wolf/vampire eyes detected dozens, probably hundreds of Kavalians fleeing into the timber of the mountains all around them and as her eyes fell back to the scene around her, Lisisa suddenly fully understood the horror of what Androcles and her father had experienced not so long ago at a place called Alba Tau. Jeth's wide golden eyes twisted and turned, snarling as he looked for new targets to kill, but like his Bonded Sister he found none. What he did find was death. Death on a scale his young eyes had never seen before. They had fought and killed during the Evolli War, all but the youngest Leonidas children had. What they had experienced then paled in comparison to what they saw now. Kavalian corpses were heaped upon each other, lining the valley floor as far as the eye could see and staining the rich green grass crimson with blood.

And as it was... it had become deathly quiet.

Lisisa kept turning her head, her eyes wide as she looked in every direction. No matter what direction she looked, the scene was the same. Hundreds of dead Kavalians littered the ground around her. It took only an instant for her to fully comprehend the nightmares that her brother spoke of having now. This is what he would see staring back at him from another time and place.

"Jeth!" Lisisa barked.

There are... there are no more. Jeth answered causing Lisisa to turn and look at him. She could not remember how long they had been on the ground. She didn't even remember landing. Lisisa turned as several of the Coven riders sprinted up to where she stood, among them the senior enlisted man in the group. Narice had told her she could trust this man for he had been the one to keep his grip on reality and coach the others at night. His dark red Firespitter stepped over several piles of bodies and came up behind him. Lisisa looked at him and saw the grizzled face of an older vampire. A man nearing a thousand years of life perhaps, and even his face was ghostly white and pale at what he was seeing.

"Princess... they are running into the timber all around us." He told her feeling foolish at stating the obvious.

"Do we pursue them?" Another Coven rider gasped as she came up.

Lisisa shook her head quickly. "No." she stated. "We would lose the advantage we have if we did."

"They fled with terror in their eyes." The senior Coven rider said.

Lisisa looked at him. "What is your name?" She asked.

"Juseb Princess." He spoke. "I am..."

Lisisa held up her hand as she felt the tremors in Mindvoice. She closed her eyes tightly, trying to block the rage Denali felt. She could almost feel the racing of his heart; almost see as he swung his Nehtes upon a Kavalian. She could also see the explosions of dirt and ground all around him and the others.

"Denali and Narice are fully engaged!" Lisisa spoke opening her eyes. "We must go to them now! The attack from the Northwest was the main attack!"

"Princess... how... how do you know?" Juseb asked.

"I can... I can see with his eyes!" Lisisa gasped out. "The Kavalians have broken through the north edge of the settlement wall. They are massing troops to surge through! Their mortars and heavy weapons are covering for them."

Juseb turned back to face the other riders as they moved closer to where her stood. "Mount your brothers and sisters!" He bellowed. "Our work is not done!" He turned back to Lisisa. "Lead us Princess Lisisa! Lead us and we shall follow!"

Lisisa turned and used her Mindvoice power to propel her five foot three frame up onto Jeth's back and into the saddle. "Then we go now!"

As the last of twenty-one dragons took to the skies of Kranek they left a valley littered with Kavalian corpses. It would be weeks before the final tally was made, but they left behind a smoking ruin that day. Trees that still burned, grass that was blackened by fire and soot. Dirt that soaked up Kavalian blood on an unprecedented scale.

They also left behind seven thousand dead Kavalians and had effectively broken the back of the planned southern attack force. The surviving Kavalian biogenic clones would spend the next several weeks surrendering to whoever would accept them, outside of a Lycavorian or vampire with a dragon beside them.

IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

Seven thousand four hundred and nineteen years of life he had and for all of that time with the exception of the last twenty-six years he had considered those he fought with now enemies.

As Cha'talla ducked his head at the whistle of another plasma mortar he could do nothing but shake his head and wonder why. He stood behind several layers of steel and concrete in the heavy weapons bunker, the 30mm Kinetic Cannon hammering out death with every burst. One of the amazing gifts given to him and his tribe by Androcles Leonidas without as much as a question. Twenty of these cannons circled the walls of the settlement now, and along with the six older but no less effective 200mm turret based ground batteries his home had become so much safer than it was before. Four months ago they would never have been able to withstand such an assault. In that four months, everything he had ever believed was proven wrong, and everything he had ever hoped for the future became his for the taking. That sunny day Normya Leonidas walked into their lives would be the day that Cha'talla remembered for the rest of his years, however many he had left. As he watched the battle in front of him unfold he witnessed acts of bravery and heroics that smashed aside all the preconceived and fabricated lies he and his people had been told for so long by Veldruk and so many others.

The Lycavorians would consider his people beneath them. They were no better than the ruling vampire socialites who looked down on his people. They could never be trusted to stand and fight. Cha'talla should have known back then that they were all lies. He should have known the first day they stood across that barren stretch of land by the sea and saw the crimson clad Spartans standing at the mouth of that great canyon pass. He had been watching from a ridge beside Xerxes above the Hot Gates when the voice of Martin Leonidas's father echoed along the walls to come and take their weapons. He had watched for hours as wave after wave of their troops had gone crashing against the Spartan Phalanx and he had watched them die. He had watched Xerxes grow angrier at each passing hour. Cha'talla knew then that Veldruk's oldest son was an arrogant ass. If he had been smart, Cha'talla would have turned away then and been a voice among his people that it was time to end their servitude to the High Coven. Three hundred Spartans and some two thousand others slaughtered nearly thirty thousand of Xerxes's best troops in the first two days, among them five thousand of his fellow Immortals. And still they held the Hot Gates. It had ended up being a victory for Xerxes, but at a cost that not even his father could abide and his death was faked and he was pulled off Earth to be replaced by Yuri.

Cha'talla should have taken that as a sign. Instead... for the next three thousand plus years his people fought against the Lycavorians, and for the most part they died. There was never any major battle that they could claim as an outright victory. The Lycavorians were warriors unparalleled in his memory. Leaving Earth behind he wondered if the death of their King would cause them to lose faith and hope. He had been wrong... as had so many High Coven scholars. When he returned to Earth some twenty-seven years ago and discovered the son of the man they had killed so long ago was the upstart who was causing the unrest on Earth, Cha'talla should have known then that the end was near.

He had taken his adopted daughter, the son of his hated brother and Yuri Cha'talla now knew. He had taken her in the hopes of using her superior DNA to somehow improve the lives of his people by making them more pleasing to the eye. Her combined wolf and vampire DNA was the perfect mix for them to base their experiments off. Cha'talla had never intended to hurt the young woman, and known only to him, once they had what they needed from her he was going to release her within Union space to find her way. Veldruk's fool actions and than Aikiro's made that impossible. He had thought Moran someone he could trust, but that quickly proved false. Had he been able to speak with Yuri away from the others, talked to her at length, Cha'talla believed he could have found an ally. He knew Yuri from before she went to Earth, and the Yuri he knew back then was untainted by her father's lust for more power, Xerxes rape of her or finally her mother's twisted teachings. And then Veldruk attempted to kill him. And he almost succeeded. Cha'talla would have died that day on the lakefront had Esther not found him and given him the one thing he never thought he would have. She gave him hope.

The moment Cha'talla took Esther as his Blessed Wife; he knew he was on the path to the future and redemption. That his tribe would follow him was never in question, it was just the Akruvian way. He was the remaining senior Elder of their tribe, and his word was like gospel. In the last two plus decades he had gotten them away from such old thinking but he knew the final word on everything rested with him, and the Ruling Immortal Council, elves and Akruvian both would never go against his wishes. Cha'talla had worked toward one goal all of this time, and it stemmed from the respect and honor showed to his brother T'lolt on that fateful day on Lycavore. Martin Leonidas had his brother's life in his hands, and instead of killing him he saved him and honored his dead sons by not allowing animals to feed on their remains. It converted T'lolt that very day, what Martin had done, and within weeks of coming here it had converted Cha'talla. Now he would never have the chance to thank the man in person for returning that spark to him. He would never have the opportunity to thank him for his goddess of a daughter who loved his first-born son with every waking step she took. Even after their ceremony, Cha'talla could hear the older Akruvian woman of his tribe speaking of Normya's beauty and how she gazed at Tir'ut with unabashed adoration. An adoration they said, an adoration that came from deep within her heart.

Seeing what he had this day brought it all home for Cha'talla. He knew there were probably dozens more, but with his own eyes he had seen Lycavorians risk injury and death to go to the aide of an injured or fallen Immortal. These were men and women from Dysea's ship that had now lived and worked among them for as long as she had been here. There was no hesitation in their actions, and Cha'talla witnessed his people doing the same thing. Whatever had brought them all together, what was happening now was binding them together in a way nothing ever could. Cha'talla suddenly realized that Androcles knew this would happen. He knew that the first step had to be taken and he had taken it without question, following the example his first elven mother and younger sister had already set on a smaller scale.

Dysea Leonidas.

A woman he had once professed to Moran on that field he would like to have in his bed and under him. Until their world and their battle had been blown apart that day. An elven female who walked out of her STRIKER that first day showing no fear, and accepted Cha'talla and his people from the very first moment. An Elven/Lycavorian Queen who believed deeply in fate and faith in the gods. A supremely intelligent woman, and like his Blessed Wife Esther, a woman of unmatched beauty. As she grew more comfortable here, she would often be found mingling with the older Akruvian woman, many of them six or seven times her age. They would be drinking tea or wine and discussing the past and the future. Dysea Leonidas had made fast friends with those older women, learning the Akruvian ways and tradition and culture that they had almost forgotten. It was Dysea who had trusted and accepted them without doubt or worry, and for that trust Cha'talla would forever be in her debt and consider her a dear friend. He felt great pain for her loss and Cha'talla knew that wherever the future led them, it would be in the shadow of the Lycavorian Union. More so than any other species he knew of in the universe, the Lycavorians held honor and duty and love so very close to their hearts. It was a similar path that his people had once followed and would follow again in the future if he had any say in the matter.

The plasma mortar landing a hundred meters away shook Cha'talla back to the present and he gripped his SA80 tighter.

"They are finding their range now!" Cha'talla shouted to his young aide over the din of the 30mm turret. "We must..."

The bulk of the turret saved their lives as the plasma mortar landed directly outside their bunkered position and brought the entire bunker wall crashing inward. Cha'talla rolled to the ground, pulling his aide with him as the pieces of concrete and metal that would have crushed them lodged securely against the now useless hulk of the destroyed turret. Dust and dirt filled the interior of the turret and Cha'talla could just make out the crushed remains of the combined Lycavorian/Akruvian crew of two crushed beneath the many hundreds of pounds.

"Get out!" Cha'talla screamed above the whine of P190s and SA80 assault rifles. He shoved his aide toward the flickering daylight sun, now partially obscured by dirt and dust from the destroyed turret. Cha'talla nearly threw the young Immortal out of the opening and then followed him out, his body rolling painfully over the shattered remains of the bunker's wall and top which had partially caved in behind the bunker.

His first glance was towards the wall and his eyes grew wider as he saw a large ten meter wide hole in the twelve meter high wall, both Immortal and Lycavorian bodies strewn across the area.

"Vith! The wall is breached! The wall is breached!" Cha'talla screamed into his implant, tapping his finger against his jaw madly.

Cha'talla heard them then and his head snapped up as half a dozen huge shadows passed over the top of them. The trumpeting of dragons could not be mistaken for anything else and Cha'talla scrambled to his feet as he saw and heard what sounded like large blowtorches, followed quickly by the screams of men and the increase in weapons fire.

"T'lolt! T'lolt!" Cha'talla screamed into his implant as he began running to the wall followed quickly by several dozen of his people and the elven engineers who had worked on his ships.

"Cha'talla! You should see this brother!" T'lolt's voice echoed in his COM over the nearby sounds of weapons and dragon no doubt. "It is a sight to behold! The Kavalians are running Cha'talla! They are actually running away in terror! Princess Narice and Denali Leonidas just dropped on their main ranks from out of the sky! They are killing them by the dozens!"

"T'lolt... the wall is breached!" Cha'talla screamed. "Northwest... sector three! Ten meters wide! Can you shift anyone to cover?"

"I will try!" T'lolt replied instantly. "We must cross the killing ground to reach you brother! We are coming!"

Several explosions brought Cha'talla's head up again and he saw several Union fighters come screaming over the top of the settlement, leaving blazing trees in their wake. He watched the ground heave up in the distance and the treeline that hid the mortars that were pounding them suddenly became hotter than the pits of whatever hell the Kavalian dogs believed in.

"Union fighters!" His aide screamed from next to him.

"I can see that!" Cha'talla barked. "Dysea... can you direct the fighters now!" Cha'talla waited for a moment before turning his head back towards where the Immortal Command Center was set up in the center of the large settlement. "Dysea respond!" He barked out. "Dysea come in!"

The silence was ominous and then Cha'talla saw the smoke rising from the center of the settlement. "Cha'talla to all Wall Command posts! Has the perimeter been broken anywhere? Have you been infiltrated?"

"Post Three negative!"

"Post Two negative! Do you need assistance?"

"Post four is clear! The last patrol came in eight minutes ago!"

"Post five is clear! No breaches!"

Cha'talla turned his head to the southeast corner, not actually seeing the large bunker that sat atop the wall. "Post Four what patrol?" He barked. "We had no patrols out! Everyone was pulled in to prepare defenses!"

"Lieutenant T'con! He brought his squad in thirteen minutes ago!" The reply came.

"Lieutenant T'con is manning the outer..." Cha'talla was screaming as he spoke but the rise of hundreds of voices caused him to cut his eyes to the now shattered wall. He saw weapons fire impacting the edges of the newly opened breach and the elven engineers using their elf speed to dive for cover, several of them not in time as projectiles punched into their bodies, including the female engineer who had treated him so respectfully.

"NO! NO! NO!" Cha'talla bellowed as he brought up his SA80 and held back the trigger as he began sprinting towards the opening.

VHC SCYTHER-CLASS LR INTERCEPTOR/BOMBER

"...is vithin stupid!" Normya spat. "We should be on the ground helping my family fight!"

Cirith turned her helmeted head and looked at her from the pilot's seat of the supremely advanced High Coven SYCTHER-Class Long Range Interceptor/Bomber. "Your mother did not agree Normya Leonidas." She stated as calmly as she could. "When my father spoke with her directly he told her of the ships we detected. I was already launched and she agreed they needed to be investigated. I was already equipped to discover what it was they are doing and I landed and picked you and your escort up.”

“We should be down there with them!” Normya hissed.

“Behind only your mother Queen For'mya you are considered the finest pilot in the Union from what I understand.” Cirith answered. “I am an adequate pilot, but not in the same league as you.”

“Arrarn is better than me.” Normya spat but less forcefully.

“Be that as it may be... there is a reason these High Coven ships are not involved with the attack on Kranek.” Cirith stated. “And I doubt very much they are friendly as they have not revealed themselves as we have.”

“Aikiro’s people?” Normya asked looking at her.

“That is a possibility yes.” Cirith answered her evenly. “To be honest... we don’t really know anything since the jamming you have initiated within the system prevents even our ships from using sensors beyond half a million kilometers.”

“I hope so!” Normya snapped harshly. “For what they did to my sister I will gladly kill them!”

Cirith glanced at her once more. “Just so that desire does not translate to all vampires, for we are not all the same.” She stated calmly though her voice quivered just a touch.

Normya met her eyes. “That’s not something you need to explain to me.” She snapped. “One of my mothers and three of my sisters are vampire or part vampire!”

Cirith had never been around Lycavorians; she had never even met one to be honest. And even though she had some Lycavorian blood within her, as a whole they frightened her to some extent. She had not been lying to Micardo when she told him she had studied the Lycavorian people and the Leonidas family far more than he had. Probably far more than any intelligence operative within the High Coven. She felt like she knew most of them deeply. The Venorik Elghinn were militant supporters of Aikiro and this blinded them in many ways, but they were an excellent source of information gatherers, and Cirith had used her position within their ranks to discover all that she could. She did not know the full story behind her father’s history, as her father had never felt the need to give her all the pieces of the puzzle. He had never lied to her, but he had also never told her the complete history of his youth and background and how he had passed this Lycavorian DNA to her. He would tell her one-day she knew, and she was content and trusted and loved her father enough to be patient and let him reveal it of his own accord. Cirith knew it was the reason Aikiro had wanted her dead once she discovered what blood flowed in her father’s veins. Her father also knew exactly what her skills were, and he was unafraid to allow her to use them, hence why he approved this mission to begin with.

Cirith did know that Lycavorians were a passionate race, and once riled in a manner like Normya Leonidas was now acting, even with her elven blood, they were rarely ever soothed without some sort of action. She did not blame her really, having her sister raped and brutalized, her father killed and now her entire family under assault by the Kavalian dogs. All this in just the last few weeks, it was a wonder she could even function properly given what was going on. It was only another example of the fortitude that the Lycavorians had as a people and what their now dead father had instilled in his children when it came to duty and honor.

The SCYTHE-Class was the epitome of High Coven technology in everyway. A superior Long Range Interceptor with the speed and capacity of a fighter and a bomber put together. It was equipped with advanced sensors and weapons, as well as the finest Shroud generators the Venorik Elghinn could design, and she was meant for deep penetration raids into Kavalians territory in order to sever supply lines and cause untold havoc. They had been brought into production when the Vampire High Coven had seen the success the Union M5 DEVASTATOR had during the Evolli War in disrupting supply lines and basically giving the amphibian species fits. Unlike the DEVASTATOR, when stripped of their interior weapons pods as this one now was, the SCYTHE could carry a fully loaded team of five Venorik Elghinn Commandos. Cirith’s normal co-pilot now occupied the Flight Engineering station behind her seat and to the right. You could turn and look into the rear of the ship and see where the five pureblood Venorik Elghinn commandos and Tir'ut now sat quietly across from each other, but packed rather tightly due to Tir'ut’s size.

Normya looked at her from under her own helmet, and for a moment Cirith saw death in those emerald green eyes. The look vanished quickly, but she had seen it. “No you are not all the same.” Normya spoke. “But Tir'ut and I don’t know you and when push comes to shove... all of you will lose.”

“Brave words Normya Leonidas.” Cirith spoke.

Normya nodded confidently. “Maybe. But truthful.”

Cirith saw the set of her jaw and came to the determination that Normya Leonidas was far more deadly than her elven appearance gave to others. Another glance into the back at the Immortal who had come with her also lent credence to this fact. The Immortal wore the uniform of a Lycavorian, Mark IV ArmorPly and the helmet that covered his features except for his eyes and lips. He carried the Immortal Sword that all Immortals wore after coming of age, and his hands rested comfortably on the Spartan P190A3. His keen dark eyes never left the faces of the Commandos across from him. The beeping caught her attention once more and she turned back to her controls. A quick glance told her what she wanted to know.

“We’re approaching their Shroud perimeter!” She announced as she began to adjust her controls.

“Can you tell how many ships are out here?” Normya asked.

“We detected seven from outside the system, but with the exotic jamming you are using, only short range sensors work now.” Cirith answered her as she adjusted her controls. “This is the ship that was beaming transmissions to the surface. It is a BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought... but we do not know who is in control of it.”

“This can’t be good either way you look at it.” Normya said.

“No... I agree.” Cirith said.

“Not your people?” Normya asked.

Cirith shook her head immediately. “The Venorik Elghinn branch that follows my father dealt mainly with Intelligence gathering... and assassination.” Cirith saw Normya’s eyes grow a little wider. “It is and was a distasteful position to be in Normya Leonidas... but considering the makeup of the High Coven... very useful. It allowed my father to keep his activities well away from the scrutiny of others, protect me, and build his own base of power until this moment was upon us.”

“What moment is that?” Normya asked.

Cirith met her eyes. “Given what is happening I suppose there would be no reason to keep it from you.” She said calmly. “My father and I, those who follow him, we were coming to Kranek to ask for political asylum. We discovered through sources that your mother had found Cha’talla, a man we have been looking for ourselves. For quite some time. We have over a hundred ships and nearly three million followers spread out through the High Coven, some in high places, some not. We wanted to break with Aikiro’s oppressive rule and the way she was conducting the war with the Kavalians. Many of us believed the way she and Admiral Moran were proceeding; we believed that the High Coven would be no more within a decade. They would have ground us and everyone else into dust in their drive for more power.”

“Did you know about what she was planning?” Normya asked plainly. “About my sister, the attack on Dragon Mountain?”

Cirith knew what that question was being used to gauge and fortunately for her she could honestly give the correct answer. As could her father. They were both taken completely off guard by Aikiro’s actions on Earth. Cirith feared what any other answer would elicit. “No... we did not.” She spoke with a shake of her head. “And I know your wolf senses would be able to detect a lie from me Normya Leonidas.”

“There are those who can mask the adrenalin dump into their blood when they lie.” Normya said.

Cirith nodded. “Yes... I’m sure there are. I am not one of them however, because I too have Lycavorian blood within me, though I do not know how to use the skills it gives me as you do.”

“Why were you looking for Cha’talla?” Normya asked. “To kill him?”

Cirith looked at her with wide dark eyes. “Kill him? Zeklet'tau no! Whether he knows it or not Cha’talla is still revered among his people. Among the Immortals. No matter how many times Aikiro cursed his name or how many books she wiped his name from; she could not kill the man. Many Immortals believe he is still alive; many do not but they still have hope. We had hoped that we could convince him to get his people to renounce the High Coven. To leave them and take away a base of long standing power from them. Contrary to what you and your people may or may not believe Normya, there are pureblood females that have followed in Esther Suira’s path and entered into relationships with Immortals. We know of them... it is a secret that only my father and I know of. And we know what Cha’talla was trying to do when Veldruk tried to kill him. This movement... it is among the younger generations mainly... they look up to Cha’talla and Esther as a sign.” (Heavens)

“A sign of what?” Normya asked.

“What the future could hold for all of us.” Cirith answered. “Mysteries, Memories and Myth.”

The beeping sounded again and she looked up out the view window. “We will penetrate their Shroud in fifteen seconds. Reducing power to one quarter.” She spoke.

“They won’t see us?” Normya asked after a moment of staring at her.

Cirith shook her head with a small smile on her beautiful features. “Fortunately for us, the Shrouds on my ship are much more advanced than theirs. They will not see us.”

It happened slowly, but Normya had experienced it before and knew what to expect. They went from millions of stars all around them outside the Shroud, to something that was completely void of light except for the massive ship in front of them. As with Union ships, the Shroud encompassed an area probably a kilometer all around the ship and as they fully entered the sphere of the Dreadnought’s Shroud field Normya’s emerald green eyes immediately saw the second ship and grew wider.

“Tir’ut!” She gasped out.

The Venorik Commandos had seen many things in their lives since most of them were over a thousand years of age, yet none of them had ever seen an Immortal blur in motion and all of them bolted to their feet reaching for weapons.

“Lady Cirith!” The most senior barked out instantly even as Tir’ut stopped his motion blurring directly behind Normya’s chair.

Cirith’s head turned at the voice of her soldier and her eyes sprang open as she watched Tir’ut appear behind Normya’s chair. She twisted in her chair stupefied and terrified at the same time. “A jal nindel zha orthae!” Cirith gasped out. (By all that is holy) “Il kal’daka darthirii... what is wrong?” Tir’ut hissed.

Normya pointed out the view window, Tir’ut’s eyes following her motion and he snarled viciously. “Does that ship look familiar to you ussta m’ranndii?” Normya asked causing Cirith’s eyes to grow even wider. (My husband)

“Indeed it does.” Tir’ut answered harshly.

“You... you blurred!” Cirith gasped looking at him. “How...”

Normya grinned. “Take your helmet off Tir’ut.” She stated. “I believe we can trust them.”

Tir’ut looked at her. Are you sure il kal’daka darthirii? He asked within Mindvoice.

Normya nodded. No... but we planned for this as well didn’t we?

Tir’ut nodded. We did. And it is done.

Cirith knew immediately they were speaking within Mindvoice for she could detect the tremors of their conversation. While she was among the strongest Mindvoicers in the High Coven, she had only achieved the skills she had outside the tutelage of the High Coven Adepts and Acolytes that Aikiro had kept so tightly on her leash. The tremors she felt now however, they were some of the strongest she had ever felt before. She watched Tir’ut lift his hands and take his helmet on either side before lifting it completely from his head. Cirith gasped once more as she saw the bronze colored skin, the short dark hair and the much less pronounced bones spurs along his jaw line.

Normya grinned now. “Cirith... this is Tir’ut. He is the first born son of Cha’talla and Esther and he is my Du’ased m’ranndii.”

Cirith gazed at her, the shock in her eyes very evident. “Your... your Blessed Husband?”

Normya nodded. “Yes... for many weeks now... and we have seen that ship before.” She stated pointing to the Bontawillian Low Gravity Frigate that drifted off the starboard aft quarter of the massive BLOOD REVERENCE.

“You... you are their son?” Cirith rasped out still in shock at what she saw kneeling before her.

Tir’ut nodded. “I am the oldest of my brothers. There are four of us.” He stated proudly.

“We... we suspected that... we didn’t know for sure.” Cirith stammered. “We didn’t... oh my...”

“Lady Cirith?” The senior commando barked from behind them.

All of them turned to see the five commandos standing with their weapons at the ready. Cirith waved them down. “Lower your weapons Lancy.” She directed. “We... we are not in danger.”

The five commandos complied instantly and while the others moved to return to their seats Lancy Dysona moved forward into the already cramped cockpit. His eyes were on Tir’ut, but they did not look at him as a threat. They looked at him as a wonder.

Cirith turned her eyes back to Tir’ut. “You know... you know that ship?” She asked.

Tir'ut nodded. "It is the ship that began all this." He stated. "Under the command of a pureblood like yourself. A vampire by the name of Gareld."

"Gareld?" Cirith exclaimed. "Aikiro's former student?" She asked.

Tir'ut looked at her. "You know him?"

"I know of him." Cirith answered. "He deserted my mother shortly after the war with the Kavalians began. He's scum."

"My father has debt to settle with him." Tir'ut said. "He..."

"It's a debt that will have to be settled some other time." The engineer behind Cirith stated. "That Bontawillian ship is dead. It's been vented to space."

"What?" Cirith asked turning to look at him.

The man nodded. "Sensors indicate nearly a dozen precision holes in the hull. Looks like a laser was used to carve it up. No lifesigns. No power emissions."

"Then why keep it under tow?" Normya asked. "Look..." She pointed to the thin bluish beam that extended from the rear of the dreadnought and attached to the nose of the frigate. "That's a tow beam isn't it?"

"Yes." Cirith stated as her hand danced across her controls. "I'm moving us closer." She stated. "What do you have on the dreadnought?"

The man in the engineer's chair shook his head. "Standard passive scans show nothing out of the ordinary. Their Shroud is nearly as good as ours and I'm guessing they have a pretty good engineer who tweaked it for them."

"Lifesigns?" Normya asked.

"Whoa!" The man spoke. "I'm only reading three hundred and six lifesigns. They must have the majority of systems operated by remote."

Normya looked at Cirith. "Remote? Is that even possible with a ship that size?" She asked.

Cirith shrugged her shoulders. "Apparently so."

"Lady Cirith... your father is hailing us." The man spoke.

Cirith turned quickly and touched a panel on her console. "Yes father?" She spoke.

"Cirith... you must return to the surface immediately." Valin's voice erupted over the COM.

"What? Father... we are looking at this ship right now!" Cirith announced. "It... it does not appear to be a High Coven run vessel! It only has a crew of three hundred! It..."

"The Kavalians have broken through the wall of the settlement Cirith!" Valin snapped. "Our ships are fully engaged and we can not send troops down with all the Kavalian fighters still in the area! Communications with Cha'talla's Command Center have been lost and we..."

Cirith turned as she saw Normya sit forward quickly. "Lost?" She gasped. "What do you mean lost?"

"Who is this?" Valin barked.

"Father... what do you mean lost?" Cirith repeated the question.

"Just that damn it!" Valin barked. "Queen Leonidas is no longer answering transmissions to her. She was directing the fighter support now making its way to the surface and apparently something happened. Reports are coming in that her dragon has gone crazy! I do not know..."

Normya gasped and sat back in her chair drawing the attention of both Cirith and Tir'ut. He gripped her shoulder.

"Il kal'daka darthirii?" He asked.

"Cirith... a G9 has just entered the Shroud field!" Her co-pilot spat. "Bearing three two six! Heading right for the landing bay!"

Cirith yanked her controls over and the SCYTHE responded instantly. All of them saw the High Coven G9 Runner as it made its way towards the BLOOD REVERENCE.

"Mother?" Normya gasped.

"Normya?" Tir'ut spoke gripping her shoulder.

Normya reached up and squeezed his hand painfully. "Mother." She gasped. "She's on that ship Tir'ut!" Normya hissed.

Tir'ut's eyes went wide as he looked at the G9 moving away from them. "Il kal'daka darthirii, how can... how can that be?"

Normya looked at him. "I can feel her husband!" Normya said. "I can... I can hear Iriral calling out to her and she isn't answering!"

"Are you sure Normya Leonidas?" Cirith asked quickly.

"We can... my entire family... we can almost sense when we are close to one another in Mindvoice." Normya gasped. "They have my mother whoever they are! I can feel her! And she would never leave Kranek without Iriral! Never!"

Tir'ut looked at Cirith. "That Bontawillian ship is the same one that tried to kill Normya several months ago! It is commanded by this Gareld! He is working with the Kavalians! That much we determined weeks ago!" He hissed out. "If Normya says she can feel her mother on that Runner, then that is where she is! We must go after them!"

Cirith's eyes were wide. "Father... we are tracking a High Coven G9 that just entered within the Shroud field. Trajectory indicates it came from Kranek. Normya... Normya Leonidas says her mother is on that ship!"

"Impossible!" Valin spat. "How could they have gotten her off the planet? Cirith you will follow my orders and..."

Cirith took one look at Normya and stabbed her finger down on the panel cutting off her father's voice. "Normya... you are sure?" She asked.

"Yes." Normya answered without hesitation. "Tir'ut?"

Tir'ut nodded his head, his eyes closed. "Yes... yes I can feel her now as well." He stated. He opened his eyes once more and looked at Cirith. "We are husband and wife! We have tasted each other's blood Cirith Esavorna and our Mindvoice abilities are far more tuned to family members! We..."

"Enough! You don't need to convince me anymore!" She barked. "Writnor?" She turned and looked at her co-pilot. "Do you have the override controls?"

The man nodded. "What for?" He replied. "Let's sneak in when they enter the bay." The man offered. "They only have three hundred crew members Lady Cirith. It's not like it's going to be real busy. As long as we keep a safe distance from the G9... they won't even know we are there."

Cirith looked at him. "Writnor... I have never flown in close quarters like that."

"I have." Normya said looking at her. "I will fly us."

The decision was very easy for Cirith. She and her father had already taken that complete step into the future and there was no going back. Given what history her father and her nanny had related to her through the years, Cirith knew she was meant to be part of this family. She had been meant to be the wife of King Leonidas of Sparta by a higher power, her father and nanny both telling her this was so from the time she was old enough to understand. She was supposed to be the one to unite the two peoples and her half brother Xerxes had cheated her before she had the opportunity to fulfill that role. It was in her blood she knew, and while she did not know the complete history as to how or why, she knew that the wolf within her belonged here. She belonged with these people.

"Take the controls." She ordered quickly. "Lancy... prepare the team for infiltration. Start memorizing the schematics of a BLOOD REVERENCE! We're going in!"

IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

"NO! NO! NO!"

Cha'talla's scream of anger echoed across the area even as he brought up his SA80 and began laying down a blistering field of projectiles at the mass of Kavalian troops that had risen up and were surging through the ten meter break in the wall. He felt his aide beside him doing the same thing, fearlessly following his Commander and probably knowing they would die this die.

Everything they had built, everything he had a hand in bringing to his people was being torn asunder. Cha'talla was by no means afraid to die. The old ways of the Akruvian people, which he had embraced so completely upon settling here, said that to die in defense of others was the most honorable way to die. Cha'talla knew his brother would get here, he had faith in T'lolt and what he would do, but Cha'talla knew he would also die here insuring he bought just that few extra seconds until T'lolt appeared. Cha'talla would accept that death. He would accept it for it insured his people, his tribe continued on. It insured the most beautiful light in his entire seven thousand plus years of existence continued living. What she ever saw in him Cha'talla would never know, but he would die at least knowing happiness and love had once been his for the taking. And he had taken it and never looked back.

As the first wave of Kavalian biogenic clones fell before him, riddled by his SA80, he did not see that light of his life come blurring around the corner of a single story building heading right for him in a desperate attempt to save his life. Of course, she never saw the nearly thirty Immortals come launching over the top of the settlement wall as if they had been shot out of a cannon. It was easy enough to accomplish when you had thirty dragons launch them through the air with Mindvoice TK power as easily as if they were lifting flowers. She never saw them land upright, T'lolt in the lead, and begin moving as fast as their legs would carry them right behind her.

Esther Saira was unique in many ways. She had always been different, and this is what allowed her to see past the exterior visage that Cha'talla the Immortal gave off, and see inside the man's heart and mind. He had not only taken her blood that day, he had taken all that she was. The fever induced delirium may have prompted him to take her that very first time, but Esther would never say it was against her will, for in reality it never was. It was why she made him stop taking the treatments that were altering his outward appearance. She had fallen in love with Cha'talla the Immortal no matter what his appearance was, and while the treatments he had taken softened his normally harsh features, when he stopped they reverted back only slightly. Esther didn't care what he looked like. She loved what was inside him, the way he worshiped the ground she walked upon, the way he doted over her like some precious flower. And she could never feel with someone else what Cha'talla made her feel in the only marriage bed she would ever want, of that Esther had no doubts.

Esther saw the break in the settlement wall, she saw the first rank of Kavalians fall, and she also saw the hundreds more that were rushing the opening in an all out attempt to get inside the many hundreds of buildings where the dragons could not follow. Esther came skidding to a halt when she saw Cha'talla stagger as the first rounds punched into his armor. Her dark eyes were wide in horror, watching as the death of the only man she had ever loved began.

“CHA'TALLA!”

He did not hear his Blessed Wife scream his name, the roar of his SA80 almost deafening as he fired with one hand, stumbling sideways from the impact of four rounds against his body armor. Cha'talla screamed his outrage as his SA80 ran dry and he heaved it at an oncoming Kavalian soldier as he tore his sword from his back. He watched as his aide was blown backwards by no less than ten rounds that perforated his entire chest area and blew apart his head. Cha'talla lifted his sword above his head and with a howl of utter fury he took a step towards the onrushing Kavalian troops. Two of the lead Kavalians both aimed at the lone Immortal in their path and pulled back the triggers of their weapons. Cha'talla took both bursts in the chest area of his armor and it sent his two hundred and sixty-five pound body slamming backwards.

At least nine rounds struck Cha'talla full on, and in what would be later characterized as nothing short of a miracle, the wondrous Mark IV ArmorPly body armor was never penetrated, and Cha'talla's backwards lunge was stopped short as he slammed painfully into something very unyielding but surprisingly soft.

And then the true future and path of Cha'talla the Immortal was born before the eyes of his Blessed Wife, his trusted and loved brother and dozens of Immortals and elves as well as the Kavalians who were pouring through the opening in the wall, only to come up short.

YOU WILL NOT TAKE MY BONDED BROTHER FROM ME! YOU WILL NOT TAKE OUR GIFT FROM US!

Of all who witnessed the event that day, only Esther and those able to hear the bellow within Mindvoice, only they would see what took place and they would remember it for all time.

No one would be able to explain how Vollenth appeared directly behind Cha'talla wearing the Mark Eleven saddle, and no one ever would know how he knew to activate it so that he teleported to this exact spot. What they would know and remember is how every single Kavalian soldier came to a screeching halt when they heard the deafening trumpet that Vollenth released at that moment, extending his huge head out on his neck, snapping his wings to their full extension on either side of his body and letting rip with a noise that sounded like it was rising from the depths of hell itself. The yellowish tint of his wings was bright against the green of his body in the sunlight, and his blazing yellow/orange eyes held murderous fury in them. As soon as that trumpet ended Vollenth lowered his head and touched his snout to the shoulder of a very dazed Cha'talla.

It was you! Vollenth's voice erupted in Mindvoice. It was always you! You are the one! My Bonded Brother!

Esther was frozen in her spot even as T'lolt and the others came up beside her in stunned shock. It was as if time was standing still for all of them, everything moving in slow motion. They watched Cha'talla's hands come up to grasp either side of Vollenth's snout and his eyes sprang open as a scream unlike anything they had ever heard from him ripped across the small clearing.

Cha'talla's mind was awash with thoughts that were not his own, pain that was not his own, and yet strangely they were his own. Cha'talla's muscular body twitched and convulsed several times as two minds became one, Vollenth's wings trembled madly and the whole of two became one. Cha'talla saw it all in his mind's eye, Vollenth's entire painful life right up until the moment Androcles Leonidas sank that psychic knife into his brain and severed the evil cord that bound him to Yuri. He saw the stunning tan female dragon and the two young hatchlings that were the center of Vollenth's life now. And in seeing all this Vollenth absorbed over seven thousand years of experience, of pain, of successes and defeats. He absorbed the entirety of Cha'talla the Immortal; including the utter clarity and unfettered devotion to the beautiful young vampire female that was his wife. To the sons that she had bore him and his son that remained from before they came here, and the pride he felt whenever he thought of them. Vollenth felt the complete dedication to the future of his people and the purpose he carried upon his shoulders to see them succeed and be free and united once more. That purpose became Vollenth's now, just as all of his desires became Cha'talla's. If ever two different souls had been meant for each other, then Cha'talla and Vollenth were it. They felt it then, the soft light blue psychic shield activated where his hands rested on either side of Vollenth's snout and the consummate ease with which it spread quickly to encompass their bodies and become part of who they were, just as their minds were now one. Cha'talla slowly pulled himself to his feet; the pain he had felt only moments before was long gone now, to be replaced with a surging of unearthly power that he had never experienced before. It was as if he had worn blinders all of his life and suddenly they had been removed and everything was open to him now. Such clarity and focus. Such deep thoughts and benevolence flowed through him and Cha'talla turned slowly to look up into the yellow/orange eyes of the dragon that was now as much a part of him as he was of Vollenth.

How... how is this possible? Cha'talla gasped as his own words filled his mind with an ease he had never been able to achieve until now.

We can discover this after my Bonded Brother. Vollenth answered.

After... after?

Vollenth nodded his massive head. After we finish protecting those we love and hold dear to us. He stated as he lifted his head and settled his yellow/orange eyes on the massed group of Kavalians who were staring in abject horror at him and Cha'talla both.

Cha'talla turned slowly then and Esther held back the astonished breath as she saw in her husband's eyes something so bright and intelligent and so very powerful. Cha'talla turned fully to face the Kavalians even as he felt his brother T'lolt move slowly up beside him, for T'lolt would never fear his older brother.

"Bro... brother?" T'lolt whispered softly.

Cha'talla smiled at him and his hand tightened on his Immortal sword. "He knew T'lolt." Cha'talla said. "He knew."

"What? Who knew what?" T'lolt gasped as his hands tightened on the SA80 he carried in one hand and the sword he held in the other.

"Androcles Leonidas." Cha'talla spoke softly. Reverently. "He knew."

T'lolt watched with wide eyes as Vollenth unleashed another body vibrating trumpet that was equaled only by the matching sound that erupted from his brother's lips. Cha'talla lifted his Immortal sword and screaming his outrage and ardent fervor he launched himself at the line of Kavalian troops who were still standing there with looks of panic and fear locked on their feline expressions. As T'lolt watched in mystified disbelief, he saw his brother duck down just as one of Vollenth's huge wings whistled over his six foot five body to smash full force into the front row of dumbstruck Kavalians. As that row of Kavalians toppled over or went sailing, Cha'talla's sword claimed the first of many victims this day. T'lolt had always followed his brother without question for he had always looked up to him and what he was trying to accomplish. He had been the first to see that their way was wrong, but it had been Cha'talla who truly grasped onto that and moved them forward. With a wail of glee not that unlike something from a party, T'lolt followed his brother forward without question, followed quickly by nearly three dozen other Immortals who had witnessed everything.

Esther stood in her spot dumbfounded and almost didn't see the tan colored scales of Viera step up next to her.

It was foretold long before this day that this would become reality. Viera spoke watching as Esther whirled around to face her and gasped in surprise. Androcles knew this. He had to have known this. As did the Elder Mother.

"You..." Esther saw Fash'ka stumble from an alley between the buildings and catch himself before skidding to a halt beside her. His eyes were wide and grew even wider when he saw his Immortal father standing beside the massive greenish yellow dragon and decimating Kavalians by the dozens.

"Moth... mother!" He gasped looking between Esther and his father. "Mother what..."

"It is a miracle!" Esther told him, her voice carrying easily now that Kavalian mortars no longer fell around them. Esther noticed his shoulder and how blood soaked his arm which hung useless. "Fash'ka... you are injured!" She barked.

Fash'ka tore his eyes away and looked at her. Those same eyes grew large with terror as he looked at his mother. "Mother... Immortals... Immortals have taken Dysea Darthirii Ilhar! They have killed everyone in the Command Center and taken her!" (Elf Mother)

"What?" Esther shouted. "What... what Immortals?"

Fash'ka shook his head. "They... they were not from our tribe! They had our uniforms on... but I recognized none of them! I tried to stop them mother but there were... there were too many!"

"Take me!" Esther barked.

I will come with you! Viera barked knowing that Esther could hear her easily.

Esther could only nod as the thought of losing Dysea consumed her. "Fash'ka go!" She snapped. "To the command center!"

"They are not there!" Fash'ka retorted. "They were heading for the wall in the eastern corner when I barely escaped!"

"Then take us there!" Esther shouted grabbing his arm. As Fash'ka turned and held her hand and began leading her and Viera back through the maze of settlement buildings Esther reached out to the one who she now knew commanded all Union forces on Kranek and in the space above them as well. DENALI! Denali... you must meet me on the eastern corner of the settlement! Your mother has been taken by Immortals who are not part of our tribe!

Esther... what are you... what do you mean taken? Denali answered instantly.

Just meet me there young Denali! We don't have much time!

Esther, Fash'ka and half a dozen other Immortals were inspecting the three bodies by the half opened eastern gate into the settlement. This gate was almost always secure for it opened directly into the timber and mountain terrain that the settlement backed up too. The three Immortals had all been riddled with projectiles, their blood saturating the ground beneath their bodies. Viera stood next to the twelve meter high wall, inspecting the doorway itself and the surrounding wall. All of them whirled when they heard the trumpet and they saw Aradace land only a few meters away, Denali leaping from the saddle before she had fully settled to the ground. He tore his helmet off as he rushed up to where Esther stood.

"My mother!" He demanded. "Where is she? You said she had been taken!" His eyes took in the scene before him and he stopped talking.

"Denali... we..." Esther began.

"Where is she? Where is Iriral?" Denali shouted angrily, his wolf eyes glaring at all of them with pain and death in them. He could not lose one of his mothers when they had already lost his father. They could not lose her.

Fash'ka stepped forward now. "They were Immortals who are not members of our tribe!" He stated. "We don't know how they got in, or where they got our uniforms, but they struck the Command Center and took her from there."

I feel her Denali. I feel Iriral. Aradace spoke as she moved closer. When she left the battlefield I kept a connection open to her. She is southeast of us and...

Denali looked at her. "And what?"

Aradace's blue eyes met his. She is in pain... and she is weeping.

Denali snarled viciously and jumped back into the saddle on her back. Eliani! He barked out in Mindvoice.

Deni... I'm kind of busy! Eliani snapped back surprising her brother with the vitriol she answered him. I've got dozens of wounded and...

Denali didn't let her response deter him. Get on Tharua and carry your ass to where I will be sister! He ordered. That is an order! Mother is missing and Iriral is...

Mother is missing? Iriral is what? Deni... what is going on? Eliani asked as her voice took on a more civil and concerned tone.

Just meet me Eli... please. Denali spoke.

We are on our way. Eliani said instantly.

Esther turned quickly when Viera's snout bumped into her shoulder from behind. Climb onto my back Esther Suira. I can carry you and your Immortal son easily.

Esther didn't hesitate and used Viera's front foreleg as a stepping stone to jump up and settle herself into the saddle on her back. Fash'ka looked up at her.

"Mother?" He gasped.

"Get up here!" Esther snapped.

"Up... up there?" Fash'ka gasped again.

"Hurry!" Esther barked as Denali was already lifting into the sky on Aradace's back. She waited while Fash'ka moved forward hesitantly. "We must call your father! He must know what is going on!"

Viera turned her head back on her long neck and looked at Esther. I have already told my mate. She said. Vollenth will bring him.

As soon as Fash'ka settled behind his adopted mother in the saddle they both felt the Dragon Armor leg braces tighten and secure their legs to the saddle.

"Mother... perhaps this is not such a good..." Fash'ka began to talk.

Here we go! Viera announced as she cocked her legs and propelled them into the sky cutting off Fash'ka's words of caution.

PROTECTORATE CRUSADER-CLASS CRUISER

TALON OF JUSTICE

SPACEWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM

UNEXPLORED SPACE

7853 LY FROM EARTH

Wayonn turned when the door to his quarters slid open and Dutkne, Drey and Nirilo moved into the main room. He was sitting in the large armless chair in the center of his quarters, and though large and spacious, there was very little in the way of creature comforts. Wayonn did not spend much time in his quarters aside from sleeping. He preferred to constantly be on the move, even within the ship. His excuse was that at his age if he stayed in one place too long he would become a fixture there. Dutkne, Drey and Nirilo knew it to be that Wayonn enjoyed the activity and the events that always took their attention from the mundane. Wayonn watched as they pulled three chairs away from the small table nearby and settled in a semi circle around him.

"We have completed the first jump grandfather." Dutkne said as he settled into the chair. "We will make the next in sixteen minutes."

Wayonn nodded. "Good." He said. "That doesn't explain why the three of you are here now though. Operation of the TALON does not need my help or guidance."

"We are here grandfather, because I can feel the tremors within Mindvoice." Dutkne spoke. "You are trying to contact him aren't you?"

Wayonn nodded. "Trying... yes. Having success... no."

“What else?” Dutkne asked.

“What makes you think there is something else?” Wayonn asked him.

Dutkne shook his head. “Not this time grandfather.” He spoke. “Now is not the time to speak in riddles. We have come further outside our own space now than we have since the Black Day grandfather. Nirilo has not passed important information on to the Vanari Board of Regents because we asked him not too. We are taking many risks, all of us and now is not the time to...”

Wayonn held up his hand stopping Dutkne’s words. “You are right.” He said. “I give you my apologies Nirilo.”

Nirilo shook his head. “Unlike my father and many of my people, I trust you and the Lycavorians Wayonn. You have purpose for everything you do, that much I do know. It is why my mother thinks so highly of you.”

Wayonn chuckled. “If there were more Regents like your mother on the Board, we might already be dedicated allies and friends and not neutral antagonists.” He said.

Nirilo nodded. “I believe their differences in opinion are what finally drove my father and mother apart. My sisters agree with me. As for the neutral antagonists... that only applies to the older members of the Board like my father. They fear upsetting the status quo.”

Wayonn nodded. “If we do not embrace the unknown Nirilo, the future will leave us in the past. I wish more of your people would see this.”

“We are trying to change them Wayonn.” Nirilo said. “It is happening slowly... but we are having an impact.”

“Perhaps... but it does not happen quickly enough.” Wayonn said gripping his arm. “At least in my opinion. What I fear is this; your Board of Regents will dither and dally when they discover what you know about Martin and his son. I was only able to speak with him about certain items, but in that time I learned several things about him that I did not know before. They... Martin will only reach out for so long...” Wayonn said. “If your people cling to the falsehoods that the older members of your Board of Regents still swear by, he will dismiss you altogether. He will not show respect and honor to those who do not show it in return. And while the Union does have a Prime Minister and a Senate, much like your Board of Regents, it is amazing how many share in his mentality and for the most part they will not go against his wishes. Perhaps it is because they have built what they have with all the odds stacked against them, but they are a proud part of our people.”

Dutkne nodded his head. “And once those Lycavorians in the Protectorate discover that he is alive, they will embrace him as well.”

“Do not discount your influence grandson.” Wayonn said quickly looking at him. “Your path is already determined in this life, and you will walk the same path that I walked. That your grandfather Canth walked.”

Dutkne nodded. “I do not believe in predetermination grandfather.” He stated. “You know this better than anyone.”

“Yes... I know.” Wayonn answered. “It will not matter in the least however. Fate and destiny is almost always predetermined and it can not be denied no matter what you do. In most cases you will not want to deny it.” He smiled and his eyes twinkled. “What do you want to know?” He asked.

Dutkne looked at him oddly for a moment but he continued forward. “You said you are trying to contact him but are having no success?” Dutkne said.

Wayonn nodded. “Not so much as contact him as get a tremor from him. Some sense of his emotions. I can feel nothing from him now and to be honest, I do not know what to make of that.”

“What do you think is happening?” Drey asked softly.

“To be honest... I don’t know.” Wayonn said evenly. “You have to understand... Martin Leonidas is the most powerful Mindvoicer I have felt since Sumar, and Sumar was considered one of the Elder Pralors among our people. Among the elite and most powerful of those who can use Mindvoice. Martin’s son is not so very far behind his father.”

“Why does that matter?” Nirilo asked.

Wayonn looked at him. “As powerful as he is Nirilo... there are only two reasons that I would not be able to detect at least faint tremors from him.”

“And they are?” Drey asked.

“He is either dead... or he has devised a way unknown even to me to shield himself from detection.” Wayonn said. “I mentioned to him that he and his son still had much to learn when it came to shielding their minds. I do not know where he would have learned such skills in only a few days for even Dustha does not have this knowledge even though she carries my son’s memories and essence within her.”

“Dead?” Dutkne gasped out with wide eyes. “Why would you even consider that now grandfather?”

“Because if this is true... then your role in the future becomes that much more important Dutkne. And this trip becomes so much more critical. Not so much for the immediate future for that must play out now no matter what, but for the future to come.” Wayonn said. “Our future and what it holds for our people.”

“My role?” He said.

Wayonn nodded and took a deep breath. “It is your destiny to act as I acted for Sumar. As Canth acted for Martin’s grandfather. As Dustha now acts for Martin.”

Drey looked at Dutkne with wide eyes. “For Androcles?” He said quickly as he looked back to Wayonn.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. As I explained to all of you at dinner, he is very much like his father and he is also very different. And as I told Martin, he has embraced all that he is since the day he became aware while still in his mother’s womb. If Martin is dead... if Pleistarchus has somehow managed to kill his brother, there will only be two things in this universe that will be able to control Androcles Leonidas. One of them is the woman who is his anome... and the other is you Dutkne.”

“Me?” Dutkne barked. “I do not know him! And I certainly do not want that sort of duty. I’m not a...” Dutkne saw Wayonn smiling and he pointed his finger at his grandfather. “Don’t look at me like that! Whenever you look at me like that I end up doing something I do not want to do!”

“How do you avoid fate Dutkne my boy?” Wayonn asked.

“I can damn sure give it a nubous try!” Dutkne exclaimed.

“It is the way of things Dutkne. With our blood and the many experiences that have been passed to you, you can fight it all you want, deny it even, but ultimately you will come to see it is what you were born for.” Wayonn said. “I honestly do not know what has happened or why I can no longer feel him. I bestowed some information to Martin about plans his brother had when I spoke to him. I learned through my contact in The Wilds that an attempt was going to be made on him personally and most of his family.” Wayonn said.

“His brother would actually sanction his death?” Nirilo exclaimed. “And the death of his family members?”

Wayonn nodded. “You have to understand Pleistarchus and the way he thinks. The only thing that matters to him is power. The more he gains... the more he wants. He has risen to some prominence within the Kavalian Empire by now and...”

“You are speaking of the feline like species in Sector Twenty-three?” Nirilo asked. “The ones at war with the Coven that you mentioned during dinner?”

Wayonn nodded. “Pleistarchus has gained power and prestige with them that he would not have had within the Union because of the style of government. I do know that he has always hated his father for dying on him when he was so young, he hates his mother Gorgo for leaving him alone on Earth. And he hates his brother Martin for the role he now plays and does so well at, for he thinks it was always his to have to begin with.”

“King of Sparta and the Lycavorian Union.” Dutkne said.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. My contact was not able to give me any information as to the how of things, only that Martin and his family were going to be targeted soon. I also know that Martin Leonidas despises his brother with every fiber of his being. That emotion is a powerful one that radiates from him. He will never forgive his brother for betraying their people, for trying to kill their mother, and in his mind, dishonoring the memory of their father which he holds so sacred.” Wayonn got to his feet slowly and moved to the small panel on the wall, entering the code for tea. There was a small whirring noise and then four mugs of steaming tea appeared on the plate and he took them from the dispenser.

“In order to understand where Martin’s hate comes from, you must understand the why of it.” He spoke as he brought the plate over and held it out waiting for each of them to remove a mug. He took the last one and returned to his seat. “As I have already told you at dinner, the first two thousand years of his life Martin spent in a cryogenic sleep chamber either on a Union ship or buried in a mountain on Earth. When he woke, he woke to strangers. He did not know who he or what he was though he could still feel it within his blood. The Comet anomaly changed all that. When he discovered the blood that runs in his veins, he immersed himself in the history and lore that his father had built in Sparta. He wrapped himself within it, for in reality the honor and code of the Spartans and our people he had already followed and didn't even know why. He thought himself to be the only son of his father left alive. When he found out that his brother was indeed alive and had renounced their people; had even killed their people; that is where the hate began." Wayonn sipped his tea and looked at them.

"He hates Pleistarchus because he has actually been able to touch their father. Talk to him. Look at him. In Martin's eyes Pleistarchus committed the most heinous of crimes when he turned against their father's people. Against our people. It is a hate that will not die or fade away, especially not since Pleistarchus tried to kill their mother when Martin had only just begun to truly discover her."

"And Androcles?" Dutkne asked softly.

Wayonn nodded his head. "Androcles is another story all together." Wayonn said. "As I explained to Martin... while he and his son are incredibly alike, Andro is very different from his father. The resemblance he has to his father is uncanny, but Androcles is different than him in many ways. Some would say darker."

"Darker?" Nirilo asked.

"He's much more serious from what I was able to see within Martin's thoughts." Wayonn said. "He has embraced his history and abilities with far greater ease than his father."

"Wayonn... you said he became aware while in his mother's womb?" Nirilo said. "How is that possible?"

"It stems from the time he was conceived." Wayonn answered. "And it is a direct result of Martin and Aricia being Anomes. The emotional stress of what had happened in their lives in the few months before he was conceived, the joining of their minds with their dragons, the moment he was conceived they unknowingly granted him everything they knew up until that point. When Elynth was hatched a short time later and she touched Aricia that first time, he instinctively reached for her and their bond was formed while he was still within Aricia's womb. He became aware of everything around him and Elynth became his conduit. Part of his serious nature is a result of the burden placed on him as an infant in the womb. Being exposed to such a wide ranging field of and often times incredibly potent emotions caused his Pralor blood to react as it did to cope with it. To give him the ability to understand it even as an infant. It is why he is so possessively protective of his siblings and his parents. That part of him only grew stronger when Sadi came into his life, and like his father and mother, they were fated for one another. When he and Sadi became Anomes, it sealed the final bloodline of the Lycavorian people, bringing them all back together like it was in the beginning."

Dutkne leaned forward. "You said something like that at dinner grandfather. What do you mean by that? There was only King Resumar and Queen Eliani."

Wayonn nodded. "Resumar and Eliani ultimately became King and Queen, bringing two of the ruling bloodlines together, but it is Martin and Andro who have brought the remaining ruling bloodlines back into the fold."

"Ruling Bloodlines?" Drey asked. "I have never heard of anything like that. What do you mean?" He said.

Dutkne shook his head. "Neither have I." He echoed looking at his grandfather. "This is all news to me grandfather."

"I would imagine it is news to many of the younger generations, and that is not entirely your fault either." Wayonn told them. "Sumar was the one who discovered it after he joined with the Lycavorians." Wayonn began to explain. "He always had a touch for history and learning all that he could. What he discovered is that there were six Ruling Packs if you will, dating back to fifty thousand years before we ever crashed on Lycavore, probably further back than that since he discovered evidence that our people had existed for close to a hundred thousand years, but he never pursued it. The Lycavorian King and Queen were always from the most powerful of the six ruling packs at any given time. Every Lycavorian alive today could trace their bloodline back to one of these packs if you went back far enough and the Coven had not destroyed many of our history scrolls and such. As it turns out, the wolf that turned Sumar was from the most powerful of the ruling packs, and so was the female that Sumar took as his mate. Resumar was then born as their first child and continued that line, making it even stronger with the blood of Pralors. Eliani was from the second most powerful pack at the time, again because many of our people had chosen wives and husbands within her pack family if you will. We surmised that our blood mixed with theirs would ultimately insure that a small part of us would continue on in them. Pralor blood made these two packs stronger than the others and the other packs recognized it after a time. It was natural for Eliani's blood to call for Resumar as it did, as his called for her. They were fated to be together as Anomes. One pack leader did not see it that way and in the end he paid for that mistake."

"Chetak?" Dutkne said.

Wayonn nodded his head and got up to move to the view window and gaze out at the stars. "Chetak." He spoke softly. You know of course what happened to Chetak and his pack..."

"They were banished." Drey spoke. "They were cast out a few years before the Black Day." He answered. "Exiled forever by King Resumar for his actions."

Wayonn nodded. "What you probably don't know is that Martin Leonidas all but wiped out Chetak's pack. There may be a few left among the many billions of our people, but for all intents and purposes, he destroyed one of the original ruling packs because Chetak tried to take Aricia from him."

"How do..." Dutkne began but Wayonn smiled and held up his hand silencing him.

"When Resumar made the decision to send ten thousand fetuses to Earth to safeguard them from the High Coven, among those ten thousand were his last child, Leonidas as we all know. Also among them were the fetuses from the remaining four Ruling Packs of Lycavore. Resumar knew one day the blood from the packs would need to be reunited in order to survive and he insured that at least one fetus from each Ruling Pack was among those removed by the Hadarians to Earth. He insisted upon it even against the wishes of many of his advisors, all except Canth that is and this cemented Resumar's place among all the Ruling Packs as the King who saved our people. Canth went to each of the other three Pack Leaders himself to tell them of Resumar's plan and requested this very thing, and Resumar waited for three years before sending the Ten Thousand off until one Pack leader and his mate were able to conceive."

"Grandfather... Canth... he passed all this to you before his..." Dutkne began to ask.

Wayonn nodded slowly. "Before his spirit truly became one with Dustha. Yes."

Dutkne's eyes filled with comprehension then. "Queen Aricia... this Sadi... they are the descendants of these Packs? These families?"

Wayonn nodded. "Two of them yes." He answered. "I doubt very much they are even aware that, in essence, they are royalty themselves by virtue of their blood. Aricia was born and raised in Sparta. I do not know how Sadi's ancestor made it off Earth and ended up on Apo Prime with our people, but I knew the moment I touched Martin that she was from another of the Ruling Packs. Deia knew of this plan and she may have an idea of what I am telling you now, she probably knows more than I do to be honest for she spent the most time with Eliani and Resumar in those last months."

"You said there were three Wayonn." Nirilo said. "If Martin is a product of two of these Ruling Packs, Aricia from another and now this Sadi from one more...who is the third that escaped?"

Wayonn looked at them. "The third may come as a surprise, considering who she is, but after much research I'm quite certain I am correct in her identity. She is considerably older than Aricia and Sadi, and I have surmised she should have been the first one to rejoin the bloodlines after the Black Day. I believe she was meant to come together with Leonidas and Gorgo so that they could begin the renewal long ago."

"Should have been?" Drey asked.

Wayonn nodded. "She is more vampire than wolf, and if my calculations are correct, she would be just over three thousand one hundred years of age. She would also carry the blood of Xaxon within her veins for Empress Aikiro is her mother."

"Aikiro?" Dutkne gasped.

Wayonn nodded. "When Leonidas was killed, her opportunity was lost. I don't know what she has done since then; my information about her is limited and hard to come by through my contact."

Dutkne, Drey and Nirilo sat there looking at him dumbfounded. "Grandfather... you are serious?" Dutkne finally stammered.

Wayonn nodded. "Oh yes." He said.

"How... how do you know this?" Dutkne asked. "How could you even come close to knowing that? We have had no contact with the High Coven in all the years since we left Lycavore!"

"Nor have I." Wayonn said calmly. "My contact is in such a position to have gained this information for me."

“Your contact is a member of the Coven?” Nirilo asked in surprise.

Wayonn waggled his hand. “In a manner of speaking...”

“Grandfather?” Dutkne snapped tilting his head. “You are doing it again! I asked that you not hold anything back from us! Not now!”

Wayonn shook his head. “No!” He stated firmly. “For the last three thousand years I have protected her identity. She is the last of my kind and I will not risk her.”

“Last of your...” Dutkne gasped.

Wayonn met his gaze. “She is the only Pralor of true blood left alive Dutkne. The only one! We embraced our Lycavorian blood back then to survive. We willingly gave of ourselves to insure that our blood did not die and that was by joining with the Lycavorian people. She is a Pralor Acolyte and in comparison to me in age... still a child. Too reckless a child as she has proven through the years in helping me. She takes too many risks. Her purpose in the circle of things was predetermined long ago when she first revealed her location to me and asked for my help when she woke from her sleep chamber. She found me! She is the one who helped me to establish the account in The Wilds which led to me discovering Martin Leonidas lived. She is the one who has been feeding me information that you and the others are only just discovering because it is now the time for it. She knows all that I know for we have spoken many times since that first day. Everything has a place, a purpose and a time to be revealed Dutkne. I have preached this to you for decades. The Protectorate has grown since the vileness of the Black Day; the Lycavorian Union has grown since the Black Day. What was once torn asunder so many years ago is slowly and irrevocably being drawn back together. Shiira’s place has already been written, she knows that, I know that and now Martin Leonidas knows that. He is the only one who I have told of her existence, and if he is now dead then it will be up to us to meet with Androcles as soon as possible and inform him of her existence so that the cycle that has already started may continue unimpeded.”

“Cycle?” Nirilo asked. “What cycle?”

Wayonn looked at him. “The cycle that began the day Martin and Avi took City Ship 41 from Lycavore and activated her engines to take her to Earth.”

“If... if Martin Leonidas is the one who began this cycle...” Drey asked. “If he is now dead... wouldn’t this cycle have died with him Wayonn?”

Wayonn shook his head. “It is too late for that now. Has nothing I have told you about father and son sunk in?” He barked. “If... if Pleistarchus has succeeded in killing Martin, in killing members of his family, only one thing can come of it. After the smoke has cleared, after the mourning is done...” Wayonn looked at them with bright eyes. “Androcles Leonidas will unleash all that he is upon those who took his father from him. He will be the eye of the storm that will utterly sweep the Kavalian people from existence and in doing so he will unwittingly shatter any hope that we may have for the future.”

EARTH SPARTA

The dozen or so Durcunusaan troops moved instantly around Arzoal when she landed and Helen practically leaped from the saddle on her back to land easily on the balls of her feet. The Durcunusaan were somewhat taken aback because all of them could easily feel the bond within Mindvoice between Helen and Arzoal. It was something that no one had been made aware of, however it was something that Helen and Arzoal decided they would no longer hide. The Durcunusaan made secure the small clearing behind the King Yelu Hospital as Admiral Riall and General Vengal strode quickly from the main lobby of the hospital. Helen could see hundreds of men and women milling about, even as dozens of injured were being brought in through different entrances. She and Arzoal had seen this from the air as they swooped in. The moment she had seen the footage of Martin dying, Helen had felt her heart being torn from her chest. It was all she could do to climb onto Arzoal’s back for the flight to Sparta. Every aircraft within Earth’s system had been grounded or ordered to stay where it was. The entire Earth Forces Command had been activated with a single call from War Master Tareif and backed with the approval from President Charles Turner, and now every unit stationed on Earth was at its highest state of alert in their history.

President Turner was now secure within a bunker three hundred meters beneath Eden City and surrounded by the Durcunusaan and Drow security forces that made up his personal security detachment. The very human President of Earth was enraged over what had taken place, and his orders had been very simple. Any Kavalian found on Earth was to be arrested immediately and without question. Selene and Aihola were also now secure in an undisclosed location and surrounded by Durcunusaan and Drow security forces. Tareif and Lynwe were advocating an immediate response to events with the support of Admiral Wallace, Riall juggling reports and demands for security from two dozen different parts of their government. The Durcunusaan troops assigned to the city of Sparta itself had effectively sealed Sparta away from the rest of the Union with the help of several thousand retired Union Spartans and civilians. Entrance and exit into Sparta had been ceased by all means, and now the only thing seen in the sky above Sparta were hundreds of riderless dragons that Arzoal had immediately dispatched to Sparta the moment she and Helen knew something was wrong.

Riall and Vengal saw that her face was drawn and she looked as if she had been crying. Vengal didn't hesitate and he stepped right up to her and took her arm, pulling him tight to his side and letting her draw support from him. Helen squeezed his hand in thanks at his action for she felt so drained now.

"Tell me what is happening Vengal." She gasped out. "Riall?"

Riall stepped up to her other side and at any other time it would have appeared comical to see the two towering men standing on either side of the five foot one Feravomir of the Union and the Lycavorian people.

"We have a conference room set up inside on the third floor." Riall stated quickly. "The emergency crews are just now beginning to bring the wounded in from the Senate Building."

"How many?" She asked immediately.

Riall shook his head slowly. "It was the height of the work day Feravomir." He said softly. "Dozens of Senators in their offices. There is no way to tell right now. What you see are just those who are being ushered to one of the five clinics in the area. Hundreds have come forward to volunteer to help in any way and the hospital chief has directed them to begin shuttling the less seriously injured to these clinics. He is refusing entry to anyone who does not have hospital credentials except for the few dozen Hadarian Healers who arrived almost as soon as the reports began coming in."

"For'mya?" Helen gasped. "Deia?"

Riall shook his head slowly once more. "We don't know. At last report they were in Deia's office but..."

"But what?" Helen hissed.

"Most of the building fell into the section that housed her office Feravomir." Vengal answered his voice heavy with grief. "There is emergency equipment moving to the site, but the entire first floor is buried under rubble."

Helen shook her head. "I... I felt hers and Deia's anger spike briefly and then nothing." She said softly. "Now... now all I can feel is Deia... and it is so very weak. It is almost as if she is fighting for her life."

"The head of Athens's city workforce was watching and saw the building come down Feravomir. He is enroute from Athens with all of his heavy equipment and three quarters of his city infrastructure crews." Riall told her. "There is help on its way from all over the planet."

I will bring down some of the stronger adolescents sister. Arzoal broke in quickly causing Helen to stop and look at her. Our TK power can assist in moving the debris much faster.

Helen nodded to her. "Isheeni? Aurith?" Helen asked her.

Isheeni is overcome with grief. She will not answer me within Mindvoice and she is attempting to keep Aurith sane. My granddaughter has never been far from For'mya since the day they fully bonded. It is tearing her apart. Arzoal replied.

"Bring the young ones down Arzoal and then go to them." Helen told her. "I will keep our connection open so that you are aware of all that goes on."

Arzoal nodded her massive head, cocked her legs and with a sweep of her huge wings took to the sky.

"Forgive me Feravomir..." Vengal said. "It almost seems as if you and the Elder Mother are..."

Helen met his eyes. "We are." She spoke the answer to his unasked question. "For the last twenty-one years now. We have just told no one until now." She turned to Riall as they began walking again. "Aricia Riall... tell me of Aricia?"

“Anuk and Duewa are in surgery with her now.” Riall answered. “She was in critical condition, but between the two of them they had her stable. We won’t know more until they are done. We have secured a conference room as I said and communications is being set up now. We are expecting Androcles to contact us within a few minutes. Amazingly he is on a LEONIDAS IIA, the HARBINGER I believe the Captain said, and he must have been close by for he is only a few hours away.”

Helen looked at him oddly. “He is not on Kranek?” She gasped in confusion.

Riall and Vengal both looked at her in surprise. “Kranek?” Vengal finally asked. “Why would he be there?”

“Dysea and Normya are there.” Helen told them without hesitation. It would no longer keep anyone safe if secrets were still kept from those who now needed to know. “They have been there for over three months. Andro was taking the High Coven riders there to finish their training.”

“We are unable to contact either Dysea or Isabella. And none of the Prince or Princesses are responding to COM calls even on secure Spartan channels by the Durcunusaan. Why would they be on Kranek Feravomir?” Riall asked.

Helen shook her head slowly. “If their brother told them not to answer calls even from the Durcunusaan, they will not answer unless he says it is ok. And they are there because they have been working side-by-side with Cha'talla and his Immortal tribe in trying to figure out who ordered the attack on Normya and some other as yet unanswered questions.”

“Cha'talla?” Riall exclaimed instinctively in revulsion. “Cha'talla is an Immortal and he is dead! He was killed by Veldruk over twenty years ago for...” Riall’s eyes grew larger as he saw Helen’s impassive face. “He is not dead?”

Helen shook her head. “Far from it. And he is no longer Cha'talla the Immortal Captain to Veldruk. He is something far more now than even he suspected I would imagine! Where is Daniel?” Helen asked quickly.

Riall looked at Vengal quickly and then back to her. “He... he will not leave Martin’s... He will not leave his brother’s side. He and those Durcunusaan that were with them have taken his remains and...”

Helen watched as Riall choked up and she gripped his arms tighter. “I... I feel it too Riall.” She said softly.

“We all do.” Vengal echoed.

“They are refusing treatment.” Riall continued now. “Many of them were injured in some form. Colonel Fache is the worst, but he refuses to leave Martin’s side as well. The Kavalians used plasma mortars and it burned the insides of their olfactory glands. They will heal, but many of them can not smell anything right now and they refuse to leave the... the body of their King.”

“We must keep Daniel away from any prisoners we take that may offer information.” Helen said quickly. “He will slaughter them before we can obtain intelligence about why this has happened. Where have they...?”

“The Western Clinic that Anja works out of all the time when she is here.” Riall replied. “That is where she spent most of her time when she wasn’t here at the hospital.”

“Why would... why would Andro tell his brothers and sisters not to answer calls from the Durcunusaan Feravomir?” Vengal asked once again.

Helen waited until they had passed the crowded doorway and the voices had dropped to a more manageable level. Arzoal simply settled to the ground outside the door, her bulk insuring that no one would attempt to use this entrance any longer. “Much has happened that many do not know about Vengal.” Helen spoke gently. “It was not because we did not trust any of you; it was because we did not know ourselves what was happening until only a few days ago.”

“What is happening Feravomir?” Riall asked.

“Have there been any incursions across our border by Kavalian forces? Anywhere along our borders?” Helen asked.

Riall shook his head. “None! But it will not stay that way! They will come pouring across the border soon, just as they did at Hadaria.”

“Riall... you are to insure our forces do not initiate anything with any Kavalian ships that come near our borders unless they are sure it is a full invasion.” Helen stated.

“Feravomir... we are leaving ourselves wide open for attack if we do not reposition our forces to meet them!” Riall complained.

Helen shook her head as they entered the elevator. “No... you may reposition them if you must, but they are to do nothing until further instructions are handed out!” She stated. “There is something else entirely going on here. I know it. Why have they not targeted others? Why only... why only Martin?” She whimpered softly. “Just Martin and his family.”

“Feravomir... we...?”

“No!” Helen barked. “You will follow my direction until the time you get new direction from Androcles! He is... he is now King! Please Riall... trust in me!”

Riall had been mated to Gorgo for over two thousand years and he had learned and seen many things these past two plus decades since Martin’s return to their people. His love for Gorgo had grown more passionate and intense in that time and his faith had grown even more. He looked at Helen for a long moment and then nodded his head. “It will be done.” He said.

Helen turned to look at Vengal. “Your Durcunusaan Vengal? Did they... did they capture any survivors from these assassination squads that struck?”

“We have surrounded the Kavalian Embassy if any that may remain attempt to go there.” Vengal answered her. “If I understand Thoti correctly, they were able to keep civilians from killing three that were wounded. Thoti is escorting them here to the hospital through the underground tunnels as we speak.”

“They are assassins.” Helen spat venomously. “Nothing more. They will know nothing about information we need but interrogate them regardless and then execute them Vengal. Have Thoti kill them and give their remains to the incinerators.”

Vengal nodded. “As you order.” He spoke.

“Nothing from Armetus?” Helen asked.

Riall shook his head. “We have been trying, but we get nothing from his personal COM or his equipment at his home or office. Marci has taken a short team of Drow Scouts to Gytheio to check his home in the mountains. Not even his mate is answering and she fears the worst. She ignored me when I ordered her to hold her position. She told me she is following Andro’s orders and only his.”

Helen nodded. “I want to see Aricia!” She spoke. “He will want to know what condition his mother is in, and then we must prepare for I fear what Androcles will do in his wrath.”

GYTHEIO

Armetus’s home in Gytheio was a large one story structure high above the bay below and set back against the mountains. As she lowered her macrobinoculars she looked at the male Drow Scout who lay next to her on the ridge above the home. The vast majority of the half vampire Drow Scouts that Vengal had formed and commanded over two decades ago were now the senior team leaders of this new breed of Drow Scout. As Drow they were utterly loyal to Queen Aihola and King Leonidas. Like their Queen, they had all the strengths of vampires but none of the weaknesses. They did not need to ingest blood on a normal basis to survive, and their bite could not turn someone. Indeed, many of them only took the blood of their husbands or wives now, though blood would heal any wounds they might suffer. There were several hundred of them left from that final fateful battle on Earth at the side of their King, their true numbers never really revealed to anyone but Vengal and Martin. When they took wives or husbands they tried to insure that the skills that made them so valuable remained intact by insuring their mates were either other Drow or vampires. They had become the silent fist of King Leonidas and Armetus, and at this moment many of them burned with anger.

“Lo’ru?” Marci asked softly.

The Drow nodded his head slowly. “He’s here... but his signs are very weak Marci. I can detect nothing on his mate... but there are five Kavalians inside as well. They appear to be ransacking his home.”

Marci nodded. “They must think he was fool enough to keep his work at his home.” She said. “Where are they?”

“Four are in the west wing... in his library.” Lo’ru answered. “One is in the same room as him towards the rear wall of the kitchen.”

“I want them alive.” Marci snarled. “All of them. If they knew enough to come after Armetus then they knew who and what he was.”

Lo'ru motioned to the Drow female that was just behind him and she crawled quickly up to where he was. “The West Wing In'uer. Four of them. Take your team. We want them alive, it does not matter what condition as long as they are alive. Marci and I will get Armetus.”

The female nodded and eased back down the ridge. Lo'ru turned to Marci. “Whenever you are ready.” He stated.

Marci removed the wicked looking Shakur fighting knife from its place on her hip. It was a gift from Dysea and Isabella many years ago and she had carried it ever since that day. “Let us do this quickly now Lo'ru. We need the answers to many questions.”

The Kavalian officer glanced up from the data pad he was reading and glanced at the bloody figure on the floor. Armetus's bloody body lay slumped against the wall, both his legs smashed just below the knee. Deep lacerations covered his bare upper body, and his left eye had been pried out of its socket with the tip of the officer's blade. His left arm hung useless, his nose bent to the side and both his cheeks bearing the marks of the beating. His breath came in wheezing sounds now, harsh and forced. Armetus was dying and he knew it. The bodies of two Kavalians lay on the floor a short distance away, one of them with his head twisted almost completely around and the other with two neat holes above his left eye. They were the only two Armetus had been able to kill before they overwhelmed him. He knew his personal assistant of nearly two thousand years was probably very dead. She would have gone down fighting he knew, but these Kavalians were very good and they would leave nothing to chance. There was no pain anymore, for he could no longer feel his legs. He tried to take another breath and it came out raspy and weak. At least six of his ribs were broken and no doubt one of them had punctured his lung for it was excruciating to try and take a breath, and the blood now coming from his mouth was pinkish in color.

“You should have given us what we wanted old man!” The Kavalian officer spat as he stepped up to him. “You would have saved yourself all this pain if you were not so loyal to your fool King.”

Armetus's one good eye looked up at the young Kavalian. He had obviously undergone the biogenic treatments as had all those with him. There was nothing to outwardly indicate any of them were Kavalian. Armetus's lips were torn open in three places but he forced them into a crooked smile and tried his best to chuckle. He couldn't stop the Kavalian from slapping him viciously, rocking his head back, but he was far beyond pain now. The Kavalian squatted in front of him.

“Your King is dead you know!” The officer said proudly. “Blown apart by our comrades from the Puma Bane Pride. By now we will have taken both his elven Queens, killed his sons and as many daughters as we could and left your precious Union leaderless.” The Kavalian shook his head. “You are fools you know, leaving such a loophole in your laws. Marshall Pusintin will sit on the throne of the Union by this time next year and there is nothing you can do about it for it will be done according to your own laws!” The man tossed the data pad into Armetus's lap and stood back up. “You think we are so stupid, you and your precious King. Now look at you old man. We will show you how stupid we are when Marshall Pusintin is fucking one elf Queen and the other is a slave to Immortals! You will...”

The officer stopped talking when he heard the wheezing noise and he saw Armetus's body vibrating. His eyes grew wider when he realized the man was laughing in a horrid sort of way. He squatted down once more, his face in a vicious snarl. He reached out and slapped Armetus once more.

“What are you laughing at old man?” He shouted. “You will die this day! Do you find this funny in some way?”

Blood spilled from Armetus's lips as he opened them. His wolf fangs were extended, one of the tips broken off. “Not... not before...” Armetus croaked out the words.

“Not before what fool?” The Kavalian barked.

Armetus shook his head slowly. “Not dead... not dead before... before you!” He spat out.

The Kavalian saw Armetus's remaining eye glance up over his shoulder and he began moving instantly. Unfortunately for him he was by far too slow when compared to the enraged pureblood vampire female who unwrapped the shadows from around her body at that instant. A vampire female with death's cold hand riding her shoulder. The Kavalian officer spun around with practiced ease, his hand weapon coming up in his hand. His eyes bugged out of his head as the searing pain ripped through his wrist and he saw the woman's hands strike his wrist with blinding speed. His hand and wrist went limp as Marci used her vampire strength to snap his thick forearm, her trained hands impacting the inside of his forearm and the outside of his wrist. The force of the blow was astounding, fueled as it was by anger. One end of his forearm bone tore through his skin as his weapon dropped from suddenly unfeeling fingers and the pain caused his eyes to tear up. He opened his mouth to scream but no sound came out as his eyes grew even wider in unimagined agony when Marci buried her Shakur into his lower abdomen just above his groin. He looked at the dark haired female, her vampiric fangs exposed in an almost barbaric and twisted smile as she exerted her vampire strength once more and ripped the Shakur fighting knife upwards with every ounce of strength she had within her body.

The Kavalian could just make out the sound of weapons fire as he dropped to his knees in front of her, trying to hold his intestines inside his body even as his mind registered that he was already dead. Marci simply grabbed his thick head of hair and his quivering jaw and once more used her strength to twist viciously until the popping sound of his neck snapping in the room was like a firecracker going off. She yanked his head to the side, throwing his body down to the floor and spit on his corpse before turning to look at Armetus. Marci had seen death hundreds of times, she seen horribly wounded Spartans during the Evolli war, but she could not contain the gasp of utter horror at she looked at the man who had become her mentor. Regardless of what she saw as she knelt next to him, Marci kept her wits about her and tapped her jaw.

"Lo'ru! Status?" She barked.

"Four dead!" The voice answered immediately.

"Get down here Lo'ru! Contact Kryperia Headquarters! We need a Hadarian Healer here like yesterday!" She barked.

"Already on it!"

Marci looked at Armetus now, reaching down and tearing away part of the lightweight shirt that the Kavalian officer was wearing. She brought it up to Armetus's face. "Help is coming Armetus! Help is coming! You have to hold on!"

Marci saw him shake his head ever so slowly. "Not... not time." He wheezed. Calling upon strength from somewhere deep inside his body and mind he grabbed her hand with his one good arm and saw her look at him. He pushed her hand to his lap where the data pad the Kavalian officer had tossed there still rested. "Warn... others!" He gasped with blood spilling from between his lips. "Warn Martin!"

Marci had tears in her eyes as she shook her head slowly. "I can't Armetus! They... they have killed Martin! They killed him nearly an hour ago in the Old District! Torma is dead as well! The Senate building was destroyed! Hundreds are dead! Deia and For'mya are... they are probably dead too! They were inside the building when it came down! They..."

"No!" Armetus hissed spraying her with blood from his lips. "Warn... others! Kaval... part of their... plan!"

Marci shook her head once more. "What plan? What do you mean?" It was then she felt the data pad in his lap and her head dropped down. Her fingers wrapped around the pad and she simply tucked it into the small pouch on her belt. "Help is coming Armetus! You must fight! You..."

Armetus didn't hear her words any longer as blackness crept up and overwhelmed him finally plunging him into darkness as his single eye closed and his head lolled to the side.

"NO!" Marci screamed reaching for his grizzled and bloody face. "Armetus no!"

THERMOPYLAE

JUNE, 2073

"...are we doing this father? It is silly." Andro spoke as he walked beside his father along the front of the bleachers that were erected facing the monument to a father and grandfather.

"It is not silly." Martin insisted. "I want to see if you have learned anything I have taught you over the years! I ain't going to be around forever boy!"

Andro looked at his father with a grin. "You are too ornery to die as mother says." He spoke.

Martin settled to the bleachers in the front row. "Yeah... yeah! Indulge me will ya!"

Andro looked at his father and shook his head. He saw Torma and Elynth sitting near the edge of the monument about two hundred meters away conversing as father and daughter, the Durcunusaan troops gently prodding the civilians who came to the monument daily in other directions and away from this particular set of bleachers, and the sun beginning to sink lower in the sun. Andro sat beside him in a huff and crossed his arms over his broad chest.

"Oh very well!" He barked.

Martin grinned. "Ulana can wait."

Andro looked at him. "Ulana?" He stated. "She didn't make the trip."

"Why not?" Martin asked.

"I asked her not to." Andro said. "I told her I would be training for most of the time and not able to take her to see the sights."

"You haven't done shit but lay around since we got here!" Martin exclaimed.

Andro nodded. "I saw her father." He said. "Before we left. She was having lunch with her father at Gallais's Retreat. I was stunned she was there. She didn't see me and I left right away, but I can still smell her even now."

Martin nodded his head in understanding. "Sadi." He said. "You really just need to seek her out and make her yours son. Until you do, you are going to smell her at every turn. You were meant for each other by a higher power boy, when are you going to see that?"

"I see it!" Andro said. "It's just not time yet."

Martin shrugged his shoulders. "Perhaps. You could have at least found someone who is not so uptight in the meantime. Ulana's jaw about dropped when you brought her to dinner and she saw how casual we are."

"I don't even really like her that much." Andro said. "Her university friends walk about like they are the most knowledgeable people in the world. It is so very annoying."

"Enough about that!" Martin snapped. "You are avoiding my question. You aren't as slick or as beautiful as your mothers and you won't get me sidetracked!"

Andro laughed and looked at him. "They do that quite well you know!"

Martin grinned. "You just wait until Sadi is in phase and she is hitting you with her aura and has got you by your nor. Then we'll see who talks! Enough! Now let's go over it again!"

Andro rolled his eyes. "Sibfla!" He muttered. "Tenna of course!"

"And if she is not around... then what?" Martin asked. "Who fills her shoes?"

"Grandfather Panos... without question." Andro answered.

"Not Laustinos?" Martin asked.

Andro looked at him. "Father please... Laustinos is not even qualified to pick flowers let alone lead the Union. He is a paper pusher to the extreme."

Martin grinned once more. "His deputy?"

"I would try to keep them together but I doubt Aunt Tarifa would allow me too." Andro said. "I would appoint her governor of Sparta and have Janae fill the role as grandfather's deputy."

Martin looked at him. "Janae? Why her?"

"She speaks fourteen languages and has dedicated her life to Sparta." Andro answered. "We went together to that Symposium on Nodon last year. The one you forced me to go too and..."

"Andro... you didn't..." Martin asked.

"Not all of us are as perverted as you father." Andro snapped. "No I didn't bed her... but we did spend every minute together. She has a fascinating knowledge of things and is very poignant in her beliefs. She reminds me of Tenna Deia."

"She's young." Martin said.

Andro looked at him with a stupefied expression. "So am I. And still you force me to answer these ridiculous hypothetical questions about succession."

"Ah..." Martin waved his hand at him dismissively. "The Krypteria?"

"Marci of course." Andro answered. "If there is someone who can lead the Krypteria as well as Armetus it is her and she has been is defacto deputy for the last ten years anyway." He looked at his father and waggled his eyebrows. "And she is young too." He said with a smile.

“You know... you are beginning to wear on my nerves.” Martin spoke.

“Father... we have done this before.” Andro said. “Each time my answers vary only slightly. Ben remains where he is... grandfather Riall remains... I promote Uncle Daniel to Commander Ground Forces... which he will no doubt scream about for months. Eliani fills mother’s role and hopefully tells the Hadarian Arch Ministry where to go and how to get there. Walter becomes Commander of the Durcunusaan, while I shift General Vengal to his new duties as Uncle Daniel’s Deputy Commander.” Andro looked at his father. “This is pointless you know... there is no way you and all of my mothers and Aunt Deia die at the same time. It’s impossible.”

“Nothing is impossible Andro.” Martin said. “The impossible only takes a little longer to figure out. I’ve told you that before.”

“I have absolutely no desire to be King father... none whatsoever.” Andro said as he came to his feet.

“And you think I did? You think I do?” Martin asked with a smile as he rose to his feet as well and faced his oldest son. “A Leonidas must always lead now Andro. It is the destiny that is written for our family, for me, for you, for Resumar, for Denali, for Eliani... all of us. And it began with your grandfather. A Leonidas must always lead and that is why I push you and your brothers and sisters so hard.”

“And here we thought it was because you were just a hard ass!” Andro snapped playfully.

Martin chuckled and reached up to place his hand on Andro’s shoulder, gripping his thick neck and squeezing. “Trust no one more than you trust your own blood and those who have been beside our family all these years. Lisisa is older I know, but it is you that your brothers and sisters look to Andro. All of them... and it is through them that others will look to you. It is why I know should anything happen, you will guide them forward.”

“Blood before all else.” Andro said softly.

Martin nodded. “Blood before all else.” Martin put his arms around his son’s shoulders. “Just make sure you get whoever takes me out ok? I’ll sleep better at night knowing you got payback!”

Andro chuckled. “I promise you father.”

Martin nodded. “Good... now let’s go get drunk before your mothers get back from Gytheio. Then I can blame it all on you and your Uncle.”

Andro laughed. “Like they will believe that!”

HARBINGER

NINETY MINUTES FROM EARTH

*“...pushing them to maximum Captain.” The HARBINGER’S Chief Engineer spoke as he stood next to Velnar. “We have already burned out the HMFC’s by taxing them to their extreme limits with the last three jumps. We...”*

“Push them harder.” Velnar snapped not looking up from his chair or from the data pad he was reading.

“Captain Velnar that is not advisable. They could very well fly apart.” The Engineer spoke. “We...”

Velnar had looked up now, and the Lycavorian Chief Engineer saw something in his Elven Captain’s eyes he had never seen before. “Not advisable?” Velnar snarled as he sprang to his feet, startling the Engineer. “Not advisable!” Velnar screamed now causing heads to turn to where he stood. “Our King is dead! Dead do you hear me?” Velnar screamed. “We carry the Crown Prince of the Lycavorian Union! He told me to get him back home in as short a time as we can so that our Union does not fall apart! The entire Royal family is under attack, hundreds of our people dead in Sparta! Perhaps hundreds on Kranek! One of our Queens is more than likely dead! Buried beneath the rubble of the building that claimed the Prime Minister! Another is near death with her wounds, another taken from Kranek we have just learned and you come to me with... not advisable!” Velnar waved the data pad in his face.

“Captain I only...”

*“I am the nubous Captain of this ship!” Velnar shouted heaving the data pad across the bridge in a fit of rage. “If I tell you to push them harder then you push them harder! I don’t care if she flies apart around us! We will push her until her engines are burned out and then we will get out and push! You go to your station and* push the sublights to one hundred and twenty percent Commander, or so help me I will expunge you out the nearest airlock for disobeying my orders!”

The Lycavorian engineer stammered something, his eyes wide and he rushed back to his control station. Velnar looked around his bridge, his own eyes wide as he took in the faces staring back at him.

“Our Union has suffered a terrible blow this day... a blow not seen since the death of King Leonidas’s father!” Velnar barked. “Back then we did not have a son to carry on in his father’s stead! To guide us in his father’s place! We do now... and I will not allow that son to be surrounded by those not willing to take risks for the future of us all! We will work and fight with our equipment until there is nothing left to give... and then we will pull that much more from it and keep fighting... for that is our duty! If you can not do that then get off my bridge right this instant! I will not have you as part of my crew!”

Velnar turned when the bridge doors opened and he saw Sadi Leonidas rush in walking quickly. She didn’t even look at him as his eyes and the eyes of others watched as she strode to the doors of the ready room where they knew the Prince and Senior Polemarch were. Velnar turned back to his crew and took a deep breath. “If you have suffered more this day... if you have suffered more this day then you may relieved yourself from duty... otherwise we have a job to do.”

Sadi stopped when she entered the ready Room and the doors closed behind her. She saw Andro silhouetted in the view window against the backdrop of stars and she hesitated for just a moment. She had left Ne'Veha with Carisia and Lu'ria in the Med Bay with Lu'ria's mother Daba. The doctor was in the middle of pronouncing her well on the way to perfect health when she felt Andro's emotions spike once more. This was more refined and dark in its essence and she realized that neither Ne'Veha, Carisia or Lu'ria had felt it. Only she was attuned to Andro on that level and after making an excuse that she was going to check on their STRIKER she dashed from the Med Bay and made her way towards the bridge. The closer she got to him, the more she felt the slow burn of fury within the recesses of his mind, and she knew something else must have happened. Sadi could feel the same emotions doing a slow burn within Elynth as well and Sadi feared for what had happened. This was unlike anything she had ever felt from anyone. She alone knew what Andro was capable of, and to feel him trembling to keep his control, to remain in command of himself took will power Sadi did not think she could ever muster. She sensed he was in a deep meditation of some sort, his mind open only to her. They would share this connection they had with the others when it was time and they were together with the fifth woman who would share their lives. She and Andro had already talked of it briefly and that was the decision they had come too.

She turned when Walter stepped up to her. “Walter?”

Walter held out the data pad to her. “We just heard from Denali.” He spoke softly.

“Please tell me that...” Sadi began to say.

“They have taken my mother Kerta Gai.” Andro spoke softly.

Sadi cut her eyes and watched him turn to face her. She didn’t hesitate and she moved up to where he stood. Sadi gasped when he snatched her up in his arms and crushed her to him, burying his face into her throat and along the back of her ear. She felt his unshielded aura sweep around her and envelope her in its embrace, setting all her senses on fire. Sadi realized instantly this was not a sexual thing, but more Andro reveling in her female scent and insuring she was unharmed. She reciprocated the sensations then, hitting him with her full female aura and meeting his firm nuzzles with her own, inhaling deeply of his lavender and pines scent. Sadi pulled his head away from her neck where he was nuzzling the back of her ear and she took his face in her hands. His azure eyes were so very bright and alive and she could feel his arms tremble with possessiveness as he held her.

“Tell... tell me what has happen my love.” She gasped out. “Who has taken your mother Andro?”

“Immortals.” Walter answered from behind them.

Sadi’s jungle green eyes went wide and she looked at him as Andro set her down. “No Walter!” She gasped. “No! Cha'talla?”

Walter shook his head. “No. This was not Cha'talla’s doing... in fact he lost four people who were trying to save Dysea.”

“Manda kept her promise Kerta Gai.” Andro stated calmly. “They jumped into the system and with the help of some unexpected defectors; they obliterated the entire Kavalian Strike Force.”

“Defectors?” Sadi asked. “From the Coven?”

“I am skeptical as well.” Walter spoke. “But this was Dysea’s decision. Their numbers are what threw the battle in our favor. The Kavalians also did not expect the Coven Dragons to be on Kranek. Lisisa, Narice... they broke the back of the Kavalian assault in the first hour.”

“Having your father killed by these same people tends to give you added incentive in taking retribution.” Andro spoke harshly as he turned back to the view window. “Cha’talla is rabid...” He continued. “Apparently these Immortals are part of some mercenary group that was hired by the Kavalians. By my Uncle Pleistarchus himself as a matter of fact. He hired them to kidnap my mother while his troops slaughtered the rest of my family and all of Cha’talla’s people as well.”

“Kidnap Dysea?” Sadi asked. “For what purpose?”

Walter shrugged. “Perhaps to influence the Elven Parliament in some manner. Hold her hostage in return for political favors. We don’t know.”

Sadi looked at Andro as he turned back. “We’ll know why as soon as he recovers from his injuries in a few hours.” Andro told her.

“Who?” Sadi asked.

“Cha’talla’s son Fash’ka and Denali captured an ex-Coven mercenary a short distance away from where they tracked Dysea to.” Walter answered. “The ship that took her was gone but they found him.”

Sadi looked at Andro. “How... how do we know all this Andro?” She asked.

“Normya and Tir’ut were able to reach out and touch Denali and Lisisa before these Immortals jumped out of the system and they were out of range.” Andro spoke.

“Wait... Normya and Tir’ut are with your mother?” Sadi asked.

Andro nodded. “They managed to sneak onto this ship when the mercenaries brought mother up from the surface. They shot Iriral three times with an Air Defense Ion cannon when she tried to stop them. Normya was in the middle of a conversation with Deni when contact was lost.” Andro turned once more and resumed looking out the view window. “The Kavalians destroyed the Senate Building in Sparta Kerta Gai. They buried my Aunt and another of my mothers under tons of steel and granite. Parts of my grandfather’s city is burning because they used plasma mortars in a population center. They have helped usurp another mother with lies and deceit.”

Sadi’s hands went to her mouth in horror. “Andro no!” She rasped out as tears filled her eyes.

“Yet they have not invaded.” Walter spoke firmly. “They are not coming across our borders Androcles!”

Andro turned and looked at him, his azure eyes burning with intensity and intelligence. “No they haven’t.” He said. “They won’t need too. They won’t need to because I will come to them!”

Walter shook his head quickly. “That is not a tactically sound move Andro. You...”

“No!” Andro barked vehemently. “No! You will not tell me what to do! No one will manipulate me as they did him when he first returned to our people! I am King now! I will decide what I will do and I will take my father’s place! And I will fulfill the promise I made to him! I will honor my father by fulfilling the promise... the promise I made to him! I will...”

“Andro...” Walter began again.

Andro shook his head. “No!” He looked at him. “I have always considered... we have always considered you a surrogate grandfather Walter. All of us have... but this is different now. They have taken... they have taken our father from us. They have taken our mothers.” Andro turned back to look out the window. “No. I will return to Sparta... I will... I will bury my family.” He turned back around. “Then Senior Polemarch Dymas... then I will send for my brothers and sisters. And when we are all together... then I intend to enter Kavalian space. And I will not return until I have fucked my Uncle five ways from Sunday and he lies dead at our feet along with the whole of the Kavalian Empire for what they have done! That is what I intend to do... and nothing you or anyone says will be able to sway me in my actions.”

“And if your brothers and sisters refuse!” Walter barked. “If they put the continued future of this Union before their own lust for vengeance... what then?”

“Then... then I will do it alone.” Andro spoke plainly.

Sadi shook her head. “No. Never alone.” She stated emphatically as she stepped into his embrace. “Not while I take breaths will you ever be alone.”

Andro looked at Walter. “You followed my grandfather Walter. You followed my father. Will you follow me? If not... then this is the time to get off the train as my mother says, cause we are on a one way trip to hell!”

Walter met his eyes and in those eyes he saw the same fire he had seen three thousand years ago among those towering black walls. He saw the same fire he had seen twenty-seven years ago on that sprawling field in Southern Utah.

“Nubou!” Walter hissed. “Never! I have followed two King Leonidas’s and I will not desert a third when he needs me most. Never!”

Andro nodded. “Thank... thank you.”

“Don’t thank me boy!” Walter barked. “You just might end up regretting it! You must see this through to the very end Androcles! You must not stop! You must not hesitate! You must be as ruthless as death’s right hand! For the moment you let up... death will come for you!”

“I don’t intend to give death a chance!” Andro told him.

PART THREE THE END OF THE BEGINNING...

CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE

KRANEK

“...Too far for them to reach.” Androcles spoke from within the transmission. “Even as strong as they have become together, it’s too far. They must have made a jump. Do you know where they went?”

Cha'talla was pacing back and forth in the remains of the command center. Amazingly, when they blew the door open, while it shattered and destroyed much of the sensor arrays along the east wall, the communications equipment had been left nearly untouched tucked into the west corner as they were. With nearly two hundred Union and High Coven ships now in orbit and patrolling Kranek’s system, they did not need ground based sensor arrays. The standing order had gone out from some woman named Lorian Cha'talla now knew. Kill anything that was not Union and only the Coven ships inside the system were to be considered friendly. And they were friendly that much Cha'talla knew. In the last sixty minutes alone a dozen transports from those same Coven ships had arrived and set up a superior advanced medical facility to treat the wounded. Immortals were also vampires, and Eliani Leonidas could not heal them all with her magical healing skills no matter how powerful she was. Several large Blood Vats were set up for the more seriously injured of his people, pureblood vampire technicians working frantically to set up their equipment, but always under the watchful eye of Eliani Leonidas.

At this point, outside of his Blessed Wife and his own blood, Cha'talla trusted no one but the Leonidas children. Their mother Isabella was maintaining her composure to the best of her ability, primarily to keep from risking the child she carried, but it was obvious having the King killed and then Dysea ripped from her was taking its toll. Her face was drawn and taut, her normally bright brown eyes now dull and listless. Dysea’s female dragon who had been with her for decades had already been transferred up to the SCIMITAR for her wounds to be treated. That she still lived was a testament to their toughness that Cha'talla had never known. The many other Leonidas children were crowded into the command center their dragons in a semi circle around the now blown open doorway, along with this Miranda Lorian and several of her officers, including the fascinating Drow officer who remained very close to the captain and very alert. The vampire Admiral Valin Esavorna was present as well, several of his aides coming with him from his ship which now was in orbit around Kranek.

Union troops were coming down from the ships above in a steady stream to carry out patrols with Immortals of the surrounding terrain. Thousands of Kavalians were still out there in the mountains and Denali had already given the orders they were to be hunted down to the last man and executed. They would take no prisoners this day or into the future and Cha'talla simply had no problem with that, for they were the same orders he would have given. Over a thousand of his people lay dead, almost twice that wounded in some manner. Of the five hundred or so Union Spartans that had come down from NORMYA'S LIGHT and had been living on Kranek these last months, nearly all of them were now dead. Among the Immortal dead were nearly four dozen children that had been caught in the open by a Kavalian mortar barrage. It was T'lolt who had relayed to him the heroics of a dozen Union Spartans who had tried to save them, shielding them with their Shi Viskas until the very end when the mortars overwhelmed them. They were men and women who would live on forever now, held in the highest honor among Cha'talla's tribe of Immortals. The parents of those children, two elven mothers among them were calling for blood in the ancient Akruvian way even as they saw to burying their children.

In reality, Cha'talla knew they had escaped without major loss of life. Lisisa and Narice Leonidas had used their two dragon sections with exacting precision and ruthless efficiency. They had used the inbred fear of dragons inherent in all Kavalians to their full advantage and decimated otherwise well trained and formed troops. The Kavalians had obviously not been told there would be dragons on the surface and it showed in their actions on the battlefield. It also helped that the Kavalians had landed no where near as many troops as initially thought.

Dragons.

Cha'talla turned his head briefly and looked at the gaping hole where the door used to be and saw the form of Vollenth resting on the ground just outside. The large and powerful form of his Bonded Dragon Brother. And still Cha'talla didn't believe it could be true. When they had plunged into the ranks of Kavalian troops it was almost as if they were seeing with each other's eyes, as if they were inside each other's minds. Cha'talla knew exactly what Vollenth was going to do at the exact time he decided to do it, and the same went for Vollenth reading what he was going to do. Together they had carved a path through nearly three hundred Kavalian troops before they had stopped. When Cha'talla looked behind him, his eyes had gone wide as he saw the path of bodies and death they had left behind them in their fury. His brother T'lolt and his thirty Immortals had nearly reached him when Vollenth heard the call from Viera to bring him. Cha'talla had not hesitated in the least as he leaped onto Vollenth's back. It all felt so right, so preordained, as if he had been doing it for years. Then those dragon armor leg braces had closed around his legs and Vollenth had leaped into the sky.

Then Cha'talla of the Immortals knew what true freedom was.

"Normya said it was the same ship that tried to kill her several months ago Andro." Denali said quickly jarring Cha'talla out of his thoughts.

"I will find out where they have taken her! If it is Phy'iad, then we know where he will return more than likely." Cha'talla snarled as he stopped pacing and looked at Andro in the transmission. "And I will get her back! I swear this to you on my very blood!"

"Mother?" Andro spoke softly. Isabella lifted her eyes to look at him, Zarah and Carina standing behind her. "Do not even attempt to go with him mother."

Isabella shook her head slowly. "I made... I made her a promise Andro." She said gently looking at him. "I won't... I won't go back on that promise. I can't... not now."

Andro nodded to her. "I'm less than an hour from Earth." Andro spoke turning to look at his brother. "Time to circle our wagons Deni."

Denali nodded. "Agreed."

"Andro...?" Arrarn began to speak his face tense. "Mother...?"

"Until we know for sure... she lives Arrarn! Do not..." Andro barked at him. "Never lose faith! There is help moving to Sparta from all over the planet!"

Arrarn nodded slowly as Narice and Toria pressed close to him. "You will let us know when..."

"Yes... you know I will!" Androcles answered immediately. "For now we keep our faith and we hope!"

Arrarn took a deep breath and squeezed Narice and Toria. "Keep the faith!" He spoke more forcefully.

Andro's eyes cut to where Miranda stood. "Manda... I... we owe you a debt we can not repay."

Miranda shook her head. "There is nothing to repay. Ever. We aren't finished either. Let me go after them Andro!"

Andro shook his head. "No... I need you for other things. What is your status?" Andro asked.

"We lost sixty-seven fighters between the HORNET and ARIZONA." Miranda answered. "My Attack Wing is intact with some minor damage."

“Sa'sur?” Andro asked.

The female voice of the commander of the SCIMITAR came over the intercom. “We took a pounding Andro.” She answered surprising Valin and some of the others with the familiarity she showed. “Our Wing lost twelve ships and five more that will take months in the shipyards to repair. We’re down a squadron and a half with another seven badly damaged and the pilots injured. It would have been worse if Miranda hadn’t shown up, and then Admiral Valin and his ships.”

Andro’s intense eyes fell on Valin now and even as old and experienced as he was, Valin couldn’t help but fidget on the balls of his feet under the intense scrutiny of those azure blue eyes. “My mother obviously saw reason to trust you Admiral, even for a short time and for the moment I will abide by her judge of character. I thank you for your assistance, truly I do, but do not give me reason to question my mother’s judgment of you.”

Micardo made the mistake of stepping forward and opening his mouth before he thought about what he was saying. “We just assisted in saving you and your family and you disrespect us by...”

Micardo stopped talking when he felt the point of the blade prick the skin under his jaw and his eyes cut to where Zarah now stood beside him holding the custom made Shakur fighting knife in her hand. His eyes saw where flecks of dried blood were still visible on the blade and he realized just how close he was to death at that moment. Her normally dark eyes had changed to the cobalt blue of her vampire blood now, and they looked at him in contempt. Almost directly behind her stood Lucia, whose hands were faintly glowing with psychic power, her own eyes changed as well as she prepared to call her whips to defend her beloved Zarah if the need arose.

“Do not make the simpleminded mistake of thinking you deserve something when you do not pureblood!” Zarah hissed out the words. “We would have won without your help! And you are not exactly at the top of our list of trustworthy people at the moment! We...”

“Zarah my sister.” Andro’s voice was firm and her eyes cut to the transmission. “We need all the help we can get at the moment.” Andro said. “They did not need to announce their presence and help us until after the battle was decided. Let’s trust in mother’s reasoning for now. There is a reason she chose to trust them.”

Valin made no move to intervene on Micardo’s behalf, his young aide could be very arrogant at times, something he obviously had not yet learned to let go of. He stepped closer to the transmission.

“My only daughter is with your sister and Cha'talla’s son Prince Leonidas. My only daughter, my only child, and the purpose I started down the road I have walked until now. She was meant to be among your family! Part of your family! I would do nothing to jeopardize that. I was able to tell your mother very briefly what it is I am talking about. She seemed surprised yes, but she didn’t question it. She told me it was too wild a story to not be true. I am not... we are not the enemy.” Valin spoke confidently.

“That does sound like something our mother would say.” Andro spoke. Andro’s head tilted sideways when Valin said that and he noticed that the other Leonidas children in the room look at him as well. “What exactly do you mean by she was meant to be part of our family Admiral?” Andro asked him.

Valin looked around quickly then back to Andro. “My daughter... Cirith... she was meant to be... she was meant to be with your grandfather Androcles Leonidas. She was meant to be with your grandfather and Lady Gorgo. She was meant to be part of their lives and Xerxes took that away from her!”

“What do you mean?” Denali snapped coming to his feet. “Grandfather would never have taken a vampire as a mate! He...”

“She is... she is Aikiro’s daughter as well as mine and she carries wolf blood within her veins. Just as I do.” Valin announced quickly, his eyes never leaving Andro’s gaze in the transmission. “She was to be the first link in bringing the bloodlines of your people and mine... of the brothers back together.”

“What?” Narice and Lucia gasped in complete shock.

Andro moved closer in the transmission. “Brothers?” He asked.

Valin nodded and met his eyes unflinching. “The bloodlines of the Pralor brothers, Sumar and Xaxon. The blood that flows in my daughter’s veins is not only Aikiro’s but it is also wolf blood. A wolf bloodline that can be traced back millennia before the Black Day!”

Andro’s eyes grew a little wider. “Where did you hear those names? What do you know of the Black Day? You are a vampire!” He demanded.

“I have known those names for far longer than you Androcles Leonidas.” Valin answered him in an even voice. “Perhaps even longer than your father. They are names I have shared with no one... not even Cirith...”

but given events happening now... I believe it is time for them to come out. Time for us to come forward. I know you know who Sumar and Xaxon are. Cirith was meant to be part of your grandparent's lives. Xerxes may have taken that away from her but... we both believe that her purpose has only been altered. She is still very important to the future of our people. Your people and mine! Our people together!"

"How do you know that history?" Lisisa asked stepping forward. "How...?"

"My daughter has wolf blood within her, just as I do. Blood from one of the original six bloodlines of the Lycavorian people." Valin spoke evenly.

"What are you talking about?" Denali snapped. "There is nothing like what you speak of!"

"Yes." Andro's voice stopped them before Denali moved closer to Valin. "Yes... there is."

Denali looked at him in the transmission along with all of his siblings. "Fervon?"

Andro nodded. "He speaks the truth Deni." Andro said.

"How do you know?" Arrarn asked.

Andro shook his head slowly, his azure eyes far away. "I don't know." He said. "I have heard those terms before."

"Aikiro never knew this. Never sensed it for reasons which I will not go into now. It is how I kept her from killing Cirith when she was first born. No one knew of Cirith's existence. No one!" Valin continued.

Andro looked at Narice in the transmission and saw the incredulous look on her face. "Narice?"

Narice pulled her eyes from Valin and looked at Andro shaking her head. "This is... this is the first I have ever heard of this Andro." She declared. "I... I can't believe my mother would have... she would never have bedded with a man if she knew he had wolf blood in him!"

"Lucia?" Andro asked.

Lucia shook her head quickly. "No." She gasped. "I have... I have never heard anything like this either!"

Valin nodded his head. "And no one would have!" He insisted. "This is not information she would have made readily available even to her own children! If it ever got out that she had given birth to a child that was part wolf, the mystique she had built over the years... the superior mentality she reinforced towards the Lycavorian people... it would have been lost instantly. Not to mention that Veldruk would have had me killed within hours of discovering this. Or at least tried to. Once word reached us that she was dead... I knew then it was time to leave behind the lie we have been living."

"Why?" Andro asked.

"Yuri survived." Valin said. "With her mother's death, all of her mother's personal and most secret files would revert to her. She would have discovered Cirith existed and she would have come after her with a vengeance. I was not willing to risk my daughter and everything I have built through the last three thousand plus years. As my daughter has a purpose even now, I too have a purpose and reason for standing here. I am the instrument that will bring our wolf bloodline back into the fold. This is what I have been told since I was a child by my mother and father, told by her and this is what I have always believed. This is what I have worked for my entire life. I will not risk that now!"

"Told?" Andro asked. "Told by whom?"

Valin shook his head. "I will not reveal that just yet. Not through a COM channel Prince Leonidas. I will tell you whatever it is you want in person... any information you require that I have will be yours. All you need do is ask. But only in person."

"She allowed you to live knowing what you were." Andro spoke. "She allowed you to live and hold the position I have been told you held. How is that possible? Why should we believe that?"

"Part of it... part of it was Cirith." Valin said. "But part of it was because I never gave her reason to doubt my intentions. I did everything she asked of me through the years, even more at times. She may not have trusted me... but she at least did not suspect me of anything. I can relay all this to you Prince Androcles... but I will only do so in person, away from eyes and ears that may still place my daughter at risk."

"You don't trust those in that room you are in?" Andro asked.

"If I told you I did... you would know immediately I was retlah d'shu." Valin spoke.

Andro nodded. "You are right about that." He answered. "Very well Admiral... you will leave your Second in Command there and return to Earth on my ship with Captain Sa'sur."

"And my people?" Valin asked. "My ships?"

“We do not turn on those who have proven they are allies.” Andro spoke. “I was hoping perhaps you could have your senior officers help to institute a complete System Wide Defense of Kranek.”

Valin nodded easily. “I have several officers who are very talented in Combined Forces Control. Those who follow me have a great respect for Cha'talla and what he is known for.”

“And your daughter?” Androcles asked him. “You would leave her?”

Valin gave a small smile. “I do not fear for my daughter.” He said. “She has trained for over three thousand years to do what she is doing now. She is even more skilled than I am, though she tends to be more reckless as well it seems.”

“Cha'talla?” Andro asked looking at him.

Cha'talla nodded. “They fought beside us in the stars and are even now caring for my tribe under Eliani’s guidance Androcles. They will be welcome.”

Andro nodded. “I have spoken with Res and they are secure for the moment.” He told his family. “Admiral Omore has gone dark with the SPIRIT and will not come back up on COMs until they are within range of Earth.”

“Andro...” Eliani spoke up now.

“Mother is safe onboard Eli.” He answered quickly.

“Andro... the ARIZONA and HORNET can...” Miranda began to speak.

“No Manda... I know what you are going to say.” He replied quickly. “I have spoken with Ben...”

Andro gave a small smile that was filled with underlying sadness. “I think I have spoken to everyone in the last few hours. The Strike Wing for NORMYA'S LIGHT will be arriving in a few hours and her Fleet Group shortly thereafter. I want the ARIZONA and HORNET to deploy back here to Earth when her FG arrives. Maintain your protocols as if you have gone dark, but let grandfather Riall know when you arrive in system.”

Miranda nodded. “We are going to respond aren't we Andro?” She asked. “We aren't going to let this stand are we?”

“I... I don't know.” Andro answered.

Denali and Lisisa stepped forward as one. “Andro! We can't let them get away with this!” Lisisa spat. “They killed our father! They have killed... they may have killed one of our mothers and they are involved with kidnapping another at least in some way! We can't let this go unpunished! We can't!”

Andro met her gaze from within the transmission. “And I will not leap into something without planning it! We don't know if this is a prelude to an all out attack Lisi!”

“Then let's find out!” Denali barked.

“What do you think I am trying to do?” Andro snarled at his siblings. “Nowhere along our borders are they coming across! Nowhere! I need more time to discover what is going on before I commit us on a path that will lead to all out war! Something is not right about all this! If it is war they wanted, why just target our family? Why not send their troops across the border in locations too numerous to defend? They are plotting something else, and war is not part of it. At least not right now!”

“Killing our father is reason enough for us to respond!” Lisisa shouted at him angrily.

“You don't think I know that?” Andro barked.

“Your brother is right Lisisa Leonidas.” Cha'talla spoke softly from the side. “If we act before we know what is happening, it could very well lead to disaster everywhere.”

“Given what Lu'ria has told me... and the fact that we can not contact over half our Drow outposts in The Wilds, at the moment we are very blind.” Andro spoke maintaining control of his own anger at what had happened. “Our spy drones do not give us the coverage and hands on knowledge that the Drow did, and it will take time to get that back.”

“How much time?” Lisisa snapped.

“I don't know damn it!” Andro barked in the transmission. “He was my father too! My mother too Lisisa! You know as well as I Lisisa, he would not want us to blindly blunder into something that could very well cost us more than it already has! I will not make that mistake! I won't! When I discover what is going on... when I have a clear picture... then I will act! Not before! And neither will you! Is that understood?”

“Andro...” Lisisa began.

“Is that understood Lisisa!” Andro snarled.

Lisisa glared at the transmission but relented under the unwavering gaze of her brother. “Very well.” She said softly.

“Moneus?” Andro spoke watching as his friend turned to look at him. “You and Carina will stay with our mother there. She is now your first and most sacred priority. Where she goes the two of you follow.”

Moneus nodded without hesitation. “Consider it done.” He answered.

“Where is Anton and Cihera?” Andro asked. “They were with you correct?”

Moneus nodded. “They are preparing to return to Apo Prime.” He replied. “Anton... he wants to discover how the Kavalians were able to access and use our Jump Gates from outside the normal channels. They had to have someone inside or operating on remote.”

Andro shook his head. “Have them return here to Earth. Marci is on Earth and... she will need those she is familiar with to help her get a handle on things until we can find out what is happening. I have heard nothing about Armetus at the moment.”

“I’ll let Anton know.” Moneus said.

“Zarah... you and Lucia will return to Earth.” Andro said looking at his younger sister intently. “I... I need you here.”

“Andro... we want to go after mother.” Zarah said softly. “You don’t need to protect... you don’t need to protect me Andro.”

Andro shook his head. “I’m not trying to protect you Zarah. I need yours and Lucia’s combined skills here with me.” He stated evenly. “For reasons which I will explain when you get here. Please jonía arande.” (Baby Sister)

Zarah nodded when he used his childhood name for her. It was a name he had given to her after that day on the mountain and it was a name he used now only when he was serious and concerned about something. “We’ll report to you immediately when we arrive.”

“Eli... I need you to return as well.” Andro stated. “Aunt Anuk is the only one I trust on Earth right now to treat mother, but she is not Hadarian and...”

“Of course.” Eliani answered surprising him so much that it showed on his face. Andro looked at her intently for a long moment seeing something in her fern green eyes but he said nothing and his gaze turned to Cha’talla. “Cha’talla?”

Cha’talla looked up at the transmission. “I am here.”

“You take what you need from the forces that remain to guard Kranek.” Andro told him. “You take what you need and you bring my mother back to us!”

Cha’talla stood up to his full height of six foot five and his Immortal face became stern and determined. “I give you my Vlos Hithern that...” Cha’talla began. (Blood Oath)

“I don’t want your Blood Oath Cha’talla.” Androcles stated. “I want your word as part of our family... which you now are thanks to my sister. I want your word as a member of our family that you will get our mother back.”

Cha’talla stared at Andro for a long moment almost not comprehending his words to him. It took a long time for that to sink in but Cha’talla’s eyes became bright points and he took a deep breath. “It will be done young Androcles... for our futures are now intertwined with yours and those of the Lycavorian Union more deeply than I had ever hoped for. I will get her back... and I will bring her home to you on Earth!”

Andro nodded his head. “Outside of my family, you are now the only one who has my personal COM channel. Use it for anything you might need and keep me advised of what you are doing. Admiral Thodias will give you whatever you need.”

“It will be done.” Cha’talla spoke.

“Denali? Arrarn?” Andro spoke waiting until his brothers turned to face him. “Tnobbaf brothers. Tnobbaf.”

Denali and Arrarn looked at each other briefly and then turned back to Andro and nodded.

“Avoi fervon.” Denali said.

“Avoi fervon.” Arrarn echoed.

Admiral Omore was no fool.

This was by far the most severe crisis they had ever encountered, and he was taking nothing for granted. He knew he could very well be carrying the last Queen of the Lycavorian Union and he was utterly ruthless in his actions. The moment they had cleared Hadarian space he ordered their Strike Wing to make seven radical jumps and after each jump three different course changes. He was working towards the prearranged location where he was to hold in case something of this size took place and they had been here now for almost seven hours. All the ships of the SPIRIT's Strike Wing were shrouded and many of them were crammed full of extra military and civilian personnel that had escaped Hadaria before they left. Omore had served Anja Leonidas since the day he took command of the SPIRIT more than two decades ago. He would do anything for the diminutive Persian red haired Queen no matter how outrageous it may have seemed. He knew that Androcles had survived for he had spoken directly to the young Prince who only confirmed his orders. Keep his mother away from Earth until such time as he heard from him. Omore was taking no chances now, and he was on the bridge as he had been for the last thirty-four hours, unwilling to leave anything to chance.

Sivana, Fuleos and Ceuma moved back into the main room of Anja's quarters on the SPIRIT and looked at Zaniai, Eurin and Joci. Zaniai and Eurin sat on the large couch, Joci to the side and leaning up against the bulkhead. Belen and Atropos stood near the door into the large quarters and all of them were silent. Eurin came to her feet when she saw them, watching as Fuleos moved to the dispenser to get a mug of tea.

"We... we finally got her to sleep." Sivana said softly. All of them could see she had been crying. "She... she..."

Belen broke away from the door, stepping up to her quickly and wrapping his arms around her frame pulling her tight to him. Sivana sighed heavily as her mate's aura and strength washed over her. Ceuma was already encased in Joci's arms and she pulled his thick ebony skinned forearm even tighter to her chest as he leaned over and nuzzled her ear and cheek pushing the matching Persian red hair aside, the long dreadlocks she so adored caressing the skin of her neck and her shoulder. She inhaled deeply of her mate's spicy pepper scent and her eyes closed in bliss for a moment as well.

"She took everything from her closet." Ceuma said softly as she opened her eyes once more. "Everything that... everything that smelled like him even a little and she is laying on the bed among these items."

"Is there nothing we can do?" Eurin asked.

Atropos moved away from the doorway now. "Unless you can return the King to her... no." He stated flatly. "There is much you don't truly understand of our people Eurin... and that is not your fault. They are things that we do not make common knowledge or speak of openly. The depth of their love for each other, for my sister, for Dysea and Isabella and For'mya... it is beyond the comprehension of most normal people. It is beyond my comprehension at times. They are bound so tightly together with Martin that... it is like... in losing him Anja has lost a part of herself."

"That is how all marriages are." Zaniai spoke.

"If only that was the case Zaniai." Fuleos spoke as he moved up next to Atropos.

Eurin placed her hand on his arm and shook her head before Atropos spoke. "No. It is not." She said. "Yes... we love and we marry Zaniai. And when we lose a husband or wife, it is as if we have lost a part of ourselves. But for... for Lycavorians it is almost a literal thing..." She looked at Atropos. "Isn't it?"

Atropos nodded his head slowly. "You understand more than I thought Divine One." He said. "I thought Fuleos was the only one who studied our culture over these past years."

"She tried to explain it to me before." Eurin said. "Several times through the years, but I don't think I understood it until right now."

"And it is worse now because she is in full phase and her wolf blood is screaming for her mate." Atropos spoke. "It is my understanding that in earlier time... during King Resumar's rise to power if this were to happen she would have been pursued by the strongest alphas until she relented and took another mate or one forced himself upon her. Her scent is peaking, and it will be sweeter now than at any other time because she is in full phase. It will be... it will be instinct for the alphas on the SPIRIT to sense and smell this and they may become stupid and let their instincts overpower their brains."

Eurin looked at him horrified. "They would do this?" She gasped.

“Martin’s return to our people brought back much of our instinctual nature Eurin... you know this.” Atropos said. “It is because he embraced his instincts that many of our people are returning to our roots Divine One. They are embracing the instincts of our past, but balancing those same instincts with what we have learned in the years since the Black Day. Just as the King did. Just as he does every day. I do not believe any on this ship, or any who know her would attempt something, but I can not speak for all of our people. It would be instinctual as I said. And her scent is nearly overpoweringly sweet right now. It will be the same for all of them now, my sister, Dysea and For'mya, ever since they began coming into phase at the same time over fifteen years ago.”

“Yet it doesn’t affect you or Belen or Joci.” Zaniai said.

“We can smell it.” Belen spoke now before his father. “But we are committed to our mates and only their scent would affect us in that way. This nullifies any attraction to her even if there was one.”

“It is something that only the females of our people have to be concerned with.” Atropos said. “For whatever reason the Lycavorian male is not affected in the same manner. It is not very fair I know, but it is who we are.”

“Do you worry for her safety?” Eurin asked.

Atropos couldn’t help but chuckle. “Her safety? No Divine One. I worry for the alpha who is not mated and thinks he is superior to others and attempts to entice her with his aura. He will find she will not be receptive in the least. He will become painfully aware of this fact three seconds after he attempts to pulse her with his aura.”

“Why are we holding in this location?” Zaniai asked now. “Shouldn’t we be heading to Earth instead of waiting here?”

“We do not know yet if it is safe to return.” Joci answered.

“And Androcles ordered Omore to follow established protocol and keep his mother safe at all costs.” Atropos said.

“You have spoken to him?” Eurin gasped. “Androcles? He is alive?”

“Omore spoke with him.” Atropos said.

“Then he is alive?”

Atropos nodded. “Yes. And if Omore’s observations are accurate, he has never seen Androcles so overflowing with rage.”

“Thank the gods.” Sivana muttered.

“I would suspect the gods themselves would not be able to harness Androcles when he gets around to retaliating against the Kavalians.” Fuleos spoke as he moved to the couch now. “And make no mistake... that is coming. He will insure the rest of his family is secure and then that boy is going to get some payback!”

“Fuleos!” Eurin barked. “Do not make light of this!”

“I am making light of nothing!” Fuleos spoke. “I am simply stating a fact! I am too old to play these political games! I should already be dead!”

“Grandfather!” Sivana spat.

“No! Your sister’s return to us!” Fuleos stated. “Your return to us! To me. It filled me with new life! With purpose to go on! Now there is Ceuma... who you and Anja have accepted not as an outsider... but your sister! It has given me even more reason and purpose to go on. I will not rest now until my granddaughters sit once more on the throne of my brother Eurin! And I will act in whatever manner I need too in order to see that come to pass Eurin! Just as my granddaughters will!”

Eurin was silent for a moment before looking at Atropos once more. “Atropos... Eliani... the younger children?” Eurin asked. “Retta and Calyb? Deion, Nara and Bryon?”

“We don’t know Divine One.” Atropos answered. “We...”

The internal ship COM began chiming and Atropos crossed to the panel on the wall beside the door. “Durcunusaan Colonel Atropos!” He barked.

“Atropos...” Omore’s voice filled the room. “I have an incoming priority transmission from Spartan 49 on Anja’s personal channel. We can’t crack it and it bypassed all the security filters we had in place.”

“Spartan 49 is Princess Yuriko!” Atropos declared.

“We can’t disturb her Atropos... she has been through too much already!” Eurin began to protest. “We...”

“Put her through immediately!” The voice snapped and they saw Anja step into the room. She was clutching one of Martin’s fatigue tops in her arms, her jade green eyes red from crying. “Don’t... don’t you dare keep me from talking to one of our children!”

“Admiral... route it here!” Atropos snapped. “Full security measures and encryption!”

“Anja?” Sivana spoke softly as she went to her sister.

Anja smiled gently as first Sivana and then Ceuma stepped up to her and they pressed tightly to her. She squeezed their arms around her and nodded her head. “I... I must carry on.” She gasped. “If... if I withdraw I will be useless to everyone. I... we can’t afford that right now.”

Anja looked up when the holodisc built into the floor of the main room flared to life and Yuriko’s figure appeared. Her adopted vampire daughter’s surreal beauty was shining through as always, but her face appeared tense.

“Yuriko?” Anja spoke moving closer to the transmission and breaking away from Sivana and Ceuma.

“Mother!” Yuriko gasped. “Finally! I’ve been trying to contact you for six hours! Your COM channel has been blocked! I had to override security protocols to finally get through the SPIRIT’S lock out!”

Atropos stepped forward. “How did you do that?” He asked surprised.

“That doesn’t matter!” Anja snapped. “Yuriko... are you safe? Where are you? Can you...”

“Mother... listen to me!” Yuriko interrupted her. “I need you to come to my location immediately!”

Anja’s eyes narrowed. “Yuriko what... where are you? What is wrong? Are you hurt? Is Filrian hurt?”

Yuriko shook her head. “No! Mother... do you remember what you did that day on the Raptor when you discovered what father was? When you were on your way to rescue Uncle Daniel? Do you remember?”

Everyone looked at Anja now in confusion as she moved closer to the transmission. “Ye... yes. Yuriko what...?”

“Deval mother? Do you remember what you did to Deval mother?” Yuriko asked once more.

“Yes!” Anja snapped. “Yuriko what is going on?”

“You are the only one to have ever done that mother! The only one! Even the Feravomir has never been able to do that!” Yuriko stated. “I need you to do that again!”

“Yuriko I don’t understand.” Anja said. “Where are you?”

“Do you remember where our family went for vacation the year after Retta and Calyb were born? Where we celebrated their first birthdays?” Yuriko replied.

Anja nodded. “Of course I remember that.”

“I will meet you there in two hours mother.” Yuriko said. “Your position now should allow you to get there quickly on a STRIKER.”

“Security Protocol dictates I remain here until we hear from Andro.” Anja spoke. “Then I... then I am supposed to return to Earth. Yuriko you know this. You helped to put these protocols in place with your father and brother.”

Yuriko nodded. “And now I am asking you to do what you do best and disregard protocol and meet me mother. This is more important than you can imagine mother. It has to do with the Kavalian assassination of father. I have information... I have... I have... somebody you need to speak too.”

“Who?” Anja demanded. “What do you know Yuriko? Tell me!”

Yuriko shook her head. “Bring those present with you now if you must mother... but do not delay!” Her head turned as if someone was calling her and then she looked back quickly. “Hurry mother.”

The transmission ended abruptly and Anja stared ahead for a few seconds. “Atropos... have Hal’lia prep the STRIKER.” Anja said.

“Anja you can’t leave!” Eurin stated.

Anja looked at her. “I will leave!” She barked. “Yuriko is our daughter and I trust her implicitly. If she says she has information, someone who can give us information as to why the Kavalians have done this, then I will go and meet with her!”

“And if it is a trap?” Zaniai asked softly.

“Yuriko would die before luring any of her family into a trap!” Anja said as some of her old self began showing again.

Eurin looked at Atropos sternly. “Are you going to try and stop her?” She demanded as she glared at him.

Atropos shook his head. "Not in the least."

Eurin glared at him for a moment longer then looked at Anja. "We are coming with you then." She barked.

"We are?" Zaniai asked surprised.

Fuleos got to his feet. "Yes we are."

Anja nodded to Eurin and looked at Sivana and Ceuma. Sivana nodded her head without a question being asked. "You couldn't tear us away now." She said. "We... we are your sisters and we will not leave your side."

Ceuma nodded her head as well. "No... no we will not."

"Then we have a ship to catch." Anja spoke.

RITAAH

Athani entered the large room that they had taken for their quarters. Though they now knew that VORTEX Cruiser 341 was strictly a combat ship, it was obviously meant to hold a crew since there were quarters on the lower decks. Even at half power, as Avatar 341 had told them they were now operating, it was more than enough to supply lighting and even power the food dispensers within the ship. Though none of the Kavalians trusted the new machine enough to utilize the dispensers, the fact that all three hundred odd families had their own quarters only added to the belief for Athani that this wonderful ship was meant for greater things, regardless of the ultimate fate she knew it would suffer. Athani stopped just inside the door as it closed and looked at his back as he sat in the chair, his hands working at the computer station there. Her people, her father had killed his father and countless others they now knew. They had killed a man who had accepted her and her love for his son with barely a thought. Even the discovery of a brother she never knew she had could not dim the despair she felt right now. Nor the concern. She did not know how he would respond to her now. Would he still love her as he had for so many weeks? Would he still hold her in his arms and make her feel so safe and utterly secure and loved. Athani cursed her father in her mind. She cursed him for who he was and what he had done and continued to do even now. Even so many light years away from him and he still sought to ruin all she had ever hoped for.

"Come to me Aryschanne." His voice spoke through the air.

Athani's vertically slit feline eyes saw his head turn towards her in the dimly lit room. She hesitated for a moment.

"Resumar my love... I..." Athani began to speak.

Athani felt the fingers of his TK power encircle her and she didn't fight it as he lifted her into the air and pulled her towards him. He leaned back in the chair and she settled into his lap, her hands going to his broad shoulders, as she came to rest with her knees on either side of his hips. Instinctively her long tail slid up the outside of his back and wrapped tightly around his upper arm. Resumar reached up and took her beautiful face in his large hands, brushing some of her blond hair from her cheek and stared into her blue/green eyes.

"I have told you before and I will tell you one more time Aryschanne... and then you need to let that fear go." Resumar spoke softly, his dark brown eyes smiling at her. "You are my wife... my mate. No one doubts where your heart is or where it belongs. I do not... my brother does not... and my father did not question it."

"It... it was my father that...!" Athani began to say as tears welled up in her eyes. "My... my father has taken yours from my love!" She sobbed.

"And you are not your father!" Resumar spoke firmly gripping her face tightly. "You have proven that many times over. And it appears so has your sister Jalersi by protecting my mother as she did. I love you! Nothing will change that because I know what you have inside! My brother knows that because he has seen you, seen inside your heart and because he trusts me! My... my father trusted you completely or you would not be here! Let this fear go now Aryschanne! You are a Leonidas now!"

Athani's tear streaked face looked at him and her tail instinctively tightened on his thick muscular arm. "I did not believe I could ever love a man as I love you Resumar Leonidas." She said.

“That’s a good thing, for it matches my feelings for you.” Resumar said stroking her arms and never letting his eyes wander from her face. “We have... we have much to do and not much time to do it. Avi and Avatar 341 are almost finished with the download and then we will place the charges and be gone from this place.”

“Back to Earth?” She asked as he turned sideways back to the computer and she shifted her eyes to see what he had been working on.

Resumar nodded. “More than likely... but I will know more when Andro contacts me again.”

“What... what Andro said Resumar?” Athani asked softly. “Will... he...?”

Resumar nodded his head slowly. “As much as he rebels when he is compared to our father... he is more like him than even he realizes. And in many ways... he is darker than our father. Ever since Alba Tau.”

“Darker?”

Resumar nodded. “More intense. More serious in many respects. And like my father, he will do what he says he will do. My brothers and sisters and I...” He looked up at her face. “We have joked at times about what it might be like if we ever saw him truly angry. He laughs with us... but... but none of us really want to see that part of our brother. He has protected all of us in some fashion ever since we were babies. Looked out for us, encouraged us. You saw what he did for us Aryschanne. He shifted the confrontation with Qurot and the Kavalian Ambassador to his shoulders so that we could leave quickly. That is just how he is. He will contact us when he knows more and then we will decide what to do. In the mean time... how do the preparations with Mican and the rebels go?”

“Many of them knew of this ship but have never been inside it.” Athani answered. “The Avatar frightened them. When the time comes, we will conduct a mass evacuation to the Kavalian Science ship. Moving everyone together better eliminates the possibility the remaining Coven forces on the planet may attack.”

Resumar nodded. “The Avatar’s are rather imposing until you interact with them.” Resumar agreed.

“Do we truly have to destroy it Resumar?” Athani asked.

Resumar looked at her. “It is what my father wanted.” He said. “You don’t agree with that?”

Athani shook her head. “Look at what we have been able to create and develop with just the technology from Avi’s ship.” She told him. “He says this ship is ten thousand years younger. Think of what we could learn and not just militarily. The medical advancements and history this ship carries...”

“We’re taking that with us Aryschanne.” Resumar answered.

“It’s not the same thing.” She stated. “After... after spending so much time with Avi... it just seems so unfair that we have to destroy the only home Avatar 341 has ever known and this one ship could be a huge force all by itself. We should use it... use it in such a way that the technology remains with us, but that it benefits others as well.”

“This ship will always be a weapon Athani.” Resumar said. “It is what it was designed for. It is the most powerful ship in the entire universe from what we now know. What we have learned from CS41... can you imagine if even one piece of technology from this ship fell into the wrong hands? Even a minor one?”

“I understand the reasoning my love.” Athani said. “That does not mean I agree with destroying it however. You have had CS41 for over twenty years and while you have developed some advances that benefit the military, you have not tried to conquer other races with the technology you have created. I think it would be safe to make the same assumption concerning this ship.”

Resumar stared at her for a long moment before reaching out with his hand and touching the control panel twice. Athani had followed his movement with her blue/green orbs for she detected something in her husband’s eyes. As the medium sized monitor came to life her eyes grew a little wider. She glanced back at him and then returned her eyes to the screen.

“Resumar this is...!”

Resumar nodded. “I started working on it right after I found out.” He stated. “It is only the beginnings of one... and Andro would have to approve it. He is... he is now... King.”

Athani turned once more at the catch in his voice and her eyes grew wide when she saw his face. He stared at her with those beautiful dark eyes and she could almost feel the pain in them. The corners of his eyes were moist and Athani saw what was coming. “Oh... oh my love!” She stammered.

Athani Leonidas wrapped her arms around her husband's head and pulled him tightly to her just as he buried his face between her full breasts and the tears came. She held him with wide eyes as the sobs wracked his body and his powerful arms crushed her to him. And then Athani's own tears were flowing as well as she used every bit of her inbred strength to hold him as tightly as she could. This was not something she had ever envisioned; yet as Resumar trembled with despair and his tears soaked the front of her fatigued top, Athani knew this would be the moment she remembered for the remainder of her years as the moment when she truly became a Leonidas.

EARTH
SPARTA
AUGUST, 2564

"Retire?" Martin quipped as he looked at her. "What is that Tenna... a joke?"

Deia looked at Martin as she held his arm and walked alongside him as they strolled along the boardwalk that extended the entire length of the Evrotas River on both sides. The river ran through the city proper and made for a popular gathering of not only young couples, but families bringing their children out for the day. In earlier times the river would almost completely dry up, but after the Comet engineers had spent a full year rerouting the river and making it twenty feet deeper so that it could flow through Sparta and be a means of power generation if needed. Now the river was crowded with cafés and outdoor shops and at this time of day it was usually lined with people as it was now.

Deia so looked forward to these walks. At the end of every week for the last five years they did this, rain or shine or cold. She had loved her older sister dearly, and Martin was her last link to that sister. He was of Elaini's blood and in many ways he reminded Deia of her, most especially when he laughed, for his eyes would twinkle just as hers did. These walks had started as a way for Deia to teach Martin about the finer art of politics, and they quickly became more of a bonding between Aunt and Nephew than anything else. Yes... they spoke of work, but more often than not the conversation would turn to Martin asking her dozens of questions about his grandparents. Even after all these years, neither of them had tired of the routine. This did not bother Deia in the least for she loved speaking of her sister and Resumar and Martin was a studious listener. They would walk along the banks of the Evrotas River and she would hold his arm as they talked, their Durcunusaan details trailing along behind and in front of them, always with Andreus circling above them on Dorrenth. When these walks first started, the Netnews had jumped all over them, the King and Prime Minister walking together along the river with Deia holding his arm. One young reporter with more imagination than intelligence had once tried to insinuate that they were having a relationship. Not only did he lose his job but also the backlash hounded him for nearly two years. Though they had never officially announced anything, Deia assumed that promising reporters had put it together long ago and just never said anything or reported it.

Deia squeezed his arm. "No Mandri it is not a joke!" Deia protested. "I'm serious!"

Martin looked down into her face with that trademark Eliani smile. "Tenna you don't want to retire." He stated. "There's way too much fun stuff happening. Besides... if you retire, Laustinos will petition to take your place and I'll kill him in the first week."

Deia chuckled. "Don't worry about that." She stated. "I already have it in my mind to recommend to the Senate that Panos step in as my replacement until elections can be held. It will anger Laustinos... but he isn't really what Armetus and I thought he would be."

Martin looked at her. "You are serious?"

"Of course I'm serious. I've been Prime Minister for nearly a thousand years Mandri." Deia stated. "It's time I moved on. I'm dragging you down with my old ways and..."

Martin stopped in his tracks then and turn to face her. "Dragging me down!" He gasped. "What the nubou is that... dragging me down?"

"Watch your language young man!" Deia barked slapping him lightly in the face but doing so with a small smile.

"Tenna you..."

"You are ushering in a new era Mandri." Deia spoke. "Your era. You are returning to our people what I had a hand in taking away. Our instincts. If not for me... if I hadn't blindly led our people along the path that others told me and instead listened to what my instincts told me... what happen with Aricia would never have occurred. What happen with the...!"

"You stop right there!" Martin snapped. "You had nothing to do with that! Nothing! There is no way you could have known Chetak would pull a stunt like that. I have never... we have never blamed you for that!"

"I blame myself." Deia said.

"Well stop!" Martin quipped.

"Mandri you..." Deia began.

"No... listen to me!" Martin interrupted her. "You... you are like a rock for me! You have held our people together all of this time! I had nothing to do with that! That was all you! You have so much still to teach me!"

"Martin you..."

"No!" He almost shouted. "You are... you are the only link I have to my past! The only one who can answer the questions I still have about my grandparents. About so much. I am not going to just toss that aside! You started us down this road Tenna... I won't allow you to get off the train before we have achieved for our people what you set out to achieve."

"You... you don't wish for someone younger?" Deia asked surprised.

"Someone else won't argue with me!" Martin snorted. "Someone else won't tell me I need to be an asshole or be agreeable! Someone else won't tell me I'm acting like a complete igord!"

Deia chuckled. "I know five who don't seem to have a problem telling you that." She said reaching up to place her palm on his cheek.

"They don't count." Martin snapped rolling his eyes. "And they call me far worse."

"I'll bet!" Deia said with a smile. "You can be so very obstinate."

"We have not finished what my grandparents started Tenna." Martin said taking his hands and placing them over the top of hers. "This is not the end of the ride. I know it's not. I can feel it. There is much still left to do and I need you beside me in order to complete that!"

Deia had looked into his eyes then and she had seen hope in its purest form. "I'm tired Mandri." She said softly.

"Then go away!" Martin said quickly. "Take a month! Take six months! Take as much time as you need to recharge but I will not let you set aside this road we have put our people on! We need to see it through to the end! We have work to do! Together!"

"You weave a compelling future Mandri." Deia said.

Martin nodded. "A future that you will have a say in many years from now Tenna and that is why you can not retire."

Deia leaned forward and put her head to his chest. She took a long moment before nodding her head and committing herself happily to the future. "Then I will stay... but I might take you up on your offer of a vacation." She said pulling back and looking at him.

Martin nodded. "Anything." He said. "It's not your time yet Tenna! Wake up! It's not your time yet!"

It's not your time yet! Wake up! It's not your time!

Deia's dark eyes sprang open then.

"Mandri!" She screamed out causing the female Durcunusaan medic to practically leap out of her skin from where she sat next to her. She immediately came awake and scrambled to her knees next to her.

"Prime Minister!" She gasped as Jomann skidded to a stop on the opposite side.

"Prime Minister Deia!" Jomann exclaimed. The side of his face was hastily bandaged and almost soaked through with blood from a piece of falling rock that had cut him to the bone as he rolled into the escape tunnel on his side and back, all the while cradling Deia's body in his arms in an attempt to keep her from further harm. It had taken nearly thirty minutes for the dust to settle enough where they could see, and all of them were covered in a layer of the fine gray substance.

“Where... where...” Deia stammered as she tried to focus her eyes. “Mar... Martin! Mandri!” She rasped out the words trying to lift her arms to move.

“Don’t move Prime Minister!” Jomann spoke quickly. “You have been badly injured and if you move you could do more damage!”

Lysandra pulled her small medical hand scanner from her belt pouch and let it play over Deia’s chest slowly. “Prime Minister... I know it is instinct to try and shift to heal yourself but you have to fight the urge!” She spoke. “Your spine is broken in two places but it has not completely torn away. The nerves are still intact! As soon as we get a Hadarian down here that can treat you we...”

Deia’s eyes blinked rapidly and she looked around the interior of where she was. “Where... where am I?” She asked finally.

“The escape tunnel below your office.” Jomann replied. “They... they had...”

“Explosions!” Deia hissed. “They set explosives! I heard them... speaking about it!” She turned her head back and forth. “Where is... For'mya? Where is For'mya?”

Jomann shook his head slowly. “She... the Queen has been taken.” He replied. “We did not get here in time! We barely got into the tunnel here ourselves!”

“Tell... must contact Armetus!” Deia gasped. “Laustinos... Laustinos... traitor!”

“The Deputy Prime Minister?” Lysandra gasped in disbelief. “We... we thought perhaps they had taken him as well.”

“Nu... nubous traitor!” Deia hissed and began to try and move.

Jomann reached out and held her arms down gently, leaning over and looking at her. “You must not move!” He declared.

“Have... have to warn...” Deia stammered.

“Deia!” Jomann barked loudly. He watched Deia’s eyes clear almost instantly at the sound of his voice and she stared up at him. “Prime Minister... you... who am I?”

“You are... you are Captain Jomann!” Deia groaned out loud. “You were... you were assigned as Durcunusaan Captain six months ago.”

Jomann sighed heavily and nodded. “Yes. What do you remember Prime Minister?”

“We saw... we were watching the Netnews! We saw... Mandri!” Deia cried out and her eyes flooded with tears and closed.

“No!” Jomann barked. “You must stay awake now. You must stay awake so shock does not set in.” He echoed. “Look at me!” He shouted.

Deia’s eyes opened and she shook her head from side to side. “Let... let me die!” She sobbed. “Oh Mandri... Mandri I have failed you!”

“No!” Jomann snarled at her. “You live! It is not your time yet!”

Deia’s eyes flashed open then and though clouded with tears and she stared up at him confused. “What...?”

“You are alive!” Jomann barked. “The gods do not call you yet Prime Minister! You must stay awake! Tell me what happened?”

“Laustinos is... he is traitor!” Deia hissed viciously. “We... we must get to...”

Jomann shook his head. “The entire Senate Building is on top of us Prime Minister.” He stated. “The primary exit is buried under hundreds of tons of debris. It will take days for them to dig it out. The emergency exit is... we cannot remove the debris by hand. It’s too heavy. It will be a few hours before they get to us at least. If they even know we live that is.”

“Rad... radio?” Deia asked. “Implants?”

Jomann shook his head. “Again... too much debris. It is interfering with the signal to our implants and our hand radio was smashed when we rushed in here.”

“I... I can’t feel... I can’t feel my legs.” Deia said.

“There is damage to your spinal column Prime Minister.” Lysandra answered her now. “The nerves have taken a beating. You have a collapsed lung and that is why it is hard to breath. I believe I have got the bleeding stopped... but I cannot treat you for anything. We left our barracks so quickly I did not grab my bag. I’m... I’m so sorry!” Lysandra sobbed now as tears clouded her eyes.

Deia inched her hand over and took Lysandra's fingers in as tight a grip as she could. "I am... I am dying." She gasped. "It is not your fault."

"No!" Jomann barked. "You will not die! You are the Prime Minister of our Union! You cannot die! I forbid it! The King... the King would not let you die and neither will I!"

Deia looked at him oddly once more her eyes gaining more focus and clarity every second. "How... how many inside?" She asked finally. "My... Aricia... my family?"

Jomann shook his head. "We had only just begun evacuating the people inside when the bombs went off." He said. "All I know of Queen Aricia was that they were beginning to move her to King Yelu Memorial." Jomann turned when he heard the scraping on the floor and he saw Anicetus move into the section of the tunnel they were in.

"We got limited power back to the bunker Captain." He spoke evenly. "Enough to power the lights and one food dispenser. The primary bunker entrance is... it's just plain gone." He said. "It could be weeks before they clear enough debris to get to the outer bunker door. If the building came down as you suspect the tunnel is buried under tons of debris. The emergency tunnel... well... we cleared what we could... but..."

"I know Anicetus." Jomann said.

He moved over to Lysandra and placed the large steel case in front of her, her eyes going wide. "Thought you might like this Lysandra." Anicetus said.

"A medical kit!" She exclaimed taking the large case down and popping the latches. She flipped it open and folded the top down revealing two fully stocked sections of just about every conceivable field medical tool. She quickly snatched up the scanner and activated it.

The much older Spartan leaned over his Captain's shoulder and looked at Deia. "Prime Minister." He spoke. "Glad to see you are awake."

Deia looked at Jomann. "How many... how many of your team...?"

"Sixteen... including me." Jomann replied. "Nine of us are here with you... I sent the rest to try and evacuate people when we first arrived. I don't know if they made it out."

"We would all be dead if you did not order us in here." Anicetus spoke.

Deia cut her eyes to Lysandra as she swept the scanner over her upper body. The young woman's face was dusty and streaked with small dots of blood but Deia could see the concern in her eyes. "Tell... tell me." She stated.

Lysandra looked at her. "One... one projectile exited out just below your shoulder blade Prime Minister." She said. "It punctured your lung and tore some of your back muscles, but it is gone. Your healing system has already sealed the puncture to the lung, but it still has fluid in it."

"Blood you mean?" Deia said.

"Ma'am I..."

"Do not keep anything from me young lady." Deia said her voice regaining strength as she spoke.

Lysandra looked at Jomann quickly and he nodded. "Tell her." He said.

"Yes... it's blood." Lysandra replied looking at her. "I can treat that. Give you medicine so that your body absorbs the blood back into its cells slowly but there is still the risk of a bad infection."

"Now... now give me the bad news." Deia rasped.

"The second projectile is lodged against the third and fourth vertebra of your spine Lady Deia." She spoke meeting her eyes. "It... it appears three of your vertebra are fractured but not broken completely. There is extensive nerve damage and that is why you can't feel your legs."

"And with the projectile still inside me I can't shift even if I had the strength." Deia said.

"If you do... it could very well sever your spine completely." Lysandra said. "This... this projectile is very deep and has broken into two pieces. I can repair the damage it did going in but... only a Hadarian could repair the damage inside and remove the projectile without killing or crippling you."

"Where is the other piece young lady?" Deia asked softly.

Lysandra looked at Jomann quickly once more and then back to Deia. "It is embedded in the wall of your heart Prime Minister." She said. "Deep enough to keep the blood loss at a trickle, but..."

"But if it comes out I will bleed out internally in moments." Deia said nodding her head minutely.

Lysandra nodded. "Yes."

“Who shot you Prime Minister?” Jomann asked quickly. “The Kavalians who were here and took the Queen?”

Deia shook her head. “Laustinos.” She replied. “He is... he is a traitor! He had a hand in all this and I never saw it!”

“None of us did.” Jomann spoke quickly. “None of us did. Not even the King or Prince Andro. He was former Krypteria... so it should not surprise us. They are masters at subterfuge and disguise. Armetus made them that way. This is not something you can blame yourself for.” He looked at Deia intently. “Why... why would they take the Queen?”

Deia shook her head slightly. “I do not know. For'mya will give them nothing if they think to torture her for information.” She met his eyes. “The young ones?” She gasped.

Jomann shook his head. “Lady Gorgo and Lady Dasha got all of the young Prince and Princes to Dragon Mountain within minutes. They were all together at the estate which made it easier to gather them. They are safer where they are now than anyplace else in the universe.” He turned to Anicetus. “Get me blankets, pillows, anything. If we can not move her then we will make it as comfortable as possible.”

Deia watched as he turned back to her. “You should...”

“We are in this together Prime Minister.” Jomann spoke turning back to her. “And we will leave together. I need to see to my men but I will return shortly.”

Deia watched him as he squeezed her hand and then got to his feet to move off around the corner. She looked back to Lysandra and saw the young Lycavorian female preparing some medical injections. “He is... he is very serious.” Deia said.

Lysandra nodded. “We have not... we have not lost this many members of our team since the Evolli War.” She stated.

“Where?” Deia asked.

Lysandra looked at her. “Alba Tau.” She answered. “It is where he took command. Our entire company was wiped out except for eighteen of us. Jomann took command then and led us back to our main unit.”

“Alba Tau.” Deia said softly shaking her head slowly. “You... you followed him to the Durcunusaan?”

Lysandra nodded. “Those of us that were left yes. We got replacements and continued the war but we never allowed anyone close to us afterwards. When he got promoted to senior Lieutenant and was asked to become a Durcunusaan officer we all requested transfers to the Durcunusaan. He went to his schools... we got our additional training and then they put us back together when he completed his training.”

“That... that foul nubous planet is responsible for so much agony and grief.” Deia said softly.

Lysandra nodded her head. “It is also responsible for making many of us who we are today Prime Minister; Jomann among them. And Prince Androcles.”

Deia thought of her great nephew Androcles and she nodded. “Yes... yes it is.” She looked at Lysandra. “You know Andro?”

Lysandra nodded her head. “We conducted our last two missions of the war under his direct command. He is ultimately the one who convinced Jomann to accept the Durcunusaan offer.”

“It is odd though that they put you all back together here. That is not normally done is it?” She asked.

Lysandra shook her head but shrugged her shoulders. “Perhaps not... but as Jomann says... fate brought us together and destiny is now writing our path. We only have to deal with the curve balls it throws at us.”

Deia smiled at her now. “Ah... it is so very good to see that faith is still so strong in the younger generations.”

Lysandra smiled as well. “You may be surprised Prime Minister at the role faith plays in many of us. Our faith is what pulled us through Alba Tau ma'am. Our faith in Jomann, each other and the future. That is what Jomann says.”

“Now he sounds like Androcles and his father.” Deia said.

Lysandra's eyes twinkled. “He would be honored that you are comparing him to Prince Androcles.” She said.

“Is he... is he incredibly stubborn... ridiculously laconic and completely able to infuriate you with his common sense?” Deia asked.

“That is Jomann.” Lysandra said quickly with a grin.

“Then he and Andro would get along famously I'm quite sure.” Deia said.

Lysandra held up the hypo. "I'm going to give you several medicines ma'am." She said. "One will fight the infection that is bound to come out because of the projectile still in your body. Hopefully I have got it before it becomes too strong. The second is a blood multiplier that will increase your red blood count and keep it at a high level. It will also help to make your blood a little thicker so that..."

"So that I don't bleed out." Deia said. "I... I have been injured before Lysandra."

Lysandra smiled. "The third is a very mild pain killer. Jomann is right... you need to stay awake as much as possible so that shock does not have time to set in."

"The pain will help to keep me awake." Deia said nodding her head.

"I'm... I'm sorry." Lysandra told her.

"Don't be." Deia told her.

"The last one is to keep your heart rate even." She spoke as she lowered the hypo to her neck and injected it quickly. "When our healing system works overtime it stresses our hearts and makes them work harder. We need to keep your heart rate even."

Deia blinked several times after the injection and then looked at her. "Who yelled?" She asked.

Lysandra looked at her. "Excuse me?"

"It's not my time yet. Wake up. It's not my time yet." Deia said softly. "I heard someone yelling that just before I woke. Was it Jomann?"

"No one yelled Prime Minister." Lysandra told her. "Jomann was dozing and I was trying to clear the ground around you."

"I heard someone yell." Deia said.

Lysandra shook her head. "It wasn't any of us." She answered.

"Oh." Deia said softly. "That... that is odd."

"I'm going to get you some water from the dispenser ... I'll be right back." Lysandra spoke.

"I prefer tea." Deia said softly. "If I am to die... then I will do it on my terms and not someone else's."

Lysandra nodded as she got to her feet. "I'll be right back."

EARTH SPARTA

"...are seeing behind me is the pile of debris three stories high that once was the Spartan Senate Building. We are standing across the street from the main entrance to the King Yelu Memorial Hospital looking westward." Me'alla spoke as she looked at the video drone to her front while Hr'man adjusted the controls from his portable console. She had not changed her clothes after her dash through the Western District of Sparta and unknown to her, many of those watching had switched their Netnews channels to her coverage. She was not speculating about what was happening, she was reporting from her heart and it was coming out in her appearance and how she looked. The Director of Channel 65 had made no move to order her to make herself presentable because she was making an impact as she reported, and making an impact on him as the Director. He had seen many Netnews reporters come and go and not make a large difference, but somehow he knew this female elf was going to make a very large difference.

"The Durcunusaan have shut down an area of five blocks around the Senate Building even as emergency crews from across Earth are rushing in. Sparta as a city is completely isolated right now... with not only regular Spartan units manning the numerous Lifter entrances, but retired civilian forces patrolling the lesser used streets and maintaining static positions along the millennia's old wall that will not allow entry or exit." She waved her hand to the background behind her. "As you can see for yourself, there are what appears to be hundreds of dragons circling Sparta even now and we have personally seen several land near the sight of the building in an apparent effort to begin moving debris with their TK abilities. I can confirm that there are Emergency Infrastructure Crews from Athens entering Sparta now to begin working with Sparta's EIC office in removing debris and saving as many lives as possible. This is an event that has not happened in over three thousand years as there is a very large competition between the two cities in regards to the importance of Earth history. It only goes to show how much the Lycavorian Union has grown in recent years, and how much the people of Earth have come together."

The male voice broke in from somewhere and those watching heard the question. “Is it... are you able to confirm if what we have been hearing is true Me'alla? Were Prime Minister Deia and Queen For'mya present in the Senate Building when it was brought down?”

Me'alla nodded her head slowly. “I was able to speak with a Senator’s aide that was one of the first to exit the building before it came down. He did confirm that a Durcunusaan detail under the command of a Captain Jomann entered the building in an effort to evacuate the Prime Minister and Queen. No one has heard from them since the collapse and considering that many of the Durcunusaan present are from the Hippies Selda, we can only assumed that they too were inside.”

“Is there any word on the number of those who may have been inside the building?” The man asked.

“As you know Robert, during the six month exodus to Earth for the Royal family, many of the Senators move their offices from Apo Prime to here. Those who are senior members or members of the several committees. On any given day there could be upwards of ten thousand men and women inside the building. We can only hope that given the relative early hour of the day that many were not inside.” Me'alla answered.

“Is there anything coming out from the Royal family’s spokesmen?” Robert asked and it sounded as if his voice was tense and growing anxious.

Me'alla shook her head. “At this time no.”

“What about the reports we’ve obtained about other attacks across Sparta apart from the assassination of the King and the attack there on the Senate Building?” The man asked her now clearly exasperated. “Can you confirm any of that information?”

“We can confirm that Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Star Colonel Isra are here in King Yelu Memorial hospital at this time. They arrived with Queen Aricia who was immediately transferred to emergency surgery.” Me'alla answered quickly. “This was a coordinated strike against specific targets, and it appears as if the Royal family and those closest to them were the main focus of the attacks. The Kavalian embassy has been surrounded by a full Mora of Lycavorian Spartans, but I do know that no move has been made against the embassy itself.”

“Is that because of some political decision made by someone or simply because there does not seem to be anyone who is in command at this time?” Robert asked. “Do we know where the King’s children are? Have they been targeted as well?”

Me'alla shook her head. “It is my understanding that most of... most of King Leonidas’s older children left Earth shortly after the High Coven terrorist attacks.” She answered quickly. “The Durcunusaan undoubtedly have secured the younger children and spirited them off to unknown locations for their own safety. Admiral Riall and General Vengal are present in the area and it is been rumored that the Feravomir arrived a short time ago on Dragon Elder Mother Arzoal. There has been no word of the older children or their location and whether or not these attacks have happened wherever they may be.”

“But to your knowledge no one has been speaking of Crown Prince Androcles or his stepping forward to assume power with the death of the King? Is he being considered or will he be passed over for Prince Resumar who is known to be more moderate in temperament and such?” Robert asked.

“No... if that is happening... we have heard nothing in regards to it. However, I doubt sincerely the Durcunusaan would allow that information to get out until it is already done, and I do not believe the Crown Prince will be passed over. It is well known that the King has been grooming him for the last few years in political matters, and while Prince Androcles is the hardest to obtain information on, at least for the Netnews, he is by no means inaccessible as our very own Thomas Roan and Dilaen have discovered.” Me'alla said.

“Me'alla is there any truth to the rumors that father and son had a falling out and that is why he left Earth after the Coven attacks?” Robert asked.

Me'alla looked at her video drone and though she could not see the face of the human reporter asking the questions, he could certainly see hers. Her eyes narrowed and the corner of her mouth twisted up in an angry snarl.

“I have not heard these rumors...” She snapped. “But I sincerely doubt there is any truth to them.”

“But we don’t know for sure?” Robert asked once more. “These actions could be a prelude to an all out attack couldn’t they? Where is Prince Androcles? Shouldn’t he be here to assume power in such a vacuum? And if he is not on Earth... why not?”

“No we don’t know for sure!” Me'alla snapped. “And we should not speculate about something like that!”

There was a pause on the other end that caused Me'alla to look to the side at where Hr'man was sitting and those watching didn't see the shrug he gave her as he monitored his console. The new voice to come on was female.

“Me'alla... it is Lindsey Warren now. Bob had to cut to another channel. Are you aware if contact has been made with any of the Queens who are off world? We know for certain now from our sources on Hadaria that Queen Anja has left Hadaria after being overthrown by hostile members of her own government who were supposedly supported by the KFI. Could there be any connection between that overthrow and these attacks there in Sparta?”

Me'alla shook her head. “If there is... no one is saying.” She replied. “The few Senators and government officials that I have seen and tried to question either dismissed me completely or were very vague in their answers. To be honest I don't believe they were even aware of what has happened on Hadaria.” She replied quickly. “The Durcunusaan is not allowing them access into the areas they have cordoned off to investigate about family or friends that may have been in the building and they were understandably upset.”

“Have you heard about any sort of news conference yet?” The woman asked.

Me'alla nodded quickly. “We were able to speak with Lieutenant Governor Tarifa's senior aide before leaving King Yelu Hospital behind us. He did say he was authorized to tell us a full briefing will be held within the next three hours at the hospital. It appears as if that has become somewhat of an unofficial command post since these events began. We don't know who will be giving it but I'm hoping they'll be able to tell us more than what we now know. It will allow them to get a better handle on the events that have happened. We were heading back inside when Robert broke in.”

“It has been nearly six hours since... since the assassination of King Leonidas Me'alla. We're getting reports coming in now that several sections of Sparta and even Gytheio have been locked down.” Lindsey spoke. “Can you tell us anything about that?”

Me'alla shook her head. “Well... we know most of the King's older children and Lady Gorgo had homes in Gytheio but aside from that the Durcunusaan just are not talking. There is a sense of anger filtering through them that is almost flagrant in nature and Hr'man and I both have been witness to it.” She said. “Getting them to answer questions will most likely be a losing battle.”

“Do you know anything about the four Kavalians that we saw in your footage earlier?” Lindsey asked. “The three men and woman? We know of course that Jalersi'Puat was the emissary from the KFI's leader Prefect Keleru. Press releases handed out when they first arrived stated that the younger man was her oldest son with Marshall Pusintin of the KFI. Another was a co-ambassador to the embassy. They came here to be part of trade talks. The third Kavalian male is unknown to us. They did not appear to be taking part in this attack and in fact we have some clear footage of them protecting Queen Aricia while she was being treated in the field.”

Me'alla nodded. “Yes. I do not know who the larger Kavalian male was but I did see all of them at the hospital. The co-ambassador's name is Jiss and he was standing in the trauma room being treated while two Hadarians were treating a female Durcunusaan troop who was seriously injured. I personally witnessed him refusing to leave the room.” She answered calmly. “Jalersi'Puat and this other Kavalian male were sitting in a waiting room with Durcunusaan Lieutenant Ardis who is the daughter of Star Colonel Isra of Mjolnir's Hand and Lieutenant Governor Tarifa, and another young man. All of them still had weapons with them, so I can only assume that they are in no way involved in these attacks and in fact, as you stated Lindsey, they fought against the Kavalian assassins.”

“Given what has happen Me'alla, it is understandable that the Royal family is in disarray and will not respond to any inquiries, but can you tell us if any member of the Royal family besides Queen Aricia is still in Sparta that you know of?” Lindsey asked.

Me'alla shook her head. “As we are all aware, King Leonidas was very family oriented and the extended Leonidas family is rather small with perhaps a dozen men and women who could actually come and go from the Royal Estate Villa at will. However at this moment, the only two individuals who are considered actual family members are General/Colonel Simpson and the Lieutenant Governor, who the King has always considered his closest brother and sister. General Simpson has sequestered himself away at an undisclosed site with the bodies of King Leonidas and Torma and Lieutenant Governor Tarifa is not taking questions at this time. Even getting close to her now would be next to impossible for she is bonded to a dragon as well and between the Durcunusaan and the dragons that are circling Sparta... well one can reflect on that prospect themselves.”

“So really... we do not know who is in charge.” Lindsey asked. Her voice was even with no emotion in it.

Me'alla nodded slowly. “At the moment Lindsey... at the moment I would say that is probably an accurate statement.”

“...is in critical condition Feravomir.” Marci spoke from the transmission. Helen stood with Riall and Vengal in the hastily set up command center on the third floor of the hospital. Her image was clear but all of them could see the worry on her face and the anger. “They knew who he was and where he lived. They must have been after information. They... they tortured him horribly.”

“How... how bad is he?” Helen asked softly.

“They... they shattered both his legs and left arm.” Marci answered as her lips quivered. “He has multiple deep lacerations across his entire upper body and severe internal injuries. They... they tore his left eye from his head Feravomir!” Marci finished with a growl of fury. “Two of Queen Anja’s doctors are working on him now. They don’t know if he... they don’t know if he will live. It appears the Kavalians have had him for several hours at least.”

“Armetus’s home is not well known.” Vengal spoke stepping closer to Helen. “No one knows who he is. How did they get this information?”

Marci shook her head. “I don’t know.” She hissed. “But I will find out! And I will feed their entrails to the vithin tonashss orbben of Uzu Ozeib 7 when I find them!” (Fucking Rock Spiders)

“Marci I need you to initiate a comprehensive review of all...” Riall began to order her but he stopped when Marci shook her head.

“No Admiral.” She stated plainly. “I have already received my orders. I am taking command of the Krypteria until such time as Armetus returns... if he lives... or I am replaced. I follow the orders of only one man now.”

Helen looked at her. “Who gave you these orders Marci?” She asked.

Marci met her eyes. “Androcles.” She answered. “I am to report to him and only him until further notice.”

“You have spoken to him?” Helen asked.

Marci nodded. “Just before he went to the surface of Iraruzu and then shortly after he discovered his father had been killed.” She answered.

“Iraruzu?” Helen asked. “Why... why would he go there?”

“It is a long story Feravomir.” Marci said gently. “Here on Earth is not the only place the Kavalians have struck. We lost communications with over a dozen of our Drow outposts. Andro’s... one of the Drow assigned to Iraruzu is to be Andro’s mate and... he must have felt something was wrong for he went there instead of to Kranek.” Marci saw Helen’s eyes grow a little wider at this news. “Walter’s ship was shot down there as well. Kavalians had attacked and destroyed the outpost and somehow he got a message to Andro.”

“Dymas?” Helen gasped.

Marci nodded. “I do not know all the details just now but Andro gave me my orders when he first discovered the King had been killed. He is on the HARBINGER and he is heading here to Earth now.”

Riall nodded. “The Captain of the HARBINGER contacted me directly. They should be here very shortly in fact.”

“Marci... Marci what were Andro’s orders to you?” Helen asked softly.

“Do you really wish to know Feravomir?” Marci asked her with a resolute and calm voice. “For you would not approve.”

They all turned when the door to the conference room opened and Tarifa walked in with Isra, Ardis and Karun. Jalersi and Pian entered right after and Helen turned back to the transmission.

“Marci... we may be able to get you more information. Keep monitoring this channel and one of us will contact you as soon as we are able.” Helen said. “And continue with whatever orders Andro gave you Marci, on that you have my blessing.”

“Helen?” Riall gasped as Marci’s image nodded and then faded from view. “Why give her your blessing? We do not know what orders Andro has given her. He could very well have ordered her to send assassination squads into Kavalian space! He could be plunging us into war!”

Helen looked at him. “And he would have my blessing in that as well Riall.” She stated calmly. “And probably every Spartan and Lycavorian under the age of a few thousand years. You know well the loyalty he commands. He is just like his father in that way.”

“That is what frightens me.” Riall said. “I do not fear war with the Kavalians! I welcome it after what they have done! We just need to be...”

“Cautious.” Pian’s voice carried from behind them.

Helen, Vengal and Riall turned to face the new group and Tarifa moved directly into Helen’s arms and hugged her tightly. Tarifa had held back the tears until this very moment and now she let them loose as she sobbed into Helen’s chest.

“I... I can’t believe he is gone.” Tarifa wailed.

Helen held her tightly knowing full well the relationship Martin and Tarifa had. If two people not of them same blood could be closer than Martin was to Tarifa and Daniel Simpson she had not yet met them in person. “He... he is never gone.” Helen rasped out the words even as she felt the tears roll down her cheeks as well. “He is always with us.”

Pian wasted no time and stepped right up to Riall and Vengal. He held out the battered data pad in his hand as they looked at him. “This... this is why we are here.” He stated. “This is why he is dead! Why so many of your people are dead!”

They were looking at him as Vengal took the pad, his dark blond fur matted with dirt and grime and even blood as Jalersi stepped up to his side and pressed her lithe frame against his. Vengal glanced at the pad and his eyes grew wide at what he began to read.

“By all that we hold holy!” He gasped out loud causing Helen to turn slightly while still holding Tarifa and snatch the pad from his hand.

“I will... I will give you any intelligence you wish.” Pian stated. “I will help you in any way you ask of me. My command codes will have been changed by now no doubt, but ask me and I will tell you whatever it is you want to know! They are leading our people to ruin with their actions and I will have no part of it!”

“Vengal!” Helen gasped. “You must contact Dysea and Isabella! You must contact them now! I don’t care how!” Vengal was already moving without a response, his hand coming up to tap his jaw furiously. Helen looked at Pian as Vengal left the room. “He has done this for nothing!” She exclaimed. “There is... there is no way he could ever sit on the throne of the Union! None!”

“He does not believe as you do.” Jalersi stated now. “If he did he would never have started down this path. I did... I did not truly see what kind of man he was until... until I discovered who I was myself when I came here to this city.”

Tarifa stepped back from Helen and looked at her as she reached out and took Jalersi’s hand. “They have... they have proven where their hearts and minds are by standing with us Helen.” Tarifa said.

Isra stepped forward. “And they did so without question or doubt.”

“Karun... he... he has taken Ardis as his wife and mate Helen.” Tarifa said watching her eyes go to where they stood. “Martin... he saw this and he embraced Karun into our family. He saw what was in...”

“Show me!” Helen barked raising her hand to where Karun stood.

Karun looked at Ardis with questions in his eyes and she nodded her head to him. “Open your mind to her Karun. Just as I have shown you. Let her see within Mindvoice what you and Uncle Martin spoke of and shared.”

Karun stepped forward then without hesitation and Helen placed her hand on his cheek, her palm warm against his skin. She closed her eyes and reached out within Mindvoice to catch that small sliver of an imprint she knew Martin would have left on Karun if what they said was true. Her face softened slightly when she saw Martin embrace this young man, and it took on an even calmer expression when she saw and heard what Karun had said to him. As Helen drew her hand away slowly she looked into Karun’s dark blue eyes and saw his father when he was just a boy. As she looked deeper she saw the heart of a Spartan burning within his chest. A heart that had just realized who and what he was and a heart and mind that would forever cherish that one single embrace from an Uncle he would now never get the chance to know.

Helen smiled sadly then and nodded her head at him. “Your... your father has torn apart more lives than you can imagine this day young Karun Leonidas.” She said softly.

Karun took a deep breath. “And I will stand with my family... my true family... and we will take our retribution upon him.”

Helen drew back her hand and squeezed Tarifa tightly. “Retribution?” She said in almost a whisper. “Oh... there will be far more retribution extracted from your father than even I can fathom for what he has done Karun. That I can promise you.”

Karun looked at his mother and Pian puzzled and then turned back to Helen. “What do you mean Feravomir?” He asked.

Helen’s eyes closed once more as she felt it growing stronger within Mindvoice. The tremors were staggering in their power and depth and for a moment it reminded her of that moment in the bunker at SODRAG when she had felt the same thing from Martin. Helen had sworn her life to Martin Leonidas from the moment he had returned to Earth. As she should have served his father as his Oracle, Helen had filled that role freely when Martin had come home. Her bonding with Arzoal had been somewhat of a surprise to both of them, but given who they both were it made sense. She had guided Martin to the best of her ability and like his father he had been taken from her far too soon. She had seen the inside of Martin Leonidas for he shared things with her that no one else knew with the exception of the five woman who ruled his heart and soul. Feeling Androcles now, Helen could also feel the power of Sadi and Carisia, and the growing power of this Ne’Veha and now the fourth woman who would share their lives. No... he did not want to be his father, but Androcles Leonidas was more like him than he would ever openly admit. She opened her eyes once more and looked at Karun.

“As he has always done... your father has failed in his task.” Helen told them as she looked at the ceiling above them. “He would have been forgiven you know.” She said as they all looked at her surprised. “Even after that day his brother would have forgiven him. All he had to do was return home and he would have been forgiven. Martin loved his brother... no matter his crimes he loved his brother. It would have taken time... but forgiveness would have come to Pleistarchus.” Helen shook her head. “Now he should abandon all hope. He sought to destroy his father’s family and instead he has awakened the wrath of the one individual who will show him no mercy or pity or love or forgiveness.”

The door to the conference room opened once more and Riall’s senior aide burst in. “Admiral... Admiral... the Crown Prince has just landed at the Durcunusaan airfield! Netnews Channel 65 had a crew there and it’s possible they are showing his arrival!”

“Damn!” Riall swore turning to the two large monitors that were set up in the conference room. He pulled up the channel and stopped when he saw a clear image of the Senate Office Building and its remains. “Nothing yet but get over there and shut them down! Contact Fache or Thoti and get to the airfield! Keep him out of the sky!”

“Send them Riall... but I’ve already told him to not fly here.” Helen spoke looking at him. “He understands.”

Riall nodded. “Get Fache or Thoti there like yesterday! I want Androcles and his mates covered like blankets!”

Helen shook her head slowly as she turned back to look at Karun. “Your father has left Androcles Leonidas alive... and he has come home now. Your father has succeeded in killing the one man who could have controlled the storm that will now sweep across the stars and shatter millions in its quest for your father’s blood. Woe unto those who stand in his way now young Karun.” She said. “For there will be no salvation from his justice.”

Karun stood a little taller as Helen spoke and he gripped Ardis’s hand tighter in his. “Then I will stand beside my cousin and I will help him mete out this justice!” He spoke firmly. “That is my path now!”

“We shall see.” Helen said softly. “We shall see.”

DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD

The STRIKER DT landed with a feather’s touch and the moment the landing struts touched the ground the massed rows of Durcunusaan troops rushed forward to surround the ship even as the ramp instantly began to come down. Nothing was taken for granted as heavy weapons were deployed all along the airfield; two LU94 Main Hover Tanks were stationed on either side of the landing grid while an LU V24 Mobile Command Center was deployed only a hundred meters away. Nearly three hundred Durcunusaan Troops swarmed around the large ninety meter long STRIKER DT as five figures began to walk slowly down the ramp.

The Netnews crew on the edge of the airfield had been allowed to linger because the area around the base had remained relatively quiet and they were not getting underfoot. While they were set up alongside the civilian terminal of the airfield, they were unaware of the many secrets that were hidden beneath their booted feet. The moment the call came that the Crown Prince was enroute the Netnews crew was forgotten. It just so happened that this Netnews crew was also from Channel 65, the same organization that Me'alla and Hr'man worked for. The human director of Channel 65 was an experienced field reporter who had followed the King in his youth. He felt he knew the Leonidas family very well though he had only met them once. He was also very aware that only his channel had access inside the tight circle around Androcles Leonidas. When Thomas Roan and Dilaen had been chosen to remain with the young Prince they immediately contacted him to ask for employment. After the many leaks from their former Netnews employers, they would not make the same mistakes. He had welcomed them with open arms for he knew as they did, wherever the Prince went, action usually followed.

This Netnews crew had three video drones set up around the terminal to try and catch angles from all sides. They immediately came to life when the STRIKER DT roared in over the top of the terminal and began to settle to the tarmac some five hundred meters away. Powerful zoom lenses brought the picture up close to where the reporter and his three member support team had set up their equipment.

“...get an ID on the ship?” The reporter asked as the ship settled in to land. He was a third generation vampire who had been born on Earth after his parents settled here within months of Earth becoming a member of the Union. They had come from Apo Prime with hundreds of other vampires in a bid to show the men and women of Earth that all vampires were not like the High Coven. Upon arriving they discover that many on Earth already knew that and they happily began to build a life here.

“We’re running it through the system.” The elven technician team leader answered quickly.

“I thought all ships were grounded!” The human technician hissed.

The reporter, Bryce Vossen, nodded his head. “They are... which means whoever is on that ship is someone important!”

“Shit!” The human exclaimed loudly. “It’s the Crown Prince!”

“What?” Bryce nearly shouted.

“It’s Prince Androcles’s ship! The numbers match Bryce!”

It was a snap decision by Bryce Vossen, but it was a decision that was made because of his loyalty and love of his planet. He didn’t know it now, but it was this decision among others that would see Union Netnews Channel 65 leapfrog nearly a dozen other Netnews channels and become the premier source of news for not only the Royal Family, but billions of Union citizens.

“Shut it down!” Bryce snapped. “Shut the drones down now!”

“What?” The elf man gasped as he watched the monitor in front of him and saw the tall figure of Androcles Leonidas with two women on either arm walk down the ramp of the STRIKER DT. Three dragons followed along behind him. He recognized the Crown Princess easily with her stunning golden blond hair and Carisia Moran with her short but incredibly sensual stature. He could only assume the elf female that held the Crown Princess’s hand was Commander Ne’Veha but he had no idea who the tall Drow elf female was that walked beside Androcles on his left holding tightly to his hand while Carisia clung to hers. “Why? Bryce this is the Crown Prince!”

“Think about it Nal’liot!” Bryce snapped. “The Kavalians have killed the King! Queen Aricia may be dead as well! They have gone after the Royal family! If we broadcast that he has returned it could trigger more attacks! They may have people still here and they’ll come after him!”

The man’s eyes grew wider as realization hit him. “Fuck! I didn’t think of that!”

“Record it!” Bryce said. “Record it and send it to the military only! All channels! Route it to Durcunusaan headquarters! They will want it! I will call the Director and let him know what we are doing!”

EDEN CITY COMMAND CENTER

“...Don’t care!” Lynwe snapped angrily at the Dragoon officer. “You tell the Rodnali Ambassador that he can sit his reptilian et'zarreth on the spaceport bench and shu wun ukt rahi for all I care! We have far more important things to worry about than him and his personal problems!” (Ass)(Shit in his hands)

The Dragoon officer couldn’t help but smile at General Lynwe’s less than diplomatic answer. “As your order General!” He barked with a grin.

Lynwe turned back to her senior Drow aide. “Get me a list of all those with access to the Command Center and make sure the Dragoons and Spartans guarding the entrance have it! No one that does not have the authorization is to be anywhere near this building!” She barked.

“Understood General.” The aide said.

“Find me the Spartan Officer who is leading the EDT Team.” Lynwe continued. “I want to know instantly if he finds anything that looks even remotely suspicious. Have...”

“General...” One of the human technicians turned quickly from his chair and looked at her “We’re getting a civilian feed on an authorized military channel! It’s being beamed from Durcunusaan HQ in Sparta!”

Lynwe shook her head dismissively. “I have no interest in civilian feeds!” She barked. “If the Durcunusaan needs me then they can contact me directly on a secure channel! They know what is...”

“General... you are going to want to see this.” The Tech spoke adjusting his controls and pointing to one of the large monitors.

Lynwe was about to protest when her amber eyes fell on the screen. Those same amber colored eyes grew enormous when she saw the footage. “L'Ilythiiri phraktos dumo ussta solen nindel Usstan thun naut kyorlin tajon!” She gasped. (The Drow gods bless me that I am not seeing visions.)

There was no mistaking what she saw however and to say it filled her with wonder and amazement would have been an understatement. The image on the screen was undeniable to anyone.

“Aihola!” Lynwe almost screamed. “Get me Aihola! Transfer this feed to her bunker! Now! Do it now!”

The COM tech had already predicted this and one press of his console was all it took for Aihola’s tense face to come up on another monitor. “Lynwe... what is going on?” Aihola snapped. “I have been trying to contact Tarifa and...” They watched Aihola turn as an aide moved into the scene briefly and her amber eyes watched. Within seconds they were just as wide as Lynwe’s eyes.

“Gi ussta yah!” Aihola muttered out loud. “Lynwe! Lynwe where is this? Tell me this is happening on Earth!” (Oh my god)

“A Durcunusaan feed from the airfield in Sparta!” Lynwe answered. “A civilian feed that is being cross decked exclusively to the Durcunusaan! Aihola... Aihola the Yara Parma speaks of...”

“Is that Daba and the Holy One behind them?” Aihola demanded.

“Yes! You know it is! You are watching what I am!” Lynwe exclaimed. “Androcles has returned and...” Lynwe looked at the monitor once more and saw them standing there. Sadi was on his right holding his hand as well as the young elf female they knew as Ne’Veha. Lu’ria was on his left holding his hand tightly, even while clinging to the shorter Carisia. All of them wore the standard form fitting Mark IV ArmorPly. He clung to their hands tightly and they to him without question; he was whispering to both of them it seemed even as they cleared the ramp of the STRIKER DT and Walter and Daba came more into the picture. Lynwe already knew what Sadi and the others looked like and her gaze stayed on Lu’ria. Her long white hair shimmered in health and beauty, wrapped in velvet colored Drow silk of her family and pulled over one shoulder. They watched as he first nuzzled Sadi’s cheek and ear and they saw her eyes close in delight. Then he turned to Lu’ria and did the same. His nose and lips caressed her four inch high elven ear and they could easily see the expression on her face, her amber eyes closing in bliss in a manner that was far more than normal. Elven ears were an erogenous zone yes, but nothing like what they were seeing, and Lu’ria’s reaction to his simple caress could only mean one thing.

“She is wolf!” Aihola gasped as she came to her feet. “Andro has... he has taken Lu’ria as his wife and mate! He has changed her!”

“Aihola are you sure?” Lynwe asked.

“That reaction to such a simple caress is how I know Lynwe!” Aihola said. “Only a female wolf reacts in such a manner! And only to her mate!”

“Aihola... the Yara Parma...” Lynwe began to say.

“I know well what it says Lynwe my friend!” Aihola spoke passionately. “Dispatch a full Drow Security Detachment to Sparta immediately Lynwe! The most experienced and well trained that we have! I will authorize their flight!”

Lynwe looked at her. “The only one not deployed is the one you trained yourself with Tareif, Martin and Vengal!” Lynwe said. “They were meant for...”

“I don’t care what they were meant for!” Aihola snapped. “Their mission just changed! The future of our people... the future of the Drow just landed on Earth and I intend to make sure the Durcunusaan and Androcles have the additional means to protect that future! Get them airborne within the next fifteen minutes Lynwe my friend! I will let Charles and Selene know and I will contact Panos myself! Quickly my friend... Andro takes after his father in his respect and knowledge of our ways... he will be looking for them quickly to augment Lu’ria’s normal Durcunusaan security!”

“I will have them airborne in ten minutes!” Lynwe announced as she looked at her dear friend. “Aihola you are still...”

Aihola smiled brilliantly. “You need not worry for my feelings Lynwe. Through all the horror that is now happening a single star shines through. A star I will be very proud to one day relinquish my title as Queen to. But not just yet!”

SPARTA KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

No one dared speak.

No one dared moved as he walked down the hospital corridor. He walked in front of the four women in his life now, Sadi and Ne’Veha holding hands directly behind him, while Lu’ria and Carisia were just behind them. That the female Drow was now wolf was not something that went unnoticed either. The Prince’s scent was all over her and it was easy enough for the wolves in the corridors to detect that she had been changed very recently. Andro was focused entirely on one scent, one among the thousands that were present and mixed in with the myriad of hospital scents. He hated hospitals... he had hated them ever since recovering in one after Alba Tau, and he had no intention of allowing his mother to remain here one second longer than necessary. The Durcunusaan had sealed this floor and the floor above and below it for security purposes. As his mother’s scent drew him around the corner he came face to face with Helen and he stopped in front of her, towering over her petite form. There were few who could bring the Crown Prince of the Union up short, and the Feravomir of the Lycavorian people was such a person.

“My mother?” Andro asked softly.

Helen nodded her head and reached up to place her palm flat on his cheek. “She has just finished surgery Andro and she’s sleeping now. She’s weak... but she will recover fully.” Helen answered. “Androcles you...”

Andro lifted his hand and placed it over the top of hers on his cheek. “I will be diligent and wise Feravomir. I will not do anything ruled by my emotions only. You and my father taught me too well for that. And there is far more going on than you know.”

“What do you mean?” Helen asked.

“The Kavalians have struck on Kranek as well as in The Wilds.” Andro told her. “They... they have taken...”

Helen’s eyes grew wider. “Taken what?” She demanded.

“They have taken my mother from Kranek.” He stated. “A battle was fought and they lost... but I don’t believe they were there to destroy Cha’talla’s settlement. They knew we were there... or at least they knew mother and Normya were there. I believe their purpose was to take her no matter what.”

“For what?” Helen gasped.

Andro shook his head. “I don’t know... but I intend to find out. Denali and Cha’talla are going after her and...”

“Do you trust him Androcles?” Helen asked.

Andro nodded his head without hesitation. "He is not the man that all of you remember Feravomir. He is very different. And he has bonded with Vollenth."

Helen's eyes grew wide in shock. "Vollenth!" She gasped. "Then he is..."

"Where is my father's body Feravomir?" Andro interrupted her.

Helen blinked several times. "The... the clinic near the Royal Villa. Torma... Torma as well. Your... your Uncle Daniel has refused to leave him. Isheeni cannot bring herself to go to..."

"My mother For'mya... Aunt Deia?" Andro asked.

Helen shook her head. "I fear the worst Androcles. I can only feel Deia and even that is very faint. I cannot sense your mother at all. You are..."

Andro shook his head slowly. "Like you I can no longer sense the tremors of her within Mindvoice. I will not lose hope Feravomir! The walls of the emergency bunker were built with similar material as in Dragon Mountain. If she is unconscious and unable to focus, this could be why we do not sense her."

Helen gripped his arms tightly now and nodded her head. "Your grandmothers and your younger siblings are safe in the Sanctuary. Gorgo is beside herself with grief and Dasha is just holding it together."

"Do my brothers and sisters know?" Andro asked.

Helen shook her head. "They know something bad has happened but they are not yet strong enough within Mindvoice to detect that..." Helen couldn't help the tears now and she lowered her forehead to Andro's chest. "I have... I have failed another Leonidas." She gasped. "It is... it is the curse of my life! I..."

Andro pulled her back and held her arms now. He stared at her and shook his head. "You have never failed my father!" He hissed. "And you will not think that! You will never think that!"

Helen lifted her hands once more and took his face in her hands as tears clouded her eyes. "Androcles... your mother... she will..."

Andro nodded slowly. "I know." He said softly. "She will follow father into death very soon because they are Anomes. She... she could not live without him anyway. Her heart would be broken and she would be a shadow of herself with him gone."

Helen squeezed his arms once more. "Enough." She said. "Go to her... sit with her for a time. I will have Riall prepare a full briefing for you in the next hour."

Andro shook his head. "I... Elynth and I will go to see our fathers first. We must... we must see to their remains as Talon Guardians." He stated softly. "KertaGai... they will sit with her until I return."

Sadi stepped closer now and gripped Helen's arm. "We are here Feravomir." She said gently. "All of us are here."

Helen smiled as Carisia came around to her opposite side and did the same as Sadi, drawing close to her to give her strength and support. Helen looked at Andro as he took a few steps back.

"I will return in a few hours Feravomir." He said. "Then... then we will move forward. I want to know instantly if they break through to Aunt Deia or if we hear from Denali. I told them Tnobbf."

Helen met his eyes and took a deep breath. She nodded. "Tnobbf." She said softly. "I understand."

Andro turned quickly and began to move back down the corridor. Three Durcunusaan troops began to turn and go with them but Helen's voice stopped them. "No!" She barked. "He and Elynth must do this alone!"

"Feravomir... General Vengal said we are to insure no one gets close to..." The man began to speak.

"Nothing living or dead will ever get close to Androcles or Elynth without them knowing about it now." Helen told him. She looked at Sadi. "He is..."

Sadi nodded with a gentle smile. "Ever since we discovered our SirsanGai and Ilythiiri tessai." She said holding out her hand to Ne'Veha while Carisia pulled Lu'ria close to them.

Helen looked at Ne'Veha and Lu'ria, feeling the growing Mindvoice power within them easily, and also noticing that Lu'ria was now very much wolf and radiating in her beauty and the newfound power that was swirling through her. Helen said nothing but knew she was looking at history in the making before her eyes. Lu'ria she knew, was a pureborn Drow, the daughter of parents who themselves were children of the original Drow that Walter had created so long ago. Looking at all of them Helen could only shake her head minutely. Like his father, Androcles Leonidas had chosen women who were not only powerful within Mindvoice, but women of near unmatched beauty and grace. She could detect his lavender and pines scent so very deeply embedded within the blood of three of them and no doubt Lu'ria would soon be like them as well. Looking at them as they gazed at her, Helen knew she saw the future, and no matter the pain and anguish that filled them now, that future held the promise of being so very bright.

Helen reached out and took their hands. "Come." She said. "Aricia will need those who love her when she wakes. It will make it easier for her to endure what will happen."

KRANEK

"Hello Gareld!"

His eyes fluttered open slowly when he heard the deep voice and they focused on the towering Immortal standing over the top of him. Gareld remembered Phy'iad's officer striking him over the head and knocking him unconscious even as he was watching in horror as Phy'iad carved up his ship with a high intensity laser. The Immortal had hit him harder than he had ever been hit before, but looking up into the face on the Immortal before him, Gareld knew he had gone from a bad situation to a much worse one.

As his head and eyes cleared he shifted his eyes and looked around slowly. He could see dozens of Immortals all around him, most of them armed. He could see elves, vampires and Lycavorians standing all around and Gareld quickly deduced he was outside in a large courtyard area. There was still smoke rising into the sky in the background, and the smell of burned metal filled the air. He looked up quickly as the sounds of fighters filled the area and he watched as three Union TEMPEST fighters sped overhead heading north. His eyes lowered and grew wider as he saw the lithe figure of Esther Suira step up next to Cha'talla and press close to him, her hand spreading out over his abdomen.

"Ah... Esther." Gareld spoke now. "It is a pleasure to see you again. I see that you were telling me the truth when you said you consort with an Immortal. A pity really... you were delightfully tight and warm!"

Gareld's head whipped to the side viciously as Fash'ka's right hand came from the side faster than he could prepare. His face smashed into the side of the pole he was secured too and the blow carried enough power in it to break off his left fang which he involuntarily swallowed. Blood filled his mouth as the stars and bright lights behind his eyes burst forth and pain once more lit off his nerve endings. He didn't see Esther move closer and kneel in front of him. As his head came back around he saw her he blinked several times.

"I warned you that you played a dangerous game with the wrong people Gareld." Esther spoke softly. "You and all of your friends that raped me could not even compare to the way my Blessed Husband makes me feel Gareld. You should hear me cry out in his arms in our bed... you may have actually learned something... but you are too stupid and too arrogant. Your answers to the questions we ask will determine how you die Gareld... but make no mistake... you will die this day."

"Not even a chance at freedom huh Esther?" Gareld asked. "For old time sake?"

Esther chortled with a humorless smile. "You have killed over a thousand of our people and half that of Lycavorian and elf. What do you think?"

"They are not your people!" Gareld shouted. "You are a pureblood!"

"The moment I tasted my husband's blood I became one of them." Esther spoke. "The first time I screamed his name in bliss I became one of them. And the moment our first born son married Normya Leonidas our tribe became members of their family and they of ours! In your greed and arrogance Gareld... you have no idea what you have taken part in or set in motion do you?"

"I will tell you nothing!" Gareld barked.

Esther shook her head. "Oh... you will tell us everything we want to know Gareld. Only the manner in which it is extracted is in question. It is your choice. The men and women around you have already decided your ultimate fate. I'm offering you a painless and peaceful death and an honorable burial. Something you have never done in all your life. I have used what influence I have among my people to keep you from being crucified and left out in the sun to die of Blood Fever." Esther saw his eyes grow wider, but this time in fear. No vampire in their right mind wanted to die of the Blood Fever.

"You see Gareld... your Kavalian friends have taken someone from us. She has become our most dearest and beloved friend over these last months and many in our tribe look at her and see higher powers at work in bringing us together. They see that her daughter marries our son and loves him with all that she is and they see our future in them. Her children you see standing around you side by side with us; they are wolves and they want your blood Gareld.” Esther tilted her head slightly, her long dark hair falling to one side. “As I said... it is up to you Gareld, but the alternative is, I give you to my Immortal husband...” She watched as his eyes went to Cha'talla standing behind her. “If that happens Gareld... if that happens you will realize that there are many levels to pain that you have no idea exist. And I will insure that he sees to it that you experience them all before he allows you to die Gareld.”

“Your threats don't frighten me Esther.” Gareld snorted.

“No... I don't imagine they do. You are too stupid to be frightened Gareld.” Esther told him. “However, they are not threats. They are facts.”

Gareld smiled then. “I don't know why they wanted her! I know what they intend to do to her though!” He spat. “They are going to break her! She's an elf and Phy'iad is going to break her to his will! He is going to fuck her in all of her holes! He is going to fuck her so many times that she will beg him to be her Immortal Master! She will do anything he wants... fuck any number of Immortals he tells her as many times as he demands... all so that she gets his load in her pussy, ass and mouth over and over again for the rest of her life!”

Esther let fly with a crushing right cross that snapped Gareld's head around savagely. “You lie!” Esther shouted. “Dysea is half wolf! She is wife and mate to Martin Leonidas! Phy'iad will never be able to do this! She would be immune to this!”

Gareld spit out blood from his smashed lips and looked back at her. “It's no lie!” He growled back. “I only tell you what the Immortals around him have said! He has a female elf who he broke twenty years ago! She's a doctor... a scientist! He got information from someone that his elf wench figured out. It has something to do with her DNA and the fact her parents were cloned! I don't know all of it... only that she is not immune to the effect an Immortal has when he sprays his cum in her elven belly! She will be his for all time! She will suck or fuck his Immortal cock whenever he demands if she wishes to live! She will...”

The yowl of fury that came out was the most frightening sound many of them had ever heard in their lifetimes.

“NO! NO! NO!”

It frightened Esther so badly she stumbled sideways, which actually cleared the way for the person who let loose with that bellow to step forward. Gareld had been sitting on the hard packed ground, his hands secured behind the pole he was sitting against. His eyes grew wide when Cha'talla's six foot five frame leaned over and grasped his head in his large hands. With a feral snarl of unrestrained fury Cha'talla yanked Gareld to his feet. Gareld's scream of pain as both his shoulders dislocated was drowned out by the sound of popping cartilage and bone and the sound of tearing flesh. The plastic hand restraints twisted and strained against the force before giving way to Cha'talla's Mindvoice fueled strength and snapping Gareld's wrist in four places and peeling off most of the skin of his right hand almost to the bone.

Cha'talla lifted Gareld into the air with the ease of one lifting a newborn baby so great was his anger. Charged by his newfound abilities within Mindvoice, he truly did not know his own strength as Gareld's arms flopped useless at his sides and Cha'talla pulled him away from the pole and lifted him two feet into the air. Cha'talla's eyes were now a burning cobalt blue as his vampire side came erupting outward and time stood still once more for all who witnessed what happened next.

“You vile excuse for a vampire!” Cha'talla screamed as he brought Gareld's body down in a body slam into the hard ground. “You twisted motherfucker! I will savage your friends for what you have done!” Cha'talla yanked him back up off the ground and smashed him into the unyielding pole he had once been secured too. The sound of his skull fracturing was like a gunshot in the now silent courtyard and when Cha'talla yanked his body back, blood and brain matter was staining the thick pole.

“Vollenth!” Cha'talla screamed.

A trumpet of equal anger and hate sounded instantly and hundreds of eyes saw the green and yellow scales of the huge dragon as his wings extended to their fullest with a resounding pop. Cha'talla lifted Gareld into the air with one hand clamped on his throat and he squeezed with all that he was. The gagging noise was horrible, but even worse was the popping and cracking of Gareld's spine as his neck was broken in six different places by Cha'talla's berserker strength. Cha'talla brought Gareld's body smashing back to the ground and more popping and cracking was heard as more bones shattered. With a guttural scream of ferocity Cha'talla pulled his hand back tearing open Gareld's throat with simplistic effort.

“NEVER!” Cha'talla howled into Gareld's dying eyes.

Esther looked at her beloved husband with wide eyes. In all their years together she had never seen him so impossibly enraged. She took a hesitant step towards him... reaching out with her hand.

“Blessed... Blessed Husband?” She stammered. Esther gasped when he looked up at her and his cobalt colored eyes were brighter than she had ever seen.

“I will... I will not allow this!” He shouted. “NO! She accepted us! She accepted us as we are with no fear! No doubts!” Cha'talla looked up further and turned slightly to look at the hundreds of faces of Immortals and Elves and Lycavorians that gazed at him in shock. “Look at us! Look at us! Over two decades we have lived here! Two decades and we have changed who we are! We have changed and we have stayed the same! What we have worked for all these years is upon us! Acceptance! Forgiveness! It is ours! Dysea gave this to us! Normya gave this to us when she became the Blessed wife to my son! She looked beyond our appearance and saw what he was inside! Dysea looked beyond our appearance and saw what was inside us! What was inside my... inside my heart!” Cha'talla looked down at Gareld's corpse and then heaved his limp body into the air and with inhuman strength he tossed the body nearly twenty meters to land against the side of a damaged building.

“She sat with me!” Cha'talla screamed. “She sat with me... a man who tried to kill her and all she loved all those years ago! She sat with me and listened as I poured out to her and my Blessed Wife about what I wanted for our future! For our people! She did not look upon me with scorn or doubt or ridicule! She did not look at me and fear me!” Cha'talla lifted his hand. “She took my hand... she took my hand and asked me to forgive her for bringing these Kavalian dogs here! She asked me to forgive her for bringing this upon our people! This woman who came here with no reason to trust me! To trust us! She believed... She believed even when I did not! Normya believed even when I did not!” Cha'talla cut his eyes to T'lolt who stood a short distance away. “My brother believed even when I did not!” Cha'talla lowered his head unable to continue. Esther stood weeping silently with her hands over her mouth and it was left to a green and yellow scaled dragon to take two huge steps forward and butt his newly Bonded Brother in the shoulder.

Finish it Brother. Vollenth spoke. Finish your words and then let us go and retrieve our Queen and dear friend.

Cha'talla looked up into those eyes and that massive head. He looked up and he smiled as he placed his hand on Vollenth's snout.

“No more!” Cha'talla barked out as he turned back to face those gathered in the courtyard of the settlement. “No more will we remain here hidden to all! No more will I keep us from reaching for our future! Our future came to us the moment my son heard Normya's voice on the COM!”

Esther turned when she heard the murmurs of agreement and she saw dozens upon dozens of heads nodding at Cha'talla's words.

“Our future began the moment Dysea Leonidas called me family! The moment her son Androcles told me we were now family! Dysea called me... she called me family! Her family!” Cha'talla screamed. “That makes all of us her family and every Leonidas that lives and breathes members of our family! Our tribe of Akruxian people!” Cha'talla moved away from Vollenth and looked at his people, his friends and family. “Who among you will stand with me? Who among you will stand with me in the old ways of our people? The forgotten ways! They took her from us... from our tribe! Who will stand with me and move to get her back!”

The surge of bodies, Immortal/Akruxian, Lycavorian, elf, Limian, half a dozen races, they all pressed closer to Cha'talla shouting their support and anger.

“We leave in six hours!” Cha'talla shouted. “I will not stop! I will not show mercy or hesitation! I will retrieve Dysea and return her to us! To her family. Any who stand in our way will suffer beneath our wrath!”

The roar of voices grew even louder and rose to a crescendo when first Denali and Lisisa stepped forward next to Cha'talla. Then came Arrarn and Narice and Toria, followed quickly by T'lolt and Fash'ka. Vollenth and Viera moved forward as gently as possible considering their size, their sons still bounding back and forth between their backs and the charged excitement of the air all around them.

“It starts this day!” Cha'talla screamed. “It starts this hour! Let the word go forth to any who can hear my voice! No more will the Akruxian people wallow beneath the boot heel of the High Coven. No longer will we tolerate the oppressive and cruel rule of the High Coven. No more will we live a life that is not of our making and of our choosing. A life that goes against the very soul of every one of our ancestors that came before us! I will no longer be known as an Immortal! I cast aside that name! I am an Akruxian!” Cha'talla pulled Esther into his arms and laid a blistering kiss on her lips which she reciprocated with every ounce of her being even as the hundreds that had gathered screamed out their approval. After a moment, with a tear filled Esther clinging to his powerful arm Cha'talla looked at his people.

“We are coming Dysea!” He screamed as he looked into the sky. “Your family... your tribe is coming for you! And we will sweep aside all who stand in our way!”

It would stand as the longest and most impassioned plea ever to leave Cha'talla's lips and unknown to him it would reach across the stars and touch over a hundred planets and millions of Immortals scattered across the stars. It would reach them for two reasons. Those two reasons were standing in the back rows of the wildly chanting gathering of Akruxian and Lycavorian. A stunning elf female and handsome human male. It would reach across the stars for the simple reason that Thomas Roan had been directing the video drone for the last thirty minutes while Dilaen walked slowly among the encampment and provided commentary.

Thomas took his eyes off his controls and looked at Dilaen. “I guess this is what you meant by we would always be busy huh?” He asked her.

Dilaen looked at him with a smile. “We are witnessing history Thomas! It's inspiring!” She answered.

“So inspiring that you will marry me?” Roan asked quickly.

Dilaen stepped up to him and pressed her lush elven frame against his firm and muscular human body. “It is about time you asked me that.” She exclaimed. “I did not think you would ever get around to it.”

Thomas Roan shrugged. “I needed to warm up to the moment.” He said with a grin.

Dilaen looked at him with dazzling blue eyes. “I do believe I like how Dilaen Roan sounds.” She said.

“Is that a yes?” Thomas asked.

“Yes Thomas... it is most definitely a yes.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO

CABELIR

KAVALIAN HOMEWORLD

“...Kept his word Prefect.” The Commander of the Puma Bane squad spoke from within the secure transmission. “The extraction went perfectly. The ship was exactly where he said it was and we have just crossed the Union border into The Wilds. We should be able to cross the border into Kavalian space in two days and be to Cabelir within three.”

“She is unharmed?” Pusintin asked leaning forward in his chair.

“Except for a bruise on her head where my men had to strike her.” The man spoke very quickly knowing Pusintin's famous temper had crushed more than one aspiring Pride Officer. “She did not come willingly Marshall Pusintin. She shifted and attacked Laustinos at the last moment when she realized it was Laustinos who helped to kill the King. We had no choice. She is sedated now and will remain so until we arrive home. Laustinos has already implanted the device to negate her Mindvoice abilities and her ability to call her Shi Viska. He did the same with the second female as well.”

“She is not to be touched Commander. I'm changing the plan somewhat and I will meet you just after you cross the border and I will transfer her to my ship.” Pusintin spoke.

“Of course Marshall Pusintin.” The man replied.

“You have done very well Commander.” Pusintin told him honestly. “Very well. The Prefect and I will reward you and your team for your fine work.”

“We live to serve Marshall. Prefect.” The man answered.

“Were you able to determine anything useful before leaving Union space?” Keleru asked now.

“There was not much to learn after leaving Earth Prefect.” He responded calmly. “They had a very effective military blackout in affect once we made our rendezvous with the ship Laustinos commands. Before we left Earth however, we were able to ascertain the success of our operations to some degree.” The Commander stated. “The Elf Queen and Prime Minister Deia confirmed what the Union Netnews was already broadcasting on a live feed by their reaction. The King is dead Prefect. Perhaps even the Queen Aricia. Nothing was said in regards to your daughter or commander Pian Prefect. No doubt when we brought the Senate Building down the Prime Minister was finished as well. Laustinos shot her twice in the chest before that.

Outside of that we were not able to confirm much because I adhered to our own Blackout rule for communications. They have a very effective and sophisticated communications network Marshall... much more sophisticated than we thought and penetrating it without the proper codes is nearly impossible.”

“Laustinos did not have these codes?” Pusintin asked quickly. “He is the Deputy Prime Minister!”

“He has most of them Marshall Pusintin... however even he does not possess the codes for the Durcunusaan’s communications channels.” The Puma Bane Commander stated. “Those are given out only to Durcunusaan members and senior officers.”

“The survivability of our assassination teams?” Keleru asked.

The Commander shook his head. “I fear they are completely lost Prefect.” He answered. “We were able to monitor a civilian channel more than any of the military ones. A Netnews reporter caught most of the action on a live feed as I said. When Leonidas fell, the Durcunusaan that remained flew into a fury the likes of which I have never seen. Civilians were attacking our team along with the Durcunusaan and I truly do not believe any made it out alive. If they did survive then they have been captured.”

“They accomplished their mission.” Keleru spoke as he rose to his feet. “As you have done Commander. And your mission was far more important.” He moved to the counter behind his desk and began to pour two glasses of strong Kavalian ale.

“Prefect... what do we do with Laustinos?” The Commander asked. “The crew of his ship is loyal to him but they are few in number. We could...?” He stopped his words when he realized he was going to question his orders.

“Speak your mind Commander.” Pusintin spoke coming to his feet now.

“He has betrayed his own people Marshall Pusintin.” The man said. “Freely and in some cases with great glee. He killed several aides of his own Senators as we moved to the Prime Minister’s office. Do we trust him? We could take the ship easily if you...”

“No... we do not trust him Commander.” Keleru answered as he came back to stand next to Pusintin and handed him the glass. “However he has done what he said he would do, even more than what we had hoped. And he may prove useful to us in the future.”

“Is that wise Prefect?” The Commander asked.

“No... perhaps not... but we will honor our agreement with him and it may even entice others in the future to take the path he has chosen and come over to our side.” Keleru answered as he looked at him. “And do not be concerned for your words Commander. I have always allowed the Puma Bane Pride more freedom in their actions because it is you who get the most difficult and dangerous missions. That will not change. However... it might be prudent to be mindful of his actions as we go.”

“Very well Prefect.” The Commander said.

“Keep her sedated but guarded Commander... and she is to be untouched.” Pusintin told him. “I will see you in two days at the same coordinates as planned.”

“As your order Marshall Pusintin.” The Commander spoke just before Keleru touched the panel on his desk and the transmission faded. He watched Pusintin turn to look at him and he shook his head. “Your brother is dead... soon you will have his woman and then in a few weeks you will be able to make your claim to the throne of the Lycavorian Union my friend.”

“We’re close Keleru.” Pusintin said. “We’re so close.”

Keleru nodded. “Indeed we are.”

“With the technology they have, the production capabilities... we will be able to destroy the High Coven in months not years!” Pusintin said. “Once the Coven is dead... once they are dead then we can begin our expansion towards the Perseus Arm and beyond.”

“You will be King of the Union Pusintin.” Keleru stated. “You...”

Pusintin waved his arm dismissively. “Bah! I have no desire to be King of the Union! I am no politician!” He spat. “I will let my son rule. This is my home and my people. I can’t abide the stench of the Lycavorians.”

Keleru lifted his glass up. “This is why you never expanded on your abilities with your senses?” He asked.

Pusintin nodded. "I taught Leruk and Kalis as much as I know." He stated. "It does not scratch the surface of what a full Lycavorian could do if they used their senses daily... but I never felt the need to teach them. They are Kavalian as far as I am concerned."

"And this magical telepathic ability they have? That the elf Queen has?" Keleru said. "This Mindvoicing it is called. You can do this but on a limited level?"

Pusintin nodded. "I would be considered a Tier Two if compared to how they rank men and women with this skill. Barely able to control it in many cases. I certainly cannot direct and use it as they do." He spoke. "I was just discovering it when I defected and I have not received anywhere near the proper instruction in its use."

"Yet the potential is there?" Keleru asked.

Pusintin looked at him and nodded realizing what he was saying. "Yes... it is there with the proper schooling and practice."

"And this elven female For'mya? She is one of the most powerful in the Union correct?" Keleru asked.

Pusintin nodded. "If the reports that Laustinos gave to us are accurate yes." Pusintin answered. "And everything he has given to us has been accurate and truthful."

"We can use her to teach your son this ability? Perhaps others of our people who may have this skill." Keleru asked hopefully.

"If we wish... yes." He answered.

"That could work to our favor." Keleru stated. He moved around back to the chair and held out the data pad to Pusintin before he sat down. "This report arrived four hours ago. You were arriving from Neor and monitoring the assassination teams so I handled it. We have heard nothing from Leruk's Puma Bane unit in over twelve hours. They missed their check in time and I dispatched a Puma Bane Company from the detachment we have hidden on Tupacia Prime to investigate."

Pusintin read the data pad quickly. "The Deutrino fields that we were using there must be jamming their transmissions." He spoke after a moment. "No Drow could defeat my son and a company of Puma Bane Shock Troops."

Keleru nodded. "That was my assessment as well... but I sent the team anyway. They were..."

The chime from his desk interrupted him and he got up once more and moved to his desk. "Yes." He said touching the COM panel.

"Prefect... we are receiving an incoming transmission on the secure COM you told us to monitor." The tech spoke. "Prefect... it's coming from a High Coven ship and not one of our own."

Keleru looked up at Pusintin with questions in his eyes. Pusintin shrugged his broad shoulders and shook his head. Keleru touched the panel again. "Route it here Lieutenant." He spoke.

They waited while the connection was made and then the face of the Immortal Phy'iad became very clear. His Immortal features did not equate to pleasant in the least. Pusintin stepped forward quickly with a snarl of anger. "Phy'iad you idiot... you were told not to use this channel unless it was absolutely necessary!"

"It is necessary you fool!" Phy'iad snorted.

"Watch yourself Immortal!" Keleru began to speak. "You are..."

"I do not fear you or your supposed super soldiers Keleru'Puat!" Phy'iad snapped. He saw the surprise on Keleru's face. "Yes old man... I know your name! Did you think I took nothing when I left the High Coven to strike out on my own! I know all about you and what you do."

"What do you want Phy'iad?" Pusintin snapped. "Is your mission complete?"

"My mission is complete Lycavorian traitor!" Phy'iad spat. "I have the Elf Queen... and I want more than what we originally agreed upon! Double in fact!"

"Do not think to blackmail us Phy'iad!" Pusintin barked. "You..."

"I'm only securing my future!" Phy'iad hissed vehemently. "I will need it after what I have seen!"

"What are you talking about?" Keleru asked.

"Have you tried to contact the two Fleet Groups you sent against Kranek?" Phy'iad asked them. "The troops you put on the ground there?"

Pusintin looked at Keleru quickly and then he turned back to the clear holoimage of the disgusting Immortal mercenary. "The Admiral in command of the operation is not due to report in for another three hours on his success."

“Success!” Phy’iad barked. “He won’t report in three hours! In fact he will never report again because he is dead!” Phy’iad barked loudly. “All of them are dead! Both of your Fleet Groups are nothing more than scrap metal and space particles now! Your troops on the ground, well their blood runs like rivers in the two valleys surrounding Cha’talla’s settlement! Those that survive have escaped into the mountains of Kranek and are being hunted like animals by the forces on Kranek!”

“Impossible!” Keleru exclaimed.

“It is not impossible!” Phy’iad shouted at them. “We witnessed it with our own eyes! Your fleets were attacking when fifty ships I have never seen before, two of them using Quantum Fusion Drive Coils, jumped into the system! These two ships were huge... almost as large as a LEONIDAS IIA! And they began spewing fighters from their bellies like a nest of Fever Wasps! They had incredible weapons, incredibly powerful weapons, and they began blasting your ships from the stars one after the other! They were firing faster than I have ever seen a ship fire! When the vampire fleet arrived over Kranek and they quickly added their own firepower to the battle and it was over from then on.”

“The High Coven?” Keleru gasped.

Phy’iad shook his head quickly. “After what the witch Empress did? I doubt it! They must have been part of the insurgents that have been popping up. She was good at hiding the fact insurgents had become a problem for her! They most likely responded to the distress call from the boy Prince’s ship! The Lycavorians had many dragons on the surface too! Three dozen at least!”

“Dragons!” Pusintin panted. “Our intelligence told us there was only the Elf Queen’s dragon!”

“Your intelligence was wrong!” Phy’iad barked out. “The leader of the team that took the Elf Queen said there were no less than twenty dragons outside the settlement’s defensive wall, and from the transmissions he heard before they took her, there were at least that many on the way! They were stacking your vaunted troops up like firewood!”

Pusintin looked at Keleru. “The Coven dragons!” He hissed. “They must have gone with my nephew when he left Earth!”

“You did not tell me the full scope of your plans Pusintin!” Phy’iad snarled angrily. “You did not tell me you were going to attempt to assassinate the entire Leonidas family! You went after the entire family!”

“It was not something you needed to know!” Pusintin barked back at him. “You are a mercenary! Nothing more! You were being paid well for your part in this!”

“You did not tell me because you knew I would not take the job!” Phy’iad shouted back at him. “I am many things... but even I would not have attempted this knowing what you planned! They revere that man and his family! They worship him! Before you did this I would have had just him to contend with because I took his Elven Queen. He is but one man! But since you have killed him and others of his family... now... now the entire Lycavorian Union will begin looking for me once it becomes known what I have done! I will have to abandon my base and go into hiding now! Somewhere far away until the aftermath of what you have started is done! In order to do that I need funds!”

“You agreed to...” Pusintin began to speak but Phy’iad came to his feet.

“You will give me what I want or I will not fulfill the terms of our agreement!” Phy’iad shouted. “I will release the elf wench here in The Wilds and give all the information I know about what you have done to her! I understand she has quite the disposition when angered. And no doubt she will be infuriated at what you have done!” Phy’iad shouted. “I value my life over a broken female elf!”

Keleru placed his hand over Pusintin’s arm before he could answer. “Very well Phy’iad.” He replied quickly. He looked at Pusintin. “What we gain cannot compare to what he will receive. We need him to provide the catalyst for our plan. We will see to the transfer of funds.” He said as he turned back to Phy’iad. “Were you able to observe and record anything on these new ships?”

Phy’iad shook his head quickly. “They shut down the system somehow. Some form of Hypermorphic Resonation Dampening Field. All of our sensors were useless beyond five hundred thousand kilometers until we left the system. I dared not approach closer for there had to be upwards of a thousand fighters in the stars and I did not want to risk one slamming into us when we were shrouded.”

“Hypermorphic Resonation... that kind of technology is not possible. It doesn’t exist!” Keleru stated.

“To you perhaps...” Phy’iad snapped. “Not to the Lycavorians it seems!”

“What else?” Pusintin demanded.

“What else? That is not enough? I did not remain long enough to study the slaughter that was going on!” Phy'iad spat at them. “I am on my way back to my base! I have made several alternate Jumps to throw any followers off my tail if I was detected. I should return to my base within twenty hours! After that you will have three days to complete our business or I will remove the devices you gave me to inhibit her Mindvoice abilities and keep her from calling her Shi Viska. Then I will let the Elf Queen go with all the information I have on your part in this! What do you think the Union Senate will do then huh?”

“You will have your credits Phy'iad!” Keleru hissed.

“Make sure of it Kavalian dog!” Phy'iad spat.

Keleru snarled as the transmission ended and he looked at Pusintin. “What... what ships could destroy two Fleet Groups Pusintin?” He asked quickly. “Do they have that kind of technology?”

Pusintin shook his head. “None that I have been witness too.” He stated. “Laustinos has told us that the majority of the advances they got from this mysterious and magical ship they discovered on Lycavore have gone towards improving the lives of their people.”

“Would your brother have sanctioned development of warships that could do what Phy'iad described?” Keleru asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “He would never be able to get something of that nature through the Union Senate. That I know for a fact. He may have brought the instinctive nature back to the Lycavorians, but the Union Senate is made up of far more species that do not like war and do everything to avoid it.”

Keleru nodded. “Yes... the Folcani among them.” He said turning back to his desk. “It seems Laustinos will continue to be an asset. He would know about these ships or at the very least how they were built.”

“As Deputy to Deia he would have to know.” Pusintin agreed.

“Send a recon ship to confirm what Phy'iad has told us.” Keleru ordered. “They are not to attempt to enter the system, only get close enough to take long range scans.”

“And if they are discovered by a Lycavorian ship?” Pusintin asked.

“They are not to engage.” Keleru told him quickly. “The purpose of what we have done is not to start a war! We must avoid conflict at all times now. We have completed what we set out to accomplish with surgical strikes against his family. Nothing more! Once we have this Elf Queen For'mya and the elf parliament on our side we can negotiate from a position of power. Once we reveal what our ultimate goal is, they will have no choice but to listen to us and forestall any type of military response they may already be planning. That is where Laustinos will continue to be an asset. He can help convince those he has said are not happy with many of the things your brother was doing.”

Pusintin nodded. “No doubt they are already confused because we are not pouring across their borders in three or four locations.” He said thoughtfully. “I would guess that is why our outposts and patrol ships are reporting no unusual activity.”

“Destroying that Immortal pig Cha'talla was never part of the main plan... only an added bonus. Phy'iad has the Elf Queen so that phase is still very much intact.” Keleru spoke. “We did not... we did not anticipate losing two Fleet Groups around Kranek, or the troops on the ground but they are secondary to our main goals.” Keleru looked at him. “You sent older clones and those with questionable loyalty correct?”

Pusintin nodded. “Yes.” He replied. “I don't believe they caught on to that fact... most of them were from the Motershi Pride. They are not the quickest of the Prides and their Pride Leader has questioned you in the past.”

Keleru nodded his head. “Ah... well done Pusintin. Well done indeed. I will inform Dotatu Motershi of the great battle his Pride took part in and how, even in defeat they proved themselves to be formidable and loyal Kavalians.” Keleru moved around his desk to stare out the window in his office. “The first part of this operation we knew would be the hardest. Now we reign in our claws and insure that you are reinstated to the throne of the Union.” He looked at Pusintin. “Speak with Laustinos when you meet with him. Offer him a position within your ruling council or some silly thing like that. I have a feeling he will jump at the chance to remain on the forefront of events and though he is a traitor... his knowledge of the Union Senate and their nuisances could be invaluable.”

Pusintin nodded with a smile. “I will see to it.” He said.

Keleru met his eyes. “What else?” He said. “You have that look in your eye.”

“The Puma Bane teams have been unable to locate Nikkei.” He said. “It is as if she has vanished from KFI space. There are outstanding alerts for her at all spaceports but nothing has been reported in over a week since her disappearance.” Pusintin looked at him.

“She will turn up somewhere Pusintin.” Keleru said. “A young woman of her beauty will attract attention no matter where she goes.” He told him. “It was Athani’s and Jalersi’s curse as well. Sooner or later she will appear and they will take her.”

Pusintin nodded. “You are right.” He said. “I want to bring Kalis into some of our more confidential meetings. He will play a large role when we make our move against the Union and I want him to understand what he will face.”

“Of course. Have him report to me and I will begin instructing him.” Keleru said. “He is my grandson after all.” Keleru moved to his chair and sat down. “Admiral Menot reports that our plans for Hadaria are moving along quite well.” Keleru looked at him. “They have not discovered how we are using their own Jump Gates against them?” He asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “Not yet.” He answered. “I’m only deploying Fleet Groups one at a time to avoid stranding too many ships inside Union space if they suddenly decide to shut the Gates down when they find out. He has half a million troops already on the ground and nearly a thousand ships in the system right now. It’s getting crowded around Hadaria so I have begun shifting some of them back and forth to keep our true numbers from being discovered.”

Keleru nodded. “Tell Menot he is to proceed as planned.” He spoke. “But do so in a somewhat civilized manner. This Buonau woman struck me as the type to do whatever it takes to hang onto power... Menot can use that. The other one... Wiktor... she seemed more hesitant and cautious in her actions. She may need to be broken. Tell Menot he is there for a reason and that is because he is one of our smarter Pride Leaders and officers. He can still be replaced... so he needs to be mindful of his tactics.”

Pusintin nodded. “I’ve already told him this... but I’ll remind him again.”

“I want these Hadarian Healers to begin to move to our main field units within three weeks time.” Keleru said. “When they are not acting as nurses... they can entertain our troops in the field, but they are not to be harmed in any way by some fool soldier in rut! Make that very clear!”

“I will.” Pusintin said.

Keleru looked at him and saw him fidgeting on the balls of his feet. He nodded his head because he knew why. “Go Pusintin.” He spoke. “We can cover the rest after you have checked on your son.”

“Pusintin met his eyes. “I have another son... I can wait.” He stated. “It is not...”

Keleru held up his hand. “They are the only two of your four children with my daughter who have not betrayed you. In part because you have spent more time with them. They are fine and loyal Kavalian warriors of your father’s Pride and they are sons. Go. Whatever we have left to cover can wait until you discover what is going on.”

Pusintin nodded. “Thank you Keleru.”

“I had sons once.” Keleru said softly. “Now go!”

KRANEK IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

Eliani walked toward the rear of the STRIKER DT with the senior female medic from Admiral Esavorna’s forces that had come to the surface. She was exceptionally skilled and was very well versed in not only Lycavorian and Immortal anatomy, but also many other species. Eliani had helped her to arrange and set up the Blood Vats for the seriously wounded Immortals with ease for she had plenty of experience with using the same equipment within the Union. It also helped that the medic knew very well who she was and the fact that even within Coven space Eliani Leonidas was widely recognized as the second or third most powerful Hadarian Healer depending on who you talked to.

“...in the tanks for at least another ten hours.” Eliani was saying.

The medical officer nodded. “I was going to say another twelve just to be safe.”

Eliani nodded in agreement. "You'll be here and you can make the call. Most of those seriously injured are stable now. When the Spartans feel they have the strength to shift go ahead and let them, just keep an eye on their vitals."

"Shifting allows them to heal more deeply than what you can do?" She asked.

Eliani shook her head. "It is a pride and honor thing." She stated. "They won't shift unless they feel they are able, but once they do you'll notice their strength will return to them ten times quicker."

The young woman smiled with a glint in her eye. "I have never seen a Lycavorian shift in person." She stated. "It will be fascinating."

"Do not hesitate to contact me on the SCIMITAR if you have any questions." Eliani told her. "I can..."

They both turned when the rush of air passed over them and the silvery violet colored scales of Vincix settled to the ground not far away. The young vampire took note of Eliani's eyes as she gazed at the dragon and rider and she knew immediately that this was something else.

"I will contact you if I need you Princess." She spoke. "I hope to work with you in the future."

Eliani nodded and gave her a small smile as she turned and headed off. She turned her head back and watched as Malic's powerful form crossed the distance to her quickly, stopping in front of her and removing his helmet. Eliani had heard everything he had told Nyla when she had been injured, and she knew from experience that he and Nyla would now be connected even more deeply because she took so much of his blood to heal herself. She could feel the sadness of her vampire lover within the bond they shared but she shut it out quickly.

Eliani should have been enraged that Malic had allowed Nyla to feed so deeply on her blood. The wolf inside her should have been screaming out in anger that another woman now had staked a claim to the man she thought was her mate. The man she thought was her anome. Malic had bitten her yes, and Eliani hadn't hesitated in the least when she bit him back, sharing blood as he erupted into her body. Yet as she watched him move up to her, she didn't feel anger at him. She didn't feel anger at Nyla. She still loved them... yet for some reason she felt them slipping away from her and she didn't know why. She felt them slipping away from her but she did not feel like she thought she should feel knowing this was happening.

Malic stopped and dropped his eyes to her. "Eliani... what... what are you doing?" He asked.

"Andro needs me to return and treat my mother." Eliani said.

"Nyla needs you here." Malic said softly.

"I checked on Nyla already Malic." Eliani answered. "She is... she is going to be fine. Arydun as well. I need to return home now."

Malic stepped closer and his driftwood scent filtered into her nose. She gazed at him with her fern green eyes but she did not feel what she had always felt when she looked at him and could smell him so close to her. His words to Nyla on that field rang in her head, but once more she did not feel anger or jealousy. She just felt empty.

"You are my wife and mate." Malic spoke urgently. "I need you here. We need you here with us."

"My family needs me now Malic." Eliani spoke softly.

"Eliani I..."

Eliani stepped closer to him, inhaling deeply of his scent, but still not experiencing the familiar sensations sweeping through her as she had before. She placed her small hand on his broad chest and looked up into his eyes. "I heard... I heard what you told Nyla Malic." She said softly. "She was in such pain she couldn't block it from me, and you were so overcome with worry that your shields came down almost immediately."

"I was terrified I would lose her!" Malic said. "I... I was terrified we would lose her!"

"But you cannot deny that she came first in your thoughts." Eliani said.

"Eliani... I... I love you both." He said firmly.

"Do you Malic?" Eliani asked him gently. "Or do you think you love us both?" He began to reply but her fingers came up and went to his lips and she shook her head. "I... I am not angry Malic. I could never be angry with you. Or with Nyla." She shook her head. "I think... I think I just need time to try and figure this all out."

"So you are leaving to do it?" He demanded his voice rising slightly.

Eliani looked at him. "Yes." She stated with conviction. "I feel that with everything that is happening... with my father..." Eliani choked up for a moment and he moved to pull her into his arms but she placed her hands on his chest and held him away. "I need to be with my family Malic. My father is dead... one of my mothers may be dead as well. Another has been taken from us. It is too much! I need to focus and..."

"You cannot focus here?" Malic asked. "With us... with Nyla and me. Your mates? You cannot focus with us?"

Eliani looked at him and dropped her arms from his chest. "You and Nyla are part of why I feel this way Malic! Your words to her... what happened between you! I can't just dismiss that Malic!"

"Why not?" Malic hissed. "It... it does not change how I feel for you Eliani! You are still my wife and mate!"

Eliani stepped back from him now and shook her head. "Yes... yes it does change things Malic, and you know it. It changes what I feel... and that is what I need to think about. To understand."

"What is there to understand?" Malic asked. "We are soulmates! Anomes!"

Eliani shook her head. "We... Malic that isn't possible. If that were true... if that were true then how could you have told Nyla what you did? If you were my soulmate... my anome... you could not have told Nyla what you did!"

"I could not let her die!" Malic shouted.

Eliani nodded. "I know." She said softly. "And that is why I need to leave and go home. I need to be with my family and try to sort all of this through. My family needs me... Andro needs me now."

"You can do that here!" He spat. "With us! We can sort through it together! You do not have to leave!"

"No... this is something I need to do myself." Eliani told him as she began backing up towards the STRIKER. "Take care of Nyla. I will be back Malic, I will be back. And then we will decide what to do about the future."

Malic reached up to grab her but she sidestepped his hand and turned to run for the STRIKER before the tears came. He watched as she moved directly into the arms of her sister Zarah and Lucia as the ramp rose. He watched as the ship's engines grew in power and then it began to lift off.

Malic watched all this and wondered why he suddenly felt relief that she did not stay. Relief that she did not press him more on what happened.

And Malic wondered why her soft willow and peach scent no longer tickled his nose as it had before.

KRANEK ULU ARIZONA

Miranda walked evenly onto the bridge with E'dira beside her as she had been for the last dozen or so hours. After Zaala's outburst it was pointless to try and hide the growing desire and feelings between them. The entire bridge crew had seen and heard this and no doubt by now it had already made its way throughout the entire ship. Within seconds after Zaala announcing that to all who could hear, Miranda Lorian found she was not in the least bit ashamed. She had denied herself too much for far too long. Having Zaala and Steven, Janon and now E'dira all around her had instilled that sense of family again. And it was even deeper than it had been before. Having Androcles Leonidas say what he had said pretty much announced to all where Miranda stood in the larger scheme of things. There were very few men and women who were considered a part of the Leonidas family that were not actually blood related, General/Colonel Daniel Simpson and Lieutenant Governor Tarifa being the most prominent. Miranda Lorian had now been elevated to a similar status by Androcles's words, and it was something she embraced completely, just as she now embraced her growing desire and love for the stunning Drow elf who walked beside her.

While it was the same for E'dira, she still held a large amount of fear in her for what Miranda would discover. Would she accept E'dira as she was, or would she shun her and turn her away? E'dira knew it had to happen soon, for she could not stay on this ship if Miranda turned away her affections. Better to discover it now than to discover it after she had fallen more in love with her than she already was. The problem now was trying to find a few hours alone with her so that they could discover each other.

"We have recovered the last our of aircraft." E'dira was reporting to her. "What minor damage was done to the ships of our Attack Wing has already been fully repaired as well. The SCIMITAR and her remaining Strike Wing have departed for Earth and NORMYA'S LIGHT'S FG will arrive in two more hours. Admiral Thodias must have contacted them before the attack. Or Prince Androcles did as he was returning to Earth. Steven reports we have eleven damaged fighters but we are ready to depart ourselves.”

Miranda nodded. “Good.” She stated confidently. “Let Colonel Randall know that I want all the damaged fighters fully repaired by the time we get back to Earth! We...” It was a useless order Miranda knew and one that E'dira probably would not pass on. Miranda was in an angry mood at what was going on around her and she wanted to go with the team to rescue Dysea. She wanted to go with them and take out her anger on those who would hurt the people she now considered her family. She met E'dira's amber eyes. “That was a stupid order wasn't it?” she asked softly.

“You are the Captain Miranda.” E'dira told her. “The Colonel will know this and...”

Miranda stopped walking and turned to face her, gazing into those beautiful amber eyes. “I'm not going to hide what I feel E'dira.” She said softly. “Not for you... not for what is happening now. I've held in my feelings for too long as it is. Too much has passed me by because of it. The others I expect to say what you just said... but not you. I need you to be brutally honest with me.”

E'dira's amber eyes twinkled in the light. “It was a stupid order.” She stated with poise.

Miranda nodded. “Thank you.” She said. “Forget that I...”

“Captain Lorian!” The Sensor Chief turned from her triangular shaped consoles. “Captain our lateral sensor array just detected a concentrated subtronic scan of our hull.”

Miranda and E'dira both turned and looked at her. “Source?” Miranda barked.

“Admiral Esavorna's ship Captain.” The tech answered.

E'dira was already moving to her tactical station and she replaced the Lycavorian who had been sitting there. Her hands danced across the consoles and she nodded. “Confirmed.” She echoed. “A twenty second subtronic scan of our hull.”

“The effects of the GWG have dispersed enough to allow that?” Miranda asked.

E'dira looked at her. “Either that... or the sensors on these Coven ships are stronger and more advanced than we first thought.”

“Your opinion Chief?” Miranda asked.

“They are more advanced Captain! The scan was concentrated and precise. Within five micropulses Captain. Not exactly something you would expect after we scrambled the entire system unless their sensors were more advanced than the Kavalians and shielded somehow from residual effects of the GWG.”

“E'dira?” Miranda asked as she moved to her chair.

“I agree.” E'dira answered instantly.

“Shit!” Miranda swore loudly. “Well... we'd be fools to think they haven't developed good equipment over the last two decades. What is the name of the Captain of the Admiral's ship?”

“Drdanu.” E'dira answered. “Lirur Drdanu. His ship is the BEL'LA D'VENORSH. The Honor of Silence.”

“Get him on the COM!” Miranda snapped as she settled into her chair. “I don't like people taking pictures of our baby when she isn't expecting it. They'll get her bad side.”

Miranda saw E'dira and several others smile to themselves and she allowed herself a small grin as well. She had to in order to break the foul mood she was in at what was happening around them. It worked she saw and she began to relax a little more.

“The BEL'LA D'VENORSH is responding Captain!” The COM officer stated. “Captain Drdanu.”

Miranda watched as the man's face appeared in the holoimager and then expanded to include his body. He was sitting in his own command chair and they could see the rear of the BLOODLETTER-Class's bridge.

“Captain Lorian!” Lirur exclaimed. “I am honored! What can I do for you?”

“Captain Drdanu... considering what is going on at this moment you will forgive me if I do not ask pleasantly.” Miranda said leaning forward in her command chair. “Someone on the BEL'LA D'VENORSH just conducted a subtronic scan of my ship. You will have to pardon me if I skip the bullshit and demand that you surrender this scan immediately.”

Lirur looked at her from the transmission with an enormous amount of confusion as he came to his feet. “I assure you... I ordered no such scan Captain Lorian.”

“Captain... the sensors on my ship are far more advanced than anything you have ever seen.” Miranda told him. “In fact... my entire Attack Wing is more advanced than anything the High Coven has. You know we exist now... when most of the universe does not. I could tell you what color your pee is the next time you take a leak if I wanted too. Please do not take me for a fool. The BEL'LA D'VENORSH conducted a twenty second subtronic scan of our hull and I must ask you to return that scan to us and delete it from your logs and databases.”

“Captain Lorian... I have no idea what it is you are talking about!” Lirur stated quite indignantly. “I gave no such order and I resent you implying that I did and that I am lying to you.”

Miranda came to her feet now. “I really don’t care what you resent Captain.” She said. “I am not in a particularly good mood right now as you no doubt understand. I will only ask one more time and then I will contact Androcles Leonidas. I can guarantee you Captain... if I have to do that... then Androcles will order your ship destroyed. He is not a forgiving person. And if we destroy your ship... we’ll end up having to destroy the rest of your forces as well. Do not think for an instant we cannot do it Captain. We were already well on our way to beating the fur off the Kavalians before you arrived! I do not wish to do that considering the gains we have apparently made up until now. In fact it would be a downright shame.” Miranda met his eyes. “However... I will do it... and I won’t blink when I give the order.”

Lirur turned to the side in the transmission. “Do a diagnostic of our sensor logs!” He barked. “Full spectrum! Has anyone accessed the arrays since we have returned from the surface?” He turned back to Miranda. “You will find Captain Lorian... I am a man of my word! I would not endanger anything that Admiral Esavorna has begun and...”

“Captain...!” The voice carried through the transmission causing him to turn once more. “The port side dorsal array was accessed six minutes ago from the Astrometric compartment! A subtronic scan was ordered and executed sir!”

Lirur’s face twisted into an angry snarl. “Confirm that!” He barked.

Miranda turned to look at E'dira. She left her chair and came to stand next to her quickly. “He didn’t know.” E'dira whispered to her.

“You’re sure?” Miranda whispered back.

“I have seen enough men and women lie in my lifetime, and then get caught in those same lies.” E'dira said. “He did not know.”

“It’s confirmed Captain.” The voice spoke from within the transmission.

“Who ordered such a scan?” Lirur snapped.

“Captain Micardo sir.” The voice replied. “His command codes initiated the order.”

Miranda and E'dira both saw the look of disdain pass over Lirur’s face clearly as she shook his head and muttered something they could not hear in the ancient vampire language. They watched Lirur turn fully to someone off to his left. “Get Micardo up here immediately! I don’t care where he is! Lock out his command codes from the main computer as well! Did he encrypt the data?”

“Negative Captain!”

“Then delete it!” Lirur snapped. “Delete the main log and every signal trace that it was ever conducted!” Lirur turned back to face Miranda and E'dira. “I must apologize Captain Lorian. It appears the Admiral’s senior aide feels he is above the regulations I have in place on my ship! A situation I will remedy upon seeing him I assure you!”

Lirur’s head turned once more and they heard the voice again. “It’s deleted Captain. I took out the Main Root log and all paths to that file. It never existed.”

Lirur turned back to the transmission and began to speak but Miranda cut him off. “I am indebted to you Captain Drdanu and I sincerely appreciate your compliance with my request. After what we have been through here together it would have been a failure of the greatest sort to lose that.”

Lirur drew himself straighter. “The Admiral is my superior officer and a friend Captain Lorian. I have served with him for nearly nine hundred years. I know why we are here and I know what our future could be like. I will take care of Micardo and I would be honored to fight beside you and your crew at any time.”

Miranda looked at E'dira quickly and then back to him. “As would we Captain Drdanu. As would we.” Miranda said. “ARIZONA out!”

E'dira waited until the transmission had faded. “That went rather well.” She stated evenly but with a trace of sarcasm.

Miranda nodded. “Yes it did fortunately.” She turned to look out over her bridge. “Operations Officer... order the entire Wing to engage their shrouds! We have to wait for NORMYA’S LIGHT’S FG to arrive... but we certainly do not have to provide anymore peep shows!”

“Aye Captain!”

“I’ll be in my Ready Room.” Miranda said. “Inform me when her Fleet Group arrives so we can get underway to Earth.”

“Understood Captain.”

Miranda looked at E’dira. “Commander... would you join me please. I want to go over the after action reports from the Fighter Groups that arrived before we did.”

E’dira nodded. “Of course Captain.”

PHY’IAD’S COMMAND SHIP ENROUTE TO BELID

It had been a harrowing four hours that was certain.

Normya had taken the controls of the SCYTHER-Class Fighter with Cirith acting as co-pilot. As the landing bay doors had opened in the belly of the BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought, Normya had executed a whirling series of maneuvers to get them into position before the LRR arrived. As the doors opened fully, Normya had darted them inside, lifting fully into the bay under full Shroud barely missing the parked hulks of two High Coven fighters. A quick sensor scan determined that no one was in the bay and using the SCYTHER’s maneuvering thrusters she moved them quickly into a rear corner of the massive landing bay and set them down. The bay itself was practically void of any equipment except for the remains of several fighters scattered about. As she and Cirith were powering down the engines the High Coven Runner lifted into view and moved towards a far corner. When they had seen two Immortals dragging Dysea between them and laughing as they pawed her body in very intimate manner. It had taken Tir’ut to wrap his burly arms around his half elf/half wolf wife to keep her from leaving the SCYTHER and exposing them all. It took her several minutes to calm down once they had dragged Dysea from view, and another twenty minutes before she was thinking clearly enough to try and establish some sort of plan.

That plan had been simple and direct. She and Cirith would remain with the SCYTHER while Tir’ut and the five members of Cirith’s Commando team did a reconnaissance of the hanger deck and surrounding area. Tir’ut made her promise to remain on the ship with Cirith until they finished the recon, for if they were caught or revealed themselves in any way, all of them would be killed and all hope for Dysea would be lost. Normya’s conversation with Denali within Mindvoice had been cut off abruptly when Phy’iad’s ship had jumped. She had not been able to tell her brother much other than that they had made it on the ship and would go after their mother. Normya and Tir’ut knew that Denali and Cha’talla would come after them and Cirith had no doubts that her father would send a full force as well. What they decided they needed to do was rescue Dysea and then somehow get off this ship. Normya had to admit Cirith was a godsend to her. The much older vampire female who she now knew had wolf blood within her, had kept her composure and in doing so had reinforced Normya’s confidence as well. Cirith was an enigma Normya decided. If everything she had told them up until now was true, and Normya had no reason to doubt it for she could detect no lie with her wolf nose, Cirith was a paradigm, a model of what should have been many years ago. That she was extremely intelligent was without question in her manner and the way she spoke. Her dark, surreal beauty could easily challenge her mother Isabella in its perfection. She moved with grace and confidence in everything and Normya could not deny the sense of assurance that this brought to her. This confidence and assurance is what kept Normya’s reckless wolf nature in check and she knew it.

The rear ramp was down on the SCYTHER and this is where Normya sat cradling the Immortal SA80 in her hands. They had the proximity sensors set to go off if anyone not wrapped within the shadows entered the bay and it allowed them at least some peace of mind. She turned her head when Cirith returned from the cockpit carrying a simple emergency container of water and two ration bars. As Cirith squatted next to her she held out one of the bars.

“They do not taste very good... but they are nutritious.” Cirith explained.

Normya didn't hesitate and tore open the wrapping and took a large bite of the bar, not realizing her own hunger until just then. "I've eaten... I've eaten worst." She said between chews as Cirith smiled and bit into her bar.

"Flight School?" She asked.

Normya looked at her and nodded. "Escape and Evasion School." She told her. "Six weeks of hell with only what we could scrounge together in the field."

Cirith nodded. "Ah yes. I know it well." She stated. "Ours was only a week longer, but no doubt they taught us the same things as pilots about getting captured." Cirith looked at her then. "Forgive me... perhaps not everything. Having to deal with being captured by Immortals is not something I had to face."

Normya allowed herself a small smile. "Cha'talla is changing that." She stated proudly.

Cirith dropped into a lotus position as she got the opening she wanted and was most curious about. "How... how did you... the half elven daughter of King Leonidas become the Blessed Wife to the son of Cha'talla?" She asked with honest amazement. "I know he is... I know he is only half Immortal... and our sources spoke of the possibility of him and Esther having children... but we never thought it could actually happen. And now... now we see you as their first born son's Blessed Wife. It is a position of great influence within not only vampire society but Akruxian as well as I'm sure you know." Cirith shook her head slowly. "How did this happen?"

Normya grinned shyly. "I was about to become dinner for a Bancorik." She said. "If it was not for Tir'ut I would be dead right now."

Cirith's eyes grew a little larger. "A Bancorik?" She gasped in shock. "How... how did you manage that?"

"It's a long story." Normya said. "Suffice to say... Tir'ut saved my life and as the days and weeks went by and I saw what they had built on Kranek... as I saw that they were nothing like what we had been told they were like, I surrendered to the feelings that had been growing within me for Tir'ut."

"You looked beyond their outer appearance then?" Cirith asked.

Normya nodded. "You have never... you have wolf blood in you but you have never used your wolf skills have you?"

Cirith shook her head. "I am more vampire than wolf... but then again I have never really tried to use the skills my wolf blood might have given me. My grandmother was wolf... but she and my grandfather hid this fact from others so that they could be together. She was only able to teach my father small things in regards to his wolf blood even though my grandfather often did encourage her to show him more and more."

"So you can shift?" Normya asked.

Cirith shook her head. "I do not know. I have seen my father do it twice... but I have never tried. I have concentrated mostly on my Mindvoice and vampire skills so that I fit in more easily among those on Usu Ozeib 7 or wherever we were at the time."

Normya leaned closer to her very much welcoming the opportunity to put aside the anxiety and worry she felt for her mother, if only for a few moments. "A female wolf... we have... we have the ability to know if a man will make a suitable mate by his scent."

Cirith nodded. "Yes... I know that." She said. "My father was able to tell me some things about my wolf blood."

Normya nodded. "Sometimes... not all the time but sometimes, a female wolf will realize by smelling a man that he is truly the one. The one they will spend the rest of their days with. They won't be able to get his scent out of their minds no matter what they do. It was like that for me when I met Tir'ut."

Cirith took another bite of the ration bar and looked at the deck. "I have... I have never been with a man." She stated plainly. "In all my years I have never known a man's touch."

Normya looked at her with wide eyes. "But you are... you're over three thousand years old!" She gasped.

Cirith nodded with a grin. "Amazing isn't it?" She said. "My father thinks I have taken a few men into my bed but I never have. I have had four lovers in my lifetime and all of them have been other women... which was taboo within the High Coven under my mother even though she practiced it herself!" Cirith snarled gently. "I have never longed for a man's touch... not since... not since your grandfather and he died before I had the opportunity to meet him and perhaps begin a relationship."

“You said you were meant for my grandfather and my grandmother.” Normya said. “You... you don’t feel that way towards her?”

“I did at one point.” Cirith answered. “Through the years however... that has drifted away. Now I have an enormous respect and admiration for her that was only amplified when we discovered that Veldruk had held her all of those years and she never gave up hope.” She looked at Normya. “I believe we could be fast friends if the opportunity arose and I had the opportunity to show her that we are not like those who victimized your sister. I would truly like that... but it is up to us to now show you and your family that we are not like my mother and sister. I have every intention of doing my best to see that happen.”

“That is why you... why you allowed me to fly us into this ship isn’t it?” Normya asked.

Cirith nodded. “My father does not outwardly show it... but he has a great deal of belief in fate and destiny. He would not have come this far if he didn’t. He has never wavered from the path he is on and he has instilled this in me. We had not planned on coming forth just yet, but when it reached us that my mother was coming here we decided it was time. We did not know what she had planned or we would have stopped her somehow.” Cirith looked at her. “I cannot begin to apologize enough for the horror your sister went through at their hands, all I can do is promise you I will stand beside my sister Narice in bringing Dante and Yuri to justice. She is your brother’s Blessed Wife now, and knowing Narice she has embraced that to its fullest. She always was different.”

“You have never met her?” Normya asked.

Cirith nodded. “Oh I’ve met her before... but she does not know the truth... though I imagine Toria Dellion will change that. As will your brother. I hope to be able to spend time with her and perhaps become as sisters should be. It is a daunting task I know... but I will try regardless. I am not one to shirk from something I want.”

“No... I don’t imagine you are.” Normya said.

Cirith looked at her. “You are... you are holding up very well Normya Leonidas given what has happened in the last few hours. I know... I know how I would feel if my father was taken from me in such a way.”

Normya took a deep breath but no tears came. She had no more tears to shed and now all she cared about was getting her mother back and making the Kavalians pay for taking her father. “My father’s blood runs strong in all of us.” She said softly as she met Cirith’s eyes. “He is...he was a Lycavorian Spartan to his core. He would expect us... he would expect us to go on as he and our mothers raised us. Blood before all else he taught us. It means many things to us... but we all know most of all it means to make sure our family is safe and secure before we take our revenge. We know that is what our brother will do... and that is what we must do as well.”

“What your father did those years ago?” Cirith said softly. “Freeing Canth’s Mindvoice presence and then going to Enurrua and destroying Chetak for taking your mother from him? Rescuing her the way he did? It made quite the stir among the people I associate with. The devotion and love... to destroy an empire for a woman? It is truly amazing.”

“He would do it for any of our mothers.” Normya said proudly. “Just as we do not distinguish who our mothers are... he never distinguished between his wives and mates. He loved each of them with all that he was and that is why we are so close as a family.”

“What will your brother do Normya?” Cirith asked suddenly.

“I honestly don’t know.” Normya said. “The only one of us who could actually come close to figuring him out is Zarah. She might have an idea. No doubt Sadi, Carisia and Ne’Veha know for they are his wives and mates. I know that as much as he always complained about being compared to father and he kept telling everyone how he was not our father, he loved him far more than even we realize I think. None of us have ever seen him truly angry... and I don’t believe even the Feravomir knows or can contemplate what he will do.”

Cirith looked at her intently for several moments and then reached over to take her hand. “We will succeed Normya Leonidas.” She said. “Our destiny does not lie on this path and we...”

They both turned at the soft rustle of clothing and they saw the five Coven Commandos and Tir’ut unwrap the shadows from around themselves as they came through the active Shroud shield that was still engaged. They scrambled to their feet as all of them began walking up the ramp and Normya moved quickly to Tir'ut who wrapped his arms around her tightly. He leaned over and firmly nuzzled her two inch high elven ear, making her melt against him more, and her head against his broad chest.

“Lancy?” Cirith spoke as the senior Commando walked up to her. “What did you find?”

“We moved five decks up Lady Cirith.” The man spoke in reply. “The SCYTHE's sensors were accurate. There don't appear to be more than five hundred or so Immortal's onboard. Our portable sensors did not detect any until just below the detention cells on deck twenty-seven.”

“That is where they have taken my mother then?” Normya asked.

“That would be the safe assumption Lady Normya.” Lancy answered turning to look at her.

“I could not sense her within Mindvoice Il darthirii kal'daka. Not even a whisper.” Tir'ut spoke. “They must have placed powerful psychic dampeners around the cell she is in.”

“This means they have been planning this for a while.” Cirith stated quickly. “Your father and mothers were regarded as some of the most powerful Mindvoicers in the universe Normya, even by us.” Cirith said. “They would have to make some serious modifications in order to block out the tremors her presence in Mindvoice would make.”

“Series Nine Dampeners.” Lancy spoke looking at Cirith.

“Yes.” Cirith said. “And the Kavaliens were able to get their hands on the blueprints for the Series Nine when all of those senior officers defected at the beginning of the war. They must have placed them around the cell she is in.”

Normya shook her head quickly. “Even with psychic dampeners Tir'ut or I should still be able to feel something from her Cirith. She helped us to establish a link with Tir'ut's brother on Belid and it made us more attuned to each other. If Tir'ut and I can't feel her then they have done something else.”

Cirith looked at Lancy intently. “There is only one other way that they could hamper her Mindvoice abilities to this extent.” She said.

Lancy didn't flinch from her gaze. “It would explain a lot Lady Cirith.” He stated. “And they did raid our facility on Ugmor Five six years ago.”

“What?” Normya asked insistently.

Cirith looked at her. “The Mindvoice ship on Nuwaroa. It is only a third of the size of the ship your father found on Lycavore, but inside that section were several rooms that prohibited all forms of Mindvoice abilities.”

Normya nodded quickly. “Yes... Dragon Mountain has these rooms as well.” She stated.

“Dragon Mountain...” Cirith exclaimed as her eyes grew wider. “Of course! All these years and we have never been able to pinpoint the location of this ship and your father hid it right out in the open! The mountain on Sardinia, the one where your dragons live. That is the Mindvoice ship itself! That is why she attacked it!”

“Dragon Mountain is the most secure area on Earth.” Normya said. “No one who is not supposed to be there will ever leave the mountain alive. Between the defenses Avi has put in place and the dragons living there it would be an impossible task.”

“Avi?” Lancy asked looking between the two women.

“The ship's Avatar Lancy.” Cirith said. “The MV ship on Nuwaroa had indentations in parts of the hull that appeared to be alcoves of some sort. Alcoves for...” Cirith looked at Normya now her eyes wide. “Wait... if you know of the alcoves then... your ship's Avatar still functions?”

Normya nodded. “Yes... he functions quite well in fact.” She replied. “He had a hand in our schooling as we were growing up.”

Cirith's face was animated and she smiled. “Oh I would like to meet him one day.” She said. “He must be fascinating! To have so much knowledge of the Pralors and...” Cirith stopped and shook her head. “I'm rambling now... forgive me! My mother... she was working on a device that she had constructed from plans she discovered in one of these rooms. It was based on the same concept as these rooms and could completely inhibit Mindvoice abilities and block the unique resonance of an individual until it was undetectable. It also had the side effect of effectively neutralizing a male wolf's aura. That was not foreseen... but for some reason my mother was very pleased about it.”

Normya's emerald green eyes grew a little wider. “Then this device... it acts like the Shrouds on our ships then?”

Cirith nodded her head. “Yes... in essence. It is a tiny capsule inserted into the base of the person’s skull. It acts in the same manner as the rooms on the MV ships. It is unlikely the individual would even know it is there unless they knew of it. It is easily inserted just beneath the skin and leaves no residual presence.”

Lancy looked at Normya. “The Kavs raided our research facility on Ugmor Five six years ago. They stole quite a bit of equipment and research during the raid. Among what they stole were two containers that housed twenty-eight working models of this device. We called them Static Inhibitors.” He said.

“How... how do you know all this?” Normya asked.

“We... all of us were members of the Venorik Elghinn Normya.” Cirith answered. “And all of us were very good at our jobs.”

“Can this device be removed?” Tir'ut asked.

“By a surgeon yes.” Cirith answered. “A Hadarian could easily remove it as well.”

“We need to remove it!” Normya exclaimed. “We have to remove it!”

“And we will Il darthirii kal'daka.” Tir'ut told her. “We must move carefully however.”

Cirith nodded. “Lancy... they have to be operating this ship on remote. Which means that many systems are probably not working?”

Lancy nodded. “That’s a safe bet.” He answered. “We saw some of their handiwork on decks twenty-nine and thirty. Power transfer conduits running along the floors and down the corridors.”

“Tir'ut... what do you know of this Phy'iad?” Cirith asked.

“He is one that we have an extensive intelligence file on.” Tir'ut answered. “And we have learned much since Lynom infiltrated his base.”

“Lynom?” Cirith asked.

Tir'ut nodded. “My brother. We have been in contact with him since Il darthirii kal'daka came into our lives. When the Kavalians attacked we were planning a mission to retrieve him and nearly three dozen female elves they were holding as... as slaves from his base on Belid.” Tir'ut told her.

“That is most likely where he is returning then.” Cirith stated.

“We still don’t know why he would take my mother.” Normya stated.

“Il darthirii kal'daka is correct Cirith Esavorna.” Tir'ut spoke. “Phy'iad is many things but he would not come all this way to simply kidnap Dysea darthirii ilhar as a slave. We know he is working for the Kavalians. The frigate we saw was Gareld’s ship. Gareld was working for the Kavalians so it stands to reason Phy'iad is as well.”

“So he probably means to turn her over to the Kavalians at some point in the future.” Cirith said.

“The Kavalian attack on Kranek was possibly to cover his actions as well as kill as many of your family as possible.” Lancy spoke.

“What would they want with my mother?” Normya asked.

“Ransom perhaps?” Cirith said.

Normya shook her head. “My... my father... Andro would never allow that.” She stated. “Taking her hostage to try and squeeze something from us would only result in Andro declaring war on them. I know that much about my brother. He is more steeped in the tradition and honor of family than the rest of us. It has to do with the pureness of his blood. If the Kavalians think to use her as some sort of tool to get what they want it will not work. If they knew enough to conduct these operations then they would know enough to realize that. Andro will never deal with them! Never! Not even for our mother. Our father... our father was the same way. And if they harm her he will unleash the Union military on them without question or pause.”

“Then there is something else they want her for.” Cirith said. “They would not knowingly open a second front with the Union while they are still technically at war with the Coven.”

“Let us stop trying to determine what they want Dysea darthirii ilhar for and begin to discover a way to get her and ourselves out of here.” Tir'ut spoke.

Cirith nodded. “Lancy... we can’t find her in Mindvoice so let’s go to the old fashion way. Recalibrate the dorsal sensor array to pick up elven blood and let’s find out exactly where all of this Phy'iad’s little toy soldiers are lurking about.”

SPARTA KING YELU MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

“...have recovered four hundred and nineteen bodies at last count from the rescue team commanders on the ground.” Selene had arrived less than thirty minutes ago, refusing to allow Lynwe to travel to Sparta with Aihola alone, and all three women looked as if they had been up for many hours, which all of them had been. Layna was on board the PROMETHUS with their husband helping him to manage the massive number of forces that were now in Earth’s sector. Helen had asked her to conduct the briefing because no one else was in a condition to deal with the Netnews and their many questions.

Selene had become the consummate politician and as Prime Minister of Earth she was considered inside that very small circle of family of friends of the Royal family. Selene knew this was not something that any of them needed to deal with at the moment, but she also knew it needed to be done to assure the many trillions of citizens of the Union that they were still very much in charge of things. The podium was set up in the huge cafeteria one floor below the ADHOC command center that had been established. Many of the tables and chairs had been pushed aside and rearranged so that several hundred chairs now occupied nearly one half of the room.

Selene looked up at the hundreds of faces and dozens of video drones that fluttered around the room at every angle. “The rescue teams are proceeding at a very slow pace so that no additional injuries are caused if survivors or bodies are found.” Selene took a deep breath. “Nine ERT Teams from both Athens and Sparta are on the scene, along with nearly two full companies of Durcunusaan regulars and roughly twenty dragons. To keep from having to use heavy machinery, our dragon brothers are doing most of the heavy lifting and they are rotating their numbers accordingly so that they do not strain themselves. I can not...” Selene stopped for a moment and composed herself, brushing her hand across her forehead. “I can not stress to all of you enough that we are working as fast as possible in our rescue attempts, but we need to balance that with care. At the moment, Prime Minister Deia and Queen For’mya are believed to have been inside the Senate Building with an estimated one thousand two hundred others when it was destroyed. Aside from that... we have no other information and I will not speculate in any way until we know for sure. As I said in the beginning... I will take questions now, but understand this... I will not guess or assume and that is something no one should do. More often than not rumors only hurt.”

Selene’s steel blue eyes searched for and found Me’alla in the crowd of so many and she pointed at her. “Me’alla?” She spoke. “You have a question?”

Me’alla was taken aback for she had not expected to be called on as a junior reporter with a smaller network. She stammered something quickly as she rose to her feet. “Prime Minister... Prime Minister Selene... can you confirm... or perhaps provide information as to why the KFI has perpetrated such a broad and extensive plot against the Union?” Me’alla asked. “And I have a follow up as well ma’am.”

Selene shook her head. “Why the KFI has done this we do not know.” Selene answered. “We are not at war with the KFI in any way, shape or form, in fact to the best of my knowledge, we were conducting trade talks with them right here in Sparta.”

“As a follow up Prime Minister Selene... the Kavalian embassy is now surrounded by upwards of five hundred Union Spartans and a smaller number of Durcunusaan troops.” Me’alla spoke quickly. “Are there plans to assault the embassy at this time?”

Selene shook her head quickly. “No such action is being planned and I cautioned anyone who wanders too close to the embassy itself. We have secured the area around the Kavalian embassy for their security as well as our own.”

“Has there been any contact from the ambassadors inside?” Me’alla continued quickly.

“None that I am aware of at this time.” Selene answered. “Anything else?”

Me’alla looked stunned at this direct attention as did many of the reporters who began looking at her in not so favorable terms. “Could this be a response... could this be a response to the defection of Princess Athani?”

“Athani Leonidas chose to defect of her own free will.” Selene spoke calmly. “She found something she desired more than the life she had. She was not forced or coerced in any way. I find it hard to believe the Prefect of the Kavalian Federation would use that as an excuse to conduct the terrible actions they have this day. Here and elsewhere. Thank you Me’alla.” Selene turned to another and pointed to an elven male. “Yes.”

“You... you just said elsewhere Prime Minister.” The reporter said. “Are you saying that the attacks here in Sparta are part of some broader operation by the KFI?”

Selene turned to the side and looked at where Riall stood off to her left. He met her eyes and finally nodded his head causing many of the reporters to press closer in some manner as Selene turned back to face them. “We have discovered the Kavalians struck four other locations here in Sparta. Director of the Krypteria Armetus is in critical condition in this hospital as we speak. He was tortured horribly in an operation that began some hours before the main attacks. Governor Panos’s home was also attacked, but he was thankfully not home and is right now under heavy guard. Head of the Spartan Senate Dilios was injured in an attempt on his life at his home, but he is recovering quickly. It also appears the Kavalians struck the home of Panos’s senior aide Major Janae. She is currently missing at this moment.” Murmurs of disbelief were sweeping through the gathered reporters as Selene took another breath and continued.

“We have also discovered through other means that a systematic attack against our Drow outposts throughout The Wilds was also conducted and the casualties from that we are still trying to determine.” Selene looked across the assembled reporters. “When Androcles took his brothers and sisters from Earth little more than a week ago, they headed to Kranek. This is where Queen Dysea and Princess Normya have been for several months. They have been there, establishing contact and making fast friends with a tribe of Akruxian Immortals led by the former High Lord Captain Cha’talla.” The explosion of questions was expected and Selene simply waited for several long moments as they all tried to shout one another down. She looked at Riall and he shrugged his shoulders minutely. Selene of course had known where Dysea was, and her skepticism had been very high at the beginning. As she read the reports with Lynwe that were coming in over the past weeks, Selene could feel that skepticism slipping away. Dysea was one of the most intelligent and careful woman she knew, and if she had developed a unique trust for Cha’talla and his Immortal tribe then how could she doubt it.

As the roar of questions quieted Selene lifted her hand for silence. “Before you begin to fire off your many questions I will tell you that at this point I know as much as you. This was a very quiet event considering who we are talking about, but from what I have read and seen in just the last few minutes before this briefing I can honestly say it is amazing. Unfortunately... the Kavalians discovered what we were doing on Kranek as well and they conducted a massive attack against the Immortal settlement there. Reports have not yet come in and communications is nonexistent at this time due to some sort of interference. We have dispatched forces there after getting the approval, but until contact is reestablished we will know nothing. Yes?” Selene pointed to a female reporter in the front.

“Prime Minister... this is... this is amazing.” She stammered.

Selene nodded. “Indeed it is.” She responded. “What is your question?”

“The... the Immortal Cha’talla is still alive? The High Lord Veldruk’s Captain?” She asked.

Selene nodded once more. “I believe that is the position he once held... and to answer your question yes he is still very much alive.” Selene pointed to another. “You?”

“Prime Minister... is this prelude to a Kavalian invasion of Union space?” The man asked.

Selene turned as Riall stepped up next to her and leaned over in front of the podium. “There have been no indications that this is the case. Our many border units have reported no incursion by Kavalian forces anywhere oddly enough. This type of action usually leads to an all out attack... but at this time our military is on high alert and nothing we have indicates a Kavalian attack is in progress or even coming soon.”

“But the coup on Hadaria Admiral Riall... that...”

“The coup on Hadaria that unlawfully displaced Queen Anja was done with Kavalian support, but it was driven by political enemies of Queen Anja, not by anything else.” Riall answered. “At least none that we are aware of at this time.”

Riall stepped back quickly as Selene pointed to another. “Yes?”

“Where is Queen Anja Prime Minister?” The man asked. “It was reported that she had left Hadaria over twenty-four hours ago. Is she aware of what has happened here?”

Selene nodded. “Queen Anja is currently in an unknown location as per the protocols established by General Vengal and the Durcunusaan. As far as I know she is aware of what has transpired here on Earth. How could she not be?”

“Then there is no truth to the accusations made by the Hadarian Elder Council and the Arch Ministry?” The man continued. “The accusations that ultimately helped them to dispose her. The accusations of her impropriety.”

Selene’s eyes bore into the man, as did many pairs of eyes in the room. “Normally I would not dignify that question by even responding to it.” Selene snarled. “But I will do so now because I need an outlet for my anger at what has happened. You have just become that outlet you stupid little man!” Selene leaned forward as her voice rose in anger. “How dare you sir! How vithin dare you! If you were half the reporter you should be, you would not even be asking that question! The accusations made by that upae Buonau were never true! Anja proved that and it was broadcast throughout the entire Union! You dare question her love for the King? Even now, when those so called accusations have been proven false? When it has been shown that this was all a part of a plan they began to expose Buonau and Wiktor and all the others who supported them as traitors to their own people?” Selene glared at the man, her normally steel blue eyes changing to cobalt blue in anger now. “My suggestion to you sir would be to sit down and shut the fuck up!”

The room was silent for a long moment as the man sat back down quickly, feeling as large as a peanut and knowing that the eyes of many of his comrades now looked at him in distain and disgust.

“Anja is safe!” Selene spat. “As are the younger Leonidas children who are now with their grandmothers in a secure location!” Selene shook her head. “We have... we have suffered the loss of our King! We have suffered the loss of so many lives this day... quite possibly our Prime Minister and one of our Queens! We can not contact two others, and one lies in this very hospital gravely injured and who will for all intents never recover, for her Anome is now dead! All this and you ask me if it is true that Anja Leonidas, quite possibly the Queen who has loved the King the longest, debased herself before other men and cheated on the King with these men.” She looked at all of them. “Is that what we have come to now? Digging for rumor and falsehoods to report when they are not true? I have heard and seen history vids of a Press Corp that did this in the late 20th and early 21st century. Is that what we have come too now? I give you facts and you ask me about lies. Disgusting!”

The two hundred plus chastised men and women were silent for a long moment as Selene stared at them. One of them, a woman who was braver than the rest lifted her hand. Selene’s eyes fell on her.

“Yes?” She growled.

“Prime Minister... if we have... if we have no communication with Queen Dysea and the King’s children on Kranek... how do we know that this is happening there?” The young elven female asked.

“I said we did not have contact with them.” Selene said. “Androcles Leonidas however, he does have contact with his brothers and sisters and his mothers. That is how we know.”

“Prince Androcles is not with them?” Another reporter asked coming to his feet in easily noticeable surprise. “Forgive me Prime Minister Selene... you said the Crown Prince is not with them?”

Selene shook her head. “Androcles is the reason we found out about the attacks on our Drow outposts and the attack on Kranek. Androcles went to Iraruzu to rescue the woman who is now his wife and mate. She is a Drow warrior.”

This brought out much more murmurs among the Press Corp and more hands shot up. Selene took a deep breath and pointed to a young Lycavorian. “Prime Minister... if the Crown Prince is not on Kranek then where is he? Shouldn’t... shouldn’t he be here on Earth and preparing to assume leadership of the Union.”

Selene tilted her head slightly. “Who is to say he is not.” She commented. This caused many to look at each other with wide eyes and then back to Selene.

“Are you saying he is already here Prime Minister?” The same reporter asked.

Selene nodded her head. “Androcles Leonidas is here on Earth yes. At this moment I believe he and Elynth are seeing to the remains of their fathers.”

EARTH

SPARTA

WESTERN MEDICAL CLINIC

Background Music: He lives in you; Lebo M

It was quiet now as night began to fall.

There were hundreds of men and women gathered around the clinic being kept at a safe distance from the building by Union Spartans who had set up barricades of medium sized lifters and makeshift fences. It was quiet as hundreds were holding candles and even praying softly as all of them remembered their King in their own way. There were several Netnews channels on location recording everything that happened, but even they were being respectful and subdued. It was this reason that almost no one spotted the obsidian colored dragon as she swept in from the east just above the tree tops. As the massive shape whisked over the top of several hundred people, many of them began coming to their feet and watching as the dragon flared its wings in the courtyard outside the entrance to the clinic directly in front of General/Colonel Simpson and half a dozen other Durcunusaan troops. The Netnews people knew something was happening for they had not seen General Simpson exit the building since they had arrived within minutes of the King's body being brought here. The Western Medical Clinic closest to the Royal Villa had been built specifically so that dragons could enter the building easily. So many hatchlings had called the villa home for so long that it seemed only prudent to be able to treat and examine them as they grew. All of Torma and Isheeni's children had been treated here at one point or another.

Andro was dropping to the ground before Elynth had come to a complete stop and lowered herself to the dirt. He turned just as Danny moved up in front of him and waited while Andro removed his helmet. The hundreds of men and women surrounding the building then saw the two men come together and suddenly they knew something big was happening.

Danny squeezed Androcles in his arms, holding the back of Andro's head as more tears came to his eyes. "I tried to get to him boy." Danny gasped. "I tried to get to him in time but he was too damn fast! He was always too damn fast! I'm... I'm sorry Andro... I was too slow! I loved him Andro! I loved him so much!"

Andro closed his eyes as he felt his adopted uncle's arms embrace him and he squeezed him back just as hard as he could. No matter where in his life he had been, his Uncle Daniel was always there beside his father. His father had always said he had only one true brother, and the man holding him now was that man. Between his father and uncle Andro had gone to his Agoge more prepared perhaps than any man in the entire long history of the Spartan training.

"And he loved you Uncle Daniel; more than you know" Andro said softly. "You... you have nothing to apologize for! Nothing!"

Danny pulled back and took Andro's head in his large hands. "He... he tried to draw them away from us." Danny stammered. "He tried to draw them away from us so we could get away. He was trying to protect your mother... protect all of us."

Andro nodded. "I know."

"We... we emptied the clinic." Danny spoke softly.

Andro looked at him oddly. "Uncle Daniel... you are not breathing through your nose." He looked around at the gathered Durcunusaan. "None of you are."

Danny nodded. "There was so much plasma residue in the air from the mortars that it burnt the glands in our noses. I can't... I can't smell shit! It's getting better but right now I can't smell anything but burnt plasma."

Andro looked at the entrance to the building behind his uncle and then back to him. "I need... I need to do this alone Uncle." He said softly. "We need to do this alone."

Danny nodded slowly and stepped back from him. Andro turned back to look at Elynth and he saw her golden colored eyes focused on the doors ahead of them.

Sister? He asked.

Elynth nodded her massive head slowly. I... I am ready.

Andro took a deep breath and moved for the door with Elynth directly behind him. Every member of the Durcunusaan present could only stand and watch as the Prince and dragon that many of them had seen grow into adulthood enter the building to say goodbye to their fathers. Danny looked around as Elynth's tail disappeared into the building and he could see that not one citizen of Sparta that had been surrounding the clinic for the last few hours was sitting. All of them were now standing as word spread quickly among their ranks that the Crown Prince had just entered the clinic they were watching and praying outside of.

The interior of the clinic was dimly lit. Whoever had been inside was hastily moved to another location when the Durcunusaan had first arrived. It was a very simple set up on the interior. The examining rooms were all in the center of the clinic with waiting rooms and lounges on all sides. Andro and Elynth moved past the reception counter and paused as the large doors slid to the side to allow them entry into the main area. The dividing walls had been torn down so that Martin and Torma could rest as they had lived the last twenty plus years. Together. There were four gurneys in the center of the main examining room, one of which held Martin Leonidas wrapped tightly in white linen. The other three held the remains of Torma, covered in a reverent sort of manner with half a dozen sheets. There was no blood staining the sheets, no blood on the floor, and Andro knew that his Uncle would never have allowed this. As he stood looking at the two most influential minds in his life the tears he had thought long expended came again, albeit on a much smaller scale. He moved closer, Elynth beside him, her huge muscular form comforting to him as it had always been. He could remember Torma lifting him within his talons to gaze across the landscape of the Spartan mountains while Elynth bounced on her father's back or just below him. He could remember the times his father and Torma spent several hours and days bestowing upon them the unique and sometimes utterly impossible maneuvers they had learned as a Bonded Pair. For a dragon the size of Torma, nearly seven metric tons and over twenty meters in length, to see him fly was the most beautiful thing to Androcles when he was growing up.

Andro stopped in front of the gurney that held his father, the linen tightly wrapped around his six foot two frame. They had died protecting those that they loved Andro knew. It was the most glorious way any Spartan could die. Defending life and honor and the future of those who would carry on their names. His father was considered barely more than a young adult by many because he was just over three thousand years old, a drop in the bucket compared to some of the Lycavorians that lived. Torma was still a child in dragon years at less than a thousand years old. Yet they held more influence and awe than anyone Andro could think of. They were spoken of in the same voice, the same breath. In the twenty plus years they had been together Andro did not think they had spent more than a few days apart, with the exception of the several weeks when his father went after his mothers. Even then Torma and him were connected and he knew right where his Bonded Brother was. Andro inhaled deeply of the air within the room as he tried to catch a remnant of his father's minty scent.

Andro's eyes darted to where Elynth's massive head was sniffing the covered remains of her father and he opened his mouth to speak.

Ah my son!

At that whisper within Mindvoice her golden eyes instantly cut to him and they stared at each other. Andro reached for his head in pain just as Elynth's wings twitched wildly and her head dropped to the floor.

Andro! Her voice reached for him as he staggered to her side.

Know all that we are! The deep voices echoed within Mindvoice painfully, battering their shields as nothing ever had. Voices that were joined together as one. Know all that we know!

Andro... it... it hurts! Elynth cried.

Elynth! Andro screamed out as he reached for her.

Know all that we know! The litany of two voices bellowed again within Mindvoice. It falls to you now!
All of it falls to you both! You know what must be done!

Andro shook his head back and forth, his hands squeezing his temples as he staggered once more against Elynth's side, their minds awash with visions and memories and voices that were not their own. Places and events that they had never seen or experienced yet were now part of them. Andro turned his head from where he leaned against Elynth's side, his wide azure blue eyes falling on the corpse of his father on the table before him.

They... they will... Andro began.

Hate us! Elynth cried.

Only for a time! The voices answered. It is the way of the Talon Guardians! And it must be done now!
Why?

It falls to you both to discover that now. Act as Talon Guardians now! Act as you know you must act! We will always be with you, but now we must go!

NO! Andro and Elynth screamed together.

You know what must be done! Make us proud as you always have! Make us proud!

Andro gasped as the pain was instantly gone from his head, and he wobbled on shaky legs leaning against Elynth as her wings fluttered madly. She shook her massive head back and forth, her golden eyes blinking rapidly. She slowly turned her head to look at her Bonded Brother as he rose shakily to his legs and feet. She drew her own legs under her, her muscles contracting with shaky certainty and she too staggered slightly at the unbelievable surge of power that had just swept through them, brushing aside their Mindvoice shields as if they weren't even there. Andro staggered into the table that held his father, reaching out to steady himself on the gurney and his hand and fingers touching his father's body. His head whipped around to look at the body wrapped in the white satin linen, his eyes wide.

Elynth's head whipped around, her golden eyes wide as well. ANDRO!!! She screamed out.

The massive wave of tremors within Mindvoice are what caused Danny and the other Durcunusaan troops to turn towards the clinic. Those among the hundreds of men and women who were not Lycavorian could not understand why suddenly every Lycavorian or elf who had sat back down once Andro went inside the clinic now stood up once more, their attention on the medical clinic below them. It began as a mild tremor, almost conversational in nature and it only grew from there. As it grew in power, even those who were among the lower tiers of Mindvoicing ability began to feel it, and it was reaching outward. The explosion was a muffled one, but Danny's eyes grew wide in horror as the entire center of the clinic heaved upwards in a ball of flame and blue heat. As Danny opened his mouth to scream out for his brother's son, the entire structure of the roof appeared to simply blow outward and the massive shape rose into the air as if shot from a cannon. Glimmering Dragon Armor wrapped around both of them, almost glowing in the light of the flames and a psychic shield matched by only one other in the universe, radiant in the myriad of red and orange colors that licked at it and streamed behind it connecting them to the building.

The trumpet that followed was a full throated roar of anger, of hate, of defiance. Elynth rolled over instantly, Andro secure in the saddle on her back, looked at the building below her and with another trumpet she cut loose with a single minded and devastating stream of flame tinged super heated breath. Her aim was unerring and the power unquestioned as nothing below her was left untouched by the scorching stream. Almost immediately, Andro's hands lifted into the air on either side of his body and two basketball sized psychic projections of power formed. This was not something Danny had ever seen though he quickly deduced what Andro was about to do.

"BACK! Everyone back!" Danny screamed to the many Durcunusaan troops. "Get back! Get back now!"

As if he was throwing the two psychic projections with great effort, Andro heaved first one and then the other ball of psychic power straight down into the center of the medical clinic. Upon impact it almost appeared as if the entire building lifted up off the ground. Elynth's huge wingspan kept them directly over the top of the clinic and she continued to pour her flame laced breath into the facility. Any glass that remained blew outwards and was instantly melted. Metal twisted and crumbled under the insanely intense heat and destructive power of the psychic projections. The walls of the clinic caved inward, the remains of the ceiling following quickly as Andro sent a third projection hurtling at the clinic.

"Son vada carians!" Danny muttered as he skidded to a stop and turned to watch the funeral pyre that Andro was creating. The flames reached high into the sky, licking at where Elynth hovered with powerful and precise sweeps of her wings, but causing no harm against the psychic shield that surrounded her and Andro. The heat from the pyre that was once a building was intense, but all of them were far enough away not to be bothered by it. Many civilians that had been watching backed away in fear at what they were seeing though they were in no danger in the least.

Nothing would survive this.

Danny knew well that Elynth could direct and hold her flame stream almost as long as her mother Isheeni, which was well over an hour. Added to that was the incredible heat generated by her breath and nothing would survive of the clinic but cinders. They were burying their fathers in the way only they could. Danny knew that Martin and Torma had coveted their positions as Talon Guardians of the dragon species, and he had spent many hours and nights just hanging out and drinking beer with his brother, learning of the dragon ways and what these things meant to him. They were the only non-dragons to ever hold the title of Talon Guardian in the entire history of the species. Easily the last thirty thousand years since that was almost as old as Arzoal was, and she knew of none for fifty thousand years before that. It was why Martin and Andro had embraced it so completely. This was the way they were honoring their fathers and what they had done.

This was the way they were saying goodbye.

PROTECTORATE CRUSADER-CLASS CRUISER
TALON OF JUSTICE
TWENTY-THREE MINUTES COREWARD OF THE PERSEUS ARM
UNEXPLORED SPACE
53587 LY FROM THE WILDS

Dutkne sat in the command chair on the bridge of the TALON, his eyes watching the dual view screens intently. This was the first time he had been coreward of the Perseus Arm in his nearly five hundred years of life and he did not want to miss any of it. The stars and surrounding space did not appear as dark as from where they had come and though he knew it was probably a visual manifestation and not real, he still thought it was very profound. As Dutkne sat in his chair he contemplated everything he had learned in the last few weeks and tried to bring it all into perspective. To know that the descendants of the bloodline of Sumar and his first born son Resumar lived was astonishing enough. To learn that this son had fathered many children already and that all of them adhered to the honor and instincts that were inbred in the Lycavorians that followed Dutkne and Wayonn was extra special. Wayonn had been right. Their people were not lost anymore, and the roughly fifty billion Lycavorians spread across some seventy planets that called the Protectorate home would soon be reunited with those trillions of Lycavorians who had fought and forged their way out from under High Coven slavery to live free and proud. Technologically the Protectorate and the Vanari and half a dozen other races that lived within the Outer Perseus Arm of the Galaxy were slightly more advanced in some areas, but after spending the last week studying what his grandfather had given to him, he had discovered that the Protectorate and the other races were behind in others.

It appeared that the Protectorate, the Vanari and many of the other races he knew of had concentrated on making the most efficient engines and shields they could considering the vastness of the space they crossed. Their shielding was far superior in many respects, but they had never devised Shrouds as the High Coven and now the Union used with such expertise and tactical advantage. The Protectorate had fewer weapons on their ships, but they were more far powerful; while the Union and Coven ships had many powerful weapons on huge ships that would dwarf the TALON in size and even ability. Dutkne had determined that the TALON could stand even with one of these LEONIDAS II ships in the data his grandfather had given him, but only for a short period of time. Then the sheer size and scope of weaponry the ship could bring to bear would destroy them. And that did not include the many different styles and types of fighters that almost everyone seemed to have. And if they had developed newer engines and weapons systems as his grandfather suggested, based on intelligence and technology gained from City Ship 41, the Union ships would be very formidable indeed. Still... the TALON's unique design and abilities made her a very deadly opponent should it ever come to that.

Dutkne was far more interested in the Flat Space Technology that allowed them to use these so called shields most of them wore on their arms. Flat Space technology was something developed and used exclusively by the Pralors themselves, and even with his grandfather's help, the ability to forge this technology was not something the Protectorate had. When combined with the improbable ability to command these beasts his grandfather called dragons, it was almost too incredible to believe. Dutkne just couldn't believe these animals had the ability to Mindvoice on a sustainable level as Lycavorians nor could he comprehend the fact that they were highly intelligent. He would believe it if he saw it without a doubt, but until that time he clung to his realistic mentality that told him it was impossible.

"Pretty amazing stuff isn't it?" Drey's voice snuck through the fog of Dutkne's own thoughts and he turned.

Drey stood beside Nirilo, both of them holding data pads in their hands, while Nirilo also held a large mug of steaming hot Vanari tea. Dutkne grinned. "You are reading it?" He said feigning surprise. "I will have to inform Caia of this development. Does she know you have taken up reading?"

Drey chuckled and nodded his head. "I even get her to read to me. I'm a very simple man and it's one of the reasons Caia loves me."

"Yes... well I never understood what she saw in you anyway. You are simple." Dutkne replied with a grin.

“You might think differently when you find the mate of your dreams!” Drey stated proudly.

“Bah!! I don’t want to know what your dreams entail Drey!” Dutkne barked. “If it has to do with my sister I would probably end up thinking differently about you.”

Drey grinned and waggled his eyebrows. “You just might.” He said.

Dutkne shook his head but was smiling. “I will need to talk to my sister about what she has turned you into. And yes... it is very amazing information.”

“The Vanari have been trying to develop technology based on something similar to this Flat Space expertise.” Nirilo said. “We have never been successful. And your people wield it on a daily basis!”

Dutkne shook his head. “Not my people.” He stated. “The Union wields it on a daily basis. I find it just as fascinating as you do Nirilo.”

Drey looked at him. “The closer we get Dutkne... the closer we get the more excited Caia and I become. To meet... to meet the descendants of Sumar and Resumar...”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes I know. For all the apprehension I feel at entering this area of space, I can’t help but feel the same amount of exhilaration.”

Nirilo nodded. “This is as far as our people have ever come.” He said thoughtfully. “We never traveled beyond this point and I find myself frightened and animated at the same time. We...”

All of them turned when the sensor operator’s station began to loudly buzz. The woman leaned forward in her chair, her face focused on the two screens to her front as her hands danced over her consoles.

“Contact!” She barked. “Bearing one four six three point seven!” She turned to look at Dutkne. “It’s a Vanari V9 Interceptor Dutkne!” She exclaimed.

Nirilo and Dutkne both turned to look at one another at the same moment. Nirilo stepped around the chair and looked at her. “Confirm that!” He barked.

“I already did sir!” She answered. “It’s confirmed. A Vanari Rublinos Engineering V9 Interceptor. Minimal power signature and cruising at point two sublight.”

“Out here?” Nirilo exclaimed.

“This is the only certified safe travel corridor.” The woman answered. “At least up until this point. We have no charted corridors after this. None of our ships have ever been out this far.”

Dutkne got to his feet slowly as Drey moved to the tactical station. “Scouting mission Nirilo?” He asked.

Nirilo shook his head. “Not out here.” He replied. “The Board of Regents has forbade travel beyond the Perseus Arm unless fully vetted and authorized by them. And certainly not with a V9. Those are the most sophisticated Cadre transports we have.”

“Signs of damage?” Dutkne asked.

“Negative sir. She’s running very low power... almost as if she is trying to avoid us detecting her.” The woman answered.

“Open a channel for me Dutkne.” Nirilo said. “I will find out what is going on.”

Dutkne turned to the COM officer without hesitation. “Do it.”

“Vanari frequency 74621.9.” Nirilo spoke. “And you can leave the channel open.”

“Ready.” The COM officer answered.

“This is Cadre Senior Colonel Nirilo of the Seventh Shield Cadre Legion.” He spoke. “I am speaking to the Vanari V9 currently on course 24923.8. State your reasoning for being outside the authorized zone of operation.”

“I could ask the same question of you Senior Colonel.” The female voice replied almost immediately.

Nirilo stepped forward with wide eyes when he heard the voice. “I am attached to the Protectorate CRUSADER-Class Cruiser TALON OF JUSTICE by order of the Vanari Board of Regents. I doubt you could say the same. Identify yourself!”

“Has it been so long that you do not know the voices of your own sisters Nirilo Re Mydala?” The voice, a different female this time, answered with a touch of humor.

“Arduri?” Nirilo gasped.

“Give me a picture Naesta.” The voice said.

The holodisc image came alive then and in it was the image of two Vanari females. They were sitting behind the advanced controls of the V9, both of them with flowing white/silver hair and stunning green eyes that contrasted incredibly with their Brandeis blue skin color. They both wore the standard uniforms of the Vanari Commandos, dark gray fatigue like jumpsuits with added body armor across their very prominent chest areas. There were many Vanari females who were amply endowed in the chest department that Dutkne had met through the years, and it appeared that Nirilo's sister were such females. Nirilo stepped even closer to the transmission, his eyes wide.

"It has been many months since we have seen you last brother." The female of the left of the screen spoke with a brilliant smile. "You are looking fit."

"Arduri what... Naesta." He gasped looking at them. "What... what are you doing out here? The... the Board of Regents has forbidden travel out this far."

"Once more we could ask the same question of you Nirilo." The second woman asked from the pilot's seat. Her name was Naesta and she was the youngest of Nirilo's three sisters, two years younger than Arduri who sat next to her and four years younger than Caliria. She appeared to be very young, or at least younger than the one on the left, yet she had the same look in her stunning green eyes. It was very hard to determine the age of any Vanari due to their blue shaded skin, and you could be talking to one who was several hundred years old, or one who was only in their early twenties. This bothered some species but since Lycavorians were no different in trying to determine age by someone's looks, it was only another reason in Nirilo's book why they should be close allies instead of neutral antagonists.

"Do not joust with me Naesta!" Nirilo snapped. "I am fully authorized by the Board of Regents! I am the senior Liaison to the Protectorate! Where they go I go."

"Then the question we should be asking is why they are out here?" Arduri spoke once more, her green eyes flashing.

"Why are you not on Austrova preparing for your Joining Ceremony?" Nirilo demanded.

His sister Arduri snorted in a very unladylike fashion. "My Joining Ceremony is still one week away and what we are doing is more important!" She spat. "I am also still an officer in the Sixteenth Shield Cadre Legion Nirilo! I am still a Vanari Commando... as is Naesta!"

"Does your future husband know you are out here and not preparing for the Ceremonies and Celebration?" Nirilo demanded once more.

"Cruor Ahn Vernalo is doing what he does best!" Arduri snapped at him, her green eyes flashing angrily even in the transmission. "He is mingling with the politicians and spreading his seed to all the willing puppet daughters of those same politicians before we are joined! Do not think I don't know what he is doing... for I should be doing the same thing! Besides... he is not authorized to know what I am doing. At least not until after we are joined!"

"I am not aware of any directive of the Board of Regents that allows you to be this far outside Vanari space sister." Nirilo spoke.

Twenty-five year old Arduri Re Mydala, for all her five foot two height, was perhaps the most vocal and outspoken of his sisters and without a doubt the most adventurous when it came to military matters as well as sexual matters. She was not afraid to go after what she wanted, and that included men and women alike. She was well known among the Vanari people as the only Re Mydala daughter who had taken part in the Celebration of Hundreds not once but three times. Every three years an entire week of coming together with strangers in every conceivable sexual situation that could happen, hours of dancing and fine food and wine. All to celebrate their history and tradition. Every Vanari took part in the Celebration when they turned sixteen for it was part of their history and culture, yet Arduri was so adventurous she had done it three times. The Vanari people were not shy about their sexual nature, due in part because at one point in their history they were a mono-gender species. They had relationships with both males and females and it did not matter to them. What mattered to them was the essence of the mind and the commitment of the heart. Whether it be with a female or male, they could reproduce no matter what based on their physiology. Some relationships were politically driven while others were driven by love and emotion. All that mattered was that they reproduced children to carry on the Vanari way of life. All of his sisters had received much more attention than others at the Celebration of Hundreds when they participated, for there were very few Vanari who did not want to join with a Re Mydala. Their family had been on the forefront of Vanari politics and military history for over two millennia and their parents and his sisters continued that history every day. Himself included, Arduri, Naesta and Caliria were some of the finest trained Vanari Commandos within the ranks. Their name and skill always drove them to leadership positions, and none of them had ever shied away from this.

Cruor Ahn Vernalo had taken Arduri during the last Celebration of Hundreds and had been so smitten by her that he had pursued her for the last three years. With the help of their father Coren, Cruor had finally pressured Arduri enough to agree to them becoming joined. It was an event that was the buzz of their homeworld Austrova and their home city of Nvtia, and had been for several months now. It always was when it involved a Re Mydala.

“We have a directive Nirilo.” Naesta spoke now. “And we are following it!”

“A directive that brings you out well past the borders of Vanari space in one of our most sophisticated ships?” Nirilo stated plainly. “Naesta... you are on the cusp of entering a territory of space that we have never traveled! There is a reason for that!”

“Yes we know the reasons!” Naesta answered. “Our directive is more important!”

“Show me this directive!” Nirilo demanded now. “Transmit it to me now! You are my sisters and I love you both... but I can not believe the Board of Regents would sanction this type of action.”

“We have the backing of the Board of Regents!” Arduri snapped. “That is all you need to know! We are acting with their blessing!”

Nirilo shook his head. “I don’t believe you Arduri. You know as well as I that father and The Committee of Defense Regents would have to approve any travel this far outside of Vanari space. Father would not give that approval!”

“Your father might not Nirilo Re Mydala...” The new voice spoke. “But I did.”

Nirilo’s eyes grew even wider as the new female moved into the transmission. He immediately bowed his head in reverence. “Mother?” He gasped.

Devra Re Mydala looked at her oldest child in the transmission and smiled. She appeared only a few years older than his two sisters, but was in fact nearly nine hundred years old. It was obvious where Arduri and Naesta got their surreal beauty from and she squatted between them now looking just as beautiful.

Devra Re Mydala was the youngest female to ever be elected to the Vanari Board of Regents and one of the most wildly popular Regents in Vanari history. She had joined with his father Coren at a young age, soon after her first Celebration of the Hundreds, where they had coupled for three days straight so taken with each other that they were. Coren had been a much older three hundred and fifteen years when they were joined, but to Devra he was a worldly Vanari and at that point in her life he had shattered all the preconceived ideas she had of Vanari males. She had spent the next several hundred years at his side learning the intricacies of Vanari politics and acting the part of beautiful wife. Coren had encouraged her to take part in the political process when he saw the intelligence she had and the crowds she could draw when they were out in public. Devra had done this to please him, but quickly found she had a knack for weaving through the sometimes muddled arena of Vanari political life. She quickly rose through the ranks and with Coren’s full backing she had been voted to the Board of Regents at the tender age of five hundred and twelve.

What Coren Re Mydala did not realize was that he had opened a new door in his Vanari wife, and it was a door she walked through quite happily. Her popularity grew far faster than Coren’s and part of him resented this. It also didn’t help that on many major policy decisions, Devra chose to vote with the more moderate and open members of the Board of Regents and not the older and more ingrained ones. This was a point of contention for Coren for quite a number of years until Devra decided she wanted to finally have children. It was the female who made the choice to have children and Devra had finally made that decision. Nirilo was the first, followed shortly after by Caliria. Coren relished and loved Nirilo but was somewhat cool to Caliria because of her lustrous black hair. In Vanari culture, females with black or dark hair were looked down upon in many ways though they were not different. Dark hair on males was considered normal, but for a female to have dark hair it was considered a gene defect and had been for millennia. It did not preclude those females with dark hair from anything, indeed many had proven themselves over the years, but it was still an ingrained attitude that females with anything other than white/silver hair were somehow inferior. Even after Arduri and then Naesta were born, Caliria did not receive the same attention from her father that the rest of them did. In many ways this angered Devra and Nirilo and his younger sisters and they went out of their way to include Caliria in everything they did, much to the chagrin of their more traditional father. Ultimately this attitude by Coren is what led Devra to end their near nine hundred year union, and it propelled her to even further heights of political popularity because of her strength in doing something that was not often seen in Vanari culture, and unheard of within Vanari politics.

Devra looked at her son in the transmission, taking note of the young Lycavorians she knew as Dutkne and Drey standing beside him. She had never met them but she knew who they were from her son, and she knew he held them close to his heart as friends. She knew what role Nirilo played for the Board of Regents when it came to the Lycavorians, yet she did not hold the same fears in regards to the Lycavorian people as they did.

“It has been two years since I have seen you last Nirilo my son.” She spoke with her trademark smooth smile of warmth. “Are you avoiding me?”

“Mother no... you know that is not true!” Nirilo hissed in his defense.

Devra’s green eyes twinkled in love and humor for a few seconds and then her face became serious. “Your sisters are operating with my directive Nirilo. Under my orders as a member of the Board of Regents.” She spoke.

Nirilo looked at her now. “Mother... what could you possibly be working on that would bring you this far out of Vanari space?” He asked quickly. “Does father know you are gone? Your security force?”

“My security force is with me... and I do not need to tell your father what I do Nirilo.” She spoke. “We are no longer joined and haven’t been for over a decade. I go where I want when I want.”

Nirilo looked at her. “Why are you out here mother?” He asked pointedly.

Devra sighed heavily and looked at Arduri briefly before turning back to him. “They have taken your sister Caliria. Your sisters and I... we are going after her.”

Nirilo’s eyes grew wider still and he stepped closer. “Caliria? Who has taken her? Why have I heard nothing about this?” He demanded.

“Orionis Pirates have taken Caliria from Uyama One. She was attending a summit of Cadre officers who have dark hair. It is a group of young officers that is pushing to have a dark haired female appointed to the Lower Board of Magistrates to better represent them.” Devra answered him. “The Board of Regents would not meet to vote on whether to go after them Nirilo. No matter what I did... we were deadlocked. Half of the Board agreed with me... the other half did not want to upset the balance that is struck between the Orionis Syndicate and the Vanari. I... I could not allow them to take my daughter! They... they have broken her by now and you know as well as I she will be sold into slavery. She won’t fight them for it is part of our cursed genetic upbringing not to fight the Orionis once they have broken us with their vile actions and chemicals. They have become so very good at it.” As Devra spoke her anger and distaste at what she was saying was very evident. “I secured the private agreements of thirty-nine board members and I issued a sealed directive to go after her. We have chased them out here, but they...”

“What?” Nirilo demanded even more urgently.

“They knew they could not outrun us... we have been chasing them for three days now and they could not lose us. When we got here, we had them cornered outside an Ion Nebula and... when they determined they could not get away from us they did the one thing I did not expect?” Devra said.

“What?” Nirilo asked.

“They jumped Nirilo.” Arduri answered. “They jumped past the Orion Spur.”

“What?” Nirilo gasped as Dutkne got to his feet now.

“Excuse me... Regent Devra... where did they get the coordinates to do this?” He asked. “No Orionis pirate is going to make a blind jump into unknown space, you know that as well as I.”

Devra shook her head. “I do not know... Dutkne is it?”

Dutkne nodded. “Yes.”

“I do not know.” Devra replied again. “We were trying to determine where they went when you arrived. We...”

Nirilo looked at Dutkne. “Dutkne... they...”

Dutkne didn’t hesitate in the least. “Bring them onboard.”

Nirilo nodded and turned back to his mother. “Mother... plot a course to join with us and use the port docking coupler!” He spoke.

“Nirilo... I can not ask you to get involved.” She spoke. “This... what we have done could very well jeopardize your standing with...”

“Caliria is my sister as well damn it!” He barked. “I have never cared what color her hair is and I will never care! I am not my father in that regard and I do not believe as he does! Now dock with the TALON so that we can figure out where these bastards have gone and we can follow them!”

“No one but you has ever set foot on a Protectorate ship Nirilo.” Devra spoke. “I did not think...”

“Regent Re Mydala...” Dutkne spoke stepped closer to Nirilo. “Your son is a friend to me and to the Protectorate. No other Vanari has set foot on one of our ships by Vanari choice. Not ours. It is your Board that has held us at arm’s length, not us. I offer whatever help we can give to you. I urged you to take it.”

“Mother... we have talked of this before. Dutkne and the Lycavorians are not like what father and the others say. At some point we are going to need to let them prove that to us!” Nirilo spoke.

He saw Arduri looked at their mother and smirked. “I told you mother.” She said. “We should have come to him first.”

Devra smiled as she looked at her and then turned to him. “We will see you in a few minutes my son.”

Devra relished in the feel of her taller son’s arms as he squeezed her tightly. She had missed him these last months. They stood in the large room that appeared to be some sort of lounge with several tables and comfortable chairs. One large table dominated the room and it was surrounded by high backed chairs as well. Devra had been amazed when they left the docking ring and were escorted by two burly Lycavorians through the corridors of the ship. For some reason she had expected to see something entirely different. She expected disheveled men with long hair, laughing and gawking at her and her daughters as they walked. Her security team was made up of six Vanari females; all of them superbly trained and exceptionally beautiful even by Vanari standards, but what they received in way of greeting was nothing what she had expected. The two Lycavorians were very well groomed with short hair and clean shaven. Though they were both armed, their weapons were slung across their backs. They did not blink that her security team was armed or that they carried their weapons in such a way that would provide instant use. Devra did not know if that was because they viewed them as friends or whether they simply did not fear the Vanari. The ship itself was not only immaculate in its appearance, it was a marvel of design and sophistication that the Vanari did not think the Lycavorians had yet achieved. Obviously they were very wrong.

Nirilo looked at his mother as he held her at arm’s length and she saw his dark eyes glimmer in happiness.

“You should have contacted me immediately mother.” He stated as he leaned over and first kissed her cheek and then gently rubbed their cheeks together in greeting. He glanced at Arduri and Naesta and turned to face them. “And you two should have made her contact me.” He said sternly.

Arduri chortled at her older brother with a smile and stepped into his arms, followed quickly by Naesta. Nirilo rubbed his cheek against theirs in the traditional greeting among Vanari that were family. He held Arduri’s hand as he turned and faced his mother. “I welcome you to the Protectorate Cruiser TALON OF JUSTICE.” He stated. “Allow me to introduce Director General of the Protectorate Dutkne.”

Dutkne stepped forward now and bowed his head to Devra. “It is an honor to finally meet you Regent Re Mydala. Nirilo has spoke of you often.”

Devra looked at Nirilo quickly and the surprise was evident on her face. She turned back to Dutkne and nodded her own head slowly. “Thank you General Director.” She stammered.

Dutkne rolled his eyes and shook his head. “Just Dutkne please.” He said. “My people have seen fit to change my title four times in the last five hundred years and I can not keep track of what my title is. Dutkne is fine please.” He turned and motioned with his hand. “I’m sure you know my grandfather Wayonn.”

Devra smiled brightly this time as the man stepped forward with his own smile. “Indeed I do.” She stated. “There are not many who do not know who Wayonn is, and like myself are in awe of him.”

Wayonn chuckled softly as he took her hand and bent over to kiss her back of her hand in greeting. “Ah... you are looking ravishing as ever Devra.” He said.

Dutkne motioned to the large table. “Please... everyone take a seat. We are... we are in somewhat of a hurry ourselves and perhaps we can help each other.”

Devra looked at Nirilo as he directed her to a chair. “Nirilo... what are you and your friends doing out here?” She asked. “I know that the Protectorate has not come out this far even though they are more daring than the rest of us.”

Dutkne looked at Wayonn as he sat down and he saw his grandfather shrug and nod his head. “They will discover it soon enough and it may be better if they are aware of it before it happens.”

Arduri took the chair next to her mother with Naesta on her left side and she watched as Nirilo took the chair on her right side. She looked first at her brother and then across to Wayonn before her eyes moved back to Nirilo. “What... what des he mean Nirilo?” She asked. “Before what happens?”

Nirilo looked at his mother. “Some things have taken place within the last few weeks... things we have discovered that will change the face of the Lycavorian people mother.”

Devra met his eyes. “What things?”

Wayonn leaned forward in his chair. “Devra... you are among a handful of your Board of Regents that are aware of certain things regarding the history of our people.”

Devra nodded. “Yes... I’m aware of that. You gave us a wealth of historical data scrolls on the Lycavorians and the Pralors to study and read Wayonn and only a handful of us have taken the time and interest to do that. It just goes to show we are not as open minded as many of us would like to believe.”

Wayonn shrugged his broad shoulders. “Be that as it may... our future is about to take a very different course I believe.”

Devra looked at him and then to Dutkne and Nirilo. Finally her stunning green eyes moved back to Wayonn. “Ok... I shall bite on the bait.” She stated evenly. “Would you care to elaborate?”

“Your Board of Regents is aware of the Pralors and what role they played in shaping the course of history for the Lycavorians.” Wayonn said. “I also gave to you information as to what our capabilities were when our ship crashed on Lycavore, and the condition of that ship.”

Devra nodded. “Yes... I know. Your advanced technology and your ability to use what you call Mindvoicing. I believe the technology of your ship is part of the reason the Vanari of the older caste do not trust you. You would not share this technology except for simple devices when you first arrived and colonized your homeworld.”

“The Vanari were far more advanced then they led us to believe Devra and you know that.” Wayonn spoke. “After our initial contact with your species things did not go well for many years.”

Devra nodded. “I know... and I would have counseled against what happened had I even been born. But that is neither here nor there Wayonn. We have gone beyond that now and while we are not friends in the manner many of us wish to be, we are certainly not enemies.”

“Mutually neutral antagonists.” Dutkne spoke from his chair. “Something I have never understood. We are not at war... we do not have adjoining borders... we have even collaborated on several operations throughout the centuries... but still we are not friends. We are neutral antagonists of each other.”

“I do not agree with the majority Dutkne... but that is the problem.” Devra said. “The majority do not trust your people for reasons which make no sense. I and others...”

“They do not trust them because they consider them too savage mother.” Naesta spoke quickly. “Too quick to violence and too quick to use military means to solve the problems they have! The way they dealt with the Alderbaran Raiders is the perfect example.”

“Naesta!” Devra exclaimed turning to look at her.

Dutkne shrugged his shoulders indifferently. “The Alderbaran Raiders were scum of the worst sort! A smaller offshoot of the Orionis Syndicate and fully sanctioned by them. They were capturing our transport ships and stealing trade goods meant for our trade partners. Some of them meant for the Vanari. They killed fourteen of my people! I asked the Orionis leadership to cease this action and stop supporting them. They refused.”

“The Protectorate obliterated thirty-seven ships with nearly two hundred thousand lives on them!” Naesta continued. “Then you destroyed their settlement on Tarkon Three. I’d say that was a little overkill wouldn’t you?”

Dutkne shook his head. “I warned them... they refused to heed that warning. Had they not killed our people I would have probably just added more escort ships to the trade routes to discourage them in their actions. I do not like conflict Naesta Re Mydala... but I will draw the line when it concerns the lives of my people.”

“I still think it was overkill.” Naesta snapped. “There were other ways to deal with them that did not involve wiping them out!”

Dutkne nodded. “Perhaps... but they would have led to only one conclusion and that is the situation the Vanari have with the Orionis Syndicate. It has gotten better through the years I’ll grant you that, but even to this day your Board of Regents turns a blind eye when Vanari females are captured and sold into slavery. I will not allow that to happen to my people! Ever!”

Devra reached over and placed her hand on Naesta’s arm before she could respond. Her daughter hated the Syndicate for their actions and she hated the fact that the Board of regents did nothing to stop it. As with other items, the Board of Regents did look the other way in this regard because the memories of the Vanari people’s bloody history during their escape from the Syndicate oppression was very fresh in some minds. Devra Re Mydala also knew the history of the Lycavorians as given to her by Wayonn in his data scrolls. She knew of the barbaric and brutal oppression they suffered under for so many thousands of years under the High Coven. It was a history that was known by only a few and Devra realized now that perhaps it was time for that history to come out so that her daughter and others understood why the Lycavorians were as quick to violence as she said.

“We have been trying to change that... but thousands of years of habit do not get tossed aside so readily Dutkne. Naesta is very passionate in that regard, but she still does not care for wanton loss of life. No Vanari does.”

Dutkne nodded. “That I do understand.” He stated. “But to demean us for our actions is also not the way to gain any friends among my people either. And if you wish to believe our actions towards the Alderbarans in some way reinforce your idea that my people are barbaric and savage then that is your decision. As much as I hate to resort to violence, even I know that sometimes it is the only course of action left.”

Naesta took a deep breath and nodded once. “Forgive me.” She stated.

“There is nothing to forgive.” Dutkne said. “You are entitled to your beliefs, however wrong I think they may be.”

“So what is happening now that makes you come all the way out here as if you are heading coreward of the Orion Spur?” Arduri asked now wanting to change the subject and keep her sister from losing her temper once more. She and Naesta shared the same distained for unprovoked violence and going further than needed. “That is where you are going isn’t it?”

Devra looked at Nirilo and then Dutkne. Her green eyes shifted back and forth between them and then to Wayonn before she reached into the small belt pouch she wore around her Vanari Commando Armor. She removed the data chip and passed it to Dutkne on the table. “We were able to extrapolate their course. We think.” She stated as Dutkne picked it up. “There have been rumors circulating in the back hallways that the Orionis Syndicate had found new... that they had found new customers for their slaves. Customers that no one could identify. Those same rumors indicated that these new customers were beyond the Perseus Arm. After chasing them out here for the last three days, I believe those rumors may be true.”

Dutkne picked up the data chip and plugged it into the console on the top of the table. A small holo star chart rose from the console and traced a blue line across the chart between the Outer Arm of known space where the Vanari system was, directly to their current location. He watched as the solid blue line became a broken blue line that ended directly where he had hoped it didn’t end. He looked first at Nirilo, then Drey and finally turned to his grandfather.

Devra leaned closer. “What is wrong?” She asked. “Why do you look like that? Nirilo?”

“Grandfather?” Dutkne asked.

Wayonn sat back in his chair. “We would be fools to think that it would never happen.” He stated. “They had expanded as much as possible coreward and it stands to reason they would have started spaceward of the Orion Spur and the Perseus Arm.”

Naesta leaned forward now. “We know this is where the other branch of your people are. The Lycavorian Union it is called. Do you look like this because it is Lycavorians who are trading in slaves now! Trading in our sisters? In our sister Caliria!”

Wayonn got to his feet and turned to look at the large view window behind them. “Martin Leonidas would never allow slavery of any type to take place within the borders of the Union young lady!” He spoke firmly but with a touch of anger in his voice. “Believe me I know. He has squashed more than one group who attempted to partake in the trade of elf females!”

Devra's eyes grew a little wider as she sat back in her chair and items of interest flashed through her mind. "Leonidas?" She said softly. "I have heard that name before Wayonn." She said looking at Wayonn's back. "Where have I heard that name be... the scrolls you gave me?" She gasped. "They spoke of a man... a Lycavorian who fought this High Coven and died. He was a King on some planet... his actions spurred the rebellion against the Coven to new heights." Devra's eyes grew wider as it all came back to her. "He was the son of the Lycavorian Resumar who was in turn the son of Sumar. The Pralor Sumar!"

Wayonn turned back to look at her. "Your memory is as sharp as it has ever been Devra. I applaud you."

Devra looked at her son quickly and then to Dutkne. "Where are you going?" She asked. "Why are you all the way out here?"

Nirilo leaned forward in his chair. "This Pralor ship mother... the one that Wayonn told you crashed on Lycavore?"

Devra looked at him. "What of it?" She asked. "Your scrolls said it was damaged and only a descendant of this Pralor Sumar or your son Canth could activate its Mindvoice powered security measures. The scrolls said..." Devra stopped. "Leonidas? This... this man you speak of... this Martin Leonidas. He is a descendant of Resumar's son isn't he? The King who died?"

Wayonn looked at her. "He is the son of King Leonidas." Wayonn told her.

"The son?" Devra gasped. "The one that..."

Wayonn shook his head quickly. "No... Pleistarchus he is not. Resumar's son Leonidas had a second child... an unborn son who was still within his mother's womb when he died."

Devra came to her feet now. "Your scrolls say that child died Wayonn." She stated. "You told me this yourself. You said the only pureblood descendant of Resumar was this Lycavorian you call Pleistarchus. A man who betrayed his own people!"

Wayonn nodded. "That is what I thought as well up until twenty six years ago. That is when I discovered that the child we thought dead was in fact very much alive. It is he who now rules the Lycavorian Union. And it is he who went to Lycavore, activated City Ship 41 and guided it back to Earth."

Devra's eyes were wide now as she moved around the table to stand in front of him. "This... this Pralor ship is no longer on Lycavore?" She asked in disbelief.

Wayonn shook his head. "It hasn't been for over two decades. It has been on Earth since Martin discovered it and guided it there. Lycavore is now nothing more than a ghost planet. The High Coven prison there is gone, and every Lycavorian that was enslaved there returned with Martin."

Arduri and Naesta looked at one another and then back to their mother. "Mother... what does this have to do with Caliria?" Arduri was the one to ask the question. "If they will not help us we should plot our jump as close as we can and leave."

"That would be a grave mistake." Dutkne spoke now.

"We are capable enough to plot our own courses you know! We have been flying since we were children!" Naesta snapped. "And we have the engines to get there! You do not!"

Dutkne looked at Nirilo. "You never told me your sisters were so forceful Nirilo." He said with a grin.

Nirilo looked at his sisters as they sat there. "Nor did I know they were so disrespectful of their betters." He snapped.

"Our betters!" Naesta barked. "You believe them to be better than us Nirilo?"

"I believe them to be far more accepting of things they do not understand or know!" He barked back at her. "They are my friends! And they are far more advanced than you know sister so I suggest you mind your tongue!"

Dutkne got to his feet now as well. "Enough of this." He stated. "We are not here to argue with each other. Yes we are preparing to execute our last jump that will place us in what is referred to as The Wilds. Here." He stated pointing to a position on the small holo chart.

Arduri and Naesta leaned forward. "The course we plotted takes us directly into this Lycavorian Union." Arduri said now. "Why can't we use our coordinates?" She asked in a neutral voice. "We extrapolated the course of the Syndicate ship down to the meter. They can not maneuver during a jump. No ship can."

"Your coordinates would end our jump in one of the most densely travelled areas of Union space." Dutkne said. "The syndicate ship did not jump there."

"How do you know that?" Naesta snapped. "My calculations were perfect!"

“If the syndicate ship is dealing with new customers as your mother stated, then they will have coordinates to jump past the Orion Spur and into this area.” Dutkne said.

“Yes... so? We know that!” Naesta continued.

“Did your calculations include variances for gravity displacement and the cosmic shift variables of moving coreward?” Dutkne asked calmly.

Naesta looked at him and her eyes narrowed slightly. “Of... of course they did.” She hissed.

“Did you compensate for the passage of time and space?” He asked.

Naesta looked at Arduri and then her mother. “No. Why should I do that?”

“How old are your charts Naesta Re Mydala?” Drey asked now.

It was Arduri who saw first where they were going with their questions. “They are the same charts we have had for centuries.” She spoke. “Naesta... he is right.”

“How do we know that?” Naesta asked.

Dutkne leaned forward and pressed some buttons on the small console. They watched as the broken blue line shifted its end point several degrees. “It is a common mistake Naesta Re Mydala... especially when plotting a jump this far. Had you jumped on the course you plotted you would have ended up inside Union space as I said.”

Devra looked at him. “Why does that matter Dutkne?”

Dutkne looked at her. “It matters because once your ship was detected, and it would have been detected almost immediately mind you, once it was detected, the Union fleet would have localized your position, chased you down and blown you to smithereens.”

“This only proves that Lycavorians are just as my father says!” Naesta spoke. “And in order to destroy us they would have to find and catch us!”

“Enough Naesta!” Arduri barked this time losing patience with her sister’s arrogant attitude now as well.

“I’m right Arduri!” Naesta spat. “What he just told us only proves it! Why would they attack and destroy us if they don’t know us? Unless they were the ones the Syndicate is working with!”

“They would have attacked and destroyed you for only one reason.” Dutkne said with a smile. “Though your attitude would probably have given them enough reason. They would have attacked and destroyed you Naesta Re Mydala because less than thirty-six hours ago the species known as the Kavalians may have killed the King we are on our way to meet.” Dutkne leaned closer to her.

“You would have jumped directly into what could very well be a war zone by now sister. They lost one King over three thousand years ago and they did not have the means to avenge his death. They have the means now and if he is dead, war can be the only result.” Nirilo spoke softly.

Devra looked at Wayonn. “What does he mean Wayonn?”

Wayonn took her arm. “Come with me and I will explain. Our paths lie in the same direction Devra and we may as well pool our resources. This is not the time to be pulling away from each other.”

Drey turned when the door to the conference room opened and the female Lycavorian came him and handed him the pad. He nodded and turned back to Dutkne and held out the data pad. “Quantum Fusion Coils are at full capacity Dutkne.” He spoke. “We can jump whenever we are ready.”

Dutkne looked at Naesta and saw her look of surprise. “We have the engines to get there as well Naesta Re Mydala.” He said with a smile. He turned to Devra. “Do you trust us enough to go together, or should we let you go on your own?”

Devra looked at Wayonn and then back to him. “I want my daughter back.” She stated firmly. “If traveling with you furthers that goal then yes.”

Dutkne nodded and turned to Drey. “Secure the Vanari V9 and then order the jump Drey. We have a lot of territory to cover. Arrange quarters for our guests and make sure our people know they can go where they wish.” He turned back to Devra. “If it is to begin... then I intend to see it begins now. With us.”

Devra nodded her head. “As do I.”

“...calm yourself Pusintin.” Keleru spoke as calmly as he could while looking at the transmission. He was on his ship heading for the rendezvous with the Puma Bane team that had captured the elf Queen. Both of them were monitoring every tidbit of news that was coming out of the Union, most of it being filtered through the Hadarian capital since in their haste to leave the Lycavorians had forgotten to disable the transmitters and receivers that linked the civilian network. They had watched the Union Netnews reporting on the recovery efforts in Sparta and Keleru took great joy in watching as the huge number of dead from the collapsed building rose almost every hour. He had been pouring himself another glass of ale when the scene shifted and another group of reporters broke in. His dark eyes grew a little wider when he saw the burning building and the Netnews began reporting that the Crown Prime Androcles Leonidas had just obliterated the clinic that held the remains of his father and his dragon. Keleru got to watch it live in fact as they showed him upon his own dragon hovering above the burning clinic while his dragon directed a stream of concentrated fire into the structure below. He saw Androcles throw what appeared to be some sort of bombs from his hands down into the top of the clinic only to see the walls and portion of the ceiling that remained to fall inward and crash in upon itself.

Keleru knew Pusintin would have been watching the same intelligence channel and he expected the transmission from him. Exactly thirty-four seconds after he had begun to watch the report begin to repeat itself, Pusintin was calling.

“He is supposed to be dead Keleru!” Pusintin hissed.

Keleru nodded. “Yes... but we did factor this possibility into our plans. It may or may not make things more difficult, but ultimately it won’t matter. He can not stop your ascension to the throne now. And if he attempts to... we will eliminate him and make sure we get it right this time.” He stated calmly. “I’m more concerned with the fact that this provides more evidence that Phy’iad’s report was accurate.”

Keleru watched Pusintin take a deep breath and get his anger back under control. Pusintin nodded slowly. “If what he says is true.” Pusintin spoke. “We won’t know that until our recon ship gets close enough to report or Admiral Ocarsh reports in.”

Keleru looked at the timepiece on his wall. “He is seven hours overdue now Pusintin.” He spoke turning back to him.

Pusintin shook his head as he reverted back to military officer. “Even if it is true... the only real damage done will be that they may discover we have taken out their Drow outposts sooner than we had expected.” He spoke. “We planned for at least a week before they recovered enough from Martin’s death to discover this. It really does not hamper our efforts since we are not planning a full scale invasion. With that fool Armetus dead or at least out of the picture temporarily... the Krypteria will be unguided and unfocused. They will concentrate on trying to determine if any more attacks are coming, not making contact with the Drow.”

Keleru nodded slowly. “You are right. We can work around that. I am preparing envoys to the Union Senate now in case they attack and destroy the embassy. Matuarr and Qurot are expendable if that happens.”

“We should expect that.” Pusintin said. “If Androcles has survived then he will no doubt want revenge. The first and easiest place to exact that revenge are the people at the embassy.”

Keleru turned when the door to his office opened and his aide came in. He held up his hand to signal silence and to wait and he turned back to Pusintin. “Where will you go when you have the elf Queen?”

“Probably Nefoa.” Pusintin answered. “It’s close enough to Belid to maintain a clear transmission for what we have planned and it will allow me to respond to many different areas if the need arises.”

Keleru nodded. “Reinforce our orders with the commander of Nefoa. No contact with any Lycavorian forces. None! We do not want to instigate a full scale war unless it is necessary. We can do this without it costing us anything more than it has as long as our Pride Leaders follow our instructions to the letter.”

Pusintin nodded. “Don’t worry... I will make that very clear.” He said. “I will contact you when I have her and it is done.”

Keleru nodded and did not respond as the transmission faded. He turned to the young officer now. “Yes.”

“Prefect... the Puma Bane Team you sent to Iraruzu has reported in.” The officer stated softly. “Their commander is standing by to report directly to you.”

“Very well... route the transmission here.” Keleru spoke as he settled into his chair. The aide moved to the desk and manipulated the control panel there. The holo disc came alive with the image of the Puma Bane officer. He stood in front of what appeared to be a large home and Keleru could see smoke rising in the background. "It was the Deutrino fields wasn't it?" Keleru asked as he poured himself more ale.

"Prefect... Prefect... Leruk is... Leruk is dead. The entire company is dead." The officer answered as Keleru stopped pouring and looked up.

Keleru came to his feet slowly unable to believe the officer's words. "Tell me... tell me you are joking Commander." Keleru said even though he knew the man would never do that.

"Forgive me Prefect..." The officer spoke. "We are still trying to... we are still trying to gather information. There were local scum here at the Drow estate when we arrived. They were stripping the bodies of our men. I killed most of them and interrogated three others. They all say the same thing."

"What do they say?" Keleru roared.

"They say the Crown Prince of the Union came here with others." The officer spoke. "They say he had at least three dragons with him. One local was watching from a nearby ridge and he tells me that the Prince dropped out of the sky above our men as they were assaulting the Drow estate and he savaged almost thirty of them by himself. They say his dragon destroyed the others while a vampire female riding a dragon took out the mortars our team had set up. We have searched the area Prefect, and it... it appears this Limian is telling the truth based on what we have discovered."

"Leruk?" Keleru asked.

"We found him... we found him inside the building on the first floor Prefect." The officer stated. "He..."

"What?" Keleru screamed.

"He did not die well Prefect." The man replied. "Multiply fractures of his body and... there is... there is a hole through his head Prefect. It... it looks as if someone rammed some sort of red hot pipe through his entire head. I could... I could look through..."

"Enough!" Keleru barked.

"We found no Drow dead Prefect." The man continued quickly. "Their store in the city was destroyed and it appears as if the Drow bodies were removed, both here and from the store. We have also found many dragon prints Prefect, at least three different sizes in the area. As well as the scorch marks of a Union STRIKER DT and possibly a MENKLA Transport. Our ship in orbit of Iraruzu is also missing."

"Leruk?" Keleru muttered softly. He returned to his chair and sat down slowly.

"Prefect what are your orders?" The officer asked.

Keleru looked up quickly. "Burn the bodies Commander! Burn all of them until there is nothing left but ash!"

The commander looked horrified at the prospect of doing this but he nodded his head. "As you... as you order Prefect."

"When you have completed that task return here to Cabelir and report directly to me." Keleru spoke.

The officer nodded. "Yes Prefect."

Keleru stabbed his finger down on the controls and the transmission faded. He stared at the wall for a long moment and then turned to meet the eyes of his aide. The officer was the youngest son of one of his brothers and was fanatically loyal to him and him alone. "Kattu... make arrangements for when the Commander's team returns." He spoke.

"Do we... do we inform Marshall Pusintin Uncle?" The young Kavalian asked.

Keleru shook his head. "No!" He exclaimed. "At least not until after our plans are set in motion! He will go berserk if he discovers his youngest son has been killed by the Union. He will demand retribution!" Keleru came to his feet once more. "No! We need to keep this from him for as long as possible. If what the team has discovered..." Keleru looked at Kattu. "This Androcles... he is like his father Kattu. He has the ability to... to form things that he can throw and extend from his hands. The wound the commander describes can only be something that he inflicted. If Pusintin discovers this he will want nothing more than to go after him. We must insure he does not discover Leruk is dead until after he has impregnated the elf Queen. At least then he will not kill her until after she has given birth to his son."

"That will not be easy Uncle... keeping him from finding out I mean." Kattu spoke.

“I know... that is why I want you to insure when that Puma Bane Team returns you dispose of them quietly and quickly.” Keleru said. “I will not allow Pusintin’s anger to ruin our ultimate goals.” He looked at his nephew. “Ever since his brother defeated him on Earth he has had major issues with controlling his anger.”

“You have allowed him to garner much support and loyalty Uncle.” Kattu spoke. “Was that wise?”

Keleru looked at his nephew. “He is a superior warrior Kattu, never forget that. And he has led us to many great victories. He is loyal to us... we are his family now and he has embraced that far more than some of the younger Pride Leaders. We just need to learn how to focus that anger for our own gains.”

“I will make the preparations Uncle.” Kattu spoke. He held out the data pad. “This is the most recent report from our field teams searching for Nikkei. They have finished their search of Galnti Three, Pride Nruarani’s homeworld. They found nothing. The main Nruarani home was completely stripped bare, the entire city emptied. Our teams said it appeared ghostly.”

Keleru took it from him. “I did not expect they would.” Keleru spoke. “This confirms then that the Nruarani Pride has dispersed? They were a nomadic Pride to begin with... leaving in such a hurry would be nothing new to them. The only regret I have is losing his expertise.”

Kattu looked at him oddly. “Uncle?”

Keleru smiled. “You will come to discover that you may respect a man but not like him Kattu. Pian’Nruarani was and is a masterful leader of men. Something happened that turned him from a haggard nomadic Pride leader into what he is now. He became educated and very well groomed. His fellow officers ridiculed him for it, but he never relented. I suspect it most likely has something to do with Jalersi. He has always wanted her... even before I gave her to Pusintin as a mate.”

“He is a traitor to our people Uncle.” Kattu said.

Keleru nodded. “Yes he is... but he is a supremely dangerous traitor.” He answered easily. “His tactical skill is nearly on a par with Pusintin and unlike many of the other Pride Leaders now, he actually cares for the men under his command.” Keleru moved to the window. “I have been getting reports for some years now that he was allowing females to serve on his Pride’s ship. That he has led his Pride away from the traditions our people have always honored and followed. I was going to move against him sooner or later, now it appears I will not have to.” Keleru looked at him. “If they have abandoned Galnti Three then they have taken to the stars on the fringes of our border near the edges of the Orion Spur. Perhaps even beyond. We will deal with Pride Nruarani... but for now they are not a threat.”

“As you order uncle.” Kattu said.

“I take it nothing has come up on the Scribe Mother Demahra either.” Keleru asked.

“No uncle... I would inform you immediately if it had.” Kattu answered.

“I should have seen what that wench was doing a long time ago.” Keleru spat angrily. “I would not be surprised if she had a hand in Nikkei disappearing. That will teach me to trust any woman who comes to me and says she has discovered new cloning technology.” He turned to Kattu. “Make sure we are ready to receive the Commander. There can be no mistakes.”

Kattu bowed his head. “I will see to it Uncle.”

SPARTA
ROYAL ESTATE VILLA
Earth Year 2564

“...Beloved! Ahhhhhhhhhhhhh!”

Aricia cried out in unabashed ecstasy and shuddered violently in another staggering orgasm. She rested in Martin’s lap, his immense cock buried completely within her depths, his large hands holding tightly to her breasts and crushing her back to his broad and powerful chest as she basked in the glow of her tenth volcanic orgasm this night. Her body was sizzling hot, every single nerve ending screaming out in carnal delight. The nipples of her firm breasts were painfully hard, and standing out proudly on her ample chest. Her legs were quivering in the grip of yet one more titanic explosion, her long raven black hair drenched in sweat and plastered to her face and shoulders. Her lean, flat and powerful abdomen undulated repeatedly in the grips of her orgasm, the walls of her velvet tightness clamping down almost painfully on Martin's huge cock as For'mya's elven tongue battered her insanely aroused clit endlessly.

It had been a night like no other as his mates.

They did not know what had possessed him that night, but with Dysea and Isabella on Elear and Anja shuttling back to Hadaria the night before, that left only her and For'mya to solely experience the intense passion of their husband and mate. And experience it they did, going on into the sixth hour now of nearly endless explosions and unmitigated passion. Their room was swathed in their combined auras, the full moon filling their room with an dreamlike glow, only adding to the charged atmosphere. Her head fell back onto his shoulders, her eyes fully changed and her lips parted in a breathless cry exposing her wolf fangs, as she rode her orgasm for all it was worth. It was not often that the three of them were alone like this, and he had returned from a meeting with his senior advisors early in the evening. They had been sitting in the main room of the villa going over flight training protocols and planning a trip for all of them when they returned to Apo Prime next month. They had felt his aura even before he landed on Torma, and the moment he stepped through the large double doors to the rear patio, both of their female bodies went crazy. He had such a special talent, able to manipulate his male aura and direct it in such a way as to hit Aricia with the full force of his aura and For'mya with just enough to send her female wolf hormones into overdrive. He had taken Aricia first, right there in the middle of the main room, uncaring if anyone was home besides them. If there were others present they would sense and smell what was happening and avoid the area completely. He had not been patient, tearing their flimsy night robes from their bodies. As Aricia cried out her passion and he pummeled her body the exact way she loved so much, his lips were locked with For'mya in a searing kiss of love and passion. Her lithe elven body, so gloriously firm and tasty, was alive and singing with her desire. The nipples of her smaller, but no less firm and enticing breasts were harder than Aricia had ever seen them. She knew then he must have been hitting her with enough of his aura to take her right to the very edge of control. For'mya's sweet orchid scent mixed with her own lavender and coco scent to saturate the air and inflame their Alpha Wolf husband to even greater heights.

The memories of that night were perfect in their design. He had taken them both with such fervor and desire more times than she could remember. His aura spurred them to new heights and his lips and hands and tongue never stopped. It wasn't the fact that his aura burned only for them that night; it wasn't the fact that he had made them feel things neither had felt before; it wasn't even the fact that he pulled them both tightly to him and they all felt the flicker of life in Aricia's womb as Nara and Deion were conceived. It was the pure, unrestrained and unfettered clarity of his love for them that made that night so special. Aricia and For'mya did not hesitate to reach out within their minds and share that feeling and those sensations with Anja and Dysea and Isabella through Mindvoice. When they were connected with him, they could touch their other lovers with so much ease. Yet it wasn't all of these things that only made them love him more. It was what he had said to them as they cuddled together under the moonlight, their passions still willing, but their bodies exhausted.

Martin had pulled them both tightly to him, Aricia on his right and For'mya on his left. Their heads rested on his broad chest, their raven black and golden blond locks mingled together as they intertwined their fingers as one and gazed at each other with utter blissful contentment in their eyes. The cool breeze swept across their naked bodies, but did nothing to diminish the desire that permeated the air.

Saaurano... the light of my soul. He whispered within Mindvoice as he nuzzled Aricia's head and then For'mya's. And Kinsoargai... the voice of my heart. Without you I am nothing. Without all of you I am nothing. I will never forsake you, never leave you and I will always come for you. On my father's spirit I swear this to you. To all of you.

Aricia and For'mya felt the warmth of his aura surround them tightly, they felt him reach across the stars to Anja and Dysea and Isabella and wrap them within that same embrace. They felt the joy and love from Anja and Dysea more since they were wolf as well, but there was no mistaking the feelings from Bella either and the six of them bathed in these feelings and sensations until sleep took all of them into its sweet embrace.

Saaurano! Saaurano! Wake up! It is not your time! Wake up Little Wolf! You must go on!

Aricia's azure blue eyes sprang open then. "Beloved!" She screamed, her voice echoing in the room and into the corridor.

"Mother!" She heard his voice. "Mother!"

Aricia's wide eyes blinked several times and she was able to focus them finally and in front of her she saw the handsome face of her first born son. She saw the culmination of the love she and her Beloved shared.

"An... Andro!" She gasped.

Androcles leaned closer to his mother, taking her hand in his tightly. Sadi and Ne'Veha stood on one side of the room, Carisia and Lu'ria on the other. Helen sat in the chair at the foot of the bed watching intently all that was happening. A stern looking Hadarian doctor stood near the door, two Hadarian nurses in the rear corner of the room. Riall stood in the room as well by the window, Danny holding a teary eyed Anuk on one side and an equally distraught Nayeca on the other.

"It is me mother." He whispered softly. "I am here."

"Androcles... your father... Martin... he... Andro no!" Aricia gasped as if in physical pain.

Andro pulled up their hands, squeezing her slim fingers tightly as his other hand came up and he stroked the side of her cheek. "Mother!" He hissed. "Look at me!"

Aricia shook her head slowly. "My... my Anome is gone!" She gasped as tears flooded her eyes. "My... my reason and purpose is gone. I... I can not feel... I can not feel Melda Min or our Kinsoaurgai. I can not feel them Andro!"

"Look at me!" Andro barked loudly, startling everyone in the room except Sadi. It was a reaction... or non-reaction that only Helen noticed and she turned to look at her. Sadi's jungle green eyes fell on her but quickly looked away.

"Andro I..."

"You live mother." He spoke.

"I... I can not be without him my son!" She sobbed softly. "I do not want to be without him. I can not... I can not be without them. Oh For'mya... Dysea..."

"Mother..."

"I do not... I do not want to wither... to wither away without them my son!" Aricia spoke softly. "Without him. It... it would be too painful."

"Look at me mother." Andro said gently.

"Andro... Andro please... I..."

"Look at me... please mother." He asked again in that same soft tone. "Look into my eyes and let me say goodbye to you then."

Aricia's azure eyes focused on the identical colored eyes of her son and she felt him squeeze her hand even harder. She looked briefly at their hands and then back to his face and watched him hold up the small capsule.

"Protrilene mother." He said softly as he lowered it to her lips. Aricia didn't hesitate and she parted her lips to allow him to place it on her tongue. Andro watched her swallow it and she lifted her hand to place her palm on his cheek. She could hear Helen sobbing softly at the foot of the bed and she smiled up at him. "I will miss you mother." Andro croaked out the words. "Tell father... tell father I will carry on in his stead." He watched Aricia nod slowly and he reached up to place his fingers on her eyelids. "You will not wither away and die because you have lost your Anome mother. You will die on your own terms and join him just as beautiful as you are now." Andro looked at her face. "Sleep now mother. Sleep."

Andro sat up slowly as Aricia's face lost its tense expression and her breathing became shallow. It took less than a minute for the Protrilene to work. It was a fast acting drug and it was the only drug known to exist that worked far too fast for the Lycavorian healing system to compensate for. Andro glanced up at the monitors that showed his mother's vitals dropping rapidly.

"Remove these machines from her!" He demanded.

The doctor stepped forward quickly. "Milord Prince... this is wrong!" He spoke. "There is no medical evidence that she could not have survived. She would have recovered fully!"

"She would not have recovered from losing her Anome." Helen spoke softly. "And she would have died a long and arduous death."

“There is no medical evidence to prove this!” The doctor insisted. “I must remind...”

Andro moved far faster than anyone had ever witnessed and his hand snatched the front of the doctor’s clothes pulling him down to eye level. His azure eyes changed quickly and Andro barred his savage looking dual fangs. “That is because you do not know my people!” He snarled viciously. “That is because you do not have faith! Now you will either disconnect these infernal machines or you will join my mother and father in the afterlife!”

The doctor couldn’t move fast enough then and in less than thirty seconds the monitors that told the story of Aricia Leonidas were disconnected and silent. Andro shoved the shorter doctor out of his way and peeled back the sheet that covered his mother. He bent down and easily lifted her body into his arms just as the sounds of five dragons drowned out all other noise from five stories below them and their trumpets of sorrow cascaded across the ground causing hundreds to look up and take notice, and some to even move away. Andro turned and looked at Helen as she got to her feet.

“I am going to lay her beside my father’s remains at Thermopylae Feravomir. She will rest there after her essence flies one last time with Isheeni.” He stated.

Helen nodded. “I will have the Durcunusaan clear the way for you.” She said softly. “We will... we will join you there after we retrieved Gorgo and Dasha.”

Androcles Leonidas paused briefly, meeting the eyes of each of the women who he now cherished above all others, and then he turned to exit the room. The two Hadarian nurses began to move to follow him but Helen lifted her hand.

“Leave him be!” She snapped. “There will be enough eyes watching him as he leaves. He needs to do this alone.”

Helen ignored the nurses then and turned to Sadi. She reached out and took Sadi’s and Carisia’s hands without question. They moved closer to her and Helen noticed how the four of them did not release each other. As if they were drawing strength from each other during all this. Helen nodded to herself. They were learning quickly what Aricia and the others had learned long ago when all of them had finally come together. Their unique strength lay in being together, and seeing the determination in Sadi’s eyes Helen knew she was the glue just as Aricia had been. Even Lu'ria of the Drow, so recently turned by Androcles, even she was growing in confidence and strength every hour she was together with them. As her eyes fell on Ne'Veha she felt the desire to be like the man she so loved now and Helen knew Andro would turn her soon if only so that she could experience his love completely. More than likely it would be Sadi who convinced him of this for she held a connection with Andro and she more than anyone would be able to harness and direct the man she so adored. Helen let her eyes settle back on Sadi and nodded to herself once more. Yes indeed Sadi was powerful, almost as bright a light within Mindvoice as Aricia. And like Aricia Helen determined, it would be Sadi’s influence that guided them all.

“Your STRIKER is nearby?” She asked.

Sadi nodded slowly, her jungle green eyes moist. “At the Durcunusaan airfield.”

“Then walk with me...” Helen spoke pulling them close to her and smiling gently as even Lu'ria stepped closer without hesitation. It appeared as if Lu'ria had accepted her transformation to wolf completely in only a few short days and she was learning quickly that wolves, unlike the Drow in many cases, did not shy away from each other. “I will need to instruct the wives and mates of the new King on what to do. You are Queens now.”

Lu'ria shook her head as she clung to Carisia’s hand. “I... I do not wish to be a Queen.” She stammered softly. “Not in this way First Oracle.”

Helen turned as the doorway suddenly filled with both Durcunusaan and newly arrived Drow security officers. The Drow detachment sent by Aihola had arrived only moments ago, their white hair and amber eyes being filmed by the many Netnews crews outside the hospital as they entered in crisp fashion and were not even challenged by the Durcunusaan guarding the doorway into the hospital. There was no fight over who would command with the Durcunusaan men and women. These Drow elves, many of them, had worked together with the Durcunusaan before in providing security while the royal family spent their six months on Earth. Vengal knew well the near fanatical loyalty that Martin commanded among the Drow for his actions towards them, and these Drow security forces were the only men and women outside of normal Durcunusaan troops to be allowed anywhere near the royal villa or places they frequented.

There would be no competition here. All of them had only one goal now... and that was to see nothing happened to the new King and Queens of the Lycavorian Union.

Helen turned back to Lu'ria. "Yet you are Queens now. And soon you will need to act it as well."

KRANEK IMMORTAL SETTLEMENT

"...depart whenever you are ready sir." The Union engineer on the monitor answered Cha'talla's question.

"What are we taking?" Cha'talla asked.

Vollenth sat outside the still damaged command center, the doorway and part of the wall still missing. He and Viera were conversing with Jeth and Aradace while their children bounded happily across the backs of all the dragons and marveled at Jeth's size.

Denali turned from the console he and Arrarn stood at. "Just NORMYA'S LIGHT and her Strike Wing. Admiral Thodias is cramming as many fighters into the ships as he can without leaving the rest of the Fleet Group short."

"We've stripped ten of the STRIKERS we brought with us of everything but their weapons and each of them can now carry three dragons and fifty troops." Arrarn spoke as he turned as well. "My mother's Fleet Group had only two VIPERS assigned to it and we are taking one. The engineers have finished equipping her with two Shroud generators. They won't be as good as the ones integrated into our warships, but it will get us close enough I think. A thousand of your Immortals..." Arrarn stopped and looked at him. "A thousand of our tribe's Akruxian troops and a thousand Union Spartans are already on board and settling in. How many troops do you think this Phy'iad has Cha'talla?"

Cha'talla met his eyes and found himself smiling at Arrarn Leonidas's correction of himself. It appeared as if they had embraced his tribe just as much as his tribe had already embraced them. His expression quickly changed back to one of seriousness. "He's has had two decades to build his numbers from those Akruxian who have deserted the High Coven. There is no telling how many he could have on his base. Lynom's last report indicated three to four thousand at least."

Arrarn nodded. "So we'll have them outnumbered." He stated. "Cool. That always helps."

Cha'talla's expression did not change this time, but deep down he wondered to himself if these children of Martin Leonidas feared anything. All of them were incensed by what had essentially torn their family apart, yet they were directing that anger and making it work for them and he had no doubts that they had every intention of getting their mother back.

"Normya and Tir'ut were able to communicate with Lynom from here when they had Iriral assisting them." Cha'talla said. "Would you be able to touch him when we got close enough?"

Denali nodded. "More than likely."

"Then we will have updated intelligence once we arrived in Belid's system." Cha'talla said. "He and his Ssin'urn 'anon have been outside their base for nearly a week hiding and waiting for us to come get them. He will have the answers for us."

"And that is why we are going too." The new voice spoke and they all turned to see As'hia's mother and father walk slowly into the center.

Ta'lon stepped forward first dressed in a Union Flight suit and pilot armor. "I will fly the VIPER." He stated. "You need an experienced ground support pilot to land the VIPER as close to the base as you can. I have nearly two hundred years of experience flying Heavy Troop Transports. It is what I did before transferring to fighters. You tell me where to land it and I will put it down."

Danarla stepped up next to him. "The ground plan that we have so far says we strike this mercenary base from three sides. I will take one third of the Spartans and one third of the Akruxian troops, all of them familiar with heavy weapons and move to the northern side here." She moved up to the chart table and placed her finger down on the spot of the blueprint that was showing. "We will be better able to hold a position here while the rest divide and assault the base from the other two directions. When they try to retreat they will walk into a hailstorm that will make it appear as if the Letha rie Jorbhe have opened before them."

Cha'talla couldn't help but grin and look at Ta'lon. "I see now where my son says his Ssin'urn 'anon gets her will from." He stated.

Ta'lon nodded. "That she does." He said.

"Narice and I will have command of the Coven dragons." Lisisa continued now. "We are leaving half here to help with hunting down the last of the Kavalian animals who escaped into the mountains. Toria and Arrarn will coordinate air support with the STRIKERS while we hit the west side. I imagine you and Denali will lead the assault on the east?"

Cha'talla nodded. "It is the main entrance according to Lynom and I doubt very much they will expect a frontal assault. The only question is the thickness of the door. We don't know how much explosive power will be necessary."

The door will not matter. Jeth's voice broke into their minds in Mindvoice and they all turned to see him leaning close to the entrance. Secure a position around that door for us Cha'talla and then call Lisisa. We will not need explosives.

Why? Cha'talla asked still amazed at how easily his Mindvoice communication came now.

Vollenth turned his head to gaze at his Bonded Brother. Because Cha'talla my Brother... Jeth, Aradace and I will melt it into slag. He snarled happily.

And then some. Aradace agreed.

Denali nodded his head. "Then I suggest we head to our ships." He spoke. "It's time to get some payback."

CURILA 6

4.7 LY from Earth

Background music; Arrival to Earth, Transformers ST

A lush temperate world with towering snow covered mountains and gorgeous green plains and crystal clear lakes. A little known gem of a planet that Martin Leonidas had found during a training exercise some fifteen years ago. Only slightly smaller than Earth, it had an abundance of natural wildlife very similar to Earth and was just what he had been looking for in a planet. A place to bring his entire family and get away from the hustle and bustle of life within Sparta and on Apo Prime. A place where they could run as wolves or walk as men and women and not worry about the Netnews popping up everywhere. A place where they could leave everything behind and just be themselves.

To that end, the Durcunusaan had contracted with the 1st Elven Engineering Corp and the Leonidas Retreat was born. Four sprawling kilometers backed up to a massive stand of timber and mountains. Nearly a hundred single story structures built in a fashion that reminded them of Spartan architecture from three thousand years ago. The temperature was always constant and never varying much from eighty to eighty-five degrees during the day and a very pleasant mid sixty degrees in the evening. None of the structures had windows, though all were as modern as they could possibly be. As the Leonidas children grew older they branched out into the empty apartments and made them their own. There were three structures in the center of this sprawling compound; one a fully staffed and operating medical clinic that was set up and run by the most gruff and knowledgeable Hadarian Anja could find. Another of the structures was the building where the family took all their meals. It was set up almost like a restaurant with dozens of large tables and chairs and a full time staff of men and women who cooked for them when they were here and who cooked for the three hundred Durcunusaan troops and their families that called Curila 6 home. The last building was a fully equipped staff and school.

This is what Zaniai and Ceuma gazed upon in wonder as they walked down the long granite path from the landing pad. Zaniai had never been here before, he had not known it even existed, and this facility was not in the memories from Anja that Ceuma had inherited through the cloning process. He moved past Fuleos and up next to Eurin as they walked.

"Eurin... Eurin what is this place?" He gasped.

“The Leonidas Retreat.” Eurin answered him moving as fast as her legs could carry her to keep up with Anja and Atropos. “This is where they come to be a family. This is where they come to get away from everything.”

“It’s beautiful.” Ceuma spoke in awe from just behind her.

Joci nodded. “Yes it is.” He answered. “And extremely well defended as well.” He said as his keenly trained eyes were able to just make out the many defensive positions that blended seamlessly with the terrain whether it be flat and green or covered with trees as it was in the distance.

“I... I have never heard of this place.” Zaniai continued as he walked gazing at the large birds circling in the distant sky.

“Less than a thousand people do.” Eurin answered him. “The Durcunusaan who are stationed here, their families, the staff and their families and then only those that Martin chooses to tell.”

“You... you knew of this place?” He asked.

Eurin nodded. “I have been here several times. It is one of the most relaxing places in the universe... and that is how Martin wanted it.”

They stopped talking as the Durcunusaan troop marched towards them along the path. He didn’t pause and fell in beside Anja between Atropos and Miath.

“We have assigned quarters for those with you Milady.” He began to report. “The staff has prepared a full meal and snacks in case anyone is hungry. The entire compound is on alert and all defensives are active. Admiral Omore will be arriving after he insures the Strike Wing is situated. I see he stubbornly refused to allow you to come on a STRIKER?”

Anja rolled her eyes. “Like it matters what happens to me now.” She said in an almost defeatist tone. “Where is Yuriko?”

“The Medical Center with Doctor Emhat.” The officer answered.

“What is going on Colonel?” Anja asked. “Why did I need to come here so badly? I should be on Earth with Andro and my children. That is where I am needed.”

The officer didn’t answer her question and she stopped to look at him. He shrugged his broad shoulders. “Princess Yuriko can explain it better Milady.” He spoke. “I will see to your STRIKER.”

Anja watched him move away quickly and she turned to Atropos who had a similar look of confusion on his face. “Atropos?” She asked softly.

Atropos hook his head. “I have no idea.” He told her honestly. He took her arm gently. “Let’s find Yuriko... the more time that passes, the more nervous I become.”

Atropos, Anja and Miath quickly outdistanced the others, though they tried to keep up as best they could. As they drew closer to the Medical Center Anja saw Yuriko standing outside the entrance and she broke into a run towards her. Yuriko met her half way and the two women came together in an embrace of love and family.

“Yuriko... why... why did I need to come here?” Anja finally gasped out between the fresh tears. “We should be... we should be helping the rest of our family!”

Yuriko nodded her head quickly as she wiped her own tears away. “I know... but this is more important mother.”

Anja shook her head. “Why? What are you doing here? What did you mean only I could do this?”

Yuriko took her hand tightly. “Because you are the only one who can mother.” She stated quickly. “I will show you. Come.”

Yuriko began to practically drag her towards the entrance but Miath’s voice in Anja’s head stopped her cold.

Anja my sister?

Anja turned to look at him and saw his muzzle pointed to the distance. Miath?

Sister... what is that? He asked.

Anja followed his gaze across the plains and saw the tiny black dot low in the blue sky. A tiny black dot that was rapidly growing larger. Anja stepped away from Yuriko slowly her jade green eyes narrowing. Everyone else saw where she was looking and they turned as well. Anja stepped up next to Miath, looking ridiculously tiny standing beside his massive body and she placed her hand on his smooth scales.

Miath... Miath that...

It... it can't... it can't be! Miath gasped.

Thud

Thud

The black dot was growing larger with each passing second and it was rapidly taking shape into one that could not be mistaken. It was a dragon. A huge dragon with obsidian colored scales. A dragon that could never be erroneously identified.

Thud

Thud

Atropos stepped up next to Anja now his eyes wide as the powerful reverberations in the atmosphere were unmistakable. "By all the gods that we hold holy!" He spoke softly causing Eurin and Zaniai to look at him.

"What is it Atropos?" Eurin asked quickly as fear gripped her. "Are we under attack even here?"

There was only one dragon who could move with the same speed and graceful motion that they witnessed racing towards them. Only one dragon that could push the envelope in every way and always reach beyond. Only one dragon that could elicit the sense of awe and power that this one could.

As Torma rocketed over the top of them at nearly a hundred kilometers per hour and released a trumpet that caused them to cringe Atropos's head whipped around to look at his Queen for he felt the enormously powerful tremors in Mindvoice as well. Mindvoice tremors that could only be from one individual. He saw her diminutive form already running into the clinic heedless of any danger that could possibly exist to her.

"Anja! Wait!" He shouted causing the others to turn. He broke into a run after her when he heard her voice from inside.

"MARTIN!"

Anja's wide eyes cut back and forth as she stumbled into the clinic. He was here! The moment Torma opened his mind to her she could feel him like a burning sun. Staff members of the clinic got out of her way as she ran first in one direction and then another. His wonderful mint scent permeated the building overriding everything else and she could not focus enough to follow it to its source. Her heart was slamming into her chest, her blood on fire and she kept screaming for him.

"MARTIN!! MARTIN!!"

As first Sivana and then Ceuma burst into the clinic right behind Atropos to try and help her they saw her head come up and she sprinted off down the corridor.

"Go! Go!" Atropos barked as he followed.

Sivana and Ceuma were in such a hurry that they slammed into Atropos's body as they came around the corner and found him standing like a tree trunk in the middle of the corridor. Sivana looked up into his face to snarl at him and caught her words.

She saw tears in his eyes.

Her head snapped around to where he was looking and her intake of breath caused Ceuma to turn just as quickly and push up against her as the others came around the corner led by Eurin who was moving with surprising speed for a woman her age. As Eurin moved around and gripped Atropos's arm, her eyes wide in disbelief she looked up at him.

"Atropos is that..."

Yuriko was beside them as she stopped blurring from where she had run in a different direction.

"Yes." She stated confidently. "It is... it is my father. And this is why I needed my mother to come here. Something... something is wrong."

Atropos and the others tore their eyes away from a sobbing Anja as she stood beside the bed he was laying in and could not stop touching him, almost like she was insuring that she wasn't being tortured for something and that he was real.

"What do you mean Yuriko?" Atropos asked quickly.

"What is wrong?" Sivana asked.

"He is... he is stuck in some sort of Mindvoice loop." She told them as tears came to her dark eyes now. "At least that is what I think it is. His injuries... his injuries have healed... but his mind is trapped somewhere and I can't pull him out. I did the only thing I could think of. I disregarded security protocol and called mother."

"Why?" Eurin asked.

Yuriko looked at her. “It is very simple Divine One. There is only one person who has reached within Mindvoice and brought father out of such a condition before. She did it just before father discovered who he truly was. She saved him then. She saved my mother Dysea as well. She is the only one who has ever done this before. Even the Feravomir says this. I’m hoping...” Yuriko turned and looked at her in the room through the glass partition. “I am hoping she can do it again.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-THREE

RITAAH

Channa had endured more savage beatings and rapes than she could remember during her time in that Kavalian prison waiting for death. She had been cast aside by her family and her Pride because the biogenic experiments she had undergone did not completely alter her outward appearance. She had no part in that decision by her father to make her part of the program, and she had no part in his decision to toss her aside like a piece of meat when the treatments did not take fully. The treatments had removed the fine coat of black hair from her body except for her long silky mane, but they left her with her normal, vertically slit and stunning blue feline eyes and her long and very dexterous tail. And for that Channa had been condemned to death and sent to a prison to be passed around as a whore among the guards and even other inmates while she waited for death to come to her. Mican’s actions had saved her from that fate, and his and Na’lia’s love had brought her back from the brink of despair and turned her life into something. They gave her purpose and reason and freedom to do as she choose; to live her life the way she wanted to. They showed her that what was done to her only made her better, not worse. She owed them so much for what they had given her, and she now owed them for giving her the will and determination to survive so that she could experience and feel what she had just felt for the last magical four hours.

Channa purred reflexively and her mouth curled into a contented smile as she felt his soft lips and warm tongue flutter across the back of her taut thigh and slowly work their way up the curve of her incredibly firm ass. She felt his hot tongue drag deliciously along the contour of her ass cheek, causing her long tail to twitch madly in unabashed delight. When his lips found that supersensitive spot at the small of her back where her tail entered her spine, she sighed in blissful enchantment but slapped his shoulder playfully with her tail as she rolled over to face him. Every time his fingers or lips had touched her there in the last four hours it had ended up with her wailing out her delight, and she was just too tired now. He was diligent in his actions and it amazed her that he was still willing. Her feline blue eyes gazed at him adoringly, but he didn’t pause and he lowered his lips to her firm abdomen, tracing his talented tongue around her bellybutton and using his nose and lips to nuzzle every centimeter of her skin. He was doing exactly what he had promised her that he would do. Channa let her eyes wander over his broad shoulders and powerful arms, the muscular definition exquisite in its detail. Dario was not the largest man that Channa had ever taken, Kavalian men were built much larger, but Channa could not deny the complete rapture that seared her body as his still impressive ten inch cock had caused her to feel things she had never experienced. He didn’t just make love to her; Dario consumed her completely. He had taken her like this the first time, refusing to allow her to be submissive to him. He had stared into her eyes as he sank into her completely, eliciting a groan of utter fulfillment from Channa. He stretched her in such a way it caused her body to vibrate in desire and need. He had not pounded her body into the bed as Kavalian men did, trying to prove their dominance over her. He had stroked into her body with power and slow, sensuous movements that had her crying out his name in short order, clutching him tightly as the first orgasm she had not brought upon herself cascaded through her. And it hadn’t stopped for nearly four hours.

His stamina was superior in every way and Channa relished in using her tongue to give him her version of a tongue bath. She lavished his pulsating cock with attention, using her lips and tongue and her breasts in ways that had Dario squirming on the bed. He allowed her to be demanding and forceful when she wanted, using her long tail to slap him teasingly while she rode him with tight hard movements of her hips. He allowed her to nibble him almost painfully, but he returned this action tenfold on her when he had licked her pussy that first time. Channa thought her muscles would rip through her skin at that first electric jolt when his tongue danced across her clit and with his wolf fangs extended; it sent her pleasure meter through the ceiling. Their lovmaking had been rough at times, Channa reveling in the pleasure as he took her from behind in such a way as to make her feel in control but still allowed him to dominate her after a fashion. His large hands never stopped moving or caressing her skin and he made it a point to constantly brush his fingers across that spot on the base of her tail.

Whatever pain and humiliation she had experienced in her young life, Channa had felt it all falling away in the last few weeks. Discovering her bond with Mirra and feeling it grow stronger every hour, and then this incredibly delectable man. She watched as he nuzzled her ribcage and her forearms, hitting every part of her body that held scent glands she knew. She lifted her hands to his face as he finally stopped with his chest above hers, his hard, naked body stretched out on top of her but holding his upper body suspended above her. It was just close enough that her rock hard nipples teased his warm skin and sent ripples of delight skittering across her flesh. She lifted her head quickly and kissed him hard, giddiness coursing through her as he returned the powerful kiss with equal ardor. Channa nibbled on his lower lip with her teeth, tugging on it gently as she pulled away after a moment and stared into his soft green eyes.

Dario smiled as he gazed at her. "Hi there." He spoke softly.

Channa pulled him down on her, her hands spreading across his powerful back as she felt his weight press her into the bed and make her feel so secure and wanted. She drew her long legs up along the outside of his hips feeling his scrumptious, semi hard cock press against her opening as her tail extended out and draped across his lower back and tight ass cheeks. "You... you are... you are so very different." She spoke softly.

"Well... I hope that's a good thing." He answered her.

"Am I your woman now?" She asked with a impish smile.

"You are... you are whatever you want to be Channa." He said with a twinkle in his own eyes. "I would prefer to court you in the ways of my people... make you see that I am the man for you."

Channa tilted her head a little and gazed at him. "Why?" She said. "When I already know this to be true. What you have made me feel... it is beyond wonderful Dario."

"You... you have never been outside Kavalian space." Dario said hesitantly. "It would not be fair for me to claim you when you have not seen all that you could have."

"You... you don't want to claim me?" She asked feeling suddenly concerned.

Dario chuckled softly and shook his head. "Woman... I want to scent you so bad it makes my blood burn. My father... my father raised me to be a proper Spartan. A gentlemen. It would not be suitable for me to claim you when you have not seen all that you could have. All that the universe has to offer to you."

"Including other men?" She asked.

Dario nodded and lowered his eyes. "Yes... other men too."

"And they would treat me like you do?" She asked him.

"They would honor you yes. You would be an equal to them... not a piece of property. My people... Spartans... we cherished our wives and mates." Dario replied reaching up with a hand and brushing some strands of long black hair from her face.

"But would they treat me as you do? Would they make me feel what you make me feel?" She asked him.

"You... you are beautiful Channa. You are beautiful and you smell so very good. You would have many alpha wolves after you." Dario said.

"But would they make me feel what you do?" She asked again. "I am not foolish Dario. I know even if we go back with you now, because the Prefect has... because they have done so much to bring harm to Resumar's family... I know we will not be looked upon as you and the others look at us. At least not right away. I do not wish to lose what you have made me feel, even for an instant. So I ask you again... will they make me feel what you do?"

Dario gazed at her eyes, knowing what she wanted him to say because her scent was calling to him without holding back in the least. "No." He stated.

Channa grinned now and she pulled him tighter to her feeling blissfully warm at his words and how her body molded to his. Her blue eyes were alive with happiness and desire. "Then I am very lucky you found me first aren't I." She stated confidently.

Dario looked into her stunning blue eyes and smiled. "I think that makes me the lucky one."

“I have... I have never known what you make me feel Dario.” She said softly. “I... I never thought I would be desirable after all that was done to me. I...”

Dario put a finger to her lips and quieted her words as he leaned over and nuzzled the side of her neck and just behind her earlobe. Her arms tightened around his back as she purred in contentment. “Never question who you are Channa.” He whispered to her. “You are as desirable a woman as I have ever seen and when I am done scenting you, no male will come within a quarter mile of you.”

Channa laughed at his words. “Then you will have your work cut out for you.” She stated. “I can be a handful.”

“Somehow that prospect doesn’t frighten me in the least.” He stated confidently lowering his head to firmly nuzzle her throat.

“Then we should start right...” The muffled explosion was enough to cut off her words and make both of them look towards the door.

“They... your cousin would not begin destroying the ship if we were still on it would he Dario?” Channa asked knowing it was a stupid question.

“No!” Dario barked as he began to rise off the bed.

“Then that is something else!” She echoed as he was scrambling to his feet and reaching for where their clothes lay on the deck.

Resumar burst into what would have been the bridge of VORTEX Cruiser 341 had it been a Union ship, Athani right on his heels. He gripped his Nehtes tightly in his hand, Athani clutching the K14 KM expertly.

“Avi... 341... talk to me!” Resumar barked out.

-There has been an explosion in the aft quarter of deck twenty-one- Avi answered almost immediately.

“Well sibfla Avi!” Resumar snapped. “Tell me something I don’t know. One of our charges didn’t fizzle on us did it?”

-Negative son of the descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar- 341 answered. -This was not as large an explosion as one of the charges we have built and put in place. This was something else-

“Ok... so we can be happy a large chunk of the mountain didn’t blow outwards 341.” Resumar barked. “Now what the hell was it?”

Athani looked at her husband with happy eyes. No matter the pain he was in knowing that his father was dead and possibly one or more of his mothers, he had not lost the will and determination that had first attracted her to him so completely. He had not lost the confidence and purpose, nor his ability to command.

-We have a security breach- 341 answered.

“Security breach?” Res spat. “Who the hell could break into this ship?”

- Section seventeen. Deck twenty-one. Starboard side...grid three four. Incredible- 341 exclaimed.

“What?” Resumar came up next to him.

-Internal ship sensors have been taken offline- He said with what sounded like surprise in his pseudo mechanical voice. -Avi... transfer power to grid two one- 341 spoke.

-Transferred- Avi responded instantly.

Resumar leaned closer as the monitor showed a smoking hole in the mountain plateau that was above them. “Is that what I think it is?” He asked.

-Affirmative. I have alternate exterior sensors placed along the entire length of VORTEX Cruiser 341. We are viewing the breach from one of those sensors. Someone has managed to breach the exterior hull-

“341... we are buried in a mountain!” Athani complained as she moved up beside his hulking form. “How could they breach the damn hull?”

-Affirmative Athani Little One- 341 answered. -However... the exterior crust is thinnest in this location as a result of VORTEX Cruiser 341’s design. Only one point six meters thick to be precise-

“The Coven!” Resumar hissed.

Athani turned to face her husband. “How would they have the knowledge of how to breach the ship Resumar? On where to breach the ship where it was weakest for that matter?”

-Chief Elder Pralor Xaxon- Avi replied turning to look at them.

“Impossible!” Resumar barked. “If the time frame you and 341 have told me is accurate this ship is at least twenty thousand years younger than him Avi! How could he possibly know this information? How would he...” Resumar stopped talking and his eyes grew wider as his mind worked. “Sonofabitch!” He swore. “I didn’t think of that!”

“Resumar what?” Athani blurted.

341 turned to face her. -All Pralor City Ships and Warships were built with the same superior alloy and material Athani Little One. Phased Exogenic Composite Vantronium- He spoke. -Even VORTEX Cruiser 341. It was the most durable and widely used ship building material that we had in Pralor space. It is one of the things other species wanted from us that we did not give. The process by which we made this material. If Chief Elder Pralor Xaxon was able to pass this information to his descendants as he did with other information, by infecting them with his essence, then this would also be included. As well as the means to penetrate the outer hull-

“Are you saying the Coven is loose on this ship?” Athani declared.

-It would seem so- Avi answered. -And considering the location they chose to breach the hull, they must have some sort of device that allows them to scan the hull even inside the mountain-

-Even as advanced as my sensors are... I will be unable to determine how many of them are actually onboard. I cannot see into the shadows as it appears those of your uncle’s species so like to use- 341 spoke.

“They can’t possibly think they can steal this ship will all of us on it.” Resumar stated.

“Could they be going after the explosive packages?” Athani asked.

-Unlikely- Avi answered. -They will not know where we have placed them-

“They are damn well here for something!” Resumar barked. “We...”

Avatar 341 turned abruptly and looked at the myriad of control panels around where he stood. Avi moved closer to him noticing this behavior. Resumar also detected the odd reaction.

“341?” He questioned.

-Avi is correct that they will not know where the explosive charges have been placed throughout the ship. The likelihood they are here to steal the ship is remote-

“Then what?” Athani asked.

341 turned quickly and looked at them. -I have in my Quantum Neural Processors every bit of knowledge that this ship holds Resumar Leonidas. Just as Avi now does-

“Yeah... so!” Resumar snapped.

-As do the other four copies of myself currently in storage- 341 answered. -The sealed chambers to the Avatar Alcoves have been breached in the same manner as the outer hull. I can no longer transfer data to the copies of myself. It appears the High Coven is not here to steal the ship. They are here to steal me-

“Ah... fuck me!” Resumar spat as he began to turn. “Aryschanne... stay here with Avi and 341! Seal this compartment just in case! Dario... Mican... the Coven is loose on the ship! They are trying to steal the extra Avatars! Deck twenty-one! Section seventeen! Go! Go! Go!”

LEONIDAS RETREAT

“...how Yuriko?” Sivana gasped.

Yuriko got up from the table they were all sitting at and moved to the dispenser to get more tea. Eurin, Zaniai, Sivana and Ceuma sat at the table, while Atropos, Joci and Belen stood along the wall. Atropos stood in such a way that he could keep one or both of his eyes on Anja in the room across the hall as she was examining Martin with the second Hadarian doctor in the room with her. Filrian pulled the mug out for Yuriko and she smiled at her husband as she took it from him. She hadn't slept in more hours than she cared to recall and it was quickly catching up to her. She took a long sip of the tea as she turned back and returned to the chair and she looked at her adopted aunt.

“Father... he has been putting this plan together for over a year with Avi.” She stated softly.

“Avi?” Eurin asked stunned.

Yuriko nodded as she took a deep breath and finally was able to let go of what she alone had been holding in for so many years. “I don't know all of the details of how it started, but I know that Armetus discovered something at the end of the Evolli War. What happened between father and I seven years ago was staged Divine One. It wasn't real. We did it so when I took command of my OMEN ship I would have complete freedom and not have to be concerned with the Netnews hounding my every step as they do the rest of my family. Initially I was tasked with monitoring the High Coven but that quickly became monitoring the Kavalians as they conquered more and more of High Coven space. Armetus discovered something at the end of the Evolli War, something that linked the Kavalians to the reason the Evolli War started.”

“Wait... the Evolli started the war by invading Union territory and capturing Divruih and Ucurua.” Zaniai spoke quickly. “They slaughtered over four hundred thousand men, women and children! That is and has always been the reason the war started.”

Yuriko nodded. “That is what almost everyone thinks Zaniai, but the Evolli were only the front people. The fodder for the Kavalians to gain their goals. Whatever Armetus found proved that the Kavalians were behind it. They were the ones who financed the Evolli effort from behind the scenes. They were the ones who provided the Evolli with much of their initial intelligence in regards to the Union. It is why they were so successful at the beginning of the war.”

“Yuriko...” Belen spoke now. “We all fought in that war. Every part of it. We never saw anything that indicated a Kavalian influence.”

Yuriko nodded. "I know. They were very careful to not have anyone discover how deep their involvement was. What I do know is that they began a brand new criminal organization that became their front company so to speak. Through this criminal organization they were able to channel funds and intelligence to the Evolli and keep their involvement covered behind layers of criminal practice and dozens of pirates and mercenaries. The Kavalians did not want father discovering their actions because they knew he would have come after them without hesitation and they could not fight two wars on two fronts no matter how many clones they created."

Eurin looked at her. "That... that doesn't explain all this." She said motioning with her hand to where Martin laid in the bed across the corridor.

Yuriko leaned back in the chair. "My father is not the senseless brute that many people take him for Divine One. You of all people should know this. Many consider him politically inept and he has done nothing to dispel this attitude. He prefers to work behind the scenes and many of those he has worked with have appreciated his involvement. Aunt Deia would often use him as the one who worked the back channels while she or my mothers took point on the political stage. In some respects it was her way of protecting father... keeping him out of the lime light and doing what he does best. Talking bluntly and giving his word."

"Believe me... I know that first hand." Eurin stated. "Those of us who looked behind the surface of the agreement with the Chuvoui ten years ago and we saw his imprint all over it. It took some masterful negotiations to convince those rock headed people to do what he wanted them to do, and he did it in a way that his involvement was never brought up."

Yuriko nodded. "And now one part of our border is forever secure and no one would dare attempt to cross our borders there. The Chuvoui are supremely loyal to father... and not even the Kavalians would dare cross them."

Eurin lifted her hand and waved it around. "And this?" She asked once again.

Yuriko sipped her tea slowly. "Whatever it is that Armetus discovered at the end of the war caused father to come up with the idea of this plan. He has always felt that he bore at least some responsibility and shame for the actions of his brother Divine One, especially since he is the one that let him go."

"He bears no shame for not killing his brother under the eyes of their mother!" Atropos barked loudly. "To Spartans... that would have been an even more grievous crime!"

Yuriko nodded. "He feels he does however Uncle Atropos... because he is King." She said softly. "He did nothing for years because he did not want it to appear as if he was being vindictive or allowing his feelings for his brother to make his decisions for him. If... if things were different, Pleistarchus would be King of the Union Uncle, you know this. He is the oldest. Father has always fought with how to balance his own guilt and shame for letting him go and ways to keep the Union safe from his influence."

Atropos looked at her with surprise in his eyes. "I... we... we never knew that." He stated softly.

Yuriko nodded. "Only Andro, me and our mothers know that." She said. "He told no one else... not even grandmother Gorgo."

"But Pleistarchus has no claim to the Union throne." Sivana spoke heatedly. "Not after what he has done through the years! He abandoned the Spartan people three thousand years ago, not the other way around!"

"I am only telling you what I know to be true. My father is ... he is a very complex man and only my mothers can truly understand him." Yuriko said softly. "At the end of the Evolli War he ordered Armetus to confirm as much as possible of what he suspected. He wanted firm, irrefutable intelligence that the Kavalians had indeed had a hand in the Evolli War. When Armetus brought it to him a little more than a year ago, father began setting this plan in motion with Avi."

"What plan?" Joci asked as he moved up behind Ceuma and placed his large hands on her shoulders.

"Faking his own death." Yuriko answered confidently looking at them. "He was going to fake his own death... and those of my mothers For'mya and Aricia. He had planned for them all to die in a STRIKER accident. With a team of Drow that have been specially trained by Lynwe and Aihola and a squad of Durcunusaan troops trained by Uncle Andreus, he was going to go into Kavalian space, find his brother and kill him along with the Kavalian Prefect and as many of their Pride Leaders as possible."

"Tukannupae!" Joci gasped softly with wide eyes.

Yuriko nodded. "Yes... that is what I said when he first came to me and told me about it. No one else knew... not even Andro... and that is why I knew I would play a part in it."

“Yuriko... that doesn’t explain how he is here.” Sivana spoke. “We... we watched him die as we were leaving Hadaria. It... it was broadcast live across the Union. We watched him and Torma die in Sparta! Anja... Anja could no longer feel him within Mindvoice! It affected her physically!”

“I will come to that part... but first... seven years ago... shortly after I took command of OMEN THREE... we received reports of a secret High Coven Cloning facility. Armetus had known it was there for sometime and so did my father and they knew what its purpose was, but until the OMEN ships came into being we never really had the ability to get close to it.” Yuriko explained. “It was the very first mission we had back then and while we suspected what its true purpose was as I said... we did not know for sure until more recently when the Hadarian Arch Ministry called mother back to Hadaria to face those ridiculous charges. Well... we did not know for sure, but I now believe father did know and that is why he ordered Filrian and I on our mission.”

“What do you mean?” Eurin asked.

“It was a cloning facility Divine One.” Yuriko told them seeing their eyes go wide. “A very advanced cloning facility that was using procedures and advanced technology that the High Coven gained from the section of the Mindvoice ship that crashed on Nuwaroa. They were making clones. Clones of my father’s old SEAL Team... clones of my mothers... and they were trying to make clones of Uncle Daniel and... of father.” She looked at Ceuma. “That is... it is where you came from Ceuma.”

“By the gods!” Eurin gasped as she sat back.

“We had an idea of what they were doing there, just not the entire scope and complexity of it.” Yuriko continued. “Father knew I think and he contacted me before they left for Hadaria and gave me new orders. Pirates or mercenaries had assaulted the facility just after we began to actively monitor it seven years ago. We did not know what they had taken until we ourselves destroyed the facility several months ago, but after the Chief Minister demanded mother return I think father figured it out completely. Filrian and I only confirmed it for him when we attacked and destroyed the facility. They...”

“These pirates? They took me.” Ceuma said softly.

Yuriko met her eyes and nodded. “Yes. It appears that was the case.” She stated. “The clones were all in sealed Cryo chambers, so your chamber must have been kept somewhere that they could maintain it all of this time until their plan was ready for full implementation.”

“Kavalian space probably.” Filrian spoke now as he moved up behind Yuriko and placed his hand on her shoulder. “Aside from the High Coven they are the only ones with the cloning capabilities to maintain a Cryo chamber for any length of time. At least until they were ready to use its contents.”

“They... they had me all that time?” Ceuma asked softly.

“It would appear so. When Buonau and Wiktor were ready to move against mother they woke you up.” Yuriko said.

“Damn that woman for defying nature and everything holy by delving into such things!” Eurin snarled. “We are not gods and we should not act like it!”

“Father came up with this plan over a year ago as I said.” Yuriko said continued. “The Coven had improved their cloning process through the years Divine One. Far in advanced of what they did with grandmother Gorgo. Armetus and father determined after talking with Avi that they had somehow managed to make some discoveries from the remains of their Mindvoice ship. Looking at the data after we destroyed the facility, we discovered they had devised a way to clone a Lycavorian and insure that his or her scent would match almost exactly. Mother believed they had somehow tapped into the genetic code of the actual scent gland itself and discovered how to replicate it. Then they were implanted surgically into the new clones and acted as any normal scent gland would.”

“Yuriko... this would explain the exacting nature of Ceuma perhaps... why she is so nearly perfect in every way to Anja, but...” Eurin started.

Yuriko looked at the near identical twin to her mother. “According to the data cores we got from the facility prior to its destruction, you were from an earlier batch of clones Ceuma. Before mother was turned by father and before they had mastered implanting the new scent glands.”

“Lucky me.” She stated disdainfully.

“There is no way Aikiro could have cloned your father Yuriko. It was determined long ago that your father’s blood is too pure. Too powerful. The cohesiveness could not be sustained in a clone. Your mother Aricia as well... not too mention Daniel Simpson and a handful of others.” Eurin said.

“That does not mean she did not try Divine One.” Yuriko said. “That is what Filrian and I took from the facility before we destroyed it. An incomplete clone of father.”

“Incomplete how?” Sivana asked.

Filrian nodded now. “Exceptionally deformed... both physically and mentally but with the exact proportions we needed.” He answered. “How he knew there were clones of himself there I don’t know. To be honest I don’t know if I want to discover that.”

“He spent far more time with Avi than most people realize. Andro as well.” Atropos said. “He... Avi seemed to gravitate to them quite a bit. Perhaps this is where he determined it. By speaking with Avi.”

Sivana nodded her head. “That would fit with things Anja has told me through the years about Avi and the vast knowledge he held.”

“You said exact proportions. Exact proportions needed for what?” Joci asked now thoroughly enthralled.

“To use the SGT.” Yuriko answered. “The Ship to Ground Teleporter.”

“Ship to ground teleporter!” Atropos gasped. “That never... that program never left the test phase! Your mother deemed it too dangerous! Only the short range teleporters in the Mark Eleven saddles made it past her scrutiny enough to be put into service.”

Yuriko met his eyes. “Atropos... you more than any of us should know that my father is stubborn to a fault. He had Avi and Ben continue working on the program and they obviously got it to a working prototype because that is what we have on OMEN THREE. After everything went down at SODRAG, father contacted me. I don’t know what he found out but he ordered me to standby in orbit under Shroud and wait for his signal. We had the clone, and while it was deformed it still carried enough of a mint like scent similar to father to pass muster at least initially.”

Sivana leaned forward in her chair. “You... you teleported Torma Yuriko! How... what did you put in his place?”

Eurin looked at her from across the table. “Your father cloned him didn’t he?” She spoke disapprovingly.

Yuriko shook her head. “Actually... we have Andro and Elynth to thank for that.” She stated.

“I don’t understand.” Eurin said. “I thought they did not know of this.”

“They didn’t.” Yuriko said. “The original plan was to have the STRIKER accident as I said. After SODRAG father changed it. He had us remove the body of Naruth from SODRAG. Javier Moran’s dragon. The one Andro and Elynth killed during the battle there. We... we dyed his scales with an irreversible obsidian color to match Torma’s scales and...”

“Wait... I saw this Naruth!” Atropos spoke. “He did not match Torma in size. He was not even close!”

Yuriko nodded. “Torma was going to die in an explosion at SODRAG.” She explained. “We were going to teleport Torma out just as we teleported Naruth’s corpse in. The explosion would account for... it would account for why not all parts of him would be discovered. It would certainly pass a cursory inspection. At least until Isheeni or Aurith realized it wasn’t him. By that time... father would have already made contact with them via Mindvoice and let them know what was going on. It just so happens that it was Andro and Elynth who discovered it at the same time they realized it wasn’t our father that was killed. Isheeni hasn’t left Aurith’s side at the remains of the Senate building waiting for the rescuers to find Aunt Deia and our mother but by now they both know that Torma is alive.”

“Anja... Aricia... none of them knew this?” Eurin gasped.

“Oh no... they knew what father’s plan was. He would never keep something like this from them. Two of my mothers were to be part of it.” Yuriko answered. “I don’t think they knew to what extent he had advanced the plan though. He didn’t foresee that his brother would strike so soon and he did not have time to inform them of what was happening. He thought he had months to continue planning before Pusintin would come after him directly. He made the decision obviously during the battle by Aunt Tarifa’s home when things looked their worst. He more than likely deduced they would slack off their attack if they thought they had killed him. This would give Colonel Fache and Uncle Danny enough time to mount a counterattack and get those he loved to safety.” Yuriko grew silent for a long moment. “He underestimated just how far Pusintin... how far his brother would actually go to kill him obviously.”

“You said his injuries were healed?” Eurin asked.

Yuriko nodded. “The timing had to be perfect or else others would detect what happen.” She explained. “Once father activated the signal we maintained a constant sensor lock on his position. The grenades that were fired hit at the exact time we were teleporting him which we didn’t plan for. We actually teleported eight pieces of shrapnel along with him. He suffered severe abdominal lacerations and one large piece of shrapnel punched through his thigh cutting his artery when he rematerialized here on OMEN THREE. Filrian was able to stabilize him immediately... but ever since we brought him on board he has been comatose like you see. I can feel the tremors of his resonance within Mindvoice but I have never experienced or seen shields like he has up now... if they are even shields at all.”

“What do you mean?” Atropos asked.

“They don’t feel like shields Atropos.” Yuriko said looking at him knowing he would have more knowledge of Mindvoice than the others. “It... it feels like a large seamless wall. Smooth... unblemished. Polished.”

“Torma cannot help him?” Eurin asked.

Yuriko shook her head. “Torma is just as confused as we are. He is conscious inside his mind... but he is not retreating out of Mindvoice for some reason. Even Torma cannot draw him out. That is why I sent for mother. She has drawn him out of something similar in the past. I only hope... I only hope she can do it again.”

“Your brother Yuriko!” Eurin gasped as her eyes went wide. “He...”

Yuriko looked at her. “What Divine One?”

“We saw it on the Netnews just before we arrived.” Sivana spoke softly knowing what Eurin was going to say. “He... he destroyed the clinic where the clones of Martin and Torma were. The reports said there... there was nothing left of the building.”

Yuriko nodded. “Father touched him then.” She said confidently. “Father said Andro would be the first to realize it and Andro would not have allowed anyone to examine the bodies once he discovered the truth.”

“Yuriko... your father and mother are Anomes.” Zaniai spoke now. “The Netnews... the reports say he... they say Andro...”

“He gave her Protrilene.” Sivana said softly. “To speed her death because her anome was gone.”

Yuriko nodded once more. “Yes I know Tenna.” She said. “Andro contacted me via Mindvoice using a Mark II booster as you were landing. Mother is on a STRIKER and will arrive here in five hours.” She said to the stunned looks of almost everyone.

“Yuriko... who else knows all this?” Atropos asked while the others looked at her in shock.

“Aside from those of us in this room and Andro... no one.” She replied. “He will more than likely tell Sadi if she does not know already. Like father he will keep nothing from his anome or his other mates. The Feravomir too. We did not speak for very long...”

“Does he know what is wrong with your father?” Ceuma asked.

“I gave him a short description... but I was not able to go into as great a detail as I was with all of you.” Yuriko answered. “When I told him mother was arriving he only nodded and said she was the one who would bring him out.”

“Yuriko... we must let everyone know!” Eurin said suddenly. “They must know your father lives!”

Yuriko came to her feet slowly. “No.” She stated plainly. “Androcles will agree with me on this Eurin. These attacks against our family... they were well planned and executed. The Kavalians had inside knowledge of our movements, our schedules, what we would do. They knew where our mother Dysea was, and with her Normya as well. No one outside of our family and the Durcunusaan had that information. And the Durcunusaan would never betray us. Not to mention that we do not know if what occurred on Hadaria is in some way tied together with these attempts. I believe they are in some manner and I think Andro does as well.” Yuriko shook her head as she moved to the glass next to Atropos and looked across the corridor at where her adopted mother was standing beside her father’s bed holding his hand tightly within both of hers. She finally turned her eyes to look at Atropos. “Father must remain dead for now. If only to give Andro the time he needs to find out who among our own people have helped the Kavalians, and to make sure that no Kavalians remain hidden, waiting to strike again. Next time they may very well succeed.”

“Aovi.” Atropos spoke softly.

“It will not look odd if mother does not return to Earth right away. She is the only Queen who is not dead, injured or out of touch.” Yuriko spoke turning back around. “The Netnews knows Andro will want to keep her safe until things return to some form of normalcy.”

“Then you believe that For'mya is...” Sivana spoke softly.

“I believe what my brother believes.” Yuriko said softly in a pained voice. “We can no longer feel her within Mindvoice Aunt Sivana. If... if she was alive we should be able to detect even the barest tremors of her aura within Mindvoice as we do with all our family no matter the distance. We cannot feel her... and that does not bode well.”

“Will she be able to help him Yuriko? Can she pull him out of this state he is in?” Eurin asked finally.

“She has done it before Divine One. She is the only one to have done this. Andro believes this as well.” Yuriko said. “All of you consider her to be the most powerful Healer in the Union and she is, but what you don't realize is that behind only my father, my brother and my mother Aricia, she is perhaps the strongest Mindvoicer in our family. Certainly on a par with the Feravomir. Not many realize that. She has saved him before and that was before she was turned and had all the training and experience she does now.”

Yuriko turned back to look at Anja through the glass. “She will save him again. She has too... for if she doesn't, my brother will unleash a living hell upon the universe on his path to retribution for all the wrongs people have committed against our family. Nothing will stand in his path and he will not stop until our uncle lies at his feet for what he has done and the High Coven and the Kavalian Federation are nothing but vague memories floating on the wind. And believe me when I say that is something none of us want to experience, for if you believe my father has a temper...” Yuriko turned back and looked at them. “You have not experienced anger like I have felt coming from my brother these last hours. He is holding it in... controlling it now and Sadi is helping him. Father being alive has curbed that anger somewhat... but we do not want to see it come out Divine One. Ever.”

“Yuriko you must...” Eurin began to speak.

Yuriko's eyes narrowed and she shook her head. “No Divine One... I will not control it! The Kavalians have attacked us personally! They have killed nearly a thousand of our people! They have helped to usurp my mother from her rightful place as Queen! If the Kavalians have killed our mothers... if they have killed our mothers then there is not a force in this universe that will stop my father and brother from making them pay! And there is not a Leonidas alive that will not stand with them! That is what you should fear Divine One. That is what you should fear and pray does not happen.”

TALON OF JUSTICE

THE WILDS

NEAR THE CONSORTIUM BORDER

“Helm... position report!” Dutkne asked from his command chair as the last vestiges of their final jump passed and the stars became normal again as they looked out the two view windows at the front of the bridge of the TALON.

“Six three nine four one point seven! Exactly as we plotted!” The man answered.

Dutkne got to his feet. “Then we are in The Wilds?” He stated softly.

“Yes sir! The Lycavorian Union border is 19.2 light years from our current location! The Kavalian border is 36.9 light years to starboard, and The Consortium is 64.1 light years to our port!”

“How... how do you know that?” Devra gasped from where she stood.

Devra stood with Nirilo and his sisters off the left side of where Dutkne stood in the right center of the bridge. Wayonn stood slightly behind Dutkne to his right next to Drey and Caia. The last few hours had been quite eye opening for Devra and she was still trying to catch up with everything that was happening. Just a week ago she would never have imagined she would be aboard a Lycavorian ship in an area of space that no Vanari had ever been to before. She had to say; the professionalism showed by the men and women on Dutkne's ship was somewhat of a surprise to her. They had treated her and Arduri and Naesta with the utmost respect and honor, something that her former husband and others on the Board of Regents said they did not possess or display. Even Naesta, who was more militant towards the Lycavorians because of her father Coren's influence, was much more subdued by what she saw. Naesta had spent more time with Coren than Nirilo, Caliria or Arduri while she grew. It was only after she became a member of the military and a Vanari Commando that her ideals had begun to change. The Vanari military had a much higher level of respect for the Lycavorians and what they had accomplished as well as what they could do. Those teachings had affected Naesta and now they were beginning to come out.

Dutkne looked at her. "Grandfather was given the charts of this area of space some years ago. He has had a contact here feeding him information about the Union. It was Martin who gave him updated charts when they spoke last within Mindvoice."

Devra turned with wide eyes to where Wayonn stood. "Wayonn is this true?" Her stunning green eyes narrowed as she saw the look on Wayonn's face. "Wayonn... are you alright?"

Dutkne turned to look at his grandfather. "Grandfather?" He spoke in a worried voice as he moved up next to him. "Grandfather... what is it? Androcles? Martin?"

Wayonn reached out and grasped Dutkne's shoulder tightly and looked at him with a grim smile. "He is alive Dutkne." He stammered as Drey and Caia also came up next to him. "Martin is alive."

"You are sure grandfather?" Caia spoke her voice filled with renewed hope as she moved up next to him to provide him the support of her body if he needed it.

Wayonn nodded. "Yes. He has... he is deep within Mindvoice Dutkne and there is some sort of shield he has risen. I've never seen or felt anything like it. It's so powerful I could not sense him until we entered the system. I doubt... I doubt I would have detected it if I had not been actively searching. It is almost as if he is in one of the..." Wayonn's eyes grew slightly wider. "Oh Martin my boy..." He exclaimed softly. "Oh that... I would never have thought you could do that."

Dutkne shook his head slowly looking at him. "I feel nothing grandfather." He said. "I can feel nothing but..."

Wayonn looked at him. "Reach out boy. Your shields Dutkne... bring them to my level." He stated. "We are close enough now for you to feel Androcles at least. I am more attuned to Martin because I have already touched him and I can sense Canth's imprint as well as Helen's on him. Follow what I taught you and you will feel him. He is not as angry now... he's more focused... but still burning brightly with emotion."

"You can... you can feel them... even from here?" Arduri asked in surprise. "How can you do this?"

Caia looked at her. "It is possible for those with powerful strands of Pralor blood to sense one another across great distances within Mindvoice Arduri Re Mydala." She explained to all of them. "It is stronger between family members with the same blood, just as it is for Lycavorians. When you combine the two... yes... it's very possible for those with my grandfather and Dutkne's advanced abilities within Mindvoice."

Devra looked surprised and she glanced at Nirilo and then her daughters before turning back to Caia. "We... we did not know this ability of yours was so strong."

Caia nodded. "The purer the blood... the stronger the individual. Martin Leonidas and his son are descended directly from Sumar and another of the six bloodlines... so not only is their Pralor blood purest of all... but their Lycavorian blood is the purest of any Lycavorian who lives today. They will no doubt be much stronger. My grandfather has said they have the ability to focus enough and bring their psychic abilities into physical manifestation. It is what Sumar was able to do... and King Resumar."

Dutkne closed his eyes and lowered his shields to the same level as his grandfather and his face grew semi tense as he felt the myriad of tremors within Mindvoice as he reached out tentatively. He let his grandfather lead him past the minor ones until he too saw the dozen plus burning points within Mindvoice and his forehead relaxed as he allowed the essence and resonance of the minds he felt to course over him. Three or four of those minds were easily as powerful if not more so than his own and his grandfather which stunned him as he realized for the first time that he and Wayonn were no longer the strongest Mindvoicers. He could also detect the lack of focused ability to shield from many of them, and while that may have been sufficient against those they had faced up until now, it would not do against some of the more powerful Mindvoicers within the Protectorate. Without thinking Dutkne began to run through the skills he could teach Androcles and the others in regards to this. "Grandfather... there are... so many."

Wayonn nodded his head slowly and drew on Dutkne's own powerful presence within the tremors of Mindvoice to steady and focus himself as well. "Yes... Aricia, Sadi and Helen are three of them. The others..."

we are still too far away for me to determine who they are for I have never felt them before. More than likely their Bonded Ones and their other mates if I had to guess.”

Dutkne opened his eyes and looked at Wayonn. [Should we tell them grandfather? About their Bonded Ones I mean?]

Wayonn shook his head slightly. [No. Nirilo knows and that is enough for now. They will discover it soon enough. I may trust them to a great extent... but I do not wish to reveal too much too soon. It protects them as well as us.]

[Why?]

[I have told you what type of man Martin is Dutkne. Androcles is very similar. They will need to make their own impression and decisions. I have no doubts they will get the help they need to find Caliria but...]

Wayonn spoke confidently. [How Devra and her daughters act will play a large role in that. We need the Vanari on our side... but I will not dismiss my people or our history because of them.]

Dutkne nodded. [Neither will I.]

Wayonn smiled slowly. [You are beginning to feel it aren't you? The closer we get the stronger it will become you know.]

[I may feel it grandfather, but that does not mean I have to accept it.] Dutkne said with a shake of his head.

Wayonn smiled and squeezed his shoulder. [We are strangers in a strange land Dutkne. They know this area of space and the species in it. We will need to tread very carefully while we are here grandson.] Wayonn said. [I am fine. Feeling Martin once more was abrupt. I am not as used to his aura as I am yours.] Wayonn squeezed his shoulder once more. “I am fine.” He stated out loud this time. He turned to Devra then. “Do you have an idea where the Syndicate ship has gone Devra?”

Devra looked at Nirilo and her daughters and then turned back to him. “No.” She stated sheepishly.

Naesta took a deep breath. “I did not factor in the time variable and the corresponding quotients.” She admitted. “The trail we were following would not have been the correct one once we jumped here.”

“I will not give up looking for her!” Devra snapped firmly. “I don't care where we are! Give us the updated charts that you have of this area of space and we will make our own way Wayonn.”

Wayonn shook his head. “Coreward of the Perseus Arm is unlike anything you have ever experienced Devra. And many of the races here make the Orionis Syndicate appear as children when it comes to violence and their treatment of others. Trust me on this... I have visited this area of space several times through the years. We need help.”

“We can take care of ourselves.” Arduri stated confidently.

Dutkne turned to face her now. “No one doubts your skill Arduri Re Mydala. Or yours Naesta.” He stated. “You have come here with us and for me to just let you go off on your own is not only stupid... but tactically unsound for any number of reasons.”

Nirilo nodded. “He's right mother.” He said. “Father will discover where you have gone eventually and if something happens to you or my sisters while you are with us he will blame the Protectorate. He may even send a force here looking for you.”

Devra met his eyes for a long moment and then finally nodded. “What... what do you propose Wayonn?”

Wayonn stepped forward. “Come with us.” He said. “You will find that the Lycavorian Union has an exceptionally foul disposition towards slavery of any kind Devra. They always have and it only grew more intense when Martin reclaimed the throne of his grandfather. Two of his mates are elves and there are many who consider female elves great prizes. For some of the same reasons as Vanari females.”

“They learned this distaste from the millennia under the thumb of the Coven didn't they Wayonn?” She said softly.

Wayonn nodded. “Yes. If it is help you need Devra... help you will find with them. They will not turn you away.”

“Dutkne!” The woman barked from her station turning in her chair. “We're picking up an open transmission from within Lycavorian Union space! One of their Netnews channels! You and Wayonn need to see this!”

Dutkne looked at Wayonn who nodded. He turned to the female. "Put it up on the main holomonitor!" He ordered. "What is it?"

"Some sort of news transmission." She answered.

"Let's see it." Dutkne said.

The main monitor on the right shifted its view to that of a single story structure. They could see hundreds of men, women and children milling about as darkness began to fall on wherever this was being transmitted from.

"Where is this from?" Wayonn asked quickly.

"The origin of the signal is Sparta on Earth." She replied quickly. "It's being bounced between repeater beacons but if I have the time distortion right it took place only a few hours ago."

"...was the scene at the Western Medical Clinic near the Royal Estate Villa only a few moments ago." The female voice spoke in the background. "Hundreds have gathered here where General Simpson brought the bodies of the King and Torma. As you can see below us, there is an active and very heavy Durcunusaan presence around the entire facility as the Crown Prince landed only moments ago on Elynth. He spoke briefly..."

Devra moved up next to Wayonn. "Durcunusaan?" She asked him softly.

Wayonn nodded to her. "Wolves of the Blood in our ancient language. The Lycavorian Spartan Hippies Selda is part of their ranks. The Royal Guard." He told her. "Those with the purest Lycavorian blood within the Union as they measure it; combined with the strongest of the turned species. Elves. Human. Of all the Union forces they are the most well trained and led and they are who you do not want angry at you. For any reason. If what I saw in Martin's mind is accurate there are even many vampires in their ranks."

"Vampires?" Arduri asked quickly. "I thought... I thought your people hated vampires. Of any kind."

Wayonn shook his head. "Many millions of former High Coven citizens deserted them over the years. They were accepted into the Union as friends and allies and are trusted. They have built homes and futures where before they had none within the Coven. There have been many interspecies marriages between Lycavorian wolf and vampire through the years as well. One of Martin's five wives and mates is a pureblood vampire named Isabella. His first born son Androcles's second mate is a pureblood vampire. They are much more accepting of others than their ancestors and this has made them stronger through the years."

"Five?" Devra asked softly.

Wayonn nodded. "Martin has five mates; his son Androcles three when I last touched Martin."

"Are they not satisfied with just one?" Arduri quipped.

Wayonn looked at her. "They would be if that is what destiny dictated they have Arduri Re Mydala. Martin and his mates have been together for over twenty-five years and their love for each other as well as Martin is famous within the Lycavorian Union."

"Each other?" Naesta asked as she moved up beside her sister. "His wives... they...?"

Wayonn nodded his head. "They love and share each other without question. Just as they do Martin. They are bound to each other in ways it is hard even for me to understand. Androcles and his new mates as well. Do not judge them by the number of mates they have Arduri, for it is not the norm among our people. For Martin and his sons and some of those close to him it is preordained though."

"I just don't see how they could truly love more than one woman." Arduri said her voice neutral.

Wayonn smiled at her. "They can... and they do. Intensely." He stated turning back to the monitor to watch.

"...been roughly six hours since the attacks began and those of us here in Sparta are still trying to come to terms with what has happened. For many of us who are younger, King Leonidas is the only King we have ever known. We have grown with him since his return to our people. We have lived his life with him. I dare say he has surpassed even the popularity of his father's memory, a man who is revered across the entire Union for his sacrifice and for being the catalyst that finally forged the Union into what it is today. We have watched the birth of all his children with his beloved wives and mates and many of the men and women you see around me arrived here crying. They have come here to say their goodbyes to a King that was perhaps the most approachable leader in history, of any society. We all remember his walks among the streets of Sparta with Queen Dysea or Queen Aricia. Playing with children in the street or simply shopping with the Feravomir. We remember the few times he and Queen Anja were caught arguing in public about one thing or another as cherished mates will always do, and how it always seemed that she won the arguments handily and we would laugh as our King bowed to her will. We remember the times he would chase his children through the streets of Sparta in wolf form, giving the Durcunusaan fits as they tried to protect him. We remember all these things and now we must say goodbye to a King who has been taken from us far too soon. We...

They watched the picture shift quickly back to the building and they paid rapt attention.

“...don’t know!” The female voice echoed as she was talking to someone out of their picture. “Something is happening at the clinic! The Durcunusaan are running away from the building! We can not hear what is being yelled, but General Simpson is waving his arms frantically. I am only a Tier Four yet... yet I can feel the incredible power within Mindvoice building! I have never felt anything like it... it SON VADA CARIANS!”

Wayonn and the others on Dutkne’s ship stood frozen in their spots as the scene shifted to the single story building again just as nearly the entire roof of the structure blew outwards and they watched the massive monstrosity rise from the flaming pyre below with huge flaps of a dozen meters long wingspan. Wrapped in some kind of gleaming armor they could only watch in awe as the armored leviathan stopped in mid air above the structure and began to direct a stream of flame tinged superheated breath back into the facility below. They watched as the armored shape of the man lifted his hands and as the focus shifted they could see two glowing azure blue eyes as two glimmering silver balls of incredible psychic power formed and then he sent them hurtling back earthward to smash into the building below. The explosion that followed was devastating.

“By the Grace of the Four Prophets!” Devra gasped as she watched, moving closer to the main monitor.

“...vada carians! Crown Prince Androcles has just destroyed the clinic holding the remains of his father and Torma!” The female voice shouted. “He used... he used huge Mindvoice balls of power to obliterate the entire structure while it still burns from his Bonded Sister’s flame stream! Nothing... nothing could survive that!”

The transmission stopped abruptly and Dutkne turned to her with wide eyes. “Chief!” He barked.

She was trying to adjust her consoles but shook her head. “It’s gone!” She announced. “It was an old transmission Dutkne! Bouncing between different repeater stations! I...”

Dutkne turned to Wayonn. “Grandfather! They said Androcles destroyed the remains of his father! They are speaking as if he is dead!”

Wayonn shook his head. “I don’t know what is going on Dutkne!” He spoke quickly. “I can feel him! He is not dead! You felt it yourself! I swear to you!”

Devra looked at Arduri and Naesta as they stepped up to her. “What was that?” Arduri gasped looking at Wayonn. “What manner of beast was that? It breathed... it shot fire from its mouth! What... what did he throw from his hands? Who was that?”

Dutkne stepped up to his grandfather ignoring Arduri's questions. “Grandfather?” He asked as Caia took his arm and looked at him.

Wayonn shook his head once more. “Martin Leonidas is not dead Dutkne.” He stated firmly.

“Then why do our people believe him to be?” Caia asked softly.

“I don’t know.” Wayonn answered. “Something must have happened since I touched him last and that is why his condition is such. Why I felt intense anger and hate from Androcles before we departed.”

“Answer my sister’s questions!” Naesta barked now.

Nirilo moved up next to Dutkne and Drey now. “Could what happened before be why you staggered earlier Wayonn?” He asked.

Wayonn looked at him and nodded. "It must be. I gave Martin some information in regards to his brother and plans against their family but I thought he had months before anything happened. My contact... Shiria... she told me she expected any sort of action was months away!" Wayonn turned to Dutkne. "Apparently it has already happened. We must make all haste to Earth Dutkne."

Dutkne didn't hesitate and turned to his crew. "Helm plot a course to Earth! Engage Trans-Quantum drive and increase speed to maximum! And spool up the Spatial Distorter! I don't want anyone to know we are coming! At least not yet!"

Drey grabbed his arm. "Dutkne is that wise?" He asked. "The SD will render us invisible to their scanners, but once we enter Union space that could be taken for hostile action if we are seen by one of their ships." Drey said.

"Grandfather?" Dutkne said.

"He's right." Wayonn spoke. "How long until we reach the border?"

"Seven hours." Dutkne answered.

"The closer we, get the stronger our connection will be with them." Wayonn said. "When we reach the border we can attempt to contact Androcles or Helen and let them know we are coming."

"Will they listen?" Dutkne asked.

"I hope so." Wayonn replied.

"Excuse me!" Devra exclaimed loudly causing everyone to look at her. "Will someone explain to me what we just saw? What was that creature? And how was that man able to do that?"

RIZON FOUR

OUTER EDGE OF KAVALIAN SPACE

.07 LY FROM BORDER OF THE WILDS

She stepped from the large bedroom onto the balcony and gazed across the land beneath her dressed only in the light blue floor length robe. She was naked underneath and as she lifted the finely crafted mug to her lips and sipped the tea, the cool morning breeze felt good on her skin. This had been her home on and off for the last ten thousand five hundred and six years though she appeared to be no more than her late twenties or early thirties in age. Her skin was smooth and flawless in nature, deeply tanned and supple. Her flowing dark brown hair fell to the middle of her back, cascading around her face and accenting high cheekbones and full, soft lips. She let her dark eyes reach out across the landscape before her to the west, taking in the towering thousand foot waterfall that stretched across one side of her mountain retreat. Steam rose in the cool air from the waterfall as the sun began its lazy journey up into the sky. The edges of the waterfall stretched for six hundred meters on one side of her ancient palace and for a thousand meters on the other. Trying to scale the cliffs would be a suicide mission considering their height, the vegetation growth and the hundreds of creatures that lived along the precarious outcroppings. None of them were very friendly in the least and anyone who attempted to climb the cliffs would not survive. For ten twisting and turning kilometers in either direction the valley stretched with no portion of it less than a thousand meters across. Essentially, it was the perfect natural barricade to any kind of assault by men or machine, and she had defenses for any assault from the air. Any ground attack would need to come from the east, and she had defenses for that as well.

This mountain retreat had been here when she first arrived, nothing but animals and insects with her. She had been happy at first to escape the slaughter of her people, but soon she grew lonely and sought out others. It was the Kavalian people she discovered. So barbaric and cruel in their practices. She had convinced Keleru's father before him, and then Keleru himself that she was some sort of Scribe Mother, hence the name they gave to her.

Scribe Mother Demahra.

She guided them in many endeavors over the years, offering advice and even some of the technology she had to maintain her intricate façade that she was something much more than just a female. Through the years however she had gathered many to her cause. A cause and path she had settled upon after witnessing the violent gang rape of a Kavalian female by six rutting males as a means of punishment. She had counseled Keleru's father against allowing such a thing to take place but he ignored her. They had savaged the poor female because she had refused the attention of one, and while her father and brothers looked on as she cried out for them to help her, they had raped her repeatedly for her actions. When they were done her body and mind were destroyed and she had watched as the young woman's father killed her in the street like some animal.

She knew then what she had to do, and through the many centuries she had chosen her followers covertly and well. Many of those same individuals had taken part in the biogenic treatments started by Keleru and his cronies and scores of them were now situated within the corridors of power. While they were not many in numbers, they were secreted away within the fabric of Kavalian society armed with knowledge as well as a few powerful surprises.

She knew the end game was approaching when Athani'Puat had come to her so many years ago. A young woman who wanted more than the life she was born into. The youngest daughter of the Prefect. She had prepared for years for this day, and the moment she was informed that Athani'Puat had defected and married the half elven son of Martin Leonidas she knew it was time. She knew who Martin was of course. She had known from the first moment she had sensed him come to Apo Prime. The pureness of his Pralor blood surpassed even her own and she was herself a pureblood Pralor. The pureness of his Lycavorian blood was without question, and when mingled together she doubted very much that anyone would supplant him. That mindset was only reinforced when she discovered who he had taken as his Lycavorian bride, and the pureness of her Pralor and Lycavorian bloodlines was also without equal. She knew there were other females who shared his life, and those he turned were exceptionally powerful in their own right because of him.

It was her that contacted Wayonn and helped him to set up the account in The Wilds. She knew of course who Pusintin was, and the blood he carried within his veins, and he was the reason she had helped Wayonn. When they saw what kind of man he was however, they knew he would not fulfill the destiny that both of them foresaw. It was the unborn son that eventually came to power, the child that everyone thought dead. It became apparent to her when Martin came back to his people that it was not going to be an easy feat to kill this man, and that gave her renewed purpose for what she hoped to accomplish. She felt him once more, as she had the last time they were together and she wondered what would have brought him out of his area of space so brazenly.

Those who followed her now, nearly five complete Prides numbering several million, they held different ideals that the Kavalians of old. They knew that in order to survive the future they had to change and adapt. The Nruarani Pride being the largest and most highly regarded. Maysi, the mother of the leader of Pride Nruarani and Pusintin's own daughter Nikkei resided here with her now, and she had no intention of allowing harm to come to them. She had been schooling Nikkei almost everyday since she had arrived, allowing her to see what most Kavalian women knew instinctively. She had been protected most of her life because of who her parents were, and upon discovering what Demahra had told her, Nikkei and rapidly pulled her pure Kavalian female friends that much closer in an almost protective manner. She was the image of her mother in her natural beauty, and after learning what she had, Nikkei had grasped the fact that her mother now loved a man who treated her as she should be treated.

They called her Scribe Mother Demahra... yet her given name... her Pralor name was Shiria.

She turned from the flocks of birds that orbited the river below looking for food as she heard the soft whine of the door open and then close. She watched as the six legged metallic drone moved across the stone floor of her huge bedroom beside the lithe frame of the Kavalian female. This drone was one of nearly forty that she had taken from VORTEX Cruiser 341 when she left that ship buried in the mountains on Ritaah. They had helped her to rebuild this palace into what it was now. The one that skittered across the floor was her personal drone and the female was one of two sisters who knew who and what she really was. They were her most promising students and now her most experienced agents and they had proved their loyalty to her and the cause they had all fought for countless times in the past. Shiria trusted them with her life, and after so many years depending on no one but herself and her own wits, Shiria was so very happy she finally had those she could call friends. Ckaoa and Poysha'Miatt were as close to her as anyone had ever been in her nearly eleven thousand years of life, and to Shiria that meant more than anything else. Their father had given them to her some four hundred years ago as a gift to her position as Scribe Mother of the Kavalian people. He was a traditional Kavalian male, but he was one of only a few forward thinkers back then. He had given them to her as a means to save them from the life he knew they would have to endure. Ten years ago, he had been assassinated by members of the Puma Bane Pride for speaking out against Prefect Keleru and the course of the war with the High Coven.

The biogenic treatments they had undergone had altered their appearance from when she had first seen them as young Kavalian females of six and seven years of age, but it had not altered their dedication and loyalty to her, especially since the death of their father, mother and many members of the Miatt Pride. Ckhoa' Miatt was the more cerebral of the two sisters while Poysha was one of the most skilled fighters Shiria had ever seen. They both were exquisitely beautiful for Kavalian females even before the biogenic treatments had removed all the hair from their bodies. Now they were downright breathtaking. They were as opposite as sisters could get, but the deaths of their parents and so many members of their Pride made them love each other that much more intensely. There was nothing that they would not do for each other.

The young woman bowed her head in reverence. "Good morning Scribe Mother." She said softly with a touch of humor. "Forgive us for disturbing you."

Shiria heard the small, half meter high drone emit several high pitch whistles and squeaks in its greeting to her and she chuckled. "Good morning to you as well Tantra One three." Shiria answered. "What brings you and my sarcastic young aide Ckhoa here at this early hour?"

"Forgive me... Shiria." The young female spoke shyly. "I'm still somewhat tired."

Shiria smiled and waved her hand. "You were up late last night with Nikkei going over the Scrolls of the Chief Elder Ckhoa. I want to know why you are awake so early now."

"Tantra 13 did not want to disturb you initially Shiria so he came to me." The young woman spoke.

"Did not want to disturb me in regards to what?" Shiria asked.

Ckhoa held out the data pad. "It appears as if Prefect Keleru and Marshall Pusintin have made their move against the Union. Poysha received this from an intercepted transmission to the Prefect's nephew Kattu."

Shiria took the pad and began reading, her eyes going wider as she read. She turned back to Ckhoa quickly. "This... this is why I felt him!" She gasped.

"Felt who Shiria?" Ckhoa asked.

"Wayonn!" She announced in a loud whisper. "He has returned Coreward of the Perseus Arm Ckhoa! I felt him very briefly only a short time ago and then his shields went back up!" She stated. "I was confused because he was not trying to touch me. This is why!"

"If those reports are accurate Shiria then it would explain why he is here." Ckhoa spoke. "If they have succeeded in killing..."

Shiria lifted her hand dismissively. "Pusintin and Keleru' Puat could not kill Martin Leonidas if he himself loaded the weapon for them and then stood like a mountain right before their eyes!" She barked.

"Poysha says it was shown live all over the Union Netnews Shiria! The Federation run Information Bureau is beginning to run it as well." Ckhoa said. "Tantra 13 tapped into the open military channels and confirmed this."

Shiria shook her head. "No!" She stated. "I refuse to believe they were able to kill him! Wayonn has told me he has too much of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar in him to be caught off guard by idiots like Pusintin and Keleru! Something else entirely is going on!"

"Can you feel him now Shiria?" Ckhoa asked.

Shiria shook her head. "No... and I have never tried. I gave my word to Wayonn I would not. If I lowered my shields enough to touch him... even fleetingly... Wayonn said he would detect me instantly."

"He is that powerful?" Ckhoa asked.

Shiria nodded. "He is the descendant of Sumar Ckhoa. As is his son. You and Poysha are the only ones I have allowed to know this. To know all that I know. It is... it is because you lost everything just as I did. That is why I did this."

Ckhoa moved closer to her. "We have known why for some time Shiria." She stated softly. "We do not need to dredge up painful memories now."

"There were none stronger than Sumar and Xaxon Ckhoa... my own teachings to you and Poysha explained this. It is why the Council of Elder Pralors allowed Sumar to try and redeem his brother in the fashion they did, with the City Ship Mission. Wayonn is right in that regard... Martin Leonidas would have detected me almost immediately. When he did... he would have tossed caution to the wind to try and retrieve me, rescue me and keep me safe. His damnable honor would have made him do this." Shiria smiled and shook her head.

“There are days when I curse Dustha for choosing the Spartan people to be the ones to bring the Ten Thousand to. And then there are days I bless her every action. She may not have Pralor blood in her, but she has the essence of Canth and it is just the same. If Martin were to have discovered I live, he would have invaded Kavalian space to come and get me and it would have caused a war much sooner than we anticipated.”

Ckhoa shook her head. “War may already be upon us Shiria. Poysa said there were more reports coming in. She spoke of attacks in The Wilds on Drow outposts. An attack against a planet called Kranek that apparently held the first elven Queen Dysea.” Ckhoa said. “She was moving very carefully... but she said she would have more for us this evening. And there is more.” Ckhoa said.

Shiria looked at her. “What else could there be?” She gasped. “This... this tells me that Keleru and Pusintin have put their plan into action. Whatever that plan is! And we did not see it coming! He is obviously more devious than I gave him credit for all these years.”

“Tantra 13 has lost the homing signal he was monitoring for you Shiria... the one from VORTEX Cruiser 341.” She spoke.

Shiria looked at the drone quickly. “Lost? What do you mean lost?”

“The signal was lost twenty-eight minutes ago.” Ckhoa told her. “We checked to make sure our receiver was operating and it is. When he came to me I immediately ran a diagnostic of all the ship’s systems and I discovered they were all active!”

“Active?” Shiria asked stepping closer to her.

“For the last week.” She said with a nod.

“A week!” Shiria exclaimed. “Why didn’t the security protocols activate? Why didn’t you come to us with this sooner Tantra 13?”

The drone bounced up and down on its legs and the room filled with more whistles and beeps. Shiria gasped.

“341 told you not to!” She called out. “You have been in touch with 341? When? For what purpose? I forbade you to contact him.”

The drone continued to beep and whistle and Ckhoa looked even more confused. She turned to Shiria. “Protocol Nine One?” She asked seeing Shiria’s eyes grow even wider. “What is Protocol Nine One?” Shiria turned away quickly deep in thought and Ckhoa drew closer to her. “Shiria?”

Shiria turned back around and met her eyes. “Protocol Nine One was... it is only to be used if someone of sufficient Etheric abilities and bloodline enters the ship.”

“Bloodline?” Ckhoa asked.

“Before I left Ritaah... I programmed Avatar 341 to not allow activation of the ship’s systems unless someone of Sumar’s bloodline or I entered. It is similar to what Sumar himself did before they sealed City Ship 41 according to Wayonn. Only... only someone of Sumar’s bloodline could activate VORTEX Cruiser 341 Ckhoa. The Avatar would never have responded to anyone else!” Shiria told her trusted aide.

Tantra 13 beeped and whistled more and she turned to face him. “Tantra 13... are you certain?”

Confirming beeps and whistles followed.

“Shiria?” Ckhoa asked.

“It appears as if the Avatar 341 took it upon himself to act. Somehow he detected that a descendant was coming and he took it upon himself to work around the security protocols he is programmed with.” Shiria stated.

“Worked around?”

Shiria nodded. “There are Kavalian rebels on Ritaah Ckhoa.”

“Yes we knew that.” Ckhoa answered. “Keleru’s oldest child. The son he tossed aside and the band he leads.”

“Well apparently... Avatar 341 discovered someone of sufficient Etheric abilities within that group of rebels. He used her to activate small portions of VORTEX Cruiser’s core systems. Enough to allow him to contact the descendant through another avatar as they approached.”

“Another Avatar?” Ckhoa gasped.

Shiria nodded. “It must be Avatar 41... from Sumar’s ship! It makes sense now!” She exclaimed with wide eyes. “When Martin Leonidas discovered that ship on Lycavore he must have activated Avatar 41 when he entered. That would explain how he was able to move it so easily and quickly back to Earth!”

“What does that mean?” Ckhoa asked. “Are you saying someone with the blood of Leonidas is on VORTEX Cruiser 341?”

Shiria looked at her and nodded. “Yes. It means that one or more of Martin Leonidas’s children... perhaps Martin himself... is on VORTEX Cruiser 341 and the Avatar will no longer accept my orders. By his very programming he will follow the commands of the senior Pralor.” Shiria answered. “Somehow he discovered the ship existed!”

“But... you would be senior to any descendant of Sumar! Wouldn’t you?” Ckhoa asked surprised.

Shiria shook her head. “When I left I was only an acolyte Ckhoa. Any descendant of Sumar would immediately trump my authority in 341’s programming.” She replied.

More beeps and whistles sounded from Tantra 13.

“Breached?” Shiria asked quickly. “Who could breach it? There are only three of us who know it even exists!”

“There has been unusual activity in the region over the last few weeks and Marshall Pusintin just deployed a Squadron of Destroyers to that sector.” Ckhoa told her quickly. “That information came in just last night from Poysa as well. A different contact that she has within the military. Contact was lost with a Kavalian Science Ship not far from Ritaah some twelve days ago as they moved to investigate a strange explosion, and it seems the Marshall is finally getting around to checking it. Perhaps it is they who have discovered and breached the ship now.”

Shiria looked at her. “After two weeks?” She spat. “That is not like Pusintin.”

“I found this odd as well.” Ckhoa told her. “Perhaps if you are correct... perhaps he has been focused on whatever plan they are currently conducting.”

“Do you still have contact with 341 Tantra 13?” Shiria asked the drone.

The drone bounced on its legs as more whistles and beeps followed while Ckhoa and Shiria gazed at him. Shiria’s eyes narrowed when he finished. “The other Avatars have been activated?” She spoke. “But why?”

Tantra went on another barrage of beeps and whistles for a good twenty seconds before he stopped.

“The Elder Mystics preserve us!” She gasped.

Ckhoa looked at her with that same confused expression. “They came to destroy it?” She spoke.

Shiria nodded her head slowly. “And now someone is attempting to stop them or steal whatever knowledge they can from its data cores! It is the only reason all the Avatars would be activated at once. Security Protocol dictated that only one Avatar would be active at any one time. If the other three are now active it could only mean that someone else is on that ship with them.”

“How would they have...?” Ckhoa began to ask.

Tantra 13 beeped more and Shiria’s eyes grew wider still. “According to the data he has exchanged with 341 in the last week, it appears as if it was a joint mission with the High Coven. I... I can’t believe he would have trusted her.” Shiria said as she listened to the drone’s series of whistles and beeps. “The Coven attacked them as they were landing but they fought them off. It seems they did not leave however. It must be them! No Kavalian science team would have the knowledge to breach the ship!”

“The High Coven?” Ckhoa asked. “But only Empress Aikiro would have such knowledge wouldn’t she? And she is dead!”

“Yes... which means Xaxon’s vile presence has somehow overpowered her daughter Yuri and given information to these Coven troops on what to look for and how to breach the hull when they find it.” Shiria said as she turned and moved back to her balcony but remained just inside the door as she stared out over the terrain far below. She finally spoke after a long moment. “Ckhoa... how long would it take for us to reach Ritaah from here if we took my ship?”

“Your ship?” Ckhoa asked in shock. “Shiria... you haven’t used your ship in over three hundred years. And they almost caught you the last time when you went to meet with Wayonn in The Wilds!”

Shiria turned to look at her. “That was because I tried to plot the course myself and you were not with me. One of Pride Nruarani’s ships perhaps?”

Ckhoa shook her head quickly. “It would take a full twenty-four hours at least, even on one of their new fast destroyers. Probably two since every Federation ship would be looking for them now and a direct course is out of the question. Keleru no doubt knows that it was Pride Nruarani that took Nikkei and they will be looking for them.”

“My ship it is then.” Shiria said.

“Shiria... this is a great risk!” Ckhoa spoke. “As advanced as your ship is... if it is captured or tracked it will...”

“And if the High Coven or Keleru gets their hands on even a small part of VORTEX Cruiser 341’s advanced technology, it could change the face of the universe. Martin Leonidas knows that and that is why he risks discovery to destroy it! We must take risks as well. The High Coven or Keleru would not use this technology for peaceful means as the Union has... you know that Ckhoa.” Shiria said. “It could very well bring them here that much quicker! My ship will mean little then!”

Ckhoa paused for only a moment for she knew who Shiria meant. “I will prepare the ship. We can depart in ten minutes.” She stated softly.

“Have Maysi choose six of Pride Nruarani’s finest to accompany us with Nikkei.” Shiria said.

Ckhoa looked at her. “Nikkei? Why?”

Shiria smiled. “I have studied all the information Wayonn has passed to me about Martin Leonidas and his family. I have studied it extensively. Unless I miss my guess... the only one of his sons that he would trust or that would have enough experience in this sort of mission behind Androcles, is Resumar. And if it is Resumar Leonidas... then Athani will be with him as well. He would not leave her behind.”

“She would return to Kavalian space! Knowing the danger that act posed to her?” Ckhoa gasped in surprise.

Shiria nodded. “Athani is many things Ckhoa... timid is not one of them. You should know that. She spent too much time with us to cower before anything. She left us to find love and a future and she has found it with Resumar Leonidas! She will never allow that to slip from her fingers now. Not even if it means returning to Kavalian space knowing there is a death sentence on her head.”

Ckhoa nodded her head after a moment. “I will see to it. I will meet you in the launch bay in ten minutes.”

“How long?” Shiria asked turning to meet her gaze. “We must leave quickly Ckhoa. I feel... I feel our place is with them now. The balance is shifting and we need to be with them to insure it maintains some semblance of order.”

Ckhoa shrugged her shoulders. “A single Phased Quantum Fusion Jump plotted precisely will put us there in less than thirty minutes.” She said easily. “We’ll cross through a portion of The Wilds and what used to be Consortium Space before Keleru annexed it, but we will remain out of the main Kavalian travel corridors for the most part.”

Shiria nodded. “Quickly Ckhoa.” She said.

RITAAH

VORTEX CRUISER 341

Dario ducked back behind the edge of the corridor as rounds from High Coven weapons ricocheted by his head and began reloading his P190. His eyes fell on Channa as she lay on the deck in front of him, her own hands filled with two K12 KMs as she was ripping shots down the corridor.

Dario tapped his jaw and activated his implant. “Res... we got big problems here cousin! The High Coven has come to visit!”

“It’s worst than that!” Resumar’s voice filled both of their implants. Dario’s eyes dropped to Channa as Resumar continued. “Somehow they have activated the other four Avatars Dario! Avi and 341 believe they are here to steal one or all of them!”

“So what?” Dario barked as he reached out and stuck the barrel of his 190 around the corner and let loose a long burst. “We have 341!”

“The other four avatars were connected to 341!” Resumar’s voice snapped. “They’ll know everything he does! About everything! Including this ship and everything we have talked about!”

“Sibfla!” Dario snapped.

“Mican is moving down an adjoining corridor parallel to your position!” Resumar’s voice echoed. “I’m moving up behind you and Channa!”

“The corridor here is too small for Sorran or Mirra to maneuver!” Dario exclaimed as Channa reached around and fired once more.

“I’ve sent Cemath to their entry point! They won’t be going out the way they came in!” Resumar declared. “There are only two ways out of that section of the ship now! We’ll have both of them covered in seconds!”

“What about the avatars?” Channa screamed out after tapping her own implant. She Mican and all the other rebels had been very excited to get the advanced COM implants and use them. They had them implanted within the first two days for the ease of communication with everyone and it also showed them that Resumar Leonidas was very serious about what he said. “Do we destroy them too Resumar?”

Avatar 341’s deep mechanical voice broke into their implants now.

-The other Avatars must not be allowed to leave the ship Channa- His voice spoke. -The followers of Xaxon must not gain the knowledge we possess-

“341... considering your size and the material used to build you... how exactly do we stop the other avatars?” Dario snapped.

-Your projectile weapons will not suffice to penetrate the outer shells of our bodies Dario. You must take very careful aim and shoot them through the eye sockets. This will be sufficient to fully penetrate the core motor functions in our processors and cause them to cease operation- 341 answered.

“That’s the only way?” Dario barked.

-Affirmative-

Dario looked at Channa. “Shoot them through the eye!” He barked. “No problem! And I’m sure they will just let us shoot them in the nubous eye!”

“It could be worse!” Channa announced as she ducked back behind the corner just as a fusillade of weapons fire impacted the wall where her head had been milliseconds before. She looked up at Dario with a brilliant smile and beautiful blue eyes.

“Yeah? How’s that?” Dario snapped back at her.

“You might not have had me here watching over you if you hadn’t decided to finally assault me while I was studying with Mirra!” She yelled over the sound of weapons.

“I did not assault you!” Dario screamed.

“What do you call it?” Channa quipped back.

“Making my intentions known!”

“By sticking your tongue down my throat?” Channa gasped.

“It worked didn’t it?” He snarled back with a grin. “Can we just kill these fools and get back home please! I would like to introduce my new mate to my mother while I am still alive!” He lifted his left arm and called forth his Shi Viska. Channa watched in some amazement as the gleaming shield appeared almost magically and she could hear the unnatural hum as if it was alive. Sorran! Our shields my brother!

Mirra! Channa called out as well within Mindvoice.

It took only a second for both of them to watch as the light blue psychic shields activated and engulfed their bodies. Channa scrambled to her feet and fell in next to Dario as she finished reloading.

“Ready?” He barked out.

Channa nodded. “Ready!”

“Here we go!” He screamed just before bringing his Shi Viska up in front of them as a shield and sprint walking down the corridor with Channa crouched low behind his taller and wider body, her hands holding the two K12s on either side of them as she sent projectile rounds sizzling down the corridor at an alarming rate.

The High Coven sergeant swore as he worked on the inert figure of one of the Avatars. Weapons fire was still as intense as it was since the first Lycavorian arrived several minutes ago and he was working as fast as his vampire speed allowed. He turned as the senior officer left alive blurred into the room.

“How much longer?” He hissed the question.

“I don’t know xsa ol! This is the last one and it seems to have more data than the others, but it also is downloading slower!” The sergeant barked. “I’ve never done this before and I’m only following the instructions given to us by the Empress!” (Damn it!)

“What were they?” The officer barked.

“To plug the data pad in, initiate the signal and wait for the download to finish!” The man snarled back. “They never said how long it would take for each one! And they didn’t say we’d be under fire while I was doing it! This is a delicate operation! These are the most advanced pieces of machinery I have ever seen and we were supposed to have killed all the vithin Lycavorians by now!!”

“We can’t hold them forever!” The officer complained as he reloaded his assault rifle. “The extraction ship is already inbound! We’ll only get one shot at this!”

“I can turn the other three back on!” The sergeant offered. “Their secure data cores have been breached and the Empress said they will go into defensive mode. They should attack anything that it deems a threat!”

“That means us too!” The officer shouted.

The sergeant shook his head quickly. “The Empress said the download also included a small program that would be uploaded at the same time that marks us as friendly. It’s why the other three didn’t attack us when we unhooked them from the main core! It will still be active! Turn them back on and let them go!”

“Are you sure?” The officer screamed.

“No... I’m not fucking sure! It may just buy us the extra time we need though! These things can’t be killed by regular weapons! And they might be able to clear us a path out of here!” The sergeant barked.

“Shu! Xun ol!” The officer barked. (Shit! Do it!)

The coven sergeant turned and took a small console from the floor, his fingers dancing across the control pad. They heard several beeps and turned as the near seven foot avatars sat up instantly.

-Systems Core Security Breach! Activating defensive monitoring-
-Multiple targets confirmed-
-Engaging protection mode-
-Eliminate infiltrating lifeforms-

The officer and sergeant watched as the three avatars got to their feet, split up and exited the alcove room on either side.

“I told you!” The sergeant barked. “Now let me finish!”

Avatar 341’s head came up so abruptly that Athani turned to look at him from where she stood between the two huge cyborg avatars from different ships.

“341?” She asked quickly. “341... what is wrong?”

-Someone has activated the defensive protocols of three of my fellow avatars-

Athani’s eyes grew wider. “What? What does that mean?” She demanded.

341 moved to a different console. -It means they will eliminate anything they perceive to be a threat. By any means possible-

“Well... well shut them down!” She snapped loudly.

-I am trying Athani Little One- He answered instantly. -An evasive program has been introduced into their Quantum Neural Processor nodes- He dropped his hands and looked at her. -I am unable to override it but I have slowed the download of the last avatar-

Athani reached up and tapped her jaw. “Resumar! Resumar three of those avatars have been turned loose in full defensive mode!” She hissed. “341 says it is some sort of evasive program! He can’t shut them down from here!”

“And? So?” Resumar’s voice filled the large bridge area.

-They will target anyone they have been programmed to perceive as a threat Resumar Leonidas- 341 spoke out loud. -I hypothesize that would not include the High Coven personnel currently infecting VORTEX Cruiser 341-

“Nubou! That’s just nubous wonderful!” Resumar’s voice declared. “Any other good news I ought to know 341?”

-There is no alternative now Resumar Leonidas. You must destroy the avatars in the manner I described-

“Avi?” Athani turned to look at him.

-341’s logic is accurate Resumar- Avi answered. -There is no longer an option to save them. This program is of a coalescing nature. It will continue to infect the Quantum nodes of the avatar processors until the entire network is destroyed-

“341?” Resumar spoke. “Will you be infected?”

-There is a possibility of feedback Resumar Leonidas- 341 answered.

“Then disconnect yourself from the network!” Resumar ordered. “Both of you Avi! Take yourselves out of the network until we have destroyed them!”

-Resumar Leonidas... if we do that we will be unable to provide you and Mican’s team vital information except for our internal sensors. Even at maximum output our internal sensors can not cover all of VORTEX Cruiser 341- Avi replied. -Essentially you will be half blind-

“Screw it!” Resumar snapped loudly through the bridge COM. “Losing even one of you is not worth the risk Avi! Disconnect yourselves now and feed us whatever information you can via your internal sensors! Aryschanne... once they are disconnected... take them and get down to the deck where the Kavalian rebels are. Keep them from leaving the area! I don’t want to risk their children being injured!”

“On our way!” Athani replied.

“Mican?” Resumar barked out.

“Na’lia has begun gathering the children and older ones into several rooms and forming a defensive perimeter!” Mican’s voice answered. “Thank you Resumar.”

“Thank me when we get the hell off this rock!” Resumar answered. “Mican... shift your team to Dario’s position! We’re going to come down the opposite corridor and move in behind them!”

“As you order. Athani?” Athani’s head came up from where she was pulling data pads from slots. “Insure... insure my family is safe sister. And that includes you. I do not wish to lose you so soon after discovering you.”

Athani felt concern and warmth spread through her at his words. Her brother. A brother she never knew she had until coming here. “And I don’t wish to lose my brother either.” She answered. “We will be fine.”

Athani turned as Avi and 341 unhooked several cables from their arms and shut down their two consoles.

“We’re moving now!”

341 moved to the door first and after scanning the immediate area with his internal sensors he turned back to Athani.

-This way-

Their combined shield was strong enough to deflect and rounds thrown at them as they advanced behind Dario's Shi Viska. Both of them could feel Sorran and Mirra concentrating intently on them from the deck below them which was much larger and wider, allowing them to move along unimpeded. So unimpeded in fact that they both walked right through an area of VORTEX Cruiser 341 that did not allow for Mindvoice communication. It did not shut down their body shields, but it kept Sorran and Mirra from realizing that four High Coven soldiers burst from an open doorway under full blur and slammed into Dario and Channa at full speed.

The collision separated them completely with one High Coven soldier picking Channa up and continuing into another large room and two lodging Dario between them as they blurred into the same room. All the Coven troops came to abrupt halts while releasing Dario and Channa, who continue to fly through the air. Dario smashed into a half dozen piled metal crates and flipped over the top disappearing behind them with a loud grunt of pain.

Channa slammed full force into the far wall and only a flick of her long tail kept her from crushing her skull by turning her body in midair. She fell to the floor dazed as she staggered on her knees and shook her head to chase away the fuzziness.

“Kavalian whore!” The voice roared.

Channa looked up just in time to catch the full brunt of the punch to her face. The blow impacted against her jaw and sent her head snapping around to smash into the wall causing stars to fill her eyes. She gasped at the pain but maintained enough sense to reach down with her tail and snatch the small blade she always kept secured in her boot top. The Coven soldier pulled back his hand to hit her again, fury stretched across his face, but leaving himself exposed from the neck up. This is where Channa struck. She had endured far more pain at the hands of her own people to allow this fool vampire to best her. She had survived and found more than she ever hoped for in a future that had yet to be written with Mirra and Dario. This fueled her and caused her mind to clear instantly and the knife flashed up at unbelievable speed. The Coven troop stopped in his tracks as the blade whistled through the space between them held only by her tail and opened his neck to the air as it sliced through muscle and arteries. As he gagged on his own blood flooding his mouth he staggered back grabbing for his neck as blood erupted from the mortal wound in powerful squirts.

The second Kavalian trooper was more experienced and he didn't hesitate. He snapped out with vampire speed and caught her tail before she could bring it whipping back around. Using his abnormal strength he heaved Channa off the floor with a cry of pain and surprise and whirled her around to slam violently into the wall once more. The impact knocked the knife from her tail and caused her to cry out as several ribs broke. He didn't pause and dropped on top of her and began pummeling her with his fists.

“Whore!” He screamed. “I'll kill you! I'll kill you.” So intent upon his rant he did not hear the savage animal like snarl or the cries of his fellow Coven soldiers from the other side of the room. “Bitch! You Kavalian bitch!”

Channa attempted to block as many blows as she could, but the impact against the wall had truly knocked the wind out of her and her strength was fading fast. Her blue eyes were wide as another punch hit her in the mouth. She saw the flash of steel and brought her hands up to catch the wrist of the Coven trooper as he tried to bring the blade ramming down into her heart.

“Die bitch!” The Coven troop screamed only inches from her face as his superior weight began pushing the blade lower to her heaving chest. “Die you Kavalian bitch!”

Channa began whipping her tail back and forth striking the trooper with wicked blows, each one carrying enough force to break the skin of his face and neck and bring blood. Fear and anger fueled her own strength now. Anger at what had been done to her without her voice. Anger that her family and Pride had so quickly tossed her aside through no fault of her own. Fear of dying and losing all she had gained up until this point.

“No!” Channa screamed fighting back with renewed strength, her fingers tightening on the troop’s wrist and exerting more pressure back. The point of the blade rose a few centimeters from her chest but the energy she had expended during her hours with Dario had weakened her. The incredible impacts had stunned her, and now her broken ribs were sending searing pain through her chest and stealing her breath away.

“Yes!” The Coven soldier screamed back leaning forward even more and his spittle flying into her face. The veins in his neck were bulging in effort, his cobalt blue eyes wide in savage anger. “You will die!”

Channa felt it then. Mirra’s own mind reaching out to her, fueling her with added reserves and in doing so she felt Sorran as well, powerful, and clear and dominating. And then she almost gasped as she felt the warmth and influence of his aura surround her, course through her and becoming part of her. She relished in the strength it sent surging through her and her blue eyes narrowed as she gazed into the Coven trooper’s face. Her fingers tightened even more on the man’s wrist, his eyes going a little wider as he felt her fighting him back with renewed strength. “I... I will not... die this day!” Channa snarled viciously. “But... but you will.”

The deep rumbling growl that came next only seemed to reinforce that and the Coven soldier looked up to stare directly at the huge muzzle of the dark blond haired wolf. Blood dripped from its long flesh shredding fangs, its lips curled back to expose gums and even more teeth further back. Its yellow eyes, sprinkled generously with green, held nothing but horror in them.

“My mate does... my mate does not like you being on top of me!” Channa shouted happily. “That... that is a position... only he uses!”

The Coven soldier looked down at her with wide eyes and then back up to the snarling muzzle. “Mate?” He gasped.

It would be the last sound he uttered as Dario’s jaws opened wide and snapped shut on his face. Channa sat up quickly as Dario’s two hundred and forty pound wolf body propelled him forward and with one motion swept the Coven soldier from atop her. She heard the muffled cries of the Coven troop and saw the madly twitching legs as Dario’s jaws sawed back and forth until Channa heard his skull crack open. She felt hands grab her from behind and she turned quickly and saw a wide eyed Mican and several other Kavalian rebels behind them as he pulled her further away.

The silver/white flash of light startled all of them and then Dario was standing over the Coven soldier in human form.

“No one touches my mate!” Dario screamed savagely. “No one you Coven bastard!”

Channa watched him turn around quickly as he detected the other scents. She felt Mican’s hands leave her arm as they saw Dario’s wolf eyes and fangs exposed for all to see. Blood coated his lower jaw and the front of his uniform and Mican would later say he looked like something from a child’s worst possible nightmare. He turned his head quickly and saw two Coven bodies a short distance away that looked as if an animal with great power and razor sharp claws had shredded their bodies. Mican looked back to Dario and realized one had. He stood slowly as Channa got to her feet and moved cautiously forward, holding her arm tightly to her side over her broken ribs. To Channa his wolf features were a thing of unequaled beauty and as she stepped up to him she smiled for she knew they belonged only to her. Mican and the others watched as Dario drew her close and leaned over to nuzzle her neck and cheek. They saw Channa’s tail quiver as it wrapped around his waist possessively.

“It... it took you long enough!” She spoke as she pressed her face into his chest.

“Sorry.” He whispered.

“I will... I will let you make it up to me later.” She purred.

“I will do that and so much...”

They all whirled around when the door at the opposite side of the huge room they had been thrown into burst inward under what could only be something with massive strength. The two seven foot tall avatars marched through the smoky doorway, their red eyes focused on them completely.

“Shit!” Dario snapped. “Shoot it! Shoot it!”

Mican and five other Kavalians began to unload their weapons at the oncoming horrors that were out of control avatars. Their projectile rounds slammed into their bodies with deep thuds, chunks of the false flesh erupting away from the bodies to expose the shiny exoskeletons beneath and still the avatars kept coming. One lifted its arm and they saw its hand fold back and the small cylinder appear.

“Cover!” Mican screamed as he dove for the crates that Dario had been tossed behind. Three of the men with him made it as well... but the single red pulse of light erupted from the avatar’s hand and caught the last Kavalian full in the chest. He didn’t scream, didn’t cry out. His body was flung back against the wall with a sickening crunch and a gaping hole in the center of his chest that still was smoking. The two avatars now directed their fire at the crates Mican and his men were behind and the red flashes began to impact the crates with increasing frequency, blowing huge holes in them and whittling them down to nothing. It took only a dozen or so shots from those weapons before there was no more protection for Mican and the others and they watched the two avatars moved closer and begin to raise their arms to target them intently even as they pumped projectile rounds into them at an alarming rate.

They would never know which one fired the shot, but the head on the avatar to their right snapped back viciously just as he was about to fire. There was a loud sizzling sound as the projectile tore through the unarmored eye and drove deep into its Quantum Core. Sparks flew out of its now destroyed eye socket and quickly moved to both as the left eye blew outwards in a ghastly display and the avatar fell backwards and flopped to the floor stiff as a board. The second avatar paused to watch his counterpart fall and then turned back to face Mican and the others. He lifted his arm to take aim and sent the command to fire.

The avatar never saw the two hands grasp his own and with a powerful heave yank his firing arm upward sending two energy blasts into the ceiling of the massive storage room. He turned his head to look at Dario gripping his arm and brought his other arm up to smash him in the head when Channa used her tail to propel herself around Dario’s tall body. She gripped the Nehtes in her hand tightly and with all of her remaining strength and ignoring the pain ripping through her from her broken ribs she rammed the Nehtes into the left eye socket of the avatar. She depressed the extension button just as Dario released his arm and grabbed her around the waist to throw them away from the monstrous machine. The Nehtes followed its own command and extended. The Dragon Armor coated spear erupted from the back of the avatar’s head, punching out armor and circuitry in front of it and rendering what was once a sophisticated computer brain into a mass of wire and oozing liquid. Channa fell on top of Dario as they dropped to the floor, their eyes on the avatar as it crashed to the deck just like the other. It’s second eye blew outward as well, showering both Dario and Channa with bits of false flesh and reddish white blood.

The room fell silent and all they could hear was the muffled hammering of other weapons fire from somewhere else. Mican and the others rushed forward to where they lay on the deck, Channa’s head resting on Dario’s chest, both of them heaving in exertion.

“You know...” Dario gasped as Channa lifted her head and looked at him. “This is not exactly how I had envisioned meeting and spending the first few days with the woman that has claimed my heart.” He looked at her stunning feline blue eyes. “Fighting giant machine people and dodging the High Coven is really beginning to piss me off!” He barked loudly.

Mican looked at him as the others kept watch for any other dangers. “You will come to find out... as I have over the years with Na’lia... nothing ever goes the way you want it to go.” He stated plainly. “Now let us move out of here before we have more company.”

Dario looked at Channa and saw her smiling at him. “I told you I would keep you on your toes.” She stated.

“Yeah... yeah...” Dario spoke as he got to his feet and helped her up gingerly watching her face wince slightly at her broken ribs. “Promises... promises! Let’s get the hell gone from here. Then we’ll talk about that.”

“Something is slowing the download!” The sergeant screamed out.

“What do you mean slowing?”

“There’s new security walls up! The program is having to fight through them in order to get to the last bit of information!” The man barked out.

“Can’t you bypass them?”

“I can’t do anything.” The sergeant snapped. “It’s a self modulating program!”

“How much do we have?” The officer asked.

“One pad per avatar! Star charts and sensor designs! Weapons and tactical systems! Medical advances and data on some species that I have never even heard of before! This pad has shields and propulsion but it’s moving slower! The last avatar must have initiated a reverse algorithm.”

“Fuck it!” The officer snapped. “Our ship is six minutes out and we need to go! Pull the pad right now!”

“We don’t have everything!”

“We won’t have anything if we don’t leave now! Yank the pad and tell this machine to smash us a hole in the hull or something so we can make it to the landing zone!” The officer demanded. “Do it now!”

The sergeant turned back and entered several commands into the control panel before gripping the sides of the data pad. He waited several seconds and then yanked it out. “I hope it works!” He barked.

The last avatar sat up quickly, its red eyes sweeping the room around him. –Security Protocols altered. Main programming changed. Initiate emergency debarkation of VORTEX Cruiser 341-

The two vampires stepped back as the massive machine got to its feet.

-Internal sensors off line. Three of five VORTEX Cruiser 341 avatars are offline. Initiating evacuation sequence 491. Proceed to emergency exits and blow the hatches-

The vampire officer watched as the avatar turned and headed for the door. “That’s more like it!” He lifted his wrist mounted COM unit. “Fall back! Fall back to the control room! We are leaving!”

“...killed two of them!” Dario’s voice sounded in his implant. “I don’t know where the third one is! Mican’s portable motion sensor has the Coven falling back to the Avatar Control Room! We’re following... but it’s slow going. We lost one man and Channa and I are banged up pretty good! Mican has the lead... but we need to be cautious Res. These things can fire some pretty powerful energy beams from their hands!”

Resumar held up his hand to the five Durcunusaan troops that followed him and they spread out quickly on either side of the huge corridor.

“Energy beams?” Resumar gasped.

“Yeah! And they are four times as strong as us!” Dario continued. “Channa and I barely killed the one... and someone got a lucky shot into the other’s eye socket! They dropped... just like 341 said they would... but it wasn’t fucking easy I’ll tell you that!”

“Are they headed back for their entry point?” Resumar asked.

“Negative! The complete opposite direction! Headed to port!”

“We are one section over portside from the Avatar Control Room!” Resumar barked.

“Then they are coming right for you cousin!”

“Hold what you have Dario!” He barked. “Can you give me numbers?” Resumar began motioning with his hands, positioning the Durcunusaan troops. The moment the first one stepped away from the wall, weapons fire began whizzing by their heads, bouncing off the bulkheads and ricocheting along the empty corridors.

“Well... we killed four for sure! Maybe two more! We don’t know how many survived though! Or how many got on the ship!”

“They’re here now!” Resumar screamed as he dropped to one knee and began firing down the corridor.

Through the millennia Union Spartans had learned how to keep the vampires from wrapping the shadows around them in the middle of a firefight and disappearing and this was a tactic that they employed now in the confines of the corridor. Controlled bursts were sent downrange at measured intervals on different degrees of trajectory. Any vampire that was wrapped in the shadows would be hit by the concentrated fusillade of weapons fire, and many of the more experienced vampire troops had long ago forgo using the shadows when facing the Union in open conflict. Resumar was able to count nearly seven of them at least between bursts from his 190 and he was rapidly trying to determine how to adjust their position while keeping the Coven from leaving the ship.

Cemath! He screamed out within Mindvoice.

I am coming to you! His Bonded Brother’s familiar voice filled his head now.

Their entry point! Resumar barked.

I have sealed it with boulders and fire! Cemath answered. They are not leaving that way! I will enter on the port side lower hatch Resumar!

Come up to my level by the entrance! There is plenty of room for you to maneuver! See if you can't move in behind them!

Resumar... Vonis is moving with a small team from the science ship! He will be to your position...

Resumar's head snapped around just as the large form of his adopted uncle skidded to a halt next to him and four rebel Kavalians took up positions by the Durcunusaan troops and immediately began pouring fire down the corridor.

He's here now! Hurry Cemath!

Vonis scrambled to put his back to the wall and look at his nephew. "I thought you might need some help!" He screamed over the din of weapons fire. "Apparently I was correct!"

"They're trying to steal data from the avatars uncle!" Resumar barked. "I think they got what they want and they've turned loose those avatars on us! Dario and Channa killed two but they are injured!"

"We entered from the port hatch above the trees!" Vonis exclaimed. "We saw nothing moving here!"

"If the plans of this ship were accurate... there is a large escape hatch only two hundred meters down that corridor!" Resumar motioned with his head to the one they sat across from. "We need to keep them away from there!"

"How many?" Vonis asked.

"We don't know!"

Vonis shifted his 190 and ducked his head around the corner for what was only an single instant. He sat back just as quickly and looked at his nephew. Fifteen hundred plus years of training and fighting within the shadows gave him an insight his nephew did not have. He looked at Resumar. "Nine!" He barked. "Four on the starboard side and five on the port! They have wrapped the shadows around them only partially, to keep from being detected on sensors but also to keep from being caught by your weapons fire while in the shadows!"

"Are you sure?" Resumar asked.

Vonis nodded. "It is a standard tactic for the Elite High Coven Commandos Res!" He replied calmly. "Where is Dario now?"

Resumar shook his head. "They lost one man and he and Channa were pretty banged up! I told him to hold position!"

Vonis nodded in approval at the order. "We should..." His words were drowned out by the screeching of metal and the cracking sound of a door being smashed from its hinges. Their eyes shifted down the corridor to starboard and the lone figure of the massive avatar appeared from an adjoining corridor.

-Unauthorized lifeforms detected-

-Initiating Cleansing Protocols-

-Eliminate all non-Pralor lifeforms-

"Nubou!" Resumar screamed with wide eyes. "The head! Shoot at his head! Aim for the eye sockets!"

A total of nine Durcunusaan and Kavalian rebels turned the full force of their weapons on the advancing seven foot tall avatar without hesitation. As when Dario and his team fired upon the two avatars, the projectiles began to impact the avatar's body, quickly shredding the false skin around his head and exposing the gleaming armor alloy underneath. The avatar's gray coveralls quickly became soaked with blood from the living tissue over his armored form, and still the machine continued to advance.

"It's not stopping!" A Durcunusaan troop screamed.

"Keep firing!" Resumar bellowed. "Don't stop!"

The avatar had slowed somewhat but continued its advance. Its head was now almost void of any covering skin, its red eyes gleaming in the corridor and making aiming easy. The only problem was that the eye socket was sunken in and not an easy target in the least, even for the skilled marksmen that the Durcunusaan were. As the avatar came up next to one of the Kavalians that had come with his uncle, Resumar Leonidas did the only thing he could think of. In the blink of an eye he reached down, grabbed his Nehtes from its position on his right thigh, extending it in that same motion as he cocked his arm back and let fly with all of his strength. As with all Nehtes made by the great elven weapons master, Resumar's was coated with a micro layer of Dragon Armor increasing its durability to untold portions. The spearhead drove right through the center of the avatar's chest, penetrating the armor alloy with little pause and exploding out his back bringing with it wiring and circuits. This action caused the avatar to stop in its motion of reaching down to grab the Kavalian and instead it lifted its arm. Resumar and the others watched as if in slow motion the entire hand folded back and inward and the small cylinder extended slightly. The avatar raised its arm and leveled the energy weapon at Resumar and then stopped. It's red eyes were centered on Resumar, its armored head tilting sideways somewhat.

-Error. Internal Protocol conflict. Error-

-Unit 341 A is targeting sub species Lycavorian and Elf combination-

-Deep tissue scan of target lifeform indicates molecular DNA and blood composition comparable to Chief Elder Pralor Sumar-

-High Etheric Levels of target lifeform detected. Echelon Thirteen. Scanning. Main ship sensors offline. Internal sensors indicating presence of four Echelon Eleven lifeforms within scanning radius of sensors and one Echelon Twelve. Additional Echelon Thirteen, Cretvore Draconius species lifeform closing rapidly. Scans indicate Cretvore Draconius species with Etheric connection to target lifeform-

-Probability that target lifeform is Third Generation Descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar 99.7%-

-Supposition that descendant of Chief Elder Pralor Sumar has returned to claim VORTEX Cruiser 341 97.3%-

-Activating Secure Protocol One-

-Activating Secure Protocol One-

-Purging all commands entered into Neural Processing Central Core after unit 341 A was awaken-

-Internal sensors indicate Unit 341 is active. 341 A Terminating function at this time-

Resumar and the others watched as the avatar's red eyes went from bright points of light to totally void of anything. The avatar's arm remained locked in position, extended upward however, and Resumar breathed deeply as he stepped out of the way of the energy cylinder that was aimed at his chest.

Vonis lowered his weapon slowly, his own cobalt blue eyes wide in shock. "Ok... what just happen?" He stammered.

Resumar shook his head slowly. "I don't know."

"Resumar!" Dario's voice burst over their implants. "Better get out here quick cousin!"

Resumar and Vonis heard the enraged roar of not one, but two dragons and the sound of weapons fire. "Sibfla!" Resumar swore. "Now what?"

He and Vonis and the other members of their combined team turned to see that the corridor where they had pinned the High Coven troops was now very empty. Resumar's eyes grew wider then.

"Nubou lae!" Resumar cursed even louder as he broke into a run heading for where he knew the large escape hatch was. The Coven troops had slipped out behind them while their attention was focused on the avatar, and now they were gone. And with them was a wealth of information that could very well tip the balance of power in this quadrant.

Resumar Leonidas sprang from the top of the ten meter high ramp completely changed and not in a very good mood. His wolf eyes immediately detected Dario and Channa standing with Mican and several other Kavalian rebels, all of them holding weapons on the group of men and women Resumar didn't recognize. Six Kavalian soldiers and four females who were wearing civilian clothes. As his two hundred and sixty pounds of wolf muscle and teeth touched the ground below, quickly followed by four other wolves and five Kavalians. In five very fast flashes of white/silver light five wolves became men before the wide eyes of all the men and women who were held at weapons length by Dario. Resumar's changed eyes swept across the clearing and saw the seven bodies of Coven troops laying sprawled on the ground their bodies cooling quickly. Sorran and Mirra were crouched on the ground behind Dario and Mirra, their heads and eyes directed at the newcomers and their legs cocked under them as if waiting to pounce.

"Dario?" Resumar barked.

“I have no idea!” He echoed back. “We were trying to cut off the Coven troops and headed out here. Just as we got to the top of the foot ramp we heard weapons fire and then we found them. They whacked seven of the Coven, but two made it off into the timber. Probably headed for whatever ship was supposed to be picking them up!”

Resumar’s eyes were focused on the solitary figure that was dressed all in ivory and earth tone brown garb. The hood was drawn up over the figure’s head but considering the way the clothes hugged the very lush frame, it was obviously a female. He turned quickly to his senior Durcunusaan enlisted Hyperetes. “Janez hel!” He spat. “Cuia!” (Track them. Go.)

The equivalent to his First Sergeant nodded, pointed to two others and they immediately shifted back into wolves before plunging into the timber surrounding them. The eyes of the ten newcomers were wide as they watched and then slowly returned to where Resumar stood. His eyes returned to the lone figure and he took a step closer. Vonis grabbed his arm quickly.

“We don’t know who they are Res.” He spoke quickly.

“Not to mention they whacked the Coven commandos pretty easily.” Dario agreed never taking his eyes off the dark haired Kavalian female who held the blade in her hand still, but palm up with the knife resting in it.

“Yet he knows that he does not need to fear us.” The female voice spoke gently, but loud enough for her tones to carry. “Don’t you Resumar Leonidas?” Resumar watched as she lifted her hands slowly and drew back the cowl to let it drop on her shoulders. “You can feel it deep within your mind.”

Resumar watched as she stepped towards him but her eyes grew wider when Resumar felt Cemath swoop in low over the ground and flare his wings at the last possible moment, landing behind his Bonded Brother. This caused the Kavalians wearing KFI uniforms to back up quite voluntarily, their murmurs of concern very audible. All except the young Kavalian female next to the woman who stood still without an ounce of fear in her eyes. Resumar continued to stare at the woman intently. Something inside him was screaming out, almost rejoicing and Shiria smiled as she noticed it.

“Your blood can feel who I am.” She stated softly. “You... you are far more skilled than I ever thought... but I can still feel your blood rejoicing Resumar Leonidas. Just as mine is now doing the same thing!”

“Resumar... we should secure them in a cell somewhere!” Mican spoke quickly stepping up to him. “Just because they kill Coven troops does not make them friends of us. They wear the uniforms of the KFI Fleet! They kill Coven soldiers too!”

“He’s got a point Resumar.” Vonis spoke holding himself ready to spring into action at the first hint of trouble or a threat to his nephew.

Shiria watched this exchange in surprise for the man she knew as Mican was deferring to Resumar without question and she looked between the two men. “Mican’Puat... it certainly has been a long time.” She stated finally.

Mican’s eyes cut to where she stood. “I do not know you woman!” He snapped.

“But I know you.” Shiria stated calmly. “I counseled your father to not discard you as his son. I told him he was being a fool for such an action. He did not listen to me... not that I ever expected him too. I sincerely hope you have revealed to Athani who you are.”

“What do you know of my father?” Mican snarled.

Resumar reached out and took Mican’s arm. “Wait.” He said softly.

Mican looked at him with wide eyes. “They wear uniforms of the fleet and they know my father Resumar. This does not bode well for us.”

“We do not serve the Kavalian Federation!” Maysi barked out stepping forward. “We follow one Pride... and that is Pride Nruarani!”

“Scribe Mother!” Athani’s voice hissed from behind them as she rushed down the ramp to come up beside Resumar. She too had heard Dario’s transmission and after leaving Avi and 341 to insure the defensive were set she took off to find her husband, two Durcunusaan soldiers trying very hard to keep up with her. “Scribe Mother Demahra! Ckhoa! What... what are you doing here?”

“Athani!” The second female voice broke the silence of the clearing and Nikkei pushed her way between two of the Kavalian troops from the Nruarani Pride that had been assigned to protect her. “Aunt Athani!”

“Nikkei!” Athani gasped again as her eyes fell on her niece. Resumar’s eyes never left Shiria’s as he held Athani’s arm tightly. “Resumar my love... it is Jalersi’s daughter Nikkei! It is my niece!” She spoke turning back to him when he would not release her arm.

Resumar looked at her slowly his wolf eyes still very prominent. They were eyes that Athani would never be afraid of. [Aryschanne you are certain?] He spoke within the heavily shielded Mindvoice connection that only the two of them shared.

Athani looked at him oddly her eyes narrowing in confusion but she nodded her head. [I am sure my love.] She answered. [I would know her anywhere.]

Resumar nodded to her after a moment and then released her arm to watch her run over to the younger woman and embrace her tightly within her arms. Resumar turned back to Shiria and stepped closer to her. “Who are you?” He asked.

“Who do you think I am Resumar?” Shiria asked with a gentle smile.

“Do not fence with me women!” Resumar barked. “I am not in the mood!”

Ckhoa stepped closer to Shiria. “This is the Scribe Mother Demahra!” She popped. “You will show respect to her for she is...”

The sound of the Nehtes extending was nearly deafening in the silence of the clearing with nothing but birds singing and insects chirping in the background. Ckhoa’s words were cut off when she felt the tip of the Nehtes press against the underside of her throat and Resumar’s wolf eyes turned to look at her with something akin to hunger in them.

“I show respect where it is earned! Not because you say so woman! I asked her who she was!” Resumar snarled. “If I had wanted your voice I would have asked for it!”

Shiria lifted her hand with a smile and placed it on the shaft of the Nehtes. “We... we are not your enemies Resumar Leonidas.”

“So you say.” Resumar snapped.

“And what does your blood tell you son of Leonidas?” She asked softly. [Your blood tells you who I am even without your words Resumar. And I can not begin to tell you how happy that makes me. I had thought... I had thought I was all alone out here for so long.] She spoke within Mindvoice.

Resumar’s eyes widened at the ease with which she spoke to him and how her words seemed so very soothing and filtered across the shields he had up without actually trying to penetrate them. Only a very skilled Mindvoicer could do what she had just done, allowing her voice to appear as if it was an echo against his shields and therefore speaking directly to him.

[You can feel who I am without me answering can’t you Resumar.] She spoke.

[I can... I can feel it. It’s... it is very familiar... but I have never met you.] He answered her.

Shiria turned and looked at Ckhoa. “Stand down Ckhoa.” She said softly.

“Shiria they...” Ckhoa began to protest but felt the tip of the Nehtes against her throat press ever so closer.

“I am in no danger here Ckhoa.” Shiria said. “And even with all the training I have given you and your sister, you would not stand a chance against Resumar... and even less of a chance against his brother Androcles. Stand down.” Shiria looked back to Resumar. “We are among friends.”

Ckhoa kept her eyes on Resumar as she slowly stepped back. She tried not to show the relief she felt when Resumar instantly depressed the button on the shaft of the Nehtes and it contracted back to its portable size instantly. She watched him as he stepped closer to Shiria and leaned over beside her, inhaling deeply to catch her scent. She watched Shiria stand there with a small smile on her face; a smile of discovery and happiness that she had never seen before. It appeared there was more to this trip here than Ckhoa realized. She had never questioned Shiria on anything; she was so wise and understanding and calm. What she had not realized until this very moment was that Shiria was lonely. For so long she had thought she was the only Pralor alive and then when she discovered Wayonn lived she appeared more animated and happy. Yet now it was so very apparent. Right here in their own quadrant of space were descendants of the most powerful and respected Pralor to live according to Shiria, and their blood was so strong and pure that she could freely detect that without any effort.

Ckhoa cut her eyes when she saw Athani step up behind Resumar holding tightly to Nikkei’s hand but with an odd expression on her face as she looked at her husband sniffing who she knew as the Scribe Mother.

“Res... Resumar?” She asked softly. Resumar turned immediately and looked at Athani and she saw his relaxed face was bright and his expression almost disbelieving in nature. “What is... what is wrong?” She asked.

Resumar stepped back and moved up next to her, drawing her tight to his side with one arm while Nikkei looked on. “Do you know... do you know who this is Aryschanne?” He asked as he leaned over and nuzzled her neck drawing a small gasp of delight from her.

Athani looked at him holding his arms. “This is the Kavalian Scribe Mother Demahra. I have told you about her before.” She stated.

Resumar nodded with a smile. “You are wrong Aryschanne.” He said softly. He turned to look at Shiria who wore a brilliant smile herself. “She is not your Scribe Mother.” Resumar told her softly. “She is from a race my father and Helen thought long dead.”

Athani looked at Shiria and then back to Resumar. “Resumar... you aren’t making any sense.” She said. “What do you mean?”

“Her true name... the name of her blood is Shiria.” Resumar spoke as he looked at Shiria. “And she is a Pralor Aryschanne. A living and breathing Pralor.”

EARTH

SPARTA

ROYAL ESTATE VILLA

“...it’s true?” Riall asked with a stunned expression.

Gorgo was pressed close to him, her dark eyes red from too much crying and not enough sleep. The last few hours she had spent with Dasha and their grandchildren, trying to keep them calm and shielded from what was happening even though all of them could feel something was not right. It had been especially hard for Gorgo since she had gone through this very thing once before when she thought she had lost him as a baby. This time had been different in that she did not let the sorrow totally overwhelm her as before. This time she had Riall’s love and support to lean upon, but knowing she had lost her only son from Leonidas once more was horribly painful.

That was until Helen had contacted her within Mindvoice and told her to come to the Estate Villa immediately.

“Dustha... please don’t...” Gorgo gasped out referring to her by the name she knew her as so long ago in Sparta. Another Sparta; another time; another era.

Helen moved up in front of her from where she stood between Carisia and Ne’Veha and took her hands. “This is not something I would joke about Gorgo. You and I have too much history together for me to do that.”

Gorgo felt a huge wave of relief sweep through her and the two women embraced tightly as fresh tears clouded her eyes. “Oh... praise be to the Gods!” Gorgo sobbed. “Where... where is he?”

“Curila 6. The Retreat.” Helen answered.

Gorgo’s eyes opened a little wider. “Curila 6?” She asked. “How... how did he get there?”

“It is a long story.” Helen replied. “He was injured but physically he is fine.”

“Physically?” Riall asked.

Helen nodded slowly. “Andro has spoken with Yuriko; it is Yuriko who directed Anja there from the holding area. I don’t know all of it... but according to Yuriko he is either trapped or refusing to leave some sort of Mindvoice loop.”

“Mindvoice loop?” Riall asked. “Is that... is that even possible?”

Helen nodded. “For someone of his abilities... yes.” She stated.

“Aricia!” Gorgo gasped. “Androcles... he...”

Helen squeezed her hands tightly. “He knew the moment he went to the clinic.” She stated. “He gave Aricia Lopezine Gorgo.”

“Lopezine?” Gorgo said.

Helen nodded. “To mimic the effects of Protrilene. To make it appear she had joined her anome in the afterlife. She is on a STRIKER right now on her way to Curila 6. Anja is already with him as I said.”

“Then the feed from the Netnews at Thermopylae...?” Riall asked her. “It showed him carrying her into King Leonidas’s tomb with a golden urn. If this was not his mother and father than who was it?”

“Oh it was Aricia... she was just unconscious.” Helen told them. “The urn was simply for show.”

“Dustha... he destroyed the clinic.” Gorgo said. “We watched it! There was nothing left!”

Helen nodded. “He also destroyed the remains of a clone of his father and the remains of Javier Moran’s dragon Naruth.” She said.

“A clone?” Riall gasped.

“I don’t know all of it.” Helen said. “Only Martin does and he can’t talk right now. I believe... and this is only my opinion... I believe he is trying to contact all of them within Mindvoice to assure them he is alive and well. Why he remains I don’t understand.”

“He remains because he cannot touch our mother For’mya.” Andro’s voice carried to them.

They all turned to see Andro walked through the large double doors onto the patio, Sadi holding one hand and Lu’ria clinging to his arm on the opposite side. Gorgo and Riall could detect Lu’ria’s scent immediately and they knew she was a new wolf. The sensations and needs of a female wolf would be exceptionally powerful so soon after being turned they both knew and that is why she was remaining so close to him, touching him whenever she could. Gorgo didn’t hesitate and moved to him. Andro hugged her tightly while Sadi and Lu’ria looked on. Gorgo pulled back and took his handsome face in her hands as she stared at him her eyes moist. At this moment looking at him, Gorgo was thrust back in time and as when she looked at Martin she saw her once and always beloved Leonidas staring back at her.

“Androcles... so much... so much is...”

“I will sustain grandmother.” Andro said softly. “I have a STRIKER standing by to take you and grandmother Dasha to Curila 6. I want you to take my brothers and sisters with you. He will need as many people around him that love him as possible.”

Gorgo met his eyes and saw sadness in them. “You... you don’t believe For’mya survived do you?” She whispered softly.

“I cannot sense her or my first elven mother.” He said. “I know she still lives, taken from us... but she is still alive. My mother For’mya, I am not... I am not so sure.”

“Taken?” Gorgo gasped. “Taken by who?”

“It is not important right now grandmother. I do not worry for her return. Deni, Lisisa, Arrarn and Cha’talla will retrieve her. No matter the cost.” Andro said.

“Andro... you trust... you trust this Immortal?” Gorgo said.

Andro nodded without blinking. “Yes.” He told her. “We are family now grandmother.”

“Family?” Gorgo hissed softly.

“My sister is now the Blessed Wife of Cha’talla’s oldest son with his pureblood vampire wife Esther.” Andro said. “They are not who they once were grandmother and when you see the love Tir’ut holds for Normya you will not doubt it either.”

“Your father... your father knows?” She asked.

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“Andro... Andro what is going on?” Gorgo asked.

“Just what has happened grandmother. We have been attacked... our family has been targeted specifically.” Andro answered. “Father does not know about what happen on Kranek or here in Sparta at the Senate Building, all he knows is he can’t touch his elven mates. I believe; based on what Yuriko has told me, and after talking with the Feravomir, I believed he has locked himself in a Mindvoice loop as she said. He will not leave until he touches all of my mothers, not knowing that one may very well be dead and the other is most obviously being blocked in some manner. It is why Yuriko sent for our mother Anja. She has pulled him from something similar in the past and with two of them there with him they may succeed.”

“We have to let everyone know he is alive!” Riall spoke quickly. “They need to know their King still lives.”

Andro shook his head. “No.” He said firmly. “The Kavalians have attacked us at our heart grandfather. They have attacked our family directly! In order to do that... they needed help. If they knew father was still alive they would stop at nothing to finish what they started. There was reason and purpose to what they have done and I want to know what that is.”

“Andro if your father is alive... according to our constitution and the Rules of Ascension you cannot be crowned as King.” Riall spoke.

Andro nodded. “I know... and that is why my father will remain dead.” He stated. “At least for the moment.”

“You believe there is more that will happen don’t you?” Riall asked.

Androcles nodded. “Yes.”

“Who else... who else do we tell?” Riall asked. “We will need to prepare Androcles.”

“Right now grandfather... no one outside this room.” Andro answered.

“Andro... we must tell our family!” Gorgo exclaimed passionately. “We cannot let them go on believing your father is dead. I know you wish to be very conscious of who knows... but these people are our family Andro. Daniel, Tarifa, Aihola, Selene... your grandfather Panos... these are all people who are part of our family! You know this... and like your father you hold family closest to your heart.”

Andro turned his head slowly and looked at Sadi. “KertaGai?” He spoke softly.

Sadi stepped up to him quickly and pressed her lithe frame against his. “If we cannot trust our family Andro my love... who are we to trust?” She said softly.

Gorgo looked at Helen and they watched as he looked at each of his mates. Lu’ria moved up beside him as she was before and nodded her head while pressing close to him as Sadi had done. Ne’Veha pressed close to Sadi and also nodded while Carisia moved around and scooted close to Lu’ria while nodding her head. Gorgo knew then that, as with her son and his wives and mates, no one would have more influence on her grandson than the four women before her right now. Looking at them, the way Ne’Veha pressed so close to Sadi and Carisia to Lu’ria, Gorgo knew that Andro would turn Ne’Veha soon. Her amaretto scent called for him powerfully even though she was not yet wolf, and he would not be able to ignore that for very long. Sadi was his Anome and as his soulmate she would never be far from his side. Her Mindvoice essence was so entwined with Andro’s now that it was very hard to tell them apart. It was very hard to tell any of them apart now, and it was growing more powerful. Carisia was a vampire yes, but even for her very diminutive size, she had a much stronger Mindvoice connection to Andro than Isabella did to his father for some odd reason Gorgo did not understand. The stunning Drow elf female that stood beside him was the first who Andro had turned and looking at her now, Gorgo could tell that she had accepted without question or doubt who and what she was now. Gorgo knew the special loyalty that Martin had with the Drow, and now that Andro had turned and taken as a mate a Drow female, that loyalty would only grow stronger. She watched him turn back to Riall.

“We must be mindful grandfather.” Andro spoke. “No one who does not need to know outside of our family.”

Riall nodded. “Never.” He said.

“I believe it will look odd if I continue to work out of the Royal Estate Villa.” Andro said. “My every move will be watched and not just by those who are concerned for my welfare. There is no way to avoid that. I will leave it to you to direct others to use part of my villa on Cranae Island and make a temporary Command Center there as my father’s office is here.”

Riall nodded. “I will see to it.” He said. “If we... if we are to follow established protocols already in place for this type of incident and maintain the façade you have begun we will need to have a meeting of senior officers within the next few hours. As well as the remaining Senate, even if it is by HoloConference.”

“I will arrange that with Panos.” Helen spoke now. “We can feel Deia, albeit very faintly. It’s almost as if she is fading in and out... but it may be just the materials used to build the bunker. Lausintos is off the grid and we do not know if he was in the Senate Building as well. Until we know more it will not look odd if Panos assumes the largest visible role politically as Governor of Sparta.”

“I want him blanketed with Durcunusaan grandfather.” Andro spoke. “His senior aide Janae is missing and we do not know if she was in the Senate Building or lies dead somewhere. They went after him once and I would not put it passed them to try again.”

Riall nodded. “Of course.”

“Grandfather... a word alone?” Andro asked motioning to the patio doors.

Riall nodded without hesitation and moved for the doors. Andro quickly nuzzled his four mates and then followed his grandfather. Sadi turned to Helen and Gorgo. “We have coffee and tea made.” She spoke. “We’ll get some for all of us. I know Tarifa and Aihola are coming here and there will most likely be more.”

Helen nodded as Sadi held to Lu'ria's hand and led them toward the kitchen area. She felt Gorgo take her arm gently and hold her back for a moment until they were out of earshot. "Dustha... do you feel it?" She asked softly.

Helen watched as Ne'Veha was the last to move into the kitchen and she nodded. "It is incredible isn't it?"

"First Sadi... who burns within Mindvoice nearly as bright as Aricia. Then Carisia... who is a daughter of our hated enemy." Gorgo said softly. "Now... a Drow warrior who is bonded to a dragon and Ne'Veha... whose scent and blood burns for him stronger than I have ever felt from a female not yet turned."

Helen nodded slowly. "I do not know how it could be Gorgo... only that it is. It feels as if finding each of them was preordained somehow, for some higher purpose... it all fits together just as tightly as with Martin and his mates. Your son and grandson, Aricia, Sadi... there is something about all of them that I cannot see or I do not understand."

"When he hesitated... he looked not to you or to me... but to Sadi and them." Gorgo said.

Helen looked at her. "As only you commanded Leonidas's unquestioned and absolute attention and trust and love Gorgo... so it is for Martin and his son." She said softly. "They will always value the wisdom of the women who hold their hearts and souls over all others. Just as you did with Leonidas."

Gorgo met her eyes. "That is what I fear Dustha." She said softly. "My voice is what put Leonidas on his path. Look where it led him."

Helen shook her head slowly. "Your voice is what drove that man to be as great as he was Gorgo. Your voice and your love. Never question that he did not know what he was doing when he did it. For you. For others. Your words and your love only confirmed to him what he already knew needed to be done."

"And Martin? Andro?" Gorgo asked.

Helen looked to where they saw Andro and Riall speaking together on the patio. "We were together once at Gallais's Retreat. Myself, Dymas, Demetrius, Dilios and Panos. We were reminiscing of the old days. Panos... he referred to them, father and son, he called them forces of nature." She said. "I fear that we will begin to see what he meant very soon."

"...been receiving reports for the last several hours from every border station and remote outpost we have. Some of them even I had forgotten we still control." Riall spoke as they moved along the walkway in the garden which Andro knew his mother Dysea loved to work in. "They have moved nothing within range of the border Andro." He looked at him as he stopped walking. "Nothing!"

"And that confuses you?" Andro said. He looked at his grandfather. A man who had hundreds of years of combat experience to pull from and a man his father said he could trust unequivocally.

"You don't come after the leader of another empire, try to kill him, and try to kill his entire family. Not unless you plan on sending massive numbers of troops and ships swarming across the borders in a full scale invasion." Riall said.

Andro nodded. "That is my reasoning as well." He said. "The question remains however, why aren't they doing just that?"

Riall looked at him. "Hadaria?" He asked.

Andro nodded. "I believe that is part of it yes." He answered. "They have always wanted the support of Hadarian Healers. Support my mother denied them because she feared for the safety of her Healers. Athani has told us what it was like for females within the KFI. They have achieved that now in a political manner with the help of Buonau and her cronies."

Riall nodded slowly. "Yes." Riall said.

"This was systematic grandfather." Andro spoke firmly. "They were trying to wipe out our entire family! There was no subterfuge here! This has my uncle's mark all over it... and he had help from someone within Sparta! I want that person found!"

Riall turned his head and looked toward the rising sun. "Armetus is still unconscious." He said shaking his head. "They don't know if he will even survive. It is all Marci can do to keep control of things now. Half our intelligence network is in shambles and soon Aihola and the Drow will begin screaming for blood for what the Kavalians have done."

“Lu'ria will keep them in check for the time being.” Andro said softly.

Riall looked at him. “Andro... you know of course that your union with her... with this Lu'ria. It is the first of its kind. In all the years since Earth became a member of the Union no Drow has ever been mated to a Lycavorian. They have avoided this for reasons I don't myself understand. Now... now you have taken one as your mate, you have turned her, and made her a Princess of the Union. The Netnews will be all over this.”

“Let them come.” He answered. “I killed Leruk grandfather.” Andro said softly turning to look at him. “He... he was the one leading the Kavalian forces on Iraruzu. He was the one who shot Lu'ria. I violated the one rule my father drilled into our heads as we were growing. I took the blood of family.”

Riall shook his head immediately. “Your uncle's children are not our family Androcles. The moment he betrayed his people he stopped being family. Karun... he has proven where his heart is according to your grandmother. He has embraced the wolf within him... taken Ardis as his wife and mate and his scent and blood burns only for what he has found here. He is family. He is a Leonidas. The others do not count because they have forsaken everything we stand for. You did not kill family Androcles. You defended and then took vengeance for harm he inflicted on your mate. You did what any Spartan would do and that is why you are right!” Riall reached out and placed his hand on Andro's shoulder. “We have so much work to do.”

Andro looked at him. “Why go after grandfather Panos?”

“He is the Governor of Sparta.” Riall said with a shrug. “Whether you and your father want to admit it or not, much of the Lycavorian Union knows that your hearts lie here in Sparta. They know that Sparta is your home. It has become the unofficial capital of the Union now. With that recognition, Panos's role is very important as Governor to the King's city. The leader of the one city that all the Leonidas family calls home. It's a symbolic thing Androcles... a military decision to demoralize and sow fear. You know this. You and your brothers learned this at the Advanced War College on Elear. Strike fear into your enemy where they least expect you to strike.”

Andro nodded slowly. “Yes.” He said. “I remember.”

“We need to gather Vengal, Vistr, Ceneu, Tareif and your father's war cabinet.” Riall spoke now. “The Defense Minister as well as Marci. We need to show that you are in charge, but we also need to let them know your father is alive.”

“No.” Andro said causing his grandfather to look at him. “I will acquiesce to telling our family... but beyond that no. There are too many unknowns grandfather and I will not risk my father or my mothers because of it. They must believe I am King.”

Riall stared at him for a moment but knew he was right and he nodded after a moment. “Very well. We will move carefully then. We...” Riall looked at Andro as he staggered back slightly and his face twisted into a mass of confusion. “Andro?”

“Androcles!” Helen's voice sounded shrill and confused as she burst onto the patio at nearly a dead run.

“Fera... Feravomir!” Andro hissed.

Helen stepped right up to him and gripped his arms. “You... you feel it?” She gasped as Gorgo and Sadi and the others came rushing onto the patio.

Andro nodded quickly. “Yes... yes!” He stammered.

“We must focus!” Helen spoke gripping his arms tightly. “Concentrate... but do not lower your shields! I will do the same. Elynth! Arzoal! Add your shields to ours quickly!”

Sister... I am here! Arzoal's voice sounded in their heads.

I am here as well Feravomir! Elynth's voice echoed her grandmother.

“Something is trying to communicate with us... something very powerful... but I... it is not your father or any of your mothers. It is familiar... it is familiar to me though.” Helen said as she felt both her bonded sister and Elynth join their connection adding to the strength of their Mindvoice shields. “Do... do you feel it Androcles?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.” He answered instantly, his eyes closed tightly. “It... it is focused and clear but it is probing softly... looking for something. Not forcing its way.” His azure eyes sprang open in surprise and he looked at her. “Feravomir... it is looking for me! For us!” He declared.

Helen nodded slowly and she began to feel more at ease. “I have... I have felt this before Andro.” She said softly opening her eyes. “I have felt this when I have spoken with Canth.”

“Canth?” Andro asked. “How can that be? He... he would not be able to maintain such an essence after father released him. Would he?”

Helen met his eyes evenly. “I suggest we find out... you and I.” She stated. “You will remain in the background. Your helmet... put your helmet on to conceal your features.”

“What?” Andro asked. “Why?”

Helen looked at him intently. “To protect your identity! You are the Lycavorian Union now Androcles. The face of our Union! I will not risk you unnecessarily.”

“Helen...” He began to protest.

“No! Do as I ask you now.” She spoke. “Please.”

“Very well Feravomir... but I don’t like it.” Andro told her.

“I know.”

“And how will we do this?”

Helen turned to Sadi. “Sadi... a Mark II from Martin’s office. Quickly!” She turned back to Andro. “We are going to do it the same way your father did it when he first contacted the Union on Apo Prime. We’ll trace that Mindvoice probe right back to its source.”

TALON OF JUSTICE

EDGE OF LYCAVORIAN BORDER

Wayonn and Dutkne turned away from the large view window where they stood side by side. Devra sat at the table with her daughters and Drey while Nirilo stood near the door into the conference room.

Dutkne looked at Wayonn as they turned. “Grandfather... I have... I have never felt shields so strong.” He gasped. “Not even yours! We should have pressed harder.”

Wayonn shook his head. “No. I was reaching mainly for Helen as she is called now. He was in the connection Dutkne... you must have felt him.”

Dutkne nodded quickly. “I did. And two other minds as well. Powerful minds... but none with the raw command as him.”

Wayonn nodded. “I told you he is much like his father.” He said. He turned to the others. “We tried to initiate contact with them but they would not allow us. Their Mindvoice shields are some of the strongest we have ever felt.”

“So where does that leave us?” Drey asked from his chair. “Do we enter their space and take our chances about being discovered. That would not be a recommendation I make based on what you have told us Wayonn.”

“Nor I.” Nirilo said pushing away from the door.

“What choice do we have?” Dutkne asked now. “We can not turn back now! And we risk even greater danger if we attempt to move closer through the territory of these Kavalians. We have to take our chances!”

“That would not be the best course of action.” The soft female voice spoke from the opposite end of the room. “I assure you!”

Devra rose from her chair in an instant her green eyes wide in disbelief. “By the Grace of the Prophets!” She gasped.

Arduri and Naesta also rose just as quickly. “What trickery is this?” Arduri snarled.

The internal COM unit within the room burst to life now.

“Dutkne! Dutkne something just penetrated our hull! Some sort of probe! It’s coming from a Neural Booster of some sort and its generating a holo graphic image into the ship! We’re trying to localize it and...”

Dutkne stepped to the table quickly. “That... that won’t be necessary. We are... we are looking at it right now!”

“What?”

“Stand by!” Dutkne ordered as Wayonn moved around him slowly to move within two meters of the woman’s form.

“Dustha!” Wayonn said with a smile.

Helen's dark eyes focused on him and all of them could see her wolf fangs protruding from under her lip. "You... you are familiar to me... but I have never seen you." She spoke evenly. "I do not know who you are sir... but attempting to attack us through Mindvoice will not work."

"Attack you?" Wayonn gasped. "No! No... we were trying to contact you!"

"As I said... we do not know you and..."

Wayonn moved closer. "Search your feelings Dustha. You know who I am."

Helen stared at him for a long moment. "You do... you do seem familiar to me." She said. "However... I have never seen you."

Dutkne stepped forward now to stand next to Wayonn. "How did you... how did you find us?"

"It was a simple matter when you leave a trace to follow." Helen answered.

Wayonn looked at Dutkne. "You left a trace?" He asked in surprise.

"I exited the connection so fast I... I must have forgotten to cover my resonance." He answered sheepishly.

"Who are you people?" Helen snapped. "And be mindful of the fact that I am not in the best of moods and I will know if you are lying to me!"

"You know what my grandson and I are just by looking at us." Wayonn said. "We are only but a few of those we left behind to make contact with you. We are... we are The Lost Ones that Canth told Martin he would need to discover."

"You lie!" Helen spat angrily. "We discovered those Canth spoke of on Lycavore over two decades ago!"

Wayonn nodded. "They were only but a fraction of those that remain from the days before and just after the Black Day." Wayonn spoke calmly. "It is part of our history as well you know. Events are propelling us forward and now it is time Martin let our people know we thrive. Where is he? I need to speak with him."

"He is... he is dead." Helen spoke sorrowfully.

"Dustha... we are not your enemy." Wayonn spoke with a gentle smile. "Martin and I talked of meeting while we spent those days in his father's tomb. We know he is alive. We can feel him within Mindvoice."

"Impossible!" Helen snapped. "He is dead! You could not possibly feel him now. He..."

"Dustha... we are the same as you!" He insisted. "I know you can feel I speak the truth even there on Earth. And I know he can feel it as well from where he stands just out of our line of view."

Wayonn watched her turn to her right and then they saw the tall heavily muscled figure move into view next to her. The plumed helmet he wore held four different colors in the horse haired crest and it covered almost the entirety of his facial features with the exception of those burning black ringed azure colored eyes that all of them saw very clearly. They could also see the tips of the dual wolf fangs that protruded from under his upper lip and both Wayonn and Dutkne both knew only one bloodline of Lycavorians had that unique distinction. They watched that head tilt a little to the side.

"Androcles." Wayonn spoke softly.

Those azure eyes gazed at him intently as if he was looking into his soul and then they turned to Dutkne and they grew a little wider. He cut his eyes back to Wayonn. "I know what... I can feel what you are." He spoke softly. "Both of you... but you more." Andro spoke turning his eyes back to Dutkne.

Wayonn turned and looked at Dutkne who wore a similar expression of wonder on his face for he could feel it too. He could feel the pull that was sounding off within his blood loudly and it was the strangest sensation. Wayonn smiled and turned to look at the transmission.

"Then you know we could never be enemies." Wayonn said.

"I have heard that before... Wayonn." Andro spoke.

"I'm sure you have young Androcles... but you know when I speak it... it is the truth." Wayonn said. "There is something wrong with your father... what is it?"

Andro ignored him and turned to look at Dutkne. "It is your ship?" He asked.

Dutkne looked quickly at his grandfather before nodding his head and turning back to him. "One of many that the Protectorate has... yes." He answered.

"You... you are their leader?"

Dutkne shook his head. “They follow me... but I am not their leader.” He answered. “Your father is their leader. Just as he is King to those of you there in the Union, he is King to those of us outside the Perseus Arm as well. It has always been this way.”

“Idee alad pen taine forn?” Andro asked him. (Why do I trust you?)

Dutkne answered before the words had truly formed in his mind and though it surprised him, he found he meant every word. “Breve pen taine forn.” (Because I trust you)

“Do you speak for your guests as well?” Andro asked.

Dutkne looked back at where Nirilo stood beside his mother and sister snow. He nodded as he turned back. “I do. They... they need your help in finding someone of their species that has been brought to this quadrant of space by slavers. A daughter and sister.”

“Slavers?” Andro snarled so savagely it startled Devra and Naesta, while Arduri’s eyebrows went up in interest. “Within Union space?”

“We don’t know.” Dutkne answered.

Naesta took this time to step forward. “We know she is here!” She snapped.

Andro’s eyes turned to her. “As much as we detest slavers of any kind... we are... we are embroiled in a crisis all our own. I do not know what help we will be.”

“So we came all this way for nothing?” Naesta barked. “They told us you would help! She is our sister! They told us you would help and now you are saying you can’t! I knew we should have struck out on our own Arduri!”

“Naesta shut up!” Nirilo barked at his youngest sister.

“I said I do not know what help we could be...” Andro spoke sternly. “I did not say we would not help!”

“What is the difference?” Naesta snapped.

“The difference woman... is I will do as I say!” Andro barked. “And you would do well to leave the arrogance you wear on your sleeve outside the borders of Union space. Your beauty aside... you will surely piss someone off and they will upae arven you!”

Naesta’s mouth slammed shut so quickly at his words that she bit her tongue and the pain kept her from replying. Devra stepped up next to Naesta and took her arm. “Are all of your people as uncouth and coarse as you?” She snapped.

“Mother!” Nirilo barked.

“Enough!” Andro snapped. “I have not the time to banter with you!” His head and eyes turned back to Dutkne. “I will send a ship and someone to meet you to escort you here. Proceed to coordinates 54692.1. They will meet you there in two days.”

Dutkne nodded quickly. “We will be there.” He said. “You will... you will not come?”

“I will send my aide... Admiral... Admiral Andro. He and the Feravomir will meet you.” He answered. “They will guide you here to meet with me. Do not deviate from the corridor I have given you Dutkne. Not even by accident.”

Dutkne nodded. “We won’t.”

“And if we do?” Devra asked.

Andro turned those eyes on her. “Then I will interpret that as being hostile to me and to my people and I will ventilate your ship to space.”

“Androcles... your father?” Wayonn asked quickly before something else was said.

Andro met his eyes. “We will... we will discuss my father when you have arrived here.” He said. “Not before.”

“I can help.” Wayonn said. “I...”

Andro looked at him. “I can feel what you are Wayonn. You have the blood of a Pralor within you just as... just as my father does. But I will not place my family in danger for anyone... for any purpose. Not now. We will speak more when you get to Earth. We are finished here.”

Wayonn began to speak but the transmission ended abruptly. He turned to look at Dutkne for a long moment.

“That went well.” Dutkne announced with a grin.

“It must be worse than we thought.” Wayonn spoke softly.

Arduri stepped forward now. “What does... what does upa... upae arven mean?” She asked.

“It’s probably better if you don’t know.” Drey said from his seat.

“Tell us!” Devra demanded.

Dutkne turned to look at her. “It means bitch slap!” He replied.

“What... what does this mean?” Arduri asked. “This... bitch slap!”

Wayonn shook his head. “It is an ancient Earth slang that was used commonly many hundreds of years ago. Apparently it did not die out as changes occurred. It means you should watch what you say or someone will beat you up.”

Nirilo shook his head. “Excellent job sister!” He snapped angrily. “The one individual who can help us to find Caliria and you make them angry with us before we are even formally introduced. Excellent job!” He stepped up to his younger sister. “I advise you keep your tongue within your mouth or I will... I will bitch slap you!”

“I do not fear Lycavorians!” Naesta boasted.

“But you should fear these Lycavorians.” Wayonn spoke causing all of them to look at him. “True... compared to the Protectorate they are children in many ways. However, they are very dangerous children, for they have been fighting for their very existence since the Black Day. And they grow and learn every day. Do not underestimate what they can do... and if you wish their help do not assume you are their betters.” Wayonn met Devra's gaze. “There is one thing they can do far better than even the Protectorate and the Vanari.”

“What is that?” Devra asked.

“They can wage war.” Dutkne told her now.

CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR

CRANAE ISLAND

“...we know at the moment is that Crown Prince Androcles has secluded himself and most of his family away here at his large island home in Gytheio after a brief stay at the Royal Estate Villa in Sparta. The Durcunusaan are understandably keeping everyone far away from Cranae Island, and we are set up along the boardwalk some 1.5 kilometers away.” Me'alla spoke as she walked along the edge of the boardwalk. Hr'man kept two of the three video drones he now controlled focused on her while the third zipped back and forth overhead with dozens of others that were focused on the Island in the distance.

“The excavation, rescue and recovery continues in Sparta at the site of the decimated Senate Building, now well into its second day. The death toll is nearing seven hundred and fifty confirmed dead, among them nearly sixty children that were visiting from a local school and perhaps seventy-six sitting Union Senators. Since operations began, only thirty-nine have been pulled from the rubble alive and hope is rapidly dwindling for those that may be trapped still, including Prime Minister Deia and Queen For'mya. Dozens of experienced Structural Engineers have descended on the site from all over Earth, including three from Nodon who were already here for an Engineering Conference in Eden City. Of the four that I was able to interview very briefly, the consensus is that this was not a random bombing. Whoever conducted this heinous act had intimate knowledge of the buildings structure in order to bring it down as they did. As with the Senate Offices on Apo Prime, special consideration goes in to construction of these facilities and not just anyone would have the knowledge of where to plant explosives that could do this and bypass the many security devices used in both buildings. It has become known to us at Channel 65 that three other locations throughout Sparta are now blanketed with dozens of Durcunusaan troops and it is my understanding that the Krypteria also has a presence at these sites despite their established Charter that states they are not authorized to operate within Union space without direct Union Senate approval. The home of Governor Panos, the apartment of his senior aide Colonel Janae and where this all started, the home of Star Colonel Isra with his wives and mates Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Vice President Aihola. The many dead bodies of the Kavalian attackers have already been removed to the Durcunusaan base in the mountains surrounding Sparta for investigation.”

Nearly every Netnews Channel that had an office on Earth, which was a hundred and nineteen of the hundred and thirty throughout the Union, had their own people covering the island. They had people covering the excavation of the Senate Building that was proceeding even through the night hours. There were Netnews reporters blanketing the entire city of Sparta as well as Gytheio with some even reporting from Eden City and trying to obtain interviews with Queen Aihola of the Drow, or even General Lynwe. As was her usual self, Lynwe gruffly told the Netnews reporter who had asked for a conference where to stick his interview in the ancient Vampire and Drow language. Many were still trying to ascertain what it was she had told him, for they had never heard some of the words she used.

Me'alla's co-worker, the one who had asked the questions about Anja, had yet to make a return to broadcasting on the Network Channel and many wondered if he had been picked up by the Durcunusaan for belaboring the point too much. Even some of the more liberal of his fellow reporters thought what he had done was in very bad taste. The facts had already come to light in regards to the events with Anja on Hadaria and those same facts exonerating her had made the broadcast rounds all across the Union. That the Hadarian Arch Ministry had still chosen to oust her from power even though all the facts pointed to the undeniable conclusion that it was all contrived to begin with had anger many millions across the Union. Why the man had chosen to attempt to make an issue out of it was beyond them and no one supported him for his stupidity. There were many reporters and Netnews Channels that were often critical of the King and some of the things he had done and continued to do. However... none of those channels slanted their reporting to make people believe something that had been unequivocally proven not true. They reported, gave their opinions and why, and then let the people of the Union make up their own minds.

"...know that several STRIKER DT transports have landed over the last few hours and even from the boardwalk here, we could see Star Colonel Isra and Lieutenant Governor Tarifa landing on the beach on their dragons Aelnala and Roluth. The Lieutenant Governor and Vice President of Earth Aihola have long been recognized as dear sisters to King Leonidas because of the history and battles they fought together, though his half sisters and brothers with Lady Gorgo and Admiral Riall have begun to move into the public arena more in recent years at his request and the behest of Tarifa. Vice President of Earth and Queen of the Drow Aihola was seen landing in a STRIKER AT two hours ago under heavy escort. It is rumored that the younger children of King Leonidas and his Queens have been escorted here to be with their brother and the rest of their family. It is impossible to tell how many dragons are now on Cranae Island at this time, due to their numbers the fact they keep landing and taking off which makes it nearly impossible to keep track." Me'alla was seen lifting her arm into the air.

"As you can see there are easily seven or eight in the sky above the island and we can only assume that Prince Androcles's status as a Talon Guardian of the dragon species is playing some role in that action. We have seen Elynth of course, the Dragon Elder Mother Arzoal, the dragon of Princess Carisia whose name we believe is Anthar and several other Dragon Elders on the ground moving about, but for the most part they are remaining hidden. It is well known that Prince Androcles covets his privacy and there is a large wall made up of tall, thick pine trees that surround the massive patio area of his villa where Elynth is known to reside when she is here. The only way we could surmise who is on the island with him now is if we detect them walking along the sands near his home. There are even several Patrol Lifters in the waters near his villa to keep inquisitive people away." Me'alla stopped walking and looked directly at the video drone with the villa far in the background.

"Much has been said up until now and more will be said in the future no doubt in regards to his actions concerning his mother Queen Aricia, and we even watched it here as he reverently carried her body into the tomb of King Leonidas where he laid to rest the remains of his father only hours ago. We have also heard from the very outspoken Hadarian physician who treated the Queen and his insistence that she was well on her way to recovery. I can now tell you that doctor is no longer working at King Yelu Memorial Hospital by order of the Feravomir. By his very own admission he had never studied the history of what the term Anome means to the Lycavorian people. He asked for a transfer and was granted it immediately. Some of us may be asking; based on what this doctor has said, why then did the Prince do what he did?"

Me'alla paused for a moment before she went on. "I am considered a very young elven female by our standards, and I only moved here from Elear when I decided to come to school here. During my time at the Academy of Journalism right here on Earth in Eden City, I also earned a secondary degree in Lycavorian Studies. My father is an Admiral within the United Lycavorian Union Fleet and he has fought with Lycavorians for the better part of three hundred and fifty years. He has been led by them, fought with them and now he commands them, and never once has he had anything but praise for them and the honor and faith that drives them. My own brother's loving wife is a Lycavorian female from right here in Sparta. It is because of this that I... I found their species, their history and their culture to be fascinating. While I may seem biased to some because of that, I can tell you that I know what the term Anome means to them and to their tradition and culture. It is not a term that is used very often and in fact, during all of my studies of their history, I have found only two other instances where there were universally recognized anomes in Lycavorian culture. That was King Resumar and Queen Eliani and now Prince Androcles and Sadi. We have seen through the years the abilities our King and Queens have... and now his son as well with Crown Princess Sadi. In the nearly ten thousand years since the Black Day passed, there have been only three sets of anomes. Three. We have been blessed to witness two of them.

"Many of us do not, and will never, truly understand or comprehend the power that King Leonidas, his son Androcles, Queen Aricia or any of the Royal Family commands. We can not understand it for we will never experience it." Me'alla continued slowly. "What I do know is that Lycavorians cherish life and love perhaps on a plane of understanding many of us will never feel. Yes... Queen Aricia may have physically survived without her anome, but if what many Lycavorians, indeed the majority of them believe, her death would have come in the slow and painful fashion of never being able to feel her anome's aura wrapped around her ever again. They believe she would have withered away to nothing, even with the love of those who remain behind with her. Prince Androcles did not want that for his mother, and he did what he knew she would have wanted him to do. What right do we have to judge him on what the majority of Lycavorians believe to be true? It is one of their most sacred beliefs, and we are nothing if not an accepting collection of species and races within this great Union. All of us with different beliefs. Let us concentrate now on how we can recover and go forward, for surely our new King and Queens will need our support.

"This is Me'alla, Union Netnews Channel 65, reporting from Gytheio outside Prince Androcles's home on Cranæ Island. We will break in should any new information become available."

CRANÆ ISLAND ANDROCLES'S VILLA

"...break in should any new information become available."

"This is the one?" Lynwe asked Selene from where she stood next to the monitor with Tareif and Riall. Selene nodded from her seat. "Until Dilaen returns with the SCIMITAR... Helen and Andro want all press releases going through this young woman and Channel 65." She said evenly. "Androcles has appointed Dilaen as his defacto Press Administrator and she will coordinate everything when she returns."

"When is the SCIMITAR due back?" Tareif asked.

"They should arrive within twelve hours if I know Sa'sur." Riall answered. "Androcles has already given the order and all of our ships that are equipped with the new HMFC Drives will be able to use them freely. I have sent that order out to every fleet ship. There will be no more hiding the gains we have made."

Lynwe nodded. "As it should be." She stated.

Riall handed them each a data pad. "I will leave you to deploy what forces you feel are necessary to cover Earth. Each of you have your own Spartan Com Channels, and should anything come up that needs your attention I will contact you directly. Colonel Nestor has already begun dispersing his forces I understand Lynwe?"

Lynwe nodded her head. "Tareif and I felt it was prudent to do. They are the finest and the most experienced Reactionary Division we have on Earth and they are the most skilled in many ways. Nestor has seen to that. Earth is large Riall... and much of it has not seen a return of population. There are thousands of places Kavalians could hide. Thousands! We just don't have the manpower to do a thorough search."

"We could cover perhaps one continent at a time." Tareif agreed. "No more. And even that is stretching it."

"As with the ones that struck in Sparta, they will appear no different than us." Riall said. "Their biogenic cloning process has been refined through the years of war with the Coven and they are getting very good at it."

"So they could have people in Sparta still?" Selene asked. "Just waiting to attack at the first opportunity."

Riall nodded slowly. “Jalersi’Nruarani gave us a sample of her blood and DNA to use as a base search measure. Pian as well. Admiral Wallace and Joarl are realigning their sensors to detect similar patterns.”

“We can trust them Riall?” Lynwe asked.

“They risked their lives and stood in the middle of the worst of it to protect Aricia. They brought the information that the Kavalians were going to strike to Tarifa when they discovered it. They were unable to get it to us sooner for they were being hunted as well. We could have avoided the deaths had we known, but...” Riall paused in his answer. “That is something they did not have to do. Tarifa trusts them and apparently Martin did as well.” Riall nodded his head. “If they trusted them... that is good enough for me.”

“Aovi.” Tareif spoke softly.

“It must appear as if Martin is dead so there will be changes to command structure... but nothing that will affect your overall jobs or be permanent.” Riall said. “It’s a distinct possibility they could have people in Sparta and perhaps Eden City as I said and we must consider that when making our plans.” Riall told them. “That they have not come pouring across our borders in force lends much support to the reasoning that something else is going on. Androcles was originally intended as a target because they thought he went to Kranek with the others and they may very well come after him again if this is the case, knowing they did not kill him there.”

“The Durcunusaan will have just as much difficulty protecting him as they do his father.” Selene spoke shaking her head. “How do you protect two men who don’t want to be protected and in many cases are better at fighting and killing than the men assigned to protect them?”

Riall and Tareif nodded. “That is their issue.” Riall told them. “It is not one I am to be concerned with as Martin once told me. I am the commander of Union forces and that is what he wanted me to concentrate on. That is what I intend to do.”

“And no one outside of us here at the villa knows?” Tareif asked.

Riall shook his head. “For the moment... no. Martin has always considered those of you here as family. As Andro does. As we all do. No one outside of our immediate family knows at this moment, and most of those in our extended family will know within the next twenty-four hours. It will not appear odd for us to surround him with family and that is exactly what we are doing. The younglings have been moved here where they are more comfortable. Gorgo and Dasha are settling them into the East Wing of the villa for now. When the time is right in the next day or so, we will put them all on a STRIKER and send them to Curila 6. I don’t think Andro knew how big this villa was when he bought it. There are two wings that he has never even used. One is being used for the Command Center and the other for his siblings right now.”

“Andro has asked that I continue to give the updated briefings every few hours ussta ssinsrigg.” Selene spoke now as she looked at her Drow Mistress and lover for over twenty-five years now. Twenty-six years of blistering passion and excitement and intense love that still burned as brightly now as it did when they first discovered each other. It was a love that many who knew them could attest to, and more still saw on a daily basis. Selene and Lynwe knew just how to incite the other to rapturous pleasure when in their bed, and they knew each others deepest thoughts and moods almost better than their own. Lynwe’s beautiful Drow cock was the only thing that could make Selene howl out in mindnumbing bliss, and she knew that only she could cause Lynwe to truly sing out her own pleasure. Though they both loved Layna and Joarl dearly, it had started as just the two of them during a time of emotional distress and discovery and they would always feel that pull towards each other first and foremost. Their long and loving Mistress/Slave relationship, combined with Aihola and Tarifa’s and Nayeca and Anuk’s had become the basis for all female/female relationships among the Drow and those they chose as their lovers no matter where they now lived within the Union. “Charles has agreed to remain sequestered away at the Safe Site until such time as we have determined it is secure and he is in no danger.”

Lynwe looked at her with bright amber eyes of love. “How exactly did you and Aihola accomplish that?” She asked.

“We appealed to his more refined nature.” Selene said with a smile. “And he guaranteed us that if anything happened to us he would order a full mobilization of Earth Forces and kick the Kavalians in the ass by himself if need be. It is added incentive for us to remain safe.”

“Bah!” Tareif echoed dismissively. “He knows you will not listen to him. He is probably already planning to invade if I know Charles.”

Riall chuckled for the first time in nearly three days. "Charles continues to impress me even after all these years." He stated. "What is he... nearing eighty?"

"Seventy-six next month and still as spry as a twenty year old." Selene answered. "We were preparing a large birthday party but I suppose that is off for now."

"Someone should talk him into letting one of us turn him." Riall spoke. "He has made the humans strong again with his leadership and it will be a shame to lose that. They have truly an inspiration to many now."

Selene shook her head slowly. "I still... I still can not believe that this is happening Riall. Where is he?"

Riall motioned to the doors opposite the large main room they sat in. "On the patio with Sadi and Carisia. He and Helen are leaving in a few hours to meet with this Wayonn person and those with him."

Selene looked at him from the couch. "Riall... who is this person?"

Riall shook his head slowly. "I don't know and I don't begin to understand most of it. Gorgo has tried to explain the history of these Pralors to me. As much as she knows anyway. Helen knows much more than she lets on. Martin and Andro as well. It has to do with Avi and City Ship 41 and when they discovered it. And if my understanding of it is correct, events that happened nearly thirty or forty thousand years ago on Lycavore. Even before where Resumar became King in our history. It is all very confusing... at least to me. It is part of the reason why our people are able to use Mindvoice. It has to do with what Canth, the very first Oracle of our people told Martin on Ukwav. How he would need to find the Lost Ones as Canth referred to them. And amazingly it ties very tightly together with the history of the Vampire High Coven as well."

"The High Coven?" Lynwe gasped. "How so?"

Riall shrugged his broad shoulders. "That I don't know... but it is part of the reason that Carisia is now one of Andro's mates. Why she is bound to him almost as tightly as Sadi. And it is also part of the reason why Zarah and Yuri's daughter Lucia are now together. Why Lucia risked all to save Zarah. As I said... it is all very confusing."

"Can we... can we trust them?" Tareif asked.

Riall looked at him. "That is something I believe Andro and Helen will discover quickly, but I don't believe they would be going if that was not the case."

"...Ilythiiri tessai is with Aihola and her mother Daba and SirsanGai is speaking with her grandmother and uncle." Sadi Leonidas spoke softly as she pressed close to Andro on one side and Carisia Leonidas pressed snugly to him on the other. Two of his wives and mates.

"We felt it was the right time to speak with you." Carisia said.

Andro looked down into Sadi's jungle green eyes and then shifted his gaze to Carisia's Maya blue orbs. He lowered his mug of strong coffee to the nearby table, using his TK power to let it settle the last three meters to the top. The cool breeze coming from the ocean and the smell of salt water in his nose had done more to calm him than anything in the last few hours. Having Sadi's sugar plume and spice scent combined with Carisia's sweet rose blossom scent filtering powerfully to him now relaxed him even further.

Androcles was very nearly overwhelmed with everything that was happening and it was moving so quickly that he could barely keep up. He had moved into a realm that only his father had been in up until this moment. So many men and women hinging on his every word and order. All of them, while knowing and conducting their duties, all of them looking to him for guidance. Now he truly knew what his father meant when he said he hated being King and how he just wanted to take his mothers and disappear for months on end. Andro also knew it was something his father had never done out of his sense of duty and commitment to their people and it was something Androcles would not shirk either.

"Speak with me about what?" He asked softly.

"With everything that is happening... we felt... we felt perhaps you may have forgotten who you are." Sadi said softly.

Andro chuckled gently. "Trust me... I have many people who remind me every hour of who I am." He answered. "And who I am supposed to be."

"That is not what we mean." Carisia said softly.

Andro looked back and forth between them several times. "What is going on here?" He asked.

“We are speaking of Lu'ria and Ne'Veha.” Sadi said. “You need to finish what you have started my love.”

“Excuse me?” Andro asked.

“You know what I am talking about Androcles Leonidas.” Sadi told him sternly but with a touch of playfulness in her voice.

“Sadi... now is not the time...”

“It is the time!” Carisia told him pressing closer to him. Her lithe five foot two frame looked almost ridiculously small against his muscular six foot one body, but it never ceased to cause her blood to surge with desire. “You have turned our Ilythiiri tessai. Ne'Veha feels the changes that sharing your bed have caused within her Andro.”

“You need to finish it.” Sadi told him. “You need to make them ours completely. You need to love Lu'ria as you have loved Enylarcopri and I. You need to turn Ne'Veha completely and love her as you have loved us.”

“KertaGai...” Andro began.

“No... listen to us.” Sadi said shaking her head. “We are meant for each other Androcles. You know this. All of us are meant for each other. You have known this since you were only eight months old! I have known as well... though I tried to deny it until you returned to me. Enylarcopri has known almost her entire life. As we have found each of them we have grown stronger together. Enylarcopri... SirsanGai... and now Ilythiiri Tessai. The stronger we become...” Sadi paused for a moment and rested her forehead against his chest. “The stronger we become my love, the easier it will be for us to face whatever the future brings to us. And that includes discovering the last piece of the puzzle that we all are.”

“Sadi I can't...” Andro began to speak again.

“They are right!” Gorgo's voice spoke from behind them.

Andro turned and saw her come fully onto the patio holding the mug of tea in her hands. He shook his head as he looked at the stone floor of his patio. She was very different from only a few hours ago when she thought she had lost her son yet again. Now she was the strong and so very confident woman she normally was. “Grandmother I...” He began to speak.

Gorgo stopped as she came up in front of him. “You what?” She asked him quickly. “Do you think that if you hold in what your blood and your instincts demand that you do; do you think that if you hold this in, it will make you a better leader somehow? That our people will somehow look at you differently?”

“No. It's just...”

“Your father learned the hard way that this is not the case Androcles. He almost lost your mother because he did not follow his instincts.” Gorgo said softly as she looked at him. “The clone of me encouraged him to ignore the instincts he had followed for so long, and she did it in an insidious manner; by telling him our people came first and to shield his instincts. He almost lost your mother Aricia because of that. He almost waited too long before turning your mother For'mya. If he was here what do you think he would tell you? He would tell you to follow what your instincts and your blood clamor so loudly for you to do. Without hesitation. And without question. Just as he now does. That is what makes you leaders of men! You have turned Lu'ria Andro... and her Drow blood sings for you to the heavens. Every single female wolf within five kilometers of Craneae Island can smell her. Her scent now filters on the wind just as strongly as Sadi's does. She is the first you have turned Androcles, and like your mother Dysea her scent will be nearly as strong as Sadi's. Ne'Veha... well even Helen and I commented about Ne'Veha. We agreed that in all our years we have never smelled an elven female whose very essence announced so loudly that she wanted the man who claimed her to finish making her his. Not even For'mya's blood called so strongly for your father before he turned her.” Gorgo said softly. “You have turned Lu'ria and now you need to finish turning Ne'Veha. And then you need to make them utterly yours as they both want so badly. It is what their blood wants. What their minds want. You are the only one to not see this you know.”

“Everything that is happening is...”

Gorgo shook her head slowly. “We can not change what has happened young Androcles. It is times like these where I curse my Spartan blood, for it tells us this is what happens in life and we need to move forward no matter what.” She looked at him. “As... as cruel as it sounds yes, your mother For'mya may well be dead. Deia may join her. We may also never recover your mother Dysea. We may never recover from what your uncle has wrought upon us... but if we are to recover then you need to be as strong as you can be. As with your father, the women who hold his heart and soul make him who he is. They make him as strong as he is. Just as your KertaGai does. Just as your Enylarcopri does. Lu'ria and Ne'Veha are part of that now... they are part of what makes you who you are, just as you shape them. Do not deny it... do not resist it. Your father will need you to be the strongest you can be if and when the time comes. If your mother is dead... if we can not get your mother Dysea back... your father will need that strength." Gorgo smiled up at him.

"They are what give you that strength Androcles, just as your mothers are your father's strength." Gorgo reached up with one hand and placed it flat on his cheek. "Your father did not have the luxury of knowing what he was... even who he was when he first returned to Earth. To me. You have known who and what you are since you were still being carried in your mother's womb. You have never denied that Androcles Leonidas, in all the years I have known you and watched you grow, you have embraced every portion of what you are completely. Do not deny that now."

Carisia reached up and stroked his opposite cheek with her fingers as Gorgo's hand fell away and he looked at her. "Sadi is your anome Andro." She spoke with bright blue eyes and a brilliant smile. "I know that... Lu'ria and Ne'Veha know that. She will always be the one that calls to you strongest of all. Lu'ria is the first you have turned and just as Gorgo has said, like your mother Dysea she calls for you almost as intensely. But we also know that you love us just as intensely as we love you. That Sadi loves us just as we love her. This is the purpose we were all meant for. And we will be complete when the last piece of that puzzle comes to us."

"Take Lu'ria and Ne'Veha with you my love." Sadi told him with a loving smile. "Finish what you started so that they will know you as Enylarcopri and I know you. Trust me... we will have enough here to keep us busy making sure they do not rearrange our entire home and acting as we would be expected to act."

"Listen to them Androcles. Trust in their love for you." Gorgo said as she turned to go back inside. "They will never guide you in a direction you don't wish to go. And they know we need to be ready to face anything in the future. You leave with Helen in three hours... Arzoal and she will see you on the HARBINGER."

Andro watched her until she had re-entered his villa completely and then he turned to look at Sadi and Carisia. "You two planned that." He said finally.

Sadi looked up at his adoring azure blue eyes. "We figured we might need an assist to make you see our point."

Andro lowered his head and nuzzled Sadi's cheek and neck firmly causing her to sigh in delight. He repeated this action with Carisia and though she was not wolf and could not feel the aura of unabashed love he was projecting, she could still feel his powerful Mindvoice resonance ripple in much the same fashion through her.

"I will do as you ask me." He whispered.

"It is what you want as well my love..." Sadi said softly.

"You are just too stubborn to admit it." Carisia finished.

They felt his arms wrap around their waists as he pulled them tightly to him and they knew he would do what they both knew all of them wanted.

"No!" Andro snapped shaking his head as he got to his feet. "Absolutely not! I already have one brother, his mate and an Uncle in harms way inside Kavalian space! As well as countless others! I will not risk my father's dearest sister and one of his favorite nieces as well! No!"

"You... you have people in Kavalian space already?" Pian asked in shock.

Tarifa looked at Isra next to her and then let her sapphire colored eyes drift Aihola's amber orbs and then to where Pian and Jalersi sat on the second couch with Karun and Ardis. She turned her eyes back to him. "Andro..."

Andro turned back around and glared at her. "You want me to give you a ship to take you into Kavalian space so you can find and rescue Jalersi'Puat..." Andro stopped and looked at her. "So you can find and rescue Jalersi'Nruarani's daughter! You don't even know where she is!"

"She is on Rizon Four." Pian spoke up still somewhat surprised that he was here at all. What Pian did not realize or understand just yet was that his actions in standing with Jalersi and Jiss and protecting Aricia would make him somewhat of a cult hero within Union Space. He would become known as the first who broke away from the old oppression and moved into the future. His feline eyes were even more surprised when Androcles corrected himself when he spoke Jalersi's name just now.

Andro looked at him. "Rizon Four?" He gasped looking at him. "Pian that's on the far edge of Kavalian space beyond the Orion Spur and almost to the Perseus Arm! A three to four day trip at least!"

"It is where my Pride calls home Androcles Leonidas." Pian spoke calmly as he got to his feet. "It is what has allowed me to bring about the change in my Pride I have wanted. Turning my Pride away from the old ways of our cultures and traditions. Much like your grandfather did so many thousands of years ago with your own people."

Andro tilted his head and looked at him oddly for a moment before turning to Tarifa and Aihola. "Did my tennas tell you to say that?" He asked looking at him quickly. Pian looked at him sheepishly and Andro turned back to Tarifa. "Tenna?"

"So what?" Tarifa barked softly. "Yes... I told him to say it! Andro it's the truth! Pian's Pride is nearly five million strong! It's one of the larger Prides within the Kavalian Federation! And now because of what Pian and Jalersi have discovered together, what they have embraced just as Athani did; now his Pride will be the largest force for good and change within the entire Federation."

"They will be hunted Tenna!" Andro snapped. "They will be hunted for choosing the path they have! After what they have done for my mother do you expect me to put them in grave danger by allowing them to go back into Kavalian space?"

Pian snorted loudly and gripped Jalersi's hand tightly. "Let them hunt for us. We know the border areas of the Federation better than any other Pride. We have lived there for centuries. They will not find us unless I wish them to find us." He stated confidently as he rose to his feet. "I need to do this. I promised Jalersi we would not abandon her daughter and I will not go back on that promise!"

"Andro... do you doubt me?" Tarifa asked.

"I'm not doubting you Tenna!" Andro answered. "Nor do I doubt Pian or Jalersi... not after what they did to protect my mother."

"You doubt me then?" Karun asked from his spot next to Ardis.

Andro looked at him intently. "You are the one who concerns me least cousin." He spoke quickly. "Ardis would have gutted you long ago if you were not sincere in your heart. And if she hadn't... my father would have."

"Then what is the problem?" Tarifa asked.

Andro returned to his chair. "Problem? This whole idea is insane... that is the problem! My father would never allow you to do this tenna and you know that! Why do you ask it of me?"

Tarifa nodded. "Yes I know what your father would say... but you are not your father." She said.

Andro's eyes bore into her as they narrowed. "No... I am not." He stated firmly. "And the answer is still no. If this is to work... if we are going to discover why the Kavalians have done this then we need to make this façade last as long as possible. Part of that pretense is I promote grandfather Panos and you become Governor of Sparta!"

Tarifa's eyes grew wide at this information. "What?" She gasped in shock.

Andro nodded. "As sick as it sounds... my father made me go over this at least half a dozen times when I was younger. This very scenario! Aunt Deia's resonance within Mindvoice is very weak... and it grows weaker by the hour. My mother... my mother For'mya may very well be dead and buried in that pile of rubble. Father may not be dead... but we could still lose so many more! Even if Aunt Deia survives... she will be unable to conduct her duties as Prime Minister. Before I leave I will appoint grandfather Panos as either her successor or her deputy while she makes her recovery. That makes you Governor of Sparta. What do I tell the Netnews if this happens?" He spoke. "That my Aunt Tarifa, who is now Governor of Sparta, that she is somewhere within Kavalian space on a secret mission?"

"Then send us." Ardis spoke leaning forward. "I will certainly not be missed Andro."

"I forbid it!" Isra snapped.

"Papa... would you expect me to leave one of my brothers or sisters in danger? Would you or my mothers leave me?" Ardis asked. "How can you ask my husband and mate to do the same? How can you ask Jalersi to do this after what she and Pian have done?"

“You do not need to go!” Isra almost shouted beginning to come to his feet.

Tarifa gripped his arms with Aihola and kept him from getting to his feet. “Isra... sit.” Aihola told him. “This does not help.”

“She is our daughter!” Isra snapped.

Aihola nodded. “Yes she is... and she is also a woman who loves her mate Isra.” Aihola turned to Andro. “If you need to do this Androcles... can you not say Tarifa has gone to Apo Prime or to Elear for a meeting of some sort and that she will be confirmed when she returns. This would not look odd in the least considering what has happened.”

Andro looked at her slowly as the wheels in his head began to turn. “Tenna Aihola... I... you support this?”

“I support this because I trust my mates.” She stated. “And I trust those who they have come to call friend.”

Karun came to his feet then surprising everyone. “She is my sister!” He snarled. “The Nruarani Pride risked much to keep her from my father’s clutches! She is only twenty years old... and she is innocent to all that is going on around her! She does not understand what is happening! She does not understand why our father wishes to make her a whore on Nefoa! I will not sit by and wait for my brothers Leruk or Kalis to find her and take her to Nefoa to be a whore for my father’s men! If he does not kill her outright for what my mother and I have done! Nikkei is innocent and... we have found new lives! New lives and new meaning to our lives! Nikkei deserves just as much a chance! I will leave... even if I have to steal a ship!”

Andro’s eyes lifted slowly and he gazed at Karun. He turned after a moment and looked at Jalersi and she met his gaze as she slowly came to her feet. “What?” She asked softly. “What do you know?” Her hands came up to her mouth as she gasped. “He... he has already found her hasn’t he?”

“Impossible!” Pian spoke looking at her and then back to Andro. “My mother... my Pride would not have let that happen! No!”

“Then what?” Jalersi demanded.

“Leruk.” Andro said softly.

Karun stepped closer to him. “What about Leruk?”

Andro turned back to him. “He was on Iraruzu.” Andro said softly. “He was leading the forces there that were attempting to find and kill... they were trying to kill Walter and Lu’ria.” He told them the pain in his voice very evident. “They had already destroyed the entire Drow settlement and killed the Drow that were stationed there. Over forty of them. When I arrived... when I arrived they had the last of them trapped in the remains of their home. Lu’ria was... Ilythiri Tessai was badly injured and...”

“He is dead isn’t he?” Jalersi asked.

Andro met her eyes. “He was trying to kill my wife and mate! He had already shot her four times! ” Andro said forcefully. “He and those he was leading... they had killed over forty Drow who... I killed him!” Andro said finally. He looked at Karun. “I killed your brother for what he was attempting to do.”

Jalersi took a deep breath and shook her head slowly. “I lost Leruk many years ago.” She said softly seeing Andro turn back to look at her. “Just as I lost Kalis. They... they embraced their father’s nature completely. The cruelty and hate. The lack of compassion for any female. Only Karun and Nikkei have remained outside his influence.” Jalersi looked at him. “I did not realize it until... until I found Pian... but they were dead to me the moment they fell into their father’s realm of corruption and hate. That is why... that is why I must find her before they do. Karun is right Androcles... she is innocent! Pure!”

Andro turned slowly and looked back at Karun as he stepped closer to him. “When I came here... when I came here I discovered far more than I ever expected.” Karun spoke. “Everything my father told me as I was growing was a lie. Everything! I have embraced my blood Androcles! The blood that makes me a Leonidas! Grandmother Gorgo... my sister Lisisa, Ardis... they have opened my eyes. After what I have discovered I will never dishonor that name as my father did! Never! I would gladly die before I did that! Kalis and Leruk... they are not my brothers... they never really were. My family is here! This is where I belong! Would you leave one of your sisters in danger if there was even a slim hope of saving her? Would you leave Lisisa? Or Eliani? Or Zarah? Would you desert them if you had a chance, no matter how small! Would you...?”

Andro turned away from him suddenly closing his eyes. Karun made to reach out and grab him but Ardis quickly took his arm and shook her head.

“Ardis... I...” Karun began to protest.

Ardis put a finger to his lips and stopped him. “I know.” She said softly. “I know. And I will follow you wherever you go... but we can’t do it alone.”

They all turned when the massive double doors opened and Elynth’s huge head and obsidian shoulders entered. Jalersi and Pian didn’t flinch much to their surprise. They had no reason to fear dragons any longer, and neither of them understood why they ever did to begin with. To Jalersi... they were now the most majestic creature she had ever seen. It had taken Pian a little longer to be able to reach out and touch one, but as with her, when he did whatever fear he may have held quickly slipped away. They watched Andro step up to Elynth as she lowered her huge body to the floor in front of Andro and his hands reached up to press against the scales of her muzzle. They watched her butt him in the chest gently in a show of affection and love.

[He speaks true Andro my brother.] Elynth said. [Neither of us would leave one of our siblings behind. It is not in our nature.]

[I know.] Andro said softly.

[You feel guilty for killing foul Leruk when you should not.] Elynth told him. [But I do understand why. You must do what your heart and mine tells you my Bonded Brother. It will make our family that much more special. And stronger. We need that now.]

[Yes we do.] He answered. He looked up at her snout. [What would I do without you sister?]

[I have told you before... you are a man. You would do nothing. And that is why you need four breathtaking females to guide you.] Elynth answered with a trace of humor in her voice.

Andro couldn’t help but smile and nod his head. “You are right Karun...” He spoke out loud as he leaned his forehead against Elynth’s snout for a long moment. “I would do anything for any of my sisters... no matter the danger. No matter the odds.” Andro turned and stepped right up to Karun and gazed at his blue eyes. “I have taken a brother from you cousin... I have taken a brother from you and now I offer myself as your brother in return if you will have me. A commitment of Blood washes away a crime of Blood.” Andro held out his hand to Karun. “Brother.”

Karun didn’t hesitate and he snatched Andro’s hand and arm tightly. “Then that is what I pledge as well!” He stated without pause fully embracing the new life he had found without a moment’s hesitation, no matter where that life took him. “Brother!”

Andro smiled and nodded his head. “And we do not leave our family in danger.” He said. He turned quickly to Isra. “Are they ready Uncle?”

Isra came slowly to his feet now as he looked at him. “Durago and Aelnala believe they are. So do I.” He stated confidently as Tarifa and Aihola looked at him oddly. “It has been a upaee hiding them from your father and Arzoal though. Especially for three years.”

“We will not need to for very much longer. There is a new VANGUARD MARK III-Class Cruiser in orbit.” Andro told him. “The RAGE OF ACHILLES I believe she is called. The first of the new VANGUARD line that will take the place of the older LEONIDAS I as escorts in our Fleet Groups. She has the new HMFC engines, a Shroud, plenty of firepower and she can carry twenty-five dragons with ease. She can go places a LEONIDAS II can’t. She also has a human female captain cut from the same mold as Miranda Lorian and Sa’sur.”

Isra grinned. “Ahhh... bigger nor than me then. Excellent.”

Andro laughed a genuine laugh now as Tarifa and Aihola both punched Isra in each of his arms. “Have a staette of them deployed to her immediately. You just may need them. You and Aelnala will lead them Uncle.” (Section)

Isra nodded instantly. “Done.”

“Then... then you will allow us to go?” Jalersi asked quickly her voice filled with hope.

Andro looked at her and nodded slowly. “Karun is right... I would never leave any of my sisters in harm’s way if it was within my power to change. You will join with my brother and Athani on Ritaah.” He said.

“Athani?” Jalersi gasped.

Pian’s eyes grew wide. “Ritaah?” He gasped as he came forward. “Then you do have people inside Kavalian space already?”

Andro nodded his head. “From there you will find the best way to bring Nikkei home safely, but Resumar will have the final say on how you do it. He should be almost finished with his primary mission there but his mission takes priority no matter what.” Andro looked at Karun quickly. “You know and understand what I am saying Karun, at least in a military sense. Find Nikkei and do whatever it takes, but Resumar’s mission is more important until it is complete. You will fully understand why when you get there and see for yourselves, but you must promise me that, for his mission could have ramifications that will resound across the universe.”

Karun nodded. “I give you my word.”

Andro nodded and slowly turned to look at Tarifa. “If anything happens to you tenna, my father will hang my nor out in the sun to cook slowly. You know that.” He stated firmly. “Do nothing stupid or reckless please.”

Tarifa grinned at him and nodded. She turned to Aihola. “Nya Istel?”

Aihola nodded. “If both of us were gone the Netnews would detect something was awry.” She said. “I need to remain here to maintain the illusion and also to help Lu'ria when they return the day after tomorrow. Daba, Sadi and I will need to assist her in what her status now is thanks to our Mandri.” Aihola looked at Andro with her bright amber eyes. “Like his father... he tends to bite before he thinks.”

Andro looked at her sheepishly for a moment. “She... she does smell very good tenna.”

“Good!” Aihola barked humorously. “When you return... Daba and I will have a short ceremony prepared until such time as a proper and full Drow wedding can be held. It must be done Andro, even with everything else that is happening this must take place. I’m sorry.”

Andro nodded. “I know. And I am not sorry, so no one else should be either.”

“I sincerely hope you realize what you have gotten yourself into Androcles. Her father and her family have never met you mandri. You have turned her without them meeting you. There has never been a pureborn Drow who has been turned or taken as a mate by a Lycavorian. This is new territory for all of us.”

“I know what I did. I could not let her die.” He answered. “And I have no regrets or fear about it. We were meant to be together just as Sadi and I. We...”

Aihola lifted her hand and shook her head. “It is not me you need to convince Mandri. You have Daba on your side which is unbelievable to say the least... but now you will have to convince the rest of her family. And the Drow as a whole.”

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders laconically. “So be it.” He turned to Karun. “I need to leave for a meeting. My uncle has my personal Spartan COM channel. He will see to it that you are assigned one as well. If you need anything before you depart or arrive on Ritaah contact me directly.”

“We will not fail.” Karun said looking at Ardis with her Elven and Lycavorian beauty. “I have far too much to live for now.”

Andro pulled Karun into a powerful embrace gripping the back of his head as he did. “Cuia fas vada carians fervon.” (Go with the Gods brother)

“Forn aen fan fervon. Forn aen fan.” (You as well brother. You as well)

PHY'IAD'S COMMAND SHIP EIGHTEEN HOURS FROM BELID

“Ahhhhhhhhhhhh... noooo!”

“You like our Immortal cocks don't you elf Queen!” The Immortal barked loudly as he rammed his hips forward again, sinking his huge cock into the silky depths of her pussy as the Immortal behind her withdrew his huge cock slowly from her bowels. She was sandwiched between the two hulking men, her breasts crushed against the naked chest of the Immortal in front of her and her tattooed body being pummeled with more Immortal cock than she ever had thought possible. “Vith Dysea... you are so fucking tight!” The Immortal gasped as he lowered his head to her chest and he ground his thick, fifteen inch cock into her clenching pussy.

Dysea's body was on fire. Had been on fire for hours now.

Her senses were screaming in blissful abandon as these two Immortals used her as they wanted. She didn't have the strength to fight them when they had come into her cell, her sweet luscious body already exposed to their gazes. She had been stripped naked before they tossed her in this cell, her jaw sore and her body aching from the blows it had taken to knock her out. She had not gone down without a fight, impaling one

Immortal with her Nehtes even as she dropped to the ground stunned by the hammer like blow to her face. Even with all her strength and skill she had finally succumbed to their repeated blows.

