

Wolves and Dragons of the Blood

A Spartan's War Chronicles: Book 4

By Michael J. Cropo
Copyright 2014-2015

Visit the Spartan's War Chronicles web site at <https://aspartanswarchronicles.com/>

CHAPTER ONE

USU'OZEIB 7

COMMAND AND POLITICAL HEADQUARTERS OF THE VAMPIRE HIGH COVEN

POPULATION: FOUR HUNDRED THIRTY BILLION

CAPITAL CITY: DWURI

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AND TEN MONTHS SINCE INITIAL KAVALIAN INVASION

It was darker now it seemed.

Darker than usual anyway, at least as far as Yuri was concerned. Not in terms of the weather, for the weather on Usu Ozeib 7 rarely varied. It was always dark in some manner as the sunlight actually only bathed the planet for three hours a day and the rest of the hours were spent in a perpetual gray color. The mood of the people was extremely different now than she remembered, more open than what her father had allowed, but yet more subdued as well. She guessed twenty-five years of sustained warfare punctuated by short lulls would do that to you. The many purebloods and turned vampires who lived here were a more sullen bunch now as they moved about the surface of the planet, going about the daily chores of their lives. Many of the things they had taken for granted for so long were no longer available to them, and hadn't been for some time. While there was no poverty per say, there was definitely an upper and lower caste. Most of them had never and would never experience the horrors of war with the Kavalian animals first hand. That was left to the High Coven Officers, the normal and cloned soldiers and the fleets that viciously guarded their planet and the thousands more throughout the Empire. The High Coven was no longer as large as it had once been, but then the Kavalians had never reached this far into High Coven space, though three attempts had been made throughout the over two decades of on-again, off-again sustained combat.

The initial invasion of the Kavalian and Zalesian forces had taken two hundred and fifty-six High Coven planets in the first five years. The Kavalian Federation Imperium, as they now called themselves though Yuri knew who ruled who in that regard, had poured across the borders of High Coven space in two different locations with just over five thousand ships and nearly twenty million of the savage biogenic Kavalian ground troops. The first years of the war had been nothing but a scramble to survive as more High Coven planets were attacked at one time than they could possibly hold and defend. The actions of her father and then her mother when she had assumed power, which was rightfully hers anyway, had thrown the High Coven into chaos and disarray. Thousands of their men and hundreds of ships had betrayed them and defected to the Federation within the first few months after seeing what was aligned against them. Many of them were now long dead Yuri thought smugly, either killed by the Kavalians themselves for failing to do what was ordered or butchered horribly by High Coven forces in battle over the years when they were discovered or encountered. Traitors were looked down upon as the lowest kind of scum and they were treated as such.

It had not been until almost three quarters of the way through the third year of the war that the newly chosen High Coven Supreme Military Commander had finally been able to make a stand and throw the KFI forces back by force.

The Battle of Diela Luavor had signaled a new day to the High Coven forces, and soon after that they had begun making the KFI troops pay in blood for every single inch of High Coven territory and planet they claimed. The Supreme Commander had shoved backbone and courage back into his forces, and they began fighting as if their very existence depended on it, which it did. Two additional years of war had seen them lose another seventy-three planets, while only regaining nineteen, but then the KFI reached a point where they could not get past. Constant raids behind the enemy lines by Shrouded High Coven Fleets had ravaged their supply lines and two dozen covert missions by Immortals and Elite Shock Troopers of their Cloned Divisions had put fear into the minds of Kavalian leaders who were outside the control of the main forces. The High Coven's own cloning process had been streamlined and improved and they were able to field new troops almost as fast as the KFI. Troops that were better trained and led in many instances, but the Kavalians had superior numbers. The biogenic created Kavalian troops were utterly ruthless, savage and very hard to kill, though surprisingly it had been a misguided attempt by a rogue KFI leader to attack and hold a Lycavorian Union planet in the third year of the war that showed the Supreme Commander what his course of action should be.

Barely five thousand Union Spartans and a hundred of their Mjolnir's Hand, led by that dog Leonidas and his lap puppy Daniel Simpson, had turned back over twenty-five thousand Kavalian troops in a matter of weeks butchering them almost to the last man, while Admiral Riall had set about obliterating their space fleet overhead. They had used surprise and superior training and skill to win that battle and the Supreme Military Commander took it to heart. It should have drawn the Lycavorian Union into the war but it hadn't. Many of the VHC officers and her mother had wondered what had held the Union back, and to this day no one knew what the answer to that question was.

The first five years of war were followed by almost five years of random and sporadic combat, but nothing like the initial invasion and subsequent early years. That had changed in the eleventh year when the KFI attacked once more in massive force and numbers. The High Coven fared much better this time because they were prepared, but still they were pushed back and only some reckless, yet brilliant military operations devised by the Supreme Commander saved the High Coven from total defeat after another five years of sustained combat. They had not fought any major engagements since the end of that second five year span, mostly minor but vicious encounters scattered across High Coven space. That was all about to change Yuri knew with the intelligence they had just been able to confirm. The intelligence that was forcing them to do something they had never thought possible.

Her mother was now the High Empress of the Coven, and while she was much more approachable than her father had ever been; her mother was far more vicious and devious when angered. That did not bother Yuri in the least, and she and her much younger sister Narice had no qualms about speaking with their mother in regards to anything. In truth... they held nothing back from her, much as Yuri had once held nothing back from her father. This also allowed their mother to open up further to them, and they now knew she and Admiral Tesand would never part. Yuri hadn't thought it would last in the beginning... but she had underestimated what the Admiral had given to her mother. Something that her father Veldruk had never given her, and while she was still very stern and formal with Tesand in public, at least now she had become comfortable enough to show the man affection in front of family and those that her mother considered loyal. The last years had seen her become so much closer to her mother than ever before, mainly because she was now a mother herself but also because Narice was older and becoming her own woman. Yuri and Narice were close... but not as close as Yuri would have liked. Her sister was very unique and much more introverted in many respects. She kept mainly to herself, studying endlessly from the data pads and history scrolls aboard the remains of the Mindvoice ship even though much of the ship had long ago lost any kind of power to it, as well as training with her dragon Deneth.

Yuri was a mother now and had given birth to four children total, yet she only truly cared about three of them.

Yuri had given her devoted husband Robert Moran three strong children, two tough handsome young men and a stunning daughter who was the youngest. The daughter she bore with the pureblood scum Vavant, who her father Veldruk had chosen for her, was the oldest at twenty-five but Yuri had no love for her and only a grudging respect for the skills she had developed all on her own. In fact Yuri hated her more than anything, mainly because she had taken the cerise colored dragon that had been meant to serve Yuri.

They had discovered the forty-three dragons in The Wilds after a Lycavorian Type I Dragon Transport had been damaged by Unsaar mercenaries out for revenge after that pig Leonidas had destroyed their base of operations within The Wilds for some perceived wrong they had committed. Forty-three of the dragon eggs and very young hatchlings had survived the crash of the ship. A High Coven intelligence operative who had been working on the planet and who had more brains than most had taken it upon himself to insure the eggs and very young hatchlings were spirited back within High Coven space before the Lycavorians could descend upon the planet in an effort to rescue them. The dragon eggs and hatchlings were a combination of breeds and almost immediately the eggs had begun hatching upon being placed in advanced incubators on Nuwaroa. Yuri had chosen the cerise colored male to serve her when it hatched, but those hopes were quickly dashed when the pure Firespitter dragon hatchling had shunned and refused her and then bonded almost immediately with her then eight year old daughter Carisia. It was a bond that no matter how much she tried to interfere with, only grew stronger. Yuri had finally given up and began working with another of the dragons that she favored, while three of the other new hatchlings bonded immediately with her other three children. It was a struggle for Dante at first, but over the years he and his dragon had become better at working together. As young as they were when they hatched, it was easy to control their very limited perceptions and for the most part shape their minds so that they considered themselves superior to any others, unlike the dragons that called the Lycavorian Union home. Yuri was very pleased now with Vollenh and the progress they had made together... for they were a powerful and cruel pair when together, and Vollenh seemed to feed off of that from within Yuri, for he was very protective of her.

Yuri hated Carisia and that hatred carried over to her actions toward her as well. No matter how much Carisia did to try and win her affection and approval, Yuri put her down and made her feel small and unloved until finally Carisia eventually stopped. She had wanted to abort the pregnancy after the events with her father unfolded, but her mother convinced her to keep the child and secure the loyalty and support of Vavant's family. Once Carisia had been born, Yuri's mother Aikiro had her sent to Nuwaroa to be schooled and trained. When Vavant mysteriously ended up dead in an alley in the capital city only months after her birth, Aikiro had almost immediately dissolved their union and allowed her daughter to marry Robert Moran openly, removing the title of consort from him and giving him the title of husband. It was a day that Yuri relished, and it was also the day their oldest son was conceived.

Her sons Dante and Javier had their father's height while Lucia was slim and shorter like her. Her sons had the build of their father, well muscled and very well defined and they had continued to shape their bodies as they grew and became stronger not only physically but with their Mindvoice powers as well. Lucia trained beside her brothers and was equal in skill and Mindvoice abilities and considered an extremely lethal fighter by her Royal Instructors. All of them carried their father's last name as it was now customary among the younger generations... those born within the last thousand years... to take two names as opposed to one. Many took the name of their father as their last name. It was a human trait from Earth that had made its way here as more and more humans were turned throughout the centuries, and it set them apart from the older generations of vampires. Yuri had been incensed when Robert told her Carisia should carry his name as well after he had killed Vavant, until he had explained it would allow them political capital in the future since many did not know who Carisia was, as hidden away on Nuwaroa as she had been for most of her life.

Yuri had acquiesced finally and now she saw the wisdom of that decision as she and Robert had given Carisia's hand to a much older pureblood. Arranging the Union had been joyous for Yuri as Thast was a swine of a man, vile and foul. He was a cruel and competent officer and commander however and his family was powerful. Knowing that Carisia had to endure his foul touch made shivers of delight sweep through Yuri every time she thought about it.

She...

"Yuri?" The male voice spoke from behind her and Yuri smiled an uncharacteristic smile that caused her cold, emotionless demeanor slip away to allow her real exotic Asian beauty to come through. She turned slowly.

"I truly hate it when you sneak up on me Robert." She spoke gently.

Robert Moran grinned and moved close to her, heedless of the male and female officers and enlisted that crowded the corridors of the High Coven Military Headquarters. He wore the formal uniform that he always detested wearing, yet knew he had to wear in this building. Many rows of High Coven decorations dotted his lean broad chest now and Yuri felt a warmth stir in her belly as she looked at him. He had come so far since he had allowed her to turn him over five hundred years ago. Yuri no longer doubted or questioned the fact that he had in fact allowed her to turn him. He was a genome soldier at the time she met him, a creation of super enhanced DNA making him one of the Super Soldiers the government of that time so desired. She may have been a pureblood, but somehow he had known what she was and now Yuri no longer questioned that he could very well have killed her if he had wanted to. He had taken her that first night, taken her roughly, but with a passion she had never tasted before. It was the third night she remembered vividly, and she had been sitting in his lap sweaty and sore after he had practically fucked her senseless. She had stared into his dark blue eyes long and hard and found knowledge within those orbs. Cold calculating knowledge. Robert had returned her gaze without flinching and only nodded his head. When Yuri tasted his blood that night she knew then she would never get enough of him. As more time passed and she lived her false life, she returned many times to see him for she found she craved his attentions to her.

Whatever he had accomplished after returning with her to High Coven space, he had achieved all on his own, to include her undying love and devotion. He had stood beside her through the highs and lows, his love for her never wavering in its intensity or power, and it was that love that had gotten Yuri through the first years of the war. A love she had almost lost by her own actions.

Moran took her hands in his, not going so far as to crush her to him openly, at least not in this setting. If they had been outside this building he would have lifted her into his arms and set her hair on fire with a kiss, as he had done many times before this day. Surprisingly... the war had brought out many such emotions from the populous within the Empire, and her mother allowed it to occur when before Veldruk had forbid open displays of emotion. Perhaps it was because her mother had also discovered Tesand to take her father's place, and he had brought out many things in her mother that Yuri had never seen before but more likely because such displays of emotion gave her mother a certain appeal to the people for allowing it to continue.

"I don't normally accomplish that unless you are deep in thought." He spoke leaning over to kiss her forehead softly. It was a soft kiss of deep feeling and not the passionate ones he usually gave to her simply because of where they were.

Yuri blushed slightly and looked around. "Robert Moran we are in the corridors of the High Coven Supreme Commander's building. Such open displays of affection by the Princess of the Coven should not be for public eyes."

Moran grinned and did not release her hands from his. "Yes I know... but the Supreme Military Commander of High Coven forces seems to think it is just fine between you and me."

Yuri couldn't help but smile at his expression. Perhaps it was because he was turned and not raised among the restrictive moral standards here on Usu'Ozeib 7, but Robert Moran was granted much freedom in his actions because of who he was and what he had accomplished over the last twenty-five years.

"I was thinking of everything that has led us up to this point." Yuri spoke finally as she dismissed protocol all together and slid her arms around his waist and allowed him to draw her close to him.

"Are you having second thoughts now? After so long and what we now know?" He asked.

Yuri drew back her head without releasing him. "About us? Robert Moran never... you know that!" She stammered.

Moran chuckled. "I meant about this plan we are about to undertake." He said touching her perfect skin. Her exotic oriental features had always been able to incite passion within him, and she was just as beautiful to him now as the day he allowed her to make him a vampire.

"What other choice do we have?" She spoke. "Our intelligence is very accurate. Once my mother took a personal interest in the commander of the Intelligence Section, it has never been better."

Moran nodded. "Then we should go inside. The meeting is going to start soon, and your mother, Narice and our children came in ten minutes ago."

Yuri looked at him. "I suppose that wench Carisia is among them?"

"She is your daughter Yuri. And you know how your mother likes her family to at least observe these meetings." Moran spoke.

"Why do you even show her the least amount of sympathy Robert?" Yuri asked. "She is not of your blood. It was you who killed her father. I relish the fact that she must endure that idiot Thast slobbering all over her."

Moran grinned. "No... but she is part of you... and that gives her a step up on most others as far as I'm concerned." He spoke. "I may not like her Yuri... that doesn't mean I have to let it affect how I treat her. She's a superior fighter, and she can do things with her dragon that our children and you can't, at least not yet. We need to respect that... at least for now Yuri. When we get what we want from Leonidas and his ilk, we will be in far better shape to make demands."

"You believe he will help us then?" Yuri asked.

Moran nodded. "Like you said before... it will be in his best interests to help us. If we are defeated by the Kavalians, they will most likely go after the Union."

Yuri met his eyes with a cruel glint. "Then you have made your decision in regards to what we discussed with Carisia as well?"

Moran nodded. "When we get what we want... I'll take her out myself if that is what you wish to rid yourself of that part of your life." He spoke.

Yuri smiled and pressed her head close to his chest once more. "Thank you Robert." She said softly. "I..."

"Supreme Commander?" The voice broke into their moment.

Moran turned his head quickly annoyance in his eyes, but he kept his arms around Yuri. “What is it Lieutenant?”

“Everyone has arrived Admiral Moran.” The young pureblood spoke quickly, his words nervous but clear. No one liked to interrupt Robert Moran for he had a volatile temper when roused.

Moran nodded and looked at Yuri with a smile. “Let’s get this over with so I can take you home tonight and fuck your brains out.” He spoke softly so only she could hear him.

Yuri grinned and squeezed his waist before releasing him. “I do so like the sound of that Supreme Commander of High Coven forces.”

APO PRIME MENKLA DISTRICT
CITY OF PALNO
THIRTY-TWO KILOMETERS WEST OF TUYA

Her jungle green eyes gazed at the rising sun as it filled the balcony doors of her modest sized apartment in Palno City, while her fingers delicately stroked the coral red pendant she had worn for as many years as she could remember.

Sadi loved watching the sun rise over the far horizon, backstopping the majestic Palno Mountain Range only twelve kilometers to the east. She sat on the small cushioned bench just inside the open balcony doors of her small bedroom allowing the morning breeze to caress her flesh. Her apartment wasn’t very large, only one of the three hundred and thirty in her building, but it was all hers. It was comfortably furnished with practical yet elegant furniture and several moderately expensive, yet stylish pieces of framed holo art on the walls. Half a dozen framed holo images also sprinkled the walls and surfaces across the apartment, most of them of her father and two older brothers. Sadi received a generous monthly stipend from her father and that she usually put towards purchasing things for her apartment and some rather expensive clothes that she hardly ever wore, if at all. Her father had paid for the apartment, and was now holding the deed for her until she graduated from the Union Fleet Academy.

The apartment and building had been newly built when she had returned to Apo Prime to attend the Union Fleet Academy and she had fallen in love with it almost immediately upon touring it. Unfortunately when she inquired about purchasing the unit, she had been told all of them were long filled and far outside her range of income as an Academy Cadet to purchase. Disheartened she had begun searching for another place to live, until just a week before she was to enter the Academy, she got a transmission from the building’s manager. He had told her the exact apartment she had toured when she had first seen the units had surprisingly become available. Sadi knew then her father must have purchased it outright, for she had mentioned to him how much she loved it. She had scolded him sternly because of the cost and what he must have done to purchase it, even as well off as they were, but she loved him even more after that day. The small kitchen was fully modern, though her cupboards were only pseudo stocked with food. She spent most of her time transiting from Palno to Apo Prime, either to the University or the Fleet Academy and there was never time for her to fully sit down and eat a complete meal. The only thing she really kept a large supply of was the type of coffee she drank.

Sadi had discovered this brand of coffee while on the Royal Island Palace all those years ago and she was surprised to rediscover it in a small eatery in the elven quarter of Tuya, not far from Fleet Academy headquarters. It was a special blend of four different types of coffee bean that Queen Aricia had made while pregnant with Androcles in Sparta; experimenting and blending certain amounts of each of the four bean blends to extract just the flavor she wanted. No one who had tried it could stop raving about it, and Aricia had begun marketing it in the merchant quarters on Apo Prime and even in Sparta. It was now an exclusive item that only one merchant on Apo Prime had, but it succeeded in bringing customers back for more. When she inquired of the older Lycavorian woman who surprisingly owned and operated the eatery where she had purchased it, the woman just smiled and told her she would purchase extra each week just for her and only charge her the reduced price she got from her supplier.

Unbeknownst to Sadi, that supplier was Queen Aricia herself, and the eatery was one of three owned by the woman on Apo Prime and two she owned on Earth, one in Eden City and one in Sparta. Sadi also didn’t know that they were the only eating establishments that the members of Mjolnir's Hand and the Durcunusaan came to exclusively, for the owner was the mother of the Earth Sector Commander, Star Colonel Isra. The eateries were always busy when Sadi went to get her coffee or just stop in to have lunch with her friends. The patrons were very respectful and polite with many young male wolves that frequented the particular eatery she went to. Many of them Durcunusaan soldiers. Her friends were always popular among the men there, and they made it known they were available. 'Yet no one had ever approached her' Sadi now thought to herself. None of those young men had ever tried to get her attention and for the first time she began to wonder why. The smell of the coffee now filled her scent glands and drew her thoughts from that as she held the mug tightly between her two hands only inches from her nose.

Sadi wore only the thin, almost transparent white robe of satin like material, which did little to hide her deeply tanned and svelte frame. She stood five foot seven inches tall, and her hundred and sixteen pounds was lean and muscular. Sadi had curves upon curves, from the full and very firm breasts topped by credit chip sized nipples, to the graceful slope of her hips and petite waist. Sadi had worked hard on her body over the past years, even more so since entering the Lycavorian Fleet Academy six years earlier. She was now a skilled hand to hand fighter, very fast and deceptively strong for her size.

Her golden blond hair was long and wavy, cascading elegantly down around her face past her shoulders to the middle of her back, just above her impeccably shaped ass. Her hair framed high cheekbones and full sumptuous lips. Her father had called her wolf nose adorable a few months ago, and she smiled at this description. She was still her father's baby girl even though she was now a hundred and twenty-six years old and well beyond her Coming of Age, though for all her four attempts at relationships, none had ever lasted more than a few months. Not since those few days at the Island Palace. Sadi was looking for something different in a male wolf... something that would stir her in ways others could not. Many young Alphas had tried to get her attention, some of them even starting rumors about her when she rebuffed their attempts at drawing her interest. Sadi wanted more than what they offered and part of her wondered if she would ever find that except in her dreams. When Sadi was in wolf form, she was larger than the average female wolf, a hundred and thirty pounds of muscle and teeth. Unlike many of the females she knew, Sadi enjoyed immensely the time she spent in wolf form running through the timber of her father's estate. The King's return so many years ago had brought their people closer to their base instincts and now there were far more men and women both who would freely run about in wolf form rediscovering what their ancestors once cherished. Sadi was one of these people. Perhaps it was because of those nights and what it had done to her, but Sadi cherished it now.

She was a hundred and twenty-six years old and no doubt the only female on Apo Prime her age to have experienced what she had in her very young life. Sadi did not often think back to that time twenty five years ago, but the events of her life then defined her as a woman and a wolf now.

She had been a tender seventy years of age, still a baby in Lycavorian terms, when the Vampire High Coven had used her step-mother to forcibly recruit her as a low level intelligence operative. Her step-mother had told her if she refused, information would be released on her father that would show him to be a collaborator with the High Coven. He would have been disgraced and banished or worse, executed as a traitor depending on the directives of the Senate. Sadi adored her father, those feelings only increasing after the death of her real mother in a transport accident. She had sworn to her mother's spirit she would always look after him, and in Sadi's mind she had been protecting him then with her actions. Thirty years of enduring the High Coven and her step-mother's directives, acting as a messenger or courier, or worse still being forced to bed with her depraved and disgusting half brother. Sadi shuddered slightly, whether from the memories or the cool morning air it did not matter now.

Thanks to the elven female she had once tried to murder, her life had taken a dramatic turn for the better. Sadi had finally been able to slip off the evil and cruel bonds of High Coven servitude, surviving the battle that had raged for six agonizingly long hours on the Royal Island Palace, and earning the gratitude of not only For'mya, who was now a Queen herself to the King, but also the King's most beloved Queen Aricia as well. Outside of those few who were members of Mjolnir's Hand and the Durcunusaan, Sadi didn't doubt she was one of only a handful who had fought beside dragons.

She remembered vividly those golden eyes of Elynth, and those incredible azure blue eyes of the boy Prince Androcles. Elynth had told her she was chosen because she could speak easily with the then dragon hatchling at the time. She had discovered some months later what For'mya had told her, that her Mindvoice skills, while only a Tier Two before the events of those few days, had since been elevated to a very strong beginning Tier Six level. No one had been able to explain it, but because of this fact Sadi was drafted to study in the First Oracle's new School of the Mages, in order to help her better learn to control her new level of Mindvoice abilities. An appointment that was, Sadi learned later, made by the First Oracle herself. Sadi had willingly studied there for three years, throwing herself into her schooling to forget all that had happened, but since she did not want to pursue a life as an Oracle, Sadi had elected to enter into the newly established Annacdone. An organization created by Queen Dysea to help others and Sadi had spent the next thirteen years devoting her life to people on under developed worlds in The Wilds.

Sadi had returned only seven years earlier, at the recommendation of a senior LU Fleet officer who had seen her piloting skills, to enroll in the Lycavorian Union Fleet Academy. It was there where she could finish her degree and earn a commission to complete the goal she most wanted to achieve. Sadi truly wanted to see new worlds and while she had worked in the Annacdone, Sadi discovered she had a gift with people and how they looked to her almost naturally as a leader, not to mention that she was a superior pilot and loved to fly. She was now a senior cadet and the best pilot in her class, and she was finishing her last year, after which she would receive her official commission and join the United Lycavorian Union Fleet.

Her father had retired as Governor of the Menkla District but due to powerful influence generated by the Royal family and Admiral Riall himself, he had retained his position and status as head of the Menkla District Manufacturing Company. A company that now had an exclusive contract with the Union military to build all of their Star Fighters. Vorilas was a well known and respected man for his duties and long standing policies as Governor of the Menkla District, and the district had seen great prosperity over the years under his care. Now however, he was known for working closely with the likes of Admiral/General Benjamin O'Connor, the Union Commander of Operations or UNCO. The Admiral was in charge of the tactical aspect of every ongoing operation within the Union Fleet and her father worked closely with him, Admiral Riall and others in designing new fighters and small transports, using his extensive engineering skills. Sadi didn't know for sure as she had never seen it, but it was said her father and Admiral O'Connor worked very closely together and often met for meetings and such several times a week. Her step-mother was no longer an issue, with her and her half brothers all rotting in some prison. She and her father were closer than ever, and her real brothers had both moved back home to Apo Prime to be near the family they had once thought lost.

Sadi was content for the first time in her life.

Perhaps not truly happy, that would only come with a man and children she knew, but she was very content with the life she had chosen to lead. A life and a chance given to her by a dragon with golden eyes and an eight month old infant boy with azure blue eyes that even now Sadi could still see as clearly as if they were in front of her. There were nights when she would see those eyes in her deep dreams, glittering azure blue eyes on the beautifully sculpted body of a faceless man, as if somehow they were reaching out to her. They were almost protecting and watching over her even as they caused her to cry out in rapture. Her dreams were very strange at times, the faceless man with the boy prince's eyes, and then the dark haired female with olive colored skin and stunning light blue eyes. In those torrid dreams they were entwined together the three of them, making each other cry out in bliss. They were dreams that Sadi relished... but they were dreams she never spoke of with anyone, as there were times when those dreams became quite vivid and very intimate in nature. Sadi had several close friends, but none close enough to share that cherished information with.

Sadi had seen Elynth and Androcles only three times after the battle on the island, all three times from a distance or on the Netnews Channel. The last time was over twelve years earlier during the small celebration thrown by the Royal family at his departure for Sparta to begin his Agoge training. Each time she had seen them they had both grown in stature and size, Androcles nearly as tall as his father though only thirteen years old at the time she had seen them last. Elynth was already larger in many respects than her mother, her body longer and more muscular. While she would never rival her brother Jeth or her father Torma in size, she had grown into one of the largest dragons among those flown by the riders of Mjolnir's Hand. Sadi had caught several glimpses of them on the Netnews during the six year long war with the Evolli Triad, but it had always been very fast and he was never seen without his helmet, those blue eyes like beacons on a dark night.

There had been much talk and ballyhoo of his Shield of Valor decoration, the highest award that the Union could bestow, awarded after the Battle on Alba Tau during the Evolli War. It was said to have been the most hideous battle of the war with the Evolli, claiming the lives of thousands of Spartan Centurions and even thirteen of the twenty-three members of Mjolnir's Hand that had been lost in the entire six year war. He had not returned to Apo Prime since the end of that war except for fast visits, preferring to remain mainly within the city of Sparta, his father's home and what had unofficially become the new base of power within the Union. It was rumored on the Netnews channels that he had taken a mate at one point two years earlier, but that had been proven false quickly, and Sadi couldn't understand the relief she felt at that news. Aside from his LU military record, which was very impressive considering his still young age, nothing else was known about the young prince and heir to the throne of the United Lycavorian Union.

Sadi did know that it was after that battle he was awarded his own LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser, and his actions played prominently in ending the war beside his father. She had tried over the years, always secretly of course, to inquire of him and what he was doing. She had worked beside Queen Dysea and Queen Isabella at one point shortly after they had both given birth to the King's children, but did not have the courage to ask about him or Elynth. Sadi didn't truly understand the draw this young prince had on her, perhaps it was because her actions all those years ago could have cost him his life. Whatever the reason, he invaded her dreams from time to time and they were always the most exquisite dreams.

Sadi wondered what they looked like now and she remembered Elynth's words to her during her time on the island. She had been chosen Elynth had said; chosen to be able to speak with dragons perhaps? Elynth had never elaborated on that... only giving her a name that first night, a name that still brought shudders to Sadi whenever she spoke or thought it. A name she still heard in her dreams.

KertaGai.

Eternal Heart.

Sadi lifted the small coral red pendant from her skin and looked at it once more. Elynth had given this to her before she had left, one half of a Dragon's Heart pendant. Elynth had told her to wear it always and one day all that Sadi desired would be hers. Elynth said Androcles wanted her to have it because of how he felt about her, how he would always feel about her. Sadi didn't know what to make of her words at the time, as Androcles was only an eight month old infant at the time, but Sadi had worn the pendant without question. Looking back, Sadi realized she had not taken the pendant off since that night and she suddenly wondered if he had done the same.

The decidedly male groan from behind her brought Sadi somewhat angrily out of her secret thoughts and she turned to watch the dark haired male Spartan reach across the bed for the warmth of her body. When his arm found nothing he slowly looked up and found her with bloodshot blue eyes from too much alcohol. His skin was a deep bronze color, and tightly stretched over a muscular and extremely well defined body.

"What... what are you doing Sadi?" He croaked out the words his lips smacking together from dryness.

"Watching the sun come up." She answered quickly as she turned and got to her feet. She moved to the side of the bed and looked down at him sipping her coffee. "You need to wake up and leave Malic."

The lean muscular Spartan soldier smiled drunkenly at her as he rolled onto his back on the bed and looked up at her. He reached out to touch the outside of her leg. "Why? I thought we would have another go of it?" He spoke as his hand caressed the outside of her leg through the thin fabric of the robe. When his fingers moved to part the folds of the robe and slip inside to touch her bare skin Sadi dropped her hand and grabbed his wrist firmly, brushing his hand aside as she stepped back quickly.

"I don't think so Malic... that is not a good idea right now." She stated having no desire to be intimate with him ever again.

They had been introduced by mutual friends three months ago. He was an Enomotarch within the ranks of the 9th Spartan Expeditionary Division. Aside from his incredible good looks Sadi did not know what she had seen in him. After all these months of having him slobber on her and never once take his time and give her equal pleasure had taken its toll on her. He had an ego that was larger than his ripped body, and he was exceptionally arrogant, always bragging about his skills as a warrior and how he was going to one day fly on a dragon and command a section of the revered Mjolnir's Hand. He treated others as if they were beneath him most of the time, always looking out for himself. Sadi knew his father was a senior officer within the Union military but she didn't know in what capacity. His mother worked as a liaison within the Senate and Sadi had found her to be exceptionally pompous the only time she had met her. She treated Malic like a child by talking down to him in many ways and Sadi realized where he got it from. Sadi knew he abhorred the many vampires within the ranks of Spartans, always glaring at them in disgust. Sadi had been lonely at that point in her life and after only a few times out with him and dismissing his obvious faults she had allowed him to take her to bed. Malic was very well endowed, but he was a brute who thought the size of his cock made up for his lack of technique. Last night had been the final straw. They had returned from a gathering of cadets in Sadi's class who were graduating with her soon, and he had had too much to drink. He had been rougher than he usually was, and without any preliminary foreplay he had proceeded to grunt and groan his way to orgasm without a hint of concern for her. He never treated her like an equal, always like a possession whenever he was around others, especially fellow Spartans. As if she was a trophy of some sort. Sadi had made the decision last night watching him snore away that it was over between them.

"You thought it was a good idea last night Sadi." He spoke with a grin. "How was I? Did I make it good enough for you?"

"You are still drunk to think that Malic. And you really need to leave." Sadi spoke deciding that it probably wouldn't be the smartest thing to tell him that having him maul her breasts while trying to pound her guts into the bed was most definitely not pleasurable for her, and it hadn't been for the last three months. "I have to get ready for class and I need to catch the transport to Apo Prime in forty minutes."

"Skip class today. Stay here with me." He said missing the obvious insult to his love making skills.

Sadi's eyes narrowed. "Skip class? Why would I want to do that?" Sadi reached down and pulled the sheet off his body in an effort to get him up. "And this is my apartment Malic, not yours! I need you to leave Malic. Now!"

He rolled from the bed and came to his feet completely naked and annoyed. "What's the rush?" He exclaimed stepping closer to her, his six foot two frame towering above her. "Do I need to prove to you how good I am once more?"

Sadi placed her palm on his chest resisting the urge to laugh at his flaccid cock dangling between his legs. He was most definitely not the man from her dreams; the man's whose touch alone could set her body on fire. He had not even noticed the tattoo that adorned her most private area and made her so sensitive to touch in the entire three months they had been sharing a bed.

In a totally spontaneous and equally alcohol induced action that her friend Teeria had dared from her while they were working with Queen Dysea, Sadi had gone to a very expensive tattoo artist while in The Wilds and had a tattoo of flaming wings over a red star place just above her bare, smooth pussy. Above the wings was the word 'Crazy' in ancient Lycavorian block lettering. The tattoo made that area of her body extremely sensitive, yet neither Malic nor the three men that had shared her bed since getting the tattoo had ever noticed in the least. The only one to have done that was Teeria, the female friend who had encouraged her to get the tattoo. Teeria had explored that area of Sadi's body for hours and she had eagerly returned the action, surprising herself with her actions. It had been the only time she had shared a bed with a woman, but it was also the only time she had gotten any real pleasure as well. Even though they remained very close friends, they had both decided to never share a bed again after that one time, both of them claiming it had to do with the alcohol and nothing else serious.

"What you need to do is get dressed and leave so I can get ready for class Malic." Sadi spoke calmly.

"We've been seeing each other for three months now and you never let me stay Sadi!" He spoke as he reached down to grab his uniform pants. "Why is that?"

"Does it matter?" She spoke softly. "We have given each other pleasure Malic and that is all." Though the pleasure had always been his. Of the four different men that had shared her bed in the last twenty-five years, none of them had ever once been able to incite her passions and desires enough to make Sadi want more.

"So that's why you don't let me cado forn?" He asked fastening his pants.

Sadi's jungle green eyes looked at him in shocked surprise. "Malic we are not a couple." She spoke in a surprised gasp. "We have never been a couple. We have shared each others warmth and company these last three months. There is nothing more than that. Why would I let you scent me?"

"Don't you want a mate Sadi?" He asked as he pulled on his shirt. "A future?"

"I will have these things Malic." She answered confidently. "I'll meet my Soulmate one day. I just don't want them right now. I want to finish the Academy and be assigned to a ship. Now... please Malic I want you to leave."

"Soulmate?" Malic gasped with a chuckle. "You're waiting for a Soulmate? Sadi... I never took you for the type to believe in something like that. That is from the old time... the old ways."

Sadi glared at him. “Just because you choose to dismiss the ancient rituals and ways of our people does not mean I do!” Sadi snapped angrily.

“You will need to make a decision sooner or later. And I will not wait forever for you to make that decision!” He snapped just as harshly. “I’m leaving for Sparta tomorrow to become a member of the Durcunusaan, the Wolves of the Blood and then I intend to become a member of Mjolnir’s Hand. They are still searching for three candidates to fill their ranks. I was hoping you would want to come with me.” He spoke.

“As your mate or your possession Malic?” Sadi spoke quickly shaking her head. “I don’t think so. And you never took the time to get to really know me Malic... so of course you would not know that is how I think. There are many things about me you don’t know Malic.”

“Sadi...?”

“What is my favorite color Malic?” Sadi asked.

“What?”

“It’s blue.” Sadi replied. “What is my favorite scent?” Sadi asked quickly.

“Is this a test?” Malic asked harshly.

“Lavender and pines.” Sadi answered instantly

Malic looked at her and smiled. “You are testing me.”

Sadi shook her head slowly. “It is no test Malic. I’m making a point. All you have ever been concerned with is putting your cock inside me! You don’t know what is in my mind. In my thoughts.”

“I can’t read minds Sadi!” He barked.

“No... but my Soulmate will know what I want.” Sadi spoke softly. “He will be able to read my moods and my body language and my scent. He will know exactly what I want. You might learn that someday Malic, if you meet the female who will teach you. I do not have the desire... because you are not who I desire. I think we should just call it quits now Malic.”

“What?” He snarled.

“Malic... do I need to spell it out for you completely? It’s over Malic... I don’t want to see you again. I’m sure you will have no trouble finding another female to share your bed with. You excel at that.” Sadi spoke. “Now... please leave.”

“That’s it?” He stammered.

Sadi nodded. “Yes... that’s it.” She spoke calmly.

“You will find no one after I am gone.” He snapped as he pulled on the fatigue shirt. “No one will...”

“Are you threatening me Malic?” She asked in a low voice as her eyes narrowed.

“Not at all.” He answered. “I’m just letting you know that I’m the only option available for you right now.” He told her smugly.

“And that I’m sure is because of the rumors you have been spreading? Telling everyone we are a couple when you know we aren’t. Very adult of you by the way. And the men you associate yourself with are not the only men in the Union Malic.” Sadi answered with a smile at the look on his face. “You don’t actually think I’m that stupid do you? Did you think you would force me into becoming your mate?”

“Sadi... I only...”

“Malic... I’m sure you will find someone in the years ahead.” Said spoke more gently now. “I am not that person however. You are far too insensitive and arrogant to suit my tastes.”

“I won’t forget this Sadi.” He snapped his eyes angry. “And I’ll make sure no one else will either!”

“I’m sure you will Malic. I don’t have to show you the way out do I?” She snapped back. Sadi shook her head as he spun around and walked out of the bedroom in a huff carrying parts of his uniform, trying to display his muscular back and shoulders and impress her even as he walked out.

It had no effect on Sadi and she chuckled as she settled her firm bottom onto the foot of the bed sipping her coffee. She waited until she heard the door open and then close and then Sadi looked out the balcony door once more and saw the rising sun reflect off the clouds in the upper atmosphere giving off a beautiful reddish glow. The color reminded her of the pendant she wore and she gasped softly when she realized that the sky matched exactly the color of the pendant and the words Elynth had spoken to her that day came rushing back.

You have been chosen Sadi. He wants you to have this to remember him by. Take it. Elynth had told her.

Sadi had stared at the pendant for a long moment. Elynth it's... it's beautiful. I can't take this. It is...

It is a Dragon's Heart Sadi. Androcles's pendant... given to him when he was born by his parents. It was cut from their pendants and forged back together by my mother. I have split it once more at his request to give you half. It is a great honor among my kind and taken from one of my kind who has fallen if that is their wish. So that they may live on in others. My grandmother says the process is long and arduous, but once polished like this it never loses its luster. This one has been cut in two and he wishes you to have one half. Elynth spoke to her.

Sadi met her golden colored eyes. Elynth... he is only eight months old.

Elynth stepped closer to Sadi, her golden eyes bright and clear. Do you truly believe that Sadi? Or has what happened here these last few days not mattered to you at all? You have seen and heard for yourself Sadi.

You know that is not true Elynth. She answered.

Take it Sadi. Elynth told her. If nothing else... let it remind you of what we have shared here these last days and what he feels for you. What he will always feel for you. He is a child now yes... but Androcles will be a man one day... and who knows what the future holds for all of us. One day... if you truly wish to discover love... you... wear this pendant always Sadi. Never take it off and the love you seek may one day just walk into your life without you ever being aware of it.

Sadi had looked at her and then leaned up slightly to kiss her cool snout scales. I will treasure it always. She spoke.

Sadi stared at the pendant now, the last part of their conversation sticking in her head as her fingers caressed the jewel. She did want to discover love and desire and happiness. Sadi wanted a man who would wrap her within his aura and love her so intensely it took her breath away. Perhaps it was time for her to stop denying what she had discovered those nights on the island and just allow her life to travel down the path she was meant for.

If the color of the morning sky was any indication, that path would take her to only one place and Sadi found that no longer frightened her in the least.

TUYA
CAPTIAL OF APO PRIME APO PRIME UNIVERSITY
UNION HISTORY CLASS LEVEL 19

Lady Gorgo looked out over her class of students as they finished up with the instant quiz she had surprised them with. Her dark hair was as long and as shiny as it had been when she was the Queen of Sparta on Earth over three thousand years ago. Gorgo looked no more than forty-five standard earth years old, her figure just as shapely and curvaceous as it had been then, even after giving birth to eight children. Her mate and husband of nearly twenty five hundred years, First Admiral of the Union Fleet Riall, was always commenting her on how beautiful she was, and Gorgo couldn't help but grin as the memories of their torrid love making session just last night came back to her.

It seemed that ever since her son Martin had returned, ever since he had rescued her from the horrors of that prison so long ago, Riall's usually more sedate nature when making love had changed, and he had become different. In the last twenty-five years he had been more intense, more loving and more spontaneous than she had ever known him to be. A small part of it was his lingering guilt that he had slept with a clone of her for fifteen years and never known it, something that Gorgo had never held against him in the least. She had seen first hand the skill of the High Coven cloning process, and in the same position as him, she doubted she would have acted any different. She had thought perhaps after first discovering what he had done that she had lost him. He was despondent and would hardly speak as they traveled to Earth on the City Ship. All he could do as the hours past was slip slowly deeper into a depression that Gorgo didn't know if she could pull him out of. It wasn't until they had arrived at Thermopylae and Gorgo had seen the monument to her former husband that it had changed. Her son had made Riall swear to never stop loving her as he had done for so many years, and before her eyes Gorgo had seen the veil of depression lift from his face. His eyes had been so clear then and he had crushed her to him wrapping her within his powerful aura as he pulled himself out of the abyss and swore to her son he would do this. Now... now Riall took her as if his very life and existence depended on it, making her scream out his name countless times before they collapsed exhausted and he wrapped her tightly within his arms and his aura. Gorgo had never felt more pleasure and love from him as she had in the last twenty-five years and it had only caused her to return it just as much, even going so far as to act like a giggling school girl at times.

She had lost her beloved Leonidas so long ago, but that day at Thermopylae, before his tomb, her long dead mate Leonidas had given back to her not only their son, but the love she had thought lost with Riall. They had visited the monument often now, every time they were on Earth, and Riall had been with her every moment. It was not a time of sorrow any longer for her, and both of them relished in the time they spent there with each other.

Her son.

Martin Leonidas had given back the instinctive nature to their people with his return that they had lost so long ago. Her son had given back to the Lycavorians their passion for life and the natural direction to follow the instincts that came with that passion. When Gorgo and Riall made love now, it was as if it was all brand new, supremely intense and incredibly passionate no matter how often it happened. They had both decided together long ago to not have any more children. The number of grandchildren they had seemed to increase almost every year now and neither of them wanted to take time away from their grandchildren to raise another child of their own.

Gorgo smiled to herself.

Twenty-eight grandchildren they had now. She had six beautiful children with Riall, three boys and three girls and between them they had fourteen of their twenty-four grandchildren. Her son Martin and his Queens accounted for the rest. Lisisa was the oldest in terms of years of Martin's children, but as far as Lisisa was concerned her life had only begun when her father had rescued her long ago.

The same time he had discovered his mother.

Lisisa was half vampire, daughter to the High Coven Princess Yuri, but everyone had learned quickly that they were never to bring that up with her. Her wolf genes and skills were by far the more dominant and powerful and Lisisa considered herself all wolf. Martin's first born son Androcles Leonidas was next, and he was the one that all of them, including Lisisa looked up to. He was now four months past his twenty-sixth birthday. Eliani Leonidas was her first granddaughter with Anja, born two months after Androcles's first birthday due to the shorter pregnancies common to Hadarians.

Her grandson Resumar came next with Dysea, three weeks after Eliani, followed in quick succession over the next five years by Denali with Aricia, Carina with Isabella, Arrarn with For'mya, Normya with Dysea and finally Zarah with Isabella once more. Gorgo had thought her son and his Queens done, for no more children arrived for eight years, and then almost immediately following each other Aricia and Anja gave birth to twins. Aricia a boy and girl Nara and Deion; and with Anja came another boy and girl, Calyb and Retta; followed quickly by For'mya's second child... a boy they called Bryon.

Two sets of ten year old twins and Bryon was now nine years old, and the loud sounds of children and trumpeting dragon hatchlings filled the Island Palace on Apo Prime once more. The Evolli war was now almost three years behind them, and all of them had been spending months on end together on the island since the war ended. And when they weren't on Apo Prime, they were in Sparta. Gorgo fully expected another burst of grandchildren she thought to herself with some humor. Gorgo leaned back in her chair thinking that perhaps she would have to have a talk with her son and tell him enough was enough. It was well known he adored all his Queens, but the Island Palace was rapidly becoming very crowded. When all of them returned to the Island Palace to be together, which was as often as every other month for all but her older grandchildren, it was near impossible to have a conversation. Gorgo was also amazed at the closeness Martin's children had and maintained, no matter the distance between them. Normya had inherited her mother's devastatingly striking elven beauty with her long platinum blond hair and stunning emerald green eyes, but she was also as stubborn and bull headed as her father even at only twenty-one years of age. Arrarn had inherited his father's handsome looks, but his elven mother's disposition, but there was no denying the fact that he and Normya were now the premier STRIKER DT Flight crews in the Union, behind only For'mya and Endith. It did help that both Arrarn and Normya had been instructed by For'mya and Endith since age ten, and Normya seemed to have inherited her mother's precognition skill within Mindvoice. Though Arrarn, Carina, Normya and Zarah were not bonded to dragons as their brothers and sisters were, the bonds that their siblings shared with their dragons encompassed them as well and made them better individuals.

Normya and Zarah were rarely seen apart, the two sisters born from Dysea and Isabella with only six hours between them, and they called each other twins. They shared an apartment in Gytheio, the Port of Sparta where their brother Androcles and most of their older siblings kept villas as well. Zarah was a touch promiscuous; having inherited her mother Isabella's incredible porcelain like beauty not to mention her incredibly lush figure and she had several young wolves pursuing her. Normya tempered that part of her a great deal as she was rather reserved and shy, while Zarah's openness allowed them to attract quite a bit of attention together. Resumar and Denali had grown in stature, almost matching their brother and father in build and skill while Carina was a beautiful black widow everyone called her because of her lethal abilities.

With the exception of Normya and Zarah, who did not fight in the Evolli war, Martin's other children had fought side by side with him through much of the six year long war. All of them had been baptized in combat, and all of them had come out of that better than when they went in, for they all now knew the full value of life and peace.

Aricia, Anja, Dysea, Isabella and For'mya had decided long ago there would be no distinction made between their children. All of them were considered mothers by all of Martin's children. What came from one mother came from them all, no matter who gave birth to them. They would do anything for their siblings and their mothers. Gorgo surmised that a small part of that might be the inbred instinct among Firespitter dragons in protecting their siblings and family. Isheeni and Aricia had been bonded so deeply and for so long, that the instinctive and natural protectiveness of her breed of dragon could very well have filtered down to her children and by virtue all of their children since they were all so close in not only body but spirit as well. Twenty-six years had passed now since the son she had thought lost had returned to his people and saved her own life.

It still amazed her that she could go just halfway across Tuya and be able to gaze into the face and eyes of the very first man she had ever loved. Martin was the image of his father, of Leonidas the King of Sparta and while she loved Riall now, with all that she was, perhaps even more intensely than her former mate, Leonidas would always have a place in her heart. Having their only surviving son within easy reach kept Gorgo grounded and always aware of the gift of renewed love that she had with Riall. It also served to chase away the memories of the betrayal and hatred she felt at what else they had discovered in those first weeks and months back on Earth.

The utter betrayal of her own flesh and blood.

Gorgo did not often think of that day five months after returning to Earth. When she did it filled her with hatred and anger. That a son of her own blood could betray their people in such a way disgusted her to the extreme. Many knew and had witnessed what occurred that day outside the Senate Acropolis, and even now that colossal battle still brought forth many discussions. Martin had discovered most of how it had come to be with Armetus's help, but he had shared that information with no one but the man he considered his brother, if not by blood then by actions and experiences.

Gorgo let her eyes wander to the timer as the chime for changing classes drew closer and she brought her thoughts back to the present. She would give them another minute she thought as her dark eyes scanned the huge half empty classroom. There were only two hundred and twelve students in this class, mainly because of the advanced nature of the course and because it was made up mostly of cadets from the Union Fleet Academy. Gorgo had taught this class for nearly nine hundred years and it was only in the last decade that it had become a prerequisite for cadets in the Academy. She had taken a much more active role as an instructor for the Union Fleet Academy at Riall's request; he had said the cadets lacked a proper knowledge of history and he could think of no one better suited than her to teach that. Gorgo also knew it was a way for him to remain close to her during their six month stays on Apo Prime, and they met for lunch as often as their schedules allowed. Gorgo's only demands were that she be allowed to teach at the University and not the Fleet school which was very cramped and no where near as modern and that she would not have to wear her reserve Fleet Uniform.

Her dark eyes settled on the stunning young blond woman in the fourth row of seats, for Gorgo knew exactly who Sadi was.

When Sadi had first appeared in her class, Gorgo had made some discrete inquiries as to what she had been doing in the years since that night, and what she found had impressed her. Gorgo had to admit, Sadi was exceptionally intelligent, and unless she stopped coming to class, Sadi would be one of the few that would receive a perfect grade from Gorgo. That action alone would be considered amazing since Lady Gorgo was not known for being an easy grader. In the twelve hundred years she had taught here, only nine students had received a perfect grade in her class, Sadi would make number ten. Sadi was a brilliant student, and from what she had heard from Riall and Benjamin O'Connor, she was going to make a fine officer one day as well as an exceptional pilot. Gorgo also knew Sadi's long and clouded history, and to see how far she had come since then made Gorgo very happy. The only thing that worried her was the alleged fact that Sadi had a rather unsavory reputation as being easy to get into bed. Whether that was true or not remained to be seen for she always seemed the proper young lady in class, reserved, quiet and her uniform in perfect condition. Gorgo was well aware of how young male wolves loved to boast of their conquests, or lack thereof, and personally she didn't believe any of what was said in regards to Sadi.

Gorgo took a deep breath. "Very well... time is up!" She spoke loudly but firmly as she came to her feet. "Please insert your pads into the readers."

Gorgo's keen eyes watched as her students did this. It was force of habit she knew; for it was well known to get caught cheating in Lady Gorgo's class meant immediate and summary expulsion from the Fleet Academy and the University. A black mark that would forever stain their records. "Everyone take a deep breath and release it!" She said with a smile. "It was only a quiz, not the final. That will be exceedingly harder I'm happy to say!" Gorgo heard the gathered students groan together and she smiled.

"Now before you all go and get bevennorn, I will remind all Fleet Academy Cadets that the transport for the trip to Sparta departs at 0700 sharp tomorrow morning. I expect all of you accompanying me to be present in at least some manner of sobriety please." Gorgo spoke as laughter drifted among the students. (Stinking drunk)

"What is the Operational Plan Lady Gorgo?" A young male cadet spoke up obviously trying to impress someone.

Gorgo smiled and wagged her hand in the air. "Cadet Demroni, I am not an active part of the military, even though I do have a reserve commission I do not recognize that very often, so if you would use normal language with me I would sincerely appreciate it. I do not spend nearly enough time around my son and grandsons to pick up and understand your military use of words and grammar, thank the gods. My mate Riall knows to speak normally when in my company. It's terrible the way you have tortured simple language. I would much rather speak with his Queens... at least them I can understand. And they are so much more pleasant to be around."

That brought more laughter from the students and Gorgo moved around to sit on the front edge of her large desk.

"It is my understanding of the itinerary as it stands right now, that we will depart Apo Prime tomorrow morning and rendezvous with a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser and its Strike Wing the following evening near Earth Gate Three Nine." She saw the eyes of many of the cadets get much brighter at this news, as the LEONIDAS II Strike Cruisers were considered the crème de la crème of the fleet's ships, especially if they had the refits over the last five years.

"I do not know exactly which one it will be, so don't ask that question." She said with a smile and raised hand. "I can only assume after talking with my son last week before he left for Earth, that it will either be his ship MJOLNIR'S HAND or my grandson's ship the SCIMITAR. It seems both of them are currently along the border of The Wilds taking part in some rather boring training exercise if I understand correctly, and they will be closest to Gate Three Nine." She spoke smiling. "We will travel the remaining two days on their ship until we arrive on Earth. I know I don't have to remind you that Admiral O'Connor has already explained to you what not to do and where not to go on these particular ships, so please follow his instructions. The Durcunusaan can be quite overprotective at times.

"We will be assigned our own quarters for the duration of our stay in Sparta. There will be several days of classes..." Gorgo smiled once more at the moans. "Then you will have the remainder of the time to go where you wish. I understand that Earth Sector Commander, Star Colonel Isra of Mjolnir's Hand, will be giving you one class of instruction Cadets; Admiral Wallace, the Commander of EDEN Base will be giving a class on tactics for the Cadets and Earth Sector Security Chief General/Colonel Lynwe will be giving a brief demonstration in regards to some of the new weapons systems we have developed over the past few years for the Cadets. Earth is usually the testing ground for these types of things since the population is so widely spread out. It is also my understanding that President Turner and Prime Minister Selene will be covering some brief information for all of you when you first arrive, as well as teaching several lessons on the history of Earth for those of you who are not cadets over the course of our visit. Vice President Aihola and Sparta's Lieutenant governor Tarifa will also be giving instruction on the history of Sparta and Eden City for all those who are interested. This should be all of you by the way." Gorgo stated matter of factly.

"Lady Gorgo... is the rumor that we will be able to participate in a training exercise with Mjolnir's Hand true?" Another Cadet asked.

"That I don't know." Gorgo answered quickly. "Colonel Isra will be able to answer that for you when we arrive. It will depend I'm very sure on how many actual members of Mjolnir's Hand are present on Earth at the time. I do know however that after the graduation ceremony at Thermopylae on our second day, there is a State dinner that all of you will be expected to attend in full dress uniform. And do please be on your best behavior. The following day the King has already offered to allow those cadets who wish to "take a ride on a dragon" is how he put it, to take part in that. The evening of the sixth day, we will have the unprecedented experience of witnessing the Harmony of Two Hearts Ceremony, the ritual mating ceremony for dragons. I have heard it is quite spectacular and very romantic in a way. The schedule will be very open for adjustments or length of stay depending on what the King decides, but as it stands we will remain on Earth for at least two weeks."

"Will any of the Princes be at the State Dinner Lady Gorgo?" A female Cadet shouted out from further up in her rows.

Gorgo chuckled as all the female cadets laughed and all the males shook their heads. "My grandsons always attend State Dinners if they are available, and since they usually all travel together, I'm sure Androcles, Resumar, Denali and Arrarn will all be there."

The chime signaling the end of class sounded loudly and Gorgo stood up shouting over the noise of moving students. "I will see all of you in the morning! Don't be late!"

Gorgo stood by her desk smiling and exchanging small greetings with her students as they filed out quickly. As Sadi came up even with her, she reached out and touched her arm. "Cadet Sadi... a moment please."

Sadi looked puzzled as she stepped to the side and she followed Gorgo back to her desk. Gorgo waited for the mass of students to leave before looking at the puzzled cadet.

"Sadi... I noticed that your name is not on the list for the trip tomorrow." Gorgo spoke as she sat down.

"No Lady Gorgo. I was going to use the time off from classes to help my father at the plant in our district." Sadi answered.

"When was the last time you spoke to your father child?" Gorgo asked with a smile.

"Yesterday morning. Why?" Sadi answered.

"I happen to know for a fact that your father was invited to attend the dinner in Sparta just this morning, and he will be traveling with Senator L'tian's delegation. He didn't tell you?" Gorgo asked.

Sadi blushed slightly under her tan. "I didn't tell him about the trip Lady Gorgo. And I was running late this morning and haven't talked to him yet as I said."

"This could be an excellent experience for you Sadi." Gorgo said meeting her eyes. "And if I'm not mistaken you have never been to Sparta or Earth before have you?"

"No Milady." She replied.

"May I ask why you don't wish to go? And please don't tell me it's because you choose to work in your father's plant over a trip to Sparta. I can smell a fabrication from ten kilometers away young lady, especially one as weak as that." Gorgo asked.

Sadi shifted on the balls of her feet. "It's rather personal Milady."

"Male trouble I take it?" Gorgo said with a knowing smile as she stood up. "He's going and you are welcome for the break of his constant nagging."

"We've only been seeing each other for three months Lady Gorgo. He is going to Sparta to apply to become a Durcunusaan. He hopes to become a member of Mjolnir's Hand." Sadi spoke softly. "He wants to settle down or at least his version of it and he keeps wanting to scent me... and... I ended it this morning. He didn't take it very well."

"You don't wish a relationship at this time." Gorgo said.

"I want a relationship Lady Gorgo. I want a mate... a Soulmate... and many children and the happiness that comes with that. Just not with Malic. He is far too pompous and arrogant for my taste." Sadi said quickly, her hand unconsciously going up to where she wore the pendant around her neck and she squeezed it tightly through her uniform jacket. "He's like a bad dream... he..."

"Keeps coming back?" Gorgo said with a chuckle.

Sadi laughed as she looked at her. "Yes. Malic isn't bad Lady Gorgo... he's handsome and smart... but sometimes his ego gets in the way of how he acts. And he is... he is not the man I want to live the rest of my life with."

Gorgo smiled noticing that she was gripping something under her uniform. "You have no worries Sadi... and you forget who my granddaughter is." She said with a chuckle. "If there is a slang that originated on Earth that Eliani Leonidas doesn't know... it doesn't exist. Much like her mother and father I'm afraid. You should hear the two of them go at it." Gorgo took her hand. "You don't wish to settle down with this male then?"

Sadi shook her head quickly. "I believe he wants to scent me because it would look better on his application for the Durcunusaan. He is not who I want to spend my life with as I said."

"Is there someone?" Gorgo asked.

Sadi nodded just as quickly. "Yes... I... I haven't met him yet however. At least I don't think I have."

Gorgo looked at her. "You don't think you have?"

Sadi looked at her shyly. Their people were not shy Sadi knew, in particular the females when they set their minds to something. Lady Gorgo was considered a matriarch of sorts to the Lycavorian people because of her status as the King's mother. She was always warm and open and Sadi felt completely comfortable with her. "Lady Gorgo is it crazy to dream about a man you have never met. To see him... to gaze into his eyes but not see the rest of his face? To almost feel his touch upon you even though you have never been together?"

Gorgo smiled and shook her head. "There is much you will experience that others will not because of whom you are and what you have seen in your life Sadi. I know very well your history and the events of that night Sadi. Your Mindvoice skills will allow you to sense things most would not. Never forget what you have learned child. You have been touched by a dragon ... and that makes you special. In time you will come to see how." Gorgo told her. "As for what you have seen in your dreams... perhaps you know his eyes but do not know what this man looks like now because you have not seen him in so many years?"

Sadi nodded slowly though she stared intently at Gorgo for a long quiet moment. It was almost as if she knew. "Yes... perhaps that is it."

"There is still time to apply for the trip. I will reserve a spot for you on the transport just in case you change your mind. You might be surprised what you find in going to Sparta, and it has grown and I doubt very much the chances of seeing this male all the time are great. It is a wondrous city... with a great deal to do and see. Think about it... you never know what you might discover." Gorgo spoke.

Sadi smiled brilliantly. "I... I will. Thank you Lady Gorgo."

ROYAL ISLAND PALACE

3.2 KILOMETERS FROM SHORELINE OF MAIN PALACE ESTATE

LAKE TUYATA

TUYA

He missed Sparta.

The smell of pines in the morning breeze and the sounds of the great city rising to the sun every morning.

The Royal Island Palace of Apo Prime had itself remained the same, though it had been expanded a great deal over the years. The island was still twenty square kilometers of lush forests and streams that came down from the single ten thousand foot peak that dotted the very northern edge of the island, creating cliffs a thousand meters down to the surface of the lake below and forming a natural majestic view. It had once been connected to the main land estate to the east by a hundred meter wide, 3.2 kilometer long bridge. After the events of so long ago and the attacks on the island itself, his father had the bridge removed. The only way to approach the island now was either by dragon or water lifter. If an unannounced Air Lifter came within three kilometers of the island it was immediately given one warning. If it did not respond it was shot down. The only ones who rode dragons were members of the Royal family or members of Mjolnir's Hand, and they were the only ones the Durcunusaan allowed near the island now without question. This was their home when not in Sparta, and his father and his mothers had deemed this their refuge. They spent quite a bit of time at the main land estate working when they were on Apo Prime, but the island was where they went to get away and be with family and friends. He had never once heard any of their people complain of this arrangement, and he had spent much of his younger years before leaving for Sparta within the markets of Tuya listening and observing the thousands that passed through them every day.

Many said he was the mirror image of his father Martin Leonidas, just as he was the image of his father. He was an inch shorter than his father's six foot two, two hundred and thirty-eight pound frame, and he topped the scales at only two hundred and twenty pounds, but there was no denying they both were the poster children for Spartans as Eliani had once called them. The muscle definition in their bodies was as if they had been sculpted from marble itself in its fine detail. His skin was deeply tanned, his hair was raven black and unlike his father's shoulder length hair, he wore his cut very short. He had a mustache and goatee, while his father now sported a very neatly trimmed beard and mustache. Androcles had to admit, they did look like brothers, but he had his mother's eyes and that is what set him apart. The azure blue orbs could be deep and foreboding or they could twinkle in mischief. They could be void of any emotion, or they could almost glow in certain lights with the volume of wisdom and sentiment of what Androcles had experienced in his young life already.

He stood on the balcony of his private apartment along the inner perimeter of the palace's defensive wall wearing only a pair of loose white pants with crimson trim down the legs. His upper body was bare except for the tattoo on his abdomen and the coral red pendant he wore around his neck. He and his older siblings had similar apartments that they occupied when they were here so as not to have the main palace itself overflowing with people and to give them some privacy. Each apartment was within fifty meters of the main palace, and no matter how many of them were on the island at any given time, they always ate together in the main gathering room in the palace. He could now easily hear the echoes of his nickname already from his younger brothers and sisters as they ran through the main palace looking for him.

Androcles Leonidas had grown up hating that name as a boy, but now he had come to covet it. No one referred to him as Androcles except for his grandmothers and his mothers when they were angry with him. He had been born in Sparta, the city of his grandfather but had spent the first thirteen years of his very active life shuttling between Apo Prime and Sparta, studying almost endlessly with his grandmothers Gorgo and Dasha. He had an appetite for knowledge that only Eliani, Carina and Zarah could match. Androcles had been trained from boyhood by his father and uncles to such an extent that when he departed for Earth and Sparta to enter his Agoge at thirteen, the now thirty-six month long course had been child's play. He had however been treated mercilessly as the King's son and Crown Prince, for he was subjected to far more demanding, unyielding, arduous and sometimes violent training than any of the others in the course, and not once had a complaint spilled from his lips. While not the very ancient and exceptionally brutal Agoge of his grandfather's time, Androcles Leonidas had not come away unscathed. He still bore the small scars from training with the Nehtes and Shi Viskas and he bore them as his father and his grandfather had before him, with honor and pride. He had wanted to follow in his father's actions and adorn his body with the flame tattoos that he wore, but at his father's suggestion, he now sported only the large flaming bird on his chiseled abdomen.

He had been sixteen the first time he saw combat, the same age as his father had been and only three weeks after completing his Agoge. A small border disruption with a band of Kochab mercenaries hunting on a planet within the Union. That action had lasted only a week, but it was during that week where he and Elynth had fought and killed together for the first time. The night on the island palace had not counted as they were together only in mind and Elynth had fought alongside Sadi and his uncle Andreus. If not for the counseling of his father, Torma and Arzoal through that long period, Androcles was quite sure he would never have lifted a weapon again after his actions during that period as inept as they were. It turned out his actions then were only a prelude to the much larger Evolli War less than two years later. A war that would forever shape him as a man.

The Evolli Triad War had lasted for almost six years, many of the battles taking place on the surface of planets that Androcles had never been to or heard of before. It was here that he and Elynth had their true baptism under fire and they learned what his father and her father Torma had learned long ago.

In order to save life, sometimes you had to take life. And do so quite violently in fact.

The Evolli Consortium politicians were upset about a recent trade contract that his Aunt Deia and his elven mother Dysea had revoked from them, and they had savagely invaded several small planets along the outskirts of Union territory thinking that his father and mothers would allow them this action in some sort of recompense. His father and elven mother had been incensed and almost six years later, with the complete obliteration of their armed forces and fleet, the Evolli learned how wrong they were as they surrendered unconditionally. He had been under the command of General Vengal for the first three years of that war, the elven father of his adopted Aunt Anuk, and one of the most ferocious men, Elves or Lycavorians that Andro had ever met. At the beginning of the fourth year he had been given a small command of his own, and at the tender age of twenty-one Androcles Leonidas had forged a name for himself as someone you did not want to face in combat. Together with Elynth and his sisters Eliani and Lisisa and his two younger brothers Denali and Resumar; they had blazed a path of victories across nine planets, to include a massive space battle a year before the last battle of the war that had earned him the right to have his own LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser. Many thought it was a reward for his actions on Alba Tau... but everyone in the Fleet knew otherwise from published reports of what he had done during that space battle.

Androcles then helped his father to plan and then brilliantly execute to precision, every portion of the battle that ended the war. It was during the last year of that war that his sister Carina joined them in the fighting making a name for herself with a daring raid and his best friend Moneus at her side. Androcles smiled to himself for that night had seen Moneus fall head over heels in love with his sister and she with him. His brother Arrarn had become his STRIKER DT pilot and was now known for his amazing skills at flying as well as fighting. Androcles had not returned to Apo Prime for more than a few days at a time since the end of The Evolli War, preferring the much slower pace of Sparta to the hustle and bustle of Apo Prime and the capital of Tuya.

Androcles wore the bridle of a Shi Viska of silver royalty, the emblazoned inverted 'V' painted in crimson on the face of his shield like his father. Unlike his father, who had come to love and become a master of the Nehtes, Andro preferred two swords. They had been forged and shaped for him from the very unique and special Dragon Armor and honed to lethal razor sharpness with precision laser treatments by the same elven weapons master who the Nehtes was named for in Sparta. It was said that watching him wield those two swords in battle with Elynth beside him was a sight not seen since his father and Torma had waded into battle together on Enurrua to rescue his mother. Together during the final ground battle of the Evolli War, he and Elynth had accounted for over a hundred and eighty-three dead themselves. While his sisters and father had fought beside them, only his father and Torma had come close to that. The swords were lethal extensions of his arms, and they moved with a speed that could not be tracked with the normal eye. Androcles had even named them... Halize Rie Aellseleum and Iphan Rie Aellseleum. The Hammer and Anvil of Justice. Combined with his ever growing abilities to unleashed staggering psychic bolts from his hands, and his unmatched unarmed combat skills, many did not doubt that one day he would surpass his father in skill and recognition.

This was not something Androcles aspired to in any way however, for while everyone knew and saw one side of his father, Androcles and his brothers and sisters saw the other side of his father. They saw the side that nuzzled and caressed and kissed all of their mothers with love and utter devotion, the side that took time to play with all of them as they grew, never favoring one over the other. The side of his father that taught all of them to honor and love one another as siblings. To never let anything come between them as family, no matter what it was. Androcles and all of his siblings, they did not distinguish who their birth mothers were. It was obvious on most of them, but as far as they were concerned they had five mothers and one father and they loved them all equally just as he and his brothers and sisters were loved equally. What directions came from one, came from them all, so closely bound together that they were as a family. That was the side of his father that many did not see. The side of compassion and honor and trust.

It was that side of his father, and that side of Torma that had reached out somehow and bound him and Elynth together so tightly even before he had been born. Androcles had become aware while still in his mother's womb and fully cognitive of what was going on around him at only five months of age. He was aware of everything, and Elynth had become his projection of sorts of that awareness. Their minds, like their parents minds, had become one. It was almost as if there was no difference between them or their thoughts. Elynth was not only his Bonded Dragon sister, but more importantly she was also his most cherished and trusted friend, and in some fashion they were almost lovers with the depth of the connection that they shared.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Andro... I am truly touched by such thoughts... but I don't think you could survive a mating session with me. You should remain with your own kind, for I have heard the noises of rapture some of them make in your arms. You will have to be content with our bond my brother. Elynth's voice echoed playfully in his head, powerfully shielded as they always were when they wanted privacy.

Androcles couldn't help but laugh at her words. [Mindvoice Shielded] I may have been over thinking that a bit huh?

Elynth chuckled within their connection from where she was in the Dragon Mountain on the other side of the palace. [Mindvoice Shielded] I will treasure the thought behind the words however my brother. And know that I do feel the same as you.

Androcles sipped the strong coffee in the mug and turned back to look into his bedroom just as the twin doors flew open and his five younger brothers and sisters burst in screaming his name in enthusiasm. He smiled as the black haired female in his bed let out her own scream of surprise as she sat up in his bed, clutching the sheet to her naked chest as she watched the three boys and two girls practically tackle their older brother to the ground inside the bedroom, only his strength keeping him from spilling his mug of coffee.

“When did you get home?”

“Why didn't you wake us?”

“Did you fight anyone?”

“Is Elynth with you?”

Androcles laughed at the rapid fire questions. “Whoa... what's with all the questions?” He asked holding Calyb against one leg and his sister Nara curled around his arm while trying not to spill his coffee.

The older girl of the two sets of twins crossed her arms over her chest and tossed her rust colored hair back over a shoulder as he had seen his mother Anja do so often. “You haven't been home in over eight months Andro.” Retta stated formally as if scolding him. “What did you expect?”

“Retta... we did not get in until very late.” Androcles replied smiling at her. “You know that our mother For'mya would have been angry if I woke you then.”

“Not late enough it looks like.” Retta spoke turning to look at the female in the bed.

Androcles heard the female in his bed snort in indignation at her words and he ignored her as he leaned forward and planted a big kiss on Retta's cheek. “I understand that there is no school today because we are leaving for Sparta. Why don't you guys go wake up Eliani, Lisisa and Carina. They are home as well as Denali and Resumar. Arrarn, Normya and Zarah are getting the Dragon Transport ready for departure and meeting grandmother. They will meet us at the base in three hours. Go wake them up for me and we'll have breakfast together before we head to the SCIMITAR.”

That got a response as they all tore from the bedroom as Androcles stood back up and looked at the young woman in the bed.

“Do they always burst into your bedroom unannounced?” She asked almost arrogantly. She was the oldest daughter of one of the senior professors at the Apo Prime University, and while very beautiful, she sometimes allowed her arrogance from her schooling to show through as she was doing right now.

Androcles lifted his mug and sipped his coffee. “They are my brothers and sisters.” He spoke. “I do not hide from them, and they come first in my life Ulana, you should know that by now.”

“Even over your privacy?” Ulana asked haughtily.

Androcles chuckled. “Especially over my privacy.” He said moving to the edge of the bed, his hand reaching up to stroke the pendant unconsciously as he had since he was a boy.

“I thought you might delay your trip to Sparta and stay here with me.” Ulana spoke hopefully. “There is a gathering at the University that I wanted you to attend with me.”

Androcles looked at her keenly and finally shook his head. “We come from two different worlds Ulana, and I have no intention of ever changing. I am not a prize that you can parade around to your friends Ulana. I don't even care for many of them to be honest with you. They will never know what true sacrifice is... and while that is not their fault... they will never be like me nor I like them. My father and mothers taught me...

blood before all else. You should find someone who will give you what you want Ulana, for I am not that person.” He said. “My blood burns for only one... and I’m sorry... that is not you.”

Ulana looked surprised as she came to her knees holding the sheet over her. “Are you dismissing me Androcles Leonidas? After what we have shared?”

Androcles shook his head once more. “Not at all. I’m simply giving you an out.” He spoke calmly. “And what we have shared is the warmth and pleasures of each other’s company, nothing more. We are not compatible outside of this bed Ulana... and to be honest... I truly don’t want to be. I will find what I seek in the future. I’m sorry.”

“You still insist on finding that female your sisters keep talking about!” Ulana barked. “What is her name?”

Andro looked at her. “Her name is Sadi. And yes... I will have her one day. She is my Anome.”

“Your Anome?” Ulana spoke. “Andro... how many people actually find their Soulmate? You can’t believe this woman is her if you have never met her.”

Andro looked at her and smiled. “If only you knew Ulana. If only you knew.” He spoke. “You must be open minded and have faith Ulana. Something you do not have.”

The young woman gathered the sheet tightly around her and pushed off the bed rather quickly. She glared at him with dark eyes. “You know something... for a Crown Prince... you are exceptionally strange! You don’t even act like royalty!”

Androcles smiled. “I’ll take that as a compliment. Thank you.” He got to his feet. “I’ll make sure Bren sees you safely back to your father’s home Ulana.”

Ulana glared at him for a long moment before walking out of the room in a huff. It took her only a few moments to dress and gather her few things. She attempted to find him once more to try and make amends but he was already gone. He had that knack, disappearing almost into thin air. Ulana made her way out of the apartment and glanced towards the palace when she heard the dragon hatchlings trumpet. She shook her head and began the walk towards the Lifter docks. As she turned the corner onto the path that would take her there she stopped when she saw the three females.

Eliani, Lisisa and Carina Leonidas still wore their sleeping clothes, which only amounted to simple shirts for Eliani and Lisisa, Carina wearing an almost see through thin robe. Ulana had been stunned at the openness of the Leonidas family the first time she had spent the night here, her arrogant modesty taking several hits that following morning as not only his sisters, but his mothers and father were very open and free.

Eliani Leonidas was the picture of her mother Anja if only a little taller. She was part Hadarian thanks to her mother’s genes, but no one doubted where her heart was. Eliani had made frequent trips back to Hadaria over the years after her Ascension, some with her mother Anja, and some on her own as she got older. She loved Hadaria but like her mother she hated the fact her mother’s Aunt and Uncle always nagged her to return home and stay. To take a more active part in the Hadarian way of life. They could not seem to understand that Eliani was far more wolf than Hadarian, like her younger brother and sister, and very much like her mother. Some say she was the exact copy of her mother in terms of temperament and the ability to endlessly string the one liner comments together to express her displeasure at things. Eliani, like Androcles and most of her brothers and sisters, preferred Sparta to Apo Prime. The city was beautiful and situated between mountain ranges on three sides. Eliani was a powerful Healer, touched with the same skill as her mother and Aunt Sivana and able to draw on life all around her to aid her power, but she would never be as strong as her mother or Aunt Sivana in that regard.

Eliani liked to fight, she liked the rush of action and the feeling of freedom flying with Tharua gave to her. She had been five years old during one of their six month stays in Sparta, and while visiting the Mindvoice ship and dragon cave there with her mother to heal some sick hatchlings, Eliani had accidentally bumped into the mahogany colored female dragon with copper colored eyes.

Tharua was the second oldest to her sister Syrilth, who had once been bonded to a Lycavorian who had treated her brutally. He had forced her to serve him by threatening the un-hatched eggs that held her brothers and sisters. Eliani’s mother Aricia had finally ended the man’s dominance over her by rescuing all the eggs that were her siblings and Tharua had then watched along with her older sister Syrilth as the King and his dragon had judged that man. The dragon Elder mother Arzoal had bestowed upon Syrilth a position of honor for her actions, and though Syrilth had taken the lives of others while serving that vile man, those sins had been forgiven as she willingly remained on Earth and established another haven for the dragons of the Union. It was not uncommon now to see dragons flying among the clouds on Earth and with her new found freedom; Tharua had thrown herself with glee into her new role as sister to a Dragon Elder.

Until Eliani came along.

That first touch, accidental though it was, had amazingly activated a true psychic bond between them, and as her mother Anja watched in stunned silence, Eliani and Tharua became one with each other. They had not been apart since. Their temperaments blended so well together that it shocked all who didn't know them.

As for Tharua... from the moment the bond between her and the then child Eliani had activated... Tharua discovered true freedom and love and friendship. All she had been denied for the first five years of her life with the exception of her siblings had become hers that day, and Tharua was viciously protective of Eliani, her bonded sister... and her beloved friend. With a proper psychic bond of love and friendship, Tharua had discovered the true potential of what she could do, and she was now considered one of the strongest pure Firespitters outside of Isheeni, her sister and several others. She had grown into a beautiful female dragon, strong and lean and muscular and was sought after by many male dragons, all of whom she had rebuffed repeatedly. She had her sights set on only one male dragon, and Tharua could only hope the Elder Council of Earth would allow her to mate.

Eliani turned her face towards her sister Lisisa. Her half sister really, for Lisisa also had the blood of a vampire running through her. She was the daughter of her father and the High Coven Princess Yuri, conceived in a time long forgotten. Her father and mother had saved Lisisa long ago, and she had returned to Apo Prime with them and begun a new life. It wasn't easy at first, but the love her father and all her mothers had shown her, and the bond she so cherished with Jeth had given her the strength and determination to go on. Lisisa was over five hundred years old, but as she told everyone now, her life did not begin until their father had saved her, so she considered herself reborn. Her bond with Jeth had grown powerful through the years even as Jeth grew to almost match his father in size. They were now recognized as one of the four or five most powerful Bonded Pairs outside of their father and Andro, who were widely considered the most powerful. She and Eliani were as close as two sisters could be, and were often seen together shopping or flirting with the male wolves together. There were times when they gathered their sisters Carina, Normya and Zarah with them, and then they really shook Tuya with their antics.

To Eliani, Lisisa was the epitome of exotic and sensual beauty with her long black hair, and forest green eyes. They were almost the same height with Lisisa only slightly shorter at five foot three, and had essentially the same luscious curves that attracted the males, though Lisisa breasts were much larger than Eliani's own full breasts. Carina was just down right gorgeous as she had her father's eyes and their mother Isabella's lush dark brown almost black hair. Her figure was lean and firm with medium sized breasts that, though considerably smaller than her sisters, were just as firm and pronounced. Carina was taller than both of them by three inches and her vampire and wolf genes combined made her an exceptionally deadly young woman. She had only fought in the Evolli war during the last year, but the four missions she had been on were anything but simple and easy. They may have been their father's daughters and sons, and he would bluster and shout about protecting them, but he would not hesitate to send them into battle when they were needed.

The physical relationship that their mothers shared with each other had caused Eliani, Carina, Normya, Zarah and Lisisa to accept that to be as natural as anything. As children, Eliani and her sisters had interrupted their mothers on several occasions in the midst of passionate encounters when their father wasn't present, and they hadn't blinked an eye, ushering them back off to bed before returning to their activities. They had slept in the same bed with them as children when they had been frightened, sometimes all of them there including their father.

Eliani shared that intimacy now with another woman, and it was immensely pleasurable for her and not something she shied away from in the least. She had found real love and caring with her pureblood vampire lover and Nyla Sinthe was a ravishing beauty as far as Eliani was concerned. In the four years they had been together, they had made each other scream out in pleasure quite often. Eliani had had men before Nyla had come into her life, and they had brought men into their bed after they were together, but none of those men had reached that part of her and Nyla wanted them to reach. None of those men had been able to touch her and Nyla emotionally as her father touched her mothers. As with most of her sisters, many were simply attempting to get close to their father the King in some way. Those their brothers did not chase off, especially Andro as he was fiercely protective of all of them, their father took care of quickly. A deep and loving relationship had blossomed quickly between Eliani and Nyla quite out of the blue and neither of them could deny it for long, nor did they want to. Eliani still very much wanted to have children of her own, as did Nyla, but she and Nyla had decided together the man who claimed them had to be unique. They wanted only one man, a strong and proud Spartan who would worship and love them both for they had no intention of ending their love or relationship with each other. He had to be like Eliani's father in that he was not threatened by the love shared between the two of them. They were both content to wait as long as it was necessary to find that one man, for they had each other to explore and play with.

Ulana looked at Androcles three oldest sisters. "Have you come to gloat now that your brother has dismissed me from his life?" She snapped.

Lisisa shook her head slowly. "No Ulana... not at all." She spoke softly. "We came to wish you the best with Nolar."

Ulana's face showed her surprise and her embarrassment. "Nolar?" She spoke. "What... what does he have to do with this?"

"Did you think actually Andro didn't know about Nolar?" Carina asked sweetly. "Our brother is not as big a fool as you think him to be Ulana."

Eliani stepped forward. "We came to say goodbye and good luck Ulana." She spoke evenly. "And to give you a warning."

Ulana glared at her now. "You mean a threat?"

"We don't make threats Ulana." Lisisa spoke moving closer to her, Carina following her lead.

"You are an arrogant and pompous upaee Ulana." Eliani spoke bluntly. "We tolerated you because Andro seemed to like your company though I can't fathom why. Now that he has decided that the two of you are not going to work out, we want to make sure you know that returning to your life and spreading rumors about him would not be wise. We would take it personal if something like that were to occur."

"You will never understand our brother Ulana." Carina said evenly. "There is only one woman who holds that distinction, and she will discover it soon enough."

"He is our brother Ulana... and we will protect him." Lisisa spoke softly. "We want to make sure you understand that any malicious lies that might pop up suddenly because he has dismissed you as you say will not be tolerated. We know how vindictive you can be. Go back to Nolar and live a good happy life."

"Do the three of you always do this to the women in his life?" Ulana barked.

Eliani chuckled. "You are lucky it's just us here. Elynth didn't care for you in the least, and she is far more protective of him than we are. Just be lucky she didn't come to send you off."

"I have never had any malicious intentions. Your brother is a hero to our people just as your father is. No one would believe me anyway." Ulana defended herself. "I just... I just don't understand what he sees in this Sadi female. She... she can't be like me?"

Lisisa looked at Eliani and rolled her eyes. "No Ulana... she is not like you." Lisisa said finally. "She is far more than you will ever be, and that is not entirely your fault. Do not take it as such... she is just very different."

"At least do me the favor of telling me who she is. The three of you must know." Ulana said.

"At the moment she is a cadet in the Fleet Academy." Carina answered. "That will soon change I imagine."

"Then again maybe not." Eliani said with a smile. "She's very strong willed."

"He would choose a cadet in the fleet over me?" Ulana asked not really believing it.

Lisisa smiled and shrugged her shoulders. "Our brother is unique."

"Well... he can call the three of you off. I have no intention of doing anything nefarious." Ulana spoke.

"That's good." Lisisa spoke. "Make sure it stays that way. Have a nice life Ulana."

Eliani batted her fern green eyes at her and they watched as Ulana politely moved past them to continue to the Lifter dock. She waited until Ulana was out of ear shot. "So... do you think we did a good enough job?" She asked.

I think it was spectacular. Elynth's voice filled their heads and they turned to see the massive obsidian colored female settle to the ground behind them from where she had been circling above.

Elynth had grown slightly larger than her mother Isheeni, larger than most other dragons her age, but she would not come close to the size of her brother Jeth and her father. Elynth was just a tad over fifteen meters long and four and a half meters tall. She weighed in at four and a half metric tons, her body smoothly muscular and for a female dragon exceptionally beautiful. Elynth took after her mother in looks with her elegantly muscled body, but her coloring she inherited from her father. Almost jet black obsidian scales adorned her body, and though it was a slightly different shade than her father, it was essentially the same. Elynth had her father's stunning golden colored eyes, but her mother's uniquely long and wickedly curved talons.

It was well known that she and Androcles had bonded while he was still in his mother's womb, bringing awareness of an adult to a child. The two of them shared the memories of their parents and they shared everything with each other. It was a powerful bond and that bond had only grown stronger through the years. Their fathers were considered the most powerful of the bonded pairs, their mother Aricia and Isheeni a close second, but Androcles and Elynth were rapidly closing that distance in huge strides, and it was widely thought that they would one day surpass even their father's in what they could do together.

The three of them laughed and reached out to stroke her cool scales and Elynth's golden eyes closed in appreciation.

"Let's go get some food before we have to head to the airfield. Grandmother will be incensed when she discovers we have been here all night and did not stop to see her. And I'd much rather have her yell at us on a full stomach." Lisisa spoke taking Eliani's hand and squeezing it. She took Carina's hand as well. "When we get to Sparta we are going to hit the beach in Gytheio and try to pick up men."

"Try?" Carina spoke with a laugh. "Lisisa they fall over you, Nyla and Eliani. I think it has to do with how big your goldur are. Zarah and Normya got our mother's figures so they have no trouble with wolves following them along their tongues dragging along." Carina spoke cupping her much smaller but no less firm breasts in her hands. She looked at her sisters. "Do you... do you think Moneus will approve of me?"

Lisisa laughed at her sister's actions. "Moneus is a man!" She declared. "And I believe he has more interest in your mida than your goldur! Besides... he has been head over heels in love you with for years. It won't matter in the least to him."

Eliani laughed as well. "Too bad Nyla and I can't seem to find one who knows what to do with our goldur when presented with them." She spoke. "Do you know how many men we have thrown away because they only have a one track mind?"

Lisisa joined in now as well. "Yes... well there is always a first time." She said.

Elynth shook her huge head. And they say Zarah is the promiscuous one among the daughters of King Martin.

TUYA MAIN SPACEPORT

Sadi stood with her friends in the Tuya spaceport as they waited to transfer to the shuttles that would take them to their transport. Sadi had gone straight home after talking with Lady Gorgo and the rest of her classes to see her father. He was packing for the trip and after sharing a small dinner together he had convinced her to go on the trip so they could spend time in Sparta together. Sadi found it very hard to refuse anything her father wanted as much as she loved him and she had agreed in part because of his words, but in part because she knew her life would change if she did this. As she stood waiting with her friends, Sadi found herself looking forward to the trip even though she knew Malic would be on the same transport. The forty odd cadets were gathered in a small waiting area, Gorgo sitting with one of her aides. Lady Gorgo had surprised them all when they arrived, the cadets discovering that she was wearing her own immaculate Reserve Fleet uniform. What stunned those present most of all was that she held the rank of Admiral/Lieutenant.

All of the cadets wore their uniforms; the cadet markings would be removed and replaced with normal fleet markings when they graduated. Sadi was the only one among them that wore flight wings already, mainly because she had grown up flying because of who her father was, and the fact that she had flown with Queen For'mya and Star Colonel Endith while working with Queen Dysea in the Annacdorne.

"So whose ship will we meet?" Her friend asked taking her arm. "There is a bet going that it will be MJOLNIR'S HAND. I say it will be Prince Androcles's ship the SCIMITAR. What do you think Sadi?"

Sadi smiled. "What difference does it make Teeria?" She asked her closest friend and confidant.

"The difference is that the King already has his Queens silly." Palta spoke now. "Prince Androcles is still very much a single male wolf. And so are Prince Resumar, Prince Arrarn and Prince Denali, and they are known to always travel with him."

Sadi shook her head. "You two are so bad." She spoke with a smile.

"We aren't bad." Teeria spoke. "We are just healthy single female wolves who happen to be very much open to mating with one of the Princes."

"Yes... I'm sure." Sadi declared with a grin rolling her eyes.

"I've heard they are all built like gods..." Palta spoke. "Muscles everywhere... and I do mean everywhere."

"Palta!" Sadi exclaimed.

"What? Have you ever seen one of the Queens without a smile on her face? It is said that the King's aura is so powerful they become excited just by being wrapped within it, and there are rumors that he is built like a bull. If his sons are anything like him, gods I would be in blissful heaven." She spoke. "Doesn't Malic do that for you Sadi? Gertia still gushes over him."

Sadi looked at her. "No he doesn't." She replied. "And Malic and I are over."

"Over? What do you mean? You didn't tell us that!" Teeria barked perking up and looking at her dear friend.

Sadi nodded. "Malic has his own path to follow, and I do not wish to be part of that with him."

"So does that mean he's available?" Palta asked with a smirk. "I heard Gertia say he's very well equipped."

Sadi rolled her eyes again and smiled. "Yes... he's well equipped. But he's arrogant and rude and sometimes I think he is trying to make up for some fault. I... I want a man who will worship my body and stimulate my mind and not just try and pound my guts out because he has a big cock and he thinks that is all I need." She said.

"Sometimes you ask for too much Sadi." Palta said jokingly.

Sadi smiled and reached up and rubbed the pendant she wore under her uniform, feeling the bump it made against the fabric. "Perhaps." She said softly.

"Quiet!" Teeria hissed. "Lady Gorgo is coming over... she will..."

"She will hear what you are saying?" Gorgo spoke with a grin as she stepped up to the three females.

The three of them bowed their heads slightly to her. Gorgo was their professor and an officer in the Union Fleet, but she was also King Leonidas's mother, and there was not a person alive within the Lycavorian Union that did not know how much the King adored his mother. It was said in gossip that when all else failed and you wanted something from King Martin Leonidas, send in his mother for she would get what you wanted.

"Forgive me Lady Gorgo." Teeria spoke shyly.

"Don't be like that..." Gorgo announced shaking her head quickly. "I was young once." She said.

"Yes... but you... you have loved a beloved King and now a First Admiral of the Fleet." Teeria said softly.

Gorgo chuckled. "Yes I have... just remember that Cadet Sadi is correct. If a man truly loves and desires you, he will worship you like you are a goddess. If he doesn't... bah... discard him quickly." Gorgo spoke with a wave of her hand.

The three of them laughed like small children at Gorgo's words as the stern looking man walked up to them. He wore the black and crimson body armor and rank of a full Durcunusaan Commander, the crimson cape gently sweeping across the floor of the terminal as he walked. They were the famed unit of men and women who guarded their King and Queens and all those they deemed important with something akin to fanatic loyalty. Lady Gorgo herself had at least one Durcunusaan bodyguard they were sure, probably one or two more considering how much the King loved his mother, and though they never saw them, Sadi suspected at least one posed as a student in their classes.

Gorgo turned to face this stern looking man as he bowed his head deeply. "Lady Gorgo... it is an honor." He spoke clearly. "I am Star Commander Bren of the Durcunusaan... Prince Androcles's Detachment Leader."

Gorgo's face looked puzzled. "Andro?" She asked. "You are a long way from him, are you not Commander?"

The Durcunusaan Commander smiled. "We arrived late last night on the SCIMITAR Lady Gorgo. The King and Prince Androcles decided it would be best to pick you and your cadets up here as opposed to meeting you halfway. We finished with the training exercise early yesterday morning."

"Wait... Andro... is here?" Gorgo asked surprised. "On Apo Prime?"

Bren nodded with a knowing smile. "He sent me on ahead to arrange transportation for you and your cadets to Mjolnir's Hand's base. We will be departing from there on a Type II DT and docking with the SCIMITAR in orbit. Prince Arrarn and Princesses Normya and Zarah are already at the airfield prepping the ship. The rest will be leaving the island palace shortly with Queen For'mya and their siblings."

"Our transport is..." Gorgo started to speak.

"All of yours and the cadet's belongings were loaded on the MENKLA III and already sent up to the SCIMITAR Lady Gorgo. I have a Lifter Bus standing by outside for your cadets and the personnel heading for Sparta." Bren spoke.

Gorgo nodded with a smile. The Durcunusaan were well known for their efficiency. "Very well Commander. Which direction?"

"The east entrance." He replied motioning with his hand.

Gorgo turned and saw the other military personnel departing with them already heading in that direction. She looked at the cadets who were all facing her. "Cadets... there is a change in plans it seems. I have been informed that the SCIMITAR is already in orbit, and we will be riding up to her on a Type II Dragon Transport. There is a Lifter Bus outside that will take us to our departure point at the Mjolnir's Hand airfield." She motioned with her hand towards the direction of the east entrance. "Let's start heading towards the east entrance. Commander Bren will lead us."

This news had the cadets buzzing.

Mjolnir's Hand had the only base on the planet that was strictly off limits to the public. It was a huge sprawling base with a massive airfield, and it was where all of Mjolnir's Hand came to train with new tactics and weapons that had been devised over the years. The base was also the permanent home to nearly a hundred dragons and members of the famed unit as they were trying to fill the last three slots in their ranks. Twenty-three of Mjolnir's Hand had fallen during the Evolli War, and it was a long process for a dragon and rider to be selected for the elite three hundred member unit. Those that were not selected for the actual unit held many various and important roles throughout the Union with their dragons at their side. In all there were less than a thousand bonded pairs now, and when called upon they could all be activated to fight.

Gorgo watched carefully as her cadets began to file out, briefly noticing that Sadi was rubbing something she wore under her uniform. She smiled knowingly. Perhaps their carefully crafted plan would come together after all.

The trip to Mjolnir's Hand's base took almost an hour with the lifter traffic by the spaceport. Gorgo sat next to Bren as they passed through the front gate of the base which was guarded by half a dozen heavily armed Durcunusaan and two fully grown Hybrid dragons, all of whom alertly and intently watched as their Lifter Bus passed by. They could see the massive Type II DT sitting on the airfield as they headed directly for it.

One hundred and fifty meters long and twenty-three meters tall, it was the main transport used by the dragons of the Union. This ship was the Type II DT, and while still large, it was not the massive three hundred and fifty meter long Type I that could carry four hundred fully grown dragons. This ship had been designed ten years after dragons had come into the lives of the Union, and it could carry forty fully grown dragons comfortably, as well as over a hundred passengers on an upper level deck. Its reduced size made it easier to be taken into the cavernous landing bays of the LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers. This particular Type II DT was assigned to the SCIMITAR permanently because of the number of dragons that called the SCIMITAR home. When they were all on board, Elynth, Jeth, Tharua, Cemath and Aradace were the dragons bonded to Androcles and his siblings. That did not include the hatchlings and adolescents that had bonded to all of his five younger siblings and often traveled with them as they now would.

As they grew closer, Gorgo couldn't help but smile. Standing near the rear ramp of the ship she could spot her grandson Arrarn and her granddaughters Normya and Zarah easily. Arrarn Leonidas had his father's height, and while he was very muscular, he was not as thickly proportioned as his father or brothers. He was well defined in a lean way, yet his muscles were just as ripped as those of his brothers and father. He was also the most physically handsome of all the Leonidas sons, most likely due to his mother's elven blood. He had dozens of female wolves and even female vampires and elves chasing after him for his attentions. Arrarn was solid and incredibly strong due to his half elf, half wolf blood, which suited him just fine since he had taken after his mother For'mya and become the premier STRIKER DT pilot in the Union at only twenty-three years of age. Normya she could spot easily just by the billowing platinum white blond hair she inherited from her mother Dysea, and with Normya, Zarah was never far away. Zarah was Isabella's second daughter with her son and already at twenty-one years of age Zarah had male wolves and vampires alike lining up to try and court her. She and Normya had been born only six hours apart, and though they came from different mothers, they referred to each other as twins.

The driver of the Lifter Bus pulled off to the side still quite a distance away and stopped. Gorgo knew this was because when the ship took off it gave off huge blasts of air that could easily knock nearby vehicles over. They could see perhaps two dozen dragons of all shapes and sizes already within the individual pens along the interior of the ship with another half dozen were filing onto the ship. No doubt they were speaking within Mindvoice to her grandchildren for Gorgo could detect the tremors easily. Bren looked at Gorgo quickly.

"Lady Gorgo... may I?" He asked.

Gorgo looked at him and nodded. "Of course Bren."

The Durcunusaan Commander got to his feet and turned around to face the cadets and personnel heading to Sparta. They became silent as he waited patiently.

"There will be a briefing once we reach the SCIMITAR on what not to do while you are on board our ship." He spoke firmly. "It is my understanding that either Princess Eliani or Princess Lisisa will give this briefing. We will load through the same ramp as you now see the dragons entering the Type II. There are stairs on either side that will take you to the upper deck of the ship. The lower deck belongs to the dragons, and even though it is only a twenty minute ride up to the SCIMITAR, please do not get lost and go down to the lower deck." Bren heard many of those gathered chuckle at his words. "All active military personnel will board from the left and then all cadets from the right. Please form two lines when you exit the lifter. It will be rather loud on board since we will be executing an in-flight recovery of Prince Androcles and his brothers and sisters before we actually head up to the SCIMITAR. For those of you who have never witnessed such an event... it is certainly a sight to see. I encourage you to watch, but do not get in the way of the action. I will warn you now... the Bonded Dragons of the Princes and Princess are very closely knit. They are not unfriendly... but they are not as open to people they do not know. Most especially Elynth, Prince Androcles's dragon. Be mindful of your actions and what you say, and do remember they are just as intelligent as you or I. Sometimes even more so." He smiled. "Let's head out."

Gorgo was the first to exit the Lifter bus and she turned as she saw her grandchildren running up to her, Normya's hair whipping about her face. Gorgo smiled as Normya was the first to reach her.

"Staanial!" She gasped loudly as Gorgo held open her arms and embraced her tightly. (Grandmother)

Gorgo's eyes closed in joy as she held her and inhaled deeply, filling her lungs with Normya's orange clove scent. "Normya... you rival your mother with your beauty child." She spoke warmly holding out her arm as Zarah approached and stepped into the embrace as well.

"Staanial." She spoke more sedately but with equal love and respect.

Gorgo nuzzled Zarah's cheek, once more inhaling the sweet apple and sage scent of Zarah. She squeezed them tightly. "You both have grown so much in only eight months!" She stated holding them at arm's length as she looked at them. "I will have to talk with your brother about coming to see me more often!" Gorgo looked up as Arrarn approached and she smiled. His elven ears were like Normya's in that they were only two inches high as opposed to the four inches of normal elves. That in no way took away from his handsome features or Normya's beauty. It was common among the children of Lycavorian and elf unions and marriages that their children did not have the distinguishable high pointed ears.

Gorgo hugged Arrarn tightly inhaling his peppermint scent and smiling. She realized it had been almost a year since she had seen most of her older grandchildren, and she made a mental note to contact Jora and her other children with Riall and invite them to the villa in Sparta. All but two of them had already moved to the city of their mother's birth. Gorgo would tell anyone that it was their way of telling her to return to the home of her roots on a more permanent basis. She stepped back and took hold of Zarah and Normya's hands and pulled them close. "Why didn't one of you call me when you arrived?" She asked.

"It was very late last night Staania." Zarah replied holding Gorgo's waist tightly and her face beaming. "Androcles didn't want to wake you and we needed to get the ship ready early for your cadets and the others going to Sparta. We will have three days on the SCIMITAR to catch up. Androcles has already planned a dinner for tomorrow night for all of us."

"Where are your brothers and sisters?" Gorgo asked. "Shouldn't they be here as well?"

"They are bringing the little ones." Normya replied with a grin. "You know how mother fawns over them when they fly. She is such a worry wart sometimes."

Gorgo chuckled. "Your mother For'mya knows well the dangers that you older ones laugh in the face of."

Arrarn laughed as well. "Too bad she doesn't take her own advice." He spoke. His keen dark eyes looked out over the expanse of the lake and he nodded. "They are lifting off now!" He turned to where Bren stood directing the cadets and military personnel. "Bren! Inbound!" He shouted.

Bren turned his head from where he was forming the two lines and saw the six dragons lifting off from the island palace far in the distance. He grinned.

"They have their siblings?" He called back.

Arrarn nodded from where he stood. "That they do!"

Bren shook his head as the military personnel and cadets began searching the skies over the lake watching the six dark dots begin to come closer. The stunts the children of the King and Queens pulled were sometimes over the top, but they were like their parents. Every single one of them.

As they grew closer, everyone was able to see the five smaller dots flying along with the six larger dragons, and all of them were moving incredibly fast very near the surface of the water. Firespitters were the fastest of the different breeds of dragons, and with a pure Firespitter mother widely recognized as the fastest among them, and a hybrid father that was the largest and strongest among their kind with only one exception, all the dragons flying at them were moving with near blinding speed. It was only six kilometers across the water to the island from where they stood on the airfield and all of them were silent in awe as the dragons grew closer, barely fifty feet off the surface of the lake.

"Do they have to fly so close to the water?" Gorgo asked exasperated. "I will have words with your brother about this display when he lands!"

Normya laughed. "Staania you shouldn't worry so much." She spoke.

"I am your grandmother!" She exclaimed. "It is my right!"

There was no more time for talk as with trumpeting roars five of the six dragons rocketed over the airfield and executed perfect 360 degree rolls so close to the ground that it bought yelps of surprise from the cadets and military personnel who followed them with their eyes as they split into five different directions. Many had even ducked down instinctively as the dragons passed overhead. They all could hear the screams of joy from younger children echo across the ground as the dragons quickly blasted across the landscape into the distance once more, the smaller dragons splitting separately with the larger ones. Then everyone's heads turned as the sapphire scaled muscular dragon swooped down from above and settled to the ground beside the two lines that had formed.

For'mya Leonidas's long golden blond hair extended out well past the bottom of her helmet, the crested plume shimmering in the sunlight and extending past her shoulders to the middle of her back. She wore the lightweight version of the black and crimson body armor, which conformed to her lithe figure like a glove. She had long legs for her five foot seven height and though the helmet hid most of her facial features Gorgo knew well what she looked like. Gorgo had known her from before the Coven had captured her and found For'mya to be pompous and arrogant then. When Martin had returned with her to Apo Prime and she had discovered this new For'mya and all that had taken place to transform her into the woman she now was, Gorgo became fast friends with her.

With Deia's and Gorgo's own support and backing, as well as the full weight of Martin's four reigning and recognized Queens, they had pushed through a new amendment to the Union constitution that allowed For'mya to officially be recognized as the fifth Queen of the United Lycavorian Union. She was just as loved by Martin and his other Queens, especially Aricia and with their support and backing; the amendment had passed easily with no dissension in the Senate. It was not something For'mya had requested or even wanted, but she was every bit a Queen as the others and it was their way to show her just how much they all loved her.

Six months after returning to Apo Prime, Gorgo had watched as For'mya was crowned as the fifth Queen to her son in a beautiful ceremony on the plains of Sparta.

For'mya had given him two strong sons, one of whom was now perhaps a better pilot than his mother. She was well known for her calm and nurturing presence and not much existed that could rattle her to anger unless it was danger to her children. She had grown powerful over the years, taking part with Aricia and Isabella as her son's military Queens. She and Aricia were almost never apart it seemed, and with few exceptions she always traveled with them, and since Seanna's death Anja had become a fixture with them as well. Gorgo could only be amazed at the love that they all felt for each other. There was no jealousy between the women in her son's life. Aricia was recognized as his Soulmate, the one who would always have a piece of him the others did not, and because of the pureness of her blood she was nearly as powerful as Martin. She was the youngest of his Queens, but she was who they all deferred to when a question arose. That status might have caused a lesser person to be different, but Aricia was the one who was always trying to arrange for them to be together. Gorgo knew they all shared the same bed when together, and they shared each other's attentions as well as Martin's as often as they could. It was this relationship that was their strength as a family.

For'mya was smiling as Aurith settled to the ground and she slid from the saddle quickly and easily with practiced ease. Gorgo watched as For'mya let her hand slide along those smooth sapphire scales before she kissed Aurith's snout softly, the dragon's large head canting towards her and those golden eyes closing in joy and happiness.

Gorgo stepped up to her and they embraced tightly.

"Gorgo... it is so very good to see you." For'mya spoke as she stepped back and reached up to remove her helmet. She handed it to the Durcunusaan troop that stepped up quickly and then took Gorgo's hands once more. "You are looking as beautiful as ever."

Gorgo laughed. "You should talk." She spoke. "You came alone?"

For'mya nodded. "I brought a DT back that needed new LSD coils." She answered. "Martin Leonidas was up to his elbows in paperwork with Dysea, Bella and Deia, and Aricia and Anja were returning from Hadaria on the SPIRIT when I left. I had nothing to do."

Gorgo laughed again and squeezed her hands. "You mean they left you to come collect the children when school got out. You are much better with the transfer paperwork than the others."

For'mya's dark brown eyes twinkled. "Well... I just have more patience for all the red tape." She answered with a grin. "And I wanted to see if..."

Gorgo nodded. "Yes... she is coming."

For'mya smiled and let out a large breath. "Good. Has he seen her yet?"

Gorgo shook her head. "No not yet. And she shields herself with very advanced skills if I do say so myself. Helen taught her exceedingly well."

For'mya nodded slowly. "Yes she did. She has grown more powerful than many of us first thought she would. Helen was shocked at what she could do when she first arrived at the school. We'll have to make sure Commander Bren knows that when we get to the SCIMITAR. The Durcunusaan insist that all Tier Six Mindvoicers declare themselves when coming onboard, especially with the dragons that accompany us for this trip. I will see to it before we leave Apo Prime."

"I'm surprised he hasn't detected her yet?" Gorgo spoke.

For'mya chuckled. "They are like their fathers. He and Elynth rarely lower their shields far enough to detect anyone not at an advanced Tier Six level. They are so used to their brothers and sisters and those that are close to them that they might not even pick her out until he sees her if she shields so well."

"Well hopefully that will change." Gorgo spoke.

For'mya turned her head as Arrarn, Normya and Zarah came up to them. "Are we all set?" She asked.

Arrarn nodded. "As soon as the cadets and military personnel load, we can take off mother." He answered confidently. "I've already cleared the airspace for the in-flight landing. We'll do it over the island palace just to play it safe and stay out of everyone's hair. Captain Sa'sur has already cleared our berth on the SCIMITAR and we can move right in when we obtain orbit."

"Please tell me they aren't going to do an in-flight landing with the little ones!" Gorgo exclaimed.

"Staania... do you actually believe I am that insane?" The deep voice spoke from behind them. It was a voice that carried with it a level of confidence and power rarely felt. "My father and mothers would have my head if I attempted such a thing."

Gorgo smiled at For'mya as she turned slowly at the sound of the voice. "Well perhaps if you were more tame in your actions young Androcles, I would not need to worry so much over the safety of my younger grandchildren."

Sadi was gazing at Aurith's elegant long lines and trying to keep herself from busting from the line of cadets to go and greet For'mya. The elven female had been such a rock for her to lean on during that time after she first turned herself in. She had never wavered in her support of Sadi in any way, and Sadi had not been able to thank her for that support.

"I'll be riding one of them someday Sadi." Malic's voice filled her ears and she turned to see him reach out and grasp her arm from the line he stood in to her left. "See what you could have had?"

Sadi pried his fingers from her arm. "No Malic... I don't see that." She hissed softly. "I see a pompous..."

"Staania... do you actually believe I am that insane?" The deep voice spoke from behind her, causing Sadi to freeze in her place her eyes going wide as his scent drifted to her on the slight breeze. "My father and mothers would have my head if I attempted such a thing."

She watched Gorgo smile as she turned slowly at the sound of the voice. "Well perhaps if you were more tame in your actions young Androcles, I would not need to worry so much over the safety of my younger grandchildren." She said.

Sadi saw Malic's eyes go wide as he looked behind her, and then Teeria and Palta were gripping her arms tightly as Sadi turned slowly.

The first thing she saw was Elynth's huge obsidian head not a meter from her, looking out over the two rows of cadets and military personnel at where Gorgo and For'mya stood. Her four and a half meter height allowed her to easily gaze over the tops of the heads of the men and women gathered; ignoring them as she saw and felt Gorgo and For'mya. Sadi followed the line of her long neck back until she saw him in the saddle between her shoulders and she gasped softly to herself.

The helmet he wore was matte black like the others, sharply angled over his cheeks and extending past his jaw line. There was a small lighter colored shape on top of the helmet which looked incredibly like a golden statue of Elynth herself, her front talons gripping one of the front edges of the helmet and her fangs bared. Yet there was no mistaking the golden color of the dragon's eyes on that helmet, nor the raven black plume that flowed along the back of the dragon and down to well past Androcles's shoulders.

There was also no mistaking those azure blue orbs from behind that helmet. They were the eyes she had seen so many times in her dreams.

Sadi watched as Androcles lifted the younger girl from the saddle in front of him and lowered her to the ground next to Elynth. She also wore a lightweight version of the body armor and a crested and plumed helmet. Her dark green eyes were wide in excitement at the ride she had just had and she raced over to For'mya, the one meter tall brownish dragon hatchling scampering after her flapping its wings madly.

"Mother did you see?" She exclaimed. "Did you see Eli roll over? It was awesome! Mara and I will do that someday!"

For'mya laughed and let Retta hug her leg as the dragon hatchling rubbed up against Retta. "I saw Retta. Yes I did. Now say hello to your staania before she breaks into tears at how big you have grown."

Androcles smiled at this show. "Mother... we are running a little behind. Why don't you and grandmother get everyone on board and we'll meet you in the sky."

For'mya nodded. "You could forgo the landing Andro." She spoke hoping to convince him so that he discovered Sadi.

Androcles looked hurt. “And miss a training opportunity for my brothers and sisters?” He announced. “Perish the thought. Father would bust me back to Prince of nothing if I did something like that mother.”

For'mya laughed and waved her hand at him. “Go on! We'll see you among the clouds my son!”

Androcles chuckled and tapped Elynth's side. Let's go sister.

Elynth snorted loudly and began turning just as the wind shifted and she felt Androcles stiffen in the saddle above her. Her large head turned quickly and she looked at him.

Andro?

Androcles turned his head towards the row of cadets and military personnel, his azure eyes wide. He had caught the unmistakable scent of sugar plum and spice in the wind, a scent he had smelled before long ago, and a scent he had loved from the first moment it touched his senses. His azure orbs swept the line of men and women keenly as he threw his leg over the saddle and dropped to the tarmac quickly.

Andro my brother? What is wrong? Elynth asked.

Androcles reached up and placed a hand on her thick neck scales. She's here Elynth! I can smell her!

KertaGai! Elynth exclaimed twisting her massive body around to face the rows of cadets and military personnel. We... are you sure Andro? We should have felt her within Mindvoice!

Not if she is shielding. Andro spoke softly. Remember that Helen told us that she had grown powerful at shielding her presence. She...

Andro's eyes came to rest on the golden blond hair and dazzling jungle green eyes as they stared at him without a hint of surprise. He moved without pause and stepped up to stand in front of Sadi, Elynth directly behind him, even as Teeria and Palta and many others stepped back away from her quickly, partly in fear and partly in surprise at this action by the most well known of the Princes.

For'mya and Gorgo stood together with Normya and Zarah watching intently from where they were. They had plotted and schemed for two years with Aricia and Anja for this moment to take place. All of them knew Androcles had eyes for no one but Sadi, as he never removed the Dragon Heart pendant he wore. Even in the hospital recovering from his wounds during the Evolli War he had threatened to kill the doctor who wanted to remove it from around his neck. Four women had shared his bed since he was old enough, none of them lasting more than a few weeks. Like Ulana... they could not tolerate the closeness of the Leonidas family, and they were not the one Andro wanted. For'mya and Aricia knew everything that had happened over the course of those few days on the island, and Gorgo had taken a vested interest in these events ever since discovering who Sadi was.

Andro stared down at Sadi, towering over her five feet seven frame, and allowing the sugar plum and spice scent to sweep through him now. She didn't back away and simply stared at him as the pines and lavender scent she had smelled on the island so long ago simply washed over her. Sadi could feel his aura... so staggering and powerful... and tightly controlled. She had been blasted by many Alpha wolves in the course of her life in their attempts to entice her, yet the aura she felt radiating from Androcles was three times anything she had ever felt before and that was even heavily shielded. It was wild and powerful and so sweet in its freshness.

This was the boy who was now a man.

Sadi watched him, her heart beating madly, slamming into her chest as he reached up and took the sides of his helmet. Her green eyes grew a little wider as he lifted it off his head and she finally saw the face those eyes from her dreams always were attached to. She lifted her hands, bringing them to her mouth in stunned surprise as Sadi found she was gazing intently on the most incredibly handsome young man she had ever seen. Oh... had he grown since she last saw him Sadi thought to herself. Even through the lighter Spartan version of the body armor Sadi could tell he was just as physically sculpted as his father. The muscles were exacting in detail, and though he was no where near as heavily muscled as his father, there was no denying the definition and bulk and his scent was driving her mad.

Andro breathed deeply once more, lowering his head slightly closer to her and inhaling her sweet sugar plum and spice scent, feeling it filter to every corner of his mind and body. She was even more beautiful now than he remembered her. He brought his head back and looked at her, staring deeply into her gorgeous green eyes.

Hello KertaGai. He spoke softly within Mindvoice.

Sadi gasped when his voice caressed her mind, the power and warmth unlike anything she had ever experienced except for that single night when she had heard that voice before. And then Elynth's voice joined his, her large obsidian head brushing up against his shoulder as she pushed forward to gaze at her with those golden colored eyes. Andro's arm wrapped underneath Elynth's head affectionately.

You are even more beautiful than we remember KertaGai! Elynth exclaimed.

Elynth... you... you have gotten so big! Sadi exclaimed within Mindvoice, and she saw them both close their eyes as her musical voice filled their minds.

You are a cadet! Elynth spoke excitedly as her golden orbs reopened quickly and she gazed at Sadi.

Sadi nodded quickly and her friends that stood around them gasped as they realized she was speaking to the dragon within Mindvoice. Even Malic stared at them stunned at this revelation.

I'm a pilot! I'm going to graduate in six months! Sadi answered. I have asked about you over... over the years! I... didn't know if I should try and contact you. I... She looked at Andro as she spoke and saw his eyes open and gaze at her. Those azure blue orbs made her shudder inwardly with desire and something more powerful than she had ever felt from any man. His aura was sweeping around her, showering her in warmth and love, but being very respectful in his actions as well. It was a sensation that made Sadi want more. So much more.

Andro stepped closer to her, Sadi not backing away in the least as his scent and aura engulfed her. There has not been a day that has gone by when you were not in my thoughts KertaGai. Andro said softly.

Sadi stared at him and inspected the strong square face and jaw, reaching up to trace his cheek without care that anyone saw her. Yes... this was definitely the face from her dreams... of that she had little doubt. Sadi suddenly realized what Elynth had meant all those years ago when she said she had been chosen. He had chosen her all those years ago, and the relationships she had been in since that night were only leading up to what she was going to enter into with this man. What she wanted to enter into with this man, no matter that he was over a hundred years younger than her. She watched Andro reach up and unfasten the top of the body armor, pulling at something until the leather tie with the coral red pendant on it came free and he held it in his hand tightly.

I have worn this... I have worn this since that time on the island Sadi. He spoke gently. I am not fool enough to...

Sadi reached up quickly and pulled at the collar of her uniform jacket, reaching under the uniform and quickly pulling the second half of the coral red pendant out dangling from the satin tie. I've never taken mine off either. She said quickly.

Neither of them saw For'mya squeeze Gorgo's hand tightly, a wide smile on her face.

Andro looked at her then, squeezing his pendant tightly in his hand. He smiled and Sadi felt her heart leap into her throat. Andro leaned over close to her and inhaled deeply, his cheek just brushing hers in the ancient Lycavorian custom began by his grandfather of expressing interest in a female.

You will be mine Sadi, daughter of Vorilas. Andro stated confidently. I intend to make you mine and have you scream my name to the moon.

Sadi stared at him as he drew back, the blood in her body on fire at the sensations he was causing to sweep over her. The same sensations that swept over her in her dreams, but this time they were not dream like in nature. This time, the cause of those sensations was standing right in front of her. Sadi couldn't help but smile at his words. She had never had a male state his intentions to her, and to state them with such confidence and authority. His voice was soothing and warm in her head, and her body was becoming excited at the prospect.

Are you... are you sure you are up to the challenge Prince Androcles? She stammered out. I am... I'm not an easy catch. Even though all she wanted to do was throw herself into his arms and have him ravage her body and her senses.

Andro smiled almost crazily and lifted his helmet bringing it back down on his head. "That is a challenge I will win." He stated out loud confidently. He looked at the others who were standing around them, watching intently. "It has been very nice to see you again Cadet Sadi." He spoke. "I hope I can have the pleasure of your company when we reach Sparta."

Elynth moved her head within inches of Sadi's and her golden eyes closed when Sadi reached up without fear and stroked the smooth scales on her snout.

[Mindvoice Shielded] He has never lost a challenge Sadi. She spoke with some humor knowing Andro would not break into their shielded conversation.

Sadi chuckled in the shielded connection. [Mindvoice Shielded] Until... until this very moment I have always wondered what your words to me meant that day Elynth. She spoke. I don't anymore. Not after seeing him, and feeling what I do coursing through me. He won't have to work very hard.

Elynth laughed. [Mindvoice Shielded] Just don't make it easy on him. Elynth brushed her snout up against Sadi's cheek gently. We will see you on the SCIMITAR KertaGai.

[Mindvoice Shielded] I look forward to that. Sadi answered.

Andro continued to stare at her as he backed up slightly and climbed back into the saddle on Elynth's back. He turned and looked over to where For'mya and Gorgo stood side by side with large smiles on their faces. [Mindvoice Shielded] You knew about this?

For'mya grinned. [Mindvoice Shielded] Who us?

Andro growled in his chest and turned to look at Bren who was gazing at him waiting for orders. "Commander... I have delayed us enough. As my sister is fond of saying... let's get this party started!"

Bren grinned. "As you order Milord!"

"Elynth go!" Andro barked. With a deafening trumpet Elynth flexed her powerful legs and propelled them into the sky.

Sadi watched him intently, her hands grasping the pendant tightly in her fist as Teeria and Palta came back up to her. Teeria grasped her arms tightly turning Sadi to look at her.

"Ok... you have a lot of explaining to do!" Teeria exclaimed with a brilliant smile.

Sadi laughed and squeezed her hands as the two files began moving for the Type II.

CEKU TERTIUS SECTOR TWO FOUR LYCAVORIAN BORDER OF THE WILDS

"Moneus, tell me again why we are on this nubous insect infested hunk of jungle rock?"

General/Colonel Daniel Simpson asked as he lowered the small macrobinoculars from his deep brown eyes.

Daniel Simpson hadn't changed a bit from the young Navy SEAL on Earth before their worlds had changed so such. He looked no older now than when he did twenty six years ago, the only difference in his appearance being the two inch long scar on his left cheek from the blade of an Evolli. Discovering he was a werewolf, a member of a race called Lycavorians, and that his people weren't even from Earth hadn't caused him to bat an eye. His six foot five, two hundred and sixty pound frame was stretched out on the top of the ridge of the rocky hill a thousand meters high above the expanse of green and brown all around him. The vastness of the huge jungle valley below extended as far as the eye could see, hills and mountains much like the one he was currently on present all across the horizon. His wolf eyes could see for several kilometers without the aide of the binos, and even with them all he could see was green and brown with dozens of breaks in the jungle canopy. That did not make him any happier.

"Officially or unofficially?" The male voice spoke with some humor from beside him.

Danny turned and looked into the dark amber eyes.

His mother's delicious eyes.

Like his older brother Anton, Moneus Simpson was almost an exact duplicate of his father except for Anton's lighter skin shade. Easily six foot four and two hundred and forty-five pounds of rock solid ripped muscle. His dark chocolate colored skin and the two inch long elven ears were due to who his mother was, and like the remainder of his siblings, his ears were much shorter than normal elves because his elven mothers were also part Lycavorian now, due to his father's actions. Unlike his older brother Anton, Moneus chose to keep his head shaved like his father and there was nothing but smooth skin showing under the thin fabric that kept the sweat from pouring into his eyes. His dark brown mustache and goatee were trimmed as well, to precise proportions, though no one had yet figured out why his facial hair was different from the hair on his head if he had allowed it to grow. Danny looked into the eyes of his second born son and could only marvel at what the last twenty-six years had produced. He had never ever pictured himself a father, yet now he had seven healthy and strong children and his Drow Elven/Lycavorian Mistress and mate was about to give birth to his eighth. Moneus was the second oldest at twenty-four years old, born almost exactly two years to the day after his best friend and fellow Spartan Androcles. Danny couldn't remember a time when he and Martin had ever really been apart for an extended period of time, and now that bond of brotherhood had passed to their children it seemed. At least to their sons.

He turned slightly when the red hair and lush figure of the female elf settled soundlessly to the ground between him and Moneus. Danny drew in a deep breath of her sweet cinnamon scent and smiled, for this and the scent of sweet apples was the only thing in the galaxy that caused him to bat his eyes. Anuk now was even more beautiful to him than when he had first met her, as was his Drow mate Nayeca. Motherhood agreed with them it seemed, and even after four children for Anuk and almost four for Nayeca, they looked just as delicious now as then.

"Officially this is a training exercise." Anuk spoke formally now as she lifted the binos she held.

"Yes... and unofficially we are investigating several reports of Kochab and Evolli pirates using this planet as a base of operation." Moneus finished the statement for her. "We know that entire story mother... I believe father was trying to be sarcastic since Andro left us here."

As with the Leonidas children, Moneus and his brothers and sister drew no distinction between their mothers because of the relationship they shared and continued to share even now.

"When is your father never sarcastic Moneus?" Anuk asked with a small grin.

"I'm not being sarcastic." Danny protested softly. "Marty had me bring my ship all the way out here and he promised me a steak for doing it. Not to mention quality time with this hot red headed female elf! He didn't say we'd be stuck here after Andro left!"

"He never promised you anything like that." Anuk spoke in a stern but playful voice. "He saved you from the boring task of Fleet exercises my love, not to mention writing your fitness reports, which both of you hate infinitely more than this insect infected hunk of jungle rock. And you volunteered to remain behind so Andro could meet his grandmother if I recall. I told you Moneus... your father never takes anything serious."

"That's not true." Danny protested once more. "I take you and Nayeca very serious thank you very much."

Anuk lowered her binos and looked at him with a delightful smile and twinkle in her cerulean blue eyes. "Yes you do. Though our Mistress is quite upset with you at the moment."

"Me? What did I do now?"

"We left her on Earth to come on this mission Daniel." Anuk spoke.

"Baby... she's pregnant." Danny said. "Can you imagine Nayeca trudging through this jungle seven months pregnant? That's scary even though she could probably do it with her eyes closed. She has snarled at the crewmen on SPARTAN'S SOUL so much, they avoid whatever deck she is on. Better that she stays in Sparta and be spoiled by my mother and sisters."

"She is having a slim beautiful pregnancy, something you should remind her of when we return. I intend to... just to get back into her good graces." Anuk stated with a smile. "She just didn't plan to have another child so soon after Odara was born."

"Odara is four years old. And that's not what she told me when we..." Danny's words stopped when Anuk leaned over and kissed him. It was a long slow lingering kiss, her cinnamon flavored tongue dancing with his and her cinnamon scent filling his head. After a long moment Anuk finished their kiss by tracing her delicious tongue along his upper lip when she leaned back.

"Husband... we will tell you anything you want to hear when you do that to us. You should know that by now." Anuk stated with a wistful voice.

Danny grinned now. "We do have fun making the little guys huh?"

"Oh yes... we certainly do." Anuk said kissing him softly once more. "Even when we aren't making the little ones. You will have to take our Mistress and I to that place on the coast that you took us before. You certainly entertained us for the entire five days."

Moneus made a soft gagging sound. "Please... could you not do that in front of me? I may become scarred by the sight of my parents making out and planning a romantic rendezvous in the jungle on this nubous insect infested hunk of jungle rock."

Anuk didn't turn from staring into her husband's deep brown eyes. Even after twenty-six years of being together, Anuk could not think of a moment when she did not want this man. She could still see those days in that tunnel so many years ago as if they had happened yesterday. She could still remember her first days after Danny had turned her. Nayeca could still remember the day she and Anuk became lovers in the traditional Drow fashion and what she thought he would do to her. His reaction had surprised her and even to this day Nayeca could not express what she felt for him in words. Nor what Anuk meant to her once Danny had turned her and made her his mate in the Elven fashion. It was something she and Nayeca talked of often when they were alone. "He has been hanging around Andro too long." Anuk spoke.

"You noticed that too huh?" Dan said with a smile.

Anuk reached out and took hold of the shoulder section of her son's black body armor. "Keep talking Moneus and I will have a little discussion with Carina about your distaste for showing affection to the one you love." She spoke leaning over to her son now.

Moneus's eyes grew a little wider. "You wouldn't dare." He said.

Anuk turned to face him completely and her smiling cerulean colored blue eyes settled on him slowly. "I'm your mother Moneus... of course I would. And don't think for an instant your mother Nayeca will disagree. You should learn from your father how to treat a woman and not just how to kill things efficiently."

She held his wide gaze for a few tortured moments longer and then leaned over to nuzzle her son's half elven ear. The love she shared with Nayeca and Daniel extended easily to all their children. While it was easy to discern who their mother was simply due to their lighter skin tone, their children saw no distinction in the least. Anuk's mother and father spoiled all of them too much as well. Moneus breathed a sigh of relief and couldn't help but smile at the show of affection.

"I will contact Martin and tell him we have nothing to report but his cranky Spartan brother who hates the jungle and his young adopted Spartan nephew who doesn't like to show affection for the female he wishes to one day claim as his own. I'm quite sure the King would be very happy to hear that about his daughter's boyfriend. Especially since we have been here for almost a week and found nothing, and he has been doing paperwork for a week. He will certainly be in a most excellent mood." Anuk chuckled softly and squeezed Moneus's leg as she got up and moved soundlessly back down the ridge.

Moneus looked at his father with wide eyes. Were they always like that father? He reached out within Mindvoice.

Danny grinned. Boy... if it wasn't for your two mothers I wouldn't be the man I am. Is Carina the one for you Moneus?

Moneus nodded quickly. Without question father. I can hardly wait until next month to make a claim to Uncle Martin for her hand. I haven't seen her in two years... I guess part of me is worried that she no longer feels the same way as when we last spoke.

Danny nodded slowly. When I discovered your mother, it was the same way. Carina is cut from the same mold Moneus. The same as both your mothers and Isabella. If she feels the same for you son, she'll be waiting for you when you land. And if everything I hear is true... she does. When you find a woman like that Moneus my boy... you grab on tight and never let go. You love her with all that you are in and out of your bed. And if she wants to kiss you in public, I don't care who is watching, you lay a lip locker on her that will curl her toes and blister her hair. If she's doing it in public Moneus... it's because she's telling everyone around her that you belong to her. Do her the honor of doing the same. And remember, Carina is half vampire, which means she takes emotion that much more serious. If you don't, not only will I beat you, Martin will get a shot or two in as well.

Moneus stared at his father for a long moment before nodding with a smile. I believe I will do as you say father.

Danny nodded. That's my boy. Now watch the damn jungle... my eyes are getting tired.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Daniel my love? Anuk's musical voice spoke.

Danny made no show that Anuk was reaching out to him, though Moneus could undoubtedly feel the tremors in Mindvoice. All of his children with Anuk and Nayeca were exceptionally powerful with Mindvoice, Moneus even becoming a ranking member of the Durcunusaan even at such a supremely young age.

[Mindvoice Shielded] What's up baby?

[Mindvoice Shielded] When we get back to Earth my love... I will have to give you something special for that little bit of advice to our son.

Danny grinned. [Mindvoice Shielded] Well now... what did you have in that beautiful mind of yours gorgeous?

Anuk laughed softly. [Mindvoice Shielded] I'll surprise you husband... but you must bathe first. We both smell terrible.

[Mindvoice Shielded] I like the sounds of that. We'll bathe together and we'll have to... Danny saw Moneus turn his bins intently and adjust the setting to zoom in. He dropped them quickly as if not believing what he had seen and then brought them back to his eyes. He felt the even surge in his son's body as adrenalin entered his bloodstream. His son had seen combat before on any number of border skirmishes and missions like this, as well as the last few major conflicts of the Evolli Border War beside Androcles to include the slaughterhouse on Alba Tau. That was a day and night that Danny tried his best to forget.

It seemed there were quite a few out there that didn't like what the Lycavorian Union had. Anuk... hold off on contacting Marty... I think we may have something here. Danny leaned closer to his son. "Moneus?" He whispered softly.

"Ten o'clock father." Moneus replied just as softly. "I'm... father... I want to say I'm looking at a dozen High Coven Immortal troops that are moving through the breaks in the high canopy."

"High Coven Immortals!" Danny gasped bringing his bins to his eyes. "We haven't seen or heard from the High Coven in over a decade." Danny brought his bins up. "Where?"

"Four point three kilometers, bearing two nine three degrees." Moneus replied instantly.

Danny focused and adjusted his sights and then the picture of the twelve Immortals burst into view through the next break in the canopy. They were moving almost casually in single file, their weapons slung over their shoulders, the hilts of their ritual swords sticking above the dark gray uniforms they wore. Three pairs of two were carrying large crates between them.

"Well bite me in the ass and call me stupid! This boring little intelligence mission just got a whole lot more interesting." Danny spoke.

Moneus turned his head sharply to the left when the soft chirping noise reached their wolf sensitive ears, looking back down the ridge. Father! The remote sensors have detected a patrol of Kochab and Evolli moving towards us from the other direction.

Anuk! Danny called out.

I'm on it! She declared. They both watched as she moved like a phantom across the natural bowl in the terrain where their equipment was and settled fearlessly beside the large ground sensor array. Anuk crawled on her belly to the edge and used her own binoculars now. He's right. I count probably fifteen. A mix of Kochab and Evolli. All of them armed and carrying some kind of crates between them.

Moneus turned to his father. "An exchange of some kind?" He asked softly. "It has to be."

"Yeah... question is... an exchange of what?" Danny spoke.

"Father their paths will bring them here." Moneus spoke. "If they stay on the direction they are heading... they'll meet just at the base of this hill. We could..."

Danny nodded and grinned at his son's sense of tactics. The more time he spent around Androcles... the wiser he became.

"Yes they will... and yes we can." He spoke. "How bout we plan a welcoming party. I'll call your grandfather." Danny stretched out on his back and tapped the internal COM unit on his body armor. "Eagle One to Elf One. We have company."

CEKU TERTIUS

"I love it when a plan comes together!" Danny shouted as he toed the corpse of the dead Immortal with his combat boot.

It had come together quite brilliantly in fact.

Danny expected no less when Anuk's father was involved.

General/Colonel Vengal was the second most senior elven officer within the Lycavorian Union now, behind only General/Colonel Tareif of Earth. He was Anuk's father, and over the years had easily come to consider Nayeca just as much a daughter to him as Anuk was. That they were both mated to the one man who held his undying respect and love made it all the better.

Danny's command consisted of the elite troopers and pilots of the Lycavorian Union that were not already assigned to Martin's division. A combination of Durcunusaan and regular Spartan Centurions, as well as Vengal's superior half vampire Drow elf scouts and intelligence units. Behind only Martin's 1st Spartan Attack Division, Danny's 2nd Spartan Expeditionary Division was the largest force in the Union military. He drove them, himself included, mercilessly, and the men and women of all species that called the 2nd their home would have it no other way. Like their King, Daniel Simpson could incite almost fanatic loyalty to himself with his style of command, and the 2nd Expeditionary Division was one of the five most sought after postings within the entire Lycavorian military. It was made all the better because the King and their commander were brothers in everything but blood, and no matter what happened, you could rest assured the 2nd SED would be involved.

Vengal had unleashed his Drow vampire scouts on the Immortal column, while a detail of Durcunusaan under his grandson had hit the Evolli and Kochab mercenary column. Their broken and bloody bodies were all that remained. The men and women of the Lycavorian Union did not take prisoners unless ordered to do so, and those orders were very rare indeed.

Moneus squatted down beside one of the singed crates the Evolli had been carrying.

"That is what they were carrying Moneus?" Anuk asked as she came up behind her son.

Moneus nodded and slashed down powerfully with his Nehtes, the angled tip of the near unbreakable spear slicing through the locking mechanism as if it was butter. "Time to find out what it is they were going to exchange."

Moneus used his boot to kick open the cover and his eyes grew a little wider. He heard his mother gasp.

"Father!" He shouted quickly moving to the next container. It was severely burned beyond recognition, but the butts of several of the weapons still visible. He looked up to see other members of his Durcunusaan detachment doing the same as he was, inspecting the bodies and containers. He turned as his father started towards him and retrieved one of the weapons from the crate at his feet.

Danny's eyes grew wider as he approached his son and he caught the weapon when Moneus flipped it to him. "A T19?" He gasped looking at his son.

"Eight of them per crate." Moneus spoke motioning to the remains of the crates the Evolli and Kochab had carried. "Five of the crates have been destroyed... but this one was only singed." Moneus looked up as his grandfather approached his eyes wide at what Moneus held.

All of them had seen the T19 before.

The Evolli had designed the weapon to fight dragons and their riders. Essentially they were advanced small caliber missile launchers fed from a circular drum. Elynth and Torma had both taken full blasts from one of these weapons, the fragments so close that they managed to penetrate their psychic shielding and cut deeply into their flesh, injuring both Martin and Androcles as well as knocking them from the sky. Jeth had been slightly singed by one carrying a plasma type round as well. The Evolli had managed to kill twenty-three dragons and their riders, all members of Mjolnir's Hand with this type of weapon, and they injured countless others. It had taken almost three years until Benjamin O'Connor and some enterprising engineers had come up with another use for the incredibly pliable Dragon Armor. That use was a set of actual dragon armor sheets that could be layered across every dragon's neck and back and secured with clasps. The only unprotected portion of their bodies was their wings, but unless shredded completely, their wings were also the most resilient part of their bodies and would heal over time. The layered sets of armor had saved countless more dragon lives and earned Ben O'Conner the eternal gratitude of the Elder Mother Arzoal, and every living dragon. To the members of Mjolnir's Hand and the Royal family who fought in the war, Ben and his engineers had become honored members of their small group.

They turned as a Durcunusaan dragged the surviving Evolli warrior by his dreadlocks over to where they all stood. The Evolli cradled his useless right arm; his yellowish blood leaking from the Nehtes would in his shoulder and the two P190A3 burn marks. His eyes were wide as he stared up from the ground at the two men who were well known among the Evolli. Together with Martin and Androcles, the four of them had combined to kill more Evolli than any others during their war.

“Dark skinned and his vile offspring!” The Evolli hissed. “I should have known! Only you and your foul son would be insane enough to attack through the jungle canopy! Not even the scum you call King would do such a thing.”

Danny and Moneus looked at each other quickly. There were gasps of stunned surprise as Anuk staggered back. The others could only watch in awe as Danny’s Nehtes extended in the millisecond blink of an eye and Moneus Nehtes flashed in the sunlight. Then the Evolli was screaming in agony at the Nehtes that now impaled his opposite shoulder, and the Nehtes blade that had driven completely through his already injured shoulder. Only Vengal stood without an expression on his face, for he had seen the speed his daughter’s mate and his grandson could move with, and they had suffered more than any of those present at the hands of the Evolli during the war.

They had almost died that day on Alba Tau, attempting to lead a unit of Durcunusaan through the high mountains and deep timber to reach their King and Prince in that valley of death. They had disobeyed orders to do this without blinking an eye. They had come under a vicious ambush themselves; cutting their unit off from those they were trying to rescue and suffering severe casualties. Vengal had toured the sights of both battles two days later, the blood still inches thick on the ground, the imprints of where the dragons had lain, of where Daniel and Moneus had lain injured. It wasn’t until the sun had come up that anyone realized Daniel and Moneus and their unit had made it to within six hundred meters of their dear friends and brothers before being stopped. Vengal knew it was the bloodiest and most savage battle that he had ever heard about or seen the aftermath of and part of him thanked the gods he had not been there to experience it himself.

Danny leaned over twisting his Nehtes in the shoulder of the Evolli, his eyes changing to the yellow/gold of the wolf inside him, Moneus eyes taking on a black outline around his dark amber orbs as he too allowed the wolf in him to come to the surface.

“Why are you selling these weapons to the Immortals?” Danny screamed. “Has the High Coven returned? Tell me!”

“I will... I will tell you nothing!” The Evolli howled out as Moneus twisted his own blade viciously.

Danny’s cruel smile was horrific to look at. “Oh no my Evolli friend... you will tell me all I want to know!” He wrenched the Nehtes savagely once more before ripping it out of the Evolli’s flesh causing him to scream in even more agony, until a hammer like kick from Moneus to his head dropped him into blackness.

Danny turned as Anuk stepped up to him and pressed her lithe supple frame against his, nuzzling his throat and sending him calming pulses through her aura. Moneus watched his father’s reaction to his mother and saw his anger bleed off quickly as he nuzzled her in return his own eyes closing.

Moneus took a deep breath and then closed and opened his eyes and saw his father take a deep breath. Then his normal colored eyes were back and he turned to Vengal.

“Daniel... you and my grandson here... you have a serious emotional issue with these Evolli scum.” Vengal stated with a straight face. “Maybe the two of you should get counseling or something?”

His words hung out there for a long moment and then Danny was the first one to burst out laughing. It wasn’t what Vengal said, it was the way he had said it and the look on his face. Moneus and Anuk were next to burst out laughing and then everyone was laughing as the adrenalin high of combat began to bleed off for all of them.

“What about ugly here?” Anuk finally spoke still chuckling and toeing the unconscious Evolli mercenary with her boot. None too gently either.

“Fix his ass and take him with us.” Danny spoke with a smile. “We’ll have a nice chat on SPARTAN’S SOUL.”

“Just don’t expect me to use pain killers.” Anuk said pulling her bag off her shoulder. “After what this scum and his friends did to you and our son, he’ll be lucky if I don’t let Nayeca skin him alive!”

“Mother... that is not necessary.” Moneus spoke quickly.

Danny chuckled. “You’re getting cruel in your advanced years baby!”

Anuk snorted at him as she knelt next to the Evolli. “I’ll show you advanced years.” She snapped. “Old man!”

Moneus moaned and rolled his eyes.

SCIMITAR
LEONIDAS IIA-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER
COMMAND SHIP FOR PRINCE ANDROCLES
9TH SPARTAN ATTACK DIVISION

The SCIMITAR was four thousand three hundred meters long, shaped like a dual spear head and one of the first of the LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers to come into service. It was several hundred meters longer than the standard ship, with a slightly more advanced engine plant than earlier models, and carrying slightly more firepower but for the most part it was the same ship. Thirty five of this class LEONIDAS IIA now served alongside the forty-three original LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers. The increase in length was due to the fact that many of the corridors and rooms were now able to accommodate whatever dragons might be on board, and there were two enormous lifts within the hanger bay that allowed the dragons to make their way to all but the top three decks of the ship. It was equipped with one hundred and thirty of the new MK9C Plasma Beam arrays dotting the superstructure, ten forward TH57 Proton torpedo launchers and eight aft launchers. Adding to that firepower were forty-six of the newest Mark 22B Anti-ship missile launchers, twenty-three per side. The SCIMITAR had a Union Fleet standard complement of five squadrons of the T9E TEMPEST-Class Fighter Interceptors and four squadrons of M4B DEVASTATOR-Class Fighter/Bombers, along with three STRIKER DTs and twenty-four STRIKER ATRs, the newest STRIKER class to begin fleet service as of last year.

The SCIMITAR traveled now with only its standard peacetime Strike Wing complement of five NOVA-Class Attack Cruisers, five of the newer ADMIRAL CENEU-Class Fast Attack Heavy Destroyers and five AUTUMN MOON TYPE II-Class Attack Frigates. The other ships and many of the soldiers under Androcles direct command were based on Earth. The 21st Spartan Attack Division, like his father and Uncle's personal commands, was a highly sought after posting. The men and women who served in the 21st almost never opted out of the unit, and many had turned down promotions or advancements to remain with the unit for several more years. Androcles had pushed for his brother Resumar to get his own command like this one, and plans were already in the works for that to happen within the next year. Denali was working to have his own as well, and learning all he could to accomplish this within three more years. They had learned one thing from both their father and their older brother, and that was patience usually paid off in droves, and now they were still in a learning process.

The recovery of Androcles and his brothers and sisters had been an experience that no one would ever forget. The Type II transports were so large they did not need to retract the sides or tops of the ships as the STRIKER DTs did, and as everyone stood around on the metal stairs and walkways leading up into the passenger transport section, they could hear the trumpets of nearly forty dragons as they bellowed their approval as first Jeth, then Cemath, Aradace, Tharua and finally Elynth were brought on board with nary a problem. Arrarn and Normya kept the ship rock solid as For'mya watched proudly from the engineer's station, while Gorgo kept covering and uncovering her eyes as each dragon and rider were brought on board.

Sadi had watched with Teeria and Palta as they all landed with exacting skill on the Type II, but the only one she was really concerned with was Androcles and Elynth. She had squeezed Teeria's hand almost painfully as she watched Elynth glide in close to the rear of the hovering ship, her wingspan enormous as her curved talons settled to the non-skid deck plating of the landing ramp as they had hundreds of times before. Sadi watched as Androcles and his siblings then gathered together quickly in a small huddle with their five dragons as the rear doors of the Type II closed and then Arrarn was taking them into orbit to meet with the SCIMITAR.

Many of them had never been on board a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser and were glued to the few windows as they entered the cavernous landing bay and saw the ground crews and all manner of fighters and fighter bombers parked neatly.

Gorgo remained on the upper deck with the cadets and military personnel as Andro and his siblings stayed with their dragons. She looked up when the ship lurched slightly and Bren got to his feet.

"Lady Gorgo... on behalf of the Durcunusaan and Prince Androcles I welcome you to the SCIMITAR." He spoke proudly.

Gorgo smiled and touched the man's shoulder. "Thank you Commander Bren."

“We have arranged for a short briefing and question session in the flight room for your cadets and the arriving personnel by the Princesses as I said on the surface.” Bren told her. “Would you prefer to remain with your cadets or be escorted to your quarters?”

“I’ll stay with the cadets until they get settled in Bren thank you.” Gorgo spoke warmly and squeezing his arm.

Bren nodded. “As you wish Milady. This way.” He spoke motioning with his arm.

Gorgo turned to the Cadets as many of them were already eagerly reaching for their bags. “Cadets... please follow Commander Bren and do not deviate from his direction.”

It went quickly and soon everyone was sitting inside a large briefing center connected to the landing bay, dozens of comfortable chairs all facing the large star chart and podium. Most of the chairs had been filled by many of the regular fleet personnel and Spartan Centurions from the upper deck of the transport and the cadets moved along the aisle and around the back wall.

Gorgo turned quickly when she heard Eliani and Lisisa burst into the room without care of protocol or who saw them. They were attired in the standard dark gray fleet uniform now which consisted of black combat boots, fatigue pants and dark t-shirt with fatigue top. They had removed their body armor quickly once onboard since both of them hated to wear it.

There had been a push some fifteen years ago to relax the restrictions of the younger Lycavorian females within the Union. Many of them were reaching their Coming of Age far sooner than had happened in the past, and it was determined that the size of the Union and the constant interaction with others from different races had slowly altered that hormonal balance in Lycavorian females over the centuries. Many were now reaching their Coming of Age in their late teens and early twenties and the push began to have the laws changed to accommodate that fact. Martin and the Queens had supported it from the outset, the medical information presented was just too solid and accurate to ignore. Anja and Eurin were solidly for it, and when all was said and done and everything was presented to the Senate by Dysea and Deia in language and terms they could understand, the vote had been unanimous.

Eliani was being pursued by several males, both on Apo Prime and Sparta, Gorgo knew. She had no interest in the few males from Hadaria who had shown desire in her. They were too laid back in her opinion, and Eliani wanted passion and excitement in her life. As for the others, Gorgo knew that Eliani and Nyla would never allow a man to come between them, they were far too much in love, and of the ones Gorgo knew of, none would even cause Eliani or Nyla to pause before dismissing them. Eliani and Nyla had been together for four years now, and quite surprisingly they balanced each other quite well. Nyla held her title of Durcunusaan Team Leader, but she had become so much more over the past four years that she was now considered a member of their family. While she and Eliani maintained a villa in Gytheio together, their apartment within the villa in Sparta was a combination of both their tastes. It was not at all uncommon to see Nyla with Martin’s Durcunusaan detail when he moved about Earth. Martin had never attempted to help Nyla’s career along, though he could have on many occasions for he knew Nyla was proud of her accomplishments, as were her parents. Her parents were frequent visitors to the villa in Sparta, and they were among the few vampires that actually took the time to travel to Thermopylae and visit the memorial there for Martin’s father. An act which had endeared Nyla to all of Eliani’s family. When Nyla and Eliani had become involved and it became serious, all of them couldn’t have been happier.

Lisisa was also quite popular and attracted males wherever she went. That she was part vampire never entered the thoughts of any male, for it was discovered soon after she arrived with her father after her rescue that her wolf genes were far more dominant within her. She was a stunning raven colored female wolf when she shifted, but the vampire genes in her body allowed her to use the skills of a vampire when she was in normal form just as easily. Skills that her mother Isabella had helped her to develop and refine to perfection over the years. There had been no question in Isabella’s eyes when she first saw Lisisa, for she saw a younger version of herself, and with Dysea, Anja, For’mya and Aricia helping her, they had given her all the love Lisisa had never had. Surprisingly... despite her ravishing beauty Gorgo thought, there was not a man in her life.

Malic tore his eyes from where Sadi was standing and ignoring him and watched Eliani and Lisisa enter and his eyes became very interested when they settled on the burgundy haired Princess.

Malic was not a stupid man... in fact he scored very high on all his physical entrance tests for Durcunusaan enrollment. Physically... he was a perfect specimen of a Spartan, six foot two and two hundred and twenty-six pounds of ripped muscle, and he had always been better than those around him. His only problem was not seeing that those around him were for the most part young and inexperienced Centurions. He had a large ego and a bad case of arrogance due to this. His father was a General officer within the fleet and his mother worked for the Senate as a Liaison. He sat up straighter in his chair upon seeing Eliani. While both of them were drop dead beautiful, he instantly decided Eliani's numerous curves and her scent stirred his passion even more for some reason. Looking at them now, Princess Lisisa had larger breasts, but there was something in Eliani's fern green eyes that made Malic desire to see more. A certain wildness in them that appealed to him in a way he had never felt, and the sweetness of her willow and peach scent was tickling his nostrils and senses in a way he had never felt before this day. Perhaps he would... Lady Gorgo stepping into his line of sight caused him to change his thoughts quickly.

Gorgo embraced them both tightly, inhaling deeply once more of her grandchildren. She touched their faces and smiled brilliantly. Eliani and Lisisa had always been very close as Eliani grew, and even more so when they chose to conduct their Agoges together. Even after Eliani had found Nyla, Lisisa was always included in their lives.

"You two grow more beautiful by the day." She spoke softly pulling first Eliani and then Lisisa into her arms once more. She held Eliani's hand and reached up to stroke Lisisa's cheek. "Where is your reckless brother now?"

"He was in the middle of a transmission with grandfather back on Apo Prime. Uncle Daniel contacted grandfather as we were coming up and he wanted him to bring some items to Sparta and had to catch him before he left." Lisisa answered easily, reaching up and squeezing her grandmother's hand. "He'll meet us in the forward lounge for dinner. You are hungry I hope?"

"Starved." Gorgo answered. "Is something wrong?"

Eliani shook her head quickly. "Not at all."

Gorgo looked at her granddaughters and shook her head. "You two have learned how to lie far too well." She spoke with a grin. "I must talk to your parents about this inbred skill that is appearing in all my grandchildren."

Eliani and Lisisa chuckled as Lisisa reached up to pull her long raven colored hair into a tighter pony tail. "I'll give the briefing Eliani. You won the bet." She spoke.

Gorgo looked at them puzzlement in her eyes. "What's this?"

Eliani grinned and squeezed Lisisa's arm. "We bet if she would come or not. I said yes, Lisisa said no. I won. She has to give the briefing now. She's like father and Andro... she hates this sort of stuff."

Gorgo smiled as Lisisa rolled her eyes and moved for the podium. The Durcunusaan commander saw this and looked out over the mass of cadets and assorted personnel. "Attention all! Princess Lisisa will be giving you your initial briefing!" Bren snapped.

His words echoed through the briefing room and all of them jumped to their feet, and came to rigid positions of attention, the cadets more so than the fleet personnel. Lisisa stepped up to the podium and leaned close to the Durcunusaan commander.

"I hate when you do that Bren." She whispered.

Bren smiled back. "Yes Princess... I know."

Lisisa shook her head slowly and looked over to her sister. I'll get you for this. She spoke in Mindvoice.

Eliani grinned at her. I'm sure... but you lost the bet.

I always lose the bets. Lisisa complained.

Lisisa turned back to those in the room and waved her hand for them to return to their seats. Her forest green eyes fell across the men and women until they came to rest on Sadi, standing in the back. She had to admit... Sadi was a stunning beauty and Lisisa was also very surprised at the fact she was a very strong Tier Six Mindvoicer if the shields she felt were any indication. Shields that Sadi was holding in place without effort.

Since the First Oracle had returned to their people with her father's actions on Ukwav so many years ago, Mindvoice skills had become more commonly practiced among their people, another move that her father ushered in that brought them closer to their natural instincts. The Feravomir had instituted the Tier rating system she had used during her centuries in Sparta, classifying all Mindvoicers on tier levels. Most Lycavorians within the Union never advanced this skill past Tier Four due to the intense training required to be able to use Mindvoice skills properly and safely at higher levels. There were tens of millions who had reached Tier Five due to their duties and training they had received, but there were perhaps only a few million who had progressed to Tier Six status, the majority of them within the military. Members of Mjolnir's Hand and the Durcunusaan were all Tier Six Mindvoicers, allowing them to bond more easily with the dragons they rode, creating a powerful bonded pair. The Durcunusaan, Wolves of the Blood, had been created by General Vengal and General Vistr as the Royal Guard. Part of their training was to conduct combat actions against dragons if called upon, and this facilitated the need for them to be Tier Six Mindvoicers. Every member of the Royal Family was far above even a Tier Six level due to their blood and their ties to her father and his Queens. Even their grandparents, who had at one time only been strong Tier Fives, were now beyond most Tier Six individuals. Eliani, Lisisa herself and their siblings would be regarded as the very top echelon of perhaps two dozen Tier Six Mindvoicers, while her father, her mother Aricia and her brother Andro could not be measured by any known means.

Sadi appeared to be on a level with her and Eliani even though she shielded it very well. Lisisa didn't doubt that every Durcunusaan on the ship had felt her come aboard, as well as their dragons. This was the Sadi that Elynth and Andro talked of so often when they had down time. This was the Sadi that kept her brother from taking a mate. Androcles had had lovers in his life, four of them to be exact, but none of them had been serious relationships because her brother for all intents and purposes had chosen Sadi long ago as the female he wanted above all others. Lisisa had to admit... she was breathtaking.

Lisisa tore her eyes away quickly from Sadi and took a deep breath. "Well... first of all, let me welcome you to the SCIMITAR." She began. "This ship is a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser, officially under the command of my brother Androcles. The senior ULU Fleet Officer is Star Captain Sa'sur. She is likely the most unorthodox female elf officer you will ever meet and she can make the SCIMITAR dance at her words. My first and only suggestion with her is, don't get on her bad side. You will have free reign to go where you wish for the most part while on the SCIMITAR, and I encourage you to explore as much as you want. There are only three places that my brother Androcles has declared strictly off limits to anyone who is not a crew member of the SCIMITAR. The first one is the last three sections of deck nine where our personal quarters are located, as well as several Mindvoice meditation chambers. The second and third places are the dragon pens in the main hanger bay that you saw as you were docking and then the entire aft compartment of deck ten beyond section twenty-six. That part of deck ten is used exclusively for our dragon bond mates and those that are coming to Earth with us and the access is severely limited. The dragon pens in the landing bay only because our bond mates have learned to dodge and weave amongst all the activity there and someone who is not familiar with the ship might be injured. The other places are the usual secure stations you will find on any ship."

"Will they... will they accidentally eat someone Milady?" A female cadet blurted out the question a look of concern on her face.

Lisisa and Eliani chuckled loudly at the question and Eliani moved up next to her sister. "No... they will not eat you Cadet." Eliani replied now with a grin. "If you didn't notice as you were approaching, the SCIMITAR is several hundred meters longer than the typical LEONIDAS II. Almost all of the corridors have been enlarged so that our bond mates can go where they wish. Our quarters on deck nine are directly above the aft section of deck ten so that we can spend as much time with them as possible. Unlike our parent's dragons, Tharua, Jeth and especially our brother's bonded dragon Elynth are rather introverted. They are uncomfortable around people they don't know. Cemath and Aradace are more social, but not by very much. We tell any visitors to the SCIMITAR exactly what we are telling you. Now that we have thirty-two dragons that are accompanying us to Earth, we certainly don't want anyone to get stepped on."

"Of course... we don't get many visitors either." Lisisa spoke with a smile. "So we are probably just as excited as all of you."

Eliani nodded. "That's the truth."

Their banter brought a soft round of laughter from everyone gathered before Lisisa continued. Lisisa turned back to them. "You will probably notice that most of us do not wear rank insignia on our uniforms. That is something our brother does purposely so that everyone is treated with the same respect. You never know who you might be insulting with your words or actions, so you are respectful to all around you. I hate these types of briefings... and I'm sorry no... I won't take any questions. I'll leave that to my sister."

Eliani looked at her quickly and Lisisa grinned as she stepped away. Got you. Lisisa spoke within Mindvoice.

Oh... that is so not fair! Eliani barked out.

Gorgo turned when she saw and heard Sadi chuckle softly to herself, others turning to look at her strangely. She smiled as Eliani looked at the gathered people.

“Ok... maybe a couple questions.” Eliani spoke watching as several hands shot up, most of them from the group of cadets. Her eyes fell upon and looked at the very handsome Spartan in the fourth row, admiring his looks. He was tall and had deep blue eyes unlike Eliani had ever seen. She let her gaze linger on him for a long moment before she pointed to one young male cadet.

“Yes?”

“Have you seen combat Lady Eliani?” He asked.

Eliani sighed softly at the question. She nodded her head slowly. “We have fought with our bond mates and our brothers Androcles, Resumar and Denali in the Evolli War and several border disputes yes.” She answered. “Our brother Arrarn and our sister Carina joined us in the last year of the war and have been with us since.”

“Is it true the Prince and his dragon killed hundreds of Evolli in that last battle?” Another cadet blurted out.

Eliani maintained her composure easily. “My brother Androcles and Elynth will bear the scars of the Evolli War for the rest of their lives.” She spoke evenly. “It is not something we speak of freely so if you have an opportunity to speak with my brother... it is not a question you should ask him. He harbors a great deal of animosity towards the Evolli for their actions. As do my father and my mother Dysea.”

“Will we see the Princes while we are on board Princess Eliani?” Another female cadet asked.

Eliani smiled. “You may. My brothers are very busy as I’m sure you are aware. Though Captain Sa’sur runs this ship, she and my brother are very close and they share the work load for the most part. If you do see him or the others, they will either be with Elynth or their dragons in the pens or in one of the gyms on deck six working out. They are obsessive about working out every day. And no... before anyone asks, they have not taken mates, nor do they have someone in their lives at the moment. Except for Elynth and their dragons of course. However... that is going to change rather quickly I’m sure.”

“Do you and Princess Lisisa always travel with Prince Androcles?” A female cadet asked this question.

Eliani nodded quickly. “For the most part yes. It is said that Resumar will be getting his own command next year and I imagine Normya and Zarah will transfer with him since Normya flies his DT, and Zarah is not only an exceptional fighter, but a very competent engineer as well. Carina will be heading back to Apo Prime next year to enroll at the Advanced Tactics University. When she finishes that I imagine she will return here. She and Andro are usually the ones who put our training schedules together anyway. Right now she is the Tactical Officer for Andro’s section of Mjolnir’s Hand.”

“She doesn’t ride a dragon though?” A voice echoed.

Eliani shook her head. “She hasn’t bonded with a dragon... there is a difference. She is quite capable of taking any of our Bond Mates and riding them. They would be limited in what they could do somewhat... but she is a fully qualified rider. All of us have been riding dragons since we were old enough to walk. Something which gave our grandmother fits because she feared something terrible would happen.” Eliani spoke turning to look at Gorgo.

Gorgo shrugged. “It is my right.” She barked.

Eliani and Lisisa laughed. “It is the same for Arrarn, Normya and Zarah. Besides... when we go into battle, Carina prefers to be on the ground. She is much more lethal on the ground.” Eliani said with a smile and twinkle in her eye. That small bit of information was in fact very accurate. “Lisisa, Denali and I will most likely stay with Andro here on the SCIMITAR. We make a good team. Androcles is the best big brother anyone could have.”

“Isn’t... isn’t Princess Lisisa much older than the Prince though?” The same female asked.

“My life did not truly begin until our father found me and brought me home.” Lisisa replied softly stepping back to stand next to Eliani. No one but Gorgo saw their fingers clasped together behind the podium in a show of support and she smiled. “Age wise I may be older, but wisdom and experiences and the depth of his bond with Elynth have made our brother far older than I in many ways. In some ways... in some ways it is a burden for him. To know that we all look to him as so many others do. He does not think of it as a burden however... much like our father does not... and that is why we all cherish him so.”

“Princess... doesn’t it... doesn’t it get confusing to have so many you call mother?” A male cadet asked. Bren stepped forward quickly. “That is not a question that concerns you Cadet!” He barked.

Eliani smiled and placed her hand on his shoulder. “It’s ok Bren.” She spoke. “It’s a fair and honest question.” Eliani turned back to the cadet. “I imagine it might be confusing to some who have known only one mother and father in their lifetimes. For me, for Lisisa and Androcles and all of our brothers and sisters, we don’t look at it like that. My mother is Queen Anja, Resumar and Normya’s mother is Queen Dysea, Denali and Andro are from our mother Aricia, Carina and Zarah from our mother Isabella. Arrarn is from our mother For’mya...” Eliani saw many shake their heads in confusion and she laughed. “Yes I know it can be confusing, especially now with our younger siblings getting bigger. As I said we don’t look at it like that. All of us, my brothers and sisters are part of a whole. We don’t distinguish because to us there is nothing to distinguish from. Our parents made it clear to us when we were very small... blood before all else. It is what we have known all of our lives, and it is as natural for us as the act of breathing; so to answer your question no it isn’t confusing for us. They all speak with the same voice.”

Eliani smiled. “Please... feel free to explore the ship... once we pass through the Gate it will be a very smooth ride. Commanders Bren and Famus will show you all where you will be staying.”

“Do you train in the gym as well Princess?” Malic asked quickly coming to his feet as he gazed at her. The questioned sounded stupid after he heard himself ask it, but he remained standing and fought down the embarrassed look so that it didn’t show.

Eliani looked at the Spartan she had admired before. He was tall and muscled she could see that even in his uniform and she smelled his driftwood and ocean scent filter to her. It was a very enticing scent and Eliani felt a small surge of pleasure in her belly at his scent. She smiled at him brightly. “Sometimes.” She replied.

Gorgo stepped forward quickly shaking her head. “Cadets... my granddaughters are very busy so since there are no more questions let me chase them out of here.”

Eliani smiled. “See... she still chases us around even when we are grown.”

Gorgo couldn’t help but smile. “We will turn this back over to Commander Bren before my granddaughters find themselves being chased around the ship by their angry grandmother.”

The Durcunusaan commander stepped up bowing his head to Eliani and Lisisa as mostly the females and cadets laughed softly now. “Thank you Princess.” He turned to the gathered men and women stepping around the podium as Eliani and Lisisa made their way out of the briefing room giggling to each other after both of them squeezed Gorgo’s hand. Bren appeared to be looking for someone and his eyes settled on the cadets in the back. “Cadet Sadi?”

Sadi jerked slightly and turned red even under her tan as dozens of eyes went to where she stood. Being singled out by the Durcunusaan usually did not mean good things. She moved forward awkwardly, her shoulder bag banging against several people who she attempted to apologize to. She could see Malic’s eyes on her clearly. “I’m... I’m Cadet Sadi Commander.” She spoke quickly thinking he had somehow gotten her in trouble already.

“You are a registered Tier Six Mindvoicer, are you not Cadet?” He barked.

Sadi saw eyes go wider at this. Very few people knew she was a Tier Six Mindvoicer and it was not something she advertised either. She saw Malic’s eyes darken at this information, but not as much as she thought they would. She forced a smile. “Yes... yes Commander.”

Bren held up a small red key like object with a black lanyard attached to it. “You will need this Cadet.” He spoke tossing the object towards her. Sadi caught it quickly and looked at it. “It will allow you access to the Mindvoice chambers on deck nine.”

Sadi looked at him confused. “I... I thought deck nine was restricted?” She asked as murmurs swept through the crowd and more of them looked at her.

“Apparently not for you Cadet. There are five Tier Six Mindvoicers on this ship outside of the Princes and Princesses, none more powerful than Prince Androcles and we all use the chambers.” Bren replied. He tilted his head slightly and everyone saw him nod as if to some unspoken direction. “You also have a visitor outside the briefing room when we are done here Cadet.”

Sadi looked stunned. “A... a visitor? Commander... I don’t know...” She asked.

“Commander I’m sure Elynth can show Cadet Sadi to her quarters when they have finished saying hello to each other again.” Gorgo spoke from the side. “It has been some time since they last saw each other.”

Sadi's jungle green eyes grew wide when Gorgo said that, the eyes of most of the cadets and regular military personal going wide as well. None wider than Malic's however. Sadi moved quickly towards the entrance to the briefing room and not even noticing that Bren nodded and heads were turning quickly. Sadi walked quickly out of the briefing room as the armored steel cover over the landing bay view window lowered and exposed the interior of the landing bay for all those in the briefing room. It also exposed the enormous scaled muscular bulk of the soft obsidian black dragon standing in the corridor. Sadi didn't see any of the cadets and centurions watching with stunned expressions as Elynth stepped right up to her.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Hello again KertaGai.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Elynth? Sadi asked stepping towards her slowly.

Elynth's soft musical voice echoed in her head. [Mindvoice Shielded] It has been too long, and I wanted to introduce you to the others.

Sadi's wide eyes took in the huge head and long neck, not to mention the thick muscular body and wickedly curved talons. Elynth was resting fully on the deck, her golden eyes focused squarely on Sadi.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Elynth... I don't know if the Commander will allow it?

Elynth snorted and moved closer to the door, her thick neck extending out and her head passing through the hatchway and into the room. Sadi heard the gasps and grunts from many in the room and she couldn't help but smile as those closest to the door scrambled back. Bren didn't bat an eye at this intrusion and turned to the dragon he had worked beside for the last nine years, for they trusted each other completely.

"Elynth?" He asked.

Commander Bren... I will escort Sadi to her quarters if that is acceptable to you. Elynth spoke evenly. We know each other well, and I would like to introduce her to the others.

Bren nodded without hesitation. "Very well Elynth. Deck eight, section four. I have her bunked with two others in cabin nineteen."

Thank you Commander. I will make sure she does not get lost.

The gathered cadets and personnel watched as Elynth withdrew her head from the room and turned her massive bulk easily in the corridor. No one except Gorgo had heard Elynth's end of the conversation since Elynth rarely spoke using anything less than Tier Six abilities. She had taken on Androcles trait of being very private. She snatched up Sadi's bags in her tooth filled maw and they began walking down the corridor together. Bren grinned and shook his head.

"Commander Bren?" The male voice asked.

Bren turned and saw the Spartan Enomotarch Malic standing in front of him once again. "Yes?"

"Sir... I thought we weren't supposed to mingle with the dragons." Malic spoke his voice carrying a note of smugness to it.

Bren nodded. "You aren't supposed to mingle with them Enomotarch Malic." He spoke with humor in his voice. "Unless they consider you a friend, which Elynth apparently does with Cadet Sadi there it seems. And since in the nine years I have served with Elynth and the Prince directly, she has never come to greet visitors... she must know Cadet Sadi from somewhere else."

She was the only elven female commander of a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser in the entire fleet. A fact that Star Captain Sa'sur held with pride and honor. She was nine hundred and six years old and had worked long and hard to get a position like this. She was selected for this command the moment it became known that Prince Androcles would be receiving his own ship. They had worked together before during the Evolli War, and much like Admiral Komirri and the King had a seamless relationship, Sa'sur and Androcles had something much similar. She was tall for a female elf, at nearly six foot, and her dark hair was cut short. It was also streaked with white blond highlights that accented the stunning pale blue of her eyes.

Her husband had been the first to congratulate Sa'sur on her promotion, with a night of fine wine and dinner and then wild passionate sex when they returned home. They saw each other as often as they could, for his duties as Admiral of the Seventeenth Lycavorian Fleet Group kept him quite busy, but they talked to each other at least every other day.

Sa'sur sat behind the desk in the ready room off the bridge and watched as Androcles stood in front of the view port. He had made it very clear to her when the SCIMITAR had been given to him that she was in command. Throughout the course of the last five years he had learned far more than Sa'sur could have imagined, and he had kept his word. This was his ship, but she was in charge. He allowed her to run it as she saw fit, but since they thought so much alike in terms of discipline and work ethic, they rarely ever disagreed on anything. Androcles had a similar sized office connected to her ready room, but they had quickly enlarged the opening and then removed the doors separating the rooms, making it into a very large office with a pseudo divider.

"Are you thinking the High Coven has returned Andro?" Sa'sur asked.

Andro turned from the port holding the mug of his mother's coffee in his hand. Androcles always kept a large supply of her coffee on hand for it was his favorite, and the Senior Chef knew to always keep a pot brewed in the large mess lounge.

"I don't know Sa'sur." He spoke returning to sit in the chair across from her desk. "It's been what... fourteen years since we have seen or heard anything from them?"

"Almost fifteen." Sa'sur corrected. "That little war the Zaleisians and Kavalians started with the High Coven only days after your father rescued your sister didn't turn out so well." She spoke calmly. "What should have been a relatively easy three month conquest considering what they hit the Coven with, turned into a very costly on again off again twenty-five year war."

Andro nodded. "I agree... but the Kavalians had assistance the Coven didn't count on in the Zaleisians and the Kavalian biogenic troops." Andro said. "Assistance neither of us saw coming. It probably is still going on, and we just don't know it."

Sa'sur nodded. "And because of it the Kavalians have their empire back, and it's even larger than before." She leaned across the desk. "You know... these weapons your uncle found. The Evolli designed them to fight you and your dragons. Why buy them from the Evolli? The Coven is more than capable of building something like that. The Kavalians beat them badly... but they didn't press the issue and took only a few hundred or so of their planets in their attacks total. They haven't fought a major engagement in almost ten years. All of the High Coven production planets were far from ever in danger."

Andro nodded. "Which makes me wonder exactly how badly they were beaten? With those very same production facilities they could have rebuilt their fleet in three years, no more than five, yet we haven't seen a High Coven ship since that war began."

"Well... we haven't exactly gone looking either." Sa'sur spoke. "Your father did the right thing by pulling our agents out of Coven space."

"Oh I don't question that." Andro said. "Now however, all we have to rely on is the occasional sensor drone. And those are easy enough to defeat if you truly want to."

Sa'sur nodded. "Perhaps Admiral Riall will have more up to date information when he arrives on Sparta."

"I want you to sit in on that briefing with me Sa'sur." He told her. He held up his hand when he saw her about to protest. "I know it is ostensibly for senior officers, but you are my senior officer, so indulge me ok?"

"You'll owe me a drink afterwards." She said with a grin. "You know I hate associating with anyone higher in rank than me except my mate."

Andro nodded. "That is a deal. One hour before the State Dinner." He said.

Sa'sur sat back in her chair. "Get out of here and go see your grandmother." She spoke. "Let me do my job and get us to Earth and Sparta."

Andro came to his feet and nodded. "As you order Captain." He spoke with a smile and mock bow. "I'm going to go to the gym before I have dinner with grandmother. I'll be there if you need me."

Sa'sur dismissed him with a playful wave of her hand and Androcles turned and exited the ready room.

DRAGON PENS

Sadi didn't move as Tharua and Jeth lowered their heads very close to her and she could hear them sniffing her. Elynth lowered Sadi's bags to the deck, and turned back to see the deck crews who had seen Sadi walking with her still watching. Elynth chuckled and turned back. Tharua lifted her head and looked at Elynth.

This is the one? She asked.

Elynth nodded. She is.

She is small sister. He will break her. Jeth spoke.

Tharua's tail whipped around and tagged Jeth in his huge mid-section. The blow cracked loudly but Jeth stood there as if nothing had happened. Have you no manners boy? She barked. Go back to the spray machine! You still stink!

I was only speaking the truth my dearest Tharua! Jeth declared.

Elynth chuckled and nudged Sadi with her snout. Ignore my brother KertaGai. She spoke. As Tharua has said more than once, the sun has baked his brains.

More and more each day! I don't know how Lisisa puts up with him. Tharua declared glancing at Jeth quickly, her tail still poised to hit him should he step out of line again, but her copper colored eyes looking at him in another fashion that he did not see. She turned back to Sadi. I am Tharua Sadi. We have heard so much about you.

Sadi looked confused and she turned to look at Elynth quickly before looking back to the mahogany colored dragon's copper colored eyes. You have? She asked.

Elynth leaned forward. I have spoken of you often KertaGai. As has Andro. She said quickly.

You have the distinction of being the only one that... Tharua began.

The only one who is not a member of Mjolnir's Hand or the Durcunusaan who has stood beside dragons in battle. Elynth said quickly.

Tharua looked at her. [Mindvoice Shielded] She does not know?

Sadi looked at Tharua and then back to Elynth who also wore a surprised expression on her snout. Elynth... what don't I know? Sadi asked surprising Tharua with the strength of her Mindvoice ability.

Tharua stepped forward, even Jeth now quiet, his eyes open in surprise. Elynth... she heard me even shielded. She spoke. Not even the Durcunusaan can hear us when we shield Elynth. Only our bonded ones.

Elynth looked at her and nodded. Sadi helped us many years ago Tharua. She has grown powerful within Mindvoice.

Is she not the one Androcles always talks about? Tharua asked causing Sadi's eyes to go wide.

What? She gasped out. He... he talks about me?

Elynth turned her head and looked at Sadi amused. You saw that yourself today KertaGai. And yes Tharua... this is Sadi. And she does know.

Sadi grinned as she realized what Elynth was saying. The others must have thought she did not know how Androcles felt about her. She opened her mouth to speak but the male voice interrupted her.

"Cadet Sadi!"

Sadi turned quickly and saw the Durcunusaan Commander Famus as he walked up. Forgive me Elynth... but Captain Sa'sur wanted to speak with all the Cadets before they were shown to their quarters.

I understand Commander. Elynth replied. She looked at Sadi. [Mindvoice Shielded] We will talk again soon KertaGai. We are very busy on the ship but I will make it a point to see you as often as possible.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Androcles?

Elynth's golden eyes twinkled. [Mindvoice Shielded] You will see Andro Sadi... do not worry about that.

Sadi smiled brilliantly feeling the joy Elynth passed to her and something else that was coming from her, but not of her doing. A sensation of warmth and... love.

[Mindvoice Shielded] I look forward to it Elynth. She replied. She bent down and got her bags, quickly moving over to where the Commander waited.

Tharua and Jeth moved up next to Elynth as they watched her walk away. [Mindvoice Shielded] She knows doesn't she sister? Jeth asked now, his voice serious and thoughtful as he saw Elynth nod her head.

[Mindvoice Shielded] She knows. Jeth... go up to the den and tell the others so that she is not surprised or frightened when Andro brings her there.

Jeth nodded his massive head. [Mindvoice Shielded] I'll see to it.

They watched him move quickly to the elevator lift, maneuvering his massive body with graceful ease. He had grown nearly as large as his father, but like Torma he was exceptionally agile and graceful when he wanted to be. Tharua's eyes lingered on him until he was gone from sight and she turned back to Elynth.

[Mindvoice Shielded] She is even more beautiful in person Elynth. Tharua spoke. And much stronger than you thought.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Yes she is.

[Mindvoice Shielded] She must be... she must be very special for Andro to have loved her for so long as he has. Tharua spoke almost wistfully. I have always wondered what that feels like.

Elynth looked at her with golden eyes, a mysterious glint in them. [Mindvoice Shielded] You will know love one day Tharua.

Tharua chuckled softly. [Mindvoice Shielded] Eliani has told me the same thing. Elynth I am not so sure.

[Mindvoice Shielded] And you are beautiful Tharua, many have said so. I have seen the way some males look upon you. You should present yourself for the Harmony of Two hearts this time. Elynth spoke.

Tharua shook her head slowly. [Mindvoice Shielded] There is only one that I want, and fate has not allowed me that. I am older than he and there are far more attractive females for him to choose from. Besides... the Senior Elder Council would never approve such a pairing because of Syrilth's past. I may do as you suggest and present myself just so that I may have my own hatchlings to raise and love so they do not have to experience what I have had to in my life.

Elynth smiled a dragon smile. [Mindvoice Shielded] We shall see.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Do you think she feels the same Elynth?

[Mindvoice Shielded] Oh yes. She has allowed others to share her bed in the past, just like Andro... but none for very long. None have been what she is searching for.

[Mindvoice Shielded] And Androcles is?

Elynth nodded. [Mindvoice Shielded] He is... and she has already realized this. She knew the moment she saw him on the planet below.

[Mindvoice Shielded] What of his dreams?

Elynth turned to look at Tharua. [Mindvoice Shielded] I don't know what they mean. She spoke. Perhaps now that they are together once more he will seek the guidance of the Feravomir in helping him to understand it.

They turned back to watch Sadi walk with the Commander.

Famus was silent for a long moment as they walked, Sadi on his right side. "You should be honored Cadet Sadi." He finally spoke softly.

Sadi looked at him. "Sir?"

"I have served Prince Androcles as a member of his Durcunusaan detachment since he was only nine years old. Longer than even Commander Bren." Famus spoke softly looking at her. "In all that time you are the only person who is not a member of the Royal Family that Elynth has ever allowed to touch her outside of the Prince's presence. You must be someone of great importance to her and to the Prince for her to consent to such an action."

Sadi was silent as they walked and what he had just said sunk in.

CHAPTER TWO

THE WILDS

1.9 LIGHT YEARS FROM LYCAVORIAN BORDER

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT

INQUISITOR

His curved talons clicked on the floor of the padded deck, his sixteen meter long body lean and muscular, though he was a bit leaner for his age of twenty three years old due to his poor diet. He had never been fed the correct proportions of protein rich food throughout his young life, and his abnormally large size for a Firespitter was only due to his ceaseless hunting forays. He should have weighed several hundred pounds more than his five metric tons. The light reflected off his cerise red colored scales, his magenta tinted eyes large and very alert. He moved with precise confidence and grace common to his kind, nimbly dodging the dozen or so crew members within the landing bay, as he made his way to his large pen. Though the BLOOD REVERENCE-Class VHC Dreadnought was larger than its predecessor, it was still a ship designed only for combat, with no comforts added for dragons. He entered the pen slowly and found who he knew he would find.

Her diminutive figure sat lotus style in the soft golden hay he slept in, her shiny raven black hair cascading well past her shoulders. She wore the matte black leather like uniform that conformed to her body like a second skin and the black non-skid combat boots. The portions of her exposed skin were tanned and flawless in their supple lines, belying the fact she was a pureblood vampire. She had obviously made it a point to get more sun than the others. Her lips were full and coated with a shiny gloss the same color as cerise colored scales and he watched as her eyes opened and her head lifted to gaze at him as he approached. Those deep Maya blue orbs were filled with a myriad of emotions, intent and feelings and he could spend hours staring into them and just listening to his bonded sister talk to him.

He moved right up to her and settled his massive body to the deck as she uncoiled hers and rose to her feet with the agility of a DeneBoli Striped Puma. She stood perhaps five feet two inches tall, her breasts high and firm and very prominent on her small frame. The leather like material of her skin tight body armor revealed lean sylphlike legs, a tiny waist and an ass that he had heard many of the ship's crewmembers make sordid comments about. She may have carried the title of Princess, but she was not looked at in the same light as her younger sister because of who her father had been. It had taken all of his willpower and control to keep from ripping those men open with his curved talons, especially the man that was her husband. His comments had been far worse as they always were, for he had actually tasted her many physical charms, and he spoke of her now as some sort of prized possession and piece of property. The man chosen as her husband was vile, cruel and nothing more than a disgusting brute and he could only hope that one day he got what he deserved for treating her as he did.

Under his talons would be ideal.

She always came here after having to endure his foul company and his attentions, for their bond always soothed her angry, burning emotions and the feelings of humiliation she felt after he had taken her, often times against her will. Coming here allowed her to find peace. At least the peace that her life so far allowed her to have.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Carisia?]

She stepped up to him with a gentle smile and placed her small hands on either side of his large snout. [I am fine Anthar.] She spoke softly bringing her forehead to the blunt edge of his snout and touching her warm skin to his cool scales.

[You are not fine Carisia.] He told her. [Your heart is heavy and you only come here with a heavy heart after that foul fool has had his way with you. Why do you endure his touch upon you?]

Her Persian blue eyes shimmered in the light and she smiled at him warmly. [I endure his touch because he is my husband Anthar. It is my place and I must endure if we are to have a chance at succeeding in our goals.]

[A husband you did not pick! Why did your mother force this upon you?] Anthar barked out.

[Anthar, it is the way of things.]

[She only does it out of spite to hurt you Carisia, you know this. Nothing you do will ever please her Carisia... you must know this by now my Bonded Sister?]

[Perhaps.] She said softly with a smile. [Anthar... do I detect a sense of jealousy in your voice.] She asked him.

[Of course you do! I am your Bonded Dragon Brother Carisia. Without you... without you I am nothing.]

[Be careful using those terms here Anthar.] She warned him. [There are eyes and ears everywhere.]

Anthar rolled his magenta colored eyes. [You know as well as I that no one can penetrate the Mindvoice shields we have established.] He spoke confidently and with a glint in his eyes. [Not even your grandmother and she persists in trying even to this day. It is what we are, you and I Carisia, not the twisted pairs that the others act as.]

[That does not mean we should be careless my bonded brother. If she knew...]

[We have trained together for sixteen years of our lives my sister.] Anthar spoke calmly. [Trained for this very mission and purpose. This has always been our goal. I know everything you know and you know everything I know. I even know of your dreams of them.]

Carisia looked at him intently. [What do you mean?]

[Blue eyes. And the one with golden hair. I have seen your dreams of them Carisia.]

Carisia nodded slowly and rubbed his snout under his eyes gently, this loving movement making his wings twitch. [As I have seen yours Anthar. She is quite beautiful for a dragon.]

[Now it is time for us to show what we can do Carisia. It is our time to live. To be free of the oppression. We can only have that...]

[I know Anthar. I know.]

Anthar canted his huge head to the side as he looked at her with keen eyes. [Do you have second thoughts sister?]

Carisia looked at him and shook her head immediately. [Never my brother. I am just frightened Anthar. Frightened of what the future holds for us. Frightened to think if they will even feel the same thing. Frightened of what could happen if they... if they refuse us.]

[Together we will be fine. You will see.]

[We will have my brothers and sister with us as well Anthar. Marux and Seyra are not like you Anthar. They are cruel like Dante and Lucia. Naruth is not evil, but he is not you. And you know how Vollenth views both of us.]

[Vollenth and your mother harbor ill feelings because we trounced them last year.] Anthar spoke. [I am not concerned with him.]

[And what of Deneth and Narice?]

[They are... they are an unknown. We have not seen them very much except in passing. And Princess Narice can shield just as well as we can.]

[That is why we must be mindful of our actions.]

Anthar snorted loudly. [They and their dragons do not compare to you and I, Carisia my sister. We could defeat them with our eyes closed. They are arrogant and over confident. They will be surprised when we arrive I am thinking. Surprised at how easily they are struck down.]

A loud chime sounded in the landing bay. "Princess Carisia please report to the forward conference lounge! Princess Carisia please report to the forward conference lounge!"

Carisia shook her head rolling her beautiful eyes. "Another intelligence briefing my brother." She spoke softly now. "My adopted father loves them it seems. This one should not be as long as the others."

[I will be listening.] Anthar spoke.

Carisia leaned forward and kissed Anthar's cool scales tracing her fingers around his magenta colored eyes as she knew he liked so much. [I will return later and we will discuss what we have seen.]

"There is not a whole lot of intelligence in regards to his children." Robert Moran spoke as he slid the data pads across the polished surface of the large table to Carisia and the three others who sat on either side of her. They were her younger brothers and sister, Dante, Javier and Lucia, born beginning two years after her and one year apart from each other. They were the products of her mother's marriage to her consort and now husband Robert Moran.

Carisia was nearly twenty-six years old, daughter to Yuri and Vavant, the pureblood son of one of her grandfather's most loyal supporters of that time. Her father was long dead now, murdered by her mother's own hand as far as she knew, of that she had no doubts, though the details of his death were confusing. He had been a pig according to her mother, both sexually and politically, and had chosen the wrong side when the Zaleisian and Kavalians had invaded the High Coven some twenty-five years ago. It was his eyes she had inherited, and if everything else she had heard about him was true, not much else. And not all of that information came from her mother or within her circle. Her father's own blood could not stand him and called him names. Carisia had no doubts that everything about him was true.

Carisia had been born eight months after the start of the war, and was sequestered away to live with her grandmother's servants on Nuwaroa, while her mother had fought in the war. Almost two years later Dante had joined Carisia, and then Javier a year after that. Lucia had followed within two years. Carisia hated them all, Dante and Javier because they were typical pureblood vampire males, and Lucia because she thought herself superior to Carisia in every way. It was Dante, Javier and Lucia who garnered almost all of her mother's time and effort in training and schooling, and even though Carisia was the oldest, with the exception of several Immortal Guards, she had been left to her own devices in her early years. It was obvious that Yuri hated her, hated the very thought of her because of who her father was amongst other things. Carisia often wondered why she did not just have her killed. It wasn't until Carisia had become bonded to Anthar that she began to matter.

Carisia didn't know where her mother had acquired the dragon eggs, or how she had forced them to hatch. She was returning from a training class when she was only eight years old and heard the roaring of a very pissed off Anthar. The men left to tend him while he grew were cruel and abusive to him, and Carisia had been awestruck with him. She had disobeyed her mother's instructions to not enter the large shelter, and walked right up to Anthar and touched him. The moment that had happened, their whole world had changed. Anthar had been meant for Yuri herself, a fact which caused Yuri to hate her even more, but once Carisia had bonded with him there was nothing she could do. Dante, Javier and Lucia were also bonded to dragons, but no where near as completely as Carisia and Anthar had now become. Their dragons had also developed personalities similar to their riders and they were arrogant and thought themselves to be unbeatable. Anthar had become her only friend, the only one she trusted, and they shared everything with each other. She endured the harsh treatment from her mother and brothers and sister, if only to spend time with her bonded brother. Carisia did everything her mother asked of her, trying to win her favor in any fashion she could. She had tried being ruthless and immoral, killing a dozen Kavalian prisoners with Anthar in an attempt to win Yuri's love. Nothing seemed to work. While Dante, Javier and Lucia were trained by High Coven Royal Weapon Masters, Carisia was instructed by High Coven Immortals who pushed her even more ruthlessly than her half brothers and sister. It almost seemed as if they were pushing her for some reason she did not understand. They tried to break her mentally as well as physically, but Carisia had endured it all. They had even taught her many things she should not have been instructed in, and this was another reason Carisia questioned their purpose. It was not something she would ever discuss or mention, for while they trained her mercilessly, they at least treated her as a person and they showed her the respect she did not receive anywhere else. Carisia was perhaps the most lethally trained hand combatant on the ship, and while Dante, Javier and Lucia were well trained, they did not come close to her skill. They could not wrap the shadows around themselves as flawlessly as Carisia did, they could not blur with such focus and speed.

It wasn't until three years before that Yuri began to open up to her and spend more time with her. At first Carisia had reveled in the attention, basking in the glow of her mother's praise and efforts to instruct her. It was what she had waited for her entire life and it made her sing. Until she realized her mother was only setting her up to the fact that Carisia had to take the disgusting pureblood sitting three chairs down to her right as a husband. Carisia knew without question what her mother's intent was when she was introduced to the much older pureblood. That slobbered and pawed her firm body whenever he had the chance and opportunity now. He was easily four thousand years older than she was, and there were times when he forced her to do things in their bed that were vile and almost made Carisia sick to her stomach, but he was very strong physically and exceptionally cruel.

Carisia watched as Robert Moran moved one of the pads in front of her mother Yuri and her grandmother Aikiro as well as three other officers that sat at the table, noticing that her mother didn't even pick it up.

"Whether that is by design or not, we don't know." Moran continued. "They have always been a very private family... and it appears that has not changed. What you see in front of you is the normal public relations file downloaded from their Netnews channels, and some minor intercepts we have obtained from outside sources. None of which can be accurately confirmed." Moran turned to the female vampire officer along the wall. "This is Captain Toria Dellion... she is from the Intelligence Division of the Venorik Elghinn and she will be taking part in this mission. Captain... I'll let you pick it up from here."

The female officer jumped to her feet. "Thank you Admiral." She spoke moving to the large wall monitor.

The female officer stood in front of the large monitor. She was only five feet six inches tall and perhaps just over a hundred pounds, but no one doubted her abilities once Moran told them where she was from. No member of the Venorik Elghinn was given a free ride, and if she worked in the Intelligence Division, she was just as lethal as she was beautiful.

And she was beautiful.

Her chestnut red hair cascaded past her shoulders to curl around her large breasts. Her sky blue eyes were gripping in their intensity and contrasted incredibly with her lightly tanned and freckled skin. The daughter of purebloods loyal to Aikiro and the High Coven, Toria was driven by her parents to excel at everything she had ever done. Her parents pushed her into the intelligence posting and then into the Venorik Elghinn as a way to hone her skills, but also as a way to enhance their status with the High Coven hierarchy. Toria had done what they wanted for most of her three hundred and twenty-seven years because they were her parents and she loved them, something Toria was not afraid to admit in her younger years. She had committed herself to the High Coven and was diligent and exacting in her duties. She had killed when needed, ruthlessly in fact, and she had spared life when required to complete her mission. She was experienced and exceptionally intelligent. She was privy to almost every operational mission of the High Coven against the Kavalian Federation. She had been a loyal and proud citizen of the High Coven for all of her life.

At least until she was forced to become the unwillingly plaything for her Empress and Admiral Tesand.

Toria was not shy or unknowledgeable when it came to sex. She had bedded with half a dozen different men in her three hundred years, none of whom she allowed to feed on her blood and none that enticed her enough to want to do that. Tesand had come to her privately about joining him and Aikiro. He had told her the Empress found her very attractive. Toria thought it would be for only one time, and that it would help her career. That had not been the case she soon learned, and while pleasing her Empress sexually was not something she found distasteful, she actually relished the times she had pleased her Empress in that way, however the way they treated her was vile. They used her as a whore for the most part, never giving back to her what she gave to them. She had been forced to sleep with Aikiro's grandsons at her request, and Toria found that to be the most distasteful of everything. Dante and Javier had used her harshly more times than she could remember now, and she was sore for days afterwards. They also were not in the least bit gentle, often times slapping her hard enough to bring tears to her eyes, or yanking on her silky long hair. Toria hated them... and that hatred had only grown in the last year, and had caused her to begin to doubt her faith in the High Coven.

Toria met Aikiro's eyes briefly and took a deep breath. "Since the debacle on Lycavore twenty-five years ago, all intelligence in regards to the United Lycavorian Union has been at a premium. At least for us to obtain. They spent the better part of the next two years purging, and I do mean purging their entire government and all of their commercial industries of even very minor High Coven agents. They were very thorough and their actions deprived us of dozens of assets. With the help of the traitor Vonis they were able to discover and destroy nearly ninety-six percent of our intelligence assets within the Union to include four of our deepest penetration agents after the clone Gorgo. Once they reconfigured their intelligence apparatus, and that dog Armetus took over the entire network, any sort of penetration into their networks has been next to impossible. We do still have some assets however and..."

"That information does not need to be discussed at this time Toria." Moran spoke quickly before Aikiro had the opportunity to open her mouth.

Toria nodded quickly. "Yes sir." She said with a nod. "Over the next twenty-three years they have prospered incredibly, monetarily as well as expansion wise, even while we have fought a very costly war with the Zaleisian/Kavalian Federation Alliance. King Leonidas has pulled every intelligence asset they had in High Coven territory home, something he did almost immediately after our war with the Kavalian scum began. They left in place only those agents in the Wilds, and those agents are so well covered it would be next to impossible to discover their identities." She touched the panel on the wall and the picture changed to nine individual images. "At the Admiral's direction I will dispense with the intelligence profiles we have on Leonidas and his

Queens since all of us are already fully aware of them and what they are capable of, and I will focus this briefing on his oldest children, the Crown Prince most specifically.

“The Lycavorian Union recently fought a war with the Evolli Triad. It lasted for a total of six years and ended with complete and utter victory by the Union three years ago. Apparently the Evolli did not appreciate the elven Queen Dysea pulling some of their trade agreements over minor infractions and they launched a brutal invasion of some smaller Union planets along their border. The war was never really in doubt... the Union forces are just far too well trained and led, however there were several savage and significant battles that give us some insight into his children and their abilities. The oldest seven of his fourteen children fought in this war, the Crown Prince and his half sister Lisisa from the outset, the others joining over the course of the next three years. They were joined by two more in the last year of the war. One as a STRIKER DT pilot and the other as a ground combatant.”

“Fourteen children?” Aikiro spat shaking her head and looking at Yuri. “I was right all along... they do breed like animals!”

This comment brought laughter out among the men and women in the room. All except for Carisia who sat silently watching her grandmother intently. Over the years Carisia had discovered just how ruthless her grandmother could be. Anthar was right, there were many times when she had tried to penetrate the Mindvoice shields that she and Anthar had established almost naturally, but even she could not delve her way through the multitude of defensive layers she and Anthar had established over the years. It was something that made her grandmother, a woman more powerful than anyone Carisia had ever seen within Mindvoice, very angry with at times.

“The STRIKER DT as you all know is their standard dragon transport.” Toria continued. “They have all the speed and armament of the normal STRIKER ATs, which is considerable, but these STRIKER DTs are heavily armored with the Dragon Armor Alloy they now employ, and also able to carry up to two dragons. There have been sightings of similar ships that can carry upwards of six from what I understand. They were supposedly designed in a similar fashion as the smaller DTs, but allow all of the older children of Leonidas to ride on the same ship. The designation of those ships, if they even exist is unknown to us.”

“That is a tactically unsound move.” Javier spoke up. “Having all of his older children riding on the same ship together? It doesn’t sound like something the Lycavorians would do father.”

“It isn’t confirmed information.” Robert spoke meeting his son’s eyes. “A lot of what we are getting comes from the Netnews intercepts and intelligence reports we have procured from other sources, none of which can be confirmed as I said. Until we actually see it... I would not put much faith in it. And you’re right Javier... putting his six or seven oldest dragon riding children in one ship, does not sound like something they would do.” Moran turned. “You may continue Toria.”

“The Crown Prince is named Androcles...” She touched the monitor and the helmeted face of Androcles became a close up. His azure blue eyes and lips were the only really visible features under his crested helmet, and all of them could make out the strange design of the dragon on his helmet. “If their own reports are accurate, and we have no reason to not believe them at this time, he is the exact duplicate to his father in almost every way. He was awarded the Union’s highest award during the Evolli War, the Shield of Valor, for his actions on the Evolli held world of Alba Tau, as well as nineteen other decorations over that six year span if the Netnews profile is accurate.”

Dante leaned forward in his chair as Carisia studied this Androcles’s eyes, her heart beginning to race. They were his eyes. The eyes from her dreams. “It was my understanding that the Lycavorian Union was very stern and quite harsh when it came to awarding combat decorations.” Dante asked smugly. “How is it that this boy was decorated twenty times during a war that only lasted six years?”

Lucia laughed out loud. “This boy is older than you brother.” She spoke casually. “And he is not so bad looking for an animal.”

“Lucia?” Aikiro gasped... but wearing a smile on her face at her granddaughter returning grin.

Lucia laughed and waved her hand. “Grandmother... you don’t honestly believe that I would find this animal attractive do you?”

Aikiro chuckled for a moment as she realized her granddaughter was making a joke. No doubt part of the dry humor she inherited from her father.

“He is a Lycavorian dog!” Dante snapped. “And fighting the Evolli is nothing! Child’s play compared to our sessions with our Royal trainers sister! I could defeat him easily!”

Carisia turned her head ever so slightly to look at him as Lucia laughed again. “Perhaps you could brother... just insure he has a muzzle on when you fight him... in case he decides to bite you instead of fight you.” She spoke. Her words caused Yuri, Aikiro and several others to laugh softly.

“Underestimating your enemy is perhaps the most lethal of practices nephew.” The soft voice spoke now and all eyes went to where Narice sat next to her mother Aikiro on the left.

Narice was almost twenty-seven years old... the last of Aikiro’s children with Veldruk. She had inherited her mother’s exotic and incredibly alluring beauty, as well as the supple and lush figure. Like Yuri... she was intimately skilled and schooled by the finest Masters within the High Coven. She was considered extremely adept at almost everything she did, and methodically driven. Her Mindvoice abilities had reached nearly the level of her mother and sister, and outside of Carisia and Anthar, her bond with her dark green scaled dragon Deneth was the strongest of any within the High Coven. Narice was also the only one to have treated Carisia with anything remotely like friendship or concern, perhaps because they were so close in age. She was very soft spoken, but intelligent enough in most matters that her words were at least listened to by others.

“My idiot father underestimated these Lycavorians on far too many occasions and it ended up costing him his life. Never assume you are superior to your foe Dante, for more often than not you will regret that.” Narice finished her statement.

Aikiro nodded and reached out to squeeze her hand. She had always allowed Yuri and Narice to make their own conclusions about Veldruk, and over the years both of them had come to the conclusion their father was a fool.

“As I reported Prince Dante... the only information we have obtained up until now comes from the Union’s own Netnews reports and the few intercepts we have obtained and they will undoubtedly be bias to some extent.” Toria replied as she continued with her report at a nod from Moran. “As I understand it, this Alba Tau battle accounted for all but nine of the twenty-three dead Mjolnir’s Hand members that were killed in this war. The Evolli Triad devised a unique weapon to combat the dragons and their riders and it was very effective for the first three years of the war until the Union engineers began to find ways to defeat it. We have an operation in the works now that will allow us to obtain some of the weapons to develop tactics to use against them. The information we have been able to obtain from the Evolli agents we control and these Netnews reports indicate the Evolli have since cursed this Prince Androcles and his dragon Elynth in their own native language. However... their language translates to something very different when spoken in other languages.”

“If they allowed those amphibian animals to develop weapons that could beat them, then they obviously have no idea how to ride a dragon!” Dante snapped once more as he leaned back in his chair. “The fools should have been killed if they allowed the Evolli to defeat them in any battle!”

Toria kept the comment on the tip of her tongue to herself and switched the screen to a picture of the Netnews file on Androcles. “As you can see he fought in every major engagement during the six year war according to this time table. Our analysts say he must have also taken part in several missions that are not listed to have been decorated this many times in a six year span. His two sisters and two brothers closest in age to him are also bonded to dragons as you, Prince Javier and Princess Lucia are... and from all accounts they are quite skilled as well. All five of Leonidas’s youngest children have bonded with dragons as of this latest Netnews report but all of them are well shy in terms of years and being able to actually fight. There are two sets of boy/girl twins, one each from his pureblood Queen and the Hadarian witch as well as the youngest child, a son from his second elven Queen.”

“Their ages?” Aikiro asked.

“The boy and girl from the pureblood... Aricia I believe her name is, they are ten. The twins from the Hadarian witch are just past nine years of age, and the youngest from his second elven Queen For’mya is five, Milady Aikiro.” Toria answered.

“And Lisisa fights with them?” Yuri asked almost casually.

Toria nodded. “Yes Princess Yuri.” She replied. “With the two youngest daughters that have joined them in the last three years, Leonidas’s nine oldest children now serve within the fleet or ground forces in some manner. The female Eliani is said to be almost as powerful as her mother in her healing abilities and very skilled in other areas. There have been some unconfirmed reports of a pureblood vampire lover that shares her life and home, but those reports can not be confirmed as I said.”

Aikiro snorted and shook her head.

“His sons...” She looked at the pad. “Only this one Denali is pure Lycavorian. The other two are half elf, but reports say they are no less skilled. The half elf son Arrarn Leonidas...” The picture changed to the extremely handsome face of Arrarn Leonidas, his dark brown hair neatly cut and his four day old mustache and goatee clearly evident. “...is now regarded as the premier pilot in their STRIKER Fleet, ahead of even his own mother. He is not bonded to a dragon, but from all the reports we have, even the children not actually bonded to dragons are very capable riders.

“His oldest daughter with the traitor Isabella is called Carina. She is highly respected from all reports, and there is not much known on the two youngest daughters. The one with the elf Queen Dysea is said to also be a very skilled pilot. Next to nothing is known on the second daughter with Isabella. It is not easy to get detailed information about the Lycavorian Royal family outside of news intercepts as you can tell. They are furiously private as the Supreme Commander stated before, and the men and women who surround them are almost fanatically loyal. While I and my people do not really believe it, the Netnews has reported that there are very few citizens of the Union who do not adore the Leonidas family. They have even shifted their base of power to Earth, unofficially of course.”

“We saw that coming a long time ago.” Yuri spoke looking at her mother. “Sparta and Eden City have always been his base of power. Earth elected the first human president in nearly six hundred years just five years ago, and Leonidas was the first to be there to congratulate him. It is a political move more than anything.”

“Why?” Carisia asked softly.

All heads turned to her. “What?” Yuri asked sternly.

“Why do we consider it a political move?” Carisia asked.

Yuri was about to snap out a response but Aikiro rested her hand on Yuri’s leg under the table squeezing her thigh tightly as she leaned forward. “You don’t think it is a political move Carisia?” Aikiro asked. “Explain why you think it is otherwise.”

Carisia looked at her for a long moment. “We have always known the Lycavorians are a somewhat spiritual people.” She spoke quickly and calmly. “That has been written about them in all our history texts. If the Netnews reports we have been able to intercept and read are truly accurate, when this King Leonidas returned to the Union all those years ago, he also returned much of the spiritual nature of their people which they apparently lost in some way. They have become steeped even more within the history and culture of this city of Sparta since he returned and took his place as King. Much of what they now practice in terms of religious events and such, much of that has expanded outward from this Sparta to encompass the entire Union, most of it centered on the memory and deeds of his father. If we are expected to believe the reports, we must also take notice that the vast majority of the Union has accepted this. He is not seen as just their King, but also the bearer of the name that means so much to their faith. Is this unofficial move anything more than an attempt to return to their roots so to speak? It does not seem to have gone over very badly in their Netnews reports; it is almost as if the people of the Union have embraced this fact. They revere the King’s father and grandfather as the architects of their initial rebellion, and they see him doing the same things. I have reviewed many of the Netnews intercepts we have gotten over the years, and it seems to me that they are simply rediscovering and maintaining what they had once thought lost. The many people of the Union do not seem to particularly mind that they have done this. They in fact appear to relish it.”

The men and women in the room stared at her for a long moment before Yuri leaned forward again. “A very insightful, if drastically incorrect assessment Carisia.” She spoke. “You give them more credit than they deserve. Martin Leonidas is no fool, and he knows exactly what he is doing by using this religious angle. They have turned Earth into the second most heavily fortified planet aside from Apo Prime, and the majority of their training now takes place on Earth, with their so called graduation ceremonies taking place at the monument of that animal’s father!”

“I did not suggest giving them credit where it is not due mother.” Carisia said evenly. “Only that there is more to it than we are seeing. Or allowing ourselves to see. Twenty-five years have passed since our last true contact with them. If information has become so hard to gather on them, perhaps we should not just dismiss what we don’t understand.”

“Well thank you for your interpretation of the intelligence, but I suggest you allow those who are trained in disseminating and analysis to make those assumptions.” Yuri almost snapped.

“Bah! They are nothing more than children and religious fanatics!” Dante spoke loudly now. He looked at his mother and father. “Why are we doing this again father?”

Yuri shook her head. “We need the resources they can provide Dante. Only they have the ability to train you in such a way with your dragons that will allow us to use them against the Kavalians. Your father and I have told you that before. That is what we need. The machine they use to make their bonds with their dragons so powerful.” She spoke softly. “We will offer them intelligence in exchange for what we want and then we will be gone from their space. We also told you that while they may be animals... you need to respect them.”

“Why?” Javier asked quickly from his seat next to his brother.

Moran looked at his sons. “Because unlike you and your brother... they have been bloodied Javier. All of you are highly skilled... but you must understand, these Leonidas children have all seen combat... and if the Netnews reports are accurate, some pretty violent combat. Your ages have not allowed you to be active in our war with the Kavalians until now. The nine oldest children of Leonidas, with the exception of the two daughters have all seen combat. You have to respect your enemy always, or your enemy will turn around and bite you in your collective ass. That is part of the reason we are in this position to begin with.”

Aikiro nodded in approval at Moran’s words, once more vindicating her own reasons for putting this man in charge of their military. “Your father is correct young Javier. You are superior to them in every respect, of that there is little doubt, but with that superiority you must always respect what they could do.”

Yuri leaned forward. “I made the mistake you seem to be falling towards once my son. You are superbly trained, all of you, as your father has said. Use your heads as well as your skills.”

Moran sat back in his chair. “Listen... we know the Kavalian Federation is massing once more to invade our territory. We have a year, maybe eighteen months before they hit us again. This time they have had nearly ten years to make their clones and train them to fight us. The Lycavorians handed them their asses when they invaded that planet twenty years ago. They are the only ones to have defeated them so soundly, and a large part of that is their ability to fully utilize their dragons and their skills. The Kavalian Federation doesn’t have any interest in the Union outside of espionage it seems.”

“Don’t you find that strange though father?” Javier asked.

Moran shook his head. “Not really. Pusintin is a Lycavorian and their overall military commander in most respects, and he has the ear of the Federation Prefect, and he has been raised as a Kavalian for the better part of three thousand years. We don’t have much in the way of information on him, but his hatred of us runs much deeper than it does for the Union... hence why they have decided to come after us first. We have given them everything they can handle up until now, but we need what the Union can give to us if we are to defeat this next assault we see coming.”

“Listen to me all of you.” Yuri spoke. “We will be within Lycavorian space for at least a week, perhaps more if they give us what we will ask for. We will be watched that entire time. They have no love for us, and make no mistake they will jump at the first chance to embarrass us if they are able. You must be very careful in all that you do and say while carrying out your duties.”

“What makes us believe they will even give us what we desire if they hate us so mother?” Lucia asked.

Yuri met her beautiful face. “Because as I said... Leonidas is no fool. If the Kavalian Federation defeats us, they will come for the Union and he knows that. Helping us is the better way to remain out of the conflict without exposing his people, yet assisting us in our battle. It ultimately helps him in the end.”

“And then when we have defeated the Federation we can turn our sights fully back on the Union scum.” Dante barked harshly.

“We’ll cross that bridge when we come to it.” Moran spoke. “Right now let’s concentrate on the task at hand.”

Carisia detected the almost minute inflection in his voice, but she kept her eyes neutral and without emotion.

“That is really all we have at this time.” He spoke. “If there are no questions, you may all return to your duties. We’ll be arriving in Earth’s Sector in just over three days and then things will get interesting.”

Aikiro gazed down the table at where Carisia sat. “You have no further questions do you Carisia?”

“Just one Grandmother.” Carisia looked at Toria. “The name the Evolli gave to this prince and his dragon. What was it when translated?”

“In Evolli I believe it translates to something along the lines of Soul of Vile Blackness Princess Carisia.” Toria answered. “In most other languages... ours included... it translates to Soul Slayer.”

Yuri looked at her intently now. “Anything else Carisia?”

Carisia looked up from the data pad and met Yuri’s eyes. “No. I have no more questions mother.” She replied quickly.

“Why doesn’t that surprise me?” Lucia spoke as she got to her feet.

Carisia heard Dante snicker as he got up too. She looked at where her mother and step father and grandmother sat one last time before getting to her feet and heading out of the secure conference lounge with the others, ignoring the looks of vile lust in Thast’s eyes.

SCIMITAR

SIXTY HOURS FROM EARTH

“I don’t suppose you were going to tell us at some point that you know Prince Androcles and his dragon personally... or that you were a Tier Six Mindvoicer were you Sadi?” Palta spoke as they sat in their shared quarters watching Sadi unpack a few of her clothes. “Did it ever cross your mind to share this with your friends?”

Teeria simply sat in one of the two chairs in the large quarters and watched Sadi. She had known her longer than anyone, for they had shared a blistering night of passion so many years ago and while they both agreed that it was a glorious experience, they also agreed it should not happen anymore. They had remained as close as friends could be over the years, always staying in touch and sharing things with each other that they shared with no one. Now Teeria knew what the red pendant Sadi wore signified. It was something she never took off, even in their sweaty hours together Sadi had never removed it.

Sadi turned from the dresser. “Palta... I haven’t seen him since he was eight months old.” Sadi spoke almost embarrassed by that acknowledgement. “And I don’t advertise I am a Tier Six because I don’t want others to treat me differently. I don’t use my Mindvoice abilities very often.”

“But you are a registered Tier Six.” Palta said. “And the only way to become a registered Tier Six is to study at the First Oracle’s School. You did that?”

Sadi nodded. “For two three-year periods.” She answered immediately.

“The Prince and his dragon obviously know you quite well.” Palta spoke.

“It has something to do with the pendant you are wearing... doesn’t it Sadi?” Teeria asked softly.

Sadi nodded and reached up to touch the pendant under her uniform. “Yes.”

“It’s a Dragon’s Heart pendant isn’t it?” Teeria asked. “And Prince Androcles wears the other half.”

Sadi looked at her and nodded with a small smile. “Yes.”

Palta looked at Teeria. “A Dragon’s Heart pendant?” She asked confused. “What is that Teeria?”

“I read about them once in the brochure they provided on Elear during the tour of the Dragon Island.” Teeria answered. “They are forged from the hearts of dragons that have died but wanted a piece of their bodies to continue on. The process takes years... but when it is complete, it is said a Dragon’s Heart pendant never loses its luster or shine. Especially when it is given in two parts of a whole.”

Palta looked confused. “What?”

“Palta don’t you get it?” Teeria asked. “Our Sadi... she and Prince Androcles... they wear the two parts of a single pendant. They are...”

Palta gasped as realization finally hit her and she came to her feet. “That is why he leaned so close to you on the airfield isn’t it?” She spoke.

Teeria got to her feet with a happy smile. “Palta... next time you really need to study your Lycavorian Culture and The Culture and History of Sparta.” She spoke playfully. “Prince Androcles very clearly and most definitely, in the old fashion Spartan way, stated his intentions to court Sadi and take her as his mate.” Teeria stepped up to her and took Sadi’s hands in hers. “And I am guessing he’s not going to have a very hard time of it is he?”

Sadi chuckled and shook her head. “No.”

“This is the man you have waited for all these years?” Teeria said softly. “The one you have said you were waiting for?”

Sadi nodded. “I didn’t come to fully realize it myself until I was standing in front of him Teeria. His aura was pulsing so powerfully around me Teeria... I thought I was going to...”

Palta shook his head. “His aura? Sadi we were standing right next to you and we felt nothing.” She said.

Teeria grabbed a shirt from Sadi’s hand and threw it at Palta. “He is the King’s son Palta! You know as well as I do that the King has the ability to direct his aura. It would stand to reason that Prince Androcles has this skill as well.” She turned back to Sadi. “Just don’t make it too easy.”

Sadi laughed and kissed her cheek. “That is what Elynth said as well.” She spoke with a chuckle. “I just don’t know how strong I want to be Teeria. I’ve never felt what he made me feel. It made my knees weak and my stomach contract.”

Teeria laughed. “That is your stomach telling you it’s time to feed it!” She said playfully. “I think we should find our way to the dining lounge on this ship and get something to eat.”

Palta nodded quickly. “Then perhaps maybe you could find out if Prince Denali or Prince Resumar is available, preferably Prince Denali.”

“Palta you are such a slut!” Sadi exclaimed with a laugh.

“No I’m not! I’m just a healthy and strong female wolf who wants to find a mate. How often do I have to recite that?” Palta declared. “Preferably one who will curl my toes in my boots from the passion of his aura?”

“Why not Prince Arran?” Teeria asked her with a smile. “I think of all of them he is the most handsome. Sorry Sadi.”

Palta shook her head. “He’s too serious.” Palta spoke.

“Prince Androcles is only a man Palta.” Sadi spoke with a grin at Palta’s answer. “And he is more serious than all of them.”

“Sure he is... that is why you are wet just thinking about him isn’t it?” Palta replied with a knowing grin.

“What about Malic Sadi?” Teeria asked suddenly.

“What about him?” Sadi spoke looking at her. “We are over... I told you that. He knows it as well.”

“He’s not going to be happy you didn’t tell him you were a Tier Six Mindvoicer Sadi.” Teeria said. “And it is going to hurt his ego something fierce when he discovers why it is you didn’t want to settle down with him.”

“He’ll get over it.” Sadi stated evenly.

“C’mon...” Palta exclaimed. “Now that you have mentioned food I’m starving.”

They entered into the corridor on deck eight and could see many crew members and other cadets and personnel in the corridors. The corridors were extra wide and easily high enough to accommodate a fully grown dragon. It seemed like a waste of space to Sadi, but then she could not deny the power and skill being bonded with a dragon brought to a person. They walked in silence, taking the elevator lift to deck six and then following the other cadets who were in front of them.

“This is it.” Teeria spoke as they entered the large mess lounge.

There were dozens of tables set up throughout the massive room, half of them already filled with the SCIMITAR’s normal crew. The deck plating under their feet was covered in rich dark blue carpet and the walls were painted not in the dull drab gray color as in ancient holo images of warships, but in several different forest tones giving off a soothing sensation. There was a line along the far wall, the stars streaking by in the view window that ran along behind the massive lay out of food. Men and women were carrying trays and plates and filing through the line in a very orderly and organized fashion. No one appeared rushed and it was overall a very relaxed atmosphere. They could hear no voices as there was soft elegant music coming from the side of the room and Sadi felt a tug on her arm.

“Sadi?” Teeria whispered softly.

Sadi turned quickly. “What Teeria... now I’m very hungry and I want to get in line.”

“It’s him!”

“What?” Sadi looked at her confused.

“Look!” Teeria motioned to the small stage. “In front of the Captain and Lady Gorgo and Queen For’mya!”

Sadi followed her motion and saw the five men and two women on the stage. Androcles sat in the single chair in front of them, playing the angular stringed instrument, the butt of the instrument tucked under his chin and his hand drawing the long rod across the strings. The sound was amazing... almost entrancing in its soft musical notes when combined with the other instruments.

The group of musicians looked out over the six tables that were close to the stage and Sadi noticed that no one at these tables had begun eating yet, but Captain Sa’sur who they had met earlier and half a dozen Durcunusaan as well as roughly thirty other men and women sat at the tables along with Lady Gorgo, For’mya and the Princesses Eliani and Lisisa as well as Resumar and Denali. She did not see Andro’s other brother and sisters from the airfield and she assumed they were either still working or eating in another mess lounge.

“Un reull joa bashe fas jar.” Androcles spoke softly and exceptionally fluently in the ancient Lycavorian tongue as he lowered the instrument from his chin.

“Un reull joa bashe fas jar.” The men and women at the tables repeated in the same almost reverent tone of voice. Almost immediately after they spoke those words they began to talk and eat their food, smiles coming with soft laughter as the men and women from the stage joined them in their own seats.

Teeria looked at Sadi with wide eyes as she spoke the words softly. “To those no longer with us.” Sadi said in almost the same reverent tone.

“Sadi... you speak the ancient language too?” Plata asked shocked.

Sadi shook her head. The words had just come to her, popping into her mind as he had spoken them. “No.” She answered quickly. “It... I must have heard that from somewhere. Lady Gorgo perhaps.”

“Well... it’s more than what I know.” Palta spoke as Teeria looked at Sadi strangely. “I failed that course in my first year. It’s too hard to learn it.”

Teeria grabbed her arm. “Come on... he is going to the line.”

Sadi let them pull her along suddenly feeling something tingling in her head. The First Oracle had once told her she had unnaturally strong Mindvoice shields and Sadi now kept them up very high almost by second nature. Sadi knew that everyone within the Royal Family could speak the ancient language and all of them were considered to be at the very top Tier Six level or above in Mindvoice abilities so she quickly dismissed her feelings as a combination of Lady Gorgo or For’mya and the Prince or Princesses talking within Mindvoice.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [No KertaGai. It is me saying hello.] Androcles’s deep soothing voice filled her thoughts. [I did not want to intrude on your shields so I knocked so to speak.]

Sadi smiled but didn’t turn to face him as they got into the line for food. [Do you always invade the thoughts of another person when you wish to say hello Androcles Leonidas?]

[Your shields are powerful Sadi, and I would never attempt to invade on your thoughts. I was sensing your surface thoughts; that is all.]

[And what are they?]

[That you are exceedingly hungry.] Andro replied with a laugh. [You should eat more.]

Sadi chuckled out loud and Teeria and Palta looked at her oddly. She looked at them and shook her head quickly. [I eat just fine thank you.]

[My grandmother has taught me to cook many ancient Greek meals.] Andro spoke. [It is the part of Earth where Sparta is. I would be honored if you let me cook one for you.]

[Perhaps I will Prince Androcles.]

Sadi turned and looked at him, saw a smile split his face as he held his tray. [Oh... I think you will.] He spoke. [I’m a very good cook.]

“What was that you were playing?” Teeria’s voice broke into their connection and Andro shook his head quickly before realizing Teeria was standing in front of him now and had spoken out loud.

“I’m sorry... what?” He stammered and Sadi couldn’t help but chuckle. He had been talking with her so intently he had lost his train of thought when Teeria interrupted him.

“That music. It was beautiful.” Teeria spoke.

Andro smiled then. “It is a tribute of sorts. To those we left behind in the Evolli War. We play it before every meal period when we are able.”

“Where did you learn to play that instrument?” Sadi asked now as she came closer to him his lavender and pines scent drifting to her nose and tickling her senses.

“It is an ancient Earth instrument. A violin. I learned it during my time in Sparta.” Andro answered her, his azure orbs gazing at her with desire, passion and love all wrapped into one. It was a look that was making Sadi light headed with giddiness as her own body was calling out for him. Her blood was singing in her veins like she had never known, and it was singing all for Androcles.

Sadi started to speak but the large figure imposed himself between her and Andro and effectively ruined the very pleasant mood she was in. Sadi blinked quickly as the voice filled her head and she realized who was speaking.

“Sadi... we need to talk!” Malic stated.

“Malic... don’t be so rude! I was talking to someone!” Sadi snapped.

Malic turned to look at Andro quickly. “Forgive me sire. I just need to borrow Cadet Sadi for a moment.”

Sadi knew immediately what was happening. Malic was also an Alpha male, just like Androcles, albeit no where near as powerful. He was attempting to stake his claim to her even in front of the Prince. Sadi couldn’t believe the level of his arrogance. “Malic... I was speaking with the Prince! And you are being a rude mida!” Sadi blurted. Her eyes grew wide when the ancient word came easily from her lips.

Malic looked at her confused. “What did you say?”

Andro chuckled softly from behind the large Spartan. “She called you an ass.” He spoke to Malic’s back as he crossed his arms over his broad chest, tucking his tray under one arm.

Malic spun around and looked at Andro. “Milord?”

Andro was just as tall as Malic, his six foot one frame perhaps a half inch different from Malic standing in front of him, and he was equally muscular, but much more defined. He had been facing his father and uncles in sparing matches for the better part of his life. His Uncle Atropos and Uncle Andreus and his adopted Uncle Danny had trained him so thoroughly with his father that when it came time to attend his Agoge; he was more prepared than any teenager could ever be. He could beat most of the instructors when he arrived in Sparta, and they knew this so they made his life a living hell. Androcles had faced down far more imposing figures than Malic’s, and his presence didn’t faze him in the least.

“She called you an ass in the ancient language Enomotarch Malic.” Andro spoke.

Malic turned back to Sadi quickly his eyes wide as she glared at him. He turned back to Andro then. “Forgive me Milord... but Cadet Sadi and I have been seeing each other for three months now and we still have things we need to discuss.”

Sadi’s eyes went wide at this as she saw Andro’s body stiffen ever so slightly and her cheeks turned red in embarrassment. “Malic that is not true! We have nothing to discuss! We...”

“The mess lounge is not the place to discuss matters like this.” Andro spoke quickly seeing Sadi look at him with wide eyes. “I suggest one of the more private lounges. You will find them on all the decks.” He stepped closer to Malic and Sadi while placing his empty tray on the metal line to his left. “You disrespect her with your actions Enomotarch Malic.” Andro stated softly.

“Milord... we...”

Andro glared at him with those azure colored eyes. “If you wish to discuss something with Cadet Sadi... do so in private Malic. Insure you do not disrespect her or any female ever again. And most especially not in my presence.”

Malic bowed his head quickly. “Milord.” He spoke.

Andro glanced quickly at Sadi before turning and heading for the exit to the mess lounge.

Gorgo, For’mya and the others turned to gape in awe at where Malic stood and at what he had just said and done. Eliani and Lisisa shook their heads quickly while Resumar and Denali started to get to their feet. Gorgo’s hand on Resumar and For’mya’s hand on Denali stopped them both from getting up.

“No Resumar. No Denali.” Gorgo spoke softly.

Resumar Leonidas looked at his grandmother with wide eyes. “Grandmother... he is disrespecting Andro by doing what he is doing. Sadi is to be his...”

Gorgo looked at him. "Is he?" She asked. "Sadi has been seeing that arrogant man for three months. I talked with her briefly about it on Apo Prime. In this regard I do believe we will not need to intervene at all. Sadi's desire for your brother wafts from her pores most deeply."

"But Andro is leaving!" Denali protested.

Gorgo shook her head with a smile on her face. "How long has your brother been in love with Sadi Denali?"

"She is all he has ever talked about." Denali spoke in reply instantly. "For as long as I can remember."

"No matter who shared his bed." For'mya stated.

"She is a stunningly beautiful young wolf." Gorgo spoke as she looked at For'mya and saw her dark brown eyes holding a knowing gaze. "Why do you think she has not taken a mate before now?"

"There have been many who have wanted to as well over the years." For'mya said softly. "You only have to ask her father for that information. She has shunned them all... this Malic included."

"What are you saying mother?" Denali asked.

"What your brother and Sadi share was forged many years ago when he was still just a baby Denali." Gorgo spoke. "She knew even then in her subconscious that she would always be Andro's. It is similar to what your father shares with all your mothers. What you will no doubt experience because of who you are. The complete and utter sense of devotion to another." She looked into Denali's eyes and surprisingly saw understanding in them. Gorgo chuckled. "Malic does not yet know what he has interrupted... though I do believe Sadi is about to let him know. In very pointed terms."

Eliani had remained silent for the entire conversation. "It's a shame really." She spoke now. "He is rather hot looking."

"Eliani you Pomai!" Lisisa declared playfully. (Slut)

Eliani crossed her arms over her ample chest. "I'm just saying he is a very handsome wolf who tickles my nose." She spoke. "I'm not speaking to his obvious ego faults."

For'mya chuckled at her children's words. "Quiet... I want to enjoy the show." She spoke.

Sadi watched Andro leave the mess lounge, her anger building as he walked out. Slowly she turned back to gaze at Malic with fire in her jungle green eyes.

Malic reached out and took her arm gently. "We should go somewhere more private." He spoke.

Sadi wrenched her arm free of his grasp and glared at him with death in her eyes. "Malic if you ever lay a hand on me again I will cut your balls off and feed them to you!" Sadi hissed with more venom in her voice than anyone who knew her had ever heard. "I have waited for only one man all of my life Malic... my Soulmate... and you are not him! You will never be him."

"Sadi... you didn't tell me you were a Tier Six Mindvoicer!" Malic snapped well aware that dozens of eyes were on them now.

"I didn't tell you Malic... because your ego could not have handled it!" Sadi barked. She stepped closer to him and jabbed a finger into his chest. "Make no mistake about this Malic... if you have ruined this one opportunity at happiness for me, I will haunt you for the rest of your days."

"Sadi you..."

"No!" Sadi snapped. "I made a mistake allowing you into my life! I have watched you parade me around like a trophy of some sort to your comrades and to my friends! No more! You do not even know how to treat a woman Malic! You are nothing more than an egotistical celie iastin monsene riad aulved!" (Cock driven arrogant rock brain)

Malic's brow furrowed at her use of the ancient language again, and he heard many of those present break out with short gasping laughter that they tried to control, to include those at the royal family's table. Malic was no fool, and she obviously just called him some choice words in the ancient language, and he had no idea what they were. And Sadi looked just as surprised as him at what she had said.

"Look out!" A voice called.

Sadi turned toward the door as men and women alike scampered out of the way. Elynth's huge body filled the doorway, her talons digging into the deck as she came around the corner, ducking her neck and head and barely clearing even the extra tall doorway. Malic's eyes went wide, as did many of the cadets and new personnel that had come here to eat as Elynth moved up directly behind Sadi and settled her massive bulk to the floor. The only one to notice that to his credit Malic did not back up was Eliani.

KertaGai? Is everything alright? I felt a very strong surge from Andro and you and I thought something might be wrong.

Sadi turned her head and looked up at Elynth's huge snout as it was only several inches from her shoulder. "Everything is fine Elynth. I was just going to find Andro." She turned back to look at Malic. "It has been settled... hasn't it Malic?"

Malic glared at her for a moment but one look into Elynth's eyes told him to pursue it would be the biggest mistake of his career, and right now his career meant more to him than anything. He nodded slowly. "Yes."

"Remember my words to you today Malic." Sadi spoke softly. "You don't know me... you have never taken the time to know me. All you have been concerned with is having me in your bed. You certainly don't know what I am capable of Malic, and it is far more than you have seen or witnessed up until now. Pray you never have cause to see that part of me Malic, because as the gods are my witness, it would not be a pretty sight. I truly hope you find what it is you seek... but it is not me."

Go KertaGai! I will remain and make sure others do not follow. Elynth told her.

Sadi didn't question her and turned, breaking into a fast trot heading out of the mess lounge.

"Can you say... down for the count?" Eliani spoke softly with a smile as she looked at Lisisa.

Lisisa's green eyes twinkled and she chuckled and she saw the others with small smiles on their faces. Whatever doubts any of those in the Leonidas family may have had about Sadi were quickly dashed aside with her performance this day.

"She made smoke out of him." Resumar exclaimed with a smile.

Eliani and Lisisa burst out in even louder laughter and Eliani leaned over to kiss her brother on his cheek. "The phrase is she smoked him Res." She spoke to him using the name everyone called him for short.

"Lon kos." Resumar spoke without batting an eye. (That too)

"Medwan coi cuia kos brey ty." Denali spoke with a grin. (Father is going to like her) "She's a little like you Eliani." He said looking at his older sister. "She has nor!" (Balls)

Eliani looked at him, her fern green eyes wide. "Nor!" She almost shouted.

Denali shrugged his broad shoulders. "Hey... as you are so fond of saying... if the shoe fits!"

Eliani's eyes grew wide. "Denali Leonidas... I am going to daes terit nor!" She barked loudly as she stood up to her full five foot five height, heads now turning towards them from all over the mess lounge. (Cook your balls)

Denali laughed. "Teri spet daes!" (You can't cook)

The regular crew members and officers of the SCIMITAR had seen it far too many times to be surprised. It was actually quite amusing to see the sons and daughters of their King carrying on as any other brother or sister in the Union would. It made them feel much closer to their King to know that he and his family were in fact very normal.

Eliani lifted her mug of coffee just as Denali was coming out of his chair. "There is nothing wrong with my cooking! I'll show you cook you riad aulved!!" She shouted.

Denali didn't give his sister a chance and he bolted before she could raise the mug to throw at him. Eliani gave chase immediately even though Denali was taller and had longer legs. Lisisa was glaring at her brother Resumar over the table and he lifted his hands in a sign of peace.

"I didn't do anything!" He protested.

"You probably put him up to that!" Lisisa snapped.

"I did not!" Resumar shouted back but not able to maintain a straight face.

Lisisa came to her feet slowly, her eyes never leaving her brother. "Res... I'm going to make you pay." She growled.

Resumar leaned over quickly and kissed For'mya's cheek. "Mother... I must check on Cemath. He seems to be calling my name! Urgently!" He gasped out before breaking into a run just as Lisisa launched the mug at him, barely missing his head.

Gorgo had sat through it stunned and now she turned to look at Captain Sa'sur. "Does this happen often?" She asked.

The elven captain of the SCIMITAR laughed loudly as she brought her mug of coffee to her lips and looked at Commander Bren. She turned back to Gorgo. "Lady Gorgo... this is our entertainment." She exclaimed. "It never ceases to make the entire crew laugh. They will chase each other around the ship for at least an hour until Andro steps in."

"He will step in though?" Gorgo asked hopefully.

Sa'sur nodded. "It depends on what side." She answered seeing the look on Gorgo's face and beginning to laugh even harder.

Sadi slammed her fists against the elevator lift as the doors closed just as she reached them.

"Anse!" She barked out stabbing at the button to call the lift. She had run down the corridor the way she had seen Andro turn, but he was long gone and no where in sight. She thought she caught a glimpse of his short black hair getting on the lift and began running towards it as the doors were beginning to close. Her heart was racing now... feelings of dread running through her at what had just happened.

"Your use of the ancient language is getting better KertaGai." His deep soothing voice echoed from nearby.

Sadi spun around and saw him leaning up against the bulkhead next to the lift in the dim light. She hadn't even noticed him as she rushed up to the door. "Andro... I... what..." She stepped up to him now.

Sadi was not able to finish her sentence for she was suddenly scooped up quite easily in Andro's arms, and his lips came down to cover hers in that same instant. Sadi's eyes opened wide for a split second, her arms frozen in motion as he lifted her off the deck and crushed her to him, effectively pinning her against the bulkhead. In that split second, the rush of emotions and sensations cascaded through her like a runaway Lifter. All she had ever wanted... all she had ever desired... and it was right here for her now. All she had to do was surrender to the emotions within her.

Sadi groaned loudly and surrendered completely.

Her arms wrapped around his broad shoulders, and her legs slid up seductively along his hips as she met his kiss with every iota of stored up passion and desire she had been holding in all these years. She may not have known it until only a few hours earlier, she may have tried to deny it over the years, but now it was the only thing that mattered to her. He was what she wanted. What she had wanted from the very first moment she had stared into those azure blue eyes twenty-five years ago. She felt Andro's arms pull her even closer, his tongue exploring and tasting, dancing across her teeth and her own tongue even as his aura washed over her and wrapped her within its embrace. A dance of love that had Sadi's blood boiling in her veins as the warmth of his body and aura surged through every part of her. This was a kiss of passion and want unlike anything she had ever experienced. Every nerve in her body was screaming out its pleasure and her brain threatened to go into overload as it made her melt against him.

Andro had her in his arms, partly holding her up and partly pinned against the bulkhead. He had imagined this for more years than he could remember, having her lithe body in his arms and responding to him as she was. Whatever doubts he may have had about what she would feel were smashed aside the moment he saw that she wore the Dragon's Heart pendant around her neck on the tarmac. He was born fully aware of everything around him, Elynth his only means to express that awareness, and the one thing he had desired since he was eight months old was finally going to be his. The lush warmth of her body, the feel of her lips and her sugar plum and spice scent were combining to drive him to heights he had never been. It wasn't until he had to take a breath or pass out that he finally broke their kiss, using his nose and lips to nuzzle her cheek and throat even as he filled his lungs with her scent and air.

Sadi's wolf eyes were open wide once more, jungle green outlined in black, her wolf fangs fully extended even as her hands were moving up to grasp his head as he nuzzled her throat and sent crushing tingles of fire shooting through her body.

"Cari... Carians Andro!" She was finally able to gasp out. (Gods)

Andro was unsure of his own racing heart and he was content to simply nuzzle her warm skin until he could pull away and look at her. His own azure blue orbs were outlined in black as well, a hint of yellowish color mixed into the cornea area, the dual fangs, identical to his father, and unique only to the line of Leonidas were long and extremely sharp as he looked at her. "Pen brol sorgur." (I am sorry) Andro gasped out.

Sadi shook her head quickly and kissed him again hard, nibbling his bottom lip with her wolf fangs gently. "I'm not." She gasped in reply when she pulled away.

"I have... I have waited for so long to do that." Andro breathed gazing into her green eyes.

Sadi smiled dreamily. "Oh... and it was spectacular." She told him. "Please... please tell me you are going to take me to your quarters Andro. Please tell me you are going to make me yours." She spoke hopefully. Yes she wanted him... and she wanted him now in the worst possible way.

Andro rested his forehead to her chest above her breasts and after a long moment he shook his head. "No." He said finally.

Sadi pulled his head from chest and looked at him stunned. "No?" She asked astonished. "What... what is wrong? Do I... do I smell bad? Don't I... don't you want me?"

Andro smiled and kissed her moist lips gently sending more shivers through Sadi's body. "KertaGai... I want you more than I have ever wanted anything in my life." He spoke softly. "My ship however, is not how I wanted our first time together to be."

Sadi couldn't believe she was hearing this and she couldn't help the feeling of unabashed love that swarmed her senses. She brought her hands to his face and stared into his eyes deeply. "You... you are serious?" She said finally.

Andro nodded with a smile. "When I claim you Sadi... it will be upon the satin sheets in my villa in Gytheio, the Port of Sparta. It is a small villa... but it is mine. The moon will be above us, and the breeze from the ocean will be washing through the doors surrounding us. When you scream my name Sadi... I want the entire city to hear your cries."

"You are a cocky ronnus." She spoke with the tone of her voice dripping in love. "What makes you think you can make me scream your name?"

"I have faith in my abilities." He replied with a grin.

"Wow... you are a confident ronnus!" Sadi exclaimed. Sadi wasn't kidding herself she knew. After the kiss they had just shared, Sadi had no doubts she would happily scream his name at the moon until she was hoarse.

Andro chuckled. "Perhaps... but it will be perfect." He said.

"Isn't it... isn't it usually the females who are concerned about that sort of thing?" Sadi asked him with a loving smile as she traced his jaw with a finger.

"Eliani would say I'm getting in touch with my more feminine side." Andro told her with a grin.

Sadi laughed heartily at that, her tone like music to his ears and he leaned over to nuzzle her throat again hearing her gasp in delight. "And... and just how long will I have to wait for this to happen?" Sadi asked.

Andro laughed as his lips brushed the warm silky skin of her neck. "Not as long as I had originally planned I can tell you that. I intend to worship you for at least three straight days when I claim you KertaGai."

Sadi ran her fingers through his soft black hair. It was cut very short but the style fit him perfectly, and it made her fingers want to do nothing but stroke it all night. "Only three?" She asked playfully. "Androcles Leonidas... I am disappointed. That doesn't sound very Spartan like."

Andro laughed softly. "We will have the entire rest of our lives after that KertaGai." He spoke. "Do not be disappointed, three days is only the beginning."

Sadi stared at him for a long moment, her fingers lowering to trace his face, his lips, his mustache and goatee and she watched his eyes close in bliss. "Andro... how is... how is this even possible?" She asked softly.

His azure eyes opened and he looked at her. "Does it matter?" He asked.

"But to feel for you what I feel?" Sadi asked softly. "To have felt it for so long. Andro... there was never anything serious between Malic and I. We..."

Andro shook his head. "The past is just that KertaGai. It has led us both to this point in our lives. From here we go forward. My father... my father has always told us to never fear the unknown. To embrace it and relish in the new experiences and sensations it can bring us. That is exactly what I intend to do. You know that your Mindvoice abilities have allowed you to see things differently than most. To experience events from a very different perspective. The moment Elynth touched you Sadi, you became different. It is not something I asked her to do, though I am very happy she did. And I intend to make up for lost time very soon."

Sadi smiled and her heart sang at his words. “What exactly do you intend to do now Prince Leonidas?” She asked. “You have me in a rather compromising position at the moment, and I’m not in a mood to protest anything you might suggest.”

Andro smiled. “What I intend is to take you to one of the smaller dining lounges and watch you eat. Arrarn, Normya and Zarah usually eat near the flight deck. They are...” He smiled. “They are possessive of their aircraft and they are the more sedate of my siblings in many ways. Your stomach is still growling... and soon your hungry will override everything else. Join me with them and we can begin planning our future together.”

“I... I hunger for you. Not food.” She gasped.

“No more than I hunger for you Sadi.” He said. “We have waited this long... another few days will only make the anticipation that much more inviting and rewarding.”

Sadi kissed him once more, holding his face in her hands before finally running her moist tongue across his lips. “Then feed me Prince Leonidas.” She said. “Before I decide to disregard all of these carefully laid out plans of yours and throw myself upon you in a sexual frenzy that you will be unable to refuse!”

Andro laughed and lowered her to the deck, his hands never leaving her body. He took her hand in his gently. “Follow me.”

EARTH
CITY OF SPARTA
CO-CAPITAL OF EARTH
POPULATION THREE MILLION SIX HUNDRED
THE KING’S VILLA

As with the Island Palace on Apo Prime, the King’s home and more commonly referred to as the Sparta Estate, had been enlarged dramatically over the years. It now stood at nearly fifty-thousand square feet of living space, all of it a single level. The main portion of the estate remained essentially unchanged with the main living area of the home increased in size three times over the last twenty years. All of the home’s nineteen bedrooms were in a circle around the main living area, separated by a ten meter wide flowered walkway that wrapped around the main living area. Inside the main home was the Great Room, where half a dozen large couches and chairs were arranged around the massive two meter across fireplace. The kitchen was still connected to the Great Room, and it too had been enlarged to accommodate the entire Leonidas clan at the single massive table. The main Dining Room where guests and dignitaries came for dinner was an enormous room nearly ten thousand square feet by itself. The massive polished pine table could seat thirty with ease.

There were several large rooms connected to the main living area, to include a complete communications and security station. Within this room... members of the Durcunusaan could monitor the entire four hundred acre Estate with ease. There were several offices, mainly for the King and his Queens, each of them with important duties within the Union that they tended to without fail. While the home was the largest within Sparta’s realm, which once more included Gytheio, it was not furnished with outrageously expensive or exorbitant pieces of furniture. Many of the couches and chairs and tables were hundreds of years old and lovingly maintained by three dozen men and women who worked on the Estate’s grounds daily. All of these men and women had their own large homes actually on the Estate’s grounds. There was a two story barracks style building nestled among hundred year old pines that was home to nearly two hundred Durcunusaan soldiers who were responsible for the Estate’s security even when the Leonidas family was not in residence, to include the four acre dragon mountain that had been built almost exactly to the dimensions of the facility on the Island Palace.

While they spent considerable time on Apo Prime, many knew that the King and his entire family preferred the slower pace and country setting of the Sparta Estate to the Island palace. The Durcunusaan maintained an almost severe set of guidelines and rules concerning the security of the Sparta Estate, and to this day the Durcunusaan could proudly say no one had ever been able to breach the defenses of the Estate. Armetus himself had sent his finest people against the Estate’s security blanket and they had always been caught before breaching the first line. No one but the Durcunusaan knew what kind of security measures were in place on the estate, and no one had ever tried to find out. Though no one had ever breached the Estate's defenses, the Durcunusaan never allowed their vigilance to drop or lower. The Sparta Estate was perhaps the most secure facility on Earth outside of the Eden City Command Center, and outside of the Royal family there were very few men and women who were allowed unfettered access to the Estate.

Martin Leonidas opened his dark brown eyes slowly as the slight breeze and the rising morning sun fell across the expanse of the immense bed warming his exposed skin. The aroma of Aricia's special blend of coffee filtered to his nose and he smiled. He felt the two separate weights on his six foot two, two hundred and forty pound body and thought nothing of them. He knew exactly what they were.

Isabella's dark brown almost black silk like hair splayed out across his broad chiseled chest, mingling with Dysea's platinum locks that washed across his abdomen. Isabella was nestled against his left side, her beautiful porcelain like face tucked neatly into the crook of his shoulder, her lips slightly parted as she slept soundly. Dysea's head rested on his powerfully sculpted abdomen, her large firm breasts pressed tightly against his hip. Bella's equally large breasts were stabbing into his ribcage, the coolness of her pierced and studded nipples pressed against his warm skin. Dysea's wildflower scent mixed with Bella's sweet lilac like scent in the morning air, and Martin Leonidas inhaled deeply. Their bed was enormous, meant to fit all six of them with ease, which it did quite well. It was a sight to see really, the tangle of arms and legs in the morning when all of them slept together in the bed. It did not matter where anyone was positioned; they were in physical contact with each other all of the time when they slept. It brought a sensation of love and warmth to the large bed that made all of them happy. Unlike the rumors that floated around the Union, they did not always partake of the physical pleasures of each other when they were in bed together. It was well known that the Queens enjoyed each other as well as Martin, but there were times when they were all simply content to have their bodies touching in some intimate manner as they drifted off to sleep. Last night was one of those nights, as the three of them had worked long into the evening with Deia, Panos and Tarifa on half a dozen new proposals for trade agreements and new petitions by member worlds and even two new requests to enter the Union.

All of them would be together soon enough Martin thought to himself as he allowed the warmth of the sun to caress his exposed body. Aricia and Anja were returning from Hadaria the next day, and For'mya would be arriving with his mother and children the day after that. The sounds of children and laughter would once more fill the Sparta Estate for the next six months at least, and then Martin planned to get down to the business of having his Queens all in the same bed once more.

As far as Martin Leonidas was concerned... this was his home... and the Island Palace on Apo Prime was more their vacation home than anything now. All of his children had been born here in Sparta, and all of his older ones spent more time here than they did on Apo Prime.

Martin turned his head slowly and kissed Bella's forehead softly as he slowly extracted himself from their bodies. As he stood up completely at the foot of the bed he saw Dysea fold herself into Bella's arms to make up for Martin's body heat which was now gone. Her beautiful elven face rested atop Bella's breasts, and they both continued to breathe easily as they slept, Bella's arms naturally wrapping around her fellow Queen and long time lover without an instant of hesitation. It wasn't unusual for one or more of them to leave the bed while the others slept, they had grown accustomed to it as they raised fourteen children within the walls of their home here. They never wore clothes when they slept, even in the winter months. All of them were wolf now with the exception of Isabella, and during the winter months when there was a slight chill in the air, Bella was the one who slept next to Martin while the others spooned around them under the blankets. Her vampire blood did not allow her to stay as warm during the cold months of winter and she was always heavily dressed. It was a curse that she was entirely happy was not passed down to her two daughters, as they were half wolf and their wolf genes seemed to be the more dominant of the two.

Martin rubbed his large hand through his long thick black hair and scratched his beard as he turned and made his way out of their massive bedroom. Dysea and Bella would wake of their own accord he knew, and he was always the early riser of the group. As he stepped fully into the morning sunlight, the scent of wild pines and flowers filled him and he breathed deeply. The mountains that surrounded Sparta on three sides were filled with towering pine trees hundreds of years old, and their smell filled the valley in the early morning. Their bedroom, though enlarged like all the others over the years, was the only bedroom actually connected to the main estate. He had used the patio entrance that opened into the circular path between the large rows of small apartments where their children stayed when they were here. Like those on Apo Prime, the apartments were complete units that allowed his children their own privacy, but also made it possible for them to eat in the same huge kitchen room as they always did. It was not something that Martin or his Queens required; it was something that his children had done all on their own over the years.

Martin turned and made his way on bare feet towards the patio entrance into the main gathering room of the villa. The kitchen was connected to that room and he could already detect the freshly brewed smell of Aricia's special blend of coffees in the air. He smiled to himself, knowing that Helen must already be awake and here in the villa. Even with her duties as the First Oracle and Director of the School of the Mages on Apo Prime, Helen made it a point to return to Sparta as often as she could. She had her own small, well guarded apartment on the Estate's immense grounds, and was more often than not the one to be found in the kitchen first, preparing some sort of fantastic dish of food. It was a passion for her... to cook for others... and even though she was loved and regarded as the First Oracle of their people, Helen made certain she continued to cook for others.

And that was usually Martin, his Queens and their family.

Martin entered the main gathering room and saw the fire in the marble fireplace burning down from the night before. The Durcunusaan had free reign to go anywhere and use anything they wished on the Estate. It was something that Martin insisted upon of those who so willingly would put their lives on hold to protect him and his family. He insisted that they partake of the entertainment and other facilities on the estate and those that had the late shift usually made a roaring fire and conducted their written reports on the couches and chairs within the gathering room. Martin turned right upon entering and went immediately into the huge kitchen, the smell of Aricia's coffee overwhelming. He smiled when he saw Helen in her customary sleeping robe bending over one of the large ovens and putting what appeared to be her biscuits into the oven to cook.

"Will you never stop trying to sneak up on me Martin?" Helen's voice echoed as she stood up closing the oven.

"I wasn't trying to sneak up on you." Martin defended himself as he moved to the ever present coffee dispenser.

Helen turned to face him as he poured himself a mug of coffee. "I understand you have agreed to give the graduation speech at the ceremony in four days." She spoke.

Martin nodded. "I haven't given one in almost fifteen years and I figured it would be time to do it again." He answered as he sipped the coffee and let it flow down his throat and into his stomach. "You know how I hate trying to make speeches for events like that. I don't like people hanging on my every word."

Helen smiled and stepped up to him, reaching up to stroke his face. No matter how many times she looked at him, Helen could not get over the uncanny resemblance he had to his father. "They don't hang on your every word Martin Leonidas. They listen to you because when you speak it is with passion and conviction. Just like your father did. They know when you speak; it comes from your heart. You still haven't figured it out have you?"

Martin met her gaze. "Figured what out? That far too many people seem to look at me like I'm some sort of god? That sometimes I rely too much on the past to direct our future?"

Helen smiled. "Martin... you have brought back to our people the spiritual connection we had to our past. When combined with your intense devotion to Spartan law and culture it may seem to some to be a political or religious movement, but trust me when I tell you no one views you that way. Oftentimes the past is the perfect way to direct the future, and you have the ability to walk that line and not let it become blurred."

"How can you be so sure?" Martin asked.

"You do not let them see you that way." Helen answered as she turned to pour herself her own mug of coffee. "You are the most approachable King in history Martin Leonidas. Anyone's history. People see you... on the streets of Apo Prime... on the streets of Sparta always... they see how you treat your Queens... the jokes you make of yourself. They see how your own children are the most unassuming offspring of royalty that there could ever be. You have a grip on normalcy that you refuse to let go of, and this has endeared the people of the Union to you in a way nothing ever could. Your first thought is always for others, and what is in the best interests for the Union... for everyone in the Union. They see the way you live..." Helen waved her hand around as if encompassing the entire villa. "Your insurances on maintaining this old furniture and this villa even though there are some pieces that are almost as old as you."

"Hey... I like my furniture! And this villa!" Martin protested.

Helen laughed. "Martin... it may seem to you as if they look upon you in some fanatic or religious way... when in reality they look upon you with the eyes and hearts of trust and respect for what you have done. They would follow you to Vada Lethadori Martin... without hesitation because they know you would be there with them, and do everything within your power to bring them all home. That is why they follow you. And they see that your children are no different than you." (The Gates of Hades)

"Helen..." He started to say.

Helen shook her head quickly. "No... you just continue to do what you have done all these years. Be yourself. You impress people by just doing that and you don't even know it." She patted his arm. "I will talk with Dysea and Bella when they wake up and decide what we will have for dinner when everyone is here. They already have spoken with the others and we'll work something out. You and your sons are easy, you will eat anything. We have to plan for the women in your family however."

They both turned when the Durcunusaan Colonel appeared in the doorway. "Milord?"

Martin turned and looked at him. "Good morning Fache." He spoke.

Colonel Fache had been in command of the Sparta Estate security for the last fourteen years, and for him it was the best duty he could have ever hoped to obtain. His mate simply adored living in Sparta.

"Sire... I have General/Colonel Simpson transmitting from SPARTAN'S SOUL." Fache spoke. "He's requesting a secure connection, Security Level Nine."

Martin's eyes perked up and he pushed off from the counter he was leaning against.

"Level Nine?" He asked.

Fache nodded. "I have routed the connection to your office sire."

Martin nodded and leaned over to kiss Helen's cheek. "I'll see you later." He spoke.

Helen nodded. "Go play King." She said with a smile.

Martin headed out of the kitchen area as Fache handed him the two data scrolls as they walked. "Did he say what it was about?"

Fache shook his head quickly. "No Milord."

Martin nodded. "Why don't you sit in Fache... this could be important." He spoke.

"On our way to Earth now Marty." Dan's voice was clear and focused from his quarters on SPARTAN'S SOUL. "I wanted to interrogate this scum we took alive before contacting you."

"Immortals?" Martin asked from the comfortable high backed chair in his office. "This is a stupid question Danny... but are you sure?"

Dan nodded. "No doubt." He answered. "The Evolli said they were contacted by a High Coven operative to secure the purchase of the T19s. The Immortals were supposed to make the transfer. This is the same bunch we have been getting reports on from the border colonies boss man. Most of them were holdovers from the war. They didn't take to kindly to surrender it seems. He says they have been surviving on the go in a hodgepodge of ships. These are the same boys that hit the mining colonies on Ouvr, Aleik and Pulolm. He did give us a name and a supplier in The Wilds on Talbor Seven."

"Where are the rest of them?" Martin asked.

Danny shook his head quickly. "We tried to get that out of him... but it appears he and his buddies were dropped off to conduct the transfer and then they would be picked up. He doesn't know where their larger force is, or where they would go when they realize their little party was crashed."

"What's his condition now?" Martin asked.

Danny's face took on a sheepish look and Martin saw Anuk step into the transmission now. His oversized shirt covered her body all the way down to her knees and she held a mug of tea in her hand.

"His metabolism did not agree with the vacuum of space Martin... I'm sorry." Anuk spoke.

Martin looked at her in the transmission. "I take it he acted in a rather vile way then?"

Anuk smiled sweetly and Martin couldn't help but grin. When it came to rather nasty tempers, after twenty-five years of being with Danny, Anuk had almost reached Anja's level of nastiness when pissed off. "You could say that." She answered.

"You got in touch with Andro before he left Apo Prime right?" Martin asked.

Danny nodded with a grin. “He took the news in stride... just like you, though I wasn’t able to tell him much about our now deceased friend. He said he would contact Riall and make sure he brought all the latest intelligence reports when he departed Apo Prime later this evening.”

“Jesus Dan... we haven’t heard anything from the High Coven in fifteen years.” Martin said. “Why suddenly would they risk coming across our borders and conduct black market arms deals in our territory?”

“I thought they were still officially at war with the Kavalian Federation.” Dan said. “Seems kind of silly to do something like this when you already got your hands full with those loose cannons.”

Martin nodded. “Well... they are apparently in another one of their lulls... but we know what happened after the last two. The High Coven got hit and hit hard. Besides... I wouldn’t trust the Kavalian Federation any further than I could throw them.”

“Yeah... I agree with that. Do you think Pleistarchus would try and pull something?” Danny spoke.

“That would get them nothing but pain. He knows that.” Martin answered.

“Well... you do have a knack for pissing people off brother.” Danny spoke.

“Aricia says it’s my charming personality.” Martin spoke.

“Or lack thereof.” Danny replied.

“I’ll have Admiral Joarl start contacting all our border colonies near Ceku Tertius to make sure they are still secure.” Martin spoke. “If they were in the sector... any of them could be at risk with these idiots running around. And once they discover their little plan went awry... I have a feeling they’ll be out for blood. We’ve been after this group for too long to let them slip our grasp now.”

“Good idea.” Danny spoke. “We’ll maintain our current speed and course. If we need to divert somewhere just contact us. Otherwise... I’ll see you in two days.”

“Watch your ass brother.” Martin spoke.

Danny nodded. “And you.”

Martin sat back in his chair as the transmission ended and he sipped his still hot coffee. He looked at where Fache sat in the chair. “Colonel?”

“Immortals sire?” Fache spoke. “After so long a period?”

Martin nodded. “I’m thinking the same thing you are Fache. Raise the status of everyone across the board until we find out what is going on.” Martin said. “Do it quietly so word doesn’t get out before we are ready, but make damn sure all security detachments know. Do it yourself if you would.”

Fache came to his feet. “I will start right now sire.”

Martin watched him leave the office before he got up and moved to the large colonial style window looking out over the city of Sparta in the distance. He lifted his mug and sipped his coffee.

“Back in the game huh Yuri?” He spoke softly. “What do you have in mind this time woman?”

LEONIDAS IIA*-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER SPIRIT OF HADARIA ENROUTE BACK TO EARTH

The SPIRIT OF HADARIA was perhaps the second most well known LEONIDAS IIA ship within the United Lycavorian Union Fleet. Over the course of the last twenty-five years, no matter where disaster struck, no matter what disaster befell the species of the Union, the SPIRIT was usually the first or second ship to arrive on the scene. There was no mistaking the five foot three inch tall, Persian red haired Queen. Once you were able to meet her... it was next to impossible to forget her. With the senior Hadarian Divine One Eurin and her twin sister Sivana at her side they had practically transformed the entire medical structure of the Lycavorian Union. It was now more streamlined than ever before, with Hadarian Healers by the thousands now mixed in with the troops they would fight beside. Living with them, eating with them, and in some instances becoming husband and wife. The Hadarians had traditionally been a peaceful but secular people, and King Resumar had begun bringing them out of their shell before he had died. The older Healers had allowed their people to fall back into their old ways, but the return of the grandson of Resumar and the daughter of their own King Yelu changed all that.

It was not uncommon now to see Hadarian Healers traveling with the regular fleet ships, conducting training with the Spartans they would stand beside in battle. Most of the younger generation of Hadarians relished this and you would be hard pressed to find any Hadarian under the age of two thousand years old that did not adore their Queen and all she had done. Many of the older Healers and scholars tried to keep the changes from happening, but when Anja set her mind to something, it usually came to be. Eurin may have been one of the dozen or so oldest of their people, but she was also the most forward thinking of them, and she simply adored Anja and Sivana both. In order to appease many of the older Healers, Sivana had chosen to remain on Hadaria with Belen and their three children three months out of every year. It was just another sticking point with the scholars and older members of the Hadarian Parliament, that neither their ruling Queen nor ruling Princess would allow themselves to be corralled into remaining on Hadaria for longer than they wanted.

It also rubbed some of them the wrong way that both the surviving members of their own royal family were now mated to Lycavorians. Many of those men and women had learned over the years they could only push so far before the twin sisters exploded. Anja's fiery temper was well known throughout the Union, and while Sivana had much more patience for things, when she exploded it was wise to not be in the same room with her. They were alike in many ways as sisters, and as Sivana had fallen into her role as Princess with relish and as her life as a slave and smuggler drifted into the past, she found herself taking on more of the traits of her beloved twin. They were fiercely devoted to their mates and their children and each other and everything else came after they did. Once Sivana had been trained and schooled and finally conducted her Ascension Ceremony, it was discovered she was nearly as powerful as her sister in being able to command the healing properties of the nebula that surrounded and, every six months, saturated their homeworld.

Anja Leonidas was considered the premier medical mind in the Union, and almost nothing could escape her realm. She was always studying for new ways to improve medical treatment and develop new medicines that benefited their people. It was Anja that developed the wonder drug that actually made it easier for those with vampire mates to have children. It was something that Isabella had volunteered for first, and when she became pregnant within six months it became a very hot commodity. There were more interspecies marriages now among vampires and Lycavorians, not to mention so many other species within the Union. Working with Eurin and Sivana and two dozen of the finest minds in the medical fields, they had abolished many of the troublesome childhood diseases that affected the Algolian people and the Folcani race, as well as developing treatments for nearly every known disease that still resided within the Union. She had accomplished so much and she never stopped working for more.

It was also well known that while Anja was a Healer first, she was also one of the most lethal combatants within the Union. Her fighting skills were almost as famous as that of the King and Aricia, and there had been many times during the Evolli Triad War that Anja had led battles from the front with Miath her dragon at her side, and then immediately after winning, she would fall into her role as doctor.

Anja stood in front of the fake fireplace that adorned her personal quarters on the SPIRIT as she sipped the mug of coffee. The white button down shirt, one of Martin's older dress uniform shirts, did absolutely nothing to hide her large but exceptionally firm breasts or her small waist. Her skin was deeply tanned, and made her Persian red hair stand out even more. Her jade green eyes were always bright and alert. She considered herself muscular, but not in the manner of Dysea and Aricia who were naturally ripped and defined in a way she would never be no matter how much she worked at it. Her body didn't seem to matter to Martin, and he had always told her he adored how she was just the perfect combination of muscles and lush definition.

"Do you miss her Anja?" The soft voice spoke from behind her.

Anja turned and saw Aricia enter the main living room dressed in a very similar shirt, also one of Martin's older uniform shirts. It seemed they wore them more than he did for he hated any kind of dress uniform.

Anja watched Aricia pad into the room with nothing but love and desire in her jade colored eyes.

Aricia Leonidas was the personification of corporeal beauty as far as Anja Leonidas was concerned. Her five foot seven frame was packed with muscle, but defined in such a way that could make you wet just looking at her. Her breasts were full and firm, with a narrow rippled abdomen and waist and long lean legs that she could wrap around you in a heartbeat. Her exceptionally long raven black hair fell to the top of her firm ass cheeks, her skin deeply tanned like Anja's, her high cheekbones and full lips elegant and delicious. What set her apart were her azure blue eyes. They almost seemed to glow in the right light and they were the reason that Anja knew every male wolf in the Union would give their lives for one night with her. Yet like Anja and the others, only one man could stir Aricia in that way and that was her Soulmate and husband.

They were Martin's Queens and they shared each other willingly and with a great deal of love whenever they were all together, but Aricia and For'mya had been there for her ever since Seanna's death without question or hesitation and that had developed a very powerful bond between the three women. A bond that was much stronger than any they had known before. It was a bond that had translated into them spending as much time together as they could. She and Aricia had shared a unique relationship when they had first met all those years ago, and since Seanna's death that relationship had blossomed once more, only now it included the seductive elf For'mya as well. A fact that Anja relished almost as much as Aricia.

Aricia was the youngest of Martin's Queens, but since the events of Enurrua so many years ago and the monumental growth in her Mindvoice powers, Aricia was now the one all of them turned to. She was the strongest of Martin's Queens in not only physical abilities, but Mindvoice abilities, and after what she had seen and endured, Aricia brought an uncomplicated mentality to many things that seemed complicated but were in actuality very easy to fix.

Anja shook her head slowly. "Not as much as you might think Little Wolf." She replied moving to where Aricia had settled onto the comfortable couch. Anja took a place next to her, their thighs touching and smiled. Anja was the only one who still referred to Aricia using the nickname they had first given her, yet it was used with love and affection and held no other meaning than that. "We... we were beginning to draw apart when she died."

Aricia looked at her surprised. "Anja... we... we didn't know that." She gasped.

Anja shook her head. "I wasn't going to tell anyone. Martin knew... he could sense it and we talked about it. I couldn't keep it from him... you know as well as I that he has an uncanny knack for knowing when one of us is upset about something." She spoke quickly.

Aricia nodded. "Yes he does."

"Seanna had found a male she was interested in on our mission to Lycavore all those years ago. She tried to hide it for a long time, but I knew. She didn't tell me at first... but she let him cado forn her and I caught his scent one night. She thought I would be angry... but I wasn't."

Aricia's head canted to the side. "I don't understand? Why were you drawing away then Anja?"

Anja met her gaze. "She told this man what we shared after they had been together quite a few years. Apparently... and I don't know this for sure... a few months after she told him he began to pressure her to get me to... she wanted to share me with her friend. He was... he was a Lycavorian from the Hadarian Security detachment." Anja spoke looking at her. "She wanted me to join them in their bed as she was willing to join us in ours."

"But... Seanna never joined us in our bed Anja." Aricia spoke. "No one certainly ever pressured her. Martin... Martin even said he did not want another to join us after Resumar was born. He has always been more than content with the five of us. This... this is all amazing to me. She... you and she were together for eight years after Eliani was born and this is not something I... any of us expected."

Anja nodded slowly. "I know." She spoke. "I think because she was willing to do it if I asked her that I should be willing as well. I tried to explain to her that was something I would never do... even if Martin allowed it. Which he never would."

"Don't... don't be angry with me Anja... but... did you want to?" Aricia asked softly.

Anja met her eyes and shook her head immediately with a smile. "No Little Wolf. Martin Leonidas is the only man I will ever share a bed with. He is all I have ever needed and all I have ever wanted. What he makes me feel no man could come close to. And not just physically either."

"I was curious that is all." Aricia spoke. "Of all of us... you were apart from him the longest... before you and he discovered who you truly were. It is always something I have been curious about. I have never known another man... that vile pig Joric doesn't count... and to be honest... I have never desired another man."

Anja scooted closer and stretched her legs out, turning and lowering her head to Aricia's thighs as Aricia's warm hand settled to her abdomen. "Well it made her angry. I believe this male pressured her to keep asking me about it. Imagine what he could brag about if he was able to get both of us in his bed. He got to fuck his Queen. The fool actually thought he could get away with it I suppose. Martin would have skinned him alive and then fed him to Altairan albino leopards.”

Aricia chuckled. “Yes... he is rather possessive of us isn't he? Do you know who this man was?” Aricia asked.

Anja nodded. “I saw him when we gathered for her Final Ascension. He didn't seem particularly happy to see me. We hadn't talked for three months before Seanna was killed. I was able to get to her before she died... I told her I was sorry... and she apologized for being so foolish.”

Aricia brought her hand up and caressed her cheek. “Anja you don't blame yourself do you?”

Anja shook her head quickly. “No. She wanted something I was not prepared to give her. Something I would never be prepared to give her and she knew that. I think after so long together she thought she deserved it, which only tells me she didn't truly understand what Martin and you and the others mean to me.” Anja smiled warmly. “I will always remember the good times we had... but in the end she wanted more than she was entitled to. I just don't like going to see her parents every year. I believe this friend may have turned them against me in some way. They are always so cold now, almost as if they blame me for her death.”

“And you think this friend has some part in how they treat you now?” Aricia asked.

Anja nodded. “He still sees them quite often. I guess it was much more serious than Seanna led me to believe.”

“Then stop going to see them Anja.” Aricia spoke. “After hearing what you have told me... I believe you are just doing it out of some misplaced sense of guilt that you should not have.”

Anja nodded. “I decided before we left that this would be my last trip to see them.” She spoke tilting her head back and looking at her. “What you and I have re-discovered... what we share with For'mya now... I don't want to come between you and For'mya Little Wolf.”

“We don't think that Anja! Never!” Aricia exclaimed. “We have never thought that! What we share... what we share the three of us is beyond what most people can understand. Dysea and Bella understand because they have the same thing. I love For'mya... nothing will ever change that. I love you... I always have. When For'mya joined us she came to understand as well what we share. I told her about our first weeks and months together and what you and I meant to each other. I don't think there is a jealous bone in her body, except when it comes to Martin. She thought it was beautiful actually. We will never deny each other Anja; I relish Dysea and Bella's touch upon me just as much as yours and For'mya. It is no different for you and them I know, but we do gravitate to certain people. For'mya and I gravitate to you, as you do to us. Dysea and Bella to each other. We would never expect each other to change.”

“It helps that we all gravitate to Martin.” Anja said with a smile.

Aricia grinned. “Well... when he can do to us what he can... how could we not? And he does it so well... even after all these years together. He will never tire of us Anja... any of us.” She said with a chuckle. “With everything that has happened in the last years, the separate duties we all have...” Aricia looked at her. “I think it's time we began to rediscover what we all mean to each other.”

Anja nodded. “That sounds wonderful. I want to continue on with my life and what we have together. All of us.”

Aricia laughed suddenly squeezing her hand tightly. “You know they call us the three good witches at the children's center in Sparta.”

Anja laughed now as well. “What? Why?”

Aricia leaned over and kissed her softly. “Whenever we show up there to pick up our children we always hand out little treats. The other children love it.”

“Well... as a doctor I should be saying we shouldn't do that.” She spoke.

“You hand out more than any of us.” Aricia stated.

Anja chuckled. “I know.” Anja sipped her coffee and pushed back gently against Aricia loving the warmth of her body. “Are Andreus and Kmyla coming to Sparta for the dinner?”

Aricia nodded. “As far as I know... and the last time I spoke with Gorgo she told me that they would all be there. Most of her children with Riall have already moved to Earth. Gorgo says it is their way of telling her to return to the home of her roots.”

“Sivana and Belen will be leaving Hadaria tomorrow.” Anja spoke. “You know... this will be the first time since before the war that we will have everyone together.”

Aricia laughed. "If I remember correctly... the last time it took us a week to get the villa back to working order." She spoke sipping her coffee. "Martin and Daniel had to cut down four trees to make room for the waste disposal unit."

Anja nodded. "I remember." She said. "They insisted on doing it the old fashion way and it took them three days to do it with axes. Both of them were sore for two weeks afterwards. We will have to..."

The communications chime sounded and Anja sighed as she rolled off the couch quickly. She padded across the floor and moved to the small table activating the small holo disc. The image of the older Lycavorian man appeared. The same man who had commanded Anja's ship since its inception. "Yes Admiral."

"Lady Anja I am sorry to disturb you and Lady Aricia so early in the morning." The male voice spoke.

Anja chuckled softly. "We were already awake Admiral Omore... and I know if you are contacting us it has to be important."

"It's more strange than important Milady." He spoke. "We received a Standard Secure Fleet update this morning from Sparta, and with it was a secure order from the King upgrading the status of all ships and ground units in half a dozen sectors. The ones we currently will be moving through on our return to Earth as it happens. I have requested a follow on report, but we are without our normal Strike Wing Milady... and I would like your permission to alter course and join with the SCIMITAR and her Strike Wing to be on the safe side."

Anja's eyes narrowed as Aricia got up and came over to the holo disc transmission. "Omore... do you fear something from this report that puts a LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruiser at risk without its Strike Wing?" Aricia asked.

"Anything is possible my Queen." He spoke. "And secure transmissions from the King in Sparta upgrading our alert status are not common."

"No they are not." Aricia spoke.

"It's just a precautionary measure my Queens. Prince Androcles's Strike Wing is moving for Earth from Apo Prime as we speak." He spoke. "Besides... I know that Lady Gorgo and Queen For'mya are onboard the SCIMITAR as well as all of your children. Prince Androcles left with them early yesterday morning. They apparently finished with their training exercise early and decided to meet them on Apo Prime as opposed to by Gate Three Nine. He is also carrying some thirty dragons for the Harmony Ceremony next month. Since they were already out on a training mission his Strike Wing is the only one currently in this sector of space."

"How long has it been since we've had Gorgo all to ourselves without Martin?" Anja asked mischievously as she looked at Aricia.

Aricia smiled. "Oh... he will hate us if we do that again." She spoke.

Anja nodded. "But think of the enjoyment we'll get out of it. He'll spoil us for weeks, and he is still a male wolf. He'll only hate us until one of us grabs his..."

"I will alter course then my Queens?" Omore interrupted them with a grin even as they plotted. He was well aware of the openness of the Leonidas family, and the games they played on each other. He had been Queen Anja's Strike Wing Commander since taking command of the SPIRIT OF HADARIA, and he had refused four promotions in the past twenty-five years to remain where he was. He adored the diminutive Persian red haired Queen, and the best times of his career had come watching her interact with others.

Anja and Aricia looked at the holo transmission and laughed. "Yes Omore... you may alter course. How long before we rendezvous with them?" Anja asked.

"I will contact Captain Sa'sur now. If they maintain the heading they had plotted... we should join with them in just less than eight hours." He replied.

"Just in time for dinner." Aricia spoke.

SCIMITAR THIRTY-SIX HOURS FROM EARTH

Sadi was sitting in the mess lounge very early, enjoying the steaming mug of coffee. She was an early riser anyway, and she had been up half the night trying to convince Teeria and Palta that nothing had happened the night before when she had disappeared to find Androcles. They had found his brother and sisters right where he said they would and Sadi discovered exactly what he had said to be very true. The three of them were much lower key and the meal had been splendid. Arrarn was exceptionally intelligent, and Normya and Zarah were refreshing and giddy. They only managed to embarrass Andro three times. She and Andro had shared looks of desire and passion all evening, combined with gentle caresses and touches. It was so perfect... so absolutely right... and Sadi could not help but wonder if it was not all a dream.

“Can we join you?” The female voice asked.

Sadi looked up and saw Lisisa, Eliani and Carina standing to the side with their trays. She almost choked on her coffee and came to her feet quickly. “Princesses!” She exclaimed.

Lisisa shook her head with a gentle smile. “No Sadi... to you we are only Andro’s sisters.” She spoke. “May we?”

Sadi motioned to the table quickly. “Please... it is... it is your ship after all.”

Eliani set her tray down on the table with a smile and shook her head. “No... this is Andro’s ship... we are just along for the ride. He and Sa’sur run the SCIMITAR together.”

Sadi dropped back into her chair as Lisisa settled next to her and Eliani and Carina sat across from her. “Please allow me to apologize for yesterday...” She spoke. “It was not something I intended to ever happen.”

Lisisa shook her head. “Then you were lucky to miss our explosion with our brothers.” She said with a grin. “We didn’t subject you to just how insane we can get. We are actually very sedate.”

Sadi couldn’t help but smile. “Yes... I gathered that.” She said.

“Lisisa... I don’t think she’s buying it.” Carina said with a smile.

Eliani shook her head in agreement. “It was a nice try Lisisa. We should have known Andro would have filled her in by now.”

Lisisa looked at Sadi. “No?”

Sadi shook her head. “I’m sorry.”

“Anse! I thought we could pull it off!” Lisisa spoke.

Sadi couldn’t help but laugh. “I am not as sedate as I appear.” She told them honestly. “Everything is happening rather quickly, and since I am still a cadet I have been trained to suppress my wildness.” Sadi said with a grin. “At least that is what my flight instructor told has told me to do.”

“We heard you were already a qualified pilot.” Eliani said as she began to chew the muffin.

Sadi nodded proudly. “Eight hundred hours in the STRIKER and six hundred hours piloting capital ships. I had quite a bit of a head start really since my father runs the Menkla Manufacturing Plant. I got to test fly most of the ships that came out of there before they went into full production.”

“You flew our mothers around for a while too I understand.” Lisisa said.

Sadi nodded. “That was very informative. Queen For’mya is an exceptional pilot. She and Star Commander Endith are almost instinctive.”

“Mother said you showed exceptional promise with the STRIKER.” Eliani spoke causing Sadi’s eyes to grow wide.

“She... she did?” Sadi asked.

Eliani smiled. “Sadi we have known about you since Andro was able to form words. It’s almost as if we know everything about you already.” She grinned at Sadi’s expression. “Don’t worry... that’s only a figure of speech. He’s followed your career very closely over the years. Always making sure you were doing ok.”

Sadi’s brow furrowed slowly. “Doing ok?”

Carina nodded. “He bought the building you live in.” She spoke.

“He bought... he bought the building I live in?” Sadi asked shocked.

Carina nodded. “When they turned you away? When you were first looking for a place to live just before you entered the academy?” She smiled. “I’m pretty sure when he found that out he bought the building and told the manager to give you the one you toured. I think that is so romantic.”

Eliani saw Sadi stiffen as Carina talked and she knew immediately that their attempt to make Sadi see Andro was the one for her was rapidly going into the toilet. “Sadi he only did it to...”

“What else has Androcles Leonidas done to help me?” Sadi asked sweetly but her voice was dripping with sarcasm now.

Lisisa knew then the mistake it had been and she reached out to take Sadi’s hand. “Sadi it isn’t what you think.” She said.

Sadi drew her hand back quickly. “Isn’t it? Did he help me get into the Academy? Gave me that extra support that I needed? Did he help me through flight school? Perhaps he made sure the instructors were easy on me? Or he told Commander Endith that I was the one he had chosen? Did he convince your grandmother to give me a perfect grade?”

“Sadi you are wrong.” Eliani spoke.

“Am I? How did I get entrance into the School of the Mages? The First Oracle approved my entrance. The First Oracle is like the King’s second mother. I needed nineteen references to get into the Union Academy! I was only able to obtain seventeen! Who were the last two? Men or women that he put a good word in for me with?” Sadi exclaimed as she got to her feet. “I am not a fool Eliani. He has been protecting me all this time hasn’t he? Watching over me?”

“Is that what you think?” Eliani asked.

Sadi stared at her. “Up until this very moment I thought I had accomplished everything on my own. Apparently that is not the case.”

“Sadi you...” Lisisa began to speak but Sadi turned quickly and walked out of the mess lounge, her anger building to eruption. Lisisa turned back to Eliani and Carina. “Oh boy.” She spoke.

Carina looked more frightened than Eliani and Lisisa and she leaned across the table. “We have to tell Andro.” She said quickly.

“Tell Andro what?” For’mya’s voice spoke from behind them.

The three of them turned to see For’mya and Gorgo standing behind them with their trays.

“Mother... I think we may have just made things infinitely harder for Andro when it comes to Sadi.” Eliani spoke.

Gorgo and For’mya looked at each other then back to them.

“What do you mean?” For’mya asked.

Andro sat in the right command chair on the bridge of the SCIMITAR.

The bridge of the SCIMITAR was situated just above where the two points of the blade shaped nose came together. Seven hundred meters from the tip and three thousand six hundred meters from the tail end of the ship. It was shaped like a half circle, with two decks along the side holding various stations ranging from operations to life support systems. The main helm control officer sat to the right of the two command chairs that were side by side on the raised pedestal, while the navigation officer was to the left. Since Androcles was a known early riser, he took the early morning shifts whenever he was on the SCIMITAR. He held the coffee mug in his hand as he went over the reports from the previous evening.

He had been unable to sleep after escorting Sadi back to the quarters she was sharing with her friends. Her scent was so burned into his mind it kept him awake until only two hours before his shift began, but like his father and most Spartans Andro was able to operate quite well on little sleep.

He looked up from the report from his father on Sparta. “Operations Officer... how long until the SPIRIT joins us?”

“Just under an hour sire.” The man called back.

“Very well... have Admiral Omore bring the SPIRIT onto our port side and take up station there when she arrives if you would.”

“Yes Milord.”

“Good... and then insure...” Andro heard the doors to the bridge open and he turned in his chair. His azure blue orbs opened a little wider when Sadi marched onto the bridge right past the two Durcunusaan officers who stood just inside the door. He came to his feet quickly. “Sadi?”

Sadi walked up to him. “We need to talk.” She spoke softly but firmly.

“What is wrong?” Andro asked immediately detecting her heightened sense of anger and the adrenalin flowing through her blood. He pulled her gently to the side away from the active stations.

“You bought the building I live in Andro?” She asked him.

Andro shook his head quickly as he stopped next to the empty sensor station. “What are you talking about?” He asked quickly in a low voice.

“Andro how long have you been protecting me?” Sadi asked. “How long have you been having people do things for me?”

“Sadi what are you talking about?” He asked.

“The building I live in on Apo Prime?” Sadi hissed. “You own it? My father pays you for me to live there?”

Andro nodded. “Yes... so?” He declared.

“So?” Sadi demanded. “I live in the building Androcles! Me! And my father pays you for me to live there! He pays you quite a large amount too!”

“You didn’t live there when I bought it.” Andro answered.

“No... because you bought it after you found out they turned me away. And then you told the manager to give me an apartment!” Sadi hissed.

Andro looked at her his eyes wide. “Who told you that?”

“What does it matter who told me?” Sadi snapped harshly.

“What is going on Sadi? I’m on duty here.”

“My entrance into the Academy?” She asked. “How many of the people I got references from did you talk to?” She asked quickly. “I was only able to obtain seventeen Andro. I needed nineteen. The two I needed to push me over the top came in on the very last day of acceptance applications!”

“That was good for you.” He spoke. “Sadi what is this all about?”

“Did you have your mother give a good word so that my flight instructors would go easy on me?” Sadi demanded. “Have you talked with your grandmother about my grades and convinced her to give me a perfect grade in her class? I want to know what else I have you to thank for Androcles Leonidas. I want to know all these things before I tell you I want nothing to do with you! I don’t need you looking out for me Androcles Leonidas! I’m perfectly capable of taking care of myself! And I will not be a trophy for you as I was for Malic! I don’t care if you are the Crown Prince!”

“Sadi... I have no idea what you are talking about.” He spoke heatedly now. “Who has told you these things?”

“No one!” She spat. “I figured them out for myself!”

Andro’s blue eyes narrowed. “You figured them out for yourself?” He asked. “Where is all this coming from?”

“I don’t need you looking over me and making sure I achieve everything I have ever wanted!” Sadi hissed out. “Unlike you... I have had to work for everything in my life!”

Andro’s face became immediately stoic and without emotion. His eyes narrowed further and he glared at Sadi, stepping closer to her. “I have never suggested you have not worked for what you have achieved Sadi.” He spoke calmly and evenly. “I have not done these things you say I have done.”

“That’s it? I’m supposed to believe that?” She asked crossing her arms over her chest.

Andro glared down at her for only a moment longer before taking a deep breath. “You will believe what you will Sadi. I have never been given anything in my life... like you I have worked for everything I have achieved. It is wrong for you to imply that, simply because I hold the title of Crown Prince, I have been raised with a silver spoon in my mouth.” He spoke. “You have to leave the bridge now Sadi, I’m on duty.”

Sadi detected the incoming communications chime but ignored it and continued on. “So you aren’t going to defend yourself?” She demanded.

Andro turned and saw his Operations Officer go to the transmission console and saw his eyes widened. “I have nothing to defend myself with.” He spoke. “Not against what you seem to think I have done. Sadi you need to leave the bridge now! There seems to be...”

“Milord... we are receiving an automated distress signal from Eleyisi Three!” The Operations Officer spoke as he turned quickly. “It is repeating every sixty seconds. Milord... they say they are being attacked by Evolli mercenaries!”

Androcles turned his head and body completely away from her. “Bring the Wing to full alert!” He barked out. “Go to Condition Two! All officers report to their stations! Inform the SPIRIT what we are receiving!” Sadi could only watch in stunned shock as she watched Androcles transform right in front of her eyes.

The bridge intercom crackled as alarm claxons began to sound all over the ship.

“Andro what is going on?” Resumar’s voice filled the bridge. It was almost as if his younger brother slept next to the alarm claxon.

“Res we’re receiving a distress call from a nearby mining colony. Their automated signal says they are being attacked by Evolli mercenaries. Have Arrarn, Normya and Zarah prep the DTs in case we have to go to ground. Grab Denali and our sisters and get our equipment ready.”

“On it!” Resumar replied instantly.

Andro stabbed down on the arm of his command chair. “Sa’sur to the bridge! Sa’sur to the bridge! Combat stations! This is not a drill! Prepare for LSD operation and combat jump! Prepare for LSD operation and combat jump! Ops... inform the SPIRIT of what we are doing! Tell Admiral Omore to shift his course to join with us during the jump!”

Sa’sur strode briskly onto the bridge, Gorgo and For’mya trailing behind her. “Cadets... feel free to spread out around the outer rims of the bridge but do not touch anything, and try not to get in anyone’s way. We have conducted a combat jump and everyone will need their space.” She barked out as she moved to stand in front of the chair on the right of the pedestal next to where Andro already was. She saw Sadi tucked into a corner already and wondered briefly why she was already on the bridge. “Milord... what is happening? You do not call a Condition Two ever Androcles!”

“Ops?” Andro called out.

“We are three minutes from visual range Milord! Sensors are clear! The SPIRIT has moved into position on our port side! Queen Anja and Queen Aricia are transferring over in a STRIKER DT. The Strike Wing has signaled ready for action and our flanks are covered.” A tall Lycavorian man spoke as he turned from one of the standing stations on the left.

“Weapons? Shields?”

“Shields are on line and weapons are primed and ready!”

“What do we know of this Eleysi Three?” Andro asked as he held out the data pad of the message they had received to Sa’sur and she began to read quickly, her pale blue eyes widening slightly.

“It’s a Class Three mining colony from Earth Milord.” The same man answered turning to face him completely. “Established exactly seventeen years ago by then President Tarifa and Prime Minister Selene for Power Source Research. Some very rich deposits of Duridium Ore were discovered by a surveying team. They established the colony within six months... wow!”

Sa’sur chuckled as she settled into her chair the data pad in her hand. “Yes... I have met Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Prime Minister Selene... those two women are exceptionally efficient, as is Vice President Aihola. Navigator, plot a high polar course over the axis of the planet!”

“Yes ma’am!”

“Have all squadron commanders on standby alert!” Andro called out. “Full Ground Strike Loads on the DEVASTATORS!”

Gorgo, For’mya and the cadets could only watched in silence and witness the seamless unity of the crew. Sa’sur and Andro both were barking out orders for one thing or the other, yet the bridge crew of the SCIMITAR was operating as smoothly as anything any of them had ever seen. It was like watching an elegant orchestra in process with two conductors who were perfectly attuned to each other.

“Is there anything from the surface?” Andro asked.

“Negative Milord.” The man answered. “The colony covers three square kilometers and has a population of two thousand six hundred men, women and children. They have nothing in the way of defensive armaments except for hand held weapons.”

“Very well... Andro?” Sa’sur asked.

Andro nodded. “Resumar has already started prepping our ground team.”

“Standard approach... and put us in a glacial orbit over...” Sa’sur began.

“Captain! Incoming transmission from the colony!” The communications officer declared now. “Emergency frequency four one nine!”

Sa’sur came to her feet. “Let’s see it!”

The massive holo disc on the floor of the bridge in front of the enormous view window came to life with the image of an older man. His clothes were tattered and blood stained and he held an assault rifle.

“This is William Carson... Reserve LU Commander of Earth Mining Colony Eleyisi Three! Who is this?”

“Commander Carson I am Captain Sa’sur of the ULU SCIMITAR! We are two minutes from your location! Can you give me a status report?”

“The SCIMITAR? That’s Prince Androcles ship?” The man asked. “Thank the gods!”

“What is happening Commander Carson?” Sa’sur asked again feeling Andro come up next to her.

“They hit us almost four days ago.” Carson stated. “A mix of Kochab and Evolli. Mainly Evolli. We lost three hundred and fifty men and women before the rest were able to get to the defensive bunkers and initiate a lock down. They devastated the main power grid and we are operating only on batteries now.”

“Are they still on the planet?” Androcles voice carried next to Sa’sur.

“I don’t think so. We haven’t been attacked in over two days, but I don’t want to risk my people finding out either. Those Evolli bastards are tricky.” The man spoke quickly his face lighting up now as he realized help was coming. “I have a lot of wounded and we’ve been out of medication now for over a day.”

Sadi’s eyes grew wide once more as she saw Androcles move from the platform with Sa’sur to stand directly in front of the holo image of the man. He looked so physically powerful and commanding. A self-assured and dominant Spartan Alpha male.

What had she done?

She felt Teeria come up next to her and grab her arm. “Sadi... what is going on? We went looking for you and they said you stormed onto the bridge very angry.” Teeria whispered to her.

Sadi nodded quickly unable to speak as she stared at him. They were close enough to them to hear them speaking.

Androcles looked at Sa’sur as his grandmother and mother stepped up to them. “Part of the group your Uncle took out two days ago?” Sa’sur asked from the command platform as she looked at him.

“Possibly.” Andro replied quickly. “They were part of the group that refused to accept the surrender and have been attacking our border installations. They’ve never been this bold before though.”

“What do you mean Andro? What group?” For’mya asked.

“Mother...”

“If you pull that need to know sibfla on me Androcles Leonidas, I will turn you over my knee like when you were a boy! Right here in front of everyone!” For’mya snapped loudly. She couldn’t help but hear the soft chortling of several crewmembers at that picture, and while Queen For’mya was known as the most sedate and patient of the Queens along with Queen Dysea, she was also quite capable of making your life miserable as well. “You have inherited your father’s trait of being obsessively secretive and it is extremely annoying, especially at times like this.” She crossed her arms over her chest and glared at him.

Androcles looked at her and couldn’t help but smile. “The training mission we were on wasn’t exactly a training mission mother.” He told her.

“I’ve already deduced that!” For’mya snapped moving forward. “Why don’t you tell me what the hell is going on here? I swear when I get home to Sparta your father and I are going to have words.”

Androcles chuckled at her reaction and watched Gorgo move up next to her. “Father didn’t know about it himself until this morning mother. Vice President Aihola had received some reports while transiting back from Apo Prime two weeks ago. She was returning from an Agricultural Symposium and several of her Drow elf contacts in The Wilds reported to her that mercenaries were using Ceku Tertius as a transfer point of black market arms deals. She discussed it with Tarifa and Selene and because it was so close to Earth and since we were already there for the State Dinner, they told father about it. Uncle Daniel and I took our Strike Wings to Ceku Tertius... ostensibly under a training mission. We remained a week and found nothing and I left just three days ago. Uncle Daniel and Moneus remained with Aunt Anuk for a few extra days. In that time they discovered an exchange of weapons happening between the Evolli and...”

Gorgo’s eyes went wide. “Who were they selling these weapons to?”

“That doesn’t matter right now.” Androcles spoke quickly not wanting to announce that information in front of a bunch of cadets. He looked at For’mya. [Mindvoice Shielded] It is not for common ears mother. Trust me. He told her.

[That bad?] For'mya asked.

[It definitely is not good.]

For'mya nodded. [You can fill me in later.]

“Sa'sur how many transports do we have?” Andro asked turning to look at her.

“Including your two DTs, the Type II and the MENKLA III, we have four. Your mothers are coming over on their DT that gives us five.” Sa'sur answered gently. “Fifteen smaller ones within the Wing. We're a Strike Wing Androcles... we don't have our full Group. You know that.”

Andro nodded. “Commander Carson... how many of your people remain?” Androcles asked the man turning back to the holo transmission.

“Just over two thousand between the three bunkers.” Carson answered immediately. “I have contact with them. Please tell me you are coming to get us.”

“That we are sir!” Androcles stated. “Inform your people that we will take the wounded first. Prioritize your people accordingly but do not leave or unlock the bunkers until you hear from me or Captain Sa'sur directly. Is that clear?”

“Yes sir!”

Sa'sur turned to another officer. “I want fighters in the sky doing a fly over of the colony before the transports begin to land! Launch the ready flight!” She barked. “Have every ship prepare their single transport for immediate rescue operations. Have them form up on our DTs and the MENKLA and prepare to descend to the surface.”

Androcles turned to Gorgo. “I'm sorry grandmother... it appears I will be the one making you late for a change and not father.”

“Given the circumstances... I forgive you in advance.” Gorgo spoke waving her hand dismissively.

“Mother... I need Arrarn to fly the Type II with Carina. Can you take his DT?” Andro asked For'mya

For'mya nodded without question. “I'll need a co-pilot if we're going to do a mid-flight drop.”

“Do any of the cadets accompanying you have flight training or medical training grandmother?” Andro asked.

“Sire...” Sa'sur spoke now stepping forward. “They are still cadets! We should not risk them.”

“They are members of the Union military!” Androcles spoke calmly. “And this is more than likely a rescue operation. The real life experience will be good for them. Besides... we need the extra bodies.”

Gorgo nodded. “I agree. Many of them are medically trained. Some have already passed their flight tests as well. I will get them suited up and to the transports. That many people will require you to have as many medical personnel as possible. I will coordinate with Anja when she arrives. How long?”

“Queen Anja's DT is landing right now Lady Gorgo.” The man spoke.

Androcles nodded and looked at Sa'sur. “I need someone to fly with my mother since Arrarn will be handling the Type II.”

“I can!” Sadi blurted out without thinking.

Teeria and Palta both looked at her as if she was insane while Sa'sur turned to her. “You are checked out in a DT Cadet?” She asked surprised.

Sadi nodded slowly now. “I... yes ma'am. Eight... eight hundred hours.”

“Who initialed your log book Cadet?”

“Star Commander Endith Captain.” Sadi answered more confidently this time and seeing Sa'sur's eyes go a little wider. “I was able to fly with her on many occasions while I was working with the Annacdone.”

Sa'sur looked at Androcles and shrugged. “That's more than anyone else we have on board Andro... except for you, Eliani and your mother.”

Androcles stared at Sadi for a long moment before nodding his head quickly. He turned to For'mya who wore a smile on her face. “Mother?”

For'mya nodded without hesitation. “Works for me.”

He turned to an ensign standing nearby. “Get Cadet Sadi a uniform and bring her to the landing bay. My mother will start prepping the ship. Grandmother, gather whatever medical personnel we have and get them loaded onto the MENKLA and the Type II. And bring Bren's detachment of Durcunusaan just to be safe.”

Gorgo nodded. “I'll see to it.”

Androcles looked at Sa'sur. “Watch over us Sa'sur.”

She nodded. "I always do."

"And Sa'sur, please contact my father on Earth if you would and advise him of what is happening. And then contact someone on Earth and find out if they have sent anyone to investigate why they have lost touch with their mining colony. I find it very hard to believe that all three of my adopted Aunts missed this."

Sa'sur nodded. "I'll take care of it."

ELEYSI THREE

A rugged and dusty world of rock and mountains and sand.

At least that is what it appeared like to Sadi as the STRIKER DT held course towards the mining colony at twelve thousand feet off the ground. Her pulse was racing like it never had before, her blond hair crammed quickly under the helmet as she had boarded the DT with For'mya through the side. This wasn't a training mission however... this was very real and she shifted in her seat trying to get comfortable, the new set of black conforming body armor rubbing her neck gently.

For'mya turned her helmeted head calmly and looked at Sadi with a smile. "Relax Sadi. You are doing an outstanding job."

Sadi turned to look at her, her jungle green eyes wide. "I take it... I take it you do this a lot?"

For'mya nodded with another engaging smile. "This is like a vacation compared to what it usually is like. Half the time we are taking fire when Andro or Martin goes out the back." She replied. "The other half they are unloading at sixty thousand feet or higher."

"Higher?!" Sadi gasped.

For'mya nodded. "He and his father can go out at seventy-five thousand feet. Higher if they have to." She spoke. "Twelve thousand feet is like stepping off a set of stairs for them!" She laughed.

Sadi glanced quickly into the rear of the DT, which was now fully open for her to view since they had disengaged the escape hatch system upon entering the atmosphere. She could see the two rows of Spartans sitting along the opposite walls clutching their weapons, Commander Famus walking up and down in front of them. Surprisingly she saw Malic sitting on one of the benches, and he looked more nervous now than she had ever seen him.

Elynth and Tharua rested on the deck of the DT; both of them saddled and ready to depart. Androcles stood in front of his sister, inspecting her body armor and other equipment while she did the same for him. Sadi let her green eyes linger on him and she felt her heart beat increase quickly. The black body armor conformed to him like a glove, the ivory hilts of the two swords stuck up over the backs of his shoulders, the P190 in its place down the center of his back. The combat harness he wore carried several small pouches, and she could see his helmet sitting on the deck next to his sister's. As they finished inspecting each other, they moved quickly to their dragons and Sadi watched with keen interest as Androcles studied the saddle as he moved along Elynth's broad side, his gloved hand sliding along her scales as he moved. He adjusted the saddle in the front, and Sadi saw Elynth dip her head to nudge him and Sadi could then feel the Mindvoice tremors of them speaking to one another. Andro moved with such a controlled precision and confidence. His aura, though still mainly shielded, was radiating enough that she could feel it at least. It was focused, wild and pure and so powerful and warm. She had felt a small portion of that aura on the SCIMITAR just the night before and now she feared she would never taste it again.

He was so different than what she had expected him to be. That he allowed the cadets to come on the mission without question spoke volumes to her. That he didn't bat an eye when she told them she could help fly a DT, even after how she had treated him made Sadi sing inwardly with joy and bring everything she had been thinking into very real doubt. Watching him now as she did, Sadi realized almost instantly that she wanted him. She wanted to be wrapped in his arms. He had said she was more beautiful than he remembered, but to Sadi... to her he was the most beautiful man she had ever seen. And that frightened her.

"Sadi..." For'mya's voice dragged her back and she turned quickly. "Eliani, Lisisa and Carina told me what happened.

"Milady I..." Sadi began to reply.

“Don’t you dare refer to me like that!” For’mya almost barked out. “Not after what we went through that night. And certainly not with the way Andro feels about you.”

“He bought the building I live in For’mya!” Sadi exclaimed though with a lot less forcefulness than she had said the same thing to him. “My father pays him for me to live there! How do I know he didn’t have a hand in everything I thought I accomplished on my own? I don’t want that For’mya! I’ve never wanted that!”

“From the time he was able to speak... the one thing he has loved about you more than anything else is your strength Sadi.” For’mya spoke. “Your drive to reach your goals.”

“He...” Sadi began.

“He told you he was going to court you in the ancient Spartan way didn’t he?” For’mya asked cutting her off.

Sadi nodded. “What does that have to do with anything?”

“In ancient Sparta... after Martin’s father’s time... males would present gifts to the fathers of the females they wanted to take as their mates. Do you know what Martin Leonidas gave to my father when he did this with me? With all of us?” For’mya spoke.

“The King did this?” Sadi asked stunned.

For’mya nodded. “He gave my father, Anja’s grandfather, Dysea’s mother, Aricia’s mother and Deia’s husband a Rilian Diamond. Deia and her mate stood for Isabella.” For’mya spoke seeing Sadi’s eyes go wide.

“Five Rilian Diamonds?” Sadi gasped. “For’mya... Rilian Diamonds can only be gathered in the volcanic tunnels of Semtola. They are the most... they are one of the most precious diamonds in the Universe. Just one is worth... I don’t even know anymore. They are protected by...”

For’mya nodded with a smile. “They are protected by Semtolian Pit Vipers...yes... I know. Sixty-five foot long vipers that can peel the flesh from your bones in twenty seconds with the acid they spit. Their venom rivals that of the Riad Buku on the High Coven home world. We must have cursed him in the ancient language for a week for being so foolish to do something like that. I think it was also the most passionate week of sex we have ever had with him.” She spoke with a dazzling smile. “We knew he loved us all... without doubt or hesitation. That he would risk his life as he did for every one of us to do what he did?” For’mya shook her head. “Well... I was still learning about the culture of Sparta when he did this. Needless to say... what he did to show his devotion and love to all of us... what we meant to him? Nothing exists in this universe that could ever come between our love for him. Not even death.”

Sadi sat silently for a moment hearing the whine of the powerful STRIKER engines. She shook her head. “But...”

“Androcles is his father’s son Sadi. He bought the building six months before you started living there Sadi. Carina did not know the full details of that. She only assumed he bought it so you could live there... you must remember Sadi... seven years ago Carina was only sixteen.”

“But his sisters... they didn’t try to...”

For’mya smiled. “You didn’t give them the chance Sadi.” For’mya said. “Andro made the decision during a lull in the Evolli War. He flew back to Apo Prime from wherever he was and completed the transaction.”

“He was fighting a war!” Sadi exclaimed.

For’mya nodded. “That should tell you a little of what he feels for you. It was going to be his gift to your father when he asked for his permission to take you as his mate.” Sadi’s jungle green eyes went wide as For’mya held out the data pad to her. “These are the transaction details in case you do not believe me. Aricia actually cautioned him against buying it. It used up two thirds of the trust fund his father had established for him. Gorgo and I actually thought it was an excellent business prospect and it turns out we were right. The building has turned an enormous profit since he bought it eight years ago, and it continues to increase every year. Your father will never have to work another day in his life, though knowing your father he will continue to do so. You know as well as I that there are millions of wealthy men and women in the Union, but there is also no poverty because we all give so much back. I can tell you that Androcles is worth almost as much as his father now because of this single business transaction.” For’mya checked her instruments quickly and turned back to her. “The building itself means nothing to him Sadi. It’s only purpose was so that he could give it to your father when the day came.”

“For’mya... I...” Sadi could only stare at the details on the pad.

“Eight months after the end of the war he disappeared with Elynth for six weeks. No one knew where he had gone except his father and Riall, and they weren’t telling us. We believe he went to do something as equally foolish for you as his father did for us.” For’mya spoke. “They can be so male sometimes you know.” She said with a grin that caused Sadi to smile now.

“The two recommendations you thought you still needed were already in your file Sadi. That is why you did not need the full nineteen to enter the academy.” For’mya spoke. “You petitioned Endith and Tina if I recall, and you never received a response because they had already entered recommendations into your file from your work with them in the Annacdone. They didn’t know who you were at that point. Sadi everything you have done has been because of your own hard work, never doubt that. It is one of the reasons Andro has loved you since he was an infant as I said. Gorgo has given out only nine perfect grades in her entire time as a professor at the University. Do you honestly believe she would go against her own values to give you a perfect grade because Andro is her grandson? Sadi... you are far smarter than that.”

“I have ruined everything haven’t I?” Sadi lamented.

For’mya shook her head. “No. The desire you have for each other is so evident that even the densest individual can see it. What you need to do now is let go of the past. You have come so far... and your scent tells me Andro is the one you want. Now is the time for you to take hold of what you want and make it happen. He would never disrespect you in any way Sadi... his father would beat him into the ground if that was the case. Yes... he has watched over you through the years, inquired about you often, but never once has he interfered in anything you have done because he knows you did not need him to even if he wanted to.”

Sadi looked at her. “I have made such a fool out of myself For’mya.” She said.

For’mya laughed. “No more than I have in the past child. No more than I have in the past. When this is over with... allow him to hold you within his embrace. He has told you his intentions... and he will stick to them. However there is no reason you can not enjoy the warmth and love of his aura until the time comes when he makes you his. If that is indeed what you want.”

“Oh For’mya it is!” Sadi spoke. “It...” She heard the soft beeping in her helmet and turned quickly as the COM came alive with the voice of Captain Sa’sur on the SCIMITAR. “JAVELIN ONE... Andro?”

For’mya touched her COM panel. “Androcles... Captain Sa’sur!”

Andro turned and immediately moved the ninety meters to the cockpit. He looked at Sadi with those azure eyes and a gentle smile before kneeling between her and For’mya as Sa’sur’s face shifted a little then cleared.

“Go ahead SCIMITAR.” Andro spoke quickly.

“Andro... our fighters report all clear, but there is an unusual amount of seismic echoing coming from the terrain near the settlement.” Sa’sur spoke.

For’mya looked at him. “Mining tunnels.” She spoke.

Sa’sur nodded. “That’s what we assumed as well. Unfortunately the Duridium in the ground is making sensor scans spotty at best. No ships have been detected on the surface, but I recommend you go in spread four one just to play it safe. Your mothers on the SPIRIT’S DT are already moving into position.”

Andro nodded. “I agree.” He spoke.

“Your mothers say they will play overwatch and let you and the others handle the ground situation.”

Sa’sur spoke with a grin. “I also spoke with President Turner and Prime Minister Selene. I knew Prime Minister Selene was efficient Andro. They were already acting on the transmission. They received it this morning right after your father got the message from General/Colonel Simpson. They were on the way to see your father when I interrupted them. President Turner asks that you contact him when we discover what the situation is.”

Andro nodded. “Since we are coming in from opposite poles Sa’sur, inform my mothers we will be on the surface by the time they are over the settlement. They are NOT to enter the zone until it is secure. We will establish a perimeter and begin to move the more seriously wounded as soon as the first transports arrive from above and then they can land and they will undoubtedly want to take charge of the evacuation.”

“I’ll let them know.”

Androcles spoke. “Keep them on stand by Sa’sur and I will notify you when it is clear. I already have one mother and grandmother going into the frying pan so to speak. I truly do not want my father screaming at me that I put three of my mothers in harm’s way at the same time.”

Sa’sur nodded as she laughed. “You will have air support standing by... call them if you need them.”

Androcles nodded. “Understood... JAVELIN ONE out.” He looked at For’mya. “Two minutes mother. Drop us to ten thousand. We’ll do a full stop release.”

For’mya nodded without hesitation. “Affirmative.”

Androcles turned and looked at Sadi, her green eyes making his heart slam into his chest once more. He smiled at her and reached up to caress her cheek.

[Mindvoice Shielded] Sadi... I... I... He told her softly.

Sadi’s eyes grew wide at his touch and she reached up to grab his hand. [Androcles... I... I love you.] There... she had said it. And it felt so very right.

Andro lowered his head quickly and nuzzled her cheek while squeezing her shoulder gently with a smile. “Just do what my mother tells you. She’s just as insanely crazy as my brother Arrarn, but that is where he and Normya get it from anyway.”

“Andro...” Sadi began but he turned quickly and moved back into the rear of the DT heading directly to where Elynth turned her head waiting for him. She turned to For’mya. “Does he always fly with his sister?” She asked.

For’mya nodded. “Eliani, Denali or Resumar. Elynth and Jeth together are too large for one DT. Resumar and Lisisa are with Normya’s DT and Denali will act as the straggler in this case from the Type II. In a situation like this... it’s safer for Andro and Resumar to fly separate and have Denali bring up the rear so to speak. The bonds between Denali and Aradace and Resumar and Cemath are still developing. Still growing. They did not have the luxury of being bonded to them while still in the womb like Andro. Resumar is a superior warrior but Denali thinks better on his feet and his TK abilities are better than Resumar’s. He and Aradace are better suited to come in as support if need be because he has a knack for being able to adapt much quicker to a changing situation. It is something Resumar and he work on all the time, but they know where their strengths are, and they do not argue. That is their strength and Andro knows how to use it.”

“For’mya... please, you will tell me if I do something wrong?” Sadi pleaded.

For’mya smiled once more. “Give me six degrees on the flaps and reduce power to thirty percent Cadet. We have a drop to make.”

Androcles sat on Elynth’s back holding his helmet in his hands as JAVELIN ONE’S ramp began to open and extend. Malic’s eyes were wide as he stared out the back of the DT at the open barren land beneath them. He heard the rattle on the floor and saw Eliani’s helmet rattling as the wind began to whip at their altitude and pass into the back of the DT. He rose from his seat and went to snatch up the helmet from the deck but Famus’s hand slammed down on his shoulder.

“What are you doing?” He screamed to be heard above the wind.

“The Princess! Her helmet!” Malic exclaimed.

“Sit down fool! She has done this hundreds of times! She does not need your help!” Famus snapped shoving him back into his seat.

Malic’s wide eyes turned to see Eliani’s helmet lift into the air by some unseen hand. The mahogany colored dragon turned her long neck and head back around and her copper colored eyes settled on Malic as that massive armor encased tail lifted up off the deck as if poised to reach out and strike him. He looked up further and saw Eliani staring at him with those fern green eyes as she held her hand out and the helmet moved to settle into her grasp.

Eliani turned back to Androcles as she lowered her helmet onto her head. “I’ll flip ya!” She called out as the ramp fully extended and locked into place.

Androcles lowered his helmet onto his head with a grin. “Age before beauty sister, you know that! Always!”

“Ah... you’re no fun! Lisisa at least flips me for it!” Eliani exclaimed dismissing him with a wave of her hand.

Andro smiled and shifted in his saddle. Once more Elynth my Bonded Sister! He barked out within Mindvoice completely unshielded. Famus quickly stood rock solid and slammed his P190 across his chest.

Into the hands of my grandfather’s spirit we commend our souls!

May he guide our actions and thoughts and pick us up if we fall! Elynth spoke and dug her talons into the non skid deck plating and sprinted off the ramp.

Eliani adjusted her legs in her saddle and patted Tharua's thick neck as she saw Elynth's tail clear the ramp and plunge from sight. I don't have any fancy words Tharua my sister. She said.

Who needs fancy words Eliani! Let's just fly! Tharua exclaimed with humor in her tone as she too dug her nails into the non skid deck and followed Elynth and Androcles.

Sadi's eyes were wide in disbelief as she watched on the monitor. She and For'mya had heard easily the words Androcles and Elynth had spoken just before they had leaped into oblivion and fell from sight causing her to gasp in shock at the quickness of it. A heartbeat later Eliani and Tharua followed.

"Bonded Pairs are clear!" For'mya spoke into her helmet COM, her eyes focused out the side window of her DT.

"Confirmed Lady For'mya!" Famus's voice answered in their helmets. "Closing ramp and doors."

"Roger! Holding position here! Stand by for high speed entry into zone Famus! Just in case!"

"Copy that."

"JAVELIN TWO? Heavy Two... Status?" For'mya asked.

"Bonded Pairs are free and clear." Normya's voice replied. "We are holding station for your mark mother."

"Denali is free and clear!" Arrarn's calm controlled voice came next. "He's taking up high orbit and standing by mother."

"Stand by all ships!" For'mya spoke. She turned to Sadi. "Androcles wears a TAP camera on his helmet. Frequency two one two." She spoke. "Pull it up on the monitor between us. We can see everything he does. And patch it into the back so Famus can monitor as well."

Sadi worked the console quickly and the monitor between them came alive with a picture of the ground soaring past at incredible speeds.

"Oh my..." Sadi said.

For'mya chuckled. "She's fast isn't she? Not as fast as her mother or Tharua in a straight run, but she can turn faster than Isheeni and make your stomach leave last week's rations in orbit. I'll monitor the instruments. Just keep your eyes on that monitor. He'll slow down when he gets close to the settlement and then our eyes can help him even from here."

(Insert song Sandstorm here)

Androcles leaned low in the saddle, his head behind Elynth's thick neck and his legs tucked in tightly to her sides under the dragon armor.

This is what they loved.

The speed at which his bonded sister could propel them was tremendous and it made his heart race with adrenalin every time they unleashed themselves. It was the purest form of freedom they could know, and Androcles could not remember the last time he had taken an interplanetary transport on either Earth or Apo Prime. He and Elynth always flew where they were going. The new Dragon Armor saddles were larger and much more comfortable for long flights and sustained combat. They could fit two people easily, and there were streamlined pouches on either side of the saddle that held an assortment of tools and rations. Near his right leg Andro kept a separate pouch that held two generic Nehtes, both their pommels extending out several inches for easy access. There was another smaller pouch near his left leg that only he and Elynth knew the contents of. They were not concerned about anyone looking in the pouch as it was considered a heinous crime among Mjolnir's Hand to alter fellow rider's equipment.

Andro turned his head and saw Eliani and Tharua in much the same position as he was in, flying fifty meters off Elynth's right wing and easily keeping pace.

Andro... one kilometer! Lisisa's voice boomed out within Mindvoice.

The five of them would talk with each other only within Mindvoice now, at least until the transports were all down safely and no threat had been detected. The five of them had quickly become all business. There were no more humorous or flippant comments. This is what they did and they needed to be sharp all the time.

Lisisa... you and I directly over the center. Resumar... Eliani... break now! Androcles barked. Denali you are our eyes brother!

I have you all. Denali answered.

Breaking now! Eliani and Resumar answered instantly.

Andro turned as Tharua dipped her wing as she and Eliani peeled away from him like a speeding projectile. He and Elynth and Lisisa and Jeth had the strongest psychic shields of the quintet, nearly as strong as his father and Torma and they stood the better chance of surviving a surprise attack if one came as they passed over the settlement.

Lisisa... dropping now sister. One hundred on the deck! Speed passes first time! Around for a second right after! Androcles ordered.

Jeth and I are with you! Lisisa answered. Five degrees left! Coming right on!

Here we go! Elynth shouted as she lowered her head and dove for the ground.

Famus motioned to Malic as he stood by the chart table in the now still air of the back of the DT. Malic moved up to him quickly.

“Time for some remedial training Enomotarch Malic.” He barked out. “You wish to be a Durcunusaan? Good!” He pointed to the large flat monitor built into the table. “They are in what we call a spread four one formation. Prince Androcles and Princess Lisisa will pass above the settlement at high speed and then turn immediately for a slower speed pass if nothing shoots at them. They all wear TAP cameras in their helmets. This is the feed from Prince Androcles. You switch with this button. Once they make their second pass switch your feed to Princess Eliani. She will execute the final pass with Tharua and Prince Resumar will ride high cover on her at a very slow speed. Once Queen For’mya puts us in position to support, switch to the DT’s own camera system.”

Malic looked at him wide eyed. “Why not the Princes sir?” He asked. “Aren’t they the stronger?”

Famus nodded. “Excellent question Malic. You aren’t as dumb as Princess Lisisa thinks you are. Eliani makes the last pass because of Tharua. She is the only pure Firespitter in their group and her flame blast will not only ignite anything it touches but it will cause heavy smoke to rise and give them cover should Eliani begin taking fire. Princess Eliani and Tharua are the fastest and lightest of the group and can move much quicker if they need to. The first rule of the Durcunusaan Malic... never judge by outward appearance.”

“Yes sir! But if she starts taking fire she’ll be completely exposed won’t she?” Malic asked.

“All of them have psychic shields that will protect them. Androcles and Lisisa more powerful than Eliani and Resumar. If this is an ambush by intelligent individuals, they will want to take down as many dragons as they can with the initial fire. That means they will go after the Prince and Princess first. Not a single dragon. The Evolli refined this to an art... and if we are facing them here, your eyes will need to be sharp. Eliani can not see in all directions. Once they complete their second pass, Queen For’mya will move us to visual range as I said and you will need to be alert as Eliani passes over. Can you do that Enomotarch?”

“Yes sir!”

“Good! Now watch the monitor while I prepare the others. Prince Denali has high cover, but if anything happens he will drop like a lauk rie sibfla.” Famus saw Malic’s eyes narrow. “A load of shit!” He exclaimed.

Sadi watched with wide eyes as Elynth and Jeth passed within a meter of each other directly over the center of the settlement traveling at close to two hundred kilometers an hour. She gasped out as they tilted on their sides and passed belly to belly over the top of the settlement, both of them cranking into hair splitting turns in opposite directions. Their voices reached out to her easily.

Nothing Andro! Lisisa exclaimed as she looked back over Jeth’s tail at the tops of the settlement while Jeth rocketed them away.

I saw nothing either! Andro replied.

That doesn't mean they ain't there Andro. Eliani broke in. Keep your eyes open brother.

I intend to. Lisisa... I'm breaking back. Resumar?

I got your back brother. Resumar answered.

Mirroring you now Andro! Jeth take us a little lower this time! Lisisa spoke as Jeth snapped them into another turn.

Lower and slower! Jeth spoke as they cranked around.

Sadi could only watch from Andro's TAP camera but she saw the gut wrenching turn Elynth executed, almost feeling the forces pulling against Androcles's body. The terrain whipping by came into better focus now as Elynth slowed considerably.

The tops of the settlement buildings, mostly domed structures, were passing underneath him and Elynth at a much more sedate speed and Sadi could make out the destroyed remains of several buildings.

Signs of weapons fire. Andro spoke. I see a few bodies on the ground. They look elven. Part of the colony.

Lots of broken and disturbed structures here. Lisisa reported. I'm seeing bodies as well... they... Andro they are children. Her voice held sorrow and barely contained rage in it. Sadi gasped at this feeling and For'mya looked at her.

"What?"

"They... they see children on the ground." Sadi spoke looking at her. "Dead children."

"The Evolli are not known for their sentiment Sadi. Keep that in mind." For'mya said.

Sadi nodded. "Yes, I will."

"Good! Stand by to give me power to the engines. Once they clear the settlement Andro will order us closer before Eliani goes in for the last pass. JAVELIN TWO and Heavy Two this is ONE. Moving to impact range!" For'mya spoke. "Give me power Sadi. Keep her even."

"TWO confirms. Moving."

"Heavy Two moving." Arrarn's ever calm voice replied.

For'mya took a deep breath. "Ok... hold your breath." She spoke. "Here we go."

Eliani! JAVELINS are in position sister. Andro spoke.

Tharua... that's our cue. Eliani spoke. Let's do it.

Good... I was growing bored. Tharua answered as she dipped her wing and they banked towards the settlement.

Tharua flared her wings to their full extension and she began to maneuver slowly back and forth, riding the wind as if she was hunting.

Keep your eyes peeled sister. Eliani spoke softly.

I'm above and slightly left of you Eliani. Stay sharp. Resumar's voice echoed in her head.

Do nothing stupid Tharua! Jeth's voice called out.

Mind yourself Jeth! I'm not as fat as you remember!

Mind yourself Jeth! I'm not as fat as you remember!

Lisisa felt Jeth tense as Tharua began to move over the outskirts of the settlement. Her green eyes didn't leave where her sister and Tharua were moving but she reached down and placed her gloved hand on Jeth's neck.

[Mindvoice Shielded] She will be fine Jeth. Lisisa told him softly. [We have done this many times before brother.]

[I know.] He answered his usually childlike self now buried deep as the business end of his position in Mjolnir's Hand and as Lisisa's Bonded Dragon was paramount. And in these circumstances... Jeth was all business. [That does not mean I can not worry for her Lisisa. Before I did not want to claim her as my mate... now I do.]

[That will still happen Jeth.]

[Only if she stops seeing me as a child Lisisa. And I don't know if she ever will.]

[Keep your mind focused Jeth. You can not protect her if you are not focused.]

Lisisa smiled when she felt him nod his massive head and concentrate on watching Eliani and Tharua as they banked lazily along the edges of the settlement.

Malic's eyes were glued to the camera now... his monitor switched to the DT's own camera system which could reach ten kilometers out. The picture of Eliani and Tharua was clear as he watched them move slowly back and forth, at times hanging almost motionless in the air. He had always professed how skilled he was... exaggerating his deeds during the one patrol he had been on that had contact with a small Evolli patrol on Thepis Four. He had not even seen the Evolli mercenaries until after the first section of his patrol had slaughtered them, so in truth Malic had never really seen combat. He could not deny this any longer as his heart was pounding near out of control.

Here he was... among five fully combat tested members of the Royal family, and four actual members of Mjolnir's Hand, not to mention three Queens of the Union itself and the Durcunusaan that always accompanied them. Prince Androcles had been decorated twenty times during that six year span, even earning the coveted Shield of Valor, the highest decoration the Union could award. The details behind that decoration were sketchy at best, but Malic knew it must have been a glorious battle. And he had acted like a pompous fool in front of them all.

In front of Princess Eliani.

Malic hadn't taken real notice of her until he came aboard the DT, as angry as he had been with Sadi and her actions. The body armor she wore conformed to her very shapely figure in ways he never thought possible. She had a lean, supple and muscular body, even more so than Sadi and her burgundy colored hair and fern green eyes caused his heart rate to increase when she looked at him.

Sadi.

It was obvious to him and any who witnessed what she meant to the Prince, and apparently what he meant to her. He was the reason Sadi had never wanted more from him. Something very profound must have happened between the two of them for it to still affect her twenty plus years later. It made Malic curious. To know what it was. He did not consider himself a foolish or stupid man, perhaps more arrogant than he should be, but he was proud of his accomplishments so far. He was the only one in his family who was. His father and four brothers were officers within the fleet, his mother a senate liaison. They had been incensed when he failed the exam for the Union Fleet Officer Academy, even more so when he had chosen to take the road as a common Spartan and not fight the decision and ruling. He had always hated school, and when he had failed that exam he knew how much that had hurt him. He took the only road open to him at the time, and his parents had not been happy. He didn't mind the training or long hours and hard work... and it had sculpted his body into what he was now. He...

Malic's eyes narrowed as the dark blotch caught his eye. He moved forward, leaning closer to the large monitor as his hands worked the camera angle switching to the DT's own powerful camera zooming system now that they were so close. It panned off of Eliani and Tharua and settled to the top of the five story structure she and her dragon had just passed. He saw a large tarp flap in the wind and then it was thrown back to reveal two Evolli wielding large weapons, one of which was a T19.

A dragon killer.

"AMBUSH!" Malic screamed slamming his hand down on the COM panel. "AMBUSH! T19 behind you Princess! Six o'clock! Behind you Princess!"

"AMBUSH!" The strange male voice echoed in Eliani's helmet. "AMBUSH! T19 behind you Princess! Six o'clock! Behind you Princess!"

Reflexes from years of combat situations and training with her brothers and father had given Eliani and Tharua lightning like movements. Even before the unknown voice was finished screaming in her helmet Eliani was turning in her saddle, her right hand snatching the P190A3 from its spot on the side of her saddle and bringing it up as Tharua spun in mid air. As she came to fully point behind her, the P190 was up to her shoulder and Eliani was pulling the trigger. Her first sight had been the Evolli closest to her turn. The P190A3 round from her rifle punched through his bulbous left eye socket, blowing his yellowish brain matter on the wall behind him. As Eliani tracked without even seeing if her first target was dead her fern green eyes grew wide as she saw the T19 launching one of its missiles.

“THARUA! Down!” Eliani screamed.

Too late! Tharua screamed out in Mindvoice as she lowered her head and rolled over to her right just as the rocket left the barrel of the weapon. They have us!

NO! Jeth’s angry voice announced as his massive blue/black body blotted out the sunlight and any picture of the building. The moment the voice had begun screaming in their helmets; Lisisa had kicked him towards Eliani and Tharua as was their position and station to cover them. I don’t think so!

Tharua tried to look up as she rolled away, straining to see what was happening and she felt and heard Jeth unleash a blast of superheated air directly at the Evolli. He was so close and so overwhelmingly powerful that she could feel his rage within Mindvoice at the surprise attack upon her. His trumpet of anger at the attack on her and Eliani pierced Tharua to her core. She didn’t see the blast of superheated breath reach out and incinerate the Evolli in the blink of an eye, as well as igniting the small missile. The explosion wasn’t large, they never were with the T19s, but they were extremely powerful and the concussive force sent Tharua spinning out of control towards the building.

Eliani! Tharua screamed out, flailing her wings madly to regain control. Jeth!

Worry about us sister! We’re going to hit!

No... we are not! Tharua barked out viciously, anger fueling her strength. Hold on my sister!

Tharua extended her wings suddenly, flaring them completely to the sides as the nearby building blossomed in front of them. Eliani felt them slowing incredibly fast, her eyes wide and then Tharua’s talons were digging into the side of the building, clawing at any kind of foothold. Eliani reached out quickly directing their combined TK power to steady them. As Tharua talons sank in she cocked her rear legs and propelled them back away from the building and back into the sky.

Lisisa! Eliani screamed out, her eyes searching.

“What was that?” Lisisa’s outraged voice echoed in her helmet. “That was a nubous tickle you Evolli scum! Shoot my sister in the back will you? You will pay for your folly now!”

Eliani heard Jeth’s trumpeting roar echoing his sentiments and both she and Tharua turned to see Jeth’s massive, muscular body smashing the five story building. His talons were dug into the side of the building and his mace like Heavyhorn tail, layered with invulnerable Dragon Armor, was taking out huge swaths of metal and concrete. He was only half a meter shy of his father’s twenty-one meters, and though he was only twenty-five years old, behind his father, mother and Elynth, he was perhaps the most powerful dragon among their kind. It was the reason he was so sought after by females, even females much older than Tharua as a prospective mate. In the saddle on his back Lisisa sat firmly anchored even at the odd angle, with her P190A3 in her arms, a swath of flame reaching out from the barrel as she pumped burst after burst toward the location of the Evolli missile team. Unseen by everyone and unknown to all but Eliani, Tharua watched Jeth with something more than humor and friendship in her copper colored eyes. They saw three more Evolli running through the interior of the building and then the piercing roar filled the dusty air.

Elynth fell out of the sky and down upon the other end of the building with undisguised rage and identical savagery to her brother. Her Heavyhorn tail, while not as large as Jeth’s, but still encased in the Dragon Armor, impacted the side of the building with enough force to shatter windows and dislodge frames making the Evolli within stagger from the blow. She reared back her head and unleashed a jet of flame tinged superheated air through the smashed building just as Jeth let loose with another blast of his own superheated breath even as Androcles was letting rip with his 190A3.

The combining streams cooked the Evolli inside the building alive, setting the entire building ablaze and melting much of the interior frame work just as Denali brought Aradace down like the four metric tons that she was directly on top of the position where the Evolli missile team had been with a scream and trumpet of rage. His P190A3 was spitting out death with lethal speed and accuracy.

“Never attack my sisters!” Denali roared from his saddle his voice carrying over their helmet COM units.

It was a sight Lisisa watched with adoring eyes.

“Dropping now!” Resumar’s voice screamed out. “More behind us!”

Eliani and Tharua whirled around in midair and Tharua let out a trumpet of rage all her own, her head rearing back and unleashing a stream of flame that engulfed two more Evolli who were still scrambling to target them with T19s. Their screams of agony died quickly as Cemath descended like a three and a half metric ton boulder and squashed both their burning bodies into the roof of the building, chunks of the building beginning to fall as his weight crushed the floor and they fell.

“Nubou! They’re all over!” For’mya screamed out. “Famus emergency drop! We’re going in!”

Sadi’s eyes were wide at what she was witnessing and she gripped her console tightly.

“Full flaps!” For’mya screamed out. “I’ll show you what happens when you ambush our children you Evolli ronnus! Aricia! Anja! Execute! Execute! We’re going in! We’re going in!”

“We’ll cover and sweep For’mya!” Aricia’s voice replied immediately.

The DT surged forward with an incredible burst of raw power.

Aricia adjusted her controls as Anja cranked them into a tight turn and they dropped from high altitude.

“Bring us in from the south Anja!” Aricia barked as her eyes scanned the sensor scope between them.

“We can support better from there! Our children are trained for this my love! We are not equal to them in this type of operation!”

Anja clenched her teeth and nodded. “South it is!”

Aricia looked into the back of the DT at the Durcunusaan Commander who held tightly to the hand hold on the cockpit door. “We will drop you to the south of the settlement Oneut! Sweep west from there! And order the full Pentekostyes to deploy now!”

The man nodded. “Done!” He barked moving back into the rear of the DT.

Famus held on as For’mya caused the DT to dance in her hands, and he stumbled towards the rear, his hand slamming down on the ramp controls. He regained his footing quickly and lifted his P190A3 and looked at the wide eyed Spartans. Almost all of them were new Spartans heading to Earth for their first assignments. Now however, they would have their baptism under fire.

“Standard offensive grouping!” He yelled. “Malic... you are senior! Take half and break left when we land. I’ll break right. Sweep it all! Kill anything not wearing black and crimson! Work your way to the Prince in the center! Leave none alive!”

Malic gripped his P190A3 tighter, fear racing through him, but he nodded his head with a firm set in his jaw.

“I don’t care what standard operating procedure is!” Gorgo screamed at the Durcunusaan officer in Bren’s detachment on JAVELIN TWO.

“Lady Gorgo... one of us must remain airborne to cover them! We are the recovery aircraft!” The Spartan tried to be reasonable even though he wanted to have Normya send their DT hurtling to the ground and join the battle.

“Fine! I’m pulling rank!” Gorgo snapped. “I’m an Admiral! You are a Lieutenant Commander! Now do as I nubous tell you! Normya?”

The platinum blond hair of her granddaughter whipped around from the pilot seat of the DT.

“Grandmother?”

“Normya... your brothers and sisters are being ambushed child.” Gorgo stated more calmly than she felt.

“Grandmother it will be decided by the time we land! You know this. Andro will take no prisoners.” She stated calmly.

“Then it won’t matter a bit. Take us in.” Gorgo ordered.

Normya smiled at her. “On our way!” She said happily.

Gorgo turned back to the two dozen cadets in the rear of the DT who had the medical training, Teeria and Palta among them. Their eyes were wide and she could smell the fear as Bren stepped up to her and held out the P190A3 for her.

“The Prince will be very unhappy that you have violated his orders Lady Gorgo!” Bren spoke with a small grin.

Gorgo took the P190A3 and looked at Bren with a stern expression. “Tough! He can’t be any worse than his father!”

Bren smiled. “I will put a man in the sniper turret and keep the cadets in the DT until the situation is secure. Take my detachment!”

“You are taking all this rather calmly Bren.” Gorgo spoke quickly. “I apologize. You are the Durcunusaan Commander and I have usurped your command by yelling at your officer.”

Bren shook his head quickly. “My Lady... I have protected the Prince for nine years. When he has let me that is.” Bren answered with a smile. “The unusual and chaotic is normal for me. By the time we arrive, he, his sisters, Resumar and Denali and their dragons will have killed all the Evolli as Princess Normya has said. None of them particularly care for the amphibian Evolli scum. More so the Prince than the others after Alba Tau. The Evolli will discover this was not a wise move on their part. And I yell at my officers every hour. It is something they are used to.”

The leader of the Evolli ambush team was rapidly figuring that out, very painfully. The twenty members of his Evolli and Kochab ambush team had lost the advantage of surprise in the first four seconds when they failed to take down the mahogany colored dragon. The huge blue/black monstrosity had cut in front of his missile team just as they were launching and his blast of superheated air had caused the missile to explode prematurely. He had watched as the shrapnel danced harmlessly across the huge beast’s psychic shields, and then watched that same gargantuan dragon, nearly as large as the Lycavorian King’s dragon, stop almost instantly in midair and land on the side of the building where his missile teams were. His tail began to smash at the building then, and within seconds the Prince’s own beast had descended out of the sky to attack the other side of the same building. The moment he saw the female’s orange tinged flame burst he knew his teams were dead. They had been told only two Bonded Pairs would come here, and one of them was not supposed to be the obsidian colored beast that had so decimated his men during the war.

The Prince’s dragon had earned a deadly reputation in their war with the Union. A reputation that if she unleashed her fiery superheated breath, she was killing whatever she was aiming at. The Prince and that female devil were responsible for the deaths of many of his warriors; so many that they had given them a name in their own language after the battle of Alba Tau. It was a curse in their native language, but the translation to any other language and that curse turned into a name. A name they had come to hate for it reminded them of the thousand Evolli killed by the Bonded Pair of Elynth and Androcles that single night.

That name was Soul Slayer.

Their situation got even worse when the mahogany colored Firespitter recovered so quickly and the dark green dragon dropped from the sky onto his second missile team. And then the blue scaled beast dropped out of the sky from far above and landed right on top of the building the other two were smashing to ribbons. This was not a battle they could win now... not with five bonded pairs pummeling his troops with glee and certainly not with those damnable DTs landing and undoubtedly off loading troops. The settlement center was ablaze now, as all five dragons were tearing at his men’s positions with undisguised delight, roaring as they went. Well... if they were to die he would insure the first born son of the yellow eyed devil would die.

He turned to his ten man personal detachment. “We kill the son of yellow eyes before we die!” He screamed. “Let us go!”

Sadi could do nothing but look on from her seat in unabashed awe as For'mya lowered the DT to the ground a hundred meters from the center of the settlement, directly in one of the wide dirt paths. She could clearly see Elynth and Jeth almost side by side, letting loose with blasts of their superheated breath, Lisisa and Androcles firing their P190s from the saddles as they had turned to attack another building. The center of the settlement was a war zone. If it was an enemy... it died.

For'mya's hands were flying over her consoles as the DTs engines were cut. "Sadi!" She barked as she yanked at her straps.

"Huh! What?"

"Get the 190 beside you!" For'mya snapped as she was coming out of her seat. "We'll cover from the nose of the DT! C'mon!"

Sadi began pulling at her shoulder straps as For'mya snatched her 190 from the rack and moved to the cockpit hatch, punching the control panel and waiting as the side hatch to the cockpit opened. Sadi was just getting to her feet when For'mya let loose with a long burst out the hatchway.

"You don't have a ticket Evolli scum!" She screamed before descending the ladder.

Who were these people; Sadi wondered in amazement as she yanked the 190 from the rack and moved to the hatchway, that they waded into battle without fear and without question.

Sadi winced as smoke and heat hit her in the face. She took a deep breath and plunged down the stairs after For'mya, finding her kneeling by the nose landing gear. She skidded to a stop next to her, fumbling with the 190.

"Famus and Malic have split out the back!" For'mya screamed over the roar of dragons and gunfire. "They are sweeping up the sides!" For'mya looked at her and grinned. "Andro..." Her eyes shifted when she saw the rush of bodies not wearing black and crimson burst from the building in front of her and start running directly at Andro and Elynth.

"Andro! Suicide squad! Behind you!" She screamed into her helmet COM.

Sadi turned her head, her green eyes wide, for she would never forget what she saw in the next twenty seconds.

"Andro! Suicide squad! Behind you!" Androcles heard his mother For'mya's warning in his helmet and turned in his saddle.

His azure blue eyes flared and a cruel grin crossed his face as he allowed the change to come over him. A black band formed around the azure blue corneas of his eyes, flecks of yellow gold mixing in and the long dual incisor fangs unique to the Leonidas line grew from his gums. Sister... shall we dance?

Elynth's head whipped around and she too saw the charging Evolli. Let's my bonded one! She shouted out in Mindvoice.

Androcles jumped from his saddle to the ground, tossing the P190 aside as projectile rounds bounced harmlessly from his light blue psychic shield and that of Elynth. He extended his arm and with a silver/white flash of light his Shi Viska appeared, the crimson inverted 'V' very prominent. He reached up and withdrew one of the swords from the double scabbard on his back as Elynth's huge head lowered next to his shoulder.

Elynth took a deep breath and let out a trumpeting roar that deafened all the noise around her, causing heads to turn in their direction, and with a howl of rage, he and Elynth followed the one tenet that outnumbered individuals should do.

They charged.

Sadi's green eyes were bright orbs in the smoke and dust and she saw Androcles and Elynth wade into the ten Evolli without fear or conscious thought. The first sweep of her massive, armored mace like tail crushed one Evolli completely into the ground as she brought it down on top of him, a spray of dust and yellowish blood erupting from around the tip of her tail. Her gaping maw descended onto another and she lifted him up, her wickedly curved front talons grasping the body as she tore the Evolli apart into three sections. As she spit out the bloody body portion from her mouth, she brought her right wing whipping around to crash into another's chest even as his projectile rounds bounced harmlessly from her psychic shield, the sounds of shattering bones audible even in the din of battle. His body sailed some forty meters away before smashing with a sickening crunch into the side of a building.

Androcles brought Halize Rie Aellseum down in an overhand slash that completely cleaved an Evolli's head in two. As yellowish blood spurted in all directions, Androcles spun to the side, his shield flashing out, the razors along the edge extended and locked and he drove the edge of his Shi Viska into the chest of a Kochab mercenary. The blow carried enough power to stop the mercenary in his tracks and lift his body clean off the ground, the razors of the shield shredding his chest to a mangled mess. As Androcles ripped his shield away, it brought flesh and blood with it, Halize Rie Aellseum moving faster than anything Sadi had ever seen as it came across in a sideways slash and neatly decapitated another mercenary with barely a pause. Androcles cocked his arm then, and threw the sword like a knife, watching as it impaled an Evolli sprinting towards him completely through his chest cavity, lifting him up and slamming him down.

Sadi's eyes grew wider as she saw the shimmering psychic diamond form at his finger tips, and then it launched with the speed of thought, the Kochab mercenary's chest erupting as if hit with an explosives charge, his body thrown back violently. Another formed immediately and that too was sent hurtling away to punch through the body of another Evolli. Androcles reached out once more, snatching the Evolli ambush leader in the grasp of his TK power and tossing him towards Elynth, his orange eyes wide in horror. She unleashed a roar of triumph as her tail slashed forward to crunch into the Evolli's body solidly. Once more the shattering of bones could be heard and Sadi watched as his body was launched over the top of a nearby building, flailing madly like a broken ragdoll. He would be found later, three quarters of the bones in his body shattered.

She turned back to see Androcles wrench his sword from the chest of the mercenary he had impaled, lift his shield toward her without looking and the Shi Viska launched. Sadi watched as it curled easily in the air turning directly for where she knelt. Her eyes grew wider and she screamed as the Shi Viska reached out for her. A hundred things flashed across her mind then, foremost among them was that she would never feel his arms around her. She heard the Shi Viska zip past the left side of her head, directly between the small space separating her and For'mya and the sound of gurgling and the wet noise of explosive wounds struck her. She and For'mya whirled around to see the Evolli body fall to the ground behind them, his head rolling several meters away, blood showering the ground around the headless body as it fell to the hard packed dirt. Sadi's head whipped back around and saw the Shi Viska settling back to Andro's arm and his azure blue eyes shining at her. She saw a smile split his lips and then he and Elynth turned and plunged back into the smoke and fire all around them.

Oh yes... she definitely wanted him.

And then it was over.

"They were definitely waiting for us Sa'sur." Androcles spoke to the monitor in the back of his DT. Elynth rested sedately at the bottom of the ramp.

"So it was a trap?" She asked from the SCIMITAR.

Androcles nodded. "It looks that way. They weren't expecting as many Bonded Pairs as we hit them with. Bren and Famus are just finishing up sweeping the settlement and the Pentekostyes my mothers brought are securing the outlying sections. Start the transports down Sa'sur. Have them land on the southeast field. We'll have the wounded brought to them. And tell my mothers they can move from where they are hovering in the south."

Sa'sur nodded. "Your father said your uncle got some interesting intelligence from the scum he caught. He'll fill you in when you return to Earth. And if I'm not mistaken your mothers are already landing."

Androcles nodded with a grin. "No doubt to tell me how reckless I am and that I set a bad example for all my siblings, all the while wishing they had gotten here sooner so they could have fought beside us."

Sa'sur chuckled. "That sounds like your mothers." She spoke.

“Keep our fighters airborne until we are gone from this place Sa’sur. And maintain a constant sensor lock on those tunnels. I estimate at least twelve or sixteen hours on the surface here. We need to secure the settlement before we depart. Anything out of the ordinary... let me know.”

Sa’sur nodded. “Count on it.” She spoke. “SCIMITAR Out.”

Androcles turned with the intent to head towards the ramp but he came face to face with Gorgo. “Grandmother?” He said seeing that Sadi and her two friends were trailing along behind her, Sadi running her hand along Elynth’s scales as she followed her into the DT.

“What exactly do you call that?” Gorgo demanded.

Androcles looked puzzled and met her eyes. “Call what?”

“Outnumbered ten to one and charging!” Gorgo snapped. “If your father had seen that...”

“My father would have done the exact same thing.” Andro replied evenly. “And I had Elynth with me. We had them outnumbered.”

Most assuredly! Elynth’s voice spoke up.

“Androcles Leonidas you are the Crown Prince of the...”

“Lycavorian Union... yes grandmother I know. It seems I am being reminded of that constantly now. However, I am also a member of Mjolnir’s Hand with a job to do.” He spoke. “My title does not grant me any special status.”

“There are many who disagree... considering the propensity of your father to get into trouble.” Gorgo spoke. “They see you becoming just like him.”

Andro smiled brightly. “Grandmother... that is a wonderful compliment. Thank you!” He leaned over and kissed her cheek.

“You insufferable mida!” Gorgo snapped. “You are just as pig headed as your father!”

“Grandmother... we’ve been telling everyone that for years.” Lisisa’s voice echoed as she, Eliani, Resumar and Denali walked up the ramp into the rear of the DT, moving around where Sadi and the others stood.

Gorgo spun around and looked at them. “And you two!” She exclaimed. “Having Jeth and then Aradace land on top of that building and start smashing it to bits! What is that called?”

Lisisa grinned. “Flying by the seat of your pants I believe Endith once called it.” She spoke. “Ambush the ambushers.”

Gorgo glared at them, turned to Androcles and then shook her head. “I’m going to go instruct my cadets! At least they listen to me.”

Andro stepped up to his sisters and brothers as their grandmother stormed down the ramp of the DT, Sadi and the others following her quickly, Sadi glancing back at him as she walked. He looked at Lisisa. “Jeth, Aradace and Cemath?”

Lisisa nodded. “Nothing penetrated our shield... and Resumar says it was Cemath’s idea to squash them into the roof of the other building. What Denali did was not needed.”

“I was High Cover.” Denali spoke. “I saw the need.”

“Yeah right.” Lisisa said punching him in the arm. “You were just bored.”

Andro chuckled. “Yeah... like I believe that one.”

“Well if it hadn’t been for Enomotarch Malic... Eliani’s tight little butt would have been blown clear out of her saddle.” Lisisa spoke elbowing her sister who was blushing slightly.

“Malic?” Androcles gasped.

Lisisa nodded with a grin. “Famus says he is the one who saw them first. Got the warning out to Eliani before they fired.”

“Guess he isn’t so useless after all huh big brother?” Eliani spoke smugly.

Andro looked at her. “You just find him attractive.” Androcles spoke.

Lisisa looked at her as if she was insane. “Him?” She gasped. “Eliani... I thought I taught you better than that!”

“Hey... he’s cute... he’s got a hot body... and with the right training... who knows what could happen.” Eliani declared.

Androcles held up his hand. “I don’t want to hear anymore. I might be sick.” He said.

“Me too.” Lisisa spoke.

Eliani dismissed them and shook her head. "We're setting up a triage area in one of the gathering halls near the southern airfield." She spoke. "I suggest we only bring them out one bunker at a time. Any more and we won't be able to protect them if anything happens."

Andro looked at her. "You suspect something?"

"No... not really. It never hurts to be safe though." She answered.

"I agree." Androcles said. "You remain on top of that Eliani. Mother will be here in a few minutes I imagine. Lisisa... keep everyone in order here and have Bren and Famus continue establishing a solid defensive line. Mother will no doubt bring at least part of the Pentekostyes with her here and have them blend those into the main line and pull our troops back to rest. Especially the cadets and new Spartans. This was their first taste of battle and they do not need to sit on the line throughout the night wondering about their actions. Let them sort it out among themselves in small groups. Resumar, Denali and I are going to do a sweep of the surrounding area just in case any stragglers may have gotten away."

Lisisa nodded. "Just be careful and be quick."

Androcles nodded. "We will be. I don't like it here. They were waiting for us..." He said. "That does not bode well."

"If they were waiting for us they had to know we were coming." Lisisa said. "Or at least passing within range of the distress beacon."

Androcles nodded. "Or they were expecting someone else." He said softly looking at Eliani.

Her fern green eyes grew wider. "Our mothers?" She gasped.

Androcles nodded. "Only we got here first." He said.

"Andro... why?" Eliani asked.

"I don't know... but they were unprepared for five Bonded Pairs. There were only two missile teams, and that tells me they were expecting only two pair. When we hit them with five pair it sent whatever plan they may have had right to sibfla." He stated calmly. "It is all guess work on my part... and just a hunch."

"I think I'm safe in saying that Lisisa, I and the others trust your hunches more than most people's facts." Resumar said.

"We'll get it figured out." Andro spoke. "Resumar, Denali and I will be back shortly. Try not to let anything fall apart you two." He said before moving quickly down towards the ramp before they could reply.

Eliani was the first to reach them and they shared an embrace of a mother and daughter who had not seen each other in several weeks. Eliani was slightly taller, but there was no denying she was Anja's daughter. The same embrace was shared with Lisisa with equal feeling and emotion and then it was repeated with Aricia as Isheeni and Miath settled to the ground behind them. Anja held Eliani's hands as she stepped back and looked at them both lovingly.

"I see the five of you have been busy." She spoke with her trademark dazzling smile.

Eliani laughed and nodded her head. "A little of this and a little of that." She spoke looking at Lisisa.

"We were only doing what we are trained for." Lisisa said innocently.

Aricia laughed softly and nuzzled Lisisa's cheek as she pulled her close. Lisisa may have been the daughter of a High Coven Princess and her Beloved, but she was every bit a Leonidas as far as Aricia and the rest of them were concerned. They had been angry with Martin when Lisisa's existence first became known to them, acting as any female Alpha wolf would Gorgo had told them. The circumstances behind Lisisa being born however were far more than any of them had ever realized and they could not stay angry with him.

Martin hadn't even known Lisisa existed.

Her birth had come shortly after the passing of the comet on Earth and the single event that had propelled Martin, Anja and Daniel and so many others nearly five hundred years into the future. Martin did not even know who he was at that time, and it was not something they could begin to hold against him. When he had returned with Lisisa so long ago, none of them felt anything but love for her. She was a beautiful young woman who had endured so much and lived to tell of it. She adored her father and her new bond with Jeth had opened her eyes to so much more that she could be. It was this hope and future that Lisisa had grasped onto tightly and not let go of. Lisisa was every bit a daughter to Aricia and the others, and that is how they had always treated her without question.

Aricia kissed Lisisa's cheek at her words and smiled. "Yes I'll bet you were doing exactly what you are trained to." She said with a knowing tone in her voice. "Where are your brothers?"

"They are coming back now. They were doing a larger circuit of the settlement in case any other Evolli were out there." Lisisa answered relishing in her mother's touch and love. "Grandmother is by JAVELIN TWO."

"We brought two Lochi from the Pentekostyes." Aricia spoke. "They are off loading now."

Lisisa nodded. "Andro suspected as much." She said. "I will direct them as they get unloaded."

"Thank you Lisisa. Well... we'd better go over and make sure your grandmother doesn't need our help." Aricia said.

Anja and Aricia ignored the looks of the Cadets and the newer Spartan soldiers from Andro's ship who looked at them with some awe and moved directly to the ramp of JAVELIN TWO just as Gorgo and For'mya were coming down talking with Normya.

Gorgo's eyes lit up. "Anja... Aricia... oh thank the gods... help has arrived. Someone who can finally reign in my out of control grandson! For'mya and I are beside ourselves!" Gorgo exclaimed as she embraced Aricia tightly and then repeated the action with Anja.

Anja and Aricia laughed and each of them held one of Gorgo's hands as For'mya stepped between them and nuzzled their necks. "We've been trying that for years." Aricia told her with a blissful look at For'mya's caress. "It hasn't worked so far. He only listens to his father."

Anja's eyes held the same look as she leaned into For'mya's caress. "When he listens to his father that is." She spoke.

Gorgo laughed and hugged them both again. "I haven't seen the two of you in three months and you only grow more beautiful each time I do. How do the five of you do it with children who won't listen to common sense?" She said. "Oh wait... the five of you don't listen to common sense either. For'mya dropped her DT in the middle of a street with a battle raging!"

For'mya chuckled as Aricia and Anja slid their arms around her slim waist. "Gorgo is a little put out in regards to Andro and his sibling's reckless attitude."

"Reckless?" Gorgo gasped. "It was down right frightening!"

"Why... did they land on the building or something?" Aricia asked with a grin.

Gorgo could only shake her head. "Now I know where they get it." She exclaimed.

"This coming from a woman who led a charge against a heavily fortified Evolli position outnumbered three to one?" Anja asked.

"That was an accident." Gorgo spoke with a grin. "I didn't know they were there."

"Gorgo... you are even more beautiful when you try and lie." For'mya spoke. "I hope we get to that point one day."

Gorgo laughed at her words and stretched her arms around all three of them. In her personal opinion which she never shared with anyone other than Riall, Gorgo thought for sure Anja and Aricia never wore any kind of make up and For'mya, Dysea and Isabella so little you couldn't tell. They all had a natural beauty that was only enhanced to famous proportions when they wore makeup. How many times had the five of them graced the covers of holo books? Images taken from some State affair where they all were dressed in stunning gowns that accented their incredible figures. Not one of them, even after giving her son multiply children, none of them had lost the figures they had when she first met them. Gorgo loved them all dearly.

"How is Riall?" Anja asked.

Gorgo rolled her eyes. "I do not have to tell you what it is like being mated to a military man."

Aricia laughed. "No you don't. Eliani and Lisisa said Andro and his brothers were returning."

"Andro and his brothers have returned already mother." His voice came from behind them. "You can stop worrying now."

They both turned to see Andro walk up alongside Miath and Isheeni, running his hand along Miath's side as he came up to them. Elynth settled to the ground next to her mother Isheeni and they touched their heads together in a loving dragon fashion as Androcles stopped in front of one of two more of the women he called mother, and the mother who had actually brought him into this world. Aricia was giddy as she stepped into his embrace with a huge smile and hugged him tightly, never tiring of having her oldest son holding her in his arms. "You and your brothers are unhurt?" She asked squeezing him tightly. "Resumar? Denali?"

“Res and Deni are putting together a makeshift pen with Arrarn for our bonded ones to spend the night.” Andro replied as he stepped up to the much shorter Anja and crushed her in a warm embrace as well. “I feel so special that you both have come to be with me.” He spoke as he set Anja down. Anja and Aricia both proceeded to punch him in the chest and Androcles laughed as he tried to look hurt.

“We got the transmission the same time you did about upgrading our status.” Aricia told him. “The transmission from this colony only you picked up. They must have been beaming it towards Earth and not inward toward the Union.”

“Andro... what is going on?” Anja asked. “What did Danny find that is sending everyone into a fit on Earth. Your father never has fits Andro.”

Androcles dropped his hands and took her arm motioning with his head to Aricia and his grandmother’s hand in his. “Let’s talk shall we?”

“I’m pretty sure they were only expecting two Bonded Pairs.” Androcles told them as they sat on the end of the ramp. “There were only two T19 missile teams set up, the rest of them were inside the buildings expecting to have to deal with two downed and wounded riders.”

Anja nodded slowly. “Ok... considering the tactics they developed during the war I can see where that would hold up. Why do you think they were after Aricia and me though?” Anja asked.

“Perhaps not you in particular mother.” Andro spoke. “It is well known that after the war we began instituting a Bonded Pair Team deployment. In any unknown situation we will always respond with a minimum of two Bonded Pairs. If they were after the two of you then they would have had to know that you were traveling together and when you were returning from Hadaria. The more likely scenario and the one I hope is correct is they were waiting for the first two pairs to show up.”

Anja nodded as her military mind kicked in. She had been a Navy SEAL as well, so many eons ago, and sometimes it just took a little kick for her incredibly sharp mind to grasp the tactical situation as a soldier and not a doctor. “And since Earth is the closest garrison, they would assume Isra and some other pair would respond.”

Andro nodded. “They did not expect five bonded pairs to descend on them.” He said. “That is why they triggered the ambush late. When Lisisa and I passed over at high speed and then Eliani came in on the tail end of pattern four one, they panicked.”

Aricia leaned forward. “But it is possible they were after Anja and me?” She asked.

Andro met her eyes. “It’s possible.” He spoke as he nodded. “Their attack on the colony here and then the mission that Uncle Daniel busted up does correspond in a rough timetable of sorts, but knowing when you and mother were leaving Hadaria and then expecting you is a little far fetched. I hope.”

“And these are part of the group Daniel and Anuk fought on Ceku Tertius?” Gorgo asked him.

Andro shrugged. “Again it’s possible... but there is really no way to be certain. Father told Captain Sa’sur that they got some interesting information from the lone prisoner Uncle Daniel did take and that he would fill me in on it when I returned to Earth.” He shifted his feet wider on the ground. “I figure we will need to remain through the night.” Androcles spoke. “With the transports and DTs you brought, we should be able to get everyone off in the morning with no trouble.”

“Andro... you never told us who these Evolli were selling the T19s to.” Anja asked.

Androcles looked at her evenly, his eyes as void of emotion as she had ever seen Martin’s when something bothered him. “The other group on Ceku Tertius was a patrol of High Coven Immortals mother. Twelve of them” He spoke calmly. “It appears as if the High Coven is now back in business.”

Sadi sat between Teeria and Palta near the good sized fire that had been built. There were several other exhausted cadets sitting around the fire as well, including seven of the Spartan Centurions that had been replaced by the troops Anja had brought with her. Malic rested among those by the fire, more tired than he had ever been in his life, but also feeling very good about his actions. He had been truly under fire this day, and while it may not have been how he had once pictured his first battle experience, he had not shit in his pants and for that he was very pleased.

All of them were flopped around the fire, eating the combat field rations. Teeria leaned in close to Sadi with a small smile.

“Why does everyone look so glum?” The voice spoke from outside the small circle.

Heads turned and the cadets and Centurions saw Gorgo walk up with Eliani, Lisisa, and Queen Aricia. They all began getting to their feet in a show of respect but Aricia held out her hand.

“No one dare get up.” Aricia spoke quickly. “You have all earned this respite. You performed admirably today from what I understand and you should be proud of yourselves.”

They all watched as Aricia and the others settled to the ground or on the equipment crates around the fire. It was uncomfortably silent for a long moment, and then the loud snort of a dragon caught everyone’s attention. They all turned to see Androcles standing in front of Elynth near the side of the huge Type II, her large head bobbing up and down as his hand ran along her neck and behind the two horns protruding from the top of her skull. They saw him laugh as she butted him gently in the chest with her snout. They all watched as he then settled to the ground between her front and back legs and leaned up against her muscular side.

One of the male cadets turned and looked at Eliani. “He won’t sleep in the DT Princess?” He asked.

Eliani chuckled. “Andro... sleep in the DT? No... he’ll stay with Elynth through the night. Half the time we find him in her pen on the SCIMITAR anyway. He doesn’t like his quarters. He says they are too lonely.” Eliani looked directly at Sadi. “Though that might change in the future.”

Sadi blushed in the firelight and Teeria sat up straighter next to her. “Princess Eliani... how did he win the Shield of Valor?” She asked.

“Teeria!” Sadi hissed looking at her.

“What?” She exclaimed. “I was curious that’s all!”

“It’s not something any of us like to talk about Cadet Teeria.” Lisisa said softly.

“They do have a right to know about the man who led them into combat today Lisisa.” Aricia said softly. “They have a right to know what kind of leader he is.”

“Mother I don’t know if Andro would want... even he and father never talk of that night mother. What right do we have to tell others?” Lisisa began speaking.

“You, Resumar, Denali and your sister were there.” Aricia said softly. “And because your father and brothers will not speak of what they saw is precisely the reason others should. So it is never forgotten, and so others know the men leading them into battle know what war is all about... and that is why they hate it so.”

Eliani took Lisisa’s hand in hers. “She’s right Lisi.” She said softly using the nickname Andro had given her when he was growing up.

“I just don’t like... I don’t like reliving that night. And what they experienced, what Res and Deni saw is far more horrific than what we did.” Lisisa spoke.

“I don’t believe anyone does Lisi.” Gorgo spoke softly. “But as Aricia said... it is not something your father or brothers will ever speak of and someone needs to be the teller of the story so it is never forgotten.”

Lisisa looked at her mother Aricia for a long moment then turned to Eliani and nodded. Eliani took a deep breath.

“It was the beginning of fourth year of the war.” She began. “We were on the surface of Alba Tau staging for an attack on the main Evolli encampment there. We received intelligence of a massive arms shipment coming down through a deep valley in a mountain range several hundred kilometers to our west. We knew it was more than likely a trap, but if we didn’t stop the weapons from reaching the main line of Evolli troops, a six day operation could very well have turned into a six month operation, and cost us far more than it did. Andro and our father took their sections of Mjolnir’s Hand, Lisisa, Resumar, Denali and I among them, west to this valley. They split their sections, leaving half airborne over the valley to provide cover while they entered from the north and south. Lisisa, Resumar, Denali and I were part of the half providing cover. Eighteen Bonded Pairs went into the valley.

“The Evolli hit them from both ends the moment they leveled off within the valley.” Eliani spoke her words filled with emotion now. “They had set up twenty T19 missile teams on both the southern and northern ends of the valley and they all fired at once. Nine Bonded Pairs fell in the first barrage, most of them blasted right out of the sky. The air was so thick with shrapnel that all of them took hits that penetrated their psychic shields. A fist size chunk of metal laid open Andro's back from below his shoulder blade to just above his waist. They had no choice but to land... and that was what the Evolli wanted. My father was hit by three separate pieces of shrapnel, two of them that punched right through his legs and broke six of Torma's ribs. As Elynth was landing another rocket exploded off to the side and broke her hind leg in two places. I don't think any of the nine that made it to the ground alive weren't injured in some way. We could hear the rocket fire; see the flame bursts from Elynth and the other three Firespitters in their group as well as their 190s. There was shouting within Mindvoice and on our COM units. My father and Andro were screaming for us to stay away and call for support! The only problem was all of the STRIKERS we had assigned for the invasion were still very busy shuttling troops down from the ships in orbit. We couldn't call for support."

Lisisa squeezed Eliani's hand tighter and took a deep breath. "Night came all too quickly for us." Lisisa picked it up. "The Evolli decided they were going to collect the bodies of the Bonded Pairs they had killed. Show them off as trophies." Lisisa shook her head. "My father and brother weren't going to let that happen. While the seven injured Bonded Pairs maintained a perimeter my father and brother spent the next four hours bringing the bodies of nine dead Bonded Pairs into the perimeter they had established. They knew the Evolli were massing for an attack, both of them were seriously injured, Torma could barely breath and Elynth was hobbling on three legs. They wouldn't give up. They moved the bodies of nine... nine Bonded Pairs into the perimeter they had made. All of their comrades. Even the bodies of the dead dragons. They could have left... they were hurt, but all of their dragons could still fly. They chose to remain and protect the bodies of their dead.

"The Evolli attacked in waves. Hundreds of them at a time. We could hear the screaming and firing. The trumpeting of the dragons as they fought, their flame bursts were like streaks across the ground. Four more pairs fell during the night. When... when they ran out of ammo they used their Nehtes and swords... rocks and branches. Anything they could find. They wouldn't... they wouldn't leave. We screamed for them to let us come down in a support attack or to set the trees on fire in the mountains... my father and Andro ordered us to stay away. Andro said they were waiting for more Bonded Pairs to enter the valley and the Evolli were using them as bait. He... he sounded half crazed... and our father wasn't even replying to our mothers within Mindvoice by now."

Eliani looked up once more breathing deeply. "All through the night we could see and hear what was going on. Most of us were in tears by now as we circled that valley out of range of the T19s, we knew if we tried to go in and help them it would create a larger problem and cost more lives than had already been lost. They stopped answering COM calls and even Mindvoice calls three hours before the sun came up. We would think they were dead and then the Evolli would launch another attack and they would respond.

"Our Uncle Danny... he and Moneus... they disobeyed orders and took two sections of Durcunusaan and tried to reach them during the night, but they were ambushed as well and pinned down. All of those with him were hard hit, alive but pinned down and trapped."

"For'mya and I arrived at dawn with a flight of STRIKERS." Aricia picked it up now as Gorgo squeezed her shoulders tightly. "We swooped into that valley and blew the Evolli back into the dark ages. Half the valley was on fire by the time we got done, and that's when we went in." Aricia looked over to where Andro was leaning peacefully up against Elynth's side, her head resting on the ground very close to his leg. "What we found... it was like something from a monster's twisted nightmare. The Evolli blood was so thick on the ground our boots were sinking three inches into it. There were bodies stacked sometimes six or seven high all around where they had placed their perimeter. Daniel and Moneus and his team had finally made it to their perimeter after the STRIKERS left. Resumar and Denali had to crawl over the dead to even reach the inside of the perimeter. They were the first of the other Bonded Pairs to reach them for they had moved the closest during the night against orders. When we arrived they were on the perimeter of where they had found them, vomiting and weeping, frantically motioning for the others to stay back, not allowing their sisters to see what they had seen. They were holding Eliani and Lisisa back and I alone got past them.

"What they saw... what I saw... it will remain with me forever. There were five of them left, all of them hard hit and facing in different directions. Daniel and Moneus were huddled around them, even though they were all injured as well. Their blood was mixed with that of their Bonded Mates and Evolli blood. My... my Beloved couldn't walk by then; he was holding his broken Nehtes ready to throw it at us as he leaned against Torma's chest. His Shi Viska was covered with blood and bits of flesh and bent almost in half. Andro was lying across the top of Elynth's body as if trying to protect her; his Shi Viska was out as well battered and broken.

One of his swords was nothing more than a shattered hilt, and the other blade was so dull by now, he was using it to beat to death the Evolli who made it over the wall of bodies. The wound in his back was puffy and infected and he had taken six more hits in the chest during the night, three of which actually penetrated his armor. Elynth caught a full blast against her psychic shields sometime during the night and she was pretty badly cut up. She could barely lift her head off the ground high enough to spit fire, but she was ready to. Moneus was leaning up against Elynth's rear leg, his 190 shattered in half. Torma had pulled down some gargantuan tree during the night and was using his TK power with it to pummel the Evolli into pulp. There must have been two hundred Evolli bodies that were smashed into pulp around where he and Martin lay. Daniel was trying to treat Martin's legs, all the while bleeding on him from his own injuries. Torma was about to drop that tree on us when we came over the mass of bodies. He could barely breathe because of his ribs. Their eyes... all of them... they looked..."

"They looked feral." Lisisa said softly tears rolling down her cheeks. "But they... they hadn't failed. They hadn't left their Bonded Brothers and Sisters, and they would have died right there making sure every last Evolli scum knew the price they would exact from them if they tried." She got to her feet slowly. "We counted two thousand six hundred and nineteen Evolli dead who had tried to penetrate their perimeter and the perimeter Uncle Daniel and Moneus had set up only six hundred meters away. An equal amount that were slain before they even got that far. We almost lost a father and a brother that night, because they would not leave their comrades. I will never question any of them."

They watched as Lisisa silently made her way to where Jeth was laying on the ground next to Tharua fifty meters away. He lifted his massive head at her approach, his azure eyes bright and happy as she reached out to touch him. The cadets and Spartans watched as first Eliani, and then Aricia got to their feet and followed her.

"Now you know." Gorgo spoke softly as she stood up. "We are going to have a busy day so I suggest you get as much sleep as possible people."

Sadi wasn't watching her as she walked off into the darkness. Her eyes were on where Andro rested and without the slightest hesitation Sadi got to her feet.

Elynth and Androcles both lifted their heads when Sadi walked up to where they were resting.

KertaGai is there something wrong? Elynth asked.

Sadi sank to her knees in front of Andro and looked at him intently. "You knew." She said softly. She turned her head to look at Elynth. "You both knew... even then didn't you?" She spoke looking at Elynth. "That is what you meant that night when you told me I was chosen, isn't it Elynth?"

You ask a question that you already know the answer to KertaGai. Elynth told her with loving warmth in her voice.

Sadi turned her green eyes on Androcles. "How could you have known?"

"I knew the moment I smelled your scent Sadi." He told her. "And I have known every day since. Don't ask me to explain it because I can't. And I stopped trying to explain it when I was fifteen years old. I didn't see the point. I have told you all this already Sadi."

Sadi moved closer to him on her knees and reached out to caress his cheek, still staring into his eyes. She leaned closer still, her sensitive wolf nose detecting his male aura and his delicious lavender and pines scent as close as she was to him. She inhaled deeply as he had done to her on the SCIMITAR, tasting his aura ever so gently as it swirled around her like a protective blanket. Tasting it and wanting to feel so much more. Sadi pulled back slowly, insuring her cheek brushed against the softness of his mustache and goatee as he turned his head and nuzzled her jaw line and ear lobe. Sadi drew away until she was looking into his eyes once more, her heart slamming into her chest as loudly as thunder in a stormy sky. Even so heavily shielded as he was, the small portion of his aura that she tasted and felt coursing around her Sadi knew was directed solely and completely at her

"Andro... I am so sorry for..." She spoke quickly, her fingertips tracing his cheeks.

Andro smiled as he looked at her and sat up. "I know that KertaGai. I had wanted to surprise you with it... but now you know. Sadi... I have never and will never intrude on what you set as your accomplishments. It is part of what makes you so precious to me." He said.

Sadi blushed and moved closer to him. “What... what do we do now? I said some terrible things to you. I... I would understand if you...” Sadi asked in an almost whisper like voice.

Andro leaned up and kissed her deeply and hard, taking her face in his armored hands. Sadi responded equally, her hands coming up to settle on either side of his face. He drew away after a moment and looked at her with those burning azure orbs. “Understand this Sadi... daughter of Vorilas. I love you with every fiber of my being. Nothing will ever change that, certainly not some misunderstanding.”

We need Sleep! Elynth’s voice echoed in both their heads, interrupting their moment. I am tired.

Andro and Sadi turned to look at her and they both smiled. What would I do without you Elynth? He asked her.

Oh... that is simple. She replied ever so calmly. You would do nothing, for you are a man.

Andro chuckled and looked at Sadi, seeing her green eyes bright and so full of life. Stay with us. I would like it if you allowed me to hold you Sadi.

I believe I would like that too. She answered as she scooted closer and settled completely to the ground next to him.

In a moment she was in his arms, her face against the bare skin of his neck above the collar of the armor, her arms snaking around his waist. Androcles closed both his arms around her and Sadi shut her eyes in joy at the feelings that action caused to race through her. His lavender and pines scent filled her mind and coursed through her completely. Andro inhaled just as deeply of her sugar plum and spice scent, rubbing his cheek across her blond locks as her lithe body filled his embrace.

I mean to make you mine KertaGai. He told her within Mindvoice as he stroked her silky hair. Totally. Completely. Utterly mine.

Sadi could do nothing but shiver in desire at those words, for she knew he meant it, and she had no doubts he would do exactly as he said. As far as Sadi was concerned... that suited her just fine.

CHAPTER THREE

SCIMITAR

TWENTY-TWO HOURS FROM EARTH

“...landed behind Sadi’s DT and then he comes out of the smoke, Elynth next to him, their eyes like beacons on some dark night. He launches his shield and then draws one of those two swords he carries... gods it was like watching some majestic knight come to save you. As he fought... his Shi Viska circled the area he and Elynth were fighting in... it was almost moving of its own accord.” Teeria was speaking animatedly as they sat at the table in the mess lounge. “Sadi was closer where her DT was parked with Queen For’mya, but it was the first thing we noticed when Princess Normya landed and we got off the STRIKER.”

“I have heard that is how the King’s Shi Viska acts when he launches it. Almost as if it has a mind of its own. Do you know the Mindvoice power required to do something like that?” Another female cadet spoke. “It would be... I don’t think it can be charted.”

Sadi sat between her and Palta, the eight seats closest to them filled with other female Cadets who had not been chosen to go on the short mission. All of them had showered quickly and made their way here for some much needed normal food after returning from the most exciting event of their lives up until this point. None of them would ever know just how easy it had really been.

“Well... we didn’t see the whole fight, but behind him and Elynth were the bodies of ten Evolli. He was carrying one of those swords he has in his hand, his Shi Viska humming on his arm.” Teeria shook her head. “It was almost... surreal.”

“Teeria stop!” Sadi exclaimed almost shyly. “It wasn’t like that! Don’t embellish it into something it wasn’t.”

“Oh no?” Teeria asked looking at her with a smile. “We were there too Sadi. You can’t deny it! And then what Princess Eliani and the others told us of Alba Tau afterwards.” Teeria shook her head. “How he won his Shield of Valor...”

“Wait... they told you that?” A female cadet asked quickly. “The... the details of that battle are... they say it was the most savage and barbaric of the war.”

Palta nodded. “It was.”

“Besides Sadi... you were the one that slept in his arms while Palta and I had to make due with the hard ground. The least you could do is let me tell the story!” Teeria said.

“Sadi you... you slept in his arms?” The blond haired Cadet gasped out looking at her. “Is that all you did?”

Sadi looked at her with a shocked and playful expression. “Rala... we were in full view of everyone!” She said. “What could we do?”

“I would have been all over him! He could have taken me in front of everyone and I wouldn’t have cared.” Teeria stated matter-of-factly. “As sculpted as he is... you would have had to pull me off him.”

“Teeria stop!” Sadi gasped with a smile.

“Yep... our girl has got it bad!” Palta spoke with a smile as well as she squeezed Sadi’s arm. “She didn’t tell any of us that Prince Androcles was her secret lover.”

“We are not lovers!” Sadi barked out.

“Not yet.” Teeria said with a knowing glance at her dearest friend. “It’s so obvious Sadi! He is so powerful his aura is leaking through his shields! Every female on this ship can sense it... and that aura is directed only at you!”

“And you aren’t exactly denying it either!” Palta spoke. “We saw the way he kissed you this morning. Girl... I thought your hair was going to catch fire, and you didn’t exactly pull away either. As a matter of fact, you about swallowed his tongue from the looks of it, and for a moment we didn’t think you were going to give it back to him! And your aura reeks of desire for him Sadi.”

Sadi couldn’t stop the uncomfortable smile from splitting her face. Teeria and Palta were right of course. He had helped her to her feet that morning and enveloped her in his arms before covering her lips with his own. She had woken with her face tucked neatly into the crook of his shoulder and neck, breathing deeply of his delicious pines and lavender male scent and it had immediately triggered countless sensations through her body. When he kissed her... those sensations soared in intensity and power. The tighter he pulled her body to his, the more she wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and melded her lush body to his. She would not be able to stand many more of his kisses before she lost what little control she held onto.

“Sadi... you have to tell us!” Teeria exclaimed. “We have never kept things like this from each other.”

“It happened many years ago.” Sadi spoke softly, “Just before the Intelligence Purge. We were at the Island Palace and...” Sadi told them as they listened in rapt attention. She left out her involvement with the High Coven of course, embellishing Amretus’s and For’mya’s roles, but aside from that it took her twenty minutes to give them the very short version. “So now you know.” She finally finished speaking. “I’m sorry... it’s just not something I felt I could share with everyone. I spent so many years trying to forget what happened that night... and now it’s all coming back at once. It’s a little overwhelming.”

“He has loved you since he was eight months old Sadi!” Teeria spoke still stunned as she finally heard the entire story. She knew some of it... small bits and pieces that Sadi had told her over the years, but never the full story. “Gods girl... how much more romantic than that can you get?”

“The first eligible bachelor Prince in the history of the Union, and he’s been in love with you all this time!” Palta spoke. “That is so unfair!” She squeezed Sadi’s arm again tightly and gave her a friendly nudge. “Of course... there are still three others!”

Sadi laughed aloud and squeezed Palta’s hand, rubbing up against her. “You are so bad Palta.” She spoke softly leaning her head close to her friend.

“He’s been in your dreams all this time?” One of the other female Cadets asked more curious than the others.

Sadi nodded slowly and looked at the cadet who had asked the question. “I never had a clear picture of his face, just his eyes behind the helmet.” She spoke softly. “But it has been him yes.”

“That is why your Mindvoice powers became so strong isn’t it?” Palta asked, “Because of his dragon?”

Sadi nodded. “And Androcles. When Elynth touched me that first night.” She explained. “She... she made the connection. After it was all over, The First oracle selected me to study at the School of the Mages. I... I completed three years on Apo Prime and then another three over the following years during months where I was doing nothing. I..." Sadi stopped and a look of pure passion filtered across her face as she felt him. His aura was so strong and clear and pulsing for her... and he was coming for her she knew.

"Sadi... Sadi what's wrong?" Teeria asked. "You..."

"He's here!" One of the other cadets hissed.

All but Sadi turned to the entrance of the mess lounge behind them. They saw Andro come in with one of the Durcunusaan Commanders and they were talking in soft whispers. He nodded and then his azure eyes fell upon Sadi's back. The others watched as he made his way to where she sat and Sadi felt his arm curl slowly around her waist as he squatted behind her and then his face was next to hers, nuzzling her cheek and ear and signaling his intent for all to see. And he didn't care who saw how it appeared, which made Sadi's blood scream out in joy.

"Hello KertaGai." He spoke softly into her ear.

"And... Androcles." Sadi spoke in barely a whisper her eyes half open at the delight that was surging through her.

"Have you eaten your dinner KertaGai?" Andro asked leaning closer to her and sliding his arm further around her waist as his cheek brushed gently against hers.

"Yes Milord." Sadi replied her eyes completely open now and burning with desire as she felt his aura sweep around her and the heat from his arm around her waist almost burning her skin.

"Good." Andro spoke. He lifted his head suddenly and looked at Sadi's friends almost scaring them with the brightness of his azure eyes as the light in the mess lounge reflected off of them. "If you will excuse me ladies... I'm going to borrow Cadet Sadi here for the next few hours. There are some things I would like to show her."

Sadi gasped in surprised when his arm tightened around her waist and he pulled her from the bench, tossing her legs up into the air and catching them with his opposite arm until she was quite securely held in his grasp, her arms around his neck. Teeria and Palta and the rest of the cadets could only watch with knowing smiles on their faces as Andro turned and headed for the entrance.

"What does that mean?" A Cadet asked, "Ker... KertaGai? It's the ancient language isn't it?"

Teeria shook her head. "I don't know what it means... but I do know he's called her that before."

"It means Eternal Heart." The female voice from the next table answered. They turned and saw the female elf Spartan smile. "In the ancient language... it means Eternal Heart."

"A few hours my ass," Palta spoke with a smile as she turned back to her friends. "More like a few millennia!"

Sadi's eyes never left his handsome face as he walked confidently down the corridor of the SCIMITAR. He carried her as easily as one would carry a child, without any effort in the least. She could feel his confidence flowing through him. Teeria had been right; his aura was so powerful, it was leaking through his Mindvoice Shields and it caused slow burning fires to ignite in her belly as she realized that aura burned only for her.

"Andro... Andro where are you taking me? Are you forgoing what you told me yourself? That you would conduct yourself in the proper Spartan fashion?" Sadi finally asked him, trying very much to keep control of her own burning need.

"As I told your friends... there are some things I want to show you." Andro replied easily as he looked into her stunning green eyes.

"Andro... I don't know if I am ready..." Sadi tried to force the words out as her mind screamed for her not to not give in so easily, while her heart and body simply craved his touch upon her.

Androcles stopped in the middle of the corridor and looked at her. "Ready for what?" He asked.

"You... you are taking me to... to your quarters aren't you?" Sadi spoke softly, her fingers reaching up to stroke his cheek and goatee. "To... to claim me. I... I don't think... there are some things I would have liked to do before that took place Andro. To... to make myself at least acceptable to you. I haven't fully washed the grime from my body after our little trip to the planet and I... I want to be perfect for you."

"Sadi you are already perfect to me." He said with a smile. "You think I took you from the mess lounge in front of your friends so that I could take you to my quarters and claim you now... on my ship?" He asked surprised. "You think I would do that for all your friends to see? My blood may burn for you hotter than it ever has KertaGai... but I would not disrespect you in such a way. I have told you what my intentions are, and I intend to stick to them, no matter how hard it becomes.” He began walking again.

“Andro... I... I am so much older...” Sadi’s mind tried grasping at the last obstacle that kept her from surrendering to what her heart wanted so badly. Androcles beat her to it.

“What is a hundred years to our people Sadi?” He stopped walking again as a look of worry flashed across his face. “Sadi... am I truly what you desire? Tell me now if you do not wish to be with me. I will understand. I may not like it but I would understand.”

Sadi shook her head so hard she thought she pulled a muscle in her neck. “Carians... no Andro!” She gasped as she took his face between her hands and kissed him as passionately as she could considering the position she was in. It was a kiss he eagerly returned right there in the middle of the corridor and those who passed by and saw could only grin. Sadi pulled away quickly and looked at him. “I... I have loved you since those nights on the island Andro. I may have denied it then, denied what I felt was the truth for so long... but being here with you now... it has all become so clear to me. We were meant for each other.”

“I have my father’s memories KertaGai. My grandfather’s memories. I have seen all they have done, everywhere they have gone, and everything they knew and now know. I have seen ancient Sparta at its peak; the raging black walls of Thermopylae where my grandfather rests, and the burning deserts of the Middle East on Earth where my father was forged in the fires of combat.” Andro spoke softly. “Yes... I may only be twenty-six years old... but I am so much more, though there are times when I wish others would not look at me as they do. My father and I both. We are not gods... we have our failings. I have loved you since I was eight months old Sadi... not a day has gone by that I have not in some way thought of you. I can’t explain it, I told you that, but if it feels so right... how can it be wrong?”

Sadi shook her head quickly. “It’s... it’s not wrong. NO!” She spoke softly, running her finger across his lips. She would not deny what she felt any longer. She couldn’t deny it even if she wanted to... and she surely did not want to. Not anymore. “No... because it is what I want as well.”

“I have waited all this time KertaGai... I can wait a few more days so that it will be just as I have imagined. As it should be with someone of your beauty and intelligence.” Androcles spoke. “And you could have just fallen into a pool of mud and you would still be as beautiful to me as you are now. I would take great pleasure in removing that mud from your body with only my tongue if you asked me.”

Sadi laughed softly at his words and leaned forward, kissing him again deeply, loving the texture of his lips upon hers and relishing in the flavor of his tongue. She pulled away after a moment and gazed at him. “Well... I will attempt to make sure that does not happen. Or at the very least have a bottle of wine next to our bed just in case something of that nature befalls us.”

Andro nuzzled her cheek and neck. “I have something I want to show you.” He spoke. “Just as I told your friends.”

“Then... then where were you taking me when you swept me off my feet?” Sadi asked with a smile of love, desire and passion. “Not that I mind being carried all over your ship mind you.”

Androcles smiled and moved to the elevator lift, pressing the button to call it. It came in seconds and he stepped into the Lift and touched the panel once more. The elevator began to move quickly as he lowered her to the floor but didn’t release her from his grasp. Within a few seconds it stopped and the doors opened into a dimly lit area that was completely wide open. As they stepped from the elevator, Sadi took in the cave like walls and the artificial lighting. She looked at him with a questioning glance.

“Andro! Sadi!” She heard Gorgo’s voice call. “It’s about time! We thought we had lost you as well!”

Sadi’s head snapped around and she saw most of Andro’s family. Gorgo, For’mya, Aricia, Anja, Resumar, Eliani... all of them gathered around the obviously fake rock pit fire. Around all of them sat their dragons, each gnawing on the enormous bones. All around the deck she could see other dragons as well. “Andro... this is...”

Androcles nodded. “Yes. This is the aft portion of deck ten. We call it the Dragon Den. It’s much smaller than what they are used to, and they can’t fly, but at least it gives them some semblance of home. This is where we come to relax when we are out here among the stars. To focus ourselves and think of quieter times. Come... they have my mother’s coffee, and we need to get a mug before they drink it all.”

“Andro I don’t belong...”

“Yes Sadi... you do belong here.” Andro spoke pulling her close to him. “You have always belonged here. Now come...”

Sadi let him pull her towards the small group and as each step passed Sadi grew more confident in what was racing through her. By the time they had reached the sitting men and women, Sadi no longer cared what others might think, or what they would see. This is where she belonged, of that she no longer had any whisper of doubt. She saw For'mya's eyes fall on her as they walked up and she bowed her head slightly with a knowing gaze.

Andro gripped her hand tightly as he settled to the dirt that had been spread out on the deck within the dragon den, and then he pulled Sadi into his lap, nuzzling the back of her neck in a gentle caress that had her eyes half closing and her heart racing.

“Where are Deni and Lisi?” Andro asked finally as his mother handed him two mugs of coffee.

Aricia laughed as she leaned back and sipped her coffee and then leaned against For'mya. “Your brother is chasing the tail of a young female wolf that works in Astrophysics I believe.” She answered.

Resumar chuckled. “He thinks he is going to get lucky tonight.” He spoke.

Eliani punched her brother's arm. “You're such a pig Res!” She berated him with a smile. “And Lisi is on duty on the flight deck. She lost a bet playing Petteia and now she has to work her friend's shift.”

“She loses a lot at Petteia, did anyone notice that.” Anja said with a grin. “Perhaps she should stop playing for a while or at the very least get some lessons.”

“I've told her that mother.” Eliani said with a chuckle. “You know how pig headed she can be. She is far too much like father. We should get Denali to teach her... I don't think I've ever seen him lose at Petteia.”

Aricia laughed out loud again. “As if any of you are any different from your father.” She said with another laugh as she leaned over to nuzzle For'mya's elven ear, causing her elven lover and fellow Queen to shudder inwardly in desire as Aricia made known just what she intended for later.

“Well... they certainly don't get it from us.” Anja spoke with a smile leaning over to nuzzle For'mya's opposite elven ear and doubling the pleasure and desire that For'mya felt surging through her. For'mya smiled to herself. She, Aricia and Anja were going to have a delightful reunion in their quarters, of that she had no doubts. It had been several weeks since she had felt Anja's deliciously long and talented tongue caressing her flesh, not to mention that she hadn't tasted Aricia in nearly as long. Yes... it was going to be a fine night.

Gorgo laughed and shook her head. “Of course not. My son's Queens are the pillar of safe, discrete and intelligent in all of their actions.” Gorgo exclaimed even as she made the motioned of causing herself to vomit.

This caused all her grandchildren and Sadi to burst out laughing at their mother's antics.

Lisisa Leonidas was definitely working hard... but certainly not at what her mothers and siblings thought she was working at. She was currently working at fitting the entire eleven and a half inches of thick, hot pulsing cock into her throat as far as she could without choking herself to death. Her naked body was slick with a fine sheen of sweat and she was stretched out on the bed atop the incredibly muscular form of the man beneath her, the sheets torn from the corners, and her arms stretched upwards. Her hands were spread across the toned, well-developed thighs of the man with her, her fingers curling and un-curling along the flesh of his legs in tiny tremors of pleasure. His hands were gripping her firm ass cheeks securely, his fingers almost bruising her skin as he forced more and more of his pulsing shaft into her throat. His own hands were pulling her hips and dripping pussy down onto his warm tongue and working that wonderful appendage in tireless and frenzied motion over Lisisa's now fully inflamed labia and painfully erect clit. Her watery forest green eyes did not need to see the face of the man she was with as she knew him and his exquisitely chiseled body intimately.

Lisisa was no stranger to men, having bedded nearly a dozen in the time since her father had returned with her to the Union. None of those relationships had lasted for more than a few months because Lisisa was looking for something none of them had and most of them truly only wanted to get close to her father anyway. The ones her father and Andro, when he was old enough, had not run off after seeing the way they treated her, Lisisa had dismissed just as quickly. This man however, this man beneath her was so very different, eagerly devouring her smooth, bald and completely aroused pussy as if it was his last meal.

He was six feet tall and two hundred and fourteen pounds of heavy chiseled muscle and powerful limbs. His body was ripped in the same Spartan definition and manner of her father and Andro and his Alpha male aura could turn her to putty in his hands unlike that of any male wolf who she had shared a bed with. When he nuzzled her in any way, Lisisa's eyes rolled into the back of her head much the way her mother's eyes did whenever her father nuzzled one of them. This man worshiped her body in ways no man ever had, taking hours to simply and completely explore every millimeter of her flesh so intimately that he could make her quiver in orgasm just from his touch. He had done so their first times together, and this was something he continued to do even now.

He was also the only man that Lisisa had ever wanted to taste the blood of.

Lisisa's wolf genes were the more dominant by far over her vampire genes, but Lisisa could still take blood to heal any injuries as well as shift to wolf form. She still retained the ability to blur as a vampire with their amazing speed but her strength was considerably more due to the wolf DNA in her blood. And in the midst of extreme passion, biting her bed partner and drinking small portions of their blood could send both of them screaming over the edge of the abyss of pleasure. He was the only man who had elicited enough of a reaction from her for her to do this. And it was glorious, no matter how many times she did it, and she had done it quite often over the last three years.

It had been almost three years together with him now... and Lisisa never seemed to tire of his touch upon her. She reveled in the taste of his flesh and his blood, as well as his passion. His juices tasted just as his scent smelled... peppermint and lavender... and there were many nights where Lisisa had been content to stay just as they were now and drink his delicious come down over and over as often as she could. In the process she would explode over his equally talented lips and tongue more times than she could remember. It made Lisisa's heart cry out in bliss every time he reached for her in their bed, for it told her he would never tire of her either. He had told her more times than she could recall she was the most ravishing woman he had ever known, and that no one would ever fill his life as she did. He was constantly whispering soft phrases into her ears as he pummeled her tight body into the bed as hard or as slowly as she wanted him to. He would gaze at her with those deep dark eyes she had come to adore as he held her on his lap while she rode him to the glorious peak of pleasure for them both, or when he simply held her wrapped within the embrace of his powerful arms.

The first time with him had been awkward and unusual but incredibly magnificent in its fulfillment... and it almost never happened again thanks to her.

His undying persistence had paid off however, and Lisisa had finally surrendered to her true feelings for him and all that she was after their fifth time together. As their encounters continued and the months and now years passed by, all the rapes and beatings she had endured in the years of her life before her father had finally rescued her became nothing more than distant memories that slipped into nothing. Now Lisisa could not imagine what it would be like without him.

Lisisa groaned in delight as her lips finally anchored around the base of his hugely thick cock and she felt his hard body tense. It had taken her nearly a year to be able to accept all of him within her throat like this, but she had relished the dozens of attempts prior to her sweet success. Whenever her lips anchored around the base of his beautiful cock, Lisisa knew they were both close to explosion and this time was no different. The sweet peppermint taste of his come flooded the back of her tongue surging across her taste buds like some fine wine and she knew he was just on the edge. His legs went suddenly rigid and Lisisa smiled through tear filled eyes as she felt his large balls swell even bigger. She brought one of her hands back quickly and cupped his warm sack in her palm, and this action was all it took. His lower body lifted off the bed, driving his huge cock even further into her throat, and pushing her lips against the flesh of his groin so tightly her small nose was buried in his warm sack effectively sealing his entire length within her velvety throat. Lisisa felt his huge shaft expand even further in size within the prison of her mouth and throat and his balls tightened in her delicate hand. The veins of his thick cock expanded against the walls of her throat and she could actually feel his hot come racing up the length of his huge, near bursting shaft seconds before it erupted deep into her esophagus and scorched its way into her belly.

Lisisa's eyes went very wide when she felt his large index finger press against her tight asshole and she whimpered loudly against the huge cock engulfed in her throat as his finger slid deeply into her bowels. Her hips quivered upon his face and as soon as his finger seated itself fully in her ass, his powerful tongue stabbed out and his lips sealed around her eraser hard clit sucking hard. There was the briefest moment of delicious pain and then Lisisa was erupting as well, white lights splashed across the insides of her tightly closed eyes. Her hips convulsed, her stomach contracting in delirious pleasure and Lisisa exploded as his lips then fastened over her entire clenching pussy and he drank down her juices with the same relish as she drank him.

Tears clouded her eyes now, and this time it was not from having his cock lodged so deeply in her throat she thought she would choke. It was not because he was bringing her to a seventh will crushing orgasm just this night alone. It was not because she was drinking down his sweet come with gusto, as his body convulsed half a dozen times filling her mouth and throat with his passion. Small drops of his come were leaking from the corners of her mouth as she swallowed as quickly as she could, wanting to take every wonderful drop. This time the tears were for what she had found in him. This was the fifth time in three hours he had erupted within her in some manner, and the seventh time he had brought her to a shattering orgasm. He could go on for hours Lisisa knew, for one time they had spent two days straight making love with only breaks to feed their hunger and thirst. He did not tire of her, and she could never tire of him. It was perfect what they had found together.

Yet they could never reveal it to anyone.

It took what seemed like several minutes for him to finish erupting into her warm mouth as she slowly brought her lips back up the length of his delicious cock, dragging the tips of her now extended wolf fangs so very gently up the span of his thick shaft and feeling his legs and hips shudder in delight. Lisisa could feel his own tongue, lovingly licking every crevice of her still throbbing pussy as she finally gasped for air, sucking delicately on the large bulbous head before leaving his semi erect cock to slip from her lips and flop back onto his rippled abdomen. Lisisa's head fell to his upper thigh as his tongue and lips drew every last bit of her own juices from her, sending small tingles of devastating pleasure coursing through her as he finished cleaning her body. He was not the largest male she had ever had in her life; that dubious honor would go to the many High Coven Immortals who had raped her so many years ago. His cock however was beautiful perfection in Lisisa's eyes. It reached so far inside her without pain, far enough inside her to touch places she never thought would be touched, and it was thick enough to stretch her almost to the point of pain. Just before she got near that imaginary line however, the pleasure his cock caused when it was seated fully inside her, made ripples of overwhelming gratification begin coursing through her.

Slowly Lisisa lifted her quivering hips from atop his head, his hands and arms dropping to the bed, her whole body alive with ardor and lust and she turned slowly on the sheets to bring her face to his body and begin the wonderful trip back up his abdomen. She turned her body until it was pressed against his warm skin and brought her face to his abdomen, licking every muscle as she went, tracing every delicious contour of his steel hard abdomen, teasing his own hard nipples with her tongue as she reached his chest, until finally his hands grasped her face powerfully and made her heart sing in joy.

Denali Leonidas brought his half sister's lips to his for a crushing kiss filled with heated passion and love and want. Lisisa may have just swallowed everything he had given her, and he could still taste himself upon her lips, but he had proven to her long ago that mattered not to him in the least. As Lisisa stretched her five foot three inch body atop her half brother like a lithe cat, their kiss continued to sizzle with heat and love. Her large breasts, almost as large if not larger than their mother Anja, crushed against Denali's muscled and steel hard chest. His arms lowering to her small waist and then her perfect ass, drawing her closer to him, melding her lush body to his. His semi erect cock nestled between her thighs and pressed against her smooth and still aroused pussy even as her arms slid under his armpits to grasp the back of his shoulders and she pulled him closer. Their tongues continued their dance of passion for several more moments before they finally parted with soft licks and nibbles of their lips, their wolf eyes and fangs now extended. Denali, like his brothers and father, had dual like main incisor fangs that resided next to each other and gave him a ferocious look when he allowed the change to come over him as he did now. His dark brown eyes were almost erased by the thick band of black and yellow that surrounded his corneas when he changed. Lisisa's normally forest green eyes altered only slightly, one eye remaining the same, and one eye becoming almost cobalt blue in color. Her extended fangs were not vampiric in nature as they were the longer and much stronger wolf fangs, another sign that the wolf within her was far stronger.

"Do... do you realize it has been almost two weeks since we have been together?" Denali finally asked her with a grin.

Lisisa smiled and kissed the tip of his nose. "Twelve days and sixteen hours." She told him.

Denali laughed softly. "You keep count exactly?"

“Of course I do silly.” Lisisa told him as her eyes glittered with joy. She could act like a normal female with him, and set aside her title and role as Princess Lisisa Leonidas. With Denali she only needed to be herself.

“Twelve days, sixteen hours and twenty three minutes then.” He spoke.

Lisisa grinned widely and hit him with her female aura as she realized he did the same thing, seeing his eyes close in delight. He smiled as he hit her back with his much stronger aura, Lisisa groaning as it swept around her and throbbed through her. She was well aware that all of the Leonidas males had staggeringly powerful auras; Lisisa had just never imagined she would be on the receiving end of one of them someday. After tasting his aura, Lisisa knew no other male would ever compare to him. As Denali’s aura trembled through every fiber of her being, Lisisa rested her head on his chest and felt him reach up to stroke her damp, raven colored hair. She adored the sensations of his chest against her large breasts and skin as he breathed deeply, the warmth that radiated from his body filtering through her as well.

“You didn’t have to do what you did Deni.” She spoke softly as he stroked her hair.

“I know... I allowed my Alpha pride to come out this time because it has been so long since I had you in my arms.” He answered with a grin. “You are more than capable of handling yourself Lisi. I know that.”

Lisisa smiled “It felt nice that you did though.” She spoke again. “I so want to be able to show that in public. I want you to cado forn so I can walk around and profess to all that I am yours. I want to not worry about what our parents will do... what our siblings will do. What others will say.” She lifted her head and watched as he gently pushed her silky hair from her face.

“You recognize I want that as well Lisi?” He spoke seeing her nod her head. “And we will have that some day I promise you. You know as well as I that grandmother and grandfather were uncle and niece, even if no one else does. If they do it is never mentioned. We just have to find a way to make that case to our parents.”

“We are only half brother and sister.” Lisisa spoke softly as she traced his lips with a finger. “Could it be so hard?”

“Lisi... do you want to spend your life with me?” He asked.

“Denali you know that is what I want more than anything. Why do you even ask me a ridiculous question like that?” She asked putting her hands on either side of his handsome face.

“And you are the only female wolf I will ever want or need Lisi.” Denali said firmly. “Never doubt that for even a single moment.”

“You know I don’t.” She answered just as confidently.

Denali nodded. “Then we must proceed slowly. I want nothing more than to scream out to the heavens that you are mine.” He said seeing her smile at his words. “Events are much calmer now that the war is three years past. We can move on what we both want... but we must be smart in how we do it. Personally... I don’t think convincing grandmother will be as hard as you believe... because of her history and grandfather. She is who we need on our side.”

“And our parents?” Lisisa asked.

“I will renounce my title as Prince if it means I can be with you forever.” He spoke without hesitation.

“I would do the same.” Lisisa spoke. “Without question.”

“Then grandmother is who we need to approach first.” He spoke. “If we have her on our side it will be much easier to convince our parents and then to convince the Senate. Many of those who reside on the Senate in Sparta know about what we will seek. They were alive when such things were allowed. There is no law forbidding it... I have already checked. We just need to insure we do this the right way.”

Lisisa looked at him her eyes bright with love. “You checked?”

Denali nodded. “What... did you think I was joking? I want this to happen Lisi, probably more than you. I do not wish to have some other Alpha steal you away from me.”

“That will never take place Deni.” She told him. “You should know that by now.”

“Some have tried Lisisa... I know this to be fact. You have tried to hide it from me, but it became known to me.” He spoke running his fingers along her ear and seeing her smile at his touch.

“And if I haven’t told them to get lost... Andro or Eliani have done it for me.” Lisisa said. “If I had told you Denali, you would have gone and done something totally off the wall to get rid of them, and while that knowledge makes me warm inside, I know it would only put what we have at risk. That is what I won’t do.” She looked at him with those devastatingly beautiful eyes. “I want only you inside me Denali Leonidas. I want only your arms around me, caressing me, holding me. No other male will ever make me feel what you make me feel. No one but you.” Lisisa leaned forward and kissed him gently.

“Do you ever wonder why this has come to be Lisi?” He asked thoughtfully.

Lisisa nodded. “I have in the past... mostly in the first few months of discovering what we have, but not in the last two years no.” She answered.

“Did you ever come up with an answer?” He asked.

Lisisa shook her head. “No... but I decided to follow one of father’s most noteworthy pieces of advice.”

“What is that?”

“Never fear the unknown and the treasures it could bring to you.” Lisisa answered. “The unknown brought me you. I have not looked back since.”

Denali smiled in a way that Lisisa knew to mean he felt the very same way. She nuzzled his chin again and smiled. “And until we can be together as we want, I will be content with our meetings.” She spoke confidently. “They do bring out a level of passion from us both because of the danger involved if we are caught.” She said with a smile.

Denali laughed. “When do you have to return my danger vixen?”

“I still have another two hours.” She replied. “Do you think you can curl my toes a few more times in that period? It might be several days before we can have each other again.”

Lisisa yelped in surprise when he rolled over bringing her with him in his arms and ending up on top of her. “I believe I am up to the task.” He said shifting between her satiny thighs as she eagerly opened them for him.

Denali stared into her forest green eyes and drank in her alluring beauty once more. Never in his life did he believe he could feel what he felt for this woman. His half sister she may have been, but her maple and wheat scent was like a drug to him now, and there was no denying that Lisisa was every bit a woman. She was a drug he found he could not live without. Their first time together had been totally unscripted, as they had both been drinking heavily, and had returned to his home in Gytheio where all of them kept villas of some size. Denali’s had been closer than Lisisa’s and they had fallen to his bed in a drunken daze only to awaken a hour later holding each other tightly, keenly aware they were both completely naked. Their first kiss had been awkward but sizzling in its intensity and that had led to a remaining six hours of intense passion and blissful sex.

Lisisa had been gone from his home when he had awoken, and she had avoided him for two days afterwards until he finally cornered her in an alley on one of Sparta’s streets. It had not taken him long to pull from Lisisa that she had in fact relished the events of two nights earlier, far more than she should have. She had said it wasn’t right what had happened between them and left it at that... leaving him alone in that alley with a crushed spirit. Lisisa avoided him for almost a week after that and during that entire time Denali had been very unapproachable and inconsolable. He had all but given up hope they would ever be together again when Lisisa finally appeared at his door one evening beside herself, tears in her beautiful eyes and shivering in the cold rain. She told him she couldn’t explain why she felt for him as she did, and no matter how she fought it, she could not deny what had happened between them. She also could not deny she wanted it to happen again and again. What sealed their union forever was the fact that Denali simply took her in his arms that night; wrapped her in a blanket and held her throughout the night in his embrace. When he had awakened the next morning and she was gone once more he had feared the worst. He had sat up on the couch and held his hands in his face wanting nothing more than to cry like a baby. Until Lisisa came out of the shower smelling of maple and wheat and looking deliciously inviting. No words had been spoken and she simply crossed the room to settle into his lap and kiss him with every ounce of passion, desire and love within her small body.

That day had begun their relationship.

A relationship that had grown more and more consuming than anything they had first thought. They had become expert at hiding what they shared, always careful to make their meetings secret and away from prying eyes and ears. They acted as any brother and sister would act with each other in public, furthering strengthening the security of their secret life and love, all the while making it easier for them to be together. Now no one would question why Lisisa might perhaps spend a night or two at her brother’s villa, or he at her apartment while in Sparta or Eden City or Tuya. And for the times that it might look odd, they were connoisseurs of quick excuses that were perfectly plausible. No one suspected what they shared together.

Lisisa felt the engorged head of his renewed throbbing cock press against her opening, already fully hard and ready to plunge into her depths. She wiggled her hips slightly, seating the head of his cock firmly at the entrance to her moist pussy lips. "I believe you are up to the task my Alpha wolf." She spoke seductively, knowing exactly what tone of voice to use to drive him mad with desire. "What did you...?"

Lisisa yelped once more in surprise when he flipped her body almost effortlessly beneath him and he pressed her large breasts into the soft sheets under them. Her eyes were wide as she realized what he was going to do, and she glanced quickly over her shoulder. "Deni... no... you go so... you go so deep this way! I will... I will not be able... able to stop myself from..."

Denali's fangs nibbling gently on the back of her shoulder made her gasp and cut off her sentence. "I know that Lisi, but your howls are what I want to hear." He growled into her ear while he nuzzled the back of her neck firmly sending jolts of delicious pleasure cascading through her body. Andro had started calling her Lisi when he was first forming words and the name had stuck, yet when Denali uttered that nickname to her in the midst of their passionate encounters it never failed to make her shiver in delight. He spoke that name, her name, with such utter devotion and desire when it rolled off his tongue that it made Lisisa want to weep in joy.

Lisisa growled out her own pleasure as she felt him quickly position the head of his cock at her already sopping entrance and reach around under their bodies to grasp her large breasts firmly in his strong hands.

"Yes!" She cried out turning her head once more and looking at him with lust filled eyes. "Do it my love!"

One plunge was all it took.

One soul robbing, breathe stealing glorious eleven and a half inch plunge was all it took for her to explode in the most powerful orgasm of the night while Denali growled out his own pleasure in her ear. His face was buried in the back of her neck, her raven locks flowing around his skin and his teeth clenched tightly as the friction and heat from her spasming pussy almost made him lose control then. His mind quickly shifted to other thoughts as he staved off his own eruption so that he could thrust into her powerfully, driving her crazy with desire, and making certain he was the only male her blood craved. Denali did not need to show her that, for that was already the case as far as Lisisa was concerned and she did the only thing she could think of as he flexed his huge cock inside her, while pulling her tightly to him by her breasts. She sank her fangs into his pillow and howled out her pleasure as one raging orgasm chased another with her brother's cock buried so deeply inside her the twitching head pressed firmly against her womb. When he was this deeply buried within her Lisisa was utterly helpless to the devastating pleasure that rocked her body, and that pleased nearly tripled when all Denali had to do was flex that immense cock inside her and make her howl out even louder. This time was no different than the others and Lisisa would scream out her enchantment for the next twenty minutes until he blasted her full of his scorching hot come and it was spilling from within her like a river.

Sadi rolled over on the bed, stretching her arms out and reaching for the warmth of the body that had held her all night. The scent of wild pines and lavender filled her senses and the other strange smells of where she was alarmed her for a single split second until she recognized Andro's delicious scent in the air. She opened her smiling green eyes slowly, reaching for the pillow Andro had used during the night. She pressed it close to her face and inhaled deeply of his musky lavender and pines masculine scent and she felt the tingles within her body.

They had sat with his mothers, siblings and grandmother for five hours laughing and talking well into the early morning hours, before returning to his quarters. Sadi had found all of her belongings in his quarters and realized they had been moved sometime while she was gone. She definitely would have to ask Teeria and Palta about that when she saw them again, for only they would think to do something so utterly obvious. Androcles had told her to take the bed and he would take the couch in the living area. Sadi had insisted with a seductive grin that he could sleep with her and hold her if he could control his male urges. Sadi should have said if she could control her urges. That had elicited a sheepish smile and a shrug of non-committal indifference, but he had done as she asked even though Sadi knew having her so close was torture to him for it was just as torturous to her. Andro had simply wrapped her within his arms and fallen asleep as fast as he could.

She had worn only the thin night shirt, and Sadi could feel his hard body pressed up against her as he spooned her from behind. Her eyes had gone wide for a moment as she could feel his immense male organ pressed against her firm asscheeks, and if that was any indication of his actual size, Sadi could only find herself fervently hoping their first time came far sooner than he planned. She had forced her own desires to the back of her mind quickly and nothing sexual came of being so utterly close to him, leaving just two very tired people who reveled in the scents of each other as they drifted off to sleep.

Sadi sat up slowly as she heard voices in the living area of his quarters, and she swung her legs from the bed and stood up. The night shirt she wore was old and worn, and fell to just above her thighs, but it was comfortable and soft against her skin. She ran her fingers through her wild blond hair, and then her nose detected the scent of his mother's coffee. It seemed he drank just as much of it as she did. She moved through the archway from the bedroom into the living area and stopped quickly when she saw him. His personal quarters were large but not outrageously so. She knew he would have preferred much smaller quarters just because of who he was, but the quarters were neat and well kept. There were some decorations around, several holo paintings dotting the walls, mostly of his family and Elynth. Sadi smiled inwardly for she detected the delicate flowers that lined one mantle and realized one of his sisters must have helped him to decorate. She guessed either Eliani or Lisisa for they seemed to be the closest to him. He sat on the large couch wearing only a pair of loose white pants with crimson trim. He was leaning forward, the towel draped around his neck and Sadi saw the scar then.

Or scars.

The long scar was undoubtedly the one he had received during the Evolli War that Queen Aricia had told them of. It was perhaps a one tenth of an inch wide and easily eight inches long. It was almost straight up and down and appeared to be a clean cut but Sadi winced at the imaginary pain it must have caused lancing through his body armor. There were three, quarter inch in diameter scars dotting his upper left back and shoulder, and she had seen the entry wounds from those scars on his chest in the dim light last night before they had drifted to sleep. They appeared to be penetration wounds of some kind from either a projectile weapon like a Spartan 190, or stab wounds from something very long if they had pierced his chest completely.

He told her he had the memories of his grandfather and his father in his mind and Sadi couldn't begin to imagine the battles and wars those two men had fought in their lifetimes. His father still very much alive and a relatively young three thousand and thirty-three years old. She glanced up then and saw that it was his father in the holo image, and he was dressed in a very similar manner to Andro, only black pants trimmed in crimson, and it was very easy to see where Androcles inherited his delicious body from. She turned to go back into the bedroom and give them their privacy.

You don't need to leave KertaGai. Androcles's voice filled her mind clearly as he turned on the couch and looked at her.

Sadi turned back quickly and looked at him, seeing his azure blue eyes on her. I don't want to interrupt Andro. And I...

What?

The last time I saw your father I made a complete fool out of myself Andro. Even after the battle at the Island Palace I avoided him whenever I could out of embarrassment. Said told him. I don't wish to do that again.

Andro held out his hand. Sadi... come sit with me. I have my mother's coffee and this is not anything formal as you can tell from our attire.

Sadi took a deep breath and then walked fully out into the living area of Andro's quarters. The holo disc was the standard military size and as she walked around in front of the couch she came into view on his father's end of the transmission. Andro smiled as she settled to the couch next to him, curling her legs under her bottom as he poured her a mug of coffee. Sadi could almost feel the King's eyes on her and she waited until Andro handed her the mug before she could bring herself to look at the image of his father, and she instinctively scooted closer to Andro's large protective form as she met those eyes.

Martin Leonidas's dark brown eyes were piercing even from within the transmission as he gazed at her very intently. Sadi took in the dark eyes and the flame tattoos that adorned his body. She also noticed the odd tattoo that was almost a brand of some sort placed directly over his heart. His piercing gaze finally turned back to Androcles. "I thought you were going to wait Andro?" He said. "Conduct events in a proper, old fashion Spartan manner?"

Androcles smiled. "I intend to father." He spoke calmly. "That does not mean I can not enjoy the company or warmth of my future mate does it?"

Martin grunted and Sadi heard the very female laughter in the background. She watched as the long, tanned and keenly muscular legs of Dysea came into view and then her lithe figure settled to the couch next to Martin. Queen Dysea was the tallest of his Queens at five foot nine yet her body, while lean, was packed with muscle and very well sculpted even after having two children. She was dressed very similarly to Sadi, in a simple white robe that hugged her lush body and was nearly transparent in nature. The robe however did not hide Dysea's own delicately tattooed frame, though hers were much more feminine in nature and much more colorful.

"That is a polite way of our son saying you don't have his control when it comes to women Nauta Melme." Dysea's voice filled the transmission now. "Did you not do the same with me Nauta Melme?" Dysea spoke as she handed him the refilled mug of coffee as she settled to the couch very close to him. "I shared the warmth of you, Anja and Aricia in our bed in Eden City before you truly claimed me. Claimed us that night. Leave them alone."

"Thank you mother." Andro spoke with a grin.

"I don't have his control?" Martin asked turning to look at Dysea, his eyes narrowing.

Dysea turned to look into the transmission ignoring Martin and the look in his eye. "Good morning Sadi." She spoke.

"My... my Queen." Sadi stammered.

Dysea shook her head quickly. "No... the future mate of our son does not call me Queen. It makes me sound dreadfully old and I am only a few years older than you. I am simply Dysea to you Sadi."

Martin grinned and leaned over to nuzzle Dysea's throat and elven ear and Sadi saw her eyes close in enchantment, just as hers did when Andro had nuzzled her. "You'll still look tasty even five thousand years from now." He said.

Dysea pushed him away after a moment. "Ignore this brute Sadi." She spoke with a big smile. "He has a one track mind."

"You didn't seem to mind last night." Martin spoke nibbling her shoulder through the material of her robe. "I especially like the sound you made when..."

"Enough you pervert!" Dysea barked out playfully. "Our son's future mate does not need to hear of your sordid actions with me and Bella last night."

"Bella didn't seem to mind about my sordid actions with the two of you last night." Martin spoke with a grin. "And you didn't think to complain at the time if I recall Melda Min."

"You are a very bad man Nauta Melme." Dysea spoke looking at him with her emerald eyes.

Sadi couldn't help but chuckle at their antics or the love with which they gazed at each other. They certainly did not act as a King and Queen from anyone's history and it was well known that King Leonidas and his Queens were perhaps the most normal royal family anyone had ever met.

"Father... we were discussing the Evolli." Andro spoke shaking his head.

Martin leaned over and kissed Dysea tenderly before turning back to his son. "What about the frog looking bastards?" He snapped sitting back up.

"Did Uncle Daniel get anything from his prisoner? He was just beginning to interrogate him when he contacted me." Andro asked with a grin.

"A name." Martin answered. "A supplier in The Wilds on Talbor Seven."

"Talbor Seven is a resort moon. I have been there myself." Andro spoke. "How would a weapons dealer come to find himself on Talbor Seven?"

Martin nodded as he sipped his coffee. "Apparently this is where our Evolli friends got their shipment of T19s for delivery. They were just the delivery boys Andro. This shipment was arranged at a much higher level by some very influential people. I'm having Armetus checked into it discretely."

"The only reason the High Coven would be buying T19s is because they plan on fighting dragons in the future." Androcles spoke softly... then his eyes came up quickly and they were wide. "Or... they need them to train the dragons they have against them. The dragon eggs and hatchlings they stole all those years ago. They would be old enough now to..."

Martin nodded slowly. “That’s my take on it as well. It jives with the Mindvoice tremors that Arzoal and I have detected over the last few years. Fleeting tremors... some of which were powerful... others that were...”

“Violent.” Andro spoke.

“You and Elynth have felt them too?” His father asked.

Andro nodded. “When we were in The Wilds last year. We passed close to the High Coven border and it woke us both from a sound sleep. They were not like what we normally feel from our dragon brothers and sisters. Some of them were much darker.” He said.

“Arzoal arrived yesterday with the other five Elders from Elear. She wants to convene a meeting of the Elder Council to discuss this and she wants the four of us there.” Martin spoke. “She’s also delayed the Harmony Ceremony for three weeks because of this new information. I tend to agree with her.”

“What does she think is going on Nauta Melme?” Dysea asked from next to him.

“Armetus reports that his people in The Wilds have detected an increase in black market purchases of the T19.” Martin told him. “Most done by Kavalian sources. They are buying all of them up it seems. That can only mean one thing... the High Coven has been able to bond with the dragons they took and are pretty close to fielding them as a fighting force. It’s the only explanation.”

“So it’s not directed at us?” Dysea asked.

Martin shook his head. “Armetus doesn’t think so. Not including Mjolnir’s Hand, we can field nearly a thousand Bonded Pairs. We destroyed the plans and production facilities for the T19 at the end of the war and we executed the three Evolli responsible for designing and building them. Armetus believes they are buying up any that were left after the war. They bring a tidy sum to any who is selling them.”

“Are we sure father?” Andro asked.

Martin shrugged. “We don’t know anything for sure.” He said. “But unless they have developed their own production plant, the KFI can not field enough of them to fight the Bonded Pairs we could activate if needed. And we know how to defeat them now.”

“What does it all mean?”

“It means, I guess, that the High Coven is back in business. You spoke with your grandfather I understand?” Martin spoke.

Andro nodded. “I caught him just as he was leaving for Sparta. He is bringing all the intelligence we have been able to gather over the last fifteen years. Mainly sensor drone images and intercepts.”

“We’ll go over it at the villa.” Martin said with a nod. “Did you get anything from those who attacked the settlement?”

Andro shook his head quickly. “No. I didn’t leave any alive long enough to question.” He said off handedly. “I didn’t see the point after they tried to shoot Eliani and Tharua in the back. Elynth and I became very upset about that. Jeth and Lisisa as well. And you know as well as I when Denali becomes upset, the sibfla must have really hit the fan. He and Aradace dropped onto the Evolli missile position like a load of angry Bentoli Fever Beetles for what they tried to do.” Andro grinned when he heard Sadi chuckle from her seat next to him.

“Is that why I already have two complaints from the company that built the settlement that you and Lisisa ‘used excessive force in subduing the hostile parties,’ I believe is how they worded it. Jeth and Elynth can make short work of any building they decide to bring down with their tails boy.” Martin asked.

“Nubou them!” Andro spoke sitting back on the couch and letting his hand and fingers caress Sadi’s exposed knee. “They weren’t there and we were. They can kiss my royal Spartan Crown Prince ass! Lisisa and I acted just as we should have!”

Martin chortled and looked at Dysea. “He’s got Aricia’s disposition you know.” He said.

Dysea snorted in disgust. “Like anyone will believe that.” She spoke. “Everyone knows Aricia is calm and patient and that she simply abhors violence.” Dysea canted her head slightly and Andro and Sadi saw his father begin to laugh. “Irral you are supposed to be on my side.” Dysea said as if to the air.

“What about the prisoner father?” Androcles asked.

Dysea laughed now at that question. “He sort of fell down into an airlock as he was being escorted through the landing bay. It was a horrible thing really. It seems your Uncle Daniel also tripped and couldn’t stop in time to keep himself from hitting the airlock release.”

“Sort of fell down?” Andro asked with a grin.

“It’s Danny’s fault he can’t walk!” Martin exclaimed.

Andro laughed and nodded his head. “I’m sure.” He spoke evenly. “We are twenty-two hours away from our father. I want permission to activate our BIP patrols. Perhaps now is the time to begin taking more notice of things along our border with the High Coven.”

Martin nodded quickly. “Do it.” He said without hesitation. “We’ll talk more when you arrive here Andro. I’m going to get a few more sordid moments in with your mothers before my next meeting.”

Andro shook his head and laughed as the transmission ended with a yelp of surprise from his mother Dysea as she leaped from the couch. He looked at Sadi with a grin. “Little bit more information than we needed.” He said. “I apologize for that.”

Sadi matched his smile. “They are very much in love Andro... and it is said he acts this way with all of them, most especially with your mother.” She said softly.

Androcles nodded with a grin. “He does. Sometimes in the most public of places too. They have managed to embarrass all of us at some point with their games.”

“Do... do you have any of these sordid moments prepared for me after you claim me Androcles Leonidas?” Sadi asked with a grin.

Andro leaned over and kissed her shoulder softly. “Perhaps... perhaps not. I can happily arrange them if you like.”

Sadi caressed his face with a smile of her own. “I just might like that you know. I do like surprises.”

“Then I’ll surprise you KertaGai.” He said as he nuzzled her neck firmly sending shivers of pleasure through her. “You should get changed. I’m sure your friends will be looking for you.”

It was then Sadi saw the identical tattoo branding on Andro’s chest. She hadn’t noticed it before and it was not very large, but it was the same as the one his father wore. She reached out her hand and touched it, tracing her finger along the outline.

“This is different.” She spoke softly. “When did you get this?”

Andro nodded. “Yes. Five years ago. My father has one as well.”

“Does it signify something?” She asked curiously.

“It’s a dragon symbol. One of their talons. Nothing really.” He replied quickly. “You really should get back to your friends. I don’t want it to seem like I am monopolizing your time.”

“I’ll never live it down you know.” Sadi spoke. “They’ll want to know everything that happened Andro. I’m quite sure it was them who convinced the Durcunusaan to bring my things here.”

Andro looked at her. “So tell them. Nothing happened... and I’m waiting to claim you in the proper Spartan fashion.” He answered. “I am not ashamed of what I feel or how I intend to conduct myself in regards to you. Are you?”

“Androcles... no!” Sadi gasped one hand holding her coffee while the other went to the side of his handsome face. “Never!”

He shrugged. “They are your friends Sadi. You are confident and strong and it is one of the reasons I love you as much as I do. I will not ask you to alter your life from the goals you have worked towards because I am Crown Prince. I so hate that title.”

“Yes... I gathered that.” Sadi spoke with a smile.

“You still wish to complete the Academy and become a pilot, yes?” He asked.

Sadi nodded. “Very much so.” She said.

Andro nodded. “And Teeria and Palta are your friends and have been for many years, yes?”

“Since we started at the academy. Teeria more so than Palta. We... we shared something a long time ago that brought us closer than most.” Sadi answered shyly.

Andro looked at her with a little surprise in his eyes but he didn’t question her about it. She would tell him when she was ready. He leaned closer and nuzzled her neck and shoulder again, more firmly this time and causing Sadi to grasp his shoulders tightly. “They are still your friends Sadi my love. Do not change who you are over some silly ideal of who you think I want you to be. Who others want you to be. I love you as you are now. Do not change.”

Sadi met his azure blue eyes and stroked his cheek. “You... you are such a different kind of man.” She said softly.

Andro grinned. “Well hopefully that’s a good thing.” He said.

Sadi leaned over and kissed him now, a slow lingering kiss of intentions to come. She pulled away slowly. "It's a very good thing."

Andro slapped her thigh lightly. "Go! I have some orders to issue so you can use the bathroom first." He spoke.

Sadi smiled as she got to her feet and headed for the small bathroom. Andro's eyes followed her with desire and passion until she went into the bedroom and he turned back to his communications console touching the panel.

"Com officer?"

"Yes Milord." The voice was immediate in its reply as there wasn't a crew member on the SCIMITAR who didn't know Andro's voice.

"Put me through to Admiral/Colonel O'Connor at Union Fleet Operations on Apo Prime if you would. Secure priority transmission. Encryption code Androcles nine one four seven nine." He spoke. "Eyes and ears only. If he is not there... find him. I will wait."

"Stand by sire."

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
INQUISITOR
TWO DAYS FROM EARTH LYCAVORIAN BORDER

Aikiro moved along the corridor of the INQUISITOR with unhurried paces, her hand holding the data pad tightly. The crewmembers of Robert Moran's Command Ship bowed their heads at her passing and quite unlike herself Aikiro acknowledged their deference to her by returning the bowed heads with a small smile or slight nod of her own. This was her son-in-law's ship after all, and Aikiro knew he was a stickler for obedience and respect to those in power. He was very unorthodox in many ways, and it had taken her several years to see the wisdom of his method of command. He allowed for mistakes among his people... never executing someone for a single mistake or two. He knew that everyone made mistakes, and he would be the first to admit he had made several of his own. He did not however tolerate repeated mistakes of similar nature, and he crushed those who committed them with the speed of a striking Rock Spider.

Aikiro had decided long ago that her daughter had made a good choice in Moran. The man worshiped the ground Yuri walked upon, as it should be in any relationship among purebloods in Aikiro's eyes, though she knew full well Robert was not a pureblood. His skills and power however rivaled even the strongest purebloods and Aikiro could not deny that. Robert would do anything Yuri asked of him, kill anyone who would harm her, but he had backbone. Unlike her own former husband. He knew how to get things done without using Yuri as the mechanism for his actions. He was feared among the fleet and rightfully so, for six men had challenged him in the first four years after taking Yuri officially as his bride. They had challenged him for his position and Yuri's hand, and none of them lived longer than a few hours after making their intentions known. Moran had butchered them himself with no regard of their status. Yuri would have killed them herself for Aikiro knew she had no desire for any hands upon her except her husband. It was one of the few things Aikiro felt she needed to grant Robert Moran, because of his position and what he meant to the High Coven now. In the fifth year of their marriage and after two of their children had been born, Aikiro ordered that Robert Moran would never be supplanted as Supreme High Commander or husband to Yuri. Anyone who made such an attempt she granted full authority for him to kill without question for insulting him and her daughter.

No one challenged him after that.

It was a move that Robert Moran perhaps didn't like, but Aikiro needed her officers alive and not being killed over silly challenges that even the purebloods knew they couldn't win. Moran had grown more powerful than most of them by now, and he never ceased to train himself right to the very edge. It was not uncommon to see him working in the gyms of his ship or in the rooms he had built into their home of Usu'Ozeib 7. It was almost as if the man was a machine, he never stopped, and that is what Aikiro so adored about him. He had only three goals in his life, and one he had accomplished already by becoming Supreme Commander of the High Coven. The other two were very simple. Love her daughter Yuri forever as he had since the first day she had turned him, and insure the High Coven was never erased from existence. He had no wishes for power, no desire for more than what he had now. Aikiro knew the man had all he wanted already, and his only mission now was to insure that was never placed in danger.

Aikiro trusted him as she trusted only Yuri and Narice. That was the only knowledge Robert Moran needed.

Aikiro entered his small office unannounced and saw him look up from behind the desk. He was always up and moving before anyone else and it was another reason she liked this man so much.

“Empress!” Moran spoke calmly as he got to his feet.

“Robert Moran...” Aikiro spoke as she fully entered his office and allowed the door to close before she continued. “There are not many who I allow to refer to me informally Robert. You are one of them and I would appreciate it if you did as I asked.”

Moran smiled and bowed his head. “My apologies Emp... Aikiro. Old habits die hard... and you are the Empress of the High Coven. I will make an effort to do better. Would you like a glass of Blood Wine? I had the cook prepare a fresh batch just last night.”

Aikiro smiled and nodded her head. She knew he would never really attempt what she asked. He had far too much respect for her to refer to her in informal means and Aikiro could do nothing but respect that. “That sounds wonderful.” She spoke. “Yuri is not with you?”

Moran shook his head as he went to the small bar and poured the dark red liquid into the crystal glass. He turned and held it out to her before replying fully. “She was going to work with Vollenth and the others for a few hours before we met for breakfast.”

“I take it that includes Carisia and Anthar?” Aikiro spoke.

Moran nodded. “Yes.”

“I have told Yuri of my doubts concerning Carisia.” Aikiro spoke. “Her bond with Anthar is more powerful than they make it out to be. I have tried many times over the years to breach their combined Mindvoice Shields and even I have not been successful.”

Moran’s eyebrows went up. “I didn’t know that.” He stated.

Aikiro nodded as she moved to the chair across from his desk. “It may be nothing... but better to be safe than sorry as you are so fond of saying. Her desire to please Yuri in any way to gain her favor may all be an act. I can not say for sure... only that I sense there is far more to my granddaughter than meets the eye. Even after you and Yuri gave her to Thast... she still shows no signs of anger or hatred.”

“Should I be concerned?” Moran asked. “Have her watched perhaps?”

Aikiro shook her head. “She will detect any type of surveillance you may attempt to put on her. She is very powerful as I have said, and she is also quite intelligent. Her comments during the briefing yesterday were thought inducing Robert, spoken with clarity and focus. She measures things before she speaks, and there are times when I think I detect flashes of skills she should not have.”

“What do you mean?” Moran asked.

“Well... her Mindvoice Shields for one.” Aikiro spoke. “They are incredibly powerful as I said, but that makes me wonder what else she is capable of in that regard. I was actually referring to her physical skills however. I believe I may have erred by allowing the Immortals to train her. They seemed to have done too well a job following my orders.”

“Do you think they exceeded your directives?”

Aikiro nodded. “Oh most definitely.” She answered. “However I can do nothing really, for I did not tell them what they could not teach her. After the debacle with Cha’talla we can not afford for me to arbitrarily start killing our Immortals. They are too valuable.”

Moran nodded. “I agree.” He spoke. “I can have Thast accompany us down on the planet. To keep a leash on her.”

Aikiro nodded. “That might be wise. She is not a very large part of this plan of yours, which I might add is quite brilliant. Her only purpose is to learn the skills with her dragon that will help us to defeat the Kavalians.” She placed the data pad on his desk. “I am very impressed by this Robert... this is one of your more ingenious and ambitious plans.”

Moran moved to his chair and sat down. “I know it entails a great deal of risk on our part Aikiro.” He spoke surprising her once again. “However I feel the benefits outweigh the risks to us.”

“As do I Robert.” She spoke. “Yuri and I were speaking last night in regards to the individual missions of your children. You and she are comfortable with the risks they will need to take?”

Moran nodded. “They are our children yes, but they are also members of the High Coven military. Yuri and I both agreed if we needed to use their skills we could not let that fact stop us.”

“I feel as you when it concerns Narice.” Aikiro spoke. “The only thing I don’t understand is why you have brought me on this mission?”

Moran smiled. “That is easy.” He spoke. “The mere fact that you have accompanied us will undoubtedly lend serious credence to what we will present to Leonidas and the Union Senate. Not to mention the only one who truly is capable of going round for round with Leonidas in terms of powers and abilities is you.”

Aikiro looked at him intently. “You don’t believe your wife can face him?” She asked with a little suspicion.

Moran shook his head with a smile. “That is not my intent at all.” He replied sensing her wariness. “I have complete faith in Yuri’s abilities Aikiro. She has grown much in terms of power since bonding with Vollenth. However in terms of abilities, she is still raw in a military sense. I have spoken with her about this and she agrees with me.”

“You have told her this?” Aikiro sounded surprised.

Moran nodded. “There is nothing I keep from Yuri.” He said with a grin. “She knows that Leonidas and the dragons that serve them have formed a unique style of training and a way to increase the Mindvoice powers of those who ride their dragons. That is what she and the others will seek to discover. While you and I work on the other aspect of things.”

Aikiro looked at him impressed. “That dog Leonidas will not be happy that I am within his grasp and he can do nothing.”

“You have done nothing that warrants his anger Aikiro. He knows it was Veldruk who ordered the death of his father and grandfather. The capturing of his mother. Veldruk is dead... and you have led us through twenty five years of war where we have even prospered, albeit on a much smaller scale than the Union. He can not deny your credentials or the fact that you are completely innocent of all Veldruk did. It’s very simple really... we can place the blame on Veldruk for almost everything.”

Aikiro laughed. “Yuri has told me your mind can work in some very devious ways.” She spoke. “Usually within the sheets of your bed according to her, but you can be quite devious when you want to be.”

Moran chuckled. “I will be extremely devious if it keeps Yuri in my bed and allows me to continue to taste her blood.”

Aikiro nodded. “You do not need to worry about that Robert.” Aikiro spoke confidently. “You appear to have a hold on my daughter that few have ever obtained. It makes her stronger you know... the relationship you share. In some ways... in some ways her time on Earth did make her stronger, for she found you.”

“That works both ways Aikiro.” He said.

Aikiro nodded. “No doubt.” She agreed. “Come... walk with me to this lounge where we can enjoy real food and wait for Yuri to join us. I want to hear how you were able to alter what we will show the Lycavorian pigs. It is quite imaginative.”

Moran got up and held out his hand for the door. “I would be delighted.”

SCIMITAR

EIGHTEEN HOURS FROM EARTH

“Vel'bol xun dos talinth Eliani ussta che?” The stunning blond woman asked fluently in the ancient vampire language from within the transmission. (What do you think Eliani my love?)

Eliani Leonidas looked at her image and shuddered inwardly at the sound of her voice. Nyla Sinthe had a voice that could melt even the coldest iceberg and Eliani loved listening to her speak, especially when she professed her love.

It had been the beginning of the fifth year of the war with the Evolli, one of the very last ground battles. The Evolli were losing and losing badly and they knew it. They were fighting savagely wherever they were encountered. She was following along behind her father and Andro with her mother and nearly two dozen other Hadarian Healers as they advanced in the rear. It had been a vicious battle, but a flanking attack led by her Uncle Danny, Resumar and Denali had broken the Evolli lines, but not before they had caused hundreds of injuries to Union troops. All of them were injured as well and nearing the point where they were too exhausted to use their healing powers to save lives. Her mother decided to conduct one more sweep of the smoking battlefield before they pulled back and allowed the second echelon of Hadarian Healers and Union medics to push through with her Aunt Sivana.

Eliani and Tharua had discovered her half buried under several large boulders, the chocolate brown female Firespitter dragon lying beneath her, both of them shredded badly from what appeared to be a T19. Eliani thought she was dead at first until the groan from bloody lips escaped Nyla's mouth. Using her and Tharua's TK power they were able to removed the boulders and discover the dragon was alive as well. Eliani deduced they must have taken a T19 blast full on for them to have plowed into the earth with enough force to dig a furrow in the ground as they had. Eliani quickly saw that she wore the black and crimson body armor of a Durcunusaan Lieutenant. Her helmet must have been torn off by the explosion for half her face appeared badly burned and there were several deep gashes. As Eliani rolled her over she saw that Nyla's entire body had been peppered with deep lacerations and she was bleeding out slowly but surely. She screamed for assistance knowing she could not save them both, and as her mother scampered over to her position, Eliani began to send healing pulses from her hands through Nyla's body. She worked as quickly as she could, knowing that without blood the woman would die. The second echelon located with her Aunt Sivana was still too far back to help and they had a fresh supply of cloned blood. Eliani did the only thing she could think of. She looked into the stunning light green eyes of the woman and told her to bite her. The woman refused at first shaking her bloody head, but Eliani insisted, knowing it was the only way. She used one of her laser scalpels to open an incision along her wrist and she placed that incision over the woman's lips allowing the blood to drip into her mouth.

Nyla Sinthe was a pureblood vampire and she reacted instinctively to the taste of Eliani's blood, lifting her head and gripping her arm tightly while she feasted. Eliani gasped at the sensations that had raced through her, as well as the images and feelings that smashed against her Mindvoice shields. As she herself slumped to the ground and pulled the woman's body tighter, their minds came together almost naturally and the psychic link was formed.

Eliani was evacuated with Nyla because of her own injuries and the blood she had given to save Nyla. Over the next six weeks as they healed, they were never very far apart, and neither of them could deny the growing attraction to each other. Whether it was their new link, or the simple fact that neither of them shied away from beautiful women, it didn't matter. They had shared a torrid and passionate night together before both of them deployed back to their units and that single night remained foremost in both their minds for months. Neither of them expected to see each other again, but seven months later, quite by chance they both thought, they were reunited on Apo Prime as the last few battles of the war were being planned out. They did not find out until many months later that Androcles had planned it that way, for he was the only one Eliani had told of Nyla.

Eliani and Nyla had not been apart since.

Nyla Sinthe was nearly a hundred and thirty-three years old, and one of only a dozen pureblood vampires bonded to a dragon within the Union. Her blond hair was golden in color except for the dark roots and her light green eyes were simply stunning to look at. She stood five foot six inches tall and a hundred and eighteen pounds of ripped feminine muscle, very similar to Eliani herself, and Eliani could never get enough of exploring her delicious body whenever she could. In great detail. She and Nyla had spent hours upon hours exploring each other and making each other scream out in passion. When they weren't on duty or separated for some reason they were always together. As the years had passed, Nyla had become a permanent fixture in not only Eliani's life, but her entire family's as well. Their apartment within the Sparta Estate and their villa in Gytheio reflected both their tastes in art and decorations. When they were on Apo Prime, they stayed with Nyla's parents in a suburb of Tuya. Her duties as a Durcunusaan Team Leader and Bonded Pair kept Nyla close to Eliani, which suited her just fine since she loved the burgundy haired Princess more than her own life. Something which Eliani had given back to her without hesitation. They were alike in so many ways that sometimes it was hard for people just meeting them to comprehend the depth of the emotion and feeling they had for one another.

They both wanted the same things for their future; peace, happiness, a man and children. They knew they would never be split apart by any man, and their tastes in men were nearly identical. They had brought several different men into their bed with them in the last four years, none lasting more than a few weeks. The men simply could not tolerate the love they shared for each other, and at the first sign of this, Eliani and Nyla showed that man the door. They knew they would need to find a man like Eliani's father, a man confident enough in himself to not be threatened by the love and passion they could share without him. Since they knew no man would ever come between them, they were both very content to wait until that man came into their lives. If he ever did.

Eliani sat on the edge of her bed in her quarters and shook her head. She wore the simple night shirt with nothing underneath, and had Nyla been with her she would be completely naked. "I don't know Nyla." Eliani spoke softly as she drank her coffee. "He is without a doubt the most scrumptious man I have ever seen, exactly as we have imagined the one we want my love. Dark hair... blue eyes that just make your stomach do flips."

"What about...?" Nyla gasped in a humorous fashion.

Eliani rolled her eyes with a loving smile. "Nyla... I didn't jump his bones in front of my grandmother!" She exclaimed.

Nyla laughed. "Well... I didn't know! We did the last time!"

Eliani shook her head. "This one is different." Her voice more serious. "Were you able to find out anything?"

"His records haven't been transferred yet." Nyla replied quickly. "I imagine we'll have them here at the school before you arrive. Ussta Che... this man has affected you like no other. If that has happened, then he will undoubtedly have the same affect on me as tightly connected as we are. What is wrong?"

"There's something about him." Eliani spoke. "He's arrogant beyond measure Nyla. He has an ego larger than some mountains I've seen. It's almost as if he is fighting a battle inside himself. Hiding something. And he has a serious chip on his shoulder. But there is something in those eyes Nyla."

"Then knock him down ussta che." Nyla spoke confidently. She knew very well the skills of her lover Eliani and not just within the sheets of their bed as they sparred almost daily when they were together. "Knock him down and see if he gets back up. Then we can determine if this one is worthy of having us both." It was not arrogance on Nyla's part; she knew what Eliani and she shared would never be broken; their deep connection had gone far beyond simple physical pleasure. Both of them were confident in themselves as women and what they could do and what they wanted in a man was completely the same. It wasn't arrogance... it was confidence.

Eliani nodded. "I just might do that."

"I miss you ussta che." Nyla spoke her voice carrying with it love and passion and desire. "You will not be home soon enough. I am going to have a talk with Andro about leaving like this in the middle of the night, taking you from our bed and not giving me any warning."

Eliani grinned at her image in the transmission. "Don't worry... I have every intention of feasting on you when I get home. For several hours at least."

Nyla smiled seductively. "I will hold you to that."

"I will see you soon my love." Eliani spoke wistfully. Nyla blew her a kiss as the transmission faded and Eliani sipped her coffee. Nyla's words filtered in her head and she smiled. "I think I will do just that." She said to herself before surging off her bed.

Malic spun gracefully to his right, bringing his Nehtes training staff across his body in a whipping motion that looked as if it would be quite devastating if it connected on an enemy. He had survived his first real combat test, saved the life of Princess Eliani and now he was very full of himself. He basked in the looks of respect at his skill from those who stood along the edges of the gym and flexed his muscles just enough to make the females wolves gathered swoon at his display. Even though Prince Resumar and several Durcunusaan were also training within the same gym, all the females were watching him. He wore only a pair of fleet pants and was shirtless, his abdomen rippled and packed with muscles, his shoulders broad and powerful and the definition exquisite.

"It won't work." The female voice spoke from behind him.

Malic turned quickly his eyes getting larger when he saw Eliani in front of him. She was dressed in something that resembled a training outfit and instantly caused his pulse to race. The black shorts were skin tight and did nothing to hide the perfect shape of her ass and the outline of her mound. The skin of her muscular and definitely female legs was deeply tanned and looked as if weaved from satin itself. The crimson shirt had only two thin straps over her bare shoulders and held in Eliani's large breasts with what could only be described as some difficulty. Her burgundy colored hair was secured with a yellow silk tie in a tight pony tail that fell to just below her shoulder blades and her soft willow and peach scent was so very enticing, almost as if she was excreting just enough of her scent to entice him on purpose.

Malic bowed his head quickly as he got control of his raging male hormones. "Milady." He spoke.

"It won't work." Eliani said again.

"Princess... I don't understand. What won't work?" Malic asked.

"The maneuver you are practicing." Eliani spoke confidently. "You should dismiss it from your repertoire Enomotarch."

Malic smiled as his arrogance came out full bore now. "I have been using it for many years Princess. It has not failed me yet."

"A High Coven Immortal would see that move coming from a kilometer away and he would hand you your Nehtes back buried in your chest." Eliani spoke confidently. "Then you would be dead and you would no longer need to worry about using it to impress the females who know nothing of fighting, or aren't skilled enough to know the difference."

Malic looked around quickly before settling his eyes back on the much smaller Princess. He had not known she would be so pompous and arrogant, especially after he saved her life. He thought she would be humble and come to him with thanks and praise for his skill. "Forgive me Milady... but if I am not mistaken, you have only fought Evolli warriors. They are a far cry from Immortals."

Eliani's fern green eyes narrowed slightly and she nodded her head, twirling her own Nehtes training staff gracefully in the air. "Use it on me." Eliani spoke.

"I'm sorry Princess... what?" Malic asked flabbergasted.

"I said use your maneuver on me Enomotarch." Eliani spoke. "I'm just a simple female nothing more."

"Princess... I couldn't do that." He said. "I would not want to injure you if I connected even a small fraction."

Eliani snorted at him and smiled. "Enomotarch... you will not connect with me... that I can guarantee you." She said matter of factly.

"Princess... I am considerably larger than you... with far greater strength." Malic spoke. "I do not wish..."

Eliani poked Malic in his sweaty chest with the end of her staff and grinned. All of her thoughts about what she and Nyla could do with him in their bed vanished from her mind now. "What is wrong Enomotarch? Are you afraid I will beat you?"

"Beat me?" Malic gasped. He laughed as his eyes looked around and he noticed all activity had ceased in the gym and all eyes were on him and the Princess. To include Prince Resumar. He turned back to Eliani. "You think highly of your skills Princess. I have never lost a sparring match."

Eliani grinned once more. "Highly enough that I guarantee you will not connect with me in any way, shape or form." Eliani spoke.

"A prideful boast Princess." Malic spoke as he dropped into a fighting stance. "A boast I will have to make you regret."

"Yeah... yeah." Eliani spoke. "Are you going to fight or talk?"

Famus made to move onto the mat once he saw Malic drop into a fighting stance but Resumar's hand on his arm stopped him.

"Let him go Famus." He said softly with a smile.

"My Prince... he means to dual with Princess Eliani." Famus said. "That... that can not be allowed. Sire... she is a Princess!" Famus declared.

Resumar nodded. "Eliani provoked this and you know as well as I do that Eliani will hand him his nor in two... maybe three heartbeats." He spoke. "Who on this ship can beat her?"

Famus looked at him. "Only Androcles and you could do so handily. Princess Lisisa and Denali would have a good chance because they know how she fights and will not rise to her taunting and do something stupid. There is no one else on the SCIMITAR that can match her with the Nehtes. You, Androcles and your father have seen to that with all your sisters." He said in reply.

Resumar nodded. "Don't forget what our mothers taught us as well." He said.

Famus grinned. "I haven't forgotten sire. If there is a low down dirty trick that your mothers haven't taught all of you, it doesn't exist."

Resumar chuckled but looked at his sister intently. He and Eliani were only a month apart in age, and as with Andro, she was very close to all her siblings and almost never kept things from them. He knew Eliani and Nyla were always on the prowl for a man. A man who would give to them what they could give to him. They wanted a man like their father, something Resumar knew was going to be very hard to find. So far they had been unsuccessful, in part because their standards were so high, but he could tell by the set of her jaw and the glint in her eye that this Malic was about to take the first step in determining if he was that man. "Malic doesn't stand a chance against her and I think I may know why she is doing this. Let's just watch and follow her lead shall we?" He said.

Malic grinned and faked a quick slash towards Eliani's head and immediately went into the maneuver he had been practicing all morning. It looked good... powerful and accurate... but as Eliani had tried to tell him, it meant nothing in a real fight against a skilled opponent. And Eliani was a skilled opponent, far more than he gave her credit for. Eliani didn't bite on the head fake as Malic intended for her to do, instead she simply stood her ground as her father and Uncles had taught her. Eliani may have been one of the four or five most powerful Hadarian healers within the Union, but she was every bit the fiery daughter of a fiery mother. Eliani liked to fight... well she liked to spar in training for no one actually liked having to fight for their lives. While she would never reach the level of skill of her brother Andro or her father and uncles, Eliani was a superb fighter with the Nehtes and able to put down most men who thought they could beat her because of her diminutive size. It was a mistake that many had made with her mother Anja, and it never failed to teach a much needed lesson.

Never judge a book by its cover.

As Malic completed his wide swing, bringing the training Nehtes forward to clip Eliani's legs out from under her in the powerful sweep, Eliani did what Malic least expected her to do. It was very simple and quite effective.

Eliani jumped half a meter into the air straight up and allowed Malic to sweep the training Nehtes under her legs without touching her in the least. As the momentum of his blow spun him around, Malic's eyes widened as he realized what Eliani had just done. He attempted to stop his forward sweep, but was far too late. Eliani's training Nehtes snapped up viciously twice in quick succession. The first blow knocked the training Nehtes from his hand, shattering it in two places. The second blow rapped him across the back of his knees with enough force to buckle his legs. As he stumbled to regain his lost balance Eliani snapped out with a hard right hand into the side of his head.

Malic was stunned by the power in the blow more than the actual contact. His head snapped around and he could not stop his body from going with it. The blow spun him completely into a full circle and dropped him quite unceremoniously onto his back in a crash of breath. He grunted loudly when Eliani dropped onto his chest with her entire one hundred and fifteen pounds on one knee and what air was left in his lungs escaped in a rush. She stuck the end of her training Nehtes to Malic's neck, twisting and forcing the shaft down, watching him grimace from the pressure and pain and then she leaned over to look at him as murmurs filled the training area over what she had just done.

Eliani smiled down at him. "I told you it wouldn't work didn't I?" She spoke evenly, not winded in the least.

"Yes!" Malic rasped out. "Now please get off me Milady."

Eliani stared down into his face inhaling his driftwood and ocean scent deeply and gazing into those dark blue eyes. Only one set of eyes had ever snagged her attention like Malic's now did, and she felt a small shudder course through her. “How you act is not the man you are inside Malic.” She said softly never breaking eye contact with him. “Why do you act the way you do?”

“What do you mean?” He gasped still unable to move with the way she had the training Nehtes jammed into his neck and applying just enough pressure to force his right shoulder and upper body down. She had incredible strength for such a small woman, and her soft willow and peach scent was extremely enticing.

“You look down on others. Like you are superior to them in every way. You walk with an arrogance reserved only for the purebloods of the High Coven.” Eliani spoke. “Are you a vampire in disguise Malic?”

“I am no scum vampire!” Malic hissed trying to use his heavier weight to shift her off his chest.

“No... no.” Eliani spoke just before sitting down completely on his chest and smiling down at him, her legs now straddling his mid-section and her shorts covered pussy pressing against his hard abdomen. She applied a little more pressure to her training Nehtes staff for his comment about vampires and saw his face grimace. “I haven’t thanked you for saving my life yet.”

“This is your idea of thanks?” He gasped out the words.

Eliani shook her head, her burgundy colored hair spilling about her face as she pulled the tie from the back. “This is my idea of a lesson from a better trained Spartan to a lesser trained Spartan.” She spoke seeing Malic’s eyes flare in anger for a moment. Eliani looked up and saw everyone returning to their own training. “You see... they have lost interest already. Apparently seeing you dumped on your pompous ass proved to them what they all assumed in the first place.”

“And what is that?” Malic growled.

“That you are not as skilled as your blowhard act makes others think.” Eliani stated. “You just got beat by a woman who has fought only Evolli warriors.” Eliani tried to do an imitation of him with the last few words of her sentence and failed miserably. Malic however got the point and his face flushed red even under his dark skin. Skin that Eliani suddenly wanted very much to see more of and feel against her own. His abdomen pressing against her pussy separated by only the thin fabric was causing delicious shivers to shoot through her.

“I... I thank you for the lesson Princess Eliani.” Malic spat clearly embarrassed now and his anger growing.

Eliani smiled. “Getting mad huh? Because I just embarrassed you something fierce in front of all those good looking females wolves and now I’m sitting on your chest gloating?”

“Something along those lines... yes.” Malic answered honestly.

“Typical male response.” Eliani spoke. “The way you treated Sadi was wrong Malic and even now that she and my brother have found each other, she still says you are not a bad man. Why do you act the way you do? Why do you hate vampires so intensely as your tone suggested just a moment ago?”

“Is that what this is about?” He gasped looking at her. “This is about Sadi? And my distaste for vampires?”

Eliani shook her head quickly. “No... not at all.” She spoke. “If Androcles thought for an instant that you stepped over the line with her Malic... we would not be having this long, boring conversation.”

“He would lock me in the brig?” Malic gasped in disbelief. “Over a female? My career would... my career would be over!”

“To answer your question... no... he wouldn’t lock you in the brig.” She told him. “Is that all that concerns you Malic?” Eliani asked. “Your career? Your distrust of vampires is not something shared among the rest of our people.”

“My feelings and distrust of vampires is none of your concern!” He spat. “As for my career... what else is there?” He demanded. “I wish to be a member of Mjolnir’s Hand. They are the finest Spartan Warriors in the Union. Who would not want to be part of that?”

“You mean what you think the title and status being a member of Mjolnir’s Hand would bring to you.” Eliani asked. “Fame... wealth... love perhaps?”

“All those things will come to me in time. They will just come easier if I have reached the pinnacle of my career.” Malic spoke.

Eliani looked at him. “Pray my brothers or my father never hear you say that Malic. Your dream of one day riding a dragon would come to a painful and screeching halt. There is far more to being a member of Mjolnir’s Hand than you seem to think Malic, and from what I have seen so far, you will not make the grade.”

“You are a member of Mjolnir’s Hand!” He exclaimed his eyes flaring.

Eliani shook her head quickly. “No... not in the way the rest of them are. The bond that exists between dragon and rider within Mjolnir's Hand is beyond what Tharua and I will ever achieve. Our bond is deep and strong... but we do not feel the other's emotions as deeply as the members of Mjolnir's Hand. They... they can tell you what their bonded mate is thinking at any given moment. Andro, Lisisa, and Denali are the only ones who truly have that ability. Resumar and Cemath have a bond like Tharua and I... powerful... but not emotionally as deep as the others. You on the other hand... you can not even speak the ancient language Malic! That is a major prerequisite. With your attitude... you would not get past the first portion of the selection phase. Andro, my father or one of the other instructors would cut you off at your knees.”

“I will learn!” He hissed.

Eliani looked at him. “Like you learn everything else? I don't think so. You don't learn how to become bonded to a dragon Malic.”

“What... why are you scolding me like I am some child?” He demanded. “Why do you even care what happens to me? You have made a fool out of me now in front of dozens of others! Is this your idea of a Leonidas Royal Family lecture? To make me feel beneath you?”

Eliani smiled and looked at him with desire in her eyes, desire that Malic had not yet recognized. “I like being on top of you.” She spoke quickly and then her face grew serious. “Sadi is Androcles's Anome Malic.” Eliani spoke looking at him and seeing his eyes go a little wider. “You know what that word means?”

“It is what... it is what the King and Queen Aricia share.” He spoke softly.

Eliani nodded slowly. “Andro wouldn't have sent you to the brig Malic. He would have killed you in the same amount of time it took you to blink if he thought you disrespected his Anome in any way. And with far less effort than I exerted just now putting you on your ass.” Eliani looked at him and quickly pulled the end of her training staff from the side of his neck. She saw the large bruise forming and Malic watched with wide eyes as the palm of her hand glowed a soft white in color and she touched it to his skin. The pain was gone immediately and the bruise only seconds after it. Eliani let her hand linger on his warm skin a moment longer, letting his driftwood and ocean scent fill her head before turning her fern green eyes on him. “There are many female wolves who would find you attractive Malic... if only you allowed the real you to come out.”

“This... this is me.” He spoke sternly.

Eliani shook her head. “The man before me is not the Alpha I smell.” She spoke touching her nose. “And if there is anything I have inherited from my father it is most definitely his sense of smell. You know he once tracked all of my mothers for four weeks across three planets and six hundred kilometers of frozen wasteland and desert because he had done something to make them all angry at him at one time. Knowing him... he probably did something completely bullheaded and it pissed them off. It's not what he did Malic... they had forgiven him after the first few days for what he had done... but they waited to see if he loved them enough to come find them and to fix what was wrong. And according to them... they called him some pretty choice words before they left him in Sparta and they thought there was a good chance he wouldn't come after them.”

Malic watched as Eliani lifted herself from his chest and got to her feet. He regained his feet as well and towered over her small frame. “I assume there is some point to this story.” He asked in a mildly sarcastic tone of voice, though listening to her talk and the passion in her words had affected him. “If it is even true.”

Eliani looked up into his eyes. “Oh... it's true.” She spoke softly. “I came here hoping to discover something I thought I wanted. Now I am not so sure I want it anymore. You are different than I first thought.”

“What?” He asked surprised at her words.

Eliani took a deep breath before meeting his gaze and continuing. “I am part of a package deal Malic.” She spoke.

Malic looked at her confused. “A package deal?” He asked. “What is this package deal? What do you mean?”

Eliani nodded. “You win me... you win Nyla as well. Nyla and I have been together four years Malic and no man will ever come between us. Not now.” Eliani looked at him with clear intent in her fern green eyes. “Do you want to take me to bed Malic?”

Malic shook his head quickly his eyes growing wide, not sure if he had heard her speak correctly. “I'm sorry... what?”

“Do you want to take me to bed?” Eliani asked him again. “Make me sing your name to the heavens? I can see it in your eyes that you do, and you have no idea how much that appeals to me.”

“I... that... I will not answer that question.” He finally blurted stunned that Princess Eliani was saying these things to him, but recognizing her peach and willow scent and how it filled his nostrils letting him know she was very interested.

Eliani smiled now and stepped closer to him so that he would have no choice but to inhale her scent deeply. “Surprised that I am being so forward huh? My mothers taught me to go after what I want Malic. Nyla and I are not like the females you are used to Malic, can’t you see that? That’s ok... I already know the answer to that question; I can see it in your eyes. I will say it anyway Malic... because I can smell your desire for me wafting off you in waves, and I know for a fact you can smell mine for you. I want you Malic.” She saw his eyes go wide.

“This is some sort of joke isn’t it?” He asked looking around. “Did Sadi or her friends put you up to this?”

Eliani smiled and moved closer to him. His driftwood and ocean scent was turning her on something fierce and she could not explain why. “I want the Alpha that is in there.” She poked him in his broad chest directly over his heart. “When you find that Alpha wolf Malic... use your nose to find me. My scent will be entwined with Nyla’s scent. She smells like sweet buttercups in the morning dew. When you find that Alpha wolf Malic... and he truly displays a desire for something besides his career and what fame and wealth can bring him... come find me. I am a package deal Malic... you take me... you take Nyla. And she is far harder to win over than I am.” Eliani paused and looked up into his dark blue eyes. “Nyla is a pureblood vampire Malic.” She spoke softly seeing his eyes go wide. “If you want me... if the Alpha in there wants me... then he will need to come to terms and get past the hatred he apparently has for vampires. Nyla is not your enemy, and neither are the millions that call the Union home. So... if you want me... you must in turn want Nyla. Something I’m not entirely sure you could do. If you can however, all you have to do is go through my brothers to get us.” Eliani stepped even closer to him and looked quickly around making sure no one was paying attention to them. Malic gasped as her hand grasped his flaccid cock in his pants and squeezed gently. Eliani’s eyes grew a little wider and she gazed up at him with even more desire in her green eyes now. “Wow!” She gasped softly.

She hadn’t planned on doing this but he was so damn handsome and his scent was driving her crazy so Eliani leaned up on her tip toes and sealed her full lips over his, kissing him with every ounce of female aura and passion she possessed, which considering she was a Leonidas, was quite a bit even for a female. Eliani smiled inwardly when she felt his body stiffen as she hit him with her aura. Eliani leaned back quickly after a lingering moment however, to gaze into his stunned dark blue eyes. “That was just a taste Spartan. Show us you truly want us Malic... and we’ll show you how to properly use this exceptional gift you have here...” She squeezed his cock once more. “We’ll show you how to use it to make us sing your name for hours.” Eliani stared into his dark blue eyes smiling. “I guarantee you will never wish for another female the rest of your days once you have tasted Nyla and me.”

Eliani released his cock quickly as she felt it begin to thicken in her hand and she leaned up to kiss him hard once more, running her soft moist tongue across his lips teasingly. “Carians Malic... you taste good!” She gasped softly. “If I didn’t know what existed between Sadi and my brother I’d call her the biggest fool in the universe for letting you get away.” Eliani nuzzled Malic’s cheek softly. “And thank you for saving my life Malic.” She spoke into his ear in a voice that trembled with lust and desire.

Eliani’s fern green eyes twinkled at him with pleasures and delights that Malic could not comprehend let alone imagine and he watched as she picked up her training Nehtes and began to saunter towards the exit. She left him standing there alone and totally without direction or the brain power to do anything but drink in her willow and peach scent and the female aura she had caressed him with.

Malic was speechless for the first time in his life.

TWELVE HOURS FROM EARTH

Sadi stood alone on the steel catwalk that stretched across one side of the Landing Bay on the SCIMITAR. It reached far up towards the top of the bulkhead and this was the first time she had been able to have any time to gather her thoughts about what was happening so quickly. Her green eyes fell far below to the deck of the landing bay and the dragon pens where she could see Andro and his brothers examining and washing their dragons with their much younger brothers Deion, Calyb and Bryon. She had discovered all their names the night before while they had sat and talked about the past and the future. She found Eliani to be almost as quick witted and sharp of tongue as her mother Anja. Carina was beautiful, soft spoken and extremely intelligent and no doubt quite lethal given who her parents were, while Arrarn, Normya and Zarah she had met the night before and liked immediately. Resumar was just as blunt talking and likable as Andro, and he seemed to have a mischievous side to him that he let out often. Most of the time with either Eliani or Lisisa and it ended up with them chasing him all over the ship as she had heard about. She had met Queen Aricia only briefly upon her return from Sparta nearly ten months after the events of the Island Palace. She had made it a point to come and see her and thank her personally for her actions that night. Sadi didn't truly understand why they reacted as they did, for it had been Andro's voice that night, channeled through Elynth that had saved her life and not the other way around.

Sadi would no longer deny what she felt coursing through her. She belonged to Andro in a way that was almost beyond the ability to explain. To finally discover and accept that she had loved him since those nights on the island had shaken her to her core for all of perhaps twenty minutes. After that she no longer cared that it seemed so outrageously insane, for what she felt pulsing through her whenever she was in his arms or even in the same room with him was too powerful to ignore or fight. And she found she certainly did not want to fight what she felt now. It was what she had always desired but something that had remained just out of her grasp.

Looking at him far below, now Sadi knew why.

"He is beautiful isn't he?" The soft voice spoke from beside her. Sadi turned quickly and saw Aricia, Anja and For'mya walk up next to her.

"Of course we are biased." For'mya spoke with a smile.

"My Que..." Sadi started to say and she saw Anja hold up her hand quickly and shake her finger with a smile. Sadi and the others laughed and unlike earlier she became relaxed very quickly now among those who Andro called mother. Sadi nodded her head. "Yes... he is beautiful. At least to my eyes." She said softly.

"Your eyes are all that matter Sadi." For'mya said with a smile. "Just as his father is the most beautiful man to not only the three of us but Dysea and Isabella as well. There could never be another in our lives."

"His father is all we will ever desire or need." Anja spoke.

"Did all of you... did you all conspire with Lady Gorgo to get me to come on this trip?" Sadi asked with an embarrassing smile.

Anja looked shocked. "Us conspire?" She gasped. "We would never do such a thing, that's down right un-Spartan like."

Aricia nuzzled Anja's cheek and chuckled as she pulled her close. "We knew you had never been to Sparta." Aricia spoke. "When Gorgo told us that her class of cadets was coming to Sparta we decided to help things along yes."

"We deduced that if there was nothing between you and Andro that you would still have your studies to keep you busy." For'mya spoke as she took Sadi's hand. "And Sparta is a beautiful city with a great deal to do."

"There are times when the only thing our son fears is his own emotions, much like his father." Aricia spoke softly. "I believe it is something Martin passed down to him and him alone since it appears all of our other children have no problems expressing themselves. And if we did not conspire... as you say..." She told Sadi with a smile. "All of us would be nearing old age before he ever got the nerve to follow what his heart and every sense in his body has been telling him for years. And that was to find you."

Sadi smiled shyly. "He certainly has no trouble expressing to me what he feels." She spoke. "He's done so several times since I came aboard. Quite romantically too."

All of them smiled at that and moved closer to her. "So tell us Sadi... is there some secret you would like to know about our son that we can share with you?" Anja asked.

Sadi glanced far down into the dragon pens and shook her head with a smile. "I believe I will enjoy discovering his secrets all for myself." She spoke.

Anja laughed softly. "I like her... she has guts."

Sadi tilted her head. “There is something... he has a mark on his chest... a brand of some sort. He... he says it is the talon of a dragon and that his father has one as well.” Sadi looked at Aricia. “What does that mean?”

“What did Andro tell you?” Aricia asked.

“He said it was nothing and he changed the subject.” Sadi replied. “It is something isn’t it? Something important if the reactions from the three of you are any indication.”

Aricia looked at Anja and then For’mya before nodding. “There was a ceremony of sorts after the Battle of Alba Tau.” Aricia said softly. “Isheeni’s mother Arzoal... the Dragon Elder Mother... she and the seven remaining Dragon Elders called Martin and Andro before the Elder Council. When word reached Earth and Elear about what they had done on Alba Tau, not surrendering the bodies of the dead dragons to the Evolli as trophies, even though they could probably have left at any time throughout the night sent ripples through the dragons on both worlds. When word spread to Arzoal on Elear of this action, she called a Council of Dragon Elders. Andro and Martin had returned to Sparta to allow their wounds to heal, and the Elders all arrived within an hour of each other.” Aricia turned to face Sadi. “I tell you this only because once you allow Andro to claim you Sadi, you will have a part in what this means. After you are together Sadi, ask him then.” She smiled at her and the light reflected off Aricia’s azure eyes as if often did Andro’s, making it seem like their eyes were glowing. “The Talon is a sign of trustworthiness and respect among the dragons, any dragons, no matter where they reside. It is instinct in them when they see this sign to defer to the wearer. No one but a dragon has ever been branded with a Talon before. Even we were not allowed to attend the ceremony, only Elynth and Torma, for they too were part of what Martin and Andro did that night. Torma and Elynth now bear similar marks as well, under the saddles they usually wear.” Aricia took a deep breath. “Should anything happen to the Dragon Elders, if their guidance can not be sought or received or is in any way lost; only a Talon Guardian can make decisions in their stead. No non-dragon in their history has ever held that distinction, and Arzoal is nearly thirty thousand years old so she would know. It is a position of monumental honor and influence within dragon culture itself and since Alba Tau, Martin and Andro have held these positions. And they will continue to do so until their deaths.”

“You make it sound like it is a bad thing Aricia.” Sadi asked softly. “Why?”

“There is another part to the Talon Guardians that Martin and Andro must now bear on their shoulders alone.” For’mya spoke. “If for any reason a dragon goes astray and becomes an enemy to its people... only Martin and Andro alone have the power to end that dragon’s life. A small part of the Mindvoice power of each Dragon Elder was transferred to Martin, Androcles, Torma and Elynth for this purpose. They could end the life of a dragon in less time than it takes for you and me to take a breath. They are uncomfortable with this role due to the extent and the depth of the bonds they share with Torma and Elynth, and that is why they avoid questions in regards to the Talon brand they both wear.”

Anja took Sadi’s arm. “Wait for him to approach you about it Sadi. We were only joking before, and if Andro is anything like his father, and we all know he is, you will be the only one to have free reign within even his most intimate thoughts. Honor that gift. Treasure it... and protect it for him as we do for Martin.”

Sadi nodded as she took a deep breath. “I will.” She said softly.

“Enough of this.” Aricia spoke quickly. “Gorgo is waiting for us in the forward mess lounge.” She took Sadi’s arm and turned her head as For’mya took her arm while Anja gently took Sadi’s free arm. “Let us enjoy some time the five of us, while our children do their duties. There are advantages to being Queen you know.”

Anja chuckled. “Yep... it usually means we get more free time than most, and that is definitely the best part!”

“Yes it is.” Aricia said. “Come Sadi... there are some things we would like to regal you with as Andro’s mothers. I thoroughly enjoy bragging about our children and knowing that Andro has finally put things in motion, we want to learn about what makes you tick.”

“Wait... how much of this is my father involved in?” Sadi asked.

For’mya smiled. “Only that a discrete tip was given to him that there might be an attempt by a male to ask him for permission to claim you.” She replied. “It is why my father asked him to attend the State Dinner. He doesn’t know who it is.”

“So... your father knows as well?” Sadi asked.

“There are not many within our family circles that do not know of the love Andro holds for you Sadi.” Anja told her as they began to walk. “You might be surprised at how many different lives Androcles has affected since he was a boy.”

“He says that he hates being Crown Prince.” Sadi said softly as they walked. “That he hates the way some people look at him and his father. Like they are gods of some sort.”

“Martin is no different.” Aricia spoke. “That is part of what endears them to so many. But enough of this talk... these are happy times we should be discussing. I would much rather talk to you about what you might like to wear for the actual event.”

Sadi looked at her. “Event?”

Aricia nodded. “He will ask your father in full view of the local Spartan Senate when it is in session. Vorilas has been invited to view the proceedings that day, and as his daughter you may attend with him. It’s all very old fashioned... but Martin did that for all of us within the first three years of being together. I think For’mya told you a little of what he did.”

Sadi nodded. “On the STRIKER.” She said.

Anja smiled and reached beneath her uniform collar to pull out the silk tie. At the end of that tie was a securely anchored glimmering white Rilian diamond, glittering in the light of the catwalk they stood on. She watched For’mya and Aricia do the same. “We wanted to kill him for doing what he did.” Anja spoke as her fingers caressed the diamond.

“We almost did.” Aricia said with a grin. “You should have seen the look on Bella’s face when she realized that Deia’s husband was standing in as member of her family. She was pregnant with Carina at the time, and she didn’t stop crying for four hours after Martin asked for permission. And Dysea’s mother Normya... she about stole Martin for herself so impressed that she was at his actions.”

“We know this is happening so very fast for you Sadi.” For’mya spoke gently. “That is why we want you to know that you can come to any of us to ask anything. The only thing we ask is that you are absolutely sure you want to proceed. Your life will change in many ways... and it will stay the same. Are you prepared for that Sadi?”

Sadi smiled and nodded her head. “I have waited and wondered all this time since that night. Never knowing why I could not find the right man. I thought it was me... something I did to make it so hard for me. Now I know why. It was him. And I do have so many questions.”

“Good... then once we meet with Gorgo... you will have your answers.” Aricia smiled. “And in two days you will step into a new world.”

EARTH CITY OF SPARTA MEETING OF THE SPARTAN CITY SENATE

There were times when she was amazed at how life had brought her to this point.

The memory of their very first meeting so many years ago was etched into her brain in granite and if there was one thing she was thankful for most of all, it was the love and support he gave her no matter what they had endured. The last twenty-five years of her life had been the happiest and most active of her hundred and forty one years of life. The last twenty-five years she had discovered so much about herself. The love of a man and woman first and foremost among them. It was a love that burned just as brightly now as it did the day she and Aihola rediscovered Isra after a year apart and what he meant to them and their future. The intense passion and devotion that had brought her and Aihola together in the beginning remained just as powerful now as it had in their first weeks together in Mountain City. Fate had brought them together and tied their minds and hearts as one, and then fate had given them what they desired most in the violet eyed Spartan who worshiped them both in a way that only Martin and several others could truly understand. Fate had given them Roluth and his endless antics and complete devotion, and fate had blessed them with six beautiful children that filled their days.

Tarifa had not changed in the quarter century that had past since those first fateful years. Her raven colored hair and sapphire blue eyes were still among the first thing that men and women of all species noticed, as well as the four inch pointed ears of her elven nature. The second thing they noticed immediately was the steel this elven female had in her backbone. She had been elected by overwhelming majority to two four year terms as President of Earth, and one four year term as Prime Minister. It was during that last year as Prime Minister with Selene as President that Panos had approached her. It was well known that she was not going to run for any sort of office when her term ended and that she was going to remain home and care for hers and Aihola's four children with Isra at the time. Panos had come to her with an offer that after careful consideration Tarifa could not turn down. With the full support of Aihola and Isra, Tarifa had spent a full year moving their home from Eden City to Sparta and then accepting the position of Lieutenant Governor of the City State of Sparta.

She had been to Sparta often over the years and had grown to love the mountain terrain and scent of towering pines in the air it seemed like all of the time. When Panos had announced he intended to appoint Tarifa as Lieutenant Governor, she had been amazed at the outpouring of support from every facet of the people of Sparta. Over the years Tarifa had come to realize that while Eden City may have been the recognized capital of Earth, Sparta was where the true decisions were made. It was here where the elected leaders of Earth came to hash out their agreements and bills and whatever else they needed to conduct. This offered her the opportunity to see her dear friends very often, and no matter how short their stay might be, Selene, Charles, Lynwe and Layna always seemed to make time to see her and she them. The importance of her role she didn't come to fully realize until half way through her first year in office, but this was not Eden City, and the pace here in Sparta was much more reserved and peaceful which offered far better conditions for the decisions she had to make.

The moment a Leonidas had once more ascended to the throne of Sparta, the city had exploded in not only population but rediscovered history and culture. Martin brought back to Sparta what many had thought lost and that was the history and culture of the former Greek City State. And as with the Lycavorian people as a whole, Martin brought back morals and values to all who resided on Earth now. Though the population of Sparta was made up of more Lycavorians than any other, there was now a substantial elf and human presence within the city and smaller crops of different species that had come to love the slower pace and open air. There was no mistaking whose city this was, for whenever Martin or any of the Royal Family which now included Tarifa by default, were within the expanse of the city itself or the Port of Gytheio only twenty-seven kilometers away, the mood of the people was always upbeat and proud. That mood almost never went away now that the elven female their King called sister sat as Sparta's Lieutenant Governor.

Martin Leonidas consider Tarifa and Aihola sisters if not by blood; then by the actions and experiences they had shared through the years. They were among the few that had total, unfettered access to Martin or his Queens, not to mention they could simply take a Lifter to the villa and the Durcunusaan would wave them through without question. This fact alone gave Tarifa political clout unlike any she had ever wielded, and combined with her undeniable role in rebuilding Earth with Selene and Aihola into the fourth largest trading planet within the Union, no one dared questioned her wisdom, intelligence or her experience. Her Mindvoice bond with Aihola and Roluth also gave her and Aihola considerable pull in matters concerning the dragons, who called Earth home. The senior Dragon Elder on Earth, the Firespitter known as Syrilth, would not hesitate to come to her or Aihola for council as it was well known that to talk to one, you might as well have been talking to both, so deep was the bond they shared with each other. And all knew Tarifa would not hesitate to do the same, for Roluth was Syrilth's brother after all and had become one of the largest and strongest dragons on Earth.

In the first portion of her term as Lieutenant Governor she had helped Panos broker agreements with all the surrounding cities that were rapidly rebuilding with the continued reconstruction of Earth. Athens once more prospered not far away, though the hatred and distrust of so many millennia ago was now long forgotten and buried deep. Gytheio had once more become the Port City of Sparta, and now that is where many of Martin's children as well as those who had returned with him so long ago had small villas of their own. It had taken Panos almost no effort to push through a Bill without her knowledge that appointed her as Lieutenant Governor for life in the third year of her first term. She could hold the position as long as she desired, and to this day, Tarifa had no desire to relinquish that position of honor.

"Tarifa?" Dilios's voice broke into her thoughts.

Tarifa shook her head quickly and looked at the portly senior Spartan Senator. Most of the men and women in this chamber were far older than Tarifa, but they treated her as a complete equal in all things, not to mention they deferred to her on most matters because of her closeness to the King and the unnerving ability to know what he wanted. They met like this once a week in the outdoor Acropolis Senate Chambers that had been used four thousand years ago, except for during the winter months when they would meet in the normal chamber. It had been her idea to do this to honor the role that Spartan Senate of so long ago had played. It was another reason the men and women treated her as they did. This elven female may have been only a hundred and forty odd years old, but she had a sense of honor and history rarely seen and it pleased the older men and women to no end. The Senate had been reduced in size over the years to make it more efficient, and now there were also human and elves who held seats, something that would never have happened before Martin returned to Sparta and assumed his birthright.

“I’m sorry Dilios.” Tarifa exclaimed with a smile. “My mind was wandering there for a moment.”

Tarifa heard the soft laugh from the side. “We do that all the time Tarifa... it is why we rarely get anything done on such a gorgeous day.” Senator Arete spoke from her spot bringing soft laughter from everyone in the chamber.

“Well... we truly only have two issues to discuss.” Dilios reminded them quickly. “The expansion of the Leonidas Memorial and the issue of the former territory known as Chad on the African continent.”

“Chad?” Arete asked. “What is this?”

“Charles contacted me early this morning from Eden City because he knew we would gather.” Tarifa spoke. “Since most of us were already on our way here, I told Dilios to wait until we had all arrived before bringing it up. Apparently sensor sweeps from EDEN Base with their new mineral arrays has pinpointed a rather large deposit of...” Tarifa looked at the data pad in her hand. “Cirimo.”

“Really?” A male senator asked. “How large?”

Tarifa smiled in relief. “Thank you Thomas... at least someone here knows what this is. I certainly do not.”

The human man’s smile was genuine and warm. He had served on the Spartan Senate for three years now and was widely considered to be exceptionally intelligent and handsome. He was a graduate of Charles’s University for Advanced Political Studies, a school that had begun as an afterthought by humans here on Earth, and was now attended by nearly forty thousand students from across the entire Union.

“It is similar to aluminum in how it is used, but much more malleable and considerably stronger. I believe the engineers at our ship building facilities throughout the Union use it to coat the power conduits.” Thomas replied. “It makes them much more tolerable to damage. It is also extremely rare... and quite hard to find.”

Tarifa nodded. “Well... all of Eden City’s Mining teams are on Neptune helping with establishing the permanent colony there. Charles and Selene asked if we would send a team to investigate this discovery.” Tarifa looked at them. “You all know I won’t do anything without the approval of this body... but we do have our own research teams, and they might enjoy the opportunity to get out of Sparta for a time and into the field. It would be an excellent experience for the younger researchers as well. What say all of you?”

Tarifa watched as the men and women nodded their heads and made whisper soft comments to each other. She smiled knowing that at times in Earth’s history debates among political bodies like theirs could go on for days. Here issues were decided within minutes, and if more debate was needed, times for such debates were scheduled and then kept to with strict timetables.

“We all agree then?” Tarifa asked after only one minute. Tarifa watched as each member of the hundred and twenty-three nodded and then pressed their palms to small scanners at each of their seats signifying their positions. The vote was without dissent and it was noted and logged into the computer archives. “I will make Charles and Selene aware of what we have decided then. Thomas... you seem rather interested in this. Would you like to lead this expedition?”

The human Senator nodded quickly. “I was hoping you would ask that question.” He spoke. “And yes I would.”

“Good...” Tarifa said. “I’ll leave you to arrange transport and whatever other materials the team might need. Now... as for the Leonidas Memorial Expansion... I have spoken in depth with Panos and Senior Polemarch Dymas about this. We are all aware how deeply our people hold this memorial site and the significance it has to Martin himself. This is where the remains of his father are interned, as well as the namesake for his son. Our graduation ceremonies for Spartans just completing their Agoges is held there every year. Martin knows how our people view his father, but this sight right now is where he first discovered who he was and saw the vision of his father. To change it in any way might alter that perception in some way for him.” Tarifa spoke as she rose from her chair and began walking back and forth in front of the gathered Senators as she always did when talking about important issues. “The State Dinner is at the end of the week, which all of us will be attending. My suggestion would be that between now and then we broach the subject with Martin. They have begun settling in for their stay here, and you all know how the first two weeks of that escapade are quite busy for him. There is a dinner planned for the family in two nights and Aihola and I will corner him there and speak with him about it. It is he who should have the final word in what should be done. Before we talk with him... what is the consensus of the Spartan Senate?”

Arete looked around. “He already believes that too many of our people look at him in a higher light than he deserves. Like he is some sort of reverent god. And to be honest many of our people do consider him in this light, as well as the Crown Prince because of what they can do. I was not on this senate during the time of his father, but many of you here were. I believe it is safe to say that King Leonidas would not accept this perception of himself either.” She spoke evenly. “They are the most unassuming men I believe any of us have or ever will encounter. He certainly does not act as a King should at times. Just last week the Netnews took images of him shopping in the Western Market with Dysea and Isabella. No... I would like to see this happen... but it must be presented to him in a manner that all of us support. It is not a religious or spiritual connection, but a way for all of us to honor what King Leonidas did for ancient Sparta. Perhaps an additional memorial somewhere as opposed to expanding the current one at Thermopylae. A museum perhaps.”

Dilios nodded. “That idea I like.” He spoke quickly.

“As do I.” Another older Lycavorian chimed in. “It gives us an opportunity to honor King Martin’s father, and it would be an excellent source of the history of Sparta in the early times. Many of us still have items that we could donate to such a facility, and we all know that museums hold the attention of the youth more so than simple marble or granite facades.” Tarifa saw many of the men and women nod at this idea, and she had to admit it was an idea she liked immensely.

“We should explore this avenue thoroughly.” Another Senator spoke up. “It is an excellent idea and not one that can be seen in a light that the King wants to avoid. The other thing we have to consider... we all know how the Queens shield him from quite a bit... they are viciously protective of him as any she wolf would be of their mate...but I believe this is also something that all the Queens will fully stand behind without reservations. Queen Dysea simply for the educational properties it will obviously bring. We all know her stance on education.”

“Ycer is right.” Another spoke. “We should gather in smaller groups over wine and food the next few days and work out all the details.”

Tarifa nodded. “Two days... for then we can present it to the full Union Senate while Martin is in attendance. It will also help that this will be the day Androcles requests the hand of Vorilas’s daughter Sadi in the old way. Dilios... you have that worked out yes?”

Dilios nodded. “He is arriving with L’tian later this evening, and Androcles will be arriving sometime early this afternoon with the remainder of his siblings as well as Aricia, Anja and For’mya. Lady Gorgo is with them.”

Tarifa nodded. “Yes... Isra, Aihola and I will be greeting them as they arrive and we will go to Thermopylae.”

Dilios nodded. “Vorilas will sit with me for the duration of the session. It is his first trip to Sparta and he will undoubtedly be entranced with how easy we make it all appear.”

This brought laughter to all of them gathered. “I understand this Sadi is quite the vision?” Arete spoke now.

Tarifa nodded with a smile. “Aricia and For’mya have shown me images of her and she is exceptionally beautiful. Andro will present himself in full armor and conduct himself in the way of ancient Sparta from what I understand.”

“Now that will be a sight to see.” Another older Senator spoke. “A Ceremonial Mating Ritual has not been seen in nearly thirty-five hundred years. These are the things they do to endear themselves to the people. And they wonder why people love them so.”

“I suggest we get started on what we want to do.” Tarifa spoke with a smile at the senator’s words. “Thomas if you would, keep me advised on your progress with this Cirimo expedition. I will make sure Panos remains out of your hair.”

Thomas and many others laughed once more as they came to their feet. Panos always tried to have his hand in everything and he now used Tarifa as a buffer of sorts. Many knew that he would recommend Tarifa to succeed him when he chose to end his political career, and he left Tarifa alone to handle the more mundane items on the agenda.

Tarifa looked skyward as she felt the tingle against her Mindvoice shields and her face brightened as she felt love pour through her. She felt Dilios take her arm gently and she looked at him. “Can I give you a ride back to the Senate offices?” He asked.

Tarifa smiled. “Thank you... but no. My ride is already here.” Tarifa looked skyward again. [Mindvoice Shielded] I have missed you my Mistress.

Dilios heard the trumpeting roar of a dragon fill the sky around the chamber and he smiled as the carmine red colored Firespitter landed just outside the chamber entrance. He shook his head with a smile and made for his Lifter.

Tarifa walked calmly to the chamber entrance and looked at the diminutive dark skinned female sitting high between Roluth’s broad shoulders. The matte black helmet covered all but her soft pink lips and her amber colored eyes, but there was no mistaking the brilliant white plume crest that decorated her helmet and fell far down between her shoulders.

[Oh... I have missed you more my slave.]

Tarifa smiled broadly as she began walking to where Roluth’s massive body settled fully to the ground, his beautiful rust colored eyes gazing at her with love and devotion.

MENKLA TYPE II-CLASS DRAGON TRANSPORT JAVELIN ONE TWENTY TWO MINUTES FROM EARTH ATMOSPHERIC ENTRY

Teeria and Palta stood with Sadi and the other cadets and new military personnel on the upper deck of the Type II as they made their way towards main atmospheric entry into Earth’s gravitational field. She had spent five wonderful hours with three out of the five of Andro’s mothers and she had heard stories about him and his siblings that had her laughing almost uncontrollably. Sadi could not believe how normal they all were. She doubted there was an arrogant bone in any of their bodies and if that was the case with three of them, Sadi had no doubts Queen Dysea and Queen Isabella were no different. She got many strange stares from those who entered or left the mess lounge they were in. Sadi was a cadet... yet she was sitting with three Queens of the Union drinking coffee and laughing as if they were old friends. Sadi had been right when she told them that she had many questions, and almost every one of them was answered.

Sadi had rushed back to Androcles quarters to pack her things, only to find that Andro had already done it for her. Not that she had much to pack for she had not really unpacked. Her bags were sitting on the floor of his quarters with a datapad note on the top of them.

-You could take only what you need and leave the rest KertaGai. If you would allow me to take you shopping when you get settled in it would make me very happy. I will leave it up to you, but you will not need much in the way of clothing if my plans work as I hope they will-

-Andro-

Sadi couldn’t help the warm rush that surged through her at his words, even typed onto the data pad as they were. She looked down at her three bags and made her decision instantly. She tore through all three and condensed the things she needed most into one bag and then typed a quick note back to Andro before leaving the data pad on top of the bags just as she had found it.

Now she stood with Teeria and Palta watching as the Leonidas family moved freely about the lower deck, rubbing the scales of their dragons or chasing the small children around the huge bodies. They would hear an occasional trumpet from one of the dragons underneath the deck where they could not see, but for the most part it was rather sedate. Sadi glanced over to where she saw Malic standing by the protective railing and looking down into the cavernous main deck. She had never seen his face so serious and for a moment she thought he might have gotten into serious trouble for his actions in the gym with Princess Eliani. That incident and the fact that Princess had so completely and utterly embarrassed Malic had made its way quickly around the ship and Sadi had to give him credit for even showing himself as he now did.

“So will you be staying at the Royal villa in Sparta or his villa in Gytheio Sadi?” Teeria asked.

Sadi tore her eyes from Malic and looked at Teeria. “I don’t know.” She answered. “Please forgive me... both of you.”

“Forgive you for what?” Palta demanded. “Sadi... you are our friend. Our dear friend. I’m blissfully happy for you. As long as you invite us to the party after. I understand the Leonidas family can throw some famous celebrations.”

Sadi laughed and hugged her tightly. “That is a promise.” She said. “I will make sure...”

“Cadet Sadi?” The Durcunusaan Commander Bren stepped up to the three of them with a bundle under his arm.

They all stiffen and stood up straighter and Bren smiled. “Commander?” Sadi asked formally.

Bren held out the matte black bundle to her. “You need to change.” He spoke.

Sadi looked at him questions in her eyes. “Sir... I’m already in uniform.” She spoke.

Bren nodded. “And immaculate it is Cadet. You will wear it enough on the surface.” He spoke. “For now... for the flight down... you need to wear this.”

“Flight down?” Sadi asked.

Bren smiled warmly which surprised all of them for it took years off his face. “Sadi...” They all detected he no longer used Cadet when referring to her. “Milady... whether you realize it or not, and while Androcles has not yet stood before your father, you are already considered a member of the Leonidas family. No member of the Leonidas family ever lands on the transport when they arrive for their six month exodus here. Even Lady Gorgo flies down. I do not remember the last time Andro actually used interplanetary transportation.” They saw him motion with his head into the area below them. “It is a ritual of sorts for them, and the people of the city plan for it for weeks.”

“Plan for what?” Sadi asked.

Bren held out the bundle. “You will see. The Prince already has your helmet with him, and you can change in the port cabin. Your friends can help you... but be quick about it. We are only seventeen minutes from release.” Sadi took the bundle and looked at Teeria and Palta who had stunned expressions on their faces. “Go!” Bren barked softly.

He watched them hustle off to the side of the upper deck with a smile. Never a dull moment around the Leonidas clan that was for sure. And Bren wouldn’t have it any other way.

“He’s watching you.” Lisisa’s soft voice sounded from behind where Eliani was adjusting Tharua’s saddle.

Eliani nodded but didn’t stop what she was doing. “I know.” She said.

Lisisa leaned up against Tharua’s muscular side and looked at her sister. Eliani turned then and saw all of her sisters as well. She grinned. “Oh boy... should I be worried?” She asked.

Carina reached out and took her hand. “This Malic has affected you differently Eliani.” She spoke.

Eliani nodded. “I know.” She answered. “I don’t know what it is. He’s more than his ego allows him to be... I know he is. I can smell it. Something turned him this way. I asked Sadi... but she doesn’t know. She only says that he is not who he projects to others.”

“He’s not... he doesn’t have a stellar reputation when it comes to females Eliani; treating them the way we should be treated.” Lisisa saw Eliani look at her. “That is just from the few cadets I have heard talking.” Lisisa spoke quickly. “Please don’t be angry.”

“I know.” Eliani spoke softly. “I’ve heard the talking as well.”

“Is he worth the... is he even worth the effort then sister?” Zarah asked.

Eliani smiled. “What have our father and mothers always told us?”

“Nothing worthwhile comes without effort.” The four of them answered immediately almost in the same voice.

Eliani nodded. “Nothing worthwhile comes without effort. Nothing ventured, nothing gained. He’s not what he makes everyone think he is.”

“Do you think Nyla will approve?” Normya asked.

“I talk with her every day. I told her about him. We have always desired and been attracted to the same type of man.” Eliani answered looking at her. “I think that is partly why we are so deeply connected. We’ll see what happens.”

“You know he will need to pass the crucible of our brothers.” Zarah spoke softly. “It seems any man any of us choose will need to do that whether we want them to or not.”

Eliani looked at her. “Better our brothers than father.” She spoke. “Father’s idea of testing them is holding a 190 to their heads and asking what their intentions are.”

They all shared a small laugh for they knew Eliani was correct. Their father was exceedingly protective of them and based on past events most male wolves, and most males in general did not attempt to court any Leonidas daughter unless they were very serious. Moneus was the only one who had passed their father’s scrutiny, and much of the reason behind that was because he was their Uncle Danny’s son, and he had already shown his devotion to Carina. It was something all of them hated, but deep down they knew it most definitely weeded out those who were not serious.

“I don’t know... Andro can be just like him sometimes.” Zarah said. “We should all grab a male while he is occupied with Sadi. It will be too late by the time he realizes it.”

Normya looked at her sister with a fake gaze of surprised disgust. “Zarah you are such a pomai!” She exclaimed.

Zarah grinned and nuzzled the sister she considered her twin and closest friend. “Think of the fun though!”

Normya rolled her eyes. “As close as you and I are to our Coming of Age, we need to be careful.”

“That doesn’t mean I can’t tease.” Zarah exclaimed.

“I’m hoping Moneus intends to claim me finally.” Carina said shyly. “He’s beaten around the bush for so long I’m beginning to wonder if he is truly serious.”

“I wouldn’t worry about that.” Lisisa said with a smile. “Moneus has been sniffing you for years Carina. You just might be surprised.”

Carina shrugged. “Well... as long as he doesn’t mind that he is getting the Leonidas daughter with the smallest goldur.”

“How many times do we have to tell you don’t worry Carina? He’ll pay more attention to your mida than anything else. We’ve told you that. I’ve seen the way he watches you.” Zarah said nudging her sister in the shoulder playfully.

What do you think Tharua? Lisisa asked, running her hand along Tharua’s side.

Tharua turned her huge head and her copper colored eyes glimmered. I agree with Eliani. He is not the man he projects to everyone else. When he warned us of the ambush... there was something in his voice that did not speak of arrogance.

Lisisa nodded. Well I trust you more than Eliani when it comes to that.

“Thanks a lot!” Eliani snapped.

Lisisa squeezed her arm. “I believe in you sister.”

“As if your luck is any better.” Normya spoke sternly. “You haven’t been with anyone in almost three years. Your average is falling fast.”

Lisisa smiled. “We’ll see.”

They all looked at her with shocked gazes. “Lisi... you are seeing someone!” Eliani spoke quickly. “Who? What does he look like?”

“Who said I’m seeing anyone.” Lisisa replied calmly. “I’m not... but there are a few prospects that might turn my head.”

Zarah snorted. “Bah... you’ve been saying that for years.” She stated. “You are probably getting some from somewhere and just won’t tell us.”

Lisisa looked at her with wide eyes pleased that no one suspected of her love and relationship with Denali. “Zarah! I would never...”

“Remember to remain in tight formation.” Andro was speaking to the hatchlings and adolescent dragons that had bonded with his five younger siblings. It had happened rather quickly and close together and in the last two years alone, but all of the bonds seemed to be very strong and growing more powerful by the week. “The wind is not a factor... but your mother and brothers and sisters are much larger and will put off a draft as they fly.”

Aricia smiled and leaned further back against Isheeni as she listened to Andro talk. [Mindvoice Shielded] Thank you Isheeni my sister. She spoke turning to look at her azure scaled bonded dragon sister.

Isheeni turned her huge head and looked at Aricia with azure colored eyes similar to hers. [For what?] [For never giving up on me all those years ago.] Aricia replied. [Without you I would not be here. I would not have all these wonderful children... and I would not have my Beloved. Anja, For'mya. None of them.] [I can say the same thing to you sister. When you and Martin came into our lives our entire future changed. I would not have my children to nurture and love. Torma and I would probably be still fighting for our lives everyday. Look at us now... we have the two most beautiful males in the universe and they have given us so many wonderful and beautiful children.]

Aricia nodded. [Yes they have.]

[Our two families Aricia... we will forever be joined together no matter that we are so different in appearances. All we need do is look at the bonds between our children to see that.]

Aricia smiled. [I think I am just missing Martin.] She said. [It seems as if the longer we are together, the more we desire his touch when we are apart.]

Isheeni chuckled. [Then when you return to our home in Sparta... you, Anja and For'mya take Dysea and Bella and lock yourselves within your bedroom until he makes you trumpet in bliss. That is what I intend to do with Torma when we return.]

Aricia looked at her with a twinkle in her eye. [Isheeni... I do believe our relationship has caused you to become somewhat of vixen. You do realize that half the dragons on Earth would give up their ability to fly for one night with you.]

Isheeni laughed. [Let them dream. Only one dragon stirs my passion and desire and we will be together for eternity. He makes my wings twitch in delight with just a simple caress. Much the same as you.]

Aricia nodded. [Indeed.] She looked over to where Anja and For'mya were standing together talking in soft whispers with three of their children. [I discovered what Anja has been vexed by since Seanna's death. I believe she has finally let it go.]

[She is a strong willed woman... and will never give up without a fight.] Isheeni spoke. [All of you are...]

[We are going to talk with Dysea and Bella. We think it is time all of us began spending more time together in Sparta. We have drawn apart in some ways over the years with the war and our duties... but now it is time to rediscover what the five of us share.] Aricia said.

[Was it what Dysea thought?]

Aricia nodded. [In a manner of speaking. I will make some inquires when we reach home. But she has put it behind her now...]

[Good.] Isheeni said. [It is time things became normal again.]

[Well... as normal as they have ever been with our two families.] Aricia said with a grin. [We always seem to find trouble rather easily.]

Sadi could not believe how the matte black body armor conformed to every curve of her body almost as if it had been made specifically for her. This was the newest version of the military body armor, called Mark IV ArmorPly. It was composed of three different alloys with the center layer being an almost transparent layer of Dragon Armor incased in two layers of the newest composite alloy armor. It could stop smaller projectile rounds easily, and shrapnel would not even penetrate it, but the more damage it took the less protection it was able to provide. Such a thin layer of Dragon Armor began breaking down quickly the more damage it took. It allowed for the most incredible freedom of movement of any type of body armor and almost all of Mjolnir's Hand and the Durcunusaan had adopted it as standard. She had never worn something like this before, and she was amazed at how much like a second skin it felt. The collar fastened snugly around her slim neck, and extended down to her wrists where it simply became one single top piece that protected the back of her hands and fingers and left their palms bare. She barely realized that Teeria and Palta had also attached the flowing crimson cape to the shoulder fasteners until after they had done it. The cape was trimmed in black and gold and bore the inverted capital V on it which she knew was the symbol of the ancient Spartans. Only the Durcunusaan, Mjolnir's Hand and members of the Royal Family wore a cloak like this and as Sadi stared at it in the mirror in the medium sized lavatory aboard the Type II, it all became so suddenly very real.

As Teeria and Palta walked out of the lavatory with her, Sadi felt very embarrassed at the number of heads and eyes that fell upon her, even though many of them now knew of her relationship with Prince Androcles. She felt Malic's eyes on her and when she looked at his face she surprisingly found acceptance and even support in his dark blue eyes. At the top of the stairs down into the lower deck Sadi stopped and looked at Teeria and Palta.

"I will see you both in Sparta." Sadi told them squeezing her hands. "I will not forsake you because of what I have found."

Teeria smiled. "We know that Sadi. It isn't in your nature. Besides... we still have classes to go to while we are here." Teeria hugged her tightly. "Go... before you make them late."

Sadi smiled and turned to Bren who tapped in the code to release the barrier arm. As it lifted he bowed his head as Sadi took a deep breath and moved past it.

"Milady..." Bren spoke causing Sadi to turn back to face him. "You are not frightened of heights are you?"

"I'm a pilot Commander." Sadi spoke.

"There is a large difference between flying a STRIKER and riding a dragon." Bren spoke.

"You have flown on a dragon?" Sadi asked surprised.

Bren nodded. "Many times. Be fearless Milady... and above all else... enjoy the ride. Elynth turns faster than any dragon I have ever seen, even her mother, but it is thrill to be on her back."

Sadi nodded slowly and looked down the stairs. She rested her hand on the guardrail and began her trek down those stairs into a new life. She moved slower as she saw Andro's mothers and sisters move over to greet her, and when she stepped onto the deck fully they were waiting for her.

Anja looked at her approvingly. "Anse... he is too much like his father. He got her size perfect. How do they do that?" She said looking at the way Sadi's body armor fit her.

Aricia grinned. "I have always wondered that myself." She said adjusting one of the side straps a little snugger. "Carina... her hair. As you do it for us, which works best?"

Carina nodded and moved behind Sadi reaching up to begin pulling her hair into an extremely tight ponytail. Lisisa removed several strips of the satin ties she wore in her hair and gave them to Carina. All of them refused to ever cut their hair short and Carina had devised a very quick and efficient way to secure their hair in ponytails so as not to come undone while they were flying.

Sadi looked over and saw Andro moving along the cavernous lower deck, Elynth just behind him. He seemed to be talking as he was motioning with his hands but Sadi could not hear anything.

For'mya smiled. "These are all young dragons." She explained.

"I can't... I can't hear him." Sadi spoke.

"None of them are more than a hundred years old." For'mya answered. "A child still in dragon terms and not bonded to any rider. They can not yet speak on an upper Tier Six level. That ability will only come with a rider or time. You are like us in that you rarely lower your shields enough to detect anything less than a Tier Six. The Feravomir taught you how?"

Sadi nodded. "Yes."

"Lower your shields and you will hear him." For'mya spoke.

Sadi closed her eyes and slowly brought her Mindvoice Shields down. It was not something she did very often, and it took a little effort for she hadn't done it in quite some time, but then Andro's voice burst into her mind and she smiled at the sound.

...Mass exit. Maintain your spacing when leaving the ship and form into your pairs when you are clear. All of you have been to Earth before, so you are familiar with the wind patterns. Do not trail too close to our main group as we have the hatchlings and adolescents who have only been flying a few weeks. We will exit six kilometers from Sparta. Those of you remaining with us just follow us, those of you breaking for the Mindvoice ship you may split at ten thousand feet. Elder Syrilth will greet you when she returns from Thermopylae. It has been an honor to carry you here my brothers and sisters. I will send out word for those of you returning to Apo Prime and then Elear when it is time to leave.

Sadi watched as dragon heads of all colors and sizes bobbed up and down and many snorted in a show of respect to their King's son and the Talon Guardian they all knew he was. She looked at For'mya and Anja as Aricia continued to adjust her body armor and Carina finished with her hair.

"They... I can feel their reverence for him." Sadi spoke softly.

Anja nodded. "They know of what he and his father did. That act alone causes them to look at him in a different light."

"He is also the Talon Guardian." Aricia spoke as she straightened up. "How does that feel?"

"It's a little tight." Sadi replied honestly.

Lisisa laughed and leaned close to her. "That is because your goldur are so big." She whispered with a smile and seeing Sadi chuckle. "Andro probably did that on purpose. Don't let him fool you... he's still a man and a pig." Sadi laughed with all of them this time.

"Wait until you have your own man who worships your body like a temple Lisisa." Anja spoke. "You might speak a different tune then."

Lisisa grinned at her. "I just might mother." She said looking at Sadi. "Don't worry... the armor will stretch to fit better the more you wear it."

Sadi met her eyes and squeezed her hand. "Lisisa I am..."

"Nothing to apologize for." Lisisa cut her off. "Knowing that you make Andro happy is all that matters."

The engines on the Type II whined in protest drowning out conversation for a few seconds and then red lights appeared all along the top of the ship. Aricia looked up. "It's about time..." She spoke with a smile. "We have four minutes until we drop. Ready?"

Sadi nodded her head. "I think so." She looked at her. "Are we going to Sparta?"

For'mya nodded as she pulled her helmet on. "We'll fly over Sparta... but we are going to Thermopylae. That is where we'll meet Martin Leonidas and the rest of our family. All of them." She said with a smile.

Sadi's eyes grew a little wider for she knew the size of the extended Leonidas family. "All of them?" She gasped.

Sadi heard Andro's soft laugh and she turned to face him as he came up to her. "Don't worry KertaGai. You won't need to meet them all if you don't want to. I'll spirit you away to..."

"You will do no such thing Androcles Leonidas. They are looking forward to meeting her." Aricia stated firmly as she too lowered her helmet onto her head. The raven colored crested plume fell to just above her firm ass. She looked quite fierce in the helmet with only her eyes and lips exposed. Andro stuck his tongue out at her and Aricia placed her hands on her hips. "You do remember what happened the last time you did that don't you?"

"Mother... I was seven." He answered.

"And don't think I won't do it again." Aricia barked with a motherly smile as she turned to go to Isheeni. Andro waited until she had turned her back and went to stick his tongue out again but she stopped. "Do not test me Androcles Leonidas." Aricia spoke without turning around.

"Andro got busted!" Eliani called out as she climbed onto Tharua's back. "Andro got busted!"

Andro couldn't help but smile as he turned back to Sadi. He lifted the matte black helmet up and Sadi's eyes grew wide. It was an exact duplicate of his helmet in every way, though smaller and with a shimmering crested plume of golden blond hair. "This is yours KertaGai." He said stepping up to her and lifting it above her head. “The color might be a shade or two different, but your hair is so unique in its color it was hard to find a horse that matched.”

“You... you made this.” Sadi asked.

Andro nodded. “Eight years ago with the Feravomir’s help. She is amazingly skilled on top of being the First Oracle of our people. May I?”

Sadi nodded quickly and Andro lowered the helmet onto her head slowly until it was fully seated and the only thing that showed was her eyes and lips. Andro smiled and leaned close to her. “Now you look even more like a fierce Spartan Princess.” He told her softly taking her hands. Sadi let him lead her to where Elynth was fully settled on the deck.

Hello KertaGai. Elynth piped in happily as she turned her head.

Elynth? Sadi said as Andro lifted her effortlessly and placed her in the saddle. Her heart was racing faster now and she looked at him as he used Elynth’s foreleg as a step and climbed into the saddle behind her. Sadi felt him move close and she watched as he adjusted their legs until they were under the Dragon Armor. As soon as they were anchored, the armored skirt like wind brakes tightened on their thighs and calves, securely holding them in place. Elynth...

Elynth turned as she got back to her feet. Do not fear the unknown KertaGai. Elynth spoke.

Sadi heard the groaning sound and looked up as the rear section of the Type II began to split and open up. Her jungle green eyes went wide as she saw the ground so far below. She turned her head quickly. “Andro... how high are we?” She shouted.

Andro looked at her and smiled shaking his head. “You don’t have to shout Sadi. The helmets are equipped with powerful transmitters and receivers. We are at sixteen thousand feet.” He replied with a smile. “A little drop is all.”

“Little!” Sadi screamed forgetting what he had just told her.

Andro slid his hand under Sadi’s where she gripped the front of the saddle. He waited until she spread her hand out on top of his and her eyes watched as the light blue psychic shield activated and began to encompass her body as well as Andro’s and Elynth. His arm slid around her waist and Sadi breathed a sigh of utter relief as his lips came up to the side of her helmet. “Lean when you feel me lean no matter the direction. I will not let go of you KertaGai, but we can not fall out of the saddle. The Dragon Armor holds us in.”

“Andro... Andro I’m scared.” Sadi spoke.

“So was I.” He told her. “Do you trust me Sadi?”

Sadi turned her head and looked into his azure orbs. “Yes!” She exclaimed without hesitation.

“Then you will enjoy the ride my love.” He said.

The lights on the ceiling above them turned yellow and Andro nudged Elynth in her side with his knee making her turn to face the others of his family. Arrarn, Normya, Carina and Zarah were flying down on two dragons who had volunteered to carry them. All four of them were experienced riders though they were not bonded to dragons. Gorgo sat behind Aricia on Isheeni, while For’mya, Anja, Denali, Resumar and Lisisa carried their siblings. This trip only Eliani went without a passenger as she and Tharua carried a large roll on the back of her saddle.

Andro looked at them, Elynth turning to allow him to take in everyone. “We are home once more! All of us!” He shouted. “No matter what stars fill the sky! No matter what moons we see! This is the home of our blood! The home of our hearts! This is where we come to heal all wounds of flesh and mind! This is where we come to be a family!” Andro saw Eliani and Lisisa nod first, followed quickly by Denali and Resumar and then all of them as his words filtered through them. “Let us go home family!” He shouted out. “Into the hands of our grandfather’s spirit we commend our souls!”

“May he guide our actions and thoughts and pick us up if we fall!” They all responded in unison making Andro smile as he turned back around to face the wide open ramp.

Gorgo leaned close to Aricia’s ear fighting back tears. “Anse! I hate when he does that! He’s just like his father!” She spoke. “He could inspire rocks to fight beside him if he needed them to. Now my tears will freeze on the way down!”

Aricia nodded her own head with a smile. “I know.”

The lights lining the ceiling of the Type II turned green then and Andro leaned in close to Sadi’s ear.

Welcome to my life KertaGai! Elynth go!

Sadi's eyes were huge as Elynth roared and sprinted off the back of the Type II into oblivion.

THERMOPYLAE

He walked among the gathered people with a smile and bright dark brown eyes. Danny strode next to him, having arrived only a few hours before. They had been beside each other since they were small boys, growing, fighting and living their lives together. It was widely known that Martin considered Danny his brother in every sense of the word; however that emotion and feeling was not driven completely home until that day outside the Old Senate Acropolis. It was a day that was rarely spoken of now, but it had forever cemented the relationship these two men had.

"...Should probably send a small team to this Talbor Seven and check things out." Dan was speaking.

Martin nodded, the breeze pulling at the gold trimmed crimson cape he wore. The raven black crested plume of his helmet plunged down between his shoulder blades and shifted in the wind as well.

"You ain't going Dan... so don't ask." Martin spoke with a smile as he looked at Danny's helmeted head. "Nayeca is about to pop and if you and Anuk aren't here for that she'll cook my balls in the traditional Drow manner. And she'll have lots of help!"

Danny chuckled. "I was thinking maybe Anton and Cihera." He answered.

Martin looked at him. "Lynwe and Selene's daughter?"

Dan nodded. "She just completed a four year stint with Armetus's Krypteria. She's a qualified language specialist, speaks fourteen of them fluently as a matter of fact."

"Fourteen languages?" Martin gasped. "Damn I have trouble speaking three." Danny smiled knowing full well Martin was fluent in seven languages.

"She's got a Level Seven Clearance, expert with a dozen different weapons, and she's a damn fine pilot too." Dan spoke. "They go in as newlyweds so to speak. Just mated and visiting Talbor Seven for their honeymoon."

Martin looked at him. "I thought Anton and Cihera didn't care for each other."

Danny grinned at him. "No one said they had to like each other. They just have to work together."

"Ok... which one put you up to this?" Martin asked.

"What? What do you mean?"

"Was it Selene or Lynwe?" Martin asked with a grin.

"Shit!" Danny hissed. "Lynwe. She knew you were busy and she didn't..."

Martin pounded Danny on his back. "Don't worry... I was considering them anyway. Armetus already recommended Anton and we were looking for a female elf to send with him. Cihera's got Selene's ears and she hides her vampire skills better than anyone I've ever seen. Cihera just might be the right one as long as they can work together. Tell Lynwe to bring her to the villa in two days when we get together for the High Coven briefing and we'll talk about it."

They stepped up to where Isra stood with Tarifa and Aihola. Aelnala and Roluth rested on the ground behind them and Danny shook hands with Isra as Martin leaned over and squeezed Tarifa and Aihola. Martin had half sisters; three of them in fact from Riall and his mother, but Tarifa, Aihola and in some ways Selene were more like complete sisters to him. They had been through a lot over the years, and while he and Tarifa had shared a smoldering relationship for several weeks soon after they met, it had blossomed into what it was now.

"Your mother has the little ones I take it?" Martin asked as he looked at them holding their hands.

Tarifa nodded. "Are you kidding? She loves it when she has them all to herself."

Aihola smiled. "She spoils them terribly."

Tarifa and Aihola had six children between them, all of them from their beloved mate Isra. The three oldest were split up within the Union fleet, two as Durcunusaan troops, the third was a beautiful half Lycavorian, half Drow elf female who was now the senior aide to Deia. The youngest three, all less than ten years of age remained with Palina when both Tarifa and Aihola were gone. Their home was here in Sparta, one of the closest houses to the villa and even though she was Vice President of Earth and worked mainly in Eden City, Aihola returned every evening on a STRIKER AT to Sparta. Tareif and Palina had also moved their home lock, stock and barrel to Sparta for Tareif was a senior officer within the Lycavorian military and also an instructor for the fourth phase of the Agoges.

Tarifa squeezed Martin's hand. "Martin... what is this Panos has told me about the High Coven? They have returned?"

Martin shook his head quickly. "We don't know for sure what is going on." He spoke as Danny and Isra moved closer to them.

"They were on Ceku Tertius? Conducting weapons deals with the Evolli scum?" Aihola asked.

Martin nodded. "Armetus is reaching out to our people in The Wilds. We'll know more in a few days and then we will all sit down and figure out what to do. He and Deia will be here in two days." Martin leaned over and kissed them both on the cheek. "In the mean time... we have a State Dinner to attend, a graduation to watch, and a dinner at Gallais's place tonight. Let's not worry about something we know very little about ok?"

"I have been trying to tell them that for years Martin." Isra spoke with a smile as he moved up between them both and nuzzled their elven ears lovingly.

"I'm guessing it doesn't work huh?" Martin said.

Isra shook his head. "Not even close."

Tarifa and Aihola both poked Isra in his ribs gently, but smiles dotted their beautiful features.

They all turned when they heard the ancient fog horn like sounds begin to fill the air in the distance and Martin smiled. "Finally." He spoke. "I hate standing around for these displays."

Dysea squeezed Isabella's hand where they stood with Nyla when the sounds of the horns going off reached them. The nearest town was only three kilometers away, and from Sparta to here, every town set off their horns when the noise erupted from Sparta. All of them were dressed in the new armor and wearing their helmets and capes. Nyla had refused to wear such things at first, saying she had no right to wear the symbol of royalty because she was not of royal blood. She and Eliani had been together only a year, and even though both of them knew they would never part, Nyla was not yet fully aware of how close the Leonidas family was. It had taken a week long trip with Isabella and Martin to convince her that she held their daughter's heart in her hands, just as Eliani held hers, and she had tasted Eliani's blood on more occasions than she could remember. The King had told her that made her part of his family. Nyla knew to argue with him about something like that was silly; for everyone knew how the King viewed those he called family. They had decided for official functions and gatherings she would wear her crested and plumed helmet and the gold trimmed crimson cape, and for when she was on duty, she would wear her normal uniform and cape. Most everyone within the Union knew of her and her relationship with Eliani so it didn't really matter. If anything, more was expected of her, something which Nyla accepted willingly and without question.

"Have you seen his speech for the graduation?" Dysea asked Isabella.

"No... he won't show it to anyone."

Dysea chuckled. "He hasn't finished it yet." She spoke. "I offered to help him but he refused."

Isabella smiled. "Ten Riyal says he doesn't finish it." She spoke. "He speaks better when it comes from inside him. You watch ussta she-elf; he will do something completely off the wall and throw the politicians who have been planning this for weeks into a fit."

Dysea nodded. "Of that I have no doubts."

Nyla looked at them. "He has always hated these types of things hasn't he?" She asked.

Dysea nodded. "I don't believe I've ever seen him look forward to this type of event. I speak of the ceremony... not this greeting of our family. He relishes this."

Nyla turned her head even more and saw her parents standing with Deia and her mate and several other senior politicians making small talk.

"Nyla... you still don't question your position do you child?" Isabella asked.

Nyla looked at her. "No." She replied without hesitation. "My love for Eliani goes far deeper than normal. I compare it to what you and Dysea share."

Dysea smiled. "Well... at least you call us by our names now."

Nyla chuckled softly. "My mother and father are still trying to get used to it." She spoke looking back at them. "I don't think they ever realized that I would fall in love with a woman."

"So you and Eliani have decided to stop seeking a mate?" Bella asked.

“Oh no.” Nyla replied with a grin. “But do you know how hard it is to find a man who isn’t threatened by the love we have for each other? A man like the King? We have discarded so many up until now.”

“Well... Nauta Melme is not the only one. Daniel and Isra share the same thing with their mates. There are a few others that I am aware of that have more than one mate. Admiral Joarl for instance. He has been mated to Lynwe, Selene and Layna now for nearly twenty years. Lynwe has a gift that most men would kill for, but to Joarl she is still a woman and her relationship with Layna and Selene is not something that frightens him. It’s all about being confident enough in your own self.” Dysea spoke.

“What do you mean up until now?” Isabella asked.

Nyla smiled. “Eliani has always been better at picking or discovering potential mates for us. That they turn out to be nubous riad aulveds is not her fault.”

Dysea and Isabella laughed together and Dysea reached out and pulled Nyla closer with her hand. “Oh Nyla... you are picking up more and more of Eliani’s traits as well as her sharp tongue. It’s hysterical to watch.”

They all turned as Martin and Danny came up to them. Martin looked down at Nyla and smiled as Anuk and Nayeca broke away from where they were speaking with Vengal and Anuk’s mother to stand beside their beloved mate.

“What’s so funny?” Martin asked.

“Dysea and Isabella seem to think I am taking on more of Eliani’s traits.” Nyla spoke looking at him.

It had taken her a long time to feel comfortable around Martin Leonidas. His physical presence alone was intimidating, and when combined with the aura of confidence and power that radiated off of him, it had been down right frightening at first. At least until the first time she had remained with Eliani at her apartment on the Sparta Estate and gone with her to breakfast the following morning. Then Nyla had seen a part of her King that few rarely did, as he carried two of his younger children screaming through the villa while playing tag with the others. He was yelling almost as loud as the smaller children and she couldn’t help but laugh. Now Nyla felt more than comfortable being around him.

“You mean the sharp tongue and quick come back one liners?” Martin asked seeing Nyla’s light green eyes go wide. He laughed at her expression. “Comes with the territory I guess. Share a bed with a Leonidas and eventually you’ll become just as nutty as the rest of us.”

“You don’t have to sleep with one to do that.” Dan spoke from his place next to Martin. “Hell... just hang around the nuttiest of them for enough years and it will rub off on you.”

“You should know husband.” Nayeca spoke as her hand caressed her swollen abdomen. She looked just as radiant and beautiful as she did the first day she had come into the lives of Danny and Anuk. Dan leaned over and nuzzled her elven ear firmly, causing shivers to ripple through her.

Martin chuckled as his eyes began searching the sky to the south. “Man... I hate it when the boy is late. I’m starving.”

SPARTA
LEONIDAS AVENUE
Café Gallais’s Retreat

Isra’s mother moved around the massive table setting for forty insuring all of her finest plates and silver were in just the right order. This place, this café was all hers, one of five that she owned entirely. She now spent most of her time living on Earth shutting between Eden City and Sparta to manage the café in Eden City as well as spend as much time as possible with her three youngest grandchildren. This is where all of Mjolnir’s Hand and the Durcunusaan came to eat and relax. Her café was open twenty four hours a day, as most of the others across the city were, but it was hers that the Royal Guard and Bonded Pairs came to the most. It was also here that King Leonidas came when the gathering they wanted was too large for the Sparta Estate to handle.

She turned as the older Spartan Demetrius walked in from the rear kitchen. Gallais thanked the gods for many things in the last quarter century of her life. Her rescue from the hell that was Enurrua; the demand for the delicious ancient Lycavorian foods only she could make; the joyful lives her only remaining son and daughter had found; but she thanked the gods far more frequently for this chiseled old Spartan who had swept her off her feet. Ten years they had been together now, and the moment Demetrius had claimed her as his mate, all she had endured in her three nearly four thousand years of life was washed away. It had started with them purchasing the vacant building next to his rebuilt café and then expanding and combining the two and working together nearly every day for six years to build it into what it now was. She watched him with loving eyes as he came up to her reading from the data pad.

“Andro and the others left the Type II just moments ago.” He spoke looking up at her. “They should be over the city in a few minutes.”

Gallais nodded. “Everything is ready for them.” She spoke with a smile.

Demetrius looked at her smile and the natural beauty of this woman took his old breath away as it always did. “What?” He asked as he stopped in of her.

Gallais shook her head and reached up with her hand to stroke his weathered face. “It is nothing... I just... I never thought I would have the happiness I have now Demetrius. You have given that to me.”

Being the typical Spartan that he was, Gallais laughed as he waved his hand dismissively, but she saw the glint of love in his eye that was always there when he looked at her. “I would have been a fool to let another Alpha claim your beauty for his own.” He spoke. “I have been called many things in my three thousand two hundred years... stupid has never been one of them.” He stepped up to her and kissed her deeply. “It was the smartest thing I have ever done.”

Gallais gripped his shoulders. “Yes it was.” She said confidently. “However you forgot to lower the Circle of Horns!”

Demetrius’s eyes flew open and he released her, nearly running over to stand by the long bar and slamming his hand down on the control panel. He and Gallais both moved to the large window and centered their eyes on the clearing only a hundred meters away. The massive flower like object was beginning to lower the huge arms that wrapped around it in a circle. The arms extended to join the three that were already down, each of them with a Nehtes buried into the hub of the cork like center.

The millions of citizens within Sparta knew the significance of this object for they were the ones who had requested it be built by overwhelming consensus. They knew their King had a Union to rule, a Union of thousands of planets and trillions of lives, therefore he could not be within the confines of Sparta all the time. Apo Prime was the capital of the Lycavorian Union, and no one wanted that changed. However, once Martin had decided his family would spend six months of every year within Sparta, the idea for this object had sprung up. There were five inner rings, and fourteen outer rings signifying the five Queens of the Union and Sparta and the fourteen children they had bore their king. The center ring belonged to the King. His Royal Nehtes was standing up from that center ring, while the Nehtes of Isabella and Dysea also were protruding from the cork like center of two of the five inner rings. This told all who saw it that the King and two of his Queens were in Sparta for their six month stay. This day would bring the rest of the Royal Nehtes home and then the entire Royal family would be home.

“How soon do you think?” Gallais asked softly as Demetrius took her hand in his.

“Not long. Elynth is leading them and they will be hard pressed to keep up with her.” Demetrius spoke. “Andro loves Sparta and he is bringing his new mate with him as well. He will want time to pass quickly so that he can claim her and feel her warmth next to him as I feel yours.”

Gallais laughed and squeezed her mate’s arm. “You men are so bad.” She spoke.

Demetrius smiled. “Perhaps we are. But we know a good thing when it walks into our lives. And this young Sadi walked into his when he was still an infant. He has waited a long time for this.”

“Yes he has.” Gallais spoke.

Both of them jumped when they heard the powerful whistle from above and then the Nehtes slammed into the cork center of the ring next to Dysea’s.

“It is Aricia’s! It’s begun! Come!” Demetrius gripped her hand as the horn sounded throughout the entire city and they moved for the door as hundreds of others began to pile into the streets.

Sadi’s eyes were open wide in the thrill of what she was experiencing. It had been the most exciting ride of her lifetime from the moment they had plunged out of the Type II. Her eyes were tightly shut as they plummeted what had to be four thousand feet before leveling out, her hands nearly digging furrows from Androcles arms, even through his armor. When she opened her eyes, what she saw took her breath away. Bright sunshine, sparse clouds and the green of the ground beneath them.

She felt Andro's hands grip hers.

"You can let go KertaGai." He said next to her ear. The rush of the wind was almost muted because of their psychic shield she knew and she could only hear soft whispers as they sped across the landscape beneath them.

Sadi shook her head. "Andro... I..."

"Trust in me Sadi." He spoke.

Sadi had taken a deep breath then and done as he asked. Now she was so very happy she had. The feeling was unlike anything she could have imagined, and she rapidly grew more and more comfortable, knowing that she would not fall with her legs so securely held to the saddle. She felt a moment of fear when Andro's hands dropped from around her waist and rested on his thighs, but that passed almost instantly as the sheer enormity of what she was doing hit her. Sadi was not known as a reserved pilot, many instructors commenting how she could take a ship right to the very edge of her abilities. She was a natural pilot they all said, and now riding on Elynth, Sadi felt freer than ever before. Within moments she was sitting tall in the saddle and like Andro, her hands rested on her thighs. Even when Elynth rolled over several times so that Andro could check the progress of the hatchlings and adolescents, she felt no fear and now she understood what Bren meant by Andro never taking interplanetary transportation. Who would want to when you had Elynth?

Sadi's eyes grew wide when she saw Sparta approach quickly in the distance. Even from their height of ten thousand feet the city was enormous. The helmet implant crackled and she heard Andro's voice in her ear.

"Mothers... would you do the honors first?" He spoke turning to look at where Aricia, Anja and For'mya were flying side by side.

Aricia laughed. "Then let's drop to a three hundred feet and do it my son. Your mothers and I grow impatient to see your father."

"Ain't that the truth?" Anja barked out.

Andro laughed as well. "As you command mother!" He spoke. Elynth my sister... if you would?

Elynth roared into bright sky. Here we go!

Sadi felt euphoria as they once more plunged down, Andro turning in the saddle to maintain contact with his sibling's smaller adolescent dragons. It took only seconds and then they were at three hundred feet above the ground and rocketing over the tree tops at nearly two hundred kilometers an hour, which was as fast as Andro wanted to go with the smaller dragons following. They were able to keep up mainly by remaining in the wake of their larger siblings and almost being pulled along as they had been trained by their parents.

Sadi watched Andro reach down and pull one of the Nehtes from the side of his saddle and fully extend it as they sped over the tops of the edge of Sparta. He looked at her. "It is a ritual of sorts for us." He spoke his voice carrying easily through the comlink. "The people of Sparta came up with the idea. Whenever we return for our six months we all plunge our Nehtes into this contraption that was built to signify we are within the city limits or Gytheio." He turned. "Mother would you take the lead! We're coming up on Gallais's Retreat!"

Aricia smiled under her helmet, her Nehtes fully extended, and Isheeni pulled ahead of Elynth with Aurith and Miath not far behind. They formed into a single line and Sadi then saw Aricia throw her Nehtes downward powerfully until it disappeared from sight. Anja and then For'mya quickly followed suit. She could just barely hear the noise of a horn going off below them as she watched Andro lift his arm and thrust his Nehtes downward. Sadi turned her head to see his remaining older siblings doing the same thing, and last was Eliani who immediately after throwing hers towards the ground reached behind her and unraveled the roll behind her. Five much smaller Nehtes rolled off the saddle and Sadi watched as Andro, his mothers and Lisisa caught them within their TK grip, pointed them straight down and use their TK power to thrust them downward in rapid succession. Sadi could hear the horns sounding easily now, as well as the roar and clapping of what appeared to be hundreds of people lining the streets below from what she could see. She felt the swell of pride race through her, as well as the one that coursed through Andro's body as well.

Last one to Thermopylae collects the Nehtes! Aricia's voice boomed out within Mindvoice.

Sadi's head turned quickly and she saw the three Queens crouch lower in the saddle and their dragons rocketed away heading north.

Ah let them go! Lisisa called out. We'll never catch Isheeni!

Andro laughed and nodded his head. All of you go! I'll be last. I want to show KertaGai the path grandfather took to Thermopylae from the air before we land.

Sadi watched as his siblings nodded and changed course quickly moving away with the smaller dragons in tow headed north. She turned her head and looked at him as his arms snaked around her waist and pulled her close against his body.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Andro?]

Androcles smiled at her. [I just wanted to have a few minutes alone before we arrive.] He spoke.

[You must wait until the Senate gathers before you see each other again KertaGai. It won't be long.]

Elynth said as she lazily turned them northeast and climbed a little higher.

[How long?] Sadi asked relishing in his aura as it swept over her and placing her arms over the top of his.

[Two days.] Andro answered.

[Two days Andro?] She gasped.

[Don't worry... it will pass quickly.] He told her. [Besides... you have classes you still need to attend. You graduate in six months remember?]

Sadi took a deep breath and nodded. [What then Andro? I will be assigned to the fleet.] She said.

[Then it would depend on you my love.] He said softly. [Captain Sa'sur has expressed an interest for you to remain with us on the SCIMITAR. I had nothing to do with it, but she contacted Admiral O'Connor herself and asked about you. Apparently what she heard was enough to have her make room for you on our ship in the rotation. It would not disrupt any preset schedules of other ships and fleets. The other option, since my command is based on Earth, you can fill a position either as Arrarn's co-pilot or within the Union Fleet based here.]

[And what would you want me to do?] She asked.

[I will not lie to you KertaGai. I never want to be apart from you.] He answered. [This is a decision you need to make. Whatever you feel is best for your career.]

[You will accept anything I decide?] She asked him, his words filling her with love.

Andro nodded. [I do not want a puppet Crown Princess Sadi. You know that. My father and mothers are apart frequently, and their love has only grown through the years. Once I claim you as my mate... once you are in my blood... it will not matter. You will be mine then and I will not need to worry about another Alpha making a claim for you.]

[As if I would let that happen!] Sadi exclaimed.

Andro laughed. [Hey... you never know.]

[Andro stop being so male!] Elynth chided him with a chuckle.

[Do I have to decide now?] Sadi asked.

[No. We will be here for six months now. You could finish your requirements here and we could spend as much time together as we like and it will give you time to discover what you want.] He replied.

[I want you Andro.] She said quickly.

[That will happen soon enough.] He said with a grin. [Let's get through the next few days and the torture of meeting my entire family. After I claim you... they will not see us for three days.]

Sadi grinned. [Still holding to that three day thing huh?]

[I never break a promise KertaGai.] He answered.

[Well... I look forward to seeing and feeling that.] Sadi announced. [I don't suppose I could sneak away huh? Just to stay with you at night?]

[That is entirely up to you.] Andro spoke. [If you are looking for me to say no... it won't happen.]

[Now that I have found you Andro... I want to spend as much time together as we can.] Sadi said.

[As do I.] Andro replied. [As do I. Elynth go!]

Sadi let out a small yelp of surprise as Elynth cranked them into a tight turn and they headed north.

Sadi stared into his face remembering the last time she had seen him. The flames from the burning Island Palace had lit his face and eyes making them appear to glow. He was so overpowering, and Sadi knew without a doubt where Andro got it from. They had landed on Elynth to see Andro's smaller siblings burying their father in a mass of arms and legs as they rolled along the ground. Men and women were in small groups embracing and kissing in greeting. There must have been a hundred men and women and as Andro helped her down from the saddle, Sadi felt her heart slamming into her chest. When his eyes settled on her, he set the little girl she knew as Retta down and watched her scamper towards someone else before moving to stand in front of her.

Martin smiled from under his helmet as he looked at her, and Sadi was amazed at the sense of peace that flowed from him.

"I believe I told you we would see you again." Martin spoke as he took her hands in his.

Sadi's eyes went a little wider as his words to her that night came rushing back. We will see you in the future Sadi, daughter of Vorilas. "You... you knew then as well?" She asked.

Martin nodded as he leaned over and placed his cheek next to hers even though they both wore helmets. "Welcome Sadi." He whispered before pulling back and looking at her again. "I understand you have never been to Earth or Sparta before."

Sadi shook her head as Andro's hand slipped into hers and he stepped close to her. "No sire... no I haven't."

"Ok... first thing is first." He spoke holding up his finger. "None of this Milord crap! I get enough of that with everyone else, and my family is not going to call me that."

Andro chuckled. "He's very sensitive." He spoke.

Sadi smiled as she looked at him. "That will take... that will take some getting used to." Sadi told him.

Martin nodded. "Probably... but you'll have a long time to get used to it once you let Andro claim you." He stepped closer. "That is what you want as well isn't it?" He asked. "Please tell me yes so I don't have to listen to him moan about it anymore."

Sadi chuckled and pulled Andro's hand close to her chest. "Yes Milor... yes Martin Leonidas... that is what I want. So very much."

Martin grinned. "Outstanding!" He exclaimed. He looked at Andro with a smile and Sadi stood beside them as father and son embraced. "Damn glad you are home boy." Martin said.

Andro smiled as he squeezed his father. "I am as well." He spoke.

Martin took his arm and Sadi's gently. "Ok... let's get you introduced to everyone and get that painful process over with so we can go eat. You know how cranky I get when you make me late for dinner."

Sadi couldn't help but laugh at the expression on Andro's face at his father's words and as he took her arm and started drawing her towards the multitude of people in front of her, Sadi realized that her life was about to change considerably.

And that did not frighten her in the least.

CHAPTER FOUR

NEOR

KAVALIAN FEDERATION IMPERIUM HEADQUARTERS

They had accomplished so much and he knew more was coming.

Keleru'Puat looked around the large table at the gathered Pride Leaders and could not help but smile to himself. Two hundred and fifty-six High Coven worlds they had conquered in twenty-five years. The Kavalian Empire was once more reborn and it would continue to grow. Combined with the six hundred and fourteen planets of their original empire that they had reestablished control over, and the hundred and thirteen Zaleisian planets they now controlled, the Kavalian Empire was even more powerful than it ever was in the past. They had fleets of powerful warships and millions of ground troops, not to mention that they were in the process of completing major trade agreements with other empires that would make them extremely wealthy. The Prides were growing in population, the Kavalian females becoming fertile and ready to have children without the threat of starvation or death which had limited their growth over the last centuries. In just the last twenty years alone, nearly four million new children had been birthed, and since it took only three years for those children to obtain adulthood in the eyes of their people, four million more soldiers and leaders to command their biogenic army.

They had swept aside the High Coven defenses in the first five years, capturing more planets than they had ever imagined. They fortified their gains in the five year lull that followed as they produced more of their biogenic clones to replace those lost in battle and those that were being destroyed before they became unstable. Then once more they attacked in force, capturing dozens more planets before they were forced by High Coven tactics to stay their invasion. Now... for the last ten years they had built and prepared. Their Biogenic cloning process had been refined, and now each clone could last for ten years before its mind began to break down and it needed to be put down. During that time, the Prides would continue to grow and finally, they would no longer need the clones to fight their wars for them. The Kavalian people would once more be feared among the stars.

Keleru let his eyes fall upon Pusintin who was engaged in an animated conversation with two of the older Pride Leaders as well as Cukoum, the Pride Leader who had adopted the huge Lycavorian as his son over three thousand years ago. Pusintin still bore the hideous scars of the battle with his younger brother that day twenty-five years ago on Earth. In the city where he had been born. Hundreds if not thousands had watched that savage fight, even Keleru as he stood trapped between two burly Lycavorian Spartans, their weapons jammed into his sides. He had been utterly amazed at the size of the two wolves for while he had seen Pusintin in wolf form before he never imagined there could be another equal in size and strength. As they fought, Keleru came to understand what the others who witnessed the barbaric nature of that battle understood. Their battle had not been over property or wealth or even females.

Their titanic battle that day had been two brothers fighting over blood, honor and above all else betrayal.

Pusintin had once been King of the Union city of Sparta until an attack by High Coven forces against him and his royal guard brought the Kavalian detachment on Earth to the rescue. They had saved the huge man's life that day, the year 458 B.C. as the humans and others referred to it, Cukoum adopting the not yet fifty year old Lycavorian into his family to replace the six sons he had lost in battle with the High Coven. That day had ended one life for the Lycavorian known as Pleistarchus, and began the new life he now had as Pusintin of the Kavalian people. He was a large man, six feet three inches tall and two hundred and forty-five pounds of muscle and dominating power. His muscular definition and strength rivaled and even surpassed that of even the finest Kavalian warriors, and over the years this had earned Pusintin the respect of many of the Pride Leaders and younger warriors. He was fearless, and was not afraid to shift into his wolf form, or battle in his human form to fight any Kavalian warrior who challenged him in the first ten years after he had arrived. This earned him the respect and honor that he had only embraced and made powerful. He had fought beside his new people in their war against the Lycavorian Union, earning many accolades at his actions. He fought like a man possessed and had killed many of his own species. It was a losing war however, the Union far too powerful and large. He had acquitted himself even more in the war against the High Coven, fighting without fear even the Immortal warriors the Coven commanded. Again it had been in a losing cause as the Coven had resorted to weapons of mass destruction targeted against their civilian population to finally turn the tide of the war.

Pusintin's hate for both the Union and the Coven ran deep, but it did not deter the man from fighting with his brains first. He was a masterful leader of men, and a superior tactician, and it was primarily his tactics that had brought them to this point against the High Coven. Keleru knew however he held a festering hate for his brother, the Union King, and for his very own mother who he regarded as having abandoned him. His brother held the position that Pusintin felt he should have had... not to mention nearly killing him in their battle. His brother also had something that belonged to Pusintin, and though Keleru did not know what that was, he knew that fact would always be a thorn in his side and it was something Pusintin had sworn to get back one day, no matter the cost.

Pusintin and Keleru's daughter Jalersi now had four children of their own to raise and to one day command among their people. Keleru had thought Pusintin would return from Sparta with far too much hatred to be useful, and as he had done so many times in the past, Pusintin surprised him with the laconic dismissal of what had happened. Perhaps he had truly put it behind him, for his actions over the last years had not been of a man with hatred in his heart. He was methodic and ruthless with the High Coven, but with others he was calm and controlled and with Keleru's daughter Jalersi; she he treated as if she was a goddess. Their children were healthy and strong, and while they were stern and often times harsh parents in the Kavalian manner, his three sons and one daughter were proud and so far had acquitted themselves with honor in battle. It had taken them seven years as opposed to the normal three to reach adulthood because of their Lycavorian blood, but that was only an additional four years of education that they had to apply to their lives it seemed. Jalersi insisted they be well schooled, and had spent seven years seeing to that herself.

Keleru trusted Pusintin to such an extent that he had allowed him to break in his youngest daughter, and even now after twenty-five years, Jalersi and Keleru's own mate Gessia had yet to choose a male for Athani to be mated too. They were both leaning towards the lesser of so many evils as they called it... and they knew they could not prolong the mating forever. Life for females in the Kavalian Empire was very harsh, often times extremely brutal. Kavalian males were not known for their gentle practices when mating, and it was the reason the hundreds of Lycavorian females captured during their war had been kept alive. They were the only race outside of the High Coven vampires that could heal the wounds inflicted by a Kavalian male in 'rut'. Athani was still part of their lives, and he knew Pusintin took her often, using only her ass and mouth as Jalersi had told him. His youngest daughter did not like the arrangement and often voiced her discontent to him, but it was the only way to keep her beautiful features unaltered until Gessia and Jalersi found a mate who would not scar her beauty. His two daughters had been altered using biogenics when they were very young. The process removed the fine coat of hair from their bodies that all Kavalians had, and it caused their tails to shrink and fade away. His two daughters looked no different than a Lycavorian female until someone got close enough to them to smell them. That and the fact that Athani had allowed her tail to grow back to its full two meter length, which she could use now as a third arm of sorts. This had been a large point of contention with Keleru and his mate, but Jalersi settled it when she said the continued treatments needed to keep their tails from re-growing made Athani sick as they did with dozens of the thousands that had taken the treatments. As with her... in those cases the females were allowed to re-grow their tails. Most of the Kavalian females chosen for the treatments were like Jalersi and Athani, daughters of high ranking Pride Leaders who were very careful who was chosen for their daughters. While it was true the senior female in the Pride was the one who chose the prospective mates for their daughters or sisters, Keleru and many other Pride Leaders had begun making their voices heard even only a little. He was trying to change the violent ways of his people concerning their females, and while he was having some luck, Kavalian females were still very much inferior in their society.

Pusintin however treated Jalersi almost as an equal in all that they did, and Keleru knew Pusintin was devoted to Jalersi. Mated Kavalian males, especially strong and respected males, could be encouraged by other females to take them as their mates as well, and while several Kavalian females had approached Pusintin about this, he had rebuffed all of them without question. Something that only made Jalersi love him even more.

"Prefect...?" The voice broke into Keleru's thoughts and he looked up.

"What?"

"Pian and Qurot have arrived." Keleru's senior aide Cuatan spoke in a soft whisper as he motioned down the large table and he saw the two most junior Pride Leaders greeting others as they took their places at the table.

The dark gold colored fur of Pian and the darker brown of Qurot were unmistakable. They were the youngest Pride Leaders, the most head strong and the most outspoken. While Keleru knew that many of the older Pride Leaders saw themselves in these two men and their adherence to the old ways, more still saw the need to bring their people forward from a past culture that almost was their undoing. Neither of them cared for Pusintin or the respect he garnered from almost all the older Pride Leaders, mainly because Pian had wanted Jalersi for himself, while Qurot was pestering his mate for Athani's hand.

Keleru sat up straighter in his chair. "I'm happy to see our two youngest Pride Leaders decided to grace this War Council in a timely fashion." He spoke in a stern voice.

Pian looked at Keleru as he sat in his chair. "Apologies Prefect." He spoke with a gruff but respectful voice.

"I was insuring my ships were ready for battle Prefect." Qurot spoke almost offhandedly. He was the more disrespectful of the two, thinking his many victories over the High Coven gave him some sort of status others did not have. He and Pian had led their forces brilliantly so far during the war, never once having lost a battle, but they took risks not needed and they cared not for the lives they expended if it gained them recognition. Qurot was a hardliner Keleru knew, and there would not be much more he or his mate and Jalersi would be able to do if he kept voicing his desire for Athani's hand as his mate. Qurot commanded quite a bit of loyalty and soon the calls would start coming from the older Pride Leaders for Keleru to allow this and seal Qurot's rise in power and influence. Keleru did not want to see that happen, for he knew without a doubt that Athani would end up scarred for life, and while his youngest daughter was not weak, she did not have Jalersi's inner strength.

"This is a War Council Qurot!" Keleru spoke sternly. "Not a battle preparation meeting. Insure you are not late again Qurot! You as well Pian. I grow tired of having to wait for the two of you to show the proper respect to this council." Pian opened his mouth to speak but Keleru waved him silent. "Heed my words! That is all I will say on it for now!"

One of the senior Pride Leaders, a man with dark brown fur and gray hair just filtering throughout leaned forward at the table. "This is unusual isn't it Prefect?" He asked. "We were not scheduled to meet for another six months."

Keleru nodded to the man. "You are right Liatthi. However... information we have obtained recently dictated a need for this War Council to at least meet and discuss what to do." Keleru looked at Pusintin. "You may begin Pusintin."

Pusintin let his eyes linger on Pian for a moment Keleru saw, perhaps in a show of male dominance and the fact that he was Jalersi's mate, the position Pian had so coveted. It caused Keleru to smile ever so slightly as Pusintin hauled his large frame out of the chair and moved to the star chart. Though not visible from under his uniform, Keleru had seen the wounds when Pusintin went shirtless. The deep puncture marks where his brother's viciously sharp dual fangs had sunk into his flesh at the back of his neck and almost crushed his spinal cord, and the jagged tears on his legs from Leonidas's claws. Jalersi had been beside herself for days when they had returned, hovering over his bed every waking moment while he regained enough strength to shift back to his wolf form and heal the more severe wounds. They did not have the benefit of Hadarian Healers within their ranks, and their medical treatments suffered in some ways in terms of technology and what they were able to do.

Pusintin picked up the data pad and looked at the men gathered. He belonged here he knew. He would never forget the injuries his younger brother gave to him, nor the words spoken to him by Martin and his mother. That hate would always simmer beneath his skin, but he had gotten past that quickly for he had now what he had never had before. Acceptance. He hated his brother and mother with every fiber of his existence and given an opportunity he would easily disembowel both of them without question. Her betrayal by leaving him on Earth to escape with Martin had hurt him deeply and it was a wound he would never forgive. Pusintin was also no fool, and aside from the one incident when one of Qurot's senior Pride officers went rogue and attacked the Lycavorian Union planet, he had not even gone close to that border. He would bide his time patiently.

That folly had cost them twenty-five thousand of the best trained troops they had and two hundred and sixteen ships. Though it was never proven and could not be blamed on him, many of the older Pride Leaders believed Qurot had issued the orders to attack the planet himself in the hopes of taking some Lycavorian females as hostages and slaves. Within two days of taking the planet the Union descended upon the Kavalian forces with brutal and savage efficiency. Qurot's officer had not expected the Union to respond so quickly. Only five thousand of their Lycavorian Spartans had landed, led by the black Spartan Daniel Simpson and the elf General Vengal. His brother had landed with a hundred of their Mjolnir's Hand, the dragon riding Spartans as they were called, while Admiral Riall had jumped directly into the planetary system with an entire fleet group. The surprise had been complete and within a week his brother had annihilated the Kavalian forces to the last man. If not for some very fast back channel talks by Keleru and others, speaking through their Zaleisian counterparts, the Union would have entered the war. Perhaps not on the side of the High Coven, but most certainly against the Kavalian forces. That would have been a battle they could not have won. No military in history, any history, had ever won victory fighting a war on two different fronts.

Pusintin let his eyes linger on Qurot for a long moment before he began speaking. "We have received some disturbing reports from our agents within the High Coven military." He spoke adjusting the controls on the star chart to bring up several images of what appeared to be a deserted installation. "This is the facility outside their capital on Usu Ozeib 7 where they have been training with the beasts they discovered in The Wilds." Pusintin watched as many of the Pride Leaders came forward in their chairs.

“It... it is abandoned.” One Pride Leader spoke.

Pusintin nodded. “Not completely, there are still High Coven personnel working here, but the dragons are gone.”

“Gone where?” Another barked.

Pusintin adjusted the controls again and the image changed to that of three High Coven BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnoughts and a host of smaller warships. “This image was captured from one of our remote spy drones in The Wilds. We’ve identified one of the ships as the INQUISTOR, the blood sucker Moran’s personal command ship.”

“Are they massing for an attack somewhere?” Another asked.

Pusintin shook his head. “They only have forty of the beasts, but as we all know, even one of these creatures can turn the tide of the battle. Any battle. We have not been able to reverse engineer the inbred fear our people have of this creature out of our clones. And numbers do not matter as the events on Norala Nine proved.” Pusintin spoke looking directly at Qurot. “Five thousand Spartans and one hundred of these beasts wiped out twenty-five thousand of our finest warriors in only ten days time.”

Qurot’s muzzle twitched and he growled out in a low voice. “You are the overall Military Commander of our forces.” He spat. “Have you lost three dozen of our enemy’s warships now? To include their Supreme Commander and the beasts that we so fear?”

“QUROT!” Keleru bellowed from his chair. “You will show Pusintin the respect he has earned or I will whip you into submission myself! It is by his tactics and leadership that we have come this far! That our commanders, yourself included, have been so successful! Do not tempt fate pup, for you are still two thousand years shy of Pusintin’s age and experience! Is that clear?”

Qurot turned to look at Keleru and quickly let his angry eyes drop as he saw and felt the majority of Pride Leaders nodding in agreement with Keleru’s words. He had no desire to anger Keleru’s Puat for not only was he the Kavalian Prefect, he had many of the oldest Pride Leaders firmly behind him. And he still wanted his daughter for a mate. “I beg forgiveness Prefect!” He spoke quickly.

Pusintin smiled at this action. “No... I have not lost these ships.” He continued turning back to the star chart. “I know exactly where they are.” He adjusted the screen and an enormous picture of known space came into being. All of them could see the many different sections that represented not only the High Coven and Lycavorian Union, but now the Kavalian Empire and the nearly two dozen other alliances and federations of different planets. He adjusted the screen once more to focus on a sector of space within The Wilds and he brought his finger up to point at one. “They are right here.” He spoke calmly. “Sector twenty-nine of The Wilds, and just over two days from the Lycavorian Union border.”

“The Union border?” Cukoum hissed out. “Have they gone mad? Your brother hates them more than he does our people! Why would they risk entering Union space?”

Pusintin shook his head. “He hates me father.” He corrected his adopted father meeting his eyes evenly. Cukoum’s light blond fur was thick and very well groomed. He was a respected warrior among their people and that was partly the reason he was allowed to take Pusintin as his son and rear him as he had done. “He does not hate species on a whole as the nearly ten million bloodsuckers that call the Union home can attest too. Not to mention the pureblood bloodsucker he calls Queen.” Pusintin looked at Keleru. “Prefect?”

Keleru nodded. “You may tell them now.” He spoke. “And what is about to be spoken does not leave this room for any reason.”

Pusintin tapped on the data pad in his hand and in front of every Pride Leader a small screen rose from within the table. “It appears that we had a double agent within the ranks of the bloodsuckers that fight with us.” Pusintin spoke. “Their greed knows no bounds as we all know. We discovered this agent three weeks ago and slit his throat. However not before he was able to send a coded transmission to his contacts within High Coven space regarding the status of our biogenic cloning procedures and timetables. The High Coven is now aware we are fifteen months away from having sufficient cloned troops to begin our conquest once more. After consulting with Prefect Keleru and others within our intelligence section, we have determined that the High Coven is going to ask the Lycavorian Union for their assistance in some way in fighting us.”

“Impossible!” A Pride Leader spat. “The Union King would never agree to such a partnership!”

“They butchered his father... your father... and held and tortured his mother for over a decade!” Another barked. “He would never help them!”

Pusintin shook his head. "My father sits among us now Pride Leaders." He spoke. "I am a Kavalian... and..."

The Pride Leader who had spoken raised his hand. "My words were only spoken as reference Pusintin." He spoke. "All of us in this room, we do not doubt your loyalties. We never have. And your true father... Cukoum... he has raised you well."

Pusintin nodded. "I thank you for your words Pride Leader Diseno."

"Do we know why they are going there Pusintin?" Another Pride Leader asked. "They are closer now to the Lycavorian border than they have been in twenty-five years. Since we began our campaign against them."

"We can only guess that they will ask for help, especially now that they have this information from their agent." Pusintin answered. "The bigger concern we have is where have their dragon beasts gone?"

"But if by some remote chance they are able to obtain active assistance from the Union...?" Another Pride Leader exclaimed. "It could be disastrous."

Keleru nodded. "That is why we are arranging for a political delegation to enter Union space and begin talks with them to insure they remain out of our conflict. It is also the reason we have pushed to complete our trade agreements with the other active governments within the last three weeks. We have already been recognized by half of the ruling governments within known space. Only those aligned with the Union have balked at such recognition. We are going to attempt to change that."

The Pride Leaders looked at him. Pian was the first to speak up. "That dog of a Union King has barred us from ever entering Union space! He will..."

"He has barred me from entering Union space. No one else." Pusintin corrected him as he moved back to his chair. "And this was done not for any sort of political reason. It was a purely personal reason on his part."

Pian looked at him. "We do not need their recognition!" He spat. "Once we finished with the High Coven we can take from the Union all that they have by force! We can make them recognize us!"

Keleru shook his head slowly. "While we fight the High Coven?" He asked. "That is not possible. And even when we finally defeat the bloodsuckers, the Union will not be so easy to conquer. We will never make the Union do anything."

"We outnumber them three to one!" Qurot broke in now.

"Numbers mean nothing so long as they have those dragons." Pusintin spoke softly. "We in this room... and many of our senior officers have learned to deal with the fear these beasts instill in our people naturally. We can still function. However... it is not something we can train the clones to do. It would take too much time... and we would need several dozen of these beasts to do it. Talco failed in that mission at the start of our war with the Coven, and in the process gave the Union valuable information in regards to our clones. Information we believe was somehow passed to the High Coven."

The Pride Leaders looked at him surprised. "You know this as fact?" One asked.

Pusintin shook his head. "No... it is only a guess... but it would explain how the High Coven was able to effectively combat our clone troops once they named Moran as Supreme Commander of their forces. He shares a bed with the bloodsucker witch Yuri, and she would have had access to this information easily. He got it from her and then instituted these changes once he became Supreme Commander."

"What are you proposing Prefect?" Another Pride Leader asked more sedately as he looked at Keleru.

"Nothing what some of you might be thinking?" He said quickly. "We will not make peace with these dogs, nor will we enter into any sort of alliance with them. However... if we open political discussions with them, it will allow us a view into their inner workings. Perhaps a trade agreement of some sort. If we do this... we can petition to have an embassy granted to us on both Apo Prime and Earth. Then... with the right people in place, we may be able to draw some excellent information and intelligence."

"They will see through that as what it is." Qurot barked.

Keleru nodded. "Perhaps. But if they refuse our political openness, it will show they are not the open society they claim to be and it will allow us to put pressure on their allies who support them so."

"No Lycavorian will help us if this was done." Diseno spoke now.

"There is greed even among the Lycavorians." Keleru said with a smile.

Pusintin nodded quickly. "We just need to find the right one. However, we can't do that without establishing some sort of ties with them, even through intermediaries. As the High Coven has learned in the past years, there is no way we will penetrate their Intelligence network now... not with the way it has been reformed and is run by this Armetus person. The risk to attempt this is far too high. We can however, attempt to convince other Lycavorians to gather the information for us. We will need to act quickly if this is indeed where the High Coven is going?"

"What of their beasts my son?" Cukoum asked looking at him from his chair.

"We have our agents pressing as hard as they are able." Pusintin replied. "It's possible they have simply moved them to another facility in secret to continue their training. Our Evolli contacts have passed the information to us about a weapons deal they were recently trying to conduct. It concerned the High Coven purchasing an order of the T19 Dragon Killers that we have been buying up ever since we discovered they have the beasts. Apparently however, they attempted to make the exchange in Union space and were discovered and destroyed by the black Spartan Simpson. The remaining portion of that group was discovered and destroyed by my nephews and nieces on Eleyisi Three. The fools attacked a Union mining colony and then tried to assassinate two of the Union Queens who they thought would respond to the distress call from the mining colony. They didn't anticipate that any other Union ships would be in the area to get the transmission. They were wrong. The Coven may have moved their beasts to try and develop tactics against the T19s, which they know we have been purchasing in The Wilds."

"We will not be in a position to begin our final push against the Coven for fifteen months at the earliest." Keleru spoke. "We can use this time to insinuate ourselves into the Union's arena and perhaps make some disrupting waves in the process. This can hardly hurt our position."

"Who do we send on this political venture?" Qurot spoke.

Keleru sat back. "Two of our senior diplomats, my daughters Jalersi and Athani since their features will allow them more freedom than most half a dozen of our other females that have been transformed, and Pusintin's oldest son Karun." He spoke looking at Qurot. "And you Qurot."

Qurot's eyes grew wide. "Me? For what purpose?"

"To give the Lycavorian intelligence people a gaze at one of our finest warriors of course. To instill fear in them." Keleru spoke with a smile.

"I have no wish to associate myself with those dogs!" Qurot spoke quickly.

"It is not a request Qurot." Keleru snarled at him. "You will accompany the delegation as military officer and liaison and you will maintain your decorum."

"Who will lead this delegation Prefect?"

Keleru met their eyes for a long moment. "My daughter Jalersi will command the delegation."

The uproar was not as vocal as Keleru expected, only a handful of the thirty odd senior Pride Leaders coming to their feet and only Qurot and Pian openly showing their anger. He let them rant for a moment before lifting his hand for silence. It took several moments before they quieted and took their seats once more.

"I am a Pride Leader!" Qurot hissed harshly even as he returned to his feet. "I will not take orders from a female!"

"You will if you wish to take my daughter Athani as your mate." Keleru replied just as harshly. Qurot's eyes grew wider at this knowledge. "We all know of the sensibilities of the Union dogs! They give their females far more freedom than we do. It stands to reason that if we allow two of our females to make contact with them it will be much easier to convince them. Jalersi and Athani have studied the Union for over a decade now. Their features will allow them to blend in better."

"Athani has allowed her tail to grow Prefect." A Pride Leader spoke now. "Will this not hinder such interaction?"

Keleru shook his head. "We don't believe so. There are many species that interact freely within the borders of the Union. I was upset when she first did this, but now it appears it may work in our favor. Jalersi and Athani will conduct negotiations with our senior diplomats, while the half dozen other females that have undergone the treatments like them will learn as much as they are able in whatever way they can." He held up his hand before the next outburst. "These are females that are not able to sire children, and they have volunteered for this mission with the approval of their fathers and Pride Leaders. They will not be returning to us once the mission is complete. They will remain within an embassy if it is allowed as aides and workers."

"And if an embassy is not granted?" Pian snapped.

Keleru looked at him. "Then they will have served their purpose and will disappear on the return trip."

The Pride Leaders at the table nodded their heads in approval. No one would touch the females after they had been with a Lycavorian or any other species in the course of completing their mission.

“This is an opportunity we can not allow to pass.” Keleru spoke. “While my daughters are doing this... we will discover where they have taken their dragon beasts and continue our preparations to bring down the bloodsuckers.”

“You... you will allow me to take Athani then?” Qurot spoke firmly.

Keleru nodded slowly. “Against my better judgment... but my mate and daughter have made their decision. But understand this Qurot... you will not mark her in any way! She is far more intelligent and useful to us, even as your mate, with her beauty and her mind intact! Is that an issue for you? If it is... tell me now, for my mate and daughter will find a male who will do as they ask. Once you have taken her... if one mark appears on her flesh I will personally rip your innards out and watch you wither and die!”

Qurot looked at Pusintin. “She is pure?”

Pusintin nodded. “As she should be. According to our customs I have had only two of her openings. She has actually grown to like it in this manner and if you stroke the base of her tail she responds actively and with...”

“I will decide how I take her.” Qurot snapped. “Her pleasure is not my concern.”

Pusintin’s eyes darkened for a moment. “She is pure Qurot!” He snapped. “And if you have no wish to have her welcome you in your bed that is your problem. I will not help you make her hate you any less than she already does.”

“She can hate me all she wants as long as she accepts me.” Qurot turned back to Keleru. “And I will do as you ask me.”

Keleru nodded. “Insure that you do.” He spoke. “Let us work out what we will extend to the Union dogs and then we can adjourn for refreshment.”

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT
INQUISITOR
22 HOURS FROM LYCAVORIAN BORDER

“Ahhhhhhh... please no... no more!” Toria Dellion gasped out as she felt Dante flex his hard cock deep inside her.

Her red hair was strewn about her shoulders, her naked body covered in a fine sheen of sweat. The nipples on her large breasts were painfully erect and begging for attention that they would not get. She felt Dante’s powerful hands on her ass cheeks holding her hips down on his throbbing shaft. He was sitting on the couch, Toria straddling his lap. This was her punishment. This is what she had to endure for not pleasing her Empress and Tesand enough. The skin of her flawless breasts was adorned with three bite marks and red areas where Dante had sucked too hard or too long on her delicate skin. They had been taking her for three hours now with no reprieve. No pause. They were like rutting animals.

And Toria could not stop them because her body was betraying her in the vilest of ways. And it had been since she had come here.

Toria felt Dante grab both sides of her face roughly. “Look at me!” He barked out.

Toria’s sky blue eyes opened wide at the tone of his voice and she gazed into his dark eyes seeing the small flash of red in those dark orbs. “No... no more... please Prince...” She croaked out the words.

“We are not finished using you yet Toria.” Dante hissed. “You want us to take you more don’t you?”

Toria shook her head slightly as her hands were braced on his broad shoulders and his bruising hands held her hips down on his lap. “I... I don’t... not like... not like this... please...”

Dante laughed and opened his eyes wider. “But you are a pureblood whore Toria!” He barked. “You are our pureblood whore aren’t you?” His dark eyes grew even larger and Toria was mesmerized by the flash of red within them. They were like gazing into the blood red petals of a flower, so beautiful in its color and intensity. She wanted to touch that flower, to feel its satiny surface caress her flesh in so many intimate ways.

“I am... I am...”

Toria sensed him come up behind her but she was powerless to do anything about it staring into Dante's eyes. They gripped her mind and body. She felt his hands spread apart her firm ass cheeks and then the head of Javier's cock pressed firmly against her asshole.

"You are our whore Toria!" Dante growled thrusting his cock upwards and hearing her gasp in surprised delight her nails digging into his skin.

"Wait... not like... not that way!" Toria's body tensed as Javier began to push his cock against her small opening. "Please..."

Dante pulled her face close to his painfully. "You want Javier to have your ass!" He barked his eyes flashing red once more. "You are a whore and you love it don't you Toria! Tell me you love it!"

"No... I... I... ohhhh!" Toria gasped as Javier reached around and grabbed her large breasts roughly pinching her nipples between his fingers painfully.

"Tell me you want us whore!" Dante barked out. "Tell me you are a whore! Our whore! Say it!"

The last of her resistance crumbled when Javier leaned his face close to her neck and sank his fangs into her flesh. Her orgasm burst out almost painfully and her body convulsed as Javier fed on her blood.

"YES!" She screamed in the throes of the powerful orgasm. "Yes! I am your whore! Vith me! Vith me! Please!"

Javier plowed his hips forward and sank his entire eight inch cock into Toria's bowels in one painful plunge. Her mouth was open in a breathless scream as Dante sank his fangs into her left breast and he too began to feed, even as their cocks sawed back and forth inside her openings. Tears came to Toria's eyes. Tears of humiliation. Tears of pain. Tears of delicious pleasure as another orgasm quaked through her. She felt both their cocks swell in size, Javier's shaft stretching her painfully, not caring in the least that he might be hurting her. Her head dropped lower and she clutched Dante's head to her breasts as their cocks erupted inside her smashing aside everything and causing her to descend into a world of pain and pleasure as she shuddered in the rapid fire orgasms and her mind only knew one thing.

To please the two cocks buried within her body. Which she would do for another three hours with no resistance.

Toria rose from the small couch in her quarters, the glass of Blood Wine in her hand and she moved to the door to answer the buzzing of the chime. She was still weak after six hours of having to endure Dante and Javier. They had pummeled her for that entire time, using both her openings while they fed on her blood. It was not something she was unaccustomed too for it was not the first time she had endured their touch upon her. This is how it had been the last three years now. While she did not find giving her Empress sexual pleasure at all displeasing, she did not care for the moments when Tesand took part. He could be more dominating then she cared for, and if she did not respond in a way they liked, or if she tried to keep Tesand from having her, Aikiro and Tesand would give her to Dante and Javier as a punishment of sorts for not pleasing them enough in their bed, or being resistant to Tesand having her ass.

That was the ultimate insult and degrading act for having Dante and Javier slobbering all over her was even worse. They would bite her breasts and neck countless times, making her even more compliant and accepting of what they did to her. Dante Moran would then use his Mindvoice powers on her to make her do what he wanted, no matter what she desired. He had inherited a much stronger version of that skill from his mother it seemed. While Princess Yuri could alter the perceptions of a person who was weak minded, her son could actually force the person to do something they did not and make them believe it was their idea. Both Dante and Javier were built larger than Tesand with the size of their cocks, not very much so, but enough to leave her sore for days when they acted as they had this night.

It didn't help that every time they bit her and fed on her blood Toria erupted in a crushing orgasm; only fueling their lust that much more and continuing to take her in every conceivable position. This night it had taken her an hour to get the taste of Javier's come out of her mouth with Blood Wine. Only reading and going over what her actions would be when they arrived in Lycavorian space relaxed her enough to try and dismiss this night from her mind as she had the others. Toria was not weak minded, her Mindvoice shields better than most, but no where near the strength of Dante and Javier. They always managed to shred her shields and reach into her mind, yet they were only there for physical gratification and never noticed that one doorway in her thoughts that was more securely locked than any other. Her training with the Venorik Elghinn Division had been thorough, but they only trained her to focus almost all of her shielding ability to guard the secrets in her head. While Dante and Javier could rip through her normal Mindvoice Shields, had they ever attempted to try and breach that single door inside her mind, they would have discovered something far different.

Toria pulled the light robe around her naked body tighter. The steaming shower and Blood Wine had rid her of the majority of what they had done, their come mixed with the sweat upon her body when she left the lounge where they had taken her, though the bite marks would not fade for several more hours. She touched the panel on the door and lifted her sky blue eyes to stare into the exquisitely beautiful face of Princess Narice.

“Princess Narice!” Toria gasped trying to step out of the line of sight of the Immortal that accompanied Narice wherever she went.

Narice detected this reaction instantly and turned to look at the expressionless Immortal. “Fal’Vor... you may return in three hours. I will be done then.”

The huge Immortal nodded and turned to move down the corridor. Narice turned back to look at Toria. “Forgive me... I did not think you would answer your door dressed in such a way.”

Toria couldn’t help the redness in her cheeks and looked down at the floor quickly. “I... I was reading and lost my concentration Princess.” She spoke.

“May I come in?” Narice asked softly.

Toria instantly stepped out of the way. “Forgive me Princess... please come in.”

Narice bent down and picked up the small bag at her feet and stepped into the room, Toria touching the panel and locking the door quickly. She looked around the quarters and saw that Toria Dellion had decorated sparingly, but elegantly with several framed holo images and a few flowered plants.

“I will change into something more appropriate Princess.” Toria stammered. “Excuse me for a moment.”

Narice shook her head. “That won’t be necessary.” She said softly. “This is not anything formal Toria Dellion.”

Toria felt a momentary flash of fear for she had never heard of anyone receiving a visit from the Princess of the High Coven at such an hour. She looked at Narice closely, taking in the long billowing black hair and the beautiful features of her face and fullness of her lips. Since she had been forced to share her Empress’s bed, Toria had found herself gauging other females in a frankly sexual manner, something she had never done before. Apparently her trysts with Narice’s mother and Tesand had unlocked something within her she did not know existed before. If anything, Narice was even more beautiful than her mother and sister in an alluring way.

“What... may I ask what this is about Princess?” Toria spoke haltingly.

Narice met her sky blue eyes and smiled. She found the Coven Intelligence officer to be very pleasing on the eyes. Her long red hair was a color she did not see very often for Narice did not go out of her way to associate with others. The color of her eyes was gripping, and the few times she had seen Toria Dellion smile, it was like a light coming on in the room. She knew of the arrangement her mother and Tesand had with Toria, and she also knew the young intelligence officer had only agreed to it because she thought it would help her career. Having to endure her nephews was something Narice was quite sure Toria would not have done willingly. She had seen her moving back to her quarters only an hour ago, the bite marks evident and the way she carried herself clear signs that her nephews had fed too much on her blood and abused her for too long.

Narice exhaled heavily. “I saw you returning to your quarters earlier. I was returning from Deneth’s pen.” She reached out and took the glass of Blood Wine from her hand. “May I?” Narice brought it to her nose and sniffed delicately making a face of disgust as she pulled it away. “Ewww... I expected my mother would have allowed you to have something better than this barely aged Blood Wine!” Narice moved to the counter while Toria stared at her wide eyed. She moved closer as she saw Narice pour it into the sink.

“Princess... I needed... I needed that!” She gasped. “It... it was my last glass.”

Narice turned to look at her dark eyes smiling as she set the bag she had brought on the counter and withdrew the metal cylinder. She retrieved two more glasses and poured the lighter red liquid into the glasses before turning back to Toria and holding one out to her. “Try this?” She spoke.

Toria kept her eyes on Narice as she brought the glass to her nose and sniffed. The aroma of cherries drifted to her nostrils and she looked at Narice quickly surprise in her sky blue eyes. “This is... this is cloned blood.” She gasped.

Narice nodded as she sipped her glass. “Not just any cloned blood Toria Dellion. It is something that the Hadarian Queen of the Union developed. First for my half sister Isabella... then for all the purebloods and turned of our kind who call the Union home. It is a very sought after item within The Wilds now... and very expensive.”

Toria looked at her. “And per your mother... very illegal within High Coven borders. I know Purebloods who have been imprisoned for possessing this.” She spoke holding the glass back to her. “Thank you... but no.”

Narice smiled. “Toria... I took this from my mother’s personal stash so to speak.” She said. “Tesand keeps a rather large supply hidden here on this ship. He will not miss one or two bottles.”

“I’m sorry Princess Narice... I can’t.” Toria spoke as every alarm in her head was ringing quite loudly.

“You think I am here to test your loyalty?” Narice said softly shaking her head. “My nephews took too much of your blood Toria. They are brutes... with no regard for anyone but themselves. Since you no longer have any Blood Wine...”

“I can get more.” Toria spoke gently still holding the glass out to her.

Narice nodded. “Yes... more than likely. However you would have to leave your quarters for that and I know you don’t want to do that. This... it is called Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos in The Wilds... Fruit of the Blood. It has more far more nutrients and replenishes our bodies much more quickly than Blood Wine. And it tastes like fruit punch! It’s quite delicious.”

“And still very illegal.” Toria spoke.

“Toria... I am not here to test your loyalty.” Narice spoke. “I saw you returning to your quarters in a bad way and I thought I would bring something to help you. Sharing my mother and Tesand’s bed was something you did of your own accord Toria, I believe you accept that... but my mother giving you to my nephews when you don’t please her and Tesand enough or attempt to discourage Tesand from having you... that is wrong. I’m sorry about that.”

“Why should you be sorry?” Toria asked. “It is a situation I got myself into as you have just said.”

“It is still wrong.” Narice spoke plainly. “What my sister’s sons do to you is wrong. I find it... I find it extremely distasteful.”

Toria looked at her strangely, her sky blue eyes darting back and forth as what Dante and Javier had done to her flashed back into her mind. What they had done to her on more than one occasion. “I... it is almost like... I can’t control myself.” She spoke softly. “My... my body betrays me. I fight it as long as I am able but...”

Narice nodded slowly. “It is a rare skill... not easily mastered, but Dante seems to have been able to control it in his own disgusting manner. Yuri has this skill as well but on a much more reduced level. The ability to alter the perceptions of someone. Almost control their minds. Combined with the fact they were feeding on your blood while in heightened sexual state only makes it worse. It makes you do things you would not normally do because it feels so divine.”

Toria looked at her oddly. “You sound as if... forgive me but you sound as if you have experienced something similar before Princess.”

Narice nodded slowly. “Not in a physical manner such as you... but something similar yes.”

“Not physical?” Toria asked.

Narice waved her hand dismissively. “It is not important. This will help you regain what they took from you Toria. I’m not here for any nefarious reasons.”

“Why... why are you here Princess? Why do you tell me this?” She asked.

Narice turned and removed the data pad from her bag and then held it out to her. “It appears we have the same mission... just different objectives.” Narice spoke. “I thought... I thought we might pool what we know so that it is easier for both of us to accomplish our goals. You appear to be the most knowledgeable person on this ship in regards to the Lycavorian Union and the family that rules it and I would like to know more than what my mission pad tells me. I would like to know more because unlike my nephews... there is far more to the men and women that we will interact with than they can comprehend.”

Toria took the pad with her empty hand and looked at it. Her sky blue eyes lifted after a moment and her hand with the glass drew back slowly. “This is why you came?” She asked.

Narice nodded. "Yes. The other reason is because you seem to be the only other woman on this ship outside of my niece Carisia that is as lonely as I am. And since I am not allowed to associate with Carisia for some ridiculous reasons to say the least... I thought... I thought we could become friends."

Toria met her dark eyes for a long moment. She already knew what her intent was going to be... and she already knew that Dante and Javier would never have her again once she left this ship. If having Princess Narice turn her in to her superiors for drinking illegal cloned blood and save her from the humiliation of having her own body betray her, Toria would accept that and kill herself later. However, there was something in Narice's eyes that told her that wasn't the case at all.

She lifted the glass to her lips and drank half of the contents, immediately feeling the cloned blood surge through her body and filling her with energy and strength. She looked at the glass in shock. Narice smiled.

"I told you." She spoke as she sipped from her own glass once more.

SPARTA

SPARTA ESTATE

The scent of pines and flowers tickled her nose and caused her azure eyes to open slowly. The birds chirped happily in the distance and Aricia felt the weight on her abdomen. Martin's powerful mint scent permeated the room and the bed sheets and Aricia inhaled deeply allowing his lingering male aura to flood through her. She smiled as she felt Isabella's head shift on her abdomen and she turned her head to the side where Martin should have been. He was already gone she knew and the memories of the night before came pouring back as her eyes settled on where Anja and For'mya were stretched out on the bed, Anja's face resting atop Dysea's firm full breasts, For'mya curled in a ball with her back pressed against Dysea's side.

"Carians... coi vin bacj aln?" Isabella croaked out the ancient Lycavorian words softly. (Gods is he gone yet?)

Aricia heard Anja and Dysea chuckled softly and she grinned as her hands dropped to Bella's naked shoulders and stroked her smooth skin. "Jainn... pen theena un coi anzen." She answered. (Yes I believe it is safe.)

Anja lifted her head slightly from Dysea's breast, the sunlight filtering into the room reflecting off the studded piercing in Dysea's left nipple. "Is anyone else as tired as I am?" She croaked out the words.

"I will let you know when I wake up. I am still too pleasantly sore to move." For'mya groaned.

"Do you think he missed you Melyanna?" Dysea asked as she stroked Anja's Persian red hair. "Nauta Melme certainly had you howling last night."

Anja lowered her head back down. "You and Bella didn't help matters much." She spoke. "You know I can't refuse anything when she bites me."

"I don't think any of us can." For'mya spoke softly as she turned and snuggled closer to Dysea's warm body.

"Do not blame this on me." Bella spoke as she lifted her head and rested her chin on Aricia's powerful abdomen. "I can not help it if we all were claimed by a man whose stamina knows no bounds."

"Bella... that was no man last night. That was a machine." Anja quipped. "He had all of us at least four times!"

"Five actually." Aricia giggled. "We... we had each other in the shower after the rest of you fell asleep."

"Upaee!" For'mya growled as they all chuckled among themselves.

"Melyanna... do you truly know of any machine that has a tongue as talented as Nauta Melme's was last night?" Dysea asked with a laugh. "Not withstanding yours of course."

"Ok... I'll give him that." Anja said as her hand caressed Dysea's thigh.

"Not to mention the size of his celie." For'mya spoke softly. "It hasn't grown has it? Or is that just me?"

The five of them giggled like school girls now and Aricia and Isabella moved closer to them, pressing their bodies against each others. Aricia pressed her face to the back of For'mya's shoulder and nuzzled her elven ear gently feeling her shudder in desire as Aricia then left a trail of kisses along her shoulder.

"Anja and I spoke of this on our way back from Hadaria." Aricia said softly resting her chin on For'mya's shoulder now. "It is simply amazing that he can still do to us what he does isn't it?"

“You mean turn us to jelly with a simple caress?” Isabella asked with a grin.

“It is not amazing.” Dysea spoke softly her fingers tracing Anja’s bare shoulders. “It is emeran. We belong together... all of us. There is always purpose in the paths that fate lays before us. One of those paths brought all of us together with Nauta Melme as the center. That is why we are so drawn to each other as well as Martin. That is our destiny... and we build on that every day.” (Fate)

“Aovi.” Anja said softly. (Amen)

“Now that... now that the war is over and things have become calmer... I think all of us should spend more time together.” Aricia said softly. “Just the five of us. Like we used to before the war.”

“Without Martin?” Bella asked.

“We have six months here on Earth and in Sparta and Gytheio before we need to return to Apo Prime.” Aricia spoke. “I think in that period we can discover moments where it is only us. I think we need that.”

Dysea smiled. “That sounds divine.” She spoke her eyes bright at the prospect. “What do we do with Nauta Melme while we are enjoying ourselves?”

Aricia smiled. “He actually already planned an entire week for us in Gytheio.” She said gently. “Just the five of us without him or any of the Little Ones.”

All of them looked at her. “He did that?” Anja asked.

Aricia nodded. “He told me about it as he was carrying me back to bed after our shower last night.” She told them. “He knows things have been crazy... and you know he will never allow us to lose the closeness we have so easily formed. He is going to remain here in Sparta while we rediscover each other by the sea.”

“That man is just plain scary.” Anja said shaking her head. “How... how could he have known that?”

“Bella and I were thinking the same thing only days ago.” Dysea spoke. “We spoke of it with each other but not to Martin. He... he has sensed this within us.”

“What about the little ones?” For’mya asked. “Do we trust him enough to watch all five of them himself?”

Aricia laughed. “I for one am not going to argue with him.” She said. “When was the last time the five of us were able to be together without something pulling us away? Besides... with Helen and Gorgo here... he won’t have to do a thing and he knows it.”

“The last time we were together just like this was before Deion and Nara were born.” Anja replied instantly.

Isabella’s eyes grew a little wider. “It has been ten years?” She gasped. “I... I didn’t realize.”

“Nor did I.” Dysea said softly. “That long?”

Aricia nodded. “We love Martin with all that we are. We... we love each other just as intensely. But we are also the best of friends and it is time we began acting like that again. Shopping. Dancing. Everything.”

“Oh... that will give the Netnews Channels lots of fodder.” Anja said with a chuckle. “Union Queens tear up Gytheio night life! I can hardly wait!”

“I think it sounds like fun.” For’mya spoke with a laugh. “Besides... many more nights like last night and one or all of us will be pregnant again.”

Dysea chuckled at that and they all looked at her with wide eyes. “Dysea... you are...” Anja gasped.

Dysea shook her head. “Carians... no!” She exclaimed. “I just find it funny that all of us come into phase at the same time now and how it affects Nauta Melme and Bella. I think it’s the only time we have more endurance than he does.”

Bella smiled with bright hazel/green eyes. “Yes... but it is so much fun! Your blood is so much sweeter when you are in phase. I find it hard to decide who I want to bite first! Usually I just grab whoever is closest that Martin has not already grabbed. He’s such a brute when the four of you hit him with your auras at the same time.”

They all laughed at that and drew closer together. “How soon before he returns?” For’mya asked.

“He and Andro were meeting with Arzoal and the Elder Council today.” Aricia replied as she snuggled and spooned For’mya from behind. “They will be there at least half the day.”

“Good... more sleep for us.” Anja spoke dropping her head back down to Dysea’s abdomen.

“Who said anything about sleep Melyanna?” Dysea spoke seductively as her hand traced the line of Anja’s back to her firm ass cheeks. “We can start rediscovering each other right now.”

Anja lifted her head and looked at Dysea with smoldering jade green eyes. “Bella... you have turned her into a vixen.” She spoke softly.

Isabella laughed as she gently pried open Aricia’s thighs. “I know... but she tastes so good.” She answered.

Aricia looked down at Isabella’s beautiful face with wide eyes and her fingers entwined in her long hair. “Bella... what are you... what are you doing?”

Isabella smiled. “Rediscovering.” She answered before lowering her lips to Aricia’s center and hearing her gasp out in surprised pleasure as she dragged her tongue over Aricia’s clit with agonizing slowness. For’mya turned over quickly and her soft lips descended upon Aricia’s in a blistering kiss of want and need muffling Aricia’s whimpers of bliss.

Anja smiled at the actions of her fellow Queens and lovers and extended her four inch long tongue out to lick Dysea’s powerfully ripped abdomen as she gazed up into her glittering emerald eyes. Emerald eyes now filled with desire and passion once more. “Yes she does taste good.” She said before dipping her head lower and hearing Dysea hiss out in joy as her four inch long tongue disappeared into the warm, wet folds of Dysea’s elven pussy.

And the rediscovery began.

EARTH DRAGON ELDER CHAMBER MINDVOICE CITY SHIP 41 DRAGON ISLAND OF SARDINIA

So all four of you have felt them as well? Arzoal asked.

The Dragon Elder Chamber was the second largest room within the Mindvoice ship outside of the main cavern like area which allowed the hatchlings to learn to fly. As the Dragon Elder for Earth, Syrilth sat to Arzoal’s right side, three additional dragons to her right, while four dragons sat to Arzoal’s left. In all there now nine Dragon Elders. Five females and four males. They were the oldest of the living dragons, the youngest being Syrilth at three thousand four hundred years old. No one really knew how old Arzoal was as she never gave anyone a direct answer to that question. Most assumed she was at least twenty-five thousand years old, though Martin and a few others suspected she was far older than that.

Andro and his father sat on the two simple flat boulders that faced the nine dragons, Elynth and Torma to their sides.

Martin nodded slowly. Just on the edge of our perceptions. He answered. But they were there.

Elynth and I felt them when we were in The Wilds and passing close to the High Coven border. Andro answered.

They are growing closer Martin. Arzoal spoke softly. Each hour that passes the tremors are stronger. I know.

Why would they be coming here? Syrilth asked softly. Surely the High Coven knows what regard we hold them in since they took the hatchlings and eggs.

They intend to use them in their conflict against the Kavalians don’t they Martin? The light green scaled dragon’s voice was male and it rumbled deeply from his position to Arzoal’s left. He was the most senior after Arzoal, nearly twenty thousand years old.

Martin nodded slowly once more. I believe they do Daurgo. We know at least nine of the recently born hatchlings survived the crash because their bodies were not among the dead. And then thirty-five of the eggs survived and were missing. Martin shook his head. I should have done more to get them back.

Daurgo shook his large head. There was nothing more you could have done. We searched for weeks to insure we were right; you yourself spent two months on that planet with Torma. How many times did you fly over the same ground hoping? I believe all of us knew the Coven had taken those that survived. We just did not want to admit it.

Daurgo is right Martin Leonidas. Arzoal spoke now. What could you have done? Take a force into High Coven territory in the midst of a war they were fighting and losing? They knew what they had the moment the Transport went down. We could very well still be searching for them even now as vast as the High Coven territory is.

That does not explain why they are coming here now? A female voice broke in from Arzoal's right next to Syrilth.

If they were able to force the eggs to hatch... and they have bonded with High Coven men and women... there is only one reason they would come here. Martin spoke.

Arzoal nodded. To discover how it is Mjolnir's Hand and the other Bonded Pairs are able to do what they do.

Martin nodded. As Daurgo said... they probably intend to use them against the Kavalians in their war. We know there is something inbred in the Kavalian species that fears your kind. Something coded into their DNA. Anja has tried to discover it... but it has not been a priority for her over the years and she has not made any progress.

The vampires of the Coven are not like Lycavorians and Elves Elder Mother. Torma spoke. Would our benevolent nature not clash dramatically with whoever is able to bond with those dragons?

Arzoal nodded. To an extent yes. But if the High Coven has had them since infancy, they have been able to shape their minds without guidance from this Council or other dragons within the Union.

So it is possible these dragons... they are just as violent as the High Coven soldiers who ride them? Elynth asked.

Anything is possible. Daurgo spoke.

It is also possible their bonds are no stronger than what Syrilth had with Vile Maruad. Arzoal said.

Martin shook his head. The tremors Torma and I felt were powerful Arzoal. That does not indicate a connection like what Syrilth had. And the only reason she truly allowed it was to protect her brothers and sisters.

I have contacted the sires of those dragons we know were not on the crashed ship. Arzoal spoke. They will be arriving on Earth within the week. Do we dare allow them entry into our Union Martin?

If they are coming here thinking that we will train them... Torma shook his massive head. That is not something we can do.

Do we dare not? Andro spoke up now and all heads turned to him.

What are you saying Talon Guardian Androcles? Arzoal asked.

If they come here... and we don't know for sure that is the case... but if they do, do we dare turn them away? Andro said.

You need to make sense son. Martin spoke gently.

Yes father I agree... if they come here it is only for one reason. To learn how we do what we do. Andro spoke. More than likely... none of them are even attuned enough to realize that we can sense them within Mindvoice already. That is not something we should reveal.

If we train them... and they defeat the Kavalians in the years to come... we will have to face them in battle one day. We all know there will be no peace between the High Coven and the Union. Not as things stand now. Torma spoke. Those eggs and hatchlings are not brothers and sisters, and they will mate and produce more offspring. Those offspring will learn what we teach their sires... and they will use it against us. We have rules that we live by. A code that those of us who are bonded follow. The High Coven does not.

If they do come... if they do ask us to train them... and we refuse... we would be signing the death warrants for over forty of our brothers and sisters without so much as a blink. Do we want that on our heads? Andro said turning his head to look at Elynth.

They will still go into battle against the Kavalians. Elynth spoke now looking at the Dragon Elders seated all around them. And we know they will face the weapons we all have come to hate so much.

Andro nodded. The Kavalians are aware of their existence, otherwise why would they be buying up every T19 that was left from the war with the Evolli? If we don't train them, they will go into battle and they will all die. Andro spoke. It took us three years and twenty-three Bonded Pairs of Mjolnir's Hand before we learned to combat the T19 effectively. That does not include the wounded. What chance would they have against a foe that is three times as violent and far better led?

We would essentially be killing them ourselves. Elynth finished.

Torma let out a deep sigh and nodded his massive head. Yes... that is true as well.

The political ramifications could very well be disastrous. Another female dragon spoke from Arzoal's left. We would be seen by everyone as helping the High Coven in their war with the Kavalians. Do we want that on our heads if we do help them? It could very well draw us into the war in some fashion.

Martin looked at Torma. [Mindvoice Shielded] [Torma my brother?]

[The decision is ultimately yours Martin but our children speak from their hearts and they are correct. Without training as we provide to our Bonded Pairs... they will not survive for very long in battle. We would essentially be killing them.] Torma spoke.

[I felt Yuri Torma. And her mother.] Martin said.

[You have moved well beyond simple hatred my brother.] Torma spoke lowering his head to look in Martin's eyes as everyone watched. [You show that everyday in your treatment of Isabella your Queen and your daughters as well as all those vampires who call our Union home.]

Martin shook his head. [It is still there.]

[Yes... but it no longer has a say in what your actions are.] Torma said. [Do not let their presence change the man you have become.]

[You're right as usual.] Martin said.

[I may be right... but like you I feel it could very well come around to bite us in our ass.] Torma spoke. [Isn't that how Anja speaks it?]

Martin chuckled. [Almost exactly.]

Martin turned back to Arzoal and the Elders. Forgive me. He said quickly.

You, your son, Torma and Elynth are Talon Guardians Martin Leonidas. Arzoal spoke softly. You are the Guardians of our people and the King of our Union. You alone are allowed to speak shielded among the Elders of this Council. And to be honest... not even the Elders on this Council could penetrate the shields of you or your son unless you allowed it.

My son speaks the truth. Martin said looking at Andro. And I'm sure Elynth agrees with him.

Elynth nodded her large head. Andro and I always speak with the same voice regardless of whose words are used.

Arzoal nodded. Yes... we have noticed that. She spoke with some humor. Perhaps it is because you became bonded while Andro was still within Aricia's womb... but it does not matter. This Council has always known you speak with one voice. Her massive head turned back to Martin. What do you suggest Martin?

Martin looked at Andro. Andro?

Let them come. Andro spoke getting to his feet. Let us see them first before we make a decision. What could that hurt? I am not fool enough to enter into this without knowing what it is we will face. If it can not be done... I will not train any of them. I only assume that the training will fall to Elynth and I and my siblings if we decide to assist them.

Martin nodded. If we do it... it will need to be done very quietly. He turned back to Arzoal. He's right however. Let us see what it is they have to say.

Arzoal nodded. Very well. If they do come here... we will adjourn two days afterwards and discuss any training and support we may provide to them. Is that agreed upon by all Elders and the Talon Guardians? Arzoal's huge head saw the nods of affirmation from everyone. So be it. This Council will recess until the Mating Petitions are heard this afternoon.

Martin turned to look at his son as the dragons began to move out of the large chamber. "You do realize that if we sense them coming the Kavalians will undoubtedly know they are coming here as well. They have just as many spies and drones in The Wilds as we do."

Andro nodded. "Ours are better." He spoke. "And unless there are Kavalians who have suddenly gained Mindvoice abilities strong enough to detect what we can... they will not know what they are here for. Only that they are here."

Martin chuckled. "You are getting downright devious." He spoke.

"I had a good teacher." Andro answered.

Martin smiled. "C'mon... we're meeting your brothers and sisters for lunch at Gallais's Retreat. I'm going to contact your mothers and have them join us. This is something we all need to talk about. Sadi has classes until later this afternoon right?"

Andro nodded. "I intend to pick her up and take her shopping." He said. "And then we are meeting Eliani, Nyla, Carina and Moneus for dinner."

"Getting nervous?" Martin asked him with a grin.

"No." Andro answered shaking his head.

Liar! Yes you are! Elynth exclaimed playfully.

Martin laughed out loud and Torma laughed within Mindvoice at that. Martin put his arms over his son's shoulders. "Let's get going before Elynth blows in more of your secrets." He said.

Andro looked at his father. "Was it like this for you father? Sadi spent the night with her father in Sparta, and even from Gytheio I could still smell her on the wind." He asked. "It's like she has invaded my very being."

Martin smiled. "It was worse. I was being pulled in three different directions and then your mothers Isabella and For'mya entered the picture and added two more directions I was being pulled in."

"How did you act?" Andro asked.

"It will become better once you and she have been together son." Martin spoke. "She will still pull at you... but once you are in each other's blood it will be only as strong as you let it because you will belong to each other then."

Worship her Andro. Torma's voice spoke. Worship her as your father and I worship our mates and she will give you all that you desire.

Martin nodded. "Ain't that the truth?" He said.

Just leave her enough room of her own to breathe Andro. We have talked of this before. She is strong willed and confident. She will need space of her own. Elynth said.

Andro nodded. Don't smother her... yes I will remember.

Torma's head leaned far over as they walked and he looked at his daughter. What about you daughter? Are there any prospective suitors for you on the horizon?

Elynth's golden eyes grew wide. Father... I will not answer that! You and Jeth would frighten any away even if there were.

Torma chuckled and nuzzled the top of her head between her two long skull horns. The tips of Elynth's wings twitched in delight from this caress of her father. I like it that way.

Elynth snorted. They would first have to make it past Andro. She said confidently. And no one is good enough for me according to him.

I'm only speaking the truth. Andro replied.

My brother... I like your son even more now. Torma announced as he brushed up against Elynth's shoulder with his snout in a playful nudge.

Elynth snorted once more in indignation. I will make it a point to insure they meet mother first. Whoever they may be.

THE WILDS

KRANEK

2.7 LIGHT YEARS FROM LYCAVORIAN BORDER

Twenty-five years.

A full quarter of a century since they had come here and he could not remember ever experiencing the peace, joy and love he felt now at any other time in his nearly seven thousand years of life. In truth he had never experienced or understood these emotions until she had come into his life. He had not fired a weapon in anger in that entire time, only during training and on ritual hunts. They had come to this planet in peace... wanting only to live in peace... and that is how they had conducted themselves the entire time. They were called Akruvian. One of the very first species ever conquered by the High Coven. They were known across the universe by another name however. A name meant to instill fear into the hearts of their foes.

They were known as Immortals.

He himself had been the Immortal Captain of the High Lord Veldruk, a position he had held for over a thousand years. A position wrenched from him violently by the now dead High Lord for attempting to improve the physical appearance of his people. The AkruXian were not a handsome species to look upon. Their skin was normally a dark gray in color and stretched almost painfully taut over their large bodies. Many of them had sunken eye sockets and large foreheads with small dark eyes. They had almost no hair on their muscular bodies, small bone spikes protruding from the ridges of their hands and wrists and even along their jaw lines in some instances. He had long ago filed down the bone spikes along his jaw, but he kept the ones on his hands to remind him of his past and because she had asked him to. She had not wanted him to change to become something he thought she wanted. She had fallen in love with him for what pumped inside his chest, not for his outward appearance. He was the leader of his tribe... nearly ten thousand strong now... and their numbers grew almost yearly with the births of young ones and those Immortals who had fled in search of them over the years.

They had built a city of sorts in the wild mountains of Kranek, using their strength to forge homes from the rock and build sturdy buildings with the centuries old trees that filled the valley below them. While they lived a simple life, growing their own food and hunting the plentiful animals that lived in the mountains, they had modern amenities as well. The landing pad within their city walls held three Long Range High Coven Runners and two large Limian transports that were used to trade with the three other settlements on Kranek, as well as purchase supplies and tools from within The Wilds. They used their considerable strength to mine the valuable Cretolian Gem Ore from the three surrounding mines which provided them with ample means to pay for whatever they needed. He could hear the laughter of little ones in the morning filtering along the streets of the city they had built. The casual greetings of his people to each other, the words of welcome and encouragement from all of them. Things that they would never have done before now came naturally to them. And he would never have been here to see it if not for the sleeping form in the bed in front of him.

His pureblood vampire wife.

Cha'talla lifted his hand and reached out to stroke the silky smoothness of her exposed leg that the thin sheet did not cover. He could stare at her beauty for hours, content to caress her satiny skin and marvel at the wonders she had brought into his life. The most important being the four strong and healthy children she had given him and the changes her degree in Bio-Engineering had brought forth in his people, himself included. As his hand drifted along her leg he took in the color of his skin now as it no longer resembled the skin of the dead. Her ability to manipulate genetic codes and medical equipment was unlike anything Cha'talla had ever witnessed, and the deep bronze color of his skin was testament to that. It was different for all of his people, and while they still retained their bone spikes and small eyes, almost all of them had seen changes to their skin color. It now appeared healthier and more vibrant. His tribe was no longer a fearsome visage to look upon, and while their physical size alone was enough to intimidate most; they no longer carried that deathly look of the Immortals that still lived within the High Coven.

There had been births among their tribe after Esther was able to alter the genetic code, and the children born after that were the result. While they still retained their AkruXian size and musculature, they looked even more normal as far as Cha'talla was concerned. Their features were elegant and they had different skin tone. This skin tone actually made the bone spikes common to their people almost acceptable in appearance, and many of the younger ones had elected to keep them now since they were no longer as pronounced. Esther's work and her complete devotion to their tribe rapidly saw her gain the respect due her. Not many of his tribe trusted her when they first arrived here; they thought she was a High Coven spy. Almost no one believed a pureblood would willingly stay with an Immortal. Esther had proven them wrong in the first two hours on this planet when she practically assaulted him sexually in front of nearly his entire tribe. Esther loved him shamelessly and their first weeks here they had discovered and explored each other for hours every night. It came as quite the surprise when she announced she was with child, and after the long and painful labor of bringing a large Immortal son from within her petite body and into this world, her standing in his tribe grew beyond measure. He now had four children with Esther, four strong and healthy boys to compliment his fully grown and pure Immortal son Fash'ka.

It had taken Fash'ka some time to become used to having Esther as his new mother, but as soon as his brother Tir'ut entered this world, Fash'ka could not have been prouder. Esther was now looked to as Cha'talla's wife and the senior female among their tribe. She was a teacher and doctor, always pushing to have their tribe schooled in not just the old ways but in ways his people had never thought of before. Areas which the High Coven had told them they were not intelligent enough for and never allowed them to enter. While she schooled them in areas of study they had never dabbled in before, she remained true to their AkruXian culture and traditions.

Esther had been the catalyst to Cha'talla's life altering future, and he had made a secret vow to only himself the morning after she had given him their third son that he would never allow any harm to come to her, and he would love her as completely as it was possible to love someone. An emotion he never thought he would feel, and now it filled his entire tribe in all that they did. Esther shifted on the bed and brought her delicate hand down to rest on top of his on her thigh. She groaned softly and a smile touched her face as she opened her dark eyes and looked at him.

"Are you just going to touch and admire my Immortal husband?" She asked in a sultry voice. "Or are you going to join me in our bed and actually douse the flames your touch is igniting?"

Cha'talla smiled at her words. "I came to wake you as you asked me my wife." He finally answered. "Tir'ut and Fash'ka have the transport loaded and prepared for travel."

Esther Saira sat up slowly in the bed, not bothering to hold the sheet over her naked body. The Immortal in front of her had long ago memorized every minute detail of her body and he knew her more intimately than anyone in the universe. Even to this day... Esther could not have been more pleased about that. She moved to the edge of the bed and wrapped her arms around Cha'talla's broad shoulders, pressing her large breasts against his chiseled skin as his hands pulled her petite frame closer to him. She covered his thin lips with her own and they shared a sizzling kiss of love and passion that last for several moments before she pulled away. No matter how many years they had been together, or the number of times he had made her scream out his name in passion as he took her body, Esther could never get enough of him. She stroked his beautiful face, at least it was beautiful to her, and smiled as she gazed at him. Her fingers traced the filed down nubs of his facial bone spikes and he smiled because she knew they were a sensitive part of his body.

"And we can't..." Esther asked hopefully.

"Esther... we would delay you leaving by several hours at least." Cha'talla spoke. "You know that is how long it will take me to fully sate your appetite for me."

"Mine?" She gasped. "What about yours for me?"

"That would take infinitely longer." Cha'talla replied with a grin as he brought his hand up to push back strands of her long dark brown almost black hair. "And we have planned this trip for months."

"Two weeks." Esther spoke resting her forehead to his as his hands pulled her hips tighter against him. "We will be gone for two weeks... and then I intend to return here and have you in my bed for at least that long."

Cha'talla chuckled. "That sounds quite promising." He spoke.

Esther pulled her face back and looked into his small dark eyes. "I love you Cha'talla of the Immortals. More completely than I have ever loved anything in my life."

His hands pressed her closer still and he stared back into her eyes. "And I love you Blessed Wife. The moment you entered my world Esther Saira, my future became so much brighter." He kissed her tenderly, brushing his nose against her lips first for he knew she loved that. "But now you must go. And I have to take a work detail to fix the east section of our crops there."

"You are meeting with the settlers there?" Esther asked.

Cha'talla nodded. "We will complete the trench that connects our settlements. And then we will have a celebration to honor that. We are looking forward to that."

"Two weeks my husband." Esther spoke with a smile. "You had better get your rest."

Cha'talla laughed. "I will be working out every day waiting for that." He told her. "And remember to get more of the Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos. Our stores are quite full... but you never know when we will need extra."

Esther nodded as she reluctantly pulled herself from his arms and reached for her clothes. "I will remember." She said looking at him and seeing the glint in his dark eyes. "Are you going to allow me to dress husband?"

"In a moment perhaps. I want to have this picture of you in my mind's eye while you are gone." Cha'talla spoke with a grin.

Esther shoved him in his shoulder, knocking him over from the balls of his feet. "Get out of here!" She exclaimed as he rolled to his feet easily and moved for the door of their bedroom.

“Mother.”

Esther allowed him to lean over and kiss her forehead as their palms touched in the traditional AkruXian custom. She smiled when his soft lips touched her skin. This was her oldest son with her Immortal husband.

Tir’ut stood nearly six feet four inches tall and two hundred and forty-five pounds of muscle and bone. His skin was more caramel colored due to the combination of hers and Cha’talla’s DNA and pigmentation. He had dark hair on his head which was a first for most Immortals, and he kept it cut extremely short. The bones spikes along his jaw line were much smaller than normal, but still easily seen, as were the ones along the ridges of his hands and wrists. His dark brown uniform held a body forged by his brother Fash’ka and his father into chiseled perfection as they had done with all of their sons. All of the children and even the adults were schooled daily, but Esther had been even more merciless when they returned home, adding another three to four hours of every day reading and studying under her watchful gaze. It was a practice Cha’talla encouraged, for he knew that knowledge was the key to their survival, and in the ancient AkruXian way he allowed Esther to do this as wife and mother and senior female in the tribe. He had only stepped in one time when Tir’ut had questioned his mother’s intentions and why they had to learn so much. Cha’talla had torn into his son with a fierceness Tir’ut had never seen before, and he and his two younger brothers at the time never questioned their mother again. As he had grown older, he came to understand why she did what she did, and he had thrown himself into his studies.

Tir’ut now spoke six languages fluently and would have been able to have an engineering degree from any recognized school across the many empires in the galaxy. He allowed his father and brother to mold and shape his body and mind in the old ways, while his mother shaped his mind in the new ways.

“Tir’ut.” Esther spoke softly.

Fash’ka stepped forward with a small smile and repeated the action with Esther. It had taken him many years to be able to comfortably call her mother, but now that word felt so very natural to him. Esther smiled at him and then took both their hands in hers.

“We are ready?” She asked as Cha’talla came up behind them.

Fash’ka nodded. “All is loaded and secure mother.” He spoke.

Esther’s dark eyes flashed brightly at him. “Is Ja’narie coming with us?” She asked.

If an Immortal could blush Fash’ka would have turned bright red. It was well known in their tribe that he favored the first born daughter of another family, and while she was pure AkruXian, the treatments her parents had received when first arriving had allowed her to be born with long flowing hair and much more delicate features.

Tir’ut grinned at his brother’s reaction, baring his vampiric fangs. While they had not started out vampiric in nature, centuries of being pawns of the High Coven had turned the entire population of AkruXian people. Unlike purebloods and turned of other species however, they could not retract their fangs.

“She’s coming mother.” Tir’ut spoke elbowing his brother in the side. “Fash’ka is beside himself.”

Esther laughed as Cha’talla reached them and held out the data pad for her. “The final list from everyone.” He spoke.

Esther took it with a nod and tucked it into the belt of her dark brown outfit. The clothes hugged her lithe five foot seven frame like a second skin, also providing armored protection on the chest and arms. She wore the small but powerful High Coven R14 hand blaster on her belt. It had been reworked many times giving her at least a dozen shots before the power cell was used up. After that... Esther would resort to the dual fighting knives that she was so very lethal with as well as her vampiric abilities to wrap the shadows around her and blur in motion. Esther looked at Cha’talla.

“Two weeks husband.” She spoke in an alluring voice as she pressed her body against his.

Fash’ka and Tir’ut watched as their father pulled Esther into his embrace, lifting her off the ground. She looked so tiny in his arms and that had been a point of laughter over the years for all of them. They watched as their Immortal father and their Pureblood vampire mother shared a kiss of passion, something Fash’ka had never thought his father ever capable of until she had come into his life. Esther had changed him... changed all of their people... and Fash’ka would now willingly sacrifice himself to insure her safety. She treated him no differently than she did any of his half brothers, and that more than anything endeared her to him forever.

“Be prepared Blessed Wife.” Cha’talla growled at her.

Esther laughed and kissed him quickly before he set her down and she looked at her two sons. “Shall we?”

Cha’talla looked at his sons. “Protect your mother and those with you my sons.” He ordered. Fash’ka and Tir’ut nodded. “Always father.” They spoke together.

EARTH GYTHEIO SEA SIDE VILLA OF ELIANI AND NYLA

The air was warm as it blew in from the harbor, bringing with it the smell of the ocean breeze and flowers from across the bay. The villa was two stories high and sat with its front facing the huge bay and harbor. The rear of the villa was backstopped by the mountains with a huge patio and overhang that allowed for privacy and the comings and goings of dragons at odd hours of the night and day. It was one of the larger villas along the bay of Gytheio, but when they had seen it Eliani and Nyla both knew they wanted it. They had sold the villas they owned separately and pooled their Riyal to purchase this one, and then set about decorating just the way they wanted. Tharua and Nyla’s dragon Arydun rested in the back on the open patio under the moon, both of them gnawing on huge bones. They had become like sisters because of whom their bond mates were, and they were completely comfortable with each other. They ignored the soft sounds of rapture coming from the main bedroom upstairs for they had heard it many times before during the last four years.

Nyla’s body dropped back onto the bed, sweat glistening off her deliciously tanned skin, her golden blond hair tossed wildly about and her eyes open wide and changed to cobalt blue. Her chest heaved with exertion, the nipples of her firm, full breasts almost painfully erect in unabashed pleasure and delight. Her limbs trembled from the force of the third mind blowing orgasm she had just experienced rapid fire one after the other. She could only lay there now with her fingers entwined in Eliani’s long burgundy hair as she felt her gloriously long tongue continuing to lap away at the remaining drops of her come that had escaped her lips. Eliani teasingly traced the outside of her still fully engorged labia with gentle licks and butterfly like kisses, sending shivers of delight rippling through Nyla’s taunt powerful body. She and Eliani were proud of their figures, both of them sporting smooth, flat and rippled abdomens, incredibly firm and tight asses and large firm breasts that never failed to turn the heads of any male they came across. Especially when she and Eliani hit the beach in bathing suits that left little to the imagination. Nyla felt Eliani begin the trek up her abdomen as her breathing began to return to normal. She didn’t want to wait however, the desire to taste her lover almost overpowering and all consuming.

Nyla sat up quickly, pulling Eliani’s head up and covering her full lips with her own. Both of them groaned in passion and need as Nyla plunged her tongue between Eliani’s lips to do battle with her own talented appendage. It was a battle that Eliani let Nyla win for she melted against her lover’s body almost immediately.

Nyla pulled her head back and stared into Eliani’s beautiful fern green eyes. “Now... now it’s your turn to ache my love!” She gasped using her vampire speed and strength to roll them over faster than Eliani could respond, her head descending to Eliani’s large breasts and engulfing one of her stiff nipples completely within her lips.

Eliani’s wolf eyes were smiling in love and passion, the black band encircling the fern green cornea and her long wolf fangs extending out. Her hands dropped to Nyla’s head as her lover’s lips and tongue sent tingles shooting through her body. Eliani gripped her head tighter, the need too much.

“Don’t... don’t tease me Nyla!” She almost shouted. “I... I want your lips on me now!”

Nyla smiled as she lifted her head, releasing Eliani’s rock hard nipple a single strand of salvia joining her lips to the hard nub for a few seconds.

“Beg me!” Nyla demanded.

“Please... please my love!” Eliani gasped again. “Don’t...”

“Beg me Eliani!” Nyla snapped with a smile, her vampire fangs exposed and her cobalt eyes bright.

“Yes... damn you!” Eliani barked. “Please... taste me! I want... I want your lips on me...! I’ll... I’ll do anything Nyla my love! Just don’t... don’t make me wait!”

“Anything Ussta Che?” Nyla demanded in a husky voice.

“Anything... anything... just... I need to come! Please Nyla...”

Nyla suckled Eliani’s nipple once more. “Then I shall give you what you so desire Ussta Che.” Nyla spoke softly.

Eliani’s fingers entwined in her golden hair as Nyla lowered herself to a comfortable position between Eliani’s wide stretched thighs. She stared lovingly at Eliani’s sweet pussy, so wet and fully open like the petals of a flower. The lips of her labia were moist and her clit fully unhooded and standing at attention begging for release. Nyla reached up and with the tip of her index finger she drew her nail up Eliani’s opening ever so slowly until she reached her clit and she flicked her finger lightly against the erogenous zone. Eliani’s ass rose off the bed in startled delight as the rush of pleasure swarmed through her just from that simple touch.

“Oh... oh... you vampire bitch!” Eliani hissed. “Don’t... don’t tease me!”

Nyla chuckled softly.

Never in her hundred and thirty-three years had she ever imagined the pleasures she had experienced with Eliani in this bed and others; never in all that time had she ever imagined she could find such pleasures with another woman. She knew their Mindvoice link was a part of it, but it had grown beyond that so long ago. They could make each other cry out in rapture in ways no man could ever match just with a simple caress. Nyla knew every crevice, knew every contour of her lover’s beautiful body, just as Eliani knew her every intimate curve. They were so much alike it was scary at times, and Nyla knew what they had found together was once in a lifetime, and that was why she had surrendered to it completely. She and Eliani may never find the man they both were looking for, but Nyla knew they would always have each other.

Nyla blew ever so softly across Eliani’s enflamed clit and smiled as her lover’s abdomen undulated. Her orgasm was building rapidly and Nyla knew it. They had remained with her family long into the early morning hours the night before, neither of them wanting to leave the joyous reunion. When they had finally returned to the Sparta Estate they were simply content to cling to each other as sleep took them. This night however, this night they had left Andro and Sadi with Carina and Moneus and flew back to their villa here on Tharua and Arydun. It had taken them all of two minutes to bring each other to breathe stealing orgasms even as they were falling on the bed half clothed. That had begun the last four hours of their night and Nyla was about to end it with a bang.

She brought her lips lower to Eliani’s sweet bald pussy, brushing her lips against the sugary tasting outer labia, as it was saturated with Eliani’s nectar already. She flicked her tongue out to trace the inner folds of her lover’s pussy, pressing her face closer and inhaling the sweet musky aroma of Eliani’s passion. Ever so slowly she moved closer to that hard nub, tasting and teasing, until finally she opened her mouth wide, her vampire fangs extended and she bit down into Eliani’s flesh just above that raging clit just as her tongue stabbed out and battered her stiff clit furiously. As Eliani’s blood splashed across her taste buds Nyla shuddered in her own powerful orgasm, grinding her pussy down into the sheets of their bed even as she drew Eliani’s hips tighter to her face and fastened her lips over her lover’s spasming pussy. She felt Eliani’s pussy clenched powerfully before her belly convulsed and her delicious come erupted from her opening, flooding Nyla’s mouth with nectar almost as sweet as Eliani’s blood. Her lover’s back arched off the bed, driving her humping pussy against Nyla’s lips and tongue, her hands tearing at the bed sheets as her scream echoed off the walls of their room.

And Nyla fed from the most delectable fountain she would ever taste.

As Eliani’s body collapsed back onto the bed shuddering in the aftermath of her orgasm, Nyla quickly withdrew her fangs and used her tongue to lovingly sweep across the two puncture holes sealing them immediately. Her lips remained fastened around Eliani’s still spasming pussy for almost another full minute until the most powerful ripples left her and her hips stopped undulating against her lapping tongue. Nyla left no drop unclaimed and spent several seconds simply lapping up all of Eliani’s juices as she could before lifting her lips reluctantly and slowly kissing her way up Eliani’s heaving abdomen. She dragged her tongue along the deep valley between Eliani’s large breasts before positioning her face over Eliani’s.

“Yah... dos tyav ssuorr!” Nyla uttered softly. (God... you taste delicious.)

Eliani’s half open eyes glittered in love and her lips broke into a wide smile as she reached up and brought Nyla’s lips down to hers and they shared a blistering kiss of love, passion and commitment, neither of them caring in the least that they could taste each other on their lips.

“You... you taste better.” Eliani stammered as they broke their kiss and Nyla lowered her body on top of Eliani’s and they pulled each other close.

“This is only a standard personal file Aur Enyla.” Eliani spoke as Nyla walked back into their bedroom carrying two glasses. (My Love)

They had slept for nearly six straight hours curled in each other’s arms before waking to the rising sun on their flesh. Nyla had thrown a thin robe on quickly as she went to their kitchen and retrieved a glass of prune juice for herself and a large glass of the special fruit juice her mother Anja had developed after Isabella had joined their lives and their beds so long ago. It was a mixture of four different fruits which would speed the replenishment of the nutrients in Eliani’s blood that Nyla had taken during their loving making.

Nyla nodded as she sat on the bed and held the glass out to her. “I know. That is all I was able to obtain on such short notice Ussta Che.” She answered watching and waiting for Eliani to take the first gulp of her juice before drinking herself. “I’m sure his entire package will arrive soon. I have to be careful though, he has applied for a direct appointment into the Durcunusaan and then Mjolnir’s Hand. That sort of request will be processed rather quickly. And his actions with Andro on Eleysi Three will only add to his file.”

Eliani lowered the glass, licking her lips of the cherry like flavor. “Wait... that means he will bypass all the academic requirements.” Eliani spoke. “How did he manage that?”

Nyla shook her head. “I’m not sure. His transcripts are readily available however. He was not a very good student... barely passing to be honest. I wonder how he will deal with the academics he must face to become a Durcunusaan.” She said. “He excelled physically and that was his specialty.”

Eliani grinned and blushed. “Well... I can attest to the excelling physically part.” She said. “He almost matched Andro when it comes to the definition of his body, not to mention he is exceptionally well equipped.”

Nyla matched Eliani’s smile. “You copped a feel didn’t you?” She asked using one of Eliani’s own terms.

“Oh... Aur Enyla... it was wonderful.” Eliani said wistfully.

“Show me!” Nyla spoke quickly moving closer to Eliani and touching her forehead to Eliani’s.

Nyla shivered gently as their minds came together in that instant and then she was experiencing everything Eliani had experienced. It was a side effect of them sharing blood Helen had told them once. Nyla had taken so much of Eliani that day and because of both the strength of their own natural Mindvoice powers, it created a link between them that would never be broken. A link that would allow them to share thoughts and feelings much like Eliani’s adopted Aunts Tarifa and Aihola, though because of their more advanced Mindvoice skills, their connection was stronger and more focused. Nyla was able to see and feel everything that Eliani had that time in the gym with Malic and as she leaned back she looked at her lover.

“I feel what he did to you Ussta Che. The way your blood burned.” Nyla spoke. “Oh... my love it was exquisite.”

Eliani nodded slowly. “Yes... and we have never shared a man so gifted as he is.” She spoke.

Nyla smiled seductively. “No we have not.”

“I... I don’t know what it is about this man Nyla.” Eliani said. “I told you he is arrogant beyond measure. And he has distaste for vampires that I have not seen before. I don’t know why... for it is not him. Something has made him like this... I know it. And though part of me says to just let it go... that it is not worth the effort or risk... the larger part of me wants to discover why he is this way. What has caused him to hold back and not let his true self come out. It wants to discover what he could make us feel in our bed Nyla.”

Nyla took her hands. “Then let us pursue that Ussta Che.” She said softly. “If whatever has made him like this is something we can change within him, is it not worth the risk and the effort just by what he made you feel? And by virtue of that... made me feel? How many wolves have shared our bed in the last three years and not even tickled our fancy with their clumsy attempts at impressing us.”

Eliani rolled her eyes. “Five... no six. None of them were worth the time we allowed them to have with us. Three of them could not keep up with us to begin with... one of them wanted us to remain home and punch out children for him while he thought to make a name for himself with Andro.”

Nyla laughed. “Oh... I forgot about him. Isn’t he the one that Andro practically threw off the mountain top outside Eden City for his foolish words?”

Eliani nodded with a smile. “That was him. And the last two my father got so scared they ran like wolves with their tails between their legs.”

“Ussta Che... if this man does this to us and has come no where close to sharing our bed... isn't that worth some interest?” Nyla asked.

Eliani nodded. “Yes.” She answered immediately.

Nyla nodded. “We must proceed carefully. He does not strike me as the type of man who would appreciate us digging into his past... or his records. And if he feels about my kind as you say I will use added caution.”

“I will try and get grandmother to access his academic records.” Eliani spoke softly. “I will have to tell her why.”

Nyla waved her hand dismissively. “I have full confidence in Lady Gorgo. She will tell no one what it is we ask. And I believe she will help us without question.”

Eliani nodded. “I will speak with her this morning. Andro and father will be attending the briefing on the reports of the High Coven reappearing. Then he will stake his claim for Sadi this afternoon when the Senate convenes. Grandmother will want to be there for that... but I can speak with her before the meeting is over with.”

“I will get dressed and see what I can discover about Malic from Bren and Famus before I try accessing his records.” Nyla said.

Eliani took her hands. “We will do what we can and discover what we can Nyla, but no matter what... if he does not want both of us... he gets neither.”

Nyla looked at her with adoring light green eyes now. “I know that Ussta Che. I've always known that.”

Eliani smiled and downed her fruit juice before putting the glass on the table next to the bed. “Good.” She said taking Nyla's hand. “Then let's jump in the shower so that I can wash your body with my tongue before we leave.”

Nyla's eyes glittered. “Well... I won't refuse an offer like that.”

EARTH OPERATIONAL COMMAND AREA
SECTOR ELEVEN
LYCAVORIAN BORDER OF THE WILDS
1.5 DAYS FROM EARTH
BORDER INTERDICTION PATROL
STRIKE GROUP TALON
ULU LEONIDAS II-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER
ULU *RAVEN'S WINGS

The junior Lieutenant paced the huge bridge of RAVEN'S WING, reading intently from the data pad as he waited for his relief to come to the bridge. He enjoyed the third shift on the RAVEN'S WINGS as it was quiet and usually very uneventful. The RAVEN'S WINGS was the Command ship for this entire sector of the Earth Operational Command Area, with not only its own Strike Wing under its direction, but also twenty-one of the new AUTUMN MOON TYPE II-Class Attack Frigates. They were one of the largest BIPs in Earth's Operational Command Area, and as a Border Interdiction Patrol group it was their job to respond to any activity along the expanse of the Union border, no matter what it involved. The BIPs operated independently from assigned Fleet groups and First Admiral Riall had chosen all one hundred and thirty-four BIP commanders personally. The commanders were for the most part brash and reckless, yet tempered and calm. It was a rare combination in leaders, especially fleet officers, but the hundred and four men and thirty women who commanded the BIPs were all cut from the same mold.

The lieutenant turned at the sound of the sensor operator's console indicating he had a contact. He watched as the man's hands flew over his controls with precise motions and then his wide eyes turned to look at him.

“Lieutenant! Long range sensors are detecting a High Coven BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought and its accompanying Task Force on an intercept course with the border! They will reach our current location in just under six hours at their present speed!”

“A High Coven Task Force?” The man exclaimed. “Out here? Confirm that!”

“I did sir! Three times!”

“Damn!” The lieutenant spoke moving up to the man’s station. “Bring the BIP to full combat alert! Alpha status!” He stabbed down on the console. “Captain Imror to the bridge! Captain Imror to the bridge!” He looked at the screen. “Show me?”

“Here sir!” The sensor operator spoke. “They are running in a full transit pattern! No shrouds! Almost as if they want to be seen.”

“How many ships?”

“Sensors indicate thirty-nine contacts sir! A mixture of ORIC-Class heavy cruisers and BLOODLETTER Medium Cruisers. Haven’t detected any frigates yet, but more than likely they are shrouded and on the flanks of the main formation!” The sensor operator answered.

The doors to the bridge opened and Captain Imror strode confidently onto the bridge of his ship. One of his hands was filled with a mug of Queen Aricia’s coffee, while the other held two data pads. He had been on his way to the bridge when the excited call came out. Imror was not one to get excited. A single reckless and totally off the wall mission twenty-five years ago had changed him in a way that had earned him this command at the recommendation of his former commanding officer Captain Daro. He had led a small team of Spartan warriors onto a moving transport on its way to Earth, only to discover the ships were commanded by Kavalians and they were conducting a covert mission to gain the precious dragon eggs. Imror’s actions, as well as Captain Daro had earned both of them career positions that neither of them could refuse. Imror had been part of almost every space battle during the Evolli war earning decorations as well as honor and respect. His actions during that war had earned him RAVEN’S WINGS and he had turned down promotion to Admiral to remain in command of Border Interdiction Patrol Talon. He had no desire to take command of an entire Fleet Group.

“What do we have Lieutenant?” Imror barked out as he moved to his command chair almost casually.

“Captain! Long range sensors have detected a High Coven Task Force approaching the border without Shrouds.” The man spoke. “A mix of heavy and medium warships centered on a BLOOD REVERENCE-Class Dreadnought!”

Imror nodded as he sipped his coffee. “The BLOOD REVERENCE is their newest command ship.” He spoke calmly. “Interesting. Status of the Strike Wing?”

“All ships have signaled full combat alert status Alpha.” The lieutenant replied. “The AUTUMN MOON’S have only just now begun reporting in!”

Imror looked at him. “Calm down Lieutenant.” He spoke with a smile. “If they intended an attack do you think they would be on an intercept course with our border without being shrouded?”

“Ah... no sir.” The Lieutenant answered.

Imror nodded. “They want something... and they want us to know they are coming so we don’t blow them out of the stars.”

“Yes sir!”

“Very well... have the Strike Wing execute BIP Plan Three Nine and maintain their Shrouds.” Imror spoke. “Maintain station right where we are Joche ... and contact Captain Panthu on the NOMAD. Pass what information we have so far to him and have him bring the NOMAD to our location and form his Strike Wing with ours.”

“Should I contact Earth Captain?” Joche asked. “Advise First Admiral Riall and the King of what is happening?”

Imror shook his head. “We don’t know what is happening Joche.” Imror answered in a calm voice. He took no offense at Joche obviously excited statement. “Admiral Riall and the King will want as much information as we are able to provide them before they make a decision. How soon before we discover the COM channel this Coven task force is using?”

The communications officer turned from her station. “I’ll need another seven minutes sir! They are using a standard Coven code... but the level of encryption is more than normal. Even with the new cipher equipment... seven minutes to be safe.”

Imror nodded easily. The new communications cipher systems allowed them to not only detect and track but also monitor almost any known communications taking place within range of their equipment depending on the level of encryption involved.

“Then let us prepare our ship for whatever may happen. We will monitor their ship to ship transmissions for a few hours and see if they continue to close on the border. If it appears that is their intent, we’ll interrupt them and let them know that is not a wise course of action.” He spoke.

“Aren’t we technically still at war with the High Coven Captain?” Joche asked.

Imror nodded. “Perhaps... however there hasn’t been a cross border incursion or even a small confrontation with the Coven in nearly twenty-five years. We’ll play it cool for now and see what our visitors have in mind. Joche... insure however that our shields and weapons are on line and prepared. We don’t want to be caught unaware.”

“Yes sir!”

EARTH
LYCAVORIAN UNION MILITARY HQ
SPARTAN COMMAND CENTER
500 METERS BENEATH MOUNT HAGIOS

Hagios Center.

It had been built in secret over fifteen years.

It was buried five hundred meters beneath the peak of Mount Hagios within the Taygetus Mountain range to Sparta’s west. Ten levels of reinforced steel layered with Dragon Armor and concrete. The Military Command Center for all of Earth’s Operational Command Area and whenever Martin occupied Sparta for their six month long stays. Two thousand Spartans and civilians worked within the four square kilometer underground facility, all of them ostensibly working at the medium sized secure airfield that sat at the juncture of the eastern and northern mountain ranges and was guarded by Durcunusaan troops.

The Bubble Room as they called was similar to the conference room in the Eden City Command Center. It held a massive table, with star charts and communications consoles, as well as several monitors. On the opposite side of the soundproof and very nearly indestructible transparent steel and alloy glass was the actual command and control brain of Hagios Center. Able to communicate, coordinate and control every portion of the Union military from this room, it was identical to the main Command and Control center on Apo Prime.

The table’s two dozen chairs were only half full at the moment, several pitchers of water and carafes of coffee and tea spread across the top of the gleaming polished wood top. The chairs were all black high back chairs and exceptionally comfortable. Data pads were strewn across the top of the table, the men and women present sifting through them frequently. Martin sat at the head of the table, Andro to his right while Dysea sat to his left. Aricia, Anja, Isabella and For’mya were moving about Sparta making last minute preparations for when Andro would claim Sadi this afternoon unbeknownst to their son of course. Riall and Danny were standing near one of the star charts speaking in soft whispers with Armetus while Deia was conversing with Tarifa, Walter, her deputy Prime Minister Laustinos and Panos. Martin made it a point to include Tarifa and Panos in any intelligence briefings no matter what they concerned. Tarifa was considered his sister while he treated Panos as a surrogate father as he had since the day he had arrived in Sparta so long ago. They needed to be aware of everything that took place since Sparta was considered not only the co-capital of Earth, but unofficially had become almost a second capital of the Union itself.

Deia finally turned from Panos and looked at Martin. “Mandri... are we sure this is High Coven related? You and Andro... you are sure about what you have felt?” (Nephew)

There were not many who knew the blood relationship between Martin and Deia and it was not spoken of openly. Deia was the sister of Martin’s grandmother and his Great Aunt. They did not speak of it unless among family and friends who knew this connection simply because it allowed Deia more freedom as Prime Minister and it did not appear that Martin was micromanaging everything she did. This would not have been the case regardless since everyone knew Martin hated politics as a general rule.

Martin waited for a moment as everyone returned to their chairs and sat down. “What do you mean Tenna?” (Aunt)

“There are many groups of Immortals that have broken from the High Coven in the last two decades for one reason or another. We’ve gotten reports from our agents in The Wilds about them.” Laustinos spoke from his chair next to Deia before she had a chance to answer. “Perhaps this was one of them.”

He had been Deputy Prime Minister for just over a quarter century, working closely with Deia as well as others within the government. He was considered an intelligent and handsome young wolf of eight hundred and nineteen years, but he was also considered slightly arrogant and somewhat of a pacifist. He had been recommended to Deia by Armetus shortly after the events on Enurrua for his intelligence and organizational skills since he had just finished a stint with Armetus’s Intelligence unit.

“That is unlikely.” Armetus spoke from his chair. “Those Immortals who have broken from the Coven are immediately branded traitors and have death sentences put on their heads with bounties that are quite high.” He looked at Martin. “Several of our people have witnessed Immortals being targeted by mercenaries and bounty hunters.”

“The group we whacked on Ceku Tertius was wearing Coven uniforms and they were carrying Coven weapons.” Danny said from his chair.

“Well... perhaps we should not have killed them all before we had an opportunity to question them.” Laustinos spoke firmly.

Danny looked at the man. “They were in Union Space conducting black market weapons deals on a Union planet with known Evolli mercenaries who did not surrender after the war. Evolli mercenaries who have dragged Kochab bounty hunters into their little group and are now hitting our settlements within Union space. Peaceful settlements I might add. And until you’ve gone a couple rounds with just one Immortal friend, don’t sit in that chair and tell me how to fight them! They’d have your skinny ass for an appetizer! These boys weren’t mercenary... they were regular High Coven Immortals with all the bells and whistles. And they ain’t no pushovers.”

“The prisoner Daniel took also said his group was only a smaller part of the larger force we have been hunting since the end of the war.” Riall spoke.

“We took a prisoner?” Laustinos asked his eyes wide. “Why don’t we question him?”

“We did question him.” Danny answered. “He sang like a bird until he fell out of the airlock.”

“You killed him?” Laustinos gasped.

Danny shook his head. “Not at all. I just helped him along on his path to whatever god he prayed too.” He answered with a grin.

“So you did kill him!” Laustinos snapped.

“His group took part in a raid on a Union settlement that killed over three hundred civilians.” Andro spoke now from next to his father.

“He wasn’t part of that attack.” Laustinos said.

“They are part of the same organization.” Martin spoke. “What difference does it make?”

Deia put her hand on Laustinos arm before he could stick his foot further into his mouth. “Mandri... let’s set aside this unfortunate fool who fell out of the airlock.” Deia spoke calmly seeing Danny grin out of the corner of her eye. “Why would High Coven Immortals be inside Union space purchasing T19s?”

Martin pulled his eyes from Laustinos and looked at Deia. “Dragons.” Martin spoke.

“Dragons?” Deia asked surprised. “What do you mean?”

Riall leaned forward now in his chair. “Martin... you don’t think...?”

Martin nodded. “The dragons the High Coven were able to obtain twenty three years ago.” He said. “If they were somehow able to get the eggs to hatch, then the hatchlings and those eggs that hatched are reaching the age when they could fight. Just as Elynth, Jeth, Tharua and the others do now even though they are no more than twenty-five years old. And the tremors are getting closer.”

“That would... that would imply the High Coven has Mindvoicers sufficiently strong enough to establish a bond with these dragons.” Armetus spoke gently. “We know they have purebloods that are equal in power to Thr’won perhaps... they have used them in battle before.”

Martin nodded. “I’ve never assumed they do not have men and women strong enough to bond with dragons.” He spoke softly. “Arzoal and I knew it would happen someday. We have pureblood vampires within our own ranks that have bonded with dragons. Nyla being the strongest among them.”

“That is due to her connection with Eliani isn’t it?” Riall asked.

Andro shook his head. "Nyla and Arydun had a very deep and strong connection with each other before Eliani ever entered their lives. That only became more powerful when she and Eliani found each other. The other vampire purebloods of the Durcunusaan who have bonded with dragons also have deep connections. In some instances they are the strongest of the Bonded Pairs who are not members of Mjolnir's Hand."

"The last few months Andro and I have been feeling tremors within Mindvoice." Martin spoke. "Powerful tremors that Arzoal has sensed as well. All of them from within High Coven space. The dragons they took have bonded with riders, and their combined consciousness within Mindvoice is now evident to us. We don't know how many... and the High Coven is more than likely unaware we can sense them... however the tremors are darker than what we normally feel from our brothers and sisters."

"Darker?" Deia asked. "Darker how?"

"Tenna..." Andro said. "The dragons within the Union... from the time they hatch they are taught to honor and respect others. To be benevolent. Violence is a last resort to them. This is what their sires and the Dragon Elders preach... and it is why with the exception of Elynth and those bonded to my siblings, no dragon is allowed to become bonded to a rider until they are at least five hundred years old. By then they have learned patience and wisdom."

"Wait a moment... I have seen Elynth fight." Deia spoke. "I've seen Torma and Isheeni fight. They are devastating. All of the Bonded Pairs are."

Dysea leaned forward now. "When a pair becomes bonded they take on some of the traits of their partner." She spoke softly. "You know that Deia."

Deia nodded. "Yes..."

"When they reach five hundred years of age they are able to blend that wisdom and patience with the more fiery nature of Spartans and Elves and even vampires. The result is a Bonded Pair. They balance each other's nature to the extent that they will always seek a peaceful resolution to any problem first... however when it comes time to fight... they will fight with the same savageness and skill as their Bonded brother or sister and they will hold nothing back."

"The dragons the High Coven was able to steal have not had the benefit of Arzoal and the Dragon Council to guide them." Martin spoke. "Which means those dragons will be different. They will not seek to solve a problem with words first... they will fight first. Just as savagely as their Bonded Rider will fight. And we know how the High Coven trains their troops."

"What does this have to do with the Immortals and T19s?" Laustinos spoke with exasperation. Talk of dragons and Mindvoice abilities always confused him.

"It's possible that they were meeting with the Evolli to purchase T19s in order to help their dragons learn to fight them." Andro replied. "It also means they are almost ready to employ them against the Kavalians in battle."

"Mandri... you said the tremors are getting closer." Deia spoke. "What do you mean by that?"

"Andro, Arzoal and I, as well as the entire Elder Council believe the High Coven is bringing those dragons here to us. They are bringing them here for us to train them." Martin spoke. "Train them to fight the Kavalians."

Deia sat back quickly at this news. "Oh my." She spoke softly.

Martin nodded. "Yes... now you see the quandary. The Evolli scum were only the first level of what is going on. However... I believe their attack on Eleysi Three is an entirely different animal."

Armetus looked at him. "You believe the Queens were the target Milord?" He spoke.

Martin nodded. "I've been playing this over and over in my head and nothing else makes sense. The colony was still relatively new... and they could not have sold the ore being mined on any black market without it being refined first. In order to refine it you need the facilities for that which they don't have access to."

"That we know of Skipper." Danny spoke up.

Martin nodded. "That we know of." He spoke. "But aside from some medical supplies and personal wealth... why attack the settlement? Unless you wanted to draw someone there."

"But Eleysi Three is part of Earth's jurisdiction." Riall spoke. "Once they received word of the attack, Isra would have responded, not Andro and the Queens."

Martin nodded. "Until you factor in the time of the attack and the deal on Ceku Tertius." He said. "These Evolli and Kochab were part of the same group. They..."

“We don’t know that for sure!” Laustinos interrupted quickly. “We...” His words were cut off by Deia’s hand on his arm once more.

“The attack on Eleysi Three was timed perfectly to coincide with the weapons deal on Ceku Tertius.” Martin said again ignoring Laustinos. “I believe they knew exactly how long a message would take to reach Earth...”

Armetus nodded. “The same time the Queens would have been passing through the same sector.” He said as his mind kicked in.

“They only had two T19 missile teams.” Andro said next. “They did not expect five Bonded Pairs to descend on them. They were expecting only two. And with my mothers passing through the same sector at the time of the emergency beacon sending out its automated signal... they would have responded as if it was a rescue mission.”

“Man... that is reaching Marty.” Danny said. “I’m not discounting it... but that’s a stretch even for us to make. Targeting Aricia and Anja? That’s not small potatoes.”

“You have not told Melyanna and Aricia about your feelings Nauta Melme.” Dysea spoke softly. “Why?”

Martin met her emerald eyes. “I don’t want them to be concerned about it Melda Min. Andro did the right thing telling them it was only a possibility... and a slim one at that. Until we know for sure they were not the targets... I’m not willing to increase their security regardless of what I think. They’d have my nor if I did that and didn’t tell them why. I wanted you to know just in case information comes in and I’m not around.”

Dysea nodded. “I will keep my eyes open when we are together then.” She said softly, resting her hand on his arm.

Though no one would ever speak of it openly, it was rumored that behind Aricia, his first elven Queen Dysea was his most favored Queen. You could not tell with the way he treated all of them in public and private, but many who were close to the King and knew how his mind worked agreed on that one fact. Dysea had been beside him the longest in terms of time together and unbeknownst to all but a few, Dysea was the only one of his Queens besides Aricia that could tolerate the full unshielded force of his alpha wolf aura and not become helpless before him. Martin knew how far he could push each of his Queens with his aura and over the years he had refined that to an art, knowing just how much to use to excite and arouse them just to the edge.

Martin nodded and looked at Danny. “I know it’s a reach Danny. That is why we need Anton and Cihera to go to Talbor Seven... meet with this middle man... and find out who contacted him. Then pursue it as far as that trail will take them.”

Dan nodded. “They are waiting outside with Lynwe.” He spoke.

Martin nodded and looked at Deia. “Tenna?”

Deia was silent for a moment and then nodded her head and met his eyes evenly. “I believe this information in regards to the High Coven and their dragons is the more disturbing of the two items we have discussed, however I will not tolerate a threat or an attempt on our Queens in any way.” She spoke. “I assume you are proceeding with this operation under the eye of Armetus?”

Martin nodded. “He’ll be the contact for Anton and Cihera but you know I’ll never leave you out of the loop on any operation we conduct in The Wilds.”

“Shouldn’t we discuss this more?” Laustinos said quickly. “Bring in others to review the information we have and then make a decision? If I’m not mistaken the last time we conducted an operation in The Wilds without guidance from this office we angered three different allies with Prince Andro’s ... with his response to what was discovered. Isn’t it... isn’t it just prudent to at least have a contact within the Prime Minister’s office aware of what is going on?”

Martin was about to reply when Armetus nodded. “I will not object to that.” He spoke quickly. “This is a simple intelligence gathering mission sire... and we don’t expect for Anton and Cihera to have any problems.”

Deia nodded as well. “I have too much on my plate to be active with this. If Armetus is fine with it... then Laustinos can be our contact.”

Martin nodded. “That works for me. That is up to you Armetus. If you are good with it... then I have no issues with it.”

Laustinos smiled. “May I meet those who will be going on the mission then?”

Armetus nodded and got to his feet. "I'll even do you one better. You can sit in on the briefing with General Simpson, General Lynwe and I."

Laustinos got to his feet quickly. "Excellent." He turned to Martin and bowed his head quickly. "Milord..." His eyes cut to Dysea and he bowed his head even lower though never breaking eye contact with her as Martin turned to say something to Andro. He stared at her with want and lust in his eyes. "Milady Dysea... if you'll excuse me?"

Dysea nodded her head quickly and turned to Martin, leaning over and nuzzling his cheek. Laustinos tore his eyes from her and headed out of the room following Danny and Armetus.

"Mandri..." Deia asked. "Now that Laustinos is gone... and you and Armetus planned and executed that very well by the way. I don't believe he suspects anything at all." She said with a smile.

"That was very smooth father." Andro said with a grin.

"He's not a bad sort." Riall spoke moving down several chairs at the table. "He is just young and inexperienced in the way of things. He believes everything needs to be debated and decided by men who have never fired a weapon in anger in their entire lives."

Deia smiled knowingly. "Yes... well now that he is otherwise occupied perhaps you could elaborate on why you believe the High Coven is coming here." Deia spoke.

Martin looked at her. "I don't believe Tenna." He spoke softly.

Dysea looked at her now. "They are almost here Deia." She said finishing Martin's statement and seeing Deia's eyes go wide.

"Are... are you sure?" She gasped.

Martin nodded. "Oh yeah."

EARTH OPERATIONAL COMMAND AREA
SECTOR ELEVEN
LYCAVORIAN BORDER OF THE WILDS
1.5 DAYS FROM EARTH
BORDER INTERDICTION PATROL
STRIKE GROUP TALON
ULU LEONIDAS II-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER
ULU RAVEN'S WINGS

"Their base course has not changed Captain!" Joche barked out. "Thirty-nine minutes from border crossing."

Imror turned from his chair. "Is the NOMAD and their Wing in position?" He asked.

"Yes sir."

"Status of weapons and shields?"

"Shields are online and reading green!" Joche replied. "Weapons are standing by!"

"The Coven ships?" Imror asked.

"Sensors indicate no weapons are powered up sir, however their shields are up and powered."

Imror nodded. "Yes... well you are lurking about and do not know what is going to hit you that is the wise thing to do." He turned to the opposite side of his bridge. "Weapons... how long before they are in range?"

"They will reach maximum Mark 22B range in six minutes sir!"

"Good. I want two squadrons of T9Es ready to launch to provide fighter cover!" Imror barked. "Have all the M4B DEVASTATORS ready to launch with full loads! Relay the same orders to the NOMAD! Our remaining T9Es are to remain on standby for immediate follow on missions!"

"Yes sir!"

"Stand by people! We will find out what they want in seven minutes! Once we have them in kill range."

BLOOD REVERENCE*-CLASS DREADNOUGHT

INQUISITOR

“...know we are coming Robert.” Yuri spoke softly to Moran.

Moran looked at her from his command chair, Yuri standing close to the arm of the chair, her hand resting casually on his arm. “Are you sure?”

Yuri nodded. “My mother and I have felt tremors within Mindvoice.” She answered. “Our dragons have not learned to conceal their Mindvoice signature as the dragons within the Union have. Leonidas and his son have undoubtedly felt the tremors. There could be others that are strong enough as well. She has detected at least five on Earth that are powerful enough to sense Vollenh and the others.”

“Is that a good thing or a bad thing Yuri?” Moran asked.

Yuri smiled and squeezed his arm affectionately. “It means they will be curious enough to find out what we want before they launch an attack against us.”

Moran looked at her for a long moment. “Was it a mistake to come out here with only part of a Strike Group?” He asked. “We only have thirty-nine ships, and the reason we came here is because we know they will be on Earth. That does mean however, they will have at minimum three entire Fleet Groups to bring to bear on us.”

Yuri shook her head. “They will not attack first.” She spoke. “They will be curious as to why we are here no doubt. But they...”

“Admiral!” The communications officer barked as he spun around. “Admiral we are being hailed by a Lycavorian warship on our own secure channel!”

Moran came to his feet quickly. “Shit! They tapped our COMs! Execute random frequency shifts immediately! Go to Level Ten Encryption! Inform all ships!” Moran turned to Yuri. “We had no idea they could tap our communications Yuri!”

“You said yourself that we would be fools to believe they have not developed new tactics and technology. This appears to be one of them.” Yuri spoke calmly but with a smile as she detected her husband’s heightened battle awareness. “We are not here for battle Robert.”

Moran took a deep breath and nodded. “You’re right.” He spoke. “At least not yet.” He turned to his COM officer. “Patch the transmission to the main holo disc here on the bridge. And inform the Empress of what is happening and request her presence on the bridge.”

“Redirecting transmission Admiral.”

The Holo disc in the center of the bridge in front of Moran’s command chair shimmered to life revealing the face of the stern looking Lycavorian Spartan. He looked surprisingly calm and in control, his dark eyes bright.

“...Imror of the United Lycavorian Union warship RAVEN’S WINGS to the unknown High Coven Group. You are approaching the Lycavorian Union Border on an unauthorized approach corridor. You will state your intentions immediately or I will order my ships to open fire and destroy you.”

Moran snorted. “You and what army sport.” He spat drawing chuckles from his bridge crew.

Yuri touched his arm. “Do not dismiss his words Robert. I have seen enough tricks by Martin Leonidas to know better. He is not alone.”

Moran smiled and laughed at himself. “I just about fell into the trap we have been telling our sons not too.” He said taking a deep breath. He looked at his COM officer. “Let him see us.”

“Transmission active on both ends sir!”

Moran watched as the Lycavorian officer’s eyes lifted somewhat but his face remained stoic. “Well... Supreme Commander of High Coven Military Forces Admiral Robert Moran.” Imror spoke evenly. “I must say... this is a surprise.”

“Captain Imror... you are...” Moran started.

“I have no time for small talk Admiral Moran.” Imror stated. “Your ships are less than thirty minutes from crossing our border. Please state your intentions to me immediately or I will order my forces to open fire.” He turned to someone out of the transmission field. “Drop the Shroud!”

Moran turned his head slightly as his sensor operator’s eyes grew wide. “Vith me! Admiral... a LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser has de-shrouded directly ahead! On their side of the border! Admiral... Admiral it matches the INQUISITOR in size and if sensors are accurate firepower as well!”

Moran looked at Yuri. "They must have more of them than we thought if one is patrolling the border." He spoke in barely a whisper. "Or it's a Sector Command ship."

Yuri nodded. "Yes... which means there are other ships still out there hidden from our sensors."

"I will not state my request again Admiral Moran. We have detected your sensor sweeps of my ship. Now please comply with my request." Imror spoke once more.

Moran turned back to the transmission. "You do realize I have you outnumbered." He spoke quickly.

Imror tilted his head. "Would you care for me to engrave that on your tombstone Admiral Moran?" He asked.

"You're an insubordinate sonofabitch!" Moran barked out. "Don't they teach respect to superior officers in the Union anymore?"

Imror chuckled within the transmission his gaze unwavering. "You are not my superior officer Admiral Moran. You are the Supreme Commander to High Coven forces, and while we have not fought an engagement in nearly twenty-five years, we are not friends nor allies in any shape or form. You are about to cross the Union border without an invitation... and if that happens I will bring to an end twenty-five years of no conflict between us by blowing you and your task force out of the stars! Am I making myself quite clear enough to your vampire ears?"

"We have made no threatening moves!" Yuri spoke now. "And we have not yet crossed your border Captain! You would do well to remember that."

"You'll forgive me if your words do not provide me any comfort Princess Yuri." Imror spoke.

"You know who I am?" Yuri asked.

"There are few who don't." Imror answered. "I believe the King refers to you as a back stabbing, blood sucking nubous black hearted bitch if I'm not mistaken." He said with some amusement. "I believe that is one of the phrases he has uttered over the years in regards to you. Now... I will state my question again only one more time. You will please advise me what your intentions are for I know you are not out here sightseeing. If you do not wish to answer that is also quite acceptable. At that time I will end this transmission, re-shroud my ship and the moment that you so much as fart across our border I will destroy you all."

"That will not be necessary Captain." Aikiro's voice spoke now as she entered the bridge and moved up to stand next to Robert and Yuri. "We are not here to do battle. We are here to talk."

Imror's face showed surprise now and he got to his feet slowly. "Well dip me in sibfla and call me stinky." Imror blurted the phrase that Queen Anja had stared during the Evolli War aboard her ship. A phrase that had spread quickly throughout the entire Lycavorian Fleet over the course of the next year. "The Empress of the Vampire High Coven." Imror couldn't help but notice the many turned heads on his bridge at this news. "Now I am impressed."

"You know my face?" Aikiro asked slightly taken aback. That changed quickly. "Ah... my son has told you many things I would imagine."

"Colonel Vonis has told us enough." Imror answered stoically.

"Colonel Vonis?" Aikiro spoke in a softer voice now as surprise showed on her face this time. "Colonel Vonis? How quaint."

"Why are you here?" Imror demanded. "Or are you out enjoying the cold of space just for fun?"

"We demand..." Aikiro began speaking but caught herself quickly. "We wish to have a diplomatic conference with your King Captain Imror. Ol uriu ulu xun xuil tagnik'zun." (It has to do with dragons.) She said switching to the ancient vampire language.

"udtila ol nin?" Imror replied watching Aikiro's eyes go wide at his fluency in their vampire tongue. Imror chuckled at her expression. "My mate is a Drow elf Empress. One of those subjected to your daughter's many perverted experiments when she ruled this planet. She has taught me many things, including your language. She is onboard right now... would you like to talk with her? Or your daughter perhaps? I'm sure she would be happy to speak with you." (Does it now?)

"We will not cross the border Captain." Aikiro spoke maintaining her composure. "I ask that you relay our request to your King as quickly as possible. The information we have to share with him concerns the Kavalians and plans to attack the Union. He might find that important enough to grant us an audience."

Imror stared at her within the transmission for a long moment. "We shall see." He spoke. "You will hold position before you cross our border. Understand this... if one centimeter of any of your ships crosses the border before I contact you back I will blow you and all your ships straight to Jorbhe!” Imror hissed. “Is that clear enough for you?” (Hell)

“Quite to the point Captain.” Aikiro spoke calmly.

“Stand by on this channel! RAVEN’S WINGS out!”

“Well... that went better than expected.” Aikiro spoke with a small smile.

“Mother we can...” Yuri began speaking.

Aikiro shook her head and reached out to touch Moran’s arm while taking Yuri’s hand in hers. “No... he is quite confident... and what does that tell you Robert?”

Moran smiled and touched the arm of his command chair. “Tesand?” He spoke.

Tesand’s voice answered clearly and immediately. “They’ve definitely improved the quality of their Shrouds Robert.” His voice answered calmly. “Microfraction pulses at less than a quarter of a percent. Phased variance point one three. We can’t lock them completely... but based on the scans we got as that ship de-shrouded... I’d have to estimate at least another forty to fifty ships are out there. All Shrouded... and all of them waiting to pounce.”

Moran turned back to Aikiro and saw her eyes and Yuri’s eyes with surprise in them. “Tesand has over four thousand years of experience operating and detecting shrouded ships. He offered to be the one to operate the sensors from the astrometric bay when we first made contact.” He explained to them with a smile once more. “Can’t get much more accurate than that now can we.”

“Indeed we can’t.” Aikiro spoke.

“I expect we will hear back something within the next hour or so.” Moran said. “Can I interest you ladies in some breakfast while we wait?”

Aikiro couldn’t help but chuckle. “Oh daughter...” She spoke turning and taking Moran’s arm. “The more time I spend around your husband... the more his devious mind impresses me.”

Yuri grinned as she took Robert’s hand. “Yes... he never ceases to impress me.” She spoke as they headed for Moran’s small office off the bridge.

SPARTA

INDOOR SPARTAN SENATE CHAMBERS

Andro looked at himself in the floor length mirror wearing the polished near blinding cuirass bronze armored chest plate and greaves. The gauntlets covered his forearms while leaving his arms bare up to his shoulders. The cuirass chest armor sparkled in the light of the room, and he reached up to allow his fingers to caress several dents in the chest plate. The sandals felt odd on his feet, the short mesh skirt leaving most of his powerful legs bare as well. The scabbard for the ancient Xiphos rested along his right side; while the ancient crimson cloak or Chiton dropped far enough from his shoulders that the edges touched the floor.

Andro turned his head when the door to his left slid open and Panos walked in with his grandmother. Gorgo’s face was beaming as she saw him and her hands came up to cover her mouth, Panos’s eyes were simply filled with pride.

“Now there walks a true Spartan.” He spoke softly with a smile before moving right up to Andro and reaching out to adjust something on his shoulder.

Andro looked at Gorgo as she stepped closer. “This is... this is grandfather’s armor?” He asked with awe in his voice.

Gorgo nodded and her eyes were moist as she reached up to straighten the Chiton. “This is his second set of armor.” She replied. “Panos and the others have kept it... cared for it all these years. Leonidas... your grandfather... he wore it into battle many times. Your father wore this when he presented himself to claim all your mothers.”

Panos stepped back and looked at him. “The Xiphos was retrieved from Thermopylae... and this...” He turned and took the spear from where it leaned against the wall by the mirror. “This was discovered resting on your grandfather’s monument ten years before the Great Comet came. It is his spear. The markings chipped into the shaft indicate how many enemies he brought down with it as was the custom back then. The crimson and gold rings were his mark. Whoever left this at the monument knew what they had... and they cared for it for centuries.” He held out the spear for Andro to take. “Your father told me the day he brought your namesake home to Sparta he would act in his stead as my son. And he has done that without fail. We may not be related by blood Androcles Leonidas... but you have carried my son’s name all these years... and you have lived up to his legacy without fail. That is something I can never repay you for.”

“You do not need...” Andro began.

“Andro hush!” Gorgo spoke quickly. “Spartan men were not allowed to show emotion back then and this is Panos’s way of acting that out. His words are heartfelt.”

Andro met Panos’s eyes and nodded his head. “I am honored.” He said softly.

Panos stared at him for a long moment and nodded. “You and your father would have made formidable Spartans in my youth young Androcles. Now... in this day... you are both more than formidable. You are a force of nature my boy... never forget that.”

“I won’t.” Andro said.

They turned as the door opened once more and Moneus walked in dressed very similar to Andro with blinding bronze cuirass and helmet. Melancton walked beside him a look of pure happiness on his face.

“We are ready.” Melancton exclaimed. Danny’s father was just as monstrous as his son, towering over them in his own ancient armor that shone in the light. “Twenty-three years I have waited to wear this armor again! Since the day Daniel took Anuk and Nayeca. Now the first of my grandsons will honor me as their father did!”

Panos and Gorgo laughed at the pride spilling from the grizzled Spartan’s face. “Just remember not to drink so much Spartan wine at the celebration afterwards.” Panos spoke elbowing the large man. “Your mate will cut you off at the knees.”

Melancton laughed heartily. “Yes... she has already warned me about that.”

Moneus stepped up to Andro. “Do you believe they actually wore this stuff in battle?” He asked trying to adjust the armor on his shoulder.

Andro chuckled. “Something tells me Carina is not going to be looking at the armor my friend.”

“Do you think she suspects?” Moneus asked.

Gorgo shook her head. “Trust me Moneus... she has no idea. She only thinks you are standing as Andro’s second.”

Moneus’s eyes got bigger. “What... what if she doesn’t...”

Andro hit him in the shoulder with the face of the shield as he picked it up. “Don’t even go there.” He spoke. “She has been waiting for this day just as long as you Moneus. She just doesn’t know it’s going to happen today.”

Gorgo chuckled. “Neither does your father or your mother Isabella. You and your mothers and siblings have done an amazing job of not telling anyone about this all the while acting as normal as can be.” She said. “I am going to treasure the looks on their faces.”

Panos looked at Melancton and nodded. “It’s time.”

“Isn’t it unusual for the entire Royal family to be here L’tian?” Vorilas leaned close to L’tian and asked softly even as his eyes took in the entire group of older Prince and Princesses sitting in a separate gallery next to theirs. The Princes wore their full uniforms while Eliani, Carina, Lisisa, Normya and Zarah wore similar gowns that hugged their bodies in all the right places. Nyla sat next to Eliani, her parents behind them.

The chamber had been enlarged considerably from when Martin first stood here, and now Torma, Isheeni, Iriral, Aurith and Miath rested comfortably on the ground just to the right of the chair of their bonded mates, while Jeth, Tharua, Aradace, Arydun and Cemath sat to the left of the gallery with all the Leonidas children. Mara and the smaller hatchlings were bouncing back and forth between their older sibling’s backs.

For’mya’s father smiled and shook his head. “When they begin their six months stays here, the King and Queens’s demand that all of them attend at least one meeting of the Senate as a family. It just so happens they usually attend the first one so they can get it over with. Young ones will be young ones Vorilas... you know this.”

Vorilas nodded. “Indeed I do.” He said as Sadi poked him in the ribs from her seat next to him.

Sadi was wearing a skin tight white dress that fell to just above her knees. The dress left her shoulders bare and had a choker collar. The dress plunged downward between her full breasts with only a thin satin tie keeping the sides of the dress together in a laced fashion that left little to the imagination. It was tied tightly across her abdomen and then once more became laced together just below her groin and extending to the bottom of the dress. She had only been able to sneak a few hours with Andro over the course of the last two days and her blood was calling out for him in a way that made her shudder in want. He was actually the one who bought this dress for her telling her he was going to enjoy unwrapping his new mate when the time came.

“Papa... behave.” Sadi hissed softly. “It is almost over with.”

Vorilas smiled at her and his eyes fell on where Arrarn sat next to Normya and Zarah and was trading soft whispers with them. He leaned back over to L'tian. “You will not give me an idea of who sent this message to me that he would claim my daughter today L'tian?”

L'tian shrugged. “I don't know Vorilas. I received the same message you did and was asked only to insure that you were present with your daughter.”

Vorilas shook his head slowly. “She has been through much L'tian.” He spoke in a whisper. “I have discovered most of it through the years. What my former mate forced her to do. She deserves happiness in her life. I truly hope this young male wolf that is going to present himself does so quickly. I want to insure he is good enough for my daughter.”

L'tian began to reply but Dilios banging the gavel on the podium brought everyone's attention back to him. “Very well... the Senate has approved with the King's recommendation and blessing the building of a museum at Thermopylae that will chronicle the history of ancient Sparta as well as all of Earth.” Dilios turned to look at Martin. “We thank you for the honor King Leonidas.”

“If I didn't... I would have had five females chewing my ears off for the next six months.” Martin answered with a grin. “That is a battle even I can't win.” Laughter filtered through the galleries as everyone saw both Aricia and Anja stick their elbows in Martin's ribs from either side. Martin met Dilios's eyes. “I'm sure my father would be proud to see a museum built next to where he rests. And when we hold our graduation ceremonies there every year others can see what history Earth has. You honor his memory...” Martin let his eyes wander over the gathered seats of Senators. “All of you honor his memory... and for that I thank you.”

Dilios nodded. “Very well... on to the last point of business we have to view.” He turned to the back of the chamber. “Senior Durcunusaan Commander Bren if you would please allow the Honor Guard to enter now.”

All heads turned to the back of the large chamber as Bren, in full Durcunusaan armor moved to the door and assisted as two other Spartans pulled open the two large and extremely old doors. Everyone could hear the gasps as standing behind those doors were nearly two dozen men outfitted in the ancient armor of Spartan warriors and it shone like beacons off the sunlight entering through the top of the chamber. At the rear of the two files stood Andro and Moneus, Elynth standing beside her bonded brother in glimmering full Dragon Armor. The layers of contoured silver Dragon armor covered all her exposed scales all the way up to the back of her large head which was encased in a glimmering helmet made especially for her. Men and women alike were rising to their feet as the two files marched into the room in perfect unison, their ancient spears banging on the tile and steel floor loudly, only their eyes showing behind those bronze helmets.

Vorilas watched with wide eyes as the Spartans marched directly in front of his gallery and stopped, all of them turning inward in crisp movements as the two other Spartans dressed in the ancient armor moved forward, the huge dragon behind them. He was so enraptured with the display he didn't see his daughter's eyes following only one Spartan with an adoring love very evident in them.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Be calm both of you!] Elynth's voice filled both Andro's and Moneus's minds. [Your hearts are racing faster than your feet are moving.]

[Thank you for reminding us sister!] Andro barked.

[Yeah... I'm already nervous enough as it is.] Moneus echoed.

Elynth's soothing laughter filled their heads and caused them to relax more as they walked. [Two of the proudest and finest the Union has... and you are reduced to nervous babies in the face of two females.]

[Careful sister...] Andro spoke glancing up at her head as they walked. [I might forget to take your armor off when this is all done.]

[Andro you wouldn't... you know how I hate wearing this metal skin.] She exclaimed.

[Then please don't make fun of us when we are about to pee in our pants.] Moneus spoke.

Elynth snorted loudly in laughter which caused many of the gathered Senators to grin for they had seen it before.

Vorilas watched as they two Spartans stopped in front of their gallery on the other side of the long file of Spartans. He leaned closer to L'tian. "Who are they?" He asked.

"The one on the right is the second born son of Daniel Simpson. His name is Moneus." L'tian replied. "He is acting as Second today."

"Forgive me L'tian." Vorilas whispered. "I am not as familiar with the ancient Spartan customs as this is only my first trip here. Something which I will rectify as much as possible while I am here however. What do you mean... acting as Second?"

"In ancient Sparta a practice began among just the Lycavorian people who lived here some hundred and fifty years after the death of Martin's father. When a young male wolf wanted to take a female he fancied as his mate and she was in agreement, he would present himself to the young female's father to ask for his blessing on the union and to bestow a gift to her father. In recognition as the one who brought his future mate into this life. That young wolf always had a Second... a true Spartan friend who was not of his blood. A friend who had stood beside him in battle and forged a bond of life and death and a friend who swore to protect over his young mate and bride when he was away at battle." L'tian explained. "Moneus is acting as Second today."

"Second for who?" Vorilas spoke.

L'tian shook his head. "Watch..."

Dilios had stepped down from the podium now and stood in front of Andro and Moneus. "Who presents themselves to the company of this Honored Gathering?" He spoke in a loud voice.

"I am Moneus Simpson! Son of Daniel and Nayeca Simpson! I act as Second on this day!" Moneus barked.

I am Elynth, daughter of Torma and Isheeni, Bonded Sister to Androcles Leonidas.

L'tian leaned closer to Vorilas. "I am Elynth, daughter of Torma and Isheeni, Bonded sister to Androcles Leonidas." He spoke softly knowing that Vorilas could not Mindvoice on such a level.

L'tian smiled when Vorilas's eyes grew wide in shock and he opened his mouth to speak but was drowned out by the next words.

"I am Androcles Leonidas, Crown Prince of our Union, and I wish to make my claim before the eyes of the Spartan Senate as is the custom of our people from long ago!" Androcles bellowed. "In the manner of my father."

Dilios turned. "Does the Senate recognize Crown Prince Androcles?"

"We do!" Over a hundred voices chimed in unison.

"You may proceed Prince Androcles!" Dilios spoke.

Vorilas stepped back slightly when the file of Spartans in front of him parted like a door and he was gazing at the tall muscular young man with blazing blue eyes. He glanced back at Sadi who was holding her hands over her mouth with tears streaming down her face. The loud clap brought his head back around quickly as Andro stepped up in front of him and slammed his spear into the floor. Vorilas's eyes grew even wider when Elynth's head appeared directly over Andro's right shoulder, her golden eyes staring at Sadi. L'tian stepped to the side a little and reached for Sadi's hand bringing her down to stand beside her father.

"Governor Vorilas... I am Androcles Leonidas... and I present myself to you." Andro reached up and removed his helmet handing it to Moneus before dropping to one knee in front of Vorilas.

Vorilas shook his head quickly as the prince of The Lycavorian Union knelt before him. He made to usher him back to his feet clearly flustered at such a display from a member of the Royal family but L'tian gently pushed his hands back.

"I... I have loved your daughter since I was eight months old sir." Andro began speaking as his eyes went to Sadi. "I have dreamed of no one but her all of my life. Her scent fills my being and my every waking breath. There is no price to be placed on my love for her or what she makes me feel, so I offer this to you instead, as a show of my respect and thanks to you and her mother, who now resides in the heavens with my grandfather, for bringing her into this world and bringing her to me." Andro stood back up and held out the data pad. "I pass this to you to show you that material items mean nothing to me. Only the hand of your daughter and your blessing in our union."

Vorilas looked at Sadi now, her jungle green eyes gazing at him expectantly. "This is... this is the man you have waited for?" He gasped. "The one you have told me..."

"Yes... yes Papa... this is him." She replied softly.

Vorilas turned back to Andro and looked at the data pad, his eyes nearly exploding out of their sockets. He glanced up quickly. "This is..."

Andro smiled. "Yes sir."

"Milord... do you understand what you are..." Vorilas began speaking. "This..."

"Means nothing to me sir." Andro spoke. He looked at Sadi. "Your daughter is all I care about."

Sadi stepped closer to her father now and poked him in the back causing others who saw this to chuckle. "Papa?"

Vorilas turned to look at her. "Sadi... this is what you want as well?" He asked.

"It is Papa... it is. So very much." Sadi answered without the slightest hesitation in her voice.

Vorilas stared at her for a moment longer and turned back to Androcles. "Then my... my blessing you will have Prince Androcles." He spoke confidently. "I will donate the proceeds from this every year into your mother's fund for the poor in The Wilds... matching what you have shown me this day. And showing you that my daughter's happiness is all that concerns me."

"That has never been in question sir." Andro spoke with a smile. He turned to look at Sadi. "KertaGai... there is a rare metal substance known as Rhodium. Mining caused this precious metal to disappear from Earth many hundreds of years ago, which if my knowledge is correct was the only planet it was found on. It was a silvery white in color and used in many practices... one of which was jewelry. It was considered nearly indestructible and was electroplated onto the white gold found here on Earth symbolizing long life and the strength of a commitment to another." Andro turned to Moneus and took the small velvet covered box. He turned back to Sadi. "I searched long and hard for this metal because to me it symbolizes what I feel for you. I finally discovered a small vein of it on Malockti Six." This information caused many heads to turn and people to murmur among themselves. Andro opened the box and with shaking hands he withdrew the glittering white gold metal necklace. It reflected the sunlight no matter what direction he held it and was separated into five different sections held together by Rhodium weaved strands of silver and platinum. Sadi's eyes were wide as she watched him hold it up and step closer to her, fastening it around her slim neck. "Know this Sadi Leonidas, daughter of Vorilas, like Rhodium... my love for you is indestructible and will never fade into oblivion no matter the number of years that pass us by."

Andro stepped back as he finished fastening the necklace and watched as she ran her fingers over the smooth polished surface as it rested in the valley between her breasts.

"Andro... Andro..." Sadi's eyes were filled with tears.

Andro turned and looked at his father and mothers. "Mothers!" He bellowed. "Can I kiss her now?"

Aricia was too choked up to answer as she clung to Martin's side, the rest of them with tears in their eyes and trying very hard not lose it as she had. Martin chuckled as the laughter echoed in the chamber from Andro's question.

"Kiss her boy! And let's get the party started!" Martin shouted causing even more laughter to erupt from the gallery.

Andro looked back at Sadi and saw L'tian moving to open the small thigh high door so that she could leave the gallery. Andro simply stepped forward and lifted Sadi into his arms bringing his lips down on hers as her arms wrapped around his head and cheers erupted from the Senators and visitors in the galleries within the chamber. The trumpeting roars of nine dragons deafened everything else as Andro spun Sadi in circles in his arms until they were back in the center of the chamber and he set her down. He pressed his forehead to hers and wiped the tears from her cheeks.

"This night KertaGai." He said softly. "This night I will make you mine. In every way your mind can possibly imagine."

Sadi laughed and squeezed his arms as she pressed her body closer to his. "I... I have a pretty good imagination my love." She spoke.

Andro kissed her softly inhaling of her sugar plume and spice scent. "Stand with me now Sadi Leonidas. I must act as Second for Moneus."

Sadi looked confused for a moment. "Moneus?" She asked.

Andro smiled. "It's time my father was surprised for once. Moneus is going to claim Carina." Sadi's eyes grew wide with surprise and happiness at this news and she smiled brilliantly. He brought her hands down and held them tightly. "Come." He looked at Moneus who held out his helmet to him. "You ready brother?"

"To be honest... I'd rather face another patrol of Immortals than your father." Moneus replied.

Andro grinned as he lowered his helmet back onto his head confusing many who were nearby. "His bark is worse than his bite." Andro said.

Moneus nodded. "Not from where I'm standing and what I've seen." He said. "His bite is actually a lot more painful."

"Moneus... we have talked about this for years." Andro spoke. "Now is time for you to make it happen. Just as I have." He squeezed Sadi's hand and pulled her close to him.

"Ah nubou it!" Moneus blurted. "If you're gonna make a fool of yourself in front of the King... at least do it professing your love to his daughter."

Andro laughed and grabbed his arm.

"Who presents themselves to this honored gathering?" Dilios's voice bellowed once more.

Martin turned quickly from where he was smiling and talking with Riall and his eyes fell on Moneus and Androcles once more. This time Moneus stood in Andro's spot, Sadi occupying Andro's right arm and Elynth once more standing behind them.

"I am Androcles Leonidas, Crown Prince of our Union, and I act as Second this day!" Andro shouted out.

I am Elynth, daughter of Torma and Isheeni, Bonded Sister to Androcles Leonidas and dear friend to Moneus Simpson.

"I am Moneus Simpson, Durcunusaan Section Leader, and I wish to make my claim before the eyes of the Spartan Senate as is the custom of our people from long ago!" Moneus bellowed. "In the manner of my father!"

Martin's eyes were wide, but none wider than Isabella's who had stepped up next to him quickly. He cut his eyes to Carina who sat with her brothers and sisters, but saw an equally stunned look on her face as well.

Dilios looked around. "Who stands with Moneus Simpson and his Second this day?" He roared.

"I do!" Danny spoke first and moved down to stand behind his son while Anuk and Nayeca were too busy weeping to do anything.

"I do!" Melancton bellowed as he moved down.

"I as well!" Vengal spoke stepping from the gallery.

"We all do!" Denali Leonidas shouted as he got to his feet, followed quickly by Resumar and Arram and they moved down to stand behind Moneus while their sister Carina watched with unabashed shock at her brother's actions.

As do we! Torma's voice announced.

Martin gathered his wits together while watching as Torma, Isheeni, Jeth, Cemath and Aradace maneuvered their huge bodies deftly through the throng of people to stand behind Andro and Moneus. Martin smiled as he was squeezing Isabella's hand. "What do you claim Spartan?" He spoke.

Moneus stepped closer to him and took a deep breath. "Milord! Carina is two years past her Coming of Age! I wish to claim her hand as my mate and wife sire!"

Martin stepped down to stand in front of Moneus, looking at his dark eyes behind his helmet. Danny's son was two inches taller than him, but they stood eye to eye and Moneus was just a little wider in the shoulders.

"What do you offer Spartan?" Martin barked out.

"Martin Leonidas!" Gorgo exclaimed coming forward in a huff of anger her eyes wide at his harsh words.

"Father!" Carina shouted as she too came to her feet and began moving towards where her father stood with the man she had loved since she was only nineteen years old.

Martin held up his hand for silence his eyes never leaving Moneus's face. The partial change came quickly and Martin's eyes became yellow/gold orbs, his dual wolf fangs extending to their full length. Isabella and the others stood there with wide eyes stunned at how he was acting. Anuk and Nayeca were clinging to each other, shock showing on their faces as they looked back and forth between Danny and Martin unsure of what was happening. Only those who stood behind Moneus showed no emotion as Eliani and Lisisa held Carina's arms as she moved up closer to where her father stood.

"What do you offer Spartan?" Martin asked again.

Moneus allowed the change to come over him, a thick black band surrounding his dark amber colored eyes, turning them into piercing orbs that had frightened more than one Evolli warrior. His long fangs extended and he turned to look at Andro, whose own eyes and fangs were now very visible. His father, his grandfather, all the Leonidas sons. All of them stood behind him without question in their partially changed features.

Moneus turned back to face the man he knew as King and also his adopted Uncle. He had heard stories as a young boy growing up of the closeness and the bond of brotherhood that his father shared with the man in front of him. As well as the trouble they seemed to always get into together. He had called him Uncle Martin until completing his Agoge and becoming a man and Durcunusaan Section Leader. He had seen and fought beside his Uncle and King in battle and the very thought of bringing his wrath down upon him was frightening. He took a deep breath.

"My father... the man you call brother... he has told me to offer anything to you in material form would be an insult to you Milord!" Moneus spoke loudly.

Martin nodded slowly. "My brother would be right Moneus Simpson. You want the hand of my daughter... and Carina... like her mothers is worth far more than any simple material possessions. So what do you offer me for the hand of my daughter Spartan?"

"Father please... stop this..." Carina spoke from the side but Lisisa pulled on her arm gently shaking her head.

Moneus glanced over at where Carina stood, tears streaming down her face, her beautiful dark eyes wide. Her hair was so long and he could remember how it felt within his fingers. The way her scent filled his nostrils. He turned back to the man he called Uncle.

"I offer you my blood, my bones, my flesh, and the brain that controls it all!" Moneus spoke loudly enough for everyone to hear as he met his King's unwavering gaze. Moneus held out his spear for Andro to take and then he reached up to remove his helmet. He brought it down under his arm and continued to meet his King's eyes. "I offer all that I am... everything except my heart. That I can not offer you Milord... for it has already been claimed by your daughter. From the first moment my eyes fell upon her."

Carina bursting into a fresh round of tears was very audible now and Isabella made to move up next to Martin but Aricia and Dysea took her arms and shook their heads as they drew her back. Martin moved closer to Moneus, until their faces were only inches apart.

"Blood..." Martin whispered to him.

"Before all else." Moneus finished the statement.

"That armor is pretty heavy huh?" Martin said.

"It makes me appreciate what my ancestors did even more." Moneus replied. "As if... as if I was living..."

"Their lives." Martin finished with a nod. "Your father and I have done some crazy shit through the years Moneus." He said with a smile small, his fangs even more prominent. "Love Carina... love her as your father does your mothers."

"As you love those I call Aunt. I intend too Uncle Martin." Martin answered confidently. "I intend too."

Martin nodded and stepped back from him. He turned and looked at Carina, holding out his hand and she scampered over to stand beside him, gripping his arm tightly as she couldn't tear her eyes from Moneus's proud and handsome face.

"Carina..."

"Yes." Carina replied instantly.

Martin chuckled and looked at her, leaning over to kiss her forehead softly. He turned back to Moneus and nodded. "Your offer is accepted Spartan Moneus Simpson." He spoke loudly. "Do my Queens have any objection?" He asked turning to look at them standing behind them.

Isabella answered for all of them. "No we do not." She spoke firmly barely holding back her own tears.

Martin nodded. "Then so be it." He turned back to look at Moneus. "You have our blessing Moneus."

Moneus felt as if his heart would explode and he turned quickly to Andro who handed him the object wrapped in amber Drow silk. He turned back to look at Carina. "Carina Leonidas... in the custom of my mothers... Drow and Wood Elves alike, I have fashioned this gift for you to show..." Moneus was unable to finish what he was saying for as he looked up to meet her eyes Carina was throwing herself into his arms.

"Shut up and kiss me Moneus!" She nearly cried.

As the gathered men and women and dragons erupted into laughter the words of his father came back to Moneus.

"You love her with all that you are in and out of your bed. And if she wants to kiss you in public, I don't care who is watching, you lay a lip locker on her that will curl her toes and blister her hair. If she's doing it in public Moneus... it's because she's telling everyone around her that you belong to her. Do her the honor of doing the same."

Moneus simply smiled and he wrapped his powerful arms around Carina and kissed her with every ounce of passion in his body. Carina's own eyes flew wide for a split second at his reaction and then closed dreamily as his arms crushed her to him and he kissed her like he had never kissed her before.

Danny moved around the couple and stepped up next to Martin, his own face beaming in pride. Everyone was watching as the two men embraced tightly and then looked at each other.

"You do realize that you are now stuck with me in your life for the next several millennia right?" Martin spoke with a grin.

"I was going to say the same thing to you." Danny laughed. Martin put his hand behind Danny's head and he followed suit. "Does this mean the party will be bigger?" Danny asked.

Martin nodded. "Oh hell yeah!"

Riall turned as the Colonel came up to him quickly with the data pad in his hand and whispered into his ear. Riall's smile faded quickly and he nodded whispering back to the officer and then moving from beside Gorgo. He threaded his way through the gathered men and women and came right up to Martin and Danny seeing them turn to look at him.

Martin saw his face and his smile faded. "Riall?"

"Martin... you should come with me now." Riall spoke. "We're routing a transmission into your office at the Villa."

"Transmission from whom?" Martin asked.

"Captain Imror on the border." Riall answered. "He's staring down the nose of his ship at a High Coven Task Force carrying not only Moran and Yuri... but the Empress herself. They are requesting to speak with you."

Martin shook his head. "Jesus... they could fuck up a wet dream with their timing." He spoke causing Danny and Riall to smile. He looked at Dan. "Get everyone over to the villa Danny, and then meet me in my office there with a couple of brews. I got a feeling I'm going to need to get really drunk tonight."

Danny nodded. "I got you covered. I bring them to the office and I'll keep some more on ice for you later."

Martin nodded and turned to Riall. "Ok... where's Deia?"

"She'll meet us in your office on the Spartan Estate." Riall spoke.

"Let's do this then." Martin said.

CHAPTER FIVE

KAVALIAN GREATSOUL-CLASS DREADNOUGHT KARSIANI

Athani'Puat, like her sister Jalersi, was the embodiment of sensual beauty for a Kavalian female. Her blond hair cascaded down past her shoulders to the middle of her back, the wavy motions almost like satin as it was being weaved. Athani had somewhat of an oval shaped face, with elegant and unblemished lines that ended in the rounded point of her jaw. Her lips were not thin and not exceptionally full but somewhere in the middle and coated with a light pink color moisturizer making them appear shiny and fuller than they were. She had high, almost noble cheekbones that were sculpted faultlessly for her face and a nose that was narrow but delicate and matched her features perfectly. Athani's dazzling blue/green eyes were now gazing intently at the data pad of the information she was reviewing. The dark blue/gray jumpsuit conformed to her tight, shapely figure like a second skin as she walked down the corridor of the ship, the top of the jumpsuit fastening tightly around her slim throat like a high uniform collar. Her full, firm breasts strained against the material of the jumpsuit, the fabric conforming to every contour of her body right down to her black boots. Her position as the youngest daughter to the Kavalian Prefect allowed her much more freedom to dress in a way that pleased her sensibilities and not in the oppressive way of normal Kavalian females. She was excited about this because the females in the Lycavorian Union dressed decidedly more open than in Kavalian culture. Part of that was that it was accepted as completely natural for female wolves to dress provocatively to entice males into finding them interesting; and partly and more importantly because females were treated with the utmost respect throughout the Union. They had the same rights and powers as men, and there were many senior female officers within their military ranks that held positions of great importance, to include the Prime Minister of the Lycavorian Union Deia. Kavalian women were limited in what they could achieve and none had risen above common warriors.

Athani, also like her sister Jalersi, was among the almost seven thousand Kavalian females given biogenic treatments when very young. Biogenic treatments that had caused the fine coat of soft fur common to her species to fade from their skin and bodies. With the exception of their flowing manes of hair, not one follicle of hair remained on their skin and it was all of the very smooth and supple nature it was now. The biogenic treatments had also caused the reversal of the growth of their tails which all Kavalians had, though the males usually cut them off when they were very young so as not to provide a disadvantage during battle. Athani however, she had liked her tail and everything she could do with it. Her two meter long tail was like having an additional third arm, dexterous and nimble and exceptionally strong given that it was no more than an inch and a half wide at its thickest point. Twenty five years ago she had lied and said the ongoing treatments Kavalian females needed to endure to keep their tails from re-growing were making her violently sick. This had allowed her to stop taking the treatments for she found them vile and they railed against her very nature as a feline species.

Athani was exceptionally intelligent, being allowed more opportunity to learn and receive schooling that was normally only given to the males of her species because of her status. Her father was trying to change the degrading and inferior ways their females were treated, but the process was slow and not something that could be done over night she knew. Athani's Puat was very excited for this prospect of going into Lycavorian Union territory and putting the skills she had learned over the years to use. She could speak six languages fluently, and was considered by many to be an excellent pilot. She was also considered an extremely lethal fighter. Kavalian females may have been treated inferior to males in many respects, but all of them were skilled fighters and warriors. They would fight just as savagely, perhaps more so, when called upon to defend their Pride and their home. Athani had spent the last twenty-five years honing those skills and now at nearly sixty-three years of age, she was nearly to the level of her sister when it came to unarmed combat.

Athani wanted more from what her life was meant for however. She wanted to go places and see planets, meet new species and interact with them. She had no desire to be taken by some older Kavalian male as a mate and used only for his pleasure, nor did she desire to become scarred for life either. When Kavalian males were in the Rut Fever, they would extend their claws and use them to viciously scar their mates in some manner. To them it was a sign of dominance and ownership. Athani had no desire to experience that, and it was why she had tolerated being Pusintin's sexual play thing for so many years. Her sister's mate was only allowed to have her in two ways, for she had to remain pure for a potential Kavalian male, but he took great relish in making her feel weak. Whenever Pusintin wrapped that male Lycavorian aura around her, Athani was nearly helpless before him. He could use that aura as a weapon to drive her to physical pleasure whether her mind wanted it or not. While Athani did enjoy some of the times she had been forced to be with him, most of the time she could only curse within the deep reaches of her mind as her body's actions betrayed what her mind was telling her and oftentimes simply overwhelmed her senses.

This was not the way of the males in the Lycavorian Union. They did not use their auras as a weapon against females as Pusintin did; they had purged that part of their history long ago. Lycavorian females, indeed all females of any species within the breadth of the Union, were treated with respect and honor. Something that was decidedly lacking within her own culture and among the males of her species. Kavalian people were not normally very open in their society, and they considered themselves superior to most other species. She knew her father would not hesitate to use violence in negotiating agreements and he had in fact used aggression and subterfuge on several occasions to achieve some of the trade agreements the Kavalian Federation Imperium now had. He had cajoled and used threats against some of the others to gain their agreements, usually getting the better end of the deal that was struck, simply because whatever species he negotiated with did not want to anger the Kavalian Prefect, not after they had so thoroughly swept aside the High Coven defenses in their ongoing war.

Athani looked up as the door slid open into in the private lounge area of their ship and she spied her sister sitting at the table with two older Kavalian males and one she had hoped not to have to see anytime soon. Qurot had been making noise with her sister and mother for years now about taking her as his mate. Athani wanted nothing to do with the much older Qurot. Yes, he was a warrior unequaled among their people, but he was also a very cruel man who brooked no opposition to his ways. Athani did not want her pureness relinquished to this man. When a man took her in that way, she wanted it to be something to remember. Pusintin's constant degrading acts upon her while he was fucking her ass or forcing his large cock into her mouth had changed Athani in a way she didn't realize.

She wanted so much more than what her station would allow her to have.

Athani glanced quickly at Qurot and his leering gaze before taking the seat next to her sister. "Forgive me for being late Jalersi." She spoke quickly. "I wanted to be sure I understood the complexities of the Lycavorian system and I lost track of time."

Jalersi'Puat merely shook her head and dismissed her statement with a wave. Her white blond hair was nearly as long as Athani's, her stunning blue eyes sharp and alert. Jalersi was almost thirty years her senior, though they only looked a few years apart. She was also a captivating beauty herself. Her figure was lean and taut, her breasts even larger and more firm. She often bragged of the hours that Pusintin her mate would spend exploring her flesh. Her mother had allowed the Lycavorian to make her his almost forty-five years ago, and even though several Kavalian females had approached Pusintin since then, he had rebuffed them all. He was apparently very content with her sister, which made Jalersi very full of herself and supposedly what she could do. She had also given the Lycavorian four children, the oldest of whom now sat quietly against the bulkhead near the view window.

"I had trouble sifting through some of it as well." Jalersi spoke in reply as she smiled at Athani when she sat down. "Athani this is Legislator Jiss from Pride Diwen and Legislator Matuarr from Pride Manixn."

Athani looked at the men and nodded her head. "Gentlemen." She spoke confidently.

The two Legislators simply nodded... not yet comfortable with the idea they would have to take orders from these two women. They knew that the Prefect's daughters were very intelligent and well versed, for the Prefect insisted on it, yet they had never imagined they would be taking orders from a female before this day.

Jalersi noticed this right away and smiled to herself. "Legislator Matuarr... why don't you finish saying what you were telling me when Athani came in." She spoke.

The older of the two men looked at her and nodded. The light brown coat of fur that adorned his body was well groomed and neat. His dark eyes were somewhat sunk into his skull, but he was the senior Legislator among their people.

"Of course..." He answered. "I was saying that Jiss and I have been reviewing incredible amounts of information we have obtained through open sources from within the Union. Almost all of their long term trade agreements are open for public viewing and easily accessed through their Netnews channels." He leaned forward in his chair now. "It may appear to be complex for those who are not used to how the Union does business, but it is actually quite simple. It took Jiss and me nearly three weeks to realize this." He spoke with a smile of humor at himself.

The second Kavalian grinned as well. "That it did." He spoke. "With the exception of their military contracts and alliances, all of their trade agreements are open for viewing as Matuarr has said. They operate in a strictly upfront and truthful practice. They will deal with you fairly, if you deal with them fairly. With very few exceptions the Lycavorian Union is totally self sufficient. It does not need to barter trade agreements for what they need. They either already have access to it, or it is within their territory in some fashion. The internal trading between planets is unlike anything I have ever seen, and it is something I will recommend to Prefect Keleru when next we meet.”

“Prefect Keleru would never act in the way of the wolf dogs!” Qurot spat contemptuously from his chair.

“If we wish the Kavalian Federation to grow and expand as the Lycavorian Union does every year we will need to adopt some of the practices of others to insure this.” Jiss spoke meeting Qurot’s eyes. “You defeat them militarily Commander... however it is up to people like Matuarr and me to insure what you win in battle stays with us in peace. The more we are able to give our people, the more loyal they will become. Trading among planets within the Federation has already been talked about in some circles, and now we need to institute that completely if we are to remain as strong economically as we are militarily.”

“Bah... we should just conquer them and be done with it!” Qurot snapped.

“Legislator Jiss... if they either have everything they need or access to it, what could we offer them that will allow us to proceed with our plans?” Jalersi asked ignoring Qurot’s outburst.

“Oh there are many avenues we can take.” Jiss answered confidently. “Resources that they get from several different places. Resources that we have in abundance in many cases. We start out small and work our way forward.”

Matuarr nodded. “We believe that your father recently arranged for the largest exporter of Notal Berries to suffer a major set back in their production capabilities. We will happily fill this role with the Union. We step in, offer modest rates and services, and with any luck they will agree. The size of the agreement will be such that it will allow us to request an embassy so that any ongoing agreements in trade can be brokered instantly.”

Jalersi nodded slowly. Notal Berries were the main ingredient in Spartan Wine; a very powerful alcoholic beverage derived from the sweet tasting purple fruit that had become so popular within the Union. Her father had recently deployed two commando teams to the Rurudan Consortium’s homeworld and destroyed a large portion of their Notal Berry crop production facilities in what outwardly appeared to be a naturally occurring flood disaster. While the KFI did not have the production facilities to refine Notal Berries into wine, they had several planets within the KFI that were covered in these crops of fruit and they could ship the fruit to Lycavorian facilities.

“And if they don’t agree?” Qurot growled in a low voice. “Then what?”

“They will agree.” Jiss spoke confidently. “This Spartan Wine they have has become increasingly popular within the Union by any number of species. It is powerful... but does not leave one with the after affects the following morning. Since any type of recreational drug is strictly forbidden within the Union, this Spartan Wine remains for the most part, as their only indulgence.”

“They don’t allow recreational drugs?” Qurot asked his feline features showing their surprise. It was common among Kavalian warriors after a victory to inhale the vapors of the Tazli Root. It was a poisonous plant if ingested, but when the roots were dried and seasoned for many months and then used in pipes, the vapors from these roots was a powerful narcotic.

Matuarr shook his head quickly. “Recreational drugs are practically non-existent within the borders of the Union. Those that traffic in our Tazli Root or the Runnix Smoke Rods for instance, they learned very quickly that illegal drugs and those who deal in them have a very short lifespan within the Union. Something that only grew more intense when the King took power some twenty-six years ago. He and his Queens have a particular distaste for drug use of any kind when not in relation to medical purposes. It is actually one of the main reasons he went into The Wilds after a large organization of Unsaur and Kochab Pirates. They were trafficking Runnix Smoke Rods through Union space and several of their major dealers were caught selling the sticks to very young individuals on several Union worlds.”

“When will we know if they will receive us?” Athani asked the question now.

“Our Zaleisian counterpart has already initiated contact with the Lycavorian Union Trade Ministry. Apparently... the Royal family has just begun their six month exodus to Earth... and much of the Senate and the Prime Minister’s office go to Earth for at least a small portion of that time.” Jiss answered. “We should receive word back from the Union Trade Ministry Office directly within the next day or so.”

“We will be at the border in only thirty-six hours.” Qurot spoke.

“The Zaleisian Ambassador has given them our course and communications channels.” Jiss replied. “From what he was able to glean from the Trade Ministry Office, the Lycavorians surprisingly were not put off by our offer or the prospect of a trade agreement. I would imagine a Lycavorian transport will meet us at the coordinates to take us the rest of the way to Earth.”

“I am not comfortable without the KARSIANI accompanying us.” Qurot spoke looking at Jalersi. “We should not have to leave my ship at the border. We should demand free passage!”

Jalersi shook her head. “No.” She spoke softly.

Qurot glared at her. “We are Kavalians!” He nearly bellowed. “We don’t need their permission to travel in our ships!”

“This is supposed to be a diplomatic and trade mission.” Athani said calmly. “That is how our father ordered it be conducted. Bringing one of our warships across their borders would be interpreted as something far different.”

“Let them think what they will!” Qurot barked.

“They have reason enough to distrust us.” Athani spoke looking at him without fear. “The actions of your junior Pride leader twenty years ago nearly dragged them into our war with the High Coven.”

Qurot cut his eyes to her. “Be mindful of your words Athani.” He snapped. “You do not yet know what you speak of. Or what the future holds.”

“No one knows what the future holds Qurot.” Athani said evenly. “I don’t fear the future or the unknown. I embrace it.”

Qurot’s smile was cruel. “You say that now... but we will see.”

“Athani is correct.” Jalersi ended their confrontation. She knew her younger sister would not back down from Qurot. She had far too much stubbornness in her, and she was quite a bit more intelligent than Qurot. In a war of words Athani would wipe the bulkhead with Qurot. “The KARSIANI remains on our side of the border and we will do exactly what my father sent us to do. Nothing more! Is that very clear Qurot?”

“You do not command my ship Jalersi!” He snarled.

“But I do command this mission Qurot!” Jalersi barked at him. “I know my father was very clear to you in that regard! You will do as I say... or you will stay behind with your ship! Is that in any way not clear enough for you Qurot?”

Jiss and Matuarr watched the verbal confrontation with interest. They both knew why Keleru had chosen Jalersi to lead this mission, as well as why Athani was with them. They were exceptionally intelligent for one, both of them. They were stunningly beautiful without the fine coats of white blond and golden hair that would have covered their bodies, and they would blend into the Lycavorian Union much easier. While the two Kavalians were much older and senior members within their respective Prides, they also knew that in order to extend their empire and make it stronger, they needed to change the way they did things. The treatment of their females was among those things that needed to be changed. Jalersi and Athani were going to prove that.

“I will inform your father and the Military Council of this decision Jalersi.” Qurot hissed at her.

“Inform them all you like.” She hissed right back. Jalersi looked at Matuarr. “Isn’t it odd that they would act this way considering what happened twenty-five years ago?” She spoke as she regained her composure. “Our men were caught conducting covert operations within Union territory. On Earth as a matter of fact. Not to mention what happened between Pusintin and their King.”

Jiss shook his head. “I don’t believe so Jalersi. Your father made it very clear when he contacted them as soon as the attack became known to us that whoever was involved was operating without his or Pusintin’s approval.”

“He should have supported our troops with weapons and supplies at the very least.” Qurot spoke softly.

“And draw us into a war with the Lycavorian Union?” Athani spoke shaking her head. “That would have been a bigger mistake.” She held up the data pad. “I have read quite a bit on the Lycavorian Union and much of their leaders and policies. Support of any kind would have been seen as condoning the actions of the men who you say did this without your knowledge. It would have opened a second front and spread our forces far too thin.”

“You do not know what you speak.” Qurot dismissed her.

“I know enough to say that would have been a colossal failure.” Athani spoke confidently and with conviction. “And for someone who knew nothing of this operation, you seem to defend it rather vigorously.”

Qurot met her eyes. “They were my Pride mates!” He snapped. “And they will be your Pride mates in the future Athani. You would do well to remember that!”

Athani's blue-green eyes grew wide at this statement. "You presume far too much Qurot." She spoke.

"Do I?" Qurot replied his eyes going to Jalersi.

Athani cut her eyes to where her sister sat quietly. The look on her face made a knot form in Athani's stomach. "Sister?" She asked in almost a whisper.

Jalersi looked up. "Gentlemen that will be all. We'll meet once more when we know for sure the Union will allow us into their territory."

Qurot chuckled as he got to his feet and stepped up to where Athani sat. He leaned over and sniffed her. "I will enjoy taking you as my mate Athani'Puat." He reached out to caress her cheek but Athani snapped out with her hand and brushed his fingers away.

"Don't touch me." She snarled viciously.

Qurot smiled and stood up straight. "Perhaps not now... but I will. I will." He spoke before turning and leaving the conference room directly behind Jiss and Matuarr.

Athani waited until the door closed before turning angry eyes on her sister. "You and mother chose Qurot?" She almost shouted. "Qurot!"

"Athani..."

"He is a disgusting and violent brute!" Athani barked. "I have more brains and common sense in my left foot than he does in his entire body! Jalersi, how could you and mother allow this?"

"He has been pursuing you for years Athani... and mother and I were out of excuses to dismiss him." Jalersi answered softly.

Athani came to her feet. "Sister... he is over two thousand years older than me!"

"He leads one of the largest and strongest of the Prides Athani... you know this" Jalersi spoke. "And father has already warned him about harming you in any way."

"Jalersi I have no desire to feel his vile touch upon me!" Athani spoke. "I do not want him to be my first! I want someone who cares for me and doesn't see me as a trophy or a repository for his seed! I..."

"The decision has already been made Athani." Jalersi said. "We can't change it now. It would be a huge loss of face for father and our Pride and it would weaken our standing within the Federation."

"This is a political maneuver?" Athani asked aghast. "You and mother chose him for political purposes? Jalersi... you gave me your word you would allow me some say in who you and mother chose for me. You lied to me."

Jalersi nodded slowly. "I'm sorry Athani... truly. In time you may grow to care for Qurot and father's threat if he should harm you will keep him in line. He will not dare mark you in any way."

"I'm supposed to accept this?" She demanded.

Jalersi looked at her. "You have no choice Athani. It is our way... you know this."

"I wish to speak with father about this!" Athani demanded. "I wish..."

Jalersi came to her feet now. "You will do as our culture and laws demand... as well as your station!" She roared angrily. "Just as mother did! Just as I did! You are not special in any Athani!"

"It is wrong!" Athani declared. "You are taking away my choice completely!"

"It has been the way of our people for millennia!" Jalersi barked. "Father is changing it, but it will not take place overnight! And in the meantime we are not above the laws in place and we must still follow them! When this mission is over we will return home and you will conduct the ritual mating ceremony with Qurot."

"I wish to speak with father about...!"

"NO!" Jalersi shouted. "It is already done! Father has no say in this and mother and I have decided. If this is going to affect how you conduct yourself on this mission Athani, tell me now and you can return home. I will not tolerate any misconduct from you in this endeavor. It is too important."

Athani stared at her sister for a long, silent moment, her blue/green eyes burning with hatred, anger and betrayal. "I hate you Jalersi!" Athani finally spoke. "I hate you and mother for allowing this to happen!"

Jalersi nodded slowly. "I assumed you would." She said in a defeatist tone of voice. "I can only hope in time you will come to see it was for the best. Now answer my question Athani? Can you conduct...?"

"My conduct on this mission is not going to be in question!" Athani barked out. "I fully intend to do exactly what is expected of me without question." She stepped up to the table and glared at her sister. "Are we finished here Jalersi?"

“Athani... I...” Jalersi spoke.

“Are we finished sister?” She snarled.

Jalersi was silent for a moment watching her sister’s blue/green eyes flashing in anger and hatred.

“Yes... yes we are done.” Jalersi answered finally.

“Then I will be in my quarters until we receive word either way from the Lycavorian Union.” Athani told her harshly.

Jalersi opened her mouth to speak but Athani spun around and was marching out of the conference room before the words could come out. Jalersi sensed her son rise from the chair and move into the light now and she turned to look at Karun. He looked so much like his father with a very handsome face and features, not to mention the very muscular six foot two, two hundred and twenty pound frame. Karun could shift to the form of a wolf, or extend claws from his fingertips as any Kavalian could. Karun preferred to fight in his normal form however; the violence and sense of combat with his claws as opposed to on four legs made him feel more powerful. His light brown hair he wore short like his father, and while he was half Kavalian, he had not inherited the body covering hair of their species, much to Jalersi’s delight. Karun had definitely inherited his father’s cruelty, not to mention his sense of tactics and battle. He had seen battle with the High Coven almost from the time he was seven years old. Due to his Kavalian blood he had reached maturity and full growth much faster than a normal Lycavorian child and under Pusintin’s tutelage he was a very lethal fighter. As he stepped up to her Jalersi smiled, for she had seen him as he was a growing boy, and she was happy he had inherited his father’s genes when it came to being well equipped not only muscularly but also sexually. Jalersi had no doubts whatsoever that he would provide a female mate with many moments of bliss as Pusintin did her. While her son had a disposition towards being rougher than normal during sex, especially if the information she had obtained from their Pride’s servants was accurate, at least he did not leave any lasting marks on the females. He also treated them with a great deal more respect than normal Kavalian males, something else he had no doubt learned from his father. Pusintin may have been raised Kavalian for the vast majority of his life, but he did not treat Jalersi or any female as most Kavalian men did. A holdover perhaps from his time as King of that city on Earth, but Jalersi was very happy about it in more ways than one.

“Does she concern you mother?” Karun asked.

Jalersi looked at him and shook her head. “No.” She answered immediately. “Athani may bluster and rant, but she is essentially a weak minded individual. She will do as she has been told.”

“Will grandfather keep his word?” Karun asked softly stepping closer to his mother. “If Qurot marks her in any way?”

Jalersi nodded slowly. “Oh yes... I believe he will. However... my father will not see the damage Qurot will do to her.”

Karun tilted his head slightly to the side. “What do you mean mother?”

Jalersi met his dark eyes. “The damage Qurot will do will be inside.” She spoke softly. “I fear that the very laws of our people we must uphold... I fear those same laws have cost me my sister... and my mother a daughter. She will never forgive us Karun.”

Karun reached out and took her hand. “It is the way of our people mother. Athani needs to understand that. You are right in saying grandfather is changing how we do things... and that these changes will not happen overnight... but until they are changed she has to endure for the good of the Pride.”

Jalersi nodded and smiled. “Yes she does.” She said. “Thank you my son.”

Karun shrugged. “I am looking forward to following through with my directives.” He said. “It might prove to be very useful and I will enjoy watching the reactions of so many people.”

Jalersi smiled. “Oh yes... you are your father’s son.” She said with twinkle in her eyes. “You are your father’s son.”

SPARTA

ROYAL SPARTA ESTATE

“...are sure Imror?” Martin asked from the chair behind his desk as he looked at the image of the Lycavorian Commander.

Imror nodded quickly. “Yes sire.” He answered confidently, almost casually. Imror was not afraid of his King for they had worked together many times in the past and had an easy going relationship. While he would never refer to himself as a friend of the King, though Martin considered him such, he was somewhat more laid back when speaking with Martin. “The new Shroud sensors are working unbelievably. This is the first time we have had to test them against any ships but our own. The majority of their Task Force is un-shrouded, but we are detecting half a dozen smaller ships, DARKBROOD Frigates for the most part scampering about the fringes of their fleet. None have crossed the border however.”

Martin nodded slowly and lifted the long necked bottle taking a long pull from it. Danny and several others from their old SEAL unit had somehow obtained several cases of five hundred year old beer still sealed within the stores warehouse on EDEN BASE. They had taken one case to one of the Spartan Wine makers and asked if it was possible for him to duplicate the beer. The man had laughed and said it would be ridiculously easy. Now... that one Wine maker produced twelve cases of very powerful beer every year which was used only for special occasions by the King and his family. This was one of those occasions. Martin looked at Imror in the image. This was the officer who had recklessly boarded a transport while his AUTUMN MOON-Class Attack Frigate hovered precariously beneath the ship connected by a weak umbilical air lock. It was Imror and his small team who had discovered that the Kavalians were attempting to steal dragon eggs from Earth. This action had earned him eternal gratitude from the Dragon Elder Council, and over the following years they had watched over the man and his career without him even knowing it. Imror was now happily mated to one of the Drow elves that had escaped High Coven servitude with Lynwe so many years ago. The experiments upon her had stolen away her ability to have children, but Imror loved her even more for what she had accomplished. The Battle for Earth had been brutal and costly, and had left many children without their parents. Imror and his mate had adopted seven orphaned elven and Lycavorian children within a year after becoming mates and as far as the big Spartan was concerned, they had all come from his loins. He had turned down several promotions to remain within the Earth Defense Sector, and when a new LEONIDAS II-Class command became available, Admiral Joarl had known exactly who to give it to.

Martin nodded with a grin. “Endith and Avi will be happy to hear that.” He spoke. “The communications interceptors worked as well?”

Imror nodded. “Just as Admiral/Colonel O’Connor said they would.”

“And they told you all they want to do is talk?” Martin asked.

Imror nodded once more. “That is what they say Milord.” He answered. “What else could their purpose be? They didn’t bring a large enough Task Force to do any real serious damage to us. Large enough to appear formidable and dissuade mercenaries and Kavalian forces from coming after them... but not large enough for any type of sustained attack against us.”

Martin looked at where Riall sat next to Danny on one of the couches both of them with bottles of the beer in their hands. Deia sat next to Isabella on the other couch both of them with crystal goblets of Spartan Wine while Anja leaned her taut body on the credenza also drinking one of the beers.

“Riall?” He spoke.

“Imror is correct.” He spoke. “The composition of this Task Force would do them no good in any kind of surprise attack against our forces. They wouldn’t make it half a light year across the border before Joarl responded with his entire 11th Fleet Group. Not to mention Andro’s 21st SAD is based on Earth. They would know that at least.”

“Perhaps what you and Andro have thought is actually true Mandri.” Deia spoke softly. “In this circumstance I must agree with yours and the Dragon Elder Council’s decision. I am unwilling to sacrifice over forty dragons without at least first seeing what they want.”

“Bella?” Martin asked turning his eyes to his pureblood vampire Queen. The crimson dress hugged her lush body in every way, contrasting deliciously with her long dark hair and the swell of her large breasts. Isabella, along with Aricia and For’mya had become what many referred to as Spartan War Queens. They had battled beside Martin or others, leading major engagements throughout the Evolli War. While no one doubted the lethal skills of Anja or Dysea, the three of them were considered by far to be the most like their King in the way he waged war. “This will be harder on you than any of us.”

Isabella smiled at Martin and his words.

Twenty-five years ago Isabella would have been outraged they were even having this conversation. However, twenty-five years of experiencing the love of both Martin and Dysea, and Aricia, Anja and For'mya whenever they were together, had long ago changed Isabella from the dark and brooding woman she had been. She was a Pureblood vampire yes and not only could Martin Leonidas, a pureblood Lycavorian wolf turn her to putty in his bed, he was also the most calculating and brilliant military mind she had ever come across in her nearly two thousand years of life. Martin Leonidas could make her vampire blood boil in passion; his caress on her body was enough to send flash fires of desire skittering across her flesh. Isabella knew she was roughest of his Queens in their bed, and he could pound her for hours making her scream out in joy the entire time, yet he would also wrap her within his powerful arms and cuddle with her and love her with delicious and mind boggling slowness. She had learned over the years just how much she loved him and the others. While no one would ever replace Dysea in her life, Isabella loved the taste of Anja's blood, and she adored wrapping her lips around both Aricia and For'mya for they tasted so sweet. And Isabella had tasted enough of Martin's blood through the years to know no other man could make her feel what he did.

"I have spent twenty-five years discovering and exploring and thoroughly enjoying this new life I have." Isabella said finally. "While my connection with Iriral will never be as deep as Dysea's is with her, I have learned enough to know that we can not forsake our dragon brothers and sisters. I would die to protect Iriral just as easily as I would Ussta she-elf or any of those I love." She sipped her glass of Spartan Wine. "My half sister does not even register on my sensor screen anymore. As for Aikiro... I never met her... but if she is accompanying them here, I believe they are at least serious in their intentions of talk. I would be cautious though... Vonis has said none of them are trustworthy and I believe him when he says they all have hidden agendas. I will need to tell him Martin."

Martin nodded. "I don't have a problem with that." He spoke. "He and Va'nimia came to the party right?"

Isabella nodded. "Yes. I will talk to him when we are finished."

Martin turned his eyes to Anja. "Red?"

Anja shrugged noncommittally. Her Persian red hair and tanned skin gave her an almost surreal look when one took in the crimson dress wrapped around her five foot three body with more curves than a mountain road. "They will need to undergo a full medical scan before setting foot on Earth." She spoke. "I don't want them bringing anything from High Coven space that our people have not been exposed too. It will be quick... I can set up a portable medical sensor array wherever they decide to come in. All they'll have to do is walk through it." She took a pull from her beer. "Other than that... I wouldn't trust them as far as I could throw them and if it wasn't for the dragons I'd tell them to take a long leap off a very tall mountain."

"No... Melyanna." Bella spoke using the name Dysea had given Anja so long ago. She found she liked it as well. "Why don't you tell us how you really feel?"

This brought laughter from everyone in the room and Martin turned to look at Danny. "What about you?"

Danny lowered his beer. "Let's just get this over with so we can get back to the fun will ya!"

Martin laughed and nodded his head. "That's what I figured you'd say." He spoke. He turned back to Imror in the transmission. He had heard all of it and wore an amused expression on his face. "Imror... set it up. Let's talk to them."

Imror nodded. "Yes Milord."

BLOOD REVERENCE-CLASS DREADNOUGHT INQUISITOR

"...realize he is probably enjoying making us wait like this?" Yuri spoke.

They sat in the main officer's lounge of the INQUISITOR, now cleared out of any off duty men and women. Aikiro smiled from the table as she sipped a glass of chilled Blood Wine. She looked at Yuri.

"It is something I would do as well." She spoke. "Where is Narice? She should be here with us to..."

The internal communications unit sounded loudly and Moran reached out to touch the panel on the table. "Go ahead." He spoke.

“Supreme Commander... we are receiving a transmission from the Lycavorian ship.” The voice spoke.

“Route the transmission here Lieutenant.” Moran answered.

“Yes sir. Stand by.”

“It’s about damn time!” Yuri hissed as the holo disc in the officer’s lounge came alive with the picture of Imror on the bridge of his ship.

Imror’s eyes met hers coolly. “Patience is a virtue you apparently do not have Princes Yuri.” He spoke.

Yuri looked surprised he had heard her. “It has been four hours Captain!” She barked back. “I don’t appreciate being kept waiting!”

“You’ll forgive me if I don’t particularly care.” Imror replied dismissing her complaint in such ways that it made Yuri’s blood boil. “Stand by for a secondary transmission.”

“What? Wait!” Yuri exclaimed coming to her feet.

The holo image fluttered for several seconds and then refocused as Martin’s image sitting in the chair became clear along with several others in some sort of office. Moran and Aikiro came to their feet slowly as they recognized Deia and Isabella easily.

“Well... well... it’s been a long time Yuri.” Martin’s deep voice spoke.

“Not long enough it seems.” Yuri spoke in a barely repressed voice filled with hate.

Martin chuckled as they watched him get to his feet. “You got that right. What’s the matter Yuri... still smarting from our last meeting? The look on your face was priceless you know.”

“You think too much of your skills Martin Leonidas.” Yuri spoke.

Martin shrugged. “Or you do Yuri.” He said. “You got exactly one minute to tell me what you want and why you are so close to our border. I have a party waiting for me and talking to you is only going to make me lose my appetite.”

“I did not realize that crossing so close to your border was an issue of concern for you Martin.” Yuri spoke confidently. She looked at the image of Isabella in the transmission with a scowl. “Isabella... you are looking positively traitorous sister.”

Isabella smiled from where she sat. “You look like you’ve aged terribly Yuri.” She answered. “The war is not treating you well I take it?”

Yuri’s eyes flashed angrily and Aikiro stepped up to her quickly before her daughter lost her temper. As her calming presence within Mindvoice came closer Aikiro felt Yuri relax. She took Yuri’s hand and turned her head to the transmission. “I am...”

“I know who you are.” Martin spoke quickly. “Aikiro... Empress of the High Coven. I can’t say as that I’m impressed... but that is just me. I’ll repeat my question only one more time. What do you want?”

Aikiro looked at Yuri. “Usstan kyorl nin ele nindol nesst morfethe dos hasstn.” She spoke fluently in the ancient vampire tongue. (I see now why this man makes you angry.) “Uk zhah usstan'sargh ulu l'mar'ius” (He is arrogant to the extreme.)

They heard Martin laugh and they looked at the transmission. “Dos zhal'la tlu l'uss ulu telanth.” He spoke with equal fluency in the language. (You should be the one to talk.)

“You speak our ancient language.” Aikiro said.

Martin grinned. “Just as you speak ours.” He replied. “Are you going to answer my question or can I go back to the party you are keeping me from? You got twenty seconds left.”

“We want to talk.” Aikiro spoke quickly. “We have information that you will find very useful. It concerns the Kavalians.”

Martin shook his head. “You will not draw me or the Union into your conflict with the Kavalians.” He said. “Whatever beef they have with you is not my business. They seem to have done pretty well so far, and you are holding your own for the most part.”

“They have made gains... I will not deny that.” Aikiro spoke. “And we are holding our own as you say. But information has come to us that lead us to believe they will attempt to draw you into the conflict.”

Martin shook his head again. “It won’t happen.” He said. “I won’t allow it.”

“You may not have a choice if what we have to show you is accurate.” Moran spoke now stepping into the transmission line of sight.

Martin looked at him. “Supreme Commander Moran... what a pleasant surprise.” Martin said. “I can smell your foul stench even from there. Don’t you ever bathe?”

“Do you wish to hear and see what it is we have to show you or not?” Aikiro asked.

“Why should I believe anything that comes from you?” Martin snapped.

“Because whatever may have happened in the past Martin Leonidas... it was not of my doing.” Aikiro spoke softly.

“You gave Veldruk the power he wielded!” Martin snapped. “And you stood by as he killed millions! Conquered millions! My people! And people you still enslave to this day!”

Aikiro nodded. “Yes I did.” She spoke. “I will not deny that. However once I determined that he had grown foolish in his actions and he was using the authority I granted him for his own personal gain I acted.”

“You acted because the Kavalians were about to hand you your blood sucking asses!” Martin barked.

“And now Veldruk is dead and we have been fighting the Kavalians for nearly half a century.” Aikiro spoke slowly. “Something which I’m quite sure you have lost no sleep over.”

“Not a wink to be honest.” Martin answered.

“We have information that you will find very interesting.” Aikiro said. “And it will allow you to protect your precious Union. Just as you gave information to Yuri all those years ago. We were able to use that information to our advantage. I should thank you for that. Perhaps you could tell me why?”

“I have my reasons.” Martin spoke as he got to his feet in the transmission. “I’m in an excellent mood today because two of my children have been married and I’m not going to let you spoil that. I will ask one more time Empress Aikiro or whatever you are calling yourself these days... what do you want?”

“As I said... we have information that you will find alarming.” Aikiro answered. “It involves the Kavalians and their actions in trying to draw you into our war with them on their side. I decided that it would be in our better interests to share this information with you rather than demand you remain out of the fight.”

“Like I would have listened to any demand you made.” Martin said.

Aikiro smiled. “Exactly...” She answered.

“And what do you want in exchange for this information, cause I know damn well you aren’t doing it out of the goodness of your heart?” Martin asked.

“I have no wish to enter into a conflict with the Union.” Aikiro answered honestly. “I simply want to sit down and discuss matters important to both our respective governments. The information we have is very sensitive and can not be discussed over even secure channels as this one. I am willing to officially recognize a cease fire Martin Leonidas, even though we have not engaged each other in a quarter century, if that will assure you of our intent.”

“A Cease Fire?” Martin smiled and shook his head. “I don’t know you... but I do know your daughter and Moran. I wouldn’t trust them as far as I could spit when it comes to a cease fire.” Martin was silent for a moment then looked at her. “I’ll give you the benefit of the doubt however. Ok... I’ll agree to meet with you... with two conditions.”

Aikiro nodded. “And they are?”

“Every ship you have is to power down their weapons systems.” Martin spoke. “And I do mean power down. Drain your power cells. No emissions whatsoever.”

“We would be defenseless!” Moran barked with wide eyes. “It would take us hours to restore full power to all the systems!”

Martin ignored him. “You’ll have your shields and you’ll have us to protect you.” He spoke with a grin. “That ain’t enough?”

Aikiro nodded. “Very well.” She answered quickly. “And the second condition?”

Martin’s face hardened. “Everyone who comes to the surface will submit to a medical scan. And no... I will not meet with you in orbit on your ship or any ship for that matter.”

“None of us are sick.” Aikiro said watching as Deia got to her feet and went to the door in the office, opening it slightly, the sounds of revelry in the background as she took the data pad from someone outside.

Martin turned back from watching Deia as well and nodded. “Indulge me.”

Aikiro nodded after a long moment. “It will be as you say Martin Leonidas.”

“Moran?” Martin said looking at him. “Remember Operation Jagged Sword?”

Moran’s eyes narrowed. “I remember.” He replied after a moment.

“One twitch, one sneeze or fart in the wrong direction Moran... and I will have Captain Imror blow you out of the stars. And do not make the mistake of thinking he can't do that Moran.” Martin said. “We'll see you in two days.”

They watched Martin's image fade to be replaced by Captain Imror. “I will contact you when I have sensor confirmation that all of your weapons systems have been powered down completely. Do not delay Admiral Moran.”

Imror's face disappeared as well now and Aikiro smiled. “He knows.” She spoke softly.

Yuri and Moran looked at her. “Mother?”

“He can sense the dragons with us.” She said looking at Yuri. “The tremors of them within Mindvoice.”

Yuri's eyes grew slightly wider. “Is that even possible? Is he even that strong?”

Aikiro nodded. “Oh yes... remember they have had twenty plus years to refine their skills to an art. And Martin Leonidas is far more powerful than Veldruk ever thought he was. Robert you may begin doing as they require.” She said. “The sooner we get their agreement the sooner we can be gone from their world. Robert... what is this Jagged Sword he spoke of?”

Moran met her eyes. “It was an operation back when he was commander of his SEAL Team. An operation into Iran that went sour. The powers that be left him and his team behind. They basically offered them up as cannon fodder to the rag heads back then one the political deal was made.”

“What bearing does this have on our situation?” Aikiro asked.

“It's Martin's way of telling us if we betray him, or try to trick him he will do exactly what he did back then.” Yuri said softly.

Aikiro met her eyes. “And that was?”

“Every politician and military leader that took part in the decision to leave him and his team behind died under mysterious circumstances over the next six months.” Moran replied. “Car accidents... heart attacks... random muggings... what have you. All twenty-three of them. No one could ever connect Leonidas to the deaths, even though almost everyone knew he was behind it in some way.”

Aikiro smiled. “So he is telling us in this fashion that if we betray him he will come for us?” She said shaking his head. “How quaint.” She looked at Yuri. “He has also just told us that they still have people within our ranks with that threat. Have Tesand order a very quiet and subtle investigation into all senior officers. Let us see if we can discover who these traitors are and eliminate that threat to us.”

Yuri nodded. “I have him begin right away.”

Aikiro nodded. “Now... let's talk more of the information we will be giving to him. And what we will ask for in return.”

SPARTA

SPARTAN ROYAL ESTATE

Martin turned from the holo disc and downed the last of his beer. “That went well.” He spoke with a lopsided grin. “This Aikiro... knows that I know why they are coming here. And Yuri has grown in power considerably. She must have bonded with one of the dragons. It's the only way her abilities could have increased in such a manner.”

“You felt all that Martin?” Riall asked. “Even from this great a distance?”

Martin nodded. “Unfortunately yes. And they weren't trying to hide it either which tells me they are confident in their position.” Deia nodded as she came up to him and handed him the data pad. “What's this?”

“A poll of sorts.” Deia replied.

Martin looked at her. “You had a poll conducted Tenna? What is that, a joke?” He asked stunned.

Deia scowled at him. “Do not snarl at me Mandri!” She scolded. “I had Dilios conduct a small survey of the Spartan and Union Senators here on Earth to see what their reaction would be, knowing the Empress of the High Coven was going to be here.” She replied.

Isabella stood up. “What was the consensus?” She asked curious.

Deia looked at her. “We have not fought a battle with them in a quarter century.” She spoke. “They do not trust them any more than you or I do Mandri... but they are willing to see what they have to say. Everyone prefers peace to war... even you Martin Leonidas.” She spoke turning back to look at her nephew.

Martin grinned. “Hell yeah! It leaves more time to explore more pleasurable things.” He said looking first at Anja and then Isabella and wagging his eyebrows.

“God... you are such a pervert!” Anja snapped from her spot as Isabella stepped up to her and took her hand.

“Come Anja.” Bella spoke with a smile. “You and I are not needed here any longer and watching him leer at us in these dresses only makes his ego more swollen.”

“Hey... I can’t help it if you look unbelievable in your underwear.” Martin said.

“You have such a one track mind.” Anja declared with a smile as she turned to leave with Bella.

“I’ll remember you said that tonight.” Martin called after them as they exited the office. He turned back to Deia and the others who were watching him. “What?” He asked innocently.

Deia shook her head slowly with a grin. “I will arrange a meeting place for when they arrive.” She spoke as she moved for the door. “I will leave it to you to decide who goes with you to meet with them.”

Martin watched her walk out of the office and turned back to see Danny and Riall standing from the couch and moving up next to him. “I can’t help it when they dress like that.” Martin told them.

Danny put his arm over Martin’s shoulders. “I do know how you feel brother. I intend to peel the dress Anuk poured herself into off her this evening with exquisite slowness.”

Riall chuckled. “Something I intend as well with your mother.” He spoke.

“Nice move on your part planting the seed of doubt.” Danny said. “Making them think we have agents within their chain of command that could give us this information.”

Martin looked at him with a grin. “Who said we still don’t?” He asked.

Danny laughed. “Oh brother... you are one devious motherfucker you know that?”

Martin nodded. “Of course I am.” He said with a smile. “Riall... when their Task Force gets here... put them on the far side of the moon where Admiral Wallace can keep an eye on them with EDEN BASE’s ground arrays.”

Riall nodded. “I’ll see to it.”

Martin looked at Danny. “Let’s grab another beer and have a good time tonight. I have a feeling our lives will get a whole lot more interesting when our guests arrive.”

“Why are we here again Rener?” Malic asked as he lowered his large mug of Spartan Wine.

He and his friend Rener moved along the flowered garden path of the Sparta Royal Estate. It had been an event filled two days for Malic and this was the first time he had been off of the nearby Durcunusaan base.

Immediately after leaving the transport at the spaceport he and several others had been debriefed in minute detail in regards to what had taken place on Eleysi Three. He had been assigned a normal training barracks which was a surprise to him, and then he had discovered that the other three Spartans who had seen action on Eleysi Three with him and were applying for entry into the Durcunusaan had been granted probationary status due to their actions and the reports of Prince Androcles and Commander Famus in regards to their conduct. They would still have to fulfill their physical and academic requirements to fully become members of the elite force of Durcunusaan, but they had been given the uniforms of the regular Durcunusaan members and the privileges that came with being part of the famed Wolves of the Blood unit. Their status as probationary members would end when they met all their requirements in the allotted time frame. The Durcunusaan base was situated in the mountains surrounding Hagios Center and the rugged terrain made for some very challenging physical training courses which Malic was looking forward too with relish. He had seen dozens of dragons flying through the skies over the mountain and Sparta and he had learned the population of dragons on Earth had grown to almost five thousand now. Malic didn’t fear the large beasts. He found them to be noble and intelligent creatures. He had spent the first night watching the sky, mesmerized by their flight as they floated lazily over the city and surrounding mountains, riding the currents of the wind as easily as he walked on the ground.

It was much more rigorous physically than Malic had anticipated, not that he was worried in any way, for he excelled at physical challenges. He was not prepared in the least however, for the complete academic load placed on a Durcunusaan trooper while attending the schools. The academic load had Malic worried some what, though he had already begun putting out feelers to see who he could bribe into doing his academic work.

“I told you...” Renner answered. “As members of the Durcunusaan... we are required to know the grounds of both the Island Palace and this Spartan Estate like our own homes. I figured we could kill two or three birds with one stone. Come to the celebration, check out the layout of the estate and grounds here and learn what we can from those that are on duty, all the while keeping our eyes open for females.”

“I don’t intend to be guarding the Estate of the King.” Malic spoke confidently. “I will be a member of Mjolnir’s Hand.”

Renner nodded with a smile. “Well until that happens we are still Durcunusaan Malic.”

Malic lowered his mug of wine as they passed the edge of the row of apartments where the older children of the King and Queens stayed. Malic briefly found himself wondering which one belonged to Princess Eliani.

The sounds of music and laughter filled the night air as they grew closer to where the majority of the guests were. He and Renner could easily pick out the Durcunusaan troops dressed in civilian clothes and mingling among the crowds as if they were guests. Malic stopped when he saw the half dozen couples dancing in the large circle and he recognized Sadi immediately. Her face and eyes were bright and she was laughing as Andro spun her around with his hand in tune to the music. He had never seen her dressed in such a formal or enticing way and he had to admit to himself she was a stunning female wolf. He saw the large black Durcunusaan soldier and the older daughter of the King and Queen Isabella dancing in the large center of the circle with several other couples and the Prince’s brother Denali and sister Lisisa. His keen eyes moved over the men and women watching until he saw her and then they grew wide.

Eliani Leonidas wore a dress that could only be described as intoxicating. It was royal blue in color and looked to be made completely from satin and it wrapped around her body like a glove. The dress fell to mid thigh and no lower, with horizontal slits of varying size decorating both sides of the dress exposing her richly tanned skin underneath as well as the smaller slits on the sides of her large breasts, exposing the skin there. A one inch wide strip of satin material extended straight up from the edge of the dress directly over the valley between her breasts and formed a one inch wide collar around her slim neck, leaving her shoulders and arms completely bare. It was almost as if she had poured herself into the dress the way it clung to every curve of her body. Malic’s eyes were drawn to the movement next to her and he watched as the breathtaking blond female came up next to her very close and handed her the crystal glass of liquid. This new female wore a dress of similar color, but instead of the many horizontal slits along the sides there was only one vertical slit that extended from just below the edge of the dress under her armpit to just above her narrow waist on both sides of her body. She was taller than Eliani but only by a couple of inches Malic saw, her blond hair flowing gracefully past her shoulders. The swell of her breasts, while not as large as Eliani’s, was very prominent, and Malic could easily tell she was just as muscular as she was feminine. The dress caressed her skin tightly, conforming to the rippled abdomen she sported that was a little more defined than Eliani’s equally flat midsection.

Malic turned to look at Renner quickly. “Who is the woman next to Princess Eliani?” He asked quickly.

Renner’s eyes turned and he took in the two women with an appreciative gaze. He looked at Malic.

“You haven’t looked over your files have you?” Renner spoke with a smile.

“What do you mean?” Malic asked not wanting to admit he hadn’t even glanced at the files on the Royal family. He didn’t feel the need for he did not intend to remain a member of the Durcunusaan for long enough to get to know them.

“That’s Nyla Sinthe.” Renner answered. “Princess Eliani’s lover.”

Malic’s eyes grew a little wider at this information as his eyes went back to where they stood. He had thought the Princess was just making fun of his maleness when she told him she had a female lover and she was a vampire and that if he wanted her he would have to accept the other female as well.

“She’s... she’s a vampire.” Malic said softly.

He felt Renner nod and turned to look at him. “She’s a pureblood too.” He spoke. “They are the most beautiful.”

“You find her attractive?” Malic asked trying to keep his distaste from sounding in his voice.

“Sibfla... don’t you?” Rener spoke. “Look at her Malic... you’d have to be malda not to think so. She’s a Durcunusaan Team Leader. The story from what I understand is they found each other in the last year of the Evolli War. It was one of the last ground battles and the Princess found her on the battlefield after the fighting had moved on. She and her dragon were seriously injured by a T19. They...”

“She’s bonded with a dragon?” Malic asked surprised.

Rener nodded. “One of only twelve pureblood vampires with the Mindvoice power to achieve that within the Union to date.” He answered. “Anyway... the Princess found her and word is that she told Nyla to heal herself by feeding on her blood. They’ve been together ever since. A lot of males have tried to get them into bed together. Can you imagine that... those two females wrapped around you?”

Malic turned back to look at Eliani and Nyla seeing that they were pressed close to one another and moving slightly with the music as they watched Eliani’s brothers dance. “Have any succeeded?” Malic asked.

Rener looked at him. “Succeeded in what... getting them together in bed?”

Malic nodded. “Yes.”

Rener shrugged. “Rumor among the Durcunusaan has it there have been a few over the last four years.” He spoke sipping his own wine. “None of them lasted more than a couple of weeks though. I heard one of the senior Lochi speaking about it yesterday when they were discussing arrangements for the celebration. They are apparently looking for a different kind of male. No one knows what it is that will entice them together. It is said Prince Andro almost threw one of the idiots from the top of a mountain near Eden City for being foolish enough to brag in detail to his friends that he had bedded the Princess and her lover. Bad idea that was I’d say.”

Malic’s eyes were focused on Eliani and her willow and peach scent. It was easy enough for him to pick out her delicious scent from the multitude of other scents because he had been so very close to her and she had hit him with enough of her aura to leave an impression. What Malic could not figure out was if it had all been a ruse. Why would a Princess of the Union be interested in him? Why would a Princess of the Union with a lover that looked like this Nyla want him? No matter how Malic felt about vampires... he could not deny that Nyla was breathtaking. His father hated vampires, and that hatred bled over to his sons. All through his childhood his father had made it a point to always talk down about those who had defected to the Union. His father had also made it a point to insure that his command was vampire free.

“There wasn’t a bloodsucking bastard anywhere within his Fleet Group!” He was very proud to say in the privacy of his own home.

This was one of the things he had pounded into the heads of his seven children, Malic being the youngest. Malic was also the only one who did not have the grades to get into the Officer Academy as his five brothers and one sister had. That had always been a point of contention with both his father and mother. Malic had always hated school, no matter what the subject was. He had never had an issue with attracting females, his physical prowess and handsome looks made that very easy. He had also never wanted to settle down, and now he could admit that taking Sadi as his mate would have only been because it would have made his application for the Durcunusaan so much better looking. He realized now that would never have happened no matter how hard he may have tried, not with what Sadi shared with Prince Androcles.

“Buttercups in the morning dew.” Malic spoke in almost a whisper.

Rener looked at him. “What?”

“The vampire... the pureblood... she smells like sweet buttercups in the morning dew.” Malic said as the smell drifted to him more strongly now, mixed intimately with Eliani’s peace and willow scent.

Rener chuckled. “Malic... vampires don’t have scents that we can track.” He spoke. “Everyone knows that... their blood isn’t in their systems deeply enough because they are always ingesting new amounts... cloned or otherwise.”

Malic looked at him and shook his head. “Sorry Rener... it... it must have been someone else.” He spoke quickly. He turned to look once more at Eliani and Nyla and he saw the young Lycavorian/Elf Spartan come up between and pull them close to his muscular body with his arms and they both planted kisses on his cheeks.

Rener chuckled when he saw Malic watching them. “Don’t even think about it Malic. They are so far out of our league it’s not even funny. And to get to them you have to go through Eliani’s brothers. I don’t know about you, but I have no desire to even step into a sparring ring with any of the Princes to prove I’m worthy.”

Malic tore his eyes from them and looked at Rener. “You are right of course.” He said.

“Let’s walk the garden and then head into Sparta for the nightlife.” Rener spoke. “Find out where all the most attractive females hang out.”

Malic stole one last look at where Eliani and Nyla were still in the arms of the young Spartan and then he turned to follow Rener.

Eliani wiped her soft red lipstick from her cousin’s cheek and saw Nyla doing the same. “When did you get back Ronusu?” She asked. He was the oldest of her uncle Andreus’s children and a senior analyst for Armetus’s Krypteria.

“I got in only an hour ago!” The young man spoke with a smile. “My father said if I didn’t show up for this he would have my nor.”

“He or Aunt Kmyla would for sure.” Eliani spoke with a smile as he held both her and Nyla close to him.

His bright blue eyes were focused on Andro and Sadi in the center of the circle dancing. “So this is the Sadi we have heard about since we were all children I take it?” He spoke.

Eliani nodded. “That’s her.” She said.

“She’s much better looking than he told us.” Ronusu said. “What exactly does she see in your brother again?”

Eliani and Nyla laughed and both of them slugged him in his chest. “Stop it! I’ll have Res twist you into a pretzel like when we were small.”

“So what about you two?” Ronusu asked. “Any prospects on the horizon?”

Eliani rolled her eyes and Nyla shrugged. “There might be one or two.” She said with a grin.

Ronusu shook his head. “You know... if we weren’t cousins...” He spoke.

Eliani chuckled. “What difference would that make?” She exclaimed. “Love knows no boundaries.”

“No it doesn’t.” Nyla agreed.

“So does that mean I can take the two of you back to my room after the party?” He declared with a grin.

“You wish!” Nyla exclaimed with a laugh.

“Ronusu... you couldn’t handle us.” Eliani boasted. “You’re too tame for our tastes anyway.”

“Ah... you want a man of danger and mystery.” He said as he moved forward between them to watch the dancing. “There are certainly enough of them out there to choose from.”

Eliani caught the scent of driftwood and ocean as the breeze shifted and she turned quickly, her eyes searching the crowd all around them. Nyla noticed this almost immediately and she heard the spike in Eliani’s heartbeat.

“Ussta Che?” She asked softly.

“Nyla... he’s here.” Eliani said softly.

Nyla knew immediately who she was talking about and her green eyes also began searching the crowd as she stepped closer to her. “Do you see him? Which direction?”

Eliani motioned with her head. “There! The tall one moving past Deni’s apartment.”

Nyla shifted her eyes and saw who she was referring to. “We can catch him before he leaves the circle! Come!”

Nyla grabbed her hand and they both leaned up quickly to kiss Ronusu’s cheeks. “We have something to do.” Nyla said quickly before she had Eliani began weaving through the throngs of men and women. They cut through the living area of the villa and out the kitchen entrance just as Malic and Rener were passing the entrance.

“Leaving so soon Enomotarch Malic.” Eliani spoke as she and Nyla slowed to a more sedate speed to not look so eager.

Malic and Rener stopped and turned slowly, Rener’s eyes wide. Nyla’s green eyes grew slightly wider as she gazed at the face of the man who had affected Eliani so, and by virtue of that, her as well.

“Princess Eliani!” Rener barked bowing his head quickly. “It is... it is an honor.”

Malic stood there looking at them, his heart beating a little faster. Her willow and peach scent was almost overpowering to him and he realized she was once more releasing just enough of her scent and aura upon him to let him know she was interested in him. Mixed deeply within her scent was the scent of buttercups and he could tell they must have been together recently. He saw her holding tightly to Nyla's hand, and it was obvious that Renner could not smell what she was doing. She was directing her scent and aura at only him.

Malic took a deep breath. "Princess Eliani." He spoke formally bowing his head.

"You... you are leaving?" Eliani spoke. "The celebration is just getting started."

"We... we only came to inspect the grounds of the estate." Malic answered quickly knowing it was a lie, but hoping he had buried it enough to not be detected. "As part of our Durcunusaan requirements."

"I told you I would introduce you to Nyla." Eliani spoke giving no hint if she could smell the lie.

"Nyla... this is Enomotarch Malic. He's the one who saved Tharua and I. Malic this is Nyla Sinthe."

Nyla stepped closer to Malic, looking up into his deep blue eyes. [Mindvoice Shielded] [Carians Ussta Che... he's beautiful.] Nyla spoke as she held out her hand.

[I told you.] Eliani answered.

Malic's eyes narrowed slightly for he could feel the tremors within Mindvoice. His Mindvoice skills were barely above a Tier Three and he almost never used them but for some reason he could sense the tremors now. They were speaking shielded on a much higher plane that he was even capable of, yet he had never been able to detect the tremors before.

Nyla held out her hand to Malic. "Thank you for what you did." Nyla said evenly. "I would have been very upset with her if she had gotten hurt in some way."

Malic hesitated only for a second and then he took her hand in his. Her skin was soft and warm to the touch, something he had not expected and that showed in his face. "I was... I was only doing my duty." He spoke. He released her hand quickly and could almost feel the way his pulse was racing now.

Eliani took Nyla's hand once more as she stepped back next to her. "So you aren't going to stay?" She asked.

"Well... we were..." Renner began to speak.

"We are meeting two young ladies at one of the cafés in Sparta." Malic answered quickly interrupting him.

[He's lying.] Nyla said.

Eliani glanced at her. [Are you sure my love? I can't smell the normal adrenalin dump into a person's blood when they lie.]

[I'm sure my love. His heart rate increased a quarter of a beat per minute just now.] Nyla answered.

"Oh..." Eliani said casually. "Which one?"

"I believe it is called Gallais's Retreat." Malic answered quickly remembering the name from a conversation with Commander Famus before they had departed.

"An excellent choice." Nyla replied.

"Indeed." Eliani answered knowingly.

[Do we tell him?] Nyla asked with a chuckle.

[Why? He'll discovered it soon enough.] Eliani replied equally humored.

Malic felt the tremors once more and he could only wonder at what they were saying. He bowed his head once more. "We'll take our leave of you now." He spoke. "If you would, extend my congratulations to Sadi for me Princess Eliani."

Eliani nodded. "I'll do that."

They watched him take Renner's arm and turn quickly and move off down the walkway. Nyla squeezed Eliani's hand the entire time until she was sure he was out of earshot and then she turned to her lover. "Oh... Eliani... he is... he is a god." She spoke quickly stepping close to her.

"Why was he lying about going to meet two females though?" Eliani said thoughtfully. "And he hesitated before taking your hand Nyla."

Nyla nodded. "Perhaps... but he did take it." She said. "That tells me he struggles with his feelings about vampires. Perhaps they are not his feelings at all Ussta Che."

"He is beautiful isn't he?" Eliani said with a smile.

"His eyes... they..." Nyla stepped closer to her and pressed her lithe frame against Eliani's seductively. "I just might have to take you home tonight and show you how happy I am that you found him."

Eliani grinned. "Well... I won't complain about that." She said.

Nyla leaned closer. "I didn't think so." She said huskily as their lips came together in a soft kiss.

“Ahem!” The female voice broke into their moment and they turned to see a dazzlingly dressed Gorgo. “Staanial!” Eliani exclaimed as they turned.

Gorgo looked at Eliani and Nyla with a grin. “I know that the atmosphere is contagious... but could the two of you wait until you are home before you assault each other?” She said with a grin. Nyla and Eliani couldn’t help the embarrassed looks on their faces as Gorgo stepped closer and held up the data pad. “I had to call in several favors to get this Eliani. And I only did it because the two of you need a man to tame you.” She said reaching up to place her hand on Eliani’s cheek. “Your Malic’s transcripts. He wasn’t a particularly bright student... but that is the teacher in me talking.”

Eliani reached up and took it slowly. “Thank you Staanial.” She said softly.

“Is he worth this much effort for the two of you?” Gorgo asked gently. “He does not have the most stellar reputation with women if what I hear is accurate, and both of you are usually quick to discard males who act as he does.”

Nyla held Eliani’s arm as she nodded. “After what we felt tonight... yes... we think so.” She answered. “This one... this one is different Gorgo.”

Gorgo nodded. “Then don’t let him get away.” She spoke stepping closer to them with a smile. “Perhaps what he needs are two strong women to show him the way. Never let it be said Eliani Leonidas and Nyla Sinthe are shy about going after what they want.” She took their hands. “Now come... let’s get as much time with your brother and Sadi as we can before they leave for his villa in Gytheio. According to your mothers... Andro’s plan is to not be seen for at least three days once they leave. I want to enjoy her company a little more before he corrupts her completely.”

The loud trumpeting of a single dragon drew their attention back towards the center of the villa and they saw Elynth lifting off into the night sky, a brief flash of golden blond hair and the sound of female laughter evident before she vanished into the darkness to the cheers and clapping of everyone in the area.

“Anse!” Gorgo swore loudly. “He’s no better than your father!” She declared. “Sweeping her away in the middle of the celebration!”

Eliani and Nyla laughed as they took Gorgo’s arms. “You’ll have to make due with us Staanial.” Eliani spoke.

Gorgo smiled and squeezed their arms. “Well... that is most certainly not a bad idea either.” She said. The three of them laughed and they headed back for the celebration.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Stop undressing Tharua from her scales Jeth. She’ll catch a cold!] Lisisa’s voice scolded him in a humorous tone and Jeth turned his huge head from where he sat next to Cemath and Aradace and looked at her with his golden eyes as she walked up to him.

Lisisa’s exposed skin glistened in the light from her dancing with her brothers and sisters and she was drinking the crystal glass of liquid. Jeth knew she did not drink alcoholic beverages and it was probably some sort of fruit juice that matched the color of Spartan Wine.

[I am not undressing her.] He answered defensively. [I am admiring the color and texture of her scales.]

Lisisa chuckled within Mindvoice as she came up to him and he lowered his head so she could caress the smooth blue/black scales under his jaw and kiss his snout. It was a sight to see really, for Lisisa looked almost miniscule against the backdrop of her bonded brother. They had bonded together on Lycavore when her father had come for her almost twenty-six years ago. Jeth had been a six month old dragon hatchling at the time, already on his way to being close to his father’s size. He had stolen aboard the ship they had used to infiltrate High Coven space and reach Lycavore, knowing almost subconsciously that they were going to meet his bond mate. The moment their psychic shield activated Jeth and Lisisa knew it was meant to be. As the years had passed they had grown in power and abilities, surpassing all but Andro and Denali in what they could do together. They shared almost everything with each other; the only secret Lisisa keeping from even Jeth was her love for Denali. Much the same way as Denali kept it from his bonded sister Aradace. It was not something either of them wanted to share just yet.

[We go before the Elder Council tomorrow Jeth.] Lisisa spoke as her hand stroked his blue/black scales. [They will hear your petition. They'll give you permission my brother. You must have faith. They have allowed others that were younger to mate.]

[That was only because the connections to the riders they carried was so deep it caused the female's metabolism to speed up and allow them to carry eggs before it was normal. And all of them were only a few years shy of completing the growth on their own Lisisa.] Jeth replied. [Tharua is not like that.]

[Do you know that for sure Jeth?] Lisisa asked. [Tharua and Eliani's bond is very deep Jeth. Not as deep as you and I, or Andro and Elynth or even Denali and Aradace... but it is a powerful bond.]

Jeth stared at her with his golden eyes for a long moment. [I did not think of it in those terms.] He said finally.

Lisisa pressed close to him and rested her forehead against his cool snout. The picture of her head against his massive skull was almost comical to look at, but no one could deny the power they wielded as a Bonded Pair and behind only her father and Torma and Andro with Elynth they were widely considered the strongest of all Mjolnir's Hand. [You do know that how she treats you is only a façade Jeth.] She spoke softly. [She may be a dragon... but we females tend to act in similar fashion regardless of our species. Go sit with her. Talk with her and show her your true nature Jeth. Not the childish one you display for everyone else. Perhaps that is what she is waiting for.]

[Do you think?] He asked.

[I can tell you that your mother considers you one of the most intelligent young dragons she has ever known.] Lisisa spoke.

[She is my mother.] Jeth answered with some humor. [She will always say those things.]

Lisisa nodded slowly. [Perhaps... but she did not force your grandmother to agree with her.]

Jeth's golden eyes grew wider. [She did?]

Lisisa stroked the scales under his large eyes. [Go over there and act as I know you can act Jeth. A proud son of Torma. Win Tharua's heart as your father won your mother's heart so long before she could carry eggs. You just might find she feels the same as you.]

Jeth inhaled deeply. [I believe I will do as you say my bonded sister.] He spoke.

Lisisa smiled. [Good.]

[What will you be doing Lisisa?]

Lisisa laughed. [I'm going to find my brothers and drag them back to dancing so that they are so tired they don't chase any female wolves tonight and get themselves in trouble.]

Jeth chuckled and nodded his huge head. [They do seem to get into more trouble when they are together.]

Lisisa nodded. [Go my brother. Grab your future by her tail and don't let go.]

Jeth snorted in reply and pushed his massive body up with grace and began threading his way through the throngs of people. Lisisa smiled as she watched him and then turned her head to find her brothers. Well... one of them at least.

Androcles had told her his villa was small and overlooked the Laconian Gulf.

He hadn't lied about the villa overlooking the Laconian Gulf. It was surrounded by it with the exception of the Lifter Causeway that connected it to the mainland. He hadn't been completely truthful about its size however.

Andro's villa occupied the small island of Cranae. It was the place that Paris of Troy had supposedly spent his first nights together with Helen of Sparta Sadi had discovered that bit of Spartan history from Helen. Andro's villa was easy enough to spot from the air as Elynth swept in low over the town of Gytheio. It occupied nearly one quarter of the island on the north side, opening onto the beach, while the rest of the island was now covered with thick timber except for the strip of beach encircling it. The island itself was perhaps a kilometer long and half a kilometer wide and as Elynth landed lightly on the massive patio to the rear behind the villa and facing the gulf, Sadi's eyes were wide in amazement. She could only stand there in awe, as Andro turned to remove Elynth's saddle, and gaze at the expanse of the villa.

The patio area itself looked as if it could easily hold over a hundred people, opening right onto the white sands of the large beach. There was a huge dark pit near the edge of the stone and tile patio floor that was obviously used for large bonfires and there appeared to even be several apparatuses to use for cooking over that fire. The exterior of the villa was surrounded by a flowered walkway that twisted around the sides out of sight, the soft white glow of the outer lighting causing the yellow and red flowers to glow almost eerily. There were many chairs and several tables on the patio and Sadi knew without question that this must have been a gathering place for Andro and his siblings and family. She knew all of them maintained villas in the mainland town of Gytheio, as well as Gorgo and Riall and the King and Queens. She could see the lights of Gytheio on the horizon less than a kilometer away.

The villa itself appeared to be built in the same style as some of the older parts of Sparta that she had seen. The ancient décor was elegant and graceful and gave a distinguished look to the building. The large double doors were a form of engraved glass as she walked up to them and slowly passed her hand over the side scanner. The doors slid open without pause and once more Sadi realized how much Andro had planned for this. He had entered her bio-signature into the security system of the island no doubt and as she stepped into the main Grand Room of the villa she knew why. The artifacts and paintings on the walls and occupying the room had to be priceless in not only terms of monetary value, but also in historic value. There were several metopes on the walls that bespoke of some time in ancient history, similar to those she had seen on the tomb of Andro's grandfather at Thermopylae. She had made it a point to visit that sacred sight before she and Andro consummated what they had, if only to understand and appreciate much of what he held dear.

Sadi felt him come up behind her and his hands traced delicate lines up her arms to rest on her shoulders.

"Andro... it's... it's beautiful." She spoke softly.

"At the moment... the only beauty I am concerned with is the one standing in front of me that smells of sugar plums and spice." Andro spoke lowering his head and nuzzling the side of her neck and her cheek.

Sadi's eyes closed in euphoric bliss as sensations of delight coursed through her. "You... you aren't going to give me a tour of my new home?" She managed to say with some humor.

"The tour of our home can wait." Andro growled as he scooped her into his arms and gazed at her with those azure blue orbs. "Right now the only tour I am interesting in taking is the one of your body."

Sadi chuckled and traced his jaw. "Have you no control my handsome mate?" Sadi asked with a seductive drawl to her voice.

"Yes... and I have been exercising it ever since you came back into my life." Andro answered as he turned and headed for another set of large double doors. "That control does have its limits however."

Sadi laughed as he maneuvered her in his arms and passed one hand over the scanner and she watched as the doors opened into another huge room. The floor was covered in thick lush dark blue carpet and the bed he guided them too was easily large enough for four people. Several candles burned on the many dressers in the room and the moonlight filled the smaller twin doors that opened onto the stretch of beach right outside the room.

"Is the bed soft?" She asked him pointedly.

Andro smiled. "I don't know. I have not used it since I bought it six years ago. It is our bed... and I have been waiting for this night to make use of it."

"Then where have you slept?" Sadi asked surprised.

Andro shrugged his broad shoulders. "In one of the four guest rooms or on the patio with Elynth." He answered as he set her down next to the bed.

Sadi's eyes never left his face as he stared at her, his azure colored eyes almost glowing with the combination of moon and candlelight filling the room. She reached up again and stroked his cheek, running her finger along his lips and feeling the desire for him beginning a slow burn in her belly. She could feel his aura pulsing behind his shields, and she could most definitely smell his lavender and pine scent calling out to her. She inhaled deeply of his male scent and felt it rushing to her brain and igniting all the receptors within her mind.

"Andro I..." Sadi gazed into his eyes.

"What KertaGai?" He asked softly.

“Andro I burn for you.” She said. “I... I have never felt this way before. And it is not just because of your aura.”

Andro smiled and reached up to run a finger along her cheek, watching as her eyes closed in happiness. “I am going to worship you Sadi Leonidas.” He spoke softly as he leaned his head over and brushed his lips against her ear. His words sent shudders of delight surging through her adding to the already growing fire inside her. “When I am finished it is my hope no other male will even cause you to turn your beautiful eyes.”

Sadi smiled as his fingers caressed her neck and shoulder now. “Andro... that... that is already the case and you know that. It has been like that since that night on the island. You are the reason I never found what it was I was seeking. Because you were what I was seeking all this time.” She said softly. “And now...” She looked up into his face. “Now you are all mine.” She pressed her body up against his and leaned up on her tip toes to nuzzle the hollow of his throat. “As handsome as you look in your uniform, I would much rather have the sensation of your skin against mine Andro.” She looked at him with smoldering jungle green eyes. “Take this off!”

“Is that an order from my mate?” He asked.

Sadi grinned devilishly. “The first of many.” She spoke.

Andro smiled and Sadi could only watch with burning desire as he had himself undressed faster than at any time in his life. Sadi had seen him shirtless before on his ship, the muscles of his shoulders, chest, and abdomen excruciatingly defined. The three entry wounds on the left side of his chest and the Talon Guardian brand directly in the center of his chest. There were several smaller scars dotting his abdomen, but she would discover the cause of them at her leisure as she explored his body. His tanned skin looked so very inviting and as her green eyes dropped lower Sadi felt a rush of sexual warmth and excitement race through her. His thick cock, though not even completely hard yet, was already a size that surpassed anything Sadi had taken inside her body. Imagining what he would feel like sheathed inside her caused moisture to seep to her smooth pussy and she fidgeted on her feet as her eyes came back up to his. He stepped closer to her and reached up to stroke her silky hair with one hand while his other hand deftly went to the silk ties that held her dress together. Sadi breathed in deeply as he pulled on the silk tie, and the dress loosened from around the neck, parting somewhat the entire way down her front as the lacing lost its tension. Andro unlaced the portion of the dress that acted as a collar and once more deftly unsnapped the two snaps that held it in place before removing it from around her neck and letting it dangle in front. Sadi never tore her eyes from his as she felt the dress begin to loosen even more and her excitement grew. She felt him slowly lowering his shields and his aura began to wash around her, wrapping her within its embrace and only serving to excite her further.

Andro dropped to his knees in front of her, his hands pulling the dress down as he went, exposing her firm breasts to the cool night air. Sadi’s nipples grew instantly erect, proudly standing out from the combination of cool ocean air and Andro’s aura coursing through her. Her hands went to the sides of his head as his lips touched her skin just below her breasts and he planted butterfly kisses across the flesh of her abdomen, following in the wake of the dress as he pulled it from her body with deliberate slowness. Sadi braced herself with her hands on his shoulders as she stepped from the dress and he tossed it to the side. Her chest heaved as his hands traced up the backs of her calves and thighs and his lips left burning trails up the front of her taut thighs until his face stopped and he stared at her center, already moist from his aura and what was racing through her unchecked.

Andro was barely holding control of himself, and as he stared at the incredibly detailed tattoo that decorated Sadi’s flesh just above her smooth and very bald pussy, her aroused sugar plum and spice scent hit him full in the face. Her hands gripped his shoulders tightly and he inhaled deeply of her scent letting it filter to every corner of his mind. He felt her stomach contract and she inhaled sharply when his lips brushed the skin of the tattoo and he realized it was very sensitive to touch, especially when she was aroused. Her fingers dug into his skin as his hands slowly curved around the backs of her thighs and moved over her firm perfect ass cheeks. He extended his arms up her back and heard her gasp as he lifted her almost effortlessly and quickly but gently settled her onto her back on the soft sheets of the bed, the cheeks of her ass near the edge. Andro settled back to his knees before her, letting his fingers trace the silky soft outsides of her thighs and legs as he lifted them and draped them over his shoulders.

“An... Andro... you...” Sadi gasped out.

Andro silenced her words by pursing his lips and blowing gently across the tattoo and her exposed pussy. This only served to excite her more and he extended his tongue to slowly lick the outline of her tattoo with the tip of his tongue, tracing every line and bump until he could feel Sadi's thighs quivering on his shoulders. Her fingers grasped his shoulders even tighter, her abdomen undulating and pressing her pussy harder against his exploring lips and tongue.

"Ohhhh... please... please don't tease me my love!" He heard Sadi gasp out lifting her head from the bed and looking down between her thighs.

Andro glanced up at her face with glowing azure eyes and she could almost see him smiling as his hands reached up and took her erect nipples between his fingers, pinching them lightly before tracing small circles around her areolas. Sadi's head fell back with an audible groan of intense pleasure as he extended his warm tongue and probed the engorged lips of her labia ever so gently, licking up one side and down the other, tickling and tasting her moistness. The taste of her flooded his senses, sweet and delicious just as she smelled, and Andro probed more. He avoided her erect clit, now fully unhooded and nearly begging for attention. Her breathing was coming in short gasps, her hands having dropped to the bed now and gripping the satin sheets in her fists tightly. He finished a third torturous lick around the outside of her pussy lips, now open and extended fully in desire and arousal and then he flicked his tongue across her clit quickly, causing her to cry out in want and need. He watched as beads of sweat formed in the valley between her breasts, their fullness and firm nipples begging for his attentions. He had three days... and Andro had every intention of taking his time.

"Ronnus!" Sadi panted out. "I need... I need you inside me Andro my love! No... no more... Ahhhhhhhh... nubou!"

Andro heard Sadi's scream of bliss fill his head as he wrapped his lips around her stiff clit and battered the nub with his tongue quickly and mercilessly. He had wanted to do this first and foremost. He wanted to show her that he would love her until she could stand it no more. That her wants and needs and pleasure meant more to him than his own painfully erect and throbbing cock. Andro felt the orgasm grip her almost instantly, its power rushing through her abdomen and thighs right down to her toes. Her back arched off the bed, her hips pushing against Andro's assault of her clit, reaching for that peak he wanted her to feel. Her taut muscles threatened to tear through her skin and she fought against it as long as she could and then her mouth opened and Sadi howled into the night air, her hands gripping his head tightly as the dam broke. He would not have been able to pull his head away even if he wanted to, the strength of her grip holding his head almost too powerful to belong to someone so delicate. It was then, as Sadi's sweet come flooded into his thirsty mouth, that he truly realized his new mate and bride was a female wolf who was very capable of taking care of herself. Andro was more than content to drink down her erupting passion with relish.

Sadi couldn't control the white lights that were exploding in her head, nor could she control the power of the orgasm as it ripped through her. It was as if she was erupting like a volcano from within herself with the force of her orgasm. Her lips were open in a breathless scream as her initial howl of rapture had completely stolen the breath from her lungs. It was the most powerful and utterly overwhelming sense of bliss that had gripped her in her entire hundred and twenty-six years of age. Her muscles felt as if they would split open through her skin, her body stretched to the point of breaking, her hands holding tightly to the head of the man who was making her feel these things. She was loathed to allow him to release her from his grasp, though she knew he had no intention of doing such a thing. The strongest orgasm she had ever felt was when Teeria had spent so much time teasing her in a very similar way, yet what Sadi was experiencing at this split second dwarfed that by a hundred times. It shuddered through her in controlling waves, lingering for what seemed like hours, until the humping motions of her hips began to subside. She could feel his potent tongue licking her pussy non-stop, urging her for more of her sweet come, wanting more until finally she collapsed back onto the bed completely spent. She felt as if she had just run for hours without stopping, her arms dropping to the bed before crossing over her breasts as the feelings of contentment swept over her.

Sadi's thighs quivered powerfully in the aftermath as Andro's tongue continued to lick and tease her, gathering every last drop of her juices as if it was the sweetest nectar he had ever tasted.

"Car... Carians Andro my love!" She gasped out finally.

Sadi shuddered as he suckled her still erect clit gently before lifting his face from between her smooth thighs. Her head came up and she saw that his lips were coated with her juices, the corners of his mouth moist from what he could not catch quickly enough. His azure eyes were changed now and she saw him smile, revealing the points of his dual incisor fangs, so very unique to the Leonidas bloodline. She watched him with adoring love in her own changed eyes as he dragged his tongue up along her tattoo and to her belly button, delving into that crevice as he brought his body up onto the bed with her. It took him what seemed like forever to practically tongue the sheen of sweat from her skin as he came higher, serving only to begin another slow burn within Sadi's blood. She groaned in delight when she felt his broad muscled chest brush across her erect nipples, and then his face was looking down on her with devoted passion in his beautiful eyes.

"Andro... that... that was..." Sadi started to speak but his lips claiming hers silenced her words. He tasted of lust. Of passion. Of devoted love. He tasted of her, and Sadi surrendered all that she was to his powerful kiss. As kisses went... it was the most incredibly arousing kiss they had shared yet, and Sadi felt the slow burn in her blood increase to a raging fire in the space of three seconds. She felt his knee press gently against the inside of her thigh and with not a single moment of hesitation, Sadi open her legs for him to slide between. When she felt the engorged head of his huge cock press gently to her moist pussy Sadi tore her lips from his. "Andro... it's so... it's so big! I've never..."

Sadi's eyes opened wide when she felt him push gently and fully four inches of his throbbing twelve inch shaft slid into her velvet warmth. The sensations were inconceivable and undeniable as pleasure receptors in her brain began going into overdrive.

"All... all that you are, is now mine Sadi Leonidas!" Andro spoke between clenched teeth as he stared into her beautiful face. "All... all that I am... all that I am, is now yours."

Sadi looked directly into his eyes as he lowered every mental shield he was still holding up and the full force of his unshielded Alpha male aura wrapped around her. It was as if a nuclear explosion went off within her lithe body as she felt the outpouring of complete and total instinctual devotion embrace her completely. Her whole body ignited, the blood within her veins singing out its delightful happiness. And then Androcles buried the remainder of his thick, pulsing twelve inch cock within her in one soul crushing plunge.

That plunge began what Sadi had expressly dreamed and wished for the last four days, and something Andro had promised her on his ship as he told her what his intentions were going to be. He was going to make her his in every way possible over the next three days, even though she was already his in every way her mind could begin to imagine. This was not something that would ever go away. This was something that had begun the moment she smelled his lavender and pines scent on the island so many years ago. She may not have known what it was at that time, but she certainly knew what it was now.

Sadi Leonidas screamed in absolute love, passion and heavenly ecstasy. A scream that would echo for hours.

SPARTA ESTATE

Tharua could barely contain her racing heart even as her copper colored eyes gazed upon those dancing, among them Eliani and Nyla. Elynth had long ago departed with Andro and Sadi, followed only a hour later by Moneus and Carina, who had slipped away when Carina wrapped the shadows around them both and they vanished into the night. The main cause of her racing heart rested beside her on the ground, his blue/black scales pressed against her mahogany colored ones. Jeth had come over beside her, Arydun and Aradace and almost shyly asked if he could join them. It was obvious to Arydun and Aradace what was happening as the night progressed as she and Jeth had traded friendly barbs between each other and them, even as they inched closer to one another. It had taken almost an hour before their scales were finally touching, and neither of them moved for the longest of moments. Tharua thought perhaps Jeth might pull away from the contact and her heart sang out in joy when he only pressed closer to her. His muscular bulk beside her, touching her as it was, made Tharua feel safer than she had ever felt before in her life. Tharua knew there were older females that were very interested in Jeth, and word among their kind was that he was going before the Elder Council tomorrow to ask for permission to be allowed to mate even though he was so young. Word had it that the Council would let him as well. With the exception of female dragons bonded to riders, females could not carry eggs before they were at least four hundred and fifty years old due to their bodies' own metabolism, however male dragons could impregnate even older females when they reached full maturity at twenty years of age. That was different for bonded females, as their Mindvoice abilities advanced their metabolisms so that many of them could carry eggs as young as thirty and some even as young as twenty. That Jeth was beside her this night and not searching the skies for willing females told Tharua all she needed to know about his true feelings. Eliani did not openly acknowledge her bonded sister's excitement and joy, but sent her love and happiness to her through their bond.

Tharua had been amazed at the size of Jeth's father when she viewed him that first day here on Earth. He was not just huge in size, but he moved with a muscular and powerful grace that defied logic. She had met Jeth only a short time later, and even though she was nearly six years older than him at the time, his six month old body was already half the size of her fully grown form. Tharua had not seen him again until several weeks after she had bonded with Eliani, and as she watched his then seven year old body glide gracefully to the ground on the Spartan Estate, Lisisa perched proudly between his shoulders, Tharua had been smitten with him. Like Torma his father, Jeth was enormous in size and far larger than the majority of any living dragon, but the grace and agility he commanded was almost unparalleled. She never tired of watching him fly with Lisisa or alone when he was hunting, or watching him maneuver his beautiful muscular body when he walked among their bonded ones. His childlike acting and nature was just that, an act. Tharua had seen the serious side of Jeth, and he spoke with the intelligence and wisdom of someone three times his age, no doubt because of his deep bond with Lisisa and all she had experienced in her life. And the power they commanded was far more than she and Eliani would ever obtain.

Tharua turned her head slightly and looked at Jeth's snout, his blue/black scales smooth and reflecting the moonlight. His golden eyes watched the dancing and she thought for an instant that she saw his head bobbing in tune to the music that was playing.

Jeth? She spoke softly. He turned his massive head to look at her instantly, his golden eyes bright. I never thanked you for what you did on Eleysi Three. You saved my life and that of my bonded sister. You and Lisisa.

Jeth stared into her copper colored orbs for a long moment and leaned his head forward to touch his snout to hers. There is nothing to thank me for. You turned quickly enough once Malic warned Eliani. The blast would have caused you to falter for only a moment. You would have recovered.

Tharua stared back at him with love in her eyes at his words. It... it is said you are going before the Elder Council tomorrow. She spoke tentatively. To seek permission to be able to take a mate.

Jeth nodded his head slowly. Yes.

Do you think they will allow you to do this? Tharua asked.

I don't know. It is my hope that they do. Jeth answered.

There... there are many females who have been waiting for that day Jeth. Tharua said. They will flock to Sparta in search of you if permission is granted. Do you... do you have a female you are interested in?

Jeth nodded and turned back to look at the celebration. Yes I do. He replied. The most beautiful female I have ever seen with my eyes. She has smooth shiny mahogany colored scales and bright copper colored eyes. Her talons are fiercely sharp and she is far more intelligent than I. I wish to make her mine before another male wins her heart. It is my hope she will... it is my hope she will allow me to be her mate. The females may flock here all they wish because it does not matter. I do not want any other.

Tharua stared at him and could feel the warmth surging through her at his words. Tharua lifted her tail and ran the tip of it along the side of Jeth's longer and thicker tail. The tip of his tail curled around and brushed along the underside of hers. It was a show of sincere affection by a male dragon for a female and Tharua shuddered in joy, her wing tips fluttering gently. She looked up at his face once more and saw his golden eyes watching her.

She wants no other as well Jeth. Tharua spoke.

MINDVOICE CITYSHIP 41 DRAGON EDLER COUNCIL CHAMBERS

What you ask for has only been granted three times in our history Jeth. Daurgo spoke from his position next to Arzoal. The last time was with your very parents, but even then they were considerably older than you are now.

Jeth rested on the floor of the Elder Chamber and nodded his huge head. Jeth's recent actions in saving Eliani and Tharua had spread among the dragons on Earth, only adding to the mystique which the son of Torma and Isheeni already had around him. He and Lisisa were considered one of the top five Bonded Pairs within the Union and not just for their skill and daring and strength. Jeth and Lisisa did not care to fight... in fact they both hated it almost to the extreme. They would and had always sought a peaceful solution to whatever event they confronted. The war with the Evolli had only added to Jeth's long list of accomplishments; already well on his way to surpassing many of the Bonded Pairs who had been together since the inception of Mjolnir's Hand. His strength and intelligence was without question, and his childish nature always was able to ease tension and cause humor even in the darkest hours of the war. Jeth knew however that none of that would matter if the Elder Council did not allow him to choose a mate at so young an age. If they did not allow him to have Tharua. She was five years older than him, and with the looser restrictions now being placed on their kind, once a female dragon reached thirty years of age, they were allowed to mate.

Since being discovered on Enurrua and realizing their full potential with powerful Tier Six Mindvoicers as their riders, the dragons within the Union had evolved far more quickly than in the past. Like the Lycavorian females, due to constant interaction with other species and the increase in their Mindvoice abilities, bonded dragon females were now able to carry eggs as young as twenty years of age as opposed to the usual four hundred and fifty of years past. To offset this fact, Arzoal and the Dragon Council had instituted a policy that no male dragons were allowed in most cases to choose mates until they were over two hundred years old thus allowing the females to become older and wiser themselves before mating and having clutches of eggs. It was instinctual in most cases how male and female dragons chose each other, though many of those bonded to riders now exhibited deeper emotions and had begun being more selective in their choices of mates. As with Lycavorians, once mated in most cases, dragons remained together for the rest of their natural lives unless one of the mates died. Arzoal had maintained strict guidelines during the centuries before they had become part of the Union for the simple reason that she was trying to keep their species from becoming extinct. Now however, she and the Elder Council had to balance instinct and emotion among their kind, something that was not always easy to do. Though their total population was no where near the millions that Arzoal once remembered dragons numbering, each new clutch of eggs brought their species further and further from the brink. Torma was the last male dragon to have been granted permission to take a mate before she was able to produce eggs, and that was because of the devotion and love that he had showed to Isheeni as she grew. Torma was nearly three hundred years older than Isheeni, and their love and devotion to each other was legendary within dragon culture. Isheeni had given Torma three clutches of eggs, three each in the first two clutches and then four in the last clutch. Mara was the third egg from their second clutch but she had not hatched until Retta was born, somehow sensing the second daughter of Martin Leonidas and Anja was to be the one for her. All of their children were bonded to members of the Leonidas family which granted them increased control of their abilities and power because of the blood running not only in their veins, but the veins of their riders. Torma and Isheeni had made a joint decision to not have anymore egg clutches for at least a hundred years so that their children now would all be grown and established within their own lives.

Jeth knew that there were several dragon males older than the two hundred year limit that had shown interest in Tharua, even at her young age. Her mahogany scales and copper colored eyes were very enticing and she had lean muscular lines that to a male dragon were the epitome of perfection in a female. While Tharua had rebuffed all of those interested, they still had the opportunity to pursue her openly now that she was thirty-one years of age. Jeth did not want to let her slip through his grasp, and after last night he was even surer of his feelings and his decision. He had loved Tharua since he was a very young dragon and he knew that would not change. She was in his blood as surely as his mother was in his father's blood and her words to him last night only confirmed what his heart was telling him.

I know this Elder Daurgo. Jeth answered.

Why are your mother and father not beside you Jeth? Daurgo asked. Do they know what it is you are asking of us? Do they agree?

They know Elder Daurgo. Jeth answered gently. And they do not stand with me because whatever this Council decides, I want it to be based on my actions and deeds. What I tell you. I do not wish this Council to grant me any special recognition because of who my parents are.

This statement caused several of the Elders to turn and look at each other quickly, a movement that did not go unnoticed by Arzoal, and inwardly she smiled at this.

This is a very unusual request. The light green scaled female dragon spoke from the end of the line of nine Elders. Your deeds are well known among our kind Jeth, and none on this council can deny that you have the respect of every member of Mjolnir's Hand. But to be very honest, in my opinion, you lack the wisdom of age that an older dragon would have in this instance. You take risks that are not needed young Jeth. You allow emotion to control what it is you do at times. This is well known. And now you come before us asking that you be allowed to take a mate at an age when you should still be learning how to control the power you and your Bonded Sister command.

I was not aware that letting emotion play into my decision making wasn't allowed Elder Dalah. Jeth answered calmly and intelligently.

It is allowed Jeth. It is allowed and even encouraged. She replied. The question remains however, are you mature enough to know when to not allow your emotions to factor into your decision making. That is a skill that only comes with age and experience. Something you do not have right now.

Lisisa stepped forward from where she had been standing along the rear wall of the chamber now. She had encouraged Jeth to come here and make this request many months ago, and she would not let him stand alone especially after he had discovered the night before that Tharua did indeed feel the same for him. Lisisa had extricated herself from Denali's warm embrace and his bed very early this morning and had returned to her own villa in Gytheio to make herself presentable. She wore the standard fleet uniform and boots, her raven colored hair falling well past her shoulders.

Elder Dalah... may I speak? Lisisa spoke now.

Lisisa Leonidas is always welcome in this chamber. And always free to speak what is within her mind. The light green scaled dragon spoke.

Lisisa stepped up next to Jeth and placed her hand on his thick neck. She watched his eyes close in love and caring and she turned to the dragon Elders. I do not pretend to have the wisdom of the members of this Council. All of you surpass me in years and experience by quite a wide margin, but I still feel I must speak now. You say that my Bonded Brother lacks the experience and age needed to make this decision. I ask you... on what do you base that?

This question caught Dalah very much by surprise, as well as several other members of the Council.

He... he is only twenty six years old Lisisa Leonidas. Dalah finally answered.

Is he? Lisisa asked. I have five hundred and six years behind me. When Jeth and I bonded on Lycavore that very first day, he inherited all that I was. Everything I had experienced up until that point became part of who he was. We don't claim to have the depth of the connection that my brother and Elynth have, that my father and Jeth's father share, but our bond is far deeper than most of those Bonded Pairs in the Union.

That is true Lisisa Leonidas. Daurgo spoke gently. However, your life before Jeth came into it, before your father brought you out of the darkness you were living, it was for lack of a better word... horrific.

Lisisa nodded. Yes it was. She said softly. And it has made me who I am today. It has made me stronger. I could have fallen into the abyss of that life but I fought and hung on because I had faith my father would come for me. That is what led me to do what I did. To protect others even though they hated me for what I was. A half breed. I knew my father would come and I never gave up hope. That is what Jeth now has. Yes... he is reckless at times... aren't we all? Yes... he sometimes acts childish... as does my brother and Elynth. As do my father and Jeth's father. Jeth just does it better. He is like a soothing balm to others around him when he acts in such a manner, and it is this nature that has helped to pull many others from despair. I submit to you that as deep as our connection... our bond is... Jeth is wiser than many male dragons three times his age.

I agree to a great extent. The dark blue scaled dragon next to Daurgo spoke now. The Bonded Pair of Jeth and Lisisa is well known for trying to solve problems without violence. Even during the war, there are many instances where they asked for surrender and gave our enemies the opportunity to lay down their arms.

It is understandable that you would stand beside your Bonded Brother and speak as you have today. Dalah spoke in a sterner tone of voice that was laced with could only be described as sarcasm. However... I do not share your view Lisisa Leonidas and I would imagine there are others on this Council that do not as well... for you are considered bias in your opinion.

Arzoal's head snapped around and she glared at the light green dragon. Elder Dalah... you will be very careful in the words you choose to use. Lisisa Leonidas speaks true words and they will not be disrespected. She is also a Princess of our Union and the daughter and sister to two Talon Guardians. The tone of your voice is unacceptable to me!

Dalah looked at Arzoal and bowed her head. Forgive me. She spoke.

Daurgo looked at Jeth who had remained seated during the exchange, his posture one of respect and reverence to the Elders. Young Jeth... for you to request this now... there must be a female that has taken your fancy. I will tell you that there are several older females who have expressed interest in you since it was discovered this meeting was going to take place and we would hear your petition. It appears the rumors are just as rampant among our species as others within the Union. Who is this female dragon that has emboldened you to come forward this day?

Jeth looked at him. The sister of Elder Syrilth. He answered turning to look at Syrilth. Tharua.

Syrilth looked at Jeth with only a small amount of surprise in her eyes. And it was surprise for how he had so confidently announced her sister's name. She had known for some time that Tharua was completely in love with the son of Torma and Isheeni, but the way he had just told the Elder Council this news... with such confidence and calm, that told Syrilth all she needed to know.

Tharua? Dalah spoke now. She is still a child in her own right.

She is also bonded to a Leonidas however. Daurgo spoke calmly. And though not as strong as other bonds among their family, certainly among the stronger bonds of the Pairs in the Union. And their deeds are almost as well known as those of Lisisa and Jeth.

She is also just as headstrong and reckless as her Bonded Sister Princess Eliani. Dalah spoke evenly, careful to not put any inflection into her voice this time. And that is common knowledge.

Arzoal nodded in agreement. In many ways yes, but Eliani's relationship with Nyla Sinthe has tamed her to a great degree as we all know, and Arydun has also been a calming influence on Tharua as well. Arzoal looked at Syrilth. Were you aware of this Syrilth?

Syrilth nodded her head. Tharua has told me of her feelings for Jeth. She answered. She has had these feelings for several years now, and they have only grown stronger as time has passed. I have done nothing but encourage her to explore her emotions and feelings. Something she has apparently done.

And in doing so... you have eliminated any choice she may have had. Dalah said.

Syrilth looked at her. Excuse me?

By encouraging her to pursue these feelings for Jeth here Syrilth, you have eliminated any chance for another male who might show interest in Tharua. Dalah continued evenly. There have been several males, my son among them, who knew she was reaching the time when she could be approached for mating. However, because of her duties as a Bonded Pair, and the constant attention of the son of Torma, she will never know what another male could have offered her.

Jeth's huge head turned to look at Lisisa quickly when he heard this and then he turned back to listen to Dalah.

I did not tell my sister to feel for Jeth what she feels for him Dalah! Syrilth exclaimed. To suggest such a thing is ridiculous. The feelings for Jeth were there and grew on their own. We all know that those who are bonded to riders have developed far more advanced emotions than normal. They have formed a symbiosis with their riders. I only encouraged Tharua to embrace what she felt and pursue these feelings if that was her wish. And apparently that was her wish.

You did not caution her to guard her feelings! Dalah complained. That is what you should have done! To guard her feelings and perhaps wait until she was back among others of her kind that might be interested in her. Is that not what our males do? They strut about and do very odd things trying to impress the females. For some males it may take years to draw the interest of the female they want. And even then, they may not get who it is they pursue. In Tharua's case, Jeth has eliminated that possibility altogether.

Jeth is not to blame here. Arzoal spoke now. There is no blame to place. He could no more control his own feelings than Tharua could control hers.

Couldn't he? Dalah asked. He is the son of Torma and Isheeni. When combined with the Mindvoice powers of the King and Queen Aricia there are no other Bonded Pairs that compare with the exception of Androcles and Elynth. His bloodline alone indicates that he would have the Mindvoice ability to control his urges. Being bonded with Princess Lisisa only increases that power, for she is exceptionally powerful in her own right. And now... when Tharua has come of age to mate, he comes before us asking for permission to forgo the ancient rules we have put in place and give him our blessing to take a mate. A female that he has not had to work to impress and win over because there has been no competition.

This is not a game! Daurgo exclaimed loudly. Jeth's fight to win Tharua's heart has been done on the field of battle! And day after day! Fighting beside her and the other Bonded Pairs! Acting the part of the King's will as all Mjolnir's Hand is destined to do! By his own actions and deeds, as he himself has said!

The life of a Bonded Pair is not the only life within the Union for a dragon! Dalah barked out.

It is the life that Tharua and I have chosen however. Jeth spoke now. This is not about me and Tharua is it Elder Dalah?

You are not old enough to know what you speak of Jeth! Dalah barked out.

Aren't I? Jeth said evenly. You say I have done these things. That my attentions have kept Tharua from seeing what other males offer her?

Dalah looked at him. That is what I am saying.

Then refuse me. Jeth spoke confidently. Refuse my petition and I will wait until I am two hundred years old before I return in front of you. Parade as many males as you like in front of Tharua. I do not fear that. She will refuse them all. She will wait for me... as I will wait for her, for that is the depth of our love. Call her before you and ask her yourself if you do not believe me. The way Jeth spoke those words, with such confidence and strength in his voice, without hesitation or doubt in his tone. That is what sealed the decision of several of the Elders.

You presume much young Jeth. Dalah snapped.

I only speak the truth. Jeth said firmly. A truth that you can not deny or change no matter what you do.

Do not be so confident in your words young Jeth. Dalah hissed out.

Enough! Arzoal barked. I have heard enough! I will excuse myself from this vote because of my connection to Jeth. Syrilth will you do the same?

Syrilth nodded. Of course.

Arzoal looked to either side. What does the Council say? I believe we already know how Elder Dalah will vote. Daurgo?

I vote yes.

Elder Lym?

The dark brown female nodded. I vote yes.

Elder Vureem?

I too vote yes.

Elder Tratain? Elder Bahr?

Yes. The two males spoke from Daurgo's left.

Elder Ikkan?

The male on the very end next to Dalah nodded his large head. I was present when your father came before the Elder mother asking for permission to take your mother as his mate even though she could not give him any eggs. I saw the look of devotion in your father's eyes young Jeth. I see that same glare in your eyes. The utter sense of commitment and devotion. There is no doubt in my mind... I also vote yes.

Arzoal nodded her huge head. Very well. The vote is six to one in favor of Jeth's petition. I will adjourn this session of the council so that our own emotions can cool. We will reform at mid day to hear the remaining petitions.

Lisisa stood close next to Jeth's head as the dragon Elders began to break up and head out of the chamber. Syrilth and Arzoal moved up to where they stood along with Daurgo. Jeth looked at his grandmother intently. Did I... did I do something to bring her wrath down on me grandmother? He asked almost innocently.

Arzoal shook her head and leaned her snout over to rub the top of Jeth's head. It is not about you Jeth. Dalah is finding it very hard to come to terms with the changes from the old ways that we are making. She is also one of the females that courted your father's attentions. She has always been put out that he chose to devote himself to your mother instead of her. She has always resented that he chose Isheeni over her. She thought because Isheeni was so much younger than her she should not have the right to mate with Torma.

This is what you truly want Jeth? Daurgo asked.

Jeth nodded. Without question.

Arzoal nodded. Then as long as Tharua agrees I wish you the best grandson. She will appear before us this afternoon since you have made your petition to us. When the Harmony of Two Hearts Ceremony takes place four months from now... the two of you can make it official. Though it might be better if she wasn't carrying eggs when that occurs. Arzoal finished with a chuckle.

Elder Mother... there seemed... there seemed to be more to it than just normal jealousy. Lisisa asked. Her distaste for the Bonded Pairs and Jeth in particular seemed rather extreme.

Her son Vaeros was one of the first to be tested for Mjolnir's Hand when it was first formed. He did not make the cut for the first selection phase. Daurgo answered.

And this is the same son who has shown interest in Tharua? Jeth asked.

Arzoal nodded. Apparently. She harbors a great deal of resentment it seems. More so than even I thought her capable of. Your father dismissed her... her son was not selected for Mjolnir's Hand and now you have apparently stolen the heart of the female dragon her son was interested in.

Lisisa looked at her. Should we be concerned about that?

Syrilth chuckled softly. The war and your father and brother have made you suspicious of everyone Lisisa Leonidas.

Lisisa shrugged. Better safe than sorry my father always says.

Arzoal shook her head. She is a member of this Elder Council and has been for many decades. She is not an enemy and you will see tomorrow that whatever passion she had for this issue today will be gone. Dalah does not hold grudges.

We're sure about that? Lisisa asked.

Arzoal chuckled now as well and lowered her head to butt Lisisa in her shoulder gently. Go now you two. You have the decision you came here for. Worship her Jeth. As your father worships your mother.

Jeth nodded. I will grandmother. I will.

Tharua's appearance this afternoon is nothing more than a formality Jeth. You need not worry of my sister's decision. Syrilth spoke. I know her well enough to understand the depth of her feelings for you, and nothing Dalah will say will change her mind.

Jeth nodded. I know.

Then go and tell her. Syrilth said with humor in her voice. I understand she waits in the valley with the hatchlings and Eliani.

GYTHEIO

Sadi Leonidas was unable to take notice of the sun rising and then falling once more, and if she did notice this fact, it was lost within the cloud of ecstasy that she had been experiencing non stop for more hours than her mind had been able to keep track of. What she had been experiencing and feeling for the last thirty-six hours was nothing short of absolute wondrous heaven.

Sadi rested in Andro's lap now, his huge cock filling her so completely that every movement, no matter how small caused ripples of intense pleasure to course through her lithe body like the waves crashing against the beach of the ocean she had visited with her father on Apo Prime as a child. The pleasure had not stopped from the moment Andro had first plunged into her velvety depths. Sadi never imagined she could feel what she was feeling, and feel it for so long. Part of it she knew was his incredibly powerful Alpha male aura, and the exquisite control he seemed to have over it. He would use it to caress and enflame her body to the point of insanity, and then pull it away to simply wrap around her as she calmed. Then he would do it again, this time with his hands and lips and tongue caressing every millimeter of her body, inciting uncontrollable flaming passions from deep within her belly until she could not deny the explosions that ripped through her. In the last thirty-six hours he had not allowed Sadi to come down from her passionate plane of existence. Even when they were resting and feeding each other from the bowls of fruits and berries, her every sense was alive with indescribable pleasure. His aura had embraced her in those first moments, and he had not released her.

Sadi did not want to be released.

Androcles Leonidas was the largest man she had ever seen not to mention have filling her. His thick cock was a quarter inch more than twelve inches for she had measured it playfully during one of their more restful moments, if you could call them restful as they had stroked each other's bodies only inciting more passion. That first glorious plunge was all it took for Sadi to know that the pleasure she had only dreamed of up until then was going to be hers. And it had been so much more satisfying than the dreams she had experienced. He stretched her, filled her in a way she never thought possible, touching places she never knew existed. She could feel every pulse of the thick vein that adorned the entire length of his cock as it throbbed within her belly. No matter what position he took her in, and there had been so many she could not recall them all, the only thing she felt was a desire for more. It was almost as if he had been made especially for her, to fit her exactly, and there was no denying the pleasure he could elicit from her with just flexing his enormous shaft inside her tight pussy. His hands never stopped moving, stroking her, caressing her until she thought she would scream. Until she did scream. His lips set fire to her body no matter where they touched, and he had spent several hours exploring every crevice and contour of her body with those lips and that oh so talented tongue of his. Sadi was also experiencing the full unshielded power of his Alpha male aura. She had heard stories of how powerful the King's aura was, and what it could do to his Queens. Now Sadi was experiencing it for herself with his son. The man she had loved since he was only eight months old.

His aura was like a blanket that wrapped tightly around her, always touching her, always caressing her in the most intimate of ways. It could keep her in a constant state of arousal, and it had for so many hours, yet Sadi welcomed that for she used her own female aura to continually entice and tease her new mate. She had lowered all her own shields long ago, unleashing her own aura as powerfully as she could create it, surprising herself with the staggering power she could spawn and the response she got from Andro was everything she had ever hoped for. The other men in her life had long ago faded to blank memories as Andro claimed her heart and her soul with every powerful plunge into her depths and every breath stealing kiss he gave her. There was only this man now, this man Androcles Leonidas, who had so completely captured all that Sadi was.

Sadi grasped the sides of Andro's head tightly now and pulled his face from where he was suckling her painfully erect nipples. Sweat glistened on both their bodies in the moonlight above them and she realized he had somehow ripped the mattress from the bed and brought it out onto the patio of his villa.

Their villa.

Sadi lifted her head skyward, her jungle green eyes changed, her fangs extended and she inhaled deeply the scent of her mate and the heady scent of sex and exertion. The smell of the ocean invaded her senses and the cool wind across their skin combined with the moonlight from above triggered something instinctual within Sadi. A need... a burning to act in a singular way. She felt his large hands grip her ass cheeks tighter and pull her closer to him, flexing his massive cock within her depths and sending tiny shivers of delight tearing through her veins. Her blood was hot... burning for the man who held her so tightly within his grasp. She lowered her face back down and saw he too had allowed the change to come over him partially. His azure blue orbs were surrounded by a black band, his dual incisor fangs prominent and exposed just beneath his soft lips.

"Take... I want you to take me Andro!" She gasped her fingers tightening around the sides of his head. "No... don't hold back anymore! I... I want all of you... all of you my love!" Sadi groaned and closed her eyes as she felt him flex his cock within her once more.

Sadi drove her hips downward with all her strength, feeling his huge balls smash against the lips of her bald pussy and hearing him groan and his hands tighten on her ass as she rotated her hips in tight, hard circles impaling herself even more on his cock.

"Here my love!" She groaned loudly. "Here... here under the moon! Take me Andro! Make... make me yours for eternity!"

Andro released an animal like growl, the wolf within him responding to the demands of his mate. He rolled over quickly, pulling Sadi with him until she was beneath him, his cock still trapped within the prison of her warm depths. Sadi glared up at him as her hands gripped his bare shoulders. "Do it my love!" She growled now, her fangs clicking together loudly.

Staring into her beautiful eyes, her sugar plume and spice scent saturating all around him, that same instinctual need and desire gripped him. His changed eyes flared for a moment and he shifted his body slightly, withdrawing his cock until only the large bulbous head remained inside her. Sadi's eyes grew wide at the sensations ripping through her and then Andro rammed himself forward completely. Sadi howled out her pleasure, her head going back as he began pummeling her tight body into the soft mattress in blistering twelve inch strokes. There was nothing gentle about this. This coupling was all about instinctual need and the desire to reach that one point. This was about the wolves within them both and the desire to consummate what they had found together in the most complete manner they knew how.

Pleasure spiraled out of control for both of them, his dominating strokes into her body causing the orgasms to come crashing upon one another with the force of a hurricane. Sadi withered beneath the man she loved so utterly, her mind awash in otherworldly bliss as her juices spilled from within her erupting body coating his pile driving cock in her sweet nectar. Andro was a blur of motion, his hips pounding down with driving power into Sadi's scorching depths. Her pussy muscles were clamping down on his raging cock, unwilling to release him as his hips moved back and pulling him even deeper as he crashed back into her. He lowered his body onto her completely, feeling her own arms wrap around his back with crushing power of her own and he buried his face into the crook of her shoulder and neck, his arms wrapping under her shoulders to give him better leverage to plume the depths of his devastatingly beautiful mate. Sadi's arms held his shoulders and she gasped out next to his ear.

"Yours... I... I am... I am yours for all time!"

Andro's tightly shut eyes burst open as that need overwhelmed him. It happened without warning... without conscious thought. He opened his mouth, exposing his dual fangs and he bit down into Sadi's shoulder. There was a momentary flash of intense pain in his own shoulder as Sadi's wolf fangs sank deep into his flesh.

As their each other's blood blossomed across their taste buds, Andro felt his cock balloon incredibly in size. The pinnacle was theirs now, and his fangs tore free from Sadi's shoulder and he howled into the moon lit night, his neck straining to the point of breaking as Sadi's howl reverberated in unison with his and the sounds echoed across the surface of the bay around them filling the night air. Sadi felt his searing hot come race up the length of his cock and explode within her as the most crushing orgasm she had experienced yet continued that hurricane of pleasure that was stealing very breath away. As Andro's come flooded into her depths, so too did their minds become one. All that they were individually, blended together in an instant, forever binding them together. As lovers. As friends. As husband and wife.

As Soulmates.

Forever KertaGai! Andro's voice sounded within Sadi's mind as clear as any foghorn as he collapsed on top of her utterly spent and exhausted.

Forever Andro my love!

Sadi couldn't help the tears that sprouted from her eyes as she wrapped her arms tightly around his back, trying to pull him into her physically as completely as he was inside her mind. The pain from his bite was long gone, and what was left in its place took her breath away as she was swimming within the deepest recesses of his mind and seeing all that he was even as he delved into her own secrets. She whimpered as his arms crushed her closer to him and he rolled onto his side, pulling her within his embrace until it was impossible to see where his body ended and hers began. Their bodies were spent even though their spirits were still willing and while sleep claimed their physical bodies their minds continued to dance with each other until they too drifted into a peaceful and contented oblivion.

Sadi's jungle green eyes fluttered open slowly at the sound of female voices and the laughter and scampering feet of running children. She shifted slightly on the bed and turned when she realized Andro was not next to her. She didn't remember when they had returned to the bedroom, or how the bed had been put back into some semblance of order, all that mattered to her now was that Andro was gone. Sadi sat up quickly when the double doors to the bedroom burst open and three of Andro's younger siblings burst in chasing one another, three dragon hatchlings hot on their heels. Sadi held the sheet around her as they came to screeching halts and stared at her wide eyed.

Sadi didn't know what to do so she smiled brightly. "Good morning." She said more calmly than she actually felt.

"She's prettier than the others!" The ten year old boy who Sadi now knew as Calyb spoke.

The small ten year old girl she knew as Retta met her eyes. "Hush Calyb!" She hissed out in a rather commanding voice. "Andro had to leave." She said turning back to Sadi. "Father needed him."

Sadi smiled brightly still. “Yes... I gathered that.” She spoke. “How are you this morning Retta?”
“You remember my name?”

“You are Andro’s sister. Why wouldn’t I remember your name?” Sadi spoke as she pulled the sheet around her tighter and inched closer to the end of the bed.

“She’s nicer too!” Calyb spoke. “She’s not yelling at us like the others on the Island.”

Retta met Sadi’s gaze. “Are you... are you Andro’s mate now?” She asked.

Sadi’s smile grew even wider. “Yes. Yes I am. And this is just as much your home as it now is mine.”

Sadi saw Retta smile and she was about to rise to her feet when the door opened again and Aricia came in dressed very casually in a white sun dress that was practically see through and simple sandals on her feet. Her own azure eyes took in what was happening and her face became sterner.

“Children I told you not in Andro’s room because Sadi was still sleeping.” Aricia scolded them. “Out! Now! All of you... before I take a switch to your bottoms!”

Sadi couldn’t help but smile as they took off out the double doors that led to the beach with fake screams of fear, the dragon hatchlings following them with madly flapping wings. Aricia turned to face her with an embarrassed look.

“I told them not in Andro’s room, but they are so used to having the run of their brother’s home.” Aricia said. “I’m sorry.”

Sadi stood up and wrapped the sheet around her body, tucking the corners of the sheet on the side of her firm breasts. “That won’t change just because I am here.” Sadi spoke. There was a long moment of awkward silence between them before Sadi spoke again. “Milady Aricia... I...”

Aricia stepped closer to her and took her hands. “No. What am I Sadi... eight... ten years older than you? I will not have you referring to me in such a way.”

“You share the King’s mind.” Sadi spoke. “The King’s memories. He is over three thousand years old and by virtue of that you...”

Aricia shook her head. “And you now share my son’s memories... which include those of his father.” She said softly as she stepped even closer and her eyes examined where Andro had bitten her on the shoulder. “You and Andro have conducted the Gravinolfgreksaan.”

Sadi blushed and looked almost embarrassed as she nodded shyly. “It happened... it just happened. I don’t know... like it was...”

“Instinct?” Aricia finished her statement.

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

Aricia smiled and squeezed her hands. “It was the Assirina Cormunn last night Sadi.” She said. “Did you know that?”

“The Centennial of the Moon? No.” Sadi answered.

Aricia smiled and nodded. “You and my son are now Anomes Sadi, and you don’t know how happy that makes me. He has loved you for so long Sadi and part of me hoped this would happen. Martin told me it would happen, that he knew that night on the island you were meant to be with our son.” Aricia reached up and caressed the fading scars of Andro’s bite. “Though he could have chosen a less conspicuous place to bite you.” She spoke disapprovingly.

Sadi chuckled. “It was a rather intense moment.” She said with a brilliant smile. “I don’t think it was something that crossed his mind at the time. And to be honest... I wouldn’t have cared where he bit me as long as he did.”

Aricia laughed as well. “Yes... I was in that exact same position.” She said. She looked at Sadi with a smile. “Something came up and Martin needed Andro with him. We volunteered to come here and make sure you weren’t alone when you woke.”

“We?” Sadi asked.

Aricia smiled and nodded. “You can come out now! It is safe!” She spoke loudly.

Sadi turned to the doorway and saw Anja and For’mya lean in with tense faces. She couldn’t help but laugh at the expressions on their faces as they came fully into the room.

“We didn’t know how you would react?” For’mya spoke quickly. “We are sometimes very miffed and upset when Martin Leonidas is taken from our bed in the middle of the night or early morning.”

Sadi saw that they too were dressed in simple sun dresses though Anja wore nothing on her feet.

“I told you, sending the little ones in first was the wise tactic.” Anja spoke with a grin as she stepped up to Sadi and reached out with her hand to cover the scars where Andro had bitten her. “Once we saw this on Andro’s shoulder this morning, we didn’t know how you would react knowing his duties had pulled him away. He was rather upset about it to say the least.”

For’mya chuckled. “Upset? I don’t believe I’ve ever heard Androcles curse so long and so well in the ancient language. He spoke some words even we have never heard.”

Sadi saw the small pulse of soft white light from Anja’s hand and the sudden warmth. It lasted only a second and when her hand came away the dull throb was gone from her shoulder and the scars were much fainter. Anja admired her work and nodded. “That is something I know you are proud of and wish to display, but their dual fangs can sometimes leave a nasty scar. At least now it doesn’t mar your beauty.”

Sadi reached up and placed her hand over the bite scars. “I will display it proudly. As often as I can.” She said softly.

Anja smiled widely, her jade green eyes bright. “Well... Aricia can’t because of where our brute of a mate bit her. Sometimes I wonder if all conscious intelligence leaves that man when he goes instinctual on us.”

“But think of the pleasure when he does Melyanna.” For’mya spoke with a knowing smile.

Aricia reached up and touched her left breast gently. “If it was allowed I would proudly display it as well.” She spoke firmly.

For’mya took Aricia’s hand. “Yes... well you can continue to display it for us. But no one else is allowed to see.” She spoke. “Come all of you... the coffee is almost done and Aurith and Isheeni are minding the little ones as they run along the beach.”

“Wait!” Sadi spoke. “Where... where is Andro?”

They looked at her and their smiles faded somewhat. “Dysea, Normya and Zarah went to be with Carina since Moneus was needed as well. Martin did not want to tell Andro or Moneus and spoil the time that you would have together. A ship has arrived in orbit. Martin needed Isabella and them to meet with those who are on board.” Anja explained.

“Who is on this ship?” Sadi asked.

Aricia squeezed her hand. “The Empress of the High Coven.” She answered.

SPARTA

MT. HAGIOS DURCUNUSAAN LANDING PORT

Isabella stood in the large hanger on one side of the bulky medical scanner that had been set up to span the entire width of the entrance to the hanger. It was similar to those used at the spacious and more public spaceports, but this one was also designed to scan for weapons as well as diseases and unknown bio hazards. Isabella had insisted on being the one to greet the High Coven delegation once Martin had told them of their pending arrival after the celebration. Martin had told them what was going on; leaving no details out as the six of them had lounged in their bed after everyone had left the celebration. And then Martin Leonidas had spent the rest of the evening into the early morning hours making all of them bark out his name in bliss. He had spent considerable time with Isabella wrapped in his arms, driving her up to the edge and over it several times. Isabella knew it was his way of showing her, telling her he had complete and utter faith in her. Isabella had spent the entire day yesterday preparing for this event and she turned to look at Andro as he stepped up next to her. They both wore the standard light body armor with crimson capes, their only weapons the Nehtes strapped to their thighs and the Shi Viskas they wore. Isabella smiled at the tired look on Andro’s face and once more she could only marvel and thank the gods for the life she now had. Twenty-seven years ago if someone had told her that a pure blooded Lycavorian would call her mother, and that she would love that same young man as her very own son, Isabella would have very seriously considered having that person committed.

Isabella Leonidas could not imagine what her life would be like without those she had come to love so dearly. And it had begun with Martin himself, when from across the stars and light years Isabella had been branded with a Shi Viska the moment Martin discovered his true heritage and history. Isabella still bore the distinction of being the only pure blooded vampire in the long history of the Union to ever be branded with a Shi Viska and survive. That had been the most defining moment in her life and set her on the path to what she now had. She had discovered her love for Dysea first, and the platinum haired elf Queen still brought shivers of exotic delight to her mind and body even after twenty-five years of being together. She would never tire of her Ussta she-elf as she called Dysea, for they had developed a love as powerful and stirring as the one she shared with Martin.

Martin Leonidas.

He was without a doubt the most powerful man she had ever been associated with. It had taken two years before Isabella had surrendered to the growing feelings she had for him and now just as with Dysea and the others, she could not imagine life without him. He loved her without question, without hesitation and every time he caressed her or kissed her with affection, it only reaffirmed everything Isabella felt for him. He could curl her toes in their bed; make her scream his name in passionate delight, just as he did the others. He had given her two beautiful daughters and she hoped one day soon she could give him a son just as the others had. To give him a son would complete Isabella in every way. And then there were her fellow Queens. Never in her lifetime had Isabella imagined she would share a man as well as a bed with four other women, and enjoy immensely every mind blowing moment as she had for the last quarter of a century. While she would always choose Dysea first, Isabella could not deny the intense pleasure she felt with each and every one of them whether it be Aricia's incredibly sugary pussy lips, For'mya's wonderfully delicious tongue, or the flavor of Anja's unbelievably sweet tasting blood. She loved each and every one of them with a passion she had never experienced and would die for them in an instant. And while they each had children with Martin Leonidas, they loved all of them as if they were their own children, and all of them called her mother just as they called her fellow Queens mother.

"Your father is not happy he had to pull you away from Sadi Andro. Moneus away from Carina." Isabella spoke as she looked at him. "You know that don't you?"

Andro nodded quickly. "I don't blame him and neither does Moneus. This is important... and I'm happy for the time he was able to give me. Sadi will understand and I'll make it up to her soon."

They both looked up when they heard the roar of four T9E TEMPEST Interceptors pass over the hanger and then the heavier, throaty roar of large engines and they watched as the huge transport began to settle to the ground outside roughly two hundred meters from the hanger.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Do you feel any?] She asked.

Andro nodded slowly. [Half a dozen. Maybe more.] He replied. [The transport is putting off psychic disruptors to block Mindvoice intrusion. Powerful ones too.]

[What do you feel son?] Isabella asked.

[The Empress and Yuri. They are not shielding] He answered. [Several others that are exceptionally strong.] He tilted his head to the side. [Six dragons... Elynth's age... a little younger, including one that is openly radiating...]

[Radiating what?] Isabella asked.

Andro looked at her. [Anger and hatred. He has Yuri's imprint on him. It is the dragon she is bonded too.]

Isabella nodded. [That doesn't surprise me.] She replied.

She turned as Eliani and Nyla came up to them. "The sensor board is ready mother." Eliani spoke calmly. "If they have any kind of foreign disease or substance in their bodies we'll see it."

Isabella nodded. "Nyla... have your team on stand by to move against the dragons if they do not comply with Moneus's instructions. Eliani and Tharua will cover. Moneus will secure the ship with his section and Andro, Elynth and I will deal with the others. Where are Lisisa and Jeth?"

[Orbiting above you as you requested mother.] Lisisa's voice burst into their heads. [The ship is smaller than a Type II by perhaps thirty meters. No visible weapons that I could see.]

[Lisisa... you and Jeth will drop and cover Moneus and Nyla if needed.] Isabella spoke. [Otherwise remain airborne unless we call for you.]

[Seeing her does not bother me] Lisisa spoke quickly. [She is not my mother. I have five mothers who love me. I am not afraid of her.]

[That is not why I want you to remain airborne Lisisa... you know that. If needed... seeing you and Jeth dropping from the heavens will frighten even the most hardened vampire.] Isabella spoke. [That is why I want you to remain airborne.]

[Understood.] Lisisa answered and both she and Andro heard the acceptance and the commitment in her voice.

“Mother... we’re talking about the Empress of the High Coven.” Eliani said softly. “Is it wise to have just the three of you? Even I can sense how strong this Yuri is.”

Isabella smiled. “Yuri and her mother would not come here on a suicide mission.” She said. “They are too cowardly to die in such a venture. They would send others to do their dirty work. No... they are here to talk. The question remains... how much they will try to test their welcome.”

Eliani nodded and leaned up to kiss her cheek. She nodded to Andro and headed back to where Tharua stood beside the waist high sensor board that Eliani would monitor. Nyla and Arydun moved to stand just to Eliani’s right and Nyla’s Durcunusaan Team spread out in a standard defensive posture.

Isabella looked at Andro just as Elynth came from behind them and the other set of doors to the hanger that led into the main Durcunusaan base. Everything is ready. She spoke as she came up behind them.

She wore her combat saddle and she touched Andro’s shoulder with her snout as she settled to the ground just to his right, but kept her feet under her ready to spring into action, her talons scrapping lightly against the steel floor of the hanger.

Isabella nodded as the whine of the High Coven ship’s engines faded into silence. “Then let’s do this.” She spoke. Isabella reached up and touched the COM unit built into her body armor. “Moneus... you may proceed. And please do not injure yourself so soon after taking my daughter as your mate Moneus Simpson. She would never forgive me.”

They all head Moneus’s deep laughter echo across the open COM. “I’m more concerned about what Carina would do to me than the High Coven.” His voice spoke. “We’re moving now!”

Aikiro stood next to Yuri near the rear of the ramp, Moran and Tesand directly behind them. They could hear the rattle and movement as Narice and the others unsecured their dragons from their travel pens and began moving towards the rear of the High Coven converted long range freighter.

“Isabella waits for us.” Aikiro spoke softly. “And the oldest son. Several others that are exceptionally strong, including your daughter.”

Yuri nodded but didn’t look at her. “That half breed slut is not my daughter.” Yuri spoke in a low voice. “Can you penetrate the Mindvoice shields?” She asked.

Aikiro shook her head slowly. “Not of the son... his shields are... they are very intricate and almost as powerful as his father. The others are strong enough to detect if I try and probe them, and it appears Isabella is equal to you in Mindvoice ability now. I did not expect that.”

“I suspected as much but didn’t say anything.” Yuri answered. She looked at her mother. “I never expected to set foot on this planet again, let alone come to Sparta.”

Aikiro nodded her head. “Nor did I.” She said. She turned as the others gathered behind them and light green scaled dragon with dirty yellow wings moved up beside Yuri. “We will do exactly as they tell us. Do not provoke them in any large way. I’m sure you can all sense what is arrayed against us now that we are on the surface, but we are not here for conflict. Remember we all have a task to perform and we can’t do that if we are not allowed some freedom. Is that clearly understood?” Aikiro saw their heads nod and she turned to look at where Moran had moved to the side of the ramp. “Very well Robert... let us see what we have gotten ourselves into.”

Moran nodded and punched the control for the ramp. He moved back to stand to Yuri’s right between her and Aikiro as the ramp began to lower. They saw the entrance to the hanger as the ramp lowered and then they were looking at two dozen heavily armed soldiers, all of them wearing black body armor and matte black helmets, the large black skinned soldier standing slightly in front of the others his arms clasped behind his back and armed with what appeared to be just one of their Nehtes secured to his right leg. As the ramp locked fully in place Aikiro and Yuri began walking down, the four ton footsteps of Vollenth following along with Moran and Tesand. His small yellow eyes looked back and forth taking in all around him.

Anthar leaned his head close to Carisia’s shoulder. [Carisia... we...]

Carisia reached up quickly and rubbed his scales under his jaw. [Not here Anthar.] She spoke quickly.

Anthar understood immediately and remained silent as they moved forward behind Narice and Deneth.

Aikiro stepped up in front of the towering young black Spartan and met his dark eyes confidently. "I am Empress Aikiro of the High Coven." She spoke.

Moneus looked at the smaller women and nodded his head. He did not make the mistake of underestimating smaller females, for he had seen Eliani and Carina in action enough times to know that was usually a very painful experience. His keen eyes drifted back among those that stood behind her without acknowledging her and took in the half dozen dragons as well as who he assumed were their riders. Three females and two males. The dragons were a mix of colors and none were larger than Elynth except for the carmine red scaled beast in the back rank. That dragon appeared slightly larger than the others by perhaps half a meter. There were another dozen personnel that exited the ship after the dragons and fell in silently.

Moneus Simpson did not fear dragons. He had been raised among them since he was a child, often times getting into trouble with Andro and Elynth. When he completed his Agoge he made the decision to become part of the Durcunusaan, even though he had the Mindvoice skills to become bonded to a dragon. His path in life had paralleled his father's life almost exactly. He was a superior soldier, and the two dozen members of his section were dedicated to him almost to the extreme. They knew he would not ask them to do anything he was not prepared to do himself. They had fought together during the entire Evolli War, and while all of them had been injured in some fashion of the course of that war, Moneus Simpson was recognized as the only Durcunusaan Section Leader to bring his entire unit back without a death. It was a testament to his leadership really for they had been involved in some of the most savage and vicious fighting of the war, including the nightmare of Alba Tau.

Moneus turned back to look at Aikiro with a stoic face. "You brought more than you told would be allowed." He spoke.

Aikiro nodded slowly. "Yes... but they are aides and officers that will help me to present my case to your King. That is why we are here young man." Aikiro answered confidently. "I'm curious... is this how you greet all visiting dignitaries? With weapons drawn and dozens of soldiers?"

Moneus met her eyes evenly. "Whatever weapons your people may have will be left here." He spoke motioning to the table that was ten meters off to the side with his hand. "They will be physically searched as well as scanned, so it is within your best interests to hand them over now as opposed to us discovering them. And you will remove the saddles from the dragons."

"Do you know how to ask politely?" Yuri spoke now.

Moneus looked at her. "Yes I do." He replied. "I'm not asking however. I'm telling you. Is that a problem?"

"Why do they need to remove their saddles?" Robert Moran asked as he drew open his jacket and removed the hand blaster and knife while others did the same, very conscious of the fact that there were two dozen weapons very close to them. While those weapons were not pointed at them directly, no one was fool enough to think that would not be the case half a breath after the order was given.

"They won't need them." Moneus spoke. "They won't be carrying any riders while you are here."

"They are carrying equipment and baggage." Tesand spoke. "The saddles only make this easier."

"Dragons are not beasts of burden in Sparta... or anywhere on Earth or within this Union." Moneus declared with a touch of disgust in his voice. "The saddles will be removed and you can carry your own bags and equipment. You have two arms and two legs, use them."

"You are the son of Daniel Simpson aren't you?" Yuri asked now. "I remember him well. You have your father's rather abrasive disposition."

"The longer we stand out here discussing what you need to do, the shorter the amount of time you will have with King Leonidas." Moneus spoke looking at her. "If you do not wish to adhere to what I have told you... then you may turn around and carry your collective asses back to your ships and out of Union territory."

Aikiro's eyes flashed angrily for a moment and she took a deep breath. "Did your father raise you to be rude young man?" She asked pointedly.

"My upbringing is none of your concern Lady Aikiro, but if you must know, my mothers raised me to be respectful of those who deserved it. In my opinion you have not yet earned the right to deserve it. And with any luck, you won't be around long enough for it to be a concern of mine." Moneus spoke.

Dante stepped up behind his grandmother. "I believe you need a course in manners!" He spat.

Moneus looked at him and smiled. “Are you offering pureblood?” He asked meeting Dante’s eyes without a hint of fear.

Everyone heard several of the closer Durcunusaan snicker. “It would be your funeral.” One of the closest females spoke softly.

Moneus turned his eyes back to Aikiro. “My instructions were to treat you as the head of a foreign government that is not friendly to the Union. It is you who requested this meeting... and you accepted the conditions for travel to Earth.” Moneus spoke. “If you wish this meeting with King Leonidas to proceed any further... you will accept the conditions I have just laid out to you as a Section Leader of the Durcunusaan.”

Aikiro’s eyes grew a little wider. “Ah... the Spartan Royal Guard. The Wolves of the Blood. I believe that is what your name means in the ancient Lycavorian language isn’t it?”

Moneus looked at her blankly. “I’m waiting.” He spoke.

“We use our dragons not only to fight, but as beasts of burden as you say.” Aikiro spoke. “I request that they be allowed to keep their saddles. I assure you young Moneus... there are no weapons hidden within the folds of their saddles.”

Moneus stared at her for a long moment then reached up and tapped the COM unit on his armor. “Andro... would you and your mother come out here. It seems we have an issue of contention.”

“Crown Prince Androcles and Queen Aricia?” Aikiro spoke. “Well... at least we will not be ushered in under heavy guard and...”

They heard the trumpeting roar and their heads came up as Elynth took to the sky above from behind the large hanger a hundred and fifty meters north of where they stood. They could see two figures on her back as she curved out away from the hanger and then turned back with a graceful extension of her wings, heading directly for where they stood. Her light obsidian scales reflected the rising sun brilliantly. All eyes were on her as she swooped in for a very elegant landing only ten meters behind Moneus, Andro and Isabella in her saddle. As she was touching down as lightly as a feather, Andro threw his leg over her long neck as she lowered herself to the ground facing the High Coven people and he jumped lightly to the tarmac, Isabella following suit.

Aikiro looked confused as Andro and Isabella stepped up on either side of Moneus. Isabella stared at Yuri seeing the hatred in her eyes while Aikiro looked at Andro and then back to Isabella.

“It has been a very long time Isabella.” Aikiro spoke softly. “The last time I saw you... you were only a small child.”

Isabella turned to look at Aikiro, her hazel/green eyes emotionless. “Not long enough it seems.” She spoke calmly.

“He asked for the Crown Prince and his mother.” Yuri spoke harshly. “Not you.”

Isabella smiled brightly. There was no hatred or anger within her any longer. The life she had now had purged that from her completely. She was a different woman entirely and she looked at Andro who stood on the other side of Moneus and he smiled at her. Isabella looked back to Yuri.

“Ah sister... there is so much you don’t know. And so much you will never learn.” She turned to Moneus. “What seems to be the issue Moneus?”

“I asked them to remove the saddles from their dragons.” Moneus spoke. “They wanted to keep them on because the dragons are carrying their equipment and bags. Personally... I’d tell them all to take a flying leap and get back on their ship, but I figured I would find out what you and Andro wanted to do.”

“You do not seem surprised that we have come here with dragons of our own.” Moran spoke.

“You took them when they were still very young hatchlings and eggs. Took them from a Union transport that crashed in The Wilds.” Isabella replied evenly. “We have known for years that you have them. Did you think that we didn’t? The Kavalians fear dragons to the extreme... and we also know why you have brought them here and what you will ask for in exchange for this wondrous information you say you possess.”

Aikiro smiled. “Well... I suppose we have made that very obvious haven’t we?”

Isabella didn’t match her smile. “You will find that we do not fear the dragons you have twisted with your ideology and brutal treatment.”

Vollenth stepped forward now and glared at Isabella and Moneus with evil eyes. He lowered his head close to Yuri’s shoulder. Let me burn them sister... please! He exclaimed to Yuri within Mindvoice.

Andro turned to look at the light green scaled dragon, his azure eyes bright and decidedly emotionless as he chuckled at Vollenth's words. This caused Yuri and Aikiro and the others to look at him oddly as he stepped right up in front of Yuri and stared back at Vollenth unfazed by the size of the dragon who glared back at him.

Are you so sure you can dragon? Andro spoke calmly. It is a prideful boast... but one that falls on deaf ears. Those around you have been trained to fight dragons... by dragons. You would only succeed in killing yourself and all those with you.

You would be dead Lycavorian boy! Vollenth snarled.

Yuri's head snapped around. There were times when he bonded dragon was more of a disruption than a help. He was very violent and always trying to incite the other male dragons into fighting him. Vollenth that is quite enough! She barked out in Mindvoice.

Andro smiled up at him. No... Vollenth is it? Unfortunately for you that would not be the case at all... for you would be the very first to die. He turned to look at Yuri and Aikiro before turning his back to Vollenth.

Vollenth snorted and stepped closer to Andro only to come snout to snout with Elynth whose lips were drawn back in a vicious snarl. Her golden eyes glared at him with barely concealed rage and she snapped her wings out with an almost deafening pop to their full extension causing the others to step back quickly at this reaction. No one saw her right wing tip whip around faster than they could follow and hit Vollenth full in the snout, snapping his head back with incredible force.

One more step fool... and I will lay open your belly and watch you wither and die on this hard ground! Elynth snarled viciously. You threaten a Talon Guardian boy! One who has the power to end your miserable existence in a single blink!

Yuri and the others could hear the conversation quite clearly and they turned to look at the other dragons in their group who were suddenly shifting their talon equipped feet in nervousness they had never displayed before. All of them except Anthar and Carisia who actually stood very still and were taking everything in.

You would do well to be silent in the presence of those who are your betters! Elynth barked out. You are nothing compared to those who surround you! All of you are nothing! And you would all die in the same amount of time it takes us to take six breaths! Look around you!

Elynth watched as those who had the Mindvoice power to hear her words, Anthar and the other dragons as well turned their heads in different directions. They watched Jeth trumpet in defiance and settle his massive body atop the edge of the hanger, Lisisa perched in his saddle confidently. Nyla and Eliani landed directly behind them some twenty meters away on Arydun and Tharua, while from what had been previously empty hangers on both sides, nearly a dozen members of Mjólnir's Hand appeared.

So you see Vollenth. Andro spoke now and all eyes went back to where he had returned to his spot next to Moneus. Your boasts and blustering mean nothing to us. Step back behind your bonded one before you are responsible for the deaths of everyone with you. Including yourself. My bonded sister is a Talon Guardian as well... and it only takes one of us to end your miserable life. You choose which one will do so... or do as your rider tells you and step back.

Vollenth! Yuri hissed out reaching up to grasp his saddle. His head whipped around to look at her. Now is not the time Vollenth. Step back.

Vollenth turned his head back to Elynth and saw her snarl at him once more. There... there will be another time. He hissed out.

We welcome that time boy! Elynth growled right back.

Vollenth then stepped back at Yuri's urging and they all watched Elynth dismiss him casually and move to Andro's left with graceful movements. As she settled to the ground next to him, her head brushed his shoulder affectionately and Andro reached up to rub her scales under her jaw.

"Mother?" He called back over his shoulder to Isabella, noticing the stunned looks from Aikiro and Yuri and all those who could hear him.

"It is your decision Andro." Isabella said with a small smile of her own at their reaction to Andro's words. "I think we've done an excellent job of showing them where they stand."

Andro nodded and turned back to Aikiro and Yuri. "The saddles come off." He spoke firmly. "We do not treat dragons as pack animals and while you are visiting Sparta and Earth nor will you." Andro stepped to the side and motioned towards the hanger. "You can remove the saddles inside the hanger where it is more comfortable. We will provide an extra vehicle for your use if you are unwilling or unable to carry your possessions yourselves. Now... if you will follow Moneus and his section please... my father is waiting for you.”

Aikiro’s eyes narrowed and she took Yuri’s hand. “I see the arrogance has passed from father to son.” She spoke.

Andro smiled at her words. “Just as it appears the same has happened with your children Lady Aikiro.” He replied looking at Yuri. “Only in your case the arrogance is a bluff. But that is something I’m sure you will come to discover on your own. Your power is such that you would probably kill me and many of those here with me... but I will die knowing you and those with you will never see the sun rise to mid day, for even as great as your power is... you will not defeat this entire base and the city that surrounds it. There are four thousand nine hundred and sixteen dragons and two other Talon Guardians that call Earth home. Not to mention the three million Spartan troops in and around Sparta alone. You would last perhaps an hour before you joined me in death.”

Aikiro couldn’t help but smile as she looked at him. “I find myself admiring you young man. In spite of myself.”

Andro shrugged. “I’m sure it is only a momentary pause in your demeanor and it will pass quickly I’m sure.” He spoke motioning with his arm again towards the hanger.

Aikiro laughed again and nodded. “You are correct.”

“Do you wish to remain out here and trade insults with us?” Isabella asked with humor in her voice as she stepped up next to Andro. “Or would you prefer to conduct the business you came to conduct and then leave our city and Union so that we can be rid of you? You asked for this meeting Aikiro. If your only intent was to come here and visit, you may get back on your ship and leave. We have no desire to visit with you or those with you.”

Aikiro squeezed Yuri’s hand. “Very well.” She spoke.

They watched as they began moving towards the hanger. Isabella nudged Andro with her elbow. “You enjoyed that.” She whispered.

Andro looked at her. “Maybe just a little.” He whispered back before his eyes lifted and settled on the raven haired pureblood that was walking past them. She glanced up shyly as she passed by them, the reddish scaled dragon beside her. Her Mayan blue eyes were bright and alive and Andro detected just a hint of humor in them. Isabella sensed Andro tense ever so slightly as he looked at the female with long dark hair and she looked at him.

[Andro... what is wrong?] She asked.

Andro shook his head and turned to her. [I’m sorry... what?]

[Are you ok?] Isabella asked.

Andro nodded quickly as fleeting images swirled in his head and then faded. [Yes. I’m fine.] He spoke.

[You drifted out there for a moment.] Isabella said reaching for his arm.

Andro nodded. [The feelings I’m getting from these High Coven dragons are confusing.] He lied. [They were battering my shields for a moment.]

[You’re ok now?]

Andro nodded. [Yes. Now we can take them to father and see what they have to say. I’m sure it will be quite interesting.]

Isabella turned and watched as they walked into the hanger. [I don’t know. Something tells me we may have just let the wolf loose in our own hen house.]

[Perhaps.] Andro spoke. [We just need to be extra vigilant.]

Isabella nodded. “Come on... before your sister tells them where to go and how to get there for not listening to her instructions.”

Andro smiled and nodded and they began following the High Coven personnel towards the hanger. “This should be a very interesting visit.” Andro spoke. “How often do we invite our most hated enemy to dinner?”

Isabella looked at him. “Very funny.” She said. “I hope your father knows what he is doing.”

Andro nodded. “So do I.”

SPARTA OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos looked up from his desk when his senior aide, a very attractive female elf, knocked and quickly walked into his office. He saw the look on her face and slowly came to his feet.

“Da’Lira... what is wrong?” He asked.

“Forgive me for bothering you sir... but the Zaleisian Ambassador is here again and he is demanding to speak with someone in authority. Since the Prime Minister is at that meeting, I did not know who to bring this too?” The elf female answered. “The Prime Minister has been avoiding him for some reason and he is very insistent this time.”

“What meeting is Deia at?” Laustinos asked.

“You know sir... the one with the High Coven Empress. They arrived only an hour ago.” Da’Lira spoke.

Laustinos moved around his desk. “I knew they were coming but I did not know they were already here. Where are they meeting?”

“The Durcunusaan base sir.” Da’Lira replied.

Laustinos nodded. “Ah yes.” He spoke softly. He did not have the security clearance to enter that facility without an escort, something that he had been bothering Deia about for many months now. His eyes grew a little wider however as he realized this was his opportunity to shine and he smiled. “Da’Lira, please if you would show the Ambassador in and free up the rest of my day. I will meet with him.”

The female elf nodded and retreated out of his office quickly. Laustinos moved around to the small wet bar he kept in the office and began pouring himself a glass of Spartan Wine. He was doing this when Da’Lira returned with the Zaleisian ambassador in tow.

The man was of medium height, the dark blue clothes covering almost amphibian like skin that looked moist to the touch. His head was oval in shape, with large bulbous eye sockets and dark eyes that did not seem to fit his face and he had no visible hair on his body.

Laustinos turned with a huge smile. “Ambassador Varasa... now this is a pleasure sir.” He stepped over to the surprised man and extended his hand.

The Zaleisian looked somewhat taken aback as the Lycavorian grasped his six fingered webbed hand. “I was... I was under the impression that Prime Minister Deia was avoiding me.” Varasa spoke.

Laustinos shook his head. “My apologies Ambassador... but that is certainly not the case. Prime Minister Deia is usually very busy in the first weeks of our exodus to Earth until things settle down. I have the afternoon free... what can I do for you?” He motioned the chair in front of his desk. “Can I offer you some Spartan Wine? It is freshly made just this week.”

Varasa nodded. “Thank you.” He spoke as he settled into the chair.

Laustinos poured another glass and then took both and returned to his desk handing one to the ambassador. “So... please... what can I do for you today?”

“I have been requesting a meeting with the Prime Minister for three days now.” Varasa spoke. “It concerns an issue of trade.”

Laustinos nodded. “Certainly... many of our trade agreements fall under the jurisdiction of my office anyway.” He said moving back to his chair. “Please... go on.”

“It is my understanding that the Rurudan Consortium has recently had a major natural disaster that has destroyed their crops of Notal Berries. If my understanding is correct they were your largest supplier, and it is Notal Berries that are needed to make this fine Spartan Wine of yours.”

Laustinos nodded. “Yes that is regrettably true.” He spoke. “We are currently searching for other suppliers on the Rurudan homeworld and within other avenues to offset the losses.”

“I have been asked to inform you that the Kavalian Federation is prepared to offer you a long term agreement for Notal Berries at a much reduced rate.” Varasa spoke. “It would be a means of possibly beginning formal negotiations with the KFI to officially recognize their government and put a quarter century of distrust behind you.”

Laustinos leaned back in his chair. He knew full well of the relationship between the Kavalian Empire and the Lycavorian Union. He also knew that the King’s brother, a Lycavorian who now called the KFI his home and people was among the main issues with the King. Laustinos had been there that fateful day and he had witnessed the savage and barbaric fight between the two brothers. He had seen the brutality his King was capable of... the brutality he had shown in their very brief encounter with the Kavalian rogue forces that had attacked the Union planet twenty years ago. He also saw the brutality of his King during the Evolli War. Laustinos wrongly assumed the Lycavorian Union did not recognize the KFI because of the King's feelings for his brother, and Laustinos knew that personal feelings did not fit among the delicate nature of politics.

He looked at Varasa. "What is it you need Ambassador?" He asked.

"Only permission for a Kavalian delegation to be allowed to cross the border and come here. To present their proposal in person. This is an opportunity for greatness and to bring peace and prosperity to both the KFI and the Union. I can even arrange for one of our own ships to transport them here."

An opportunity for greatness.

Laustinos leaned forward in his chair and nodded. "Very well Ambassador." He spoke. "You may pass on to the Kavalian delegation that I will grant them access to cross the border and come here. Let it not be said we can not be open and friendly as well."

Varasa smiled. "Would you be willing to put that into a transmission yourself Deputy Prime Minister?"

Laustinos nodded. "Of course."

He spoke as visions of his stature climbing several notches swept over him. Not to mention the visions of a chance to finally be taken notice of by one person who Laustinos wanted to shine for. He coveted Deia's job yes... but there was something else he coveted more.

Carisia could not tear her eyes from Androcles where he sat next to his father across the table from them. Even Thast's foul presence next to her could not tame the racing of her heart even as she maintained a stoic and clam demeanor outwardly. He was the image of his father in every way that she had known. Carisia had not expected to feel the sheer magnitude of the power within him as she had this day, nor did she realize the incredible brightness of his eyes. And she had not expected his level of confidence even standing in front of Vollenth and her grandmother. And then when he sat next to his father at the table, the tremors within Mindvoice almost tripled in power. King Leonidas was every bit as powerful as her grandmother... perhaps not as refined and subtle, but the power was within him. And Androcles Leonidas was not far behind at all.

They had been escorted here to this large room in the underground facility under heavy guard. Anthar and the other dragons were left in the comfortable hanger above them with ample food and water, something that Anthar was relishing Carisia could feel with some humor. She sat quietly as her grandmother and King Leonidas gazed at one another while aides from both sides ushered about handing out data pads and other items. Carisia sat next to Narice, and surprisingly she did not feel the same inbred hatred for Lycavorians emanating from her as she did from Dante and Javier, not to mention her mother and Robert Moran. She had been surprised that Isabella was here and now sat to the King's right. She was regarded as a High Traitor and had a death sentence on her head if she ever came into High Coven space. Just as her grandmother's son Vonis did. Carisia knew to even mention either of their names was an act punishable by several days in confinement at the very least. She also sensed it was rubbing her mother and grandmother the wrong way having Isabella present in the room; something that she noticed gave Isabella great joy if the smile on her face was any indication.

Carisia turned her head when the metallic clanging noise sounded from all around them and the older Lycavorian turned from the main door after entering a code.

"We're secure now Milord." Armetus spoke as he moved to the chair near the end of the table.

Martin nodded and sat back in his chair as his eyes remained on Aikiro. "Ok... you asked for this little soiree." He spoke. "Thrill me."

Yuri leaned forward and looked at him across the table. "There is still no diplomat in you whatsoever is there Martin?" She spoke.

Martin shook his head. "Diplomacy is overrated." Martin said. "I prefer straight talk. So now... why don't you tell me why you came all this way to ask me to train the dragons you took from us... so you can use them to fight the Kavalians?"

"Why do you assume this is what we want?" Aikiro asked evenly.

"I may be many things... stupid isn't one of them." Martin spoke in reply. "Your war with the Kavalians is an ongoing affair. You know how they are affected by dragons... and now that those dragons you kidnapped and stole are old enough to fight... you want to use them against the Kavalians. The only problem with that is you don't know how to employ them against the T19s that the Kavalians have been buying left and right in The Wilds. Without what we can teach your dragons, the first battle they go into will be their last."

"You seem to have it all worked out." Yuri said sarcastically.

"What we have worked out dear sister, is that your Immortals were caught conducting a black market arms deal in Union territory with Evolli mercenaries involving T19s. A weapon which has been banned within Lycavorian Union space ever since the end of the Evolli War." Isabella spoke now. "Have you not wondered why you have not heard from your detachment of Immortals?"

"We assumed they were lost." Aikiro stated evenly in reply though she was surprised the Immortals had chosen to conduct the exchange within Union space. "Your doing I take it?"

Martin met her eyes and shrugged. "Illegal weapons deals are frowned upon within the Union." He said matter of factly. "Maybe you can tell me why Aikiro, after twenty-five years of nothing, you suddenly decide to cross our border and conduct illegal weapons trading within our territory? Wouldn't that be considered an act of war?"

"You eliminated the Immortal detachment." Yuri snapped. "What does it matter now?"

Martin met her eyes. "It matters because I trust you about as far as I could spit!" Martin snarled. "And I can't spit half as far as I used to be able to! Give me a reason why I just don't tell you to go straight to hell and show you the door!"

"Because you seem to care more about the dragons that will go into battle than you do the men and women who will ride them." Aikiro stated.

Martin looked at her. "Well... you got something right at least." He answered. "If... and it's a big if... we agree to train your dragons, you need to show me something a lot more than the fact you're willing to violate Union territory and do illegal weapons deals. That doesn't take a whole lot of brains to do."

"We could have just launched an invasion across your borders." Dante spat from his seat next to Moran.

"Dante!" Yuri hissed. "Silence!" They turned to the sound of Andro's soft laughter and Dante glared at him.

"Do you find something amusing Lycavorian?" Dante asked.

Andro looked at him. "Do you by chance to stand up comedy?" Androcles asked. "Your statement just now was exceedingly funny."

Aikiro's eyes narrowed and she looked at Martin. "You are a very boorish man do you know that." She stated. "And your son seems to have inherited this nature from you."

Andro chuckled again. "Thank you for the compliment." He stated.

Martin snickered at Andro's response. "So I've been told Aikiro. So I've been told. Don't worry though; I don't intend to be swapping spit with you either lady." He stated as he sat far back in his chair and sighed.

"Listen to me. You don't like us... and I for damn sure don't like you. Any of you. However... we have had twenty-five years of relative peace between us. The reasons for that peace do not matter. Each of us has had our own problems to deal with. You more than me." He looked at Aikiro. "I trust the information I gave to Yuri at our last party helped you?"

Aikiro met his eyes. "Once we were able to stand and hold them... yes." Aikiro answered honestly. "Though I have always wondered why you did that. And why you took my son."

"You were going to kill Vonis!" Isabella hissed.

Aikiro nodded immediately. "Yes... more than likely. That however, that was not your concern. I understand he holds the rank of Colonel within your military now?"

Martin nodded. "Yup!" He replied. "He and Va'nimia got four little ones and one big one too." He said with a smile.

"So he took the elf female as his bride then?" Aikiro asked.

Isabella nodded. "They were joined in an elven ceremony six months after he decided to remain here. It was quite elegant actually. Va'nimia looked breathtaking."

"Does he know I am here?" Aikiro asked.

Martin nodded and met her gaze. "Yes... I believe his comment to me when I told him you would be visiting was... Martin Usstan inbal nau ssinssrin ulu kyorl nindel nalt'chaxxan rathpielch elg'caress rin'ov 'sohna." (I have no desire to see that murderous backstabbing bitch ever again.)

Aikiro smiled. "Yes... that does sound like Vonis. And your command of our ancient tongue is excellent."

Martin nodded. "The reasons for my action were not then and are not now your concern." He spoke. "Now... can we cut the bullshit and get to why you have come a hundred odd light years from High Coven space? I know it's not because you enjoy my charming company."

Aikiro sat back in her chair now. "No... it most certainly is not." She spoke with a smile of her own. "May Admiral Moran use your star chart?"

Martin turned to Moran. "Knock yourself out Robby." He spoke.

Moran got to his feet and moved to the large star chart. He took the data pad he extracted from his jacket and plugged it into the slot on the control panel. The holo image shifted to grainy images of a planet thick with jungle and vegetation.

"This is Yoimet." Moran spoke. "It's a Class Two Jungle planet teeming with wildlife and some rather nasty critters. We had a double agent in place among the KFI and..."

"Had?" Armetus interrupted.

Moran nodded. "He was discovered shortly after taking these images and executed." He spoke almost nonchalantly.

"And you made no attempt to retrieve or assist him?" Armetus asked.

"Yoimet is inside Kavalian space now." Moran answered. "It was one of the first planets they took from us due to its strategic placement along the border of The Wilds."

"That does not answer my question." Armetus spoke.

"What relevance does that have?" Aikiro asked.

Armetus looked at Martin and then turned to look at her. "It will help me to evaluate the information you are about to present to us." He answered.

"No!" Moran answered. "No attempt was made to retrieve or assist him. He was aware of the risks his duties could possibly bring down on him."

Armetus nodded his head. "Yes... I'm sure." He spoke. "Forgive me for interrupting you."

Moran turned back to the chart and holo images. "Yoimet was used as one of the primary staging bases for their second assault into High Coven territory, and it is also used as the main training facility for their cloned soldiers. This agent was in place among the High Coven personnel that defected to the KFI at the beginning of the war. He has been feeding us very useful information for the past twenty-two years and we have no reason to doubt the validity of his intelligence."

"No reason to doubt his reports aside from the fact that he is dead." Isabella spoke.

"His death and the information he sent to us... this information... that is the reason we are here!" Moran snapped.

"All I see so far is a lot of green jungle." Martin spoke calmly.

Moran adjusted the screen and the next four images showed the training process the Kavalian clones were undergoing. It was detailed and meticulous with not only weapons training, but also long hours in front of computer monitors studying defensive tactics. Moran moved to the other side of the chart and pointed to the large Kavalian in the background. "This is their Chief Instructor. His name is Girruan'Sitti. He is a survivor of both the conflict against the Lycavorian Union nearly a thousand years ago and their war with the High Coven fifty years later. He holds no love for either of us." The image changed to this Girruan meeting with Keleru and Pusintin on a corridor walkway above the training area. "I'm sure you are all aware of who these two men are. Prefect Keleru and Marshall Pusintin."

"Marshall?" Martin spoke softly. "He promoted himself. Isn't that nice?"

Moran turned and looked at Aikiro and Yuri quickly. Aikiro turned her eyes on Martin from across the table. "You are familiar with him I take it?"

Martin nodded. "All too familiar."

"Forgive me for asking... but there was a great deal of confused reports coming out of Union territory in regards to a battle you fought with this Lycavorian when they came to collect the soldiers you imprisoned." Aikiro said. "Perhaps you could share what significance this man has?"

"He has no significance." Martin spoke firmly. "He's a traitor to his own people who fought against us and you."

“But who is he?” Aikiro asked. “For he is certainly not Kavalian.”

Martin smiled and looked at Yuri from across the table. “He’s my brother Pleistarchus.”

Yuri’s eyes grew huge and she looked at the image on the chart before turning back to Martin. “That’s impossible!” She snapped. “He was killed over three thousand years ago! We confirmed this with DNA scans!”

Martin nodded. “You sure did. The only problem with that is your buddy Maruad was also working for the Kavalians at the time.”

“Maruad?” Yuri exclaimed.

Martin nodded. “While he was killing his own people for you on Earth, he was feeding the Kavalians information about your cloning process and whatever else he could obtain about you. Working both sides of the slice of bread so to speak.”

“Me?” Yuri asked.

Armetus nodded from his chair. “You were the main target of three diverse assassination attempts contracted for by the Kavalians. Maruad was in fact the one who revealed yours and Yuriko’s identity to the Japanese government ten years after you became part of their Genome program. We discovered this information when he was captured along with the Kavalians trying to steal dragon eggs from Earth.”

“Maruad was the one who switched the DNA scans of the unit you sent after Pleistarchus. He switched them before your follow on team showed up.” Martin spoke. “Pretty slick move if you ask me. The Kavalians had a hit team here as well, the same time you sent your people after Pleistarchus in 458 B.C. and instead of carrying out their mission to kill you, they killed your assassination team and made it seem like you completed your goal of killing Pleistarchus. He was injured... but they took him off world and he was adopted by a Kavalian. It seems you did not have as tight a grip on this planet as you thought.”

“Apparently not.” Yuri said.

“Can I infer from the tone of your voice that you and your brother do not see eye to eye?” Aikiro asked.

Martin met her gaze. “You can infer whatever you like.” He spoke. “But we were talking about your information here.”

Aikiro held his gaze for a moment longer and nodded. “Indeed we were.” She said. She looked at Moran. “You may continue Robert.”

Moran nodded and turned back to the images. “This meeting took place three months ago.” He spoke again. “Shortly after this meeting... Kavalian Heavy Transports began shuttling large numbers of their biogenic troops to Uirmeik. If I’m not mistaken Uirmeik is only three light years from your border with the KFI.” Moran shifted the images once more. “These images you see are from Uirmeik.”

The room was silent as everyone stared at the screen. There was no mistaking the varied equipment and troops as well as the hover tanks and other numerous articles of war. Moran lifted the second data pad he held. “We estimate sixteen million ground troops have been moved to Uirmeik. They include several divisions of armor and ground based plasma batteries. These biogenic clones are their latest version and they have a life cycle of ten years. Our information indicates that they are eighty-four percent complete with their preparations for another invasion into High Coven space. They’ve never exceeded twenty million cloned troops because they’ve never had the officers to lead them. Apparently twenty-five years has given them the opportunity to have more children, and since Kavalians go from birth to adulthood in a little more than four years, they now have the officers to lead the cloned troops. So they made more of them.” Moran adjusted the image again and the holographic projection of the computer monitor came up with a list of names. “Our agent was also able to obtain this from their data banks before he was discovered. It is a list of planets and cities within Union Space. We can only assume these will be their targets.” Moran turned to look at Martin. “So you see... it appears their intention is to hit us both at the same time and keep us from helping each other.”

Martin looked at him. “It appears.” He said.

Moran nodded. “This intelligence is available for you to review and authenticate as much as you like.” He spoke. “Our best estimates say we have at least fourteen months before they hit us... more than likely closer to eighteen.” Moran returned to his chair and looked at Martin. “In eighteen months... whether you want to or not, you will be involved in this war.”

Aikiro looked at him now. “Now you know why we have come to you.” She said calmly. “This information will provide you the time to prepare for these animals to come pouring across your borders just as they did ours. In your one battle with them, you defeated a force of twenty-five thousand of these clones with only five thousand of your Spartans and a hundred dragons from your Mjolnir's Hand. All I am asking is that you give our forty-three dragons the same training you give your forces so that we can use them as effectively as you did. Do whatever it is you do, use whatever machines you use, to increase their Mindvoice capabilities and allow them to do what they do."

Martin looked at her. "Machines?" He spoke. "What machines? You can't increase Mindvoice abilities with a fucking machine! You more than anyone should know that."

"It's possible to transfer small portions of Mindvoice power to others!" Aikiro said. "That is what you have done isn't it?"

"No." Martin replied quickly. "We've accomplished what we've done with training and meditation."

"I know that you have an intact Mindvoice ship on Earth." Aikiro said. "I was under the impression you were using something you discovered in this ship to increase the abilities of your people so that they could bond with dragons."

"Well... your impression would be wrong." Martin spoke sitting back in his chair. "That is not how it works. I want me and my people to go over this information before we go any further."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes... I gathered you would." She spoke. "I assume we will be confined to this base for the duration of our stay?"

Isabella laughed. "We are not like you." She spoke. "Arrangements have been made for you to stay in Sparta at a small establishment. You will not be confined as you say. You will be free to go anywhere tourists are allowed within the city, which is most places."

Yuri looked surprised. "No guards?"

"Do you need them?" Isabella asked with a grin. "Your High Coven uniforms will remain in this facility and you will use civilian clothes. There are many vampires that call Sparta home and you will just be additional tourists here for sight seeing."

"You will let us roam your city freely?" Aikiro asked.

Martin nodded. "Every one of your people will be tracked. You won't know where they are, or who they are, but you will be watched. You will return to the establishment we are allowing you to stay at every evening by midnight. If one of you misses that and happens to wander off somewhere, all of you will be confined to the prison until that person or persons is found and then I will put you all back on your ship and kick your asses out of my Union. The chips will fall where they will after that. Besides... if your people get out of hand or do something to insult someone in this city, more than likely you'll get your asses handed to you."

"And you will of course do nothing about that should it happen?" Aikiro said.

"Why would I?" Martin said getting to his feet.

"Is there anything else?" Aikiro asked.

Martin nodded. "Don't fuck with me Aikiro." He said sternly. "I allowed you to come here knowing you are a back stabbing bitch just like Vonis said. If you fuck with me... you will never leave this planet alive."

CHAPTER SIX

GALLAIS'S LODGE

Tesand lowered the portable sensor device and turned to Aikiro and Yuri who stood by the doors onto the balcony looking through the glass out onto the city of Sparta. "Well... unless they have developed something our instruments can't detect, which based on what we've seen so far is entirely possible, the rooms are clean of anything we can pick up."

Aikiro nodded slowly. "They were able to intercept our communications somehow. And we did not detect their shrouded ships until they wanted us too. They have obviously developed new technology from the Mindvoice ship that we do not have." She spoke calmly. "I suggest we do not underestimate what they are capable of."

Tesand met her eyes. "I agree. I'll set up the psychic dampeners and activate the sensor jammers." He spoke as he headed into the adjoining room.

Yuri watched him for a moment and then turned to look at her mother with a grin. "He is very protective of you mother." She spoke.

Aikiro met her daughter's eyes and nodded slowly with her own smile. "Yes... in twenty-five years Yuri, he has shown me more attention than you father did in over thirteen thousand. I have grown to enjoy his company and his attentions far more than he realizes." Aikiro smirked. "Far more than I have allowed him to see anyway, something I must learn to show to him. Besides... he is far more skilled in our bed and he has tasted my blood many more times than your father ever did. He feasts on me like it is his last meal at times." Aikiro smiled at the memories. "He has encouraged my more suppressed tendencies to come out. Much the same as Robert has with you Yuri. It has allowed me to be more open minded towards many things... and not just sexually."

"That is something that many have noticed mother." Yuri spoke softly. "Though... to be honest, I am surprised you allow that pureblood female in your bed. That is something that I have never understood or expected from you."

Aikiro chuckled softly. "Toria Dellion you mean? Well... never let it be said I am against experimentation and surprisingly she is quite skilled in that regard. That was my idea as well, not Tesand's in case you were wondering. You should try it sometime. I was pleasantly astonished myself."

Yuri shook her head quickly. "Robert is more than I need." She replied. "That has never interested me to be honest."

"It does require a certain taste I suppose." Aikiro spoke.

Yuri nodded and moved to open the balcony doors, the smell of flowers and pine trees filtering into the room. They stepped onto the balcony and looked out over the city, hundreds of men, women and children moving about the streets below, either shopping or sitting at the cafés that dotted the stretch of esplanade they could see.

Yuri shook her head. "Sparta?" She spoke softly. "After all the times through the years that we tried to destroy this city by brute force or subterfuge and still it stands. This cursed place just will not die."

"Much like the bloodline of Leonidas it seems." Aikiro spoke coming up next to her by the railing.

"What do you think of his reaction?" Yuri asked as she looked at her. "Were you able to sense anything from him?"

Aikiro shook her head. "His Mindvoice shields are equal in power to my own, as are those of his son." She replied. "His son will one day equal or surpass him in abilities if what I sensed in him was accurate. He is also very perceptive as well. He knows he can't match me in terms of abilities. At least not now. Like his father, his strength right now lies towards using his Mindvoice skills to augment his physical abilities, which are already very considerable if my judgment is correct. That is why he said what he did on the airfield. He was very correct in reminding me that we would not last more than an hour if we had concealed motives or were to attempt something nefarious. I could have probed Isabella perhaps... but as I said she has become more powerful than we had first anticipated, much like you have daughter. She would not have been able to stop an intrusion... but she would have detected it easily enough."

Yuri nodded slowly. "It seems bonding with a dragon has its disadvantages as well." She said.

"What do you mean?"

"It creates Mindvoice shields that are naturally more potent than normal." Yuri answered. "I believe that is why we can not penetrate Carisia and Anthar's shields. I did not believe Vavant's bloodline had any skill in this regard."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes... singly they were both quite commanding... together however it would be suicide to try such a thing." She answered. "I would need at least a week of total uninterrupted exploration with both of them sedated to figure out a way past the defenses they have in place. I had Vavant's father tested several years after Robert disposed of Vavant. He was unaware of it of course, but the potential in him was there had your father chosen to utilize such things. Of course he did not, and while those we have trained in such ways are more than in the past, their numbers do not equal what is within the Union. Leonidas, his Queens and their First Oracle have been actively training those who show great potential within Mindvoice. Vavant no doubt passed these skills to Carisia within her blood. When coupled with your blood... she is exceedingly more powerful than we first thought, even more so since she bonded with Anthar."

“Thast will keep her on a short leash.” Yuri spoke cruelly. “He is a vile brute... but he is very proficient in making sure she is never very far from him. And I believe she is afraid of him in some fashion.”

“Afraid of him?” Aikiro asked surprised. “She could snap him into pieces before he knew what hit him if it is as I believe. The Immortals who I had train her went far beyond what my original intent was to be. Why would she be afraid of him?”

Yuri shrugged. “Some sort of inbred female intuition perhaps. Something... some inbred weakness from Vavant’s side of the family no doubt. It is no matter... Thast will go wherever she goes and she hates that.”

Aikiro chuckled. “You enjoy torturing her don’t you Yuri?” She looked out over the city. “I admit... I was confused as to why Robert gave her his name as you have with your own children, but then I saw the larger picture when you promised her hand to Thast. It was a shrewd political move on both your parts.”

“That was entirely Robert’s idea.” Yuri replied. “I was livid with him until he explained to me his reasoning.”

Aikiro nodded. “Speaking of which, I don’t want the others going very far.” Aikiro spoke. “They may have given us free reign to go where we will in this city, but that is a ruse. We will be watched yes, but he wants us to do something stupid I believe. That we can not afford.”

“It will look odd if we confine everyone to their rooms and this establishment mother.” Yuri spoke looking at her. “Then it will appear we are plotting something. We do not want to draw too much attention to ourselves by remaining locked up. They will assume that our information is false and try even harder to discredit it. We should let the others explore to a degree. They might be able to offhandedly gather important intelligence. You and I are known... they are not.”

Aikiro met her eyes and nodded. “Then they go all together.” She said. “We are among our enemies here and I want no one left to fend for themselves. There are enough places just that we can see from here that will fit all of them. At least for now.”

They turned when the chime on the main door buzzed. Yuri looked at her mother before moving across the expanse of the large room and going to the door. She passed her hand over the scanner and it slid aside to reveal the older Lycavorian woman and a single Spartan soldier holding two small metal cases.

“Yes.” Yuri spoke trying to keep her voice neutral.

Gallais stared at the Yuri for a long moment then motioned with her hand to the single soldier standing next to her. “King Leonidas asked that I make sure you were given some of the brochures of Sparta our city and this.” She said holding out the small stack of credit chips.

Yuri took the stack and looked at her. “What is this?”

Gallais smiled at her. “Ten thousand credit Riyal payment chips.” She spoke allowing her naturally affable nature to come out now. “Everything within Sparta is reasonably priced and those chips should last a few days. My lodge here doesn’t have a restaurant inside, so you will have to move among the streets until you find something you like to eat.”

“This is your establishment?” Aikiro asked from behind Yuri.

Gallais nodded. “Yes. Mine and my mate.”

“We have our own credit chips.” Yuri spoke turning to look at her mother quickly and then back to Gallais.

Gallais nodded slowly. “Yes... I’m sure you do. However High Coven credit chips are practically worthless in the Lycavorian Union, and King Leonidas said this will save possible confrontations that could come about if you begin flashing High Coven credits in Sparta.”

Aikiro stepped forward. “He told us there would be no such issues.” She spoke.

Gallais nodded. “Yes he did... however the King can not be in all places all of the time, as much as he likes to think he can. He can not control young Spartans who have had too much Spartan Wine after a long day of training and who might let their mouths overload their brains. You will find the vast majority of the people in our city are very friendly and open. Just do not advertise you are from the High Coven for there is still bad blood among others.”

“You are protecting us?” Yuri asked.

Gallais shook her head with a smile. “Not at all. I’m protecting my people. I would prefer not to have a friend of mine or a young Spartan soldier and his friends put on trial for killing one of your people in a drunken fight.” Gallais turned and held out her hand for one of the cases the soldier held. He set it in her arms and opened it and Gallais turned back to Yuri.

Aligned in the case were four cylinders of cloned blood; that much Yuri could tell right away.

“I assume you brought your own.” Gallais spoke. “However... we do not stock supplies of fresh blood in Sparta. This is what we use for our vampire friends and family. Queen Anja developed it originally and it has been improved over the years. It is preferred among those who need it now. It is readily available and if you run out or get low I can provide you with more.” She closed the case and gave it back to the soldier who then placed them on the floor to the right of the door. Gallais turned to back to look at Yuri and Aikiro. “There are two excellent cafés just down the street within walking distance. If you prefer something larger, I own a hefty establishment only two blocks west of here called Gallais’s Retreat. You will find yourselves welcome there and all the food is made fresh and it is of a wide variety. The King’s family is frequent visitors.”

“You speak as if you know King Leonidas quite well madam.” Aikiro asked stepping closer now.

Gallais nodded. “Yes I do. My son is Star Colonel Isra of Mjolnir’s Hand.” She replied. “They have had some rather interesting adventures together.”

“Chetak’s son?” Yuri asked.

Gallais met her eyes sternly. “I see you are well prepared when it comes to knowing who your potential enemies are Princess Yuri.” She said. “Yes... Isra is Chetak’s youngest son... however my former mate’s name is now used as one of the vilest curses in our language... I would recommend you do not mention his name in public. You will find you don’t like the reaction you get.”

“I understand your son is mated to Tarifa and Aihola.” Yuri said ignoring her warning. “Your own Netnews channels are very informative.”

Gallais nodded once more. “Yes... I’m sure they are. And yes he is. Please... enjoy your stay in Sparta. If I can be of any service to you don’t hesitate to contact me. My COM channel is on the brochures.”

Gallais turned quickly and exited the room after the soldier and Yuri waited until the door slid shut and locked before turning back to face her mother.

Aikiro smiled. “How convenient that the establishment he reserves for us is owned by the mother of one of his senior dragon riders.” She said. “Everything she told us is the truth. Her shields are rudimentary and I was able to probe her surface thoughts.”

“So she doesn’t work for this Armetus?” Yuri asked.

Aikiro shook her head. “Unlikely. She is a simple woman.”

Yuri lifted the case that held the cloned blood and set it on the table, opening it and removing one of the containers. “I will have this examined before we destroy it.” She spoke. “I would not put it past Martin Leonidas to try to poison us.”

Aikiro nodded and looked at her. “Yuri... Leonidas’s son Androcles... his dragon spoke of something called a Talon Guardian. He referred to himself and his dragon using this term. What is that?”

Yuri turned and looked at her shaking her head. “I don’t know. I’ve never heard the term before.”

“Well it elicited a very profound reaction in our dragons.” Aikiro said. “See if Vollenth or one of the others knows what it means.”

Yuri nodded. “I will contact him now.” She said.

Aikiro shook her head. “No... ask him in person. Tesand may have found nothing our instruments can detect, but like Leonidas... I don’t trust him anymore than he trusts us.”

Yuri nodded. “Of course.” She spoke.

“Once you have done that have everyone meet downstairs and we will decide who will go where and to what establishment. This Gallais’s Retreat is probably not someplace you or I should go, but it might be fine for the younger ones.” Aikiro spoke. “Being on this planet has suddenly made me very hungry.”

Yuri nodded. “It was like that for me as well when I was here. I was told it has something to do with the nitrogen in the atmosphere. How soon do you think he will inform us of his decision?”

Aikiro smiled. “Yuri... his decision has already been made.” She said. “He cares deeply for the dragons and the dragons alone. He has already decided that they will train them. And that is why Vollenth needs to be on his best behavior. No more incidents like when we arrived. Leonidas’s son was right... if things get out of hand we will all die on this planet. I don’t know for sure... but I sense there are far more of these so called Bonded Pairs here on Earth then we have been lead to believe. We need to tread carefully until we know we will be staying and then we can begin to implement our separate tasks.”

Yuri nodded. “I will let everyone know.” She said. “We’ll meet you downstairs in an hour.”

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Did you see her Carisia my sister?] Anthar exclaimed loudly within Mindvoice. [She was beautiful! Her scales were so smooth and she is so muscular! And the way she handled Vollenth? That was priceless!]

Carisia chuckled out loud as she moved along Anthar’s own muscled side, slowly using the rough sided brush to run along his sides and back where the saddled covered his scales. The brush removed the dried and dead scales that the harshly made saddles killed whenever he wore it. Anthar, Deneth, Marux, Naruth, Seyra and Vollenth occupied the immense dragon stable in the rear of the lodge they were staying at. It had two dozen separate pens inside the warmth of the building, with fresh hay and an abundance of water from the small man made stream that flowed through the center of the stable. There were several large containers along the sides of the stable that were refrigeration units of sorts and each one of them was stocked to overflowing with large slabs of beef.

[I saw her Anthar!] Carisia answered with a smile. [Was she just how you pictured her in your dreams?]

Anthar turned his large head and looked at her diminutive form as she brushed him intently. [Forgive me Carisia.]

Carisia stopped brushing his cerise colored scales and met his magenta eyes. [Forgive you for what?] [I have been talking of her for over an hour.] Anthar replied. He blinked several times. [Was he how you have pictured him?]

[Who?] Carisia asked.

[Blue eyes.]

Carisia couldn’t meet her bond mate’s eyes and she lowered her head embarrassed by her reaction as she remembered it. [His... his eyes were so much brighter Anthar. And he was larger than I imagined. Taller and broader.]

[He trembled with power Carisia. She did as well.] Anthar spoke. [And everyone is taller than you sister.] He replied jokingly as he moved his head back and nudged her in the shoulder gently.

Carisia laughed as she relaxed more. [Thank you so much for reminding me brother.]

The stable was empty of people except for Narice with Deneth at the far end. None of the other dragons particularly like Anthar, and they always made it a point to remain away from him whenever they could. Well except for Deneth who was just plain introverted. Anthar had grown to accept it for what it was. Naruth, Seyra and Marux would never be like him and they sat in a small circle with Vollenth. They had grown nearly as twisted as Dante, Javier and Lucia in their actions, and Vollenth was just plain insane as far as Anthar was concerned. Deneth seemed to be the only normal one among the group outside of him, but he was very private and kept to himself. Vollenth had once attempted to assert his dominance over Deneth and they had witnessed just how strong Deneth was then. He had thoroughly beaten Vollenth down, which only served to cause a deep divide between them. It was only made worse when the following year Vollenth had attempted the same thing with Anthar. The result was the same... a vicious fight between two dragons that Anthar won handily due to his strength, size and own Mindvoice abilities. Vollenth was able to dominate Marux and the others easily, to include the rest of the forty-three dragons within their small group, but Deneth and Anthar remained outside of his influence and that had always bothered him greatly.

Dante, Javier and Lucia did not treat their bond mates as Carisia did him. They left it to others to care for their dragons, while Carisia spent hours brushing his scales as she did now, even filing his talons when they became too long. She had no misgivings about checking his teeth and attempting to find ways to maintain his health and even try and get him different kinds of food. He had seen Narice doing many of the same things with Deneth, but because they hardly ever spoke to anyone, Anthar did not know if that signified they were more like him and Carisia or more like Vollenth and Yuri.

Anthar had seen dragons in the sky above them that were too numerous to count as they were coming here. It was a sight he was not used too and he found it awe inspiring. The men and women who called this place home did not shy away from him and the others as they did on Usu'Ozeib or Nuwaroa, many of them not even pausing in what they were doing as the six dragons passed them by. As they were escorted here, walking among the busy streets, he even saw dozens of dragons moving about the streets. Most of them appeared to be remaining close to certain men or women; obviously their Bonded Pairs but they walked the walkways and paths freely and no one questioned them.

[How long do we wait Carisia?] Anthar asked.

Carisia continued to brush him but looked at where Vollenth and the others sat. [We will wait until we find out what King Leonidas's decision is.] She replied. [If he refuses then we will act before we leave. If he agrees... then we can act when we are being trained. We must be very careful Anthar.]

[Yes I know.] He answered. [Do you think they will allow us to go out among the city?]

[I hope so.] Carisia answered. [It is so much brighter here. Did you see the people on the streets? Laughing and children playing? It was incredible.]

[Do not forget the dragons in the sky.] Anthar spoke. [I never believed I would see so many. So many colors and different breeds.]

[I know. It's incredible.] Carisia said.

[Carisia... do you think...] Anthar's eyes focused on his bonded sister.

[I don't know Anthar.] Carisia spoke lowering the brush and moving to where he lowered his head close to her. She reached up and stroked his scales along his eye socket as she knew he liked so much. [If it is possible... we will discover this. I give you my word.]

[Happiness and peace are not easy to discover are they sister?] He asked.

Carisia shook her head with a smile. [No they are not.]

[We will succeed Carisia. We will succeed and we will find what we seek.] Anthar said confidently.

Carisia met his eyes and for the first time since they had hatched their plan she smiled just as confidently. [Yes we will Anthar. Yes we will. You have to remain here for now, but I will try and bring something back for you.]

[I understand.] He replied. [Be cautious out there sister.]

SPARTAN SECURE SENATE CHAMBERS SPARTA

“Ok... I'm open to comments and ideas.” Martin spoke as he sipped the large mug of Aricia's coffee. “Let's hear them.”

The Secure Senate Chambers, or SSC as it was called by the Durcunusaan, was nothing more than a large lounge with an enormous table and perhaps forty chairs at the table and along the walls. It was very similar to the room in Eden City's Command center. Completely secure against electronic and psychic intrusion. The Durcunusaan joked that it was so secure only the gods had keys to get into it. In this room Martin expected everyone to be themselves. There was no formality in the least. All rank was left outside and those who were allowed into this room were considered the foremost family and friends of the Royal family as well as the movers and shakers of the Union. A much larger room had been built into the Senate Chambers on Apo Prime and of the trillions of sentient lifeforms that called the Lycavorian Union home, less than a quarter of one percent of that population would ever see the inside of one of these three rooms in the Union.

“Take the dragons they came here with and send the rest of them packing.” The male voice spoke.

The two dozen heads, male and female, turned to look at Vonis where he leaned against the wall.

Star Colonel Vonis, son of the now dead Veldruk and Aikiro and half brother to Isabella. An imposing figure for a pureblood vampire, much larger than his father ever was, and a man who for the last twenty-five years had worked tirelessly in the field of protecting this Union he had come to love and call home. A trained assassin and high level Intelligence Agent of the Venorik Elghinn, the High Coven's dreaded intelligence service, Vonis was a man who knew death intimately. A man who had come into the Lycavorian Union those twenty-five years ago bent on killing Isabella and destroying the peace and serenity that every vampire that called the Union home had gained. A man who had taken an elf female to be his sexual plaything while he was on Elear attempting to complete these missions. A man who had fallen head over heels in love with the dark haired, blue eyed elven female who had given him so much and asked for nothing in return.

Vonis remembered that day as if it was yesterday. Standing next to King Leonidas and turning to see Va'nimia standing by the ramp of a STRIKER. Tears clouded her eyes as he was about to be turned over to Yuri and his mother and would no doubt be executed for his actions. Executed for discovering he had a heart and that heart had been possessed by the elven beauty. Vonis remembered the King's words to him that day vividly.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [All you need do is turn and grasp the future Vonis.] Martin's voice burst into his head and his wide eyes turned back to him in shock. He had brushed aside his Mindvoice Shields as if they weren't even there. [I have lived my life by one primary rule Vonis. Never fear the unknown, for it could bring wonders you can not imagine. You took the first step when you discovered Va'nimia, now embrace the unknown and move forward. You will not be questioned or harassed in any way. On that you have my word as King. You can have a future with a woman who loves you Vonis. A woman you love as well if only you will allow what I can smell you feel for her to come out.]

[I will be hunted. I will never be at peace.] Vonis spoke tentatively.

[You let me worry about that. She carries your son you know.] Martin lifted his hand. [And she asked me to give you this.]

Vonis looked down and saw the necklace he had given to her those long weeks ago. He lifted it from Martin's hand as Yuri looked on in confusion. She could feel the tremors within Mindvoice, but the shields guarding that conversation were more powerful than any she had felt except for her mother.

[Your decision right now will not affect just one life, but three lives. Do you love her enough to reach past what you fear? You are Isabella's sister... and she was right when she told me you are not like your father and Yuri. Prove to me Bella is right about that Vonis and I will protect you myself if I have too.]

[And you will want nothing in return?]

Martin smiled at him. [I have Isabella's love. Whatever information you have in your head Vonis is not more important to me than that.]

Vonis had done just that.

He had grabbed at the unknown and held on tight, never once looking back. It had not been easy at first he admitted to himself. Isabella's guidance and support and Va'nimia's unwavering love for him had been all he needed to get past what he had lived nearly fifteen hundred years believing. The birth of their first child had been the catalyst for Vonis slamming that door shut and forever sealing that part of his life away. Never to be reopened again. He loved Va'nimia just as much, if not more now, than he did back then. She had given him five beautiful children over the course of the years, two proud sons and three equally proud and exceptionally beautiful daughters.

Five years after that fateful day, Vonis had walked into Armetus's office and asked for a job. Martin Leonidas had kept his word to him, and never once in that five year period had Vonis been detained or questioned about anything in regard to the High Coven. That had sealed Vonis ultimate loyalty to him and the Union for all time.

Martin chuckled from his chair and leaned back. "Let it rip Vonis." He spoke.

"They can not be trusted in anything they do or say." Vonis pushed off the wall and moved closer to the table. "I know that more than anyone in this room. Take the dragons they have come here with... they were citizens of the Union before being torn from us by my mother and her henchmen. Take them back now and tell my mother and Yuri to go suck a very large Kremchak viper egg!"

That brought laughter from everyone in the room for it was well known the Kremchak Viper was almost as poisonous as a Rock Spider, and the eggs were coated with a viscous fluid that was considered just as lethal.

"As much as I would enjoy doing just what Vonis suggests... that is not something we can do now." Arzoal's soft voice filled the room from the where she was in the Dragon Cave on the island of Sardinia.

It was a unique technological development that Avi, the Mindvoice ship's avatar, had designed and implemented for them on Elear, Earth and Apo Prime. There were dozens of extremely powerful Mindvoice generators scattered all over the City Ship that were sitting idle and unused. These generators when tuned correctly were actually able to turn Arzoal's thoughts into words and almost exactly match how her voice sounded when she spoke within someone's mind.

Andro nodded from where he sat next to Moneus and Isra. "The Elder Mother is correct. These dragons have bonded to those who ride them. We can't separate them now. It would be like taking a beloved sibling from them."

"They are bonded that deeply with these dragons?" Dilios asked from his chair between Tarifa and Aihola.

Martin nodded. "Arzoal, Andro and I have been feeling the tremors within Mindvoice ever since they arrived. These are not simple and random pairings. They have bonded to the dragons, perhaps not on as large a scale as our own Bonded Pairs, but it is not something that has been forced."

"What about the intelligence they gave us?" Deia asked. She and Vonis had remained out of the initial meeting and monitored the entire affair from a heavily fortified and hidden room within the base in case it had been some sort of elaborate attempt to assassinate Martin and the others. "Armetus... can it be vetted?"

Armetus looked at Martin. "I've already put out word to our people and agents in The Wilds Martin." He answered. "Confirming the movement of these ships should be easy enough. Confirming the actual existence of these Kavalian forces and their intent is another matter. I'm assuming we don't want to contact them and ask them if they plan to invade the Union, so other means need to be employed."

"Which leads me to the next question?" Deia said. "How far do we go to find out if this is true?"

"As far as needed." Riall spoke now. "Let's assume these numbers are accurate for a moment. Sixteen million ground troops and the ships to support them. We have to assume they have learned from fighting us twenty years ago in that one battle, just as we learned from them. They would outnumber us perhaps three or four to one... and while that alone does not frighten me completely, the massive loss of civilian life does. Our forces could stand toe to toe with the Kavalians and win even with those odds, but the cost in innocent life and infrastructure damage would be... it would be..."

"Incalculable." Tarifa answered.

Riall nodded. "An excellent analogy... and completely accurate I'm afraid."

"Assuming this information is accurate," Isra said. "How much do we teach the Coven dragons?"

What choice are we left with? Arzoal spoke. We will need to teach them everything we can in as little time as we can. What has taken you, Martin, Andro and the others years to master Isra, we will need to teach them in months.

Martin turned to Armetus. "Anton and Cihera get off?"

Armetus nodded. "Lynwe and Layna were seeing them to their jump off point and then returning. They'll be back sometime tomorrow evening."

"As soon as she gets back I want to meet with Lynwe and you Aihola." Martin spoke turning to look at her amber eyes. "Danny and I have some ideas we want to run by you, her and Vengal together. If we do this... I need the best small unit operations people I have putting this operation together."

Aihola nodded instantly. "I'll set it up."

"So we are going to help them?" Panos asked.

"Like Arzoal, I don't see as we have any choice." Martin said his eyes sweeping those in the room and seeing no one disagreeing with him. "We can't just dismiss this intelligence." He turned to Vonis. "Can we?"

Vonis shook his head slowly. "As much as I would like to say yes, no we can not. For my mother to come here herself and present it... it is either very real or it is an elaborate hoax to get us into the war on their side because they are frightened of the next KFI invasion."

"They have a right to be frightened if what they have shown us is accurate. The KFI has had ten years to build their forces." Riall said.

"Armetus... I want whatever you can get on the KFI." Martin spoke calmly. "Discretely of course. Unleash your people my friend... but tell them to be subtle."

Armetus chuckled. "My people are always discrete Martin."

"Ok... Tenna what about a reason why they are here?" Martin asked. "We can't keep them locked away at Gallais's Lodge the whole time. And we'll need to move them out of Sparta eventually to someplace less conspicuous."

“We announce officially that after twenty-five years of relative peace we are signing a cease fire with the High Coven.” Deia spoke. “The Senate has already ratified that as you know Mandri. And it will cover us in the public forum as well. We make it clear that we are not forming an alliance or anything remotely like that. Only that an official ceasefire signing is long overdue.”

“The Kavalians won’t like it.” Tarifa spoke now. “I’m sure your brother will scream to the heavens about it.” She said looking at Martin.

Martin shrugged. “Let him.”

“Do we announce that we are training their dragons as well?” Deia asked.

That would not be wise at the moment. Arzoal broke in. We can hide their number among those already here on Earth, shield them so to speak. If we announce it publicly it will cause too much attention and ultimately lead us to admitting we are training them to fight the Kavalians. That is not something we want to do is it?

Andro looked at his father. “Give them to me father.” He spoke. “The new base in the southern hemisphere is complete. It is remote... completely secure and has everything we will need.” He said. “It is central to the different environments we will use and King Anotan of the Moon Elves has relocated all of his people from the north to this area of the planet. He even built their largest city only three kilometers from the base. And you know how he fawns over the dragons of Earth.”

I agree. Arzoal said. The training should be conducted by a Talon Guardian since we can not do it openly. You can not be seen doing this Martin for it would certainly mean trouble and political unrest wouldn’t it Deia?

Deia nodded. “Without question.”

Anotan is a dear friend of dragons and will protect us all. Arzoal spoke. It is a sound decision.

Martin nodded. “Ok... I’m game for that. Now the question is... when do we tell them?”

“The State Dinner is tomorrow evening.” Deia spoke. “I suggest we meet with them in later this evening or in the morning. The sooner we give them an answer the more they will think we believe them completely. We can even invite them to the State Dinner to put forth a façade of faith in what they have shown us.”

Vonis laughed from where he stood. “Deia... my mother would be proud. You are nearly as devious as she is.”

Deia grinned. “Well... I haven’t been in politics for three thousand years and learned nothing. And until we can confirm the content of the intelligence they gave us, I’m not willing to trust them any further than Martin can spit, as he is so fond of saying.”

“Martin... two last questions.” Armetus spoke. “What if this information turns out to be completely accurate and true?”

“Ask me that when we know for certain about that.” Martin said in reply. “I don’t know what we will do because I damn sure have no desire to go to war.”

Everyone in the room nodded in agreement and while they all knew that Martin’s public persona was one of toughness and never backing down; he no more wanted war and death than the next person. He would not allow the Union or its people to be harmed in any way, and given the necessity he would never retreat and most certainly never surrender as Spartan law dictated, but he did not go out of his way to seek conflict.

“What’s the second question?” Martin spoke.

“Then what do we do if this is all a big deception as Vonis suggests is a possibility?” Armetus asked.

Martin met his eyes. “Then we will do what Vonis suggested initially.” He answered instantly. “We’ll take the dragons and send Aikiro and those with her packing.”

“And if the dragons and riders refuse?” Armetus asked softly.

We can not allow them to return. Arzoal spoke softly. They would breed, and they do not have the checks and balances we do when it comes to mating. In another three or four century, without proper precautions and education, we would only have to face them again. This time in battle, for I do not trust the High Coven anymore than Martin or Vonis. Arzoal sighed heavily. If they refuse... if they refuse then they must die.

THE WILDS

Esther hated coming here.

Jagaliu was a central hub of trading and commerce in The Wilds, but it also was a haven for those who preyed on the weak. They had been coming here for almost twenty years to trade what they mined for goods and any new technology that had made its way into The Wilds. Many of the merchants knew Esther well, and while she drove a hard bargain and always traveled with Immortals, she negotiated fairly with everyone and both parties went away profiting from the deals she had worked out. The first two or three times she had come here Cha'talla had been with her. Her beauty always attracted the bad apples, and Cha'talla was very possessive of his pureblood wife. He hadn't killed anyone, but there were several men who had paid the price of pain for their unwanted attentions. Esther Saira had taken to dressing as inconspicuously as possible, and most definitely never wearing any kind of makeup or perfume. She knew her looks and figure drew attentions from many species, but she was utterly in love with her Immortal husband and had not even the slightest desire to even look at any other males. She herself had painfully made that very clear for two men who had attempted to force their will upon her. Esther may have been incredibly beautiful, but she was still a pureblood vampire. A pureblood vampire with an Immortal husband who had only added to her already lethal skills. Esther was more than capable of taking care of herself, and Cha'talla had stopped coming on this expeditions because he knew his wife loved only him, and was perhaps one of the most lethal females he had ever known.

Esther smiled at the older Limian female as she came into the large trading business. The Limian husband and wife had come here into The Wilds hoping to strike it rich decades ago, and instead had discovered they had a knack for running this type of business. Now they traded in everything from undergarments to ship parts, and it was with them that Esther did most of their transactions. They were like her in that they were firm but fair in their dealings and they had an excellent reputation throughout The Wilds as the ones to come too when something was truly needed.

Esther motioned to Tir'ut, Fash'ka and Ja'narie as they split up in different directions within the business. It was three levels of merchandise and almost like a warehouse in the way it was set up. Along the far wall of the immense building was a large lounge of sorts that served excellent food and drink and which was always full of traders from every species. The entrance to the lounge exited onto the main street of the trading colony, but Esther was one of the few who the Limian couple allowed to enter and leave through the entrance in the back. There were several others within the business itself, moving among the many rows of items and stacks of crates, while the lounge was practically full. Esther ignored the men and women in the lounge area as she stepped up to the woman and took her hands.

"Lesede... you are looking well!" Esther spoke easily and with a bright smile. She truly liked the company of this woman.

"Esther... how long has it been? Four... five months now? You must come to see us more often child... you brighten our establishment when you walk in the door." The woman answered. Her eyes followed the three figures that had come in with her and she grinned. "Tir'ut and Fash'ka no doubt?"

Esther smiled and nodded. "You know how their father is." She said. "Ja'narie came with us this time. I think she wants to pick out some new clothes."

"Well good for her!" Lesede exclaimed drawing Esther close to her much shorter body. "You have done miracles Esther. Cha'talla could not stop bragging about what you have accomplished the last time he was here." Lesede smiled.

"We have accomplished it together." Esther spoke.

"That Immortal loves the ground you tread upon child, you do know that don't you?" Lesede spoke.

Esther chuckled. "Well... I worship him just as completely." She said easily.

"So I assume you have converted all of what you brought and you are here for what you need?" Lesede spoke knowingly.

Esther nodded. "It is a long list." She replied. "Cha'talla wants to be prepared for another fierce winter if it comes. You know how he likes to be prepared."

Lesede nodded as she took the data pad Esther held out to her. "Indeed I do. Sometimes I wonder if his mind is a machine." She turned to the room behind her. "Golid! Get out here old man!"

Esther couldn't help but smile as she watched the older Limian man exit the room wiping his hands on a towel. His red eyes brightened when he saw Esther. "Well... well... she returns after nearly a year!" He exclaimed as he moved around the large counter.

"Golid it has only been five months you old fool!" Lesede barked at her mate. The Limian man came up to Esther and embraced her tightly.

"I see Cha'talla finally allowed you to start coming back out." Golid said. "He may be an Immortal... but he is still a man who wishes to protect his wife. Especially one as delicious as you."

Esther chuckled as Lesede slapped her husband on the back of his shoulder. "I'll show you delicious tonight fool!" She held out the data pad for him. "Take this and go do some work for a change."

Golid grinned at Esther and took the pad from his mate. He glanced at it briefly, his keen eyes whisking through the content and nodding. "I see you are preparing for another harsh winter?" He spoke. "I have some things I will add to this with your permission. They are items Cha'talla and your engineers might find useful. There won't be any charge for them... they are experimental actually and I want to see if they will work in the colder climates."

Esther nodded. "Of course Golid. You know Cha'talla loves playing with your gadgets."

"Excellent. As for the rest..." He looked at Lesede. "One million." He saw his wife nod.

Esther nodded her own head. "Make it one point three and it's a deal." She told him. "I want to make sure the two of you have plenty to retire on when you decide you are done with this line of work."

"Retire?" Golid declared. "I'll be doing this until I am dead. She works me like an animal you know."

Lesede lifted her hand to hit him again and he dodged her blow and slipped back behind the counter laughing. "I'll get started. About six hours Esther."

Esther smiled and nodded her head. They had been doing this for two decades now, and while she did genuinely feel concern for Lesede and Golid, the extra credits they gave to them on every trade deal was to insure that Lesede and Golid kept their eyes and ears open for anyone who might be too curious. It had worked very well in the past, and twice Lesede had warned them of High Coven agents making inquiries about stray Immortals that might have passed this way. While everyone knew Cha'talla still lived now, with the genetic treatments Esther had allowed him to take, he no longer looked the same as he did. Esther had ceased the genetic treatments for she had fallen in love with Cha'talla the Immortal, and she had no desire to see him alter his features drastically for something he perceived she would approve of. She loved her huge husband just the way he was.

Lesede took Esther's arm. "Come child. We will have some Limian tea and I will tell you of the news floating through The Wilds these days."

"Find a woman brother." Fash'ka spoke as he and Tir'ut stood at the long nearly chest high bar in the lounge area.

Tir'ut looked at his brother as he sipped his glass of Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos and shook his head quickly. "A woman? Why would I want a woman now?"

Fash'ka laughed and pounded his younger brother on the shoulder. Fash'ka, his father Cha'talla and their uncle T'lolt were all that remained of their family twenty-five years ago after the High Lord had ordered the purge of their bloodline. The Lycavorian King had saved the life of his uncle T'lolt, and the woman he called mother had saved his own father. His uncle had taken another mate and now had three strong children and Fash'ka had been present for the births of not only Tir'ut but his three other younger brothers as well. Esther had insisted upon it to maintain the culture of their people. The senior males were always in attendance when their children were born, and while they now stood and waited in the next room as opposed to in the same room as centuries past, it was one of the things that had endeared Esther to their people. He had made it his personal mission to insure that Tir'ut was as well trained an Immortal as he and their father could make him. That wasn't hard to do really.

Tir'ut may have had the Immortal size at six foot four and two hundred and forty odd pounds, but he possessed the speed and agility of his pureblood vampire mother as well. And he had what most Immortals did not. The ability to wrap the shadows around him and vanish into thin air. While not as skilled as what their mother had, Tir'ut was very well versed in using this ability, and had once remained hidden from him and their father for six hours while in the same room.

"To keep you occupied fool." Fash'ka said with a chuckle.

Tir'ut matched his brother's laugh. "I am occupied in my life right now insuring our tribe continues to prosper and grow. A woman would only make things more complicated."

"Perhaps... but it would be much more enjoyable." Fash'ka said.

"We should be speaking about you and Ja'narie." Tir'ut spoke. "You know her father has given you his blessing to join with her?"

Fash'ka nodded with a proud smile. "Ja'narie and I spoke on the trip here. I believe we have agreed to conduct the Joining Ceremony when we return." He sipped his drink. "Eleven hundred years old I am and she stirs me more than any female I have ever seen. Our mother's insistence that our people be educated further than what we normally have seen is making huge strides among our people. Ja'narie has an insatiable appetite for knowledge Tir'ut. She reads constantly and knows things I would never have imagined."

"Have you learned how to love like father Fash'ka?" Tir'ut asked softly. While emotions were becoming more and more accepted among their people, as well as expressing those emotions, Tir'ut and Fash'ka were still Immortals and sometimes loathed to talk of such things in anything more than whispers. "I know... I know that is one thing that is hard for our people to acknowledge... but more and more it is happening."

Fash'ka nodded with a smile. "If by love you mean do my knees become weak when she enters the room, or if I notice when she wears something that matches her hair, or the way her eyes gleam in the light. Yes... I believe then I have learned how to love. It feels odd... but it feels good."

As if on cue Ja'narie stepped up close to Fash'ka. "Fash'ka, look at this." She spoke softly holding out the pendant to him. "Lesede says this comes from the volcanic mines of Reglar Four."

Tir'ut smiled as his brother turned to look at the pendant and he allowed his eyes to drift over the many different species in the tavern portion of the Limian business. As he lifted his mug of Nau'shindcal d'l'Vlos to his lips his dark eyes fell on the single table in the back of the establishment that held seven men. Four Evolli and two Kochab were sitting at the table, all of them watching him and his brother. The seventh man had a cloak and hood drawn up around his head and face. Tir'ut's Immortal trained senses kicked in at that time as he observed the seven men casually, allowing his eyes to pass over them as if he was scanning the entire tavern. He turned back to the bar that he and Fash'ka stood at.

"Fash'ka..." Tir'ut spoke softly.

Fash'ka turned from Ja'narie when he detected the tense tone of his brother's voice. They had trained together enough over the years that they could detect even the slightest inflection in each other's voices or heartbeats. "What is wrong?" Fash'ka spoke.

"There is a table in the back." Tir'ut spoke as he lifted his mug to sip. "Seven men. Four of them I recognize from the assessor's office when we made our ore conversion to credits."

Fash'ka remained calm and pulled Ja'narie closer to him with one arm, surprising her with his action so much that she looked up at him and made to pull away from his forwardness until she saw his eyes and the strength of his grip on her body as he pressed her close to him.

"Fash'ka?" She whispered.

"Please forgive me my actions Ja'narie." He spoke almost embarrassed by his physical closeness to her before they were joined. "Could you casually look behind us at the table along the back wall and tell us what the seven figures are doing?"

"Fash'ka what is going on?" Ja'narie spoke with some surprise in her eyes for she had never seen this part of him, but suddenly feeling her body become very warm from the closeness of his hard muscled body against hers.

"I will never allow harm to come to you Ja'narie. On that you have my solemn oath." Fash'ka said looking into her eyes with a long that spoke volumes. "Your father has trained you in the combat arts I know that."

Ja'narie nodded. "Yes of course."

"We may need them. Now look at the table in the back and tell my brother and I what the men are doing." Fash'ka spoke. "And do so casually if you would, like you are simply looking across the room."

Ja'narie took a deep breath and then she laughed casually like he had just told her a joke, while turning her head to let her eyes flow across the room and the table that Fash'ka was speaking of. She saw three Evolli and one Kochab rising to their feet and moving towards them with the hooded man, while one other Evolli and Kochab were leaving and moving into the warehouse section.

"Two are moving into the warehouse." Ja'narie answered as she turned back to him. "An Evolli and a Kochab."

"They are pirates!" Tir'ut hissed. "They are going after mother."

"The others are coming up behind us." Ja'narie said quickly.

"Mother is more than capable of handling one Evolli and Kochab." Fash'ka spoke. "She will have them outnumbered. We on the other hand... we..."

"I never thought I would see this." The voice spoke from behind them. "The son of the former High Lord's Immortal Captain. How is Cha'talla these days?"

Fash'ka and Tir'ut turned slowly and saw the hooded figure standing in the middle of the four mercenaries. They watched him reach up and pull back the hood exposing his handsome features and dark eyes. He was a pureblood that was without question but Fash'ka could not recall ever meeting him anywhere and he had an excellent memory.

"I'm sorry..." Fash'ka spoke. "Were you referring to me?"

The man smiled. "I would know the son of Cha'talla anywhere." He spoke. "The faces of all his children were plastered all over the COM channels after his supposed death. It is well known he survived because of a pureblood like me. One who he was apparently sharing a bed with. I know you." He said motioning to Fash'ka. "You however... I don't know you but you look very familiar to me." He said looking at Tir'ut. "You look odd for an Immortal... your skin actually has color to it and you have hair. I must say I was surprised when I saw the female here had a full head of hair, and then I see you."

"We do not know you." Fash'ka said evenly.

"Why should you?" The pureblood said.

"Is there something we can do for you Pureblood?" Tir'ut asked warily.

"I saw you come in with that large load of Cretolian Gem Ore." The man spoke. "Very impressive. What did that net you... seven... eight million credits?"

"That is not of your concern." Fash'ka answered evenly.

The Pureblood looked at him and smiled a cruel smile. "It is my concern Immortal." He said. "I saw the woman you came here with you know. The one in the cloak and hood. That was no Immortal female; she had far too many curves for that. Who is she?"

Fash'ka felt Ja'narie press close to his back and at first he thought it was out of fear, until he felt the High Coven R14 blaster in her hand push against his side. Fash'ka grinned inwardly knowing he had chosen well in Ja'narie, and very happy that she felt the same for him. Like all Akruvian females, she was prepared to fight for what was hers. And apparently Ja'narie felt that he belonged to her.

"That matters not to you." Fash'ka answered.

"Oh but you see it does matter to me." The Pureblood answered. "My associates and I intend to take those credits for ourselves. As well as that excellent and well cared for ship you came in on."

"Are you what a High Coven deserter and coward looks like these days?" Tir'ut asked very calmly. "You fear fighting the Kavalian pigs so much that you desert and come into The Wilds to prey on others. You will find we are not such easy targets."

The Pureblood's jaw twitched and his eyes narrowed. "I am no traitor Immortal dog!" He hissed. "Not like this fool's father! Now tell me what I want to know and no one has to get hurt, I give you my word."

"Your word?" Fash'ka hissed. "Your word means nothing to me Pureblood."

"At the moment... that is all you have." He answered. "We have you outnumbered... and I know for a fact The Wilds has dulled the skills of every Immortal that comes here. I have killed many myself over the years. I will give you a moment to make up your minds, and then I will simply kill the two of you and sell the female."

Esther Saira had learned many important things in her three hundred and seven years before Cha'talla came into her life and stole her breath away. She was fluent in nearly a dozen languages now; with her degree in Bio-Engineering and the myriad of medical skills she had taught herself over the years, she was as skilled a physician as any in The Wilds and even in some of the recognized Empires. Her unarmed combat skills had been forged first by High Coven Weapons Masters with training by the few Immortals who had lived on Nuwaroa and acted as Aikiro's personal guard. Those skills had been refined over the last twenty-five years by her Immortal husband to a level that easily surpassed many of those mercenaries and pirates who thought so highly of their skills. When combined with her unique vampiric ability to blur in motion and wrap the shadows around herself, Esther Saira was a woman the Evolli and Kochab mercenaries should not have attempted to attack.

Esther had been aware of their presence for several minutes as they moved closer to where she and Lesede sat. She had detected their elevated heartbeats the moment they entered the warehouse. Cha'talla had repeated to her over and over in their hours of training together to always be aware of what was happening around her. Esther had taken her husband's advice to heart and now she always kept her vampire senses on full alert when they were not among their own kind. She may have been a Pureblood, as they were called, but Esther Saira was every bit the wife of an Immortal and she had embraced that life without a second's hesitation.

They were in the middle of a conversation and the instant Esther saw Lesede's eyes dark widen and shift behind her over her shoulder Esther moved. The Evolli and Kochab mercenaries were not expecting their target to propel themselves straight up in the chair and disappear into the shadows as Esther wrapped them around herself and vanished from plain sight.

The two mercenaries looked at each other stunned. "A Pureblood!" The Evolli hissed.

"Traveling with Immortals! Impossible!" The Kochab snapped.

The Evolli's bulbous yellow eyes grew wide as he saw the flash of shadows and blurred motion from his partner's left. The female appeared once more, only this time without the long cloak. He was riveted in his spot gawking at her delicate beauty and hard cobalt blue eyes even as her closed fist came rocketing forward with the blunt end of the wickedly sharp blade. He heard a dull thump and soft crack as she pummeled the hilt of one of her dual fighting knives into the temple of the Kochab mercenary.

The Evolli was trying to bring up his own weapon even as his partner slumped to the floor of the warehouse like a limp noodle, his eyes open in death. Esther's blow, executed with perfect precision and every bit of her vampire strength, had shatter the Kochab's skull sending lethal shards splintering through his brain and killing him before he knew what hit him. The Evolli got the barrel of his hand blaster up just as Esther stepped to the side and snatched the barrel of the weapon in one hand. She twisted down and away so quickly the Evolli could not get his fingers free of the weapon and he groaned in agony as two of his webbed digits snapped and broke. Esther stepped into the move, sweeping one long legs around behind the Evolli and then tossing him like a ragdoll over her right hip. He smashed to the ground against the wall with enough force to crack several bones, and as he opened his mouth to scream, the sound was cut off as the tip of Esther's gleaming blade pressed to the loose flesh under his jaw.

Esther twisted his arm viciously and he could only moan in agony to keep from having the blade slice his throat. She glared at him with a savage snarl, her cobalt blue vampire eyes decidedly unfriendly to say the least and her long vampire fangs presenting him with the face of an extremely upset pureblood vampire female. And the Evolli mercenary knew from experience that they were some of the most lethal beings to exist.

"Who do you work for scum?" She hissed. "And know if you lie to me I will make your death that much more painful."

"Like you!" The Evolli yelped out. "He's like you! A... a Pureblood!"

Esther twisted his arm even further and heard him gasp against the painful straining of the tendons in his shoulder and elbow joints. Her vampire hearing could detect the sounds of the tendons stretched almost to their snapping point.

"A name!" Esther hissed once more.

"Gareld! His... his name is Gareld!" The Evolli gasped once more.

Esther's eyes grew a little wider. "Gareld?" She spoke. "And why would Gareld be in The Wilds consorting with scum like you Evolli pig?"

“He... he was... he sided with the KFI when... when they attacked!” The mercenary stammered. “He escaped the purge by the Empress! He stole... he stole a large ship and came into The Wilds! He’s been operating for almost twenty... almost twenty years now!”

Esther turned her head and saw Lesede’s calm face directing several of the Limian men and women they employed to remove the body only meters from where she was. She was waiting patiently while Esther questioned the other fool who had attacked her. Lesede and her husband had made their home in The Wilds for two and a half centuries now, and they knew everyone. They were known as fair and honest merchants, but they were also known as two people who you did not want to get on the bad side of. It wouldn’t be the first time a mercenary or pirate disappeared after angering one or both of them. They were viciously protective of each other and their establishment, not to mention those they called friend. In the last twenty years this female vampire Pureblood and the Immortal they knew as her husband had become like family to them.

“You know this Gareld Esther?” Lesede asked as she walked towards them.

Esther met her eyes and nodded quickly. “He’s someone I never thought I would see again.” She spoke turning back to the Evolli who watched her with wide bulbous eyes. “Why did you attack me?”

“We... we saw you make the ore conversion.” The Evolli answered quickly. “We... we are waiting for a contract... we... we wanted the credits.”

Esther’s eyes flared angrily and she hauled the Evolli to his feet and then used her anger fueled strength and lifted him by his throat several inches off the floor pinning him to the wall gagging for air.

“Well you can’t have them scum!” She snarled. “Where are your pathetic friends? Where is Gareld?”

“The... the tavern!” He choked out the words. “He... he is dealing... dealing with your Immortal friends.”

Esther smiled. “Let’s go see him shall we! Gareld was never very smart... and if he plans on facing down my sons... he is in for a very painful surprise.”

The Evolli’s eyes grew wider. “Son... sons!” He gasped.

“So what is it going to be?” Gareld asked calmly. “Give me the credits you received and we will just leave you alone. Refuse... and I will take great pleasure in killing you and selling the female.”

Fash’ka looked at Tir’ut. “Tell me Tir’ut... which done do you want?”

Tir’ut grinned exposing his vampiric fangs. “I will take the fool Pureblood who thinks to take what is not his.”

Fash’ka nodded. “Ja’narie and I will deal with the other four then.”

Gareld laughed. “You can not win against five of us.” He spoke.

“And you were always a fool Gareld!” Esther’s voice echoed.

Gareld whirled around and saw the body of the Evolli he had sent to deal with the female come sailing across the room as Esther used her considerable strength to heave him through the air. His body crushed a large table as he landed and remained still.

“Ja’narie now!” Fash’ka barked as he stepped forward directly at two Evolli, his hand suddenly filling with the non-lethal baton that they all carried. One of his father’s rules was to not take life unless it was absolutely necessary. They did not need the attention or trouble that would cause. The baton was a simple tool and something based on the Lycavorian Nehtes that his uncle still carried to this day. A collapsible metal rod with a weighted end could do significant damage when wielded by someone who knew how to use it.

Fash’ka was such a person.

His first blow came smashing across the Evolli’s face, pummeling one of his bulbous eyes into a pulpy mass. The Evolli’s hands dropped his weapon as he screamed in agony and reached for his face just as Fash’ka sent him crashing across the room with a devastating front kick. The second Evolli had time to bring his weapon up before Fash’ka grabbed the barrel just as he was pulling the trigger. A short burst of projectiles was sent sizzling into the air to impact the ceiling as Fash’ka wrenched the barrel skyward to avoid any innocents getting injured. The others in the tavern were scattering in all directions as the violence erupted. The barrel of the weapon burned Fash’ka’s hand, but he did not pause and used his incredible Immortal strength to slam the rifle butt back into the Evolli’s face three times in rapid succession, his yellow blood splattering on the floor and weapon from his suddenly torn lips and split cheek. Fash’ka stepped forward as he ripped the rifle free and used it to pivot to his right, bringing his baton across his body in a vicious side blow that crashed into the Evolli's chest with enough force to drive the wind from his three lungs and break two ribs. The force of the blow sent him staggering back, tripping over two abandoned chairs and falling to the floor.

Ja'narie acted almost as quickly as her future husband. The sudden realization that she had found it quite intoxicating to feel Fash'ka's hard body pressed against hers and that these men had interrupted those new sensations fueled her anger. She lifted her R14 the moment Fash'ka's large frame cleared her field of fire and she let fly three shots total. She knew Evolli anatomy well enough to know they had two hearts, and a perfectly placed shot between those two organs would almost certainly incapacitate them for several hours. It was a more violent expression than Cha'talla would have conducted, but Ja'narie didn't think he would care in this instance considering they were going after his Blessed Wife. The first round punched into the Evolli's chest between his two hearts, precisely where Ja'narie had aimed. His body was blasted back from the force of the non-lethal projectile and he staggered across the tavern until falling to the floor curled into a ball. As the Kochab turned to watch his partner being flung across the room he was bringing his own weapon up. His head came back around, his eyes going wide as he saw Ja'narie's baton snap into his arm with the force of hammer falling on him. Ja'narie may have been a female, but she was still the daughter of Immortal parents and she possessed all the natural strength of her Akruvian species. The baton not only caused his arm and shoulder to go numb, it also shattered the bone and drove the splinter ends through the flesh of his arm. As he dropped his rifle to scream Ja'narie hit him with a solid heel palm strike, lifting his body up off the floor and dropping him like a brick.

Gareld turned back to witness this and bring his own weapon to bear when he saw something he was completely unprepared for.

Tir'ut vanished before his eyes as he wrapped the shadows around his body and blurred in motion. He was the son of an Immortal father and Pureblood vampire mother, and he now blessed the hours and days he had spent with his mother learning to master these new skills that no Immortal had. This was what caused Gareld's eyes to flare in disbelief. He could no more stop the blow from landing anymore than he could stop breathing. Tir'ut smashed his hand forward in a heel strike similar to Ja'narie's, only his carried the power of a male Immortal who was blurring in motion. As Gareld felt the pain lance through his chest and his feet lift off the floor his eyes grew wide once more as he saw Tir'ut blur to follow his flailing body. He crashed painfully into the far wall and began slumping to the floor. Tir'ut did not allow him too. His large hand closed around Gareld's throat and he heaved him off the floor as the shadows unwrapped from around his body. Tir'ut's face was a mask of unadulterated rage and he squeezed savagely wanting to kill this man who had threatened his mother and brother.

"Now you will die painfully Pureblood!" Tir'ut snarled viciously and loudly. "For you have assaulted the wrong group of people!"

"Tir'ut no!" Esther's voice echoed like a shot across the room and his head snapped around to stare at his mother.

Gareld's eyes blinked quickly as the vise like grip around his throat stopped squeezing but did not release him. His cobalt blue eyes disappeared as he recognized the woman walking towards him.

"Es... Esther?" He gasped.

Esther walked calmly towards her oldest son with Cha'talla. "Release him Tir'ut. I had to kill one of the fools he sent after me... and that is the only blood I want on our hands this day."

Tir'ut shoved Gareld closer to the wall while his free hand reached forward to search him quickly, taking the hand blaster and knife from within the folds of his clothes. When he was satisfied the man was unarmed he released his grip on Gareld's throat and the pureblood vampire dropped to the floor gasping for life giving air. His hands went to his throat as he sucked in breath after breath and slowly got to his feet. His eyes went immediately to Tir'ut.

"What... what are you?" He gasped.

"Dosst sslith vith ramoth." Tir'ut growled. (Your worst fucking nightmare.)

Gareld stared at him at for a long moment until Esther stepped up next to him and his eyes went to her in shock. "You... you are supposed to be dead!" He stammered. "The... the Empress said... she said Cha'talla would kill you once you left Nuwaroa!"

Esther glared at Gareld. "As you can see... she was wrong." Esther spoke her voice filled with contempt and hatred. "I imagine she has been wrong about quite a few things these last years."

“He is a deserter mother.” Tir’ut spoke and smiling as Gareld’s eyes grew even wider.

Esther looked at him. “You always were a coward Gareld. It does not surprise me that you would side with the Kavalians and then run when you were discovered.” She spoke. “Be thankful I am in a forgiving mood.”

“He called... he called you mother?” Gareld gasped looking between Tir’ut and Esther. “He is... he is an Immortal!”

“I am only half Immortal fool!” Tir’ut barked out. “Or are your eyes as stupid as your brain? My brother is pure Akruvian.”

Gareld saw nearly a dozen armed Limians now gathered around his men and he watched as Fash’ka and Ja’narie came up next to Tir’ut. “You... you aturr l’veldrin.” He stammered. (Used the shadows)

Tir’ut grinned at him. “Pretty handy skill. I have my mother to thank for that.” He spoke looking at Esther.

“Mother?” Gareld said as his eyes went to Esther who stood there. The features were so easy to see any fool could see they were related. “He is... he is your son?” He asked astonished. “How... how is that possible?”

Even under the circumstances Esther could not help but laugh at the question, even while Tir’ut and Fash’ka joined in. Ja’narie stepped up and looked at Gareld oddly. “Are you stupid?” She asked. “Do you not know how children are made?”

Gareld opened his mouth to retort but Tir’ut shoved his baton into Gareld’s mid-section roughly and with enough force to make him think about it. “Do not say what you were going to say Pureblood.” Tir’ut spoke. “I would prefer not to carve your tongue out of your head, but I will. Or my brother will.”

Fash’ka stepped forward and glared at him. “With great pleasure.” He snarled.

“Brother?” Gareld gasped. “You... you are the son of Cha’talla. How could...?” Gareld’s eyes snapped back to Esther.

“Tir’ut is our oldest.” Esther announced proudly. She lifted her hand and stroked her son’s cheek lovingly. “Can’t you see the resemblance Gareld? He has Cha’talla’s dark eyes thankfully though.”

“You... you gave birth to an Immortal’s child?” Gareld almost yelled.

“Four actually.” Esther replied calmly. “Tir’ut is the oldest as I said, but all of them are beautiful, proud and strong boys. Just like their brothers here.”

Fash’ka smiled and nodded. “Thank you mother.” He spoke.

Esther smiled at him before turning her eyes back to Gareld. “What are you doing here Gareld?” She asked. “And before you answer me I should warn you... if you lie to me... I will have Tir’ut knock you unconscious and then I will take you back to my husband. Cha’talla would like nothing better than to get his hands on the man who whipped and raped me.” Tir’ut and Fash’ka both turned to look at her with wide eyes.

“This is the man!” Tir’ut shouted his eyes savage as they turned back to Gareld. His hand came up in an instant and closed around Gareld’s throat once more, lifting him off the floor and pinning him to the wall.

Fash’ka leaned in even closer, his dark eyes alive with hatred and rage all his own. It was not common knowledge among their tribe, what their mother had endured, but their father had told him and Tir’ut one night when they were out hunting. They had seen small portions of the very faint scars protruding from under her thin strapped undershirt when she worked the fields with them, but no one ever questioned her about it. It was also that night that Cha’talla had told his sons in great detail just how Esther had claimed his heart and showed him that he could be so much more.

“My father has described in great detail what he intends to do to you if he ever discovers you.” Fash’ka growled. “Mother... let Tir’ut and I take him! Let us exact our father’s honor and vengeance for what he did to you!”

Esther shook her head and placed one hand on Tir’ut’s powerful arm while she took Fash’ka’s large hand in her much smaller one. “No!” She ordered. “Release him Tir’ut.”

“Mother... he violated you!” Tir’ut exclaimed tearing his eyes away from Gareld’s face as he strained against the iron like vise Tir’ut had on his throat. “He whipped you!”

Esther nodded. “Yes... he did.” She spoke calmly even as Ja’narie stared at her with wide eyes. This was a part of her life that Ja’narie had heard rumors of, but never confirmed until now. “And his actions only served to confirm without question my love and devotion for your father. Killing him serves no purpose. He is only a common thief now.” Esther smiled smugly. “Besides... even Gareld and all his friends could not do to me what your father does to me when I am in his arms.” She turned her head and looked at Tir’ut. “Release him my son.”

Tir’ut loved his mother with all the commitment of a son for a mother, and now looking at her and seeing the strength of her inner self even when face to face with the man who had violated her so, this inspired Tir’ut boundlessly. Now he truly understood why his father so loved her and called her Blessed Wife. His chest swelled with pride and he released Gareld, watching the man slump to the floor once more gasping for air. Esther squatted down in front of Gareld and smiled.

“Hear me Gareld... and hear me well.” Esther spoke. “You will live this day not because I don’t relish the opportunity to gut you like the pig you are, but because I want you to know that you will never be Cha’talla. I want you to know that it is his hands that stroke and explore my body at night; it is his hands that make me whisper professions of love in his ears. I am the Blessed Wife of an Immortal Gareld... Cha’talla’s wife... and from this day forward you will now have to look over your shoulder no matter where you are. Once my husband discovers you are alive and wandering The Wilds with your sick friends here, he will make it his personal mission in life to search for you whenever we leave our home. And you will die by his hand one day, and it will not be a quick or painless death... that I can assure you.”

“I have killed plenty of Immortals since I left the service of Lady Aikiro!” Gareld spat at her as he got to his feet.

Esther stood up as well and met his eyes. “No Gareld... you have never met an Immortal like Cha’talla or the sons of his loins.” She spoke looking at Tir’ut and Fash’ka. She turned back to Gareld. “I will however make sure your words are inscribed on the headstone wherever he ends up burying you.”

“I... I am not afraid of you or your foul children!” Gareld growled. “I am a Pureblood and...”

“You are a fool!” Esther barked. “You have always been a fool! Even when you were raping me you were a fool! Only a fool would attempt to take from Immortals what is not theirs! Did you have a malfunction in conscious thought processing when you decided to attack us?”

“I don’t need your credits!” Gareld hissed. “I have a larger profit to make soon.”

Esther nodded. “And you only thought to take our money and amused yourself until this supposed profit comes about?” She declared with a laugh. “Well I certainly hope this profit you are going to make is easier than what you just attempted. You failed miserably in that.” Esther stepped closer to him. “Take your fool friends and go Gareld! Go before I change my mind and allow my sons to tear you limb from limb and feast on your blood! Go!”

Gareld was many things; foolish was not one of them. He glared at Tir’ut and Fash’ka before moving quickly around Tir’ut’s large bulk and moving to where the Limians were surrounding his men. He pushed and shoved them out of the tavern’s entrance as Lesede and Golid watched with hostile intent.

Tir’ut stood next to his mother and turned to face her as Fash’ka stepped up to them, holding Ja’narie’s hand.

“You should have let us kill him mother.” Tir’ut spoke softly.

“Tir’ut is right.” Fash’ka spoke.

Esther looked at them and nodded. “Perhaps... but it is your father himself who has told you countless times to avoid drawing attention to ourselves. Killing him would have only spread word that our tribe is thriving and about. Letting him go makes it instant news that will fade in a matter of hours.”

“When father discovers...” Fash’ka began speaking.

Esther nodded. “Yes I know.” She spoke. “However... your father will find him and make an example of him very quietly and without fanfare. He is over seven thousand years old and he’s so very good at making unwanted individuals disappear without a trace.” She finished that with a smile. “That is a skill both of you have not yet achieved.”

Fash’ka looked at his brother and grudgingly nodded his head. “Mother speaks the truth.” He said. “And it should be father who finally finds and exacts his justice upon this Gareld fool for what he has done.”

“Fash’ka...” Ja’narie exclaimed as she felt the burn on Fash’ka’s hand now. “You are injured!” She pulled his hand away from his body and began inspecting it.

Esther smiled. “Fash’ka, take Ja’narie and go with Golid to insure our cargo is secured and do not be pig headed and stubborn and let Ja’narie treat your injury. Tir’ut and I will finish our business with Lesede and then we need to go to Aprian Two.”

“Father will order us home immediately once he discovers what has happened here.” Fash’ka said. “You know that.”

Esther chuckled. “I will deal with your father.” She said. “Go... Tir’ut and I will join you in a short while.”

“Du'ased 'ranndi.” Cha’talla’s voice filled the cockpit of their ship and Esther could only smile warmly. He could speak those words in the ancient vampire language with such emotion that it made her shudder in joy. (Blessed Wife)

“We are fine husband.” Esther said finally as she gazed at his face on the monitor. “You would be very proud of your sons this day.”

“I was already very proud of them.” Cha’talla spoke evenly. “I am more concerned for you now.”

“Cha’talla... there is not a male alive in the universe that could steal me away from you.” Esther spoke humorously. “You should know that by now.”

Cha’talla snorted in reply and Tir’ut laughed at his father’s reaction from his seat in the pilot’s chair of their transport. “Nor me from you Esther, but knowing this fool still lives? You should have let our sons dispose of him and be damned with the consequences!”

“Husband... that would put all we have at risk and you know that.” Esther said calmly. “You yourself have always maintained we need to keep a low profile. Killing Gareld would have only brought attention to us that we don’t want. Besides... now that you know he is wandering The Wilds I have no doubts you will find him one day.”

Cha’talla’s dark eyes glimmered. “Indeed I will.” He spoke. “And he will experience pain for every lash of the whip that he fell upon your body my wife. He will experience pain for every time he violated you in those hours.”

Esther nodded solemnly. “I know this husband... and that is why I let him live. His only thought was for our credits Cha’talla. He did not even know it was me until I revealed myself to him. He spoke of some other great venture he was involved with. He was not targeting us for anything other than greed and cowardly rewards.”

“I still think you should come home.” Cha’talla said. “We can send someone else to Aprian Two.”

Esther shook her head. “We are only three days away my love. It would be a wasted trip if we were to come home and then have to send another party to Aprian Two and you know this.”

Cha’talla sighed heavily and nodded his head. “You are right.” He spoke softly.

Esther chuckled. “Don’t worry Cha’talla. I will purchase some of the scented oil that you like so much. Of course you know the stipulation if I wear it.”

Cha’talla grinned now. “Indeed I do. Something I will enjoy immensely.”

“Then do not worry for us. I have Tir’ut and Fash’ka, and combined with the skills Ja’narie has shown, we will not be bothered again.” Esther said. “The agreement with the settlement went well I take it?”

Cha’talla nodded. “The celebration was grand.” He answered confidently. “It will make our two communities stronger together now.”

“Good. Do not worry for us Cha’talla my husband.” Esther said with loving warmth in her voice. “We will be fine.”

“Be safe Du'ased 'ranndi.” He said.

“I love you Immortal.” Esther spoke softly and with great emotion as she looked at the image of her husband.

“I love you as well.” Cha’talla spoke with a smile. “Contact me when you arrived on Aprian Two.”

Esther nodded and touched the screen. “We will.” She smiled longingly as his image faded and she heard Tir’ut laugh softly. “What?” She demanded looking at her son.

Tir’ut shook his head. “It is nothing mother... only that I hope to one day have what you and father share.”

Esther smiled and reached over to touch his cheek. “You will Tir’ut. You will. True devotion and love knows no bounds. And it usually breaks all the rules. Something you are very good at.”

Tir'ut nodded as she laughed. "Something I learned from my two parents who seem to excel at breaking the rules."

"Bite your tongue and fly the ship!" She snapped playfully. "I'm going to check and make sure Ja'narie has not wrapped your brother in bandages for so minor a wound. She is quite smitten with him you know?"

"Yes I noticed that." Tir'ut answered.

Esther squeezed his powerful shoulder. "And try to avoid flying into anymore asteroid fields like when you were smaller."

"Then where is the challenge!" Tir'ut demanded.

Esther laughed as she turned to exit the cockpit.

LYCAVORIAN UNION/KFI BORDER

Qurot stared out from the large view window in the private lounge on the converted LU NOVA-Class Attack Cruiser. The ship had obviously been refitted and redone to be used for diplomatic meetings and transfers of high level government people. It had taken nearly four days before this ship had arrived with their answer and Qurot was not in the best of moods to begin with. Having been escorted here by security forces and then told not to leave this lounge had very nearly been the end of his patience. Jalersi, Athani, Matuarr and Jiss sat conversing at one of the tables, while Karun sat with two of the Kavalian females that were accompanying them on this venture. A venture that Qurot did not like or agree with.

Qurot coveted the position that Pusintin held right now. He wanted to walk in the same corridors that Pusintin walked. He wanted to have the ear of the Prefect and he wanted to have the respect and loyalty of his ships and troops that Pusintin commanded. He had used his superior skill and knowledge as well as his inbred violent nature to reach the position he held now. He was a Pride Leader of the fifth largest Pride within the Kavalian Empire. His name brought fear to others for he was known to be ruthless not only with the enemy, but members of his own species as well. He was considered a great leader of men, but one who did not care how many lives he had to expend to complete the goal before him. Though he would deny it until his dying breath, and he had covered his tracks very well, Qurot had indeed ordered the attack on the medium sized Lycavorian Union world. He had wanted to capture several dozen Lycavorian females to use in his personal brothel since they were one of only three species that could heal the wounds inflicted on a Kavalian male in full rut. They would be scarred... but they would be alive.

He had planned the mission meticulously, right down to where to attack and what to do. It had not been carried out according to his plan, and the inferior Spartan forces backed by a hundred dragons and an entire Fleet Group in support had routed his men to the last man. Not one of his men had survived. Among those killed was his youngest brother and Qurot would never forget or forgive that fact.

He turned when the door to the lounge opened and the Lycavorian man in civilian clothes and two Spartan soldiers came into the lounge. Their P190s were slung over their shoulders, but Qurot could tell from their eyes they could unlimber them in two eye blinks if they needed too. His frustration got the better of him and he began speaking before Jalersi was fully to her feet.

"I was under the impression this was a diplomatic mission!" He barked out stepping closer to the man. "Is this how all visiting diplomats are treated within the great Lycavorian Union when they come to conduct negotiations?"

The Lycavorian man looked at him and smiled a politician's smile. "Forgive me for not greeting you sooner." He spoke cordially. "This meeting was a last minute arrangement as you well know."

Jalersi glared at Qurot for only a moment before stepping forward. "We understand... I am Jalersi... my sister Athani and Parliament members Jiss and Matuarr." She motioned to the two large Kavalians. "This is Commander Qurot of the KFI Military Forces... and my son Karun, also of the KFI military."

The man looked at Karun intently as he stepped closer and Athani saw his nose twitch ever so slightly. Athani knew that Lycavorians had a keen sense of smell; far more keen than her own species. It was said that many of them could track someone over hundreds of kilometers just by their scent. While Kavalians also had a strong sense of smell, it was not in the same range as the Lycavorians.

“Forgive me again... I am the First Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos and the Trade Ministry.” He answered. “My name is Stenys.”

“They send a secretary to meet us?” Qurot growled. “What is this?”

Jiss looked at Qurot as he too got to his feet. “First Secretary is a title of some importance within the Union Qurot.” He spoke. “And to Deputy Laustinos... that is impressive indeed.”

Stenys smiled and bowed his head slightly to the Kavalian. “I send Deputy Laustinos’s sincere apologies for not being able to greet you himself... but as I said... this meeting was arranged very quickly. He will look forward to greeting you on Earth when we arrive.”

“Earth?” Jalersi asked her eye brows rising slightly. “I thought we would be going to Apo Prime.” She said.

Stenys smiled and shook his head. “The Royal Family has begun their six month exodus to Sparta on Earth only this past week. The Prime Minister, Deputy Laustinos and many of the senior lawmakers and officials accompany them for the first two months.” He explained with a disarming smile. “Deputy Laustinos is right now preparing for us to be met thirty-six hours from Earth by an official delegation led by whoever among the Royal family is free.”

“The King?” Athani asked quickly her voice almost sounding hopeful and ignoring the look she received from Jalersi for interrupting.

Stenys shook his head quickly. “No. King Leonidas avoids political meetings like the plague unless he has a need to be there. More than likely it will be one of the Queens or one of the Prince or Princesses or perhaps both. The Royal family keeps us on our toes.”

Jalersi turned from where her eyes rested on her sister and she smiled. “Yes... I’m sure they do. Do you have a sense of who that might be?”

Stenys came further into the room. “Well... it appears Queen Isabella and Queen Aricia will be dealing with the High Coven visit so...”

“The High Coven is on Earth?” Qurot nearly shouted in undisguised anger.

Stenys appeared unfazed by his outburst and either he was a very good actor or he was told to expect this type of reaction. Jalersi guessed he had been told to expect it. He folded his hands in front of him. “The High Coven arrived on Earth just yesterday seeking to sign an official Cease Fire agreement. We have not had an engagement with them in nearly twenty-five years and the leaders of our respective people decided it was time to put that into writing.” He answered. “It is a very straightforward deal... but one that needs to be ratified by the Senate and the King. Their numbers are small...” He looked at Qurot. “Will that be a problem for you Commander? Having members of the High Coven on Earth? I assure you, you will not be housed nearby. In fact you and your delegation will be staying at a very new facility built on the edge of Sparta overlooking the Evrotas River. It is a stunning location.”

Jalersi stepped forward quickly. “I assure you First Secretary... this is not an issue. Our continued war with the High Coven is not something that needs to be spoken of with the Lycavorian Union. It does not concern any talks we take part in.” She spoke. “The Kavalian Federation Imperium and Prefect Keleru, my father, only seek a peaceful trade agreement that will benefit both our peoples. It is our hope that a relationship can blossom from there... but we know we need to begin somewhere.”

Stenys nodded. “I completely understand.” He spoke. “As I was saying... Queen Aricia and Queen Isabella will more than likely be handling that situation and two of their children have only recently been married. They will want to remain on Earth I’m sure since it was Prince Androcles and Princess Carina who were mated.”

“The Crown Prince?” Athani asked more sedately now looking at Jalersi before speaking. “The King’s oldest son?”

Stenys nodded with a smile. “His union to Crown Princess Sadi has been expected for sometime now. Princess Carina’s union came as somewhat of a surprise only by its timing. She and Durcunusaan Section Leader Moneus have been sniffing around each other for years.”

“We will be met by a ship then?” Matuarr asked.

Stenys nodded quickly. “MJOLNIR’S HAND, NORMYA’S LIGHT and THE SPIRIT OF HADARIA are all gathered around Earth now. One of them will greet us I’m sure.” He replied.

“They are all LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers correct?” Qurot asked.

Stenys looked at him evenly. “Yes they are. Not as modern as Prince Androcles’s ship the SCIMITAR, but they have had refits over the years. I can arrange a tour for you if you like Commander Qurot.”

Qurot nodded quickly. “I would.”

“Deputy Laustinos has asked that I extend every courtesy to you while we transit to Earth.” Stenys spoke. “As well as get the preliminary details of the trade agreement so that we can be prepared when you arrive.”

Jalersi nodded. “Of course.”

Stenys moved closer to them now his eyes unreadable. “Forgive me, but I must make a request now however.”

“And what is that?” Jiss asked noticing the change in tone and posture of the man.

“I must ask that you surrender any weapons you might have on your persons or within your baggage.” Stenys spoke calmly. “You are within the Union with a status as diplomats and regarded as having some diplomatic courtesies. That does not extend to weapons however. We will not search your belongings, but if you are detected with anything that could be construed as a weapon once we transfer to another ship or at any time on Earth, your entire delegation will be stripped of its status and you will be removed from within Union borders.”

“So we are expected to be defenseless!” Qurot snapped.

Athani stepped forward quickly. “I’m quite sure the First Secretary here will arrange for any security that we feel we might need.” She spoke.

Stenys nodded easily. “Of course.” He spoke looking at the young blond haired female Kavalian. “That goes without saying. You will have no security concerns and I expect your visit and the negotiations will be quite productive. It is my understanding that you also wish to petition the Union Senate for the authority to open an Embassy?”

Jalersi stepped forward next to her sister and nodded. “That is the second part of our visit yes.” She answered. “Do you foresee that as being an issue of contention?”

Stenys shook his head. “That is not something I can speak to.” He spoke. “An embassy request must be decided upon by the King, the Prime Minister and the full Senate.”

“Would it be possible to request a meeting with the King?” Jalersi asked. “To present our petition to him personally?”

Stenys nodded. “It is possible. I will make your request known and give it the highest priority.” He replied. “The second part of my request concerns any biogenic compounds you may have among your delegation.” He met Jalersi’s eyes evenly. “Forgive my tone but they will need to be surrendered immediately.”

Qurot began moving forward a snarl on his face but Jalersi and Athani beat him to it. “What makes you think we have such compounds among us?” Jalersi asked.

“While we have not maintained diplomatic relations with the KFI over the years, we are aware of your use of biogenics in your cloning procedures and how you have used it to alter the appearances of selective females and males among your population.” Stenys explained calmly. Athani took note that Qurot’s imposing physical presence and obvious displeasure did not seem to faze the man in the least.

“This is true.” Athani answered quickly.

“Biogenics has been outlawed within the Union for many centuries.” Stenys told her. “No exceptions will be made I’m afraid. Queen Anja is our foremost medical mind, and she would not allow this.”

Jalersi smiled. “I understand.” She spoke.

“You and your assistant are products of this procedure are you not?” Stenys asked.

“Athani is my sister.” Jalersi answered. “And yes you would be correct.”

Stenys nodded his head. “If I may... I’m quite sure you were both very beautiful with such procedures.”

“Our natural forms do not...” Athani looked at him surprise showing on her face. “You do not find the natural form of our species displeasing?”

Stenys smiled. “On the contrary... I find it unique.” He answered. His eyes went to where Karun stood. “However the biogenic procedures seem to have worked quite well. You are not entirely Kavalian.” He said to Karun. “You have Lycavorian blood in you.”

Karun nodded. “My father.” He answered proudly.

Stenys looked back to Jalersi his eyes holding a hint of surprise. “May I assume since he is your son that you are the wife and mate to Pusintin?”

“Marshall Pusintin!” Karun echoed loudly.

Stenys did not turn to look at him from his outburst, his dark eyes remaining on Jalersi as she nodded. “Is that... is that some sort of problem First Secretary?” She asked.

Stenys smiled. “Not at all.” He replied quickly. “Please...” He turned and motioned with his hand towards the door. “I have arranged for refreshments in the dining lounge with a wide selection of food stuffs. Why don’t we move there and relax and talk of things to come while your quarters are prepared.”

“You mean while you install listening devices and spy tools?” Qurot snapped.

“Qurot silence!” Jalersi hissed at him, her eyes burning.

Stenys smiled. “It is quite alright.” He spoke. “It is not a reaction I am unaccustomed too. No Commander... we are not installing listening devices and spy tools within your quarters. If that was the case why would I announce it to you?” He shook his head. “This ship was recently converted to be a diplomatic carrier and it has been fitted with atmospheric sensors to adjust the quarters of each species on board. If I am not mistaken, Kavalians prefer warmer settings than most, even though you do not shy from the colder climates. It will only take a few hours for the sensors to adjust the settings to something you would find acceptable.”

“I see we have much work to do.” Jiss spoke now as he stepped forward confidently. “Let us be the first to move forward and show our trust.”

Stenys nodded. “Please... follow me.”

SPARTA

DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD

“Nubou!” Normya Leonidas hissed out from under the large instrument panel of the TYPE II DT.

The sound of her voice carried throughout the entire cockpit and caused both Arrarn and Zarah to turn from the stations they were working at and watch as she slid out from under the console, her cheeks smudged with dirt.

At twenty-one years old Normya Leonidas was the image of her mother. Her platinum blond hair fell to well below her shoulders, her flight overalls conforming to every curve of her body. She did not have her mother’s five foot nine height, measuring only five seven when she stretched her head up, but there was no denying she had not only Dysea’s stunningly beautiful looks, but her figure as well. Her breasts were high and full, straining against the overalls. She had long legs for her height, yet she had a small waist and powerfully built abdomen. Her two inch high elven ears poked out from between the luxurious strands of silky hair highlighting high cheekbones and dazzling emerald green eyes.

Normya Leonidas was only two weeks from her Coming of Age, and even though she was half elf, the fever of her maturing fully was starting to burn in her wolf blood. Normya welcomed it in fact, for once her first Phase passed she would be free to begin seeing males that interested her, as well as exploring her sexual side. She was equally as open minded and adventurous as her elven blood mother, and all those she called mother, without question. She knew of several male wolves that had been sniffing around her for almost a year now, and it would be fun to finally be able to accept their interest and tease them as her older sisters did. Normya also knew she would not let any male interfere with her duties and love for flying. Behind only her mother For’mya and her brother Arrarn, she knew she was the finest STRIKER pilot within the Union. Inheriting her mother’s unique skill of precognition within Mindvoice played a large role in her abilities Normya knew, but she was also half elf like her brother Arrarn, and elves were know for being the most instinctual pilots of any species in the Union. While she knew in her heart she was a pilot unequalled and would only get better as the years past, Normya was by no means arrogant. She absorbed information from other pilots like a sponge, especially the older pilots who had flown these ships for decades longer than she had been alive.

Normya turned her head and looked up at where Zarah stood leaning against the console next to Arrarn as he moved up next to her. Zarah had been born six hours before her, and no matter that they had different mothers, they considered themselves twins in almost every way. They shared an apartment in both Gytheio and on Apo Prime, and were the best of friends on top of being sisters. Zarah had her trademark smirk on her face as she looked at her with those dark eyes, and Arrarn simply crossed his arms over his chest with an amused look. The three of them could almost always be found in or near the airfield working on the ships they would fly. Zarah was turning out to be an exceptional engineer as well as a pretty good pilot. She would often times think outside the box when it came to engineering problems and her mind was like a steel trap when it came to astrophysics and Quantum theories. She had inherited Isabella's lush figure and her dark brown hair fell just past her shoulders in a tightly tied pony tail. Her smiling dark eyes gazed at her with sisterly love.

Like Normya, Zarah was only two weeks from her first Phase; her Coming of Age as it was called among their people. The time when their wolf blood fully matured inside them. Though they were only half wolf, their father's blood was the purest known to exist and that meant their wolf blood would be more dominant. Normya could shape shift into a beautiful platinum haired wolf like her mother, while Zarah could shift into a powerful dark haired wolf. She was the more adventurous of the two of them and though they would never admit it to anyone, they balanced each other out quite well. Zarah was more open-minded and willing to try new things, while Normya was more reserved and laid back. They gave each other that a boost in support and love and took the best from each other for themselves. It was why they considered themselves twins, and it was also why everyone who knew them considered them twins.

"Such language sister." Zarah spoke with a smirk and a shake of her head.

"The LSD Coil Inducer has micro fractures in the casing." Normya spat disgusted as she got to her feet.

"Those were replaced six months ago." Arrarn spoke now.

Arrarn Leonidas, half elf and all Spartan. His hair shifted from light brown to blond depending on the light and exposure to sun, but there was no denying he was For'mya's son. He had the elegant lines of his mother's face, but the strong jaw line of his father. And he most certainly had the Spartan physique that all of the Leonidas men possessed. His six foot frame was chiseled muscle and bone. His two hundred and twenty pounds was lean and ripped in the same definition of his brothers and father. He was considered the most handsome of the sons of Martin Leonidas, something that was a constant source of ribbing by his older brothers. He had more female wolves and even vampires chasing for his attentions than all his other brothers combined, though now that Andro had found Sadi he did not doubt the ribbing would get worse.

Arrarn was Androcles's personal STRIKER pilot and he would not have it any other way. Though he was not bonded to a dragon, he was closer to Elynth than anyone outside of his brother simply because they were almost always together. Arrarn and Andro could almost read each others thoughts in what they wanted to do, and this had moved into the realm of flying as well, for he could almost predict what his brother wanted and when. Arrarn didn't doubt that if he could get Sadi to become his co-pilot, they could become the foremost flight crew in the Union. He knew right away that Sadi was a natural pilot after her actions with his mother, and her record spoke the same thing. Her instructors had called her instinctive, and that is what Arrarn wanted in his co-pilot. He was pushing hard for her to be his co-pilot and hopefully with the small hints and items he had been dropping without her knowledge that would come about.

Arrarn may have been a pilot, but what most didn't realize is that he was an exceptional fighter on the ground as well. You could not be a son of Leonidas and a Spartan without these skills and Arrarn and his brothers and his sisters as well were all of that and so much more.

Normya got to her feet nodding her head. "I know. They shouldn't have micro fractures after only six months of flying." She held up the circular piece of tubing that she had removed and Zarah took it from her. Zarah lifted the portable scanner and passed it over the object, her eyebrows rising slightly. "We should check the other TYPE IIs and all the STRIKERS." Normya said as she began wiping her hands.

Zarah turned to the console monitor and brought up some information on the screen. She touched the screen and then shook her head. "That's odd." She spoke turning to look at Normya and Arrarn. "There are no LSD Coil Inducers in the inventory here on Earth."

"That's not like Admiral Joarl to let the inventory lag." Normya spoke moving up next to her sister.

"They appear to be on order." Zarah continued speaking. "The shipment is not scheduled to arrive for another three weeks however."

"I'll fly it back to Apo Prime for repairs." Normya spoke immediately. "We can't let it remain down for no LSD Coil Inducer, and I need the time on a TYPE II anyway. I'll only be gone a week at most."

“And which one of us gets to tell mother?” Zarah asked looking at her sister. “I have no desire to tell mother that one of the ships in her Earth Flight Command is broken because someone forgot to make sure there were proper parts in inventory.”

“I’ll take care of that.” Arrarn spoke with a smile. “She won’t yell at me. You need to concentrate on this TYPE II and its back up. I have it on good authority that you will be the STRIKER Commander on Res’s new ship, and these two TYPE IIs will belong to you.”

Normya and Zarah looked at him with wide eyes. “He got it!” Normya exclaimed with excitement.

Arrarn held up his hands. “You didn’t hear this from me and you can’t say anything to him yet!” Arrarn spoke quickly. “Father wants to tell him.”

“The Senate approved the request?” Zarah asked just as excitedly as her sister. All of them had been waiting for the time when Resumar would be given his own command like Andro’s.

Arrarn nodded. “Last week.” He replied with a smile. “The LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser PILLAR OF FAITH will be coming out of the ship yards in six months and it will be Resumar’s ship. They’re forming a command similar to Andro’s. That is why Andro and father have been pushing him to take more responsibility and refine his skills.”

“He’s going to go crazy!” Zarah said with a smile.

Arrarn nodded. “No one else knows except for us.” He said with a smile. “You can’t tell anyone and steal father’s thunder. That also means the two of you will have to start taking on more responsibility as well because more than likely you’ll be assigned to his command since you fly his STRIKER Normya.” Arrarn pulled a still stunned Normya into a brotherly embrace with one arm and then drew Zarah into his arms as well. “The two of you will need a co-pilot so I suggest you start thinking about that as well. Zarah has pretty much anchored her spot as an engineer, but you still need an extra set of hands.”

Normya looked at her brother, her face suddenly very serious. “Arrarn... that means I will be in charge of others as well.” She said softly.

Arrarn nodded his head. “And don’t think for a moment that knowledge didn’t play into father’s decision. I think it might be part of why he has waited the extra year before giving Res his own command. He wanted you to have more experience under your belt. You and Res make an excellent STRIKER combination, and with the right co-pilot I think you and Zarah could one day rival me and my flight crew. As soon as I find one that is.”

Normya and Zarah laughed at the look on his face. Zarah opened her mouth to speak but Arrarn shook his head before any words came out. “I know what you are going to say Zarah.” He said with a smile. “No... father trusts in you just as much as Normya when it comes to that. Regardless of the fact you like to take risks and act nutty sometimes.” He smiled. “We all do. And you know as well as the rest of us that you have a special place in Andro’s heart. I guess there is something to be said for being the very first to hold you after you were born.”

Zarah smiled up at him. Andro and Elynth had been in the room when Zarah was born and at Isabella’s request he had been the very first to hold her, even before her or Martin. It had forged a unique bond with her older brother that had lasted even to this day. No matter what it was, Zarah could go to Andro and tell him absolutely anything. He knew things that were in her heart and mind that even Normya did not, and it was Andro who had encouraged her to embrace her love of machinery and choose the path of an engineer as opposed to an actual fighter like Carina her sister. Andro however, he had made certain Zarah was equally as skilled a fighter as she was an engineer, spending endless hours with her training in all manner of martial arts. He also taught her to embrace her vampire half and to utilize those skills as well. It was part of her he had said, and it only makes you a better person.

“I will start pulling personnel files.” Zarah spoke with some gusto. “We can start going over them tonight.”

Arrarn shook his head. “The State Dinner is tomorrow night. You can leave after that Normya. Use the remaining time today to begin pulling the files you want and Zarah can go through them while you are gone. I want Normya leaving with this TYPE II the morning after the Dinner. I’ll file the proper paperwork, so the two of you just enjoy the festivities tomorrow night. And tonight we are all gathering at Gallais’s Retreat for dinner without father and our mothers. This is just for us, as brothers and sisters, to congratulate Andro and Carina.”

“Speaking of which... when are you going to start becoming more serious with one of your lady friends Arrarn?” Zarah asked.

Arrarn laughed and held up his hands. “Not me sister. I have no desire to settle down just yet. Andro and Sadi were the ones destined to be together. I get to play the field until I find the one for me, just like the rest of us.”

Zarah laughed and slapped his hard abdomen as she turned to her sister. “I’ll have a list that we can choose from when you get back Normya.” Zarah said.

Normya looked at her brother. “And you’ll tell mother?”

Arrarn grinned. “Yes... I’ll tell mother.”

SPARTA CENTRAL SHOPPING QUAD

Arcia, Anja and For’mya had left Sadi after enjoying several hours of gossip and playing with the children. As soon as Elynth arrived at the villa, all of them knew it was going to be a long day for their men and they decided to do some shopping themselves. Sadi felt completely comfortable at the villa and she and Elynth had simply wandered along the beach and talked of things that had happened in their lives since that night. She had attempted to study for an hour but found her interest was not fully into it. Sadi finally decided she would go into Sparta and visit with her father before meeting Andro and his siblings for dinner, and perhaps get some shopping done. She showered and changed into casual clothes before settling onto Elynth’s back and relishing the short flight to Sparta.

It was not an uncommon sight to see dragons on the streets walking along with their riders, and as the dragon population grew, so did the number of Bonded Pairs. With few exceptions all of the Bonded Pairs were members of the military, excluding Roluth, Tarifa and Aihola and several Bonded Pairs that had come about completely on their own. Elynth was well known in the city of Sparta and the Union, and seeing her walking the streets with the golden haired female could only mean the new Crown Princess was out among them. Something Sadi discovered right away the moment they landed and they were greeted on almost every corner by men and women offering their blessings and gushing over her. Most of them knew that Prince Andro’s dragon Elynth was very introverted and when she accompanied Andro out onto the streets, which was almost always, no adult would attempt to come near her unless the Prince was right next to her. Children had no fear of Elynth however and she often allowed them to scamper around her and climb over her back and play in her saddle.

Sadi had gone first to the university to pick up her class schedule and found Teeria and Palta wandering about and that sent them out to lunch in the streets, Teeria and Palta wanting nothing more than to have Sadi tell them everything that happened in the last two days and leave nothing out. Since surrendering to her love for Andro it was so very easy for her now to talk of him and what he made her feel. Teeria and Palta listened enraptured as they sat at the outdoor café and Sadi told them what had happened over the course of the last two days. They had been at the celebration, Sadi insisting that they be there with her, and all they wanted to know was if the Prince was as good a lover as he looked. Sadi and Elynth had laughed within Mindvoice together many times as Sadi tried to tell them without revealing too many intimate details. After several hours they parted ways with hugs and kisses and made plans to meet before the classes they all had to take each day while here. Her father was meeting with L’tian so she and Elynth took to the shopping districts of Sparta.

Now Sadi and Elynth were meandering along the streets making their way slowly to Gallais’s Retreat where they would meet Andro and the others for dinner. It pleased Elynth to see that her new status had not changed the person Sadi was inside. She had bought almost nothing the entire day, simply enjoying being out among the people. Sadi had paid for lunch for the three of them, but she had bought nothing for herself even though she knew full well she was now one of the wealthiest young women within the Union.

Sadi looked up at Elynth as they walked now. Elynth... what... what does Andro like? She asked. We... we are Anomes and I don’t even know what sort of things he likes Elynth. I can see what some of his tastes are from the way he decorated the villa but he is still very much a mystery to mean.

Elynth chuckled. He is no more a mystery to you than you are to him KertaGai. All you need do is open your mind to his. You are joined now... and his thoughts are yours, just as yours are his.

Sadi stopped walking and looked at her. Are you serious?

Elynth settled her bulk to the ground and lowered her head to within inches of Sadi. Sadi you have always had the skill and power within Mindvoice inside you. That night on the island when I first touched you, I did nothing but trigger your own dormant abilities. Your blood is very pure Sadi, and that is the measure of Mindvoice power as you know. You and Andro have become Anome in your ancient custom more by instinct than conscious thought Sadi. You are drawn to each other like moths to a flame. It is why you have loved him for so long and he you.

Sadi nodded. I know all that. She spoke softly.

Then you also know you have only but to drift among the threads of his mind to know who Androcles Leonidas is. Elynth said. You have done this already; I can sense it in you. Does being bound so tightly to him frighten you Sadi?

Sadi shook her head quickly. Never. She answered without hesitation. Elynth... what he makes me feel... I...

Elynth chuckled. You did cry out in rapture for many hours Kerta Gai. She said with humor. I had to leave the villa's island just to clear my thoughts.

Sadi looked up at her and her cheeks blushed bright red. I'm sorry about that. I couldn't help it.

Yes I know. Do not fear the unknown Sadi Leonidas. That is the rule the entire Leonidas family has lived by for years. Embrace what you have found physically and within your mind. Elynth told her. Helen... the Feravomir has asked that I pass on to you a message. You will be welcome to visit her, no matter the hour, and she will sit with you and help you to understand what your Union with Andro will do to your abilities. She likes you quite a bit you know.

Will I always have your council Elynth?

Elynth touched her cool snout to Sadi's forehead and closed her golden eyes when Sadi's hands came up and touched the sides of her huge head. I may be Androcles Bonded sister KertaGai, but you are the one who holds his essence. I could not be happier about that. We will always be together Sadi, and you don't know how happy that makes me feel. There are many things that I share with my sisters and my mother, but I have never had a female friend and knowing that you will always be with Andro gives me that. I am bonded to Andro, just as completely as my father and mother are to the King and Queen, but it will be nice to know I can finally have what my mother has with Aricia. A true friend of the same sex. We may be of different species KertaGai, but we are still female.

Sadi chuckled and closed her eyes as Elynth's cool scales pressed against her forehead. Yes we are. She said.

You can reach out to him at any time KertaGai. Just as you can with me. Elynth spoke. You and I are the only ones who are free to delve into his mind. Just as he is ours. I know that you want to buy something seductive to wear for him tonight.

Sadi laughed openly. Why waste the Riyal when it will only come off when we reach our home. I know I need nothing to make him desire me, for I feel the same for him. Sadi looked up quickly and met her golden eyes. I do know he has meant to get some items from the shop that carries items for members of Mjolnir's Hand. An ointment for your scales that you like so much. He thinks that you are the most beautiful female dragon in Sparta, and he wants you to find a mate one day.

Elynth laughed shyly. I would say my mother holds that distinction. But I will never refuse the compliments. As for finding a mate... bah... I have yet to meet the male dragon that even tickles my interest.

Then let us go there and get this ointment and see if we can't change that. Sadi spoke with a chuckle. We still have time before we meet them.

Then climb into the saddle KertaGai. I can have us there in four beats of my wings and we can avoid the press of people on the streets. Adalus is the owner of the establishment you seek, and if I am not mistaken Andro has not picked up what he orders every month. Elynth spoke.

Sadi did just that and Elynth propelled them into the skies above.

“Had no right to do this without speaking with me first!” Deia screamed at Laustinos as he sat in the chair across from her desk. “You have exceeded your authority!”

Deia got to her feet; shoving her chair back and hearing it slam into the wall behind her. She moved to the large bay window and looked out over the mountains to the east. This section of the Senate Building was relatively new. When it was discovered that Martin and the Queens intended to stay in Sparta at least six months of every year and that many of the Lycavorian Union Senate and government officials would be working from here, the building was enlarged to accommodate them and their staffs. Deia’s office had been built in recognition that she was the Prime Minister of their Union, Dilios and Panos also insuring that she had a spectacular view because they were among those few who knew she was Martin’s Aunt.

While Martin considered Deia his direct tie to his grandparents Resumar and Eliani, Deia considered Martin the only true family she had left. He was all the bloodline that remained of her beloved sister and the man she loved so completely. She had been impressed with Martin when he had first returned to them a quarter century ago; for he was far more than she had ever realized he could be. Deia was perhaps one of the oldest among their people though she looked no more than sixty years of age, and while only a handful of men and women knew her true ties to Martin, their relationship went far beyond blood. As King and Prime Minister they worked as a seamless pair for they discovered they thought alike on almost every issue. Martin would not hesitate to ask her council on an issue and she would not pause to inquire of him his opinion about something. When it came to political decisions, they were of like mind nearly one hundred percent of the time.

Martin was widely seen as a military King, having no interest whatsoever in any political workings or dealings unless his council was needed. Most assumed that Dysea and Isabella were the political voice of the King and his will. It was them who normally put forth Martin’s views or ideas in words that would be understood by politicians. No one would mistake Martin as politically adept, and Deia knew that is how he liked it. Deia and a handful of people knew otherwise.

“The Trade Ministry falls under my duties as Deputy Prime Minister.” Laustinos spoke trying to keep his voice calm. He hated that he had been summoned here to her office like a lackey. “I thought I was only doing...”

“That’s just it!” Deia roared as she whirled around. “You did not think! You have invited an enemy into our midst Laustinos!”

“We are not at war with them! Deia they followed all the proper channels!” Laustinos spoke. “You were refusing to meet with the Zaleisian Ambassador and he was...”

“The Zaleisians are their lap dogs!” Deia barked. “The ones they use to communicate with the governments that do not recognize their Empire. I was refusing to meet with him on purpose you fool!”

“According to Stenys they only wish to offer this trade agreement and have petitioned to have an embassy established so that they do not have to use these same means again.” Laustinos spoke. “What is so wrong about that?”

“And Stenys has offered to them a meeting with Martin!” Deia snapped. “Did you stop to think about what you were doing? You are bringing them here when the High Coven is on Earth Laustinos! You are putting us in the middle of their war!”

“They know the High Coven is here.” Laustinos said. “Stenys reported to me that this did not seem to trouble them at all.”

“Of course not!” Deia snapped. “Do you not find it convenient that they are coming here now? When the High Coven is here? They are not coming here for trade talks no matter what they say. They are coming here because the Coven is here and they want to make sure we do not enter the war on the side of the High Coven.”

Laustinos shook his head slowly. “Deia... forgive me... but the King’s suspicious nature is beginning to rub off on you. He is not politically knowledgeable. His manner of solving an issue is by the point of a Nehtes. He...”

“You will stop there Laustinos.” Deia spoke in a low angry voice as she returned to her chair. “You do not know Martin Leonidas well enough to judge him on anything.”

“I know... I know what I have seen and what others say.” Laustinos snapped now. “He is not a politician! He is... he is a brute of a man who thinks that violence solves all problems! He can not hold an entire species of people responsible for his brother being a traitor to his own kind. That is what he is doing! As for everything else, he allows Queen Dysea and others to make the decisions.”

Deia sat back in her chair and let a small smile play across her lips. “Is it?” Deia asked. “Everything Martin Leonidas does has purpose!” She stated evenly. “Every action he conducts or endorses has meaning. Just because you, Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos, just because you do not see it or do not understand the reasoning behind his judgment in no way means that his decision was not well thought out.”

“Deia the Kavalians are offering to replace our entire agreement for Notal berries at a much reduced rate of cost.” Laustinos spoke. “All they ask is for permission to establish an embassy within the Union for the purpose of advancing peaceful relations between our people. Is that not worth overruling the King’s will?”

She paused a moment then got to her feet. “We do not overrule the King’s will in regards to anything Laustinos. You would do well to realize that if you wish your career in this office to advance any further. Martin Leonidas is this Union. Now gather your things Laustinos.” She told him.

Laustinos got up as well. “What? Why?”

Deia smiled at him. “Do you think I am going to tell Martin that you have authorized the Kavalians to be in Union space alone? And on top of that colossal blunder you offered them a meeting with him in regards to establishing an embassy? Do you honestly expect me to tell him all that without you next to me?” She spoke. “You are sorely mistaken Laustinos.

Carisia stared at the saddle where it was perched on the shaped form of what could only be a dragon’s back. They had left the lodge to make their way to this Gallais’s Retreat to eat and wait for whatever it was they were waiting for. Narice had been the one to lead them in here, and now Carisia was so very happy she had. The shop appeared to be designed only for items that cared for and kept dragons healthy. The proprietor of the store was an affable older man who welcomed them with a smile and wave into his store. The shelves were lined with salves and ointments that were applied to a dragon’s scales for a healthy shine. There were food stuffs that possessed proteins and vitamins that Anthar had never received before. Carisia knew her bonded brother was underweight by several hundred pounds and he had been able to maintain his large size only by constantly hunting. As she wandered the store looking at all the items she was amazed at how many things there were for the dragons that lived within the Union.

“It’s the latest saddle.” The male voice spoke and Carisia turned to see the older man come up next to her.

“I’m sorry?” She said softly.

“The saddle?” He spoke with a smile. “This is the latest version. It came out three years ago and now all the Bonded Pairs within the Union have one, some of them have two or three. It’s made from a softer, pliable alloy that Avi designed for the King.”

“Avi?” Carisia asked.

“The Mindvoice ship Avatar.” He spoke as he reached out and ran his hand along the leather like material. “It does not chafe the scales on their backs, and it allows for more conforming of the dragon armor leg braces.”

“You... you seem to know an awful lot about dragons.” Carisia said softly.

“Tsarina and I were injured during the war.” He answered with a nod. “We can no longer fight as we used to. This allows us to keep our pride about us and stay within the Bonded Pair community. They all come here... all of Mjolnir’s Hand... and the others. I am Adalus.”

“Others?” Carisia asked surprised. “I thought... I thought there was only Mjolnir’s Hand. I didn’t realize that there were others.”

The man looked at her keenly, his dark eyes measuring her up. “You are from the High Coven yes?” He spoke.

Carisia’s maya blue eyes grew a little wider and she stepped back from him slightly. “How... how do you know that?” She asked.

The older man smiled. “There are only twelve pureblood vampires within the Lycavorian Union who are bonded to a dragon young lady and I know them all. They come here frequently and you are not one of them. And that could only mean you are from the High Coven. I was also a member of Mjolnir’s Hand, and I can sense that the bond with your dragon runs very deep. I also know things and I hear things.” He shrugged with a smile. “You are not like the others in your group with the exception of that young woman by the salves there. I can feel the concern and caring the two of you have for your dragons. The others... they do not hold their bonds as sacred as you do.” Carisia saw that he motioned to where Narice stood near the door. “You and they have come here to be trained I take it?”

Carisia met his eyes. “I... I am not allowed to say.” She spoke quickly.

Adalus nodded. “I understand.” He spoke. “He is healthy... your dragon?”

Carisia turned back to look at the saddle. “He is underweight for his size.” She answered honestly. “The choice of food on our planet for Anthar is not as varied as it is here.”

“Anthar...” He spoke softly. “A strong name. He is the cerise colored red male I saw when you arrived at the Gallais’s Lodge isn’t he? I can sense his imprint on you.”

Carisia nodded. “Yes.”

“He’s big for a Firespitter. I’d say just a tad larger than Elynth... about sixteen meters long?” Adalus spoke with a smile.

Carisia felt suddenly uncomfortable talking to the man and she fidgeted on her feet as she saw Dante and Javier looking at her from the corner of the shop and then beginning to move towards them. “How much is this saddle?” She asked.

“The Bonded Pairs are issued one just like this. They can replace it if they need too, but most buy an extra one just to have it as part of their equipment. I sell them for twelve thousand Riyal.” Adalus answered very business like now sensing her unease and watching Dante and Javier move closer with Lucia. He also could sense Thast and another soldier watching from the doorway into his shop.

“You said there is more than just Mjolnir’s Hand?” Narice spoke softly as she moved up next to Carisia.

Adalus looked at her and took in her exotic beauty. He nodded his head slowly knowing there would be no point in lying about it. Her vampire hearing undoubtedly picked up what he had told the shorter woman. “There are.” He spoke.

“How many more?” Javier asked in an emotionless tone of voice.

Adalus smiled. “I believe there were upwards of a thousand Bonded Pairs last time I checked. That has probably changed in the last ten years or so.” He stated proudly. It was information they would discover soon enough if they were here for what he thought they were here for. And it wasn’t exactly secret information.

“Are... are all of them in the military?” Narice asked.

Adalus shook his head quickly. “There are others like myself that were injured in the war with the Evolli and can no longer fight. Just because we can no longer actively fight does not mean we dismiss our bonded brothers or sisters. Tsarina lives with my family and me and cares for the four small hatchlings she has with her mate. We will never be very far apart. Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Vice President Aihola are bonded to a dragon as well. He is not a member of Mjolnir’s Hand or the military. There are others.”

“You do not seem... you do not seem surprised that we are here.” Narice said. “Or that we are vampires.”

Adalus met her intelligent eyes. “There are many vampires who live and fight and call the Union home.”

“Traitors!” Dante hissed.

Adalus looked at him. “Traitors to you perhaps.” He spoke calmly. “We consider them friends and allies and even family in many cases. Simply because they chose to follow another path than the one you and your leaders have followed does not make them bad. At least not to us.” He smiled. “And the only reason any of you would be in this store is if you were bonded to dragons. Which you all are with the exception of those two charming looking men by the door.” He said with a smile as he motioned towards Thast and the other soldier.

Carisia shook her head as she fingered the credit chip in her pocket. “I don’t have enough for that.” She said softly looking at him. “I’m sorry.”

“There is not anything to be sorry for.” Adalus answered. “Please... continue to look around and if you have anymore questions feel free to ask them.”

“Do you recommend anything for dry scales?” Narice asked quickly.

Adalus looked back as the door opened and he saw the flash of golden blond hair and obsidian scales outside. "I recommend the Apricot ointment... it will soak up quickly but you will see an immediate improvement in the chafing of scales." He replied quickly. "If you will please excuse me."

Sadi squeezed by the two men at the door that did not seem to want to move. She glanced at them in annoyance by their rudeness as the older man stepped up to her.

"Princess!" Adalus exclaimed loudly causing heads to turn from the others in the store. No one but Narice saw Carisia's almost imperceptible stiffening.

Sadi turned back to the man and smiled warmly. "Hello." She said as she took the hand Adalus held out.

"I am Adalus." He said in greeting. "Welcome to my establishment. I was wondering when we would finally see you in here. Andro talked you into coming to pick up his normal order I take it."

"Actually I came to pick something out for him." Sadi said in reply as she allowed the burly man to walk her into the shop. "But I will pick up whatever he usually gets I suppose."

"It is nothing much really." Adalus spoke. "A special salve that only the elven healers on Elear make for the dragons there. He orders a batch of it each month. What did you have in mind for him?"

Sadi smiled. "I don't know." She said honestly.

Adalus looked at Sadi and admired her stunning beauty and smiled. "It is still a bit overwhelming I suppose huh?"

Sadi nodded. "You have no idea." She answered.

Adalus nodded. "No doubt. I will tell you that whenever he comes here Andro always goes to the rare art dealer two buildings down. And he always leaves with something."

Sadi looked at him and smiled. "Thank you Adalus." She said.

Adalus nodded and squeezed her arm. "I will get Andro's order and return in a few moments. And I have a special treat for Elynth too."

Sadi watched him walk around the counter and disappear into the rear of the store and she turned to look around. Her eyes immediately fell back to the two men at the door. They were a stern looking pair, definitely vampires if she had to guess. She allowed her eyes to sweep around and then fell on the diminutive raven haired female who stood near where the saddle was on display. Sadi's jungle green eyes grew wider and her heart slammed into her chest.

It was the woman from her dreams.

Sadi's heart began to race and she felt her skin flush as the woman lifted her face to stare at her with those amazing maya blue eyes. Her face was flawless beauty, her raven locks washing around regal cheekbones and cerise colored lips. Her eyes were... they made Sadi shudder almost as powerfully as when Andro gazed at her. Sadi looked away quickly, clearly embarrassed and she turned back to face the counter and instead was looking at the chest of a man.

"Hello there." Dante spoke with arrogant confidence.

Sadi looked at him. "Hello." She spoke softly and backing up just a step at the way his eyes gazed at her with something Sadi did not like. They gazed at her with feral lust.

"My name is Dante." He said.

Sadi tilted her head slightly. "Good for you." She spoke suddenly not liking this man in the least.

"I am new to your city." Dante spoke opening his eyes a little wider. This Lycavorian female looked exceptionally enticing. He admired the way her clothes conformed to her lithe frame and firm breasts and she looked as if she would be a wild one in bed. Dante considered himself a connoisseur of women and he had not yet met a woman he could not get into his bed. "I was wondering if you might be available to perhaps give me a tour."

Sadi detected a strong Mindvoice presence from this man, from all those in the store as a matter of fact and she chided herself for not being more aware of those around her. She was so used to keeping her shields at such a high level that she could not detect those who were at a lower level than her. She could now feel two of the women in the store were exceptionally powerful, including the woman who had affected her so. What she felt from this Dante and the others did not even come close in many respects.

Sadi shook her head quickly. "I'm sorry... there are brochures at all the corners if you need directions somewhere."

Dante stepped closer to her and reached out to take her arm gently. Sadi looked down at where his hand held her arm and then back up into his face clearly surprised that he had been so forward as to touch her. She thought she saw an instant of red color in his eyes and then it was gone.

"Do you make it a habit of touching women you have just met...? Dante is it?" Sadi asked calmly as her anger began to build.

"Only if I wish there to be something more." Dante answered confidently. "Perhaps I could interest you in dinner after you give me a tour of your charming city."

"Remove your hand from me sir." Sadi spoke evenly and meeting his dark eyes without any fear in them whatsoever. "And do so quickly if you wish to continue using that hand for the remainder of your time in this world."

"You would strike me for touching you?" He asked clearly surprised as he looked at her. "I thought Lycavorians were exceptionally open about their sexuality and their desires."

Sadi canted her head slightly as she looked at him. "Your information is incorrect sir." Sadi spoke. "I will not ask for you to remove your hand from me again. I will simply shatter your arm in four places. Release me now."

Dante hesitated for an instant realizing his small burst of mind controlling power had not worked against this female. That was something he had never experienced before and he pulled his hand back and looked at her. "I... I was under the impression Sparta was a friendly city." He spoke finally.

"To those who do not exceed decorum... yes. It is a very friendly city." Sadi told him calmly. "Something it appears that you lack however, sir."

"My name is Dante." He spoke still gazing at her.

"I do not particularly care what your name is or where you come from." Sadi told him sweetly. "May I suggest in the future you keep your hands to yourself? Another female might not think before they act and give it back to you gnawed off at the wrist."

Dante smiled. "I like a woman with spirit." He said. "Is that a challenge you are handing me?"

Sadi laughed at him as Adalus came out of the back, his eyes going to where the young vampire stood far too close to the Crown Princess for his liking. "Dante...?" Sadi saw him nod his head with a smile. She made an obvious show of looking him up and down very intently and then settling her eyes back on his face. "Dante... you do not begin to compare to what I already have. Your arrogance is offensive considering that you aren't even very good looking, and your attempts at charm are woefully inept." Sadi spoke meeting his dark eyes and seeing his jaw clench in anger. "And if you continue on your path... it will only lead to you getting your mida handed to you beaten to a pulp."

Adalus stepped up to them now. "Is there a problem Princess Sadi?" He asked quickly.

Sadi turned and looked at him. "Not at all Adalus." She spoke with a bright smile. "I was just giving Dante here some friendly advice." She saw the small package he held. "Is that for me?"

Adalus nodded his eyes never leaving Dante's face as he handed the package to her. "Would you give my regards to Prince Androcles when you see him Princess? And once more congratulations on your union." He spoke in a firm loud voice, emphasizing choice words as he glared at Dante.

Sadi smiled warmly and leaned up to plant a soft kiss on the older Spartan's cheek. "I will do just that." She spoke.

Adalus watched as Sadi turned and confidently made her way out of the store before turning back to look at Dante who continued to admire the way Sadi filled out her clothes. He watched as those he was with moved closer to him.

"You are from the High Coven." Adalus spoke now watching as Dante turned to look at him. "I do not know how things are within the boundaries of the High Coven, but within the Union and most especially within the boundaries of Sparta you do not act inappropriately with the Crown Princess and mate to Androcles Leonidas!" He finished the sentence with stern anger in his voice. "Not if you wish to continue breathing without assistance."

"She... she is his wife?" Carisia asked softly.

Adalus nodded. "They were joined three days ago." He answered looking at her. He turned his eyes back to Dante. "And if he were here, High Coven or not foolish boy, you would be a pile of cooling flesh on the floor of my store." He looked at Carisia and Narice. "You and the others are welcome to return any time you wish while you remain in Sparta. Do not bring this one with you however." He motioned to Dante. "Now please... I am closing early and you need to leave. I..." Adalus stopped and tilted his head slightly as Sadi's voice filled his mind heavily shielded.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [Adalus?]

[Princess?]

[The young woman with blue eyes? What was she looking at?] Sadi's voice asked and Adalus could only smile at the power the Crown Princess obviously had. Andro had chosen very well indeed.

[She was looking at the new saddles Milady.] He replied. [Apparently the High Coven does not care for their bonded brothers and sisters as we do. The one with blue eyes and the more exotic looking of the other two females... they at least care deeply for their dragons.]

[The saddles do not need to be fitted do they?] Sadi asked.

[They are standard Milady. Only Torma and Jeth need special fitting because of their size. The blue eyed one, I saw her dragon, and he was only slightly larger than Elynth.] Adalus replied. [Why?]

[Adalus... make sure she has a saddle before she leaves your establishment please. Both of them. In fact... make sure all of them have the new saddles. I will transfer the Riyal to your account later this afternoon.] Sadi spoke.

[If they are here for what I think they are here for Princess... they will get saddles when their training begins.] Adalus said.

[I understand. However I want to do this.] Sadi told him. [I can have Andro speak to you if you wish?]

Adalus turned and looked at Carisia. [Milady that is by no means necessary. You and Andro speak with one voice. That is how it is with Anomes.]

[You... you know...] Sadi sounded surprised.

Adalus chuckled within the connection. [I believe those of us who are bonded have known for as many years as we can recall Milady. Ever since he and Elynth joined our ranks. I will make it so Princess, have no fears.]

[And Adalus? My name is Sadi. Not Milady or Princess or anything else so silly. Andro hates titles and so do I.] She spoke confidently.

Adalus smiled. [Consider it done... Sadi. And I hope to see you in the future.]

Sadi's laughter was like musical tones in his head. [I have no doubts you will.]

Adalus smiled as their connection faded and he glanced from Carisia to Narice. These two women cared for their dragons deeply; he could sense that easily enough, vampires though they may have been. His gaze went back to Carisia, for it was this one that Sadi showed the most interest in. "I have been asked to provide you all with saddles and accompaniments for your bonded ones. Your participation is not needed; however please inform your bonded ones that several members of my staff will be coming to the coral where your bonded ones are resting."

"We don't need your..." Dante began to announce but Narice stepped forward quickly and snapped an elbow into her nephew's gut, silencing him.

"Silence!" Narice hissed at him as she stepped in front of Dante and looked at Adalus. "Forgive my nephew Adalus. He has yet to learn humility it seems. I accept your gift on behalf of all of us."

"It is not my gift." Adalus replied. "It is a gift from the Crown Princess. If it was up to me only you and your blue eyed companion here would receive anything. These others are not true Bonded Pairs."

"And what would you know about being bonded to a dragon old man?" Dante quipped loudly.

All of them heard the loud snort and they turned slowly to see the large head of the gray Firespitter push through the window on the side of the building, its bright green eyes wide and glaring at them.

Adalus laughed as he walked over to stand beside the dragon's head. He reached up to stroke the smooth scales of her neck and lower jaw. "Far more than you will ever know boy." Adalus replied. "Far more than you will ever know."

"I thank you Adalus." Narice spoke as she yanked Dante towards the door with considerable strength. "And please... when you see the Princess again, please thank her for me."

CHAPTER SEVEN

SPARTA ROYAL ESTATE

“Why didn’t you tell me it had gotten this bad Anja?” Martin asked as he lowered the pad he was reading and leaned over to kiss Anja’s bare shoulder.

They were sprawled on the massive bear skinned rugs in the main room of the villa. None of them had much on in the way of clothing if any at all; they never did when they were alone in their home and simply lounging around in the evening. Their five younger children were with Andro and the others at Gallais’s Retreat, and it was their time together now. They had come to relish these moments and they attempted to do this as often as they were able. All of them had duties and things they were responsible for, and it was moments like these that had strengthened their love for each other over the past twenty-five years. They would push the large couches and two chairs out of the center of the huge sitting room, and toss down massive feathered pillows onto the bear skin rugs. Whatever reports or intelligence they had to read or go over they would do here, all of them crowded around Martin who was always in the center. They would wear almost nothing at all, for the touch of each other’s flesh was what they all craved so much. Many of these nights had led to mind blowing sexual encounters between all of them, but more often than not it was to insure they never grew apart from each other. They would usually end up falling asleep on the rugs curled into each others arms and their limbs entwined in a tangle of bodies.

Anja turned her head slightly from where she leaned against Martin’s side and smiled dreamily at the feel of his lips. She sat lotus style with the data pad in her hand and the glass of wine in the other, Martin’s old formal dress uniform shirt just barely covering her body and flopped down on one shoulder now. Isabella leaned against Martin’s other side dressed only in a thin white robe identical to the one Dysea wore, his arm stretched across her firm, full breasts. The robe was tied loosely at her waist and Bella made no move to pull it around her, especially not with Dysea’s head and soft mane of platinum blond hair in her lap. The fabric was such that it truly hid nothing of her lush figure, yet those in this room knew her body just as intimately as she did, for they had explored every crevice and contour through the years and there would be no point in hiding from them. For’mya was stretched out on her stomach between Martin’s legs, the data pad she was reading resting on his powerful rippled abdomen. Her upper body covered Martin’s naked lap, his huge cock pressed against her smaller, but no less very firm breasts as Bella’s hand stroked her shoulder. Aricia was lying stretched out on the floor on her back, her head and shoulders propped up against For’mya’s flawless and perfectly shaped ass while her hands and fingers absently stroked Dysea’s powerful satiny legs which were thrown across her tanned and naked limbs.

“What was there to tell?” Anja spoke as she turned her head far enough to look at him now. “That he was turning Seanna’s parents against me? What good would that have done aside from make you angry? He really wasn’t doing anything wrong.” She answered. “You know this was the last year I intended to keep in touch with them anyway.”

“Yes... but hastening that end was not right.” Dysea said softly. “You cared deeply for each other Melyanna and it was not until he became a fixture in Seanna’s life that those feelings began to change.”

Anja nodded. “I know. That is when I realized he was slowly turning her against me because I wouldn’t share their bed. He was very careful how he did it, and it took him a number of years, but he accomplished that goal.”

“Anja I could...” Martin started to speak.

Anja shook her head quickly and turned to stare into his dark eyes. “No! It is over and done with Marty. Seanna is dead... I’ve moved well beyond that now. It only really shows me that I don’t need anymore than those of you in this room and if he wants to hold on to his feigned hatred of me that is his problem. I did not cause her death... the Evolli did that. Let it stay in the past lover.” She reached up and stroked his handsome face with delicate fingers. “Please.”

“It is for the best Beloved.” Aricia spoke now. “Anja has made her decision and we should not do anything to make it seem we are being vindictive.”

Martin nuzzled Anja's throat and neck gently with his nose letting a small portion of his aura touch all of them. "Are you sure?"

Anja smiled dreamily as his aura surrounded her, surrounded all of them, and she nodded her head. Isabella may not have been able to feel this aura that her fellow Queens and devoted lovers felt, but that mattered not to her. They had devised a method to make sure she knew what they were feeling and that usually entailed one of Martin's arms pulling her closer to him as he did now, even as his aura washed over the rest of them. It allowed Bella to share in the love he felt for all of them.

"Yes... I am sure." Anja answered finally. "Seanna is dead. That part of my life is in the past and that is where I intend it to stay. We have too much going on now to dwell about it. I don't need anything except all of you."

"That is something you will always have Melyanna." Dysea said softly.

Isabella nodded. "Without any reservations."

"What do you and Bella think the High Coven is really here for Martin?" For'mya asked as she steered the conversation in another direction. They did not need to dwell on the past or events that had taken place. For'mya had become almost like a Sage for their group, always able to see every side of the situation and her advice was usually the way they chose to go. Her Mindvoice powers had nearly doubled in the last two decades since Martin had turned her to save her life, and like with Dysea's precognition abilities, For'mya seemed to have the latent ability to be so very perceptive about so many things. "If their only intent was for us to train their dragons they would not have come all the way here. They could have asked that question from afar."

Martin set the data pad in his hand aside and took the crystal glass of Spartan wine that Isabella held from her hand. He took a long sip before handing it back to her. "I truly don't know." He answered finally.

"What do you feel they want Nauta Melme?" Dysea asked now.

"Whatever it is... it isn't good." Martin answered. "And no... I don't believe us training their dragons is the only reason they came here. I believe they brought this information to us because they want us to enter the war yes, but there is something else as well."

"Aikiro has to know we would never sign an Alliance with her." Isabella spoke turning just her head to look at him now.

Martin nodded. "That's true." He said.

"But if we were to enter the war against the Kavalians and open another front..." Aricia spoke softly. "It would take pressure off the High Coven because the Kavalian forces would be split."

Martin nodded once more. "Yes... that is also true."

They all looked at him now, questions in their eyes. He never kept anything from them, not since that one time almost twenty years ago, and that had been only because he wanted to protect them. None of them truly knew why it had angered them so much; Anja had known some of it, but not the entire story and she had tried to lessen the sense of betrayal they all felt. It was a sense of betrayal that they realized was childish and stupid only after the fact. Aricia had discovered it one evening while they were sleeping and she was swimming within his thoughts as he so often let them. She had found a singular and shielded area of his mind and Aricia had slipped past his shields because he was sleeping and she thought it was something concerning Gorgo whose birthday was fast approaching. What she had discovered was not as troubling to them as the fact he had kept the truth from them. They had overreacted they knew, and during the third week of their escape from Earth they had admitted this to each other as well as so much more.

The four of them had called him some very horrible names in their initial anger, none of which they meant, but also nothing they could take back because it had already been spoken. Anja had been stupefied and unable to counter their words and they took her silence as agreeing with them. In their anger they had left Earth to be away from him, to punish him in some fashion. They knew it was a stupid thing to do once they did it, but pride kept them from admitting this for some time. In the beginning of their second week of self exile they found themselves moving to two different planets before finally settling on Ricot Four. An untamed and dangerous planet within The Wilds with only one spaceport and a whole lot of bad people who called it home. Once outside the protective ring of the spaceport and small city, you could only travel by foot or by pack animal due to the very strong radioactive isotopes within the layers of atmosphere that prevented atmospheric travel. They had thought to hide away within this area of the planet, only to come to the false realization that they needed Martin more than he needed them. There were thousands of females; millions of females within the Lycavorian Union that would jump at the opportunity to have Martin take them as a mate, and after what they had called him they feared he would do just that no matter how many children they had bore him. Looking back on that moment now, it had been a ridiculous notion to even consider.

It was the end of their third week on Ricot Four when they decided to return and try to make amends with the man they all loved so completely. They knew he would never be able to find them here, or if he had even come after them to try and make things right for they had not contacted anyone on Earth for the entire period of their self exile. They did not think it possible even for Martin to track them across nearly six hundred kilometers of desert and ice fields, or even find them after they left their stay on Tangan Prime.

They had lived in a large abandoned lodge for two weeks and as they prepared to make their way back at the end of their third week, the door to the lodge had opened and he was there. His face appeared drawn like he hadn't eaten for several days, his face covered in stubble, and the dust from the sandstorm outside the door covered his body completely. But it was him. They didn't find out until much later upon returning to Earth that he had made certain the children were cared for, he had left Torma and made to come for them only five days after they had left. He had tracked them across the surface of Ricot Four for five complete days on foot, knowing he could follow faster and easier without animals to slow him down. What had followed his appearance was five straight days of unadulterated and blissful sex where he showed them just how devoted to them he truly was, just how sorry he was for not telling them, and why no other women would ever replace any of them. They in turn had shown him what he meant to their world, and in the end Martin Leonidas promised to never keep any secrets from his mates ever again. The one thing they all knew without question about the man they loved so dearly was simple.

Martin Leonidas never broke his promises.

"Beloved?" Aricia asked as they looked at him.

"I think Aikiro is here for whatever information or items she can get from the Mindvoice ship." Martin said softly feeling Isabella turn completely around and sit up.

"Ele xun dos talinth nindol m'ranndii?" Isabella asked him softly in the ancient vampire language. (Why do you think this husband?)

Martin shrugged. "A feeling." He said in reply. "My gut instinct. You may have sensed it somewhat Bella but Andro and I could feel it very strongly." He explained. "Aikiro is... she is incredibly powerful within Mindvoice."

"More than you Nauta Melme?" Dysea asked sitting up as well.

Martin nodded slowly. "Perhaps not in terms of raw power, but her control is absolute and she has had millennia to refine her skills and use her abilities in ways I have not even begun to harness. I will be the first to admit I have used my powers to augment my physical skills primarily. All of us have with the exception of you and For'mya Melda Min, simply because your skills are more latent in ability. I have begun using them in other ways with Helen and Thr'won's tutelage, but Andro is the one who has studied with them more. Why would she come here to deliver a message and a request that Yuri could have done herself as a Princess of the High Coven?"

"I felt something odd yes, but it was beyond my ability to sense completely." Bella answered with a nod. "I also felt it from two of the younger females within their group. Yuri does not concern me. She is stronger than when we last saw her, but so am I. The dragon she has bonded with however, he is another story. He is much darker than the others and I think he is pulling that darkness from Yuri."

Martin nodded. "Andro said as much." He spoke looking at her. "We'll know more when we tell them in the morning, but under no circumstances do I want her or Aikiro anywhere near Avi or the Mindvoice ship." He said quickly. "I put Ben in charge of that department because I know whatever they develop from what we gain in that ship will be for good. We have used the majority of the technological advances we have discovered from the City Ship to make things better for all of our people. If Aikiro were able to get anything from that ship; access the data banks, or even if she discovers it still has power, I have no doubts she will do everything within her ability to get on it somehow."

"And she would not use it for peaceful endeavors." For'mya spoke softly.

Martin shook his head. "Not a chance. We..." The chime from the main door sounded and drew their attention towards the long corridor. All of them knew that there were very few individuals who could get onto the estate property let alone ring the chime on their main door.

Dysea rose to her feet quickly. "I will chase away whoever it is." She spoke pulling the nearly transparent robe tighter around her body. Her nipples pushed against the thin fabric as well as outlining the fullness of her large breasts. The robe clung to her hips and the perfect shape of her muscular ass as well, the tie holding the robe closed but doing nothing to hide her body underneath. She moved down the corridor in confident and graceful strides and quickly passed her hand over the scanner waiting for it to slide open. She opened her mouth to speak but stopped when she saw Deia and her Deputy.

"Deia?" She asked in a surprised voice. "What is wrong?"

"I'm so sorry for interrupting you and the others Dysea." Deia spoke. "I know Andro and Eliani and the others took the smaller ones tonight so you could be together. This can't wait however."

Dysea didn't hesitate and stepped to the side of the door. "Of course Deia." She said motioning her in. "Come in. We are in the main sitting room just lounging around and talking of different things."

Dysea didn't even glance at Laustinos as they moved past her. She secured the door again and then brushed past him once more to lead them into the main room. She didn't see the look on his face as he took in her near naked form under the robe, and she didn't see him quietly inhale quite deeply of her scent as she moved down the corridor into the main sitting room. His eyes watched the curve of her incredible ass as she walked in front of him. Dysea had warned them they had company within Mindvoice and she saw that they had acted quickly and gathered their things off the floor and moved the large table back with the two large couches and single chairs.

Martin sat on the couch now wearing his loose black pants, Aricia on one side of him with her legs tossed over his lap and her back against the arm of the couch. Her robe was similar to Dysea and Isabella's but a light blue in color. Anja occupied the other side of Martin on the couch, For'mya and Isabella pressed up against each other on the floor at Anja's feet. Martin looked up from the pad he was reading as Deia walked in casually. She was one of the few who had seen the King and Queens in this manner and she had been here enough times to know that they had simply been enjoying the company of each other. Many thought that the King and his Queens had sexual encounters every night, how could they not, with the King being so powerful and the Queens so beautiful. Deia knew better. She knew that part of their power as a ruling family and their appeal among the people was that they were so normal. Deia had arrived here at the villa on many occasions to find them simply lounging around with each other, enjoying the company of each other. Deia also knew that the Queens, because of who they were and what they looked like, were the sexual fantasies of many young Spartans and elves. She also knew their devotion to her nephew was absolute and nothing would ever alter that. She saw Martin's eyes move to where Laustinos followed her into the main room and he lowered the pad he was reading.

"Deia?" Martin asked softly seeing the look on her face. "This is unexpected."

"Forgive me for interrupting Mandri." Deia spoke as she settled to the couch opposite where he was and watched as Dysea gracefully moved to the couch and positioned herself next to Anja and without conscious thought she draped a long leg over Isabella's shoulder. "This is too important to wait."

Martin glanced at Laustinos and then back to her. "What is too important?"

Deia took a deep breath and stood up handing him the data pad from across the low table before sitting back down. Laustinos stood to the side of the couch watching his King as his eyes began to read. Laustinos was no where near as muscular and defined as the King, but he was in excellent shape and kept himself very fit. He could not understand however why any of the Queens found him so attractive with the myriad of scars dotting his body, some of them quite ugly to gaze upon. He tensed as Martin's head came up.

"This is a joke right?" He asked.

Deia sighed and shook her head. "I'm afraid not." She said.

"Nauta Melme... what is it?" Dysea asked as they all felt his aura change drastically from one of peace and calm to one of anger.

Martin handed the pad to Dysea and his eyes went to Laustinos. "Exactly what part of I want no contact with the Kavalians do you not understand?" Martin growled. "It is a clear and precise order. You chose to disregard it?"

Dysea's head came up quickly from where she and Anja were reading the pad. "You granted them passage into Union space?" She gasped her emerald eyes wide. "Why?"

“Did the last LSD jump scatter your common sense Laustinos?” Martin snapped as he eased Aricia’s legs from his lap and got to his feet slowly. He moved around the side of the couch his back to them. “Who authorized you to grant Trade Negotiations with them? And why the hell would you bring them here?”

“Milord... Milord... the Trade Ministry falls under my authority.” Laustinos stammered. “I do have the ability to sanction Trade negotiations sire. Only the final accord is voted upon by the Senate. The Kavalians offered... they have offered to replace our entire allocation of Notal Berries that the Rurudan Consortium can no longer provide because of the mass flooding of the fields on their homeworld.”

“Did you stop to consider they can do that because they conquered the Merfok Imperial Ruling Family when they reclaimed the old planets of the Kavalian Empire? Planets that for the most part have claimed independence and formed democratic alliances themselves. The Merfok Royal Family has been hiding on Hadaria since they lost their planet!” Dysea spoke from the couch looking at Laustinos.

“How do we know that the Kavalians didn’t cause the massive flooding on the Rurudan homeworld so that they could do this?” Aricia asked.

“That is highly unlikely.” Laustinos spoke quickly. “I have their assurances that this Trade delegation is only interested in peaceful ventures.”

“This coming from an Empire that invaded the High Coven with thousands of ships and millions of troops that they built in secret. Then they conquered everything they could.” Isabella spoke now. “Millions of lives were lost fighting them. And I’m not talking about the ranks of the High Coven soldiers either. We allowed over three million refugees into the Union ourselves.”

“Their assurances don’t mean fucking squat!” Anja barked out. “They were on Earth conducting covert operations! Trying to steal dragon eggs and supporting a man that had killed Union citizens for hundreds of years!”

“We can not hold an entire species accountable for one man’s actions Queen Anja, no matter how horrible they may have been.” Laustinos spoke calmly. “No matter whom that man might be.” He said looking at Martin’s back.

“Is that why you think I won’t initiate negotiations with the Kavalians bastards?” Martin asked turning back around to look at Laustinos. “Because of my brother?”

“Sire... I understand what you may feel in regards to Pleistarchus, or Pusintin, whatever he calls himself now. I...” Laustinos tried to reason with a calm tone in his voice.

“Have no idea what you are talking about!” Aricia snapped coming to her feet now. “You dare stand there and say you know how he feels?”

“Queen Aricia... I said I understand how the King feels. Not that I know how he feels. I have not tried to imply I have knowledge in regards to what he has experienced concerning his brother.” Laustinos spoke keeping his voice even. He was on shaky ground here he knew and needed to keep his wits about him, but he felt he was right and no one would change his mind. “There is a woman leading the delegation. Based on what we know of the Kavalians does that not itself say they are in some respects no longer the violent race we have known them to be?”

“Did you miss the part where Stenys says this woman is a product of their experiments with biogenics?” Dysea spoke again, also getting to her feet now. “Or the fact that this female... this Jalersi is also the mate and wife to Pusintin?”

Laustinos’s eyes grew a little wider. “I did not... I did not read the First Secretary’s complete report.” He admitted.

“Yet your foolish initial actions have led them to now request they be allowed to open an embassy here as well as conduct trade talks.” Dysea said. “Not to mention they want to meet with Martin. The Durcunusaan would never allow this to happen given what Martin did too this woman’s husband. He also states that Pusintin’s oldest son is among this delegation, not to mention one of their senior military commanders.”

“They have made these requests yes.” Laustinos said trying to keep his voice even. “It should not matter that this Pusintin’s wife and son are among the delegation members. And do we not regularly send military officers on trade negotiations?” He spoke.

“Contact the ship carrying them and tell them to turn their asses around and go home.” Martin barked. “We’ll make due without their berries.”

Laustinos looked horrified but before he could speak Deia shook her head and beat him to it. “We can’t do that now Mandri.” She spoke softly. “It would be the highest breach of protocol to conduct ourselves in such a way.”

“Fuck protocol!” Martin snapped. “I don’t want those bastards anywhere near my planet. And certainly not when the High Coven is here! Jesus Christ... did you even think what kind of problems that can cause?” Martin glared at Laustinos.

“Martin... I have already made this very clear to Laustinos.” Deia spoke calmly knowing she had to speak now and keep Laustinos from bearing the full brunt of Martin’s anger. “The fact remains however that we can not refuse them now. We must meet with them.”

“What the hell for?” Martin demanded.

“We must meet with them now because Laustinos has unwittingly opened the door.” Deia said. “If we tell them we have changed our minds then we risk alienating the other governments that have sided with us in ostracizing them.”

“We’re going to do that anyway when those governments find out we have approved a trade delegation to come here.” Dysea spoke. “They’re going to ask why we can do this and they can not? Then they are going to do it themselves.”

“They’re expecting someone from the Royal Family to meet with them.” Deia said. “It is how we always do things Martin. You put that order into place yourself.”

Laustinos looked surprised at this information and his eyes went back and forth between Deia and Martin. “I can handle this King Leonidas. I have brokered trade agreements before.” He spoke finally.

“This is not about trade agreements Laustinos.” Dysea said meeting his eyes scornfully. “This is about them gathering intelligence on why the High Coven is here.” She turned to look at Martin as she stood up and began moving around the couch. “I will go and meet with them Nauta Melme.”

“Melda Min...” Martin said.

“I will go.” For’mya spoke for the first time as she got to her feet, her eyes on Laustinos as she stood up. “I will take Resumar, Cemath and Aurith with me.” For’mya said as she moved around the couch to stand in front of Martin. “Resumar has studied the Kavalians more than any of us. Isabella needs to remain here to help you and Vonis watch the Coven. Aricia and Isheeni will no doubt play a role in helping Andro and Dysea and Anja both have classes they need to teach at the University. It would look very odd if one of them were to miss all of those duties, especially when we do not wish to draw anymore attention to this event then necessary.”

“Milord... I’m sure Queen Dysea and I can conduct this in the way you want it handled.” Laustinos spoke. “We...”

“I don’t remember asking for your input or your council Laustinos!” Martin growled at him. “You’ve done enough already!”

“Milord... may I ask why you refuse to at least open talks with them!” Laustinos spoke quickly and stepping forward. “I do not understand your reasoning behind refusing to at least speak with them.”

Martin looked at him. “I have four hundred and ninety-three reasons not to trust those bastards!” Martin growled. “And that doesn’t include my brother.” He looked at For’mya. “Are you sure Kinsoaurgai?”

For’mya smiled and pressed her body tightly against his. She loved it when he used his special name for her. He had begun calling her that long before he had changed her all those years ago. It held a very special meaning for them both and only his other Queens knew the true meaning behind those words. It had been For’mya who had been his anchor during those weeks after Aricia had been taken from him. Without her physical presence to hold onto during that time, her calm and loving mind to grasp within his, Martin Leonidas would have accomplished the goal he had set out with. He would have ended up getting himself killed during the battle on Ukwav over Aricia’s loss. It had been For’mya’s growing love for him that had kept him from completing that task, and her voice that had told him what his heart needed to do. It was her voice that had given him the strength to reclaim his mate of pure blood.

“I am sure.” For’mya answered meeting his dark eyes with her own and smiling up at him.

Laustinos shook his head. “Milord... in my opinion Queen Dysea would be better suited for this mission.” He said quickly. “She...”

“She is what?” Isabella asked getting to her feet now and staring at him.

Laustinos glanced at her quickly. “Queen Dysea is the more recognizable diplomat.” He answered hurriedly. “She is better known among the Union’s Queens in diplomatic matters Lady Isabella.”

[Mindvoice Shielded] [M’rannidii I’m beginning to not like this fool more and more.] Isabella spoke.

[Yes... I second that.] Martin spoke meeting her hazel green eyes. Martin shook his head after a moment. “For’mya’s right...” He said. “Melda Min and Anja will be missed almost immediately by the vultures at the Netnews channels. They have not come near For’mya since the end of the war and the tongue lashing she gave them. It will also send a message to the Kavalians.”

“What message?” Deia asked as she stood up.

“That I don’t intend to dick around with them in regards to anything.” Martin said. “They come here, present their case and we say no and send them packing.”

“May I suggest we wait until we get them here before making that determination?” Deia spoke.

Martin looked at her oddly. “Tenna... why?”

[This might be an intelligence opportunity for us as well Martin.] Deia spoke shielded knowing Laustinos did not have the skills within Mindvoice capable of detecting their shielded conversation. Deia on the other hand, thanks to her blood ties to Martin and her own training through the years, was a Tier Six Mindvoicer.

[She is right Nauta Melme.] Dysea spoke.

[Laustinos has put us in a corner Mandri yes... but we should also use this opportunity just as the Kavalian dogs will no doubt use it.] Deia said keenly. [It may help us with our other problem in some way. Perhaps give us an insight to whether the information the Coven gave to us is actually true.]

[Vonis was right Deia.] Isabella spoke with a small smile. [You are devious.]

[I am not one to miss a prospect of discovering more about those who we have been told want to invade Union space.] Deia said.

[Fine... trade talks.] Martin said. [An embassy is out of the question. We...] Martin stopped for a long moment. [No... I won’t say that now. If this information turns out to be true... we’ll make that decision later.]

Deia smiled at him. [You are learning to blend the political and military together very well Mandri. No doubt the influence of your Queens is rubbing off on you.]

Martin met her smile and shrugged. [Go figure.]

[What about Laustinos Martin?] Deia asked.

[It would look odd if we just cut him out of the loop now Nauta Melme.] Dysea spoke as she stepped close to him and joined For’mya in pressing her body against his. [Let him go with For’mya. It is something the Kavalians no doubt expect.]

Martin turned his eyes on For’mya. [Kinsoargai?]

For’mya nodded. [I will control him... do not worry. Besides... he desires Dysea not me. Probably because her goldur are so much larger than mine.]

Dysea looked at her with mock indignation. [For’mya...] She exclaimed.

Martin chuckled and pulled both of them closer and nodded. “Very well...” He spoke looking at Laustinos. “For’mya goes with Res.” His eyes went back to For’mya. “You can take MJOLNIR’S HAND. Transfer their party to her and then bring them here. Put them up in the new facility on the edge of the city overlooking the river.”

Deia nodded. “I will make the necessary arrangements.” She spoke. “They should leave in the morning then, to arrive when First Secretary Stenys told them they would.” She took the pad from the table where Anja had placed it and looked at Laustinos.

“Make sure you are on the Durcunusaan airfield at seven tomorrow morning Laustinos.” For’mya spoke not turning or removing her arms from Martin’s waist. “If you are late... I’ll leave without you.”

Laustinos nodded his head. “As you wish.”

Deia took his arm. “We will leave you Mandri.” She spoke. “We’ll find our own way out.”

Martin looked at Anja and Aricia as Deia ushered Laustinos out of the villa. His arm snaked around For’mya’s waist tighter as they came up to them. “You two didn’t say much.” He said softly.

“Aricia and I don’t trust those bastards.” Anja quipped holding Aricia’s hand tightly in her own. “She fought them directly here on Earth and I examined their clones afterwards. I wouldn’t trust them any more than I trust the Coven.”

“They are brutal and arrogant.” Aricia said. “But that might also be their biggest flaw.” She looked at For’mya. “You must promise to be careful in your dealings with them For’mya.”

“I will be.” She answered.

“And be mindful of that fool Laustinos.” Dysea said.

Isabella nodded. “He is thinking of greatness and glory and nothing more.”

For’mya nodded. “Yes... I noticed that as well. He wants Deia’s job.”

Martin chuckled. “Well he can’t have her job.” He leaned over and nuzzled For’mya’s cheek and the top of her elven ear, feeling her shudder in delight. “Right now... I think we should show you just how much we will miss you.” He lifted her into his arms and before she could utter a sound his lips covered hers and he began walking towards their bedroom.

“So much for a quiet evening.” Anja said with a smile.

Aricia stood behind her and now she leaned forward to nuzzle Anja’s neck. “We could stay out here and read boring intelligence reports Anja.” She spoke huskily.

Isabella and Dysea stepped closer to her as well, their eyes radiating heat and sexual desire. “Yes Melyanna...” Dysea spoke softly as she pressed her body tightly to Anja’s. “I’m sure you would much rather do that wouldn’t you?”

Isabella moved behind Anja as well and pressed her front to Anja’s back while leaning over her shoulder and brushing her ear with her lips. “What shall we do Anja?” She asked over Anja’s shoulder in a voice overflowing with desire.

Anja’s body was on fire by now as she felt the female auras of both Dysea and Aricia pulsing through her to compliment Isabella’s desire filled voice. She spun around quickly, snatching Isabella’s hand and pulling her from next to Aricia. “Oh... I have plans for you Bella my love!” She announced as she headed for their bedroom pulling a smiling Isabella with her. For’mya’s cries of rapture were already filling the air from their bedroom and that meant Martin was hitting her with enough of his aura to drive her mad with desire.

Aricia and Dysea chuckled as they moved up next to each other, their arms sliding around each other’s waists. Dysea leaned her head close to Aricia’s, her own desire creeping higher as she felt Aricia’s female aura surround her now as well, and she easily returned the sensations. Aricia and Dysea shared something that For’mya and Anja, as female wolves, had never and probably would never experience. Aricia because she was pure Lycavorian and Dysea because she was the first Martin had turned. Only the two of them could tolerate Martin Leonidas’s full unshielded aura. If exposed to his unshielded aura, Anja or For’mya would want nothing more than to sate the sexual need his aura could ignite within them. Nothing else would matter in that circumstance or in their minds. Aricia and Dysea were able to take his full aura, and while it drove them into a sexual frenzy as equally as it would Anja or For’mya, they were able to retain their ability to think and act.

Martin was able to use his aura to its fullest extent on both Anja and For’mya, touching them with enough of it to increase their pleasure and desire, but never once exceeding what they could tolerate. He could use his aura with maddening precision on all of them, his ability to control that part of his Lycavorian blood nearly unmatched by any male from what Helen had told them. Martin Leonidas... their beloved mate and husband... he wanted them to enjoy their encounters as much as he did and he had no desire to have a woman whose only purpose was to mindlessly please him. It was one of the reasons that they all loved him so. No matter how many times they had been with him through the years, his first thoughts were of them and their pleasure, and they always had been.

“We must have Deia talk to that fool man.” Aricia said softly as she leaned into Dysea as well now. “Martin will not be able to tolerate Laustinos’s obvious shows of desire for you in front of him much longer.”

“I did not think he had noticed?” Dysea asked in an equally soft voice.

“Dysea... you don’t honestly believe that would escape our Beloved’s notice do you?” Aricia asked meeting her beautiful emerald eyes. “Our Beloved is an Alpha Dysea, the most powerful Alpha within the Union. No one that shows even the slightest interest in his mates will escape his notice. Martin has tolerated Laustinos’s coy looks and his pitiful attempts to insure he is alone with you over the years, as he has with other males, but even his patience has limits. He knows he has to tolerate looks of envy from other males at times. He has our devotion and love and others do not, and we desire no one but him. Laustinos is so very indiscrete about his actions now however.”

Dysea looked at her calmly though a little embarrassed. "It is silly of me to think he didn't notice." She said. She reached up and caressed Aricia's cheek with feather like strokes of her finger. "Little Wolf... have you... have you ever desired another man?"

Aricia met her eyes. "No." She said instantly. "Nor has Anja..." She smiled at the look of surprise on Dysea's face. "We had this same conversation returning from Hadaria."

Dysea breathed a sigh of relief and pressed closer to her. "That only proves to me that we are meant for each other... all of us... for I have never desired another either. And neither has Bella... and she is much worldlier than all of us in that regard. What of this man that has caused Melyanna so much anguish?"

"I made some inquiries." Aricia answered with a smile. "Discretely of course. He is a former Durcunusaan member. One of those that went with Martin and her to Lycavore. General Vengal dismissed him from the Durcunusaan a year after they returned. No reason was given in his file and he was then posted to Hadaria as embassy security. He apparently met Seanna on the mission and they began seeing each other in earnest a few months after Eliani was born."

"And he is the one who attempted to get Seanna to convince Melyanna to share their bed?" Dysea asked.

"That is what Anja believes." Aricia said. "She doesn't think Seanna would do that on her own. She knew how deeply Anja loves Martin. Seanna stopped asking her about it several months before she was killed. About the same time they stopped speaking to one another."

Dysea shook her head slowly. "Why is it that men can't seem to find their own females?" She asked. "They always desire the mate or wife of another."

Aricia grinned. "Lucky for us our mate doesn't have that problem."

Dysea matched her grin. "No he does not. And why should he? He has more than enough variety with us."

Aricia looked at her elven fellow Queen and took in her elegant four inch elven ears. Whether Dysea's or For'mya's, Aricia adored their ears and not only because it was a major erogenous zone for both of them. She lifted her hand and used her index finger to trace a line between Dysea's full firm breasts. "Our mates are enjoying themselves Dysea my love. What do you think we should do?" She asked in a seductive voice.

Dysea grinned and pulled her closer until their breasts were crushed against each other and she pressed a muscular thigh against Aricia's bare pussy beneath the thin robe. "I think perhaps we should make our way into our room and indulge ourselves of the pleasures we will find there with our mates."

Aricia smiled and kissed Dysea's soft lips reveling in the wildflower taste and scent of her fellow Queen. "I wholeheartedly agree." Aricia stated. "It has been some time since I have tasted you."

"It has only been two days Little Wolf." Dysea said with a smile.

"That's a very long time!" Aricia said pulling her hands tightly into her grasp. "Come Dysea my love... I want you all to myself for a time. Then perhaps we can find ourselves something long, thick and exceptionally hard and delicious to taste, lick and lavish with our attentions. By then Anja might be done torturing Bella and she will allow us to partake of her amazing tongue and lingual talents."

Dysea's emerald eyes closed dreamily and she nodded quickly. "That sounds utterly divine."

Giggling like young girls they held hands as they raced for the bedroom finding exactly what they knew they would find.

GALLAIS'S RETREAT

Gallais's Retreat was full as it always was this time of night. The upper portion of the tavern and eatery was taken up by the single large table where all of the Leonidas children were crowded around the table talking and laughing. It was a sight to see really, fourteen young men and women ranging in age from five hundred plus years to just over nine years of age. This night however they were joined by two new members of their monthly gatherings here, though only Sadi was actually new to the group. Moneus was already considered part of their family because he had grown up with them and their fathers considered themselves brothers. Carina sat next to Moneus now, nibbling his elven ear from time to time, with a look of pure love and satisfaction on her face. Their first night together, after she had wrapped the shadows around them and they disappeared from the party shortly after Andro and Sadi, had been far more than Carina had ever dreamed of.

They had shared deep kisses before that night, but Moneus had never gone further than that because of the respect he held for not only Carina, but her father and tradition as well. He had made up for it these past two glorious days and nights in spades. Carina had not come down from her orgasmic high until earlier this afternoon. Moneus had kept her on the edge of the pleasure abyss for hours on end that first night; simply exploring every portion of her lithe body in ways Carina had not known could exist. He had changed so much in only two short days and Carina could not have been more ecstatic about that. He was no longer the reserved Spartan in public with her that he had always been. They had gone shopping this afternoon together, and Moneus had taken every opportunity to return her nibbles and kisses of love and commitment to her and unlike before, he no longer cared who saw them. The hours in bed had been glorious to Carina for Moneus filled her, stretched her in a way her sisters had never told her it would be like. He had feasted upon her body as if it was his last meal, and Carina had happily returned the favor.

Her mothers had told her the pleasure she could experience by giving her man equal attention with just her lips and tongue, and Carina discovered they had not been wrong about that in the least. She simply could not get enough of stuffing Moneus thick cock into her throat as deeply as she was able and feeling the control she had over him as he withered in pleasure. It was no different than when he did the same to her, and even more so when they performed such an act together. Tasting his spicy blood for the first time had sent jolting electric shocks of utter ecstasy through both of them as Carina had bit deeply into his neck at the peak of their mutual orgasm, nearly tripling the pleasure they had experienced up until then. By the time it was over, Moneus had bite marks all over his neck and shoulders, and he was not at all unhappy about that. Carina knew his elven ears were extremely sensitive and while they were not as much of an erogenous zone for male elves as they were for females, Carina had discovered just what she had to do to make her new husband scream out her name.

Sadi sat next to Andro and was clutching his arm tightly listening to Arrarn relate a story of when they were smaller. Eliani and Nyla sat to her left, Lisisa and Denali to Andro's right. All around the table they sat and not one of them denied attention to their younger brothers and sisters in the least. Sadi was struck by the closeness they all shared, and even though she was very close to her older brothers, this was something completely different. There was closeness between the Leonidas clan that went beyond simple blood ties, and she suspected it had to do with the incredible power all of them had within Mindvoice. Sadi noticed that all of them deferred to Andro in almost all cases, even Lisisa who was so much older than him. They all knew Andro was not far from equaling their father in power and abilities, but they also knew this knowledge had not changed him in all the years.

"...so Andro, Res and Deni come rolling back to the island palace at like oh dark thirty." Arrarn was saying. "They were trying to sneak in without getting caught... only problem was... they didn't realize Uncle Andreus was on duty that night, and he scented them the minute they entered the restricted palace area."

Eliani and Lisisa laughed. "They were so busted!" Eliani exclaimed.

"Hey... I was just following my older brothers! I didn't know we were going into the palace restricted zone and Andro forgot to turn off the sensors!" Deni exclaimed.

Lisisa elbowed him in the gut. "Like we are supposed to believe that?" Lisisa declared. "If I remember correctly, at least Andro and Res fessed up to it. You tried to deny it for weeks afterwards." Lisisa turned back to Sadi. "Andro and Res only got one whipping. Deni got five."

"Four." Denali corrected her. "The one from grandmother doesn't count."

Sadi laughed and squeezed Andro's arm. "So you weren't the proper Prince everyone thinks you were?" She asked.

"Oh hell no!" Andro admitted. "I got into more trouble than the rest of them combined. Most of the time because I was covering for them!"

"Don't you have another sister?" Sadi asked. "How come she isn't here?" She watched Andro's face change to one of somber silence and as she looked around she saw Eliani's face was the same as were the rest of them. "Oh carians... what did I say?" She blurted clearly embarrassed.

"Yuriko." Lisisa said softly. "And no Sadi you have said nothing wrong." She said reaching out to touch her hand.

"Right after the Evolli war ended she and father had a falling out." Eliani said gently. "Yuriko... she was... she is very headstrong and proud... things were said... terrible things. She checks in with one of us every few months... but she swore never to return here to Sparta or Earth. As proud as both of them are... it would take a miracle to bring them back together now.”

Lisisa nodded slowly. “The things they said to each other were... they were things neither of them should have uttered.”

Andro squeezed Sadi’s hand. “She is fine. Like Eliani said... one of us speaks to her every few months. She is, and always will be, our sister.”

“Enough!” Denali bellowed as he pushed back his chair and got to his feet. He lifted his glass of Spartan Wine. “I would like to make a toast!”

Lisisa laughed and rolled her eyes. “Oh boy... here we go! Another toast!”

“Hey! I’m getting better!” Deni barked out loudly.

“In whose opinion?” Lisisa asked quickly. “Yours or mine?”

“Your opinion doesn’t count sister.” Deni snapped.

Lisisa stabbed her fingers into his side. “What to bet!” She snarled with a laugh. “It’s my ears you damage.”

“Bah!” Deni said waving his hand at her and causing all of them to laugh.

“Deni... not like the last one ok.” Nyla broke in. “You had us all falling out of our chairs in laughter at the last toast you made.”

Eliani chortled. “Yeah... and I swallowed my noodles down the wrong tube because I was laughing so hard!”

“That’s why we call you noodle nose!” Andro chimed in.

“Are you going to let me toast or not!” He demanded.

“Deni... not so loud this time!” Retta exclaimed from Resumar’s lap. That brought laughter from all of them, causing Denali to blush even under his dark tan.

“Ok Retta.” Denali said softly. “Not so loud this time.” He turned and looked at Andro and Carina. “I know... I know we do this every month... but this one is special. On behalf of all my brothers and sisters I would like to welcome you to our family Sadi. Moneus... you don’t count cause you are already part of the family.”

“Deni!” Carina barked throwing a bread roll at him that Denali ducked and it sailed over the railing of their private area.

“Seriously though... Sadi... Moneus... welcome.” Denali spoke his words softer and spoken with great feeling. He looked directly at Sadi. “We’ve heard about you for years Sadi... and in some respects hearing Andro talk about you, even at the oddest times, it made us all closer to you somehow. Now we can finally talk to you whenever we want... and complain to you since Andro never listens to us anyway!”

“And get all of Andro’s dirty little secrets!” Resumar chimed in as everyone laughed at his words.

Denali turned to Moneus. “Moneus... we’ve fought together... bled together... and I can honestly say I don’t think any of us could have wished for a better man that our sister could have chosen than you.” Denali said. He lifted his glass in salute to them. “Welcome... both of you.”

Sadi’s eyes were moist as she rested her head on Andro’s shoulder and squeezed his arm even tighter. “Thank you Deni.” She said softly.

“Now we want to know if they made you scream their names like proper Spartan wolves should do?” Arrarn asked the question.

“Arrarn!” Nyla blurted out. “That is so rude!”

“I was curious that’s all!” Arrarn defended himself.

Normya slugged her brother in his arm as hard as she could. “Carians... you are a sick pervert!” She exclaimed.

Eliani and Lisisa looked at Sadi and Carina with glints in their eyes. “Well?” Lisisa asked.

Sadi was not in the least bit embarrassed because of the company she was in and she looked at Andro with a seductive glint in her jungle green eyes. “Oh yes he did.” She said softly. “I’m actually surprised I didn’t keep Gytheio awake.”

“Lucky he has the island then.” Resumar spoke with a grin.

“Sister?” Zarah asked from across the table and looking at Carina. “And don’t forget Normya and I only live six villas away! We can get the truth from your neighbors!”

Carina tilted her head back and forth with a brilliant smile. “Well we don’t have an island but we did keep our neighbors awake that was for sure.”

Moneus couldn’t help the grin that split his face. “I had to chase the centurions away three times.” He admitted sheepishly.

That brought another round of laughter from those at the table and Andro pulled Sadi close to him and they shared a deep kiss. Denali settled back into his chair with a smile and unseen by everyone Lisisa slipped her hand under the table and squeezed his thigh.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [That was beautiful Deni.] She told him with love in her forest green eyes. [Truly.]

Denali smiled and took her hand under the table squeezing it within his. [I am going to devour you tonight Lisi. I’m going to explore every crevice of your body and worship you as you should be worshiped.]

Lisisa smiled and felt a sexual flush run through her at his words. [Well... I should hope so. That is your last glass of wine though... I want to taste you my love... not the wine in your skin and blood.]

[Fair enough.] He answered. Deni smiled at her and lifted his glass once more, only Lisisa watched as the crystal glass stopped halfway to his lips and his eyes shifted. She followed his gaze and saw the four men standing behind Andro on the landing just above the stairs. All of them were from the High Coven party they had seen earlier in the day.

“Andro?” Lisisa spoke quickly motioning with her head.

Andro met her eyes and saw where she was looking and he turned in his chair. He saw Dante and Javier standing behind them with the two other High Coven vampire soldiers, one of them an older but no less cruel looking man. Andro turned fully in his chair and looked at them, Sadi turning as well.

“Can I help you?” Andro asked in a calm voice.

Javier held out the bread roll that had hit him in the back of the head. “I believe this belongs to you.” He stated sternly.

Andro looked at the roll and smiled. “Oh yeah... thanks.” He spoke taking it from Javier’s hand and grinning as he placed it on his plate.

“It hit me in the head.” Javier snarled.

“Sorry about that.” Andro told him pleasantly enough. “She was aiming at my brother and missed.”

“Perhaps she should improve her aim.” Javier spoke.

Andro smiled once more. “I’ll have her work on that. Thanks for the advice.”

Dante stepped forward quickly. “Are the children of King Leonidas always so loud and obnoxious when they are out in public?” He asked evenly. “Your actions would not be allowed on our home planet.”

“That’s nice to know.” Lisisa spoke rather harshly looking at him. She knew who he was and who his mother was as well. “We aren’t on your home planet however. We’re on ours and I don’t think we’ll be visiting yours anytime soon.”

Dante met her eyes. “I was wondering when we would finally meet our half breed sister.” He spoke calmly. “You don’t look anywhere near as dangerous as your Netnews channels make you out to be.”

Lisisa snickered. “I can’t say as I have been waiting with baited breath to meet you I’ll tell you that.” She spoke with some distaste in her voice. “And you two High Coven pin heads are not my brothers by any stretch of the imagination so what you seem to think does not matter to me in the least.”

“We saw your dragon this morning. He was very hard to miss as large as he is.” Lucia spoke now as she moved up to stand between her brothers. “He seemed to be rather fat in fact.”

“Jeth is not fat!” Lisisa snapped.

“Ah... so his name is Jeth.” Javier spoke again.

“It sounds like some sort of disease.” Dante spoke with a sarcastic tone looking at his brother and sister as they both began to chuckle.

Lisisa started to rise from her chair but Deni took her arm. “Lisisa... don’t bother.” He spoke softly. “They aren’t worth the effort.”

“And now we hear from Denali Leonidas.” Dante stated with contempt in his cruel voice. “Protecting his half breed sister no less. How quaint. I don’t suppose you would do us the honor of introducing everyone Prince Androcles.”

Andro held up his hand before Denali could answer while never taking his own eyes from Dante's sneering face and then he smiled. "Is there something else you needed...? Dante is it?" Andro asked politely. "We're having a family celebration here, and meaning no disrespect, you are not part of that family. Thank you for returning the bread roll however."

Andro turned his back to Dante and leaned close to Sadi and nuzzled her neck and cheek. This only seemed to infuriate Dante more and he saw Sadi's eyes close in bliss and lean into Andro's nuzzles. Dante stepped closer.

"I take it the tour of Sparta is out of the question then Crown Princess Sadi?" Dante spoke with a grin. "That is your name isn't it? A shame really... to think I was actually looking forward to your personal company and attentions after the interest you seemed to show in me at the store earlier. I thought your actions were how Lycavorian females showed their interest in a male."

Resumar was just lifting the glass of wine to his lips when Dante spoke and now he turned his head quickly to the side, away from where Retta sat on his lap and spit the wine out as he burst out coughing. Eliani turned and looked at Dante with wide eyes, Denali and Lisisa stunned into speechlessness. Normya had her hands across her mouth as she gave out a gasp of surprise and Zarah had practically fallen over backwards out of her chair. Arrarn had moved from the table a few moments ago. All of them looked directly at Andro and Sadi and noticed that they had not moved from looking into each other's eyes and both of them were doing their best to ignore Dante and the others, which only seemed to infuriate them more.

"Pardon me... were you actually born this condescendingly stupid, or did your mother Yuri raise you to be this way?" Eliani barked out finally.

Dante's head snapped around to glare at Eliani with hate in his eyes. It was a look that simply bounced off her. "And we are finally graced with the words of the Leonidas daughter that sleeps with a pureblood traitor... of the same sex no less."

Eliani laughed at him and turned quickly to take Nyla's face in her hands, kissing her deeply. Nyla responded to the kiss just as ardently, pulling Eliani closer to her, and feeling the press of her body against hers. After a long moment they parted. Eliani smiled brightly at Nyla as she ran her four inch long tongue along Nyla's lips ever so slowly. "Hmmm... that was yummy." She said.

Nyla smiled in return, her green eyes bright. "Yes... ussta che it was. Can we do it again?"

Eliani turned back to Dante as she leaned into Nyla's embrace and she smiled as Nyla reached around and cupped Eliani's large breasts in her hands. "I do believe we will go home tonight and sleep with each other. Aside from my brothers, we don't see any men nearby that have the balls to handle Nyla and I. And I'm pretty sure whatever it is you got dangling between your scrawny legs will not come close to measuring up to Sadi or my sister's much higher standards. Isn't that right ladies?"

Sadi looked at Andro dreamily and smiled. "Not after what I've had the last two nights." She said confidently her eyes never leaving Andro's face. "And will have for the rest of my life."

Carina's eyes never left Dante's face from where she sat next to Moneus. Her head rested on his shoulder, one arm wrapped around his back the other hidden from view under the table. She smiled and looked at her new husband, his dark amber eyes watching Dante and the others with something akin to contempt. It was a look she had seen before and Carina had experienced first hand what came after those amber eyes gazed upon you in the way he was looking at Dante. "Why would I settle for second best...?" Carina asked. "When I already have the finest man in the universe."

"Like I said..." Eliani spoke with a nod. "Not a man in sight except for my brothers. Why don't you go back to your chair boy! Before you make a bigger fool out of yourself than you already have."

Nyla snickered as she leaned forward nuzzling Eliani's neck and ear causing the wolf in her to groan in desire and need. Then they all heard Retta break out laughing from Resumar's lap.

"Elli... Nyla... that man's face looks like it's going to explode. That would be funny. Can he do that?" Retta exclaimed.

This brought more laughter from the Leonidas children at the table and Dante's face darkened even more.

"Dante!" The female voice hissed, causing his head to snap around behind him. "That is quite enough!" Narice snarled. "Return to your table this instant!"

"They have insulted me Narice!" Dante hissed right back at her.

“You will do as I have directed you or I will return you to your chair myself!” Narice snapped at him. “We were instructed to avoid conflict and you are here attempting to instigate one.”

“And not doing a very good job I might add.” Lisisa spoke from next to Denali, a smile on her face.

Narice moved up onto the elevated portion of the dining area, her exotic features unable to hide her anger at his actions. They saw the raven haired female follow her, as well as the long flame haired High Coven officer, both of them taking up positions along the wall, their hands dropping to their sides. Narice walked up to Dante and sneered at him, her back now facing the table full of Leonidas children.

“We are not here to engage in verbal battles with these people!” Narice hissed at him, her face only inches from Dante’s. “A verbal battle you are losing badly because you are acting like a spoiled child! We...” Narice stopped talking when she felt the staggering presence within Mindvoice behind her and she turned slowly.

Andro stood just behind her, his azure eyes boring into her and she turned fully to face him. “Forgive him... he is still young and...”

“You are Yuri’s sister?” Andro spoke softly.

Narice nodded. “Yes.”

Andro looked at Dante and Javier and Lucia and then his eyes moved over the others and finally settled on Carisia where she stood next to Toria. Sadi was the only one to feel his heart begin to race and she stepped closer to him taking his hand as she too felt the same effect. “And all these charming individuals are Yuri’s kids I’m assuming... with the exception of mister “I have a stern face” back there in the corner?” Andro motioned to Thast.

“You will address my mother as Princess!” Lucia snapped.

Narice silenced her with a quick glare and she nodded her head turning back to face him. “Yes... that is true.” She turned and held out her hand to Carisia who hesitated for several moments before stepping away from the wall. “Carisia is the oldest...” She said holding her hand as Carisia stepped up with no small amount of fear and looked at Andro and Sadi.

Andro felt Sadi squeeze his arm more tightly than she ever had and both of them could only stare at Carisia’s flawless beauty and her stunning maya blue eyes.

“You have met Dante and Javier... and this is Lucia, the youngest of my sister’s children. Toria is a senior aide to my mother and a friend.” Narice finished turning back to Andro. “We are five of those bonded to dragons that have come here hoping you will help us.”

“Aunt Narice! We don’t need to beg for their help!” Lucia snapped.

“We don’t need their help at all!” Dante snarled. “We can fight the Kavalians ourselves!”

Andro looked at him and turned back to the table after a moment. He lifted the glass of Spartan Wine and took a long pull from it before turning back. “Three point seven seconds.” Andro said.

Dante looked at him oddly. “What is that? Do you tell us how long you last during sex?” He laughed out loud. Only Thast, Javier and the other soldier saw any humor in it.

Andro chortled at his words. “Remember that time Dante.” He said with some inflection. “You’ll need it if you are to survive against the Kavalians.” Andro turned and looked at Sadi. “Call Elynth KertaGai... we will take the others back to our villa in Gytheio and finish the party there.”

Sadi nodded and turned to see Normya and Zarah already holding the hands of their younger brothers while Resumar stepped up to Sadi with both Retta and Nara in his arms. Sadi abruptly realized as she stood there, that becoming Andro’s wife and his Anome had suddenly propelled her into a central position of some higher status within the Leonidas family hierarchy, especially among his brothers and sisters. As she took Nara from Resumar’s grasp, the ten year old girl transferring to her arms with barely a pause, Sadi found she welcomed that new status and silently swore to never betray that vow of trust. Resumar stepped up to the tall red haired vampire Narice had called Toria after setting Retta down. He stared at her stunning blue eyes as he motioned behind her.

“I need that bag.” He spoke motioning to the small bag on the floor behind her.

Toria found it very difficult to tear her eyes from Resumar’s handsome face as she stepped to the side and he bent over to retrieve it. She had not realized this Prince of Lycavore was so very imposing, not to mention incredibly good looking. The images they had of him did not do him credit in the least. Resumar stepped back up to his brother, looking at Toria one last time before meeting Andro’s eyes and picking up Retta again, their shoulders touching. "I'm going to drop these off at Fleet and then bring Retta out to your place. I'm going to call it quits prematurely though because mother and I are leaving early."

Andro nodded as he met his brother's dark eyes. "Fly safe brother." He spoke. "And watch yourself out there."

Narice and the others watched as Eliani, Nyla, Lisisa and Denali were getting to their feet. "I did not mean for Dante's actions to cause you and your siblings to leave." Narice spoke. "We should be the ones to leave."

Andro shook his head. "You are guests in Sparta." He said calmly. "You should enjoy this night... you won't get many more like them over the next few months."

"Is that a threat?" Thast demanded as he pushed forward from the wall.

Andro chuckled and his azure eyes looked at Thast with hardly any interest in them. "I don't make threats Commander." He spoke knowing that Carisia was staring at him now.

Carisia turned to look at Narice. "They are going to train us." She said quickly.

Narice looked from her to Andro with wide eyes. "Is this true?" She asked softly. "Has your father decided?"

"Three point seven seconds." Andro said once more bowing his head slightly. "I will see all of you very soon."

Narice and Carisia watched as he turned and took Nara from Sadi's arms and then took her hand and began walking out. Nyla led Eliani past them with a smile a mile wide, Eliani holding onto her waist in a very intimate fashion. They watched Lisisa step up in front of them, Denali waiting just five steps away and in a soft shimmer of bluish white light Arrarn Leonidas appeared directly behind Narice as if out of the thin air.

Narice spun around quickly, her eyes wide at not having detected him in any manner, the others backing up quickly from where he now stood. Narice stared into his dark eyes with shock and saw a mischievous glint in them.

Arrarn smiled. "It's a new toy we have developed." He said looking at Narice's shocked expression. "Comes in quite handy actually." They watched him holster the Nehtes and brush against Narice as he moved to stand next to Lisisa. As he passed Narice, Arrarn took in a very deep breath and was shocked to discover Narice smelled of ripe pineapples, fresh and ready to be eaten. He turned back to look at her, the expression of stunned shock on her face still there. "I think it's safe Moneus. Carina." He stated casually.

Half a dozen sets of eyes went to where Moneus rose from his chair, his Nehtes gripped in his hand and Carina's hand came away from his waist and she sheathed the wicked looking curved blade of the Shakur Fighting knife.

"Three point seven seconds." Arrarn stated before he too turned and followed Moneus and his sister out.

Carisia looked at Lisisa. This woman was her half sister, a half sister that she hoped to one day have a relationship with. "What... what do they mean?" She asked softly. "Three point seven seconds?"

"Four hundred and twenty-nine flechettes. That is what makes up the majority of a T19's warhead. Only two Bonded Pairs have ever survived the full blast of a T19 from point blank range." Lisisa said softly looking at them. "My father and my brother. The only reason they survived is because their psychic shields are more powerful than anything any of you could hope to have." Lisisa spoke looking directly at Dante. "Three point seven seconds is the average time it takes for a T19 from launch to impact. Three point seven seconds before it blows you and your dragon to nubous pieces. In those three point seven seconds you have three decisions to make. One... you rotate to face the smallest cone of the missile and hope you get it right and it doesn't shred you to pieces or penetrate your shields. Two... try to outrun it which is next to impossible. Or three... kill the bastard who fired it before you die." Lisisa looked at them, her eyes settling on Carisia and Narice. "Just a little bit of information for you." She said with a smile. "We'll see you tomorrow..." She turned to glare at Javier and Lucia. "And I'll show you just how fat Jeth really is when he swats you from the sky like the amateurs you are."

Denali reached out and took her arm. "Lisi... let's go." He spoke softly.

Lisisa began to turn but stopped and turned back to look at them. "And if you think fat man there..." She motioned to Thast whose eyes darkened at her words. "Or any of you could have stopped Andro or my other brothers from wiping the floor with your vampire asses you would have been painfully mistaken."

Dante opened his mouth to retort but Narice's hand came up with the speed of a striking viper and she slapped him viciously across the face. "You will not speak another word or I will cut your tongue out of your mouth and I will not care you are my sister's son!" Narice's reaction stunned all of them except Carisia and they remained silent as she turned to look at Lisisa.

"We will heed your words Lisisa Leonidas." She spoke softly. "Thank you."

One of Gallais's managers came rushing over now as he saw that the Leonidas children were leaving far earlier than they usually did.

"Princess Lisisa? Prince Denali? Is something wrong?" The man asked.

Lisisa turned to him. "No Roaban... nothing is wrong." She said gently. "Andro and Sadi want to stay at the villa and we are moving there. You know how newly mated wolves are. Will you make sure that whatever our High Coven guests need or want is provided to them? And you may bill my personal account, or Denali's... whichever is easiest."

The man looked at her oddly. "As you wish Princess." He said.

Lisisa looked at the High Coven party once more. "Leave your arrogance on the tarmac when you come tomorrow. Androcles will not tolerate it... and nor will any other of those he chooses to train you." She said.

"How do you know that?" Lucia snapped.

Lisisa looked at Denali for a moment and saw him smile at her. "Let them discover it for themselves." He spoke. "Let's go Lisisa."

Lisisa looked back one last time. "Be prepared." She said. "Be prepared. Your world is about to change drastically."

Narice and the others could do nothing but stand there and watch Lisisa and Denali move swiftly out of Gallais's Retreat.

GALLAIS'S LODGE

"How dare you strike my son Narice... you had no right!" Yuri snarled at her younger sister.

"I had every right!" Narice snarled right back no fear of her older sister in her demeanor. "We are here for a purpose! That purpose is to have these men and women train us with our bonded dragons! They are all that stands between us and death on the battlefield!" Narice turned and glared at Dante. "Your son decided he was going to attempt to instigate an altercation with Androcles Leonidas! And not only that... he made improper overtures towards Androcles's new bride! His new wife Yuri! If my interpretation of Spartan and Lycavorian culture is correct... actions such as his this night are grounds for Androcles Leonidas to kill him without a second's pause! And make no mistake... that he would have done with considerable ease!"

Aikiro stepped forward now and looked at her daughter. Narice was introverted yes, and she kept her council mainly to herself unless asked directly, but Narice was also exceptionally intelligent and not far from reaching the same level within Mindvoice as Yuri had obtained.

"Narice... you felt something didn't you?" Aikiro asked.

"I felt power mother." Narice answered. "Raw untamed and pure power. And it radiated from Androcles Leonidas and his new wife. This Sadi."

"Sadi?" Robert Moran asked and turned to look at her from where he stood in front of the window. Unlike Yuri he was not in the least bit upset that Narice and assaulted Dante. He knew his son was headstrong and oftentimes acted without thought of consequences. There were times when Dante needed to be put in his place.

Aikiro and Yuri looked at him. "You have heard the name Robert?" Aikiro asked.

Moran nodded. "It sounds familiar somehow." He replied. "I can't place it though. I want to say it was a name I have read in some intelligence report through the years. Old intelligence reports."

"She is at least a hundred years older than Androcles mother, but their emotion... their emotion was such... it was almost as if they are somehow bound within Mindvoice." Narice spoke.

Aikiro nodded quickly. "Ah yes... I know of this. Soulmates... Anomes in the ancient Lycavorian language." She said. "In their legend and lore when two souls that have supposedly been destined for one another come together they form a bubble of power within Mindvoice. Resumar and Eliani were Anomes from what I understand... as are Martin Leonidas and his mate of pure blood Aricia. When they are together...

connected physically like when they are holding hands or when they merge their minds, their combined Mindvoice powers amalgamate and form a bubble. A bubble of immense power. You felt this from them?"

Narice nodded. "Yes. There was something else as well... but I could not pin point it. It was as if another presence within Mindvoice was drawn to them... being pulled towards them somehow. And they to it. I felt it for only a split second. Then I had to stop Dante from ruining whatever opportunity and plans we may have."

"I could have taken him!" Dante insisted.

Aikiro chuckled softly. "I truly love your determination grandson." She spoke stepping up to him and caressing his cheek. "However... if you persist in veering from the plans and goals we have established Dante... all we seek will be for naught. Spartans as a whole... and the Leonidas family in particular... view their relationships as wholly sacred to them. You are exceedingly lucky he did not kill you Dante. You could not have stood against him in single combat no matter how highly you regard your skills."

"Grandmother I..."

Aikiro shook her head. "Enough of this. Except the truth. Perhaps in the future you could match him... but not now. What else did you learn?"

"They have decided to train us." Carisia spoke up now.

Aikiro's eyes shifted to her as did all of them. "Are you sure?" Aikiro gasped. She looked at Narice.

"Carisia is right." Narice echoed quickly. "Androcles and his brothers and sisters all but admitted this openly."

Aikiro looked at Yuri. "That is why the messenger came to us and told us we have a meeting with the King in the morning." She spoke. "I told you he would not turn us away when it came to the dragons."

"Mother... they do not think very highly of the Kavalians." Narice spoke once more. "Perhaps... perhaps everything else we have planned is not necessary."

"Not necessary?" Aikiro exclaimed. "You don't think the contingency plans we have established will work?"

Narice shook her head. "Isabella's oldest daughter... Carina I believe her name is... she was the one married just recently. Her husband is Moneus Simpson."

"The second oldest son of Daniel Simpson." Tesand spoke from the chair he sat in. "A ranking member of the Durcunusaan. One of the heroes of Alb Tau if the reports are accurate."

"If what we saw this night was any indication... that plan would definitely not work." Narice said softly a note of disapproval in her tone.

Aikiro detected the tone of her daughter's voice. "You don't approve of how we decided to conduct that Narice?"

Narice shook her head. "No mother I do not. I think it will only hurt us in the long run if training our bonded pairs to the fullest extent is our ultimate goal."

"You don't seem to agree with quite a bit of what we have planned Narice." Yuri stated coldly.

Narice looked at her sister. "Unlike you sister... I do not have an inbred hatred of these men and women that warps my thinking. I also give them far more credit than you do when it comes to their skills. You seem to be more concerned that I struck your son then you are that he very nearly got himself killed this night. Androcles Leonidas would have erased Dante from this life with hardly any effort at all for his misguided attempts to seduce his woman in front of him. Something that their own laws would have allowed him to do. I... I believe we need to abandon the secondary plans we have put in place and concentrate on the main goal we came here to accomplish."

Aikiro looked at her two daughters and moved between them. "That is quite enough." She spoke calmly. "We certainly do not want the full weight of their Durcunusaan brought to bear on us. They are almost as skilled as our own Venorik Elghinn forces. Shift your focus to Isabella's younger daughter Dante." Aikiro spoke with almost no hesitation. "What is her name again?"

"Her name is Zarah grandmother." Dante answered.

"Did you see her this evening?" Aikiro asked looking at him.

Dante nodded quickly. "All of the Leonidas children were there grandmother." He replied just as quickly. "Including the younger ones and our half breed sister Lisisa."

"Lisisa was there?" Yuri asked looking at him.

“Yes mother.”

“She certainly was not happy to see us.” Lucia said with a chuckle.

“She will undoubtedly be part of the group that trains our riders.” Yuri spoke quickly. “Their own Netnews Channels state she and her dragon are among the most powerful of their Bonded Pairs.”

“Narice what of this device you say the son Arrarn used?” Aikiro asked.

Narice shook her head. “I don’t know mother. It was some sort of teleporting device. Or a personal Shroud shield perhaps. I think it was attached to his wrist, for I did notice something there... but he left quickly and I was not able to get a good look at it.”

“And you did not detect him?” Tesand asked now getting to his feet.

Narice shook her head. “None of us. Not even the beating of his heart. At least not until he appeared two feet behind me, Nehtes in hand. No one... no one has ever been able to sneak up on me like that mother. Not since I was thirteen.”

Aikiro nodded. “Yes... I know.” She said softly. She looked at Yuri. “It appears they have developed quite a bit more than just a way to intercept even our more secure transmissions Yuri. These are not items they could get from a dead ship. And no matter what Leonidas says, the bonds they have established with their dragons are not naturally occurring. They can’t be. They must have some sort of machine that enhances the Mindvoice abilities of the higher ranking members of this Tier system they use.”

Yuri met her gaze. “You think the Mindvoice ship still has power somehow?”

“There is no other explanation.” She said in reply. “Yet... I can not sense even an inkling of its existence anywhere on this planet. The Mindvoice Shields surrounding it must be more powerful than anything I’ve ever encountered, or they have discovered a way to duplicate its power source.”

“I did not think they had scientists that were capable of discovering such things?” Javier said. “They are animals for the most part.”

Aikiro looked at him. “Animals that at the moment are your betters Javier.” She spoke sternly. “Something that you need to learn quickly.” She looked at all of them. “We will need to be far more cautious in our actions than I first thought. No more issues as there were tonight is that understood?” She waited until she got nods from everyone. “Very well... it should be an interesting day tomorrow so everyone return to your quarters and get some sleep. I have much to think about.”

ISLAND OF CRANAE ANDRO AND SADI’S VILLA LACONIAN GULF

“She’s asleep finally.” Sadi spoke as she came into their bed chambers and saw Andro lying on the bed wearing only his white pants.

Andro lowered the data pad he was reading and watched as she dropped the lace robe on the floor and crawled quite seductively onto the bed, her jungle green eyes alive with passion and desire. She was naked except for the light blue lace thong panties she wore. The nipples of her firm breasts were already erect from the cool sea breeze whispering into their room from the open doors. “I would have put her down.” He spoke with a small smile as he watched her.

Sadi shook her head, her golden blond hair spilling across his legs as she lowered her lips to his abdomen and kissed the rippled muscles softly, using her tongue to trace the contours of his stomach and seeing his muscles contract with delight at her touch. Sadi took her time as she once more explored his abdomen and chest, and stretched her lithe frame on top of his until her breasts were crushed against his steel hard chest and she was gazing into his azure eyes. Sadi stared at him for along moment, his lavender and pines scent filling her head and making her senses scream out in happiness. Her head went spinning back to that night on the island when she had first seen him as an eight month old infant. His eyes had caught and held her even then, only now when she looked into them she saw complete love and devotion and the extreme desire for her. That made her shudder inwardly with sensations and feelings she had never experienced until being in his arms. They were sensations and feelings Sadi never wanted to lose.

“I’ve never had a sister and it was very fun just talking to her.” Sadi said with a smile. “She’s got your mother and Eliani’s sharp tongue and quick wit.”

Andro laughed. “That she does.” He said as he reached up to stroke her cheek and ear. “What are you thinking KertaGai?”

“Do you want children Andro?” She asked him softly.

“Eventually... yes. Very much so.” He answered.

“I come into phase in four months my love.” She told him. “It will surely happen then... if not before.” Andro’s eyes narrowed slightly. “Do you think I want children right now?”

“Don’t you?” She asked him. “I watched you tonight. They adore you Andro. All of them do... but Retta and the little ones even more. You are very good with children.”

Andro wrapped his arms around her and pulled her closer to him, Sadi pushing herself up onto his body until she was staring down into his face. “Sadi Leonidas... we will have eternity together.” He said. “I know for a fact you wish to finish school and get your commission. You want to fly. I do not expect you to stay home and have my children.”

“I... I want to give you children Andro.” She told him with glittering eyes. “Strong beautiful children.”

“And we will have children.” He told her. “That does not mean we have to rush these things. Our Mindvoice skills give us the ability to make sure that does not happen until we are ready. Until you are ready. Do you want children now KertaGai? Whether now or later I don’t care because I know they will be beautiful like you.”

“And you would wait?” Sadi asked.

“Of course I would wait.” Andro told her. “I will never desire anyone as much or as completely as I do you. Why would I not wait if it makes you happy? If that is what we want?”

Sadi brought her hand up and ran her index finger along his lips. “I spoke with several of my teachers on Apo Prime today very briefly.” She told him. “I have more than enough points to graduate early Andro. Your grandmother agrees. I want to take the position as Arrarn’s co-pilot.”

“Are you sure that is what you want KertaGai?” Andro said as his hands moved to her firm ass cheeks and he pulled her closer to him. “You are my Anome Sadi... do not do something because you think it will make me happy. I will love you no matter what you do.”

“I know that silly.” Sadi told him nuzzling his cheek and jaw line with her nose. “I spoke with Arrarn tonight before he left. The STRIKER DTs are the most advanced ships we have Andro and there are only a handful that are even capable of flying them. I have been blessed with skills that give me that opportunity. I want to use those skills. I have enough hours in one now to rate a co-pilot’s slot and who better to learn from than Arrarn, Normya and your mother. It is only a plus that it keeps us so very close together.”

“You will know all my dirty little secrets as Res said.” Andro told her with a smile.

Sadi laughed. “I already know them my love. Don’t forget... I can see your thoughts and dreams just as you can see mine.”

“Yes you can.” He told her.

Sadi lowered her head to his chest and felt his arms encircle her waist now. “Did you feel it Andro?” She asked. “Tonight at Gallais’s Retreat? It felt like... it felt like a chasm within Mindvoice that suddenly...”

“Filled up?” Andro spoke.

Sadi nodded. “Yes... it was filled for an instant. Then it was empty once more when we left.” She said. She lifted her head and placed her chin on his chest meeting his azure eyes. “And I felt it much more strongly when we left. I still feel it. It is like an empty portion inside me. Do you feel it too?”

Andro nodded. “Yes.”

“What do you think it means?” Sadi asked him. “I have never been happier than I am when I am with you. Knowing that I am yours and you are mine for eternity. Why would I feel a void where one should not be?”

Andro shook his head. “I do not know.” He answered. “I have studied other techniques and such with the Feravomir and Thr’won through the years, but nothing that helps me to explain this.”

“Techniques?” Sadi asked. “What techniques? You mean more than the psychic diamond projections that you throw?”

Andro nodded slowly. “Different abilities for the most part. Helen... she did not want to teach them to anyone until she was able to master them. They are techniques that were within Canth’s memories... memories and skills that he passed to her during the Tuarvomir.” (Change of the Oracles)

“You have been studying them?” Sadi asked.

Andro nodded. “I started during the last year of the war and I have continued up until just recently. We should talk to her or my grandmother about what we feel. Maybe they could give us a better understanding of it.”

“I truly loved studying under the Feravomir.” Sadi said. “Is she here on Earth? Maybe I will go and see her tomorrow while you are dealing with the High Coven.”

Andro nodded. “She will be attending the State Dinner tomorrow night with us. I’m sure she will be on the estate tomorrow.”

“Speaking of State Dinners...” Sadi said. “I have nothing to wear you know.”

“What you have on right now will suffice in my eyes.” Andro said with a grin.

Sadi laugh. “Yes... I’m sure. However I don’t believe I wish to flaunt what only you will taste before the entire Senate and who knows how many foreign dignitaries. Not to mention my father.”

“You will be at the university tomorrow with Teeria and Palta for classes.” Andro spoke. “My father has the graduation to attend and I need to make initial preparations for the High Coven. When you are done with class, take Teeria and Palta shopping and pick out a dress. And get them something as well so they do not have to wear those ridiculous cadet uniforms to the dinner.”

Sadi’s eyes grew wide. “They are invited to the dinner?” She gasped.

Andro laughed. “What... did you think I would leave you to the mercy of the politicians? They are your friends Sadi... and they are always welcome wherever we go. You should go to class... go shopping and then bring them back here. Arrarn will not need you tomorrow. He is attending the graduation with father. I told you I don’t want you changing your life for me KertaGai or the title you now hold. My parents would not like it if you did that.”

Sadi stared at him for a long moment. “How is it that I was the one who discovered you Androcles Leonidas, when there are so many other females within the Union?” She asked him in a serious tone of voice.

Andro shrugged. “I have never been one to delve into the mysteries of destiny or fate.” He said in reply. “Perhaps because we were always meant to be together. What does it matter now? I have you Sadi Leonidas... and I intend to never let you go.”

Sadi responded to his kiss as his aura wrapped around her like a blanket of warmth, and she countered that with her own aura, feeling his arms pull her even closer. This was not a kiss of sexual heat or passion or desire, it was a soulful kiss of love and devotion and they relished in the sensations it brought out in them both. It was a long breathless moment later when they finally parted and she stared at him.

Hold me Andro my love. Sadi told him with a small smile. You will still owe me a night of breathless sex, but tonight I just want to sleep within your embrace.

It was perhaps the oldest test in the relationship book Sadi knew, and she did not know what compelled her to say it, for her blood burned for her mate as surely as his did for her. Sadi however could not help the feelings of blissful and incontrovertible love that swept through her as Andro’s response was to simply roll onto his side, bringing her with him and pulling her even closer if that was possible. Sadi pressed her head to his chest and in a moment she could feel and hear the rhythmic beating of his heart against her cheek. Wrapped within his powerful arms it was very easy to fall into a deep and peaceful sleep. Something Sadi did very quickly.

Andro’s azure eyes were smiling as he too followed his beloved mate into the sleep of the cherished.

HAGIOS CENTER DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD

“Stros aina terit Medwaw.” Martin spoke to Resumar as they stood on the tarmac of the airfield behind the STRIKER DT. (Watch over your mother)

Resumar nodded. “Pen gur Medwan.” He answered. (I will father)

Martin looked at his son with Dysea and couldn't help but feel proud. Resumar had long ago proven his mettle in battle beside his brother and his father, and it had been Andro pushing for the last two years to get Resumar his own command. He looked more like his mother Martin thought, thanking the gods for that silently. His two inch high elven ears did nothing to take away from the stern Spartan face that Res and Arrarn could drop into place in a blink. They were just as much warriors as Andro was and he knew it. Martin had made it a point to let them know that through the years by allowing them to find their own way and never intruding on their actions unless needed. Resumar's bond with Cemath was strong and firm and they would do anything for each other.

Martin smiled at his second oldest son. "I understand the PILLAR OF FAITH comes out of the yards in six months." He stated almost casually seeing Resumar's eyes grow a little bigger. "She's going to be the Command Ship for the 24th Spartan Attack Division. I believe they will need a commander. You up for the job?"

"Father... father you are serious?" Resumar gasped his eyes wide.

"Andro says you're ready. Riall says you're ready and your Uncle Danny says you're ready." Martin spoke putting his hands on his son's shoulders. "I've known for a while you were ready... but I needed Normya and Zarah to get some more time under their belts because they are going with you." He smiled. "She's yours boy. And I expect the 24th will set the standard for all of us."

Resumar couldn't contain himself and he wrapped his arms around his father in a bear hug, lifting him off the tarmac with a whoop of victory. They turned as For'mya walked up in her lightweight Mark IV ArmorPly a smile on her face.

"You told him I take it." She spoke as she pressed up against Martin and slid her arm around his waist.

"You don't think he's happy do you?" Martin asked with a grin.

Resumar stepped forward and hugged For'mya tightly and she laughed. "No... he's not happy at all." She said in reply.

"Go on!" Martin spoke. "Go tell Cemath and make sure he doesn't burn the inside of the STRIKER." They watched Resumar turn and race for the STRIKER and they chuckled. Martin pulled her close and looked into her dark brown eyes, reaching up to brush some of her golden blond hairs from her beautiful face. He ran the tip of his finger along the ridge of her elven ear and For'mya closed her eyes in delight and squeezed him tighter.

"Last night was utterly divine Martin Leonidas." She spoke in a soft whisper that only he could hear, the memories of what he had made her feel for the majority of the night still fresh in her mind.

Martin smiled and leaned over to kiss her deeply, inhaling her sweet orchid scent. "I can't help it if you taste and smell so darn good." He said. "Can we do that again when you get back?"

For'mya matched his smile. "I'm afraid I must insist upon it." She stated.

Martin kissed her again holding her face in his hands. "I love you Kinsoargai. Never doubt that."

For'mya traced his lips with her finger. "That is something I have never and will never question Martin Leonidas." She stated. "Do try not to kill the High Coven riders while I am gone however."

Martin chuckled. "Don't worry. I'm only going to say a few words. Andro is doing the training."

For'mya dark brown eyes focused on his face and she smiled. "I... we all come into our next phase in six more months and I want another child my love. I want to give you a daughter Martin." She said softly. "I just thought you should know that if it doesn't happen before then, Aricia and the others are going to give you to me for two full days and nights. I just want you to be prepared."

Martin chuckled. "I don't think I'll have a problem getting prepared for that For'mya." He told her.

For'mya nodded. "Good... because I intend for it to be very rewarding." She told him with a smile.

"It's always rewarding Kinsoargai. Never doubt that." Martin lifted her off the tarmac and hugged her too him tightly. "Just bring yourself back home to me in three days so that we can pick up where we left off last night."

For'mya giggled and made him put her back down. She looked at him with an evil glint in her eye. "At least now I don't have to listen to you rant and cuss because you have to wear your dress uniform for the State Dinner." She said.

"Ha ha... very funny."

For'mya blew him a last kiss and turned to head for the STRIKER. She smiled at Resumar as she walked up the ramp and it began to close. "Come Res..." She spoke. "Let's you and I sit together so that I can pick your brain about the Kavalians. You seem to be the resident expert on these people."

Resumar turned from stroking Cemath's snout. "All it is mother is the intelligence we have gathered through the years." He said as he watched her stroke Aurith's scales as she walked by the harness headed for the cockpit.

For'mya nodded. "Yes... something none of us have had the foresight to delve into." She spoke as he fell in beside her. "We will have to change that. And more quickly than we anticipated it seems."

Resumar stopped to hit the ramp switch and he reached out within Mindvoice to his older brother.

Thank you brother.

Resumar heard Andro laughed softly within the connection. Thank me for what? Andro asked him. You are the one who has to control Normya and Zarah now. Besides... you won't be thanking me when we are sitting on my patio doing fitness reports for hours on end.

You believed in me. Resumar said. You made father believe in me.

Res... I have always believed in you. That was never a question. And father is the one who made the decision... no one else. She's a fine ship... and she'll have a fine commander. The entire 24th will. He knows that... and that is why he made the decision. Just get back here quickly... I'll need you to help me train these fool vampires who think they can ride dragons better than we can.

Resumar watched as the ramp closed and locked and he nodded his head. Count on it.

HAGIOS CENTER CONFERENCE LOUNGE

"Am I to understand you have decided to train our dragons and riders then?" Aikiro asked from across the table.

Martin looked at her and leaned back in his chair. He wore his full dress uniform now, complete with vertically stacked colorful ribbons that took up the entire left side of his chest. He had been very clear to all who knew him that nothing would go on his uniform that he had not earned and he didn't care if he was King. It took several years and different attempts, but Aricia and Anja had finally gotten his dress uniform to display even the medals he had won as a US Navy SEAL over five hundred years ago. They were now shaped and formed into Union ribbons, but he did not wear a medal he had not earned. Danny stood against the far wall in his dress uniform as both of them were going to the graduation right after this meeting and there was almost nothing that Martin kept from his brother.

Andro sat in the chair next to his father wearing his standard black fatigues and light Mark IV body armor. Aricia and Isabella sat on Martin's right side dressed in a similar fashion as Andro.

"We have some conditions first." Martin said.

"So you believe the intelligence we gave you after conferring with your people?" Aikiro asked.

Martin ignored her and looked at Andro. "Andro?" He said motioning across the table.

Andro leaned forward. "Your dragons and riders will do exactly as I say." He spoke firmly. "There will be no discussion, no debating. There will be..."

"You expect us to take orders from your son?" Yuri demanded looking at Martin from across the table.

Martin looked at her from across the table. "I have neither the desire nor patience to train you or any of those you brought with you." He said. "Andro will be handling the training with those he designates. I can't be seen training you. Andro disappears for weeks on end and it doesn't draw attention. I am not that lucky however. As it stands right now... the High Coven is here to sign a Cease Fire Agreement and nothing more. If it gets out that we are training your dragons to fight the Kavalians I don't need to explain to you what a shit storm that will bring. I will not allow you to drag me into a war I have no part being involved in."

"If you are so concerned about being discovered and drawn into our war with them, then why help us?" Aikiro asked calmly. "You do not believe the intelligence we gave you I take it?"

Martin met her gaze. "I dislike the Kavalians more than I dislike you." He stated flatly. "We're not done evaluating the intelligence you gave us yet so I can't make a determination either way."

“Then why help us?” Narice asked softly leaning forward in her chair and looking at him from across the table.

Martin turned and looked at her for a long moment before looking at Andro and then back to Aricia and Isabella. He turned back to Narice who was waiting for an answer. “We are helping you because no matter what happens... I will not send forty dragons to their deaths because their riders don’t know how to fight with them as one entity. I’m not doing it for you... I’m doing it for them.”

“Because you and your son are Talon Guardians.” Narice said quickly. “As are the dragons you ride. Torma and Elynth. Father and daughter.”

Martin and Andro looked at her as did everyone else in the room.

“Narice?” Aikiro asked clearly surprised at this new information that she had asked Yuri to obtain. “What have you discovered?”

“Carisia and I spoke with Deneth and Anthar at long length last night before we retired.” Narice said. “They told us... they told us what a Talon Guardian is.”

Carisia leaned forward now and looked directly at Andro. “You are Guardians of their species.” She said softly. “Given this title for some act of impossible bravery in defending dragons. No non-dragon has ever held this title before the two of you.”

“Your dragons seem to be very well informed.” Yuri snapped.

“Every dragon knows what a Talon Guardian is Yuri.” Narice spoke looking at her. “It is within their blood. They can sense it in ways we could never detect. They knew what Androcles Leonidas and his dragon Elynth were the moment we stepped off our ship. Some of them resist this idea because their thoughts are clouded.”

“And what if your assistance is discovered?” Moran asked now.

“It won’t be unless one of your people fucks up and spills their guts.” Martin said. “The training will take place at a remote base that is almost brand new. It has members of Mjolnir’s Hand there all the time as well as other Bonded Pairs. The elven King Anotan is a good friend and he will be able to cover us for as long as we need him too. Yes... I expect you to take orders from my son. If that is going to be a problem Yuri... I suggest you all carry your asses right now. I know you have a problem with authority.” Martin stuck the jab to her with a smile.

Aikiro covered Yuri’s hand with hers before she retorted. “It will be as you say.” She said. “What else?”

Andro got to his feet and looked at the High Coven personnel in the room, Narice and Carisia among them sitting at the large table. The same sensation he and Sadi had felt last night was coursing through him again as he looked at Carisia for a long moment. The sensation of a void being filled to completeness. He tore his eyes away from her after a moment and saw that Dante wore a dark scowl on his face while his brother and sister remained impassive.

“We will use our equipment.” Andro began speaking. “We will supply each of your pairs a complete set of the very same equipment we carry and use. We will use our STRIKERS for training but I will allow you to provide twenty of your best ground support fighter pilots for my brother Arrarn to train. Preferably those who are younger and open to new ways of doing things. Arrarn is much like me... he will tolerate no opposition to how he does things.”

“You will allow?” Aikiro stated looking at him.

Andro met her eyes without fear and nodded his head. “Yes... I will allow.” He stated. “The statement I made to you on the airfield when you first arrived still stands Empress Aikiro. You may very well kill me should a battle between us ensue... but you will never leave this planet alive... and I guarantee I will mark you badly before I fall. I am not afraid to die. It is a natural course in life eventually. It is in your best interests to heed that warning and allow me to train your pairs the way they should be trained, as we train our pairs. Unless of course you want to send them into their first battle with the Kavalians and watch them be slaughtered, because without what we provide to them, that is exactly what will happen regardless of what you do.”

Aikiro turned back to Martin. “Your son shares your distain for beating around the bush I see.” She said. “And he definitely has your arrogance.”

Martin shrugged. “Go figure.”

Aikiro turned back to Andro. “Go ahead young man.”

“As I was saying... they will do as I tell them. I want them formed on the tarmac here at fourteen hundred hours today. All of them.” Andro spoke. “The rest of my conditions I will state directly to them.”

“You can not tell me so that I may pass on the information?” Aikiro asked.

Andro met her eyes. “Are you bonded to a dragon Empress?” He said evenly his voice holding no malice in it she noticed.

“No.” Aikiro answered.

“Then you have answered your own question.” Andro replied. “There will be no security except for my security.” Andro turned and looked at Thast. “I will allow you four personnel that are not riders to accompany us. The moment they step out of line or question what I do they are gone. That includes fat man there.”

“Commander Thast is my daughter’s husband.” Yuri stated. “He has a right to be with her. To support her in her endeavors.”

“Until he steps out of line.” Andro spoke. “Then I will kick him to the curb as my sister Eliani says. Your daughter will not need his type of support. She will get enough support from the other pairs she surrounds herself with. He can come if he is among the four... but my directive stands. If he so much as farts into the wind he will be back here. Is that understood?”

Aikiro nodded. “We understand.” She stated.

Andro nodded and started back for his chair. He stopped beside it and looked at Yuri. “One more thing.” He said.

“Another rule?” Yuri snapped.

Andro smiled. “Actually a statement of fact Princess.” He said calmly meeting her eyes. “You dragon... Vollenth I believe his name is... keep him on a short leash. He is a festering sore that will break open one day.” Andro spoke softly, never breaking eye contact with her. “If he breaks the rules I set in place even once, I will not hesitate or delay and as Talon Guardian... I will end his life immediately.”

Yuri leaned back and laughed. “You! Kill a dragon by yourself! You must think I am a fool!”

Andro’s eyes changed then and his dual fangs extended as he smiled at her in a very unfriendly way. “I have warned you once.” He said. “I will warn him once should the need arise. After that... there will be no warnings. You would do well to remember that and so would he.”

Andro sat back down in his chair his eyes never leaving Yuri’s face. He could almost feel Carisia’s eyes boring into his from across the table however, and he thought he saw a small almost imperceptible smile crack her features.

Martin laughed. “Ok! Now that everything is settled... I will leave you in Andro’s capable hands.” He got to his feet with Aricia and Isabella and turned for the door. “Aikiro... why don’t you and your daughters join me.”

Aikiro looked at him oddly. “For what purpose?” She asked.

Martin smiled. “I have some information for you.” He said. He saw Tesand and Moran get to their feet and he shook his head. “Not you or the other guy Robby.” He said sarcastically. “Just them. Trust me... if I wanted to kill any of you... it would already be done.”

Aikiro looked at Tesand quickly and motioned with her hand as she got to her feet with Yuri and Narice. “We shall return shortly.” She said. “Remain here.”

Martin motioned them to the table in the smaller room fifty meters down the corridor. Aricia and Isabella moved to the couch along the wall and Martin leaned against the chair at the head of the table as Aikiro, Yuri and Narice settled into the chairs.

“This is rather odd is it not?” Aikiro asked.

Martin met her eyes. “The Kavalians are arriving here on Earth and in Sparta in two days with a trade delegation.” He stated flatly.

“The Kavalians!” Yuri exclaimed. “You are bringing them here?” She turned to her mother quickly. “I told you this was a bad idea mother! He... he is going to hand us over to those scum.”

Aricia and Isabella laughed at this while Narice remained silent and Aikiro simply stared at Martin.

“For the crimes you have committed upon the people of this planet... if we wanted too... we could have very easily arrested you, tried you and executed you within hours of setting foot in our city.” Aricia spat. “And there would have been nothing you could do about it.”

“Remember that gift I told you of sister.” Isabella said. “Don’t spoil that gift now and leave your children motherless.”

“I will...”

“Yuri please sit down.” Aikiro said softly.

“Mother they will...?”

“They will protect us.” Aikiro spoke the words as she leaned forward. “Won’t you?”

Martin looked at her. “You were right when you said I could not hold you accountable for what Veldruk and your daughter have done in the past.” He said flatly. “Since you assumed power there has not been a battle or even harsh words between us.”

Aikiro smiled. “After the events with your mother and Lisisa I did not foresee us as becoming great friends. And we had other issues to be concerned with. We could not fight you and the Kavalians. I ordered Robert to insure our forces did nothing to encourage a conflict between our forces and not to cross our borders.”

“Except for your Immortal patrol.” Aricia said.

“That was not my doing.” Aikiro spoke quickly. “Yes... we were purchasing the T19s. However the Immortal detachment commander is the one who decided to hold the exchange within the boundaries of Union space. It is not something I would have allowed. Not with us coming here.”

“How long have you been planning this little trip?” Martin asked.

“Since we determined our dragons were old enough to sustain themselves in a battle.” Aikiro replied. “With the exception of Yuri, my daughter Narice and Yuri’s oldest daughter Carisia, the others show much promise but little gain. I determined we needed your help. When we discovered the intelligence everything came into place.”

“You lie better than your daughter and Veldruk.” Martin stated looking at Aikiro.

Aikiro met his gaze. “If you believe me to be lying to you Martin Leonidas... then give us our leave to go.”

“I won’t do that to the dragons in your group.” Martin said. “I do not care about the riders... only the dragons. And it’s them I want to have a fighting chance.”

“Does your son share this view as well?” Narice asked. “Deneth is my bonded brother... Anthar is Carisia’s bonded brother. We would give our lives for them if need be.” She saw their heads come around to look at her for a long moment, to include those of her mother and sister. “Will he treat us as you speak of us? Will he allow us to show him what we are capable of?”

Martin met her gaze. “Andro is better than me actually.” He said. “He’ll treat you as he does everyone else who wishes to become a member of Mjolnir’s Hand. The treatment of dragons is something he takes very seriously... as you will no doubt see soon enough. It’s like a religion with him.”

“We will do whatever it is he asks of us.” Narice said. “I have no desire to see Deneth killed or myself fall into the hands of the Kavalians. They are not pleasant to those they capture. Especially female vampires.”

Martin let the smile split his face and he nodded. “Let’s hope the others think the same as you... Narice is it?”

Narice nodded her head. “Yes.”

“You brought me in here to tell me that the Kavalians are arriving in a few days.” Aikiro said. “Why?”

Martin turned back to look at her. “I’m extending an invitation to the State Dinner to your entire group for this evening.” He spoke calmly. “It will look much better if we are seen at least attempting to mingle and make this Cease Fire thing actually fly with the Netnews assholes. I hate reporters. I always have.”

Aikiro chuckled softly. “Something we have in common it appears.” She said honestly. “Only I have a firmer hand on what it is they report in the Coven.”

“I want your ships to retreat out of the system.” Martin said. “The less reason they have to see anything High Coven related the better. Sparta is a big city now... and they will be housed in a foreign diplomatic center on the eastern edge of the city. I will give you a choice... a couple of choices actually. You can remain in Sparta for the nine months it will take to train your pairs, you can move to Eden City, or you can return to your home world. I will insure you have an open line of communication with Yuri and whoever else you leave here.”

“Encrypted?” Aikiro asked.

Martin shook his head. “Not a chance.” He replied. “I will make sure Andro sends you weekly reports on their progress.”

“How do I know they will be safe here?” Aikiro asked. “If I decide to return to Usu Ozeib 7.”

“The last person who crossed the fence of a Mjolnir’s Hand training facility spent nine hours being interrogated and six months in prison.” Martin said. “The last man to cross my son spent three years going back and forth to the medical clinic for regular treatments until all his bones had fused back together properly. He’s a bastard when it comes to security. I give you my word your people will not be harmed or harassed. As long as they follow the rules Andro sets in place.”

“And if I choose to remain?” Aikiro asked.

Martin smiled once more as he shook his head. “You’ll never see it Aikiro.” He stated. “I may be many things but stupid is not one of them. Bringing your dragons here to be trained is not the only reason you are here. I may not have your experience and years of refinement within Mindvoice... but our power is nearly equal... and I know you are here to get on the Mindvoice ship I took from Lycavore. It won’t happen Aikiro... I promise you.”

“I have just as much right to that ship as you do Martin Leonidas.” Aikiro stated now. “We are both... you and I... we are both directly descended from those ancient travelers. It is something we have passed on to our children... and you to your Queens because of the virus within your blood when you bite someone. I can sense their power within Mindvoice.” She looked at Aricia. “As pure as your blood is Aricia Leonidas... your ancestors must have been descended from Pralors as well. Perhaps not the Chief Pralors as Martin and myself, but still powerful no less. That ship holds our history on it as well. I have a right to it.”

“So that you can use the technology to defeat the Kavalians and then continue your conquest of other peaceful people?” Martin shook his head. “I don’t think so. That ship crashed on Lycavore. The world my people called home. You nearly vaporized it when you conquered them and you didn’t care a wit about the Mindvoice ship then.”

“I did not know it existed.” Aikiro stated. “And Veldruk was a fool for doing what he did to your planet.”

Martin snickered. “Like I’m buying that. You are cold blooded Aikiro... and I would not trust you anymore than I would one of your rock spiders. You can’t sense the ship for a reason and that is the way it will stay.”

“Would you allow me to at least view some of the history cubes?” Aikiro asked. “Just myself... no one else.”

Martin gazed at her for a moment and then turned to look at Aricia and Isabella. They both nodded slowly and he turned back to Aikiro. “I’ll think about that.” He said. “I’ve ordered that your credit chips be increased to twenty thousand each. I don’t know whether you brought clothing to attend an event like tonight. Feel free to use them as you wish. Once Andro meets with your riders this afternoon they’ll be welcome to attend as well.”

Aikiro got to her feet slowly staring at him the entire time. “And what will your son do this afternoon?”

Martin shrugged and looked at her with a grin. “Hell if I know. I haven’t been able to get into that boy’s head since he was sixteen.”

DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD

Twenty-seven men and sixteen women.

Forty-three Vampire High Coven Bonded Pairs. They stood in four ranks facing the large hanger to the north. Yuri stood out in front of the group with Narice at her side. Aikiro, Tesand and Moran stood at the bottom of the ramp of the transport that had landed and brought them all to Earth. A myriad of colors and sizes, with a dozen Heavyhorn Hybrids mixed in with the group and even one Spiketailed Longwing. The dragons were nervous and it showed as talon equipped feet kept lifting from the ground and heads kept looking at the row of dragons resting on the far edge of the tarmac some three hundred meters away, not to mention the dozens that were circling far above. These dragons had no riders or saddles and almost instinctively the High Coven dragons knew who the dragons on the tarmac were.

Arzoal turned her head to look down the row of Dragon Elders. Forty-three. She said softly. Only one is missing.

Twenty-one sires are saying they see their children Arzoal. Daurgo spoke quickly his voice filled with happiness. They are ecstatic Elder Mother.

Dalah looked skyward. This is a wonderful day Arzoal. She echoed.

Indeed it is. However we can not act too quickly. We must let Andro and Martin do this their way. She spoke. They will not fail. I have seen him and his father in action my friends... you will see. Here they come now.

Nine dragon heads turned to see the four dark objects lift above the mountain tops and come hurtling towards them at an unbelievable speed. They watched the forty three High Coven dragons turn and watch as well as the four specks dropped to barely twenty meters above the ground and only increase their speed. It was easy enough to see Elynth at the point of the diamond, Tharua and Aradace on the sides as Jeth formed the fourth and final point of the diamond in the rear.

The High Coven dragons and riders looked on with some awe as the four dragons rocketed past them so close to the ground they could feel the waves of air buffet their bodies. There was not a single head that didn't watch, as without warning Tharua and Aradace peeled away to the right and left with hairsplitting turns unlike anything they had ever seen, let alone were able to accomplish so close to the ground. Elynth and Jeth seemed to stop their forward motion in the blink of an eye and were soaring straight up over the tarmac with blistering speed, their large wingspans enabling them to climb faster than most dragons. When they reached ten thousand feet they simply rolled over onto their backs and plummeted back to the earth far below, folding their wings back for maximum speed.

There were gasps among the riders as only fifty meters from the ground, Jeth and Elynth snapped out their wings powerfully, the crack rolling across the ground like a bolt of thunder and they performed an almost ninety degree shift in direction and were once more streaking across the tarmac directly at the High Coven dragons. They watched as Tharua and Aradace executed extreme rolling turns from either side, whipping out from between several hangers and pulling into formation beside them once more. A hundred meters from the High Coven dragons all four of them flared their wings to the sides and their speed dropped to almost nothing in a matter of seconds as they landed on the tarmac only twenty meters away as lightly as feathers.

Eliani pulled her helmet off first and shook her head quickly, her burgundy colored locks flying wildly about her head. "Oh baby! We haven't done that in a long time!" She exclaimed with an animated face.

Andro and Deni were smiling as they removed their helmets as well, watching as their sister jumped from Tharua's back and walked around in front of her. Eliani reached up as Tharua brought her head down and touched her snout to Eliani's forehead.

We are still faster then all of them sister. Tharua stated.

Eliani laughed again. That we are.

Lisisa's eyes never left where Lucia stood watching them and she used her legs to nudge Jeth in that direction. Several dragons backed away as the massive muscular form of Jeth came closer, his golden eyes staring right at Lucia's dragon. He was the largest dragon any of them had ever seen, his blue black scales shiny with health and rippling with muscles. His armored scales protected nothing but muscle as there was not one ounce of fat on his near five metric ton body. Quite unlike her pompous self, Lucia swallowed hard as she stared up at Lisisa in Jeth's saddle.

Lisisa reached up and removed her helmet slowly, her forest green eyes glaring first at Yuri and then at Lucia. She rested her helmet in her lap as Jeth extended his huge head out and looked as if he was inspecting Lucia as she sat atop Seyra her dragon. He turned his head to look at Lisisa in the saddle.

This is the one sister? He asked. They all heard the gasps as every rider and dragon heard Jeth's deep voice within Mindvoice.

Lisisa nodded. That's her. She answered.

Jeth turned back to Lucia. So you think I am fat little one. He spoke with some humor in his voice. How very interesting. I will remember that when we meet in the skies above.

They watched as Jeth snorted and dismissed Lucia and Seyra almost as an afterthought and turned to move back to where Elynth stood next to Aradace and Tharua. Andro sat in Elynth's saddle casually as he moved up next to Yuri, who sat on Vollenth's back. Elynth glared at Vollenth with her golden colored eyes, his eyes gazing upon her with much the same distaste and hatred. He shifted slightly, preparing himself for another attack from her.

"This is all of them?" Andro asked Yuri.

Yuri nodded. "Forty-three." She spoke her head turning as several hangers to the sides opened and Lifter vehicles began moving out of them headed directly for where they were, at least a dozen Durcunusaan soldiers riding with the vehicles.

Andro nodded and looked at the men and women gathered on the backs of their dragons. "My name is Androcles Leonidas!" He spoke loudly so that his voice could carry. "It has been decided that I will train you to become Bonded Pairs. I have many rules that you will need to follow while I am conducting this task, however there are only three I will not tolerate be broken under any circumstance. The first... from this day forward you will honor your dragon brother or sister as they should be honored. As you would expect them to honor you. They are not pack animals to be used as mules to appease your laziness. If I see this happening... you will be the one to carry the equipment you will need for the remainder of the time you are here. The second... what I say is gospel. There will be no discussions or debate. You will be trained as we train our Bonded Pairs. If this seems beneath you at times... get over it. Quickly. The third and most important rule... you never leave your bonded brother or sister behind. Ever. That shows them you do not care for them... and in that case why should they care what happens to you.

"Everything you have learned up until now... forget it." Andro continued. "We will teach you to think and fight as one mind. To combine and use your talents as a pair to the best of your abilities. Some of you are stronger than the others because the bonds you share come easily. We'll show you ways to strengthen this bond, and for those of you who find it forced in some ways, we'll show you how to ease this into a more natural and relaxed pairing. To many of you I am your enemy... and that's ok. I don't particularly care what you think of me. I don't expect I'll be inviting any of you over for dinner very soon either." Andro was surprised when he heard soft laughter come from the ranks, from who he did not know, but it was there. Yuri heard it as well and her head snapped around to scowl at the gathered dragons and riders.

"Silence!" She spat.

Andro shook his head as Yuri turned back to him her dark eyes focused and determined. "Remain in your saddles for now..." Andro called out. "Your main instructors will be myself, my brothers Denali and Resumar, and my sisters Lisisa and Eliani. Any one of them is a match for four of you right now so do not make fools of yourself on the first day by doing something stupid. The others you see gathering around you are members of the Durcunusaan who will also be assisting in your training. For those of you who don't know and wish to test them, I bid you good luck. They have been trained to fight dragons, by dragons. Your lesson will be short and unfortunately for you... very fatal. Listen to what they can tell you for they see things we as riders sometimes do not. You can remain in your files for the moment while we move down the ranks checking the health of your bonded brothers and sisters. We will tell you what they need in the way of medical attention if any... give you the means to care for them... tell you how and then allow you to do it. Lisisa! Eliani! Third and fourth ranks! Denali take the second! I'll take the first."

Andro swung his leg over the saddle and dropped to the tarmac gracefully. He looked over to where Moneus and Nyla now stood and caught the medical glove Moneus tossed to him as he came up to Narice and Deneth. Andro looked at Narice in the saddle as he pulled the glove on and activated its sensor implants. He looked at Deneth with the coal black scales on his upper body and his dull white underbelly. His blue eyes were bright and focused and clear.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [So you are Deneth?] Andro spoke looking at the dragon.

Deneth bowed his huge head slightly. [And you are the Talon Guardian.] He spoke softly. [As is your bonded sister.]

[Actually... I'm just Andro.] He spoke lifting up the glove. [I'm going to pass this over your body. It will give me some information that is all.]

[I... I wish to learn all I can Talon Guardian.] Deneth said firmly. [So that I may protect by Bonded Sister.]

[So we can protect each other Deneth.] Narice spoke softly as she reached out and stroked the scales on his upper neck.

Elynth stepped forward coming up behind Andro. [Are you willing to learn Deneth?]

[Without knowledge we can not grow.] He replied looking at her. [With knowledge we can nurture and prosper. And perhaps one day make it so we do not have to fight.]

Andro moved his right hand over Deneth slowly as the medical scanner built into the glove designed specifically for dragon metabolisms scanned his body. It was not a long process and he stood looking at the scanner after reaching the end of Deneth's tail. He moved up alongside him and looked at Narice. He saw she had equipped Deneth with the saddle that Sadi had purchased for all of them. A quick look down the row and he noticed that only Carisia had done the same. He looked at Narice.

You can get down now. He spoke within Mindvoice.

Narice complied and dropped to the tarmac quickly. Why do you use this device while I am on his back? She asked.

Andro showed her the digital readout on the small screen. It will detect any stress or strained fractures that he might have while carrying additional weight on his back. He explained. Aside from dry scales and being slightly underweight... Andro met her eyes. Deneth appears to be in excellent health.

[He is my Bonded Brother. I do what I must to insure he is fit, but you must understand our homeworld is not as lush and fertile as Earth or other planets within the Union.] Narice spoke to him shielded.

[I take it I won't find the others are in the same health?] Andro asked her.

Narice shook her head. [Aside from Carisia and Anthar... it is doubtful. The others allow technicians and servants care for their dragons. Most of them either are too frightened of them or do not care. Carisia and I...] Narice took a deep breath and made one of the first decisions that would alter her life forever. [Carisia and I are the only ones who truly care for our Bonded Ones.]

Andro nodded slowly and felt the faintest tingles of someone trying to eavesdrop on their shielded conversation. [Yes... well that will change rather quickly.] He stated. [Your mother is trying to hear what we are saying you know.]

Narice didn't smile knowingly but she nodded her head slightly. [She has done this for years. She thinks we do not sense her, but Carisia and I have learned how to deflect or block her intrusions completely.]

Andro nodded more openly now. "He's three hundred and thirty pounds under what weight he should be at for his length and girth." He stated loudly so that others who were listening could hear him. He turned to a Durcunusaan soldier that had moved closer to where he stood. "Tanlar... six slabs for this one. Add the usual vitamins and protein tablets and give her two tubes of Apricot salve for Deneth's scales." Andro turned back to her. "I take it I don't have to show you how to apply the salve?"

Narice shook her head. "No."

Andro reset the medical glove and nodded his head, moving to where Yuri sat upon Vollenth. He looked at the hatred in Vollenth's eyes, could feel it pouring from the male Firespitter within Mindvoice, and he turned to Elynth. [This one is lost already sister.] He said to her.

Elynth nodded her huge head. [Yes... I agree.] She said. [He will fail the training... and he will fall. Whether he survives or not I do not know.]

"I'd appreciate it if you spoke so all of us can hear what you are saying." Yuri snapped. "I might begin to think you are talking about me."

Andro looked up at her as he passed the sensor over Vollenth. "I was talking about you." He stated casually. "And what you desire no longer matters to me. As far as I am concerned you are no different than the others."

"I am a Princess of the High Coven!" Yuri barked.

Andro stood back up and looked at the sensor on his hand. He scowled at the readings and looked up at Yuri. "Vollenth is seven hundred pounds underweight... he has multiple healed lacerations from what appear to be beatings Princess Yuri. Can you explain those?"

"There have been times when I have had to discipline him as I would any other child." Yuri stated.

Andro's azure eyes darkened somewhat. "That practice will stop immediately." He stated. "If I see you strike him with anything, I will expel you from this training and from Earth. Is that understood?"

Yuri glared at Andro for a long moment. "You try my patience son of Leonidas." She growled.

Andro smiled. "Good. When you feel lucky... let me know... I'll have Lisisa and Jeth give you your test and when you fail you're gone." Martin turned to Tanlar once more as he rolled the small cart in front of Deneth that was piled high with six thick slabs of neatly sliced eighty pound chunks of red meat. Deneth's eyes were wide as he stared at the cart and he could feel his gums begin to water just at the smell of the beef.

"Tanlar... twelve slabs for this one. Usual items. Give Princess Yuri six tubes of salve, two Apricots, two red leaf ointment, and two green flower ointments." Andro spoke turning back to look at her with a smile. "She will have her work cut out for her making sure Vollenth gets all his medicines."

Vollenth turned his large head and looked at Andro. You are not as powerful as you think you are boy! He growled causing Andro to look at him. I will protect her from you. I will protect her from all of you. You are all weak fools.

Andro reset the glove and stepped up to stare fearlessly into Vollenth's eyes. Dragon eyes that shifted slightly as Elynth stepped up behind Andro and glared back at him.

Then when you are ready boy...! Elynth spat. You may come find me and we will take to the skies above and I will show you just how insignificant you truly are! I won't need my Bonded Brother's help to make you appear the fool!

"Vollenth!" Yuri snapped out. "Remember what I said to you!"

Vollenth leaned back slightly. There will be another time. He said cruelly.

Andro nodded slowly. Yes there will. And you will fail. He stated calmly. Until that time... at least try and learn some of what we teach you. I would not want your death to be without some meaning.

Andro turned immediately and moved off to begin inspecting the first complete rank of dragons. Elynth glared at Vollenth for a few seconds more and then followed him. Her eyes softened as they fell on the pair that Andro was approaching and she slowed her gait as she felt the unusual tremors from Andro when his eyes lifted to look at Carisia. She had felt a similar spike from Sadi yesterday when she was inside the store... and then from both of them again last night. She was feeling it again now from him and Elynth was smart enough to know it was emanating from this diminutive vampire female with maya blue eyes. It was now that Elynth also took a long look at the cerise colored dragon before her and she felt an involuntary shudder course through her. His scales glistened in health, perhaps not as brightly as a dragon from within the Union, but far more than any other of the Coven dragons. She could sense the power within him, and she let her golden eyes gaze upon his large muscular form. He was slightly larger than her, perhaps half a meter she estimated, with elegant yet strong lines across his back and limbs. His legs were thick and powerful, and while he looked underweight, Elynth estimated it was no more than a few hundred pounds as with Deneth.

Elynth could also sense the power of his young rider. She looked to be about the same age as Andro, with flowing raven black hair. Though she was very short, she had breasts that were equal or just a little larger than Sadi. Her black uniform conformed to her lithe frame, and she wore coloring of some sort on her lips that matched her dragon's scale color. There was more power and ability in these two than what she felt from even Deneth and Narice she determined. They could be a powerful bonded pair if what she felt was any indication. Elynth also knew that if she felt it, Andro most certainly did as well. As she approached and settled herself to the ground she kept her golden eyes focused on this dragon. What had Narice called him?

Anthar.

Anthar watched Andro intently as he passed the medical sensor over his body slowly; very aware of Carisia's racing heart at having the man from her dreams so close to her. He turned his head slightly and gazed at Elynth where she sat only two meters away. Looking at her beautiful muscular form Anthar knew without a doubt that she was the one for him. Like Carisia's dreams, his dreams were filled with the obsidian beauty in front of him.

"You can get down." Andro's voice echoed and Anthar glanced back quickly.

Andro watched as the cerise colored dragon made himself even smaller on the tarmac without conscious thought, lifting his front foreleg so that Carisia could step down gracefully to the tarmac. He controlled his breathing for he could feel that sensation again. The feelings of completeness that he and Sadi had felt wash over them last night when they were looking at her. Andro did not shield these sensations from Sadi, knowing they were connected in a way that made it next to impossible to hide anything from each other, and he felt her heart begin to race even as she sat in her classroom in Sparta.

[She is there my love?] Sadi's voice burst into his head.

[Yes.] He answered. [It is the same as what we felt last night KertaGai. Completeness. Do you feel it?]

[Oh yes!] Sadi replied. [Andro... she is the cause. She has to be!]

[Yes... but why?] Andro asked. [It's powerful KertaGai. Stronger than it was last night.]

[I feel it too my love. My class is almost done Andro. I'm going to see the Feravomir right after. I will ask her why we are feeling this in her presence and her presence alone.] Sadi told him. [This... this is happening for a reason Andro.]

[Yes I know. The reason why however, that escapes me.] Andro said. [Do not forget you must buy a dress for tonight as well.]

Sadi laughed. [I thought I might go in what I was wearing last night. Like you said.]

Andro growled affectionately within the connection. [I changed my mind. I don't wish to share what you look like with anyone, most definitely not your exquisite tattoo, and most especially not your father or mine.]

[I will see you at our home later today my love.] She told him in a playful voice filled with love and passion.

Andro brought his thoughts back to the present and looked once more at the scanner before lifting his eyes to gaze at Carisia. She was incredibly beautiful he could not deny that and she smelled of... she smelled of sweet rose petals.

"How... how is he?" Carisia asked haltingly looking at Andro towering over her and feeling all sorts of delicious sensations rippling through her. The same sensations she had felt the night before looking at both of them. In those minutes she had committed the sound of their beating hearts to memory and would now be able to pick them out in a crowd of hundreds when she concentrated. The staggering power she felt in Mindvoice was easy enough for her to detect, and Carisia could also sense the lingering presence of his golden haired mate. The young green eyed woman from her dreams.

Andro looked at Anthar for a moment, regaining his train of thought and then looking back to Carisia. "He's two hundred and fifty pounds underweight, but he has excellent muscular definition and like Deneth, he is in excellent health." Andro stepped up to him and ran his hands along Anthar's scales. "You have used the Apricot ointment on his scales since you arrived. You work fast."

"We were not able to obtain these things on our world." Carisia said. "He is my Bonded Brother and my dearest friend. I would do anything for him."

Andro looked at her for a long moment, hearing the commitment and truth in her words in her voice. He looked at Elynth. [She speaks truthfully sister.]

Elynth nodded slowly. [Their bond is very strong Andro.] She replied. [Stronger than many of Mjolnir's Hand. Just as Narice and Deneth.]

Andro nodded and turned back to look at Carisia. [Yes... the question remains however, why have they bonded so completely and the others have not?]

"It is not polite to speak of others when you are standing in front of them." Carisia spoke in a whisper that only Andro could hear.

"Why did you think we were talking about you?" Andro asked.

"We felt the tremors in Mindvoice." Carisia replied. "They... you were speaking about us weren't you?"

Andro looked at her, his eyes going a little wider. He turned to look at Anthar as Elynth moved closer to them, her golden eyes filled with surprise as well. [You as well?] He asked.

Anthar nodded his huge head. [We felt the tremors... but could not hear your words. I have... I have never felt shields as strong as yours. Or your bonded sister. All of your siblings are nearly as powerful. It is amazing to feel such things.]

Andro smiled slightly and turned back to Carisia. [You have schooled him I see?]

[Anthar... he has experienced everything I have since the day we became bonded.] She answered without hesitation. [We keep nothing from each other. Just as you and Elynth keep nothing from each other.] Carisia shifted her eyes and looked at Elynth. [If we may call you by name that is?]

Elynth moved even closer to them and she gazed upon Carisia with new interest. [If we may call you by name.] She replied quickly.

Carisia smiled brightly. [I look forward to what you can teach us.] She stated calmly. [I have looked forward to it since it was made known we would be coming here.]

[We both have.] Anthar spoke. [For many different reasons.]

[Anthar!] Carisia yelled in Mindvoice looking at him.

Andro and Elynth both saw this and only Elynth knew it for what it was. She was a female after all, and while she may have had scales instead of skin, and talons instead of fingers, they all had intelligence and feelings. Sensing what this diminutive vampire female felt for Andro was obvious enough, but the surprising thing was that she felt similar but equally powerful vibrations for Sadi earlier in the day when Andro was no where around. Not to mention that Elynth also felt the interest this Anthar had in her just from the way his eyes gazed at her confidently. She began to reply when Denali's voice boomed over the tarmac.

"Andro over here!"

Andro turned immediately at the tone of his brother's voice and he saw Deni waving at him. [Welcome to Earth Carisia and Anthar.] He spoke as he began to walk towards his brother.

It took him only twenty seconds to cover the distance to where Denali stood next to the female hybrid dragon. Her tan scales looked similar to the others in their dryness and she was grossly underweight, that was easy enough to see at first sight, but Andro knew immediately why Deni had called him over for he sensed it within Mindvoice.

"You better look at this." Deni said holding out the medical sensor on his arm. "I sensed them first... the scan only confirmed it."

Andro only glanced at it briefly before looking at the eyes of the female dragon. [What is your name?] He asked gently stepping up to her and reaching up to place his hand on her neck as Elynth moved right up to her and reached out to touch her snout to the female's scales.

[Tell us.] Elynth spoke. [You are in no danger here. We can feel them. Tell us your name sister.]

[I... I am Viera.] The female replied softly.

"Andro?" Deni spoke motioning to his brother to approach Viera's side. He ran his left hand under the saddle and pulled it back out with splotches of blood on it.

Andro's eyes narrowed and he looked up at the male rider. "Your bonded sister is injured." He stated.

"Puncture wounds." Deni spoke reaching back under the saddle with his hand. "Not real deep... but deep enough to penetrate her scales under the saddle because they are worn."

Andro looked at the positioning of the vampire's feet on the saddle and saw the grooved notches that the heels of his combat boots were firmly entrenched in on the saddle. He looked at the man once more as the Coven dragons nearby began to turn and watch what was unfolding with great interest. "Remove your feet from those grooves." Andro ordered.

"What for?" The vampire snapped at him. "I have done nothing wrong!"

Andro snarled viciously and grabbed the Coven soldier's leg, wrenching it free of the groove and exposing the two inch spikes he wore on his heels. The needle like spikes were covered in blood and not all of it was fresh.

"Get off her!" Andro barked.

Denali turned to where his sister was examining another dragon in the rank behind them. "Elli!" He called out to her. He waved her over to them when she looked up.

"She is my property!" The Coven man snapped as he glared at Andro. "I am bonded to her! She needs discipline and this is how I keep her in line! She has been acting undisciplined these last few months!"

Andro's eyes changed then, and his fangs burst from his gums. The growl he let out was one of savage anger and he moved with a speed that many of the vampire riders had never seen a Lycavorian move with. Andro reached up and grabbed the man's freed leg now and twisted brutally. The sound of the man's bone breaking was clearly audible in the still air, as was his howl of agony.

"She carries eggs forn nubous ronnus!" Andro screamed reaching up further as the Coven soldier was bent over now and yanking him from the saddle with little fanfare and far less gentleness, twisting the man in midair and slamming him to the tarmac without regard. Denali was tearing at the straps on the saddle and had gotten the last one unfastened when Andro turned back and they pulled the saddle from Viera's back. Andro didn't pause and turned to throw the heavy duty saddle down upon the withering Coven soldier just as Eliani moved up to them.

"Sibfla!" She gasped out upon seeing the puncture wounds and the dried and fresh blood clearly on the tanned scales of the female dragon. Immediately she stepped up to the dragon's side, placing both her hands over the wound. There was a slight gasp as nearly a dozen Coven riders saw her hands flare a soft white over the top of Viera's scales.

Andro reached down and savagely pulled the soldier's boot from his foot. He lifted it into the air and brought it crashing down on the man's side, the bloody spike plunging into his flesh between two of his ribs. His eyes flew open in agony and he screamed in pain, reaching for his side and curling up in a ball. Andro tossed the boot away with enough strength that it sailed up onto the top of the High Coven transport and out of sight. He glared back down on the man at his feet.

"I should kill you for what you have done to her!" He snarled savagely. "If you were a Lycavorian I would kill you!" He looked up quickly. "All of you! Get off your dragons now! Get off them and pray you do not have the same tools as this one did on his boots! Now anse you!"

Many heads turned to look at Aikiro and Yuri for direction. "Do as he says!" Aikiro shouted. "You are in his charge now! Do it!"

The remaining riders scrambled to get out of their saddles as Andro turned back to watch as Eliani finished healing Viera's opposite side. No one was able to miss as the massive flame colored dragon made its way calmly across the tarmac to stand beside Elynth.

Andro? Arzoal's voice erupted from within Mindvoice for all of them able to hear. A voice filled with a power and clarity that the dragons had never experienced before. What... what is happening?

Andro glanced at her quickly. She... she carries eggs Arzoal! He announced the anger in his voice carrying over even within Mindvoice. She carries eggs and this fool has been stabbing his spikes into her sides to control her because she was trying to protect them.

Eggs? Arzoal gasped turning her eyes to look upon the tan female as she stepped closer to her. Arzoal reached out deeper within Mindvoice and her eyes grew a little wider as she felt the presence of new life within the female's abdomen. You carry eggs child?

Viera gazed up at the massive dragon in front of her in fear. She was nearly double her size and looked as if she could peel her scales from her bones if she chose. I... I must... I must remain by my bonded one.

Arzoal lowered her head closer to Viera. You have no reason to fear me child. I am the Elder Mother. My name is Arzoal.

The Elder Mother! Viera gasped bowing her head in reverence. We... we have heard of you even through the stars. My name... my name is Viera.

Arzoal lifted her head and looked at Eliani as she came around to the front, her hand dragging gently over Viera's scales. Eliani... I can sense them... but they are...

Eliani shook her head sadly. Two of them are gone. She spoke softly within Mindvoice. The other two are very weak. I can just barely feel them even with my abilities. I was able to stabilize them and pass them nourishment with the metaphysical radiation in my body, but it won't sustain them for long.

They... they passed two weeks ago. Viera told them in a voice filled with shame. I... I felt them pass but there was nothing I could do. I have been trying to eat enough for my remaining eggs. My bonded one did not know.

Arzoal turned her massive head to look at Andro. [Their physical condition is worse than we expected Andro.] She spoke calmly. There were only a few dozen Mindvoicers within the entire Union who could speak with Arzoal when she chose to shield her conversation at the level she was doing now, almost half of them were the Leonidas family. [Though not through any conscious decision by their riders. At least not any of the others that I can sense.]

Andro nodded as he took a deep breath. [We can fix their physical ailments Arzoal.] He spoke meeting her gaze. [I will attempt to fix whatever else I can.]

Arzoal nodded slowly. [I will tend to Viera here. I will take her to Dragon Mountain. She will be safe there.] Arzoal turned her head and looked at Moneus who was standing to the side alertly watching events unfold. [Moneus Simpson... would you send for a DT please. I do not want her to fly and exert more of her energy.]

Moneus nodded his head and tapped the COM unit on his armor as he turned away from what was happening.

[Viera... who is the father?] Andro asked gently lowering his shields enough to include her in the conversation. He and Arzoal could detect the frustrated tremors radiating from Aikiro because she could not hear what they were saying.

Viera didn't answer and only looked to where Vollenth was glaring at all of them. Her eyes held no joy in them as she gazed at him. [He is.] She spoke.

[This... this was your choice?] Arzoal asked in surprise.

Viera turned her eyes back to Arzoal. [No Elder Mother... it was not.]

Arzoal snorted in disgust and surprise and her massive head turned once more to look at Vollenth briefly. She turned back and saw Moneus nod his head to her and point to the south. [Come Viera... child of dragons.] She spoke. [Let me show you how we are meant to live.]

[The Empress?] Viera gasped. [My bonded one?]

Andro shook his head. [He is no longer your bonded one.] He spoke. [Perhaps in the future there may be another... for the bond you have with this one is not a true bond. This one... you will never see him again. I promise you.]

[I will not... I will not be punished?] Viera asked.

[No Viera my child. You will be pampered and made to rest and eat and care for the eggs you carry.] Arzoal spoke. [No female that carries eggs, bonded with a rider or not, should ever have to experience the death of their blood before it even enters this world.] Arzoal turned towards where the STRIKER Dragon Transport was settling to the tarmac several hundred meters away. [Come with me child. Allow me to show you the gift of freedom.]

Viera paused for only a moment before looking at Arzoal and nodding her head. When Arzoal began walking towards the DT, Viera fell in beside her.

It was then that Aikiro came through the ranks of dragons and riders, the frustration at not being able to breach the shields of the conversations they were having getting the best of her. "What is going on?" She demanded. "Where is that dragon going Androcles Leonidas?"

Andro turned and looked at her. "That dragon is no longer your concern." He spoke firmly. "She will be taken where she will be cared for and loved by others of her kind and when her eggs hatch they will be loved as well. There will be no more abuse... no more discipline of dragons." Andro turned to look around at those who were listening to him. "Hear me well on this all of you Coven riders! The well being of your dragon comes before all else! They will not be mistreated in any way. Physically or verbally! If this is discovered again the dragon will be taken from you and you can go back to whatever ship you came from."

"I did not agree to this!" Aikiro snapped.

Andro whirled on her. "I just added a new rule!" He snapped loudly. "You want me to train them to fight? To survive? This is how we act and treat our dragons! They are not pieces of garbage you can discard after you are finished with them! They are sentient life forms and in many cases far more intelligent than many walking on two legs! I will not tolerate mistreatment of them! Any of them! For any nubous purpose! If I discover it... if any of my instructors discover it... this will end! I will order the dragons taken from you and your riders can all go suck eggs for all I care!"

"You presume much Androcles Leonidas!" Aikiro snapped. "What makes you think I would allow that to occur?"

Andro's smile was vicious as his eyes and fangs were still very prominent. "You will not have a choice in the matter Empress! And you will not be able to stop me! Your presence is no longer needed here Empress Aikiro. I ask that you take this piece of shit with you when you depart. Like right now."

"I will have words with your father young Androcles!" Aikiro barked. "This was not among the accords we agreed too!"

Andro nodded. "Fine. I'm sure he will love to hear that a rider was using boot spikes to punish his bonded sister when she carried eggs." He spoke. "That will go over real well with my father. If you think my reaction was harsh... tell him what just happened and see what he says. Just don't mention it in front of Torma... he would more than likely tear your limb from limb for such actions. Good day Empress Aikiro."

Andro spun around and did not give her an opportunity to retort as he cast his eyes over the High Coven riders who were all looking at him by now.

“We will finish the exams under the cover of the hanger to your east!” Andro shouted. “All of you begin moving there now!”

Aikiro could only simmer in anger as the upstart son of Leonidas walked away from her without a second’s pause.

CHAPTER EIGHT

ROYAL SPARTAN ESTATE FERAVOMIR’S RESIDENCE

“So tell me child... how does it feel being Androcles Leonidas’s Soulmate?” Helen asked as she bent over and lifted the small watering can and poured some small amounts of water into the row of incredible blue and purple flowers. “The one who holds his very essence.”

Sadi stood just behind her admiring the rows upon rows of multicolored flowers that adorned the rear of Helen’s villa. Her home was spacious and only one level like the rest of the buildings on the estate, but it was comfortably furnished and it was all hers. The awning covered patio was large and lined with flowers and plants from half a dozen different worlds that Sadi could determine just from first glance.

Helen had refused vehemently when Martin had ordered this villa built just for her only three hundred meters from the main house. Her argument was that he and his Queens needed their peace and solitude at times and having her so close would only intrude upon that. He and his Queens had won out in the end however and now Helen felt the most peace and serenity she had ever felt when she was here among the pines and flowers. She decided Martin had known this was how she would feel and that is why he had this home especially built with her in mind. There were many rooms she almost never used, but he had included a large meditation chamber and equally large kitchen for her to practice and refine her already extensive culinary skills. Skills that Helen loved to explore to escape her role and duties as the First Oracle of their people. She had spent many hours with Gallais here in her kitchen as they developed and created new foods and dishes, as well as improved old ones. All of the items that she had kept hidden in her cave were now displayed for all to see, some of them dating back nearly four thousand years even past the time of Martin’s father. The patio area of her villa was covered with a sturdy wooden awning that was draped with blooming vines of yellow and pink flowers and the myriad scents filled Sadi’s head.

“I think I am still trying to wrap my hands around it.” Sadi answered finally. “It... it all happened so very quickly Feravomir. I don’t... I don’t think it’s possible to put it into words really.”

Helen stood back up and turned to look at her. “Did it happen quickly? Or does it just seem that way because you have been waiting so long for this very thing to be. Now that you have it... you don’t know what to do because you have found what you have been searching for all these years.”

“What do you mean?” Sadi asked.

“Sadi, have you ever stopped to consider that perhaps everything that has happened in these last years is preordained somehow?” Helen asked looking at her. “Our people were very spiritual once upon a time. Violent yes... but very spiritual.” She told her with a smile. “We believed there was a purpose to all things happening. The events of your life have brought you full circle Sadi Leonidas. Perhaps the road you walked was laid before you a long time prior to you ever being born.”

“Are you saying that even before I was born... even when I was a small child... that I was meant for Andro somehow?” She asked her face puzzled and confused but inwardly rejoicing at those words.

Helen shrugged noncommittally. “You tell me.” She said. “When you conducted the Gravinolfgreksaan... did you and Andro stop to look at the moon and see that it was Vada Assirina Cormunn? Or did it happen instinctually... without any conscious thought? As if some instinct was guiding your actions.” She settled to the bench and patted the stone top next to her signaling for Sadi to sit down.

Sadi didn’t hesitate and moved to sit beside her. This woman had been a guiding force in her life after the events on the Island Palace and Sadi had come to look at her as the mother she never had. “It... it just happened Feravomir. Something inside me... inside us... that something inside us... that instinct said to do it.”

Helen nodded. “No doubt the same instinct in Andro triggered as well. It was identical for his father and Aricia you know... as it was for King Resumar and Eliani. You do not plan to become Soulmates Sadi... and it only truly happens to those who are meant to be together. I believe the only one outside of the King and Andro to have found their true Soulmate is Daniel Simpson. He and Anuk were meant to be together long before they ever actually met, and probably long before the comet ever came to this planet. Perhaps because of how closely tied together Daniel and Martin are... and the path he has played and continues to play in the future. As well as that of his children. For it to happen, your blood must call out for each other in a way it normally does not. Not everyone finds their Soulmates Sadi. In fact, the majority does not... but that does not mean they do not love those they are with completely.”

“I don’t question that I am Andro’s Soulmate Feravomir.” She stated. “I relish it more than I can ever put into words. What he makes me feel... it is beyond anything I could have ever imagined. And when we... when we join our minds, it is indescribable.”

Helen smiled as she looked at her. “That is good... because the scuttlebutt around Sparta among the older generations is that you remind them of Gorgo in your demeanor and how you treat others, excluding your beautiful blond hair of course. That is very high praise considering who I am hearing it from.”

“Being compared to Lady Gorgo is the ultimate compliment and honor I could receive Feravomir.” Sadi said with some embarrassment. “Though I don’t believe I will ever come close to accomplishing what she has in her lifetime so far.”

Helen grinned. “You never know.” She said with a glint in her eye. “I knew you were special the moment you came to my school Sadi.” Helen spoke. “And not just because Elynth and Andro had touched you. You already had the ability inside you child because of the pureness of your blood, you were just never guided on how to use it. I had initially hoped you would stay on and perhaps take on the role of an Oracle... but when I saw what was in your heart, I knew you were to walk another path.” Helen laughed. “Forgive me... I am becoming philosophical in my old age.”

Sadi chuckled. “Do I walk that path now Feravomir?” She asked after a moment. “Now that I am together with Andro?”

Helen met her eyes. “Do you?” She asked. “You know... Androcles will one day surpass his father in what he can do Sadi, and Martin Leonidas is perhaps the most incredibly powerful Mindvoicer Canth and I have ever had the experience of knowing. And yes... I still speak to Canth even though he is gone. He is as much a part of me now as my own self.” She said with a smile. “Most would consider me crazy for saying that.”

Sadi smiled. “After experiencing what you have in your life Feravomir... crazy is not a word I would attribute to you.”

“You know of course that Andro became aware while still in Aricia’s womb?” Helen said taking her hand.

Sadi nodded. “Yes.”

“He knew and understood all that was happening around him and he used Elynth as his conduit.” Helen spoke softly. “He is wise beyond his years, though there are times when he tends to let his father’s passion for things override his own feelings. You were the first and most important step Sadi, the first step in Androcles finding his very own path in this life. He and Elynth will accomplish great things together in the future and you will be beside them in those achievements for you are now part of them.”

Sadi nodded slowly as she looked at her. “I can feel the influence and power of their bond all the time now. I felt it then as well... on the island when he spoke to me as a child. It sweeps through me even now stronger than ever Feravomir, encompassing me as well in many cases.”

“I don’t doubt that... you are part of them now. The joy their bond brings them they will naturally share with you. You had enormous potential when you came to me Sadi.” Helen spoke looking at her. “On your own and with the proper schooling, you would have become nearly as powerful as Aricia now is, and she is still growing in many respects for she is not that much older than you. Your skills and abilities will grow quickly now that you and Andro have come together and you must be prepared for that Sadi.”

Sadi nodded. “I have felt my awareness expand Feravomir. Far beyond anything I have known up until now. I feel the strength and focus flowing through me like never before.”

Helen’s eyes smiled at her. “And it will continue to grow and expand.” Her dark eyes twinkled in the sunlight that reached through the awning overhead. “Yet you are here now because you and Andro are feeling as if you are not yet complete somehow. You and Andro are wondering why you have been feeling this way these last two days. Why you are feeling it even now? It stems from this young woman you both have recently met, doesn't it?"

Sadi grinned and shook her head. "I truly hate it that you can do that. You know what others will say or what they want before they do. Even when I studied under you." She said with humor in her voice. "It is so eerie."

Helen laughed and took her hand tighter, squeezing it. "This young woman... Carisia is her name I believe. And Anthar is her dragon. She is what brings you here now?"

Sadi nodded. "Andro..."

"Sadi... you and Andro are Anomes. You speak with one voice child. You do not need to refer to him in the third person any longer. When you speak... he speaks. It is no different with Martin and Aricia, and I truly do not want to spend ten years pounding it into your skulls as I had to do with theirs. They were so very obstinate at times."

Sadi looked at her and couldn't help but laugh. She nodded her head after a moment. "She affects us in a way we have never felt. When we are in her presence... separately or together... we both feel it. It happened with me yesterday when I saw her in a shop in Sparta... and then last night when we were together at Gallais's Retreat. It happened again today when Andro was with her at the airfield."

"And what does she make you feel?" Helen asked.

Sadi met her eyes evenly. "She makes us feel whole." She answered. "It is... it is so very strange. After... after we conducted the Gravinolfgreksaan, the sense of one Andro and I felt just lying in each others arms... it was glorious Feravomir."

Helen nodded. "No doubt."

"But with her... with Carisia... it is different. We were so very happy that we had finally found one another that we missed it." Sadi spoke shaking her head. "The void that is still there. We feel potent and more cognizant in her presence. And we can feel the same perceptions coming from her as well. It... it is almost as if we have found a long lost gem that fits into a much larger jewel somehow. Finishing it. Making it whole again." Sadi looked at her. "She fills that void."

"So she completes you both?" Helen asked.

"Feravomir... we don't know her." Sadi said softly.

Helen smiled gently. "Your eyes, your heart and your voice tell me different Sadi. You have seen her before. Both of you have."

Sadi nodded slowly. "In our dreams Feravomir." She said finally.

"And dreams are the windows to our souls Sadi." Helen spoke. "What you feel... what you both feel... it is not wrong child."

"But Andro and I are Anomes." Sadi spoke meeting her eyes. "How could... how could both of us feel the same thing for someone we don't even know? Someone we have never met? And feel it in such a unique way; with such power and clarity? We... should only feel this for each other. Shouldn't we?"

"She has been in your dreams." Helen said calmly. "Tell me... in your dreams... have they been separate? You and she together... her and Andro? Or are the three of you always together?"

Sadi shook her head, not at all put out by the intimate nature of the question, at least not with this woman who she had shared so much over the years. "They may start out that way... but we always end up together. Without fail Feravomir. They are..." She said softly, almost as if she was embarrassed to admit something.

"Tell me." Helen said squeezing her hand.

"They are such exquisite dreams Feravomir." Sadi said gently with a smile. "It is almost as if I can feel what is happening in the dream. Her touch... her scent. Her scent is like sweet rose petals that have freshly bloomed. And we always end up together."

"Like Soulmates." Helen said softly.

Sadi's jungle green eyes grew wide and she looked at her. "Feravomir... how... how could she be our Soulmate. I... I thought it was... that it could only be two. Andro and I have found each other already."

Helen nodded. "Yes you have... but like the pieces of any puzzle... it is not complete until all the pieces are together."

“Feravomir... she is a vampire.” Sadi said quickly. “She is a ranking member of the High Coven.”

“Yes she is.” Helen answered evenly. “And so is Bella... so is Nyla... and so many others who have a deep and abiding love for whoever they are with. This fact matters why? Do you see an enemy when you look at her? When you feel her coursing through your being, do you feel an enemy? Does Andro?”

Sadi shook her head quickly. “No.”

Helen met her eyes. “Vampire or wolf or elves, all life Sadi... we all have souls. How we live our lives dictates whom we are inside Sadi, you know that better than most.”

“So... so what do we do?” She asked. “It... it only grows stronger each time we see her Feravomir.”

Helen shook her head. “I can not tell you what to do Sadi. You or Andro. I can only guide you and hope I guide you in the correct direction.”

“Then guide us Feravomir.” Sadi said quickly. “Do... do we pursue what she makes us feel?”

“That she is a woman does not deter you... or alter your perceptions of her?” Helen asked her. “Based on what you have said... if you pursue this course... you would be sharing her with Androcles. Your Anome. Is that something you can handle?”

Sadi shook her head quickly. “I... I have experienced such a relationship before... with Teeria.” She answered. “It was brief but very intense. It is not something I have searched for Feravomir... but it is not something I will dismiss out of hand. As for sharing Andro with her... if she is meant to be with us... meant to be part of our lives as you suggest is possible... I can not just dismiss that. Not with the strength of the emotion that apparently is there between us and certainly not if she is meant to complete us. What if she is meant to be both our Soulmates? We can not turn away from that.”

“You would not feel this way if there was not something there Sadi.” Helen spoke looking at her. “I believe... and this is only my opinion, mind you... I believe it was meant to be this way long before Andro or you were even born as I said earlier, and that is why what you feel for each other is so very powerful and pure. That does not mean however, that there is not meant to be another in your lives as well. Sharing your lives with you, even as you and Andro share everything now. Do you explore this... or do you let it pass and always wonder why it is you felt these things? Why that void is always there? That is a decision the three of you have to make... but always remember the rule by which the King has lived the vast majority of his life.”

Sadi nodded slowly. “Never fear the unknown or the treasures it could bring you.” Sadi looked at her for a long moment before finally rising to her feet. “Thank you Feravomir.” She stated.

Helen got up and took Sadi’s hands in hers. “I am always available to you Sadi Leonidas, no matter the topic. You are a powerful woman Sadi... and now that you and Andro have come together, your abilities will only grow stronger as I have said.” She said with a smile. “I only hope you will take me up on the offer.”

Sadi smiled at her words and finally told her what she had always wanted to tell her. “I have no mother Feravomir. You have been the closest thing to a mother for me... more than I have ever known. I will always come to you.” She said with sincere honesty and warmth.

Helen nodded and smiled. “And do drag that strapping young man back with you!” Helen said. “He still has many things to learn and absorb. I can’t teach him if he is off gallivanting across the planet and the stars training members of the High Coven. He needs to make time to be here as well.”

Sadi nodded with her own smile. “He told me about that.” She said.

“I have been trying to pass on different skills to both him and his father.” Helen told her. “They have been using their abilities to augment their already impressive physical skills and it is time they learned to do more. And so should you.”

“I will insure he comes very soon Feravomir.” Sadi spoke.

“Good... for now you both will need to come.” Helen said reaching up to touch her soft cheek. “And perhaps one day there will be three of you. This Carisia... she is nearly as strong as you and Andro and there is strength and wisdom in numbers you know. I sense that she knows what it is she wants, yet she has a fear that should not be hers. These are things you will need to help her with if you decide to go down that path.” Helen squeezed her hands tightly and pulled her closer. “If you decide on this Sadi... if it feels right in every way... don’t hesitate... don’t think... grab onto it and never let go. You have far more influence over Andro now than even his father. He is old fashion in many respects and he will resist because he thinks you will want him to resist, no matter what you both feel. Make sure he understands that you do not fear what could happen if you both choose that path.”

Sadi nodded and leaned over to kiss her cheek. "I must return to the villa and prepare for my first State Dinner as Crown Princess." She said with an embarrassed smile. "I don't know whether to be excited or nervous."

Helen laughed. "You will do fine child. Andro hates these things perhaps more than his father. He will shield you from most of the annoying men and women. I will see you there tonight as well." She released Sadi's hands and watched as she made her way back into the house and towards the entrance. She turned slowly and looked at her rows of flowers, taking a long deep breath and exhaling slowly as she calmed herself.

"It is beginning." She said softly.

We knew this day would come eventually. The male voice spoke in reply inside her mind like the whispering of the winds through the pines.

"Will it be enough Canth?" She asked softly.

Only time will tell Dustha. Only time will tell. The male voice filled her head as she looked up into the sky at the bright sunshine. It is a start however. Androcles is very much like his father and grandfather... but he is more like Resumar than either of them and that is our advantage. He has taken the best of all three and blended them into one person Dustha. We can not hope to stop what is coming... but it will be the defining moment for all of them. Androcles especially. We must trust in what you and his parents have taught him and all their children. What you continue to teach them. You have accomplished far more than even I could have dreamed in teaching both of them Dustha. Trust in that training and be there for them when they come to you for council. And they will come to you Dustha.

"I thought we would have more time." Helen said.

The first son's existence has changed events. Canth spoke. We must adapt and respond or all will be lost.

"I hope you are right." Helen said. "I hope you are right."

HAIGOS CENTER DURCUNUSAAN TRAINING FACILITY

Malic stepped through the doorway into Star Colonel Isra's office. He wore the standard Durcunusaan uniform and had just been summoned from a training class. The hours of the last few days had been crammed with learning new skills and procedures, as well as several tests. Malic detested tests and he knew he was not a good student. He hated any kind of academics and always had, perhaps because he was never very good at retaining what he was taught. His skills had been always oriented to the physical portion of his duties, duties which he excelled at.

Malic looked around the empty office taking in the comfortable but not extravagant furniture that was positioned all around. There were very few who did not know who Colonel Isra was, or what he had accomplished in his career as a Spartan and member of Mjolnir's Hand. He was widely considered one of the top five of the Bonded Pairs within the Union and his exploits with his dragon Aelnala in the last twenty-five years were well documented. He and Prince Androcles were the only members of Mjolnir's Hand to be awarded the Shield of Valor during the Evolli War, yet it was his political skills that garnered the most attention. Beside his two mates, Colonel Isra had brokered four major trade deals and welcomed two new member planets into the Union. He was the only one of those men and women rescued from Enurrua that had opted to enter the Union military, mainly because the first day he and Aelnala had met and discovered each other, their path was set. He was also well known and utterly respected by all dragons within the Union for the celebration and party he had thrown for his Bonded Sister when she and Queen Anja's dragon Miath had mated. The celebration had lasted for two days and was the talk of Sparta and Tuya for weeks afterwards from what Malic heard. It was said Colonel Isra was almost as happy for Aelnala as she had been for herself. Though an injury prevented Aelnala from carrying eggs, she and Miath were the first to come forward and volunteer to raise the three eggs that Aelnala and Isra had saved the day they met. Those three dragons were now grown and two of them, while not members of Mjolnir's Hand, were among the nearly thousand Bonded Pairs that called the Union home.

Malic stepped around to the wall and gazed at the many holo images that Colonel Isra had displayed around the office. Most of them were of his two mates and the six children he had, the rest were images of Aelnala and Miath as well as the King and Aricia. It was said that Colonel Isra was one of only a handful that could walk onto the Spartan Royal Estate totally uncontested and speak directly with the King.

Malic heard shuffling feet and turned quickly when the diminutive Drow elf female came through the wide double doors across the office on the far wall. Doors that were large enough to fit even the King's dragon Torma if Malic was any judge of size. The Drow female pulled up short when she saw him, her amber colored eyes confused.

Aihola lowered the bundle she held in her arms as she looked at the tall Spartan. Her shimmering white hair tumbled down around her shoulders, framing dark features that were exceptionally exotic to look at. Malic knew right away who she was and he also knew she was half vampire and one of those that his father had spoken of in a derogatory nature over the years. His father considered anyone who was not an officer and member of the Fleet, especially vampires, to be beneath him. He thought all the ground troops were nothing but brutes, and those who flew on dragons to be the worst of them. Vice President of the Union Aihola was nearly as well known as Colonel Isra, and her history and that of the Drow elves within the Union was one of the most sought after history classes among both Fleet Academy students and students from the many universities that dotted the Union.

"Madam Vice President." Malic spoke formally bowing his head in a show of respect to her position.

Aihola smiled at him and set the bundle on the chair as she came further into Isra's office. "Hello... I'm not sure I know you."

Aihola's half vampire and half wolf ears detected Roluth lifting off once more to take Tarifa to the Senate Building and her office. Though twenty-five years had passed since her new life had begun, Aihola blessed the morning sun every day for what fate had brought her. She was the child of a vampire father and the Drow elf Queen; her father turned into a vampire by the hated witch Yuri during her many years of experimentation on the Drow people. Many of the experiments performed on her people were of a sexually deviant nature once it was determined that they were not the soldiers the Coven had been trying to create. It had been Tarifa and Dysea who had set Aihola on the path she currently followed, and without them and Anja she would never have rid herself of her affliction. She would never have discovered the love she and Tarifa shared, and together they would never have found the man who had so claimed their hearts.

Aihola and Tarifa's love for one another and their combined love for the violet eyed Spartan warrior who rode a dragon was the basis for the content of dozens of romance novels written and sold throughout the entire Union. She and Tarifa thought them gaudy and unrealistic while Isra only laughed and loved them even more fiercely than he already did. They had six beautiful and strong children with Isra, and Aihola had long ago accepted the fact that when either she or Tarifa spoke, it was with one voice.

"I am Enomotarch Malic Ma'am." He replied quickly meeting the gaze of her eyes, which were absolutely incredible to look at. The light danced in the corneas of her amber eyes and made her seem more animated and alive. Half vampire or not... her long silky like white hair combined with her amber colored eyes and what was obviously an incredibly shapely figure made this elven female exceptionally attractive, even to him.

And that surprised Malic.

"I arrived at the beginning of this week." He finished speaking as he brought his mind back to the present.

"Ah... studying to become a Durcunusaan I see." Aihola stated as she walked around Isra's desk as she had done thousands of times in the past years to the low counter behind his chair where she poured herself a steaming mug of tea from the ever present carafe that Isra always had in his office.

"Yes ma'am. And then I intend to ride a dragon as a member of Mjolnir's Hand." Malic stated proudly and pulling himself to his full height of six foot two.

Aihola looked at him with a smile as she sipped her mug and turned back to face him. "Very lofty goals Enomotarch Malic." Aihola spoke confidently. "I commend you."

"You... you are bonded to a dragon as well, are you not Madam Vice President?" Malic asked stepping closer and finding her voice soothing in some manner.

Aihola nodded. "Tarifa and I both." She answered. "It's been twenty-five years now that we have been bonded to Roluth and the feelings and sensations that fill us everyday have never faded. We ride as often as we can."

Malic's eyes narrowed somewhat. "You... you are bonded to the same dragon?" He asked somewhat taken aback at this knowledge.

Aihola nodded. "Yes."

"I... I did not think that was possible." Malic said.

Aihola chuckled at his confused look for it was something both she and Tarifa had dealt with in the past. "Tarifa and I share a unique bond with each other. We fell in love before the Battle for Earth. During that battle I was injured badly. Tarifa saved me by allowing me to take her blood to heal my wounds. It formed a very powerful Mindvoice bond between us. A bond that only grew in strength when Isra came into our lives. Our love is as strong now as it was when we first discovered each other. Over the years together it has blended our minds and consciousnesses together. We are essentially one person and that allowed us to bond with Roluth together."

Malic allowed himself to breathe deeply and he detected the peach scent wafting from her, as well as the wild cheery blossom scent that was her own. It was very hard to miss the spicy smell of deep timber that permeated her entire being, and Malic knew that scent belonged to Colonel Isra. The three scents were entwined more deeply than he thought they could be considering she was half vampire, but then he detected the smell of the wolf in her blood and realized that some of her elven genes had been turned to that of a wolf.

"You seemed surprised to hear that Enomotarch." Aihola spoke moving closer to him.

Malic shuffled his feet. "Forgive me... I have never had the knowledge that two women could be so tightly bound together. It is not something I have experienced... though... I understand that Princess Eliani shares something similar I think. She mentioned something to me about it while transiting here on the SCIMITAR."

Malic didn't know why he tossed that out there but he saw Aihola nod and laugh softly. Her voice was still very pleasant and her amber eyes glittered in the light. "Yes they do." Aihola said nodding her head. "So you are the young Spartan that saved Eliani's life. Your deed has not gone unnoticed Enomotarch. You are quite the talk of Eden City and to a lesser degree here in Sparta."

Malic's eyes grew a little wider. "I... I am?" He asked.

Aihola nodded. "Yes you are." She stated plainly. "Eliani and Nyla's Mindvoice abilities tie them together more tightly than Tarifa and I in many respects. Eliani saved Nyla's life by sharing her blood with her so that Nyla could heal wounds during the Evolli war; similar to what Tarifa did for me. However... since they were both bonded to dragons when that took place, and Nyla's injuries were more severe than mine, Nyla ended up taking a great deal more of Eliani's blood than either of them expected and it made their connection much more focused and deeper. That single event tied them together and over the next months they discovered each other. They are very much in love now. You are becoming known as the man who saved that love."

Malic's eyes showed his stunned shock at this revelation and he opened his mouth to ask another question about Eliani and Nyla but his eyes shifted as the tall, muscular form of Colonel Isra filled the doorway. He stopped for a moment, his violet eyes falling on Malic briefly, but then he turned to Aihola and stepped up to her, his violet eyes smiling and bright. Aihola set her mug of tea down on the desk as Isra drew her close in his arms and she pressed her body against his tightly.

"I found your spare uniform." She stated with a smile at the man who held hers and Tarifa's hearts in his hands, and had since the moment they first set eyes on him. "Joneu hid it hoping he could wear it to emulate you."

Isra chuckled. "I'll have to have a talk with that boy." He said.

"Don't be too hard on him." Aihola replied. "He simply loves his father and wants to be like him in every way."

They had six children with Isra, three each from both her and Tarifa. The two oldest were boys and the youngest was a boy. Their boys had been given Spartan names, while the girls all bore Elven names. It was something that Tarifa and she had talked of very often when they first discovered their love for each other, and when Isra came into their lives those dreams were quickly discovered as they became pregnant together shortly after Isra returned to Earth and re-entered their lives. Their two oldest sons were also bonded with dragons while their oldest daughter was a senior aide for Deia and rapidly moving up the ranks due to her intelligence and beauty.

“I will pick you and Sadormacah up at eighteen hundred hours sharp.” He said pulling her firm Drow body against his. “Martin wants us there a little early to begin greeting the guests as they arrive.”

Aihola nodded. “We’ll be ready.” She spoke brushing something from his broad shoulder and smiling. “I must go... I have a meeting with Panos and Tarifa about this new sight in the desert we discovered. We will see you later tonight my love.”

Isra and Aihola shared a deep, loving kiss and he nuzzled her elven ear before she pushed him away with a soft laugh and headed out of his office. Isra watched her go, admiring the way she always filled out her uniforms and clothes. Like Tarifa... even after three children, Aihola’s body was just as lush and seductive as when he had first met her. Her ebony skinned looked perfect nestled between him and Tarifa in their bed. He smiled to himself and looked at Malic, his smile fading away quickly.

“Enomotarch Malic.” Isra spoke as he moved to the counter and poured himself a mug of tea. “Do you know why you are here Malic?” He asked as he turned back to his desk and motioned for Malic to take one of the chairs.

“No... no Colonel. I was told only that you wanted to see me.” Malic answered as he settled into the chair.

Isra moved to his chair and sat down. “I understand you petitioned directly for inclusion into the Durcunusaan and then Mjolnir’s Hand, bypassing the usual process.” He said. “Your mother’s influence got that petition approved.”

“That is not something I asked her to do Colonel.” Malic spoke quickly.

“Perhaps not... but it was done none the less.” Isra stated. “You were able to skip all of the academic requirements because of this Malic.” He held up the data pad. “I pulled your file when I discovered this information. Do you know what I found Enomotarch?” Isra held out the data pad waiting for Malic to take it.

Malic looked at the pad and felt a sinking feeling in his guts. They were the results of the four tests he had taken in the last four days. He looked up quickly. “Colonel Isra I...”

“You failed all four Malic.” Isra spoke cutting him off. “To include basic Lycavorian language skills.” Isra leaned forward. “How is it that you were able to get this far without this being known by others Malic?”

“I... I don’t know sir.” He replied honestly.

“Yes... well I don’t know how things were done on Apo Prime...” Isra stated. “But here at the Durcunusaan Training Group we do things a little differently.” Isra told him. “Generals Vengal and Vistr set it up in a certain way for reasons which I’m sure you understand. It has not changed in twenty-five years Malic. And since those of us in Mjolnir’s Hand pull directly from the ranks of the Durcunusaan... we take quite an interest in those selected to become members of the Wolves of the Blood.”

“Colonel... I am capable!” Malic almost shouted. “No one can beat me with the Nehtes sir! I am fit and in perfect shape!”

Isra nodded as he sipped his tea. “No doubt Malic... however there is far more to being a member of Mjolnir’s Hand than just physical strength. We are not just the King’s Hammer... we are the extension of his will. His entire will... which includes procedures and events that have nothing to do with war. We must be able to talk peace as well as fight Malic. We must interact with others on almost every level within the government and military, with dozens of different species. And do so in a manner that promotes trust and peace.”

“I can learn whatever it is I need to learn Colonel!” Malic spoke. “I am an excellent learner and I pick up things immediately.”

“I truly hope so Malic.” Isra said as he held up the second data pad. “If not for this Malic, you would be on your way back to Apo Prime this afternoon. I don’t think you are cut out for being a member of the Durcunusaan... and most definitely not Mjolnir’s Hand. Fortunately for you... your actions with Androcles on Eleyi Three have earned you a reprieve.”

Malic’s eyes furrowed as he breathed a sigh of relief not knowing what surprise was on this data pad. “I... I don’t understand sir.”

“You are aware that the High Coven has come to Earth?” Isra said.

Malic’s eyes darkened. “I... I had heard that Colonel, yes. Though I do not know why we would allow that? They are our enemies.”

“In many respects I tend to agree with you Malic.” Isra stated. “However this is different. You know how we view our bonded brothers and sisters within the Union?”

Malic nodded quickly. "Yes sir. They are cherished and honored members of the Union. Without them... there would be no Mjolnir's Hand and we would be lesser for it. At least... at least that is how I view them."

Isra nodded his head slowly as he gazed at the young Spartan. Isra's question had caused Malic to act without thinking, and the words he had spoken came from his within his heart Isra noticed, and not from some field manual. Isra also knew of the encounter with Elynth on the SCIMITAR from Famus and how Malic had been the only one to not back up in fear as Elynth had approached. That spoke volumes about this man in front of him because Isra had yet to meet a man that did not at least flinch when Elynth approached them.

"Well it appears the High Coven has brought forty-three of their own dragons here to Earth to be trained by us." He spoke slowly. "Dragons that they stole many years ago... but those dragons have now bonded with members of the High Coven and we need to train them. Thirty-six members of the Durcunusaan have been chosen by Andro to assist in this endeavor. Your name is on that list Malic, backed up with a solid recommendation from Commander Famus."

Malic looked surprised for the first time. "It is?" He asked.

Isra handed him the data pad. "Those are your orders Malic." He said. "In six months you will return here and be re-tested on these results Malic." Isra held up the first data pad as he took it back from him. "You will be quite busy where you are going so I truly hope you are able to make the time to study and learn what it is you need to learn. If you fail even one of these tests Malic... you will find yourself on the first transport back to your old unit. Is that very clear Enomotarch Malic?"

Malic came to his feet quickly. "Perfectly Colonel! I will not fail you!"

Isra stood up as well. "I hope not Malic... you have great potential son. That much I can sense." He told him honestly. "But you need to alter your attitude and perceptions of everything around you. And you need to leave the arrogance behind. No matter what you have faced in the past... or who you have learned it from, it no longer applies now Malic. The sooner you learn that... the better off you will be."

"Yes sir!"

Isra nodded his head. "The transport leaves in three days. I suggest you take the time to gather whatever materials you will need for the journey and to learn what you need to learn and prepare your equipment. You are acting as an Usher for this evening's State Dinner yes?"

Malic nodded. "Yes sir. The South entrance."

"Be sharp Malic... and above all else... be smart." Isra spoke.

"I will be sir!" Malic barked.

"You may return to your duties now." Isra said motioning towards the door.

Malic nodded and made his way quickly to the exit. He did not see the heads of the two dragons extend into the door Aihola had come in from. This entrance led directly to a large and very comfortable pen that Aelnala spent many hours in as Isra's Bonded Sister. Now however, along with her dirty yellow scaled head and honey colored eyes, the dark green scales and bright gray eyes of Miath's large head poked into the office as well.

Aelnala rubbed her head under the thick, powerful neck of her beloved mate in affection as she looked at Isra.

Aelnala had never imagined herself with a mate, knowing that no male dragon would ever take her because of her inability to carry eggs, the result of a very foolish event fighting Chetek's men when she was younger. Aelnala had resigned herself to a life without a mate or children of her own and was more than content to share in the happiness that her bonded brother Isra had found. It had taken him two years after his return from Lycavore for Miath to gain the courage he needed to approach her. Aelnala was much older than him, and he was the Bonded Brother to Queen Anja, and by virtue of that alone he was very sought after by female dragons of mating age. Aelnala had been angry with him at first for telling her he wanted only her. She had scolded him for not wanting to help their species reproduce by mating with a female who could carry eggs and give him children. She had chased him away even though she did find Miath to be nearly irresistible, but had never held out her hopes for a pairing. Aelnala didn't know why she had let Isra and Tarifa talk her into taking part in the Harmony Ceremony that year, for she knew no male would take her. She had done it because Isra had asked her to and Aelnala would do anything for Isra. She had flown among the clouds that night with the rest of the females, excreting her mating scent as she flew upside down, but knowing in her heart that no male would approach her.

Aelnala had almost given up and was about to roll over and return to the ground when the large dark green blur that was a hybrid dragon plunged from the clouds above her, with confident and dominating power and precise control and speed and all but blotting out the bright moon. It had taken her completely by surprise and before she knew what was happening, Miath had plunged into her female depths and wrapped his large wings around her as they plummeted to the earth below. Aelnala had committed the words he had spoken to her while they fell to memory for they had made her shed tears. As they plunged for the ground below, his huge organ buried within her female depths where no male had ever been before, Miath did not move except to stare into her eyes. The pleasure was gripping her rapidly, and while she may have not been able to carry eggs, she was still very much able to enjoy the complete and utter pleasure of mating.

I do not care that you can not carry eggs Aelnala! I have never cared about that. I want you Aelnala! I want only you! You have invaded my being like no other and I want to go into the future with you as my mate! No other! Tell me you will have me! Tell me Aelnala before we smash into the hard ground below for I do not want to go another day without you by my side!

His words to her had blocked all of the pleasure that was ripping through her from his maleness inside her and Aelnala did what her heart had wanted to do for years.

Yes! Yes! Her words filled Miath's mind and she trumpeted out her pleasure as they fell and she surrendered to the feelings of complete bliss he produced in her.

What followed that initial time together had been nothing short of rapture for Aelnala, and it had not stopped. Miath never grew tired of her, and she could not remember the last time they had not mated for days on end when he returned to Earth with Anja. She knew his duties as Anja's Bonded Brother took him away for weeks, but it was Miath who always made it seem like she had been gone with the attention he lavished on her when he returned. The most blissful and happiest times of her life had come while she was wrapped within the cocoon of his wings and they were mating. When Arzoal suggested to her that she and Miath raise the eggs she and Isra had rescued on Enurrua, both of them had jumped at the chance with undisguised glee.

Aelnala had the family she had always dreamed of now. She had a handsome male dragon completely devoted to her and she to him. They had three beautiful young dragons that called them mother and father, and while they may not have been of their blood, the love they had for them knew no bounds. And Aelnala had the love and bond of Isra, and the knowledge that they were considered one of the most powerful Bonded Pairs within the Union.

Aelnala looked at her Bonded Brother. I can feel the great potential in him Isra, just as you can. She spoke softly.

Miath nodded his large head as well. His abilities are buried however. Buried under falsehoods and ideals he has come to believe, but are not his. This is what prevents him from obtaining that potential.

Isra nodded as he walked over to them. I sense it as well. He spoke. I don't know what Andro expects from him though. We have no dragons that would suit him even if he were to change. He does not know things that should be second nature to many of our Bonded Pairs. And his academic skills are well below par. It is almost as if he was not taught these things as a child.

Aelnala looked at him keenly. It has always been very difficult to look at what Andro has within his mind and see a clear picture. I believe only his father and Elynth can truly see that... though Sadi will no doubt come to see and understand it in the future. Elynth has always been the one to try and explain Andro's actions to others. She is better with words than he is most of the time.

Miath nodded. We trust Andro Isra. He said. There is always a method to his sometimes seeming madness.

Isra chuckled at Miath's words. Yes there is. He said. What are you two going to do tonight during the State Dinner?

Miath laughed within Mindvoice and turned his gray eyes on his cherished mate. A little of this and a little of that as my Bonded Sister always says. He replied turning back to Isra. I thought I might take my lovely yellow scaled mate and view the moon come up from the top of the clouds. He said looking at Aelnala once more with bright gray eyes.

That sounds very promising. Aelnala said leaning into him.

Isra laughed and reached up to stroke Aelnala's snout. Just be mindful of the weather you two. The last time you went to look at the moon above the clouds, Miath got singed by a stray lightning bolt.

That is only because my attention was diverted to something more pleasurable at the time. Miath stated proudly.

Aelnala laughed as well now and rubbed against his side. We will be more careful this time. She said.

Go on you two! Get out of here. I can do without the details of your love life. Isra stated with a grin.

Isra turned as he heard their laughter in Mindvoice and went back to his desk. He picked up the results of Malic's tests once more and gazed at the pad. "What are you thinking Andro?" He whispered. "What are you thinking?"

GYTHEIO

OCEANSIDE VILLA OF LADY GORGO AND ADMIRAL RIALL

Gorgo was running a brush through her long dark hair as she moved for the door and its chiming. She was almost ready to depart for the Senate Auditorium and now someone was coming to visit her. It never failed to happen as far as she was concerned. Her classes had run a little longer than usual, and after sharing a very brief lunch with her new granddaughter-in-law Sadi, Gorgo had taken a Lifter home.

She passed her hand over the sensor by the side of the door and began speaking. "I am rather busy... so unless..." Gorgo stopped speaking when she saw Denali and Lisisa in her flowered doorway. Denali looked exceptionally handsome in his formal dress uniform while Lisisa looked absolutely ravishing in the glittering blood red gown that was cut in a way that revealed quite a bit of her tanned skin and hugged her large breasts. While extremely sexy the dress was very elegant and formal and it made Lisisa Leonidas simply beam with beauty. "Deni... Lisi... what is wrong?" She asked.

"There is nothing wrong grandmother." Denali spoke quickly. "Lisisa and I are going to be helping Andro train the High Coven riders and this is the only time where we could break away to speak with you alone."

Gorgo ushered them inside. "Come in... there is your mother's coffee on the burner. Just let me throw on my dress and we can sit for a few moments."

They watched her move towards her bedroom as they walked towards the kitchen area of the villa. Lisisa gripped Denali's hand and waited until his handsome face turned to her.

"Deni... I'm scared." She stated softly. "I'm scared by what she might say. What she might do."

Denali squeezed her hand and slipped his arm around her waist pulling her tightly to him and fighting down the sexual urges that having her firm body pressed against him elicited. "Do you love me Lisisa Leonidas?"

Lisisa rolled her eyes. "What kind of stupid question is that?" She hissed. "You know I do Deni. More than anything."

Deni nodded with a smile. He leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and side of her neck and felt her lean into him as she always did, relishing in the sensations he caused within her. "And I love you. This is the first step we have to take to make sure one day we can openly show that love. Grandmother is the only one who might understand... and we have to start somewhere."

Lisisa stared at him for a long moment and finally smiled. She leaned over and stretched up on her toes to kiss him softly. "And that is something I want more than anything." She stated. "To proclaim to all that I am yours."

Denali nodded. "Good."

Gorgo came into the kitchen area smoothing out the lines of the purple velvet dress and looked at her grandchildren. “Ok... we don’t want to be late... so what’s going on? The two of you do not normally come seeking advice from me. It’s not in either of your natures... so what is going on?”

“Is grandfather Riall here?” Denali asked.

Gorgo looked at him oddly. “No. He left thirty minutes ago to help your father set up the overall security for tonight’s function.” Gorgo replied. “What is going on you two?”

“Grandmother... maybe you had better sit down.” Lisisa told her.

“Why?”

Deni took her arm. “What we are going to tell you might come as a shock of sorts.” He said leading her to the chair and pulling it out for her to sit. He waited for Lisisa to sit before moving to the chair next to her.

“Oh Deni... you didn’t break your father’s Nehtes again did you?” Gorgo spoke.

Deni chuckled as he settled into the chair next to Lisisa. “No grandmother.” He spoke. “This... this is something infinitely more serious.”

Gorgo’s eyes narrowed. “Ok... spill it!” She barked using a term she had learned from Anja and Eliani. “What’s this all about? You are never serious Denali Leonidas.”

“Grandmother... Lisisa... Lisisa and I want to ask you a question.” Deni spoke slowly, measuring his words.

“Ok.” Gorgo said. “What might that question be?”

“Grandmother... did you love grandfather Leonidas any less even though he was your uncle?” Lisisa spit out the question.

Gorgo sat back in the chair surprised at the question. It was not what she had expected to hear and confusion reigned supreme on her face. It was not something she had thought of in many years. The love she had shared with Leonidas burned intensely for many hundreds of years even after his death, and only her growing feelings for Riall had finally made her begin to move forward. She rarely thought of her long dead husband now, choosing instead to honor his last words to her and live a long happy life. She had that with Riall now, strong children and a powerful love with the handsome Admiral of the Fleet that rivaled or surpassed the love she had once shared with Leonidas. It was something he wished for her and Gorgo knew without question he would be happy she had gone on with her life. “What... why are you asking?” She said finally.

Denali took it up from there. “I know that interfamily marriages were common back then grandmother.” He said softly. “We want to know if it mattered to you that grandfather Leonidas was your Uncle.”

Gorgo looked at them for a long moment before replying. “I loved your grandfather Leonidas with every fiber of my being.” She answered softly. “He was my entire life... my purpose for life. No... it did not matter that he was my uncle. Half uncle actually... for my father was Leonidas’s half brother.” Gorgo leaned forward in her chair. “True love knows no bounds... no limitations. If two people are meant for each other... nothing changes that. The two of you should know that well. Your father and mother Isabella love each other deeply no matter who they are. Why are you asking me this? What does that have to do with anything?”

Deni glanced at Lisisa quickly and then back to her. “Grandmother... Lisisa and I love each other.” He stated proudly.

Gorgo smiled and sat back. “You are brother and sister... of course you love each other. You...”

“No... grandmother...” Lisisa said reaching out and taking Denali’s arm in her hands and pressing up against his side. “We are in love with each other.” She said equally as proud and confident as Denali had just spoken.

Gorgo’s face ran the sudden gambit of surprise, shock, horror and happiness all within ten seconds as she looked at her grandchildren. She saw the way Lisisa, always so proud and determined, clung to Denali’s arm and press against his side like a love struck young female wolf. She saw the way Denali Leonidas, a powerful Alpha male in his own right, sat ram rod straight in his chair unashamed of the admission they had just made. Lisisa’s forest green eyes were alive and bright with love, a love matched in his dark brown eyes.

“Oh... oh my.” Gorgo blurted out finally.

“We... we tried to fight it grandmother.” Lisisa explained quickly. “We just couldn’t. It was too strong. Too overwhelming. And finally... and finally we did not want to fight it any longer and we surrendered to the feelings both of us have for each other.”

Gorgo looked at them. “You have...?”

Lisisa nodded without shame or hesitation. "Yes we have... many times. And each time it is more glorious than the last." She replied. It was out in the open now... someone knew their secret... and Lisisa found she no longer wanted to hide it.

"How long?" Gorgo asked softly.

"Three years now." Denali answered.

Gorgo's eyes flew open. "Three years!" She gasped coming to her feet. She looked at Denali with those wide eyes. "But... all the times you... all the times we thought you were off chasing some female wolves' tail you..."

Denali nodded his head. "Yes... I was meeting with Lisisa in secret." He replied matter of factly.

"Grandmother... we came to you because we... because we thought you would be the one to understand the most." Lisisa spoke softly. "It is not something we planned... it just happened."

Gorgo looked at her seeing not uncertainty and confusion but wisdom and determination and above all else adoring love. "Then this is why you have rebuffed all the men who have...?"

Lisisa nodded and pressed even closer to Denali. "I want no one but Denali." She stated firmly. "Only Denali can make me feel what I do when I am in his arms. It is something I have never felt before and I want it to continue for the rest of my life."

Denali watched his grandmother carefully, seeing the indecision in her eyes and in her expression. He took a deep breath. "Perhaps... perhaps this was a mistake." He stated gently. "Coming to you grandmother and telling you. We thought you... we thought that you would at least understand because of what you shared with grandfather Leonidas. I... I am sorry..." He started to get to his feet.

"Sit down!" Gorgo barked out looking at him. Gorgo waited until he had settled fully back into his chair. "This... this is not some minor issue Denali!" She stated loudly. "Lisisa! You are brother and sister!"

"Half brother and sister." Denali corrected her. "Yes... we know that grandmother. This is not something Lisisa pursued. I was the one to push because I knew she was who I wanted. I..."

"Deni... no." Lisisa spoke reaching up to stroke his cheek. "This was something we both walked into with our eyes wide open. You did not pressure me. How could you have pressured me when I felt the same?" Lisisa watched as he turned to gaze at her, his dark eyes filled with devotion. "You will not take blame for something when there is no blame to place. I won't allow it."

Gorgo looked at them as she settled back into her chair. She saw the emotion coursing between the two of them like fingers of electricity and for a moment Gorgo was flung back in time. She remembered the times she and Martin's father had gazed upon one another. Complete and utter devotion and love. No hesitation and no doubt. It was identical to the way Lisisa and Denali were staring at one another at this very moment.

"Why... why tell me now?" Gorgo finally asked and watched as they both turned to look at her.

"We are not looking for your approval Grandmother." Denali said firmly. "We are not looking for anyone's approval. We... we thought perhaps because of the relationship between you and grandfather Leonidas, him being your uncle... we thought... we thought you would understand what we feel and maybe... maybe help us to tell everyone else over time."

"We don't want to live in secret forever grandmother." Lisisa said. "We want to be able to walk among our family and friends and have them know that Denali and I are mated. And we are mated for all intents and purposes. At least in our eyes. We want to be able to show that we want each other and no one else."

"How have you... how is it that no one has smelled each of you on the other?" Gorgo asked. "Your father... your brother Andro... their sense of smell is beyond anything I have ever seen."

"We are careful... and Deni has not cado forn yet." Lisisa spoke in reply. "It also helps that I am half vampire. My blood does not retain the scent of Deni's... of his essence for very long if I consume new blood shortly afterwards."

"This is..." Gorgo shook her head. "This is quite a bit to take in." She said.

"We were hoping you could help us do this grandmother. To help us tell everyone or advise us on how to tell everyone. We will understand if you can not. All we can ask now is that you keep our secret until we are ready to announce it to everyone." Lisisa took Denali's hands and began pulling him to his feet. "Come Deni... we should leave."

"No." Gorgo spoke softly. She shook her head slowly and looked at them. "I... I can not and I will not condemn you for falling in love... for having essentially the same relationship I had when I was younger. Yes..."

Leonidas was my Uncle... and I loved him without question regardless of that fact. I did not care.” She met their eyes as they slowly sank back into their chairs. “I can see the love you have for each other. It is written all over your faces when you gaze at one another. I am shocked that I did not see it before now. It is the same way your grandfather and I gazed at one another.” Gorgo got up and moved down the table, settling between their chairs and leaning up against the marble top. “Times are different now however.” She spoke softly. “So much is different.”

“I will not give her up grandmother!” Denali spoke sharply. “Not for father. Not even for my title as Prince!”

“Nor will I.” Lisisa echoed. “Nothing could make me do that. Grandmother... for the first time... for the first time since I returned with father I have found true peace and love and total acceptance. Denali gives that to me. He does not look at me and see someone who is half vampire and half wolf. He sees me... inside my heart. He knows what I am thinking even before I do sometimes. It is the same for me when I look at him.”

Gorgo shook her head and reached down to gather their hands within hers. “I’m not asking you to do that. To give each other up.” She said. “Carians no! We can no more control whom we fall in love with than we can control the weather.” She grasped their hands tightly within hers. “I will not look upon you differently now, so you may toss that fear to the wind as well. You are still my grandchildren... still my blood and as I said... how could I look down upon you for doing something that I myself did? I will need some time to absorb this before I can decide how best to proceed. You have kept your love hidden for these past years and you must continue to do so for now.”

“You... you will help us?” Lisisa asked.

“Of course I will help you Lisi.” Gorgo answered immediately and with a loving smile. “You have found something very deep and powerful with each other and that is exceedingly obvious in the way you gaze at one another. It is something that many do not find in their lifetimes. Who am I to say it is wrong? I will need to think about things, perhaps do some investigation and research on my own, but yes... know that I am on your side in this regard. This is not news you can just announce to the world and all your family however. It must be approached slowly... and I know you understand that, because you have come to me first and kept it secret for so long.”

“We do.” Denali spoke nodding his head.

Gorgo looked at him. “No one else knows this?” She asked.

They both shook their heads. “We have told no one grandmother. Not even Jeth and Aradace.” Lisisa answered.

“Andro?” She asked. “You both know your brother is far more perceptive than he lets on to others.”

Lisisa and Denali shook their heads slowly. “We don’t think so.” He said finally. “He has never... he has never said or done anything to make us think otherwise.”

“That is not your brother Andro’s way, especially if he has seen what I have seen this day.” Gorgo spoke slowly. “We’ll assume he does not know for now.” Gorgo put her hands on their cheeks and looked at them for a long moment. “We have a State Dinner to attend.” She stated with a smile. “Act as you have always acted and change nothing. Everyone knows the two of you are close, so do nothing differently than you normally do. Tomorrow I will go and speak with Panos and Dilios. Bounce some ideas off of them so to speak. They too will understand, for Dilios’s oldest son is mated to his cousin. This particular issue has touched more people than the two of you might realize. When you... when you meet to be together... insure you do as you always have done.”

“Thank you grandmother.” Deni spoke standing up and kissing her cheek just as Lisisa did the same. “Thank you for... thank you for understanding.”

Gorgo smiled and reveled in the gentle nuzzles her grandchildren gave to her. “Come... you know how your father hates when any of us are late. You two can escort me... but we have to stop and pick up Helen from the Estate.”

“Our Lifter is outside.” Denali spoke with a smile. “I will have you there in no time.”

“Oh no you won’t!” Lisisa hissed playfully as she looked at him and pulled on the sleeve of his jacket. For the first time since she had accepted and rejoiced in her love for Denali, Lisisa felt confident of the future they could have together. “I’ll drive! You almost got us killed on the way here with your driving.”

“I am an excellent driver!” Denali protested.

“In your opinion!” Lisisa stated. “Not in mine! And not in anyone else’s opinion Deni. They all think you are a little crazy when you drive. Why do you think they all elect to fly now when you offer to drive the Lifter?”

Gorgo burst out laughing at this and squeezed their hands tightly. “Yes... it appears the two of you do belong together.” She stated happily.

Tharua executed a crisp roll and her copper colored eyes scanned the expanse of moon lit sky above her. It was a nearly cloudless night, the air calm and the ocean far below reflecting beautifully from the white light that was cast across it.

It was their night.

Tharua’s heart was racing almost out of control for she knew Jeth had received the Elder Council’s permission to take a mate. Her meeting with the Elder Council later that afternoon had been much shorter and very much to the point thanks to Eliani. She adored her Bonded Sister more than she could put into words for in many ways Eliani was very similar to Andro. She got right to the point and made no bones about it. They had only asked her two questions really; did she know what having Jeth take her as his mate would mean, and was she prepared to go into the future with him at her side for all time?

Tharua had responded almost too quickly for she was answering positively and with no hesitation to both questions before the Elder mother even finished speaking. Whether it was due to the strong Mindvoice bonds they had with Eliani and Lisisa, or the simple fact that they had been together now for the better part of ten years, Tharua did not care in the least. She wanted the blue/black monstrosity that was Jeth as her mate, and she had for as many years as she could remember. They had decided to wait for a day or so after the Council’s decision before truly claiming each other, but that had only lasted until now. Neither of them wanted to wait any longer and as soon as the State Dinner began they had taken to the skies above Sparta, moving rapidly for the calm, sweet smelling ocean waters of the Laconian Gulf. This was going to be a special Harmony of Two Hearts Ceremony. Their ceremony with only the moon and ocean as their witnesses.

Syrlith had told her just what to do and as she finished rolling over, exposing her lighter colored underbelly for the male that would be her new mate, she released her very excited female scent into the wind for him to detect. It was something dragons had in common with their Lycavorian brothers and sisters. They had the ability to drive their mates crazy with their scents. Tharua’s sex was swollen and moist with anticipation of what she so badly wanted and as her copper eyes scanned the sky above her she waited in eager readiness. She never realized just thinking of him like this could do these things to her and she could not imagine what it would be like when they actually happened.

Where are you Jeth? She declared in the most seductive voice she could muster. Please do not tell me you have suddenly changed your mind.

That will never happen! Jeth’s deep and powerful voice responded in her head and Tharua felt a shudder run through her.

I am waiting for you! Has your desire for me escaped you?

I am... I am admiring you! Jeth answered.

Tharua’s keen eyes picked him up then, streaking above her, his massive wings fully extended as he glided on the thermals. She could not help but admire the incredible musculature of his body. He had truly taken after his father in that regard, and she fully understood why so many older females wanted him. Yet Tharua knew he was going to be hers and hers alone and that knowledge made her even more excited, her scent becoming stronger and more pronounced now as it drifted out on the wind.

Why do you make me wait Jeth? She declared sternly. We have waited too long already! Do not tease me anymore.

Tharua... am I who you truly want? Jeth’s serious tone made her blink. There are many who would kill for you... like in the ancient ways of our kind.

You have always been who I wanted Jeth. Ever since the first day I saw you. Tharua answered. I would wait as long as it took, until I could be yours. Now claim me Jeth! I do not want to...

The loud trumpeting drowned out her words and Tharua cut her eyes as she saw him descending from above her like some great winged god. Her eyes grew wide as she caught a glimpse of his huge organ, fully aroused thanks to her scent, and then he was upon her. Tharua trumpeted out her own blissful delight as his immense organ rammed home into her depths in a single plunge. Jeth's huge wings engulfed her completely, her own wings folding inward as his talons drew her tighter to him in sexual frenzy. Tharua's copper colored eyes were wide in disbelief as indescribable sensations of intense pleasure gripped her belly. Her front talons sank into Jeth's armor like scales and she withered and held on in rapturous abandon. As the pleasure soon overwhelmed her, Tharua sank her fangs into Jeth's thick neck scales, not deep enough to draw blood, but deep enough to let her new mate know what they were experiencing was total heaven.

As their bodies plummeted for the surface of ocean below Tharua yowled in ecstasy as Jeth plunged into her again and again, his thrusts urgent and awkward at first. This was the first time for both of them and it flashed across her dazed mind that neither of them truly knew what they were doing, but if this foretold of times in the future with experienced gained Tharua knew she would be the most satisfied female among her kind anywhere. She drew him closer as he plunged inward and tried to hold him as he withdrew. This was unlike anything Syrilth had described to her. So much more intense and unbelievably glorious. His massive wings formed a cocoon around them as their bodies thrust against one another, the pleasure almost unbearable as it built to a crescendo. It was the first time for both of them yes, and patience and control was not yet in their vocabulary, and Tharua joined her new mate in roaring out their pleasure as his hot seed erupted into her even as her own orgasm followed seconds later.

Regardless of the pleasure they were experiencing, both of them were still keenly aware of the pressure of the atmosphere and the air around them as they fell and only five hundred feet above the surface of the calm ocean Jeth snapped out his wings and released his tight grip on Tharua's lean muscular body. Tharua whimpered as she rolled to the side, Jeth's organ leaving her body and making her feel suddenly very empty. She too snapped out her wings and righted herself fully, skimming the surface of the water until she snapped back up in a joyful trumpet, corkscrewing her way around and around in happiness as she gained altitude. She could sense Jeth beneath her and she glanced back with adoring love in her copper eyes to see him trailing her easily, his snout only inches from the tip of her tail.

Oh my beloved Jeth! That was amazing! Again! Let's do it again! She exclaimed as she slowed her ascent enough so that he could climb level with her. As they rose through the night sky belly to belly Tharua glanced down and saw his still very hard, rigid cock standing proudly at attention. Her copper eyes glanced at his golden ones. You... you are ready? She gasped out with gleeful happiness.

Your scent drives me mad! He exclaimed. I can't help it!

Tharua laughed like the love struck dragon she was. Let's go higher! We will have more time as we fall!

It took them only moments before they were at nearly thirty thousand feet and Tharua once more rolled upside down until they were flying belly to belly. Jeth inched closer without words and reached for her with his talons. This time was slower and he slipped into her fully with a long slow motion even as Tharua's eyes rolled into the back of her skull. His wings once more folded around them and they plunged for the ground below. They repeated the process a third and fourth time, each experience more divinely rewarding than the last as far as Tharua was concerned. On their fifth rise into the clouds they went higher than before until the air was thin and cold.

Brrr... it's cold my love! Wrap your wings around me and keep me warm! Tharua declared sexily. She was learning quickly.

Jeth needed no further encouragement and as he slid into Tharua's moist and still swollen sex a fifth time, he gazed into her copper eyes as his wings collapsed hers and they began their plunge to the earth.

We will be together always Tharua my mate! My beautiful and precious mate.

Their coupling was even calmer this time as they plunged through the night air, softer and gentler and infinitely more gratifying. Just before they exploded together Tharua's soft voice filled Jeth's mind.

I will be yours always Jeth! Until eternity ends!

SENATE AUDITORIUM

Whatever Aikiro had expected for this evening was rapidly turning out to be the complete opposite of what she had envisioned.

Their table was set out on the elevated platform at the head of the enormous auditorium with two others, one of which held the entire Leonidas family. It was the first time she had seen them all together, and she committed the faces of each of them to memory. She had expected Leonidas to push their table into a corner somewhere and keep their attendance very low profile. That was not to be the case she saw upon entering and seeing where they were being guided. The third table on the platform held many members of the Union Senate as well as numerous visiting dignitaries from the member planets of the Union. Spread out across the massive expanse of the floor around them were dozens of other tables that held the ambassadors and representatives of nearly every species and government within the Lycavorian Union. Never had she seen so many of those the High Coven considered enemies for so long gathered in one place. Leaders of hundreds of planets, and many of the senior representatives of the Lycavorian Union sitting together, talking and laughing.

Aikiro had been taken aback when first the Folcani Ambassador had approached her, bowing his head and telling her how much they welcomed the Cease Fire, and how he hoped for future relations to build between their governments. Almost immediately following him, dozens of other leaders had approached her and told her of their similar wishes, and how they hoped for a more permanent treaty and perhaps even an Alliance going into the future. Aikiro also learned that many of the Union leaders and senior representatives shared their King's distrust and obvious dislike of the Kavalian people. Aikiro wondered if perhaps Martin Leonidas had somehow talked to these men and women personally and gotten them to say these things to her. She quickly dismissed that as unlikely considering he never once looked in their direction or indicated he had a hand in what was going on, and considering his very well known dislike for politics in general, Aikiro decided it was not something he would have put together.

As with all the tables in the hall, theirs was circular in shape and allowed for all of them to sit looking inward. On their table they found several chilled bottles of the cherry tasting cloned blood that apparently was very popular among the vampires within the Union, and outlawed within the High Coven. No one at their table touched the bottles until Aikiro poured herself a crystal and silver glass of the fluid and drank and drank. She had to admit, the Hadarian witch had developed something very special with this cloned blood. It was exceedingly good and provided all the nutrients and flavor of real blood but appeared as just another glass of wine to the casual glance. Aikiro had brought clothing for an occasion such as this at the last minute, and the light blue dress wrapped around her very firm figure like a second skin. Aikiro was not ashamed to flaunt what she had, not any longer and most certainly not after Tesand had opened so many doors in her life in regards to her sexuality. Yuri and the others had gone out and spent lavishly the credits that were given to them and purchased dresses and attire that was not only exceptionally sexy, but very elegant as well. The Coven Riders and military personnel wore appropriate civilian clothes and were scattered among the remaining tables in the hall, all of the remaining riders together at three tables.

Aikiro lifted her glass of cloned blood and let her dark eyes fall on Martin Leonidas at his table as she brought it to her lips. Aikiro had never met his father King Leonidas, but she had seen images of him. She had met Resumar weeks before he was assassinated, and Aikiro had to admit Martin was the spitting image of both those men, wild savages though they may have been. His own son Androcles looked more like Resumar in many ways, but there was no denying the fact they could almost be brothers in how closely they looked. This... this was the man who had killed her son Xerxes. And a quick death it was not according to Yuri. For all his faults, and there had been many, Xerxes was still her son and this man had killed him brutally and in front of thousands of others. And he had facilitated the defection of her other son as well.

Vonis.

Aikiro's eyes shifted to the handsome face of her youngest son at Martin's table, and the dark haired elven beauty that sat on his left side. This was the female that had taken her son's will and forced him to turn against his people. Va'nimia her name was Aikiro had discovered, and as Aikiro watched her now, clinging to the arm of her son at different periods throughout the dinner so far, Aikiro felt the need to rip the woman's throat out. She had learned through discrete questions that the elven female was a teacher and that she had bore Vonis five children through the years. They maintained a large home here in Sparta very close to the Royal Estate and a home on Apo Prime and they were often seen shopping in the markets with their younger children acting as newlyweds according to the people she had heard talking. She had learned that Vonis was very close with Isabella, often times seen leaving the Estate here in Sparta and the Island Palace on Apo Prime, and now he sat to Isabella's left at the King's table.

Aikiro tried to determine if there was a pecking order of sorts by the way they were sitting at the table. Martin's pureblood Queen Aricia sat to his right and Aikiro had learned that was always the case at official functions. The Hadarian Anja sat beside Aricia while the elven Queen Dysea sat to Martin's left next to Isabella. It was the first time she had seen Dysea, and even Aikiro had to admit her platinum hair and emerald eyes were a sight to look at. This was the elven Queen that shared Isabella's heart nearly as deeply as Martin Leonidas. It was well known and easy enough to discern from the talk of the people within the city that the King and Queens all shared the same bed as well as each other in sexual matters and they were not ashamed of this fact in the least. Aikiro herself had just recently discovered her own taste for the pleasures of female flesh, but that taste did not extend to being the one to give the pleasure. Never once had she touched Toria Dellion in such a way, but she had been very clear and dominating to the red haired intelligence officer when it came to insuring Toria pleased her, something Toria did rather well.

Aikiro let her eyes drift to where Yuri sat next to her. Her oldest daughter and the source of Aikiro's greatest trust. She had bought a soft peach colored dress that outlined her ravishing female figure in a way that she knew Robert would appreciate very much. Her long black hair was pulled entirely over one shoulder and the muscular definition and suppleness of her body was easily seen. Two decades of fighting and being trained by High Coven Weapons Masters as well as her husband had forged Yuri into a very desirable woman. A trait she had passed on to her two daughters Carisia and Lucia, both of whom looked devastatingly beautiful this night. While Yuri may have hated Carisia... it was plain to see that Carisia inherited her mother's devastating beauty though her Asian features were much less prominent. In all honesty Carisia looked more like her father Aikiro admitted to herself. The way she filled out her dress was no doubt why that brute of a husband Thast was practically drooling over her and how she looked in the dark blue v cut she wore. It displayed her large firm breasts prominently as well as her tanned skin. Carisia did not appear comfortable at all in the dress, or more than likely she hated Thast's constant groping and no doubt vile comments he was whispering to her, judging from the look on her face.

Narice had chosen a more conservative, but no less enticing dress that was light tan in color and hugged her lush figure like a second skin. Narice had already proven her mettle and willingness to go head to head with her much older sister. Dante had been wrong and Narice had acted as any good commander would have. Aikiro had no illusions as to Narice's purpose. Dante's actions could very well have put them all in danger, and since that time he had been more subdued and calculating in his actions. No doubt the meeting with his father had also played a role in this, not to mention that he had to shift his focus to the younger of Isabella's daughters with Leonidas. Aikiro glanced at where Zarah sat and noticed that she was every bit as beautiful as her older sister; however she appeared more lean and muscular in many ways. They had discovered that the daughter Carina, while a superb fighter, was directing more of her attentions to tactical matters recently. Zarah appeared to be the one who would blossom into the more definitive warrior of the two.

Narice had also been right when she said she did not have past experiences with the Lycavorians clouding her thinking at times, and this gave her an advantage over Yuri. At least while they remained here on Earth. Aikiro knew Yuri still harbored a deep anger and hatred at Martin Leonidas for expelling her from this planet. She cared not that Leonidas had butchered Xerxes, only that he had forced her to abandon her extensive plans for Earth and what she had been attempting to build. Aikiro felt Yuri's eyes on her and she turned casually to look at her daughter.

"You are deep in thought mother." Yuri spoke softly so that only she could hear her.

Aikiro nodded and leaned closer to her. "Did the young woman who your father had planned for Vonis to marry accompany us Yuri?" She asked.

Yuri allowed a small grin to split her face. "I made sure of it mother. I thought you might want to cause waves with Vonis if you were able. She is among the others at one of the tables here."

Aikiro nodded. "Good. I have been trying to determine if there is some order of hidden importance by how they sit at the table." She spoke.

Yuri glanced at the table almost casually and then turned back to her mother. "With the exception of Aricia... I do not believe there is any order." She spoke. "I have reviewed images of past events like this in their Netnews archives and there is no set way they sit except for Aricia. She is his Soulmate... Anomes I believe they are called in their ancient language."

"So she is the most favored?" Aikiro asked.

Yuri shrugged. "It would not appear that way from the way he acts with them no." She replied. "However... she is never far from his side, unlike the others who have duties that take them away at times."

"And we can assume from her lack of appearance here that the second Elven Queen For'mya, she is the one who has left to greet the Kavalians?" Aikiro said.

Yuri nodded. "With the son Resumar... yes." Yuri replied. "Androcles revealed to us later, after you had left, that he would be returning in a few days as an instructor."

"Do you think he will be able to train you and the others?" Aikiro asked.

Yuri lifted her glass of cloned blood and nodded as she sipped. "His skills far surpass even those of Narice and Carisia, and though it pains me to admit it, they are the best trained that we have."

Aikiro smiled. "That you admit that now Yuri is a sign you are growing still." She said softly. "You are far too intelligent to let your emotions rule your actions."

Yuri nodded. "I apologized to Narice for acting as I did." She stated. "She was right that Dante's actions could put us all at risk. Robert had words with him as you know."

Aikiro chuckled softly. "Yes... though I would think Robert's lectures lean more to physical means. Dante has been more subdued and in control of his actions since. Their father has a way of reigning them in it seems."

Yuri nodded with a knowing smile. "Yes he does." She set her glass down. "Why do you think he put us here mother. Next to his table at an event such as this?"

Aikiro smiled knowingly. "Though I'm sure it was suggested to him, it seems that Martin Leonidas has a distinct hatred for the Kavalians that we did not know of. Whether it relates directly to his brother Pleistarchus or Pusintin, whatever he calls himself, I don't know. By putting us here, for all to see, it lends a stronger case that we are here only for the signing of a Cease Fire Agreement."

"Mother... did the thought cross your mind that we may very well have to sign such an accord to keep up appearances?" Yuri asked.

Aikiro nodded. "Oh yes." She said.

Yuri looked at her oddly. "You intend to do this?" She asked surprised.

Aikiro nodded slowly. "Yes."

"But why?" Yuri asked.

[Mindvoice Shielded] [There are many reasons.] Aikiro stated.

Yuri looked at her wide eyed. [He... he will hear us mother!]

[I have found that the same restrictions I have in penetrating the Mindvoice shields of him and his son works both ways.] Aikiro stated with some humor. [It is frustrating yes... but the more I thought about it the more I came to understand it.]

[Understand what?]

[Our powers seem to cancel each other's out.] Aikiro explained. [At least in terms of shielding our conversations when we concentrate. And neither of us drops our focus when it comes to Mindvoicing in regards to anything, so our abilities act as a reflecting tool of sorts. It is why I could not hear his son when he spoke to Narice and Carisia today. It is why he can not hear us now.]

Yuri turned her head to look at Martin's table and saw that he was carrying on a rather animated conversation with Vonis and Riall and did not seem to take notice. When Yuri's eyes shifted to Isabella however she saw that was not the case. Isabella's hazel/green eyes were watching them intently.

Aikiro saw her daughter's face and chuckled softly. [You see.] She said. [He dismisses our conversation, but he has no doubt informed his Queens we are speaking shielded. That is why Isabella watches us as she does.]

[They can not penetrate our connection?] Yuri asked turning back to her.

Aikiro shook her head. [While they are powerful... his Queens do not have the strength within Mindvoice that Leonidas and his son Androcles does. Not even Aricia... who I sense is only a few notches below Leonidas in her abilities.]

[Could we breach their shields?] Yuri asked.

Aikiro shook her head. [Unlikely. Reviewing what I have found in the last few hours, what we have found that applies to Carisia and Narice apply to his Queens as well. They have learned quite extensively how to use the power of their bonds with their dragons to assist and complement their own powers. It is the reason I could not penetrate Carisia's shields and more than likely why I would not be able to penetrate Narice's shields either. Not without sedation and many hours of exploring. And even then it would be an extremely hazardous undertaking that could very well kill whoever attempted it as I explained before. They have no doubt put in place traps for those who would try such a thing if they were ever captured by the enemy. Namely us, for the Kavalians do not seem to have the ability to Mindvoice. At least that we are aware of.]

Yuri looked at her. [If that is the case... then why sign an actual Cease Fire? If we are unable to try and determine what they have in mind, why take the chance?]

Aikiro looked at her. [This is not a criticism Yuri, but Narice is correct to a degree in her statement. It is improving, but you still allow your hatred for this man to show through in some respects. I do not know why... but it is there.]

Yuri met her eyes for a long moment before nodding her head slowly. [It is because of many things mother, but primarily because I slept with him.]

[This is something that your father forced upon you Yuri. Even I know this daughter.] Aikiro said.

Yuri nodded. [Yes... but... he...]

[You enjoyed your times with him didn't you?] Aikiro asked.

Yuri looked at her and nodded slowly. [He is built like a bull mother and he knew exactly how to use his cock to make me scream. Even as my mind cried out it was wrong, I loved it. I had to keep from feeding on him several times because I was so lost. At least until Robert came into my life. Then it was much easier to tolerate.]

[Because you actually love Robert Moran. Yes... I see where he would provide you the strength to continue.] Aikiro said.

Yuri nodded slowly. [I never told you mother... but during one of my trips to Earth several months before the comet came I received a message that I thought was from Leonidas. It said to meet him at a specific location on the Earth base. When I did... when I arrived, I found half a dozen others waiting for me. One was a Lycavorian of that I was sure. To this day I am sure it was Martin. He must have found out I was meeting with Robert in secret whenever I came to Earth and that was his way of punishing me. The others held me down while he raped me brutally.]

Aikiro looked stunned. [You know it was him?]

[The only other Lycavorians who I knew at that time were Simpson and the woman Julie. The woman whose DNA was among the group we stole while Marcus controlled the EDEN base?] Yuri told her.

[Yes... I saw the reports. We have since cloned her and removed the Lycavorian genes from her body.] Aikiro said. [Something Leonidas will discover eventually. When I am ready. I can't wait to see the look on his face.]

[Who else could it have been?] Yuri spoke. [Knowing it was him and then having to endure his attentions afterwards as if nothing had happened turned my stomach. I discovered I was pregnant with Lisisa just before the comet came. Only a Lycavorian of pure blood like Martin could have gotten me pregnant mother. Even after I turned Robert we took precautions to insure I did not become pregnant. I have hated him ever since.]

Aikiro nodded slowly. [I assume this is why Robert has similar feelings. He knows?]

Yuri nodded. [Yes.]

[You must bury these feelings Yuri. If we are to succeed, you must bury them deep. It is in the past and while you may still hold a hatred for him, and understandably so, no one here is going to side with you if you were to announce he raped you. They would not believe you.] Aikiro stated calmly. [I will sign a Cease Fire agreement for two reasons. It will insure we have at least a dedicated view inside the workings of their military. Once your training fully begins, you will have chance to view many aspects of this. As will Narice and Toria. The second is because, regardless of my distaste for these animals, I would much prefer to have them on our side. We barely hold our own against the Kavalians now... and if they were to enter the war on the Kavalian side... our days would be numbered.]

[I thought you said Leonidas hates the Kavalians more.] Yuri said.

Aikiro nodded. [He does. At least that is the way he makes it appear outwardly. If our plans succeed and we can get them to enter the war on our side... it would drastically change the entire scope of the war. In our favor.]

Yuri's eyes grew slightly wider as realization hit her. [And no doubt the Kavalians would see the union as the bigger threat because of their dragons and they would target them almost entirely. Weakening them.]

Aikiro nodded. [Yes. I noticed some things today while on that airfield. These Wolves of the Blood, the Durcunusaan soldiers, and many of the others I saw, they move with a certain confidence that I have not seen in our clone troops. They are good... and they know it. That attitude does not come from arrogance; that comes from the Spartan way of training that Leonidas has gone back to.]

Yuri nodded. [Like when his father was alive. It is why they were able to slaughter so many of Xerxes precious troops.]

[They are superbly trained.] Aikiro spoke gently. [Even more so than when we have encountered them in battle over the centuries your father ruled. The Kavalians would attack them... perhaps devote all their attention on them... and they too would be slaughtered in droves even while they destroyed the Union itself in the process, for these men and women would never surrender. Unlike our some of our forces... they would never give up and they would fight to the very last man and woman.]

[And we would be there to step in afterwards to pick up the pieces.] Yuri stated with a cruel smile.

Aikiro nodded slowly. [At least in part.] She said. [And if I can somehow find my way to that Mindvoice ship, perhaps completely.]

[So you are going to stay here then?] Yuri said. [While we train?]

Aikiro nodded. [For a time anyway. I can not linger out of Coven space for the entire nine months. We have too many insurgents and greedy power grubbers among our own people for me to remain away for so long. I will need Robert with me when I return however. Can you tolerate his absence?]

Yuri nodded. [I assumed as much.] She replied. [I... I feel better now that we have talked mother. Even in the lion's den as we are so to speak. I will be fine.]

Aikiro smiled and took her hand. [I know you will be. And I know our people will be closely watched with you here. And you must insure all of them remain focused on their goals. Especially Dante and Javier. That will keep Carisia in line if what you say is true in regards to this unexplained fear she has of him. As long as he maintains his volatile temper and does nothing foolish.]

[And Narice?]

[Your sister is committed to our goals Yuri.] Aikiro said. [She may approach them in a different manner than you, but she is beyond me questioning her loyalty. Just as I do not question yours. The two of you are not Vonis.]

Yuri sighed and nodded her head. [Yes... I must realize that she is not me and will do things differently, but no less completely.]

Aikiro nodded. [Good. Now why don't you go find that young woman and let's see if we can't cause some rough waters in the pond that is the Leonidas family? They have begun dancing it seems... why not let her know to pick a partner and begin dancing as well. She has an equal amount of hatred for your brother.]

Yuri smiled and nodded as she rose to her feet. [You are quite devious mother. You do know that don't you?]

Aikiro chuckled. [Of course I am. I would not be in the position I am now if I wasn't as devious as you say.]

The Leonidas table was massive and able to hold forty men and women easily. With the exception of For'mya and Resumar, the table was full. Two complete sets of serving pieces and full glasses of Spartan wine marked where they would have sat had they been here. It was a tradition that Aricia had started almost as soon as they had all come together so many years ago, and it was continued to this day. Anyone who was absent, for whatever the reason, had a setting placed for them regardless to show that they were being thought of always.

It was in the vacant spot that Resumar would have sat that Aikiro now appeared, Yuri and the stunning dark haired woman behind her. The myriad of conversations that were going on began to cease as those at Martin's table took notice of her. She stood there patiently, looking first at Androcles and the young blond woman who clung to his arm. She took note of Carina Leonidas and the young ebony skinned Spartan who she sat next to. Carina was turned in her chair and talking in animated whispers to the red haired female elf and the very pregnant Drow female who she sat next to. Eliani and Nyla, his mother Gorgo and Deia and their mates.

The fleeting thought of what one plasma grenade could do to the entire family as it sat at this one table was enough to send shivers of delight down Aikiro's spine, which she rapidly chased away with the thought of what they would do without the help Martin Leonidas and those who followed him could provide. Vonis and Isabella simply glared at her with blank expressions but hateful eyes.

"Empress Aikiro?" Martin finally spoke as he set his glass down on the table and rose to his feet. "Is there something you need?"

Aikiro shook her head quickly. "No... I just wanted to extend my thanks to you and your family for inviting us to this event. It is not something you had to do." Aikiro took note of several Netnews reporters that had begun filming the exchange and she decided quickly this was not the place for a scene. Not if they wanted to maintain at least some semblance of the cover story they were using. While she may have hated to have to play this game, she didn't doubt Leonidas hated it just as much, but if they were to keep the Kavalians from discovering why they were really here, they needed to play these roles to a tee. If the Kavalians discovered the Union was training their dragons to fight them, the political and military maelstrom that would follow could very well devastate the High Coven. The Kavalians she knew would invade immediately, something her forces were not yet fully prepared for, and Leonidas would pull back any support he was willing to give them regardless of his intense dislike of the Kavalian people and its leaders.

"Considering what we will be signing in several days, I thought it best to show you that there do not need to be hostilities between our people." Martin spoke plainly but Aikiro thought she detected something in his voice. Something different that belied his true feelings, or what she perceived his true feelings to be.

"We would like to take you up on your offer of staying on after we sign the Accords." Aikiro said gracefully. "Perhaps to tour Earth and the cities you have rebuilt through the years. If you would allow us of course?"

Deia stood now from her spot and smiled. "I can arrange that." She spoke.

Yuri stepped forward. "Is it possible to arrange for my children and myself to have such a tour as well?" She asked keeping her voice even and calm. Her mother had sent a calming pulse through Mindvoice to her indicating that nothing was to happen now.

Martin looked at Yuri for a long moment, the Netnews reporters catching this on the vid/cameras. "I think we can arrange that Princess Yuri." He spoke finally. "You look exquisite tonight... both of you do if you don't mind me saying so."

Aikiro noticed his complimentary words caused Isabella and several others to flinch almost imperceptibly and she almost smiled at that. She nodded her head to him as Yuri forced out the reply.

"Thank you for the compliment." Yuri answered.

Martin looked at the young woman. "Who is this?" He asked.

The young woman stepped forward before Aikiro or Yuri could reply. She was not Mindvoice adept and neither of them had yet signaled to her that nothing was supposed to take place that would cause a scene.

"Hello Vonis." She spoke directly as her blue eyes fell on Vonis where he sat.

Vonis met the woman's eyes and nodded his head. "Delazana." Vonis answered flatly. "You are looking well."

The young woman snorted in disgust. "No thanks to you." She spat. "Do you know what I went through after you left?"

Va'nimia looked confused and she turned to Vonis gripping his arm tighter in the process. "Man sina firiel verno?" She asked speaking in the elven language. (Who is this woman husband?)

Vonis turned to look at her and smiled easing the look of concern on Va'nimia's face considerably. "Sina na firiel ni le ontaro méra." He answered in fluent elven which surprised both Yuri and his mother. (This is the woman I told you my father wanted me to marry.)

Va'nimia's head snapped back around to look at Delazana and her face took on a decidedly darker expression. "Se si vamma avahaira vanya ve elye squen." (She is not as beautiful as you said she was.)

Vonis chuckled as Dysea and several others gasped humorously at Va'nimia's words. He leaned over and nuzzled her four inch long elven ear and her blue eyes closed in delightful sensations. "Vamma ve le irima Va'nimia." (Not like you my lovely Va'nimia.)

"Zhah nindol l'darthirii ssindossa dos zet uns'aa whol?" Delazana hissed out the words. (Is this the elf whore you left me for?)

Va'nimia's eyes sprang open then and her blue eyes grew dark with anger. "Ka dos zhahen natha trantz j'nesst dos orn'la zhaun vel'drav dosst nesst yikssus uk ssinssrinil folbol alur." She snarled viciously. (If you were a real woman, you would know when your man wanted something better.)

Isabella almost choked on the glass of wine she was holding and Eliani and Nyla burst out laughing as Delazana's eyes grew wide.

"Yes... I speak your language bitch!" Va'nimia spoke firmly. "My husband..." Va'nimia gripped Vonis's arm tightly. "My husband taught me your language so that we could teach our five children about both their heritages and cultures." Va'nimia leaned closer to Vonis, relishing in his body pressed against hers and how he made no move to lean away. "He feeds on my blood in our bed when we make love... and it is so incredibly divine. It is my body he holds close to chase away the chill of the night air. Your angry words will not get him back. You will never get him back for he is mine. If you were smart... you would leave our presence now, before you say something incredibly stupid which will force me to beat you silly in front of everyone here. While it would hardly make me blink, I do know that the King does not enjoy blood while he eats."

Martin had remained silent throughout the exchanged and at the mention of his name he shook his head quickly. "Ah no... no I don't."

Delazana opened her mouth to retort but Aikiro took her arm. "Forgive us." She spoke quickly as she pulled the woman back. "Forgive me Vonis. I only thought to..."

"No mother..." Vonis said meeting her eyes. "You did not think. If you thought to entice me with what I left behind... you will find that what I have here... what I have built here..." Vonis once more leaned over and nuzzled Va'nimia's elven ear. "Far outweighs anything that I left behind in that life."

Aikiro looked at him. "Would... would you at least entertain a few moments of your mother's time while I am here?"

"For what purpose?" Vonis asked.

"So that I may... so that I may see you." Aikiro answered.

Vonis looked at Va'nimia. She smiled brilliantly and kissed him softly. "It is your decision my husband." She said.

Vonis turned back to Aikiro. "I will send you a message tomorrow mother and we'll see what we can arrange."

Aikiro nodded. "Thank you." She spoke. She turned to look at Martin. "Once more King Leonidas... thank you for the opportunity to be here."

Martin nodded slowly. "Sure." He said as Aikiro turned and she moved back to her table. Yuri followed after a last glance at Martin, pulling the young woman with her. Martin leaned back in his chair and blew out a long breath. "Well... that was interesting." He said.

Isabella turned her head and glared at him for a moment. He met her eyes and looked confused. "What?" He asked.

Isabella shook her head and pushed her chair back from the table, getting to her feet and leaving the table.

Martin sipped his wine and set the glass down on the table. "Shit!" He muttered.

Dysea, Anja and Aricia all turned to look at him even as he was already getting to his feet. He lifted his hand at their worried expressions.

"I'll be back." He spoke softly. "This is something I have to do."

Isabella stepped onto the private patio behind the auditorium and let the cool breeze flow across her skin. She moved to the railing that overlooked the Evrotas River two stories below and gazed down at the promenade that ran along the opposite bank. It was filled with men, women and children walking along the wooden boardwalk along the rivers edge as the nearly full moon provided ample light even with the light clouds that dotted the sky. Having Yuri and the High Coven here was affecting her more than she thought, stirring up memories that she had long ago buried. Her super sensitive vampire hearing still worked perfectly even in her charged emotional state and she heard his heart beating calmly and powerfully as he came up behind her moving like a phantom in the night. She could pick his heartbeat and those of her fellow Queens out of a crowd of thousands easily, so attuned was she to them. His heart never raced, never changed from the strong, calm pulse as it beat within his chest unless they were involved in some very passionate encounters. It was one of the things she so loved about him. How he could remain so very calm and in control even in the most trying circumstances.

“Bella?” Martin spoke softly.

“Exquisite?” Isabella snarled angrily as she whirled around quickly and spat the word. “You said she looked exquisite!” She glared at him with anger in her hazel/green eyes. “What kind of nubous compliment was that?”

“What was I supposed to say?” Martin spoke as he stepped up to her even in the midst of her obvious anger. Isabella was almost as tall as Dysea and she could almost look him directly in the eye. “I couldn’t say what I wanted to say.”

“And what was that Martin?” Isabella barked. “What did you want to say to her? That you appreciate she bought that dress... that we bought that dress for her... so she could flaunt her big tits in your face! Maybe make you think of old times?”

“I prefer your tits.” Martin stated quickly with a smile. “They are much firmer and you taste far better.”

Isabella glared at him. “Oh... that’s so very romantic!” She hissed.

Martin’s face changed then to one of seriousness and he gazed at her intently. Isabella was his pureblood vampire Queen and the one less likely to show intense emotion of all the women he loved and cherished. She was closest to him in terms of thinking and in a very real way she represented the darker side of Martin Leonidas. Isabella was blunt and plain talking and on more than one occasion had angered some of the more sensitive politicians within the Union with either her words or actions. Personality wise, she was more like him in many respects. She was the most respected and well thought of among the military of the Union, for she thought like a military man in most regards, and had led an entire Fleet Group including two Ground Attack Divisions during the Evolli War. She did not often show emotions like this outside of the privacy of their home.

“Bella... what is wrong?” He finally asked softly.

“You are my m'ranndii!” She spat. “You don’t know? You should know these things! You should...”

Martin stepped close to her and wrapped his arms around her body, pulling her tightly into his embrace. Isabella tried to push him away for the briefest of moments but then she surrendered to the feelings that swept through her whenever he took her in his arms. She pressed her body against his as his cheek rested against the top of her head and he stroked her long dark hair.

“I know that right now you have a lot of anger surging through you.” He spoke softly. “I know that something has really got you worked up and it has to do with Yuri and the High Coven. I also know that I do not like to see you like this because you are my 'ranndi and my mate. Now please tell me why you are so agitated, because contrary to popular belief I can not read minds Bella. Even those of the ones I love more than my own life.”

“I... I am angry... I am angry because she got you first!” Isabella spoke. “And whether you see it or not, she will always flaunt that in front of me. It is the only reason she bought a dress like that Martin. If you had not... if you had not said what you did I would have been fine and tolerated her pathetic attempts at... but you...”

“But like I normally do... I stuck my big size eleven in my mouth like a riad aulved.” Martin said.

“I know you spoke only for political show but...” Isabella pulled her head away from his chest and looked up into his face.

“I’m sorry Bella.” He said softly.

Isabella shook her head slowly. “It is not your fault. I... even after all these years she is still able to get under my skin. I hate the fact that she met you first. I hate how she used you and...”

Martin took her face in his hands. “Bella... I have wanted you since the first day you came into our lives... my life.” He told her softly. “Yuri may be your half sister... but to be perfectly honest... she does not begin to compare to you. Not in any way. I understand why you feel this way... but the only vampire I want in my bed and my life is you Bella. You are not Yuri; you are far more than Yuri will ever be. More than she could ever hope to obtain. That is why I love you. She did not have me first Bella. She never had me at all.”

“You shared a bed with her for two years Martin.” She spoke.

Martin nodded slowly. "Yes... but she never got what was inside me." He told her lifting his hand to caress her cheek. "You are the only sister who got that Isabella Leonidas. You are the only vampire I have surrendered that too. The only vampire who has ever or will ever taste my blood and I believe that is the biggest sign of partnership among even the High Coven isn't it?"

Isabella nodded slowly. "Yes."

"You are the only vampire who will ever have that Isabella. And you will be the only vampire to have my children. You are not just a vampire to me... you never have been. You are an exceedingly gorgeous woman Bella and my wife." Martin said running a finger along her lips. "As for what Yuri believes... we both know the truth behind that. You know the truth and that should be your strength. Melda Min says we were meant to be together, all of us. That it was driven by fate and destiny. Do you believe her when she says that?"

"I... I didn't at first." Bella answered softly. "As the years passed I have come to believe it strongly. Anja... For'mya... they both descend from royalty, as do you and your blood... their blood, it tastes so much sweeter to me because of this. It would to any vampire. Ussta she-elf... she is like a fine wine I can not do without, and Aricia... when I feast on her it is like a combination of you and she because you are Anomes."

Martin nodded. "I do not even begin to try and understand it." He said gently. "I accept it because it makes me whole... and that is what matters to me. Yuri could be standing naked in front of me Bella... and I could be under the spell of some love potion number nine... and I would still only want you."

Isabella looked at him oddly. "What is this Love Potion Number nine? I have never heard of such a thing."

Martin chuckled softly. "It's something I heard when I was small I think. From a song in Earth's history."

"That is a very strange song m'ranndii." She stated.

Martin leaned over and kissed her softly. "Let go of these thoughts that you cling too Bella." He said softly. "They are not you... and they most certainly are not the truth."

Isabella smiled brightly. "I see your time with Helen has given you a more philosophical tone to your words sometimes."

Martin grinned. "As painful as her teachings are I'm surprised I'm not half crazy already with what she makes me read."

"You can not become half crazy Martin, you already are half crazy." Isabella said reaching up to take his face in her hands.

Martin grinned as he pulled her closer, feeling her lush body against his. "So I've been told. And I'm about to do something crazy right now."

"What do you mean?" Isabella asked as she felt his hands begin to stroke her lower back and the curves of her firm ass. She felt her own desire ignite and she looked at him. "Martin Leonidas... what... what are you doing?"

Martin smiled and leaned over to nuzzle her cheek and the side of her neck. "I've suddenly developed a burning need for my breathtakingly beautiful vampire wife." He growled out the words. "A need I intend to quench right now."

"Martin... we can't!" Isabella exclaimed. "We will... people will see us! You..." Her words were lost then as his lips came down on hers in a feverish kiss, his arms pulling her tightly to him and his hands deftly working at the fastenings of the dress she wore. Isabella's own desire surged almost out of control as his tongue probed and teased and tasted. She could feel the burning inside him, his need and desire for her, and Isabella scolded herself for acting as she had.

Isabella groaned against his demanding kiss as his hand pushed aside the lower portion of her two piece dress and she felt the warmth of his hands grasp her firm ass cheeks. The tips of his fingers caressed the edges of her now exceptionally moist pussy, her pierced clit responding to the heat that was rippling through her now. It was a heat that Isabella knew would only grow in intensity until he was inside her. Her hands dropped quickly to the front of his pants, all thoughts of being seen gone from her mind now. She wanted her husband right now, and she would not be denied. She gasped against his powerful kiss as she freed his beautiful cock. Twelve wonderfully thick inches that filled her in a way she had never imagined any man could. Even after twenty-five years being together, he could still do things to her that made her scream out in ecstasy. She felt his hands tighten on her ass cheeks and he was lifting her off the ground, her groans of delight very audible as he dragged her pussy up along the entire length of his massive cock.

The emerald piercing she wore in the hood of her clitoris was a gift from Dysea many years ago, just as the diamond one Dysea wore was a gift from Isabella. Martin knew just what to do to both of them with their pierced clits to make them barely able to hold onto whatever control they had. Dragging his deliciously long and thick cock, throbbing with life and passion, along their clits was without a doubt the fastest way to make them come. Tonight was no different, and even as he finished and poised the bulbous head of his massive woman pleaser at the now soaked entrance of her engorged pussy, Isabella was groaning in the intensity of the orgasm ripping through her.

Isabella wrapped her arms around his broad shoulders and tore her lips from his. "We... we must be quick my love!" She gasped next to his ear. "They... they will notice we are... we are gone! Do... do not hold back!"

"The... the shadows Bella!" Martin's voice was nearly a growl, his cock throbbing so hard it was almost painful. "Wrap... wrap us in the shadows!" He gasped loudly just before he pulled Isabella's hips down.

Her eyes flew open in rapture as she felt every searing hot and incredibly thick length of his cock fill her in one plunge. She retained enough presence of mind to wave her arm quickly, engulfing them within the shadows of the night before she surrendered to him completely.

Isabella could only hold on in blissful wonder as Martin slammed into her again and again, his hips almost a blur. She wrapped her long legs around his waist, locking her ankles at the small of his back as he raised and lowered her hips with dominating power upon his steel hard cock. Every downward pull smashed her swollen and over excited clit against his hard pelvic bone, sending electric currents of pleasure through her entire body. Her pussy sucked hard on his massive tool every time he withdrew. Twenty-five years and even now Isabella was still helpless within this man's grasp. His huge cock filled in ways she had never imagined, stretching her to the point of splitting her apart it seemed. The waves of building pleasure only increased in intensity as he slammed into her harder still, the wet slapping sounds of their hips coming together and their low groans of pleasure able to be heard. Isabella's passion filled eyes could see faces turn to look at the patio from the river bank wondering what was going on, but not able to see anything. This fact only caused her to shudder more, the orgasms riding atop one another like waves crashing onto the rocks. His fingers were bruising her skin with the power of his grip on her hips, but the pain from that was lost in the wash of pleasure ripping through her.

Isabella knew she was not like their other lovers, and there were times when she just needed her husband to pound her senseless with his massive cock. She cared not for the bruises they would give each other in such a coupling, and neither did Martin. Perhaps it was part of her vampire nature, or that of the hard life she had been raised with, but regardless of the reason when she needed Martin to just simply fuck her silly he instinctively knew this and gave her just what she wanted.

This was one of those times now.

Later tonight she knew they would enjoy a gentler loving making, and then she planned to feast on Anja's royal blood while they pleased each of their other mates. Right now however it was just them, and Martin was taking full advantage of this fact. He was adorning her neck and throat with nibbles and kisses, even as he used her body there on the patio. Isabella didn't care... the pleasure screaming through her was undeniable and only he was able to do this to her. Isabella felt his cock beginning to swell within the depths of her pussy.

"Be... Bella!" He croaked out her name even as he continued to hammer his cock into her.

Isabella's eyes grew wide as she clawed at the collar of his uniform to expose his straining neck. Her eyes changed to cobalt blue as she saw his thick vein pulsing beneath his skin. Her eyes nearly disappeared into the back of her head as he slammed into her now, the contentment of his powerful strokes into her pussy nearly overwhelming her considerable control. She felt her own powerful orgasm approaching like some meteor from the stars, and then it was upon her in a flash. Her stomach clenched painfully and she drove her hips down as hard as she could. Martin's arms crushed her lithe body to his and she felt his cock swell impossibly large inside her as his scorching hot come raced up the length. She heard her husband grown loudly just as the first eruption blasted into her velvety depths and Isabella sank her vampire fangs into the vein on his neck.

The pleasure for both of them increased three fold, his explosions more powerful and lasting longer as his come flooded into her clenching belly. Isabella's eyes did roll into the back of her head now as the dual pleasure of feeling his come filling her and drinking the rich spicy flavor of his blood as it flooded her throat nearly made her pass out. His hand came up quickly, holding her head in place against his neck without fear. This was something only Isabella had ever done, and as his words a few moments ago flashed back into her mind and his hand pressed her head closer, she felt tears come to her cobalt blue eyes. He had no fears of her taking too much of his blood. He trusted her completely and knew she would stop as soon as the pleasure ebbed even a little for either one of them. Martin was simply content to ride that wave of incredible pleasure, his own eyes changed and his dual fangs exposed and looking upwards into the sky through the veil of shadows she had wrapped around them. He loved them all with everything that he was, and he would never forsake any of them. Each of them did something different to only make those feelings stronger and more eternal. He would never be the same if any of them were lost to him. He would survive, but he would never be the same.

Martin Leonidas had sworn long ago that none of them would ever be lost to him unless it was completely out of his control to stop.

It was the one promise Martin Leonidas never had any intentions of breaking.

As he felt Bella slow her feeding and slowly withdraw her fangs, the last of his come filling her depths, he smiled. Her warm tongue danced across the two puncture marks on his neck sealing them instantly, and her strong arms wrapped around his shoulders even tighter as she buried her face in his long hair. Martin stepped carefully to the railing and leaned against it. As long as she kept the shadows around them, he would hold her for as long as she wished and simply enjoy the warmth of her body and how she felt within his arms.

The State Dinner could wait. It was not more important to him than his beautiful vampire wife and mate and her needs.

The Dinner had begun with a wondrous meal for dozens of different species and cultures. Almost all known species within the Union were represented somehow, and while conversation continued through several courses, Martin and Isabella returned to their table. No one but her fellow Queens took note of the look of extreme satisfaction and adoring love in her eyes for the man who had escorted her back and they smiled knowingly. Aikiro had remained silent for the most part as she took in everything around them, including the return of Martin and Isabella. The relaxed atmosphere was not something she was used to at events like this, for within the High Coven they were much more formal and guided. Here however, here it appeared that with the exception of when everyone was eating, soft music from the nearby band was filtering through the hall and male and females of every species thought nothing of getting up from their chair and visiting with others. Many even openly approached the Leonidas table and spoke either with Martin, Deia or one of the Queens. While she could easily pick out the Durcunusaan soldiers in civilian clothes scattered throughout the hall, none of them were visibly armed and while they appeared to be very alert, they were mingling with the many people as well. She watched as the Queens and Martin Leonidas sampled food from each other's plates, at times feeding each other morsels and commenting to each other. There was soft laughter from among their children who sat at the table as they talked amongst themselves. Her dark eyes fell upon Androcles Leonidas where he sat. The golden blond hair of his mate shimmered in the light and she leaned against his side affectionately as she spoke with Eliani and her pureblood lover Nyla. The youngest daughter of Leonidas and Isabella, Zarah she now knew her name to go along with her face, sat on the other side of Androcles and they appeared to be heavily involved in a conversation with his half elf sister and brother Normya and Arrarn. They were the pilots in the family.

Aikiro prided herself on her memory and being able to remember things and she had committed the names of the older Leonidas children to memory, but this was the first time she was able to match all their faces to live people and she did this with exceeding detail. She reached out within Mindvoice, letting her perceptions just drift on the air and while she knew the Mindvoice abilities of his children were powerful, she didn't realize just how powerful until now. The most powerful pulses were coming from Martin and his pureblood Queen Aricia, and then Androcles and surprisingly his new mate Sadi. The four of them radiated within Mindvoice like beacons. The drop in power was significant from Androcles to his next sibling, but even still, Lisisa followed by Denali and then Eliani and her lover far outweighed what any of Yuri's children were capable of. What surprised her more than anything was that Narice and Carisia registered very close to Androcles in terms of raw power being generated. Narice she expected this from, but that it also came from Carisia was something of a surprise. As she allowed herself to drift within the threads of Mindvoice she also noticed that amazingly, the threads that were her granddaughter Carisia were somehow reaching across the distance and entwining with those of Androcles and his mate.

Aikiro cut her eyes to where Carisia sat and watched her as she ate from her plate and exchanged small talk with Toria Dellion. She seemed completely unaware, yet Aikiro knew better. Carisia was far stronger within Mindvoice than she led everyone to believe, and her bond with her dragon Anthar prevented Aikiro from discovering just how much stronger she was. Aikiro hadn't been able to breach Carisia and Anthar's shields for many years now, and that fact alone made her, if not a dangerous factor, then certainly an unknown. Aikiro had no doubts she could breach her shields eventually, but as she had told Yuri, it would require much concentration and they would have to be kept sedated that entire time. That alone troubled Aikiro, for aside from Leonidas, his son and herself; she had never come across Mindvoice shields as intricate and powerful as those of her daughter Narice and of Carisia.

Aikiro turned back to the large Leonidas table at the sound of laughter and saw Isabella leaning into Vonis and laughing loudly as Vonis's elven wife was running her fingers through his hair and joining in the laughter. Vonis appeared embarrassed by something and his arms were crossed over his broad chest, his face playfully sullen.

"Aikiro?" Tesand's soft whisper caused her to turn and look at him. "You seem very distracted."

Aikiro nodded slowly as she studied Tesand's face.

Aikiro had not told Yuri everything in regards to Tesand, for it was better if she did not know everything. Her feelings for the handsome pureblood Admiral had grown stronger through the years, far stronger than she had first expected, and far more powerful than anything she had ever felt for Veldruk. Yuri had been correct in saying he was protective of her, though not overbearing in that protectiveness. He knew what she was capable of, for he had been there when she butchered Veldruk with barely a pause, but this did not deter him from his actions in regards to her. Aikiro welcomed his dominance in their bed, she relished in what he made her feel, but he also knew his place in the greater scheme of things. She had an empire to govern, and his purpose was to support her in that endeavor, something he did unequivocally. Though it was not widely known outside her inner circle of advisors, there was a growing insurgency among the people of the High Coven. Several of them in fact. One group wanted to surrender completely to the Kavalians and end the over two decades of war in the hopes the Kavalians would allow them to live peacefully under their rule. This was not something any sane person would agree to since it was well known the KFI's stated goals were to destroy every vampire alive. The more troublesome of the insurgent groups and the one that had more influence was the one that wanted the High Coven to reach out to others for aide, to put aside their conquering ways and form alliances that would help them grow and shake off the stagnant policies of the past and allow them to finally defeat the Kavalian Empire.

This was the group that had tried to assassinate Aikiro four times in the last two decades, and it was during the last attempt that Aikiro saw Tesand's true feelings for her. He had discovered the plot against her quite by accident and without so much as a warning to others, or help from military forces, Tesand had disappeared for a three week stretch that saw the violent deaths of several prominent High Coven officials. He had come close to the actual leader of this insurgency, closer than ever before, but that leader had eluded him. He had told her afterwards of what he had done, and Aikiro could not help the flush of emotions that had coursed through her then. Emotions she had never allowed herself to feel before that day, and certainly not emotions that Veldruk had ever seen. Aikiro had worshiped him in their bed for days upon his return, doing whatever it was he desired of her to please him. It was her way of showing him what he meant to her, and even though she could never show that publicly, Tesand now knew where he stood within Aikiro's life.

Aikiro nodded slowly. "I'm exploring within Mindvoice." She answered softly knowing he would understand what she meant.

"Anything I should be aware of?" He asked.

Aikiro shook her head. "I'm not entirely sure." She replied. "If you mean threats to us... no... surprisingly I can sense very little in the way of hostile emotions that are directed at our table. More curiosity than anything else."

“I would think that is a good thing.” Tesand spoke softly. “We certainly don’t need to be looking over our shoulders while we are in the middle of enemy territory. At least not anymore than we already are.”

Aikiro nodded. “Yes... I agree.” She said. “Do you concur with Narice that we should put what plans we have in motion on hold Tesand?”

“No.” He answered immediately. “I do think we need to be very careful in how we proceed however. Perhaps more subtly will provide more answers to the questions we have.”

“Then you and Robert have seen nothing outwardly from the soldiers we see walking the streets that indicate major technological advancements?” Aikiro asked.

“Robert and I spent a good portion of the afternoon when we returned from the airfield just drifting from one café to the next, observing the Spartans we saw.” Tesand said. “We saw nothing like what Narice described either in use or on the Spartans. We did however see much advancement in engineering practices and how the newer buildings have been constructed within the city and some of the infrastructure needed. I don’t expect them to flaunt any military advances they have openly.”

“The ability to intercept our ship to ship transmissions doesn’t concern you?” She asked. There were times when Aikiro loved to pick the brains of Tesand and Robert in regards to military matters, for they were perhaps two of the most brilliant tacticians she had ever known.

Tesand shook his head. “Robert and I have already determined how it was done and have issued orders to randomly modulate our communications frequency.” He said. “I don’t believe that is something we can attribute to the Mindvoice ship. I studied the profiles of everyone associated with Leonidas for the last twenty plus years. This Admiral O’Connor... their overall Operations Commander... I would compare him to Pontal with his innovativeness and ability to adept. The man was a genius when he was on Earth... and he is even more of a genius now with the advancements he was handed. I believe their ability to intercept our transmissions was something he came up with and not something that came from the Mindvoice ship. What Narice saw however, that I believe is something they have derived from that ship and learned how to use. Whatever it is.”

“A personal Shroud Shield?” Aikiro asked.

Tesand shook his head. “Narice still should have been able to detect his heartbeat, even faintly.” He answered. “I believe it to be some sort of teleporting device from the way she described it.”

Aikiro turned back to look at Martin. “Now that is something I believe he would use for military purposes.” She said softly.

Tesand nodded. “He would be a fool not too, and I don’t see him being the fool. Most definitely it would give them a great advantage.” He said in agreement. “And combined with the normal training each Spartan receives... if these devices are mass produced they could possibly insert hundreds of these Spartans behind enemy lines and wreak havoc wherever they go.”

“Could this be how they defeated so many Kavalian troops Tesand?” Aikiro asked him, her eyes still on Martin and where he sat nuzzling Aricia’s ear and cheek.

Tesand shrugged. “If that is truly what this device is... yes that would go a long way in explaining how they defeated them so soundly. I don’t see how those agents we have in place within the Kavalian military would not have reported this back to us however Aikiro. Granted some of them are not trustworthy but...”

Aikiro turned back to look at Tesand. “Perhaps because Leonidas and those with him slaughtered the Kavalian dogs to the last man.” She stated plainly. “They left no survivors Tesand. That was reported on their own Netnews channels when it happened. Leonidas gave that information to them and insured they reported it; you can be confident of that. And he gave it to them so the Kavalians would take heed. He sent them a message.”

Tesand nodded slowly. “Yes... there is that to consider. No survivors would mean no information got back to the KFI. Which means the Kavalians are blissfully unaware of this technological advancement as well? You think the Kavalians have avoided the Union because of this single battle at its results?”

Aikiro nodded. “Five-to-one odds against them and Martin Leonidas hands those Kavalians bastards their collective backsides?” She stated with an impressive smile. “If you were Pusintin and Keleru, what would you do?”

“Avoid them at all costs.” Tesand answered immediately.

Aikiro nodded with him. “The question remains however, was Arrarn Leonidas’s use of this device planned to show us that we are not considered as great a threat to them, or did he do it unwittingly, showing off in some manner to our people.”

“He is said to be one of the calmer and reserved members of this family. Considering his position and skills...” Tesand spoke thoughtfully. “I believe he did this to send us a message as well. A message that they perhaps no longer fear us Aikiro.”

Aikiro nodded. “Perhaps... or was it intended as something else?” She said softly.

“I got a very quick scan of the LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruiser that escorted us here before we were ordered to power down our sensor arrays. The ship is a match for our BLOOD REVERENCE Class easily... which means it is an equal match for the Kavalian GREATSOUL-Class Dreadnought as well.”

“And?” Aikiro asked.

“Aikiro... they have three hundred and nineteen of these ships that we know of. Every single one of them saw combat in the Evolli War.” Tesand said softly. “Leonidas may be many things Aikiro my Empress... but when it comes to making war... the man is methodic. He is planning for something... and us being here, at least in part, tells me that whatever it is he is planning for, it is not against us.”

Aikiro looked at him intently. “You believe this truly?”

Tesand nodded. “There is an old adage that Yuri brought back from Earth with her that I have heard her use a few times over the years. ‘The enemy of our enemy is our friend.’ You have said yourself that he harbors a great deal of hatred for the Kavalians and we do not know why.”

“I have suspicions.” Aikiro spoke. “Nothing to really base them on. Just feelings that I have.”

Tesand nodded. “Suspicions and feelings do not win victories Aikiro my love.” He said softly.

Aikiro’s eyes grew a little wider at his words. “Tesand!” She exclaimed just as softly.

Tesand dropped his eyes from her face. “Forgive me... I...”

Aikiro dropped her hand under the table quickly and took his weathered one in hers. “No Tesand, do not apologize.” She said gently shaking her head. “Your words mean a great deal to me. More than I am allowed to show you unfortunately. More than I am able to show you Tesand. I do not... just know that I want nothing to change between you and I... you have filled a void I once had and while I may never show it... in some ways I don’t know how to show it... know that it is you that have done this. Thank you Tesand.”

He nodded. “For eternity Aikiro... you never need doubt that.” He said.

Aikiro smiled and nodded her head to him acknowledging his words. “Perhaps we should have Dante approach the younger Leonidas daughter in a more reserved way based on what you have told me.” She said as she turned back to look at Martin not releasing Tesand’s hand under the table. “Narice may be right in her thoughts.” She said softly. “Perhaps we will not need to use our secondary plans to their fullest extent. Perhaps another direction is needed.”

“What do you mean?” Tesand asked.

“I will use what we know against him, to help the believability of the intelligence we gave them.” Aikiro said with a smile. “You still have a secure means of communication with our ships correct?”

Tesand nodded. “Always.”

“Contact the Commander of the Venorik Elghinn.” Aikiro said. “I want a Kill Order issued.”

“A Kill Order? For... for some member of the Kavalian delegation?” Tesand asked with questions in his eyes.

“I want the order to appear as if it came from the High Coven traitors we know of within the Kavalian military.” Aikiro said. “The ones we know that have openly and unashamedly sided with the Kavalians. We can create havoc among two enemies with one stroke.”

“That could take several weeks to arrange Aikiro.” Tesand spoke.

“Yes I know. We have the time however. I don’t imagine once the Kavalian delegation arrives here they will be leaving anytime soon. Their true purpose will be to find out why we are here.” Aikiro stated. “Leonidas knows that as well and that is why he will shield us as best as he is able. The dragons and riders primarily.”

“I will make it so.” Tesand said with a nod. “Who is to be the target?”

Aikiro looked at him with a smile. “Why Tesand... I am of course.” She stated calmly even as his dark eyes grew wide in stunned shock.

“And avoid the border of The Wilds.” Arrarn was telling Normya as they sat at the table and sipped their mother’s coffee. “Especially the Deltron Cluster. Without LSD coils providing additional power you’ll barely be able to maneuver with the gravity bubbles scatter all over.”

“Arrarn... I know!” Normya shook her head laughing softly. “You are such a worry wart.”

“He knows you can be impetuous at times sister.” Andro’s voice filled her ears from behind and she turned as he squatted next to her chair. “He wants to insure you remain safe. You will be flying a damaged ship Normya.”

Normya nodded. “Yes I know. And Toral has already plotted a course to avoid all the danger zones.” She replied. “He is an excellent co-pilot Andro.”

Andro leaned over and nuzzled her cheek. “He is not our sister.”

Normya giggled like when she was small as she felt Andro’s facial hair scrap her cheek. “I will be calm and in control!” She stated. “I will check in every six hours. Both of you need to stop worrying! It’s not my first solo flight!”

“It is over such a long distance.” Arrarn corrected her. “With your coils it would take you two days combined with the new gates. Without your coils it will take you at least four.”

“And it’s still faster than waiting for a new shipment of parts to arrive from Apo Prime.” Normya declared.

“Did Zarah find out anything about that?” Andro asked sipping his glass of wine. “Why there is such a deficiency?”

Normya shook her head. “It appears to be just an ordering screw up.” She answered. “She’s going to look into it further when you guys get settled at the southern base.”

Andro nodded. “Give our father an extra hug when you leave tonight.” He said.

Normya looked at him oddly. “Why? He knows I’m going.” She said.

She saw both her older brothers nod their heads. “Yes... however he does not know the ship is damaged.” Arrarn told him. “I sort of forgot to tell him and mother. They would never allow it... you know that, not without a full squadron to escort you. At least not yet. We... Andro and I have faith in your abilities however sister... and that is why we did not tell him.”

“Consider this your final exam Normya.” Andro spoke with a smile. “Get the ship and yourself to Apo Prime in one piece, get her repaired and then bring your tail back here with a repaired TYPE II and you can step into your role as STRIKER Flight Leader on the PILLAR OF FAITH with no one having questions about your skills or judgment.”

Normya looked at her older brothers and couldn’t help but beam. They were right in that neither their father nor their mothers would allow her to take a damaged ship so far without an escort. She was still very young and while her skills far surpassed most senior pilots, Normya knew she needed experience and seasoning. She would be the first one to admit that. Now her brothers were giving her that opportunity. She leaned over and hugged Andro tightly, kissing his cheek before doing the same to Arrarn.

“Thank you for believing in me.” She said softly.

Andro chuckled. “It’s not you I’m worried about.” He said. “It’s the pitiful fools who happen to stumble across your path in the future.”

“You do realize she takes after mother in the way she flies?” Arrarn said looking at Andro. “They speak of mother and Endith in reverent whispers about what they can make a STRIKER do... and Normya is just as methodic and surreal.”

Andro nodded as he looked at his sister and squeezed her hand. “Yes I know. Let’s just wait until you have a few years under your belt before you start pulling some of the flying stunts that mother and Endy have pulled off through the years. Promise?”

Normya chortled with love and nodded her head. “I promise.”

“I’m sorry for taking Zarah away from you.” Andro said. “I will need her abilities if we are to train these Coven riders well enough to keep from dying the moment they enter battle. Carina is going to be handling the Operations Training Board and Zarah will need to help me instruct them.”

Normya nodded. “She is looking forward to it.” She said. “Just watch out for her Andro. Our Coming of Age is soon and she is very excited about finally being able to test the ‘gene pool’ as she puts it when our First Phase finally passes.”

Andro smiled. “I will don’t worry.” He leaned over again and kissed her cheek as he got to his feet. “Contact Res when you pass Gate Three Nine. He and mother will be heading back here by then and just touch base with him.”

Normya nodded. “I will.” She said. She smiled brilliantly as her brother smiled and turned to head back to where Sadi was sitting with her two cadet friends. She turned back to Arrarn, her emerald eyes taking on a more serious look. “I’m nervous Arrarn.” She said. “I won’t be able to sleep tonight.”

Arrarn grinned at her and rose to his feet as well. “I figured as much.” He said holding out his hand to her. “That’s why I got you, me and Zarah a nice table on top of your TYPE II. We are going to go there, take in the sights and smells of the hanger and relax as only we pilots can.”

Normya grinned as she saw Zarah look over and begin getting to her feet. She stood up and took her brother’s hand. “Is this what mother did for you?” She asked.

Arrarn nodded. “The night before my final test flight. It was the most relaxing time I had spent in months and it allowed me to focus enough to pass my final without blowing up my instructor or crashing into any buildings. Since she could not be here, she wanted me and Zarah to make sure we did it for you in her stead. And to make sure you knew she is very proud of you.”

Normya smiled as she stepped up under his powerful arm to hug him and Zarah came up to them. “I got our stuff ready at the south entrance.” She said.

Arrarn put his arm around her waist as well and looked at Normya. “We’ll wait there while you say goodbye to father and our mothers.” He stated. “And hurry up... Andro and I snuck a case of the beer Uncle Daniel has made for special occasions out of his stock with Aunt Anuk’s help, but it won’t stay cold forever!”

Normya grinned and scampered towards where her father sat.

THE WILDS

2.7 LIGHT YEARS FROM TALBOR SEVEN

Anton Simpson let his hands caress the control console of the Limian Manufacturing Company JAL-14 Long Range Leisure Transport as he adjusted their course a fraction and then he sat back in the comfortable chair to sip his mug of tea and watch the stars as they hurtled past. He ran his hand over the thin layer of hair he had allowed to grown in the last three days and grimaced. Like his father, he preferred his head to be completely hairless, but for this mission Cihera had suggested he grow it in. Anton Simpson was the oldest son of Daniel and Anuk Simpson, and perhaps the most unheralded of all his father’s children.

That was something Anton did not mind in the least.

Anton, from the time he was a small boy running through the corridors with Androcles and Moneus of either the Island Palace or on the streets of Sparta, had always had a love for the shadowy world of the Krypteria. He had seen Armetus enough times over the years to become infatuated with the man and how he would come and go through even the heaviest of security with barely a pause. He had thought at first his father would be angry with him for moving to join the Krypteria at the end of his Agoge training as opposed to becoming a member of the Durcunusaan. He couldn’t have been more wrong. His father and both his mothers had praised his decision and fully supported his actions. Even his gruff talking grandfather Melancton had been pleased with his decision. It meant that he would not be seen at many of the more public ceremonies and events with his family, and though part of this bothered him, he made it a point to be watch the moment when his brother spoke up for Carina’s hand as his mate on the vid/cam that Armetus had given him before he and Cihera had left. His family knew and accepted that his chosen life would mean he came and went on a whim and they would sometimes not see him for months on end, or even hear from him, but his skills were without question and whenever he was home they made up for it in spades.

Anton took after his father in size and build, and while he did not have Moneus or his father’s height standing only an even six feet tall, he most certainly had the Spartan build and rippled definition. His light caramel colored skin was due mainly in part to his mother Anuk’s fairer color and thankfully he had not inherited her rust colored red hair for it would not have looked very good on him they had joked through the years. His two inch high elven ears fit vertically perfect on his head and he blessed that they did not curve as much as his mother's did towards the tips. He had his father's Lycavorian Spartan strength and his mother's incredible elven speed and reflexes. When he shifted to his wolf form, which he did not do very often, he was slightly larger than his brother Moneus. Neither of them came close to their father in size, or anywhere near as large as Andro or the King, but the few times he had shifted due to the need to frighten someone his size and teeth had convinced them he was not to be trifled with.

Armetus had discovered him very early in his Agoge, perhaps because he had made it clear what he had wanted to do when he completed the training, but more than likely because Armetus knew talent when he saw it. At least that is how Anton viewed it. He could speak nine different languages fluently, and get by in half a dozen others. He was an excellent pilot thanks to his elven blood, and his engineering skills would certainly rate him a Chief Engineer's slot on any ship in the Union Fleet. He was a methodical thinker and able to analyze any given situation from every angle within seconds. And Anton Simpson had absolutely no qualms about eliminating any threat to the Union he so loved, and he had done so on nine different occasions without fail. He was no stranger to death or blood, and like his father and mother, he preferred peace above all else. However, he would not allow harm to come to those who he cared for and respected, and he would not let their enemies hurt them if it was within his power to stop.

Anton turned slightly in the chair when he heard the door to the cockpit slide open and his dark eyes fell upon her tall, muscular, but deliciously feminine body as she entered. She looked exquisite in his oversized shirt Anton decided and he lifted his mug to drink his tea as she moved to the dispenser and got herself a large mug of Queen Aricia's coffee that she so loved.

Anton allowed his eyes to wander over the curve of her flawless ass and the muscular definition in her long legs and he felt his groin stir as the wolf inside him saw something he wanted. Looking at her as she gracefully prepared her coffee Anton came to the same conclusion as he did eight months ago when he took her as his mate.

Cihera Simpson was just as lethal as she was incredibly beautiful.

Her head turned as she lifted the mug to her soft lips, her shimmering white hair now replaced by the black dye she had used last night and he had helped massage into her scalp. She had not yet put in her contact lenses and Anton shuddered as she gazed at him with those amber colored orbs he so adored. He inhaled deeply and allowed her walnut scent to fill his head as she stepped up to him and leaned over.

"Good morning." She spoke.

Anton smiled as their lips came together in a soft kiss of deep feeling and commitment and then she deposited herself in the chair across from him, his shirt riding high up on her chocolate colored thighs.

"Sleep well?" Anton asked.

Cihera smiled over the edge of her mug and nodded. "Very much so." She replied. "It's been three months since I have had the pleasure of my husband's body next to mine in our bed and he is not assaulting me in some way."

Anton grinned. "I'm saving that for tonight after we arrive on Talbor Seven."

Cihera chuckled and allowed her amber eyes to scan the cockpit and consoles quickly. "You altered our course?" She said.

"Only three degrees." He answered. "It will bring us in from behind the fourth moon and shield us from anyone who might know we are coming."

Cihera Simpson turned back to look at her husband of less than a year, but the man she had loved for five long years.

Cihera had been born three short months before the Battle for Earth had claimed the lives of both her Drow elf parents. Her parents had been among those who had followed General Lynwe and Commander Tari out from under the thumb of the High Coven and joined those who were building a life in Eden City. Cihera barely remembered what her parents looked like, and over the years their images had faded to distant specks as new images took their place. She had been adopted by Lynwe, Selene and Layna a year after the beautiful Spartan woman had come into the lives of Lynwe and Selene. Two years after that Joarl became a permanent fixture in their lives as well, taking all of them as his mates and officially adopting Cihera and her older sister Tenia with barely any pause in his actions.

Cihera was half elf and half vampire due to the experiments on her parents while they served the High Coven, yet thank to her mother Lynwe and Aihola, Cihera was all Drow in her actions and values. She had an elf's speed and reflexes and a vampire's strength and ability to blur and wrap the shadows around her. Skills that Lynwe and Layna had schooled her on mercilessly through the years as she grew, with her father Joarl giving her hours upon hours of training with weapons of every sort. She needed no other schooling besides what Selene gave to her every day, and she was able to attend a higher university when she was only fifteen years old. Cihera spoke nearly twenty languages fluently; she had two degrees, one in Advanced Medical Sciences and one in Astro Physics. She too had been recruited by Armetus, knowing full well what it was he and those who worked for him did. Like her birth parents Cihera had no question about whether to serve the Union they had died helping to preserve. She had just completed her first successful mission when she met the handsome young Spartan who sat across from her now. She had not know who he was at first for he was quiet and reserved, but she knew when she saw interest in a man's eyes, and she saw interest in Anton's from that first moment.

They had not looked back after their first night together.

No one but Armetus knew they were married and they did this to keep both themselves and their families safe.

Cihera tilted her head slightly to the side and gazed at her husband. "You believe Andro and Armetus then?" She said.

"Until I see something that tells me otherwise yes." He replied with a grin. "Looking at the information gathered by my father and Armetus and the report from Andro, there are too many coincidences involved to not be some sort of plot."

"All the coincidences have legitimate reasons and explanations Anton." Cihera spoke calmly.

Anton nodded. "I know... but that they all happened together within weeks of each other leads me to think it was planned. Perhaps not the weapons transaction... but the raid on the colony exactly when the Queens would be returning from Hadaria."

Cihera nodded. "Ok... but if said person knew the Queens would be going through this area at this particular time, and if said person gave this information to the Evolli mercenaries, what would this said person gain? They would have to know enough about Queen Anja and Queen Aricia to be able to tell them when their ship left Hadaria. If they are that close to them, they would also know that it would be exceedingly foolish to attempt to take them prisoner. Of all the Queens, Aricia and Anja are the most volatile and the most less likely to give up without causing serious death and destruction to those attempting to capture them. Isabella is much more methodical and precise and Dysea has taken after her. Queen For'mya is hardly ever very far from the King since she is part of his flight crew, and whoever attempted to capture her would first need to kill the King."

Anton nodded. "Something many fools have tried over the years. Some not even the Queens know about."

"And none of them have been able to accomplish that task." Cihera spoke. "You would think after the first or second attempt they would realize it is not a very survivable prospect. There is no measuring the idiocy of some people husband."

Anton chuckled. "No there is not." He leaned over and held out the data pad. "The latest from Armetus. He is investigating who had knowledge of their visit to Hadaria." Anton spoke. "We are to find out if the weapons deal is related in any way to the attack on the colony and attempted ambush. He is directing operations from Earth since it appears both the High Coven and the Kavalians decided to come out and play at the same time. We should only contact him if we need something urgent. Otherwise he has given us free reign to discover what we can."

"Are we to act?" Cihera asked. Cihera Simpson was not afraid to kill. She had killed on a number of occasions when the mission called for it and like her beloved husband; they would only kill if it became necessary. Then they would not hesitate.

Anton nodded. "The King has given permission to eliminate any threat as long as we can prove our actions are justified and we have all the information we can possibly acquire."

“The man we are suppose to contact uses Talbor Seven as a base of operations.” Cihera said. “Once we are settled we should use our cover story as newlyweds and take in some of the resorts more entertaining aspects before we initiate a meeting. Perhaps drop ourselves some care packages.”

“There is a play tomorrow evening in their amphitheater.” Anton said.

“I love plays!” Cihera declared.

“That’s why I have already booked us two seats my lovely wife.” He told her with a smile. “And we can take the long path there through the promenade.”

“You do know Anton that our families will be livid with us when we finally tell them we are already married.” Cihera said softly as she sipped her coffee.

“You don’t question that we chose to not tell them do you?” He asked quickly.

Cihera shook her head immediately. “It is safer for them and for us this way. We both have far too many younger siblings that can not protect themselves from assassins or other agents if it was known we are married. Separately is better.”

“I still don’t understand why we had to make them think we hate each other.” Anton spoke. “Isn’t that a little over the top?”

“It’s more believable Anton. You know that.” Cihera spoke.

“Well... we should each choose one parent to tell after this mission. During the briefing when you called me a rock head I almost leaned over and kissed you on the spot.” He said with a grin.

Cihera laughed. “Yes... I saw that twitch.” She said getting to her feet. She stepped up to his chair and felt his arm encircle around the back of her ass, pulling her close and putting his face against her lower abdomen. “I will go get the inventory list and we can decide what to take with us on our reconnaissance.”

Anton nodded and drew back slowly. “I’ll be here.”

CHAPTER NINE

JUMP GATE THREE FIVE LEONIDAS II-CLASS STRIKE CRUISER MJOLNIR’S HAND

The cavernous landing bay of the United Lycavorian Union’s Flagship was a beehive of chaotic activity that many would think to be quite insane. Very neat rows of T9E TEMPTTEST Fighter Interceptors and the M4B DEVASTATOR Fighter/Bombers lined the bay as the dozens of ground crewmembers went about their duties with barely a pause. They were the crème de le crème of the Lycavorian Union Fleet; they knew it and it showed in their work. What appeared like chaos to the uninitiated were in fact the fingers of a master conductor at work. They paid no heed to the two rows of Durcunusaan soldiers that lined both sides of the East Hatchway. They were a regular part of the crew now and had been for over two decades. Many of those who called MJOLNIR’S HAND home had been assigned to this ship for at least a minimum of five years. Many chose to leave only when it would hinder them in being promoted or in advancing their careers. Quite a few even returned after doing stints on other ships or postings within the fleet.

The 1st Spartan Fleet Attack Group was the most sought after military posting anywhere within Union territory. It was the King’s unit... his personal hammer and shield. At some point through the years Martin Leonidas had gotten to know all of them here on this ship by name, and he and Admiral Komirri made it a point to insure whenever someone new was assigned they were greeted personally by one or both of them within hours of coming aboard. The King, when he was on board either by himself or with any of the Queens, always ate among the crew in one of the three massive mess lounges. He would often be seen among the half dozen entertainment areas, either talking or reading from some data pad. While many men and people off this ship would never dare approach their King simply because of the imposing figure he presented, the men and women of nearly a dozen and a half different species among the Union that were assigned to MJOLNIR’S HAND had no fears about walking right up to their King and including him in a conversation they may have been having, or simply to ask him a question or his opinion of something. That was what endeared him to so many within the military and the Union itself. It was well known that Androcles Leonidas ran his ship the SCIMITAR in much the same fashion, though the dress code was a little less stringent. The new style training King Leonidas had started all those years ago for the Spartan ground forces was extremely well received, mainly because he did not exclude himself from that very same training. He would not order or expect his men and women to do something he had not already done, and even though he did not require it of the much older Spartans, they too willingly volunteered to go through the training once more. Many had said they learned new things that they had not the first time, and none of them regretted going through the training once more.

King Leonidas was normal, and he went out of his way to avoid being anything else but normal.

For'mya Leonidas was also well known on MJOLNIR'S HAND, not only as one of their Queens, but also as part of the King's Flight crew. If there was a flying maneuver or stunt that Queen For'mya and Star Commanders Endith and Tina O'Connor had not either attempted or done, it simply did not exist. She and Queen Aricia had become fixtures on the ship, and over the last three years Queen Anja had joined them more and more. They all knew For'mya to be the most patient of the Queens and the one slowest to anger, but many of them had witnessed one of her verbal and physical explosions and all agreed that while Queen Aricia would never lose the title of deadliest of the Queens, For'mya Leonidas was most definitely not to be trifled with. The ground crew in the landing bay could only smile as they past by where she stood with Resumar and they saw her brushing at his crimson cape and smoothing out the edges.

For'mya looked up into Resumar's face as she straightened out the edges of his cape and saw his dark eyes smiling down at her. "What?" She demanded.

Resumar smiled. "Do you know how they feel about you mother?" He asked.

"Resumar Leonidas... I do not need you to explain to me how your father and mothers feel about me." She stated sternly but with a motherly tone of love in her voice. "They show that to me every day."

Resumar couldn't help the chuckle that escaped his lips and he shook his head. "That's not what I meant." He stated with a smile.

For'mya met his eyes. "What do you mean then?"

"Andro, me, Arrarn, Deni, Eliani, Lisisa... all of us." He said. "The people all around us. All over the Union."

"Res... you have lost me now." For'mya spoke.

"You are like the most revered of Sages mother." Resumar answered. "When we were children we could hear father and our mothers talking, sometimes when you weren't there. No matter what it was in regards to, they always felt they should see what your opinion was. How you felt something should be. Part of it is because of your abilities I know, but I think, we all think that most of it is because you are you."

For'mya smiled. "Well... I like being me." She said with a small laugh.

Resumar shook his head quickly. "Lisisa once put it in a way that sounds much more profound. We were at Andro's villa last year; I think you and father were with Aunt Deia and grandmother Gorgo on Elear for some conference or something. Lisisa said... she said you were the last, but you are the first. You are what bind all of us together in the end. We all agreed, our mothers, all of us."

For'mya looked at him for a long moment and reached up to place her hand on his cheek. She stared into his dark eyes, so much like Arrarn's eyes. So much like his father's eyes. For'mya realized that with the exception of Andro, all of Martin's sons, all of her sons had his eyes. Arrarn and Byron were the sons of her blood, but in this family, blood was no distinction. They were all blood. In twenty-six years there had never been one instance of disagreement among any of Martin's Queens on how they would raise their children. Resumar was just as much her son, just as much Anja and Aricia's son even though Dysea was the mother of his birth. The five of them... they had doted on each other when they were pregnant... almost as if they were all pregnant at the same time. Yes... the five of them were lovers... and they would not pause when it came to pleasuring each other in any way. It was not something For'mya had seen herself doing just twenty-eight years ago, but now she couldn't imagine her life without all of them. Yet after hearing Resumar's words just now, For'mya realized that Aricia's words to all of them rang so true. They were not only dear lovers but they were also the very best and truest of friends. They always laughed at the rumors that abound about who the King favored most of all, for they all knew that Martin loved each of them just as intensely as the other. And they loved him just as intensely back.

For'mya smiled as she looked at him. "There is nothing I would not do to safeguard those I love Resumar. Just as your father and any of your mothers would do. I would endure a life of solitude and pain to insure that those I love were safe. We all would and that is where our power as a family lays my son. We have our disagreements and arguments, no family is without them, but in the end... what has your father instilled in all of you... in all of us?"

"Blood before all else." Resumar stated softly.

For'mya nodded slowly. "Blood before all else. No matter the pain that may be caused, no matter the reasons behind it, it is never intentional and must always be forgiven."

"Will I find a love like you share with father?" Resumar asked softly.

For'mya laughed softly. "Your father told me something shortly after we were married in the traditional elven ceremony on Elear. Before he got drunk with my father." She said with a smile remembering that time. "He told me that when a Leonidas loves, they love without shame or regard for what others will think or say. They love unconditionally. He proved this when your mother Isabella finally joined with us. We would do anything... anything at all for each other. Andro and Carina have only continued this. You and your brothers and sisters will as well, as will you when you discover who it is you are to love in this life. Eliani has already discovered half of her heart with Nyla, and I believe both of them will find the second half sooner rather than later."

"Is that a yes?" Resumar asked with a smirk.

For'mya laughed and leaned up to kiss his cheek. "Yes Res... that is a yes." She stated as his arms hugged her closely.

The crew members of MJOLNIR'S HAND went about their duties as mother and son embraced and they smiled knowingly. The men and women of this ship also shared another of their King's traits, and that was the extreme distaste for politicians with very few exceptions. Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos was not one of those exceptions and he was avoided at all costs. Something that Laustinos was about to mention to For'mya as he stepped out into the landing bay and saw her embracing Prince Resumar. He frowned as he saw them wearing the standard matte black Mark IV ArmorPly uniforms with the crimson capes dangling from their shoulders. He had expected her to come dressed in proper formal attire and Prince Resumar in full dress uniform. He took a deep breath and watched as Prince Resumar released her and she reached up to adjust something on the Prince's shoulder. Laustinos saw him chuckle softly as she whispered to him. The last thirty-six hours had been nothing short of complete boredom with two meetings with Queen For'mya and her asking him specific questions and insisting he give her very specific answers. Many of the questions did not even pertain to the actual Trade Negotiations, but more towards what he knew about the Kavalian people, which was not very much and how they had contacted the Union leaders to arrange this meeting. It almost seemed as if she had been testing him in some manner and it was something he did not appreciate.

Laustinos stepped up behind them and took a deep breath. "My Queen. Prince Resumar." He stated.

Resumar grunted at his greeting as For'mya turned slightly to look at him a small smile on her face from Resumar's actions. "Deputy Laustinos." She stated calmly. "It appears that the captain of the NOVA-Class Envoy ship was under the impression he was in a hurry. We seem to be meeting with our guests a full day earlier. I wonder where he got that information."

"Yes... I was just made aware of it my Queen." Laustinos spoke quickly.

"I'm sure." For'mya said turning her attention back to Resumar's crimson cape.

"My Queen... I noticed that you... you shifted the entire Kavalian delegation to a totally different section of the ship than what I had directed the crew to do." Laustinos spoke.

For'mya nodded. "Yes I did." She said smoothing out the crimson cape on Resumar's shoulder one last time before turning to look at him fully. "You assigned them quarters on deck twelve Laustinos."

"Yes my Queen." Laustinos said. "So?"

Resumar looked at Laustinos with his dark eyes now. "You don't know much about the LEONIDAS II-Class Strike Cruisers do you Deputy Prime Minister?" He asked.

"No. I have never been on one before this trip. What difference does that make? Deck twelve is central to the ship." Laustinos said quickly. "They are our guests Prince Resumar and we should treat them that way."

Resumar shook his head. "The port section of deck twelve holds the secondary weapons magazines for the aft Mark 22B Launchers Deputy Prime Minister." Res told the man. "Deck twelve also houses redundant power system controls for a full third of the ship. Why exactly would we put them there? Yes... I understand they are our guests Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos. However, giving our guests access to sensitive and secure areas of this ship is just plain stupid.”

“What my son is trying to say Laustinos is that due to your unfamiliarity with this class ship we simply made adjustments to your sleeping arrangements.” For’mya spoke with a smile. Resumar had about as much patience for arrogant politicians as his father and brothers did it seemed. Andro and Arrarn both had already had major confrontations with senior politicians who thought to impress someone or other while they traveled on the SCIMITAR. Neither of those confrontations ended well for the politician. When they had complained to Sa’sur about this she had laughed at them in their faces.

“The Kavalian delegation is now on deck six, closer to the mess lounge on the port side and the observation rooms as well. We will meet with them there once they are settled into their quarters.” For’mya spoke.

“We are trying to manage Trade Talks my Queen.” Laustinos spoke looking at the data pad he held in his hand and using it to run through a schematic of the ship. “You have... you have put them on the same deck as the Durcunusaan barracks!” He said looking at her.

“Did I?” For’mya asked as her dark eyes narrowed and she folded her hands behind her back. “Oh my... I wonder why I would do that.”

Laustinos’s eyes narrowed. “My Queen you...”

“Res... why don’t you go see what is keeping Cemath and Aurith. They should be here with us. I swear those two argue more than any brother and sister I have ever known.” For’mya said turning to look at him. Resumar smiled and nodded, then took a last look at Laustinos and grunted before heading for the large lift along the wall.

“My Queen... you are... you are bringing your dragons down here?” He asked aghast at this development.

For’mya nodded as she turned back to him, Resumar’s words filling her with warmth and love. “Prince Resumar and I are bonded to dragons Laustinos. They go where we go. You know this just as well as I do.” She stated taking a couple of steps closer to him. “Is that going to be a problem?”

“My Queen... Lady For’mya it is well known that the Kavalians fear dragons.” He stated quickly. “Why... why would we greet them with dragons beside us? I would think we want to make them as comfortable as possible.”

Since being turned For’mya had developed a unique and powerful skill within Mindvoice that very few people knew about. Thr’won and Helen called it Clairsentience. It was a unique ability to be able to sense things from simply reaching out and feeling everything around her. It worked sometimes with physical touch as well, but often times she simply had to feel a shift or difference in the essence of life around her to know what was happening. She had always been a good judge of character and people and when Martin had changed her, those perceptions and abilities to read people increased nearly a thousand fold. She couldn’t read a person’s mind, but she could almost always tell when someone was lying, even without using her wolf senses to detect the adrenalin dump into their system. It was similar to Dysea’s skill of precognition, and while Dysea had no real control over her ability or premonitions, For’mya at least could direct her abilities in a reasonable fashion of sorts.

At the moment she could feel Laustinos trying very hard to save face and salvage what he considered to be his moment to impress Dysea.

“And we will make them as comfortable as possible.” For’mya answered very calmly. “However, we will not change who we are because we do not wish to offend a species that launched an unprovoked attack against this Union. A species that is also currently at war with the Vampire High Coven, and a species that is recognized as having no greater love for us than they do the vampires of the High Coven.”

“My Queen... you...”

“It won’t work you know.” For’mya said softly.

“What won’t work my Queen?”

“I came on this mission for two reasons.” For’mya stated. “The first was to insure that Union interests are met above all else. Approving this Trade Delegation with the Kavalians was a colossal mistake Laustinos. Whatever the reason they are coming here... it is not to sell us berries for our wine. If you had thought to inquire of others before granting them what they wanted you might know this. You were led unwittingly into their trap and played right into their hands. And this happened because of the second reason I am here. You were thinking with your cutius and not your brain.” For’mya saw his eyes widen just a little bit.

“My Queen... I...”

For’mya shook her head. “No... you will listen to me. You make it painfully obvious to even the dullest individual that you desire Dysea in the worst way. It shows in your mannerisms and the way you act around her. We are the wives and mates of the most powerful Alpha male wolf in the entire Lycavorian Union Laustinos. We do not want nor do we need the attentions of another male, for none of them will ever compare to what we now have. Your attempts at trying to get Dysea alone for talks and meetings and such... you didn’t actually think this has not been noticed did you? And then you go off hitting Dysea with your pitiful male aura while Martin Leonidas sat at the same table?” For’mya shook her head slowly. “Did common sense suddenly leave you Laustinos? If Martin Leonidas was any less a man you would be dead right now for such an action, you do realize that don’t you?”

“My Queen... that is not...” Laustinos stammered and a wave of For’mya’s hand cut him off.

“No... do not attempt to deny it or push it aside.” For’mya spoke. “I came on this mission because if Dysea or any of the others had come, they would have dressed you down thoroughly and made you look the fool. And they would have done so in much harsher tones and would not have cared who they did it in front of. I came on this mission to try and explain to you what we all see happening. Deia... Deia seems to think that you have great potential Laustinos... but this infatuation you appear to have with Dysea must end. She is the first Martin Leonidas turned, and she has been with him longer than any of us and that includes Aricia, who is his Anome as you well know. There is nothing in this universe, living or dead, nothing... which could ever pull her away from him. Nothing that could ever pull any of us from him. Certainly not you, no matter what you think you may have accomplished or how much of a ladies man you consider yourself to be. You will not have her Laustinos. Ever. She does not desire you, she never has and she most certainly never will. Fantasizing about your King’s mate is one thing Laustinos, but actively pursuing her is quite another.” For’mya could sense the indecision and anger within him easily and she stepped back. “Take my words to heart Laustinos. They will save you a large amount of embarrassment and possibly pain in the future if you insist on continuing down this road you are on. You thought to impress Dysea by approving this Trade Delegation for the Kavalians and showing what an accomplished politician you are; you thought to make a name for yourself and by doing so you allowed an enemy into our midst and put Deia and the King in a very bad situation. Not to mention now Dysea thinks you are a complete idiot for even doing something like this. We may be elves Laustinos... but even as elves our patience is not totally boundless. Dysea’s patience with you is just about gone. I will allow you to remain on the forefront of these talks for now...”

“You will allow...” Laustinos started to speak with anger in his voice. “My Queen I am the...”

For’mya nodded. “Yes Laustinos... I will allow. Do not forget that I am also Queen. I speak with five voices now Laustinos, those of myself and my fellow Queens and unlike Martin Leonidas we will no longer give you any more chances. We will no longer tolerate your foolish attempts to win something that is not yours, never was and never will be. You will either change your ways or we will see to it that you find yourself on the most remote outpost we have. There you can play politician with whatever creatures may inhabit that particular nubous settlement!” For’mya hissed angrily, even while her face was unchanged. “Am I making myself very clear Deputy Laustinos?”

Laustinos nodded his head slowly, his face hardening. “Yes my Queen.”

“You may conduct these talks as you see fit... and I will only intervene when I feel it is necessary, if I feel the security interests of the Union are in question. You will promise them nothing until we have returned to Earth and Deia and other senior officials can participate in the talks as well. Is that clear?” For’mya said.

Laustinos glared at her doing his best to hide his shame and anger. Not for what he had been doing... but that he had gotten caught doing it. “As you order Queen For’mya.” He stated in a neutral voice.

For’mya nodded and caught the hand motion of the Durcunusaan Officer signaling her that the transport was inbound into the landing bay. “Good... we will greet them as we greet all visiting guests to the Union. We will hold preliminary talks in the conference lounge on deck six after they have been shown to their quarters and allowed to freshen up, and we will include First Secretary Stenys as well. He will be accompanying them and he has some knowledge of the Kavalians that I wish to pick his brain about.”

Laustinos looked at her. “He is only a First Secretary Lady For’mya.” Laustinos spoke quickly. “He has not sat in on Trade talks in the past.”

“Yes... I know. There is a first time for everything however, and he has shown an interest in taking more of a role in Trade talks as a whole.” For’mya glared at him. “And he is not trying to get into the pants of my fellow Queen.” She snarled.

For’mya turned slowly, away from Laustinos’s stunned face, as an alarm claxon began to sound indicating a ship was approaching the landing bay. She had no doubts that no matter what she had just told the man, none of what she had conveyed to him had or would sink in. For’mya had given it her best shot however and now she would let the chips fall where they would. If she or one of her lovers and fellow Queens did not act then For’mya had no doubts that Martin most certainly would inform him of the folly of his actions, in very blunt and painful terms he would remember the rest of his life. If he even survived. For’mya had witnessed first hand on more than one occasion just how very possessive Martin Leonidas was of all of them. How Laustinos ever thought that Dysea... or any of them for that matter... how they could be even remotely interested in another male after having tasted Martin Leonidas was beyond her. Perhaps it was a male ego thing. Regardless... For’mya knew that Laustinos would do something that would cost him not only his job, but quite a bit of pain as well if she was any judge of character.

Jalersi never took her blue eyes off For’mya as they exited the small transport craft and followed Stenys towards the hatchway lined with who she knew just from their uniforms were the famed Lycavorian Union Durcunusaan soldiers. The Wolves of the Blood as they were sometimes called. The elite forces of the Union. No one knew exactly how many of them there were, but they were constant shadows wherever any of the Royal family went. It was rumored that they were mentally conditioned to eliminate at least twenty of their enemies before they fell in battle. They were the one group that Pusintin told her to avoid at all costs because too little was known of what they could actually do and they conversed mainly in the ancient Lycavorian language which no Kavalian had the linguistic skills for, and Pusintin had never bothered to learn.

The blond haired elf female stood perfectly still, her hands clasped in front of her, the light weight black body armor conforming to every curve of her elven figure. Her firm breasts were not large Jalersi saw, not like the other Queens of the Union who all appeared to be rather healthy in that regard at least in the images she had seen. Her legs were long for her height however which Jalersi estimated as five foot seven or eight. Her golden blond hair shimmered in the lighting of the landing bay and cascaded well past her shoulders. The crimson cape she wore was trimmed in gold and dropped from the tops of her shoulders and brushed lightly on the deck of the landing bay. This was the second Elven Queen For’mya. Known for her abilities as a pilot and often times as a mediator as well. Slow to anger, but when her breaking point was reached, she was a hellcat to say the least.

Jiss and Matuarr walked slightly behind her, Athani walking beside Matuarr. Athani had not spoken to her sister except for one or two words sentences since discovering she had been given to Qurot when this operation was complete. She had in fact avoided almost all contact with her, remaining in the quarters they had been given and only coming out to eat. This did not really sadden Jalersi because she had done so much to keep her sister out of Qurot’s hands for so long. Having Pusintin take her for the last years allowed Jalersi and her mother to see if any other suitors would come forward. While Pusintin thoroughly enjoyed having her sister’s ass and mouth, he did it less frequently than Jalersi would have liked. Pusintin said Athani was different, and while she might have cried out in sexual abandon during their times, she still fought the sensations within her that his aura generated. Pusintin said he preferred his wife and mate for she actually enjoyed their sessions together. Pusintin’s words had inwardly made Jalersi sing in joy. He could have taken another female if he so chose, it was not uncommon within their culture for a superior male to do this. That he had not done this only made Jalersi love him even more.

Athani chose to wear a teal blue jumpsuit that hugged her body like a second skin. Her blond hair was flowing around her face and shoulders, her blue/green eyes void of any emotion. She kept her two meter long tail free, a special slot in the fabric of her clothes cut for it, but the thin member was wrapped around her leg three times to keep from being too widely noticed. Jalersi had chosen to wear a yellow dress that was cut up one tanned leg and gave quite a view of her large breasts. She wore a necklace given to her by Pusintin after ten years of being together and dangling earrings he gave to her after the birth of their oldest son Karun. Their son walked proudly and confidently just behind and to Jalersi's left, both he and Qurot choosing to wear their military uniforms. Karun was tall and proud just like his father, and incredibly handsome Jalersi had to admit. She looked forward in seeing how many Lycavorian females he could swoon with his good looks and charm.

Stenys slowed to a stop directly in front of For'mya and bowed his head slightly in a show of respect to her position.

"Queen For'mya... it is a distinct pleasure to meet you once more." He stated seeing Laustinos's eyes grow a little wider at this knowledge as For'mya reached out to take his offered hand.

For'mya smiled. "It has been six years Stenys. I see you have worked on your tan in that time."

Stenys's laugh was genuine and nodded his head. "Indeed Milady." He straightened back up and motioned quickly to Jalersi. "I present the Emissaries from Prefect Keleru'Puata and the KFI to you. This is Jalersi'Puata, oldest daughter to the Prefect and leader of this distinguished delegation."

Jalersi stepped up to her quickly and bowed her head in greeting. "It is a pleasure to meet you Lady For'mya. I hope our visit has not confused anything that may have been otherwise planned already." She spoke holding out her hand in what she knew was the universal gesture of greeting. She noticed For'mya didn't hesitate and took her offered hand immediately.

"I welcome you to the Lycavorian Union." For'mya spoke calmly, her face beaming and a smile decorating her features. "And no... your visit has confused nothing. We were a bit surprised by your request... but we welcome the opportunity to conduct talks and possibly form a more open relationship."

Jalersi met her smile and waved her hand behind her. "Allow me to introduce Senior Legislatures Jiss and Matuarr from the Kavalian Imperium Parliament. And my younger sister Athani'Puata."

For'mya nodded to the two Kavalian men and turned her eyes upon Athani who had stepped up next to her sister. "A pleasure to meet you." She said holding out her hand.

Athani took For'mya's offered hand with a bright smile. "It is an honor to meet you Lady For'mya." She stated quickly. "Your exploits during the Evolli War are well documented and known."

For'mya looked surprised at this and she smiled. "Thank you. How did..."

Athani almost blushed under her lightly tanned skin. "Many of our border settlements are able to pick up your Netnews channels due to their proximity to the border. I was able to review many reports that were recorded." She explained.

For'mya didn't let the smile fade from her face. She sensed there was more to this young woman than met the eye and it was not just the fact that she had let her tail grow to its full adult size even while the biogenic treatments removed all the hair on her body with the exception of her shiny blond tresses. It was well known that the Kavalians had used their extensive biogenics capabilities to change the appearance of many of their females. Armetus was sure it was so that they could blend in better with different species and be used as intelligence gatherers with their obvious female charms. Those Kavalian females who had undergone the biogenic treatments were all of distinguished beauty if the reports from Armetus were correct. Looking at Athani and Jalersi, For'mya saw that they were indeed very accurate. Kavalian women were also very similar to Lycavorian females, and they could be affected by the aura of a Lycavorian male For'mya had discovered, as well as affect him in a similar manner though with considerable less control. Aside from this information, there was very little they knew about actual Kavalian society and most of the information they had was centuries old. Athani's blue/green eyes were bright and held great intelligence in them, as well as something that For'mya could not quite place.

"I also present my oldest son Karun." Jalersi said after giving her sister a small glare motioning to where Karun stepped forward slightly and nodded his head to her. "As well as Senior Commander Qurot of the Kavalian Federation Imperium Military Forces."

Qurot stepped forward quickly, right up to For'mya, brushing past Athani and figuring his size and appearance would make the elf female back up in fear. He was slightly surprised when For'mya simply stood there and gazed at him with her dark brown eyes, no fear in them whatsoever. Qurot saw several of the Durcunusaan soldiers along the wall push away slightly and then stop. He took note of this and stopped his forward motion instantly while Jalersi stared at him with anger in her blue eyes.

"You have an impressive ship here!" He bellowed in an overbearing voice. "The security seems to be somewhat lax however."

For'mya smiled as she looked at him. The long, thick hair covering his face hid most of his expression but it was easy to see his eyes held nothing but cruelty in them. "What makes you say that Senior Commander?" She asked politely.

"You greet us with only a few handfuls of your soldiers." Qurot spoke looking at her. "I thought we were your vile enemies? I could attempt to kill you at this moment and your vaunted troops would be able to do nothing because they are so far away!"

"Qurot!" Jalersi hissed incredulous at his actions. "Qurot that is quite enough!" Jalersi barked stepping forward. "Lady For'mya, please forgive me. Qurot is not accustomed to being part of political negotiations. He..." She stated quickly.

"You think highly of your skills Senior Commander." For'mya spoke calmly, her hands still clasped in front of her. "This is King Martin Leonidas's ship. My mate and husband's ship. The security may seem lax to you... however I assure you it is not. We do not feel the need to have bodyguards everywhere we go. This is supposed to be a meeting of political delegations, and greeting you with a full complement of troops is not conducive to political gatherings. As for killing me..." For'mya's eyes grew just a little darker and narrow and she smiled. "That would not have happened. The Durcunusaan soldiers you see against the wall will not need to move from where they are for they know as I do, the next step you took towards me would have seen you incinerated where you stood."

Qurot froze instantly when he heard the low rumbling growl slightly behind his head and he saw Jalersi's eyes grow wide in fear as she stumbled back in terror. He turned his head very slowly making no sudden moves and then he saw the broad sapphire scales of a dragon snout, only inches from him, piercing golden eyes glaring at him like he was its next meal. The dragon was huge and he turned fully, moving very slowly as breath from the dragons nostrils passed over him, the warm air across his fur sending shivers of terror down his spine. Qurot, as with all senior officers within the KFI, had received extensive training in order to be able to tame the inbred fear his people had of these beasts. At this very moment, that training was escaping him however. His dark eyes could detect everyone within their party backing away slowly; real fear in their eyes with the exception of Karun who had instinctively snatched his mother's arm as well as Athani's and was shielding them with his body. Athani had stumbled and dropped to the deck of the ship in surprise at Karun's move.

The soft laughter from behind them caused Athani to whirl quickly, Jalersi and Karun matching her movement and they too froze in their spots as their eyes fell upon the dark green scaled beast behind them, his yellow/gray eyes staring at them. Athani's eyes grew wider, but not because of the enormous beast in front of her. Her eyes grew wide when she saw the young man casually leaning up against the front foreleg of the green scaled dragon. He wore similar body armor to the elven Queen For'mya, as well as the crimson cape. His tall muscular form was evident even under the conforming body armor.

"Aurith... why don't you give Senior Commander Qurot enough space to take a breath." Resumar spoke as he folded his muscular arms across his chest. "He is only feeling the waters so to speak. Isn't that what Eliani says?"

I believe she says it's testing the waters. Cemath's voice spoke as he canted his huge head to look at his bonded brother.

Resumar looked up at his bonded brother's head. "Yeah... testing the waters. That's it." He said. "Thanks Cemath."

A pleasure Res.

Qurot watched as Aurith glared at him for a few moments longer before blinking and drawing her head back and then deftly maneuvering her huge body around him to cross the short distance to where For'mya still stood. Qurot turned slowly once more as Jalersi and the others watched the sapphire scaled beast move past the elven Queen, who reached out and let her fingers caress Aurith's well-developed mid-section as she turned around behind For'mya and settled to the deck. Aurith stuck her head and neck out far enough that it was only a meter from For'mya's shoulder. No one had heard the massive beasts approach them from behind, and the members of the Kavalian delegation stood rigidly still unable to move.

"I found them mother." Resumar spoke from where he stood. "They were arguing over the last Behemoth bone in the dragon den. We left pretty quickly and the stewards hadn't had a chance to restock."

For'mya turned and looked at Aurith with a smile meant to scold her. It was something For'mya had never been able to pull off with her Bonded Sister. "Aurith?"

I had it first For'mya! Aurith exclaimed pulling her eyes from the Kavalian and meeting For'mya's gaze.

I called dibs on it when we came aboard! Cemath snapped from where he too was resting on the deck, his limbs cocked under him ready to spring into action.

Called dibs! What is that? Now you sound like Eliani and Tharua! Only they say that! Aurith barked out. I had it first!

For'mya couldn't help but chuckle at their antics and she shook her head as she turned back around and looked at Jalersi. Laustinos had a look of utter horror on his face at what had just happened and Stenys wore a smile grin as he helped several of the other Kavalian females to their feet in the rear of the party.

"Please... forgive them." For'mya said moving several steps and reaching for Jalersi and taking her hands. "They are brother and sister... and they tend to disagree over some of the silliest things."

Jalersi, Karun and Athani watched as Resumar moved from where he was leaning up against Cemath to stand next to Qurot. Athani watched him more carefully still as he moved, the confident and graceful proportions of his body, and the way he carried himself. He was the equal to Qurot in height, though Qurot had him in thickness. Athani however did not want to judge him by his size for she knew better. Qurot was larger than Pusintin as well, yet Jalersi's mate had destroyed Qurot in a sparing match many years ago. This new man looked to be in superb physical condition, no doubt a product of the Spartan training.

Mother? He had called For'mya mother Athani realized. This was Prince Resumar! This was the King's second oldest son. Athani Puat had done far more research into the Lycavorian Union than anyone she knew of outside of the military. She absorbed information about the Union like a sponge, taking in all the reports from civilian settlements along their borders that had been taken from the Union's own Netnews channels. She was well aware of the freedom that the females within the Union had, and how they could aspire to anything they wanted. Athani had been planning her actions for years now, ever since that confrontation with her sister before the Coven war began. She wanted more from her life, as so many Kavalian females did, as so many of their people did on a whole she knew. She had studied the dossiers of the entire Leonidas clan, and while a great deal of information was not available due to the privacy they appeared to covet so much, Athani had discovered all she really wanted to know. She knew that regardless of who had birthed them, the children of King Leonidas called all five of his Queens mother. They made no distinction between them. Prince Resumar was almost as well known as his older brother who was Crown Prince. He had fought with much distinction during their war with the Evolli and had earned several decorations for bravery and courage. The Union Netnews channels never spoke of a female or prospective females when they spoke of him, and Athani was looking at her ticket to more than she had ever dreamed. And it helped quite a bit that he was so very delicious looking.

Resumar waited until Qurot turned his head and looked at him. "You still with us big guy?" Res asked with some humor in his voice.

Qurot snarled dangerously. "I am fine." He spat. "The beast... the beast caught me by surprise."

Resumar laughed softly. "Yeah... I gathered that."

For'mya squeezed Jalersi's hands within hers making her meet For'mya's gaze. "We... we did not know there would be dragons here." Jalersi almost gasped.

"My apologies. Resumar and I are bonded to Aurith and Cemath. They accompany us wherever we go. I should have warned you... or you should have been told prior to arriving onboard." For'mya stated turning quickly to where Laustinos stood. She turned back to Jalersi. "You are in no danger truly."

Jalersi looked at her and took a deep breath, pulling her slim hands away from the elven Queen's grasp. "Thank you... I'm fine."

Karun made no move to help Athani to her feet as he stayed very close to his mother. Resumar had stepped away from Qurot and turned seeing her still on the deck. With barely a second thought he moved right up to her and held out his hand to her. Athani looked up into his face and felt a myriad of very strong emotions sweeping through her. She placed her hand in his, the warmth of his skin sending electric tingles through her as he helped her to her feet. She looked up into his face as he towered over her, his dark eyes almost mesmerizing.

"Thank... thank you." She said softly.

Resumar Leonidas stared at this Kavalian female for a long moment and inhaled deeply. He knew of how the Kavalians treated their females and he had no desire to cause any more issues with these people, but as Athani's tangerine like scent wafted into his nostrils he couldn't help but stare at her for a few seconds longer than he should have. Athani, for her part, was also feeling new and exciting sensations race through her. Sensations she had not expected.

"You're welcome." He spoke finally.

Cemath had felt the jump in his Bonded Brother's heartbeat and pulse and he stepped forward slowly. [Res?] He asked. [Are you ok?]

Resumar turned and looked at him. [I'm fine.] He replied nodding his head.

Athani watched as Resumar turned his head to the green scaled dragon beast and nodded quickly. She felt something, the feather like caress of a trembling in her head and she gasped out loud and saw his face turn back to her. "You... you speak to him with your mind? You... you understand each other?" She breathed softly, her voice a soft whisper that only those nearby heard, yet no one comprehended.

Resumar smiled and nodded. "Dragons are just as intelligent as you or I." He replied quickly in a similar whisper. "They simply have evolved to the point where they communicate with each other and with us using their minds. We call it Mindvoicing."

"They... they understand us... us speaking?" Athani asked still somewhat amazed at this revelation. Her people had always thought that the dragons within the Union were nothing more than beasts of war. No one among the higher command had ever discussed the possibility that they might actually be intelligent lifeforms. "They truly understand?"

Resumar nodded quickly. "Oh yes. Cemath and Aurith are brother and sister. They argue over the same things that any brother and sister would."

Her eyes are unique brother. Cemath spoke extending his head out closer to Resumar's shoulder to peer at Athani.

Resumar smiled. "Cemath says... he says you have unique eyes."

Athani's blue/green eyes grew a little wider and she looked over Resumar's shoulder and stared at the huge head of the dark green Cemath. "Thank... thank you. I... I think."

Resumar heard Cemath chuckle within Mindvoice. "Don't worry he..."

"Athani!" Jalersi's voice barked from where she stood with For'mya. "Get away from him sister!"

Athani turned quickly looking at her and she paused only a second to look back at Resumar before moving promptly to stand beside her sister.

"I think all of us have had enough excitement." For'mya was saying. "Allow me to show you to your quarters and after you have freshened up we can meet in a lounge that we have reserved for your use and begin preliminary talks."

Jalersi had quickly regained her composure. "I apologize for Qurot's actions." She said. "They were uncalled for and..."

For'mya shook her head. "An apology is not needed. This is as new to us as it is to you." She said. She motioned to the large hatchway. "Please... First Secretary Stenys transmitted the requirements on how you prefer your quarters to be and I have made sure they are just as you like them."

Resumar reached up over his head and scratched Cemath's powerful lower jaw and his eyes followed Athani as she left the landing bay behind her sister. She glanced back quickly and saw him doing this before she disappeared into the hatchway as well.

Wow! Res spoke.

She... she had a tail brother. Cemath spoke.

Tail or no tail... did you see the backside that tail is attached too? Resumar spoke. She would be hot even with the hair that usually covers their bodies.

You are such a pervert Resumar! Aurith's voice echoed as she moved her large body over to settle to the deck beside her younger brother, their midsections touching just a little bit. Cemath had come from Torma and Isheeni's second clutch of eggs, as had Aradace. Aurith and Elynth had watched them come into this world and even helped them to shed their egg shells. It had been Aurith who had cleaned Cemath's scales for the first time while their mother washed Aradace and Elynth cleaned Renoli. Cemath, Aradace and their brother Renoli, who was now bonded to Andreus's oldest son as a Durcunusaan member, were very close and they endlessly stuck the needle to each other. Aurith however, she was very protective of Cemath and him of her because of all the time they spent together and by default they were protective of Resumar and Denali as well.

I just call them like I see them. Resumar spoke with a smile. And she was certainly more beautiful than I expected their females to be. Her sister too.

I certainly scared that man didn't I? Aurith spoke with humor.

Cemath chuckled within Mindvoice. I thought he was going to void in his pants sister.

Resumar stepped up between them with a smile. His thoughts raced for a few moments then he looked at them. That he even attempted something like that is the first sign they are not here for what they say they are here for.

I concur. Aurith spoke. We should tell the Durcunusaan Commander onboard to watch them closely.

Resumar shook his head. No... that would only lead to more problems and unwanted encounters. We'll stick with the security plan that father gave to me. Mother is aware of it and she will adjust it accordingly as she sees fit. I'm more interested in this Qurot fellow. And the one she called Karun.

He is half Lycavorian brother. Cemath stated.

Res nodded slowly. Yeah... and that means he's my Uncle's son. It also means we are cousins. And that the woman in charge of this little group is my Uncle's mate. I don't know if father knew who was going to be coming, but I don't think he had any idea it would be his blood.

You don't think he will care about this do you Resumar? Aurith asked. This Karun? His actions indicate he is more Kavalian than Lycavorian. He did not attempt to help the female up from where he pushed her down.

Res shook his head. Not in the least it would appear. He pushed off from Cemath's front leg again. Let's get up to the conference lounge and make sure everything is set up.

GYTHEIO

CRANAE ISLAND

ANDRO AND SADI'S VILLA

Sadi was very much lost in her own realm of otherworldly delights as she ground her hips and drenched pussy down on the rumpled sheets of their bed. Andro had promised to ravage her and fulfill his pledge of three days of exquisite carnal pleasures this night, and he had more than lived up to his promise. They were barely in the door of their villa after returning from the State Dinner before he was tearing her dress from her and ramming his massive cock deep inside her willing body. Even as he carried her to their bed, each step causing immensely delicious ripples of pleasure to course through her, Sadi was already lost to the sensations the incredible size of his cock and the power of his aura caused within her. Nearly four straight hours upon returning to their home and he had licked, nibbled, caressed and pounded her utterly senseless. This was not the same as what Malic had done on so many occasions, and the memories of those nights had been smashed aside forever on Sadi's very first night together with her handsome new mate. Androcles Leonidas did not simply thrust his huge cock into her reaching for his own gratification, he used his hands and lips and tongue to drive her nearly insane, even as his cock slammed into her with dominating power and control. Yes, he fucked her senseless, but he did it with such skill that it left Sadi craving more and more.

Now she was happily having her revenge upon her husband.

Sadi's right hand grasped the base of Andro's hugely thick cock, her left hand cupping and manipulating his large balls, as she was stuffing as much of his beautiful cock into her soft mouth as she could. She could taste herself on his substantial shaft, the veins throbbing and protruding under the skin. The searing heat of his cock only served to ignite her passions even more as her lips flew up and down his length, her warm tongue whipping back and forth, battering the thick vein that adorned the bottom of his entire length. She could not take him entirely into her throat no matter how much she tried, but she had many years in the future to practice and finally accomplish that goal. She didn't think Andro minded, as she was able to accommodate three quarters of his huge cock into her tight mouth. The straining of his neck muscles and the clenching of his abdomen, these were the signs that told Sadi she was doing just fine.

Sadi plunged her head down once more until her lips touched the top of her fist, which was wrapped tightly around the base of his cock, holding his thick shaft straight up for better access. Fully three quarters of Andro's twelve and a quarter inch cock became prisoner within her mouth and throat, and Sadi lifted her tear filled jungle green eyes to gaze up the expanse of his chiseled abdomen. She groaned in her own delight seeing the look of utter ecstasy on her mate's face. His changed eyes were open wide, his dual fangs fully extended, the veins in his neck bulging outward as his hands tore at the sheets of their bed. Sadi groaned in delicious pleasure as another shivering orgasm trembled through her body. Seeing the control she had over her beloved mate, how he responded to her ministrations, these things only served to prove to her even more that what they had was destined from the beginning of time. Exactly as the Feravomir had suggested. Seeing the absolute pleasure he was experiencing because of her, knowing that he felt the same things when giving her pleasure, this made Sadi's own passions and desire nearly double in intensity as she shuddered in her own orgasm. She could actually feel the pleasure she was giving him in her own mind, she could feel it just as surely as if she was experiencing it for herself. It was no different than when he tasted her and drove her to heights of rapture with his tongue. They felt each other's pleasure as if it was their own, and it only served to deepen the bond they had as Anomes.

A guttural groan escaped Andro's throat and Sadi knew then he was just on the edge. She prepared herself for what she knew was coming, what she so wanted and then she felt his huge cock swell even larger within the confines of her velvety throat. The muscles in his legs went rigid and his hips lifted off the surface of the bed. Sadi wanted to scream out her own delight as she felt his scorching hot come race up the length of his throbbing shaft and the first jet like eruption blasted into the back of her throat. His powerful orgasm, the sweet taste of his come on her tongue, this combined to send Sadi rocketing off into her own heavenly orgasm, the third she had experienced just in the twenty minutes she had spent feasting on Andro's beautiful cock. She held his exploding shaft at the thick base while her left arm wrapped underneath his powerful ass to hold him tightly in his current position. She had no intention of letting him escape her grasp for she wanted to drink every drop of his essence. She had to swallow quickly to keep up with the incredible amount of come he produced, but as it had been since the first time she had done this, not a drop got away from her skillful lips and tongue.

It was several moments before his muscular body collapsed back onto the bed, a light sheen of sweat covering his tanned skin, his breathing coming in great heaving gasps. Sadi kept him inside her mouth, lavishing attention on his shaft and the bulbous head, as she slowly dragged her lips up the entire length until just the head remained. Her attentions kept him from getting soft but as she released the head of his cock from within her lips she gasped for air and dropped her forehead to his lower abdomen. He was ready for more, and incredibly her body told her she was as well, but she felt Andro's hands grasp her shoulders gently and urge her upwards. This Sadi did, pausing only to lick the skin of his chest in a teasing manner, tickling his nipples and tasting the saltiness of his sweat. As she lifted her beautiful face to look at him, her cheeks still slightly red from exertion, Andro's lips covered hers and he rolled over, pulling her with him until he was on top of her and he deepened his kiss.

Sadi groaned in blissful heaven, meeting his kiss with every ounce of feeling and passion and desire for him within her. She knew he could taste himself on her lips and this fact hadn't made him pause in his actions. As kisses went, it was pretty much volcanic in nature, and she felt her passion inflame once more regardless of how tired and delightfully sore she was. Andro sensed this within her as well Sadi knew, and with exquisite slowness, he drew back from their kiss dipping his head enough to firmly nuzzle her cheek and ear and the side of her neck. Sadi gasped as his aura washed over her like a warm, comforting blanket, wrapping her within his embrace, even as he pulled her body closer to his. Sadi responded in kind, letting every portion of her female aura release and respond to her mate's attention. She felt him draw back slowly; lifting his face to gaze at her even as he pulled her body closer, and she slid her long legs up along his hips seductively.

"You... you are incredible." He gasped softly.

Sadi bit her bottom lip in delight and reached up to caress his cheek. "And you taste very yummy." She said.

Andro laughed softly. "Yummy?" He declared. "You've been hanging around my sister too much already."

Sadi laughed softly as well. "I do not find the prospect of spending as much time with your family as I can, daunting at all." Sadi spoke with a small smile as she reached up to trace the ridges of his eyes. "I was talking with them tonight. Eliani and Nyla. I think... I think they truly desire Malic Andro." She said. "They were talking about him tonight you know. He was at the South Entrance acting as an usher."

Andro nodded. "I know."

"He... he is not a bad man my love." Sadi said quickly. "Not inside. Do not hold what you saw with me against him."

"Oh I don't." Andro answered immediately. "If I did I would not have selected him to be part of our security force that will train the Coven riders. And if there is anyone who can make the real Malic step forward, it is Eliani and Nyla." He said.

Sadi looked at him keenly tilting her head slightly. "There is something else about him you see isn't there? I can feel that you think this."

"Perhaps." Andro answered with a shrug. "Only time will reveal that to be true or not. You are tired KertaGai."

Sadi shook her head as her fingers caressed his broad shoulders and down his arms now. "Not really. Not physically anyway. So much has happened in the last few days, my awareness of things has grown so much Andro, and I am just a little drained. And we need to talk about what the Feravomir told me today my love."

Andro reached up and put a finger to her soft lips. "Yes... I know." He said. "But first let me make you some tea. It is a special blend of natural herbs that my mother Dysea makes and you will feel rejuvenated after only one mug. Then we can sit and talk." Andro tightened his grip on her and rolled to the side until he put his feet on the floor. Sadi laughed as she wrapped her arms and legs around his body and he got to his feet.

"Do you not wish me to wear clothes?" Sadi asked humorously.

Andro grinned. "What for? No one will come here at this hour. If they do I will shield you from view with my own body."

Sadi grinned. "Then who will shield you from view. I don't wish for anyone to see you in all your glory." Sadi kissed him. "Well... almost anyone. And that is what we need to talk about my love."

"I know." Andro said as he turned and headed for the door. "And we will. First we have the tea."

"She said we should pursue that?" Andro exclaimed.

They were lounging on one of the couches in the main living area, both of them still naked. Andro's back was up against the arm of the couch and Sadi rested between his legs, her back leaning up against his chest. One of her tanned legs was draped over his and she held the mug of still steaming tea in her hands. Andro had been right and after only several sips she felt more relaxed and calm and rejuvenated.

"She said we should not be afraid to pursue that if it feels right." Sadi told him. "She said the joy of us finding each other was more than likely why we did not sense it before. But now... now that she is here and we both have seen her, it is becoming more pronounced. She said it will only grow stronger."

"I have only just found you KertaGai." Andro spoke. "I... I do not want to explore what could or could not be there. I have you. That is enough for me."

Sadi nodded and shifted her body so that she was lying on her side and she looked at him. "It is more than enough for me as well my love... never doubt that. But what if the Feravomir is right?"

"What do you mean?"

"What if what we feel is part of something more. Something greater Andro." Sadi asked softly. "I know you are drawn to her. I can see it in your mind my love. I know you are drawn to her because I am drawn to her just as strongly. We felt the pull she had for us at Gallais's that night. She... she is the one from our dreams Andro. Can we just dismiss that? As our dreams finally brought us together again, as they sustained our love until that happened, do we just dismiss them now because they involve her as well?" Sadi leaned her head forward and nuzzled her mate's cheek with her nose. "You know as well as I do that she has shared those dreams my love. All of them. For me as well as you. How do we know she has not had similar dreams of us?"

"Sadi... we did not meet her until two days ago." Andro stated. "How could..."

"The same way we have been in each others dreams all this time Andro." Sadi spoke softly. "She has been there with us as well. Do you deny what I know you feel?"

Andro shook his head slowly. "No."

"I feel it too Andro. That void, that emptiness inside. Now that we have discovered each other and come together I can feel it so much stronger." Sadi spoke. "Far more than I ever have in the past. I know you have seen my thoughts, my memories, you know Teeria and I shared something long ago?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"This is different Andro... the desire for her is so much more vivid and powerful. Far beyond what I felt for Teeria that night." Sadi said. "My dreams of you and her, of us when we were together, it was almost as if it was actually happening. It feels like..."

"Like a piece is missing." Andro said. "And we have found it."

Sadi nodded quickly. "Yes. She is to be that piece Andro. I know it. I can feel it. Hers is the loneliness and pain that we feel just under the surface. It is not ours... so it has to be hers. And if we can feel her emotions so strongly, how can we just discharge that as if it does not mean something?"

"We can't." Andro spoke. "I felt our awareness increase at Gallais's when she was there. And tonight at the dinner."

Sadi nodded. "It was like a fog lifting wasn't it?"

Andro nodded. "Yes."

"I never believed in fate or destiny until after that night on the island Andro." Sadi told him. "But as I studied under the Feravomir I came to see that sometimes our paths are laid before us for reasons we can not explain. The Feravomir said as much today. Yet even then..." Sadi looked at him and reached up to stroke his cheek. "Even then I did not truly believe it until that day I saw you on the airfield. You never questioned it my love, but until that day... until that day I saw you... that is when I truly believed." Sadi rested her head against his chest. "The Feravomir told me that when you and Elynth touched me that night on the island it not only opened my mind, but it triggered my own Mindvoice abilities that up until then had been lying dormant. Ever since... ever since that day Andro I have felt you and Elynth within me. Perhaps I denied it at first... but not anymore. I feel her too Andro. She is part of us. She is meant to be part of us for some reason I can't explained. Just as we are meant for each other... she is meant for us as well."

"And the fact that she is part of the High Coven? That does not bother you?" He asked.

Sadi lifted her head and looked at him. "Is she part of the High Coven my love?" Sadi asked. "Or has she always been a part of us?"

Andro stared into her green eyes for a long moment. "She is married Sadi."

"To that fat pig ronnus?" Sadi exclaimed. "You don't believe she chose him do you? Did you see the way he groped her at dinner for all to see? I wanted to rip his throat out for the way he treated her!"

"It does not change the fact she has a husband." Andro spoke softly. "They are here for us to train them and their dragons. No matter... no matter how much I may want to..."

"Then you do desire her? Just as strongly as I do?" Sadi said. "And choose your words carefully my mate; we are Anomes and I will know if you are lying." She said with a smile.

Andro smiled. "Yes KertaGai. I do desire her. Just as strongly as I desire you. However unlike with you..." He leaned over and nuzzled her cheek and neck. "I can not simply claim her as my own no matter what I may feel. She is a vampire and they follow different customs and rules. Not to mention the political fallout if it is discovered the Crown Prince and Princess are having an affair with a Princess of the High Coven, who just happens to be married as well."

Sadi leaned back and looked at him oddly. "You don't actually believe all that nubous drivel you just exhaled do you?"

Andro chuckled. "No. It sounded good though."

Sadi slapped his powerful abdomen hard and leaned over to bit his shoulder. "Mida!" She spat playfully. She set the mug of tea on the table next to the couch and lowered her head to his chest feeling his arms encircle her. "What do we do?"

"We wait and see where things lead KertaGai." Andro said softly. "We can not be seen pursuing her Sadi, no matter what either of us feel. She... she needs to come to us. Then it will be different."

"And when she does Andro? She will come to us my love; you can feel that as surely as I can. When she does... then what do we do?" Sadi asked.

Andro tightened his grip on her. "Then we will act as wolves should when it comes to protecting what is ours. We will kill anyone who tries to take her away from us."

"Then I hope she comes to us soon, for I do not know how long I will tolerate that pig touching her as he does before I do rip his face off." Sadi growled.

"Yes... I do know the feeling KertaGai." Andro spoke.

“Helen said you would try to deny what you felt.” Sadi said softly. “Deny it because you thought I would be angry.”

Andro smiled. “KertaGai... I will never keep anything from you. I do not wish to fall under your wrath.”

Sadi chuckled. “Good. You just remember that and everything will be just fine.” She lifted her head and looked at him. “And while you are at it... I think you should do a little more body worshiping before we have to sleep. A few more hours should do. At least.”

Andro smiled at her. “At least a few hours.” He rose quickly with Sadi in his arms and waited until she had once more wrapped her arms and legs around him.

“So where do you plan on fulfilling your last few hours of pleasuring me Androcles Leonidas.” Sadi asked as calmly as she could given the fact she felt his cock already pressing against her opening at full mast.

Andro grinned. “I thought I would start in the kitchen...” His hands tightened on Sadi’s hips and he pulled her down, watching as her eyes rolled into the back of her head as he slammed home in one powerful lunge within her depths. “And... and then... see where we go from there.” He gasped out.

Sadi could only nod her head, lost in the exquisite feelings of being so completely filled.

MJOLNIR’S HAND

“...our proposal is very generous as it stands now,” Jalersi was speaking. “But feel free to ask any questions you may have in regards to it.”

For’mya sat at the head of the table, Laustinos and Stenys to her left, while Jalersi, Jiss, Matuarr and Athani occupied the seats to her right. As with all the newer LEONIDAS IIA-Class Strike Cruisers and the older models that had been extensively refitted; many of the rooms and corridors on MJOLNIR’S HAND were now accessible to dragons even of Torma’s size. Since only he, Jeth and Arzoal came close to that enormous size, Cemath and Aurith occupied one end of the conference room furthest from the table with little difficulty. Resumar stood in front of the huge view window, his back to the table as he gazed at the stars that were streaking by. The Kavalian delegation had all chosen to sit at the far end of the table closest to the door which kept them further away from the dragons. Cemath and Aurith thought this action extremely humorous. Athani was the only one to keep looking at them, while also continually looking very discretely at where Resumar stood.

Athani had not expected what she felt surging through her. She had made her decision long ago, and discovering that she was to be given to Qurot only made her advance her plans. She did not however, expect one of the Princes to be on the ship, and she most certainly did not expect to find herself so physically attracted to him. He hadn’t paused for a second to reach down and help her to her feet after Karun had shoved her aside, and his dark eyes were bright and captivating to say the least. He was easily six feet tall, perhaps a shade over that, and the black uniform and body armor that he wore conformed to what she could easily discern was a sculpted and muscular body. He acted like he was ignoring what was going on, but she had seen his head turn ever so slightly to look at the two dragons at different points during Jalersi’s presentation of their portion of the trade agreement. It also came as quite the shock that they were able to communicate with the dragons with their minds. Her father and Pusintin, all the military leaders in fact, none of them had this information. It was something she should have brought to her sister’s attention as soon as they were escorted to their quarters, something had stopped her however. Neither Jalersi nor any of the others in their party had taken note of her brief conversation with the Prince in regards to the dragons, and Athani found that feeling of knowing something no one else among her people did empowering.

The Prince had called the elven Queen mother, yet Athani saw no resemblance in features whatsoever. He in fact looked more like the images of the second elven Queen Dysea and it was easy to see who his father was with the strong jaw and stern features. This only enforced what Athani had gotten from the many Netnews reports and files she had read over the last years. The children of the Lycavorian King did not themselves make any distinction between who was their birth mother. They referred to all of them as mother.

For'mya nodded as she set the data pad Jalersi had given her down on the table. She reached forward to the metal container and poured herself a mug of Aricia's coffee. "May I offer you some coffee or tea?" She asked looking to Jalersi and then Athani.

"Tea would be very nice." Jalersi answered.

"Yes it would." Athani stated in reply turning to look at her.

For'mya smiled as she poured two mugs of the cinnamon smelling tea. She slid one across to Jalersi and held out the second mug for Resumar as he turned from the view window. "Gentlemen... please help yourselves." For'mya finished as she took her mug in her hands.

Jiss and Matuarr did not hesitate at this and began helping themselves to both coffee and tea. Qurot however reached out and held his hand in front of the mug Resumar was placing in front of Athani.

"In our culture... the man is served first." He snapped.

"Qurot!" Jalersi snapped softly.

Resumar looked at Qurot. "That's nice." He said evenly. "We do things differently here." He brushed Qurot's hand aside and placed the mug in front of Athani. He glanced at her face and saw her blue/green eyes gazing up at him for a brief instant before she looked down and took the mug in her hands.

"Thank you Prince Resumar." She said softly.

"Is it habit among the Union representatives to dismiss the cultures and traditions of a visiting delegation?" Qurot spoke his eyes going to For'mya.

"We respect the cultures and traditions of every species within the Union Commander." For'mya answered calmly. "It is a Spartan custom among the Union that the head of a visiting delegation is rendered service first, followed then by any females among their party. As I am sure you would expect us to honor your traditions within the bounds of your borders, you must honor ours while you are here. We do not begrudge you your beliefs Senior Commander, but we treat our females differently within the boundaries of the Union, and that is how we will treat them."

Qurot stared at her for several moments before nodding his head. "As you say." He finally spoke.

"Everything in regards to the trade details seems very much in order." For'mya stated. "I'm sure the minor details of the trade contract will be worked out by the individuals whose job it is to do such things among both our peoples. I am far more interested however, in the Kavalian request to open an embassy."

Jalersi met her eyes. "Is that not normal practice?" She asked.

For'mya nodded. "In most cases yes. However our two governments have had no contact in nearly twenty years. Not since your incursion into Union space and..."

"That was not a sanctioned operation by my father or the KFI. That was the work of a rogue officer within our military ranks." Jalersi spoke quickly. "We have apologized for that and attempted to make reparations. All of which were rebuffed."

"Yes... that was made very clear when it happened." For'mya spoke. "However that does not change the fact that it did indeed happen, sanctioned or not. Three thousand four hundred and thirty-five Union civilians lost their lives and..."

"Your King butchered twenty-five thousand of our troops in retaliation! He left no one alive! None!" Qurot exclaimed. "Is that not fair enough of a trade? You want more? What nonsense is this?"

"Qurot you will be silent!" Jalersi snapped.

"I will not! I..."

"Your troops..." Resumar spoke loudly causing everyone in the room to look at him as he walked around the table to stand so he could look at Qurot. "Your troops murdered seven hundred and nineteen men; women and children. Innocent civilians that were massacred when they refused to surrender their belongings to your troops or leave their homes. Your troops then used the civilian population that they did not kill and that remained as slave labor to build bunkers around civilian buildings you wrongly assumed my father would not attack. The colony had no strategic value in the least Senior Commander. None! There were no valuable resources to take or acquire. It had no defense fortifications except for rudimentary bunkers that could not have supported the entire population in case of an attack regardless. There are several thousand surviving witnesses who can tell you their stories if you like Commander. If this operation was unsanctioned as you suggest Commander Qurot, why do you appear to be defending those who perpetrated this crime so diligently? And make no mistake... it was a crime."

Athani sat in her chair trying to keep the look of astonishment from her face. These were facts she had never heard before regarding that attack. The only release of information put out by her father was that the Lycavorian Union had slaughtered their troops for blundering into their territory and attacking what they thought was a High Coven planet. Even though they knew the Kavalian Commander had gone rogue, this is what they told their people. The other thing that impressed her was that this Lycavorian Prince was actually speaking to Qurot in a manner that made it very clear he was not afraid of the man.

“Prince Resumar... I believe we all know what happened on the colony. We do not need to bring that distasteful event back into the present. It was unsanctioned as the Commander stated and...” Laustinos spoke up quickly getting to his feet.

Resumar shot Laustinos a glaring look. “I don’t recall including you in this conversation Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos!” He barked. “Sit your mida down!”

“Res!” For’mya’s soft voice echoed in the room and he turned his eyes quickly to where she sat. “Niob coi ter vada daanth.” (Now is not the time.)

Resumar took a deep breath and nodded his head slowly. “I apologize mother.” He spoke softly.

Athani saw him exhale evenly and move back around the table slowly. She did not know what his mother had told him for she had spoke in the ancient Lycavorian tongue, but whatever it had been the effect was immediate and calming.

For’mya leaned forward in her chair once more and looked at Jalersi. “As you can see, my son is very passionate about what he believes, as I’m sure all of you are as well. A request to open an embassy is not a trade agreement, and as I’m sure First Secretary Stenys has no doubt explained to you, that sort of request must be voted on by the entire Union Senate as well as be approved by the Prime Minister and the King.”

“Will King Leonidas allow an audience so that I can present our proposition to him personally Lady For’mya?” Jalersi said.

“I’m sure that could be arranged.” Laustinos began speaking. “He is...”

“Martin Leonidas is a busy man!” For’mya spoke up her dark eyes turning to look at Laustinos. His words died in his throat when he saw her glare. “I will make it known this is what you wish, but I can not guarantee what he will do. Officially or unofficially.” For’mya continued turning back to Jalersi. “I will speak to him on your behalf... I give you my word.”

“You are his Queen.” Athani spoke up now tearing her eyes from where Resumar stood. “Do you not have some sway over him?”

For’mya smiled. “Yes... however I and my fellow Queens have tried to convince him of many things through the years. Some of them worked... many more did not. Martin is very much anchored in his morals and values, and he will not bend them to accommodate something he does not believe personally. That is one of the reasons why we love him so.”

Jalersi nodded her head. “There has been much mistrust between our two peoples and my father is hoping this delegation can lead to the opening of more doors. So do I.”

For’mya smiled and got to her feet. “We have thirty-six hours to put aside politics and simply enjoy each others company and learn what we can before we reach Earth. I will make a secure communications array available for your use and I invite you to dinner tonight.”

“Here?” Jalersi asked.

“Oh no... we eat in one of the mess lounges with the crew.” For’mya spoke.

“You eat with underlings?” Karun gasped now.

“They are fellow crewmates and in many cases friends.” Resumar stated looking at his cousin. “They are not underlings. Their lives are no less important than ours.”

For’mya smiled. “Please... I’m sure Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos will be happy to see your back to your quarters. Dinner is served at nineteen hundred hours. I hope you will see fit to join us.”

Jalersi bowed her head slightly and then made to follow Laustinos out of the conference room. Athani glanced almost shyly at Resumar as she too made her way past him. She did not notice him inhale deeply of her scent as she passed. Qurot glared at him as he walked by and Resumar simply smiled at him.

For’mya watched as they filed out and Stenys stepped up to her as the door slid shut. She turned to face one of Armetus’s most senior political agents. “Talk to me Stenys.” She spoke.

“It is hard to fathom what their purpose is Lady For’mya.” He spoke in reply. “I can tell you this trade delegation is not their purpose for coming forward now. As I’m sure you and the King have already deduced this is simply a way for them to ascertain why the High Coven is on Earth.”

“So they’re lying through their teeth.” Resumar said as he came up to them.

Stenys chuckled. “Essentially Milord... yes I believe they are.” He said looking at Resumar. “It’s not very easy to pick out the adrenalin dump into their bodies if they should lie.” Stenys said. “Their scents are pungent and pure, but it’s almost as if they can now control such indications. I was thinking that perhaps Pusintin may have given them instruction in how to thwart our sense of smell in some respects. Perhaps to mask the adrenalin spikes in their bodies when they are lying.”

For’mya nodded. “No doubt.”

“I noticed the younger sister seemed surprised by the information you stated in regards to the settlement attack Prince Resumar.” Stenys spoke. “That would go along with the few reports we got out of Kavalian space right after it happened. The KFI shifted the entire blame to us for overreacting in many respects.”

“That doesn’t surprise me.” Res answered. “Qurot is trouble. His hatred for us is almost a palpable thing.”

Stenys nodded. “Yes. I would hazard a guess and say he was sent along to somehow tell us or show us the caliber of their soldiers and leaders now. I can think of no other reason for his presence here other than a means of intimidation. Something which he does not accomplish I might add.”

“We must stay vigilant.” For’mya spoke softly as she looked at them. “But we must also be courteous and respectful.”

“Do you think father will meet with them mother?” Resumar asked.

For’mya looked at him. “I don’t know. And I’m curious to know why she is so insistent upon that happening.” For’mya shook her head. “Let’s find out as much as we can in the next few hours and over dinner and then I will contact your father and see what he says. Though I hardly think he will be happy to know that his nephew and his brother’s mate are part of the delegation and that they want to meet with him.”

SPARTA

DURCUNUSAAN AIRFIELD

Andro looked at the forty-two remaining High Coven riders as they occupied chairs set up just inside the edge of the hanger. The sky outside was clear, the sun beating down on the tarmac brilliantly. The positioning of the chairs did not go unnoticed by many of the forty-two Coven riders. While all of them were purebloods and could still function and act even in direct sunlight, it was not something they went out of their way to expose themselves too. The sun could still kill them if they were left unprotected and without blood to replenish themselves. It was how the Kavalians had tortured and killed many of their kind during the war. Chaining them to the ground in a desert setting and watching as the direct sunlight cooked the flesh from their bones over a period of hours and days. To a vampire it was the most horribly painful way to die outside of the Blood Fever.

Andro took note that all of them had been fitted and now wore the standard black Mark IV ArmorPly body armor that all of Mjolnir’s Hand and the nearly one thousand Bonded Pairs and many of the Durcunusaan wore. It provided the best protection and the most freedom of movement while not being excessively heavy.

Andro turned slightly as Deni and Eliani walked up with Lisisa and Nyla.

“Their dragons are practically eating us out of house and home.” Lisisa said with a grin. “Almost all of them have reached the weight they should be at for their sizes. Elder Daurgo and Arzoal are making sure of it.”

Andro nodded. “Good. Mother sent a brief message this morning. The Kavalians will be here earlier than we initially expected so we will be leaving tomorrow for the Southern base. Deni, you and Lisisa leave later this afternoon to make sure everything is prepared. Carina and Moneus have already left to make initial training plans and to insure security will remain tight. Eliani, Nyla and I will follow on with Arrarn, Sadi and Zarah and the others later tomorrow afternoon in the TYPE II.”

“So Sadi has decided to become Andro’s co-pilot then?” Eliani asked.

Andro nodded. "She is finishing the paperwork today with grandmother and Zarah to enable her to graduate early. When she is done with that, Zarah will take her to the Ministry of Defense and complete her security clearances and such."

"And no doubt talk her ear off." Nyla said with a smile.

"Andro... why is Vincix coming with us?" Eliani asked. "He is Dalah's son. He wanted Tharua for himself. That is bound to cause problems with Jeth and Tharua."

Andro shook his head. "I have already talked with Jeth and Tharua. They have told you they sealed their bonding last night?"

Lisisa smiled. "Oh yes... in far greater detail than I needed to know too."

Eliani elbowed her sister and chuckled. "At least you didn't have to listen to Tharua rant about it all morning. She practically had me, Nyla and Arydun pulling our hair and scales out."

"And wanting to jump each other's bones." Nyla spoke playfully.

"Well... that too." Eliani stated looking at her seductively.

"Lisisa is just pissed because she ain't getting any for herself." Deni chipped in with a smirk.

Lisisa snapped out with a hard punch to Deni's arm. "You should be the one to talk!" She growled. "Word is getting around that you are nothing more than a playboy prince!"

"Hey! Whatever works?" Deni declared.

They all laughed softly while Lisisa shook her head in mock disgust. Whether it was because their grandmother had understood and agreed to help them in their endeavors, or simply because they desired each other more and more as the days past, she and Deni had shared a sizzling night of passionate sex at his villa, followed by some of the gentlest cuddling so far yet in their relationship. Lisisa still quivered this morning at the memory of his touch on her skin and how his fingers caressed her limbs so lovingly.

Andro shook his head at their antics. "Nothing will come between Jeth and Tharua now, you both know that. Vincix has spoken with them as well and wished them all the best. He is the most knowledgeable Dragon Scholar after those on the Elder Council. When he failed to make the grade for Mjolnir's Hand he devoted his time to learning and teaching."

"He failed for a physical deficiency didn't he Andro?" Deni spoke. "His hind legs were not able to build enough muscle to land and take off with a rider?"

Andro nodded. "Yes. He has since taken on the role of schooling the hatchlings and adolescents. And he is a bear when it comes to teaching them. I watched one of his gatherings and he frightened me. That is what we need with the Coven dragons. Someone to teach them and not be afraid to put them in their place or tell them they are being stupid. Our bonded ones can't do that because they will be doing the training. When they swat someone in the snout for doing something stupid, Vincix will be there to reaffirm that discipline, but also explain why it was done."

Lisisa tilted her head slightly as if hearing something no one else could, though she knew they could feel it as well. "Father and mother are here." She stated.

As if on cue, Torma's massive obsidian form streaked by the opening of the warehouse, Isheeni's azure blue scaled body a tail's length in front of him. The massive gust of wind swept through the opening of the hanger, buffeting those in the front row as all their heads snapped around to watch the two dragons rocket over the tarmac stretched out in front of them and then execute mind boggling vertical maneuvers that sent them hurtling skyward once again. Andro and his siblings stepped away from the side of the hanger with smiles on their faces as they watched their parents put on the display.

The hanger was designed for TYPE II Dragon Transports, and the entire front of it was completely open, allowing the Coven riders to watch easily as Torma and Isheeni twisted and turned, rolled and cart wheeled in an aerial display of flying that none of them had ever seen before. Their heads turned quickly to the side as Iriral landed lightly off to the side, Dysea and Isabella in the saddle on her back, and then went back to the two dragons that were coming straight at them from across the airfield at a blistering speed. The azure scaled dragon was by far the fastest of the pair, far faster than the Coven riders had ever seen. The massive obsidian beast was only able to keep pace because of his massive wing span and the muscles to propel him at the speeds he was traveling. They were dumbfounded at the maneuvers he had executed even as large as he was as he stayed right on the tail of the azure scaled dragon.

"Trust!" Andro shouted loudly.

His booming voice echoed in the hanger startling all of the riders to include Yuri. Their eyes went to where he stood as Torma and Isheeni settled to the ground several hundred meters away.

“It begins with trust!” Andro stated as Elynth appeared from the side of the hanger, already saddled and moved up just behind him. “If you do not trust your Bonded Brother or Sister, they will not trust you. Without trust... there can be no bond. Without trust there will be no Bonded Pair. It starts with trust.”

The Coven riders watched as Arrarn Leonidas appeared with a large monitor, three Durcunusaan soldiers quickly setting up a table and hooking up the monitor to a portable power supply. Eliani picked Andro’s helmet from the saddle on Elynth’s back and casually tossed it to him as Torma and Isheeni approached the hanger. Martin and Aricia had huge smiles on their faces and Isheeni kept bumping her tail into Torma’s side in a show of affection. They settled to the ground next to Iriral and Martin jumped off Torma’s back landing like a cat.

I didn’t think the two of you were going to come down. Dysea Mindvoiced unshielded. This did not go unnoticed or unheard among the Coven riders, as they heard her words as well. Even Yuri wore a surprised expression.

Do you know how long it’s been since we have done that? Aricia exclaimed as she dropped to the ground light footed and stepped quickly up next to Martin, pressing her body against his.

Far too long. Isheeni’s voice echoed loudly. You have put on weight my beloved husband. She turned to look at Torma with her azure eyes bright and glowing with love and adoration.

They had decided to Mindvoice unshielded before coming to the airfield to show the Coven riders the closeness among rider and dragon. And there were no dragons or riders closer than those who were members of the Leonidas family anywhere within the Union. Torma and Isheeni had shared in every birth of a Leonidas child, every event throughout their lives. Martin and his Queens had shared the hatching of every egg that Isheeni produced. It was a common sight to see a dragon accompanying his or her rider even on the streets of Sparta and Eden City, but it was a very rare occurrence indeed when a dragon bonded to a Leonidas was not with them wherever they went, no matter how unimportant the task.

Torma snorted loudly. I am exactly as I was when Martin and I became bonded. Torma answered. A lean, mean dragon machine, as Anja would say.

The laughter that followed was genuine and Isheeni extended her head out to rub the scales under Torma’s thick neck in happiness. Yes... and you are all mine.

Martin turned as Andro walked up with a grin on his face, his dark eyes taking in the smiles among the Coven riders as they watched.

“All set?” He asked.

Andro nodded. “I was just telling them of trust.” He spoke.

Martin nodded. “Don’t go too high this time.” He spoke. “Your mothers hate it when you do that.”

“Yes we do.” Dysea spoke with a grin.

Martin looked at Elynth as she walked up and brushed against her mother and father in affection. “Elynth... make sure he doesn’t go splat ok?”

Elynth turned her golden eyes on Martin and she snorted as well. Splat? I would never allow Andro to go splat King Martin. Perhaps bounce once or twice... but never splat.

Martin and the others laughed and Andro stepped up to Elynth.

Thank you sister. He spoke.

Elynth turned her head and flashed him her gold eyes with what would amount to a dragon smile as her fangs were barred. Let’s go my brother! The sky calls us!

Andro smiled and brought his helmet down onto his head before using her foreleg as a step and hoisting himself into the saddle. His head turned quickly to where Carisia sat in the first row with Narice watching him intently.

“Elynth go!” Andro barked.

Elynth trumpeted and with a powerful thrust of her legs she propelled them into the sky. Martin turned to look at the riders and walked slowly in front of them.

“As my son was saying... trust.” Martin spoke so that his voice would carry. The Coven riders all turned to look at him.

Martin Leonidas... the King of the Lycavorian Union... and who all of them had thought was their mortal enemy. Many of them had been schooled as children that the only thing they needed to fear more than the Blood Fever was the wrath of a Lycavorian wolf of pure blood. Standing before them, not ten feet from the first row of chairs, was the Lycavorian wolf with the purest blood of all. They all knew who this man was, and it was easy enough to discern the power radiating from him. The power that radiated from the three Queens that stood to the side as well, not to mention the children. They were in the proverbial lion's den.

Or were they?

"There are one thousand ninety-four Bonded Pairs within the Union as of today." Martin told them seeing the surprised looks of astonishment on many of their faces. None more so than on Yuri's features. Martin took great joy in that. At one point in his life he had thought he felt something for Yuri. Martin had not been able to explain it then, and it wasn't until after he had discovered who and what he truly was that he came to realize what he had felt. He had thought it might be love, but now Martin Leonidas knew it was wariness and caution. She knew who he was and was using him, biding her time until she found a moment to kill him and still be able to escape. Whatever moments they had spent together Martin quickly deduced were nothing more than acting. It wasn't until Dysea came into his life that Martin felt true love. That love grew as first Anja, then Aricia and finally For'mya and Isabella cemented their places within his heart. Yuri did not even rate a third or fourth look, and if there was someone besides his brother that Martin truly disliked... it was Yuri.

"All of those Bonded Pairs have a level of trust that, with only two exceptions, you and your dragons have not achieved. That is not necessarily a bad thing; you just have not had the right interaction. Some of your bonds are more forced than others but that does not mean you can not achieve the level of trust needed to make a Bonded Pair." Martin turned to look at Arrarn who looked up from the monitor and nodded.

"You have probably heard, either while you have been here or from sources that do not know any better," Martin glanced at Yuri quickly. "You have probably heard that I share the most powerful bond among the Bonded Pairs within the Union with Torma, my brother." Martin motioned to where Torma sat and he watched as almost all eyes went to the obsidian monster that dwarfed all the others. "While it is a common misconception, even among our own people because we have been together for so long, it is not true. My son Androcles was bonded with Elynth before he was even born. While he was still within his mother's womb they were communicating with each other and it is they who have the most powerful bond. That is why he is training you and not me. Aside from the other reasons of course, which some of you may or may not already know."

Martin looked at them, allowing his eyes to sweep over the assembled men and women. "I have told your Empress Aikiro I would do this and some of you are probably asking why. The reason is actually very simple. You are at war with the Kavalians and your leaders want to use the bonds you have developed with these dragons, now that they are grown, to fight the Kavalians. Your leaders saw fit to basically kidnap these dragons from a Union transport that crashed many years ago, and unfortunately because you have bonded with them, I can not separate you from them without ill effects. If I could... I would do just that without a moment's pause. And none of you could stop me. I can't do that however... and I will not send your dragons into battle against the Kavalians with riders who either don't care about them, or can't fight worth a shit from their backs. And yes... I don't particularly care for the Kavalians in case you haven't noticed." Martin saw several of the men and women smile and laugh softly.

"If you are not going to take this seriously, then I suggest you step forward now. You've already seen and witnessed how my son views those who do not care for their bonded partners. If you do not put forth one hundred percent of your effort in this, he will stomp your asses into the ground I guarantee that. If you are worried about what will happen to you should you decide this is not what you want, I give you my word as King of the Union, you will be granted asylum here within our borders if you feel your life is threatened in any manner by those above you."

Martin saw many heads turn to where Yuri sat but she remained silent. She could not say or do anything for her mother had already agreed to this. Better to have a dozen dragons that could fight, than three dozen where half were nothing more than cannon fodder her mother had said. Martin was certain when he made this announcement that at least one or two of the Coven riders would take his offer. He was pleasantly surprised when none rose from their chairs and simply looked back at him with determination in their eyes, most especially the two young women in the front row. Martin nodded his head slowly.

“Very well. All of you have proven me wrong.” Martin spoke. “The offer will remain open for the entire time you are here training.” Martin pointed to the table. “Who can tell me what that is?”

“It’s a portable GBR.” Narice spoke up quickly. “Ground Based Radar. It is used mostly by small units to determine altitude of enemy air targets. We have something very similar.”

Martin nodded. “Andro is wearing a transmitter on his uniform that will tell us how high he is. Elynth wears a similar transmitter in her saddle. The height at which you can exit an aircraft will depend on the closeness of your bond with your dragon and how strong your physic shield is as a pair. Since dragons and riders can not be picked up on any known sensor array, the higher you can go out, the better off you are.”

“How... how high have you gone out King Leonidas?” A male vampire asked quickly from the second row. “From one of your STRIKERS?”

Martin shrugged. “I don’t know to be honest with you.” He answered.

“Eighty-three thousand feet.” Lisisa declared proudly from behind him. “During the attack on Peklar Seven.”

Martin turned and looked at his daughter with a smile and turned back. “There you go. Eighty-three thousand feet.” He couldn’t help but notice the looks of stunned shock at this information evident on all their faces.

“That’s... that’s not possible!” Yuri exclaimed now as she stood up and looked at him. “Not even for you!”

Martin turned to look at her. “You don’t think?” He stated evenly. “Perhaps not for you and Vollenth but then again Yuri, if you spent more time in bonding with Vollenth and less time in instilling hatred and anger in him, you might be surprised at what you can accomplish.”

Isabella wisely kept her face neutral, but inwardly she was singing with joy at Martin’s words. It was as if his statement to Yuri was the icing on the cake from their previous night of blistering passion. They had gotten almost no sleep after the State Dinner for Martin had taken her again within moments of arriving back at the villa, and that had only led to several hours of wanton pleasure with all of them in their bed. All of Isabella’s fears; all of her doubts, Martin’s simple statement to Yuri just now and the way he delivered it to her with complete derision, it was vindication for Isabella. Never again would she doubt she was better than Yuri in every way. Isabella felt Dysea press closer to her and slip her hand into hers squeezing it tightly. This caused Isabella to smile inwardly and focus her eyes on the emerald orbs of her elven lover and fellow Queen.

[Now do you see Bella my love?] Dysea spoke. [This wench Yuri is naught but an insect to our Nauta Melme when held against his love for you and for us. Doubt that no longer.]

[I won’t.] Isabella answered. [Not ever again.]

Martin shook his head as Yuri’s anger at him surged from her entire being. He truly did not know where it came from, and at this juncture in his life he really didn’t care. “As I was saying...” Martin turned back to face the Coven Riders. “The strength of your bond comes partly from the trust you have in your dragon. The trust they have in you. It will allow you to do things you never would have thought of. You must put your lives in each others hands and work as one entity. Without conscious thought, without hesitation, because when you hesitate... you die. Plain and simple.”

“We got the feed father.” Arrarn called.

“I want to show you the level of trust my son and Elynth have with each other.” Martin said. “This was his idea... not mine. He wanted to imprint upon you what you could accomplish if you go into the training with an open mind.” He turned to Arrarn. “Fire it up.”

Arrarn activated the monitor. “We’re hot!”

The numbers beside the large monitor sprang to life and were reading nearly forty thousand feet and they were continuing to climb. The near cloudless sky was whipping by, the tips of Elynth’s wings just visible as she continued to propel them straight up. Aricia and the others stepped closer to the monitor even as everyone’s attention became riveted to the climbing numbers and the small blue dot on the GBR, as well as the picture from the TAP camera in Andro’s helmet.

“As you can see... Andro has a TAP camera in his helmet.” Martin saw their faces look confused. “Transparent Aluminum Photocell... essentially an invisible but very powerful camera.”

“What... what is he doing?” Carisia asked now. “He is over... over fifty thousand feet up!”

Had Yuri not been so angry, the hatred washing through her completely, she would have noticed the note of concern in Carisia's voice as she asked the question. As it was... only a woman would know what that note of concern sounded like, and the only two women to take notice of Carisia's tone of voice were Narice and Aricia.

Martin looked at her and grinned. "Yes... yes he is." Martin stepped forward and touched the small control console on the table. "Andro... would you be kind enough to show our High Coven guests what we mean when we say trust."

"It would be a pleasure father." Andro's voice boomed out from the small speaker. "I shall see you in a few moments."

Andro looked at the altimeter on his wrist and smiled. Sixty-four thousand feet sister! He announced. We've done this from higher Andro! Elynth declared joyfully. She was happiest when her bonded brother was upon her back and they were soaring through the sky.

They too were speaking unshielded allowing the Coven riders far below them to hear their words.

Yes we have... though now that you have announced it unshielded to everyone; I don't think my mothers will allow us to do it anymore. Andro spoke with a grin. And neither will KertaGai!

If you are about to do what I think you are about to do... you would be so correct! Aricia's voice boomed out in their minds.

Andro... Elynth... are you insane? Sadi's voice joined in from where she sat in her classroom in Sparta. Elynth leveled off easily and turned her head back to look at him. Oops! I forgot.

Andro laughed. So if this is to be our last time, let's make it worth it sister! Father... we will see you in four minutes!

Andro... please... Sadi's voice echoed again. Be careful.

I will meet you at five hundred feet sister! Andro barked out just as Elynth rolled inverted and he released the dragon armor holding his legs and plummeted towards the earth far below.

Elynth rolled back over and watched him for a few seconds, her golden eyes gleaming in joy. I will be there my brother!

Elynth counted off ten seconds in her head and then she folded her wings tightly against her body, rolled to her right and she too plunged for the ground far below.

Aricia stepped up next to Martin in the hanger as they watched the two dots separate from each other, each of them beginning blistering descents towards the ground.

"Higher?" Aricia exclaimed. "They've done this from higher?"

Martin looked at her, seeing Dysea and Isabella come up behind her as well, stern looks on their faces.

"Hey... it wasn't my idea!" He defended himself.

"You have known he and Elynth do these things Nauta Melme?" Dysea spoke. "You allowed it?"

"I haven't been able to control him since he was sixteen and you all know that." Martin said.

Aricia turned her head to look at Isheeni. Isheeni... did you know they do these things?

I did not... and I certainly do not approve. Isheeni announced turning to look at her mate. Torma?

Torma did his best to not meet the azure eyes of his mate and remained silent. Torma you knew as well? How could you allow this? Isheeni declared.

Torma turned his head to look at her. She is as headstrong and willful as you are! Torma spoke evenly. You know as well as I that she would never allow harm to come to Andro. And she has never missed. Not even when we did it together.

Together? Isheeni hissed in stunned surprised. Her azure scaled head turned to where Martin stood sheepishly and then back to her dragon husband. You and Martin have done this as well?

Torma nodded. Many times.

Aricia and the others were glaring at Martin now. He shrugged his broad shoulders. "It's fun."

"Fun!" Isabella almost shouted. "Martin Leonidas... you are certifiably insane!"

The Coven riders were still in some shock at what was taking place and the conversation going on. Many of them were watching the monitor as the two blue dots grew further apart, but continued to fall. All of them had begun to crowd closer to the table and monitor, seeing the few wisps of clouds whipping past Andro's helmet camera as he plummeted straight down.

"She won't catch him!" Dante's voice spoke softly. "He's falling too fast and she's too far away."

"Silence Dante!" Narice hissed standing next to Carisia and detecting the rapid beating of her heart. Her heart was racing not from excitement, but from fear. Fear for Androcles Leonidas and she was allowing her shields to slowly come down enough for others to detect this. Narice stepped up close to her in the press of bodies and grasped her hand tightly. Carisia's head whipped around to stare at her.

[Your shields Carisia.] Narice reached out to her shielded. [No matter your concern for Androcles, you must keep your feelings hidden. Your shields are slipping.] Narice felt Carisia's shields slam back in place in a single blink and she nodded.

[Narice... I...]

Narice shook her head almost imperceptibly. [You do not need to explain anything to me Carisia. We will talk when we have time. Guard your feelings well, for your mother and my mother would not be happy to know that you are in deeply love with Androcles Leonidas and his woman. And they with you.]

Carisia's eyes were wide as she stared at Narice in shock. [How... how...?]

[We will talk as I said. For now... let us watch the show. And do not fear for him. Elynth will be there just as she is supposed to be, for they trust each other implicitly. Just as we trust our bonded brothers with our lives. Though I dare say... their bond is far greater than what we share with our bond mates. That will change however. You will see.] Narice smiled.

"Look!" One of the Coven riders called out. "He's passing through thirty thousand feet! She's four kilometers away!"

Andro's voice boomed out of the speakers once more. "Father... would you tell Eliani and Nyla to insure we have ample medical supplies and several of mother's best medics to accompany us when we depart tomorrow." No one could believe the tone of his voice as it was as calm and controlled as if he was sitting on a beach drinking a glass of wine.

Martin grinned but that grin quickly vanished when Aricia glared at him. "I don't think your mothers appreciate your humor Andro." He spoke at the transmitter.

"It's a beautiful day!" Andro announced as the camera in his helmet shifted and suddenly it was pointed back skyward at the clouds and blue sky. "And I am too large for her to spank me anymore!"

"You want to bet!" Aricia barked.

Andro laughed and they saw the picture turn once more as the ground became visible again. "You and Isheeni should try this mother. It's truly breathtaking."

"Androcles Leonidas... you are so in trouble when you get back on the ground!" Aricia spat.

"She's gone!" A voice shouted. The blue dot that was signifying Elynth's position had faded from the screen. "She's off the GBR!"

"Did she crash?"

"Where did she go?"

"She'll never catch him in time!"

Elynth executed a smooth turn back towards the Durcunusaan base only three hundred feet from the ground. She could feel Andro's sense of calm and it filled her as well. They had always been able to sense each other's emotions far more deeply than other Bonded Pairs, far more deeply than even their parents could. This bond was what allowed them to do so much. She could not imagine what it would be like not having Andro's consciousness connected with hers, not being able to feel him as she did. As he felt her. They knew each other's most intimate secrets and desires. The joy and love that he and Sadi shared filled her just as completely as it did them. The desire and love they both felt for the maya eyed female vampire. Elynth's own desire for the dragon that carried her. They were all of one mind... and Elynth knew it would never be the same without them filling her thoughts and providing her with strength and faith, just as she did for them.

[Nor would it be for us sister.] Andro's voice filled her thoughts.

[You do realize that your mothers will be livid with us now that they have discovered we have been doing this for years.] Elynth answered with a small amount of humor.

[Yes... well we'll just have to be more careful in the future.] Andro answered. [I will see you in twenty seconds sister.]

[Yes you will Andro my brother!] Elynth declared.

Elynth's golden eyes narrowed to slits and she began to pump her wings harder and faster, propelling her along over the tree tops at a blistering speed headed directly over the city of Sparta. She rose slightly in altitude to clear the highest buildings her mind focused on only one thing. She didn't notice the heads of hundreds of people look skyward as she rocketed over city streets and buildings with enough speed to be nothing more than a speeding projectile.

"There!" The Coven rider shouted as the blue dot that was Elynth suddenly rose back onto the GBR moving at incredible speed.

"How did... look at her speed!" Another announced.

"By the gods!" Dysea muttered softly as she gripped Aricia's shoulders from behind.

Aricia's azure blue eyes turned to look at Martin and she saw then the complete pride and confidence in his dark orbs. Pride and confidence in their son.

Martin smiled gently. "Never doubt their faith and trust in each other Saaurano." He said softly.

"They are truly one. Far more than you and I with Torma and Isheeni. They are so much more."

"It's too late!" A voice shouted. "He's under a thousand feet! She'll never...!"

"Look!" Narice yelled as her eyes caught sight of Elynth speeding across the tarmac now straight for them and beginning to rise.

There was a mad scramble as the coven riders pushed and shoved to get outside the hanger heedless of the sunlight. Their eyes reached skyward and they saw the black dot that was Andro's falling form.

Andro brake! Elynth's voice sounded like a shot as it erupted into the minds of all the coven riders just as she sharply altered her course and rose more steeply straight at his falling body.

They saw Andro snap out his arms and legs in a spread eagle shape instantly.

"She's going to hit him!" A voice yelled.

Aricia continued to stare at Martin's unwavering gaze. Dark eyes she had come to love more with each passing hour and day. A small smile came across her face as she felt the unfettered love and faith Andro and Elynth felt for one another sweep through her. It was them she knew, they were letting her know just what each of them meant to the other, and as she turned her head she saw Isheeni and Torma soaking in the same effects. Torma no different than Martin, his golden eyes displaying pride and confidence, while like Aricia, Isheeni was feeling the completeness of the bond Andro and Elynth shared for the first time.

Martin lifted his head just as Elynth snapped out her wings to their fullest extension, turned and rolled over back towards the earth in a single blink. Exactly where she should have been, exactly as they had done so many times in the past. Andro's spread eagle position slowed him just enough for her to turn and meet his downward speed and she felt the heavy thump of his body hitting the saddle just as it should have, his legs slamming home under the dragon armor and securing him fast.

Elynth let out a trumpet of joyous success and immediately went into a series of tight corkscrewing rolls with her bonded brother securely back where he belonged. She swept over the hanger and the Coven riders as she did, hearing her parents and Iriral echoing her trumpet, while Andro's brothers and sisters screamed in abandon. She turned sharply and banked over the airfield.

The eastern pad sister. Andro spoke as he reached forward and stroked the smooth light obsidian scales of her muscular neck.

Elynth nodded and flared her wings as they came in over the pad and she settled lightly to the ground. Andro was leaving the saddle the moment her talons touched down and he ran along beside her for a few steps until she came to a complete stop. Elynth lowered herself to the tarmac immediately as he walked around in front of her taking off his helmet. Andro dropped his helmet to the ground as she lowered her head to within inches of his and he reached up to grasp either side of her huge snout as his forehead touched her snout.

[We are as one Elynth my sister.] He spoke the words softly.

Elynth closed her golden eyes. [In mind and heart Andro my brother. Until we join our ancestors.]

[Until we join our ancestors.]

Andro drew back and looked at her with a smile. You were off by six inches.

Elynth's eyes flew open wide. I was not! She exclaimed. You did not adjust properly when you shifted position.

Andro shook his head. No... I'm sure of it. He said as he bent to pick up his helmet.

Bah! The wind whipping by your head must have clouded your eyesight! Elynth stated as they began to walk back towards the hanger.

Six inches sister. Andro said.

Elynth leaned over and butted him in the shoulder with her snout, causing him to stumble forward. I will show you six inches!

Aricia couldn't help but laugh as she saw Elynth knock Andro forward, everyone hearing their unshielded conversation. It was easy enough to see that they were joking with one another, simply by the tone of their voices and their actions. They saw Andro shove back against her neck after she pushed him with her snout, though even he could not move her near four tons of muscle. Aricia turned to look at her Beloved and saw his eyes gazing at the Coven riders. As she shifted her own eyes she saw what he saw. Looks of stunned disbelief at what they had just witnessed, and looks of new determination and purpose. In all their eyes except for Yuri and her son Dante. Her other three children, including the one she had sensed something far more from, were looking on in similar fashion. The one called Carisia... Aricia saw something far more in her eyes and that interested her.

Aricia turned back as with a squeal of delight Eliani launched herself into Andro's arms and hugged her brother tightly.

"That was the best drop yet!" She shouted as Andro smiled. She turned to Elynth. "You looked beautiful Elli!"

Denali pounded his brother on the back, a huge grin on his face. "That was quite the show." He spoke leaning close to him. "Think it will matter Andro?" He whispered.

Andro looked at him. "It's up to us to make sure it does Deni." He whispered back.

Deni nodded. "I got your back." He said in acknowledgement.

Andro nodded and turned as his mother appeared in front of him. He smiled as he met her azure blue eyes.

"That is without a doubt the most incredibly stupid and reckless thing I have ever seen you do Androcles." Aricia spoke sternly.

"Perhaps mother... but it was... it was..." Andro turned to Eliani his face confused as he struggled to find the word he wanted. "Eliani... help me out here."

"Rush. It was a rush." Eliani spoke.

Andro nodded quickly and turned back to Aricia. "Yes! It was a rush!"

Aricia burst into a fit of laughing at the looks on his and Eliani's face and she embraced her son and hugged him tightly. "Sadi is going to give you a piece of her mind when she sees you." Aricia said into his ear as he hugged her back.

Andro grinned and nodded. "Yes... I'm preparing myself for that."

He stepped away from his mother and moved up next to his father in front of the Coven riders, Elynth standing just behind him. Andro reached up without looking and placed his palm flat under her jaw against her scales.

"Trust!" Andro spoke as they looked at him. "It begins with trust. Your bonded brothers and sisters have spent the last day and a half eating and resting. The lack of proper food within the Coven territory is not your fault and I can not hold you accountable for that. However it is not lacking on Earth, and I will hold you accountable for their health and well being now. I will attempt to teach you what you can do as a Bonded Pair; but ultimately, it is you who must decide to truly allow yourselves to experience what you can feel. You will have the rest of today and this evening to do as you will. I suggest you explore as much of Sparta as you want for we will not be back for several months at least. My father has given permission to break from the restrictions placed on you when you arrived. You no longer answer to the Empress or to Princess Yuri. You answer to me. Do not think to cause problems or conflicts with the citizens of Sparta if that is what you seek. They will not tolerate it. You..."

"My mother and I did not approve this!" Yuri spat as she stepped forward. "Who do you think you are?"

Andro met her eyes evenly. "I'm the one who will teach you to survive." He stated calmly. "If that is not something that interests you Princess Yuri, then by all means do what you will."

"I have survived a lot longer than you have been lived Androcles Leonidas!" Yuri hissed at him. "You think too highly of your skills!"

Andro shrugged. "Then when you ride Vollenth into battle against the Kavalians, your mother will be less one daughter, for you will die Princess Yuri. And your actions will get others killed as well... that is something I will not allow. You will either adhere to my rules and directions or you and Vollenth will be excluded from this training." He stated flatly. He turned back to the riders. "You will be rejoined with your dragons when you leave here. Heed my words to you and begin to establish that trust by spending time with them. Learning of them. Sparta is the place to do it; for there are many places you can go and be assured the peace you need. That is my direction to you until we leave tomorrow."

"My mother will..." Yuri began to speak.

"Your mother already agreed to it." Martin snapped out now. "If you don't believe me... check with her yourself. My son's orders stand. End of story."

Andro let his eyes sweep across the stunned faces of the riders and they settled on Carisia and Narice. "Princess Narice... Princess Carisia... you will be section leaders for the duration of the training. When you rejoin with Deneth and Anthar after we are done here, please make your way south to Gytheio. I'm having a meeting at my villa to determine schedules and the training requirements as well as whatever else you and your people might need. The meeting will most likely extend into the late evening or early morning so come prepared to stay the night so that you do not have to fly back to Sparta."

"That is not acceptable to me!" Yuri snapped. "If you think for a moment I will allow you to have two members of royal blood within your grasp you are sorely mistaken!"

Andro looked at her and laughed. "You are joking right?" He spoke. "If we had planned anything nefarious, there is nothing you could do to stop it. And if we were not going to honor our commitment to your dragons we would have already killed you for taking them in the first place. I may be considerably younger than you Princess Yuri... but do not think to insult me by assuming I am less intelligent than you. Not only would you be incorrect... you would look the fool. Send one person with them if this makes you feel better. Just not that fat slob Commander Thast."

"He is my daughter's husband!" Yuri snapped.

"Yes... I know. He is also extremely arrogant and exceptionally rude. He has no tact... no honor and no regard for anyone but himself. I do not want him drooling all over my brand new tile floor." Andro replied with a grin.

"That is not acceptable to me." Yuri said.

"What is acceptable to you does not concern me." Andro spoke firmly. "The Mindvoice bonds that Princess Narice and Princess Carisia share with their dragons are the strongest among your riders. They will be able to assist in the training by helping your dragon riders to learn what they have taught themselves to enhance their bonds through the years. They did this with no guidance or knowledge of what we will teach them. The Empress has already agreed to this as well. Now... if you will all excuse me... I have some things to attend to before the meeting begins."

Narice stepped forward. "Wait! How will we know which villa is yours?"

Lisisa smiled as she stepped up next to Andro. "It is the only island in the Laconian Gulf and it will be the one with all the dragons on it." She stated.

They watched as Andro turned and began walking across the tarmac with his father and mother beside him. The rest of the Leonidas family fell in behind them speaking with whispers and laughter. The eyes of the Coven riders turned as Torma's massive body suddenly blocked their view, Isheeni standing next to her beloved mate proudly. He let his golden eyes sweep across the men and women.

Heed well what he will teach you riders of the High Coven. Torma spoke unshielded so that they could hear him. Allow him to show you that you could be so much more than you are now. You only need look past what you have known to be true these past years. Look past that and grasp the unknown... for that is where the treasure truly lies.

They watched as Torma turned slowly and began following the rest of their family, for they were as much a part of the Leonidas family as any who walked on two legs. Isheeni brushed up against her mate gently as they walked.

[Do you think they will take note of your words my husband?] She asked.

[If they do not... Andro, Elynth and the others will show them the folly of their ways.] Torma answered.

[Pretty good.] Martin told his son as they walked across the tarmac.

[Pretty good?] Eliani exclaimed. [That was pretty incredible! Did you see the look on her face?]

[Why are you provoking her Andro?] Aricia asked. [And why are you allowing him too Beloved?]

[Yes... I would like to know this as well.] Isabella spoke as she walked alongside Dysea holding her hand.

[I think we all would.] Dysea said.

[They are not just here for us to train them.] Martin spoke looking at Aricia. [We have talked of this before.]

Dysea nodded. [Yes... we assumed as much Nauta Melme. Aikiro wants to get on the Mindvoice ship. We know that... and she has made it painfully obvious.]

Martin turned as they walked and looked at her. [There is more to it than just that Melda Min. I sense there is more to it but I can't put my finger on it. Yuri has very big issues with me. Some of them I understand... some I don't.]

[Yes... well you have kicked her ass whenever you have confronted each other.] Bella spoke with a grin.

Martin chuckled and nodded his head. [Yes... besides that though. And now those issues seem to be carrying over to Andro because he is my oldest. I don't think she even considers Lisisa... and we all know why that is. She also has never learned to fully control her temper. The bond she has with Vollenh is tentative at best. She has turned him into something dark and evil. Her son Dante is almost no better.]

[However... she is very powerful within Mindvoice Nauta Melme.] Dysea said. [We can all sense it. Not on the same level as you or the Empress no... but she is very powerful. At least equal to Andro in many respects, though she does not seem to have the control and ability that he does in many respects.]

Andro smiled. [Thank you mother.]

Martin nodded with a smile. [And that is her weakness. She knows she is powerful and it pisses her off to no end that she can not use that power against Andro. Against all of us. You have seen how she reacts when she can't penetrate our Mindvoice shields. How she must always be the one in charge. Andro is going to use that against her. Sooner or later she will explode... and perhaps we'll discover what else the High Coven has in store for us.]

[Forewarned is forearmed.] Andro spoke softly.

Martin nodded. [Pleistarchus knows what I will do if they attempt to invade the Union.] He spoke. [My brother may be many things... but he is not a fool. At least I don't think so. This intelligence... coming here with their dragons for us to train? Aikiro is trying to drag me into this war for a reason. I just haven't discovered why yet.]

Aricia looked at him. [You don't believe the intelligence is real?]

Martin shook his head. [No... I didn't say that. It may very well be real and very solid intelligence. The question remains... how did they get it if it's accurate... and why bring it to us? Aikiro doesn't care about these dragons or what happens to their riders. They are nothing more than a means to an end for her. We just have to discover what her end is and what she is truly after.]

[And provoking her anger in this manner will accomplish that?] Dysea asked looking at him.

[Maybe... maybe not.] He answered with a grin.

Andro chuckled. [It will undoubtedly be entertaining though.]

Isabella burst out laughing and waggled her finger between father and son. [We will have to start keeping the two of you apart from each other.] She stated. [You devise some positively vile plans when you put your minds together.]

“Yes I agreed to it.” Aikiro stated while pouring herself a crystal glass of the cloned blood.

Yuri looked at her astonished. “Mother... why?” Yuri had come directly here after they had left the airfield, only to discover that her mother and Tesand had just finished with what could only be described as an intense sexual encounter. The two small puncture wounds on Aikiro’s neck were fading quickly, and Yuri could detect slight bruising around the base of her neck that the light robe did little to hide. As with her and Robert, apparently there were times when her mother enjoyed being taken by Tesand in a very demanding way. Aikiro sipped the sweet tasting cloned blood and stepped closer to her daughter, Yuri’s eyes on her satisfied face. Yes... it was very obvious what had been happening when Yuri arrived, as the robe her mother was wearing was tied loosely around her body, she was undoubtedly very naked underneath, and her cheeks were still slightly flush. Yuri also noticed her mother made no move to try and hide the bite marks Tesand had left. Another indicator to Yuri at least that her mother had all but publicly allowed Tesand to stake his claim to her in the most intimate of fashions by any vampire.

Aikiro drew Yuri’s arm tighter. “Androcles Leonidas is correct in his statement that the bonds Narice and Carisia have with their beasts are stronger than even yours is with Vollenth. It is the reason why I have never been able to penetrate their Mindvoice shields. We must bend a little in our endeavor Yuri. Narice and Carisia are not aware of our ultimate goal, only what you and I have allowed them to see.”

“But sending them off alone to...” Yuri began.

Aikiro smiled slightly. “Narice has already informed me she will be taking Toria Dellion with them. They have developed something of a friendship it seems.” She spoke. “Our interests will not be compromised with her there. She is a former operative of the Venorik Elghinn and completely loyal to me. In more ways than one.” Aikiro said in a knowing fashion as she drew her to the couch and they sat down. Apparently having Toria Dellion sharing hers and Tesand’s bed whenever they demanded her gave them certain power over the red haired vampire intelligence officer Yuri observed.

“I understand what we are trying to accomplish and obtain mother.” Yuri spoke softly. “Do we need to surrender so much of ourselves to these animals to do that however?”

“In order to obtain what we want yes. At least for now.” Aikiro said softly. “Without it... our war with the Kavalians could very well continue for decades to come. I have no wish for that when we could be directing our resources to other areas. Only the four of us know the true purpose of why we are here Yuri, and make no mistake... do not believe for an instant that Martin Leonidas does not sense that there is more to what is going on than we are allowing him to see.”

“You don’t think he suspects our true purpose do you?” Yuri asked quickly. “Or perhaps he has...”

Aikiro shook her head. “No!” She said quickly. “If he did... he would never have allowed us to come here.” She stated. “You are playing your own part very well Yuri... the arrogant and volatile High Coven Princess. Your inbred hatred for this man gives you that convincing air about you. Do not overdo it however. They expect you to act in such a way because of your history with this man. Indeed... they are hoping for it. That is why we must insure Dante proceeds with his part of the plan with far more subtly than he usually exercises. I have complete faith in Narice... she may be less than willing to exercise more persuasive means to accomplish our goals, but like Toria she is absolutely loyal Yuri. It is also the reason why when Leonidas’s son asked me who I think should lead this new unit of ours, I determined Narice and Carisia would be the ones to guide them. Your bond with Vollenth is strong yes, but I will not risk you in open warfare against the Kavalians. If Carisia falls in battle... it is of no great consequence. We have already planned her demise regardless.”

“And Narice?” Yuri asked.

“Do not mistake my coldness for something it is not.” Aikiro spoke. “I love your sister Yuri, but ultimately she is not you. Only you have the strength and conviction to make the hard decisions should anything happen to me. Narice will assist in whatever way she can, but she has already shown distaste for politics and the intricacies involved. She is rather plain in that regard. She has no great interest it seems in acquiring power and control.”

“I do not fear the Kavalians mother.” Yuri stated.

Aikiro nodded. “I know you do not and you have proven that countless times in the past. However... you are the only one that I trust with the complete knowledge of what we intend. Narice... it appears ever since becoming bonded to Deneth, Narice sees her role as more of a military one. She will begin to see what it is she needs to do in order to safeguard our Coven in that role. Narice and Carisia have parts to play... but only you, Robert, Tesand and I know what our ultimate goal is. When we achieve our goal, and if you still desire to, Carisia’s life is yours if she is not already dead. Now however, now we have to allow the Lycavorians to think we are grudgingly going along with everything they dictate to us. With the appropriate amount of discontent and distrust of course.” Aikiro said with a smile. “If Androcles Leonidas is anything like his father, and everything we have seen so far indicates he is a mirror image of him, then our unit of dragons and riders will become quite proficient in killing Kavalians and anyone else we deem fit to set them upon.”

Yuri smiled. “There is that to consider.” She said. “You do realize that they will try to take our dragons from us at some point.”

Aikiro nodded. “Of course they will.” She stated. “However... they will not accomplish this. Our dragons have bonded with our people and as Martin Leonidas well knows that bond will not be easily severed now. If at all.” She took a deep breath and nodded. “There is nothing that could come between them now.”

“The Kavalians are arriving tomorrow mother.” Yuri said. “Are you going to stay here in Sparta or return to Usu Ozeib 7?”

“I will remain for a time. We will sign the Cease Fire Accords in two weeks.” She replied casually. “We must make it seem like we are working out details and such to an event like that. Like Leonidas... I must play a part as well. I have no doubts the Kavalians will discover our dragons are here eventually... though I’m quite sure it will not be because of anything the Lycavorians or those of us here do. It will come out because it is not something that can stay hidden forever. Leonidas knows this and they will attempt to teach us what they can before it does become known.”

“Then what?” Yuri asked.

Aikiro shook her head. “That will be up to the Lycavorians.” She said. “Even they have fools among their politicians, and that is why the Kavalians are coming here in the first place. A fool who thought to make an impression of himself. I wouldn’t be surprised if this man or woman is now dust somewhere. Leonidas has a hatred for the Kavalians that nearly equals our own. Part of it has to do with the fact that they are sadistic savages, but there is something else as well. Something that I can not place my finger on. And it relates to his brother.”

“I truly never thought we would come to them for any kind of help.” Yuri spoke. “Nor did I believe they would give us this help.”

“They may be animals Yuri... but they are not fools.” Aikiro said. “Your father thought them to be beneath us, and in many ways they are. His mistake was in believing that they would amount to nothing and never pose a threat. Look at them now. Leonidas is not just a leader to them... he is a symbol. While he or any of his bloodline lives, they as a people will never give up hope.”

“Is that a good thing or a bad thing?” Yuri asked her.

“At the moment... it is a very good thing for us.” Aikiro replied with a smile. “In the future... we will see.”

“I apologize for interrupting you mother.” Yuri spoke somewhat sheepishly.

Aikiro grinned and shook her head. “It is nothing. Tesand is very thorough when it comes to making sure I am still quivering from his touch when he leaves for his duties. You were very correct though, about the air on this planet? It is revitalizing in many ways. You and Robert should enjoy this evening before you need to leave. Leonidas will not allow Robert anywhere near where you will be training.”

Yuri met her grin with one of her own. “Yes... we have already planned to do just that.” She said. “I toyed with the idea of going to Thermopylae. Having Robert take me in front of the monument to his father. Can you imagine having his father’s spirit watching as we fuck our brains out under the shadow of his tomb?”

Aikiro laughed. “Oh Yuri... that is positively vile!” She laughed. “I love it!”

Yuri chuckled. "We thought it was an excellent idea as well. We will only need to insure that there is no security around when we do this. I don't think Leonidas would appreciate it."

Aikiro shook her head. "No he would not! Do be careful! I want to hear about it if you succeed as well."
Yuri nodded. "Oh we will be." She said. "I have no desire to spend my days in one of their prison cells."

At the moment the only thing Toria Dellion was occupied with was trying to remain calm, even as Deneth streaked across the sky moving south. She had never flown on a dragon before this day; she had in truth never had much contact with the Coven dragons. Toria had no fears of flying; however this kind of flying was something completely new to her and her heart was racing almost out of control. The moment Narice and Deneth's psychic shield had engulfed her Toria knew what she was about to experience was going to be terrifying. As they reached a thousand feet above the land below, Toria found herself with her arms wrapped securely around Narice's waist as if her very life depended on it. She was pressed tightly against Narice's back, their legs secured under the dragon armor of the new saddles that the Coven riders now had. She too now wore the standard matte black Mark IV ArmorPly that the Lycavorians wore, and she had to admit that when she first put it on that it felt amazing. She had enough presence of mind to keep her helmeted head from digging into the back of Narice's shoulders, but that was the only thing that was not pressed against the vampire Princess's lithe body. A position that Toria found she did not mind in the least.

Toria Dellion had never imagined herself in the position she was in. Toria knew she was skilled in many facets, her instructors for the Venorik Elghinn had commented many times on her unique ability to adapt quickly to almost any given situation. They had commended her on her intelligence and overall skills, and praises such as that coming from the Venorik Elghinn were very rare indeed. Toria was advancing rapidly through the ranks of the High Coven Intelligence Service because of her operational skills, but all that came to an end when Admiral Tesand approached her. He had said the Empress found her intriguing and that she wanted to explore her own sexuality. Toria knew that to refuse would have put her in a very bad situation, for Admiral Tesand and the Empress were not well known for being understanding. She had agreed to become their plaything, hoping that in the end it would only enhance her position and allow her more opportunities in the future. Toria had never imagined she would actually come to enjoy her times with the Empress quite a bit. She was demanding yes, but the times Toria had shared her bed without Tesand present had been extremely pleasurable. She found she enjoyed giving pleasure to her Empress. Her body was firm and quite pleasing even though she was over eighteen thousand years old and Toria had come to relish the times when she could simply explore her Empress's body, taking her time to touch and taste. Aikiro did not seem to mind in the least.

It was different with Tesand.

Aikiro acted far differently when the Admiral was present, and at times she was even harsh. Toria knew she had made a terrible mistake when she refused Tesand's attentions the first time, and she ended up having to tolerate Dante and Javier and their disgusting touch upon her. They were neither gentle nor caring, concerned only with filling her as many times as they could, in whatever position and opening she had. After the sixth time they had given her to them for not pleasing them enough, Toria came to realize that the Empress did not really care for her in the least. What else Toria had discovered in the last two years as their sexual plaything had surprised even her.

Her actions with the Empress had opened a doorway into another part of her that she had not known existed. A part that could look at another woman and measure her up, imagining what she tasted like, or looked like without clothes. When Narice had appeared at her door that night on the ship, Toria had found herself doing just that with the Princess. Narice was even more exotic looking and seductive than her mother in Toria's eyes, and her body was even more firm and delicious to look at. Since that night, Toria had caught herself on several occasions imagining what Narice would taste like, and she wondered if the second oldest High Coven Princess had ever thought of such things. A large part of her wished that was very much the case, but Toria held no illusions about that. There were many Pureblood males who were doing their best to court Narice, and she could not imagine Narice even thought of her in that manner.

Narice smiled under her helmet as she saw Anthar come swooping down in front of them, Carisia firmly seated in her saddle with her hands on her thighs, as Anthar dove and twisted and turned with incredible speed and maneuverability. Like herself, Carisia had no fear of flying on Anthar this way. Now that they had the dragon armor, which was forged and built directly into the saddles and held them securely, Carisia flew on Anthar's back without bothering to grip the spikes protruding from his shoulders. They were both stunned at how vigorous Deneth and Anthar appeared when they joined with them only an hour ago after leaving the airfield. Their scales shone with newfound moisture and health, both of them filling out completely after only two days of resting and eating the protein rich food given to them by the Lycavorians. Their muscles rippled under their scales and they appeared eager to take the skies above and show their bonded sisters what they could do. The moment they had lifted off, Carisia and Anthar had gone right into a series of intricate and stylish maneuvers so that Anthar could show his sister what he could do with his new muscles and the energy he felt. Deneth was no different, but he flew more sedately because Toria rode with them, and he too felt his bonded sister's interest in the red haired female. Narice also knew Deneth was like her in many respects, more reserved and not one to easily show emotion, even though he may have been feeling exactly what Anthar was feeling.

Narice, quite surprisingly for her part, found the press of Toria's firm body against her back strangely exciting and intimate. They had talked for a number of hours in Toria's quarters on the way to Earth, becoming more relaxed with each other in that time period, and Narice found herself wanting to stomp her nephews into the bulkhead for their treatment of Toria. It was a strange feeling, yet now as she felt Toria's arms grasping tightly to her waist, Narice discovered she rather enjoyed the sensations those arms caused within her. She knew Toria shared her mother's bed, though not always so willingly when Tesand was added to the mix. Oddly enough, Narice found this to be very erotic. Unlike Yuri, Narice did not care for Tesand and knowing Toria had to endure his depraved attentions as well, caused Narice to feel anger and resentment towards him. Even more than she already did. These feelings surprised Narice a great deal, but they felt very right.

"It is amazing Narice!" Carisia's gleeful voice echoed in the receivers of their helmets. "Two days! Only two days and Anthar is stronger and quicker! The medicines and foods he has received are wonderful!"

Narice nodded from her saddle as her dark eyes gazed at where they flew slightly in front and to the left of them now. She could feel Carisia's happiness within Mindvoice, and it equaled her own when it came to their dragons. Narice also suspected that Carisia was exceptionally happy to be away from Thast and his vile pawing and slobbering of her body. Narice also knew that Carisia was very happy that they were going to be with Androcles Leonidas and his new wife and mate Sadi. Narice had been only slightly astounded when she felt Carisia's emotions on the airfield today. She had always known that Carisia was different. Carisia's power and abilities within Mindvoice were potentially far greater than even she could aspire to. Narice believed Carisia was following a path set before her, not by Yuri or her mother, but by someone or something far greater in scope. She had felt the briefest moment of intense desire and overwhelming adoration escape through Carisia's shields today. Love and desire for not only Androcles Leonidas, but his young bride as well. The intensity of it had shocked her, for Narice had never felt something so powerful or natural.

Narice knew Yuri had no love for her oldest daughter, which Yuri had made painfully obvious through the years. Part of it was the fact that Yuri had always hated Carisia's father, and as soon as they could get away with it, Robert Moran had butchered Vavant without so much as a second's pause. Carisia held no anger over this however, and Narice didn't doubt she knew exactly what had really happened that night. Vavant was an arrogant and foul man and a sorry excuse for a pureblood, but he was still Carisia's father. While Carisia may have discovered and held in contempt what her father was really like, Yuri and Robert taking away the opportunity for Carisia to know her father was wrong. And her mother allowing them to do this was just as wrong.

Narice was Carisia's aunt yes, but they were kindred spirits really. Only a few years separated them in age, and both of them held intense love and devotion for their dragons. The same devotion that the riders of the Union felt for their bonded partners. Narice let her mind drift back quickly to that night at Gallais's Retreat and the dark haired Leonidas son Arrarn. He had appeared so effortlessly behind her, and Narice had been correct in saying no one had ever succeeded in sneaking up on her like that. Not since she was thirteen years old. The thing Narice found interesting is she was actually more concerned with how he filled out his clothes than how he had almost magically appeared out of thin air. Even in the few seconds before he had turned and left with his brothers and sisters, Narice had committed the contours of his face to memory. Narice found herself hoping that he was going to be at this meeting they were going to and that in and of itself shocked her right down to her core. She hated the purebloods that were lined up to court her, and thankfully her mother had made no move to pressure her into choosing one for a husband. The majority of them were pompous and egotistical and she well knew they would want her to remain on their homeworld and have children. They most certainly would not want her and Deneth fighting the Kavalians.

She and Carisia were speaking openly using the internal helmet COMs because Toria was not capable of using Mindvoice, at least not that they were aware of, and Narice found herself wanting to make Toria as comfortable as possible in her company.

“Yes.” Narice replied quickly with a bright smile. “I agree. I can feel the new power that is surging through his muscles. Deneth told me he and Anthar brought down three huge stags last night east of Sparta. He says the timber is teeming with animals that run wild on this planet. What do you think Toria?” Narice asked turning her head slightly.

“I have not opened my eyes long enough to view anything and think about it Narice!” Toria gasped out in reply to her question. “I will allow your descriptions to suffice and believe what you say.”

Narice chuckled and placed one of her hands over the top of Toria’s on her abdomen. “You are safe Toria.” She stated. “I will not allow you to fall.”

Narice felt warm excitement surge through her as she felt Toria’s arms tighten around her waist. “I will certainly hold you to that Narice.” She stated quickly.

Narice smiled under her helmet. She had made it very clear on the ship coming here that she did not want Toria referring to her by anything other than her name. It had taken several hours for this to finally sink in, but knowing that Toria now accepted that made Narice feel very good inside.

“Do not worry.” Narice spoke.

[Narice?] Deneth’s voice filled her head and Narice focused quickly and turned to look at the back of his huge head.

[Deneth?] She spoke in reply.

[Narice... you know what they are going to do don't you? Carisia and Anthar?] Deneth said.

Narice nodded slightly. [I have a pretty good idea, yes.]

[You have no intention of telling anyone, do you sister?] Deneth asked.

[Yuri has treated her as an inferior person for so many years my brother.] Narice spoke. [And you did not feel what I felt this afternoon. Her shields did not come down very far Deneth, but far enough to allow me a brief glimpse into her mind. What I saw there... what I saw there my brother, no one has the right to deny her. She has... she has dreamed of them for years Deneth. And they of her. Who am I to deny her something like that after what my sister has put her through?]

[I was hoping you would be of that mind my sister.] Deneth spoke.

[If the tiny glimpse I was able to sense is any indication Deneth, as soon as they decide she is already part of their lives, I doubt very much Androcles Leonidas and his young bride will be giving her up.] Narice spoke. [And his wife, this Sadi, I can sense the power growing within her by leaps and bounds. I doubt my mother, Yuri or Thast will be able to do a damn thing. I have a feeling that Prince Leonidas and his woman will viciously guard what they consider to be theirs. They are wolves after all... and I believe they already think Carisia is theirs. And they hers.]

[Why do you think this is? They had never met until we came here to Earth Narice.] He asked.

[That is a question I do not know the answer to.] Narice spoke. [It is beyond my level of comprehension Deneth. Perhaps... perhaps if we spend more time around them, we will come to understand. It is certainly nothing that I intend to try and stop. Not with the power of the draw I felt in that brief second.]

[Narice... these plans that your mother and sister have laid...] Deneth said. [Do we really need to use such tactics?]

[I don't believe so... no.] Narice answered immediately. [The devotion they have for their dragons here would not have allowed them to turn us away. I believe they would have helped us no matter what. King Leonidas is not who my mother and sister see. When I look at him... I do not see a war mongering animal without brains. I see a methodic and exceptionally intelligent man. A leader... a leader who would much prefer to command his people during peace rather than during war. But a man who will not back down from anyone.]

[What they have set in motion could very well destroy everything for us Narice.] Deneth spoke softly.

[That is why we will need to be ever vigilant and insure that we hinder those plans as best as we are able Deneth.] Narice spoke quickly. [There is much more to my mother’s plans than she has told us or led us to believe. And that, in part, is what we need to discover. In the meantime we must insure that they do not ruin the opportunity that fate and destiny has given us my brother.]

MJOLNIR'S HAND

As wolves who were men, Lycavorian people did not need as much sleep as other species within the Union. Because of this, Resumar Leonidas could always be assured of having the gym to himself in the very early morning hours, and this day was no different. He spent a full hour stretching and then using the assorted machines to keep his sculpted frame ripped before picking up the training Nehtes and beginning his personal training regime. Cemath rested quite comfortably on one side of the training room, gnawing on the large bone, occasionally looking up to watch his bonded brother. He had witnessed it for years, the routine almost never varying, and it was one of the reasons that Resumar Leonidas, second oldest of the King's sons, was considered one of the foremost combatants with a Nehtes within the Union.

The heat and humidity in the gym was high, and this was why Athani was able to stand on the balcony overlooking the gym and not be detected. Her scent did not carry down into the gym proper itself, at least the Lycavorian Prince had made no signs that it had, and she had stood here for nearly an hour just watching him. Athani's Puat was no fool, and no one gave her the credit she deserved. Of course not many knew who she really was. Even as she withered in sexual abandon engulfed by Pusintin's aura, Athani was planning for her moment of escape. Her father had thought to give his daughters more freedom to explore and perhaps be the bearers of the future for their people, the future that would see their females become more important parts in the Kavalian culture. Athani knew better.

The old ways were engrained in the senior Pack leaders and elders of the Kavalian people and Athani knew nothing would change. It might get better perhaps, but no where what it should be like and certainly nothing compared to what the Lycavorian Union was like. Here, Athani knew, females were treasured and treated with the utmost respect. They were looked on as the mothers of their future, and were allowed to do everything any male could do. Just in her seemingly mindless walk along the decks she had seen females giving direction to males, and this was taken in stride without question. She saw many female officers by the looks of their uniforms, of every species within the Union. Even among the vaunted Durcunusaan Athani had seen several females. And if the way they moved was any indication, Qurot or Karun would be hard pressed in a battle with any of them. That is what Athani craved. She craved the freedom to explore what her limits were. She craved the feel of a man's arms around her, not for sexual relief, but because he loved her.

Athani knew she was as intelligent and skilled as any female within the Union. Most of what she knew she had taught herself by incredible amounts of reading and visiting the lone Kavalian female who was the oldest among their people. She may have been female, but her age afforded her an enormous amount of leeway in what she did, and many of the males would go to her for interpretation of something they had seen in one of their drugged induced states. She had schooled Athani mercilessly, pushing her to points that Athani had never been, and Athani had basked in the knowledge. Her fighting skills had been taught to her by her father and brothers and were without question. All Kavalians, even the females, would be called on to fight for land and home if need be. Her feline genes gave her almost unmatched speed and reflexes, easily on a par with the elves of the Union, and since she had let her tail re-grow and return to its full length, it provided her with a balance and agility nearly unmatched.

Athani also knew that she was considered extremely beautiful. The biogenic treatments had only enhanced that by removing the fine coat of hair from her lithe body and allowing the soft skin beneath to flourish and grow healthy. She had an exceptionally body, firm full breasts and a small waist. Combined with her taut legs and the incredible shape of her tight ass, Athani knew she would be considered beautiful. Through the years having to endure Pusintin's truly unwanted attentions, she had expertly learned how to squeeze the inner muscles of her ass so that he would not last long inside her, as well as being able to manipulate his cock with her tongue in a similar fashion for a similar result. She was still pure however... and Athani had no intentions of allowing Qurot to take that from her. It would be a man of her choosing... that she desired... and looking at Resumar Leonidas as she had for the last hour, Athani was rapidly beginning to feel that he was that man strangely enough. Twice he had met her eyes without fear and both times she had seen not only the normal lust and desire for a woman of her beauty, but there had been something else in those eyes as well. He did not hesitate when it came to treating her as an equal, even brushing aside Qurot's attempts to do otherwise. Not to mention that when she did announce her intentions to defect, she would be far safer with him than any other person. The image of her in his arms and crying out in ecstasy also helped quite a bit as well she mused to herself.

"Are you lost?" The male voice asked.

Athani nearly jumped out of her skin as she spun around more quickly than she intended and dropped into a fighting stance, her long tail poised to lash out with lightning speed. Since letting her tail return to its full length and strength, Athani had practiced many hours on using it as an extension of her will. She could actually use it to suspend herself in the mid air for short periods of time if needed. Now however, the tip of her tail was curled around the pommel of the very thin razor sharp blade that she had pulled from the back of her collar as she spun around. Her blue/green eyes flew open when she saw Resumar Leonidas standing in front of her leaning up against the door frame. She glanced back into the gym proper as if not believing he was really in front of her, then turned back to face him quickly.

"How... you... how did you get up here?" Athani stammered scolding herself for losing herself in her thoughts and not being aware of everything around her.

Resumar smiled. "I'll answer that if you promise not to stab me." He spoke.

Athani gasped when she saw his eyes focused on the thin blade held by her tail and she turned a slight shade of red as she took the blade in her hand. "Oh... I'm... this will not force you to expel us from your territory will it?" She stuttered. "It... I'm sorry... please forgive me. I know this... Jalersi will be very upset with me if she finds this out. I..." She held the blade out to him. "Here." She said finally.

Resumar waved his hand slightly. "Keep it." Resumar spoke confidently. "You are not a threat to me."

Athani tilted her head to the side as she drew the knife back. "Are... are all of your people as arrogant as you?" She asked quickly, instantly regretting the question.

Resumar chuckled. "That's not what I meant." He said with a delicious glint in his eyes as far as Athani was concerned. "My mothers have always told me I have a hard time putting my thoughts into words. I guess they were right." He spoke. "I'm quite sure you are very skilled with that knife as well as many other weapons. What I meant is that you are not a threat in the sense of what is happening around us."

Athani looked at him as she slid the knife back into its sheath on the inside of her collar. "I'm not sure I understand." She spoke haltingly.

"I think you do." Resumar said as he moved onto the balcony with her and looked down into the gym below. [Cemath... it is ok brother.] He reached out.

Resumar didn't see Athani shake her head quickly as the strange buzzing filled her mind and he watched Cemath moved from under the balcony outcropping, his eyes looking upwards.

[Shall I call for security Res?] Cemath asked.

Resumar shook his head. [No. It's alright. I'll meet you in the landing bay in an hour for your bath.]

Cemath snorted. [Do not be late!] He announced. [My scales itch!]

[Your scales always itch!] Res spoke. [Go on!]

Resumar was smiling as he watched him make his way toward the exit before turning back to look at Athani. Her blue/green eyes fell on him. "You were speaking to him again?" She asked.

Resumar nodded. "You are very perceptive." He said. "And you don't seem to have the same fear of dragons that the rest of your people do. At least not on the same level as say Qurot or your sister. Why is that?"

"They... they do not mean any harm." Athani spoke softly. "They are benevolent by nature, are they not?"

Res nodded. "For the most part yes." He answered. "You asked how I got up here. Part of the bond with a dragon encompasses a certain amount of psychic ability. We can do things that would for the most part be impossible without the bond. Move things; lift myself up here... things like that."

Athani stepped closer to this tall young man, her eyes wide in interest. Her nose tickled slightly at the strong musky smell of his workout, but it was not at all unpleasant to her and she knew the Kavalian sense of smell was much less than that of a Lycavorian. Athani found herself suddenly wondering what she smelled like to him. "You... you can use these abilities to move objects and such?" She asked both very surprised and very intrigued.

Res nodded as her tangerine scent engulfed him and he felt a wave of warmth surround him as well, tingling and causing him to become aroused in a small manner. Resumar realized then that Kavalian females must have had something similar to Lycavorian females in the aura they could project to entice males and their mates. "Yes." He said with a smile as he easily fought back the urges. Obviously it was no where near as powerful as Lycavorian females and he was able to push it to the back of his mind.

"That is incredible!" Athani spoke. "Tell me more!"

Resumar smiled. "I think before I do that we should get back to what I said earlier. About why you are here."

Athani looked at him once more fearing that her female essence had not had the effect she had hoped for. "I... I am part of the trade delegation." She answered quickly backing away from him slightly.

"Are you?" Resumar said. "Why do you think I have such a hard time believing that?"

"I... I don't know." Athani said more quickly and realizing he most likely could smell the lie easily. "I should return to my quarters." She turned and made to walk away from him, suddenly very afraid of him.

Resumar reached out and took her arm gently. "Wait." He said softly.

Athani stopped and looked at him as his fingers closed around her arm. His grip was not demanding and not forceful. It was more concerned and caring and as she felt the warmth of his fingers through her arm, Athani shivered slightly. "I... I must go." She said in almost a whisper.

"I've known you less than two days... and for some reason I get the feeling you are not like the rest of your people." Resumar stated evenly. "That you have another agenda. One that does not include anyone but yourself. Why is that Athani Puat?"

Athani turned and met his sparkling dark eyes. Beautiful eyes. "You... you do not seem less interested in me because of my tail." She spoke. "Why?" She asked directly.

"On the contrary... I find your tail fascinating." Resumar answered. "It is part of you... and you are... you are exceptionally beautiful if you don't mind me saying so."

Athani turned to face him more now. "Then... then you felt it?" She asked. "My... my calling out to you?"

"If you mean what we would call your aura... yes." He answered. "I felt it. The better question is why did you do that?"

"It did affect you then?" Athani asked even more interested now.

"I don't know how your people would react to that, but to us it is a sign that a female is very interested in... very interested in having a relationship with a male." He stammered out. "Fortunately... I have enough control and respect to not act on my instincts alone. Now... why did you do that? Something tells me your sister or Commander Qurot would not be happy you did."

"Qurot is a pig!" Athani hissed. "He always has been a pig and he always will be!"

"Ok... now that we've deduced that... perhaps you could explain to me what is going on?" Resumar asked. "You are not here for trade talks are you?"

Athani made her decision then.

She released all of what he had called her aura as strongly as she knew how and she jumped into his arms covering his lips with her own.

Resumar Leonidas was the son of a man who had taught him and his siblings from the time they were old enough to understand to trust in their instincts. Given the fact that Athani was hitting him with a reasonably powerful female aura, and the taste of her lips on his was sending electric jolts through his body, Resumar trusted his instincts. With a low growl he wrapped his arms around the smaller Kavalian female and pinned her to the bulkhead as he took control of their kiss and deepened it while hitting her with a small portion of his own aura.

Athani's eyes grew wide for an instant as she felt his aura envelope her. Her claws extended from her fingertips and she prepared to strike him when she realized this was not Pusintin's aura surrounding her. This aura... this warmth... it was wrapping her in a protective embrace, just fluttering across her senses and making her body begin to react. It was not the overpowering aura that Pusintin hit her with. It was so much more controlled and precise. And respectful. She heard Resumar growl low in his chest, felt him pin her body against his and the bulkhead and press firmly against her as his kiss set fire to every nerve ending in her body. She realized in that instant that he was controlling his aura, letting her know that he found her just as attractive as she did him. Even though she could feel the heat building in her body, Athani still retained her ability to think and act clearly. His aura was not controlling her actions or her mind, and above all else this made her even more excited. When Athani grasped the sides of his face, her claws were retracted and she responded to the kiss with everything that she was, her eyes closing in new feelings and sensations she had never experienced before. It also helped that she had never been kissed before, and if his kiss foretold of things yet to come, Athani wanted to experience every part of it.

Resumar drew back from the kiss, even as Athani fought to continue it. His dark eyes were wide as he finally drew his face away from hers and looked at her face. The feel of her succulent body pressed against his was heaven, unlike any female he had ever held, and he was no stranger to women. He stared at her relaxed face, her lips slightly parted as her dazzling eyes opened slowly. Almost dreamily. He could still feel her aura spinning around him and he made no move to pull back his own as he leaned forward and firmly nuzzled her throat and chin with his nose, hearing her gasp softly in delight as luscious shivers of bliss coursed through her. Vibrations unlike any she had ever felt before rippled through her frame and Athani reveled in them.

Athani grasped his face in her hands once more and looked into his dark eyes. "Take me!" She gasped out, nearly out of control with passion and desire all her own. "Take me now! Right here!"

Resumar may have been a Leonidas... but he was also a wolf. An Alpha wolf that was very strong in his own right. And he was also a man who had an incredibly stunning woman in his arms that wanted him just as badly as he wanted her. Resumar tossed caution to the wind and began to follow his instincts and what they were screaming for him to do. His hands came up and he began to pull at Athani's clothes, struggling to expose her lush body to his hungry gaze. Athani began helping him, trying to get her jumpsuit unzipped for she burned to feel his lips on her skin.

They had succeeded in getting the front of her jumpsuit open and as his warm lips descended to the valley between her breasts in heated frenzy; her long tail twitching madly in delight, the COM panel on the side of the wall erupted into existence and shattered the moment they were having.

"Prince Resumar to the bridge! Prince Resumar to the bridge!" The voice boomed out.

Resumar exhaled heavily and for a fleeting moment he now knew how his father must have felt when he was interrupted enjoying the company of his mothers. With his head still resting against the flesh of her still partially covered breasts Resumar punched the panel behind Athani's shoulder.

"What is it?" He demanded.

"Milord... I did not want to wake your mother as it is still very early. We are picking up a signal from a Union MENKLA transport that says they are transporting a dozen more Kavalian delegates to MJOLNIR'S HAND and would like permission to be taken into our landing bay." The duty officer spoke.

Resumar lifted his head and looked at Athani. "Do you know of this?" He asked softly.

Athani shook her head quickly just as puzzled. "No. Everyone came with us. We know nothing of further delegates. At least I do not."

Resumar touched the panel again. "Find out their embarkation point and who they have on board." He stated. "And then wake my mother and the remaining members of the Kavalian delegation."

"Do we let them continue on their course Milord?" The duty officer asked. "They will intercept us in less than ten minutes."

"They waited this long to contact us?" Res asked as alarms began to sound in his head.

"I asked them that sire... and they said they were having difficulties with their long range transmitter. I did check their transponder codes and the ship is a registered Diplomatic carrier."

Athani noted that he had slowly lowered her back to the floor but made no move to push her away. She could feel his hard body pressed tightly against hers even as she looked up into his face. Athani had all sorts of emotions racing through her, none stronger than the fact she wanted this Lycavorian Prince in the worst possible way. This was the man she would surrender her purity to.

"Very well. Give them permission." Resumar stated. "Athani'Puat has joined me for coffee in the starboard mess lounge. We will make our way from here and inform my mothers and the others we will meet them in the starboard landing bay."

"Understood sire." The voice replied.

Resumar turned his eyes upon her and Athani felt her heart jump at the brightness of his dark eyes. "It is my hope that we can... that we can continue this at another time." He said.

Athani smiled brilliantly. "Oh... I would like that very much." She said quickly. "Very much indeed."
"We must go now to insure there are no questions." He stated. "I have no wish for either of us to get into trouble."

"Wait!" Athani said. "What... what will it be like?" She asked shyly.

Resumar leaned over and kissed her possessively. "Athani'Puat... I intend to love you senseless." He spoke confidently.

Athani could only gaze back at him and smile. Love her senseless. Not fuck her senseless. She felt the warmth inside her grow at his words and could hardly wait for that moment to come.

CHAPTER TEN

GYTHEIO

CRANAE ISLAND

ANDRO AND SADI'S VILLA

It was definitely awkward.

Anthar and Deneth stood behind Narice, Carisia and Toria warily watching as the three of them stared at Lisisa and Eliani Leonidas. Not far behind them rested the five dragons they had seen from the air, including Elynth's obsidian scales and the blue/black scaled monstrosity they had seen the first day they had arrived. That male was Lisisa Leonidas's dragon, Jeth, and the mahogany colored female they knew as Tharua was sitting next to him; her tail absently stroking Jeth's much longer and thicker one. Aradace's dark blue scales and Arydun's ochre brown scales contrasted quite a bit from where they sat next to each other and all of them were now looking in their direction and studying Anthar and Deneth keenly.

Eliani, as well as Lisisa were not dressed in a manner Narice had expected for a meeting either. Both of them were dressed in very tight black shorts and different colored bikini tops that proudly displayed their ample sized chests and left almost nothing to the imagination. This was without a doubt the Lycavorian sense of casual wear Narice thought to herself. Her mother had always told her that Lycavorians were far more open about their sexuality and displaying the beauty of their bodies than any within the High Coven. Apparently she had been right about that at least.

"I... I did not know if we should... if we should have Mindvoiced to tell you we were arriving." Narice spoke after a long moment.

Eliani's face changed then and she smiled brilliantly as she stepped forward. Always the first to reach out was Eliani Leonidas. "We wouldn't have been able to hear you anyway." She said stepping forward and holding out her hand. "The psychic dampeners that Androcles has surrounding the island are active. Anything over a hundred feet above us can not penetrate the dampeners."

"I thought psychic dampeners were not full proof." Narice said keeping her voice calm and neutral.

Eliani smiled and glanced at Lisisa quickly. "These are. They are special." She stated. "Since we have not been formally introduced... I am Eliani."

Narice smiled at Eliani's openness and the welcoming voice as she took her hand. This was not something she had expected either and while it took her slightly off guard, it was also a sign to her that perhaps they were not thought of as harshly as her mother and Yuri said they would be. "I am Narice... this is Toria Dellion and..."

"Hello sister." Lisisa spoke now... her voice soft and her dark forest green eyes focused directly on Carisia.

Narice and Toria watched as Lisisa stepped up to Carisia, their height only an inch apart. That they looked alike was easy enough to see with the raven colored hair and incredibly firm bodies. Their physical forms were nearly identical with their large breasts, narrow waists and lean muscular legs and flawless asses. Their facial features were incredibly similar as well with Carisia's skin tone just a shade or so lighter in color, but with the same elegant lines and shape of their lips. The Asian features for both of them were much less pronounced than with Dante, Javier and Lucia, giving both of them an extremely exotic look that would and could turn heads. They had obviously taken more from the genes of their respective fathers when it came to facial features.

Carisia stared at Lisisa wide eyed, taken aback at what Lisisa had said to her. "At... at the Retreat... you said..." She stammered.

"I said that fool Dante and his brother and sister were not my brothers and sister." Lisisa spoke with a smile as she looked at Carisia. A young woman who it seemed was just as hated by their mother as she was. "You however... my statement did not include you. I am so very happy to meet you sister."

Eliani was smiling as they watched Lisisa pull Carisia into her arms and embrace her tightly. All of them noticed that Carisia hesitated for only a moment, unsure of how to react, before she surrendered to the feelings within her and hugged Lisisa back, moistness coming to her eyes as new feelings flooded her being. This was one of the things she had always imagined happening. That she would finally be able to meet and talk with the sister who her mother had abandoned and then tried to kill so many years ago. It seemed they had quite a bit in common for Carisia knew without a doubt their mother planned a similar fate for her as well when the time came where she outlived her usefulness. Carisia had also come to realize that giving her to Thast was also a way to keep tabs on everything she did. Carisia did not know why Thast frightened her so. She knew without a doubt she could kill the man if she truly wanted, but something inside her made her cower from him almost as if it was somehow preordained. She didn't understand it, didn't like the feelings it gave it to, and she most certainly did not like his rutting and grunting body atop hers as he slobbered his way to his own gratification.

"Ok... enough already... they just got here Lisi. And I don't want to cry!" Eliani barked out with a smile.

Lisisa backed away, her own eyes moist and she looked at Carisia with a smile. "We have much to talk about you and I. Over the course of the next few months, I hope we can do just that."

Carisia's smile was just as wide as she nodded her head. "I so look forward to that." She replied.

"Good." Lisisa spoke. "Andro, Denali and Arrarn are out on the sea patio with Nyla and Zarah. Sadi and Elynth just returned from Sparta and she will join us soon. Come." She said turning.

"Anthar? Deneth?" Carisia spoke reaching back to touch the snout of her cerise colored brother whose huge head was hovering very close to her shoulder. Eliani and Lisisa noticed that Carisia hadn't even turned around and she knew right where his head was positioned so she could touch him. It was something they had seen Andro do so many times in the past years, almost as if he knew right where Elynth was going to be. They glanced at each other quickly before Elynth saved them.

They are most welcome to join us Lisisa. Elynth's voice spoke to them openly as she guided her obsidian colored body gracefully up behind Lisisa. It will even the odds somewhat, since Jeth always feels left out among the many females here. She spoke with some humor in her voice.

I ignore all of you except one anyway. Jeth announced clearly.

As well you should! Especially now! Tharua spoke affectionately.

Elynth allowed her golden eyes to settle on Anthar and she gazed at him intently. Come... sit with us Anthar and Deneth. We will join our bonded ones later on the beach. And we have an ample supply of behemoth bones.

Bones? Deneth spoke quickly, suddenly very interested. He had eaten better in the two days here on Earth than he had throughout his life so far. In just that two day period, he discovered he had a lusting for the massive bones they were provided. Large bones I hope?

Elynth smiled. Very large.

Anthar lowered his magenta eyes to Carisia. Sister? He asked softly.

Carisia nodded feeling his nervousness within their connection. We are safe here Anthar. She spoke immediately. Go. I will see you later.

They watched as Anthar and Deneth guided themselves around the five females and Elynth led them over to where the others dragons sat and waited until they had settled to the ground. They didn't take note, however, of how close Elynth sat to Anthar on the hard packed dirt, or the way her golden eyes gazed at him even as he looked at Jeth's enormous body with some awe.

Lisisa motioned to the doorway into the house. "We have to go through the house to get to the sea patio." Lisisa spoke. "You can change if you like."

“We... we only brought one change of clothes for sleeping.” Toria stammered. “At least... at least that is all I brought.”

“That is all any of us brought. We did not think Prince Androcles and yourselves would be dressed so... so...” Narice stuttered.

“So informally?” Eliani finished her statement with a grin. “Trust me... Andro will be the first one to tell you when you are able to toss the uniform, toss it. As far away as possible.” Her fern green eyes were bright and friendly. “We all keep clothes at each other’s villas. It makes it easier when we get together like this. We can find something for you to wear if you’d like. Now that Sadi has moved in and all of her clothes have arrived from Apo Prime, I’m sure she has something that will fit both you and Toria. Is that correct... your name I mean?”

Toria nodded. “Yes... Toria Dellion.”

“Sadi is about the same size as both you and Narice.” Eliani said looking at her again and smiling once more. “I can call you Narice, can’t I?”

“I’m guessing that when you are together you do not use titles. It would be foolish as close as all of you seem to be as brothers and sisters.” Narice spoke feeling very at ease due to Eliani’s actions and what had happened between Lisisa and Carisia. “Narice is just fine then. Toria’s posting is Intelligence but she...” Eliani and Lisisa stiffened slightly Narice saw.

“Intelligence?” Lisisa asked her voice even but touched with suspicion now.

“I will be assigned as one of the pilots for our unit.” Toria stated quickly seeing the way both Leonidas daughters reacted. “But like Narice and Carisia... I truly wish to see this training work out.”

Whether it was the sincere tone of her voice or what she had said, it caused even Narice to look at her with new questions in her eyes. New questions yes, but the sudden doubts and suspicion that had occupied their faces a second ago were now gone. Apparently being bonded so deeply to dragons as Eliani and Lisisa Leonidas were gave them a larger sense of people and their motives and purpose than even Narice and Deneth shared. Something that Narice had every intention of changing over the next few months.

“Come inside...” Lisisa spoke finally. “If we are to put aside the mistrust that has always clouded the air between our people, then let it start with us. I think we can all agree that we do not need to regard each other as enemies with the Kavalians hating both our peoples.”

Narice nodded at that comment. “No. No... we do not.” She stated in agreement.

Eliani smiled as well. “She’s much prettier with words than I am.” She stated reaching out and taking Narice and Toria’s hands gently. “Come on... let’s talk with Sadi and find you some proper beach attire.”

Lisisa looked at Carisia as Eliani led Narice and Toria inside and took her hand. “Come sister... let me show you the life I have come to embrace and cherish. The life you will have one day I hope.”

Carisia looked at her surprised. “Why... why do you say that?” She asked. “How... how could you know that?”

Lisisa smiled gently. “I think you will find that no matter what you have experienced in your past... the future will change the moment you walk through these doors. Your bond with Anthar is strong... almost as strong as mine with Jeth. I sense it will grow even stronger if you embrace what Andro will teach you. And possibly open your eyes to many new and wonderful things. As my bond with Jeth did for me. And hopefully it will allow us to grow closer as well.” Lisisa squeezed Carisia’s hand. “I have many sisters who I love without question... but I only have one who is truly of my blood. That is you.”

Carisia stared at her for a long moment and then took a deep breath. This is what she had waited for. The opportunity for her and Anthar to turn their lives around and become truly free. It was within her grasp now, and Carisia was not about to let it slip away.

Carisia smiled a genuine and heartfelt smile for the first time in her life outside of her time spent with Anthar. “I look forward to that... sister.” She said squeezing Lisisa’s hand as well.

“Good... I have something that will fit you perfectly and I can give you a tour of Andro’s home while we are inside.” Lisisa said. “He does not decorate too badly for a man.”

The inside of Androcles’s home was not what Carisia had envisioned in the least. In her dreams with them they had always been on an island yes, but that island had a three story palace structure on it that was elegant looking but not overly extravagant. This villa was a single story structure of granite and metal all around, widely spacious and very tastefully decorated. It was very bright in some areas from the sun pouring into the large windows. Since it was on an island, much of the view was of the surrounding gulf with its blue green waters. Looking out the north end of the villa, Carisia saw towering pines and timber. The villa occupied one end of the island they had seen from the air; the rest covered in timber except for a hundred meter stretch of sand and pebbles all along the edges. There were many paintings and metope carvings on the walls; one section of the main living area wall dedicated to what appeared to be ancient Spartan armor and weapons.

There were large crates and shipping containers near one door she noticed which took away from the soft and pleasant feeling of the villa but not very much. Lisisa saw this and smiled.

“Sadi’s things began arriving a few days ago.” Lisisa explained. “Even she didn’t realize what she had accumulated over the years. She must have directed our people to take everything from within her apartment on Apo Prime. Even the plants.”

Carisia began to smile as the voice echoed from behind them. “That was not me.” Carisia spun around very quickly and felt her heart leap into her throat as she saw her approach. “That was my father.” Sadi finished. “I think he purchased more than I had in my entire apartment and sent it all here.”

Carisia watched as Sadi stopped in front of them and Lisisa leaned over to her casually. They shared a soft kiss on each other’s cheek without hesitation. It was something that Sadi had discovered was very common among Andro’s family and she found herself doing the same thing almost like second nature. Sadi wore a plain white bikini top and bottom that contrasted incredibly with her deeply tanned skin and long blond hair which flowed around her face well past her shoulders. The see-through beach cover fell to the tops of her thighs, but did nothing to hide the fullness of her breasts or the way the bikini panties formed around her mound. Her jungle green eyes were so very bright and full of intelligence and it was all Carisia could do to not wrap herself around this woman. Until these last three days she had only seen Sadi in her dreams and from afar... never really close enough to touch... always just out of reach. While Carisia had never been with a woman before, having to endure Thast’s putrid hands on her, she had always wondered what it would be like with Sadi. This woman who had haunted her dreams for so long with Androcles Leonidas. There had never been another woman, only Sadi had ever filled her dreams, and Carisia found herself wanting to explore her curves and figure just as powerfully as she wanted to explore Androcles. Sadi and Androcles Leonidas. The two who she was meant for.

“Sadi this is...” Lisisa started.

“Carisia.” Sadi spoke softly, her eyes never leaving Carisia’s beautiful face. “Yes... I know.” She said.

Sadi’s own heart was racing nearly out of control, matching the thumping of Carisia’s in almost every way and this was easy enough for Carisia to detect with her sensitive vampire hearing. “Wel... welcome.” Sadi managed to stammer out. She held out her hand for Carisia, who did not hesitate for an instant in taking it.

Lisisa heard male laughter coming from the sea patio and turned her head away just as their hands came in contact. She did not see the physical reaction from just their fingers touching, the almost imperceptible jerk from both of them as the physical contact sent shivers jolting through them and for a fleeting instant their minds mingled and became one with a third. Lisisa did hear the soft gasp from both of them however and she turned back quickly to see their eyes close and open quickly.

“Sadi... Carisia?” She asked quickly. “What is wrong?”

Carisia held Sadi’s hand for a moment longer relishing in the sensations of the brief touch their minds had made, and the feel of Sadi’s warm skin on hers. Even in that instant, their minds had touched and joined with Androcles. Carisia felt the staggering power they wielded, though it was as yet fully untapped. It sent shivers of delight rushing through her when Sadi made no move to release her hand until Lisisa turned back around. Then reluctantly, their hands drew apart and Sadi looked at Lisisa.

“Nothing Lisi.” Sadi said quickly her mind racing for something to explain their reactions to each other. “Elynth... Elynth was...”

I was reacting to a rather crude comment from my brother! Elynth’s voice broke into their thoughts. She had sensed the reaction as well in both Andro and Sadi. KertaGai felt my reaction.

Lisisa laughed out loud. Jeth... are you misbehaving? She exclaimed.

I am not! Jeth replied.

Carisia was stunned that they would speak unshielded and this showed on her face. Not to mention the fact that the Prince's dragon had instantly reacted and covered for Sadi and hers response to touching each other for the first time. "You... you speak unshielded?" She asked quickly.

Lisisa looked at her with a nod. "The dampeners surrounding the island are powerful enough to block even my father and your grandmother." Lisisa explained to her. "All of our individual villas are set up like this, including the main villa in Sparta. It allows us to converse freely with each other and our bonded ones. Speaking shielded does tend to put a strain on your mind as well you know."

"Yes... it does." Carisia agreed. "But... my... my grandmother... my mother... they..." Carisia stated.

"The Empress would not be able to breach the dampeners protecting this island even on her best day." Andro's deep voice sounded from behind them. "Your mother would have even less success in doing this. They are identical to the psychic dampeners that once occupied the Mindvoice ship and rendered Mindvoicing impossible in certain areas for purposes of study and reflection on events."

Carisia turned far more quickly than Lisisa and she let out an involuntary gasp at what she saw. Androcles Leonidas wore only his loose fitting white pants, the crimson trim down the outside of his pant legs. Aside from that, he was barefoot, without a shirt and exposed for Carisia's maya blue eyes to drink in every portion of his chiseled frame and upper body. She saw the rippled cut of his chest and abdomen, the trio of scars that dotted the upper left portion of his chest, as well as the Talon Guardian brand just above his heart. The thickness and definition of his arms and the broadness of his shoulders made Carisia almost weak kneed, not to mention that his presence within Mindvoice was almost overwhelming. He was not shielding as he had the times on the airfield or at the State Dinner when she tried to probe him. She dare not reach out to him now, for it would not do to lose herself.

Andro stepped up to Sadi quickly and looked at her. "KertaGai?" He asked softly.

Sadi nodded quickly with a smile knowing that he had felt the spike in her emotions and the mingling of hers and Carisia's minds with his, however brief it may have been. She pressed up against him and slipped her arms around his waist. "How soon before we eat?" She asked quickly. "I'm starving!"

"That depends." Andro replied with a smile.

"On what?"

"On whether you checked the Stifado like I asked." Andro said with a grin. (Greek cuisine; Venison stew with pearl onions, red wine and cinnamon.)

Sadi's eyes grew wide. "Sibfla!" She exclaimed releasing her grasp of him and bolting off towards where the kitchen was.

Andro turned and looked at Carisia, towering over her petite but lush five foot two frame. He inhaled deeply and let her scent fill his head. The smell of freshly bloomed rose petals filled his senses, and just as Sadi's sugarplum and spice scent made him light headed, Carisia's scent was doing the same thing to him. "Welcome Carisia... I am very... I am very happy you arrived safely." Andro caught his words quickly but not before hearing Sadi laugh within his mind.

[See... I'm not the only one she affects so Androcles Leonidas!] She declared to him in the heavily shielded connection, knowing no one among his family or on the planet for that matter could penetrate their shields with the exception of perhaps Elynth. [You felt it too Andro... I know you did. It is like... it is like she is already ours my love! Has always been ours! How can we fight it Andro? You feel the pull to her, I know you do. We desire her just as intensely as we desire each other.]

[I can't deny it.] Andro spoke. [I won't deny it KertaGai. It is just very complicated.]

[It is only as complicated as we make it my love.] Sadi answered. [I know your blood burns for her... just as mine does. I do not want to fight it... no matter what we talked of.]

Carisia's eyes were wide now as well for she had heard every word they had just spoken even though the conversation was heavily shielded. She expanded her own awareness and suddenly realized she was within their shielded thoughts.

[I am yours.] She stated firmly seeing Andro's azure eyes grow larger and hearing Sadi gasp within their connection. [I... I have always been yours. And you have always been mine. I do not... I do not want to lose that.]

Lisisa stood watching as they stared at one another. She could feel the tremors within Mindvoice and she knew they were talking, though of what she did not know. Lisisa knew not even their father could breach Andro's Mindvoice shields when he did not want him to. She wrongly thought it had something to do with Carisia being Yuri's daughter and her sister. She reached out and softly squeezed Andro's arm.

"Andro... is everything ok?" She asked with some trepidation in her voice.

Andro tore his eyes from Carisia and looked at Lisisa, hiding the shock on his face that he and Sadi had included Carisia within their shielded conversation almost like second nature. His face changed almost immediately and he smiled and nodded his head quickly. "Yes Lisi." He replied in an even tone. "Everything is fine. You were going to try and find something for Carisia to wear and I need to make sure Sadi did not burn our dinner."

Lisisa felt relief wash over her and she smiled. "You're sure?" She asked.

Andro nodded and looked back to Carisia. "Yes... I'm sure." He said. "And be mindful of the fact that Carisia may not be as free spirited as you in her taste of clothes." He stated with a little humor.

"Ronnus!" Lisisa exclaimed as she punched him lightly in the arm. Lisisa took Carisia's hand once more and pulled her gently. "This way Carisia." Lisisa said as she guided her away. "Let's get you changed and I will introduce you to my other brothers who are lounging outside like the loafers they always are."

Carisia had to consciously tear her eyes from Androcles's face, not understanding what she had seen in his stunned expression. She felt a momentary flash of worry and pain thinking that perhaps what she had feared all along was actually taking place. That they would reject her out of hand because they had found one another already. This sensation was quickly smashed aside as she felt a warmth flood her mind that nearly overwhelmed her senses. It was the most exquisite feeling she had ever experienced and it could only be coming from Sadi and Andro. It was so very powerful and complete and it washed over her senses like a gentle wave of ocean water.

[Never fear that Carisia!] Sadi's voice told her with absolute certainty. Carisia could sense Androcles's presence in the Mindvoice connection very faintly, almost as if he was just hovering on the edge and she realized that Sadi had thrown up incredibly powerful shields around just the two of them. A shield that he was making no attempt to penetrate and in fact was helping to reinforce. [We will never reject you.]

[I can feel him so vividly. I can feel you! I want... I want you both. More than I have ever wanted anything in my life.] Carisia exclaimed. [You have been in my dreams for so long. In my mind. How... how did this happen?]

[Does it matter how?] Sadi answered quickly. [You are right... we are yours. And you are ours. We will need to talk of this thing we have discovered Carisia. But know that... know that we do feel the same.]

[When?] Carisia asked quickly. [Why did he react so?]

[As soon as we are able. That you were... that we included you in our thoughts without thinking surprised us. That is all Carisia.] Sadi replied. [It is only another sign that we were meant for each other. The Feravomir was right.]

[Your first Oracle?] Carisia asked quickly. [What...what did she say? Tell me... you must tell me please.]

[Andro and I have already talked of this thing we have found with you. We have felt it for so long and did not fully come to realize what it was until you came here. Andro wishes it to be just as much as we do Carisia. He is a man however and I am discovering there are many facets to him. I... we will discover them together. Now... now that we have found you... we will not let you go.]

Lisisa couldn't understand the small smile of happiness that dotted Carisia's face as she led her into one of the spare rooms in the villa. She would discover it in time, and it would only reinforce for her what she had come to accept many years ago. The bloodlines of her father and mother would forever be intertwined by history, fate and...

And destiny.

CABELIR
OLD KAVALIAN EMPIRE HOMEWORLD
POPULATION: 785 MILLION

Pusintin looked out over the calm waters of the lake that the back of his home opened onto and found his thoughts drifting back in time as they so often did when Jalersi was not here. His Kavalian mate had a unique way of keeping him focused in the here and now. She was so different than the Lycavorian woman he had married when he was King of Sparta. That he could not even recall her name did not bother him at all. She was a weak female, even for a Spartan, and he never questioned leaving her or his son behind when he left Earth. Jalersi however, she had given him three strong sons and a willful and intelligent daughter, and she was equally as strong as he was. She was intelligent and utterly gorgeous, not to mention she was a wildcat in their bed, often times even testing his limits of endurance. He by far preferred Jalersi to her sister Athani or any other female he had seen in through the years. Jalersi could tolerate his unshielded Lycavorian aura because of her incredibly strong persona and the biogenic treatments she had to tolerate every month to keep her tail from re-growing as Athani's had allowed hers to do. Athani became nothing more than a whimpering slut against his aura, and while taking her tight ass was pleasant, he much preferred his mate.

Pusintin slowly moved his head around in a circle on his shoulders to work out the stiffness in the back of his neck. He reached up to massaged the area just under his shoulder length hair and felt the scars that his dirty blond hair hid. His fingers touching the bumpy scars where his brother's teeth had sunk deeply into the flesh at the back of his neck preparing to shatter his spine and kill him instantly. Their mother's eyes gazing at him had stayed his actions that day, forever ripping from Pusintin his past and severing all ties he may have had to the Union or the bloodline of Leonidas. Losing the fight Pusintin could tolerate well enough, his brother was equal in size to him when in wolf form, which was something he had not expected. They were of equal strength and reflexes, however he had not expected his brother could fight as well as he could in their wolf forms. It was a mistake that had very nearly cost him his life if not for Martin's pitiful sense of morality and value. Losing the fight with his brother was nothing to him. Having his mother spit on him... denounce him as her son as he lay helpless on the ground... that had been the ultimate act of betrayal his twisted mind could comprehend. The hate he felt for his mother and brother did not often surface now; Jalersi and his children with her had been like a soothing balm over that wound, but there were times when he allowed it to come to the surface. If only a little bit.

"My son?" The male voice spoke from behind him.

Pusintin turned quickly and looked at the only man he had known as a father.

Cukoum'Harop held two glasses of dark colored ale in his hand and he held out one to him. He had been a member of the Kavalian unit that had taken him from Earth, and when he saw the determination and fierceness in those eyes, he had chosen to spare Pusintin's life and raise him as his own. He had lost his sons in the wars with the Lycavorians and the High Coven, and he had treated him as any father would. It was by his grace alone that Pusintin even lived at all.

"You are lost in your thoughts again." Cukoum spoke as he watched Pusintin take a long pull of the strong ale.

"I miss my mate's attentions." Pusintin stated with a smile. "Jalersi has a way of making me forget things that are unpleasant."

Cukoum chuckled. "Yes... I can think of two ways right off the top of my head."

Pusintin joined his father in laughter. "I will be fine father." He spoke.

"Good. They are arriving." Cukoum spoke.

"Yes... I saw their Lifter." Pusintin spoke as they began walking into the large estate and through the rooms. "Did Keleru say what it was he wanted? We were not scheduled to meet for another two days."

Cukoum shook his head. "Only that it was important and very informal. He knows how you are in regards to Jalersi. Perhaps he worries that you will go after her to see that she is not corrupted by the Union dogs."

"Jalersi, corrupted by them?" Pusintin laughed. "I fear she will corrupt them. Even as she shows them their place."

They walked through the home to where the servant girl was showing Keleru and a man he did not know into the foyer of their home. Pusintin smiled as Keleru met his eyes.

"Prefect... this is a surprise!" He stated formally for he did not know who the new Kavalian was.

Keleru smiled baring his sharp teeth for a moment. "Forgive the intrusion... but I have come across some new information that might be of interest to you. I felt you should be made aware."

Pusintin nodded as Keleru stepped up to him and gripped his shoulders tightly. “You are tolerating Jalersi’s absence well I hope?”

Pusintin grinned. “As well as can be expected.” He answered.

“Your devotion to my daughter makes me proud Pusintin.” Keleru spoke honestly.

“Well... I rather like having my equipment functioning.” Pusintin answered. “If I was not devoted, she would insure I was not able to use it any longer.”

Keleru roared with laughter and nodded his head. “Yes... she is headstrong in that way, isn’t she?”

Pusintin looked at the new Kavalian, noting that his dark fur was heavily laced with gray hair along his face and neck. “Who is this Prefect?” He asked.

“Bah! Enough with this Prefect name!” Keleru declared. “I am here informally visiting the mate of my daughter. You need not worry about Ogat. He is a friend of many decades.”

“Ogat?” Cukoum spoke slightly stunned. “The Senior Scholar Ogat’Gyars?”

The older Kavalian nodded his head. “It is truly an honor to be in the presence of you and your father Cukoum’Harop, Marshall Pusintin. An honor indeed. I have enjoyed the many entries I have made into our history with your deeds over the last few years. You have helped our people reclaim their rightful place in the universe. We are feared once more and we have the power to destroy our enemies. Something you have been doing quite well.”

Pusintin nodded slowly. “To be in the company of such wisdom is humbling.” He spoke. “And I intend to keep you busy over the course of the next years as we push to wipe out the bloodsuckers.”

The older Kavalian chuckled. “Keleru said you were incredibly respectful of your elders. That you treat your father as royalty and never question the rule of law. And that you were very confident in your abilities.”

“Oh... I question the rule of law.” Pusintin spoke. “I am not foolish enough to attempt to change it unless the Pride Leaders all agree however. I have confidence in my abilities because of those I surround myself with who execute my plans with such vigor and precision.”

Ogat chuckled once more and nudged Keleru in the back of his shoulder. “I see why you like this man’s company so much.” He spoke.

Keleru nodded. “Indeed.” He saw the surprised looks on their faces at the familiarity between this Ogat and Keleru, and the ease with which the older Kavalian acted around him. He smiled. “Ogat and I have been friends for nearly five centuries. I trust and honor him implicitly. He has been working on something in private for me, and he has discovered some things that may alter our actions somewhat in the future. If you approve of them that is.” Keleru said looking at Pusintin.

Pusintin looked surprised. “Me?”

Keleru nodded. “You are the Military Commander for our forces and these things he has discovered concern you. We will not act upon them unless you deem them to be feasible and able to be accomplished.”

Pusintin nodded slowly. “Please... the air is pleasant enough... let us move to the main veranda. Bring more Csinga Wine Weos! Quickly now!” He spoke to the young female who waited just out of reach. He watched her scamper off before turning to look at them. “Jalersi doesn’t allow anything stronger than Csinga Wine in our home, but it is three hundred years old and the finest we could find.”

“Excellent!” Keleru spoke. “I haven’t had a good glass of Csinga Wine in months. Not since the last time I was here.” He took Pusintin’s arm. “I think you may find what Ogat has found to be very interesting.” He spoke as they headed for the outdoor veranda while Cukoum and Ogat fell in behind them.

“...dispatched Pian with the new directives to Jalersi and Athani.” Keleru spoke as he sipped the wine at the small table on the veranda. “He last reported he had arranged transport from Qurot’s ship on a Union Diplomatic Carrier that would take him to your brother’s ship. They had one stop to make and they should be intercepting this MJOLNIR’S HAND within the hour. Jalersi contacted me from this ship but the transmission was brief. I let her know someone was coming but she did not give me time to tell her who. They were having a meeting with this Queen For’mya right away. She said she would contact me tomorrow after Karun had insured the transmissions were not being monitored. A strange name for a ship, isn’t it Pusintin? The same as the name of their unit of dragons.”

“It is the name of the mythical weapon of an ancient Earth God. A hammer carried by Thor, the God of Thunder.” Pusintin answered thoughtfully. “He is said to be the most powerful of all the gods worshiped by the humans from ancient times on Earth. Fools if you ask me. We were the real gods, and we lived among them and they never knew it.”

“Well... he will meet with this ship within the hour and pass on my information to Jalersi.” Keleru spoke.

“You sent Pian?” Pusintin asked as he lowered the glass of ale.

Keleru waved his hand. “I ordered him to leave with additional females when Jalersi reported they were waiting for a Union Envoy to arrive. I thought perhaps making our offer more enticing would make them act more quickly. And if the request for an embassy was granted, they would have the personnel on hand to open it right away. The Union representative arrived at Qurot’s ship before Pian got there and left with Jalersi and our delegation... so he simply asked for assistance from the Union and continued on his own. He says the Union dogs were very accommodating and had a ship to him in a matter of a few hours.”

“Why Pian?” Pusintin asked quickly. “He is not a diplomat.”

“I had initially done this because Jalersi reported to me that Qurot was not going to be very corporative.” Keleru spoke. “He was challenging her authority. After her report last night, I am glad I did. He made a minor suggestion in regards to killing the second elven Queen when they arrived on the Union ship and nearly got his ass burned alive by one of their dragons! And then Leonidas’s second oldest son made him look the fool when talk turned to his ill-fated attempt to conquer that Union planet. Their intelligence is much better than we first thought it seems.”

“Wait... I thought that debacle was conducted by a rogue officer?” Ogat asked.

Keleru shook his head. “It was Qurot’s doing.” He saw Pusintin’s surprised expression and smiled. “Ogat is aware of most of what we do Pusintin. He holds my complete confidence, much like you do.”

Pusintin nodded in understanding. If Keleru trusted the man, than it was safe to assume he could as well. “We never had enough information tying him to the actual orders to act upon.” Pusintin spoke. “He was very careful in how he made it look... but he was the one who gave the order of that we are sure.”

Ogat looked aghast. “He sent twenty-five thousand of our finest to the slaughter!” He gasped.

Keleru nodded. “In order to avoid conflict amongst the Prides, we went along with his version of events and then proclaimed that Union forces overreacted. Much of the details of what happened we have kept out of the public eyes.”

“With good reason.” Cukoum snapped. “He would have been flayed and stripped of his title for ordering such an event and almost drawing the Union into the war against us.”

Keleru nodded. “I would have flayed him myself had that occurred.” He stated. “I am sending Pian because he still has an infatuation with Jalersi and she will be able to control him better.” He looked at Pusintin. “You do not have an issue with this, do you?”

Pusintin snorted in disgust. “Pian?” He laughed softly. “Jalersi is my mate. My wife. She has no more interest in Pian than I do in taking another female. She thinks of him as a fool. Try as he might... Jalersi will put him in his place I’m quite sure.”

Keleru nodded. “I thought you might react that way.” He said turning to Ogat. “I told you Ogat my friend... most of our males would have been livid at this. That is the devotion and trust he has in my daughter, and she in him.”

Ogat nodded. “Yes... I see. Will it extend to what we tell him however?”

Pusintin looked at him intently, and then cut his eyes to Keleru. “What is going on Keleru?” He asked.

“Ogat has been working on something private for me these last years as I said.” Keleru spoke.

“In what way?” Pusintin asked.

“I mused about it for several years after our return from Earth, for I did not know how you would react or if it was even possible.” Keleru continued as if he hadn’t heard him. “Only after I saw how you struck forward with your life here with us, with Jalersi, not with self pity or remorse but with determination and intent. Then I knew how you would react. Then I had Ogat begin his search.”

“His search for what?” Cukoum asked now.

Ogat leaned forward at the table and placed three data pads on the marble surface that he produced from within his velvet clothing. “The information on these pads is known by only a handful of people, most of whom are now dead.” He saw the looks on Pusintin and Cukoum’s faces and smiled. “Yes... I eliminated them. Well... almost all of them. Two still live because they were too far out of my reach and far too prominent within the Union to remove and one Leonidas himself condemned to eternal death.”

Pusintin leaned forward now. “You have my attention Ogat.” He spoke.

“They contain a combination of information that was stolen from High Coven data cores when those vampires who fought with us deserted their masters. They hold the complete files of our dealings with Maruad throughout the years. He was banished to some forsaken planet by Leonidas and has not been seen since. It also has the complete files from that fool who thought himself a god on Elear. The elven Queen Dysea did us a favor when she removed him from this existence, but the information he had gathered was very compelling. There are several entries from two members of the largest insurgent group within the High Coven. They were captured several years ago and tortured until we had every bit of information in them. There are also entries from the wives of two members of Leonidas’ inner circle.”

Pusintin’s eyes darted to Keleru. “We have people within the Union?” He gasped. “Those close to him?”

Keleru shook his head. “Not in the manner you might think. Getting anyone close to him would be next to impossible as you well know. They are ruthlessly vetted by this Armetus character before they are allowed anywhere near Leonidas’ inner circle.” He answered. “However... we have many Lycavorians who are unwittingly in our employ. Most of them believe they are working for a group within the Union itself that desires peace above all else. No matter the cost. It is a small group, barely registering on anyone’s level that could be construed as a threat. In fact, most of them are complete idiots who would not last an hour in any type of life threatening situation. They have a dream of utopia within the Union. They do not understand that for peace to be real and binding in any way, there must be those willing to lay down their lives to fight for it. Any realistic male or female knows this. They believe they are gathering information for their group to eventually change the Union into this utopia. They are wide spread within the Union for their numbers are small. We employ several Lycavorian mercenaries that we pay very well to act as fronts for this organization. They maintain facilities within The Wilds at different locations. We don’t trust them... but we pay them well enough to keep their loyalty and they are watched. They in turn control these ridiculous individuals within different aspects of life in the Union. They gather the information given to them, attempt to confirm it as best they are able since they can move about freely within the Union, and then they send it to us. Some of the information on these pads was gleaned from listening to the mates of those relatively close to Leonidas as they met for lunches in Sparta over a period of several years.”

“How long have you been doing this?” Pusintin asked Ogat.

“I gathered and formed the information over the course of twelve years and spent the last two putting it all together into something that was coherent and presentable. There is extensive information on all five of the Queens, most notably the only two with true royal blood in their veins, the Hadarian witch and the second elven queen who I believe Jalersi is meeting with now. There is information on Leonidas himself... some of which is not common knowledge, though most of his history is known already. There is information from High Coven archives, as well as library archives on Elear, Hadaria and within Sparta herself.” Ogat replied.

“How did you manage that?” Pusintin asked. “Information from the archives on Sparta would not be easily obtainable.”

“They would be if you are patient.” Ogat replied with a smile. “And I wanted it to be at least feasible when I presented it to Keleru.”

“Presented what?” Pusintin asked.

“It would not be easy.” Keleru spoke now. “And it would require careful planning and to insure that only a handful of us knew about it, which is why I asked that only your father be present today. It is not something I want the other Pride Leaders to discover. At least not yet. They would not understand my actions for they would only see short term and not the end result. It very well may be impossible to execute given the changing circumstances and the unknown factor his children play into the equation. The risks may be too great for us. However I felt we should bring it to your attention.”

Pusintin shook his head quickly. “Keleru... I hate it when you do not come to the point!” He spoke. “What exactly are we talking about here?”

“You have always thought there is no way for you to reclaim your birthright.” Keleru spoke. “As the oldest son of Leonidas. The right you have to the throne of Sparta and the Union?”

Pusintin shook his head. "I forfeited that birthright when I swore my allegiance to my new family and people." He said confidently. "I have no regrets about that Keleru, not in the least. You know that."

Keleru nodded. "Yes. Something you have proven countless times throughout your years among us. However, what if it was possible for you to wield this power again? What if you could control the Union as their King?"

Pusintin shook his head once more. "Never." He spoke. "It would never happen. There is far too much diversity within the Union. I am a pariah within their borders now. Everyone knows I am still alive and they know what I have done. The ruling Lycavorian Senate would never allow me to take power in any way, shape or form even if I did wish to challenge my brother. Which I don't. Any attempt by me to act in such a way would be scorned and dismissed without so much as a glance and we would make far more enemies within the Union than we already have."

"If it was possible however, we would eliminate the Union as a threat to us." Ogat spoke. "And we could use their considerable military might as we saw fit to crush the High Coven into oblivion. We would essentially defeat our two most hated enemies with a single fell stroke."

"It's not possible." Pusintin said leaning back. "I've thought about this myself I admit that to you now. I've even gone through it with Jalersi." He shook his head. "It can't be done. For it to be even a feasible operation that might work, my brother would have to be dead. His sons would have to be dead, even the young ones. There is no way to eliminate the entire royal family. He has five Queens, all of whom have given him several children, all of whom would be accepted without question as leaders if anything untold were to happen to my brother. Even that vampire witch Isabella is adored by many, especially those within their military. There is no possible way to kill them all."

"What if I said we don't have to?" Keleru spoke softly. "What if I told you we would only have to kill Leonidas himself? Perhaps the oldest son as well. After that... after that with what Ogat has discovered... the others would have no choice but to follow the rule of their very own laws."

Pusintin looked at them. "Just how would we manage to get close enough to my brother to kill him? Or his oldest son for that matter? You know as well as I, just from the intercepts of their Netnews channels that they have a power I do not. A power I will never have. The Coven has tried to kill Martin Leonidas for years and they were never successful. When his first born son became old enough, they even went after him several times. Half of the attempts they do not even know about. The Durcunusaan... these Wolves of the Blood... they took care of them before they became a threat. We learned that much from the Coven traitors who fight with us now. It is the reason I told Jalersi to avoid contact with these Durcunusaan no matter what. They are an unknown to us Keleru. We don't know how many of them there are outside of those assigned to protect my brother and his family, or what they are capable of." He said. "Not to mention there is no way for me to make a legitimate claim to the throne of Sparta and the Union. Not now. Not after what I have done. Hell... I don't want to."

"Would you believe me if I told you there is a legitimate way for you to reclaim your throne of Sparta and the Union?" Keleru said. "And once that is done, we can combine our two empires into a single entity and destroy the High Coven for all time. We would rule the universe Pusintin my friend."

"However tempting it may be... I don't see how it is possible." Pusintin said shaking his head again. "I have no blood claim to the throne any longer."

"You would not be making the claim per say." Keleru spoke with a smile. "Though the blood of a son of Leonidas would be."

Pusintin's eyes grew a little wider. "Karun?" He gasped.

Keleru smiled and shook his head. "Let me show you how we would do this Pusintin. This will not work without your agreement... but it could very well put you back on the throne you lost millennia ago. The throne that is rightfully yours anyway. And who knows... you might actually take some pleasure from it."

Pusintin looked at his father for a moment. Cukoum shrugged. "It might be interesting to hear." He spoke.

Pusintin turned back to Keleru. "Ok... let's hear what you have."

THE WILDS

Anton watched as Cihera cut her way smoothly through the blue green waters of the enclosed lagoon. He never tired of watching his mate or looking into her beautiful amber eyes when she wasn't wearing false lenses. They had arrived with nary a problem, entering the main resort like gushing newlyweds. It was an easy enough role to play since they had never had such an experience after becoming joined. The resort's employees could only smile at the almost childish way they acted with each other, not enough to draw undue attention to themselves, but enough to dispel any suspicions from those who may or may not have been monitoring the resort. The first night and days they had spent enjoying the many facilities the resort offered, even attending the play as Anton had told her they would. Upon returning from the play they had enjoyed a night of loud, blistering sex; something that neither of them had to fake in the least. Anton was the largest man Cihera had ever been with, and she was unable to keep her cries of passion from escaping her lips as they made love. They did not need to act in that regard.

Now they sat on the main promenade around the enclosed lagoon, the sun beating down brightly on the several hundred men and women of all species that lounged around the lagoon. Anton got to his feet with a towel in hand as Cihera pulled herself from the lagoon. He stepped up to her and draped the towel around her shoulders as he dropped a soft kiss to her shoulder as any loving husband would.

"You look delicious as always." He stated softly.

"You aren't so bad yourself you know." Cihera said as she turned to look at him and he pulled her close to him heedless of her wet body.

"Our target has arrived." He said keeping his face locked in an expression of unfettered love.

Cihera didn't acknowledge his soft comment immediately and instead slipped her arms over his shoulders pressing even closer to him. Her face also was locked into an expression of passion and desire, something she did not have to fake when it concerned her husband. "Location?" She asked.

"Across the lagoon." Anton answered as he hugged her. "Third table from the door. Just as the Evolli had described. A fat Kochab."

Cihera laughed as if he was whispering something seductive in her ear. "No one has ever accused them of being smart Anton." She spoke.

Anton began to guide them back to their two chairs. "How true. No security that I can see, but that does not mean he doesn't have it somewhere."

Cihera nodded as she settled into her chair. "Seeing that he is based on a resort moon, I would think any security he has would stick out quite glaringly." She stated.

"I agree." Anton spoke.

"Perhaps we should have a look into the resort's computer system tonight." Cihera stated. "This may be The Wilds... but flight plans and embarkation points still need to be logged. Talbor Seven is used by many prominent officials from the Union and they would need to keep everything as legal as they possible could or incur the wrath of our King."

Anton nodded as he held out the large crystal glass to her. "Yes... and we both know that to incur his wrath is not healthy in the least."

Cihera chuckled. "My mothers have told me of those who have tasted the full brunt of his anger. They said it wasn't pretty in the least."

"My father has told me the same thing." He stated. "We should proceed cautiously however. This Kochab has been an unknown until now. That can only be because he has just recently risen to his position, or he is very careful about whom he does business with."

"Considering how fat he is I would think it is the latter." Cihera chipped as she sipped her drink. "Though why he would expose himself by entertaining anything from the Evolli is beyond me."

"And I would tend to agree. The Evolli do not exactly inspire trust and reliability in me." Anton answered with a grin. "A soft probe tonight. Nothing more just yet. We don't want to spook him."

Cihera nodded in agreement. "Yes... if we spook him, his heart might give out because he is so fat." She said with dark humor. "We wouldn't want that until we get the information we want."

Anton chuckled. "You are positively Drow in nature my beautiful wife." He stated.

Cihera looked at him with love in her eyes. "You just remember that and everything will be fine."

GYTHEIO
CRANAE ISLAND
ANDRO AND SADI'S VILLA

“...Eliani will insure there are ample amounts of both real and cloned blood available for the riders back at the main base. I assume you more than likely have something similar to what our vampire troops have with their injection system?” Andro was speaking as he looked at Narice, Toria and Carisia from across the large waist high table set up on the huge sea patio of the villa. The large awning stretched over the top of the table and half a dozen chairs which they had pushed out of the way so they could crowd around the table. On the table was an exact miniature duplicate of the base they were going to in the morning as well as the nearby elven city.

Narice nodded her head. “Shatter and crush proof cases... yes.” She answered. “Three small injectors per case. Enough to survive most major wounds.”

Narice watched as he nodded his head. To say the last four hours had been an amazing experience would be the understatement of any century that she might live through of that Narice was very sure.

For years they had been led to believe Lycavorians were nothing more than animals in men's form. From her mother on down to many of her instructors, all of them had said these men and women had no manners, no honor and especially no breeding. They were inferior in every way to the members of the High Coven and most especially to any pureblood vampire. It made Narice wonder why they would say these things when purebloods and all vampires in general were also taught from a very young age that they should fear nothing more than a pureblood Lycavorian wolf.

Narice now wore a light blue bikini that conformed to her lush figure like it had been painted on. Toria sported a black bikini that was very similar, while Carisia wore a bright yellow bikini. None of them had worn clothes of this type before, most certainly not openly, yet among these men and women, it felt like the most natural thing to all of them. Narice and Carisia had slightly darker skin tone than Toria because of their Asian genes, but all three of them relished in the feel of the sun's warmth upon their skin. They were cautious to not remain in the direct sunlight for too long, and they took notice of how Nyla Sinthe moved so easily in and out of the villa yet did not seem to be mindful of the sun on her skin. This action they took however, was not something that Androcles or his brothers and sister took notice of in the least. Narice had taken notice of how Arrarn Leonidas had moved chairs for Toria and herself further into the shade of the awning covered patio, even while still carrying on a conversation with his brothers about air currents over the base in the south. Like it was the most natural thing in the world for him to do. Androcles's brothers did not make sly comments or look upon them in any other manner except respect. It took only a few moments for Narice to realize that they were considered fellow riders, and they would be afforded the respect and status of such until they proved otherwise. Narice also found herself looking at Toria in an entirely different way now, and the thoughts racing through her head were thoughts she had never had before. The black bikini that encased her body was cut in such a way that it left little to the imagination, and Narice not only found herself wanting to see what the fabric covered, but to taste it as well.

And then there was Arrarn Leonidas.

Narice had never seen a more beautiful man in all her life. His six foot one frame was almost as heavily muscled as his brothers Androcles and Denali, and he shared the incredible muscular definition of them both. The rippled lines of his abdomen and chest had Narice's heart doing small flips whenever she would steal a glance at him. This was not something she had ever experienced before. Many of the purebloods who wanted to court her were handsome men, some would say even beautiful. They were lean and muscular and all of them were excellent soldiers. Arrarn Leonidas however... he had what all of those men lacked... and that was an aura of confidence, command and respect. It showed in his actions with herself and Toria, pulling out their chairs so they could sit, insuring their glasses were always full and even offering suggestions of what to eat in a humorous manner, usually joking with whichever of his siblings made the selected food. It seemed that even though he was a pilot by trade, he kept his body Spartan fit. His deep tan and dark blond hair was riveting to look at, as were his dark brown eyes and the two inch high elven ears. He had an almost constant smile on his face and whether consciously or not, his actions were more often than not directed at making sure she and Toria had everything they wanted. Toria as well noticed this attention, and at one point she had brushed up against her with a knowing smile, causing delightful quivers to course through Narice. For the first time in her life, Narice found herself almost overpoweringly attracted to a man. And not just any man, but a son of King Leonidas. A werewolf. She also found herself equally fascinated by the woman who shared her mother's bed. All of this combined for many racing thoughts within her head, many of which Narice had never once considered.

Shortly after arriving and changing into the skimpy bikinis, all of them had sat down to an incredible meal of at least eight different dishes of food. All of the dishes were food from the time of ancient Greece Androcles had told them, and four of them he had prepared himself while Lisisa and his younger sister Zarah had made the other four. Eliani and Nyla Sinthe, she discovered, had brought the fresh fruit and greens for both the fruit salad and green salad that was served. It appeared that all of the Leonidas children were well schooled in cooking these incredible dishes and Narice realized it had to be because of the Feravomir of their people. Their First Oracle had been alive in those times of ancient Greece and she discovered listening to Eliani and Zarah talk that she had instructed all of them to cook throughout the years. This was another misconception of her mother and sister that was quickly shattered. It was reported and told to all of them that the First Oracle rarely left the main villa by the King's home, and that she had long since stopped teaching at the new School of the Oracles on Apo Prime. It was reported that she hardly ever saw visitors of any kind. Listening to the Leonidas children talk of what their First Oracle had taught them, they referred to her as Helen Narice now knew, it was apparent that the First Oracle was much more of a fixture in the lives of the Royal family and the Lycavorian people than their intelligence had ever assumed. She was still very much active in the School of the Oracles as well as other things. What Narice also discovered is that whenever the Leonidas family made their exodus to Earth each year, the Feravomir of their people accompanied them as well.

Narice found Zarah Leonidas to be witty and incredibly bright and intelligent. She was a very beautiful young woman, with a firm, lean body and long dark hair and eyes. She sat next to Androcles for most of the dinner, she and her brother sharing looks throughout the dinner at odd times, almost as if they were communicating within Mindvoice, but Narice felt no tremors to indicate such a conversation. She simply dismissed it as knowing glances between siblings.

All three of them found the food to be exceptionally delicious, especially Carisia, who sampled all of the dishes several times. Since none of the Leonidas children were in the least bit shy about eating, they too helped themselves to portions of all of it, Nyla Sinthe even feeding Eliani fruit playfully at different times during the meal. They kept glancing out onto the large open portion of the patio that had a massive metal contraption that was smoking. The smell of cooking meat was plainly obvious and Narice wondered how they were supposed to eat more when so much food was already present. Her answer came when halfway through their meal, Androcles and his brothers got up just as Elynth and Tharua led the six dragons around to the sea patio side of the villa. Narice ran over in her head what had occurred for they had all heard the conversation in its entirety.

Narice turned quickly to Eliani and Lisisa. "What are they doing?" She asked as she watched the three brothers' move towards the obvious cooking machine.

"It's a special recipe Andro and father discovered from ancient texts on Elear." Lisisa replied.

"Recipe for what?" Carisia asked with great interest.

"A special mixture of herbs and spices that we saturate the meat in." Eliani answered. "It's a delicacy among dragons... but they don't eat it often since the fat content is enormous. Whenever we get together like this, Andro makes two or three slabs. More if Torma is here. He and Jeth can put away the stuff like its candy."

"You... you cook specifically for your dragons?" Narice asked very surprised. "I did not think they liked cooked meat."

"They are just as much part of our family as any of us." Lisisa replied with a soft voice. "And like Eliani said, this is a rare delicacy for them."

They watched as Arrarn and Denali pulled a massive tarp out of a small in-ground storage bunker and quickly spread it out on the granite stone closest to the beach. Andro was using a small control panel to lift the cover of the huge metal cooker. With a billow of smoke and the smell of mint and cinnamon spices, the massive slabs of meat were revealed.

It smells delicious Andro my brother. Elynth's voice filled their heads. As always.

I have been waiting all day for this! Jeth declared.

You will allow our guests to have first choice Jeth. Elynth scolded.

Jeth turned his eyes on her in mock indignation. I do have some modicum of common sense sister! He snapped. And it only gets better now that I have Tharua to correct me.

Thank the gods for that. Arydun spoke with humor as she rounded the patio with Tharua and nudged Jeth in the side with her head. She has her work cut out for her.

Tharua leaned heavily against her new mate and affectionately brushed her snout under his thick neck scales. Not as much as you might think. She said lovingly.

All of them watched as Andro, Arrarn and Denali used long poles to stab the slabs of meat from over the fire, their muscles straining as they lifted the three hundred pound slabs and transferred them over to the tarp. They did it quickly and efficiently and then the dragons were staring at three slabs of the thick cooked meat.

Andro stabbed his pole into the ground as Arrarn and Denali headed back to the table and he looked at Elynth. Make sure no one gets sick sister. He stated.

Elynth nodded even as her golden eyes looked at the meat with greedy intent. Anthar... Deneth... please... as our guests I offer you first choice.

It smells incredible. Anthar spoke moving his snout closer to one of the slabs.

Elynth leaned closer to him, her eyes focused on his thick neck muscles and the lines of his jaw. It is a special treat for us since we do not very often eat meat that is cooked. She told him. This is something that Andro and his father discovered. It is very high in fat content, so we do not have it often, but it is utterly delicious.

Anthar turned his magenta colored eyes on her. Do you... do you like it? He asked.

Elynth nodded quickly. Very much so. She replied.

Then I offer my first choice to you Elynth. He told her.

Andro smiled and turned away to walk back to the table even as Elynth's eyes smiled in glee at Anthar's actions. To offer your first choice to another was a sign of respect and honor for a dragon. To offer your first choice to a female dragon could very well be construed as a message of interest and intent.

It wasn't long after that where Narice felt herself becoming very comfortable here. They were not treated as oddities or pariahs as her mother and sister said they would be. It almost seemed as if they were being treated as friends and equals. The conversation was open and friendly, mostly centering on their dragons and the things they had experienced together. There was not much she and Carisia had done that even came close to these men and women. All of them had ridden their dragons into battle. Arrarn supporting them from the air in his STRIKER, while Carina provided valuable ground recon and support. It appeared as if Zarah Leonidas had quickly surpassed her older sister Carina in terms of abilities, though she had yet to be tested in battle. Carina Leonidas had already begun directing more of her focused attentions to tactics and operations for it seemed she had an incredible gift in that area.

Once it appeared as if everyone had finished all they were going to eat, they rose from the table and Andro had directed them to the miniature of the base and the table. He held the glass of Spartan wine in his hand, all of them bringing over their drinks. As they crowded around the table Narice was very conscious of the press of Arrarn Leonidas on one side of her and Toria on the other. It made for some luscious sensations that she had never felt before.

Narice brought her thoughts back to the present fully.

Andro nodded as Narice answered him. "Nyla?" He asked.

"We carry the same." She spoke. "I'll make sure all of them have a med kit similar to mine once the training starts. It's got five full vials of blood and a smaller injector system like their portable ones. The chances for us sustaining larger injuries from the back of a dragon are slightly higher than normal ground troops. All the riders carry a similar kit in case one of us happens to be among those called to service."

Narice looked at her. "There are... there are more of you correct?" She asked. "Pureblood vampires that have bonded with dragons like us?"

Nyla nodded with a smile. "Twelve of us." She answered easily. "Six more are in training right now on Apo Prime and Elear."

"Nyla was the first however." Eliani said with a great deal of bias in her voice as she looked at her lover.

"Only by two months ussta-che." Nyla replied with a smile. "Any later than that and I would not have met you."

Eliani shrugged as she leaned up against her and looked into her green eyes. "We would have found each other eventually." She spoke kissing her.

Nyla responded to Eliani's soft kiss with equal feeling. "Yes we would have ussta-che." She said. "Yes we would have."

At least the intelligence reports about that were accurate Narice thought. Though she doubted the extent of the feeling and love between these two women would hardly have been described truthfully if what she saw was accurate.

"Are you two done?" Andro asked with a humorous tone looking at them with a smile.

"Hey!" Eliani barked. "Piss off big brother!" She snapped picking up a small piece of the miniature model and throwing it at him as Nyla gave him a shove in the shoulder.

Toria Dellion watched this exchange with great interest and she noticed that Narice did as well. Toria had been stealing glances at Narice all day, not to mention Arrarn Leonidas. She had come to the conclusion after first seeing Narice in the skimpy bikini Sadi Leonidas had given her that she was far more desirable than her mother Aikiro. That she found Arrarn Leonidas so handsome also told Toria that the times having to endure Tesand as well as Dante and Javier had not completely stolen her interest in men. Toria had caught herself twice this day already daydreaming of the three of them in a bed together. It sent delightful feelings through her at this.

Andro and the others laughed as Eliani leaned even closer to Nyla and nibbled on her arm in affection.

Sadi came out of the villa carrying a tray with several glasses on it, which she set down on the table near the edge. She lifted one of the glasses to Nyla who took it immediately, then held out one for Narice and Toria.

"What is this?" Narice asked softly as she looked at the yellow/orange liquid in the clear glass.

Eliani smiled as Nyla drank down the glass without question. "The food you ate today has many more spices and proteins than what you will find in High Coven territory. Our mother Isabella and those that came with her discovered this right away. Over the years they have discovered that a glass of this neutralizes many of the acids and will not make you break out in hives."

Carisia accepted the glass from Sadi with a bright smile as she leaned close to her side opposite Lisisa. "What is it?" She asked.

"Orange juice." Eliani replied with a chuckle.

Carisia didn't hesitate as she lifted the glass to her lips and drank it down completely. Her eyes were wide as she lowered the glass. "Narice... it's... it's delicious!" She gasped with wide eyes.

Narice looked at the glass for a moment longer; feeling Toria's own apprehension and then felt Arrarn lean over close to her shoulder. "You two are far too beautiful to poison." He whispered to her and Toria. "It would be a complete waste of considerable beauty and brains. And since Toria Dellion will be joining me and Sadi as part of a flight crew, it would be exceptionally counterproductive to injure one of my flight crew don't you think?"

Narice stepped back slightly from Arrarn Leonidas and the closeness to her that he had achieved, her dark eyes wary. He was far more forward than she was used to, for no pureblood vampire male would have ever dared gotten so close to her without fearing repercussions of some kind because of her mother or her station as Princess of the High Coven. Narice fell into her defensive mode almost immediately and without conscious thought. The same mode she used to dismiss those vampire purebloods who were courting her. "You assume much Prince Arrarn Leonidas." She stated with her cold professional voice. "Perhaps far too much if what I have heard of your interaction with females of your own species is correct."

Arrarn's face changed from interested smile and warmth to one of frigid emotionless in the blink of an eye she saw, and almost as quickly Narice regretted speaking her words. Arrarn stepped back in the next instant and nodded his head. "Message received." He said softly.

Andro jumped in quickly before anything else was said for he had detected Arrarn's intense interest in Narice from the moment he saw her step onto the sea patio. He glanced quickly at Eliani and Nyla who shrugged slightly. “Narice... I’m putting your sister in your section. I doubt very much she would take directions from Carisia.”

Narice had to pull her eyes from Arrarn’s suddenly quite emotionless face while she silently derided herself for her actions. She turned and looked at Androcles. “Yes... I assumed as much.” She replied glancing at Arrarn once more before she downed the glass of orange juice in several gulps. She kept her face neutral even though it did taste incredible as it slid down her throat just as Carisia had said. She saw Toria doing the same thing out of the corner of her eye. “I suggest doing the same with my nieces and nephews.” She spoke as she lowered the glass to the table. “There will be no conflict this way.”

Andro nodded slowly. “That can be arranged.” He spoke. His azure eyes fell on Carisia. “The others will follow your orders?”

Carisia nodded. “Yes.”

“The first few days will be nothing more than light training to assess the strengths of your bonds and the skills of you as pairs.” Andro continued after looking swiftly at Arrarn. “Zarah will be handling most of the hand-to-hand training. Denali, Eliani and Lisisa will conduct the majority of the second phase which will entail flying maneuvers and landing and exiting the STRIKERS and TYPE IIs we will be using.” He motioned to Arrarn. “Arrarn and Sadi will have your pilots to train. I’m sure you are already aware of Arrarn’s qualifications... and Sadi has the most time in a STRIKER outside of the normal combat pilots. She has completed her academy requirements and taken an early commission as Arrarn’s normal co-pilot. Since this is supposed to be very low key and under the radar tasking so to speak, we can’t pull active pilots from their STRIKERS without questions being asked somewhere along the chain of command.” Andro looked at Arrarn. “Arrarn?”

“We’ll allow your people to choose their bunk mates.” Arrarn picked it up in a very professional tone of voice as he stepped away from Narice fully now and moved around to point at the model on the table. “The pilots and riders can intermingle in the barracks here, and the other base facilities, but no one will be allowed off the base property and into the nearby city without permission from one of us or a senior Durcunusaan officer. Nyla and Moneus Simpson, who you met the first day, will be the senior Durcunusaan officers present on the base for the duration of the training.”

“You don’t trust us?” Toria asked in a neutral tone of voice.

Arrarn shook his head. “No that is not it... we just don’t make assumptions based on information that may or may not be true.” He stated quickly looking directly at Narice. “King Anotan of the Moon Elf Clan is a die hard supporter of dragons and would do anything for them. He will protect your identities with his life if need be. We will allow access into the city later in the training if we deem it feasible... but we also will not take unnecessary risks in exposing what we are doing to the overall public.”

“There are many vampires that call the Union home.” Carisia spoke. “Many live right here on Earth. Why... why must we hide?”

Lisisa nodded at her statement. “Yes sister... however... they do not ride dragons.” She answered. “This is as much for your protection as it is ours. Especially with this false Kavalian delegation that will be arriving tomorrow. They will undoubtedly attempt to learn why all of you are here, and that is something we can not allow.”

Narice looked at Andro now. “Your father... your mothers... even you to an extent. You do not care for the Kavalians very much. Why is that?”

Andro nodded. “No we do not.” He answered. “The why is slightly more complicated in explaining and you’ll forgive me if I keep that to myself for now.”

Narice noticed that even his own brothers and sisters looked at him rather oddly when he said that.

“We are at war with them.” Toria spoke with a neutral voice once more. “I would think that would make you pleased to some extent. The High Coven has always been an enemy of the Union.”

Andro met her eyes and smiled somewhat. “As my father has said, we have not engaged the Coven in battle for twenty-five years. Regardless of the reasons why, the tensions between our peoples has eased a great deal through those years. Or did you not notice this on the streets of Sparta while you have been here?”

“The man in the store.” Carisia spoke softly looking quickly at Narice and then back to Andro. “He did not look upon us differently.”

Andro nodded slowly. “You might be surprised Narice, that what you have been told and what you actually find to be true in most respects, it is no where close to being accurate. In regards to any of us.” He told her. Andro saw her dark eyes cut to where Arrarn stood beside him quickly and then back to his face. “As my sister told you when you first arrived... if there is to be trust among us... it can start with us. Or did you think I invited you into my home because I had no where else to hold a meeting like this?”

Narice could not help the light blush that came to her face at his words. She dropped her eyes quickly. “Your father... your father said he would just as easily take our dragons from us as he would train us.” She said looking back up to him. “Do you feel the same way about us Androcles Leonidas?”

Though he would not come to realize it for many weeks... Andro’s next words forever set him on a path of his own making. Whether for good or ill, he had begun his own trek into the unknown on this day.

“I may look like my father... act like him to some degree... even think like him in large part.” Andro spoke evenly. “I am not my father however. You are here... in my home. I will act as I see fit. I have not fought you or your people Narice... and with my grandfather’s blessing and continued guiding hand, I will never have to. I do not harbor the same misgivings that my parents do in many respects towards the High Coven. Towards you and your people. I think you will find none of us do. That is kind of hard to do when some of your siblings are half vampire. It’s hard to do when many of your friends and fellow Spartans are either pureblood vampires or those who have been turned. It’s very hard to do when your sister has a pureblood vampire that shares not only her life but her heart.” Narice’s eyes went to where Eliani pressed her body against Nyla’s in a very possessive way, Nyla returning the gesture without pause. “Nyla is a member of this family... our family. She is not looked at differently because she is a pureblood. And only someone with blinders over their eyes would not see the love she and my sister share for each other.

“I invited you here to try and express to you that no matter what has happened in the past, there can be a future.” Andro’s azure eyes went to where Sadi and Carisia stood close to one another. “A future for all of us.” He turned back to Narice. “If I have failed in that... or you feel you do not wish to attempt to improve what our parents have not tried to improve... then by all means, you and Deneth may leave. I have told your mother and you that I will train you and your riders to the best of my ability. I will not attempt to separate a pair unless I see that there is no trust and caring between them. It has been a pleasure sharing your company Narice, however you are free to leave whenever you wish and there will be no repercussions in the least. You will still be a section leader like Carisia and I will keep you informed of everything I intend when it comes to the training of your riders.”

Narice stared at him for a long moment. No one that stood around the table spoke a word as they let what Andro had just said sink in completely. “You certainly do not mince words, do you Androcles Leonidas?” Narice finally said.

Andro shrugged. “What would be the point?”

Narice found herself looking at Arrarn quickly before answering. “I believe I will stay... if that is alright?”

Andro smiled. “And you would be very welcome.” He replied sincerely. “Now why don’t we finish this little round of details and then we can go relax on the beach by the water while the moon comes up? We are going to have a busy few months.”

MJOLNIR’S HAND

Athani was amazed at how quickly he thought on his feet. Even as they were moving down the corridor, Resumar ducked into one entrance of the mess lounge as they passed it by and came out the other entrance with a mug of coffee and one of tea. He smiled as he held it out to her.

“Just to be safe.” He had said as they walked.

They covered the distance to the landing bay easily enough and were entering from one door just as For’mya was entering through the hatchway closest to the dragon pens. Jalersi was with her as was Qurot and Karun, Resumar saw as he and Athani closed the distance to them even as the alarm claxon began to sound indicating a ship was approaching. Jalersi was not the only one glaring at Athani as they approached.

“Athani... where were you!” Jalersi demanded. “I checked your quarters immediately after Queen For’mya contacted me!”

“I woke early sister.” Athani almost snarled back knowing she needed to maintain the distance that had come between them in the last few days. She would not risk losing what could well be her future by doing something stupid or acting differently. “I could not return to sleep so I began walking the ship where we are allowed. I found my way to the mess lounge and saw Prince Resumar there. He invited me to sit with him for coffee. I chose tea instead.” She held out the mug. “We had just begun talking when the bridge or someone contacted him over the COM system.”

“I rise early to use the gym and training rooms before they become crowded.” Resumar added. “Do you know a Senior Commander Pian?” He asked.

“Pian?” Jalersi gasped. “Why... why would he be the one my father sent here?”

Resumar handed the data pad to For’mya. “The Admiral sent this to my pad as we were coming here mother.” He turned to look at Jalersi. “He was picked up from your ship sixteen hours after you were by one of our Diplomatic Envoy ships. They have been trying to catch us ever since. They made one brief stop on Beklan Two to deliver diplomatic pouches and then continued on to meet us.”

For’mya looked at Jalersi. “This is rather odd, isn’t it?” She asked. “You were aware of this?”

Jalersi nodded almost sheepishly. “Forgive me Queen For’mya. Just before our meeting yesterday, my father told me he was sending additional personnel in case the request for an embassy was granted. I failed to inform you of this during our meeting or dinner because I thought things were progressing rather well. My sincere apologies. I can order them to return, if you like?”

For’mya gazed at her for several moments. “Komirri checked their flight plan Res?” She asked.

Resumar nodded. “Yes mother.”

“Very well... allow them to continue.” For’mya answered. “I won’t let it be said that we were the ones who allowed a missed communication to interfere with what we have begun here with these talks. I do wish we had more warning however, I’m not much of a morning person.”

Jalersi almost found herself laughing at the joke For’mya made but reined that in and only smiled.

“Thank you Lady For’mya. The additional personnel will not be a trouble, will they?”

For’mya shook her head quickly. “We are used to carrying passengers on MJOLNIR’S HAND. We will find quarters for them.” The sounds of the landing bay’s massive doors opening drew their attention.

MENLKA TRANSPORT ARRIVING! MENKLA TRANSPORT ARRIVING!

The female voice filled the entire landing bay and drew everyone’s attention as they MENLKA-Envoy Class transport made its way slowly through the landing bay doors and the atmospheric force field. The single powerful tractor beam operating from the ceiling of the bay gripped the ship the moment the exterior beam released and began guiding it slowly to the open pad near where For’mya and her party were gathered. Athani glanced at her sister quickly while sipping her tea, noting that she was watching the ship being guided in, Karun standing beside her. As Athani’s eyes swept across where Qurot stood, she saw him glaring at her with cruel intent but she ignored him. Cemath had already been in the landing bay within the pens and he now made his way closer to where his bonded brother stood. Aurith was still coming down from the dragon cave on deck ten and this early in the morning there was hardly any crew members down near the receiving end of the bay.

Res? He asked as he approached confidently.

More quests. Resumar answered sarcastically as he turned to look at him coming across the landing bay deck.

Res... not now. For’mya spoke softly. I... something is not right.

Resumar turned to look at her, detecting the different tone of her voice as the tractor beam slowly lowered the ship to the deck. They all heard the hiss of sealed air as the ramp of the ship began to come down. Mother... what is it?

For’mya met his eyes. I feel death. She stated quickly looking at him. And it’s coming from that ship!

Resumar spun back around instantly tossing away his mug of coffee. Cemath! He shouted out as he activated their psychic shield with barely a thought.

Athani, Jalersi and Qurot could only gaze in stunned shock as the light blue psychic shield suddenly encompassed Resumar Leonidas entirely and then faded quickly from view. As the ramp of the transport touched the metal deck plating Resumar was already moving as he heard his mother call for Aurith and activate her psychic shield as well and step toward where Jalersi stood with blinding elven and wolf reflexes.

Resumar's wolf eyes detected the moving shadows even before they had cleared the ramp and he was stepping in front of Athani just as a dozen vampires unwrapped the shadows from around their bodies just as they opened fired with their weapons.

The landing bay echoed with the sounds of weapons fire as the vampire commando unit laid down an impressive field of concentrated projectile fire at their intended targets. Resumar had scooped Athani into his arms, shielding her body with his own even as the psychic shield encompassing him surrounded her as well. For'mya had used her momentum to push Jalersi to the deck; Qurot stumbling down as well as her psychic shield surrounded Jalersi. As Qurot fell to the deck from the force of For'mya's shove, he felt the sizzling in the air above him of several projectiles passing over his head and knew they would have hit him had he still been standing. Karun had thrown himself down behind several nearby crates the moment he saw the shadows moving.

Resumar kept Athani securely wrapped in his embrace until Cemath's huge body arrived and interposed itself between them and the transport. They could both feel the striking of the projectiles off their psychic shields as Resumar turned to look at his bonded brother.

"Protect her Cemath!" He snapped over the din of weapons fire. "At all costs! Burn anyone who comes close to her brother!"

Athani's eyes were wide at this as he positioned her between Cemath's front and back legs and Cemath's huge wing came down over the top of her like a bubble.

Consider it done! Cemath announced sensing the concern from his bonded brother for this Kavalian female.

Resumar vaulted over the back of Cemath and landed on the deck facing the two rows of vampire commandos. His eyes had changed now, black rimmed orbs as his dual fangs extended and he began walking towards the vampire commandos.

"You picked the wrong ship to pull this stunt on!" He screamed over their weapons fire and he broke into a sprint directly at the commandos.

"Dragon!" The commando screamed as he held back the trigger on his weapon. "They have a dragon!"

"Vith the dragon! Kill the Kavalian dogs!" The commando leader screamed.

The twelve commandos were pouring weapons fire at the small group of men and women to no avail. It had been easy enough to hijack the transport and kill all but the flight crew. They wanted no problems with the Lycavorian Union and their orders had been specific... kill the Kavalian delegation but do not harm to any Union personnel. The back of the transport had grown ripe with the bodies of eleven raped and murdered Kavalian females and the large Kavalian male they had beaten to death. They knew this would be a suicide mission from the start, for there was no way they would ever escape from the Union Fleet's flagship. They hadn't known what ship would meet the Kavalian delegation until it had arrived, but they were already far too committed to cancel the mission once it was discovered it would be MJOLNIR'S HAND they were assaulting.

Three seconds sooner was all the time they would have needed. Three seconds faster with lowering the ramp and the Kavalians would be dead. Now... now they would all die as the dark green scaled dragon imposed its huge body in front of their intended targets, its psychic shield dancing all along its length with the multiple impacts of their projectile rounds as they bounced harmlessly away.

Two things happened that announced to all of them that their mission was not going to meet success in any way.

The Lycavorian male with elven ears leaped over the back of the green scaled dragon protecting the Kavalians; his wolf fangs clearly bared in anger and the livid trumpeting bellow of the sapphire scaled dragon that was barreling towards them at a dead run from what appeared to be some sort of elevator.

"Kill as many as possible!" The commando leader screamed out just as he turned back to see the half elf half Lycavorian and entirely pissed off Spartan descend upon them.

“I don’t think so!” Resumar screamed before waving his arm in front of him like a club and sending the four hundred pound crate hurtling into the first row of vampire commandos from the side, crushing three of them instantly.

For’mya! Aurith shouted within Mindvoice as she ran towards where Resumar had just crushed three of the commandos with a massive transport crate.

Cemath is protecting the Kavalians! For’mya screamed out. Aurith help Resumar!

The nearby hatchway suddenly filled with Durcunusaan soldiers as if out of thin air, the door not even opening to allow them entry into the landing bay. This was something that no one but Karun noticed even in his dazed state. He began scrambling towards where the elven queen was on top of his mother.

“Mother!” He yelled crawling along the deck as rapidly as he could.

For’mya looked up at him just as half a dozen Durcunusaan nearly buried her with their bulk. “No!” She screamed. “Get them out of here!”

“My Queen... we don’t know how many of them there are!” The Durcunusaan troop screamed.

For’mya tore his Nehtes from his thigh holster and then snatched one from another of the troops. “You will get them out of this bay and lock down the entire section!” She barked the order. She turned almost as an afterthought and heaved the Nehtes into the air towards the transport. Resumar... incoming! She screamed within Mindvoice as she extended the second one and looked at the Durcunusaan officer. “You have your orders!” She snapped. “Get them into the adjoining corridor and protect them!”

The Durcunusaan soldier nodded quickly. “As you order my Queen.”

“My sister!” Jalersi screamed out.

For’mya shook her head. “She is safer where she is! Now go!”

The Durcunusaan troops scooped Jalersi and Qurot up with barely a pause, one of them grabbing Karun by the back of his collar as he attempted to get to his feet. For’mya’s eyes had changed by now and her wolf fangs were fully extended as she sprinted directly for Cemath and used his hind leg as a spring board to vault over his powerful back.

The Commandos had scattered the moment that crate smashed into their ranks. The commando leader had seen where they stuffed one of the Kavalian whores under the wing of the green scaled beast and he wrapped the shadows around himself in a mad sprint to at least attempt to accomplish part of their mission. Resumar had heard his mother easily and extended his hand without hesitation calling the Nehtes to him. He was extending it as he brought it down and sent it plunging through the chest of the vampire commando directly in front of him. As he was wrenching it free he saw his mother dart in from the side, her Nehtes extended as well. Her first thrust was directly through the throat of one commando, and she did not pause as she spun in the same motion, wrenching the Nehtes free, blood showering the area around her and slashing it viciously across the chest of another commando.

One commando was lifting his rifle to take aim and fire on For’mya. He dismissed the growl to his right as his finger tightened on the trigger. There was a flash of sapphire scales and then his arm and his weapon was gone. His cobalt blue eyes grew wide as he looked at the stump of what used to be his arm, blood spurting in an arc from the cleanly severed limb, his eyes turning to see Aurith spit his bloody hand and arm from her maw. She let out a bellow of rage, the commando saw a tuft of blue air from her snout and then the superheated breath of the hybrid dragon melted him into cinders with uncanny precision.

For’mya slashed her way to stand beside her son.

“They’ve wrapped the shadows around them!” She barked.

“Switch to grayscale mother!” Resumar shouted back.

For’mya nodded and with nothing but a simple blink of her dark brown eyes she shifted her visual color scale to gray. It was something that Martin and Daniel Simpson had discovered during the Battle for Earth. Vampires were easily seen using grayscale vision, even when they were wrapped in the shadows. It was information that was not well known outside of the life of someone in the military for there was no real use for grayscale vision in normal day to day life. Now it would pay dividends.

“I have two!” For’mya announced.

“As do I.”

“They must not get loose on the ship Res!” For’mya snapped. “I have locked the bay down!”

“Then let’s go hunting mother!” He spoke slapping the COM badge on his wrist. “This is Resumar. Admiral... the lights and power in the starboard landing bay! Cut it!”

The reply was instantaneous. “Done!” Komirri’s voice answered.

Three seconds later the entire landing bay was dropped into blackness as everything lost power.

“Good hunting.” Komirri’s voice sounded. He had been around the King and Queens for twenty-five years, he had seen the children of the King grow and become superior warriors; even his daughters were far more skilled than the scum who had snuck aboard their ship. Now the vampire assassins would know what it was like to be hunted.

“Now the odds are even mother.” Res spoke softly.

“You go right. I’ll take left.” For’mya spoke in a whisper. “Try to take one of them alive Resumar. I would like to know how they got this close and why exactly they came on board your father’s ship on a suicide mission.”

“No promises mother.” He spoke before slipping off into the darkness. “But I will see what I can do.”

Athani finally was able to push the front of Cemath’s wing out far enough to squeeze her lithe frame out from under the surprisingly soft membranes of his wings. When she managed to get all the way out, everything was completely black and her eyes immediately shifted into their vertical slits to allow as much light as possible in. Cemath’s head whipped around upon feeling her squeeze out and he gazed at her with his gray eyes. Unable to form words he began turning towards her and did the only thing he knew how.

YOU MUST STAY! He shouted out within Mindvoice.

Athani winced painfully and grabbed for her head as she heard the deep male voice in her mind boom out its command. So staggering was the force of the command that she immediately went to her knees, her ears ringing and her eyes tightly shut.

“STOP!” She screamed out heedless of the danger her voice would attract.

Cemath blinked in complete and utter shock. You... you heard me? He gasped out much more gently.

Athani’s eyes were wide now as well. The searing pain was gone, and in its place was only a dull throbbing of her temples. Her blue/green eyes, more than capable of seeing in the darkness easily, looked up at huge head of the dragon now very wide eyed in equally stunned surprised.

You hear my words to you? Cemath spoke once more, moving his head closer to her and gazing at her with a combination of shock and puzzlement.

Athani nodded slowly, still not believing what was happening to her and the ease with which she was hearing this Cemath’s voice. Her head was throbbing still, but there was no longer any pain. “How... how is this possible? How...”

Resumar has cut power to the landing bay. The vampires have wrapped themselves in the shadows. He ordered me to protect you at all costs. You must remain close by. Cemath quickly explained to her.

“My sister... my...”

With your mind Athani of the Kavalian people. Think your thoughts and I will hear you. Cemath told her. Quickly... we must shift our position before one of the remaining assassins targets us from your voice. Climb onto my back Little One and we will move to a more defensible location.

Athani looked up at him. I could... I couldn’t do... Athani shook her head stunned at the ease with which she just projected her thoughts outward.

You need not fear me Athani’Puat. Cemath told her. My bonded one has charged me with your protection.

I... I have fought vampires before! Athani snapped almost too harshly. I am not a pitiful helpless female!

Cemath chuckled. Then think of the damage you can do from high on my back Little One. We must move quickly. Do not fear me. Embrace what you do not know and let it fill you with strength.

Athani looked at him and even in the pitch blackness of the landing bay she saw him shift his massive bulk around with the grace of a Naltharian Puma. His gray eyes were bright to her keen feline vision and he gazed at her expectantly, and in those eyes she briefly saw a part of her future. Athani'Puath didn't hesitate and in that moment, she became the only Kavalian in the history of her people to actually ride a dragon in battle. The fact that this battle was taking place in the landing bay of a Lycavorian ship did not matter to her in the least.

For'mya was a pilot with few equals. Endith, Tina and she had put their STRIKER into more hot zones and places that should have been impossible than any other flight crew in Union history. Her piloting skills were unmatched. It was her other skills that most either did not think she had, or wrongly assumed she was poorly adequate at.

You do not become a mate and wife to Martin Leonidas and not have him take many hours insuring the women he loved more than his own life could defend themselves better than anyone they would ever face in battle. For'mya could not recall the number of hours she and her fellow Queens had spent studying under perhaps the most lethal man alive anywhere in the Union, and perhaps even the universe. The vampire commandos wrongly assumed they had the advantage when the power and lights to the landing bay were cut. The bloody spearhead of the Nehtes protruding from the commando's chest rapidly proved him wrong. As his mouth opened and closed in silent gasps, For'mya lowered him to the deck, collapsing the Nehtes with a feather light touch on the button. The spear shaft made no sound except the wet squish of her yanking the head from between his shoulder blades and that sound did not carry more than a meter. She squatted over the rapidly cooling body, her dark brown eyes adjusted to grayscale as she searched the expanse of the landing bay in front of her.

Res? She reached out within Mindvoice. I have eliminated the two I went after. West end of the bay near the TEMPEST rows.

I'm sorry mother... Resumar's voice held exertion in it for a split second and then it returned to normal. My second target proved rather elusive.

Neutralized I take it?

She didn't see Resumar look at the body of the commando as he slumped slowly to the floor, his blood staining the bulkhead behind him from Resumar's downward slash of the Nehtes spearhead.

You could say that. He answered.

There is still one more Res. She spoke.

I do believe he is after me. Cemath's voice cut into their conversation.

Brother? Where are you? Where is Athani? Resumar questioned rapid fire.

I have moved to the pens Res. Cemath answered. Athani'Puath is with me. She can hear us brother. I have touched her thoughts.

The last one is after you? Resumar gasped.

We meant to move to a position to give me a better defensive angle. He must have assumed this is what I would do and he got here first. Cemath replied. I see well enough in the dark brother... but even I can not see him if he is wrapped in the shadows in this darkness.

You won't until he attacks! For'mya snapped. I'm moving towards you down the west side Cemath. Aurith where are you sister?

Ten meters north of Resumar's position. Aurith replied instantly. I will move about and draw his attention Cemath my brother. Can you make for the elevator?

If I do he will be upon us. I have lowered our psychic shield so he can not detect the shimmer from the emergency lighting.

Where is Athani? Resumar demanded.

She is on my back maintaining a very low posture. Her eyes are unique brother... she sees better in the dark than we do.

Athani's head turned slightly when she heard Resumar chuckle quite clearly in her head. She did not speak out for fear of actually talking out loud, wanting to snap back with a reply that she was very capable of defending herself. Resumar's next words made her so very happy she did not.

Do not discount her skills Cemath my brother. She has fought vampires far longer and with considerable more frequency than we have. Resumar spoke. Use her eyes... but tell her to do nothing to get herself killed. That would not make me happy in the least. I am moving towards you on the east side. Aurith... can you see the pens from where you are?

Yes.

When you see me reach the entrance, start banging into some crates and barrels as if you are the clumsiest creature in creation. Resumar told her.

That will not be hard for her. Cemath interjected.

I will show you clumsy when this is over my fool brother! Aurith barked out.

Mother? Res asked.

Half way there. For'mya answered. I want him alive Resumar. Cemath... if what you say is true and this Athani can hear us within Mindvoice, make sure she knows I want him alive. If she gets to him before we do, she can injure him as much as she wants but he is no good to us dead.

Cemath slowly turned his head to look at Athani stretched out nimbly on his back and saw her nod her head slowly. It is understood mother For'mya.

Sixty seconds brother!

Cemath felt Athani's body tense upon the scales on his back. I don't think we have that long brother.

Nubous! Resumar barked out as he surged to his feet and began to run.

Athani saw the vampire commando step around the edge of the entrance to the pen with excruciating slowness. Whatever the reason, he had unwrapped the shadows from around his body as he made his way into the massive dragon pen. Athani may not have been able to see him in the darkness while he used the shadows, but she most certainly could see him right now. His cobalt blue vampire eyes were staring at the back of Cemath's massive body, unable to comprehend the odd shape upon the dragon's back. Athani's body heat was contrasting with Cemath's much cooler scaled body, but still not a distinct heat shape for him to act upon. He truly did not want to begin shooting into the rear of this dragon and only succeed in hitting that armor like scaled skin. Some of his rounds might penetrate that thick hide, but he knew the majority would not. He moved with deliberate slowness, every step measured and even. He was superbly trained; his body coiled like springs to leap out of the way or to wrap the shadows around him once more. He knew he was a dead man. There was no way he was leaving this ship alive. He cursed his luck that it was the elven Queen and second oldest son who had come to greet the Kavalian dogs. There was almost nothing known about the second elven Queen, but the second son was said to be nearly as skilled as his brother and father when it came to combat. It was just bad luck that they had chosen this time to execute their attack.

He knew his men lay dead or dying, and he didn't doubt they would take the implanted poison were they only injured. They knew better than to be taken alive. If there was one thing their leader had made very clear to them it was not to get caught alive, for no matter how strong they were, the Empress would get the information she so required out of them. Then they would be responsible for the deaths of every member of their insurgent group, including the most vital and important member. Their leader would not be happy in the least to know that this mission had not been approved by them personally, but the risks at the time of the decision were taken into consideration and reviewed and it was decided to proceed.

As he took his next step toward the green scaled beast the silence shattering sound of crates hitting the floor reached his ears from behind and to the left of him. His head turned quickly to try and determine if this was a threat. Instantly he knew what it was and as he turned back to begin bringing up his weapon, his peripheral vision picked up the movement. Whatever had been resting upon the dragon's back was now coming through the air at him with blinding speed.

Athani'Puat was no stranger to combat, no stranger to death. As she leaped through the air from Cemath's back with all the speed and grace of her feline genes her eyes saw the commando bringing his weapon up. She twisted in mid air and sent her right foot snapping out with incredible power and speed. It slammed into the barrel of the weapon with enough force to rip it free of the vampire's grasp. Athani twisted once more in mid air and landed on the balls of her feet, her tail snatching the blade from her collar as she squatted behind the commando and hissed in anger. He turned quickly and gazed at this female, while pulling the long bladed knife from his leg.

“At least I will have the pleasuring of killing you like those whores on the ship!” He snarled out his voice echoing in the bay.

I don't think so! Cemath's voice erupted in Athani's mind.

She watched wide eyed as his massive tail came from the darkness beside the commando, connecting with the vampire's midsection with a resounding thud and crack of breaking bones. One instant he was in front of her, the next his body was being tossed through the air like a ragdoll. Athani was nearly blinded as the lights and power came back on in that instant. Just in time to see the commando's body slam heavily into the unyielding bulkhead forty meters away with the sound of more cracking and shattering bones. Athani turned when she saw Resumar's bulk closing on her from the side. He scooped her into his arms and practically tossed her back onto Cemath's back.

“Don't move from there!” He ordered her.

Athani knew a protective order and tone of voice when she heard one and she quickly nodded her head. Resumar dashed towards the fallen commando just as his mother was reaching him and the landing bay was being flooded with every Durcumusaan soldier stationed on MJOLNIR'S HAND.

For'mya knelt in front of the commando. That his jaw was broken was obvious, his legs twisted under his body at odd directions. Blood leaked heavily from his mouth and nose but his cobalt blue eyes were still open. For'mya could see the life fading from him fast and she looked at Resumar as he knelt next to her.

“Poison.” She stated. “He either bit down on a capsule intentionally or from the impact.”

Resumar reached out and careful to avoid the bubbly foam from between his lips pried open the closing eye lids. “Fast acting too.” He stated. “Faster than anything I've ever seen.”

For'mya looked up as the senior Durcumusaan officer approached. “My Queen?” He asked quickly.

“Check the others Monid.” For'mya stated as she got to her feet. “I would imagine they are the same as this one... but let's make sure.”

The man nodded his head and motioned to his detachment that quickly began to disperse throughout the landing bay. He had been protecting For'mya as part of his regular duties for over a decade now, a Spartan who had fought the High Coven both on Earth and before discovering their King was alive. He knelt next to the body and examined it expertly knowing she would want his input later.

“ATHANI!” Jalersi's voice echoed across the bay as she skidded to a stop, her eyes open in horror upon seeing her sister on the back of the dragon. Karun half shielded her body with his own.

Qurot rushed forward angrily, forgetting himself and intending to snatch her from the dragon's back. Cemath's head whipping around and the snap of his huge jaws coming together stopped Qurot in his tracks, his own eyes now filling with fear as well as he staggered back. His own head whipped around when he felt the trembling of the deck plates from Aurith's weight as she suddenly appeared to his side, her eyes looking none too friendly.

“It is over!” For'mya barked out as she moved towards Jalersi. “Everyone relax!”

“Athani get down!” Jalersi snapped. “Get away from him sister!”

Athani'Puat drew some deep set glee from seeing the terror in her sister's eyes. “I am fine Jalersi!” She declared proudly. “Cemath would not hurt me.” She stated confidently as she tossed her leg over his back and began sliding off his back. Resumar reached her quickly and his hands gripped her waist as she dropped the entire way to the deck. Knowing there were eyes on them, he removed his hands quickly but he saw the flash of desire in Athani's blue/green eyes. Desire which he returned in his own gaze. He stepped out of the way as Athani began moving around him.

Resumar looked at Cemath. [Thank you brother.] He spoke.

Cemath nodded his large head. [She affects you Res.] He stated. [More strongly than I have seen a female affect you before.]

Resumar nodded. [Yes she does. There is quite a bit more to her than meets the eye.]

[Proceed carefully brother. Something tells me the others of her people would not be happy if they discovered she is just as interested in you as you are in her.] Cemath spoke.

Resumar nodded. [I will.]

Jalersi scooped Athani into her arms, running her hands over her body as if looking for injuries. Athani endured this silently before speaking. "I am unhurt Jalersi." She stated coldly. "As if that really concerns you sister."

Jalersi snapped her eyes up and glared at her younger sister. "We will speak of this later!" She barked.

Athani shook her head. "No... we are done speaking of it. You and mother have made your decisions knowing that is not what I wanted. There is nothing more to speak of." Athani pulled her sister's hands from her arms and stepped back. "I believe we owe Lady For'mya and her son a great debt for saving our lives."

Jalersi turned as For'mya walked up to them her dark brown eyes unreadable. "Queen For'mya... I can not thank you enough for..."

For'mya shook her head quickly. "I am far less concerned with your thanks than I am with why you have brought your war with the High Coven into our borders, and onto my mate's ship. Martin Leonidas is not going to be happy about this in the least I assure you."

"Milady... we..."

"Prince Resumar!" The voice shouted from near the transport. "We have a live one here!"

Res turned immediately and ran for where the Durcunusaan troops were gently moving the body of a Kavalian male from inside the transport. The two Union pilots were unconscious near the ramp but appeared otherwise unhurt. Res came to a stop as they lowered him to the deck. His body was saturated with blood from dozens of lacerations, his fur caked with grime from the transport's deck.

"Pian!" Jalersi gasped as they came up and she moved right up to where he was lying unconscious on the deck.

"Medical team!" For'mya barked quickly as Monid stepped up to her.

"The two pilots have been knocked out." He spoke softly. "Probably when the tractor beams took control. They are unhurt otherwise. Eleven females inside... altered females just like the ones already here. All of them are dead. My Queen... they... they were raped and beaten brutally from first glance."

For'mya stared at him. "Find out who they were Monid." She whispered.

"I can tell you that they are not regular High Coven troops." He spoke quickly taking her arm and drawing her gently away from the gathering of people.

"What do you mean?" For'mya asked.

"Their uniforms. Weapons. None of it is front line Coven equipment." He stated.

"That makes sense if they were commandos Monid." For'mya spoke.

"They are all clones my Queen." He stated shaking his head. "I only checked four of the bodies but all of them have a barcode branded into their arms. All of them have tried to burn it off. I will check the others, but I'm certain I will find the same."

For'mya met his eyes. "Coven Insurgents?" She gasped softly.

Monid nodded. "That would be my guess." He spoke. "Though why they would attempt such an attack in Union territory is beyond me. They must have known they would not succeed when they realized what ship they were coming to. The Kavalian delegation was the target no doubt."

"I am more concerned with how they accomplished it." For'mya spoke. "This ship stopped at Beklan Two before continuing to intercept with us. Contact Armetus and have him send a team there. I want to know who on Beklan Two is supporting High Coven Insurgents."

Monid nodded quickly. "The Kavalians?" He asked.

For'mya looked at where Jalersi was kneeling next to the inert body of this man her father had sent. "No changes as of yet." She stated. "I want to find out more of what is going on."

"Permission to at least increase security on the family deck Milady. And the dragon cave? For the remainder of our trip back to Earth?"

For'mya nodded. "Of course." She replied. "Whatever you feel is necessary Monid. However let's keep it as low key as possible."

Monid nodded. "Of course my Queen. Low key."

For'mya smiled at him. "Go." Monid began to turn away but her voice stopped him. "Monid?"

He turned back to face her. "Milady?"

“The bodies. I want the bodies moved to a secure location. The leader appeared to have some poison in his mouth that he used. Very powerful and very fast acting.” For’mya spoke. “I want to make sure we discover what it was.”

Monid nodded. “As you order. May I suggest we...”

The grunt of a powerful blow sounded and they turned quickly as Qurot’s body was seen rolling across the deck away from several of the dead commandos that had been crushed by the crate Resumar had tossed on them.

“Step back!” Resumar snarled at him.

Qurot quickly gathered his feet under him, anger flashing in his eyes. “You dare strike me child!” He screamed. He stepped toward Resumar with harmful intent blazing in his eyes but froze after three steps with the metallic sound of the Nehtes extending in Resumar’s hand and the bloody head of the spear pressing to his broad chest.

Karun stepped away from his mother to assist but he too froze when Resumar’s left arm came up and with a brilliant flare of silver/white light, the Shi Viska appeared humming on his arm.

“I wouldn’t if I were you cousin!” Resumar spoke harshly to Karun though his eyes never left Qurot. “Not if you want to keep your head attached to your shoulders.”

“Res!” For’mya shouted stepping around Karun and glaring at her son. “What are you doing?”

“We do not desecrate the bodies of the dead Kavalian!” Resumar growled ignoring his mother. “Not even those of our enemies and most certainly not on my father’s ship!”

For’mya turned her eyes to Qurot as Jalersi got to her feet. “What...”

“His left hand mother.” Resumar spoke calmly. “And know that if you make one gesture of defiance or harm towards my mother Senior Commander Qurot, I will run you through without a second’s pause.”

For’mya stepped forward quickly and held out her hand. “Give it to me.” She demanded.

“He is dead!” Qurot barked. “He will have no need of it! And we can use the information on this to discover who they are!”

“I will not ask again Commander.” For’mya spoke. “You are in Union space on board the Union flagship. Do as I tell you... or I will order my son to plunge his Nehtes through your chest and we will let the chips fall where they may. You however will be quite dead. And do not think for an instant that I will not give that order.”

“Do it Qurot! Damn you! Or I will kill you myself!” Jalersi hissed viciously from where she knelt beside Pian’s inert form.

Qurot held out the small data pad, his eyes glaring at both her and Resumar. For’mya took the pad and held it out to Monid who lowered his P190A3 from where it was leveled at Karun’s head and retrieved the pad from her hand. For’mya looked at Jalersi. “I must insist that the members of your delegation take into account that our laws are very different than yours Jalersi.” She stated. “Another altercation such as this will bring this delegation and the hopes of trade talks to a screeching end. That much I guarantee you.”

Jalersi nodded. “I will see to it myself Lady For’mya.” She barked firmly.

For’mya turned and met Resumar’s eyes for a brief second. “I need to contact Martin Leonidas and inform him of what has happened.” She stated. She looked at Jalersi. “I suggest everyone return to their quarters and regain control of their emotions. We can gather for lunch to discuss what has happened and why.”

Jalersi nodded her head. “Of course.”

For’mya nodded and then headed for the hatchway, Monid and Aurith falling in on either side of her. Resumar brought his left arm back, his Shi Viska quickly disappearing in another flash. He pulled the Nehtes back with a slower pace as Qurot glared at him.

“We will... we will come to blows one day son of Leonidas.” Qurot stated. “Then we will see how good you are with your toys.”

Resumar smiled. “I look forward to that day Qurot. It just might come sooner than you think.” He spoke in reply.

Jalersi stepped forward and pulled on Qurot’s arm, drawing him away from Resumar. “We will do as Queen For’mya has asked us.” She stated. “We will return to our quarters until our emotions have cooled. And we need to check on Pian’s condition. Come Qurot.”

Resumar watched him as he allowed Jalersi to pull him towards the hatchway, Karun following all the while keeping his eyes on Resumar and pulling Athani by her arm. Resumar glanced quickly at Athani as Karun drew her away, saw her blue/green eyes smiling at him and then he turned to the Durcunusaan troopers still milling about.

“I want the bodies secured under guard.” He ordered. “Get the flight crew to medical and let’s get this mess cleaned up. We still have a ship to run.”

Resumar did not see the small smiles of the Durcunusaan troops and the crewmembers or the nods that passed between them.

Yes... Resumar Leonidas was going to make a fine Commander.

SPARTA

ROYAL SPARTAN ESTATE

“...eleven dead Kavalian females. They appeared to have been raped repeatedly and then murdered Martin.” For’mya told him from the holo disc on the floor of his office in the villa. “The male survived, though he was gravely injured. I do not know how he got them to believe he was dead in order to keep them from beating him.”

“The attackers were High Coven commandos For’mya?” Isabella asked from where she was perched on the edge of Martin’s desk. The light robe hid her naked body underneath even as Martin wore only pants.

For’mya shook her head. “No. Monid does not believe they were regular Coven troops Bella.” She spoke. “He discovered clone brands on all of them Martin Leonidas.”

“What does he think they were Kinsoaurgai?” Martin asked leaning forward in his chair.

“He seems to believe they are insurgents of some kind.” For’mya answered evenly. “The brands... the lack of correlating uniforms and weapons. Their training was superb however and they moved very well. A few seconds earlier and they would have caught all of us in the open. I had the bodies locked in a cold storage for Anja to examine when we return. They took some kind of poison that worked insidiously fast and was extremely deadly. Whoever they were... they had to know this was a suicide mission Martin.”

“Beklan Two is very near the border of The Wilds Martin.” Isabella spoke. “But still within Union space.”

“I had Monid contact Armetus to have a team sent there.” For’mya spoke. “They had to have boarded the Envoy ship there.”

“You are on your way back now?” Martin asked getting to his feet.

For’mya nodded. “Komirri is not wasting any time. He does not wish anymore surprises to happen while we are out here without our Strike Wing.”

“The Kavalian delegation?” Martin asked.

“I got them out of the landing bay once Cemath blocked the attacker’s line of sight. Res and I dealt with them.” For’mya spoke. “I wasn’t going to mention this until we got back but the delegation leader is your brother’s mate Martin Leonidas. His oldest son with this woman is also among them. Both she and her sister are the daughters of this Prefect Keleru.”

“Pleistarchus’s mate?” Martin gasped looking at the holo image. “Are you sure?”

For’mya nodded. “Oh yes. She has made no attempt to hide that fact. And she is very determined to have a meeting with you, though her reasons escape me. Their purpose for coming here has nothing to do with trading their berries, Stenys and I both agree. They are pushing to establish an embassy for the very reason we thought they would.”

“So they can watch what is taking place with the Coven.” Bella spoke. “Do they think we are fools?”

“I don’t believe they care what we think.” For’mya said. “This Senior Commander Qurot is a loose cannon as Anja says so much and his actions so far to date indicate they do not care for us in any way, no matter what this Jalersi says. He is arrogant and pompous in his perceived superiority. As is your nephew. The only one who seems remotely normal is the younger one Athani, but there is something about her as well.”

“In what way?” Bella asked.

For'mya shook her head. "Not anything directed at us. I sense she is here for purposes that are entirely her own and they have nothing to do with what her sister or this Qurot character want. She was caught further away when the attack began... Res gave her to Cemath to protect. Martin... she is able to Mindvoice. She and Cemath were talking with each other during the attack. He apparently made contact with her when she tried to break from his protection. He convinced her otherwise. She actually rode on his back without fear Martin. Res... Resumar seems quite protective of her for some reason."

"Resumar is protective of everyone." Bella spoke. "It is the part of his nature that he gets from ussta she-elf."

For'mya nodded. "Yes."

"Have they given any indication that they know the Coven brought their dragons here?" Martin asked.

For'mya shook her head. "No. I am reasonably sure they are only trying to discover why, after so long, we have decided to sign a Cease Fire with them. The Trade Delegation was their only means to have a conduit into the Union, but Deia as we know was avoiding them."

"And Laustinos walked blindly into their net." Martin spoke shaking his head.

For'mya nodded. "It would appear so."

"For'mya did you..." Isabella began.

"Oh yes Bella. In very strong terms." For'mya answered with a smile. "Whether it makes a difference only time will tell."

"Ol inbalus alur... whol ukt zai'th." Bella muttered in the ancient vampire language. (It had better... for his sake.)

For'mya chuckled. "Siyu... Usstan qua'l." She replied in the same tongue. (Yes... I agree.)

Martin looked at them. "What is that about?" He asked.

Bella looked at him. "It's a woman thing." She stated. "Not something you need to worry about."

Martin shrugged as he stepped closer to the holo image. "Ok." He looked at For'mya. "You've told me what you've seen... now tell me what you sense Kinsoaurgai."

For'mya met his eyes. "They have a hidden agenda Martin Leonidas." She said evenly. "That is without question. Whether all of them are part of it I can't say. This Athani... I don't believe so. As I said... she seems to have something entirely different in her mind. I sensed indecision in her when she first arrived onboard, but something has changed. In the landing bay... she seemed more confident. Almost as if she had found the answers to something she had been seeking. Jalersi... I sense quite a bit of simmering hatred inside her... as well as her son. It is hidden deep... but it is there. There is some fear... of what they are doing... if they will succeed and a lingering sense of indecision in them as well, but not for the same reasons as Athani. The females they brought with them have all undergone this biogenic treatment that it appears Jalersi and Athani have."

"The better to blend in naturally." Martin said.

For'mya nodded. "Yes. Commander Qurot is simply a brute. More than likely they sent him along as some sort of visual reference to their military prowess. He is not as important a part as he is portraying himself to be. She has asked that she be allowed to contact her father in regards to what happen Martin Leonidas."

Martin shook his head. "She can contact him when you are back here." He stated. "Not before. I want no more surprises Kinsoaurgai... not for you or Resumar. This is far more than we bargained for to begin with. The Kavalian delegation is one thing, but a commando strike against my ship to kill this delegation and conducted by vampires?" Martin shook his head. "I don't like it."

"We will arrive in seventeen hours my love." For'mya spoke. "Perhaps then we will have a better idea of what is happening. This Qurot fool tried to remove a data pad from one of the dead commandos. Resumar stopped him. Monid is going through it now and trying to decipher the encryption."

"I'll have Anja standing by to examine the bodies when you arrive." Martin said.

"And this Athani?" Bella asked quickly. "Kavalians are not supposed to have the ability to Mindvoice m'ranndii."

Martin nodded. "Siyu... Usstan zhaun." He said softly. (Yes... I know.) "Kinsoaurgai?"

For'mya shook her head slowly. "It is another reason I believe her purpose is directed at something other than us Martin. To my knowledge... she made no effort to inform her sister or the others that this ability was suddenly available to her. And her interaction with her sister says there is something else going on as well concerning her. Something not related to the talks or us. I believe it has something to do with this Qurot."

Bella looked at Martin quickly. “Kavalians are not known for their stellar treatment of their females’ rights m’rannidii. It has never been part of their history. Perhaps this Athani wants more than what she has with her people.”

Martin shook his head. “No way. I sympathize with her if that is the case... but allowing her to defect or seek political asylum is opening ourselves to another whole box of worms. I want these talks to go quickly... and smoothly. No more curve balls. I’ve talked with Deia, Tarifa and Selene in regards to an embassy. If it allows us to keep better tabs on them... then yes I will allow it as much as it burns my ass to do. I trust them less than I do Aikiro and the Coven.” He looked up. “Speaking of which... I believe it’s high time I discover what Aikiro has been keeping from me. If the Coven has insurgent groups inside their ranks who are willing to board my ship on a suicide mission to kill a Kavalian delegation... what else are they prepared to do here on Earth?”

“The Union pilots were not injured Martin.” For’mya was quick to point out. “It appears they were knocked unconscious as soon as the tractor beams on MJOLNIR’S HAND secured the MENKLA transport... but they were not harmed in any way.”

“Ok... so they went out of their way to not hurt our people.” Martin said. “Why? And will that happen again? Just bring yourselves home For’mya.”

For’mya nodded. “We will see you soon my love.”

Martin turned to look at Isabella as the holo image faded. “Outside of For’mya... who is best at reading people Bella?”

“I would have to say Dysea.” She replied immediately.

Martin shook his head. “No... I want Melda Min and Anja to remain as far outside of what is happening with the Coven as possible. I have too many of my family intertwined with them now as it is. You, me and Andro I’m not concerned with. You and I because we are of one mind when it comes to the Coven. Andro because he has spent more time with Selene and Lynwe than any of our children, and his closeness with Zarah... it...”

Isabella nodded. “Yes... it gives him a better sense of what vampires will do.” She stated as she stood up and moved closer to her husband. “Then I would have to say Aihola, Tarifa or Charles Turner. What is wrong Martin?” She asked tracing her long finger down his cheek. “You are troubled by something and I don’t need to probe your thoughts to see that.”

He met her hazel/green eyes. “I just can’t shake the feeling that the shit is about to hit the proverbial fan Bella. And there isn’t a damn thing I can do to stop it.”

CRANAE ISLAND

Andro had made no move to chase Lisisa and Denali away and send them to the southern base. He knew that Lisisa had waited for this moment for a long time and he had no intention of cutting short the first hours she would have with her sister. Zarah had told him this during a brief shielded conversation after dinner. She had said it was Lisisa’s time with Carisia and she wanted her to have it. She had volunteered to go to the southern base early in Lisisa’s and Deni’s place. Zarah may have been free-spirited and reckless, but she was also exceptionally intelligent and very perceptive for one who was only twenty-one. He and Zarah shared a special bond that no one among their family knew of and if they had any say in it, no one ever would. That bond gave them a closeness Andro and Zarah did not share with their other siblings. They could communicate in ways that no one else could, developing a unique coded language all their own. They knew why they shared this bond, but Zarah knew no matter what, she and Andro would always be closer than most.

They had moved to the beach and spread out several large blankets on the white sand. Elynth and the other dragons were fully occupied only a few meters away gnawing on large bones and speaking with each other within Mindvoice. Andro was stretched out on his side, Sadi sitting lotus style in front of him and leaning against his body. Nyla was sitting with her long legs curled underneath her, Eliani’s head resting in her lap, as their hands stroked each other’s skin without conscious thought. Arrarn sat next to Deni while Carisia sat beside Lisisa. Toria and Narice sat to Carisia’s left. Sadi could sense Andro’s eyes gazing on Carisia throughout the evening at different times, just as hers were. They watched how she laughed and smiled, the sound of her voice and her unique rose petal scent; a scent that both of them had already burned deeply into their memories. Lisisa was regaling them of deeds they had done completely unrelated to war and fighting. She spoke of her time watching Andro and her siblings growing up and the trouble they always found themselves in.

Andro glanced at his brother, noticing that Arrarn had remained quiet for most of the evening, which was unlike him. He watched him for several moments seeing his dark eyes dart back and forth between Toria and Narice several times. He watched him chuckle at what Lisisa was saying as she finished the story she was telling Carisia and the others.

“...so what does Arrarn do?” Lisisa spoke. “He and Deni find some thick straps made from some material I have no idea where they found. Normya is piloting the DT as they come swooping in over the mountain hanging from this contraption they had made. They are several thousand feet up mind you, traveling in the blistering cold of the high mountains. Normya brings the DT in over our camp and these two bone heads leap from this netting thing they had made, wrap Jeth in it and we ride all the way back to Tuya hanging from this netting under a DT.”

“Hey... it worked didn't it?” Denali stated.

“Our father ranted at them for over an hour for doing something so crazy.” Eliani said from where she was.

“So you rode hanging from this netting?” Carisia asked stunned. “With your dragon? Under the Dragon Transport?”

Lisisa nodded. “A ninety minute flight.” She answered. “By the time we got back, I think we all spent several hours in hot pools because we were damn near frozen through.”

“I had icicles in my nostrils.” Arrarn laughed. “I was pulling flakes of crystallized ice out of my hair for two days. I'll never go to another cold weather climate as long as I live. And I won't listen to anymore of Deni's insane ideas.”

Deni looked at him. “The net was your idea.”

“The operation was your idea!” Arrarn quipped back. “It's all that pure blood you have in you. Andro too. Makes you both certifiably nuts at times.” He said. “Now me and Eliani... we have Elven and Hadarian blood in us. Makes us much calmer and in control of our emotions.”

“Sibfla!” Andro barked with a grin. “It wasn't Deni or I who flew our DT into a Class Nine Ion storm to rescue a family we didn't know. That was you brother! All you! Certifiable. That's what you are!”

“A Class Nine Ion storm?” Toria gasped. “How did you keep control?”

Arrarn grinned. “It's all in the touch.” He said.

“Touch my ass!” Eliani blurted. “You about crapped in your uniform shorts!”

“And he found true love!” Lisisa stated with a glint in her eye. “The daughter of the family fell in love with him and his cute elven ears the moment he set down on the plateau. He stole her heart.” She said giving him a shove as he looked on embarrassed. “And he fell in love with her too.”

“My ears are not cute!” Arrarn snapped playfully. “They are distinguished. That is what Taleena saw in them.”

“Yeah... distinguished full of sibfla ears!” Deni popped.

“Do you often break the hearts of females who fall in love with you?” Narice asked the question.

Arrarn looked at her across the blanket his dark eyes unreadable. His jaw twitched in anger and it was obvious he was holding back a rather vile retort to Narice's blunt and unfeeling question. “That's me. Love them and leave them Leonidas.” He stated coldly getting to his feet. “I'm going to go for a run.”

“Arrarn...” Andro called as he started to get up. There was a soft flash of white/blue light and the large dark blond wolf was suddenly in front of them. The dark eyes were the same, yet in front of them now was a muscular male wolf easily two hundred pounds of coiled muscle and bone. His dark eyes stared at Narice for a moment longer before turning and sprinting off into the darkness. “Anse!” Andro stated as he came to his feet. “KertaGai?”

Sadi looked up at him. “Go!”

Carisia, Toria and Narice all gasped at the same time as with another flash of soft white/blue light the immense raven black wolf stood in front of them. Natural instincts caused Narice and Toria to lean back quickly in fear, only Carisia staring with wonder at the huge black apparition. Staring with both love and desire in her maya blue eyes. In his natural wolf form Androcles Leonidas was nearly three and a half feet tall at the shoulders and just less than three hundred pounds of muscle and teeth. His black fur was thick and shiny, but there was no mistaking the rippling steel muscles under that fur. His azure eyes were almost mystical to look at surrounded by the night black of his fur as they were. He was only slightly smaller than his father in size, and they watched as his large muzzle leaned close to Sadi's face and licked her cheek eliciting a giggled and a smile, before he too sprinted off into the night.

Lisisa turned to Denali. "Deni... go." She stated.

A third and final white/blue flash and the dark brown haired wolf was there and turning to follow his brothers. Denali and Andro were almost the same size in wolf form, larger than their brothers Arrarn and Resumar only because of their pure Lycavorian blood. He stood just a tad over three feet high at the shoulder and two hundred and eighty pounds of similar muscle and teeth. As large as they were, even though Arrarn and Resumar were not pure Lycavorian, they were still larger than most wolves in the Union. No one saw the utter passion and desire in Lisisa's eyes as she watched Denali sprint after his brothers.

Carisia turned finally and looked at her Aunt. "That was not called for Narice." She snapped harshly.

"I only asked a question!" Narice found herself defending what she had said, though not with very much heart in her actions. The moment her statement escaped her lips she regretted it. Narice was not acting like herself around this Arrarn Leonidas; his presence was making her feel strange to say the least. It had all day. She was reacting defensively to him and she did not understand why. "The intelligence reports... they said..."

"Intelligence reports?" Lisisa asked keeping her voice calm and even.

Narice nodded quickly. "Yes. We assumed them to be accurate since most of them were taken directly from your own Netnews intercepts and channels."

Eliani sat up fully now. "This is why Andro brought us here tonight." She said softly. "To begin to learn of each other ourselves and not what others say. Narice... Taleena was five years old when Arrarn rescued her and her family. That was only two years ago. Her older brother was killed as they tried to get to the plateau where he finally found them. Arrarn took it upon himself to fulfill the role of her brother because he could not get to them in time to save him. He has felt guilty about that ever since. He has acted in her brother's stead since that day."

Narice, Princess of the High Coven, supremely skilled and highly intelligent, suddenly found herself in a very unfamiliar position. She suddenly felt miniscule in size and completely ashamed of herself. She had prided herself on always looking beyond what was told to her... yet for some reason with Arrarn Leonidas she did not do this. She wanted to believe what the intelligence reports said about him. Narice felt Toria's hand squeeze her arm as she leaned forward.

"He did this freely?" Toria asked.

Eliani and Lisisa nodded. "That is who our brother is." Eliani answered. "Not the ridiculous way they portray him on the Netnews."

"The reports we gathered from the Union Netnews... they made your brother out to be... well..." Toria stopped.

"A ladies man?" Lisisa said.

Toria met her eyes. "Well... yes."

Lisisa smiled. "Yes... I thought as much. Arrarn does have a way of attracting females wherever he goes." She said. "I can see where it would be easy to assume that from just the Netnews."

"It's been like that for years." Eliani said. "Ever since he finished his Agoge."

Narice turned her head and looked at Eliani surprised. "He is a pilot." She said. "I did not think they were required to go through your ritual training."

"Every Leonidas male is expected to go through the training." Nyla spoke now. "I don't think any of them would shirk from that duty. To them it would be like smearing the name of their grandfather... and that is something none of them would ever do, even upon pain of death. Arrarn Leonidas is just as lethal with a Nehtes as he is behind the controls of a STRIKER DT. Even Deion is already talking of his Agoge and he is only ten."

"Arrarn is considered the best looking of our father's sons..." Eliani said with a smile. "The most beautiful if you will."

Sadi, who had remained silent until now, chortled. "I beg to differ on that." She barked.

Lisisa laughed and reached over to push her gently. "Your opinion does not count. You and Andro have essentially been a couple since he was eight months old."

Eliani laughed as well and looked at Narice. "Arrarn is most definitely not a ladies man." She stated. "He's had only three..."

"Two." Lisisa stated quickly. "Arianna does not count. She was a upaee and only wanted to be with him to flaunt him to all her high class friends. Similar to what Ulana wanted with Andro."

"Ulana?" Sadi asked quickly even though she already knew the answer to her own question. Andro had hidden nothing from her, and she had spent hours roaming the halls of his mind since they had been together. She knew exactly who Ulana was. "Who is this Ulana?"

Eliani chuckled. "Oh I'm sure you'll meet her some day." She said. "She's just stupid enough to try and steal Andro back from you, as if that will ever happen. He already told her she was a pompous bitch wench... but she won't listen."

"Bitch wench Ussta-che?" Nyla asked with a smile. "That is a new one."

"Do I get to rip her eyes out if she tries?" Sadi asked with a wicked glint in her jungle green eyes.

"Just wait until we are there to see it." Lisisa stated. "That will be priceless."

"Anyway... Arrarn's only had two relationships." Eliani said. "Neither of them lasted very long and they parted as friends. It takes a special woman to win the heart of one of our brothers. Andro has found Sadi... Arrarn, Res and Deni... well, they are still looking."

Lisisa felt a warm flush through her skin that was hidden in the moonlight for she knew that Deni had already found that woman in her. As he showed her every time they were alone together. And it also told her they were doing an excellent job of hiding their love for one another until the time when they could reveal it.

"I'm... I'm afraid I am guilty of doing exactly what I told myself I would not do." Narice spoke softly. "I said I would come here with an open mind... and I did not do that. I... I am sorry."

Eliani waved her hand. "Arrarn is like Andro and father. He has thick skin. By morning he'll be back to his old self... you'll see."

"I should apologize to him." Narice said quickly.

Lisisa shook her head. "No. Never apologize to a Spartan male for being a woman. And most definitely never to a Leonidas. To them, it would be an insult. Our father has instilled in our brothers that while we are women and fellow warriors, we are also treasured pieces of our own future. We are to be treated with equal respect and honor as well as devotion. It is the way he treats our mothers, and he made sure all of our brothers knew it. If it was seen by any of our brothers, and I dare say any Spartan man, the striking of a woman by a man, that man would soon learn what pain is like." She said. "We are what we are... and that is why they love and desire us so!" She said with a brilliant smile.

Eliani burst out laughing and fell back on Nyla's laughing form as Sadi couldn't contain her own loud giggling. "Oh... oh that is a good one Lisi!" Eliani exclaimed.

The laughter was infectious and soon all of them were laughing, though Narice's dark eyes were staring off into the darkness where the dark blond wolf had disappeared, and very much wondering if Arrarn Leonidas desired her.

Arrarn didn't budge from where he had shifted back and now sat on the beach on the far side of the island. He felt his brothers end their sprint and move up on either side of him before shifting back into their human forms and settling to the sand beside him.

"I don't want to hear it." Arrarn spoke.

"Hear what?" Andro asked.

"What you are going to tell me."

"What makes you think I'm going to say anything?" Andro said with a smile.

Arrarn smiled and looked at him. "You've always got something to say. You are too much like father sometimes. I can hear him now... 'Are you crazy boy? The daughter of the High Coven Empress? Have you lost your mind? An intelligence officer from the Venorik Elghinn? They aren't your mother and sisters! They are High Coven!'" He stated trying to impersonate his father's voice.

"He's got a point about that Andro." Deni spoke with a grin. He elbowed his brother. "Not a bad impression of father either."

"Just let me wallow in self pity for a while." Arrarn spoke.

Andro chuckled. "You got it bad brother." He said looking at Arrarn as he lay back on the sand. "Both of them?"

"Why is it that vampires think they don't have unique scents?" Arrarn demanded to the star filled sky. "I have had nothing but the smell of fresh pineapples and cherries in my nubous head all day and night!"

"Which one is which?" Deni asked with a grin.

"You expect me to say that it is wrong Arrarn." Andro spoke softly.

"That is what father would say." Arrarn retorted. "They are supposed to be our enemies you know."

"I am not father Arrarn." Andro spoke. "And they are not my enemies until they prove otherwise to me. And I will not scorn you for feeling the exact same thing I feel for Carisia."

Arrarn sat up quickly and joined Denali in looking at him wide eyed. "What?" Arrarn gasped.

"I knew I smelled it today." Deni spoke. "From Sadi too. For her."

"That's what that was coming from her as well?" Arrarn asked.

Andro nodded. "Sadi and I have been having dreams of her for a long time." He said. "Individually and together."

"How long?" Deni asked.

Andro chuckled. "A long time." He told them. "Today after she first arrived... Sadi and I were talking in Mindvoice. Shielded. We included her in the connection without as much as a passing thought. Like it was the most natural thing in the world for us to do."

"Anse!" Arrarn said. "Does father know?"

Andro shook his head with a smile. "No."

"Andro... you can't just dismiss that." Arrarn spoke. "You and Sadi... you were... you were chosen for each other. We all know that. But if this... if Carisia... if she affects you both in this way... to that extent. You can't just let it go."

Andro nodded. "We don't intend to." He stated. He looked at Arrarn and Deni. "They may be from the High Coven... but they are not our enemies. The Empress, Yuri... some others that I have seen yes, but not these women here tonight. And not their dragons. With the exception of Yuri and her idiot son Dante and that fool riding the female who carried eggs, I sense nothing but concern from these men and women for their dragons. Believe me... I have tried to find something else too. They just not have been able to express it as they should. Yuri's other two children... Javier and Lucia... they are wavering on the edge but I don't think I care to catch them to be honest. Not unless they show me something else."

"The history between our people is..." Deni began.

"It is not our history Denali." Andro said. "It is father's history. Our mother's history... though I dare say they would be more open to the future if not for his feelings. We make our own history brother. Just as grandfather Leonidas did. Just as grandfather Resumar did. Just as father has the past years... but that is not our history. We make our own history by the paths we choose to take."

Denali shifted on the sand to look at him fully. "What are you saying Andro?"

"We have an opportunity right now to make our own history and with that, our future." Andro spoke. Andro shook his head slowly. "The High Coven as our father knows it will... it will not survive the future. They are not the threat we should be concerned with."

"The Kavalians?" Arrarn stated.

Andro nodded. "The Kavalians are worse than the Coven ever thought of being, and with our uncle helping them, it makes them that much more dangerous to the Union. I'm not saying the High Coven is innocent in their past actions or even their future actions... but I know you both saw today that Narice, Toria and Carisia are not like Yuri and Aikiro. Father is right in that they are here for something other than us to train their dragons and riders."

Arrarn nodded slowly. "Yes."

"That's obvious in the way they have acted." Deni said.

Andro settled and shifted on the sand. "The question is... are their ulterior motives the same or different from Aikiro and Yuri? And how many of them feel the same way?"

"You think they are different?" Denali asked.

"Have either of you smelled a lie coming from them today?" Andro asked. Arrarn and Denali shook their heads quickly. "They are just as curious about us as we are about them. Deni I know your sense of smell is almost as good as mine and father's noses. Arrarn... you may be half elf... but your nose is better than some purebloods. Are you going to tell me you didn't smell the interest Narice has in Toria? Or the interest Toria has in Narice? This is all as new to them as it is us. And not just concerning us. They have been under the thumb of Yuri and Aikiro for years... and I'm guessing this is the first time any of them have interacted with us or each other out of very controlled circumstances."

"Well... their intelligence about us really sucks." Deni said. "Armetus has made it very difficult to operate intelligence agents within the Union. At least those that can do us harm. Wherever they got theirs... well they need to discard that source."

Andro nodded. "Yes he has. I believe they got most of their information from our own Netnews channels."

Deni rolled his eyes. "Well that would explain a lot. Those idiots couldn't find their midas with both hands, their noses and a searchlight."

Andro nodded as he chuckled. "That's not to say they don't still have some sources... but for the most part they came here blind." He looked at them intently. "You are my brothers... blood before all else... you know I follow that phrase more closely than most. I would never do anything that puts any of you in danger. Ever! I believe however, I believe this is our chance to change the future. That is why I am not going to fight what Sadi and I feel for Carisia. And that is why Arrarn... I'm not going to tell you to fight what you seem to feel for Narice and Toria. They are both beautiful beyond measure. If that is what you wish, then I say go for it. No... this time... this time I'm going to follow what my gut tells me. Not father's instincts. I'm going to trust in my instincts... and my instincts tell me this is our time."

"And if you're wrong Andro? Then what?" Denali asked.

"Then I will take every single one of their dragons from them." Andro replied. "Those that do not leave peacefully I will bury."

Arrarn and Denali looked at their brother for a long moment in silence with nothing but the breeze whispering across the sand and the sounds of the Laconian Gulf splashing gently against the shore.

"You know brother... you nubous scare me sometimes." Arrarn finally blurted out.

"Man you ain't kidding." Deni agreed. "You been hanging around Helen too much."

Andro laughed gently. "I scare myself sometimes." He said.

Arrarn smiled. "You know... I've never chased the tails of pureblood vampires." He said. "That might be kind of fun. They don't seem too impressed that I am a Prince and that makes it even more challenging."

"Well... from what I saw today... you won't find much finer looking tails than those anywhere in Sparta." Deni spoke with a grin.

"Man... ain't that the truth!" Arrarn said.

"You just have to work past the part where they are interested in each other as well as you." Andro spoke.

Arrarn looked at him eyes wide. "You smelled that in them?"

Andro stood up. "C'mon... let's go back and work on some things I have floating in my head to speed the training. When Res gets back, we can really throw the training into high gear."

Arrarn and Denali got to their feet as well. "Wait a minute... you have to tell me if you smelled that Andro. You can't leave me hanging." Arrarn complained.

Androcles and Denali laughed and three sons of Leonidas began walking back down the beach the way they had come.

MJOLNIR'S HAND

Resumar had not wanted to leave a meeting so badly as he did the one with Qurot and the other Kavalians right now. He had spent the five hours prior to the meeting in the landing bay with the crew of MJOLNIR'S HAND helping to put everything back together as well as conduct some sort of preliminary investigation. The bodies had all been taken to a secure storage room near engineering; none of the vampire commandos had any sort of identifiable markings except for the clone brand on their arms. All of them were healthy and well groomed and they could just as well be any vampire walking within the Union borders right now. The computer cores were downloaded and secured, and the last thing he had done was interview the two pilots before going to the meeting. Resumar was no stranger to the adrenalin rush of combat and the after affects, yet the reason his thoughts kept drifting was not the battle, but the tangerine scent of Athani'Puat who sat three chairs from him. What had taken place with her had stunned him and Cemath, and even as they moved about the landing bay talking of this, they were trying to discover how she had suddenly developed the ability to Mindvoice. He also could not shake the very real feeling that he had undoubtedly enjoyed having her supple body in his arms. The crush of her breasts against his chest, the feel of her arms around his shoulders and the taste of her lips; these were the things that occupied Resumar's mind right now.

"Res?" For'mya's voice broke into his thoughts.

Resumar looked up. "Huh? I'm... I'm sorry mother. What did you say?" He asked quickly. He saw Qurot roll his eyes in disgust even as Karun snickered softly.

"The bodies?" For'mya asked again.

Resumar nodded. "The bodies... yes." He said. He held up the data pad and gently slid it across the surface of the table to where Jalersi sat. She ignored it and looked at him. "All of them are clones." He stated. "They all had the same clone brand on their arm. Aside from being well fed and in excellent physical condition, there's nothing discernible as far as where they came from or how they got to Balkan Two. I agree with Monid however, they are definitely not regular High Coven troops."

"What do you mean?" Jalersi demanded. "How would you know that?"

Resumar turned to her. "Your people do not have the corner on doing battle with the High Coven Lady Jalersi." He stated calmly surprising her with the respect in her voice. "You have been at war with them for twenty-five years... before that, not for a thousand years. My people, with the exception of these last twenty-five years, have battled the High Coven for centuries. We do know something of what they are capable of. One of our senior Durcunusaan officers believes these men are insurgents of some kind."

"Insurgents?" Jalersi asked.

"Yes."

"What of their weapons?" Karun asked from where he stood.

"A mix of older High Coven projectile rifles... Limian hand toasters and Kavalian Mark Three assault rifles." Resumar spoke looking at him.

"Kavalian weapons?" Karun asked as he stepped closer to his mother and reached for the pad she had not picked up.

"I have spoken with Martin Leonidas. For'mya spoke now. Based on what has recently occurred, we are making straight for Earth with no other stops or delays. Jalersi... considering this commando team was undoubtedly after you and your delegation, until we are in more secure surroundings within Sparta, Martin has refused your request to contact your father Keleru'Puat. He does not want any transmission you might send to be intercepted. He said he will make a secure transmitter available to you when we arrived on Earth."

"That is not acceptable!" Qurot spat leaning forward in his chair.

For'mya turned her dark brown eyes on him. "Senior Commander Qurot... what you find acceptable does not concern me in the least." She stated calmly. "This was supposed to be a Trade Delegation. The Union has taken no part and no sides in your ongoing conflict with the High Coven. Now however, now a vampire commando team has boarded my mate's ship and attempted to assassinate your delegation. That they did this within Union space; that they knew what ship they were boarding, and that they knew they would never leave this ship alive does not bode well for continued relations between us. Your issues with the High Coven, whether real or perceived, do not concern us, and Martin Leonidas will not allow us to be drawn into your conflict, nor will he allow your war to spill over into our borders."

"Lady For'mya..." Jalersi began.

For'mya turned her eyes on her. "He has agreed to meet with you Jalersi, as you have requested. And he has agreed to entertain the thought of an embassy. Beyond that I can say no more. Our investigation will continue and if it is found that the High Coven is behind this attack we will deal with them I assure you. Since we are now on a direct routing to Earth, we will arrive in just under fourteen hours. I suggest we try and put this incident behind us and move forward. I will insure you are kept abreast of what we find Jalersi. I give you my word. Deputy Prime Minister Laustinos and First Secretary Stenys will see to whatever it is you may need until we arrive on Earth.” For’mya motioned to Laustinos and Stenys as she got to her feet quickly. “We are done here.”

For’mya turned quickly and walked out of the lounge followed quickly by Resumar.

Jalersi held up her hand before Qurot could speak. “Your words have made this mission infinitely harder Qurot... you will remain silent from now on.” She stated. “If you find yourself unable to comply with that directive because I am a woman, please let me know and I will have my son insure you are incapable of speaking any longer.” She got to her feet. “I must check on Pian’s condition.” She spoke softly.

Athani looked at her sister as she turned and headed for the exit. Her blue/green eyes narrowed somewhat at the tone of voice Jalersi had used in reference to Pian. She began to think quickly about why this was so... but her thoughts were interrupted by the voice of Resumar Leonidas in her head.

[Athani’Puat?]

Athani turned her head back and forth as if to insure no one else heard his voice. Qurot and Karun were speaking in hushed whispers with Jiss and Matuarr. [Resumar Leonidas?] She answered tentatively.

She heard him chuckle in her mind. [No one can hear us Athani.] He spoke. [I have put up Mindvoice shields to keep our conversation private. Shields that no one can crack. It is something my brother taught me.]

[Where... where are you?]

[Waiting for you.] He stated plainly. [I can’t seem to get you out of my head Athani’Puat. As much as I know it isn’t right... I find myself wanting to get to know you very well. I find myself wanting to continue what we started. If that is your wish as well.]

Athani fought to hide the flush in her skin at his words, or the desire that skipped across her senses at his confident tone of voice and the pleasures it promised. Her reply was that of a woman who desired a man, and not of someone looking for an escape of the life she was being forced to live. [Oh... it is. So very much.] She spoke honestly.

[I will meet you in the corridor outside your quarters. Five minutes.] Resumar told her.

[We will be seen.] Athani said quickly.

Resumar laughed again and Athani found herself loving the sound of his deep voice and the baritones when he laughed. [My brothers and sisters and I used to run all over this ship when we were small. We know every square millimeter of it. Trust me... no one will see us. Four minutes now.]

Athani hid her smile as she got to her feet, calmly stating she was returning to her quarters. She ignored the men, as they ignored her and she walked into the corridor. Every step she took brought Athani closer to what she wanted, as well as closer to something she did not think she would ever find.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

GYTHEIO

CRANAE ISLAND

Narice’s eyes fluttered open slowly as she felt the warmth of the sunlight on her face. It had been a very long night, the seven of them sitting on the beach until the early morning hours talking of this and that. She had sensed Arram Leonidas’s heartbeat almost from the moment he re-entered the villa from the opposite side, but the three brothers had gone directly into a large room and had not returned to the beach. She could tell Toria had registered his heartbeat as well for she kept turning to look into the villa, perhaps hoping he would return to the beach with them. It was a hope that Narice found was filling her as well. They could hear the laughter sometimes from the brothers from within the villa and this always caused their heads to turn, something that did not go unnoticed by the others. She and Toria were given one of the large guest rooms together, and by the time they had made their way to this room, both of them were far more tired than either of them had been in a very long time. Due to their fatigue, it was not debated who would get the single large bed in the room, both of them changing into their night clothes and collapsing onto the soft sheets. Their night clothes amounted to simple oversized shirts that they both wore after stripping out of the borrowed bikinis, though neither of them took notice of the fact they were completely naked under the shirts at the time. Within minutes of laying their heads on the large soft pillows, both of them were asleep.

Narice lay in the bed unmoving now, mainly to get her bearings and thoughtfully reflect on the previous night. She, Toria and Carisia had experienced a small glimpse into the lives and history of perhaps their most ancient enemy. As her mind replayed the events from last night Narice incredibly recognized the fact that Lycavorians as a whole were no longer considered the most hated enemy among her people, not after what the Kavalians had done in the last twenty-five years. That was a sudden realization to Narice as she laid in the bed, for no matter how brutal and savage the battles between the High Coven and the Lycavorian Union had been, never in their history had the Union resorted to the base tactics and horrific acts the Kavalians had committed on her kind, even as her father ordered it done to them. Her mind was thrown back several years to the day she had sat hidden in the military tavern not far from High Coven headquarters and listened to half a dozen senior officers discuss in whispers the Union victory over the Kavalians many years before. Their words did not carry the usually hatred and contempt that she heard so much from her sister and mother growing up. Their whispered words contained respect for what they had accomplished. And as she lay on the bed now... she realized their words had contained awe as well.

Narice doubted very much that anyone within the High Coven had ever been so close to so many Leonidas family members for so long a period of time. In just the few hours they had spent with them, they had learned far more than twenty-five years of what she now knew to be false and fabricated intelligence reports had given them. Androcles Leonidas and his father were far more powerful than they had first suspected. Together with his new bride Sadi, Androcles radiated within Mindvoice like two points of bright light. When combined with her niece Carisia, those two points quickly became three and were absolutely blinding. She didn't know what it meant, but Narice knew with almost complete certainty that sooner rather than later Carisia would become part of their lives in a very permanent way. And there would be nothing her mother or sister, or that fat slob Thast could do to stop that. Their connection was almost a flagrant thing really, at least within Mindvoice, and since none of them had anything but rudimentary shields up for the majority of the night, it was impossible to not notice. Narice also took note of the fact that throughout the evening, Carisia and Sadi Leonidas had grown closer and closer together on the blanket. When they finally decided to retire for the evening, Narice had seen them release each other's hands discretely from behind their backs. She had never seen Carisia so animated and relaxed. Her face had become radiant even in the moonlight, her maya blue eyes bright and alert.

Martin Leonidas may not have been as refined as her mother in what he could do or his control, but if what she felt radiating against his shields was any indication, he was nearly an equal in the power he could wield and Aricia Leonidas was far more than she had yet shown to any of them. They masked their true abilities far better than Narice had ever seen, and she knew with almost complete certainty that while Yuri could probably hold her own quite well against one of his other Queens, she was no match for Aricia Leonidas.

Narice did not know what to make of the feelings and actions she had exhibited the previous evening. Upon first seeing Toria Dellion in the skimpy black bikini Narice had felt her stomach contract in what she knew without question was desire. Narice was no stranger to desire and pleasure. She had taken two lovers into her bed in her twenty-eight years, and neither of them ever shared her bed again. She had wanted to experience the feelings of physical contact in the form of sex, and she had not been impressed with either of her partners regardless of their boasting. They had been more concerned with their own gratification and both of them had wanted to feed on her blood, bonding them to her as her husband. That had been something Narice was in no way willingly to allow. She had given herself pleasure through the years in a variety of different ways and had been content with that. Her reaction to Toria's presence and her extreme beauty shocked Narice to a large extent, for she had never considered sharing a bed with another woman. It was just not something that had ever entered her mind until that first night on the ship in Toria's quarters. The young woman's strength of will even after having to endure so many hours with her perverted nephews was amazing, and it was then that Narice realized there was far more to Toria Dellion than she knew. She had strength of purpose that Narice found beguiling, for it almost seemed as if Toria Dellion knew something that no one else did and it made her confident and pure. And Narice found herself wanting to discover that part of Toria with increasing need.

And then there was Arrarn Leonidas.

From the moment she had been introduced to Arrarn Leonidas there had been something about him that strummed within her entire body. She admitted now that he was without a doubt the most physically striking man she had ever laid her eyes on. His incredible good looks and the exquisite definition of his muscular body had actually caused Narice to flush and become moist at her center, something that had never happened before, even with the two lovers that had shared her bed. His dark eyes were intoxicating to gaze into, and his voice was deep and even, flittering across her nerves like a soft musical concerto. As the hours passed however, she discovered there was far more to him than just his looks, and she had made a complete fool out of herself with her actions because she realized now she desired him in the worst possible way.

Narice's eyes grew a little wider as she admitted that to herself. She actually wanted to feel his arms around her, to feel his naked flesh against hers, and subconsciously last night she had realized this fact and struck out in the only way she knew how, trying to convince herself that was not the case. She acted harshly and without regard for her words or the pain they might cause. What had stunned her even more were the images that flashed in her mind of both her and Toria intertwined within his embrace. It was a picture she could not chase from her mind for the latter portion of the evening after he had run off into the darkness, and Narice found it was an image that she did not want to lose. Narice knew she was nothing like her sister Yuri. She did not have Yuri's cruelty within her, and she knew it was because of Deneth. From the day she had bonded with him, she had been different. She thought differently, acted and talked differently, and remained as far away from her sister as well as her mother as she could in terms of how they thought and moved to accomplish goals. It was also the reason why she had decided to...

Narice felt the gentle sigh and the warm breath on the back of her neck and froze. She felt the burning touch of warm flesh against her back even through the shirt she wore and for the first time since she had woken she realized that something was gripping her left breast tightly. Narice almost groaned as she felt Toria shift slightly, her long leg pressing between Narice's thighs and her knee pushing firmly against Narice's bald pussy, even as Toria's delicate hand tightened around her breast resolutely and pulled her closer in response to whatever dream she was having. She felt Toria's face now, buried in the long raven colored locks of hair that fell along Narice's shoulders and neck, as well as her soft warm breath on her skin. Narice froze... unsure of what to do, and undecided if she wanted to do anything at all. The sensations racing through her supple body were unlike anything she had felt before, tiny slivers of excruciating delight shooting through her belly and communicating directly with the pleasure receptors in her brain. Narice felt her nipples harden instantly, the hardening nub of her left breast pressing into Toria's palm firmly as her hand gripped Narice's full breast almost possessively. This was not something Narice had expected and her mind raced back to the feelings she had of Toria's equally luscious body pressed up tightly against her back as they flew here on Deneth. The feel of her large breasts pushed against her even through the new body armor was enough to cause lovely sensations of delight.

Narice was aware Toria shared her mother's bed, albeit rather unwillingly now since Tesand was almost never far from her side. She had heard her mother comment to Yuri how skilled Toria had become in pleasing her in that fashion, and also how much she seemed to enjoy their trysts. At least until Tesand became involved. Then if she protested in any way, as she had done on the ship coming here to Earth, they would give her to Dante and Javier as punishment. Narice always wondered why Toria would allow that. She was a strong woman, very skilled and exceptionally intelligent, as well as being trained by the Venorik Elghinn. Why she would allow herself to be given to her perverted nephews was not something Narice understood and this made her angry. Angry that Toria had to endure that, angry that her mother treated Toria as nothing more than a common whore and angry that it was not her delving into and enjoying Toria's obvious delights. That is what shocked Narice the most as the awareness hit her of what had just crossed her mind.

Narice wanted Toria Dellion for herself.

Almost imperceptibly Narice detected the shift in Toria's heartbeat and breathing. Her breaths changed from the shallow, even intakes of sleep to slow deep breaths that were trying to calm her racing heart.

Toria Dellion was awake... and her heartbeat gave away the fear coursing through her as she realized who she was next to on the bed and how intimately she was grasping the Princess of the High Coven. Not until Narice had come to her quarters that day had Toria ever truly looked upon her in the way she now did. She may have resisted what her Empress wanted her to do initially, but over time Toria had come to enjoy pleasuring her Empress a great deal. While she learned quickly that Aikiro would never return such attention upon her, Toria had devised ways to stimulate herself even as she used her tongue and lips and fingers on her Empress. After that night on the ship when Narice had come to her, Toria found herself looking at her in another way. Narice was far more beautiful than her mother as far as Toria was concerned. Her lithe body was so much more firm and muscular, with larger breasts and fuller lips. Seeing Narice in that blue bikini for most of the day and evening had driven her mad, imagining what she looked like underneath the fabric. What her passion tasted like, and even what her blood tasted like. Combined with the very powerful attraction she had for Arrarn Leonidas... it had made for a frustrating night.

She did not know when she had gripped Narice in such a way, but the feel of her breast in her hand and the warmth and slight moistness against her thigh was unmistakable and almost overpowering. That she had done this excited Toria to no end, but it also frightened her immeasurably. She did not know how Narice would react to such blatant actions, and in the little time she had spent with her, Toria found she wanted to very much be friends with her, as well as lovers. The Empress had showed Toria a different side to herself that she had never known existed, and while it may have been forced upon her at the start, Toria now embraced the fact that she found other women attractive and would size them up as she would any man. This however... this was not how she had wanted to express herself to Narice.

Using all the patience and force of will the Venorik Elghinn had trained her with, Toria began to remove her hand ever so slowly from where it was and inch her legs and hips away from Narice.

Narice for her part was having difficulty maintaining her composure as she felt Toria begin to withdraw herself. She could feel Toria's horror at what she had done by the beating of her heart and the sudden taste of fear in the air. She could sense tremors within Mindvoice that were coming from Toria, as well as very powerful shields that were now radiating at their full power in her fear and she did not even realize it. How was it possible that she was this strong within Mindvoice and her mother had not known? Surely her mother had sensed her abilities easily. Or was it that Toria was just far more than what she appeared. That had to be it Narice decided. Her mother was the most powerful Mindvoicer alive, and if she did not detect Toria's presence within Mindvoice as Narice now did, Toria Dellion was hiding something. It was a fact that surprisingly did not make Narice react as she should have. Toria's reaction was not one of concern or bemused intent at her position right now, her reaction upon waking was one of horror and embarrassment and fear. And as her hand and body withdrew Narice quickly found she did not like the feelings of emptiness that were filling her. It was a very easy decision to make, and later Narice would joke at how right it felt.

Narice's right hand came up as quickly as a striking rock spider and she grasped Toria's hand pressing it back to her breast, while her left hand whipped back to clamp firmly on Toria's ass cheek to keep her from moving. Her next words began her down a path she had not foreseen in her future, but one that she would not dismiss because of what it made her feel.

"No Toria." She spoke softly. "I... I don't want you to move."

Toria's sky blue eyes were wide as she realized that Narice was awake. Had been awake this whole time. "Princess... Princess I can not..." Toria gasped as Narice rolled over quickly; turning to face her even as she stretched her lush body splendidly against hers and Toria felt the flash fires of desire increase even more. She gazed at Narice's face, drinking in her dark eyes and exotic features. "Princess... forgive... forgive me... I..."

Narice stared at Toria's striking sky blue eyes and only lifted her finger, placing it on Toria's soft lips silencing her apology. "You have no fears with me Toria Dellion." Narice said softly yet with far more confidence than her racing heart belied. "I am not my mother."

"Narice... I... I did not intend for you to... to awake with me groping your body." Toria stated quickly. "I was... I was dreaming and..."

"Were you dreaming of me Toria?" Narice asked turning her head slightly and gazing at her face. Narice allowed herself to gaze at Toria, truly gaze at her for the first time. Something she was quite sure her mother had never done. The gentle slope of her nose and the way her eyes glittered in the sunlight. The shape of her eyebrows and the smooth texture of her skin and the light tan coloring. And then there was the soft pink color of her full lips, lips that at this very moment Narice wanted to taste in the worst possible way.

"I think... I think that is painfully obvious Narice." Toria stated as she regained control of some of her composure. "If... if your mother or sister finds out what I have done they will..."

"Do nothing." Narice said confidently. "They will not find out for I have no intention of allowing them to find out. About this... or anything else we share."

Toria's eyes met hers. "What... what do you mean?"

"Do... do you desire me Toria Dellion?" Narice asked.

"Narice I..."

“It is a simple question Toria.” Narice spoke.

“It is not a simple question.” Toria answered. “My... my relationship with your mother may have... it may have expanded my horizons in this fashion. In such a way that I find you almost irresistible... but I... Narice I do not wish to trade being a pet for your mother and Tesand to... only to become one for you. Though you have no idea how much that appeals to me.”

“I am not like my mother Toria Dellion.” Narice said softly. “Though I do understand why you would think in such a way.”

“Narice... I...”

Narice shook her head rapidly. “No. I am not angry in the least at your words. After what you have experienced I would speak similar words I imagine.” She looked up quickly at the window in their room. “It is the air on this planet. It is so pure and clean. The people here so carefree and passionate about life... about everything.” She turned back to look at Toria slowly. “In just the few days we have been here I find myself entertaining thoughts of things I would never have considered before now. It is these people... this family... it is... it is Arrarn Leonidas. It is you Toria.”

Toria’s eyes grew wider. “You... you desire him don’t you Narice? That is why you treated him as you did. Those... those feelings frightened you.”

Narice nodded her head. “Oh yes. More strongly than I have ever desired a man in my short life. I can not explain it. I am... I am drawn to him in a way that... it does frighten me. It frightens me because of whom he is... what he is... and what I fear he could make me feel in his arms. You... you are so much older than I Toria... is it supposed to feel so odd? The tightness in your stomach... watching his every move... how his eyes sweep across the horizon? His breathing... his heartbeat?”

“I don’t know Narice. I may be three hundred and seven years old but I have never felt these things. Until now.” Toria answered.

Narice looked at her once more. “For him?” She asked quickly.

Toria nodded. She was already set on her path and nothing would change that now, not even her admission to feeling as she did for Narice. “For Arrarn Leonidas yes... and... and for you Narice.”

Narice gazed at her longingly and she finally smiled gently. “For me?” She asked.

“Do you wish me to lie about that?” Toria asked. “After waking up with you in my arms I would make a fool of myself if I attempted to deny what I feel coursing through me for you. For him.”

“You are no fool Toria Dellion.” Narice said reaching up to stroke her cheek with her fingers now.

“I want to taste you Narice.” Toria admitted. “I want to taste your passion... your blood... your desire. I want to explore every part of you... but I don’t want to surrender myself to you and then have to endure your mother and Tesand. And Dante and Javier when I don’t please them enough or do what they say. That would be too much.”

“And if I told you I would not allow this?” Narice spoke inching her face closer to Toria’s. “If I told you I want this to happen just as much as you and I will not share you with anyone.”

“You are a Princess of the High Coven Narice but even you can not override an order from your mother.” Toria spoke. “Even you can’t...”

Narice lowered her lips to Toria’s and kissed her silencing her words. The two pureblood lovers Narice had taken into her bed were not interesting in kissing her. They had shared brief kisses, almost painful in nature as they wanted only to plunge their shriveled cocks into her. The moment Narice’s lips came together with Toria’s it was different. They were softer, tender and tasted faintly of the juice they had drunk last night. What surprised her was the groan of desire that escaped Toria’s throat, and her hands wrapping around her back to grasp Narice’s ass cheeks pulling her tighter. New sensations rippled through her as Toria crushed her body against hers, deepening their kiss and plunging her sweet tongue into Narice’s mouth. It danced across her teeth, and the insides of her mouth, playfully wrestling with Narice’s tongue but easily overpowering her more inexperienced one. Narice was lost in these new feelings, Toria’s fingers burning her skin where they gripped her ass tightly, their breasts crushed against one another even through the fabric of the shirts they wore. She relaxed her body as Toria drew her tighter, drawing her long bare leg up alongside Narice’s hip and sending desire skittering across her exposed flesh.

It all came to a rather abrupt end with the screaming sound of powerful engines sweeping in over the top of the villa.

Their lips tore away from each other at the sound and both of them scrambled from the bed and moved to the window. They saw the STRIKER DT sweep in over the edge of the villa slowly, its engines causing some of the taller trees to sway madly. As their eyes fell closer to the villa they saw Arrarn Leonidas standing on the front patio wearing a standard flight suit with the same additional body armor coverings as those they wore as riders. A combat vest carried an assortment of items, while Narice's keen eyes detected a dual holster which held the newer model of the Lycavorian Union's K12A Kinetic Magnum strapped to his right leg. It was a very powerful and accurate weapon modeled after the semi automatic handgun of Earth's ancient past Narice knew. It fired a Kinetic energy round that could punch through six inches of solid Vanadium armor and it had become the standard sidearm for Union troops. Strapped to his left leg was a Spartan Nehtes with intricately carved shaft handle which had writing on it that she could not make out from where she was. He looked very imposing and businesslike, and so very handsome. He held the small portable computer console in his hands and was obviously directing the DT in via remote control because he kept looking up to check the position of the ship as it swept in low over the beach, its landing gear extending just before it came to rest in the sand of the sea patio beach.

Narice looked at Toria, pulling her close in her arms. "We will continue this Toria Dellion." She spoke.

Toria met her eyes and smiled. "You may find something you can't live without Narice." She said confidently.

Narice leaned over and kissed her softly. "I sincerely hope so." She said.

They both turned quickly when the door to their room slid open and Carisia appeared already dressed in her black body armor, her long black hair tied into a tight pony tail. She paused briefly seeing the physical closeness of Narice and Toria, but a flash of recognition filled her eyes and then it was gone just as quickly as it had appeared. Narice thought she almost saw a tiny smile purse Carisia's lips as well.

"Narice... come quickly." Carisia stated then. "Something has happened. Andro wants you and I to accompany him to Sparta while Arrarn and Sadi take everyone else to the new training base."

Narice did not miss the almost casual way Carisia had spoken Androcles's name or the names of the others but she stepped towards her dismissing that for now. "What is it? What is wrong?"

"There has been an attack on the Kavalian delegation while they transited here Narice. An attack executed onboard his father's ship." Carisia spoke quickly.

Narice stepped even closer and took her hands. "How do you know this Carisia?" She demanded. "Who would attack the flagship of the Lycavorian Union? That is madness!"

"Andro told me. I was having coffee with Sadi and Lisi when his father contacted him." Carisia answered and again Narice noticed the familiarity of the way she spoke the names. "That is why he sent me to get you."

"He revealed this to you." Toria asked coming forward.

"Yes. The attack failed Narice... but it was conducted by... Narice it was conducted by vampires." Carisia explained. "Cloned vampires."

MJOLNIR'S HAND

Athani'Puat was in no way concerned about cloned vampires in the least, nor was she even remotely thinking about the attack against them only six short hours ago by those same cloned troops. She was far more concerned with the raging firestorm of wonderful vibrations that was rapidly consuming her entire body from a simple kiss.

Resumar had indeed met Athani outside her quarters, and then he took her hand and they disappeared into a myriad of dark corners and tunnels and hatches until they appeared outside his quarters. He had the door open in seconds and even as it was closing behind them, he had lifted her into his arms once more and covered her lips with his own. Athani could sense the simmering want and desire in the aura he was projecting to her, wrapping around her, yet as before he was only hitting her with enough to delight her senses, exciting her and leaving her in complete command of her actions. Athani's actions had been simple really. She surrendered to his kiss with blistering want and desire of her own, releasing what small amount of a female aura Kavalian females could project, and directing it solely at him. Resumar Leonidas hadn't pinned her to a bulkhead this time as his lips consumed her being. With her legs locked securely around his waist he proceeded across the large quarters he occupied, twice bumping into furniture as his hands pulled at her jumpsuit fervently, and exposing her satiny skin to his warm lips and tongue. Athani gasped loudly as his lips engulfed the nipple of her left breast, suckling on it gently, teasing it with his tongue as he walked. She was not inactive however, her hands pulling at his clothes with equal urgency, nearly tearing the fatigue top off his shoulders before yanking the lightweight black t-shirt over his head. As his lips and tongue sent pleasure zipping through her nerves, Athani allowed her hands to explore his broad shoulders and incredibly muscular chest, marveling in the definition of what she was beholding. She felt him finally pull the top of her jumpsuit from her shoulders and yank it gently down exposing her entire upper body for his eyes to see, and she could not help but grasp his head and watch as his eyes drank in her nakedness.

He did not gaze at her flesh for long and a small disappointment flashed through her at this. Until he crushed her to him, her firm conical breasts smashed against his iron like chest and he kissed her once more. Athani could do nothing but groan out her delight at this, the feel of his skin against hers almost too much for her to take, even as his tongue plundered and dueled with her own. His hands were everywhere, stroking her shoulders and arms and back. When his hands and fingers dropped to her lower back and his fingers grazed the sensitive portion of her skin where her tail entered her spine Athani groaned loudly and her hips ground against his in unabashed bliss. This did not escape Resumar's notice and he brought his fingers back up over the same portion of her skin ever so gently, Athani's reaction the same as he did this. A groan of delight and pressing of her hips tighter against his. Her tangerine scent was driving him mad as he finally entered his bedroom and his booted feet banged against the solid frame of the bed. Though not as powerful as that of a Lycavorian female, Athani's female aura was hitting him with everything she had. It really wasn't needed, for her scent was enough to energize his entire body. Discovering the sensitive area at the small of her back was an added bonus so early in his seduction. Resumar wanted her to feel more pleasure than her mind could take and any advantage he could get would only allow him to complete his promise to love her senseless.

Athani was already beyond the point of trying to figure out how he had discovered her sensitive area so quickly. Twice he had caressed that portion of her body, causing the most delicious pleasure to ripple through her, and causing her to ground her hips against his enabling her to feel his thickening cock even through his pants. The second time she had felt his cock, her eyes had opened wide in the midst of their kiss. He was easily equal to or larger than Pusintin and she had not even seen him without his pants. This only caused her body to grow hotter and when he banged into the bed she released her legs from his waist and dropped the few inches to the bed, frantically trying to get the rest of her jumpsuit off even as he was pulling at the remainder of his own clothes. When Athani finally succeeded in kicking the last of her clothes to the floor and she looked up at him beside the bed she gasped in absolute ecstasy. His six foot one body looked as if it had been sculpted from clay by a master artist. His skin was deeply tanned, every muscle in his arms, chest and abdomen pulsing with life. As her stunning blue/green eyes fell upon what he offered her, standing proudly at attention, Athani could not help but feel wetness seep from her center. He was larger than Pusintin, and so much thicker, his cock throbbing with life and desire and want. Athani licked her lips and moved closer to him on the bed, her tail twitching madly off to the side as she lifted her eyes back to his face. She saw his eyes then, his wolf eyes. Dark brown and rimmed in the deepest black she had ever seen. She saw the tips of his dual fangs protruding from his lips. Lips that had set her lithe body on fire. Athani pressed closer to him, her stiff nipples brushing across his chest as her hands came up to grasp his thick cock. She felt his body tense when she wrapped her small hands around his shaft, feeling the heat his cock was producing, almost as if it was pulsing with a life all its own.

"Turn around Athani." Resumar's voice spoke with a deep tremble.

Athani met his eyes then, the seductive smile slowly leaving her face, and her hands stopping their stroking of his enormous cock. "What... what are you...?"

Resumar leaned over faster than she could follow and his nose and lips were firmly nuzzling her neck and cheek then. She was not Lycavorian, and this kind of contact should not have affected her in such a way, but she could not deny the intense swell of pleasure that shuddered through her. "Turn around Athani." He said again in a more commanding tone.

Disappointment coursed through Athani as she turned and faced away from him, stretching out on the bed and suddenly regretting her decision to come here. He was going to take her just like Pusintin. Use her for his own pleasure and she would be no closer to her goal. She felt his weight climb onto the bed with her and she closed her eyes, not wanting to surrender to the feelings and sensations his aura was producing from her, but now too far gone to stop herself. She felt a small tear spring from the corner of her eye as she lowered her head to the bed to accept him, resigning herself to the fact that all men were the same. Her mind was still her own she knew, but his aura had ignited fires inside her that she now needed to quench. She would need to...

Athani gasped loudly when his lips descended to the small of her back where her tail extended from her spine. His fingers had caused shivers to jolt her when he had been holding her and he did this, but his warm soft lips right now were causing waves to crash through her. Waves of incredible pleasure as he gently nuzzled and kissed the supremely sensitive part of her body. She turned her head quickly, her eyes wide and saw him nuzzling that spot, even as his fingers stroked the backs of her thighs and up across her firm ass cheeks. His face moved lower now and his lips gently caressed the flesh of her ass, nuzzling her skin even as he settled butterfly kisses across both her firm cheeks, working his way even lower.

"Res... Resumar... what... what are you doing?" She gasped out the words even as the heat from her pussy began to rise anew.

Res lifted his face from her skin and looked at her with those eyes. "I told you I was going to love you senseless Athani'Puat. And I'm going to do just that."

Athani yelped as his hands grasped her hips and effortlessly flipped her over on the bed. Before she could react he had stretched out his body on the bed, his head between her thighs and his powerful hands gripping her hips. Athani looked down between her legs over the top of her heaving abdomen.

"Resumar... you... I... what... what are you going to do?"

Resumar only smiled at her, his eyes glittering and he lowered his lips to her incredibly aroused pussy. Athani'Puat hissed out her stunned surprise and her eyes flew open as the most enrapturing feelings immediately enveloped her when she felt his tongue drag gloriously across her entire engorged center, reaching the now exposed and painfully hard bud that was her clit. The muscles in her neck strained outward, her mouth open in a breathless scream and the most powerful orgasm she had ever experienced in all her fifty plus years of life raged unchecked through her body. A kaleidoscope of colors exploded in her eyes as her hips rose off the bed, serving only to drive his warm tongue completely inside her spasming pussy.

Athani'Puat descended into a world of ecstasy that she would not come out of for several hours.

SPARTA

DURCUNUSAAN BASE CONFERENCE LOUNGE

"Bullshit!" Martin snapped as he whirled around and glared at Aikiro and Yuri, his voice echoing in the small room.

Aikiro and Yuri sat at the table; Moran, Tesand behind them while Thast stood behind Carisia's chair. Narice and Carisia sat to Aikiro's right. Andro sat between Isabella and Aricia at the other end of the table, Deia sitting in the chair next to Aricia with Aihola immediately next to her.

"You expect me to believe you don't know about them!" Martin barked.

"You asked if I had something to do with this... which I did not. You did not ask if I knew about them." Aikiro replied calmly. "Which I do."

"What the fuck is the difference?" Martin snarled.

"King Leonidas!" Deia spoke quickly knowing she had to harness in her nephew's famous temper if they were going to discover anything useful. "We should allow Empress Aikiro to speak."

"You didn't think it prudent to inform us that there are insurgent groups within the High Coven operating out of Union space and willing to attack the flagship of our fleet on a suicide mission?" Aricia asked in an equally calm voice now. "All to kill a few Kavalians."

"As you have just told me... these were not just a few Kavalians." Aikiro spoke. "The two daughters to the KFI Prefect and several of their senior military officers. I would say that is a very high profile target. As for informing you of insurgent groups within the High Coven, that is honestly not your concern."

"Not my concern?" Martin demanded fighting to keep his temper in check. "It most certainly is my concern when this group of soldiers boarded my ship and attacked the Kavalian delegation with my mate and son onboard."

Aikiro nodded. "Yes Martin Leonidas... not your concern." Aikiro stated plainly. "They are not the reason we are here, and they most certainly do not represent me or my government. The majority of them are groups of men and women who believe we should surrender to the Kavalians to end the war. They want us... me... to allow the Kavalian to govern us! To rule us! They can't seem to get it through their heads that the Kavalians want us all dead. That is their ultimate goal."

"The majority of them?" Isabella spoke.

Aikiro nodded slowly. "The largest one... the largest group wishes to usurp me and take control of the Coven."

"To surrender?" Isabella asked.

Aikiro shook her head. "Their goal is to begin prosecuting our war differently by actively seeking assistance and changing how we govern those we rule."

"You mean give back freedom to the people you have conquered in the hopes they will actively help you in your fight." Deia said.

"If that is how you wish to interpret it yes." Aikiro answered. "This has no bearing on why we have come here!"

"These groups are poorly funded and ill-equipped. They are no match for the vaunted Lycavorian Union." Yuri spat.

Aihola slid the data pad across the table at her never taking her amber eyes from Yuri's face. She knew well who Yuri was for Aihola was a product of one of Yuri's experiments in trying to breed better clones. When that experiment did not meet with her approval she allowed sexually deviant experiments to be performed on those she deemed failures. If not for the skill and knowledge of Anja Leonidas, Aihola would still be afflicted by that experiment. Aihola, as Lynwe and all the remaining Drow within Union space, they had no love for the High Coven in general, and Yuri in particular. Martin had asked her to attend this meeting in the hopes that she might be able to read more out of what the Coven wanted than what they were actually telling them. Over the years Aihola had developed into an exceptional judge of character, and as her strength within Mindvoice grew so did this talent. She had finished tops in the class of those attending Charles Turner's Political Academy. It was a school meant to form and train those with skills in politics, but unlike the schools of the past, this one also taught its students how to become incredibly accurate in reading body language and voices and actions. When combined with Aihola's Mindvoice abilities, it made a very potent combination. She was not as skilled as For'mya by any means... but her Drow and vampire skills, as well as the wolf blood within her thanks to Isra her mate, it all made her quite skilled in this regard.

"Excellent weapons and equipment. Superior physical condition and exceedingly well trained according to Resumar Leonidas and Queen For'mya's Captain. Not exactly ill-funded and ill-equipped if you ask me." Aihola spoke staring directly at Yuri.

"They did not hurt your flight crew." Yuri snapped meeting her eyes. She knew exactly who Aihola was and was angry that she was even here in the same room. It rubbed Yuri the wrong way to know that those she had ordered experimented on held such high positions within the Union government.

"Is that supposed to be some sort of consolation?" Aihola asked.

"They raped and butchered eleven Kavalian females on a Union ship in Union space!" Deia snarled. "Then they conducted a covert operation against a Union warship putting a Union Queen and Prince Resumar in danger! What exactly does the High Coven call that?"

This news made Narice and Carisia look up quickly.

"Luck." Moran answered sarcastically.

"Why does it seem like you feel for these Kavalians that were killed?" Aikiro asked softly. "I was under the impression you do not care for them anymore than we do. Has this position changed recently?"

Martin looked at her. "You know damn well why I'm pissed off Aikiro." He barked. "Do not take me for a fool. This attack happened on my ship within Union space. What's to keep the Kavalians from trying to hit back? Your people attacked them... they'll come after you. Only problem with that is when they try to attack you it will be while you are here! In my city! And my people could very well die! The Kavalians aren't real worried about collateral damage if you get my drift."

“My people did not do this.” Aikiro spoke. “Why would I attempt to draw you into this war when I am trying to obtain your assistance in training the dragons we have so that my people will finally have an advantage in this war?”

“Why don’t you tell me Aikiro?” Martin spoke crossing his arms over his chest. “Cause if I don’t hear something really good... you can pack your bags and go home now.”

“You would just forsake these forty-two dragons?” Aikiro said. “I thought you said that was something you would not do.”

“I will not let you or the Kavalians drag the Union into your war!” Martin snapped. “And if I have to sacrifice forty-two dragons to save ten times that I will not hesitate.”

“What do you want of me Martin Leonidas?” Aikiro asked. “This attack was not of my doing. In any way whatsoever. Your people have the ability to tell when someone is lying... am I lying to you now?”

“When the person being asked the question is such an accomplished liar to begin with... it is infinitely harder to detect a lie.” Aricia spoke softly. “Something which you are very aware of Empress Aikiro.”

Aikiro lost her temper then and she came to her feet surprising Yuri and almost everyone in the room. Her eyes changed immediately to cobalt blue, and her fangs burst forth as she glared at him from across the table.

“You arrogant animal!” She snarled loudly. “Do not play with me Martin Leonidas! You are still a child when compared to me. You have no idea what I am capable of!”

“Are you so sure about that Aikiro that you want to bet your future on it.” Martin asked standing there unfazed by her outburst. “If you are so confident in your abilities, there is the door.” Martin motioned to the side of the room. “Andro?”

Aikiro watched Androcles get to his feet. “I’ll make arrangements to have a TYPE II return their dragons to their flagship.” He said as he began moving for the door.

“Thast!” Moran snapped.

Thast moved for Andro with near blinding speed as he blurred in motion. He may have been quite heavy, but he was still a pureblood and possessing all the skills of a pureblood. Though his realm was usually on the bridge of a ship, he was a competent and skilled warrior. Something he thought he was going to prove to the younger son.

He could not have been more wrong.

Thast was still blurring when Andro moved with a combination of speed and power that no member of the High Coven had ever seen from a Lycavorian before. Even Aricia and Isabella were stunned while Deia and Aihola sat back quickly in their chairs. Andro’s large hand snapped out like a pit viper and snatched Thast around the throat before he had even slowed from his motion. Andro’s hand however brought him to a screaming halt and with his azure colored eyes now changed and his dual fangs fully extended Andro heaved Thast into the air bringing his body over the top of his head and ramming him down onto the top of the massive marble and granite table that filled the conference room directly in front of Carisia and Narice. The sound of his thick body slamming into the table and the air leaving his lungs in a massive rush filled the conference room.

Andro lowered his face to within inches of Thast’s throat his lips drawn back and his vicious looking fangs fully exposed. “I grow tiresome of you fat man!” Andro snarled.

“ENOUGH!” Aikiro bellowed. She glared at Martin incensed now and saw that his eyes had changed and his fangs protruded from his lips. “You are the most arrogant and despicable man I have ever known Leonidas! I hate you and all of your kind! It is beneath me to even be among you! You killed one of my sons! You stole the other from me! If I could I would strike you down right now and not care that I would not survive!”

Martin’s face was unreadable to everyone in the room, but all eyes were on him and they saw the small smile begin to break across his face.

“Finally.” He spoke softly. “Finally we get a little truth.” Martin reached out and placed his hand on Andro’s shoulder. “Let him up son.”

Andro glared at Thast’s hate filled eyes for a moment longer. “We will have a reckoning one day soon Commander.” Andro spoke with a whisper. His voice was loud enough for everyone to hear though only Aricia knew what it was truly for, her azure eyes going to where Carisia sat looking on with adoration in her eyes. “And on that day I will make you pay for everything you have done.”

Andro released his throat quickly and stepped back next to his father, watching as Thast pushed himself off the table and regained his feet. Martin gazed at his son for a moment before turning back to Aikiro. She had regained her composure, though her eyes were still changed.

[I do not know where your hatred of me or my people comes from.] Martin spoke to her. Aikiro's vampire eyes went a little wider when she realized that he was speaking only to her. She could see the looks of surprises from everyone in the room because they could not breach the shields he had erected. [I have studied our scrolls dating back to the time of my grandfather and I have found no purpose for it. Would you care to enlighten me Aikiro?]

[No I would not.] Aikiro spat.

[And that is part of our problem. Before you began your conquest of Lycavore we did not even know you existed. At least not to my knowledge. Now... after all this time and you are not willing to share why you hate my people so, or what drove you to do what you did. Fine... then I do not care. It is what it is. The vampires living in the Union... my love for Isabella... that should show you we have grown as a people while you have remained the same. I killed Xerxes... yes. Your son was a demented pig who took my father from me. That same day I let go of the hatred for your kind that is inbred in our species and I gave you back your daughter.] Martin spoke seeing her eyes grow a little wider. [Vonis made his own decision. I did not steal him from you regardless of what you think or have been told. I will help you now because the Kavalians are the bigger threat. To both of us. I am not so dense that I can't see that. If I get pulled into this war... it will be because of my actions and decisions, not those of others.] Martin stepped closer to her ignoring the looks of Yuri and Moran and everyone in the room. [You are not here just for me to train your dragons Aikiro. I know that. You know that. Yuri might even know that... though where her hatred of me comes from I have no idea.]

[You expect me to believe you do not know.] Aikiro demanded.

[I don't have a fucking clue.] Martin answered. [And I don't care. I will train your dragons Aikiro but it will be by my son's rules. And I will find out what your real intent is in coming here.]

[You assume I have some ulterior motive Leonidas.] She snapped.

[I don't assume... I know you do. I can smell it.] Martin spoke. [Do what you have to do Aikiro... but if another one of these insurgent groups of yours attacks within the borders of the Union...]

Aikiro met his gaze. [I give you my word I had nothing to do with that. There are five insurgent groups... we know who most of them are and only one is able to mount this type of attack. It is the largest group and the only one with access to weapons and training. It is also the only one that we can not discover who the leader is. And believe me we have tried. They are well funded, primarily from within The Wilds. Whatever ulterior motives you think I may have... this attack was not my doing.]

Martin stared at her for a long moment. [You realize the Kavalians will attempt to hit back? And this supposed Cease Fire Accord we are supposed to be signing would be the perfect time for that?]

Aikiro nodded. [Yes.]

[Yuri and the others will be safe where they are going. I will not limit your ability to move around Sparta or Earth but from now on you will have a Spartan Guard Force wherever you go.] Martin told her. [If that is not agreeable to you then I suggest you leave before they arrive.]

[You would protect me?] She asked. [Why?]

[Helping you in the end helps me.] Martin said. [Regardless of what you might think... I will honor the Cease Fire we will sign. I will honor it until the time you break it... and then all bets will be off.]

[Tell me why you hate them so.] Aikiro spoke quickly. [We have a reason... but you... what is your reason for doing what you are doing? If they discover you are training the dragons we have... they will act.]

[What does it matter to you? You are getting what you came here for.] Martin said.

[The Intelligence we gave you?] Aikiro asked.

[We're still confirming the validity of it.] Martin answered.

Aikiro stared at him for a long moment. [You have known all along that they would do something like this haven't you? You have been expecting it. You are comparing what we have given you to what you have discovered yourself. You are using the Coven as a shield Martin Leonidas, and I do not like that.] Aikiro stated.

[And you are using me for whatever other purpose you hope to gain while you are here. As well as putting me smack in the middle of your little war.] He answered quickly. [That makes us even. I want whatever information you have on this insurgent group. They are within my borders now... I will deal with them.]

[So you can use them against us? I think not.] Aikiro said shaking her head. [I may have come to you for aide... that does not mean I trust you in the least.]

[Fair enough. We'll find them ourselves.] Martin stated. Martin stepped back from her and looked at Andro. "Load them out Andro. I'll be down in a few days with the Empress to see how everyone has settled in."

Andro nodded. "Understood." He spoke looking at Carisia and Narice and motioning to the door. He turned to look at Yuri. "Princess?"

Yuri looked at her mother. "Mother?" She asked as she got to her feet.

Aikiro nodded and looked at her. "Go Yuri." She said. "King Leonidas and I have come to an understanding."

Martin smiled. "Just a little one." He stated looking at Yuri with a smirk.

Yuri glared at him for a moment before turning to head for the door. Martin watched her for a moment then looked back to Aikiro. "Remember what I said." He told her.

"I will."

Martin motioned to the door. "Feel free to see them off." He said.

Aikiro met his gaze for a few moments longer and then she turned and headed out of the room followed by Moran, Tesand and Thast. Martin waited until the door slid shut before turning to look at those still seated at the table.

"Little Drow?" Martin spoke looking at Aihola as he settled into the chair next to her.

"Whatever her purpose here... it isn't for us to train their dragons." Aihola answered looking at him. "While we probably already knew that... their body language only confirmed it. Especially Moran's. Did you notice that only this Narice and Carisia reacted when Andro got up and headed for the door? The Empress... Yuri... the others... none of them even blinked. The dragons are secondary to whatever else they have in mind."

Martin nodded his head. "There is something about those two... but whatever it is... their commitment to their dragons is pure."

"What did you speak about Beloved?" Aricia asked.

"I tried getting some answers... but I'm only left with more questions." He answered as he leaned forward. "Bella... when we are done here head over to Armetus's office. She said there is only one insurgent group with the resources to pull off a stunt like on MJOLNIR'S HAND. I want to find them."

"Are they insurgents M'ranndii? Or are they resistance fighters." Bella asked.

Martin met her eyes. "That's what I want you and Armetus to find out." He said. "She said they know almost all the others and their members... but this one group they have no clue. And they can't determine who the leader is either. Let's see if we can."

Isabella nodded. "Very well."

"Tenna... you need to concentrate on these Kavalians." Martin spoke. "Pull whatever resources you need... but I want to know when they take a dump and what color it is the entire time they are here. Keep Stenys involved as well."

"And Laustinos Mandri?" Deia asked. "He is skilled... setting aside his obvious stupidity and behavior."

Martin nodded slowly. "If you feel he can help... but keep him away from me. I can tolerate quite a bit Tenna... but if he so much as blinks at Melda Min again I will remove his eyeballs from their sockets and feed them to him. If she doesn't do it first."

Deia smiled knowingly. "Don't worry... I have just the task for Laustinos." She told him as Aricia and Isabella glanced at one another with twinkles in their eyes.

[He is so very possessive of us Aricia?] Bella spoke to her.

[Yes he is... and it makes my hormones giddy.] Aricia answered.

[Mine as well. We will have to reward him tonight.] Bella said.

"Will you meet with the Kavalians as they have requested Mandri?" Deia asked.

Martin met her eyes. "Yes. I want to see if I can sense what it is they are really after. Pleistarchus would not send his mate and son here without a reason. Aside from discovering why the Coven is here that is. They go no where near my mother!" He turned to Aihola. "Little Drow... I want you, Lynwe, Vengal and me to have another meeting. When can you fit that in?"

Aihola looked at him. "I have defense meetings the next two days. If I miss them it will be noticed. I can get us all together by the end of the week."

Martin nodded. "Good enough." He got to his feet. "I'm hungry. Let's go find some food."

MJOLNIR'S HAND

Resumar Leonidas knew.

He knew the moment her sweet juices had flooded his throat the first time that she was the one. Athani tasted just as she smelled, like sweet tangerines and whether it was due to her own natural scent or the biogenics treatments she had undergone, Resumar did not care in the least. Her scent was driving him mad. He had been with women before, but this was so very different. Athani's body was like a temple that he wanted to explore over and over again, and for the last two hours that is what he had done. He did not grow tired of caressing her skin or allowing his hands to roam freely over her supple flesh, exploring every crevice to its fullest extent. His father had once told him that when he found the one he desired above all others, it would not matter how intimately he knew her body, for every time would be better than the last and there was always something new to discover. Resumar was discovering that to be very true.

The skin of her abdomen was soft and like satin, the velvety folds of her pussy so hot and incredibly enticing and delicious. Her breasts were superbly firm and her nipples sweet nubs that he had teased and nibbled endlessly. The silk like skin where her tail extended from her spine was tremendously sensitive and he had spent quite a bit of time watching and feeling her shudder as he stroked and kissed that portion of her body. His wolf senses were more alive and acute now than at any other time that he could remember in his life. Athani was like a drug that had gripped his very being completely. Her powerful thighs had remained locked around his head, unwilling to release him even as he was unwilling to release the grip his lips had of her mouth-watering pussy. He had told her he was going to love her senseless, and he had meant every word. Twice she had begged him to stop with her words, but refused to release him with her legs. Her orgasms were incredibly powerful, causing her whole body to surge off his bed and make her scream out in blissful abandon, even as he thanked the gods the rooms were soundproof and he feasted on her essence as it spilled from her in waves. His eleven inch cock was painfully hard, throbbing with surprising heat but Resumar had refused to surrender to his overpowering desire to take her until he could no longer stand it. He knew he was large and he had no intention of allowing his size to alter this experience for either Athani or himself.

Now was that time however.

As the sweat glistened from her body and she drew in deep gasps of air, he began his trek up her unbelievable body, stopping as often as he could to nibble on her flesh or use his tongue to trace her skin. Her nipples were like hard points, topping her firm globes and begging his lips for attention, which he eagerly gave to them. He held his upper body above hers, just brushing his hard chest against her nipples and seeing her react to this. And then he was holding himself above her and he simply stared into her beautiful face watching the contours of her lips and how her eyes kept blinking as if trying to focus.

"Athani?" He whispered her name and saw her stunning blue/green eyes instantly adjust and meet his wolf eyes.

Whatever preconceived plans and intentions Athani'Puat had made before this day had been tossed to the wayside the moment that first orgasm had crashed through her body. As her muscles threatened to tear through her skin, her teeth clenched and his lips securely fastened over her erupting pussy, Athani'Puat knew she had found her future. His wolf aura swirled around her, never ceasing to keep her senses stimulated and so very aroused. It was so unlike Pusintin's domination of her with his aura. Where Pusintin unleashed his full male aura on her, forcing her body to react to him even as her mind screamed not too, Resumar Leonidas was using just enough of his aura to keep her on the edge of the pleasure abyss. Her mind and heart was still very much her own, and since that first will shattering orgasm, both her mind and heart had done nothing but scream for this Lycavorian Prince to have her. Four times he had driven her to the edge with exasperating precision, his soft lips and warm tongue working in seamless conjunction with his maddeningly tantalizing caresses. He had discovered so early the most sensitive area of her body outside of her drenched pussy, and his fingers and lips had attacked that area of her body with breath stealing exactness. Athani had been concerned that he would be put out by her twitching tail, instead he had gently wrapped her third appendage around his body in ways she had never imagined and showed her tail just as much gentle attention as he did the rest of her body.

Her entire being called for this man in a way she had never imagined it could and as she focused on his wolf eyes, dark brown and outlined in black, Athani knew he would claim not only her pureness this night... but her very being. She had thought to use this man... this Prince of Wolves... and instead she found herself utterly vexed by him. He held himself above her easily now, the muscles in his arms and shoulders not in the least bit strained at the position he was in. Twice she had attempted to urge him upward so that she could exercise her own talents on him and both times he had refused, instead continuing his unbridled torturing of her pleasure receptors.

“Res... Resumar.” She said breathlessly.

“I’m... I’m going to love you senseless now Athani’Puat.” He stated confidently.

Athani’s eyes grew a little larger and she looked down between their bodies, saw his huge cock throbbing with need, and she felt desire surge in her again. She looked back into his eyes and nodded quickly beginning to roll slowly onto her belly instinctually. It was the usual position for males to take females. This was how Kavalian males showed their domination over females, and it was how Pusintin had always taken her. Resumar however leaned over quickly, nuzzling her neck as she began to turn and sending electric jolts of pleasure through her. Resumar knew what she was doing and he would have no part of it. He lifted his head and grazed his lips across hers as she looked at him.

“No Athani’Puat, I want to see your breathtaking face when I make you mine.” Resumar whispered softly.

“But you... you are...”

Athani’s words were silenced when Resumar covered her lips with his and filled her with one soul robbing plunge into her depths. Athani’s eyes flew open; her head falling back onto the bed, tearing away from his fervent kiss as she felt every searing hot inch of his tremendous cock impale her completely. Never had a man taken her in this way, Pusintin was only allowed to have her ass and mouth, and the pleasure ripping through her now was without description. The times with Pusintin were quickly shattered into billions of tiny pieces and then cast away as Resumar Leonidas’s huge cock plunged deeply into her velvety warm pussy with barely any resistance. He had made her come so hard and so many times before this moment that having his cock fill her so easily left her to experience nothing but cataclysmic bliss. As her arms wrapped around his broad shoulders, her slim ankles locking at the small of his back and her tail madly convulsing, Athani’Puat howled in devastating pleasure until he bottomed out inside her and she felt the press of his large balls against her asscheeks. She had heard Jalersi talk of how Pusintin filled her so completely, yet her descriptions did not begin to express what Athani had sizzling through her veins now.

And then Athani’Puat surrendered to what was scorching her mind and body. Her arms slapped down on the bed, her back arching upwards and his hand slipping quickly to the small of her back to tickle that spot. Athani screamed as her hips undulated, driving his enormous cock even deeper into her depths if that was possible and she came. She came with the force of a meteor tearing through the atmosphere of a planet, destroying everything in its path and reshaping everything it left behind. And then he began to move within her, making conscious thought impossible as he pulled her head up and claimed her lips once more. He lifted her body onto his as he sat back, piercing Athani even more completely on his massive cock, hearing her groan against his kiss unwilling to release his lips, her arms wrapping tightly around his head.

Resumar knew he would not last long the moment he felt the extreme tightness and heat of Athani’s depths surround his eleven inches of throbbing cock. The heat was unlike anything he had ever experienced, and her pussy wrapped his cock tightly within a scorching embrace that milked his shaft agonizingly. The pleasure was far too much for him and he dropped his hand to her tail once more, caressing the small of her back and gripping her tail tightly as he felt his cock swell and explode deep in her belly. Athani gasped out against his lips, gripping his head tightly, her eyes wide as she felt each eruption of his cock inside her. She felt the veins of his thick shaft stretch her and then his searing hot come was filling her... once, twice, three times. Four times and finally a fifth. Each eruption longer and more powerful than the last until finally she felt his arms crush her to him and he fell onto the bed on his back, clutching her smaller frame to his chest.

They lay there for several minutes, their skin slick with sweat and pressed tightly together while their hearts began to slow. Her breasts were pressed tightly to his chest, her still hard nipples burning points against his skin. Her arms were laced under his armpits, and after several moments of simply resting her head on his shoulder inhaling his male aroma Athani lifted her head. Her tail was still twitching madly, seemingly with a mind of its own as it slapped against his legs. She gazed into his handsome face for a long moment, his eyes closed. She smiled dreamily and began to lift her hips from his, groaning as she felt his still hard cock throb within her.

Resumar's eyes opened quickly and his hands snapped around to cover her ass and he pressed her back down on his length causing her to groan louder in delight. "Where... where are you going?" He asked.

Athani looked at him. "I must... I must get towels. To... to clean you." She stammered still very much aroused and out of breath.

"Clean me?" Res spoke with a smile and a small chuckle. "I'm not dirty. A little sweaty is all."

Athani looked at him oddly. "You... you wish to stay like this?" She asked clearly very surprised.

"Our... our males... they do not consider this... I have made a mess of you and the bed."

"I like it just fine. And I think both of us are guilty of messing the bed. I don't want you to move." Res answered with a smile as he reached up to push some of her sweat soaked hair from her cheek. "Even if your tail is still twitching and hitting my legs." Athani started to reach behind her to grasp her tail and stop its movements but his hand on her wrist stopped her. "Athani'Puat... it is part of you. A very fascinating and erotic part if I do say so myself. It doesn't bother me in the least."

Athani looked into his eyes which had returned to their normal dark brown. "You... you are very different Resumar Leonidas."

"Well... I hope that is a good thing."

"Oh yes. A very good thing." Athani answered with a bright smile. She reached up and traced his lips with her finger. "You... you are my first Resumar. My... my purity is yours."

Resumar looked at her and brought his hands up to take her face on either side. He stroked her cheeks softly with his thumbs. "Athani... you will always be pure to me." He spoke before kissing her softly. "What just happen between us? It was... it was..."

"It was wondrous... yes I know." Athani said with an adoring smile and a purr of contentment.

"It was unbelievably incredible!" Resumar exclaimed. He kissed her hard, holding her face in his hands until finally he withdrew.

Athani looked at him with her blue/green orbs relishing in the feelings his kiss sent hurtling through her. "Can... can we do it again?" She asked shifting her hips slightly and feeling him still pulsing with life within her. "I... I would like that very much Resumar."

Resumar's eyes were bright and he rolled over quickly. "I thought you would never ask." He said before lowering his lips to hers once more.

It was the most exquisite and complete feeling Athani'Puat had ever experienced as his lips claimed hers and she knew instantly and without fail that whatever future lay before her, it would be in the arms of this man.

TYPE II* DRAGON TRANSPORT OLD SOUTH AMERICAN CONTINENT

"...we arrive everyone will need to secure your personal equipment from the cargo hold below. From there we'll go to the dragon pens and get our bonded ones settled in for the night!" Narice was standing in front of the forty-two High Coven riders as they were insuring their saddles flying equipment were properly secured. She had to speak louder than normal to be heard over the roar of the engines and the forty-five dragons who occasionally trumpeted. Though only slotted for forty dragons, each TYPE II could hold an additional ten if needed by stripping seats from along the walls. This had been done so that all the Coven dragons could occupy one TYPE II, as well as accommodate Elynth, Jeth and Aradace. Denali and Lisisa had remained behind at Andro's request as Eliani and Nyla flew down with Arrarn and Sadi and all of their equipment. Andro stood near the ramp of the TYPE II which was locked in a half open position, remaining out of Narice and Carisia's way as they moved among the riders, doing what it was that section leaders did. Denali and Lisisa sat at the very end of the webbed seating also remaining out of the way and talking to each other softly.

Andro watched intently taking everything in. No one appeared to give Carisia any trouble in the least. She was a Princess after all. Narice on the other hand had heated comments with both her older sister and her nephew Dante. Javier and Lucia stood by simply watching and not participating but making no move to follow their aunt's instructions. He felt Elynth lower her head until her snout was almost touching his shoulder, and he reached up without looking to place his hand flat against the bottom of her jaw.

[They will cause issues for Narice the entire time Andro.] Elynth spoke softly. [It will detract from the training of the other riders. He has kept it harnessed these last days, but Vollenth's hatred and anger simmers just beneath the surface. As does Yuri's.]

Andro nodded as he turned back around and looked into her golden eyes before crossing his arms over his chest and staring off into the open ramp. [Yes... I know.] He replied. [We will need to deal with them sooner rather than later.]

[Andro...] She said softly.

Andro turned and looked at her sensing her indecision and confusion. Though dragons did not have expressions that one could tell emotions from, Androcles and Elynth were so closely bonded that they knew each others emotions and they had shared this as long as both of them could remember.

[He is a fine young dragon sister.] Andro spoke.

[I know why you felt anxiousness and fear on your joining day with Sadi.] Elynth said. [I do not... I do not wish to give of myself if our time together will be so short Andro. Even if it is destiny and fate that has brought us together. To know that he is out there fighting and I will not know what happens to him. I don't know if I can endure that.]

[I don't think you will have to Elynth.] He answered.

[What do you mean?]

Andro met her eyes. [I don't believe Carisia and Anthar have any intention of leaving with the others.] He said. [And I can't tell you how happy that makes Sadi and me.]

[You believe... you believe they intend to defect? To remain here with us?] Elynth asked.

[The pull between the three of us is growing stronger by the day sister. I know you have felt it.] Andro said. [Just as the pull between you and Anthar.]

Elynth nodded her massive head. [Yes.]

[I came within a hair's breath of tearing that fat slob Thast's head from his shoulders in the meeting this morning for what he has forced her to endure.] Andro spoke returning his gaze to the open ramp. [I want to tear him limb from limb knowing that he touches her. When she and Sadi touched at the villa... it triggered a much deeper connection than any of us thought. That's why you intervened as you did. That is what you felt. She has been in our minds ever since sister. We include her in our thoughts as if it is the most natural thing in the world. And we do it without regard. I have to remember to throw up shields if I wish to talk privately with someone other than you.]

[Do you not trust her?]

Andro shook his head quickly. [No... that is not it. Sadi and I have seen inside her heart Elynth. She is no more a threat to KertaGai or me than you are. And neither is Anthar. They have been planning this for a very long time.]

[Then why do you hold back?] Elynth asked him.

[For the very same reason you do.] He told her.

Elynth blinked several times and then nudged him in the shoulder. [Perhaps brother... perhaps it is time we take the same advice that you gave Deni and Arrarn last night.] She stated. [This is our time... and we are not our parents. Perhaps we should grasp what fate and destiny has in store for us and not look back.]

Andro smiled at her and stepped closer leaning up against her thick muscular side. [Perhaps you are very right sister.] He said.

The claxon sounded and the lights in the rear of the TYPE II turned red causing heads to turn all around. Andro smiled as he pushed off Elynth's side. "Finally." He spoke.

I itch to spread my wings. Elynth exclaimed.

Andro turned and saw Denali and Lisisa getting to their feet with smiles on their faces. He glanced up onto the passenger level and saw half the contingent of Durcunusaan and the High Coven pilots that had been chosen for Arrarn to train. Among them Toria Dellion. Malic stood close to the railing looking down into the lower deck intently and his eyes came to settle on Andro. Malic stood a little straighter then and he nodded his head sharply to Andro in acknowledgment. It was a gesture that Andro returned to him without hesitation. His eyes narrowed when they fell upon Thast but he quickly averted them as Carisia, Narice and Yuri walked up to him.

“Is there something wrong with the ship Androcles Leonidas?” Yuri asked smugly.

Andro grinned at her. “Not at all. We’re three minutes out.”

“Three minutes out from what?” Narice asked.

Their attention was drawn to Denali who had slammed his hand down on the ramp controls and their eyes watched as the ramp began to retract further into the belly of the TYPE II while the rear doors slid to either side. In seconds there was a gaping maw of nothing but blue sky in front of them. Even Yuri stepped back a few steps.

Andro was still grinning as he turned and climbed onto Elynth’s back seeing Denali and Lisisa doing the same. All of the Coven riders were watching them with wide eyes as Andro lowered his helmet onto his head.

“Time to see how much trust you have in each other!” Andro barked out as he looked at them. “We are twenty-two thousand feet up! In another ninety seconds this ship will stop moving and you will exit! It will not begin moving once more until all of you have left the lower deck! If after thirty minutes any of you are left on board... the ramp will close and you will be expelled from further training. Trust in each other. We have not even got to the part that requires exiting while we are moving.” Andro looked down at Narice and Carisia from the saddle. “I will see you on the ground! Elynth!” He barked.

Elynth let loose with a trumpet of happiness and sprinted off the end of the ramp without further pause, followed quickly by Jeth and Aradace.

MJOLNIR’S HAND

Athani couldn’t contain the sound of her purring as she felt Resumar’s lips drag along her exposed ass and hip. She snapped her tail out and struck him lightly in the shoulder when his lips made to kiss that spot at the small of her back. He had made love to her for three straight hours and still he wanted more she mused. Never had she been so utterly fulfilled and content and divinely sore.

“No!” She gasped as she felt his hand grip her tail and wrap it gently around his arm in loving fashion. “I am worn out! You are a brute!” She told him playfully.

She basked in the feel of his arms pulling her closer to his chest and his nose nuzzling the back of her neck and ear as he settled to the bed behind her. As he released her tail from his arm, Athani wrapped it around his powerful leg when he draped it over her thigh.

“You have to go soon.” He whispered into her ear and the disappointment in his voice made Athani’s blood sing out in joy. “I want to get you back before you are missed. It would raise too many questions and cause far too many problems.”

Athani nodded as she crossed her arms over his and drew him tighter. “I... I am not like my people Resumar.” She spoke softly. “I don’t wish to rule the universe. I only wish to be happy. And free.”

“I knew that the minute I smelled you in the gym Athani’Puat.” He told her with a whisper.

“I don’t want to return with my people.” She stated turning in his arms to look at him. “I want to remain here with you. I would be forced to become Qurot’s mate if I went back. That is truly something I do not want. And once it was discovered I have given my purity to you, my sister and father would be incensed. If I return I will be whipped and beaten and turned into a whore for our troops no matter my father’s station as Prefect. I will...”

Resumar put a finger to her lips stopping her words. “Stop Athani.” He said softly.

“Resumar I... I did not enter into this situation with you... my intent was to find a way to remain on Earth Resumar. I was willing to give myself to you to accomplish that goal.” She reached up quickly and placed her hand on his cheek. “What you have done to me. What you have made me feel... I...”

“Shhh.” He stated gently. “It is not going to be easy... you must know that. Your people are trusted even less than the High Coven by my father and many of my people.”

“Because of the attack?”

Resumar nodded. "I think that is a large part of it yes, but my people are very accepting Athani. You just have to be patient and show them that you are as sincere as you are expressing to me now. There is more to it where my father is concerned... but your people aren't exactly the most open and friendly in the universe."

Athani rolled her eyes. "That is not something you need to remind me of." She said. "My father says he tries to change things... but the more he supposedly tries... the more they stay the same."

"It will not be easy as I said. We won't be able to be seen together at first." Resumar spoke. "At least not during the day."

"Even... even after I told you what I intended? You still... you still wish to help me?" She asked him stunned.

"Do you still feel that way?" He asked simply.

Athani shook her head instantly. "No. I... after what you have made me feel... it would be beneath me to try and trick you so. It would disrespect you because you are... you are being so honest with me right now."

Res leaned forward and kissed her deeply, pulling her even tighter into his embrace and feeling her mold against him perfectly. He pulled away slowly and watched as her eyes opened dreamily. "Make no mistake Athani'Puat... now that I have found you... I have no intention of letting you escape me. If I have to pursue you and fight any male that shows interest in you I will do just that. I will show you that I am the one for you and that you will never need anyone but me. I want to explore what we have discovered here Athani. I want to explore and discover who you are. And I want you to see who I am." Resumar told her.

"Where... where did you learn... to say such things?" She asked him.

Resumar laughed. "I may be a Spartan... but my father has told me and all of my brothers that when we find the one we want... never be ashamed to express to them what we feel."

"And... I... I am the one you want?" Athani asked softly.

Resumar smiled and nuzzled her cheek. "From the very first moment I set my eyes upon you."

Athani's eyes glowed brightly as she looked at him, his words filling her with hope and love for the future.

Love.

Athani did not even know what love felt like... but if it was anything like what Resumar Leonidas made her feel right now than it was surely going to be glorious to love him completely and have him love her back just as equally.

"You have no idea how your words make me feel." She said softly. "If what I feel coursing through me now is any indication... you will never have to fight for me Resumar Leonidas."

Resumar smiled at her words. "Come... you have to wash and get my scent off of you. And I promise not to assault you in the shower." He spoke prodding her gently. "Then I need to get you back to your quarters unseen."

Athani moved with all the speed born of her feline race and she was upon him in a single blink, covering his lips with her own, her tail madly flailing in the air in unabashed delight. She felt his arms crush her to his frame once more and her whole body hummed at his touch as he lifted her and began walking towards the large bathing room.

EARTH SOUTHERN DRAGON BASE

Completed only two years earlier, the Southern Dragon Base, affectionately known by those among Mjolnir's Hand as SODRAG, occupied two hundred square miles of mountains and rainforest carved out of the middle of what used to be the country of Brazil. It had become the main training and station base for members of Mjolnir's Hand away from Apo Prime. The base was home to any number of Durcunusaan soldiers at one time. Though General's Vistr and Vengal had originally trained only three hundred of these elite troops, they quickly saw the advantages to having a unique and exceptionally skilled unit that could respond quickly anywhere within the Union. The exact number of Durcunusaan soldiers was known only to a handful of senior military officers, and that is the way Vengal and Vistr liked it.

The base was broken into several sections, with several thousand elves and humans working on the base at the many administration buildings and fulfilling roles within the infrastructure needed to keep the base running. Those who worked on the base lived on the base with their families and the majority of them held the highest security clearances handed out to civilians. Since the majority of them were elves and humans who had come to this part of the planet to start over with the Moon Elf clan, they had a vested interest in seeing the base succeed and remain stable. They were all extremely protective of the dragons and the men and women who rode those dragons and called the base home. It was the largest reason that Martin had allowed the base to be built so far from Sparta and Eden City. The barracks were built almost like bungalows, semi-private with towering trees surrounding and even masking the buildings in some ways. They were comfortable without being extravagant with each bungalow having separate sleeping rooms for three and a small common kitchen.

The dragon pens were behind the bungalows only a hundred meters distance, and to the dragons of the High Coven it was the most lavish accommodations any of them had ever seen. Each pen was shaped and formed like a small cave on the outside built right into the natural landscape, with huge amounts of fresh hay and a small drinking pool inside. The openings were wide enough even for Torma to fit through easily, and now that Jeth and Tharua were mated; they were given an extra large dragon cave for themselves. Each pen was situated closest to each individual pair so they would not be far apart. The dragons could come and go as they pleased during the evening, flying high above the base to hunt or even to explore the jungles and mountains all around.

There were several large bungalows that acted as mess halls for any soldiers at the base, the menus always full of different selections of foods for whatever tastes. Andro had made sure that Narice had given him a list of foods and ingredients that the Coven riders would be used too, and these were added to the menu as well. It was here that the Coven riders had come after insuring that their dragons were settled. They sat mainly together, not avoiding the other soldiers who were present but not going out of their way to interact with them either Andro saw. He watched all this from the door behind the kitchen, out of sight as the mess hall was filled with animated talk among the riders as they spoke of their first challenge. All of them had chosen to follow Carisia and Narice out of the TYPE II within moments of it coming to a complete halt, and while several stumbled out due to being unfamiliar with the ship, most made clean exits and were soon soaring above the base watching as Andro, Lisisa and Denali swept gracefully along several thousand feet below them. All of them had received instructions upon landing to take care of their bonded brothers or sisters and then make their way here after dropping their gear off in the bungalows they had been assigned.

Andro turned slightly when he felt Moneus come up behind him and squeeze his huge frame into the doorway. Andro looked at him. "You and Carina really got this place set up in record time Moneus." He spoke.

Moneus grinned. "It wasn't me." He spoke. "This was all your sister's doing. She told me what to do... and that's what I did. She's a task master."

Andro chuckled. "And I suppose you positively hated the two nights you had her all to yourself." He spoke.

Moneus shrugged. "I don't know... is she still smiling?" He asked glancing into the mess hall.

"She hasn't stopped smiling since you claimed her Moneus." Andro spoke. "You have made her very happy my friend."

Moneus nodded. "Well... she has made me very happy." He spoke. "Happier than I ever thought possible."

Andro looked back into the hall. "They all made it down ok." He said. "A couple of stumbles... but they all got out. None of them hesitated. That's an excellent start."

"You think we can do this Andro?" Moneus asked.

Andro nodded. "It damn sure isn't going to be easy... but yes. As soon as they begin to trust each other completely... then we can really have at it." He answered. "I will turn you and Resumar loose on them and we'll see what they are really made of. Right now... at least for the next few weeks... baby steps. Do me a favor though?"

Moneus nodded. "Name it." He spoke without hesitation.

"Enomotarch Malic. Watch him for me will you Moneus?" Andro asked.

"May I ask why?" Moneus spoke moving closer.

“He could turn out to be completely different than what everyone says he is.” Andro said softly. “KertaGai has said it... Eliani and Nyla too. He is not the man he projects to everyone. That could be a huge plus for us my friend. Famus told me his actions on Eleyisi Three were not from any training he has received.”

“What do you mean?”

“It was almost as if he knew what surrounded him completely. He was aware of everything. Where everything was. Where the Evolli were.” Andro spoke. “It was instinctual Famus said. He directed his detachment to bring the most firepower on the enemy and he didn’t even have to think twice. And his Mindvoice powers are far more developed than even he knows or realizes.”

“What are you thinking Andro?” Moneus said.

“He’s different. And I want to find out just how different.” Andro said.

Moneus nodded and slung his arm over Andro’s shoulder. “Consider it done. Now c’mon... let’s go get some food and join the others.”

It took them only a few minutes to grab trays piled with food and move to the table where the Leonidas family sat. Andro leaned over and kissed both Carina and Zarah on their cheeks as he settled to the table next to Sadi. He leaned over and nuzzled the side of her neck and cheek and Sadi’s eyes closed in bliss. Arrarn reached out and slapped him in the shoulder.

“Where you been hiding this woman Andro?” He demanded. “I let her take the controls over the Med and next thing I know I wake up here!”

Lisisa laughed. “That’s unusual for you how exactly?” She exclaimed.

Andro looked at Sadi with adoring eyes. “I take it he fell asleep on you.” He said as the others were laughing.

Sadi chuckled as she plucked a piece of meat from Andro’s tray and leaned into him. “Yes... but it was closer to the Atlantic when he actually fell asleep.” She said.

“It was definitely a smoother ride.” Denali announced.

“Hey... you complaining about my flying brother?” Arrarn demanded.

“No... just your inability thereof.” Eliani chimed in from next to Nyla.

Andro smiled as he gazed into Sadi’s jungle green eyes. [Have you spoken with her KertaGai?] He asked.

Sadi shook her head quickly. [Not since this morning. We decided to keep our shields very high. I believe she trusts Narice for the most part... but she does not know Toria Dellion very well. She is being very careful.]

Andro nodded. [That is probably wise.]

Sadi looked at him as he began to eat. She slid her hands under the table to grasp his thigh. [Andro... Andro my love are you having second thoughts about her? About the three of us?]

Andro looked at her quickly. [No!] He declared. [No. You were right Sadi... this is not something I... we... it’s not something we can just dismissed. I don’t want too KertaGai. Don’t think that. Arrarn... Denali and I... we talked last night. I told them we make our own future and that whatever has happened in the past is our parent’s past and not ours. I will not allow my father’s feelings to dissuade me from pursuing what I know to be right. What feels so right?]

Sadi leaned further against him and smiled brightly. [A simple yes or no would have sufficed my love.]

Andro shook his head and pressed his forehead to hers kissing her softly. [We need to be careful KertaGai. I will not risk Carisia becoming injured or put her in harms way because we wanted her so badly that we got careless in our actions. At least until the time is right. I almost ripped Thast to shreds this morning because now that she is within our minds I have seen all he has done to her.]

Sadi nodded slowly. [I know. So have I. And it burns my blood Andro. She will not have to endure him here will she?]

Andro shook his head quickly. [No. I had Carina change the living arrangements. We need to keep her away from him... he affects her somehow... takes away her strength of will. And I don’t know how. I need to talk with mother, for she is vampire and I believe she will know. I’m just hesitant to approach her just yet.]

[Does Carina... does Carina know?] Sadi asked.

[We know each other well KertaGai... my brothers and sisters and I.] Andro said. [We also do not tell our parents everything we have done or will ever do. She knows. Or at least suspects. And I told Lisisa. Carisia is her sister... and that is not something I want to keep from her.]

[She doesn't hate me does she?] Sadi asked.

Andro chuckled. [Hate you? Lisisa was thrilled! She thought I did not care for Carisia because Yuri is her mother and that she was Lisisa's blood sister. When I told her what was building between us... the three of us... her face lit up like an illumination globe. They have much in common Lisisa and Carisia... and our feelings for Carisia will only help Lisisa to discover that much more about her sister.]

Sadi looked at him oddly. [How so?]

Andro grinned and popped a large chunk of steak into his mouth. [I'm very possessive of what I consider to be mine.] He spoke.

Sadi's eyes twinkled and she nuzzled his neck. [Well I should certainly hope so.]

"Andro! Sadi!" Denali's voice broke into their moment and Andro turned to his brother to see him motion with his head.

Andro looked up and saw Thast approaching their table, holding tightly to Carisia's arm with Yuri on the other side of him. Carisia did not look in the least bit happy about the situation.

[Oh... this ought to be fun.] He spoke to Sadi as he lifted his mug of coffee. He looked up as they stopped next to their table. "Princess Yuri, Princess Carisia... and Commander Thast. What can I do for you?"

Thast tossed the two security key cards onto the table. "The sleeping arrangements need to be altered." He spat.

Andro looked at the cards as he picked them up between his fingers. "What exactly is wrong with the sleeping arrangements Commander?"

"Commander Thast and Carisia are husband and wife." Yuri spoke. "You have Carisia occupying a bungalow with Narice and Toria Dellion, while the Commander is staying with the other three individuals of the security detachment we brought."

Andro looked at her and shook his head. "And this is an issue why?"

"As I said... Carisia is Commander Thast's wife." Yuri spoke once more.

Andro shook his head once more. "Not here she isn't." He stated evenly. "Here she is a section leader and a rider, not the commander's plaything to chase away his boredom. She will need to be focused and concentrate on her duties. I don't need her tripping over the commander at every turn. My sister Carina assigned her to the bungalow with Narice for a reason. As section leaders it will allow them to better share what they learn. They will become better leaders without distractions they don't need."

"Your wife is with you!" Thast snapped.

Andro looked at him. "I'm not the one going through the training Commander." Andro answered as he looked at Yuri. "Is this going to be a problem?"

"Tell him!" Thast barked pulling on Carisia's arm.

Carisia's eyes pleaded with Andro when she looked at him but her words were different. "I... I ask that you allow me to stay with my... with my husband." She stammered out.

"And I demand it." Yuri spoke.

The mess hall had become silent now as everyone was looking at their table. The High Coven riders saw several of the older Durcunusaan troops at other tables shake their heads with sad smiles. They saw similar looks pass between Eliani and the other Leonidas children. All of them present knew without question that Androcles Leonidas was very much like his father in that he did not respond well to arrogance.

Andro leaned back in his chair, his eyes on Yuri and then moving to Thast. "I'm not particularly fond of demands Princess Yuri. At least those that do not come from my mate. This..." Andro waved his hand around the mess hall as he got to his feet. "This is my realm... my world. You are in my world now. You do not make demands here. As far as I am concerned you are no different that the rest of your riders here to be trained. I have allowed you to have your own bungalow because of who you are... but that is the limit to which my generosity will extend."

"I am a Princess of the High Coven!" Yuri snapped.

"Here you are not a Princess. You are a rider." Andro spoke still very calm. "I will treat you as such. Unless of course you feel I can teach you nothing... in which case I give you two choices. You may challenge me right now and show me that you can effectively fight from Vollenth's back as your mother wants all of you to be able to do. When Elynth and I swat your tight ass from the sky... which I warn you, we could do blindfolded... you will still have the other option. You can return to Sparta and stay with your mother while I train those who want to learn. Vollenth of course will remain here and I will attempt to purge the hatred and anger you have instilled in him. Or at least attempt to anyway. The choice is yours... but I will not change the way the quarters have been established just so that you can think you are in charge or so fat man here can satisfy his overactive libido."

"Why you Lycavorian dog!" Thast snarled. "I will..."

The growl that came from Androcles Leonidas was a supremely menacing sound that sent shivers rippling down the spines of everyone present who heard it, including his brothers and sisters. He turned on Thast, his eyes fully changed and his dual fangs bursting forth, even as his left hand closed once more around Thast's throat. His right hand came up in a blink, the psychic knife exploding from his clenched fist with a silvery glow. Thast's eyes grew wide, Carisia and Yuri staggered back stunned and Sadi leaned back in her chair with a smug smile.

Andro brought the tip of that shimmering psychic knife to within a hair's thickness of Thast's wide right eye. "Twice this day you have tempted fate Commander Thast. My patience is not infinite and with you, it is nearly gone. Speak the words on your lips little man and I guarantee you... half a second after they have left your mouth I will fry what little you have for a brain when I plunge this into your eye socket." Andro looked at the psychic knife with a fearsome smile. "Beautiful isn't it." He said turning back to look at him. "You won't feel it Thast... for the moment it enters your fool brain I will pour every ounce of my power through it and burn out your pain receptors. One second after that you will lose all motor functions... another second later your bladder will void and you will piss and shit your pants. And when I do this..." The psychic knife flared briefly, almost like a living thing that hungered for his flesh and Thast's eyes suddenly filled with real palpable fear. "You will be quite dead."

"Princess Yuri will not save you Thast... your Empress will not save you... those you think to be comrades will not save you. I will not hesitate... I will not pause... and your miniscule life will be over. This is my father's base... and since he is not here, it is mine in his stead. Things will be done my way! Not yours Commander... and not according to Princess Yuri. The faster you learn that... the longer you will live. I told you we would have a reckoning Thast... do not hasten your death any sooner than it needs to come. You will not defeat me now... and you will not defeat me then."

Andro released him instantly... stepping back and plunging the psychic knife into the metal table. The quarter inch diameter psychic projection sizzled, burning completely through the two inch thick metal table as if it was melting butter.

"The sleeping arrangements remain as they are." Andro stated bringing his fist back up as the knife shimmered and faded into nothing. He turned back to Thast his eyes now back to normal and his fangs gone. "My brothers and sisters and I will train your riders to the very best of our abilities. They will come first... the training they and their dragons will receive. I don't care for your status or your comfort Yuri. In my eyes you are no different than any of the others in this room. Now... is there anything else Commander... Princess Yuri... or may I go back to my meal?" Neither Thast nor Yuri had anything to say and Andro smiled. "Excellent... enjoy your meals."

As Andro sat back down, Sadi grasped his arm with unabashed adoration in her eyes, his brothers and sisters quickly went back to the conversations they had been having before and Carisia Moran felt the desire and want for both Androcles and Sadi increase ten fold as she made her way back to her table.

And no one saw the thoughts that filtered through the heads of all the other Coven riders with the exception of only three as they went back to their food and drink.

Perhaps the Lycavorian people were not the terrible creatures their leaders had made them out to be.

MJOLNIR'S HAND

"I don't know." Pian stated from the medical bed. "They unwrapped the shadows from around themselves about an hour into the flight. It all happened so quickly I was unable to act."

For'mya sat back away from the bed as Jalersi and Karun stood on either side. Pian's injuries had healed for the most part due to the more advanced medical facilities on MJOLNIR'S HAND. Kavalian medical clinics were no where near advanced and capable, and For'mya took note that Karun seemed to be visualizing everything he saw as they made their way through the Med Bay into this small section.

"And they waited until the flight crew made their first transmission to Apo Prime Control?" For'mya asked.

"I heard them talking." Pian spoke. "They thought I was dead and had stopped beating me. They were adamant about not killing the flight crew or they would not have been able to board your ship. And they did not want to anger the Union."

Jalersi noticed that Pian was much more subdued than usual, his words more measured and controlled. Apparently as close to death as he had come seemed to have affected him somehow. Jalersi knew that neither Pian nor Qurot had ever come close to being defeated in a battle, and having your enemy beat you into oblivion would definitely make you more subdued in how you acted.

For'mya got to her feet slowly. "That agrees with what our flight crew has reported." She said calmly. "Why exactly were you coming here Commander?"

"Prefect Keleru ordered me to join with Jalersi's delegation to give her additional points that we would be willing to negotiate, as well as provide more staff members for the embassy if it was granted. So that we may open it right away." Pian asked. He looked at Jalersi. "The females?"

Jalersi shook her head. "None of them survived." She stated almost offhandedly.

"What has the Prefect ordered?" Pian asked.

Jalersi looked at For'mya quickly. "We are not being allowed to contact my father with the news of what has happened until we reach Earth. Another hour if I understand correctly."

For'mya nodded. "A security precaution." For'mya spoke. "Nothing more. You will be able to contact your father when you have settled into your quarters in Sparta."

"He will... he will demand he be allowed to send security of our own!" Pian stated quickly.

For'mya nodded. "Yes... I'm quite sure he will. However... that is a decision Martin Leonidas will make."

"You would deny us our own security?" Pian demanded.

"If ultimately it means we have no more incidents while you are on Earth... yes." For'mya replied. "You will be going down in a STRIKER AT Commander. Directly to Sparta's main hospital. Anja Leonidas will then examine you and you will be released at her directive."

"No woman will examine me!" Pian exclaimed.

For'mya smiled. "Anja Leonidas is the Union's Chief Medical Officer Commander. I'm sure she can accommodate your desires for a male technician to conduct the examination... but you will not be released from the hospital without her order. There is nothing I or anyone can do about it. She has the power to overrule even Martin in terms of medical concerns. And Martin has never gone against her will when it involves medical decisions, not in the entire time we have been together."

"A woman!" Pian spat shaking his head.

For'mya smiled. "Yes... well I'm sure we will see you in the future Commander Pian." She spoke looking at Jalersi. "Our transport leaves in forty minutes. I suggest you gather your party and I will have a Durcunusaan detail escort you to the landing bay."

Jalersi nodded. "As you wish Lady For'mya." She said.

"I will see you on the transport." For'mya spoke before turning and heading out of the medical bay.

Jalersi waited until she was gone before turning to look at Pian. "Why did my father send you here Pian?" She asked.

"After your report about Qurot... he was concerned he would become a larger issue. I was to replace him and Qurot was to go back." Pian answered. "The rest is what I told the Union Queen."

Jalersi shook her head. "Talk to him Pian." She spoke softly. "He could ruin everything my father has planned. Leonidas's second son already beat him down once for trying to take a pad from the bodies of the bloodsuckers. Were you able to determine anything before you lost consciousness?"

Pian shook his head. "You and the others were the target... that is all I was able to hear." He answered. "They obviously knew who I was for they did not say anything while they beat me."

Jalersi turned to her son who had remained quiet so far. “Karun... gather Athani and the Legislators. I will meet you in the landing bay.”

Karun nodded his head. “As you wish mother.” He spoke.

Jalersi waited until he too had left before turning back to Pain and meeting his gaze. “My father should not have sent you Pian.” She spoke.

“He didn’t send me.” Pian spoke. “When I discovered he was going to do this I offered to come. I told him it would enhance my political skills.” He focused his dark eyes on her beautiful face. “You know why I have come Jalersi.”

“Pian... it was one night two decades ago.” Jalersi stated quickly. “And while it was glorious... it will not happen again. Ever. I am Pusintin’s mate and that will not change. I love him.”

“You do not sound very convincing when you say that.” Pian spoke. “I could let it slip about what happen between us.”

Jalersi glared at him. “Who do you think anyone will believe Pian?” She snarled. “Do not threaten me... Pusintin would tear you limb from limb for even suggesting something like that. He would never believe you! And neither would anyone else!”

“I... I love you Jalersi.” Pian said softly.

“Love?” She barked softly. “You do not even know the definition of the word Pian. Our males are incapable of feeling love! At least my sister and I agree on that fact. We are just attempting to change things in a different manner. Things are not happening quickly enough for Athani, while I understand it will take many years to change the core of our people. You and other males are so concerned with dominating us and proving that you are superior in every way... there is no place for love in your hearts! I do not blame you for that Pian... it is simply how it is. At least my sons will know what it is to respect a woman. They may regard them as beneath them in some ways... but they will not injure them or treat them with disdain.”

“Jalersi...”

“No Pian... this conversation is over!” She snapped softly. “What happened between us can... will never happen again.” She drew away from the bed. “I will see you when you are released from the hospital.”

Pian watched her turn and leave the medical bay. He leaned back in his bed. “We shall see.” He spoke in a whisper. “We shall see.”

SODRAG

“Yes mother I am settling in fine.” Malic spoke to the monitor. “Why have you called me here?”

Malic was very surprised to find upon arriving that due to his rank, he was authorized his own bungalow. He had quickly come here after the events in the mess hall to unpack his things. The main room of the bungalow was large with two couches and several small tables. The large window facing the south overlooked the dark green jungle as the sun was beginning to set. These quarters were much better than those on the Durcunusaan base, with a small kitchen and decent sized bedroom. His bed was not a typical bunk like in the barracks, but rather a larger and softer bed similar to what he had in his apartment on Apo Prime.

He was shirtless now... unpacking his personal bag as he spoke to his mother on the monitor. The bungalows did not have the larger holo discs common in civilian apartments, but Malic had no reason for one.

“Malic... your father is still angry with you.” Calemia spoke.

Malic’s face turned into a tight, bitter smile. “When is father not angry with me?” He spoke as he pulled out the assortment of datapads from his bag.

“He could have gotten you a posting within his fleet son.” She stated. “You did not have to do this.”

“Mother... being an Enomotarch in father’s fleet is no better than a common laborer.” Malic spoke. “He hates any kind of ground troops. He treats them as if they are beneath him. He is a fleet officer... and he will never respect ground troops.”

“You know how he feels about the Durcunusaan Malic.” Calemia said. “Even more so the unit the King formed. This Mjólnir’s Hand.”

Malic nodded. “Yes. The Durcunusaan are too secretive. They do not dress properly... they are arrogant... their hair is longer. I have heard it all before mother.” He said looking at the monitor. “They are the best however. The finest ground troops in the entire Union mother. No one can match them. The only ones who are better are the riders of Mjolnir's Hand. Father hates that the men and women of Mjolnir's Hand rely on their bonded ones more than anything. He hates that they command so much respect among our people. Do you understand what that means to me mother? Of all the millions of troops and soldiers we have... they are considered the elite. And I am here now! Among them! Part of them."

"I thought you said that there were academic requirements that you had to meet first. And more training." Calemia spoke.

Malic nodded slowly. "Yes."

"Your father could have called a favor or two in again Malic." Calemia stated. "You could have gone back to the Academy."

"And flunk out as I did the last time?" He answered. "I am the only one of father's son to have shamed him so. Why would I attempt that again? Even my own brothers avoid speaking of me. Father brags of them all the time mother... but of me he says nothing. I have reached the rank of Enomotarch faster than anyone in the history of the Union if I am correct. He could not even come to my promotion ceremony. None of you could."

"He had duties Malic. You know that." Calemia said.

Malic laughed harshly. "Yes... I know. Duties. The same duties that pulled him away whenever I needed him as a child. I was weak as a child... I know this mother. I was not as healthy and strong as my brothers. This embarrassed both of you... don't you think I know that? That is different now mother... I am larger and stronger than my brothers... I am just not as intelligent as them and he is ashamed of me. When I saw father's face the day he discovered I had failed the Academy I knew. When I saw your face I knew. You are both ashamed of me. When I told you I was coming here mother... all either of you could do was complain that I was throwing away my life. That I would amount to nothing."

"Malic you..."

"No mother... I have chosen this life... for it suits me. And I will become a member of Mjolnir's Hand one day... for that is what calls to me." Malic shook his head.

"You... you will stand beside... fight beside vampires Malic." Calemia spoke.

Malic nodded. "Yes I will mother. I have listened to father's words for so long that I actually began to believe them myself. No more. Do you know what I have seen in just the week I have been here mother? Pride and honor and respect... not just from our kind... but from vampires who wear this uniform as well."

"They... they killed your grandparents Malic." Calemia snapped. "Their kind can not be trusted. No matter what the King says. No matter what they do now."

"I will make sure I tell that to the King when I am in his presence again mother." Malic said. "I'm sure Queen Isabella would be most honored to hear your words. Or the two daughters she has bore the King. Daughters who I might add are even more Spartan in their actions and words than two of my own three sisters in many ways."

"Don't say that!" Calemia spat angrily. "Don't you dare say that Malic. You insult your sisters in this way!"

"Do I insult them... or do I insult fathers and your arrogance mother." Malic stated plainly. "My brother's arrogance. Why do you think Adriana stays away mother? She hates how you and father act when she is there. You treat her as an inferior simply because she teaches children mother. Vampire children."

"Malic... you know I will tell your father what you have said!" Calemia barked. "He will be livid! He will... he will remove you from the apartment on Apo Prime and you will have access to no more of your inheritance!"

"I am outside of his reach now mother." Malic spoke. "From now forward I will make my own way. You and father may sell the apartment on Apo Prime mother. I will not be returning there. My future is here... as a Durcunusaan... and one day as a member of Mjolnir's Hand."

"Malic you..."

"I will always love you and father... never doubt that. But now I will make my own way in this world." Malic stated.

"Malic I demand...!"

"Goodbye mother." Malic spoke before reaching forward and cutting off the transmission his mother's face disappearing. He thought briefly and then keyed in another code.

“SODRAG COM Center. Lieutenant Renlar.” The face of the young Spartan came onto the monitor.

“Lieutenant Renlar... I am Enomotarch Malic sir. I no longer wish to receive any type of communications from my mother or father.” Malic spoke. “Is that possible sir?”

“All COMs come through here anyway Enomotarch.” Renlar answered. “I will have to enter it in the log Durcunusaan Malic. Your father is an Admiral. But if that is your wish I’ll make it happen.”

Malic nodded. “You... you know my father sir?”

Renlar shook his head quickly. “Not personally no. Part of our duties here is to know the background of anyone occupying SODRAG Enomotarch. Your file is flagged because of your father’s rank.”

“I would appreciate it sir.” Malic spoke.

Renlar nodded. “Already done.” He replied.

“Sir... is it possible for us to have family members come here?” Malic asked.

“Your father won’t get within a hundred kilometers of this base Enomotarch.” Renlar spoke with a grin. “He may be an Admiral... but his clearance is no where near high enough to allow access to a Durcunusaan or Mjolnir’s Hand facility.”

“No sir... I meant perhaps my sister Adriana.” Malic said. “She is a teacher... and I know her schedule permits her some freedom. I haven’t seen her in some time and I thought perhaps it might be possible. Though I wouldn’t want anyone knowing who she was for obvious reasons.”

“I’ll have to order a background check on her and clear it with Prince Androcles.” Renlar said. “We don’t usually let civilians near the base Enomotarch.”

Malic nodded. “I understand sir. I would appreciate it if you could find our for me sir. That would be even better.”

“I’ll let you know Enomotarch Malic. Good luck.”

“Thank you sir.” Malic said as he sat back on the couch.

The first fingers of a new day were beginning to dawn on him and he found he liked the feelings they gave him. Now he just had to make it happen. He lifted the first data pad he had pulled out of his bag and looked at it.

“Application of Aeronautical Elements to Dragon Flight.” Malic read the title out loud. He took a deep breath and leaned forward on the couch. “I am not stupid! I can learn what I need to learn!” He spat as he stabbed down on the pad to bring up the first page of the lessons and skills.

So engrossed as he was in the data pad, Malic did not hear or see Moneus Simpson push away from the front of the railing near his door with a smile and begin walking back towards his and Carina’s bungalow.

CABELIR OLD KAVALIAN EMPIRE HOMEWORLD

The vampire Colonel came to his feet when the door of his small office opened and Pusintin walked in. He had joined with the Kavalians at the very beginning; knowing that there was no way the Coven would be able to withstand their assault. He was branded a traitor for his actions... but after fighting with these Kavalians for so many years he had come to respect them a great deal. Yes they were brutal and very savage... but they were also practical as well. He knew he was always watched even now after so many years. He had proven an excellent commander and led his forces well. Many had been with him from the start... and they were among the few that still remained.

“Marshall Pusintin!” He declared coming to his feet. “This is a surprise sir!”

Pusintin looked at the man as he entered. He was one of the few vampire officers that actually pulled his weight and remained with them. And he had killed far more of his own kind than Pusintin had.

“Colonel Drtev.” Pusintin spoke.

“Sir... can I offer you something?” Drtev stammered.

“Information.” Pusintin spoke settling into the chair across from the small desk. “Sit down Colonel.” Drtev eased himself back into his chair, his eyes darting this way and that. Pusintin saw this and smiled. “Rest easy Colonel.” He spoke. “You are not one of the officers that we continue to monitor. Your actions since coming over to our side have moved you past that. You have gained some trust among the Kavalians... but always remember it is never enough.”

Drtev nodded. “Yes sir!”

“As I said... I need information.” Pusintin spoke.

“Of course Marshall... whatever I can provide.”

“I was reading the transcripts of your interview when you initially defected.” Pusintin spoke. “You mentioned something to the interviewer of Immortals who had broken away from the High Coven.”

Drtev nodded. “Yes sir. The former High Lord’s Immortal Captain Cha’talla survived the attempt on his life and escaped into The Wilds with his entire tribe. No one knows where they went.”

Pusintin nodded. “Yes... I’m more interested in those you said turned to a mercenary lifestyle.” He said.

“Yes sir. Several hundred deserted within the first few months before I left.” He stated. “The last I heard of them was when I was passing through The Wilds last year returning here.”

“And what did you hear?” Pusintin asked.

“They apparently have established their own smuggling and black market operations.” Drtev answered. “It is very profitable from what I was told.”

“Do you know how to arrange a meeting with them?” Pusintin asked.

Drtev looked at him wide eyed. “Sir... I am a pureblood. They originally defected because of their hatred for purebloods. Why would they want to meet with me?”

Pusintin held out the data pad to him. “I want to hire them.” He said. “I need something they can provide.”

“Marshall... what could they possibly provide that we can not get easily?” Drtev asked as he began reading the pad. His eyes grew a little wider and he looked up. “I... I don’t understand sir.”

“I want you to take a transport into The Wilds and meet with them. Take whomever you deem necessary Colonel, the fewer the better, but this mission does not exist. If you are killed then you will be dead. If you survive and complete this task... I will insure you have whatever you desire.” Pusintin spoke. “Arrange a meeting with them and then contact me. Give them these details of what I am interested in. Once that is arrange and they have the sample I want to see... I will travel to The Wilds and meet with you and them to insure they can do what I require of them.”

“Marshall... this... if they meet with me... they will want an enormous amount of credits to do what this says.” Drtev spoke.

“Whatever they want... give it to them.” Pusintin spoke as he came to his feet. “When you have succeeded and they have what I want to see contact me on this channel.” He held out the small COM unit. “That is coded to me and me alone. Speak with no one about this if you wish to continue living Colonel Drtev. Succeed... and you will have everything.”

Drtev sprang to his feet. “I will not fail Marshall.”

Pusintin nodded. “Good. I expect you to be leaving as soon as this afternoon.” Pusintin turned and walked out of the small office. As he moved down the corridor he lifted his wrist and activated the small COM unit there. “It is done.” He spoke.

“Will he succeed?” Keleru’s voice asked.

“If he doesn’t he will be dead and we will try something else.” Pusintin spoke. “We have six months Keleru if the reports are accurate.”

“I trust Ogat Pusintin.” Keleru spoke calmly. “The reports are accurate. I’ve chosen the men for the two assault teams.” Keleru spoke. “Meet me at my estate this evening and I will introduce you to the two leaders.”

Pusintin nodded. “I’ll be there.” He said. “Have you heard from Pian or Jalersi?”

“Not as of yet.” He answered. “They should be arriving on Earth as we speak and it is strange she did not contact me when Pian joined with them to complain of his presence. I expect to hear from her shortly though.”

“Have her contact me.” Pusintin said. “Her voice soothes me and I want to see her face. I did not think her absence would affect me as much as it has.”

“Of course.” Keleru replied with a knowing laugh. “No doubt the same as when I am away from my mate. I will see you this evening.”

CHAPTER TWELVE

SPARTA SOUTHERN SPACEPORT

The ride down to Earth on MJOLNIR'S HAND'S single MENKLA Transport was many things to the many different individuals on board.

To Athani'Puat it was the beginning of a new life.

Athani was far more interested in what Earth and Sparta looked like, for she alone knew the path to her future lay here with Resumar Leonidas. He had been true to his word and while they had showered together he had simply washed her body thoroughly with gentle strokes and loving caresses, occasionally dropping light kisses on her shoulders and neck under the hot spray. Though there was nothing sexual about it, just his touch was enough to send feelings of bliss skittering across her flesh. He had gotten her back to her quarters unseen easily enough and he left her with a short but emotion filled kiss that left her body trembling for more and her mind with no doubts as to his intentions. What he had made her feel was beyond her scope of comprehension right now, but Athani knew she wanted to experience it over and over again. And she knew without question it wasn't just the divine physical pleasure he had reaped upon her, it was something far deeper and while that should have frightened her, Athani found herself basking in the sensations it caused her to feel within.

Athani'Puat's past was rapidly crumbling away from around her and she knew it and she was going to embrace it as quickly as she could.

She had been waiting nearly a quarter century for the right moment to come when she could break away from the life she had been born into. She had endured Pusintin's touch upon her for too long and the moment Resumar had filled her the first time with his essence it was as if he had purged her very soul. It had never been her intention to fall in love with him. She had only wanted to use him to escape the life she was bound too. That first kiss however, that kiss had caused her to fall very hard and so very quickly for the handsome half elf, half wolf Prince. His actions and the heavenly feeling of being wrapped within his arms had been far more than she had ever hoped or dreamed that she would find. His words to her were enough to ignite fires of desire within her belly, fires that he had just as quickly satiated with his touch. Until he had held her in his arms Athani had never known what love felt like. She may have been older than him by some quarter century or possibly more she didn't really know, but if what she felt coursing through her now was any indication; she would never desire anyone else. She wanted to know everything about Resumar Leonidas, his likes and his dislikes. And since he had not let her exercise the skills she had acquired over the years due to having to suffer Pusintin's touch, Athani wanted to give him back the pleasure he had so willingly given to her. Now Athani'Puat thanked each and every star she saw that it was Resumar Leonidas who had been on that ship. She could still smell him on her, if even so very faintly, and the mint like wildflower smell tickled her nostrils and filled her with warmth.

Resumar and Queen For'mya had accompanied them on the transport and while they sat closer to the cockpit of the transport, she could still catch glimpses of him as he moved about in the front speaking with his mother. Athani knew they had to be exceptionally careful, even around his own people and his family. He had taught her very quickly between their trysts how to shield her mind in a way that would not allow anyone to touch her as he and Cemath had done.

“My father and mothers are very strong within Mindvoice. All of my family... but my father and older brother most of all.” He had told her as they lay in his bed, their breathing returning to normal even as his fingers traced the skin of her shoulders and neck causing swells of delight to cascade through her. He found her tail fascinating Athani discovered, and this was only another sign to her that he was the one. “I'm quite sure that you are the only recorded one of your people to show signs of being able to Mindvoice. Part of that is because Cemath touched you... and then me. Let me show you what my brother Andro showed me on how to shield your thoughts even when you are not aware of it. You must practice as often as you can to strengthen this ability. It will make it safer for you until we are ready to reveal what we want to reveal. Cemath will help you Athani just as I will... all you need do is reach out to him. To me. We are bonded... and I don't keep anything from him. He knows about us... and my feelings for you. He will help you. I know how your people are and I truly do not want anything to happen to you before we can be together so we must be careful."

"Will they attempt to read my thoughts?" She had asked as she snuggled in his arms.

"No!" He answered immediately shaking his head. "That is not something any of us would do. It is considered a huge lack of protocol and incredible disrespect. And in some cases it is considered a crime. Besides... with what I teach you if someone tried to breach your mind in that way I would detect it and so would Cemath. And we would respond instantly."

"Will I be able to see your thoughts?" She asked.

Resumar grinned at her and waggled his eyebrows. "What thoughts would you like to see?"

"Not those!" She exclaimed pushing up against him and using her tail to slap his ass cheek lightly. "I have felt those thoughts!"

Resumar chuckled. "As you grow stronger yes... if you want too, I can show you my thoughts. If things work out as I hope they will... you will have free reign within my thoughts." He told her.

"How do you want them to work out?" Athani asked softly.

"As strange as it may sound because we have known each other for only two days... I want you to be mine Athani. Now... tomorrow... next week... next year. I can't explain it to you, but that is what I feel pounding in my blood." He replied.

"Why are you doing this Resumar Leonidas?" She asked. "Knowing what... what my intentions were and knowing what I sought before coming here. Knowing that I only wanted too... why would you still do this for me?"

Resumar met her beautiful blue/green eyes. "My people... Lycavorians... and elves... we are very open about many things... to include our desires and wants. But when we decide we have found the one we want to spend our lives with, our instincts take over... and we pursue them until we have won those we want or we are dismissed. I have the blood of both in my veins, and it makes that instinct far stronger."

"And I... I am this person for you?" She asked softly.

"As crazy as it sounds... I knew the first minute I saw you in the landing bay that you were who I wanted." Res replied.

"It is not crazy..." She spoke softly. "For a part of me realized it too when you helped me to my feet. I have never felt these emotions within me Resumar... and they feel so wonderful."

"Well good." Res spoke. He moved closer until his forehead was touching hers. "Now relax and let me show you what I mean. After that I'm going to steal your breath away again."

Since returning to her quarters she had practiced raising and lowering the walls around her mind as he had shown her. The more she concentrated, the stronger they became but he had told her that it would become second nature to her very quickly, and until that time he and Cemath would augment her shields as much as possible.

Athani had been enthralled with the blue/green color of the planet and when they had finally entered the atmosphere and broke out of the clouds she gasped as she saw the huge swatches of green fertile land and the huge expanses of timber and mountains. She saw many cities from high up but as they drew closer to the ground following a certain course she began to see a larger city take shape. It appeared to be surrounded by towering mountains on three sides and fit neatly in a lush valley with a large river. The river actually cut through the center of the city and as the transport swept around and began to descend to the spaceport Athani could make out the lofty buildings in the distance. They were not like the towering structures of steel and glass she had seen on other planets. These buildings appeared made from a combination of granite and steel that impugned incredible workmanship. She could see Lifters darting back and forth between the higher buildings but nothing on or near the street level which was filled with hundreds if not thousands of men and women walking the streets and footpaths. Many of the taller buildings even had greenery reaching up along the sides and decorating the outsides of their structures. There were Lifter platforms high up that connected to some of the taller buildings and the pedestrian bridges that connected them to others. Almost all of the very tall buildings were within two blocks she saw, the rest gradually decreasing in height as they moved outward. All along the outside edge of the city she could see the Lifter lanes and the traffic was heavy but moving quickly to different parts of the city.

“Lifter traffic is not allowed below thirty stories or within the city proper. There is actually no structure over fifty stories high to be honest. Many of the citizens of Sparta have lived here for thousands of years, and you will find they try to remain true to their history and culture. Part of that culture is the lack of truly modern looking buildings. They have a unique combination of construction as you can see.” For’mya’s voice spoke and Athani looked up and saw the others turning away from the view windows to look at her as she came down the short staircase into the main portion of the transport. “The streets of Sparta are free of clutter for the citizens to walk and mingle. There are several hundred different types of cafés and restaurants spread throughout the city, many of them established by an assortment of the species within the Union. Eden City is the actual capital of Earth now and much larger in size in many respects, but the basic design construction and infrastructure you see from your windows is the same all over Earth. We decided to copy what was here in Sparta for the most part. Eden City is more modern looking with significantly more buildings, but it has changed very little since Martin Leonidas and Dysea began building it. There are now seventy-three major cities spread across the planet, with ten times that number of smaller settlements and urban areas.”

“Eden City is the first city he built isn’t it?” Athani asked.

For’mya looked at her with a smile. “Yes it is. Martin and Dysea began building it before he discovered who he really was. It was very nearly destroyed in The Battle for Earth, but it has been rebuilt and enlarged to many degrees even better than it was before.”

“Will we see this Eden City?” Jalersi asked.

“You will be staying in a newer facility in the Northeast Quadrant of Sparta. It is closest to those parts of the city that remain in some fashion from millennia ago.” For’mya continued. “It is an apartment complex of sorts for visiting dignitaries with every comfort and easy access to the nearby River Promenade with shops and cafés and such. It is actually quite beautiful. A trip to Eden City can be arranged however if that is something you would like.”

“You will allow us to go within your city? Within Sparta?” Jalersi asked somewhat surprised at this information.

“You are not prisoners here. You are the members of a Diplomatic Envoy taking part in Trade Negotiations.” For’mya spoke.

“And what of your people?” Qurot spoke now. “How will they treat us?”

“You will find the people of Sparta very tolerant of others no matter their past as long as they are treated in the same fashion they treat you.” For’mya answered. “Regardless of what you may think the citizens of the Union are very friendly and open. The people who call Sparta home even more so. Whatever preconceived notions you may have will probably not turn out to be true.”

“Will we see the other children of the King?” Karun asked the question.

For’mya looked at him for a moment. She shrugged finally. “You may or you may not. They are all members of the military with duties and tasks all their own. Androcles commands his own Fleet Group which is based here on Earth. Resumar will begin putting together his own staff when we return for he will receive his own Fleet Group at the end of this year.” Athani’s eyes perked up at this information. “We have found it very hard over the years to keep track of our older children so we have stopped trying. Since this is the beginning of our annual exodus to Earth they are all here, but they go and do as they please. Most of our older children are taking part in additional training maneuvers for Mjolnir’s Hand. The younger ones come and go from the villa to their activities during the day as any of the younger ones in Sparta do.”

“Don’t they stay here in Sparta?” Karun continued. “The older children of the King I mean?”

“They each have apartments on the main estate; however all of them also maintain their own villas in the city of Gytheio several kilometers south. It was Sparta’s port city in ancient times and it has become so again.” For’mya explained. “The waters of the Laconian Gulf are quite beautiful and exceptionally warm this time of year.”

“So they do not stay at the Royal Palace?” Karun asked.

For’mya stepped closer to him. “The main estate is no palace.” She said with a smile and shake of her head. “It is unchanged in many respects from when Martin Leonidas discovered who he was. It is a single story villa, though it has been enlarged quite a bit over the years.” She looked at him. “Why such an interest in my other children Karun?” She asked.

“Your children?” He asked surprised looking at his mother and then back to her.

“You will find...” Resumar spoke now as he came down the short flight of steps into the main area. “You will find that my brothers and sisters and I do not distinguish who our birth mothers are.” He stated matter of factly. “As far as we are concerned, they are all our mothers. And that is how we treat them.” They watched as Resumar leaned over For’mya’s shoulder and dropped an affectionate kiss on her cheek as if to emphasize his words and he held out the pad to her as he did this. “A message from Uncle Andreus mother.” He said.

For’mya looked at the pad briefly and nodded. “Excellent. The King’s Durcunusaan Captain has informed me that the secure transmitter is now active and set up in the quarters reserved for you Jalersi. You may contact your father as soon as you arrive there and please inform him we will entertain any requests that he might make as long as they are within reason. We will be meeting Prime Minister Deia to...”

“What do you consider within reason?” Jalersi asked. “I’m sure he will demand we be allowed our own security force after the events on the ship.”

For’mya nodded slowly. “No doubt.” She said. “Martin Leonidas will allow a small detachment that much I can tell you.”

“What do you consider small?” Jalersi asked.

“I would think six is an appropriate number. You will not have need for more.” For’mya answered.

“And what of the High Coven members already on Earth?” Jiss asked now. “Can you guarantee our safety from them?”

“The members of the High Coven party are being kept on the opposite side of the city in a facility similar to yours.” For’mya replied. “They will have no need to cross the whole of Sparta to come into the area that you will be occupying. There is much to do and see throughout the entire city, and they also have our security forces with them. They will not allow any type of confrontation. You will more than likely not even see them while you are here.”

“What about the rest of us?” Qurot barked out quickly. “Do we get secure transmitters as well?”

“Jalersi is the head of your Trade delegation.” For’mya spoke calmly even at his rude interruption. “Is there a particular reason that you need a secure transmitter Commander?”

“No there is not.” Jalersi stated before Qurot could answer.

“Good. As I was saying... I will introduce you to the Prime Minister and then I have to depart until later this evening when we gather for dinner.” For’mya spoke.

“Will the King be joining us then?” Jalersi asked a hopeful tone in her voice.

For’mya shook her head. “No... not this evening.” She said. “Martin Leonidas is very busy. He has made time to honor your request Jalersi... however I won’t know when that will be until I see him and talk with him.”

“When will you see him?” Jalersi asked quickly.

For’mya smiled warmly. “As soon as we exit the ship I would imagine.” She answered. “He is my mate... and we have missed each other. I will be able to tell you when he will meet with you this evening at dinner.”

“It is a pleasure to meet you Representative Jalersi’Puat.” Deia spoke in her most politically correct and inviting voice as she extended her hand in greeting. “I welcome you to Earth and to Sparta.”

Jalersi was somewhat taken aback by Deia’s greeting, but she took the offered hand. “Thank you Prime Minister Deia.” She stammered quickly. “We... we have heard much about you.”

Deia laughed as For’mya chuckled from where she stood next to Jalersi. “Yes... well I’m sure not all of it was good.” She stated with a disarming smile.

“Deia... I present Jalersi’s younger sister Athani’Puat.” For’mya spoke now as she motioned Athani forward. “And Senior Legislators Jiss and Matuarr. Beside them are Jalersi’s oldest son and an officer in their military Karun. Then there is Commander Qurot.” She turned back to Deia as she finished shaking hands with the Kavalian Jiss and faced Qurot. It was Athani who noticed that the Prime Minister didn’t so much as bat an eye at Qurot’s obvious attempt to make his appearance more intimidating than he was. “Commander... a pleasure.” She spoke bowing her head slightly. Deia didn’t smile as Qurot grunted at her, dismissing her almost casually. She turned back to Jalersi who was giving Qurot an evil glare for his actions.

“I must apologize for what happened on MJOLNIR’S HAND.” Deia spoke. “We are very pleased no one among your party was hurt, and I assure you we will find out who it is that was responsible.”

Jalersi nodded. “I thank you for your words Prime Minister.” She spoke. “The High Coven is friend to neither of our peoples and I’m quite sure you will do your best to discover what happened. I am curious however, why are you signing a Cease Fire Agreement with them now, after so long? And will this recent event make you rethink your position in this regard. They are responsible for the attack.”

Deia was prepared for just this sort of question and she smiled. “We have not fought an engagement with the High Coven in nearly twenty-five years.” She stated quickly. “Your people have kept them quite occupied.” She said acting as if this was impressive. “Signing this agreement was actually my idea when they made it known this is what they wanted. It shows them we will not involve ourselves in the war currently going on between them and your people. In a manner it also shows your people we have no intention of entering the war in any way. It is something we can speak more about if you like. You will be here for several days... and if your request for an embassy is approved by the King and the Senate perhaps even longer. As for recent events, we are still investigating the incident.”

“It was quite a bit more than an incident.” Jiss stated now. “They made an attempt to assassinate the daughters of our Prefect. He will not look kindly on that.”

Deia nodded. “Nor should he.” She said. “However, the attack occurred within Union borders and on the Union flagship. It also appears those who conducted the attack were part of some insurgent group and are not tied directly to the Empress or the High Coven. At least that is what we have been able to determine so far. We are still investigating as I said.”

“And if it is determined the High Coven was behind this attack?” Jalersi asked.

“Then I’m sure the King will review what we know.” Deia spoke. “If we are to establish a more permanent channel between our governments, I suggest we worry about what we can do and let King Leonidas concern himself with the military aspects of discovering what happened. He will get to the bottom of it I assure you. He does not take kindly to having his son and one of his beloved mates put in danger.” Deia smiled. “As I said... now that this door has been open... I suggest we do all we can to keep it open.”

Jalersi nodded. “I believe to better understand how your government works I would like that.” She stated.

“Good. We can...”

The deep throated trumpet that rolled across the expanse of the tarmac caused the heads of everyone to turn and Deia heard several gasps from the Kavalians as they watched the colossal, obsidian scaled dragon swoop down from the blue cloudless sky above and settle gracefully to the tarmac several hundred meters away. The figure of the large man sitting causally in the saddle was very evident. Beside that massive dragon was settling an azure scaled beast barely half the size with a more diminutive figure in the saddle.

“By the gods!” Jalersi gasped taking a step back even from this distance.

Deia smiled. “King Leonidas... and Queen Aricia.” She spoke softly as Jalersi turned to look at her. “Torma has that effect on everyone due to his size. He is close to twenty-one meters long now... but thankfully he has stopped growing.”

For’mya stepped closer to them quickly feeling her blood calling for her mates. “Jalersi... I will see you and the others this evening for dinner.” She stated.

Jalersi nodded quickly, her eyes turning back to look as Torma flared his massive wings several times even as he settled completely to the ground, his legs cocked underneath him. “Of... of course.” She said watching as For’mya and Resumar both began to walk quickly towards where the two dragons had landed.

“The King and his family rarely, if ever, use interplanetary transportation.” Deia said explaining to them. “Their bonded brothers and sisters would be insulted if they did I think.” Deia said. “You have no fears truly.”

“Are all of his children bonded to these beasts?” Karun asked quickly.

Deia shook her head. “Not all of them no. All of them can ride quite well... most of them learned to do that before they could even walk actually... I believe Androcles was riding by the time he was three... but not all of them are bonded to dragons. And they are not beasts to us young man.” Deia spoke keeping her voice calm and without emotion. “The dragons that carry the King and Queens and their family are all from the same family bloodline of dragons. The two dragons you see there are Torma and Isheeni... they are the parents to all but one of the dragons that a Leonidas rides. Dragons are friends and family to many within the Union... not beasts.”

Karun bowed his head slightly. “My apologies.” He spoke.

Deia shook her head. “It is of no consequence really. Just do not call them beasts when you are in their presence for they are just as intelligent as you and I and it would be offensive to them.”

“I won’t.” He spoke.

“Please... this is my senior aide Lieutenant Ardis... and she will escort you to the Diplomatic Apartments and show you where you will be staying.” Deia motioned to the figure behind her who stepped forward now.

The figure was wearing the matte black body armor that they had seen on For’mya and Resumar on the ship. They also noticed that the figure wore a similar crimson cape with gold trimmed edges as well. As the hands came up and tossed back the hood they were surprised when they saw not the stern face of a man, but the exquisitely beautiful face of the young elven woman. Or half elf they saw, as her elven ears were not the four inch high elegantly curved ears they knew full blooded elves had. Her shimmering black tresses fell well past her shoulders, the black body armor doing nothing to hide the fact that she had a firm, supple body with high breasts and very long legs. She appeared to be nearing five feet eight inches tall though her legs appeared even longer for her height. Karun was the most affected by her, for he was half Lycavorian himself and while not as sensitive as a pureblood Lycavorian, his sense of smell was excellent. He sniffed the air gently, detecting the faint scent of peaches and wild timber wafting from her pores. Her face was perfection in every manner, from the high cheekbones to her full lips which bore no color except the natural blush of soft pink. It was her eyes that grabbed everyone’s attention. Her right eye was a bright sapphire color, while the left was an equally bright violet hued orb. They also detected the holster on her right thigh that bore the K12A Kinetic Magnum and the long slim holster on her left thigh that held the intricately carved pommel of the Nehtes. Her black hair was pulled over one shoulder and tied with fine white Drow silk.

Jalersi looked at Deia quickly. “She wears the colors of the Royal family?” She said. “This is one of the King’s children?”

Deia smiled and shook her head quickly. “This is Lieutenant Ardis... daughter of Sparta’s Lieutenant Governor Tarifa and Star Colonel Isra of Mjollnir’s Hand.” She answered. “She is King Leonidas’s oldest niece.”

“My mother and Uncle Martin are very close.” Ardis said. “She was the very first he discovered upon returning to Earth so many years ago and discovering his past and heritage. They have been like brother and sister ever since. More so that many who are related by blood.” Ardis spoke. Her voice was soft like wind chimes and bespoke great intelligence.

“You wear the uniform of...” Jalersi began speaking.

“A Durcunusaan... yes.” Ardis finished her statement. “I was accepted into their ranks immediately upon completing my Agoge. I spent three years with them... but I have been Prime Minister Deia’s senior aide for the last year.”

“You are a rider then?” Jiss asked. “Like the others?”

Ardis shook her head. “No. I have ridden dragons since I was a small girl; it is hard not to do this when your father and mothers are bonded to them, not to mention most of your extended family. I am not bonded to a single dragon however.”

“Your father has two mates?” Qurot demanded in his harsh voice.

“My second mother is a Drow elf. Vice President of Earth Aihola. My father and mothers have been together for twenty-five years now.” Ardis answered with a great deal of pride and respect in her voice. “I am twenty-two years old and the third oldest of their six children. My older brothers are bonded with dragons. My younger siblings have not yet showed signs of this though it is still possible.”

Qurot laughed. “I like this place!” He stated looking around. “It appears everyone has more than one woman!”

“Qurot!” Jalersi snapped.

Ardis stepped forward, her sapphire and violet eyes on Qurot. “My Drow mother is half vampire Commander Qurot.” She stated plainly seeing the look on his face change to shock and then disgust. “And to my knowledge there are less than a hundred and twenty male Lycavorians within the entire Union that have more than one mate. All of them... to include my father; my Uncle Martin and my adoptive Uncle Daniel Simpson are exceptional Spartans... for they love their mates equally. To presume something else is not only incorrect... it is entirely foolish.”

Qurot’s eyes narrowed. “You call me foolish?” He spat.

“I don’t know Commander. Your assumptions would make it appear so.” Ardis answered politely not fazed in the least by his harsh and overbearing demeanor. “Are you?”

Deia smiled as she took Ardis’s arm and squeezed lightly. “Lieutenant Ardis will show you to the Diplomatic Apartments and then escort you to the Conference Building where we can begin our schedule of talks.”

Ardis motioned to several multi-seat Lifters parked a short distance away. “Please... this way.”

Athani risked a very quick glance back across the tarmac and her keen feline like eyes detected Resumar embracing the raven haired woman. She turned back to follow her sister to the Lifters.

[Tonight Athani’Puat.] Resumar’s voice filtered into her head and she smiled inwardly. [I will see you tonight and show you a little of Sparta from the air if that pleases you.]

[I believe I would like that Resumar Leonidas.] She answered.

[Tonight then.]

[I will be waiting.] Athani spoke.

DURCUNUSAAN HOSPITAL QUARANTINE LEVEL

Anja gripped For’mya’s hands tightly as they shared a brief but passionate kiss while Martin and Aricia stood next to Resumar looking through the large glass view window at the medical technicians who were handling the bodies of the commandos gingerly.

“You had us worried for a moment.” Anja spoke gently to her.

For’mya sighed as Anja nuzzled her elfin ear. “Resumar and I had it completely under control.” She stated confidently.

“So much under control that you couldn’t grab one of them still alive?” Martin asked with a grin as he looked back at them.

“Ignore him.” Anja said quickly.

“I intend too.” For’mya stated as they turned to look at him.

“So what’s the word Red?” Martin asked.

Anja stepped closer to the view window as Martin pulled For’mya to him tightly. “Well... three had their upper bodies pretty well crushed.” Anja stated.

Resumar shrugged sheepishly. “Sorry mother...” He said with a smile. “It was the closest thing Cemath and I could snatch. I didn’t stop to see if it was full.”

Anja chuckled and shook her head. “Just like your father. Always the direct approach. No subtly in you whatsoever.” She said. “The rest were killed by an assortment of Nehtes strikes, very precise For’mya, excellent form.” For’mya smiled as Martin squeezed her tighter.

“It must be all the instruction I have received from Aricia.” For’mya said with a grin.

Martin looked at her as Aricia chuckled. “Ha ha... very funny.”

Anja grinned as well. “Aurith melted one into nothing, Resumar displayed a rare bout of anger in his thrusts and the one who was supposedly the leader died from a massive dose of poison.”

Martin looked at her now. “Poison?”

Anja nodded. “The most concentrated does of neutron radiation that I have ever seen.” She said. “All of them had these capsules imbedded in small pouches inside their cheeks. Bite the capsule... death follows in under thirty seconds and there isn’t a damn thing that will save them.” Anja turned her jade green eyes on Martin.

“Viper Team?” He said softly.

Anja nodded slowly. “A Viper Team. Or at least the closest thing to one that we know of. Why else carry the poison?”

Aricia, For'mya and Resumar looked between the two of them quickly. "What is this Viper Team Beloved? I have never heard of such a thing." Aricia asked finally.

"It's something Anja and I had experience with before the comet came." He answered. "A Viper Team was essentially a suicide squad. The odds of them completing their mission and getting away alive was almost zero. They were thrill junkies. Most of them were loose cannons that had a death wish to begin with anyway. We avoided them at all costs. They carried similar tools and all of them had a capsule of poison they would take if it appeared they were going to be captured. They are similar in many respects to our Zero Teams... but these Viper Teams didn't care that most of the missions they went on were one way tickets to becoming very dead."

"You think this is what they were father?" Resumar asked.

Martin shook his head slowly. "No. I think they carried these capsules in case they were captured by the High Coven. Kill themselves and they take whatever they know to the grave. Numbers. Places. Leaders."

"Names." For'mya said softly.

Martin nodded. "Yep. Aikiro said there was one group that they could not discover the name of the leader." He said. "Now we know why."

"To die to protect their leader and their numbers signifies a much greater purpose and intent." Aricia stated. "They are not simply a rag tag bunch of malcontents as Aikiro would have us believe."

"Nope." Martin said. "Bella is working with Armetus to see what they can find out about this group and who on Beklan is helping them. I damn sure don't need High Coven insurgents operating out of Union space. Especially not those dedicated enough to try a suicide mission on my ship to kill Kavalians."

Aricia looked at him. "Have you told Vonis?" She asked.

Martin shook his head. "No... not yet. Just the five of us, Deia and Armetus know what is going on completely. And those on MJOLNIR'S HAND... but they are my crew and they won't say boo about what happen."

"I think perhaps I should join Bella and then visit Vonis Martin. He has extensive knowledge of The Wilds and perhaps of any insurgent groups that might be active. He did work in the shadows for quite some time." Aricia spoke.

Martin nodded. "I'll let you and Bella work that end." He said knowing she and Isabella were more than capable. "For'mya can you stay in front with these Kavalians? Help Deia?"

For'mya nodded quickly. "Of course. I believe they are expecting me too as well. It would look odd if I did not continue. They would know something is not right."

"Give them as much freedom as possible... but they are not to leave the city." Martin spoke.

"You know of course that Keleru will want to send his own security for them after what happened." For'mya asked.

Martin nodded. "And if I refuse they will know something is up. Allow it... but no more than half a dozen." He answered. "I don't want anymore than that cruising my city looking for trouble."

For'mya nodded. "That is what I told Jalersi." She said leaning up on her tip toes to reach his lips where she kissed him quite passionately. "You made me a promise before I left Martin Leonidas." She said softly with a seductive glint in her dark brown eyes. "I expect you to honor that promise."

Martin leaned over quickly and firmly nuzzled her four inch high elven ear causing her to lean against him in delight as his aura pulsed through her being. "And I very much intend to Kinsoargai. Do not stay at the dinner too long. I might fall asleep."

For'mya met his eyes. "Then I will wake you up Martin Leonidas. In the special way you so enjoy."

Martin kissed her hard and they both heard Resumar coughing loudly. They turned and looked at him.

"Hey... little more information than I needed!" He stated. "You are my parents after all! I won't be able to get that picture out of my head the rest of the day!"

Aricia and Anja both burst out laughing as Martin gave his son a shove. "You leave in the morning to help your brother!" He spoke loudly. "That's all you'll need to think about."

Resumar smiled as he nodded his head. "I'd like to return every night though father. I'll stay in Gytheio. In case mother needs my help. I might be able to assist if anything comes up since they have seen me and know who I am."

Martin looked at For'mya and she shrugged. "He's right. The more familiar faces they see... the less they will suspect." She said. "Can Andro do without him for a few weeks Martin? Having him here, even to be seen at different times, that will lend credence that everything is normal."

Martin nodded. "I don't have a problem with it. And Andro doesn't begin Close Quarters Combat Flying for at least several weeks. I'll let him know. It will give you a chance to begin to put together a Command Crew for PILLAR OF FAITH. And don't you and Cemath crash any STRIKERS going back and forth to the station like you did last time."

"That was a faulty Plasma converter!" Resumar protested. "That was not our fault!"

Martin laughed and nodded. "That's not what I heard." He said.

Resumar waved his hand at his parents. "Bah! You can't even keep a STRIKER on a straight course father. You are not one to talk." He turned and headed down the corridor muttering to himself.

Aricia stepped up and leaned into Martin's opposite side, also stretching up to kiss him deeply. "I will see all of you tonight after Bella and I have picked up Dysea." She said. "And you will be very good to For'mya tonight Beloved. If you aren't... we will punish you."

For'mya kissed his cheek as she pushed away with a chuckle. "See... we stick together." She said as Aricia took her hand and they headed down the corridor.

Martin turned and looked at Anja. "You in on that too?" He asked.

Anja's jade green eyes twinkled. "What do you think?" She asked with a smile as she stepped up to him now. "We'll never get enough of you lover. I would think after twenty-five years of being together with us you'd have realized that by now."

Martin pulled her close. "I believe I can say the same thing." He spoke leaning over to nuzzle her cheek and feeling her press closer to him in delight.

Anja gripped the front of his uniform tightly as his aura swirled around her gently and she looked up into his face. "I need to show you something." She spoke in a more serious tone.

Martin waggled his eyebrows. "Really? Down here?" He asked coyly. "Anja... you little minx!"

"Carians... you are a pig!" She gasped playfully. She squeezed his uniform. "This is important lover... and you need to keep that famous temper of yours in check when you see it."

Martin's eyes narrowed. "Ok... why do I get the feeling I'm not going to like what you are going to show me?"

"You aren't." Anja spoke taking his arm. "But you need to see it. Come with me." She led him through the sealed door into the quarantine room where her technicians were working on the bodies of the commandos. Anja pulled him into a much smaller room where there was a single body on the table covered in a plain white sheet. Anja released his arm as she moved up next to the table.

"What's this?" He asked worry filling his face and his words.

"Martin... do you remember Petty Officer Wolcott?" Anja asked.

Martin nodded quickly. "I remember all my people Red... you know that. He died in the attack on Mountain City. Anja what is this..."

Anja reached up slowly and drew back the sheet from the features of the dead vampire commando. The exceptionally pale face of the dead young man stared back at his wide eyes and Martin moved closer reaching out to pull the sheet further out of the way. The cheeks were sunken in and the cobalt blue vampire eyes very evident open in death as they were. Martin turned his head to look at her.

"What the fuck is this?" He said the rage building within his chest.

"He's a clone Martin." Anja said softly. "A vampire clone."

"Vampire... how is that even possible?" Martin gasped. "Danny changed him... I watched him bite Wolcott Red. He became like us!"

Anja shook her head. "I ran two different tests lover. There is no trace of Lycavorian DNA in his body." She stated softly. "He was one of the original Genomes... and that means someone... probably Yuri... somehow they got the DNA source code for him and we can probably assume the others as well. And if she was able to get it for them..." Anja looked at him. "There is a possibility that..."

Martin looked at her. "No way!" He stammered.

“It is a possibility that we have to consider Martin.” Anja said. “As distasteful and vile as it sounds... they have the cloning capability to do it. Especially now that we know they have been using the remnants of the Mindvoice ship on Nuwaroa. It’s how their cloning procedures were so advanced to begin with.”

Martin took her hand gently in his. “Then let’s find out right now.” He said.

APO PRIME MAIN MILITARY SHIPYARDS POLAR ORBIT

“Another twelve hours Princess.” The Lycavorian engineer told her. The sounds of the engineer bay filled the surrounding area and they were walking along one of the more sedate areas. They only had to talk loudly here.

Normya Leonidas looked at him oddly. “Twelve hours? To replace a Coil Inducer?” She asked.

“It’s not just the Coil Inducer anymore. The Gate travel caused the fissures to extend into the housing and power couplings. Those need to be replaced as well. We’re short staffed Princess. You know that when the Royal family goes to Earth everyone puts in for their leaves.” The engineer answered.

Normya nodded her head quickly at his words as she was very frustrated. She wanted to get back to Earth and begin putting together the files for her and Zarah to select the remaining member of their flight crew. Not to mention the fact that she could feel the fever from her Coming of Age beginning to burn slowly within her blood. It made her irritable and she did not want to snap at the senior engineer. Her mothers and sisters had told her this was how it would be. It would begin slowly and continue to build over the course of a week’s time until it reached its peak. At that time her scent would be saturating the very air around her and she did not doubt it was becoming more pronounced even now, especially to the older Lycavorian males. Only they would be able to smell it on her, for elves and others within the Union did not have the same incredibly sensitive smell of their Lycavorian brothers. It would not be as powerful as pureblood Lycavorian females, but because of pureness of her father’s blood it would be more than normal half breed young females would experience.

Combined with the fact that she missed Zarah and Arrarn, Normya was not in the best of moods. She had not been away from either of them for this long a period of time before, and she realized now just how much she depended on her brother and sister. The three of them were like peas in a pod, and while Zarah shared a closeness with Andro that her other siblings did not, she rarely left hers or Arrarn’s side. They thought alike on almost everything... their personalities so similar it was scary sometimes. While they all loved each other as siblings, it was not uncommon for them to gravitate towards different siblings. Eliani, Carina, Denali and Lisisa were closer to Andro than most of them for they had spent so much time together during the war that it was natural to spend equal time together when they were off duty. While Resumar had fought beside Andro and the others during the war, he preferred the more laid back and relaxed atmosphere that permeated Arrarn, Normya and Zarah when they were together. It was the natural way of things the Feravomir had once told her, and no one should take it to mean anything more than what it was. They were brothers and sisters yes, but all of them were different in many ways.

Several of the elven fighter pilots she knew were aware that she was entering her Coming of Age and were beginning to pursue her more openly now. One had even greeted her when she had arrived six hours ago. While Normya found him attractive in many ways, and thanks to the influence of her more outgoing sister she had fantasized about him several times, Normya had no desire to enter into anything serious with him or anyone. Like Zarah she wanted to explore and experience her sexuality to its fullest extent before she finally decided to allow males to court her for mating. When that day came, Normya already knew that she wanted a large man who would cuddle with her in his arms and nuzzle her elven ears. She wanted a man like her father... a powerful wolf who would worship her in every way as she knew her father did her mothers. She knew it wasn’t going to be easy for both Eliani and Lisisa were still very much single, but like her older sisters, Normya was content to wait until that man came into her life.

Normya turned to the engineer and nodded. “Very well.” She spoke. “I will be at the Island Palace.” She said. “Contact me the moment the repairs are done for I want to leave within an hour of them being completed.”

The engineer looked at her oddly. “You don’t wish to do a test of the new parts first?” He asked.

Normya shook her head. "I trust in your skill. I need to return this ship to Earth for a training series we are doing with dragons."

"I thought the next cycle of training for Mjolnir's Hand didn't start until next month Princess?" He said. "That is when the other TYPE IIs will be shifted to Earth."

Normya nodded quickly realizing she had just given out information she should not have. "Yes... this is... this is special training session that my brother is conducting with a few select members of Mjolnir's Hand already on Earth."

The engineer nodded though not completely convinced. "I will contact you immediately Princess." He said.

Normya nodded. "Thank you Chief Engineer." She stated before turning and heading toward the main entrance to the work bay.

The Lycavorian watched her until she had left and then made his way to his small office. He reached behind his desk and pulled out the portable transmitter making sure the shaded portions of his view windows were activated before entering in a code and activating the transmitter. He could not use the holo transmitter in his office for that could be traced so he had been given this unit to use by the hooded man who almost immediately appeared on the monitor in the very clear transmission.

"Yes." The voice spoke.

"It is done." He spoke.

"You are sure?"

The Engineer nodded. "The LSD Coil Inducer will fracture completely when they exit from the first jump they make. She is in a hurry to get back and I have seen the flight pattern she has filed to return to Earth. It will take them within a parsec of the Torana Cluster as they make for Gate Two Four."

"The Torana Cluster." The man spoke. "Excellent... that puts them only two light years from the border to The Wilds. And it is just her and the co-pilot? Her sister did not accompany her?"

The Chief Engineer shook his head. "No." He stated.

"I will inform my contacts. You have done well." He said.

"There is something else."

"What?"

"She mentioned something about a special training course for dragons on Earth. That is why she is in a hurry to get back." The Chief Engineer spoke. "I know from experience and the scheduling boards that the next class of Mjolnir's Hand candidates does not begin until next month. The Prince is doing something else. Without full knowledge of others it seems."

"Interesting." The man said softly. "I will look into this. You have done well... I thank you."

"She took from you what was yours and refused your advances." The Chief Engineer said. "And we have been friends for many years. You know of course the original plan was defeated by the arrival of Androcles and his siblings."

"Yes. The Evolli were fools to think they could complete the task in such a way." The man replied. "They did not listen to my instruction and allowed their greed to override their common sense. I will be more careful the next time in choosing who I put my trust in. Thankfully the Prince left no one alive to question. I may not be able to target the daughter she bore our fool King... but I can certainly make sure she feels the same pain I felt when I kill others she considers children."

"The others we are trying to convert to our cause?"

"They will come around." The man answered. "They have been at odds with her since her return. Even more because of the relationships she shares with the King's other whores. I will convince them. I have begun to instill doubt in her leadership and role in my mate's death among others who do not care for how she conducts herself. They will be making themselves known soon enough."

"I will inform you when she departs my friend." The Chief Engineer told him.

"I will be waiting."

The transmission faded and the Chief Engineer closed the portable unit and once more secured it behind his desk. His task was almost done.

SPARTA OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR OF SPARTA

“Gorgo!” Panos spoke warmly as he embraced her tightly within his arms. “It is so very good to see you.”

Gorgo smiled as she returned the embrace. Panos she remembered fondly from her time as Queen of Sparta and he, along with Dilios and a few others had been ever supportive of her upon her return. It had been decided that her capture and subsequent imprisonment by the High Coven, while a clone lived her life for fifteen years, was not something that needed to be made public knowledge. Only Panos and Dilios knew what had really happened. That was the way her son had wanted it... and that was how it had become.

“You are looking well Panos.” Gorgo spoke with cheerful tone as he led her into his large office.

“Ahh!” Panos exclaimed. “Your son is keeping me on my toes with so many potential enemies lurking about our city!” He told her with a huge grin. “I wouldn’t have it any other way.”

Gorgo laughed. “I should think not.” She stated.

Panos waved her to the chair. “You are aware of whom the Kavalians have sent with this false Trade Delegation I assume? That is why you asked for this meeting?” He asked.

Gorgo shook her head as she sat down and watched him as he moved to pour them both steaming mugs of Aricia’s special coffee. “No. I haven’t spoken with my son since the State Dinner. I was helping Sadi to finish out her academic requirements and then I had two full days of classes that I told Selene I would help Dysea teach at the Eden City Graduate University. I only returned last night. She returns late this afternoon.”

Panos looked at her suddenly apprehensive as he carried the mug over to her. “Then you don’t know?”

“Know what?” Gorgo asked.

“Perhaps I should let the King...” Panos spoke as he moved to his chair.

“Panos... we have been friends for far too long.” Gorgo spoke. “Stop beating around the topic old friend.”

Panos nodded. “Yes... and I know Martin keeps nothing from you.” He said. “He only just found out himself yesterday.”

“Found out what?” Gorgo asked.

“Pleistarchus has sent his Kavalian mate and oldest son on this delegation.” Panos blurted out.

Gorgo stopped in the motion of lifting the mug to her lips for only a brief moment before continuing and taking a fulfilling sip of the strong but deeply rich and delicious coffee. “My son and I both knew that there would come a day when something like this occurred. We have talked about it at length through the years.” Gorgo met his eyes. “It is not something that needs to be whispered about when we are present. My son... Martin’s brother... he died that day on the road from Athens. That is how we have chosen to move forward with our lives. Pleistarchus has no claim to his bloodline anymore. That ceased the day he turned betrayer to his people. You know that as well as I. And Martin would never allow him such a claim. When I see how Martin has blended so seamlessly the honor and courage and laconic nature of we who grew up as Spartans with the nature of all those who call the Union home? There are times when I believe he actually lived in our Sparta of old.” Gorgo said. “It comes to him so naturally. The love of this city. Our people. His mates.”

Panos nodded. “As it did his father.” He said.

Gorgo shook her head. “He is so much more Panos. I have read much of Resumar and his deeds. He has taken the best of both his father and grandfather and made it his own. And now Androcles is doing it.”

Panos sat back and smiled. “My son’s namesake has made my mate and I very proud. My other children think of Andro as a younger brother. Especially Dymas.”

“I haven’t seen Dymas in many weeks.” Gorgo spoke. “Where is he?”

“His duties as Senior Polemarch have kept him very busy.” Panos replied with a smile. “He will be returning to Sparta in two weeks. He is finishing a sweep of the outer garrisons with General Vistr.”

“It will be good to see him again.” Gorgo said with a smile. “And no... this Pusintin as he calls himself now... he is nothing to me. Nor are those he calls mate or child.”

Panos looked at her. “So why have you asked for this meeting?” He asked as he leaned forward once more. “If it is not about the Kavalians or Martin... what is it about?”

“You are more intimately familiar with the ancient Spartan law and customs put into place after I left.” Gorgo spoke.

Panos laughed. “Not according to my mate! She is the expert! According to her anyway.” He laughed.

Gorgo smiled. “Well... far more than I am. I was approached recently by a young couple very much in love Panos. It was easy to see in the way they looked at one another and spoke to each other. The way they touched each other. They came to me seeking help.”

“Help about what?” Panos asked confused.

“This is a matter of law I believe.” Gorgo spoke. “They are related Panos... half brother and sister. They want to reveal their love for each other in the proper Spartan way... but they do not know if this will be accepted. I was hoping you could tell me.”

Panos sat back. “This was commonplace in ancient Sparta as you yourself know. King Leonidas was your half uncle.” He said. “Dilios’s oldest son is mated to his first cousin and has been for four hundred years now. They have four strong and very healthy children and are pillars of their neighborhood community. I believe Reva is even pregnant with their fifth as we speak. I would have to conduct a review our history scrolls but there is no law against it to my knowledge. It would depend on the parents really.” Panos sat forward once more and met her eyes evenly. “You are speaking of Denali and Lisisa aren’t you?”

Gorgo’s eyes flew open wide as she nearly spilled her coffee. She stammered for a moment so as not to spit out what was in her mouth but then she looked at him. “You know?” She gasped. “How?”

Panos smiled. “I told you my son’s namesake has made me very proud.” He stated. “Andro came to me two years ago in private asking these very same questions. There is nothing he would not do to protect his brothers and sisters Gorgo. Nothing. You of all people should know this.”

“Androcles knows?” Gorgo gasped once more.

“I would hazard a guess and say there are many things that Andro knows that he keeps to himself. Some that not even his father is aware of. Including this secret. The only one who will discover them now is Sadi, for she is his Anome.” Panos spoke with a smile. “He came to me two years ago as I said, to insure that there were no written laws against this. He has kept their secret locked within that vault he calls a head. He has even gone so far as to make it easier for them to be together and nurture what they have found. At least until they are ready to reveal it to everyone.”

“They do not think anyone knows.” Gorgo spoke quickly her mind racing. “He has never given any indication he knows.”

Panos shook his head. “And he won’t. That is not his way. He protects their secret viciously. It is also one of the reasons he has kept them on the SCIMITAR with him. It gives them time to explore what they have and discover each other in a place they both feel very comfortable and safe from discovery.”

Gorgo looked at him. “Then there is no written laws forbidding this that you know of?” She asked.

Panos shook his head once more. “Not in Spartan law. I have not explored it extensively within the framework of Union law... but nothing I have found indicates it is considered taboo enough to outlaw it. I’m guessing because it is not an everyday occurrence. It is part of our Spartan history and culture Gorgo. Perhaps the Feravomir may know of something that I have not discovered... something from the ancient ways of our people... but I do not.”

“You sound like you approve Panos.” Gorgo asked.

Panos shrugged. “You would not be here if you did not as well. Denali Leonidas is a powerful Alpha cut from the same mold as his father and older brothers. Lisisa... while she may be half vampire... she adheres to Spartan custom and law like it is second nature to her. She is also a strong Alpha female... and her wolf genes are far more active than her vampire ones. We have known that for sometime. I have seen them at gatherings since Andro came to me... and while they never make it obvious... because I knew I could tell. I have never seen them show interest in any other male or female. Not even a passing one. Not an awkward glance or even a sniff. That is why I know they are fully committed to one another in every way.”

“How... how do you think Martin will react to this Panos?” Gorgo asked.

“That I do not know.” He replied honestly. “And I would not want to guess either. I don’t believe Martin will be the one we need to convince.”

Gorgo looked at him. “What do you mean?”

“Aricia will be the harder of the two of them to accept this.” He said. “At least that is what I believe... but I could be wrong. She has changed much since I knew her as a young female wolf. Ultimately we won’t know until they choose to reveal themselves. When they do... let them know I will stand with them as their brother has stood with them and protected them these last two years. I suggest speaking with the Feravomir however. She would know about the ancient laws among our people... though I find it hard to believe she has not already sensed what they share.”

Gorgo nodded slowly. “Yes... if anyone would discover that without assistance it would be Dustha.”

“Talk with her. If she says there is nothing... let Denali and Lisisa know. Then they can make the decision when to tell those they love.” Panos spoke.

“I believe I will do just that.” She spoke.

“How many Aikiro?” Martin asked calmly as he sat across from her and Tesand at the small table in Gallais’s Retreat. A three member Durcunusaan Detachment was spread out within the establishment as her security. Martin had chosen them personally, and spent an hour briefing them on why they needed to protect the leader of their ancient enemy. Because he had taken the time to do that, the two men and one woman then did not look on their duty as a form of punishment any longer.

“We are spending so much time together Martin Leonidas.” Aikiro spoke with a smile from across the table. “It could almost be said you enjoy my company. And you have brought your Hadarian mate as well. I’m touched.”

Martin looked at Anja who sat next to him and then back to Aikiro. “Don’t flatter yourself Aikiro.” He replied quickly. “Now answer my question? How many of my men did you clone?”

Aikiro lowered the glass of fruit juice she was drinking and looked at Tesand before turning back to him. “One hundred of each DNA source code in the databanks on EDEN.” She stated.

“And Yuri was the one who stole them?” Martin asked.

Aikiro nodded. “Yes. If it is any consolation... we did not begin using them until after our war with the Kavalians began.” She stated plainly.

“That isn’t any consolation.” Martin growled.

“We needed established leaders to command our cloned troops. Leaders with excellent tactical skills and the ability to adapt... which all of the genomes had, even before you turned them Martin. We used an accelerated growth hormone and their base template so that we could begin using them within the fourth year. They truly made a difference for us in those last battles.”

“Wait!” Anja declared. “You said she took a sample of each DNA source code from EDEN.”

Aikiro nodded. “She beamed it off the station via a small transmitter to one of our bases on the ground. It was then forwarded in a coded transmission to a science ship that was passing through the system. It was one of her last tasks when she began to suspect who you really were. She didn’t know for sure up until she discovered she was pregnant with your child.” Aikiro did not take note of the look that past between Martin and Anja. “Once the comet came and altered everything, that same science ship returned to Earth to assist her and the transmission was forgotten until our war with the Kavalians began.” Aikiro saw the look on Anja’s face and she smiled. “Oh... I see now what you are concerned about.” She stated with a small laugh. “Do not worry Queen of the Hadarians... we did not clone your precious Martin Leonidas. That is quite impossible to do.”

“So you say.” Anja popped right back. “You’ve done nothing but lie to us since you came here. Why should we believe you now?”

“I have lied about nothing!” Aikiro hissed right back. “And you should know better than most that his blood and the blood of Daniel Simpson is far too pure to clone.” Aikiro spoke turning to look at Martin. “I will not lie to you... for there is no point in that. There is nothing you can do about it anyway... besides the templates for the genomes were destroyed in an explosion six years after they were fielded. A fool researcher mixed the wrong chemicals in his lab and took out most of the building and all of the data cores. I will admit we have tried on numerous occasions to clone pureblood Lycavorians. Your mother was the closest Veldruk came to success... and her blood while pure... is far less so than your own.”

Anja rested her hand on Martin’s arm before he could speak and she leaned forward in the chair. “You said Martin and Danny’s blood is too pure to clone. Julie was also a pureblood.” She said softly.

Aikiro smiled once more. "Ah well... only to a point." She stated.

"What do you mean?" Martin growled in a low voice.

"Her mother was a pureblood yes. Her father was an anomaly shall we say. His blood was pure yes... but very diluted for some unknown reason. It gave us an opportunity to reconfigure the DNA code." Aikiro spoke. "It was a simple matter to adjust the corresponding source code to delete the Lycavorian genes completely and establish what we wanted instead."

Martin's eyes grew wider. "Wait, are you telling me there are clones of Julie out there!" He gasped.

"She was one of our greatest cloning successes." Aikiro said proudly. "Even more so than your mother of course."

Martin glared at her. "You are one cold hearted bitch." He hissed at her.

Tesand leaned forward in his chair. "You..."

Martin turned his eyes on him. "If you wish to continue to be able to talk and breathe I wouldn't say what I know you are going to say Admiral Tesand." Martin spat. "If you do... Aikiro will need to find another man to play with in her bed."

Aikiro also reached across and rested her hand on Tesand's arm. Something that Martin did not take notice of... but something Anja did. "I could say the very same about you Martin Leonidas... about being cold hearted. You are not as sinless as you would like others to believe." Aikiro spoke.

Martin's eyes narrowed. "What are you talking about?" He asked.

"Oh... I believe you know." Aikiro stated calmly. "Did you think my daughter would not eventually tell me?"

"I don't particularly care what Yuri has told you." Martin snapped angrily. "As far as I'm concerned she's three cans shy of a six pack anyway and therefore useless. Now... how many Julie clones still exist?" Martin demanded.

"Why should I tell you that?" Aikiro asked.

"Because you vampire bitch... she was my friend!" Martin viciously replied. "She was the only daughter of her parents and I don't want them to see twenty or thirty or a hundred of your fucking creations of her walking around Sparta!"

"Yes... I could see where that might be a problem." Aikiro stated with a smirk. She looked at Anja. "She was also your lover if the reports I received from Yuri in her time here on Earth are accurate."

"That is really none of your business." Anja spoke barely keeping her own anger in check.

Aikiro kept her smile in place. "Do not fear Martin Leonidas, only one of her clones still remains. She is a senior officer on Robert's ship, one of our finest commando leaders if I do say so myself. Her name now is Juliana One." Aikiro stated. "And there is not a DNA strand of Lycavorian foulness in her entire body. We removed it. She is now the most perfectly created vampire clone anywhere in the High Coven. Our scientists are quite proud of her. She holds the rank of Major... and we are using her template to create more just like her. Though you can rest assured they will not look like her."

"So you made her clone into a vampire?" Anja spat now. "What gives you the right to play god? What you have done to her is no better than what your daughter did to the Drow. It is demented and cruel!"

"She is a clone." Aikiro stated without feeling. "Engineered to follow orders. Nothing more... nothing less. And she has done just that for nearly thirteen years."

"I don't want her coming anywhere near Sparta!" Martin growled. "For any reason! Is that clear?"

Aikiro nodded. "If that is your wish." She stated.

"What about the others?" Martin asked now.

"Most of them were killed through the years leading their troops." Aikiro answered easily and with a trace of satisfaction in her voice. "That is what we bred them for after all. When the rest of them became unstable we eliminated them."

"Unstable how?" Martin asked.

"They began to exhibit the same signs of why the other genomes on Earth went insane." Aikiro replied. "As Dymas was never able to determine why this happened, neither were we. When it was determined they would not last we eliminated them. Just as the humans decided to do. Only your Julie survived. Mainly because she was the only one we made into a vampire."

"But we have..." Martin began.

“I’ve heard enough!” Anja snapped getting to her feet and squeezing Martin’s arm. He looked at her as she glared at Aikiro. “I don’t want to hear anymore! You are a twisted bitch you know that?”

Aikiro smiled up at her. “So I have been told.”

Anja pulled Martin away from the table, a puzzled sort of look on his face until he saw her eyes. Anja lifted her hand slightly and in an almost causal afterthought of motion she swept her hand across her cheek, extending two fingers. Martin recognized the old SEAL sign for we need to talk and he blinked three times acknowledging the message.

“Enjoy your meal Aikiro.” Martin snapped. “I truly hope you choke on the potatoes.” He took Anja’s arm and they began to walk out of the Retreat. Once out of ear shot and after they had exited the building onto the street Martin pulled her close to him.

“Speak Red.” He spoke softly next to her ear as if hugging her as they walked.

“She doesn’t know Marty.” Anja said. “She doesn’t know one of the commandos who attacked the Kavalians is one of the genome clones they created. And she certainly doesn’t know he has been changed into a vampire.”

“So! What does that have to do with anything?” Martin almost snapped. “They cloned Julie! They made her a vampire! Man... Danny is gonna have a fucking fit!”

Anja stopped walking and pulled him close to her. “It is not Julie Martin... you and Danny must remember that. Don’t you see lover? She said only the clone of Julie was made into a vampire. That means someone saw what was happening in their genome clones and changed them. She says they are all dead and that only Julie remains. She obviously doesn’t know that at least one is... was part of the insurgency fighting her sadistic rule.”

Martin’s eyes grew a little wider as what Anja was saying hit him. “And if there is one...”

Anja nodded. “There could be more.” She stated. “Maybe they didn’t just start to snap as before lover. The Coven cloning process is light years ahead of anything I have ever seen. It is vile to us... to those within the Union... but she is right when she says it is almost perfect. When Veldruk made the clone of your mother they obviously didn’t have the same procedures in place as they do now. I’m guessing that Aikiro didn’t release all the information she was able to obtain from the remnants of the Mindvoice ship that crashed in Coven space. Only after Veldruk was taken out and the Kavalians attacked did she release the information that allowed them to refine their process in such a way. And only because they needed troops.”

“And what if my men...” Martin spoke softly.

Anja nodded. “Maybe they started to see the Coven for what it really was. The Coven would not have been able to give them memories, no matter how powerful Aikiro is... and if they took the source code as she says, that was before you took command of Team Twelve. But the genomes were all engineered to be superior military tacticians, because that is how Walter made them. That was encoded into their DNA. They would still be advanced soldiers; they would still be the exact same soldiers that you took command of when you first got Team Twelve lover. And if they used the base template as she says then all of them would be able to determine right from wrong.”

“How exactly would Yuri have missed that Red? Let alone Aikiro?” Martin said. “You don’t just suddenly become a vampire. Someone must have turned them. Someone within the insurgency, or Aikiro would have had all of them killed. So it had to have happened after she thought they were all dead.”

Anja nodded. “Or someone made her think they were all dead. She said the templates we destroyed in an explosion.”

“That’s a reach even for me to make Anja.” Martin spoke.

Anja nodded. “Yes... but that is what we need Armetus and Bella to find out. How large is this insurgency group. We already know what they are capable of. And you and I both know lover... more so than anyone else... insurgent groups do not go into a mission knowing they will die. It’s not how they think or operate. At least none that I have ever worked with.”

Martin nodded. “Me either.”

“They want to fight until the end and succeed to see the fruits of their labor come about. We need to discover how large this group is and what resources they do have. That is what we need to find out.” Anja said taking his large hand in hers and beginning to walk towards where Torma and Miath were settled on the cobblestone path.

HOME OF VONIS AND VA'NIMIA WESTERN QUARTER OF OLD SPARTA

"...so you don't trust her?" Va'nimia asked as she settled into the chair next to Vonis after setting the two mugs of coffee in front of Aricia and Isabella.

Isabella and Aricia both laughed softly at that. "Not in the least." Bella answered.

"We know she is here for some other reason than for us to train their dragons." Aricia spoke. "We don't know what that is just yet... but that is why we are hoping you can help us." She settled her azure eyes on Vonis who had so far sat quietly.

"Anja and Martin just advised us that there may be much more to this insurgent group that conducted the attack on MJOLNIR'S HAND than we first thought. They just left a meeting with Aikiro." Isabella said.

Vonis chuckled then. "Sister... that ability you have there... you and the others... it's down right frightening at times."

Isabella looked at him with a small smile. "You have it as well Vonis." She spoke.

Vonis shook his head. "Oh no... not like Martin, you and the others." He said. "And to be honest... I don't want it either." He leaned forward. "Tell me this... is there any danger to Va'nimia or our children from my mother?"

"Has she contacted you for a meeting?" Aricia asked quickly.

Vonis nodded. "Yes. I haven't responded to her yet... but I am not fool enough to think she does not still wish to do me harm. That I can handle... but I will not put Va'nimia or our children at risk. I have taught her how to defend herself quite well through the years and our older children can defend themselves, but I will not risk harm to them."

"Vonis... you know we would never do that." Isabella spoke.

"I was not referring to you sister." Vonis spoke warmly. "My mother is devious and exceptionally smart. It would be just like her to draw me into some meeting with her under the pretense of reconciliation while she targets my family. I do not care for myself... only them."

"Well I care for you fool!" Va'nimia barked shoving him in the shoulder. "Our children care!"

Isabella nodded with a smile at Va'nimia's actions. "Yes we do. We have grown close over these last twenty plus years have we not brother?"

Vonis met her eyes. "Closer than I would have ever thought." He replied immediately. "And that makes me happier than I can ever describe to you."

"Do you trust me?" Isabella asked.

"That is not something that you will ever have a need to question sister." Vonis answered instantly.

"This is not something Martin will order you to do because of who Aikiro is. He wants you to help us discover everything we can about this insurgent group." Isabella spoke. "It would entail you having to reopen the door into your past before we came together on Elear. Martin will not..."

"Stop." Vonis spoke. "I am a member of the Union military. A Colonel of Intelligence. The moment that I accepted I was different than my father and sister and I allowed my love for Va'nimia to come out, my life truly began. I will allow no harm to come to this Union if it is within my power to stop Bella... you know that. Without you... without Va'nimia and our children, I would be nothing. Of course I will help in any way I can."

"Aikiro has a Durcumusaan detachment wherever she goes now." Aricia spoke. "It is for her protection and ours. We do not need her killed by insurgents or Kavalians while here on Earth. Martin has told you in the past Vonis... you are part of our family. You, Va'nimia and your children. We have... we have established a place of sanctuary for our own children if something were to go terribly wrong. You are aware of this sanctuary?"

Vonis nodded. "Yes."

"Then I want you to make arrangements for your younger children to be taken there should anything happen." Aricia spoke plainly. "Martin does not trust the High Coven or their intentions, but like our son he is also a Talon Guardian and to dismiss the lives of forty-two dragons is not something he can do."

Vonis nodded. “Understandably so.” He spoke. “And in his position I would do the same thing.” He looked at Va’nimia. “Ussta ‘ranndi?” (My wife)

“What? You expect me to just dismiss this?” Va’nimia asked. “You are my husband Vonis. My life. I am not defenseless anymore husband. You have seen to that. We must do this... for the good of us all.”

Vonis smiled at her and turned back to Isabella and Aricia. “We should meet with Armetus.” He said. “I will need access to substantial funds and secure communications that are not monitored by our forces. I don’t know if any of my contacts will still be active... but that is the first step in finding out about these insurgents. They are obviously based at least in part in The Wilds... and that is where we must begin.”

Isabella smiled. “You will have what you need.” She said. “Armetus is already putting it together.”

Vonis smiled. “You knew I would help you didn’t you?”

Isabella shrugged. “You are my brother... and both of us have found something here that we would die to protect and keep from harm. I trusted my instincts in that regard.”

Vonis chuckled. “We will need to work outside normal channels. Martin will not be opposed to this will he?”

Aricia and Isabella laughed as they got to their feet. “Come with me brother... I think it’s time we showed you just how opposed to these things Martin really is.” Isabella spoke.

THE WILDS

MIRUB 5

DUUL’S SOM’S LAR BASE

“...gave no such order!” The cloaked figure hissed angrily from within the transmission. His voice was electronically altered to avoid discovery if the transmission was intercepted, but the transmitters and receivers they were using had been stolen from a facility using salvaged parts of the secret Mindvoice ship to build new equipment for the High Coven. Parts of that new equipment were these new communications devices which were untraceable and impossible to decipher. At least so far.

The four men and two women stood around the small table of their command center buried deeply in the mountain. The Duul’s som’s Lar or Freedom’s Call Insurgent group was the largest by far of all the groups that had sprouted up in the last two decades while fighting the Kavalians. They were also the most well funded and well equipped of all the insurgent groups for many different reasons. Almost all of their members were former High Coven troops and clones that had decided how they were fighting the war now would ultimately bring about the destruction of the High Coven. They were of the mind that they could not adhere to the same barbaric tactics and measures the High Coven had in the past, and that they had to change how they dealt with others and actively seek help outside the High Coven ranks. It was the reason their leader had decided to secretly extend the hand of friendship to several governments out of High Coven territory, and why they now received aide and supplies from half a dozen sources that insured they were able to do the things they were able to do.

They were a rag tagged ensemble of fighters and former politicians before their current leader had gathered them all together into a cohesive force. They had been successful for the last ten years now, conducting raids of their own against the Kavalians as well as the High Coven fools in power. That their leader was in such a position as they were and able to supply them with information and other resources as well as protect their identities was a major coup for them. They were patient... had always been patient... for they knew ultimately they would either succeed in their goals or die in the process of trying.

“It was decided by the sector commanders General.” The senior man spoke quickly. “They deemed it too good an opportunity to pass up. You yourself gave them this authority.”

“And they succeeded in doing nothing but getting twelve of our finest trained operatives killed!” The figure snarled. “I gave them the authority to conduct operations that were deemed efficient and low risk. They took over a Union transport Iasen! Not a Coven transport... a Union transport! Then they killed and raped the Kavalian females on that transport!” He growled. “I care not that they beat the male to death... but they could not even do that correctly for he still lives. And when have I ever authorized the killing of innocents! These females may have been Kavalians... but they were not soldiers! We are not animals... and I expect you to pass along to our forces that if an incident like this ever happens again... I will personally slit their throats like the dogs they are!”

“I will do as you say General.” Iasen replied quickly.

“We have come too far my friends to begin acting like the Empress and her forces.” He spoke. “Our actions in hijacking the Union transport and attacking the Kavalians on the flagship of King Leonidas have succeeded in doing only one thing. Now it will make him turn loose his Krypteria Intelligence forces in an attempt to find us.”

“Are you sure General?” The female officer asked with wide eyes.

The cloaked figure nodded. “He did not openly say this but all of you are aware of how he will react. We talked of this when we decided to make a safe house within Lycavorian Union territory. The leader of this Krypteria is the foremost covert operative in their history. He has people everywhere... they watch almost everything. It is why Leonidas has not entered the war before now. He has been able to keep track of what was happening and make decisions based on that. Inform the safehouse on Beklan that they are to be ready to move at a moment’s notice. If they detect even the slightest sign of surveillance they are to desert the safehouse with all speed. We can not allow them to be captured by the Krypteria. Not until we are ready to present ourselves to Leonidas and openly request his aide.”

“That is still our goal isn’t it General?” One of the men asked.

The figure nodded. “Yes. I have not altered my goal in regards to that. Especially not after what I have seen these last days. The purpose for the Empress going to Earth is not simply to have Leonidas train their dragons. She is trying to drag the Union into the war but there is something driving that... another purpose of which I am still trying to discover.”

“Are you secure General?” Iasen asked quickly.

The cloaked figure nodded quickly. “My location now is quite secure.” He answered. “We do not know if the Union can detect these transmissions but with the advancements I have seen it is possible so our contacts must be brief.”

“Orders sir?”

“Continue with our operations against the High Coven and the one to find the Immortal Cha’talla and his people.” The figure spoke. “Suspend all operations against the Kavalians until further notice. If anyone attacks the Kavalians again within Union space I want to be sure I can tell King Leonidas it was not our doing. We must not draw attention to ourselves my friends. We have come too far in this to begin to do stupid things and fail as I said earlier.”

“I will issue the orders immediately General.” Iasen spoke.

“Iasen... begin using our contacts to filter the word out to our people throughout the High Coven. Standard practices and security. Let’s not alter how we have done things until now... it may be noticed.” The figure spoke. “We will succeed my friends... but we must maintain the patience we have had these last years or all will be for naught. Are we agreed?” The men and women around the table nodded their heads. “I will contact you in one week’s time at this same hour. Move silently my friends.”

“And you General.” Iasen spoke.

SPARTA

DIPLOMATIC ENVOY APARTMENTS

“...are fine father.” Jalersi stated once more.

“Forgive me daughter... I did not think that the Coven animals would attempt such a thing within Union space.” Keleru stated the anger and worry plainly evident on his face and in his voice.

Jalersi shook her head. “Neither did Pusintin father. However Athani and I are unhurt... and Pian is recovering well. Why did you send him father?”

“I knew Qurot would be more trouble than I intended once we talked last.” Keleru replied. “I felt Pian would be able to defer to you more easily and you could send Qurot back.”

“I can handle Qurot father. Pian coming here was not needed.” Jalersi spoke. “This Queen For’mya has informed me that if you wish to send a six member security detail here to Earth that would be acceptable to King Leonidas. No more than six... and make sure they understand it is my orders they will follow.”

Keleru nodded. “I will have them leaving from Qurot’s ship within the hour.” He stated. “The Union has had a transport standing by nearby in case passengers needed to be ferried. You can not send him back now daughter... you know this.”

Jalersi nodded. “It would be a mark against his honor... yes I know.” She stated with no small amount of disgust in her voice. “I can handle Qurot as I said... as long as I know I have your backing.”

“That is without question Jalersi... you know that.” Keleru answered. “Your husband is coming from his office... he will be here in a few moments.”

Jalersi shook her head. “We are meeting for preliminary talks soon. Tell him I will contact him this evening at our home. Give him my love and devotion father.”

Keleru nodded. “I will. Now tell me of the attackers.”

“They were vampires... but the Lycavorians do not believe they are members of the High Coven.” Jalersi spoke. “I am inclined to believe them as well.”

“What do you mean?”

“I have been targeted before father. You and my mate as well.” Jalersi spoke. “Those attacks were conducted by soldiers. Cloned vampire troops as part of a mission. When they saw they could not complete their mission they withdrew. The ones who attacked us on Leonidas’s ship knew the moment they exited the transport they were going to die. Yet still they came after us. After the elven Queen ordered us removed from the landing bay, they went after Athani even protected as she was by the Prince’s dragon.”

Keleru’s eyes went wide. “What?”

Jalersi nodded. “Prince Resumar’s dragon protected her during the attack.” She spoke. “When we allowed back into the landing bay after the attack, she was sitting on this dragon’s back with no fear in her whatsoever. I was... I was flabbergasted to say the least.”

“She... she showed no sign of being afraid of this beast?” Keleru asked.

Jalersi shook her head. “None father.”

“How can that be?” He spoke leaning forward. “Even after all the training we have been through to silence this fear of those beasts in our people we have not been successful.”

“Well... apparently it was successful for Athani.” Jalersi spoke.

“Have you questioned her about it?” Keleru asked.

Jalersi shook her head slowly. “She is... she is not speaking to me father. Qurot let it slip, on purpose no doubt, that she was to be his after this mission. This happened as we were enroute to meet the Lycavorian Envoy ship. When she confronted me about it after he had left I told her the truth. She was... she was incensed to say the least. She has not spoken ten words to me since if it was not necessary.”

“Damn Qurot!” Keleru barked as he came to his feet. “That fool is becoming more of a problem than an asset!”

“On that much we agree.” Jalersi spoke. “Athani knows our ways father. She may be angry now... but she will come to accept them as all of us have. She is proud and independent just as you have let us become... but she is also Kavalian. In the end she will do what she must.”

“This transmission is secure yes?” Keleru spoke. “The Lycavorians aren’t listening?”

Jalersi shook her head. “I had Karun check the signal with our instruments.” She replied. “We are staying at a Diplomatic Envoy Apartment Complex. There are several other parties here, and they know they can not tap our communications without causing a major incident.”

“The Coven?” Keleru asked.

“They occupy a similar facility on the other side of Sparta.” Jalersi answered. “I asked Prime Minister Deia why they are proceeding with this Cease Fire signing after the events on the King’s ship and she gave a standard politician answer. They have been open about their presence and in many ways that could mean one of two things.”

“Yes... I am aware of that political move. I’m listening daughter... what are you feelings telling you?” Keleru asked.

Jalersi shook her head. "That is hard to say father. At least right now. We are meeting with the Prime Minister again, and then having dinner with Queen For'mya. I will be able to give you more of a sense after those two meetings."

"What do your instincts tell you daughter?" Keleru asked.

"My instincts tell me the Lycavorians know why we are here." Jalersi spoke. "They are not fooled by our trade delegation in the least. However... from what I have heard and seen so far, I believe the High Coven is here to insure Leonidas does not enter into this war on our side. Just as we do not want him to enter the war on the side of the Coven. Father I suggest we begin a new file on the Lycavorians and use what we discover now as a basis. It seems that much of what we had originally thought is not turning out to be true."

Keleru nodded. "I will order this done immediately." He answered. "Will they allow an embassy Jalersi?" Keleru asked quickly.

Jalersi nodded. "Surprisingly I believe they will. If nothing else... it provides them a window into the KFI that they do not have right now."

"Indeed." Keleru said. "Something I am still hesitant to give them." He spoke. "Pusintin still works to discover where they have taken their dragons. He believes they have moved them to one of three planets near Usu Ozeib 7. If it is possible while you are there daughter, discover what you are able about these beasts. Anything at all will be more than we have right now."

Jalersi nodded. "I will do my best father."

"Talk to your sister Jalersi." Keleru spoke. "Find out why she does not fear these beasts. There must be a reason for it. And if there is... we can pull her off the planet and bring her home to find out what that is."

"The bodies of the females that were killed father?" Jalersi asked. "I am certain the Queen or Prime Minister will question me about it."

Keleru nodded. "They were marked from the moment they left with Pian Jalersi... you know this. They were part of the group unable to bear children. Their Prides will not want their remains back. Have the Union do with them what they will."

Jalersi stared at the image of her father for a long moment before nodding. "As you wish." She spoke finally. She heard the soft beep indicating someone at the door of her apartment. "They are here to escort us to the meeting father. I will contact you later this evening when I have spoken with Pusintin as well."

"You are within the Lion's Den now Jalersi." Keleru spoke softly. "Be alert to everything around you daughter."

Jalersi nodded. "I will be father."

"I will speak with you later." Keleru spoke.

Jalersi watched him reach down and touch the controls on his end and his image faded from the holo disc in the floor. She sat back on the couch for a moment, her mind racing until the insistent buzzing of the door chime made her rise to her feet. She crossed the semi large room to the door and touched the panel. The door slid open to reveal the face of the half elf Ardis.

"The Prime Minister asked that I escort you to the Senate Arboretum Lady Jalersi." Ardis spoke with a small smile. "The initial talks will be held there."

Jalersi nodded. "Just one moment." She said.

Ardis bowed her head slightly. "Of course." Jalersi turned to walk back to the couch to gather her data pads as Ardis stepped into the apartment. "Do you find your quarters to your liking ma'am?" She asked.

Jalersi turned as she was putting the pads into a metal case. "They are very nice." She answered. "So you are the Prime Minister's bodyguard Ardis?"

"That is part of my duty yes." She answered with a smile.

"Do all negotiations take place here in Sparta?" Jalersi asked.

"When the Royal family begins their six month exodus here to Earth, yes." She answered gently. "When they are not here, all talks take place in Eden City under Prime Minister of Earth Selene or my Drow mother."

Jalersi looked at her quickly. "They will..."

Ardis shook her head. "No Lady Jalersi... neither of them will be present. Considering you are at war with the High Coven, having vampires take part in Trade talks with the KFI representatives would be very disrespectful, regardless whether we call them friend and family."

"You seem to be very observant Ardis." Jalersi spoke.

Ardis's violet and sapphire eyes glittered in reply. "I noticed the same of your son Lady Jalersi." She spoke softly. "He does not speak much... but his eyes take in everything around him."

Jalersi smiled at her. "You are very observant." She stated. Jalersi nodded her head then. "Karun speaks when he feels it is necessary for his voice to be heard." She answered. "Will you be guarding us the entire time we are here?"

Ardis shook her head quickly. "Oh no." She replied. "My duties with the Prime Minister take up the majority of my time. I am only escorting you today until you have a feel for the city and routes to the different locations. Everything is very much within walking distance and there are many vendor stands between here and the Arboretum that sell food and drink."

Jalersi looked at her. "You... you will not surround us with security?" She asked clearly surprised.

"I was under the impression you did not want that Lady Jalersi." Ardis spoke. "At least until your own security forces arrived. Queen For'mya and the Prime Minister have pulled all security from your delegation. They agreed it would warrant too much attention and perhaps give you the impression we were attempting to limit your movements. Which we are not. You will find the people of Sparta to be very welcoming to those who are welcoming themselves, just as you will find in any other city across Earth. I'm sure they will cover it with you in more detail but this is the old part of the city and it holds much history for those who are interested. There really is no need to move to other quadrants of the city... but if it is a tour of something that you wish... we can certainly accommodate your request."

Jalersi met her eyes briefly and then nodded. "Very well... I believe I am ready."

Ardis nodded and motioned Jalersi out of the door into the hallway. "It is only a short walk and I can show you some points of interest to those in your delegation while we travel over to the Arboretum."

HADARIA CAPITAL CITY OF UNOPA PALACE OF THE ROYAL FAMILY

Sivana stood on the balcony overlooking the eastern portion of Unopa watching as the sun began to rise. She inhaled deeply, allowing her wolf senses to absorb all that they could of the scents and sounds of the surrounding area. Anja had been gone a little more than a week now and already she missed her twin sister.

Sivana had changed quite a bit in the last twenty-five years... all of it for the better as far as she was concerned.

She was slightly taller than Anja's five foot three frame, but they had essentially the same build in the lean suppleness of their bodies and the size of their breasts. She and Anja joked often about Martin and Belen and how much attention they paid to their large breasts. They loved needling their mates and husbands about that whenever they were together, but they secretly knew they adored the attention. It was twenty-five years ago when her sister discovered her playing the role of pirate and smuggler. Sivana's life up until then had been nothing short of misery and pain and she had accepted that it would be like that for the rest of her days. She firmly believed that she would be killed by some other mercenary and never be able to live out a full life. When Anja and Belen had entered her fractured soul all those years ago, they had not only opened a door for her into a new world, they had smashed it right off the hinges.

Sivana discovered she was not only just a Hadarian... but a Princess of the Royal House of Hadaria. Anja was Queen only because she had been born twenty-seven minutes sooner than her, but Anja had made it known enough times through the years that simply because she was Queen in no way took away from the authority and power Sivana wielded. Sivana had quickly discovered she and her sister were so much alike it was frightening. They both hated the pompous and sometimes arrogant attitude of the Elder Healers with the exception of Eurin. Over the years the twin sisters had exploded on several occasions, and whether it was Anja or Sivana, that explosion did not end well for whoever was on the receiving end. Sivana was blunt and straightforward just like her sister, and that is how she wanted to be addressed. She abhorred any type of royal pampering, some would say even more than Anja did. While they were twins, and therefore almost identical in how they thought, they were still very different and that is why they loved each other so.

Sivana was more patient; Anja more restless. Anja was the more experienced Healer, while Sivana had turned out to be the more reflective one. Once she had Ascended, Sivana became nearly as powerful as Anja in being able to draw from life all around her to power her healing abilities. Both of them could go for far longer than even the next most powerful Healer between Ascensions and still be able to use their power. While Anja had kept her long Persian red hair, Sivana had darkened her hair to almost black in color, though both of them still had incredible jade green colored eyes. It was something Sivana did not discover until she had Ascended, but she and Anja shared the same fascinating eye color, which set them apart from all of their most experienced Healers. She had fought in the Evolli War alongside her sister without question, another fact that had the Elder Healers screaming in protest. What made them inseparable to all who knew them well was their unwavering love and devotion to their mates and the fact that they were both part wolf now.

In Belen Sivana had found something she had never once imagined she would have. A rock of support and unquestioning love from a man. Belen worshiped the ground she walked upon and Sivana felt the very same thing for her handsome Spartan mate. She and Anja had each given their mates three beautiful children. Two daughters and a son. And if she and Anja had anything to say about it, more would follow in the years to come since they would live far longer than the normal Hadarian. Her duties as Queen of the Union required Anja to be away from Hadaria far more than the Elder Healers liked and Sivana had agreed to remain on Hadaria for three additional months of every year to offset this issue. Sivana knew they hated that the only remaining members of their Royal family much preferred to stay in Sparta on Earth. Sivana embraced completely the culture and lifestyle of Sparta and quickly found she was a hit among Belen's mother and even his stern father Atropos. The day Belen had bitten her and made Sivana his was a day she blessed every morning she woke.

Sivana's eyes cut downward and she sighed heavily as she saw the figure of her Aunt Umbra leaving the Lifter and heading for the front of the palace with another older female. She completely ignored the Durcunusaan soldiers that stood by the front entrance into the palace as she always did. These last years had seen her Aunt become increasingly hostile towards the Spartans who guarded Sivana and Anja even when they were here on Hadaria. Like her sister, Sivana did not care for her Aunt's superior attitude or the pompous nature about her. Their grandfather had told them once it had always been points of contention between their father and his sister that Umbra let her status as royalty go to her head. Apparently their father's distaste for that had carried over to his twin daughters as well. Sivana shook her head as she turned to go back into their bed chambers, while she sipped the steaming mug of Hadarian tea. She drew the thin robe tighter around her lithe body, knowing that it would incense her Aunt knowing Sivana never wore undergarments under the robe. Like her sister once more, Sivana detested the ornate robes and clothing of traditional Hadarian females. She and Anja were both wolf now and they needed the freedom less formal clothing brought, as well as the fact that neither of them were in the least bit shy about their bodies. Perhaps it came from being part Lycavorian, but Sivana adored the sensations of feeling her mate's powerful Alpha male aura sweep over her, and the way it ignited her body, and she never failed to touch him as often as she could just to feel his skin upon hers.

Sivana made her way out of their bed chambers and headed down the wide landing to the stairs. She saw one of the junior Hadarian Healers scampering off to get her Aunt something to drink and Sivana shook her head again. She hated that the Elder Healers insisted on several of the junior Healers acting as servants to their Queen and Princess, but it was something not even Eurin could change and they had to accept it. Those female Healers that worked in the palace knew the situation however, and while they acted one way when there were guests present, they quickly set that aside when it was just Sivana or her sister in the palace. They would do what needed to be done to insure Umbra left as quickly as possible.

Her Aunt came into the main foyer as Sivana reached the bottom of the stairwell and Umbra's eyes fell upon Sivana with obvious disdain for her choice of clothes. It passed quickly but Sivana smiled inwardly knowing her robe had provoked the desired action. More so than her sister, Sivana liked to irritate her Aunt.

"Aunt Umbra." Sivana spoke warmly as she stepped up to her and kissed her cheek quickly knowing Umbra did not care for open shows of affection. It was another reason why both Anja and Sivana never failed to kiss their mates as often as possible in front of her. "This is a surprise... what can I do for you this beautiful morning?"

"Is... where is you...?" Umbra stammered stopping herself twice from calling him what she truly wanted to call him.

Sivana chuckled. "His name is Belen Aunt Umbra. You know that full well, you just can't bring yourself to say his name."

"Is he here?" Umbra snapped softly.

Sivana looked at her evenly. "If he was I would not be down here greeting you." She snapped right back. "I would still be wrapped in his arms. Now why are you here Aunt Umbra? It is still very early and Siara is not even awake yet."

"I have not come to see my Niece." Umbra spoke. "I have come to see you on a very important matter."

Sivana smiled. "Ah... another important matter." She spoke.

Umbra's dark green eyes held no humor in them as she motioned to the woman next to her. "This is the Mage Warrior Seanna's mother Pcillany." Umbra spoke. "She..."

"Yes... I know who she is." Sivana answered. "We met at Seanna's Final Ascension."

"She has some information for us." Umbra said quickly. "Information that you need to hear. About your sister."

Sivana's eyes narrowed slightly and she tilted her head slightly as she looked at her Aunt. She exhaled heavily and motioned to the sitting room. "Very well." She spoke.

Umbra looked at her. "Are you not going to change into more appropriate clothes?" She demanded.

Sivana smiled and shook her head. "What is wrong with what I am wearing? I woke only a short time ago and if this is so important that you come here to Belen and mine's home at this early hour..."

"This is not that man's home." Umbra snapped.

"Aunt Umbra... this is as much Belen's home as it is mine." Sivana spoke. "It has been twenty-five years since my mate turned me... twenty-four since we conducted the traditional Hadarian marriage rights. We have three beautiful children and want to have more. We are not going to separate no matter how much you would love for that to happen. Belen is a Lycavorian and a Spartan. We mate for life."

"You are not...!" Umbra began to hiss.

Sivana held up her hand stopping Umbra's words. "Don't go there Aunt Umbra." She spoke quickly. "The moment Belen turned me I became Lycavorian as well as Hadarian. It doesn't matter to you in the least that he saved my life does it?"

"Your life would not have been in danger if your sister had not taken you on that fool mission to begin with!" Umbra snapped. "The moment we discovered you were still alive you should have been brought here where it was safe!"

"I was safer with my sister." Sivana stated flatly. "She was who I needed... not to be exposed to everything here."

Umbra dismissed that with a slight wave. "Belen... he used your confusion to... to possess you at a time when you were weak of mind and unable to think clearly."

Sivana smiled and giggled at that. "Well... I wasn't thinking clearly, that much is true. I was having far too much fun enjoying what he was doing and making me feel to think clearly." Umbra opened her mouth to retort but Sivana stopped her. "Please... let's go into the sitting room." She stated firmly. "If I am going to be lectured I would much rather be sitting down and be bored than standing up."

Sivana headed into the large room with several couches and chairs arranged in a half circle. The sun was beginning to shine through the large windows brightly and Sivana settled to one of the large couches, pulling her legs underneath her. She was going to miss her morning run today that was for sure. She and Belen would always go running in the morning, and most times they would take Siara with them since she was at an age now where she was fascinated with her wolf form. It was one of the things Sivana thoroughly loved now that she was wolf. It was something that Anja had showed her, and like her twin she had come to love running in her wolf form. She and Belen's mother Lilika would go running through the mountains of Sparta every morning when they were on Earth.

